R. ILAI STATED: I HEARD FROM R. ELIEZER, EVEN IF IT IS AS LARGE AS A BETH KOR. Our Mishnah cannot be in agreement with the view of Hanania, for it was taught: Hanania ruled: Even if it was [as large as] forty beth se'ah [as big] as a royal rearcourt.¹⁷ And both,¹⁸ said R. Johanan, based their expositions on the same Scriptural text, for it is said: And it came to pass, before Isaiah was gone out of the inner court;¹⁹ [since] it was written 'the city'²⁰ and we read 'court'²¹ it may be inferred²² that royal rearcourts were [as big] as moderately sized cities. On what principle do they¹⁸ differ? One Master is of the opinion that [the extent of] moderately sized cities is one beth kor, while the other Master holds that [their size] is that of forty se'ah.

What, however, did Isaiah want there?²³ — Rabbah b. Bar Hana replied in the name of R. Johanan: This²⁴ teaches that Hezekiah was stricken with illness and Isaiah proceeded to hold a college at his door.²⁵ From this [it may be inferred] that when a scholar falls ill a college is to be held at his door. This, however, is not [always the proper] course,²⁶ since Satan might thereby be provoked.

I LIKewise HEARD FROM HIM THAT IF ONE OF THE TENANTS OF A COURTYARD FORGOT TO JOIN IN THE 'ERUB, HIS HOUSE IS FORBIDDEN. Did we not, however, learn: His house is forbidden both to him and to them for the taking in or for the taking out of any object?²⁷ — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied in the name of R. Shesheth: This is no difficulty;

(1) In his opinion it was not necessary at all to make any provision for the moving of objects in the orchard. He regarded the entire area on account of the banqueting hall it contained, as a courtyard that was put up for dwelling purposes.

(2) To prevent R. Huna b. Hinena from putting them up again.

(3) The area between the inhabited quarter and the town walls is regarded in this respect as being outside the town.

(4) Since the banqueting hall was built after the orchard had been enclosed.

(5) How then could Raba permit the moving of objects on the Sabbath in the orchard?

- (6) To protect them from the sun.
- (7) Lit., 'its name is not partition'.
- (8) The banqueting hall in the orchard.
- (9) It was not intended as a dwelling place.
- (10) The hall cannot consequently have the status of a dwelling and the movement of objects in the orchard around it should, therefore, be forbidden. An objection against Raba (v. supra n. 2).
- (11) Lit., 'its name is not partition'.
- (12) A comparatively small town without a wall around it situated on the Tigris, south of Bagdad.
- (13) These contained offal of dates on which the cattle fed, and partitions extending from one end of the town to the other were provided at the extremities of the alleys for the protection of the cattle ditches.
- (14) Of course they have; and this is the reason why they were invalid though they were permanent fixtures. Similarly in the case of the hall in the orchard, since it was put up for the purpose of protecting objects deposited within it and not as a dwelling, the movement of objects in the orchard enclosure around it should consequently be forbidden. Again an objection against Raba (v. Supra p. 178, n. 2). The interpretation of the passage here adopted follows the lines of תשובת הגאונים להרע (v. Rashi s.v. להרע 26a). Cf. Rashi's interpretation and Tosaf. s.v. ההוא 25b.
- (15) Allusion to their destruction of R. Huna b. Hinena's work, which deprived the exilarch and his party from the use of the banqueting hall on that day.
- (16) Jer. IV, 22.
- (17) Behind the palace (v. Rashi).
- (18) R. Ila'i and Hanania in arriving at their respective rulings.
- (19) II Kings XX, 4.
- (20) The kethib is העיר.
- (21) The kre is הצר.
- (22) Lit., 'from here'.
- (23) In the king's inner court which is not a place for visitors.
- (24) The mention of Isaiah's presence in the inner court.
- (25) The study of the Torah banishes disease.
- (26) Lit., 'the thing'.
- (27) Infra 69b, contrary to our Mishnah which restricts the prohibition 'TO HIM' only.

one is the ruling of¹ R. Eliezer² and the other is that of the Rabbis. And on careful consideration of their statements you will find that, according to the view of R. Eliezer, he who renounces his rights to his courtyard³ renounces ipso facto his rights to his house also, and that according to the Rabbis he who renounces his rights to his courtyards does not ipso facto renounce them in respect of his house. Is not this⁴ obvious?⁵ — Rehabah⁶ replied: I and R. Huna b. Hinena explained that it⁴ was necessary only in respect of five persons who lived in one courtyard and one of them forgot to join in the 'erub.⁷ According to the ruling of R. Eliezer⁸ this man, when he renounces his right,⁹ need not renounce it [specifically] in favour of every one of the tenants,¹⁰ but according to the Rabbis¹¹ the man who renounces his rights must do so [specifically] in favour of every one of the tenants.¹²

In accordance with whose view is¹³ that which was taught: If five persons live in one courtyard and one of them forgot to join in the 'erub [with the others] he, when renouncing his right,¹⁴ need not do it [specifically] in favour of everyone of the tenants individually?¹⁵ — 'In accordance with whose [view], you ask? In accordance, of course, with that of R. Eliezer. R. Kahana taught in the manner just stated.¹⁶ R. Tabyomi taught as follows:¹⁷ In accordance with whose view is¹⁸ that which was taught: If five persons live in one courtyard and one of them forgot to join in the 'erub [with the others] he, when renouncing his rights,¹⁹ need not do it [specifically] in favour of every one individually?²⁰ In accordance with whose [view, I ask, is this ruling]? — Said R. Huna b. Judah in the name of R. Shesheth: 'In accordance with whose [view] you ask? In accordance with that of R. Eliezer.

Said R. Papa to Abaye: What is the ruling according to R. Eliezer,²¹ if a tenant²² explicitly stated: 'I do not renounce my right [in my house]',²³ and, according to the Rabbis,²⁴ if he explicitly stated: 'I renounce my right [in my house]'?²⁵ Is R. Eliezer's reason²⁶ based on the view that any tenant who renounces his right in his courtyard renounces ipso facto his right to his house [and the ruling, consequently, would not apply here] since that man [explicitly] stated: 'I do not renounce my right'; or is it possible that R. Eliezer's reason²⁶ is that people do not live in a house without a courtyard²⁷ and, consequently, even where a man²⁸ states: 'I do not renounce my right in my house', his declaration may be disregarded,²⁹ so that though he said: 'I would live [in the house alone]', his statement is null and void?³⁰ And what is the ruling, according to the Rabbis, if he [explicitly] stated: 'I renounce my right'? Is the Rabbis' reason³¹ the view that a man who renounces his right in his courtyard does not ipso facto renounce his right to his house [and their ruling consequently would not apply here] since this man [specifically] declared: 'I renounce my right'; or is it possible that the Rabbis' reason³¹ is that it is not usual for a man to give up completely his house and his courtyard and thus become a mere stranger as far as these are concerned [and their ruling would, therefore, apply here also, because] though this man stated: 'I renounce my right' his declaration is to be disregarded? — The other replied: Both according to the Rabbis and according to R. Eliezer since the man declared his wishes they must be respected.³²

I HAVE LIKEWISE HEARD FROM HIM THAT PEOPLE MAY FULFIL THEIR DUTY AT PASSOVER BY EATING 'ARKABLIN.³³ What [is the meaning of] 'ARKABLIN? — Resh Lakish replied: Prickly creepers.³⁴ CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. WITH ALL [KINDS OF FOOD] MAY 'ERUB³⁵ AND SHITTUF³⁶ BE EFFECTED, EXCEPT WATER AND SALT,³⁷ AND SO ALSO MAY ALL [KINDS OF FOODSTUFFS] BE PURCHASED WITH MONEY OF THE SECOND TITHE³⁸ EXCEPT WATER AND SALT.³⁹ IF A MAN VOWED TO ABSTAIN FROM FOOD HE IS ALLOWED [TO CONSUME] BOTH WATER AND SALT.

AN 'ERUE⁴⁰ MAY BE PREPARED FOR THE NAZIRITE WITH WINE⁴¹ AND FOR AN ISRAELITE WITH TERUMAH,⁴² BUT SYMMACHUS RULED: WITH UNCONSECRATED PRODUCE ONLY.⁴³

[AN⁴⁴ 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED] FOR A PRIEST IN A BETH PERAS,⁴⁵ AND R. JUDAH RULED: EVEN IN A GRAVEYARD,⁴⁶ [

(1) Lit., 'that', the ruling in our Mishnah.

(2) Whom R. Ila'i was reporting (v. our Mishnah).

(3) Which is a prerequisite for the validity of the 'erub under discussion.

(4) The inference just pointed out by R. Shesheth.

(5) Of course it is. What then was the object in pointing it out?

(6) Var. lec.: Raba.

(7) Which the others prepared.

(8) That a man's renunciation of his rights in a courtyard implies also his renunciation of his rights to his house, from which it follows that R. Eliezer assumes every man to be acting generously and wholeheartedly in the interests of his neighbour.

(9) To the courtyard.

(10) His renunciation in favour of one particular neighbour is assumed to be generous and wholehearted in favour of all the neighbours.

(11) Who do not regard a man's renunciation of his rights in a courtyard as an indication of his renunciation of his rights to his house, from which it follows that they do not regard every person to be of a generous disposition.

(12) Otherwise, the 'erub is null and void.

- (13) Lit., 'like whom goes'.
- (14) To his share.
- (15) A general renunciation is enough.
- (16) Lit., 'thus', sc. that R. Shesheth drew an inference from our Mishnah and that Rehabah and R. Huna applied it to the Baraitha of the five tenants (cf. next note).
- (17) Sc. that R. Shesheth himself applied the inference from our Mishnah to the Baraitha cited (cf. previous note).
- (18) Lit., 'like whom goes'.
- (19) To his share.
- (20) A renunciation in favour of one is enough.
- (21) Who holds that a man who renounced his right in a courtyard is ipso facto assumed to have renounced his right to his house.
- (22) Who forgot to join in the 'erub with his neighbour in the courtyard.
- (23) Are the other tenants permitted in these circumstances to carry objects into, or from that tenant's house or not?
- (24) Who maintain that a man's renunciation of his right in a courtyard is not regarded as a renunciation of his right in his house also.
- (25) Cf. supra n. 8.
- (26) For his ruling.
- (27) When, therefore, a man renounces his right to his courtyard he may be assumed to have renounced his right to his house also.
- (28) Who renounced his right in his courtyard.
- (29) As he has now no courtyard he cannot be deemed to have a house either; לאו כל כמיניה lit., 'not as if all is from him'.
- (30) Lit., 'he said nothing', and R. Eliezer's ruling would still apply. The last clause, 'so that . . . void' קאמר ... אע"ג which seems to be a repetition or an alternative to the preceding one is absent from MS.M.
- (31) For their ruling.
- (32) Lit., 'since he has revealed his mind he has revealed (it)'.
- (33) Rendered supra 23a hart's-tongue or palm-ivy.
- (34) Aruk. adds דדיקלא, 'of the palm-tree' (cf. Jast. and previous note).
- (35) V. Glos. The term is here applied to 'erub of courtyards and 'erub of Sabbath limits (Rashi). Tosaf. (s.v. בכ"ל a.l.) points out that for an 'erub of courtyards only bread may be used (cf. infra 71b) and restricts the term of 'erub here to one of courtyards only.
- (36) Applicable to an association of courtyard in the same alley for the purpose of enabling their residents to move objects on the Sabbath from the courtyards into the alley and vice versa. V. Glos.
- (37) Since these cannot provide a satisfying meal. The essential element in an 'erub is its food value which imparts to it the status of a dining center for all who participate in it.
- (38) The tithe given in the first, second, fourth and fifth year of the septennial cycle, which is to be spent in Jerusalem' (v. Deut. Xlv, 22ff).
- (39) The reason is given in the Gemara infra.
- (40) Of Sabbath limits.
- (41) Though he himself is forbidden to drink it (v. Num. VI 2ff) it 'is permitted to other people and may, therefore, be regarded as a suitable food.
- (42) Since (cf. previous note) it is a suitable food for a priest.
- (43) The 'erub must consist of food which the person for whom it is prepared is himself able to eat.
- (44) This is an anonymous ruling. It is not a continuation of Symmachus's statement.
- (45) V. Glos., because under certain restrictions it is possible for a priest to enter such an area and so gain access to the 'erub.
- (46) So MS. M. Cur. edd., 'between the graves'; even in such a place, whose uncleanness is more defined than that of a beth peras, may an 'erub for a priest be deposited.

BECAUSE HE CAN PUT UP A SCREEN¹ AND THUS ENTER [THE AREA] AND EAT [HIS ‘ERUB].

GEMARA. R. Johanan ruled: No inference may be drawn from general rulings, even where an exception was actually specified.² Since he³ uses the expression, ‘even where an exception was actually specified’ it follows that he did not refer to our Mishnah;⁴ now what did he refer to?⁵ — He referred to the following:⁶ All positive precepts [the observance Of] which is dependent on the time [of the day Or the year] are incumbent upon men only, and women are free, but those which are not dependent on the time [of the day or of the year] are incumbent upon both men and women.⁷ Now is it a general rule that all precepts the observance of which depends on a certain time are not incumbent upon women? Behold [the precepts of] unleavened bread,⁸ rejoicing [on the festival]⁹ and Assembly¹⁰ each of which is a positive precept [the observance of] which is dependent on a certain specified time and are nevertheless incumbent upon women! Furthermore, are women liable to perform every positive precept the performance of which is not dependent on a specified time? Are there not in fact [the precepts of] the study of the Torah,¹¹ propagation of the race¹² and redemption of the son¹³ each of which is a positive precept the observance of which is not dependent on any specified time and women are nevertheless exempt [from their observance]? The fact, however, is, explained It. Johanan, that no inference may be drawn from general rulings, even where an exception was actually specified.

Abaye (or, as some say: R. Jeremiah) remarked: We also learned a Mishnah to the same effect: They, furthermore, laid down another general rule [viz.,] all that is borne above a zab¹⁴ is levitically unclean,¹⁵ but all on which a zab is borne is clean except that which is suitable for lying, or sitting upon,¹⁶ and a human being.¹⁷ Now, is there no [other exception]? Is there not in fact [that which is suitable for] riding upon? (What is one to understand by that which is ‘suitable for riding upon’? If [it is that on] which [the zab] sat, then [it may be retorted] is it not exactly in the same category as a seat?¹⁸ — It is this that we mean: Is there not the upper part of a saddle¹⁹ concerning which it was taught A saddle²⁰ is levitically Unclean as a seat and its handle²¹ is unclean as a riding means?). Consequently²² it may be deduced²³ that no inference may be drawn from general rulings even where an exception has been actually specified.

Rabina (or, as some say: R. Nahman) remarked: We also learned to the same effect: WITH ALL [KINDS OF FOOD] MAY ‘ERUB OR SHITTUF BE EFFECTED EXCEPT WATER AND SALT. Now is there no [other exception]? Is there not in fact that of morels and truffles?²⁴ Consequently it may be deduced ‘ that no inference may be drawn from general rulings, even where an exception was actually specified.

SO ALSO MAY ALL [KINDS OF FOODSTUFFS] BE PURCHASED WITH MONEY OF THE SECOND TITHE etc. R. Elieser²⁵ and R. Jose b. Hanina [differ].²⁶ One applied [the following limitation]²⁷ to ‘erub and the other applied it to the [second] tithe. ‘One applied [the following limitation] to ‘erub’ [thus: The ruling that] no ‘erub may be prepared [from water and salt] was taught only in respect of water by itself or salt by itself; but from water and salt [that were mingled together,] an ‘erub may well be prepared.²⁸ ‘And the other applied it to the [second] tithe’, [thus: The ruling that] no [water or salt] may be purchased [with money of the second tithe] was taught only in respect of water by itself or salt by itself; but water and salt [that were mingled together] may well be purchased with money of the [second] tithe.’ He who applied [the limitation]²⁹ to tithe [applies it] with more reason to ‘erub.³⁰ He, however, who applied it to ‘erub does not apply it³¹ to tithe. What is the reason? — Because³² [a kind of] produce is required.³³

When R. Isaac came³⁴ he applied the limitation²⁹ to tithe.

An objection was raised: It. Judah b. Gadish³⁵ testified before R. Eliezer, ‘My father's household used to buy brine with money of the [second] tithe’, when the other asked him, ‘Is it not possible that you heard this in that case only where it was mixed up with entrails of fish?’³⁶ And, furthermore, did not even R. Judah b. Gadish himself maintain his view in the case of brine only, since it [contains some] fat of produce³⁷ but not [in that of pure] water and salt?³⁸ — It. Joseph replied:

- (1) Between himself and the graves, by riding into the cemetery in a litter for Instance.
- (2) Because there might also be other exceptions that were not specified.
- (3) R. Johanan.
- (4) Lit., ‘that he does not stand here’, since In our Mishnah exceptions were in fact enumerated.
- (5) Lit., ‘where does he stand?’
- (6) Lit., ‘there he stands’.
- (7) Kid. 34a.
- (8) It is an obligation upon women (as deduced by analogy in Pes. 43a) as well as men to eat unleavened bread on the first night of the Passover (v. Ex. XII, 18). During the remaining days of the festival one is forbidden to eat leavened bread but is under no obligation to eat unleavened bread. One might well live on meat or fruit.

- (27) ‘Was taught only in respect’ etc.
- (28) Salt water is regarded as a food.
- (29) ‘Was taught only in respect’ etc.
- (30) The restrictions on the kinds of food permitted are more stringent in respect of the second tithe than in that of ‘erub; and, since salt water is permitted in the case of the former, there can be no question that it is permitted in that on the latter. V. Tosaf. s.v. מֵיִן a.l.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 27b

That¹ refers only to a case² where oil was mixed with³ them.⁴ Said Abaye to him: [In that case]⁵ might not the ruling⁶ be obvious⁷ on account of the oil?⁸ The ruling⁶ was necessary in that case only where one covered the cost of the water and the salt by paying an inclusive price⁹ [for the oil].¹⁰ But is this permissible by paying an inclusive price? — Yes; and so it was in fact taught: Ben Bag-Bag ruled: ‘For oxen’¹¹ teaches¹² that an ox may be purchased¹³ together with¹⁴ its skin;¹⁵ ‘or for sheep’¹¹ teaches¹² that a sheep may be bought¹³ together with¹⁴ its wool;¹⁶ ‘or for wine’¹¹ teaches¹² that wine may be bought¹³ together with¹⁴ its jar;¹⁷ ‘or for strong drink’¹¹ teaches¹² that tamad¹⁸ may be purchased¹⁹ after its fermentation.²⁰

Said R. Johanan: Should any person explain to me [the necessity for the expression of] ‘for oxen’¹¹ in accordance with the view of Ben Bag-Bag⁵ would carry his clothes after him into the bath house.²¹ What is the reason? — Because all [the other expressions]¹¹ were required with the exception of ‘for oxen,’ which is quite unnecessary. What [is the purpose for which the others] were required? — If²² the All Merciful had written only ‘for oxen’ it might have been assumed that only²³ an ox may be purchased together with²⁴ its skin, because it is [a part of] its body, but not a sheep together with] its wool which is not [a part of] its body.²⁵ And if the All Merciful had only written: ‘for sheep’²⁶ [to teach us that] a sheep may be bought together with its wool it might have been assumed [that this only is permitted] because [the wool] clings to its body but not [the purchase of] wine together with its cask. And had the All Merciful written ‘for wine’ it might have been assumed [that the purchase of its jar only is permitted] because It is in this way only that it can be preserved but not tamad after its fermentation, which is a mere [liquid] acid. And²⁷ if the All Merciful had written ‘for strong drink,’²⁶ Sit might have been assumed that by²⁸ ‘strong drink’ [was meant the purchase of] the pressed fig cakes of Keilah²⁹ which are a fruit but not wine with its jar. And if the All Merciful had written ‘wine’ [to indicate that it may be purchased] together with its jar it might have been assumed [that the purchase of its jar only is permitted] since in this way only it can be preserved but not a sheep together with its wool; hence did the All Merciful write ‘sheep’²⁶ [to indicate] that [it may be bought] even together with its wool. What however, was the need for the expression of³⁰ ‘for oxen’?²⁶ And should you reply that if the All Merciful had not written ‘for oxen’ it might have been assumed that a sheep may be bought together with its skin but not together with its wool [and that] the All Merciful has therefore written ‘for oxen’ to include its skin so that ‘sheep’ remained superfluous in order to include its wool [it could be retorted that even] if the All Merciful had not written ‘oxen’ no one would have suggested that a sheep may be bought only³¹ together with its skin but not together with its wool, for if that were so³² the All Merciful should have written ‘oxen’ so that ‘sheep’ would for this reason have remained superfluous; now, since the All Merciful did write ‘sheep’ [to indicate obviously] that [it may be purchased] even together with its wool [the question arises again:] What need was there for the expression of³³ ‘for oxen’?³⁴ If [it may be argued] a sheep may be bought together with its wool³⁵ was there any need [to state that] an ox may be bought together with its skin?³⁶ It is this [line of reasoning that was followed] when R. Johanan said, ‘Should any person explain to me [the necessity for the expression of] ‘for oxen’ in accordance with the view of Ben Bagbag I would carry his clothes after him into the bath house’.

On what principle do R. Judah b. Gadish³⁷ and R. Eliezer³⁸ and the following Tannas³⁹ differ? — R. Judah b. Gadish and R. Eliezer base their expositions on [the hermeneutic rules of] amplification, and limitation⁴⁰ while those Tannas base their expositions on [the hermeneutic rules of] general statements and specific details.⁴¹ ‘R. Judah b. Gadish and R. Eliezer base their expositions on [the hermeneutic rules of] amplification and limitation’ [thus:] ‘And thou shalt bestow the money for whatsoever thy soul desireth’³⁴ is an amplification,⁴² ‘for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink,’³⁴ is a limitation,⁴³ ‘or for whatsoever thy soul asketh of thee’³⁴ is again an amplification. [Now since Scripture] has amplified, limited and amplified again it has [thereby] included all. What has it included? It included all things. And what has it excluded? According to R. Eliezer it excluded brine; according to R. Judah b. Gadish it excluded water and salt. ‘While those Tannas base their expositions [on the hermeneutic rules of] general statements and specific details' for it was taught: 'And thou, shalt bestow the money for whatsoever thy soul desireth' is a general statement, 'for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink' is a specification, 'or for whatsoever thy soul asketh of thee' is again a general statement. [Now where] a general statement, a specification and a general statement [follow each other in succession] you may include⁴⁴ only such things as are similar to those in the specification; as the specification explicitly mentions [things that are] the produce of produce⁴⁵ that derive their nourishment from⁴⁶ the earth so [you may include] all [other things that are] the produce of produce that derive their nourishment from] the earth.⁴⁷ Another [Baraita], however, taught: As the specification mentions explicitly [things that are] produce⁴⁸ of the products of the earth⁴⁹ so [you may include] all produce that was of the products of the earth. What is the practical difference between these?⁵⁰ — Abaye replied: The practical difference between them is [the question of including] fish. According to him who holds [that the things included must be] 'the produce of produce that derive their nourishment from] the earth' fish [also may be included since] they derive their nourishment from the earth. According to him, however, who maintains [that the things included must be] 'produce of the produce of the earth'⁴⁹ fish [are excluded since they] were created from the water,⁵¹ But could Abaye maintain that fish derive their nourishment from] the earth seeing that he ruled:

(1) R. Isaac's ruling that salt water may be purchased with money of the second tithe.

(2) Lit., 'it was not required, but'.

(3) Lit., 'that he put into'.

(4) The water and the salt. Oil is a produce.

(5) That oil was contained in the mixture.

(6) V. p. 186, n. 12.

(7) Lit., 'and let it go out to (or 'be inferred by') him'.

(8) What need then was there to state it?

(9) בהבלעה lit., 'by absorption' (rt. בלע 'to absorb').

(10) R. Isaac thus taught us that money of the second tithe, though it may not be spent on water, salt or salt-water, may well be spent on the purchase of them where they are mixed with oil and a higher and inclusive price is paid for the latter.

(11) Deut. XIV, 26.

(12) Since otherwise this detail would be superfluous after the general statement, 'And thou shalt bestow the money for whatsoever thy soul desireth'. (ibid.).

(13) With money of the second tithe.

(14) Lit., 'upon the back', 'at the side of'.

(15) Sc. though the skin is not a foodstuff it may be bought together with the animal at an inclusive price and it nevertheless remains unconsecrated. There is no need to re-sell the skin in order to buy foodstuffs with its proceeds.

(16) Though both the skin (as in the case of the ox supra) and the wool are no foodstuffs (v. previous note) and both remain unconsecrated.

(17) Cf. supra n. II mutatis mutandis.

(18) An inferior kind of wine made of the stalks of pressed grapes and husks.

(19) with money of the second tithe.

(20) Now, since the skin, the wool and the jar are not articles of food and may nevertheless be bought with second tithe money by paying an inclusive price for the animals and the wine respectively, it follows that it is permitted to buy with second tithe money any commodity provided its value is not paid for separately but is included in the price paid for the suitable article.

(21) Sc. he would be willing to act as the attendant of such a genius if such a one could be found.

(22) Lit., 'because if'.

(23) Lit., 'it'.

(24) Lit., 'upon the back', 'at the side of'.

(25) Hence it was necessary to have the expression of 'for sheep'.

(26) In Deut. XIV, 26.

- (27) So MS. M. Cur. edd. insert, 'the All Merciful wrote strong drink'.
- (28) Lit., 'what'.
- (29) A town in the lowland district of Judea.
- (30) Lit., 'wherefore to me'.
- (31) Lit., 'yes'.
- (32) That the expression of 'sheep' was not intended to include the animal with its wool.
- (33) Lit., 'wherefore to me'.
- (34) In Deut. XIV, 26.
- (35) Which is not a vital Part of the animal.
- (36) Which is a vital part of its body.
- (37) On the variant readings of the name v. supra 27a.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 28a

'If a man ate an eel¹ he [technically] incurs² flogging³ on four counts;⁴ if an ant, on five counts;⁵ if a hornet, on six⁶ counts.⁷ Now if that statement is authentic⁸ [should not one eating] an eel also be flogged on account of [the prohibition against] a creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth?⁹ — Rather, replied Rabina, the practical difference between them¹⁰ is [the question of including] birds.¹¹ According to him who holds [that the things included¹¹ must be] 'the produce of produce that derive their nourishment from the earth' [birds are included since] they also derive their nourishment from the earth. According to him, however, who maintains [that the things included must be] 'produce of the produce of the earth' birds [are excluded since they] were created from the alluvial mud.¹²

On what ground does the one include¹¹ birds¹³ and on what ground does the other exclude them? — He who includes birds' is of the opinion that the second¹⁴ generalization¹⁵ is for principal [consideration]; hence [the proposition]¹⁶ is in [the form of] 'a specification and a generalization' [in which case] the generalization is regarded as an addition to the specification so that all things are thereby included,¹⁷ while the first generalization¹⁸ has the effect¹⁹ of excluding all things that are not similar to it²⁰ in two respects.²¹ He, however, who excludes birds is of the opinion that a first generalization is for principal [consideration] hence [the proposition] is in the form of 'a generalization and a specification' [in which case] the generalization does not cover more than what was enumerated in the specification.¹⁷ Consequently it is only these²² that are included²³ but no other things, while the second generalization²⁴ has the effect of including²⁵ all things that are similar to it²⁶ in three respects.²⁷

Rab Judah ruled in the name Of R. Samuel b. Shilath who had it from Rab: An 'erub may be prepared with cress,²⁸ purslane and melilot²⁹ but not with lichen³⁰ Or unripe dates.³¹ Is it, however, permitted to prepare an 'erub with melilot seeing that it was taught: Those who have many children may eat melilot but those who have no children³² must not eat it; and if it was hardened into seed even those who have many children should not eat it?³³ Explain it³⁴ to [refer to melilot] that was not hardened into seed and [that is used for people who] have many children. And if you prefer I might say: It³⁴ may in fact refer to [people who] have no children [the use of the plant nevertheless being permitted] because it is fit [for consumption] by those who have many children; for have we not learnt: 'An 'erub may be prepared for a nazirite with wine and for an Israelite with terumah',³⁵ from which it is evident that [certain foodstuffs may be used for an 'erub because] through they are unsuitable for one person they are suitable for another? So also here [it may be held that] though [the melilot] is not suitable for one it is suitable for another. And if you prefer I might reply: When Rab made his statement [he referred] to the Median melilot.³⁶

But is it not [permitted to prepare an 'erub] from lichen? Has not Rab Judah in fact stated in the name of Rab: An 'erub may be prepared from cuscuta or lichen and the benediction of '[Blessed art Thou . . .] Who createth the fruit of the ground' is to be Pronounced over them? _ This is no difficulty. The one ruling was made³⁷ before Rab came to Babylon while the other — was made after he came to Babylon.³⁸ Is Babylon, however, the greater part of the world?³⁹ Was it not in fact taught: If a man sowed beans, barley or fenugreek to [use as a] herb,⁴⁰ his wish is disregarded in view of the general practice;⁴¹ hence it is its seed that is subject to tithe but its herb⁴⁰ is exempt. Pepperwort⁴² or gardenrocket⁴³ that was sown [with the intention of using it] as a herb must be tithed as herb and as seed.⁴⁴ If it was sown to [be used as] seed it must be tithed as seed and as herb?⁴⁵ — Rab spoke Only of those that grow in house gardens.¹ What is garden-rocket suitable for? — R. Johanan replied: The ancients,² who had no pepper, crushed it and dipped in it their roasted meat.

R. Zera, when he felt fatigued³ from study, used to go and sit down at the door [of the school] of R. Judah b. Ammi saying: 'As the Rabbis go in and out I shall rise up before them and so receive reward for [honouring] them.' [On one occasion] a young school child came out. 'What,' he asked him, 'did your Master teach you?' — '[That the benediction for] cuscuta', the other replied: 'is "[Blessed . . .] Who createst the fruit of the ground"⁴ [and that for] lichen, is "[Blessed . . .] by Whose word all things were made".⁴ 'On the contrary', he said to him, 'logically [the benedictions] should be reversed since the latter derives its nourishment from the earth while the former derives it from the air . The law, however, is in agreement with the school child. What is the reason? — The former is the ripened fruit while the latter is not the ripened fruit. And, as to your objection that 'the latter derives its nourishment from the earth while the former derives it from the air' [the fact is that in reality this] is not [the case]. Cuscuta also derives its nourishment from the earth; for we may observe that when the shrub⁵ is cut off the cuscuta dies.⁶

But is it not permissible to prepare an 'erub from unripe dates? Was it not in fact taught: The white heart of a palm may be purchased with [second] tithe money⁷ but is not susceptible⁸ to food defilement.⁹ Unripe dates, however, may be purchased with [second] tithe money and they are also susceptible to food defilement. R. Judah ruled: The white heart of a palm is treated as wood in all respects, except that it may be purchased with [second] tithe money,¹⁰ while unripe dates are treated as fruit in all respects except that they are exempt from the [second] tithe?¹¹ — There¹² [the reference is] to stunted dates.¹³ If so,¹⁴ would R. Judah in this case rule, 'they are exempt from second tithe'? Was it not in fact taught: R. Judah said: The [stunted] figs of Bethania were mentioned only in connection with [second] tithe alone; the [stunted] figs of Bethania and the unripe dates of Tobina¹⁵ are subject to the obligation of the second tithe?¹⁶ — The fact, however, is [that the Baraita cited¹⁷ does] not refer¹⁸ to stunted dates, but¹⁹ [the law] in respect of food defilement is different [from other laws]. As It. Johanan explained [elsewhere], 'Because one can make them sweet by [keeping them near] the fire' so here also [it may be explained,]²⁰ Because one can make them sweet by [keeping them near] the fire.²¹

And where was the statement of R. Johanan made? — In connection with the following. For it was taught: Bitter almonds when small are subject [to the second tithe,²² and when [big are exempt,²³ but sweet [almonds] are subject [to the second tithe when] big and exempt when small.²⁴ R. Simeon²⁵ son of R. Jose ruled in the name of his father, 'Both²⁶ are exempt'²⁷ or, as others read: 'Both²⁶ are subject [to the second tithe]'. Said R. Il'a:²⁸ R. Hanina gave a decision at Sepphoris in agreement with him who ruled: 'Both are exempt'. According to him, however, who ruled: 'Both are subject [to the second tithe]', what [it may be asked] are they suitable for?²⁹ [To this] It. Johanan replied: [They may be regarded as proper food] because they can³⁰ be rendered sweet by [keeping them, near] the fire.

The Master said: 'R. Judah ruled: The white heart of a palm is treated as wood in all respects, except that it may be purchased with [second] tithe money'. [Is not this ruling] exactly the same [as that of] the first Tanna?³¹ — Abaye replied: The practical difference between them³² is the case where one boiled or fried it.³³

Raba demurred: Is there at all any authority who maintains that [such a commodity], even when boiled or fried does not [assume the character of food]? Was it not in fact taught: A skin and a placenta are not susceptible to the defilement of food, but a skin that was boiled and a placenta that one intended [to boil] are susceptible to food defilement?³⁴ — Rather, said Raba, the practical difference between them' is [the form of] the benediction.³⁵ For it was stated,³⁶ [The benediction for] the white heart of the palm is, R. Judah ruled: 'Who createst the fruit of the ground', and Samuel ruled: 'By Whose word all things were made'. 'R. Judah ruled: "Who createst the fruit of the ground"' because it is a foodstuff; 'and Samuel ruled: "By Whose word all things were made"' because in consideration of the fact that it would eventually be hardened the benediction of 'Who createst the fruit of the ground' cannot be pronounced over it.

Said Samuel to R. Judah: Shinena,³⁷ logical reasoning is on your side³⁸ for there is the case of radish which is eventually hardened and yet the benediction of, 'Who createst the fruit of the ground' is pronounced over it. This argument, however, is not conclusive,³⁹ since people plant radish with the intention of eating it while soft⁴⁰ but no palm-tree is planted with the intention [of eating its] white heart. And, consequently, although Samuel complimented R. Judah, the law is in agreement with Samuel.⁴¹

[To turn to the] main text: R. Judah stated in the name of Rab: An 'erub may be prepared from cuscuta or lichen, and the benediction of '[Blessed art Thou . . .] Who createst the fruit of the ground' is to be pronounced over them. With what quantity of cuscuta?⁴² — As R. Yehiel said [infra], 'a handful'⁴³ so is it here also a handful.⁴⁴ With what quantity of lichen?' — Rabbah b. Tobiah replied in the name of R. Isaac who had it from Rab: As much as the contents of⁴⁵ farmers' bundles.⁴⁶

R. Hilkiyah b. Tobiah ruled: An 'erub may be prepared from kalia.⁴⁷ 'From kalia'! Could [such a notion] be entertained?⁴⁸ [Say] rather with the herb from, which kalia is obtained. And what must be the quantity? — R. Yehiel replied: A handful.⁴⁹

R. Jeremiah once went [on a tour] to the country towns⁵⁰ when he was asked whether it was permissible to prepare an 'erub with green⁵¹ beans, but he did not know [what the answer was].⁵² When he later came to the schoolhouse he was told: Thus ruled R. Jannai: It is permitted to prepare an 'erub from green⁵¹ beans. And what must be its quantity? — R. Yehiel replied: A handful.⁴⁹

R. Hamnuna ruled: An 'erub may be prepared from raw beet.⁵³ But this is not so, seeing that R. Hisda in fact stated: Raw⁵⁴ beet kills a healthy⁵⁴ man?⁵⁵

— That¹ [refers to beet] that was only partially cooked.²

There are [others] who read: R. Hammuna ruled: No "erub may be prepared from raw beet, for R. Hisda stated: 'Raw beet kills a healthy man'.³ Do we not see, however, that people do eat [such beet] and yet do not die? — There⁴ [it is 'case of beet] that was only partly cooked.² R. Hisda stated: A dish of beet is beneficial for the heart and good for the eyes and even more so for the bowels. Abaye added: This applies only [to such beet] that remained⁵ on the stove until it was thoroughly cooked.⁶

Raba [once] said: 'I am [to-day] in the condition of Ben Azzai in the markets of Tiberias'.⁷ Sand one of the younger Rabbis to him, 'With what quantity of apples [may an 'erub be prepared]?' — 'Is it permissible', the other replied: 'to prepare an erub from apples?' — 'Is it not [permitted]? Have we not in fact learnt: All kinds of food⁸ may be combined⁹ [to make up the prescribed quantity] of half of a half loaf¹⁰ in respect of rendering the body¹¹ unfit,¹² or [to make up the quantity of] food for two meals required for an 'erub, or the size of an egg in respect of imparting food defilement?'¹³ — Rut what objection is this? If it be contended: Because it was stated: 'all kinds of food' and these¹⁴ also are eatable, surely [it could be retorted] did not R. Johanan lay down that no inference may be drawn from general rulings even where an exception was been specified?¹⁵ — [The objection] rather is because it was stated: 'or [to make up the quantity of] food for two meals required for an 'erub or the size of an egg in respect of imparting food defilement',¹⁶ and these¹⁴ also are subject to food defilement.¹⁷ Now with what quantity?¹⁸ — R. Nahman replied: In the case of apples it must be a kab.¹⁹ An objection was raised: R. Simeon b. Eliezer ruled: [The poor man's tithe²⁰ must be²¹ of no less a quantity than] an 'ukla²² of spices, a pound of vegetables, ten nuts, five peaches, two pomegranates or one ethrog;²³ and Gursak b. Dari stated in the name of R. Menashia b. Shegobli who had it from Rab that [the same quantities were] also [applicable] to an 'erub.²⁴ Why then should not apples²⁵ also be compared to peaches?²⁶ — The others²⁵ are valuable but these are not so valuable.²⁷

'May the Lord', exclaimed R. Joseph, 'pardon R. Menashia b. Shegobli [this oversight; for] I made that statement²⁸ in connection with a Mishnah and he²⁹ applied it to a Baraita! For we learned: Any poor man [applying] at the threshing floor [must be given]³⁰ no less than half a kab of wheat, a kab of barley (R. Meir said: Half a kab of barley), a kab and a half of spelt, a kab of dried figs or a maneh³¹ of pressed figs (R. Akiba said: A half),³² half a log of wine (R. Akiba said: One quarter)³³ or a quarter³³ of oil (R. Akiba said: One eighth),³³ and [in respect of] all other kinds of produce, Abba Saul ruled, [The quantities given must consist] of so much [food] as [would enable the recipient to] sell them and buy with their proceeds³⁴ food for two meals.³⁵ And [it was in connection with this Mishnah that] Rab stated that ‘[the same quantities were] also [applicable in the case] of an ‘erub’. On what ground, however, is preference given³⁶ to the one rather than to the other?³⁷ If it be suggested: Because in the Baraita³⁸ spices were mentioned, and spices are not eatables,³⁹ [it might be retorted:] Are not wheat and barley mentioned in the Mishnah⁴⁰ though they also⁴¹ are not eatables?⁴² — [The ground]⁴³ rather is this:⁴⁴ Because [in the Mishnah] ‘half a log of wine was mentioned and Rab has laid down that an ‘erub may be prepared with two quarters [of a log] of wine’⁴⁵ it may be concluded⁴⁶ that when Rab said: ‘And the same quantities were also applicable to an ‘erub’ he must have been referring to this Mishnah. This is conclusive.

The Master said: ‘Or [to make up the quantity of] food for two meals required for an ‘erub’. R. Joseph intended to lay down that [no ‘erub may be prepared] unless there is sufficient food of each kind to provide for a complete meal,⁴⁷ but Rabbah said to him: Even [if each kind of food consisted only] of a half, a third or a quarter [of a meal].⁴⁸

[To revert to] the main text: ‘Rab has laid down that an ‘erub may be prepared with two quarters [of a log] of wine’. But do we require so much? Was it not in fact taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: Wine [for an ‘erub must] suffice for soaking in it the bread,⁴⁹ vinegar must suffice to dip in it [the meat], and olives and onions must suffice to provide a relish for the bread for two meals?⁵⁰ — There⁵¹ [the reference is] to boiled wine.⁵²

The Master said: ‘Vinegar must suffice to dip in it [the meat]’. Sand R. Giddal in the name of Rab, [It must] suffice to dip in it the food of two meals of vegetables.⁵³ Others read: R. Giddal said in the name of Rab, [It must suffice to dip in it a quantity of) vegetables consumed in the course of two meals.⁵⁴

The Master said: ‘Olives and onions must suffice to provide a relish for bread for two meals’. Is it, however, permitted to prepare all erub from onions? Was it not in fact taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar stated: R. Meir once spent the Sabbath⁵⁵ a’ Ardaska⁵⁶ when a certain man appeared before him and said to him, ‘Master, I have prepared an ‘erub’ from onions [to enable me to walk] to Tibe’in’,⁵⁷ and R. Meir ordered him to remain within his four cubits?⁵⁸ — This is no difficulty, since one ruling deals⁵⁹ with the leaves while the other refers to the bulbs.⁶⁰ For it was taught: ‘If a man ate an onion and [was found] dead early [on the following morning] there is no need to ask what was the cause of his death’, and in connection with this Samuel stated: This was taught in respect of the leaves only but against [the eating of] the bulbs there can be no objection;⁶¹ and even regarding the leaves this has been said only where the onion has not grown [to the length of] a span but where it has grown to that length there can be no objection.¹ R. Papa said: This has been said only where one drank no beer [with them] but where one did drink some beer² there can be no danger.¹

Our Rabbis taught: No one should eat onion on account of the poisonous fluid³ it contains; and it once happened that R. Hanina ate half an onion and half of its poisonous fluid and became so ill that he was on the point of dying. His colleagues, however, begged for heavenly mercy, and he recovered because his contemporaries needed him.⁴

R. Zera laid down in the name of Samuel: From beer an 'erub may be prepared and [if it consists of a quantity] of three log⁵ it renders a ritual bath⁶ ineffectual.⁷ R. Kahana demurred: Is not this⁸ obvious? For what [difference is there in this respect] between it and dye-water concerning which we learned: R. Jose ruled: Dye-water of a quantity of three log renders a ritual bath ineffectual?⁹ -It may be replied: There⁹ [the liquid] is called dye-water¹⁰ but here it is called beer.¹¹ And with what quantity [of beer] may an erub be prepared? — R. Aha son of R. Joseph proposed to say before R. Joseph: With two quarters¹² of beer, as we learned, 'If a man carries out¹³ wine [he incurs guilt if its quantity was] sufficient for mixing the cup',¹⁴ and in connection with this it was taught: '[It must be] sufficient for mixing a handsome cup'. What [is meant by] 'a handsome cup'? The cup of benediction. And R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha, 'The cup of benediction must contain a quarter of a quarter,¹⁵ so that when one dilutes it¹⁶ it consists of a quarter;' this being in agreement with Raba who laid down that 'any wine which cannot stand [an admixture of] three [parts of] water to one [of wine] is no proper wine'. And in the final clause¹⁷ it was stated: And in the case of any other liquids [the prescribed quantity]¹⁸ is a quarter' and in that of any liquid refuse' it is also a quarter'. Now since there¹⁹ [the quantities prescribed are] four²⁰ to one²¹ so here²² also [the quantity prescribed should be] four²⁰ to one.²³ [The ruling,] however, is not so. There¹⁹ the reason²⁴ is that less than that quantity is of no importance, but here²² [this does] not [apply, for] it is usual for people to drink one cup²⁵ in the morning and another²⁵ in the evening and to rely upon these [as their meals].²⁶

With how much dates [may an 'erub be prepared]? — R. Joseph replied: With one kab. Sand R. Joseph: Whence do I derive this? From what was taught: 'If a man²⁷ consumed [unwittingly] dried figs²⁸ and paid for them with dates, may a blessing come upon him.'²⁹ How [is this repayment to] be understood? If it be suggested [to be one] corresponding to the value³⁰ [of the figs, viz.,] that he ate of the priest's figs³¹ the value of one zuz³² and repays him for it [dates] for a zuz,³² why [it may be asked] should a blessing come upon him, seeing that he consumed the value of a zuz and repays only the value of a zuz? Must it not then [be concluded that this repayment] corresponded in quantity,

[What quantity is required³⁹ in the case of] shattitha?⁴⁰ — R. Aha b. Phinehas replied: Two ladlesfull. Of roasted ears?- Abaye replied: Two Pumbedithan handfuls.

Abaye stated: Nurse⁴¹ told me that roasted ears are beneficial to the heart and they banish morbid thought.

Abaye further stated: Nurse told me: If a man suffers from weakness of the heart let him fetch the flesh of the right flank of a male beast and⁴² excrements of cattle⁴³ [cast in the month] of Nisan, and if excrements of cattle are not available let him fetch some willow twigs, and let him roast it,⁴⁴ eat it, and after that drink some diluted wine.⁴⁵

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: Any relish⁴⁶ [must consist of a quantity that is] sufficient to eat with it [a quantity of bread for two meals] but any [foodstuff] that is no relish [must consist of a quantity] sufficient in itself for two meals.⁴⁷ Raw meat [also must consist of a quantity] sufficient for two meals.' As to roasted meat, Rabbah ruled [that it must be] sufficient to eat with it [a quantity of bread required for two meals], and R. Joseph ruled, [It must be] sufficient in itself for two meals.⁴⁷ 'Whence said R. Joseph, 'do I derive this?⁴⁸ [From the practice] of the Persians who eat chunks of roasted meat without bread'. Said Abaye to him: Are the Persians a majority of the world?⁴⁹ Was it not in fact taught,⁵⁰ The webs of the poor⁵¹ [are susceptible to uncleanness in the case] of the poor and the webs of the rich⁵² [are susceptible to uncleanness even in the case] of the rich but [it is not necessary, is it, in the case] of the poor that the webs [shall be of the size of those] of the rich?¹ And should you reply that in, both cases the more restrictive rulings were adopted,² was it not in fact taught, [it could be retorted], R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: An 'erub may be prepared for a sick, or an old man [with a quantity] of food that is sufficient for him?³ [for two meals]⁴ and for a glutton with [food for two meals, each being] a moderate meal for the average man?⁵ — This is a difficulty.

But could R. Simeon b. Eleazar have given such rulings?⁶ Was it not in fact taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: A door for⁷ Og King of Bashan,⁸ [must⁹ be as big] as his full size?¹⁰ And Abaye?¹¹ — What could one do there?¹² Should it¹³ be cut to pieces and carried out that way?¹⁴ hear what Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan: The door of' Og King of Bashan,¹⁵ is to be four [handbreadths] wide.¹⁶ [This, however, is no conclusive proof since] there¹⁷ [it may be a case] where there were many small doors¹⁸ and Only one of them was four [handbreadths] wide so that it is certain that when widening¹⁹ would take place it would be in that door.²⁰ R. Hiyya b. R. Ashi ruled in the name of Rab: An 'erub may be prepared from raw meat. R. Shimi b. Hiyya ruled: An 'erub may be prepared from raw eggs. With how many? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied:²¹ The well-read scholar²² ruled [the number to be] two.

The question was raised: Do the Rabbis differ from R. Simeon b. Eleazar¹² or not? — Come and

IF A MAN VOWED TO ABSTAIN FROM FOOD HE IS ALLOWED [To CONSUME] BOTH WATER etc. [Apparently]²³ it is only Salt and water that are not described as proper food' but all other things [consumed] are described as proper food.²⁴ Must it then be assumed that this presents an objection against Rab and Samuel both of whom had ruled that the benediction of'. . . Who createst various kinds of food'²⁵ is to be pronounced over the five kinds of grain²⁶ alone?²⁷ — But were not their rulings already once refuted?²⁸ — [The question is:] Must it be said that they stand refuted from this Mishnah also? — R. Huna replied: [Our Mishnah may deal with the case of a man] who said, 'All that nourishes²⁹ [shall be forbidden by a vow] upon me'. But is it only water and salt that do not nourish and all other foodstuffs do nourish? Did not Rabbah b. Bar Hana relate: When we³⁰ followed R. Johanan to partake of the fruit of Gennesar³¹ we used each to take ten fruits [for him] when we were a party of a hundred and when we were a party of ten we each used to take a hundred for him, and every hundred of these fruit could³² be contained in a basket of the capacity of three se'ah,³³ and yet after he had eaten all of them he would exclaim. '[I could take] an oath that I have not felt the taste of nourishment?'³⁴ — Read, 'Food'.²⁴ R. Huna laid down in the name of Rab: [If a man said,] 'I swear that I will not eat this loaf' an 'erub may nevertheless be prepared for him from it;³⁵ [but if he said,] 'This loaf [shall be forbidden] to me',³⁶ no 'erub from it may be prepared for him.

An objection was raised: 'If a man vowed to have no benefit from a loaf an 'erub from it may nevertheless be prepared for him'. Does not this [refer to a case] where he said: '[This loaf shall be forbidden] to me'?³⁷ — No, where he said: '[f swear that I would not eat] this [loaf]'. This assumption³⁸ also stands to reason; for in the final clause it was stated: 'This applies³⁹ only when he said: [I take] an oath that I will not taste it'⁴⁰ What, [however, is the ruling where] he said: '[The loaf shall be forbidden] to me'?³⁶ Could⁴¹ no 'erub for him be prepared from it? But, if so, instead of stating,⁴² '[If he said,] "This loaf shall be consecrated" no 'erub from it may be prepared for him because no 'erub may be prepared from consecrated food', let a distinction be pointed out⁴³ in this very case⁴⁴ [thus:] 'This⁴⁵ applies only where he said: "[I swear that I will not eat] this [loaf]" but if he said: "[This loaf shall be forbidden] to me, no 'erub from it may be prepared for him'? — R. Huna can answer you: What then [would you suggest? That] whenever a man said: '[This loaf shall be forbidden] to me' an erub from it may be prepared for him?⁴⁶ — [would not then] a difficulty [arise from] the first clause?⁴⁷ — A clause is missing⁴² and this is the correct reading: If a man vowed to have no benefit from a loaf an 'erub from it may be prepared for him,⁴⁸ and even if he said: '[This loaf shall be forbidden] to me' it is the same as if he had said: '[I take] an oath that I shall not taste it'.

At all events does not the contradiction, against R. Huna remain?⁴⁹ — He upholds the same view as R. Eliezer. For it was taught: R. Eliezer ruled, [If a man said: 'I take] all oath that I would not eat this loaf' an 'erub from it may be prepared for him, [but if he said], 'This loaf [shall be forbidden] to me' no 'erub from it may be prepared for him. But could R. Eliezer have given such a ruling? Was it not in fact taught: 'This is the general rule: If a man imposed upon himself the prohibition of [a certain food] an erub from it may be prepared for him,⁵⁰ but if a certain food was forbidden to a man,⁵¹ no 'erub from it may be prepared for him. R. Eliezer ruled: [If the man said,] "This loaf [shall be forbidden] to me", an 'erub from it may be prepared for him, but if he said: "This loaf shall be consecrated" no 'erub from it may be prepared for him, because no erub may be prepared from consecrated food'?'⁵² — [The two rulings represent the views of] two Tannas who differ as to what was the view⁵³ of R. Eliezer.

AN 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED FOR A NAZIRITE WITH WINE etc. Our Mishnah does not represent the view of Beth Shammai. For it was taught: Beth Shammai ruled: No 'erub may be prepared for a nazirite with wine⁵⁴ or for an Israelite with terumah⁵⁴ and Beth Hillel ruled: An 'erub may be prepared for a nazirite with wine or for an Israelite with terumah.⁵⁵ Sand Beth Hillel to Beth Shammai, 'Do you not admit

(1) Because the poor use smaller pieces of web. Now since the law of uncleanness for the poor is not influenced by the practice of the rich, why should the law of 'erub for the greater part of the world, who use roasted meat as a relish only, be influenced by the practice of the comparatively small number of Persians?

(2) Lit., 'here for a restriction' (bis).

(3) Lit., 'his food'.

(4) Though an average man requires more.

(5) Though the glutton requires more than a moderate meal. From this it follows that in the case of 'erub the less restrictive rulings are followed. Why then should the more restrictive ones be followed in the case of roasted meat?

(6) Relaxing the law in respect of the quantity of food required for an 'erub in favour of (a) the sick and the old because they eat little, though the average person eats more than they, and (b) the glutton, though he consumes much, because the average person consumes less.

(7) Lit., 'his door'.

(8) Sc. any big sized corpse. Og was one of the famous giants (cf. Deut. 111, II) and is synonymous in the Talmudic literature with 'man of huge size'.

(9) If the other doors and cavities in the house in which the corpse lies are to remain levitically clean (v. next note).

(10) So that his body might be carried through it without widening it. In that case that door only is levitically unclean while all other doors through which the corpse would not be carried remain levitically clean. Where the door, however, is not wide enough for the passage of the corpse, so that it is uncertain which of the doors of the house would be widened and used for such passage, all doors and wall cavities of the size of a human fist become levitically unclean (v. Bez. 37b). R. Simeon b. Eleazar in thus declaring all doors and cavities unclean on account of the inadequacy of the door for the passage of the big corpse, though it is adequate enough for the passage of one of average size, obviously adopts the restrictive view. How then could it be said that in respect of 'erub he adopts the lenient one?

(11) Who implied supra that the law for the minority is determined by the conditions governing the majority, how could he reconcile his principle with the ruling of R. Simeon b. Eleazar (v. previous note) just cited?

(12) In the case of a big corpse in a house of small doors.

(13) The corpse.

(14) This is obviously absurd. Hence the ruling that unless one door was wide enough for the passage of the corpse all doors are involved in levitical uncleanness.

(15) Cf. supra nn. 2ff.

(16) It need not be big enough for the passage of the corpse to protect the other doors against defilement. Their view thus apparently differs from that of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.

(17) The particular case dealt with by R. Simeon b. Eleazar.

(18) Each smaller than four handbreadths.

(19) Of a door.

(20) And the corpse would consequently be carried through that door. Hence it is that all the other doors remain levitically clean. Where, however, all doors are of equal size, whether big or small, and none of them is big enough for the passage of the corpse, all become unclean since it is uncertain which of them would eventually be widened.

- (35) Since this oath was limited to eating only. An 'erub, provided somebody is able to eat it, is valid even if the person for whom it was prepared is unable to eat it.
- (36) עָלַי, lit., 'upon me', an expression which implies the prohibition of all benefit.
- (37) How then could Rab maintain, against this Baraitha, that when such an expression was used no 'erub may be prepared from the loaf.
- (38) Lit., 'thus'.
- (39) Lit., 'when'.
- (40) Which does not imply the prohibition of all other benefits.
- (41) Lit., 'thus also'.
- (42) In the Baraitha cited.
- (43) Lit., 'let him divide and teach'.
- (44) A loaf that was not consecrated.
- (45) That "erub for him may be prepared.
- (46) Because it would be contended that this expression also implies the prohibition of eating only?
- (47) I.e., the final clause of the first clause ('This applies only when he said: "that I will not taste it") from which it was been inferred supra that if a man used such an expression no 'erub for him may be prepared from the forbidden loaf.
- (48) As the main purpose of a loaf is the eating of it, 'benefit' in respect of it can apply to eating only.
- (49) How could he, contrary to the ruling of the Baraitha, maintain that where a man 'forbade' a loaf to himself no 'erub from it may be prepared for him?
- (50) The prohibition being limited to the man's action only, while the preparation of an 'erub is a mere benefit that involves no actual action on his part.
- (51) So that the prohibition was not limited to the man's action but was imposed on the very object itself, including whatsoever benefit One may derive therefrom.
- (52) The first clause of R. Eliezer's ruling in this Baraitha is thus in direct contradiction to his ruling in the previous Baraitha. How then could it be maintained that he land down both rulings?
- (53) Lit., 'and according'.
- (54) Because he is forbidden to consume it.
- (55) Cf. notes on our Mishnah supra.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 30b

that an 'erub may be prepared for an adult in connection with the Day of Atonement'?¹ 'Indeed [we do]', the others replied. 'As', the former said to them, 'an 'erub may be prepared for an adult in connection with the Day of Atonement, so may an 'erub be prepared for a nazirite with wine or for an Israelite with terumah'.² And Beth Shammai?³ — There⁴ a meal is available that is fit [for consumption] while it is yet day⁵ but here⁶ no meal is available that is fit [for consumption] while it is yet day.⁷

In agreement with whom?⁸ — Not in agreement with Hananiah. For it was taught: Hananiah stated: Beth Shammai did not admit the very principle⁹ of 'erub unless the man takes out thither'¹⁰ his bed and all the objects he uses.

Whose view is followed by the Baraitha in¹¹ which it was taught: If a man prepared an 'erub¹²

[while he was dressed] in black¹³ he must not go out¹⁴ in white;¹³ [if he was then¹⁵ dressed] in white he must not go out¹⁴ in black? Whose [view, it is asked, is this]? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is [that of] Hananiah in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai.¹⁶ According to Hananiah, however, is it only in black that he must not go out but may go out in white? Did he not in fact rule [that an ‘erub is invalid] ‘unless the man takes out thither his bed and all the objects he uses’? — It is this that was meant: If he prepared an ‘erub [while he was dressed] in white and then required black he must not go out even in white. In agreement with whom [is this ruling]? R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is in agreement with that of Hananiah in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai.

SYMMACHUS RULED: WITH UNCONSECRATED PRODUCE. But [against the ruling that AN ‘ERUB MAY BE PREPARED] FOR A NAZIRITE WITH WINE he does not contend. What is the reason? [Is it] because it is possible that he might ask to be released from, his naziritship?¹⁷ But, if so, is it not equally possible for him to ask for the release of the terumah?¹⁸ — Were he to ask for its release it would return to its state of tebel.¹⁹ But he could [still] set aside²⁰ [the priestly dues] for it²¹ from some other produce?²² — Fellows²³ are not suspected of setting aside terumah from [produce] that is not in close proximity [to the produce for which it is set aside]. But he can [still] Set aside the terumah for it from [the very ‘erub] itself? — [This is a case] where it²⁴ would not contain the prescribed quantity. But why this certainty?²⁵ This rather [is the reply:]²⁶ Symmachus holds the same opinion as the Rabbis who had land down that every kind of Occupation that may be classed as shebuth²⁷ has, as a preventive measure,²⁸ been forbidden [on the Sabbath Eve] at twilight.²⁹ Whose view is followed in³⁰ what we learned: There are [some measures] which the Rabbis have prescribed in accordance with each individual. [E.g.,] ‘his handful’ of the meal-offering,³¹ ‘his handful’ of incense,³² the drinking of a mouthful on the Day of Atonement,³³ and [the requirement] of food [sufficient for] two meals in the case of an ‘erub?³⁴ in agreement with whose view, [it is asked, is this Mishnah]?³⁴ — R. Zera replied: It [is in agreement with that of] Symmachus who had land down that [the food for an ‘erub] must be such as is fit for the person [for whom it is prepared].³⁵

Must it be assumed [that this Mishnah]³⁶ differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar,³⁷ it having been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: An ‘erub for a sick, or for an old man is to consist of food sufficient for him [for two meals], and for a glutton, [each of the two meals is to consist] of a moderate meal for an average man?³⁸ — The explanation [is that the Mishnah³⁶ refers] to a sick, and an old man,³⁹ but [not to] a glutton whose habit is disregarded in the view of the average man.⁴⁰

[AN ‘ERUB] MAY BE PREPARED] FOR A PRIEST IN A BETH PERAS; for Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: A man may : blow away [the earth of] a beth peras⁴¹ and continue on his way.⁴² R. Judah b. Ammi ruled in the name of Rab Judah: A trodden beth peras is levitically clean.⁴³

R. JUDAH RULED: EVEN IN A GRAVEYARD. A Tanna taught:⁴⁴ Because a man can put up a screen⁴⁵ and pass [through it] in a chest, box or portable turret. He is of the opinion that a movable⁴⁶ tent has the status of⁴⁷ a [fixed] tent.⁴⁸

And [they⁴⁹ differ on a principle which is the subject of] dispute among the following Tannas. For it was taught: If a man enters a heathen country⁵⁰ [riding] in a chest, box or portable turret he is, Rabbi ruled, levitically unclean, but R. Jose son of R. Judah declares him to be clean. On what principle do they differ? One Master is of the opinion that a movable⁴⁶ tent has not the status of a valid tent⁵¹ and the other Master maintains that even a movable⁴⁶ tent⁵² has the status of a valid tent.⁵³

It was taught:⁵⁴ ‘R. Judah ruled,

(1) Though the adult is forbidden to consume any food on that day the ‘erub is valid because a minor who is free from the observance of the commandments, could well eat it even on that day.

- (2) While the nazirite and the Israelite respectively are forbidden to consume such 'erubs, non-nazirites and priests respectively are not forbidden and may well consume them.
- (3) How can they maintain their view against this argument?
- (4) All 'erub for the Day of Atonement.
- (5) The Eve of the Day of Atonement, when the 'erub is prepared.
- (6) The cases of wine for a nazirite or terumah for an Israelite.
- (7) At no time is a nazirite permitted to drink wine or an Israelite to eat terumah.
- (8) Is this Baraita which attributes to Beth Shammai the view that an 'erub of food alone is effective.

- (27) שבות (rt. שבת 'to rest') an act that is only Rabbinically forbidden to be performed on the Sabbath.
- (28) That one might not perform the same work on the Sabbath when it is forbidden Pentateuchally.
- (29) The setting aside of terumah is such an act. Hence the untenability of the suggestions supra on the methods of converting terumah into unconsecrated produce.
- (30) Lit., 'like whom goes that'.

If the earth, however, is blown or moved away in front of him step by step he remains levitically clean since all covered bones are thus exposed and easily avoided.
- (42) In this manner a priest, who is forbidden to defile himself for the dead, can make his way to his 'erub even in such an area.

(43) All bones in its soil are assumed to have been thoroughly crushed by the feet that have trodden on them; and bones that are smaller than the size of a barley grain convey no levitical defilement; v. Pes. 92b.

(49) R. Judah and the first Tanna.

(50) Which conveys levitical defilement to any man that enters it. [It is suggested that the uncleanness of the land of the Gentiles was decreed in the days of Alcimus, in order to stem the tide of emigration that had set in as a result of his persecutions, v. Weiss, Dor. I, 105.]

(51) Hence it cannot constitute a screen between the man and the unclean territory.

(52) Provided its dimensions are of the prescribed size.

(53) And constitutes a valid screen. The first Tanna is thus in agreement with Rabbi's view while R. Judah is of the same opinion as R. Jose son of R. Judah.

(54) So MS.M. and Rashal. Cur. edd., 'but that which was taught'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 31a

An 'erub for a levitically clean priest may be prepared from levitically clean terumah¹ [and deposited] on a grave.' How does he² get there? — In a chest, box or portable turret. But since [the 'erub] was put down [on the grave] it became levitically unclean?³ — [This is a case] where [the 'erub] was not rendered susceptible to levitical uncleanness⁴ or one kneaded in fruit juice.⁵ But how does he get it?⁶ — By means of flat wooden pieces which are unsusceptible to levitical uncleanness.⁷ But does not [a wooden piece] constitute a tent?⁸ — One might carry it edgeways.⁹ If so, what could be the reason of the Rabbis?¹⁰ — They are of the opinion that a home¹¹ must not be acquired with things the benefit of which is forbidden.¹² Thus [it follows] that R. Judah is of the opinion that this is permitted; for he upholds the view that the commandments were not given [to men] to derive [personal] benefit from them.¹³ With reference, however, to what Raba stated: 'Commandments were not given [to men] to derive benefit from them',¹⁴ must it be said¹⁵ that he made his traditional statement in agreement with [one of the] Tannas only? — Raba can answer you: Had they¹⁶ been of the opinion that an 'erub may be provided in connection with a religious duty only¹⁷ all [would have been unanimous,¹⁸ since] commandments were not given [to man] to derive benefit from them. Here, however, they¹⁹ differ on the following principle. The Master is of the opinion that an 'erub may be prepared in connection with a religious duty only and the Masters are of the opinion that an 'erub may be prepared even in connection with a secular matter.²⁰

In respect, however, of what R. Joseph ruled: 'An 'erub may be prepared only in connection with a religious duty',²¹ must it be said that he land down his traditional ruling in accordance with [the view of one of the] Tannas?²² — R. Joseph call answer you: All [agree that] an 'erub may be prepared in connection with a religious duty only, and all [may also agree that] the commandments were not given [to men] to derive benefit from them, but It is this principle on which they differ. The Master²² is of the opinion that once a man has acquired the 'erub²³ it is no satisfaction to him that it is preserved,²⁴ and the Masters²⁵ are of the opinion that a man does derive satisfaction if his 'erub is preserved; for [in that case] he can eat it whenever he needs it.²⁶

MISHNAH. AN 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED WITH DEMAI,²⁷ WITH FIRST TITHE FROM WHICH ITS TERUMAH²⁷ HAD BEEN TAKEN AND WITH SECOND TITHE AND CONSECRATED [FOOD] THAT HAVE BEEN REDEEMED; AND PRIESTS [MAY PREPARE THEIR 'ERUB] WITH HALLAH.²⁸ [IT MAY] NOT [BE PREPARED], HOWEVER, WITH TEBEL,²⁷ NOR WITH FIRST TITHE THE TERUMAH FROM WHICH HAS NOT BEEN TAKEN, NOR WITH SECOND TITHE OR CONSECRATED [FOOD] THAT HAVE NOT BEEN REDEEMED.

GEMARA. DEMAI, surely is not fit for him!²⁹ — Since he³⁰ could, if he wished, declare his estate to be hefker,³¹ and thereby become a poor man when it would be fit for him, it is now also deemed to be fit for him. For we learned: It is permitted to feed poor men

- (1) And much more so from unconsecrated food.
- (2) Being forbidden to enter an unclean area.
- (3) Granted the priest remains levitically clean the food is levitically unclean and is in consequence forbidden to him.
- (4) One for instance that was never in contact with water.
- (5) Which, unlike water, does not render foodstuffs with which it comes in contact susceptible to levitical uncleanness.
- (6) The 'erub on the grave when he wishes to eat it. An 'erub according to R. Judah, is not effective, unless the mall for whom it is prepared is able to eat (v. Rashi s.v. הַיְכָל a.l.).
- (7) Vessels which are susceptible to levitical uncleanness must not be used since such vessels would attract uncleanness from the dead body and convey it to the man who would in consequence be forbidden to consume his 'erub which consists of levitically clean terumah.
- (8) if it is a handbreadth, in circumference. Such a tent (ohel) in accordance with a Rabbinical enactment (v. Shah. 17a) conveys uncleanness to the man who carries it and he thus becomes unfit to eat clean terumah of which, his 'erub was prepared.
- (9) אַחֲרָיו MS.M. and marg. note on Rashi a.l. (Cur. edd. אַחֲרָיו, 'behind him'). Where the edges measure less than a handbreadth, and the piece of wood is carried in a vertical position, no 'tent' is constituted.
- (10) Who do not allow the deposit of an 'erub even on an isolated grave. Granted that a movable 'tent' is no valid partition in a graveyard, why should not a priest standing at the side of an isolated grave be allowed in this manner to remove his 'erub from it and eat it?
- (11) The place where an 'erub is deposited is deemed to be the 'home' of the man for whom it was prepared.
- (12) It is forbidden to have any benefit from a grave, a shroud or any of the requirements of a corpse (v. Sanh. 47b). Hence the Rabbis' prohibition of the use of a grave for an 'erub not only in the case of a priest but also in that of an Israelite. The mention of a priest merely indicates the extent of R. Judah's leniency: Not only is an Israelite permitted but also a priest.
- (13) V. R.H. 28a. In his opinion no 'erub may be prepared unless it is for the purpose of enabling a person to perform a commandment, as in the case where he desires to go to a house of mourning or to a wedding feast (v. infra).
- (14) R.H. 28a.
- (15) Since the Rabbis differ from R. Judah.
- (16) The Rabbis.
- (17) Cf. supra p. 214, n. 9.
- (18) In permitting the use of a grave for an 'erub.
- (19) R. Judah and the Rabbis.
- (20) From which one derives personal benefit. Hence their prohibition.
- (21) Infra 82a.
- (22) R. Judah.
- (23) At twilight on the Sabbath eve.
- (24) Since the main object for which the 'erub was prepared has already been achieved. Its preservation of the grave is therefore of no benefit to him.
- (25) The Rabbis.
- (26) The preservation of the 'erub on the grave is consequently a benefit to him and is, therefore, forbidden.
- (27) V. Glos.
- (28) V. Glos. MS.M. adds: 'and terumah'.
- (29) Sc. for the man for whom it is prepared. And since our Mishnah allows it nevertheless to be used for an 'erub, does not an objection arise against Symmachus (cf. Tosaf. s.v. דְּמַי a.l.) who laid down that an 'erub must consist of food which the man for whom it is prepared is able to eat?
- (30) Any man for whom it is prepared.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 31b

and billeted troops¹ with demai.² R. Huna stated: One taught: Beth Shammai ruled: Poor men may not be fed with demai, and Beth Hillel ruled: Poor men may be fed with demai.³

AND WITH FIRST TITHE FROM WHICH [ITS TERUMAH] HAD BEEN TAKEN etc. Is not this obvious? — [The ruling was] required in the case only where [the Levite]⁴ forestalled the priest⁵ whilst [the grain was still] in the ears and from⁶ [his first tithe] was taken terumah of the tithe⁷ but no terumah gedolah,⁸ and this⁹ is in agreement with a ruling made by R. Abbahu in the name of Resh Lakish. For R. Abbahu stated in the name of Resh Lakish: First tithe that was set apart, before [the other dues, while the grain was still] in the ears, is exempt from terumah gedolah, for it is said in Scripture: Then ye shall set apart of it a gift¹⁰ for — the Lord, even, tithe of the tithe;¹¹ I only told you [to set apart] ‘a tithe of the tithe’ but not terumah gedolah and the tithe of the tithe from the tithe. Said R. Papa to Abaye: If so, [the same rule should apply] also where [the Levite] forestalled the priest¹² [while the grain was already] in a pile?¹³ — Against you, the other replied, Scripture stated: Thus ye shall set apart in gift¹⁴ unto the lord of all your tithes.¹⁵ And what [reason] do you see [for this distinction]?¹⁶ — The one has become corn¹⁷ but the other¹⁸ has not.¹⁹

AND WITH SECOND TITHE AND CONSECRATED [FOOD] THAT HAVE BEEN REDEEMED. Is not this obvious? — [The ruling was] required in the case only where the principal was paid but not the fifth;²⁰ and this teaches us that [the omission to pay] the fifth does not invalidate the redemption.²¹

[IT MAY] NOT [BE PREPARED,] HOWEVER, WITH TEBEL. Is not this obvious? — [The ruling was] necessary in such a case only as Rabbinical tebel as, for Instance, when [produce] was sown²² in an unperforated pot.²³

NOR WITH FIRST TITHE THE TERUMAH FROM WHICH HAS NOT BEEN TAKEN. Is not this²⁴ obvious? — This²⁴ was necessary in such, a case only where [the Levite] forestalled the priest²⁵ [in taking his due²⁶ when the grain was already] in the pile,²⁷ and terumah of the tithe was taken from it,²⁸ while terumah gedolah was not taken from it. It might consequently have been assumed [that the ruling is] as R. Papa submitted to Abaye,²⁹ hence we were informed [that the ruling is] in agreement with the latter's reply.³⁰

NOR WITH SECOND TITHE AND CONSECRATED [FOOD] THAT HAVE NOT BEEN REDEEMED. Is not this obvious? — [The ruling was] required in that case only where they were redeemed but their redemption was not performed in the prescribed manner;³¹ where the TITHE [for instance] was redeemed with a piece of uncoined metal³² whereas the All Merciful ordained, ‘And thou shalt bind up³³ the money,’³⁴ [implying that] the metal must be coined;³⁵ and where the CONSECRATED [FOOD] was exchanged for a plot of land, whereas the All Merciful ordained, ‘And he shall give the money...’³⁶ and it should be assured for him’.³⁷

MISHNAH. IF A MAN SENDS HIS ‘ERUB³⁸ BY THE HAND OF A DEAF-MUTE,³⁹ AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR, OR BY THE HAND OF ONE WHO DOES NOT ADMIT [THE PRINCIPLE OF] ‘ERUB,⁴⁰ THE ‘ERUB IS NOT VALID. IF, HOWEVER, HE INSTRUCTED ANOTHER PERSON TO RECEIVE IT FROM HIM,⁴¹ THE ‘ERUB IS VALID.

GEMARA. IS NOT A MINOR [qualified to prepare an ‘erub]? Did not R. Huna in fact rule: A minor may collect⁴² [the foodstuffs for] the ‘erub?⁴³ — This is no difficulty since the former⁴⁴ refers to an ‘erub of boundaries while the latter deals with an ‘erub of courtyards.⁴⁵

OR BY THE HAND OF ONE WHO DOES NOT ADMIT [THE PRINCIPLE OF] 'ERUB. Who?
— R. Hisda replied: A Samaritan.

IF, HOWEVER, HE INSTRUCTED ANOTHER PERSON TO RECEIVE IT FROM HIM, THE 'ERUB IS VALID. But is there no need to provide against the possibility that [the minor] might not carry it to him? — As R. Hisda explained elsewhere, 'Where [the sender] stands and watches him',⁴⁶ here also [it may be explained:] Where he stands and watches him.⁴⁶ But is there no need to provide against the possibility that [the agent] would not accept it from him?⁴⁷ — As R. Yehiel explained elsewhere, 'It is a legal presumption that an agent carries out his mission, so here also [it may be explained:] It is a legal presumption that an agent carries out his mission.

Where were the Statements of R. Hisda and R. Yehiel made? — In connection with the following. For it was taught: If he gave it⁴⁸ to [a trained] elephant who carried it,⁴⁹ or to [a trained] ape who carried it,⁴⁹ the 'erub is invalid; but if he instructed someone⁵⁰ to receive it from the animal,⁵¹ behold the 'erub is valid — Now is it not possible that it would not carry it?⁵² — R. Hisda replied: [This is a case] where [the sender] stands and watches it.⁵³ But is it not possible that [the agent] would not accept it from [the animal]?⁵¹ — R. Yehiel replied: It is a legal presumption that all agent carries out his mission. R. Nahman ruled: In [respect of a law] of the Torah, there is no legal presumption that all agent carries out his mission;

(17) אֵידָגָן denom. of דָּגָן 'corn'. Only corn is subject to the priestly dues (v. Deut. XVIII, 4).

(18) Grain in the ears.

(19) So that when the Levite received his first tithe the grain was not yet subject to terumah gedolah, while at the time it was threshed it had already the status of first tithe which is exempt in accordance with Num. XVIII, 26.

- (42) From the tenants of a courtyard.
- (43) And prepare it for them.
- (44) Lit., 'here', our Mishnah.
- (45) In the latter case the mere contribution of the tenants to a common 'erub constitutes the fusion of their private domains. In the former case, however, acquisition of the abode is necessary but no minor is legally competent to effect acquisition.
- (46) Thus making sure that the 'erub is 'duly carried to the competent agent.

- (53) Thus making sure that the 'erub is duly carried to the competent agent.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 32a

in [respect of a law] of the Scribes there is a legal presumption that an agent carries out his mission. R. Shesheth, however, ruled: In respect of the one as in that of the other there is a legal presumption that an agent carries out his mission.

Whence, said R. Shesheth, do I derive this?¹ From what we learned: As soon as the omer² had been offered the new produce³ is forthwith permitted; and those who [live] at a distance⁴ bare permitted [its use] from mid-day onwards.⁵ [Now, the prohibition against the consumption of] new produce is Pentateuchal, and yet it was stated that ‘those who [live] at a distance are permitted [its use] from mid-day onwards’. Is not this due to the legal presumption that an agent carries out his mission?⁶ And R. Nahman?⁷ — There [the presumption is justified] for the reason stated:⁸ Because it is known that Beth din would not shirk their duty.⁹

Others there are who read: R. Nahman said: Whence do I derive this?¹⁰ since the reason stated¹¹ was, ‘Because it is known that Beth din would not shirk their duty’, [it follows that] it is only Beth din who do not shirk their duty but that an ordinary agent might. And R. Shesheth?¹² — He can answer you: Beth din [are presumed to have carried out their duty] by mid-day, while an ordinary agent [is presumed to have done his before] all the day [has passed]. Said R. Shesheth: Whence do I derive this?¹³ From what was taught: A woman who is under the obligation¹⁴ [of bringing an offering in connection with] a birth¹⁵ or gonorrhoea¹⁶ brings [the required sum of]¹⁷ money which she puts into the collecting box,¹⁸ performs ritual immersion and is permitted to eat consecrated: food in the evening.¹⁹ Now what is the reason?²⁰ Is it not because we hold that it is a legal presumption that an agent²¹ carries out his mission?²² And R. Nahman?²³ — There [the presumption may be justified] in agreement with the view of R. Shemaiah. For R. Shemaiah laid down: There is a legal presumption that no Beth din of priest who would rise from their session²⁴ before all the money in the collecting box²⁵ had been spent.²⁶

R. Shesheth again said: Whence do I derive this?²⁷ From what was taught: If a man said to another, ‘Go out and gather for yourself some figs²⁸ from my fig tree’, the latter may make²⁹ of them an irregular meal³⁰ or³¹ he must tithe them [as produce that is] known³² [to be untithed].³³ [If however, the owner said to him,] ‘Fill yourself this basket³⁴ with figs from my tree’ [the latter] may eat them as an irregular meal³⁵ or³⁶ must tithe them as demai.³⁷ This³⁸ applies only to [an owner who was] an am ha-arez,³⁹ but if he was a Fellow⁴⁰ [the latter] may eat [the fruit]⁴¹ and need not tithe them;⁴² so Rabbi: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, ruled: This⁴³ applies only to [an owner] an am ha-arez, but if he was a Fellow⁴⁰ [the latter] must not eat [the figs]⁴⁴ before he has tithed them, because Fellows are not suspected of giving terumah from [produce] that is not in close proximity [to the produce for which it is given].⁴⁵ My view, remarked Rabbi, seems [to be more acceptable] than that of my father,⁴⁶ since it is preferable that Fellows should be suspected of giving terumah from [produce] that is not in close proximity [with that for which it is given] than that they should give ‘amme ha-arez⁴⁷ to eat all sorts of tebel.⁴⁸ Now, their⁴⁹ dispute extends only so far⁵⁰ that while one Master maintains that they are not suspected,⁵¹ but both⁵² [agree⁵³ that there is] legal presumption that an agent⁵⁴ carries out his mission.⁵⁵ And R. Nahman?⁵⁶ — There [the presumption is justified] in agreement [with the principle] of R. Hanina Hoza'ah. For R. Hanina Hoza'ah⁵⁷ laid down: It is a legal presumption that a Fellow would not allow any unprepared thing⁵⁸ to pass out of his hand.⁵⁹

The Master said: ‘This applies only to [an owner who was] an am ha-arez, but if he was a Fellow [the latter] may eat [the fruit] and need not tithe them; so Rabbi’. To whom could this ‘am ha-arez⁶⁰ have been speaking? If it be suggested that he was speaking to an ‘am ha-arez like himself⁶¹ [what sense is there in the ruling,] ‘Must tithe them, as demai’? Would he obey it?⁶² Consequently it in must be a case⁶³ where an ‘am ha-arez was speaking to a Fellow. Now, then, read the final clause: ‘My view seems [to be more acceptable] than that of my father, since it is preferable that Fellows should be suspected of giving terumah from [produce] that is not in close proximity [with that for which it is given] than that they should give ‘amme ha-arez to eat all sorts of tebel’; how⁶⁴ does the question of ‘amme ha-arez at all arise?⁶⁵ — Rabina replied: The first clause deals with an ‘am ha-arez who was speaking to a Fellow, and the final clause deals with a Fellow who was speaking to all am ha-arez while another Fellow was listening to the conversation.⁶⁶ Rabbi is of the opinion that that Fellow may eat [the fruit] and need not tithe it because it is certain that the first Fellow had duly given the tithe for it, while R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled that he must not eat [the fruit] before he tithed it because Fellows are not suspected of giving terumah from [produce] that is not in close proximity [to that for which it is given]. Thereupon Rabbi said to him, 'It is preferable that Fellows should be suspected of giving terumah from [produce] that is not in close proximity [with that for which it is given] than that they should give amme ha-arez to eat all sorts of tebel'. On what principle do they¹ differ? — Rabbi holds that a Fellow is satisfied to commit a minor ritual offence² in order that an 'am ha-arez should not commit a major one,³ while R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that a Fellow prefers the 'am ha-arez to commit a major ritual offence rather than that he should commit even a minor one.⁴

MISHNAH. IF HE DEPOSITED I⁵ ON A TREE ABOVE [A HEIGHT] OF TEN HANDBREADTHS,⁶ HIS 'ERUB IS INEFFECTIVE; [IF HE DEPOSITED IT AT AN ALTITUDE] BELOW TEN HANDBREADTHS HIS 'ERUB IS EFFECTIVE. IF HE DEPOSITED IT IN A CISTERN,⁶ EVEN IF IT IS A HUNDRED CUBITS DEEP, HIS ERUB IS EFFECTIVE.

GEMARA. R. Hiyya b. Abba and R. Assi and Raba b. Nathan sat at their studies while R. Nahman was sitting beside them, and in the course of their session they discussed the following. Where could that tree have been standing? If it be suggested that it stood in a private domain, what matters⁷ it [it may be objected] whether it was ABOVE [A HEIGHT] OF TEN HANDBREADTHS or BELOW it, seeing that a private domain rises up to the sky? If, however, [it be suggested] that it stood in a public domain [the question arises] where did the man intend to make his Sabbath abode?⁸ If it be suggested that he intended to make it on, [the tree] above, are not then he and his ‘erub in the same domain?⁹ — [The fact,] however, [is that] he intended to make his Sabbath abode below.¹⁰ But is he not¹¹ making use of the tree?¹² — It may still be maintained that [the tree] stood in a public domain and that the man's intention was to acquire his Sabbath abode below, but¹³ [this Mishnah] represents the view of Rabbi who land down: Any act that is forbidden¹⁴ by a Rabbinical measure¹⁵ is not subject to that prohibition during twilight.¹⁶ ‘Well spoken!’¹⁷ said R. Nahman to them, ‘and so also did Samuel say’. ‘Do you¹⁸ explain with it’, they said to him, ‘so much?’ (But did not they themselves explain [their difficulty] thereby? — In fact it was this that they said to him: ‘Did you embody it in the Gemara?’)¹⁹ — ‘Yes’, he answered them — So it was also stated:²⁰ R. Nahman reporting Samuel said: Here we are dealing with a tree that stood in a public domain, that was ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths wide, and the man had the intention to acquire his Sabbath abode below. This, furthermore, is the view of Rabbi who land down: Any act that is forbidden by a Rabbinical measure¹⁵ is not subject to that prohibition during twilight.²¹

Raba stated: This²² was taught only in respect of a tree that stood beyond the outskirts²³ of the town, but where a tree stood within the outskirts of the town²⁴ an ‘erub is effective even [if it was deposited] above [a height] of ten handbreadths,²⁵ since a town is deemed to be full.²⁶ If so,²⁷ the same [law should apply to an erub on a tree] beyond the outskirts of a town, for since Raba ruled: ‘A man who deposited his ‘erub [in any spot] acquires [an abode of] four cubits,’²⁸ that spot is a private domain which rises up to the sky?²⁹ — R. Isaac the son of R. Mesharsheya replied: Here we are dealing with a tree whose branches bent over beyond the four cubits

(1) Rabbi and his father.

(2) Giving the dues from produce that is not in close proximity with that for which it is given.

(5) The ‘erub.

(6) This is explained in the Gemara infra.

(7) Lit., ‘what (difference is it) to me’.

(8) Lit., ‘to rest’.

(9) And the ‘erub should be effective even if it was deposited above a height of ten handbreadths.

(10) At the root of the tree in the public domain. If the ‘erub is above ten handbreadths it is ineffective because the tree on which it lay, being presumably no less than four handbreadths in width has, above a height often handbreadths, the status of a private domain, and carrying from a private domain into the public one, where the man had acquired his abode, is forbidden.

(11) When he takes down the ‘erub.

(12) Even where the height was less than ten handbreadths. Such use being forbidden on the Sabbath (cf. Bezah 36b) how could the ‘erub be deemed valid?

(13) In reply to the objection raised (v. previous note).

(14) On the Sabbath.

(15) Shebuth.

(16) Of the Sabbath Eve; because it is doubtful whether that time is regarded as Sabbath proper or as ‘the conclusion of the weekday. As the acquisition of a Sabbath abode by ‘erub must take effect at twilight, and since at that time the use of the tree was permitted, the ‘erub in the circumstances mentioned may well be deemed effective.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 33a

while the man intended to acquire his Sabbath abode at its root;¹ and what [is the explanation for the use of the expressions,] 'above' and 'below'?² That [the branch]³ rises again into a vertical position. But could not the man,⁴ if he so wished, bring [the 'erub]⁵ by way of the upper part of the tree?⁶ — [This is a case] where many people adjust their burdens⁷ on it,⁸ and [this ruling⁹ is] in agreement with that of Ulla who laid down: If a column, nine handbreadths high,¹⁰ was situated in a public domain and many people were adjusting their burdens on it, any man who throws¹¹ an object that comes to rest upon It is guilty.¹²

What is the source of the dispute between,¹³ Rabbi and the Rabbis?¹⁴ — It was taught: If he deposited it on a tree above [a height] of ten handbreadths, his 'erub is ineffective;¹⁵ [if he deposited it at an altitude] below ten handbreadths his 'erub is effective, but he must not move it.¹⁶ [If the 'erub was deposited]¹⁷ within three [handbreadths from the ground] it is permitted to move it.¹⁸ If he put it in a basket and hung it upon the tree his 'erub is effective even if it was above [a height] of ten handbreadths;¹⁹ Rabbi. But the Sages ruled: Wherever it is forbidden to move it the 'erub is ineffective. Now to what [does the statement,] 'But the Sages ruled' refer? If it be suggested: To the final clause,²⁰ [the difficulty would arise:] Does this imply that the Rabbis hold the opinion that [the use of the] sides²¹ [is also] forbidden?²² Consequently [it must refer] to the first clause.²³ But then, what [size of] tree is done to imagine? If [it is one] which is less than four [handbreadths in width,] then, surely, it is a spot of exemption;²⁴ and if it was four [handbreadths wide,]²⁵ what is [the use, it may be asked,] that the 'erub was put in a basket?²⁶ — Rabina replied: The first clause [is a case] where [the tree] had [a width] of four [handbreadths,²⁷ while] the final clause [deals with one] whose width was less than four [handbreadths]²⁸ but the basket supplemented it to four

(1) The branches outside the four cubits are obviously in the public domain. If, therefore, the 'erub lay below the height of ten cubits it is possible to carry it in small stages of less than four cubits to the root of the tree which is a private domain only as regards 'erub but not in respect of forbidding the movement of objects into it from the public domain. If, however, the 'erub was deposited above the height of ten cubits (so that it rested in a private domain proper) it would not be permitted to carry it to the root of the tree (another private domain) via the public domain. Hence its invalidity.

(2) לְמַעַלָּה and לְמַטָּה. Such terms are applicable to an 'erub on a tree that stands upright but not to one on a branch, projecting horizontally. In the latter case the expressions, 'high' and 'low' would be expected.

(3) At first projecting horizontally at an altitude below ten handbreadths.

- (4) Even where the 'erub lay at a height of ten handbreadths, and beyond four cubits of the root where he intended to acquire the Sabbath abode.
- (5) From the branch to the root of the tree.
- (6) I.e., by climbing to the upper part of the tree, which, being above an attitude of ten handbreadths, is a private domain through which it is permitted to carry from the private domain in which the 'erub lay to the root of the tree which also is a private domain.
- (7) מכתפין denom. pi'el of כתף 'to shoulder'.
- (8) The branch that was beyond the four cubits was lower than ten handbreadths; which, in consequence, assumes the status of a public domain. It is impossible, therefore, to carry the 'erub from the upright portion of the branch which is a private domain to the root of the tree which is also a private domain, since the only way possible, viz. the horizontal portion of the branch, constitutes a public domain of all the space above it, and it is forbidden to carry from one private into another private domain via a public domain (cf. Shab. 96a).
- (9) That the branch has the status of a public domain.
- (10) Only of that height; for if it was lower than three handbreadths it is regarded as a mere projection and as a part of the ground; from three to nine handbreadths in height, since it is too low for adjusting burdens, it is not deemed a public domain but it has the status of a karmelith (v. Glos.); and one of ten handbreadths in height is deemed to be a private domain.
- (11) Across a distance of four cubits from the column
- (12) Shab. 3a; of the offence of desecrating the Sabbath, because the column has the status of a public domain. Where, however, the public do not adjust their burdens upon the column it is not deemed a public domain and no guilt is incurred by the man who threw the object because, though he lifted it up in a public domain, it did not come to rest in a public domain, and no guilt for throwing a distance of four cubits in a public domain is incurred unless both the lifting and the resting of the object took place in a public domain.
- (13) Lit., 'what . . . and what'.
- (14) Referred to supra 32b.
- (15) If, as was explained supra, the man's intention was to make his abode at the root of the tree whose branches extended horizontally across the public domain to a distance of four cubits and then turned upwards into a vertical position.
- (16) On the Sabbath, from its place on the tree to his 'abode' at the root of that tree; because the use of a tree is forbidden on the Sabbath. The 'erub is nevertheless effective since at twilight on Friday, when the 'abode' is acquired, the use of the tree, which is only Rabbinically forbidden on the Sabbath, is then permitted and the 'erub, therefore, could then be moved.
- (17) On the tree.
- (18) On the Sabbath; because a height of less than three handbreadths is regarded as the ground itself.
- (19) Provided, as explained infra, the tree is less than four handbreadths in width.
- (20) Rabbi having ruled that an 'erub in a basket suspended from a tree is effective, the Sages objected that, since on the Sabbath the 'erub' may not be moved, on account of the Rabbinical prohibition against the use of a tree, it must not be moved, as a preventive measure, even at twilight of the Sabbath Eve when the 'erub should come into force, and the 'erub is consequently ineffective.
- (21) As is the case here where the basket does not rest on the tree but is suspended from its sides.
- (22) But this question in fact forms the subject of a dispute in Shab. 154b.
- (23) Where Rabbi stated that an 'erub on a tree below the height of ten handbreadths is effective though it may not be moved on the Sabbath. To this the Sages objected that, though the abode and the 'erub were in the public domain, since the 'erub may not be moved on the Sabbath, on account of the prohibition against the use of the tree, it may not be moved at twilight either, and the 'erub is, therefore, invalid.
- (24) I.e., a spot the identity of which is merged into the domain in which it is situated (v. Shab. 6a), so that it is permitted, even in Rabbinic law, to move objects from the former into the latter and vice versa. As the tree in question is situated in a public domain it is permitted to move the 'erub from the one into the other. Why then should the 'erub be ineffective even where it lay at a height above ten handbreadths?
- (25) So that the prohibition in the first clause is due to the fact that the tree constituted a private domain from which it is forbidden to carry into the public domain.
- (26) Seeing that neither the 'erub alone nor the 'erub with the basket may be moved from one domain into another.

(27) As the tree thus constituted a private domain the 'erub on it could not be carried to the 'abode' in the public domain. Hence the invalidity of the 'erub.

(28) In consequence of which it cannot be regarded as a private domain.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 33b

and Rabbi adopts the same view as that of R. Meir and also the same as that of R. Judah. He adopts the same view as that of R. Meir who ruled: 'Excavation may be imagined so that [the prescribed measurements] may be obtained',¹ and he also adopts the same view as that of R. Judah who ruled: It is necessary that the 'erub [shall rest] on a spot that is four [handbreadths wide]', which is not the case here.²

What [is the source of the ruling of] R. Judah? — It was taught: R. Judah ruled: If a man inserted a pole in [the ground of] a public domain and deposited his 'erub on it, his 'erub is effective [if the pole was] ten [handbreadths] high and four [handbreadths] wide;³ otherwise⁴ his 'erub is ineffective. On the contrary! Are not he and his 'erub [in the latter case]⁵ in the same domain?⁶ It is this rather that he⁷ meant: [If the pole⁸ was] ten [handbreadths] high it is necessary⁹ that at its top it shall be four [handbreadths wide],¹⁰ but if it was not ten [handbreadths] high it is not necessary for its top to be four [handbreadths wide].¹¹

In agreement with whose view?¹² — [It is apparently] not in agreement with that of R. Jose son of R. Judah, seeing that it was taught: R. Jose son of R. Judah ruled: If a man inserted a reed in [the ground of] a public domain and on the top of it he fixed a basket,¹³ any one who threw¹⁴ something which came to a rest on the top of it incurs guilt?¹⁵ — It¹⁶ may be said [to be in agreement] even [with that of] R. Jose son of R. Judah, for there¹⁷ the sides¹⁸ surround [the reed],¹⁹ but here²⁰ the sides¹⁸ do not surround [the tree].²¹ R. Jeremiah²² replied:²³ A basket is different²⁴ since one might incline it and so²⁵ lower it within ten [handbreadths from the ground].²⁶ R. Papa sitting at his studies was discoursing on this traditional teaching,²⁷ when Rab b. Shaba pointed out to him the following objection: [We learned, he said]: How is one²⁸ to proceed?²⁹ He arranges [for the 'erub'] to be carried [by a deputy³⁰ to the required spot] on the first day,³¹ and, having remained there with it until dusk,³² he takes it [with him]³³ and goes away.³⁴ On the second day³⁵ he [again] comes [with it] and keeps it there until dusk³² when he may consume it³⁶ and go away.³⁷

(1) Lit., 'to complete', v. supra 11b. Hence it is permissible to add the width of the basket to that of the tree to impart to the latter the status of a private domain. It is not regarded, however, as a private domain in all respects since the prescribed width does not extend below the basket where the width of the tree is less than four handbreadths.

(2) Lit., 'and there is not', unless the width of the basket is added.

(3) Because the area of four cubits in the public domain which he had acquired by making his abode for the Sabbath at the base of the pole, is in respect of the 'erub regarded as a private domain which extends from the earth to the sky and in consequence of which he may move his 'erub' from the top of the pole, which is a private domain, to its base at the side of which he made his abode.

(4) Lit., 'and if not'. This is now assumed to mean: If the width was less than four handbreadths or the height was less than ten handbreadths.

(5) ,Where the pole (v. previous note) was less than ten handbreadths high.

(6) Since the pole does not constitute a private domain. Why then is the 'erub ineffective?

(7) R. Judah.

(8) On the top of which the 'erub was placed.

(9) If the 'erub is to be effective.

(10) Such a width constitutes a private domain and, as explained supra n. 5, the 'erub is effective. If the width, however, is less than four handbreadths the 'erub, resting in no 'domain' and being suspended, so to speak, in the air, must be ineffective.

(11) Sc. even if it is less than four handbreadths wide the 'erub is effective, since an object suspended within ten handbreadths from the ground is deemed to be resting on the ground itself.

(12) Did Rabina (spurn 33a ad fin.) lay down that, though the width of the basket brings up a portion of a tree to the prescribed size of four handbreadths, the status of a private domain cannot be imparted to that portion unless the full height of the tree from the ground to that Spot was four handbreadths wide.

(13) Four hand breadths wide.

(14) From the public domain.

(15) Shah. 5a, 101a; because the basket has the status of a private domain though the reed below it is less than the prescribed width. Is it likely, however, that Rabina's view is in disagreement with that of R. Jose son of R. Judah?

(16) Rabina's view.

(17) The case of the basket on top of the reed.

(18) Of the basket.

(19) And the rule of 'gud ahith' by which the sides are assumed to descend to the ground may well be applied. The top of the reed may, therefore, be regarded as a private domain.

(20) A basket attached to the side of a tree.

(21) If the spot on which the 'erub rested were to be regarded as a private domain two processes would have to be postulated, that (a) the tree is imagined to be cut away so as to make up with the basket the prescribed area of four handbreadths and (b) that the sides of the basket descended to the ground. The assumption of two such processes, however, is inadmissible even according to R. Jose son of R. Judah. (For another interpretation v. Rash s.v., ואית דמפרשי a.l.).

(22) Maintaining that the first as well as the second clause of the Baraita (supra 33a) refers to a spot that was four hand breadths wide.

(23) To the objection (loc. cit. ad fin.): What is the use that the 'erub was put in a basket?

(24) From a fixed tree or pole.

(25) Without detaching it from the tree.

(26) And so obtain his 'erub without carrying it from one domain into another. Hence the validity of the 'erub even if one did not actually incline the basket.

(27) Of R. Jeremiah.

(28) Who wishes to prepare an 'erub for a festival, that occurred on a Friday, and for the Sabbath day following it.

(29) Were the 'erub to be deposited on the festival eve only, it might sometimes be lost during the day before the Sabbath commenced and the man, though provided for during the festival at the commencement of which the 'erub was in existence, would remain unprovided for during the Sabbath day.

(30) Cf Rashi s.v. מתלב and Tosaf. s.v. מוליכו a.l.

(31) Sc. on the festival eve.

(32) When, the 'abode' is acquired.

(33) For fear it gets lost.

(34) Lit., 'and comes for himself'.

(35) Friday, which is the Sabbath eve.

(36) Since the 'erub already served its purpose. He cannot again carry it away with him, as he did on the evening of the festival, since carrying in a public domain is forbidden on the Sabbath.

(37) Infra 3a.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 34a

Now, why [should this¹ at all be necessary]? Let it rather be land down:² Since one could carry it³ if one wished, [the 'erub], though one had not actually carried it, is deemed to have been carried? — R. Zera replied: This¹ is a preventive measure against the possibility of [not carrying it³ even when] a festival occurred on a Sunday.⁴

He pointed out to him [another] objection: If a man, intending to acquire his Sabbath abode in a public domain, deposited his 'erub in a wall⁵ lower than ten handbreadths [from the ground], his 'erub is effective,⁶ [but if he deposited it] above [a height of] ten handbreadths [from the ground]⁷ his 'erub is ineffective.⁸ If he intended to make his abode on the top of a dove-cote, or on the top of a turret, his 'erub is valid [if it lay⁹ at a height] above ten handbreadths [from the ground;¹⁰ but if it lay at a level] below ten handbreadths [from the ground]¹¹ his 'erub is ineffective.¹² but why?¹³ Could it not be said here also¹⁴ [that the 'erub is effective] 'since one could incline [the dove-cote or the turret] and so lower it to a level of less than¹⁵ ten [handbreadths from the ground]?'¹⁶ — R. Jeremiah replied: Here we are dealing with a turret¹⁷ that was nailed [to the wall].¹⁸ Raba replied: It¹⁹ may be said to refer even to a turret¹⁷ that was not nailed [to a wall], for we might be dealing with a high turret²⁰ which, were one to incline it a little,²¹ it would project²² beyond [the original area of] four cubits.²³ But how is one to imagine [the circumstance]? If [the turret] had a window, and a cord [also was available, why should not the 'erub] be taken up through the window by means of the cord?²⁴ — This is a case where there was neither window nor cord.

IF HE DEPOSITED IT IN A CISTERN EVEN IF IT IS A HUNDRED CUBITS DEEP etc. Where was this CISTERN situated? If it be suggested that it was situated in a private domain,

- (1) The carrying of an 'erub to the place one wishes to acquire as his Sabbath abode.
- (2) As was done in the case of the basket, that, since one might incline it etc., it is the same as if one actually did it.
- (3) To the required spot.
- (4) Lit., '(the day) after the Sabbath'. In such a case the 'erub, if it is to be effective for the festival, must be carried to the required spot on the Sabbath eve. It cannot be taken there on the Sabbath when the carrying of objects is forbidden. Consequently, had it not been instituted that an 'erub must always be carried to the required spot, one might erroneously have formed the opinion that even in the case postulated the carrying of the 'erub to the required spot is unnecessary; and this would have had the result that the 'erub could be ineffective, since in this case carrying on the Sabbath being forbidden, the principle, 'Since it might be carried etc.' is obviously inapplicable.
- (5) That was more than four cubits distant from the 'abode'. If it was within the four cubits the 'erub is valid in both the following cases as explained supra in the case of a tree.
- (6) Since it is possible to carry it from the wall to the 'abode' in small stages of less than four cubits. Such a mode of carrying is forbidden on the Sabbath proper by a Rabbinical measure only; and, as the twilight of the Sabbath eve is regarded as Sabbath proper also by a Rabbinical measure only and as one Rabbinical measure cannot be imposed upon another, the carrying in small stages has not been forbidden at twilight when the acquisition of the 'abode' takes place.
- (7) So that the erub rested in a private domain.
- (8) Since it is forbidden even at twilight to convey from a private domain (v. previous note) into a public domain (where the man would be standing when taking down the 'erub from the wall).
- (9) In the dove-cote or turret.
- (10) Though the man could not carry the 'erub from its place to his abode, on account of the public domain which intervened between his private domain and that in which the 'erub lay (cf. Shab. 96a) he could well descend to the level where the 'erub was deposited and consume it there, since in respect of 'erub and 'abode' all space above ten handbreadths from the ground is regarded as one and the same domain.
- (11) If the cote or turret, for instance, had several compartments one above the other, and the 'erub lay in one of the lower ones.
- (12) Since such a place has the status of a karmelith from which it is forbidden to carry the 'erub to the top of the cote or turret on account of the public domain that intervened between them. Should the man descend to the level of the 'erub to consume it there, he would be leaving the domain of his abode for another domain which is contrary to the requirement that the 'erub must be in a position from which it can be taken to the abode and eaten there.
- (13) Should an 'erub below a level of ten handbreadths be ineffective.
- (14) As was said by R. Jeremiah (supra 33b ad fin.) regarding the basket.
- (15) Lit., 'to bend it and bring it to within'.
- (16) By lowering it to that altitude the 'abode' would be situated in a public domain into which, as explained supra, that two Rabbinical measures are not imposed upon one another, it is permitted at twilight of the Sabbath eve to carry from a karmelith. This Baraita obviously represents the view of Rabbi (v. Supra 32b) since its first clause recognizes the validity of an 'erub that was deposited in a wall below ten handbreadths from the ground though in such circumstances the man's abode is in a public domain while his 'erub is in a karmelith.
- (17) Or dove-cote.

(18) So that it cannot be moved from its position.

(19) The Baraitha under discussion.

(20) One higher than four cubits.

(21) To lower its top to an altitude of less than ten handbreadths.

(22) On account of its size.

(23) In which it was originally situated and which constituted the man's abode. An 'erub cannot be effective unless it call be consumed within four cubits of the original position of the abode.

(24) Pulling with a cord in such circumstances is only a Rabbinical prohibition which, as explained Supra, does not apply to the twilight if Sabbath eve when the Sabbath abode is acquired. (This note follows Rashi's second, while the previous notes on the passage are based on Rashi's first explanation.)

is [not this ruling, it may be objected,] obvious, seeing that a private domain rises up to the sky, and as it rises upwards so it descends downwards?¹ If, on the other hand, it be suggested that it was situated in a public domain, where [it may again be objected] did the man intend to have his Sabbath abode? If above,² he would be in one domain and his 'erub in another;³ and if below,⁴ [is not the ruling again] obvious seeing that he and his 'erub are in the same place?¹ - [This ruling was] required only in a case where [the cistern] was situated in a karmelith⁵ and the man intended to make his abode above;⁶ [and this ruling]⁷ represents the view of Rabbi who laid down: Any act that is forbidden by a Rabbinical measure⁸ is not subject to that prohibition during twilight [on the Sabbath eve].⁹

MISHNAH. IF IT¹⁰ WAS PUT ON THE TOP OF A REED OR ON THE TOP OF A POLE, PROVIDED¹¹ IT HAD BEEN UPROOTED AND THEN INSERTED [IN THE GROUND, EVEN THOUGH IT WAS A HUNDRED CUBITS HIGH, THE ERUB IS EFFECTIVE.¹²

GEMARA. R. Adda b. Mattena pointed out to Raba the following incongruity: [From our Mishnah it appears that] only¹³ if IT HAD BEEN UPROOTED AND THEN INSERTED [IN THE GROUND is the 'erub effective, but if it was] not first uprooted and then inserted [in the ground the 'erub would] not [have been effective].¹⁴ Now whose [view is this? Obviously] that of the Rabbis who ruled: Any act that is forbidden by a Rabbinical measure¹⁵ is also forbidden at twilight [on the Sabbath eve].¹⁶ But you also said that the first clause¹⁷ [represents the view of] Rabbi. [Would then] the first clause [represent the view of] Rabbi and the final clause [that of the] Rabbis? — The other replied: Rami b. Hama has already pointed out this incongruity to R. Hisda who answered him that the first clause was indeed the view of Rabbi while the final one was that of the Rabbis. Rabina said: Both clauses¹⁸ represent the view of Rabbi but [the restriction in] the final clause is a preventive measure against the possibility of nipping [the frail reed].¹⁹

An army once came to Nehardea²⁰ and R. Nahman told his disciples, 'Go out into the marsh and prepare an embankment [from the growing reeds]²¹ so that to-morrow we might go there and sit on them'. Rami b. Hama raised the following objection against R. Nahman or, as others say: R. 'Ukba b. Abba raised the objection against R. Nahman: [Have we not learnt] that only²² if IT HAD BEEN UPROOTED AND THEN INSERTED [IN THE GROUND is the 'erub effective, [from which it follows, if it was] not first uprooted and then inserted [in the ground the 'erub is] not [effective]?²³ — The other replied: There²⁴ [it is a case] of hardened reeds.²⁵ And whence is it derived that we draw a distinction between hardened, and unhardened reeds? — From what was taught: Reeds, thorns and thistles belong to the species of trees and are not subject to the prohibition of kil'ayim²⁶ in the vineyard;²⁷ and another- [Baraitha] taught: Reeds, cassia and bulrushes are a species of herb and subject to the prohibition of kil'ayim in the vineyard. [Now are not the two Baraithas] contradictory to each other?²⁸ It must consequently be inferred that the former deals with²⁹ hardened reeds while the latter deals with²⁹ such as are not hardened. This is conclusive. But is cassia a species of herb?

Have we not in fact learnt: Rue³⁰ must not be grafted on white cassia because [this act would constitute the mingling of] a herb with a tree?³¹ — R. Papa replied: Cassia and white cassia are two different species.³²

MISHNAH. IF IT WAS PUT IN A CUPBOARD³³ AND THE KEY WAS LOST THE 'ERUB IS NEVERTHELESS EFFECTIVE.³⁴ R. ELIEZER RULED: IF IT IS NOT KNOWN³⁵ THAT THE KEY IS IN ITS PROPER PLACE THE 'ERUB IS INEFFECTIVE.

GEMARA. But why?³⁶ Is not this a case where he³⁷ is in one place and his 'erub is in another?³⁸ — Both Rab and Samuel explained: We are dealing here with a CUPBOARD of bricks³⁹ and this ruling represents the view of R. Meir who maintains that it is permitted at the outset⁴⁰ to make a breach⁴¹ [in a structure] in order to take [something out of it]. For we learned: If a house that was filled with fruit was closed up but a breach accidentally appeared,⁴² it is permitted to take [the fruit out] through the breach;⁴³ and R. Meir ruled: It is permitted at the outset to make a breach⁴¹ in order to take [the fruit out].⁴⁴ But did not R. Nahman b. Adda state in the name of Samuel [that the reference there⁴⁴ is] to a pile of bricks?⁴⁵ — Here⁴⁶ also [the reference is] to a pile of bricks. But did not R. Zera maintain that [the Rabbis]⁴⁷ spoke only of a festival but not of a Sabbath?⁴⁸ — Here⁴⁹ also [the 'erub is one that was prepared] for a festival. If that were so,⁵⁰ would it have been justified to state⁵¹ in reference to this [Mishnah that] 'R. Eliezer⁵² ruled: If [the key] was lost in town the 'erub is effective⁵³ but if it was lost in a field⁵⁴ it is not effective'.⁵⁵ Now if it was on a festival⁵⁶ there is no difference in this respect between a town and a field?⁵⁷

- (1) Why then should the obvious be stated?
 - (2) Outside the cistern in the public domain.
 - (3) In which case the 'erub should be ineffective, while according to our Mishnah it is effective.
 - (4) In the cistern.
 - (5) For instance, in a stretch of fields.
 - (6) So that his abode was in a karmelith while his 'erub lay in a private domain.
 - (7) Which assumes the permissibility of movement of objects between a karmelith and a private domain at twilight on the Sabbath eve.
 - (8) As is that of carrying the 'erub from the private domain into the karmelith.
 - (9) When the acquisition of the abode takes place.
 - (10) An 'erub.
 - (11) Lit., 'at the time'.
 - (12) If it rested on a platform of no less than four handbreadths by four, that was attached to the top of the reed or the pole.' Such a platform, though it conforms to the size of a private domain, cannot be regarded as a private domain proper on account of the base on which it rests which is narrower than the prescribed size of four handbreadths.
 - (13) Lit., 'yes'.
 - (14) Obviously because the 'erub could not be removed from its place on account of the prohibition of making use of a growing plant.
 - (15) Such as the use of a tree on the Sabbath.
 - (16) Supra 30b.
 - (17) The preceding Mishnah supra 32b.
 - (18) Lit., 'all of it'.
 - (19) When removing the 'erub from it. The nipping of a piece of reed is Pentateuchally forbidden and hence prohibited also at twilight. Such possibility need not be provided for in [the case of a tree which is hard and strong.
 - (20) And apparently took up the quarters that were used by R. Nahman and his disciples for their studies.
 - (21) I.e., by bending growing reeds over each other.
 - (22) Lit., 'yes'.
 - (23) Obviously because it is forbidden to use a growing reed. How then could R. Nahman permit the use of an embankment made of growing reeds?
 - (24) The ruling in our Mishnah.

- (25) Which are regarded as trees the use of which on the Sabbath is forbidden. Soft reeds, however, which come under the category of herb, may, therefore, be used.
- (26) V. Glos.
- (27) Tosef. Kil.III.
- (28) In the former Baraitha reeds are classed as a species of tree and in the latter as a species of herb.
- (29) Lit., 'here
- (30) Pigam, Gr. **.
- (31) Kil. I, 8.
- (32) Lit., 'Cassia alone and white cassia alone'.
- (33) Or TURRET. Var. lec. 'and it was locked up' (J.T. MS.M. and Asheri).
- (34) The Gemara infra explains under what circumstances.
- (35) So MS. M. Cur. edd., 'if he does not know'.
- (36) Is the 'erub NEVERTHELESS EFFECTIVE.
- (37) The man for whom the 'erub was prepared.
- (38) Since the man cannot get at the 'erub without a key.
- (39) Which can easily be broken into (as will be explained infra).
- (40) Even on a day when mukzeh (v. Glos.) is forbidden.
- (41) Lit., 'to diminish', 'to hollow out'.
- (42) Even if this happened on the very festival.
- (43) And the fruit nevertheless is not regarded as mukzeh (v. Glos.).
- (44) Bezah 31b.
- (45) Loosely put together with no cement or mortar between them. What proof then is there that a breach may also be made at the outset in a cupboard, the bricks in whose walls are presumably firmly built up?
- (46) In our Mishnah.
- (47) In the Mishnah quoted from Bezah.
- (48) Whereas the 'erub in our Mishnah is presumably applicable to Sabbaths as well as festivals.
- (49) In our Mishnah.
- (50) That our Mishnah deals with an 'erub for a festival only.
- (51) Lit., 'that is it which he taught?'
- (52) var. lec. 'Eleazar'.
- (53) Because it is possible to carry the key to the cupboard by way of courtyards, roofs and similar places all of which belong to the same class of domain.
- (54) From which it is forbidden to carry it to the cupboard.
- (55) Tosef. 'Er. 11.
- (56) When the carrying of objects is permitted.
- (57) Lit., 'what to me etc.' At this stage it may be explained. three different views have been recorded: (i) That of the first Tanna of our Mishnah who rules the 'erub to be effective whether the key of the cupboard was lost in town or in a field, since in his view it is permitted to break into the cupboard to get to the 'erub; (ii) That of R. Eliezer of our Mishnah who rules that the 'erub is not effective irrespective of whether the key was lost in town or in a field, since in his opinion the cupboard may not be broken into (contrary to the view of R. Meir) nor may the key be carried by way of courtyards, roofs and the like because these (contrary to the view of R. Simeon) are not regarded as one domain; and (iii) that of R. Eliezer of the Baraitha who agrees with R. Simeon. Aliter: R. Eliezer of our Mishnah refers to a key lost in a field and thus upholds the view of R. Eliezer of the Baraitha (Rashi).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 35a

— [Some words] indeed are missing [from the Baraitha] and this is the proper reading: If it was put in a cupboard and locked up and the key was lost the 'erub is effective. This ruling, however, applies only to a festival but on a Sabbath¹ the 'erub is ineffective. [Even] if the key was found,² whether in town or in a field, the 'erub is ineffective.³ R. Eliezer ruled: [If it was found] in town the 'erub is effective; if in a field it is ineffective. 'In town the 'erub is effective' in agreement with R. Simeon who laid down that roofs, courtyards as well as karpafs⁴ have the status of the same domain in respect of objects that rested in them.⁵ In a field it is ineffective in agreement with the Rabbis.⁶

Both Rabbah and R. Joseph explained:⁷ We are dealing here with a wooden CUPBOARD, one Master⁸ being of the opinion that it [has the status of] a vessel to which the prohibition of building or demolition does not apply,⁹ while the other Master¹⁰ is of the opinion that it [has the status of] a tent.¹¹ And do they¹² then differ on the same principle as the following Tannas? For we learned: [If a Zab]¹³ beat [his fist]¹⁴ upon a chest, a box or a cupboard¹⁵ they¹⁶ become levitically unclean,¹⁷ but R. Nehemiah and R. Simeon declare them clean.¹⁸ Now, do not these differ on the following principle: One Master¹⁹ is of the opinion that it²⁰ [is regarded as] a vessel²¹ while the other Masters²² are of the opinion that it [is regarded as] a tent?²³ — Said Abaye: And how do you understand it?²⁴ Was it not in fact taught: ‘If it was a tent²⁵ that can be shaken²⁶ it is unclean; if it is a vessel²⁷ that cannot be shaken²⁸ it is clean’?²⁹ And, furthermore, in the final clause³⁰ it was taught: ‘But if they were shifted²⁸ they become unclean; this being the general rule: [If the object] is shifted from its place as a direct result of the zab's strength,³¹ it becomes unclean, [but if it moved from its place] on account of the vibration [of an object on which it rested]³² it remains clean’?³³ Rather, said Abaye, all agree [that an object that] moved from its place as a direct result of the zab's strength is unclean³⁴ [but if it moved as] a result of the shaking [of another object on which it rested] it is clean;³⁵ but here³⁶ we are dealing [with an object], the vibration of which was the direct result of the zab's strength.³⁷ And it is this principle on which they differ. The Master³⁸ is of the opinion [that such vibration] is regarded as a shifting [of the object from its place],³⁹ and the Masters⁴⁰ are of the opinion that it is not so regarded.⁴¹ How then is our Mishnah⁴² to be explained?⁴³ — Both Abaye and Raba replied: We are dealing with a lock that⁴⁴ was tied with a cord for the cutting of which a knife is required.⁴⁵ The first Tanna holds the same view as R. Jose who laid down: All instruments may be moved on the Sabbath except a large saw⁴⁶ and the pin of a plough,⁴⁷ while R. Eliezer holds the same view as R. Nehemiah who laid down: Even a cloak and even a spoon may not be moved⁴⁸ except for the purpose for which they were made.⁴⁹

MISHNAH. [IF THE ‘ERUB] ROLLED AWAY BEYOND THE [SABBATH] LIMIT,⁵⁰ OR IF A HEAP FELL ON IT,⁵¹ OR IF IT WAS BURNT, [OR IF IT CONSISTED OF] TERUMAH THAT BECAME UNCLEAN,⁵² [IF ANY OF THESE ACCIDENTS OCCURRED] WHILE IT WAS YET DAY,⁵³ IT IS INEFFECTIVE, [BUT IF IT OCCURRED] AFTER DUSK⁵⁴ THE ‘ERUB IS EFFECTIVE.⁵⁵ IF THIS IS DOUBTFUL⁵⁶ THE MAN,⁵⁷ SAID R. MEIR AND R. JUDAH, [IS IN THE POSITION OF BOTH] AN ASS-DRIVER AND A CAMEL-DRIVER.⁵⁸ R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON RULED: AN ‘ERUB [WHOSE VALIDITY IS] IN DOUBT IS EFFECTIVE. R. JOSE STATED: ABTOLEMOS TESTIFIED ON THE AUTHORITY OF FIVE ELDERS THAT AN ERUB [WHOSE VALIDITY IS] IN DOUBT IS EFFECTIVE.

GEMARA. [IF AN ‘ERUB] ROLLED AWAY BEYOND THE [SABBATH] LIMIT. Raba stated: This was taught only where it rolled away beyond [a distance] of four cubits, but [if it rested] within the four cubits [it is effective, since a person] who deposits his ‘erub [in any spot] acquires⁵⁹ [an area of] four cubits.⁶⁰

OR IF A HEAP FELL ON IT etc. Having been presumed that, if desired, [the ‘erub] could be taken out,⁶¹ must it be assumed⁶² that our Mishnah is not in agreement with Rabbi, for if [it were suggested to be] in agreement with Rabbi [the difficulty would arise]: Did he not lay down that any work that was only Rabbinically prohibited was not forbidden as a preventive measure [on the Sabbath eve] at twilight?⁶³ — It⁶⁴ may be said to be in agreement even with Rabbi, since it may apply to a case⁶⁵ where a hoe or a pick-axe is required.⁶⁶ And [both rulings⁶⁷ were] required. For if [only the one relating to an ‘erub that] ‘ROLLED AWAY’ had been taught it might have been presumed [that the ‘erub was ineffective] because it was not near the man for whom it had been provided,⁶⁸ but that where a heap fell on it, since it is near that man,⁶⁸ the ‘erub is effective. And if [only the ruling] ‘IF A HEAP FELL ON IT’ had been taught it might have been presumed [that the ‘erub was ineffective] because it was covered,⁶⁹ but that where it rolled away, since a wind might sometimes rise and carry it [back to its place], the ‘erub might be said to be effective. [Hence both rulings were] required.

OR IF IT WAS BURNT, [OR IF IT CONSISTED OF] TERUMAH THAT BECAME UNCLEAN. What need⁷⁰ [was there for both these rulings]?- ‘IT WAS BURNT’ was taught

- (1) When it is forbidden to break into the cupboard and the ‘erub is consequently inaccessible.
 - (2) On the Sabbath.
 - (3) This Tanna being in disagreement with R. Simeon who (infra 89a) permits the carrying of a key by way of courtyards and roofs.
 - (4) Pl. of karpaf (v. Glos.).
 - (5) When the Sabbath began with the twilight of Friday eve. Hence it is possible for the key to be carried to the cupboard in the way described and thus to obtain the ‘erub.
 - (6) [Who differ from R. Simeon infra 95b and forbid the carrying of an object in relays from a field to a town (R. Han.).] The last sentence is rightly omitted by Bah., On the difficulties it presents cf. Strashun.
 - (7) The difficulty supra 34b: ‘Is not he in one place etc.’
 - (8) The first Tanna of our Mishnah.
 - (9) Lit., ‘and there is no building in vessels and no demolition in vessels’. Since the cupboard, therefore, may be broken open the ‘erub is accessible and effective.
 - (10) R. Eliezer.
 - (11) To which the prohibitions mentioned do apply’. The ‘erub, therefore, is inaccessible and ineffective.
 - (12) R. Eliezer in our Mishnah and the first Tanna.
 - (13) V. Glos.
 - (14) That was covered, for instance, with a glove which prevented it from coming in direct contact with the object struck and from imparting uncleanness to it by ‘touch’.
 - (15) Or turret.
 - (16) If the blow caused them to move, however slightly, from their position.
 - (17) In accordance with the law of hesset (v. Glos.).
 - (18) Zab. Iv, 3.
 - (19) The first Tanna of the Mishnah just cited.
 - (20) The cupboard or any of the other mentioned objects.
 - (21) Which is subject to the laws of uncleanness through hesset.
 - (22) R. Nehemiah and R. Simeon.
 - (23) To which the uncleanness mentioned does not apply. It thus follows that the Tannas in the Mishnah of Zabim differ on the same principle as that on which the Tannas in our Mishnah differ.
 - (24) The Mishnah from Zabim just cited.
 - (25) Not having been firmly fixed.
 - (26) By the indirect touch of a zab.
 - (27) That was firmly fixed or exceedingly heavy.
 - (28) By the indirect touch of a zab.
 - (29) Because its shaking by the zab does not shift it from its place. This obviously proves that the determining factor in the conveyance of uncleanness by shaking is the shifting of the object from its place and that the question of ‘tent’ or ‘vessel’ does not at all arise.
 - (30) Of the Baraita corresponding to the Mishnah from Zabim.
 - (31) As, for instance, by his beating on it with his gloved fist or a piece of wood.
 - (32) If the zab, for instance, stamped upon the ground and the shaking of the floor caused the object to shift from its place, so that the movement is the result of the vibration of the floor and only the indirect result of the zab's strength.
 - (33) Which again proves that the determining factor is the movement of the object from its place by the direct strength of the zab, and that the question of its status as a tent or a vessel does not come at all under consideration. It cannot therefore be suggested that the Tannas in the Mishnah of Zabim differ on the question of the status of the cupboard as a vessel or tent.

- (34) Even though it was a tent.
- (35) Though it was a vessel.
- (36) In the Mishnah from Zabim under discussion.
- (37) If, for instance, he struck the object with his gloved fist or a piece of wood (so that there was no direct 'touch') and the object only vibrated but did not move from its place.
- (38) The first Tanna.
- (39) Hence his ruling that the object becomes unclean.
- (40) R. Nehemiah and R. Simeon.
- (41) Lit., 'it is not a shifting (from its place)'.
- (42) Dealing with the 'erub that was locked in a cupboard.
- (43) If the cupboard was big, all would agree that it is subject to the law of 'tent'; how then could the first Tanna maintain that the 'erub is effective? If, however, it was a small one, of a capacity of less than forty se'ah of liquids, all would agree that it has the status of a 'vessel'; how then could R. Eliezer maintain that the 'erub is ineffective?
- (44) So MS.M. Cur. edd., 'and'.
- (45) It being too strong to be broken by the bare hands. Had this been possible even R. Eliezer would have permitted the breaking if the cord (cf. Bezah 31b); and, since the cupboard could be opened, the 'erub which would in consequence be accessible, would be effective. Though the breaking of a cord on the Sabbath was permitted in connection with 'vessels' only, and not with structures (such as a tent or a cupboard) that are fixed to the ground, the 'erub here would nevertheless be effective because at the twilight of Friday when the 'erub comes into force, the breaking of the cord, which on the Sabbath itself is forbidden as a Rabbinical measure only, is not even Rabbinically forbidden.
- (46) Used for the cutting of wood.
- (47) Shab. 123b. Hence he allows the use of a knife for the cutting of the cord, and this results in the accessibility and effectiveness of the 'erub.
- (48) On the Sabbath.
- (49) As a knife was not originally made for the purpose of cutting cords it may not be moved on the Sabbath. The 'erub, being in consequence inaccessible, is, therefore, ineffective. In town, however, the 'erub is effective since it is possible to carry the key to the cupboard by way of courtyards, roofs etc. as indicated supra.
- (50) So that more than the permitted distance of two thousand cubits intervened between the 'erub and the man's home and in consequence of which the 'erub was inaccessible to him.
- (51) This is explained infra in the Gemara.
- (52) And, therefore, unfit even for a priest.
- (53) Sc. Friday (the Sabbath eve) before twilight; because at the time the Sabbath began the 'erub was either non-existent or inaccessible.
- (54) On Friday (cf. previous note).
- (55) Because an 'erub comes into force at twilight on the Sabbath eve and, since at that time the 'erub in question was both in existence and accessible, its subsequent loss or inaccessibility cannot in any way affect the rights it had conferred upon the man in connection with the Sabbath in question.
- (56) Sc. it is uncertain whether the accident occurred before, or after dusk.
- (57) Lit., 'behold this (man)'.
- (58) Who is unable to make any progress. A camel can be led only by pulling its rein and an ass can be driven only from behind. A man who is in charge of both animals can neither lead the two on account of the ass nor can he drive the two on account of the camel. So with the man the validity of whose 'erub is in doubt. If the 'erub is valid he can walk from the place of its deposit two thousand cubits in all directions including two thousand cubits in the direction of his home but not beyond it. If it is invalid he can walk from his home two thousand cubits in all directions including two thousand cubits in the direction of the 'erub but not beyond it. As the validity of the 'erub is in doubt he can only walk two thousand cubits distance between his home and the 'erub but is forbidden to go beyond the 'erub in the one direction and beyond his home in the other direction.
- (59) In addition to the right of walking two thousand cubits in all directions.
- (60) Which is regarded as his abode. As his 'erub did not roll beyond his acquired abode it must be regarded as effective.
- (61) Without the use of implements entailing work that is Pentateuchally forbidden on the Sabbath.
- (62) Since the 'erub is deemed ineffective on account, apparently, of the Rabbinical prohibition involved in the removal of the stones that covered it.

(63) And since the validity of an 'erub, as explained Supra, is dependent on its efficacy at twilight, when the removal of stones (being only Rabbinically forbidden on the Sabbath) is according to Rabbi permitted, the 'erub spoken of in our Mishnah would have been effective.

(64) The ruling in our Mishnah.

(65) Lit., 'it is not required (but)'.

(66) For the clearance of the heap before access to the 'erub could be obtained. Such work, being Pentateuchally forbidden, may not be performed even at twilight.

(67) That of an 'erub (a) that ROLLED AWAY and (b) on which A HEAP FELL.

(68) Lit., 'at or with him'.

(69) And access to it is impossible without desecrating the Sabbath.

(70) Lit., 'wherefore to me

to inform you of the power of R. Jose.¹ and 'TERUMAH THAT BECAME UNCLEAN' was taught to inform you of the power of R. Meir.² But is R. Meir of the opinion that in a doubtful case³ the more restrictive course is to be followed?⁴ Have we not in fact learnt: If an unclean person went down to perform ritual immersion and it is doubtful whether he performed the immersion or not,⁵ or even if he did perform the immersion but it is doubtful whether it was done in forty se'ah⁶ [of water]⁷ or in less;⁸ and, similarly, if he performed his immersion in one of two ritual baths, one of which contained forty se'ah [of water] and the other contained less,⁹ and he does not know in which one he performed his immersion he, being in a state of doubt, is unclean.¹⁰ This applies only to a major uncleanness¹¹ but in the case of a minor uncleanness¹² as, for instance, where one ate unclean foods or drank unclean liquids or where a man immersed¹³ his head and the greater part of his body in drawn water, or three log of drawn water were poured upon his head and the greater part of his body¹⁴ and he then went down to perform immersion and it is doubtful whether he did or did not perform it, and even if he did perform it there is doubt whether the immersion was performed in forty se'ah [of water] or less, and, similarly, if he performed the immersion in one of two ritual baths one of which contained forty se'ah, [of water] and the other contained less, and he does not know in which of the two he performed his immersion he, being in a state of doubt, is clean; so R. Meir;¹⁵ and R. Jose declared him to be unclean?¹⁶ — R. Meir is of the opinion [that the laws of the Sabbath] limits¹⁷ are Pentateuchal.¹⁸ But does R. Meir uphold the view that [the laws of Sabbath] limits are Pentateuchal? Have we not in fact learnt: If he is unable to span it¹⁹ — in connection with this R. Dostai b. Jannai stated in the name of R. Meir: 'I have heard that hills are [treated as though they were] pierced',²⁰ Now if the idea could be entertained [that the laws of the Sabbath] limits are Pentateuchal [the difficulty would arise:] Is [the method of] piercing allowed [in such a case] seeing that R. Nahman has in fact stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha [that the method of] piercing must not [be adopted] in the case of [the measurements around] the cities of refuge,²¹ nor in that of the broken-necked heifer²² because they are [ordinances] of the Torah?²³ — This is no difficulty; one ruling was²⁴ his own while the other²⁵ was his master's.²⁶ A careful examination [of the wording] also [leads to this conclusion]. For it was taught: In connection with this R. Dostai b. Jannai stated in the name of R. Meir, 'I have heard that hills are [treated as though they were] pierced'.²⁷ This proves it.

A contradiction, however, was pointed out between two rulings of R. Meir in respect of Pentateuchal laws.²⁸ For have we not learnt: If a man who touched a body at night was unaware whether it was alive or dead but when rising on the following morning he found it to be dead, R. Meir regards him as clean;²⁹ and the Sages regard him as unclean because [questions in respect of] all unclean objects [are determined] in accordance with their condition at the time they were discovered?³⁰ — R. Jeremiah replied: Our Mishnah [refers to terumah] on which a [dead] creeping thing lay throughout the twilight.³¹ But if so, would R. Jose have ruled: AN 'ERUB [WHOSE VALIDITY IS] IN DOUBT IS EFFECTIVE?³² — Both Rabbah and R. Joseph replied: We are here dealing with two groups of witnesses, one of which testifies that the uncleanness occurred while it was yet day, while the other testifies [that it occurred] after dusk.³³ [

- (1) Who ruled the 'erub to be effective even if it ceased to exist.
- (2) Who does not regard the terumah, about which there was doubt whether uncleanness was conveyed to it before or after twilight, as clean. The ruling shows that though the terumah was in existence and there is also the presumption in its favour that at twilight it was clean as it was before the uncleanness had been conveyed to it, R. Meir nevertheless does not regard it as levitically clean.
- (3) As is the case in our Mishnah where it is uncertain whether the terumah became unclean before or after twilight.
- (4) Since he did not regard the terumah as having become unclean after twilight.
- (5) Lit., 'did not immerse himself'.
- (6) V. Glos.
- (7) The prescribed minimum for a ritual bath.
- (8) Lit., he did not immerse himself in forty Se'ah'.
- (9) Cf. previous note.
- (10) Mik. II, 1.
- (11) Sc. one that is Pentateuchal (Rashi).
- (12) One that is only Rabbinically so.
- (13) Lit., 'and he came'.
- (14) Thus rendered unclean by Rabbinic law; v. Shab. 14a.
- (15) This is the reading of Bomb. ed. Cur. edd. omit the last three words, the author of every anonymous Mishnah being known to be R. Meir.
- (16) Mik. II, 2; from which it follows that in a doubtful case It. Meir adopts the less restrictive ruling. How then is this to be reconciled with our Mishnah where he adopts the more restrictive one?
- (17) Of which our Mishnah speaks.
- (18) In a Pentateuchally doubtful prohibition the more restrictive ruling is followed. Hence R. Meir's ruling here. In the case of uncleanness, spoken of in the quoted Mishnahs, since it is only Rabbinical, the less restrictive ruling is adopted.
- (19) Lit., 'to cause it to be swallowed'. This term (v. infra 58a, f) is applied to a wall, a hill or similar elevation or depression whose horizontal distance can be measured by a rope of the length of fifty cubits held at either end by one man. If the horizontal distance is more than fifty cubits and a rope of the length mentioned cannot span it, a different method of measuring, described anon, must be adopted.
- (20) Infra 8a. Sc. the measuring of a hill or any elevation or depression in the way of the surveyors (cf. previous note) is carried out by a method which produces its horizontal distance, the measuring rope, manipulated in a certain manner (described infra 58b) being regarded as piercing it in a straight line and emerging on its other side.
- (21) Cf. Num. XXXV, 11ff. Not only the cities themselves but also a limited area within a prescribed distance from each city affords the privilege of protection (cf. Mak. 11b).
- (22) Cf. Deut. XXI, 1ff. To ascertain which city was the nearest it was necessary to 'measure unto the cities in which are round about him that is slain' (ibid. 2).
- (23) The method of 'piercing' produces longer distances than the ordinary methods, omitting as it does to take count of the extent of the slopes. While such latitude in favour of the persons concerned was allowed in the case of Rabbinical ordinances, it was not allowed in that of Pentateuchal ones in connection with which the stricter method, which takes count of the slopes also, must be adopted. Now, since R. Meir allows the method of 'piercing' in the case of Sabbath limits, how could it be maintained that in his view these laws are Pentateuchal?
- (24) Lit., 'that', the ruling of R. Meir in our Mishnah which implies that in his opinion the laws of the Sabbath limits are Pentateuchal since the more restrictive course is followed in cases of doubt.
- (25) That the method of 'piercing' may be adopted in determining the Sabbath limits.
- (26) Referring to R. Meir himself.
- (27) Emphasis on 'heard', sc. but he himself (R. Meir) does not share that view.
- (28) Lit., 'of the Law on the Law according to R. Meir'.
- (29) Because, as it is obvious that the body was alive until the moment of death approached, it is also presumed to have been alive at the time it was touched.
- (30) Toh. V, 7. As at the time of discovery the body was dead it must also be presumed to have been dead when it was touched. R. Meir, at any rate, adopts here, though the laws of uncleanness are Pentateuchal, the lenient view. Why then did he adopt the stricter view in our Mishnah? As the body here is presumed to have been alive at the time it was touched so should the terumah (in the Mishnah) have been presumed to have been clean at the time the Sabbath began.

(31) Of the Sabbath eve. The uncleanness of the terumah must consequently have set in prior to the commencement of the Sabbath.

(32) Obviously not, since this is not a case of doubt but one of certainty where (v. our Mishnah) all agree that the 'erub is ineffective.

(33) In the opinion of R. Jose the two groups of witnesses cancel each other out and the terumah is, therefore, presumed to have been, at the time the Sabbath began, in its former state of presumptive cleanness. R. Meir, however, maintains that, since the presumptive cleanness of the terumah has been denied by one group of witnesses, its cleanness becomes a matter of doubt when, being a Pentateuchal law, the more restrictive course must be followed. In the case of a body (cited from Toh. V, 7) its presumptive life at the time it was touched has not been contradicted by any witnesses.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 36a

Raba replied:¹ In that case² there are two presumptive grounds for a relaxation of the law³ while here⁴ there is only one.⁵

Does not then a contradiction arise between two rulings of R. Jose?⁶ — R. Huna b. Hinena replied: [The laws of] uncleanness are different, since their origin is Pentateuchal.⁷ [But are not the laws of] Sabbath limits also Pentateuchal? — R. Jose is of the opinion [that the laws of the Sabbath] limits are Rabbinical.⁸ And if you prefer I might reply:⁹ One ruling¹⁰ was his own while the other¹¹ was his Master's.¹² A careful examination [of his statement] also [leads to this conclusion], for it reads,¹³ R. JOSE STATED: ABTOLEMOS TESTIFIED ON THE AUTHORITY OF FIVE ELDERS THAT AN 'ERUB [WHOSE VALIDITY IS] IN DOUBT IS EFFECTIVE. This proves it. Raba replied:¹⁴ The reason there¹⁵ is that R. Jose [maintains]: 'Take the unclean to be in his presumptive condition [of uncleanness] and suggest, therefore, that he may not have performed the ritual immersion'.¹⁶ On the contrary! Take the ritual bath to be in its presumptive condition [of ritual fitness] and suggest, therefore, that it was not short [of the required volume]?- [This is a case] of a ritual bath [the water in] which had not been measured.¹⁷

It was taught: In what circumstances did R. Jose rule that an erub [whose validity is] in doubt is effective? If a man made an erub with tertmah¹⁸ and it is doubtful whether it contracted uncleanness when it was yet day or after dusk, and so also in the case of fruits¹⁹ concerning which there arose a doubt whether they²⁰ were prepared [for use]²¹ while it was yet day or after dusk — in any such case²² the 'erub [is deemed to be one whose validity is in] doubt [and is consequently] effective;²³ but if a man prepared an erub of terumah about which there is doubt whether it was clean or unclean,²⁴ and so also in the case of fruit concerning which there arose a doubt whether they were prepared [for use] or not²⁵ — in any such case²² the 'erub is not [deemed to be one whose validity is in] doubt [and which is consequently] effective.²⁶ Wherein, however, does terumah²⁷ differ?²⁸ In that it may be said: 'Regard the terumah as being in its presumptive condition [of cleanness] and suggest that it is still clean'. But as regards the fruit also [why should it not be said], 'Regard the tebel²⁹ as being in its presumptive condition [of unfitness for use] and suggest that it was not yet prepared?³⁰ — Do not read: 'There arose a doubt whether they were prepared [for use] while it was yet day'³¹ but read: 'There arose a doubt whether they were mixed up [with tebel]³² while it was yet day or after dusk.³³

R. Samuel son of R. Isaac enquired of R. Huna: What is the legal position where a man had before him two loaves³⁴ one of which was clean and the other unclean and he gave instructions, 'Prepare for me an 'erub with the clean [loaf] wherever it may happen to be' ?³⁵ This question may be asked in connection with the view of R. Meir and it may also be asked in connection with that of R. Jose. It 'may be asked in connection with the view of R. Meir', since [it may be argued that] it is only there³⁶ that R. Meir gave his restrictive ruling³⁷ because there was no [definite] clean [terumah]³⁸ but here, surely, there was [at least one loaf that was] clean;³⁹ or is it possible that even R. Jose laid down his ruling there³⁶ only because if it is assumed that [the terumah] was clean the man knows [where to look for] it,⁴⁰ but here,⁴¹ surely, he does not know [even where to look for] it?⁴² — The other replied: Both according to R. Jose as well as according to R. Meir it is essential to have a meal that is suitable [for the person for whom the ‘erub is prepared] while it is yet day,⁴³ which is not [the case here].⁴⁴

Raba enquired of R. Nahman: What is the ruling [where a man said],⁴⁵ ‘This loaf shall be unconsecrated to-day and consecrated to-morrow’ and then he said: ‘Prepare for me an erub with this [loaf]’?⁴⁶ — The other replied: His ‘erub is effective.⁴⁷ What, [he was asked if the man said], ‘To-day it shall be consecrated and tomorrow unconsecrated’⁴⁸ and then he said: ‘Prepare for me an ‘erub with it’?⁴⁹ — ‘His ‘erub’, he replied: ‘is ineffective’. ‘What [the former asked] is the difference [between the two cases]?’ — When’, he replied: ‘you will measure out for me a kor of salt [you will get the answer]. [Where a man said,] ‘Today it shall be unconsecrated and tomorrow consecrated’, the sanctity cannot on account of the doubt⁵⁰ descend on the object⁵¹ [but where he said], ‘Today it shall be consecrated and tomorrow it shall be unconsecrated’ the object cannot on account of the doubt be deprived of its sanctity.⁵²

We learned elsewhere: If a man filled a lugin⁵³ that was a tebul yom⁵⁴ [with liquids] from a cask of tebel of the [first] tithe⁵⁵ and said, Behold this⁵⁶ shall be terumah of the tithe⁵⁷ after dusk’ ‘⁵⁸ his statement is valid,⁵⁹ but if he said: ‘Prepare with this⁵⁶ an ‘erub for me’ his statement is null and void.⁶⁰ Raba remarked: This⁶¹ proves that the validity of an ‘erub takes effect at the end of the day;⁶²

- (1) In explanation of the difficulty just dealt with by Rabbah and R. Joseph.
 - (2) Lit., ‘there’, the case of the body that was touched.
 - (3) The presumptive life of the body and the presumptive cleanness of the man who touched it. Hence, even where two groups of witnesses were contradicting each other as to whether the body was dead before or after it had been touched, it. Meir would still regard the man as clean. For by allowing the contradictory evidence of the two groups to cancel each other two presumptions remain in favour of the man's cleanness.
 - (4) The terumah in our Mishnah, the uncleanness of which is a matter of doubt.
 - (5) The presumptive cleanness of the terumah.
 - (6) In the Mishnah cited from Mik. II, I he adopts the restrictive rule of declaring the man unclean, even in a case of doubt, though the uncleanness spoken of is only Rabbinical, while in our Mishnah he adopted the lenient rule of declaring an ‘erub whose validity is in doubt to be effective.
 - (7) As certain cases of uncleanness are Pentateuchal, and consequently subject in case _ of doubt to the more restrictive rulings, a similarly restrictive course had to be adopted in the case of Rabbinical uncleanness, since otherwise the former might erroneously be mistaken for the latter and treated with similar laxity.
 - (8) There is no need in this case to provide against the possibility of mistaking the Pentateuchal laws relating to work on the Sabbath for the Rabbinical ones of the Sabbath limit, as was done in the case of uncleanness (cf. previous note), since unlike the forms of uncleanness which are similar to one another, work and walking are two different processes which could not possibly be mistaken for one another (Rashi).
 - (9) Bah inserts, ‘this is no difficulty’.
 - (10) Lit., ‘that’, the one in the Mishnah cited where a restrictive view is followed in the case of doubt even in respect of a Rabbinical law.
 - (11) The ruling in our Mishnah which follows the lenient view.
 - (12) Abtolemos.
 - (13) Lit., ‘for it taught’.
 - (14) In explaining the apparent contradiction between the two rulings of R. Jose.
 - (15) In the Mishnah cited from Mik. where the man is deemed to be unclean even in a case of doubt.
 - (16) Since no ground whatsoever exists for a contrary suggestion. Hence the restrictive ruling. In the case of the ‘erub in our Mishnah, however, against the presumption that the man's abode is his permanent home there is the presumptive cleanness of the terumah; and, since 'erub is a Rabbinical institution, the less restrictive course is followed.

(17) The argument of presumptive condition of ritual fitness is consequently inapplicable.

(18) That was known to be clean.

(19) Of tebel (v. Glos.).

(20) After they have been deposited as an 'erub in the appointed place.

(21) By setting aside for them the prescribed priestly and levitical dues.

(22) Lit., 'this'.

(23) It being assumed that the terumah was clean and that the fruit was duly prepared during twilight which is the crucial moment for the validity of an 'erub.

(24) So that the argument of presumptive cleanness is inapplicable.

(25) Cf. previous note mutatis mutandis.

(26) Tosef. 'Er. II.

(27) In the first clause where R. Jose rules the 'erub to be effective if it is doubtful whether it contracted uncleanness or was prepared for use before or after twilight.

(28) From fruit of tebel in the first clause.

(29) Cf. previous note.

(30) Why then did n. Jose rule the 'erub of the fruit also to be effective?

(31) Sc. there was no question at all of tebel. The fruit was known to have been properly prepared by the setting aside for it of the priestly and levitical dues.

(32) So that it cannot be used even by a priest. V. Rashi (second interpretation).

(33) As the fruit was thus in the presumptive condition of fitness for use, as was the terumah, the 'erub that had been prepared with it is equally effective.

(34) Of terumah. The question of levitical uncleanness does not apply to unconsecrated produce which may well be consumed even when it is levitically unclean. Only the very scrupulous abstain from eating such unconsecrated produce.

(35) And both loaves were used in the preparation of his 'erub at the appointed place, and he does not know which is the clean one.

(36) In our Mishnah.

(37) Lit., 'said'.

(38) It being possible that the uncleanness was constituted before twilight.

(39) And the 'erub in this case is consequently effective.

(40) And is able, therefore, to eat; the question of its possible uncleanness being disregarded owing to its presumptive cleanness.

(41) Since it is not known which of the loaves was the clean one.

(42) In consequence of which he could not eat either of the loaves. The 'erub, since it could not be eaten must, therefore, be ineffective.

(43) The doubt spoken of in our Mishnah arose only after the 'erub had been prepared so that there was at least a certain period during which it could be properly eaten.

(44) Since, owing to the interchange of the loaves, neither could be eaten from the first moment the 'erub was prepared. Hence the ineffectiveness of 'erub according to both R. Meir and R. Jose.

(45) On Friday, [the Sabbath eve].

(46) And his instruction was carried out. An 'erub prepared from consecrated food is invalid and the question arises whether at the twilight of the Sabbath eve the validity of the 'erub or the sanctity of the food of which it consists had taken effect first.

(47) The reason is explained presently.

(48) Sc. 'it shall be redeemed by the necessary sum of money which I have at home'. Consecrated objects may in this manner be converted for secular use.

(49) Cf. supra n. 5 mutatis mutandis.

(50) I.e., the doubt that arises at twilight, v. n. 5.

(51) Lit., 'to it'. The 'erub, therefore, retains its status of unconsecrated food.

(52) Cf. previous note mutatis mutandis.

(53) לַגֵּיץ, a small can.

(54) טַבּוּל יוֹם, v. Glos. A vessel in such a condition imparts levitical uncleanness to terumah but not to tebel of unconsecrated produce or of tithe.

(55) The Levite to whom first tithe is due must give a portion of it to the priest as terumah gedolah. Before this is done the tithe is tebel and is forbidden to be eaten even by priests.

(56) The contents of the lugin.

(57) For all that remained in the cask.

(58) When the lugin will be levitically clean.

(59) The contents become terumah since the uncleanness of the lugin that terminated at dusk can have no effect upon it.

(60) Tebul Yom. IV, 4. Lit., 'he did not say anything' because at twilight when the 'erub should assume its validity it was still tebel which (as stated supra) is unfit for 'erub.

(61) The ruling that an 'erub prepared with the contents of the lugin is ineffective.

(62) Of the Sabbath eve, sc. at the beginning of twilight. Lit., 'the end of the day acquires the 'erub'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 36b

for if you should entertain the view that the validity takes effect at the beginning of the [Sabbath] day¹ [the difficulty would arise:] Why 'if he said: "Prepare with this an 'erub for me" is his statement null and void'?² — R. Papa retorted: It may still be maintained³ that the validity of an 'erub takes effect at the beginning of the [Sabbath] day, yet [the contents of the lugin are unfit as an 'erub since] it is essential to have a meal that is suitable for consumption while it is yet day,⁴ which is not the case here.⁵

MISHNAH. A MAN MAY ATTACH A CONDITION TO HIS ERUB AND⁶ SAY, 'IF FOREIGNERS⁷ CAME FROM THE EAST MY 'ERUB [SHALL BE THAT] OF THE WEST;⁸ [IF THEY CAME] FROM THE WEST MY ERUB [SHALL BE THAT] OF THE EAST;⁹ IF THEY CAME FROM BOTH DIRECTIONS¹⁰ I WILL GO IN WHATEVER DIRECTION I DESIRE, AND IF THEY CAME FROM NEITHER DIRECTION I WILL BE LIKE THE PEOPLE OF MY TOWN'.¹¹ [HE MAY LIKEWISE SAY,] 'IF THE SAGE¹² CAME FROM THE EAST LET MY 'ERUB [BE THE ONE] OF THE EAST;¹³ IF FROM THE WEST LET MY 'ERUB [BE THE ONE] OF THE WEST; [IF A SAGE] CAME FROM EITHER DIRECTION I WILL GO IN WHATEVER DIRECTION I DESIRE, AND IF NO ONE CAME FROM EITHER DIRECTION I WILL BE LIKE THE PEOPLE OF MY TOWN'.¹¹ R. JUDAH RULED: IF ONE OF THEM¹⁴ WAS HIS TEACHER HE MAY GO ONLY TO HIS TEACHER,¹⁵ BUT IF BOTH WERE HIS TEACHERS HE MAY GO IN WHATEVER DIRECTION HE PREFERS.

GEMARA. When R. Isaac came¹⁶ he learned all our Mishnah in the reverse order.¹⁷ Does not then a contradiction arise between the two statements on the FOREIGNERS¹⁸ and between the two concerning the SAGE?¹⁹ — There is really no contradiction between the two statements on foreigners since one refers²⁰ to tax collectors²¹ while the other refers to the landlords of the town.²² There is also no contradiction between the two statements concerning the sage since one refers²³ to a scholar who delivers public²⁴ discourses²⁵ while the other refers to a teacher of young children.²⁶

R. JUDAH RULED: IF ONE OF THEM WAS etc. And the Rabbis?²⁷ — Sometimes [it may happen] that a man is more pleased to meet²⁸ his colleague than his teacher.

Rab stated: [The ruling] of our Mishnah²⁹ is not [to be upheld] by reason of what Ayo learned. For Ayo learned: R. Judah ruled: 'A man cannot make simultaneous conditions in connection with two possible events.³⁰ He can only³¹ [make this condition:] "If the sage came [from the direction] of the east my³² 'erub [shall be that] of the east and if the sage came [from the direction] of the west my³² 'erub [shall be that] of the west,"³³ but not "[If one came] from each direction '³⁴ Why is it [that the 'erub is] ineffective [where the condition was 'If one came] from each direction'? Obviously because the rule of bererah is not upheld,³⁵ [but, then, where the condition was, 'If the sage came from the direction] of the east' [or 'from that] of the west' it should also [be said that] the rule of bererah cannot [be upheld]?³⁶ — R. Johanan replied: [Our Mishnah refers to a case] where the sage already arrived.³⁷ On the contrary, [let it be said that] Ayo's version³⁸ cannot [be upheld] by reason of what was taught in our Mishnah?³⁹ This⁴⁰ cannot be entertained at all, since we heard of R. Judah that he does not adopt the rule of bererah. For it was taught:⁴¹ If a man buys wine from among the Cutheans⁴²

- (1) I.e., at the end of twilight of Sabbath eve.
 - (2) At the time the Sabbath begins the lugin is no longer unclean and, since its contents are proper and clean terumah, it should provide an effective 'erub. As the ruling, however, is that the 'erub is ineffective it must be concluded that the validity takes effect at the conclusion of the Sabbath eve, i.e., as explained supra, at the beginning of twilight, at which time the contents of the lugin were still tebel of the first tithing and unfit for consumption and consequently unsuitable as an 'erub.
 - (3) Lit., 'you may even say'.
 - (4) I.e., at the beginning of twilight.
 - (5) Because at that time the contents of the lugin were still tebel.
 - (6) Depositing two 'erubs, one at a distance of two thousand cubits from the east side of his house and another in the opposite direction at a distance of two thousand cubits from the west of his house.
 - (7) From whom he must flee.
 - (8) And he is in consequence able to go in a westerly direction a distance of four thousand cubits from his house. Though the foreigners would not come before the following day the condition has the force of determining retrospectively which 'erub shall become effective at twilight of the Sabbath eve.
 - (9) Cf. previous note mutatis mutandis.
 - (10) Lit., 'to here and to here'. J.T. and Mishnah ed., 'from here and from here'.
 - (11) Able to go a distance of two thousand cubits from the town in any direction, both 'erubs being null and void.
 - (12) Whose discourses he desires to hear.
 - (13) Cf. supra n. 1 mutatis mutandis.
 - (14) Of the two Sages that came from opposite directions.
 - (15) The presumption being that when making the condition he meant that 'erub to be effective which would enable him to go to his teacher.
 - (16) From Palestine to Babylon.
 - (17) The SAGE in the first clause and FOREIGNERS in the second, so that the 'erubs were laid for the purpose of fleeing from the sage and advancing in the direction of the foreigners.
 - (18) Lit., 'foreigners on foreigners'.
 - (19) Cf. previous note.
 - (20) Lit., 'that', our Mishnah.
 - (21) From whom people try to escape.
 - (22) Or 'town officers', whom the townspeople are anxious to meet in order to submit to them their grievances or to solicit favours.
 - (23) Lit., 'that', our Mishnah.
 - (24) Lit., 'causes (the public) to sit'.
 - (25) People are anxious to run to hear such a sage.
 - (26) Or 'a teacher of the daily ritual'. Lit., 'those who cause to read the Shema', sc. שְׁמוֹעַ יִשְׂרָאֵל 'Hear O Israel etc.' (cf. P.B. 40ff.). The shema' is one of the principal elements in the daily prayers and is here synonymous with prayer in general (cf. Rashi) which even school children must be taught. The condition in the Mishnah according to R. Isaac's version may be explained as due to a desire on the part of the man to dispense with meeting the school teacher in order to be able to attend the discourses of the public speaker. If the former would come from the east and the latter from the west he would wish his 'erub in the latter direction to be effective and vice versa. If both proved to be school teachers or public speakers he would wish to go in whatever direction he preferred (Rashi). [Aliter: those who read the shema', a precentor, v. R. Hananel.]
 - (27) Why do they allow the man a choice even where one of the sages was his teacher?
 - (28) Lit., 'with'.
 - (29) According to which R. Judah ruled that where BOTH WERE HIS TEACHERS, HE MAY GO IN WHATEVER DIRECTION HE PREFERS, thus recognizing the effectiveness of an 'erub though its validity which must take effect where the Sabbath begins depends on the man's choice that would he made subsequently; R. Judah thus upholding the principle of retrospective selection or bererah (v. Glos.).

(30) As is the case where the condition is made about two sages coming from different directions.

(31) Lit., 'but if'.

(32) Lit., 'his'.

(33) Since only one possible event is involved.

(34) Bez. 37b, Hul. 14b. As R. Judah definitely rejects here the rule of bererah the ruling attributed to him in our Mishnah (cf. supra n. 7) cannot be authentic.

(35) It being held that the choice the man made between the two sages on the following day may not have been his choice at twilight on the previous day when the validity of the 'erub must take effect.

(36) And the 'erub should be ineffective, since at twilight on the Sabbath eve the sage was presumably still uncertain whether he would at all come within the area permitted by that man's 'erub, and his subsequent coming could only be regarded, as far as the validity of the 'erub is concerned, as bererah i.e., retrospective designation or selection, a principle which R. Judah does not recognize.

(37) Sc. at twilight of the Sabbath eve he was already within the permitted Sabbath limit of that man's town though the latter was unaware of the fact. As the validity of the 'erub was made dependent on an event that, though unknown to the speaker, had actually taken place before twilight of the Sabbath eve there can be no question as to the 'erub's effectiveness. It is not the speaker's subsequent knowledge of the fact that renders the 'erub valid retrospectively, but the presence of the sage at the crucial moment. The question of bererah, therefore, does not at all arise.

(38) Which is a mere Baraitha.

(39) A Baraitha, surely, is less authoritative than a Mishnah.

(40) That R. Judah upholds the rule of bererah.

(41) Cf. Tosaf. s.v. וְנִי a.l. Cur. edd., 'we learned'.

(42) Before the prohibition against their wines had been decreed. As the Cutheans (Samaritans) were suspected of neglecting the laws of terumah and tithe the buyer must himself set these aside before he can be permitted to drink any of the wine.

he may¹ say: 'Two log² which I am about to set aside³ are terumah, ten⁴ are first tithe and nine⁴ are second tithe', and this⁵ he redeems⁶ and may drink [the wine] forthwith;⁷ so R. Meir,⁸ but R. Judah, R. Jose and R. Simeon forbid [this procedure].⁹ 'Ulla said: Ayo's version is not to be upheld by reason of what was stated in our Mishnah.¹⁰ What, however, about the statement, 'R. Judah, R. Jose and R. Simeon forbid [this procedure]'?¹¹ — Ulla read [the names of the authors] in pairs [thus:] 'So R. Meir and R. Judah, but R. Jose and R. Simeon forbid [this procedure]'.

But is R. Jose of the opinion that the rule of bererah is not to be upheld? Have we not in fact learnt: R. Jose ruled: If two women bought their bird sacrifices¹² jointly, or gave the price of¹³ their bird sacrifices to the priest, the latter may offer whichever he wishes as a burnt-offering and whichever he wishes as a sin-offering?¹⁴ — Rabbah replied: There¹⁵ [it is a case] where [the women originally] made this condition.¹⁶ But if that is the case¹⁷ what [need was there] to state [such an obvious ruling]?- We were thereby informed [that the law is] in agreement with R. Hisda.¹⁸ For R. Hisda ruled: Bird sacrifices¹⁹ cannot be designated²⁰

(1) If the purchase took place on the Sabbath eve immediately before dusk (when there is no time to remove these priestly and levitical dues from the wine) and he requires the wine for the Sabbath. It is prohibited to separate priestly or levitical dues on the Sabbath, v. Bez. 36b.

(2) A log (v. Glos.) is c. 549 cubic centimeters.

(3) For the hundred log contained in the cask he bought.

(4) 'Log which I am about to set aside'.

(5) The second tithe.

- (6) With money (cf. Deut. XIV, 25) that he has at home or anywhere else.
- (7) And after the Sabbath he separates the terumah and the first tithe, and the wine so separated is regarded as the very wine he originally intended for the purpose.
- (8) Who upholds the rule of bererah so that the selection that takes place after the Sabbath becomes effective retrospectively as if it had taken place on the Sabbath eve.
- (9) Tosef. Dem. VII, 4, Suk. 23b, B.K. 69b; because, so it is at present assumed, they do not accept the rule of bererah. As no retrospective selection is recognized, the wine throughout the Sabbath cannot in their opinion be regarded as properly prepared for use and its consumption is consequently forbidden.
- (10) Cf. notes on Rab's statement (supra 36b mutatis mutandis).
- (11) From which it is apparent that R. Judah does not uphold bererah.
- (12) Lit., 'nests', sc. a pair of birds as offerings after childbirth; cf. Lev. XII, 8.
- (13) וְנָדָו, so MS.M. and the ed. of the Mishnah. Cur. edd. omit the word.
- (14) Kin. I, 4. Now, since a burnt-offering is unacceptable unless it is offered in the name of the person for whom it was originally intended (cf. Pes. 60b and Zeb. 2a) while a sin-offering of a certain person is completely disqualified if it is offered for a different person or as a different kind of sacrifice, and since R. Jose nevertheless allows the priest to offer up any of the birds either as a sin-offering or as a burnt-offering for either of the women, it obviously follows that he upholds the rule of bererah, so that when the priest offers up any of the four birds it is assumed that this particular bird was retrospectively selected by the particular woman for the particular sacrifice for whom and for which it is now offered. How then could it be maintained that R. Jose does not uphold bererah?
- (15) In the Mishnah cited from Kin.
- (16) That the choice be left to the priest. The question of bererah does not, therefore, arise.
- (17) Cf. previous note.
- (18) That, where a bird was not specifically designated by the buyer for any particular sacrifice at the time of its purchase, though he did so subsequently, the priest may offer it as any sacrifice he wishes.
- (19) Of those who bring them as an atonement.
- (20) As burnt, or sin-offerings.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 37b

except at the time they are purchased by their owner¹ or when the priest prepares them [for the altar].²

Is it then still [maintained that] R. Jose is of the opinion that the rule of bererah is not to be upheld? Was it not in fact taught: If an 'Am ha-arez³ said to a haber,³ 'Buy for me a bundle of vegetables' or 'a loaf',⁴ [the latter]⁵ need not tithe it,⁶ so R. Jose, but the Sages ruled: He must tithe it?⁷ Reverse [the rulings].⁸

Come and hear: If a man said: 'let the [second] tithe which I have in my house be redeemed with the sela' that would happen to come from my purse into my hand' it is, said R. Jose, redeemed?⁹ — Reverse [the rulings and] read: 'R. Jose said: It is not redeemed'. What reason, however, do you see for reversing two statements¹⁰ for the sake of one,¹¹ [why not] reverse the one¹¹ for the sake of the two?¹⁰ — The last cited Baraita was at all events¹² taught in a reversed form; since in its final clause it was stated: R. Jose, however, admits that where a man said: 'The [second] tithe which I have in my house shall be redeemed with the new sela'¹³ that would happen to come¹⁴ from my purse into my hand', the tithe is redeemed.¹⁵ Now since he¹⁶ ruled here that it 'is redeemed' it follows that in the previous¹⁷ case [his ruling was that] it is not redeemed.¹⁸

What, however, is to be understood [by the case of] the new sela'? If there are two or three [other new sela's in his purse] so that selection is possible¹⁹ then this case is exactly identical with the first one.²⁰ If, however, there was only one, what [sense is there in the expression,] 'That would happen to come'²¹ — As in the first clause it was taught: 'That would happen to come', it was taught in the final clause also, 'That would happen to come'.²²

Raba asked R. Nahman: Who is that Tanna who does not uphold the rule of bererah even in the case of a Rabbinical enactment? For It was taught: 'If a man said to five persons, "Behold I am preparing an 'erub for one of you whom I may choose²³ [in due course] so that if I wish it he would be allowed to go²⁴ and if I would not wish it he would not go", the 'erub is effective if he made up his mind²⁵ while it was yet day,²⁶ [but if he did it] after dusk the 'erub is not effective'?²⁷ The other remained silent and gave him no answer whatever. But why could he not tell him that the Tanna was one of the school of Ayo?²⁸ — He did not hear [of. Ayo's ruling].²⁹

R. Joseph said:³⁰ Do you wish to remove Tannas from the world?³¹ [The fact is that the question³² is one] on which Tannas differ. For it was taught: [If a man³³ said,] 'Behold I am preparing an erub for all the Sabbaths of the years so that whenever I should wish it I would go³⁴ and whenever I should not wish it I would not go',³⁵ his 'erub is effective if he made up his mind³⁶ while it was yet day;³⁷ [but if he decided] after dusk, R. Simeon ruled: His 'erub is effective³⁸ while the Sages ruled: His 'erub is not effective.³⁹ But surely, we heard of R. Simeon⁴⁰ that he does not uphold bererah, so that a contradiction arise between two rulings of R. Simeon? — The fact is [that the views⁴¹ are to be] reversed.⁴² But what difficulty [is this]? Is it not possible that R. Simeon does not uphold bererah only in a Pentateuchal law⁴⁰ but in respect of a Rabbinical law⁴³ he may well uphold it? — He⁴⁴ is of the opinion that he who upholds bererah does so in all cases⁴⁵ making no distinction between a Pentateuchal and a Rabbinical law, while he who does not uphold bererah does not do it In any case irrespective of whether a law is Pentateuchal or Rabbinical.

Rabbah replied: There⁴⁰ [the case is altogether] different,⁴⁶ [the reason⁴⁷ being] that it is essential [for the priestly and levitical dues] to be⁴⁸ firstfruit,⁴⁹ so that whatever remains shall be distinguishable [from it].⁵⁰ Said Abaye to him:⁵¹ Now then,⁵² if a man who had before him two pomegranates of tebel⁵³ said: 'If rain will fall to-day the one shall be terumah⁵³ for the other and if no rain will fall to-day the other shall be terumah for the first', would his assertion here also, whether there was rain that day or not, be will and void?⁵⁴ And should you reply [that the law is] so indeed [it can be retorted:] Have we not in fact learnt: '[If a man said,] "The terumah of this heap⁵⁵ and its tithes shall be in the middle thereof" or "The terumah of this [first] tithes⁵⁶ shall be In the middle thereof", R. Simeon ruled: He has thereby given it a valid name?'⁵⁷ — There⁵⁸ [the law] is different⁵⁹ because⁶⁰ [the remainder of the produce]' is round about the dues.⁶¹ And if you prefer I might reply⁶² in accordance with the reason elsewhere indicated:⁶³ They said to R. Meir, 'Do you not agree that the skin⁶⁴ might burst⁶⁵ and the man would thus have been drinking liquids of tebel?'⁶⁶ And he replied: 'When it will have burst [there would be time for the question to be considered]'.⁶⁷

On the previous assumption, however, that it is essential [for the priestly and levitical dues] to be 'firstfruit' so that whatever remains shall be distinguishable from it,⁶⁸ what could they have meant?⁶⁹ It is this that they meant: 'According to our view [the reason for the prohibition is that] it is essential [for the priestly and levitical dues] to be "firstfruit" so that whatever remains shall be distinguishable [from it],⁷⁰ but even according to your view,

(1) Who must then specifically declare the specific purpose for which each bird is to be used.

(2) Ker. 28a, Yoma 41a; but if when the birds were bought none of them was designated as a burnt, or as a sin-offering, the priest is at liberty (cf. supra 11. 1) to choose either bird for either sacrifice.

(3) V. Glos.

(4) אַקוּמָה, one made of a certain brand of white flour.

(5) Though he bought his own vegetables or loaf together with those of the 'am ha-arez without specifying which was for himself and which was for the other and though the seller also was an 'am ha-arez whose produce the haber tithes as demai.

(6) He need only tithe that which he bought for himself.

- (7) Dem. VI ad fin. Since no mention was made at the time of purchase as to which bundle or loaf was for the haber and which for the 'am ha-arez every part of the purchase is regarded as that of the haber, and that part of it which he subsequently gives to the 'and ha-arez is regarded as a partial sale of his own purchase. As a haber must not sell to an 'am ha-arez any demai he must tithe it before he gives it to him. Now since R. Jose ruled that the haber need not tithe it he is obviously of the opinion that the rule of bererah holds, so that when the 'am ha-arez selects, or the haber selects for him his part of the purchase the selection is deemed to be retrospective. How then could it be maintained that R. Jose does not uphold bererah?
- (8) That attributed to the Sages is really that of R. Jose and vice versa.
- (9) Tosef. M.Sh. IV; even before the sela' actually came into his hand. Now, since in the absence of the rule of bererah it could not be asserted that the sela' which was taken out later was the very coin which the man originally intended for the redemption, it follows that R. Jose upholds bererah. How then could it be maintained supra that the rule of bererah is not upheld by R. Jose?
- (10) Just cited: The purchase by a haber (Dem. VI) and the redemption of second tithe (M.Sh. IV).
- (11) Wine bought from Cutheans (cited from Tosef. Rem. VII, 4, supra 36b ad fin.)
- (12) Lit., 'that certainly'.
- (13) It being the only one in his purse.
- (14) This is discussed presently.
- (15) Since there was only one new sela' there can be no doubt as to what particular coin the man had in mind.
- (16) R. Jose.
- (17) Lit., 'there'.
- (18) The ruling in the first clause must consequently be changed from the positive to the negative.
- (19) The last five words are omitted from Bomb. ed.
- (20) Where an ordinary sela' was spoken of. As R. Jose ruled in the first case (according to the reversed version) that the tithe is not redeemed because it is impossible to ascertain which particular sela' the man had originally in his mind, so he should have ruled in the latter case also where it is equally impossible to ascertain which of the two or three new coins the man had originally in mind.
- (21) None other, surely, could possibly come.
- (22) For the sake of parallelism.
- (23) Lit., 'that I shall desire.
- (24) The prescribed Sabbath limit from the place of the 'erub.
- (25) Lit., 'if he wished'.
- (26) Of the Sabbath eve.
- (27) Since at twilight, when the validity of an 'erub must be determined, he may have intended his 'erub for a different person and his subsequent selection cannot be made retrospective. Now, since 'erub is a Rabbinical enactment, it follows that bererah is inapplicable even to Rabbinical enactments, and the question is who is that Tanna?
- (28) Who ruled (supra 36b) that, according to R. Judah, bererah is not applied to 'erub though it is only a Rabbinical enactment.
- (29) While the rulings of the other Tannas quoted supra who upheld bererah refer to Pentateuchal laws only.
- (30) With reference to Raba's enquiry.
- (31) I.e., are you unable to find any Tannaitic authority who holds this view?
- (32) Whether bererah applies to a Rabbinical enactment,
- (33) Having deposited his 'erub at a distance of two thousand cubits from his home town.
- (34) The permitted distance from the 'erub in all directions including the two thousand cubits distance away from it in the opposite direction from the town, making a total of four thousand cubits from the latter.
- (35) V. previous note, but would instead enjoy the rights of the other people of the town who may go two thousand cubits in all directions from the town including the two thousand cubits distance from it in the opposite direction of the 'erub, making a total of four thousand cubits from that 'erub.
- (36) Lit., 'if he wished'.
- (37) Of the Sabbath eve. Because by the time Sabbath begins his mind was already made up and the validity of the 'erub is established.
- (38) Though his mind was not made up when the Sabbath began, his subsequent choice on the principle of bererah, which R. Simeon upholds, is regarded as retrospective.

- (39) Because (cf. previous notes) they do not uphold the principle of bererah. This we have a Tannaitic authority that does not uphold bererah even in a Rabbinic enactment.
- (40) In respect of wine bought from Cutheans (supra 36b, f).
- (41) In the last cited Baraitha.
- (42) It is R. Simeon who ruled that the 'erub is not effective.
- (43) As is the case with 'erub with which the last cited Baraitha deals.
- (44) Who pointed out the contradiction. 'R. Joseph' of cur. edd. is deleted by Bah and is wanting in MS.M.
- (45) Lit., 'there is to him'.
- (46) Bererah which R. Simeon well upholds having no bearing at all upon it:
- (47) Why the procedure permitted there by R. Meir is forbidden by R. Simeon.
- (48) Lit., 'that we require'.
- (49) Cf. Deut. XVIII, 4: The firstfruit . . . of thy wine . . . shalt thou give him (Sc. the priest).
- (50) As the 'dues' are mixed with the 'remainder' they are obviously indistinguishable from one another. Hence R. Simeon's prohibition.
- (51) Raba.
- (52) If, as has just been suggested, it is essential that at the time the dues are named the remainder shall be distinguishable from it.
- (53) V. Glos,
- (54) For the same reason (v. previous note) that at the time the terumah was named the one pomegranate which was to be terumah was indistinguishable from the other which was to be the remainder?
- (55) Of tebel.
- (56) Which is given to the Levite who sets aside a portion of it for the priest as terumah.
- (57) Ter. III, 5; and all the produce in the heap spoken of in the first case is forbidden to an Israelite as terumah; it must not, as second tithe, be eaten outside Jerusalem; and if it contracted uncleanness, the guilt of eating unclean terumah is incurred by the man who eats it. In the second case the entire heap is subject to the restrictions of terumah of the tithe. Now, the dues and the remainder of the heap are obviously indistinguishable from one another, and yet, according to R. Simeon, the nailing of the dues is valid; but if Raba's submission in the case of the pomegranates is to be accepted the difficulty would arise why is the naming valid?
- (58) The case of the heap cited.
- (59) From that governing the case of the pomegranates.
- (60) Since the man restricted the dues to the 'middle' of the heap.
- (61) Lit., 'round it', so that the dues and the remainder are to a very large extent quite distinguishable from each other.
- (62) In explanation of the difficulty, if R. Simeon upholds bererah why does he forbid the procedure permitted by R. Meir in the case of the wine (supra 36b, f).
- (63) Lit., 'as he taught the reason'.
- (64) In which the wine is contained.
- (65) Before the priestly or levitical dues have been taken from it.
- (66) Since the priest would never receive his due of terumah,
- (67) Tosef. Rem. VII, Yoma 56b; but while the skill is whole and the priest is sure of his due the remainder may well be used by adopting the procedure described. Thus it follows that the question of bererah, which R. Simeon well upholds, does not arise here at all, the sole reason of the prohibition being the possible bursting of the skill.
- (68) Raba's explanation supra.
- (69) If R. Meir's reason was that submitted by Raba, what sense was there in speaking to him of the bursting of the skin?
- (70) 'Hence our prohibition'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 38a

do you not agree that the skin might burst and the man would thus have been drinking liquids of tebel?' And he replied: 'When it will have burst [there would be time for the question to be considered]'.

MISHNAH. R. ELIEZER RULED: IF A FESTIVAL DAY IMMEDIATELY PRECEDES OR

FOLLOWS¹ THE SABBATH A MAN² MAY PREPARE TWO 'ERUBS³ AND MAKE THE FOLLOWING DECLARATION: MY 'ERUB FOR THE FIRST [DAY SHALL BE THAT] OF THE EAST⁴ AND THE ONE FOR THE SECOND DAY THAT OF THE WEST';⁵ 'THE ONE FOR THE FIRST DAY [SHALL BE THAT] OF THE WEST AND THE ONE FOR THE SECOND DAY THAT OF THE EAST; 'MY 'ERUB [SHALL BE EFFECTIVE] FOR THE FIRST DAY, AND FOR THE SECOND DAY [I SHALL RETAIN THE SAME RIGHTS] AS THE PEOPLE OF MY TOWN',⁶ OR 'MY 'ERUB [SHALL BE EFFECTIVE] FOR THE SECOND DAY, AND FOR THE FIRST DAY [I SHALL RETAIN THE SAME RIGHTS] AS THE PEOPLE OF MY TOWN — THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: HE EITHER PREPARES AN ERUB FOR ONE DIRECTION⁷ OR⁸ NONE AT ALL;⁹ HE EITHER PREPARES ONE 'ERUB FOR THE TWO DAYS¹⁰ OR NONE AT ALL. HOW IS ONE TO ACT?¹¹ HE ARRANGES [FOR THE 'ERUB] TO BE CARRIED [TO THE REQUIRED SPOT] ON THE FIRST DAY [BY A DEPUTY]¹² WHO, HAVING REMAINED THERE WITH IT UNTIL DUSK',¹³ TAKES IT UP AND GOES AWAY.¹⁴ ON THE SECOND [DAY THE 'ERUB IS AGAIN CARRIED THERE AND] KEPT UNTIL DUSK WHEN [THE DEPUTY] EATS IT¹⁵ AND GOES AWAY. HE¹⁶ THUS BENEFITS BOTH IN HIS MOVEMENTS¹⁷ AND IN HIS 'ERUB.¹⁸ IF THE ERUB WAS EATEN UP ON THE FIRST DAY IT REMAINS EFFECTIVE FOR THE FIRST DAY¹⁹ BUT NOT FOR THE SECOND. SAID R. ELIEZER TO THEM: YOU DO THEN AGREE WITH ME THAT THEY²⁰ ARE TWO DISTINCT ENTITIES OF HOLINESS.²¹

GEMARA. What is [the purport of the expression] FOR ONE DIRECTION? Obviously FOR THE TWO DAYS.²² And what is [the purport of the expression,] FOR TWO DAYS? Obviously FOR ONE DIRECTION.²³ [Is not then the latter clause] identical with the first one?²⁴ — It is this that the Rabbis²⁵ meant to say to R. Eliezer: 'Do you not agree that no 'erub may be prepared for one half of a day for a northern direction and for the other half of the same day for a southern direction?' 'Indeed [I do]', he replied. 'As', they continued, 'no 'erub may be prepared for one half of a day for a southern direction and for the other half of the same day for a northern direction so may no 'erub be prepared for one of two days in an easterly direction and for the other in a westerly direction' — And R. Eliezer?²⁶ — The one day²⁷ is a single entity of holiness, but the two days²⁸ are two distinct entities of holiness. Said R. Eliezer to them:²⁵ 'Do you not agree that if a man²⁹ prepared an 'erub with his feet³⁰ for the first day he must³¹ also prepare an 'erub with his feet for the second day,³² or that if his 'erub³³ was eaten up on the first day³⁴ he may not go out³⁵ [in reliance] on it on the second day?' 'Indeed', they replied. 'Surely, then',³⁶ [he retorted: 'the two days must be] two entities of holiness'. And the Rabbis?³⁷ — They were rather uncertain³⁸ and have, therefore, adopted the more restrictive course in both cases.³⁹ 'Do you not agree', they again said to R. Eliezer, 'that It is forbidden to prepare an 'erub for the Sabbath on a festival day⁴⁰ for the first time?'⁴¹ 'Indeed [I do]', he replied. 'Surely, then',⁴² [they retorted: 'the two days must be] one entity of holiness'. And R. Eliezer?⁴³ — [The restriction] there is due [to the prohibition] of preparing [for the Sabbath on a festival day].⁴⁴

Our Rabbis taught: If a man⁴⁵ prepared an 'erub with his feet on the first day he must also prepare an 'erub with his feet on the second day; if his 'erub was eaten up on the first day he may not go out [in reliance] on it on the second day; so Rabbi. R. Judah said:

(1) Lit., 'that is near whether before it or after it'.

(2) Who desires on the two days respectively to go in two different directions.

(3) Which he deposits at distances of two thousand cubits from the town in the two desired directions.

(4) 'EAST' and 'WEST' stand for any two opposite directions.

(5) The two days in question, in the view of R. Eliezer, are regarded as two distinct entities of holiness. One 'erub may consequently take effect at twilight of the eve of the first day and the other at twilight of the following day, each 'erub serving for the day for which it is prepared.

(6) Sc. instead of the right to a radius of two thousand cubits from the 'erub, which prevents him from going outside the

- town in the opposite direction of that 'erub, he would be entitled to a radius of two thousand cubits from the town in all directions.
- (7) For both days.
- (8) If he wishes to be entitled on one of the two days to the privileges of the townspeople.
- (9) The reason is explained in the Gemara infra.
- (10) This is dealt with in the Gemara anon.
- (11) When a festival immediately preceded the Sabbath.
- (12) If the man himself goes to the required spot no 'erub is necessary since his presence at twilight at that spot acquires it for him as his abode for that Sabbath or festival.
- (13) When the 'erub effects [the acquisition of the spot (cf. previous note)].
- (14) He should not leave it there since it might be lost and the man for whom it was prepared would thus be without an 'erub for the second day.
- (15) He may not carry it away with him on account of the Sabbath on which the carrying of objects in a public domain or in a karmelith is forbidden.
- (16) By taking the 'erub with him on the first day and so preserving it from possible loss.
- (17) Lit., 'his waking'.
- (18) He is able (a) to walk not only on the first, but also on the second day in the directions he desires and (b) he can also enjoy the eating of the two meals of which the 'erub consists. Had he not preserved the 'erub he might have lost both benefits. Should the festival be preceded by the Sabbath when the carrying of objects is forbidden (cf. supra n. 6) there is no alternative but to leave the 'erub in its position until the termination of the Sabbath. It must be examined at twilight just before the festival begins and, if it is found intact, it must be allowed to remain in position until dusk when it may be carried away or eaten on the spot,
- (19) Lit., 'his 'erub is for the first'.
- (20) The two days.
- (21) Had the two days been one entity the 'erub that was effective at twilight on the eve of the first day should have retained its effectiveness until the conclusion of the second day. 'Now since you concede this point', R. Eliezer says in effect, 'You must also concede that two 'erubs may be prepared respectively for the two days for two different directions'.
- (22) Sc. it is only permitted to prepare one 'erub for one direction for the two days.
- (23) V. p. 261, n. 13.
- (24) Indeed it is. Then why should the same ruling be repeated?
- (25) The Sages.
- (26) How does he meet this argument.
- (27) Lit., 'there'.
- (28) Lit., 'here'.
- (29) Who had no food to send to the required spot through a deputy.
- (30) Sc. walked to the spot and, by his presence there at twilight, acquired it as his abode for the next twenty-four hours of the day.
- (31) If he returned to his permanent home.
- (32) I.e., must again walk to the required spot just before the conclusion of the first day and remain there during twilight as he did on the eve of the first day (cf. supra n. 8) since his first acquisition has no effect whatever on his movements on the second day.
- (33) Where one was prepared with food.
- (34) Even after it had taken effect.
- (35) Beyond the limits permitted to the people of the town.
- (36) י"ט MS.M. י"ט not?
- (37) How can they maintain their ruling in view of this objection?
- (38) Whether a Sabbath and a festival day that immediately succeed one another are to be regarded as two distinct entities of holiness or as one only.
- (39) Lit., 'here for a restriction and etc.' They (a) forbade 'erubs in two different directions in case the two days are one entity of holiness and also (b) required an 'erub for each day in particular in case the two days are distinct entities of holiness.

(40) That immediately precedes it.

(41) I.e., if no 'erub was prepared on the festival eve,

(42) V. p. 262, n. 14.

(43) V. p. 262, n. 4.

(44) V. infra b. It provides, therefore, no proof that the two days are regarded as one entity.

(45) Cf. supra p. 262, nn. 7ff.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 38b

Behold this [man represents a combination of] an ass-driver and a camel-driver.¹ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: If he prepared an 'erub with his feet on the first day he need not prepare one with his feet for the second day² and if his 'erub was eaten on the first day he may go out [in reliance] on it on the second day.³

Rab stated: The halachah is in agreement with the⁴ four elders who follow the view of R. Eliezer who maintained [that the two days are regarded as] two entities of holiness. And these are the four elders: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka, R. Eleazar⁵ son of R. Simeon and R. Jose b. Judah [reported] anonymously⁶ or, as others say, one of these is R. Eleazar⁷ while R. Jose b. Judah [reported] anonymously is to be 'excluded. But were not R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka heard to express the contrary view?⁸ — Reverse it.⁹ But if so,¹⁰ is not their view identical with that of Rabbi?¹¹ — Read, 'And so also ruled R. Simeon b. Gamaliel etc.'¹² But why was not Rabbi¹³ also enumerated?¹⁴ — Rabbi only learnt the ruling¹⁵ but he himself did not adopt it. [Is it not possible that] the Rabbis¹⁶ also only learned it but did not adopt it?¹⁷ Rab received the statement¹⁸ as a definite tradition.

When R. Huna's soul departed to its eternal rest R. Hisda entering [the academy] pointed out a contradiction between two statements of Rab:¹⁹ Could Rab have said: 'The halachah is in agreement with the four elders who follow the view of R. Eliezer who maintained [that the two days are regarded as] two entities of holiness', seeing that it was actually²⁰ stated: 'If the Sabbath and a festival day [follow one another in close succession]. Rab ruled that [an egg] that was laid on the first of these days²¹ is forbidden on the other'?²² — Rabbah replied: [The restriction] there is due to [the prohibition against] preparing [from one day for the other]; for it was taught: And it shall come to pass on the sixth day²³ that they shall prepare²⁴ [implies that one may] prepare [on] a weekday for the Sabbath or for a festival but that no preparations may be made [on] a festival or the Sabbath nor may preparations be made [on] the Sabbath for a festival.²⁵ Said Abaye to him:²⁶ [What,] however, [could be your explanation of] what we learned: HOW IS ONE TO ACT? HE ARRANGES FOR THE ERUB TO BE CARRIED [TO THE REQUIRED SPOT] ON THE FIRST DAY [BY A DEPUTY] WHO, HAVING REMAINED THERE WITH IT UNTIL DUSK, TAKES IT UP AND GOES AWAY. ON THE SECOND [DAY THE 'ERUB IS AGAIN CARRIED THERE AND] KEPT UNTIL DUSK WHEN [THE DEPUTY] EATS IT AND GOES AWAY? Is he not thereby preparing on a festival day for the Sabbath? — Rabbah replied: Do you imagine that it is at the conclusion of the day²⁷ that an 'erub acquires its validity? It is at the beginning of the day²⁸ that its validity is acquired, and on the Sabbath one may well make preparations for the Sabbath itself. Now then,²⁹ why should not people be allowed to prepare an 'erub with a 'lagin'?³⁰ — Because it is necessary [that an erub should consist of] a meal that is suitable [for consumption] while it is yet day,³¹ which is not the case there.'³² [What,] however, [is your explanation of] what we learned: R. ELIEZER RULED: IF A FESTIVAL DAY IMMEDIATELY PRECEDES OR FOLLOWS THE SABBATH A MAN MAY PREPARE TWO 'ERUBS'?³³ Is it not necessary [that the 'erub should consist of] a meal suitable [for consumption] while it is yet day,³¹ which is not the case here?³⁴ — Do you think that one 'erub was laid at the termination of two thousand cubits in one direction³⁵ and [the other was laid] at the termination of two thousand cubits in the opposite direction?³⁶ No; one 'erub was laid at the termination of one thousand cubits in one direction and [the other also was similarly laid at] the termination of one thousand cubits in the opposite direction.³⁷ [What,] however, [could be said in explanation of] that which Rab Judah ruled: If a man prepared an 'erub for the first day with his feet he must also prepare it for the second day with his feet and if he prepared the 'erub for the first day with bread he must also prepare it for the second day with bread? Is he not³⁸ preparing on a festival day for the Sabbath?³⁹ — The other replied: Do you think that he must go [to the required spot] and pronounce some formula? In fact he only goes there and sits down in silence. In agreement with whose view?⁴⁰ Is it in agreement only with that of R. Johanan b. Nuri who holds that objects of hefker⁴¹ acquire⁴² the spot on which they rested?⁴³ — It may be said to be in agreement even with the view of the Rabbis, for they differ from R. Johanan b. Nuri only in respect of a person asleep, who cannot possibly pronounce the formula, but where a person is awake and could, if he wished, pronounce it he is deemed to have pronounced it even though he has not actually done so. Said Rabbah b. R. Hanin to Abaye: If the Master⁴⁴ had heard that⁴⁵ it was taught: 'A man shall not walk [on the Sabbath] to the end of his field to ascertain what it required.'⁴⁶ Similarly

(1) Cf. relevant note on the Mishnah supra 35a. It is uncertain whether the two days are to be regarded as one entity of holiness or two entities. In the former case the 'erub for the first day is also effective for the second one and the man is consequently forbidden to walk the two thousand cubits from the town in the opposite direction of the 'erub though he would be allowed four thousand cubits from the town in the direction of the 'erub (which is his 'abode' for the day and from which point he is entitled to walk two thousand cubits in all directions). In the latter case the 'erub for the first day is not effective for the second, and the man is consequently forbidden on that day to walk more than two thousand cubits from the town in the direction of the 'erub though (since the town is his abode) he would be permitted to walk the two thousand cubits from the town in the opposite direction of the 'erub. Owing to the uncertainty both restrictions are imposed and the man may walk only the two thousand cubits between the town and his 'erub.

(2) Both days being regarded as one entity of holiness or as one long day.

(28) For which the 'erub is required, i.e., [the Sabbath].

(29) If, as just stated, an 'erub takes effect at the beginning, sc. at twilight of the eve of the day for which it is prepared.

(30) 'That was a tebul yom' (supra 36a). The reason for the invalidity of the 'erub given there was that before the Sabbath begins it consisted of tebel. But if an 'erub does not take effect (cf. previous note) before the Sabbath actually begins the 'erub in the lagan, since the moment Sabbath begins it is no longer tebel, should be valid.

(31) Friday.

(32) Lit., 'and there is not', because at that time it was still tebel.

(33) It is now assumed that one 'erub is laid at a distance of two thousand cubits from the town in one direction and the other at an equal distance in the opposite direction.

(34) Since the effectiveness of the 'erub for the first day prevents the man for whom it was prepared from walking one single step in the opposite direction of the town (cf. previous note) in consequence of which he is unable, while it is yet day, to gain access to his second 'erub.

(35) Lit., 'towards here'.

(36) Cf. Supra p. 265, n. 9.

(37) So that either 'erub is within two thousand cubits distance from the other, and the man is consequently able to gain access to the 'erub he requires.

(38) When preparing the 'erub with his feet.

(39) Granted that in the case of an 'erub with bread, since validity takes effect at the beginning of the day for which it is prepared, there is, as has been explained supra, no preparation from the festival for the Sabbath' in the case of an 'erub prepared with one's feet, however, since the man cannot exactly determine the moment at which the Sabbath begins, he would obviously pronounce the formula, whereby he acquires the spot as his abode, while it is yet day and thus he would be guilty of preparing on a festival for the Sabbath.

(40) Is this ruling that no formula is necessary for acquiring a spot as one's 'abode' for a Sabbath or festival.

(41) V. Glos. though they are ownerless and no one acquires the place for them.

(42) Like a sleeping person (cf. infra 45a).

(43) At the moment the Sabbath or festival began.

(44) Rabbah, who tacitly assumed that a man may take a walk on a holy day though his motive is to facilitate thereby some work which is forbidden on that day'.

(45) Lit., 'that which'.

(46) Though his intention is to attend to the work after the conclusion of the Sabbath.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 39a

no man shall¹ walk about² the gate of a province in order that he might enter a bath house³ as soon [as the holy day terminates],⁴ he would have changed his view.⁴ This however is not correct. He did in fact hear of this ruling but did not change his view, since there⁵ the motive is obvious⁶ while here it is not at all obvious. For if the person is a scholar people would assume that he might have been absorbed⁷ in his studies,⁸ and if he is an 'am ha-arez,⁹ it would be said that he might have lost his ass.¹⁰

'If he prepared the 'erub for the first day with bread he must also prepare it for the second day with bread'. Samuel explained: But only with the same bread. R. Ashi remarked: Logical deduction from our Mishnah also [leads to the same conclusion].¹² For it was stated: HOW DOES HE ACT? HE ARRANGES [FOR THE 'ERUB] TO BE CARRIED [TO THE REQUIRED SPOT] ON THE FIRST DAY [BY A DEPUTY] WHO, HAVING REMAINED THERE WITH IT UNTIL, DUSK, TAKES IT UP AND GOES AWAY. ON THE SECOND [DAY THE 'ERUB IS AGAIN CARRIED

THERE AND] KEPT UNTIL DUSK WHEN [THE DEPUTY] EATS IT AND GOES AWAY. And the Rabbis?¹³ — There¹⁴ we might merely have been given a piece of good advice.¹⁵

MISHNAH. R JUDAH RULED: [IF ON THE EVE OF THE] NEW YEAR A MAN¹⁶ FEARS THAT [THE PRECEDING MONTH OF ELUL.] MIGHT BE INTERCALATED,¹⁷ HE¹⁸ MAY PREPARE TWO ‘ERUBS¹⁹ AND MAKE THIS DECLARATION:²⁰ ‘MY ‘ERUB²¹ FOR THE FIRST [DAY SHALL BE] TO THE EAST AND THE ONE FOR THE SECOND DAY TO THE WEST’; ‘THE ONE FOR THE FIRST DAY TO THE WEST AND THE ONE FOR THE SECOND DAY TO THE EAST’; ‘MY ‘ERUB [SHALL BE EFFECTIVE] FOR THE FIRST DAY, AND FOR THE SECOND [I SHALL RETAIN THE SAME RIGHTS] AS THE PEOPLE OF MY TOWN’ OR ‘MY ‘ERUB [SHALL BE EFFECTIVE] FOR THE SECOND DAY, AND) FOR THE FIRST [I SHALL RETAIN THE SAME RIGHTS] AS THE PEOPLE OF MY TOWN. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, DID NOT AGREE WITH HIM.²¹

R. JUDAH FURTHER RULED: A MAN MAY CONDITIONALLY²² [SET ASIDE TERUMAH]²³ FOR A BASKET [OF PRODUCE] ON THE FIRST FESTIVAL DAY [OF NEW YEAR] AND MAY THEN EAT IT ON THE SECOND DAY, AND SO ALSO IF AN EGG WAS LAID ON THE FIRST [FESTIVAL] DAY IT MAY BE EATEN ON THE SECOND; BUT THE SAGES DID NOT AGREE WITH HIM.²⁴

R. DOSA B. HARKINAS RULED: THE PERSON WHO ACTS AS CONGREGATIONAL READER²⁵ ON [THE FIRST DAY OF] THE FESTIVAL OF THE NEW YEAR SAYS: ‘FORTIFY US, O LORD OUR GOD, ON THIS FIRST DAY OF THE MONTH, WHETHER IT BE TODAY OR TOMORROW’; AND ON THE FOLLOWING DAY HE SAYS: ‘[FORTIFY US ETC.] WHETHER IT BE TODAY OR YESTERDAY’. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, DID NOT AGREE WITH HIM.²⁶

GEMARA. Who [is it that] DID NOT AGREE WITH HIM? Rab replied: It is R. Jose; for it was taught: The Sages agree with R. Eliezer²⁷ that if on [the eve of] the New Year²⁸ a man fears that [the preceding month of Elul] might be intercalated,²⁹ he may prepare two ‘erubs and make this declaration: ‘My ‘erub for the first [day shall be] to the east and the one on the second day to the west’, ‘The one for the first day to the west and the one for the second day to the east’, ‘My ‘erub [shall be effective] for the first day, and for the second [I shall retain the same rights] as the people of my town’, or ‘My ‘erub [shall be effective] for the second day, and for the first [I shall retain the same rights] as the people of my town’; but R. Jose forbids this.³⁰ Said R. Jose to them:³¹ Do you not agree that, if witnesses³² came after the [offering of the] minhah³³ both that day and the day following are observed³⁴ as holy [days]?³⁵

(1) On the Sabbath or a festival.

(2) Aliter: ‘Shall take a walk to’ (cf. Rashi and Gold.).

(3) That is nearby.

(4) Because, from this Baraitha it is obvious that, on a holy day’ even a walk is forbidden if the purpose is to facilitate some forbidden act. Similarly in the case of ‘erub, if the utterance of the formula would constitute an infringement of the law of preparation the silent occupation of the required spot for the same purpose would equally constitute an infringement.

(5) The walks in the Baraitha cited.

(6) No one would ordinarily walk on a holy day to the end of his field or to the gate of a province unless he intended, in the former case, to carry’ out some work in the field or, in the latter case, to enter a bath house as soon as the day ended.

(7) Lit., ‘it drew him’.

(8) And absentmindedly walked on to the Sabbath limit.

(9) V. Glos., who does not engage in study.

(10) And he went to make enquiries about it. Such enquiries as well as the return of the animal to its stable are permitted even on a holy day.

(11) Since the 'erub would have to be Named on the festival day the prohibition against performing an act on a festival for the Sabbath would be infringed.

(12) That only bread that was on the eve of a festival named as 'erub may be used for the Sabbath 'erub but no new bread that would have to be named as 'erub on the festival day.

(13) Abaye and Rabbah b. Hanin who argued supra against Rabbah's ruling which forbids the naming of an 'erub on a festival for the Sabbath. How could they maintain their views against the deduction from our Mishnah?

(14) In our Mishnah.

(15) Which does not preclude the naming of new bread as 'erub if the man is inclined to do so.

(16) Living in the diaspora, too far from Jerusalem (the seat of the Sanhedrin or supreme court) to ascertain in time which day was fixed as the New Year. The day beginning [the new year, as well as the respective days beginning the months of the year, was determined and announced in Jerusalem after the authorities heard, and were satisfied with the necessary evidence on the time the new moon appeared in the respective month.

(17) I.e., declared to consist of thirty, instead of twenty-nine days. If the witnesses were in time only the day following the twenty-ninth of Elul was announced as New Year's day, but if they were late, that day' was added to Elul and the New Year festival was announced for both that day (the thirtieth of Elul) and the day following it (the first of Tishri), though in fact the latter only was the holy day.

(18) If he wishes to go on the two days respectively in two opposite directions of the town (as in the case in the Mishnah supra 38a).

(19) Depositing them in the two opposite directions of the town respectively at distances of two thousand cubits.

(20) For further notes v. Mishnah supra 38a.

(21) They regard both days as one entity of holiness.

(22) This is explained infra 39b.

(23) Though the setting aside of the priestly dues is forbidden on a day that is definitely known to be a holy day.

(24) Cf. supra n. 3.

(25) Lit., 'he who passes before the (reading) chest'.

(26) The point at issue between the Sages and R. Dosa is explained infra in the Gemara.

(27) Though they disagree with him where one of the two days in question was a Sabbath and the other a festival since both days are holy beyond doubt.

(28) Since only one of the day's, viz., the actual first day of the year, whichever of the two it may be, is holy while the other is definitely not holy. The two day's are kept as a festival for the sole reason that it is impossible to ascertain which of the two is actually the first day of the year.

(29) For notes on the passage cf. the notes on our Mishnah.

(30) His reason emerges from the argument he advances presently.

(31) The Sages.

(32) Who saw the appearance of the new moon.

(33) Lit., 'from the minhah and onward', מִנְחָה denoting the continual daily evening sacrifice which was offered as a rule from the sixth and half hours after sunrise (the day being divided into twelve hours).

(34) Lit., 'that they lead', 'behave'.

(35) Tosef. 'Er. IV. So that the reason why the New Year festival is kept in the diaspora for two days is not only on account of doubt as to which of these days was declared to be the first day of the New Year but also on account of the possibility that both were actually kept in Jerusalem as holy days.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 39b

And the Rabbis?¹ — There [the reason for the observance]² is³ that people shall not treat it with disrespect.⁴ R. JUDAH FURTHER RULED etc. And [the mention of the three cases⁵ was] necessary.⁶ For if we had been informed of the NEW YEAR⁷ only it might have been presumed that R. Judah maintained his view⁸ only in that case because the man does nothing,⁹ but that in the case of the BASKET, where it might appear that he prepares tebel,⁹ R. Judah agrees with the Rabbis. And even if we had been taught both, those cases¹⁰ it might have been presumed [that R. Judah maintained his view¹¹ in these only] because there is no prohibition On account of which these should be forbidden as a preventive measure, but that in the case of the EGG, where there is reason to forbid it as a preventive measure as fallen fruit¹² or as liquids that excluded,¹² he agrees with the Rabbis. [Hence it is that the three cases were] required.

It was taught: In what manner did R. Judah mean his ruling, that ‘a man may conditionally [set aside terumah] for a basket [of produce] on the first festival day [of New Year] and may then eat it on the second day’, [to be carried out]? If, for Instance, he had before him two baskets of produce of tebel he makes this declaration: ‘If today is an ordinary weekday and tomorrow will be a holy day let this [basket of produce]¹³ be terumah for the other, and if today is a holy day and tomorrow is a weekday let my declaration be void’. He thus names it [conditionally] and puts It away. On the following day he says:¹⁴ ‘If today is a weekday let this [basket of produce] be terumah for the other, and if today is a holy day let my declaration be void’, and he thus names It¹⁵ and may then eat [the other]. R. Jose forbids this. And so also did R. Jose forbid [such a procedure] on the two festival days of the diaspora.¹⁶

A stag that was caught¹⁷ on the first day of a diaspora festival and slain on the second day of the festival was presented at the Exilarch's table. R. Nahman and R. Hisda ate it,¹⁸ but R. Shesheth did not eat It.¹⁹ ‘What’, said R. Nahman, ‘can I do with R. Shesheth who does not eat the meat of a stag?’ — ‘How could I eat it’, retorted R. Shesheth, ‘in view of what Assi²⁰ learned (or, as others say: Issi²¹ learned): And so also did R. Jose forbid [such a procedure] on the two festival days of the diaspora’. ‘What, however’, objected Raba, ‘is the difficulty? Is it not possible that he²² meant this: And so also did R. Jose forbid [such a procedure] on the two festival days of the New Year²³ in the diaspora?’²⁴ — If so [instead of the expression,] ‘of²⁵ the diaspora’ it should have read: ‘In the diaspora’ — ‘What difficulty, however,’ objected R. Assi, ‘is this? Is it not possible that he²² meant this: And so also did R. Jose treat the prohibition of [such a procedure] on any of the two festival days of the diaspora²⁶ as did the Rabbis on the two festival days of the New Year²⁷ on which they permit [a similar procedure]?²⁸ R. Shesheth subsequently met Rabbah b. Samuel and asked him, ‘Has the Master learnt anything on the question of festival sanctities?’²⁹ — ‘I have learnt’, the other replied, ‘that R. Jose agreed in the case of the two festival days of the diaspora’.³⁰ If you happen to meet them³¹ [R. Shesheth requested] mention to them nothing whatever about the matter.³² R. Ashi stated: Amemar told me personally that the stag was not at all caught³³

(1) How could they maintain their view in face of R. Jose's argument (cf. previous note)?

(2) Of the first day also, where the witnesses came in the afternoon.

(3) Not because it is actually holy and forms together with the day following it one entity of holiness.

(4) It is in fact not holy; but if, where witnesses came in the afternoon, that day (the 30th of Elul) had not been treated to the end as a holy day, the public might on the next occasion come to regard the entire day with equal disrespect and would, in consequence, permit themselves to carry on their usual occupations and work all that day as if it had been one of the ordinary working days. Such laxity, however, would result in the actual desecration of a holy day where the witnesses happened to come before noon and that day (the one following the 29th of Elul) had been declared as the one and only day of the New Year festival. In order, therefore, to avoid such possible desecration It was ordained that the day following the 29th of Elul shall always be treated as a holy day irrespective of the time of day at which the witnesses appeared. Where, however, the witnesses did come in the afternoon, though that day is continued to be observed as a holy day for the reason stated, it is in fact an ordinary weekday, the second day only being actually holy and the New Year day.

(5) The ‘ERUBS, the BASKET and the EGG.

(6) For the realization of the full extent of R. Judah's view.

(7) Bah reads: the first clause. Sc. the ruling about the ‘ERUBS on the eve of the New Year.

(8) That the two days are regarded as two entities of holiness.

(9) on the festival day.

(10) Those of the ‘ERUBS and the BASKET.

(11) That the two days are regarded as two entities of holiness.

(12) On a holy day it is forbidden to eat fruit that dropped from the tree on that day, as a preventive measure against one's climbing the tree and plucking them (cf. Bezah 2b); and it is similarly forbidden to drink the juice of fruit that exuded on that day, as a preventive measure against one's squeezing of the fruit (cf. op. cit, 3a). An egg might have been assumed to come under the former or latter category.

(13) Which he points out.

(14) Pointing to the basket he had set aside for the same purpose on the previous day.

(15) The basket for terumah.

(16) ימים טובים של גליות. Name denoting the three major festivals, as distinct from the New Year festival, of which two days were sometimes observed also in Palestine. Instead of the one day festivals that were Pentateuchally ordained for the fifteenth and twenty-first of Nisan (Passover), sixth of Sivan (Pentecost) and the fifteenth and twenty-second of Tishri (Tabernacles and the Eighth Day of Solemn Assembly) the diaspora, or rather those localities that were too far from Jerusalem for the official communications of the Sanhedrin and supreme court to reach them in time before the date of the respective festival, kept two days. Those whom the communications could reach in time knew exactly the day that was declared as the new moon and could calculate therefrom the day of the respective festivals. All others could not be sure whether the new moon of the month in question followed the twenty-ninth or the thirtieth of the preceding month. As in the former case Passover, for instance, would be fifteen days after the twenty-ninth of Adar and in the latter case sixteen days after that date both the fifteenth and the sixteenth were kept as holy days. This was the case with the three major festivals mentioned. And though, unlike the New Year festival which was sometimes kept in Jerusalem itself (as explained supra 39a) on two days, one of each of these pairs of days was invariably a weekday, R. Jose imposes upon both days the same restrictions as those of the New Year day's.

(17) By non-Jews.

(18) Because the two festival days of the diaspora are in their opinion regarded as two entities, the one holy and the other not holy, so that if the first was not the holy day the stag was caught on an ordinary weekday and may well be eaten on the holy day that followed it; and if the first day was holy the stag may well be eaten after the day ended provided only that there was time enough since the conclusion of the holy day for the stag to be caught.

(19) Both days (v. previous note) are regarded by him as one entity of holiness.

(20) So MS.M. Cur. edd. 'Issi'.

(21) The difference between this reading and the previous one, according to cur.ed. is taken to consist in the mode of its intonation: 'Did not Issi learn?' Cf. Rashi.

(22) Assi or Issi.

(23) But not on those of the other festivals.

(24) R. Jose's point being that, in the diaspora, the two days are always one entity as they are sometimes in Jerusalem.

(25) Which implies: Festivals that are kept on two days in the diaspora only but not in Palestine.

(26) Sc. relaxed it and permitted the procedure.

(27) Supra 39a: 'The Sages agree with R. Eliezer that if on [the eve of] the New Year etc.

(28) This is rather a forced interpretation but is preferable to the difficulty of allowing a senseless ruling to stand in the name of R. Jose who is invariably known for his reasoned statements and arguments.

(29) I.e., whether the two days of a diaspora festival are regarded as two entities of holiness or as one only.

(30) That they are regarded as two entities.

(31) R. Nahman and R. Hisda.

(32) Lit., 'do not tell them and nothing'. R. Shesheth realized his mistake and desired to avoid his colleague's taunts.

(33) On the first day when it was brought to the Exilarch's house. If that had been the case R. Shesheth would undoubtedly have shared the view of his colleagues.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 40a

but it arrived¹ from without the permitted festival limit. He who ate it was of the opinion that if anything arrived² for one Israelite it is permitted to another Israelite,³ and he who did not eat it held that all foodstuffs that arrived at the Exilarch's house were intended for all the Rabbis.⁴ but did not R. Shesheth meet Rabbah b. Samuel and ask him [a question on sanctities]?⁵ — That in fact never happened.⁶

A load of⁷ turnips once arrived at Mahuza [on a festival day]. Raba went out and observed that they were withered. He therefore permitted the people to buy them, saying: 'These turnips were undoubtedly pulled out from the ground yesterday. What other objection could be raised?⁸ That they arrived from without the permitted festival limit? But anything that arrives for one Israelite is permitted to another Israelite to eat, and much more so are these [turnips permitted] since they were intended for gentiles'. When, however, he observed that [the gentile vendors] were bringing in additional supplies of these turnips he forbade all further buying.⁹

Certain gardeners once cut¹⁰ myrtles on the second day of the festival and Rabina permitted people to smell their odour in the evening immediately [after the termination of the festival]. Said Raba b. Tahlifa to Rabina, 'The Master should really forbid this to them since they are not learned men'.¹¹ To this R. Shemaiah demurred: 'Is the reason then¹² that they are not learned men, but if they had been learned men this would have been permitted? But, surely, is it not necessary [to allow time] enough¹³ for their preparation?'¹⁴ They, therefore, proceeded to ask this question of Raba, and he told them; that it was necessary [to allow time] enough¹³ for their preparation.¹⁵

R. DOSA¹⁶ RULED: THE PERSON WHO ACTS AS CONGREGATIONAL READER etc. Rabbah stated: When we were at R. Huna's we raised the following question: 'Is it necessary to mention the New Moon in [the prayers of] the New Year?¹⁷ Is it necessary to mention it because different additional offerings were ordained for the two celebrations¹⁸ or is rather one mention of "memorial"¹⁹ sufficient for both?'²⁰ And he told us, 'You have learnt It: R. DOSA RULED: THE PERSON WHO ACTS AS CONGREGATIONAL READER etc. Does not [this disagreement²¹ apply] to the mention [of the New Moon]?'²² — No; [it may refer] to the conditional form of the prayer.²³ Logical reasoning also Supports this. For in a Baraita it was taught: 'And so²⁴ did R. Dosa proceed on the New Moons²⁵ throughout the year but they²⁶ did not agree with him'. Now if you admit [that their objection was] to his conditional form of prayer one can well understand why they did not agree with him;²⁷ but if you maintain [that their objection was] to the mention of the New Moon why [it may be asked] did they not agree with him?²⁸ — What then [would you suggest? That their objection was] to his conditional form of prayer? But what purpose [it could be retorted] was served by expressing disagreement In the two cases?²⁹ — [Both were] necessary. For if we had been informed [of their disagreement In the case of] the New Year Only it might have been presumed that only in this case did the Rabbis maintain that no [conditional form of prayer should be introduced] because³⁰ people might come to regard the day with disrespect,³¹ but that in the case of the New Moons throughout the year³² they, it might have been presumed — agree with R. Dosa. And if [their disagreement with R. Dosa] had been expressed in the latter case Only,³³ it might have been presumed that R. Dosa maintained his view only in that case³² but that in the other case he agrees with the Rabbis.³⁴ [Hence it is that both cases were] necessary.

An objection was raised: If the New Year festival fell on a Sabbath, Beth Shammai ruled: One shall recite ten benedictions,³⁵ and Beth Hillel ruled: One only recites nine.³⁶ Now if that were so³⁷ should it not have been necessary according to Beth Shammai³⁸ [to order] eleven benedictions?

(1) On the second day when it was served at the Exilarch's table.

(2) On a festival day from without the permitted limit.

(3) As the stag was brought for the Exilarch it was only forbidden to him but permitted to the Rabbis.

(4) Who usually dined with him. They were, therefore, in the same position as the Exilarch himself.

(5) What possible bearing could such a question have had on that of the stag that was served as a dish on the very day on which it arrived from without the permitted limit?

(6) Lit., 'the things never were'.

(7) Lit., 'that'.

(8) Against eating them on the festival.

(9) Lit., 'to them', since it was evident that the new supplies were definitely intended for the Jewish public.

- (10) Lit., 'who cut'.
- (11) And might, as a result of the permission, allow themselves further relaxations in the observance of the sanctity of the second festival day.
- (12) Why they should have been forbidden the smelling of the myrtles.
- (13) After the conclusion of the festival.
- (14) Sc. the cutting of the myrtles. Before such a period of time has passed the smelling remains forbidden but Rabina, surely, permitted it as soon as the festival concluded.
- (15) Cf. previous note.
- (16) Our Mishnah (supra 39a) insert B. HARKINAS.
- (17) Sc. is it necessary to say 'this day of the New Moon' in addition to 'this Day of Memorial'?
- (18) Lit., 'they are divided in their additional offerings'. Besides the sacrifices that were ordered for the New Year festival (cf. Num. XXIX, 2ff) the sacrifices of the New Moon (which, of course, always coincided with the first day of the New Year) had also to be offered on that day (ibid. 6).
- (19) Since both the New Year festival and the New Moon were associated in Scripture with memorial or remembrance before God (cf. Lev. XXIII, 24 and Num. X, 10).
- (20) Lit., 'goes up towards here and towards here',
- (21) Of the Rabbis with R. Dosa spoken of in our Mishnah.
- (22) Cf. our Mishnah, their opinion being that the New Moon need not be mentioned in the prayer of the New Year's day.
- (23) Which R. Dosa had laid down. In their opinion the expression 'WHETHER IT BE TODAY etc.' should be omitted, but the mention of the New Moon must be included.
- (24) Sc. with a conditional form of prayer.
- (25) Whenever it was uncertain whether the day following the twenty-ninth or the thirtieth of the preceding month was declared as the New Moon.
- (26) The Rabbis.
- (27) Since they might well object to introduce conditional forms in a prayer.
- (28) The New Moon, surely, should be mentioned in the prayers for the ordinary New Moon's day.
- (29) Those of the New Year and the New Moon. Their disagreement on the conditional form of prayer in the one case should, surely, be sufficient indication of their disagreement in the other.
- (30) Observing that the day is specifically described in the prayers as of doubtful holiness.
- (31) And thus desecrate both days of the festival.
- (32) Where the question of desecration does not arise since work is permitted on the New Moon.
- (33) I.e., and the case of the New Year had not been mentioned at all.
- (34) In order, as explained supra, to obviate any possible desecration of the festival.
- (35) The first three (cf. P.B. p. 44f) and the last three (ibid. p. 50ff) that are recited three times every day; one for the Sabbath, one dealing with the sanctity of the New Year and the divine sovereignty of the universe, and two dealing respectively with aspects of God's remembrances and the blowing of the shofar (ibid. pp. 247ff).
- (36) Tosef. Ber. III and Tosef. R.H. II ad fin. The mention of the Sabbath and the sanctity of the New Year are included in one benediction which concludes with 'Who sanctifies the Sabbath and Israel and the Day of Memorial'. (cf. P.B. p. 249).
- (37) That the New Moon must also be mentioned in the New Year prayers.
- (38) Who ordered specific benedictions for every subject.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 40b

— R. Zera replied: The New Moon is different [from a festival] —¹ Since [its mention] is included [in the benediction on the sanctity of the day] in the morning and evening prayers² it is also included in that of the additional prayer.³ But do Beth Shammai uphold [the view that the mention of the New Moon⁴ is] to be included?⁵ Was it not in fact taught: If a New Moon falls on a Sabbath, Beth Shammai ruled: One recites in his [additional] prayer eight benedictions and Beth Hillel ruled: Seven?⁶ — [This is indeed] a difficulty.⁷

On the very question of inclusion⁸ Tannas differ. For it was taught: If the Sabbath falls on a New Moon or on one of the intermediate days⁹ of a festival, one reads the seven benedictions in the evening, morning and afternoon prayers in the usual way, inserting the formula appropriate for the occasion¹⁰ in the benediction on the Temple service; R. Eliezer ruled: [The insertion is made] in the benediction of thanksgiving; and if it was not inserted one is made to repeat [all the benedictions]. In the additional prayers one must begin and conclude with the mention of the Sabbath¹¹ inserting the mention of the sanctity of the day in the middle [of the benediction only].¹² R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka ruled: Wherever one is under an obligation to recite seven benedictions¹³ it is necessary to begin and conclude with the mention of the Sabbath¹¹ and to insert the reference to the sanctity of the day in the middle¹⁴ [of the benediction].¹⁵

Now what is the result of the discussion:¹⁶ — R. Hisda replied: [The mention of] one ‘memorial’¹⁷ suffices for both.¹⁸ So also ruled Rabbah: [The mention of] one ‘memorial’ is sufficient for both.¹⁸

Rabbah further stated: When we were at R. Huna's we raised the question whether the benediction on the season¹⁹ is to be recited on the New Year festival and on the Day of Atonement. Must it be recited [we argued] since [these solemn days] occur only periodically or is it possible that it is not to be said since they are not described in Scripture as ‘festivals’? He was unable to give an answer.²⁰ When I later arrived at Rab Judah's he stated: ‘I recite the benediction on the season²¹ even over a new pumpkin.’²² ‘I do not ask’, I told him, ‘whether it is permitted [to recite this benediction].’²¹ What I ask is whether its recital is obligatory’ ‘Both Rab and Samuel’, he replied: ‘ruled: The benediction on the season²¹ is recited only on the occasion of the three major festivals.’²³

An objection was raised: Give a portion unto seven, yea, even unto eight.²⁴ R. Eliezer explained: ‘Seven’ alludes to the seven days of the creation²⁵ and ‘eight’ alludes to the eight days of circumcision.²⁶ R. Joshua explained: ‘Seven’ alludes to the seven days of the Passover and ‘eight’ alludes to the eight days of the festival of Tabernacles: and since Scripture says: ‘Yea, even’, Pentecost, New Year's day and the Day of Atonement are also included. Now does not this inclusion refer to the benediction on the season?²⁷ — No; [the reference is] to the benediction [on the sanctity of the day].²⁸ This²⁹ may also be logically supported. For if it were to be assumed³⁰ [that the reference is] to the benediction on the season [the objection could be advanced:] Is [the benediction on] the season recited³¹ all the seven [days of the festival]?³² — This is really no objection, since a person who did not recite the benediction on the proper day³³ must do so on the following or any subsequent day [of the festival].³⁴ At all events, however, [it may be objected] is not a cup of wine³⁵ required?³⁶ May it [thus] be suggested that this³⁷ provides support for R. Nahman who laid down: One may recite the benediction on the season even in the market-place?³⁸ — This³⁹ is no difficulty [at all, since the benediction on the season could be said] when one happens to have a cup of wine.⁴⁰ This explanation⁴¹ is quite satisfactory as regards Pentecost and the New Year festival; but⁴² how could one proceed on the Day of Atonement?⁴³ If [it be suggested that] one is to recite the benediction over the wine and drink it [the objection might be advanced:] Since the man recited the benediction on the season he has thereby accepted the obligation of the day⁴³ and caused the wine to be forbidden to him;⁴⁴ for did not R. Jeremiah b. Abba once say to Rab,⁴⁵ ‘Have you ceased from work?’ And the latter replied: ‘Yes, I have ceased’.⁴⁶ [And if it be suggested that] one might recite the benediction over the wine and put it aside [it might be objected:] He who recites the benediction [over any food or drink] must taste it. [Should it be suggested that] one might⁴⁷ give it to a child,⁴⁸ [it could be retorted:] The law is not in agreement with R. Aha b. Jacob,⁴⁹ since [the child] possibly might get used to it.⁵⁰ Now what is [the decision] on this question?⁵¹ — The Rabbis sent R. Yemar⁵² the Elder to R. Hisda on the eve of the New Year. ‘Go,’ they said to him, ‘observe how he acts in practice and come and tell us’. When [R. Hisda] saw him he remarked: ‘He who picks up a moist log⁵³ desires to have a press on the spot’.⁵⁴ Thereupon a cup of wine was brought to him [over which] he recited the kiddush⁵⁵ and also the benediction on the season. And the law is that the benediction on the season is to be recited both on the New Year festival and the Day of Atonement. And the law, furthermore, is that the benediction on the season may be said even in the street.

Rabbah further stated: When we were at Huna's we raised the question whether a student who kept a fast on the eve of the Sabbath must also complete it?⁵⁶ He hath no ruling on the subject.⁵⁷ I appeared before Rab Judah and he also hath no ruling on the subject. 'Let us', said Rabbah,⁵⁸ 'consider the matter ourselves. It was in fact taught: If the Ninth of Ab⁵⁹ fell on a Sabbath

(1) A special benediction is required for the latter but not for the former, though the mention thereof is to be included in the prayers.

(2) If the New Moon falls, for instance, on a Sabbath the benediction concludes with 'Who sanctifies the Sabbath and Israel and the New Moons'.

(3) Even on the New Year; the conclusion of the prayer being 'Who sanctifies Israel and the Day of Memorial and the New Moons'. The total number of benedictions is, therefore, no more than ten.

(4) In the additional prayer when the New Moon and the Sabbath fall on the same day.

(5) In that of the benediction on the sanctity of the Sabbath.

(6) Now since Beth Shammai give the number as eight it is obvious that a special one was instituted for the New Moon. Does not this then present an objection against R. Zera and thus the first objection (Supra 40a ad fin.) arises again?

(7) It follows, since Beth Shammai require a special benediction for the New Moon on an ordinary Sabbath and yet do not require one for the New Year, that no mention whatsoever of the New Moon is made in the prayers for the New Year, the term 'memorial' in 'the Day of Memorial', used in reference to the New Year, covering also the New Moon which, as pointed out supra, is referred to in Scripture by a similar expression (Rashi).

(8) In the morning and evening prayers of a reference to the New Moon in the benediction on the sanctity of the Sabbath when both happen to be on the same day.

(9) Lit., 'the week or profane (days).'

(10) Lit., 'of the nature of the event', sc. according to the formula suitable for the New Moon or any of the particular festivals that happens to fall in that season.

(11) Beginning 'And Thou hast given us this day of rest' and concluding with 'Who sanctifies the Sabbath'.

(12) Thus only in the case of the additional prayers is the mention of the New Moon included at least in the middle of the benediction on the sanctity of the day. In the case of the morning and evening prayers, however, it is not mentioned even in the middle but, as on a weekday, the mention of the New Moon is restricted to the special New Moon prayer beginning, 'Our God . . . may our remembrance rise' ('עלה ויבא') which is inserted in the benediction on the Temple service (cf. P.B. p. 50).

(13) I.e., even in the evening and morning prayers when a New Moon or a festival falls on a Sabbath.

(14) Mentioning first the Sabbath, 'This day of rest', and adding 'and this day of the New Moon', 'and this day of the festival of . . .', according to the particular occasion.

(15) Cf. Tosef. Ber. III and Bezah 17a. Thus it has been shown (cf. supra p. 277, n. 10) that one Tanna (v. supra n. 3) maintains, contrary to the view of the others, that the mention of the New Moon is not to be inserted even in the middle of the benediction on the sanctity of the day.

(16) Lit., 'what is (the decision) about it', i.e., is the New Moon to be mentioned in the New Year prayers?

(17) יום הזכרון, 'the Day of Memorial'.

(18) Cf. supra p. 275, nn. 8f.

(19) 'Blessed art Thou.. Who hast kept us in life, and hast preserved us and hast enabled us to reach this season' (cf. P.B. p. 292).

(20) Lit., 'it was not in his hand'.

(21) V. p. 278, n. 10.

(22) Sc. when he sees it for the first time in the season (Rashi).

(23) Passover, Pentecost and Tabernacles.

(24) Eccl. XI, 2; E.V., 'Divide a portion into' etc.

(25) Lit., 'beginning'. The Sabbath day was the chosen portion from all the seven.

(26) The eighth of which was the selected one (cf. Gen. XVII, 12).

(27) If it does, an objection arises against both Rab and Samuel.

- (28) Concluding with 'Who sanctifies Israel and the season'. This benediction must be recited on all the days enumerated.
- (29) That the New Year was included in respect of the benediction on the sanctity of the day and not in that on the season.
- (30) Lit., 'went up your mind',
- (31) Lit., 'there is'.
- (32) Of course not. The reference of 'seven', therefore, cannot be to that benediction.
- (33) Lit., 'at present', 'today'.
- (34) Hence it was quite proper to include all the seven days in the reference to the benediction on the season.
- (35) The proper occasion for the recital of the benediction on the season is the time when the festival is ushered in, when it follows that on the sanctity of the day, which is pronounced over a cup of wine after the benediction for the wine has been said.
- (36) As it is not possible for everyone to have a cup of wine every day, the recital of the benediction under discussion must obviously be restricted to the first day of the festival. How then could it be maintained that the reference supra is to all the seven days?
- (37) Since it was assumed that the benediction on the season may be recited on any day of the festival.
- (38) Sc. no cup of wine is required for the purpose. Suk. 47b. Is it likely, however, that R. Nahman who is in the minority would receive support from an anonymous Baraitha?
- (39) The dilemma between (a) supporting R. Nahman or (b) assuming that the benediction is that of the sanctity of the day.
- (40) The reference to all the seven days could, therefore, well be justified even if the benediction meant was that for the season.
- (41) Which deprives R. Nahman's view of the support of the Baraitha.
- (42) If R. Nahman's view is not to be adopted.
- (43) When both eating and drinking is forbidden.
- (44) How then could he drink the wine.
- (45) Who, on a cloudy day, believing the sun to have set, read the Sabbath evening prayer before Friday's actual sunset.
- (46) Ber. 27b. From which it follows that the reading of the Sabbath evening prayers imposes upon one the obligations and the restrictions of the day, and similarly the recital of the benediction on the season, (cf. supra n. 11).
- (47) After the recital of the benediction
- (48) As the reason why the wine must be tasted is that the benediction should not appear to have been recited in vain, it could not in fact matter with tastes it.
- (49) So MS.M. and Bah. Cur. edd., omit the last two words. R. Aha b. Jacob permitted a child to drink in the circumstance mentioned (cf. R. Han. a.l. and Tosaf. s.v. לֵיט a.l.).
- (50) Lit., 'to be dragged'; and he would out of habit drink the wine even when he grows up
- (51) Is the benediction on the season the said on the New Year Festival and the Day of Atonement?
- (52) Var. lec. 'Yebe' (v. Rashi s.v. כַּד and She'iltoth, Berakah).
- (53) Which is useless for burning.
- (54) Proverb. No one acts without a motive. The man who picks up a useless log must be in need of the spot on which it rests. R. Yemar, he surmised, must have come or a purpose. Jast. (following a different reading): 'Carry the green date, I have a press on the spot, i.e., you come to find out my opinion, you will soon have an opportunity to learn it'.
- (55) V. Glos.
- (56) As he must when a fast falls on all ordinary day.
- (57) Lit., 'it was not in his hand.'
- (58) MS.M. Cur. edd. 'Raba'.
- (59) One of the statutory fast days.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 41a

and, similarly, if the eve of the Ninth of Ab¹ fell on a Sabbath a man may eat and drink as much as he requires and lay on his table a meal as big as that of Solomon in his time. If the Ninth of Ab fell on the Sabbath eve [food] of the size of an egg must be brought and eaten [before the conclusion of the day] so that one does not approach the Sabbath in a state of affliction'.²

It was taught:³ R. Judah stated: We were once sitting in the presence of R. Akiba, and the day was a Ninth of Ab that occurred on a Sabbath eve, when a lightly roasted egg was brought to him and he sipped it without any salt. And [this he did] not because he had any appetite for it but in order to show the students what the halachah was.⁴ R. Jose, however, ruled: The fast must be fully concluded.⁵ 'Do you not agree with the', said R. Jose to them, 'that when the Ninth of Ab falls on a Sunday one must break off⁶ while it is yet day?'⁷ — 'Indeed [it is so]', they replied. 'What', he said to them, 'is the difference between⁸ beginning the Sabbath⁹ when one is in a state of affliction¹⁰ and between letting it out¹¹ when one is in such a state?'¹² 'If you allowed a person',¹³ they replied: 'to let it out¹¹ [when in such a state] because he has eaten and drunk throughout the day, would you also allow a person¹⁴ to begin it⁹ when in a state of affliction, though he has not eaten or drunk all day?' And in connection with this Ulla ruled: The halachah agrees with R. Jose.¹⁵

But do we act in agreement with the view of R. Jose seeing that such action would be contradictory to the following rulings: No fast day may be imposed upon the public on New Moons, Hanukkah¹⁶ or Purim,¹⁶ but if they began [the period of fasting prior to these days] there is no need to interrupt it;¹⁷ so R. Gamaliel. Said R. Meir: Although R. Gamaliel laid down that 'there is no need to interrupt it', he agrees nevertheless that [the fasts on these days] must not be concluded,¹⁸ and the same ruling applies to the Ninth of Ab that falls on a Sabbath eve.¹⁹ And it was further taught: After the death of R. Gamaliel,²⁰ R. Joshua entered [the academy] to abrogate his ruling,²¹ when R. Johanan b. Nuri stood up²² and exclaimed: 'I submit²³ that "the body must follow the head";²⁴ throughout the lifetime²⁵ of R. Gamaliel we laid down the halachah in agreement with his view and now you wish to abrogate it? Joshua, we shall not listen to you, since the halachah has once been fixed in agreement with R. Gamaliel!' And there was not a single person who raised any objection whatever to this statement.²⁶ — In the time²⁷ of R. Gamaliel the people acted in agreement with the views of R. Gamaliel but in the time²⁷ of R. Jose²⁸ they acted in agreement with the views of R. Jose. But [could it be maintained] that 'in the time of R. Gamaliel the people acted in agreement with the view of R. Gamaliel'? Was it not in fact taught: R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok²⁹ stated: 'I am one of the descendants of Seneab of the tribe of Benjamin. Once it happened that the Ninth of Ab fell on a Sabbath and we postponed it to the following Sunday³⁰ when we fasted but did not complete the fast because that day was our festival.'³¹ The reason [then³² was] that [the day had been their] festival, but on the eve of [their] festival³³ they did complete the fast, did they not?³⁴ Rabina replied: A festival of Rabbinic origin³⁵ is different [from a Sabbath]. Since it is permitted to fast for a number of hours on the former³⁶ it is also permitted to complete a fast on its eves;³⁷ [but as regards] the Sabbath, since it is forbidden to fast on it even for a few hours, it is also forbidden to complete a fast on its eves.³⁸

'I have never heard', said R. Joseph, 'that tradition',³⁹ Said Abaye to him, 'You yourself have told it to us⁴⁰ and you said it in connection with the following: "No fast may be imposed upon the public on New Moons etc." and it was in connection with this that you told us, "Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: This is the view of R. Meir⁴¹ who laid it down in the name of R. Gamaliel; but the Sages ruled: One must complete the fast". Now does not this⁴² refer to all the days mentioned?⁴³ — No; only to Hanukkah and Purim. This may also be supported by a process of reasoning

(1) The eve of the fast, if it falls on an ordinary day, is also subject to certain restrictions. At the last meal of the day it is forbidden to eat more than one cooked dish nor is it permitted to drink wine or eat meat on that day.

(2) Ta'an 29b.

(3) Wanting in MS.M. Ban reads 'and it was taught'.

(4) That a fast on the Sabbath eve must be broken before the Sabbath begins.

(5) Cf. previous note and supra p. 281, n. 10.

(6) His meal on the eve of the Fast.

- (7) Though it is the Sabbath day he must cease eating before the day comes to an end.
- (8) Lit., 'what to me'.
- (9) Lit., 'to enter it'.
- (10) I.e., to be fasting all the Sabbath eve until the Sabbath actually commenced.
- (11) Lit., 'to go out from it'.
- (12) I.e., to begin on the Sabbath the fast that fell on a Sunday. If the latter is permitted, why not also the former?
- (13) Lit., 'you said'.
- (14) Lit., 'will you say'.
- (15) A contrary ruling to the one given previously on the enquiry made at R. Huna's.
- (16) V. Glos.
- (17) It may be continued even on the days mentioned.
- (18) But must be broken on every one of these days before they respectively draw to a close.
- (19) Ta'an 15b. Cf. previous note.
- (20) Reading of marg. note. Cur. edd. in parenthesis, 'R. Simeon b. Gamaliel'.
- (21) Sc. to lay down that the fast may be concluded even on a Sabbath eve in agreement with R. Jose.
- (22) Lit., 'stood on his feet'.
- (23) Lit., 'see (good reason for the statement)'.
- (24) Proverb. Cf. 'follow the leader'.
- (25) Lit., 'all his days'.
- (26) A fast on the Sabbath eve accordingly must not be concluded. How then could this be reconciled with the practice in agreement with the view of R. Jose?
- (27) Lit., 'in his generation'.
- (28) Who flourished after R. Gamaliel.
- (29) This is the reading according to marg. glos. Cur. edd. insert 'son of' in parenthesis and omit the 'R.' before Zadok. MS.M. Eliezer', omitting his father's name.
- (30) Lit., 'to after the Sabbath'.
- (31) Ta'an. 12a. The tenth of Ab was allotted to them as the day on which they were entitled to bring the offering of wood for the Temple altar. The families that were entitled to such a privilege kept the respective days allotted to them as a family festival. (V. Rashi a.l. and cf. Ta'an. 26a, 28a).
- (32) Why they did not complete the postponed fast.
- (33) Sc. the usual date of the Ninth of Ab which is the proper fast day and which always occurred on the eve of their festival.
- (34) Which proves, since R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok was a contemporary of R. Gamaliel (cf. Bezah 22a), that on the eve of a festival a fast was completed even in the days of R. Gamaliel,
- (35) Lit., 'their words'.
- (36) As was stated supra, 'When we fasted etc.'
- (37) The completion of the fast does not involve even a full hour. If one may fast on a Rabbinic festival one should certainly be allowed on it a fast lasting only a portion of an hour.
- (38) Where the fast is to be completed its termination would encroach upon the Sabbath and one would incur the guilt of fasting on a Sabbath, however short the duration of that fasting might be.
- (39) Ulla's (supra) that the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose.
- (40) R. Joseph lost his memory as a result of a serious illness and his students often reminded him of traditions and rulings he had imparted to them in his earlier days.
- (41) Who stated supra that the fast is not to be completed, and the same applies to the fast of the Ninth of Ab that fell on a Sabbath eve.
- (42) The ruling of the Sages.
- (43) Lit., 'on all of them', i.e., that even on a Sabbath eve the fast must be completed. Now since Rab described R. Jose by the plural noun of 'Sages' it is obvious that he intended the halachah to be in agreement with his view.

for if it could have been presumed that the reference is to all the days mentioned [the objection would arise:] Did not Rabbah ask [a question¹ on the subject] from Rab Judah and the latter did not answer him?² — But according to your view³ [would not the following objection arise:] In view of⁴ Mar Zutra's exposition in the name of R. Huna⁵ that the halachah is that one fasting [on a Sabbath eve] must complete the fast, why, when⁴ Rabbah asked [a question on the subject]¹ from R. Huna did not the latter⁶ answer him? But [you would no doubt reply:] That question was asked⁴ before [R. Huna] heard the ruling⁷ while his statement⁸ was made⁴ after he had heard it;⁷ so also here [one might explain] that the question was asked⁴ before [Rab Judah] heard it⁷ while his statement⁹ was made after he heard it',⁷ Mar Zutra made the following exposition in the name of R. Huna: The halachah is [that those] fasting [on a Sabbath eve] must complete the fast.

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. HE WHOM GENTILES¹⁰ OR AN EVIL SPIRIT,¹¹ HAVE TAKEN OUT [BEYOND THE PERMITTED SABBATH LIMIT] HAS NO MORE THAN FOUR CUBITS [IN WHICH TO MOVE].¹² IF HE WAS BROUGHT BACK¹³ [HE IS REGARDED] AS IF HE HAD NEVER GONE OUT.¹⁴ IF HE WAS TAKEN TO ANOTHER TOWN,¹⁵ OR IF HE WAS PUT IN A CATTLE-PEN OR IN A CATTLE-FOLD,¹⁶ HE MAY, RULED R. GAMALIEL AND R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH, MOVE THROUGH THE WHOLE OF ITS AREA;¹⁷ BUT R. JOSHUA AND R. AKIBA RULED: HE HAS ONLY FOUR CUBITS [IN WHICH TO MOVE].

IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT THEY¹⁸ WERE COMING FROM BRINDISI¹⁹ AND WHILE THEIR SHIP WAS SAILING²⁰ ON THE SEA,²¹ R. GAMALIEL AND R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH WALKED ABOUT THROUGHOUT ITS AREA,²² BUT R. JOSHUA AND R. AKIBA DID NOT MOVE BEYOND FOUR CUBITS BECAUSE THEY DESIRED TO IMPOSE A RESTRICTION UPON THEMSELVES.²³

ONCE [ON A SABBATH EVE] THEY DID NOT ENTER THE HARBOUR UNTIL DUSK.²⁴ 'MAY WE DISEMBARK?'²⁵ THEY ASKED R. GAMALIEL. YOU MAY', HE TOLD THEM, 'FOR I²⁶ HAVE CAREFULLY OBSERVED [THE DISTANCE FROM THE SHORE AND HAVE ASCERTAINED] THAT BEFORE DUSK WE WERE ALREADY WITHIN THE SABBATH LIMIT'.²⁷

GEMARA. Our Rabbis learned: Three things deprive²⁸ a man of his senses and of a knowledge of his creator,²⁹ viz.,³⁰ idolaters, an evil spirit and oppressive poverty. In what respect could this³¹ matter? — In respect of invoking heavenly mercy to be delivered from them.³² Three kinds of person do not see the face of Gehenna, viz.,³⁰ [one who suffers from] oppressive poverty, one who is afflicted with bowel diseases, and [one who is in the hands of] the [Roman] government;³³ and some say: Also he who has a bad wife. And the other?³⁴ — It is a duty to divorce a bad wife.³⁵ And the other?³⁶ — It may sometimes happen that her kethubah³⁷ amounts to a large sum,³⁸ or else, that he has children from her and is, therefore, unable to divorce her. In what practical respect does this³⁹ matter? — In respect of receiving [these afflictions] lovingly.⁴⁰ Three [classes of person] die even while they are conversing,⁴¹ viz.,³⁰ one who suffers from bowel diseases, a woman in confinement, and one afflicted with dropsy. In what respect can this information matter? — In that of making arrangements for their shrouds to be ready.

R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: If a man went out deliberately [beyond his Sabbath limit] he has only four cubits [in which to move]. Is not this obvious? If one whom gentiles have taken out⁴² has only four cubits [in which to move], is there any necessity [to mention that one who] went out deliberately [is subject to the same restriction]? — Rather read: If he⁴³ returned deliberately⁴⁴ he has only four cubits [in which to move]. Have we not, however, learnt this also: 'IF HE WAS BROUGHT BACK by gentiles ['HE IS REGARDED] AS IF HE HAD NEVER GONE OUT'; [from which it follows] that only if he was brought back he [is regarded] as if he had never gone out, but that if gentiles took him out and he returned of his own accord he has only four cubits? — Rather, read: If he went out of his own free will and was brought back by gentiles he has only four cubits [in which to move]. But have we not learnt this also: WHOM . . . HAVE TAKEN OUT and HE WAS BROUGHT BACK [HE IS REGARDED] AS IF HE HAD NEVER GONE OUT, [from which it is evident] that only he whom gentiles have taken out and also brought back [is regarded] as if he had never gone out, but that a man who went out of his own free will is not [so regarded]?⁴⁵ — It might have been assumed that our Mishnah deals with two disconnected instances: [i] HE WHOM THE GENTILES . . . HAVE TAKEN OUT and he has returned on his own HAS NO MORE THAN FOUR CUBITS; but [ii] if he went out on his own and WAS BROUGHT BACK by gentiles [HE IS REGARDED] AS IF HE HAD NEVER GONE OUT. Hence we were informed⁴⁶ [that the second clause is the conclusion of the first]. An enquiry was addressed to Rabbah: What is the ruling where a man⁴⁷ had to attend to his needs? — Human dignity,⁴⁸ he replied, is so important that it supersedes a negative precept of the Torah.⁴⁹ The Nehardeans remarked: If he⁵⁰ is intelligent he enters into his original Sabbath limit and, once he has entered it, he may remain there.⁵¹

R. Papa said: Fruits that were carried⁵² beyond the Sabbath limit⁵³ and were returned [on the same day], even if this was done intentionally, do not lose their original place.⁵⁴ What is the reason? — They were carried under compulsion.⁵⁵

R. Joseph b. Shemaiah raised an objection against R. Papa: R. Nehemiah and R. Eliezer b. Jacob ruled, [The fruits]⁵⁶ are always forbidden⁵⁷ unless they are unintentionally returned to their original place; [from which it follows, does it not, that only if they are returned] unintentionally is this law applicable,⁵⁸ but not [if they are returned] deliberately?⁵⁹ — On this question Tannas differ. For it was taught: Fruits that were carried⁵² beyond the Sabbath limit unwittingly may be eaten,⁶⁰ [if they were carried] wittingly they may not be eaten;

Ber. 19b.
- (50) The man who in the circumstances mentioned was allowed to move beyond the four cubits.
- (51) Lit., 'he entered', and may again move through the town and to distances of two thousand cubits away from it in all directions.
- (52) Lit., 'that went out', on a holy day.
- (53) Of their original place.
- (54) And may consequently be carried throughout the town and beyond it (cf. supra n. 5) and, on the Sabbath, may be eaten on the spot where they were deposited.
- (55) Inanimate objects are always in the position of a man acting under compulsion.
- (56) That were carried away beyond their Sabbath limit.
- (57) To be moved outside four cubits or to be eaten even if they were returned to their original place.
- (58) Lit., 'yes', that they are permitted.
- (59) How then could R. Papa maintain that fruits in such circumstances do not lose their original place even if they were carried back deliberately?
- (60) On the spot where they were deposited by any person within whose Sabbath limit that spot may be.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 42a

while R. Nehemiah ruled: If they are in their original place¹ they may be eaten but if they are not in their original place² they may not be eaten. Now what [are the circumstances under which they came to be] in their original place?³ If it be suggested that they were in their original place through some intentional act, surely [it could be retorted] was it not specifically taught: ‘R. Nehemiah and R. Eliezer b. Jacob ruled, [the fruits] are always forbidden unless they are unintentionally returned to their original place’,⁴ from which it follows, does it not, that only if they are returned] unintentionally is this law applicable but not [if they are returned] intentionally?⁵ Must we not then admit that they [came to be] in their original place through some unintentional act, and that some words are missing, the correct reading being as follows: Fruits that were carried outside the Sabbath limit unwittingly may be eaten, but if they were carried wittingly they may not be eaten. This applies only where they are not in their original place but if they were in their original place they may be eaten even if they were carried intentionally. And in connection with this R. Nehemiah came to lay down that even when they are in their original place the law applies only where they were carried unwittingly but not when it was done wittingly?⁶ — No; if they are in their original place through an intentional act no one⁷ disputes the ruling that they are forbidden, but the difference of opinion here⁸ is [one regarding fruits] that are not in their original place through an unintentional act. The first Tanna is of the opinion that if they are not in their original place through an unintentional act they are permitted while R. Nehemiah maintains that even [if they were carried] unintentionally they are permitted only⁹ in their original place but not where they are not in their original place.¹⁰ Since, however, it was stated in the final clause, ‘R. Nehemiah and R. Eliezer b. Jacob ruled, [The fruits] are always¹¹ forbidden unless they are unintentionally returned to their original place’ [from which it follows that only if they’ are returned [unintentionally is this law applicable¹² but not [if they are returned] intentionally, it may be concluded that the first Tanna is of the opinion that [the fruits] are permitted even [if they are returned] intentionally.¹³ This is conclusive.

R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: If a man was walking and did not know where the Sabbath limit ended he may walk a distance of two thousand moderate paces;¹⁴ and this constitutes for him the Sabbath limit.

R. Nahman further stated in the name of Samuel: If a man took up his Sabbath abode in a valley¹⁵ around which gentiles put up a fence¹⁶ on the Sabbath, he may only walk a two thousand cubits distance in all directions¹⁷ but may move objects throughout all the valley¹⁸ by throwing them,¹⁹ but R. Huna ruled: He may walk the two thousand cubits but may move objects within four cubits only.²⁰ But why²¹ should he not²² be allowed to move objects throughout all its area by throwing them? — He²³ might be drawn after his object.²⁴ Then why should he not be allowed to move²⁵ objects in the usual way within the two thousand cubits?²⁶ Because the [area in which he is permitted to walk]²⁷ is like a partition along the full width of which a breach was made towards a place²⁸ into which it is forbidden²⁹ to carry anything from it.³⁰

Hiyya b. Rab ruled: He may walk the two thousand cubits and may also move objects³¹ within these two thousand cubits.³² In agreement with whose view?³³ Is it neither in agreement with that of Rab nor with that of R. Huna?³⁴ — Read: He may move objects within four cubits. If so, is not his ruling identical with that of R. Huna?³⁵ — Read: And so ruled Hiyya b. Rab. Said R. Nahman to R. Huna: Do not dispute the view of Samuel³⁶ since in a Baraita it was taught in agreement with his view. For it was taught:

(1) Sc. if they were brought back.

(2) I.e., if they remained outside their original Sabbath limit.

(3) Of which R. Nehemiah spoke.

(4) Supra 41b ad fin.

(5) Loc. cit. q.v. notes.

(6) It may thus be shown that R. Papa's ruling forms a question in dispute between R. Nehemiah and the first Tanna and that the latter who ruled that ‘if they were in their original place they may be eaten even if they were carried intentionally’ upholds the same view as R. Papa.

- (7) Not even the first Tanna.
- (8) Between the first Tanna and R. Nehemiah.
- (9) Lit., 'yes', that they are permitted.
- (10) If, however, this interpretation is adopted the objection would arise: How could R. Papa whose view cannot be traced to any Tanna differ from the rulings of both the Tannas mentioned?
- (11) Emphasis on 'always'.
- (12) Lit., 'yes', that they are permitted.
- (13) To their original place. Had he agreed with R. Nehemiah that intentional carriage renders the fruits forbidden even where they are thereby returned to their original place, and had he differed from him and R. Eliezer b. Jacob on one point only (that of unintentional carriage where the fruits are not in their original place), there would have been no point in the expression of 'always' in the latter's statement of disagreement. Hence the conclusion that the first Tanna differed from the others on two points, (a) on unintentional carriage even when the fruits are not in their original place and (b) intentional carriage where they are in their original place, his view being that the fruits are permitted even where there is only one point in favour of their permissibility, viz., either (a) unintentional carriage or (b) return to their original place. R. Nehemiah and his colleague who maintain that permissibility is invariably dependent on both (a) and (b) were, therefore, justified, when expressing their disagreement, in emphasizing that the fruits are forbidden always sc. in the absence of either (a) or (b). The objection against R. Papa whose view it has now been shown coincides with that of the first Tanna, is consequently removed.
- (14) A moderate pace is equal to one cubit.
- (15) A man is allowed a distance of two thousand cubits in all directions from any spot he had occupied when the Sabbath had set in.
- (16) For dwelling purposes. If it was not put up for any such purpose there are additional restrictions.
- (17) Cf. supra p. 291 n. 6. He may not, however, walk as far as the fence if the distance is more than two thousand cubits. An enclosure is regarded as an area of four cubits (throughout which one may move freely) only (a) where the man was within it at the time the Sabbath began or (b) where he was forcibly put into it at any time, but not where a fence was put up during the Sabbath after he had willingly taken up his Sabbath abode in the place.
- (18) Even beyond two thousand cubits where he is not allowed to go.
- (19) From any point to which he may walk. Within the two thousand cubits limit he may move objects in the ordinary way since the fence is valid irrespective of the time during which it was put up (cf. supra 20a).
- (20) As if there were no fence around it. Beyond the four cubits he must neither carry nor throw. The distinction between throwing and carrying applies only when one is permitted to carry but not to walk. As the carrying is permitted and the walking is forbidden, throwing was allowed. When, however, carrying is forbidden throwing also is equally forbidden.
- (21) According to R. Huna.
- (22) Since a fence that was put up on the Sabbath (cf. supra 20a) is valid.
- (23) If throwing were to be allowed.
- (24) Beyond the permitted two thousand cubits limit. Hence the prohibition of throwing.
- (25) And much more to throw.
- (26) Within which he is permitted to walk.
- (27) Sc. the distance of two thousand cubits in all directions, which is not separated from the rest of the valley by any partition whatsoever.
- (28) In this case the remainder of the valley beyond the two thousand cubits.
- (29) For the reason given supra that 'he might be drawn after his object'.
- (30) In the case of such a wide breach the movement of objects is forbidden even in the area where, in the absence of that breach, the movement of objects would have been permitted.
- (31) Even in the usual way.
- (32) But beyond these he may not even throw them.
- (33) Is that of Hiyya b. Rab.
- (34) But if so, on what ground could his ruling be justified? If he adopts R. Huna's reason and forbids throwing of objects on the ground that 'he might be drawn after his object', he should also follow R. Huna's reasoning in forbidding the movement of objects within two thousand cubits because they open out to a forbidden place; and if, like R. Nahman, he does not provide against the possibility that 'he might be drawn after his object', throwing beyond the two thousand cubits also should be permitted.

(35) Why then was it put down in a form which suggests something new?

(36) That there is no need to provide against the possibility that 'he might be drawn after his object', just reported in his name by R. Nahman.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 42b

If a man was measuring [the distance from his 'erub] and advancing [towards another town], and his measuring [of the permitted two thousand cubits] terminated in the middle of the town, he is allowed to move objects throughout the town¹ provided only that he does not pass his Sabbath limit.² Now, in what manner could he move the objects?³ Obviously⁴ by throwing.⁵ And⁶ R. Huna?⁷ — He can answer you: No; by pulling.⁸

R. Huna ruled: If a man was measuring [the distance from his 'erub] and his measuring [of the permitted two thousand cubits] terminated in the middle of a courtyard he has only a half of the courtyard [in which to move]. Is not this obvious?⁹ — Read: He has a half of the courtyard [in which to move].¹⁰ Is not this also obvious?¹¹ — It might have been presumed that¹² there was cause to fear that one might carry objects about all the courtyard,¹³ hence we were informed [that no such possibility need be considered].

R. Nahman stated: Huna¹⁴ agrees with me that if a man was measuring [the distance from his 'erub] and was thus advancing [towards another town], and his measurement [of the two thousand cubits] terminated at [a line corresponding to] the edge of a roof¹⁵ he is allowed to move objects¹⁶ in any part of the house. What is the reason? Because [the projection of] the roof of the house would strike him.¹⁷

R. Huna son of R. Nathan said: [The divergence of opinion here¹⁸ is] like that between the following Tannas: IF HE WAS TAKEN TO ANOTHER TOWN, OR IF HE WAS PUT IN A CATTLEPEN OR IN A CATTLE-FOLD, HE MAY, RULED R. GAMALIEL AND R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH, MOVE THROUGH THE WHOLE OF ITS AREA; BUT R. JOSHUA AND R. AKIBA RULED: HE HAS ONLY FOUR CUBITS. Now did not R. Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah rule that the man may MOVE THROUGH THE WHOLE OF ITS AREA, because they do not forbid walking in a cattle-pen Or in a cattle-fold¹⁹ as a preventive measure against the possibility of walking in a valley,²⁰ and since evidently they have not forbidden walking [in the former] as a preventive measure against walking [in the latter] they, likewise, did not forbid the moving of objects [by throwing them beyond the Sabbath limit] as a preventive measure against the possibility of walking²¹ [beyond that limit]; while R. Joshua and R. Akiba ruled: HE HAS ONLY FOUR CUBITS because they forbid walking in a cattle-pen or in a cattle-fold as a preventive measure against walking in a valley; and since evidently they have forbidden walking [in the former] as a preventive measure against walking [in the latter] they also forbid the moving of objects [by throwing them beyond the Sabbath limit] as a preventive measure against the possibility of walking [beyond that limit]²² — Whence [could this²³ be proved]? It is in fact possible that R. Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah did not forbid walking in a cattle-pen or in a cattle-fold as a preventive measure against the possibility of walking in a valley for the sole reason that²⁴ two different places are there involved,²⁵ but [as regards forbidding the] movement of objects [as a preventive measure] against the possibility of walking which involves one and the same place they may well have enacted a prohibition as a preventive measure against the possibility of being drawn after one's object. As to R. Joshua and R. Akiba also, whence [could it be proved that they restricted the walking²⁶ to four cubits] because they have enacted a preventive measure?²⁷ — It is in fact possible that [the reason for their restriction is] that they hold the view that all the house is regarded as four cubits only while a man occupied a place within its walls while it was yet day²⁸ but not where he did not occupy the place while it was yet day.²⁹

Rab laid down: The law is in agreement with R. Gamaliel in respect of a cattle-pen, a cattle-fold and a ship; and Samuel laid down: The law is in agreement with R. Gamaliel in respect of a ship but not in respect of a cattle-pen or a cattle-fold. Both³⁰ at any rate agree that the law is in agreement with R. Gamaliel in respect of a ship; what is the reason? — Rabbah replied: Because the man has occupied a place within its walls while it was yet day.³¹ R. Zera replied: Because the ship³² continually takes him from the beginning of four cubits and puts him down at the end of the four cubits.³³ What is the practical difference between them?³⁴ — The practical difference between them is the case where the sides of the ship were broken down,³⁵ or where one leaps from one ship into another.³⁶ But why does not R. Zera give the same reason as Rabbah? — He can answer you: The sides³⁷

- (1) On a Sabbath if the town was provided with an 'erub (v. Glos.); or on a festival, when carrying is permitted.
 - (2) Sc. the distance of two thousand cubits from his 'erub. Only for a man who has been in a town at the time the Sabbath commenced is its entire area regarded as four cubits.
 - (3) In that part of the town whither he is not allowed to go.
 - (4) Lit., 'not?'
 - (5) Which confirms Samuel's view (cf. supra n. 3).
 - (6) MS.M. Rashi and Bah. Cur. edd., 'Said R. Huna'.
 - (7) How could he differ from a Baraitha?
 - (8) From without the Sabbath limit into it. In such a case the possibility of being drawn after the object does not arise.
 - (9) A man, surely, may not walk beyond the two thousand cubits limit.
 - (10) The point of the ruling is not that the half of the courtyard outside the two thousand cubits may not, but that any point which lies within them may be used.
 - (11) Since that part lies within the permitted limit.
 - (12) Were half the yard within the Sabbath limit permitted.
 - (13) And that in order to provide against this infringement of the law the use of all the yard should be forbidden.
 - (14) Though he provides against the possibility that 'he might be drawn after his object'.
 - (15) Of a house, that stood just outside the two thousand cubits, whose wall on that side was broken down, and that thus opened out into a courtyard in which the carrying of objects was permitted.
 - (16) By means of throwing.
 - (17) Lit., '(is deemed to) press down', cf. supra 9a. One could not mistake the area of the house beyond the edge of the roof to be permitted and thus to be drawn after one's object as might be the case where no such distinguishing mark existed.
 - (18) On the question of whether provision was made against the possibility that a man might be drawn after his object.
 - (19) That are enclosed by fences and into which gentiles had carried the man against his wish.
 - (20) Which had no fence around it and in which, as stated in the first clause of our Mishnah, one HAS NO MORE THAN FOUR CUBITS.
 - (21) By being drawn after the objects.
 - (22) As the answer is apparently in the affirmative it follows that the Tannas in our Mishnah differ on the same question as the Amoras here (cf. supra p. 294, n. 8).
 - (23) Cf. previous note.
 - (24) Lit., 'these words'.
 - (25) And a person is not likely to mistake the one for the other.
 - (26) In a cattle-pen or in a cattle-fold.
 - (27) Against the possibility of walking in a valley.
 - (28) Of the Sabbath eve.
 - (29) As the man was not in the cattle-pen or cattle-fold before the Sabbath commenced he cannot be allowed to walk beyond four cubits. Throwing, however, may well be permitted throughout the pen or the fold, since the possibility of the man's being drawn after his object is disregarded.
 - (30) Lit., 'that all the world', sc. Rab and Samuel.
 - (31) Of the Sabbath eve. In consequence of which, as stated supra, all the ship is regarded as four cubits.
 - (32) Which was in constant motion since the man was taken beyond his Sabbath limit.

(33) So that he did not rest for one moment in any particular spot. Not having acquired any four cubits as his Sabbath abode, all the ship is regarded as his home. Aliter: Whenever the man lifts up his foot the ship carries him a distance of four cubits before he can put it down, and he is, therefore, in the position of a man whom gentiles have forcibly taken out from his four cubits and put in another four cubits and who is always entitled to the last four cubits in which he finds himself (cf. Rashi s.v. נוטלתו a.l.).

(34) Rabbah and R. Zera.

(35) Rabbah's reason does not apply while R. Zera's does.

(36) On the Sabbath. Since the man did not occupy a place in the latter ship while it was yet day he is not allowed, according to Rabbah, more than four cubits. According to R. Zera he may walk all through the ship.

(37) Of a ship.

are made only to keep the water out.¹ Then why does not Rabbah give the same reason as R. Zera? — He can answer you:² Where the ship moves no one³ disputes [that it is permitted to walk through it];⁴ they only differ in the case where it stopped.⁵

Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: From our Mishnah also it may be inferred that they⁶ do not differ in the case of a ship that was on the move. Whence? From the statement: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT THEY WERE COMING FROM BRINDISI AND, WHILE THEIR SHIP WAS SAILING IN THE SEA, R. GAMALIEL AND R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH WALKED ABOUT THROUGHOUT ITS AREA BUT R. JOSHUA AND R. AKIBA DID NOT MOVE BEYOND FOUR CUBITS BECAUSE THEY DESIRED TO IMPOSE A RESTRICTION UPON THEMSELVES. Now if it be granted that there is no difference of Opinion between them⁷ in the case where a ship is on the move⁸ it was perfectly correct to state, 'THEY DESIRED', since the ship might have stopped;⁹ but if it be maintained that they⁷ differ [even in such a case],¹⁰ what is the sense in saying,¹¹ 'THEY DESIRED, TO IMPOSE A RESTRICTION' [seeing that in their view walking beyond four cubits] is a prohibition?¹² R. Ashi said: The inference from our Mishnah also proves [that the dispute between the Tannas mentioned relates to a stationary ship]. For SHIP was mentioned in the same way as A CATTLE-PEN and A CATTLE-FOLD; as a cattle-pen and a cattle-fold are stationary, so is the ship mentioned, one that was stationary.

R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: The law is in agreement with R. Gamaliel in the case of a ship. 'The law' [you say]; does this then imply that the others differ from him?¹³ — Yes;¹⁴ and so it was also taught: Hanania¹⁵ stated: All that day¹⁶ they sat and discussed the question of the halachah and in the evening my father's brother¹⁷ decided that the halachah was in agreement with R. Gamaliel in the case of a ship and the halachah was [in agreement] with R. Akiba in that of a cattle-pen and a cattle-fold.

R. Hanania enquired: Is the law of Sabbath limits applicable at a height above ten handbreadths from the ground or not? There can be no question¹⁸ in respect of a column that was ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths wide,¹⁹ since it is regarded as solid ground.²⁰ The question, however, arises in respect of a column that was ten handbreadths high but less than²¹ four handbreadths in width,²² or where one moves²³ by means of a miraculous leap (another version: In a ship).²⁴ Now what is the law? — R. Hoshaiia replied: Come and hear: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT THEY WERE COMING FROM BRINDISI AND, WHILE THEIR SHIP WAS SAILING IN THE SEA etc. Now, if it be granted that the law of Sabbath limits is applicable²⁵ one can well see the reason why they 'DESIRED'²⁶ but if it is contended that the law of the Sabbath limits is inapplicable,²⁵ why [it may be asked]²⁷ did they desire?²⁶ — As Raba explained below that the reference was to a ship that sailed in shallow waters²⁸ so it may here also be explained that the reference is to a ship that sailed in shallow water.²⁹

Come and hear: ONCE [ON A SABBATH] THEY DID NOT ENTER THE HARBOUR UNTIL DUSK etc. Now, if it be granted that the law of Sabbath limits is applicable²⁵ [their action]³⁰ was perfectly correct; but if it be contended that the law of Sabbath limits is inapplicable,²⁵ what [it may be asked]²⁷ could it have mattered if [they had] not [been assured:] WE WERE ALREADY WITHIN THE SABBATH LIMIT? — Raba replied: That was a case where the ship sailed in shallow waters.³¹

Come and hear: Who was it that delivered the seven traditional rulings on a Sabbath morning to R. Hisda at Sura and on the same Sabbath evening to Rabbah at Pumbeditha?³² Was it not Elijah³³ who delivered them, which proves, does it not, that the law of Sabbath limits is inapplicable above ten handbreadths from the ground? — It is possible that the demon Joseph³⁴ delivered them.

Come and hear: [If a man said,] ‘Let me be a nazirite on the day on which the son of David³⁵ comes’, he may drink wine on Sabbaths and festival days,³⁶

(1) Lit., ‘to cause to flee’; hence they cannot be regarded as proper walls.

(2) So MS.M. wanting in cur. edd.

(3) Not even R. Akiba.

(4) For the reason given by R. Zera.

(5) And the man consequently remained for a space of time in one spot. R. Zera allows him in consequence no more than four cubits; while Rabbah, since the ship has sides, still permits him to walk throughout the ship.

(6) The Tannas mentioned.

(7) The Tannas mentioned.

(8) I.e., that in such a case even R. Joshua and R. Akiba admit that it is permitted to walk throughout the ship.

(9) Unexpectedly; and they desired to provide against such a possibility.

(10) R. Joshua and R. Akiba holding that even when a ship is moving one is forbidden to walk in it more than four cubits.

(11) Lit., ‘that’.

(12) Not merely a restriction. Consequently it may be inferred that all the Tannas in our Mishnah agree that while a ship is moving it is permitted to walk throughout all its area.

(13) But how could this be maintained in view of the statement that the others only desired to impose ‘A RESTRICTION UPON THEMSELVES but not an actual prohibition?’

(14) Sc. the dispute applies to a stationary ship, while the statement, THEY DESIRED TO IMPOSE A RESTRICTION UPON THEMSELVES, refers to a ship that was in motion.

(15) So MS.M. and Bah. Cur. edd. in parenthesis son of the brother of R. Joshua’.

(16) The Sabbath on which they were on board the ship.

(17) R. Joshua.

(18) That the law of Sabbath limits is applicable.

(19) And one section of it was within while the other was without the Sabbath limit.

(20) It is consequently forbidden to walk from the part within the Sabbath limit to the part without.

(21) Lit., ‘and not’.

(22) So that the top is not quite convenient for walking.

(23) Through the air.

(24) Sailing in a ship, which is usually raised more than ten handbreadths from the ground and in constant motion, is similar in this respect to a leap through the air.

(25) At a height above ten handbreadths from the ground.

(26) TO IMPOSE A RESTRICTION UPON THEMSELVES.

(27) Since there can be no possible infringement of the law.

(28) Aliter: Moves in diluvial water (Jast.).

(29) Within ten handbreadths from the ground.

(30) In remaining on board the ship until they had received R. Gamaliel's assurance (v. our Mishnah).

(31) Cf. supra p. 298, nn. 11f.

- (32) Places that were too far from one another for a man to walk on the Sabbath from the former to the latter even by means of 'erub.
- (33) The immortal prophet who could fly through the air and thus move above ten handbreadths from the ground.
- (34) Who would break the Sabbath laws with impunity, v. Pes. 110b.
- (35) The Messiah.
- (36) Since the Messiah would not come on such days.

but is forbidden to drink wine on any of the weekdays.¹ Now, if it is granted that the law of Sabbath limits is applicable,² it is quite intelligible why the man is permitted [to drink wine] on Sabbaths and festival days; but if it be contended that the law of Sabbath limits is inapplicable² why [it may be asked]³ is it permitted [for the man to drink wine] on Sabbaths and festival days? — There⁴ the case is different since Scripture said: Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet etc.⁵ and Elijah,⁶ surely, did not come on the previous day. If so, even in the case of weekdays, [the drinking of wine] should be permitted on any day since Elijah did not come on the previous day? But the fact is that⁷ we assume that he appeared before the high court,⁸ then why should we not here also assume that he appeared before the high court? — Israel has long ago been assured that Elijah would not come either on Sabbath eves or on festival eves owing to the people's pre-occupation.⁹

Assuming¹⁰ that as Elijah would not come¹¹ the Messiah also would not come,¹¹ why should not [the drinking of wine] be permitted on a Sabbath eve? — Elijah would not, but the Messiah might come because the moment the Messiah comes all will be anxious to serve¹² Israel.¹³ [But why¹⁴ should not the drinking of wine] be permissible on a Sunday? May it then be derived from this¹⁵ that the law of Sabbath limits is inapplicable¹⁶ for had it been applicable¹⁶ [the drinking of wine] should have been permissible on a Sunday since Elijah did not arrive on the preceding Sabbath?¹⁷ — That Tanna was really in doubt as to whether the law of Sabbath limits was or was not applicable,¹⁶ and his ruling¹⁵ is just a restriction.¹⁸ On what day, however, did the man make his vow?¹⁹ If it be suggested that he did it on a weekday [the difficulty would arise:] Since the naziriteship had once taken effect²⁰ how could the Sabbath subsequently annul it?²¹ — The fact is that the man is assumed to have made his vow on a Sabbath²² or on a festival day, and it is on that day only that he is permitted [to drink wine].²³ Subsequently however, this is forbidden to him.²⁴

ONCE [ON A SABBATH] THEY DID NOT ENTER THE HARBOUR etc. A Tanna taught: R. Gamaliel had a tube through which he could see at a distance of two thousand cubits across the land and a corresponding distance across the sea. If a man desires to ascertain the depth of a ravine let him use²⁵ a tube and by looking through it be in a position to ascertain the depth of the ravine,²⁶ and if he wishes to ascertain the height of a palm-tree let him measure his own height and the length of his shadow as well as that of the shadow of the tree,²⁷ and he will thus ascertain the height of the palm-tree.²⁸ If a man desires to prevent wild beasts from sheltering in the shadow of a grave [mound]²⁹ let him insert a rod³⁰ [in the ground] during the fourth hour of the day³¹ and observe in which direction its shadow inclines and then make [the mound] slope [from the ground] upwards³² and [from its top] downwards.³³

Nehemiah son of R. Hanilai was [once on a Sabbath day] absorbed in³⁴ an oral study and walked out beyond the Sabbath limit.³⁵ 'Your disciple Nehemiah', said R. Hisda to R. Nahman, 'is in distress'. 'Draw up for him', the other replied: 'a wall of human beings and let him re-enter'.³⁶ R. Nahman b. Isaac was sitting behind Raba while the latter sat before R. Nahman when R. Nahman b. Isaac said to Raba: What exactly was the point that R. Hisda raised?³⁷ If it be suggested that we are dealing [here with a case where the distance could be] fully lined with men³⁸ and that the point he raised was whether the halachah was in agreement with R. Gamaliel³⁹

- (21) Lit., 'come . . . and bring it out'. The same possibility, surely, still remains.
- (22) Lit., 'that he stands on a Sabbath and vows'.
- (23) Since the Messiah would not come on a Sabbath or festival day.
- (24) Owing to the possibility that the Messiah might appear before the high court in Jerusalem on the preceding Friday.
- (25) Lit., 'brings'.
- (26) Having ascertained beforehand the distance his tube commands he takes up a position from which he can just see the bottom of the ravine, and by subtracting the distance between the brink of the ravine and his position from the distance the tube commands he obtains the dept of the ravine (Rashi).
- (27) Lit., 'its height'.
- (28) The ratio of the height of the tree to the length of its shadow is in proportion to the ratio of the man's height to the length of his shadow.
- (29) For fear lest the beast, by smelling the corpse, would disturb it (Rashi).
- (30) [This is probably the gnomon used by ancients to make astronomical measurements, v. Feldman W. M., op. cit., pp. 83 and 87].
- (31) When it is hot in the sun and cool in the shade and beasts seek shelter from the former in the latter.
- (32) Towards the sun, so that the top of the mound could cast no shadow on that side at that time of day (cf. previous note).
- (33) In the opposite direction from which the sun shines, where again the mound could cast no shadow, since the entire slope on that side is exposed to the rays of the sun. Though the mound, at a later hour of the day, when the sun will be shining in the opposite direction, would be casting a shadow on the other side no wild beast is likely to seek shelter there at that late hour, because (a) the ground then is almost as hot in the shade as in the sun and (b) the beast who began to look for a shelter at the early fourth hour of the day would by that time have found one, so that in either case it would not return to the grave.
- (34) Lit., 'drew him'.
- (35) And was in consequence unable to return to town before the exit of the Sabbath.
- (36) Within the Sabbath limit. He would thus be in a position to return to town and to move about as freely as its other inhabitants.
- (37) When he addressed R. Nahman on Nehemiah's embarrassment.
- (38) Sc. a sufficient number of people had prepared their 'erubs that enabled them to walk to the spot where Nehemiah was stranded and to form two human walls, stretching from there to the Sabbath limit, between which Nehemiah could pass.

(39) That a man may (cf. our Mishnah on a CATTLE-PEN etc.) walk any distance within an enclosed area though he was not within its walls at the time the Sabbath began.

or whether the halachah was not in agreement with R. Gamaliel or do we deal [here with a case where the distance could] not be fully lined with men,¹ and the point he raised was whether the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer² or not? — It is obvious that we are dealing with [a case where the distance could] not be fully lined with men, for were it to be imagined that we are dealing with one where it could be fully lined with men what was there for him³ to ask seeing that Rab has actually laid down, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Gamaliel in respect of a cattle-pen, a cattle-fold and a ship'? We must consequently be dealing with [a case where the distance could] not be fully lined with men and the point he³ raised was in connection with the ruling of R. Eliezer. This⁴ is also borne out by an inference. For he⁵ said to him,⁶ 'Let him re-enter'; but what [was the need for saying] 'Let him re-enter'?⁷ Does not this imply re-entry in the absence of a complete wall?⁸ R. Nahman b. Isaac pointed Out the following objection to Raba: If its wall⁹ collapsed it is not permitted to replace it by a human being, a beast or vessels, nor may one put up¹⁰ the bed¹¹ to spread over it a sheet because even a temporary tent may not for the first time be built on a festival day, and there is no need to state [that this is forbidden] on a Sabbath day.¹² 'You,' the other replied: 'quote to me from this statement; I can quote to you from the following: A man may put up his fellow as a wall¹³ in order that he may thereby be enabled to eat, to drink and to sleep,¹⁴ and he may put up the bed and spread over it a sheet to prevent the sun rays from falling upon a corpse or upon foodstuffs'.¹⁵ Are then the two rulings¹⁶ mutually contradictory? There is really no contradiction, since one represents the view of R. Eliezer and the other that of the Rabbis. For we learned: in the case of the stopper of a sky-light, R. Eliezer says that if it was tied and suspended one may close the sky-light with it; otherwise it may not be so used;¹⁷ but the Sages ruled: In either case¹⁸ one may close the sky-light with it.¹⁹ Has it not, however, been stated in connection with this ruling: Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: All²⁰ agree that not even a temporary tent²¹ may for the first time be made on a festival day, and there is no need to say that this may not be done on a Sabbath day; but they differ on the question of adding to a structure,²² since R. Eliezer holds that no such structural addition may be made on a festival day, and there is no need to say that this may not be done on a Sabbath day, while the Sages maintain that such structural additions' may be made on a Sabbath, and there is no need to say that this may be done on a festival day?²³ — The fact is that there is really no contradiction, since one Baraita represents the view of R. Meir and the other that of R. Judah. For it was taught: If a man used a beast as a wall for a sukkah, R. Meir ruled it to be invalid²⁴ while R. Judah ruled it to be valid.²⁵ Now, R. Meir who ruled the wall there to be invalid, from which it is evident that he does not regard it²⁶ as a proper wall, would here permit the putting up of a similar wall,²⁷ since²⁸ thereby nothing improper is done, while R. Judah who regards the wall there as valid, from which it is evident that he regards it as a proper wall, would here forbid a similar wall.²⁹

Do you regard this as sound reasoning? Might it not be suggested that R. Meir was heard [to rule the wall to be invalid only in the case of] a beast,²⁴ was he, however, heard [to give the same ruling in respect of] a human being³⁰ and vessels?³¹ Furthermore,³² in agreement with whose view could that of R. Meir³³ be? If it be suggested: In agreement with that of R. Eliezer one could object that the latter forbade even the addition to a Structure.³⁴ Consequently it must be in agreement with that of the Rabbis; but could it not be objected: The Rabbis may only have permitted the addition to a structure,³⁵ did this, however, make it permissible to put up a full wall at the outset? — The fact is that both³⁶ are in agreement with the view of the Rabbis; yet there is no contradiction between the rulings regarding vessels,³⁷ since the former relates to a third wall³⁸ and the latter to a fourth one.³⁹

The inference from the wording⁴⁰ leads to the same conclusion;⁴¹ for it was stated: 'If its wall collapsed'.⁴² This is conclusive.

- (1) I.e., the human walls did not reach the Sabbath limit, and a gap of two cubits intervened between them and the limit.
- (2) Who (cf. Mishnah infra 52b) permits the return of a person who walked two cubits beyond the Sabbath limit.
- (3) R. Hisda.
- (4) That the distance was not fully covered by the human walls and that a gap of two cubits remained.
- (5) R. Nahman.
- (6) R. Hisda.
- (7) After he had already told him to arrange for human walls, was it not obvious that Nehemiah could re-enter by passing through them?
- (8) Lit., 'without a wall'. Cf. supra n. 8. Had the walls reached as far as the Sabbath limit there would have been no need to add the last clause (cf. supra p. 302, n. 11). Its addition, therefore, must imply re-entry despite the gap of the two cubits, in agreement with R. Eliezer.
- (9) One of the walls of a sukkah (v. Glos.).
- (10) In place of the fallen wall.
- (11) Which was already in the sukkah and the mere shifting of which from one place to another would not appear as the direct construction of a wall.
- (12) How then was it permitted supra to draw up walls of human beings on a Sabbath day.
- (13) For a sukkah.
- (14) These are the principal purposes for which a sukkah serves.
- (15) Which proves that a human being may constitute a wall.
- (16) Quoted by R. Nahman b. Isaac and Raba respectively.
- (17) Because the closing up of the skylight, though only of a temporary character, has the appearance of a structural alteration which is forbidden on the Sabbath. This view is in agreement with that cited by R. Nahman b. Isaac.
- (18) Whether it was tied and suspended or not.
- (19) Shab. 125b, 137b, Suk. 27b; in agreement with the view cited by Raba.
- (20) Even the Sages.
- (21) Or 'roof'.
- (22) As is the case when the stopper is inserted in the sky-light and the gap in the roof is closed up.
- (23) Shab. 125b. As the Baraitha quoted by Raba permits the putting up of a complete wall, and not merely an addition to an existing one, it cannot be in agreement even with the view of the Sages. The difficulty as to the contradiction between the two quoted Baraithas arises again.
- (24) Since the beast might at any moment escape (cf. Suk. 21a).
- (25) Suk. 23b.
- (26) Because it consisted of an animate being.
- (27) A human being or a beast in agreement with the Baraitha quoted supra by R. Nahman b. Isaac.
- (28) The wall being deemed to be non-existent as far as the sukkah is concerned.
- (29) In agreement with the Baraitha quoted by Raba.
- (30) Who has the sense to remain in his place.
- (31) Which cannot even move.
- (32) Though it be granted that the sukkah, despite the added wall, remains invalid.
- (33) That which permits the putting up of the wall on account of its invalidity.
- (34) How then could he permit the addition of the wall?
- (35) As is the case with the structure of the window.
- (36) The apparently contradictory Baraithas
- (37) In the two cited Baraithas, the second of which does, and the first of which does not permit the putting up of a bed as a wall for a sukkah.
- (38) Two walls constitute no hut and the putting up of a third one completes the structure. The Rabbis agree that not even a temporary hut may for the first time be put up on the Sabbath.
- (39) As three walls constitute a hut the putting up of a fourth one is a mere addition to an already existing structure which the Rabbis permit.

(40) Of the first cited Baraita.

(41) That the prohibition refers to a third wall.

(42) Emphasis on 'its wall', sc. the third wall whereby the sukkah becomes valid. A fourth one does not in any way affect the sukkah's validity (cf. Suk. 2a).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 44b

But does not a contradiction still remain between the two rulings regarding a human being?¹ There is really no contradiction between the two rulings regarding a human being, since the former refers to a man used as a wall with his knowledge² while the latter refers to a man so used without his knowledge.³ Was not, however, the arrangement for Nehemiah son of R. Hanilai, made with [the men's] knowledge? No, without their knowledge.⁴ R. Hisda⁵ at any rate must have known? R. Hisda was not one of the number.⁶ Certain gardeners once brought water⁷ through human walls⁸ and Samuel had them flogged. He said: If the Rabbis permitted human walls where the men composing them were unaware of the purpose they served would they also permit such walls where the men were aware of the purpose?⁹

A number of skin bottles were once lying in the manor¹⁰ of Mahuza and, while Raba was coming from his discourse,¹¹ [his attendant]¹² carried¹³ them in.¹⁴ On a subsequent Sabbath he desired to carry them in again,¹⁴ but he¹⁵ forbade it to them because in the second case the human walls must be regarded as having been put up with the men's knowledge, which is forbidden.

For Levi straw was brought in;¹⁶ for Ze'iri cattle fodder,¹⁶ and for R. Shimi b. Hiyya water.¹⁶

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WHO WAS PERMITTED TO DO SO¹⁷ WENT OUT BEYOND THE SABBATH LIMIT AND WAS THEN TOLD THAT THE ACT¹⁸ HAD ALREADY BEEN PERFORMED, HE IS ENTITLED TO MOVE WITHIN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS¹⁹ IN ANY DIRECTION. IF HE WAS WITHIN THE SABBATH LIMIT HE IS REGARDED AS IF HE HAD NOT GONE OUT.²⁰ ALL²¹ WHO GO OUT TO SAVE LIFE MAY RETURN TO THEIR ORIGINAL PLACES.²⁰

GEMARA. What [need was there for the ruling], IF HE WAS WITHIN THE SABBATH LIMIT HE IS REGARDED AS IF HE HAD NOT GONE OUT?²² — Rabbah replied: It is this that was meant: IF HE WAS WITHIN his SABBATH LIMIT²³ HE IS REGARDED AS IF HE HAD NOT GONE OUT of his house.²⁴ Is not this Obvious?²⁵ — It might have been presumed that as he tore [himself away from his original abode]²⁶ he has thereby detached [himself completely from it],²⁷ hence we were informed [that IF HE WAS WITHIN his SABBATH LIMIT HE IS REGARDED AS IF HE HAD NOT GONE OUT OF HIS HOUSE]. R. Shimi b. Hiyya replied: It is this that was meant: If the Sabbath limits which the Rabbis have allowed him²⁸ overlapped with his original Sabbath limit²⁹ HE³⁰ IS REGARDED AS IF HE HAD NOT GONE OUT of his original Sabbath limit. On what principle do they³¹ differ? — The one Master³² is of the opinion that the overlapping of Sabbath limits is of significance³³ while the other Master³⁴ maintains that it is of no consequence.³⁵

Said Abaye to Rabbah: Are you not of the opinion that the overlapping of Sabbath limits is of significance? What if a man spent the Sabbath in a cavern³⁶ the length of the floor of whose interior was four thousand cubits³⁷ and that of its roof was less than four thousand cubits?³⁷ Would he not be able to move all along its roof and two thousand cubits beyond it?³⁸ — The other replied: Do you make no distinction between a case where³⁹ the man began to spend the Sabbath within the walls of his abode, while it was yet day⁴⁰ and one⁴¹ where he did not begin to spend the Sabbath between the walls⁴² while it was yet day?⁴³ — [You say] that where a man did not begin to spend the Sabbath [within the walls of an abode common to both limits overlapping of the limits is of] no consequence,

- (1) In the former Baraita a Human being is forbidden to be used as a wall while in the latter he is permitted. The answer given in connection with vessels, that the latter deals with a fourth wall, is inapplicable since the Baraita specifically speaks of that wall as enabling other 'to eat, to drink and to sleep'. Only the third wall but not a fourth one does that.
- (2) As he agrees to constitute a proper wall he must not be used for the purpose on Sabbaths or Festivals.
- (3) This is permitted since no hut is constructed in such a manner and on no account, in consequence, can the man in such circumstances be regarded as a valid wall.
- (4) They did not know for what purpose they were told to line up.
- (5) Who presumably took his place in the lines arranged for Nehemiah.
- (6) Of those who made up the lines.
- (7) On a Sabbath day, from a public, into a private domain.
- (8) The men forming them having been aware of the purpose they were to serve.
- (9) Obviously not. Hence the culpability of the gardeners.
- (10) Which was, of course, a public domain. [On the manor of Mahuza, Rostaka di Mahuza, v. Obermeyer, p. 172].
- (11) The crowds following him.
- (12) So Rashi.
- (13) Through the crowds that formed so to speak human walls on either side of the carriers.
- (14) Into a private domain (cf. previous note).
- (15) Raba.
- (16) Through human walls, on a Sabbath, from a public domain into a private one.
- (17) If his journey, for instance, had for its purpose the saving of life or the tendering of evidence on the appearance of a new moon, which involves the religious observance of a festival.
- (18) Which he intended to do.
- (19) From the spot where the report was brought to him.
- (20) This is explained in the Gemara infra.
- (21) Mishnah ed., 'because all'; MS.M., 'and all'.
- (22) Is not this obvious?
- (23) When he received the report.
- (24) Sc. he may move within two thousand cubits from his house in any direction, AS IF HE HAD NOT GONE OUT from it and not, as would have been the case if he had heard the report without his Sabbath limit, from the spot where he heard it.
- (25) So long as a man has not gone beyond his Sabbath limit he is, of course, entitled to his original rights of movement.
- (26) By deciding, under Rabbinic sanction, to go beyond his original Sabbath limit.
- (27) For the rest of the Sabbath day; his new abode being the spot where the report spoken of in our Mishnah reached him, irrespective of whether this happened beyond, or within his original Sabbath limit.
- (28) The man who went beyond is original Sabbath limit.
- (29) Sc. if the distance between the spot where the report had reached him and his own home was less than four thousand cubits.
- (30) Since the new limit to which he is entitled enables him to come within two thousand cubits distance from his home.
- (31) Rabbah and R. Shimi b. Hiyya.
- (32) The last mentioned.
- (33) Hence it is permissible to move within the two Sabbath limits as if they had constituted one single limit.
- (34) Rabbah.
- (35) The man's movements are consequently restricted to one Sabbath limit even though that limit overlapped with his original one. Hence Rabbah's recourse to a different answer from that of R. Shimi. (For another interpretation v. Rashi s.v. ת"י a.l.).
- (36) Two of whose opposite walls were sloping upwards towards one another and thereby reducing the length of the roof in which there were two doors, one at the side of either wall.
- (37) Cf. previous note.
- (38) In either direction, from either door. If one door, for instance, was on the east side of the cavern and the other on its west side, the former would enable the man to move a distance of two thousand cubits from the east side of that door and another two thousand cubits from its west side, while the latter door would similarly enable him to move along equal distances from both its sides. But since the western limit of the eastern door overlaps along the roof with the eastern limit of the western door, the man is in consequence permitted to move along a distance of more than four thousand cubits, beginning in the east at a point two thousand cubits from the eastern door and extended along the roof to a point in the west two thousand cubits distant from the western door. If the two Sabbath limits, however, had not overlapped along the roof as would be the case where the roof of the cavern, like its floor, was four thousand cubits long, the man on leaving the eastern door would have been allowed to move to a limit of two thousand cubits in either direction but no further and a similar distance and no further if he left by the western door. How then could Rabbah maintain that overlapping is of no consequence?

(39) As in that of the cavern.

(40) The Sabbath eve.

(41) The case spoken of in our Mishnah.

(42) Of his second 'abode', the spot where the report was brought to him.

(43) Such a distinction must, of course, be drawn. In the former case the two Sabbath limits are acquired simultaneously through the man's stay at the same time within the same cavern; hence the significance and value of the overlapping of the limits. In the latter case, however, when the man was within his original home he had no right whatever to his new Sabbath limit, and when he entered his new 'abode' and acquired the right to the new limit he had already quitted his original home. If, therefore, he is entitled to the latter he must, despite the overlapping, lose his right to the former and Vice versa.

but, surely, we learned: R. Eliezer ruled: If a man walked two cubits beyond his Sabbath limit he may re-enter,¹ and if he walked three cubits he may not re-enter;² [from which it is evident] is it not, that R. Eliezer follows his principle on the basis of which he ruled: 'The man³ is deemed to be in their center',⁴ so that the four cubits which the Rabbis have allowed him³ are regarded as overlapping [with that man's former Sabbath limit],⁵ and [it is because of this overlapping]⁶ that he ruled: 'He may re-enter'. Does not this then clearly prove that the overlapping of Sabbath limits is of significance? — Said Rabbah b. Bar Hana⁷ to Abaye: Do you raise an objection against the Master⁸ from a ruling of R. Eliezer?⁹ 'Yes', the other replied: 'because I heard from the Master himself⁸ that the Rabbis differed from R. Eliezer only in respect of a secular errand¹⁰ but that in respect of a religious one they agree with him'.¹¹

AND¹² ALL WHO GO OUT TO SAVE LIFE MAY RETURN TO THEIR ORIGINAL PLACES. Even apparently where the distance was more [than four thousand cubits]. But was it not stated in the first clause,¹³ TWO THOUSAND CUBITS, and presumably no more? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: The meaning is that they MAY RETURN TO THEIR ORIGINAL PLACES¹⁴ with their weapons.¹⁵ But what [indeed] was the difficulty¹⁶ seeing that it is possible that the case of those who go to save lives¹⁷ is different?¹⁸ If a difficulty did at all exist it must have been the following. We learned: At first they¹⁹ did not stir from there²⁰ all day²¹ but R. Gamaliel the Elder enacted that they shall be entitled to move within two thousand cubits in any direction. The enactment, moreover, was not applied to these¹⁹ only, but even a midwife who came to assist at a childbirth, or a man who came to rescue from an invading gang, from a river, from a ruin or from a fire is to be regarded as one of the people of the town²² and is entitled to move within two thousand cubits in any direction.²³ Now [this evidently implies:] No more;²⁴ but has it not been said: ALL WHO GO OUT TO SAVE LIFE MAY RETURN TO THE ORIGINAL PLACES even impliedly a larger distance?²⁴ — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab:²⁵ The meaning is that they MAY RETURN TO THEIR ORIGINAL PLACES²⁶ with their weapons;²⁷ as it was taught: At first they²⁸ used to leave their weapons²⁹ in a house that was nearest to the town wall. Once it happened that the enemies recognized them³⁰ and pursued them, and as these entered the house to take up their weapons the enemies followed them. There was a stampede and the men who killed one another were more than those whom the enemies killed. At that time it was ordained that men in such circumstances shall return to their places with their weapons.³¹

R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: There is really no contradiction:³² The latter³³ deals with a case where the Israelites overpowered the heathens³⁴ while the former³⁵ deals with one where the heathens overpowered themselves.³⁶

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: If foreigners besieged Israelite towns it is not permitted to sally forth against them or to desecrate the Sabbath in any other way on their account. So it was also taught: If foreigners besieged etc. This, however, applies only where they came for the sake of money matters, but if they came with the intention of taking lives the people are permitted to sally forth against them with their weapons and to desecrate the Sabbath on their account. Where the attack, however, was made on a town that was close to a frontier,³⁷ even though they did not come with any intention of taking lives but merely to plunder straw or stubble, the people are permitted to sally forth against them with their weapons and to desecrate the Sabbath on their account.³⁸

Said R. Joseph b. Manyumi in the name of R. Nahman: Babylon is regarded as a frontier town and by this³⁹ he meant Nehardea.⁴⁰

R. Dostai of Biri⁴¹ made the following exposition: What is the significance of the Scriptural text: And they told David saying: 'Behold the Philistines are fighting against Keilah, and they rob the threshing-floors'⁴² A Tanna taught: Keilah was a frontier town and they only came for the sake of plundering straw or stubble, for it is written: 'And they rob the threshingfloors' and yet it is written: Therefore David enquired of the Lord, saying: 'Shall I go and smite these Philistines?' And the Lord said unto David: 'Go and smite the Philistines, and save Keilah'.⁴³ What was it that he inquired about? If it be suggested: 'Whether⁴⁴ it was permitted or forbidden to repulse the attack', surely, it could be retorted, the Beth din of Samuel the Ramathite was then in existence.⁴⁵ Rather, he inquired whether he would be successful or not.⁴⁶ The inference from the wording of the text also supports this view. For it says: 'Go and smite the Philistines, and save Keilah'.⁴⁷ This is conclusive.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN SAT DOWN⁴⁸ BY THE WAY⁴⁹ AND WHEN HE ROSE UP⁵⁰ HE OBSERVER THAT HE WAS NEAR A TOWN⁵¹ HE MAY NOT ENTER IT,⁵² SINCE IT HAD NOT BEEN HIS INTENTION⁵³ TO DO SO,⁵⁴ SO R. MEIR. R. JUDAH RULED: HE MAY ENTER IT.⁵⁵ SAID R. JUDAH, IT ONCE ACTUALLY HAPPENED THAT R. TARFON ENTERED A TOWN⁵⁶ THOUGH⁵⁷ THIS WAS NOT HIS INTENTION [WHEN THE SABBATH HAD BEGUN].

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Judah related: It once happened that R. Tarfon was on a journey when dusk fell and he spent the night on the outskirts of a town. In the morning he was discovered by some herdsmen who said to him, 'Master, behold the town is just in front of you; come in. He, thereupon, entered and sat down in the house of study, and delivered discourses all that day. Said R. Akiba⁵⁸ to him:⁵⁹ Is that incident any proof?⁶⁰ Is it not possible that he⁵³ had the town in his mind⁶¹ or that the house of study was actually⁶² within his Sabbath limit?⁶³

IF THERE WERE TWO MEN AND A PART OF THE PRESCRIBED NUMBER OF CUBITS OF THE ONE OVERLAPPED WITH THAT OF THE OTHER,⁷⁰ THEY MAY BRING THEIR

MEALS AND EAT THEM IN THE MIDDLE,⁷¹

- (1) His original limit.
- (2) Infra 52b.
- (3) Who walked out of his Sabbath limit and who was allowed a distance of four cubits in which to move.
- (4) I.e., he is regarded as standing in the middle point of a circle four cubits in diameter and is allowed no more than two cubits in the various directions.
- (5) Since no more than two of them intervene between his new position and former limit.
- (6) Since in the case of a distance of three cubits, where there is no overlapping, R. Eliezer forbids, and in that of two cubits, where there is some overlapping, he permits the man to re-enter his former limit.
- (7) Var. lec. Hanin (marg. n.); Raba b. R. Hanin (MS.M.).

- (9) Who represents an individual opinion from which the Rabbis differ (cf. Mishnah infra 52b).
- (10) Only in such a case do they forbid a man to re-enter his former Sabbath limit even if he walked no further than one cubit beyond it.
- (11) That overlapping is of significance, As our Mishnah deals with a man who was permitted to go beyond his Sabbath limit, that is, on a religious errand, the Rabbis, like R. Eliezer, would permit him to re-enter his former limit if his new one overlapped with it.
- (12) For this reading cf. the relevant note in our Mishnah.
- (13) In the case where the limits did not overlap.
- (14) Only within the permitted distance. Not, as has been assumed, a distance of more than two thousand cubits.
- (15) Though the carrying of weapons is forbidden on the Sabbath the law (as will be explained infra) has been relaxed in favour of those WHO GO OUT TO SAVE LIFE.
- (16) In reply to which Rab Judah found it necessary to offer a radical change in the obvious meaning of our Mishnah.
- (17) From an attacking gang.
- (18) From that of those previously mentioned in our Mishnah. The former might refer to one who went to render evidence on the appearance of a new moon or to summon a midwife. A person in such circumstance may well be forbidden to return home if the distance was more than two thousand cubits. Those, however, who went out to save lives from the violence of an attacking gang might well, as a safeguard of their own lives against possible attack, have been permitted to return to their homes even where the distances were greater.

(46) [I.e., whether the plundering of straw and stubble warranted the entry upon a deadly combat, v. Tosaf.]

(47) If the inquiry had been merely regarding the legal permissibility of the engagement on Sabbath there would have been no point in adding the last three words. [The encouragement which he received to wage war indicates the importance of the issue for which, consequently, the Sabbath may be desecrated, v. Tosaf.].

(48) Var. lec. 'slept' (She'iltot).

(49) On the Sabbath eve before dusk.

(50) After dusk when the Sabbath had already begun.

(51) I.e., the town was within his Sabbath limit.

(52) Sc. he is not allowed to move freely about the town as the people who were in it at the hour the Sabbath had commenced.

(53) At the time the Sabbath had set in.

(54) He is in consequence entitled to move from the spot where he sit down in any direction, including that of the town, within two thousand cubits distance, measured by moderate steps; but not further, though his Sabbath limit in the direction of the town terminated in the heart of the town.

(55) Cf. supra p. 312, n. 15 mutatis mutandis.

(56) Within the Sabbath limit of which he happened to be at the hour the Sabbath had begun.

(57) Having been unaware of the fact that the town was so near.

(58) So She'iltot, Beshalah, XLVIII; MS.M., 'Jacob'; cur. edd., in parenthesis, 'They said'.

(59) R. Judah.

(60) That R. Tarfon acted in agreement with R. Judah's ruling.

(61) He may have been aware of the fact that it was within his Sabbath limit and intended to enter it in the morning.

(62) Lit., 'swallowed'.

(63) This is undoubtedly possible and the incident cannot, therefore, be adduced as proof of R. Tarfon's agreement with R. Judah.

(64) On a Sabbath eve.

(65) Sc. that the Sabbath had set in,

(66) Since in his sleep he could not intend to acquire the spot on which he lay as his Sabbath 'abode'.

(67) I.e., he is deemed to be standing in the center of a circle four cubits in diameter and he is entitled to move within two (not four) cubits in any direction.

(68) A distance of four cubits.

(69) He may not subsequently return to his original position to walk any distance in the opposite direction.

(70) If the distance between their respective positions was, for instance, six cubits, so that the two middle cubits were common to both men.

(71) Within the two cubits common to both.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 45b

PROVIDED THE ONE DOES NOT CARRY OUT ANYTHING¹ FROM HIS LIMIT INTO THAT OF THE OTHER.² IF THERE WERE THREE MEN AND THE PRESCRIBED LIMIT OF THE MIDDLE ONE OVERLAPPED WITH THE RESPECTIVE LIMITS OF THE OTHERS,³ HE IS PERMITTED TO EAT WITH EITHER OF THEM⁴ AND EITHER OF THEM IS PERMITTED TO EAT WITH HIM,⁴ BUT THE TWO OUTER PERSONS ARE FORBIDDEN TO EAT WITH ONE ANOTHER.⁵ R. SIMEON REMARKED: TO WHAT MAY THIS CASE BE COMPARED? TO THREE COURTYARDS THAT OPEN ONE INTO THE OTHER AND ALSO INTO A PUBLIC DOMAIN,⁶ WHERE, IF THE TWO OUTER ONES MADE AN 'ERUB WITH THE MIDDLE ONE,⁷ IT⁸ IS PERMITTED TO HAVE ACCESS TO THEM AND THEY ARE PERMITTED ACCESS TO IT, BUT THE TWO OUTER ONES⁹ ARE FORBIDDEN ACCESS TO ONE ANOTHER.

GEMARA. Raba enquired: What is R. Johanan b. Nuri's view? Does he¹⁰ hold that ownerless objects¹¹ do acquire their place in respect of the Sabbath,¹² and consequently, it would have been proper that he should express his disagreement [with the Sages] in respect of inanimate objects¹³ and the only reason why [he and the Sages] expressed their dispute in connection with a human being was to inform you how far the view of the Rabbis extends, viz., that although¹⁴ it might be argued, 'Since a man who is awake acquires his place a man asleep should also acquire his place', hence we were informed that no [such argument is admissible];¹⁵ or is it likely that R. Johanan b. Nuri holds that elsewhere ownerless objects do not acquire their place in respect of the Sabbath and the reason for his ruling¹⁰ here is this: Since a man awake acquires his place so does also a man asleep? — R. Joseph replied: Come and hear: If rain fell on the eve of a festival the water¹⁶ may be carried within a radius of two thousand cubits in any direction,¹⁷ but if it fell on a festival day¹⁸ the water is on a par with the feet of every man.¹⁹ Now if you grant that R. Johanan b. Nuri is of the opinion that ownerless objects acquire their place in respect of the Sabbath this ruling,²⁰ you may say, represents the view of R. Johanan;²¹ but if you contend that²² ownerless objects do not acquire their place in respect of the Sabbath, whose view, [it may be asked], is here²⁰ represented? Is it neither that of R. Johanan nor that of the Rabbis?

Abaye sat at his studies and discoursed on this subject²³ when R. Safra said to him: Is it not possible that we are dealing²⁴ here with a case where the rain fell near a town and the townspeople relied on that rain?²⁵ — This,²⁶ the other replied, cannot be entertained at all.²⁷ For we learned: A cistern belonging to an individual person is on a par with that individual's feet,²⁸ and one belonging to a town is on a par with the feet of the people of that town,²⁹ and one used by the Babylonian pilgrims³⁰ is³¹ on a par with the feet of any man who draws the water.³² Now it was also taught: 'The water of a cistern Used by the tribes³³ may be moved within a radius of two thousand cubits in any direction'.³⁴ Are not [then] the two rulings mutually contradictory?³⁵ Consequently³⁶ it must be conceded that the latter represents the view of R. Johanan while the former represents that of the Rabbis.

When he³⁷ came to R. Joseph and told him such and such a thing said R. Safra and such and such did I reply, the other remarked: 'Why did you not argue with him from that very statement:³⁸ If it could be entertained that we were dealing with a case where the rain fell near a town then, instead of ruling that the water may be moved within a distance of two thousand cubits in any direction,³⁹ should it not have been ruled that it was on a par with the feet of the people of that town?'⁴⁰

The Master said: 'If [it fell] on a festival day the water is on a par with the feet of every man'. But why? Should not the rain water acquire its place for the Sabbath in the ocean?⁴¹ Must it then be assumed⁴² that this ruling is not in agreement with the view of R. Eliezer? For if it were in agreement with R. Eliezer [the objection would arise:] Did he not state that all the world drinks from the water of the ocean? — R. Isaac replied: Here we are dealing with a case where the clouds were formed on the eve of the festival.⁴³ But is it not possible that those⁴⁴ moved away and these⁴⁵ are others?⁴⁶ — It is a case where one can recognize them by some identification mark. And if you prefer I might reply: This⁴⁷ is a matter of doubt in respect of a Rabbinical law and in any such doubt a lenient ruling is adopted.⁴⁸ But why should not the water acquire its place for the Sabbath in the clouds?⁴⁹ May it then be derived from this⁵⁰ that the law of the Sabbath limits does not apply to the air above a height often handbreadths, for if the law of Sabbath limits were at that height applicable the water should have acquired its place for the Sabbath in the clouds? — I may in fact maintain that the law of Sabbath limits is applicable [even at the height mentioned] but the water is absorbed in clouds.⁵¹

- (1) Even with his hand, though his body remains within his own limit.
 - (2) Sc. the parts of the respective limits which do not overlap. A person's cattle or inanimate objects may not be moved on the Sabbath beyond the limit within which he himself is permitted to move (cf. Bezah 37a).
 - (3) While the limits of the latter did not overlap each other; where, for instance, the distance between the positions of the two men at the extremities was eight cubits and that between either of them and the middle one was six cubits.
 - (4) In the overlapping spaces that are respectively common to him and to them.
 - (5) Since they have no ground in common.
 - (6) So that each is self contained. Courtyards that open into one another and have no direct exit into a public domain, being interdependent, are forbidden domains as regards movement on the Sabbath except where the residents joined in a common 'erub.
 - (7) Through their communicating doors respectively.
 - (8) The middle courtyard.
 - (9) Having no direct communication with each other.
 - (10) In laying down in the first clause of our Mishnah that the man is ENTITLED TO MOVE WITHIN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS.
 - (11) Whose radius of movement cannot obviously be determined, as in the case of owned property, by the intentions of an owner.
 - (12) Sc. that no one even with an 'erub may move them from that position beyond a distance of two thousand cubits.
 - (13) Lit., 'vessels', that are ownerless. A man asleep being unable to think, is, in respect of intention to spend the Sabbath in a particular spot, like ownerless objects that have no owner by whose intention their place for the Sabbath could be determined.
 - (14) In the case of a human being.
 - (15) And the Sages still maintain that a man asleep does not acquire his place for the Sabbath.
 - (16) Since at the time the festival began it was already on the ground.
 - (17) From the spot where it fell; because it acquired, so to speak, its place when the Sabbath had begun (cf. prev. note).
 - (18) So that it could not acquire any place on the ground at the time the festival began.
 - (19) I.e., it may be carried in a radius within which any man who uses it may himself move.
 - (20) That if rain fell on the eve of a festival the water may be carried only within a radius of two thousand cubits from the spot on which it fell.
 - (21) According to which rain water, like ownerless objects, acquires its place in respect of the Sabbath.
 - (22) In the opinion of R. Johanan.
 - (23) The authorship of the Baraitha just cited and discussed.
 - (24) Cf. supra n. 1.
 - (25) For their water supply. As it was the townspeople's intention to use the water the latter rightly acquires the place on which it fell. The Baraitha, therefore, could provide no proof that objects having no owner can also acquire their place for the Sabbath.
 - (26) R. Safra's suggestion.
 - (27) Because on account of the following apparently contradictory rulings one is driven to the conclusion that R. Johanan must be of the opinion that ownerless objects do acquire this place.
 - (28) Should another person draw the water on a Sabbath or a festival day he may not carry it beyond the radius within which the owner of the cistern may move.
 - (29) A radius of two thousand cubits in any direction from the town.
 - (30) On their way to Jerusalem.
 - (31) Since it was at the disposal of anyone who cared to use it and had the status of ownerless property.
 - (32) Because ownerless objects are acquired by the man who first lifts them up. Should the man who first drew the water subsequently give it to another person its movements would nevertheless be restricted to the radius within which the first man may move. Thus it follows that ownerless objects do not acquire their place for the Sabbath.

- (33) I.e., the pilgrims on their way to the Holy City.
- (34) From its place. Which proves that ownerless objects do acquire their place for the Sabbath.
- (35) Cf. supra p. 316, n. 13 and prev. note.
- (36) In order to remove the apparent contradiction.
- (37) Abaye.
- (38) Which R. Joseph cited supra.
- (39) From the spot on which it fell.
- (40) Of course it should. The ruling consequently proves that R. Safra's suggestion is unacceptable.
- (41) Where it was at the time the festival began before it was converted into cloud. As it was carried on the festival in the form of cloud beyond its Sabbath limit its movements should be restricted to a radius of four cubits only.
- (42) Since the water may be moved within a radius of two thousand cubits.
- (43) So that the water had left the ocean before the festival began.
- (44) The clouds that were seen on the festival eve.
- (45) That released the rain on the festival.
- (46) That were formed after the festival had begun from the water that was still in the ocean at the time the festival had set in (cf. supra n. 7).
- (47) Whether the clouds on the festival day are identical with those that were on the horizon on the eve of the festival or not.
- (48) It may in consequence be properly assumed that the clouds were the same on both days.
- (49) Where it presumably was at the time the festival began. The movement of the water should consequently be restricted to a radius of four cubits.
- (50) Since it was ruled that the water was on a par with the feet of every man.
- (51) As it is not exposed it is regarded as non-existent and cannot consequently acquire its place for the Sabbath before it reaches the ground in the form of water.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 46a

But should it not then¹ be forbidden all the more² because it was produced on the festival?³ — The fact, however, is that the water in the clouds is in constant motion.⁴ Now you have arrived at this explanation⁵ you can raise no difficulty about the ocean either,⁶ since the water in the ocean is also in constant motion, and it was taught: Running rivers and gushing springs⁷ are⁸ on a par with the feet of all men.⁹

R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: The halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri. Said R. Zera to R. Jacob b. Idi: 'Did you hear it explicitly¹⁰ or did you understand it by implication?'¹¹ — 'I', the other replied: 'have heard it explicitly' — What was that general statement?¹² — [The one in] which R. Joshua b. Levi has laid down: The halachah is in agreement with the authority that maintains the less restrictive ruling in respect of the laws of 'erub.¹³ What need then was there for the two statements?¹⁴ — R. Zera replied: Both were required. For if we had been informed only that 'the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri', it might have been assumed [that this applies in all cases] whether the halachah leads to a relaxation¹⁵ or to a restriction;¹⁶ hence we were informed that 'the halachah is in agreement with the authority that maintains the less restrictive ruling in respect of the laws of 'erub.'¹⁷ Then let him state, 'The halachah is in agreement with the authority that maintains the less restrictive ruling in respect of 'erub'; for what purpose was it necessary to state also that 'the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri'? — It was required because¹⁸ it might have been presumed that the statement¹⁹ applied only to an individual authority who differs from another²⁰ individual authority or to several authorities who differ from several other authorities, but not to an individual authority²¹ who differed from several authorities.²²

Said Raba to Abaye: Consider! The laws of 'erub are Rabbinical, [of course]. Why then should it matter whether an individual differs from another individual or whether an individual authority differs from several other authorities? — Said R. Papa to Raba: Is there no difference in the case of a Rabbinical law between a dispute of two individuals and one between an individual authority and several other authorities? Have we not in fact learnt: R. Eliezer²³ ruled: For any woman who had passed²⁴ three menstrual periods²⁵ [without observing any discharge of blood] it is sufficient [to regard herself as menstrually unclean from] the time when she [observed a re-appearance of such a discharge].²⁶ And it was taught: It once happened that Rabbi gave a practical decision in agreement with the ruling of R. Eliezer,²⁷ and after he had recollected²⁸ he remarked: R. Eliezer²³ deserves to be relied upon in a time of need.²⁹ Now what is meant by the expression ‘after he recollected’? If it be suggested: After he recollected that the halachah was not in agreement with R. Eliezer but with the Rabbis [the difficulty would arise:] How could he act in agreement with his view³⁰ even in a time of need? It must consequently be conceded that the law was laid down neither in agreement with R. Eliezer nor in agreement with the Rabbis, and that it was after he had recollected that not one individual but several authorities differed from him that he remarked: ‘R. Eliezer deserves to be relied upon in a time of need’.³¹

Said R. Mesharsheya to Raba (or, as others say. R. Nahman b. Isaac said to Raba): Is there no difference in the case of a Rabbinical law between a dispute of two individuals and one between an individual authority and several authorities? Was it not in fact taught: [On receiving] an early³² report [of the death of a near relative both] the seven and the thirty days of mourning must be observed³³ [but on receiving] a belated³⁴ one only one day of mourning is to be observed. And what is meant by ‘early’ and ‘belated’? [A report received] within thirty [days of the death is said to be] ‘early’ [and one received] after thirty [days from the death is said to be] ‘belated’; so R. Akiba. The Sages, however, ruled: Whether a report is early or belated both the seven and the thirty days of mourning must be observed.³⁵ And in connection with this Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan: Wherever you come across a law which an individual authority relaxes and several authorities restrict, the halachah is in agreement with the majority who restrict it, except in this case where the halachah is in agreement with R. Akiba,³⁶ though he relaxes the law and the Sages restrict it. In this respect he is of the same opinion as Samuel who laid down: The halachah is in agreement with the authority that relaxes the law in the case of a mourner.³⁷ Thus³⁸ it follows that it is only in the case of mourning that the Rabbis³⁹ have relaxed the law but that elsewhere,⁴⁰ even in respect of a Rabbinical law⁴¹ a difference is to be made between a dispute of two individuals and a dispute of an individual authority against a number of authorities!

- (1) Since it is regarded as non-existent while in cloud form.
 - (2) Even to be moved from its place.
 - (3) Nolad (v. Glos.) may be neither used nor moved either on a Sabbath or on a festival.
 - (4) An object in motion cannot acquire a place for a Sabbath or for a festival.
 - (5) Cf. prev. note.
 - (6) The difficulty pointed out supra 45b: ‘Does not the rain water acquire its place . . . in the ocean?’
 - (7) Even if they are the property of an individual.
 - (8) On account of their perpetual motion.
 - (9) Any man that draws any of their waters is allowed to carry it in the same radius within which he himself is permitted to move.
 - (10) From R. Joshua b. Levi.
 - (11) Lit., ‘from a general rule’, i.e., inferred it from a general statement that R. Joshua b. Levi had made.
 - (12) To which R. Zera (cf. prev. n.) referred.
 - (13) In which the laws of Sabbath limits are of course included.
 - (14) The one just cited and the one quoted by R. Jacob b. Idi. Is not the latter superfluous in view of the former?
 - (15) As in the case of a man asleep spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah. By adopting the ruling of R. Johanan b. Nuri the man is enabled to move not only within his four cubits but also to a distance of two thousand cubits in all directions.
 - (16) In the case of ownerless objects for instance. Adopting the ruling of R. Johanan b. Nuri the movement of the objects is restricted to a radius of two thousand cubits from their place so that the man who found them is unable to carry them to the end of his own limit.

(17) Thus indicating that only in respect of a person asleep is the ruling of R. Joshua b. Nuri adopted but not in respect of ownerless objects.

(18) In its absence.

(19) That 'the halachah is in agreement with . . . the less restrictive ruling'.

(20) Lit., 'in the place of'.

(21) Like R. Johanan b. Nuri.

(22) The Sages.

(23) So Rashi, Bah and MS.M. throughout the page. Cur. edd., 'Eleazar'.

(24) Lit., 'passed upon her',

(25) Of thirty days each.

(26) Nid. 7b. If less than three menstrual periods have passed without a discharge the woman must be regarded as having been menstrually unclean twenty-four hours retrospectively whenever a discharge reappears (cf. Nid. 3a).

(27) In the case of a young woman, though the Rabbis differed from him in maintaining that an interval of three menstrual periods reduces the period of uncleanness only in the case of a woman approaching old age but not in that of a young woman.

(28) That his decision was based on the view of an individual (cf. infra).

(29) Nid. 6a, 9b. The incident occurred in a time of dearth when the destruction of any food on account of a restriction in the laws of levitical uncleanness would have entailed severe hardship (v. Rash Cf. however, Tosaf. s.v. לסמוך a.l.).

(30) Against the established halachah.

(31) From which it is evident that in normal times the opinion of the majority is to be followed even in the case of a Rabbinical law as is that of the twenty-four hours retrospective uncleanness in the case under discussion.

(32) Lit., 'near'.

(33) During the former period the mourner is subjected to greater restrictions than in the latter. Bathing and washing of clothes, for instance, which are forbidden during the seven, are permitted during the thirty days.

(34) Lit., 'distant'.

(35) M.K, 20a.

(36) An individual authority.

(37) M.K. 18a, Bek. 49a.

(38) Since the reason given for deciding the halachah in agreement with R. Akiba was not that in Rabbinical laws (such as the laws of mourning spoken of here) the opinion of a majority is of no consequence.

(39) For the reason given.

(40) Where the reason is inapplicable.

(41) Cf. supra n. 7.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 46b

R.¹ Papa replied: It² was required:³ Since it might have been presumed that this⁴ applied Only to 'erubs of courtyards but not to 'erubs of Sabbath limits,⁵ hence it was necessary [to make that statement⁶ also]. Whence however, is it derived that a distinction is made between 'erubs of courtyards and 'erubs of Sabbath limits? — From what we learned: R. Judah ruled: This⁷ applies Only to 'erubs of Sabbath limits⁸ but in the case of 'erubs of courtyards⁹ an 'erub may be prepared for a person whether he is aware of it or not, since a privilege¹⁰ may be conferred upon a man in his absence but no disadvantage¹¹ may be imposed upon him except in his presence.¹²

R. Ashi replied: It¹³ was required:¹⁴ Since it might have been assumed that this¹⁵ applied only to the remnants of an 'erub¹⁶ but not to the beginnings of one.¹⁷ Whence, however, is it derived that a distinction is made between the remnants of an 'erub and the beginnings of one? — From what we learned: R. Jose ruled: This¹⁸ applies only to the beginnings of the 'erub but in the case of the remnants of one even the smallest quantity of food¹⁹ is sufficient, the sole reason for the injunction to provide 'erubs for courtyards being that the law of 'erub shall not be forgotten by the children.²⁰

R. Jacob and R. Zerika said: The halachah is always in agreement with R. Akiba when he differs from a colleague of his; with R. Jose even when he differs from several of his colleagues, and with Rabbi when he differs from a colleague of his.²¹ To what [extent were these²² meant to influence] the law in practice? — R. Assi replied: [To the extent of adopting them for] general practice,²³ R. Hiyya b. Abba replied. [To the extent of being] inclined [in their favour],²⁴ and R. Jose son of R. Hanina replied: [To the extent only of viewing them merely as] apparently acceptable.²⁵ In the same sense²⁶ did R. Jacob b. Idi rule in the name of R. Johanan: In a dispute between R. Meir and R. Judah the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah, in one between R. Judah and R. Jose the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose; and there is no need to state that in a dispute between R. Meir and R. Jose the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose, for, since²⁷ [it has been laid down that the opinion of the former is] of no consequence where it is opposed by that of²⁸ R. Judah,²⁹ can there be any question [as to its inconsequence] where it is opposed by that of²⁸ R. Jose?³⁰

R. Assi said: I also learn that in a dispute between R. Jose and R. Simeon the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose; for R. Abba has laid down on the authority of R. Johanan that in a dispute between R. Judah and R. Simeon the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah — Now [since the latter's opinion is] of no consequence where it is opposed by³¹ R. Judah³² can there be any question [as to its inconsequence] where it is opposed by that of³¹ R. Jose?³³

The question was raised: What [is the law where a ruling is a matter of dispute between] R. Meir and R. Simeon? — This is undecided.³⁴

R. Mesharsheya stated: Those rules³⁵ are to be disregarded.³⁶ Whence does R. Mesharsheya derive this view? If it be suggested: From the following where we learned, R. SIMEON REMARKED: TO WHAT MAY THIS CASE BE COMPARED? TO THREE COURTYARDS THAT OPEN ONE INTO THE OTHER AND ALSO INTO A PUBLIC DOMAIN, WHERE, IF THE TWO OUTER ONES MADE AN ERUB WITH THE MIDDLE ONE, IT IS PERMITTED TO HAVE ACCESS TO THEM AND THEY ARE PERMITTED ACCESS TO IT, BUT THE TWO OUTER ONES ARE FORBIDDEN ACCESS TO ONE ANOTHER; in connection with which R. Hama b. Goria stated in the name of Rab, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon',³⁷ and who is it that differs from him?³⁸ Evidently R. Judah;³⁹ and since [this⁴⁰ cannot be reconciled with what] has been laid down that 'In a dispute between R. Judah and R. Simeon the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah' it must consequently follow⁴¹ that those rules are to be disregarded?⁴² But is this really a difficulty? Is it not possible that the rules⁴³ are disregarded only where a ruling to the contrary had been stated,⁴⁴ but that where no such ruling is stated the rules⁴⁵ remain in force?⁴⁶ — [R. Mesharsheya's view] is rather derived from the following where we learned: 'If a town that belonged to an individual was converted into one belonging to many, one 'erub may be provided for all the town; but if a town belonged to many and was converted into one belonging to an individual no single 'erub may he provided for all the town unless a section of it of the size of the town of Hadashah in Judea, which contains fifty residents, is excluded; so R. Judah. R. Simeon ruled:

(1) So MS.M. and Ban. Cur. edd. begin with 'and'. Now in view of this established difference the question (supra p. 319) remains: Wherefore were the two statements required?

(2) The statement of R. Jacob b. Idi in the name of R. Johanan that 'the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri' (supra 46a).

(3) Though R. Joshua b. Levi also laid down the general rule that 'the halachah is in agreement with the authority that maintains the less restrictive ruling in respect of the laws of 'erub' (loc. cit.).

(4) R. Joshua b. Levi's rule (v. prev. n.).

(5) Of which R. Johanan b. Nuri spoke (v. our Mishnah).

(6) V. p. 321, n. 12.

(7) That no 'erub may be prepared for a person except with his consent.

- (8) Where an 'erub without the man's consent might sometimes be disadvantageous to him (v. infra). If he, for instance, desired to walk in the eastern direction of the town, the 'erub that was laid on his behalf on its western side would prevent him from moving in the former direction.

- (16) Sc. if an 'erub containing the prescribed quantity of food for two meals was duly prepared and deposited in a proper place but in the course of several weeks the quantity was gradually reduced so that less than the required minimum remained. In such a case only, it might have been presumed, was the law relaxed to permit the continuance of the validity of the remnants.
- (17) I.e., where the 'erub has never been valid, which is a case similar to that of which R. Johanan b. Nuri spoke.

Akiba or Rabbi or even the joint ruling of several of R. Jose's opponents.
- (25) נראין (rt. ראה 'to see' in Nif'al) lit., 'they appear'.

Three courtyards each of which contained two houses';¹ in connection with which R. Hama b. Goria stated in the name of Rab, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon'.² For who is it that differed from him?³ R. Judah⁴ of course; but has it not been laid down that 'In a dispute between R. Judah and R. Simeon the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah'?⁵ — What, however, is really the difficulty? Is it not possible that here also [we may reply that] these rules are disregarded only where a ruling to the contrary had been stated, but that where no such ruling is stated the rules remain in force?⁶ — [The view of R. Mesharsheya is] rather derived from the following where we learned: 'If a man left his house and went to spend the Sabbath in another town, whether he was a gentile or an Israelite, [his share]⁷ imposes restrictions⁸ on the residents of the courtyard;⁹ R. Meir. R. Judah ruled: It imposes no restrictions.¹⁰ R. Jose ruled: [The share of] a gentile imposes restrictions,¹¹ but that of an Israelite does not impose any restrictions because it is not usual for an Israelite to return on a Sabbath.¹² R. Simeon ruled: Even if he left his house¹³ and went to spend the Sabbath with his daughter in the same town [his share]¹⁴ imposes no restrictions since he had no intention to return',¹⁵ in connection with which R. Hama b. Goria stated in the name of Rab, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon'.¹⁶ For who is it that differed from him?¹⁷ R. Judah of course;¹⁸ but has it not been laid down that 'In a dispute between R. Judah and R. Simeon the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah'?¹⁹ — And what difficulty really is this? Is it not possible that here also [the reply is that] these rules²⁰ are disregarded only where a ruling to the contrary had been stated, but that where no such ruling is stated the rules remain in force?²¹ — [The view of R. Mesharsheya] then is derived from the following where we learned: 'And it is this of which the Rabbis have said: A poor man may make his 'erub with his feet.²² R. Meir said: We can apply this law²³ to²⁴ a poor man only.²⁵ R. Judah said: [It²³ applies] to both rich and poor, the Rabbis' enactment that an 'erub is to be prepared with bread having had the only purpose of making it easier for the rich man so that²⁶ he shall not be compelled to go out himself to make the 'erub with his feet';²⁷ and when R. Hiyya b. Ashi taught Hiyya b. Rab in the presence of Rab [that the law²⁸ applied] to both rich and poor,²⁹ Rab said to him: Conclude³⁰ this also with the statement, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah'.³¹ For what need was there for a second statement³² seeing that it had already been laid down that 'in a dispute between R. Meir and R. Judah the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah'?³³ — But what difficulty is this? Is it not possible that Rab does not accept³⁴ those rules?³⁵ — [R. Mesharsheya's statement] then was derived from the following where we learned: 'The deceased brother's wife³⁶ shall³⁷ neither perform the halizah nor contract levirate marriage before three months have passed.³⁸ Similarly all other women³⁹ shall be neither married nor betrothed before three months have passed,⁴⁰ whether they were virgins or non-virgins, whether widows or divorcees,⁴¹ whether betrothed or married.⁴¹ R. Judah ruled: Those who were married may be betrothed [forthwith] and those who were betrothed may even be married [forthwith], with the exception of a betrothed woman in Judea, because there the bridegroom was too intimate⁴² with her. R. Jose said: All [married] women³⁹ may be betrothed [forthwith] excepting the widow⁴³ owing to her mourning';⁴⁴ and in connection with this it was related: R. Eleazar⁴⁵ did not go one day to the Beth Hamidrash. On meeting R. Assi who was standing [in his way] he asked him, 'What was discussed at the Beth Hamidrash?' The other replied: 'Thus said R. Johanan: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose'. 'Does this then imply [it was asked] that only an individual opinion⁴⁶ is against him?'⁴⁷ [And the reply was] 'Yes; and so it was taught: A [married woman] who was always anxious⁴⁸ to spend her time⁴⁹ at her Paternal home,⁵⁰ or who had some angry quarrel with her husband,⁵¹ or whose husband was old or infirm,⁵¹ or one who was herself infirm,⁵² barren, old, a minor, congenitally incapable of conception or in any other way incapacitated from procreation, or one whose husband was in prison,⁵¹ or one who had miscarried after the death of her husband, [each of] these must⁵³ wait three months;⁵⁴ so R. Meir, but R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage'.⁵⁵ Now what need was there⁵⁶ [to state this]⁵⁷ seeing that it had already been laid down that 'in a dispute between R. Meir and R. Jose the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose'?⁵⁸ — But what is really the difficulty? Is it not possible [that R. Johanan⁵⁹ intended] to indicate that the law was not in agreement with R. Nahman who in the name of Samuel had laid down: 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Meir in his restrictive measures'⁶⁰ — [R. Mesharsheya's statement] then is derived from the following where it was taught: 'One may attend a fair of idolaters and buy of them cattle, menservants, maidservants, houses, fields and vineyards; one may write [the necessary documents] and present them even in their courts⁶¹ because thereby one merely wrests his property for their hands.⁶² If he is a priest⁶³ he may incur [the risk of] defilement by going outside the Land⁶⁴ to litigate with them and to contest the claims. And just as he may risk defilement without the Land so may he defile himself by entering a graveyard. ("A graveyard"! How could this be imagined? Is not this a defilement Pentateuchally forbidden? — A grave area⁶⁵ rather which is only Rabbinically forbidden is to be understood). One may also incur the risk of defilement for the sake of taking a wife or studying the Torah. R. Judah said: This applies only where a man cannot find [in the home country] a place in which to study but when he can find there a place for study he may not risk his defilement. R. Jose said: Even when he can find there a place where to study he may also risk defilement since

- (60) Since in this case R. Meir upholds the restrictive ruling it might have been assumed that, despite the general rule that the halachah agrees with R. Jose, the halachah here, in accordance with R. Nahman's rule, is to be in agreement with R. Meir, hence it was necessary for R. Johanan specifically to lay down that the halachah in this else also was in agreement with R. Jose.

no person is so meritorious as to be able to learn from any teacher. And R. Jose related: It once happened that Joseph the Priest went to his Master at Zidon¹ to study Torah'; and in connection with this R. Johanan said: 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose';² but what need was there [for this specific statement] seeing that it has already been laid down that 'in a dispute between R. Judah and R. Jose the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose'?³ — Abaye replied: This⁴ was necessary. Since it might — have been presumed that [the general rules]⁵ applied only to a Mishnah but not to a Baraita hence we were informed [here⁶ of R. Johanan's statement].⁷ [R. Mesharsheya],⁸ however, meant this: Those rules were not unanimously approved, since Rab⁹ in fact did not accept them.

Rab Judah laid down in the name of Samuel: Objects belonging to a gentile do not acquire their place for the Sabbath.¹⁰ In accordance with whose view has this ruling been laid down? If it be suggested: According to that of the Rabbis [the objection would arise:] Is not this obvious? Since objects of hefker,¹¹ though they have no owner,¹² do not acquire their place for the Sabbath was it necessary to state that the same law applies to a gentile's objects, which have an owner?¹³ — The fact is that the ruling¹⁴ has been laid down in accordance with the view of R. Johanan b. Nuri, and it is this that we were informed: That R. Johanan b. Nuri's ruling that¹⁵ objects acquire their place for the Sabbath applied only to objects of hefker, since they have no owner, but not to a gentile's objects which have an owner.

An objection was raised: R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: If an Israelite borrowed an object from a gentile¹⁶ on a festival day, and so also if an Israelite lent an object to a gentile on the eve of a festival¹⁷ and the latter returned it to him on the festival, and so also any utensils and stores¹⁸ that were kept¹⁹ within the Sabbath limit of the town, may be carried within a radius of two thousand cubits in every direction.²⁰ If a gentile has brought fruit to an Israelite from a place beyond his Sabbath limit, the latter²¹ may not move them from their position.²² Now if you grant that R. Johanan b. Nuri holds that a gentile's objects do acquire their place for the Sabbath, it might well be explained that this ruling²³ is in agreement with the view of R. Johanan b. Nuri. If, however, you contend that R. Johanan b. Nuri holds that a gentile's objects do not acquire their place for the Sabbath [the objection would arise:] Whose view does it represent seeing that it is neither that of R. Johanan b. Nuri nor that of the Rabbis?²⁴ — R. Johanan b. Nuri may in fact maintain that a gentile's objects do acquire their place for the Sabbath, but Samuel laid down his ruling in agreement with the Rabbis. And as to your objection,²⁵ 'According to that of the Rabbis . . . is not this obvious?' [it may be replied:] Since one might have presumed that a restriction was imposed in the case of a gentile owner as a preventive measure against an infringement of the law in the case of an Israelite owner, hence we were informed [that no such restriction was deemed necessary]. R. Hiyya b. Abin, however, laid down in the name of R. Johanan: The objects of a gentile acquire their place for the Sabbath, a restriction having been imposed upon those of a gentile owner as a preventive measure against the infringement of the law in the case of those of an Israelite owner.

Some rams once arrived at Mabrakt²⁶ and Raba permitted the inhabitants of Mahuza²⁷ to purchase them.²⁸ Said Rabina to Raba: What [authority is it that you have in] your mind?²⁹ That of Rab Judah who laid down in the name of Samuel that a gentile's objects do not acquire their place for the Sabbath?³⁰ Surely, in a dispute between Samuel and R. Johanan the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan, and R. Hiyya b. Abin has laid down in the name of R. Johanan: The objects of a gentile acquire their place for the Sabbath, a restriction having been imposed upon those of a gentile owner as a preventive measure against the infringement of the law in the case of those of an Israelite owner? Raba thereupon ruled: Let them³¹ be sold to the people of Mabrakta since in their case all Mabrakta is deemed to be only four cubits in extent.³²

R. Hiyya taught: A fish-pond between two Sabbath limits³³ requires

(1) A town on the north coast of Syria without the borders of Palestine and excluded, therefore, from the levitical cleanness of Palestine.

(2) A.Z. 13a.

(3) V. supra p. 328, n. 15.

(4) R. Johanan's specific statement in this particular case.

(5) On the halachah (supra 46b).

(6) In the case of a Baraitha.

(7) Thus indicating that the rules are general and are applicable to the Baraitha as well as to the Mishnah.

(8) Against whom the objection now remains: Whence did he derive his statement that the rules on the halachah (supra 46b) were to be disregarded.

(9) As shown supra 47a.

(10) Any person may carry them within his own Sabbath limit.

(11) V. Glos.

(12) In consequence of which it might have been presumed that they should acquire their own place.

(13) The Sabbath limit of owned objects being determined by that of their owner, the objects of a gentile, who himself does not acquire his place for the Sabbath, could not obviously acquire any such place for themselves.

(14) Of Samuel.

(15) Cf. MS.M. Cur. edd. 'And we are informed: Say, that R. Johanan b. Nuri ruled'.

(16) Who lived in the same town.

(17) And having been with the gentile in the same town at the time the festival began the object acquired its place within the Sabbath limit of the town.

(18) Of hefker.

(19) Lit., 'rested'.

(20) But no further. In the case of the object that the gentile returned on the festival, though its Israelite owner has prepared an 'erub which enables him to walk beyond two thousand cubits from the town, he may not carry with him that object beyond a distance of two thousand cubits from the town.

(21) Since the fruit have acquired their place without the Sabbath limit of the town, and having been carried into the town they are now outside their permitted limit.

(22) Beyond a distance of four cubits.

(23) Of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.

(24) Consequently it must be conceded that according to R. Johanan b. Nuri a gentile's objects do acquire their place for the Sabbath. How then could it be said supra that Samuel's ruling to the contrary was in agreement with that of R. Johanan b. Nuri?

(25) Supra p. 330.

(26) A village within four thousand cubits from Mahuza.

(27) Who by means of an 'erub were enabled to walk from their town to the village.

(28) And to take their purchases with them to Mahuza though the gentile sellers had brought them from a place beyond them from a place beyond the Sabbath limit of that town. [This occurred on a festival, when it is permissible to obtain on credit purchases of food, v. R. Hananel].

(29) In permitting the rams (cf. prev. n.) to be taken beyond their original Sabbath limit.

(30) In consequence of which the rams could be taken within the Sabbath limits of their Israelite purchasers.

(31) The rams.

(32) As laid down by R. Gamaliel (Mishnah Supra 41b in the case of a cattle-pen, a cattle-fold or a ship) whose ruling, as Rab testified (supra 42b), is the accepted halachah and applies also to a town that has walls around it.

(33) Of two towns between which it is situated.

an iron wall¹ to divide it [into two independent sections].² R. Jose son of R. Hanina laughed at him. Why did he laugh? If it be suggested: Because the latter taught this in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri³ [that the law is] to be restricted,⁴ while he is of the same opinion as the Rabbis⁵ [that the law is] to be relaxed,⁶ [is it likely, it may be asked,] that because he is of the opinion that the law is to be relaxed he would laugh at any one⁷ who learned that it was to be restricted? — Rather say: Because it was taught: Running rivers and gushing springs⁸ are on a par with the feet of all men.⁹ But is it not possible that he¹⁰ spoke of collected water?¹¹ — Rather say: Because he¹⁰ taught: 'Requires an iron wall to divide it'. For why should not reeds be admissible?¹² Obviously because the water would pass through them; but then, in the case of an iron wall too, the water might pass.¹³ But is it not possible that he¹⁰ meant: 'Requires . . .' hence there is no remedy?¹⁴ — Rather say: Because the Sages have in fact relaxed the law in respect of water;¹⁵ as R. Tabla [was informed]. For R. Tabla enquired of Rab: Does a suspended partition convert a ruin into a permitted domain? And the other replied: A suspended partition can effect permissibility of use in the case of water only, since it is only in the case of water that the Sages have relaxed the law.¹⁶

THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: HE HAS ONLY FOUR etc. Is not R. Judah¹⁷ repeating the very view of the first Tanna?¹⁸ Raba replied: There is a difference between them, [for the first Tanna allows an area of] eight cubits by eight.¹⁹ So it was also taught: He has [the right to walk within an area of] eight cubits by eight; so R. Meir.

Raba further stated: They²⁰ differ only on the question of walking, but regarding the movement of objects both agree that it is permitted²¹ [along a distance of] four cubits but no more.

Where in Scripture are these four cubits²² recorded? — As it was taught: Abide ye every man in his place,²³ which implies within an area equal to 'his place'. And what is the area of 'his place'? Three cubits for his body and one cubit for stretching out his hands and feet; so R. Meir. R. Judah said: Three cubits for his body and one cubit to enable²⁴ him to take up an object at his feet and put it down at his head. What is the practical difference between them?²⁵ The practical difference between them is [that according to R. Judah the measurements of] the four cubits are to be exact.²⁶

R. Mesharsheya requested his son: When you visit R. Papa, ask him whether the four cubits of which the Rabbis have spoken²⁷ are measured²⁸ by the arm²⁹ of each individual concerned or by the standard cubit³⁰ used for sacred objects. If he tells you that the measurement is to be made by the cubit used for sacred objects, [ask him:] What should be done in the case of³¹ Og the king of Bashan;³² and if he tells you that the measurement is to be made by the arm of each individual concerned, ask him: Why was not this measurement³³ taught among those which the Rabbis have prescribed in accordance with each individual?³⁴ When he came to R. Papa the latter told him: 'If we had been so punctilious we would not have learnt anything.'³⁵ The fact is that the measurement is calculated by the arm of each individual concerned, and as to your objection, "Why was not this measurement taught among those which the Rabbis have prescribed in accordance with each individual", [it may be explained] that the ruling could not be regarded as definite since [even a normal person] may have stumped limbs'.³⁶

IF THERE WERE TWO MEN AND A PART OF THE PRESCRIBED NUMBER OF CUBITS OF THE ONE etc. What need was there for him³⁷ to make the remark, TO WHAT MAY THIS CASE BE COMPARED? — It is this that R. Simeon meant to say to the Rabbis: 'Consider! TO WHAT MAY THIS CASE BE COMPARED? TO THREE COURTYARDS THAT ARE OPENING ONE INTO THE OTHER AND ALSO INTO A PUBLIC DOMAIN;³⁸ why then do you differ there³⁹ and not here?'⁴⁰ And the Rabbis?⁴¹ There⁴² the residents are many⁴³ but here⁴⁴ they are few.⁴⁵

BUT THE TWO OUTER ONES etc. But why?⁴⁶ Do not the outer ones, since they have joined in an 'erub with the middle one,⁴⁷ constitute one permitted domain?⁴⁸ — Rab Judah replied: This is a case, for instance, where the middle one deposited its one 'erub in one courtyard and its other 'erub in the other courtyard.⁴⁹ R. Shesheth, however, replied: It may even be assumed that they⁵⁰ deposited their erubs in the middle one, [but this is a case, for instance,] where they had deposited it might erroneously assume that the former may also have free access to one another and would this infringe the laws of 'erub.

(1) Running across the pond from one side to the other, on the boundary line between the two Sabbath limits.

(2) So that the water of the one section shall not be mingled with that of the other. The water of the pond does not acquire its own place but is deemed to be on a par with the feet of the people of that town within whose Sabbath limit it happens to be. As each section of the pond lies at the very end of the Sabbath limit of the town nearest to it the water of that section must not be carried beyond four cubits from the boundary line in the direction of the other town; and it is only an iron wall that in the opinion of R. Hiyya can prevent the water in the respective sections from mingling with one another. In the absence of such a wall the mingling of the waters of the two sections would on a Sabbath or a festival day prevent the inhabitants of either town from carrying them to their homes.

[The order of the argument is reversed in R. Hananel's text: Why was this measurement not taught among . . . individuals. And should you argue that it is because there may be one who has stumped limbs, then it should have stated, except one who has stumped limbs? Thereupon R. Papa replied: 'If we had been so punctilious' etc. This reading removes the obvious difficulty involved in our text].

(44) In the case of the three men spoken of in our Mishnah.

(45) And such an erroneous assumption (cf. prev. n.) on their part is unlikely.

(46) Are the two outer courtyards FORBIDDEN ACCESS TO ONE ANOTHER?

(47) It is now assumed that the 'erub in which the residents of both the outer courtyards have participated had been deposited in one of the houses of the middle one.

(48) In which all are partners who may freely move their objects within it.

(49) While the residents of the two outer courtyards deposited no 'erubs in the middle one. The residents of the latter, by virtue of their 'erubs, are regarded as residents of the outer courtyards as well as of their own, while the residents of the outer courtyards, having no 'erubs in the middle courtyard, cannot be regarded as its residents; and since these have in consequence no domain in common, they cannot be permitted access to one another.

(50) The residents of the two outer courtyards.

in two houses.¹ In agreement with whose view?² Is it in agreement with that of Beth Shammai since it was taught: If five residents³ collected their 'erub⁴ and deposited it in two receptacles,⁵ their 'erub, Beth Shammai ruled, is invalid⁶ and Beth Hillel ruled: Their 'erub is valid?⁷ — It⁸ may be said to be in agreement even with the view of Beth Hillel, since Beth Hillel might have maintained their view Only there⁹ where the 'erub, though kept in two receptacles, was in one and the same house, but not here¹⁰ where¹¹ it was kept in two houses.¹²

Said R. Aha son of R. Iwia to R. Ashi: A difficulty presents itself on the interpretation of Rab Judah as well as on that of R. Shesheth. On Rab Judah's interpretation the following difficulty arises: As he explained that 'This was a case, for instance, where the middle one deposited its 'erub in the one courtyard and its other 'erub in the other courtyard', and since the middle one, having first joined in an 'erub with one of the outer ones, constituted with it one domain, does it not, when it subsequently joins in an 'erub with the other,¹³ act on behalf of the former also?¹⁴ On the interpretation of R. Shesheth also a difficulty arises: Why should not this case¹⁵ be subject to the same law as that of five men who resided in one courtyard and one of whom had forgotten to contribute his share to their 'erub, where these men impose upon one another the prescribed restrictions in the use of that courtyard?¹⁶ — R. Ashi replied: There is really no difficulty either on the view of Rab Judah or on that of R. Shesheth. On that of Rab Judah there is no difficulty because, since the residents of the middle courtyard joined in an 'erub with those of each of the outer ones while the latter did not join one another in a common 'erub, they have thereby intimated that they were satisfied with the former association¹⁷ but not with the latter.¹⁸ On the view of R. Shesheth too there is really no difficulty. For would the Rabbis who regarded [the people of the outer courtyards as] residents [of the middle one] in order to relax the law¹⁹ also treat them as its residents²⁰ to impose additional restrictions?²¹

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: 'This²² is the view of R. Simeon. The Sages, however, ruled: The one domain²³ may be used by the residents of the two²⁴ but the two²⁴ domains may not be used by the residents of the one.²⁵ When I recited this in the presence of Samuel²⁶ he said to me:

(1) So that, though the residents of each one of the outer courtyards and those of the middle one, on account of the 'erubs in which they respectively joined, are respectively permitted access to one another, no access can be permitted between the two former who had no 'erub in common.

(2) Is the interpretation of R. Shesheth made.

(3) Of the same courtyard.

(4) Each of them contributing his share.

(5) In the same house.

- (6) An 'erub, they maintain, must be deposited in one utensil only.
- (7) Infra 49b. As Beth Hillel regard the 'erub is valid though it was deposited in two receptacles so, it is assumed, would they regard the 'erubs of the outer courtyards as valid though they were deposited in two houses; while Beth Shammai who rule the 'erub to be in valid in the former case would equally do so in the latter case. Is it likely, however, that our Mishnah would agree with Beth Shammai in opposition to the generally accepted view of Beth Hillel?
- (8) Our Mishnah.
- (9) In the Baraitha cited.
- (10) Our Mishnah.
- (11) According to R. Shesheth.
- (12) Our Mishnah, therefore, may, even according to R. Shesheth's interpretation, well agree with the view of Beth Hillel also.
- (13) The outer courtyard on its other side.
- (14) With whom it is now mingled into one domain. Why then, according to R. Judah, are the outer courtyards forbidden access to one another?
- (15) That of the three courtyards in our Mishnah where the middle one, by joining in 'erubs with each of the outer ones, has become the common domain of all the three.
- (16) Though the four of them had duly joined in the preparation of all 'erub. In the case of the three courtyards, since all their residents are now (cf. prev. n.) virtual residents in the middle courtyard, those of the outer ones who (by failing to deposit their 'erubs in one house) are forbidden access to one another are obviously in relation to each other and to the middle one in the same position as the one man (who forgot to join in the 'erub) to the four (who did prepare one). Consequently they should impose upon one another (like the one and the four) all the prescribed restrictions; and the use of the middle courtyard (as is the case with the courtyard of the five) should as a result be forbidden to all residents including even its own.
- (17) Lit., 'in that', the association between the middle courtyard and either of the outer ones.
- (18) Sc. an association between all the three courtyards as would render them the virtual residents of one common domain. This case, therefore, cannot be compared to that of the five men all of whom are actual residents in the same courtyard.
- (19) To enable them to have access to the middle one.
- (20) Despite the fact that they did not actually reside in it.
- (21) That the very residents of the middle courtyard, in whose favour the law had been relaxed, should, as result of this very relaxation, be forbidden to use their own courtyard? — Of course not.
- (22) That the outer courtyards are permitted access to the middle one and the latter is equally permitted access to the former.
- (23) The middle courtyard.
- (24) The outer ones.
- (25) Irrespective of whether the middle one deposited an 'erub in each of the outer ones or whether the latter deposited their respective 'erubs in the former. In either case it is permitted to move objects from the outer ones into the middle one, since each of the former represents a properly united domain. It is Forbidden, however, to move objects From the middle one into either of the former since two opposing domains that have nothing in common dominate it simultaneously and the force of the one domain prevents any object from being moved from its position into the other domain. Only where the three courtyards have united in one common 'erub can they be regarded as one domain in which the movement of objects from any one courtyard into any other is freely permitted.
- (26) Whose academy he joined for some time after the death of Rab.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 49a

This also¹ is the view of R. Simeon.² The Sages, however, ruled: The three courtyards are forbidden access to one another'.

It was taught in agreement with the view which Rab Judah had from Samuel.³ R. Simeon remarked: To what may this⁴ be compared? To three courtyards that open one into the other and also into a public domain, where, if the two outer ones made an 'erub with the middle one, the residents of each of the two may bring food from their houses [into the middle one] and eat it there and then they may carry back any remnants to their houses;⁵ but the Sages ruled: The three courtyards are forbidden access to one another.⁶

Samuel⁷ in fact follows a view he expressed elsewhere.⁸ For Samuel laid down: In the case of a courtyard between two alleys⁹ the residents of the former, though they made an 'erub with the residents of both alleys, are nevertheless forbidden access to either. If they made no 'erub with either, they¹⁰ cause¹¹ the movement of objects to be forbidden in both alleys.¹² If they were in the habit of using one of the alleys but were not in the habit of using the other¹³ the movement of objects is forbidden in the one which they were in the habit of using¹⁴ but¹⁵ permitted in the one which they were not in the habit of using.¹⁶

Rabbah son of R. Huna ruled: If [the middle courtyard] made an erub with the alley which it was not in the habit of using, the one which it was in the habit of using¹⁷ is permitted to make an 'erub on its own.

Rabbah son of R. Huna further stated in the name of Samuel: If [the alley] which it¹⁸ was in the habit of using made an 'erub on its own while the one which it was not in the habit of using made no 'erub on its own, and [the middle courtyard] itself made no 'erub with either, its is referred to the one which it was not in the habit of using;¹⁹ for in such circumstances²⁰ one may be compelled not to act after the manner of Sodom.²¹

Rab Judah laid down in the name of Samuel: If a man is particular about his [share in an] 'erub,²² his 'erub is invalid; for what is its name? 'Amalgamation'.²³ R. Hanina ruled: His 'erub is valid though he himself might be called, 'One of the men of Wardina.'²⁴

Rab Judah further ruled in the name of Samuel: If one divides his 'erub,²⁵ it is invalid.²⁶ In agreement with whose view?²⁷ Is it in agreement with that of Beth Shammai, since it was taught: If five residents collected their 'erub and deposited it in two receptacles, their 'erub, Beth Shammai ruled, is invalid and Beth Hillel ruled: Their 'erub is valid?²⁸ — It²⁹ may be said to agree even with the view of Beth Hillel, for it is only there that Beth Hillel maintained their view,³⁰ where the receptacle was filled to capacity and something³¹ remained without,³² but not here where it was originally divided in two parts.³³ But what need was there for the two rulings?³⁴ — Both were required. For if we had been informed of the former ruling only³⁵ it might have been assumed [that only there is the 'erub invalid] since the man is particular,³⁶ but not here.³⁷ And if we had been informed of the latter ruling only,³⁸ it might have been assumed [that only here is the 'erub invalid] since it was intentionally divided,³⁹ but not there.⁴⁰ Hence both were required.

R. Abba addressed the following question to Rab Judah at the schoolhouse⁴¹ of R. Zakkai: Could Samuel have said: 'If a man divides his 'erub, it is invalid', seeing that he has laid down, 'The house in which an 'erub is deposited need not contribute its share to the bread'?⁴² Now what is the reason [for this ruling]? Is it not because he maintains that since there is bread lying in the basket⁴³ it is regarded as lying in the place appointed for the 'erub?⁴⁴ Then⁴⁵ why should it not be said in this case also, 'So long as there is bread lying in the basket⁴⁶ it is regarded as lying in the place appointed for the 'erub'?⁴⁷ — The other replied: There⁴⁸ the 'erub is valid even if there was no other bread in the house.⁴⁹ What is the reason? — Because all the residents of the courtyard⁵⁰ virtually live there.⁵¹

Samuel stated: The efficacy of an 'erub is due to the principle of kinyan.⁵² And should you ask: 'Why then⁵³ should not the kinyan be effected by means of a ma'ah?⁵⁴ [it could be replied:] Because it is not easily obtainable on Sabbath eves. But why should not a ma'ah effect acquisition at least where the residents did use it for an 'erub? — Its use is forbidden as a preventive measure against the possibility of assuming that a ma'ah was essential, as a result of which, when sometimes a ma'ah would be unobtainable, no one would prepare an 'erub with bread, and the institution of 'erub would in consequence deteriorate. Rabbah stated: The efficacy of an 'erub is due to the principle of habitation.⁵⁵ What is the practical difference between them?⁵⁶ — The difference between them is the case of an 'erub that was prepared with an object of apparel,⁵⁷ with food that was worth less than a perutah⁵⁸

- (1) That 'the one domain may be used by the residents of the two but the two domains may not be used by the residents of the one' (cf. Rashi s.v. עֶרֶב a.l. second version).
- (2) Though generally his ruling is more lenient than that of the Rabbis.
- (3) That even R. Simeon only permitted access from the outer courtyards to the inner one and not vice versa.
- (4) The case of three men where the prescribed limit of the middle one overlapped with the limits of the others (v. our Mishnah).
- (5) Lit., 'this brings from her house and eats etc. and this returns her remainder to her house' etc.
- (6) Now, since R. Simeon here only permits the residents of the outer courtyards to use the middle one and not vice versa, this Baraita is obviously in agreement with Samuel's view.
- (7) In the view submitted here in his name (cf. supra n. 4).
- (8) Lit., 'his reason' or 'taste'.
- (9) Into each of which it has a door.
- (10) If they were in the habit of using the two alleys during the weekdays.
- (11) By their right of entry which disturbs any association that the residents of either alley may have formed.
- (12) I.e., in either alley it is forbidden to carry any object from its courtyards into the open alley.
- (13) And they made no 'erub with either.
- (14) Cf. supra p. 339, n. 12.
- (15) Since they have no right of entry to it.
- (16) Now since Samuel, who ruled here that 'In the case of a courtyard between two alleys the residents of the former, though they made an 'erub with the residents of both alleys, are nevertheless forbidden access to either', also laid down that in respect of 'erub the halachah is to be decided in agreement with that authority that relaxed the law, it follows that even R. Simeon upholds this ruling. For had R. Simeon relaxed it, Samuel, in accordance with his own principle, would have relaxed it too.
- (17) Since by its 'erub with the other alley the middle courtyard had intimated its intention not to use it on that Sabbath.
- (18) The middle courtyard.
- (19) Which, having prepared no 'erub, loses thereby nothing; while the other alley which did prepare its 'erub gains the advantage of being undisturbed by the middle courtyard's intrusion.
- (20) Where one gains an advantage from another who loses nothing thereby.
- (21) Who were traditionally known to have adopted a dog-in-the-manger attitude (cf. B.B. 12b, 59a, 16 and Aboth V, 10).
- (22) Sc. he would not allow it to be eaten by any of the others who contributed to that 'erub .
- (23) Or 'combination' (עֵירוּב rt. עֶרֶב 'to mix'). All the contributors must be united in a friendly and pleasant association in which one does not mind the consumption of his share by any of the outer associates.
- (24) Wardina (Barada) on the eastern bank of the Tigris, two hours distance north of Bagdad, whose inhabitants were notorious for their stinginess, v. Obermeyer p. 270.
- (25) Sc. deposits it in two utensils.
- (26) 'Erub' implying 'combination' (cf. supra p. 340, n. 10), it must all be in one place.
- (27) Did Samuel give this ruling.
- (28) Supra 48b q.v. notes. Now, is it likely that Samuel would rule in agreement with Beth Shammai contrary to the ruling of Beth Hillel which is the accepted halachah?
- (29) Samuel's ruling under discussion.
- (30) That the 'erub is invalid.
- (31) Of the 'erub .
- (32) So that the 'erub that was intended to be wholly deposited in one and the same receptacle became broken and incomplete.
- (33) And its division is part of the original scheme.

- (34) Of Samuel. Both being based on the signification of the term ‘erub’, could not one be deduced from the other?
- (35) Lit., ‘there’, the case of the man who is particular about his share in the ‘erub.
- (36) In consequence of which the amalgamation (cf. supra p. 340, n. 10) is incomplete.
- (37) Where the ‘erub was deposited in two receptacles, and the friendly association between the residents is in no way affected.
- (38) Lit., ‘here’, the case of an ‘erub deposited in two receptacles.
- (39) A divided ‘erub (‘combination’) being a contradiction in terms.
- (40) Where (cf. supra n. 11) the reason given (cf. prev. n.) is inapplicable.
- (41) ‘Aliter: Press-room.
- (42) Of which the ‘erub is made up.
- (43) Anywhere in the house where the ‘erub is deposited, for the consumption of the members of that household.
- (44) Lit., ‘here’.
- (45) The answer being apparently in the affirmative.
- (46) Sc. in one of the two receptacles in the same house.
- (47) I.e., as if the two parts were deposited in one and the same receptacle.
- (48) In the case of the last mentioned ruling of Samuel.
- (49) Though in such circumstances the principle, ‘So long as there is bread lying in the basket’ etc. is inapplicable.
- (50) By virtue of their contributions to the ‘erub .
- (51) And this is the reason why the people who actually live in the house where the ‘erub was deposited need not contribute any share of bread to it.
- (52) V. Glos. The owner of the house in which the ‘erub is deposited transfers the possession of his house to all the contributors who thereby become joint owners of the house as they were and are the joint owners of the courtyard. The house and courtyard thus assume the status of the same domain throughout which all the residents may freely move their objects as in a private domain.
- (53) Since the basis of ‘erub is kinyan or acquisition.
- (54) Certain coin (v. Glos.). Instead of bread each resident could have contributed a ma'ah and thereby acquired a share in the house.
- (55) A man's life being dependent on his food all the residents are deemed to live in that house where their food is deposited. As the courtyard in consequence has virtually no more than one house it belongs to that house in its entirety (cf. supra n. 10 mutatis mutandis).
- (56) Samuel and Rabbah.
- (57) A scarf for instance. As kinyan may be effected by means of such an object the ‘erub is valid according to Samuel. As, unlike bread, man's life is not dependent on it the house in which it is kept cannot be regarded as the common home of the residents and the ‘erub, according to Rabbah, is consequently invalid.
- (58) V. Glos. As kinyan cannot be effected by means of anything whose value is less than a perutah, the ‘erub prepared with food worth less than a perutah, however much its quantity, is invalid according to Samuel. As the principle of habitation, however, not being dependent on price but on quantity, is applicable, the ‘erub is valid according to Rabbah.

or by a minor.¹

Said Abaye to Rabbah: An objection can be raised both against your view and against that of Samuel. For was it not taught: ‘If five residents who collected their ‘erub² desired to transfer it to another place,³ one may take it there on behalf of all of them,’⁴ [from which it follows that it is] that man alone that performs the kinyan⁵ and no other, and that it is he alone who acquires the habitation and no other.⁶ — The other replied: This is no objection either against my view or against that of Samuel, since the man acts on behalf of all of them.⁷ Rabbah stated in the name of R. Hama b. Gorias who had it from Rab: The halachah, is in agreement with R. Simeon.⁸

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WHO WAS ON A JOURNEY [HOMEWARD]⁹ WAS OVERTAKEN BY DUSK,¹⁰ AND HE KNEW OF A TREE OR A WALL¹¹ AND SAID, ‘LET MY SABBATH

BASE BE UNDER IT',¹² HIS STATEMENT IS OF NO AVAIL.¹³ IF, HOWEVER, HE SAID, LET MY SABBATH BASE BE AT ITS ROOT',¹⁴ HE MAY WALK FROM THE PLACE WHERE HE STANDS TO ITS ROOT A DISTANCE OF TWO THOUSAND CUBITS, AND FROM ITS ROOT TO HIS HOUSE ANOTHER TWO THOUSAND CUBITS. THUS HE CAN WALK FOUR THOUSAND CUBITS AFTER DUSK.

IF HE DOES NOT KNOW OF ANY TREE OR WALL, OR IF¹⁵ HE IS NOT FAMILIAR WITH THE HALACHAH,¹⁶ AND SAID, LET MY PRESENT POSITION BE MY SABBATH BASE', HIS POSITION ACQUIRES FOR HIM THE RIGHT OF MOVEMENT WITHIN A RADIUS¹⁷ OF TWO THOUSAND CUBITS IN ANY DIRECTION; SO R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: THE DISTANCES¹⁸ ARE TO BE SQUARED IN THE SHAPE OF A SQUARE TABLET, SO THAT HE MAY GAIN THE AREA OF THE CORNERS.

THIS¹⁹ IT IS OF WHICH [THE RABBIS] HAVE SAID: A POOR MAN MAY MAKE HIS ERUB WITH HIS FEET.²⁰ R. MEIR SAID: WE CAN APPLY THIS LAW²¹ TO²² A POOR MAN ONLY.²³ R. JUDAH SAID: IT²¹ APPLIES TO BOTH RICH AND POOR, THE RABBIS ENACTMENT THAT AN ERUB IS TO BE PREPARED WITH BREAD HAVING THE ONLY PURPOSE OF MAKING IT EASIER FOR THE RICH MAN, SO THAT²⁴ HE SHALL NOT BE COMPELLED TO GO OUT HIMSELF AND MAKE THE ERUB WITH HIS FEET.

GEMARA. What exactly is the meaning of 'HIS STATEMENT IS OF NO AVAIL'? — Rab explained: HIS STATEMENT IS OF NO AVAIL whatsoever, so that he may not proceed even to the space under the tree.²⁵ Samuel, however, explained: HIS STATEMENT IS OF NO AVAIL as regards proceeding to his house; he may, however, proceed as far as the space under the tree.²⁶ The space under the tree, however, is to be measured²⁷ [as if one were acting both as an] ass-driver and a camel-driver.²⁸ If, for instance, the man desired to measure²⁹ from the northern side of the tree³⁰ he is told to begin his measuring from its southern side,³¹ and if he desired to measure from its southern side³² he is told to begin his measuring from the northern side.³³

(1) Who collected the 'erub from the residents and deposited it in one of the houses. A minor cannot act as agent in a kinyan, hence the invalidity of the 'erub according to Samuel. As the food, however, which he collected constitutes a common habitation for the residents, that is independent of his personality and rights, the 'erub is valid according to Rabbah.

(2) In connection with the courtyard in which they resided.

(3) Sc. they wish to join in an 'erub with the residents of another courtyard.

(4) I.e., it is sufficient even that it is his bread alone that is taken by him to that other place. V. infra 72b.

(5) An objection against Samuel.

(6) Which is an objection against Rabbah.

(7) The residents who originally joined him in the 'erub.

(8) That in the case of THREE COURTYARDS THAT OPEN ONE INTO THE OTHER the middle one IS PERMITTED TO HAVE ACCESS TO THEM AND THEY ARE PERMITTED ACCESS TO IT.

(9) On a Sabbath eve.

(10) J.T. and MS.M. read: 'and he feared that dusk might overtake him'.

(11) Within a Sabbath limit From his position in one direction and within a Sabbath limit from his home in the other direction.

(12) In order that he might thereby be enabled to walk to his home after the Sabbath had set in. His home being almost two Sabbath limits distant from his position he could not otherwise have reached it during the Sabbath.

(13) Lit., 'he did not say anything'. The reason is explained in the Gemara infra.

(14) I.e., he specified a particular spot of the size of four cubits under the tree.

(15) Knowing one.

(16) Which permits him to proceed in the manner just described.

(17) Lit., 'round'.

- (18) OF two thousand cubits from his position in the four directions.
- (19) A case like that of the man under way who, like a poor man, is unable to obtain bread For his 'erub.
- (20) Sc. food is not an essential for an 'erub, but by standing in the required spot at the time the Sabbath begins a poor man (cf. previous n.) may acquire it as his place for the Sabbath.
- (21) Cf. prev. n.
- (22) Lit., 'we have none'.
- (23) V. supra n. 11.
- (24) By having the choice of sending his 'erub to the required spot through an agent.
- (25) He must not move from his position until the conclusion of the Sabbath, since he has acquired no place for his Sabbath rest from which he could be enabled to walk within the permitted Sabbath limit. His right to the place on which he stood when the Sabbath had set in he expressly renounced by choosing another one, while the area under the tree could not be acquired by him since he had not specified which particular four cubits of that space he chose (cf. infra).
- (26) This will be discussed infra.
- (27) Lit., 'and is made'.
- (28) חזר גמול, cf. note on the Mishnah supra 35a; sc. the man concerned, as is explained anon, is forbidden to move far in either direction.
- (29) The two thousand cubits distance from the tree to his house.
- (30) So that he might be enabled to reach his house which was just within that required distance from that side of the tree.
- (31) Since, in appointing the tree as his Sabbath base, he did not specify which particular four cubits of space under that tree he desired to acquire, any four cubits space within the circumference of the tree and its branches may be assumed to be the appointed spot. In measuring the distances, therefore, a course must be adopted which under all circumstances could not possibly lead to all infringement of any of the restrictions involved. If the diameter of the circumference of the tree and its branches measured, for instance, twenty cubits, and the distance from its northern point to the man's house was exactly two thousand cubits, the measuring must not begin from that point but from the southern point of the diameter which is two thousand and twenty cubits distant from that house. And, since it is forbidden to proceed beyond two thousand cubits, the man's Sabbath limit would terminate at a point twenty cubits away from his house which, in consequence, he would not be able to enter during the Sabbath.
- (32) So as to be able to walk (cf. prev. n.) a distance of twenty cubits from the position he occupied when the Sabbath began.
- (33) In consequence of which he must not move one step in the southern direction from that position.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 50a

Rabbah stated: What is Rab's reason?¹ Because the man did not specify the exact spot.² Others read: Rabbah stated: What is Rab's reason? Because he is of the opinion that what cannot be acquired in succession³ cannot be acquired even simultaneously.⁴ What is the practical difference between them?⁵ The practical difference between them is the case where⁶ a man said: 'Let me acquire an area of four cubits out of the eight'. According to him who read: 'Because the man did not specify the exact spot' [such a statement is invalid, for here], surely, he did not specify the exact spot; but according to him who read: 'What cannot be acquired in succession cannot be acquired even simultaneously' such [a statement is valid] as [if an area of] four cubits [had been indicated] for here the man spoke of acquiring [no more than] four cubits.

cattle is different, since in a case of error²² it is applicable in succession,²³ for we have learnt: If the ninth was named tenth, and tenth ninth, and the eleventh tenth, all the three are consecrated.²⁴ But is not a thanksgiving offering invalid in a case of error²⁵ as well as in one of succession,²⁶ and yet it was stated: If the slaying of a sacrifice of thanksgiving²⁷ was accompanied by all offering of eighty loaves,²⁸ Hezekiah ruled: Forty out of these eighty are consecrated, and R. Johanan ruled: Forty out of eighty cannot be consecrated?²⁹ — Surely, in connection with this it was stated: R. Joshua b. Levi³⁰ explained: All³¹ agree that [forty of the loaves] are consecrated where the donor said: ‘Let forty out of the eighty be consecrated’; and no one³² disputes the ruling that none of the loaves is consecrated where he said: ‘The forty shall not be consecrated unless all the eighty are consecrated’; they only differ where the donor made no stipulation whatever, in which case one Master³³ is of the opinion that his intention³⁴ was to assure [the safety of the prescribed number] and that he brought the additional loaves conditionally only;³⁵

- (1) Samuel's reason one can well understand as explained supra p. 345, n. 8. But why should Rab deprive the man even of approach to a tree which he expressly appointed as his Sabbath base?
- (2) Cf. supra p. 345, n. 2. In appointing a Sabbath base a specified area of four cubits must be indicated.
- (3) An area of four cubits on the northern side of the tree, for instance, cannot be acquired after such an area had been acquired on its southern side, and vice versa.
- (4) The man's appointment of the entire area under the tree which included both its northern and southern sides, is, therefore, null and void.
- (5) The two versions of Rabbah's explanation.
- (6) The area under the tree being eight cubits.
- (7) For general use.
- (8) Tosef. Dem. VIII. Tithe must consist of a portion of the produce that is neither less nor more than a tenth of it. If, therefore, a person gives more than a tenth of his produce, say, a fifth, the portion that he named as tithe would actually contain no more than fifty per cent of tithe, while the other half, since no tithe was given for it, is tebel (v. Glos.) which may not be eaten either by priest or by layman.
- (9) If Rabbah's ruling is the accepted law.
- (10) Why is his produce well prepared?
- (11) If, for instance, tithe had once been taken from produce none of the remainder could acquire the sanctity of tithe even if that name had been given to it.
- (12) When, therefore, the proper share of tithe was given simultaneously with the improper addition, not even the former should acquire the name and Sanctity of tithe.
- (13) Sc. the acquisition of the name of tithe is unlike other forms of acquisitions.
- (14) Lit., ‘to halves’.
- (15) As tithe.
- (16) In the case of excessive tithe every grain in that quantity of produce assumed the sanctity of tithe in proportion to the percentage of actual tithe which that quantity contained, and the question of simultaneous acquisition does not arise. Such a consideration cannot apply to ‘erub, where the four cubits must be of one continuous stretch.
- (17) Half a living beast cannot be consecrated as tithe.
- (18) So MS.M. and Bah. Cur. edd. omit ‘and is . . . succession’. If, for instance, after the tenth beast in a line of cattle had been designated as tithe the eleventh was similarly designated, the latter acquires neither the name nor the sanctity.
- (19) This is the reading of the parallel passages in Kid. and Bek. Cur. edd. in parenthesis ‘Rabbah’.
- (20) When the tithing of cattle takes place. In giving such tithe the herd or flock is made to pass in single file under the rod (cf. Lev. XXVII, 32), and every tenth beast is declared to be holy (v. ibid.).
- (21) Bek. 60b. Because one of them is proper tithe and the other is unconsecrated and it is impossible to ascertain which is which. Thus it follows that the tithing of cattle though inapplicable in succession is applicable simultaneously. An objection against Rabbah.
- (22) Where, for instance, the tenth was counted as the ninth and the eleventh as the tenth.
- (23) The tenth becoming sacred as tithe and the eleventh as a peace-offering.
- (24) Bek. 60b. Cf. prev. n. mutatis mutandis.
- (25) If, for instance, after setting aside the forty loaves required for the offering (cf. Men. 77a) the donor mistakenly forgot and set aside another forty loaves, the latter, since consecration in error is invalid (cf. Naz. 31a), remain unconsecrated.

(26) Should a donor for instance, after he had once brought the forty loaves for the offering and after these had become consecrated by the offering of the sacrifice, bring another forty loaves for the same offering, the second set of loaves would be regarded as ordinary unconsecrated bread.

(27) The actual consecration of the loaves is effected when the sacrifice is slain (cf. Men. 78b).

(28) Instead of the prescribed forty.

(29) Men. 78b, Kid. 51a; which shows that, according to Hezekiah, simultaneous consecration is effective. Would then Rabbah differ From Hezekiah?

(30) This is the reading in Kid. Cur. edd. in parenthesis, 'Zera'.

(31) Even R. Johanan.

(32) Not even Hezekiah.

(33) Hezekiah.

(34) In bringing more loaves than was required.

(35) Sc. if as many as forty of the loaves should happen to be lost the remaining ones should replace them. Having brought the loaves with this intention only, the donor may be regarded as having expressly declared: 'Let only forty out of the eighty be consecrated', in which case his declaration is valid.

while the other Master¹ holds the view that the donor's intention was to provide a generous offering.² Abaye stated: This³ was learnt only in respect of a tree the diameter underneath which was [no less than] twelve cubits⁴ but in the case of a tree the diameter underneath which was less than twelve cubits, behold a part at least of the man's house⁵ is well marked out.⁶

R. Huna son of R. Joshua demurred: Whence is it proved that he has at all intended⁷ the middle four cubits? Is it not possible that he intended either the four cubits on the one side or the four on the other side?⁸ Rather, said R. Huna son of R. Joshua: This⁹ was learnt only in respect of a tree the diameter underneath which was [no less than] eight cubits,¹⁰ but in the case of a tree the diameter underneath which was only seven cubits, behold a part at least of his house is well marked out.¹¹

It was taught in agreement with Rab and it was also taught in agreement with Samuel. 'It was taught in agreement with Rab': If a man who was on a journey [homeward] was overtaken by dusk, and he knew of a tree or a wall and said: 'Let my Sabbath base be under it', his statement is of no avail, but if he said: 'Let my Sabbath base be in such and such a place'¹² he may continue his journey until he arrives at that place. Having arrived there he may walk throughout its interior and along a distance of two thousand cubits beyond it. This,¹³ however, applies only to a well defined spot as, for instance, a mound¹⁴ that was ten handbreadths high¹⁵ and from four cubits to two beth se'ah¹⁶ in area, or¹⁷ a valley that was ten handbreadths deep¹⁸ and from four cubits to two beth se'ah¹⁶ in area, but where the place is not well defined¹⁹ he is not allowed to move²⁰ more than four cubits. If two were [travelling together] and one of them knows [of a well defined place] and the other does not know of it, the latter transfers his right to choose a place²¹ to the former who then declares, 'My Sabbath base shall be in such and such a place'.²² This²³ only applies where the man had indicated the four cubits he selected by a mark,²⁴ but if he did not indicate the four cubits he had selected by any mark he must not stir²⁵ from his place.²⁶

Must it be said that this²⁷ presents an objection against Samuel?²⁸ Samuel can answer you: Here²⁹ we are dealing with a case where from the place on which the man stood to the root of the tree there were two thousand³⁰ and four³¹ cubits, so that if you were to put him on the further side of the tree³² he would be standing³³ outside his permitted limit;³⁴ hence, if he indicated four cubits [on the near side of the tree] he may proceed thither, otherwise he may not.³⁵

'It was taught in agreement with Samuel': If a man made a mistake and prepared 'erubs in two opposite directions, believing that it is permitted to provide 'erubs in two opposite directions, or if he said to his servants, 'Go and prepare an 'erub for me' and one prepared for him an 'erub in a northerly direction and the other prepared one for him in a southerly direction, he may proceed northwards as far as the limit of his southern 'erub and southwards as far as the limit of his northern 'erub.³⁶ But if they measured each limit exactly³⁷ he³⁸ may not stir from his place.³⁹ Must it be said that this⁴⁰ presents an objection against Rab?⁴¹ — No; Rab is a Tanna⁴² and is privileged to differ.⁴³

IF, HOWEVER, HE SAID LET MY SABBATH BASE BE AT ITS ROOT', HE MAY WALK FROM THE PLACE WHERE HE STANDS TO ITS ROOT A DISTANCE OF TWO THOUSAND CUBITS, AND FROM ITS ROOT TO HIS HOUSE ANOTHER TWO THOUSAND CUBITS. THUS HE CAN WALK FOUR THOUSAND CUBITS AFTER DUSK.

(1) R. Johanan.

(2) Which of course, is not permissible; hence R. Johanan's ruling that none of the loaves are consecrated. Thus it has been shown that only where the donor's expression, explicit or implicit, was 'forty out of eighty' does Hezekiah maintain that the prescribed forty are consecrated. This, therefore, in no way contradicts Rabbah's ruling, since in the case of 'erub also a man may acquire his Sabbath base under a tree if he used the expression, 'Let me acquire an area of four cubits out of the eight' (supra 50a ab init.).

(3) The ruling in our Mishnah according to Rab's interpretation that 'HIS STATEMENT is OF NO AVAIL, whatsoever'.

(4) The length thus comprising no less than three sections of four cubits each, it is impossible to ascertain whether it was the middle section or one of the outer ones that the man desired to acquire as his Sabbath base.

(5) Sc. his base for that Sabbath under the tree in question.

(6) If the diameter, for instance, was only eleven cubits, each four cubits at either of the extremities must inevitably overlap half a cubit with the middle four cubits. If then the man chose the middle section, all his Sabbath base is obviously well defined; but even if he intended one of the outer sections to be his Sabbath base each of them is at least partially defined in that part where it overlaps with the middle sections. His base may, therefore, be regarded as located in full or in part in that section.

(7) Lit., 'marked'.

(8) And none in the middle. As the two outer sections do not overlap at any point, how could the man's 'house' be said to be 'well marked out'?

(9) V. supra n. 1.

(10) Where it is uncertain which section was intended.

(11) In the middle cubit which must inevitably form a part of any section of four cubits that the man may have intended.

(12) The limits of which (as presently explained) were properly defined.

(13) That the man is permitted to walk two thousand cubits beyond the place in addition to his freedom of movement throughout its interior.

(14) Lit., 'that he rested (sc. appointed as his place for the Sabbath) in a mound'.

(15) The sides forming a kind of wall around it.

(16) V. Glos.

(17) Lit., 'and so'.

(18) The sides thus forming a kind of wall around it.

(19) If, e.g., it had no walls or was bigger than two beth se'ah.

(20) In its interior, in addition to the two thousand cubits he is allowed in all directions.

(21) Lit., 'his (intended place of) rest'.

(22) And both are thereby entitled to free movement throughout its interior and along a distance of two thousand cubits beyond.

(23) That in an undefined place one acquires at least the right of movement within an area of four cubits and along two thousand cubits in all its directions.

(24) Such as a tree or a stone.

(25) Beyond the permitted four cubits.

(26) Because he cannot acquire the place he had selected on account of his omission to indicate any mark in it; and he cannot acquire the place on which he stands on account of his declaration that he desired to acquire another one. This ruling being in complete agreement with that of Rab (v. supra 49b and notes) the Baraitha may well be cited in his support.

(27) The Baraitha just cited in support of Rab (cf. prev. n.).

(28) Who (v. supra 49b) allows the man to walk to the tree though he did not indicate which four cubits under that tree he had selected.

(29) In ruling that 'he must not stir from his place'.

(30) The permitted Sabbath limit.

(31) The area allowed as one's resting place for the Sabbath.

(32) Sc. if the man's Sabbath base were said to be on that side, which is outside the two thousand and four cubits within which he is permitted to walk.

(33) At the time the Sabbath began.

(34) Cf. supra note 1.

(35) The tree spoken of in our Mishnah, however, proceeding to which is according to Samuel permitted, is one whose root and branches were within the two thousand and four cubits from the place where the man stood when the Sabbath had set in.

(36) If the two 'erubs, for instance, were deposited respectively at distances of a thousand cubits from the man's home, the northern one alone should have enabled him to proceed two thousand cubits in all directions including two thousand cubits in the direction of his home terminating at a distance of a thousand cubits from its southern side. The southern 'erub alone should have entitled him to similar privileges including two thousand in a northerly direction terminating at a distance of a thousand from the northern side of his house. As it is uncertain which of his 'erubs is more effective than the other the restriction resulting from both are imposed upon him and he may not move beyond a thousand cubits from his house either in a northerly or in a southerly direction.

(37) Sc. if each 'erub was deposited at the very end of the Sabbath limits in both the mentioned directions i.e., at distances of two thousand cubits from his home.

(38) Having lost his right to his home as his abode for that Sabbath, on account of the 'erubs whereby he intimated his desire to acquire other abodes for that day.

(39) Since the northern 'erub prevents him from moving even one step to the south of his house while the southern one similarly prevents him from moving a single step to the north of his house. Now this Baraitha shows that in a case of uncertainty in connection with two 'erubs the restrictions of both are imposed but the man is nevertheless free to move within the permitted margin though he did not indicate which of the two 'erubs he preferred. This is in agreement with the view of Samuel (v. supra 49b and notes) who also imposed double restrictions but allowed the man to move within the permitted margin between the tree and his house though it was uncertain which particular four cubits under the tree he selected.

(40) The ruling that within a certain permitted margin the man may move despite the uncertainty.

(41) Who, on account of uncertainty, forbids the man to stir from his place.

(42) He was of the last generation of the Tannas and of the first of the Amoras.

(43) From a Baraitha. Only an Amora is denied this right.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 51a

Raba¹ explained: This² applies only where by running towards the root³ he can reach it [before the Sabbath began].⁴ Said Abaye to him: Was it not in fact stated: 'WAS OVERTAKEN BY DUSK'?⁵ — [The meaning is that] he was overtaken by dusk as far as his house was concerned;⁶ the root of the tree, however, he could⁷ well reach before dusk. Others say: Raba¹ replied: [The meaning is that] he would be overtaken by dusk if he walked slowly but by running he could well reach the root.

Rabbah and R. Joseph were once under way⁸ when the former said to the latter, 'Let our Sabbath base be under the palm-tree that is supporting another tree,'⁹ or, as others read: 'under the palm-tree that releases its owner¹⁰ from the burden of taxes'.¹¹ 'I do not know it', the other replied. 'Rely then on me', the first said: 'for it was taught: R. Jose ruled: If two were [travelling together] one of whom knew [of a well defined place] and the other did not know of it, the latter transfers his right to a choice of place to the former who then declares, 'Let our Sabbath base be in such and such a place'.¹² This,¹³ however, was not exactly correct. He attributed the teaching to¹⁴ R. Jose with the sole object that the latter should accept it from him since R. Jose was known to have sound reasons for his rulings.¹⁵

IF HE DOES NOT KNOW OF ANY TREE OR WALL, OR IF HE IS NOT FAMILIAR etc. Where in Scripture are these TWO THOUSAND CUBITS prescribed? — It was taught: Abide ye every man in its place¹⁶ refers to the four cubits;¹⁷ let no man go out of his place¹⁶ refers to the two thousand cubits.¹⁸ Whence¹⁹ do we derive this? — R. Hisda replied: We deduce place²⁰ from place,²¹ place²¹ from flight,²² flight²² from flight,²³ flight²³ from border,²⁴ border²⁴ from border,²⁵ border²⁵ from without²⁶ and without²⁶ from without, since it is written: And ye shall measure without the city for the east side two thousand cubits etc.²⁷ But why should we not deduce it²⁸ from the verse: From the wall of the city and outward²⁹ a thousand cubits?³⁰ The expression, 'without' is deduced from 'without' but not from 'outward'. What material difference, however, is there between the two expressions? Did not the School of R. Ishmael in fact teach: [With reference to the expressions,] The priest shall return³¹ and The priest shall come,³² 'returning' and 'coming' mean the same thing?³³ — Such a comparison³⁴ is made only³⁵ where no like expression³⁶ is available, but where one exactly like it is available deduction is made only from the one which is exactly like it.

A RADIUS OF TWO THOUSAND CUBITS. As to R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS what possible justification is there for his view?³⁷ If he upholds the word analogy³⁸ [the objection could be raised:] Does not Scripture³⁹ speak of 'sides'?⁴⁰ If, however, he does not uphold the word analogy³⁸ [the difficulty would arise:] Whence does he [deduce that a Sabbath limit is] two thousand cubits? — He does in fact uphold the word analogy, but⁴¹ here⁴² the case is different⁴³ since Scripture said: This shall be to them the open land about the cities⁴⁴ which implies: In this case only⁴⁵ sides must be allowed⁴⁶ but not in that of those who observe the Sabbath rest.⁴⁷ And the Rabbis?⁴⁸ — They uphold⁴⁹ the interpretation which R. Hanina advanced: Like this measurement⁵⁰ shall be that of all who observe the Sabbath rest.⁵¹

R. Aha b. Jacob ruled: A man who carries an object⁵² along four cubits in a public domain incurs no guilt unless he carries it a distance equal to the diagonal of their square.⁵³

R. Papa related: Raba tested us [with the following question] 'With regard to a pillar in a public domain ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths wide, is it necessary⁵⁴ that its width shall be equal to the diagonal of four cubits square, or is this unnecessary'? And we replied: 'Is not this case identical with that of R. Hanina who learned:⁵⁵ Like this measurement⁵⁶ shall be that of all who observe the Sabbath rest'.⁵⁷

THIS IT IS OF WHICH THE RABBIS HAVE SAID: A POOR MAN MAY MAKE HIS 'ERUB WITH HIS FEET. R. MEIR SAID: WE CAN APPLY THIS LAW TO A POOR MAN ONLY etc. R. Nahman said: They⁵⁸ differ only where [the expression used was] 'In my place',⁵⁹ since R. Meir holds that the essence of an 'erub is bread

(59) Sc. if the man appointed as his Sabbath base the place where he stood at the time. Only in such a case does R. Judah allow a rich man the same privilege as to a poor man.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 51b

[and that, therefore, it is only for] a poor man¹ that the Rabbis have relaxed the law,² but not for a rich man; while R. Judah holds that the essence of an 'erub is [the position of] one's feet, Irrespective of whether one is poor or rich; but where the expression used was 'In such and such a place'³ all⁴ agree that⁵ Only a poor man⁶ is allowed such an 'erub but not a rich man.⁷ And who was it that learned, 'THIS IT IS OF WHICH [THE RABBIS] HAVE SAID [etc.]?'⁸ — R. Meir.⁹ And what does he refer to? — To the case of one WHO DOES NOT KNOW OF ANY TREE OR WALL OR ONE WHO IS NOT FAMILIAR WITH THE HALACHAH.¹⁰ And who was it that learned, 'THE RABBIS' ENACTMENT THAT AN 'ERUB IS TO BE PREPARED WITH BREAD HAVING THE ONLY PURPOSE OF MAKING IT EASIER'?'¹¹ — R. Judah.

R. Hisda, however, said: They¹² differ only where the expression used was, 'In such and such a place',¹³ R. Meir being of the opinion that the law was relaxed for the poor only¹⁴ but not for the rich, while R. Judah holds that it was relaxed for both poor and rich; but where the expression used was 'In my place' all¹⁵ agree that the law was relaxed for both poor and rich, since the essence of 'erub is [the position of] one's feet [at the spot appointed].¹⁶ And who was it that learned, 'THIS IT IS OF WHICH [THE RABBIS] HAVE SAID'?'¹⁷ — R. Meir.¹⁸ And what does he refer to? — To the following: IF A MAN WHO WAS ON A JOURNEY HOMEWARD WAS OVERTAKEN BY DUSK.¹⁹ And who was it that learned, 'THE RABBIS' ENACTMENT THAT AN 'ERUB IS TO BE PREPARED WITH BREAD HAVING THE ONLY PURPOSE OF MAKING IT EASIER'?'²⁰ — Both.²¹

It was taught in agreement with R. Nahman:²² Both poor and rich must prepare their 'erub with bread. A rich man, furthermore, must not proceed beyond the Sabbath limit²³ and make the declaration, 'Let my Sabbath base be where I stand now because it is only for the benefit of one who was under way when it became dusk²⁴ that the Rabbis have enacted that an 'erub may be prepared with one's feet; so R. Meir.²⁵ R. Judah ruled: Both poor and rich must prepare their 'erub with their feet. A rich man should, therefore,²⁶ proceed beyond the Sabbath limit and make the declaration, 'Let my Sabbath base be where I stand now and this is the essence of an 'erub;²⁷ the Sages, however, allowed a householder to send his 'erub by the hand of his servant or by the hand of his son or by the hand of any other agent in order to make it easier for him. R. Judah related: It once happened that the Memel and Gorion families at Aroma²⁸ distributed dried figs and dried grapes to the poor in a time of dearth, and the poor men of Kefar Shihin and Kefar Hinaniah²⁹ used to come and wait³⁰ at their Sabbath limit³¹ until dusk³² and on the following day³³ got up early and proceeded to their destination.³⁴

R. Ashi said: An inference from the wording of a Mishnah also supports this view,³⁵ for it was stated: If a man left [his home]³⁶ to proceed to a town³⁷ with which [his home town desired to be] connected by an 'erub,³⁸ but a friend of his induced him to return home,³⁹ he himself is allowed to proceed⁴⁰ to the other town⁴¹ but all the other townspeople are forbidden;⁴² so R. Judah.⁴² And in discussing the point, 'In what respect does he differ from them?'⁴³ R. Huna replied: We are here dealing with the case of a man who had, for instance, two houses⁴⁴ between which two Sabbath limits intervened.⁴⁵ As far as he is concerned, since he had set out on his journey,⁴⁶ he has the status of a poor man.⁴⁷ They,⁴⁸ however, have the status of rich men.⁴⁹ Thus it is perfectly clear that only a poor man but not a rich man is allowed to prepare an 'erub by the declaration, 'Let my Sabbath base be at such and such a place'. This is conclusive.

R. Hiyya b. Ashi taught Hiyya b. Rab in the presence of Rab [that the law⁵⁰ applied] to both poor and rich. Said Rab to him: Conclude this also with the Statement, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah'. Rabbah b. R. Hanan was in the habit of going⁵¹ from Artibana to Pumbeditha⁵²

According to R. Meir this applies to a poor man only, while according to R. Judah it applies to a rich man also, though an 'erub ab initio requires the person's presence at the place he appoints.
 - (20) V. supra p. 356, n. 9..
 - (21) Lit., 'all', R. Meir as well as R. Judah, the former also agreeing that the essence of 'erub is that the person concerned shall be on the spot which he appoints as is Sabbath base.
 - (22) That the dispute between R. Meir and R. Judah bears on that case only where the man who made the 'erub was on the spot that he appointed as his Sabbath base; that, according to R. Meir, only to a poor man (i.e., one who has no bread) is such all 'erub permitted, while according to R. Judah this is permitted even where bread is obtainable, and that if the person was not present at the appointed spot even R. Judah restricts the privilege to the poor or the man who has no bread.
 - (23) Sc. within four cubits from that limit. Beyond that distance no 'erub can be effective at all.
 - (24) In consequence of which he is unable to obtain bread.
 - (25) Which shows, in agreement with R. Nahman, that, according to R. Meir, even where a person is on the very spot which he appointed as his Sabbath base, an 'erub without bread is permitted to him only if he is poor.
 - (26) If this is not inconvenient to him.
 - (27) This shows, again in agreement with R. Nahman, that, according to R. Judah, a rich man is not ab initio permitted to prepare an 'erub without bread unless he is present at the spot he appointed.
 - (28) [Or, Ruma, identified with Chirbet Rume south of the El-Batuff valley. West of Ruma, at about four thousand cubits distance lies Asochis (Kefar Shihin). Kefar Hananiah (Kefar 'Anan) is situated much further north, on the boundary between Lower and Upper Galilee and hardly fits into the context, and is in fact omitted in the parallel passage in J.T., v. Klein, Beitrage pp. 67ff].

(29) Villages that were just within four thousand cubits from Aroma and that could, therefore, be joined to it by an 'erub prepared on the boundary between the two Sabbath limits that intervened between them.

(30) On the Sabbath eve.

(31) Sc. at the boundary line where their Sabbath limit met the Sabbath limit of Aroma.

(32) Thus acquiring a Sabbath base within both limits.

(33) Which was the Sabbath.

(34) Now the poor men in question, having come from their own homes, were presumably in possession of some bread that sufficed for the two meals prescribed for an 'erub. They were, in consequence, subject, as far as the preparation of an 'erub is concerned, to the same restrictions as those imposed upon a 'rich man'. Yet it was not by a deposit of bread but by their personal attendance at the place they desired to appoint as their Sabbath base that their 'erub was effected. Thus it follows that the ruling in practice is in agreement with R. Nahman's interpretation of R. Judah's view, viz. that a person's presence at the very spot he wishes to acquire as his Sabbath base is the essence of an 'erub.

(35) R. Nahman's, viz. that R. Judah does not allow a rich man to acquire a Sabbath base without an 'erub of bread if he is not personally in attendance at that base, and that his disagreement with R. Meir is restricted to such a case only where the person concerned was in attendance at the place he desired to acquire.

(36) On a Sabbath eve.

(37) That was just two Sabbath limits distant from his own home.

(38) And he was instructed to deposit one at the boundary line at which the two limits (v. prev. n.) met. Had he carried out his mission, the place where the 'erub would have been deposited would have served as a Sabbath base for all the townspeople who would have been allowed thereby to walk distances of two thousand cubits from that base in all directions and consequently to move freely between their own town and the other.

(39) Before he deposited the 'erub.

(40) On the Sabbath.

(41) The reason follows.

(42) Infra 52a.

(43) That he should be allowed to proceed to the other town while they are not.

(44) One in each of the two towns.

(45) And his intention when setting out was not to acquire a Sabbath base between the two limits but to proceed to his own house in the other town.

(46) Along which food was not obtainable.

(47) Who has no bread and who is privileged to acquire a Sabbath base, though he was not present at that place and though he made no explicit declaration of his desire to acquire that base.

(48) The townspeople who remained at home and who were presumably in the possession of the prescribed quantity of food for an 'erub.

(49) Who are able to provide the required quantity of bread and who cannot, therefore, acquire a Sabbath base except by proceeding to the spot in person or by sending thither the prescribed quantity of food.

(50) That an 'erub may be effected by proceeding in person to the spot one desired to acquire as a Sabbath base.

(51) On the Sabbath.

(52) Towns that were just two Sabbath limits distant from one another and that could in consequence be combined by an 'erub on the boundary line between the two limits.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 52a

by declaring,¹ 'Let my Sabbath base be at Zinatha'.² Said Abaye to him, 'What do you think?'³ That in a dispute between R. Meir and R. Judah the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah,⁴ and that R. Hisda submitted that they⁵ differed only where the expression used was, 'In such and such a place'?⁶ Surely [it may be objected: Does not] R. Nahman [differ from R. Hisda], and it was taught in agreement with him?⁷ — 'I withdraw', the other replied.

Rami b. Hama enquired: Behold, it has been laid down that if a man acquired a Sabbath base in person⁸ he is entitled to move within four cubits,⁹ is one who deposits his 'erub¹⁰ also entitled to move within four cubits or not? — Raba replied: Come and hear: THE RABBIS' ENACTMENT THAT AN 'ERUB IS TO BE PREPARED WITH BREAD HAVING THE ONLY PURPOSE OF MAKING IT EASIER FOR THE RICH MAN SO THAT HE SHALL NOT BE COMPELLED TO GO OUT HIMSELF AND MAKE THE ERUB WITH HIS FEET. Now if you were to contend that he¹¹ is not entitled to the four cubits, [how can it state its purpose to be] 'OF MAKING IT EASIER'? Surely [it results in the imposition] of a restriction!¹² — One is nevertheless pleased with the enactment since thereby one avoids the trouble of going out.¹³

MISHNAH.¹⁴ IF A MAN LEFT HIS HOME TO PROCEED TO A TOWN WITH WHICH [HIS HOME TOWN DESIRED TO BE] CONNECTED BY AN 'ERUB, BUT A FRIEND OF HIS INDUCED HIM TO RETURN HOME, HE HIMSELF IS ALLOWED TO PROCEED TO THE OTHER TOWN BUT ALL THE OTHER TOWNSPEOPLE ARE FORBIDDEN; SO R. JUDAH. R. MEIR RULED: WHOSOEVER IS ABLE TO PREPARE AN 'ERUB¹⁵ AND NEGLECTED TO DO IT¹⁶ IS IN THE POSITION OF AN ASS-DRIVER AND A CAMEL-DRIVER.¹⁷

GEMARA. In¹⁸ what respect does he differ from them? — R. Huna replied: We are here dealing with the case of a man who had, for instance, two houses between which two Sabbath limits intervened. As far as he is concerned, since he had set out on his journey he has the status of a poor man. They, however, have the status of rich men.

So¹⁹ it was also taught: If a man had two houses,²⁰ and two Sabbath limits intervened between them, he acquires his 'erub²¹ as soon as he had set out on his journey,²² so R. Judah. Relaxing the law still more,²³ R. Jose son of R. Judah ruled: Even if²⁴ a friend of his met him and said: 'Spend the night here, as the weather is rather²⁵ hot' or 'rather cold', he may set out on his journey on the following day as early as he likes. Rabbah submitted: All agree²⁶ that it is necessary²⁷ to make²⁸ [the prescribed declaration],²⁹ the Only point at issue between them [being whether it is essential for the man] to have actually set out on his journey.³⁰ R. Joseph, however, submitted: That it is essential for the man to have set out on his journey is disputed by none,³¹ the Only point at issue between them being whether it is necessary for him to make [the prescribed declaration].³²

Whose view is followed in the ruling of Ulla that³³ if a man set out on a journey and a friend of his induced him to return, behold he is regarded as having returned and as having set out? (But if he is regarded as 'having returned'³⁴ why is he described as 'having set out'?³⁵ And if he is regarded as 'having set out'³⁵ why is he described as 'having returned'?³⁴ — It is this that was meant: Although he has actually returned he is regarded as one who had set out). Now in agreement with whose view has this statement³⁶ been made? — In agreement with that of R. Joseph according to R. Jose son of R. Judah.³⁷

R. Judah b. Ishtatha once³⁸ brought a basket of fruit to R. Nathan b. Oshaia. When the former was departing³⁹ the latter allowed him to descend the stairs⁴⁰ and then called after him, 'Spend the night here'. On the following day he got up early and departed.⁴¹

(1) On the Sabbath eve while he was still in his own house.

(2) A place between the two Sabbath limits intervening between the two towns.

(3) In preparing an 'erub like a poor man though, being able to provide the necessary food, he had the status of a rich man.

(4) That poor and rich are subject to the same law.

(5) R. Judah and R. Meir.

(6) Supra 51b q.v. notes.

(7) R. Nahman, that R. Judah allowed a rich man to make an 'erub without bread only where he personally attended at the spot, which he desired to acquire as his Sabbath base. Now, since Rabbah b. R. Hanan made his declaration at his own house he should not be entitled to acquire Zinatha as his Sabbath base even according to R. Judah.

(8) Sc. by remaining in that spot at the time the Sabbath began.

(9) In addition to the two thousand cubits distance along which he is allowed to move in all directions.

(10) Sc. sent the prescribed quantity of food to the desired place by the hand of an agent.

(11) A rich man who deposited an 'erub of food through an agent.

(12) Of course it does, since in the absence of the enactment he would have been entitled to the four cubits and as a result of it he forfeits that right.

(13) To the appointed place. This benefit outweighs the loss of the four cubits. Hence it was quite proper to say that the enactment had the PURPOSE or MAKING IT EASIER FOR THE RICH MAN.

(14) Cited from IF to R. JUDAH supra 51b ad fin. q.v. notes.

(15) As the man here spoken of was.

(16) Sc. omitted to make a declaration that he wished to acquire the place in question as his Sabbath base.

(17) חומר גמול (v. n. supra 35a). Since it is uncertain whether he intended to acquire his Sabbath base (a) on the boundary line between the two Sabbath limits that separate the one town from the other or (b) in his own house where he remained when the Sabbath began, he must be restricted in his movements to the two thousand cubits between the house in which he stayed and the termination of the Sabbath limit of that town. He must not proceed beyond the Sabbath limit of the town in the direction of the other town since it is possible that he acquired his Sabbath base at (b), and he must not move outside the town in the opposite direction, since it is possible that his Sabbath base had been acquired at (a).

(18) This to the end of the paragraph is cited supra 51b q.v. notes.

(19) That we are dealing here with the case of a man who had two houses between which two Sabbath limits intervened.

(20) One in each of two towns.

(21) On the boundary line between the two Sabbath limits.

(22) Though he did not make any explicit declaration that he desired to acquire a Sabbath base between the limits, and though he returned home before he reached that spot.

(23) Lit., 'more than so'.

(24) Before he had set out on his journey.

(25) Lit., 'a time of'.

(26) Lit., 'all the world (sc. R. Judah and R. Jose son of R. Judah) do not differ'.

(27) The rendering and notes that follow are based on Rashi's own interpretation. The two other interpretations cited and rejected by Rashi are here disregarded.

(28) Lit., 'to say'.

(29) Viz., 'Let my Sabbath base be at the boundary line between the two Sabbath limits', analogous to the declaration in the Mishnah supra 49b: 'let my Sabbath base be at its root'.

(30) Lit., 'to take hold'; R. Judah maintaining that this is essential, since, otherwise, as a person at home who is able to obtain the required quantity of bread, he cannot be regarded as a poor man; while R. Jose holds that once a man has decided to set out on a journey, though his plan has been changed and he remains at home, he is regarded as a poor man.

(31) He cannot be regarded as a poor man if he has not left his house.

(32) In the opinion of R. Judah this is necessary as was implied in the Mishnah supra 49b (cf. supra n.); while R. Jose holds that the setting out on a journey is alone sufficient as an indication of the man's intention and no explicit declaration is therefore necessary. R. Meir's ruling restricting the man's movements as if he were 'AN ASS-DRIVER AND A CAMEL-DRIVER', despite his explicit declaration, may be explained as based on the principle that a man cannot be regarded as poor unless he is actually under way. A man, like the one in question who has only started on his journey is, in R. Meir's opinion, still regarded as a rich man who must use bread for his 'erub ; and since this man did not "SC bread he cannot by his declaration alone acquire a base between the Sabbath limits, while his base at home he loses through his explicit declaration that he wished to acquire one elsewhere.

(33) Lit., 'like whom goes that which 'Ulla said'.

(34) Which implies that he has not acquired the Sabbath base at the desired point.

(35) Implying that he did acquire that base.

(36) Of Ulla who, as is apparent From in his ruling, recognizes the acquisition of a Sabbath base even where the man made no explicit declaration that he wished to acquire it.

(37) Who holds that the setting out alone is a sufficient indication of the man's desire and intention (cf. supra p. 362, n. 7.),

(38) On a Sabbath eve.

(39) To return to his home which was within four thousand cubits.

(40) Thus enabling him to assume the status of one who had set out on his journey.

(41) Aliter: 'Stay here overnight and go to-morrow', reading ע"י for ע"י" (cf. Golds.).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 52b

In agreement with whose view did he act?¹ Was it in agreement with that of R. Joseph according to R. Jose son of R. Judah?² No;³ in agreement with Rabbah according to R. Judah.⁴

R. MEIR RULED: WHOSOEVER IS ABLE TO PREPARE AN 'ERUB etc. Have we not already learnt this⁵ once: If this is doubtful, the man, said R. Meir and R. Judah, [is in the position of both] an ass-driver and a camel-driver?⁶ — R. Shesheth replied: Do not say that R. Meir's view is that only where it is doubtful whether a man had a valid 'erub or not is he in the position of an ass-driver and a camel-driver and that where it is certain that he prepared no 'erub he is not in such a position; but rather even where it is certain that he prepared no 'erub he is in the position of an ass-driver and camel-driver; for here, surely, it is a case where It is certain that the man had prepared no 'erub and yet he is put in the position of an ass-driver and a camel-driver.

MISHNAH. HE WHO WENT OUT BEYOND HIS SABBATH LIMIT⁷ EVEN ONLY A DISTANCE OF ONE CUBIT MUST NOT RE-ENTER. R. ELIEZER RULED: [IF A MAN WALKED] TWO CUBITS BEYOND HIS SABBATH LIMIT HE MAY RE-ENTER,⁸ [AND IF HE WALKED] THREE CUBITS HE MAY NOT RE-ENTER.⁹

GEMARA. R. Hanina ruled: If a man had one foot within his Sabbath limit and his other foot without that Sabbath limit, he may not re-enter, for it is written in Scripture: If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath,¹⁰ the written form being 'thy foot'.¹¹ But was It not taught: If a man had one foot within his Sabbath limit and his other foot without, he may re-enter? — This represents the view of 'Others'.¹² For it was taught: Others maintain that a man is deemed to be¹³ where the greater part of his body is.¹⁴

Some there are who read: R. Hanina ruled: If a man had one foot within his Sabbath limit and his other foot without, he may re-enter, for it is written in Scripture: If thou turn away thy foot from Sabbath¹⁵ which is read as 'thy feet'.¹⁶ But was it not taught: He may not re-enter? — He¹⁷ maintains the same view as 'Others', it having been taught: A man is deemed to be where the greater part of his body is.

R. ELIEZER RULED: [IF A MAN WALKED]) TWO CUBITS BEYOND HIS SABBATH LIMIT HE MAY RE-ENTER [AND IF HE WALKED] THREE CUBITS HE MAY NOT RE-ENTER. But was it not taught: R. Eliezer ruled: If he walked one cubit beyond his Sabbath limit he may re-enter and if two cubits he may not reenter? — This is no difficulty, since the former¹⁸ refers to a person who left the first cubit but was still within the second,¹⁹ while the latter refers to one who left the second and was within the third.²⁰ But was it not taught: R — Eliezer ruled: Even if he was one cubit beyond his Sabbath limit he may not re-enter? — This was taught concerning a measurer,²¹ for we have in fact learnt: And to the measurer of whom the Rabbis have spoken a distance of two thousand cubits only is allowed²² even if the end of his permitted measure terminated within a cave.²³

MISHNAH. IF A MAN²⁴ WAS OVERTAKEN BY DUSK WHEN ONLY ONE CUBIT OUTSIDE THE SABBATH LIMIT,²⁵ HE MAY NOT ENTER IT. R. SIMEON RULED: EVEN IF HE WAS FIFTEEN CUBITS AWAY²⁶ HE MAY ENTER SINCE THE SURVEYORS²⁷ DO NOT MEASURE EXACTLY²⁸ ON ACCOUNT OF THOSE WHO ERR.²⁹

GEMARA. It was taught:³⁰ On account of those who err in their measures.³¹

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. HOW³² ARE THE SABBATH BOUNDARIES TO TOWNS EXTENDED?³³ IF³⁴ ONE HOUSE³⁵ RECEDES³⁶ AND ANOTHER PROJECTS,³⁶ IF³⁷ ONE TURRET [OF THE WALL] RECEDES AND ANOTHER PROJECTS, IF THERE WERE³⁵ RUINS TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH,³⁸

(1) When, by walking the distance of four thousand cubits to his home, he recognized the validity of the acquisition of a Sabbath base between the two Sabbath limits on the sole ground that he had set out on the journey, though he made no explicit declaration.

(2) Cf. Supra n. 2; but is it likely that he would act on a ruling of R. Joseph contrary to that of Rabbah whose rulings against those of R. Joseph are (with only three exceptions) the accepted law?

(3) In addition to having started on his journey he also made an explicit declaration of his desire to acquire the Sabbath base in question.

(4) Who requires both a declaration and the setting out on the journey. This, of course, is also in agreement with R. Joseph according to R. Judah, but Rabbah is mentioned in preference (cf. prev. n.).

(5) That where an uncertainty exists as to which place had been acquired as his Sabbath base, the man concerned is, in the opinion of R. Meir, in the position of an ass-driver and a camel-driver.

(6) Mishnah, supra 35a q.v. notes, from which it is evident that on account of an uncertainty the man, in the view of R. Meir, is to be placed in the position of an ass-driver and a camel-driver. Is not then the ruling in our Mishnah, which could have been deduced from the Mishnah, superfluous?

(7) Intentionally and on no religious errand.

(8) R. Eliezer being of the opinion (cf. supra 45a ad fill.) that the Four cubits allowed each person for his Sabbath base are to be measured with 'him in the middle', i.e., two cubits only in either direction.

(9) Since (cf. prev. n.) he is cut off from his Sabbath limit by the intervening space of one cubit which he must not enter.

(10) Isa. LVIII, 13.

(11) Sing. רגל

(12) Sc. R. Meir who is frequently referred to by this name (cf. Hor. 13b).

(13) Lit., 'is tossed'.

(14) As the man had only one foot without the limit the greater part of his body would usually still be without the limit. Hence the ruling that he may re-enter.

(15) Isa. LVIII, 13.

(16) רגל dual. The pausal form רגל (from רגל) may have suggested the dual idea. M.T. draws no distinction between the kere and the kethib of this word but some MSS. actually have רגל as the kethib.

(17) R. Hanina.

(18) Our Mishnah in which R. Eliezer arrived re-entry from the second cubit.

(19) 'TWO CUBITS' implying that the man walked to within two cubits which he has not completely traversed.

(20) 'Two cubits' in the Baraitha having the meaning that the man walked across the two cubits and was thus already within the third one.

(21) Sc. a person who, having been overtaken by dusk on the Sabbath eve, declared the place where he stood to be his Sabbath base, and who in consequence is entitled to measure with his foot two thousand moderate steps in the direction he desires to proceed. Should the two thousand steps, plus the four cubits to which every person is entitled as his Sabbath base, terminate even a single cubit distance from his town he may not enter it.

(22) In addition to the four cubits he is allowed as his Sabbath base.

(23) Which is a confined place; and much more so if it terminated in an open area.

(24) On his journey home on a Sabbath eve.

(25) Of his home town,

(26) From the Sabbath limit,

(27) Of Sabbath limits around towns.

(28) But allow a margin of some fifteen cubits within the two thousand.

(29) Sc. people who might overlook the boundary mark and, in the absence of the margin, would trespass on forbidden ground. Aliter: The surveyors themselves err in their measurements, because what they reckon as two thousand cubits is really only one thousand nine hundred and eighty-five. This is arrived at as follows: Since Sabbath limits are measured by a rope that was fifty cubits in length (cf. infra 59b) a Sabbath limit would equal in length $2000/50 = 40$ ropes. As the rope was held by two men, one at either end covering in his grip a portion of the rope to the extent of one hand breadth and half a finger, each rope length actually represented 50-2 handbreadths and one finger. In 40 rope lengths the deficit amounted to $2 \times 40 = 80$ handbreadths plus $40 \times 1 = 40$ fingers. Four fingers being equal to one handbreadth and six handbreadths to one cubit, the total deficit amounted to $80 + 40/4 = 90$ handbreadths $90/60 = 15$ cubits (Rashi).

(30) In explanation of the statement ON ACCOUNT OF THOSE WHO ERR.

(31) Cf. supra n. 5.

(32) In computing Sabbath limits.

(33) מעבריין, the term is discussed infra.

(34) In a town that had no wall around it.

(35) On the confines of the town.

(36) From the row of houses in which it is situated.

(37) Where a town is surrounded by a wall.

(38) One of a lesser height is regarded as part of the ground and is not taken into consideration.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 53a

OR BRIDGES, OR SEPULCHRAL MONUMENTS THAT CONTAINED DWELLING CHAMBERS, THE BOUNDARY OF THE TOWN IS EXTENDED¹ TO INCLUDE THEM.² SABBATH LIMITS,³ FURTHERMORE, ARE TO BE SHAPED⁴ LIKE A SQUARE TABLET⁵ IN ORDER THAT THE USE OF THE CORNERS⁶ MIGHT BE GAINED.⁷

GEMARA. Rab and Samuel are at variance. One learned,⁸ me'aberin⁹ and the other learned, me'aberin.¹⁰ He who learned 'me'aberin'¹⁰ explains it as 'adding a wing,'¹¹ and he who learned, 'me'aberin' explains it in the same sense as that of 'a pregnant woman'.⁹

The¹² cave of Machpelah.¹³ Rab and Samuel differ as to its meaning. One holds that the cave consisted of two chambers one within the other; and the other holds that it consisted of a lower and upper chamber. According to him who holds that the chambers were one above the other the term machpelah¹³ is well justified but according to him who holds that it consisted of two chambers one within the other, what could be the meaning of machpelah? That it had multiples¹⁴ of couples.¹⁵

Mamreh the city of Arba.¹⁶ R. Isaac explained: The city of the four¹⁷ couples:¹⁵ Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Leah.

And it came to pass in the days of Amraphel.¹⁸ Rab and Samuel are at variance. One holds that his name was Nimrod;¹⁹ and why was he called Amraphel? Because he ordered our father Abraham to be cast²⁰ into a burning furnace.²¹ But the other holds that his name was Amraphel; and why was he called Nimrod? Because in his reign he led all the world in rebellion²² against himself.²³

Now there arose a new king over Egypt.²⁴ Rab and Samuel differ. One explains: Actually a new king, and the other explains: He²⁵ issued new decrees.²⁶ He who explained: 'actually a new king', did so because it is written 'new',²⁷ while he who explained: 'he issued new decrees', did so because it was not stated: 'And the former king died and a new king reigned'. But, according to him who explained: 'He issued new decrees', may it not be objected that it was written: Who knew not Joseph?²⁸ — What is the meaning of 'Who knew not Joseph'? Who²⁹ appeared as if he never knew Joseph.

(Mnemonic:³⁰ Eighteen, and twelve, we learned, in his generation, their heart).³¹ R. Johanan stated: I spent eighteen days at R. Oshaia Beribi³² and learned from him only one word in our Mishnah, viz., that 'HOW ARE THE SABBATH BOUNDARIES OF TOWNS EXTENDED' is to be read as me'aberin³³ with an aleph. But, surely, this is not correct. For did not R. Johanan state, 'R. Oshaia Beribi had twelve disciples and I spent eighteen days among them and gained a knowledge of every one's intellectual powers³⁴ and of every one's wisdom? Now, is It likely that he gained a knowledge of every one's intellectual powers and of every one's wisdom and yet did not learn any Gemara?³⁵ — If you like I may reply: He may have learnt much from them, but from him he did not learn [more than the one word]. And if you prefer I might reply: He meant to say that in our Mishnah he learned only one word.³⁶

R. Johanan further stated: When we were studying Torah at R. Oshaia's eight of us used to sit in the space of one cubit.³⁷ Rabbi stated: When we were studying Torah at R. Eleazar b. Shammua a six of us used to sit in one cubit.³⁷ R. Johanan further stated: R. Oshaia Beribi in his generation was like R. Meir in his generation. As was the case with R. Meir in his generation that his colleagues could not fathom the depth of his knowledge³⁸ so was it with R. Oshaia that his colleagues could not fathom the depth of his knowledge.

R. Johanan further stated: The hearts³⁹ of the ancients were like the door of the Ulam,⁴⁰ but that of the last generations was like the door of the Hekal,⁴⁰ but ours is like the eye of a fine needle. R. Akiba is classed among the ancients; R. Eleazar b. Shammua among the last generations. Others say: R. Eleazar b. Shammua is classed among the ancients and R. Oshaia Beribi among the last generations — 'But ours is like the eye of a fine needle' — And we, said Abaye, are like a peg in a wall in respect of Gemara.⁴¹ And we, said Raba, are like a finger in wax as regards logical argument.⁴² We, said R. Ashi, are like a finger in a pit⁴³ as regards forgetfulness.⁴⁴

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: The Judeans who cared for [the beauty of] their language retained their learning,⁴⁵ but the Galileans who did not care for [the beauty of] their language⁴⁶ did not retain their learning. But does this⁴⁷ depend on whether one cares [for linguistic beauty]? — Rather say: The Judeans who were exact in their language,⁴⁸ and who laid down mnemonics for their aid, retained their learning; but the Galileans who were not exact in their language,⁴⁹ and who laid down no mnemonic as an aid, did not retain their learning. The⁵⁰ Judeans who learned from one Master retained their learning, but the Galileans who did not learn from one Master did not retain their learning.

Rabina said: The Judeans who made their studies accessible to the public⁵¹ retained their learning, but the Galileans who did not make their studies accessible to the public did not retain their learning. David made his studies accessible⁵² and Saul did not make his studies accessible. Of David who made his studies accessible it is written in Scripture: They that fear Thee shall see me and be glad,⁵³ but of Saul who did not make his studies accessible to the public it is written: And whithersoever he turned himself

(2) Lit., 'over against them', the houses, turrets etc. that projected. If a projection, for instance, was at one point, the boundary line is drawn along the outer side of that projection in a straight perpendicular line, to both extremities of that side of the town.

(3) That are drawn at a distance of two thousand cubits from the said boundaries of the town.

(4) Lit., 'and they make them' (Rashi and Bah). Cur. edd., 'it', i.e., the area of the town.

(5) Where the boundary line of the town had the shape of a square. If it had that of a parallelogram the Sabbath limits, drawn parallel to it at the prescribed distances of two thousand cubits, assume also a similar shape. By 'SQUARE' the circular shape only is intended to be excluded (cf. following note).

(6) That would have been excluded and lost had the Sabbath limits been drawn at distances of two thousand cubits from

(52) Cf. Ber. 4a, and M.K. 16a.

(53) Ps. CXIX, 74.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 53b

he acted wrongly.¹

R. Johanan further stated: Whence is it deduced that the Holy One, blessed be He, pardoned him² for that sin?³ From [Scripture] where it says: Tomorrow shalt thou, and thy sons be with me,⁴ 'with me'⁵ implies: In my [celestial] division.

R. Abba requested: 'Is there anyone who would enquire of the Judeans who are exact in their language whether we learned⁶ me'aberin or me'aberin and whether we learned⁷ akuzo or 'akuzo,⁸ for they would know [the correct spelling]'. When they were asked they replied: Some authorities learn me'aberin while others learn me'aberin, some learn akuzo while others learn 'akuzo.

'The Judeans were exact in their language'. For instance?⁹ — A Judean once announced that he had a cloak to sell. 'What', he was asked: 'is the colour of your cloak?' 'Like that of beet¹⁰ on the ground', he replied.

'The Galileans who were not exact in their language'. For instance?⁹ — A¹¹ certain Galilean once went about enquiring, 'who has amar?'¹² 'Foolish Galilean', they said to him, 'do you mean an "ass" for riding, "wine" to drink, "wool" for clothing or a "lamb" for killing?' A woman¹³ once wished to say to her friend, 'Come, I would give you some fat to eat' but that what she actually said to her was, 'My cast-away,¹⁴ may a lioness devour you'.¹⁵ A certain woman' once appeared before a judge and addressed him as follows: 'My master slave,¹⁶ I had a child¹⁷ and they stole you from me,¹⁸ and it is of such a size that if they had hanged you upon it, your feet would not have reached to the ground'.¹⁹

When Rabbi's²⁰ maid indulged in enigmatic speech she used to say this: 'The ladle strikes against the jar,²¹ let the eagles fly to their nests';²² and when she wished them to remain at table she used to tell them, 'The crown²³ of her friend²⁴ shall be removed and the ladle will float in the jar like a ship that sails in the sea'.

R. Jose b. Asiyān, when speaking enigmatically, used to say: 'Prepare for me a bull in judgment²⁵ on a poor mountain';²⁶ and when he enquired about an inn-keeper he spoke thus: 'The man of this raw mouth²⁷ — what comforts does he provide?'²⁸

R. Abbahu, when indulging in enigmatic speech, used to say this: 'Make the coals ethrog like,²⁹ flatten out the golden cobbles,³⁰ and prepare for me two tellers in the dark'.³¹ Others read: 'And let them prepare for me on them two tellers in the dark'.

The Rabbis said to R. Abbahu: 'Show us' where R. Elai is hiding.³² He replied: He amused himself with an Aaronide girl, his last keen companion, and she kept him awake'.³³ Some say that this referred to a woman³⁴ and others say that it referred to a tractate.³⁵

They said to R. Elai: Show us³² where R. Abbahu is hiding.³² He replied: He consulted the crown-maker³⁶ and betook himself to Mephibosheth³⁷ in the South.³⁸

R. Joshua b. Hananiah remarked: No one has ever had the better of me except a woman, a little boy and a little girl. What was the incident with the woman? I was once staying at an inn where the hostess served³⁹ me with beans. On the first day I ate all of them leaving nothing. On the second day too I left nothing. On the third day she over seasoned them⁴⁰ with salt, and, as soon as I tasted them, I withdrew my hand. 'My Master', she said to me, 'why do you not eat?' — 'I have already eaten', I replied: 'earlier in the⁴¹ day'. 'You should then', she said to lie, 'have withdrawn your hand from the bread'. 'My Master', she continued, 'is it possible that you left⁴² [the dish to-day] as compensation⁴³ for the former⁴² meals, for have not the Sages laid down: Nothing⁴³ is to be left⁴⁴ in the pot⁴⁵ but something must be left⁴⁶ in the plate?'⁴⁷ What was the incident with the little girl? I was once on a journey and, observing⁴⁸ a path across a field, I made my way through it, when a little girl called out to me, 'Master! Is not this part of the field?' — 'No', I replied: 'this is a trodden path' — 'Robbers like yourself', she retorted: 'have trodden it down' — What was the incident with the little boy? I was once on a journey when I noticed a little boy sitting at a cross-road. 'By what road', I asked him, 'do we go to the town?' — 'This one', he replied: 'is short but long and that one is long but short'. I proceeded along the 'short but long' road. When I approached the town I discovered that it was hedged in by gardens and orchards. Turning back I said to him, 'My son, did you not tell me that this road was short?' — 'And', he replied: 'did I not also tell you: But long?' I kissed him upon his head and said to him, 'Happy are you, O Israel, all of you are wise, both young and old'.

R. Jose the Galilean was once on a journey when he met Beruriah.⁴⁹ 'By what road', he asked her, 'do we go to Lydda?' — 'Foolish Galilean', she replied: 'did not the Sages say this: Engage not in much talk with women?'⁵⁰ You should have asked: By which to Lydda?

Beruriah once discovered a student who was learning in an undertone.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 54a

Rebuking him¹ she exclaimed: 'Is it not written: Ordered in all things, and sure:² If it³ is 'ordered' in your two hundred and forty-eight limbs it will be 'sure', otherwise⁴ it will not be sure?'

One taught: R. Eliezer⁵ had a disciple who learned in a low voice. After three years he forgot his learning. One taught: R. Eliezer had a student who deserved burning [for an offence] against the Omnipresent — 'Leave him alone', the Rabbis pleaded, 'he attended on a great man'.

Samuel said to Rab Judah, 'Shinena,⁶ open your mouth and read the Scriptures, open your mouth and learn the Talmud, that your studies may be retained and that you may live long, since it is said: For they⁷ are life unto those that find them, and a healing to all their flesh;⁸ read not 'To those that find them'⁹ but 'To him who utters them¹⁰ with his mouth'.

Samuel further said to Rab Judah, 'Shinena, hurry on and eat, hurry on and drink,¹¹ since the world from which we must depart is like a wedding feast'.¹²

Rab said to R. Hamnuna, 'My son, according to thy ability¹³ do good to thyself, for there is no enjoyment in she'ol nor will death be long in coming. And shouldst thou say: "I would leave a portion for my children" — who will tell thee in the grave?¹⁴ The children of man are like the grasses of the field, some blossom and some fade'.¹⁵

R. Joshua b. Levi stated: If a man is on a journey and has no company¹⁶ let him, occupy himself with the study of the Torah, since it is said in Scripture: For they¹⁷ shall be a chaplet¹⁸ of grace.¹⁹ If he feels pains in his head, let him engage in the study of the Torah, since it is said: For they¹⁷ shall be a chaplet of grace unto thy head.¹⁹ If he feels pains in his throat let him engage in the study of the

Torah, since it is said: And chains about thy neck.¹⁹ If he feels pains in his bowels, let him engage in the study of the Torah, since it is said: It²⁰ shall be a healing to thy navel.²¹ If he feels pain in his bones, let him engage in the study of the Torah, since it is said: And marrow to thy bones.²¹ If he feels pain in all his body, let him engage in the study of the Torah, since it is said: And healing to all his flesh.²²

R. Judah son of R. Hiyya remarked: Come and see how the dispensation²³ of mortals²⁴ is not like that of the Holy One, blessed be He. In the dispensation of mortals, when a man administers a drug to a fellow it may be beneficial to one limb but injurious to another, but with the Holy One, blessed be He, it is not so. He gave a Torah to Israel and it is a drug of life for all his body, as it is said: And healing to all his flesh.²⁵

R. Ammi said: What is the exposition of the Scriptural text: For it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee; let them be established altogether upon thy lips?²⁶ When are the words of the Torah 'pleasant'? 'When thou keepest them within thee'. And when wilt thou keep them within thee? When they will 'be established altogether upon thy lips.'²⁷ R. Zera said, [This²⁸ may be derived] from the following: A man hath joy in the answer of his mouth; and a word in due season, how good is it!²⁹ When 'hath a man joy'? When he has an 'answer in his mouth'.²⁸ Another version: 'When hath a man joy in the answer of his mouth'? When the 'word is in due season; O, how good is this'! R. Isaac said: This²⁸ may be derived from the following: But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it;³⁰ when 'is it very nigh unto thee'? When it is 'in thy mouth and in thy heart to do it'.²⁸ Raba said: It²⁸ may be derived from the following: Thou hast given him his heart's desire, and the utterance³¹ of his lips Thou hast not withholden. Selah.³² When 'hast Thou given him his heart's desire'? At the time when 'Thou hast not withholden the utterance of his lips'.²⁸ Selah'.³²

Raba pointed out an incongruity: It is written: Thou hast given him his heart's³³ desire;³⁴ and it is also written: And the utterance of his lips³⁵ Thou hast not withholden. Selah?³⁶ If he is worthy, 'Thou hast given him his heart's desire,'³⁴ but if he is unworthy, 'The utterance of his lips Thou hast not withholden. Selah'.³⁶

It was taught at the school of R. Eliezer b. Jacob: Wherever [in Scripture] the expression of nezah, selah or wa'ed³⁷ occurs the process to which it refers never ceases — 'Nezah'? Since it is written For I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always³⁸ wroth.³⁹ 'Selah'. Since it is written: As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the Lord of hosts, in the city of our God — God establish it for ever. Selah.⁴⁰ 'Wa'ed? Since it is written: The Lord shall reign for ever and ever.⁴¹ (Mnemonic:⁴² Chains, his cheeks, tables graven.) R. Eleazar⁴³ said; What is the purport of the Scriptural text: And chains about thy neck?⁴⁴ If a man trains himself to be like a chain that hangs loosely upon the neck,⁴⁵ and is sometimes exposed and sometimes concealed,⁴⁶ his learning will be preserved by him, otherwise it will not.

R. Eleazar further stated: What is the purport of the Scriptural text: His cheeks are as a bed of slices?⁴⁷ If a man allows himself to be treated as a bed upon which everybody treads,⁴⁸ and as spices with which everybody perfumes himself,⁴⁹ his learning will be preserved, but otherwise it will not.

R. Eleazar⁵⁰ further stated: What is the purport of the Scriptural text: Tables of stone?⁵¹ If a man regards his cheeks⁵² as stone that is not easily worn away,⁵³ his learning will be preserved by him, but otherwise it will not.

R. Eleazar⁵⁰ further stated: What is the purport of the Scriptural text: Graven upon the tables?⁵⁴ If the first tables had not been broken the Torah would never have been forgotten in Israel.⁵⁵ R. Aha b.

Jacob said: No nation or tongue would have had any power over them;⁵⁶ for it says: ‘Graven’⁵⁴ read not ‘graven’⁵⁷ but ‘freedom’.⁵⁸

R. Mattana expounded: What is the purport of the Scriptural text: And from the wilderness to Mattanah?⁵⁹ If a man allows himself to be treated as a wilderness on which everybody treads, his study will be retained⁶⁰ by him, otherwise it will not.

R. Joseph had a grievance against Raba son of R. Joseph b. Hama. When the eve of the Day of Atonement approached the latter thought, ‘I shall go and pacify him’ — Proceeding to R. Joseph’s house he found his attendant engaged in mixing for him a cup of wine.⁶¹ ‘Give it to me’, Raba⁶² said to him, ‘and I will mix it’. He gave it to him and the latter duly mixed it. As he⁶³ tasted it, he remarked: ‘This mixing is like that of Raba son of R. Joseph b. Hama’.⁶² ‘I am here’ the other answered. ‘Do not sit down upon your legs’,⁶⁴ R. Joseph said to him, ‘before you have explained to me these verses. What is the purport of the Scriptural text: And from the wilderness to Mattanah, and front Mattanah to Nahaliel, and from Nahaliel to Bamoth, and front Bamoth to the valley?’⁶⁵ — ‘If’, the other replied: ‘a man allows himself to be treated as the wilderness upon which everybody treads, the Torah will be given to him as a gift;⁶⁶ and so soon as it is given to him as a gift, he will be the inheritance of God⁶⁷ as it says: And from Mattanah⁶⁶ to Nahaliel;⁶⁰ and as soon as he is the inheritance of God, he rises to greatness,⁶⁸ since it says: And from Nahaliel⁶⁷ to Bamoth.⁶⁸ But if he is haughty, the Holy One, blessed be He, humbles him, as it says: And from Bamoth⁶⁸ to the valley.⁶⁹ If, however, he repents, the Holy One, blessed be He, raises him, as it says: Every valley⁶⁹ shall be lifted up.⁷⁰

R. Huna said: What is the purport of the Scriptural text: Thy flock settled therein; Thou preparest in Thy goodness for the poor, O God?⁷¹ If a man behaves like an animal that treads upon its prey and eats it⁷² or, as others say, that drags it and eats it,⁷³ his learning will be preserved by him, otherwise it will not — If, however, he does behave in this manner the Holy One, blessed be He, will himself prepare a banquet for him, as it says in Scripture. Thou, didst prepare in Thy goodness for the poor, O Lord.⁷⁴

R. Hiyya b. Abba in the name of R. Johanan expounded: With reference to the Scriptural text: Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat the fruit thereof,⁷⁵ why were the words of the Torah compared to the ‘fig tree’? As with the fig tree⁷⁶

the more one¹ searches it the more figs one finds in it so it is with the words of the Torah; the more one¹ studies them the more relish he finds in them.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani expounded: With reference to the Scriptural text: Loving hind and a graceful roe etc.,² why were the words of the Torah compared to a 'hind'? To tell you that as the hind has a narrow womb and is loved by its mate at all times as at the first hour of their meeting, so it is with the words of the Torah — They are loved by those who study them at all times as at the hour when they first made their acquaintance. 'And in graceful roe'? Because the Torah bestows grace upon those who study it. Her breasts will satisfy thee at all times.² Why were the words of the Torah compared to a breast? As with a breast, however often the child sucks³ it so often does he find milk in it, so it is with the words of the Torah. As often a man studies them so often does he find relish in them — With her love wilt thou be ravished always,² as was the case with R. Eleazar⁴ b. Pedath, for instance. It was said of K. Eleazar⁴ that he sat and studied Torah in the lower market of Sepphoris while his linen cloak lay in the upper market of the town.⁵ R.⁶ Isaac b. Eleazar related: A man once came to take it and found a venomous serpent in it.⁷

It was taught at the school of R. Anan: What is the exposition of the scriptural text, ye that ride on white asses, ye that sit on rich cloths, and ye that walk by the way, tell of it?⁸ 'Ye that ride on asses' refers to the learned men⁹ who travel from town to town and from province to province to study¹⁰ the Torah. 'White'¹¹ means that they clarify it like noonday.¹² 'That sit on rich cloths'¹³ means that they give true judgment for the sake of the truth.¹⁴ 'That walk' refers to the students of Scripture; 'by the way' refers to the students of the Mishnah; 'tell of it' refers to the students of the Talmud all of whose talk consists of the words of the Torah.

R. Shezbi stated in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah: What is the exposition of the text: The slothful man shall not hunt his prey?¹⁵ The cunning hunter¹⁶ will not live long.¹⁷ R. Shesheth expounded: The cunning hunter¹⁸ will roast.¹⁹ When R. Dimi came²⁰ he said: This²¹ may be likened to a fowler who hunts birds. If he breaks he wings of each bird as he shoots it down²² his catch is secure, otherwise it is not.

Raba²³ expounded in the name of R. Sehora who had it from R. Huna: What is the purport of the text: Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished, but he that gathereth little by little shall increase?²⁴ If a man studies much at a time²⁵ his learning decreases,²⁶ and if he does not do so but 'gathereth little by little' he 'shall increase'.²⁷ Raba²³ remarked: The Rabbis are well aware of this advice²⁸ and yet disregard it.²⁹ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: I acted on this advice and my study remained with me.

Our Rabbis learned: What was the procedure of the instruction in the oral law? Moses learned from the mouth of the Omnipotent. Then Aaron entered and Moses taught him his lesson. Aaron then moved aside and sat down on Moses' left. Thereupon Aaron's sons entered and Moses taught them their lesson. His sons then moved aside, Eleazar taking his seat on Moses' right and Ithamar on Aaron's left. R. Judah stated: Aaron was always on Moses' right. Thereupon the elders entered and Moses taught them their lesson, and when the elders moved aside all the people entered and Moses taught them their lesson. It thus followed that Aaron heard the lesson³⁰ four times, his sons heard it three times, the elders twice and all the people once. At this stage Moses departed and Aaron taught them his lesson. Then Aaron departed and his sons taught them their lesson. His sons then departed and the elders taught them their lesson. It thus followed that everybody heard the lesson four times. From here R. Eliezer inferred: It is a man's duty to teach his pupil [his lesson] four times. For this is arrived at a minori ad majus: Aaron who learned from Moses who had it from the Omnipotent had to learn his lesson four times³¹ how much more so an ordinary pupil who learns from an ordinary teacher.

R. Akiba stated: Whence is it deduced that a man must go on teaching his pupil until he has mastered the subject? From Scripture where it says: And teach thou it to the children of Israel.³² And whence is it deduced that it must be taught until the students are well versed in it?³³ From Scripture where it says. Put it in their mouths.³⁴ And whence is it inferred that it is also his duty to explain to him the reasons?³⁵ It has been said: Now these are the ordinances which thou shalt put before them.³⁶

But why did they not all learn³⁷ direct from Moses?³⁸ — In order to give a share of the honour³⁹ to Aaron, his sons, and the elders. Then⁴⁰ [why was not this procedure⁴¹ adopted:] Aaron might enter and learn from Moses,⁴² his sons might then enter and learn from Aaron,⁴² then the elders might enter and learn from his sons⁴² and these finally might teach all Israel?⁴² — As Moses learned from the mouth of the Omnipotent his own teaching was of greater value.⁴³

The Master said: 'R. Judah stated: Aaron was always on Moses' right'. Whose view is represented in the following where it was taught: If three men were going the same way, the Master is to be in the middle, the more important of the other two⁴⁴ on his right and the less important⁴⁵ on his left?⁴⁶ Must it be held that it represents the view of R. Judah and not that of the Rabbis?⁴⁷ — It⁴⁸ may be said to agree even with the view of the Rabbis, since Aaron's trouble had to be taken into consideration.⁴⁹

R. Pereda had a pupil whom he taught his lesson four hundred times before the latter could master it. On a certain day having been requested to attend to a religious matter he taught him as usual but the pupil could not master the subject. 'What', the Master asked: 'is the matter⁵⁰ to-day?' — 'From the moment', the other replied. 'the Master was told that there was a religious matter to be attended to I could not concentrate my thoughts,⁵¹ for at every moment I imagined, now the Master will get up or now the Master will get up'. 'Give me your attention', the Master said, 'and I will teach you again', and so he taught him another four hundred times. A bath kol issued forth asking him,⁵² 'Do you prefer that four hundred years shall be added to your life or that you and your generation shall be privileged to have a share in the world to come?' — 'That', he replied. 'I and my generation shall be privileged to have a share in the world to come'. 'Give him both', said the Holy One, blessed be He.

R. Hisda stated: The Torah can only be acquired with [the aid of] mnemonic signs, for it is said: Put it in their mouths;⁵³ read not, 'put it'⁵⁴ but 'its mnemonic sign'.⁵⁵ R. Tahlifa of the West⁵⁶ heard this and proceeding to R. Abbahu told it to him. 'You', the other said to him, 'deduce this⁵⁷ from that text;⁵³ we deduce it from this one: Set thee up waymarks, make thee' etc.;⁵⁸ devise [mnemonic] signs⁵⁹ for the Torah. What proof, however, is there that the expression of *ziyyun*⁶⁰ means a sign? — Since it is written, And any seeth a man's bone, then shall be set up a sign⁶¹ by it.⁶² R. Eleazar said: The deduction⁶³ is made from this text: Say unto wisdom, 'Thou art my sister', and call understanding thy kinswoman,⁶⁴ devise [mnemonic] signs⁶⁵ for the Torah — Raba expounded:

Appoint fixed times⁶⁶ for the study of the Torah.

- (1) Lit., 'all the time that a man'.
- (2) Prov. V, 19.
- (3) Lit., 'feels', 'searches'.
- (4) So marg. n. and Bomb. ed. Cur. edd. in parenthesis 'Eliezer'.
- (5) So absorbed was he in his studies that he forgot to take his cloak with him (cf. R. Han.) Rashi explains תשגה (here rendered 'thou wilt be ravished') as 'thou wilt make a fool of thyself' (rt. שגה 'to err', 'be confused') by neglecting one's work or trade and engaging in study. R. Eleazar presumably left his cloak with his wares in the upper market while, absorbed in his studies, he went down to the lower one oblivious of both his cloak and his wares.
- (6) Cur. edd. in parenthesis. 'It was taught'.
- (7) Providential protection of the property of the just.
- (8) Judg. V, 10.
- (9) Lit., 'disciples of the wise' (v. Glos. s.v. Talmid Hakam).
- (10) Cur. edd. in parenthesis insert 'in it'.
- (11) צחורות (rt. צהר).
- (12) צהרים (rt. צהר) interchange of ה and ח.
- (13) מדין (דין = judgment)..
- (14) [Lit., 'true to its own truth'; an absolutely true verdict arrived at by the judge in his endeavour to find out the truth himself without relying solely on the evidence, v. Tosaf. B.B. 8b, s.v. דיין].
- (15) Prov. XII, 27.
- (16) רמיה ('slothful'), is expounded by a play upon the words as רמאי 'cunning' and צידו ('his prey') as ציד 'hunter'. The reference is to one who possesses no knowledge and pretends to be a scholar.
- (17) לא יהיה ולא יאריך ימים, lit., 'shall not live nor have length of days', a play upon the words לא יהרץ ('shall not hunt').
- (18) Cf. supra n. 12. R. Shesheth, however, gives the appellation of 'cunning hunter' to the fowler who proceeds in the manner R. Dimi is about to describe.
- (19) The birds lie caught. יהרץ (rt. הרץ 'to roast'). His exposition of the verse is as follows: 'Shall not the cunning hunter roast his prey?' 'Of course he shall' being the implied reply. 'Cunning hunter' thus refers to the student who learns section by section, thoroughly revising and consolidating each before proceeding to the next (cf. R. Dimi's parable that follows).
- (20) From Palestine to Babylon.
- (21) The manner of study just referred to (cf. supra p. 380, n. 15, final clause).
- (22) Lit., 'first, first'.
- (23) So marg. n. Cur. edd. in parentheses, 'Rabbah'.
- (24) Prov. XII. 11.
- (25) Lit., 'makes his Torah bundles, bundles', a play upon the word for 'by vanity' מהבל reading הבל as חבל (חבילה 'bundle').
- (26) An overburdened memory can retain but little.

- (34) Deut. XXXI, 19; emphasis on 'put . . . mouth'.
- (35) Lit., 'to show the face' . . . that it is not enough to teach dogmatically.
- (36) Ex. XXI. 1, emphasis on 'put before' (cf. Rashi). להראות לו פנים 'to show him the face' may be a play upon the word לפניהם, 'before them'.
- (37) MS. M. 'Let the elders enter and learn'. Bah, 'Let them all enter' etc.
- (38) The four times required.

- (39) Of instructing the people.
- (40) If it was desired to honour Aaron, his sons and the elders.
- (41) Which would have conferred greater distinction on each individual or group as compared with the group that followed.
- (42) The four times required.
- (43) Lit., 'the thing is supported'.
- (44) Lit., 'and the great'.
- (45) Lit., 'and the small'.
- (46) V. Yoma 37a.
- (47) Who hold that Aaron took his seat on Moses' left. Is it likely, however, that an anonymous ruling would agree with an individual contrary to the view of the majority?
- (48) The Baraitha cited.
- (49) As he had to sit on the left of Moses when the two were alone, he was allowed to remain in the same position, even after the others had entered, in order to save him the trouble of moving from one place to another.
- (50) Lit., 'what is the difference'.
- (51) Lit., 'I removed my mind'.
- (52) R. Pereda.
- (53) Deut. XXXI, 19.
- (54) שימה.
- (55) סימנה (cf. prev. n.) a play upon the similarity of the two expressions.
- (56) Palestine which lay to the west of Babylon where the statement was made.

- (66) מועדים sing. מועד 'an appointed time,' obtained by transposition of the letters in מועד (cf. prev. n.).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 55a

This¹ is in harmony with the following statement of R.² Abdimi b. Hama b. Dosa:³ What is the significance of the text: It is not in heaven, [that thou shouldst say: 'who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us'],⁴ neither is it beyond the sea [that thou shouldst say, 'Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us']?⁵ 'It is not in heaven', for if it were in heaven you should have gone up after it; and if it were 'beyond the sea', you should have gone over the sea after it.

Raba⁶ expounded, 'It is not in heaven',⁴ it⁷ is not to be found with him who, because he possesses some knowledge of it, towers in his pride as high⁸ as the heavens, '[neither is it beyond the sea]' it is not found with him who, because of some knowledge of it, is as expansive in his self-esteem⁹ as the sea.

R. Johanan¹⁰ expounded: 'It is not in heaven', it¹¹ is not to be found among the arrogant;¹² 'neither is it beyond the sea', it is not to be found among merchants or dealers.¹³

Our Rabbis taught: How are the sabbath boundaries of towns extended? [If a town is] long the sabbath limits are measured from its normal boundaries.¹⁴ If it is round corners are added to it.¹⁵ If it is square no corners are added to it.¹⁶ If it was wide on one side and narrow on the other¹⁷ it is regarded as if both its sides were equal.¹⁸ If one house projected¹⁹ like a turret, or if two houses projected²⁰ like two turrets, they are to be treated as if a thread had been drawn beside them in a straight line, and the two thousand cubits are measured from that line outwards.²¹ If the town was shaped like a bow²² or like a gamma,²³ it is to be regarded as if it had been full of houses and courtyards, and the two thousand cubits are measured from the imaginary boundaries outwards.²⁴ The Master said: '[If a town is] long the Sabbath limits are measured from its normal boundaries'. But is this not obvious? — The ruling is required in a case where it was long but narrow. Since it might have been presumed that the width should be regarded as equal to its length.²⁵ we were informed [that the law was not so].

'If it is square shaped no corners are added to it'. Is not this obvious? — This was only required in a case where it is square shaped but the sides of the square are not parallel with the four directions of the world. As it might have been presumed that it should be deemed to be enclosed in an imaginary square whose sides are parallel with the four directions of the world, we were informed [that this is not permitted].

'If one house projected like a turret, or if two houses projected like two turrets'. Now that you said that the law applied to one house, was it also necessary to mention two houses? — The ruling was necessary in that case only where the two houses were respectively on two sides of the town. As it might have been presumed that we apply the law only where a projecting house was on one side but not when houses were projecting on two sides, we were informed [that the law is applied to the latter case also].

'If the town was shaped like a bow or like a gamma, it is to be regarded as if it had been full of houses and courtyards, and the two thousand cubits are measured from its imaginary boundaries'. R. Huna laid down: If a town is shaped like a bow, then, if the distance between its two ends²⁶ is less than four thousand cubits,²⁷ the Sabbath limits are measured from the bow-string,²⁸ otherwise measuring must begin from the arch.²⁹ But could R. Huna have laid down such a ruling?³⁰ Did not R. Huna in fact rule: If a breach was made in a town wall,³¹ [the houses on both sides of the breach are regarded as belonging to the same town if the distance between them is] no more than a hundred and forty-one and a third cubits?³² — Rabbah b. 'Ulla replied: This is no difficulty, since the former³³ deals with a case where the gap was only on one side³⁴ while the latter deals with one that had breaches on two sides.³⁵ Then what does he³⁶ inform us? That a karpaf³⁷ is allowed for each section.³⁸ But did not R. Huna once lay down such a ruling, as we learned:

(1) The deduction that it is necessary to resort to special efforts, such as the device of mnemotechnical symbols and the like, in order to acquire a knowledge of the Torah.

(2) So Bah, wanting in cur. edd.

(13) The 'sea' representing maritime trade.

(14) Lit., as it is — This is further explained infra.

(15) Sc. the circumference of the town is deemed to be enclosed in an imaginary square and the Sabbath limits are measured from the sides of that square, the townspeople thus gaining the benefit of longer distances through the angles of the square:

- (16) This is explained infra.
- (17) If its northern side, for instance, was wider than its southern side.
- (18) The southern boundary is deemed to be extended in both directions to the same length as the northern one, and the extremities of this imaginary line are deemed to be joined to the extremities of the northern boundary.
- (19) From the town wall.
- (20) It is now assumed that both houses were on the same side of the town.
- (21) If the projecting house, for instance, was in a corner on the northern side of the town, an imaginary line, parallel to the town in wall, is drawn across the northern side of the house towards the western side of the town, and this line is deemed to represent the boundary of the town for the purpose of measuring the Sabbath limits. The respective positions of the 'two houses projected' is discussed presently.
- (22) No houses having been built on the side corresponding to the bow-string.
- (23) Gr. . Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.
- (24) Tosef. 'Er. IV. Every townsman man, irrespective of the position of his house, is entitled to walk two thousand cubits distance from the imaginary, as well as from the actual boundaries.
- (25) I.e., as if the a town were square-shaped and its shorter sides were equal to its longer ones.
- (26) I.e., the side corresponding to the bow string.
- (27) So that the Sabbath limit from the one end overlaps with the Sabbath limit from the opposite end.
- (28) Outwards; and the whole town, as far as its inhabitants are concerned, is regarded as no bigger than four cubits within which they may freely move on the Sabbath in addition to the two thousand cubits distance beyond the town in all directions.
- (29) Every inhabitant may move no further than two thousand cubits from his own house in any direction.
- (30) That two sections of a town are regarded as one where the distance between them is less than four thousand cubits.
- (31) Sc. a breach that completely severed the town in two distinct sections, no houses intervening.
- (32) A distance representing the length of two karpafs of seventy and two thirds cubits each (which each town is allowed in addition to the Sabbath limit of two thousand cubits). But if the distance was greater, the two sections are regarded as two different towns. How then could it be said that R. Huna permitted any distance within four thousand cubits?
- (33) A bow shaped town.
- (34) V. supra p. 385, n. 9.
- (35) V. supra n. 6.
- (36) R. Huna in the last ruling cited.
- (37) Of a length of seventy and two thirds cubits.
- (38) In the same manner as one is allowed for each of two adjacent towns which are thereby combined to form one town for the purposes of Sabbath movements.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 55b

A karpaf is allowed for every town;¹ so R. Meir, but the Sages ruled: A karpaf was allowed only² between two towns,³ and in connect ion with this it was stated: R. Huna laid down: A karpaf is allowed for each town, while R. Hiyya b. Rab held: Only one karpaf is allowed for both towns?⁴ — Both rulings were required. For if we had been informed only of the ruling here,⁵ it might have been presumed [to apply to this case only] because originally⁶ all the town was a permitted domain,⁷ but not to the case there.⁸ And if we had been informed of the ruling there only, it might have been presumed [to apply to that case alone] because [one karpaf is] too cramped for the use of two towns, but not here⁹ where the space of one karpaf would not be too cramped.¹⁰ Hence both rulings were required.

And¹¹ what perpendicular distance is allowed between the [middle of the imaginary] bow-string and the arch?-Rabbah son of R. Huna¹² replied: One of two thousand cubits.¹³ Raba the son of Rabbah son of R. Huna replied: Even one greater than two thousand cubits. Said Abaye: Logical reasoning is in agreement with Raba the son of Rabbah son of R. Huna, since¹⁴ any person can, if he wishes, go around¹⁵ by way of the houses.¹⁶

IF THERE WERE RUINS TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH etc. What is meant by RUINS? — Rab Judah replied: Three walls without a roof on them.¹⁷ The question was raised: What is the ruling in the case of two walls upon which there was a roof? Come and hear: The following are included in the Sabbath boundary of a town. A sepulchral monument of the size of four cubits by four,¹⁸ a bridge or a cemetery that contains a dwelling chamber, a synagogue that has a dwelling-house for the hazan,¹⁹ a heathen temple that contains a dwelling-house for its priests,²⁰ horse-stalls or storehouses in open fields, to which dwelling-chambers are attached, watchmen's huts in a field, and a house on a sea island.²¹ All these are included in the Sabbath boundary of a town. The following, however, are not included in it: A sepulchral monument that was broken on two sides, the gap extending from one end to the other, a bridge or a cemetery that contains no dwelling-chamber, a synagogue that had no dwelling-house for the hazan, a heathen temple that contained no dwelling-house for its priests,²⁰ horse-stalls or storehouses in open fields, to which dwelling chambers are not attached, a pit, a ditch, a cave, a wall or a dove-cote in a field, and a house in a ship.²² All these are not included in the Sabbath boundary of a town.²³ At all events It was here taught: 'A sepulchral monument that was broken on two sides, the gap extending from one end to the other'. Does not this refer to a case where there was a roof on top?²⁴ — No, it may be a case where there was no roof on top.

Of what use is a 'house on a sea island'? — R. Papa replied: The reference here is to a house into which a ship's tackle is moved.

But is not a 'cave' included in the Sabbath boundary of a town? Did not R. Hiyya in fact teach: A cave is included in the Sabbath boundary of a town? — Abaye replied: He referred to a cave at the entrance of which was a built structure. Might not then its inclusion be inferred solely on the ground of the structure? — The ruling²⁵ was required only in a case where the cave supplemented the prescribed size.²⁶

R. Huna ruled: For those who dwell in huts²⁷ the Sabbath limits are measured from the very doors of their huts.²⁸ R. Hisda raised an objection: And they pitched by the Jordan, from Beth-yeshimoth,²⁹ in connection with which Rabbah b. Bar Hana³⁰ stated: 'I myself saw the place and it measured three parasangs by three'.³¹ Now was it not taught: When they attended to their needs they turned neither front nor sideways but backwards?³² — Raba answered him: You speak of the divisions in the wilderness! Since about them it is written: At the commandment of the Lord they encamped and at the commandment of the Lord they journeyed,³³ they could well be regarded as constituting a permanent settlement.³⁴ R. Hinena b. R. Kahana ruled in the name of R. Ashi: If among the huts there are three courtyards of two houses³⁵ each, all the encampment assumes the characteristics of a permanent settlement.³⁶

Rab Judah citing Rab remarked: Dwellers in huts and travelers in the desert lead a miserable life,³⁷ and their wives and children are not really their own. So it was also taught: Eliezer of Biria³⁸ remarked: Those who dwell in huts are like those who dwell in graves, and concerning their daughters Scripture says: Cursed be he that lieth with any manner of beast.³⁹ What is the reason? Ulla explained: Because they have no bath houses;⁴⁰ and R. Johanan explained: Because they [allow each other to] perceive the times of their ritual immersion.⁴¹ What is the practical difference between them?⁴² — The case where a river is near the house.⁴³

R. Huna said: No scholar⁴⁴ should dwell in a town where vegetables are unobtainable. This then implies that vegetables are wholesome, but was it not taught: Three kinds of food increase One's excrements, bend one's stature and take away a five hundredth part of the human eyesight, viz.

(1) Its Sabbath limit being measured from the outward boundary of that karpaf.

(2) Lit., 'they (sc. the Rabbis who originally instituted the law of karpaf) said only'.

(3) That were adjacent to one another and that, on account of the karpafs, joined to form one town (cf. supra, p. 387, n.

13 and the discussion infra 57bf).

(4) As two sections of one town could not in this respect be subject to greater restrictions than two independent towns that are adjacent to one another, what need was there for R. Huna's ruling in respect of one town that was only severed in two on account of a breach?

(5) A town severed by a breach in two.

(6) Before the breach was made.

(7) Lit., 'it had a side of permissibility'.

(8) That of two towns that were never before combined to form one permitted domain.

(9) A town severed by a breach in two.

(10) Since originally, when the area of the gap was occupied by houses, the inhabitants in either section did not have the use of even one karpaf.

(11) Where the distance between the two ends of the bow is less than four thousand cubits, in which case it was laid down supra that the Sabbath limit is measured from an imaginary line joining the two ends.

(12) Bomb. ed. omits 'Rabbah b.'

(13) There must be no more than a Sabbath limit between any of the houses in the arch and the imaginary bow-string.

(14) However great the perpendicular distance between the imaginary bow-string and the arch.

(15) To the ends of the arch.

(16) Without touching the empty space between the cord and the arch. As in this manner it is possible for any townsman to pass from one end of the bow-shaped town to the other end and then to proceed also along the imaginary cord that joins these ends, the entire area enclosed by the arc and cord is deemed to be occupied by houses and courtyards.

(17) If there was a roof on them they would be regarded as a house and would in any case be included in the town boundary in accordance with a previous ruling in our Mishnah.

(18) Such a monument is usually provided with a dwelling-chamber for its watchman. It has, therefore, the status of a dwelling-house even though no one lives in it.

(19) הוֹזֵן 'beadle', 'sexton', 'superintendent'. In modern Hebrew, 'synagogue reader', 'precentor'.

(20) Or 'attendants', כוֹמְרִים.

(21) Within seventy and two thirds cubits from the town.

(22) That was not stationary, but moved sometimes within and sometimes without seventy and two thirds cubits from the town.

(23) Tosef. 'Er. IV.

(24) Which allows that two walls with a roof on top are not regarded as a 'ruin' that is included in the Sabbath boundary of a town.

(25) Of R. Hiyya.

(26) Of four cubits by four. In the absence of such a ruling it might have been presumed that, as the structure was less than the minimum size prescribed, neither it nor the cave may be included in the Sabbath boundary of the town.

(27) צְרִיפֵין, frail cone-shaped structures of reeds or branches of trees.

(28) Sc. even if a camp consisted of hundreds of such frail huts it does not assume the character of a town the residents of which may freely move within it (however large its area) and two thousand cubits beyond it in all directions. Each hut is regarded as a single unit.

(29) Num. XXXIII, 49, referring to the Israelites' camp in the wilderness.

(30) Cur. edd. in parenthesis 'in the name of R. Johanan'.

(31) Which establishes the fact that the Israelites' camp in the wilderness occupied an area of three parasangs by three.

(32) Sc. behind the rear of the camp. An Israelite occupying a hut or a tent in the front lines of the camp had consequently to walk for the purpose a distance of three parasangs. How since this long walk, far exceeding a Sabbath limit, was permitted, it follows that an encampment consisting of huts also assumes the character of a town. An objection against R. Huna.

(33) Hum. IX, 18. The order in M.T. is reversed: At the commandment . . . journeyed . . . encamped.

(34) In consequence of which they were well entitled to the privileges of a town.

(35) Of stone or wood.

(36) Cf. infra 59b.

(37) Lit., 'their life is no life'.

(38) [Probably identical with Bertotha in Upper Galilee, v. Aboth, Sonc. ed., p. 31 n. 4 and Horowitz, op. cit. p. 175].

(39) Deut. XXVII, 21.

(40) When the men leave their homes to bathe in a distant place the women remaining behind are exposed to the temptations of the unscrupulous.

(41) Depraved men are thus in a position to follow the women when they leave the camp for their ritual bathing.

(42) Ulla and R. Johanan.

(43) Ritual immersion can well be performed in the river and the women are under no necessity to go far from their homes. The men, however, would still be leaving their homes in quest of a warm bath. Ulla's reason is, therefore, applicable in such a case also while that of R. Johanan does not apply.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 56a

black bread,¹ new beer and vegetables?² — This is no difficulty, one [statement referring] to garlic and leek while the other [refers] to other vegetables; as it was taught: Garlic is a vegetable, leek is a semi-vegetable;³ if radish appears a life-giving drug has appeared. Was it not, however, taught: If radish appears a drug of death has appeared? — This is no contradiction, the latter might deal with the leaves while the former with the roots, or the latter might refer to the summer while the former might refer to the winter.

Rab Judah citing Rab said: In a town which abounds with ascents and descents men and beasts die in the prime of their lives.⁴ 'Die'! Can one really think so? — Rather say: They age in the prime of life.

R. Huna son of R. Joshua remarked: The crags between Be Bari and Be Narash have made me old.⁵

Our Rabbis taught: If a town is to be squared⁶ the sides of the square must be made to correspond to the four directions of the world: Its northern side, [for instance,] must correspond⁷ to the North, and its southern side to the South; and your guiding marks⁸ are the Great Rear⁹ in the North and the Scorpion in the South.

R. Jose said: If one¹⁰ does not know how to square a town so as to make it correspond with the directions of the world, one may square it in accordance with the circuit of the sun. How? — The direction in which on a long day the sun rises¹¹ and sets¹² is the northern direction.¹³ The direction in which on a short day the sun rises¹¹ and sets¹² is the southern direction.¹⁴ At the vernal and autumnal equinoxes¹⁵ the sun rises in the middle point of the East and sets in the middle point of the West,¹⁶ as it is said in Scripture: It goeth along¹⁷ the south, and turneth about the¹⁸ north;¹⁹ 'It goeth along the south' during the day 'and turneth about the north'²⁰ during the night. The wind turneth, turneth about moveth²¹ refers to the eastern horizon and the western horizon along which the sun sometimes moves²² and sometimes turns about.²⁰

R. Mesharsheya stated: These rules²³ should be disregarded for it was taught: The sun has never exactly risen in the North East and set in the North West, nor has it ever risen precisely in the South East and set in the South West.

Samuel stated: The vernal equinox occurs only at the beginning of one of the four quarters of the day²⁴ viz., either at the beginning of the day or at the beginning of the night or at midday or at midnight.²⁵ The summer solstice only occurs either at the end of one and a half, or at the end of seven and a half hours of the day or the night.²⁶ The autumnal equinox only occurs at the end of three, or nine hours of the day or the night,²⁷ and the winter solstice only occurs at the end of four and a half, or ten and a half hours of the day or the night.²⁸ The duration of a season of the year²⁹ is no longer than ninety-one days and seven and a half hours; and the beginning of one season is removed from that of the other by no more than one half of a planetary hour.³⁰ Samuel further stated: The vernal equinox never begins under Jupiter³¹ but it breaks the trees, nor does the winter solstice begin under Jupiter but it dries up the seed. This, however, is the case only when the new moon occurred in the moon-hour or in the Jupiter-hour.³¹

(24) Sc. the solar day of twenty-four hours, which includes both day and night.

(25) The year consists of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours approx., representing fifty-two weeks and one and a quarter solar day's. The first vernal equinox which, according to tradition, occurred on the first of Nisan, which was then a Wednesday at the beginning of the first quarter of the solar day, i.e., at the 'beginning of the night' (solar days in the Heb. calendar beginning with nightfall) was consequently followed in the second year by a vernal equinox that began at the beginning of a second quarter of the solar day which was the 'midnight' of Thursday (the solar day again beginning as stated supra at nightfall). In the third year the equinox began at the beginning of a third quarter of the solar day, which was the 'beginning of the day' of Friday. In the fourth year it began at the beginning of the fourth quarter of the solar day which was 'midday' of Saturday. The vernal equinox thus begins at a different quarter of the solar day in the course of every four years.

(26) The period intervening between an equinox and the following solstice and between a solstice and the following equinox is, as stated infra, ninety-one days and seven and a half hours approx., representing thirteen weeks and seven and a half hours. When the first vernal equinox occurred at the beginning of a Wednesday (cf. prev. n.) the following summer solstice must have occurred thirteen weeks later at the end of seven and a half hours after the beginning of the night belonging to that Wednesday. When the second vernal equinox occurred at the midnight of Thursday the summer solstice must have occurred thirteen weeks later at the end of one and a half hours after the beginning of the day also a Thursday. Since the third vernal equinox occurred on a Friday at the beginning of the day the following solstice must have occurred thirteen weeks later at the end of seven and a half hours of the day also a Friday. Finally when the fourth vernal equinox occurred at midday on Saturday, the following solstice must have occurred at the end of one and a half hours of the night of the Sunday thirteen weeks later.

(27) This is obtained by dropping the thirteen complete weeks (cf. prev. n.) which do not affect the weekday or the hour, and by adding the seven and a half hours to the respective summer solstices (cf. prev. nn.).

(28) These calculations are arrived at by dropping the weeks and adding the hours (cf. prev. n.) to the respective times of the autumnal equinoxes, the same process as in the previous cases being repeated every four years.

(29) I.e., the lapse of time between an equinox and a solstice that follows it, and between a solstice and an equinox that follows it.

(30) Every hour of the day is assumed to be governed by the sun, the moon or one of the undermentioned planets in the following order: Mercury, Moon, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun and Venus. It follows that every eighth hour is under the influence of the same heavenly body. Since, for instance, Mercury is in ascendancy in the first hour of the first day of the week, it is also in ascendancy in the eighth, the fifteenth and the twenty-second hour and so on ad infinitum. Similarly Venus who is in ascendancy in the seventh hour of the first day of the week is also in ascendancy in the fourteenth and the twenty-first hour etc. Now since the beginning of one season is removed from that of the next season (as stated supra) by thirteen weeks and seven and a half hours and since in every week (consisting of 7×24 hours) the same relative order and succession of the heavenly bodies is invariably repeated, the weeks may be entirely disregarded in the calculations that determine what heavenly body would exercise its influence at the beginning of a season. The seven and a half hours only having to be taken into consideration, and the number of heavenly bodies concerned being seven, it follows that the same heavenly body that was in ascendancy at the beginning of a season is again in ascendancy during the last half hour of that season and during the first half hour of the season that follows. Every season thus begins 'one half of a planetary hour' later than the preceding one.

(31) Sc. the hour under the influence of this planet (cf. prev. n.).

Talmud - Mas. Eiruvin 56b

Our Rabbis taught: If [a circular] town is to be [circumscribed by a] square¹ [the sides must be] drawn in the shape of a square tablet. The Sabbath limits also are then drawn in the shape of a square tablet.² When the measurements¹ are taken one should not measure the two thousand cubits³ from the middle point of the town corner,⁴ because, thereby, one loses the corners.⁵ One should rather imagine⁶ that a square tablet of the size of two thousand cubits by two thousand cubits is applied to each corner diagonally,⁷ so that the town gains thereby four hundred cubits in each corner,⁸ the Sabbath limits gain eight hundred cubits in each corner,⁹ while the town and the Sabbath limits together gain twelve hundred cubits¹⁰ in each corner.¹¹ This¹² is possible, Abaye explained. in a town of the size of two thousand by two thousand cubits.¹³

It was taught: R. Eliezer son of R. Jose stated: The limit of the allotted land beyond the confines of the levitical cities¹⁴ was two thousand cubits.¹⁵ Deducting from these¹⁶ an open space of one thousand cubits,¹⁷ such open space would represent a quarter of the entire area¹⁸ the remainder of which consisted of fields and vineyards.¹⁹ Whence is this²⁰ deduced? — Raba replied: From Scripture which says. [And the open land,..] from the wall of the city and outward a thousand cubits round about,²¹ the Torah has thus enjoined, 'Surround the city by an open space of one thousand cubits'. 'Such an open space [it was said] would represent a quarter of the entire area' — 'A quarter'! Is it not in fact one [in the neighbourhood] of a half?²² — Raba replied: The surveyor Bar Adda²³ explained this to me. Such a proportion is possible in the case of a town whose area is two thousand by two thousand cubits. For what is the area of its limits?²⁴ Sixteen [million square cubits].²⁵ What is the area of the corners?²⁶ Also sixteen [million square cubits].²⁷ Deducting [for the open spaces] eight [million square cubits]²⁸ from the limits, and four [million square cubits]²⁹ from the corners, to what area would this space amount? To one of twelve [million square cubits].³⁰ Would then 'such an open space represent a quarter'? Is it not in fact more than a third of the entire area?³¹ — Take the four [million square cubits] of the town area itself and add to them.³² Does not this, however, still amount to a third?³³ — Do you imagine that a quadrilateral town was spoken off? No, a circular town was meant. For by how much does the area of a square exceed that of a circle?

By one quarter [approximately] — Deduct a quarter from the measurements given and there would remain nine [million square cubits];³⁴ and nine [million] represents one quarter of thirty six [million].³⁵

Abaye said: This³⁶ is also possible in the case of a town that has an area of a thousand by a thousand cubits For what are its limits?³⁷ Eight [million square cubits].³⁸ What is the area of the corners? Sixteen [million square cubits].³⁹

- (1) In connection with the calculations of the permitted Sabbath limits around it.
- (2) This is explained infra.
- (3) The permitted distance in all directions from the imaginary square round the town.
- (4) I.e., extending the diagonals of the imaginary square to the length of two thousand cubits and joining them so as to form a larger square.
- (5) As will be shown presently.
- (6) Lit., 'bring'.
- (7) One extremity of the diagonal of the imaginary tablet touching in turn each of the four corners of the imaginary square, the diagonal of the latter forming a straight line with that of the former.
- (8) Lit., 'towards here and . . . towards here'. The town spoken of here (as stated by Abaye infra) is one that is circular in shape and the diameter of which is two thousand cubits. By enclosing it in an imaginary square the diagonal of which (on the rule that the diagonal of a square exceeds its side by two fifths approx.) the town is extended in each of its four corners by $((2000 \times 2/5)/2) = 4000/10 = 400$ cubits (cf. foll. n.).
- (9) A line of two thousand cubits is by two fifths (cf. prev. n.), less than the diagonal of a two thousand cubits square. 'A square tablet of the size of two thousand cubits by two thousand cubits applied to each corner diagonally' would consequently add to each corner two thousand cubits plus $(2000 \times 2)/5 = 800$ cubits.
- (10) I.e., the total of 400 and 800 cubits in each of the inner and outer corners respectively.
- (11) Tosef. 'Er. IV.
- (12) The various measurements and gains just described.
- (13) Cf. preceding notes.
- (14) In addition to the cities themselves the Levites were allowed stretches of land around them for use as open spaces, fields and vineyards as will be specified below.
- (15) In an outward direction round each city.
- (16) The 2000 cubits mentioned.
- (17) Immediately behind and around each city.
- (18) This will be explained presently.
- (19) Tosaf. 'Ar. ad fin., Sotah 27b.
- (20) That a strip of one thousand cubits around each levitical city must be reserved as an open space.
- (21) Num. XXXV, 4, dealing with the cities of the Levites.
- (22) One thousand cubits of open space in every two thousand cubits allowed: $1000/2000 = 1/2$. The actual area of the open space on the present assumption would, of course, be less than a half of the total area, since an inner belt of the width of a thousand cubits is smaller in area than one of equal width around it.
- (23) Aliter: The son of the surveyor Adda'. Aliter: 'Raba b. Adda replied: A surveyor.'
- (24) Sc. the stretch of land two thousand cubits in width around it.
- (25) 2000 by 2000 cubits on each of its four sides: $2000 \times 2000 \times 4 = 16,000,000$ square cubits.
- (26) The corner spaces between the limits just described.
- (27) The area of each corner being 2000×2000 square cubits the total area of the four corners is $2000 \times 2000 \times 4 = 16,000,000$ square cubits.
- (28) Since the Torah enjoined to surround the whole city with a strip of one thousand cubits wide, one 1000 by 2000 cubits on each of the four sides $2,000,000 \times 4 = 8,000,000$ sq. cubits.
- (29) One 1000 by 1000 cubits in each of the four corners = $1,000,000 \times 4 = 4,000,000$ sq. cubits.
- (30) 8,000,000 sq. cubits and 4,000,000 sq. cubits (cf. prev. two nn.) amount to 12,000,000 sq. cubits.
- (31) 12,000,000/32,000,000 being equal to 3/8.
- (32) To the 32,000,000. This brings the total up to 36,000,000.

(33) $12,000,000/36,000,000 = 1/3$. Why then was it described as 'a quarter'?

(34) The city that was originally assumed to have an area of $2,000 \times 2,000 = 4,000,000$ sq. cubits, being circular in shape has only an area of $4,000,000 \times 3/4 = 3,000,000$ sq. cubits approx. The belt of open spaces around it, which was originally assumed to have an area of $12,000,000$ sq. cubits would similarly amount to $4,000$ (city, $2,000$, and open spaces on two of its sides $2,000$) by $4,000 \times 3/4$ (difference between area of sq. and circle) $3,000,000$ approx. (area of circular city). $4,000 \times 4,000 \times 3/4 = 3,000,000 = 12,000,000 - 3,000,000 = 9,000,000$ sq. cubits.

(35) The latter figure represents the total area in sq. cubits of the city and the entire stretch of open spaces, fields and vineyards allowed to each levitical city. The shape of the city does not affect this outer area which always extends to a perpendicular distance of $2,000$ cubits from it in all directions of the city.

(36) That the open space shall represent a quarter of the area of the land allowed around each city of the Levites.

(37) The stretch of land allowed around it.

(38) Area of $1,000$ by $2,000$ cubits on each of its four sides equal to $2,000,000 \times 4 = 8,000,000$ sq. cubits.

(39) Each corner having an area of $2,000$ by $2,000$ sq. cubits the area of the four corners amounts to $2,000 \times 2,000 \times 4 = 16,000,000$ sq. cubits.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 57a

Deducting [for the open space] four [million square cubits]¹ from the limits and four [million square cubits] from the corners,² to what area would this space amount? To one of eight million square cubits. But is not such an open space a third of the area?³ — Do you think that the reference is to a square town? No, a circular town was spoken of. For by how much does the area of a square exceed that of a circle? By one quarter approximately. Deduct a quarter from the measurements given⁴ and there would remain six [million square cubits];⁵ and six [million] represent a quarter of twenty-four [million].⁶

Rabina explained: What is meant by 'a quarter'? A quarter of the area of the limits.⁷ R. Ashi explained: What is meant by 'a quarter'? A quarter of the area of the corners.⁸ Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Is it not written in Scripture: 'round about'?⁹ — By 'round about' the corners were meant — For, if you were not to admit this, would you also contend that the expression. And¹⁰ dash the blood round about against the altar,¹¹ written in connection with a burnt-offering, also meant round about the very altar?¹² Consequently you must admit that by 'round about' was meant round about the corners; well then, here also by 'round about' was meant round about the corners. Said R. Habibi¹³ of Hoza'ah¹⁴ to R. Ashi: Are there not, however, the projections of the corners?¹⁵ — The reference is to a circular city.¹⁶ Was it not, however, made square?¹⁷ — You might contend that it was said that we imagine it to be a square¹⁸ but can you contend that it was actually made square?¹⁹ Said R. Hanilai²⁰ of Hoza'ah to R. Ashi: Consider! By how much does the area of a square exceed that of a circle? By a quarter approximately. Are not then the so called 'eight hundred'²¹ only six hundred and sixty-seven minus a third?²² — The other replied: This²³ applies only to a circle inscribed within a square, but in the case of the diagonal — of a square²⁴ more must be added; for a Master stated: Every cubit in the side of a square corresponds to one and two fifths of a cubit in its diagonal.²⁵

MISHNAH. A KARPAF²⁶ IS ALLOWED FOR EVERY TOWN;²⁷ SO R. MEIR, BUT THE SAGES RULED: [THE LAW OF] KARPAF²⁷ WAS INSTITUTED ONLY BETWEEN TWO TOWNS²⁸ SO THAT BY ADDING TO EACH ONE²⁹ A STRETCH OF LAND OF SEVENTY AND A FRACTION³⁰ THE KARPAF COMBINES THE TWO TOWNS INTO ONE.²⁸

SO ALSO WHERE THREE VILLAGES ARE ARRANGED IN THE SHAPE OF A TRIANGLE,²⁸ IF BETWEEN THE TWO OUTER ONES THERE WAS A DISTANCE OF A HUNDRED AND FORTY-ONE AND A THIRD CUBITS, THE MIDDLE ONE CAUSES ALL THE THREE OF THEM TO BE REGARDED AS ONE.²⁸

of the city and outward,³² the Torah having thereby enjoined: Allow an outward area,³³ and then begin your measuring.³⁴

BUT THE SAGES RULED . . . WAS INSTITUTED ONLY etc. It was stated: R. Huna laid down: A karpaf is allowed for each town. Hiyya b. Rab laid down: Only one karpaf is allowed for both towns.

We learned: BUT THE SAGES RULED: [THE LAW OF] KARPAF WAS INSTITUTED ONLY BETWEEN TWO TOWNS. Is not this³⁵ an objection against R. Huna? — R. Huna can answer you: What is meant by ‘KARPAF’?³⁵ The law of karpaf, but in fact a karpaf is allowed for each town. This may also be supported by reason, since in the final clause it was stated: SO THAT BY ADDING TO EACH ONE A STRETCH OF LAND OF SEVENTY AND A FRACTION CUBITS THE KARPAF COMBINES THE TWO TOWNS INTO ONE. This is conclusive.

Must it be said that this³⁶ presents an objection against Hiyya b. Rab?³⁷ — Hiyya b. Rab can answer you:

(1) One thousand by one thousand sq. cubits on each of the four sides of the city amount to four million sq. cubits, cf. supra p. 398, n. 2.

(2) Cf. loc. cit. n. 3.

(3) Which, as has just been shown, amounted to $8,000,000 + 16,000,000 = 24,000,000$ sq. cubits; $8,000,000/24,000,000 = 1/3$.

(4) Sc. from the strip of open space around the town which, if square shaped, contains an area of eight million sq. cubits.

(5) The area of the city (1,000 X 1,000 sq. cubits) plus the area of the open space (a strip of a thousand cubits in width on the four sides of the town) amounts to $3,000 \times 3,000 = 9,000,000$ sq. cubits, when the city, and the open space around it are square shaped. When they are circular the total of their area amounts to $9,000,000 \times 1/4$ sq. cubits. The area of the open space alone amounts, therefore, to $9,000,000 \times 3/4 = 1,000,000 \times 3/4$ (area of circular city) = $3/4 (9,000,000 - 1,000,000) = 3/4 \times 8,000,000 = 6,000,000$ sq. cubits.

(6) The latter figure representing the total area of the limits of the land and the corners (v. supra 56b ad fin) which, unlike the open space, are not affected by the shape of the city.

(7) According to Rabina the reference is, as was first assumed (cf. supra text and notes), to a city whose area was 2,000 by 2,000 sq. cubits, and the area of whose limits, (i.e., the strips of 2,000 cubits perpendicular distance from its confines) plus the area of the corners between them, is $2,000 \times 2,000 \times 8 = 32,000,000$ sq. cubits, while the area of its open spaces along the limits, amounts to $2,000 \times 1,000 \times 4 = 8,000,000$ sq. cubits, $8,000,000/32,000,000 = 1/4$ which is the ‘quarter’ spoken of. Rabina is of the opinion that no land for the purpose of open space was set aside in the corners. V. Tosaf. s.v. מאי.

(8) No open space being allowed along the limits. Cf. previous note, the Tosaf. cited and Rashi s.v. א"ל a.l. The area of each corner being 4,000,000 sq. cubits and the area of the open space in each corner being 1,000,000 sq. cubits the latter area equals $(1,000,000/4,000,000 =) 1/4$ ‘a quarter’ of that of the former in each corner. The total area of the corners equals $4 \times 4,000,000$ while the total area of open spaces in these corners equals $4 \times 1,000,000$ the proportion of the latter to the former is, therefore, $4 \times 1,000,000/4 \times 4,000,000 = 1/4$ which is also ‘a quarter’.

(9) Num. XXXV, 4. How then could it be maintained that the open spaces were restricted (cf. prev. n.) to the corners only?

(10) ‘The sons of Aaron’ is enclosed in cur. edd. in parenthesis.

(11) Lev. I. 5.

(12) But this, surely, is contrary to the adopted practice of sprinkling the blood round the corners of the altar only.

(13) MS.M ‘Aha’; Rashi (s.v. מאי a.l.) ‘Habiba’.

(14) The modern Khuzistan.

(15) Which reduce the area of the open spaces which, in consequence, would represent less than a quarter of the corners.

(16) A circle has no projecting corners.

(17) As stated supra.

- (18) For the purpose of extending its Sabbath limits or the land around it in favour of the Levites.
- (19) Obviously not. An imaginary square causes no actual reduction.
- (20) MS.M., Habi; Bomb. ed. Hinai.
- (21) Supra 56b; 'The Sabbath limits gain eight hundred cubits' by the application to the corners of the diagonal of the tablet of two thousand cubits in length.
- (22) If the difference between a square and a circle is a quarter of the former it is also (since the proportion of the two figures is 3:4) a third of the latter. The difference consequently between a line of two thousand cubits (which may be regarded as the diameter of a circle) and the diagonal of a square whose sides measure two thousand cubits should be a third of two thousand $2000/3 = 666 \frac{2}{3}$ or $667 - \frac{1}{3}$.
- (23) That the approximate difference between the area of a square and that of a circle is a quarter of the former or a third of the latter.
- (24) In relation to any of its sides.
- (25) A side of the square spoken of being equal to 2,000 cubits, the diagonal of such a square must be equal to $2,000 \times \frac{7}{5}$ cubits. The gain, therefore, is $2,000 \times \frac{7}{5} - 2,000 = 2,000 \times \frac{2}{5} = 400 \times 2,000$ cubits.
- (26) V. Glos., a stretch of land extending to seventy and two thirds cubits away from the town.
- (27) Sc. the Sabbath limits begin at such a distance from the town and not from the town boundary.
- (28) This is explained in the Gemara infra.
- (29) Or 'EITHER' (v. Gemara infra). Lit., 'if there is to this . . . and if etc.'
- (30) I.e., two thirds of a cubit.
- (31) That a karpaf is allowed for every town.
- (32) Num. XXXV, 4, emphasis on 'outward' הוֹצֵה.
- (33) הוֹצֵה, Sc. KARPAF.
- (34) Of the Sabbath limit.
- (35) The use of KARPAF in the sing.
- (36) The final clause just cited, according to which a karpaf is allowed to each town.
- (37) Who allows only one karpaf for both towns.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 57b

This¹ is the view of² R. Meir.³ But if this is the view of R. Meir [the objection arises:] Was it not already enunciated in the first clause: A KARPAF IS ALLOWED FOR EVERY TOWN; SO R. MEIR? — [Both were] required. For if [the law were to be derived] from the former only it might have been presumed that one karpaf is allowed for one town and one is also allowed for two towns,⁴ hence we were informed⁵ that for two towns two karpafs are allowed. And if we had been informed of the latter only it might have been assumed [that R. Meir's view⁶ applied to such a case only] because [one karpaf is too] cramped for the use of two towns, but not in the former case⁷ where the space is not too cramped.⁸ [Hence both were] required.

We learned: SO ALSO WHERE THREE VILLAGES ARE ARRANGED IN THE SHAPE OF A TRIANGLE, IF BETWEEN THE TWO OUTER ONES THERE WAS A DISTANCE OF A HUNDRED AND FORTY-ONE AND A THIRD CUBITS, THE MIDDLE ONE CAUSES ALL THE THREE OF THEM TO BE REGARDED AS ONE. The reason then⁹ is because there was one in the middle, but if there had been none in the middle the outer two villages would not have been combined. Is not this¹⁰ an objection against R. Huna?¹¹ — R. Huna can answer you: Surely, in connection with this ruling it was stated: Rabbah¹² in the name of R. Idi who had it from R. Hanina explained: There is no need for the villages to be arranged in the shape of an equilateral¹³ triangle¹⁴ but that if on observation it is found that with the middle one placed between the other two they would form a triangle, and there would be between the one and the other¹⁵ a distance of no more than a hundred and forty-one and a third cubits¹⁶ the middle one causes all the three of them, to be regarded as one.¹⁷

Said Raba to Abaye: What [maximum distance] is allowed between an outer village and the middle one?¹⁸ — ‘Two thousand cubits’,¹⁹ the other replied. ‘But did you not say’, the former asked: ‘that logical reasoning is in agreement with Raba the son of Rabbah son of R. Huna who ruled that a perpendicular distance of more than two thousand cubits was allowed?’²⁰ ‘What a comparison!’²¹ There, houses are in existence,²² but here there are no houses’.²³

Raba further asked Abaye: What [maximum distance] is allowed between the two outer ones? — ‘What [distance] is allowed’! What difference does this make in view of the ruling that ‘if . . . with the middle one placed between the other two’ there remains between them²⁴ ‘a distance of no more than a hundred and forty-one and a third cubits’ they are all regarded as one?²⁵ — Even if they²⁶ are four thousand cubits distant from one another? — ‘Yes’, the other replied. ‘But did not R. Huna lay down: If a town is shaped like a bow then if the distance between its two ends is less than four thousand cubits the Sabbath limits are measured from the bow string, otherwise measuring must begin from the arch?’²⁷ — ‘There’, the other replied. ‘you cannot say that the distance²⁸ is filled up²⁹ but here you can well say so’.³⁰

Said R. Safra to Raba: Behold the people of Ktesifon for whom we measure the Sabbath limits from the further side of Ardashir and the people of Ardashir for whom we measure the Sabbath limit from the further side of Ktesifon;³¹ does not the Tigris³² in fact cut between them a gap wider than a hundred and forty-one and a third cubits?³³ — The other thereupon went out and showed him the flanks of a wall that projected seventy and two thirds³⁴ cubits across the Tigris.³⁵

MISHNAH. SABBATH LIMITS MAY BE MEASURED ONLY WITH A ROPE OF THE LENGTH OF FIFTY CUBITS NEITHER LESS NOR MORE;³⁶ AND A MAN MAY MEASURE ONLY WHILE HOLDING THE END OF THE ROPE ON A LEVEL WITH HIS HEART.³⁷ IF IN THE COURSE OF MEASURING THE SURVEYOR REACHED A GLEN OR A FALLEN WALL³⁸ HE SPANS IT³⁹ AND RESUMES⁴⁰ HIS MEASURING; IF HE REACHED A HILL HE SPANS IT AND RESUMES HIS MEASURING;

(1) The final clause just cited.

(2) Lit., ‘this according to whom?’

(3) It is not the conclusion of the ruling of the Sages, but a continuation of R. Meir’s ruling with which our Mishnah began.

(4) The purpose of the ruling being that every town shall have a karpaf but not one exclusively for itself.

(5) By the final clause.

(6) That karpafs are at all allowed.

(7) One town surrounded by open country.

(8) In such a case, it might have been assumed, R. Meir allows no karpaf at all.

(9) Why the two outer villages may be regarded as one despite the distance of a hundred and forty-one and a third cubits intervening.

(10) The requirement of a third village between the other two.

(11) Who allowed a karpaf for every town (or village) and according to whom the two outer villages would have been combined into one, even in the absence of the third village, owing to the fact that no more than the space of two karpafs ($2 \times 70 \frac{2}{3} = 141 \frac{1}{3}$ cubits) intervened between them.

(12) Var. lec. ‘Raba’, ‘It. Adda’.

(13) Lit., ‘actually’.

(14) Sc. that ‘the distance between any two of them shall be no greater than a hundred and forty-one and a third cubits.

(15) I.e., ‘the middle village and any of the other two.

(16) A distance that is equal to that of two karpafs on either side of the middle village.

(17) Even though the distance between the two outer ones is much greater than a hundred and forty-one and a third cubits.

(18) If it is desired that the middle one shall cause ALL THE THREE OF THEM TO BE REGARDED AS ONE.

(19) A Sabbath limit. Since it is permitted to walk without an ‘erub between the middle one and either of the others it is also permitted to regard the former as placed between the latter.

(20) Between the middle point of the bow-string and the arch, in the case of a town that was built in the shape of a bow (supra 55b).

(21) Lit., 'thus now'.

(22) Throughout the area of the arch to either end of the imaginary string, so that it is possible to reach the 'string' via the bow.

(23) Between the middle village and the others, and all the distance between them must be traversed across open country.

(24) I.e., , the confines on either side of the middle one and each of the others.

(25) Which shows that the distance between the outer ones subject to this reservation is of no consequence.

(26) The outer ones.

(27) Supra 55a q.v. notes.

(28) Lit., 'there is no (reason) to say: Fill', between the houses at the two ends of the bow.

(29) Since there is nothing wherewith to fill it.

(30) Lit., 'there is (reason) to say: Fill', by regarding the third village as breaking up the distance and reducing it on either side.

(31) [Two neighbouring places, the former on the eastern and the latter on the western bank of the Tigris, v. Obermeyer pp. 164ff.] Thus assuming that the two towns are combined into one.

(32) In its course between the two towns.

(33) How then could the two towns be regarded as one?

(34) Lit., 'remnants.

(35) And thus reduced the gap between the buildings of the two towns to less than a hundred and forty one and a third cubits.

(36) The reason follows in the Gemara.

(37) Sc. each of the two surveyors must hold his end of the measuring rope at a level with his heart, in order to ensure correctness and in the process of measuring. Correctness is impossible where one end of the rope is held at one level and the other end at a higher or lower level, since the distance measured would in this case be less than the full length of the rope.

(38) That collapsed in a heap and across which people pass.

(39) [I.e., he takes into consideration only the horizontal span provided it is not more than fifty cubits]. Sc. one man stands on its near side while another stands on its far side, each of them holding one end of the rope which is thus stretched across the glen or the collapsed wall. By this method of measuring one gains for the Sabbath limit the distances taken up by the slopes.

(40) This refers to a glen, for instance, that was wider than fifty cubits (cf. n. 7) in a part that faced the town and narrower than fifty cubits in another part that was removed from the town sideways. The surveyor, when reaching the edge of the glen, is in such circumstances allowed to make a detour to the narrower section of the glen, to span it there with the rope, and to continue his measuring until the rope is perpendicular to the line drawn from the point furthest from the town on the far side of the glen. He then RESUMES his measuring from that point to the end of the Sabbath limit.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 58a

PROVIDED HE DOES NOT GO BEYOND THE SABBATH LIMIT. IF HE IS UNABLE TO SPAN IT — IN CONNECTION WITH THIS R. DOSTAI B. JANNAI STATED IN THE NAME OF R. MEIR, I HAVE HEARD THAT HILLS ARE TREATED AS THOUGH THEY WERE PIERCED'.¹

GEMARA. Whence is this² deduced? — Rab Judah citing Rab replied: From Scripture which says. The length of the court shall be a hundred cubits, and the breadth fifty by fifty,³ the Torah having thus⁴ enjoined: Measure with a rope of the length of fifty cubits. But is not this text required for the ordinance to take away fifty and to surround with them the other fifty?⁵ — If for that purpose only,⁶ Scripture might have said 'fifty, fifty' why then did it say 'fifty by fifty'? Hence both may be deduced.⁷ NEITHER LESS NOR MORE. One taught: Neither less because the measurements are increased,⁸ nor more because they are reduced.⁹

R. Assi¹⁰ ruled: One must measure only with a rope of apeskima.¹¹ What is the meaning of apeskima? — R. Abba replied: Nargila. What is Nargila? — R. Jacob replied: A palm-tree which has only one bast. Others read: What is the meaning of apeskima? — R. Abba replied: Nargila; R. Jacob replied: A palm-tree which has only one bast.

It was taught: R. Joshua b. Hananiah said: 'You have nothing more suitable for measuring than iron chains, but what can we do in face of what the Torah¹² said: With a measuring line in his hand.¹³ Is it not, however, written: And in the man's hand was a measuring rod?¹⁴ — That was used for measuring the gates.

R. Joseph learned: There are three kinds of rope. Those made of megeg,¹⁵ of wicker and of flax. The megeg rope¹⁶ was used for the heifer;¹⁷ for we learned: They bound it with a rope of megeg and put it on its pile.¹⁸ The wicker rope was used in connection with the test of a faithless wife;¹⁹ for we learned: And after that he brings a wicker rope²⁰ and binds it above her breasts.²¹ The flax rope was used for measuring purposes.

IF IN THE COURSE OF MEASURING THE SURVEYOR REACHED. Since it was stated: RESUMES HIS MEASURING it may be inferred that if he is unable to span it²² he proceeds to a position²³ from where²⁴ he is able to do so and, after spanning it, he makes the necessary observations²⁵ [whereby he is enabled to locate the point on the far side]²⁶ that is in a straight line with his original line of measuring²⁷ and then he resumes [his measurements in a straight line] — Thus we have here learnt what the Rabbis have taught elsewhere: If in the course of measuring the measuring rope reached a glen, the surveyor may span it if he can do so with a rope of fifty cubits, but if not, he proceeds to a position²³ from where²⁴ he is able to span it and, having spanned it, he makes the necessary observations²⁵ [whereby he is enabled to locate the point on the far sides that is in a straight line with his original line of measuring] and then he resumes his measuring. If the glen was a crooked one²⁸ it is pierced in an upward, as well as in a downward direction.²⁹ If it³⁰ reached a wall we do not say: 'Let the wall be bored through';³¹ its thickness rather is estimated and the measuring continues.³² Have we not, however, learnt: HE SPANS IT AND RESUMES HIS MEASURING?³³ — There³⁴ it is a case of one that can be conveniently used³⁵ but here it is a case of one that cannot conveniently be used.³⁶

Rab Judah citing Samuel stated: This³⁷ was learned only in the case where a plumb line³⁸ does not descend in a straight line³⁹

(9) A longer rope cannot be so well stretched and each unit of it would cover less ground than the standard number it represents. This would result in a loss in the Sabbath limits.

but if it does descend in a straight line¹ the bottom of the glen is measured by the ordinary method.²

What may be the depth of a glen?³ — R. Joseph replied: Two thousand cubits. Abaye raised an objection against him: [If a glen was] a hundred cubits deep and fifty cubits wide one may span it, otherwise one may not! — He holds the view of 'Others',⁴ it having been taught: Others rule: Even though a glen was two thousand cubits deep but only fifty cubits wide one may span it.

Some there are who read: R. Joseph replied: Even if it was deeper than two thousand cubits. In agreement with whose view is this ruling? Is it neither in agreement with that of the first Tanna⁵ nor with that of the 'Others'?⁶ — There⁷ it is a case where the plumb line does not descend in a straight line⁸ but here it is one where it does descend in a straight line.⁹

Where the plumb line does not descend in a straight line how much [deviation]¹⁰ is allowed? — Abimi replied: Up to four cubits; and so learned Rami b. Ezekiel: Up to four cubits.

IF HE REACHED A HILL HE SPANS IT AND RESUMES HIS MEASURING. Raba explained: This¹¹ was learnt only in respect of a hill that has a rise of ten handbreadths to a gradient of four cubits,¹² but a hill that has a rise of ten handbreadths to five cubits must be measured in the usual manner.¹³ R. Huna son of R. Nathan taught this¹⁴ in the direction of leniency: Raba explained. This¹⁵ was learnt only in respect of a hill that has a rise often handbreadths to a gradient of five cubits,¹⁶ but a hill that has a rise of ten handbreadths to a gradient of four cubits¹⁷ one need only estimate its base and proceed with his measuring.

PROVIDED HE DOES NOT GO BEYOND THE SABBATH LIMIT.¹⁸ What is the reason? — R. Kahana replied: This was ordained as a preventive measure against the possible assumption that the Sabbath limit reached to that point.¹⁹

IF HE IS UNABLE TO SPAN IT. Our Rabbis taught: How is the method of piercing carried out? The man on the lower level holds his end of the rope on a level with his heart while the man on the higher level holds his end on a level with his feet. Abaye stated: We have it as a tradition that piercing may be effected only with a rope of the length of four cubits.

R. Nahman citing Rabbah b. Abbuha stated:²⁰ The method of piercing must not be employed in measurements in connection with the broken-necked heifer²¹ nor in those around the cities of refuge.²¹ because these are ordinances of the Torah.²²

MISHNAH. [THE SABBATH LIMIT OF A TOWN] IS MEASURED ONLY ALONG THE BEATEN TRACK.²³ IF ONE EXTENDED THE LIMIT AT ONE POINT MORE THAN AT ANOTHER,²⁴ THE EXTENDED LIMIT IS OBSERVED.²⁵ IF THERE WAS A GREATER DISTANCE FOR ONE AND A LESSER DISTANCE FOR ANOTHER,²⁶ THE GREATER DISTANCE IS OBSERVED. FURTHERMORE, EVEN A BONDMAN AND EVEN A BONDWOMAN ARE BELIEVED WHEN THEY SAY, 'THUS FAR IS THE SABBATH LIMIT', SINCE THE SAGES DID NOT ENACT THE LAW²⁷ IN ORDER TO ADD RESTRICTIONS BUT IN ORDER TO RELAX THEM.

(1) I.e., if the sides of the glen are practically perpendicular (as will be defined infra) so that they cannot be used at all for walking purposes.

(2) Lit., 'a proper measurement'.

(3) That is spanned if it is not wider than fifty cubits.

(4) With a capital O, sc. R. Meir (cf. Hor. 13b).

(5) Who limits the depth to one hundred cubits.

(6) R. Meir who allows a depth of two thousand cubits but no more.

(7) The case in dispute between the first Tanna and others.

(8) As the slopes of the glen, to a limited extent at least, can be used for walking on, its depth was restricted.

(9) The sides of the glen being absolutely unsuitable for walking, its depth, however great, is of no consequence.

(10) At the bed of the glen in relation to the edge thereof.

(11) That the method of spanning or piercing is allowed.

(12) V. Rashi a.I.

(13) Such a gentle slope is deemed to be on a par with level ground which may not be measured either by spanning or by piercing.

(14) Raba's view just enunciated.

(15) That the method of spanning or piercing is allowed.

(16) Since it is not level ground one of the methods of spanning or piercing may be adopted.

(17) Being too steep and hardly suitable for walking.

(18) Cf. relevant notes in our Mishnah, and diagram ibid.

(19) Beyond the permitted limit. In the absence of the preventive measure people might desecrate the Sabbath by walking as far as that point, believing it to be within the Sabbath limit of their town.

(24) Lit., 'and reduced towards another place'.

(25) Lit., 'hear', sc. the lesser limit is extended to the length of the greater one. As the measuring rope must be stretched to its utmost capacity so as to cover the maximum length possible it is assumed that the deficiency in the lesser limit is due to all insufficient stretching of the rope.

(26) This is explained in the Gemara infra.

(27) Of Sabbath limits.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 59a

GEMARA. Is¹ THE EXTENDED LIMIT only observed² but not the reduced limit?³ — Read: Even as far as the extended limit.⁴

IF THERE WAS A GREATER DISTANCE FOR ONE AND A LESSER DISTANCE FOR ANOTHER etc. What need again was there for this rule? Is it not practically identical with the previous one?⁵ — It is this that was meant: If one surveyor extended the limit and another reduced it, the one whose limit is the greater is to be obeyed. Abaye added: Provided the extended limit⁶ does not exceed the lesser one by more than the difference between the diagonal and a side of the town.⁷

SINCE THE SAGES DID NOT ENACT THE LAW IN ORDER TO ADD RESTRICTIONS BUT IN ORDER TO RELAX THEM. But was it not taught: The Sages did not enact the law in order to relax restrictions but in order to impose them? — Rabina replied. The meaning⁸ is: Not to relax restrictions in connection with Pentateuchal laws but to add restrictions to them; the laws of the Sabbath limits, however, are only Rabbinical.⁹

MISHNAH. IF A TOWN THAT BELONGED TO AN INDIVIDUAL WAS CONVERTED INTO ONE BELONGING TO MANY,¹⁰ ONE 'ERUB MAY BE PROVIDED FOR ALL THE TOWN;¹¹ BUT IF A TOWN BELONGED TO MANY AND WAS CONVERTED INTO ONE BELONGING TO AN INDIVIDUAL, NO SINGLE 'ERUB MAY BE PROVIDED FOR ALL THE TOWN¹² UNLESS A SECTION OF IT OF THE SIZE OF THE TOWN OF HADASHAH¹³ IN JUDEA, WHICH CONTAINS FIFTY RESIDENTS, IS EXCLUDED;¹⁴ SO R. JUDAH. R. SIMEON RULED: THREE COURTYARDS EACH OF WHICH CONTAINED TWO HOUSES.

GEMARA. How is one to imagine A TOWN THAT BELONGED TO AN INDIVIDUAL AND WAS CONVERTED INTO ONE BELONGING TO MANY?- Rab Judah replied: The residential district,¹⁵ for instance, of the Exilarch. Said R. Nahman to him: What is your reason?¹⁶ If it be suggested: Because many people meet at the seat of authority¹⁷ they would remind each other,¹⁸ are not all Israel [it may be objected] assembled together on a Sabbath morning also?¹⁹ — Rather said R. Nahman: The private town, for instance, of Nitzwoi.²⁰

Our Rabbis taught: If a town belonging to an individual was converted into one belonging to many, and a public domain²¹ passed through it, how is an 'erub to be provided for it? A side post or a cross-beam, is fixed on either side²² and thereby one is enabled to move things about in the space between them.²³ No erub, however, may be provided for a half of it,²⁴ but either one erub for all of it or one 'erub for each alley separately.²⁵ If a town did, and still does belong to many

(1) Since the Mishnah ruled: 'THE EXTENDED LIMIT IS OBSERVED'.

(2) Lit., , 'yes'.

(3) Is this likely? If it is permitted to walk the greater distance is it possible that the lesser one should be forbidden?

(4) Sc. the lesser limit (cf. nn. on our Mishnah) is extended to that of the greater one.

(5) IF ONE EXTENDED THE LIMIT AT ONE POINT MORE THAN AT ANOTHER.

- (6) Where it exceeded the difference between the measurements by a taut and a sagging rope.
- (7) In such a case it is possible to assume that one surveyor erroneously measured the perpendicular from the side while the other properly measured diagonally (v. supra 58b); cf. Rashi s.v. שלש and cf. Tosaf. s.v. למקום a.l.
- (8) Of the Baraita just cited.
- (9) Which may well be relaxed (cf. supra 36a. Sotah 30b). Hence the statement in our Mishnah.
- (10) I.e., belonging to one individual from which all the inhabitants hold their houses in tenancy. The whole town is, therefore, treated like one huge courtyard.
- (11) As was the case before it has changed its character. The entire town is treated as one large courtyard, no independent provision being required for its alleys. This, as will be explained infra, applies to a town that has no public domain sixteen cubits in width.
- (12) Though before it changed its character one 'erub served for the whole town.
- (13) V. Josh. XV, 37.
- (14) From the benefits of the general 'erub, and a separate 'erub is provided for it. This exclusion serves as a reminder of the former public character of the town and provides the necessary precaution in case the town is re-converted into one belonging to many when separate provision would have to be made for each individual alley.
- (15) [Daskarta from the Persian "das" = district, and Aramaic 'Katha' = city; v. Obermeyer p. 146.]
- (16) For instancing just the Exilarch's town.
- (17) Harmana, metaph. for the Exilarch's office.
- (18) Of the real character of the town and would not be likely, in consequence, to mistake the difference between a public town and a private one.
- (19) For public worship or study.
- (20) MS.M., 'Nishwor', a certain individual who owned a town; and the same law applies to any town in private ownership that was converted into one belonging to many.
- (21) A road sixteen cubits wide.
- (22) Of the public domain.
- (23) This applies only to a town that had no wall round it so that the two ends of the public domain terminated in the open country. Hence it is only in the case of a town that was originally in private ownership that the contrivances mentioned are sufficient. In the case of one that always belonged to the public such contrivances are invalid, all the town's alleys being subject to restrictions similar to those of the public domain.
- (24) Since originally it constituted one domain it cannot now be broken up into two independent domains. The inhabitants of the one half (like the residents in one of the courtyards of an alley who failed to participate in the 'erub of the other courtyards that cause the entire alley to be forbidden to all) cause the entire town to be forbidden to all.
- (25) The objection will be raised infra as to why (cf. prev. n.) the alleys do not cause one another to be forbidden to all.

but¹ had only one gate,² a single 'erub suffices for all of it. Who is it that learned that a public domain may thus be provided with an 'erub? — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: It is R. Judah; for it was taught: 'A more lenient rule than this did R. Judah lay down: If a man had two houses on the two sides respectively of a public domain he may construct one side-post on one side of any of the houses and another on the other side, or one cross-beam on the one side of any of the houses and another on its other side and then he may move things about in the space between them; but they said to him: A public domain cannot be provided with an 'erub in such a manner'.³

The Master said: 'No 'erub, furthermore, may be provided for a half of it'. R. Papa explained: This was said only [in the case where the division was] longitudinal⁴ but if it was crosswise⁵ an 'erub may be provided for each half separately. In agreement with whose view has this⁶ been laid down? It is contrary to that of R. Akiba, for if it were suggested that it was in agreement with his view [the objection would arise:] Did he not rule: A man⁷ who is permitted freedom of movement in his own place⁸ causes the restriction of free movement on others⁹ in¹⁰ a place that is not his?¹¹ — It⁶ may be said to be in agreement even with the view of R. Akiba, since he maintained his view only there where it was a case of two courtyards one of which was behind¹² the other so that the inner one had no other door,¹³ but not here where the inhabitants in the one half could gain egress through one gate while those in the other half could gain egress through the other.

Some there are who read: R. Papa explained: It must not be assumed [that only where the division was] longitudinal¹⁴ may no 'erub be prepared¹⁵ but that where it was crosswise¹⁶ an 'erub may be prepared.¹⁵ The fact is that even where the division was crosswise no 'erub may be prepared.¹⁵ In agreement with whose view is this¹⁷ laid down? Is it only in agreement with that of R. Akiba?¹⁸ — It¹⁷ may be said to be in agreement even with the view of the Rabbis, since they maintained their view¹⁹ there only where it is a case of two courtyards one behind²⁰ the other so that the inner one can well lock its gate and use [its own area only].²¹ but can the public domain here be shifted from its place?²²

The Master said: 'Either one 'erub for all of it or one 'erub for each alley separately'. Now why is no separate 'erub allowed for either half? Obviously because they would cause one another to be forbidden;²³ but then would not the various alleys also²⁴ cause one another to be forbidden?²⁵ — Here we are dealing with a case where a barrier was provided,²⁶ and this ruling is in harmony with the following one that was laid down by R. Idi b. Abin in the name of R. Hisda: Any of the residents of an alley who had made a barrier to his courtyard entrance²⁷ can no longer²⁸ impose any restrictions on the freedom of movement of the other residents of the alley.

BUT IF A TOWN BELONGED TO MANY AND WAS CONVERTED etc. R. Zera provided an 'erub for R. Hiyya's town²⁹ and left no section out [of its provision]. Said Abaye to him, 'Why did the Master act in this manner?'³⁰ 'Its elders', the other replied: 'told me that R. Hiyya b. Assi used to provide one 'erub for all the town and I have, therefore, concluded that it must have been a town that once belonged to a single owner and was later converted into one belonging to many'.³¹ 'The same elders', the first retorted, told me: "It formerly had a rubbish heap on one side";³² but now that the rubbish heap has been removed the town must be regarded as possessing two gates in which [the preparation of a single 'erub only] is forbidden'. 'I', the other admitted, 'was not aware of this'.

R.³³ Ammi b. Adda of Harpania enquired of Rabbah,³⁴ 'What is the ruling where a town had a ladder³⁵ on one side and a gate on the other?'³⁶ — 'Thus', the other replied, said Rab, 'A ladder has the legal status of a door'. 'Do not pay heed to him', exclaimed R. Nahman, 'thus ruled R. Adda b. Ahabah³⁷ in the name of Rab:³⁸ "A ladder has sometimes the status of a door and sometimes that of a wall". It has the status of a wall³⁹ as has just been laid down;⁴⁰ and it has the status of a door where a ladder⁴¹ is put up between two courtyards⁴² in which case the residents, if they wish, may⁴³ provide only one 'erub,⁴⁴ and if they prefer, they may provide two separate 'erubs'.⁴⁵

Could R. Nahman, however, have made such a statement?⁴⁶ Did not R. Nahman in fact lay down in the name of Samuel: If the residents of a courtyard and those of a balcony⁴⁷ above it forgot

(1) Being enclosed on all sides.

(2) Thus being short of the requirements of a public domain which must be wide open at both its ends.

(3) Supra 6af q.v. notes.

(4) Sc. if the division was made along the public domain which ran through the entire length of the town, from gate to gate, and divided it into two longitudinal halves. As the public domain is used by the inhabitants on both sides it forms a link between the two halves of the town and combines them into one inseparable unit.

(5) Sc. it cut the town into two halves across the middle of the public domain and left for either half of the town a half of the public domain with the gate at its end, so that it was possible for the inhabitants of either half to use their own gate as entrance and exit and to avoid entirely the use of the public domain in the other half of the town.

(6) R. Papa's ruling.

(7) Lit., 'foot', hence a man's right of passage.

(8) Sc. in his own courtyard where a valid 'erub had been prepared.

- (9) Even though they also prepared the prescribed 'erub.
- (10) Cur. edd. insert 'even' which is deleted by Rashi and others.
- (11) Infra 75a. Sc. in an outer courtyard in which he did not reside but in which he was entitled to the right of passage by virtue of his residence in an inner courtyard whose one and only door opened out into it. Now, since according to R. Akiba the residents of the inner courtyard, on account of their right of passage through the outer one, impose restrictions on the free movement of its residents, the inhabitants of the two halves of the town under discussion should likewise, according to R. Akiba, impose upon one another the restrictions of free movement, since each of them is also entitled to a right of passage through the public domain that passed through the other half of the town in which he did not reside. As no such restrictions, however, are imposed, must R. Papa's ruling be said to be contrary to R. Akiba's view?
- (12) Lit., 'within'.
- (13) But the one that opened into the outer courtyard. As no other door was available to them, the residents of the inner courtyard must perforce use the outer courtyard as their only passage to the street and, by this right of entry, must restrict the freedom of movement of its residents.
- (14) V. supra p. 414, n. 2.
- (15) By the inhabitants of each half town separately.
- (16) V. supra p. 414, n. 3.
- (17) R. Papa's ruling.
- (18) Cf. prev. nn. Is it likely, however, that R. Papa would lay down a ruling that was contrary to the opinion of the majority of the Rabbis who differed from R. Akiba?
- (19) That where each courtyard had prepared a separate 'erub the residents of the inner one, despite their right of passage through the outer one, do not restrict the freedom of movement of its residents.
- (20) Lit., , 'within'.
- (21) In the interests of the residents of the outer courtyard the inner ones might well be expected to forego their right of passage for that one day.
- (22) Of course not. As it must remain where it is and there is no gate, fence or any other distinguishing mark to separate the one half of the town from the other, the two halves must be regarded as one unit and, therefore, no separate 'erubs can be permitted.
- (23) As was explained supra.
- (24) Since originally when the town belonged to one owner they were allowed free movement between each other.
- (25) Despite the side-posts or cross-beams.
- (26) For the entrance to each alley, the residents thereby indicating that they desired to sever all connection between their previously united alleys.
- (27) Thus indicating his desire to be dissociated from his neighbours.
- (28) By failing to join them in their 'erub.
- (29) Which belonged to many.
- (30) Sc. why did he not exclude at least a section OF THE SIZE OF THE TOWN OF HADASHAH?
- (31) In which case ONE 'ERUB MAY BE PROVIDED FOR ALL THE TOWN.
- (32) As the heap blocked up one of the gates all the town, which was thus left with one gate only, could well be provided (as laid down supra) with a single 'erub.
- (33) Wanting in MS.M.
- (34) MS.M. adds: 'b. Abbuha'.
- (35) Whereby the town wall could be scaled.
- (36) Is the town to be treated as having two gates?
- (37) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit the last two words.
- (38) MS.M. omits, 'in the ... Rab'.
- (39) I.e., it is not regarded as a door.
- (40) By R. Nahman, where the ladder was used as a means of entrance into, and exit from the town.
- (41) Four handbreadths wide.
- (42) Which had no door between them.
- (43) As in the case of two courtyards between which a door communicated (cf. infra 76a).
- (44) For both courtyards; and all the residents are, thereby, permitted to use both courtyards by way of the trip of the wall or through any holes or cracks in the wall.

(45) One for each courtyard, and the residents of the one do not in any way affect the freedom of movement of the other, each courtyard being regarded as a separate domain.

(46) That a ladder has the status of a wall where such status leads to a relaxation of the law.

(47) Marpeseth, a balcony or gallery to which the doors of the dwellings of an upper storey open and which communicates with the courtyard below by means of a ladder.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 60a

to prepare an 'erub¹ the latter does not restrict freedom of movement in the former if a barrier, four handbreadths in height, intervened between them,² otherwise it does impose a restriction?³ — Here we are dealing with a case where the balcony was less than ten handbreadths high.⁴ But if the balcony was less than ten handbreadths high⁵ what is the use of making a barrier?⁶ — This is a case where it was enclosed [all along its length] up to ten cubits,⁷ so that if it was provided with a barrier they may be deemed to be entirely removed from there.⁸

Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled: If a wall⁹ was lined with ladders,¹⁰ even though they extended to a greater length than ten cubits, it nevertheless retains the status of a wall.¹¹ R. Berona pointed out to Rab Judah the following incongruity at the schoolhouse¹² of R. Hanina:¹³ Could Samuel have ruled that 'it nevertheless retains the status of a wall',¹⁴ seeing that R. Nahman citing Samuel ruled: If the residents of a balcony and those of a courtyard¹⁵ forgot to prepare a joint 'erub they do not impose any restrictions upon one another if there was a barrier of four handbreadths between them, otherwise they do impose restrictions upon one another?¹⁶ — Here we are dealing with a case where the balcony was less than ten handbreadths high.¹⁷ But if the balcony is 'less than ten handbreadths high' what is the use of making a barrier? This is a case where it was enclosed [all along its length] up to ten cubits, so that if a barrier is provided they may be deemed to be completely removed from that place.¹⁸

Some of the men of Kekunai¹⁹ once came to R. Joseph and said to him, 'Send with us a man who might prepare an 'erub for our town'.²⁰ 'Go', he said to Abaye, 'and prepare the 'erub for them but see that there is no outcry against it at the schoolhouse'.²¹ Proceeding thither he observed that certain houses opened on to the river.²² 'These',²³ he said: 'might serve as the excluded section²⁴ of the town'. Changing his mind he said: 'We learned: NO SINGLE 'ERUB MAY BE PROVIDED FOR ALL THE TOWN, from which it follows that if it were desired,²⁵ they could all join in one 'erub'.²⁶ I would, however, provide for them, windows,²⁷ so that if desired they could be joined in the general 'erub" of the town through those windows'.²⁸ Then he said: 'This²⁹ is not necessary, since Rabbah b. Abbuha in fact provided separate erubs for each row of alleys throughout all Mahuza on account of the cattle ditches that intervened between the rows,³⁰ where³¹ each row served as the statutory excluded section for the other³² though these could not join one another in a common 'erub even if they had wished to do so'.³³ Then again he said: 'The two cases³⁴ are really' unlike, since there³⁵ one could if desired prepare the 'erub by way of roofs³⁶ while these³⁷ could not possibly join in one general 'erub: consequently let us provide for them windows'. Finally, however, he said: 'Windows are not necessary either, for Mar b. Pumbeditha of Pumbeditha had a store of straw which³⁸ he set aside for Pumbeditha as the statutory section that was to be excluded'.³⁹ 'It is on account of this [group of houses]'. Abaye remarked: 'that the Master warned me: See that there is no outcry against it at the schoolhouse'.⁴⁰

UNLESS A SECTION OF IT OF THE SIZE OF THE TOWN OF HADASHAH . . . IS EXCLUDED. It was taught: R. Judah related, 'There was a town in Judea whose name was Hadashah which had fifty inhabitants, men, women and children, by means of which the Sages determined [the statutory size of the sections to be excluded];⁴¹ and this town itself served as the excluded section [of a larger town].⁴²

The question was raised: What was the procedure in Hadashah itself?⁴³ — Since Hadashah served as the excluded section of the large town⁴² the latter also obviously served as the excluded section of the smaller town; the question rather is: What is the procedure⁴⁴ in a town that is similar in size to Hadashah?⁴⁵ — R. Huna and Rab Judah differ on this point — One holds that a section of it must be excluded while the other maintains that none need be excluded.

R. SIMEON RULED: THREE COURTYARDS etc. R. Hama b. Goria citing Rab stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon. R. Isaac ruled: Even one house and one courtyard [are sufficient].⁴⁶ ‘One courtyard’! Is this conceivable?⁴⁷ — Rather say: One house in one courtyard. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: ‘Is that ruling of R. Isaac a tradition or a logical deduction?’ — ‘What’, the other retorted: ‘does this matter to us?’ — ‘Is then’, the first replied. ‘the study of Gemara to be a mere sing-song?’⁴⁸

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WHO WAS⁴⁹ IN THE EAST⁵⁰ INSTRUCTED HIS SON,⁵¹ ‘PREPARE FOR ME AN ‘ERUB⁵¹ IN THE WEST’,⁵² OR IF HE WAS IN THE WEST⁵² AND HE INSTRUCTED HIS SON⁵¹ ‘PREPARE FOR ME AN ‘ERUB⁵¹ IN THE EAST’,⁵² IF THE DISTANCE BETWEEN HIM AND HIS HOUSE WAS NO MORE THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS⁵³ AND THAT BETWEEN HIM AND HIS ‘ERUB WAS MORE THAN THIS, HE IS PERMITTED TO PROCEED TO HIS HOUSE⁵⁴ BUT FORBIDDEN TO PROCEED TO HIS ‘ERUB.⁵⁵ IF THE DISTANCE TO HIS ‘ERUB WAS NO MORE THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS AND THAT TO HIS HOUSE MORE THAN THIS, HE IS FORBIDDEN TO PROCEED TO HIS HOUSE⁵⁶ BUT PERMITTED TO PROCEED TO HIS ‘ERUB.⁵⁷ IF A MAN DEPOSITS HIS ‘ERUB WITHIN THE [SABBATIC] EXTENSION OF A TOWN,⁵⁸ HIS ACT IS OF NO CONSEQUENCE.⁵⁹ IF HE DEPOSITED IT EVEN ONE CUBIT ONLY BEYOND THE Limit⁶⁰

- (1) Jointly for the balcony and the courtyard, but each was provided with a separate ‘erub.
 - (2) Lit., ‘before them’, sc. at the foot of the ladder. The door forms a partition between the two courtyards so that the residents of the one can in no way affect those of the other.
 - (3) As if the ladder were a proper door communicating between the balcony above and the courtyards below. From this it follows that, according to R. Nahman, a ladder has the status of a door where such status leads to a restriction of the law; how then could it be said supra that he held a ladder to have the status of a wall where the law is thereby relaxed?
 - (4) It is in such a case only that a ladder cannot be regarded as a wall whereby the law might be relaxed.
 - (5) And consequently fully open to the courtyard.
 - (6) Balcony and courtyard, being so close to each other, would be like two courtyards between which no wall intervened which cannot be separated from each other in their ‘erub arrangements.
 - (7) I.e., leaving only a gap not exceeding ten cubits as a doorway.
 - (8) I.e., the residents of the balcony and courtyard respectively may be deemed as having withdrawn themselves from the use of each other's domain. In the absence of such a barrier, however, the balcony, owing to its close proximity to the courtyard below, and its two cubits doorway, must inevitably be regarded as forming one domain with that courtyard even though the law must be restricted as a consequence.
 - (9) Between two courtyards.
 - (10) Sc. a number of ladders were placed against the wall, one next to the other.
 - (11) The ladders, though they afford access from one courtyard into the other, are not necessarily regarded as a breach of more than ten cubits that causes the two courtyards to be regarded as one requiring a joint ‘erub, but can also be treated, if it is so desired, as a wall separating the two domains necessitating an ‘erub for each domain (Rashi).
 - (12) Aliter: press-room.
 - (13) Var. lec. ‘Sata’ (MS.M.) ‘bar Senina’ (Bomb. ed.).
 - (14) Sc, that the law is not restricted to deprive a wall of its status on account of a ladder that was placed against it.
 - (15) Situated in close proximity below the former.
 - (16) Since the height of the balcony was not stated the ruling presumably applies also to one that was ten handbreadths high and that had the status of a wall; which shows that a ladder (the usual means of communication between balcony and courtyard) does deprive a wall of its status and imparts to it the character of one that has a door in it.

- (17) So that even in the absence of the ladder it could not be regarded as a valid wall.
- (18) V. supra p. 418, nn. 1-2.
- (19) Or 'Korkunia'; identified with Kirkesium or Circesium on the Euphrates.
- (20) Which belonged originally to one man and was now the possession of many.
- (21) On account of the requirement for a certain section to be excluded from the provisions of the general 'erub of the town (cf. our Mishnah).
- (22) That flowed behind the town, the houses having possessed no other doors opening towards the town.
- (23) Which, owing to the position of the doors, could not in any case be included in the general 'erub of the town.
- (24) Lit., 'remainder'.
- (25) To include those that were once excluded, and to exclude instead other houses.
- (26) As the houses by the river, however, could not in any case be included (cf. supra n. 6) in the town's 'erub they could not obviously be set aside as the statutory section to be excluded.
- (27) That will face the town, and the size of each of which would be four handbreadths by four.
- (28) And consequently night well serve also as the statutory section to be excluded.
- (29) The provision of windows.
- (30) Supra, 26a q.v. diagram and notes.
- (31) Since many alleys in each row were allowed to join in one erub despite the fact that the town that belonged to one man belonged once to many.
- (32) For if that had not been the case each alley would have required a separate 'erub to itself and a side-post air cross-beam.
- (33) On account of intervening cattle ditches which cut off the approaches between the various rows. Similarly in the case of the houses by the river, though they could not be included in the provision of the general 'erub of the town, they might well serve as the statutory section to be excluded.
- (34) The houses by the river and the rows of alleys that were separated by the cattle ditches.
- (35) The last mentioned (v. prev. n.).
- (36) Connected by balconies with one another.
- (37) In the absence of the windows mentioned.
- (38) Since (as laid down infra) the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon that it is not necessary to exclude fifty tenants.
- (39) As the exclusion of this store-house satisfied the statutory requirements so should the houses by the river.
- (40) [Had he insisted on the people providing this group of houses with windows unnecessarily, he would have raised an outcry; v. Tosaf. היינו].
- (41) Cf. our Mishnah.
- (42) In its vicinity.
- (43) Sc. could all the inhabitants of Hadashah join in one 'erub?
- (44) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.
- (45) But which, unlike Hadashah, was not near to a large town.
- (46) To constitute the statutory section.
- (47) A courtyard without a house, surely, could not be regarded as a dwelling.
- (48) A monotonous droning where no one is interested in sources or origins.
- (49) At the time the Sabbath had set in.
- (50) Sc. in the open country in an easterly direction from his house or HIS SON (v. Gemara infra).
- (51) Prior to the commencement of the Sabbath.
- (52) Cf. supra n. 5.
- (53) The permitted Sabbath limit.
- (54) Sc. his house, with whose Sabbath limit he was when the Sabbath had begun is regarded as the place of his Sabbath rest from where he is entitled to walk distances of two thousand cubits in all directions.
- (55) Because at the time the Sabbath had begun he was more than a Sabbath limit away from it (cf. prev. n. mut. mut.). The place of an 'erub which one is unable to reach during the Sabbath between this be regarded as one's place of Sabbath rest. (On the distinction between this else and the one supra 50b, v. Rashi a.l.).
- (56) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.
- (57) Cf. supra n. 9, mut. mut.

(58) I.e., within the area of seventy and two thirds cubits around the town from which the two thousand cubits of the Sabbath limit are measured.

(59) Lit., 'he has not done anything', since in the absence of the 'erub also he (cf. prev. n.) is permitted to move within that area as well as a Sabbath limit of two thousand cubits beyond it in all directions on any side of the town; while all the town itself is in this respect regarded as an area of no more than four cubits by four within which its inhabitants may freely move in addition to the limits mentioned.

(60) I.e., (cf. Gemara infra) beyond the Sabbatic extension of seventy and two thirds cubits around the town.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 60b

HE LOSES¹ WHAT HE GAINS.²

GEMARA. Assuming that EAST³ means the east side of his house and that WEST³ means the west of his house,⁴ one can well understand how it is possible that THE DISTANCE BETWEEN HIM AND HIS HOUSE WAS NO MORE THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS AND THAT BETWEEN HIM AND HIS ERUB WAS MORE THAN THIS, since he would reach his house before he could⁵ reach his 'erub, but how is it possible that THE DISTANCE between him and HIS 'ERUB should be NO MORE THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS AND THAT TO HIS HOUSE MORE THAN THIS? — R. Isaac replied: Do you think that EAST³ means east of his house and WEST³ the west of his house? The meaning in fact is not so; EAST denotes the east of the position of HIS SON and WEST denotes the west position of HIS SON.⁶ Raba son of R. Shila⁷ replied: One may even explain EAST as the east of his house and WEST as the west of his house where, for instance, his house stood in a diagonal direction.⁸

IF A MAN DEPOSITS HIS 'ERUB WITHIN THE [SABBATIC] EXTENSION etc. How can you possibly assume that an 'erub would be deposited BEYOND THE LIMIT?⁹ — Rather read: Outside the Sabbatic extension.¹⁰

HE LOSES WHAT HE GAINS. Only WHAT HE GAINS and no more? Was it not in fact taught: If a man deposits his 'erub within the [Sabbatic] extension of a town, his act is of no consequence. If he deposited it even one cubit only beyond the [Sabbatic] extension of the town, he gains that cubit¹¹ and loses all the town¹² because the extent of the town is included in the extent of the Sabbath limit?¹³ — This is no difficulty, since the latter refers to a case where his measure¹⁴ terminated within the town,¹⁵ while the former deals with one where his measure terminated at the far end of the town;¹⁶ this being in agreement with a ruling of R. Idi who laid down in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: If a man¹⁷ was measuring [the two thousand cubits distance from his acquired Sabbath abode] and advancing towards a town, and his measure¹⁸ terminated in the middle of the town he is allowed to proceed no further than half the town, but if his measure terminated at the far end of the town,¹⁹ all the town, as far as he is concerned, is regarded as four cubits and the remainder of the Sabbath limit²⁰ may be made up for him.²¹ These,²² exclaimed R. Idi, are nought but prophetic utterances;²³ for what is the difference whether the measure terminated in the middle of the town or at the end?²⁴ — Said Raba: We have learnt²⁵ both these cases: The people of a large town may walk through the whole of a small town,²⁶

(1) In one direction of the town.

(2) In the other direction. If the 'erub, for instance, was deposited at a distance of one thousand cubits in an easterly direction of the town the man, since the 'erub entitles him to walk distances of two thousand cubits from it in all directions, is entitled to walk a total distance of (1000 + 2000 =) 3000 cubits from the town in an easterly direction but only one thousand cubits in the westerly direction. The entire area of the town itself, as mentioned supra is, in this respect regarded as no bigger than four cubits by four and, in consequence, is not to be deducted from the extent of the permitted limits.

(3) So MS.M. (agreeing with the reading in our Mishnah). Cur. edd. here add lamed, 'to the'.

- (4) The house being situated between him on the one side of it and his son on the opposite side.
- (5) Lit., 'and not'.
- (6) The position of his house, however, may well have been much further away than that of his 'erub.
- (7) MS.M., 'Rabbah b. Shila'.
- (8) In relation to him and his 'erub.
- (9) Such an 'erub, which is unapproachable on the Sabbath, would surely be useless.
- (10) Of seventy and two thirds cubits around the town. Cf. relevant note on our Mishnah.
- (11) On the side of the town where the 'erub was deposited.
- (12) When the Sabbath limit from the 'erub across the town in the opposite direction (cf. prev. n.) is measured, [the town is included in the extent of the Sabbath limit].
- (13) And deducted from it. How then is this to be reconciled with our Mishnah?
- (14) Of the two thousand cubits prescribed for a Sabbath limit.
- (15) Either because the town was very big or because the 'erub lay at a considerable distance from it. In such a case only is the town included in the extent of the Sabbath limit and the man is forbidden to move beyond the far side of the town.
- (16) In this case all the town is regarded as being no bigger than four cubits by four, and the Sabbath limit is extended beyond the town to a distance of two thousand cubits minus the distance between the 'erub and the side of the town near it.
- (17) Who was overtaken by dusk underway and, being unaware of the proximity of a town, had acquired his Sabbath abode at the spot where he happened to be at the time the Sabbath had set in (cf. supra 45a); (and the same law applies to a man who deposited an 'erub outside his own town).
- (18) V. p. 423, n. 7.
- (19) Sc. the end opposite the one that was near his 'erub.
- (20) The difference between two thousand cubits and the distance of the 'erub from the side of the town nearest to it.
- (21) By extending the Sabbath limit beyond the far side of the town (cf. supra n. 3).
- (22) n. Joshua b. Levi's rulings.
- (23) Sheer imagination. V. however, Rash and Tosaf.
- (24) Apparently none.
- (25) Infra 61a.
- (26) That was situated within its Sabbath limit. Now this must imply that the whole of the small town is regarded as no bigger than four cubits and that the remainder of the Sabbath limit may be made up by extending the limit beyond the far side of the small town, in agreement with R. Joshua b. Levi's second ruling.

but the people of the small town may not walk through the whole of a large town.¹ Now what is the reason?² Obviously³ because the measure of the latter terminated in the middle of the former town,⁴ while that of the former terminated at the end of the latter town.⁴ And R. Idi?⁵ — He read in both cases⁶ 'The people may'⁷ and expounded [the Mishnah cited] as referring to an 'erub that one⁸ deposited;⁹ but of the case of one who was measuring,¹⁰ we have there learnt nothing.¹¹ Have we not indeed? Did we not as a matter of fact learn: And to the measure¹² of whom the Rabbis have spoken a distance of two thousand cubits only is allowed even if the end of his permitted measure terminated within a cave?¹³ — His¹⁴ ruling was required in respect of a Sabbath limit that terminated at the far end of a town, a case of which we did not learn.¹⁵

R. Nahman stated: He who learns¹⁶ 'The people may'¹⁷ is not in error, and he who learns 'the people may not'¹⁷ not in error. 'He who learns "the people may" is not in error since he might explain it to refer to an 'erub that one¹⁸ had deposited;¹⁹ while 'he who learns "the people may not is not in error' since he might explain that it refers to a case where the Sabbath limit was being measured,¹⁸ and that a clause is missing [from the Mishnah] which should properly read thus: The people of a large town may walk through the whole of a small town¹⁹ but the people of the small town may not walk through the whole of the large town.²⁰ This, however, applies only to a case where the Sabbath limit was being measured, but if a man stayed in a larger town and deposited his ‘erub in a smaller town²¹ or if he stayed in a small town and deposited his ‘erub in a large town²¹ he may walk through the whole of the town²² and a distance of two thousand cubits beyond it.

R. Joseph citing Rami b. Abba who had it from R. Huna ruled: If a town was situated on the edge of a ravine, and²³ there was a barrier four cubits²⁴ in height in front of it, its Sabbath limit is measured from the edge of the ravine,²⁵ otherwise²⁶ measuring²⁷ must begin from the door of every inhabitant's house.²⁸ Said Abaye to him:²⁹ You told us in connection with this that the barrier must be four cubits in height; but why should this one be different from all other barriers whose prescribed height is only four handbreadths?³⁰ — There,³¹ the other²⁹ replied, the use of the place involves no fear, but the use of the place here³² does involve fear.³³

Said R. Joseph, whence do I derive this ruling? From what was taught: Rabbi permitted the inhabitants of Gader to go down³⁴ to Hamethan but did not allow the inhabitants of Hamethan to go up to Gader.³⁵ Now what could have been the reason? Obviously, that the former³⁶ did put lip a barrier³⁷ while the latter³⁸ did not put up a barrier.³⁹

When R. Dimi came⁴⁰ he explained: The people of Gader used to molest the people of Hamethan, and ‘permitted’⁴¹ meant ordained’.⁴² Then⁴³ why should Sabbath be different from other days? — Because intoxication is not uncommon on such a day. Would they⁴⁴ not molest them⁴⁵ when they come there?⁴⁶ — No; a dog in a strange town does not bark for seven years.⁴⁷ Now then,⁴⁸ might not the people of Hamethan molest those of Gader? — No; they⁴⁹ were not so submissive as all that.⁵⁰

R. Safra explained: Gader⁵¹ was a town that was built in the shape of a bow.⁵² R. Dimi b. Hinena explained: The former⁵³ were the inhabitants of a large town while the latter were inhabitants of a small town.⁵⁴

Thus⁵⁵ taught R. Kahana. R. Tabyomi, however, taught as follows: R. Safra and R. Dimi b. Hinena differ, one explaining that Gader⁵⁶ was a town built in the shape of a bow⁵⁷ while the other explains that the latter⁵⁸ were the inhabitants of a small town while the former were inhabitants of a large town.

MISHNAH. THE PEOPLE OF A LARGE TOWN MAY WALK⁵⁹ THROUGH THE WHOLE OF A SMALL TOWN,⁶⁰ AND THE PEOPLE OF A SMALL TOWN MAY⁶¹ WALK⁶² THROUGH THE WHOLE OF A LARGE TOWN.⁶⁰ HOW IS THIS [TO BE UNDERSTOOD]? IF A MAN STAYED IN A LARGE TOWN AND DEPOSITED HIS ‘ERUB IN A SMALL TOWN⁶⁰ OR IF HE STAYED IN A SMALL TOWN AND DEPOSITED HIS ‘ERUB IN A LARGE TOWN,⁶⁰ HE MAY WALK THROUGH ALL THE TOWN AND TWO THOUSAND CUBITS BEYOND IT. R. AKIBA RULED: HE IS ALLOWED TO WALK NO FURTHER THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS FROM THE PLACE OF HIS ‘ERUB. SAID R. AKIBA TO THEM:⁶³ DO YOU NOT AGREE WITH ME THAT IF A MAN DEPOSITED HIS ‘ERUB IN A CAVE HE MAY WALK NO FURTHER THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS FROM THE PLACE OF HIS ‘ERUB? THEY⁶³ REPLIED: WHEN IS THIS THE CASE? ONLY WHERE NO PEOPLE DWELL THEREIN BUT WHERE PEOPLE DWELL THEREIN ONE MAY WALK THROUGH THE WHOLE OF IT AND TWO THOUSAND CUBITS BEYOND IT. THUS IT FOLLOWS THAT [WHERE AN ‘ERUB IS DEPOSITED] WITHIN IT THE LAW IS MORE LENIENT THAN [WHERE ONE IS DEPOSITED] ON THE TOP OF IT. AND TO THE MEASURER,⁶⁴ OF WHOM [THE RABBIS] HAVE SPOKEN A DISTANCE OF TWO THOUSAND CUBITS IS ALLOWED⁶⁵ EVEN IF THE END OF HIS [PERMITTED] MEASURE⁶⁶ TERMINATED WITHIN A CAVE.⁶⁷

(1) As if it were no bigger than four cubits. They may walk so far only as the termination of their Sabbath limit in whatever part of the town that may happen to be, in agreement with the first ruling of R. Joshua b. Levi.

(2) For the difference between the rights of the inhabitants of the large and those of the smaller town respectively.

- (3) Lit., 'not?'
- (4) In agreement with the rulings of R. Joshua b. Levi (cf. supra nn. 10f).
- (5) How, in view of the rulings in the Mishnah just cited, could he maintain that R. Joshua b. Levi's rulings are sheer imagination.
- (6) The first and second clause of the Mishnah cited.
- (7) Lit., 'people, people', sc. instead of reading 'The people of the large town may . . . but the people of the small town may not' etc. he reads: 'The people . . . may' in both clauses.
- (8) Of the inhabitants of the large town.
- (9) In the small town. As the man's 'erub lay within the town the whole of it, as far as he is concerned, is rightly regarded as no bigger than four cubits.
- (10) That spoken of by R. Joshua b. Levi.
- (11) Hence R. Idi's exclamation.
- (12) A man who measures the two thousand cubits distance from the place which he acquired as his Sabbath abode or in which he deposited his 'erub.
- (13) Supra 52b, Mishnah infra ad fin. The interior of a cave being presumably subject to the same law as the interior of a town, R. Joshua b. Levi's ruling in respect of the latter is obviously covered by the one relating to the former. An objection against R. Idi. Aliter: Why should R. Joshua R. Levi merely repeat a Mishnah?
- (14) R. Joshua b. Levis.
- (15) In the Mishnah. Hence also the justification of R. Idi's exclamation. (Cf. supra n. 8 ad fin).
- (16) In the final clause of the Mishnah just discussed.
- (17) Cf. supra n. 2.
- (18) Sc. where no 'erub had been deposited within either town, where in consequence the whole town cannot be regarded as four cubits in respect of the Sabbath limit, and where, as a result actual distances must be measured.
- (19) Where the latter was situated entirely within the Sabbath limit of the former. If, for instance, the distance between the two towns was one thousand cubits and the smaller did not cover more than one thousand cubits the people of the larger town may walk through the whole of the smaller (which being within their Sabbath limit, is regarded as no bigger than four cubits) and another thousand cubits or more beyond it to complete their two thousand cubits Sabbath limit.
- (20) Since the larger town (cf. prev. n.) is not entirely situated within their Sabbath limit. They may, therefore, walk the distance of a thousand cubits between the two towns and another thousand cubits, to complete their Sabbath limit, within the larger town itself, but no further.
- (21) That was situated within the Sabbath limit of his own town.
- (22) In which his 'erub had been deposited.
- (23) Lit., 'if'.
- (24) So MS.M. Cur. edd. omit 'cubits'.
- (25) Which is regarded as the boundary of the town.
- (26) Lit., 'and if not', i.e., if no such partition was provided.
- (27) Of the Sabbath limit of the town.
- (28) All the town, in the absence of the partition, being regarded, for the reason to be given presently, as an occasional and irregular settlement which, in respect of Sabbath limits, cannot be treated as one unit of four cubits. Every house must be considered as a separate unit and the Sabbath limit of its tenants begins from that house.
- (29) R. Joseph.
- (30) V. supra 60b.
- (31) In cases where a height of four handbreadths is enough.
- (32) Owing to the steepness of the ravine.
- (33) A higher barrier is consequently required.
- (34) On the Sabbath.
- (35) Tosef. 'Er. IV.
- (36) Being situated on the slope higher than Hamethan.
- (37) Which connected all their houses into one town and thus enabled them to begin their Sabbath limit from the town boundary.
- (38) Having been situated on a lower part of the slope.
- (39) At the base of their slope, in consequence of which (cf. supra p. 426, n. 9) only the tenants of the few houses that were within the Sabbath limit of Gader could be permitted to go up to that town, but the tenants of all the other houses that were without that limit could not.

(40) From Palestine to Babylon.

(41) 'Rabbi permitted' etc. v. supra.

(42) Sc. It was an ordinance laid down by Rabbi that, while the people of Gader were allowed to visit Hamethan, the people of the latter town, for their own safety, shall not visit the former.

(43) If the ordinance had no bearing on the laws of Sabbath limits.

(44) The people of Gader.

(45) The Hamethan people.

(46) To Hamethan.

(48) If the Gaderites were at a disadvantage when at Hamethan.

(49) The people of Gader.

(50) Though the Gaderites, as visitors, would seek no quarrels at Hamethan, they would nevertheless defend themselves if attacked.

(51) So with R. Han., contra Rashi (cf. Tosaf. s.v. עיר a.l.).

(52) Whose ends were four thousand cubits apart. In such a case (cf. supra 55a) the Sabbath limit is measured from the imaginary chord of the bow. The limit of Gader consequently included Hamethan which was no more than two thousand cubits distant from the chord. The position of the latter town, however, whose limit terminated at the Gader chord which was more than two thousand cubits distant from the center of its arc, prevented its inhabitants from walking to Gader which thus lay beyond their Sabbath limit.

(53) The people of Gader.

(54) The Sabbath limit of Gader terminated at the far end of Hamethan (the smaller town) while the Sabbath limit of Hamethan terminated in the middle of the large town of Gader. As all Hamethan lay within the Sabbath limit of Gader the people of the latter town were permitted to traverse its whole area (as if all the town were no bigger than four cubits) and distances completing the permitted two thousand cubits beyond it. As part of Gader, on the other hand, was without the Sabbath limit of Hamethan the people of the latter town could walk only to the end of their Sabbath limit.

(59) In addition to the distances of two thousand cubits in all directions.

(60) That was situated within its Sabbath limit.

(61) J.T., Alfasi and cur. edd. supra 60b read: 'but the people . . . may not'. Cf. also R. Nahman's justification of the alternative readings of our Mishnah.

(62) In addition to the distances of two thousand cubits in all directions.

(63) The Rabbis who differed from his view.

(64) Sc. a person who did not deposit his 'erub in the town in question but was measuring his way and advancing towards it from his home town or from a place where he had deposited his 'erub.

(65) But no more.

(66) Of two thousand cubits.

(67) And even if that cave was inhabited. Only in the previous case where the 'erub lay within the town or within the cave did the Rabbis regard the entire area of the town and cave respectively as no bigger than four cubits.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 61b

GEMARA. Rab Judah laid down in the name of Samuel: If a man spent the Sabbath in a deserted¹ town,² he may, according to the Rabbis, walk through the whole of it³ and two thousand cubits beyond it.⁴ If, however, he deposited his 'erub in a deserted town⁵ he is allowed no more than a distance of two thousand cubits from the place of his 'erub.⁶ R. Eleazar laid down: Whether a man spent the Sabbath in a town or deposited in it his 'erub he is permitted⁷ to walk through the whole of it and two thousand cubits beyond.

An objection was raised: SAID R. AKIBA TO THEM, DO YOU NOT AGREE WITH ME THAT IF A MAN DEPOSITED HIS 'ERUB IN A CAVE HE MAY WALK NO FURTHER THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS FROM THE PLACE OF HIS 'ERUB? THEY REPLIED: WHEN IS THIS THE CASE? ONLY WHEN NO PEOPLE DWELL THEREIN from which it is obvious, is it not, that where NO PEOPLE DWELL THEREIN they agree with him?⁸ — By the expression.⁹ NO PEOPLE DWELL THEREIN a place was meant that was unsuitable for dwelling.¹⁰

Come and hear: If a man spent the Sabbath in a town, even though it was as big as Antioch, [or if he spent the Sabbath] in a cave, though it was like the cave of Zedekiah the king of Judah.¹¹ he may walk through the whole of it and two thousand cubits beyond. Now¹² the town mentioned must be one that is in a condition similar to that of the 'cave', so that as the cave is one that is deserted¹³ so must the town also be one that is deserted and yet¹⁴ it was stated that only if a man spent the Sabbath in it is the law¹⁵ applicable¹⁶ but not where he only deposited his 'erub in it. Now whose view could this¹⁷ represent? If it be suggested: It is that of R. Akiba, the difficulty would arise: What was the point in speaking of a deserted town when the same ruling applies also to one that is inhabited.¹⁸ Consequently¹⁹ it must be said to represent the view of the Rabbis.²⁰ Now is not the reason for the ruling²¹ that the man spent the Sabbath in it,²² but if he had only deposited his 'erub in it this ruling²¹ would not have applied?²³ — Do not say that the 'town' mentioned must be one that is in a condition similar to that of the 'cave' but rather, the 'cave must be one that is in a condition similar to that of the town; so that as the town is inhabited the cave also must be one that is inhabited; and this ruling²⁴ is that of R. Akiba who laid down: HE²⁵ IS ALLOWED TO WALK NO FURTHER THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS FROM THE PLACE OF HIS 'ERUB, while in the case of one who had spent the Sabbath within the town he²⁶ agrees with the Rabbis.²⁷ But was it not stated: 'Like the cave of Zedekiah'²⁸ — Like the cave of Zedekiah [in one respect] but unlike the cave of Zedekiah [in another]. 'Like the cave of Zedekiah' in respect of its huge size,²⁹ 'but unlike the cave of Zedekiah' for whereas the latter³⁰ was deserted, the one referred to was³¹ inhabited.

Mar Judah once came across the people of Mabrakta who were depositing their 'erubs at the Be Agobar Synagogue.³² 'Penetrate'³³ he said to them, 'further into its interior,³⁴ that you may be allowed to walk a greater distance'.³⁵ 'Contentious man', said Raba³⁶ to him, 'in respect of the laws of 'erub no one takes any notice of the ruling of R. Akiba'.³⁷

CHAPTER VI

MISHNAH. IF A MAN LIVES IN A COURTYARD WITH A HEATHEN OR WITH ONE WHO DOES NOT ACKNOWLEDGE THE PRINCIPLE OF ERUB,³⁸ EITHER OF THEM³⁹ CAUSES HIM TO BE RESTRICTED IN THE USE OF THE COURTYARD.⁴⁰ R.⁴¹ ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: NEITHER⁴² CAN RESTRICT HIM⁴³ UNLESS THERE ARE⁴⁴ TWO ISRAELITES⁴⁵ WHO⁴⁶ IMPOSE RESTRICTIONS UPON EACH OTHER.⁴⁷

R. GAMALIEL⁴⁸ RELATED: A SADDUCEE ONCE LIVED WITH US IN THE SAME ALLEY IN JERUSALEM AND FATHER TOLD US:⁴⁹ 'HASTEN AND CARRY OUT⁵⁰ ALL NECESSARY ARTICLES INTO THE ALLEY⁵¹ BEFORE HE CARRIES OUT HIS⁵² AND THEREBY IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS UPON YOU'.⁵³ R. JUDAH RELATED, [THE INSTRUCTION⁵⁴ WAS GIVEN] IN A DIFFERENT FORM:⁵⁵ HASTEN AND ATTEND⁵⁶ TO YOUR REQUIREMENTS IN THE ALLEY⁵⁷ BEFORE HE CARRIES OUT HIS ARTICLES AND THEREBY IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS UPON YOU'.⁵⁸

(1) Lit., 'ruined', 'desolate'.

(2) No people lived in it but its wall was intact.

(3) . Since (cf. prev. n.) it was surrounded by a wall.

- (4) This ruling is also applicable according to the view of R. Akiba, but the limitation 'according to the Rabbis', is due to the ruling that follows.
- (5) But did not himself spend the Sabbath in it.
- (6) Because, in the case of the deposit of an 'erub, as explained supra, the Rabbis draw a distinction between all inhabited town and a deserted one. Only in the former case is the entire area of the town regarded as no bigger than four cubits. R. Akiba, however, (cf. supra n. 9) differs from their view and regards even an inhabited town as they do a deserted one.
- (7) According to the Rabbis.
- (8) That Only two thousand cubits are allowed. How then could R. Eleazar maintain that the Rabbis conferred the same rights whether an 'erub was put in an inhabited or in a deserted place?
- (9) Lit., 'what'.
- (10) Sc. one that had no walls around it.
- (11) Through which he attempted his escape (cf. Jer. LII, 7) and which is said to extend from Jerusalem to the plain of Jericho.
- (12) Since 'town' and 'cave' were mentioned in the same context.
- (13) No people presumably living in such a huge subterranean cave. Aliter: No people would be allowed to live in a royal cave (cf. Rashi s.v. וְיָסִיב a.l.).
- (14) Despite its possession of walls. In the absence of walls no one would have allowed the man to walk through the whole of its area in addition to the two thousand cubits beyond it.
- (15) That in addition to the permitted Sabbath limit of two thousand cubits one may also walk through the whole of its area.
- (16) Lit., 'yes'.
- (17) That the privilege (cf. supra n. 9) is restricted to the case of actual Stay in the town and does not extend to that of an 'erub deposited in it.
- (18) R. Akiba having ruled that even where a man deposited his 'erub in an inhabited town he may walk no further than two thousand cubits.
- (19) Since a distinction is made between a deserted, and an inhabited town.
- (20) Who accordingly agree that if an 'erub was deposited in a deserted town the privilege (cf. supra p. 430, n. 9) does not apply.
- (21) V. p. 430, n. 9.
- (22) Lit., 'yes'.
- (23) How then could R. Eleazar maintain that according to the Rabbis no distinction is made between an inhabited town and a deserted one?
- (24) V. Supra p. 430, n. 11.
- (25) The man who deposited his 'erub in a certain town wherein he did not spend the Sabbath.
- (26) R. Akiba.
- (27) V. loc. cit. n. 9.
- (28) V. p. 430, n. 7.
- (29) Lit., 'big'.
- (30) Lit., 'there'.
- (31) Lit., 'and here'.
- (32) A large building situated within the Sabbath limit of Mabrakta. The people of the town, relying on the ruling of the Rabbis, who allowed two thousand cubits in addition to the whole area with the walls surrounding the place of the 'erub, put their 'erub anywhere within the building. [On the Abe Gobar synagogue, v. Ta'an., Sonc. ed., p. 6a. It was in the neighbourhood of Mahuza.]
- (33) With the 'erubs.
- (34) Sc. the 'erubs should be placed as far away from the town as possible.
- (35) As the Sabbath limit of the town. This advice was given in accordance with R. Akiba's ruling that a man IS ALLOWED TO WALK NO FURTHER THAN TWO THOUSAND CUBITS FROM THE PLACE and not from the walls surrounding the place, OF HIS 'ERUB.
- (36) A similar expression against Mar Judah was used by Rabbah (cf. Kid. 58a).
- (37) Since in the case of the 'erub laws the halachah always rests with the author adopting the more lenient view.

(38) A Samaritan. Cf. Mishnah supra 31b.

(39) Lit., 'behold this'.

(40) As he is not the only possessor of the courtyard he is forbidden to carry objects from his house into the courtyard or vice versa unless he has, before the commencement of the Sabbath, rented from his neighbour, for the duration of the Sabbath, the right the latter has in their common courtyard.

(41) In some of the separate editions of the Mishnah this is preceded by 'So R. Meir.'

(42) Lit., 'for ever'.

(43) In the use of the common courtyard.

(44) Besides the heathen or the Samaritan (v. n. 1).

(45) Living in houses in the same courtyard and thus having a share in it.

(46) Unless they properly joined together in the preparation of one 'erub.

(47) Only in such circumstances does the right of a third tenant of the type mentioned, wherever that right has not been duly rented from him, restrict their use of the common courtyard. He cannot, however, impose any restrictions upon an Israelite if the latter and he are the only tenants. The reason is explained in the Gemara infra.

(48) On the identity of the bearer of this name v. Tosaf. s.v. אמר a.l.

(49) On a certain occasion when the Sadducee renounced his right to his share in the alley.

(50) Just before the Sabbath begins.

(51) In order to acquire by that act the Sadducee's share.

(52) And thereby acquires again the right he at first renounced.

(53) A Sadducee, according to this view, is not regarded as a heathen, whose right in a courtyard or an alley must be rented, but as a heretic Israelite who may renounce his right by a mere declaration, no renting of it being necessary. Since the Sadducee in question had received no rent it was within his power to withdraw his concession at any moment provided the other tenants had not acquired possession of the alley by carrying their articles into it. Hence the instruction to HASTEN the acquisition BEFORE the Sadducee had time to change his mind.

(54) Just quoted by R. Gamaliel.

(55) Lit., 'in another language'.

(56) Before the Sabbath begins.

(57) I.e., 'carry out all the objects in your house that you require to have in the alley during the Sabbath'.

(58) According to R. Judah, a Sadducee who renounced his right to his share without receiving any payment for it may withdraw his concession at any time even after the other tenants had, by the performance of some act, acquired possession of his share. As he might change his mind at any moment the other tenants (cf. prev. n.) had to carry out all they needed prior to the commencement of the Sabbath.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 62a

GEMARA. Abaye b. Abin and R. Hinena b. Abin sat at their studies while Abaye was sitting with them, and in the course of their session they dealt with the following argument: It is quite possible to understand the view of R. Meir¹ since he may hold the opinion that a heathen's dwelling is legally a valid dwelling² and that no difference is to be made between one [Israelite tenant]³ and two [Israelite tenants].⁴ What, however, could be the view of R. ELIEZER B. JACOB? If he is of the opinion that a heathen's dwelling is legally a valid dwelling,² restrictions⁵ should be imposed even in the case of one Israelite tenant; and if he holds that it is legally no valid dwelling, no restrictions should be imposed⁵ even in the case of two Israelite tenants!⁶ — Said Abaye to them: But does R. Meir hold that a heathen's dwelling is legally a valid dwelling? Was it not in fact taught: A heathen's courtyard⁷ has the same status as a cattle-pen?⁸ Rather say: All agree that a heathen's dwelling is legally no valid dwelling, but the point at issue between them⁹ here is the question whether a law¹⁰ had been instituted as a preventive measure against the possibility of an Israelite's learning to imitate his¹¹ deeds. R. Eliezer b. Jacob holds that, since a heathen is suspected of bloodshed,¹² a preventive measure has been enacted by the Rabbis in the case of two Israelites, who quite frequently live together with a heathen, but not in that of one Israelite who as a rule does not live together with a heathen,¹³ while R. Meir holds that, since it may sometimes happen that one Israelite also should live with a heathen, the Rabbis have laid down: No 'erub is effective where a heathen lives in the same courtyard, nor is the renunciation of one's right¹⁴ effective where a heathen is concerned¹⁵ unless that right has been let; but a heathen would not let his right.¹⁶ What is the reason?¹⁷ If it be suggested: Because he considers it possible that the other might take permanent possession of his share, the explanation would be satisfactory according to him who holds that the lease must be of a sound character;¹⁸ what, however, could be said in explanation according to him who holds that only an imperfect lease is required?¹⁹ For it was stated: R. Hisda ruled: The lease must be of a sound character and R. Shesheth ruled: It may be of an imperfect character only. What is meant by 'imperfect' and what is meant by 'sound'? If it be suggested that 'sound' denotes a rental of a perutah²⁰ and 'imperfect' a rental that was less than a Perutah, the objection would arise: Is there any authority who upholds the View that [acquisition] from a heathen cannot be effected with less than a Perutah? Did not, as a matter of fact, R. Isaac son of R. Jacob b. Giyori send the following message in the name of R. Johanan, 'Be it known to you that one can lease from a heathen even with less than a perutah', and R. Hiyya b. Abba ruled in the name of R. Johanan, 'A Noahide²¹ would rather be killed than spend so much as a perutah²² which is not returnable'?²³ — The fact is that 'sound' denotes a lease confirmed by legal documents and attested by officers,²⁴ and 'imperfect' denotes one that was neither confirmed by legal documents nor attested by officers. [Now,²⁵ I again submit:] 'The explanation would be satisfactory according to him who holds that the lease must be of a sound character: what, however, could be said in explanation according to him who holds that only an imperfect lease is required'?²⁶ Even in such a case²⁷ he²⁸ fears witchcraft²⁹ and does not let his share in the courtyard.

[To revert to] the main text,³⁰ A heathen's courtyard has the same status as a cattle-pen' and it is, therefore, permitted³¹ to carry things in and out, both from the courtyard into the houses and from the houses into the courtyard. But if only one Israelite³² was a tenant there, he³³ does impose restrictions;³⁴ so R. Meir.³⁵ R. Eliezer b. Jacob ruled: No restrictions are ever imposed³⁶ unless there are also two Israelite tenants³⁷ who impose restrictions upon one another.³⁸

(1) Sc. the author of the first ruling of our Mishnah.

(2) With reference to Sabbath, hence his right to a share in the courtyard.

(3) Living in the courtyard with the heathen.

(4) v. prev. n. Hence his ruling that a heathen invariably restricts the use of a common courtyard irrespective of whether he has many Israelite neighbours or only one.

(5) In the use of the common courtyard.

- (6) Since in either case, as far as Sabbath laws are concerned, he has no share in the courtyard; while the Israelites' shares are merged into one common domain by means of their 'erub.
- (7) In certain circumstances, as will be explained infra.
- (8) Tosef. 'Er. V. I.e., the tenancy by a heathen of a house that opens into a common courtyard is like a cattle-pen, and consequently does not restrict the movement of objects on the Sabbath from the houses into the courtyard, v. infra. Now since this ruling, as will be shown infra, represents the view of R. Meir, how could a contrary view be attributed to him here.
- (9) R. Meir and R. Eliezer b. Jacob.
- (10) Subjecting an Israelite to the necessity of renting the heathen's share every Sabbath eve.
- (11) The heathen's.
- (12) Cf. A.Z. 22a.
- (13) Against something unusual no enactment was deemed necessary. Hence R. Eliezer b. Jacob's ruling that the restrictions applied to a courtyard in which no less than two Israelites were the heathen's neighbours.
- (14) To a share.
- (15) Lit., 'in the place of', i.e., a heathen's renunciation of his right to his share in the common courtyard has no validity.
- (16) As the Israelite would in consequence be subjected every Sabbath to much inconvenience he would naturally move out of that courtyard at the earliest possible opportunity and, indirectly, he would thereby be saved from the evil influence of the heathen's questionable mode of life.
- (17) That a heathen refuses to let his share.
- (18) This will be explained presently.
- (19) What possible objection could the heathen have to such a defective lease?
- (20) V. Glos.
- (21) Lit., 'a son of Noah', sc. any heathen.
- (22) The smallest coin (v. Glos.). Lit., 'for less than the value of a perutah.'
- (23) Yeb. 47b, A.Z. 71a; which shows that in respect of a heathen a transaction involving less than a Perutah has the same validity as one involving a Perutah. How then is 'imperfect' and 'sound' to be understood?
- (24) Aliter: A lease is sound if made legal by sureties and (countersigned) by officers (Jast.). Aliter: A lease of a courtyard is sound if connected with the privilege of placing in the yard chairs and seats (cf. Rashi a.l. and Jast.).
- (25) Having disposed of the definition of 'sound' and 'imperfect'.
- (26) What possible objection could the heathen have to such a defective lease?
- (27) Where the lease was legally imperfect.
- (28) The heathen, when requested to let his share.
- (29) Not understanding the religious motive of the request he suspects some underhand work.
- (30) Quoted by Abaye supra q.v. notes.
- (31) To an Israelite who was not one of the tenants of that courtyard but happened to visit any of the houses in it.
- (32) Who, by virtue of his tenancy of a house, is entitled to the use of the courtyard.
- (33) Since the courtyard (cf. prev. n.) is deemed to be his domain.
- (34) On the carrying of objects by other Israelites from the houses into the courtyard and vice versa.
- (35) The last three words are absent from the Tosef.
- (36) On account of the heathen's tenancy.
- (37) Occupying two houses in that courtyard.
- (38) Tosef. 'Er. V. As the heathen's share is distinct from theirs (a heathen's tenancy, as explained supra, having been given validity in such circumstances) they, by virtue of their shares in the courtyard, impose restrictions on the movements of objects from the heathen's house into the courtyard while he, by virtue of his share, despite the 'erub in which the two Israelites may have joined, imposes restrictions on the movements of objects from their houses into the courtyard.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 62b

The Master said: 'A heathen's courtyard has the same status as a cattle-pen'.¹ Did we not, however, learn: IF A MAN LIVES IN A COURTYARD WITH A HEATHEN. . . EITHER OF THEM CAUSES HIM TO BE RESTRICTED?² — This is no difficulty, since the latter² deals with the case of a heathen who was at home³ while the former¹ deals with one who was not at home.³ But what principle does he⁴ adopt? If he is of the opinion that a dwelling house without an occupier is legally a valid dwelling, should not even a heathen⁵ impose restrictions;⁶ and if he is of the opinion that a dwelling house without an occupier is legally no valid dwelling should not an Israelite⁷ also impose no restrictions? He,⁸ in fact, holds the view that a dwelling house without an occupier is legally no valid dwelling; but⁹ in the case of an Israelite, who imposes restrictions when he is at home,¹⁰ the Rabbis¹¹ have enacted a preventive measure where he is away; while in the case of a heathen who, even when at home, imposes restrictions merely as a preventive measure lest the Israelite learn to imitate his deeds¹² it was enacted that he imposes restrictions only when he is at home but not in his absence.

But does he¹³ not impose restrictions when he is absent? Have we not in fact learnt: If a man left his house and went to spend the Sabbath in another town, whether he was a gentile or an Israelite, his share imposes restrictions;¹⁴ so R. Meir?¹⁵ — There¹⁵ it is a case where he returns on the same day.¹⁶

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah¹⁷ is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob; R. Huna stated: The custom¹⁸ is in agreement with the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob; while R. Johanan stated: The public act¹⁹ in agreement with the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: We have a tradition, that ‘the teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity²⁰ but well sifted’;²¹ and Rab Judah also laid down in the name of Samuel, ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob;²² is it then permitted²³ to a disciple²⁴ to give a ruling accordingly²⁵ in a district that is under the jurisdiction of his Master? — ‘Even’, the other replied, on the question of the permissibility of eating an egg²⁶ with kutha,²⁷ which I²⁸ have been asking him²⁹ throughout the lifetime of R. Huna,³⁰ R. Hisda gave me³¹ no decision’.³²

R. Jacob b. Abba asked Abaye: Is it permitted to a disciple in a district under his Master's jurisdiction to give a ruling that was as authoritative as those contained in the Scroll of Fast-Days,³³ which is a written and generally accepted document?³⁴ — Thus, the other replied, said R. Joseph: Even on the question of the permissibility of eating an egg²⁶ with kutha,²⁷ which I²⁸ have been asking him²⁹ throughout the lifetime of R. Huna,³⁰ R. Hisda gave me³⁰ no decision.

R. Hisda decided legal questions at Kafri³⁵ in the lifetime of R. Huna.³⁶

(1) From which it follows that a heathen can impose no restrictions upon an individual Israelite if the latter is the only other tenant in their Joint courtyard. Only an Israelite imposes restrictions on other Israelites in connection with the movement of objects from and into the heathen's house.

(2) Which shows, contrary to the ruling in the Baraitha cited (cf. prev. n.), that a heathen imposes restrictions upon an Israelite even where the latter is the only other tenant in their joint courtyard. How then are the two rulings to be reconciled?

(3) During the Sabbath in question.

(4) The author of the Baraitha.

(5) Though away from home.

(6) Of course he should, since his absence does not in any way affect the validity of his tenancy.

(7) If away from his home; since the validity of his tenancy is impaired by his absence.

(8) The author of the Baraitha.

(9) In reply to the objection raised (cf. prev. n.).

(10) On account of the legal validity of his tenancy.

(11) In order to prevent an infringement of the law when he is at home.

(12) Cf. supra 62a.

(13) A heathen tenant.

- (14) On the other tenants of the courtyard.
- (15) Supra 47a, infra 86a.
- (16) Where, for instance, during the first part of the Sabbath he was not far away from his home. If no restrictions upon his fellow tenants had been imposed, even in his absence, they might, after his return, unconsciously have continued the unrestricted use of their courtyard which they enjoyed since the day began. Where, however, the heathen is unable to return on the same day no such precaution is necessary and consequently no restrictions were imposed.

- (19) Nahagu (cf. prev. two notes), i.e., the ruling may not be communicated even in private, but if any person acted in agreement with it no objection may be raised against him.
- (20) Kab (v. Glos.), i.e., his rulings in the Mishnah are only few.
- (21) Lit., 'clear', i.e., the halachah is always in agreement with his rulings.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 63a

R. Hamnuna decided legal points at Harta¹ di Argiz² during the lifetime of R. Hisda.³ Rabina examined the slaughterer's knife⁴ in Babylon.⁵ Said R. Ashi to him, 'Why does the Master act in this manner?' 'Did not,' the other replied: 'R. Hamnuna decide legal points at Harta di Argiz during the lifetime of R. Hisda?'⁶ — 'It was stated', the first retorted: 'that he did not decide legal points'. 'The fact is', the other replied: 'that one statement was made that he did decide legal points while another was that he did not do so, and the explanation is that only during the lifetime of his Master R. Huna did he decide no legal points but during the lifetime of R. Hisda, who was both his colleague and disciple, he did decide legal points, and I too am the Master's colleague as well as disciple'.

Raba said: A young scholar may examine his own knife.⁷ Rabina once visited Mahuza when his host brought to him a slaughtering knife for examination. 'Go', he⁸ said to him, 'take it to Raba'.⁹ 'Does not the Master', the other asked: 'uphold the ruling laid down by Raba that a young scholar may examine his own knife?' — 'I', he⁸ replied, am only buying the meat'.¹⁰ (Mnemonic:¹¹ Zila of¹² Hania¹³ changes¹⁴ Ika¹⁵ and Jacob.¹⁶)

R. Eleazar of Hagronia¹⁷ and R. Abba b. Tahlifa once visited R. Aha son of R. Ika's house in the district that was subject to the jurisdiction of R. Aha b. Jacob. R. Aha son of R. Ika, desiring to prepare for them a third-grown¹⁸ calf, presented to them the slaughtering knife for examination. 'Should no consideration be shown for the old man?'¹⁹ R. Aha b. Tahlifa asked. 'Thus', R. Eleazar of Hagronia replied: 'said Raba: A young scholar may examine his own knife'. R. Eleazar of Hagronia²⁰ thereupon examined the knife and was providentially punished for his disrespect. But did not Raba lay down, 'A young scholar 'lay examine his own knife'? — There the case was different since they began to discuss the question of his¹⁹ dignity. And if you prefer I might reply: R. Aha b. Jacob was different from other local authorities since he was a man of great distinction.

Raba ruled: When it is a question of preventing one from committing a transgression it is quite proper [for a disciple to give a legal decision] even in his Master's presence.

Rabina once sat in the presence of R. Ashi when he observed that a certain person was tying his ass to a palm-tree on the Sabbath day.²¹ He called out to him but the other took no notice. 'Let this man' he called out, 'be placed under the ban'. 'Does such an act as mine',²² he²³ then asked [R. Ashi], 'appear as an impertinence?' — There is no wisdom for understanding nor counsel against the Lord,²⁴ wherever the divine name is being profaned no respect is to be shown to one's Master.²⁵

Raba ruled: In the presence of one's Master it is forbidden [to give a legal decision]²⁶ under the penalty of death;²⁷ in his absence this is forbidden but the penalty of death is not incurred. Is then no penalty of death incurred in his absence? Was it not in fact taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob²⁸ stated: The sons of Aaron died²⁹ only because they gave a legal decision in the presence of their Master Moses. What was the exposition they made? And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire upon the altar,³⁰ although, they said, fire came down from heaven³¹ it is nevertheless a religious duty to bring also some ordinary fire. R. Eliezer, furthermore, had a disciple who once gave a legal decision in his presence. 'I wonder', remarked R. Eliezer to his wife, Imma Shalom, 'whether this man will live through the year'; and he actually did not live through the year. 'Are you', she asked him, 'a prophet?' 'I', he replied: 'am neither a prophet for the son of a prophet, but I have this tradition: Whosoever gives a legal decision in the presence of his Master incurs the penalty of death'.) Now, in connection with this incident Rabbah b. Bar Hana related in the name of R. Johanan: That disciple's name was Judah b. Gorias and he was three parasangs distant from his Master?³² — He was in his presence.³³ But was it not stated that 'he was three parasangs distant'?³⁴ — And according to your conception what need was there for the mention of his name and the name of his father? But the fact is that all the details were given in order that it be not said that the whole story was a fable.

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: Whoever gives a legal decision in the presence of his Master deserves to be bitten by a snake, for it is said: And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said: I am young, etc. wherefore I held back,³⁵ and elsewhere³⁶ it is written: With the venom of crawling things³⁷ of the dust.³⁸ Ze'iri stated in the name of R. Hanina: He is called a sinner, for it is said: Thy word have I laid up in my heart,³⁹ that I might not sin against Thee.⁴⁰

R. Hamnuna pointed out an incongruity: It is written: Thy word have I laid up³⁹ in my heart,⁴⁰ and it is also written: I preached righteousness in a great congregation.⁴¹ — This is really no contradiction, the former relating to the time when Ira the Jairite⁴² was still alive while the latter relates to the time when Ira the Jairite was no longer alive.

R. Abba b. Zabda⁴³ stated: Whoever gives⁴⁴ his priestly gifts to one priest [only] brings famine into the world. For it is said in Scripture: Ira the Jairite was priest to David.⁴⁵ Now was he priest to David alone and not to all the world?⁴⁶ But the meaning is that David sent to him⁴⁷ his priestly gifts; and this is followed by the text: And there was a famine in the days of David.⁴⁸

R. Eliezer⁴⁹ said: He⁵⁰ is deprived of his greatness — For it is said: And Eleazar the priest said unto the men of war . . . This is the statute of the law which the Lord hath commanded Moses;⁵¹ although he thus said to them, 'He commanded my father's brother⁵² and not me'⁵³ he was nevertheless punished,⁵⁴ as it is written: And he⁵⁵ shall stand before Eleazar the priest⁵⁶ and yet we do not find that Joshua ever needed his guidance.

R. Levi stated: He who answers a word⁵⁷ in the presence of his Master goes down to Sheol childless; for it says in Scripture: And Joshua the son of Nun, the minister of Moses from his youth up, answered and said: 'My lord Moses, shall them in'⁵⁸ and elsewhere it is written: Nun his son, Joshua his son.¹ This exposition, however, differs from that of R. Abba b. Papa, for R. Abba b. Papa² stated: Joshua was punished³ for no other sin than that of preventing Israel or one night from the duty of propagation; for it is said in Scripture: And it came to pass, when Joshua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked etc.⁴ and this is followed by the text: And he said: 'Nay,⁵ but I am captain of the host of the Lord,' I am now come'.⁶ 'Last evening',⁷ he said to him [in effect]. 'you omitted to offer up the continual evening sacrifice⁸ and now you are neglecting the study of the Torah'.⁹ 'On account of which offence', the other asked,¹⁰ 'did you come'? — 'Now',¹¹ he replied. 'am I come'. Joshua, we read forthwith, went that night into the midst of the vale,¹² a text which, R. Johanan explained, teaches that he entered into the profundities of the halachah.¹³ And we have a tradition that so long as the Ark and the Shechinah are not settled in their appointed place¹⁴ connubial intercourse is forbidden.¹⁵

R. Samuel b. Inia¹⁶ stated in the name of Rab: The study of the Torah is more important than the offering of the daily continual sacrifices,¹⁷ since he said to him,¹⁸ 'now am I come'.¹⁹

R. Berona stated in the name of Rab: Concerning the man who sleeps in a room²⁰ in which husband and wife rest Scripture says: The women of My people ye cast out from their pleasant houses.²¹ This, R. Joseph said, applies even to the time when one's wife is menstruant. Raba said: If one's wife is menstruant may a blessing come upon him.²² This,²³ however, is not very logical, for who watched him²⁴ until that time?²⁵

There was a certain alley in which Lahman²⁶ b. Ristak²⁷ lived. 'Will you let us²⁸ your domain?²⁹ said the other residents to him; but he would not let it to them. So they went to Abaye and reported the matter to him. ‘Renounce’, he advised them, ‘your respective domains³⁰ in favour of one resident so that he would be in the position of one individual living in the same place with a heathen, and wherever one individual lives in the same place with a heathen the latter imposes no restrictions upon the former’.³¹ ‘Is not the only reason’,³² he was asked,³³ ‘that it is not usual for one Israelite and one heathen to live together? And is it not a fact that these did live together?’ — ‘The renunciation of’ private domains in favour of one resident’, he replied: ‘is an unusual occurrence, and the Rabbis enacted no prohibitory measures against any occurrence that is unusual’.³⁴ R. Huna son of R. Joshua proceeded to report this ruling³⁵ to Raba when the latter remarked:³⁶

(9) Joshua, engaging in incessant warfare both by day and night, was unable to allow time either for the daily evening sacrifice or for the study of the Torah which the people were expected to pursue in the evening when they were free from their labours. The critical attitude of the ‘captain’ is inferred (v. Rashi) from his appearance with his sword drawn’ (Josh. V. 13); and the emphasis he laid on ‘now’ (v. infra n. 12) implies that previously also some offence had been committed.

In the absence of the arrangement they would have been deprived even of these limited privileges (cf. Shah. 130b). The prohibition, however, to move objects from their own houses into the alley and vice versa would still remain in force (cf. infra 69b).

(32) Why a heathen imposes no restrictions on an individual Israelite that lives with him in the same courtyard or alley.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 64a

'If so,¹ are you not abolishing the law of 'erub in that alley?' — 'They might prepare an 'erub'.² 'Would It not then be said that an 'erub is effective even where a heathen is a resident in the place?' — 'An announcement might be made'.³ 'An announcement for the children?'⁴ — 'Rather', said Raba, 'let one of them⁵ persuade him⁶ and borrow a place from him on which he shall put down something, so that⁷ he assumes the status of his hired labourer or retainer concerning whom Rab Judah laid down in the name of Samuel: Even his⁸ hired labourer and even his retainer⁹ may contribute his share to the 'erub¹⁰ and this alone is sufficient.¹¹

Abaye asked R. Joseph: What is the ruling in there were¹² five hired labourers¹³ or live retainers?¹⁴ — The other replied: If the Rabbis have laid down that one's hired labourer or retainer is regarded as a householder in order that the law might be relaxed,¹⁵ would they also maintain that a hired labourer or retainer has a similar status in order that the law might be restricted?¹⁶

[Reverting to] the main text: 'Rab Judah laid down in the name of Samuel: Even his hired labourer and even his retainer may contribute his share to the 'erub, and this alone is sufficient R. Nahman observed: How excellent a ruling is this.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: He who has drunk a quarter of a log¹⁷ of wine must not give a legal decision. This ruling' observed R. Nahman, 'is not a very fine one, because in my own case, before I drink a quarter of a log of wine my mind is not clear'.

Said Raba to him:¹⁸ Why did the Master speak in such a manner?¹⁹ Did not R. Aha b. Hanina in fact state, 'What is the exposition of the Scriptural text: But he that keepeth company with harlots loses his substance?²⁰ Whosoever says: "This ruling is a fine one²¹ or "That ruling is not a fine one" loses the substance of the Torah'? — 'I withdraw', the other replied.

Rabbah son of R. Huna ruled: One who is under the influence of drink must not pray, but if he did pray his prayer is regarded as a proper one. An intoxicated man must not pray, and if he did pray his prayer is an abomination. How are we to understand the expression of 'One who is under the influence of drink', and how that of 'an intoxicated man'? — As follows. When R.²² Abba²³ b. Shumani²⁴ and R. Menashya b. Jeremiah of Difti²⁵ were taking leave from each other at the ford of the river Yopati they suggested, 'Let each one of us say something that the other has never heard before, for Mari son of R. Huna²⁶ laid down: The best form of taking leave of a friend is to tell him²⁷ a point of the halachah, because he would remember him for it'. 'What is to be understood', one of them began, 'by "one who is under the influence of drink" and what by "an intoxicated man"? The former is one who is able to speak in the presence of a king,²⁸ the latter is one who is unable to speak in the presence of a king'. 'What', the other began, 'should he who took possession of the property of a proselyte²⁹ do that he shall be worthy of retaining it? Let him purchase with it³⁰ a scroll of the Law'.³¹ R. Shesheth said: Even

(1) That renunciation alone is deemed to be sufficient to enable the residents to enjoy the privileges mentioned.

(2) Although it would bring them no material benefit.

(3) That the 'erub is ineffective, that with the exception of the one resident, in whose favour the others had renounced their rights, all are forbidden to carry any objects from their houses into the alley and vice versa, and that only within the alley, which on account of the renunciation assumed the status of a private domain, is the movement of objects permitted.

(13) Cf. MS.M.

(14) Each one of whom occupied a room or a garret in it, and one of whom had forgotten to contribute his share to the 'erub for the alley. Since, it is asked, in respect of enabling the house in which he lives to be joined with the others in one 'erub he is regarded as its householder, is he equally regarded as a householder the absence of whose share from an 'erub restricts the use of the entire alley?

(15) I.e., that the 'erub shall be effective.

(16) Of course not. As all doubtful questions in the laws of 'erub are decided in favour of the more lenient view, a hired labourer or retainer cannot be regarded as a householder wherever he failed to contribute to the 'erub of the alley.

a husband [should act in a similar manner] with his wife's estate. Raba said: Even a man who engaged in trade and made a large profit should act in a similar manner. R. Papa said: Even he who has found something [should act in the same manner]. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: Even if he had only arranged for the writing of one pair of¹ tefillin.² In connection with this R. Hanin [or, as some say: R. Hanina] stated: What is the Scriptural proof?³ It is written: And Israel vowed a vow etc.⁴

Rami b. Abba⁵ stated: A mil's walk or a little sleep removes the effects of wine. Said R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: This applies only to one who has drunk one⁶ quarter of a log, but if one has drunk more than a quarter, a walk would only cause him more fatigue, and sleep would produce more intoxication. But does a mil's walk remove the effects of wine? Was it not in fact taught: It once happened that R. Gamaliel was riding on an ass when traveling from Akko to Chezib while R. Ila'i was following behind him. Finding a gluskin⁷ on the road he⁸ said to him, 'Ila'i, pick up the gluskin from the road'. Later he met a heathen. 'Mabgai',⁹ he said to him, 'take away that loaf from Ila'i'. R. Ila'i thereupon approached him,¹⁰ and asked 'where are you from?' 'I am', the other replied: 'from the station keepers'¹¹ settlements'. 'And what is your name?' 'My name is Mabgai'. 'Did R. Gamaliel ever know you?' 'No', the other replied. At that moment we discovered that R.

Gamaliel divined by the holy spirit and, at the same time, we learned three things: We learned that¹² eatables¹³ may not be passed by,¹⁴ that¹⁵ the majority of travellers must be followed;¹⁶ and that¹⁷ it is permitted to derive benefit¹⁸ from a heathen's leavened bread after the Passover.¹⁹ When he²⁰ arrived at Chezib a man approached him and asked for his vow to be absolved. 'Have we', he' asked the person who accompanied him,²¹ 'perchance drunk a quarter of a log of Italian wine?' 'Yes', the other replied. 'In that case', he said: 'let him walk behind us until the effect of our wine is removed'. The man walked behind them for three mils until he²⁰ reached the Ladder of Tyre.²² Having arrived at the Ladder of Tyre, R. Gamaliel alighted from his ass, wrapped himself in his cloak, sat down and disallowed his vow. At that time we learned many things: We learned that a quarter of a log of Italian wine causes intoxication; that an intoxicated man may not decide legal questions; that a journey causes the effects of wine to be removed, and that absolution from vows may not be granted while riding, walking, or standing, but must be done sitting. At all events, were not 'Three mils' mentioned here?²³ — Italian wine is different²⁴ since its powers of intoxication are greater.²⁵ But did not R. Nahman state in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha, 'This applies only to one who has drunk one quarter of a log, but if one has drunk more than a quarter, a walk would only cause him more fatigue, and sleep would produce more intoxication'?²⁶ — A rider is in a different position.²⁷ Now that you have arrived at this,²⁸ no objection²⁹ can be raised against Rami b. Abba³⁰ either, since a rider is in a different position.³¹ But [the law,]³² surely, is not so; for did not R. Nahman say: Absolution from vows may be granted while walking, standing or riding?³³ — This is a point at issue between Tannas, one³⁴ holding that³⁵ an opening for regret must be discovered³⁶ while the other³⁷ holds that no opening for regret is required;³⁸ for³⁹ Rabbah b. Bar Hana related in the name of R. Johanan: what opening did R. Gamaliel suggest to that man? There is that speaketh like the piercings of a sword, but the tongue of the wise is health,⁴⁰ he 'that speaketh' a vow deserves to be pierced by the sword,⁴¹ 'but the tongue of the wise⁴² is health'.⁴³ The Master said that 'eatables may not be passed by'. R. Johanan laid down in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: This applies only to the earlier generations when the daughters of Israel did not freely indulge⁴⁴ in witchcraft, but in the later generations when the daughters of Israel freely indulged in witchcraft one may pass them by. A Tanna taught: Whole loaves⁴⁵ may be passed by but not crumbs. Said R. Assi to R. Ashi: But do they not practise witchcraft with crumbs? Is it not in fact written in Scripture: And ye have profaned Me⁴⁶ among My People for handfuls of barley and for crumbs of bread?⁴⁷ — These⁴⁸ they received as a fee.⁴⁹

I could justify the exemption from judgment of all the [Israelite] world since the day of the destruction of the Temple until the present time, for it is said in Scripture: Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted and drunken but not with wine.¹

An objection was raised: The sale or purchase of an intoxicated person is valid. If he committed a transgression involving the penalty of death he is to be executed, and if he committed one involving flogging he is to be flogged; the general rule being that he is regarded as a sober man in all respects except that he is exempt from prayer.² [Does not this³ contradict the view of R. Shesheth]? By the expression,⁴ 'I could justify the exemption' that he used he also meant exemption from judgment [for the lack] of [devotion⁵ in] prayer.

R. Hanina said: This³ applies only to one who did not reach the stage of Lot's drunkenness,⁶ but one who did reach such a stage is exempt from all responsibilities.

R. Hanina observed: Against him who passes by⁷ the 'Shield'⁸ in the time of haughtiness⁹ troubles will be closed and sealed about him, for it is said in Scripture: His scales¹⁰ are his pride, shut up together as with a close¹¹ seal.¹² What proof is there that *afek*¹³ signifies 'passing by'? — Since it is written in Scripture: My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, as the channel¹³ of brooks that pass by.¹⁴ R. Johanan said: The statement¹⁵ was 'Against him who does not utter'.¹⁶ What is the proof that *mapik*¹⁷ signifies manifestation?¹⁸ — Since it is written in Scripture: And the channels¹⁹ of waters appeared, and the foundations of the world were laid bare.²⁰ Observe! The Scriptural texts provide equal proof for the one Master as well as for the other Master; wherein then lies the difference between them?²¹ — The difference between them is [the propriety of the practice] of R. Shesheth; for R. Shesheth entrusted [the task of waking him from] his sleep to his attendant. One Master²² upholds the view of R. Shesheth while the other Master²³ does not.²⁴

R. Hiyya b. Ashi citing Rab ruled: A person whose mind is not at ease must not pray, since it is said: 'He who is in distress shall give no decisions'.²⁵ R. Hanina did not pray on a day when he was agitated. It is written, he said: 'He who is in distress shall give no decisions'.²⁶

Mar Ukba did not attend²⁷ court on a *shutha*²⁸ day.

R. Nahman b. Isaac observed: Legal study²⁹ requires as much clearness³⁰ as a north wind day.³¹ Abaye remarked: If my [foster] mother³² had told me: 'Bring me the kutha',³³ I would not have been able to study.³⁴ If, remarked Raba,³⁵ a louse bit me I could not study.³⁴

Seven garments for the seven days of the week³⁶ were prepared for Mar son of Rabina by his mother.

Rab Judah observed: Night was created for naught but sleep. R. Simeon b. Lakish observed: The moon³⁷ was created only to facilitate study. When R. Zera was told, 'You are exceedingly well versed in your studies', he replied: 'They are the result of day work'.

A daughter³⁸ of R. Hisda once asked R. Hisda,³⁹ 'Would not the Master like to sleep a little?' 'There will soon come', he replied: 'days that are long and short⁴⁰ and we shall have time to sleep long'. R. Nahman b. Isaac remarked: 'we are day workers'. R. Aha b. Jacob borrowed⁴¹ and repaid.⁴²

R. Eliezer ruled: A man who returns from a journey⁴³ must not pray for three days, for it is said in Scripture: And I gathered them together to the river that turneth to Ahava;⁴⁴ and there we encamped three days, and I viewed⁴⁵ the people.⁴⁶

On returning from a journey Samuel's father refrained from prayer for three days. Samuel did not pray in a house that contained alcoholic drink.⁴⁷ R. Papa did not pray in a house that contained fish-hash.⁴⁷

R. Hanina observed: He who allows himself to be pacified when lie is taking wine possesses some of the characteristics of his Creator, for it is said in Scripture: And the Lord smelled the sweet savour;⁴⁸ and . . . said . . . 'I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake'.⁴⁹

R. Hiyya observed: He who retains a clear mind under the influence of wine possesses the characteristics of the seventy elders; for the numerical value of 'yayin'⁵⁰ is seventy⁵¹ and so is also the numerical value of 'sod',⁵² so that when wine goes in counsel departs.⁵³

R. Hanin⁵⁴ observed: Wine was created for the sole purpose of comforting mourners and rewarding the wicked;⁵⁵ for it is said: Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish,⁵⁶ and wine unto the bitter in soul.⁵⁷

R. Hanin⁵⁸ b. Papa stated: A person in whose house wine is not poured like water has not attained the state of blessedness; for it is said: And He will bless thy bread and thy water,⁵⁹ as the 'bread' spoken of is a food that may be bought with the money of the Second Tithe so is the 'water'⁶⁰ a liquid that may be bought with the money of the Second Tithe. Now such a liquid is' of course,⁶¹ wine,⁶² and yet it is called 'water'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 65b

If, therefore, it is poured in one's house like water that house has attained to the state of¹ blessedness, otherwise it has not.²

R. Ila'i³ said: By three things may a person's character be determined: By his cup,⁴ by his purse⁵ and by his anger; and some say: By his laughter also.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: An Israelite and a heathen once lived in the inner of two courtyards and one Israelite lived in the outer one,⁶ and when the case⁷ came up for discussion before Rabbi he forbade the use of the latter,⁸ and when it was submitted to R. Hiyya he also forbade its use.⁸ Rabbah and R. Joseph were once sitting at the end [of a discourse] of R. Shesheth's session⁹ when the latter on sitting down suggested that¹⁰ Rab explained his traditional ruling to be in agreement with the view of R. Meir;¹¹ and Rabbah nodded his head.¹² 'That two great men',¹³ exclaimed R. Joseph,¹⁴ 'should make a mistake in such a simple thing! If the ruling is in agreement with R. Meir why was it required that all Israelite shall live in the outer courtyard?¹⁵ And should you reply that the case just happened to be of such a nature, was not Rab asked, [it could be pointed out,] whether the inner Israelite tenant could use his own place¹⁶ and he replied that he was permitted?¹⁷ — In agreement with whose view then?¹⁸ Is it suggested to be in agreement with that of R. Eliezer b. Jacob?¹⁹ Did he not, [it may be retorted,] rule:²⁰ UNLESS THERE ARE TWO ISRAELITES WHO IMPOSE RESTRICTIONS UPON EACH OTHER?²¹ — Is it²² then in agreement with R. Akiba who ruled: A man who is permitted freedom of movement in his own place²³ causes the restriction of free movement on others in a place that is not his?²⁴ What need was there,²⁵ [it may be asked,] to have a heathen,²⁶ seeing that even one Israelite alone would have imposed the restrictions? — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: The ruling²² in fact is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob²⁷ and R. Akiba,²⁸ but²⁹ here we are dealing with a case where [the two Israelites] joined in an ‘erub. Hence the reason of the prohibition that there was a heathen³⁰ who imposed the restrictions, but where there was no heathen there is none to impose restrictions upon them.

R. Eleazar³¹ enquired of Rab: What is your ruling where all Israelite and a heathen lived in the outer courtyard and one Israelite lived in the inner one? [Is the enactment³² applicable only] there,³³ for the reason that it is usual³⁴ [for an Israelite] to live [with a heathen] since [the former knows] that the heathen would be afraid [to use violence against him] as he expects the other Israelite³⁵ to come and demand,³⁶ ‘Where is that Israelite that lived with you?’³⁷ but [not] here where the heathen could well reply,³⁸ ‘He went out and disappeared’;³⁹ or is it likely [that the enactment extended also to such a case since] here also [the heathen would be] afraid [to, use violence against his neighbour] as he imagines that the Israelite⁴⁰ might at any moment pass⁴¹ and detect him in the act?⁴² — The other replied: Give to a wise man, and he will be yet wiser.⁴³

Resh Lakish and the students of R. Hanina once happened to be in a certain inn⁴⁴ while its tenant was away but its landlord was present. ‘Is it proper’,⁴⁵ they discussed, ‘to rent from him⁴⁶ [the heathen's share in the courtyard]?’⁴⁷ Wherever the landlord is not entitled to terminate the lease⁴⁸ there could be no question that we must not rent it; the question arises only where he is entitled to terminate it.⁴⁸ May we rent it because he has the power to terminate the lease or is it possible that, since at present at any rate he did not yet terminate it, we may not rent it?’ — Resh Lakish said to them: ‘Let us⁴⁹ rent it⁵⁰ and when we arrive at our Masters in the South we might submit the question to them’. On submitting the question⁵¹ to R. Afes he replied: ‘You have acted well in renting it’.

R. Hanina⁵² b. Joseph, R. Hiyya b. Abba and K. Assi once happened to come to a certain inn whither⁵³ a heathen, the owner of the inn, had returned on the Sabbath.⁵⁴ ‘Is it permissible’,⁵⁵ they discoursed, ‘to rent from him his share? Is the law of renting like that of the preparation of an ‘erub,⁵⁶ so that as an ‘erub must be prepared while it is yet day,⁵⁷ must renting take place while it is yet day;⁵⁷ or is the law of renting like that of the renunciation of one's domain, so that as the right to one's domain may be renounced even on the Sabbath⁵⁸ so may renting also take place on the Sabbath?’⁵⁹ R. Hanina b. Joseph said: ‘Let us rent it’, while R. Assi said: ‘Let us not rent it’. ‘Let us’, said R. Hiyya b. Abba to them, ‘rely on the words of the old man and rent it’. When they subsequently came to R. Johanan and submitted the question to him he told them:

(10) Lit., 'like whom?'

(11) The author of the ruling in the first clause of our Mishnah which restricts the use of a courtyard in which a heathen lived even if no more than one Israelite lived in it with him.

(15) To bring up the number of Israelites to two. According to R. Meir (cf. supra p. 455, n. 14) the heathen would have imposed the restrictions even in there had been only the one Israelite in his courtyard.

(16) In the inner courtyard, sc. may he move objects from his house into that courtyard and vice versa?

(17) Which shows that the prohibition is restricted to that courtyard alone in which no less than two Israelites have a share. How then could it be suggested that the ruling was in agreement with R. Meir.

(18) Did Rab explain his reported ruling.

(19) The author of the ruling in the second clause of our Mishnah.

(20) That a heathen causes no restrictions.

(21) As the two Israelites do not live in the same courtyard, and as the inner tenant is permitted to use his own courtyard, the latter could impose no restrictions upon the former. Why then was the use of the outer courtyard forbidden?

(22) Rab's reported ruling under discussion.

(23) As is the Israelite in the inner courtyard.

(25) For the imposition of restrictions,

(26) In the inner courtyard.

(27) That only where two Israelites impose restrictions upon each other does a heathen's tenancy affect their rights to the use of their courtyard. Hence it is well permitted to the only Israelite in the inner court freely to use that courtyard in which he lives.

(28) According to whose view the inner Israelite tenant, though he may freely use his own courtyard, imposes restrictions on the use of the outer courtyard.

(29) The reason why the tenancy of a heathen is required if restrictions are to be imposed.

(30) Who impairs the validity of the 'erub of the Israelites.

(35) Who lived in the outer courtyard.

(36) Lit., 'now the Israelite would come and say to me'.

(37) He could not shake since his way out could only be through the outer courtyard where its tenant would have seen him.

(38) Lit., 'I would say to him',

(39) As no Israelite would in such circumstances venture to live with a heathen in the same courtyard no enactment (cf. supra n. 3) was deemed necessary.

(40) The tenant of the inner courtyard.

(42) Lit., 'come and see me'.

(43) Prov. IX, 9; Sc. the enactment applied to the latter, as well as to the former case.

(45) Lit., 'what is it?'

(46) The landlord.

- (47) In order that the movement of objects in it shall be permitted on the Sabbath even if the leaseholder returned before the termination of the Sabbath.
- (48) Before the clay of its expiration. Lit., 'remove him'.
- (49) Since doubtful points in respect of the laws of 'erub are to be decided in favour of the more lenient view.
- (50) And thus be entitled to the unrestricted use of the courtyard.
- (51) Lit., 'they came, asked'.
- (52) MS.M. 'Rabbah'.
- (53) After they had duly prepared their 'erub on the Sabbath eve.
- (54) No question would have arisen if he had not returned since a heathen's right in a courtyard is disregarded in his absence in the case of 'erub. (Cf. R. Judah's ruling supra 86a).
- (55) Lit., 'what is it?'
- (56) Lit., 'is one who rents like one who prepares an 'erub'.
- (57) Of the Sabbath eve.
- (58) Cf. supra 69b.
- (59) And consequently one of them at least in whose favour all the others would renounce their rights could rent the heathen's share and thus be entitled to the unrestricted use of the courtyard. [This is not treated as a commercial transaction but as the presentation of a mere gift, since its sole object is to permit the movement of objects; Tosaf. 66a, s.v. עֵרֻב].

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 66a

'You have acted well in renting the place'. The Nehardeans were astonished at this decision.¹ Could R. Johanan, [they argued,] have given such a decision, seeing that R. Johanan laid down that renting is subject to the same law as that of the preparation of an 'erub, which means, does it not, that as the preparation of an 'erub must take place while it is yet day so must renting also take place while it is yet day?² — No;³ the meaning is that as an 'erub may be prepared even with food that is worth less than a perutah⁴ so may renting also be effected even with less than a perutah,⁴ and as an 'erub for a heathen's share is valid even if effected through his hired labourer or retainer⁵ so may his share be rented even from his hired labourer or his retainer,⁶ and as in the case of 'erub, if five tenants lived in one courtyard,⁷ one of them may join in an 'erub⁸ for all of them⁹ so also in the case of renting, if five tenants¹⁰ lived in one courtyard,¹¹ one of them may rent the heathen's share on behalf of all of them.

R. Eleazar was astonished at it.¹² 'What', R. Zera asked: 'could have been the cause of R. Eleazar's astonishment?' That such a great man as R. Zera, exclaimed R. Shesheth, should not know why R. Eleazar was astonished! His difficulty, [of course] was a ruling of his Master Samuel who laid down: Wherever tenants¹³ impose restrictions upon one another but may¹⁴ join together in an 'erub they may¹⁵ renounce their rights to their shares in favour of one of them;¹⁶ where they may¹⁴ join in an 'erub but¹⁷ do not impose restrictions upon one another, or when they do¹⁸ impose restrictions upon one another but may not¹⁹ join in an 'erub, they may not renounce their rights in favour of one of them. 'Wherever tenants impose restrictions upon one another but may join together in an 'erub they may renounce their rights to their shares in favour of one of them' as, for instance, in the case of two courtyards, one within the other.²⁰ 'Where they may join in an 'erub but do not impose restrictions upon one another . . . they may not renounce their rights in favour of one of them' as, for instance, in the case of two courtyards²¹ that have a common door between them.²² Now what case was intended to be included in the statement, 'Where they do impose restrictions upon one another but may not join in an 'erub they may not renounce their rights in favour of one of them'? Was not this meant to include the case of the heathen?²³ Now,²⁴ if the heathen had come home on the Sabbath eve,²⁵ could not his share have been hired prior to the Sabbath?²⁶

(1) Just attributed to R. Johanan.

(2) How then could it be asserted that R. Johanan approved of the renting of the heathen's share on the Sabbath?

- (3) Sc. the comparison was not intended, as suggested, to restrict the laws of 'erub, but rather, since in all questions of 'erub the lenient course is followed, to relax them.
- (4) V. Glos.
- (5) If he was an Israelite (cf. supra 64a).
- (6) Who was not an Israelite.
- (7) Whose door opened into another courtyard.
- (8) With the tenants of the other courtyard.
- (9) Cf. infra 72b.
- (10) Israelites.
- (11) Where a heathen tenant also lived.
- (12) At the decision supra to rent the heathen's share on the Sabbath and to renounce the individual Israelites' rights in favour of one of them.
- (13) In the absence of an 'erub.
- (14) If they wish.
- (15) Where they have failed to prepare their 'erub on the Sabbath eve.
- (16) Thereby constituting the entire courtyard as the domain of that one tenant and they in consequence are enabled to move objects from place to place within the courtyard as well as from that tenant's house into the courtyard and vice versa; the movement of objects from their own houses into the courtyard and vice versa would, of course, remain forbidden.
- (17) Even in the absence of an 'erub.
- (18) In the absence of an 'erub.
- (19) Even if they desire it.
- (20) The tenants of the inner courtyard, if they do not join in an 'erub for their courtyard, restrict the use of the outer courtyard by its tenants, on account of the former's right of passage through it. They may join in an 'erub with the outer tenants if they desire to do so, by preparing one on the Sabbath eve. They may, therefore, should they even happen to have failed to prepare the 'erub on the Sabbath eve, renounce their right of passage through the outer courtyard in favour of its tenants and thus remove the latter's restrictions upon its use.
- (21) Each of which has a door of its own to an alley or a public domain.
- (22) In addition to their other doors. The tenants of these two courtyards may join in an 'erub if they wish but, since each courtyard is self-contained, they do not impose restrictions upon one another even in the absence of an 'erub. As renunciation of rights in a courtyard was permitted only where the tenants impose restrictions upon one another no renunciation is here allowed.
- (23) Who lived in a courtyard with two Israelites. In such a case the two Israelites would impose restrictions upon one another but could not join in an 'erub on account of the heathen tenant.
- (24) Since this case was apparently intended.
- (25) Lit., 'and if he came since yesterday'.
- (26) Lit., 'from yesterday'. Of course it could. Why then, since all 'erub could well be prepared after the heathen's share had been hired, is this case described as one where the tenants 'impose restrictions' but 'may not join in an 'erub'?

Consequently¹ it must refer to a case where the heathen came home on the Sabbath, and in connection with this it was stated that 'where they do impose restrictions upon one another but may not join in an 'erub they may not renounce their rights in favour of one of them'.² This is conclusive.

I, observed R. Joseph, have never before heard this reported ruling.³ Said Abaye to him: You yourself have taught it to us⁴ and you said it in connection with the following. For Samuel said that 'no domain may be renounced where two courtyards are involved⁵ nor may it be renounced in the case of a ruin',⁶ and you told us in connection with it that when Samuel said that 'no domain may be renounced where two courtyards are involved' he meant it to apply only to two courtyards that⁷ had one door in common,⁸ but where one courtyard was within the other,⁹ since the tenants impose restrictions upon one another,¹⁰ they¹¹ may also renounce their rights.¹² Could I, the former questioned, have reported such a ruling in the name of Samuel? Did not Samuel in fact state: 'In the laws of 'erub we can only be guided¹³ by the wording of our Mishnah',¹⁴ [viz.,] 'the tenants of one courtyard',¹⁵ but not those of two courtyards?¹⁶ — When you told us, the other explained, that 'In the laws of 'erub we can only be guided by the wording of our Mishnah' you said It in connection with the following: Since an alley to its courtyards is as a courtyard to its houses.¹⁷

[To turn to] the main text: Samuel ruled that no domain may be renounced where two courtyards are involved nor may it be renounced in the case of a ruin.¹⁸ R. Johanan, however, ruled: A domain may be renounced even where two courtyards are involved and it may also be renounced in the case of a ruin. And both¹⁹ had to be mentioned. For if the two courtyards only had been mentioned it might have been assumed that only in this case did Samuel maintain his view, since the use of one is quite independent of that of the other,²⁰ but that in the case of a ruin, the use of which is common to the two tenants,²¹ he agrees with R. Johanan.²² And if the latter²³ only had been stated it might have been presumed that in this case only did R. Johanan²⁴ mention his view, but that in the former case²⁵ he agrees with Samuel. Hence both were required.

Abaye stated: Samuel's ruling that²⁶ 'no domain may be renounced where two courtyards are involved'²⁷ applies only²⁸ to two courtyards that had one door in common but where two courtyards were one within the other, since the tenants impose restrictions upon one another, they may also renounce their rights.²⁹ Raba stated: Even in the case of two courtyards one of which was within the other the tenants may sometimes renounce their rights and sometimes³⁰ they may not renounce them. How IS this [possible]? If the tenants³¹ deposited their 'erub in the outer courtyard and one tenant, whether of the inner courtyard or of the outer courtyard, forgot to participate in the 'erub, the use of both courtyards is restricted,³² If they deposited their 'erub in the inner courtyard and one tenant of the inner courtyard forgot to participate in the 'erub, the use of both courtyards is restricted.³² If, however, a tenant of the outer courtyard forgot to participate in the 'erub, the use of the inner courtyard is unrestricted³³ while that of the outer one is restricted.³⁴ 'If the tenants deposited their 'erub in the outer courtyard and one tenant, whether of the inner courtyard or of the outer courtyard, forgot to participate in the 'erub, the use of both courtyards is restricted'. For in whose favour could this tenant of the inner courtyard³⁵ renounce his right? Should he renounce it³⁶ in favour of the tenants of the inner courtyard?³⁷ But their 'erub, surely, is not with them!³⁸ Should he³⁹ renounce his right⁴⁰ in favour of the tenants of the outer courtyard also?⁴¹ Surely no domain may be renounced where two courtyards are involved!⁴² As to the tenant of the outer courtyard⁴³ too in whose favour could he renounce his right? Should he renounce it³⁶ in favour of the tenants of the outer courtyard? There would still remain the tenants of the inner courtyard⁴⁴ who⁴⁵ would impose the restrictions upon them! Should he renounce it in favour of the tenants of the inner courtyard also?⁴⁶ Surely no domain may be renounced where two courtyards are involved!⁴² 'If they deposited their 'erub in the inner courtyard and one tenant of the inner courtyard forgot to participate in the 'erub, the use of both courtyards is restricted'. For in whose favour could this tenant of the inner courtyard⁴⁷ renounce his right? Should he renounce it⁴⁸ in favour of the tenants of the inner courtyard? There would still remain the tenants of the outer courtyard who⁴⁹ would impose restrictions upon them! Should he⁵⁰ renounce his right⁵¹ in favour of the tenants of the outer courtyard also?⁵² Surely no domain may be renounced where two courtyards are involved!⁵³

(1) Since it is a case where they may not join in an 'erub'.

(2) Which proves that renunciation of individual shares in favour of one of the tenants is permissible only where the tenants were allowed to prepare an 'erub on the Sabbath eve. Hence R. Eleazar's astonishment (supra 66a).

(3) Of Samuel, that in the case of two courtyards the tenants of the inner one may renounce their right of passage through the outer one in favour of the tenants of the latter.

(4) R. Joseph, as the result of a serious illness, lost his memory and Abaye who was a disciple of his often reminded him of his own teachings. Cf. supra 10a notes.

(5) Lit., 'from courtyard to courtyard'. This is explained presently.

- (6) That intervened between two houses whose doors opened into it. Only in the case of houses that opened into a courtyard, which is a recognized place for the use of tenants, was renunciation of one's right to one's share in that courtyard permitted in order to enable (a) the tenant in whose favour the renunciation was made to move objects from his house to the courtyard and vice versa, and (b) the other tenant or tenants to move objects from place to place within the courtyard. As a ruin, however, is not usually a place which tenants would use no renunciation of one's domain was permitted and no objects, therefore, may be moved either from the houses into it or from it into the houses unless a proper 'erub has been duly prepared.
- (7) In addition to the door each had towards an alley or a public domain.
- (8) Lit., 'between them'. Since each of the two groups of tenants, by closing the communicating door, is well able freely to use its own courtyard, irrespective of any action on the part of the other group, the Rabbis did not consider it necessary to relax the law in their favour and to allow renunciation.
- (9) And the inner tenants cannot possibly gain access to the alley or public domain except through the outer courtyard.
- (10) On account of the right of way.
- (11) The inner tenants, if they prepared no 'erub even among themselves.
- (12) Of passage, to which they are entitled in the outer courtyard, and the tenants of the latter are thereby enabled to use their courtyard.
- (13) Sc. no further relaxation of the law is permitted.
- (14) The Mishnah infra 69b of which Samuel presumably spoke.
- (15) May, if one of them forgot to join in their 'erub, renounce their rights in their courtyard in favour of that man.
- (16) How then could this be reconciled with the ruling of Samuel that the law of renunciation applies only to two courtyards?

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 67a

'If, however, a tenant of the outer courtyard forgot to participate in the 'erub the use of the inner courtyard¹ is' certainly 'unrestricted',² since its tenants³ might close its door⁴ and so enjoy its use, 'while that of the outer one is restricted'.⁵

Said R. Huna son of R. Joshua to Raba: But why should the use of both courtyards be restricted where a tenant of the inner one forgot to join in the 'erub.? Could not the tenant of the inner courtyard renounce his right in favour of the tenants of the inner courtyard and the tenants of the outer one could then come and enjoy unrestricted use together with them? — In agreement with whose view, [retorted Raba, is this objection raised? Apparently] in agreement with that of R. Eliezer who ruled that 'it is not necessary to renounce one's right in favour of every individual tenant',⁶ but I spoke in accordance with the view of the Rabbis who ruled⁶ that 'it is necessary to renounce one's right in favour of every individual tenant'.⁷ Whenever R. Hisda and R. Shesheth met each other, the lips of the former trembled at the latter's extensive knowledge of Mishnahs,⁸ while the latter trembled all over his body at the former's keen dialectics.⁹ R. Hisda once asked R. Shesheth: 'What is your ruling where two houses were situated on the two sides of a public domain and gentiles came and put up a fence before their doors¹⁰ on the Sabbath?¹¹ According to him who holds that no renunciation of a domain is valid where two courtyards are involved¹² the question does not arise. For¹³ if no renunciation is permitted where two courtyards are involved even where an 'erub could, if desired, have been prepared on the previous day¹⁴ how much less could renunciation be permitted here¹⁵ where¹⁶ no 'erub could have been prepared on the previous day even if desired. The question arises only on the view of him, who ruled,¹² "A domain may be renounced even where two courtyards are involved".¹⁷ Do we say that only there where they could, if desired, have prepared an 'erub on the previous¹⁸ day is one also allowed to renounce one's domain, but here¹⁹ where they could not prepare an 'erub on the previous day²⁰ one is not allowed to renounce one's domain either; or is it possible that there is no difference between the two cases?'²¹ — 'No renunciation is permitted', the other replied.²² 'What is your ruling', the former again asked: 'where the gentile²³ died on the Sabbath?²⁴ According to him who ruled that it was permitted to rent,²⁵ the question does not arise. For if two acts²⁶ are permitted is there any need to question whether one act only²⁷ is permitted?²⁸ The question, however, arises according to him who ruled that it was not permitted to rent.²⁹ Are only two acts³⁰ forbidden³¹ but not one,²⁷ or is it possible that no difference is to be made between the two cases?' — 'I maintain', the other replied: 'that renunciation is permitted'.³² Hamnuna, however, ruled: renunciation³³ is not permitted.³⁴

Rab Judah laid down in the name of Samuel: If a gentile has a door of the minimum size of four handbreadths by four that opened³⁵ into a valley, even though he leads camels and wagons in and out all day through an alley,³⁶ he does not restrict its use for the residents of that alley. What is the reason? — That door which he keeps exclusively for himself is the one he prefers.³⁷ The question was asked: What is the ruling where it³⁸ opened into a karpaf?³⁹ R. Nahman⁴⁰ b. Ammi citing a tradition replied:

(1) By its tenants.

(2) Even according to Samuel,

(3) In whose favour those of the outer one may well renounce the right in their courtyard which they have acquired solely through their 'erub (cf. Rashi).

(4) That leads to the outer courtyard.

(5) Cf. supra p. 463, n. 14, ad fin. The renunciation on the part of the outer tenants, it may be added, is necessary only in accordance with the ruling of R. Akiba. According to the view of the Rabbis no renunciation is required v. infra 75b (Rashi and Tosaf. a.l.).

(6) Cf. supra 26b.

(7) Since a tenant of one courtyard cannot renounce his right in favour of a tenant of another courtyard (as stated supra) the inner tell, [It cannot renounce his right in favour of any of the outer tenants and, consequently, his renunciation in favour of his own neighbours alone cannot in any way help towards the removal of the restrictions.

(8) Many of which appear to be contradictory to each other and so offered R. Shesheth, who could easily marshal them, an opportunity of embarrassing R. Hisda by inviting him to reconcile them.

(9) With which he could easily bewilder R. Shesheth.

(10) Lit., 'and surrounded them', sc. fences were erected on both sides of the doors of the houses across the public domain so as to form an enclosure into which both doors opened.

(11) Is one of the tenants permitted to move objects from his house into the enclosure (cf. supra 20a) if the other has renounced in his favour the share he has in it?

(12) Supra 66b, q.v. notes.

(13) Lit., 'now that'.

(14) Sc. on the Sabbath eve. From which it follows (as explained supra) that where residents impose no restrictions upon each other they are not permitted to exercise the right of renunciation even where they had the right to join in an 'erub.

(15) The case under consideration.

(16) In addition to the residents' inability to impose restrictions upon each other.

(17) From which it follows that renunciation is permitted even where the residents concerned do not impose restrictions upon each other.

(18) So that they enjoyed at least one privilege, that of the right to the preparation of an 'erub.

(19) The case under consideration.

(20) And are thus deprived even of the one privilege (cf. supra n. 11).

(21) As renunciation is permitted even where the residents impose no restrictions upon each other so is it also permitted where no 'erub could be prepared by them on the Sabbath eve.

(22) Renunciation is admissible only where the residents concerned (a) impose restrictions upon one another or (b) could, if they desired, have prepared an 'erub at the proper time.

(23) Who lived in a courtyard with two Israelites who neither rented his share in it nor prepared an 'erub on the Sabbath eve.

(24) May the Israelites renounce their rights to each other on the Sabbath?

(25) On the Sabbath, from a gentile who returned home on that day; and that renunciation is subsequently permitted (v. supra 65b).

(26) Renting and renunciation.

(27) Renunciation.

(28) Obviously not.

(29) Cf. supra n. 5, mut. mut.

(30) Renting and renunciation.

(31) Lit., 'two it is that we do not do'.

(32) Since in this case, unlike the one cited, the residents could have rented the gentile's share before the Sabbath when a valid 'erub could well have been prepared.

(33) Which is admissible only where an 'erub could have been prepared.

(34) Since in this case also no 'erub could have been prepared because the gentile's share in the courtyard had in fact not been rented.

(35) From his courtyard.

(36) In which Israelites live and into which his courtyard also has a door.

(37) He is consequently presumed to have renounced his right to his share in the alley, and if he does use it he is regarded as a mere passer-by whose passage can in no way affect the rights of the residents (cf. R. Han.).

(38) The door of the heathen's courtyard that had also a door opening towards an alley (cf. supra p. 467, n. 16).

(39) Is a karpaf in this respect regarded as a valley?

(40) Var. lec., 'Hanan' (Bomb. ed.).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 67b

Even if it opened to a karpaf.¹ Both Rabbah and R. Joseph ruled: A gentile² causes restrictions³ [if his karpaf was no bigger than] two beth se'ah,⁴ but if it was bigger⁵ he causes no restrictions,⁶ an Israelite,⁷ however, causes no restrictions⁸ [if his karpaf was no bigger than] two beth se'ah,⁹ but if it was bigger¹⁰ he¹¹ does cause restrictions.⁶

Raba b. Haklai¹² asked R. Huna: What is the ruling¹³ where [the door of a gentile's courtyard]¹⁴ opened into a karpaf¹⁵ The other replied: Behold it has been said: 'Causes restrictions if [his karpaf was no bigger than] two beth se'ah, but if it was bigger he causes no restrictions'.¹⁶

Ulla laid down in the name of R. Johanan: If a man threw an object¹⁷ into a karpaf that was bigger than two beth se'ah and that was not enclosed for dwelling purposes he incurs guilt¹⁸ even if it was of the size of a kor or even as big as two kors. What is the reason?¹⁹ — It is a proper enclosure²⁰ which only lacks tenants.²¹

R. Huna b. Hinena²² raised all objection: If a rock in the sea²³ was ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths wide it is forbidden to move objects from it into the sea and from the sea into it;²⁴ but if it was lower²⁵ this is permitted.²⁶ To what extent?²⁷ To two beth se'ah.²⁸ Now what do these²⁹ refer to? If it be suggested: To the final clause,³⁰ the objection would arise: Seeing that one would only be moving from a karmelith to a karmelith,³¹ why only two beth se'ah, and no more? Consequently it must refer³² to the first clause, and what was implied was this: 'If a rock in the sea was ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths wide it is forbidden to move objects from it into the sea and from the sea into it', and 'To what extent?³³ To two beth se'ah', from which it follows that if it was bigger than two beth se'ah the movement of objects is permitted.³⁴ It is thus obvious that a rock of such dimensions has³⁵ the status of a karmelith. Does not this³⁶ then present an objection against R. Johanan?³⁷ — Raba retorted: only he who does not know how to explain Baraithas raises such an objection against R. Johanan. [The limitation]³⁸ as a matter of fact refers to the first clause,³⁹ and it is this that was meant: Within it,⁴⁰ however,⁴¹ it is permitted to move objects; and 'To what extent?⁴² To two beth se'ah'.⁴³ R. Ashi replied: [The limitation⁴⁴ applies] indeed to the first clause,⁴⁵ for the Rabbis have laid down the one ruling⁴⁶ and they themselves have also laid down the other ruling:⁴⁷ They have laid down the ruling that in a karpaf that was bigger than two beth se'ah and that was not enclosed for dwelling purposes the movement of objects is permitted Only within four cubits,⁴⁸ and they themselves have also laid down the ruling that no objects may be moved from a private domain into a karmelith.⁴⁹ [In the case, therefore, of a rock that was no bigger than] two beth se'ah, throughout the area of which the movement of objects is permitted, the Rabbis have forbidden the movement of objects from the sea into it as well as from it into the sea.⁵⁰ What is the reason?⁵¹ Because it⁵² is a private domain in all respects.⁵³ [If, however, It was] bigger than two beth se'ah, throughout the area of which the movement of objects is forbidden,⁵⁴ the Rabbis permitted the movement of objects from it into the sea and from the sea into it.⁵⁵ What is the reason?⁵⁶ Because, otherwise,⁵⁷ people might assume it to be a private domain in all respects and, in consequence, would also move objects throughout its area.⁵⁸ But wherein does the one differ from the other?⁵⁹ — It is usual to move objects within the area of the rock itself⁶⁰ but it is unusual to move objects from it into the sea or from the sea into it.⁶¹ There was once a child whose warm water⁶² was spilled.⁶³ 'Let some warm water', said Rabbah 'be brought for him from my house'.⁶⁴ 'But', observed Abaye, 'We have prepared no 'erub'.⁶⁵ 'Let us then rely', the other replied. 'on the shittuf'.⁶⁶ 'But', Abaye told him, 'we had no shittuf either'.⁶⁶ 'Then', the other said: 'let a gentile be instructed to bring it for him' — 'I wished', Abaye later remarked: 'to point out an objection against the Master'⁶⁷ but R. Joseph prevented me, because he told me in the name of R. Kahana, "When we were at Rab Judah's he used to tell us that in a Pentateuchal matter⁶⁸ any objection⁶⁹ must be raised before the Master's ruling is acted upon.⁷⁰ but in a Rabbinical matter⁷¹ we must first⁷² act on the ruling of the Master and then point out the objection".⁷³ After that he⁷⁴ said to him,⁷⁵ 'What objection was it that you wished to raise against the Master?' 'It was taught', the other replied, 'that "sprinkling"⁷⁶ on the Sabbath is only Rabbinically forbidden.⁷⁷ Now, instructing a gentile to do work⁷⁸ on the Sabbath⁷⁹ is also Rabbinically forbidden,

- (1) Does not the heathen in any way restrict the use of the alley for its residents.
 - (2) Whose courtyard had one door opening into an alley in which courtyard doors of Israelites also opened, and another door opening into a karpaf.
 - (3) On the use of the alley by his Israelite neighbours.
 - (4) Since the area of the karpaf is not big enough to induce him to give up his use of the alley.
 - (5) In consequence of which he prefers to use the karpaf and the door that leads to it, and dispenses entirely with his right to the use of the alley.
 - (6) On the use of the alley by his Israelite neighbours.
 - (7) V. supra n. 5.
 - (8) Even if he did not join in the 'erub of the other residents.
 - (9) As he is permitted to use a karpaf of such a size on the Sabbath, and since its area fully suffices for all his possible Sabbath requirements and is also more convenient for his use than the comparatively smaller space of the alley, he is presumed to have dispensed with his right to the use of the alley which may, therefore, be provided by its other residents with a valid 'erub even if he does not participate in it.
 - (10) So that it has the status of a karmelith (v. Glos.) into which he is forbidden to move any objects from his courtyard on the Sabbath.
 - (11) Being inevitably driven to the use of the alley.
 - (12) MS.M., 'Hakuka'.
 - (13) According to Rab Judah who spoke (supra 67a ad fin.) of a door that opened into a valley.
 - (14) That had also a door to an alley in which Israelites resided.
 - (15) Sc. has a karpaf the same status as a valley?
 - (16) Supra q.v. notes.
 - (17) From a public domain, on the Sabbath when it is forbidden to move objects from a public domain into a private one and vice versa.
 - (18) Sc. he is liable to bring a sin-offering as if he had thrown the object into a private domain.
 - (19) I.e., since a karpaf of the size mentioned is subject to the law of a karmelith, within which the movement of objects beyond the distance of four cubits is forbidden, why should it here be regarded as a private domain?
 - (20) Hence it has Pentateuchally the same status as a private domain, and guilt is therefore incurred for throwing any objects from a public domain into it.
 - (21) In consequence of which it was Rabbinically subjected to the restrictions of a karmelith also.
 - (22) MS. M., 'Hanina'.
 - (23) A sea is subject to the restrictions of a karmelith.

- (24) Even within four cubits; because a rock of the dimensions given has the status of a private domain into which from a karmelith and into a karmelith from which it is forbidden to move objects on the Sabbath.
- (25) Lit., 'less than here (stated)'.
- (26) Lit., '(they may) move (objects)', from the sea into it and from it into the sea, within four cubits, since such a low rock has the status of a karmelith like the sea which surrounds it.
- (27) In the area of the rock. It will be explained presently what the question and the following answer refer to.
- (28) But not to a bigger area.
- (29) The last question and answer.
- (30) Which deals with a rock that was lower than ten handbreadths.
- (31) Since, whatever its area, a rock that is lower than ten handbreadths has the status of a karmelith.
- (32) Lit., 'but not?'
- (33) Of area of rock.
- (34) Cf. supra n. 9 mut. mut.
- (35) On account of its big area, despite its height.
- (36) The relaxation of the law in turning a private domain into a karmelith on account of the extent of its area.
- (37) Who laid down supra that though a karpaf was bigger than two beth se'ah it is still subject to the restrictions of a private domain and that a person who threw an object from a public domain into it incurs guilt.
- (38) To 'two beth se'ah', in the Baraitha cited by R. Huna b. Hinena.
- (39) Which deals with a rock that was lower than ten handbreadths.
- (40) Sc. on the surface of the rock itself.
- (41) Since the first clause only stated that 'it is forbidden to move objects from it into the sea and from the sea into it' and did not forbid the movement of objects on the surface of the rock from one part of it to another.
- (42) Of area of rock is the movement of objects on the rock itself permitted.
- (43) But if it is bigger it loses, on account of its wide extent and the absence of inhabitants, the status of a private domain in respect of the movement of objects within it, and assumes that of a karmelith. Had it not been subjected to these restrictions people might erroneously have treated a public domain also with the same laxity. On account of its height, however, it retains, in relation to the sea, the status of a private domain the movement of objects from which into the sea and vice versa remains forbidden.
- (44) To 'two beth se'ah', in the Baraitha cited by R. Huna b. Hinena.
- (45) But not, as Raba explained, to an inference from that clause.
- (46) That relating to a karpaf as enunciated by R. Johanan.
- (47) The one in the first clause of the Baraitha cited by R. Huna b. Hinena as defined by the limitation at its conclusion. Since both rulings are merely Rabbinical and not Pentateuchal the Rabbis could well abrogate one in favour of the other wherever the general requirements of the Sabbath laws demanded such a course; as will be explained anon.
- (48) Sc. that it has been given the status of a karmelith as a restriction and safeguard against mistaking it for a public domain and applying its relaxation to the latter also. It is nevertheless forbidden to move airy objects from it into a public domain or vice versa since, as R. Johanan stated, it is Pentateuchally regarded as a private domain proper.
- (49) As a precaution against the moving of objects from a private into a public domain.
- (50) Since the prohibition only strengthens the Sabbath laws and can in no way lead, as in the case that follows, to their infringement.
- (51) For the imposition of the restrictions.
- (52) The rock whose area was less than two beth se'ah.
- (53) And no infringement of the law (cf. infra n. 10) need be provided against.
- (54) It having been given the status of a karmelith.
- (55) Within four cubits.
- (56) Sc. why were not the restriction had been imposed and the movement of this case also?
- (57) If the restrictions had been imposed and the movement of objects from it into the sea or vice versa had been forbidden even within four cubits.
- (58) Even beyond four cubits. As this, however, "would entail an infringement of the Rabbinical law which imposed on such an area the restrictions of a karmelith, it was considered preferable to abrogate in this case the law forbidding the movement of objects between a karmelith and a private domain.
- (59) I.e., why should the law against moving objects between a karmelith and a private domain be abrogated rather than the one forbidding the movement of objects beyond four cubits in a private domain that was bigger than two beth se'ah?

(60) Hence it was necessary to enact a preventive measure.

(61) Against that which is unusual no preventive measures were enacted. Only in the case of a private domain and a karmelith on land, the movement of objects between which is not infrequent, has such a preventive measure been deemed necessary.

(62) That was prepared for him prior to the Sabbath, in connection with his circumcision due on the Sabbath day, and kept warm for the purpose.

(63) On the Sabbath.

(64) Which was in the same courtyard.

(65) Sc. an 'erub of courtyards' which enables the tenants of different houses in the same courtyard to move objects from house to house through the courtyard area.

(66) V. Glos. Shittuf in an alley in relation to its courtyards and the houses in their courtyards serves the same purpose as that of 'erub in a courtyard in relation to its houses (cf. infra 73a).

(67) Rabbah

(68) Concerning which a Master gives a decision.

(69) Which a student wishes to raise against it.

(70) Since very great care must be exercised in any action that might possibly infringe a Pentateuchal law.

(71) Concerning which a Master gives a decision.

(72) out of respect for the Master, and on the assumption that he would be able to give a suitable answer to the students' objection.

(73) As the law of 'erub of courtyards is only Rabbinical Abaye had no alternative but to act on Rabbah's ruling.

(74) R. Joseph.

(75) Abaye.

(76) On an unclean person, of the water of purification containing the ashes of the red heifer (cf. Num. XIX, 2ff).

(77) Shebuth v. Glos.

(78) for an Israelite.

(79) If that work is forbidden on the Sabbath to an Israelite.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 68a

why then should it not be said: As "sprinkling" on the Sabbath which is a Rabbinical prohibition does not supersede the Sabbath¹ so should not an instruction to a gentile to do work on the Sabbath which is also Rabbinically forbidden supersede the Sabbath?'² — 'Do you', the first retorted: 'draw no distinction between a Rabbinical prohibition that involves a manual cat³ and one⁴ that involves no such act?'⁵

'How is it, Rabbah son of R. Hanan) asked Abaye, 'that in an alley in which two great men like you⁶ reside there should be neither 'erub nor shittuf?' — 'What', the other replied. 'can we do? For the Master⁷ [to collect the tenants' contribution].⁸ would not be becoming,⁹ I am busy with my studies, and the other tenants do not care. And were I¹⁰ to transfer to them the possession of a share of the bread in my basket¹¹ the shittuf, Since If they had asked me for the bread I could not give it to them,¹² would be invalid; for it was taught: If one of the residents of an alley¹³ asked for some of the wine or the oil¹⁴ and they refused to give it to them the shittuf is thereby rendered null and void'. 'Why then', the first asked: 'should not the Master transfer to them the possession of a quarter of a log of vinegar¹⁵ a cask?'¹⁶ — 'It was taught: [Commodities kept] in store¹⁷ may not be used for shittuf'.¹⁸ 'But was It not taught that they¹⁹ may be used for shittuf?' — This, R. Oshaia replied, is no contradiction, since one view is that of Beth Shammai and the other is that of Beth Hillel. For we learned: If a corpse lay in a house that had many doors²⁰ all the doorways²¹ are unclean.²² If one of them was opened, that doorway is unclean while all the others are clean.²³ If it was intended to take out the corpse through one of them, or through a window that measured four handbreadths by four, this protects all the doors.²⁴ Beth Shammai ruled: This²⁵ applies only where the intention was formed before the person in question was dead,²⁶ but Beth Hillel ruled: Even if it was formed after he was dead.²⁷

There was once a certain child²⁸ whose warm water²⁹ was spilled out.³⁰ Said Raba: 'Let us ask his mother [and] if she requires any, a gentile³¹ might warm some for him indirectly through his mother'. 'His mother', R. Mesharsheya told Raba, 'is already eating dates'.³² 'It is quite possible', the other replied, 'that it was merely a stupor that had seized her'.³³

There was once a child³⁴ whose warm water³⁵ was spilled out.³⁶ 'Remove my things', ordered Raba,³⁷ 'from the men's quarters³⁸ to the women's quarters³⁹ and I will go and sit there⁴⁰ so that⁴¹ I may renounce in favour of the tenants of the child's courtyard⁴² the right I have in this one'.⁴³ 'But', said Rabina to Raba, 'did not Samuel lay down: No renunciation of one's right in a courtyard is permitted where two courtyards are involved?'⁴⁴ — 'I', the other replied, 'hold the same view as R. Johanan who laid down: It is permitted to renounce one's right in a courtyard even where two courtyards are involved'. 'But', the first asked: 'if the Master does not hold the same view as Samuel

(1) Even where the performance of a Pentateuchal commandment, such, e.g., as that if the Paschal lamb, must in consequence be postponed (cf. Pes. 65b).

(2) Why then did Rabbah permit an instruction to be given to a gentile to bring the warm water for the child?

(3) Sprinkling, for instance.

(4) Such as a mere verbal instruction.

(5) The answer, of course, must be in the affirmative. While a manual act remains forbidden even where a commandment must thereby be superseded a verbal may well be permitted where it is essential for the observance of a commandment such as circumcision with which Rabbah had to deal. The insertion in cur. edd., 'for the master, surely, did not tell the gentile: Go and warm (it)', is deleted by Bah.

(9) Lit., 'not his way'.

(10) Instead of making a collection.

(11) Which could be designated as 'erub; and thus give all the tenants a share in it.

(12) He could not well afford to give away every Sabbath a portion of his bread to any of his neighbours who might care to assert his claim.

(13) Who contributed his share to the shittuf.

(14) That has been contributed.

(15) There could be no great loss in giving some vinegar to any of the tenants who might ask for it.

(16) Which might be kept in his courtyard throughout the year and thus enable all the tenants to have free intercourse between the courtyards and the houses.

(17) Sc. a store of fruit or a cask of vinegar, for instance, from which small quantities at a time are being consumed.

(18) In the case of a cask of vinegar, for instance, no portion of it may be designated for the purpose, because no one could possibly distinguish between the quantity that had been so designated and the general contents of the cask; and any quantity that one may happen to use at any time might be assumed to be the quantity that had been designated for the shittuf which in consequence would cease to exist.

(19) Commodities in store (v. previous n.).

(20) That were closed.

(21) Lit., 'all of them', since no decision had been made through which of the doors the corpse shall be carried out.

(22) Sc. any object that happens to be within the space enclosed by the door posts, lintel and threshold, though it was not within the room, is levitically unclean.

(23) Because it is assumed that the corpse would be taken out through the opened door.

(25) That intention is effective.

(26) Since in that case the uncleanness has never descended on the other doors. If, however, no intention had been formed before the person was dead, and all the doors had been affected by the uncleanness, any subsequent intention cannot retrospectively, cause a differentiation between the one door and the others.

(27) Ohal. VII, 3. Intention, in their opinion, is effective retrospectively. Similarly in the case of shittuf with a non-identified quantity: According to Beth Hillel the shittuf is valid, since any quantity of the contents that remain in the cask may be retrospectively regarded as the original quantity assigned for the shittuf: while according to Beth Shammai it cannot be so regarded and the shittuf is consequently invalid.

(28) Who was to be circumcised on the Sabbath.

(29) That had been prepared before the Sabbath and kept warm for the operation.

(30) On the Sabbath.

(31) An Israelite may desecrate the Sabbath for the sake of a woman in childbirth during the first seven days only. After the first seven days (circumcision cannot take place before the eighth day) an Israelite, though himself forbidden to do for her sake any work that is forbidden on the Sabbath, may request a gentile to do it.

(32) Sc. cold foodstuffs. As she is able to eat cold food it is obvious that her life cannot be dependent on the warm water which, consequently, must not be prepared for her on the Sabbath.

(33) I.e., she may have been unconscious that she was eating anything at all. Hence, if she expressed a desire for warm water it is permitted to request a gentile to warm some for her and so, indirectly, for the child also.

(34) Who was to be circumcised on the Sabbath.

(35) V. p.474, n. 12.

(36) On the Sabbath.

(37) Who had a supply of warm water in his own courtyard which was adjacent to that in which the child was kept. No joint 'erub for the two courtyards had been prepared but they had a common door between them. Cur.ed., 'to them', is omitted with MS.M.

(38) In which he usually lived and which communicated directly with his courtyard.

(39) Which, for the sake of privacy, were behind the men's apartments and consequently inaccessible from the courtyard except by way of the men's quarters.

(40) During the Sabbath.

(41) By being deprived of direct access to the courtyard.

(42) Lit., to them'.

(43) Sc. his own courtyard. On renouncing his right in their favour they would acquire possession of his courtyard and therewith also the right to carry objects from one courtyard into the other through the common door. Thus they would be placed in a position enabling them to carry the required warm water to the child's apartment. Raba, on the other hand, who, as a result of his renunciation, would be deprived of the use of his courtyard, would be protected against the possible use of it through forgetfulness by his removal to the inner apartments from which he could gain no access to it except through the men's quarters involving a long walk and sufficient time in which to recollect his self-imposed restrictions.

(44) Supra 66b. Lit., 'from courtyard to courtyard'. How then could Raba renounce his right in favour of the tenants of the child's courtyard?

let him remain¹ in his usual quarters² and renounce his right in his courtyard in their³ favour and then⁴ let them renounce their right⁵ in the Master's favour,⁶ for did not Rab rule: Renunciation⁷ may be followed⁸ by renunciation?⁹ — 'On this point I am of the same opinion as Samuel who ruled: Renunciation⁷ may not be followed⁸ by renunciation'.¹⁰ 'But are not both rulings¹¹ based on the same principle, since why indeed should not renunciation⁷ be allowed to follow⁸ renunciation?⁹ Is it not because a person, as soon as he renounces his right.¹² completely eliminates himself from that place and assumes the status of a tenant of a different courtyard and no renunciation is valid between two courtyards? How then¹³ could the Master¹⁴ renounce his right?¹⁵ — 'There¹⁶ the reason is this:¹⁷ That a Rabbinical enactment¹⁸ shall not assume¹⁹ the character of a mockery and jest.

[To turn to] the main text: Rab ruled: Renunciation may be followed by renunciation, and Samuel ruled: Renunciation may not be followed by renunciation.²⁰ Must it be assumed that Rab and Samuel differ on the same principle as that on which the Rabbis and R. Eliezer differed,²¹ Rab holding the same opinion as the Rabbis²² while Samuel holds the same opinion as R. Eliezer?²³ Rab can answer you: I may uphold my ruling even in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer; for it was only there that R. Eliezer maintained his ruling that the man who renounces his right to his courtyard renounces ipso facto his right to his house also, because people do not live in a house that has no courtyard, but did he²⁴ express any opinion as regards complete elimination?²⁵ Samuel also can answer you: I may uphold my ruling even according to the view of the Rabbis; for it was only there that the Rabbis maintained their ruling,²⁶ since only that which a man actually renounced can be deemed to have been renounced while that which he did not actually renounce cannot be so regarded, but from that at least which a man does renounce he is eliminated completely.²⁷ R. Aha b. Hana²⁸ citing R. Shesheth stated: Their views²⁹ [differ on the same principles] as those of the following Tannas: If a tenant³⁰ presented³¹ his shares³² and then he carried out something,³² whether he acted unwittingly or intentionally, he imposes restrictions;³³ so R. Meir. R. Judah ruled: If he acted³⁴ with intention he imposes restrictions,³³ but if unwittingly he does not.³⁵ Now, do they³⁶ not differ on the following principles: One Master³⁷ holding that renunciation³⁸ may be followed by renunciation, while the other Master³⁹ maintains that renunciation⁴⁰ may not be followed by renunciation?⁴¹ — R. Aha b. Tahlifa replied in the name of Raba: No; all⁴² hold the view that renunciation may not be followed by renunciation but⁴³ the point at Issue between them⁴⁴ is whether a penalty has been imposed in the case of one who acted unwittingly on account of one who acted intentionally. One Master⁴⁵ holds the view that in the case of one who acted unwittingly a penalty has been imposed on account of one who acted with intention,⁴⁶ while the other Master⁴⁷ holds that in the case of one who acted unwittingly no penalty has been imposed on account of one who may act with intention.⁴⁸

R. Ashi said: Rab and Samuel differed on the same point of issue as the one between, R. Eliezer and the Rabbis.

R. GAMALIEL RELATED: A SADDUCEE ONCE LIVED WITH US. Who ever spoke of A SADDUCEE?⁴⁹ — A clause is missing, and this is the correct reading:⁵⁰ A Sadducee has the same status as a gentile,⁵¹ but R. Gamaliel ruled: A Sadducee has not the status of a gentile. AND R. GAMALIEL RELATED: A SADDUCEE ONCE LIVED WITH US IN THE SAME ALLEY IN JERUSALEM. AND FATHER TOLD US: ‘HASTEN AND CARRY OUT⁵² ALL THE NECESSARY ARTICLES INTO THE ALLEY⁵³ BEFORE HE CARRIES OUT HIS⁵⁴ AND THEREBY IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS UPON YOU’. And so⁵⁵ it was also taught: If a man lives [in the same alley] with a gentile, a Sadducee or a Boethusian, these impose restrictions upon him;⁵⁶ and it once happened that a Sadducee lived with R. Gamaliel in the same alley in Jerusalem, and R. Gamaliel said to his sons, ‘Hasten my sons and carry⁵² Out what you desire to carry Out⁵⁷ or⁵⁸ take in⁵² what you desire to take in,⁵⁷ before this abomination carries out his articles and thereby imposes restrictions upon you, since [at that moment] he renounced his share in your favour’; So R. Meir. R. Judah related, [The instruction was given] in a different form: ‘Hasten and attend to your requirements in the alley before nightfall when he would impose restrictions upon you’.⁵⁹

The Master said, ‘Carry out what you desire to carry out or bring in what you desire to bring in, before this abomination imposes restrictions upon you’. This then implies that⁶⁰ if they carried out their objects first and then he carried out his he imposes no restrictions upon them’.

(1) Instead of moving into the women's quarters.

(2) Lit., ‘in his place’.

(3) The tenants of the child's courtyard.

(4) After they had taken the water to the child.

(5) In Raba's courtyard.

(6) Who, in consequence, would again be allowed the free use of his courtyard.

(7) By one person in favour of another.

(8) On the same Sabbath.

- (9) On the part of the latter in favour of the former. Cf. infra 69b.
- (10) Cf. prev. n. and infra 79b.
- (11) That (a) after a person renounced his right in a courtyard in favor of another the latter may not on the same Sabbath renounce it in favour of the former and (b) no tenant of one courtyard may renounce his right in it in favour of a tenant of another courtyard.
- (12) To his share in a courtyard.
- (13) Since on adopting one ruling the adoption of the other is inevitable.
- (14) Lit., 'the Master also should not'.
- (15) In favour of the tenants of the child's courtyard.
- (16) The ruling of Samuel that 'renunciation may not be followed by renunciation'.
- (17) Not the one suggested by the questioner.
- (18) The prohibition to move objects from one courtyard into another without 'erub.
- (19) By repeated renunciations and the consequent freedom in the moving of objects between courtyards without any further legal preliminaries.
- (20) Supra q.v. notes.
- (21) Cf. supra 26b.
- (22) Who laid down (v. Mishnah infra 69b and its explanation in the Gemara following it) that if one of the tenants forgot to contribute his share to the 'erub of his neighbour's in a courtyard, but on the Sabbath renounced his right to share in the courtyard in their favour, it is forbidden both to him and to them to carry any objects from his house into the courtyard or from the courtyard into his house; from which it is evident that, though a man renounced his right in a courtyard, he is not ipso facto assumed to have renounced his right to his house also. Thus it follows that a tenant's renunciation is not regarded as his complete elimination; that he is still a legitimate tenant of the same courtyard; and that, in agreement with Rab, the other tenants may renounce in his favour the rights he previously renounced in their favour.
- (23) Who ruled (cf. supra 26b) that he who renounces his rights to his courtyard renounces ipso facto his rights to his house also; from which it follows that a tenant's renunciation is regarded as his complete elimination from his courtyard, that he assumes in consequence the status of a tenant of a different courtyard; and that, in agreement with the view of Samuel, the other tenants may not renounce in his favour the rights he previously conceded to them.
- (24) R. Eliezer.
- (25) I.e., that the man in question Should be regarded as the tenant of a different courtyard in whose favour consequently his neighbours should not be allowed to renounce their rights? No such opinion having been expressed, R. Eliezer may well be assumed to share the view advanced by Rab that renunciation may be followed by renunciation'.
- (26) That the renunciation of a tenant's Share in a courtyard does not imply his renunciation to his rights in his house.
- (27) As the tenant in question renounced his right to the courtyard he must be regarded as a tenant of a different courtyard in whose favour no right in the former courtyard may subsequently be renounced.
- (28) MS.M., 'Rabbah b. Bar Hana'.

- (32) In the courtyard into which their houses opened.
- (33) On the "use of the courtyard by all the tenants. His carrying of the object into the courtyard is regarded as an act of re-acquisition of the share he had previously renounced in favour of the other tenants.
- (34) When carrying out an object.
- (35) infra 69b.
- (36) R. Meir and R. Judah.
- (37) R. Meir who ruled that restrictions are imposed even where an object had been carried out unwittingly, from which it follows that the renunciation is not regarded as the tenant's complete elimination.
- (38) Since elimination is incomplete (cf. prev. n.) and the tenant in question is still denied to be living in the same courtyard.
- (39) R. Judah who ruled that if an object was carried out unwittingly no restrictions are imposed, from which it follows that a renunciation results in so complete an elimination that only an intentional act can revoke it.
- (40) Resulting as it does in the tenant's complete elimination (et prev. n.).

- (41) Apparently they do. Must it then be assumed that both Rab and Samuel differ from one or other of the Tannas mentioned?
- (42) Even R. Meir.
- (43) In reply to the objection: Why does R. Meir impose restrictions even where the tenant acted unwittingly?
- (44) It. Meir and R. Judah.
- (45) R. Meir.
- (46) Had the law been relaxed in the case of the former it might erroneously have been relaxed in that of the latter also.
- (47) R. Judah.
- (48) In the case, however, of an intentional carrying out of all object since a renunciation cannot have the legal force of a sale, all agree that the act cancels the renunciation; provided only that the act preceded the tenants' acquisition of the renounced share.
- (49) None; the Mishnah having dealt with a heathen oily. Why then does It. Gamaliel introduce the Sadducee as if some one had given a different ruling concerning him?
- (50) Of our Mishnah.
- (51) He cannot renounce his right to his share in a courtyard by a mere declaration.
- (52) As soon as the Sabbath begins.
- (53) Thus acquiring possession of it.
- (54) And re-acquires his right to his share.
- (55) That, as has just been explained, the Rabbis differ from R. Gamaliel in the case of a Sadducee.
- (56) In his use of the alley on the Sabbath. Cur. edd. in parenthesis, 'R. Gamaliel ruled: A Sadducee and a Boethusian impose no restrictions'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 69a

But have we not learnt: If a tenant¹ presented his share² and then he carried out something,³ whether he acted unwittingly or intentionally, he imposes restrictions;⁴ so R. Meir?⁵ — R. Joseph replied. Read:⁶ He imposes no restrictions. Abaye replied: There is no contradiction,⁷ the former dealing with a case⁸ where the residents of the alley had taken possession of the alley⁹ while the latter deals with one⁸ where the residents of the alley had not taken possession of the alley; and so it was also taught: If he¹⁰ carried out an object¹¹ before he had renounced his share,¹² whether he acted¹³ unwittingly or intentionally, he¹⁴ is entitled to renounce his right;¹⁵ so R. Meir. R. Judah ruled: If he acted¹³ unwittingly he is entitled to renounce his right¹⁵ but if he acted with intention he is no longer entitled to renounce his right.¹⁶ He who presented his share¹² and then carried out an object.¹¹ whether he acted¹³ unwittingly or with intention, he imposes restrictions;¹⁷ so R. Meir. R. Judah ruled: If he acted¹⁸ with intention he imposes restrictions but if unwittingly he does not. This,¹⁹ however, applies only where the residents of the alley did not take possession of the alley.²⁰ but where they did take possession of it²⁰ he imposes no restrictions upon them irrespective of whether he acted¹⁸ unwittingly or intentionally.

The Master said: 'R. Judah related, [The instruction was given] in a different form: "Hasten and attend to your requirements in the alley before nightfall when he would impose restrictions in you".' From this²¹ it is evident that he is regarded as a gentile; but have we not learnt.²² BEFORE HE CARRIES OUT?²³ — Read: Before the conclusion of the day.²⁴ And if you prefer I might say: There is really no contradiction since the former²⁵ might refer to one who is a mumar²⁶ in respect of desecrating the Sabbath in privacy only, while the latter²⁷ might deal with one who desecrates the Sabbath in public.

Whose view is followed in what was taught: 'A mumar²⁶ or a barefaced sinner is not entitled to renounce his share'? — But is a barefaced sinner on a par with a mumar?²⁸ — Rather read: 'A barefaced mumar²⁹ is not entitled to renounce his share'. Now in agreement with whose [view has this been laid down]? — In agreement, of course, with that of R. Judah.³⁰

A certain man once went out³¹ with a jewelled charm³² but when he observed R. Judah Nesi'ah he covered it up. 'A person of this type',³³ [the Master said.] 'is in accordance with the view of R. Judah entitled to renounce his share'.

R. Huna stated: Who is regarded as an Israelite in mumar?³⁴ He who desecrates the Sabbath in public. Said R. Nahman to him: In agreement with whose view?³⁵ If [it be suggested that it is] in agreement with that of R. Meir who holds that a person who is suspected of disregarding one matter [of law] is held suspect in regard to all the Torah,³⁶ the statement should also apply to any of the other prohibitions of the Torah;³⁷ and if [it is suggested that it is] in agreement with the view of the Rabbis,³⁸ did they not rule, it may be objected, that one who is suspected of disregarding one law is not held suspected in regard to all the Torah

 - (18) When he carried out the objects.
 - (19) That if an Israelite tenant presented his share to his neighbours and then used the alley, there is a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Rashi s.v. במה ad fin. a.l.).

- (32) Humarta di-medusha, a 'charm', 'ball' or 'bead' containing a 'jewel for sealing'; or 'a small bundle of spices' (cf. Rashi a.l. anti Jast.). Such an object, not being regarded as a personal ornament, may not be carried on the Sabbath in a public domain even on one's person.
- (33) I.e., who is ashamed to carry the forbidden object in the presence of a noted personality.
- (34) This is now assumed to mean a mumar or apostate in all respects.
- (35) Is this statement made.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 69b

unless he is a mumar in respect of idolatry?¹ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: Only in respect of presenting or renouncing his right to his share,² this being in agreement with what was taught: An Israelite mumar who observes the Sabbath in public³ may renounce his share, but one who does not observe the Sabbath in public may not renounce his share, because the Rabbis have laid down: An Israelite may renounce or present his share, whereas with a gentile transfer is possible only through the letting of his share. How is this⁴ done? He⁵ says to him,⁶ 'My share is acquired by you' or 'my share is renounced in your favour', [and the latter thereby] acquires possession and there is no need for him to perform a formal act of acquisition.⁷

R. Ashi replied:⁸ To this Tanna⁹ the desecration of the Sabbath is an offence as grave as idol worship;¹⁰ as it was taught: Of you¹¹ implies:¹² But not all of you, thus excluding a mumar;¹³ 'of you'¹⁴ only among you did I make distinctions¹⁵ but not among the other nations;¹⁶ 'of the cattle'¹⁷ includes men who resemble cattle.¹⁸ From here it has been inferred that sacrifices may be accepted from transgressors in Israel,¹⁹ in order that they might return in repentance, all except from a mumar, from one who offers libations of wine to idols and from one who publicly desecrates the Sabbath.²⁰ Now is not this statement self contradictory: First you said: 'Of you implies: But not all of you, thus excluding a mumar', and then you state, 'Sacrifices may be accepted from transgressors in Israel'?²¹ This, however, is no contradiction since the first clause might deal with a person who is a mumar in respect of all the Torah, while the intervening clause might refer to one who is a mumar in respect of one precept only. But [then] read the final clause: 'Except from a mumar and from one who offers libations of wine to idols'. What, pray, is one to understand by this type of mumar? If he is a mumar in respect of all the Torah he is obviously identical with the one in the first clause;²² and if he is a mumar in respect of one precept only, does not a contradiction arise from the middle clause?²³ Must it not consequently be conceded that it is this that was meant:²⁴ Except from one who is a mumar in respect of offering libations of wine to idols or the desecration of the Sabbath in public?²⁵ It is thus evident that idolatry and the desecration of the Sabbath are offences of equal gravity.²⁶ This is conclusive.

MISHNAH. IF ONE OF THE TENANTS OF A COURTYARD FORGOT TO JOIN IN THE 'ERUB,²⁷ HIS HOUSE IS FORBIDDEN BOTH TO HIM AND TO THEM FOR THE TAKING IN OR FOR THE TAKING OUT OF ANY OBJECT.²⁸ BUT THEIR HOUSES ARE PERMITTED BOTH TO HIM AND TO THEM.²⁹ IF THEY PRESENTED THEIR SHARES³⁰ TO HIM, HE IS PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE COURTYARD BUT THEY ARE FORBIDDEN.³¹ IF THERE WERE TWO [WHO FORGOT TO JOIN IN THE 'ERUB], THEY³² IMPOSE RESTRICTIONS UPON ONE ANOTHER, BECAUSE ONE TENANT MAY PRESENT

HIS SHARE³³ AND ALSO ACQUIRE THE SHARES OF OTHERS³⁴ WHILE TWO TENANTS MAY PRESENT THEIR SHARES BUT MAY NOT ACQUIRE ANY.³⁵

WHEN MUST ONE'S SHARE BE PRESENTED?³⁶ BETH SHAMMAI RULED: WHILE IT IS YET DAY,³⁷ AND BETH HILLEL RULED: AFTER DUSK. IF A TENANT PRESENTED HIS SHARE³³ AND THEN CARRIED OUT ANY OBJECT, WHETHER UNWITTINGLY OR INTENTIONALLY, LIE IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS;³⁸ SO R. MEIR. R. JUDAH RULED: IF HE ACTED WITH INTENTION HE IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS, BUT IF UNWITTINGLY HE IMPOSES NO RESTRICTIONS.

GEMARA. Apparently it is only HIS HOUSE that IS FORBIDDEN but his share in the courtyard³⁹ is permitted;⁴⁰ but how is one to understand the circumstances? If he has renounced his rights,⁴¹ why should his house⁴² be forbidden? And if he has not renounced his rights why should his courtyard be permitted? Here we are dealing with the case of a tenant who renounced his right to his courtyard but not his right to his house, the Rabbis⁴³ being of the opinion that a tenant who renounces his right to his courtyard does not ipso facto renounce his right to his house, since a person might well live in a house that has no courtyard. BUT THEIR HOUSES ARE PERMITTED BOTH TO HIM AND TO THEM. What is the reason? — Because he⁴⁴ is regarded as their guest.

IF THEY PRESENTED THEIR SHARES TO HIM, HE IS PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE COURTYARD BUT THEY ARE FORBIDDEN. Why should not they be regarded as his guests? — One man may be regarded as the guest of five⁴⁵ men; five men cannot be regarded as the guests of one. Does this⁴⁶ then imply that renunciation⁴⁷ may be followed by renunciation?⁴⁸ — No; it is this that was meant: IF THEY originally⁴⁹ PRESENTED THEIR SHARES TO HIM, HE IS PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE COURTYARD BUT THEY ARE FORBIDDEN.

IF THERE WERE TWO WHO FORGOT TO JOIN IN THE 'ERUB THEY IMPOSE RESTRICTIONS UPON ONE ANOTHER. Is not this obvious?⁵⁰ — This ruling was necessary only in a case where one of them has subsequently⁵¹ renounced his share⁵² in favour of the other. As it might have been assumed that the latter should be permitted [the full use of the courtyard].⁵³ hence we were informed that [this is not so], because the former, at the time he renounced his share, was not himself permitted the unrestricted use of that courtyard.⁵⁴ BECAUSE ONE TENANT MAY PRESENT HIS SHARE. What need again was there for this ruling? If that he MAY PRESENT, did we not learn this before?⁵⁵ If that he MAY ACQUIRE, did we not already learn this also?⁵⁶ — It was necessary on account of the final clause: TWO TENANTS MAY PRESENT THEIR SHARES. Is not this also obvious?⁵⁷ — It might have been presumed

(1) But not in respect of the Sabbath.

(2) Is an Israelite who desecrates the Sabbath regarded as a mumar.

(3) Lit., 'in the market place', though he desecrates it in private.

(8) To the objection raised by R. Nahman against R. Huna.

(9) Whose view R. Huna was presumably reporting.

(10) Sc. as one guilty of idolatry is regarded as a mumar in respect of all the Torah so also is one who is guilty of the desecration of the Sabbath.

- (21) 'Transgressors' presumably including the mumar also.
- (22) Then why the repetition?
- (23) Which does allow sacrifices to be accepted from a person who is a mumar in respect of one precept only.
- (24) In the final clause.
- (25) Of course it must.
- (26) And this is the view held by R. Huna. Hence there is no necessity to resort to the reply of R. Nahman b. Isaac according to which a man who publicly desecrates the Sabbath is regarded as a mumar only in respect of his disability to present and renounce his share in connection with the laws of 'erub. Such a man, as has originally been assumed, is in fact regarded as a mumar in all respects.

- (32) Though the other tenants renounced their shares in their favour.
- (33) To his neighbours.
- (34) Which they presented to him.
- (35) Because, while the courtyard is their common domain, their houses are their individual property and it is forbidden to carry objects from a private house into a courtyard which belongs to another tenant as well as to its owner.
- (36) To one's neighbour, so that the use of the courtyard shall be unrestricted.

- (41) In their favour.
- (42) Which he renounced simultaneously with his share in the courtyard.
- (43) The anonymous author of this part of our Mishnah who differs from R. Eliezer's ruling (supra 26b) that a tenant's renunciation of his share in a courtyard implies ipso facto his renunciation of his right to his house.
- (44) By abstaining from taking out any object from his house into the courtyard or vice versa and by using the courtyard in connection with the other tenants' houses only.
- (45) Fictitious number, sc. any number of people more than one.
- (46) The ruling that 'IF THEY PRESENTED THEIR SHARES TO HIM, HE IS PERMITTED etc. though the first 'renounced his right' in their favour in consequence of which (as was explained supra) it was laid down in the first clause that 'THEIR HOUSES ARE PERMITTED'.
- (47) Spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah (cf. prev. n.).
- (48) I.e., the presentation of 'THEIR HOUSES TO HIM' in the clause under discussion.
- (49) Not, as has been assumed, after he has renounced his right in their favour. This clause, in other words, is entirely independent of the first one.
- (50) Since even in the absence of the other tenants the two would have imposed restrictions upon each other.
- (51) After the other tenants had renounced the shares in favour of the two.
- (52) Which now presumably included his shares that the other tenants had renounced in his favour.
- (53) As in the case where all the tenants presented their shares to one of them.

(54) On account of the other tenant who was imposing restrictions upon him. Owing to these restrictions the presentation of the other tenants' shares was useless and, therefore, invalid. As he could not acquire their shares he could not obviously renounce them in favour of anyone else.

(55) 'BUT THEIR HOUSES ARE PERMITTED' because, as was explained in the Gemara supra, he 'renounced his right' in their favour.

(56) 'IF THEY PRESENTED THEIR SHARES TO HIM' etc.

(57) From a previous ruling in our Mishnah according to which any number of tenants, which obviously includes two, may present their shares to one of their number.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 70a

that this¹ should be forbidden, as a preventive measure against the possible assumption that one may also renounce his share in favour of two,² hence we were informed that no such possibility need be considered.

BUT MAY NOT ACQUIRE ANY. What need was there for this ruling?³ — It⁴ was required only for this case: Even where they⁵ said to him,⁶ 'Acquire our shares on the condition that you transfer them'.⁷

Abaye enquired of Rabbah: If five tenants live in the same courtyard and one of them forgot to join in the 'erub, is it necessary, when he renounces his right to his share,⁸ to renounce it in favour of every individual tenant or not? — He must, the other replied. renounce it in favour of every individual tenant.

He⁹ pointed out to him¹⁰ the following objection: A tenant who did not join in an 'erub¹¹ may present his share¹² to one of those who joined in the 'erub;¹³ two tenants who joined in an 'erub¹⁴ may present their shares¹⁵ to the one who did not join in their 'erub; and two tenants who did not join in an 'erub¹⁶ may present their shares¹⁵ to the two of their neighbours who joined in an 'erub or to one neighbour¹⁷ who¹⁸ did not prepare an 'erub. One, however, who joined in an 'erub¹⁹ may not present his share to one²⁰ who did not join with them²¹ nor may two who joined in an 'erub present their shares to the two who did not join,²² nor may the two who did not join in an 'erub present their shares to the other two who also did not join.²² At all events it was stated in the first clause, 'A tenant who did not join in an 'erub may present his share to one of those who joined in an 'erub'. Now, how is one to understand the circumstances? If there was no other tenant with him,²³ with whom could he have joined in an 'erub? It is consequently obvious that there must have been another tenant with him, and yet it was stated: 'To one of those who joined in the 'erub'!²⁴ — And Rabbah?²⁴ — Here²⁵ we are dealing with a case where there was one²⁶ who died.²⁷ But if one²⁶ was there and died, how will you explain the final clause: 'One, however, who joined in an 'erub may not present his share to one who did not join with them'? If one²⁶ was there only before and is now dead why should not this be permitted?²⁸ It is consequently obvious that he²⁶ was still there and, since the final clause is a case where he was there, must not the first clause also deal with one who was still alive?²⁹ — What an argument! Each clause may deal with a different case.³⁰ You may have proof that this is so,³¹ for in the final section of the first clause it was stated, 'And two tenants who did not join in an 'erub may present their shares to the two of their neighbours who joined in an 'erub', from which it follows: To two only³² but not merely to one.³³

Abaye, however, explained: What is meant by 'To two'? To one of the two. If so, why³⁴ was it not stated:³⁵ To one who joined in the 'erub³⁶ or to one who did not?³⁷ — This is a difficulty.

'A³⁸ tenant who did not join in an 'erub may present his share to one of those who joined in the 'erub' refers according to Abaye to a case where the other tenant³⁹ was also alive; and by this we are informed that it is not necessary to renounce one's share in favour of each individual tenant.

According to Rabbah this refers to a case where the other tenant³⁹ was first⁴⁰ alive and then⁴¹ died; and the point in the ruling⁴² is that no preventive measure had been enacted against the possibility that sometimes the one³⁹ may happen to be alive [and the same procedure⁴³ might be followed].

And⁴⁴ ‘two tenants who joined in an ‘erub may present their shares to the one who did not join in their ‘erub’. Is not this obvious?⁴⁵ — It might have been presumed⁴⁶ that the tenant, since he did not join in the ‘erub, should be penalized,⁴⁷ hence we were informed [that no such penalization had been enacted].

‘Anc⁴⁸ two tenants who did not join in an ‘erub may present their shares to the two of their neighbours who joined in an ‘erub’. According to Rabbah this final clause⁴⁹ was taught in order to explain the sense of the first clause.⁵⁰ According to Abaye⁵¹ this⁵² was required on account of the ruling relating to ‘two tenants who did not join in an erub’. Since it might have been presumed that renunciation on their part should be forbidden as a preventive measure against the possibility of a renunciation in their favour,⁵³ hence we were informed [that no such measure was deemed necessary].

‘Or to one neighbour who did not prepare an ‘erub’. What need was there for this ruling?⁵⁴ — It might have been presumed that those rulings⁵⁵ applied only where some of the tenants joined in an ‘erub and only some did not, but that where all the tenants failed to join in an ‘erub they should be penalized⁵⁶ in order that the law of ‘erub shall not be forgotten.⁵⁷ hence we were informed [that no penalization was imposed]. ‘One, however, who joined in an ‘erub may not present his share to one who did not join with them’. According to Abaye this final clause⁵⁸ was taught in order to indicate the meaning of the first clause.⁵⁹ According to Rabbah the final clause was taught on account of the first one.⁶⁰

‘Nor may two who joined in an ‘erub present their shares to the two who did not join’. What need again was there for this ruling?⁶¹ — It was required in that case only where one of them⁶² renounced his share in favour of the other.⁶² As it might have been presumed that the, latter should be permitted the unrestricted use of this courtyard.⁶³ hence we were informed that the law was not so, because the former, at the time he made his renunciation, was not himself permitted the unrestricted use of that courtyard.

‘Nor may the two who did not join in an ‘erub present their shares to the other two who also did not join’. What again was the need for this ruling?⁶¹ —⁵⁸ t⁶⁴ was necessary only for this case: Even⁶⁵ where they⁶⁶ said to him,⁶⁷ ‘acquire our shares on the condition that you transfer them’.⁶⁸

Raba inquired of R. Nahman: May all heir⁶⁹ renounce his share?’⁷⁰ [

- (1) The presentation of their shares by two tenants to one.
 - (2) Lit., ‘he might come to renounce for them’.
 - (3) Which is virtually a repetition of the previous ruling. ‘TWO ... IMPOSE RESTRICTIONS UPON ONE ANOTHER’.
 - (4) The apparently superfluous repetition of the restriction.
 - (5) The tenants who presented their shares.
 - (6) One of the two who forgot to contribute to the ‘erub.
 - (7) To the other tenant. Though in a case like this the one tenant might well be presumed to be acting as their agent to the other tenant, yet for the reason given (cf. supra p. 436, n. 11 and text), he MAY NOT ACQUIRE their shares.
 - (8) In the courtyard in favour of his neighbours.
 - (9) Abaye.
 - (10) Rabbah.
 - (11) With his two neighbours who prepared one between themselves.

- (12) In their courtyard.
- (13) And, since this one is associated in the 'erub with the other, both of them are thereby permitted the unrestricted use of the courtyard.
- (14) In a courtyard in which they lived with a third tenant.
- (15) In their courtyard.
- (16) With the two other tenants who lived in the same courtyard.
- (17) If he is the only other neighbour.
- (18) Like themselves.
- (19) With one of his two neighbours.
- (20) The other of his two neighbours (cf. prev. n.).
- (21) His presentation is of no avail on account of the share of the neighbours who did not present his.
- (22) Since TWO TENANTS MAY ... NOT ACQUIRE ANY.
- (23) With the tenant who prepared the 'erub.
- (24) How then could Rabbah maintain that the renunciation must be made in favour of every individual tenant?
- (25) In the Baraitha cited by Abaye.
- (26) A tenant with whom an 'erub was prepared.
- (27) By the time the third tenant presented his share. As at that time only two tenants occupied the courtyard one may well renounce his share in favour of the other. On the question of the heirs of the deceased who might be expected to inherit his share and thus impose the same restrictions as he himself, v. Rash and Tosaf. a.I.
- (28) Why should not the survivor be allowed to renounce his share.
- (29) The objection against Rabbah thus arises again.
- (30) Lit., 'that as it is, and that' etc.
- (31) That the first clause deals with a case where one of the two tenants who joined in the 'erub died.
- (32) Lit., 'yes'. i.e., the presentation must be made to each of the two.
- (33) Of the two.
- (34) Instead of 'two'.
- (35) As was the case in the first clause.
- (36) Since One tenant cannot join in an 'erub with himself it would be obvious that the reference was to one of two tenants.
- (37) Cf. prev. n.
- (38) The Gemara now proceeds to discuss the Baraitha cited, clause by clause.
- (39) Who joined in the 'erub with the one mentioned.
- (40) When the 'erub was prepared.
- (41) When the renunciation was made.
- (42) Which seems superfluous In view of the rule that even two tenants may renounce their shares in favour of one, and much more so one in favour of one.
- (43) Of renouncing in favour of one of the two only.
- (44) Cf. supra n. 10.
- (45) Since the latter may well renounce his share in their favour, on account of the 'erub in which they have joined. no preventive measures against the possibility that one tenant might renounce his share in favour of two, could have been required. Now, since It was already stated in the first clause that one tenant may renounce, what need was there to mention also two?
- (46) Since the first clause deals with a renunciation in favour of those who did join in an 'erub.
- (47) And no renunciation in his favour should be permissible.
- (48) V. p. 489, n. 10.
- (49) Which specifies that renunciation must be made in favour of each of the two tenants.
- (50) Sc. that it deals with a case where one of the two tenants who joined in an 'erub died before the renunciation was made. Had he not died the renunciation would have had to be made (cf. prev. n.) in favour of each of the two.
- (51) Who explained supra that 'to the two' meant 'to one of the two'.
- (52) The clause under discussion which, since no difference could be made between one who makes a renunciation and two who make a renunciation, seems superfluous in view of the first clause which allows one tenant to make a renunciation in favour of one of another two tenants.

- (53) Which, as stated supra, is forbidden.
- (54) Which is implied in the previous ones.
- (55) Enumerated previously, according to which such renunciation is permitted.
- (56) By depriving them of the right to renunciation.
- (57) Were renunciation allowed, no 'erub would ever be prepared and the younger generation would in consequence remain ignorant of the institution of 'erub'.
- (58) Which is apparently superfluous since in view of the fact that one tenant did not renounce his share the renunciation of the other alone cannot be effective.
- (59) So that it refers to a case where both tenants who had joined in the 'erub were alive.
- (60) As the first clause taught that 'a tenant who did not join in an erub may present his share to one of those who joined' the final clause taught that if the case was reversed presentation is forbidden. The first clause, however, deals with a case where one of the two tenants who joined in the 'erub was dead while the final one deals with a case where both tenants were alive'.
- (61) Which is implied in the preceding rulings.
- (62) Of those who did not join in the 'erub.
- (63) As is the case where all tenants presented their shares to one of their own number.
- (64) The superfluous repetition.
- (65) Cf. Bah.
- (66) The tenants who presented their shares.
- (67) The one of the two who did not join in their 'erub.
- (68) To the other of the two tenants who did not join in the 'erub (cf. supra p. 487, n. 10).
- (69) Whose father, from whom he inherited his estate, had forgotten to contribute to the 'erub of his courtyard and died on the Sabbath.
- (70) Which he inherited (cf. prev. n.) on that day and which his father had not renounced in favour of his neighbours.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 70b

Is it only in the case where [a tenant can], if he wishes, join in the 'erub on the previous day¹ that he can also renounce his share,² but this [heir], since he could not join in the 'erub on the previous day even if he wished,³ may not renounce his share, or is it possible that an heir steps into his father's place?⁴ — 'I', the other replied, 'hold that he may renounce his share, but those [scholars] of the school of Samuel learned that he may not do so'.

He⁵ thereupon pointed out the following objection against him:⁶ This is the general rule: Whatever is permitted during a part of the Sabbath remains permitted throughout the Sabbath and whatever is forbidden during a part of the Sabbath remains forbidden throughout the Sabbath, the only exception being the case of the man who renounced his share.⁷ 'Whatever is permitted during a part of the Sabbath remains permitted throughout the Sabbath', as is, for instance, the case of an 'erub⁸ that was prepared for the purpose of carrying objects through a certain door⁹ and that door was closed up.¹⁰ or one that was prepared for the purpose of carrying objects through a certain window⁹ and that window was closed up.¹⁰ 'This is the general rule'¹¹ includes the case of an alley whose cross-beam¹² or side-post¹² had been removed.¹³ 'Whatever is forbidden during a part of the Sabbath remains forbidden throughout the Sabbath', as, for instance, in the case of two houses, that were respectively situated on the two sides of a public domain which gentiles surrounded with a wall during the Sabbath.¹⁴ What does the expression¹⁵ 'This is the general rule',¹⁶ include? It includes the case of a gentile¹⁷ who died on the Sabbath.¹⁸ Now here it was stated: 'The only exception being the case of the man who renounced his share',¹⁹ from which²⁰ it follows, does it not, that only he²¹ may do so but not his heir?²² — Read, 'The only exception being the law of renunciation'.²³

He²⁴ raised another objection against him:²⁵ If one of the tenants of a courtyard²⁶ died, having left his share to a man in the street,²⁷ the latter²⁸ imposes restrictions,²⁹ if this occurred while it was yet day,³⁰ but if it occurred after dusk³¹ he imposes no restrictions. If, however, a man in the street³² died, having left his share to one of the tenants of the courtyard, he imposes no restrictions, if this occurred while it was yet day,³³ but if it occurred after dusk,³⁴ he imposes restrictions. Now why should he impose restrictions?³⁵ Let him renounce his share!³⁶ — The ruling that he imposes restrictions applies only so long as he did not renounce³⁷ his share.

Come and hear: If an Israelite and a proselyte lived in one dwelling³⁸ and the proselyte died³⁹ while it was yet day⁴⁰

(1) Lit., 'yesterday', i.e., the Sabbath eve.

(2) On the Sabbath.

(3) Since at that time he had not yet had any share in the courtyard.

(4) Lit., 'is his father's leg', and is consequently entitled to all his rights.

(5) Raba.

(6) R. Nahman.

(7) This is explained presently.

(8) Between two courtyards.

(9) That communicated between the two courtyards.

(10) By some obstructions that happened to fall into it during the Sabbath. As it was permissible to carry objects from one courtyard into the other through the door (or the window) during a part of the Sabbath, the permissibility remains in force even after the door (or the window) was closed up. It is, for instance, permissible to throw objects from one courtyard into the other across the obstruction or through minor communication holes (cf. infra 76a).

(11) Which implies that there must be some other cases also but they were not here specified.

(12) So MS.M. and Rashi. Cur.ed. have the plural form.

(13) During the Sabbath. Although the use of an alley that was not provided with cross-beam or side-post is else' where restricted. the removal of either in this case, since the alley was well provided with the one or the other during a part of the Sabbath, does not affect the tenants' right to its continued and unrestricted use. This ruling is not covered by the one specified, since in the latter case the walls remained intact while in the former they were absent (cf. supra 17b).

(14) As in the absence of the wall no 'erub was admissible on the Sabbath eve, it is forbidden to move objects from any of the houses into the newly enclosed area, even if one of the householders renounced his right in that area in favour of his neighbour.

(15) In the introduction to the first clause, which presumably refers also to the final clause.

(16) V. supra p. 492, n. 11.

(17) Who lived in the same courtyard with Israelites and whose right in the courtyard precluded his neighbours from joining in an 'erub unless they previously hired his share from him.

(18) Since no 'erub was allowed on the Sabbath eve and no renunciation of rights was permissible during the first part of the Sabbath while he was alive, no renunciation is permitted even after his death. This ruling also could not be inferred from the one specified, since in the latter case no erub could possibly have been provided on the Sabbath eve while in that of the former it could well have been prepared if (cf. prev. n.) the gentile's share had been hired.

(19) Sc. only in the case of such a renunciation during the Sabbath are the restrictions, which on account of the absence of 'erub were previously in force, removed for the rest of the day.

(20) Since only 'the man who renounced his share', not his heir, was mentioned.

(21) The original householder.

(22) Lit., 'he, yes; heir, not'. How then could R. Nahman maintain that an heir may also renounce his share?

(23) Either by the original owner or by his heir.

(24) Raba.

(25) R. Nahman.

(26) Who joined in 'erub with his neighbours (cf. Tosaf. a.l.).

(27) Sc. a Stranger, one who did not live in the same courtyard.

(28) Since he did not join in the 'erub.

(29) On the use of the courtyard by its tenants. As the new owner of the house he imposes restrictions though he does not himself live in it, his case being similar to that of the owner of a storehouse for straw or of a cattle-pen (cf. infra 72b).

- (30) Of the Sabbath eve, when the 'erub was not yet effective.
- (31) When the 'erub was already in force and the tenants were in consequence allowed the unrestricted use of their courtyard during a part of the Sabbath.
- (32) Sc. one who did not live in that courtyard but was the owner of a house in it.
- (33) Since he has sufficient time before the Sabbath to join in the 'erub in respect of that house.
- (34) When no 'erub may any longer be prepared.
- (35) In agreement with R. Nahman that an heir is entitled to renounce the share he inherited.
- (36) And thus enable the tenants to enjoy the unrestricted use of their courtyard.
- (37) Lit., 'what also (is meant by) he imposes restrictions that he learned? Until he would renounce'.
- (38) Or 'barn', the doors of their compartments or huts opening into one court.
- (39) Leaving no heirs.
- (40) Of the Sabbath eve.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 71a

even though¹ another Israelite² had taken possession of his estate, [the latter] imposes restrictions;³ [but if he died] after dusk⁴ no restrictions are imposed even though no other Israelite took Possession of his estate. Now is not this statement self-contradictory? You first stated: 'While it was yet day, even though another Israelite had taken possession [the latter] imposes restrictions' and,⁵ much more so⁶ if one did not take possession of it; [but is not the law just] the reverse, viz., that where no one took possession no restrictions are imposed?⁷ — R. Papa replied. Read: 'Although he had not taken possession'. But was it not stated: 'Though he had taken possession'? — It is this that was meant: Though he did not take possession while it was yet day and did so only after dusk⁸ he imposes restrictions, since⁹ he could have taken possession while it was yet day.¹⁰ 'After dusk, no restrictions are imposed even though no other Israelite took possession of his estate'. You Say, 'Even though no other Israelite took possession of his estate' and¹¹ much less so¹² if one did take possession; but is not the law just the reverse, viz., that where one did take possession restrictions are imposed?¹³ — R. Papa replied: Read: 'Though he did take possession'.¹⁴ but was it not stated: 'Even, though he did not take possession'? — It is this that was meant: Though he took possession¹⁵ after dusk he imposes no restrictions, since he could not take possession while it was yet day.¹⁶ At all events it was stated in the first clause that 'restrictions are imposed'. But why should restrictions be imposed? Let him¹⁷ renounce his share? — The ruling that he imposes restrictions¹⁸ applies only so long as he does not make his renunciation.

R. Johanan replied: The Baraitas¹⁹ represent the view of Beth Shammai who ruled that no renunciation is allowed on the Sabbath.²⁰ For we learned: WHEN MUST ONE'S SHARE BE PRESENTED? BETH SHAMMAI RULED: WHILE IT IS YET DAY AND BETH HILLEL RULED: AFTER DUSK. Said Ulla: What is Beth Hillel's reason?²¹ The case of renunciation is on a par with that of saying,²² 'You should have gone to the better kind'.²³ What, objected Abaye, is the comparison with the case of saying. 'You should have gone to the better kind', where the gentile died on the Sabbath?²⁴ Rather it is this principle on which they are here at variance: Beth Shammai are of the opinion that the renunciation of a domain²⁵ is like conferring acquisition²⁶ of a domain [to another], but conferring acquisition of a domain on the Sabbath is forbidden;²⁷ while Beth Hillel are of the opinion that renunciation is merely the giving up of one's domain, and the giving up of a domain on the Sabbath is perfectly permissible.

MISHNAH. IF A HOUSEHOLDER WAS IN PARTNERSHIP WITH HIS NEIGHBOURS,²⁸ WITH THE ONE IN WINE AND WITH THE OTHER IN WINE,²⁹ THEY NEED NOT PREPARE AN ERUB;³⁰ BUT IF HIS PARTNERSHIP WAS WITH THE ONE IN WINE AND WITH THE OTHER IN OIL,³¹ IT IS NECESSARY FOR THEM TO JOIN IN AN 'ERUB.³² R. SIMEON RULED: NEITHER IN THE ONE CASE NOR IN THE OTHER NEED THEY JOIN IN AN ERUB. GEMARA. Rab explained:³³ Only [if the wine³⁴ was kept] in one container.³⁵ Said Raba: A deduction also supports this view. For it was stated: WITH THE ONE IN WINE AND WITH THE OTHER IN OIL, IT IS NECESSARY FOR THEM TO JOIN IN AN 'ERUB; now if you grant that the first clause deals with one container and the final clause with two containers both rulings are quite correct,³⁶ but if you contend that the first clause deals with two containers and the final clause deals with two containers, why. [it might be objected,] should a difference be made between wine and wine and between wine and oil?³⁷ — Wine and wine,³⁸ Abaye retorted, can properly be mixed,³⁹ but wine and oil cannot properly be mixed.⁴⁰

R. SIMEON RULED: NEITHER IN THE ONE CASE NOR IN THE OTHER NEED THEY JOIN IN AN 'ERUB. Even if the partnership was with the one in wine and with the other in oil?⁴¹ — Rabbah replied: Here we are dealing with a courtyard that was situated between two alleys,⁴² R. Simeon following his own View.⁴³ For we learned: R. Simeon remarked: To what may this case be compared? To three courtyards that open one into the other and also into a public domain, where, if the two outer ones made an 'erub with the middle one, it is permitted to have access to them and they are permitted access to it, but the two other ones are forbidden access to one another.⁴⁴ Said Abaye to him:⁴⁵ Are the two cases at all alike, seeing that there⁴⁶ it was stated: 'The two outer ones are forbidden,' while here It was stated that THEY NEED NOT JOIN IN AN 'ERUB at all?⁴⁷ — The ruling that⁴⁸ THEY NEED NOT JOIN IN AN 'ERUB applies only to one between the neighbours and the householder, but the neighbours among themselves must certainly join in an 'erub.

- (1) This will be discussed presently.
 - (2) The estate of a proselyte, who has no legal heirs, may be appropriated by the first person who takes possession of it.
 - (3) As the new owner did not join in the 'erub he imposes restrictions on the use of the court by the surviving Israelite.
 - (4) V. supra n. 2.
 - (5) Since the clause is introduced by 'even though'.
 - (6) Lit., 'and it is not required (to state)'.
 - (7) There being no one to impose them.
 - (8) The purport of the expression being, 'even though . . . had taken possession after dusk, so that during a part of the Sabbath the place was free from restrictions.
 - (9) The proselyte having died before dusk.
 - (10) As the proselyte's share was in a state of suspended ownership even when the Sabbath had set in the entire place could not be regarded as a permitted domain even during a part of the Sabbath.
 - (11) Since the clause is introduced by 'even though'.
 - (12) Lit., 'and it is not required (to state)'.
 - (13) On account of that persons share.
 - (14) He nevertheless imposes no restrictions, since during a part of the Sabbath, prior to his acquisition of the estate, the place was free from all restrictions.
 - (15) 'Even though' qualifying this implied clause.
 - (16) When the proselyte was still alive (cf. supra n. 7).
 - (17) The Israelite taking legal possession of the estate of the deceased proselyte being in a position of an heir.
 - (18) Lit., 'what (is the meaning of he) imposes restrictions, that has been taught'.
 - (19) According to which an heir imposes restrictions and from which objection was raised against R. Nahman.
 - (20) Hence no means are available to an heir for the removal of the restrictions that begin with the incidence of the Sabbath. R. Nahman, however, may disagree with their view, following that of Beth Hillel.
 - (21) For allowing renunciation on the Sabbath.
 - (22) Lit., 'it is made as (if he) says' to a person whom he found in his field setting aside terumah from a certain kind of produce on his behalf without his previous consent.
 - (23) B.M. 22a. The terumah is valid if there was a better kind in the field; because the owner, by his present consent, is assumed retrospectively to have appointed the person as his agent. Similarly in the case of renunciation: The tenant's present act of renunciation is taken as an indication of his retrospective desire to join with the other tenants in their 'erub and that his failing to do so was due to mere forgetfulness.
 - (24) In the latter case, surely, retrospective intention could not possibly be assumed.

- (25) I.e., one's share in a court.
- (26) [Reading מִקְנֵי instead of מִיְקְנֵי of cur. edd. v. Tosaf. s.v. מִקְנֵי].
- (27) Because it is on a par with a commercial transaction. Hence their prohibition of renunciation on the Sabbath.
- (28) In an alley.
- (29) Sc. they were all joint holders in one edible commodity that (as will be explained infra) was kept in one container.
- (30) Their partnership in the commodity serves also the purpose of 'erub.
- (31) Sc. two different commodities that must be kept in separate containers.
- (32) Since only a commodity in joint ownership that is kept in one container may be regarded as 'erub.
- (33) The first clause of our Mishnah.
- (34) Which they possessed in common.
- (35) NEED THEY NOT PREPARE AN 'ERUB (cf. supra p. 496, n. 12).
- (36) As the wine spoken of in the first clause was kept in one container no other 'erub was consequently required, while in the case of the wine and the oil spoken of in the final clause, since they were kept in two containers, a special 'erub was rightly required.
- (37) Sc. why should an 'erub be necessary in the latter case if it is not required in the former?
- (38) Though kept in two containers.
- (39) Hence it may serve as an 'erub even if it has not yet been mixed.
- (40) As they must always be kept apart they cannot be regarded as 'erub if they have not been expressly set aside for that purpose. Hence, contrary to the submission of Raba, the first clause also may be dealing with two containers.
- (41) But how could such a ruling be justified in view of the fact that the two commodities cannot properly be mixed?
- (42) The tenants of which had a stock of wine in common with the residents of the one alley and a stock of oil in common with those of the other, so that the wine and the oil do not serve the purpose of one 'erub but that of two 'erubs, one for each alley.
- (43) That the residents of one courtyard may join in two 'erubs with the residents of two alleys respectively even though the latter, not having been joined to each other by an 'erub, are forbidden access from one to the other.
- (44) Supra 45b, q.v. notes. Similarly (cf. prev. n.) in the case of the wine and oil, though the two alleys (cf. supra p. 497, n. 10) were not joined to one another, and access between them is forbidden, the courtyard may be joined to both of them and access between it and the alleys is permitted.
- (45) Rabbah.
- (46) In the Mishnah cited.
- (47) Implying full permissibility of access.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 71b

R. Joseph.¹ however, replied:² R. Simeon and the Rabbis differ on the same principle as that on which R. Johanan b. Nuri and the Rabbis differ.³ For we learned: If some oil⁴ floated on wine⁴ and a tebul yom⁵ touched the oil, he⁶ causes the oil only to be unfit;⁷ but R. Johanan b. Nuri ruled: They both form a connection with each other.⁸ The Rabbis⁹ may hold the same view as the Rabbis¹⁰ while R. Simeon⁹ may hold the same view as R. Johanan b. Nuri.¹¹

It was taught: R. Eleazar¹² b. Taddai ruled: In either case¹³ it is necessary for them to join in an erub. Even if the partnership was with the one in wine and with the other also in wine?¹⁴ Rabbah explained: Where this [householder] comes with his lugin¹⁵ [of wine] and pours [it into the common cask] and the other comes with his lugin and pours it in, no one disputes the ruling that¹⁶ this alone is a valid 'erub.¹⁷ They only differ where the householders bought a cask of wine in partnership.¹⁸ R. Eleazar b. Taddai is of the opinion that there is no such rule as bererah¹⁹ while the Rabbis maintain that the rule of bererah holds good.²⁰

R. Joseph explained: R. Eleazar b. Taddai and the Rabbis differ on the question whether it is permissible to rely upon shittuf¹⁵ where an 'erub is required.²¹ the one Master²² holding that It is not permissible to rely on it²³ while the Masters²⁴ maintain that it is permissible to rely on it.²⁵

Said R. Joseph: Whence do I derive this?²⁶ [From the following:] Since Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Meir'²⁷ and R. Berona stated in the name of Rab, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Taddai'.²⁸ Now what is the reason?²⁹ Obviously³⁰ because both rulings are based on the same principle.²⁷ Said Abaye to him: If the principle is the same what need was there to lay down the halachah, twice?³¹ — It is of this that we are informed: That in matters of³² 'erub we [sometimes] adopt³³ two restrictive rulings.³⁴

What is the ruling of R. Meir and what is that of the Rabbis?³⁵ [Those about which] it was taught: An 'erub of courtyards must be prepared with bread; but wine, even if preferred, may not be Used for 'erub,³⁶ Shittuf of an alley may be done even³⁷ with wine;³⁸ but bread, if preferred, may [obviously]³⁹ be used for the shittuf. An 'erub must be prepared for courtyards⁴⁰ even where shittuf is arranged for the alleys⁴¹ in order that the law of 'erub may not be forgotten by the children who might believe that their fathers⁴² had been preparing no 'erub; so R. Meir. The Sages, however, ruled: Either 'erub or shittuf [is enough]. R. Nehumi⁴³ and Rabbah⁴⁴ differ on the interpretation of this statement. One maintains that in the case of bread⁴⁵ no one disputes the ruling that one⁴⁶ is enough⁴⁷ and that they only differ in the case of wine,⁴⁸

- (1) Maintaining, contrary to the view of Rabbah, that R. Simeon in our Mishnah was referring to courtyards in the same alley.
 - (2) To the objection raised supra as to how could R. Simeon regard two commodities like wine and oil as one valid 'erub.
 - (3) It. Simeon, as will be shown presently, holding the same view as the former.
 - (4) Of terumah.
 - (5) V. Glos.
 - (6) On account of his levitical uncleanness.
 - (7) For consumption.
 - (8) T.Y. II, 5; the touching of the one is, therefore, regarded as the touching of both.
 - (9) Of our Mishnah.
 - (10) In the Mishnah cited, who regard wine and oil as separate and distinct commodities.
 - (11) Who holds that oil and wine can be treated as the component parts of one liquid.
 - (12) So MS.M.
 - (13) This is discussed anon.
 - (14) But why should an 'erub be necessary in such a case?
 - (15) V. Glos.
 - (16) Even where the wine was not originally mixed for the purpose of 'erub.
 - (17) Since every householder has contributed Its individual share to the common stock.
 - (18) So that the individual contributions were never distinguishable from one another.
 - (19) V. Glos. In consequence none of the householders has any distinguishable share in the wine.
 - (20) So that every householder may be regarded as having contributed a definite and distinguishable share to the common contents of the cask.
 - (21) I.e., whether the amalgamation of the courtyards of an alley by shittuf, for the purpose of facilitating movement in it, exempts the tenants of the courtyards from 'erub for the purpose of carrying objects from one courtyard into the other.
 - (22) R. Eleazar b. Taddai.
 - (23) Hence his ruling that 'in either case' an 'erub must be prepared.
 - (24) The Rabbis.
 - (25) No 'erub, therefore, is required. Since the residents are united by shittuf in their alley they are also deemed to be united in their courtyards; and they are consequently permitted to convey objects from one courtyard into another through doors that open from one into the other.
 - (26) That the point at issue between R. Eleazar b. Taddai and the Rabbis is the Question whether shittuf can also serve the purpose of 'erub.
 - (27) That it is not permissible to rely upon shittuf where an 'erub is required.

- (28) That 'in either case' an erub must be prepared.
- (29) That Rab pronounced the halachah to be in agreement with both R. Meir and R. Eleazar b. Taddai.
- (30) Lit., 'not'?
- (31) It was admittedly necessary for Rab to state that the halachah is in agreement with R. Meir, since otherwise the principle underlying R. Eleazar b. Taddai's ruling would have been unascertainable, and erroneous conclusions affecting the laws of 'erub might have been arrived at (cf. Rashi); but why, it is asked, was it also necessary for Rab to state that the halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Taddai?
- (32) As in this particular case (cf. Tosaf.).
- (33) This is the reading of R. Han. Cur. edd. 'we do not adopt' (cf. Rashi); v. Tosaf. s.v. נִשְׁתָּי.
- (34) Laid down by the same authority, though one of them is opposed by other authorities. In this case the halachah is in agreement with R. Meir that where an 'erub is required, shittuf may not be relied upon irrespective of whether it was done with (a) wine concerning which the Rabbis agree with him or (b) bread about which the Rabbis differ.
- (35) To which reference has just been made.
- (36) An 'erub essentially serves the purpose of constituting a dwelling or habitation (cf. supra 49a) and bread alone of all commodities is regarded as important enough to constitute one.
- (37) Cf. Rashi. According to Tosaf. the rendering might be, 'should preferably be done'.
- (38) Since the purpose of shittuf is not the association of the house but that of the courtyards which are not regarded as 'dwellings' (cf. supra n. 5).
- (39) Cf. Rashi, or (according to Tosaf.) 'also'.
- (40) Either for each one separately, in the interests of its own tenants, or, if doors open from one courtyard into another, for several courtyards together, to enable their tenants to have access to each other through their courtyard doors.
- (41) To enable the tenants to carry objects from one courtyard into another through the alley. In the absence of shittuf this is forbidden, though the right of carrying through the communicating doors remains unaffected. In the case of shittuf it is permitted to carry objects between the courtyards either through the alley or through their communicating doors even where each courtyard had prepared a separate 'erub for its own tenants only.
- (42) Lit., 'who would say: Our fathers'.
- (43) Var. lec. 'Rehumi' (MS.M. and Bah).
- (44) Var. lec. 'Rabbah b. Joseph' (Bah).
- (45) Since it is suitable for both 'erub and shittuf.
- (46) Either shittuf or 'erub.
- (47) Since one may also serve the purpose of the other.
- (48) Where it was used for "shittuf. According to R. Meir this alone is not enough since wine is inadmissible for 'erub; while according to the Rabbis once wine has become effective in shittuf it is ipso facto effective for 'erub, since shittuf may be relied upon where an 'erub is required.

while the other maintains that in the case of wine¹ no one disputes the ruling that the two² are necessary³ and that they only differ in the case of bread.⁴

An objection was raised: 'The Sages, however, ruled: Either 'erub or shittuf is enough'. Does not this mean that it is permissible to prepare an 'erub in a courtyard with bread or arrange shittuf in an alley with wine?⁵ — R. Giddal citing Rab replied: It is this that was meant: Either an 'erub for the courtyards⁶ is prepared with bread, and unrestricted movement is permitted in both the alley and the courtyards;⁷ or shittuf for the alley is made with bread, and unrestricted movement is again permitted in both.⁷

Rab Judah citing Rab stated: The halachah⁸ is in agreement with R. Meir; R. Huna, however, stated: The customary practice is in agreement with R. Meir, while R. Johanan stated: The people are in the habit of acting in agreement with R. Meir.

MISHNAH. IF FIVE COMPANIES SPENT THE SABBATH IN ONE HAL⁹ EACH COMPANY, BETH SHAMMAI RULED, MUST¹⁰ CONTRIBUTE SEPARATELY TO THE ERUB;¹¹ BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: ALL OF THEM¹² CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB ONLY ONE SHARE.¹³ THEY¹⁴ AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHERE SOME OF THEM OCCUPY ROOMS¹⁵ OR UPPER CHAMBERS¹⁶ A SEPARATE CONTRIBUTION TO THE 'ERUB MUST BE MADE FOR EACH COMPANY.

GEMARA. R. Nahman stated: The dispute¹⁷ relates only to partitions of stakes¹⁸ but where the partitions¹⁹ were ten handbreadths high all²⁰ agree that a separate contribution to the 'erub must be made for each company. Others read: R. Nahman stated: The dispute¹⁷ relates also to partitions of stakes.²¹

R. Hiyya and R. Simeon son of Rabbi differ on the interpretation of our Mishnah.²² One holds that the dispute²³ relates only to partitions that reach to the ceiling, but where they do not reach it²⁴ all²⁵ agree that only one contribution to the 'erub need be made for all of them; while the other holds that the dispute²³ relates Only to partitions that do not reach the ceiling but where they do reach it all²⁰ agree that a separate contribution to the 'erub is necessary for each company.

- (1) Since it is unsuitable for shittuf purposes.
- (2) Both Shittuf and 'erub.
- (3) Even the Rabbis agree that wine cannot become effective for 'erub even by way of shittuf for which alone it may be used.
- (4) That was used either for 'erub or for shittuf, R. Meir maintaining that even in this case one cannot do service for the other.
- (5) And either presumably suffices for both alley and courtyards. How then is this to be reconciled with the second view that 'in the case of wine no one disputes the ruling that the two are necessary'?
- (6) So MS. M. Cur. edd. have the sing. 'courtyard'.
- (7) Lit., 'here and here'.
- (8) V. supra p. 438, nn. 11-13.
- (9) Traklin, triclinium, 'dining-room'. The reference is to a large room that was subdivided by partitions into separate compartments each being occupied by one of the companies and having a separate door to the courtyard into which doors of other houses also open.
- (10) Since each is deemed to occupy a separate domain.
- (11) That is prepared either for all the tenants of the courtyard or for the occupants of the hall alone.
- (12) Being regarded as living in one and the same domain (cf. Gemara infra).
- (13) If they join the tenants of the courtyard. Among themselves (cf. prev. n.) they need no 'erub at all.
- (14) Beth Hillel.
- (15) On the ground floor.
- (16) All of which are completely separated from one another and from the hall, and have direct access to the courtyard.
- (17) In our Mishnah.
- (18) Mesifas, a low partition of stakes or pegs. Only in such a case do Beth Hillel regard the entire hall as One domain.
- (19) Separating the quarters of one company from another.
- (20) Even Beth Hillel.
- (21) I.e., Beth Shammai maintain their view not only where the partitions were ten handbreadths high but even where they were low.
- (22) Lit., 'on it'.
- (23) Between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
- (24) Although they are ten handbreadths high.
- (25) Even Beth Shammai.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 72b

An objection was raised: R. Judah ha-Sabba¹ stated, Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel do not dispute the ruling that where partitions² reach the ceiling a separate contribution to the erub is required on the part of each company; they only differ³ where the partitions do not reach the ceiling in which case Beth Shammai maintain that a separate contribution to the 'erub must be made for each company, while Beth Hillel maintain that one contribution to the 'erub suffices for all of them. Now, against him who stated that the dispute⁴ related only to partitions that reached the ceiling this⁵ presents an objection; in favour of him who stated that their dispute⁴ related only to partitions that did not reach the ceiling this⁶ provides support; while against that version according to which R. Nahman stated 'the dispute relates only to partitions of stakes'⁷ this⁸ presents an objection. Does this,⁶ however, present an objection also against that version according to which R. Nahman stated: 'The dispute relates also to partitions of stakes'⁹ — R. Nahman can answer you: They differ in the case of partitions¹⁰ and this applies also to partitions of stakes, and the only reason why their difference of view was expressed in the case of partitions is in order to inform you to what extent Beth Hillel venture to apply their principle.¹¹ But why did they not express their difference of view in the case of partitions of stakes in order to inform you of the extent to which Beth Shammai, venture to apply their principle?¹² — Information on the extent of a permitted course¹³ is preferable.¹⁴

R. Nahman citing Rab stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah ha-Sabbar.¹⁵ Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: All inference from the wording of our Mishnah also leads to the same conclusion. For it was stated: THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHERE SOME OF THEM OCCUPY ROOMS OR UPPER CHAMBERS A SEPARATE CONTRIBUTION TO THE FRUIT MUST BE MADE FOR EACH COMPANY; now what was meant by ROOMS and what by UPPER CHAMBERS? If it be suggested that by the term ROOMS proper¹⁶ rooms,¹⁷ and by the term 'UPPER CHAMBERS' proper¹⁶ upper chambers¹⁷ were meant, is not the ruling¹⁸ obvious?¹⁹ The terms must consequently mean²⁰ compartments like rooms or upper chambers, namely,²¹ compartments the partitions of which reach the Ceiling. This is conclusive.

A Tanna taught: This²² applies only where their 'erub is carried into a place other [than the hall].²³ but if their 'erub is remaining²⁴ with them²⁵ all²⁶ agree that one contribution to the 'erub suffices for all of them.²⁷ Whose view is followed in what was taught:²⁸ If five residents who collected their 'erub desired to transfer it to another place.²⁹ one 'erub suffices for all of them?³⁰ — Whose view? That of Beth Hillel.³¹

Others read: This³² applies only where the 'erub remained³³ with them,³⁴ but if they carried their 'erub to a place other [than their hall]³⁵ all³⁶ agree that a separate contribution to the 'erub is required for each company.³⁷ Whose view is followed in which was taught: If five residents who collected their contributions to an 'erub desired to transfer it³⁸ to another place³⁹ one 'erub suffices for all of them?⁴⁰ — Whose view? No one's.⁴¹

MISHNAH. BROTHERS⁴² WHO WERE EATING AT THEIR FATHER'S TABLE BUT SLEPT IN THEIR OWN HOUSE⁴³ MUST EACH CONTRIBUTE A SHARE TO THE 'ERUB.⁴⁴ HENCE, IF ANY ONE OF THEM FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB HE MUST⁴⁵ RENOUNCE HIS RIGHT TO HIS SHARE IN THE COURTYARD. WHEN DOES THIS APPLY?⁴⁶ WHEN THEY CARRY THEIR 'ERUB INTO SOME OTHER PLACE⁴⁷ BUT IF THEIR 'ERUB IS DEPOSITED⁴⁸ WITH THEM⁴⁹ OR IF THERE ARE NO OTHER TENANTS WITH THEM IN THE COURTYARD THEY NEED NOT PREPARE ANY 'ERUB.

GEMARA. Does this⁵⁰ then imply that the night's lodgingplace⁵¹ is the cause of the obligation of 'erub?⁵² — Rab Judah citing flab replied: This was learnt only in respect of such as receive a maintenance allowance.⁵³

Our Rabbis taught: A man who has in his neighbour's courtyard a gate-house, an exedra⁵⁴ or a balcony imposes no restrictions upon him.⁵⁵ [One, however, who has in it] a straw-magazine, a cattle-pen, a room for wood or a storehouse does impose restrictions upon him. R. Judah ruled: Only a dwelling-house imposes restrictions. It once happened, R. Judah related, that Ben Nappaha⁵⁶ had five courtyards at Usha, and when the matter was submitted to the Sages they ruled: Only a dwelling-house imposes restrictions. 'A dwelling-house'! Is such a ruling imaginable? Rather say: A dwelling-place. What is meant by a 'dwelling-place'? — Rab explained:

- (1) 'The reasoner' or 'interpreter'. R. Han. and Alfasi read: 'ha-Sabbak', 'the net-weaver'. Others 'ha-Saddar', 'who arranges (Mishnahs) in order'.
 - (2) Which subdivide a large hall into small compartments.
 - (3) Lit., 'concerning what are they divided?'
 - (4) Between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
 - (5) R. Judah's statement that they 'do not dispute . . . where partitions reach the ceiling'.
 - (6) The statement of R. Judah that 'they only differ where the partitions do not reach the ceiling'.
 - (7) But that 'where the partitions were ten handbreadths high' Beth Hillel agree that a 'separate contribution. . . must be made'.
 - (8) R. Judah's assertion (cf. supra n. 5) according to which Beth Hillel require no separate contributions where the partitions, though ten handbreadths high, do not reach the ceiling.
 - (9) I.e., that Beth Shammai require separate contributions even where the partitions were so frail and low. Does R. Judah, it is asked (cf. supra n. 5), imply that Beth Shammai maintain this view, even where the partitions are so low, in agreement with this view of R. Nahman, or, do they limit their view to partitions that are of some considerable height though not as high as to reach the ceiling?
 - (10) Even where they do not reach the ceiling.
 - (11) I.e., they require no separate contributions from each company even where the partitions are of some considerable height.
 - (12) That even in the case of partitions of stakes Beth Shammai require each company to make a separate contribution.
 - (13) Lit., 'the power of permissibility', since it indicates conviction and certainty of opinion.
 - (14) The prohibition of a certain course may be an easy way out of a legal difficulty and the result of mere lack of knowledge or conviction as to whether it could or could not be permitted.
 - (15) That 'where partitions reach the ceiling' even Beth Hillel agree that 'a separate contribution is required'.
 - (16) Or 'actual'.
 - (17) I.e., such as have never formed parts of the large hall.
 - (18) That for each room a separate contribution must be made.
 - (19) What need then was there to state the obvious?
 - (20) Lit., 'but, not?'
 - (21) Lit., 'and what are they?'
 - (22) That Beth Shammai require each company to make a separate contribution to the 'erub (v. our Mishnah).
 - (23) Sc. if it is deposited in one of the other houses of the courtyard.
 - (24) Lit., 'was coming'.
 - (25) I.e., if the other tenants brought their contributions to the hall where the 'erub is deposited.
 - (26) Even Beth Shammai.
 - (27) The point at issue between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel being not that of the nature of the partitions but the question whether (a) one of a group who joined in an 'erub may take that 'erub with him to another group on behalf of all his associates or whether (b) each individual of the group must separately contribute his share. The hall in question, both according to Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, combines the separate sections of each company into one domain and no 'erub among themselves alone is necessary irrespective of whether the partitions were high or low, but Beth Shammai maintain that one of them cannot represent them all in the 'erub of the courtyard and each must consequently contribute his individual share, while Beth Hillel hold that one of them may well represent all the group and, therefore, only one contrition on behalf of all of them is sufficient.
 - (28) Lit., 'like whom goes that which was taught'.
 - (29) I.e., to another courtyard, desiring to join in 'erub with the residents of that courtyard.
 - (30) I.e., one of the group may take their 'erub (or the prescribed quantity of bread of his own on behalf of all the group) to the place into which they desired their 'erub to be transferred. Cf. supra 49b.

(31) Cf. supra p. 504, n. 16.

(32) That Beth Hillel hold that one contribution suffices for all the companies (v. our Mishnah).

(33) Lit., 'was coming'.

(34) V. supra p. 504, n. 14.

(35) Sc. if it is deposited in one of the other houses of the courtyard.

(36) Even Beth Hillel.

(37) The point at issue being whether the several companies in the one hall, who are in the same position as that of a number of tenants who joined in one 'erub, must contribute individually to the 'erub even where it is deposited in their hall, Beth Shammai maintaining that they must while Beth Hillel hold that they need not.

(38) Lit., 'when they carry their 'erub'.

(39) V. supra n. 2.

(40) V. supra n. 3.

(41) Neither that of Beth Shammai nor that of Beth Hillel, since both agree that separate contributions are in this case required.

(42) The insertion in some ed., 'who were partners' is rejected by Rashi.

(43) Within the same courtyard as that of their father's house.

(44) If they wish to join with the other tenants in the 'erub of that courtyard.

(45) If the movement of objects in the courtyard is to be unrestricted.

(46) Sc. that they must each contribute to the 'erub.

(47) Sc. to a house of one of the other tenants. The reason is given in the Gemara.

(48) Lit., 'was coming

(49) In their father's house.

(50) The ruling in our Mishnah that where the brothers SLEPT IN THEIR OWN HOUSES they are under the obligation to make separate contributions to the 'erub, from which it is evident that if they slept in their father's house it is only he who must make a contribution to the 'erub (if it is deposited in some other house) while they are exempt.

(51) And not the place where they have their meals.

(52) Apparently it does; how then could Rab maintain infra that one's obligation to a separate contribution to an 'erub is dependent on one's dining-place?

(53) From their father. They did not actually have their meals at his house.

(54) V. Glos.

(55) In respect of the movement of objects in his courtyard on the Sabbath.

(56) Or 'a locksmith'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 73a

One's dining-place.¹ and Samuel explained: One's night's lodging place. An objection was raised: Shepherds, summer fruit attendants,² station house-keepers and fruit watchmen have³ the same status as the townspeople⁴ if they are in the habit of taking their night's rest in the town,⁵ but if they are in the habit of spending the night in the fields⁶ they are only entitled to walk a distance of two thousand cubits in all directions?⁷ — In that case⁸ we are witnesses that they would have been more pleased if bread had been brought to them there.⁹

Said R. Joseph, 'I have never heard this tradition'.¹⁰ 'You yourself', Abaye reminded him, 'have told it to us, and you said it in connection with the following: BROTHERS WHO WERE EATING AT THEIR FATHER'S TABLE BUT SLEPT IN THEIR OWN HOUSES MUST EACH CONTRIBUTE A SHARE TO THE 'ERUB, concerning which we asked you: Does this then imply that the night's lodging-place is the cause of the obligation of 'erub? And you, in reply to this question, told us: Rab Judah citing Rab replied: This was learnt only in respect of such as receive a maintenance allowance'.¹¹

Our Rabbis taught: Where a man has five wives who are in receipt of a maintenance allowance from their husband¹² or five slaves who are in receipt of a maintenance allowance from their Master,¹² R. Judah b. Bathyra permits [unrestricted movement]¹³ in the case of the wives¹⁴ but forbids it in the case of the slaves,¹⁵ while R. Judah b. Baba permits this in the case of slaves but forbids it in the case of the wives. Said Rab, what is R. Judah b. Baba's reason? The fact that it is written in Scripture: But Daniel was in the gate of the king.¹⁶

It is obvious that a son in relation to his father is subject to the ruling here enunciated.¹⁷ [The Status of] a wife in relation to her husband and a slave in relation to his master is a point at issue between R. Judah b. Bathyra and R. Judah b. Baba.¹⁸ What, however, [is the status of] a student in relation to his master?¹⁹ — Come and hear what Rab when at the school of R. Hiyya²⁰ stated: 'We need not prepare an 'erub since we virtually dine²¹ at R. Hiyya's table'; and R. Hiyya, when he was at the school of Rabbi, stated: 'We need not prepare an 'erub since we virtually dine²¹ at Rabbi's table.'

Abaye enquired of Rabbah: If five residents²² collected their contributions to their 'erub²³ and desired to transfer it²⁴ to another place,²⁵ does one 'erub contribution suffice for all of them²⁶ or is it necessary for each one to make a separate contribution to the 'erub?²⁷ — He replied: One 'erub contribution suffices for all of them. But, surely, BROTHERS²⁸ are like residents who collected their contributions²⁹ and yet was it not stated: MUST EACH CONTRIBUTE A SHARE TO THE 'ERUB?³⁰ — Here³¹ we are dealing with a case where other tenants, for instance, lived with them,³² so that [it may be said:] Since these³³ impose restrictions³⁴ those³⁵ also impose them.³⁶ This may also be supported by a process of reasoning. For it was stated: WHEN DOES THIS APPLY? WHEN THEY CARRY THEIR 'ERUB INTO SOME OTHER PLACE BUT IF THEIR 'ERUB IS DEPOSITED WITH THEM OR IF THERE ARE NO OTHER TENANTS WITH THEM IN THE COURTYARD³⁷ THEY NEED NOT PREPARE ANY 'ERUB. This is conclusive.

R. Hiyya b. Abin enquired of R. Shesheth: in the case of students who have their meals³⁸ in the country, but come to spend their nights at the schoolhouse³⁹ do we measure their Sabbath limit from the Schoolhouse⁴⁰ or from their country quarters?⁴¹ He replied: We measure it from the schoolhouse.⁴⁰ Behold, [the first objected], the case of the man who deposits his 'erub within two thousand cubits⁴² and comes to take his night's rest at his house whose Sabbath limit is measured from his 'erub!⁴³ — In that case,⁴⁴ [the other replied,] we are witnesses, and in this case⁴⁵ also we are witnesses. In that case⁴⁴ we are witnesses' that if he could live there⁴⁶ he⁴⁷ would have preferred it,⁴⁸ and 'in this case⁴⁵ also we are witnesses that if their meals⁴⁹ had been brought to them at the schoolhouse they would have much preferred it.⁵⁰

Rami b. Hama enquired of R. Hisda: Are a father and his son or a master and his disciple regarded⁵¹ as many⁵² or as one individual?⁵³ Do they⁵⁴ require an 'erub or not? Can the use of their alley⁵⁵ be permitted by means of a side-post or cross-beam⁵⁶ or not?⁵⁷ — He replied: You have learnt it: A father and his son or a master and his disciple, if no other tenants live with them,⁵⁸ are regarded as one individual,⁵⁹ they require no 'erub, and the use of their alley⁵⁵ may be rendered permissible by means of a side-post or cross-beam.⁵⁶

MISHNAH. IF FIVE COURTYARDS OPENED INTO EACH OTHER AND INTO AN ALLEY,⁶⁰ AND AN 'ERUB WAS PREPARED FOR THE COURTYARDS BUT NO SHITTUF WAS MADE FOR THE ALLEY, THE TENANTS ARE PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE COURTYARDS BUT FORBIDDEN THAT OF THE ALLEY.⁶¹

(1) Lit., 'place of bread'.

(2) Or 'fruit pickers', 'watchmen for drying figs'.

(3) Though they were in the field when the Sabbath began.

(4) In whose vicinity they carry on their occupations. They, like the people of the town, are allowed to move in any part of the town and along distances of two thousand cubits in any of its directions.

(5) Where they have their Sabbath meal.

(6) Though they dine in town.

(7) From their lodging-places. How then could Rab maintain that the meaning of 'dwelling-place' is 'one's dining-place'?

(8) Spoken of in the Baraita just cited.

(9) Into the field where they are spending the night. It is for this reason only that their dining-place in the town is disregarded.

(10) Of Rab. R. Joseph having lost his memory after a serious illness was often making this remark.

(11) Cf. supra p. 506, nn. 6ff.

(12) And each one lives in a separate house in his courtyard.

(13) Even if no 'erub had been prepared.

(14) Since each one is deemed to be intimately associated with her husband's house.

(15) Who are not so intimately connected with their master.

(16) Dan. II, 49; implying that wherever Daniel (the king's servant) was he was regarded as being 'in the gate of the king' i.e., at the king's house; and the same applies to slaves in relation to their master,

(17) Lit., 'as it has been said', cf. our Mishnah.

(18) As has just been stated.

(19) Where the former is in receipt of a maintenance grant from the latter and lives with him in the same courtyard but in a separate house.

(20) From whom he was receiving a maintenance grant.

(21) Lit., 'rely'. 'are supported'.

(22) Of the same courtyard.

(23) For the courtyard in which they lived.

(24) Lit., 'when they carry their 'erub'.

(25) I.e., to another courtyard with whose residents they wish to join in 'erub.

(26) Sc. may one of them carry that 'erub (to which they had all contributed) or the prescribed quantity of food of his own (on behalf of all of them) to the courtyard with the tenants of which they desire to join?

(27) Abaye must never have heard of the Baraita, supra 72b which deals with this very question; or, if he was acquainted with it, was desirous of ascertaining whether it represented the halachah, since, as was stated supra, it either agreed with none or only with Beth Hillel.

(28) Who 'NEED NOT PREPARE ANY 'ERUB' where 'THERE ARE NO OTHER TENANTS WITH THEM IN THE COURTYARD'.

(29) Who also need not prepare any other 'erub.

(30) If they desired to join in 'erub with other tenants. How then could Rabbah maintain that one 'erub contribution, which only places the tenants in the same position as the brothers, is sufficient?

(31) The ruling in our Mishnah concerning the brothers.

(32) In the same courtyard.

(33) The tenants in the same courtyard.

(34) Unless an 'erub is prepared.

(35) In the other courtyard with whom they now desire to join.

(36) Unless each brother makes an independent contribution to the new 'erub. In the case, however, of two courtyards for each of which an independent 'erub had been prepared by its tenants, or in that of two courtyards in one of which live a father and sons (who require no 'erub) and in the other an 'erub had been prepared by its tenants, so that the residents of each courtyard independently are permitted unrestricted movement within it, the principle of 'since these impose . . . those also impose' is obviously inapplicable (since no one imposes restrictions upon the others), and consequently one 'erub taken by one of the tenants to the other courtyard suffices for all the tenants of his own courtyard.

(37) To impose restrictions upon them.

(38) Lit., 'who eat bread'.

(39) Which is in town, the distance between which and their dining quarters is not greater than two thousand cubits.

(40) Because it is the place where their nights are spent, in agreement with the view of Samuel supra.

- (41) Where they have their meals, in agreement with Rab.
- (42) From his town.
- (43) And not from the place where his night is spent. How then could it be maintained that the students' Sabbath limit is measured from their schoolhouse because they spend their nights there?
- (44) That of the man who deposits his 'erub outside the town and spends the night within it.
- (45) Of the students under discussion.
- (46) Where his 'erub is deposited.
- (47) Since it is his intention to go on the Sabbath in that direction of the town.
- (48) In order that he might be nearer to his goal when he starts on his walk on the Sabbath day.
- (49) Lit., 'bread'.
- (50) Hence the ruling that their Sabbath limit is measured from the schoolhouse.
- (51) In the case of two courtyards one within the other where the tenants of the inner one have a right of way through the outer one.
- (52) So that if they resided in the inner one they impose restrictions on the use of the outer one even though the latter had prepared an 'erub among themselves (cf. infra 75a).
- (53) Who (cf. prev. n.) imposes no restrictions on the use of the outer courtyard.
- (54) If they are the only tenants.
- (55) Where one of them resided in one courtyard and the other in another courtyard in the same alley.
- (56) As if two courtyards opened out into it. No side-post or cross-bram is effective in an alley unless 'houses and courtyards' open into it.
- (57) The courtyards of a father and his son or a master and disciple being regarded as a single courtyard (cf. "prev. n. second clause).
- (58) In the same courtyard.
- (59) V. supra n. 10.
- (60) I.e., each had two doors one of which led to the other courtyards and the other opened directly into the alley.
- (61) Because an 'erub cannot serve the purposes of both 'erub and shittuf.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 73b

IF, HOWEVER, SHITTUF WAS MADE FOR THE ALLEY, THEY ARE PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF BOTH.¹ IF AN 'ERUB WAS PREPARED FOR THE COURTYARDS AND SHITTUF WAS MADE FOR THE ALLEY, THOUGH ONE OF THE TENANTS OF A COURTYARD FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB,² THEY ARE NEVERTHELESS PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF BOTH.³ IF, HOWEVER, ONE OF THE RESIDENTS OF THE ALLEY FORGOT⁴ TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE SHITTUF, THEY ARE PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE COURTYARDS BUT FORBIDDEN THAT OF THE ALLEY, SINCE AN ALLEY TO ITS COURTYARDS⁵ IS AS A COURTYARD TO ITS HOUSES.⁶

GEMARA. Whose view is this?⁷ Apparently that of R. Meir who laid down that it is necessary to have both 'erub and shittuf. Read, however, the middle clause: IF, HOWEVER, SHITTUF WAS MADE FOR THE ALLEY, THEY ARE PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF BOTH, which represents, does it not, the view of the Rabbis who laid down that one of these⁸ is sufficient?⁹ — This is no difficulty. It¹⁰ means: IF, HOWEVER, SHITTUF ALSO WAS MADE.¹¹ But read, then, the next clause: IF AN 'ERUB WAS PREPARED FOR THE COURTYARDS AND SHITTUF WAS MADE FOR THE ALLEY, THOUGH ONE OF THE TENANTS OF A COURTYARD FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB, THEY ARE NEVERTHELESS PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF BOTH. Now how is one to understand this ruling? If [the tenant]¹² did not renounce his share,¹³ why¹⁴ should the others be permitted?¹⁵ It is obvious then that he did renounce it. Now read the final clause: IF, HOWEVER, ONE OF THE RESIDENTS OF THE ALLEY FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE SHITTUF, THEY ARE PERMITTED THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE COURTYARDS BUT FORBIDDEN THAT OF THE ALLEY; now if this is a case where he¹⁶ renounced his share,¹⁷ why are they forbidden the unrestricted use of the alley? And should you reply that R. Meir is of the opinion that the law of renunciation of one's share is not applicable to an alley, surely it can be retorted, was it not taught: 'Since . . . he¹⁸ renounced his share¹⁷ in your favour . . . so R. Meir'?¹⁹ It is consequently obvious that [the tenant]' did not renounce his share. And since the final clause deals with one who made no renunciation in the earlier clause²⁰ also must deal with one who made no renunciation.²¹ Would then the first²² and the last²³ clauses represent the view of R. Meir²⁴ and the middle one²⁵ that of the Rabbis?²⁶ — All our Mishnah²⁷ represents the view of R. Meir; for the only reason why²⁸ R. Meir ruled that both ‘erub and shittuf were required is that the law of ‘erub should not be forgotten by the children, but in this case,²⁹ since most of the tenants did contribute to the ‘erub,³⁰ it would not be forgotten.³¹

Rab Judah stated: Rab did not learn, OPENED INTO EACH OTHER,³² and so stated R. Kahana: Rab did not learn, OPENED INTO EACH OTHER. Others say: R. Kahana himself did not learn, OPENED INTO EACH OTHER.

Abaye asked R. Joseph: What is the reason of him who does not learn, OPENED INTO EACH OTHER? — He is of the opinion that a shittuf contribution that is not carried in and out³³ through the doors that opened into the alley³⁴ can not be regarded as valid shittuf.³⁵

He raised an objection against him: If a householder was in partnership with his neighbours, with the one in wine and with the other in wine, they need not prepare an ‘erub?³⁶ — There it is a case where he carried it³⁷ in and out.³⁸ He raised another objection:³⁹ How is shittuf in an alley effected etc.?⁴⁰ — There also It is a case where it⁴¹ was carried in and out.⁴²

Rabbah⁴³ b. Hanan⁴⁴ demurred: Now then,⁴⁵ would shittuf be equally invalid if one resident transferred to another the possession of some bread in his basket?⁴⁶ And should you reply that [the law] is so indeed, [it could be retorted:] Did not Rab Judah, in fact, state in the name of Rab: If numbers of a party were dining⁴⁷ when the sanctity of the Sabbath day overtook them,⁴⁸ they may rely upon the bread on the table to serve the purpose of ‘erub or, as others say, that of shittuf; and in connection with this Rabbah observed that there is really no difference of opinion between them,⁴⁹ since the former refers to a party dining⁴⁷ in a house⁵⁰ and the latter to one dining in a courtyard?⁵¹ — The fact is that Rab's reason⁵² this:⁵³ he is of the opinion that unrestricted movement in an alley cannot be rendered permissible by means of a side-post or cross-beam unless houses and courtyards opened into it.⁵⁴ [To turn to] the main text: Rab laid down: Unrestricted movement in an alley cannot be rendered permissible by means of a side-post or cross-beam

(1) Lit., ‘here and here’, the courtyards as well as the alley. This is discussed in the Gemara infra.

(2) But contributed to the shittuf

(3) V. supra n. 2.

(4) Cf. MS.M. and marg. n. Wanting from cur. edd.

(5) Although both possess characteristics of a public domain.

(6) Though the latter are distinctly private domains while the former (cf. prev. n.) possess characteristics of a public domain. As it is forbidden to convey any objects from the houses to the courtyard unless an ‘erub had been prepared so it is forbidden to carry objects from the courtyards into the alley unless shittuf had been made.

(7) The first clause of our Mishnah.

(8) Either ‘erub or shittuf.

(9) Is it likely, however, that two adjacent clauses should represent two opposing views?

(10) The middle clause.

(11) In addition to ‘erub, in agreement with R. Meir.

(12) Who forgot to contribute to the ‘erub of his courtyard.

(13) In his courtyard, in favour of its other tenants.

(14) Since R. Meir does not recognize shittuf as a substitute for ‘erub.

(15) The unrestricted use of that courtyard.

(16) The occupant of a courtyard.

(17) In the alley.

(18) The Sadducee who occupied one of the courtyards in an alley in which Israelites lived.

(19) Supra 68b.

(20) Dealing with the case of a tenant who forgot to contribute to the ‘erub of his courtyard.

(21) In agreement with the Rabbis who recognize shittuf as valid for the purpose of ‘erub also.

(22) According to which an ‘erub for the courtyards is of no value for the use of the alley unless shittuf also was effected.

- (23) Which forbids the unrestricted use of the alley, if one of the residents failed to contribute to the shittuf, though 'erub had been prepared.
- (24) Who requires both 'erub and shittuf.
- (25) Where the unrestricted use of both the courtyards and the alley is permitted although one of the tenants of a courtyard forgot to contribute to the 'erub.
- (26) Is it conceivable, however, that the view of the Rabbis would be inserted anonymously between the views of R. Meir?
- (27) Lit., 'all of it'.
- (28) Lit., 'and what is the reason?'
- (29) V. p. 512, n. 14.
- (30) Only one of them having failed to contribute his share.
- (31) Hence the validity of shittuf as a substitute for 'erub even according to R. Meir.
- (32) Sc. the 'erub spoken of in our Mishnah is not one that was prepared for the purpose of amalgamating a number of courtyards but for that of enabling tenants to have the unrestricted use of their own courtyard only.
- (33) Into the alley from each of the courtyards and out of it into the courtyard where it is to be deposited.
- (34) But through the other courtyards.
- (35) Because the direct connection between courtyards and alley must be clearly shown. As in the case of courtyards that open into each other as well as into the alley it may happen that the shittuf contributions should be carried from a courtyard into the alley indirectly through the other courtyards, shittuf was entirely forbidden (cf. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l.). Since our Mishnah allows shittuf it must refer to courtyards that did not open into each other. Hence Rab's omission.
- (36) Supra 71a. The wine in joint ownership is obviously kept in one of the courtyards and may never have passed the door of any other courtyard. How then could it be maintained that for shittuf to be valid the contributions must pass 'in and out through the doors that opened into the alley'?
- (37) The cask containing the joint stock of wine.
- (38) It was duly carried from each courtyard direct into the alley and finally taken into the courtyard in which it was deposited. This is a forced explanation contrary to the accepted law (cf. Rashi) and is later superseded by a more satisfactory explanation.
- (39) This is deleted by Rashal and appears in parenthesis in cur. edd.
- (40) Infra 79b where it is laid down that one of the residents may assign to each of his neighbours a share in his wine, and the shittuf is as valid as if each one had actually contributed a share. Now, though this wine has never passed the door of any of the other courtyards, the shittuf is valid. How then could it be maintained that contributions to shittuf must pass 'in and out etc.'?
- (41) V. p. 513, n. 10.
- (42) V. p. 513, n. 11
- (43) MS.M., 'Raba'.
- (44) MS.M., 'R. Hanan'; Bah, 'R. Hanan'.
- (45) Lit., 'but from now', since it is maintained that shittuf contributions must be carried 'in and out'.
- (46) For the purpose of shittuf.
- (47) Lit., 'reclining'.
- (48) Sc. the Sabbath began while they were still at table and unable, therefore, to collect the necessary contributions for 'erub or shittuf.
- (49) Those who react 'erub and those who read shittuf.
- (50) An 'erub is deposited in a house (cf. infra 85b).
- (51) Where a shittuf, but no 'erub may be deposited (infra I.e.). This shows that there is no necessity for the contributions to shittuf to pass 'in and out through the doors etc.' How then could it be maintained that shittuf must pass 'in and out' through the doors of the courtyards that opened directly into the alley?
- (52) For omitting the phrase OPENED INTO EACH OTHER.
- (53) Not the one previously suggested according to which shittuf must pass in and out etc.
- (54) Sc. no less than two courtyards must open into the alley and no less than two houses must open into each courtyard. As a number of courtyards that opened into each other are regarded as one courtyard, the unrestricted use of the alley spoken of in our Mishnah could not have been effected if the courtyards that opened into each other.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 74a

unless houses and courtyards opened into it;¹ but Samuel ruled: Even one house² and one courtyard³ suffices; while R. Johanan maintained: Even a ruin⁴ is sufficient.

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: Did R. Johanan maintain his view even in the case of a path between vineyards?⁵ — R. Johanan, the other replied, only spoke of a ruin since it may be used as a dwelling, but not of a path between vineyards which cannot be used as a dwelling.

Said R. Huna b. Hinena: R. Johanan⁶ here follows a principle of his. For we learned: R. Simeon ruled: Roofs, karpafs and courtyards⁷ are equally regarded as one domain in respect of carrying from one into the other objects that were kept within them when the Sabbath began, but not in respect of objects that were in the house when the Sabbath began;⁸ and Rab stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon,⁹ provided no 'erub¹⁰ had been prepared,¹¹ but where an 'erub¹⁰ had been prepared¹² a preventive measure had been enacted against the possibility of carrying objects from the houses of one courtyard into some other courtyard; but Samuel stated: Whether and 'erub¹³ had, or had not been prepared;¹⁴ and so also said R. Johanan: The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon irrespective of whether all 'erub' had, or had not been prepared. Thus it is evident that¹⁵ no preventive measure had been instituted against the possibility of carrying objects from the houses of one courtyard into some other courtyard, and so also here¹⁶ no preventive measure had been instituted against the possibility of carrying objects from the courtyard¹⁷ into the ruin.¹⁸

R. Berona was sitting at his studies and reporting this ruling¹⁹ when R. Eleazar, a student of the college, asked him: 'Did Samuel say this?' — 'Yes', the other replied. 'Will you', the first asked, 'show me his lodgings?' When the other showed it to him he approached Samuel and asked him, 'Did the Master say this?' — 'Yes', the other replied. 'But', he objected, 'did not the Master state, in the laws of 'erub we can only be guided by the wording of our Mishnah, viz., 'that an alley to its courtyards²⁰ is as a courtyard to its houses?'²⁰ Whereupon the other remained silent.

Did he,²¹ or did he not accept it from him?²² — Come and hear of the case of a certain alley in which Eibuth b. Ihi lived and, when he furnished it with a side-post, Samuel allowed him its unrestricted use.

(1) Cf. prev. n.

(2) Without a courtyard (cf., however, Tosaf. a.l. and Rashi supra 12b).

(3) With a house in it.

(4) On one side of the alley on the other side of which was a courtyard with one house in it.

(5) That terminated on one side of the alley which had on the other side of it (cf. prev. in.) a courtyard with a house.

(6) In allowing the use of an alley to become unrestricted by means of a side-post or cross-beam if there was a ruin in that alley instead of a second courtyard with a house.

(7) Which cannot be regarded as dwellings and, consequently, require no 'erub.

(8) Such objects may not be moved from the houses to the courtyard or vice versa, or from one courtyard into another, unless an 'erub had been duly prepared.

(9) That it is permitted to carry objects from one courtyard into another even where the courtyards did not join in 'erub.

(10) For each courtyard.

(11) In such a case, since its tenants are forbidden to carry any objects from their houses into their courtyard, no objects that were in the houses which the Sabbath commenced could be found in the courtyard. Hence there is no need to provide against the possibility that the tenants might forgetfully carry any such objects into some other courtyard.

(12) So that the tenants of each courtyard were thereby allowed freely to carry objects into their courtyards from their houses.

(13) For each courtyard.

(14) The halachah is in either case in agreement with R. Simeon.

- (15) In the opinion of R. Johanan.
 (16) Where the alley contained a ruin.
 (17) Through the alley.
 (18) Though, belonging to some owner, the ruin constitutes a domain of its own into which no objects from the alley may be carried. (A ruin, since excluded from the category of dwelling-places, does not affect the use of an alley by the tenants of its courtyards and does not join in its shittuf).
 (19) Of Samuel, supra, 'even one house and one courtyard suffices'.
 (20) Emphasis on the plural form of the noun. How then could Samuel rule, 'even one . . . suffices'?'
 (21) Samuel.
 (22) Sc. did Samuel eventually adopt Rab's view?

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 74b

R. Anan subsequently¹ came and threw it² down³ when he⁴ exclaimed: I have been living undisturbed⁵ in this alley⁶ on the authority⁷ of Samuel, why should R. Anan b. Rab now come and throw its side-post down!⁸ May it not then be deduced from this that he⁹ did not accept it from him?¹⁰ — As a matter of fact it may still be maintained that he⁹ did accept it from him,¹¹ but¹² in this case¹³ a Synagogue superintendent who was having his meals¹⁴ in his own home¹⁵ came¹⁶ to spend his nights at the Synagogue.¹⁷ Eibuth b. Ihi [however] thought that one's dining place is the cause [of shittuf],¹⁸ while Samuel [in reality] was merely acting on his own principle he having laid down that one's night's lodging¹⁹ — place is the cause.²⁰

Rab Judah citing Rab ruled: For an alley whose one side²¹ occupied by all idolater and its other side by an Israelite no 'erub may be prepared²² through windows²³ render the movement of objects²⁴ permissible by way of the door²⁵ into the alley. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: Did Rab give the same ruling even in respect of a courtyard?²⁶ — Yes,²⁷ the other replied, for if he had not given it²⁸ I might²⁹ have presumed that Rab's reason for his ruling³⁰ was his opinion that the use of an alley cannot be rendered permissible by means of a side-post or cross-beam unless houses and courtyards opened into it,³¹ and [as to the objection:] What need was there³² for two [rulings³³ it could be replied that both were] necessary: For if all our information had to be derived from the former ruling³⁴

 (2) The side-post.
 (3) Because the alley, beside the Synagogue (v. infra) contained only one courtyard and one house.
 (4) Eibuth b. Ihi.

 (6) Sc. was permitted its unrestricted use on account of the side-post.
 (7) Lit., 'from the name'. MS.M., 'since the time'.
 (8) Lit., 'should throw it down from'; MS.M. 'from it'.
 (9) Samuel.
 (10) Apparently it may; for if he had accepted it he would not leave permitted the unrestricted use of the alley (cf. supra p. 516, n. 13).
 (11) Samuel having eventually come round to the view of Rab.
 (12) As to the objection why Samuel allowed the unrestricted use of the alley.
 (13) Of the alley of Eibuth b. Ihi.
 (14) Lit., 'eating bread'.
 (15) Which was outside the alley in question.
 (16) During Samuel's lifetime.
 (17) Whose door opened into that alley. He was, therefore, regarded by Samuel as a resident. After Samuel's death, however, the superintendent discontinued that practice and the Synagogue was entirely unoccupied at night. Hence R. Anan's action.

(18) As the Synagogue superintendent only spent the night in the alley but dined elsewhere he could not, in the opinion of Eibuth b. Ihi, be regarded as one of its occupants. He, therefore, gained the impression that Samuel acknowledged the validity of his side-post on the ground that one house and one courtyard suffice to constitute an alley. Hence his remonstrance with R. Anan.

(19) Not dining.

(20) Of the obligation of shittuf. The Synagogue, since its superintendent lodged in it at night, could, therefore, be regarded as an inhabited courtyard, so that together with the courtyard of Eibuth b. Ihi the alley actually had two courtyards and its use could be made to be unrestricted by means of a side-post even according to Rab.

(21) Sc. the courtyard and house on that side.

(23) Or any other forms of opening that connected his and their houses.

(24) From the Israelites' houses into the alley.

(25) Of the Israelite who lived in the alley into whose house the objects could be brought by way of the windows.

(26) The house on one side of which was occupied by an idolater and the one on the other by an Israelite whose houses was connected by some form of opening with the houses of other Israelites.

(27) I.e., Rab forbade the preparation of 'erub in the case of the courtyard as in that of the alley.

(28) In the case of a courtyard.

(29) Lit., 'what would I'.

(30) In the case of the alley.

(31) Supra 73b. While in the case under discussion (an idolater's houses not being regarded as a valid dwelling) there was only one valid courtyard in the alley.

(34) Lit., 'from that' the ruling supra 73 b.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 75a

I might have presumed that¹ an idolater's dwelling is regarded as a valid dwelling;² hence we were informed³ that an idolater's dwelling is no valid dwelling. And if all our knowledge had to be derived from the latter ruling,⁴ one would not have known the number of houses required;⁵ hence we were informed⁶ that there must be no less than two houses. Now, however, that Rab also stated that his ruling⁷ applied even to a courtyard⁸ [it follows that] Rab's reason is his opinion that one is forbidden to live alone with⁹ an idolater.¹⁰ If so,¹¹ observed R. Joseph, I can well understand¹² why I heard R. Tabla¹³ mentioning 'idolater' twice¹⁴ though at the time I did not understand what he meant.

MISHNAH. IF TWO COURTYARDS WERE ONE WITHIN THE OTHER¹⁵ AND THE TENANTS OF THE INNER ONE PREPARED AN 'ERUB¹⁶ 'WHILE THOSE OF THE OTHER ONE DID NOT PREPARE ONE, THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE INNER ONE IS PERMITTED¹⁷ BUT THAT OF THE OUTER ONE IS FORBIDDEN. IF THE TENANTS OF THE OUTER ONE PREPARED AN 'ERUB BUT NOT THOSE OF THE INNER ONE, THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF BOTH COURTYARDS IS FORBIDDEN.¹⁸ IF THE TENANTS OF EACH COURTYARD PREPARED AN 'ERUB FOR THEMSELVES, THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF EACH IS PERMITTED TO ITS OWN TENANTS.¹⁹ R. AKIBA FORBIDS THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE OUTER ONE BECAUSE THE RIGHT OF WAY²⁰ IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS.²¹ THE SAGES, HOWEVER, MAINTAIN THAT THE RIGHT OF WAY²² IMPOSES NO RESTRICTIONS UPON IT.²³

IF ONE OF THE TENANTS OF THE OUTER COURTYARD FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB.²⁴ THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE INNER COURTYARD IS PERMITTED BUT THAT OF THE OUTER ONE IS FORBIDDEN. IF A TENANT OF THE INNER COURTYARD FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB, THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF BOTH COURTYARDS IS FORBIDDEN.²⁵

IF THEY²⁶ DEPOSITED THEIR 'ERUB IN THE SAME PLACE²⁷ AND ONE TENANT, WHETHER OF THE INNER COURTYARD OR OF THE OUTER COURTYARD, FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE ERUB, THE USE OF BOTH COURTYARDS IS FORBIDDEN.²³ IF THE COURTYARDS. HOWEVER, BELONGED TO SEPARATE INDIVIDUALS THESE NEED NOT PREPARE ANY 'ERUB.²⁸

GEMARA. When R. Dimi came²⁹ he stated in the name of R. Jannai: This³⁰ is the opinion of R. Akiba who ruled: Even a foot³¹ that is permitted³² in its own place³³ imposes restrictions in a place to which it does not belong, but the Sages maintain: As a permitted foot³² does not impose restrictions³⁴ so does not³⁴ a forbidden foot either.³⁵

We learned: IF THE TENANTS OF THE OUTER ONE PREPARED AN 'ERUB BUT NOT THOSE OF THE INNER ONE, THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF BOTH COURTYARDS IS FORBIDDEN.³⁶ Now whose ruling is this? If it be suggested: That of R. Akiba, the difficulty would arise: What was the point in speaking of a forbidden foot seeing that³⁷ the same restrictions would also apply to a permitted one? Must it not then be a ruling of the Rabbis?³⁸ — It³⁹ may in fact be the ruling of R. Akiba,⁴⁰ but⁴¹ the arrangement, it may be explained, is in the form of a climax.⁴²

We learned: IF THE TENANTS OF EACH COURTYARD PREPARED AN 'ERUB FOR THEMSELVES, THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF EACH IS PERMITTED TO ITS OWN TENANTS. The reason then⁴³ is because it⁴⁴ PREPARED AN 'ERUB,⁴⁵ but if it had not prepared one,⁴⁶ the unrestricted use of both courtyards would have been forbidden.⁴⁷ This Tanna then holds that a permitted foot⁴⁸ imposes no restrictions⁴⁹ and that only a forbidden foot imposes restrictions.⁴⁹ Now who is it? if it be suggested that it is R. Akiba, the objection could be raised, did he not lay down that even a permitted foot imposes restrictions?⁵⁰ Must it not then be the Rabbis?⁵¹ Furthermore: Since the clause following is the ruling of R. Akiba⁵² is it not obvious that the earlier clause⁵³ does not represent the view of R. Akiba?⁵⁴ — All the Mishnah represents the views of R. Akiba but⁵⁵ a clause is wanting⁵⁶ the correct reading being the following:⁵⁷ IF THE TENANTS OF EACH COURTYARD PREPARED AN 'ERUB FOR THEMSELVES. THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF EACH IS PERMITTED TO ITS OWN TENANTS. This, however, applies only where it⁵⁸ made a barrier,⁵⁹ but if it made no such barrier the unrestricted use of the outer courtyard is forbidden; so R. Akiba, for R. AKIBA FORBIDS THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE OUTER ONE BECAUSE THE RIGHT OF WAY IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS. THE SAGES, HOWEVER,⁶⁰ MAINTAIN THAT THE RIGHT OF WAY IMPOSES NO RESTRICTIONS.

R. Bebai b. Abaye raised an objection: IF THE COURTYARDS, HOWEVER, BELONGED TO SEPARATE INDIVIDUALS THESE NEED NOT PREPARE ANY 'ERUB; from which it follows that if they belonged to several persons an 'erub must be prepared. Is it not thus obvious that a foot permitted in its own place imposes no restrictions and that a foot forbidden imposes restrictions?⁶¹ Rabina, furthermore, raised the following objections: IF ONE OF THE TENANTS OF THE OUTER COURTYARD FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF THE INNER COURTYARD IS PERMITTED BUT THAT OF THE OUTER ONE IS FORBIDDEN. IF A TENANT OF THE INNER COURTYARD FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB, THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF BOTH COURTYARDS IS FORBIDDEN. The reason⁶² accordingly is that a tenant⁶³ forgot, but if he had not forgotten, the use of both courtyards would have been unrestricted. Is it not thus obvious that a foot permitted imposes no restrictions and one forbidden does?⁶⁴ — The fact is, Rabin when he came⁶⁵ stated in the name of R. Jannai that three different views have been expressed on this question: The first Tanna holds that a permitted foot imposes no restrictions and a forbidden one does; R. Akiba holds that even a permitted foot imposes restrictions; while the latter Rabbis⁶⁶ hold that as a permitted foot does not impose restrictions so does not one that is forbidden.

IF THEY DEPOSITED THEIR 'ERUB IN THE SAME PLACE AND ONE TENANT, WHETHER OF THE INNER COURTYARD . . . FORGOT etc. What is meant by THE SAME PLACE?⁶⁷ — Rab Judah citing Rab explained: The other courtyard.⁶⁸ But why is it described as 'THE SAME⁶⁹ PLACE?' Because it is a place designated⁷⁰ for the use of the tenants of both courtyards.⁷¹

- (1) Since the house of an idolater was not at all mentioned.
 - (2) V. supra 62a.
 - (3) In the ruling here.
 - (4) Lit., 'from here', the ruling supra 74b.
 - (5) Lit., 'I would have said: I do not know how many houses' constitute a courtyard. The number of courtyards required to constitute an alley might have been inferred from the statement that no 'erub may be prepared where one of the two courtyards in the alley was occupied by an idolater, from which it follows that if it was occupied by an Israelite, so that the alley had two valid courtyards, the alley also is valid.
 - (6) In Rab's first ruling (supra 73a) where 'houses' (in the plural) were mentioned.
 - (7) Concerning the alley.
 - (8) Thereby showing that all possible restrictions have been imposed upon an Israelite who, either in the same alley or in the same courtyard, lives alone with an idolater.
 - (9) Lit., 'it is forbidden to act (carry on as) an individual in the place of'.
 - (10) From whom one might learn undesirable habits and beliefs.
 - (11) That (a) Rab's reason is the one just given, or (b) that Rab gave two rulings one concerning an alley and the other concerning a courtyard.
 - (12) Lit., 'that is it'.
 - (13) When he was discoursing on Rab's rulings.
 - (14) He (cf. supra n. 4) must have been giving Rab's ruling as well as his reason: (a) 'For an alley whose one side is occupied by an idolater . . . no 'erub may be prepared . . . because one is forbidden to live alone with an idolater'; or (b) was referring first to an alley and then to a courtyard.
 - (15) The inner one opening into the outer which opened into public domain and through which the tenants of the inner one had right of way.
 - (16) For themselves alone, to enable them to have the unrestricted use of their own courtyard.
 - (17) To its tenants.
 - (18) The reason is discussed infra.
 - (19) Lit., 'for itself'.
 - (20) Lit., 'the treading of the foot', of each of the tenants of the inner courtyard through the outer one in the 'erub of which he had not joined.
 - (21) Despite the fact that each of the inner tenants is permitted the unrestricted use of his own courtyard.
 - (22) V. p. 519, n. 13.
 - (23) The reason is discussed infra.
 - (24) Of his courtyard.
 - (25) As the tenants of the inner courtyard are forbidden the unrestricted use of their own courtyard they impose restrictions on the use of the outer one on account of their right of way.
 - (26) The tenants of the two courtyards who joined in one 'erub.
 - (27) Sc. (as will be explained infra) in the outer courtyard.
 - (28) Since the single owner of the inner courtyard is permitted its unrestricted use he, in agreement with the view of the Rabbis, cannot impose restrictions in the use of the outer one though he has a right of way through it.
 - (29) From Palestine to Babylon.
 - (30) The first clauses of our Mishnah.
 - (31) Synecdoche for 'person' or 'persons'.
 - (32) Sc. (cf. prev. n.) who is (or are) permitted the unrestricted use.
 - (33) The courtyard in which the person (or persons) lives.
 - (34) In a courtyard in which that tenant (or tenants) does not live, though he has a right of way through it.

- (35) Though it is (a) forbidden in its own courtyard and (b) has a right of way through the other courtyard.
- (36) From which it follows that if the tenants of the inner one also prepared an 'erub the unrestricted use of both courtyards is permitted; obviously because 'a foot that is permitted in its own place' imposes no restrictions 'in a place to which it does not belong'.
- (37) According to R. Akiba's specific ruling in our Mishnah.
- (38) An objection against R. Dimi.
- (39) The first clauses of our Mishnah.
- (40) Who maintains that a 'permitted foot' also imposes restrictions, and the inference supra n. 1 cannot consequently be drawn.
- (41) In answer to the objection; If no inference is to be drawn from it, what need was there to state a ruling which may be deduced from R. Akiba's specifically expressed ruling that followed it.
- (42) Lit., 'and not this but also that was taught', i.e., R. Akiba first laid down the ruling under discussion ('forbidden foot') and then he added in effect: Not only does a 'forbidden foot' (IF THE TENANTS OF THE OUTER ONE PREPARED AN 'ERUB BUT NOT THOSE OF THE INNER ONE) impose restrictions on the use of the outer courtyard but even a 'permitted foot' (IF THE TENANTS OF EACH COURTYARD PREPARED AN 'ERUB) also imposes the same restrictions.
- (43) Why THE UNRESTRICTED USE OF EACH IS PERMITTED.
- (44) 'The inner courtyard.
- (45) In consequences of which its tenants have the status of a 'permitted foot'.
- (46) So that its tenants would have had the status of a 'forbidden foot'.
- (47) Apparently because a 'forbidden foot' imposes restrictions in the place through which it has right of way.
- (48) In its own place.
- (49) In a place through which it has right of way.
- (50) Of course he did, as has been pointed out supra.
- (51) Apparently it must.
- (52) His name being expressly mentioned (v. our Mishnah).
- (53) Which R. Akiba in fact opposes.
- (54) Of course it does not. How then could R. Dimi maintain his view?
- (55) As to the difficulties raised.
- (56) From our Mishnah.
- (57) Lit., 'and thus he learned'.
- (58) The inner courtyard.
- (59) Which shut it off from the outer courtyard and thus deprived itself of its right of way through the outer courtyard.
- (60) Differing from R. Akiba both in the case where THE TENANTS OF EACH COURTYARD PREPARED AN 'ERUB FOR THEMSELVES as well as where THE TENANTS OF THE OTHER ONE PREPARED AN 'ERUB BUT NOT THOSE OF THE INNER ONE.
- (61) An objection against R. Dimi.
- (62) Why the unrestricted use of both courtyards is forbidden.
- (63) Of the inner courtyard.
- (64) Of course it is. Now this cannot be a ruling of R. Akiba since he explicitly restricts the use of the outer courtyard even where both courtyards had prepared 'erubs. It must consequently be that of the Rabbis who accordingly impose restrictions where A TENANT OF THE INNER COURTYARD FORGOT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE 'ERUB. How then could R. Dimi maintain that according to the Rabbis even a forbidden foot imposes no restrictions?
- (65) From Palestine to Babylon.
- (66) To whom R. Dimi referred.
- (67) The following mnemonic is here entered in brackets: The external itself in a lonely house, Rabina who does not forget within. It embodies striking words or ideas contained in the previous discussion on our Mishnah occasioned by R. Dimi's tradition supra.
- (68) The use of the inner one is in such a case forbidden (even where only one of the outer tenants failed to join in the 'erub) since its tenants, on account of their 'erub that lay in the outer courtyard, cannot shut up their door and separate themselves from the latter; and the use of the outer one is equally forbidden (even where only an inner tenant failed to join in 'erub) on account of the 'forbidden foot' of the inner one that imposes restrictions on it. Where, however, the 'erub was deposited in the inner courtyard it is only the forgetfulness of one of its own tenants that causes the restriction of the outer one on account of its 'forbidden foot'. The forgetfulness of all outer tenant, however, imposes no restrictions on the tenants of the inner one since they can well shut up their door and, by separating themselves from the outer one, have the free use of their own courtyard.

(69) תתס.

(70) מיוהה rt. תת which is analogous to that of תתס.

(71) The inner one having a right of way through it.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 75b

So¹ it was also taught: If they deposited their 'erub in the outer courtyard and one tenant, whether of the outer, or of the inner courtyard, forgot to contribute to the 'erub, the unrestricted use of both courtyards is forbidden. If they deposited their 'erub in the inner one and a tenant of the inner one forgot to contribute to the 'erub, the unrestricted use of both courtyards is forbidden. If a tenant of the outer courtyard forgot to contribute to the 'erub the unrestricted use of both courtyards is forbidden. This is the view of R. Akiba. The Sages, however, ruled: In this case² the unrestricted use of the inner one is permitted³ through that of the outer one is forbidden.¹

Said Rabbah b. Hanan to Abaye: Why did the Rabbis make a distinction⁴ when they laid down that⁵ the unrestricted use of the inner courtyard is permitted? Obviously because its tenants can shut its door and so use it. Why then should they not shut its door, according to R. Akiba also, and so use it? — The other replied: The 'erub⁶ causes them to be associated. Does not the 'erub cause them to be so associated according to the Rabbis also? — The tenants⁷ call say: 'We have associated with you in order to improve our position but not to make it worse'. Why could they not, according to R. Akiba, also say: 'We have associated with you in order to improve our position but not to make it worse'? — Because the others⁸ can reply: 'We will renounce our rights of entry⁹ in your favour'.¹⁰ And the Rabbis?¹¹ — The tenants of one courtyard cannot renounce their rights in favour of those of another.¹²

Must it be assumed that Samuel and R. Johanan¹³ differ on the same principle¹⁴ as that on which the Rabbis and R. Akiba differ, Samuel holding the same view as the Rabbis and R. Johanan holding that of R. Akiba?¹⁵ — Samuel can answer you: I may maintain my view even according to R. Akiba, for it is only here,¹⁶ where two courtyards, one within the other, impose¹⁷ restrictions upon each other, that R. Akiba upheld his view,¹⁸ but not there where¹⁹ they do not²⁰ impose restrictions upon each other.²¹ Johanan also can answer you: I may maintain my view even according to the Rabbis,²² for it is only here that the Rabbis maintain their view, since the tenants of the inner courtyard can say to those of the outer one, 'Until you make renunciation in our favour you are imposing restrictions upon us'²³ but not there where¹⁹ one courtyard does not impose restrictions upon the other.²⁴

IF THE COURTYARDS, HOWEVER, BELONGED, TO SEPARATE INDIVIDUALS etc. R. Joseph stated: Rabbi learned: If they²⁵ were three they are forbidden.²⁶ Said R. Bebai to them: 'Do not listen to him.²⁷ It was I who first reported it,²⁸ and I did so in the name of R. Adda b. Ahabah,²⁹ giving the following as a reason: Since I might describe them³⁰ as many residents³¹ in the outer courtyard'.³² 'God of Abraham', exclaimed R. Joseph. 'I must have mistaken³³ Rabbin³¹ for Rabbi'.³⁴ Samuel, however, ruled: The unrestricted use of both courtyards is always permitted except where two persons occupied the inner courtyard and one person the outer one.

R. Eleazar ruled: A gentile³⁵ is regarded³⁶ as many Israelites.³⁷ But wherein does an Israelite,³⁵ who imposes no restrictions,³⁸ essentially differ in this respect?³⁹ Obviously in this: That he who knows⁴⁰ is fully aware of the circumstances,⁴¹ and he who does not know⁴⁰ presumes that an 'erub had been duly prepared.⁴² Why then should it not be said in the case of a gentile also: He who knows⁴³ is fully aware of the circumstances⁴⁴ and he who does not know⁴³ presumes that the gentile has duly let his right of way? — The average gentile, if ever he lets his right,⁴⁵ makes a noise about it.⁴⁶

Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled: If there were ten houses one within the other,⁴⁷ the innermost one⁴⁸ contributes the 'erub,⁴⁹ and this is sufficient.⁵⁰ R. Johanan, however, ruled: Even the outer one must contribute to it. 'The outer one'⁵¹ Is it not like a gate-house?⁵² — The outer house of the innermost one⁵³ was meant. On what principle do they⁵⁴ differ? — One Master⁵⁵ holds the view that the gate-house of one individual⁵⁶ is regarded as a proper gate-house⁵⁷ while the other Master⁵⁸ holds the view that⁵⁹ it is not regarded as a proper gate-house.⁶⁰ R. Nahman citing Rabbah b. Abbuha who had it front Rab ruled: If there were two courtyards between which there were three houses,⁶¹ one tenant⁶² may come through the one outer house⁶³ and deposit his 'erub in the middle one, and another tenant⁶⁴ may come through the other house⁶³ and deposit his 'erub in the middle one.

- (1) In agreement with Rab Judah that by the 'SAME PLACE' the outer courtyard was meant.
 - (2) The last mentioned case where an outer tenant forgot to join in the 'erub.
 - (3) Since, as explained supra, it can shut up its door etc.
 - (4) Between an 'erub deposited in the inner, and one deposited in the outer courtyard.
 - (5) In the former case.
 - (6) In which both courtyards joined.
 - (7) Of the inner courtyard.
 - (8) The tenants of the outer courtyard.
 - (9) 'Into the inner courtyard to which we are entitled by virtue of our joint 'erub'.
 - (10) 'So that our association in the 'erub would involve you in no disadvantage'. R. Akiba's prohibition of the unrestricted use of the inner courtyard is limited to the period prior to such renunciation.
 - (11) If by renunciation the tenants of the inner courtyard regain their full rights, how could they object to their association with the other on the ground mentioned?
 - (12) Lit., 'there is no renunciation of rights from one courtyard to another'. As those of the outer courtyard cannot consequently renounce this right in the inner one in favour of its tenants the latter might well plead against the disadvantage resulting from their join 'erub', 'We have associated with you in order to improve etc.'
 - (13) Who offered (supra 66b, 68a) on the permissibility of renunciation by the tenants of one courtyard in favour of those of another, where a door led from one courtyard into the other.
 - (14) As has just been explained.
 - (15) But if the principle is the same, why should it be discussed twice?
 - (16) Lit., 'until here'.
 - (17) If they joined in an 'erub.
 - (18) As restrictions are imposed renunciation also was permitted.
 - (19) Not having joined in a common 'erub.
 - (20) Lit., 'do they'.
 - (21) Cf. supra n. 7. mut. mut.
 - (22) Who in fact do allow renunciation where two courtyards are involved.
 - (23) Since by accepting the advantage of the one they must also accept the disadvantage of the other they might well decline to accept either. Hence the Rabbis' prohibition of renunciation.
 - (24) As in that case renunciation is purely advantageous, involving no disability whatever, the Rabbis may well have allowed it.
 - (25) The occupiers of the two courtyards.
 - (26) The unrestricted use of the courtyards, unless they prepared an 'erub. For if two persons occupied the inner courtyard they impose restrictions upon each other and, as a 'forbidden foot' and on account of their right of way, on the occupiers of the other courtyard also; and if one person only occupied the inner courtyard he also imposes the same restrictions as a preventive measure against the possible relaxation of the law where two occupied it.
 - (27) Sc. R. Joseph's statement that the ruling he cited had the authority of a Mishnah taught by Rabbi was incorrect.
 - (28) The ruling cited by R. Joseph.

- (29) Not in the name of Rabbi or R. Judah I.
- (30) The three occupiers all of whom have a right of way through the outer courtyard.
- (31) 'Rabbim', a word which a listener might mistake for 'Rabbi'.
- (32) Though the inner courtyard is occupied by one person only the same restrictions apply, as a preventive measure (cf. supra n. 1). The rendering and interpretation here follow partly the exposition of R. Han.
- (33) Lit., 'exchanged'.
- (34) R. Joseph, as a result of a serious illness, lost his memory; and faintly recollecting the word 'rabbit' ('many') assumed it to represent the name of 'Rabbi'.
- (35) Who occupied the inner courtyards
- (36) According to Samuel's ruling (cf. Rashi).
- (37) Sc. he imposes the same restrictions on the occupiers of the outer courtyard unless his right of way had been rented from him.
- (38) On the occupiers of the outer courtyard.
- (39) From a gentile.
- (40) That the Israelite is the only occupant, and that a 'permitted foot' imposes no restrictions.
- (41) Lit., 'knows' why no restrictions are imposed. Hence no preventive measure was called for.
- (42) By the occupants of the inner courtyard if their number was two or more.
- (43) That the occupant of the inner courtyard was a gentile.
- (44) v. p. 526, n. 16.
- (45) In connection with Sabbath.
- (46) It is possible, therefore, for a person who was unaware that the inner courtyard was occupied by one gentile only to assume that it was occupied by more than one, and that the reason why they imposed no restrictions was not because they let their right of way to the Israelite (for had they done so they would have made a noise about it) but because (a) right of way imposes no restrictions or because (b) an 'erub prepared by the Israelite tenants of the two courtyards is effective even though the gentile tenant did not let them his right of way. Hence the necessity for R. Eleazar's preventive measure.
- (47) Only the door of the outermost house opening into a courtyard into which doors of the houses of other tenants also opened.
- (48) Since its tenant has the right of way through all the other nine houses each of which is in consequence regarded as his 'gate-house' (cf. supra 72b, infra 85b).
- (49) For the other tenants (cf. supra n. 5) of the courtyard.
- (50) None of the other nine tenants need make any contribution to the 'erub.
- (51) This is at present presumed to refer to the outermost house that opens directly into the courtyard.
- (52) For all the nine tenants whose only way to the courtyard lies through it.
- (53) Sc. the last house but one, or the ninth from the courtyard, which is used as a passage by the innermost tenant only. All the other houses, however, since they are used as thoroughfares for two or more tenants definitely assume the status of gate-houses which do not contribute to the 'erub of the courtyard.
- (54) Samuel and R. Johanan.
- (55) Samuel.
- (56) As is the ninth house which serves as a gate-house for the single occupier of the tenth house only.
- (57) Hence his ruling that none of the nine houses need contribute to the 'erub.
- (58) R. Johanan.
- (59) Since only one man uses it as his thoroughfare.
- (60) Its occupier must, therefore, contribute to the 'erub as does the occupier of the house within it.
- (61) The two outer ones opening into the two courtyards respectively and the middle house having a door leading into each of the two houses.
- (62) Lit., 'this', a tenant of the one courtyard other than those who respectively occupied the three houses.
- (63) That has a door into his courtyard.
- (64) Of the other courtyard, who is not one of those occupying one of the three houses.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 76a

The one [outer house] thereby becomes¹ a gate-house to the one [courtyard]² and the other [outer house] becomes¹ a gate-house to the other [courtyard]² while the middle house, being the house in which the 'erub is deposited, need not contribute any bread to the 'erub.

Rehaba tested the Rabbis: If there were two courtyards and between them two houses³ and a tenant⁴ of the one [courtyard] came through the one [house] and deposited his 'erub in the other⁵ while a tenant⁶ of the other [courtyard] came through the latter [house] and deposited his 'erub in the former, do they⁷ thereby acquire the privileges of 'erub⁸ or not? Do we regard each house in relation to the one [courtyard]⁹ as a house and in relation to the other [courtyard]¹⁰ as a gate-house?¹¹ — Both,¹² they replied, do not acquire the privileges of 'erub. For, whatever you assume, [this must be the result]. If you regard either house as a gate-house, 'an 'erub deposited in a gate-house, exedra or balcony is not a valid 'erub';¹³ and if you regard either as a proper house, the tenants would be carrying objects into a house which was not covered by their 'erub.¹⁴ But why should this ruling be different from that of Raba,¹⁵ who laid down: If two persons said to a third party, 'Go and prepare an 'erub on our behalf' and, after he had prepared an 'erub for the one while it was yet day¹⁶ and for the other at twilight,¹⁶ the 'erub of the man for whom it was prepared while it was yet day was eaten up at twilight while the 'erub of the man for whom it was prepared at twilight was eaten up after dusk, both¹⁷ acquire the privileges¹⁸ of 'erub?¹⁹ — What a comparison!²⁰ There²¹ it is doubtful whether twilight is day-time or night-time, a point that cannot be definitely determined;²² but, in this case, if a house is to be regarded as a proper house in relation to the former it must be so regarded in relation to the latter also, and if it is regarded in relation to the latter as a gate-house it must also be so regarded in relation to the former.²³

CHAPTER VII

MISHNAH. IF BETWEEN TWO COURTYARDS²⁴ THERE WAS A WINDOW OF FOUR HANDBREADTHS BY FOUR, WITHIN TEN HANDBREADTHS FROM THE GROUND, THE TENANTS MAY PREPARE TWO 'ERUBS²⁵ OR, IF THEY PREFER, THEY MAY PREPARE ONE.²⁶ IF [THE SIZE OF THE WINDOW WAS] LESS THAN FOUR HANDBREADTHS BY FOUR²⁷ OR HIGHER THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS FROM THE GROUND,²⁸ TWO 'ERUBS MAY BE PREPARED²⁵ BUT NOT ONE.²⁹

GEMARA. Must it be assumed that we have here learnt³⁰ an anonymous Mishnah in a agreement with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who ruled³¹ that wherever a gap is less than four handbreadths it is regarded as labud?³² — It may be said to agree even with the Rabbis; for the Rabbis differed from R. Simeon b. Gamaliel only in regard to the laws of labud. As regards an opening, however, even they may agree that only if its size is four handbreadths by four is it regarded as a valid opening but otherwise it cannot be so regarded.

LESS THAN FOUR etc. Is not this obvious? For, since it was said that the window must be³³ FOUR HANDBREADTHS BY FOUR, WITHIN TEN HANDBREADTHS, would I not naturally understand that if it was less than four and higher than ten It is not valid opening? — It is this that we were informed:³⁴ The reason³⁵ is because all of it was higher than ten handbreadths from the ground, but if a part of it was within ten handbreadths from the ground, THE TENANTS MAY PREPARE TWO 'ERUBS OR, IF THEY PREFER, THEY MAY PREPARE ONE.³⁶ Thus we have learnt in a Mishnah what the Rabbis taught elsewhere: 'If [almost] all the window was higher than ten handbreadths from the ground but a part of it was within ten handbreadths from it, or if [almost] all of it was within ten handbreadths and a part of it was higher than ten handbreadths, the tenants may prepare two 'erubs or, if they prefer, they may prepare one'. Now then, where '[almost] all the window was higher than ten handbreadths from the ground but a part of it was within ten handbreadths' you ruled that 'the tenants may prepare two 'erubs or, if they prefer, they may prepare one was it also necessary to mention the case where '[almost] all of it was within ten handbreadths and a part of it was higher than ten handbreadths'?³⁷ — This is a case of anticlimax: This,³⁸ and there is no need to say that.³⁹

R. Johanan ruled: A round window³³ must have a circumference of twenty-four handbreadths, two and a fraction of which⁴⁰ must be within ten handbreadths from the ground, so that, when it⁴¹ is squared,⁴² a fraction remains within the ten handbreadths from the ground.⁴³ Consider: Any object that has a circumference of three handbreadths is approximately one handbreadth in diameter: should not then twelve handbreadths⁴⁴ suffice?⁴⁵

(1) In relation to the middle one.

(2) Into which that house has a door. As a gate-house is exempt from 'erub neither of the outer houses need contribute to the 'erub of either courtyard.

(3) Cf. supra n. 1 mut. mut.

(4) Cf. supra n. 2 mut. mut.

(5) That opened into the other courtyard.

(6) Cf. supra n. 4.

(7) The tenants of the respective courtyards who have no desire that their courtyards should be joined by one 'erub.

(8) Each group of tenants in its own courtyard.

(9) Into which it had no door and from which it is separated by the other house.

(10) Into which its door opens.

(11) And both 'erubs are consequently valid. If both houses had been regarded as gate-houses neither 'erub (cf. infra 85b) would have been valid, and even if both houses had been regarded as proper houses neither 'erub would have been valid since in the case of each house the other that was lot covered by the 'erub intervened between it and the courtyard for which the 'erub had been prepared.

(12) The tenants of both courtyards.

(13) Infra 85b; consequently neither 'erub is valid.

(14) Since a house cannot be regarded as both a gate-house and a proper house at the same time both 'erubs must be deemed invalid.

(15) MS.M. and Asheri, 'Rabbah'.

(16) Of the Sabbath eve.

(17) Since it is uncertain whether twilight is to be regarded as day or as night.

(18) In the former case it is assumed that twilight is night and, since the 'erub was in existence before twilight when the Sabbath commenced, the 'erub is valid. In the latter case it is assumed that twilight is still day and, since the 'erub was prepared before twilight and was still in existence when the Sabbath commenced, the 'erub is valid. Now why, it is asked, if twilight is here assumed to be day for one individual and night for another could not a house also be assumed to be a gate-house for one and a proper house for another?

(19) Shab. 34a.

(20) Lit., 'thus now'.

(21) The case dealt with by Raba.

(22) As 'erub is only a Rabbinical institution the more lenient course may be followed in favour of each individual.

(23) Were the same house at the same time to be regarded as both a gate-house and a proper house the whole law of 'erub would become a farce.

(24) In the wall that divided one from the other.

(25) One for each courtyard, to enable the respective tenants to have the unrestricted use of their courtyard. The movement of objects from one courtyard into the other, however, remains forbidden.

(26) Jointly. The tenants of one courtyard deposit their 'erub in the other and, by thus joining together, both groups of tenants are permitted the unrestricted use of both courtyards.

(27) A size that cannot be regarded as a valid opening.

(28) So that a portion of the dividing wall to a height of ten handbreadths contained no valid opening through which the tenants could gain access from one courtyard into the other.

(29) Since the wall (cf. prev. n.) constitutes a solid partition between the courtyards. It is consequently forbidden to move objects between the courtyards either over the wall or through any small apertures or cracks in it.

- (30) In the ruling that if A WINDOW WAS LESS THAN FOUR HANDBREADTHS square it is deemed to be nonexistent (v. our Mishnah).
- (31) Supra 9a.
- (32) v. Glos. Is it likely, however, that an anonymous Mishnah, which usually represents the accepted halachah, would agree with an individual opinion against that of the majority?
- (33) If it is to be regarded as a valid opening that enables the tenants of both courtyards to join in a single 'erub.
- (34) By the apparently superfluous ruling.
- (35) Why the window is regarded as an invalid opening.
- (36) This could not have been inferred from the first clause of our Mishnah which might have been taken to imply that the entire window must be within ten handbreadths from the ground; and since 'HIGHER THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS' has to be stated, it incidentally states also 'LESS THAN FOUR, etc.'
- (37) Apparently not, since the latter may be deduced from the former a minori ad majus.
- (38) The first case where a window was only partly within ten handbreadths from the ground.
- (39) The second case where almost all of it was within the ten handbreadths.
- (40) Measured from the lowest point of the circumference along the diameter joining this point to the highest one opposite (cf. Tosaf.).
- (41) The window whose diameter (being approx. a third of its circumference) is equal to $(24/3 =)$ eight handbreadths approx.
- (42) And thus reduced on each side of the square by two handbreadths, leaving a square window of the size of $8 - (2 + 2) = 4 \times 4$ handbreadths. He assumed that the area of a square constructed within a circle is half the area of the circle itself, v. infra.
- (43) This fraction being the only part of the square window within the prescribed distance from the ground.
- (44) A third of twelve being four.
- (45) For the purpose of obtaining a square of four handbreadths by four within the circumference. Why then did R. Johanan require a minimum circumference of twenty-four?

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 76b

— This¹ applies only to a circle, but where a square² is to be inscribed within it a greater circumference is required.³ But observe: By how much does the perimeter of a square exceed that of a circle? By a quarter approximately; should not then a circumference of sixteen handbreadths⁴ suffice?⁵ — This⁶ applies only to a circle that is inscribed within⁷ the square, but where a square is to be inscribed within a circle it is necessary [for the circumference of the latter] to be much bigger.⁸ What is the reason? In order [to allow⁹ space for] the projections of the corners.¹⁰ Consider, however, this: Every cubit in [the side of] a square [corresponds to], one and two fifths cubits in its diagonal; [should not then¹¹ a circumference] of sixteen and four fifths handbreadths¹² suffice?¹³ — R. Johanan holds the same view as the judges of Caesarea or, as others say, as that of the Rabbis of Caesarea who maintain [that the area of] a circle that is inscribed within a square is [less than the latter by] a quarter¹⁴ [while that of] the square that is inscribed within that circle¹⁵ [is less than the outer square by] a half.¹⁶

IF THE SIZE OF THE WINDOW WAS LESS THAN FOUR HANDBREADTHS BY FOUR etc. R. Nahman explained: This¹⁷ was learnt only in respect of a window between two courtyards but in the case of a window between two houses, even though it was higher than ten handbreadths from the ground, the residents may, if they wish, prepare one 'erub jointly. What is the reason? — A house is regarded as filled.¹⁸ Raba raised an objection against R. Nahman: A window, irrespective of whether¹⁹ it was between two courtyards, between two houses, between two upper rooms, between two roofs,²⁰ or between two rooms, must be of the size of²¹ four handbreadths by four within ten handbreadths from the ground? — The interpretation is [that the limitation²² applies] to the courtyards.²³ But was it not stated: 'irrespective of whether'?²⁴ — The interpretation is that this refers to the prescribed four handbreadths by four'.

R. Abba²⁵ enquired of R. Nahman: If an aperture²⁶ led from a room to an upper room,²⁷ is a permanent ladder²⁸ necessary for the purpose of allowing the movement of objects²⁹ or not? Do we apply the principle, that 'a house is regarded as filled' only when the aperture³⁰ is at the side but not when it is in the middle³¹ or is it possible that there is no difference? — The other replied: It is not necessary. He³² understood him³³ to mean that only a permanent ladder is not necessary but that a temporary one is necessary. It was, however, stated: R. Joseph³⁴ b. Minyomi citing R. Nahman laid down: Neither a permanent, nor a temporary ladder is necessary.

MISHNAH. IF A WAIL BETWEEN TWO COURTYARDS WAS TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH AND FOUR HANDBREADTHS THICK, TWO 'ERUBS MAY BE PREPARED³⁵ BUT NOT ONE.³⁶ IF THERE WAS FRUIT ON THE TOP OF IT,³⁷ THE TENANTS ON EITHER SIDE MAY CLIMB UP AND EAT THEM PROVIDED³⁸ THEY DO NOT CARRY THEM DOWN. IF A BREACH TO THE EXTENT OF TEN CUBITS WAS MADE IN THE WALL, THE TENANTS MAY PREPARE TWO 'ERUBS³⁵ OR, IF THEY PREFER, ONLY ONE,³⁹ BECAUSE IT⁴⁰ IS LIKE A DOORWAY. IF THE BREACH WAS BIGGER, ONLY ONE 'ERUB AND NOT TWO MAY BE PREPARED.⁴¹

GEMARA. What is the ruling where it⁴² was not FOUR HANDBREADTHS wide? — Rab replied: The air of two domains⁴³ prevails upon it and⁴⁴ no object on it may be moved even as far as a hair's breadth.

- (1) That a figure with a perimeter of twelve handbreadths has a diameter of four handbreadths approx.
- (2) Of given dimension, as in this case one of four handbreadths by four.
- (3) As the window under discussion must be four handbreadths square the diameter of the circle in which such a square can be inscribed must have, as laid down by R. Johanan, a minimum circumference of twenty-four hand breadths.
- (4) Since sixteen exceeds twelve by a quarter of the former figure.
- (5) For the window under discussion.
- (6) That the perimeter of a square exceeds the circumference of a circle by one quarter.
- (7) Lit., 'that goes out from'.
- (8) Than three quarters of the given square. Hence R. Johanan's requirement that the circumference of the window must be no less than twenty-four handbreadths.
- (9) Within the circle.
- (10) Of the square. A circular window with a circumference that is less than twenty-four handbreadths would not contain the area that is required.
- (11) Since the diameter of the circle forms the diagonal of the inscribed square.
- (12) Which has a diameter of $(16 \frac{4}{5})/3 = 84/(3 \times 5) = 28/5$ handbreadths approximately and in which a square each side of which is equal to $(5/7$ of its diagonal or $28/5 \times 5/7 =$) four handbreadths, may be inscribed.
- (13) Why then did R. Johanan require a circumference of twenty-four handbreadths?
- (14) Of that square.
- (15) That was inscribed in the other square.
- (16) Cf. Rashi, Tosaf., R. Han. and Rashal one or other of whom the interpretation here partly follows. While the rule laid down in Caesarea seems to bear on the area of the circle and the squares, R. Johanan applied it also to the circumference of the circle and thus required a much bigger circumference than is actually necessary for an inscribed square of four handbreadths by four.
- (17) That the window must not be higher than TEN HANDBREADTHS from the ground.
- (18) The window is consequently within the prescribed ten handbreadths.
- (19) Lit., 'one to me'.
- (20) According to the Rabbis who ruled that as the residents are divided in their domains below so are they divided on their roofs above and, consequently, no movement of objects from one person's roof to that of another is permitted unless a proper 'erub is prepared.
- (21) Lit., 'all of them'.
- (22) 'Within ten handbreadths'.

- (23) Not to the houses.
- (24) Which implies that houses are subject to the same restrictions as the courtyards mentioned in the same context.
- (25) MS.M. 'Raba'.
- (26) In the roof of a lower room which is the floor of the upper one.
- (27) Jast., 'a small room opening (leading) from the ground floor to the upper room', the two rooms having been occupied by two residents respectively.
- (28) Leading from the lower to the upper room through the aperture.
- (29) Between the two rooms.
- (30) As in the case of the window spoken of by R. Nahman.
- (31) Hence no 'erub is valid unless a ladder (cf. supra 59b) joined the lower and the upper rooms.
- (32) R. Abba.
- (33) R. Nahman.
- (34) Var. lec., 'Rab Judah in the name of R. Joseph' (Asheri).
- (35) Separate ones for each courtyard.
- (36) Sc. the two courtyards are not allowed to prepare a joint 'erub on account of the wall that intervened between them. The prescribed thickness of four handbreadths, which has no bearing on this restriction since it applies to all walls whatever their thickness, was mentioned on account of the ruling that follows which is applicable only where the thickness of the wall was no less than four handbreadths. A lesser thickness does not constitute a separate domain.
- (37) The wall of the prescribed thickness (cf. prev. n.).
- (38) Since it is forbidden to carry from one domain into another (cf. prev. two notes).
- (39) Jointly.
- (40) A gap that is not bigger than ten cubits.
- (41) A gap so great converts the two courtyards into one; and the tenants, like those of the same courtyard, may not break up into two parties for 'erub. If they do they impose restrictions of movement upon each other.
- (42) The WALL.
- (43) That of the two courtyards between which it is situated.
- (44) Since it constitutes no independent domain and every fraction of its space is dominated (cf. prev. n.) by two domains.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 77a

R. Johanan, however, ruled: The tenants on either side may carry up their food and eat it there.¹ We learned, THE TENANTS ON EITHER SIDE MAY CLIMB UP AND EAT THERE. Does not this imply that they may only CLIMB UP but not 'carry up'?² — It is this that was meant: If the top consists of an area of four handbreadths by four they MAY CLIMB UP but may not carry up, and if it consists of less than four by four they may also carry up. R. Johanan³ follows a principle of his.⁴ For when R. Dimi came⁵ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: On a place⁶ whose area is less than four handbreadths by four⁷ it is permissible both for the people of the public domain and for those of the private domain to rearrange their burdens,⁸ provided they do not exchange them.⁹ Does not Rab,¹⁰ however, uphold the tradition of R. Dimi?¹¹ — If it were a case of Pentateuchal domains¹² the law would have been so indeed,¹³ but here we are dealing with Rabbinical domains,¹⁴ and the Sages¹⁵ have applied to their enactments¹⁶ higher restrictions than to those of the Torah.¹⁷

Rabbah son of R. Huna¹⁸ citing¹⁹ R. Nahman ruled: A wall between two courtyards, one of whose sides was ten handbreadths high²⁰ and the other one of which was on a level with the ground,²¹ is assigned to that courtyard with the floor of which it is level,²² because the use of it is convenient to the latter but inconvenient to the former, and any place the use of which is convenient to one and inconvenient to another, is to be assigned to the one to whom its use is convenient.

R. Shezbi laid down in the name of R. Nahman: A trench between two courtyards, whose one side was ten handbreadths deep²³ and whose other side was on a level with²⁴ the floor,²⁵ is assigned to that courtyard with whose floor it is on a level,²⁶ because its use is convenient to the latter but inconvenient to the former etc.²⁷

And [the enunciation of] both cases²⁸ was required. For if we had been informed only of the law of the wall²⁹ it might have been assumed to apply to it alone, because people make use of a raised structure, but not to a trench, since people do not make use of a depression in the ground.³⁰ And if we had been informed of the law of the trench only³¹ it might have been assumed to apply to it alone, because its use involves no anxiety³² but not to a wall the use of which involves anxiety.³³ Hence the enunciation of both²⁸ was necessary.

If the height of the wall was reduced,³⁴ it is permitted to use all the wall if the reduction extended³⁵ to four handbreadths;³⁶ otherwise, one may use only that part³⁷ that was parallel to the reduction. What, however, is your view?³⁸ If it is that the reduction is effective,³⁹ one should be permitted to have the use of all the wall, and if it is not effective,⁴⁰ even the use of the part that was parallel to the reduction should not be permitted!⁴¹ — Rabina replied: This is a case, for instance,⁴² where a section of its⁴³ top has been pulled down.⁴⁴

R. Yehiel ruled: If a bowl is inverted⁴⁵ a valid reduction is thereby effected.⁴⁶ But why? Is not the bowl an object that may be moved away on the Sabbath and that as such⁴⁷ causes no reduction?⁴⁸ — This⁴⁹ is was required only in a case where the bowl was attached to the ground.⁵⁰ But what matters it even if it was attached to the ground, seeing that it was taught: An unripe fruit that had been put into straw⁵¹ or a cake that had been put among coals⁵² may be taken out on the Sabbath if a part of it remained uncovered?⁵³ — Here⁴⁹ we are dealing with a case, for instance, where the bowl had rims.⁵⁴ But what matters it even if it had rims, seeing that we learned: If a man buried⁵⁵ turnips or radishes under a vine, leaving⁵⁶

(1) And similarly they may also carry it down. The top of the wall is in his opinion a 'free' domain and may, therefore, be regarded as merged with the one courtyard or the other to suit the convenience of the respective tenants.

(2) How then could R. Johanan maintain that it is also permissible to 'carry up'?

(3) In the ruling he gave here, according to which the top of the wall is regarded as a 'free' domain.

- (4) Enunciated elsewhere.
- (5) From Palestine into Babylon.
- (6) Situated between a private and a public domain.
- (7) Though it is raised three handbreadths from the ground and, had its area been no less than four handbreadths by four, would have constituted a karmelith from which it is forbidden to move objects either into a public or into a private domain.
- (8) Although by so doing they are moving them from the public or the private domain into that place.
- (9) And thus carry indirectly from a private domain into a public one, or vice versa, which is a form of transfer that is Rabbinically forbidden. Pentateuchally only direct transfer from one into the other of the domains mentioned is forbidden, since there must be 'lifting' from the one and direct 'putting down' in the other while in the case under discussion before the object was finally put down it was temporarily put down in, and lifted up from the free domain (v. supra go). At any rate it follows that it Johanan, by permitting the people of either domain 'to rearrange their burdens' on a place having the area he mentioned, upholds the principle of the existence of a free domain.
- (10) Whose view differs from that of R. Johanan (supra 76b ad fin.).
- (11) Which is in fact based on a principle in a Mishnah (Shab. 6a) which Rab could not very well oppose.
- (12) Sc. a proper public or private domain.
- (13) As R. Dimi reported in the name of R. Johanan.
- (14) Courtyards which are Pentateuchally private domains but were Rabbinically subjected to some of the restrictions of a public domain.
- (15) Sc. the Rabbis.
- (16) As a safeguard against laxity.
- (17) Which, being universally respected, required no such safeguards.
- (18) V. Marginal gloss. Cur. edd. read in parenthesis, 'Raba said that R. Huna said',
- (19) MS.M., 'Rabbah b. Bar Hana in the name of'.
- (20) Above the floor level of the courtyard adjacent to it.
- (21) Of the other courtyard whose floor was on a higher level than that of the former, and was within ten handbreadths from the top of the wall. By 'level with the ground' a height of less than ten handbreadths is to be understood.
- (22) Sc. only the tenants of that courtyard are allowed to carry their objects up to, and down from, the top of the wall. To the tenants of the other courtyard this is forbidden.
- (23) I.e., the level of the floor of the courtyard adjacent to it was ten handbreadths higher than the level of the bed of the trench.
- (24) Sc. 'not lower than ten handbreadths from',
- (25) Of the courtyard adjacent to it whose level was lower than that of the former.
- (26) Cf. supra n. 2. mut. mut.
- (27) To be concluded as in the previous discussion of the wall.
- (28) Those of 'wall' and 'trench'.
- (29) Permitting the use of the top of the wall.
- (30) And its use is, therefore, despite its comparatively low altitude, forbidden to the tenants of both courtyards.
- (31) Cf. supra n. 9 mut. mut.
- (32) Since any object put into it remains safely in its position.
- (33) The objects might fall off
- (34) Lit., 'if he came to reduce it'. This, it is now assumed, implies the raising of the floor level of the courtyard by means of a mound or a bench close to the wall and within ten handbreadths from the top of it.
- (35) Along the base of the wall.
- (36) An eminence of such dimensions is regarded as a kind of doorway to the top of the wall since it facilitates approach between the top and the courtyard.
- (37) Of the top.
- (38) Lit., 'what is your desire', sc. whatever the assumption a difficulty arises.
- (39) I.e., that it is regarded as a valid doorway.
- (40) So that it represents no doorway at all.
- (41) Lit., 'also not'.
- (42) Not as has been previously assumed that the floor of the courtyard had been raised.

(43) The wall's.

(44) If the gap resulting was four handbreadths wide it may well be regarded as a valid doorway through which all the top of the wall may be freely used. If, however, it was smaller it cannot be regarded as a doorway to the wall but the space in the gap may be freely used since the wall below it is within ten handbreadths from the courtyard floor level and cannot be regarded as a separate domain.

(45) And placed at the side of a wall that intervened between two courtyards.

(46) If the wall rises to less than ten handbreadths above the back of the inverted bowl.

(47) Lit., 'and a thing that may be taken on the Sabbath'.

(48) An objection against R. Yehiel.

(49) R. Yehiel's ruling.

(50) in which case it may not be moved from its place throughout the Sabbath.

(51) To ripen. Straw that had been set aside for the manufacture of bricks or similar purpose may not be moved from its place on the Sabbath on account mukzeh v. Glos.

(52) That were aglow when the Sabbath began but were extinguished now. Such coals may not be moved on the Sabbath. Burning coals are subject to greater restrictions (cf. Ker. 20a).

(53) Shab. 123a. As a part of the bowl also remains uncovered by the ground its removal on the Sabbath is equally permitted. How then could R. Yehiel regard a bowl in such a condition as an effective reduction.

(54) That were buried in the ground. A bowl in such a condition may not be removed from its place on the Sabbath, since its removal would inevitably disturb the earth under which its rim is buried, and the person removing it would be guilty of performing an act that resembled the forbidden work of digging.

(55) For storage purposes.

(56) Lit., 'in the time'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 77b

some of the leaves uncovered,¹ he² need not fear the possible transgression of the laws of kil'ayim³ or of tithe or of the Sabbatical year,⁴ and they may be removed on the Sabbath?⁵ — This⁶ was required in that case only where a hoe or pickaxe is necessary.⁷

An Egyptian ladder⁸ effects no reduction⁹ but a Tyrian ladder¹⁰ does. What is to be understood by an 'Egyptian ladder'? — At the school of R. Jannai it was explained: One that has less than four rungs.

R. Aha son of Raba asked R. Ashi: What is the reason why an Egyptian ladder⁸ effects no reduction? — Did you not hear, the other replied, what R. Aha b. Adda stated in the name of R. Hammuna who had it from Rab: Because it is an object that may be moved about on the Sabbath and which, like all such objects,¹¹ causes no reduction? — If so, should not the same ruling apply to a Tyrian ladder also?¹² — In the latter case¹³ it is its weight that imparts to it a permanency of position.¹⁴

Abaye ruled: If a wall between two courtyards was ten handbreadths high, and one ladder four handbreadths wide was placed on the one side¹⁵ and another of the same width was placed on the other side,¹⁶ and there is less than a distance of three handbreadths between them,¹⁷ a valid reduction is effected,¹⁸ but if there was a distance of three handbreadths between them,¹⁹ no valid reduction is effected. This, however, applies only where the wall was less than four handbreadths thick but if it was four handbreadths thick²⁰ the reduction is valid²¹ even if the ladders were far removed from one another.²²

R. Bebai b. Abaye ruled: If²³ one balcony was built²⁴ above another balcony a valid reduction is thereby effected if either the lower one had an area²⁵ of four handbreadths [by four handbreadths]²⁶ or, where it was smaller,²⁷ if the upper one had an area of four handbreadths and there was no space of three handbreadths between them.²⁸ Similarly²⁹ R. Nahman citing Rabbah b. Abbuha ruled: A step-ladder³⁰ effects³¹ a reduction if the length of the lower rung was four handbreadths or, where it was shorter, if the upper one was four handbreadths long and there was no space of three handbreadths between them.

R. Nahman further stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha:

- (1) If they had been covered the vegetables would not have been allowed to be moved on the Sabbath (cf. infra).
- (2) Since the vegetables did not take root in the ground.
- (3) V. Glos., if they were buried in a vineyard.
- (4) If this happened in the course of such a year.
- (5) Kil. 1, 9: Shab. 50a. Now, as the vegetables mentioned may be removed on the Sabbath, though they were buried in the ground, so would the bowl spoken of by R. Yehiel be allowed to be removed on the Sabbath. How then could the bowl be regarded as an effective reduction.
- (6) R. Yehiel's ruling.
- (7) For the removal of the bowl. As removal in such circumstances would involve work that is definitely forbidden on the Sabbath the bowl would have to remain in its position throughout the Sabbath day, and consequently may also be regarded as 'a valid reduction'.
- (8) Which is very small. Aliter: 'A ladder of rushes or twigs'.
- (9) On account of the smallness of its size or the frailty of its structure which makes it easily portable.
- (10) Which is heavier and not easily movable.
- (11) Lit., 'and anything that may be taken on the Sabbath'.
- (12) Since the latter too may be moved on the Sabbath.
- (13) Lit., 'there'.
- (14) Though it is permitted to be moved it may be expected to remain in position throughout the Sabbath on account of its weight.
- (15) Of the wall, in one of the courtyards. Lit., 'from here'.
- (16) In the other courtyard.
- (17) Lit., 'and (there was) not between this and that'.
- (18) Since, despite the fact that the ladders are not exactly facing each other, it is fairly easy to ascend to the top of the wall by means of the one ladder, to stride over the top and to descend into the next courtyard by means of the other ladder. The two ladders may, therefore, be regarded as a valid opening between the courtyards.
- (19) Sc. that it would not be very easy to gain access from one courtyard into the other.
- (20) In consequence of which it is quite convenient to walk along the top of the wall.
- (21) Since it is possible to ascend to the top of the wall by means of the one ladder and to walk along the thickness of the wall to the other ladder.
- (22) Lit., 'separated more'.
- (23) In order to reduce the length of a wall between two courtyards.
- (24) Into the side of the wall.
- (25) So according to Tosaf. Aliter: A length along the wall (Rashi).
- (26) And was built within three handbreadths from the ground and within ten handbreadths from the top of the wall. In this case the upper balcony may be completely disregarded.
- (27) Lit., 'also there is lot in the lower one four'.
- (28) So that the two may be regarded as supplementary to each other and as a single unit effect the required reduction. If a greater distance than three handbreadths, however, separated them from each other they cannot be regarded as one unit and the reduction is invalid.
- (29) Lit., 'and'.
- (30) Lit., 'a ladder whose rungs fly', opposite to the steps of a staircase that are solidly built upon one another.
- (31) For notes on this paragraph cf. notes on the case of balconies in the prev. one mut. mut.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 78a

If on a moulding of an area of four handbreadths by four handbreadths that projected from a wall¹ a ladder of the smallest size² was rested³ a valid reduction is thereby effected.⁴ This, however, applies only where the ladder was resting on it,⁵ but if it was placed at the side⁶ of its the latter is thereby merely extended.⁷

R. Nahman further stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: A wal⁸ that was nineteen handbreadths high requires only one projection⁹ to enable it to be used as a means of access,¹⁰ but a wall⁸ twenty handbreadths high requires for the purpose two projections.¹¹ R. Hisda observed: This,¹² however, applies only where they are not situated exactly one above the other.¹³ R. Huna ruled: If in a public domain there was a post ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths wide¹⁴ and a peg of the smallest size had been inserted on it,¹⁵ a valid reduction is thereby effected.¹⁶ R. Adda b. Ahabah observed: Provided the peg was three handbreadths high.¹⁷ Both Abaye and Raba, however, maintain: Even if it¹⁸ was not three handbreadths high. What is their reason? — Because it¹⁹ is no longer suitable for use.²⁰ R. Ashi ruled:²¹ Even if it¹⁸ was three handbreadths high. What is the reason? — It is possible to suspend some object from it.²² R. Aha son of Raba asked R. Ashi, ‘What is the ruling where it¹⁹ was completely covered with pegs?’²³ — ‘Did you not hear’, the other replied: ‘the following ruling of R. Johanan:²⁴ A pit and the bank around it²⁵ combine to constitute a depth of ten handbreadths?’²⁶ Now seeing that [the bank] cannot be used²⁷ why [should it be regarded as a private domain]? What then can you say in reply? That some object²⁸ might be placed over it and thereby it is made available for use. Well then, here also²⁹ some object³⁰ might be placed [over them]³¹ and thereby it is made available for use’.³²

Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled: A wal³³ ten handbreadths high requires a ladder of fourteen handbreadths in length³⁴ to render it permissible for use³⁵ R. Joseph ruled: Even [a ladder] of thirteen handbreadths³⁶ and a fraction [is sufficient].³⁷ Abaye ruled: Even one of eleven handbreadths³⁸ and a fraction suffices.³⁹ R. Huna son of R. Joshua ruled: Even one of seven handbreadths and a fraction suffices.⁴⁰ Rab stated: That a ladder in a vertical position effects a reduction is a tradition but I do not know the reason for it.⁴¹ ‘Does not Abba’,⁴² Samuel said to him,⁴³ ‘know the reason for this ruling? The case is in fact similar to that of a balcony above a balcony’.⁴⁴

Rabbah citing R. Hiyya said: The palm-trees of Babylon⁴⁵ need not be fixed to the ground.⁴⁶ What is the reason? Their heaviness imparts permanency of position to them.⁴⁷ R. Joseph, however, citing R. Oshaia, ruled: The ladders in Babylon⁴⁸ need not be fixed in position.⁴⁶ What is the reason? Their heaviness imparts permanency of position to them. He⁴⁹ who spoke of ladders would a fortiori apply the same ruling to palm-trees.⁵⁰ He,⁵¹ however, who spoke of palm-trees does not apply the same ruling to ladders.⁵²

R. Joseph enquired of Rabbah: What is the ruling where two ladders⁵³ were held together by straw links between them?⁵⁴ The sole of the foot, the other replied, cannot ascend upon them.⁵⁵ What is your ruling if the ladder⁵⁶ was in the middle and the straw links were on each side?⁵⁷ — Behold, the other replied, the sole of the foot does ascend upon them.⁵⁸

(1) Between two courtyards.

(2) Sc. even one whose width was less than four handbreadths, but whose rungs were fixed within three handbreadths from one another, and the lowest one was within three handbreadths from t^e ground.

(3) So that the moulding formed a kind of platform which the ladder resting on it joined with the courtyard floor below.

(4) Because the platform above is of the prescribed size and, together with the ladder, constitutes a valid means of access between the courtyards.

(5) The moulding.

(6) The top of the ladder resting on the wall itself’.

(7) But as the ladder now forms no connection between it and the ground it is, on account of the distance of the latter from it, no valid reduction.

- (8) Between two courtyards.
- (9) In the middle of its height on which the top of a ladder may be supported.
- (10) Between the courtyards. Lit., 'to make it permitted'. A projection in the middle point of a height of nineteen handbreadths leaves a distance of less than ten handbreadths both below and above it.
- (11) One below the lower ten handbreadths of the height of the wall and the other within ten handbreadths from the top.
- (12) That the two projections form, valid reduction.
- (13) So that it is possible to connect the two to each other by means of a second ladder.
- (14) Sc. four by four. A post of such dimensions constitutes a private domain from which into the public domain and from the public domain into which the movement of objects on the Sabbath is forbidden.
- (15) In its surface on the top so that uppermost area was reduced to one of less than four handbreadths.
- (16) The post loses the status of a private domain.
- (17) if it was smaller it is regarded as part of the surface of the top of the post.
- (18) The peg.
- (19) The top of the post.
- (20) Since the peg, however low it may be, breaks up the top's surface.
- (21) The post is still regarded as a private domain.
- (22) And since the post can still be used as a private domain for this purpose, the peg cannot effect any valid reduction in the surface of its top which, consequently, remains a private domain.
- (23) In consequence of which it cannot be use' at all. Is its size in this case deemed to be reduced and the post, therefore, loses its status as a private domain or is the law in the case of many pegs the same as in that of one peg?
- (24) Lit., 'that which . . . said'.
- (25) Lit., 'and its segment', Sc. a segment of the earth excavated from the pit and placed around its rim.
- (26) The prescribed minimum of depth constituting a private domain. The thickness of the bank similarly combines with the hole of the pit to constitute the prescribed minimum of four handbreadths by four (cf. Shab, 99a).
- (27) Since a part of the prescribed minimum is the hole (cf. prev. n.).
- (28) A board or a flat stone.
- (29) Where the top of a post is covered with pegs.
- (30) Having a surface of four handbreadths by four.
- (31) Over the Pegs.
- (32) The post the top of which is completely covered with pegs is, therefore, regarded as a private domain.
- (33) Between two courtyards.
- (34) Placed in a slanting position at a distance of ten handbreadths from the wall with its top resting on the top edge of the wall (v. foll. n.).
- (35) Sc. to allow free movement of objects between the courtyards. As the ladder, the wall, and the part of the courtyard floor between the latter and the foot of the former represent respectively the hypotenuse and the two sides of an isosceles right-angled triangle, and since the wall is ten handbreadths high and the distance between the foot of the ladder and the wall is also (cf. prev. n.) ten handbreadths, the length, or height of the ladder must be $(10 + 10 \times \frac{2}{5} \text{ approx.} = 10 + 4 =) 14$ handbreadths approx. (cf. Tosaf. a.l.).
- (36) A handbreadth less than the length required by Rab Judah.
- (37) In his opinion it is either not necessary (cf. Supra n. 5) to remove the foot of the ladder as much as ten handbreadths from the wall, or it suffices if its top reaches only to within one handbreadth from the top of the wall (cf. R. Han.).
- (38) Three handbreadths less than the length required by Rab Judah.
- (39) Since a distance of three handbreadths may be disregarded in accordance with the principle of labud, it suffices for the ladder to reach the wall at a height of seven handbreadths and a fraction (cf. supra n. 7 mut. mut.).
- (40) He maintains that a ladder in a vertical position effects the same permissibility as one in a slanting position. By putting the ladder close to the wall in a vertical position its top reaching a point within three handbreadths from the top of the wall, on the principle of labud (cf. prev. n.) this point may be regarded as the top of the wall.
- (41) Sc. why should a ladder in such a position, in which one can hardly climb upon it, effect a reduction?
- (42) Sc. Rab. His proper name was Abba while Rab ('Master') was a title of distinction he earned as the foremost Master of his time.
- (43) Samuel was merely explaining the tradition. He himself, as stated supra by Rab Judah, requires a standing ladder of fourteen handbreadths.

- (44) Supra 77b, where reduction is effected though the balconies are exactly one above the other and one can hardly climb from the one into the other.
- (45) If their cut trunks were placed beside a wall that intervened between two courtyards.
- (46) Sc. they effect reduction, though, being suitable as seats, they have the status of articles that may be moved from their places on the Sabbath.
- (47) Since no one would be likely to shift them from their place during the Sabbath.
- (48) Cf. Supra n. 2 mut. mut.
- (49) R. Oshaia.
- (50) If ladders that are not so heavy as the palm-trees effect reduction how much more so the latter.
- (51) R. Hiyya.
- (52) Cf. supra n. 7 mut. mut.
- (53) Each less than two handbreadths wide.
- (54) That formed rungs similar to those of the ladders and supplemented their width to the prescribed minimum of four handbreadths. Lit., 'a ladder from here and a ladder from here and straws in the middle'.
- (55) The straw links. Since it is the middle of the ladder, on which one's foot is usually put when ascending, and since that middle part consists of straw links that are unsuitable for the purpose, the ladder cannot effect any reduction.
- (56) Whose width was less than the prescribed minimum of four handbreadths.
- (57) Lit., 'straws from here and straws from here and a ladder in the middle'.
- (58) The rungs of the ladder. When ascending on these which are in the middle, one uses the straw links on either side as supports for one's hands. The entire structure may, therefore, be regarded as a unit of the prescribed size and reduction may thereby be effected.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 78b

If grooves¹ to supplement the width of the ladder,² were cut in the wall,³ up to what height must this be carried?⁴ — To ten handbreadths,⁵ the other replied. If, he again asked him, all the ladder was cut⁶ in the wall,⁷ up to what height must this be carried? — Up to its⁸ full height, the other replied. Wherein, however, lies the difference?⁹ In the former case¹⁰ the other replied, one can easily ascend¹¹ [to the top of the wall], while in the latter case¹² this cannot be done.¹³

R. Joseph enquired of Rabbah: What is the ruling if a tree was set aside as a ladder?¹⁴ The enquiry is made with reference to the view of Rabbi¹⁵ and it is also made with reference to that of the Rabbis.¹⁶ It is made with reference to the view of Rabbi' since It is possible that Rabbi applied the principle that 'any act that is forbidden as shebuth¹⁷ is not subject to that prohibition during twilight'¹⁸ only there¹⁹ where the crucial moment²⁰ is at twilight,²¹ but [not where]²² the entire day [is involved];²³ or is it possible that even according to the Rabbis the tree may have the status of a doorway,²⁴ except that it is one at the side of which a lion crouches?²⁵ What again²⁶ is the ruling where an Asherah²⁷ was set aside to serve as a ladder? The enquiry is made with reference to the view of R. Judah²⁸ and it is also made with reference to that of the Rabbis.²⁹ It 'is made with reference to the view of R. Judah' since it is possible that R. Judah applied the principle that a house may be bought with objects the benefit from which is forbidden, only there,³⁰ because after the 'erub had enabled hint to acquire³¹ the place³² its owner derives no further satisfaction³³ from its preservation;³⁴ or is it possible that even according to the Rabbis an Asherah³⁵ has the status of a doorway,³⁶ except that a lion crouches at its side?³⁷ — A tree, the other replied, is permitted³⁸ but an Asherah is forbidden.³⁹ R. Hisda demurred: On the contrary! A tree the restriction on the use of which is due to the incidence of the Sabbath should⁴⁰ be forbidden, while an Asherah the restrictions on which are due to an external⁴¹ cause should not be forbidden. So⁴² it was also stated:⁴³ When Rabin came⁴⁴ he reported in the name of R. Eleazar or, as others say: R. Abbahu reported in the name of R. Johanan: Any object the restriction of the use of which is clue to the incidence of the Sabbath is forbidden, while in object the restriction on which is due to an external⁴¹ cause is permitted.⁴⁵ R. Nahman b. Isaac taught thus: [The permissibility of] a tree is a question at issue between Rabbi and the Rabbis and that of an Asherah is a question at issue between R. Judah and the Rabbis.

MISHNAH. IF A TRENCH⁴⁶ BETWEEN TWO COURTYARDS WAS TEN HANDBREADTHS DEEP AND FOUR HANDBREADTHS WIDE, TWO 'ERUBS⁴⁷ MAY BE PREPARED BUT NOT ONE,⁴⁸ EVEN IF IT WAS FULL OF STUBBLE OR STRAW.⁴⁹ IF, HOWEVER, IT WAS FULL OF EARTH OR GRAVEL,⁵⁰ ONLY ONE 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED, BUT NOT TWO.⁵¹

IF A BOARD FOUR HANDBREADTHS WIDE WAS PLACED⁵² ACROSS IT,⁵³ AND SO ALSO WHERE TWO BALCONIES⁵⁴ WERE OPPOSITE ONE ANOTHER,⁵⁵ THE TENANTS MAY PREPARE TWO 'ERUBS⁵⁶ OR, IF THEY PREFER, ONLY ONE. IF THE BOARD WAS OF A LESSER WIDTH TWO 'ERUBS⁵⁶ MAY BE PREPARED, BUT NOT ONE.

GEMARA. But does not straw constitute a proper filling seeing that we have learnt: If a heap of straw between two courtyards was ten handbreadths high two 'erubs may be prepared⁵⁶ but not one?⁵⁷ — Abaye replied: As regards the formation of a partition no one disputes the ruling that straw is regarded as a valid partition,⁵⁸ with regard, however, to its serving as a valid filling⁵⁹ it is only in the case where one completely abandoned it⁶⁰ that it constitutes a valid filling, but not otherwise.

IF, HOWEVER, IT WAS FULL OF EARTH. This⁶¹ then applies⁶² even where one's intention⁶³ was not known. But have we not learnt: If a house was filled with straw or gravel and the owner announced his intention to abandon it,⁶⁴ it is duly abandoned,⁶⁵ from which it follows, does it not, that only if the owner expressly abandoned it is it regarded as abandoned⁶⁶

- (1) On either side of the rungs of the ladder.
 - (2) To the prescribed minimum of four handbreadths.
 - (3) Between two court yards, on which the ladder was leaning.
 - (4) Lit., 'he cut to supplement in a wall, by how much'.
 - (5) From the ground. Whatever the height of the wall, valid steps on a width of four handbreadths and a height often handbreadths are regarded as a valid doorway between the courtyards (Rashi). Aliter: The grooves must be cut to a height within ten handbreadths from the top of the wall (R. Tam.).
 - (6) Lit., 'he cut it all'.
 - (7) Sc. instead of a movable ladder, grooves were cut in the wall on a width of four handbreadths.
 - (8) The wall's.
 - (9) Between the last two cases. Sc. why is a height of ten handbreadths sufficient in the former case while in the latter the grooves are required to reach to the very top of the wall?
 - (10) Where the ladder reached the top of the wall and the grooves were only supplementary to its width.
 - (11) By means of the ladder itself. As ascent is easy it is sufficient for the supplementary grooves to reach to a height of ten handbreadths only.
 - (12) Where there was no ladder at all.
 - (13) Unless grooves are cut to the full height of the wall.
 - (14) For a wall that intervened between two courtyards whose tenants desired to have free access to each other.
 - (15) Who laid down (supra 32b) that an 'erub of Sabbath limits deposited in a tree is valid.
 - (16) Who regard such an 'erub as invalid.
 - (17) V. Glos.
 - (18) So MS.M.
 - (19) The case of 'erub of Sabbath limits.
 - (20) The time the 'erub must take effect.
 - (21) Provided an 'erub of Sabbath limits was valid and effective at that moment its subsequent consumption or loss does not in any way deprive its owner of any of the privileges the 'erub had conferred upon him. Since the prohibition against the use of a tree is only Rabbinical, and since such a prohibition may be suspended at twilight, Rabbi may well have maintained that the 'erub was valid.
 - (22) As in the case of 'erub of courtyards under discussion.

(23) Since access through a closed door is obviously impossible the doorway between the two courtyards must remain open and be available for use throughout the day if the 'erub is to retain its validity until the termination of the Sabbath. Now since the use of a tree is forbidden on the Sabbath the tree appointed cannot possibly serve as a virtual 'doorway' even according to Rabbi.

(24) And if one is appointed to serve as a ladder access between the courtyards is thereby permitted.

(25) Metaphor. The tree may be a valid 'doorway' that cannot be used on account of a Rabbinical prohibition as an ordinary open door that cannot be used on account of a lion that crouched beside it. As in the latter case, though debarred from the use of the doorway itself, the tenants are nevertheless permitted access to one another through any holes or crevices in the intervening wall so are they permitted in the former case even according to the Rabbis.

(26) If in the last case the ruling is that a tree may be regarded as a proper ladder and valid 'doorway'.

(27) A tree or grove devoted to idol worship from which no benefit may be derived.

(28) Who laid down (supra 31a) that an 'erub deposited on a grove is valid though one may derive no benefit from a grove.

(29) Who, contrary to the view of R. Judah, consider an 'erub on a grove as invalid.

(30) In the case of 'erub of Sabbath limits whose validity is determined at the moment the Sabbath begins.

(31) As his Sabbath abode.

(32) In which it was deposited.

(33) Throughout the Sabbath.

(34) He derives, therefore, no benefit from the grove. The benefit he may seem to derive at twilight, when the 'erub acquires validity, is in fact no benefit in the material sense, since an erub of Sabbath limits is allowed only for the purpose of enabling one to perform a religious act the benefit from which is purely spiritual. In the case of an 'erub of courtyards, however, which does serve the tenants' material benefits, and a doorway between courtyards the benefit of which is enjoyed throughout the Sabbath, R. Judah may well agree that an Asherah as a 'doorway' is invalid.

(35) Since the tenants do not use the Sabbath itself.

(36) By means of which the tenants of both courtyards are enabled to merge their two domains into one.

(37) Cf. supra p. 546, n. 4 mut. mut.

(38) To be assigned as a ladder and to assume the status of a valid doorway.

(39) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.

(40) Since it is desired to use it for the purpose of relaxing a Sabbath law.

(41) Lit., 'another', one not connected with the Sabbath but with idolatry.

(42) In agreement with R. Hisda's submission.

(43) By Amoras.

(44) From Palestine to Babylon.

(45) To be assigned as a ladder and to assume the status of a valid doorway.

(46) Separating them completely from each other.

(47) On for each courtyard.

(48) Jointly for the two courtyards. A trench of such dimensions is regarded as a complete separation between the two courtyards. One that was narrower than four handbreadths, since it is easy to step across it, is disregarded and the tenants of the two courtyards may join in one 'erub.

(49) Since these were not intended to remain there permanently.

(50) So that there was no substantial break between the courtyards.

(51) Because, by so doing, the tenants of the one courtyard would impose restrictions on those of the other who (cf. prev. n.) 'virtually occupied the same courtyard.

(52) To form a sort of bridge between the courtyards.

(53) The trench.

(54) Belonging to two different owners.

(55) And a board of the width mentioned connected them. [According to Rashi, the two balconies, it appears, were on the same side of the street, v. Strashun, a.l.].

(56) One for each courtyard.

(57) Infra 79a; which proves that straw, though not intended to remain permanently in its position, constitutes nevertheless a valid partition. Why then does it not equally constitute a valid filling?

(58) So long as it remains in its place; as is the case with other movable objects which (cf. supra 15b) constitute a valid partition.

(59) Sc. to be treated as a part of the ground.

(60) By announcing his intention to leave it permanently in the trench.

(61) The ruling that ONLY ONE 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED because, obviously, the two courtyards are regarded as one.

(62) Since no qualifying conditions were specified.

(63) To keep the gravel permanently in the trench.

(64) The straw or the gravel,

(65) And the house is regarded as filled in respect of the laws of ohel. (Cf. Ohal. XV, 7 the contents of which is here quoted in a summarized form).

(66) Lit., 'yes'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 79a

but not if he did not expressly do so?¹ — R. Huna replied: Who is it that taught Ohaloth? R. Jose.² But how could it be the view of³ R. Jose seeing that he was heard to give a reverse ruling, for it was taught: R. Jose ruled, straw⁴ that was not likely to be removed⁵ is on a par with ordinary earth⁶ and is deemed to be abandoned; earth⁴ that is likely to be removed is on a par with ordinary stubble⁶ and is not deemed to be abandoned?⁷ — Rather, said R. Assi, who is it that taught 'Erubin'?⁸ It is R. Jose.⁹ R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied:¹⁰ You are pointing out an incongruity between a law concerning levitical uncleanness and one concerning Sabbath; leave alone the restrictions of the Sabbath since on it a person abandons even his purse.¹¹

R. Ashi replied:¹⁰ You are pointing out an incongruity between a ruling concerning a house and one concerning a trench; a trench might well be expected to be filled up,¹² but is a house also expected¹³ to be filled up?¹⁴

IF A BOARD FOUR HANDBREADTHS WIDE WAS PLACED ACROSS IT. Raba explained: This¹⁵ was taught only in the case where it was laid across the width of it¹⁶ but if it was laid lengthwise¹⁷ even a board of the minutest width¹⁸ also suffices,¹⁹ since the width of the trench is thereby reduced to less than four handbreadths.²⁰

AND SO ALSO WHERE TWO BALCONIES WERE OPPOSITE ONE ANOTHER. Raba explained: With reference to what we learned,²¹ AND²² SO ALSO WHERE TWO BALCONIES etc. the ruling²³ applies only to such as are²⁴ opposite each other but not to such as are not opposite each other or to such as are above each other: and even in the case of such as are above each other the ruling²⁵ applies only where there was a distance of three handbreadths between them²⁶ but if there was no such distance between them they may both be regarded as one crooked balcony.

MISHNAH. IF A HEAP OF STRAW BETWEEN TWO COURTYARDS YARDS WAS TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH,²⁷ TWO 'ERUBS²⁸ MAY BE PREPARED BUT NOT ONE.²⁹ THE TENANTS OF THE ONE COURTYARD MAY FEED THEIR CATTLE AT THEIR SIDE³⁰ AND THOSE OF THE OTHER COURTYARD MAY FEED THEIRS ON THE OTHER SIDE.³¹ IF THE HEIGHT OF THE STRAW HEAP WAS REDUCED³² TO LESS THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS, ONE 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED³³ BUT NOT TWO.²⁸

GEMARA. R. Huna observed:³⁴ Provided no tenant puts any straw³⁵ into his basket and feeds his cattle.³⁶ It is then permitted to put cattle³⁷ there;³⁸ but did not R. Huna lay down in the name of R. Hanina: A man may put his beast on a stretch of grass³⁹ on the Sabbath day⁴⁰ but not upon mukzeh?⁴¹ — He only stands⁴² near the beast⁴³ which itself goes and eats.⁴⁴

'Provided no tenant puts any straw into his basket'. But was it not taught: If a house⁴⁵ was between two courtyards and was filled with straw, two 'erubs may be prepared⁴⁶ but not one,⁴⁷ and each tenant may put some straw⁴⁸ into his basket and feed his cattle therewith. If the height of the straw was reduced to less than ten handbreadths, both⁴⁹ are forbidden.⁵⁰ How is one to proceed?⁵¹ One of the tenants locks his house⁵² and renounces his right to his share, and thereby he⁵³ remains under restrictions⁵⁴ but his friend is permitted.⁵⁵ And the same law⁵⁶ applies to a pit⁵⁷ of straw between two Sabbath limits.⁵⁸ At any rate, was it not here stated: 'each' tenant may put some straw into his basket and feed his cattle therewith'?⁵⁹ — I might reply: In the case of a house, since it has⁶⁰ a ceiling, the reduction in the straw is quite noticeable,⁶¹ but here⁶² the diminution is not noticeable.⁶³ 'If the height of the straw was reduced to less than ten handbreadths both are forbidden'. But, it follows, if it was ten handbreadths high this is permitted even though the ceiling was much higher. May it not then be inferred that partitions that do not reach the ceiling are regarded as valid ones?⁶⁴ — Abaye replied: We are here dealing with the case of a house that was thirteen handbreadths minus a fraction in height and that of the straw was ten handbreadths in height.⁶⁵ R. Huna son of R. Joshua, however, replied: It may even refer to a house that was ten handbreadths high

- (1) How then is this to be reconciled with the implication of our Mishnah according to which even where a person's intention was not known his gravel is deemed to be abandoned?
 - (2) Whose view differs from that of our Mishnah.
 - (3) Lit., 'if'.
 - (4) With which a house was filled.
 - (5) concerning which it is known that its owner does not require it though he himself made no announcement to this effect.
 - (6) About which its owner's intention is not known at all.
 - (7) Tosef. Ohal. XV; which shows that, according to R. Jose, earth is deemed to be abandoned even if no declaration to this effect has been made by its owner. How then could R. Huna maintain that the Mishnah of Ohal. cited represents R. Jose's view?
 - (8) Sc. the law of 'erub in our Mishnah from which it follows that earth is deemed to be abandoned even where its owner did not declare his intention to leave it in its place.
 - (9) Whose view here is in full agreement with the view he expressed in the last Baraitha cited.
 - (10) To the apparent contradiction between our Mishnah and that of Ohal. (v. supra 78b ad fin.).
 - (11) Because he is forbidden to handle it on that day. For the same reason one is assumed to abandon earth which also may not be moved on that day. Hence the lenient view in our Mishnah in the case of earth and gravel in a trench. As straw and stubble, however, may be handled on the Sabbath, since they are used for feeding the cattle, they cannot be regarded as abandoned unless the owner had explicitly indicated his intention to do so. In the case of levitical uncleanness, however, where the prohibition against the removal of either straw or gravel does not apply, neither can be regarded as abandoned unless the owner has made a definite announcement to that effect.
 - (12) Any earth or gravel in it might consequently be regarded as abandoned even where the owner's intention was not known.
 - (13) Lit., 'stands'.
 - (14) Of course not. Earth or gravel in a house cannot, therefore, be regarded as abandoned unless the owner had specifically expressed his intention to leave it there.
 - (15) That the board must be four handbreadths wide.
 - (16) The trench.
 - (17) He fixed the length of the board to one side of the trench in the form of a ledge so that the length of the board and of the trench run parallel to each other, the length of the former being no less than four handbreadths, the prescribed minimum for the width of a 'doorway'.
 - (18) Provided it was wide enough to reduce the width of the trench on a length of four handbreadths (cf. prev. n.) to less than four handbreadths.
 - (19) To eliminate the trench.
 - (20) And only a trench that is four handbreadths wide (cf. our Mishnah) constitutes a break between two courtyards.
 - (21) So Bah. Cur. edd., 'which thou saidest'.

- (22) The reading that follows is an emendation by Bah. of the reading of cur. edd. Cf. also MS.M.
- (23) That the tenants of the two balconies may join in a single 'erub.
- (24) Lit., 'yes'.
- (25) That the two balconies may not prepare an 'erub jointly.
- (26) The two balconies.
- (27) And running all the length of the junction between the courtyards.
- (28) One for each courtyard.
- (29) For both courtyards, since the heap of straw forms a separation between the one courtyard and the other.
- (30) Lit., 'these may feed from here'.
- (31) Though the straw is thereby diminished and might conceivably be reduced to a height of less than ten handbreadths when the two courtyards would virtually become one and, in consequence of which, the tenants of the one courtyard would impose restrictions upon those of the other. As only a reduction in height that extended along more than ten cubits of the junction would cause the courtyards to be merged into one (since a lesser width might be regarded as a doorway) and as cattle are not likely to eat so much in one day, the possibility mentioned need not be provided against.
- (32) Along all, or ten cubits of the junction.
- (33) For both courtyards, if the reduction took place on a week-day.
- (34) With reference to the ruling that THE TENANTS . . . MAY FEED THEIR CATTLE.
- (35) Which, forming as it does the partition between the . . . courtyards, is mukzeh (v. Glos.).
- (36) The cattle must eat direct from the heap.
- (37) Cf. prev. n.
- (38) Though the straw is mukzeh and there is the possibility of forgetting and picking it up with the hands which is forbidden.
- (39) Lit., 'grasses'.
- (40) And, since a man is careful in the observance of Sabbath prohibitions, there is no need to provide against the possibility of his plucking the grass forgetfully on the Sabbath.
- (41) Shab. 122a. Since the law of mukzeh, being only Rabbinical, is one of a minor character the man might lightly forget it and so pick the mukzeh up with his own hands on the Sabbath, an act which is forbidden. Now since R. Huna forbids the putting of a beast upon mukzeh, how could he, according to his interpretation of our Mishnah, allow a beast to be put immediately in front of the straw heap which is definitely mukzeh?
- (42) In the case spoken of in our Mishnah.
- (43) To prevent it from straying.
- (44) As the man does not stand at the side of his beast no provision was deemed necessary against the possibility of his handling of the mukzeh.
- (45) Into which a house from each courtyard opened.
- (46) One by the tenants of each courtyard, since the straw forms a separation between them.
- (47) For the two courtyards jointly.
- (48) From his side of the straw.
- (49) The tenants of either courtyard.
- (50) To move any objects from their respective houses into their respective courtyards.
- (51) If it is desired to enable at least one of the tenants to use his courtyard.
- (52) That opened into the house between the courtyards.
- (53) Since he renounced his right and his courtyard is no more his.
- (54) He may not move any objects from his house to his courtyard and vice versa.
- (55) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.
- (56) That (on a festival day) the residents on one side may use the straw from their side and those on the other side may use from the other side.
- (57) Or 'bundles'.
- (58) Of two towns, where half of the pit was within the Sabbath limit of the one town and the other half was within that of the other. The people on either side may use the straw on their side, no preventive measure having been instituted against the possibility of their using the straw from the other side.
- (59) How then could R. Huna maintain that no tenant may put any straw into his basket?
- (60) Cur. edd. in parenthesis, 'walls and'.

(61) Since the lower the straw the bigger the space between it and the ceiling. As its diminution to a height of less than ten handbreadths would be clearly noticeable the use of the straw would cease as soon as that height was reached. Above that height the straw does not serve the purpose of a wall and is not, therefore, subject to the restrictions of mukzeh.

(62) Where the heap is in the open.

(63) And one might erroneously continue to use the straw even after it had been reduced in height to less than ten handbreadths when the restrictions of mukzeh prevent its use. Hence R. Huna's ruling that no straw may be put into a tenant's basket for feeding his cattle.

(64) But is not this contradictory to a ruling (supra 72a) in respect of five companies who kept the Sabbath in the same room.

(65) On the principle of labud the walls are deemed to reach to the ceiling.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 79b

but the straw was seven handbreadths and a fraction, since a distance of less than three handbreadths is regarded as labud. According to Abaye one can well understand why the expression 'than ten' was used;¹ according to R. Huna son of R. Joshua,² however, what could be the purport of 'than ten'? — 'Than the statutory height of ten'.³

'Both are forbidden'. Does this⁴ then imply that tenants who arrived on a Sabbath impose restrictions?⁵ — No; since it is possible that the reduction⁶ occurred on the previous day.⁷

'How is one to proceed? One of the tenants locks his house and renounces his right to his share'. Both [acts]?⁸ — It is this that was meant: He either locks his house⁹ or renounces his right to his share. And if you prefer I might say: Both [acts] are in fact necessary¹⁰ for, having been in the habit of using it, he might continue to move objects into it.¹¹

'He remains under restrictions but his friend is permitted'. Is not this obvious? — This ruling was required only in the case where the other tenant had subsequently¹² renounced his share to the former, and it is this that we were informed: That¹³ a renunciation may not follow a previous renunciation.¹⁴

'And the same law applies to a pit of straw between two Sabbath limits'. Is not this¹⁵ perfectly obvious?¹⁶ — The ruling was required only according to the view of R. Akiba who holds that the ordinance of Sabbath limits is Pentateuchal.¹⁷ Since it might have been presumed that a preventive measure should be enacted¹⁸ against the possibility of exchange,¹⁹ hence we were informed that no such preventive measure was deemed necessary.

MISHNAH. HOW IS SHITTUF²⁰ IN AN ALLEY EFFECTED? ONE [OF THE RESIDENTS] PLACES THERE A JAR²¹ AND²² DECLARES, 'THIS BELONGS²³ TO ALL THE RESIDENTS OF THE ALLEY'. AND HE CONFERS POSSESSION UPON THEM THROUGH HIS GROWN-UP SON OR DAUGHTER, THROUGH HIS HEBREW MANSERVANT OR MAIDSERVANT OR THROUGH HIS WIFE;²⁴ BUT HE MAY NOT CONFER POSSESSION EITHER THROUGH HIS SON OR DAUGHTER, IF THEY ARE MINORS, OR THROUGH HIS CANAANITE BONDMAN OR BONDWOMAN, BECAUSE THEIR HAND IS AS HIS HAND.²⁵

GEMARA. Rab Judah ruled: A jar²⁶ for the shittuf of alleys²⁷ must be raised²⁸ from the ground to the height of a handbreadth.²⁹ Raba observed: These two rulings were given by the elders of Pumbeditha:³⁰ One is the ruling just cited. The other is the following: He who recites the kiddush³¹ has performed his duty if he tastes a mouthful,³² otherwise he does not.

R. Habiba observed: The following ruling also was given by the elders of Pumbeditha.³⁰ For Rab Judah³³ stated in the name of Samuel: A fire³⁴ for a woman in childbirth may be made on the Sabbath. From this one might understand that a fire may be made only³⁵ for a woman in childbirth but not for any other sick person, only in the rainy season but not in the summer season. It was, however, stated: R. Hiyya b. Abin citing Samuel ruled: If a person has been bled and felt chilly a fire may be made for him on the Sabbath even during the hottest period of the year.³⁶

Amemar observed, 'The following ruling also was given by the elders of Pumbeditha, for it was stated: What is an Asherah by implication? Rab said: Any tree that is guarded by heathen priests

- (1) Since he explained that the heap was ten handbreadths high.
- (2) Who explains that the straw was only seven handbreadths and a fraction high.
- (3) Sc. seven handbreadths and a fraction which under the law of labud, are regarded as ten.
- (4) The ruling that the tenants impose restrictions upon each other though, on account of the high altitude of the straw when the Sabbath begins, they were not then regarded as tenants of the same courtyard.
- (5) So Bomb. ed. Cur. edd., 'are forbidden'. But this question, surely, is a point at issue between R. Huna and R. Isaac (supra 17a) none of whom would have differed from the ruling of a Baraitha.
- (6) Of the height of the straw.
- (7) Friday, so that when the Sabbath began the tenants were already occupiers of the same courtyard.
- (8) I.e., why should it be necessary for the tenant (a) to lock his house and also (b) to renounce his right?
- (9) An act which is tantamount to a specific renunciation of his right.
- (10) For his sake, though not for that of his neighbours in whose benefit one act alone would have been sufficient.
- (11) But by the locking of his door he would be constantly reminded of the restrictions he imposed upon himself.
- (12) After the first had renounced his share in his favour.
- (13) On the Sabbath.
- (14) Once a tenant has renounced his share to any other tenant the latter cannot again, on the same Sabbath, renounce his share in favour of the former.
- (15) That the ruling applicable to 'erub of courtyards should equally apply to 'erub of Sabbath limits.
- (16) Since both forms of 'erub are Rabbinical.
- (17) Cf. Sot. 27a.

- (24) By requesting any of these to receive the jar and to acquire possession of it on behalf of all the residents.
- (25) Whatever they possess is his. As he cannot directly confer possession in upon the residents so cannot they.
- (26) Of wine or of any other foodstuffs.

- (28) By the person who acquires it on their behalf.
- (29) When the formula 'I acquire this for them is pronounced. If it is not raised to the prescribed height the jar remains in the possession of its original owner and the shittuf is consequently invalid.
- (30) Rab Judah and R. 'Aina (cf. Sanh. 17b).
- (31) Lit., 'sanctification', a prescribed form of benedictions and Biblical verses recited at the inauguration of the Sabbath, festivals and the New Year over a cup of wine or two loaves of bread.
- (32) Melo lugmaw in this case means a quantity which can be kept within one cheek (R. Tam.).
- (33) One of the elders (cf. supra n. 7).
- (34) Medurah, 'a pile of wood', 'a large fire'.
- (35) Lit., 'yes'.
- (36) Lit., 'the cycle of Tammuz', Tammuz being the first of the three months following the summer solstice.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 80a

and of which they do not taste the fruit;¹ and Samuel said: One, for instance, concerning which the priests² say: "These dates are for the beer of the temple of Nizrefe"³ since they drink it on their festival day;⁴ and⁵ the elders of Pumbeditha told me: The law is in agreement with Samuel'.

An objection was raised:⁶ How is shittuf in an alley effected? A jar of wine, oil, dates, dried figs or any other kind of fruit is brought there. If it is his own⁷ he must⁸ transfer possession to all the residents;⁹ and if it is theirs he must uniform them,¹⁰ and then one¹¹ raises it slightly¹² from the ground!¹³ — By the expression 'slightly' also a handbreadth was meant.

It was stated: The food for the shittuf of alleys, Rab ruled, requires no transfer of possession, and Samuel ruled: It does require transfer of possession. As regards the food for an 'erub of Sabbath limits, Rab ruled: Transfer of possession is required and Samuel ruled: Transfer of possession is not required. Samuel's view¹⁴ can well be justified, since we have learnt the one¹⁵ and have not learnt the other.¹⁶ What, however, is the justification for Rab's view?¹⁷ — The question of transfer is a point at issue between Tannas.¹⁸ For Rab Judah related in the name of Rab: The daughter-in-law of R. Oshaia was once overtaken by dusk when she went¹⁹ to a bath house²⁰ and her mother-in-law prepared for her an 'erub.²¹ R. Hiyya to whom the incident was reported forbade her return.²² Babylonian',²³ said R. Ishmael son of R. Jose to him, 'are you so strict about the laws of 'erub.²² Thus said my father: Wherever you see an opportunity of relaxing the laws of 'erub seize it'.²⁴ And when the question was raised: 'Was the 'erub prepared out of her mother-in-law's food and the reason [for the prohibition]²⁵ was that she²⁶ did not transfer possession to her²⁷ or was it rather that it was prepared out of her own²⁶ food and the reason for the prohibition²⁵ was that it was done without her²⁷ knowledge?' One of the Rabbis, whose name was R. Jacob, told them: 'It was explained to me by R. Johanan that the 'erub was prepared out of her mother-in-law's food and that the reason for the prohibition was that she did not transfer possession to her'.²⁸

R. Zera requested R. Jacob son of Jacob's daughter:²⁹ When you arrive in Palestine³⁰ make a detour to visit³¹ the Ladder of Tyre and ask R. Jacob b. Idi [his version of the incident].³² 'Was the 'erub', he asked him [in due course], 'prepared out of her mother-in-law's food and the reason for the prohibition was that she did not transfer possession to her or was it rather that it was prepared out of her own food and the reason for the prohibition was that it was done without her knowledge?' 'The 'erub', the other replied: 'was prepared out of her mother-in-law's food and the reason for the prohibition was that she did not transfer possession to her'.³³

R. Nahman stated: We have a tradition that both in the case of 'erubs of Sabbath limits and in that of³⁴ shittuf of alleys possession must be transferred.³⁵ R. Nahman, however, enquired: Is it necessary or not to confer possession in the case of an 'erub of dishes?³⁶ — 'Why', remarked R. Joseph, 'did he ask this question? Did he not hear the ruling laid down by R. Nahman b. K. Adda in the name of Samuel that an 'erub of dishes must be conferred [upon those who are to benefit from it]?' — 'It is obvious', Abaye retorted: 'that he did not hear it; for had he heard it what was the point of his asking?' — 'Did not Samuel rule', the first replied: 'that in the case of 'erubs of Sabbath limits possession need not be conferred and he nevertheless ruled that possession must be conferred?'³⁷ — 'What a comparison!³⁸ His ruling may well be justified there,³⁹ since Rab and Samuel are at variance on the point and he desired to inform us that we must adopt the restrictions of the one Master as well as those of the other Master, but in this case,⁴⁰ seeing that no one disputes Samuel's ruling⁴¹ would he, if he had heard it, have asked his question?'⁴²

A certain superintendent⁴³ of the town armory lived in the neighbourhood of R. Zera, and when [the Israelite residents] asked him to let his share⁴⁴ to them he refused.⁴⁵ They, thereupon, came to R. Zera and asked him whether it would be permissible to rent it from his⁴⁶ wife. 'Thus', he replied:

‘said Resh Lakish In the name of a great man (and who is it? — R. Hanina): A wife may prepare all ‘erub without her husband's knowledge’.

A certain superintendent⁴³ of the town armory lived in the neighbourhood of R. Judah b. Oshaia. ‘Will you’, the Israelite residents asked him, ‘let your share to us?’ He refused. They proceeded to R. Judah b. Oshaia and asked him whether it was permissible to rent it from his⁴⁶ wife, but he was unable to supply the information.⁴⁷ They then proceeded to R. Mattena who also was unable to supply it.⁴⁷ When they finally came to Rab Judah he told them), ‘Thus said Samuel: A wife may prepare an ‘erub without her husband's knowledge’.

An objection was raised: If women prepared an ‘erub or arranged shittuf without their husbands’ knowledge there is no validity either in their ‘erub⁴⁸ or in their shittuf?⁴⁹ — This is no difficulty, since one⁵⁰ deals with a person who imposes restrictions, while the other⁵¹ deals with one who does not impose restrictions.⁵² This explanation⁵³ may also be supported by a process of reasoning, since a contradiction would otherwise arise between two rulings of Samuel.⁵⁴ For Samuel ruled: ‘If one of the residents of an alley, who usually joins the other residents in shittuf refused to join then, the residents may⁵⁵ enter his house and collect his contribution to the shittuf by force’, [from which⁵⁶ it follows that this⁵⁷ applies only to] one who usually [joins his neighbours in the shittuf]⁵⁸ but not to one who did not.⁵⁹ This is conclusive.

May it be suggested that the following provides support to his view.⁶⁰ A resident may be compelled to provide a side-post and a cross-beam for an alley?

- (1) If they had not worshipped the tree as an Asherah they would not have abstained from eating of its fruit.
 - (2) Though they eat its fruit.
 - (3) A Persian house of worship, cf. A.Z., Sonc. ed., p. 239, n. 8.
 - (4) Though the tree itself is not worshipped it is regarded as all Asherah by implication since its produce is devoted to idolatry.
 - (5) Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis ‘Amemar said’.
 - (6) Against Rab Judah who laid down supra that the jar must be raised a handbreadth from the ground.
 - (7) That of the man who prepares the Shittuf.
 - (8) In the manner prescribed supra (v. our Mishnah and notes).
 - (9) So that they may all have a share in it.
 - (10) That their joint stock is to be used for shittuf. Since the ‘erub of a man who ‘is particular about his share in a joint ‘erub’ is invalid (supra 49a), all the residents must have an opportunity of expressing consent or disapproval. Unless they had such all opportunity the shittuf is invalid since it is possible that they would object to allow each other the full benefit of their respective shares.
 - (11) A qualified person (cf. our Mishnah).
 - (12) Emphasis on this word.
 - (13) Cf. supra p. 555, n. 6 mut. mut. How then is this to be reconciled with Rab Judah's ruling that the jar must be raised a full handbreadth from the ground?
 - (14) That transfer of possession is required in shittuf but not in all ‘erub of Sabbath limits.
 - (15) Lit., ‘here’, in our Mishnah where it is laid down that in the case of shittuf HE MUST CONFER POSSESSION.
 - (16) Where the law of ‘erub of Sabbath limits is enunciated (cf. infra 82a) no mention is made of transfer of possession.
 - (17) Which appears to be contrary to the rulings in the Mishnah.
 - (18) One of whom differs from the view in the Mishnah, and Rab follows his view.
 - (19) On the Sabbath eve.
 - (20) That was without the Sabbath limit of the town.
 - (21) Of Sabbath limits to enable her to return to town. (So Rashi. For a different interpretation v. Tosaf. a.l.)
 - (22) Cf. prev. n.
 - (23) R. Hiyya hailed from Babylon (cf. Suk. 20a).
 - (24) Lit., ‘make easy’.

- (25) By R. Hiyya.
- (26) The mother-in-law.
- (27) Her daughter-in-law.
- (28) Thus it has been shown that the question of the necessity for the transfer of possession in the case of an 'erub of Sabbath limits is one in dispute between the Tanna R. Hiyya and R. Ishmael. Rab, by adopting the view of the former, may, therefore, maintain it though it is contrary to a Mishnah. As to his view on shittuf which is contrary to our Mishnah the explanation might be that Rab is regarded as a Tanna who may well differ from a Mishnah. V. Tosaf. a.l. for another interpretation.
- (29) His father was unworthy to be named (Rashi).
- (30) Lit., 'there'. The request was made in Babylon.
- (31) Lit., 'make a circuit and go'.
- (32) About the 'erub for R. Oshaia's daughter-in-law.
- (33) In agreement with Rab's view.
- (34) Cur. edd. insert erubs of courtyards'. The phrase is omitted with MS.M. and Bah.
- (35) To those who are to benefit from it.
- (36) Tabshilin, lit., 'cooked foodstuffs'. Such an 'erub is prepared when a festival occurs on a Friday to enable those in whose favour it is prepared to cook, light candles and perform all other necessary services for the Sabbath on the festival day. In the absence of such an 'erub no kind of preparatory work for the Sabbath is allowed on a festival day.
- (37) Which shows that in the case of 'erubs of Sabbath limits he heard of Samuel's view but disregarded it. Is it not then possible that he did hear his view on that of 'erubs of dishes also but did not accept it?
- (38) Lit., 'thus, now'.
- (39) 'Erubs of Sabbath limits.
- (40) That of 'erubs of dishes.
- (41) Lit., 'is there one who differs?'
- (42) Obviously not. Hence Abaye's conviction that he could not have heard it.
- (43) Who was a heathen.
- (44) To enable them to arrange Shittuf for their alley.
- (45) Lit., 'they said to him: Let your domain to us. He did not let to them'.
- (46) The heathen's.
- (47) Lit., 'it was not in his hand'.
- (48) Lit., 'their 'erub is no 'erub' etc.
- (49) A contradiction to the ruling just cited by Rab Judah.
- (50) The ruling that 'a wife may prepare an 'erub without her husband's knowledge'.
- (51) That in the Baraitha.
- (52) One, for instance, whose courtyard was situated between the alley under discussion and another alley and who was in the habit of using the latter and not the former. In such circumstances no restrictions are imposed on the alley in question.
- (53) That Samuel agrees that a wife may not prepare an 'erub where her husband imposes no restrictions.
- (54) Lit., 'for if so, a difficulty of Samuel (arises) on that of Samuel'.
- (55) enable them to arrange a shittuf for their alley.
- (56) Since the qualification 'who usually joins' was added.
- (57) That shittuf may be arranged without a resident's knowledge or consent.
- (58) Sc. one who imposed restrictions upon them.
- (59) If, therefore, a distinction is drawn between a resident who imposes restrictions and one who does not, this ruling of Samuel may well be reconciled with the one cited in his name by Rab Judah. If, however, no such distinction is drawn and no emphasis is laid on 'usually joins', a contradiction would arise between the two rulings of Samuel himself.
- (60) That coercion may be used in the matter of shittuf.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 80b

— The case may be different there where no partitions are in existence.¹

Another reading: From the side is different.²

It was stated: R. Hiyya b. Ashi ruled: A side-post may be made from an Asherah, but R. Simeon b. Lakish ruled: A crossbeam may be made from an Asherah. He who permitted a crossbeam³ would, with much more reason, permit a side-post;⁴ but he who permitted a side-post⁴ would not permit a cross-beam, since its prescribed size⁵ is virtually⁶ crushed to dust.⁷ MISHNAH. IF THE FOOD WAS REDUCED⁸ [ONE OF THE RESIDENTS] MUST ADD TO IT⁹ AND AGAIN CONFER POSSESSION [UPON THE OTHERS] BUT¹⁰ THERE IS NO NEED TO INFORM THEM. IF THE NUMBER OF RESIDENTS HAS INCREASED,¹¹ HE MUST ADD FOOD⁹ AND CONFER POSSESSION [UPON THEM],¹² AND¹³ THEY MUST BE INFORMED OF THE FACTS.¹⁴ WHAT IS THE QUANTITY¹⁵ REQUIRED?¹⁶ WHEN THE RESIDENTS ARE MANY¹⁷ THERE SHOULD BE FOOD SUFFICIENT FOR TWO MEALS FOR ALL OF THEM¹⁸ AND WHEN THEY ARE FEW¹⁷ THERE SHOULD BE FOOD OF THE SIZE OF A DRIED FIG FOR EACH ONE. R. JOSE RULED: THIS¹⁹ APPLIES ONLY TO THE BEGINNINGS OF THE 'ERUB²⁰ BUT IN THE CASE OF THE REMNANTS OF ONE²¹ EVEN THE SMALLEST QUANTITY OF FOOD IS SUFFICIENT,²² THE SOLE REASON FOR THE INJUNCTION TO PROVIDE 'ERUBS FOR COURTYARDS²³ BEING THAT [THE LAW OF 'ERUB] SHALL NOT BE FORGOTTEN BY THE CHILDREN.²⁴

GEMARA. What are we dealing with?²⁵ If it be suggested: With the same kind,²⁶ what point was there in speaking of an 'erub that WAS REDUCED seeing that the same law²⁷ applies even if nothing of it remained? If the reference, however, is to two kinds,²⁸ the same law²⁹ should apply,³⁰ should it not, even if the food had only been reduced, since it was taught: If nothing of the food³¹ remained³² there is no need to inform the residents if the new 'erub is prepared of the same kind,³³ but if it is of a different kind³⁴ it is necessary to inform them?³⁵ If you prefer I might reply: The reference³⁶ is to an addition of the same kind, and if you prefer I might reply: Of a different kind.³⁴ 'If you prefer I might reply: The reference is to an addition of the same kind', and as to WAS REDUCED it means³⁷ it was reduced to atoms.³⁸ 'And if you prefer I might reply: Of a different kind'³⁹ since the case⁴⁰ where 'nothing of the food remained' is⁴¹ different [from that where the food was only reduced].⁴²

IF THE NUMBER OF RESIDENTS HAS INCREASED, HE MUST ADD FOOD AND CONFER POSSESSION [UPON THEM] etc. Said R. Shezbi in the name of R. Hisda: This⁴³ implies that R. Judah's colleagues⁴⁴ differ from him,⁴⁵ for we learned: R. Judah ruled: This⁴⁶ applies only to 'erubs of Sabbath limits⁴⁷ but in the case of 'erubs of courtyards one may be prepared for a person whether he is aware of it or not.⁴⁸ Is it not quite obvious that they differ?⁴⁹ — It might have been presumed that [our Mishnah]⁵⁰ refers to the case of a courtyard between two alleys⁵¹ but not to that of a courtyard in one alley;⁵² hence we were informed⁵³ [that it refers to the latter case also].

WHAT IS THE QUANTITY REQUIRED? etc. What number of residents is regarded as MANY? — Rab Judah citing Samuel replied: Eighteen men. Only 'eighteen' and no more?⁵⁴ — Say: From eighteen and upwards. But why was just the number eighteen selected? R. Isaac son of Rab Judah replied: It was explained to me by my father that wherever the food for two meals, if divided between them,⁵⁵ would not suffice to provide⁵⁶ for each as much as the size of a dried fig,⁵⁷ the residents are regarded as⁵⁸ MANY and a quantity of food [for two meals only suffices,⁵⁹ otherwise⁶⁰ they are regarded as FEW;⁶¹ and that we were indirectly informed⁶² that food for two meals consists of a quantity that is equal to the size of eighteen dried figs. MISHNAH. WITH ALL KINDS [OF FOOD] MAY 'ERUB OR SHITTUF BE EFFECTED EXCEPT WITH WATER OR SALT; SO R. ELIEZER. R. JOSHUA RULED: A WHOLE LOAF OF BREAD IS A VALID 'ERUB. EVEN A BAKING OF ONE SE'AH, IF IT IS A BROKEN LOAF, MAY NOT BE USED FOR 'ERUB WHILE A LOAF OF THE SIZE OF AN ISSAR, PROVIDED IT IS WHOLE,⁶³ MAY BE USED FOR 'ERUB.

- (1) In the absence of side-post or cross-beam the alley remains exposed to the public domain and all movement of objects within it is strictly forbidden. In order to liberate the residents from such serious inconvenience it may well have been ordered that they may coerce any recalcitrant neighbour. In the case of shittuf, however, the purpose of which is merely to provide the residents with the added convenience of carrying objects into the alley from their houses and courtyards, it may well be maintained that no one may be coerced to join if he refuses to do so. MS.M. and R. Tam. read: 'where there are partitions'. For the interpretation v. Tosaf. a.l.
- (2) This is meaningless and is deleted by Bah. It is also wanting in MS.M. and several of the old ed. Some emendations have been suggested. Cf. Elijah Wilna glosses and Golds.

- (13) If the food belonged to all the residents where, for instance, they had a joint stock.
- (14) So that they may have an opportunity of expressing approval or dissent.
- (15) Of food.
- (16) For the 'erub. Cur. edd. read 'their quantity'; MS.M. 'its quantity'.
- (17) This is defined in the Gemara infra.
- (18) It is not necessary for each one to have more than a fraction of the food.
- (19) The prescribed minima.
- (20) I.e., when it is first prepared.
- (21) Sc. if the 'erub consisted originally of the prescribed quantity but was subsequently reduced.
- (22) Contrary to the opinion of the first Tanna, R. Jose holds that the main institution of 'erub is that of Sabbath limits.
- (23) After Shittuf had been arranged.
- (24) The rising generation. As this is the sole reason of its institution its regulations are in every way to be relaxed.
- (25) In the ruling that IF THE FOOD . . . WAS REDUCED . . . THERE IS NO NEED TO INFORM THEM, from which it follows that if nothing of the food remained the residents must be informed if a new 'erub is prepared on their behalf.
- (26) Sc. that the addition to the 'erub is made from the same kind of food as that of the original.
- (27) THERE IS NO NEED TO INFORM THEM.
- (28) Sc. that the addition is made from a food that is different from the original.
- (29) The implication (cf. supra p. 561, n. 18) that 'the residents must be informed'.
- (30) Cur. edd., 'not' is wanting from MS.M.
- (31) Of: an 'erub.
- (32) And the same, it is now presumed, applies also where the food had only been reduced.
- (33) As the original.
- (34) Lit., 'from two kinds'.
- (35) That the addition is made from a food that is different from the original.
- (36) In our Mishnah.
- (37) Lit., 'what'.
- (38) נתמעט is understood as נתמטמט
- (39) Hence the ruling in our Mishnah and its implication (cf. supra p. 561, n. 18).
- (40) Dealt with in the Baraita from which the objection was raised.
- (41) Contrary to what had previously been assumed (cf. supra n. 7).
- (42) While in the former case, if two kinds of food are involved, the residents, as laid down in the Baraita, must be informed, in the latter case they, as stated in our Mishnah, need not be informed.

- (43) The ruling, AND THEY MUST BE INFORMED.
- (44) The authors of our Mishnah.
- (45) R. Judah who holds that there is no need to inform the residents.
- (46) That no 'erub may be prepared for a person except with his consent.
- (47) Since the 'erub might be deposited in a direction away from that towards which the man for whom it is prepared desired to go, it is quite proper that his desire be ascertained before a step is taken that might be disadvantageous to him.
- (48) I.e., even without his consent. This it has been shown that R. Judah and the authors of our Mishnah differ.
- (49) What need then was there for R. Shezbi to point it out?
- (50) In ruling, AND THEY MUST BE INFORMED.
- (51) Unless the person is informed with which alley the 'erub is being prepared for him it cannot be known whether he prefers to join with that alley or with the other. Hence the justification of the ruling.
- (52) In which case, since the person has no alternative, it might have been presumed that the Rabbis of our Mishnah agree with R. Judah that the person need not be informed.
- (53) By R. Shezbi's statement.
- (54) But if the eighteen are 'many' should not a number greater than eighteen be so described?
- (55) The residents.
- (56) Lit., 'reach'.
- (57) Sc. if the number of the residents is eighteen or more. The food for two meals is equal in size to that of eighteen dried figs and when it is actually broken up into eighteen portions each is naturally slightly less than the size of a fig.
- (58) Lit., 'they, (even) they'.
- (59) For all of them, however great their number might be.
- (60) Lit., 'and if not', sc. if the number of the residents was not as much as eighteen.
- (61) And it is sufficient if each one contributes food of a size of a dried fig, though the total of the contributions this amounts to less than two meals.
- (62) By Rab Judah who gave the number eighteen instead of the fuller explanation.
- (63) And there are as many loaves of this size as would suffice to supply bread of the size of a dried fig for each of the residents.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 81a

GEMARA. Have we not once learnt: With all kinds [of food] may 'erub and shittuf be effected, except water and salt?¹ Rabbah replied: [Our Mishnah was intended] to exclude the view of R. Joshua, who ruled that only a LOAF OF BREAD IS admissible² but no other foodstuff; hence we were informed³ [that 'erub and shittuf may be effected] WITH ALL [KINDS OF FOOD].⁴

Abaye raised an objection against him: With all [kinds of bread]⁵ may an 'erub of courtyards be prepared and with all [kinds of food]⁶ may a shittuf of 'alleys be effected, the ruling that an 'erub must be prepared with bread being applicable to that⁷ of a courtyard alone. Now who is it that was heard to rule that only bread is admissible⁸ but no other foodstuff? R. Joshua, of course; and yet was it not stated: 'With all'?⁹ Rather, said Rabbah b. Bar Hana the purpose of our Mishnah is to exclude the view of R. Joshua who ruled that only a WHOLE LOAF is admissible¹⁰ but not A BROKEN PIECE, hence we were informed [that an 'erub may be prepared] WITH ALL [KINDS OF FOOD].¹¹ But why¹² should not a slice of a loaf be admissible? — R. Jose b. Saul citing Rabbi replied: On account of possible ill-feeling.¹³ Said R. Aha son of Raba to R. Ashi: What then is the law, where all the residents contributed slices [of bread to their 'erub]? — He replied: There may be a recurrence of the trouble.¹⁴

R. Johanan¹⁵ b. Saul said: If no more than¹⁶ the prescribed quantity of the dough-offering¹⁷ or the portion to be removed from a mixture of terumah and unconsecrated produce¹⁸ was broken off a loaf,¹⁹ an 'erub may be prepared with it.²⁰ But was it not taught: If no more than the portion to be removed from a mixture of terumah and unconsecrated produce was broken off a loaf, all 'erub may be prepared with it,²⁰ but if the prescribed quantity of dough-offering had been removed from it no

‘erub may be prepared with it? — This is no contradiction, since the former relates to the dough-offering of a baker²¹ while the latter deals with the dough-offering of a private householder.²² For we learned: The prescribed measure for the dough-offering is one twenty-fourth of the dough; and whether one prepares it for himself or for his son's wedding-feast it must always be one twenty-fourth part. If a baker prepares it for sale in the market and so also if a woman prepares it for sale in the market it need only be one forty-eighth.²³

R. Hisda ruled: If parts of a loaf were joined together by means of a splinter, an ‘erub may be prepared with it.²⁴ Was it not, however, taught that no ‘erub may be prepared with it? — This is no contradiction since the latter refers to one whose joints are recognizable while the former deals with one whose joints are unnoticeable.

R. Zera citing Samuel ruled: An ‘erub may be prepared with rice bread or with millet bread. Mar Ukba observed: The Master Samuel explained to me that an ‘erub may be prepared with rice bread but not with millet bread.

R. Hiyya b. Abin citing Rab ruled: An ‘erub may be prepared with bread of lentils. But this, surely, cannot [be correct]?²⁵ For was not some bread of this kind prepared in the time of²⁶ Samuel²⁷ and he did not eat it but threw it to his dog? — That bread was prepared from a mixture of several²⁸ kinds,²⁹ for so³⁰ it is also written: Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentils, and millet, and spelt etc.³¹ R. Papa replied: That bread was baked with human dung, for it is written: And thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight.³²

What [is the significance of ‘barley’ in the clause] And thou shalt eat it as barley cakes?³² — R. Hisda explained: In rations.³³ R. Papa explained: Its preparation³⁴ shall be in the manner of barley bread and not in that of wheat bread.³⁵ MISHNAH. A MAN MAY GIVE A MA'AH TO A SHOPKEEPER³⁶ OR A BAKER³⁷ THAT HE MIGHT THEREBY ACQUIRE A SHARE IN THE ‘ERUB;³⁸ SO R. ELIEZER. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: HIS MONEY ACQUIRES NO SHARE FOR HIM³⁹

(1) Mishnah supra 26b. Why then was the same statement repeated?

(2) As ‘erub. Lit., ‘yes’.

(3) By the repetition in our Mishnah.

(4) Even with wine or fruit, for instance. This could not have been deduced from the earlier Mishnah which deals with ‘erubs of Sabbath limits, where R. Joshua agrees that bread is not an essential, since his reason infra for his ruling on ‘erubs of courtyards is inapplicable to ‘erubs of Sabbath limits. For another reading and interpretation v. Rashi a.l.

(5) Cf. the interpretation infra.

(6) Even with fruit or wine.

(7) Lit., ‘and they did not say to make an ‘erub with bread but’.

(8) As ‘erub. Lit., ‘yes’.

(9) Which shows that the expression ‘with all’ might imply all kinds of bread and not necessarily all kinds of foodstuffs. Now since our Mishnah might be interpreted so as to yield the same rulings as this Baraitha, what proof is there that WITH ALL bears the latter meaning and the ruling is contrary to the view of R. Joshua seeing that it might equally bear the former meaning and be in agreement with R. Joshua?

(10) As ‘erub. Lit., ‘yes’.

(11) Even with a slice of a loaf.

(12) According to R. Joshua.

(13) Were one neighbour to be allowed to contribute a slice of bread while another contributed a whole loaf disputes might arise and ill-feeling would be engendered.

(14) Were slices to be allowed in such a case people might begin to contribute slices even where their neighbours contributed whole loaves and again ill-feeling would arise. Never, therefore, must a slice be contributed to an ‘erub.

- (29) Hence it could not be regarded as proper bread.
- (30) That such a mixture of different kinds cannot be regarded as proper bread.
- (31) Ezek. IV, 9, dealing with a time of siege and famine when people eat anything they can get. In normal times no one would look upon such bread (cf. Tosaf a.l. Rashi has a different interpretation).
- (32) Ezek. IV, 12.
- (33) שְׂעוּרִים (se'orim) 'barley' is read as שִׁיעוּרִים (shi'urim) 'fixed quantities', 'rations'; Ezekiel is asked to ration his food as is done during a siege,
- (34) Cf. MS.M., R. Han., Rashi and Emden.
- (35) Greater care is taken in the preparation of the latter which is more expensive and more nourishing.
- (36) I.e., a wine-seller, who lives with him in the same alley.
- (37) In the same courtyard.
- (38) When the other residents would come to buy wine for shittuf or bread for the 'erub of their courtyard.
- (39) Acquisition of an 'erub, like that of any other object, can be effected only by means of a definite act such, for instance, as meshikah, v. Glos. Even if the shopkeeper or baker subsequently conferred possession upon all the residents as a free gift this man does not acquire his share in it, since transfer of possession in the case of 'erub requires the consent of the beneficiary who, in this case, distinctly expressed his desire to acquire it as a purchase and not as a gift (cf. Tosaf. a.l.).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 81b

(THOUGH THEY AGREE THAT IN THE CASE OF ALL OTHER MEN¹ HIS MONEY MAY ACQUIRE ONE) SINCE AN 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED ONLY WITH ONE'S CONSENT.² R. JUDAH RULED: THIS³ APPLIES ONLY TO 'ERUBS OF SABBATH LIMITS⁴ BUT IN THE CASE OF 'ERUBS OF COURTYARDS⁵ ONE MAY BE PREPARED FOR A PERSON IRRESPECTIVE OF WHETHER HE IS AWARE OF IT OR NOT,⁶ SINCE A BENEFIT MAY BE CONFERRED ON A MAN IN HIS ABSENCE BUT NO DISABILITY MAY BE IMPOSED ON HIM IN HIS ABSENCE.

GEMARA. What is R. Eliezer's reason?⁷ seeing that the man performed no meshikah? — R. Nahman citing Rabbah b. Abbuha replied: R. Eliezer⁸ treated this case as that of the 'four seasons of the year'.⁹ For we learned: In the following four seasons¹⁰ a butcher is made to slaughter¹¹ [a beast] of his own. Even though his ox was worth a thousand denars and the buyer¹² had in it a share that was worth only one denar the butcher may be compelled to slaughter. Hence if it died¹³ the buyer must bear the loss.¹⁴ 'The buyer must bear the loss!' But why, seeing that he performed no meshikah? — R. Huna¹⁵ replied: This is a case where he did perform meshikah. If so, read the final clause: During the other days of the year the law is not so.¹⁶ Hence if it died,¹³ the seller must bear the loss.¹⁷ But why, seeing that the buyer had performed meshikah? — R. Samuel b. Isaac¹⁸ replied:

The fact is that we are here dealing with a case where the buyer performed no meshikah but the seller transferred possession¹⁹ to him through a third party.²⁰ Hence it is that in these four seasons when it is beneficial to him²¹ the acquisition is valid since a benefit may be conferred on a man in his absence, but during the other days of the year when it is to his disadvantage²² the acquisition is ineffective, since a disability may be imposed on a man only in his presence; and R. Ela citing R. Johanan²³ replied: In the case of these four seasons the Sages have based their rule on the law of the Torah;²⁴ for R. Johanan said: According to the words of the Torah, money acquires possession for the buyer; and the Sages ruled that it is²⁵ meshikah that gives him possession as a precautionary measure against the possibility that²⁶ the seller might tell the buyer,²⁷ 'Your wheat was burnt in the loft'.²⁸ THOUGH THEY AGREE THAT IN THE CASE OF ALL OTHER MEN etc. Who is meant by ALL OTHER? — Rab replied: A householder.²⁹ Samuel also replied: A householder. For Samuel stated: This³⁰ was learnt only in respect of a baker but a householder²⁹ does acquire possession. Samuel further stated: This³⁰ was learnt only in respect of a ma'ah but all object³¹ acquires possession. Samuel further stated: This³² was learnt only in the case where the resident said to him, 'Acquire for me',³³ but where he said 'Prepare an 'erub for me'³⁴ he has thereby appointed him as his agent and³⁵ he acquires, therefore, [his share].³⁶

R. JUDAH RULED: THIS APPLIES ONLY etc. Rab Judah citing Samuel stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah and, furthermore, wherever R. Judah taught a law concerning 'erubs the halachah is in agreement with him. Said R. Hana of Bagdad to R. Judah: Did Samuel say this³⁷ even in respect of all alley whose cross-beam³⁸ or side-post³⁸ has been removed?³⁹ 'Concerning 'erubs',⁴⁰ the other replied, did I tell you; but not concerning partitions.⁴¹ [Since,] said R. Aha son of Raba to R. Ashi, [it has been said,] 'The halachah [is in agreement with R. Judah]' it must be implied that [the Rabbis] are at variance on the point,⁴² but did not R. Joshua b. Levi in fact lay down that whenever R. Judah stated in⁴³ a Mishnah, "When'⁴⁴ or 'This applies',⁴⁵ his intention⁴⁶ was only to introduce an explanation of the words of the Sages?⁴⁷ — But do they⁴⁸ not differ? Have we not in fact learnt: 'If the number of residents his increased he must add food and confer possession upon them, and they must be informed of the fact'?⁴⁹ — There it is a case of a courtyard between two alleys.⁵⁰ But did not R. Shezbi state in the name of R. Hisda: 'This implies that R. Judah's colleagues differ from him'?⁵¹ — The other replied:⁵²

(1) This is explained in the Gemara infra.

(2) Cf. supra n. 4, second clause.

(3) That AN 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED ONLY WITH ONES CONSENT.

(4) Which may in certain conditions prove disadvantageous to the man for whom it is prepared. If he, for instance, desired to walk a distance of two thousand cubits in an easterly direction from this town and the 'erub was deposited on its western side, though he is thereby enabled to walk a longer distance in the latter direction, he IS deprived of his right to the two thousand cubits in the easterly direction.

(5) Since these are always advantageous to the tenants.

(6) Sc. even without his consent.

(7) For his ruling in our Mishnah that the man who gave the ma'ah acquires his share in the 'erub.

(8) By ruling that possession may be acquired by means of money alone.

(9) Where a similar relaxation of the laws of acquisition was allowed.

(10) Enumerated in Hul. 83a.

(11) To provide meat.

(12) Who paid the butcher on the eve of the day in question (cf. prev. n.) one denar.

(13) Before it was ritually slain.

(14) Lit., 'it died for the buyer', sc. he cannot claim the refund of his denar.

(15) MS.M., 'Rab'.

(16) I.e., the butcher cannot be compelled to slay his beast in order to keep his contract with the buyer. He may instead return to him his denar.

(17) Sc. he must refund the denar to the buyer.

- (18) MS. M., inserts 'R'.
- (19) Of a part of the ox to the value of a denar.
- (20) Whom the buyer did not appoint for the purpose.
- (21) The buyer in the seasons mentioned, owing to the great demand for meat, is anxious to secure his supply.
- (22) The demand for meat is not great and it is more advantageous for him to have his ready denar.
- (23) Var. lec. Judah (Rashal).
- (24) The Pentateuch.
- (25) Lit., 'and wherefore did they say'.
- (26) Were the sold goods, though still on the premises of the seller, to pass into legal possession of the buyer as soon as he paid the money.
- (27) Should a fire, for instance, break out where the goods were kept.
- (28) Sc. he would not take the trouble to save them from the fire or from any other accident. Hence the Rabbinic rule that it is meshikah that effects the transfer of possession. V. B.M. 47b. This it has been shown that in certain circumstances and for certain reasons the Sages adopted in practice the Pentateuchal law that money alone effects transfer of possession. Similarly in the case of 'erub, R. Eliezer's ruling, it may be explained, is clue to similar considerations.
- (29) Though he was given a ma'ah the act (since he himself deals neither in bread nor in wine) is not regarded as an order to purchase a share in the 'erub but as a mere indication to him to act as agent; and an agent may of course acquire possession for the man who appointed him.
- (30) That a ma'ah acquires no possession in all 'erub.
- (31) Given in symbolic acquisition.
- (32) That a shopkeeper or a baker cannot acquire a share in an 'erub for a resident.
- (33) A form of instruction which, when addressed to a trader, is regarded as an order to purchase.
- (34) Sc. in any manner he might think fit.
- (35) Since an agent may be relied upon to carry out his mission in the proper manner (cf. supra 32a).
- (36) In the 'erub.
- (37) That the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah. MS.M. inserts this clause in the text.
- (38) Cur. edd. have the plural.
- (39) On the Sabbath. R. Judah ruled (infra 94a) that the use of the alley remains permitted for that Sabbath.
- (40) Sc. the laws relating to acquisition of an 'erub.
- (41) The principle underlying the permissibility of the use of an alley by means of cross-beam or side-post.

- (44) Sc. 'when is this the case?'
- (45) Lit., 'in what', sc. 'in what case does this apply?' 'This applies only'.
- (46) In thus commenting on a ruling of the Rabbis.
- (47) Sanh. 25a; and, since in our Mishnah he uses the expression 'THIS APPLIES ONLY', he is obviously of the same opinion as the Rabbis. What need then was there for Samuel to state that the halachah was in agreement with R. Judah?
- (48) R. Judah and the Rabbis.
- (49) Mishnah supra 80b; while according to R. Judah an 'erub of courtyards (cf. our Mishnah) may be prepared for a person even without his consent!
- (50) Where, unless the person concerned is duly informed of the facts, it cannot be known for certain with which of the two courtyards he desires to be associated in the 'erub.
- (51) Supra 80b.
- (52) Lit., 'he said to him' (so with marg. glos. according to some ed.). Cur. edd., 'but'. The two readings are easily interchangeable in Heb. the former being represented by ש"ס and the latter by ס"ס.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 82a

You are pointing out a contradiction between the views of two men!¹ One² may hold the opinion that they differ, while the other³ may maintain that they do not differ.

[To turn to] the main text: 'R. Joshua b. Levi laid down that wherever R. Judah stated in a Mishnah, "When" or "This applies", his intention was only to introduce an explanation of the words of the Sages'. R. Johanan, however, held that 'When' introduces an explanation while 'This applies' indicates disagreement,⁴ But does 'When' introduce an explanation, seeing that we have learnt: 'And these are ineligible [to act as witnesses or judges]: A gambler,⁵ a usurer, a pigeon-trainer⁶ and traders in produce of the Sabbatical year',⁷ and 'R. Judah stated: When is this so? When a person has no occupation other than that,' but if he has any other occupation he is eligible'. And in connection with this it was taught in a Baraita, 'And the Sages ruled: Whether he has no occupation other than that or whether he has another occupation, he is ineligible'?⁸ — That⁹ is a view which R. Judah quoted in the name of R. Tarfon.¹⁰ For it was taught: R. Judah quoting R. Tarfon stated: 'Neither of them¹¹ can possibly be regarded as a nazirite, since naziriteship is valid only when it is definite'.¹² It is thus obvious that when a person is in doubt as to whether he is or is not a nazirite he does not¹³ submit himself to the vow. So also here,¹⁴ since no one knows beforehand whether one would gain or lose, neither¹⁵ fully consents to transfer possession to the other.¹⁶

CHAPTER VIII

MISHNAH. HOW IS SHITTUF ARRANGED IN CONNECTION WITH SABBATH LIMITS?¹⁷ ONE SETS DOWN A JAR¹⁸ AND SAYS, BEHOLD THIS IS FOR ALL THE INHABITANTS OF MY TOWN, FOR ANY ONE WHO MAY DESIRE TO GO TO A HOUSE OF MOURNING OR TO A HOUSE OF FEASTING'.¹⁹ ANY ONE²⁰ WHO ACCEPTED [TO RELY ON THE 'ERUB] WHILE IT WAS YET DAY²¹ IS PERMITTED [TO ENJOY ITS BENEFITS] BUT IF ONE DID IT AFTER DUSK THIS IS FORBIDDEN, SINCE NO 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED AFTER DUSK.

GEMARA. R. Joseph ruled: All 'erub²² may be prepared only for the purpose of enabling one to perform a religious act.²³ What does he teach us, seeing that we learned: FOR ANY ONE WHO MAY DESIRE TO GO TO A HOUSE OF MOURNING²⁴ OR TO A HOUSE OF FEASTING?²⁴ It might have been assumed that mention was made of that which is usual,²⁵ hence we were informed [of R. Joseph's ruling].

ANYONE WHO ACCEPTED [TO RELY ON THE 'ERUB] WHILE IT WAS YET DAY. May it be inferred from this ruling that no retrospective selection is valid, for if retrospective selection were valid, why should it²⁶ not become known retrospectively that the man was pleased to accept the 'erub when it was yet day? — R. Ashi replied: The cases taught²⁷ are those where one was,²⁸ or was not informed.²⁹

R. Assi said: A child of the age of six may go out³⁰ by the 'erub of his mother.³¹

An objection was raised: A child who is dependent upon his mother goes out by his mother's 'erub but one who is not dependent upon his mother does not go out by her 'erub;³² and³³ we also learned a similar ruling in respect of a sukkah:³⁴ 'A child who is not dependent upon his mother is liable³⁵ to the obligations of sukkah',³⁶ and when the point was raised as to what child may be regarded as independent of his mother it was explained at the school of R. Jannai: Any child who, when attending to his needs, does not require his mother's assistance.³⁷ R. Simeon b. Lakish explained: Any child who, when awaking, does not cry mother. 'Mother!' Is this³⁸ imaginable? Do not bigger children also cry mother? Rather say: Any child who, when he wakes, does not persistently cry mother.³⁹ And what [is the age of such a child]?⁴⁰ About four⁴¹ or five!⁴²

(1) Lit., 'man on man', Samuel against R. Joshua b. Levi.

(2) Samuel.

(3) R. Joshua b. Levi.

(4) Lit., 'to divide', 'dispute'.

- (5) Lit., 'one who plays with dice'.
- (6) Lit., 'pigeon-fliers'.
- (7) Persons who make money out of one or other of these shady or dishonorable pursuits are regarded as virtual robbers who are disqualified from occupying any position of responsibility and trust. For fuller explanation cf. Sanh., Sonc. ed., p. 142f and notes.
- (8) Sanh. 25a. Now assuming that the Sages in the Baraitha last mentioned are the same as those whose view is represented in the first clause of the Mishnah cited, is it not evident that even where he differs from a view expressed R. Judah still used the introductory word 'when'? An objection thus arises against both R. Joshua R. Levi and R. Johanan.
- (9) The ruling in the last mentioned Baraitha.
- (10) Not that of the Rabbis in the Mishnah cited whose view R. Judah in fact explained, and between whom and himself no difference of opinion exists.
- (11) Of two men who had a bet, one of them undertaking to be a nazirite if a certain person who passed by was a nazirite and the other undertaking to be a nazirite if that person was not a nazirite.
- (12) Lit., 'distinctly uttered'. V. Sanh. 25a, Naz. 34a. As neither of the two had any knowledge as to whether the man who passed them was, or was not a nazirite, the vow of neither could be definite and neither, therefore, can be deemed valid.
- (13) According to R. Tarfon.
- (14) The Baraitha in which eligibility to act as witness or judge is denied to a gambler and the other, irrespective of whether they had, or had not any other occupation.
- (15) Of the gamblers or partners in the game or transaction.
- (16) The appropriation of such gain is, therefore, tantamount to robbery which disqualifies the recipient from occupying any position of trust.
- (17) To enable a number of people to walk beyond the prescribed Sabbath limit of two thousand cubits from their town.
- (18) Containing fruit or wine or similar foodstuffs.
- (19) Sc. a wedding feast (v. infra n. 8).
- (20) Of the townspeople.
- (21) Friday, the Sabbath eve.
- (22) Of Sabbath limits.
- (23) No one is otherwise allowed to make use of the institution of 'erub.
- (24) It is a religious duty to comfort the mourners and to assist in the festivities and entertainment of bride and bridegroom.
- (25) But that in fact the 'erub may be prepared even for secular purposes.
- (26) On the Sabbath when a townsman makes use of the 'erub.
- (27) In our Mishnah.
- (28) On the Sabbath eve'
- (29) That an 'erub has been prepared. By ACCEPTED the former case was intended, the 'erub being valid, on the principle of retrospective selection, even though the acceptance was not decided upon before dusk. By AFTER DUSK the latter case was meant, the 'erub being invalid because no retrospective selection is possible where the man was not even aware of the 'erub's existence.
- (30) Beyond the Sabbath limits.
- (31) Even though she did not explicitly confer upon him the right of a share in it. A child of six is deemed to be entirely attached to, and dependent upon his mother and she is, therefore, tacitly assumed to have meant him to enjoy the same privileges of the 'erub as she herself. Cf. Keth., Sonc. ed., p. 397, n. 7.
- (32) Why then did R. Assi draw no such distinction?
- (33) Were you to reply that a child of the age of six is deemed to be 'dependent upon his mother'.
- (34) V. Glos.
- (35) Rabbinically, as a part of his religious training. Pentateuchally he is exempt.
- (36) Suk. 28a.
- (37) Lit., 'does not clear him'.
- (38) That impliedly a child that does cry mother must be regarded as dependent upon her.
- (39) Lit., 'mother, mother'.
- (40) Who may be regarded as independent of his mother.

(41) If well developed.

(42) If less developed. At any rate it follows that a child of the age of five at the latest is deemed to be independent of his mother. How then could R. Assi maintain that a child of six may go out by his mother's 'erub?

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 82b

— R. Joshua Son of R. Idi replied: What R. Assi spoke of was¹ a case, for instance, where the child's father prepared an 'erub for him in the north² and his mother in the south,² since³ even a child of the age of six prefers his mother's company.

An objection was raised: A child who is dependent upon his mother may go out by his mother's 'erub until he is six years of age. Is not this⁴ an objection against R. Joshua son of R. Idi?⁵ — This is indeed an objection. Must it be admitted that this⁴ also presents all objection against the view of R. Assi?⁶ — R. Assi can answer you: 'Until'⁷ means that 'until'⁸ is included.⁹ Must it be assumed that this⁴ presents a contradiction of the views of R. Jannai and Resh Lakish?¹⁰ This is really no contradiction since the former¹¹ refers to a child whose father is in town¹² while the latter¹³ refers to one whose father is not in town.¹⁴

Our Rabbis taught: A man may prepare all 'erub for his son or daughter, if they are minors, and for his Canaanite bondman or bondwoman, either with, or without their consent.¹⁵ He may not, however, prepare an 'erub for his Hebrew manservant or maidservant, nor for his grownup son or daughter, nor for his wife, except with their consent. Elsewhere it was taught: A man may not prepare an 'erub for his grownup son or daughter, nor¹⁶ for his Hebrew manservant or maidservant, nor for his wife, except with their consent, but he may prepare all 'erub for his Canaanite bondman or bondwoman and for his son or daughter, if they are minors, either with, or without their consent, because their hand is as his hand. If any of these¹⁷ prepared all 'erub¹⁸ and the¹⁹ master also prepared one²⁰ for him²¹ the limits of his¹⁹ movements are determined²² by that of his²³ master. A wife, however, is excluded since she is entitled to object.²⁴ But why should a wife be different?²⁵ Rabbah replied: [The meaning is] a wife and all who enjoy a similar status.

The Master said: 'A wife, however, is excluded since she is entitled to object'. The reason then²⁶ is that she actually objected but if she expressed no opinion her movements are determined²⁷ by the 'erub of her husband; was it not, however, taught in the first clause, 'Except with their consent' which means, does it not, that they must actually say: 'Yes'?²⁸ — No; the meaning of²⁹ 'Except with their consent' is that they kept since, which excludes only the case where they said: 'No.'³⁰ But, surely, the case where 'any of these prepared all 'erub and the master also prepared one for him' where 'the limits of his movements are determined by that of his master' is one where no opinion had been expressed, and was it not nevertheless stated: 'A wife, however, is excluded' so that her movements are not determined by the 'erub of her husband?³¹ — Raba replied: Since they had prepared an 'erub there can be no more significant form of objection.

MISHNAH. WHAT MUST BE ITS³² SIZE? FOOD FOR TWO MEALS FOR EACH, THE QUANTITY BEING THE FOOD ONE EATS ON WEEKDAYS AND NOT ON THE SABBATH; SO R. MEIR. R. JUDAH RULED: AS ON THE SABBATH AND NOT AS ON WEEKDAYS. AND BOTH INTENDED TO GIVE THE MORE LENIENT RULING.³³ R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA RULED:³⁴ NOT LESS THAN A LOAF THAT IS PURCHASED FOR A DUPONDIIUM WHEN THE PRICE OF CHEAT IS FOUR SE'AH FOR A SELA'.³⁵ R. SIMEON RULED:³⁴ TWO THIRDS OF A LOAF, THREE OF WHICH ARE MADE FROM A KAB.³⁶ HALF OF THIS LOAF³⁷ IS THE SIZE PRESCRIBED FOR A LEPROUS HOUSE,³⁸ AND THE HALF OF ITS HALF³⁹ IS THE SIZE THAT RENDERS ONE'S BODY⁴⁰ UNFIT.⁴¹ GEMARA. How much food⁴² is required for TWO MEALS? Rab Judah citing Rab replied: Two peasants'⁴³ loaves. R. Adda b. Ahabah replied: Two Nehar Papa⁴⁴ loaves.

Said R. Joseph to R. Joseph son of Raba:⁴⁵ ‘With whose view⁴⁶ does your father's agree?’⁴⁷ — ‘His view is in agreement with that of R. Meir’. ‘I am also in agreement with the view of R. Meir, for if one were to agree with R. Judah there would arise the difficulty of the popular saying: There is always room for a spicy dish.’⁴⁸

R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA RULED. One taught: Their views⁴⁹ are almost identical.⁵⁰ But are they at all alike, seeing that the view of R. Johanan is that a kab provides four meals whereas that of R. Simeon is that a kab provides nine meals?⁵¹ R. Hisda replied: Deduct⁵² a third⁵³ for the profit of the shopkeeper.⁵⁴ But is not the number of meals⁵⁵ still nine according to the one Master and six according to the other? — Explain rather on the lines of another statement of R. Hisda who said: Deduct a half for the profit of the shopkeeper.⁵⁶ But do not they⁵⁷ still amount⁵⁵ to nine according to the one Master and to eight according to the other?⁵⁸ This indeed is the reason why it was stated,⁵⁹ ‘Their views are almost identical’.⁶⁰ Does not a contradiction, however, arise between the two statements of R. Hisda?⁶¹ — There is really no contradiction since one statement⁶² refers to a place where the buyer⁶³ supplies the wood⁶⁴ while the other refers to one where the buyer does not supply the wood.

HALF OF THIS LOAF IS THE SIZE PRESCRIBED FOR A LEPROUS HOUSE, AND THE HALF OF ITS HALF IS THE SIZE THAT RENDERS ONE'S BODY UNFIT.

(1) Not of a child for whom no ‘erub was specifically prepared. In such a case the child admittedly may not go out.

(2) Of the town.

(3) Sc. the reason why R. Assi ruled that the child ‘may go out by the ‘erub of his mother’ and not by that of his father.

(4) The ruling that a child up to the age of six may go out by his mother's ‘erub even if she did not prepare it especially for his benefit also. The previous explanation, that the ruling applied to a case where both his father and mother prepared ‘erubs on his behalf cannot be given here, since the age limit indicated, viz., ‘until he is six’, obviously includes that of a baby of the tenderest age who is undoubtedly dependent on his mother and who is unquestionably permitted to go out on account of her ‘erub.

(5) Who agreed supra that for a child of the age of five an ‘erub must specifically be prepared.

(6) Who exempts a child of six whereas here a child of the age of six seems to be excluded by the expression ‘until he is six years of age’.

(7) Cf. prev. n. ad fin.

(8) Sc. the age of six also.

(9) In the exemption.

(10) Supra 82a ad fin., according to which a child of the age of four or five is not dependent on his mother and, consequently, should not be allowed to go out by means of her ‘erub, whereas here it is laid down that even a child of six may go out by his mother's ‘erub.

(11) The ruling adopted by R. Jannai and Resh Lakish.

(12) And is looking after the child. In such a case the child is independent of his mother even before he is six years of age.

(13) The Baraita cited which regards a child of six as dependent upon his mother.

(14) So that the child remains entirely dependent on his mother until he is much older.

(15) Bah adds, ‘because their hand is as his hand’.

- (26) Why an 'erub for a wife is invalid.
- (27) Lit., 'she goes out'.
- (28) But if they kept silent their movements are not determined by the master's 'erub. Does not thus a contradiction arise between the two clauses of the Baraita?
- (29) Lit., 'what'.
- (30) Only in that case is the master's 'erub disregarded; but if they kept silence their movements are determined, as was implied in the final clause, by the 'erub of the master.
- (31) Lit., 'that they do not go out'.
- (32) The loaf of bread for an 'erub of Sabbath limits.
- (33) Sc. to reduce the prescribed size of the 'erub. R. Meir used to consume at a weekday meal less bread than at a Sabbath meal at which the richness of the Sabbath dishes tempted him to eat more bread. R. Judah, however, ate more bread on weekdays, when courses are few, than on the Sabbath when several satisfying dishes are served and when it is also one's duty to eat no less than three meals.
- (34) In determining the quantity of bread required for TWO MEALS.
- (35) Such a loaf, it is now assumed, weighs half a kab, since four Se'ah are equal to $4 \times 6 \text{ kab} = 24 \times 2 = \text{half-kab}$; and a sela' contains 4 denars = $4 \times 6 \text{ ma'ah} = 4 \times 6 \times 2 = 48 \text{ dupondia}$.
- (36) Of wheat. This is a smaller size than the previous one. In the opinion of R. Simeon two ninths of a lab suffices for two meals. When three loaves are made from a kab of each loaf = $\frac{1}{3} \times \frac{2}{3} = \frac{2}{9} \text{ kab}$.
- (37) That had been prescribed for 'erub by R. Johanan and R. Simeon respectively.
- (38) Cf. Lev. XIV, 33ff. If a person remains in such a house for a length of time sufficient for him to consume the quantity of bread mentioned his clothes become unclean and require ritual washing (cf. Neg. XIII, 9).
- (39) If it is levitically unclean.
- (40) Of a person that ate it.

- (47) Sc. since in the case of 'erub the quantity of food required for two meals varies according to the capacity and the appetite of each individual, is one's appetite to be determined by one's weekday meals in agreement with R. Meir, or one's Sabbath meals in agreement with R. Judah?
- (48) Sabbath dishes being richly spiced and seasoned tempt one to eat more bread whereas R. Judah maintains that at a Sabbath meal less bread is eaten than at a weekday meal.

- (52) According to R. Johanan.
- (53) Of the half-kab that is bought for a dupondium.
- (54) Though the shopkeeper buys at the rate of four se'ah for a sela', or half a kab for a dupondium (cf. supra p. 576, n. 5), he sells at a higher price, leaving for himself a profit of one third of the purchase price. For each dupondium, therefore, he sells only two thirds of half a kab. Now, since $\frac{2}{3}$ of half a kab, or $\frac{1}{2} \times \frac{2}{3} = \frac{1}{3}$ of a kab, provide two meals, a kab obviously provides not four, but six meals.
- (55) Per kab.
- (56) Cf. supra n. 13 mut. mut.
- (57) The number of meals.
- (58) Since according to R. Johanan the shopkeeper retains a profit of one half of his cost price, he would charge a dupondium not for half a kab (his cost price) but for a quarter of a kab (his selling price at a profit of fifty per cent); and since a quarter of a kab yields two meals a kab obviously yields $4 \times 2 = 8$ meals.

(59) In the Baraita under discussion.

(60) But not exactly identical. Lit., 'near to be alike'.

(61) In one statement he asserts that a shopkeeper makes a profit of one third and in the other he raises it to one half.

(62) The first cited.

(63) Lit., 'householder' as opposed to shopkeeper.

(64) For the baking of the bread. In such a case the profit of the shopkeeper is reduced to a third.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 83a

One taught: And half of the half of its half¹ is the size susceptible to levitical uncleanness of food.² But why did not our Tanna mention³ the levitical uncleanness of food? — Because their prescribed sizes⁴ are not in exact proportions.⁵ For it was taught: How much is half a peras?⁶ The size of two⁷ eggs minus a fraction;⁸ so R. Judah. R. Jose ruled: Two large sized⁹ eggs. This was calculated by Rabbi¹⁰ to be the size of two eggs and a slight surplus.¹¹ How much was that surplus? — A twentieth part of an egg.¹² In respect of the levitical uncleanness of food, however, it was taught: R. Nathan and R. Dosa explained that the size of the egg of which the Rabbis have spoken¹³ includes the egg itself and its shell,¹⁴ but the Sages explained: The egg only, exclusive of its shell.¹⁵

Rafram b. Papa citing R. Hisda stated: This¹⁶ is the ruling of R. Judah and R. Jose, but the Sages ruled: The size is one and a half large sized eggs. But who are the Sages? R. Johanan b. Beroka of course;¹⁷ is not this then obvious?¹⁸ — His purpose was¹⁹ to inform us that the eggs must be large sized.

When R. Dimi came²⁰ he related that Bonios once sent to Rabbi a modius²¹ of artichokes that came from Nausa,²² and Rabbi calculated its capacity to be two hundred and Seventeen eggs. What kind of se'ah,²³ however, was it? If it was the desert se'ah²⁴ it should have contained a hundred and forty-four eggs,²⁵ and if it was the Jerusalem se'al²⁶ it should have contained a hundred and seventy-three eggs,²⁷ and if again it was the one of Sepphoris²⁸ It should have contained two hundred and seven eggs.²⁹ It was in fact a Sepphoris measure but the quantity of the dough-offering was added to them.³⁰ But how much is the dough-offering? Nine³¹ eggs;³² would not then the number still be less?³³ — The fact is that the surpluses spoken of by Rabbi³⁴ were added to them.³⁵ If so, would not the number be greater?³⁶ — As it does not amount to the size of a whole egg³⁷ he does not reckon it.

Our Rabbis taught: The Jerusalem se'ah exceeds that of the desert one by a sixth,³⁸ and that of Sepphoris exceeds that of Jerusalem by a sixth.³⁸ Thus it follows that the measure of Sepphoris exceeds that of the desert by a third. A third of which? Would you suggest: A third of the desert measure? Observe then: How much is a third of the desert measure? Forty-eight eggs;³⁹ whereas the surplus amounts to sixty-three!⁴⁰ If again a third of the Jerusalem measure was meant, how much, [it could be retorted,] is a third of it? Fifty-eight minus one third;⁴¹ whereas the surplus is sixty-three! Is then the reference to the measure of Sepphoris? How much, [it may be asked,] is a third of it? Seventy minus one;⁴² whereas the surplus is sixty-three! — Rather, explained R. Jeremiah it is this that was meant: It follows that the se'ah of Sepphoris exceeds that of the desert by nearly a third of itself⁴³ and that a third of itself⁴⁴ is nearly equal to a half of the desert measure.⁴⁵

Rabina demurred: Was any mention at all made of approximation?⁴⁶ — Rather, explained Rabina, it is this that was meant: It follows that a third of the Sepphoris measure together with the surpluses spoken of by Rabbi⁴⁷ exceeds the half of the desert measure⁴⁸ by a third of an egg.⁴⁹ Our Rabbis taught: Of the first of your dough⁵⁰

(1) Of the size of the loaf prescribed in our Mishnah by R. Johanan and R. Simeon respectively.

(2) According to R. Johanan the size is three quarters of an egg. For, since he defined the size of a whole loaf as a quarter of a lab, or six eggs, the 'half of the half of its half' must be equal to $6/2 \times 2 \times 2 = 3/4$ of an egg. According to R. Simeon, since a whole loaf is equal to $1/3$ of a kab, or $24/3 = 8$ eggs, the 'half of the half of its half' must be equal to $8/2 \times 2 \times 2 = 1$ egg.

(3) In our Mishnah.

(4) That for (a) the defilement of one's body and (b) the defilement of food.

(5) Sc. the size of the latter (cf. prev. n.) is not exactly a half of the former.

(6) Lit., 'a broken piece' Sc. of bread that, if levitically unclean, renders one's body unfit to eat terumah.

(7) Small sized (cf. infra).

(8) In agreement with R. Simeon's standard in our Mishnah.

(9) Lit., 'laughing'.

(10) On examining a Se'ah measure whose capacity is nominally that of six kab or $6 \times 24 = 144$ eggs, but whose actual capacity was greater than that number of eggs.

(11) Lit., 'and more'.

(12) In respect of each egg of capacity.

(13) As being susceptible to levitical uncleanness.

(14) Lit., 'like itself and like etc. This size obviously is not exactly a half of any of the sizes prescribed by (a) R. Judah, (b) R. Jose or (c) Rabbi for the defilement of one's body according to whom it should have been either (a) an egg minus a fraction or (b) a large sized egg and its shell, or (c) in egg and a twentieth.

(15) A size which is smaller even than half of the one prescribed by R. Judah and much more so than those prescribed by the others.

(16) The Baraita prescribing the size of half a peras.

(17) Whose standard for 'erub, as explained Supra by R. Hisda, is that of a loaf of a quarter of a kab or six eggs, the half of the half of which is obviously $6/2 \times 2 = 1 \frac{1}{2}$ eggs.

(18) Apparently it is. What need then was there for R. Hisda to repeat what he had once stated?

(19) Lit., 'he came'.

(20) From Palestine to Babylon.

(21) A Roman measure of the same capacity as a Se'ah,

(22) Or 'copied from the standard measure of Nausa' (Jast. q.v.).

(23) Cf. supra n. 9

(24) Sc. the se'ah measure used by the Israelites in the time of Moses in the wilderness.

(25) A Se'ah equals six kab = $6 \times 4 \log = 6 \times 4 \times 6 = 144$ eggs.

(26) Which exceeds that of the desert by a fifth.

(27) Since $144 + 144/5 = 144 + 28 \frac{4}{5} = 172 \frac{4}{5}$ or 173 eggs approx.

(28) Which exceeded that of Jerusalem by a fifth.

(29) $173 + 173/5 = 173 + 34 \frac{3}{5} = 207 \frac{3}{5}$ or 207 eggs approx.

(30) Lit., 'bring . . . throw upon them', sc. Rabbi's calculations which show a higher figure include also the quantity of the dough-offering that is due from a Se'ah or two hundred and seven eggs of dough.

(31) So with R. Han. as cited by Tosaf. a.l. Cur. edd., 'eight'.

(32) A twenty-fourth part of the dough (cf. supra 81a). $217/24 = 9 \frac{1}{24}$ or 9 approx.

(33) Than two hundred and seventeen (cf. prev. n.).

(34) Not the quantity of the dough-offering.

(35) Sc. Rabbi's surpluses which amount to $1/20$ of an egg for each egg amount to $1/20 \times 207$ or $10 \frac{7}{20}$ eggs for a se'ah of the size of 207 eggs (cf. p. 579, n. 17). $207 + 10 \frac{7}{20} = 217 \frac{7}{20}$ or 217 approx.

(36) Than the number 217, by $7/20$

(37) It amounts only to seven twentieths (Cf. nn. 4 and 5).

(38) Of the latter measure, sc. a fifth of the former.

(39) $144/3 = 48$.

(40) $207/3 = 69$.

(41) $173/3 = 57 \frac{2}{3}$.

(42) $207/3 = 69$.

(43) Since $207 - 144 = 63$ and $207/3 = 69$. 63 is nearly equal to 69.

(44) 69.

(45) $144/2 = 72$. This figure is quite near to 69.

(46) Lit., 'near, near he taught'. How then could it be maintained by R. Jeremiah that 'nearly' a third etc. was meant.

(47) Sc. $(207 + 207 \times 1/20) \times 1/3 = (207 + 10 \frac{7}{20}) \times 1/3 = 217/3$ approx. $= 72 \frac{1}{3}$ approx.

(48) $144/2 = 72$.

(49) Since (cf. prev. two notes) $72 \frac{1}{3} - 72 = 1/3$.

(50) Ye shall set apart a cake for a gift (sc. as a dough-offering); Num. XV, 20.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 83b

only if it is of the size of your dough;¹ and what is the size of your dough? That of the dough of the wilderness. And what was the size of the dough of the wilderness? The one which is described: Now an omer is the tenth part of an ephah,² from which it has been deduced³ [that dough made of a quantity of] flour of seven quarters [of a kab]⁴ and a fraction⁵ is liable to the dough-offering. This [quantity] is equal to six Jerusalem kab or five of the Sepphoris kab. From this it has been inferred⁶ that if a person consumes such a quantity of food⁷ he is sound in body and happy in mind.⁸ He who consumes a greater quantity is a glutton and he who consumes less suffers from bad digestion.

MISHNAH. IF THE TENANTS OF A COURTYARD AND THE TENANTS ON ITS GALLERY⁹ FORGOT TO JOIN TOGETHER IN AN 'ERUB,¹⁰ ANY LEVEL¹¹ THAT IS HIGHER THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS BELONGS TO THE GALLERY,¹² AND ANY LOWER LEVEL¹³ BELONGS TO THE COURTYARD.¹⁴ THE BANK AROUND A CISTERN, OR A ROCK, THAT IS TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH BELONGS TO THE GALLERY¹² BUT IF IT IS LOWER IT BELONGS TO THE COURTYARD.¹⁴ THIS, HOWEVER, APPLIES ONLY TO ONE THAT ADJOINS THE GALLERY, BUT ONE THAT IS REMOVED FROM IT, EVEN IF TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH, BELONGS TO THE COURTYARD. AND WHAT OBJECT IS REGARDED AS ADJOINING? ONE THAT IS NOT FURTHER THAN FOUR HANDBREADTHS.

GEMARA. It is quite obvious that if an area is easily accessible to two courtyards¹⁵ the law is exactly the same as in the case of a window between two courtyards;¹⁶ that if it¹⁷ is accessible to either courtyard only through thrusting the law is exactly the same as in the case of a wall between two courtyards;¹⁸ that if it¹⁹ is accessible to either only by means of lowering their things the law is identical with that of a trench between two courtyards;²⁰ that if to the one it²¹ is easily accessible²² but to the other it is accessible only by means of thrusting, the law is identical with that which Rabbah son of R. Huna cited in the name of R. Nahman;²⁰ that if it²³ was easily accessible²² to the one while to the other it was accessible only by means of the lowering of objects, the law is identical with the one which R. Shezbi cited in the name of R. Nahman;²⁰ what, however, is the law where it²⁴ is accessible to one by means of lowering and to the other by means of thrusting?²⁵ — Rab ruled: Both²⁶ are forbidden [access], but Samuel ruled: Access to it is granted to the tenants²⁷ that can use it by means of lowering things²⁸ since to them its use is comparatively easy while to others its use is comparatively difficult, and any area the use of which is convenient to one and difficult to another is to be assigned to the one to whom its use is convenient.

We learned: IF THE TENANTS OF A COURTYARD AND THE TENANTS ON ITS GALLERY FORGOT TO JOIN TOGETHER IN AN 'ERUB ANY LEVEL THAT IS HIGHER THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS BELONGS TO THE GALLERY AND ANY LOWER LEVEL BELONGS TO THE COURTYARD. Assuming that by²⁹ GALLERY

(1) Need the dough-offering be set apart.

(2) Ex. XVI, 36.

(3) Since an 'omer is a tenth part of an ephah which (cf. Men. 77a) equals three se'ah, an 'omer = $3/10$ se'ah = $3 \times 6/10$ kab = $3 \times 6 \times 4/10$ log = $36/5 = 7 \frac{1}{5}$ log = (since a log = 6 eggs) $7 \frac{1}{5}$ log and $1 \frac{1}{5}$ of an egg.

- (4) Corresponding to seven log.
- (5) Sc. 1 1/5 of an egg (cf. n. 4).
- (6) Since the quantity mentioned represents the usual size of dough consumed by a person in twenty-four hours (cf. Ex. VI, 16, 18ff).
- (7) In twenty-four hours (cf. prev. n.).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 84a

was meant the tenants of an upper storey¹ and that the reason why they are described as the GALLERY IS because they ascend to their quarters by way of the gallery, does it not clearly follow³ that any area that is accessible to one⁴ by means of lowering and to the other⁵ by means of throwing up is assigned to the one who uses it by means of lowering? — As R. Huna explains [below that the reference is] to those who dwelt on the gallery so [it may] also here [be explained that the reference is] to those who dwelt on the gallery.⁶ If so,⁷ read the final clause: AND ANY LOWER LEVEL BELONGS TO THE COURTYARD; but why,⁸ Seeing that it is easily accessible to both?⁹ — The meaning of TO THE COURTYARD is to the courtyard also, and both¹⁰ are forbidden access to it. This¹¹ is also borne out by a process of reasoning, since in a subsequent clause It was stated: THIS, HOWEVER, APPLIES ONLY TO ONE THAT ADJOINS THE GALLERY, BUT ONE THAT IS REMOVED FROM IT, EVEN IF TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH, BELONGS TO THE COURTYARD. For what could be the meaning of the phrase, TO THE COURTYARD? If it be suggested that the meaning is: To the courtyard and that its use is permitted, [it could be objected:]. Why, seeing that it is a domain common to the two of them?¹² Consequently it must be admitted that¹³ TO THE COURTYARD means: To the courtyard also and that both¹² are forbidden access to it, so it should here also be explained that the meaning of the phrase, TO THE COURTYARD is: To the courtyard also and that both¹² are forbidden access to it. This is conclusive.

We have learnt: THE BANK AROUND A CISTERN, OR A ROCK, THAT IS TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH BELONGS TO THE GALLERY, BUT IF IT IS LOWER IT BELONGS

TO THE COURTYARD!¹⁴ — R. Huna replied: [The meaning¹⁵ is], to those who dwelt on the gallery.¹⁶ This may be a satisfactory explanation in the case of the rock;¹⁷ what, however, can be said as regards¹⁸ A CISTERN?¹⁹ — R. Isaac son of Rab Judah replied: We are here dealing with the case of a cistern that was full of water.²⁰ But is it not²¹ being diminished?²² — Since the use of the cistern is permitted²³ when full it is also permitted when some of the water is wanting. On the contrary! Since Its use would be forbidden when it is not full should it not also be forbidden when full? Rather, explained Abaye, we are here dealing with a cistern that was full of fruit. Might not these also be diminished?²⁴ — [It is a case] where they are tebel.²⁵ A textual deduction leads to the same conclusion: Since it has been put on a par²⁶ with ROCK.²⁷ This is conclusive. But²⁸ why should it be necessary to mention both CISTERN and ROCK?²⁹ — Both are required. For if we had been informed of the law in the case of the ROCK only, the ruling might have been presumed to apply to that alone, since no preventive measure in that case could be called for,³⁰ but that in the case of a cistern a preventive measure³¹ should be enacted, since it might sometimes be full of properly prepared fruit,³² hence both were required.

Come and hear: If the tenants of a courtyard and the tenants of the upper storey forgot to prepare a joint 'erub,³³ the former may use³⁴ the lower ten handbreadths³⁵ and the latter may use the upper ten handbreadths.³⁶ In what circumstances? If a bracket³⁷ projected from the wall at a lower altitude than ten handbreadths it is assigned to the courtyard, but if it was higher than ten handbreadths³⁸ it is assigned to the upper storey. Thus it follows, does it not, that the space intervening³⁹ is forbidden?⁴⁰ — R. Nahman replied: Here we are dealing with the case of a wall nineteen handbreadths high,⁴¹ from which a bracket projected. If [it projected] at a lower altitude than ten handbreadths,⁴² it is easily accessible to the one [group of tenants]⁴³ while to the other [group it is only accessible] by means of lowering their things,⁴⁴ but [if it projected] at a higher altitude [than ten handbreadths]⁴⁵ it is easily accessible to the latter⁴⁶ while to the former [it is accessible only] by means of thrusting.⁴⁷

- (1) Whose quarters are on a higher level than the balcony and consequently are also higher than a mound of the height of ten handbreadths or any similar eminence in the courtyard.
 - (2) Lit., 'and why (cf. Bah) do they call it'.
 - (3) Since the tenants of the upper storey may, and the tenants of the courtyard may not use the eminence.
 - (4) As, in this case, the tenants of the upper storey.
 - (5) In this case the tenants of the courtyard.
 - (6) An eminence of the height of ten handbreadths in the courtyard would thus be either on a level with their quarters or slightly higher or lower, but always by no more than ten handbreadths (cf. infra n. 10).
 - (7) That GALLERY designates the tenants who dwell on it.
 - (8) Should it be assigned to the courtyard.
 - (9) To the gallery (which is usually not higher than ten handbreadths) as well as to the courtyard. Since both groups of tenants can have easy access to it restrictions on its use should be mutually imposed.
 - (10) The tenants of the courtyard as well as those of the gallery.
 - (11) That TO THE COURTYARD means: Not only the tenants of the gallery but also those of the courtyard.
 - (12) V. p. 583, n. 11.
 - (13) Lit., 'but what'.
 - (14) GALLERY is assumed to mean the tenants of the upper storey (for whom the gallery is a means of approach to their houses) who can use the RANK or the ROCK by lowering their things, while the tenants of the courtyard can use it only by thrusting their things up to it. Now since it is ruled that the former may use the BANK etc. does not an objection arise against Rab who maintained (Supra 83b) that in such circumstances the two groups of tenants impose restrictions upon each other?
 - (15) Of the phrase To THE GALLERY.
 - (16) And not in the upper storey. Cf. supra p. 583, n. 7 mut. mut.
 - (17) Which, being more or less on a level with the balcony and easily accessible to its tenants, may well be assigned for their use.
 - (18) Lit., 'what is there to say'.

(19) Whose bottom cannot be reached even by the tenants of the gallery except by lowering their buckets while the tenants of the courtyard can use it only by means of thrusting their buckets into it across its bank. Now since in this case of thrusting by the latter and of lowering by the former the use of the bank was granted to the former, the objection again arises against Rab who in such circumstances maintained that both groups of tenants are forbidden access.

(20) The surface being more or less on a level with the gallery and therefore easily accessible to its tenants. Hence its assignment to the gallery.

(21) By the using up of the water near the surface.

(22) In consequence of which the tenants of the gallery would have to lower their buckets. Why then should the use of the cistern be permitted even in that case?

(23) To the tenants of the gallery.

(24) By the removal of some of the fruit.

(25) Such may not be moved from their place on the Sabbath.

(26) Lit., since it was taught similarly'.

(27) Which cannot be reduced on the Sabbath by mere use. Both standing in juxtaposition they must be assumed to be on a par.

(28) If it is to be assumed that the cistern was full of fruit that cannot be diminished on the Sabbath as a rock that cannot be diminished.

(29) Seeing that one could easily be inferred from the other.

(30) Lit., 'there is not (reason) to make a preventive measure

(31) Forbidding its use.

(32) Which may be handled on the Sabbath and which might, therefore, be removed during the Sabbath day.

(33) But each group prepared one for itself.

(34) Along the wall.

(35) Since these are easily accessible to them, while to the tenants of the upper storey they are inaccessible except by the lowering of their objects into that level.

(36) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut. In this case access is easy to the tenants of the upper storey while to those of the courtyard it is accessible only by thrusting.

(37) Four handbreadths in width.

(38) This is now assumed to mean that the bracket was higher than ten handbreadths measured from the upper storey downwards in the direction of the ground of the courtyard.

(39) Between the ten handbreadths from the ground and ten handbreadths from the upper storey.

(40) Because access to it is equally difficult to both groups of tenants. Those of the upper storey can use it only by lowering their things, while those of the courtyard can use it only by thrusting up their things. This ruling being in agreement with Rab's view, does not an objection arise against Samuel?

(41) So that no space intervened between the lower ten and the upper ten handbreadths.

(42) From the ground of the courtyard.

(43) Lit., 'to this (as if) by a door', Sc. the tenants of the courtyard can easily use that space that is not higher than ten handbreadths.

(44) Hence the ruling that the use of the bracket 'is assigned to the courtyard'.

(45) From the ground of the courtyard.

(46) Cf. supra n. 7 mut. mut.

(47) Its use must consequently be granted to the tenants of the upper storey.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 84b

Come and hear: If two balconies were situated¹ [in positions] higher than each other² and a partition³ was made⁴ for the upper one⁵ but not for the lower one restrictions are imposed on the use of both⁶ until all their tenants have joined in one 'erub!⁷ — R. Adda b. Ahabah replied: This is a case where the tenants of the lower balcony come⁸ to fill their buckets by way of the upper one.⁹ Abaye replied: This is a case where the balconies were situated within ten handbreadths from each other,¹⁰ but¹¹ the ruling is to be understood to be in the form of 'not only but':¹² Not only where a partition was made for the lower one and none for the upper one are both forbidden, since, owing to the fact that they are situated with ten handbreadths from each other, their tenants impose restrictions upon each other, but even where the partition was made for the upper, and none was made for the lower,¹³ in which case it might have been assumed that, owing to the fact that its use is convenient for the former and difficult for the latter, it should be assigned to those to whom its use is convenient,¹⁴ hence we were informed that, since they are situated within ten handbreadths from, they also impose restrictions upon each other;¹⁵ as is the ruling in the case R. Nahman cited in the name of Samuel: If a roof¹⁶ adjoins a public domain¹⁷ a permanent ladder is required to render it permissible for use.¹⁸ Thus it is only a 'permanent ladder' that effects permissibility¹⁹ but not an occasional one;²⁰ but why?²¹ Obviously²² because on account of the fact that they²³ are situated within ten handbreadths from each other, the people in them impose restrictions upon each other.²⁴ R. Papa demurred: Is it not possible that this²⁵ applies Only to a roof on which many people²⁶ are in the habit of putting down their skull-caps and turbans?²⁷ Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled:

(2) Being nevertheless drawn away from each other in a manner that left a space of less than four handbreadths between them and thus enabling persons on the lower balcony to draw their water by throwing a bucket into a hole (v. following n.) in the floor of the upper balcony.

(3) Round a hole, four handbreadths wide, in the floor of the balcony through which water is to be drawn from the sea.

(4) Jointly by the tenants of both balconies (cf. infra 88a).

(5) A partition round such a hole, though in relation to the sea it is a suspended one, is deemed to extend downwards and penetrating to the bed of the sea (cf. Supra 12a) and forming a private domain through which the water of the sea may be taken up in buckets to the balcony. In the absence of such a device the movement of water or any other objects from the sea which has the status of a karmelith into the balcony which has that of a private domain is forbidden on the Sabbath.

(6) Sc. neither the tenants of the upper balcony may draw water from the sea through the hole nor may those of the lower one throw their buckets into that hole to draw water through it.

(7) Infra 87b. In the absence of a joint 'erub the hole within the partition remains a mixed domain belonging to two different groups of tenants who impose restrictions upon each other and is, therefore, forbidden to both. Now here it is a case of use by lowering on the part of the tenants of the upper balcony and by thrusting on the part of those of the lower one, and yet it was ruled that both groups are forbidden; how then could Samuel maintain (supra 83b) that access is granted to 'the tenants that can use it by means of lowering'?

(8) By means of a ladder.

(9) So that both groups of tenants use the hole in exactly the same manner both lowering and none thrusting their buckets.

(10) Sc. the position of the upper balcony was by less than ten handbreadths higher than the lower, in consequence of which there can be no existence for a third domain between the two, the use of which should be allowed to the one or the other of these two adjacent domains. A third domain of such a character is possible only where the two adjacent domains were separated from each other by a trench, or a wall that was ten handbreadths deep or high or by a space of similar height.

(11) In reply to the possible objection: If the prohibition of the use of the hole is due to the proximity of the balconies and not to the manner in which use of it was made, why was the ruling limited to the case where 'a partition was made for the upper one seeing that the same ruling should apply even where it was made for the lower one'?

(12) Lit., 'and he implied (the formula) it is not required'.

(13) So that the tenants of the former use it by lowering and the tenants of the latter use it by thrusting.

(14) In agreement with Samuel.

(15) Thus indicating that in such a case the manner of use is of no consequence.

(16) That was less than ten handbreadths high (cf. R. Tam in Tosaf. a.l. whose interpretation is here followed).

(17) On one of its sides, while on its other sides it adjoins a courtyard.

(18) By the tenants of the courtyard. Though a ladder cannot effect the permissibility of a karmelith (cf. Maharsha, a.l.) the roof which is a private domain within, and is consequently no proper karmelith, may well be rendered permissible by connecting it with a permanent ladder with the courtyard.

(19) Lit., 'yes'.

(20) Though even such an occasional ladder facilitates the use of the roof by the tenants of the courtyard to whom the roof is thereby much more easily accessible than to the people in the public domain who have not the use of even an occasional ladder.

(21) Sc. in view of the fact that even an occasional ladder facilitates the use of the roof by the courtyard tenants (cf. prev. n.) why should not the use of the roof be permitted to them?

(22) Lit., 'not?'

(23) The courtyard and the public domain.

(24) In agreement with Abaye's explanation.

(25) The ruling that an occasional ladder cannot effect permissibility.

(26) On weekdays.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 85a

If a cistern¹ between two courtyards² was removed four handbreadths from the one wall³ and four handbreadths from the other wall,⁴ each owner may construct some slight projection from his wall⁵ and may then draw the water.⁶ Rab Judah on his own, however, ruled: Even a reed suffices.⁷ Said Abaye to R. Joseph, This ruling of Rab Judah⁸ must be Samuel's,⁹ for should it be contended that It is¹⁰ Rab's the difficulty would arise: Did he not rule that no man could impose restrictions upon another through the air?¹¹ From which ruling of Samuel, however, could this⁸ be derived?¹² If it be suggested: From the following which R. Nahman reported In the name of Samuel, viz., If a roof adjoins a public domain a permanent ladder is required to render it permissible for use,¹³ — [could it not be retorted]: that the reason there¹⁴ might be in agreement with the opinion of R. Papa?¹⁵ — It is rather from this ruling:¹⁶ 'Each owner constructs some slight projection from his wall and he may then draw the water'.¹⁷ The reason then¹⁸ is that a projection was made,¹⁹ but if no projection had been made it would have been maintained that a man imposes restrictions upon another through the air.²⁰ From which ruling of Rab, however, was the view²¹ here attributed to him derived? If it be suggested from this: 'If two balconies were situated in positions one higher than the other, and a partition was made for the upper one but not for the lower one restrictions are imposed on the use of both until all their tenants have joined in one 'erub';²² in connection with which R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: 'This²³ was learnt only in respect of [a balcony] that is near²⁴ but where it was²⁵ four handbreadths away,²⁶ the use of the upper one is permitted and that of the lower one is forbidden',²⁷ could it not be retorted that the case here²⁸ comes under a different category²⁹ because, owing to the fact that access in the case of the one group³⁰ is by means of thrusting as well as by means of lowering³¹ while in that of the other³² it is by means of lowering only, the case is analogous to that where one gains access by means of thrusting³³ and the other by means of a door?³⁴ — It is rather from this ruling: which R. Nahman cited in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha who had it from Rab:³⁵ If there were three ruins³⁶ between two houses³⁷ each occupier may use³⁸ the ruin nearest to him³⁹ by means of thrusting⁴⁰

(1) In an alley into which no courtyard or house doors opened.

(2) Between which intervened the alley (cf. prev. n.) into which a window from each courtyard opened.

(3) Of the one courtyard.

(4) Of the courtyard opposite. If the distances between the cistern and courtyards were less than four handbreadths access to the cistern through the courtyard windows (cf. supra n. 2) would have been equally easy from both courtyards and the use of the cistern would, therefore, have been forbidden to the tenants of both on account (cf. infra 86a) of the restrictions they would impose upon one another.

(5) Towards the cistern. Lit., 'this (one) brings out a projection of any size

- (6) Through his window. The two domains represented by the two courtyards, since they are four handbreadths distant from the cistern, cannot impose restrictions on its use, while the use of the alley itself cannot in any way be affected since neither house doors nor courtyard doors opened into it. The very requirement of the projection is in fact unnecessary for the purpose of bringing about the permissibility of the use of the cistern. It rather serves merely as a distinguishing mark to prevent people from the use of a domain in which more than one mall has a share, unless a joint 'erub had been duly prepared.
- (7) As a projection for the purpose mentioned.
- (8) That provision for some sort of a projection is necessary.
- (9) Not Rab's who also was his teacher.
- (10) Lit., 'for if'.
- (11) And not even a reed should have been required in this case where the bucket has to be thrust through a space of four handbreadths in the air. The ruling must consequently be Samuel's.
- (12) It is now assumed that Abaye did not hear Rab Judah's ruling in conjunction with the one he specifically reported in the name of Samuel. Had he been assumed to have heard the two in the form recorded supra this question could never have arisen.
- (13) Supra 84b q.v. notes; and in the absence of such a ladder the people in the public domain and the tenants of the courtyard impose restrictions upon one another in the use of the roof. Now since a roof is usually inaccessible from a public domain except by means of thrusting the only way by which a man in that domain could make use of the roof would be by thrusting some object or objects on it through the air. This being forbidden by Samuel it follows that in his opinion restrictions are imposed even through the air.
- (14) For the prohibition in the absence of a permanent ladder.
- (15) That the roof can be used from the public domain, by people who put upon it their skull-caps and turbans.
- (16) That, in the opinion of Abaye, Rab Judah deduced Samuel's view on the necessity for some projection. Abaye, it is now concluded, did hear Rab Judah's ruling in the form in which it was recorded supra.
- (17) Supra q.v. notes.
- (18) Why the drawing of the water is permitted.
- (19) Lit., 'that he brought out'.
- (20) And since Samuel required only 'some slight projection' Rab Judah deduced that 'even a reed suffices'.
- (21) That no man can impose restrictions upon another through the air.
- (22) Supra 84b q.v. notes.
- (23) That restrictions are imposed by the tenants of the lower balcony upon those of the upper one.
- (24) Sc. though it was vertically ten handbreadths lower than the upper one it was horizontally within four handbreadths from it.
- (25) Horizontally.
- (26) So that its tenants cannot use the upper balcony except by thrusting their buckets through the air.
- (27) Which shows that, according to Rab, no restrictions can be imposed through the air by the tenants of the one balcony upon those of the other.
- (28) That of the two balconies.
- (29) Lit., 'perhaps it is here different'.
- (30) The people on the lower balcony.
- (31) Thrusting their buckets to the upper balcony and then lowering it through the hole in the floor into the water.
- (32) The tenants of the upper one.
- (33) Difficult and inconvenient use.
- (34) Sc. easy and convenient access; and, since the tenants of the lower balcony are in the position of the former while those of the upper one are in the position of the latter, Rab justifiably ruled that 'the use of the upper one is permitted and that of the lower one is forbidden'. What proof however, is there that Rab also maintains that no restrictions can be imposed through the air even where, as in the case of the cistern between the two courtyards, the tenants can use it in exactly the same manner?
- (35) That Rab's view was deduced.
- (36) Inhabited by none and their walls were broken down so that the interiors were fully exposed.
- (37) Which had windows opening towards the ruins and the occupiers of which were the sole owners of the ruins.
- (38) Through his windows.

(39) As he can never, even on a weekday, make proper use of that ruin into which no doors opened, and access to which can be gained only through a window, its exposure through the broken walls to the adjacent ruins does not deprive him of the right of using it.

(40) Throughout its area even far away from the window, or by lowering things immediately below it.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 85b

while the use of the middle ruin is forbidden.¹

R. Berona, sitting at his studies, was enunciating this ruling² when R. Eleazar,³ a student at the college, asked him, 'Did Rab actually say this?'⁴ — 'Yes', the other replied. 'Will you', the first asked: 'show me his lodgings?' When the other showed them to him he approached Rab and asked him, 'Did the Master say this?'⁵ — 'Yes', the other replied. 'But', the first objected, 'did not the Master state: Where it is accessible to one by means of lowering things and to the other by means of thrusting both are forbidden access?'⁶ — 'You imagine', the other replied: 'that they⁷ stood in a straight line;⁸ but no, they stood in a triangle'.⁹

Said R. Papa to Raba: Must it be assumed that Samuel¹⁰ does not uphold the view of R. Dimi, seeing that when R. Dimi came¹¹ posed even through the air. How, then, he wondered, could Rab allow each occupier to use the ruin adjacent to his house seeing that the occupier opposite should impose restrictions on its use through the air since he can use it by throwing his things into it? he stated in the name of R. Johanan: On a place¹² whose area is less than four handbreadths by four¹³ it is permissible both for the people of the public domain and for those of the private domain¹⁴ to re-arrange their burdens, provided they do not exchange them?¹⁵ — There¹⁶ it is a case of domains,¹⁷ access between which is Pentateuchally forbidden,¹⁸ while here¹⁹ it is a case of domains,²⁰ access between which is only Rabbinically forbidden, and the Sages have applied to their enactments, heavier restrictions than to those of the Torah.²¹

Said Rabina to Raba: Did Rab say this?²² Was it not in fact stated: If two houses²³ stood on the two sides respectively of a public domain it is forbidden, said Rabbah son of R. Huna In the name of Rab, to throw any object from one into the other,²⁴ and Samuel ruled: It is permitted to throw from one into the other?²⁵ — Have we not explained,²⁶ the other replied, that one²⁷ was higher and the other²⁸ lower so that²⁹ it may sometimes happen that the object might drop and roll away and one might in consequence be tempted to carry it.³⁰

MISHNAH. IF A MAN DEPOSITED HIS 'ERUB³¹ IN A GATE-HOUSE, AN EXEDRA OR A GALLERY IT IS NOT A VALID 'ERUB;³² AND NO ONE WHO DWELLS IN IT³² IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS.³³ AN 'ERUB³¹ DEPOSITED IN A STRAW-SHED, A CATTLE-SHED, A WOOD-SHED OR STOREHOUSE IS VALID;³⁴ AND ANYONE³⁵ WHO DWELLS IN IT IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS.³⁶ R. JUDAH RULED: IF THE HOUSEHOLDER HAS THERE³⁷ ANY HOLDING³⁸ THE TENANT IMPOSES NO RESTRICTIONS.³⁹

GEMARA. R. Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shilath stated: If concerning any place the Sages⁴⁰ ruled that 'No one who dwells in it imposes restrictions' the 'erub that is deposited [in such a place] is no valid 'erub, the only exception being the gate-house of an individual owner;⁴¹ and if concerning any place the Sages ruled that 'no 'erub⁴² may be deposited in it', shittuf⁴³ may nevertheless be deposited in it,⁴⁴ the only exception being the air space of an alley. But what does he⁴⁵ teach us,⁴⁶ seeing that we learned: IF A MAN DEPOSITED HIS 'ERUB IN A GATE-HOUSE, AN EXEDRA ON A GALLERY IT IS NOT A VALID 'ERUB, from which it follows only that it is NOT A VALID 'ERUB but that it is nevertheless a valid shittuf. — He⁴⁵ found it necessary to make his statement on account of the law relating to the 'gate-house of an individual owner'⁴¹ and to the 'air space of an alley' which we have not learnt in our Mishnah. So⁴⁷ it was also taught: 'If a man deposited his 'erub in a gate-house, an exedra, a gallery, a courtyard or an alley his 'erub is valid', but have we not learnt: IT IS NOT A VALID 'ERUB?⁴⁸ Read, therefore, 'the shittuf is valid.'⁴⁹ But can the food for shittuf be safely preserved in an alley?⁵⁰ — Read: In a courtyard that is situated in the alley.⁵¹

Rab Judah citing Samuel⁵² ruled: If members of a party were dining when the sanctity of the Sabbath day overtook them, they may rely upon the bread on the table to serve the purpose of 'erub or, as others say, the purpose of shittuf. Rabbah observed: There is really no divergence of opinion between them,⁵³ since the former refers to a party dining in a house⁵⁴ while the latter refer to one dining in a courtyard.⁵⁵ Said Abaye to Rabbah, It was taught in agreement with your view: 'Erubs of courtyards should be deposited in a courtyard and shittufs of alleys in an alley,'⁵⁶ and when the objection was raised: How could it be said that 'erubs of courtyards should be deposited in a courtyard' seeing that we learned, IF A MAN DEPOSITED HIS 'ERUB IN A GATE-HOUSE OR EXEDRA OR A GALLERY IT IS NOT A VALID 'ERUB?⁵⁷ [It was replied,] Read: 'Erubs of courtyards should be deposited in a house that was situated in the courtyard, and food for the shittuf of an alley should be deposited in a courtyard that was in the alley.'⁵⁸

R. JUDAH RULED: IF . . . HAS THERE ANY HOLDING etc. What is one to understand by a HOLDING? — One, for instance, like that in the courtyard of Bonyis.⁵⁹

The son of Bonyis once visited Rabbi. 'Make room', the latter called out,⁶⁰ 'for the owner of a hundred maneh'. Another person entered, when he called out,

(1) To the occupiers of either house. The reason is discussed infra. Now since the two ruins that were adjacent to the houses may be used by the respective occupiers, despite the use that each is able on weekdays to make of the ruin adjacent to his neighbour's house by thrusting objects into it through the air, it follows that in the opinion of Rab no restrictions can be imposed by one person upon another through his use of the air.

(2) Of Rab, just cited by R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha.

(3) v. marg. glosses. Cur. edd. 'Eliezer.

(4) R. Eleazar's view was that Rab, who forbade the use of the middle ruin though neither of the occupiers of the house could use it except by throwing his things into it through the air, was of the opinion that restrictions are imposed

(5) V. p. 591, n. 15.

(6) From which it follows that if the use of a place is not as convenient to one of the parties as in the case of access through an open door, though that party's use by lowering is easier than the other party's use by thrusting, restrictions are nevertheless imposed. How then, seeing that according to Rab restrictions are imposed through the air (cf. prev. n.), could the use of a ruin be permitted to the occupier of the house nearest to it in view of the fact that his access to it is only less difficult than that of the occupier of the opposite house but not really convenient?

(7) The three ruins.

(8) So that the air space of a ruin intervened between either house and the central ruin.

(9) Lit., 'like a tripod'. One ruin was adjacent to both houses and faced the other two that stood in a straight line and were respectively adjacent to one of the houses and separated from the other by the ruin adjacent to it. The use of the central ruin is forbidden to both occupiers, not for the reason assumed by R. Eleazar, but because both, who through their windows have equally direct, though inconvenient, access to it, impose restrictions upon each other. The use of the other two ruins too is permitted respectively to both because in the case of either ruin one of the occupiers has direct access and the other has only indirect access by means of thrusting his things into it through the air through which no restriction can be imposed.

(10) In laying down supra that a man may impose restrictions upon another through the air.

(11) From Palestine to Babylon.

(12) Situated between a public and a private domain.

(13) And is consequently too insignificant to constitute a domain of its own.

- (14) Since in relation to either it loses its identity.
- (15) If exchange also were permitted people might erroneously assume that it is permitted to carry objects from a private domain into a public one and vice versa. Now, a place having an area so small as the one described has no legal existence in respect of the Sabbath laws and is, therefore, analogous to mere air space and, since it was ruled that it may be freely used, and that no provision such e.g. as a projection is necessary, Samuel who did prescribe a projection in the case of use through the air cannot very well agree with it.
- (16) R. Dimi's ruling.
- (17) A public and a private one.
- (18) As people are usually careful in the observance of Pentateuchal restrictions no special provision, such as that of a projection, was considered necessary.
- (19) A cistern between two courtyards.
- (20) Both Pentateuchally private.
- (21) As a precaution against possible laxity in their observance.
- (22) That each occupier may thrust things into the ruin nearest to his house because the occupier of the opposite house cannot impose restrictions through the air.
- (23) Both belonging to the same owner.
- (24) Though it passes the public domain at a higher level than ten handbreadths from the ground; the reason presumably being that the people of the public domain impose restrictions through the air of their domain through which the object must pass.
- (25) Now since Rab presumably laid down here (cf. prev. n.) that restrictions may be imposed through the air, how could he have ruled supra that restrictions through the air cannot be imposed?
- (26) As a reason for the prohibition.
- (27) Of the two houses under discussion.
- (28) Of the two houses under discussion.
- (29) Where an object is thrown from the lower to the upper house.
- (30) From the public into the private domain which is Pentateuchally forbidden. Samuel's ruling here that 'it is permitted' to throw objects from one house into the other, it may be added, presents no contradiction against his ruling supra that restrictions are imposed through the air, since the former case relates to domains access between which is Pentateuchally forbidden while the latter relates to such as are only Rabbinically forbidden. Greater safeguards, as has been explained supra, were required in the case of a Rabbinical enactment than in that of a Pentateuchal one.
- (31) Of courtyards.
- (32) Since none of these is a proper dwelling-house.
- (33) Upon the occupier (or occupiers) of the courtyard, even if that tenant did not make a contribution to the 'erub of the courtyard.
- (34) Lit., 'behold this is 'erub'.
- (35) To whom the householder has loaned its use.
- (36) Upon the use of the courtyard, on account of its door that opened into that courtyard.
- (37) In the straw-shed etc. In his courtyard, which he loaned to the tenant.
- (38) Lit., 'a holding (or grasping) of the hand (or place)', sc. if he is entitled to use a section of the place for his own storage.
- (39) Because the entire courtyard with all its rooms and sheds are deemed to be the dwelling quarters of the householder while the tenant in question has no individual status but that of one of his household.
- (40) Cf. Bah.
- (41) Of the courtyard. Our Mishnah refers to the gate-house of a courtyard that was owned by several people.
- (42) Of courtyards.
- (43) Sc. the food prescribed for the purpose.
- (44) The essence of an 'erub of courtyards is the legal fusion of all the houses and rooms in a courtyard into one common dwelling, that dwelling being the place in which the 'erub is deposited. As in its essence it must constitute a 'dwelling', only a place or structure that is used as a dwelling is suitable for the purpose. Shittuf however, which combines only courtyards, in which people do not actually dwell, has no connection with the principle of 'a dwelling' and the food for it may, therefore, be deposited even in a place that is not used for dwelling purposes.
- (45) R. Judah.

- (46) By the statement he cited in the name of R. Samuel b. Shilath.
- (47) That the food for Shittuf may be deposited even in those structures where no 'erub may be deposited.
- (48) How then are the two rulings to be reconciled?
- (49) This providing support for the ruling cited by R. Judah.
- (50) Lit., 'shittuf in an alley is not preserved'.
- (51) Sc. only one whose door opened into the alley.
- (52) MS.M., 'Rab' (cf. the parallel passage supra 73b, where cur. edd. also read 'Rab').
- (53) Those who read 'erub' and those who read 'shittuf'.
- (54) Which is a suitable place for an 'erub.
- (55) In which only the food for shittuf, but not that for 'erub, may be deposited.
- (56) Suk. 3b.
- (57) Because a proper dwelling house is an essential. How then could an open courtyard be used for the purpose?
- (58) But neither can an 'erub be deposited in the courtyard itself nor a shittuf in the alley itself.
- (59) A rich man who allowed people to occupy various rooms in his courtyard but reserved for himself the right to a holding in each room for the purpose of storing in it some of his own goods.
- (60) Lit., , 'said to them'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 86a

'Make room for the owner of two hundred maneh'. 'Master', said R. Ishmael son of R. Jose to him, 'the father of this man¹ owns a thousand ships on the sea and a corresponding number of towns on land'. 'When you meet² his father', the other replied: 'tell him not to³ send him to me in such clothes'.⁴

Rabbi showed respect to rich men, and R. Akiba also showed respect to rich men, in agreement with an exposition made by Raba⁵ b. Mari: May he be enthroned before God for ever, appoint mercy and truth that they may preserve him,⁶ when 'may he be enthroned before God for ever'?⁷ When he 'appoint mercy and truth⁸ that they may preserve him'.

Rabbah b. Bar Hana explained:⁹ The pill of the plough, for instance.¹⁰

R. Nahman stated: It was taught at the school of Samuel: If it¹¹ is an object that may be handled on the Sabbath¹² the tenant¹³ imposes restrictions,¹⁴ but if it is one that may not be handled on the Sabbath¹⁵ the tenant imposes no restrictions.¹⁶ So¹⁷ it was also taught: If he¹⁸ has tebel, bars of metal, or any other object that may not be moved on the Sabbath, the tenant¹⁹ imposes no restrictions.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN LEFT HIS HOUSE AND WENT TO SPEND THE SABBATH IN ANOTHER TOWN, WHETHER HE WAS A GENTILE OR AN ISRAELITE, HIS SHARE²⁰ IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS ON THE RESIDENTS OF THE COURTYARD;²¹ SO R. MEIR, R. JUDAH RULED: IT IMPOSES NO RESTRICTIONS.²² R. JOSE²³ RULED: THE SHARE OF A GENTILE²⁴ IMPOSES RESTRICTIONS; BUT THAT OF AN ISRAELITE²⁵ DOES NOT IMPOSE ANY RESTRICTIONS BECAUSE IT IS NOT USUAL FOR AN ISRAELITE TO RETURN ON THE SABBATH. R. SIMEON RULED: EVEN IF HE LEFT HIS HOUSE AND WENT TO SPEND THE SABBATH WITH HIS DAUGHTER IN THE SAME TOWN²⁶ HIS SHARE IMPOSES NO RESTRICTION, SINCE²⁷ HE HAD NO INTENTION WHATEVER OF RETURNING.²⁸

GEMARA. Rab stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. SIMEON. This, however, applies only [where the man went to spend the Sabbath with] his daughter but not [where he went to spend it with] his son; for it is a common saying: 'If a dog barks at you, go in; if a bitch barks at you go out'.²⁹

MISHNAH. FROM A CISTERN BETWEEN TWO COURTYARDS³⁰ NO WATER MAY BE DRAWN³¹ ON THE SABBATH³² UNLESS A PARTITION TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH HAS BEEN MADE FOR IT³³ EITHER BELOW³⁴ OR WITHIN ITS RIM.³⁵ R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL STATED, BETH SHAMMAI RULED: BELOW,³⁴ AND BETH HILLEL RULED: ABOVE.³⁴ R. JUDAH OBSERVED: THE PARTITION COULD NOT BE MORE EFFECTIVE³⁶ THAN THE INTERVENING WALL.³⁷ GEMARA. R. Huna explained: BELOW³⁸ means actually below,³⁹ and ABOVE⁴⁰ means actually above,⁴¹ and in either case the partition must be⁴² within the cistern.⁴³ Rab Judah, however, explained: BELOW³⁸ means below the water,⁴⁴ and ABOVE⁴⁰ means above the water.⁴⁵

Said Rabbah son of R. Hanan to Abaye: With reference to Rab Judah's submission that⁴⁶ 'BELOW means below the water'⁴⁷ why⁴⁸ did he not explain, 'actually below'⁴⁹ Apparently because the waters would be mixed;⁵⁰ but then, even if he explains, 'below the water',⁴⁷ is not the water mixed?⁵¹ — The other replied: Have you not heard the statement which Rab Judah made in the name of Rab or, as others are inclined to assert, in the name of R. Hiyya: The tops of the reeds⁵² must be seen projecting one handbreadth above the surface of the water!

Furthermore,⁵³ with reference to Rab Judah's submission that ABOVE⁴⁰ means above the water',⁵⁴ why⁴⁸ does he not explain, 'actually above'⁴¹ Apparently because the water would be mixed;⁵⁰ but then, even if it is explained: 'above the water'⁵⁴ is not the water mixed?⁵⁰ — The other replied: Have you not heard what Jacob of Karhina has learnt: One must insert the ends of the reeds into the water⁵⁵ to the depth of a handbreadth.⁵⁶ With reference, however, to Rab Judah's ruling that a crossbeam of the width of four handbreadths effects permissibility⁵⁷ in a ruin,⁵⁸ and to that of R. Nahman who, citing Rabbah b. Abbuha, ruled that

 - (3) Lit., 'do not'.
 - (4) Which belie his wealth.
 - (5) En Jacob, 'Rabbah'.
 - (6) Ps. LXI, 8.
 - (7) Sc. deserve honour and respect.
 - (8) Being rich one is able to exercise acts of mercy and truth. According to Rashi יב (here rendered 'appoint') signifies 'food' (cf. 'manna' which is the equivalent of the Hebrew נ), the rich deserve respect because they exercise mercy and provide food for the poor.
 - (9) The meaning of a HOLDING.
 - (10) That the householder kept in the tenant's room.
 - (11) The object (cf. prev. n.).
 - (12) So that it is possible to remove it from the room during the day.
 - (13) Who may thus become the sole occupier.
 - (14) On the use of the courtyard, unless he made his contribution to the 'erub.
 - (15) In consequence of which it must remain in the tenant's room until the termination of the day.
 - (16) Since the householder's right to the holding in his room is secured for the whole Sabbath.
 - (17) That the question of restrictions is dependent on the nature of the object.
 - (18) The householder.
 - (19) Since the householder's right to the holding in his room is secured for the whole Sabbath.
 - (20) In the courtyard, as a householder.
 - (21) Lit., 'behold this (man) forbids'. Since he did not make a contribution to the 'erub. An empty house, in his opinion, has the same status in respect of 'erub as one that is occupied.
 - (22) An empty house, he maintains, cannot in respect of 'erub be regarded as a dwelling-house.
 - (23) Though, in agreement with R. Judah, he holds that an empty house is no valid dwelling-house (cf. prev. n.).
 - (24) Since he might return during the Sabbath to re-occupy his house.

- (25) While his house remains unoccupied.
- (26) So that he could return on the Sabbath if he were disposed to do so.
- (27) At the time the Sabbath began.
- (28) Lit., 'because he has already removed (the thought of returning) from his heart'.
- (29) A quarrelsome son-in-law is not very dangerous and there is no reason to expect that his father-in-law might have to leave his daughter's house during the Sabbath. A quarrelsome daughter-in-law might drive her father-in-law from his sons's house before the day is over.
- (30) Half of it being in the one and the other half in the other.
- (31) If no joint 'erub between the courtyards has been prepared.
- (32) Because each group of tenants would unlawfully be drawing water out of the other group's domain and carrying it into theirs.
- (33) To divide the waters of the two domains from each other.
- (34) This is explained in the Gemara infra.
- (35) Though it does not touch the water. The partition is deemed to be extended downwards and to penetrate beneath the surface of the water to the ground. This is a special relaxation of the law in respect of water partitions.
- (36) Lit., 'let not the partition be greater'.
- (37) Between the two courtyards, and underneath which the cistern lies.
- (38) In Beth Shammai's ruling.
- (39) Below the mouth of the cistern, sc. near the water, though there is no need for the edge of the partition to touch the water.
- (40) In the ruling of Beth Hillel.
- (41) Near the rim. There is no need to extend it to the water.
- (42) Lit., 'and this and this'.
- (43) Sc. even Beth Hillel agree that the entire partition of ten handbreadths high must be within the rim and below it.
- (44) Sc. the partition must be fixed in the floor of the cistern.
- (45) The partition need not actually touch it but must not be removed from it as far as the rim (cf. Supra n. 2. 'Below' according to R. Huna, it will be noted, is identical with 'above' according to Rab Judah).
- (46) Lit., 'that which Rab Judah said'.
- (47) Sc. the partition must be fixed in the floor of the cistern.
- (48) Lit., 'what is the difference'.
- (49) Below the mouth of the cistern, sc. near the water, though there is no need for the edge of the partition to touch the water.
- (50) Beneath the partition.
- (51) Above the partition; since the water may be deeper than the height of the partition the prescribed size of which is only ten handbreadths.
- (52) Of which the partition in the water is made.
- (53) It was asked.
- (54) V. supra n. 8.
- (55) According to Beth Hillel.
- (56) The difference between Beth Hillel and Beth Shammai being that while Beth Hillel regard the partition as a mere symbol of division, in consequence of which it is not necessary to insert it below the depth of one handbreadth of water, Beth Shammai regard it as a proper division, in consequence of which its lower end must be inserted into the bottom of the cistern so that it may completely divide between the waters of the two domains.
- (57) Of the movement of objects under it.
- (58) If it lay on its width and reached from one wall to the other on the opposite side.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 86b

a cross-beam of the width of four handbreadths¹ effects permissibility in the case of water,² does not the bucket swing to the other side³ and thus carry up the water from it? — The Rabbis have ascertained that a bucket does not swing beyond four handbreadths.⁴ But are not the waters mixed under the cross-beam at least? — The fact is that⁵ the Sages⁶ have relaxed the law in respect of water; as R. Tabla, when he enquired of Rab whether a suspended partition can convert a ruin⁷ into a permitted domain, was told: A suspended partition effects permissibility of use in the case of water alone⁸ since in the case of water did the Sages relax the law.

R. JUDAH OBSERVED: THE PARTITION COULD NOT BE. Rabbah b. Bar Hana citing R. Johanan explained: R. Judah⁹ made his submission on the lines of the view of R. Jose who holds: A suspended partition effects permissibility even on dry land.¹⁰ For we learned: If its walls were suspended¹¹ from above in a downward direction [the sukkah] is invalid, if they were removed¹² three handbreadths from the ground;¹³ but if they are raised¹⁴ in an upward direction¹⁵ the sukkah is valid if they were ten handbreadths high.¹⁶ R. Jose ruled: As walls of the height of ten handbreadths are valid if they rise from the ground upwards¹⁶ so are those that stretch from above downwards valid if their height is ten handbreadths.¹⁷ This,¹⁸ however, is not correct; neither does R. Judah hold the view of R. Jose nor does R. Jose hold that of R. Judah. R. Judah does not hold the view of R. Jose, since the former maintained his view only¹⁹ in respect of 'erubs of courtyards which are merely a Rabbinical institution²⁰ but not in that of sukkah which is Pentateuchal.²¹ Nor does R. Jose hold the view of R. Judah, since the former maintained his view only in respect of sukkah which is merely a positive commandment²² but not in that of Sabbath which involves a prohibition punishable by stoning.²¹ And should you ask,²³ 'In agreement with whose view was that incident²⁴ at Sepphoris²⁵ decided upon?'²⁶ It was not decided upon [it might be explained,] in agreement with the view of R. Jose²⁷ but with that of R. Ishmael son of R. Jose.²⁸ When²⁹ R. Dimi came³⁰ he related: The people once forgot to bring³¹ a scroll of the Torah on the Sabbath eve³² and on the following day they³³ spread a sheet upon the pillars,³⁴ brought the scroll of the Torah³¹ and read from it.³⁵ 'They spread!' But is this permitted³⁶ ab initio seeing that all³⁷ agree that not even a temporary tent may be put tip on the Sabbath?³⁸ The fact is that they found sheets spread upon the pillars and so they brought the scroll of the Torah and read from it.

Rabbah observed: R. Judah and R. Hananya b. Akabya have said practically the same thing.³⁹ As to R. Judah there is the ruling just mentioned. As to R. Hananya b. Akabya, it was taught:⁴⁰ R. Hananya b. Akabya ruled: In a balcony⁴¹ that has an area of four cubits by four cubits⁴² one cuts a hole of four handbreadths by four¹ and may draw water through it.² Said Abaye to him:³ Is it not possible that your observation is incorrect?⁴ R. Judah may have maintained his view there only⁵ because he holds the principle that a partition is deemed to extend downwards but not here where it must be deemed to be both bent and extended; and R. Hananya b. Akabya may have maintained his view there only, in the case of the sea of Tiberias,⁶ because it has embankments, towns and karpafs around it⁷ but not in that of other waters.

Abaye observed: According to the view of R. Hananya b. Akabya⁸ if the balcony was within three handbreadths from the wall⁹ it is necessary for its length to be four cubits and for its width to be eleven cubits and a fraction.¹⁰ If it was upright¹¹ it is necessary that its height¹² shall be ten handbreadths¹³ and its width six handbreadths and two fractions.¹⁴ R. Huna son of R. Joshua observed: If it¹⁵ was situated in a corner¹⁶ it is necessary for its height to be ten handbreadths¹⁷ and for its width to be two handbreadths and two fractions.¹⁸ With reference, however, to what was taught: R. Hananya b. Akabya ruled: 'In a balcony that has an area of four cubits by four he cuts a hole of four handbreadths by four and may draw water through it', in what circumstances could this¹⁹ be possible?²⁰ — Where it is constructed in the shape of a mortar.²¹

MISHNAH. FROM A WATER CHANNEL²² THAT PASSES THROUGH A COURTYARD NO WATER MAY BE DRAWN ON THE SABBATH²³ UNLESS IT WAS FURNISHED²⁴ WITH A PARTITION TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH AT ITS ENTRANCE²⁵ AND EXIT.²⁶ R. JUDAH RULED: THE WALL ABOVE IT²⁷ MAY BE REGARDED AS A PARTITION. R. JUDAH

OBSERVED: IT ACTUALLY HAPPENED WITH THE WATER-CHANNEL OF ABEL²⁸ THAT WATER WAS DRAWN FROM IT ON THE SABBATH ON THE AUTHORITY OF THE ELDERS.²⁹ THEY³⁰ REPLIED: BECAUSE IT WAS NOT OF THE PRESCRIBED SIZE.³¹

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: if it³² was furnished³³ with a partition at its entrance²⁵ but not at its exit,³⁴ or if one was furnished at its exit and none at its entrance, no water may be drawn from it on the Sabbath³⁵ unless it was furnished with a partition ten handbreadths high both at its entrance and at its exit — R. Judah ruled: The wall above it²⁷ may be regarded as a partition. R. Judah observed: It actually happened with the water-channel which flowed from Abel to Sepphoris²⁸ that water was drawn from it on the Sabbath on the authority of the Elders.²⁹ They³⁰ replied: Is this³⁶ proof? [The water was used] because the channel was either less than³⁷ ten handbreadths deep or less than four handbreadths wide.

Elsewhere³⁸ It was taught: If a water-channel passed between windows,³⁹ it is permissible to lower a bucket to draw water from it⁴⁰ if it⁴¹ was less than three handbreadths wide, but if it was three handbreadths wide no bucket may be lowered to draw water from it.⁴⁰ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: If it⁴¹ was less than four handbreadths wide a bucket may be lowered into it and water may be drawn from it, but if it was four handbreadths wide no bucket may be lowered to draw water from it. Now what are we dealing with?⁴² If it be suggested: With the water-channel itself,⁴³ consider the following which⁴⁴ R. Dimi when he came,⁴⁵ cited in the name of R. Johanan: No domain can be regarded as a karmelith if it is less than four handbreadths. Did he⁴⁶ then make his statement in agreement only with one of the Tannaitic opinions?⁴⁷ — No, we are rather dealing⁴⁸ with its⁴⁹ embankments⁵⁰ in respect of exchange.⁵¹ But did not R. Dimi when he came⁴⁵ state in the name of R. Johanan: On a place whose area is less than four handbreadths by four both the people in the public domain and those in the private domain may rearrange their loads, provided they do not exchange them?⁵² — There⁵³ it is a case of Pentateuchal domains⁵⁴

(1) Thus leaving a margin of 24 — $4/2 = 10$ handbreadths around it.

(2) Even though no partition had been put up round the hole. The margin round the hole is deemed to be bent downwards so as to be forming a suspended partition of the required height of ten handbreadths and extending downwards into the water, and thus constituting a private domain through which it is permitted to take up the water from the sea into the balcony.

(3) Rabbah.

(4) Lit., 'not it'.

(5) Lit., 'until here R. Judah only said there', in the case of the wall above the cistern.

(6) As is explained infra 87b.

(7) And is thus distinguished from all ordinary karmelith.

(8) Supra 86b ad fin.

(9) Lit., 'it was near the wall by less than three handbreadths'.

(10) All air space of less than three handbreadths is disregarded (according to the law of labud) and the balcony may, therefore, be deemed to be close to the wall.' By cutting a length of four handbreadths to a depth of one handbreadth and a fraction from the width of the balcony on the side adjacent to the wall so as to leave on either side of its length margins of ten handbreadths, the area of the hole would be four handbreadths by (three minus a fraction and one and a fraction is) four handbreadths, and it would be furrounded on three sides by a border of (eleven handbreadths and a fraction minus one handbreadth and a fraction on the side opposite the wall, and $(24 - 4)/2$ handbreadths on the two sides of the length of the balcony =) ten handbreadths and on the fourth side by the wall of the house. The border is regarded as bent and extended downwards and forming with the wall a private domain between the water and the balcony.

(11) Standing on its width on a projection from the wall at a distance of four handbreadths with its length rising vertically upwards.

(12) I.e., the length of the balcony (cf. prev.n.).

(13) The prescribed minimum height of a partition.

(14) So that by imagining one handbreadth and a fraction of the width on either side to be bent towards the wall there would still remain a width of four handbreadths facing that wall, while the air space of four handbreadths between the wall and the balcony would be reduced to $(4 - 1 \text{ and a fraction} =)$ less than three handbreadths which (by the law of labud) is disregarded, and the hole, four handbreadths by four, is now surrounded by the wall of the house on one side, a partition of four handbreadths wide on the opposite side, and two walls virtually four handbreadths wide on the other two sides. The three sides of the balcony, which are deemed to stretch downwards to the water, together with the wall of the house thus constitute a private domain through which the water from the sea may be carried up.

(15) A balcony.

(16) So that two of its sides are formed by the walls of the house.

(17) The prescribed minimum height of a partition.

(18) Placing the balcony, as in the previous case, in an upright position at a distance of four handbreadths from one of the walls with its side at a distance of less than three handbreadths from the adjacent wall it may be imagined to be bent from top to bottom in the middle towards the wall it was facing and thus closing up all air space of one handbreadth and a fraction and reducing the distance between it and the wall to less than three handbreadths. The space between either wall and the balcony now being less than three handbreadths is (by the law of labud) deemed to be non-existent and a hole of four handbreadths by four now remains surrounded on two adjacent sides by the house walls and on the opposite two sides by the imaginary corner piece which, by the law of labud, constitutes two valid partitions that stretch downwards to the water, all the four sides enclosing a private domain between the balcony and the water.

(19) That the balcony should be required to have an area of no less than twenty-four handbreadths by twenty-four.

(20) In view of the devices just described, whereby a private domain may be formed even where the balcony was smaller than the prescribed minimum (of ten handbreadths by four) for each of its four sides and (four handbreadths by four) for the hole.

(21) Sc. when it is self-contained being in the shape of a platform raised on poles above the water and having no wall near it. In such a case no private domain through which the water may be taken up to the platform can be formed unless the balcony is of the size prescribed by R. Hananya b. Akabya which allows for a hole of four handbreadths by four in the center and for four sides of ten handbreadths by four on its four sides.

(22) Not less than ten handbreadths deep and four handbreadths wide.

(23) Because it has the status of a karmelith.

(24) Within its banks.

(25) To the courtyard.

(26) From it. The walls of the courtyard under which the channel runs, since they were not originally made for the cannot serve as partitions for it.

(27) The channel, sc. the walls at either end.

(28) A channel that passed through the courtyards of the town. Abel is in the neighbourhood of Sepphoris.

(29) Which shows that courtyard walls may serve as partitions for a channel passing under them.

(30) The Rabbis who differed from his view.

(31) It was less than ten handbreadths deep or less than four handbreadths wide. Such a channel is regarded as part of the private domain through which it passes and requires no partitions at all. Where partitions, however, are required the courtyard walls cannot serve the purpose

(32) A water-channel passing through a courtyard.

(33) Within its banks.

(34) V. supra n. 2.

(35) Because it has the status of a karmelith.

(36) Lit., 'from there'.

(37) Lit., 'it was not'.

(38) Lit., 'another'.

(39) Of houses on either side.

(40) Lit., 'and fills'.

(41) This will be discussed presently.

(42) In the statements fixing the dimensions as three and four handbreadths respectively.

(43) Sc. that if its width was three handbreadths it was according to the first Tanna the status of a karmelith from which the water may not be carried into the private domain of the courtyard.

(44) Lit., 'and (what,) however, (about) that'.

(45) From Palestine to Babylon.

(46) R. Johanan.

(47) Lit., 'must we say: According to (one of the) Tannas he made his statement since according to the Rabbis a domain of three handbreadths may also be regarded as a karmelith. Is it likely, however, that R. Johanan would differ from the Rabbis, 'who are in the majority, and adopt the view of an individual authority?'

(48) In prescribing the dimensions. Lit., 'but'.

(49) The water-channel's.

(50) Not the channel itself.

(51) Sc. if all embankment is sufficiently high and less than three handbreadths wide it constitutes, according to the Rabbis, a free domain into which an empty bucket may be taken from the private domain and one full of water from the karmelith and transferred respectively from it into the karmelith and into the private domain. If the embankment is three handbreadths wide it uses the status of a free domain and can no longer serve as a mere adjunct to the domains between which it is situated. This ruling is consequently quite independent of that of R. Johanan's.

(52) And thus unlawfully carry an object from the public into the private domain or vice versa. Now, since objects may be placed on it both front the public and from the private domain it must obviously have the status of a free domain, and yet it was forbidden to exchange these objects. How then can it be maintained that a bucket of water may be transferred from the private domain into the karmelith and vice versa by way of the embankments?

(53) R. Dimi's ruling.

(54) A private domain and a public one the movement of objects between which is Pentateuchally forbidden. Hence R. Dimi's restriction.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 87b

while here we are dealing with Rabbinical domains.¹ But did not R. Johanan maintain his view² even in the case of Rabbinical domains? For we learned:³ — If between two courtyards there was a wall ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths thick, two 'erubs may be prepared but not one. If there was fruit on the top of it, the tenants on either side may climb up and eat there. If a breach to the extent of ten cubits was made in the wall, the tenants may prepare two 'erubs or, if they prefer, only one, because it is like a doorway. If the breach was bigger, only one 'erub and not two may be prepared'.⁴ And when the question was raised, 'What is the ruling where it was not four handbreadths wide?' Rab replied: 'The air of two domains prevails upon it and no object on it may be moved even as far as a hair's breadth'; whereas R. Johanan replied: 'The tenants on either side may carry up their food and eat it there'.⁵ R. Johanan thus⁶ following his own view; since R. Dimi, when he came,⁷ stated in the name of R. Johanan: On a place whose area is less than four handbreadths by four both the people in the public domain and those in the private domain may re-arrange their loads provided they do not exchange their!⁸ — That⁹ was reported by Ze'iri.¹⁰ But does not this¹¹ present an objection against Ze'iri? — Ze'iri explains it¹² to refer to the water-channel itself,¹³ while the ruling of R. Dimi¹⁴ is one in dispute between Tannas. But why should it¹⁵ not be regarded as the cavities of a karmelith?¹⁶ — Both Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanina b. Abin replied: The law of cavities¹⁷ does not apply to a karmelith.¹⁸ R. Ashi replied: It may even be conceded that the law of cavities does apply to a karmelith, but this is the case only where the cavity is near¹⁹ whereas here it²⁰ is far removed²¹ Rabina replied: We are dealing²² in with a case, for instance, where outlets were made at its²³ ends,²⁴ the Rabbis²⁵ following their view,²⁶ while R. Simeon b. Gamaliel²⁷ follows his view.²⁸ MISHNAH. FROM A BALCONY THAT WAS SITUATED ABOVE A STRETCH OF WATER NO WATER MAY BE DRAWN²⁹ ON THE SABBATH³⁰ UNLESS IT WAS FURNISHED WITH A PARTITION³¹ TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH EITHER ABOVE³² OR BELOW.³³ SO ALSO WHERE TWO BALCONIES WERE SITUATED IN POSITIONS ONE HIGHER THAN³⁴ THE OTHER,³⁵ AND A PARTITION WAS MADE FOR THE UPPER ONE BUT NOT FOR THE LOWER ONE, RESTRICTIONS³⁶ ARE IMPOSED ON THE USE OF BOTH³⁷ UNTIL THEY HAVE PREPARED A JOINT 'ERUB.³⁸

GEMARA. Is our Mishnah³⁹ in disagreement with the view of Hananya b. Akabya, since it was taught: Hananya b. Akabya ruled: In a balcony whose area is four cubits by four a hole of four handbreadths by four is cut⁴⁰ and water may be drawn through it?⁴¹ — R. Johanan citing R. Jose b. Zimra replied: R. Hananya b. Akabya permitted it⁴² only in the case of the sea of Tiberias since it is surrounded by embankments, towns and karpafs,⁴³ but not in that of any other waters.⁴⁴

Our Rabbis taught: R. Hananya b. Akabya permitted the men of Tiberias three things: To draw water from a balcony⁴⁵ on the Sabbath, to store fruit in pea-stalks⁴⁶ and to dry themselves with a towel.⁴⁶ 'To draw water from a balcony on the Sabbath' as has just been stated; what, however, was the point of the permission 'to store fruit in pea-stalks'? — That, as it was taught. If a man got up early in the morning⁴⁷ to fetch some refuse,⁴⁸ the Scriptural expression, 'if water be put upon the seed'⁴⁹ applies to it,⁵⁰ if he did so⁵¹ because the dew was upon it,⁵² but if he did so⁵¹ in order that he might not be disturbed from his usual work, the expression. If water be put upon the seeds does not apply to it;⁵³ and as a rule,

(1) Sc. the movement of objects between a karmelith and a private domain is only Rabbinically forbidden. As Pentateuchally it is permitted to transfer directly from the one into the other the Rabbis have relaxed their ruling where the transfer is effected by way of a free domain. (As to the discrepancy between R. Dimi's minimum of four handbreadths and that of three handbreadths in the Baraitha cf. Rashi a.l.)

(2) That no transfer from one domain into another is permitted even by way of a free domain.

(7) From Palestine to Babylon.

(8) Now, since R. Johanan maintains his view even in the case of courtyards, the movement of objects between which is only Rabbinically forbidden, how could it be maintained that a distinction is drawn between Pentateuchal and Rabbinical domains?

(9) R. Johanan's ruling concerning a wall between courtyards.

(10) R. Dimi, however, maintains that R. Johanan's restriction does not apply to domains the movement of objects between which is only Rabbinically forbidden.

(11) The difficulty, raised supra 87a ad fin., on R. Dimi's report.

(12) The Baraitha (supra 87a) dealing with the dispute between R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the first Tanna on the dimensions that do, or do not constitute a karmelith between which and the courtyard the movement of bucket and water is forbidden.

(13) According to the first Tanna a width of three handbreadths, and according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel only one of four handbreadths imparts to it the status of a karmelith.

(14) Reported in the name of R. Johanan, according to which 'no domain can be regarded as a karmelith if less than four handbreadths'.

(15) A water-channel passing through a courtyard, whose dimensions are less than those of a karmelith.

(16) And the movement of any object, bucket or water, between it and the courtyard should be forbidden. As cavities in a wall adjoining a public domain are subject to the restrictions of the latter (v. Shab. 7b) so should the water-channel within the courtyard be subject to the restrictions of the wider channel without the town which is a karmelith and of which it forms a part.

(17) Though applicable to Pentateuchally forbidden domains.

(18) Being only a Rabbinically forbidden domain no additional restrictions were imposed upon its use.

(19) If, for instance, it was in a wall adjoining a karpaf that was bigger than two beth Se'ah.

(20) The channel within the courtyard.

(21) From the section of the channel without the town which was of the size of a karmelith.

(23) The water-channel's.

(24) Lit., 'at its mouth', Sc. the dimensions prescribed by the two opinions (cf. supra n. 11) are neither those of the channel nor those of its embankments (as has been previously suggested) but those of the outlets made in the partitions at its ends to enable the water to pass through them.

- (28) That the rule of labud applies to a gap that was not wider than four handbreadths.
- (29) Through a hole in its floor.
- (30) Since the stretch of water has the status of a karmelith while the balcony is a private domain.
- (31) Round about all the balcony or at least round the hole.
- (32) The balcony, in an upward direction.
- (33) In a downward direction from the balcony towards the water. In either case the partition that is ten handbreadths is deemed to extend downwards and, by vertically joining balcony and water, to form a private domain through, and from which the water may be taken up.

- (36) On the use of the hole in the upper balcony for the purpose of drawing water.
- (37) Groups of tenants.
- (38) The use of a hole in the lower balcony remains forbidden even after an 'erub had been prepared, since it was not furnished with any partition that could convert the karmelith of the water and the passage to the balcony into a private domain.

the men of Tiberias¹ are in the same category as the man whose object was that he might not be disturbed from his usual work. And what was the point in his permitting them to 'dry themselves with a towel'? — That, as it was taught. A man² may dry himself³ with a towel⁴ and put it on a window, but he may not hand it to the bathing attendants⁵ because they are suspected of doing that work.⁶ R. Simeon ruled: He may also carry it in his hand to his home.⁴

Rabbah son of R. Huna stated: This⁷ was learnt only in respect of drawing water, but pouring it down⁸ is forbidden.⁹ R. Shezbi demurred: Wherein does this case¹⁰ essentially differ from that of a trough?¹¹ — In the latter case the waters are absorbed [in the ground]¹² while in the former they are not absorbed.¹³ Others say that Rabbah son of R. Huna explained: Do not say: It is only permitted to draw water but that it is forbidden to pour water down; since in fact it is also permitted to pour it down. Is not this, R. Shezbi asked, obvious, seeing that it is essentially identical with the case of the trough?¹⁴ — It might have been assumed that they are unlike,¹⁵ for whereas in the latter case the waters are absorbed [in the ground],¹⁶ they are not absorbed in the former case,¹³ hence we were informed [that the same law is applicable to both cases].

SO ALSO WHEN TWO BALCONIES WERE SITUATED IN POSITIONS ONE HIGHER THAN etc. R. Huna citing Rab explained: This was learnt only [in the case where the lower balcony] was near [to the upper one],¹⁷ but if it was removed from it,¹⁸ [the use of] the upper one¹⁹ is permitted, since Rab follows his principle, having laid down that no man imposes restrictions upon another through the air.²⁰

Rabbah stated in the name of R. Hiyya, and R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Oshaia: A robbery is valid in respect of a Sabbath domain²¹ and a ruin reverts to its owner.²² But is not this self contradictory? You said: 'A robbery is valid in respect of the Sabbath domain', from which it is clear that possession is acquired;²³ and then you say: 'and a ruin reverts to its owner', from which it is evident that no possession is acquired?²³ — It is this that was meant: The law [of the return] of a robbery is valid in respect of a Sabbath domain,²⁴ since²⁵ a ruin reverts to its owner.²⁴ Said Rabbah: We raised an objection against this ruling of ours:²⁶ SO ALSO WHEN TWO BALCONIES WERE SITUATED IN POSITIONS ONE HIGHER THAN THE OTHER etc. Now, if it is maintained that 'the law [of the return] of a robbery is valid in respect of a Sabbath domain' why should restrictions be imposed?²⁷ — R. Shesheth replied: We are here dealing with a case, for instance, where they²⁸ made the partition²⁹ jointly.³⁰ But if so³¹ the same law³² should also apply where a partition was made³³ on the lower balcony?³⁴ Since they made a partition for the lower one they have thereby intimated to the tenants of the upper one that they had no desire to be associated with them.³⁵ MISHNAH. IF [THE AREA OF] A COURTYARD WAS LESS THAN FOUR CUBITS NO WATER MAY BE Poured OUT INTO IT ON THE SABBATH³⁶ UNLESS IT WAS PROVIDED WITH A TROUGH HOLDING TWO SE'AH³⁶ FROM ITS EDGE³⁷ DOWNWARDS,³⁸ IRRESPECTIVE OF WHETHER IT³⁹ WAS WITHOUT OR WITHIN,⁴⁰ EXCEPT THAT IF IT WAS WITHOUT⁴¹ IT IS NECESSARY TO COVER IT⁴² AND IF IT WAS WITHIN⁴⁰ IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO COVER IT.

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: IF FOUR CUBITS OF A DRAIN⁴³ WERE COVERED OVER IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN⁴² IT IS PERMITTED TO POUR WATER⁴⁴ INTO IT ON THE SABBATH,⁴⁵ BUT THE SAGES RULED: EVEN WHERE A ROOF OR A COURTYARD WAS A HUNDRED CUBITS IN AREA,⁴⁶ NO WATER MAY BE Poured DIRECTLY OVER THE MOUTH OF THE DRAIN,³⁶ BUT IT MAY BE Poured UPON THE ROOF FROM WHICH THE WATER FLOWS INTO THE DRAIN. THE COURTYARD AND THE EXEDRA MAY BE COMBINED TO MAKE UP THE PRESCRIBED FOUR CUBITS.

SO ALSO IN THE CASE OF TWO UPPER STOREYS OPPOSITE EACH OTHER⁴⁷ THE TENANTS OF ONE OF WHICH⁴⁸ MADE A TROUGH⁴⁹ AND THOSE OF THE OTHER DID NOT, THOSE WHO MADE THE TROUGH ARE PERMITTED TO POUR DOWN THEIR WATER,⁵⁰ WHEREAS THOSE WHO DID NOT MAKE ANY TROUGH ARE FORBIDDEN.

GEMARA. What is the reason?⁵¹ — Rabbah⁵² replied: Because a man is in the habit of using up two se'ah of water daily, and in an area of four cubits⁵³ he is inclined to spray it⁵⁴

- (1) Who were mainly workers.
 - (2) Who bathed in cold water.
 - (3) On the Sabbath or on a festival day.
 - (4) Sc. the act was not forbidden as a preventive measure against the possibility of his wringing it out which is forbidden.
 - (5) Pl. of Olyar, olearius, Gr. , the keeper of clothes in a bath house.
 - (6) Wringing clothes. Lit., 'of that thing'.
 - (7) That the Rabbis recognized the validity of a suspended partition on a balcony.

- (8) Through the hole.
- (9) Because the water is carried down the stream beyond the partitions.
- (10) The pouring down of water from a balcony into a stretch of water below.
- (11) In a courtyard that was smaller than four cubits (Mishnah infra) though, when the trough is full, the water runs over into the public domain.
- (12) As the tenants intend the water to remain in the private domain it is permitted to pour into the trough which, like the courtyard, is a private domain even though some of the water may ultimately flow over.
- (13) So that any drop of water poured into it would inevitably flow beyond the partitions.
- (14) V. supra n. 1.
- (15) And that in consequence it should be forbidden to pour water down the hole of the balcony into the stretch of water below.
- (16) V. supra n. 2.
- (17) Sc. the horizontal distance between them was less than four handbreadths.
- (18) Four handbreadths or more.
- (19) By those on it.
- (20) Supra 85a; and, since the tenants of the lower balcony are unable to reach the hole in the upper one except through the intervening air space by thrusting their bucket into it, they cannot impose restrictions on the tenants of the upper one.
- (21) This is now assumed to mean that a person is permitted to seize for the Sabbath another person's ruin which, being near his house and neglected by its owner, he uses on weekdays, and that this seizure is valid so that even on the Sabbath he may move objects from his house into it and vice versa as if it had been his own property.
- (22) Sc. the restrictions of the Sabbath cause the ruin, though during the week it is deserted by its owner and used by a neighbour, to revert to the full possession of the former so that the latter may move no objects from, or into it.
- (23) By the person who uses it during the week (cf. prev. two nn.).
- (24) V. supra n. 12.
- (25) Lit., 'how? Because'. [The text is not clear: R. Hananel reads: The law of robbery (whereby the robber acquires possession of the robbed object) applies on Sabbath. How is this? If the robber took the robbery into his own domain; but if he left it in the ruin of the robbed person, the ruin reverts it to its owner.]
- (26) The one just discussed.
- (27) Upon the tenants of the upper balcony, seeing that on the Sabbath, as in the case of the ruin just mentioned, it reverts to them alone despite its use by the tenants of the lower balcony during weekdays.
- (28) The tenants of both balconies.
- (29) On the upper balcony.
- (30) So that the tenants of the lower balcony, unlike the man who uses a ruin upon which he has no claim whatever, are well entitled to the use of the upper one.
- (31) That the tenants of the lower balcony have a share in the upper one, and that this is the reason why they impose restrictions upon the tenants of the latter.
- (32) That they impose restrictions.
- (33) By its tenants.
- (34) Since in either case the share they have in the upper one should cause them to impose the same restrictions.
- (35) Lit., 'that I am not pleased (to be associated) with you'.
- (36) The reason is given in the Gemara infra.
- (37) Lit., 'the hole'.
- (38) I.e., the Interior of the trough.
- (39) The trough.
- (40) The courtyard.
- (41) In the public domain near the courtyard.
- (42) With boards, so as to impart to it the status of a free domain.
- (43) Which carries water from a courtyard into the public domain.
- (44) From the courtyard.
- (45) Because all the water that is likely to be poured into it during the Sabbath would, as a rule, be absorbed before it reached the public domain. If some of the water should, for any reason whatever, run into the public domain no transgression would be committed since the tenants' intention was that it shall be absorbed before it reached the public domain and no transgression is involved where one's intention was not fulfilled. Particularly is this the case here where Pentateuchally it is permitted ab initio to pour water into a private domain though one's intention was that it should ultimately find its way into the public domain.

(46) A stretch sufficient to absorb all the water that can possibly be poured out in one day.

(47) Between which there was a courtyard whose area was less than four cubits.

(48) Lit., 'some of them'.

(49) In the courtyard.

(50) Into the courtyard below.

(51) That IF THE AREA OF A COURTYARD WAS LESS THAN FOUR CUBITS NO WATER MAY BE Poured OUT INTO IT and, inferentially, that if the area was four cubits or bigger water may be poured out into it.

(52) MS.M. Alfasi and Asheri read 'Raba'; Bomb. ed. 'Rab'.

(53) During the summer, the season to which this Mishnah refers (cf. infra), when courtyards are dusty.

(54) As his intention is not to have the water running into the public domain but to spray on the floor of the courtyard it is permitted to pour it out in that courtyard though sometimes it might eventually find its way into the public domain.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 88b

but in one that is less than four cubits¹ he merely pours it out. Hence it is Only if he made a trough² that he is permitted to pour out the water but not otherwise.³ R. Zera replied: In an area of four cubits the water⁴ may be absorbed;⁵ but in one that is less than four cubits they cannot be absorbed.⁶ What is the practical difference between them?⁷ — Abaye replied: The practical difference between them is a courtyard that was long and narrow.⁸

We learned: THE COURTYARD AND THE EXEDRA⁹ MAY BE COMBINED TO MAKE UP THE PRESCRIBED FOUR CUBITS. According to R. Zera this is quite acceptable;¹⁰ but, according to Rabbah,¹¹ does not a difficulty arise?¹² — R. Zera, on the lines of Rabbah's¹¹ view, explained: This refers to an exedra that ran along all the courtyard.¹³

Come and hear: If the area of a courtyard was less than four cubits by four cubits no water may be poured out into it on the Sabbath. Now according to Rabbah this ruling is quite satisfactory;¹⁴ but, according to R. Zera, does not a difficulty arise?¹⁵ — R. Zera can answer you: This ruling represents the view of¹⁶ the Rabbis,¹⁷ whereas our Mishnah¹⁸ is that of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.¹⁹ What, however, was it that urged R. Zera to attribute our Mishnah²⁰ to R. Eliezer b. Jacob?²¹ — Raba replied: Our Mishnah presented to him a difficulty: What was the object of stating, IF THE AREA OF A COURTYARD WAS less²² THAN FOUR CUBITS²³ seeing that it could have been stated:²⁴ 'If the area of a courtyard was less than four cubits²⁵ by four cubits'²⁶ Consequently,²⁷ he concluded²⁸ it must represent the view of²⁹ R. Eliezer b. Jacob.³⁰ This is conclusive. But since a succeeding clause³¹ represents the view of R. Eliezer y. Jacob³² how could the first clause³³ also represent his view?³⁴ — All the Mishnah represents the view of³⁵ R. Eliezer b. Jacob, but some words are wanting in it, the correct reading being as follows: IF [THE AREA OF] A COURTYARD WAS LESS THAN OUR CUBITS NO WATER MAY BE Poured OUT INTO IT ON THE SABBATH' but if the area is as four cubits water may be poured into it because R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: IF FOUR CUBITS OF A DRAIN WERE COVERED OVER IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN IT IS PERMITTED TO POUR WATER INTO IT ON THE SABBATH.

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: IF FOUR CUBITS OF A DRAIN WERE COVERED OVER. Our Mishnah³⁷ cannot represent the opinion of Hananya,³⁸ for it was taught: Hananya ruled: Even if [the area of] a roof was a hundred cubits no water may be poured upon it since a roof is not made to absorb water but to cause it to run down.

One taught: This³⁹ applies only to the hot season, but during the rainy season a person may pour his water again and again without any limit.⁴⁰ What is the reason? — Raba replied: A person is quite satisfied⁴¹ that the water should be absorbed on the spot.⁴² Said Abaye to him: Is there not the case of⁴³ waste water with the absorption of which on the spot a person is quite satisfied⁴¹ and yet it was ruled: NO WATER MAY BE Poured?⁴⁴ — What, the other replied, is it that provision should be made against in that case?⁴⁵ If it be suggested: Against the man's objection to the spoiling of his courtyard,⁴⁶ surely, [it may be retorted,] it is in any case spoiled;⁴⁷ and if against the possibility of the assumption that So-and-so's gutter was spouting water,⁴⁸ all gutters, as a rule, spout water.⁴⁹

R. Nahman ruled: In the rainy season, if a trough⁵⁰ is capable of holding two se'ah it is permitted to pour two se'ah of water into it, and if it can hold one se'ah only one se'ah of water is permitted; in the hot season, however, if the trough can hold two se'ah one is allowed two se'ah but if it can hold one se'ah one is not allowed to pour into it any water at all. Why should it not be allowed in the hot season also to pour into it a se'ah if it can hold a se'ah? — A preventive measure has been enacted against the possibility of one's pouring two se'ah into it. If so, why should not a preventive measure be enacted for the rainy season also? What is it that provision should be made against in that case? If it be suggested: Against the man's objection to the spoiling of his courtyard,⁵¹ surely, [it could be retorted,] it is in any case spoiled;⁵² if against the assumption that So-and-so's gutter spouts water⁵³ all gutters, as a rule, spout water.⁵⁴ Hence,⁵⁵ said Abaye, even a kor,⁵⁶ even two kor are permitted.⁵⁷

SO ALSO IN THE CASE OF TWO UPPER STOREYS OPPOSITE EACH OTHER. Raba ruled: Even though they prepared a joint 'erub. What, asked Abaye,⁵⁷ is the reason? If it be suggested: On account of the large quantity of the water,⁵⁸ was it not taught, [it may be objected,] 'The same law applies to a trough,⁵⁵ a damaged vessel,⁵⁹ a pond or a tub, viz. that, though they were filled with water on the Sabbath eve, waste water may be poured into them on the Sabbath?⁶⁰ Rather, if the statement was at all made it must have been made in the following terms:⁶¹ Raba ruled:

- (1) Which is hardly worth the trouble of spraying.
- (2) In which the water may be accumulated and gradually absorbed in the ground.
- (3) Lit., 'if not he is forbidden', since the water would be running almost directly into the public domain and his desire to pour it out would be fulfilled. Were this to be permitted people might form the erroneous conclusion that it is also permitted to throw anything directly from a private into a public domain.
- (4) Two Se'ah, which are usually used up in a day.
- (5) V. supra n. 5.
- (6) And, since the water inevitably flows into the public domain, his desire is fulfilled (cf. Supra n. 8 second clause).
- (7) R. Zera's and Rabbah's explanations.
- (8) Eight cubits by two, for instance. According to R. Zera's explanation it is permitted to pour water into it, since an area of $8 \times 2 = 4 \times 4$, and the water would be absorbed in the courtyard itself before any of it reached the public domain. According to Rabbah, however, this is forbidden, since a narrow courtyard is an unsuitable place for spraying.
- (9) It is now assumed that the exedra was situated in a corner of the courtyard so that the width of the latter was not increased by it.
- (10) Since the floor of the exedra, whatever its position, would add to the area of absorption.
- (11) Cf. supra p. 614, n. 3.
- (12) As the exedra does not widen the courtyard the latter remains unsuitable for spraying, why then should it be permitted to pour water in it?
- (13) If, for instance, the courtyard area was four cubits by two the exedra also was four by two, its length being parallel to that of the courtyard and thus extending the area of the latter to four cubits by four.
- (14) Because a courtyard that was narrower than four cubits, though longer, is unsuitable for spraying.
- (15) Since the capacity of a given area for absorption is not affected by the relative lengths of the sides.
- (16) Lit., 'this is whose?'
- (17) Sc. the SAGES who forbade the pouring of water into a drain even when the COURTYARD WAS A HUNDRED CUBITS IN AREA, thus rejecting the principle of capacity for absorption and upholding only that of suitability for spraying.
- (18) Which forbade the pouring of water only where the area WAS LESS THAN FOUR CUBITS and, inferentially, permitted it where it was four cubits or bigger irrespective of the relative lengths of its sides.
- (19) Who, in his ruling on the drain in our Mishnah, recognizes the principle of capacity for absorption.
- (20) Which is anonymous and presumably represents the view of a majority.
- (21) An individual. Sc. why could not R. Zera adopt Rabbah's explanation which would have enabled him to escape this difficulty?

- (22) Cf. MS.M. The following three words are wanting in cur. edd.
- (23) Which implies that if the total area was four cubits by four it matters little whether each side was four cubits long or whether the courtyard was long and narrow, two of its sides being shorter, and two longer than four cubits.
- (24) Lit., 'let him teach'.
- (25) Elijah Wilna inserts the following three words in parenthesis.
- (26) An expression which would have indicated that even if only one of the sides of a courtyard is less than four cubits in length (though the total area was four cubits by four) no water may be poured out into it.
- (27) Since the former expression was used, from which it follows (cf. supra p. 615, n. 14) that it is not the shape but the actual area that matters or, in other words, that the determining factor is not suitability for spraying but capacity for absorption.
- (28) Lit., 'but not; it may be inferred from it'.
- (29) Lit., 'that it is'.
- (30) Who in his ruling on the drain in our Mishnah recognizes the principle of capacity for absorption.
- (31) Lit., 'the end', i.e., the second paragraph in our Mishnah.
- (32) As was Specifically stated (v. our Mishnah).
- (33) Which is recorded anonymously and immediately precedes the one given in his name.
- (34) Lit., 'the first is not (that of) R. Eliezer b. Jacob'.
- (35) Lit., 'all of it is'.
- (36) Lit., 'and thus it taught'.
- (37) Which attributes to the Sages the view that water MAY BE Poured UPON THE ROOF.
- (38) Since he permitted this only in a courtyard but not on a roof The roofs spoken of were flat and had drains in the form of gutters into which rain water flowed and water was poured.
- (39) That no water may be poured out in a small courtyard unless a trough was provided for the purpose (v. our Mishnah).
- (40) Lit., 'pours and repeats and does not refrain himself'.
- (41) Lit., 'willing', 'pleased'.
- (42) Within the courtyard. As the place is in any case waterlogged and untidy he does not mind the addition of his waste water also.
- (43) Lit., 'and behold'.
- (44) EVEN WHERE A ROOF OR A COURTYARD WAS A HUNDRED CUBITS IN AREA, and fully capable of absorbing all the water before it reached the public domain.
- (45) The pouring out of water during the rainy season.
- (46) Sc. that the pouring out of the water should be forbidden as a preventive measure against the possibility of his desire to dispatch it without delay into the public domain for the reason given.
- (47) By the rains.
- (48) On the Sabbath: in consequence of which people might allow themselves to carry also directly from a private into a public domain.
- (49) On a rainy day. People would assume the water to be rather the accumulated rain water than the lesser quantity of waste water. In the case of a drain in the dry season, however, people observing the flow from a private into a public domain and knowing full well that it was the result of human action, might well come to the conclusion that the carrying of objects from the one domain into the other is also permitted. Hence the preventive measure.
- (50) In a courtyard, prepared for the reception of waste water.
- (51) V. Supra p. 617, n. 7.
- (52) By the rains.
- (53) V. p. 617, n. 9.
- (54) V.p.617, n. 10.
- (55) Cf. Supra p. 617, n. 11.
- (56) Of water.
- (57) 'To him' appears in cur. edd. in parenthesis and is deleted by Rashal.
- (58) Four Se'ah instead of the usual two.
- (59) Gistera, a defective, mutilated, cracked or damaged object.
- (60) Though it overflows into the public domain. Why then should the increased volume of water be a bar to the use of the trough by the tenants of both upper storeys?

(61) Lit., 'thus it was said'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 89a

This¹ was learnt only in the case where no joint 'erub was prepared, but if a joint 'erub was prepared they are permitted.² But why are they not permitted where they did not prepare a joint 'erub? — R. Ashi replied: As a preventive measure against the possibility of their carrying out water³ in utensils from their houses to the trough.⁴

CHAPTER IX

MISHNAH. ALL THE ROOFS OF A TOWN⁵ CONSTITUTE⁶ A SINGLE DOMAIN,⁷ PROVIDED NO ROOF IS TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGHER OR LOWER THAN THE NEIGHBOURING ROOF;⁸ SO R. MEIR. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: EACH ONE IS A SEPARATE DOMAIN.⁹ R. SIMEON RULED: ROOFS, COURTYARDS AND KARPAFS¹⁰ ARE¹¹ EQUALLY REGARDED AS ONE DOMAIN¹² IN RESPECT OF CARRYING FROM ONE INTO THE OTHER OBJECTS THAT WERE KEPT WITHIN THEM WHEN THE SABBATH BEGAN, BUT NOT IN RESPECT OF OBJECTS THAT WERE IN THE HOUSE WHEN THE SABBATH BEGAN.¹³

GEMARA. Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanina¹⁴ b. Abin sat at their studies while Abaye was sitting beside them, and in the course of the session they remarked: One can well justify the view of the Rabbis¹⁵ since they may hold the view that as the tenants are divided below¹⁶ so are they divided above,¹⁷ but as to R. Meir, what could his view be? If he holds that the tenants are divided above¹⁸ as they are divided below,¹⁹ why should the roofs CONSTITUTE A SINGLE DOMAIN? And if he holds that they are not divided above¹⁸ because all places above ten handbreadths²⁰ are regarded as a single domain, why²¹ should not this²² also apply to a roof that was TEN HAND BREADTHS HIGHER OR LOWER? 'You have not heard', Abaye said to them, 'the following statement made by R. Isaac b. Abdimi: R. Meir always maintained that wherever you find two domains of the same character²³ [one within the other] as, for instance, a column ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths wide²⁴ in a private domain,²⁵ it is forbidden²⁶ to re-arrange loads on the former,²⁷ as a preventive measure against a similar act in the case of a mound²⁸ in a public domain.²⁹ Here,³⁰ too, it may be explained, a preventive measure was enacted against a similar act³¹ in the case of a mound²⁸ in a public domain'. They understood him to imply that the same restriction³¹ applies also to a mortar or a tank,³² but Abaye said to them, 'Thus said the Master: R. Meir spoke only of a column and an enclosure of millstones, since their owner assigns for them a permanent Position,³³ But is there not the case of³⁴ a wall between two courtyards, which is a permanent fixture, and yet Rab Judah stated: 'A careful study would show that,³⁵ according to the view of It. Meir, roofs³⁶ are regarded as a separate domain,³⁷ courtyards as a separate domain,³⁸ and karpafs as a separate domain'³⁹ which⁴⁰ implies, does it not,⁴¹ that it is permissible to move objects across a wall?⁴² — R. Huna b. Judah citing R. Shesheth replied: No, the implication⁴³ is that it is permitted to carry objects in and to carry them out by way of the doors.⁴⁴

THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: EACH ONE IS A SEPARATE DOMAIN. It was stated: Rab ruled: Objects in it⁴⁵ may be moved only within four cubits,⁴⁶ and Samuel ruled: It is permitted to move objects throughout its area.⁴⁷ Where the partitions are distinguishable⁴⁸ there is no divergence of opinion;⁴⁹ the dispute is limited to the case of partitions that are indistinguishable.⁵⁰ Rab maintains that, 'Objects in it may be moved only within four cubits' because [in such circumstances]⁵⁰ he does not uphold the principle of the upward extension of the walls; while Samuel ruled: 'It is permitted to move objects throughout its area', because [even in such circumstances] he upholds the principle of the upward extension of the walls.

We learned: THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: EACH ONE [

- (1) The ruling in our Mishnah under discussion.
- (2) The unrestricted use of the trough.
- (3) Cf. MS.M., and Rashi a.l.
- (4) Lit., 'there'. An act which in the absence of a joint 'erub is forbidden.
- (5) Though the houses beneath are occupied by different tenants and constitute different domains.
- (6) Since they are only infrequently used.
- (7) And it is permitted to carry objects from one roof into another on the Sabbath.
- (8) Cf. MS.M. The last four words are wanting from cur. edd. If one roof was higher or lower than the one adjoining it no objects may be moved on the Sabbath from the one into the other.
- (9) Lit., 'before itself', so that where the tenants did not join in one 'erub the movement of objects from one roof to the other is forbidden.
- (10) If the area of the last mentioned was not bigger than two beth se'ah.
- (11) Since they are only irregularly and infrequently made use of.
- (12) Even though the owners did not join in one 'erub.
- (13) These, though they may be carried into the same courtyard, for instance, by virtue of an 'erub the tenants of that courtyard had jointly prepared, they may not be carried into a neighbouring courtyard unless the two courtyards too had been joined in one 'erub.
- (14) MS. M. 'Hanania'.
- (15) The SAGES who ruled that EACH ONE IS A SEPARATE DOMAIN.
- (16) In their houses.
- (17) On their roofs.
- (18) On their roofs.
- (19) In their houses.
- (20) From the ground.
- (21) Since all roofs are no less than ten handbreadths higher than the ground level.
- (22) R. Meir's ruling.
- (23) Lit., 'and they are one domain'.
- (24) Which has the status of an independent private domain.
- (25) Of larger dimensions.
- (26) To the people in the private domain in which the column stood, though the former legally reaches up to the sky.
- (27) Lit., 'on it'.
- (28) Ten handbreadths high which has the status of a private domain.
- (29) Shah. 9a. If the use of the column in the private domain had been allowed people would also have used a similar column in a public domain for the same purpose.
- (30) The prohibition of movement in the case of a roof that was ten handbreadths higher or lower than all adjoining one.
- (31) Carrying objects from one domain into the other.
- (32) That was turned upside down and formed an elevation of ten handbreadths.
- (33) Lit., 'and a man fixes for them a place'.
- (34) Lit., 'and behold'.
- (35) Since he regards all roofs as one domain and yet forbids the movement of objects between two roofs one of which was ten handbreadths higher or lower than the other.
- (36) Of the Same altitude.
- (37) But not roofs and courtyards, for instance, since the former are more than ten handbreadths higher than the latter.
- (38) V. p. 620, n. 20.
- (39) Infra 90b; i.e., it is only permissible to move objects from place to place in the same class but it is forbidden to move objects from one of these classes into any of the other.
- (40) Since no restrictions are imposed on the movement of objects between any number of courtyards.
- (41) Lit., 'what, not?'
- (42) Between two courtyards. Now, since here no preventive measure was enacted against a similar act in the case of a ground in a public domain is it likely, as Abaye maintained, that the provision against such a possibility was R. Meir's reason for his ruling in our Mishnah.

(43) That 'it is permissible to move objects' from courtyard to courtyard.

(44) But not across a wall.

(45) A roof adjoining another roof of the same level.

(46) Each roof being A SEPARATE DOMAIN, fully exposed to the adjacent roof that is of a similar status, the two, since it is forbidden to move any objects between them, impose restrictions upon each other.

(47) The walls of the houses, he maintains, are deemed to extend upwards and to form virtual partitions around the roofs.

(48) Sc. the houses are detached from each other so that their walls can be seen from the roofs.

(49) Lit., 'all the world does not dispute', that the walls are deemed to be extending upwards and to form partitions around the roofs in agreement with Samuel's view.

(50) I.e., where the roofs are joined to one another.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 89b

IS A SEPARATE DOMAIN.¹ This ruling,² according to Samuel, is quite satisfactory, but does it not, according to Rab,³ present a difficulty?² — The school of Rab explained in the name of Rab:⁴ That one must not move an object along two cubits on one roof and along another two cubits on an adjacent roof.⁵ But, surely, R. Eleazar related, 'when we were in Babylon we used to teach as follows:⁶ The School of Rab in the name of Rab ruled: Objects on a roof⁷ may be moved only within four cubits, whereas those of the school of Samuel learned,⁸ Householders have only the use of their roofs'.⁹ Now what could be the meaning of the expression, 'have only the use of their roofs'? Is it not that they are permitted to move objects about throughout its area?¹⁰ — Has this¹¹ then more force than our Mishnah? As we have explained this¹² to mean, 'that one must not move an object along two cubits on one roof and along another two cubits on an adjacent roof', so we might also explain this:¹¹ Two cubits on one roof and two cubits on the other.¹³

R. Joseph¹⁴ observed: I have not heard of this ruling.¹⁵ Said Abaye to him, 'You yourself told it to us, and it was in connection with the following that you told it to us: If a big roof was adjacent to a smaller one,¹⁶ the use of the bigger one¹⁷ is¹⁸ permitted,¹⁹ and the use of the smaller one is forbidden.²⁰ And it was in connection with this that you told us: Rab Judah in the name of Samuel stated: They learned this²¹ only in the case where there were dwellers on the one as well as on the other²² so that the imaginary partition of the smaller roof²³ is one that is trodden upon,²⁴ but if there were no dwellers on the one as well as on the other the use of both roofs is permitted'.²⁵ 'I', the other replied: 'told you this: They learned this²¹ only where there was a partition²⁶ on the one as well as on the other, since the use of the bigger roof is rendered permissible by the railings,²⁷ while [the use of the smaller one is forbidden since] it has a breach extending along its entire length, but if there was no partition either on the one or on the other, the use of both is forbidden'.²⁸ 'But did you not speak to us of dwellers?' — 'If I spoke to you of dwellers I must have said this: They learned this²¹ only where there was a partition that was suitable for a dwelling-place both on the one as well as on the other,²⁹ since the use of the bigger roof is rendered permissible by the railings³⁰ while [the smaller one is forbidden, since] it has a breach along its full side, but if there was a partition suitable for a dwelling-place on the bigger roof and none that was fit for a dwelling-place on the smaller one, even the use of the smaller one is permitted to the people of the bigger. What is the reason? As they made no partition³¹ they have entirely withdrawn themselves from it, [the principle here being the same] as that enunciated by R. Nahman: If a person fixed a permanent ladder to his roof, he is permitted to use all the roofs'.³²

Abaye ruled: If a man built an upper storey on his house,³³ and constructed in front of it a small door of four handbreadths³⁴ he is thereby permitted to use all the roofs³⁵ Raba observed: The small door is sometimes a cause of restrictions³⁶ How is this to be imagined? When he made it to open towards his house garden,³⁷ since it might well be presumed

- (4) The meaning of the ruling of the Sages.
- (5) Within the same roof, however, it is permitted to move an object within four cubits, but no further.
- (6) Lit., 'we were saying'.
- (7) Lit., in it .
- (8) A Baraitha.
- (9) Lit., 'they have only their roof'.
- (10) How then is Rab's view to be reconciled with the implication of this Baraitha?
- (11) The Baraitha cited by the school of Samuel.

- (13) Within the same roof, however, it is permitted to move an object within four cubits, but no further.
- (14) Who after a serious illness had lost his memory.
- (15) Of Samuel, that though the walls cannot be seen from the roof the principle of upward extension is nevertheless upheld.
- (16) The bigger roof projecting on both sides of the smaller.
- (17) For the movement of objects by the occupiers of the house below.
- (18) Even according to Rab's view.
- (19) Since three of its sides (cf. Supra n. 16) are detached and defined and the principle of upward extension may well be applied to them, while, on its fourth side, the part which is joined to the smaller roof may be regarded as a doorway and the two sections projecting on either side may be deemed to be extending upwards and forming a kind of railings or side-posts to the two sides of the doorway. The two roofs thus assume the character of two courtyards with a door between them where the smaller one imposes no restrictions on the bigger.
- (20) Being exposed to the extent of the entire length of one of its sides to the bigger roof that side cannot be regarded as a door but as a breach, on account of which the people of the bigger roof (as in the case of a similar breach between a bigger, and smaller courtyard) impose restrictions on its use.
- (21) That the movement of objects is forbidden on the smaller roof.
- (22) And these freely walked across from their own roof to that of their neighbours.
- (23) The presumed upward extension of the wall supporting it.
- (24) And is consequently invalid.
- (25) Because the walls, though indistinguishable to one standing on the roofs, are nevertheless deemed to extend upwards which is in fact the ruling of Samuel Supra.
- (26) All round the roofs except where they adjoin one another.
- (27) Or 'side-posts', sc. the imaginary upward extensions of its projections on either side of the smaller roof (cf. Supra p. 622, n. 19).
- (28) The imaginary railings or side-posts being of no avail where no partitions exist with which to form a doorway.
- (29) So that both groups evidently intended to use their respective roofs as dwelling-places.
- (30) Cf. supra p. 622, n. 19 mut. mut.
- (31) And thus indicated that they have no intention of living on their roof.
- (32) Even according to the SAGES. Since the other residents who fixed no ladders have evidently decided to make no use of their roofs the man who did fix one has all their roofs at his disposal and they are, therefore, deemed to form one single domain with his own roof.
- (33) By surrounding all his roof with walls.
- (34) That opened towards the other roofs (Rashi). Cf. however, Tosaf. a.l.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 90a

that it was made for the purpose of facilitating the watch over his house garden.¹

Rami b. Hama² enquired: Is it permitted to move an object³ two cubits along a roof and two cubits along a column?⁴ — ‘What an enquiry’, Rabbah⁵ exclaimed: ‘is this? He is asking about a karmelith⁶ and a private domain!’⁷ And Rami b. Hama?⁸ — In⁹ his ingenuity he was not careful in putting the question. He, however, meant to put the question thus: Is it permitted to move an object¹⁰ two cubits along a roof¹¹ and two cubits along an exedra?¹² Do we say: Since neither the one nor the other¹³ is fit for a dwelling-place, both¹⁴ are regarded¹⁵ as a single domain;¹⁶ or is it possible that as the movement of objects from one roof¹¹ to another¹¹ is forbidden¹⁷ so is also that between a roof¹¹ and an exedra¹² forbidden.¹⁸

R. Bebai b. Abaye enquired: Is it permissible to move an object two cubits on a roof and two cubits in a ruin?¹⁹ — Is not this enquiry, R. Kahana asked, identical with that of Rami b. Hama?²⁰ — ‘Would I’, R. Bebai b. Abale retorted: ‘have come with the enquiry of another man merely to create difficulties?’²¹ An exedra is unfit as a dwelling whereas a ruin is fit’.²² But if it²³ is fit as a dwelling why did he²⁴ raise the question?²⁵ — His enquiry was in the nature of an alternative question.²⁶ If, [he said in effect,] you will find [some reason] for answering²⁷ that an exedra is unfit as a dwelling,²⁸ [will you agree that] a ruin is fit²⁹ for a dwelling,³⁰ or is it possible [that the latter is subject to the same law as the former, since] new at any rate it has no tenants? — This must remain undecided.³¹

Regarding a number of roofs on the same level, according to R. Meir,³² or a single roof,³³ according to the Rabbis,³⁴ Rab ruled: It is permissible to move objects through their ṛas,³⁵ and Samuel ruled: Objects may be moved only within four cubits.³⁶ As ‘Rab ruled: It is permissible to move objects throughout their areas,³⁷ does not a contradiction arise between two rulings³⁸ of Rab?³⁹ There the walls are undistinguishable⁴⁰ but, here, the walls⁴¹ are distinguishable.⁴² But since ‘Samuel ruled: Objects may be moved only within four cubits’,⁴³ does not a contradiction arise between two rulings of Samuel?⁴⁴ — There⁴⁵ the area was not bigger than two beth se'ah⁴⁶ but here it⁴⁷ is bigger than two beth se'ah, and, since those walls⁴⁸ were made for dwelling purposes only below⁴⁹ but not on the roof area above,⁵⁰ the latter is like a karpaf bigger than two beth se'ah, that was not surrounded by walls for dwelling purposes, and in any karpaf bigger than two beth se'ah that was not surrounded by walls for dwelling purposes, no objects may be moved except within four cubits.

It was stated: As regards a ship, Rab ruled: It is permissible⁵¹ to move objects about throughout its area, and Samuel ruled: Objects may be moved only within four cubits. ‘Rab ruled: It is permissible to move objects about throughout its area’

- (13) Sc. neither the roof of the dwelling-house nor that of the exedra.
- (14) Though belonging to different owners.
- (15) Since, unlike the roofs of two dwelling-houses which, on account of the different tenants beneath them, are regarded by the Sages as different domains, the exedra has no tenants either within it or on its roof.
- (16) Even according to the Sages.
- (17) Because, presumably, they belong to different tenants.

- (26) Lit., 'He said: If you will find (some reason) for saying', sc. R. Bebai was neither certain that a ruin is to be regarded as a suitable dwelling-place nor that it was subject to the same law and status as all exedra, and his enquiry depended on one of the two possible alternative answers to Rami's enquiry.

- (39) The one just cited and the ruling. Supra 89a, that on roofs of the same level, according to the Rabbis, objects 'may be moved only within four cubits', from which it is obvious that he does not recognize the principle of the upward extension of walls.
- (40) One standing on any of the roofs cannot see them since they are covered by the roofs. Hence it is that the principle of upward extensions cannot be applied and the roofs, according to the Rabbis, impose restrictions upon each other.
- (41) Of (a) the detached house, according to the Rabbis, and (b) those of the outermost houses according to R. Meir.

because it has¹ walls;² ‘and Samuel ruled: Objects may be moved only within four cubits’, since the walls were put up for the purpose of keeping out³ the water.⁴ ‘Is the law’, R. Hiyya b. Joseph asked Samuel, ‘in agreement with your view or is it in agreement with that of Rab?’ — ‘The law, the other replied: ‘is in agreement with that of Rab’. ‘Rab’, explained R. Giddal in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph, ‘agrees nevertheless that if it was turned upside down⁵ objects on it⁶ may be moved only within four cubits. For what purpose, however, was it inverted? If it be suggested: For the purpose of dwelling under it, why, it could be objected, should its law be different from that of a single roof?⁷ — It was inverted rather for the purpose of being coated with pitch.⁸ R. Ashi reported⁹ this¹⁰ with reference to a ship; but R. Aha son of Raba¹¹ reported it with reference to an exedra. For it was stated: If an exedra was situated in a valley, it is, Rab ruled, permitted to move objects within all its interior; but Samuel ruled: Objects may be moved within four cubits only. Rab ruled that it was permitted to move objects in all its interior because we apply the principle: The edge of the ceiling descends and closes up. But Samuel ruled that objects may be moved within four cubits only because we do not apply the principle: The edge of the ceiling descends and closes up.¹²

But according to Rab's interpretation of R. Meir's view,¹³ should it not¹⁴ be permitted to move objects from a roof into a courtyard?¹⁵ This is forbidden as a measure¹⁶ of which R. Isaac b. Abdimi has spoken.¹⁷ And according to Samuel's interpretation of the view of the Rabbis,¹⁸ should it not be permissible to move objects¹⁹ from a roof to a karpaf?²⁰ — Raba²¹ b. Ulla replied: The prohibition is due to a preventive measure against the possibility of a reduction in the area of the roof.²² But if so, it should also be forbidden to move an object²³ from karpaf to karpaf²⁴ since the area of one of them might happen to be reduced²⁵ and people would still be moving objects from one to the other? — If a reduction were to occur there²⁶ it would be noticeable²⁷ but if a reduction should take place here²⁸ it might not be noticed at all.²⁹

Rab Judah stated: A careful study would show that³⁰ according to the view of R. Meir roofs are regarded as a Separate domain, courtyards as a separate domain

(7) Concerning which Rab ruled that even according to the Rabbis it is permissible to move objects throughout its area though it was bigger than two beth Se'ah. The sides of a ship that was inverted for the purpose of dwelling under it should be subject to the same laws as those of the walls of a dwelling-house.

(8) As its sides no longer serve the purpose of walls of a dwelling place the ship's roof (or back) assumes the same character as that of the top of a mere column; and when these sides are imagined to be extended upwards they surround an area that is bigger than two beth se'ah whose walls were not put up for dwelling purposes and whose status, therefore, must be that of a karmelith where movement of objects beyond four cubits is forbidden.

(15) Obviously it should. Why then did R. Meir rule (infra 90b, fiad n) that gardens, courtyards and karpafs are separate domains from any of which it is forbidden to move objects into the other?

- (16) Against similar action in the case of a mound in a public domain.

and karpafs as a separate domain;¹ that, according to the view of the Sages,² roofs and courtyards form a single domain³ and karpaf⁴ form a domain of their own;⁵ and that according to the view of R. Simeon⁶ all these together⁷ constitute a single domain.

It was taught in agreement with Rab⁸ and it was also taught in agreement with Rab Judah.⁹ 'It was taught in agreement with Rab': All the roofs of a town constitute a single domain, and it is forbidden to carry objects up or down from the courtyards on to the roofs or from the roofs into the courtyards respectively;¹⁰ but objects that were in a courtyard when the Sabbath began may be moved about within the courtyard, and if they were at that time on the roofs they may be so moved on the roofs, provided no roof was tell handbreadths higher or lower than all adjoining roof; so R. Meir. The Sages, however, ruled: Each one is a separate domain and no object may be moved in it except within four cubits.¹¹ 'It was taught in agreement with Rab Judah':¹² Rabbi related, When we were studying the Torah at R. Simeon's at Tekoa¹³ we used to carry¹⁴ oil¹⁵ and a towel from roof to roof, from the roof to a courtyard, from the courtyard to another courtyard, from that courtyard to a karpaf and from that karpaf into another karpaf¹⁶ until we arrived at the well wherein we bathed.

R. Judah related: It once happened that during a time of danger¹⁷ we carried¹⁴ a scroll of the Law from a courtyard into a roof, from the roof into a courtyard, and from the courtyard into a karpaf in order to read in it.¹⁸ They,¹⁹ however, said to him: A time of danger can supply no proof.²⁰

R. SIMEON RULED: ROOFS etc. Rab ruled: The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon. This, however, applies only where no 'erub²¹ had been prepared,²² but not where one²³ had been prepared, since [in the latter case] a preventive measure must be enacted²⁴ against the possibility of carrying out objects from the houses [in one courtyard] into a [neighbouring] courtyard.²⁵ Samuel, however, ruled: [The same law²⁶ applies] whether an 'erub had been prepared or not. So also said R. Johanan: 'Who whispered this²⁷ to you? [There is in fact no difference] whether an 'erub had been prepared or not'.²⁸ R. Hisda demurred: According to the view of Samuel and R. Johanan,²⁹ it might well be objected, 'Two objects in the same courtyard, and one may be moved³⁰ while the other may not!'³¹ — R. Simeon follows his own principle that in such cases no preventive measure need be enacted. For we learned: 'R. Simeon remarked: To what may this case be compared? To three courtyards that open one into the other and also into a public domain where, if the two outer ones made an 'erub with the middle one, It is permitted to have access to them and they are permitted access to it, but the two outer ones are forbidden access to one another³² and no preventive measure against the possibility of carrying objects from the one courtyard into the other had been enacted; so also here no preventive measure has been enacted against the possibility of carrying objects from the houses of one courtyard into the next courtyard.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: R. SIMEON RULED: ROOFS, COURTYARDS AND KARPAFS ARE EQUALLY REGARDED AS ONE DOMAIN IN RESPECT OF CARRYING FROM ONE INTO THE OTHER OBJECTS THAT WERE KEPT WITH THEM WHEN THE SABBATH BEGAN, BUT NOT IN RESPECT OF OBJECTS THAT WERE IN THE HOUSE WHEN THE SABBATH BEGAN. Now if you grant that the ruling³³ applies also to cases where an erub had been prepared it is quite easy to see how objects from a house call be found in a courtyard,³⁴ but if you maintain that the ruling; applies only to cases where no 'erub had been prepared, how³⁵ is it possible for objects from a house to be found in a courtyard?³⁶ — He raised the objection and he also supplied the solution: [The objects] referred to might be skull-caps or turbans.³⁷

(1) Supra 89a q.v., notes.

(2) Who, unlike R. Meir, did not make provision against the possibility of using a mound in a public domain.

(3) It being permissible to move objects from one courtyard into another if both belonged to more than one person, or from a private roof (since it is only infrequently used) into such a courtyard. Between private roofs this is forbidden, since in the view of the Rabbis, the domains on the roofs are as divided as the domains of the houses below,

(4) Since they are of the same character.

(5) Though they belonged to more than one owner.

(9) Whose view has just been cited.

(10) This, according to R. Meir, is a preventive measure against the possibility of a similar act in the case of a mound in a public domain.

(23) Each courtyard for itself but no two courtyards jointly.

(24) Forbidding the transfer of objects from one courtyard into another, even though these were all the time in the courtyard.

(29) That, though objects that were in a courtyard when the Sabbath began may be moved into another courtyard, those that were at the time mentioned in a house in that courtyard may not be moved to an adjoining courtyard, even after they had been brought into their own courtyard by means of an 'erub.

(30) Into an adjoining courtyard (cf. prev. n.).

(31) As a result, people might take the liberty of carrying the two kinds of objects into the next courtyard. Why then was no preventive measure enacted against such a possibility?

(32) Supra 45b q.v. notes.

(33) R. Simeon's.

(34) And the limitation, 'BUT NOT IN RESPECT OF OBJECTS THAT WERE IN THE HOUSE' was consequently necessary.

(35) Since in the absence of all 'erub no object may be carried from any of the houses into the courtyard.

(36) This being apparently impossible, what need was there for (cf. supra p. 631, n. 6) the limitation?

(37) Which may well have been in the house when the Sabbath began but were carried into the courtyard on one's head as articles of dress.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 91b

Come and hear: if the tenants of a courtyard and the tenants on its gallery forgot to join together in an erub,¹ any level that is higher than ten handbreadths² belongs to the gallery,³ and any lower level belongs also to the courtyard.⁴ This⁵ applies only where both the former as well as the latter were occupied by many tenants⁶ and each group prepared an 'erub for itself,⁷ or where they belonged to individuals⁸ who⁹ need not prepare an 'erub;¹⁰ but if they were occupied by many tenants¹¹ who forgot to prepare an erub,¹² roof, courtyard, exedra and gallery constitute together¹³ a single domain.¹⁴ The reason then¹⁵ is that no 'erub had been prepared,¹² but if an 'erub had been prepared this would not have been permitted, would it?¹⁶ — This represents the view of¹⁷ the Rabbis.¹⁸ A deduction from the form of the expression also supports this view,¹⁹ since karpaf and alley were not mentioned.²⁰ This is conclusive.

Come and hear: If five courtyards were open one into the other and also into an alley and all their tenants forgot to prepare an erub, it is forbidden to carry in or to carry out from a courtyard into the alley²¹ or from the alley into a courtyard; objects, however, that were in a courtyard when the Sabbath began may be moved about within the courtyard, but in the alley this is forbidden;²² but R. Simeon permits this²³ for he used to say: Whenever they²⁴ belong to many people who forgot to prepare an erub,²⁵ a roof a courtyard, all exedra, a gallery, a karpaf and an alley are jointly regarded as a single domain.²⁶ The reason then²⁷ is that no 'erub had been prepared²⁸ but if they had prepared One²⁹ this would not have been the case, would it?³⁰ — The meaning of 'no erub had been prepared' is that the tenants of the courtyards did not prepare an 'erub jointly, but the courtyard with its houses were joined by an 'erub.³¹ But was it not stated: 'No 'erub³² had been prepared'? — The meaning of an 'erub had been prepared' is that there was no shittuf.³³ And if you prefer I might say: R. Simeon was speaking to the Rabbis in accordance with their view. 'According to my view', he said, in effect, 'there is no difference between a case where an erub had been prepared and one where it had not been prepared;³⁴ but according to your view, would you not agree with me that at least where no 'erub had been prepared³⁵ all³⁶ should be regarded as a single domain?' And the Rabbis replied: No, they³⁷ must be regarded as two domains.³⁸

The Master said: 'But in an alley this is forbidden'. May it be suggested that this provides support to a ruling R. Zera cited in the name of Rab, for R. Zera citing Rab ruled: In an alley wherein no shittuf had been arranged no objects may be moved about except within four cubits?³⁹ — Read:⁴⁰ 'But into an alley it is forbidden'.⁴¹ But this⁴² is identical, is it not, with the first clause?⁴³ — The superfluous Mishnah⁴⁴ was required: As it might have been presumed that the Rabbis differed from

R. Simeon only⁴⁵ where an erub had been prepared⁴⁶ but that where no 'erub had been prepared⁴⁷ they agreed with him,⁴⁸ we were informed⁴⁹ [that they differ in both cases].⁵⁰

Said Rabina to R. Ashi:

- (1) But each group prepared an 'erub for its courtyard and gallery respectively.
 - (2) A column or a mound, fair instance.
 - (3) For the discussion and explanation of the ruling v. supra 84a.
 - (4) And since the tenants of the courtyard as well as those of the gallery have a right to it, its use is forbidden to both.
 - (5) The prohibition on both groups of tenants to use the same courtyard or gallery.
 - (6) Lit., 'that these belonged to many and those belonged to many'.
 - (7) So that the tenants in each group were permitted to carry their objects from their houses into their courtyard and gallery respectively. If objects that rested in the courtyard or the gallery had been permitted to be transferred from the one into the other, people might mistakenly transfer also objects from the house of the one into the other. Hence the prohibition (cf. supra n. 7).
 - (8) Sc. the courtyard belonged to one, and the gallery to another individual.
 - (9) Since there were no other tenants either in the one or in the other to impose restrictions.
 - (10) And may, therefore, carry their objects from their houses into their respective domains. Hence (cf. Supra n. 9) the prohibition.
 - (11) I.e., the gallery had a number of tenants and the courtyard also had a number of tenants.
 - (12) For their respective domains, so that no object could be moved from any of the no uses into the courtyard and gallery respectively into which that house opened.
 - (13) In respect of objects that rested in them at the time the Sabbath commenced.
 - (14) And it is consequently permitted to move these objects from one into the other.
 - (15) Why it is permitted to move objects from one into the other (cf. prev. n.).
 - (16) Obviously not, since a preventive measure against the possibility of carrying objects from the houses of the one into the other would have been necessary. Now since it is R. Simeon who regards roofs, courtyards etc. as one domain this ruling which also regards them as one domain must be attributed to him, since it was Shown that if an 'erub had been prepared the movement of all objects between courtyard and gallery is forbidden, an objection arises against Samuel and R. Johanan.
 - (17) Lit., 'this is according to whom.?'
 - (18) Who agree that roofs and courtyards do constitute a single domain, and it is only they who did not permit the movement of objects as a preventive measure (as they did in the case supra 49a). R. Simeon, however, enacted no such preventive measures.
 - (19) That the ruling cited represents the view of the Rabbis.
 - (20) In agreement with their view. A ruling of R. Simeon would have included these also since he regards these as well as the others as one domain.
 - (21) The Rabbis, whose view is here represented, regarding an alley as a karpaf into which no objects may be carried.
 - (22) This is now assumed to mean that even objects that were in the alley itself at the time the Sabbath commenced may not be moved in it because, so long as no joint 'erub had been prepared, it is subject to the restrictions of a karmelith.
 - (23) Even the movement of an object from a courtyard into the alley.
 - (24) Courtyards or alleys.
 - (25) For themselves. This is now presumed to mean that tenants of each courtyard did not prepare an 'erub for their own courtyard.
 - (26) The movement of objects within which is permitted.
 - (27) Why according to R. Simeon it is permitted to carry objects from a courtyard into the alley.
 - (28) Cf. supra n. 9; so that no objects from the houses may be carried into the courtyard and no preventive measure against the possibility of carrying them into the alley is called for.
 - (29) In reliance on which objects from the houses could be carried into the courtyard.
 - (30) Since a preventive measure against the possibility of carrying objects from the houses into the alley would have been necessary. A distinction is thus drawn between a case where 'erub has, and one where it has not been prepared. All objection against Samuel and . Johanan.

p31) R. Simeon's form of expression was not intended as a restriction but, on the contrary, as an extension of the privilege: Even though each courtyard was provided with a separate 'erub and objects from its houses were permitted to be carried into it, it is nevertheless permitted to move into the alley such objects as were in the courtyard when the Sabbath began and no preventive measure against the possibility of carrying also the objects from the houses was deemed necessary.

(32) Presumably none whatever.

(33) Between the courtyards in the alley. The question of 'erub between the houses of each courtyard is completely disregarded since the use of the alley is permitted irrespective of whether such an 'erub was or was not prepared in the courtyards.

(34) As Samuel and R. Johanan maintained.

(35) By each group of tenants for their own courtyard.

(36) Roof, courtyard, exedra, gallery and karpaf

(37) Karpaf and alley.

(38) Only roof, courtyard and gallery may be regarded as one domain.

(39) Shab. 130b.

(40) Instead of 'in'.

(41) Sc. to carry objects from a courtyard. Within the alley, however, objects may well be carried about.

(42) The ruling in the form now suggested.

(43) Which reads: 'it is forbidden to carry . . . from a courtyard into an alley'.

(44) Sc. the repetition of the same thing.

(45) Lit., 'when do the Rabbis differ from R. Simeon-t ese words'.

(46) For each courtyard separately; (the meaning of 'erub in the expression 'for{ot to prepare an 'erub' being shittuf), and that the prohibition to move objects from a courtyard into the alley is due to a preventive measure against the possibility of moving objects from the houses into the alley.

(47) In consequence of which no objects from a house could be carried into a courtyard.

(48) That, since no preventive measure is called for (cf. p. n.), the movement of objects from the courtyard into the alley is permitted.

(49) By the apparently superfluous repetition of the same ruling.

(50) Since the repetition of the ruling can be explained only by applying each statement to a different case: One where all 'erub for each courtyard had been prepared and one where none had been prepared.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 92a

Could R. Johanan have made such a statement,¹ seeing that R. Johanan laid down that the halachah is in agreement with an anonymous Mishnah, and we learned:² If a wall between two courtyards was ten handbreadths high and four handbreadths thick, two 'erubs may be prepared but not one. If there was fruit on the top of it, the tenants on either side may climb up and eat there, provided they do not carry it down?³ — The meaning of 'down' is⁴ 'down into the houses'.⁵ But did not R. Hiyya learn: Provided neither of the tenants⁶ stands in his place⁷ and eats?⁸ — The other replied: Since⁹ Rabbi¹⁰ has not taught this ruling¹¹ whence could R. Hiyya¹² know it!

It was stated: If there were two courtyards with a ruin¹³ between them and the tenants of the one prepared an 'erub¹⁴ and the tenants of the other did not prepare one,¹⁵ [the ruin] said R. Huna, is to be assigned¹⁶ that courtyard for which no 'erub had been prepared,¹⁷ but not to the one for which an 'erub had been prepared, since the tenants of the latter might be tempted to carry objects¹⁸ from their houses into the ruin.¹⁹ Hiyya b. Rab, however, said:²⁰ It²¹ is also assigned to the courtyard for which an 'erub had been prepared, and both, therefore,²² are²³ subject to restrictions.²⁴ For were you to suggest that both are exempt from restrictions,²⁵ why [I would ask,] is not²⁶ a courtyard for which no 'erub had been prepared assigned²⁷ to the courtyard for which one had been prepared?²⁸ — [No].²⁹ In that case³⁰ since the objects from the houses are safe³¹ in the courtyard one might carry [many of them] thither;³² but here in the case of a ruin, since the objects from the houses are not safe in a ruin, no one would carry many of them thither.³³

Others read: Hiyya b. Rab said: It³⁴ is also assigned to the courtyard for which an 'erub had been prepared; and both, therefore,³⁵ are³⁶ free from restrictions. For should you insist that both are subject to restrictions³⁷ since³⁸ a courtyard for which no 'erub had been provided is not assigned to the one for which one had been provided,³⁹ [it can be retorted]: In that case,³⁰ since the objects from the houses are safe³¹ in the courtyard the Rabbis did not relax the restrictions because otherwise people might carry them out.⁴⁰ In a ruin, however, they are not safe.⁴¹

MISHNAH. IF A LARGE ROOF WAS CLOSE TO A SMALLER ROOF⁴² THE USE⁴³ OF THE LARGER ONE IS PERMITTED⁴⁴ BUT THAT OF THE LESSER ONE IS FORBIDDEN.⁴⁵ IF THE FULL WIDTH OF A WALL OF A SMALL⁴⁶ COURTYARD WAS BROKEN DOWN SO THAT THE YARD FULLY OPENED INTO A LARGE⁴⁷ COURTYARD, THE USE OF THE LARGER ONE⁴⁸ IS PERMITTED,⁴⁹ BUT THAT OF THE SMALLER ONE⁴⁸ IS FORBIDDEN, BECAUSE THE GAP IS REGARDED AS A DOORWAY TO THE FORMER.⁵⁰

GEMARA. What was the point⁵¹ in teaching⁵² the same principles twice?⁵³ According to Rab's view,⁵⁴ this⁵⁵ was intended to teach us that a ROOF is subject to the same limitations as a COURTYARD: As in a courtyard the walls are distinguishable⁵⁶ SO must the walls be distinguishable in the case of a roof also;⁵⁷ and according to Samuel's view⁵⁸ a no ROOF was meant to be compared to a COURTYARD: As a courtyard is a place upon which many people tread so must a roof⁵⁹ be one on which many people tread.⁶⁰

Rabbah and R. Zera and Rabbah son of R. Hanan⁶¹ were sitting at their studies, Abaye sitting beside them, and in the course of their session they argued as follows: From our Mishnah it may be inferred that the occupiers of the larger one influence the rights of those of the lesser but those of the latter do not influence those of the former. If, for instance,⁶² vines were planted in the larger one, it is forbidden to sow in the lesser one,⁶³ and if it was sown, the seeds are forbidden; and

(1) That the halachah was in agreement with R. Simeon that all courtyards are regarded as a single domain even where separate 'erub were prepared for each.

(2) Anonymously.

- (3) Supra 76b q.v. notes. Since it is forbidden to carry' the fruit down into either courtyard, it is obvious that it is forbidden to carry any object from one courtyard into another; and this ruling, since it is contained in all anonymous Mishnah, must, according to R. Johanan, represent the halachah. Now, if it is granted, as Rab maintained Supra, that a distinction is drawn between courtyards for each of which a separate 'erub had been provided and courtyards for which none had been provided, the Mishnah cited can be explained to refer to courtyards of the former class; but if no distinction is drawn and R. Simeon, according to R. Johanan's interpretation, regards all courtyards as one domain in either case, how is this rule to be reconciled with the Mishnah?
- (4) Lit., 'what is below'?
- (5) Into the courtyards, however, this is permitted.
- (6) Lit., 'that this shall not . . . and this etc.'
- (7) Sc. in his own courtyard or on the top of the wall, from which it is obvious that the movement of objects is forbidden not only into the houses but also from one courtyard into the other.
- (8) [MS.M. reads: provided they do not carry it down but each one stands in his place].
- (9) Lit., 'and when'.
- (10) R. Judah I, the compiler of the Mishnah.
- (11) He only spoke of the prohibition to carry it 'down', (cf. n. 4,) meaning to take it into the houses.
- (12) Who was Rabbis disciple. R. Hiyya compiled Baraithas, and the authorship of the Tosefta is attributed to him.
- (13) On none of whose side it was fully exposed to the public domain and that belonged either to the owners of the adjoining houses or to another person.
- (14) For their courtyard alone, so that they' were allowed to move objects from their houses into it.
- (15) In consequence of which they are forbidden to carry into it any objects from their houses.
- (16) Irrespective of whether it belonged to one of the house owners or to a stranger.
- (17) I.e., the tenants of that courtyard are permitted to carry objects from their courtyard into the ruin.
- (18) Which happened to be in their courtyard (cf. supra n. 10).
- (19) No such precaution is necessary in the case of the other courtyard since no objects from the houses (cf. supra n. 11) may be carried into it. R. Huna, a disciple of Rab, follows his master's principle (supra 91a).
- (20) In the name of his father (v Rashi a.l.).
- (21) The ruin.
- (22) Since a preventive measure is necessary to prevent mistaken application of the rule for the courtyard for which no 'erub had been prepared to the one for which an 'erub had been prepared.
- (23) In the opinion of Hiyya.
- (24) Neither from the one nor from the other may objects be moved into the ruin.
- (25) Sc. that Rab's (cf. supra p. 636, n. 16) ruling that the ruin 'is also assigned etc.' implies a relaxation of the law and that even from the courtyard in which an 'erub had been prepared the moving of objects into the ruin is permitted.
- (26) In the ruling of R. Simeon in our Mishnah which, according to Rab's interpretation (supra 91a) 'applies only where no 'erub had been prepared but not where one had been prepared'.
- (27) As is the ruin, according to the suggestion.
- (28) Sc. why should not the tenants of the latter be permitted to carry objects from their courtyard into the former.
- (29) This is no argument against the suggestion that the meaning is that both are free from restrictions.
- (30) Lit., 'there', the ruling of R. Simeon according to Rab's interpretation.
- (31) Lit., 'are watched', 'protected'.
- (32) Sc. so many objects are likely to be carried from the houses into the courtyard that they might easily be mixed up with those of the courtyard and carried like them to the next courtyard. Hence the restriction.
- (33) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut. As objects from the houses are not likely to be mixed up with those of the courtyard no preventive measure was considered necessary. The case of the ruin, therefore, is no criterion for that spoken of by R. Simeon, and it may well be maintained, as suggested, that in the former case both are free from restrictions'.
- (34) The ruin,
- (35) Cf. supra n. 1.
- (36) Presumably; in the opinion of Hiyya.
- (37) Sc. that neither from the one nor from the other may objects be moved into the ruin.
- (38) V. supra n. 2 and text.
- (39) From which it is evident that a preventive measure had been enacted against the possibility of mixing up the objects from the houses with those from the courtyard and the carrying of the former like the latter into the next courtyard (cf. supra p. 636, n. 18).

(40) Into the courtyard (cf. supra p. 637, n. 8).

(41) V. supra p. 637, n. 9.

(42) The former projecting on both sides of the latter and the line of contact being no longer than ten cubits.

(43) I.e., the taking up of objects from the house below.

(44) The occupiers of the adjoining house impose no restrictions on its tenants since the projecting portion of the larger roof (cf. supra n. 3), by the rule of upward extension, forms side-posts to the middle section common to both roofs which, being no bigger than ten cubits (cf. loc. cit.), is regarded as a doorway of the larger roof.

(45) Cf. supra n. 4; since it is fully exposed to the larger roof, the occupiers of the larger house impose restrictions on its use,

(46) So Asheri, and cur. edd. supra 8a, 9b. Cur. edd. a.l. and Alfasi 'large'.

(47) Cf. prev. n.

(48) I.e., the movement of objects from its houses into it.

(49) If an 'erub had been prepared by its tenants. For the reason cf supra n. 5; mut. mut.

(50) But not to the latter. Hence it is (cf. supra nn. 5f) that the use of the former is permitted while that of the latter is forbidden.

(51) Lit., 'wherefore to me'.

(52) In our Mishnah.

(53) Lit., 'two'; in case of (a) roofs and (b) courtyards.

(54) That walls must be distinguishable.

(55) The repetition of the same principle.

(56) Since it has proper walls.

(57) I.e. the roof must not project beyond the walls. If it does the rule of upward extension cannot apply.

(58) That the rule of upward extension is applicable even where the walls are indistinguishable when viewed from the roof.

(59) If its use is to be forbidden.

(60) If many people do not tread upon it, the rule of upward extension is applied even where the walls are indistinguishable from above.

(61) MS.M., 'Abin'.

(62) Lit., 'how?'

(63) Because the latter is regarded as a part of the former in which it is forbidden to sow vines and corn together (v. Glos. s.v. kil'ayim).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 92b

the vines are permitted;¹ if vines grew in the lesser one it is permitted² to sow in the larger one.³ If a woman was in the larger one, and her get⁴ was in the lesser one⁵ she is⁶ divorced thereby;⁷ but if the woman was in the lesser one and her get⁴ in the larger,⁵ she is not divorced.⁸ If a congregation was in the larger one and the Reader⁹ in the lesser one, they have fully performed their duty,¹⁰ but if the congregation was in the lesser one and the Reader in the larger one they have not performed their duty.¹¹ If nine men were in the larger courtyard and one was in the lesser one they may all be combined,¹² but if nine men were in the lesser one and one man in the larger one they may not be combined.¹³ If excrement was in the larger one it is forbidden to read the portions of the shema'¹⁴ in the lesser one,¹⁵ but if it was in the lesser one it is permitted to read the shema' in the larger one.¹⁶ Said Abaye to them, If so, do we not find here a case where a partition¹⁷ is a cause of prohibition, for in the absence of a partition¹⁸ one may sow at a distance of four cubits¹⁹ whereas now²⁰ this is forbidden?²¹ But, retorted R. Zera to Abaye, do we not elsewhere also find a case where a partition is a cause of prohibition? Have we not in fact learnt: IF THE FULL WIDTH OF A WALL OF A SMALL²² COURTYARD WAS BROKEN DOWN SO THAT THE YARD FULLY OPENED INTO A LARGE²² COURTYARD, THE USE OF THE LARGER ONE IS PERMITTED, BUT THAT OF THE SMALLER ONE IS FORBIDDEN, BECAUSE THE GAP IS REGARDED AS A DOORWAY TO THE FORMER; but if its projections²³ had been straightened²⁴ the use of the large One also²⁵ would have been forbidden?²⁶ — There,²⁷ the other replied, it is a case of the removal of partitions.²⁸ ‘Do we not’, retorted Raba to Abaye, ‘find a partition to be the cause of a prohibition? Has it not in fact been stated:

- (1) Since the lesser courtyard cannot influence the larger one which remains independent of it.
- (2) Even ab initio.
- (3) Cf. supra n. 6. The line of contact between the courtyards being regarded as a doorway to the larger one and, a doorway having the status of a partition, the corn may be sown even in close proximity to the vines (cf. B.B. 26a). In this case, since they were planed first, the vines also remain permitted (cf. Men. 15a).
- (4) Which her husband threw to her.
- (5) And she was the owner of both courtyards.
- (6) Even according to the view (Git. 77b) that a woman cannot be divorced by the thrusting of a get into her domain unless she was herself present at the time within that domain.
- (7) Since the lesser courtyard is regarded as a part of the larger one in which she was actually present,
- (8) Because the larger courtyard forms no part of the lesser one, while the woman within the latter (who, as a rule, has no desire to acquire a get to be divorced) cannot be deemed to be transferred to the larger courtyard.
- (9) Sheliah zibbur, lit., ‘the messenger of the congregation’, who reads the prayers for, and on behalf of those who are themselves unable to read them.
- (10) Of prayer. The Reader in the lesser courtyard which is regarded as a part of the larger one is deemed to be in the same place as the congregation.
- (11) since the Reader in the larger courtyard, which (as explained supra) is independent of the’ lesser one, cannot be regarded as present with them in the lesser one, while a whole congregation cannot be deemed to be transferred from their position and shifted towards the position of an individual.
- (12) To form a quorum of ten, the minimum number required for a public religious service (cf. supra p. 639, n. 15 mut. mut.)
- (13) Cf. supra n. 1 mut. mut.
- (14) Keri'ath shema', lit., ‘the reading of the shema’, the passages from Deut. VI, 4-9 XI, 13-21, and Num. XV, 37-41 the first of which begins with the words ‘Shema’ Yisroel’ (‘Hear, O Israel’). The three passages form the central part of the morning and evening services.
- (15) Which is deemed to be a part of the former.
- (16) Which (as explained supra) is separated from the lesser one by a virtual doorway which has the status of a partition.
- (17) Sc. the virtual doorway (formed, by the projection of the sections of the larger courtyard on both sides of the smaller one) which has the status of a partition.
- (18) I.e., but for the projections on both sides of the smaller one which have the status of a partition.
- (19) From the vines; lit., ‘removes four cubits and sows’.
- (20) On account of the imaginary partition.
- (21) Since the entire area of the smaller courtyard is forbidden ground.
- (22) Cf. relevant note on our Mishnah.
- (23) The sections of the larger courtyard that projected on both sides of the smaller one.
- (24) By building partitions that cut out these projections from the larger courtyard.
- (25) Which, on account of the partitions d, is now fully exposed to the smaller one as the latter is exposed to it.
- (26) Which is another case where a partition is the cause of a prohibition.
- (27) The case just cited.
- (28) The putting up of the new partitions removes the former partitions so that one cancels out the other. In the case cited by Abaye, however, there is only one set of partitions and these very partitions are the cause of the prohibition.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 93a

If an exedra¹ that had side-posts² was covered with boughs,³ it⁴ is valid as a sukkah;⁵ but if its side-posts had been straightened,⁶ it would have been invalid, would it not?⁷ ‘According to my view, Abaye replied: ‘it⁸ is still valid,⁹ while according to your view it is a case of the removal of partitions'.¹⁰ Said Rabbah b. R. Hanan¹¹ to Abaye: Do we not find elsewhere that a partition may be the cause of a prohibition? Was it not in fact taught: If a house was half covered with a roof while its other half was uncovered, it is permissible to sow¹² in the uncovered part¹³ though vines grew in the covered part;¹⁴ but if all the house had been equally covered with a roof¹⁵ would not this have been forbidden?¹⁶ — There, the other replied: It is a case of the removal of partitions.¹⁷

Raba sent to Abaye by the hand of R. Shemaiah b. Ze'ira [the following message]: 'Do we not find a partition to be the cause of a prohibition? Was it not in fact taught: partitions in a vineyard may be either the cause of a relaxation of the law¹⁸ or one of a restriction of it. In what manner? If the plantation of a vineyard stretched to the 'very foundation of a fence one may sow from the very foundations of that¹⁹ fence and beyond it; whereas in the absence of a partition one may sow only at a distance of four cubits;²⁰ and this is an example of a partition in a vineyard that is the cause of a legal relaxation. In what manner are they a cause of legal restriction? If a vineyard was removed eleven cubits from a wall no seed may be sown in the intervening space;²¹ whereas in the absence of a wall one may sow at a distance of four cubits;²⁰ and this is an example of a partition in a vineyard that is the cause of a legal restriction?'¹⁶ — 'According to your view, however, the other replied: 'might you not raise an objection against me from a Mishnah, since we learned: A patch in a vineyard, Beth Shammai ruled, must measure no less than twenty-four cubits, and Beth Hillel ruled: Sixteen cubits; and the width of an uncultivated border of a vineyard, Beth Shammai ruled, must measure no less than sixteen cubits, and Beth Hillel ruled: Twelve cubits. And what is meant by a patch in a vineyard? The barren portion of the interior of the vineyard.²² If its sides do not measure sixteen cubits no seed may be sown there, but if they do measure sixteen cubits, sufficient space for the tillage of the vineyard is allowed and the remaining space may be sown. What is meant by the uncultivated border of a vineyard? The space between the actual vineyard and the surrounding fence. If the width is less than twelve cubits no seed may be sown there, but if it measures twelve cubits, sufficient space for the tillage of the vineyard is allowed and the remaining area may be sown.'²³ Consequently²⁴ it must be assumed that the reason there²⁵ is²⁶ that all the space to the extent of four cubits that adjoins the vineyard is allotted for the tillage of the vineyard, and a similar space that adjoins the wall, since it cannot be sown,²⁷ is renounced²⁸ so that the area intervening,²⁹ if it measures four cubits,³⁰ is deemed to be of sufficient importance, but not otherwise.³¹

Rab Judah said: If three karpafs³² adjoined one another, and the two outer ones had projections³³ while the middle one had none³⁴ and one man occupied each,³⁵ the group³⁶ is treated as a caravan who are allowed as much space as they require.³⁷ If the middle one had projections³⁸ while the two outer ones had none³⁹ and one man occupied each, the three men together⁴⁰ are allowed no more space⁴¹ than six [beth se'ah].⁴² The question was raised: What is the ruling where one person occupied each of the outer karpafs and two occupied the middle one?⁴³ Is it held that if these⁴⁴ were to go⁴⁵ to the one karpaf⁴⁶ there would be in it three⁴⁷ and if they⁴⁴ were to go to the other karpaf⁴⁶ there would be in it three⁴⁷, or is it rather held that only one of them⁴⁸ is deemed to be going to each karpaf?⁴⁹ And were you to find Some ground for the assumption that only one of them⁵⁰ is deemed to be going to each karpaf,⁵¹ the question arises: What is the decision where two persons occupied each of the outer karpafs⁵² and only one occupied the middle one? Is it certain that the view is here: If he⁵³ were to go to the one karpaf⁵⁴ there would be in it three⁵⁵ and if he were to go to the other karpaf⁵⁴ there would be in it three,⁵⁵ or is the view rather that it is doubtful in which direction he would go?⁵⁶ The law is that in these questions the more lenient rule is adopted.

R. Hisda said:

(1) With two walls in the shape of an "L" (v. Tosaf. a.l. contra Rashi).

(2) Of the width of a handbreadth, attached to the end of either wall.

(3) Or similar materials suitable for a sukkah roof.

(4) Since either post may be deemed to be extended horizontally and to form a third wall.

- (5) Suk. 18a.
- (6) By putting up walls that covered them (cf. diagram supra mut. mut.) so that only two walls remained.
- (7) Which is another case where a partition is the cause of a prohibition,
- (8) Even in the absence or concealment of the side-posts.
- (9) Because the edges of the beams that span the roof of the exedra are deemed to extend downwards and to form virtual walls (cf. infra 95a) so that the added walls do not effect any prohibition.
- (10) Cf. supra n. 5 mut. mut.
- (11) MS. M., Raba b. R. Hanin.
- (12) Immediately outside the covered section.
- (13) Lit., 'here'; because the edge of the roof is deemed to descend downwards and form a partition between the covered and uncovered sections of the house.
- (14) V. p. 641, n. 18.
- (15) Lit., 'he made his roof covering equal'.
- (16) Which is another case where a partition is the cause of a prohibition.
- (17) The extension of the roof removes the virtual partition formed (cf. supra n. 2) by the edge of the half of the roof.
- (18) Of kil'ayim.
- (19) On its other side.
- (20) From the vineyard. Lit., 'causes it to be four cubits far and sows'.
- (21) Lit., 'shall not bring seed there'.
- (22) Lit., 'a vineyard whose middle was destroyed'.
- (23) Kil. IV, 1; supra 3b q.v. notes. Now the ruling 'If the width (between the vineyard and the wall) is less than twelve cubits no seed may be sown there' proves that a partition may be the cause of a restriction. Why then did not Raba raise his objection on the basis of this ruling that has the authority of a Mishnah and is much superior to that of a Baraitha on which his objection is based?
- (24) Since Raba did not cite this Mishnah in support of his objection.
- (25) Why no seed may be sown if the distance between the vineyard and the wall is less than twelve cubits.
- (26) Lit., 'but is not there this the reason'.
- (27) The sowing of seed near a wall undermining its foundations (cf. B.B. 19a).
- (28) By its owner, as useless for cultivation.
- (29) Between the four cubits for tillage on the side of the vineyard and the four cubits waste on the side of the wall.
- (30) The total distance between the vineyard and the wall would consequently be (cf. prev. n.) $4 + 4 + 4 = 12$ cubits.
- (31) Lit., 'and if not they are not important'. As this Mishnah provides no basis for Raba's objection so does not the Baraitha which may be similarly explained.
- (32) Whose enclosure consisted of no proper fence (plaited lengthwise and crosswise) but of ropes drawn horizontally or reeds fixed in the ground vertically.
- (33) Sc. each one was wider than the middle karpaf and projected on both sides of the line of contact, so that the projections formed a sort of frame the space between which is regarded as a doorway to it.
- (34) If they were situated, for instance, in the following formation.
- (35) V. marg. glos.
- (36) Of the three men, two of whom, on account of the bigger size of their karpafs, influence the rights of the third man in the middle one and who may, therefore, be deemed to be joint occupiers with him of that karpaf.
- (37) 'Certainly' of cur. edd. is deleted with Bah.
- (38) Cf supra p. 643, n. 11. mut. mut.
- (39) The karpafs having been situated with the largest in the middle and flanked on both of its sides by a smaller one.
- (40) Since the man of the middle karpaf, which is bigger than those occupied by the other two men and which has virtual doorways opening towards them, now has the influence over the others, in consequence of which the latter cannot be treated as the occupiers of his karpaf to form with him a joint group of three (the minimum required to constitute a caravan), while he himself, despite his influence on the two can only be regarded as the occupier of the one or the other of the outer karpafs so that no more than two men (a number less than the minimum required for a caravan) ever occupy any one of the karpafs.
- (41) Lit., 'they are only given'.
- (42) Two beth se'ah for each. In either case the outer karpaf is bigger than two beth se'ah the occupier's field is restricted but if the middle one is bigger than two beth se'ah the use of all the three karpafs is restricted since each of the two side ones is now fully exposed on one of its sides to the restricted domain of the middle karpaf

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 93b

All embankment five handbreadths high and a partition on it five handbreadths high are not combined¹ since it is necessary² that the entire height³ shall be contained either in the embankment or in the partition.

b An objection was raised: If there were two courtyards one higher than the other, and the upper one is ten handbreadths higher than the lower one, or has⁴ an embankment five handbreadths high and a partition five handbreadths high, two separate 'erubs may be prepared⁵ but not one.⁶ If it⁷ was lower, only a single 'erub⁶ may be prepared but not two 'erubs!⁸ — Raba⁹ replied: R. Hisda agrees¹⁰ in the case of the lower courtyard, since its tenants can see a frontage of ten handbreadths.¹¹ If so, [should not the tenants of] the lower [courtyard]¹² prepare an 'erub¹³ [as in the case of] two [separated courtyards] but not a single one,¹⁴ while those of the upper one¹⁵ should neither prepare a single one¹⁶ [for the two courtyards] nor¹⁷ one for themselves alone?¹⁸ — Rabbah¹⁹ b. Ulla replied: [This²⁰ deals with a case,] for instance, where the upper courtyard had rims²¹ [that left a gap]²² not wider than ten cubits.²³ If so, read the final clause: 'If it was lower,²⁴ only a single 'erub may be prepared but not two should not the tenants be allowed to prepare one 'erub if they wished²⁵ or, if they preferred it, two? — Rabbah son of Raba replied: This²⁶ deals with a case, for instance, where the gap extended along a whole side of the lower courtyard.²⁷ If so should not the tenants of the lower one be allowed to prepare a single 'erub [jointly]²⁸ but not one for themselves alone²⁹ while those of the upper one should be allowed, if they wished it, to prepare an 'erub for themselves alone²⁹ or, if they preferred it, a single 'erub jointly?³⁰ — This is so indeed, and the ruling,³¹ 'If it was lower, only a single 'erub may be prepared but not two' applies to the tenants of the lower one.

Amemar made the following exposition: An embankment five handbreadths high and a partition on it five handbreadths high are combined.³² When Rabina met R. Aha son of Raba he asked him, 'Did the Master learn anything about a partition?'³³ the other replied: 'No'; and the law is that an embankment five handbreadths high and a partition on it five handbreadths high are combined.³²

R. Hoshai³⁴ enquired: Do tenants who arrive³⁵ on the Sabbath³⁶ impose restrictions? — R.

Hisda³⁷ replied: Come and hear: IF THE FULL WIDTH OF A WALL OF A SMALL³⁸ COURTYARD WAS BROKEN DOWN³⁹ SO THAT THE YARD FULLY OPENED INTO A LARGE³⁸ COURTYARD, THE USE OF THE LARGER ONE IS PERMITTED, BUT THAT OF THE SMALLER ONE IS FORBIDDEN BECAUSE THE GAP IS REGARDED AS A DOORWAY TO THE FORMER.⁴⁰ Is it not possible to assume', Rabbah objected, 'that the breach occurred while it was yet day?'⁴¹ Said Abaye to him, Do not say: Master, 'It is possible to assume' but rather, 'It is 'certain that the breach occurred while it was yet day', for, surely, it was the Master himself who stated: 'I enquired of R. Huna and also of Rab Judah as to what was the law where an 'erub was laid in reliance on a certain door and that door was blocked up, or on a certain window and that window was stopped up? And each replied: Since permission for that Sabbath was once granted the permissibility continues until the conclusion of the day'.⁴² It was stated: If a wall between two courtyards⁴³ collapsed,⁴⁴ Rab ruled, it is permitted to move objects within four cubits only,⁴⁵ but Samuel ruled:

- (1) To constitute a single partition of the height of ten handbreadths which is the minimum height prescribed for an enclosure round a private domain.
 - (2) Lit., 'until'.
 - (3) Of ten handbreadths.
 - (4) On the side at which it adjoins the lower courtyard.
 - (5) One for each courtyard.
 - (6) For the two jointly,
 - (7) The height of the upper courtyard or the joint height of the embankment and partition.
 - (8) Cf. supra n. 12; which shows that an embankment and a partition are reckoned together as one unit of heights. How then could R. Hisda maintain that they are not combined?
 - (9) V. marg. glos. Cur. edd. in parenthesis, 'Rab'.
 - (10) That the heights of the embankment and the partition may be combined into one unit of ten handbreadths.
 - (11) The tenants of the upper courtyard, however, cannot see the full height; and it is on account of them that R. Hisda gave his ruling.
 - (12) Who can see a valid partition between their courtyard and the upper one.
 - (13) For themselves only.
 - (14) For the two jointly.
 - (15) Since the valid partition of the lower courtyard forms a division between the two courtyards.
 - (16) Jointly.
 - (17) Being exposed to the lower courtyard, having no valid partition on its side to separate it.
 - (18) Lit., '(one of) two'.
 - (19) MS. M., 'Raba'.
 - (20) The Baraitha cited.
 - (21) Rising on the embankment and forming a partition of ten handbreadths high round the upper courtyard.
 - (22) In the center of the partition.
 - (23) And it was in this gap, which may be regarded as a doorway, that the partition on the embankment was only five handbreadths high. The upper courtyard is thus separated from the lower one by both a valid partition and a doorway while the latter is separated from it completely by a valid partition. Hence the ruling that one imposes no restrictions on the other and that two separate erubs must be prepared. A joint 'erub, however, is not allowed on account of the valid partition of the lower one.
 - (24) This, according to the explanation of Rabbah b. 'Ulla who assumed the partition to be ten handbreadths high above the embankment, must obviously refer to the partition at the 'gap'.
 - (25) Since the gap represented a valid doorway between the two courtyards.
 - (26) The Baraitha cited.
 - (27) Lit., 'where the lower one was broken in its fullness into the upper one', the width of the upper one not exceeding ten cubits, so that the tenants of the latter, in the absence of a joint 'erub, impose restrictions on the tenants of the former.
 - (28) With those of the upper one (cf. prev. n.).
 - (29) Lit., '(one of) two'.

- (30) With the tenants of the lower courtyard.
- (31) Lit., 'and when it was taught'.
- (32) To form a height of ten handbreadths, the minimum prescribed for an enclosure around a private domain.
- (33) MS.M. and Bah have different readings.
- (34) Var. lec., Oshaia (MS. M.).
- (35) Lit., 'dwellers that come
- (36) If, for instance, a wall between two courtyards collapsed and the tenants of one courtyard arrived so to speak at the other.
- (37) Hanina (MS.M.), Hinena (Bah).
- (38) V. relevant note on our Mishnah.
- (39) This is now assumed to have occurred on the Sabbath.
- (40) Which shows that restrictions are imposed.
- (41) Of the Sabbath eve (cf. supra n. 10).
- (42) Supra 17a q.v. notes.
- (43) Which had no common door and the tenants of which did not join in a single 'erub for the two courtyards.
- (44) on the Sabbath.
- (45) Because the tenants of the courtyards impose restrictions upon another despite the fact that when the Sabbath began each group of tenants was allowed the use of its own courtyard.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 94a

The tenants on either side¹ may move their objects² to the very foundation of the wall.³ The ruling of Rab, however, was not explicitly stated but was arrived at by implication. For Rab and Samuel were once sitting in a certain courtyard when a parting wall⁴ collapsed.⁵ 'Take a cloak', said Samuel to the people, 'and spread it across,⁶ and Rab turned away his face.⁷ 'If Abba⁸ objects', Samuel told them, 'take his girdle and the with it'.⁹ Now according to Samuel's view, what need was there for this,⁹ seeing that he ruled: 'The tenants on either side may move their objects to the very foundation of the wall'? — Samuel did that merely for the sake of privacy. If Rab, however, held that this was forbidden,¹⁰ why did he not say so to him?¹¹ The place was under Samuel's jurisdiction. If so, why did he turn away his face? — In order that it might not be said that he held the same opinion as Samuel.¹² MISHNAH. IF THERE WAS A BREACH IN A WALL BETWEEN A COURTYARD¹³ AND A PUBLIC DOMAIN, ANY MAN WHO BRINGS ANY OBJECT FROM THE LATTER INTO A PRIVATE DOMAIN OR FROM A PRIVATE DOMAIN INTO IT IS GUILTY OF AN OFFENCE;¹⁴ SO R. ELIEZER. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: WHETHER A MAN CARRIED AN OBJECT FROM IT INTO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN¹⁵ OR FROM THE PUBLIC DOMAIN INTO IT HE IS EXEMPT¹⁶ BECAUSE IT HAS THE SAME STATUS AS A KARMELITH.¹⁷

GEMARA. As to R. Eliezer, does it¹⁸ become a public domain because there was a breach between it and the public domain? Yes; R. Eliezer follows his view, it having been taught: R. Judah citing R. Eliezer said: If the public chose a path for themselves,¹⁹ that which they have chosen is theirs.²⁰ But this cannot be right,²¹ for did not R. Giddal citing Rab explain: This applies only to a case where their path had been lost²² in that field?²³ And Should you reply that here also²⁴ it is a case where their path²⁵ had been lost in that courtyard,²⁶ surely, [it could be retorted], did not R. Hanina state, 'The dispute²⁷ referred to [all the courtyard] as far as the position of its walls'?²⁸ Read: The dispute concerned only the position of the wall.²⁹ And if you prefer I might reply: Their dispute²⁷ refers to the status of the sides of a public road, R. Eliezer holding that³⁰ the sides of a public road are like the public road while the Rabbis³¹ hold that the sides of a public road are not like the public road. Why then did they not express their difference of opinion in respect of the sides of public roads generally? — If they had expressed their difference of view in respect of the sides of public roads generally it might have been assumed that the Rabbis; differed from R. Eliezer only³² where there were border-stones³³ but where there were no border-stones they agree with him,³⁴ hence we were informed³⁵ [that even in the latter case they also differ from him]. But did he not say: FROM IT?³⁶ — As the Rabbis used the expression FROM IT he also used a similar expression. As to the Rabbis however, how is it that³⁷ R. Eliezer speaks of the sides of a public road and they retort to him FROM IT?³⁶ — It is this that³⁸ the Rabbis said to R. Eliezer: You agree with us, do you not, that where a man moved an object from it into a public domain or from a public domain into it he is exempt because it is a karmelith, well the same law should apply to³⁹ the sides⁴⁰ also. And R. Eliezer?⁴¹ There⁴² not many people tread on the spot but here⁴³ they do. MISHNAH. IF A BREACH WAS MADE⁴⁴ IN TWO SIDES OF A COURTYARD TOWARDS A PUBLIC DOMAIN, AND SO ALSO IF A BREACH WAS MADE IN TWO SIDES OF A HOUSE, OR IF THE CROSS-BEAM⁴⁵ OR SIDE-POST⁴⁵ OF AN ALLEY WAS REMOVED, THE OCCUPIERS ARE PERMITTED THEIR USE FOR THAT SABBATH BUT FORBIDDEN ON FUTURE SABBATHS; SO R. JUDAH. R. JOSE RULED: IF⁴⁶ THEY ARE PERMITTED THEIR USE ON THAT SABBATH THEY ARE ALSO PERMITTED ON FUTURE SABBATHS AND IF⁴⁶ THEY ARE FORBIDDEN (IN FUTURE SABBATHS THEY ARE ALSO FORBIDDEN ON THAT SABBATH.

GEMARA. With what kind of breach do we deal?⁴⁷ If it be suggested: With one that was not wider than ten cubits,⁴⁸ wherein, then, [it may be objected, does a breach] in one side differ [in such a case from breaches in two sides? Is it] that it⁴⁹ may be regarded as a⁵⁰ doorway, [should not breaches]⁴⁹ in two sides also be regarded as doorways?⁵¹ If, however, the breach spoken of⁴⁷ was⁵² wider than ten cubits, [should not the same restrictioss⁵³ apply] even where it was only in one side? Rab replied: The fact is [that the breach spoken off was] not wider than ten cubits⁵⁴

(1) Lit., 'this . . . and this'.

(2) Even such as were in the houses when the Sabbath began.

(3) Unlike Rab, he holds that once the movement of objects in a certain place has been permitted when the Sabbath began the permissibility remains in force until the conclusion of the day.

(4) Lit., 'which (was) between between'.

(5) And the courtyard in which they sat was thus exposed to the adjoining courtyard.

(6) To form a partition at the gap, in order that the tenants of the adjoining courtyards shall not impose restrictions upon each other.

(7) As a mark of his displeasure. Presumably because in his opinion the collapse of the wall, which exposed the courtyards to one another, caused also the respective tenants to impose restrictions upon each other, in consequence of which it was forbidden to move the cloak from its place to the gap.

(8) This was Rab's proper name. 'Rab' ('great', 'master') was a title of distinction.

(9) The cloak, to secure the partition. This he said in disregard of Rab's disapproval.

(10) Cf. supra n. 10.

(11) To Samuel.

(12) Cur. edd. in parenthesis, 'and he withdrew from his ruling'. MS.M., 'and it was (done) with his approval'.

(13) Lit., a courtyard that was broken into'; the breach extending along the full length of the courtyard, or being no more than ten handbreadths wide.

(14) Because the breach changes the status of the courtyard from that of a private into that of a public domain. This will be further discussed in the Gemara infra.

(15) Or a private' domain.

(16) Ex post facto; ab initio, however, this is forbidden.

(17) Which is neither a public, nor a private domain.

(18) The courtyard spoken of in our Mishnah.

(19) Even though it ran through private property and the land-owner's consent had not been obtained.

(20) B.B. 100a, lit., 'chosen'; and the owner of the property may not close up the path. As the public here acquire the path so do they acquire the courtyard.

(21) Lit., 'I am not'.

(22) It being impossible to ascertain its exact position.

(23) B.B. 100a. While all individual in such a case cannot make the choice without the land-owner's consent or the authorization of a court, the public are entitled to make their own choice. This, however, does not prove that they can also appropriate a courtyard in which they have lost nothing.

(24) The courtyard spoken of in our Mishnah.

(25) Lit., 'a path to her'.

(26) Sc. the exact position of the former wall having been lost the men of the public domain claimed that their domain extended beyond the limits which the tenants of the courtyard claim as the original position of the wall, and it is this spot, not all the courtyard, that R. Eliezer regards as a public domain.

(27) Between R. Eliezer and the Sages in our Mishnah.

(28) Thus including the entire courtyard and not merely the original position of the broken wall.

(29) Instead of 'ad ('until', 'as far as') read 'at ('concerning').

(30) Though the position of the wall is known.

(31) THE SAGES.

(32) Lit., 'when do the Rabbis differ . . . these words'.

(33) Or 'stakes' that formed a division between the public domain proper and the wall. This space being frequented by fewer people can only be regarded, as a karmelith.

(34) That the public domain extends to the very walls.

(35) By the form of the dispute in our Mishnah.

(36) Lit., 'from its midst', which obviously refers to the entire courtyard and not merely to the position of the former wall.

(37) According to the explanation here given.

(38) Lit., 'thus'.

(39) Lit., '(there should be) no difference'.

(40) Of the public road.

(41) How, in view of the objection, does he justify his view?

(42) Within the courtyard.

(43) On the side of public road.

(44) On the Sabbath.

(45) Sc, MS.M. and Rashi (cf. Tosaf. supra 17a and Rashi a.l.). Cur. edd. use the plural.

(46) This is explained in the Gemara infra.

(47) In our Mishnah where the BREACH is assumed to have been made IN TWO SIDES.

(48) Lit., 'within ten'.

(49) Being no wider than ten cubits.

(50) Lit., 'that one says'.

(51) Why then are restrictions imposed?

(52) Lit., 'but'.

(53) That are imposed when the breach was made in two sides.

(54) Lit., 'within ten'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 94b

but it was one, for instance, that occurred¹ in a corner² where people make no doors.³

AND SO ALSO IF A BREACH WAS MADE IN TWO SIDES OF A HOUSE. Wherein does a breach in one side⁴ differ [from breaches in two sides]?⁵ Is it in that it may be assumed⁶ that the edge of the ceiling is deemed to extend downward and to close the gap, why should it not be assumed in the case of breaches in two sides also that the edge of the beam extends and closes them up? — At the school of Rab it was explained on the authority of Rab: This is a case of a house whose breaches, for instance, occurred in a corner⁷ and whose ceiling was lying in a slanting position so that it cannot be said that the edge of the ceiling extends downwards and closes them up.⁸

Samuel, however, replied: The breach⁹ might have been even wider than ten cubits. If so, should not the same restrictions apply even where the breach was made in one side?¹⁰ — [This¹¹ was not mentioned] on account of the house.¹² But does not the same difficulty arise in respect of a house: Wherein does a breach in one side differ [from breaches in two sides]? If it is in the assumption that the edge of the ceiling descends downward and closes the breach, why should not the same assumption, that the edge of the ceiling extends downwards and closes up the breaches, be made where these breaches occurred in two sides? Furthermore, it may be objected, does Samuel at all uphold the principle that the edge of a ceiling is deemed to descend downwards to close a gap,¹³ seeing that it was stated: 'if an exedra was situated in a valley it is, Rab ruled, permitted to move objects within all its interior, but Samuel ruled: Objects may be moved within four cubits only'¹⁴ — This is no difficulty: He does not uphold the principle¹⁵ in respect of four walls¹⁶ only¹⁷ but in respect of three walls¹⁸ he does.¹⁹ Does not the first difficulty,²⁰ at any rate, remain?²¹ — As at the school of Rab it was explained in the name of Rab, 'This is a case of a house whose breaches, for instance, occurred in a corner and whose ceiling was in a slanting position',²² so here also²³ it may be explained: This is a case of a house whose breaches, for instance, occurred in a corner and whose ceiling presented²⁴ a four sided breach.²⁵

Samuel does not give the same explanation as Rab²⁶ since it was not stated that the ceiling was slanting.²⁷ Rab, on the other hand, does not give the same explanation as Samuel,²⁸ for in that case²⁹ the house would in this respect have been in the same legal position as an exedra,³⁰ and Rab follows his view that³¹ it is permitted to move objects in all the interior of an exedra, for it was stated: If an exedra, was situated in a valley, Rab ruled, it is permitted to move objects within all its interior; but Samuel ruled: Objects may be moved within four cubits only. Rab ruled that it was permitted to move objects in all its interior because we apply the principle: The edge of the ceiling descends and closes up. But Samuel ruled that objects might be moved within four cubits only because we do not apply the principle: The edge of the ceiling descends and closes up.³²

[Where a breach was not wider than] ten cubits³³ there is no divergence of opinion between them.³⁴ They only³⁵ differ where [the breach was] wider than ten cubits. Others read: Where it was wider than ten cubits there is no divergence of opinion between them,³⁶ and they only differ [where it was not wider than] ten cubits. With reference, however, to Rab Judah's ruling

(1) Not in two walls that were opposite each other.

(2) At which two adjacent walls meet.

(3) Lit., 'because people do not make a door in a corner'. As the breach cannot in consequence be treated as a door our Mishnah imposed the restrictions mentioned.

(4) Where no restrictions have been imposed.

(5) Where our Mishnah imposes restrictions.

(6) Where only one side has a breach.

(7) Where no doors are made and where the breaches cannot be treated as doorways.

(8) Cf. supra 25b. V., however, Tosaf. a.l.

(9) In the two sides of the courtyard spoken of in our Mishnah.

(10) Why then did our Mishnah speak only of TWO SIDES.

(11) A breach in one side of a courtyard.

(12) That was dealt with in the same context. As in the latter case where a breach in one wall imposes no restrictions (on the principle of the downward extension of the beam which virtually closes up the breach) two sides had to be spoken of, two sides were spoken of in the first case also.

(13) That was wider than ten cubits, as has just been explained to be the case according to Samuel, with the breach dealt with in our Mishnah.

(14) . Supra 25a, which shows that the principle of the downward extension of a ceiling is not upheld by Samuel.

(15) Of the downward extension of a ceiling.

(16) Sc. where the ceiling has to supply the place of four walls, as is the case in an exedra that has only a roof resting on poles.

(17) Lit., 'when does he not have? In four'.

- (18) And much more so in that of two.
- (19) Hence his view that where a house had a breach in one wall only the edge of its ceiling is deemed to close it.
- (20) 'Why should not the principle of the downward extension of the ceiling be applied where a breach was made in two walls?'
- (21) Rab's answer given supra, that the ceiling was slanting, cannot be given by Samuel, since the latter holds that the breach dealt with in our Mishnah 'might have been even wider than ten cubits', and such a wide gap which cannot be treated as a doorway would have caused the same restrictions even if it had occurred in one wall only.
- (22) I.e., as Rab explained that the ceiling was different from ordinary ones though no specific mention of this fact was made in our Mishnah.
- (23) According to Samuel's view.
- (24) Though this is rather unusual (cf. supra n. 5).
- (25) The breach having left a ceiling of this shape.
- (26) That the breach referred to in our Mishnah was not wider than ten cubits and that the ceiling was in a slanting position.
- (27) And ordinary ceilings are flat. Breaches, on the other hand, may well assume any shape.
- (28) That the breach in the walls of the house might be wider than ten cubits and that the ceiling presented a four sided breach.
- (29) That four walls had to be supplied on the principle of the downward extension of a ceiling.
- (30) Where also four walls have to be supplied on the same principle.
- (31) Lit., 'who said'.
- (32) Supra 25a q.v. notes.
- (33) Lit., 'within ten'.
- (34) Rab and Samuel. Both agree that no restrictions are to be imposed, since the gap may be treated as a doorway and the question of the principle of the downward extension of the edge of the ceiling does not arise (Rashi. Cf., however, Tosaf. a.l.).
- (35) Lit., 'when do they'.
- (36) Cf. supra n. 3. Both agree that restrictions are imposed.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 95a

that a cross-beam¹ of the width of four handbreadths² effects permissibility³ in a ruin⁴ and that of R. Nahman who, citing Rabbah b. Abbuha, ruled that a cross-beam of the width of four handbreadths⁵ effects permissibility⁶ in the case of water,⁷ whose view is represented there? According to the version which reads⁸ 'where [a breach was not wider than] ten cubits there is no divergence of opinion' [these⁹ would be a case where the cross-beam was no longer than] ten cubits and would represent the unanimous opinion; while according to the version which reads,¹⁰ 'They only differ where it was not wider than ten cubits', these¹¹ would represent the view of Rab.

Must it be assumed that Abaye and Raba¹² differ on the same principles as those on which Rab and Samuel differed? For it was stated: If an exedra¹³ that had side-posts¹⁴ was covered with boughs,¹⁵ it¹⁶ is valid as a sukkah;¹⁶ but if it had no side-posts, Abaye ruled, it is still valid while Raba ruled¹⁷ It is invalid. Abaye ruled that it was valid because the edge of the ceiling is deemed to descend and to close up,¹⁷ while Raba ruled that it was invalid because he does not uphold the principle that the edge of the ceiling is deemed to descend and to close up.¹⁸ Now must it be assumed that Abaye is of the same view as Rab while Raba is¹⁹ of the same view as Samuel? According to the view of Samuel there is no divergence of opinion between them.¹⁹ They differ only on the view of Rab. Abaye, of course, holds the same view as Rab, while Raba²⁰ maintains that Ra+ upheld his view only there²¹ because the walls²² were expressly made for the exedra, but not here where the walls²³ were not expressly made for the sukkah.²⁴ R. JOSE RULED: IF THEY ARE PERMITTED. The question was raised: Did R. Jose intend to add restrictions²⁵ or to relax them?²⁶ — R. Shesheth replied: To add restrictions; and so too said R. Johanan: To add restrictions. So it was also taught: R. Jose ruled: As they are forbidden on future Sabbaths so are they forbidden on that Sabbath.

It was stated: R. Hiyya b. Joseph²⁷ ruled: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose, but Samuel ruled: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah. But could Samuel have given such a ruling seeing that we have learnt: 'R. Judah ruled: This applies only to 'erubs of Sabbath limits but in the case of 'erubs of courtyards one may be prepared for a person irrespective of whether he is aware of it or not, since a benefit may be conferred on a man in his absence but no disability may be imposed on him in his absence';²⁸ and in connection with this Rab Judah citing Samuel stated: 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah; and, furthermore, wherever R. Judah taught a law concerning 'erub the halachah is in agreement with him';²⁹ and when R. Hana of Bagdad asked Rab Judah, 'Did Samuel say this even in respect of an alley whose cross-beam or side-post has been taken away?' he replied: 'Concerning 'erubs did I tell you, but not concerning partitions'?³⁰ R. Anan replied: It was explained to me by Samuel that one statement³¹ referred to a courtyard³² in which a breach was made towards a karmelith³³ while the other³⁴ referred to one in which a breach was made towards a public domain.³⁵ MISHNAH. IF ONE BUILDS AN UPPER ROOM ON THE TOP OF TWO HOUSES³⁶ AND IN THE CASE OF VIADUCTS³⁷ THE MOVEMENT OF OBJECTS UNDER THESE ON THE SABBATH IS PERMITTED;³⁸ SO R. JUDAH. BUT THE SAGES FORBID THIS. R. JUDAH MOREOVER RULED: AN 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED FOR AN ALLEY THAT IS A THOROUGHFARE;³⁹ BUT THE SAGES FORBID THIS.

GEMARA. Rabbah stated: Do not presume that R. Judah's reason⁴⁰ is⁴¹ that Pentateuchally two walls⁴² are sufficient but rather that⁴¹ the edge of ceiling⁴³ is deemed to descend downwards and to enclose the space below.

Abaye raised an objection against him: 'A more lenient rule than this did R. Judah lay down: If a man had two houses on the two sides respectively of a public domain he may construct one side-post on one side of any of the houses, and another on the other side, or one cross-beam on one side of any of the houses and another on the other side, and then he may move things about in the space between them; but they said to him: A public domain cannot be provided with an 'erub in such a manner!⁴⁴ — The other replied: Front that ruling⁴⁵ your contention is justified,⁴⁶ from this one,⁴⁷ however, you cannot derive it. R. Ashi observed: A deduction from the wording of our Mishnah also justified [Rabbah's explanation], since it was stated: R. JUDAH MOREOVER RULED: AN 'ERUB MAY BE PREPARED FOR AN ALLEY THAT IS A THOROUGHFARE; BUT THE SAGES FORBID THIS. Now if you grant his⁴⁸ reason⁴⁹ to be that the edge of the ceiling is deemed to descend and to enclose the space below, one can well see why the expression of MOREOVER⁵⁰ was used; but if you maintain that his reason⁴⁹ is⁵¹ that Pentateuchally two walls are sufficient, what⁵² is the justification for the expression MOREOVER?⁵³ This is conclusive.⁵⁴

CHAPTER X

MISHNAH. IF A MAN FINDS TEFILLIN⁵⁵ HE SHALL BRING THEM IN,⁵⁶ ONE PAIR AT A TIME.⁵⁷ R. GAMALIEL RULED: TWO PAIRS AT A TIME.⁵⁸ THIS APPLIES TO OLD ONES⁵⁹ BUT IN THE CASE OF NEW ONES⁶⁰ HE IS EXEMPT.⁶¹ IF HE FOUND THEM⁶² ARRANGED IN PACKETS⁶³ OR TIED UP IN BUNDLES⁶³ HE SHALL WAIT BY THEM UNTIL IT IS DARK AND THEN BRING THEM IN.

(1) That was supported on two stakes, one at either end.

(2) That lay on its wide side. If the width was less, the partitions enclosing it, since the space enclosed is less than four handbreadths, would have had no validity.

(3) Of the movement of objects under it; because its four edges are deemed to descend and to form four walls.

(4) Though fully exposed to a public domain.

(5) That lay on its wide side across the mouth of a cistern between two courtyards.

- (6) In the use of the water. The tenants of both courtyards may freely use the water as if a proper division had actually separated the water of the one courtyard from the water of the other.
- (7) Supra 86a.
- (8) Lit., 'which you stated'.
- (9) The rulings of Rab Judah and R. Nahman.
- (10) Lit., 'which you stated'.
- (11) The rulings of Rab Judah and R. Nahman.
- (12) In the dispute that follows.
- (13) With only two walls that met each other in the shape of an L (v. Tosaf. supra 93a).
- (14) Each attached to the end of either wall and less than three handbreadths but no less than one handbreadth wide.
- (15) Or any material that was suitable for the roof of a sukkah.
- (16) Since either side-post might be deemed to be extended horizontally and to form a third wall. A Sukkah that has three walls is valid.
- (17) The side where there was no proper wall.
- (18) Cf. supra 93a, Suk. 18b.
- (19) Abaye and Raba; sc. even Abaye must admit that Samuel who did not accept, in the case of the Sabbath, the principle of the downward extension of the edges of an exedra (though these were expressly made for that structure) could not accept that principle in the case of a sukkah (where these were not originally intended to form a part of the sukkah).
- (20) Whose view seems to differ from that of Rab.
- (21) Lit., 'until here, Rab did not say there, but'.
- (22) I.e., the beams that form the edges of the roof of the exedra and that are deemed to extend downwards to make up walls.
- (23) Cf. prev. n.
- (24) Although in the case of proper walls it is not necessary for them to be expressly made for the sukkah, imaginary ones whose legal existence depends on a principle which is in itself a relaxation of the law cannot be regarded as valid by allowing a further relaxation of the law.
- (25) I.e., did he, by his comparison, intend to forbid the use of the courtyard on the same Sabbath as it would presumably be forbidden on future Sabbaths?
- (26) To permit its use on future 'Sabbaths as it was presumably permitted on the same Sabbath?
- (27) MS.M., 'Ashi. Bah inserts, 'in the name of' Rab'.
- (28) Supra 46b, 81b, q.v. notes.
- (29) Supra 81b.
- (30) Loc. cit. q.v. notes. Now, since R. Judah in our Mishnah deals with a question concerning partitions, how, in view of the reply Rab Judah gave to R. Hana, could it be maintained that Samuel pronounced the halachah here to be in agreement with R. Judah's ruling?
- (31) That the halachah agrees with R. Judah.
- (32) Lit., 'here'.
- (33) The movement of objects from a karmelith into another domain or from the latter into the former is only Rabbinically forbidden. As no Pentateuchal law would be infringed, even if an object were carried from the courtyard into the karmelith or vice versa, Samuel adopted the lenient rule of R. Judah in a case where the courtyard was a permitted domain when the Sabbath began.
- (34) That in the case of partitions the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah.
- (35) Where (cf. supra n. 9) a Pentateuchal law might be infringed.
- (36) Situated on opposite sides of a public domain the road passing under the floor of the upper room.
- (37) Lit., 'bridges that have a thoroughfare (beneath them)'.
- (38) Because the edges above are deemed to descend to form walls encasing the space below.
- (39) Since it has walls on two sides and two walls are Pentateuchally sufficient, v. Gemara.
- (40) For his ruling in the first clause of our Mishnah.
- (41) Lit., 'because he holds the opinion'.
- (42) The public domain and the viaduct have at least two walls on opposite sides.
- (43) Sc. the floor of the upper room or the superstructure of the viaduct.

- (44) Supra 6a q.v. notes. Now this distinctly proves that Pentateuchally two walls are sufficient. How then could Rabbah maintain that this must not be presumed to be R. Judah's reason?
- (45) The one just cited.
- (46) Lit., 'yes'.
- (47) The ruling in the first clause of our Mishnah.
- (48) R. Judah's.
- (49) For his first ruling.
- (50) I.e., even where there were no edges that could be deemed to descend (cf. Rashi's second interpretation).
- (51) Lit., , 'because he holds the opinion'.
- (52) Seeing that the ruling that follows is based on the same reason.
- (53) None whatever. Hence the support for Rabbah's explanation.
- (54) Lit., 'you hear from it'.
- (55) On the Sabbath, in a held where they are exposed to dogs or to any other misuse.
- (56) To town, into a safe place.
- (57) One on his head and one on his arm in the same manner as they are worn on weekdays.
- (58) One pair on the hand and one pair on the arm.
- (59) Sc. tefillin that show marks of wear or that have a proper knot, in which case there can be no doubt that they were proper tefillin.
- (60) Which may be assumed to be mere amulets.
- (61) Sc. he is under no obligation to pick them up and to carry them to a place of safety.
- (62) Proper tefillin.
- (63) This is explained in the Gemara infra.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 95b

IN A TIME OF DANGER,¹ HOWEVER, HE SHALL COVER THEM AND PROCEED ON HIS WAY. R. SIMEON RULED: HE SHALL PASS THEM TO HIS FELLOW AND HIS FELLOW SHALL PASS THEM TO HIS FELLOW, AND SO ON,² UNTIL THE OUTERMOST COURTYARD³ IS REACHED. THE SAME PROCEDURE IS TO BE FOLLOWED IN THE CASE OF A CHILD OF HIS.⁴ HE PASSES HIM TO HIS FELLOW AND HIS FELLOW PASSES HIM TO HIS FELLOW, AND SO ON,⁵ EVEN THOUGH THEY ARE AS MANY AS A HUNDRED MEN. R. JUDAH RULED: A MAN MAY PASS A JAR TO HIS FELLOW AND HIS FELLOW MAY PASS IT TO HIS FELLOW EVEN BEYOND THE SABBATH LIMIT.⁵ THEY,⁶ HOWEVER, SAID TO HIM: THIS MUST NOT BE MOVED FURTHER THAN THE FEET OF ITS OWNER.⁷ GEMARA. Only ONE PAIR AT A TIME,⁸ but not more. Must it then be assumed that we learned here an anonymous Mishnah that is not in agreement with R. Meir? For if it were to be maintained that it was in agreement with R. Meir [the objection would arise:] Did he not rule that a man may⁹ put on all the clothes that he can put on and he may wrap himself in all things that he can wrap round himself? For we learned: And thither¹⁰ he may carry out all the utensils he is in the habit of using, and he may put on all the clothes that he is able to put on and he may wrap himself in all things that he can wrap round himself.' But whence the proof that that¹¹ anonymous Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir? — Since in connection therewith it was stated: 'He may put on clothes and carry them out, and there¹⁰ undress himself, and then he may again put on clothes and carry them out and undress himself, and so on, even all day long; so R. Meir'. Raba replied: It¹² may be said to be in agreement even with R. Meir, for there¹³ the Rabbis have allowed a procedure¹⁴ similar to one's habit of dressing on a weekday and here¹⁵ also they have allowed a procedure similar to one's way of wearing tefillin on a weekday. There,¹³ where on a weekday a man can wear as many clothes as he desires the Rabbis have permitted him to do so also¹⁶ for the purpose of saving; but here,¹⁵ where even on a weekday a man may wear only one pair but no more he was for the purpose of saving also permitted one pair only but no more.

R. GAMALIEL RULED: TWO PAIRS AT A TIME. What is the view he upholds: If he holds that Sabbath is a time for wearing tefillin,¹⁷ a man should be permitted¹⁸ only one pair but no more; and if he holds that Sabbath is not a time for tefillin, but that for the purpose of saving them the Rabbis have permitted him to wear them in the manner of a raiment why¹⁹ should he not be permitted to wear even more than one pair? — The fact is that he holds that Sabbath is not a time for the wearing of tefillin, but when the Rabbis have permitted to wear them²⁰ in the manner of a raiment for the purpose of saving they limited that to the spot²¹ prescribed for the position of the tefillin.²² If so,²³ should not one pair only²⁴ be allowed but not more?²⁵ — R. Samuel son of R. Isaac replied: There is room enough on the head for laying two tefillin. This is a satisfactory explanation as regards those of the head; what explanations however, can be given in respect of those of the hand?²⁶ — The same as that which R. Huna gave, for R. Huna explained: Sometimes a man comes from the field with his bundle on his head when²⁷ he removes them from his head²⁸ and binds them on his arm.²⁹ It might still be contended, that R. Huna only intended that they should not be treated with disrespect;²⁸ did he, however, say that it³⁰ was the proper [manner of wearing them] so.³¹ — The explanation rather is this:³² As R. Samuel son of R. Isaac stated: ‘There is room enough on the head for laying two tefillin’ so we may here also submit: There is room enough on the hand for laying two tefillin.

It was taught at the school of Manasseh: Upon thy hand,³³ refers to the biceps muscle: between thine eyes,³³ refers to the vertex. Where is this? — At the school of R. Jannai it was stated: on the place where a child's brain pulsates.³⁴ Must it be assumed that they³⁵ differ on the principle of R. Samuel son of R. Isaac, the first Tanna disagreeing with the view³⁶ of R. Samuel son of R. Isaac³⁷ while R. Gamaliel³⁸ upholds it? No, all may hold the view of R. Samuel son of R. Isaac, but the point at issue between them³⁹ is whether the Sabbath is a time for tefillin, the first Tanna maintaining that Sabbath is a time for tefillin⁴⁰ while R. Gamaliel maintains that Sabbath is no time for tefillin.⁴¹

And if you prefer I might reply that all agree that the Sabbath is a time for tefillin,⁴² but here the point at issue between them³⁹ is whether the performance of commandments requires intention, the first Tanna holding that in order to discharge the duty of a commandment, intention is not⁴³ necessary⁴⁴ while R. Gamaliel holds that intention is⁴⁵ necessary.⁴⁶

- (1) Sc. in a time of religious persecution when it is dangerous to be seen in the vicinity of ritual objects (v. infra 97a f).
 - (2) Each person carrying the tefillin a lesser distance than four cubits.
 - (3) Of the nearest town; sc. a place of safety.
 - (4) Who was born on the Sabbath in an open field.
 - (5) Cf. supra n. 11 mut. mut.
 - (6) The Rabbis who, disagreed with him.
 - (7) Sc. beyond his Sabbath limit.
 - (8) May be carried in.
 - (9) When saving from a fire on the Sabbath.
 - (10) The nearest courtyard beyond the reach of the fire.
 - (11) Shab. 120a.
 - (12) Our Mishnah.
 - (13) Where a man is engaged in saving clothes from a fire.
 - (14) Lit., ‘made it’.
 - (15) The case of tefillin.
 - (16) On the Sabbath.
 - (17) Sc. the reason why the tefillin may be carried on the Sabbath into a place of safety is that in any case they can be worn on that day as on a weekday.
 - (18) As the commandment of tefillin requires.
 - (19) Since they are not worn in fulfilment of the commandment of tefillin.
 - (20) On the Sabbath.
 - (21) On the head between the eyes above the forehead and on the arm on the biceps muscle.
 - (22) Many pairs of tefillin cannot obviously be accommodated thereon.

- (23) That the position is limited.
- (24) Lit., 'yes'. Cur. edd. 'also' is deleted by Bah.
- (25) Why then did R. Gamaliel allow two pairs at a time?
- (26) Not all the hand surely is a suitable place for the tefillin. Why then were two tefillin allowed?
- (27) As a mark of respect for the tefillin.
- (28) So that they be not crushed by the bundle.
- (29) As in this manner one would on a weekday wear two tefillin on his arm, a similar number was also allowed on the Sabbath for the purposes of saving.
- (30) I.e., the wearing of two tefillin on one's arm.
- (31) As he did not say this, the question arises again: Why did R. Gamaliel allow two tefillin on the arm?
- (32) Lit., 'but'.
- (33) Deut. VI, 8.
- (34) Or 'is soft'.
- (35) R. Gamaliel and the first Tanna in our Mishnah.
- (36) Lit., 'he has not
- (37) Hence he allows only one pair at a time.
- (38) Who allows two pairs.
- (39) R. Gamaliel and the first Tanna in our Mishnah.
- (40) Cf. Supra p. 660, n. 10. As the commandment is performed by the wearing of one pair, only one pair at a time may be worn.
- (41) And the permissibility of carrying them into a place of safety is based on their suitability as ornaments. Hence his ruling that as ornaments two pairs at a time may also be worn.
- (42) And also, that tefillin may be regarded as an ornament that may be worn on the Sabbath in a public domain.
- (43) This is the reading according to MS.M. and Rashi's second interpretation. Cur. edd. 'is necessary'.
- (44) If, therefore, a man puts on tefillin he performs the commandment ipso facto. Consequently he may wear only one pair at a time. For, should he wear more than one pair, whatever his intention, he would be transgressing the prohibition against adding to the commandments (v. infra n. 13).
- (45) So with MS.M. and Rashi's second interpretation. Cur. edd., 'is not'.
- (46) Hence it is possible to wear two pairs of tefillin as ornaments (cf. Supra n. 8) without transgressing the prohibition against 'adding to the commandments' (cf supra n. 10).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 96a

And if you prefer I might reply that all agree that the discharge of the duty of a commandment requires no intention, but here it is the question of transgressing against the injunction of Thou shall not add,¹ that is at issue between them; the first Tanna holding that in order to commit a transgression against the injunction of Thou shall not add¹ no intention² is necessary while R. Gamaliel holds that in order to commit a transgression against the injunction of 'Thou shalt not add', intention is necessary.³ And if you prefer I might reply: If the view had been adopted that Sabbath is a time for tefillin all would have agreed that intention is unnecessary either in respect of transgression⁴ or in respect of discharging the duty,⁵ but the point at issue between them here is with reference to the transgression⁴ when a commandment is performed not at its proper time. The first Tanna holds that no intention is required⁶ while R. Gamaliel holds that to commit a transgression⁴ when a commandment is performed not at its proper time intention⁷ is necessary.³ But if so, should not even one pair be forbidden⁸ according to R. Meir?⁹ Furthermore, should not a man¹⁰ who sleeps on the eighth day¹¹ be flogged?¹² It is perfectly clear, therefore,¹³ that the proper explanation is the one originally given.¹⁴

Who is it¹⁵ that was heard to hold that Sabbath is a time for the wearing of tefillin? — R. Akiba. For it was taught:¹⁶ Thou shalt, therefore, keep this ordinance in its season from year to year,¹⁷ the term 'days'¹⁸ excludes¹⁹ nights,²⁰ 'from the days'²¹ implies: But not all days; thus excluding Sabbaths and festivals;²² so R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba said: The expression 'This ordinance' was meant to apply to the Passover [sacrifice] only.²³ With reference, however, to²⁴ what we have learnt: ‘The Paschal [sacrifice] and circumcision are positive commandments’,²⁵ must it be assumed that this²⁶ is not in agreement with the view of R. Akiba, for it were to be contended that it was in agreement with R. Akiba the objection would arise: Since he applied it²⁷ to the Passover [sacrifice] a negative precept also should be involved as R. Akiba laid down in the name of R. Ila’i for R. Abin citing R. Ila’i laid down: Wherever the expressions ‘Take heed’,²⁸ ‘Lest’ or ‘Do not’ is used a negative precept is invariably intended?²⁹ — It³⁰ may be said to be in agreement even with the view of R. Akiba, for the expression ‘Take heed’ has the force of a negative precept only where it introduces a prohibitions but where it introduces a positive commandment³¹ it has the force of a positive commandment.³² But how could R. Akiba hold that the Sabbath is a time for wearing tefillin seeing that it was taught: R. Akiba stated: As it might have been presented that a man shall wear³³ tefillin on Sabbaths and festivals, it was explicitly said in Scripture: And it shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand,³⁴ which denotes: on those days only³⁵ that require a sign;³⁶ but these,³⁷ since they themselves are a sign,³⁸ are excluded?³⁹ — It⁴⁰ represents rather the view of the following Tanna. For it was taught: If a man keeps awake at night,⁴¹ he may remove his tefillin if he wishes or, if he prefers, he may put them on;⁴² so R. Nathan. Jonathan the Kitionite ruled: Tefillin may not be worn at night. Now, since according to the view of the first Tanna the night is a proper time for the wearing of tefillin,⁴³ Sabbath also must be a proper time for the wearing of tefillin. But is it not possible that he holds that the night is a proper time for tefillin⁴⁴ but that the Sabbath nevertheless is not a time for it, since we have in fact heard R. Akiba to state that the night is a time for the tefillin and that the Sabbath is not?⁴⁵ — It⁴⁰ represents rather the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: Michal the daughter of the Kushite⁴⁶ wore tefillin and the Sages did not attempt to prevent her, and the wife of Jonah⁴⁷ attended⁴⁸ the festival pilgrimage and the Sages did not prevent her. Now since the Sages did not prevent her it is clearly evident that they hold the view that it⁴⁹ is a positive precept the performance of which is not limited to a particular time.⁵⁰ But is it not possible that he⁵¹ holds the same view

(1) All this word which I command you . . . thou shalt not add thereto (Deut. XIII, 1).

(2) To perform the commandments.

(3) V. supra p. 662, n. 12.

(4) On the injunction against adding to the commandments. Lit., ‘to transgress’.

(5) Of the commandment of tefillin. Lit., ‘and not to go out (from the obligation)’.

(6) V. supra p. 662, n. 10.

(7) To perform the commandment.

(8) Lit., ‘also not’; since by wearing tefillin on the Sabbath, which is an improper time for that commandment, one adds the performance of the precept on the Sabbath to that of the weekdays.

(9) Sc. the first Tanna whose view, as mentioned Supra, is in agreement with that of R. Meir.

(10) Since it is maintained that the performance of a commandment at an improper time is deemed to be a transgression against the prohibition of adding to the commandments even where the act of performance was not intended to be a fulfillment of the commandment.

(11) Of the festival of Tabernacles. Pentateuchally the sukkah is to be used for seven days only.

(12) According to the submission here he should. As in fact, however, it is not only allowed to sleep in the sukkah on the eighth day but also, in accordance with a Rabbinical enactment, obligatory, how could the last reply be maintained?

(13) Lit., ‘but’.

(14) That the point at issue is the question whether Sabbath is a time for the wearing of tefillin or not. (For an explanation of the use of the Sukkah, and the manner of using it on the eighth day of Tabernacles v. Rashi a.l.).

(15) Among the Tannas, who might be presumed to be the first Tanna of our Mishnah.

(16) Men. 36b.

(17) Miyamim yamimah (Ex. XIII, 10). This verse forms a part of one of the four sections of the Pentateuch that are enclosed in the tefillin.

(18) Yamim (here rendered ‘year’).

(19) Lit., ‘and not’.

- (20) Sc. that tefillin are to be worn only in the day time but not at night.
- (21) Miyamim (here rendered 'from year'), the 'mi' ('from') implying 'some of'.
- (22) On which tefillin may not be worn.
- (23) Spoken of earlier in the context (Ex. XIII. 6ff): not to the tefillin. Thus it has been shown that as regards the wearing of tefillin R. Akiba, unlike R. Jose the Galilean, excludes neither nights nor Sabbaths and festivals.
- (24) Lit., 'and but that'.
- (25) Ker. 2a.
- (26) The ruling that the Passover Sacrifice is only a positive commandment and the transgression of it does not, therefore, involve any of the penalties associated with a negative precept.
- (27) The text: 'Thou shalt, therefore, keep' (Ex. XIII, 10).
- (28) Hishshamer, of the same root as weshamarta ('And thou shalt, therefore, keep') which R. Akiba applied to the Passover.
- (29) Lit., 'it is only'.
- (30) The ruling that the Passover sacrifice is only a positive commandment and the transgression of it does not, therefore, involve any of the penalties associated with a negative precept.
- (31) As in Ex. XIII, 10.
- (32) Hence the ruling in the Mishnah of Ker. 2a. Lit., 'take heed of a "not" is not; take heed of a "do" is do'.
- (33) Lit., 'lay', sc. on the arm and head.
- (34) Ex. XIII, 9, emphasis on 'sign'.
- (35) Are tefillin to be worn.
- (36) To indicate Israel's adherence to the laws of God.
- (37) Sabbaths and festivals.
- (38) Cf. Ex. XXXI, 13: For it (sc. the Sabbath and so also either holy days) is a sign between me and you. The fact that Israel observes the holy days is in itself sufficient proof of their adherence to the divine commandments.
- (39) Men. 36b. How then could the ruling of the first Tanna in our Mishnah (which, as has been explained supra, assumed the Sabbath to be a time for the wearing of tefillin) be attributed to R. Akiba?
- (40) The first ruling in our Mishnah.
- (41) So that, unlike a man asleep, he is able to take proper care of his tefillin.
- (42) He is not transgressing thereby the prohibition against adding to the commandments, since Pentateuchally the night also is a time for the wearing of tefillin. The Rabbinical enactment against wearing them at night is merely a precaution against possible disrespect to them during sleep.
- (43) From which it is obvious that he does not apply Ex. XIII, 10 (which excludes the nights as well as Sabbaths and festivals) to the commandment of tefillin but to that of the Passover.
- (44) Since he applies Ex. XIII, 10, to the Passover and not to tefillin.
- (45) As was deduced supra from Ex. XIII, 9.
- (46) Sc. Saul who was so described (cf. M.K. 16b).
- (47) The son of Amittai, the prophet.
- (48) Lit., 'was going up to'.
- (49) Tefillin.
- (50) But may be performed at all times including the nights. Sabbaths and festivals. Had its performance been limited to particular times women would have been exempt from the duty of keeping it and Michal who would be guilty of adding to the commandments would have been required by the Sages to abandon her practice.
- (51) The author of this Baraita.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 96b

as R. Jose who ruled: It is optional for women to lay their hands upon an offering?¹ For were you not to say so,² how is it that Jonah's wife attended the festival pilgrimage and the Sages did not prevent her, seeing that there is no one who contends that the observance of³ a festival is not a positive precept the performance of which is limited to a particular time? You must consequently admit that he holds it⁴ to be optional;² could it not then here also⁵ be said to be optional?⁶ — It⁷ represents rather the view of the following Tanna. For it was taught: If tefillin are found⁸ they are to be brought in, one pair at a time, irrespective of whether the person who brings them in is a man or a woman, and irrespective of whether the tefillin were new or old; so R. Meir. R. Judah forbids this in the case of new ones⁹ but permits it in that of old ones. Now since their dispute is confined to the question of¹⁰ new and old while¹¹ in respect of the woman there is no divergence of opinion¹² it may be concluded that it⁵ is a positive precept the performance of which is not restricted to a particular time, women being subject to the obligations of such precepts. But is it not possible that he holds the same view as R. Jose who stated: It is optional for women to lay their hands upon an offering?¹³ — This cannot be entertained at all, Öince neither R. Meir holds the same view as R. Jose nor does R. Judah hold the same view as R. Jose. ‘Neither R. Meir holds the same view as R. Jose’, since we learned: ‘Children¹⁴ are not to be prevented from blowing¹⁵ the shofar’;¹⁶ from which it follows that women are to be prevented;¹⁷ and any anonymous Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir.¹⁸ ‘Nor does R. Judah hold the same view as R. Jose’, since it was taught: Speak unto the children of Israel ...¹⁹ and he shall lay,²⁰ only the sons of Israel ‘shall lay’ but not the daughters of Israel. R. Jose and R. Simeon ruled: It is optional for women to lay. Now who is the author of all anonymous statement in the Sifra?²¹ R. Judah.²²

R. Eleazar said: If a man found blue wool in the street, and it was in the shape of straps.²³ it is unfit²⁴ but if it was in the shape of threads it is fit. Wherein, however, do straps differ?²⁵ In that it may be assumed that they were dyed for the purpose of being used for the manufacture of a cloak? But then, might it not be assumed in the case of threads also that they were spun for the purpose of [weaving] a cloak [with them]? — This is a case where they were twisted.²⁶ But even where they were twisted might it not be assumed that they were doubled for the purpose of being inserted in the border of a cloak? — This is a case where they were cut,²⁷ since people would not take so much trouble²⁸ with them.

Raba observed:²⁹ Does anyone go to the trouble of making all amulet in the shape of tefillin? Yet³⁰ we have learnt: THIS APPLIES TO OLD ONES BUT IN THE CASE OF NEW ONES³¹ HE IS EXEMPT!³² R. ZERA said to his son Ahabah, go out and teach them:³³ If a man found blue wool in the street, it is unfit³⁴ if it was in the shape of straps,³⁵ but if it was in the shape of cut threads it is fit³⁴ because no one would take unnecessary trouble.³⁶ ‘And’, retorted Raba, ‘because Ahabah the son of R. Zera taught it has he, forsooth, hung jewels³⁷ upon it?’³⁸ Have we not in fact learnt: THIS APPLIES TO OLD ONES BUT IN THE CASE OF NEW ONES³⁹ HE IS EXEMPT?’⁴⁰ The fact, however, is, explained Raba, that the question whether one does, or does not take unnecessary trouble is a point at issue between Tannas. For it was taught: If tefillin are found⁴¹ they are to be brought in, one pair at a time, irrespective of whether the person who brings them is a man or a woman

(1) Cf. Lev. 1, 4; though the commandment was given to men only (cf. ibid. 2).

(2) That women may perform. If they wish, the commandments that were addressed to the men.

(3) Lit., ‘is there one who says (that)’.

(4) Festival pilgrimage.

(5) Tefillin.

(6) And men too may wear them whenever they wish.

(7) The first ruling in our Mishnah.

(8) On the Sabbath.

(9) Which might be mere amulets.

(10) Lit., ‘until here they only differ in’.

(11) Lit., ‘but’.

(12) Both agreeing that she may wear them on the Sabbath and so bring them in.

(13) Cf. n. 3. Being optional its performance does not involve a transgression against the prohibition of adding to the commandments, while the carrying of them on the Sabbath is permitted on the ground that they are ornaments.

(14) Though they are exempt from the obligation of the blowing of the shofar.

- (15) On the New Year festival, as an exercise and training practice.
- (16) R.H. 33a.
- (17) In order that their act should not appear as an 'addition to the commandments'.
- (18) It must be obvious, therefore, that R. Meir disagrees with R. Jose.
- (19) Lev. 1, 2.
- (20) Ibid. 4.
- (21) The source of the teaching first cited.
- (22) He too is thus in disagreement with R. Jose.
- (23) Combed and dyed; since it is possible that the dyeing was not done with the intention, and for the purpose of using the wool for zizith (v. Glos.). The threads for the zizith must be spun and dyed for the purpose of using them in the fulfilment of the commandment.
- (24) For zizith.
- (25) From threads.
- (26) Such threads are not used in the weaving of a cloak.
- (27) Into short lengths, which make them suitable for zizith but quite unfit for use in the border of a cloak.
- (28) To tie them together and then to use them for a border instead of one long thread.
- (29) An objection against the ruling under discussion.
- (30) Lit., 'that'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 97a

or whether the tefillin were new¹ or old;² so R. Meir. R. Judah forbids this in the case of new ones but permits it in that of old ones. It is quite clear, therefore, that one Master³ is of the opinion that a man does take unnecessary trouble,⁴ while the other Master⁵ holds that he does not.

(Mnemonic: Shizi 'azbi.)⁶ Now, however, that the father of Samuel son of R. Isaac learned: 'Old ones are all those that have straps which are tied into a knot,⁷ while new ones are such as have straps that are not tied into a knot,⁷ all might be assumed to agree⁸ that no man would take unnecessary trouble.⁹ But why should not one fasten them¹⁰ with a loop?¹¹ — R. Hisda replied: This proves that a loop is inadmissible¹² in tefillin. Abaye replied: R. Judah follows his view, expressed elsewhere,¹³ that a loop is like a proper knot.¹⁴ The reason then¹⁵ is that a loop is like a proper knot, but if that had not been so one would presumably have been allowed to fasten them with a loop. But, it may be objected, did not R. Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shilath rule in the name of Rab: The shape of the knot of the tefillin is a halachah that was given to Moses at Sinai, and R. Nahman explained: Their ornamentation¹⁶ must be turned outwards?¹⁷ — One could make the loop similar to the prescribed knot.¹⁸

R. Hisda citing Rab¹⁹ ruled: If a man buys a supply of tefillin²⁰ from a non-expert he must examine two tefillin of the hand and one of the head, or two of the head and one of the hand.²¹ But, whatever your explanation may be, a difficulty remains:²² If he bought them from one man,²³ why should he not examine either three of the hand or three of the head,²⁴ and if he bought them from two or three persons, should not each one require examination?²⁵ The fact is that he bought them from one man, but it is necessary that his reputation shall be established in respect of those of the hand as well as those of the head. But can this be correct? purely Rabbah b. Samuel learned, ‘In the case of tefillin one examines three of the hand and of the head’, which means, does it not, either three of the hand or three of the head? — No, three, some of which must be of the hand and some of the head. But did not R. Kahana learn: In the case of tefillin one examines two of the hand and of the head?²⁶ — This²⁷ represents the view of²⁸ Rabbi who laid down that if something has happened twice presumption is established.²⁹ But if this²⁷ represents the view of Rabbi, read the final clause: ‘The same procedure is followed²⁵ in the case of the second packet and also in that of the third packet’,³⁰ but if this represents the view of Rabbi, would he require the examination of a third packet?³¹ — Rabbi agrees³² in the case of packets since one usually buys them from two or three persons.³³ But if so,³⁴ should not even the fourth and even the fifth also require examination? — The law is so indeed,³⁵ and the reason why ‘the third’ is mentioned is merely to indicate that³⁶ no presumption is established.³⁷ In fact, however, even a fourth or a fifth must also be examined.

IF HE FOUND THEM ARRANGED IN PACKETS OR TIED UP IN BUNDLES etc. What is meant by PACKETS³⁸ and what by BUNDLES?³⁹ — Rab Judah citing Rab replied: Packets and bundles are practically the same thing but in packets the tefillin are packed in pairs while in bundles they are tied together promiscuously.⁴⁰

HE SHALL WAIT BY THEM UNTIL IT IS DARK AND THEN BRING THEM IN. But why?⁴¹ Might he not bring them in, one pair at a time?— R. Isaac the son of R. Judah replied: It was explained to me by my father that if by bringing them in, one pair at a time, the entire stock could be transferred⁴² before sunset, he is to take them in,⁴³ one pair at a time; otherwise HE SHALL WAIT BY THEM UNTIL IT IS DARK AND THEN BRING THEM IN.

IN A TIME OF DANGER, HOWEVER, HE SHALL COVER THEM. AND PROCEED ON HIS WAY. But was it not taught: In a time of danger he carries them⁴⁴ in small stages each of less than four cubits?⁴⁵ — Rab replied:⁴⁶ This is no difficulty since the former⁴⁷ refers to the danger of heathens⁴⁸ while the latter⁴⁹ refers to that of highwaymen.⁵⁰

Said Abaye:¹ How² did you explain our Mishnah? That it refers to danger from idolaters? Read them the final clause, R. SIMEON RULED: HE SHALL PASS THEM TO HIS FELLOW AND HIS FELLOW SHALL PASS THEM TO HIS FELLOW, would not this cause much greater publicity?³ A clause is wanting in our Mishnah, the proper reading being as follows: This applies to danger from idolaters but in the case of danger from highwaymen he carries them in small stages each of less than four cubits.

R. SIMEON RULED: HE SHALL PASS THEM TO HIS FELLOW etc. On what principle do they⁴ differ? — One Master⁵ holds that it is preferable to carry them in stages of less than four cubits, for if you should say that he should pass them to his fellow and his fellow to his fellow, the desecration of the sabbath would be given undue publicity; while the other Master⁶ holds that it is preferable to pass them to one's fellow, for should you say that he shall carry them in stages of less than four cubits it might sometimes happen that he would be absent-minded and would in consequence carry them four cubits in a public domain.

THE SAME PROCEDURE IS TO BE FOLLOWED IN THE CASE OF A SON OF HIS. How does his child come to be⁷ there? — The school of Manasseh taught: This is a case where his mother bore him in the field. And what is intended by the expression. EVEN THOUGH THEY ARE AS MANY AS A HUNDRED? — That, though the movement from hand to hand is rather a hardship to him, this procedure is nevertheless to be preferred.⁸

R. Judah RULED: A MAN MAY PASS A JAR. But does not R. Judah agree with what we learned: Cattle and objects may move only as far as the feet of their owner?⁹ — Resh Lakish citing levi the elder replied: Here we are dealing with a case where he¹⁰ emptied the contents from one jar¹¹ into another,¹² R. Judah following his view, expressed elsewhere,¹³ that water¹⁴ is deemed to have no substance,¹⁵ for we learned:¹⁶ R. Judah exempts¹⁷ water¹⁸ because it has no substance.¹⁵ Then¹⁹ what could be the meaning²⁰ of THIS²¹ MUST NOT MOVE? — That²² which is within THIS MUST NOT BE MOVED FURTHER THAN THE FEET OF ITS OWNER. Might it not be suggested that R. Judah was heard to hold his view²³ only where it²² was absorbed in dough,²⁴ was he, however, heard to hold the same view where²⁵ it had an independent existence? Surely.²⁶ if where water is mixed with the contents of a pot²⁷ R. Judah rules that it does not lose its existence, would it lose it where²⁵ it had an independent existence? For was it not taught:²⁸ R. Judah ruled: Water and salt lose their identity in dough but not in a pot²⁷ on account of its broth?²⁹ — Rather, explained Raba, we are here dealing with the case of a jar that had acquired³⁰ a place for the Sabbath and that of water that had not acquired a place.³¹ so that the identity of the jar³² is lost In the water,³³ as we have learnt: If a man carries out³⁴ a living person in a bed he is exempt³⁵ even in respect of the bed,³⁶ since the bed³⁷ is of secondary importance;³⁸ if a man carries out³⁴ in a vessel food-stuffs less than the forbidden quantity he is exempt³⁵ even in respect of the vessel,³⁹ since the vessel⁴⁰ is only of secondary importance.⁴¹ R. Joseph raised an objection: R. Judah ruled: 'When in a caravan a man, may pass a jar to his fellow and his fellow to his fellow', which implies, does it not, that only when in a caravan⁴² is this permitted but not otherwise?⁴³ — The fact rather is, explained R. Joseph, that what⁴⁴ we learned in our Mishnah referred also to a caravan.

Abaye explained:⁴⁵ When in a caravan the device⁴⁶ is permitted even when both the jar and the water had acquired a place for the Sabbath, but when one is not in a caravan the device⁴⁶ is allowed only where the jar alone had acquired a place for the Sabbath but not the water.

R. Ashi explained:⁴⁵ Here we are dealing with a jar and water both of which were ownerless,⁴⁷ And whose [view is expressed in what] THEY SAID TO HIM? — That of R. Johanan b. Nuri who holds that ownerless objects acquire their place for the Sabbath.⁴⁸ And what⁴⁹ could be the meaning of THIS MUST NOT BE MOVED FURTHER THAN THE FEET OF ITS OWNER?— they must not be moved further than vessels that have an owner.⁵⁰

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WAS READING IN A SCROLL⁵¹ ON A THRESHOLD AND THE SCROLL ROLLED OUT OF HIS HAND,⁵² HE MAY ROLL IT BACK TO HIMSELF.⁵³ IF HE WAS READING IT ON THE TOP OF A ROOF AND THE SCROLL ROLLED OUT OF HIS HAND,⁵² HE MAY, BEFORE IT REACHED TEN HANDBREADTHS FROM THE GROUND, ROLL IT BACK TO HIMSELF.⁵⁴ BUT AFTER IT HAD REACHED THE TEN HANDBREADTHS⁵⁵ HE MUST TURN IT OVER WITH ITS WRITING DOWNWARDS.⁵⁶ R.

JUDAH RULED: EVEN IF IT WAS REMOVED FROM THE GROUND BY NO MORE THAN A THREAD'S⁵⁷ THICKNESS HE MAY ROLL IT BACK TO HIMSELF. R. SIMEON RULED: EVEN IF IT TOUCHED THE ACTUAL GROUND HE MAY ROLL IT BACK TO HIMSELF, SINCE NO PROHIBITION THAT IS DUE TO SHEBUTH⁵⁸ RETAINS ITS FORCE⁵⁹ IN THE PRESENCE OF THE HOLY WRITINGS.⁶⁰

GEMARA. What kind of THRESHOLD is one to imagine? If it be suggested that the threshold was a private domain,⁶¹ and that in front of it was a public domain,⁶² and that no preventive measure⁶³ was enacted against the possibility that the entire scroll might fall down⁶⁴ and that one might then carry it in,⁶⁵

- (40) Whose entire use is due to the foodstuffs in it.
- (41) To the food (cf. supra n. 19 mut. mut.). Similarly in the case of the jar and the water, since the latter is of primary, and the former is only of secondary importance, the former's identity is completely lost in that of the latter and may, therefore, be carried to the same limits.
- (42) Sc. in abnormal conditions where water has to be carried long distances and where one has no other alternative.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 98a

who then, [it may be asked,] is the author?¹ Obviously R. Simeon who ruled: NO PROHIBITION THAT IS DUE TO SHEBUTH RETAINS ITS FORCE IN THE PRESENCE OF THE HOLY WRITINGS;² but then read the final clause: R. JUDAH RULER, EVEN IF IT WAS REMOVED FROM THE GROUND BY NO MORE THAN A THREAD'S THICKNESS HE MAY ROLL IT BACK TO HIMSELF. R. SIMEON RULED: EVEN IF IT TOUCHED THE ACTUAL GROUND, HE MAY ROLL IT BACK TO HIMSELF. Is it likely that the first and final clauses represent the view of R. Simeon while the middle one represents that of R. Judah?—Rab Rabbah replied: Yes the first and final clauses may represent the view of R. Simeon while the middle one represents that of R. Judah: Rabbah replied: We deal here with a threshold that was trodden upon [by the public] and in order [to avert] disrespect to the holy writings³ the Rabbis⁴ have permitted [to roll it back].⁵

Abaye raised an objection against him:⁶ [If it⁷ rested] within four cubits⁸ one may roll it back to oneself, [but if it rested] without the four cubits one must turn it over with its writing downwards. Now if you maintain that we are dealing with a threshold that was trodden upon by the public⁹ what matters it whether the end of the roll rested within the four cubits or without the four cubits?¹⁰ Rather, explained Abaye, we are dealing here with a threshold that was a karmelith¹¹ in front of which passed a public domain.¹² [Hence it is that if the end of the scroll rested] within four cubits where, even if [all the scroll] had fallen down and one would have carried it back,¹³ no obligation of a sin-offering would be incurred,¹⁴ the Rabbis have permitted the man to roll it back;¹⁵ but where it rested without the four cubits in which case, if he had brought it back,¹⁶ he would have incurred the obligation of a sin-offering, the Rabbis did not permit it to him.¹⁷ But if so,¹⁸ why should not a preventive measure be enacted, even [where the end of the scroll rested] within the four cubits, lest one might come to carry [the scroll]¹⁹ from the public into a private domain?²⁰ And should you reply: Since a karmelith²¹ intervened this²² need not be provided against,²³ did not Raba, [it may be objected,] state:²⁴ if a man transferred an object from the beginning of four cubits²⁵ to the end of the four cubits, and the transfer was made above his head,²⁶ he is guilty of an offence?²⁷ — Here we are dealing with all extensive²⁸ threshold²⁹ in crossing which³⁰ one is sure to recollect [to pause].³¹ If you prefer I might reply: The fact is that we are dealing here with a threshold that was not extensive, but one usually looks through the holy writings before putting them away.³² But why should not the possibility be taken into consideration that one might look through them³³ while in the public domain and then carry them³⁴ directly into the private domain?³⁵ — The author of this ruling is³⁶ Ben ‘Azzai who laid down³⁷ that walking is like standing.³⁸ But is it not possible that he might throw³⁹ them,⁴⁰ R. Johanan having stated: ‘Ben ‘Azzai agrees in the case of throwing’?⁴¹ R. Aha⁴² b. Ahabah replied: This proves that holy writings may not be thrown.⁴³

IF HE WAS HEADING IT ON THE TOP OF A ROOF etc. But is this⁴⁴ permitted. seeing that it was taught: The writers of the scrolls of Scripture, tefillin or mezuzoth were not permitted to turn a skin⁴⁵ with the writing downwards,⁴⁶ but a cloth must be spread over it?⁴⁷ There⁴⁸ this⁴⁹ is possible whereas here⁵⁰ this is impossible; and if one were not to turn it over the holy writings would be exposed⁵¹ to much greater abuse. HE MUST TURN IT OVER WITH ITS WRITING DOWNWARDS. But, surely, it has not, has it, come to a rest?⁵² — Raba replied: This is a case where the wall was slanting.⁵³ Said Abaye to him: You have explained our Mishnah as referring⁵⁴ to a slanting wall; read them the final clause: R. JUDAH RULED, EVEN IF IT WAS REMOVED FROM THE GROUND BY NO MORE THAN A THREAD'S THICKNESS, HE MAY ROLL IT BACK TO HIMSELF, but, surely,⁵⁵ I may ask, has it not come to rest?⁵⁶ — Some words are wanting, the proper reading⁵⁷ being as follows: This⁵⁸ applies only to a slanting wall, but in the case

(1) Of this ruling of our Mishnah according to which no preventive measure was deemed necessary. It cannot be R. Judah, since he permits the rolling back only where the end of the scroll does not touch the ground, but where it does, the rolling back is forbidden as a preventive measure against the possibility of doing so when both ends dropped from the reader's hands.

(2) V. relevant notes in our Mishnah.

(3) By leaving it in a place where it might be trodden upon.

(4) Even R. Judah.

(5) Since only a shebuth is thereby affected. The threshold, however, cannot be compared to a roof where a preventive measure could well be enacted since in that case the scroll is not exposed to so much abuse.

(6) Rabbah.

(7) One of the ends of the scroll that one was reading on a threshold.

(8) On the ground.

(9) And that, in order to protect the sacred scroll from abuse, a shebuth was dispensed with.

(10) Surely none; for just as a shebuth was dispensed with for the reason given, in the case of the threshold where one end of the scroll is transferred from a public into a private domain, so it should also be dispensed with for the same reason in the case of carrying the end of the scroll along a greater distance than four cubits in a public domain, since one of the ends is in his hand.

(11) One that was four handbreadths wide but less than ten handbreadths high.

(12) And behind which was, of course, a house which is a private domain.

(13) To the threshold.

(14) Since the prohibition to carry from a public domain into a karmelith is only a shebuth.

- (15) i.e., where an end is retained in the reader's hand, a shebuth to safeguard a shebuth was not considered necessary.
- (16) Where the whole of [he scroll had fallen down and he carried it along a distance of more than four cubits in a public domain.
- (17) Even where one end remained in his hand and only a shebuth is involved. To safeguard a Pentateuchal prohibition a shebuth was justifiably instituted.
- (18) That according to R. Judah a preventive measure was enacted, even in the case of holy writings, against the possibility of the infringement of a Pentateuchal law.
- (19) I.e., where both ends dropped from the hands of the reader into the public domain.
- (20) Sc. into the house behind the threshold.

- (25) In a public domain.
- (26) Lit., 'the way above him', sc. he carried the object high in the air at a level above ten handbreadths from the ground, which is regarded as a free domain.
- (27) Against the laws of carrying a greater distance than four cubits in a Public domain. This shows that an offence is not mitigated even though the object passed on its way through a free domain. Why then should the passing of the scroll across the threshold mitigate in any way the offence of carrying from a public into a private domain?
- (28) Lit., 'log'.
- (29) The crossing of which, on one's way from the public into the private domain, would take some time.
- (30) Lit., 'in the meanwhile'.
- (31) On it; and thus avoid the direct transfer from the public into the private domain. By making a pause on the karmelith the object is deemed to have been taken from the Public domain into it and from it into the private domain which is Pentateuchally permitted so that no sin-offering would be incurred even where the entire scroll had been carried in this manner.
- (32) One would consequently pause for the purpose on the threshold and, by thus avoiding direct transfer from the public into the private domain, no obligation of a sin-offering would be incurred.
- (33) The books of Scripture in the scroll.
- (34) Even where the entire scroll had dropped into the public domain.
- (35) Thus infringing a Pentateuchal prohibition.
- (36) Lit., 'whose (ruling) is this?'
- (37) In respect of the laws relating to carrying on the Sabbath.
- (38) Lit., '(he who) walks is as (he who) stands', sc. since every step made represents a 'lifting up' of the foot from one spot and a 'putting down' of it in another spot, the very passing across the threshold constitutes a pausing on it; cf. Shab. 5b and Keth 31b (Sonc. ed., p. 172, n. 4).
- (39) From the public domain directly into the house.
- (40) The books of Scripture in the scroll.
- (41) That it is not like standing (Shah. 6a). As in such a case a Pentateuchal law would be infringed where the entire scroll rolls out into the public domain, why was not a preventive measure enacted against this possibility even where only one end had rolled out?
- (42) MS.M. and old ed. 'Adda'.

- (48) In the scribe's house.
- (49) To cover the writing with a cloth.
- (50) In the open, and where the exposed part of the scroll is rather large.
- (51) Lit 'there is'.
- (52) In the public domain. Why then should it be forbidden to roll it back into the private domain seeing that such an act would not infringe even a shebuth?

(53) So that the end of the scroll inevitably comes to rest on the slope.

(54) Lit., 'in what did you place our Mishnah?'

(55) Since the wall was slanting.

(56) It must have done. Why, then, did R. Judah permit it to be rolled back?

(57) In our Mishnah.

(58) The ruling that HE MUST TURN IT etc.

of a wall that was not slanting and it came to rest above three handbreadths [from the ground], he may roll it back to himself; but if below the three handbreadths,¹ HE MUST TURN IT OVER WITH ITS WRITING DOWNWARDS.

R. JUDAH RULED: EVEN IF IT WAS REMOVED, FROM THE GROUND BY NO MORE THAN etc., because it is essential² that the object shall come to rest on something.³ But then what of the statement of Raba that even if all object came within three handbreadths [from the ground] it is necessary² according to the Rabbis that it shall rest³ on something,⁴ must it be assumed⁵ that he based his teaching on what is a dispute between Tannas? — The fact is that all this⁶ represents the view of R. Judah, but some words are missing, the correct reading being as follows: This applies only to a slanting wall, but in the case of a wall that was not slanting, even if it was below three handbreadths from the ground, he may roll it back because R. JUDAH RULED: EVEN IF IT WAS REMOVED FROM THE GROUND BY NO MORE THAN A THREADS THICKNESS, HE MAY ROLL IT BACK TO HIMSELF. What is the reason? Because it is essential⁷ that the object shall come to rest on something.

MISHNAH. IF THERE WAS A LEDGE⁸ IN FRONT OF A WINDOW IT IS PERMITTED⁹ TO PUT OBJECTS UPON IT OR TO REMOVE OBJECTS FROM IT ON THE SABBATH.

GEMARA. Whither did the LEDGE project? If it be suggested that it projected on to a public domain, why should no provision be made against the possibility¹⁰ that an object might drop¹¹ and one would be tempted¹² to carry it?¹³ If, on the other hand, it be projected on to a private domain, is not this¹⁴ obvious?¹⁵ — Abaye replied: The fact is that it projected on to a public domain, but the ruling, that IT IS PERMITTED TO PUT OBJECTS UPON IT, refers only to¹⁶ breakable objects.¹⁷ So it was also taught: If a ledge in front of a window projected into a public domain it is permitted to put upon it dishes, cups, ladles or bottles;¹⁸ and [it is permitted] to use¹⁹ all the wall²⁰ as far as its lowest ten handbreadths.²¹ If there was a ledge below it²² one may use it,²³ while the upper one may be used only in front of one's window. Now what kind of ledge is one to imagine?²⁴ If its width was less than²⁵ four handbreadths, is it not a free domain which²⁶ one must not use²⁷ even in front of one's window?²⁸ If, on the other hand, its width was four handbreadths, why²⁹ should not one be allowed to use it along the entire length of the wall? — Abaye replied: This is a case where the lower ledge was four handbreadths wide, while the upper one was not four handbreadths wide but the window-sill made it up to four handbreadths. [Consequently] One may use it³⁰ in front of the window since it is regarded as an extension³¹ of the window-sill but its section on the one side or on the other³² remains forbidden.

MISHNAH. A MAN MAY STAND³³ IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN AND MOVE OBJECTS IN A PUBLIC DOMAIN OR HE MAY STAND IN A PUBLIC DOMAIN AND³⁴ MOVE OBJECTS IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN, PROVIDED HE DOES NOT TAKE THEM BEYOND FOUR CUBITS.³⁵

A MAN MAY NOT STAND IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN AND MAKE WATER IN A PUBLIC DOMAIN OR IN A PUBLIC DOMAIN AND MAKE WATER IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN, AND

THE SAME APPLIES TO SPITTING.³⁶ R. JUDAH RULED: EVEN WHERE A PERSON'S SPITTLE ACCUMULATED³⁷ IN HIS MOUTH, HE MUST NOT WALK FOUR CUBITS BEFORE HE SPAT OUT.³⁸

GEMARA. R. Hinena³⁹ b. Shelemya taught Hiyya b. Rab in the presence of Rab: A man may not stand in a private domain and move objects in a public domain.⁴⁰ 'Do you', he⁴¹ said to him, 'ignore⁴² the Rabbis⁴³ and act according to the view of R. Meir?'⁴⁴

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 99a

He¹ thought that since the final clause² represented the view of R. Meir the first clause also must represent the view of R. Meir. In fact, however, this is not so. While the final clause represents the view of R. Meir the first represents the view of the Rabbis.

PROVIDED HE DOES NOT TAKE THEM BEYOND. Thus it follows that if he did take them beyond the four cubits³ he incurs the obligation of a sin-offering. May it then be suggested that this⁴ provides support for Raba who laid down that if a man transferred an object from the beginning of four cubits to the end of the four cubits, and the transfer was made above his head, he is guilty of an offence?⁵ Was it stated: 'If he took them beyond, he incurs the obligation of a sin-offering'?⁶ It is quite possible⁷ that if he took them beyond [the four cubits] he is exempt,⁸ but the act is [nevertheless] forbidden.⁹

Others read: Thus it follows⁷ that if he did take them out he is exempt though this is forbidden. Must it be conceded that this presents an objection against Raba who laid down that if a man transferred an object from the beginning of four cubits to the end of four cubits, and the transfer was made above his head, he is guilty of an offence?⁵ Was it stated: 'if he took them out he is exempt though this is forbidden'? It is quite possible that if he took them beyond [the four cubits] he does incur the obligation of a sin-offering?

A MAN MUST NOT STAND IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN etc. R. Joseph ruled: If a man made water or spat¹⁰ he incurs the obligation of a sin-offering. But is it not necessary¹¹ that the lifting up¹² and the putting down¹² shall respectively be from, and upon a place that was four handbreadths wide, which is not the case here? — His intention¹³ confers upon him the status of a proper place. For should you not concede this principle, how would you explain the following ruling of Raba:¹⁴ 'If a man threw some object¹⁵ and it dropped¹⁶ into the mouth of a dog or into the mouth of a furnace¹⁷ he incurs the obligation of a sin-offering', in view of the objection:¹⁸ Is it not necessary¹¹ that the putting down should be upon a place that was four handbreadths wide, which is not the case here? You must consequently admit that¹⁹ the man's intention²⁰ confers upon it²¹ the status of a proper place, so also here, it may well be explained, it is his intention that confers upon him the status of a valid place.

Raba enquired: What is the legal position where a man stood in a private domain and the orifice of the organ projected into a public domain? Are we guided by the source²² or by the point of exit? — This remains undecided.²³

AND THE SAME APPLIES TO SPITTING. R. JUDAH RULED etc. Even though he did not turn it over?²⁴ Have we not, however, learnt: If a man was eating a pressed fig²⁵ with soiled hands²⁶ and he put his hand into his mouth to remove a small stone,²⁷ R. Meir declares the fig to be unclean²⁸ while R. Jose regards it as clean.²⁹ R. Judah ruled: If he turned it³⁰ over³¹ the fig is unclean²⁸ but if he did not turn it over²⁹ the fig remains clean?³² — R. Johanan replied: Reverse the statement,³³ Resh Lakish said: You have no need³⁴ to reverse the statement, for we are dealing here with phlegm.³⁵ But was it not taught: R. Judah ruled: 'If his phlegm was detached',³⁶ which implies also, does it not, 'if his spittle was detached'?³⁷ — No, only that if his phlegm was detached. But was it not taught: R. Judah ruled: Whether his phlegm was detached or his spittle was detached he must not walk four cubits before he spat it out? — Clearly the explanation is the one originally given.³⁸

Resh Lakish stated: One who coughs up phlegm in the presence of his master deserves an untimely death, for it is said in Scripture: All that hate me love death,³⁹ read not 'that hate me' but 'those that cause me to be hated'.⁴⁰ But does not one merely act⁴¹ under an impulsion?⁴² — The person meant is one who coughs up the phlegm and ejects it.⁴³

MISHNAH. A MAN MUST NOT⁴⁴ STAND IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN AND DRINK IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN OR STAND IN A PUBLIC DOMAIN AND DRINK IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN UNLESS HE PUT HIS HEAD AND THE GREATER PART OF HIS BODY INTO THE DOMAIN IN WHICH HE DRINKS. AND A SIMILAR LAW⁴⁵ APPLIES TO A WINEPRESS.

GEMARA. Does then the first clause⁴⁶ represent the view of the Rabbis⁴⁷ while the final clause⁴⁸ represents that of R. Meir?⁴⁹ — R. Joseph replied: The latter clause⁴⁸ deals with objects that are among one's necessities⁵⁰ and it⁴⁸ represents the general opinion.⁵¹

The question was raised: What is the ruling in respect of a karmelith?⁵² — Abaye replied: The same law⁵³ applies.⁵⁴ Raba replied: The very law of karmelith⁵⁵ is but a preventive measure,⁵⁶ shall we then go as far as⁵⁷ to enact a preventive measure⁵⁸ in addition to another preventive measure!⁵⁹

Whence, observed Abaye, do I derive my view?⁶⁰ From the statement,⁶¹

-
- (1) R. Hinena.
 - (2) i.e., the Mishnah infra 101a.
 - (3) Even though his position was raised from the ground of the public domain and the objects were carried in the air above ten handbreadths from the ground which is a free domain.
 - (4) The prohibition to carry an object even through a free domain on account of the 'lifting up' and the 'setting down' which take place in the public domain.
 - (5) Supra 98a q.v. notes.
 - (6) If that were so, support for Raba's view would indeed have been forthcoming.
 - (7) Since no sin-offering was mentioned.
 - (8) From a sin-offering.
 - (9) By a Rabbinical enactment. In order to prevent one from carrying an object below the ten handbreadths level.
 - (10) From the one domain into the other.
 - (11) If a sin-offering is to be incurred.
 - (12) Of the object moved.
 - (13) To relieve himself.
 - (14) Lit., 'that which Raba said'.
 - (15) Along a distance of four cubits in a public domain.
 - (16) Lit., 'and rested'.
 - (17) Where it was instantly burnt out before it touched the floor of the furnace.
 - (18) Lit., 'but surely'.
 - (19) Lit., 'but'.
 - (20) [That it should drop into the fire or into the dog's mouth, v. Tosaf s.v. זרק].
 - (21) The dog's mouth or the flames of the furnace.
 - (22) Which is in the private domain.
 - (23) Teku.
 - (24) In his mouth.
 - (25) Of terumah.
 - (26) Sc. 'unwashed'. These are subject to the second degree of levitical uncleanness and consequently carry the third degree of uncleanness to the terumah with which they came in contact.
 - (27) And with his wet hand touched the fig.
 - (28) Because the spittle is regarded as a liquid which, by moistening the fig, renders it susceptible to levitical uncleanness. Food that has never come in contact with a liquid is not susceptible to such uncleanness.

(29) Spittle, while in one's mouth is deemed to be a part of the body and cannot, therefore, be regarded as a liquid that renders food susceptible to levitical uncleanness.

(30) With the spittle in his mouth.

(31) In his mouth.

(32) Kel. VIII, 10. How then can it be maintained here that R. Judah regards spittle as detached from the body even if it was not turned over?

(33) The view given in the name of R. Judah should be attributed to one of the others. Rashi: R. Judah is at variance with his own principle.

(34) Lit., 'forever'.

(35) Which is detached from the lungs by the time it reaches the mouth.

(36) He must not walk beyond four cubits in the public domain.

(37) The text is in disorder. Read (v. D.S.): 'R. Judah said, (the same applies to) his phlegm or spittle'; now does this not mean if his phlegm or spittle was detached? - No, only if his phlegm was detached (but as to spittle, there is no liability unless he turned it over)].

(38) That the statement was to be reversed.

(39) Prov. VIII, 36.

(40) For the reading cf. Meg. 28a.

(41) When coughing.

(42) Of course he does; why then should he deserve death?

(43) In his master's presence.

(44) As a preventive measure against the possibility of drawing the drinking vessel towards the body from the one domain into the other.

(45) In respect of tithe (v. Gemara infra).

(46) Sc. the previous Mishnah (supra 98b) according to which 'a man may stand in a private domain and move objects in a public domain' etc.

(47) Who did not enact a preventive measure against the possibility of drawing the object after the body.

(48) Our Mishnah.

(49) Who (cf. Mishnah infra 101a) upholds the principle of the necessity for such a preventive measure. But is it likely that two anonymous and consecutive rulings should represent the views of different authors?

(50) Lit., 'that he requires', as water, for instance. Being in so much need of it, a man is most likely in a moment of absent-mindedness to draw it towards him into the domain in which he stands.

(51) Since in such a case (cf. Prev. n.) all agree that a preventive measure is required.

(52) Sc. may one standing in a karmelith drink in a public or private domain?

(53) As that relating to the domains spoken of in our Mishnah.

(54) Lit., 'it it'.

(55) Since Pentateuchally there is no prohibition even against the actual transfer of objects from a karmelith into, private or public domain.

(56) Against the possibility of carrying objects between a public and a private domain.

(57) Lit., 'shall we rise up'.

(58) The prohibition to drink from a public or private domain while standing in a karmelith as a preventive measure against possible transfer of the drinking vessel.

(59) The very law of karmelith. As such a double precaution is obviously unreasonable, the restrictions our Mishnah imposes in connection with the domains mentioned cannot apply to the karmelith.

(60) Lit., 'do I say it'.

(61) Lit., 'since he learned'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 99b

AND A SIMILAR LAW APPLIES TO A WINEPRESS.¹ Raba, however, explained: The reference² is to³ tithe; and so explained R. Shesheth: AND A SIMILAR LAW APPLIES TO A WINEPRESS refers to³ tithe. For we learned: It is permitted⁴ to drink wine out of a winepress irrespective of whether it was mixed with hot water or cold water, and to be exempt from the tithe;⁵ so R. Meir. R. Eliezer b. Zadok declared it⁶ to be liable to tithe,⁷ while the Sages ruled: In the case of hot wine⁸ one is liable to the tithe⁹ but in that of cold wine¹⁰ one is exempt since whatever remains¹¹ is poured back.¹²

MISHNAH. A MAN¹³ MAY INTERCEPT¹⁴ WATER FROM A GUTTER¹⁵ AT A LEVEL BELOW TEN HANDBREADTHS FROM THE GROUND,¹⁶ BUT FROM A WATER-SPOUT¹⁷ HE MAY DRINK IN ANY MANNER.¹⁸ GEMARA. He may only¹⁹ INTERCEPT the water²⁰ but may not press his lips to the gutter.²¹ What is the reason? — R. Nahman replied: We are here dealing with a gutter that was withn²² three handbreadths from the roof, since any structure²³ that is within three handbreadths from the roof is regarded as being the same domain as the roof. So²⁴ it was also taught: A man standing in a private domain²⁵ may raise his hand above ten handbreadths²⁶ towards a gutter that was within less than three handbreadths from a roof²⁷ and intercept²⁰ the water,²⁸ provided he does not press this lips to it].

Elsewhere it was taught: A man standing in a private domain²⁵ may not raise his hand above ten handbreadths²⁶ towards a gutter ‘that was within less than three handbreadths from a roof and press it to it, but he may intercept [the water]²⁰ and then drink.

FROM A WATER-SPOUT HE MAY DRINK IN ANY MANNER. One taught: If the spout had an area of four handbreadths by four this²⁹ is forbidden³⁰ because this would be like taking from one domain³¹ into another.³²

MISHNAH. IF A CISTERN IN A PUBLIC DOMAIN HAD AN EMBANKMENT TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH, IT IS PERMITTED TO DRAW WATER FROM IT ON THE SABBATH THROUGH A WINDOW ABOVE IT. IF A RUBBISH-HEAP IN A PUBLIC DOMAIN WAS TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH, IT IS PERMITTED TO POUR WATER ON IT ON THE SABBATH FROM A WINDOW ABOVE IT.

GEMARA. What³³ are we dealing with here? If it be Suggested: With one that was near,³⁴ what need was there,³⁵ [it might be objected,] for³⁶ an embankment that was ten handbreadths high?³⁷ — R. Huna replied: We are here dealing with a cistern that was removed four handbreadths from the wall. Hence it is only³⁸ where there was an embankment ten handbreadths high that the ruling³⁹ applies.⁴⁰ but where there was no embankment ten handbreadths high one would be moving an object⁴¹ from one private domain into another by way of a public domain.⁴² R. Johanan, however, replied: It³⁹ may even be assumed to refer to a cistern that was near,³⁴ but⁴³ it is this that we were informed: That the depth of a cistern and the height of its embankment⁴⁴ may be combined⁴⁵ to the prescribed depth of ten handbreadths.

IF A RUBBISH-HEAP IN A PUBLIC DOMAIN etc. There is no need then to provide against the possibility that the rubbish’ heap might be removed;⁴⁶ but did not Rabin son of R. Adda state in the name of R. Isaac: It once occurred that one side of an alley terminated in the sea⁴⁷ and the other terminated in a rubbish heap.⁴⁸ and when the facts were submitted to Rabbi he neither permitted nor forbade the movement of objects⁴⁹ in that alley; he did not declare it to be permitted since the possibility had to be considered that the rubbish-heap might be removed⁵⁰ or the sea might throw up alluvium,⁵¹ and he did not declare it to be forbidden because⁵² partitions⁵³ in fact existed?⁵⁴ — This is no difficulty, since the latter refers to one⁵⁵ that belonged to an individual⁵⁶ whereas the former⁵⁷ refers to one that belonged to the public.⁵⁸

MISHNAH. WHERE A TREE OVERSHADOWS THE GROUND⁵⁹ IT IS PERMITTED TO MOVE OBJECTS UNDER IT IF THE TOPS OF ITS BRANCHES ARE NOT HIGHER THAN THREE HANDBREADTHS FROM THE GROUND.⁶⁰ IF ITS ROOTS ARE THREE

HANDBREADTHS HIGH ABOVE THE GROUND⁶¹ ONE MAY NOT SIT ON THEM.⁶²
GEMARA. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua ruled: No objects may be moved⁶³ under it⁶⁴ where the area was greater than two beth se'ah.⁶⁵ What is the reason?

- (1) Which must refer to one that was lower than ten handbreadths which consequently had the status of a karmelith. It cannot refer to one that had the status of a private domain since the law relating to the latter had already been dealt with.
- (2) In the mention of the winepress.
- (3) Lit., 'as regards'.
- (4) To any person who stands within the winepress.
- (5) Provided the wine had not been carried outside the winepress the drink is regarded as occasional and consequently not subject to tithe.
- (6) Since it was mixed with water.
- (7) The dilution in the water imparts to it the nature of a regular drink which is subject to the tithe.
- (8) Sc. wine mixed with hot water.
- (9) Once the wine is mixed with hot water it can no longer be returned to the press. If a person, therefore, has mixed it with such water his intention must have been to drink all of it and it consequently assumes the character of a regular drink which is subject to tithe.
- (10) Wine mixed with cold water.
- (11) Of the drink.
- (12) To the winepress. The drink, therefore, is regarded as merely an occasional one that is exempt from the tithe. What our Mishnah teaches is that, according to R. Meir whose view the last clause represents, a man must not stand on the ground and drink from the winepress without first setting aside the required tithe unless, as in the case of the domains spoken of, he puts HIS HEAD AND THE GREATER PART OF HIS BODY into the winepress.
- (13) Standing in a public domain.
- (14) On the Sabbath.
- (15) That runs along the side of a roof within three handbreadths from it (v. Gemara infra).
- (16) Which is regarded as a part of the public domain; or even at a higher level which is a free domain. The intention on the level below ten is due to the ruling that follows, which cannot apply to a higher level.
- (17) The mouth of which projected into the public domain at some distance from the roof and below ten handbreadth from the ground, in consequence of which it is regarded as a part of the public domain.
- (18) Sc. he may even press his lips to the mouth of the spout and drink directly from it. This is not permitted in the case of a gutter which, being (as stated supra) within three handbreadths from the roof, is deemed to be part of the roof and to constitute like the roof itself a private domain from which it is forbidden to take the water into the public domain, even though it was lower than ten handbreadths from the ground.
- (19) Lit., 'yes'.
- (20) In mid air.
- (21) To drink directly from it.
- (22) Lit., 'less than'.
- (23) Such as a gutter.
- (24) That a gutter within three handbreadths from a roof is regarded as the same domain as the roof and that one drinking directly from such a gutter is deemed to be drinking from the roof itself.
- (25) On a roof, for instance.
- (26) From the floor of that domain.
- (27) Above the one on which he stands.
- (28) That flowed from that gutter upon his roof.
- (29) To drink directly from the mouth of the spout.
- (30) Even if it was within ten handbreadths from the ground.
- (31) A karmelith.
- (32) A public domain.
- (33) CISTERN.
- (34) To the wall, within four handbreadths from it.
- (35) For the purpose of permitting the use of the cistern from the window.

- (36) Lit., 'wherefore to me'.
- (37) Even if there were no embankment the drawing up of water through the window would have been permitted, since a cistern, ten handbreadths deep, is itself a private domain and, being within four handbreadths from the wall, no material part of the public domain intervened between it and the wall.
- (38) Lit., 'and the reason'.
- (39) that IT IS PERMITTED TO DRAW WATER etc.
- (40) Since the bucket never enters the public domain.
- (41) The bucket or the water.
- (42) The strip of four handbreadths wide or more that intervened between the wall and the cistern.
- (43) In reply to the objection 'What need was there for an embankment' etc.
- (44) Though each is less than ten handbreadths in depth or in height.
- (45) For the purpose of constituting a private domain.
- (46) When its place would become a public domain and people might continue to use it from the window as if it were still a private domain.
- (47) Whose embankments were ten handbreadths high.
- (48) Also ten handbreadths high; while of the other two sides one adjoined a public domain and the other was closed up, houses and courtyards opening out from it.
- (49) On the Sabbath.
- (50) And its place would use the character of a private domain.
- (51) Thus turning the place, when dried up, into a public domain, and the public would use it as a thoroughfare (cf. R. Han.).
- (52) At the time at least.
- (53) The side from which the doors had opened, the sea embankment and the rubbish-heap.
- (54) Supra 8a. Now since provision against the possibility of the cleaning of the rubbish-heap was made in the case of the alley, why was no similar provision made in the case dealt with in our Mishnah?
- (55) Lit., 'that', the rubbish-heap at the side of the alley.
- (56) Where the clearance of the comparatively small quantity of rubbish might well be expected.
- (57) That referred to in our Mishnah.
- (58) Which is unlikely to be removed.
- (59) Sc. its branches hanging downwards all around.
- (60) Their separation from the ground by less than three handbreadths is, wider the law of labud, completely disregarded and they are, therefore, deemed to be actually touching the ground; and, since at their other ends at which they are joined to the tree they are raised ten handbreadths from the ground, they constitute a partition ten handbreadths high all round that tree.
- (61) And much more so if they were higher.
- (62) Such a height imparts to them the character of a tree which may not be made use of on the Sabbath.
- (63) Beyond four cubits.
- (64) The tree dealt with in our Mishnah.
- (65) Even though the tree had been originally planted for the purpose of overshadowing the ground and serving as a shelter for watchmen.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 100a

— Because it is a dwelling-place that serves only the outside air,¹ and no movement of objects is permitted in a dwelling-place whose only function is that of serving the outside air, if its area was greater than two beth se'ah.

IF ITS ROOTS ARE HIGH ABOVE THE GROUND etc. It was stated: If the roots of a tree descended from a level that was above three handbreadths into one that was lower than three handbreadths,² Rabbah ruled: It is permitted to use them, while R. Shesheth ruled: It is forbidden to use them. 'Rabbah ruled: It is permitted to use them', since all levels lower than three handbreadths from the ground are regarded as the ground itself.³ 'R. Shesheth ruled: It is forbidden to use them', because, owing to the fact that they derive from a forbidden source,⁴ they themselves are also forbidden. If they⁵ are in the shape of a rocky crag,⁶ those that grow upwards⁷ are forbidden,⁸ those that grow downwards⁹ are permitted,¹⁰ while as to those that grow sideways¹¹ a difference of opinion exists between Rabbah and R. Shesheth;¹² and the same¹³ applies to a dike¹⁴ and a corner.¹⁵

Abaye had¹⁶ a certain palm-tree that projected through the sky-light¹⁷ and when he came to R. Joseph¹⁸ the latter permitted it to him,¹⁹ R. Aha b. Tahlifa observed: In permitting its use to you he²⁰ acted in accordance with Rabbah's view.²¹ Is not this obvious?— It might have been presumed that even according to the view of R. Shesheth a house²² is regarded as full²³ and that one may, therefore, use a tree within less than three handbreadths from the roof, hence we were informed [that the decision was given only in accordance with the view of Rabbah].

We learned: IF ITS ROOTS ARE THREE HANDBREADTHS HIGH ABOVE THE GROUND ONE MAY NOT SIT ON THEM. Now how are we to imagine the circumstances? If they did not²⁴ subsequently bend downwards, is not this²⁵ obvious?²⁶ This must consequently be a case, must it not, where they subsequently bent downwards?²⁷ — No, the fact is that they did not subsequently bend downwards, but²⁸ it is this that we were informed: Even though [on] one of its²⁹ sides [they were] level with the ground.³⁰

Our Rabbis taught: If the roots of a tree were three handbreadths high above the ground, or if there was a hollow space of three handbreadths beneath them, one must not sit on them even though on one side of the tree they were level with the ground, because it is not permissible³¹ either to climb upon a tree or to suspend oneself from a tree or to recline on a tree; nor may one climb upon a tree while it is yet day³² to remain there all the Sabbath day, the law being the same in the case of a tree and in that of any cattle. In the case of a cistern, a ditch, a cave or a wall one may climb up or climb down even if they were a hundred cubits [deep or high].³³

One Baraitha teaches: If a man climbed, up³⁴ he may climb down. But does not another Baraitha teach that he is forbidden to climb down? — This is no difficulty since the former refers to one who climbed up³⁵ while it was yet day³² while the latter refers to one who did it after dusk.³⁶ If you prefer I might reply: Both refer to all ascent after dusk and yet there is no difficulty, since the one refers to an unwitting act while the other refers to an intentional one.³⁷ If you prefer I might say: Both refer to an unwitting act, but the principle underlying their divergence of view is the question whether a penalty has been imposed in respect of an unwitting act as a precaution against the performance of an intentional act. One Master³⁸ is of the opinion that such a penalty has been imposed while the other Master holds that no such penalty has been imposed.

R. Huna son of R. Joshua observed: This³⁹ is similar in principle to the dispute between the following Tannas: If the blood of sacrifices of which one sprinkling only is necessary⁴⁰ was confused with the blood of other sacrifices of which one sprinkling is necessary,⁴¹ each⁴² is to be sprinkled once. If blood of which four sprinklings are necessary was confused with other blood of which four sprinklings were necessary⁴³ each⁴² is to be sprinkled four times. If that which has to be sprinkled four times was confused with that which has to be sprinkled once, R. Eliezer ruled: Each⁴² must be sprinkled four times,⁴⁴ and R. Joshua ruled: Each⁴² must be sprinkled only once.⁴⁵ 'Does he not', said R. Eliezer to him, 'thereby⁴⁶ transgress the law against diminishing from the precepts?'⁴⁷ 'Does he not thereby',⁴⁸ replied R. Joshua. 'transgress the prohibition against adding to the precepts?'⁴⁹ 'This',⁵⁰ R. Eliezer retorted: 'applies only⁵¹ where it is in all isolated condition'. is 'The prohibition against diminishing from the precepts also', said R. Joshua to him, 'applies only when it is in all isolated condition'.⁵² R. Joshua, furthermore, explained: If you sprinkle⁵³ you transgress the prohibition against adding to the precepts and you also perform the act with your own hand, but if you do not sprinkle you transgress indeed the prohibition against diminishing from the precepts but you do not perform any act with your own hand'.⁵⁴ Now, according to R. Eliezer who laid down there⁵⁴ that the performance of an uncertain precept⁵⁵ is preferable.⁵⁶ the man may here also⁵⁷ climb down,⁵⁸ while according to R. Joshua who held there⁵⁴ that the abstention from the performance of an uncertain precept⁵⁹ is preferable.⁶⁰ the man here also⁵⁷ may not climb down.⁶¹ This argument, however, might be fallacious,⁶² since R. Eliezer may have maintained his view, that the performance of an uncertain precept⁵⁵ is preferable.⁵⁶ only there where a positive precept is thereby⁶³ performed. but here,⁵⁷ where⁶⁴ no positive precept is performed⁶⁵ he may also agree that the man must not climb down. Or else: R. Joshua may have maintained his view, that the abstention from the performance of an uncertain precept⁵⁹ is preferable.⁶⁰ only there⁵⁷

- (1) The watchmen use it only during the season when they are engaged in their duties in the fields and vineyards in the open air. No one uses the area under a tree as an ordinary habitation.
 - (2) Sc. they began to bend downwards after they had grown to a high above three handbreadths from the ground.
 - (3) As one may use the ground so may one use the roots within the three handbreadths level.
 - (4) Those parts of the roots that were higher than three handbreadths.
 - (5) The roots.
 - (6) Meshunitha is derived by Rashi from the came root as shen in shen sela', sc. the roots grew upwards and then bent downwards in the shape of a sloping hill, smaller roots branching out of the bigger ones.
 - (7) From a section of a root that was higher than three handbreadths from the ground.
 - (8) Even according to the view of Rabbah, since both roots and source are in a forbidden level.
 - (9) From a root section below the level of three handbreadths.
 - (10) Even by R. Shesheth, since roots as well as source are below three handbreadths from the ground.
 - (11) Sc. they branch out from a root section that was above the three handbreadths level and bend downwards within that level.
 - (12) According to the former, their use is permitted since they are bent downwards and reached the low level which is regarded as the ground itself; while according to the latter they are forbidden on account of their source which is within the forbidden level.
 - (13) Divergence of view.
 - (14) Or 'ditch', in which grew a tree, two of whose sides were embedded in the sides of the dike. According to Rabbah the use of the roots that were within three handbreadths from the top of the dike is permitted while according to R. Shesheth, since they grew from a level which is above three handbreadths from the bottom of the dike, they are forbidden.
 - (15) Formed by two walls that enclosed the three sides of a tree whose height reached to within three handbreadths above the walls. According to Rabbah the portion of the tree above the walls may be used since its lower section on those sides is covered by the walls and the part projecting above them is within three handbreadths from their tops. According to R. Shesheth, however, since their source in the exposed side of the tree is above three handbreadths from the ground, this is forbidden. In the case of a tree one of whose sides only adjoins a wall while its other sides remained exposed even Rabbah, it may be added, agrees that its use is forbidden.
 - (16) Within a house.
 - (17) But not above three handbreadths from the roof.
 - (18) To enquire whether its use was permissible on the Sabbath.
 - (19) Because none of the sides of the tree protected above three handbreadths from the roof of the house.
 - (20) R. Joseph.
 - (21) That the source is disregarded. According to R. Shesheth, since the use of the lower section of the tree within the house, which is obviously higher than three handbreadths from the floor, is forbidden, the use of the section above the roof which grows from it is equally forbidden.
 - (22) As in the case of a window (supra 76b).
 - (23) Sc. as if it were full of earth up to the ceiling.
 - (24) After rising to the height of three handbreadths.
 - (25) THAT ONE MAY NOT SIT ON THEM.
 - (26) Of course it is. Why then was it stated?
 - (27) And yet it is forbidden to sit on them. All objection against Rabbah.
 - (28) As to your objection. 'Is not this obvious?'

- (29) The tree's.
- (30) Rabbah maintains his view only where more than one side was on a level with, or within three handbreadths from the ground.
- (31) On the Sabbath.
- (32) Of the Sabbath eve.
- (33) The prohibition to climb up or down a tree on the Sabbath is not title to the trouble or effort involved in the process but to a preventive measure against the possibility of intentional plucking of a growing plant, which is one of the acts of work forbidden on the Sabbath.
- (34) Upon a tree.
- (35) Lit., 'here'.
- (36) In the former case, since his ascent involved no transgression, no penalty was imposed upon him.
- (37) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.
- (38) The author of the latter Baraitha.
- (39) The divergence of opinion between the authors of the Baraithas just discussed.
- (40) On the altar. Lit., 'those that are given by one giving'.
- (41) If a bowl of blood of a firstling, for instance, was confused with that of the tithe of cattle. (The interpretation here follows Bertinoro in Zeb. VIII, 10).
- (42) Cf. Bertinoro l.c.
- (43) As, for instance, the blood of a burnt-offering with that of a peace-offering (cf. prev. n.).
- (44) The superfluous sprinklings in the case of the latter being regarded as those of mere water that can in no way affect the prescribed number.
- (45) Any additional sprinklings would, in the case of the latter, constitute an infringement of the Pentateuchal prohibition against adding to the precepts (cf. Deut. XIII, 1).
- (46) By sprinkling, in the case of the former, less than the prescribed number of times. Lit., 'behold he'.
- (47) Cf. Deut. XIII, 1.
- (48) By his sprinkling, in the case of the latter, more times than required.
- (49) Cf. Supra n. 8.
- (50) The prohibition to add to the precepts.
- (51) Lit., 'the only said'.
- (52) Lit., 'in itself', but not where it is confused with another kind.
- (53) More than the prescribed number of times.
- (54) Zeb. 80a.
- (55) Lit., 'arise and do'.
- (56) To its neglect.
- (57) Where he was on the Sabbath on a tree.
- (58) By doing this he escapes the prohibition against his continued use of the tree.
- (59) Lit., 'sit and do not act'.
- (60) To its performance.
- (61) Since by remaining on the tree he performs no new act.
- (62) Lit., 'perhaps it is not (so)'.
- (63) By the sprinkling.
- (64) By climbing down.
- (65) One only avoids thereby the continued infringement of a negative precept against the use of a tree on the Sabbath.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 100b

where no direct transgression is committed,¹ but here where a direct transgression is committed² he may also agree that the man may climb down!

One [Baraitha] taught, 'The same prohibition³ applies to a green tree and to a dry tree'; and another [Baraitha] taught: 'This prohibition³ applies only to a green tree whereas in the case of a dry one⁴ no prohibition exists'⁵ — Rab Judah replied: This is no difficulty, since the former refers to a tree whose stump grows afresh whereas the latter refers to one whose stump does not grow afresh. But if its stump 'grows afresh', would you describe it as 'dry'? — Rather say: There is no difficulty since the latter refers to the hot season⁶ whereas the former refers to the rainy season.⁷ [You say] in the not season? Surely the fruit⁸ falls off?⁹ — This is a case where it bore no fruit. But do not some chips¹⁰ fall off?⁹ — This is a case where the tree was stripped.¹¹ But, surely, this cannot be right? For did not Rab once visit Afsatia¹² where he forbade the use of a stripped tree? — Rab found an open field and put up a fence round it.¹³

Rami b. Hama,¹⁴ citing R. Assi, ruled: A man is forbidden to walk on grass on the Sabbath, because it is said in Scripture: And he that hasteth with his feet sinneth.¹⁵ One [Baraita] taught: It is permitted to walk on grass on the Sabbath; and another [Baraita] taught that this was forbidden! — This is no difficulty. Since the latter refers to fresh grass whereas the former refers to dry grass.¹⁶ And if you prefer I might say: Both [Baraitas] refer to fresh grass, and yet there is no difficulty since the latter refers to the hot season¹⁷ whereas the former refers to the rainy season. And if you prefer I might reply: Both deal with the hot season, and yet there is no difficulty, since the former deals with a person who wears his shoes whereas the latter deals with one who is barefooted.¹⁸ And if you prefer I might reply: Both deal with a person who wears his shoes, but there is no difficulty since the latter refers to shoes that have nails¹⁹ whereas the former refers to such as have no nails. And if you prefer I might reply: Both deal with shoes that have nails, but the latter refers to long and tangled grass²⁰ whereas the former refers to one that is not tangled.²¹ Nowadays, however, since we have it as an established rule that the law is in agreement with R. Simeon,²² it is permitted to walk on grass] in all the cases mentioned.²³

Rami b. Hama citing R. Assi further ruled: A man is forbidden to compel his wife to the [marital] obligation, since it is said in Scripture: And he that hasteth with his feet²⁴ sinneth.²⁵

R. Joshua b. Levi similarly stated: Whosoever compels his wife to the [marital] obligation will have unworthy children. Said R. Ika b. Hinena: What is the Scriptural proof? 'Also without consent²⁶ the soul²⁷ is hot good.'²⁵ So it was also taught: Also without consent²⁶ the soul is not good,²⁵ refers to a man who compels his wife to the [marital] obligation: And he that hasteth with his feet sinneth,²⁵ refers to the man who has intercourse twice in succession. But, surely, this cannot be right! For did not Raba state, 'He who desires all his children to be males should cohabit twice in succession'? — This is no difficulty, since the latter deals with the woman's] consent; whereas the former, without her consent.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani citing R. Johanan:²⁸ stated: A woman who solicits her husband to the [marital] obligation will have children the like of whom did not exist even in the generation of Moses. For of the generation of Moses it is written: Get you from each one of your tribes, wise men and understanding, and full of knowledge,²⁹ and then it follows: So I took the heads of your tribes, wise men and full of knowledge.³⁰ while men of 'understanding' he could not find, whereas in the case of Leah it is written in Scripture, 'And Leah went out to meet him, and said: Thou must come unto me, for I have surely hired thee,'³¹ and subsequently it is written, 'And of the children of Issachar,³² men that had understanding³³ of the times, to know what Israel ought to do, the heads of them were two hundred, and all their brethren were at their commandment.'³⁴

But can that be right?³⁵ seeing that R. Isaac b. Abdimi stated: Eve was cursed with ten curses, since it is written: Unto the woman He said, and I will greatly multiply,³⁶ which refers to the two drops of blood, one being that of menstruation and the other that of virginity, 'thy pain'³⁶ refers to the pain of bringing up children, 'and thy travail'³⁶ refers to the pain of conceptions 'in pain thou shalt bring forth children'³⁶ is to be understood in its literal meaning, 'and thy desire shall be to thy husband'³⁶ teaches that a woman yearns for her husband when he is about to set out on a journey, 'and he shall rule over thee'³⁶ teaches that while the wife solicits with her heart the husband does so with his mouth, this being a fine trait of character among women?³⁷ — What was meant is³⁸ that she ingratiates herself with him.³⁹ But are not these⁴⁰ only seven? When R. Dimi came⁴¹ he explained: She is wrapped up like a mourner,⁴² banished from the company of all men⁴³ and confined within a prison.⁴⁴ What is meant by ‘banished from the company of all men’? [If it be suggested: That she is forbidden to meet a man in privacy, is not the man also but could be retorted.] forbidden to meet a woman in privacy? — The meaning rather is that she is forbidden to marry two men. In a Baraitha it was taught: She grows long hair like Lilith,⁴⁵ sits when making water like a beast, and serves as a bolster for her husband. And the other?⁴⁶ — These, he holds, are rather complimentary to her, R. Hiyya having made the following statement: What is meant by the Scriptural text: Who teacheth us by⁴⁷ the beasts of the earth and maketh us wise by⁴⁸ the fowls of the heaven?⁴⁹ ‘Who teacheth us by the beasts’ refers to the mule which kneels when it makes water, ‘and maketh us wise by the fowls of the heaven’ refers to the cock which first coaxes and then mates.

R. Johanan observed: If the Torah had not been given we could have learnt modesty from the cat, honesty⁵⁰ from the ant, chastity⁵¹ from the dove, and good manners from the cock who first coaxes and then mates. And how⁵² does he coax his mate? — Rab Judah citing Rab replied. He tells her this: ‘I will buy you a cloak that will reach to your feet’.⁵³ After the event he tells her,⁵⁴ ‘May the cat⁵⁵ tear off my⁵⁶ crest if I have⁵⁷ any money and do not buy you one’.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 101a

MISHNAH. WITH THE DOOR¹ IN A REAR COURT, OR THE STOP-GAPS² IN A BREACH OR REED-MATS ONE MAY NOT CLOSE³ [AN OPENING]⁴ UNLESS THEY ARE RAISED⁵ FROM THE GROUND.⁶ GEMARA. Does not the following, however, present a contradiction:⁷ With a door, a reed-mat or a keg,⁸ that drag along the ground, it is permitted, whenever they are fastened and suspended, to close an opening on the Sabbath and much more so⁹ on a festival day?¹⁰ — Abaye replied: The latter refers to such as have a hinge.¹¹ Raba replied: It refers to a case where they had a hinge.¹²

An objection was raised: With a door, a reed-mat or a keg,⁸ that drag along the ground, whenever they are fastened, suspended and raised¹³ from the ground even if only by a hair's breadth. It is permitted to close an opening; otherwise this is forbidden?¹⁴ Abaye explains¹⁵ in accordance with his view, and Raba explains¹⁵ in accordance with his view. 'Abaye explains in accordance with his view': They must either have a hinge or be raised from the ground. 'Raba explains in accordance with his view': They must either have had a hinge or must be raised from the ground.

Our Rabbis taught: If boughs of thorn-bushes, or bundles of wood¹⁶ were prepared to serve as a stop-gap for a breach in a courtyard, whenever they are fastened and suspended, it is permitted to close with them on the Sabbath and much more so on⁹ a festival day.

R. Hiyya learned: With a widowed¹⁷ door that is dragged upon the ground it is not permitted to close [an opening]. What are we to understand by a 'widowed door'? — Some say: One made of a single board.¹⁸ Others Say: One that has no frame.¹⁹ Rab Judah ruled: A pile²⁰ may be laid out from the top downwards.²¹ but it is forbidden to build it up from the bottom upwards,²² and the same applies to an egg,²³ a pot,²⁴ a bed²⁵ and a cask.²⁶

A certain Sadducee once said to R. Joshua b. Hananiah. 'You are a brier, since of you it is written in Scripture: the best of them is as a brier'.²⁷ 'Foolish man', the other replied, 'look up the conclusion²⁸ of the text where it is written:²⁷ The upright man is a better [protection] than a tabernacle'.²⁹ 'What then was meant by The best of them is as a brier?' 'As briars protect a gap so do the best men among us protect us'. Another interpretation: The best of them is as a hedek³⁰ because they crush³¹ the wicked men in Gehenna; as it is said in Scripture: Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion, for I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in pieces³² many peoples etc.³³

MISHNAH. A MAN MAY NOT STAND IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN AND OPEN³⁴ A DOOR IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN,³⁵ OR IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN AND³⁶ OPEN A DOOR IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN,³⁷ UNLESS³⁸ HE HAS MADE³⁹ A PARTITION TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH.⁴⁰ SO R. MEIR. THEY⁴¹ SAID TO HIM: IT ONCE HAPPENED AT THE BUTCHERS'⁴² MARKET IN JERUSALEM THAT⁴³ THEY LOCKED THEIR SHOPS⁴⁴ AND LEFT THE KEY IN A WINDOW ABOVE A SHOP DOOR. R. JOSE SAID: IT WAS THE WOOL-DEALERS' MARKET.

GEMARA. As to the Rabbis,⁴¹ how is it that when R. Meir spoke of a PUBLIC DOMAIN⁴⁵ they retorted by citing a karmelith,⁴⁶ since Rabbah b. Bar Hana⁴⁷ stated in the name of R. Johanan: As for Jerusalem, were it not that its gates were closed at night, one would have incurred the guilt of carrying in it as a public domain?⁴⁸ R. Papa⁴⁹ replied: The latter statement⁵⁰ refers to the time before breaches were made in its wall whereas the former⁵¹ refers to the time after the breaches had been made. Raba replied: The final clause⁵² deals with⁵³ the gates of a garden.⁵⁴ and it is this that was implied: IS A MAN MAY NOT STAND IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN AND⁵⁵ OPEN A DOOR IN A KARMELITH,⁵⁶ OR IN A KARMELITH AND⁵⁷ OPEN A DOOR⁵⁸ IN A PRIVATE DOMAIN.⁵⁹

- (1) Which as a rule is not fixed to the wall but is movable, and leaned against the doorway only when it is desired to shut it.
 - (2) Or '(bundles of) thorns'.
 - (3) On the Sabbath.
 - (4) A doorway or breach.
 - (5) Lit., 'high'.
 - (6) If they reach the ground this is forbidden, since their erection resembles 'building'.
 - (7) To the ruling in our Mishnah.
 - (8) Aliter: A plough used as a bar.
 - (9) Lit., 'and there is no need to say'.
 - (10) How then is this Baraitha, which only insists on suspension, to be reconciled with our Mishnah which demands that THEY must be RAISED FROM THE GROUND?
 - (11) Which imparts to them the character of a proper door the closing of which cannot be mistaken for 'building'. Suspension alone is, therefore, sufficient.
 - (12) Though they have none now. The mere mark of the hinge suffices to impart to them the character of a proper door (cf. prev. ii.)
 - (13) Lit., 'high'.
 - (14) Lit., '(they) may not close with them'. How then is this Baraitha, which requires both suspension and raising from the ground, to be reconciled with the previous Baraitha and with our Mishnah?
 - (15) The last cited Baraitha.

- (16) So R. Han.
- (17) This is explained anon.

- (20) For making a fire on a festival day.
- (21) The upper logs or chips being held up in the air while the lower ones are inserted and arranged beneath them.
- (22) Placing, for instance, two chips at the bottom and another two crosswise above them; since this has the appearance of building which is forbidden on a festival day as on the Sabbath.
- (23) That is to be roasted. The egg must be held up while the wood is laid out under it (cf. prev. two notes).
- (24) Supported on two casks. Cf. Bezah 32b.

- (32) Or 'crush'.
- (33) Micah IV, 13.
- (34) With a key that he picks up in the public domain.
- (35) Even though the key was picked up within four cubits from the door. This is a preventive measure against the possibility of transferring the key from the public into the private domain.
- (36) By taking up a key from the roof of a shop that was no less than four handbreadths wide and above ten handbreadths from the ground.
- (37) Though the key was picked up in a private domain. This is a preventive measure against the possible transfer of the key from the private into the public domain below ten handbreadths from the ground.

- (44) The key being held above ten handbreadths from the ground.
- (45) The movement of objects between which add a private domain is Pentateuchally forbidden.
- (46) Which is subject to a Rabbinical restriction only.
- (47) Var. lec.. R. Huna (Asheri).
- (48) As the gates, however, were closed at night all the roads and streets of the city were only subject to the restrictions of a karmelith. Now since the preventive measure against the possibility of transferring the key from one domain into another was made by R. Meir only in the case of a public and a private domain (where a Pentateuchal law might be transgressed), what objection does the Jerusalem incident (which relates to a private domain and a karmelith where only a rabbinical law might possibly be transgressed) provide against R. Meir?
- (49) Var. lec. Rabbah.
- (50) Lit., 'here', that Jerusalem is subject to the restrictions of a karmelith only.

- (54) Which, being greater than two beth se'ah, and not having been enclosed for dwelling purposes, is subject to the laws of a karmelith.
- (55) By pushing his hand through a hole in its walls into the garden.
- (56) Sc. the garden, this being a preventive measure against the possibility of transferring the key from the karmelith into the private domain.

UNLESS¹ HE HAS MADE A PARTITION TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH;² SO R. MEIR. THEY SAID TO HIM: IT ONCE HAPPENED AT THE BUTCHERS'³ MARKET IN JERUSALEM THAT THEY USED TO LOCK THEIR SHOPS AND LEFT THE KEY IN A WINDOW ABOVE A SHOP DOOR. R. JOSE SAID: IT WAS THE WOOL-DEALERS' MARKET.

Our Rabbis taught: The doors of garden⁴ gateways, whenever they have a gate-house⁵ on their inner side, may be opened and closed from within;⁶ if they have it on their outer side;⁷ they may be opened and shut from without;⁸ if they have one on either side they may be opened and shut from either side;⁸ if they have none on either side they may be neither opened nor shut from either side.⁹ The same law applies also to shops that open into a public domain:¹⁰ Whenever the lock is below ten handbreadths from the ground¹¹ the key may be brought on the Sabbath eve and placed on the threshold,¹² and on the following day the door may be opened and duly closed when the key may again be placed on the threshold;¹³ and whenever the lock is above ten handbreadths from the ground.¹⁴ the key must be brought on the Sabbath eve and inserted in the lock, and on the following day It may be opened and shut and returned to its place;¹⁵ so R. Meir. The Sages, however, ruled: Even when the lock is above ten handbreadths from the ground the key may be brought on the Sabbath eve and placed on the threshold, and on the following day the door may be opened and shut and the key may be returned to its place¹⁶ or it may be put on a window¹⁷ above the door. If the window, however, had an area of four handbreadths by four this is forbidden, since the transfer of the key would constitute a transfer from one domain into another.¹⁸

Since it was stated: 'And the same law applies also to shops It may be concluded that we are dealing with a threshold¹⁹ that had the status of a karmelith;²⁰ but, then, how are we to imagine the conditions of the lock? if it is one that was less than four handbreadths in width it would surely be a free domain;²¹ and if It was four handbreadths wide, would the Rabbis in such a case²² have ruled: 'Even when the lock is above ten handbreadths from the ground the key may be brought on the Sabbath eve and placed on the threshold and on the following day the door may be opened and shut and the key may be returned to its place²³ or it may be put on a window above the door', seeing that thereby one is moving an object from a karmelith into a private domain?²⁴ — Abaye replied: The fact is that the lock was less than four handbreadths but there was sufficient space [in the door]²⁵ in which to cut and make it up to four handbreadths; and it is this principle on which they²⁶ differ: R. Meir holds the opinion that the door is regarded as virtually cut for the purpose of completing the prescribed width,²⁷ while the Rabbis maintain that it is not regarded as cut for the purpose of completing the prescribed width.²⁸

Said R. Bibi b. Abaye: From this Baraita you may deduce three things: You may deduce that virtual cutting for the purpose of completing a prescribed width may be assumed; you may deduce that R. Meir²⁹ withdrew from his view on the gates of a garden;³⁰ and from the ruling of the Rabbis³¹ you may also deduce that R. Dimi's view is tenable.³² For when R. Dimi came³³ he reported in the name of R. Johanan: In a place whose area is less than four handbreadths by four³⁴ it is permissible for both the people of the public domain and those of the private domain to re-arrange their burdens, provided only that they do not exchange them.³⁵

MISHNAH. IF A BOLT³⁶ HAD A KNOB AT ONE END,³⁷ R. ELIEZER FORBIDS IT³⁸ [TO BE MOVED]³⁹ BUT R. JOSE PERMITS IT.⁴⁰ SAID R. ELIEZER: IN A SYNAGOGUE AT TIBERIAS THE COMMON PRACTICE, IN FACT, WAS TO TREAT IT⁴¹ AS PERMITTED, UNTIL R. GAMALIEL AND THE ELDERS CAME AND FORBADE IT TO THEM. R. JOSE RETORTED: THEY TREATED IT AS FORBIDDEN, BUT R. GAMALIEL AND THE ELDERS CAME AND PERMITTED IT TO THEM.

GEMARA. Where it⁴² can be lifted up by the cord to which It was tied,⁴³ no one disputes that it is permissible to move it].⁴⁴ They only differ

They may not be opened from within as a preventive measure against the possibility of taking the key from the private domain (the lock) into a karmelith (the garden) and they may not be opened from without as a preventive measure against the possibility of taking the key from the private domain into the public domain.
 - (10) This is discussed infra.
 - (11) So that it has the status of a karmelith.
 - (12) Which is also a karmelith.
 - (13) This is permitted, since the man, though standing in the public domain (cf. Bah a.I.) only moves the key from one karmelith into another.
 - (14) In consequence of which, since it is also four handbreadths wide, it has the status of a private domain.
 - (15) On the top of the lock which is also a private domain. It may not be placed on the threshold Since its removal from the lock to it would be tantamount to a transfer from a private domain into a karmelith.

 - (19) Belonging to the shops.
 - (20) If it had not been a karmelith hut a public domain it would have been forbidden to transfer the key from it into the lock.

(32) Lit., 'there is'.

(33) From Palestine to Babylon.

(34) Sc. a free domain.

(35) Because it is forbidden to transfer an object from a public domain into a private one or vice versa even via a free domain (cf. supra n. 7).

(36) Used for securing a door.

(37) Lit., 'at whose head there was'.

(41) The movement of the bolt with the knob.

(42) The BOLT.

(43) Lit., 'by its binding', sc. the cord by which it is fastened to the door is strong enough to hold it even when it is lifted by it.

(44) Since it is obvious to all that the bolt formed a part of the door's equipment and its insertion into its socket constitutes no 'building'.

where it cannot be lifted up by the cord to which it was tied in which case one Master¹ holds that, since there was a knob at one end,² it has the status of a vessel,³ while the other Master⁴ holds that, since it cannot be lifted up by the cord to which it was tied,⁵ it⁶ may not [be moved].⁷

MISHNAH. WITH A BOLT⁸ THAT DRAGS ALONG THE GROUND⁹ IT¹⁰ IS PERMITTED TO SHUT UP [A DOOR] IN THE TEMPLE¹¹ BUT NOT IN THE COUNTRY;¹² BUT WITH ONE THAT RESTS ON THE GROUND¹³ THIS IS FORBIDDEN EVERYWHERE.¹⁴ R. JUDAH RULED: WITH ONE THAT RESTS ON THE GROUND¹⁵ THIS IS PERMITTED, IN THE TEMPLE¹⁶ BUT WITH ONE THAT DRAGS ON THE GROUND THIS IS ALSO PERMITTED, IN THE COUNTRY.¹⁷

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: What is the definition of 'a bolt that drags' wherewith it is permitted to shut up [a door] in the Temple but not in the country? One¹⁸ that is fastened¹⁹ and suspended and whose one end touches the ground. R. Judah ruled: With such a bolt²⁰ it is permitted [to shut up a door] even in the country; but what kind of bolt is it wherewith it is permitted [to shut up] in the Temple and not in the country? One that is neither fastened¹⁹ nor suspended²¹ but which is removed²² and put away in a corner.

Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah²³ in the case of a bolt that drags along the ground.²⁴ Raba observed: This applies only where it is fastened²⁵ to the door.²⁶ But could this be right, seeing that R. Tabla, when he visited Mahuza, saw a bolt that was suspended from the side of a doorway and yet made no remark whatsoever on the matter? — That was one that could be lifted up by the cord to which it was tied.²⁷

R. Iwya once visited Nehardea and observed that a certain man was fastening a bolt²⁸ with a piece of reed grass. 'This', he remarked: 'must not shut up'.²⁹

R. Zera enquired: What is the ruling where the bolt was pressed into the ground?³⁰ — What question is this, retorted R. Joseph, has he not heard what was taught: 'If it³¹ was detached³² it is forbidden³³ but if it was pressed into the ground it is permitted; and R. Judah ruled: If it was pressed into the ground, even though it was not detached, it is forbidden', and in connection with this 'Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah in the case where it³¹ was pressed into the ground?³⁴ But what is the reason?³⁵ — Abaye replied: Because it³⁶ has the appearance of building.

R. Nehumai b. Zechariah enquired of Abaye: What is the ruling where a handle was attached to the bolt?³⁷ — You, the other replied, speak now of a club.³⁸ It was stated: R. Nehumai b. Adda ruled: If a handle was attached to it the handling of the bolt] is permitted.³⁹

At the house of R. Pedath they had⁴⁰ a beam which ten men had to lift to fix it in position⁴¹ at the door, but he told them no word against this.⁴² It has,⁴³ he observed, the character of a vessel,⁴⁴ At the house of Mar Samuel they had⁴⁰ a mortar of the capacity of an artaba,⁴⁵ and Mar Samuel allowed it to be fixed behind the door.⁴⁶ It has,⁴³ he observed, the character of a vessel.

Rami b. Ezekiel sent to R. Amram the following message: ‘Win the Master tell us some of those excellent sayings that you once told us in the name of R. Assi in respect of the arches of a boat’.⁴⁷ He sent word in reply: Thus said R. Assi, ‘With reference to the arches of a boat, whenever they are a handbreadth⁴⁸ wide or, even when they are less than⁴⁹ a handbreadth in width, provided there was no space of three handbreadths intervening between the one and the other,⁵⁰ it is permissible to bring a that on the morrow⁵¹ and to Spread it over them —⁵² What is the reason? One is thereby merely adding to an occasional tent⁵³ which is perfectly legitimate.⁵⁴

R. Huna possessed some rams that needed the shade in the daytime and the open air at night.⁵⁵ When he came to Rab⁵⁶ the latter told him, ‘Go and roll up the reed mat⁵⁷ but leave one handbreadth rolled,⁵⁸ and on the morrow⁵¹ spread it all out and you will be merely adding to all occasional tent,⁵⁹ and that is perfectly legitimate.

Rab citing R. Hiyya ruled: It is permissible to draw, and to withdraw a certain on the Sabbath.⁶⁰ It is also permissible to take down or to put up a bridal⁶¹ canopy⁶² on the Sabbath.⁶³ Said R. Shesheth the son of R. Idi: This⁶⁴ applies only where the top was less than a handbreadth in width⁶⁵ but where the top was one handbreadth⁶⁶ wide this is forbidden;⁶⁷ and even when the top was less than one handbreadth wide this⁶⁴ is applicable only if its width⁶⁸ within⁶⁹ three handbreadths from the top⁶⁹ was less than⁷⁰ a handbreadth but if within⁶⁹ three handbreadths from the top it was one handbreadth wide this is forbidden;⁶⁷ and, even where it was less than⁷⁰ a handbreadth wide within three handbreadths from the top.⁶⁹ this applies only where

(2) So that it can be used as a pestle.

(3) Which may be moved on the Sabbath.

(4) R. Eliezer

(5) In consequence of which it must be regarded as disconnected from the door.

(6) Like a bolt that dragged along the ground (v. following Mishnah).

(7) Since its insertion in the sockets has the appearance of ‘building’ of the Sabbath.

(8) Which had no knob.

(9) Sc. one that was not suspended from the door but was tied to a cord long enough to enable it to drag on the floor.

(10) Since the prohibition to move it is only Rabbinical. Pentateuchally, as the cord forms a connecting link with the door, it is regarded as belonging to the door's equipment.

(11) Where Rabbinical Sabbath restrictions do not apply.

(12) Anywhere outside the Temple where Rabbinical restrictions are in force. A bolt that drags on the ground seems to have no connection with the door, and its insertion in the threshold sockets would have the appearance of ‘building’ on the Sabbath.

(13) Sc. one that is completely detached from the door.

(14) Lit., ‘here and here’, since its insertion in the sockets of the threshold may be regarded as actual ‘building’.

- (15) Since elsewhere, in his opinion, its insertion in the threshold socket is regarded as building according to Rabbinical law only.
- (16) Where Rabbinical Sabbath restrictions do not apply.
- (17) Because the cord by which it is fastened to the door provides sufficient indication that it forms part of the door's equipment and the question of building does not, therefore, arise.
- (18) Lit., 'all'.
- (19) To the door, by a cord.
- (20) Since it is fastened to the door, though not actually suspended from it.
- (21) From the door.
- (22) From the sockets.
- (23) That it is permitted to shut up a door even in the country.
- (24) But not in the case of one that is completely detached from the door which R. Judah permitted to use in the Temple. The insertion of a detached bolt in the sockets is regarded as actual building which, however small in extent, is Pentateuchally forbidden.
- (25) By a cord.
- (26) Where the connection between the door and the bolt is evident; but not where it was only tied to a door-post.
- (27) Lit., 'by its binding', sc. the cord was a strong one and the connection between the bolt and the door was unmistakable. The question of building did not, therefore, arise.
- (28) To a door.
- (29) On the Sabbath. As reed grass is too frail to sustain the weight of a bolt it is regarded as non-existent, and the bolt must be deemed to be completely detached from the door.
- (30) Sc. it did not merely rest in a socket in the threshold but passed through it down into the ground under it. Is the insertion of the bolt in such a manner, it is asked, regarded as building?
- (31) The door bolt.
- (32) From the door, sc. if the cord whereby it was fastened to it was broken and the bolt, when not in use, now rests in a corner of the room.
- (33) To secure the door with it.
- (34) Anyone who heard of this could not, of course, have asked R. Zera's question which is here clearly solved.
- (35) For Rab Judah's ruling.
- (36) The Insertion of a bolt through a socket in a threshold right into the ground.
- (37) Lit., 'he made for it a house of the hand', at one of its ends; so that it assumed the shape of a mallet or club and, therefore, the character of a vessel. May such a bolt, it is asked, be moved on the Sabbath even where it was completely detached from the door?
- (38) Which, being suitable as a pestle for crushing grain and spices, has undoubtedly the character of a vessel which may well be handled on the Sabbath.
- (39) Cf. prev. n.
- (40) Lit., 'there was'.
- (41) Lit., 'and they thrust it'.
- (42) For fixing it in position on Sabbath.
- (43) Despite its huge size.
- (44) Since it can be used as a bench.
- (45) A Persian and an Egyptian dry measure (Jast.) one containing fifteen se'ah (Rashi).
- (46) On Sabbath.
- (47) Which serve as a framework for the canvas or other material used as a shelter against the sun or rain.
- (48) Or more. Such a width constitutes an occasional tent.
- (49) Lit., 'or also, there is not in them'.
- (50) So that the rule of labud may be applied.
- (51) I.e., on the Sabbath.
- (52) Though the canvas, or whatever the material, constitutes a tent the construction of which on the Sabbath is forbidden.
- (53) The arches.
- (54) Lit., 'it is considered well or right'.

- (55) On a weekday this was easily arranged by spreading a mat on the top of the shed in the morning and by rolling it up in the evening; but on the Sabbath the question of tent building arose.
- (56) To consult him on the procedure to be adopted on the Sabbath.
- (57) Which was unrolled during the Sabbath eve as on all other weekdays.
- (58) so that an occasional tent remains.
- (59) Cf. prev. n.
- (60) Such an act is regarded neither as the building nor as the demolishing of a 'tent', since the curtain does not serve the purpose of a permanent wall but merely that of a door which may well be opened and closed On the Sabbath.
- (61) Lit., 'bridegrooms'.
- (62) A sort of curtain hung up above the bed in a slanting position.
- (63) The reason follows.
- (64) The permissibility.
- (65) In which case (cf. prev. n.) the canopy cannot be regarded as a tent.
- (66) Or more.
- (67) Since it is regarded as a valid tent the construction and demolition of which on the Sabbath is forbidden.
- (68) Sc. the horizontal distance between the slope of the curtain and its perpendicular height at the given point.
- (69) Lit., 'within less than three near the roof.'
- (70) Lit., 'there is not'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 102b

the measurement of the slope¹ was less than a handbreadth,² but if It was a handbreadth this is forbidden, since the slopes of tents are regarded as tents.³

R. Shesheth⁴ son of R. Idi further stated: A felt cap⁵ is permitted to be worn on the sabbath.⁶ But was it not taught that this⁷ was forbidden? — There is no difficulty, since the latter deals with one whose peak⁸ was one handbreadth wide,⁹ whereas the former deals with one whose peak⁸ was less than a handbreadth wide. Now then,¹⁰ would it also be forbidden to let one's cloak hang down¹¹ to the extent of a handbreadth?¹² — Rather say:¹³ This is no difficulty since the former deals with one that was tight¹⁴ whereas the latter deals with one that was not tight.¹⁵

MISHNAH. A LOWER PIVOT¹⁶ MAY BE RE-INSERTED IN ITS SOCKET IN THE TEMPLE¹⁷ BUT NOT IN THE COUNTRY.¹⁸ THE RE-INSERTION OF THE UPPER ONE,¹⁹ HOWEVER, IS EVERYWHERE FORBIDDEN.²⁰ R.JUDAH RULED: THE UPPER ONE MAY BE RE-INSERTED IN THE TEMPLE²¹ AND THE LOWER ONE IN THE COUNTRY ALSO.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: The pivot²² of the door of a box, a chest or a turret may be re-inserted into its socket in the Temple,²³ while in the country it may only be adjusted;²⁴ but the upper one²⁵ may not be re-inserted in either place;²⁶ the former prohibition²⁷ being a preventive measure against the possibility of one's driving it into its socket by force; and should one drive It in, the obligation of a sin-offering is incurred. The pivot of the door of a cistern, a cellar or an annexe²⁸ may not be re-inserted in the socket,²⁹ and if one did re-insert it a sin-offering is incurred.

MISHNAH. IT IS PERMISSIBLE³⁰ TO REPLACE A PLASTER ON A WOUND³¹ IN THE TEMPLE³² BUT NOT IN THE COUNTRY.³³ FOR THE FIRST TIME, HOWEVER, THIS³⁴ IS FORBIDDEN EVERYWHERE.³⁵ GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: A plaster that was detached from a wound may be replaced³⁶ on the Sabbath.³⁷ R. Judah ruled: Only if it slipped downwards may it be pushed back upwards or if it slipped upwards it may be pushed back downwards.³⁸ One may also uncover a part of the plaster and wipe the opening of the wound³⁹ and then another part of the plaster may be uncovered and the opening of the wound³⁹ be wiped, but the plaster itself may not be wiped off since such wiping is tantamount to spreading the salve;⁴⁰ and if one did spread the salve the obligation of a sin-offering is incurred.

Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah. This,⁴¹ R. Hisda observed, was learnt only where it⁴² slipped off on to an object,⁴³ but if it slipped off on to the ground all agree that it is forbidden to replace it on the wound.

Mar son of R. Ashi stated: I was once standing in the presence of my father when his plaster slipped off⁴⁴ on to his pillow and he replaced it. 'Does not the Master accept', I asked him, 'the statement of R. Hisda that they⁴⁵ differed only where it⁴² slipped off on to an object⁴³ but that if it slipped off on to the ground all agree that replacement is forbidden; in connection with which Samuel stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah'?⁴⁶ — 'I', he replied, 'did not hear of this, by which I mean:⁴⁷ I do not accept it'.

MISHNAH. A STRING⁴⁸ MAY⁴⁹ BE TIED UP IN THE TEMPLE⁵⁰ BUT NOT IN THE COUNTRY.⁵¹ FOR THE FIRST TIME, HOWEVER,⁵² THIS IS FORBIDDEN EVERYWHERE.⁵³

GEMARA. Is not our Mishnah⁵⁴ in disagreement with the following: If the string of a harp was broken⁵⁵ one would not tie it up but secure it with a loop?⁵⁶ — This is no difficulty, since the latter represents the view of the Rabbis whereas the former represents that of R. Eliezer. According to R. Eliezer who holds that the preliminary requirements of a precept⁵⁷ supersede the Sabbath one may tie the string;⁵⁸ while according to the Rabbis who ruled that they did not supersede it one may only secure it with a loop. But if this⁵⁹ represents the view of R. Eliezer should not tying be permitted also for the first time?⁶⁰ — Rather say: This is no difficulty since the former⁵⁹ is the view of R. Judah⁶¹ whereas the latter is that of the Rabbis.⁶² According to whose view, however, did R. Judah⁶³ give his ruling?⁶⁴

(1) From the top to its lowest point.

(2) Sc. the slope was short and steep.

(3) As the top must be less than one handbreadth wide so must be the measurement of the slope. To obtain such a slope, since no bed can possibly be narrower than two handbreadths and a fraction, the roof of the canopy would have to be made up of a number of short curtains spread over a number of poles respectively, each of which complied with the measurements prescribed. For the sides of the canopy separate curtains hanging down vertically would have to be provided.

(4) So with MS. M. Cur. edd. 'Shisha'.

(5) Saiyana, a kind of cap made of felt with a peak projecting above the wearer's forehead.

(6) Though the peak has the shape or appearance of a 'tent'.

(7) The wearing of a saiyana on the Sabbath.

(8) Cf. supra n. 1.

(9) Which is regarded as a tent.

(10) Since the projection of a part of a cap to the extent of one handbreadth is treated as a 'tent' to cause the wearing of the cap to be forbidden.

(11) In front of one's forehead by pulling the cloak above one's head.

(12) Since the peak of the cap is regarded as a 'tent' the overhanging part of the cloak should also be so regarded. As such a ruling, however, would be absurd why should it be applied in the case of the cap?

(13) in reply to the contradiction between the Baraita and the ruling of R. Shesheth.

(14) On one's head.

(15) The prohibition against wearing it being due, not to the reason that the peak is regarded as a 'tent', but to the possibility that the cap might be blown off and the man on recovering it would carry it along a greater distance than four cubits in the public domain. Such a possibility need not, of course, be provided against in the case of a cloak or in the case of a cap that is set tight on one's head which cannot easily be blown off.

(16) Of the door of a cupboards a window or the like that open sideways.

(17) On the Sabbath. So long as the upper one remains in its socket it is easy for the lower one to be re-inserted and the act cannot, therefore, be regarded as 'building' which is forbidden.

- (18) Where (as explained infra) a preventive measure has been enacted against the possibility of driving the pivot into the socket with the aid of a hammer or axe which is, of course, forbidden on the Sabbath.
- (19) Which requires great exertion after the lower one had come out and the door was practically dragging on the ground.
- (20) Lit., 'here and here'. This Tanna is of the opinion that the term 'building' is also applicable to articles and, since building is an activity Pentateuchally forbidden on the Sabbath, and since a Pentateuchal prohibition retains its force in the Temple also, the re-insertion of the upper pivot (cf. prev. n.) on the Sabbath is forbidden in the Temple as well as in the country.
- (21) Though not in the country.
- (22) Sc. the lower one (as is evident from what follows).
- (23) V. supra p. 710, n. 12.
- (24) Lit., '(they) press down'. If, however, it has completely come out of the socket it may not be re-inserted.
- (25) Which requires great exertion after the lower one had come out and the door was practically dragging on the ground.
- (26) V. p. 710, n. 15.
- (27) That against the insertion of a lower pivot into its socket in the country (cf. Rashi).
- (28) Since they are within, or attached to the ground.
- (29) Any addition to such a structure (cf. prev. n.) is regarded as 'building'.
- (30) on the Sabbath.
- (31) If a priest had to remove it owing to the performance of a duty which required that there be no interception between his hand and the ritual object he handled.
- (32) For the reason cf. Beza 11b.
- (33) This being a preventive measure against the spreading of the salve on the plaster, which is forbidden under the category of 'erasing' which is one of the main classes of work forbidden on the Sabbath.
- (34) The application of a new plaster to a wound.
- (35) Even in the Temple. While replacing a plaster that had been removed for the purpose of performing a Temple service has been allowed in order to prevent a priest from abstaining from his Temple duties on account of a plaster on his hand, the application of a plaster for the first time, which cannot affect the Temple service, could not be allowed since such an application would infringe (cf. Supra p. 711, n. 13) a Rabbinical enactment.
- (36) Even in the country.
- (37) As such accidents do not frequently happen the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure against them.
- (38) But if it was completely detached it may not be replaced.
- (39) On the exposed part.
- (40) Which, as explained supra, is forbidden as a form of 'erasing'.
- (41) That the Rabbis differ from it. Judah allow a completely detached plaster to be replaced on a wound.
- (42) The plaster.
- (43) A cushion, for instance.
- (44) Lit., 'it fell for him'.
- (45) R. Judah and the Rabbis.
- (46) Viz., that even where a plaster had only slipped off upon an object it is forbidden to replace it on a wound. Now, since this is the halachah, why did he disregard it?
- (47) Lit., 'as if to say'.
- (48) Of the musical instruments used by Levites in the Temple service.
- (49) If it was broken on the Sabbath.
- (50) The reason is given in the Gemara infra.
- (51) The reason is given in the Gemara infra.
- (52) I.e., to insert a new string on the Sabbath.
- (53) Lit., 'here and here', in the Temple as well as in the country; since such work could have been performed on the Sabbath eve.
- (54) Which permits a broken string to BE TIED UP IN THE TEMPLE.
- (55) In the Temple on the Sabbath.
- (56) A tie, however, was forbidden (cf. Shah. 113a).

(57) Such as the chopping of wood and the burning of charcoal for the purpose of preparing a knife for the performance of the precept of circumcision (cf. Shab. 130a).

(58) Lit., , ties it since the repair of the string of a musical instrument in the Temple is a preliminary requisite of the precept of the sacrifices which could not be offered in the absence of the Instrumental music of the Levites.

(59) Our Mishnah.

(60) As in the case of charcoal (cf. Supra n. 7).

(61) Who in respect of work on the Sabbath draws no distinction between a knot and a loop (Shab. 113a) and, since the preliminary requisites of a precept supersede the Sabbath, a knot is permitted as well as a loop.

(62) Who do not include the making of a loop among the main classes of work forbidden on the Sabbath, while a knot is included. As the string can be secured by a loop (which is a permitted act) the making of a knot (a forbidden act) was justly forbidden even in the case of the preliminary requisites of a precept.

(63) Who, as has just been explained, is the author of our Mishnah.

(64) According to which the making of a knot (which is one of the main classes of work forbidden on the Sabbath) is forbidden for the first time (even though it is a preliminary requisite of a precept) but permitted after the string had been broken.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 103a

If he made it according to the view of R. Eliezer,¹ should not this be permitted also for the first time? — Rather say: There is no difficulty since the latter represents the view of R. Simeon while the former represents that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: if a Levite had a break in the string of his harp² he may tie it up; R. Simeon ruled: He may only make a loop; R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Neither the one nor the other³ would produce a tone; one⁴ should rather unwind the string from the lower pin⁵ and⁶ wind it⁷ round the upper one or unwind it from the upper pin⁶ and wind it⁷ round the lower one.⁸ And if you prefer I might reply: The former as well as the latter represents the view of the Rabbis,⁹ and yet there is no difficulty, since the former refers to a break in the middle¹⁰ while the latter refers to one at the end.¹¹ And if you prefer I might reply: Both refer to a break in the middle part, but the Master¹² holds that¹³ a preventive measure is enacted,¹⁴ while the Masters¹⁵ hold that no preventive measure is to be enacted.¹⁶ MISHNAH. A WEN¹⁷ MAY BE REMOVED¹⁸ IN THE TEMPLE¹⁹ BUT NOT IN THE COUNTRY.²⁰ IF [THE OPERATION, HOWEVER, MUST BE PERFORMED] WITH AN INSTRUMENT IT IS FORBIDDEN EVERYWHERE.²¹

GEMARA. Is not this²² inconsistent with the following: Carrying it,²³ bringing it from without the permitted Sabbath limit, and removing its wen do not supersede the Sabbath, and R. Eliezer ruled: They do supersede it?²⁴ — R. Eleazar²⁵ and R. Jose son of R. Hanina²⁶ gave different explanations. One Master explains that both rulings refer to a soft wen²⁷ and yet there is no difficulty, since the former deals with removal by the hand while the latter deals with removal by means of an instrument.²⁸ And the other Master explains that both rulings refer to removal with the hand, and yet there is no difficulty, since the latter refers to a soft wen²⁹ while the former refers to a dry one.³⁰ But according to him who explained that the former dealt with removal by the hand while the latter dealt with removal by means of an instrument, what was his reason for not explaining that the latter dealt with a soft wen and the former with a dry one? — He can answer you: A dry one may be removed even by means of an instrument. What is the reason? Because it merely crumbles away. And according to him who explained that the latter referred to a soft wen while the former referred to a dry one, what was his reason for not explaining that the former referred to removal by hand and the latter to an operation by means of an instrument? — He can answer you: Concerning an instrument we have explicitly³¹ learnt: IF [THE OPERATION, HOWEVER, MUST BE PERFORMED] WITH AN INSTRUMENT IT IS FORBIDDEN EVERYWHERE.³² And the other?³³ — The reason why the ruling was taught there is because it was desired to indicate the divergence of opinion between R. Eliezer and the Rabbis.³⁴ And the other?³³ — The ruling³⁵ must be similar to that³⁶ of 'carrying it' or 'bringing it from without the permitted Sabbath limit' which is only a Rabbinical restriction.³⁷ And the other?³³ — As regards 'carrying it' he is not in agreement with R. Nathan who³⁸ holds that a living being carries its own self;³⁹ and as regards 'bringing it from without the permitted Sabbath limit', he is in agreement with R. Akiba who holds that the laws relating to Sabbath limits are Pentateuchal.⁴⁰

R. Joseph raised an objection: R. Eliezer argued,⁴¹ May not this⁴² be inferred a minori ad majus? If slaughtering which⁴³ is forbidden under the category of work⁴⁴ supersedes the Sabbath, how much more so should these,⁴⁵ which come only under the category of shebuth, supersede the Sabbath?⁴⁶ — Rather, said R. Joseph, both⁴⁷ deal with removal⁴⁸ by hand⁴⁹ but⁵⁰ a shebuth⁵¹ relating to the Temple⁵² within the Temple⁵³ has been permitted whereas a shebuth⁵¹ relating to the Temple in the country⁵⁴ has not been permitted.

Abaye once sat at his studies and discoursed on this statement⁵⁵ when R. Safra pointed out to him the following objection: If a man was reading in a scroll on a threshold and the scroll rolled out of his hand, he may roll it back to himself.⁵⁶ Now is it not the case here⁵⁷ one of a shebuth relating to the Temple⁵⁸ in the country⁵⁹ and yet no preventive measure has been enacted⁶⁰ against the possibility that the scroll might fall down completely⁶¹ and the man might then carry it?⁶² — Have we not explained this case as dealing with 'a threshold that was a karmelith in front of which passed a public domain',⁶³ so that, since its rolled up section⁶⁴ was still in his hand, even the prohibition of shebuth does not exist.⁶⁵ He⁶⁶ raised a further objection against him:⁶⁷ The paschal lamb may be lowered into the oven at dusk.⁶⁸ Now is not the case here one of a shebuth relating to the Temple⁶⁹ in the country⁷⁰ and yet no preventive measure was enacted against the possibility that the man might stir up the coals?⁷¹ Thereupon he⁷² remained silent. When he⁷³ came to R. Joseph and told him 'Thus said R. Safra to me, the latter asked him: Why did you not answer him, 'The members of a [paschal lamb] party⁷³ are careful'⁷⁴ — And Abaye?⁷⁵ — We only presume that priests⁷⁶ are careful, but we do not presume that the members of a [paschal lamb] party⁷⁷ are also careful.

Rab⁷⁸ explained: This⁷⁹ represents the view of R. Eliezer who⁸⁰ ruled that the preliminary requisites of a precept supersede the Sabbath,⁸¹ R. Eliezer however, agreeing that a change⁸² should be made as far as this is possible.⁸³

(1) He could not do so according to the Rabbis who do not permit a knot in either case.

(2) On the Sabbath.

(3) Lit., 'it also', the loop like the knot.

(4) Discarding the shorter section of the broken string.

(5) Lit., 'lowers from below', sc. from the lower pin of the harp.

(6) Having obtained sufficient length.

(7) At the other end.

(8) Thus obtaining a sound length of string free from knots or loops. As the lowering of the string is no more forbidden than tying it, the former, which enables the tone to be produced, is to be preferred. Our Mishnah thus represents the view of the Rabbis of the Baraitha who, agreeing with R. Eliezer on one point, that preliminary requisites of a precept supersede the Sabbath, permit the tying up of the string on the Sabbath; but disagreeing with him that such an act is permitted for the first time, permit it only where the break occurred on the Sabbath.

(9) That preliminary requisites which could not be prepared before the Sabbath may be prepared on the Sabbath.

(10) Of the string, when a knot is essential. A loop would not be strong enough. Hence the ruling that A STRING MAY BE TIED UP.

(11) Lit., 'at the side', near the pin, where a loop suffices to hold the string in position.

(12) R. Simeon the author of the Baraitha.

(13) Though Pentateuchally permitted.

(14) Sc. were a knot to be permitted in the middle someone might make one at the ends also.

(15) The Rabbis, the authors of our Mishnah.

(16) Hence the ruling that only a loop may be made but not a knot.

(17) On an animal intended as a sacrifice. Cf. Lev. XXII, 22: . . . having a wen . . . ye shall not offer . . . unto the Lord.

- (18) With the hand. Lit., 'cut'.
- (19) In order to enable the sacrifice to be offered. The removal of a wen with one's fingers on the Sabbath is only Rabbinically forbidden as a preventive measure and no such measures have been enacted in the case of the Temple.
- (20) Where Its removal would not facilitate the performance of any precept.
- (21) Since all operation performed with aid Instrument Is one of the main classes of work which is forbidden on the Sabbath even in the Temple.
- (22) The anonymous ruling that A WEN MAY BE SCRAPED OFF IN THE TEMPLE.
- (23) Lit., 'causing it to ride', sc. carrying the paschal lamb on one's shoulder beyond four cubits in a public domain on the Sabbath when the Passover eve falls on that day.
- (24) Pes. 65b. How then is the anonymous ruling here, which forbids the scraping of a wen on the Sabbath to be reconciled with the anonymous ruling in our Mishnah which permits it?
- (25) Var. lec. 'Eliezer'.
- (26) So MS.M. and marg. glos. Cur.ed. omit the 'R.' before Hanina and insert 'son' in parenthesis.
- (27) Lit., 'that and that about a moist one'.
- (28) While the latter is forbidden as work the former is permitted.
- (29) The removal of which is deemed to be work forbidden on the Sabbath.
- (30) Which crumbles away and its removal cannot, therefore, be regarded as forbidden work.
- (31) Lit., 'if with an instrument, we have surely'.
- (32) And there is, therefore, no need to repeat the same anonymous ruling in the Mishnah, cited from Pesahim.
- (33) How can he maintain his explanation in view of this argument?
- (34) I.e., that R. Eliezer allows the use of an instrument also.
- (35) Concerning the removal of the wen in the Mishnah of Pes.
- (36) Lit., 'similar to . . . he learned'.
- (37) It could not, therefore, refer to an operation by means of an instrument which is Pentateuchally forbidden on the Sabbath.
- (38) In maintaining that the carrying on the Sabbath of a living creature is only Rabbinically forbidden.
- (39) Shab. 94a. Disagreeing with R. Nathan he maintains that such carrying is forbidden Pentateuchally.
- (40) Sot. 27b. As the two rulings of 'carrying' and 'bringing' embody Pentateuchal prohibitions the third one, that relating to the wen, must also be Pentateuchal.
- (41) Against the anonymous ruling in the Mishnah of Pesahim under discussion.
- (42) His statement that the acts enumerated in the anonymous ruling do supersede the Sabbath.
- (43) In the case of all ordinary beast.
- (44) Sc. work forbidden on the Sabbath under pentateuchal law.
- (45) The acts enumerated in the anonymous Mishnah, of Pes.
- (46) Which shows that the prohibitions in the anonymous ruling, including that against the removal of the wen, are merely Rabbinical. How then could anyone maintain that the removal of a wen is a Pentateuchal prohibition?
- (47) Our Mishnah as well as that cited from Pes. 65b.
- (48) Of a soft wen (v. next n.).
- (49) Our Mishnah, therefore, cannot refer to a dry wen since such may be removed even by means of an instrument.
- (50) As to the apparent condition between the two Mishnahs.
- (51) Such as the removal of a soft wen with one's hand.
- (52) Sc. one relating to sacrifices.
- (53) If a wen, for instance, was found on a regular daily offering which is examined within the Temple.
- (54) The removal of a wen from the paschal lamb which, though the animal is ultimately brought into the Temple, is first examined at its owner's home.
- (55) Of R. Joseph.
- (56) Supra 97b q.v. notes.
- (57) Since the scroll, as explained Supra, was one containing a holy Scriptural text.
- (58) The Temple is holy and so also are the Scriptures.
- (59) Sc. outside the Temple.
- (60) Forbidding the rolling hack of the scroll.
- (61) Not even one of its ends remaining in the reader's hand.

- (62) How then could R. Joseph maintain that a 'shebuth of the Temple' was not permitted in the country?
- (63) Supra 98a.
- (64) Lit., 'its knot', 'bunch'.
- (65) Lit., 'even a shebuth also is not', since no Pentateuchal law would be transgressed even if the entire scroll were to fall down and the man were to carry it back into the private domain by way of the karmelith.
- (66) R. Safra.
- (67) R. Joseph as cited by Abaye.
- (68) On Friday eve to roast it (Shab. 19b); though, as a preventive measure or shebuth this is forbidden in the case of other foodstuffs.
- (69) The paschal lamb being a sacrifice.
- (70) Since the roasting is done at one's own home.
- (71) After Sabbath had set in. An objection against R. Joseph.
- (72) Abaye.
- (73) Who joined to participate in the paschal lamb which, like other sacred food, required careful attention.
- (74) And no preventive measures in their case are needed.
- (75) How is it that he overlooked this distinction?
- (76) Who from their youth are trained for the Temple service.
- (77) Who are mere laymen.
- (78) Maintaining that both Mishnahs deal with the case of removal by hand of a soft wen. The Mishnah of Pesahim cannot refer to removal by means of an instrument, on account of the objection raised supra that such a removal would be an act Pentateuchally forbidden; and our Mishnah cannot refer to a dry wen which may be removed even by means of an instrument since, in its final clause the use of an instrument is forbidden.
- (79) The ruling in our Mishnah which permits the removal of a wen by hand, which is shebuth that could have been performed prior to the Sabbath.
- (80) Besides differing from the Rabbis in the Mishnah of Pes. in the case of a shebuth.
- (81) Even where one of the main classes of work that are Pentateuchally forbidden has to be performed, and much more so, as is the case in our Mishnah and in that of Pes., where only a shebuth is involved.
- (82) In the manner of their performance or preparation.
- (83) As it is possible to remove a wen by hand he ruled in the final clause of our Mishnah that the use of an instrument is forbidden. Where, however, no change is possible, even one of the main classes of forbidden work supersedes the Sabbath.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 103b

What is the proof?¹ — Since it was taught: If a wen appeared² on [the body of] a priest³ his fellow may bite it off for him with his teeth. Thus only 'with his teeth'⁴ but not with an instrument; only 'his fellow'⁵ but not he himself. Now whose view could this⁶ be? if it be suggested: That of the Rabbis,⁷ and [the permissibility is because it is in connection] with the Temple,⁸ the objection would arise: Since the Rabbis have elsewhere⁹ forbidden [such acts] Only as a shebuth, what matters it here¹⁰ whether he or his fellow does the biting? Consequently it⁶ must represent, must it not, the view of R. Eliezer who ruled elsewhere⁹ that [for such acts] a sin-offering is incurred but here, though the preliminary requirements of a precept supersede the Sabbath,¹¹ a change must be made as far as this is possible?¹² — No, it¹³ may in fact represent the view of the Rabbis,¹⁴ and¹⁵ if the wen had grown on his belly¹⁶ the law would indeed have been so,¹⁷ but here we are dealing with one,¹⁸ for instance, that grew on his back or his elbows where he himself cannot remove it, if this, however represents the view of the Rabbis,¹⁹ why should he²⁰ not be allowed to remove it with his hand,²¹ and this²² you might²³ easily derive²⁴ the statement made by R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar stated: They²⁵ only differ in the case of removal²⁶ with the hand but if it is done with an Instrument all²⁷ agree that guilt²⁸ is incurred?²⁹ — And according to your line of reasoning³⁰ why should he³¹ not be permitted even in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer³² to remove it with his hand?³³ — What an argument is this! If you grant that it represents the view of R. Eliezer³⁴ one can easily see why removal with the hand was forbidden as a preventive measure against the use of an instrument,³⁵ but if you maintain that it represents the view of the Rabbis,³⁶ why should he not be allowed to remove it with his hand?³⁷ And nothing more need be said about the matter.³⁸

MISHNAH. A PRIEST WHO WAS WOUNDED IN HIS FINGER MAY³⁹ WRAP SOME REED-GRASS ROUND IT IN THE TEMPLE⁴⁰ BUT NOT IN THE COUNTRY.⁴¹ BUT IF⁴² IT WAS INTENDED TO FORCE OUT BLOOD IT IS FORBIDDEN IN BOTH CASES.⁴³

GEMARA. R.⁴⁴ Judah, son of R. Hiyya explained: They⁴⁵ learned this⁴⁶ only in respect of reed-grass, but a bandage⁴⁷ is regarded as an addition to the priestly garments.⁴⁸ R. Johanan, however, stated: They forbade⁴⁹ an addition to the priestly garments only on a part of the body where the garments are usually worn; but on a part where no garments are usually worn⁵⁰ the wearing of one is not deemed an addition to the priestly garments.⁵¹ But why should not these⁵² be excluded⁵³ on the ground of interposition?⁵⁴ This⁵⁵ refers to a wound on the left hand⁵⁶ or even to one on the right hand on a part that does not come in contact with the objects of the service.⁵⁷

This⁵⁸ is in disagreement with a ruling of Raba, for Raba, citing R. Hisda, ruled: On a part where clothes are usually worn even one thread⁵⁹ causes an interposition while on a part where clothes are not usually worn a piece of material that was three handbreadths by three⁶⁰ causes an interposition⁶¹ but one that was less than three handbreadths by three⁶² causes no interposition.⁶³ Now this⁶⁴ unquestionably differs from the view of R. Johanan,⁶⁵ but must it also be assumed that it⁶⁶ differs from that of R. Judah son of R. Hiyya?⁶⁷ — A bandage is different⁶⁸ since it is significant.⁶⁹

Others have⁷⁰ a different reading: R. Judah son of R. Hiyya explained: They⁷¹ learned this⁷² only in respect of reed-grass, but a bandage⁷³ is regarded as an interposition.⁷⁴ R. Johanan, however, stated: They forbade⁷⁵ interposition⁷⁶ where the material was less than three handbreadths by three only if it rested on a part of the body where clothes are usually worn; but on a part where no garments are usually worn

- (1) that R. Eliezer agrees that wherever possible a change should be made.
 - (2) on the Sabbath so that there was no possibility of removing it on the previous day.
 - (3) Lit., 'a priest on whom went up'.
 - (4) An act which is a mere shebuth.
 - (5) Who is unable to remove it completely and to perform a proper piece of work.
 - (6) The ruling that the priest himself should not remove his wen even with his teeth while his friend may remove it only with his teeth but not with an instrument.
 - (7) Who hold that the preliminary requirements of a precept may only override a Shebuth but not one of the main classes of forbidden work.
 - (8) Sc. preliminary requirements of the precept of performing the Temple service. As the wen could not be removed on the Sabbath eve (cf. supra n.1) and as the removal is a preliminary requisite of the precept involving a shebuth only, it is permitted.
 - (9) Cf. Shah. 94b (the case of the finger nails).
 - (10) Since removal with the teeth, whether one's own or one's friend's, is only a shebuth.
 - (11) Even where a Pentateuchal prohibition is involved; and the removal of the wen in any manner is in fact permitted.
 - (12) Hence the ruling that the priest himself must not remove his wen and that his friend should do it with his teeth only, which proves does it not, that a change must be made wherever possible?
 - (13) V. supra n. 5.
 - (14) While R. Eliezer requires no change whatever and permits the removal of the wen even with an instrument by the priest himself
 - (15) In explanation of the difficulty 'what matters it here whether he or his fellow' uses his teeth.
 - (16) A spot accessible to ones own teeth.
 - (17) that the priest himself may effect the removal.
 - (18) Cf. MS.M. Cur. edd. insert 'a bite'.

- (19) Whose main aim is to avoid the transgression of a Pentateuchal prohibition and to restrict the act of removal to a shebuth.
- (20) The priest's fellow.
- (21) Since in the removal by hand as by the teeth only a shebuth is involved.
- (22) From the mention of hand instead of teeth.
- (23) In addition to what may be derived even now, viz., that the preliminary requisites of a precept may override only a shebuth but not a Pentateuchal prohibition.
- (24) From the fact that the use of the bare hand only (a shebuth) and not that of an instrument (a Pentateuchal prohibition) has been allowed.
- (25) R. Eliezer and the Rabbis.
- (26) Of one's finger nails (Shah. 94b).
- (27) Not only R. Eliezer but the Rabbis also.
- (28) Sc. a sin-offering.
- (29) This submission, cannot be derived now that the use of the teeth only has been permitted. Should one argue that R. Eleazar's submission might be derived from the fact that the use of the teeth (a shebuth) was permitted 'and not that of an Instrument (a Pentateuchal prohibition), it could he retorted that this was no proof since the use of the hand also was not permitted though, unlike an instrument, it also involves a shebuth only.
- (30) That the ruling under discussion is R. Eliezer's.
- (31) The priest's friend who removes the wen.
- (32) Who, as suggested, requires a change to be made wherever possible.
- (33) Which is only a shebuth and a change from the usual mode of removal.
- (34) Who in the case of the preliminary requisites of a precept draws no distinction between a Pentateuchal prohibition and a shebuth and allows both to be superseded, requiring only a change from the usual procedure.
- (35) As a change is made from a Pentateuchal prohibition to a shebuth (though either might be equally superseded) so must a change be made from the major shebuth (removal with the hand) to the minor one (removal with a friend's teeth which is less usual than that with the hand).
- (36) The reason for whose ruling is not the desirability for a change but the view that only a Shebuth may be superseded but not a Pentateuchal prohibition.
- (37) Which is no less a Shebuth than removal with the teeth.
- (38) Since it is quite evident that the view represented is that of R. Eliezer.
- (39) On the Sabbath, since It is unseemly to perform the service with all exposed wound.
- (40) Though the grass helps indirectly to heal the wound (cf. foll. n.).
- (41) Where the reed-grass serves no religious purpose, while its application as a cure is forbidden on the Sabbath.
- (42) By making of the reed-grass a tight bandage.
- (43) Lit., 'here and here', sc. even in the Temple, since the tightening serves no ritual purpose and comes, moreover, under the category of wounding which is one of the principal classes of activity that are forbidden on the Sabbath and which even the Temple service cannot supersede.
- (44) 'Rab'. Var. lec. 'Rabbi' throughout the passage (Emden).
- (45) The Rabbis of our Mishnah.
- (46) A PRIEST . . . MAY WRAP etc.
- (47) Lit., 'small belt'.
- (48) Which is forbidden (cf. Zeb. 18a).
- (49) Lit., 'they did not say . . . but'.
- (50) As on a finger, for instance.
- (51) Hence it is permitted to put a bandage round the finger.
- (52) The reed-grass as well as the bandage.
- (53) From use in the Temple. Lit., 'and let it go out for him'.
- (54) Which is forbidden in the Temple services. No object may intervene between the priest's hands and the ritual object he handles.
- (55) The wound spoken of in our Mishnah.
- (56) With which it is forbidden to perform the Temple service and an interposition in that case does not in any way affect the service.

- (57) One, for instance, on the back of the finger.
- (58) R. Johanan's statement that, whatever its size, an additional garment on a part of the body where one is not usually worn constitutes no transgression.
- (59) Though it cannot possibly be described as a garment.
- (60) Which has the legal status of a garment.
- (61) As well as a transgression against the prohibition of adding to the priestly garment (cf. Rashi a.l.).
- (62) In consequence of which it cannot be regarded as a garment.
- (63) Since it was located on a part of the body which does not come in contact with the objects of the service and when no garments are worn. As it has not the legal status of a garment, no transgression against the prohibition against adding to the priestly garments is committed either.
- (64) Ruling of Raba.
- (65) As has just been shown.
- (66) The ruling to the effect that a piece of material that was less than three handbreadths by three causes no interposition on a part of the body on which garments are not usually worn.
- (67) Who stated that a bandage, even one that was less than three handbreadths by three, is legally regarded as a garment whereby a transgression against adding to the priestly garments is committed.
- (68) From a piece of material of similar size.
- (69) Lit., 'important'. Hence its status as a garment which even Raba might acknowledge.
- (70) Lit., 'say it'.
- (71) The Rabbis of our Mishnah.
- (72) A PRIEST . . . MAY "WRAP etc.
- (73) Lit., 'small belt'.
- (74) Since it does not belong to the priest's garments.
- (75) Lit., 'they did not say . . . but'.
- (76) This expression is really the main point of difference between the first and second version. For an explanation why this expression was used v. Rash a.l.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 104a

only a piece of material that was three handbreadths by three¹ causes an interposition² while one that is less than three handbreadths by three³ causes no interposition.⁴ This is in fact identical with the ruling which Raba cited in the name of R. Hisda. Must it be conceded that this⁵ differs from the view of R. Judah son of R. Hiyya?⁶ — A bandage is different⁷ since it is significant. But according to R. Johanan,⁸ instead of being informed⁹ about the reed-grass,¹⁰ why were we not informed about a bandage?¹¹ — We were taught⁹ indirectly that reed-grass heals.¹²

MISHNAH. SALT MAY BE SCATTERED¹³ ON THE ALTAR'S ASCENT¹⁴ THAT THE PRIESTS SHALL NOT SLIP. WATER ALSO MAY BE DRAWN ON THE SABBATH BY MEANS OF A WHEEL¹⁵ FROM THE CISTERN OF THE EXILES¹⁶ AND FROM THE GREAT CISTERN;¹⁷ AND ON A FESTIVAL DAY¹⁸ FROM THE HAKER WELL ALSO.¹⁹

GEMARA. R. Ika of Pashronia pointed out to Raba the following inconsistency. We learned, SALT MAY BE SCATTERED ON THE ALTAR'S ASCENT THAT THE PRIESTS SHALL NOT SLIP. Thus²⁰ only in the Temple is this permitted²¹ but not in the country. But is not this inconsistent with the following: If a courtyard floor was damaged by rainwater one may bring straw and level it?²² — Straw is different²³ since its owner does not renounce it.²⁴

Said R. Aha son of Raba to R. Ashi: How are we to understand the case of the SALT? if its owner has renounced it, would not the scattering constitute an addition to the structure?²⁵ And if he did not renounce it, would it not constitute an unlawful interposition?²⁶ — This is a case where the salt²⁷ was scattered when the limbs of sacrifices were carried up the ascent, an act which is not regarded as part of the Temple service.²⁸ But is it not indeed? Was it not in fact written in Scripture. And the priest shall offer the whole, and make it smoke upon the altar,²⁹ a text which, a Master explained,³⁰ refers to the carrying of the limbs up the ascent?³¹ — Rather say: This³² refers [to salt³³ scattered] when the wood is carried to the altar pile which is an act that is no part of the Temple service.³⁴

Raba discoursed: If a courtyard floor was damaged by rainwater one may bring straw and level³⁵ it. Said R. Papa to Raba: Was It not taught. When he levels the ground he must not scatter the straw either with a small basket or with a large one³² but only with the bottom broken from a basket?³⁶ Raba thereupon appointed an amora³⁷ and delivered the following discourse: The statement I made to you³⁸ was an error on my part.³⁹ But it was this indeed that was reported in the name of R. Eliezer:⁴⁰ ‘And When he levels it he must not scatter the straw either with a small basket or with a large one but with the bottom broken from a basket.’

WATER ALSO MAY BE DRAWN . . . FROM THE CISTERN OF THE EXILES. Ulla once happened to visit R. Manasseh⁴¹ when a man came and knocked on the door. ‘Who’, he exclaimed ‘is this person? May his body be desecrated, for he⁴² desecrates the Sabbath’. ‘Only a musical sound’,⁴³ said Rabbah to him, ‘has been forbidden’.⁴⁴ Abaye pointed out an objection against him:⁴⁵ ‘Liquids may be drawn by means of a siphon,⁴⁶ and water may be allowed to drip from the arak,⁴⁷ for a sick person on the Sabbath’. Thus only ‘for a sick person’ is this allowed,⁴⁸ but not for a healthy one. Now, how are we to imagine the circumstances? Would you not agree that this is a case where the sick man was asleep and it was desired⁴⁹ that he should wake up? May it not then⁵⁰ be inferred⁵¹ that⁵² the Production of any sound⁵³ is forbidden?⁵⁴ — No; this is a case where he was awake and it is desired that he should fall asleep, so that the sound heard is one like a tingling noise.⁵⁵

He pointed out to him⁵⁶ a further objection: If a man guards his fruit against the birds or his gourds against wild beasts he may proceed on the Sabbath in his usual way, provided he does not clap his hand, beat his chest or stamp his feet as is usually done on weekdays. Now what could be the reason?⁵⁷ Is it not that the man produces sound and that the production of any sound⁵⁸ is forbidden?⁵⁴ — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: This⁵⁷ is a preventive measure against the Possibility of his Picking up a pebble.⁵⁹ What, however, is the reason for the statement which Rab Judah citing Rab made that women who play with nuts commit a transgression? Is it not that this⁶⁰ produces sound and that the production of any sound⁵⁸ is forbidden?⁵⁴ — No; the reason⁶¹ is that they might proceed to level the ground.⁶² For, were you not to concede this, how would you explain the ruling of Rab Judah that women who play⁶³ with apples commit a transgression? What sound could be produced there?⁶⁴ Consequently it must be conceded that the reason is that⁶⁵ they might proceed to level the ground.⁶⁶

We learned: WATER MAY BE DRAWN ON THE SABBATH BY MEANS OF A WHEEL FROM THE CISTERN OF THE EXILES AND FROM THE GREAT CISTERN. Thus only in the Temple is this permitted⁶⁷ but not in the country. But what could be the reason? Is it not that the revolution of the wheel produces a sound which is forbidden?⁶⁸ — No; this is a preventive measure against the possibility of a man's drawing the water for his garden or his ruin.⁶⁹

Amemar allowed the drawing of water by means of a wheel at Mahuza; ‘for’, he said, ‘on what ground did the Rabbis enact a preventive measure against such drawing? Only on the ground that a person might also draw water for his garden or his ruin. But in this place there is neither garden nor ruin’. When, however, he observed that they began to

(1) Being regarded as a garment.

(2) Since it does not belong to the priest's garments.

(3) In consequence of which it cannot be regarded as a garment.

(4) v. Supra p. 722, n. 7.

- (5) Rab's ruling which does not regard a piece of material that was less than three handbreadths by three as an unlawful addition to the priest's garments.
- (6) v. Supra p. 722, n. 11.
- (7) From a piece of material of similar size.
- (8) Who allows the use of a bandage as well as that of reed-grass.
- (9) By our Mishnah.
- (10) From which the permissibility of a bandage cannot be inferred.
- (11) And the permissibility of reed-grass, which is of less importance, could be deduced a minori ad majus.
- (12) And that, though it helps to heal the wound and its use on the Sabbath is elsewhere forbidden, it may be used in the Temple where its main purpose is to cover up a wound during the performance of the service.
- (13) On the Sabbath. Lit., '(they may) crush (lumps of) salt'.
- (14) Which had a smooth surface and after a rain was very slippery.
- (15) Though the use of a wheel for such a purpose on the Sabbath is elsewhere forbidden (v. Gemara infra).
- (16) 'Golah', collective noun. One of the cisterns in the Temple court said to have been dug by the exiles after the return from Babylon.
- (17) Another cistern in the Temple court.
- (18) But not on the Sabbath.
- (19) Explained in the Gemara.
- (20) Since the altar ascent only was mentioned.
- (21) Lit., 'yes'.
- (22) Or 'make a path in'. Which shows that even in the country it is permissible to scatter straw on the ground. How then is this to be reconciled with our Mishnah which allows salt to be scattered in the Temple court only?
- (23) From salt.
- (24) But intends to collect it later and to use it as fodder for cattle or to mix it in a mortar. The scattering of materials on the ground on the Sabbath is forbidden as 'levelling' which is a form of 'building', but since the straw is not to remain on the ground permanently the act of scattering cannot be regarded as 'building'. Salt, on the other hand, being useless after it has once been scattered on the ground, is presumed to have been renounced by its owner once it has been scattered. The act, therefore, is permitted in the Temple court only but not in the country.
- (25) Of course it would (cf. prev. n.); and this is forbidden even on a weekday since nothing may be added to the Temple structures. Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis, 'All this (do I give thee) in writing, as the Lord hath made me wise by his hand upon me' (I Chron. XXVIII, 19) from which words it is inferred (cf. Rashi a.l.) that all parts of the Temple, internal as well as external structures, were minutely described by God and nothing was to be added to them. MS.M. omits the Scriptural quotation.
- (26) Between the surface of the ascent and the priests' feet (cf. Zeb. 15b).
- (27) Which in fact was not renounced, since it could be collected and used for the salting of the skins of the sacrifices.
- (28) And an interposition does not matter.
- (29) Lev. I, 13.
- (30) Since it is the continuation of the text: But the inwards and the legs shall he wash with water (ibid.).
- (31) How then could it be said that the carrying forms no part of the service?
- (32) Which is the usual procedure on a weekday.
- (33) V. p. 724, n. 8.
- (34) And an interposition does not matter.
- (35) Or 'make a path in'.
- (36) An objection against Raba who permitted the scattering of straw in any manner.
- (37) Sc. an assistant who stood at his side during his discourse and expounded it in a louder voice and simpler language to the people assembled.
- (38) Lit., 'the words which I said before you'.
- (39) Lit., 'in my hand'.
- (40) Old ed., 'Eleazar'.
- (41) On a Sabbath.
- (42) By producing a sound with his knocking.
- (43) Not a mere knocking.

- (44) To be produced on the Sabbath other than with the mouth.
- (45) Rabbah.
- (46) 'Deyo-fi' lit., 'two mouths' (Rashi), 'a popular perversion' of deyobit,  (Jast.).
- (47) A perforated vessel, a sort of clepsydra used in sick rooms (Jast.).
- (48) Lit., 'yes'.
- (49) By the production of the sound of the arak which is a mere noise without any musical quality whatever.
- (50) As the answer is presumably in the affirmative.
- (51) Since the instrument mentioned may be used for a sick man only but not for a healthy one.
- (52) On a Sabbath.
- (53) Even one that is unmusical.
- (54) On the Sabbath; an objection against Rabbah.
- (55) Which lulls the patient to sleep by its musical notes.
- (56) Rabbah.
- (57) Why clapping, beating and stamping are forbidden.
- (58) Even one that is unmusical.
- (59) To throw it at a bird, and he would thus transfer an object from a private domain into a public domain, which is forbidden.
- (60) Playing with nuts.
- (61) Why playing with nuts is forbidden on the Sabbath.
- (62) For playing purposes. Lit., 'grooves'.
- (63) On the Sabbath.
- (64) Apparently none.
- (65) Lit., 'but'.
- (66) For the game.
- (67) Lit., 'yes'.
- (68) On the Sabbath; an objection against Rabbah.
- (69) Sc. for secular purposes whereby no religious duty or observance is performed.

soak flax in it¹ he forbade it to them.

AND FROM THE HAKER WELL. What was the 'haker well'? — Samuel replied: A cistern concerning which arguments welled forth² and its use [on a Festival] was declared to be permitted.³

An objection was raised: Not all the haker cisterns but only this one, did they permit. Now if you explain it⁴ to mean that concerning it arguments welled forth, what⁵ could be the meaning of 'only this one'? — Rather, said R. Nahman b. Isaac: A well of living water,⁶ as it is said in Scripture: As a cistern wellet⁷ with her water etc.⁸

[To turn to] the main text. Not all the haker cisterns, but only this one, did they permit. And when the exiles returned⁹ they encamped by it, and the prophets among them, permitted them to use it [on Festivals]; and not only the prophets among them did this but it was a practice of their forefathers that they upheld.¹⁰

MISHNAH. IF A [DEAD] CREEPING THING WAS FOUND IN THE TEMPLE,¹¹ A PRIEST SHOULD CARRY IT OUT¹¹ IN HIS GIRDLE¹² TO AVOID¹³ KEEPING THE UNCLEANNESSTHERE ANY LONGER THAN IS NECESSARY; SO R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA. R. JUDAH RULED: [IT SHOULD BE REMOVED] WITH WOODEN TONGS¹⁴ IN ORDER THAT THE UNCLEANNESSTHALL NOT INCREASE.¹⁵ WHENCE MUST IT BE REMOVED?¹⁶ FROM THE HEKAL,¹⁷ FROM THE ULAM,¹⁸ AND FROM BETWEEN THE ULAM AND THE ALTAR;¹⁹ SO R. SIMEON B. NANUS. R. AKIBA RULED: FROM ANY PLACE WHERE

KARETH IS INCURRED FOR ENTERING²⁰ PRESUMPTUOUSLY AND A SIN-OFFERING FOR ENTERING²⁰ IT IN ERROR²¹ IT MUST BE REMOVED.²² IN ANY OTHER PLACES,²³ HOWEVER A PSYKTER²⁴ IS TO BE PUT OVER IT.²⁵ R. SIMEON SAID:²⁶ WHEREVER THE SAGES HAVE PERMITTED YOU ANYTHING THEY HAVE ONLY GIVEN YOU WHAT IS REALLY YOURS, SINCE THEY HAVE ONLY PERMITTED YOU²⁷ THAT WHICH IS FORBIDDEN AS SHEBUTH.²⁸

GEMARA. R. Tobi b. Kisna citing Samuel ruled: One who brings into the Temple all object that was defiled by a creeping thing incurs guilt,²⁹ but if one brings in the creeping thing itself one is exempt. What is the reason? — Scripture said: Both male and female shall ye put out,³⁰ from which it is inferred that only that which may attain cleanness in a ritual bath³¹ is subject to the prohibition,³² a creeping thing, however, is excluded since it can never attain cleanness. May it be suggested that the following provides support for this view? Both male and female shall ye put out³⁰ excludes an earthen vessel;³³ so R. Jose the Galilean. Now what could be the reason?³⁴ Is it not because it³⁵ cannot attain cleanness through a ritual bath?³⁶ — No; only that which may become a primary source of uncleanness is subject to the prohibition,³² an earthen vessel, however, is excluded since it can never become a primary source of uncleanness.³⁷

Must it be conceded that on this question³⁸ there is a divergence of opinion between the following Tannas: IF A CREEPING THING WAS FOUND IN THE TEMPLE A PRIEST SHOULD CARRY IT OUT IN HIS GIRDLE TO AVOID KEEPING THE UNCLEANNESS THERE ANY LONGER THAN IS NECESSARY; SO R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA. R. JUDAH RULED: IT SHOULD BE REMOVED WITH WOODEN TONGS IN ORDER THAT THE UNCLEANNESS SHALL NOT INCREASE. Now do they not differ on this point: That he who said: TO AVOID KEEPING, holds the opinion that one who takes a creeping thing into the Temple incurs guilt,³⁹ while he who said: IN ORDER THAT . . . SHALL NOT INCREASE holds the opinion that one who takes a creeping thing into the Temple is exempt? — No, all may agree that guilt is incurred, but the point at Issue here is the following: One Master holds that it is preferable to keep an unclean object a little longer⁴⁰ while the other Master holds that it is preferable to increase the uncleanness.⁴¹

The point at issue⁴² is rather the same as that between the following Tannas. We learned: WHENCE MUST IT BE REMOVED etc. Now do they not differ on this point: That he who ruled that from the Temple court it may not be removed⁴³ is of the opinion that one who takes a creeping thing into the Temple is exempt,⁴⁴ while he who holds that it must be removed from any part of the court is of the opinion that guilt is incurred?

(1) The water they drew on the Sabbath by means of the wheel.

(2) Shehekeru, 'haker' being the Hif. of the rt. קרר

(3) V. infra.

(4) The haker well.

(5) Since no arguments 'welled forth' in connection with any other cistern.

(6) The same expression occurs in Gen. XXVI, 19.

(7) 'Ke-haker'.

(8) Jer. VI, 7.

(9) Lit., 'went up'.

(10) Lit., 'in their hands'.

(11) On the Sabbath, when it is forbidden under the laws of shebuth to handle a dead creeping thing.

(12) But not with his bare hand, in order to avoid direct contact with the creeping thing and the latter's consequent conveyance of levitical uncleanness to the priest's body. Carrying alone, in the absence of direct contact, does not cause uncleanness and the girdle, though it contracts a certain degree of uncleanness (first grade) from the creeping thing, cannot carry any uncleanness to the priest's body since no degree lower than that of primary uncleanness can affect the levitical cleanness of a human being.

- (13) This is a reason why the author of this ruling does not require its removal, as does R. Judah presently, to be effected by means of an instrument that is not susceptible to levitical uncleanness.
- (14) Which are unsusceptible to levitical uncleanness.
- (15) By its spread to the girdle. In R. Judah's view it is preferable to allow the offending object to remain in the Temple a little longer until wooden tongs can be obtained and thus to limit the extent of the uncleanness, rather than to remove it sooner and thereby cause the uncleanness to spread to another object.
- (16) On the Sabbath.
- (17) Or the 'Holy' which contained the candlestick, the table for the shewbread and the golden altar.
- (18) The Temple porch in front of the Hekal.
- (19) Sc. the brazen altar that stood in the Temple court in front of the Ulam. If the offending object was found in any other part of the Temple court it could not be removed on the Sabbath (until after nightfall) on account of the prohibition against moving objects from a private into a public domain.
- (20) In a state of levitical uncleanness.
- (21) Sc. the entire Temple court.
- (22) Forthwith, even on the Sabbath.
- (23) The side chambers (according to R. Akiba) or the part of the court beyond the space BETWEEN THE ULAM AND THE ALTAR (according to Ben Nanus).
- (24) Gr.  (wine cooler), a large brass pot.
- (25) To keep it covered during the Sabbath. After dusk it is removed.
- (26) The point of this statement is discussed infra.
- (27) In the Temple.
- (28) But nothing that is Pentateuchally forbidden.
- (29) And must suffer the consequence (cf. Rashi a.l. and Elijah Wilna glosses).
- (30) Num. V, 3 which is applied to the Temple precincts. Cf. In the midst whereof I dwell (ibid).
- (31) As 'a male and female' may.
- (32) Of entering the Temple.
- (33) Sc. no guilt is incurred for bringing unclean earthenware into the Temple.
- (34) For R. Jose's ruling.
- (35) Any earthenware.
- (36) Since it must be broken (cf. Lev. XI,33).
- (37) The only primary source of uncleanness which a vessel can contract is that of Midras defilement (v. Glos.), to which all earthenware vessel is not susceptible, v. Shab. 84b. For bringing in a creeping thing, however, since it is a primary source of uncleanness, one does incur guilt, contrary to the view of Samuel.
- (38) Whether guilt is incurred for taking a creeping thing into the Temple.
- (39) Pentateuchally. Hence it is preferable to extend uncleanness to the girdle rather than to continue a transgression against a Pentateuchal prohibition.
- (40) Rather than increase uncleanness by imparting it to the sacred girdle.
- (41) Rather than keeping an unclean object in the Temple even only one minute longer than is absolutely necessary.
- (42) Whether guilt is incurred for taking a creeping thing into the Temple.
- (43) On the Sabbath.
- (44) Pentateuchally. The Rabbis, therefore, enforced their Shebuth throughout the Temple, except in the case of the Hekal and Ulam and between the latter and the altar on account of their high degree of holiness.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 105a

— R. Johanan retorted:¹ Both² expounded this same³ text: And the priests went in unto the inner part of the house of the Lord,⁴ to cleanse it, and brought out all the uncleanness that they found in the Temple of the Lord into the court of the house of the Lord. And the Levites took it⁵ to carry it out abroad to the brook Kidron.⁶ One Master⁷ holds that since in the court there was a change over⁸ to the Levites⁹ there can be no prohibition against allowing uncleanness to remain for some time in the court,¹⁰ while the other Master¹¹ holds that up to the point¹² where it was impossible for the Levites to attend¹³ the priests had to carry the uncleanness out, but where¹⁴ it could be done by the Levites the priests could no longer defile themselves.¹⁵

Our Rabbis taught: All may enter the Hekal to build, to repair or to take out uncleanness. It is a religious duty, however, that the priests should do it. If no priests are available¹⁶ Levites may enter. If no Levites are available Israelites may enter. But in all these cases¹⁷ only levitically clean persons may enter.¹⁸ Those who are levitically unclean may not.

R. Huna observed: R. Kahana lends his support to the priests,¹⁹ for R. Kahana learned: Since it was said: Only he shall not go in unto the veil,²⁰ it might have been assumed that priests who have a blemish must not enter between the Ulam and the altar to make the beaten plates.²¹ hence it was explicitly stated: 'Only' i.e., draw a distinction.²² Thus the commandment is that those who are without blemish are qualified, but if men without a blemish are unavailable those with blemishes may enter; the commandment is that those who are levitically clean may enter, but if no men who are levitically clean are available those who are levitically unclean may enter; but in all these cases²³ priests only may enter but no Israelites.²⁴

The question was raised: In the case of one who is levitically unclean and another who has a blemish, who of these is to enter?²⁵ — R. Hiyya b. Ashi citing Rab replied: The levitically unclean person shall enter, since he has been declared permitted to take part in the public Temple service.²⁶ R. Eleazar replied: The man who has the blemish shall enter, since he has been declared permitted to eat consecrated food.²⁷

R. SIMEON SAID etc. What does R. Simeon refer to?²⁸ — He refers to a previous statement²⁹ where we learned: If a man was overtaken by dusk even when only One cubit outside the Sabbath limit, he may not enter it. R. Simeon ruled: Even if he was fifteen cubits away he may enter, since the surveyors do not measure exactly on account of those who might err.³⁰ The first Tanna having thus ruled: 'he may not enter', R. Simeon said to him, 'He may enter'.³¹

SINCE THEY HAVE ONLY PERMITTED YOU THAT WHICH IS FORBIDDEN AS SHEBUTH. What does he refer to?³² — He refers to another Statement²⁹ where the first Tanna ruled that it³³ may be tied up,³⁴ in connection with which R. Simeon said to him.³⁵ He may Only secure it with a loop; Only a loop which cannot involve one in the obligation of a sin-offering did the Rabbis permit,³⁶ but a knot which might involve one in the obligation of a sin-offering the Rabbis did not permit.³⁷

(1) So according to Rashi. Tosaf. (a.l.) regards R. Johanan's submission as an independent statement.

(2) R. Simeon b. Nanus and R. Akiba who, in fact, agree that one who takes a creeping thing into the Temple incurs guilt, and only differ on the question of taking it out when it was already within the Temple (cf. Rashi).

(3) Lit., 'one'.

(4) Sc. the Hekal.

(5) From the 'court' into which the priests had carried it.

(6) II Chron. XXIX, 16.

(7) R. Simeon b. Nanus.

(8) From the priests (who brought it from the Hekal).

(9) And not to a relay of priests, though (if more helpers were required) it might have been expected that priests should complete the task their fellows had begun.

(10) Lit., 'uncleanness In court there is not'. As in this case it was only from the 'inner parts that the priests had to remove the uncleanness while the removal from the court was relegated to the Levites, because the defilement of their bodies was not so grave a matter as that of the priests, so also in the case of the Sabbath, wherever the uncleanness is in the court, the degree of transgression must be reduced to a minimum and not even a shebuth may be abrogated.

(11) R. Akiba.

(12) Lit., 'until where'.

- (13) Sc. in the Hekal whither Levites are not allowed to enter.
- (14) Lit., 'now'.
- (15) No proof, therefore, can be adduced from here that uncleanness may be allowed to remain in the Temple court until dusk.
- (16) Lit., 'if there are no priests there'.
- (17) Lit., 'and these and those'.
- (18) Lit., 'yes'.
- (19) 'Kahane', a play upon the Aramaic equivalent of 'priests' and the name of R. 'Kahana'. In the following exposition R. Kahana gives precedence 'to unclean priests over clean Israelites.
- (20) Lev. XXI, 23, which deals with priests who are afflicted with a blemish.
- (21) Of gold; wherewith the interior of the Holy of Holies was overlaid.
- (22) The expression 'only' (ak or rub) in a Scriptural text always signifies some exclusion, viz., it is in this case only that entry for the purposes mentioned is not invariably forbidden.
- (23) Lit., 'and these and those'.
- (24) Which shows that R. Kahana gives preference to disfigured or levitically unclean priests over sound and clean Israelites.
- (25) If no other person for the work is obtainable.
- (26) When all the congregation is levitically unclean. As a priest who is afflicted with a blemish is not allowed to participate even then the former obviously takes precedence.
- (27) While all unclean priest is not (cf. prev. n. mut. mut.).
- (28) Lit., 'where does he stand'?
- (29) Lit., 'there he stands'.
- (30) Supra 52b, q.v. notes.
- (31) Since even when the man is fifteen cubits away from the Sabbath limit he is already within it. The Sages have thus merely given back what they had previously taken away.
- (32) He could not refer to the cited case of Sabbath limit since the question of shebuth does not come there into consideration.
- (33) The string of a levitical harp that was broken in the Temple on the Sabbath.
- (34) Supra 102b.
- (35) In his statement in the Baraitha.
- (36) Lit., 'which does not come to the hands of. . . him'.
- (37) R. Simeon says in effect, 'Though I relaxed the law in the case of the Sabbath limit I do not allow a knot to be made in a broken harp string, since only in the former case can the argument be advanced that the Sages have merely given back what they had previously taken away' (cf. Tosaf. and Rashi a.l.).

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. ON THE EVENING [OR]¹ OF THE FOURTEENTH [OF NISAN] A SEARCH IS MADE FOR LEAVEN² BY THE LIGHT OF A LAMP.³ EVERY PLACE WHEREIN LEAVENED BREAD IS NOT TAKEN DOES NOT REQUIRE SEARCHING, THEN IN WHAT CASE DID THEY RULE, TWO ROWS OF THE WINE CELLAR [MUST BE SEARCHED]?⁴ [CONCERNING] A PLACE WHEREIN LEAVEN MIGHT BE TAKEN,⁵ BETH SHAMMAI MAINTAIN: TWO ROWS OVER THE FRONT OF THE WHOLE CELLAR;⁶ BUT BETH HILLEL MAINTAIN: THE TWO OUTER ROWS, WHICH ARE THE UPPERMOST.⁷

GEMARA. What is OR? — R. Huna said: Light [naghe]; while Rab Judah said: Night [lele]. Now it was assumed [that] he who says light means literally light;⁸ while he who says night means literally night.⁹ An objection is raised: As soon as the morning was light [or], the men were sent away,¹⁰ which proves that 'or' is day? — Is it then written, The 'or' was morning: [Surely] 'the morning was or' is written, as one says, Morning has broken forth. And [this verse is] in accordance with what Rab Judah said in Rab's name. For Rab Judah said in Rab's name: A man should always enter [a town] by day,¹¹ and set out by day.¹²

An objection is raised: As the light of [or] the morning, when the sun riseth,¹³ which proves that 'or' means the daytime? — Is it then written, 'or is morning': surely it is written, 'as the light of [or] the morning', and this is its meaning: 'and as the light of the morning' in this world so shall the rising of the sun be unto the righteous in the world to come.¹⁴

An objection is raised: And God called the light [or] Day¹⁵ which proves that or is daytime? — This is its meaning: the advancing of light¹⁶ He called Day.¹⁷ If so, 'and the darkness He called Night' means [similarly], the advancing of darkness He called Night:¹⁸ but surely it is an established principle that it is day until the appearance of the stars?¹⁹ Rather this is its meaning: The Merciful One summoned the light and appointed it for duty by day, and He summoned the darkness and appointed it for duty by night.²⁰

An objection is raised: Praise him all ye stars of light [or],²¹ which proves that 'or' is evening? — This is its meaning: praise him all ye stars which give light. If so, are only the stars that give light to praise [Him], while those which do not give light need not praise — yet surely It is written, Praise ye him, all his host?²² Rather he [the Psalmist] tells us this: the light of the stars too is [designated] light. What is its practical bearing? In respect of one who vows [not to benefit] from light. For it was taught: If one vows [not to benefit] from light, he is prohibited the light of stars.

An objection is raised: The murderer riseth with the light [or], he killeth the poor and needy, and in the night he is as a thief.²³

(1) וְאֵת. This is the meaning finally assigned in the Gemara to OR after a considerable discussion.

(2) Heb. חֵמֶץ, hamez. Two words are employed in the Bible: (i) hamez, leavened stuff v. infra 42a and (ii) se'or, leaven, i.e., dough so greatly leavened as to act as a leavening agent for other dough. In this Tractate hamez will generally be translated 'leaven' except where it is necessary to distinguish it from se'or.

(3) So that there shall be none in the house during Passover, which commences on the fifteenth.

(4) Seeing that leaven is not generally taken into a wine cellar.

(5) A private cellar from which supplies are drawn for table. The servant sometimes enters it while eating bread.

(6) Must be searched.

(7) V. infra 8b.

(8) I.e., daybreak or morning.

- (9) Rashi deletes this, since that is so, in fact.
- (10) Gen. XLIV, 3.
- (11) Lit., 'when it is good', the allusion being to Gen. I, 4: and God saw the light, that it was good.
- (12) Thus the brethren waited for daybreak before setting out.
- (13) II Sam. XXIII, 4.
- (14) Though at sunrise in this world it is still rather dark, yet in the future world it shall be as light as when the morning is advanced in this world (R. Tam). Rashi's explanation is slightly different.
- (15) Gen. I, 5.
- (16) Lit., 'that which proceeds to grow light'.
- (17) I.e., the moment when light begins to appear marks the commencement of day. On this translation or is not a noun but a gerund: the lighting up.
- (18) The moment when darkness begins to fall marks the commencement of night.
- (19) Though darkness begins to fall earlier.
- (20) Thus wayikra is translated: and he summoned, not, 'and he called (designated)', as in E.V.
- (21) Ps. CXLVIII, 3.
- (22) Ibid. 2.
- (23) Job. XXIV, 14.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 2b

Now since he states, 'and in the night he is as a thief,' it follows that 'or' is day? — The meaning there is this: if the matter is as clear as light to you that he [the thief] comes [even] to take life, he is a murderer, and he [the victim] may be saved at the cost of his [the thief's] life; but if you are doubtful about it, like [the darkness of] the night, you must regard him [only] as a thief, and he [the victim] must not be saved at the cost of his life.¹

An objection is raised: Let the stars of the twilight thereof be dark: let him look for light [or], but have none; neither let it behold the eyelids of the morning.² Since he says, 'let him look for light, but have none, it follows that 'or' is day? — There Job indeed curses his destiny³ and exclaims, Heaven grant that that man [sc. himself] look for light, but have none.⁴

An objection is raised: If I say, Surely the darkness shall overwhelm me, and the light [or] about me shall be night:⁵ this proves that 'or' is day?⁶ — There David said thus: I thought, surely darkness shall overwhelm me in the future world, which resembles day; but now, even this world, which resembles night,⁷ is light about me.

An objection is raised: R. Judah said: We search [for leaven] in the evening ['or'] of the fourteenth, in the morning of the fourteenth, and at the time of removal:⁸ Now since R. Judah says, 'We search in the evening ['or'] of the fourteenth and in the morning of the fourteenth,' it follows that 'or' is evening. This proves it.

An objection is raised: From when is work forbidden on the fourteenth [of Nisan]? R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: From the time of the 'or';⁹ R. Judah said: From the [first] sparklings of the [rising] sun. Said R. Eliezer b. Jacob to R. Judah: Where then do we find a day during part of which work is forbidden while during [the other] part it is permitted? He replied, Let that [day] itself prove [this possibility], for during part of it the eating of leaven is permitted, whereas during the other part it is forbidden.¹⁰ Now since R. Judah maintains, From the [first] sparklings of the [rising] sun, it follows that by 'or' R. Eliezer b. Jacob means evening? No; what does 'or' mean? The morning dawn. If so, when he says to him, 'Where then do we find a day during part of which work is forbidden while during [the other] part it is permitted,' let him answer himself: surely there is the night, which is permitted?¹¹ — R. Eliezer b. Jacob argues thus: As for my view, it is well; we find that the Rabbis drew a distinction between night and day, for it was taught in respect of a public fast: Until when may one eat and drink? Until the commencement¹² of dawn: this is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's view. R. Simeon maintained: Until cockcrow.¹³ But on your view: where do we find that the Rabbis drew a distinction in the day itself? [To which] he replied, Let that [day] itself prove it, for during part thereof the eating of leaven is permitted while during part thereof it is forbidden? R. Judah answers R. Eliezer rightly?¹⁴ R. Eliezer says thus to him: I speak to you of work, which is [prohibited] by the Rabbis, while you answer me about leaven [on the fourteenth day], which is [prohibited] by Scripture; thus far¹⁵ the Divine Law permits, and from then Scripture forbids. And the other?¹⁶ — The [additional] hours are Rabbinical.¹⁷ And the other? — The Rabbis [merely] erected a safeguard for a Scriptural law.¹⁸

An objection is raised: Bonfires are lit only for a new moon that is visible in its [due] time, in order to sanctify it.¹⁹ And when were the bonfires lit? on the evening ['or'] following the intercalated day.²⁰ This proves that 'or' is evening. This proves it.

An objection is raised: If he [the priest] was standing all night and offering [the fats of sacrifices] on the altar, at daybreak [orah] he must wash his hands and feet:²¹ this is Rabbi's view?²² — Orah is [a] different [word].

Mar Zutra raised an objection:

- (1) V. Ex. XXII, 1; the present verse lays down the conditions for the law stated there to be applicable.
 - (2) Job. III, 9.
 - (3) Mazzal is the constellation which controls one's destiny.
 - (4) But 'light' there is not parallel to or synonymous with morning.
 - (5) Ps. CXXXIX, 11.
 - (6) Since it is contrasted with night.
 - (7) By contrast, with the next; but not absolutely, Judaism being far too robust and optimistic a religion for such a view; cf. Hertz, Genesis, Additional Note A, III, p. 57.
 - (8) When the leaven must be destroyed.
 - (9) But even if it is the practice in a community to cease work earlier, this has no binding force; v. infra 50a.
 - (10) V. infra 11b.
 - (11) Though night is part of the day.
 - (12) Lit., 'ascending'.
 - (13) The prohibition of work on the fourteenth is likewise merely Rabbinical.
 - (14) Surely he must have perceived the answer himself!
 - (15) Up to a certain hour.
 - (16) Does he not admit the distinction?
 - (17) V. infra 11b Mishnah. Thus they permit the first four hours and forbid the following two.
 - (18) Lest the day is cloudy and one does not know exactly when it is midday; therefore they added two hours. But when the law is entirely Rabbinical, they would not apply it to part of the day only.
 - (19) The Jewish month, which is lunar, consists of either twenty-nine or thirty days. During the early Talmudic age
 - (20) The additional day is the thirtieth, whereby the month is full; the bonfire is lit on the evening of the thirty-first.
 - (21) Lit., 'he needs the sanctification of his hands and feet (from the laver)', v. Ex. XXX, 17.
 - (22) Thus 'orah' denotes daybreak, and it is now assumed that 'or' and 'orah' are identical.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 3a

If a woman miscarries on the evening [or] of the eighty-first day; Beth Shammai exempt her from a sacrifice, whereas Beth Hillel declare her liable.¹ Said Beth Hillel to Beth Shammai: Wherein does the evening ['or'] of the eighty-first differ from the day of the eighty-first; seeing that it was assimilated thereto in respect of uncleanness,² shall one not assimilate it thereto in respect of sacrifice? Now since Beth Hillel say to Beth Shammai, 'Wherein does the evening [or] of the eighty-first differ from the day of the eighty-first,' it follows that 'or' is evening. This proves it.

New Moon was fixed by direct observation, not calculation, and communities at a distance from Jerusalem were informed by bonfires. These were lit only if the New Moon appeared 'in its (due) time,' i.e., it was fixed for the thirtieth day, the previous month thus consisting of twenty-nine days only; in that case too Beth Din formally sanctified this day. But if observation fixed it for the thirty-first day, no bonfires were lit, since the absence of bonfires on the previous day would be a sufficient signal; further, New Moon was not formally sanctified by Beth Din (Rashi). An objection is raised: one might think that it³ may be eaten on the evening ['or'] of the third day [from sacrifice], and it is logical: Sacrifices⁴ are eaten on one day,⁵ while peace-offerings are eaten on two days: just as there the night follows the day,⁶ so here too the night should follow the day. Therefore it is stated, It shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if aught remain until the third day [it shall be burnt with fire]:⁷ teaching, it may be eaten only during the day, but it may not be eaten during the evening ['or'] of the third day. One might think that it must be burnt immediately;⁸ and this is logical: Sacrifices⁴ may be eaten one day and one [sc. the following] night, while peace-offerings may be eaten two days and one [sc. the intermediate] night: just as there, immediately after [the time allowed for] eating there is burning, so here too immediately after [the time allowed for] eating there is burning. Therefore it is stated, But that which remaineth of the flesh of the sacrifice, on the third day it shall be burnt with fire:⁹ teaching, you must burn it by day, but you must not burn it by night. Since he states, . . . it may be eaten in the evening ['or'] of the third day,' it follows that or is evening. This proves it.

Come and hear: on the evening ['or'] of the Day of Atonement one recites seven [benedictions] and confesses; in the morning service he recites seven and confesses; in the additional service¹⁰ he recites seven and confesses; at minhah¹¹ he recites seven and confesses; (at ne'ilah — the concluding service — he recites seven and confesses);¹² in the evening service he recites [one benediction] embodying the eighteen; R. Hanina b. Gamaliel said on the authority of his fathers: He must recite the eighteen [benedictions] in full, because he must pronounce habdalah¹³ in [the benediction] 'Thou dost graciously grant knowledge'.¹⁴ This proves that 'or' is evening. This proves it.

Come and hear: For the School of Samuel¹⁵ learned: 'In the evening¹⁶ of the fourteenth leaven is searched for by the light of a lamp'; thus proving that 'or' is evening!¹⁷ The fact is both R. Huna and Rab Judah are alike, agreeing that 'or' is evening, and there is no controversy: each Master [speaks] in accordance with his locality. In R. Huna's town they called it naghe,¹⁸ while in Rab Judah's town it is called night [lele].

And our Tanna, why does he not employ lele?¹⁹ — He employs a refined expression, and in accordance with R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi said: one should not utter a gross expression with his mouth, for lo! the Writ employs a circumlocution of eight letters²⁰ rather than utter a gross expression, for it is said, of every clean beast . . . and of the beasts that are not clean.²¹ R. Papa said: Nine, for it is said, If there be among you any man, that is not clean by reason of that which chanceth by night.²² Rabina said: Ten, [including] the waw of tahir.²³ R. Aha b. Jacob said: Sixteen, for it is said, for he thought, Something hath befallen him he is not clean; surely he is not clean.²⁴

The School of R. Ishmael taught: one should always discourse in decent language, for lo!, the case of a zab²⁵ it is called riding, while in connection with a woman it is called sitting;²⁶ and it is said, and thou shalt choose the tongue of the subtle;²⁷ and it is said, and that which my lips know they shall speak purely.²⁸ Why [quote] 'and it is said [etc.]'?²⁹ — [For] should you object, that is only in the case of Scripture,³⁰ but not in the case of Rabbinical [discussions], then come and hear, 'and it is said, and thou shalt choose the tongue of the subtle'.³¹ Yet should you [still] object, that is only in reference to Rabbinical [discussions] but not secular matters, — then come and hear, 'and it is said, and that which my lips know they shall speak purely’.

Now, is riding not written in connection with a woman, but surely it is written, And Rebekah arose, and her damsels, and they rode upon the camels?³² — There it was natural through fear of the camels.³³ But it is written, and Moses took his wife and his sons, and made them ride upon an ass?³⁴ — There

- (1) A woman must bring a sacrifice eighty-one days after the birth of a daughter (v. Lev. XII, 2.6). This sacrifice suffices also for a miscarriage within the eighty days, i.e., before it was due, but not for a miscarriage (or viable birth) from the eighty-first day and onwards, since by then it was already due on account of the first birth. Now, by the evening of the eighty-first day eighty days have already passed; on the other hand, since there are no sacrifices at night, she could not offer hers until the following morning. Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel accordingly differ as to whether that miscarriage entails a sacrifice or not.
- (2) A discharge of blood on the eighty-first, whether in the evening or during the day, renders her unclean, — this is agreed by all. — A discharge between the fifteenth and the eightieth inclusive does not make her unclean; v. ibid. 5.
- (3) Sc. the flesh of a peace-offering.
- (4) Viz. the thanksoffering.
- (5) I.e., only on the day they are brought.
- (6) The thanksoffering may be eaten during the night following the day in which it is sacrificed.
- (7) Lev. XIX, 6.
- (8) After the expiration of the time allowed for its eating, i.e., on the evening of the third day.
- (9) Lev. VII, 17.
- (10) There is an additional service (musaf) on all Sabbaths and Festivals, corresponding to the additional sacrifices of those days.
- (11) v. Glos.
- (12) The bracketed passage is absent in our text but is supplied from Yoma 87b and Nid. 8b.
- (13) V. Glos.
- (14) The ‘Prayer’ par excellence on weekdays comprises eighteen (subsequently increased to nineteen) statutory benedictions; on Sabbaths and Festivals the first three and the last three only are recited, the intermediate twelve being omitted and replaced by one bearing on the nature of the day. A feature of all the services on the Day of Atonement is the ‘confession’, a recital of sins committed, not necessarily by the individual but by the people as a whole, for which reason it is couched in the plural — ‘we have sinned’. The evening following the Day of Atonement is of course non-holy, but the first Tanna permits one benediction comprising the eighteen to be recited. Each of the benedictions bears a name, indicating its main subject: the fourth is designated, ‘Thou dost graciously grant knowledge’, as it is a prayer for knowledge and understanding, and on the termination of Sabbaths and Festivals habdalah is inserted in this benediction. For a full discussion of these benedictions v. J.E. art. Shemoneh ‘Esreh; v. also Elbogen, J.G., 149f.
- (15) The reading infra 7b is: the School of R. Ishmael.
- (16) Lele — the very term employed by Rab Judah to define ‘or’ in our Mishnah.
- (17) In refutation of R. Huna.
- (18) Jast.: ‘night-break’. Margin: light employed as a euphemism for darkness in the same way that a blind person is called a man with too much light.
- (19) V. n. 3.
- (20) I.e., uses eight letters more than is necessary.
- (21) Gen. VII, 2; a single word, ‘unclean’, would save eight letters in the Hebrew text.
- (22) Deut. XXIII, 11. Here too a single word ‘unclean’ would save nine letters in the Hebrew text.
- (23) Tahor (טָהוֹר) is written plene, i.e., with a waw, and that makes a difference of ten letters.
- (24) I Sam. XX, 26.
- (25) V. Glos.
- (26) The reference is to Lev. XV, 9 and 20: And what saddle (or, carriage) soever he that hath issue rideth upon shall be unclean. Everything also that she sitteth upon shall be unclean. Actually the conditions of defilement are the same in both cases; nevertheless, Scripture did not speak of a woman's riding, because sitting is a more modest and decent conception.

(27) Job. XV, 5.

(28) Ibid. XXXIII, 3.

(29) What is the purpose of the additional quotations, seeing that the first verse proves his statement?

(30) Owing to its great sanctity.

(31) This is regarded as a positive injunction to speak subtly, i.e., with a due sense of the proprieties.

(32) Gen. XXIV, 61.

(33) A woman would ride properly, not merely sit on the side, through fear of falling down from the camel's high back.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 3b

it was natural on account of his sons. But it is written, And it was so, as she rode on her ass?¹ — There it was natural through fear of the night. Alternatively, there was no fear of the night, but there was fear of David. Another alternative: there was no fear of David either, but there was the fear of the mountain. Yet is not 'unclean' written in Scripture?² Rather wherever they are equal[ly convenient], [Scripture] discourses in a refined language; but wherever more words would be required, the shorter phraseology is employed. As R. Huna said in Rab's name — others say, R. Huna said in Rab's name on R. Meir's authority: one should always teach his pupil in concise terms. And where they are equal he discourses in refined speech? Yet surely 'riding' [rokebeth] and 'sitting' [yoshebeth] are alike [in length], yet 'riding' [rokebeth] is stated? — Rakebeth is stated.³

Two disciples sat before Rab. one said, This discussion has made us [as tired] as an exhausted swine;⁴ while the other said, This discussion has made us [as tired] as an exhausted kid; and Rab would not speak to the former.

There were two disciples who sat before Hillel, one of whom was R. Johanan b. Zakkai—others state, before Rabbi, and one of them was R. Johanan: One said, Why must we vintage [grapes] in cleanness, yet need not gather [olives] in cleanness? While the other said: Why must we vintage in cleanness, yet may gather [olives] in uncleanness?⁵ I am certain that the latter will be an authorized teacher⁶ in Israel, he observed; and it did not take long before⁷ he was an authorized teacher in Israel.

There were three priests: one said, I received as much as a bean [of the shewbread]; the second said, I received as much as an olive; while the third said, I received as much as a halta'ah's tail.⁸ They investigated his pedigree⁹ and found a blemish of unfitness in him.¹⁰ But we learned: one must not investigate from the altar and above?¹¹ — Do not say, a blemish of unfitness, but a baseness which made him unfit.¹² Alternatively, there it was different, because he impaired his status himself.

A certain Syrian [i.e., non-Jew] used to go up and partake of the Passover sacrifices in Jerusalem, boasting: It is written, there shall no alien eat thereof. . . no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof,¹³ yet I eat of the very best. Said R. Judah b. Bathyra to him: Did they supply you with the fat-tail? No, he replied. [Then] when you journey up thither say to them, Supply me with the fat-tail. When he went up he said to them, Supply me with the fat-tail. But the fat-tail belongs¹⁴ to the Most High!¹⁵ they replied. Who told you [to do] this? they inquired. R. Judah b. Bathyra. answered he. What is this [matter] before us? they wondered. They investigated his pedigree, and discovered that he was a Syrian, and killed him.¹⁶ Then they sent [a message] to R. Judah b. Bathyra: 'Peace be with thee,¹⁷ R. Judah b. Bathyra, for thou art in Nisibis¹⁸ yet thy net is spread in Jerusalem.'

R. Kahana fell sick. [So] the Rabbis sent R. Joshua son of R. Idi, instructing him, Go and find out what is wrong with him.¹⁹ He went and found him dead.²⁰ Thereupon he rent his garment and turned the rent behind him²¹ and went along weeping. He has died? asked they of him. I have not said it, he answered, 'for he that uttereth evil tidings is a fool'.²² Johanan of Hukok²³ went out to some villages.²⁴ on his return he was asked, 'Has the wheat crop been successful?'²⁵ 'The barley crop has been successful,' he replied.²⁶ 'Go out and tell it to horses and asses,' they retorted, 'for it is written, Barley also and straw for the horses and swift steeds.'²⁷ What then should he have said? — Last year the wheat crop was successful; or, the lentil crop is successful.

(1) I Sam. XXV, 20.

(2) It occurs many times. The circumlocution employed in the cited instances merely serves to indicate that delicate phraseology is a matter which must also enter into consideration, v. Rashi.

(3) I.e., rokebeth is written defectively, without a waw, which makes it shorter than yoshebeth. Yoshebeth could not be written defectively, as the defective form of yoshebeth has always a special meaning (Tosaf.). R. Han. reverses it: the full form of yoshebeth is required, as a particular deduction is made from it.

(4) Lit., 'something else' — the unmentionable. The rendering 'exhausted' is Rashi's. R. Han. renders differently.

(5) V. Shab. 17a and notes a.l. The point here is that one scholar avoided the use of the word 'uncleanness', while the other did not.

(8) This is a gross expression. Halta'ah is a species of lizard (Jast.).

(9) Lit., 'after him'.

(10) They discovered that his genealogy was impure and that he was unfit to serve in the Temple.

(11) Once a priest has officiated at the altar the purity of his descent must be assumed, as priests were not allowed to officiate without full investigation in the first place.

(12) They found his own character too vile for officiating on the altar. According to this emendation, the literal translation 'after him' must be retained in the text.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 4a

Rab was the son of R. Hiyya's brother and the son of his sister.¹ When he went up thither² he [R. Hiyya] asked him, 'Is Aibu alive?' '[Ask me whether] my mother is alive,' he replied. 'Is your mother alive?' asked he. 'Is then Aibu alive?' he replied.³ [Thereupon] he [R. Hiyya] said to his servant, 'Take off my shoes and carry my [bathing] things after me to the baths.' From this three [laws] may be inferred: [i] A mourner is forbidden to wear shoes; [ii] on a delayed report [of death]⁴ it [sc. mourning] is observed for one day only;⁵ and [iii] part of the day is as the whole of it.⁶

A certain man used to say, 'Judge my case'.⁷ Said they, This proves that he is descended from Dan, for it is written, Dan shall judge his people, as one of the tribes of Israel.⁸ A certain man was wont to go about and say, 'By the sea shore thorn-bushes are fir-trees.'⁹ They investigated and found that he was descended from Zebulun, for it is written, Zebulun shall dwell at the haven of the sea.¹⁰ And now that it is established that all agree that 'or' means evening, consider: according to both R. Judah and R. Meir,¹¹ leaven is forbidden from six hours¹² and onward only, then let us search in the sixth [hour]? And should you answer, The zealous are early [to perform] religious duties, then let us search from the morning? For it is written, and in the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised,¹³ and it was taught: The whole day is valid for circumcision, but that the zealous are early [to perform] their religious duties, for it is said, And Abraham rose early in the morning!¹⁴ — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [It was fixed] at the hour when people are found at home, while the light of a lamp is good for searching.¹⁵ Abaye observed: Therefore a scholar must not commence his regular session in the evening of the thirteenth breaking into the fourteenth, lest his studies absorb him¹⁶ and he come to neglect his religious duty.

R. Nahman b. Isaac was asked: If one rents a house to his neighbour from the fourteenth, upon whom [rests the duty] to make the search? [Does it rest] upon the landlord, because the leaven is his; or perhaps upon the tenant, because the forbidden matter exists in his domain? Come and hear: If one rents a house to his neighbour, the tenant must affix a mezuzah!¹⁷ - There, surely R. Mesharsheya said: The mezuzah is the inhabitant's obligation; but how is it here? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to them, We learned it: If one rents a house to his neighbour, if the fourteenth occurs before he delivers him the keys, the landlord must make the search; while if the fourteenth occurs after he delivers the keys, the tenant must make search.

R. Nahman b. Isaac was asked: If one rents a house to his neighbour on the fourteenth, does it stand in the presumption of having been searched or not? What difference does it make? Let us ask him! — He is not present to be asked: hence what about troubling this one [the tenant]?¹⁸ — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to them, We have a teaching:¹⁹ All are believed concerning the removal of leaven, even women, even slaves, even minors.²⁰ Now why are they believed?

(1) Aibu, his father, was R. Hiyya's paternal brother, while Rab's mother was R. Hiyya's sister on his mother's side.

(2) To Palestine.

(3) Thus he intimated that they were both dead (Rashi). Tosaf. explains it differently on the strength of a different reading.

(4) I.e., which one receives after thirty days.

(5) Instead of the usual seven.

(6) The latter two follow from his order to take his bathing things to the baths. Thus he intended to observe mourning for a short while only and then proceed to the baths.

(7) In every dispute he insisted on going to law.

(8) Gen. XLIX, 16. Perhaps it is here translated: Dan shall enter into judgment with his people.

(9) Even the thorn-bushes there are as valuable as fir-trees elsewhere — an exaggerated way of expressing his love for the coast. Rashi offers another explanation: By the sea-shore would I build my palaces.

(10) Ibid. 13.

(11) v. Mishnah infra 11b.

(12) The day was reckoned from sunrise to sunset, hence six hours was about noon.

(13) Lev. XII, 3.

(14) Gen. XXII, 3.

(15) Hence the evening was appointed instead of the morning.

(16) Lit., 'draw him away'.

(17) v. Glos. Presumably the same principle applies here!

(18) Must we put him to the trouble of making a search?

(19) Lit., 'we have learned it'.

(20) Their testimony that the owner duly made a search is accepted.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 4b

Is it not because it stands in the presumption of having been searched, [the Tanna] holding, All are haberim¹ in respect to the searching of leaven.² For it was taught: If a haber dies and leaves a store-house full of produce [crops], even if they are but one day old,³ they stand in the presumption of having been tithed.⁴ How so: perhaps it is different here⁵ because they [the woman, slave or minor] state it? — Has then the statement of these any substance?⁶ What then [will you assume]? It stands in the presumption of having been searched? Then it should state, 'All houses stand on the fourteenth in the presumption of having been searched'? — What then [will you assume]? It is because of the statement of these⁷ [that the house is assumed to have been searched], but if these did not say [that it had been searched], it is not so? Then solve from this [teaching] that it does not stand in the presumption of having been searched! — No. In truth I may tell you [that generally]⁸ it does stand in the presumption of having been searched; but what we discuss here⁵ is a case where we know for certain that he [the owner] did not search, but these⁷ affirm. We searched it. You might say, Let not the Rabbis believe them. Therefore it informs us [that] since the search for leaven is [required only] by Rabbinical law, for by Scriptural law mere nullification suffices for it, the Rabbis gave them⁹ credence in [respect to] a Rabbinical [enactment].

The scholars asked: What if one rents a house to his neighbour in the presumption of its having been searched, and he [the tenant] finds that it has not been searched? Is it as an erroneous bargain¹⁰ or not? — Come and hear! For Abaye said: It is unnecessary [to say] of a town, where payment is not made [to others] for searching that a person is pleased to fulfil a precept personally;¹¹ but even in a town where payment is made for searching [it is not an erroneous bargain], because [it is to be assumed that] one is pleased to fulfil a precept with his money.¹²

We learned elsewhere: R. Meir said: one may eat [leaven] the whole of the five [hours]¹³ and must burn [it] at the beginning of the sixth.¹⁴ R. Judah said: one may eat until four [hours],¹⁵ hold it in suspense the whole of the fifth,¹⁶ and must burn it at the beginning of the sixth.¹⁷ Thus incidentally all agree that leaven is [Scripturally] forbidden from six hours [i.e., noon] and onwards: whence do we know it? — Said Abaye, Two verses are written: Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses;¹⁸ and it is written, even [ak] the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses:¹⁹ how is this [to be understood]?²⁰ It must include the fourteenth [as the day] for removal.²¹ Yet say that it includes the night of the fifteenth [as the time] for removal; for one might argue, 'days' is written, [implying] only days but not nights: hence it [the verse] informs us that even nights [are included in the interdict]?²² — That is unnecessary,

(1) Plur. of haber; lit., 'associates'. It denotes members of an association (haburah) who undertake to be very scrupulous in their religious observance, particularly in regard to uncleanness and tithes.

(2) I.e., all men are regarded as haberim in the matter under discussion, as it was universally observed.

(3) Only that day had they arrived at the stage when tithing etc. is obligatory. The stage is reached when the harvested produce is stacked up.

(4) Lit., 'properly prepared' — it may be assumed that the priestly and Levitical dues have been rendered. Similarly it is to be presumed that the landlord had searched the house before renting it.

(5) In the cited teaching.

(6) Their testimony is invalid where testimony is required.

(7) I.e., the woman, slave or minor.

(8) I.e., in a case such as submitted to R. Nahman b. Isaac. (12) A declaration by the owner that all leaven in the house is null and has no value whatsoever in his eyes.

(9) I.e., the woman, slave or minor.

(10) On the strength of which the tenant can retract.

(11) There the tenant is certainly unable to retract, as it is assumed that he, like all the others, is glad of this opportunity to fulfil personally a religious obligation.

(12) And even had he known beforehand that the house was not searched he would not have refrained from renting it;

hence he cannot retract now.

(13) I.e., until 11 a.m.

(14) But may not wait until the end of the sixth, i.e., noon (by which time it is Scripturally forbidden to have leaven in the house), because one can err in the time.

(15) Until 10 a.m.

(16) I.e., in that hour it may neither be eaten, nor need it be burned, but it can be given to animals.

(17) V. infra 11b.

(18) Ex. XII, 19.

(19) Ibid. 15.

(20) If the leaven is only put away on the first day, as the latter verse implies, there are not seven full days without leaven, as is intimated by the former verse.

(21) I.e., 'first' must mean the first (immediately) preceding day before the seven; cf. infra 5a.

(22) Thus 'yet at the first day', etc., may mean that at the very beginning of the seven days, i.e., on the evening of the fifteenth, all leaven must be removed, but there is no prohibition for any part of the fourteenth.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 5a

for the putting away of leaven is assimilated to [the prohibition of] eating leavened bread,¹ and the eating of leavened bread to the [precept of] the eating of unleavened bread. The putting away of leaven [is assimilated] to [the prohibition of] the eating of leavened bread, for it is written, seven days shall there be no leaven in your houses,' for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, that soul shall be cut off.² And [the prohibition of] the eating of leavened bread [is likened] to the [precept of] eating unleavened bread, because it is written, Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread;³ and in respect to unleavened bread it is written, at even ye shall eat unleavened bread.⁴ Yet perhaps it is to include the night of fourteenth [as the time] for removal?⁵ — 'The day' is written. Then say [that it must be removed] from the morning?⁶ — 'Ak' divides [it].⁷

The School of R. Ishmael taught: We find that the fourteenth is called the first, as it is said, on the first, on the fourteenth day of the month.⁸ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: 'The first'⁹ [rishon] means the preceding, for the Writ saith, Wast thou born, before [rishon] Adam?¹⁰ If so, and ye shall take you out the first [rishon] day,¹¹ — does 'rishon' here too mean the preceding? — There it is different, because it is written, and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days:¹² just as the seventh [means] the seventh of the Festival, so the first [means] the first of the Festival. [But] here too it is written, even the first day [rishon] ye shall put away leaven out of your houses. Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread?¹³ — If so, let Scripture write 'first' ['rishon']; why 'the first [ha-rishon]'? Infer from this [that it is required] for what we have stated. If so, there too¹² what is the purpose of 'the first' ['ha-rishon']? Moreover, when it is written there, on the first day shall be a solemn rest, and on the eighth day shall be a solemn rest,¹⁴ say that rishon implies the preceding? There it is different, because Scripture saith, 'and on the eighth day shall be a solemn rest': just as 'eighth' means the eighth of the Festival, so 'first' means [the] first of the Festival. [But still] what is the purpose of 'the first' [ha-rishon]?¹² — In order to exclude the Intermediate days of the Festival.¹⁵ [But the exclusion of] the Intermediate days of the Festival is derived from 'first' and 'eighth'? — It is [nevertheless] required: you might argue, since the Divine Law writes, and on the eighth day, the waw ['and'] indicates conjunction with the preceding subject, so [as to include] even the Intermediate days of the Festival too;¹⁶ hence ha-rishon informs us [otherwise]. Then let Scripture write neither the waw nor the heh?¹⁷ Moreover, when it is written there, In the first day [ha-rishon] ye shall have an holy convocation,¹⁸ does 'rishon' mean the preceding?¹⁹ Rather, these three [instances of] 'rishon' ['first'] are necessary for what the School of R. Ishmael taught. For the School of R. Ishmael taught: As a reward for [the observance of] the three 'firsts'²⁰ they [Israel] merited three firsts:²¹ to destroy²² the seed of Esau; the building of the Temple; and the name of the Messiah. 'To destroy the seed of Esau,' of whom it is written, And the first came forth red, all over like an hairy garment;²³ and 'the building of the Temple', whereof it is written, A glorious throne, set on high from the first²⁴ is the place of our sanctuary;²⁵ ‘and the name of Messiah,’ for it is written, First unto Zion, behold, behold them.²⁶

Raba said, [I²⁷ is deduced] from here: Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread:²⁸ [that means,] thou shalt not kill the passover sacrifice while leavened bread is still in existence.²⁹ Then perhaps each person [must remove his leaven] when he kills [his sacrifice]?³⁰ Scripture meant the time for killing.³¹

It was taught likewise: ‘[Even] the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses’: [this means] on the eve of the Festival. Yet perhaps that is not so, but [rather] on the Festival itself? — Therefore it is stated, ‘thou shalt not offer the blood of thy sacrifice with leavened bread,’ [i.e.,] thou shalt not kill the Passover sacrifice while leavened bread still exists [in thy, house]: that is R. Ishmael's view. R. Akiba said, That is unnecessary: lo, it is said, ‘Even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses’, and it is written, no manner of work shall be done in them,³² while we find that kindling is a principal labour.³³ R. Jose said, It is unnecessary: lo, it is said, ‘Even [ak] on the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses’: [that means,] from the eve of the Festival. Or perhaps it is not so, but rather on the Festival? Therefore is stated, ‘Ak’, which serves to divide;³⁴ hence if [it means] on the Festival itself, can [part of it] be permitted? Surely the putting away of leaven is likened to [the prohibition of] eating leavened bread, while the prohibition of eating leavened bread is likened to [the duty of] eating unleavened bread.³⁵

Said Raba:

- (1) Immediately the latter comes into force the former is obligatory.
 - (2) Ex. XII, 19.
 - (3) Ibid. 20. Hence from the very moment that the latter is operative the former is too, and consequently by then the leaven must already be removed.
 - (4) Ibid. 18. Hence no verse would be necessary to show that as soon as evening commences the leaven must be put away; therefore the verse quoted supra can only refer to the fourteenth.
 - (5) Since we see that leaven is to be removed on the fourteenth, perhaps it must be done at the beginning of the fourteenth, Sc. in the evening.
 - (6) As soon as day commences, not from midday.
 - (7) It is a general principle in Talmudic exegesis that ak and rak (only) imply limitations; thus ak divides the day, showing that the putting away takes place in the middle of the day, not at the beginning.
 - (8) Ibid.
 - (9) In verse 18.
 - (10) Job. XV, 7 (E.V.: Art thou the first man that was born). Hence Ex. XII, 15 is translated: yet on the preceding day — i.e., the fourteenth — ye shall put away, etc.
 - (11) Lev. XXIII, 40.
 - (12) Lev. XXIII, 40.
 - (13) By the same argument ‘rishon’ means first, not preceding. — Actually the order is reversed in Scripture.
 - (14) Ibid. 39.
 - (15) Lit., ‘the weekday (portion) of the Festival’. It teaches that these days enjoy semi-sanctity only, and work of an urgent nature is permitted.
 - (16) That work thereon is forbidden.
 - (17) The heh is the def. art. ‘the’ (ha). According to the present argument the heh (ha) merely neutralizes the possible teaching of the waw: then both should be omitted.
 - (18) Ibid. 7; the reference is to Passover.
 - (19) Surely not.
 - (20) The ‘first’ of Passover, the ‘first’ of Tabernacles, and the taking of the four species (v. 40) on the ‘first’ day of Tabernacles.
 - (21) Three things in connection with which ‘first’ is written.

- (22) Lit., 'cut off'.
 (23) Gen. XXV, 25.
 (24) E.V. beginning.
 (25) Jer. XVII, 12.
 (26) Isa. XLI, 27.
 (27) Sc. that leaven is forbidden from midday on the fourteenth.
 (28) Ex. XXXIV, 25.
 (29) And since the sacrificing commences immediately after noon, it follows that the leaven must already be removed by then.
 (30) Thus if he kills it at 4 p.m., leaven is permitted to him until that hour.
 (32) Ibid. XII, 16.
 (33) Forbidden on the Sabbath, and likewise on Festivals, save when required for the preparation of food. The leaven was burnt.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 5b

Three things may be inferred from R. Akiba: [i] There is no [other] removal of leaven save [by] burning.¹ [ii] Kindling was singled out to indicate separation.² [iii] We do not say, since kindling was permitted when it is necessary [for the preparation of food], it was also permitted when it is unnecessary.³

Our Rabbis taught: Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your house:⁴ why is this stated, seeing that it is already said, and there shall no leavened bread be seen unto thee, neither shall there be leaven seen unto thee, in all thy borders?⁵ Because it is said, Neither shall there be leaven seen unto thee, [implying] thine own thou must not see, yet thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High.⁶ One might think that one may hide [leaven] or accept bailments [of leaven] from a Gentile:⁷ therefore it is stated, it shall not be found [in your houses],⁸ Now, I know this only of a Gentile who is not in your power⁹ or does not dwell with you in the [same] court-yard; how do I know it of a Gentile who is in your power and dwells with you in the [same] court-yard? Because it is stated, [leaven] shall not be found in your houses. I know this only of that which is your houses; how do I know it of [leaven] in pits, ditches and cavities?¹⁰ Because it is stated, [neither shall there be leaven seen with thee,] in all thy borders.¹¹ Yet I might still argue, [indeed on account of leaven] 'in houses' one transgresses the injunction against it being seen, found, and against hiding it and receiving [it as] bailments from a Gentile; whereas in [respect to leaven in] 'thy borders' [we say,] thine own thou must not see, yet thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High. How do we [however] know to apply that which is stated in this [verse] to the other, and vice versa?¹² Therefore leaven is stated twice¹³ for a gezerah shawah.¹⁴ [Thus:] leaven is stated in connection with houses: 'no leaven shall be found in your houses', and leaven is stated in connection with the borders; 'neither shall there be leaven seen with thee [in all thy borders]': just as with the leaven which is stated in connection with houses, one transgresses the injunctions, it shall not be seen, it shall not be found, it shall not be hidden nor accepted as bailments from Gentiles, so with the leaven which is stated in connection with the borders, one violates the injunctions, it shall not be seen, it shall not be found, it shall not be hidden nor accepted as bailments from a Gentile. And just as with the leaven which is stated in connection with the borders, [only] thine own thou must not see, but thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High, so with the leaven which is stated in connection with the houses, [only] thine own thou mayest not see, but thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High.

The Master said: 'I know this only of a Gentile who is not in your power or does not dwell with you in the [same] court-yard; how do I know it of a Gentile who is in your power or who dwells with you in the [same] court-yard? Because it is stated, [Leaven] shall not be found [in your houses].¹⁵ Whither does this tend?' — Said Abaye: Reverse it. Raba said: In truth you must not reverse it, but it refers to the first clause: 'Thine own thou mayest not see, yet thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High.' I know this only of a Gentile who is not in your power or who does not dwell with you in the [same] court-yard.¹⁶ How do I know it of one who is in your power or who dwells with you in the [same] court-yard? Because it is stated, 'there shall not be found'. But this Tanna seeks permission yet cites a verse intimating a prohibition?¹⁷ — Because 'unto thee' 'unto thee' is stated twice.¹⁸ The Master said: 'one might think that one may hide [leaven] or accept bailments [of leaven] from a Gentile; therefore it is stated, [leaven] shall not be found [in your houses].¹⁹ But you said in the first clause, 'thine own thou mayest not see, yet thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High?' — There is no difficulty: the one is meant where he [the Israelite] accepts responsibility [for same]; the other, where he does not accept responsibility.¹⁹ Just as Raba said to the townspeople of Mahuza:²⁰ Remove the leaven belonging to the troops from your houses:

power or who lives with you in the same court-yard is more likely to be meant than he who is independent or living away from you. since the former is more like yourself. Whereas here the latter is taken for granted, while proof is sought for the former. since it stands in your possession if lost or stolen, and you must requite [the loss], it is as yours and is forbidden.²¹ Now, that is well on the view that that which causes [liability] for money is as money.²² But on the view that it is not as money, what can be said? — Here it is different, because Scripture saith, 'There shall not be found'.²³ Others say, That is well on the view that that which causes [liability] for money is not as money:

(1) For if it can be destroyed in any other way, his proof falls to the ground.

(2) In Ex. XX, 10 work is forbidden on the Sabbath; this is repeated in XXXV, 2 and 3, with a special prohibition against kindling a fire. Now, kindling is prohibited by the general law of Ex. XX, 10: why then is it singled out? There are two views on this: (i) In order to teach that whereas other labours are punishable by death, this is merely punishable like any other negative precept, viz., by flagellation. (ii) To teach that if one does a number of separate acts on the Sabbath, e.g., seething, reaping, and threshing, they are accounted as separate offences, just as kindling was stated as a separate offence, and a sacrifice must be offered on account of each. Now the first view postulates that kindling is not a principal labour like the rest (v. Mishnah on Shab. 73a); hence R. Akiba must agree with the second view.

(3) There is such a view in Bez. 12b; if R. Akiba held it, his argument would lose its basis.

(4) Ex. XII, 19.

(5) Ex. XIII, 7. Though this is in a further chapter, the phrase, 'seeing that it is already said', is employed because it is a Talmudic principle that the written order of the Torah is not necessarily chronological.

(6) I.e., the sanctuary, this being the meaning of 'unto thee' (E.V.: with thee).

(7) For in the former case it cannot be seen, while in the latter it is not his property.

(8) It must not be there at all.

(9) Lit., 'whom you have not subjugated'.

(10) Different shaped pits are connoted by these three words.

(11) Ex. XIII, 7.

(12) 'For there shall not be found' is written only in connection with 'your houses', while 'unto thee' is mentioned only in connection with 'borders'; how do we know that the implications of the one verse hold good in respect of the other?

(13) Lit. 'leaven, leaven'.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) Or, towards the tail! I.e., when you say that you must not accept deposits from a Gentile, obviously he who is in your

(16) He certainly comes under the category of 'others'.

(17) According to Raba's explanation. when the Tanna says. 'how do I know', etc., his purpose is to show that there too it is permitted; while 'there shall not be found' intimates a more extended prohibition.

(18) Rashi: 'Unto thee' is written twice, once in the verse already quoted, and once in Deut. XVI, 4: and there shall be no leaven seen unto (E.V. with) thee in all thy borders seven days. Here too 'unto thee' is linked with seeing; since, however, it is superfluous in this connection, on account of the verse first quoted, it is applied to 'there shalt not be found', which is made to read: there shall not be found unto thee, 'unto thee' being a permissive limitation, and it is this which the Tanna quotes. — It is a principle of exegesis that if a word or phrase is superfluous in its own context, it is applied elsewhere. (The fact that 'unto thee' is written twice in Ex. XIII, 7 is not counted, since one refers to leaven and the other to leavened bread. — V. Bez. 7b.) R. Han. interprets it differently and more simply.

(19) If the Jew accepts responsibility for the bailment and must identify the owner against loss, it is as his own and must not be found in his house.

(20) A large Jewish commercial town on the Tigris. where Raba had his academy; v. obermeyer. pp. 169ff.

(21) Gentile troops were billeted in Jewish houses together with their food stores, for which the Jews were responsible.

(22) Hence though the leaven does not belong to the Jew, yet since it throws a financial responsibility upon him it is regarded as his, i.e., as his money or property.

(23) Which implies even if it is not his own and it can be applied only to such a case, since 'unto thee' excludes leaven in which he has no financial interest at all.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 6a

hence 'there shall not be found' is necessary. But on the view that it is as money. what is the purpose of 'there shall not be found'?¹ — It is necessary: you might argue, since if in existence it is returned as it is,² it does not stand in his possession.³ Hence he informs us [otherwise].

Raba was asked: Is cattle liable to arnona⁴ subject to the law of firstlings or not?⁵ Wherever one can put him off with money.⁶ we do not ask, for he is [certainly] liable.⁷ our problem arises where he cannot put him off with money: what then? He replied: It is not subject [thereto]. But surely it was taught: It [the animal] is subject [thereto]?-There it is a case where he can put him off with money. others state, Raba said: Cattle liable to arnona is not subject to the law of firstlings. even when he can put him off with money.⁸ A dough [made of flour] liable to arnona⁹ is subject to hallah.¹⁰ What is the reason? [The facts about] cattle are generally known;¹¹ [the facts about a dough] are not generally known.¹²

Our Rabbis taught: If a Gentile enters an Israelite's court-yard with [leavened] dough in his hand,¹³ he [the Israelite] is not obliged to remove it¹⁴ if he deposits it with him, he is obliged to remove it;¹⁵ if he assigns a room to him [for the dough], he is not obliged to remove it, because it is said, '[Leaven] shall not be found'. What does he [the Tanna] mean?¹⁶ — Said R. Papa: He refers to the first clause, and says thus: If he deposits it with him, he is obliged to remove it, because it is said, '[Leaven] shall not be found'. R. Ashi said: After all it refers to the second clause, and he says thus: If he assigned a room to him he is not obliged to remove it, because it is said, '[Leaven] shall not be found in your houses,' and this is not his [house], for when the Gentile carries in [the leaven], he carries it into his own house. Shall we say that renting confers a title?¹⁷ But surely we learned: Even in the place where they [the Sages] permitted renting [to a heathen], they did not permit [renting] for a dwelling-house, because he [the heathen] introduces [his] idols therein.¹⁸ Now if you should think that renting confers a title, when he introduces [the idols] he introduces [them] into his own house? — Here it is different, because the Divine Law expresses it in the form of 'there shall not be found', [implying] that which is found in your hand [is forbidden], which excludes this [case], since it is not found in your hand.

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: If one finds leaven in his house during the Festival, he overturns a vessel upon it.¹⁹ Raba said: If dough partly owned by a non-Jew; nevertheless this dough is subject to hallah, as explained in the text. it is of hekdesch,²⁰ this is unnecessary. What is the reason? He does indeed hold aloof from it.²¹

Rab Judah also said in Rab's name: Leaven belonging to a Gentile,²² he [the Israelite] must set up a partition of ten handbreadths around it as a distinguishing mark;²³ but if it belongs to hekdesch this is unnecessary. What is the reason? People hold aloof from it.

Rab Judah also said in Rab's name: He who sets sail, and he who sets out in a [caravan] company, before thirty days [prior to Passover], is not bound to remove [the leaven]; if within thirty days, he is bound to remove [it]. Abaye observed: When you say, if within thirty days he is bound to remove it, we said this only where his intention is to return [during Passover]; but if it is not his intention to return, he is not bound to remove [it]. Said Raba to him: But if his intention is to return, even [if he sets out] on New Year too?²⁴ Rather, said Raba: When you say, if before thirty days he is not bound to remove it, we said this only where it is not his intention to return; but if his intention is to return, even [if he sets out] on New Year too. Now Raba is consistent with his view. For Raba said: If one turns his house into a granary²⁵ before thirty days [prior to the Passover], he is not bound to remove [the leaven];²⁶ if within thirty days, he is bound to remove it;²⁷ and even before thirty days too, we said this only when it is not his intention to clear it [the store of provisions] away; but if his intention is to clear it away, even before thirty days too he is bound to remove it.

What business have these thirty days?²⁸ — As it was taught: Questions are asked and lectures are given on the laws of Passover for thirty days before Passover. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Two weeks. What is the reason of the first Tanna?

- (1) It is obviously forbidden, since it is just like his own!
 - (2) I.e., not lost or stolen or destroyed.
 - (3) In regard to the prohibition 'there shall not be found'.
 - (4) Tax from crops and cattle paid in kind.
 - (5) Where a non-Jew has a share in an animal it is definitely not subject thereto; the question here is as explained in the text.
 - (6) I.e., the king, to whom the tax is payable, will accept money instead of the animal.
 - (7) The owner is bound to render it as a firstling.
 - (8) Because until he does pay him off the non-Jew has a claim upon it.
 - (9) I.e., a dough from which arnona is paid.
 - (10) V. Glos. and Num. XV, 20f: of the first of your dough ye shall offer up a cake for an heave-offering . . . of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the Lord an heave-offering throughout your generations. Here too 'your' excludes
 - (11) Lit., 'an animal has a sound (voice)' — i.e., it will be known that it belongs to a herd liable to arnona.
 - (12) The on-looker does not know that the dough is made of flour subject to arnona and may suspect him of violating the law.
 - (13) On the fourteenth of Nisan after noon, when leaven is forbidden.
 - (14) Since it is not his, v. supra 5b.
 - (15) Where he accepts responsibility for same.
 - (16) If anything the quotation intimates the reverse.
 - (17) So that the house becomes legally the non-Jew's.
 - (18) A.Z. 21a.
 - (19) It must not be handled and carried out, because it is mukzeh (v. Glos.), since it cannot be put to any use, all benefit from leaven being forbidden during Passover. He therefore covers it over with a vessel and burns it in the evening on the termination of the Festival.
 - (20) V. Glos.
 - (21) In any case, since it is hekdesch.
 - (22) In a Jew's house.
 - (23) The reference here is to the fourteenth, and the partition is needed lest he forget himself and eat it, The overturning of a vessel upon it does not suffice here lest he might remove it in the course of the seven days.
 - (24) He must still remove it, since he will be in the house on Passover.

(25) I.e., he stores provisions in it, and under them lies leaven.

(26) By being buried under his provisions it is as though it were removed.

(27) Because the obligation to remove it becomes operative in this period, and one cannot remove it thus at the very outset.

(28) Why is the matter dependent on this period?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 6b

Because lo! Moses was standing on the First Passover and giving instructions about the Second Passover,¹ as it is said, Moreover, let the children of Israel keep the passover in its appointed season;² and it is written, And there were certain men, who were unclean by the dead body of a man.³ And R. Simeon b. Gamaliel?⁴ — He answers you: Because he was engaged in the laws of Passover, he instructed them⁵ in all the laws of Passover. What is R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's reason? Because lo! Moses was standing at the beginning of the month and giving orders about the Passover, as it is said, This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you.⁶ And it is written, Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb, according to their father's houses, etc.⁶ But how do you know that he was standing at the beginning of the month; perhaps he was standing on the fourth or the fifth of the month? Rather, said Rabbah b. Shimi in Rabina's name, [It is deduced] from here: And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year;⁷ and it is written, Moreover let the children of Israel keep the passover in its appointed season.⁸ But here too, how do you know that he was standing at the beginning of the month: perhaps he was standing on the fourth or the fifth of the month? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [The implication of] 'wilderness' [here] is learned from 'wilderness' [elsewhere]. Here it is written, 'in the wilderness of Sinai', while there it is written, And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the tent of meeting, on the first day of the second month:⁹ just as there [it was] at the beginning of the month, so here too at the beginning of the month.

Now, let [the events of] the first month be written first, and then that of the second month?¹⁰ — Said R. Menasia b. Tahlifa in Rab's name: This proves that there is no chronological order¹¹ in the Torah. R. Papa observed: This was said only of two subjects; but in the same subject what is earlier is earlier and what is later is later. For should you not say thus, [how, then, apply the principle that] when a general proposition is followed by a particular specification the general proposition comprises only what is contained in the particular specification; perhaps it is a particular specification followed by a general proposition! Moreover, [it is a principle that] when a particular specification is followed by a general proposition, the generalization becomes an addition to the specification,¹² [here too] perhaps it is a generalization followed by a particularization! But if so, the same [question] applies even to two subjects? Now, that is well on the view that [when] a generalization and a specification [are] at a distance from each other, we do not interpret¹³ them as a generalization followed by a specification, then it is correct. But on the view that we do interpret [them thus], what can be said?¹⁴ — Even on the view that we do interpret, that is only [when they occur] in the same subject; but [when] in two subjects we do not interpret [them thus].

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: He who searches [for leaven] must [also] declare it null.¹⁵ What is the reason? Shall we say [it is] because of crumbs¹⁶ — but they are of no value?¹⁷ And should you answer, since they are guarded in virtue of his house,¹⁸ they are of account, surely it was taught: [If there are in a man's field] late figs, while he guards his field on account of the grapes; or if there are late grapes, while he guards his field on account of his cucumbers and gourds,¹⁹ when the owner is particular about them, they are forbidden [to a stranger] as theft and are subject to tithes; when the owner is not particular about them, they are not forbidden as theft and are exempt from tithes!²⁰ — Said Raba: It is a preventive measure, lest he find a tasty loaf²¹ and [set] his mind upon it.²² Then let him annul it when he finds it? — He may find it after the interdict [commences], and then it does not stand in his ownership and [so] he cannot annul it. For R. Eleazar said: Two things are not in a man's ownership, yet the Writ regarded them as though they were in his ownership. And these are they: a pit in public ground²³ and leaven from six hours²⁴ and onwards.²⁵ Then let him annul it at the fourth or the fifth [hour]?²⁶ — Since it is neither the time of the prohibition nor the time of searching, he may transgress and not annul it.

- (1) I.e., the Passover celebrated on the fourteenth of the second month by those who were unable to celebrate it at the proper time.
 - (2) Num. IX, 2.
 - (3) Ibid. 6. The narrative relates how Moses gave instructions about the second Passover, vv. 9 seq.
 - (4) How does he refute this proof?
 - (5) Lit., 'completed for them'.
 - (6) Ex. XII, 2f.
 - (7) Num. IX, 1.
 - (8) And from the beginning of the month until Passover is two weeks.
 - (9) Num. I, 1.
 - (10) Num. I, 1ff is chronologically a month later than IX. 1ff; why is it not written in that order?
 - (11) Lit., 'earlier and later'.
 - (12) So as to include all things implied in the generalization.
 - (13) Lit., 'judge'.
 - (14) v. B.K. 85a.
 - (15) I.e., of no account and valueless and free to all.
 - (16) Which may escape his search.
 - (17) They are therefore null in any case.
 - (18) When he guards his house he ipso facto guards these crumbs.
 - (19) The late figs and grapes which remain after the harvest never fully ripen. Here they are in a field which is guarded from intruders not for their sake but because it contains other crops yet to be gathered.
 - (20) Because they are regarded as ownerless, and such are exempt from tithe. Thus though they are incidentally guarded, that does not give them any value, and the same should apply here.
 - (21) סֵּוּסָה, a loaf made from a special brand of white flour.
 - (22) To keep it until after Passover.
 - (23) He who digs a pit in public ground is responsible for any damage it may cause, as though it were his property, though actually it is not.
 - (24) I.e., noon.
 - (25) One is culpable for its presence in his house then, though technically speaking it is no longer his.
 - (26) I.e., any time in the morning before noon, when it is still his. Why particularly the preceding evening, when he is making the search?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 7a

Then let him annul it in the sixth [hour]?¹ — Since the Rabbinical interdict is upon it,² it is like a Scriptural [interdict] and does not stand in his ownership, hence he cannot annul it. For R. Gidal said in R. Hiyya b. Joseph's name in Rab's name: He who betroths from the sixth hour and onwards, even with wheat of Cordyene,³ we have no fear of his betrothal.⁴

But, is he unable to annul it after the prohibition [commences]? Surely it was taught: If he is sitting in the Beth Hamidrash and recollects that he has leaven at home, he annuls it in his heart, whether it is the Sabbath or the Festival. Now as for the Sabbath, it is well: this is possible where the fourteenth [of Nisan] falls on the Sabbath;⁵ but the Festival is after the prohibition [commences]?⁶ — Said R. Aha b. Jacob: We treat here of a disciple sitting before his master, and he recollects that he has a rolled dough⁷ at home and fears that it may turn leaven; [therefore] he anticipates and annuls it before it turns leaven. This may be proved too: for it states, 'If he is sitting in the Beth Hamidrash'.⁸

This proves it.

Rabbah the son of R. Huna said in Rab's name: If a loaf went mouldy, if mazzah⁹ exceeds it [in quantity], it is permitted.¹⁰ How is it meant? Shall we say that he [the owner] knows that this [loaf] is leaven, what then matters it if the mazzah does exceed it?¹¹ Again if we do not know whether it is leaven or mazzah, then why particularly if the mazzah exceeds it; even if the mazzah does not exceed it too, let us go after the last?¹² Did we not learn: Money found in front of cattle dealers at all times is [accounted as] tithe; on the Temple Mount, it is hullin;⁹ in [the rest of] Jerusalem, at any other part of the year. it is hullin; at the Festival season, it is tithe.¹³ And R. Shemaia b. Zera observed thereon: What is the reason? Because the streets of Jerusalem¹⁴ were swept daily. This proves that we assume: the earlier[losses] have gone. and these [coins] are different ones. So here too let us say: the earlier[bread] has gone and this is of the present?¹⁵ — Here it is different, because its mouldiness proves its status.¹⁶ If its mouldiness proves its status, what does it matter if the mazzah exceeds it? — Said Rabbah. Do not say, 'if the mazzah exceeds it', but say, 'many days of mazzah have passed over it'.¹⁷ If so, it is obvious? — This is necessary only where it is very mouldy; you might argue, since it is very mouldy it is clear that it is certainly true leaven; therefore he informs us that since many days of mazzah have passed over it we say: every day hot mazzah¹⁸ was baked and thrown thereon, and that made it very mouldy.

Yet do we follow the last? Surely it was taught. R. Jose b. Judah said: If a chest was used for money of hullin and money of tithe,¹⁹ if it was mostly hullin, it [the money found therein] is hullin; if mostly tithe, it is tithe. But why so? let us go after the last?—Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: of what do we treat here? E.g., where it was used for money of hullin and money of tithe, and one does not know which was last. R. Zebid said: E.g., where it was used for separate packages.²⁰ R. Papa said: E.g., if it was found in a pit.²¹ of peace-offerings; when one could not stay long enough in Jerusalem to expend all his tithe money, he would distribute it among the poor or give it to his friends in Jerusalem. Consequently, if money is found in front of cattle dealers, whatever the time of the year, it is assumed to be of the second tithe. On the other hand, if it is found on the Temple Mount, we assume it to be hullin, even at Festival time, when most of money handled is tithe, because the greater part of the year is not Festival, and then ordinary hullin is in circulation and this money might have been lost before the Festival. But if found in the streets of Jerusalem, a distinction is drawn, as stated in the text. Rab Judah said: He who searches [for leaven] must pronounce a benediction. What benediction does he pronounce? R. Pappi said in Raba's name: '[. . . who hast commanded us] to remove leaven'. R. Papa said in Raba's name: '[. . . who hast coumanded us] concerning the removal of leaven'. As for [the phrase] 'to remove,' there is no disagreement at all that it certainly implies in the future.²²

(1) He is not likely to forget it then, since he is engaged in burning it.

(2) On all views, v. supra 4b.

(3) A district lying to the east of the river Tigris, south of Armenia. — That wheat is very hard and does not easily become leaven; nevertheless if moisture had fallen upon it after being harvested it is regarded as leaven.

(4) The betrothal is definitely invalid, because the wheat has no value because of the Rabbi ical interdict, whereas for betrothal something of value is required (v. Kid. 2a). — Thus although the interdict at that hour is only Rabbinical, the leaven is regarded as completely valueless; hence not under his ownership.

(5) And he recollects before the sixth hour.

(6) How can he annul it then?

(7) I.e., a dough kneaded but not baked. He cannot leave the Beth Hamidrash to attend to it out of respect to his Master.

(8) If it is already leaven, what does it matter where he is; even if he were at home he could do nothing else?

(9) V. Glos.

(10) This is now assumed to mean: if there is more mazzah in the bin than this mouldy loaf, the whole is permitted.

(11) Surely a loaf known to be leaven cannot be permitted on that account?

(12) I.e., let us assume that this loaf is of the latest batch which was put there, i.e., it is mazzah, since a bread bin is cleared out every day, in order to prevent the bread from going mouldy — a necessary precaution in the hot eastern countries — and particularly so in this case, when there had been a search for leaven before the Festival.

(13) Shek. VII, 2. If money is found in Jerusalem, the question arises, what is its status — is it ordinary secular coins (hullin) or tithe money? This was because the second tithe (v. Deut. XIV, 22ff this was designated second-tithe) had to be eaten in Jerusalem or its monetary equivalent expended there, which money likewise was governed by the law of second tithe. Now, most of the flesh eaten in Jerusalem was bought with second-tithe money, and generally took the form

(14) But not the Temple Mount.

(15) I.e., unleavened.

(16) It must have been there a considerable time, hence it is leaven.

(17) I.e., several days of Passover have gone, and so this had had time to go mouldy even if baked as mazzah at the beginning of the Festival.

(18) Lit., 'bread'.

(19) And now we find money in it and do not know which it is.

(20) Of money, some being hullin and others tithe, and both were there on the same day.

(21) We cannot assume that the earlier coins had been removed while these were of the most recent deposit, because it might have been overlooked in a pit.

(22) I.e., it implies that the removal is still to be done. This phraseology is therefore certainly admitted, because a benediction is always recited prior to the actual performance of the precept to which it refers.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 7b

They differ only in respect of 'concerning the removal': one Master holds that it implies in the past;¹ while the other Master holds: It implies in the future.

An objection is raised: 'Blessed [art Thou] . . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us concerning circumcision'?² — How [else] should he say [it] there? Shall he say, 'to circumcise' — is it imperative that he should circumcise?³ Then what can be said of the father of the infant?⁴ — Then indeed it is so.⁵

An objection is raised: 'Blessed [art Thou] . . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us concerning shechitah'?⁶ — There too, how [else] shall he say it: shall he say 'to slaughter,' — is it imperative that he should slaughter? Then what can be said of the Passover sacrifice and [other] sacrifices?⁷ — [There] indeed it is so.⁸

An objection is raised: If one prepares a lulab⁶ for himself, he recites the blessing, '. . . who hast kept us in life and hast preserved us and hast suffered us to reach this season'. When he takes it in order to fulfil his obligation therewith,⁹ he recites: '. . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us concerning the taking of the lulab?'¹⁰ There it is different, because in the [very] moment that he lifts it up his duty is fulfilled.¹¹ If so, [instead of stating] 'in order to fulfil his obligation therewith,' he should say, 'having fulfilled his obligation therewith?' — That indeed is so, but because he desires to teach 'to sit in the sukkah'¹² in the second clause, he also states in the first clause, 'to fulfil his obligation therewith' — For he teaches in the second clause: He who makes a sukkah for himself recites: 'Blessed art thou, O Lord . . . who has kept us in life and hast preserved us and hast enabled us to reach this season'. When he enters to sit therein he recites: 'Blessed [art Thou] . . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us to sit in the sukkah.'¹³ And the law is: [He recites,] 'concerning the removal of leaven'.¹⁴

Now incidentally all agree that we must recite the benediction beforehand:¹⁵ how do we know it? — Because Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: For all precepts a benediction is recited prior ['ober] to their being performed — Where is it implied that this [word] 'ober connotes priority? — Said R.

Nahman b. Isaac, Because Scripture saith, Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the Plain and overran [wa-ya'abor] the Cushite.¹⁶ Abaye said, [It follows] from this: and he himself passed over [‘abar] before them;¹⁷ alternatively, from this: and their king is passed on [wa-ya'abor] before them, and the Lord at the head of them.¹⁸

The School of Rab said: Except [for] a ritual bath and shofar.¹⁹ As for a ritual bath, it is well, because the person is not yet fit;²⁰ but what is the reason for the shofar? And should you say, because he may sound the blast [teki'ah] incorrectly;²¹ if so, the same applies even to shechitah, and circumcision too? Rather, said R. Hisda: Except for a ritual bath alone was stated. It was taught likewise: When one has a ritual bath and ascends [from the bath], on his ascending he recites: Blessed [art Thou] . . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us concerning tebillah’.

BY THE LIGHT OF A LAMP, etc. How do we know this? — Said R. Hisda: By deriving [the meaning of] ‘finding’ from ‘finding’ and ‘finding’ from ‘searching’, and ‘searching’ from ‘searching’, and ‘searching’ from ‘lamps’, and ‘lamps’ from ‘lamp’:²² [Thus:] ‘finding’ from ‘finding’: here it is written, seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses,²³ while elsewhere it is written, and he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest: and the cup was found [in Benjamin's sack].²⁴ ‘Finding’ [is learned] from ‘searching’ [mentioned] in its own connection.²⁵ And ‘searching’ from ‘lamps’, as it is written, And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with lamps.²⁶ And ‘lamps’ from ‘lamp’, for it is written, The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord, searching all the innermost parts of the belly.²⁷

The School of R. Ishmael taught: In the evening of the fourteenth leaven is searched for by the light of a lamp. Though there is no proof of this, there is an allusion to it, because it is said, ‘seven days shall there be no leaven [in your houses]’; and it is said, ‘and he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest: and the cup was found [in Benjamin's sack]’; and it is said, ‘And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with lamps’. and it is said, ‘The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord, searching [all the innermost parts of the belly]’. What is the purpose of the additional quotations?²⁸ And should you answer, this ‘at that time’ is a statement of lenient treatment by the Merciful One, [viz.,] ‘I will not search Jerusalem with the light of a torch, which gives much light, but only with the light of a lamp, the light of which is much smaller, so that great wrongdoing will be found out but petty wrongdoing will not be found out,²⁹ — then come and hear! ‘The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord, [searching. etc.]’.³⁰

Our Rabbis taught: one may not search either by the light of the sun or by the light of the moon, or by the light of a torch, save by the light of a lamp,

(1) I.e., the removal has already been done. Hence this formula is inadmissible.

(2) Not, ‘to circumcise’.

(3) Lit., ‘is there no way that he should not circumcise’? — i.e., the obligation does not rest primarily upon the circumciser, but upon the father, whereas if the former said ‘to circumcise’, it would imply that it is his personal duty in every case.

(4) What if the father circumcises?

(5) He must say ‘to circumcise’.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) Lit., ‘sacred (animals)’. The obligation of slaughtering a sacrifice rests primarily upon its owner.

(8) He must say ‘to slaughter’.

(9) V. Lev. XXIII, 40.

(10) But not ‘to take the lubab’.

(11) Hence he is reciting the blessing after performing the precept, and so he cannot say ‘to take’; v. Supra.

(12) V. Glos.

- (13) And there the future is required because it is an obligation during the whole week of Tabernacles.
- (14) That too implies the future. Consequently, this form is used by all in circumcision and shechitah.
- (15) Before actually performing the precept.
- (16) II Sam. XVIII, 23. I.e., he passed in front of him, and similarly 'ober, which is derived from the same root as wa-ya'abor, means in front of, i.e., prior to'
- (17) Gen. XXXIII, 3.
- (18) Mic. II, 13.
- (19) V. Glos. Here the benediction is recited after the fulfilment of the precept.
- (20) E.g., one who is unclean through nocturnal pollution may not recite a blessing; hence he is obviously unfit to recite the blessing until after the ritual bath, and all others requiring a ritual bath were treated likewise (Rashi).
- (21) In which case the obligation is not fulfilled and the benediction was unnecessarily recited, which is prohibited.
- (22) As explained in the text.
- (23) Ex. XII, 19.
- (24) Gen. XLIV, 12.
- (25) I.e., in the verse just quoted 'finding' and 'searching' are linked together.
- (26) Zeph. I, 12.
- (27) Prov. XX, 27. By comparing all these verses we learn that in order that leaven may not be found in the house it must be searched out by lamplight.
- (28) Lit., 'what is (the purpose of) "and it is said"?'
- (29) But this verse does not prove that the searching for leaven too may be carried out merely with a lamp — perhaps a torch is required.
- (30) Thus a single lamp suffices for a search.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 8a

because the light of a lamp is suitable for searching. And though there is no proof of the matter yet there is a hint of it, for it is said, 'seven days shall there be no leaven found [in your houses]'; and it is said, 'and he searched, and began at the eldest, [etc.]'; and it is said, 'and it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with lamps'; and it is said, 'The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord, searching all the innermost parts of the belly'.

This light of the sun, where is it meant? Shall we say, in a courtyard, — but Raba said: A court-yard does not require searching, because birds frequent it.¹ While if in a hall,² — but Raba said: A hall is searched by its own light? — This is meant only in respect of a skylight in a room. But [then] what part of it? If [that which is] opposite the skylight, then it is the same as a hall? — Rather, it means [the part of the room] at the sides.

And not [by the light of] a torch? Surely Raba said, What is the meaning of the verse, And his brightness was as the light; he had rays coming forth from his hand: and there was hiding of his power?³ To what are the righteous comparable in the presence of the Shechinah? To a lamp in the presence of a torch.⁴ And Raba also said: [To use] a torch for habdalah⁵ is the most preferable [way of performing this] duty? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: The one⁶ can be brought into holes and chinks [in the wall], whereas the other⁷ cannot be brought into holes and chinks. R. Zebid said: The one⁶ [throws] its light forward, whereas the other⁷ [throws] its light behind.⁸ R. Papa said: Here [with a torch] one is afraid, whereas there [with a lamp] one is not afraid.⁹ Rabina said: The light of the one⁶ is steady. whereas that of the other⁷ is fitful.¹⁰ EVERY PLACE WHEREIN LEAVEN IS NOT TAKEN, etc. What does EVERY PLACE add? — It adds the following taught by our Rabbis: The topmost and the nethernmost holes of a room,¹¹ the roof of the verandah,¹² the roof of a turret,¹³ a cow's stable, hen-coops, a shed for straw, and store-houses of wine and oil do not need searching.¹⁴ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: A bed which makes a division in a room,¹⁵ and leaves a space¹⁶ needs searching. But the following contradicts it: A hole [lying] between a man and his neighbour,¹⁷ this one searches as far as his hand reaches and that one searches as far as his hand reaches,¹⁸ and the rest he annuls in his heart. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: A bed which makes a division in a room, timber and stones being arranged under it, and it leaves a space.¹⁹ does not require searching. Thus [the rulings on] a bed are contradictory and [those on] holes are contradictory? [The rulings on] holes are not contradictory: the one refers to the topmost and the nethermost;²⁰ the other to [holes in] the middle [of the wall]. [The rulings on] a bed are not contradictory: here it is raised; there it is low down.²¹

But, do not store-houses of wine require searching? Surely it was taught. Store-houses of wine need searching; stores of oil do not need searching? — The case we discuss here is where one draws his [immediate] supplies [from it].²² If so, oil too? — As for oil, there is a limit to eating; but [in respect to] wine, there is no limit to drinking.²³ R. Hiyya taught: Stores of beer in Babylonia were made the same as stores of wine in Palestine, where one draws his supplies from them.²⁴

R. Hisda said: A fish pantry does not require searching. But it was taught [that] they require searching? — There is no difficulty: the one treats of large [fish]; the other of small.²⁵ Rabbah son of R. Huna said: Salt sheds and wax sheds²⁶ need searching.²⁷ R. Papa said: Storehouses for fuel²⁸ and storehouses for dates need searching. A Tanna taught: We do not oblige him to insert his hand into holes and chinks and search [there], on account of the danger. Which danger? Shall we say. the danger of a snake, — then when he used it, how could he use it? — This arises only where it [the wall] collapsed.²⁹ But if it collapsed, why do I need searching [at all]? Surely we learned: If ruins collapsed on leaven, it is regarded as removed? — There [the circumstances are] that a dog cannot search it out; here, that a dog can search it out. But R. Eleazar said: Those sent [to perform] a religious duty do not suffer harm? — Said R. Ashi: He may have lost a needle and come to look for it.³⁰ But is it not [regarded as the fulfilment of] a religious duty in such a case? Surely it was taught: If one declares, ‘This sela’³¹ be for charity in order that my son may live,’ or, ‘that I may merit the future world,’³²

(1) And eat up all crumbs.

(2) אנסדרה is a pillared hall or a piazza, open on top, running in front of large houses.

(3) Hab. III, 4.

(4) Even as the light of a lamp pales before that of a torch, so does the light of the righteous before that of the Almighty. Thus a torch gives more light, and therefore it is even better than a lamp.

(5) V. Glos. A blessing is pronounced over fire for which a light must be kindled.

(6) A lamp.

(7) A torch.

(8) Therefore it is not suitable for searching.

(9) The great flame of a torch may set fire to the house; therefore his preoccupation with this fear will hinder a man from a proper search.

(10) A torch throws an unsteady, wavering light.

(11) I.e., those which are very high up or very low down in the wall, so that it is inconvenient to use them.

(12) A balcony with a sloping roof, which could not be used; other parts of the house had a flat roof.

(13) A kind of safe in which food and utensils were kept. The inside had to be searched but not the roof.

(14) No leaven is taken, into any of these.

(15) I.e., it stands in the centre, dividing the room into two parts used for separate purposes.

(16) There is a space between it and the floor, as it stands on legs.

(17) I.e., in a wall separating two rooms or houses tenanted by different people. the hole passing right through from one side of the wall to the other.

(18) E.g., when the wall is very thick.

(19) Between the bottom of the bed and the timber.

(20) V. p. 33. n. 7.

(21) If the bottom of the bed is well raised from the ground the space beneath it can be used quite easily. But if it is low down, even if a space is left it is not easy to use it, hence it need not be searched.

- (22) E.g., a private wine cellar. The servant may enter to take wine for the table while holding bread in his hand.
- (23) How much oil is to be consumed at a meal can be gauged beforehand, and further supplies will not be required. But one cannot determine beforehand how much wine will be drunk.
- (24) They must be searched.
- (25) If large fish are stored there it will be unnecessary to bring more to the table during the meal; but in the case of small fish this may be necessary, and so it must be searched.
- (26) I.e., the places where these are kept.
- (27) Salt and candles being sometimes unexpectedly required during the meal.
- (28) Wood-chips, twigs, etc.
- (29) Snakes are often found among debris, hence only the top of the ruins must be searched, but one need not investigate below the surface.
- (30) While searching for the leaven. He is, not being exclusively engaged on a religious task, exposed to danger.
- (31) A coin.
- (32) Lit., 'that I may be a son of the future world'. On the 'future world' v. Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 601, n. 3.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 8b

he is completely righteous.¹ — Perhaps after he searched [for the leaven] he will come to look for it. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: [It means] on account of the danger of Gentiles, this agreeing with Pelimo. For it was taught: [In the case of] a hole between a Jew and a Syrian [i.e., a Gentile], he must search as far as his hand reaches, and the rest he annuls in his heart. Pelimo said: He does not search it at all, on account of the danger. [Now] what is the danger? Shall we say, the danger of witchcraft,² — then when he used it, how did he use it? — There when he used it it was day and there was light, therefore [the Gentile] would not suspect anything;³ but here it is night and a lamp [is used]; hence he will suspect. But R. Eleazar said: Those sent [to perform] a religious duty do not suffer harm?⁴ — Where the injury is probable it is different, for it is said, And Samuel said, How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the Lord said, Take a heifer with thee, etc.⁵

Rab was asked: Scholars who reside out of town, can they come in the early morning or after nightfall to the academy?⁶ — He replied: Let them come, [the risk be] upon myself and my neck. What about returning?⁷ I do not know, he answered them. It was stated: R. Eleazar said: Those sent [to perform] a religious duty will not suffer hurt, neither in their going nor in their returning. With whom [does this agree]? — With this Tanna: for it was taught. Issi b. Judah said: Seeing that the Torah said, no man shall desire thy land [when thou goest up to appear before the Lord thy God . . .],⁸ it teaches that your cow will graze in the meadow and no [wild] beast will hurt it; your fowl will go scratching in the dungheap and no weasel will injure it. Now does this not furnish an argument a minori? If these, whose nature it is to be hurt, will not be hurt; then human beings, for whom it is not natural to be hurt, how much more so!⁹ I know it only in respect of going: how do I know it of returning? Because it is stated, and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go [back] unto thy tents:¹⁰ this teaches that you will go and find your tent in peace. But since [he is safe] even on [his] return, why [intimate it] in respect of going?¹¹ — [That is necessary] for R. Ammi's [teaching]. For R. Ammi said: Every man who owns land must make the Festival pilgrimage; but he who does not own land need not make the Festival pilgrimage.¹²

R. Abin son of R. Adda said in R. Isaac's name: Why are there no fruits of Gennesaret¹³ in Jerusalem? So that the Festival pilgrims should not say. 'Had we merely ascended in order to eat the fruits of Gennesaret in Jerusalem it would have sufficed us,' with the result¹⁴ that the pilgrimage would not be for its own sake. Similarly R. Doseithai son of R. Jannai said: Why are the thermal springs of Tiberias not [found] in Jerusalem? So that the Festival pilgrims should not say. 'Had we merely ascended in order to bathe in the thermal springs of Tiberias, it would have sufficed us,' with the result that the pilgrimage would not be for its own sake. THEN IN WHAT CASE DID THEY RULE, TWO ROWS OF THE WINE CELLAR [etc.]? Who has mentioned anything about a wine cellar? — This is what he [the Tanna] says: EVERY PLACE WHEREIN NO LEAVEN IS TAKEN DOES NOT REQUIRE SEARCHING, and stores of wine and stores of oil do not require searching either. THEN IN WHAT CASE DID THEY RULE, TWO ROWS OF THE WINE CELLAR [MUST BE SEARCHED]? [CONCERNING] A PLACE WHEREIN LEAVEN MAY BE TAKEN, which is one whence [private] supplies are drawn.

BETH SHAMMAI MAINTAIN: TWO ROWS, etc. R. Judah said: The two rows which they [Beth Shammai] specified [mean] from the ground up to the very ceiling;¹⁵ but R. Johanan said: [It means] a single row in the shape of a right angle.¹⁶ It was taught in accordance with Rab Judah; [and] it was taught in accordance with R. Johanan. It was taught in accordance with Rab Judah: Beth Shammai maintain: Two rows over the front [surface] of the whole cellar, and the two rows which they specified [means] from the ground up to the very ceiling. It was taught in accordance with R. Johanan: Two rows over the face of the whole cellar, [i.e.] the outer one which looks upon the door, and the upper one which faces¹⁷ the ceiling; but that which is within this and below this does not require searching.

BETH HILLEL MAINTAIN: THE TWO OUTER ROWS, WHICH ARE THE UPPERMOST. Rab said: [That means] the upper row and the one beneath it;¹⁸ while Samuel said: [That means] the upper row and the one on the inside of it. What is Rab's reason? — Because he emphasizes: OUTER. But it [also] teaches: UPPERMOST?— That is to exclude those beneath the lower one.¹⁹ While Samuel says: 'The upper row and the one on the inside of it.' What is the reason? Because he emphasizes: UPPERMOST. But it [also] states: OUTER? — That is to exclude the inside of the inner.²⁰ R. Hiyya taught in accordance with Rab, while all tannaim recited as Samuel. And the law is as Samuel.²¹

(1) In respect of his action, notwithstanding his selfish motives. Hence in the case under discussion the same holds good.

(2) Sc. the Gentile may suspect him of witchcraft when he sees him rummaging in the hole.

(3) Lit., 'bring it up on his mind'.

(4) To be the object of these suspicions is to suffer harm.

(5) 1 Sam. XVI, 2. Thus Samuel was afraid though engaged on a Divine mission, because it was naturally dangerous.

(6) Do they run a risk in going over the fields at such times?

(7) After nightfall.

(8) Ex. XXXIV, 24.

(9) They are certainly immune from danger when going to carry out a religious duty, to which the present verse refers.

(10) Deut. XVI, 7.

(11) Surely that follows a fortiori.

(12) This follows from the fact that the Almighty assures the pilgrim that his land will be safe in his absence, which proves that the command refers only to those who possess land.

(13) A lake so named from the fertile plain lying on its western side. In the O.T., it is called Yam Kinnereth or Kinneroth; Num. XXXIV, 11; Josh. XII, 3. On its western shore lay Tiberias. — Its fruit was particularly delicious.

(14) Lit., 'and it would be found'.

(15) I.e., the two outer rows of barrels from top to bottom, over their entire area.

(16) Gam, the shape of the Grk. Gamma . I.e., the front row and the whole of the upper layer.

(17) Lit., 'sees'.

(18) In the outermost row facing the door.

(19) I.e., all rows from the third from the top and downwards.

(20) Those within the second row of the top layer.

(21) From the fact that all post-Talmudic authorities accept Rab's view, however, it would appear that this passage was absent from their texts; [v. Tosaf. Yom Tob on our Mishnah and MS.M. R. Hananel, however, has this passage and accepts Samuel's ruling.]

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 9a

MISHNAH. WE HAVE NO FEAR THAT A WEASEL MAY HAVE DRAGGED [LEAVEN] FROM ONE ROOM TO ANOTHER OR FROM ONE SPOT TO ANOTHER.¹ FOR IF SO, [WE MUST ALSO FEAR] FROM COURT-YARD TO COURT-YARD AND FROM TOWN TO TOWN, [AND] THE MATTER IS ENDLESS.

GEMARA. The reason is that we did not see it take [leaven]; but if we saw it take [it] we do fear, and it requires a [re-]search. yet why so; let us assume that it ate it? Did we not learn: The dwellings of heathens are unclean,² and how long must he [the heathen] stay in a dwelling so that it should need searching?³ Forty days, even if he has no wife. But in every place where a weasel or a swine can enter no searching is required!⁴ — Said R. Zera, There is no difficulty: one treats of flesh, the other of bread: in the case of flesh it [the weasel] leaves nothing, [whereas in the case of bread it does leave [something] — Raba said: How compare! As for there, it is well: it is [a case of mere] 'say': say that there was [a burial there], say that there was not.⁵ And if you assume that there was, say that it [e.g., a weasel] ate it. But here that we see for certain that it has taken [leaven], who is to say that it ate it? Surely it is a doubt [on the one hand] and a certainty [on the other], and a doubt cannot negative a certainty. But cannot a doubt negative a certainty? Surely it was taught: If a haber⁶ dies and leaves a store-house full of produce [crops]. even if they are but one day old, they stand in the presumption of having been tithed.⁷ Now here these crops were certainly liable to tithe, and there is a doubt whether they have been tithed or not tithed, yet the doubt comes and negatives the certainty?—There it is one certainty against another certainty, as [we presume that] they have certainly been tithed, in accordance with R. Hanina of Hozae.⁸ For R. Hanina of Hozae said: There is a presumption concerning a haber that he does not let anything untithed⁹ pass out from under his hand. Alternatively: it is a doubt [on the one hand] and a doubt [on the other]; perhaps from the very beginning say that it was not liable to tithe, in accordance with R. Oshaia. For R. Oshaia said: one may practise an artifice with his produce and take it in its husks, so that his cattle may eat thereof and it be exempt from tithes.¹⁰

But cannot a doubt negative a certainty? Surely it was taught, R. Judah said: It once happened that the bondmaid of a certain oppressor¹¹ in Rimon¹² threw her premature-born child into a pit,

(1) I.e., after a room has been searched and cleared of leaven a weasel may have brought leaven into it from elsewhere.

(2) Because they used to bury their premature births in their houses.

(3) For a buried body, before a Jew may live there.

(4) If a baby were thrown there these would eat it, Oh. XVIII, 7. — Thus the same should apply to leaven.

(5) I.e., the presence there of a dead child is merely conjectured as a possibility.

(10) Produce is not liable to tithes unless it is taken into the house through the front door when its work is completed, not through the roof or the backyard. If grain is brought in in its husks its work is not complete, as this is still to be separated, and it is not liable to tithe, and need not be tithed by Scriptural law; a human being may then make a light meal of it, while cattle may eat their fill. Thus there it may never have become liable to tithe at all. Though a human being may not make a meal of it, that is only a Rabbinical law and is certainly nullified here by the presumption that the haber had tithed it. But in its essence we see that it is doubt against doubt; the doubt whether it was liable to tithe at all offset by the doubt that it may have been tithed.

and a priest came and looked down it to see whether it was a male or a female;¹ and when the matter came before the Sages they declared him² clean, because weasels and martens³ were to be found there.⁴ Now here, she had certainly thrown it in, while it is doubtful whether they had dragged it away or not by that time, yet the doubt comes and negatives the certainty? — Do not say that she threw a premature child into a pit, but say, ‘she threw something like a premature child into a pit’, so that it is a doubt against a doubt.⁵ But it states: ‘In order to see whether it was a male or a female’?⁶ — This is what it says: To know whether she had aborted wind⁷ or a premature child; and should you say that it was a premature child, to see whether it was a male or a female. Alternatively. there it is a certainty against a certainty; since weasels and martens are to be found there they had certainly dragged it away by that time; [for] granted that they may have left over,⁸ yet they certainly had dragged it away by that time.

But do we say, we leave no fear that a weasel may have dragged [leaven], etc.? Surely the second clause states:⁹ What he leaves over¹⁰ he must put away in a hidden place, so that it should not require a search after it?¹¹ Said Abaye. There is no difficulty: the one [refers to a search] on the fourteenth; the other, on the thirteenth. [If one searches] on the thirteenth, when bread is [yet] to be found in all houses, it [a weasel] does not hide [leaven]; on the fourteenth, when bread is not to be found in all houses, it does hide [it]. Said Raba: Is then a weasel a prophet to know that it is the fourteenth now and people will not bake until the evening, so that it should leave [some] over and hide [it]? Rather said Raba: What one leaves over he must put away in a hidden place lest a weasel seize it in his presence and it require a search after it. It was taught in accordance with Raba: If one wishes to eat leaven after the search, what shall he do? Let him put it away in a hidden place, lest a weasel come and seize it in his presence and it require a search after it. R. Mari said: It is for fear that he may leave ten¹² and [only] ‘find nine.’¹³

If there are nine packages of mazzah and one of leaven, and a mouse comes and steals [a package], and we do not know whether it took mazzah or leaven,¹⁴ that is [similar to the case of] nine shops.¹⁵ If [one package] was separated¹⁶ and a mouse came and stole it, that is [similar to] the second clause. For it was taught: If there are nine shops all selling meat of [ritually] slaughtered [animals], and there is one shop selling meat of nebelah,¹⁷ and a man buys [meat] from one of them, but he does not know from which [shop] he bought the [meat in] doubt is prohibited; but in the case of [meat] found, we follow the majority.¹⁸

If there are two packages, one of mazzah and the other of leaven, and before them are two rooms, one searched and the other unsearched, and two mice came, one took mazzah and the other took leaven, and we do not know which [mouse] entered which [house], that is the case of two baskets. For we learned: If there are two baskets, one containing hullin¹⁹ and the other containing terumah,¹⁹ and in front of them are two se'ahs [of provisions], one of hullin and the other of terumah, and these fell into those, they [sc. the contents of the baskets] are permitted, for I assume: The hullin fell into hullin and the terumah fell into terumah.²⁰ Perhaps we say ‘I assume’

(1) To decide the period of the slave's uncleanness (v. Lev. XII, 4, 5). A heathen slave in a Jewish house was a semi-Jew, and bound to observe all the religious obligations of a Jewess.

(2) The priest.

(3) Heb. Bardelles.

(4) They may have dragged the body into one of their holes, leaving the pit itself empty. Had it been there the priest would have been defiled through stooping over it, even though he did not touch it.

(5) For the body may not have been formed yet, in which case it does not contaminate.

(6) Which implies that the body was fully formed and the mother was unclean, as after a proper birth, save that the sex had been overlooked.

(7) I.e., an unformed body.

- (8) I.e., not eaten it.
- (9) Infra 10b.
- (10) After the search, for the following morning's meal.
- (11) For otherwise a weasel may drag it away.
- (12) E.g., rolls.
- (13) For then it would be certain that one had been removed, and this would necessitate a further search.
- (14) V. p. 33. n. 3. If mazzah, no further search is required; if leaven, it is required.
- (15) Explained infra.
- (16) But we do not know whether this separated package was leaven or mazzah.
- (17) V. Glos.
- (18) And assume it to have come out of one of the nine. In the first instance the forbidden meat is in a fixed place; technically this is called kabu'a (fixed), and it is shown in Sanh. 79b that we must then regard the doubt as equally balanced, i.e., as though there were an equal quantity of both, and we are therefore stringent. But in the second case the forbidden meal has left its fixed place and is somewhere in the street; the ordinary rule is then followed that the majority decides.
- (19) V. Glos.
- (20) By a similar assumption the house already searched does not need to be searched anew.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 10a

in the case of terumah [only], which is merely Rabbinical;¹ but do we say thus in the case of leaven, which is Scriptural?² — Is then the searching for leaven Scriptural; surely it is [only] Rabbinical, for by Scriptural law mere annulment is sufficient.³

If there is one package of leaven, and in front of it are two houses which have been searched, and there came a mouse and seized it, and we do not know whether it entered this [house] or that, that is [similar to] the case of two paths. For we learned: If there are two paths, one clean and the other unclean,⁴ and a person went through one of them and then touched⁵ clean [food], and then his neighbour came and went through the other and he touched clean [food], — R. Judah said: If they each enquire separately, they are clean;⁶ if both together, they are unclean. R. Jose said: In both cases they are unclean. Raba — others say. R. Johanan — said: If they came together, all agree that they are unclean; if consecutively, all agree that they are clean. They differ only where one comes to enquire about himself and his neighbour: R. Jose compares it to [both coming] together.⁷ while R. Judah likens it to each coming separately.⁸

If it is doubtful whether it [the mouse] entered or not,⁹ that is [similar to] the case of a plain, and [there we are involved] in the controversy of R. Eleazar and the Rabbis.¹⁰ For we learned: If a man enters a plain¹¹ in winter,¹² and there is uncleanness¹³ in a particular field,¹⁴ and he states: I walked in that place, but do not know whether I entered that field or not, — R. Eleazar declares him clean, while the Sages declare him unclean. For R. Eleazar ruled: If there is a doubt about entering, he is clean: if there is a doubt of contact with uncleanness, he is unclean.¹⁵

If it [the mouse] entered [with the leaven], and he [the master] searched but did not find it, [in like case] there is a controversy of R. Meir and the Rabbis. For we learned: R. Meir used to say: Everything which is in the presumption of uncleanness always [remains] in its uncleanness until it is known to you whether its uncleanness is gone; while the Sages rule: one searches until he reaches a rock or virgin soil.¹⁶

If it [the mouse] entered [with leaven] and he searched and found [leaven].¹⁷ — [in like case] there is a controversy of Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For it was taught: If a grave was lost in a field,¹⁸ he who enters therein is unclean. If a grave is [subsequently] found in it, he who enters therein is clean, for I assume: the grave which was lost is the same grave which was found: this is Rabbi's view. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: The whole field must be examined.¹⁹ If a man left nine [pieces of leaven] and found ten, there is a controversy of Rabbi and the Rabbis. For it was taught: If he left a maneh²⁰ and found two-hundred [zuz],²¹ hullin and second tithe are intermingled,²² this is Rabbi's view. But the Sages maintain: It is all hullin.²³ If he left ten and found nine, that is [analogous to] the second clause. For it was taught: If he deposited two hundred and found one maneh, [he assumes], one maneh was left lying and one maneh was taken away:²⁴ this is Rabbi's view. But the Sages maintain: It is all hullin.

(1) Nowadays.

(2) When doubt arises in a Rabbinical law we are naturally lenient; but where the law is Scriptural we are strict.

(3) Supra 4b.

(4) E.g., there is a lost grave in one of them, but we do not know in which.

(5) Lit., 'made'.

(6) Each is given the benefit of the doubt; consequently the food remains clean.

(7) Since the question is asked on behalf of both.

(8) Since there is only one man asking. — It is a principle that if a doubt of uncleanness arises in public ground, it is clean; if in private ground, it is unclean. Here the paths are public ground; hence when they come separately each is declared clean. But we cannot rule thus when they come together, since one is certainly unclean. The same principles apply mutatis mutandis to the searched houses.

(9) A mouse was seen to take a package of leaven, but we do not know whether or not it entered a room already searched.

(10) [This clause is omitted in MS.M., cf. p 43. n. 2.]

(11) Many fields together constitute a plain.

(12) It is then private ground, because the seed has already started sprouting.

(13) I.e., a grave.

(14) The field is known.

(15) For in the first case there is really a double doubt: firstly, whether he entered the field at all, and secondly, even if he did enter, whether he passed over the grave. — In our problem, however, even the Rabbis agree that a re-search is not necessary; since the search is only Rabbinical, we make the more lenient assumption (Rashi). [Apparently Rashi did not read', 'and in the controversy. . . Rabbis', cf. p. 42, n. 10.]

(16) If a pile or heap contains a portion of a corpse, so that it is unclean, while there are two other clean piles, and we do not know now which is which; if one is examined and found to be clean, that is clean, while the others are treated as unclean; if two are found to be clean, they are clean and the third is unclean; but if the three are examined and found to be clean, they are all unclean in R. Meir's opinion, unless we know definitely whether the defilement has disappeared. But the Sages maintain that he examines the ground until he reaches a rock or virgin soil which has obviously never been touched, and if it is not found we assume that a bird has flown off with it. — But in the present problem even R. Meir agrees that we are lenient, since the search is only a Rabbinical requirement (Rashi). V. however Tosaf.

(17) But he does not know whether it is the same.

(18) We do not know where it is.

(19) It may not be the same grave. Here too, presumably, even R. Simeon b. Gamaliel is lenient; cf. n. 3.

(20) Of second tithe.

(21) I.e., two manehs.

(22) We assume that the original match was left and an unknown person added another. It will therefore be necessary to redeem one maneh by exchanging it for another.

(23) For the original manehs may have been taken away. The Rabbis will make a similar assumption here and therefore the house must be searched for the nine pieces.

(24) Hence the present maneh is treated as second tithe.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 10b

If a man left [leaven] in this corner and finds [leaven] in another corner, there is a controversy of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis. For it was taught: If an axe is lost in a house, the house is unclean, for I assume: An unclean person entered there and removed it. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: The house is clean, for I assume, He lent it to another and forgot, or he took it from one corner and placed it in another corner and forgot. Who mentioned anything about a corner?¹ The text is defective, and is thus taught: If an axe is lost in a house, the house is unclean, for I say: An unclean person entered there and took it. Or if he leaves it in one corner and finds it in another corner the house is unclean, for I assume, An unclean person entered there and took it from one corner and placed it in another corner. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: The house is clean, for I say. He lent it to another and forgot, or he took it from one corner and placed it in another corner and forgot.²

Raba said: If a mouse enters [a room] with a loaf in its mouth and he [the owner] enters after him and finds crumbs, a [fresh] search is necessary,³ because it is not a mouse's nature to make crumbs.⁴ Raba also said: If a child enters [a room] with a loaf in his hand, and he [the owner] enters after him and finds crumbs, a [fresh] search is not necessary, because it is a child's nature to make crumbs.

Raba asked: What if a mouse enters with a loaf in its mouth, and a mouse goes out with a loaf in its mouth: do we say, the same which went in went out; or perhaps it is a different one? Should you answer, the same which went in went out, — what if a white mouse entered with a loaf in its mouth, and black mouse went out with a loaf in its mouth? now this is certainly a different one; or perhaps it did indeed seize⁵ it from the other? And should you say, mice do not seize from each other, — what if a mouse enters with a loaf in its mouth and a weasel goes out with a loaf in its mouth? now the weasel certainly does take from a mouse; or perhaps it is a different one, for had it snatched it from the mouse, the mouse would have [now] been found in its mouth? And should you say, had it snatched it from the mouse, the mouse would have been found in its mouth, what if a mouse enters with a loaf in its mouth, and then a weasel comes out with a loaf and a mouse in the weasel's mouth? Here it is certainly the same; or perhaps, if it were the same, the loaf should indeed have been found in the mouse's mouth; or perhaps it fell out [of the mouse's mouth] on account of [its] terror, and it [the weasel] took it? The question stands over.

Raba asked: If there is a loaf on the top rafters, need he [take] a ladder to fetch it down or not? Do we say, our Rabbis did not put him to all this trouble, [for] since it cannot descend of its own accord he will not come to eat it;⁶ or perhaps it may fall down and he will come to eat it? Now should you say, it may fall down and he will come to eat it, — if there is a loaf in a pit, does he need a ladder to fetch it up or not? Here it will certainly not happen that it will ascend of its own accord; or perhaps he may happen to go down to perform his requirements and come to eat it? Should you say that he may happen to go down for his purposes and come to eat it, — if a loaf is in a snake's mouth, does he need a snake-charmer to take it out or does he not need [one]? [Do we say,] our Rabbis put him to personal trouble, but they did not put him to trouble with his money; or perhaps there is no difference? The questions stand over.

MISHNAH. R. JUDAH SAID: WE SEARCH [FOR LEAVEN] ON THE EVENING OF THE FOURTEENTH, AND⁷ IN THE MORNING OF THE FOURTEENTH, AND AT THE TIME OF REMOVAL. BUT THE SAGES MAINTAIN: IF HE DID NOT SEARCH IN THE EVENING OF THE FOURTEENTH, HE MUST SEARCH ON THE FOURTEENTH; IF HE DID NOT SEARCH IN [THE MORNING OF] THE FOURTEENTH, HE MUST SEARCH AT THE APPOINTED TIME;⁸ IF HE DID NOT SEARCH AT THE APPOINTED TIME, HE MUST SEARCH AFTER THE APPOINTED TIME.⁹ AND WHAT HE LEAVES OVER¹⁰ HE MUST PUT AWAY IN A HIDDEN PLACE, SO THAT HE SHOULD NOT NEED SEARCHING AFTER IT.

GEMARA. What is R. Judah's reason? — R. Hisda and Rabbah son of R. Huna both say, It [the threefold searching] corresponds to the three 'puttings away' mentioned in the Torah: and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee;¹¹ seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses;¹² and even on the first day shall ye put away leaven out of your house.¹³ R. Joseph objected: R. Judah said: He who has not searched at these three periods can no longer search, which proves that they differ only in respect of from now and henceforth!¹⁴ Mar Zutra recited it thus: R. Joseph objected: R. Judah said: He who has not searched at one of these three periods can no longer search, which proves that they differ in [whether] he can no longer search? — Rather R. Judah too means, where he has not searched,¹⁵ and here they differ in this: one Master¹⁶ holds, only before it is forbidden;¹⁷ but not after it is forbidden, as a preventive measure, lest he come to eat of it; while the Rabbis hold that we do not preventively forbid. But did R. Judah preventively forbid lest he come to eat thereof, — surely we learned: As soon as the ‘omer¹⁸ has been offered, they used to go out and find the markets of Jerusalem filled with flour and parched corn,¹⁹

(1) We are discussing the case where it is lost.

(2) Thus here too, according to the Rabbis we fear that mice have been about, and consequently we also fear that the leaven he now finds is not the same which he left, so that a re-search is required. But on R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's view we do not fear this.

(3) To find leaven with which the mouse was seen to enter.

(4) Therefore these are not merely the loaf crumbled up.

(5) Lit., ‘throw’.

(6) Therefore he may leave it there, and merely annul it.

(7) So presumably; v. Gemara.

(8) Sc. of removal, i.e., in the sixth hour (11 a.m. — noon).

(9) From noon until nightfall (Rashi). Tosaf. explains differently: ‘within the mo'ed’, from noon on the fourteenth until the end of Passover, translating mo'ed as festival, which meaning it generally bears; ‘after the mo'ed, after Passover, for leaven kept in the house during Passover is forbidden after Passover.

(10) ‘After the search in the evening, for the following morning's meal’ (R. Nissim).

(11) Ex. XIII, 7.

(12) Ibid. XII, 19.

(13) Ibid. 15. — ‘Seen’ ‘found’ and ‘put away’ all mean in practice that the leaven must be put away, and corresponding to each expression there must be a search.

(14) I.e., after the time of removal, R. Judah holding that there is no searching then, while the Sages maintain that there is. But before that all agree that only one search is necessary. R. Judah meaning either in the evening or in the morning etc., the waw (translated ‘AND’ in the Mishnah) being disjunctive, or.

(15) In the evening; then he must search in the morning.

(16) R. Judah.

(17) Must one search then.

(18) V. Glos.

(19) Of the new harvest; v. Lev. XXIII, 9-14. Of course, in order to have it ready for sale on the same day the vendors must have prepared it before, and thus they handled it while it was yet prohibited.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 11a

[but] not with the consent of the Sages:¹ this is R. Meir's opinion. R. Judah said: They acted with the consent of the Sages.² Thus R. Judah did not preventively forbid lest one come to eat thereof? — Said Raba:³ Hadash is different: since you permit it to him only by means of plucking,⁴ he remembers.⁵ Said Abaye to him: That is well at the time of plucking, [but] what can be said of the grinding and sifting?⁶ — That is no difficulty: grinding [is done] with a handmill; sifting [is done] on top of the sieve.⁷ But as to what we learned: ‘one may reap an artificially irrigated field and [the corn] in the valleys,⁸ but one may not stack [the corn]’,⁹ and we established this as [agreeing with] R. Judah, what can be said?¹⁰ — Rather, said Abaye: From hadash one holds aloof;¹¹ but one does not hold aloof from leaven.¹² Raba demurred: R. Judah is self-contradictory. while the Rabbis are not self-contradictory?¹³ — Rather, said Raba: R. Judah is not self-contradictory, as we have answered. The Rabbis too are not self-contradictory: he himself is seeking it in order to burn it, shall he then eat thereof!¹⁴ R. Ashi said: R. Judah is not self-contradictory, [for] we learned,¹⁵ ‘flour and parched corn’,¹⁶ But this [answer] of R. Ashi is a fiction:¹⁷ this is well from [the time when it is] parched ears and onwards; ‘but from the beginning until it is parched corn, what can be said?’¹⁸ And should you answer, [It is gathered] by plucking,¹⁹ as Raba [answered], then what can be said of [what we learnt that] ‘one may reap an artificially irrigated field and [the corn in] the valleys’, which we established as [agreeing with] R. Judah?²⁰ Hence R. Ashi's [answer] is a fiction.

But, wherever one does not [normally] hold aloof, did R. Judah preventively forbid? Surely we learned: A man may not pierce an eggshell, fill it with oil, and place it over the mouth of a [burning] lamp in order that it should drip,²¹ and even if it is of earthenware; but R. Judah permits it!²² — There, on account of the strictness of the Sabbath he will indeed keep aloof. Then [one ruling] of the Sabbath can be opposed to [another ruling] of the Sabbath. For it was taught: If the cord of a bucket is broken, one must not tie²³ it [together] but merely make a loop [slip-knot]; whereas R. Judah maintains: He may wind a hollow belt or a fascia²⁴ around it, providing that he does not tie it with a slip-knot.²⁵ [Thus] R. Judah's [views] are self-contradictory. and similarly the Rabbis'? — The Rabbis' [views] are not self-contradictory: oil [from one source] can be interchanged with oil [from another];²⁶ whereas looping cannot be mistaken for²⁷ knotting. R. Judah's [views] are not self-contradictory; R. Judah's reason is not that he forbids looping on account of knotting, but because looping itself is [a form of] knotting. Now, the Rabbis may be opposed to the Rabbis. For we learned: A bucket [over a well] may be tied with a fascia but not with a cord;²⁸ but R. Judah permits it.²⁹ Now what cord is meant: Shall we say an ordinary [bucket] cord: [how does it state] ‘R. Judah permits it’, — surely it is a permanent knot, for he will certainly come to abandon it?³⁰ Hence it is obvious that a weaver's [rope³¹ is meant]. and [yet] the Rabbis preventively forbid a weaver's cord on account of an ordinary cord? — Even so: one rope may be mistaken for another, [whereas] looping cannot be mistaken for knotting.

But, wherever one [normally] holds aloof from it, does not R. Judah preventively forbid? Surely we learned: If a firstling is attacked with congestion, even if it should die [otherwise]. we must not bleed it: this is R. Judah's view;³² but the Sages rule: He may bleed [it], providing that he does not inflict a [permanent] blemish upon it? — There, because one is excited

(12) During the year, and thus may possibly eat of it when the prohibition is already in force.

(13) That you seek to reconcile R. Judah's views only. Yet surely the Rabbis too need harmonizing, for whereas the Rabbis do not preventively forbid in the case of leaven, they do so here, as R. Meir states, ‘They did not act with the consent of the Sages’.

(14) Surely we need not entertain that fear.

- (32) One must not inflict a permanent blemish on a firstling. R. Judah rules that the animal must not be bled even without inflicting a permanent blemish upon it, lest one come to do so even by making a permanent blemish. Thus R. Judah forbids preventively, though people do hold aloof from sacred animals, to which category a firstling belongs.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 11b

about his property, if you permit him [to bleed it] in a place where a blemish is not inflicted, he will come to do it in a place where a blemish is inflicted. But the Rabbis [argue]: if you do not permit him at all, he is all the more likely to come to act [thus].

Yet do we say according to R. Judah. A man is excited over his property? Surely we learned: An animal may not be curried on Festivals, because it makes a bruise [wound], but you may scrape it; but the Sages maintain: It may neither be curried nor scraped. Now it was taught: What is currying and what is scraping? Currying is with a small-toothed strigil. and it makes a wound; scraping is with a large-toothed strigil and does not make a wound?¹ — There, since it will die if left alone, we say. a man is excited about his property; here, if he leaves it there is merely discomfort, we do not say, a man is excited about his money. Now as to R. Judah; wherein is the difference that he preventively prohibits in the case of leaven but does not preventively forbid in the case of scraping? — One bread can be mistaken for another bread, [but] currying cannot be mistaken for scraping.

MISHNAH. R. MEIR SAID: ONE MAY EAT [LEAVEN] THE WHOLE OF THE FIVE [HOURS] AND MUST BURN [IT] AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH. R. JUDAH SAID: ONE MAY EAT THE WHOLE OF THE FOUR [HOURS]. KEEP IT IN SUSPENSE THE WHOLE OF THE FIFTH, AND MUST BURN IT AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH.² R. JUDAH SAID FURTHER: TWO UNFIT LOAVES OF THE THANKSOFFERING USED TO LIE ON THE ROOF³ OF THE [TEMPLE] IZTABA:⁴ AS LONG AS THEY LAY [THERE] ALL THE PEOPLE WOULD EAT [LEAVEN]; WHEN ONE WAS REMOVED, THEY WOULD KEEP IT IN SUSPENSE, NEITHER EATING NOR BURNING [IT]; WHEN BOTH WERE REMOVED, ALL THE PEOPLE COMMENCED BURNING[THEIR LEAVEN].⁵ R. GAMALIEL SAID: HULLIN MAY BE EATEN THE WHOLE OF THE FOUR [HOURS] AND TERUMAH THE WHOLE OF THE FIVE [HOURS]. AND WE BURN [THEM] AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH [HOUR].⁶

GEMARA. We learned elsewhere: If one [witness] deposes [that it took place] on the second day of the month,⁷ and another deposes, on the third of the month, their testimony is valid, because one knows of the intercalation of the [preceding] month⁸ while the other does not know of the intercalation of the month.⁹ If one deposed, on the third, while the other deposed, on the fifth, their testimony is null. If one said: During the second hour, and the other said: During the third hour, their testimony is valid.¹⁰ If one said, during the third hour, and the other said, during the fifth, their testimony is null: this is R. Meir's view. R. Judah maintained: Their testimony stands. If one deposed, during the fifth [hour], while the other deposed, during the seventh, their testimony is null, because during the fifth [hour] the sun is in the east, whereas in the seventh it is in the west. Abaye observed: When you examine the matter, you find that on R. Meir's ruling a man does not err [in the time] at all, [while] on R. Judah's ruling a man may err in half an hour. [Thus:] on R. Meir's ruling a man does not err at all: the event [to which they testify] happened at the end of the second and the beginning of the third [hour], and when one says, during the second, [he means] at the end of the second [hour], and when the other says, during the third hour, [he means] at the beginning of the third hour.¹¹ On R. Judah's ruling a man may err in half an hour: the event happened in the middle of the fourth hour, and he who says in the third hour[meant] at the end of the third hour, and he errs in [being] half an hour before; while he who testified, in the fifth hour, [meant] at the beginning of the fifth hour, and he errs in half an hour behind.

Others say, Abaye observed: When you examine the matter, you find that on R. Meir's ruling a man may err in [just] a little, while on R. Judah's ruling a man may err in slightly more than an hour.¹² On R. Meir's ruling a man may err in [just] a little: the event occurred either at the end of the second or at the beginning of the third [hour], and one of them erred a little. On R. Judah's ruling a man may err in slightly more than an hour: the event happened either at the end of the third or at the beginning of the fifth,

(1) The animal is scraped to free it of mud, mire, etc. Thus R. Judah does not argue that if you permit one the other will be used, because a man is anxious to keep his property in good condition.

(2) V. supra 4b for notes.

(3) This is the reading of MS.M. and in the printed ed. of the Mishnah.

(4) V. Gemara.

(5) Forty loaves were brought with a thanks-offering, ten of which were leaven; two leaven loaves which had become unfit (the Gemara discusses how) were publicly exposed on the portico and served as a signal.

(6) By Biblical law leaven is permitted until midday. But people often erred in the matter of time (there were, of course, no clocks or watches in those days), and the controversy here is in respect of the extent of possible or likely errors.

(7) E.g., a murder.

(8) I.e., that it consisted of thirty days. The thirtieth day is said to be intercalated.

(9) Thinking that it consisted of twenty-nine days. This holds good only when they agree on other matters, including what day of the week it was.

(10) Because one can err in an hour.

(11) Thus there is no contradiction at all. But if it is shown that there is a contradiction, even in half an hour, one is assumed to be false and their evidence is null.

(12) Lit., 'an hour and a little'.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 12a

and one of them erred in just over an hour.

R. Huna the son of R. Judah went and reported this discussion before Raba. Said he: now what if we carefully examined these witnesses [and found] that the one who testified [that it took place] in the third [hour] meant at the beginning of the third hour, while he who testified [that it took place] in the fifth [meant] at the end of the fifth, so that it would be a confuted testimony and we would not execute [the accused]; shall we then arise and execute him through a doubt,¹ whereas the Merciful One has ordered, then the congregation shall judge . . . and the congregation shall deliver?² Rather said Raba: on R. Meir's ruling a man may err in two hours less a trifle, while on R. Judah's ruling a man may err in three hours less a trifle. On R. Meir's ruling a man may err in two hours less a trifle:

the incident happened either at the beginning of the second or at the end of the third [hour], and one of them erred in two hours less a trifle. On R. Judah's ruling a man may err in three hours less a trifle: the incident occurred either at the beginning of the third or at the end of the fifth [hour], and one of them erred in three hours less a trifle.

We learned: They³ were examined with seven hakiroth:⁴ In which septennate [was the crime committed], in which year, in which month, on what day of the month, on what day [of the week]. at which hour and in which place? And 'ye [further] learned: What is the difference between hakiroth and bedikoth?⁵ In hakiroth, if one of them [the witnesses] replied. 'I do not know', their testimony is null; in bedikoth, even if both declare, 'We do not know', their testimony is valid. Now we questioned this: Wherein this difference between hakiroth and bedikoth? And we answered: In hakiroth, if one declares, 'I do not know', their testimony is null, because it is a testimony which cannot be rebutted;⁶ whereas with respect to bedikoth it is [still] a testimony which can be rebutted.⁷ Now if you say that a man may err in so much, then the hakiroth of which hour also [leaves] testimony which cannot be rebutted, for they can assert, 'We did indeed err'? — We allow them [the benefit of] the whole of their [possible] error: according to R. Meir we allow them from the beginning of the first hour until the end of the fifth; and logically we should give them even more at the beginning, but that people do not err between day and night. While according to R. Judah we allow them from the beginning of the first hour until the end of the sixth; and logically we should give them more at the beginning,

(1) I.e., just because we do not examine the witnesses to find out exactly what they meant.

(2) Num. XXXV. 24, 25; i.e. , the accused must be given the benefit of doubt.

(3) The witnesses in a murder trial.

(4) Lit., 'searching questions'. Two types of questions were asked, called hakiroth and bedikoth (examinations); v. Sanh. 40a.

(5) As stated, hakiroth dealt with time and place; bedikoth dealt with accompanying circumstances of the crime, e.g., the weapon, the clothes worn, etc.

(6) The Hebr. word הזמה used always denotes rebutting by proving that the witnesses themselves were elsewhere at the time of the alleged crime, in which case the law of retaliation applies that the witnesses are subject to the punishment which they sought to fasten upon the accused; v. Deut. XIX, 18f. This is obviously impossible unless the witnesses state the exact time and place, whereas the possibility of rebuttal is essential for the validity of testimony.

(7) Even if the witnesses are not clear on the accompanying circumstances.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 12b

but that people do not err between day and night; and logically we should give them more at the end,¹ but that in the fifth hour the sun is in the east while in the seventh the sun is in the west.²

We learned: R. MEIR SAID: ONE MAY EAT [LEAVEN] THE WHOLE OF THE FIVE [HOURS] AND MUST BURN [IT] AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH. R. JUDAH SAID: ONE MAY EAT THE WHOLE OF THE FOUR [HOURS]. KEEP [IT] IN SUSPENSE THE WHOLE OF THE FIFTH, AND MUST BURN [IT] AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH. Now according to Abaye who maintains that on R. Meir's view a man does not err at all, let us eat [leaven] for the whole of the six [hours]?³ And even on the version which asserts [that] a man may err slightly, let us eat until the end of the sixth hour?⁴ And according to Abaye on R. Judah's view, who maintains [that] a man may err in half an hour, let us eat [leaven] until half of the sixth hour; and even on the version in which you say. A man may err in an hour and a trifle, let us eat until the end of the fifth hour? — Said Abaye: Testimony is committed to careful men,⁵ [whereas] leaven is committed to all.⁶ Now according to Raba who maintains [that] on R. Meir's view a man may err in two hours less a trifle, let us not eat [leaven] from the beginning of the fifth [hour]? — In the fifth [hour] the sun is in the east, while in the seventh the sun is in the west.⁷ If so, let us eat during the sixth [hour] too? — Said R. Adda b. Ahabah: In the sixth the sun stands in the meridian.⁸ And according to Raba who maintains on R. Judah's view [that] a man may err in three hours less a trifle, let us not eat from the beginning of the fourth [hour]? — In the fifth [hour] the sun is in the east, while in the seventh it is in the west, and all the more so in the fourth. If so, let us also eat in the fifth [hour]? — Abaye answered this on Raba's view: Testimony is committed to men of care, [whereas] leaven is committed to all.⁹ But Raba said: Now this is R. Judah's reason, but R. Judah follows his opinion. for he maintains, There is no removal of leaven save by burning; the Rabbis therefore gave him one hour in which to collect fuel.¹⁰ Rabina raised an objection to Raba: R. Judah said: When is this?¹¹ before¹² the time of removal;¹³ but at the time of removal its 'putting away' is with anything.¹⁴ Rather said Raba: It is a preventive measure on account of a cloudy day.¹⁵ If so, let us not eat even during the four hours? — Said R. Papa: The fourth [hour] is the general mealtime.¹⁶ Our Rabbis taught: The first hour [of the day] is the mealtime for gladiators;¹⁷ the second is the mealtime for robbers;¹⁸ the third is the mealtime for heirs;¹⁹ the fourth is the mealtime for labourers;²⁰ the fifth is the mealtime for scholars; the sixth is the general mealtime.²¹ But R. Papa said: The fourth [hour] is the general mealtime? — Rather reverse it: The fourth is the general mealtime; the fifth is for labourers; and the sixth is for scholars. After that it is like throwing a stone into a barrel.²² Abaye said: That was said only if nothing at all is eaten in the morning; but if something was eaten in the morning. we have nought against it.

R. Ashi said: As there is a controversy in respect of testimony. so is there a controversy in respect of leaven.²³ But it is obvious? That is precisely what we have said!²⁴ This is what he informs us: the answers which we gave are [correct] answers, and you need not say that it is dependent on Tannaim.²⁵

R. Simi b. Ashi said: They learned this²⁶ only in respect of hours;²⁷ but if one testified [that the crime was committed] before sunrise and the others testified, after sunrise, their testimony is void. That is obvious? — Rather [say] if one testified [that it was] during sunrise, their testimony is void. That too is obvious? You might say, Both testified to the same thing, while he who said [that it was]

(1) Lit., 'forward'.

(2) According to R. Meir: if A testified that the crime was committed in the second hour, and B that it took place in the third, their testimony is valid (v. Supra 11b), unless they are rebutted over the whole period in which an error is possible. Thus A, if rebutted, can plead that he erred, and that the crime actually took place either in the first hour or in the third or fourth. He should also be able to plead that it took place within the hour before sunrise, since R. Meir allows for an error of nearly two hours, but that he would never mistake night for day. Similarly B, if rebutted, can plead that he erred, and that the crime took place at any time between the first and the fifth hour. Hence they are liable to be rebutted over the whole of this time; i.e., C and D testify that they were elsewhere from the first until the fifth hour, and such rebuttal is designated a rebuttal in respect of hours, and therefore the evidence, if unrefuted, is valid. By the same reasoning, according to R. Judah, who allows for a margin of nearly three hours' error, the period is from the first until the sixth hour, the seventh being disregarded, as explained in the Gemara. — This wide latitude is granted only in so far that the witnesses will not be subject to retaliation (v. p. 53, n. 4) otherwise, but the evidence none the less may be void. E.g., if it is necessary to assume that B erred in two hours and that he really meant the fifth hour, A's testimony cannot be reconciled with it on any reasoning, and as we are left with one witness only the accused cannot be condemned.

(3) I.e., right until midday, when it is forbidden by Scriptural law.

(4) I.e., until just before midday.

(5) A man does not come to testify without being very careful on the question of time, as he knows that he will be cross-examined.

(6) Every man uses his own judgment, and therefore a far wider margin of error is possible.

(7) And the interdict of leaven commences in the seventh only; hence there is no possibility of error.

(8) Lit., 'between the corners', — equidistant from the east and the west, and so an error is possible.

(9) Hence in the matter of leaven people may err between the fifth and the seventh hours, in spite of the difference in the sun's position. Nevertheless, they would not err from the fourth to the seventh.

- (10) Hence the fifth hour is kept in suspense, for if one were permitted to eat then he might forget about collecting fuel.
- (11) That burning is the only form of removal.
- (12) Lit., 'not at'.
- (13) I.e., during the sixth hour, before there is the Scriptural injunction to put away leaven.
- (14) It can be destroyed in any fashion. — Then why keep it in suspense? if he forgets to collect fuel he can destroy it in another way.
- (15) When the position of the sun cannot be clearly ascertained.
- (16) Hence everybody knows it.
- (17) Whose diet requires special attention (Jast.); or perhaps, circus attendants.
- (18) Rashi: Both are rapacious, hence they eat so early; but robbers, being awake all night, sleep during the first hour of the day.
- (19) Not having to earn their living, they have their main meal earlier than others.
- (20) In the field.
- (21) Lit., 'the mealtime of all (other) men'.
- (22) No benefit is derived.
- (23) Just as R. Meir and R. Judah differ in the possible errors of time in respect to evidence, so in respect of the prohibition of leaven.
- (24) The whole of our discussion assumes that the two subjects are completely analogous.
- (25) For though the views of R. Meir and R. Judah are apparently self-contradictory, they have been reconciled. R. Ashi informs us that it is unnecessary to assume that they actually represent irreconcilable opinions. there being a controversy of Tannaim as to the views of R. Meir and R. Judah.
- (26) That a margin of error, perhaps up to nearly three hours, is allowed in testimony.
- (27) I.e., when the witnesses state the hour of the day.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 13a

during sunrise was standing in the glow [before sunrise] and what he saw was merely the glare; hence he informs us [that it is not so]. R. Nahman said in Rab's name: The halachah is as R. Judah.¹ Said Raba to R. Nahman, Yet let the Master say [that] the halachah is as R. Meir, since a Tanna taught anonymously in agreement with him. For we learned: As long as it is permitted to eat [leaven] he may feed [animals with it]?² That is not anonymous. because there is the difficulty of 'it is permitted'.³ Then let the Master say [that] the halachah is as R. Gamaliel, since he makes a compromise?⁴ — R. Gamaliel does not make a compromise but states an independent view.⁵ Alternatively. Rab rules as this Tanna. For it was taught: If the fourteenth falls on the Sabbath, everything [sc. leaven] must be removed before the Sabbath, and terumoth,⁶ whether unclean, or in suspense.⁷ or clean, are burnt, and of the clean [terumah] food for two meals is left over, so as to eat until four hours:⁸ this is the ruling of R. Eleazar b. Judah of Bartotha⁹ which he stated in R. Joshua's name. Said they to him: Clean [terumoth] should not be burnt, in case eaters may be found for them?¹⁰ — He replied: They have already sought [eaters] but not found [them].¹¹ They may have spent the night without the [city] wall? said they to him¹² — Then on your reasoning, he retorted, even those in suspense should not be burnt, lest Elijah come and declare them clean?¹³ — Said they to him, it has long been assured to Israel that Elijah will come neither on the eve of the Sabbath nor on the eve of Festivals, on account of the trouble.¹⁴ It was said:¹⁵ They did not stir thence until they decided the halachah in accordance with R. Eleazar b. Judah of Bartotha which he stated in R. Joshua's name. Does that not mean even in respect of eating?¹⁶ Said R. Papa in Raba's name: No, [only] in respect of removing.¹⁷

Now Rabbi too holds this [view] of R. Nahman. For Rabin son of R. Adda related: It once happened that a certain man deposited a saddle-bag full of leaven with Johanan of Hukok,¹⁸ and mice made holes in it, and the leaven was bursting out. He then went before Rabbi.¹⁹ The first hour he said to him, 'Wait'; the second, he said to him, 'Wait'; the third he said to him, 'Wait';²⁰ the fourth he said to him, 'Wait'; at the fifth he said to him, 'Go out and sell it in the market'. — Does that not mean to Gentiles, in accordance with R. Judah?²¹ — Said R. Joseph: No, to an Israelite, in accordance with R. Meir.²² Said Abaye to him: If to an Israelite, let him take it for himself? — [He could not do this] because of suspicion.²³ For it was taught: When the charity overseers have no poor to whom to distribute [their funds], they must change the copper coins with others, not themselves.²⁴ The overseers of the soup kitchen,²⁵ when they have no poor to whom to make a distribution, must sell to others, not to themselves, because it is said, and ye shall be guiltless towards the Lord, and towards Israel.²⁶ R. Adda b. Mattenah said to R. Joseph:²⁷ You explicitly told us [that he said]. 'Go out and sell it to Gentiles,' in accordance with R. Judah.

R. Joseph said: With whom does this ruling of Rabbi agree?²⁸ With R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For we learned: If a man deposits produce with his neighbour. even if it is suffering loss,²⁹ he must not touch it. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: He must sell it by order of the court, on account of returning lost property.³⁰ Said Abaye to him, Yet was it not stated thereon, Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in R. Johanan's name: They learned this only

(1) In our Mishnah.

(2) Conversely, when he may not eat leaven he may not feed his cattle with it. But in R. Judah's view he may not eat it during the fifth hour, and yet he may give it to his cattle. Hence this must agree with R. Meir. It is a general principle that an anonymous Mishnah states the halachah.

(3) V. infra 21a. In order to answer that difficulty the Mishnah is explained as being R. Gamaliel's view.

(4) V. Mishnah on 11b. It is a general rule that the view representing a compromise is the halachah.

(5) Lit., 'a reason of his own'. R. Gamaliel's view would be a compromise if R. Meir and R. Judah mentioned terumoth and hullin, R. Meir explicitly stating that even hullin may be eaten the whole of the five hours, and R. Judah stating that even terumah may only be eaten up to four hours. This would show that they recognize that in logic a distinction might be drawn between hullin and terumah. R. Gamaliel, in thus making the distinction, would be effecting a compromise. But they do not rule thus: hence his distinction is an entirely independent one.

(6) Plur. of terumah.

(7) I.e., when it is in doubt whether they are clean or unclean.

(8) I.e., one meal Friday evening and one Saturday morning.

(9) In Upper Galilee.

(10) E.g., guests who are priests may arrive.

(11) I.e., it is impossible to have unexpected guests, for these cannot arrive from without the town on the Sabbath, while one knows who is in town.

(12) And thus arrive unexpectedly.

(13) One of the functions ascribed to Elijah was the clearing up of all doubts.

(14) His coming then would be inopportune.

(15) Lit. — 'they said'.

(16) And he states that leaven may be eaten until four hours, even if it is terumah. This is the basis of Rab's ruling, the question being a rhetorical one.

(17) Viz., that even the clean terumoth must not be kept for Sabbath morning but must be burnt before the Sabbath. But it is possible that terumah may be eaten until the fifth hour.

(18) In Northern Palestine.

(19) It was Passover eve.

(20) The owner may come.

(21) Who holds that it is forbidden to Jews then.

(22) Who holds that a Jew may eat it during the fifth hour.

(23) E.g., that he had undervalued it.

(24) Copper coins were unsuitable for keeping a long time, being liable to tarnish and mould. Therefore they would be exchanged for silver ones.

(25) תמאוי; actual food was collected for this purpose, not money, and it was distributed to those in immediate need of a meal. V. B.B. 8b.

(26) Num. XXXII, 22. I.e., one must avoid even the appearance of suspicion.

(27) R. Joseph had forgotten his learning owing to an illness, and his disciples would often have to remind him of his teachings. v. Ned. 41a.

(28) Lit., 'as whom does it go'?

(29) Through mildew or mice.

(30) I.e., it is like returning lost property to its owner.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 13b

when there is the normal rate of decrease; but when [the loss] exceeds the normal rate of decrease, [all agree that] he must sell it by a court order. How much more so here that it is entirely lost.¹

R. JUDAH SAID FURTHER: TWO [UNFIT] LOAVES, etc. A Tanna recited before Rab Judah: on the top [gab] of the [Temple] iztaba.² Said he to him: Does he then need to hide them?³ Learn: on the roof of the [temple] iztaba [portico]. Rehaba said in R. Judah's name:⁴ The Temple Mount consisted of a double colonnade.⁵ It was taught likewise: The Temple Mount consisted of a double colonnade. R. Judah said: It was called istewawnith,⁶ [being] a colonnade within a colonnade.

UNFIT etc., why UNFIT? — Said R. Hanin: Since they were many they became unfit through being kept overnight. For it was taught: A thankoffering may not be brought during the Feast of Unleavened Bread on account of the leaven therein.⁷ But that is obvious? — Said R. Adda b. Ahabah: We treat here of the fourteenth. and he [the Tanna] holds: Sacred food may not be brought to unfitness.⁸ Hence everybody brought it on the thirteenth, and since they were numerous they became unfit through being kept overnight. In R. Jannai's name it was said: They were fit, yet why are they called unfit? Because the sacrifice had not been slaughtered for them.⁹ Then let us slaughter [it]? — The sacrifice was lost. Then let us bring another sacrifice and slaughter [it]? — It is a case where he [the owner] had declared: 'This [animal] is a thankoffering and these are its loaves,' this being in accordance with Rabbah. For Rabbah said: If the loaves are lost, other loaves may be brought. If the thankoffering is lost, another thankoffering may not be brought — What is the reason? The loaves are subsidiary¹⁰ to the thankoffering, but the thankoffering is not subsidiary to the loaves. Then let us redeem and free them as hullin?¹¹ — But in truth it is a case where the sacrifice was slaughtered for them, but the blood was poured out.¹² And with whom [does this agree]? With Rabbi, who said: The two things which permit, promote [to sanctity] without each other.¹³ For it was taught: The lambs of Pentecost¹⁴ sanctify the loaves only by shechitah.¹⁵ How so? If he kills them for their own purpose¹⁶ and sprinkles their blood for their own purpose, he [thereby] sanctifies the loaves. If he kills them for a purpose that is not theirs and sprinkles their blood for a purpose that is not theirs, he does not sanctify [thereby] the loaves — If he kills them for their own purpose but sprinkles their blood for a purpose that is not theirs, the bread is sanctified and not sanctified;¹⁷ this is Rabbi's ruling. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said: The bread always remains unsanctified until he kills [the lambs] for their own purpose and sprinkles their blood for their own purpose.¹⁸ — [No,] you may even say [that it agrees with] R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon; but the case we discuss here is where the blood was caught in a goblet and then spilled, while R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon holds as his father, who maintained: That which stands to be sprinkled is as though it were sprinkled.¹⁹ A Tanna taught: In R. Eleazar's name it was said: They [the loaves] were fit. As long as they [both] lay [there], all the people ate [leaven]; when one was removed, they kept [the leaven] in suspense, neither eating nor burning [it]; when both were removed, all commenced burning [their leaven].

It was taught, Abba Saul said:

(1) If unsold before it becomes interdicted.

(2) The word may denote a bench or a portico. The reading 'on the top' (gab) implies the former rendering. Hence the question that follows, v. Rashi.

- (3) Surely they are intended to be exposed for public gaze.
- (4) V. Bez., Sonc. ed. p. 54, n. 9.
- (5) [GR. . For a description of the Temple porticoes v. Josephus, Wars v, 5.3 v. also Derenborg, Essai p. 51.
- (6) Lit., 'a double colonnade'. [מטיו כפול == GR.  of Josephus, Wars V. 5.2. v. Hollis, F. J. Herod's Temple p. 15.]
- (7) Forty loaves accompanied the offering, ten of which were leaven.
- (8) A thankoffering may be eaten on the day that it is brought and the following night. But if it is brought on the fourteenth of Nisan the loaves of leaven may be eaten only until noon, and this Tanna holds that a sacrifice may not be brought at a time when the normal period for its consumption is lessened, so that it is likely to become unfit.
- (9) I.e., we need not assume that the reference is to loaves which were in fact unfit through having been kept overnight, but even if the sacrifice had not been slaughtered they are also so designated, because the loaves may not be eaten until the thankoffering is killed on their behalf.
- (10) Lit. , 'on account of'.
- (11) For the loaves in that case can be redeemed.
- (12) The loaves cannot be redeemed then.
- (13) The slaughtering and the sprinkling of the blood are both required before the loaves may be eaten; on the other hand, one alone suffices to promote them to that degree of sanctity ('intrinsic sanctity, as opposed to 'monetary' sanctity); from which they cannot be redeemed.
- (14) Lit., 'the solemn assembly' — the term without further qualification always refers to Pentecost.
- (15) V. Glos. It is stated in Lev. XXIII, 19f: And ye shall offer . . . two he-lambs . . . and the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first fruits (i.e., the 'two wave loaves' mentioned in v. 17, q.v.) for a wave offering before the Lord, with the two lambs: they shall be holy to the Lord for the priest. In Men. 46a it is shown that these loaves are sanctified only by the ritual slaughter of the sacrifice.
- (16) Lit., 'for their name — I.e., as the Pentecost sacrifices.
- (17) The loaves are sanctified in that they become unfit if taken without the sacred precincts and that they cannot be redeemed, for they are now intrinsically holy. Yet they are unsanctified in the sense that they may not be eaten.
- (18) Thus the statement that our Mishnah refers to a case where the offering had been slaughtered but its blood was not sprinkled and thereby the loaves were sanctified, would appear to agree with Rabbi only.
- (19) In the sense that the animal is unfit as a sacred offering which has become unfit. Yet it may not be eaten unless the blood is sprinkled.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 14a

Two cows used to plough on the Mount of Anointing:¹ as long as both were ploughing. all the people ate; when one was removed, they kept [the leaven] in suspense, neither eating nor burning [it]; when both were removed, all the people began burning [their leaven]. MISHNAH. R. HANINA. THE SEGAN² OF THE PRIESTS, SAID: DURING THE DAYS OF THE PRIESTS THEY NEVER REFRAINED FROM BURNING [SACRIFICIAL] FLESH WHICH HAD BEEN DEFILED BY A DERIVATIVE UNCLEANNESS WITH FLESH WHICH HAD BEEN DEFILED BY A PRINCIPAL UNCLEANNESS, THOUGH UNCLEANNESS IS ADDED TO ITS UNCLEANNESS.³ R. AKIBA ADDED AND SAID: DURING [ALL] THE DAYS OF THE PRIESTS THEY DID NOT REFRAIN FROM LIGHTING OIL⁴ WHICH HAD BEEN RENDERED UNFIT⁵ BY A TEBUL YOM⁶ IN A LAMP WHICH HAD BEEN MADE UNCLEAN BY THAT WHICH [OR, ONE WHO] IS UNCLEAN THROUGH A CORPSE, THOUGH UNCLEANNESS IS ADDED TO THEIR UNCLEANNESS.⁷ SAID R. MEIR: FROM THEIR WORDS WE LEARN THAT WE MAY BURN CLEAN TERUMAH TOGETHER WITH UNCLEAN TERUMAH ON PASSOVER.⁸ R. JOSE SAID: THAT IS NOT AN ANALOGY.⁹ AND R. ELIEZER AND R. JOSHUA ADMIT THAT EACH IS BURNT SEPARATELY; WHERE DO THEY DIFFER? IN RESPECT OF DOUBTFUL [TERUMAH]¹⁰ AND UNCLEAN [TERUMAH]. R. ELIEZER RULING, EACH MUST BE BURNT SEPARATELY, WHILE R. JOSHUA RULES, BOTH TOGETHER.

GEMARA. Consider: Flesh which was defiled by a derivative uncleanness, what is it? A second degree. When it is burnt together with flesh which was defiled by a principal defilement, what is it? A second degree:¹¹ [thus] it was a second degree [before] and [is] a second degree [now], then what adding of uncleanness to its uncleanness is there?—Said Rab Judah: We treat here of the derivative of a derivative, so that it¹² is a third degree, and he holds that a third may be raised to a second. But food cannot defile food, for it was taught: You might think that food should defile food, therefore it is stated, But if water be put upon the seed, and aught of their carcase fall thereon, it is unclean:¹³ it is unclean, but it does not render that which is similar thereto unclean?¹⁴ Now it is well according to Abaye who maintained: They learned this only of hullin, but in the case of terumah and sacred food they can render what is similar thereto [unclean]. And also according to R. Adda b. Ahabah in Raba's name, who maintained: They learned this only of hullin and terumah, but in the case of sacred food it does not render its like [unclean], it is correct. But according to Rabina in Raba's name, who said: The Writ states an unqualified law,¹⁵ there is no difference whether it is hullin, terumah, or sacred food, it cannot render its like [unclean], what is there to be said? — We treat here of a case where there is liquid together with the flesh, so that it is defiled on account of the liquid.¹⁶ If so, [instead of] this [phrase] 'TOGETHER WITH FLESH WHICH HAD BEEN DEFILED WITH A PRINCIPAL UNCLEANNESS, he should state, TOGETHER WITH FLESH and liquid' [etc.]? Rather, [reply] granted that food cannot defile food by Scriptural law, by Rabbinical law it can nevertheless defile [it].¹⁷

R. AKIBA ADDED AND SAID: DURING [ALL] THE DAYS OF THE PRIESTS THEY DID NOT REFRAIN FROM LIGHTING, etc. Consider: When oil is rendered unfit through [contact with] a tebul yom, what is it? A third degree [of defilement]; and when it is lit in a lamp which was defiled by that which [or, one who] was defiled through a corpse, what does it become? A second degree.¹⁸ [Thus] what he does inform us is that a third degree may be raised to a second; then it is the identical [teaching]?¹⁹ Said Rab Judah: We treat here of a metal lamp, for the Divine Law said,

(1) I.e., the Mount of Olives.

(2) Chief of the priests and deputy High-Priest, v. Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 97. n. 1.

(3) The following degrees of defilement are distinguished: (i) The super principal (lit. , 'father of fathers' of) defilement, which is that borne by a corpse; (ii) principal (lit. , 'the father of') defilement, which is that of a human being or a utensil 'defiled by a corpse; (iii) derivative (lit., 'offspring of') defilement, borne by a human being, utensil or food which is contaminated by a principal defilement — this is also known as the first degree or 'beginning' of defilement; (iv) the second degree of defilement, which is that of food contaminated by a principal defilement. In hullin there is nothing further, and if hullin comes into contact with something unclean in the second degree it remains clean. Terumah, however, is liable to (v) a third degree, but no further. Sacred food, i.e., the flesh of sacrifices, is liable to (vi) a fourth degree of defilement. Third degree terumah and fourth degree sacred flesh are called 'unfit' but not unclean, because they cannot communicate uncleanness to their own kind, i.e., to terumah and sacred flesh respectively.

(4) of terumah.

(5) V. n. 2.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) In all these cases something of a lower degree of uncleanness comes into contact with something else of a higher degree of uncleanness when they are burnt together, and their own uncleanness is increased, as explained in the Gemara.

(8) I.e., on the eve of Passover, when leaven must be burnt. R. Meir reasons that since a higher degree of uncleanness may be imposed upon terumah and sacred flesh when they must be burnt in any case, the same holds good for leaven, even if one is not unclean at all.

(9) You cannot deduce one from the other.

(10) Lit., 'in suspense'.

(11) For the latter is a first degree and its contact renders this flesh a second degree.

(12) The flesh which is defiled thereby.

(13) Lev. XI, 38.

(14) Then what increase of uncleanness can there be in the Mishnah?

(15) Lit., 'a full verse'.

(16) When the flesh was defiled there was water upon it, which is still there when it is burnt with the flesh defiled in a lower degree. The uncleanness of the latter is raised through contact with the water.

(17) Thus the Mishnah likewise treats of a Rabbinically enhanced defilement.

(18) The lamp being unclean in the first degree.

(19) of R. Hanina.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 14b

[And whosoever . . . toucheth] one that is slain by the sword,¹ [which intimates], the sword is as the slain;² hence it is a principal defilement, and he [R. Akiba] thus holds that a third may be raised to a first.³ Yet what compels Rab Judah to relate it to a metal lamp? Let him relate it to an earthen lamp, and [as to the question], what does he [R. Akiba] add? [We can reply]. For whereas there [in the first clause] it was unclean and is [now] unclean, here it was unfit and is [now] unclean?⁴ — Said Raba, Our Mishnah presents a difficulty to him: Why does it particularly state, A LAMP WHICH HAD BEEN MADE UNCLEAN BY THAT WHICH WAS UNCLEAN THROUGH A CORPSE? Let it state, which had been defiled by a sherez!⁵ Now what thing is there whose uncleanness is differentiated between the uncleanness of a corpse and [that of] a sherez? Say, that is metal.⁶

Raba said: This proves that R. Akiba holds, The uncleanness of liquids in respect of defiling others is Scriptural; for if you should think that it is Rabbinical [only], then consider: how does this lamp affect the oil? If by rendering that itself unfit, surely it is already unfit?⁷ Whence [does this follow]: perhaps [it affected it by enabling it] to defile others by Rabbinical law?⁸ — If by Rabbinical law [only], why particularly [state when it was defiled] by a principal uncleanness? Even if [it was defiled] by a first or second degree it is still a first.⁹ For we learned: Whatever renders terumah unfit defiles liquids, making them a first, except a tebul yom?¹⁰ Hence this must prove that it is Scriptural.

SAID R. MEIR: FROM THEIR WORDS WE LEARN etc. From whose words? Shall we say, from the words of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests, — are they alike? There it is unclean and unclean, whereas here it is clean and unclean. Again, if from the words of R. Akiba, — are they then alike? There it is unfit and unclean, whereas here it is clean and unclean? Must we [then] say¹¹ that R. Meir holds [that] our Mishnah treats of a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness by Rabbinical law,¹² which by Scriptural law is completely clean;

(1) Num. XIX, 16.

(2) In its degree of defilement. For otherwise, why specify how the person was slain? This is then understood as a general law that any metal vessel or utensil which becomes defiled through a corpse, whether at first hand or not, bears the same degree of defilement as that which contaminates it.

(3) For the oil, by contact with the lamp, is raised from a third to a first.

(4) V. p. 62, n. 2. The flesh, even in a third degree, being sacred, was definitely unclean, since there can be a fourth degree. But the oil of terumah was only unfit, without power to contaminate, whereas now by being raised to a second degree it becomes unclean. Thus this statement goes beyond R. Hanina's. — The reference must be to oil of terumah. For though there was also sacred oil, viz. 'the oil used in meal-offerings, and there a third degree is unclean in that it defiles by contact, nevertheless when unclean it cannot be used for lighting but must be burnt, like all other sacrifices which had been, invalidated for any reason, so that by burning it together with the derivative of uncleanness and rendering it thereby second, he does not increase the power of defilement.

(5) Lit., 'a creeping thing'. This too is a principal defilement, just like a man defiled by a corpse. Rashi omits 'by a sherez', the question being, what need is there for the Mishnah to define at all the source of principal defilement from which the lamp became contaminated.

(6) The rule that a metal vessel bears the same degree of defilement as that which contaminated it applies only to corpse defilement.

(7) And what does it matter whether it is of the third degree or of the first? Hence we must assume that it can now contaminate even by Scriptural law, which it could not do before.

(8) Which power it previously lacked.

(9) Lit. 'beginning' — another designation for a first degree.

(10) 'What renders terumah unfit' is anything which is unclean in the second degree. By Rabbinical law this in turn defiles liquids and actually inflicts a higher degree of uncleanness than that borne by itself, rendering them unclean in the first degree. Thus if R. Akiba were treating of Rabbinically enhanced contamination, it would be unnecessary to speak of the lamp, which bears a principal degree of uncleanness, but of anything which bears even a second degree of uncleanness.

(11) Since R. Meir derives his law from the preceding statements.

(12) E.g. if a utensil was defiled by a liquid and in its turn defiled flesh. The second defilement is only Rabbinical, for by Scriptural law liquid cannot defile a utensil.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 15a

and what does FROM THEIR WORDS mean? From the words of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests?¹ — Said Resh Lakish in Bar Kappara's name: our Mishnah treats of a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness according to Scripture;² and what does FROM THEIR WORDS mean? From the words of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.³ Which [teaching of] R. Joshua? Shall we say, the following [teaching of] R. Joshua? For we learned: In the case of a cask of terumah wherein a doubt of uncleanness is born,⁴ — R. Eliezer said: If it is lying in an exposed place it must be laid in a hidden place, and if it was uncovered, it must be covered.⁵ R. Joshua said: If it is lying in a hidden place, one may lay it in an exposed place, and if it is covered it may be uncovered!⁶ How compare: there it is mere indirect action, whereas here it is [defiling] with [one's own] hands? — Rather it is this [ruling of] R. Joshua. For we learned: If a cask of [wine of clean] terumah in the upper part is broken,⁷ while [in] the lower part there is unclean hullin. R. Eliezer and R. Joshua agree that if a rebi'ith⁸ thereof can be saved in purity, one must save it. But if not, R. Eliezer ruled: Let it descend and be defiled, yet let him not defile it with [his own] hands: R. Joshua said: He may even defile it with his own hands.⁹ If so, [instead of] this [phrase] 'FROM THEIR WORDS, he should state, 'FROM his WORDS'? — This is what he means: From the controversy of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua we learn [etc.]' — This may be proved too,¹⁰ because he states [further]: R. ELIEZER AND R. JOSHUA AGREE [etc.].¹¹ This proves it. And thus said R. Nahman in Rabbah b. Abbuha's name [too]: our Mishnah refers to a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness according to Scripture, and what does FROM THEIR WORDS mean? From the words of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

Raba raised an objection to R. Nahman: R. Jose said [to R. Meir]: The conclusion¹² is not similar to the premise. For when our Masters testified, about what did they testify? If about flesh which was defiled through a derivative uncleanness, that we burn it together with flesh which was defiled through a principal uncleanness, [then] this is unclean and that is unclean!¹³ If about oil which was rendered unfit by a tebul yom,¹⁴ that it is lit in a lamp which was defiled by one unclean through the dead, one is unfit and the other is unclean. So we too admit in the case of terumah which was defiled through a derivative uncleanness, that we may burn it together with terumah which was defiled by a principal uncleanness. But how can we burn that which is in suspense together with that which is unclean? Perhaps Elijah will come and declare it [the former] clean!¹⁵

(1) And the analogy is thus: just as Rabbinically unclean flesh may be burnt together with Scripturally unclean flesh, though the former is Scripturally clean, so may clean terumah be burnt together with unclean terumah during the sixth hour, though the former is then only Rabbinically forbidden, since by Scriptural law the interdict of leaven does not commence until the seventh hour, while the latter is already Scripturally forbidden for use on account of its defilement.

(2) The other hypothesis being a forced one.

(3) Thus R. Meir does not refer to the Mishnah at all but to the rulings of some other Sages. Strictly speaking therefore this Mishnah is irrelevant in its present position, but it is included because the subject of burning unclean together with clean is dealt with there.

(4) E.g., if there is a doubt whether an unclean person touched it.

(5) In spite of the doubt one must still protect it from certain defilement.

(6) I.e., since a doubt has arisen you are no longer bound to protect it and may even place it where the risk of contamination is greater than at present. Thus R. Joshua holds that since it is only fit for lighting one may cause it to become unclean, and this furnishes the basis for R. Meir's analogy.

(7) And the contents thereof are running down into the lower part of the vat.

(8) A quarter of a log.

(9) If the clean terumah runs into the hullin, it becomes unclean too, and then the mixture is forbidden to priest and lay Israelite alike, unless there is one hundred times as much hullin as terumah. In the present case only unclean vessels are ready to hand to catch the terumah, which would save the hullin below. Both agree that if there is time to go, procure clean vessels and save at least a rebi'ith of the terumah, this must be done, though in the meantime some terumah will descend and render all the hullin forbidden. But where there is no time to save even a rebi'ith, we have a controversy. R. Eliezer holds that even so it must be permitted to descend, though it will thereby be defiled in any case, rather than that we should deliberately defile it by catching it in unclean vessels. But R. Joshua maintains that since it will all be defiled in any case, we may defile it ourselves, in order to save the hullin below. R. Meir's ruling in the Mishnah is based on R. Joshua's.

(10) That R. Meir refers to R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

(11) This would be irrelevant if he had not already referred to them.

(12) R. Meir's.

(13) Whereas R. Meir deals with unclean and clean.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) How then may we defile them with our hands by burning them together?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 15b

As to piggul,¹ nothar,² and unclean [sacrificial flesh]. — Beth Shammai maintain: They must not be burnt together;³ while Beth Hillel rule: They may be burnt together.⁴ Now if you think that R. Meir argues from the words of R. Joshua, why does R. Jose answer him from [the view] of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests? — Said R. Nahman to him: R. Jose did not comprehend his [R. Meir's] reasoning, for he thought [that] R. Meir was arguing from R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests, thereupon he said to him, I state [this law by deduction] from R. Joshua — But he answered him, Even on R. Joshua's [view] this is no true analogy, for R. Eliezer and R. Joshua admit that one must burn this separately and that separately. Yet why is this not a [true] analogy. Surely it is a perfect analogy?⁵ — There it is different, because there is a loss of hullin.⁶ To this R. Jeremiah demurred: [Surely] in our Mishnah too there is the loss of wood?⁷ — Said a certain old man to him: They cared about a substantial loss, but they did not care about a slight loss.

R. Assi said in R. Johanan's name: The controversy is [only] in respect of the sixth [hour], but in the seventh all agree⁸ that we burn them [together].⁹ R. Zera said to R. Assi: Shall we [then] say that R. Johanan holds that our Mishnah treats of a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness by Rabbinical law, and that what 'FROM THEIR WORDS' means is from the words of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests?¹⁰ — Yes, he replied. It was stated likewise: R. Johanan said: our Mishnah refers to a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness by Rabbinical law, and what does 'FROM THEIR WORDS' mean? From the words of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests; and the controversy is [only] in respect of the sixth [hour], but in the seventh all agree that we burn them together.

Shall we say that we can support him: As to piggul, nothar and unclean sacrificial [flesh] — Beth Shammai maintain: They must not be burnt together; while Beth Hillel rule: they may be burnt together?¹¹ — There it is different, because they possess uncleanness by Rabbinical law. For we learned: Piggul and nothar defile the hands.¹² Shall we say that this supports him: If a loaf goes mouldy and is unfit for human consumption, yet a dog can eat it, it can be defiled with the uncleanness of eatables, if the size of an egg,¹³ and it may be burnt together with an unclean [loaf] on Passover?¹⁴ — [No]: there it is different because it is merely dust.¹⁵ If so,¹⁶ what does [THEY] ADMIT mean?¹⁷ — R. Jose says thus to R. Meir: Even according to R. Joshua, who is lenient, he is lenient only in connection with doubtful and unclean [terumah],¹⁸ but not in the case of clean and unclean.¹⁹ If so,²⁰ why is it not a true analogy? Surely it is a perfect analogy?²¹ — Said R. Jeremiah: Here²² we treat of flesh which was defiled by a liquid which was defiled through a creeping thing, and R. Meir is consistent with his view, while R. Jose is consistent with his view: R. Meir [is consistent] with his view, for he maintains, The uncleanness of liquids in respect of defiling others is [only] Rabbinical; while R. Jose [is consistent] with his view, for he maintains: The uncleanness of liquids in respect of defiling others is Scriptural.²³ For it was taught:

(1) Lit., 'abomination'. The flesh of a sacrifice which the priest offered with the express intention of consuming it after the permitted time.

(2) 'Left over', flesh not consumed within the permitted period.

(3) Because the first two, though forbidden, are not unclean Biblically, and when they are burnt together they become defiled.

(4) This last portion of the Baraitha dealing with piggul, etc., is irrelevant, and is quoted merely in order to complete the Baraitha.

(5) For the wine in the cask is quite clean, yet since it is fated to be lost we may deliberately defile it.

(6) If the terumah is not deliberately defiled and allowed to flow into the lower part of the vat, v. Supra p. 67. n. 2.

(7) For fuel, if two fires must be made instead of one.

(8) Even R. Jose.

(9) Since they are then Scripturally forbidden, even the clean terumah is certainly the same as unclean.

(10) Thus: just as that which is only Rabbinically unclean may be burnt together with what is Scripturally unclean, so in the sixth hour, the terumah of leaven is then only Rabbinically forbidden, and may be burnt with unclean terumah which is Scripturally forbidden. This seems to be R. Han's interpretation. Rashi and Tosaf. on the basis of another reading explain it rather differently.

(11) This teaching was cited by R. Jose in his argument with R. Meir, he apparently agreeing with the view of Beth Hillel (v. supra and notes). Thus since piggul and nothar are Scripturally forbidden, they may be burnt together with unclean flesh, though they are thereby contaminated; and the same applies to clean terumah of leaven in the seventh hour.

(12) I.e., Rabbinically. v. infra 120a.

(13) Since it was once fit for human food, it can be defiled as food unless it becomes unfit even for a dog.

(14) I.e., even if it is terumah. Now this must certainly be R. Jose's view, for R. Meir permits them to be burnt together even if the loaf is fresh. This proves that R. Jose agrees where it is quite unfit for human consumption, and the same applies to clean terumah of leaven in the seventh hour.

(15) When it is unfit because of its mouldiness, it is worse than unclean, having no intrinsic value whatsoever.

(16) That R. Meir learns from R. Hanina.

(17) Surely R. Jose's argument that R. Eliezer and R. Joshua admit etc., is irrelevant, seeing that R. Meir is not concerned with them at all?

(18) In the two cases cited supra 15a.

(19) With which R. Meir deals.

(20) Again, that R. Meir learns from R. Hanina.

(21) For in the sixth hour the leaven is Rabbinically forbidden, and on R. Johanan's view, there is no difference according to R. Jose between what is unclean and what is forbidden for any other reason (since he maintains that in the seventh hour R. Jose agrees that they may be burnt together because both are then Scripturally forbidden) and the same principle should apply equally to R. Meir.

(22) In our Mishnah.

(23) Hence according to R. Meir this flesh is clean by Scriptural law, yet it is burnt together with flesh Scripturally unclean, and by analogy the same applies to terumah. But in R. Jose's view this flesh too was of uncleanness, and therefore it cannot be compared to terumah in the sixth hour, when it is only Rabbinically forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 16a

Doubtful [cases of uncleanness with] fluids,¹ in respect of becoming unclean themselves, are unclean; in respect of defiling others,² they are clean; this is R. Meir's view, and thus did R. Eleazar too rule as his words. R. Judah said: It is unclean in respect of everything. R. Jose and R. Simeon maintain: In respect of eatables, they are unclean; in respect of utensils they are clean.³ But does R. Eleazar hold that liquid is at all susceptible to uncleanness,⁴ surely it was taught: R. Eleazar said: Liquids have no uncleanness at all [by Scriptural law]; the proof is that Jose b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah⁵ testified⁶ that the stag-locust⁷ is clean [fit for food], and that the fluids⁸ in the [Temple] slaughter-house are clean.⁹ Now, there is no difficulty according to Samuel's interpretation that they are clean [only] in so far that they cannot defile other [objects], but that nevertheless they are unclean in themselves, then it is well; but according to Rab who maintained that they are literally clean,¹⁰ what can be said? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [He refers] to one [ruling only].¹¹ But he states: as his words', implying that they are many; moreover, he teaches, 'and thus [etc.]'?¹² That is [indeed] a difficulty.

The [above] text [states]: 'Rab said, They are literally clean: while Samuel maintained, They are clean [only] insofar that they cannot defile other [objects], but nevertheless they are unclean in themselves'. 'Rab said: They are literally clean'. He holds that the uncleanness of liquids is Rabbinical, and when did the Rabbis decree thus? [only] in respect of liquids in general, but there was no decree in respect of the liquids of the slaughter-house.¹³ 'While Samuel maintained, They are clean [only] in so far that they cannot defile other [objects], but nevertheless they are unclean in themselves'. He holds that the uncleanness of liquids themselves is Scriptural, [but] in respect of defiling others, Rabbinical; and when did the Rabbis decree? In respect of liquids in general, but in respect of the liquids of the slaughter-house there was no decree; again, when did the Rabbis refrain from decreeing [concerning the liquids of the slaughter-house]? In respect to the defiling of other [objects], but they possess uncleanness in themselves.¹⁴

R. Huna b. Hanina said to his son: When you come before R. Papa, point out a contradiction to him: Did then Samuel say, 'They are clean in so far that they cannot defile other [objects], but nevertheless they are unclean in themselves', — read here, and the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten?¹⁵ Said R. Shisha the son of R. Idi: Let it be compared to the fourth degree in the case of sacred [food].¹⁶ To this R. Ashi demurred: A fourth degree in the case of sacred [food] is not designated unclean, [whereas] this is designated unclean? — This is a difficulty. Come and hear: And all drink that may be drunk in any vessel shall be unclean?¹⁷ — What does 'it shall be unclean' mean? It makes [solid foodstuffs] fit [to become unclean].¹⁸ [You say]. 'It makes [solids] fit'; this you know from the beginning of the verse: All food which may be eaten [that on which water cometh, shall be unclean]? — one refers to detached [liquid], and the other to attached [liquid],¹⁹ and both are necessary: for if we were informed of detached, that is because he [the owner of the eatables] assigned importance to them;²⁰ but as for attached, I would say that it is not so. And if we were informed of attached, [that may be] because it [the liquid] stands in its place it has value; but as for detached, I would say that it is not so. Thus they are necessary.

Come and hear: Nevertheless a fountain or a pit wherein is a gathering of water shall be clean?²¹ — What does 'shall be clean' mean? From his [or, its] uncleanness.²²

But can detached [liquid]²³ make [eatables] fit [to become unclean]; surely R. Jose b. R. Hanina said: The liquids of the [Temple] slaughter-house, not enough that they are clean, but they cannot [even] make [eatables] fit [to become unclean]?²⁴ Interpret this as referring to the blood,²⁵ for R. Hiyya b. Abin said in R. Johanan's name: How do we know that the blood of sacrifices does not make [anything] fit [to become defiled]? Because it is said, thou shalt pour it out [sc. the blood] upon the earth as water:²⁶ blood which is poured out as water²⁷ makes fit;

- (1) E.g. . if an unclean person, whose touch defiles liquids, puts his hand into a vessel, and it is not known whether he actually touched the liquid there or not.
- (2) E.g., if unclean liquid fell near food and it is unknown whether it actually touched it or not.
- (3) The general principle is this: when a doubt arises in a Scriptural law, we are stringent; in a Rabbinical law, we are lenient. Now liquid can become defiled by Scriptural law (Lev. XI, 34), hence in doubt it is unclean. But there is a controversy as to whether it can defile other objects by Scriptural law. R. Meir holds that it cannot defile either food or utensils; R. Judah that it defiles both; while R. Jose and R. Simeon hold that it defiles food but not utensils.
- (4) Even in respect of itself.
- (5) V. Cambridge Bible I Kings XI, 26.
- (6) On the historic occasion when as a result of a dispute between R. Gamaliel and R. Joshua the former was deposed from the Patriarchate and R. Eliezer b. 'Azariah appointed in his stead. An examination was then made of scholars' traditions, and they were declared valid or otherwise; v. 'Ed., Sonc. ed., Introduction, xi.
- (7) Heb. ayil, of doubtful meaning.
- (8) Sc. blood and water.
- (9) Even by Rabbinical law. This postulates that the general uncleanness of liquids is Rabbinical only, and it was therefore not imposed in the Temple, so as not to defile the flesh of sacrifices. — The language of this Mishnah is Aramaic whereas all other laws in the Mishnah are couched in Hebrew. Weiss, Dor, I, 105 sees in this a proof of its extreme antiquity.
- (10) Even in respect of themselves.
- (11) R. Eleazar agrees with R. Meir that it is clean in respect of other objects, but not that it is unclean in respect of itself.
- (12) Both imply that he fully agrees with R. Meir
- (13) V. n. 5.
- (14) I.e., the Rabbis could not free them from the uncleanness which they bear by Scriptural law.
- (15) Lev. VII, 19. Hence if the liquid is unclean, the sacrificial flesh which touches it may not be eaten.
- (16) I.e. , sacrifices. V. p. 62, n. 2. Thus there too it is unfit itself through defilement, yet cannot defile other flesh of sacrifices.
- (17) Lev., XI, 34. This shows that liquids contract defilement.
- (18) For solids cannot be defiled unless moisture has previously been upon them. The words, 'it shall be unclean' thus refer to 'of all the food etc. 'with which the verse begins.
- (19) If rain falls upon produce it renders it susceptible to defilement only if the owner of the produce desired it to fall upon something. E.g., if he put out a basin so that the rain should wash it, and subsequently produce fell into the water, it is henceforth susceptible. We are informed here that whether the water is detached from the soil, i.e., whether the rain falls into something detached from the soil, e.g., a bath (as denoted by the words 'in any vessel'), or into something attached, i.e., forming part of the soil, e.g., a pit, and then eatables receive moisture from that rain, they are now ready to be defiled. In the latter case the produce is rendered susceptible only if it comes into contact with the water with the owner's desire; in the former, even against the owner's desire. V. Hul. 16a and Rashi a.l. s.v. לענין הכשר.
- (20) By the mere fact that he desired that the water should fall there or by pouring it into the vessel.
- (21) Lev. XI, 36. This shows that only attached water is clean, but not detached.
- (22) The verse refers to one who is unclean, and states that if he takes a ritual bath (tebillah) in the water of a fountain or a pit he shall be clean, but not in the water of a bath (technically called 'drawn water'). But it does not refer to the cleanness of the water itself.
- (23) Rashi: this difficulty refers to water, which can be attached too. But all other liquids are essentially detached.
- (24) This proves that the power of detached liquids in this respect is only Rabbinical; for if it were Scriptural, the Rabbis have no power to make an exception in this case.
- (25) But not the water.
- (26) Deut. XII, 24.
- (27) I.e. , the blood of non-sacrifices

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 16b

blood which is not poured out as water¹ does not make fit. To this R. Samuel b. Ammi demurred: Behold the last-drained blood,² which is poured out like water,³ yet it does not make fit? — Said R. Zera to him, Leave the last-drained blood alone, which does not make fit even in the case of hullin. R. Samuel b. Ammi received it [the reason] from him, because the Divine Law saith, Only be sure that thou eat not the blood; for the blood is the life:⁴ blood wherewith life goes out is called blood; blood with which life does not go out is not called blood.⁵

Come and hear: If blood became unclean and he [the priest] sprinkled it unwittingly, it [the sacrifice] is accepted; if deliberately, it is not accepted?⁶ — It was Rabbinically [unclean], this not being in accordance with R. Jose b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah.⁷

Come and hear: For what does the headplate propitiate?⁸ For the blood, flesh, and the fat which were defiled, whether in ignorance or deliberately, accidentally or intentionally,⁹ whether in the case of an individual or of the community.¹⁰ [It was defiled] by Rabbinical law [only], this not being in accordance with Jose b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah.¹¹

Come and hear: And Aaron shall bear the iniquity of the holy thing:¹² now what iniquity does he bear? If the iniquity of piggul,¹³ surely it is already said, it shall not be accepted?¹⁴ If the iniquity of nothar, after the first violent rush, The life and vitality pass out with the first blood, not with the last. surely it is already said, neither shall it be imputed [unto him that offereth it]?¹⁵ Hence he bears nought but the iniquity of defilement, which is inoperative¹⁶ in opposition to its general rule, in the case of a community.¹⁷ Does that not mean the defilement of the blood? — Said R. Papa: No: the defilement of the handfuls.¹⁸

Come and hear: If one bear unclean [kodesh] flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be defiled? And the priests answered and said, No.¹⁹

(1) I.e., the blood of sacrifices, which is sprinkled on the altar.

(2) I.e., the blood which flows out slowly

(3) It is not fit for sprinkling.

(4) Deut. XII, 23.

(5) And consequently not in category of liquids (v. Rashi).

(6) Lit. 'make acceptable'. The language is the Biblical, cf. Lev. I, 4: and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him i.e., the sacrifice is efficacious for its purpose. Now by Biblical law it is accepted whether the sprinkling was done deliberately or in ignorance of its uncleanness, and the flesh may be eaten by the priests, but the Rabbis penalized the priests by not permitting the flesh to be eaten in the former case, though another sacrifice is not required (v. Git. 54a). Incidentally we see that blood can become unclean, and thus liquids in general, which contradicts Rab.

(7) Who testified that the Rabbinical decree of uncleanness was not applied to the liquids of the Temple slaughter-house. This Tanna obviously holds that it was.

(8) The reference is to Ex. XXVIII, 38, q.v. 'That they may be accepted before the Lord is understood to mean that the head plate makes sacrifices acceptable and procures atonement in spite of certain irregularities.

(9) This appears to contradict the preceding statement, but v. infra 80b on the discussion of this passage.

(10) Thus here too it is stated that the blood becomes defiled.

(11) V. n. 5.

(12) Ibid. 'Shall bear' means shall make atonement for.

(13) V. Glos.

(14) Lev. XIX, 7.

(15) Lev. VII, 13.

(16) Lit., 'permitted'.

(17) Public sacrifices, or private sacrifices which the entire community had to bring. e.g., the Passover, were permitted even in defilement. For notes v. Yoma, Sonc. ed. p. 27, notes.

(18) Of meal which were burnt on the altar, v. Lev. II. 2. This burning was the equivalent of the sprinkling of the blood in the case of an animal sacrifice, atonement being dependent thereon.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 17a

Whereon Rab said: The priests erred?¹ — Is this view [propounded] against any but Rab? Rab learned, ‘the liquids of the slaughter-house’; but the liquids of the altar² can be defiled.³ [To turn to] the main text: ‘Rab said: The priests erred; but Samuel maintained, The priests did not err’. ‘Rab said, The priests erred’; he asked them about a fourth degree in respect of holy foodstuffs, and they answered him that it was clean. ‘But Samuel maintained, The priests did not err’; he asked them about a fifth degree in respect of holy foodstuffs, and they answered him, It is clean. As for Rab, it is well: hence four are written, ‘bread, pottage, wine, and oil’; but according to Samuel, whence does he know five? — Is it then written, ‘and his skirt⁴ touch [the bread]’? Surely it is written, and touch with [that] [by] his skirt,⁵ [meaning that it touched] that which was touched by his skirt.⁶

Come and hear: Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.⁷ As for Samuel, it is well: since they did not err here, they did not err there [either]; but according to Rab, why did they err here yet did not err there? — Said R. Nahman in Rabbah b. Abbuha's name: They were well-versed in the uncleanness of a corpse, but not well-versed in the uncleanness of a sherez.⁸ Rabina said: There it was a fourth degree; here it was a third.⁹

Come and hear: Then answered Haggai and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the Lord: and so is every work of their hands: and that which they offer there is unclean.¹⁰ As for Rab, it is well: hence ‘unclean’ is written.¹¹ But according to Samuel, why was it unclean? — He indeed wondered.¹² But it is written, and so is every work of their hands?¹³ — Said Mar Zutra, others state, R. Ashi: Because they perverted their actions the Writ stigmatizes them as though they offered up [sacrifices] in uncleanness.

[To turn to] the main text: ‘Rab learned, The liquids of the slaughter-house;¹⁴ while Levi learned: The liquids of the altar’. Now according to Levi, it is well if he holds as Samuel, who said, They are clean [only] in so far that they cannot defile other [objects]. but nevertheless they are unclean in themselves: then it is possible where they all touched the first.¹⁵ But if he holds as Rab, who maintained [that] they are literally unclean, how is it conceivable?¹⁶ — You are compelled [to say that] he holds as Samuel. And according to Samuel, it is well if he holds as Rab who learned, ‘The liquids of the slaughter-house’, but the liquids of the altar can even defile others: [hence] it is only a fourth degree which cannot make a fifth, but a third can make a fourth.¹⁷ But if he holds as Levi who learned, ‘The liquids of the altar’, why particularly [ask about] a fourth, which cannot make a fifth; they cannot even make a second or a third?¹⁸ — You are compelled [to say that] he holds as Rab.

It was taught in accordance with Rab; it was taught in accordance with Levi. It was taught in accordance with Rab: Blood, wine, oil and water, the liquids of the altar, which were defiled within¹⁹ and carried without,²⁰ are clean.²¹ If they were defiled without²² and [then] brought within, they are unclean.²³ But that is not so? for R. Joshua b. Levi said: ‘They did not rule that the liquids of the altar are clean save in their place’: is that not to exclude [the case where] they were defiled within and carried without! — No: it is to exclude [where] they were defiled without and [then] taken within. But he states, ‘in their place’?²⁴ — This is what he states: They did not rule [that these liquids] are clean save when they were defiled in their place [sc. within].

It was taught as Rab: Blood and water, the liquids of the slaughter-house, which were defiled, whether in vessels or in the ground, are clean;

(1) Kodesh is here translated unclean, from its root idea of ‘separation’, ‘keeping at a distance from’, and Haggai was examining the priests in the knowledge of the laws of uncleanness. The exact point of his question is disputed infra, but according to Rab it was this: the unclean flesh was a sherez (‘creeping thing’), which bears a principal degree of uncleanness; this sherez, (being held in the skirt of the garment is now designated by the term 'skirt', the mention of which would otherwise be pointless) touched the bread, the bread touched the pottage, the pottage touched the wine, and the wine touched the oil or any other foodstuff and the question was whether this last would be unclean, i.e. , whether there is a 'fourth' degree in the case of holy food, to which this refers. So Rashi. R. Tam: the sherez touched the skirt, which became a first, the skirt touched the bread or the pottage, which became a second, then one of these touched wine or oil, which became a third, and the wine or oil touched some other eatable. Actually there is a fourth degree and since the priests replied in the negative. they erred (v. p. 62, n. 2). Thus we see that wine and oil are unclean, though they are the liquids of the Temple, which contradicts Rab. Now, if the uncleanness of liquids is Rabbinical, it has been stated that the Rabbinical decree did not apply to the Temple. And even if Haggai was examining them on points of Rabbinical law, this still contradicts Rab, who states that they are literally clean. The previous answer that Rabbinical uncleanness only is discussed here, while this does not agree with R. Joseph b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah, is impossible in the present instance, for he obviously cannot disagree with Scripture.

(2) In the Aramaic, 'slaughter-house' and 'altar' differ in one letter only.

(3) Blood and water are the liquids of the slaughter-house, but wine and oil are liquids of the altar.

(4) I.e., the sherez which was in his skirt.

(5) So literally.

(6) I.e., the sherez in the skirt touched something which in turn touched the bread, which is therefore a second degree; hence the oil would be a fifth (v. Rashi).

(7) Hag. II, 13,

(8) Thinking that where the originating uncleanness is a sherez, it does not go beyond the third degree.

(9) They were quite unaware that there is a fourth degree, but his second question related to the third degree, Rabina translating thus: If the uncleanness of a dead body touch etc. Since a corpse is a super principal (father of fathers) of uncleanness, the oil would be a third, and of this they knew.

(10) Ibid. 14.

(11) In their ignorance their work would be as unclean.

(12) Seeing that they know the laws so well, can their work be unclean?

(13) This is a positive statement.

(14) In the testimony of R. Joseph b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah.

(15) Thus: in the first question Haggai asked about successive stages of defilement, and they answered that the oil is clean, since it touched the wine, which as a liquid of the altar can be defiled (i.e.. made unfit) but cannot contaminate. But in the second question each touched the first mentioned, viz., 'one that is unclean by a dead body', and they rightly answered that they are unclean.

(16) That the wine and the oil should be unclean. One cannot raise the objection against Rab himself, since he reads, the liquids of the slaughter-house, i.e., blood and water, but not wine and oil.

(17) And for that reason Haggai put his question as to whether the wine, a fourth, could render the oil unfit as a fifth degree of uncleanness, and they rightly gave a negative reply.

(18) Wine and oil, whatever their uncleanness, cannot defile others.

(19) The Temple Court.

(20) Through this act they are henceforth unfit for the altar.

(21) In that they cannot defile others, because when they became unclean in the first place they were true 'liquids of the altar', and as such could not contaminate others.

(22) Before they were ever taken within, so that they were not yet 'liquids of the altar', and they contracted a degree of defilement which contaminates others.

(23) I.e., they retain the power to contaminate. — Thus this Baraita speaks of liquids of the altar.

(24) Which is within.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 17b

R. Simeon said: In vessels, they are unclean; in the ground, they are clean.¹

R. Papa said: Even on the view that the uncleanness of liquids is Biblical, [the non-defilement of] the liquids of the slaughterhouse is a traditional law. Said R. Huna the son of R. Nathan to R. Papa:

Then when R. Eliezer said, 'Liquids have no uncleanness at all; the proof is that Jose b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah testified that the fluids in the [Temple] slaughter-house are clean,' — but if it is a traditional law, can we learn from this?²

Rabina said to R. Ashi: But surely R. Simeon maintained [that] the uncleanness of liquids is Biblical, for it was taught. R. Jose and R. Simeon maintain: In respect of utensils they are clean; in respect of eatables they are unclean;³ yet here R. Simeon rules: In vessels, they are unclean; in the ground, they are clean. But if it is a traditional law, what is the difference whether they are in vessels or in the ground?— This is a difficulty.

R. Papa said: As to what you say, 'In the ground, they are clean', this was taught only of water, but not of blood. And even of water too we said this only when there is a rebi'ith, so that needles and hooks can be bathed therein;⁴ but if less than a rebi'ith. it is unclean.⁵

The Master said: 'R. Judah said: It is unclean in respect of everything.' Shall we say [that] R. Judah holds [that] the uncleanness of liquids, in respect of defiling utensils, is Biblical?⁶ Surely we learned:⁷ In the case of all utensils which, have an outside⁸ and an inside, e.g., cushions, feather-beds, sacks and packing bags, if the inside is defiled, the outside is defiled [too]; if the outside is defiled, the inside is not defiled. R. Judah said: When is that said? Where they are defiled by a liquid; but if they are defiled by a sherez, if the inside is defiled the outside is defiled, [and] if the outside is defiled the inside is defiled.⁹ Now if you think that the uncleanness of liquids in respect of defiling utensils is Biblical, what is the difference whether it was defiled through liquids or through a sherez? — Said Rab Judah in Samuel's name: R. Judah retracted.¹⁰ Rabina said: In truth he did not retract: one refers to liquids which are unclean¹¹ through the hands,¹² the other to liquids which are unclean through a sherez. If so, instead of stating, 'When is that, when they are defiled by liquids.' let him draw a distinction in that itself: [thus:] when is it said? In the case of liquids unclean through the hands; but in the case of liquids defiled by a sherez, if the inside is defiled the outside is defiled, [and] if the outside is defiled the inside is defiled. Hence it is clear as we first answered: R. Judah retracted.

The scholars asked: Did he retract [only] from [his ruling on] utensils, but in [the matter of] eatables he holds as R. Jose and R. Simeon;¹³ or perhaps he completely retracted, in accordance with R. Meir['s views]?'¹⁴ — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, Come and hear: If a cow¹⁵ drinks the water of lustration,¹⁶ its flesh is unclean.¹⁷ R. Judah said:

(1) V. infra.

(2) Surely this does not afford proof, if these liquids stand entirely in a separate category.

(3) V. supra 16a.

(4) If they are unclean, the rebi'ith of water in the ground serving as a ritual bath, as it can do by Biblical law, through the Rabbis enacted that forty se'ahs is the minimum capacity. Still, since by Biblical law it constitutes a mikweh itself, the water cannot be defiled. A rebi'ith is the minimum which may constitute a mikweh.

(5) Hence according to R. Simeon, R. Joseph b. Jo'ezer's testimony was only in respect of water, not blood.

(6) V. p. 70. n. 11.

(7) So cur. edd., the reference being to the Mishnah in Kel. XXV, I. But the reading there is different, and R. Samson of Sens quotes the present passage as a Baraita. R. Han. too introduces it by the phrase 'it was taught'.

(8) Lit., 'back'.

(9) 'Utensils which have a back (outside) and an inside' are those which can be used on both sides. A cushion, feather-bed, etc. had a definite side for use, nevertheless they could be turned inside out and used; similarly, sacks and packing bags could be turned inside out and used, and they are therefore treated like other vessels which require only rinsing in order to become clean (v. Hul. 25a) so that if the inner side is defiled the whole is unclean, but not the reverse. Thus the first Tanna. R. Judah, however, draws a distinction between liquids and a sherez as the contaminating object; in the first case this law holds good, because liquid defiles by Rabbinical law only, and therefore the extent of its defilement was lessened, so that it might be known that it does not defile by Biblical law. Hence, if it touches terumah the terumah must not be burnt, as it would be if it were unclean by Scriptural law. But if a sherez, which defiles by Biblical law, contaminates them, they are altogether unclean, no matter where they are touched.

(10) From the view that it is unclean in respect of everything.

(11) Lit., 'which come'.

(12) By a Rabbinical enactment a person's hands are generally considered unclean in the second degree; further, they defile liquids and render them unclean in the first degree. It is between such liquids and a sherez that R. Judah draws a distinction.

(13) That liquids contaminate them, Biblically.

(14) That liquids do not contaminate them even Rabbinically.

(15) Whether sanctified or not.

(16) V. Num. XIX, 9 (it is there translated: water of separation).

(17) If it is slaughtered while the water is yet within it, for the water of purification defiles human beings and vessels, v. ibid. 21.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 18a

It [the water] is nullified in its bowels.¹ Now if you think that he retracted [only] from [his ruling on] utensils, yet in [respect to] eatables he holds as R. Jose and R. Simeon, why is it completely nullified in its bowels: granted that it cannot defile [with] the graver uncleanness,² yet it can at least defile [with] the lighter uncleanness?³ — What does, 'it is nullified in its bowels' mean? It is indeed nullified from [imposing] grave uncleanness, but it does defile [with] light uncleanness. Hence it follows that the first Tanna holds that it is unclean even with the graver uncleanness; but surely he states, 'Its flesh is unclean?'⁴ The whole is R. Judah. but the text is defective, and it was thus taught: If a cow drinks the water of lustration, its flesh is unclean. When is that said? In respect of light uncleanness, but not in respect of grave uncleanness, for R. Judah maintained: It is nullified in its bowels. R. Ashi said: In truth it is completely nullified in its bowels, because it is [now] noisome liquid.⁵

'R. Jose and R. Simeon maintained: In respect of eatables they are unclean; in respect of utensils they are clean.' Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in Resh Lakish's name: R. Jose stated this in accordance with the opinion of R. Akiba his teacher,⁶ who interprets yitma [it shall be unclean] as yetamme [it shall defile] — For we learned: on that very day⁷ R. Akiba lectured: And every earthen vessel, wherein any of them [sc. creeping things] falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean [yitma]:⁸ it does not state tame [unclean] but yitma. [intimating that] it defiles [yetamme] others, [thus] teaching that a loaf of the second degree produces a third in the case of hullin.⁹ And how does he interpret [it] here?¹⁰ — And all drink that may be drunk in every such vessel [yitma] shall be unclean:¹¹ it 'shall defile' [yetamme] in respect of defiling eatables —¹² You say. 'In respect of defiling eatables': yet perhaps it is not so, but rather in respect of defiling liquids? — You can answer, It was not thus. What does 'it was not thus' mean? — Said R. Papa: We do not find that uncleanness renders that which is similar to itself [unclean].¹³ Rabina said: From the verse itself too you cannot say 'it shall defile' is in respect of defiling liquids. For if you should think that 'it shall be unclean' of the second part [of the verse] is in respect of defiling liquids, [while] 'it shall be unclean' of the first part is also in respect of defiling liquids,¹⁴ then let it [the Torah] combine them and write them [together]. All food therein which may be eaten, that on which water cometh, and all drink that may be drunk in every such vessel shall be unclean: what is the purpose of 'shall be unclean' twice? Hence 'shall be unclean' of the first part is in respect of defiling liquids. [while] 'shall be unclean' of the second part is in respect of defiling eatables. Yet perhaps it is in respect of defiling vessels?¹⁵ — Does it [the reverse] not follow a minori: if a utensil, which defiles liquids, cannot defile [another] utensil,¹⁶ then how much the more should liquids which are unclean¹⁷ through a utensil not defile utensils! Yet perhaps, they do¹⁸ not defile [utensils] [when they are] liquids unclean through a utensil; but liquids which are unclean through a sherez, do indeed defile [utensils]? — Are then liquids which are unclean through a sherez, written [in Scripture]?

- (1) Because it is no longer fit for its purpose, and ceases to be regarded as water of purification.
- (2) I.e., it cannot defile human beings and vessels.
- (3) I.e., foodstuffs, sc. this flesh. For the water is at least the same as any other liquid and is therefore unclean, for it is regarded as though it touched itself while it was yet the water of purification, and in turn it should defile the flesh.
- (4) But he does not maintain that the water defiles even human beings and vessels.
- (5) And undrinkable, whereas only drinkable water defiles.
- (6) But it is not his own view, v. Tosaf.supra 15b s.v. 'וּמִי' ר'.
- (7) V. p. 71. n. 3.
- (8) Lev. XI. 33.
- (9) For the sherez (creeping thing) is a 'father' of uncleanness; hence it renders the vessel a derivative or a 'first' degree, and that in turn makes the food in it a second, and since the verse teaches that it defiles others, without specifying terumah, it follows that this makes a third even in respect of hullin.
- (10) In respect of liquids.
- (11) Ibid. 34.
- (12) But not liquids. Consequently they only mention eatables in their ruling, but not liquids.
- (13) V. infra. Hence an unclean liquid can defile an eatable, but not another liquid.
- (14) V. infra 13b.
- (15) Sc. the second 'shall be unclean' — why then does R. Jose rule that it is clean in respect of vessels?
- (16) As shown infra.
- (17) Lit., 'come'.
- (18) Lit., 'when do they not.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 18b

Are they not [rather] inferred a minori: if liquids which are unclean through a utensil defile, how much the more liquids which are unclean through a sherez! [Then] it is sufficient that that which is deduced by [this] argument shall be as its premise.¹

How does he interpret 'shall be unclean' of the first part? — 'All food therein which may be eaten, that on which water cometh [yitma] shall be unclean': 'it shall defile [yetamme]' in respect of defiling liquids. You say, to defile liquids; yet perhaps it is not so, but rather to defile utensils? You can answer, it follows, a minori: if a liquid, which defiles an eatable, cannot defile a utensil; then an eatable, which cannot defile an eatable, surely cannot defile a utensil! Hence how do I interpret.² 'shall be unclean'? That it defiles liquids, which are ready to contract uncleanness. Why particularly apply it to liquids, because they are ready to contract uncleanness? Deduce it from the fact that there is nothing else [left]?³ — This is what he means: And should you argue, an eatable is more stringent [than liquid], since it defiles liquids.⁴ [and therefore] let it defile utensils [too]; [hence we are told that] that⁵ is a [greater] stringency of liquids, because liquids are ready to contract uncleanness. And what is their readiness? Because they contract uncleanness without being made fit.⁶

'[It] shall be unclean,' [teaching] that it cannot render something similar to itself [unclean]!⁷ — But is it deduced from here? Surely it is deduced from elsewhere, [viz.,] But if water be put upon the seed, and aught of their carcass fall thereon, it is unclean unto you:⁸ it is unclean, but it cannot create a similar uncleanness?⁹ — One treats of liquids unclean¹⁰ through a sherez, and the other treats of liquids unclean through a utensil; and [both] are necessary. For if we were informed [this] of liquid which is unclean through a utensil, [I would say,] that is because it is not stringent; but in the case of liquid unclean through a sherez, which is stringent, I might argue that it creates uncleanness similar to its own. Then let us be told [this] about liquid defiled by a sherez, and how much the more liquid unclean through a utensil? — That which may be inferred a minori, Scripture takes the trouble of writing it [explicitly].

Rabina said to R. Ashi: But Raba said, R. Jose does not agree with R. Akiba, nor does R. Akiba agree with R. Jose?¹¹ — Said he to him: R. Jose stated it in accordance with the opinion of R. Akiba his teacher, but he himself does not hold thus.¹²

R. Ashi said to R. Kahana: As for R. Jose not agreeing with R. Akiba, that is well, for it was taught: R. Jose said: How do we know that a fourth degree in the case of sacred food is unfit? Now this follows a minori: if he who lacks atonement,¹³ though permitted to partake of terumah, is unfit in respect of sacred food, then¹⁴ a third, which is unfit in the case of terumah,¹⁵ is it not logical that it makes a fourth in sacred food! And we learn a third in the case of sacred food from Scripture, and a fourth a minori.¹⁶ ‘A third from Scripture’, for it is written, And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing

(1) Not stricter. Scripture does not state that water defiled by a sherez, can contaminate something else, but it is merely deduced, as shown in the text.

(2) Lit., ‘fulfil’.

(3) Everything else having been excluded.

(4) Which a liquid cannot do.

(5) The exposition of the verse to the effect that eatables defile liquid.

(6) For uncleanness, in contrast to eatables, which may become unclean only after moisture has fallen upon them.

(7) As Rabina, deduces from the verse itself.

(8) Lev. XI. 38.

(9) I.e., it cannot make something like itself unclean, which is the actual reading supra 14a.

(10) Lit., ‘which come’.

(11) Infra. Thus R. Jose holds that liquid can defile other liquid, and he must interpret Lev. XI, 33 accordingly. Now the eatable or liquid is a second (v. p. 81, n. 5), and on this interpretation it makes a third: thus there is a ‘third’ in the case of hullin.

(12) Viz., the interpretation of yitma, ‘it shall be unclean,’ as yetamme, ‘it shall defile’. Since R. Jose himself rejects this exegesis, there is nothing to teach that a second renders a third in the case of hullin.

(13) I.e., one who after performing tebillah (q.v. Glos) must bring an offering before he may partake of the flesh of sacrifices; viz., a zab and a zabah (v. Glos.). a woman after confinement and a leper.

(14) These facts are learned in Yeb. 74b from Scripture.

(15) I.e., if something unclean in the second degree touches terumah it renders it unfit, the terumah now being called a third; v. Sot. 29a.

(16) This is added in order to answer the possible objection that what is deduced a minori cannot be more stringent than its premise, and since sacred food is thus deduced from terumah, it cannot go beyond a third, just as in the case of terumah. Hence it is pointed out that a third in the case of sacred food does not require an argument a minori, for that follows directly from Scripture; hence the deduction a minori must refer to a fourth, as otherwise it teaches nothing, and it is stated in B.K. 25a that in such a case we abandon the principle that what is deduced a minori does not go beyond its premise.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 19a

shall not be eaten:¹ do we not treat even [of a case] where it touched a second?² ‘While a fourth [is learned] ‘a minori, as we have stated. Now, if you should think that he holds as R. Akiba, let him also state a fourth in the case of terumah and a fifth in the case of sacred food.³ But how do we know that R. Akiba does not agree with R. Jose?⁴ — Said he to him, Because a Tanna could not completely refrain from teaching [that there is] a fourth in the case of terumah and a fifth in the case of sacred food, and we would say that it agrees with R. Akiba.⁵ And shall we arise and rely upon this?⁶ [Thereupon] R. Ashi — others say, R. Kahana — went out, searched, and found the following which we learned: A utensil unites its contents in the case of sacred food,⁷ but not in the case of terumah, and a fourth degree is unfit in the case of sacred food, but not in the case of terumah —

Whereon R. Hiyya b. Abba said in R. Johanan's name: This Mishnah was learned as a result of R. Akiba's testimony. For we learned, R. Akiba added⁸ the fine meal, incense, frankincense, and the burning coals, that if a tebul yom touches part thereof he renders all unfit.⁹ Thus there is a fourth [in sacred food], but not a fifth; a third [in the case of terumah]. but not a fourth.¹⁰

This proves that he holds that [the power of] uniting is Rabbinical.¹¹ Now he differs from R. Hanin who maintained: [The power of] uniting is Biblical, for it is said, one golden pan of ten shekels, full of incense:¹² the Writ rendered everything in the pan one.

We learned elsewhere: [He testified] concerning an [unclean] needle which is found in the flesh [of a sacrifice], that the knife¹³ and the hands¹⁴ are clean, while the flesh is unclean; if found in the excrements,¹⁵ it is all clean — R. Akiba said: We have been favoured in that there is no uncleanness of the hands in the Temple.¹⁶

(1) Lev. VII, 19.

(2) For a 'second' is called unclean; thus Scripture intimates that a second makes a third in sacred food.

(3) For if he holds that there is a third in the case of hullin, he can deduce these a minori. Thus: if a tebul yom (v. Glos.), though permitted to eat hullin, is unfit to eat terumah, then surely a third, which is unfit in the case of hullin, creates a fourth in the case of terumah. And we cannot defile this by the principle that it is sufficient for what is learned a minori to be like its premise, for in that case the deduction is superfluous, for a third in the case of terumah is learned direct from Scripture from the same source whence we learn a third in the case of hullin (v. supra 18a). Hence the deduction a minori must be in respect of a fourth, while a fifth would then follow on the same lines from one who lacks atonement.

(4) In the validity of this argument.

(5) For R. Akiba must hold thus if he

(6) This is merely a negative argument?

(7) If two pieces of sacred food are lying in a vessel, not touching each other, and an unclean object touches one piece, the other is defiled too, because the vessel makes them, both as one.

(8) In his testimony on 'that day', v. p. 71, n. 3.

(9) This must be because the vessel which contains them makes the various particles one, and not just because they touch each other, for in that case we would have to go in order to render all the particles unfit even beyond a fifth. V. 'Ed., Sonc. ed. p. 47 notes.

(10) Thus we have a positive proof that R. Akiba does not hold that there are a fourth and a fifth in the case of terumah and sacred food respectively.

(11) Since R. Johanan states that this Mishnah was taught as a result of R. Akiba's testimony, referring as it does to frankincense and live coals, is only Rabbinical, for they are subject to defilement only by Rabbinical, not by Scriptural law (Rashi). Tosaf. offers another explanation.

(12) Num. VII, 14.

(13) Wherewith the animal was slaughtered.

(14) Of the priest who touched the animal.

(15) Inside the animal.

(16) The uncleanness of the hands in general is only Rabbinical, and R. Akiba maintains that this enactment never applied to the

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 19b

accepts R. Jose's argument. Surely then in the whole of the Talmud this view would have found expression somewhere! Then let him say, There is no uncleanness of the hands or of utensils in the Temple?¹ — Said Rab Judah in Rab's name, — others state, R. Jose son of R. Hanina: Hands were taught before the enactment concerning utensils.² Raba asked: Surely both were enacted on that self-same day, for we learned: [The following render terumah unfit . . .] a Book,³ the hands,⁴ a tebul yom, and eatables or utensils which were defiled by a liquid?⁵ No, said Raba: Leave the uncleanness of the knife, for even in the case of hullin it would not be unclean. [For] what did this knife touch

[that it should be unclean]: shall we say that it touched the flesh, — Surely food cannot defile utensils; and if it touched the needle, — surely one utensil cannot defile another utensil.⁶

What is the condition of this needle?⁷ Shall we say that it is a doubtful needle?⁸ Surely it was stated, R. Eleazar and R. Jose son of R. Hanina, — one said, They did not decree [uncleanness] for doubtful saliva in Jerusalem;⁹ while the other said: They did not decree [uncleanness] for doubtful utensils in Jerusalem?¹⁰ Said Rab Judah in Rab's name: E.g., if one lost a needle [unclean through] a person defiled by the dead,¹¹ and he recognized it in Temple, and this is all to the good, as sacrifices are thereby saved from defilement. the flesh. R. Jose son of R. Abin said: E.g.. if the cow was muzzled and came from without Jerusalem.¹²

The [above] text [states]: 'R. Eleazar and R. Jose son of R. Hanina, — one said: They did not decree [uncleanness] for doubtful saliva in Jerusalem; while the other said: They did not decree [uncleanness] for doubtful utensils in Jerusalem.' [But] we have learned [about] saliva, [and] we have learned [about] utensils?¹³ We have learned [about] saliva, for we learned: All saliva found in Jerusalem is clean, save that of the upper market!¹⁴ — It is necessary only [to state] that [this is so] even though a zab was known [to have passed there].¹⁵ 'We have learned [about] utensils,' for we learned: 'All utensils which are found in Jerusalem on the way of the descent to the ritual bath-house are unclean',¹⁶ hence those [found] elsewhere are clean! — Then according to your reasoning, consider the second clause: — [those found] on the way of the ascent [from the bath] are clean', hence those [found] anywhere else are unclean?¹⁷ Rather, the first clause is exact, whereas the second is not exact,¹⁸ and it is to exclude the narrow paths.¹⁹ Now according to Rab who said, 'E.g..if one lost a needle [unclean through] a person defiled by the dead, and he recognized it in the flesh? — [But] surely since a Master said, The [verse] 'one slain by the sword' [teaches that] the sword is as the slain,²⁰ let it defile human beings and utensils too?²¹ — Said R. Ashi: This proves that the Temple Court ranks as public ground; so that it is a doubt of uncleanness²² in public ground, and every doubt of uncleanness in public ground, the doubt is clean. But in private ground,²³ its doubt is clean?²⁴ Consider: this needle is an object which has no understanding to be questioned, and everything which has no understanding to be questioned, both in public and in private ground, its doubt is clean?²⁵ — Because it is a doubt of uncleanness which arises through a person,²⁶ and R. Johanan said: A doubt of uncleanness which arises through a person,

(1) I.e., where the uncleanness is Rabbinical only. For we see that the knife too is clean, though if this happened without the Temple it would be unclean by Rabbinical enactment, v. infra.

(2) The enactment that hands are unclean preceded the other; and when this testimony was given, the latter was not yet in existence at all.

(3) Any of the Books of the Bible.

(4) Before washing.

(5) And all these were of the 'eighteen measures' enacted in the upper chambers of Hananiah b. Hezekiah of Garon, v. Shab. 13b.

(6) Unless the former is a 'father' of uncleanness (v. p. 62, n. 2). These hold good even by Rabbinical law, which enacted only that a liquid defiles utensils.

(7) That the flesh is unclean.

(8) I.e., we do not know whether it is clean or not.

(9) If saliva is found and we do not know whose it is, though it might be that of a zab or a zabah, which by Scriptural law is a 'father' of uncleanness and defiles human beings and utensils.

(10) Which includes a needle.

(11) I.e., the needle had been defiled by him. The person is a 'father' of uncleanness, and the needle is likewise, because metal in such a case has the same degree of uncleanness as that which defiles it; v. supra 14b top. V. however, infra.

(12) Hence it must have swallowed it outside, where a doubtfully unclean utensil is unclean, and it remains so even when it enters Jerusalem.

(13) What do they add?

(14) Which was specially frequented by the unclean, to avoid defiling others, v. Shek. VIII, 1.

(15) Where the saliva was found. Even then it is clean, and we would not have known this from the Mishnah.

(16) One went down by one road and left by another. Hence it is assumed that those found there were being taken for a ritual bath and dropped on the way. V. Shek. VIII, 2.

(17) Which is in contradiction to the inference from the first clause?

(18) I.e., not to be taken in the sense that only these are clean. And this fact follows from the statement of R. Eleazar or R. Jose b. R. Hanina, without which we might have assumed the reverse.

(19) In the vicinity of the two main roads. These were used indifferently for both descent and ascent, hence utensils found there were declared unclean, since they were certainly unclean in the first place, and our only doubt is whether they were lost on the way to the baths or on the way from the baths. But utensils found in the rest of Jerusalem, where it is not known whether they have been unclean at all, are clean.

(20) V. supra 14b top.

(21) Sc. the priest and the knife.

(22) It is doubtful whether the priest or knife have touched the needle.

(23) I.e., if the Temple Court ranked as private ground.

(24) And the priest and knife would be unclean.

(25) v. Sot. 28b.

(26) A man has been engaged about this animal, and if the knife had touched the needle it would have been through him.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 20a

we inquire about it,¹ even in the case of a utensil lying on the ground, just as though it were an object which has the understanding to be questioned.

‘While the flesh is unclean’ — By what was this flesh made fit?² Shall we say that it was made fit by the blood? — surely R. Hiyya b. Abba said in R. Johanan's name: How do we know that the blood of sacrifices does not make [anything] fit [to be defiled]? Because it is said, thou shalt pour it out [sc. the blood] upon the earth as water:³ blood which is poured out as water renders fit; blood which is not poured out as water does not render fit.⁴ Again, if it was made fit by the liquids of the slaughter-house,⁵ — surely R. Jose b. R. Hanina said: The liquids of the [Temple] slaughterhouse, not enough that they are clean, but they cannot even make [eatables] fit? Again, if it was made fit through the prizing of sacred objects.⁶ — say that the prizing of sacred objects is efficacious in rendering that itself unfit, is it also [sufficient] that first and second degree should be counted therein?⁷ [In that case] you may solve what Resh Lakish asked: The dry portion of meal-offerings,⁸ do we count first and second degrees therein or not?⁹ — Said Rab Judah in Samuel's name: E.g..if it was an animal for a peace-offering and it was led through a river and then slaughtered, and the water is still dripping upon it.¹⁰

‘If found in the excrements, it is all clean.’ But let the excrements defile the flesh in their turn?¹¹ Said R. Adda b. Ahabah: It refers to thick [solid] excrements.¹² R. Ashi said: You may even say that it refers to loose [fluidlike] excrements, [its non-defilement being] because it is a noisome liquid.¹³

A tanna recited before R. Shesheth: A sherez defiles liquids, and the liquids defile a utensil, and the utensil defiles eatables, and the eatables defile liquids,¹⁴ and [thus] we learn three [stages of] uncleanness in the case of a sherez. But there are four? — Delete liquids in the first clause, on the contrary, delete liquids in the last clause? — We find no other Tanna who maintains [that] liquids defile utensils save R. Judah, and he retracted.¹⁵ And your sign [for remembering the order] is the brewing process.¹⁶

We learned elsewhere: If a creeping thing is found in an oven, the bread therein is a second, because the oven is a first.¹⁷ R. Adda b. Ahabah said to Raba: Let us regard this oven as though it were fined with uncleanness,¹⁸ and let the bread be a first? — Said he to him, You cannot think so, for it was taught: You might think that all utensils become unclean through the air space of an [unclean] earthen vessel:

- (1) Rashi: its owners must consult Rabbinic authority about it — I.e., It is not automatically clean.
- (2) To contract defilement. A foodstuff is subject to defilement only after moisture has fallen upon it.
- (3) Deut. XII, 24.
- (4) V. Supra 16a and b for notes.
- (5) E.g., the water with which it was washed down.
- (6) Sacred objects were prized so highly that they were fit to become unclean even without a liquid having been upon them.
- (7) For 'the flesh is unclean' implies that it can defile other flesh too (v. p. 62, n. 2).
- (8) That which has not been touched by oil.
- (9) But if the prizing of sacred objects is so efficacious, obviously we do.
- (10) That water makes it fit to contract uncleanness. — The animal was led through the water immediately prior to its slaughter in order to facilitate flaying, v. Bez. 40a.
- (11) Lit., 'go back'. It is assumed that the excrements rank as a fluid, since the animal was watered immediately before slaughter (v. Bez. 40a). The needle should therefore defile the excrements, and that in turn should defile the flesh.
- (12) This is not a liquid.
- (13) V. Supra 18a.
- (14) I.e., each in turn defiles the other.
- (15) Hence if we retain liquids in the first clause, there is no authority for the second clause, 'and liquids defile a utensil'. By deleting it, however, the reading becomes: a sherez, defiles utensils.
- (16) First there is the vessel; an eatable (sc. dates) is put therein, whence the liquid (sc. beer) is manufactured.
- (17) The sherez touches the oven, which in turn touches the bread, Kelim VIII, 5.
- (18) For immediately the sherez, enters the air space of the oven, even before it

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 20b

therefore it is stated, whatsoever is it, it shall be unclean, and in proximity thereto, all food therein which 'may be eaten':¹ food becomes unclean through the air space of an [unclean] earthen vessel, but no utensils become unclean through the air space of an [unclean] earthen vessel.²

R. Hisda opposed two teachings of Passover, and reconciled [them]. Did R. Joshua say, Both of them [may be burnt] together?³ But the following contradicts it: R. Jose said [to R. Meir]: The conclusion is not similar to the premise. For when our Masters testified, concerning what did they testify? If concerning flesh which was defiled through a derivative uncleanness, that we burn it together with flesh which was defiled through a father of uncleanness, [then] this is unclean and that is unclean. If concerning oil which was rendered unfit by a tebul yom, that it is lit in a lamp which was defiled by one unclean through a corpse, — one is unfit and the other is unclean. So too do we admit in the case of terumah which was defiled through a derivative uncleanness, that we may burn it together with terumah which was defiled through a 'father' of uncleanness. But how can we burn even that which is doubtful together with that which is unclean: perhaps Elijah will come and declare it clean!⁴ And he answered: one⁵ agrees with R. Simeon, and in accordance with R. Joshua, while the other agrees with R. Jose, and in accordance with R. Joshua.⁶ For it was taught: If the fourteenth falls on the Sabbath, everything [sc. leaven] must be removed before the Sabbath, and terumoth, unclean, doubtful, and clean are burnt [together]: this is R. Meir's view. R. Jose said: The clean [terumah must be burnt] separately, the actually touches it, it defiles; hence one should regard the sherez as though completely filling it. doubtful [terumah] separately, and the unclean separately. Said R. Simeon: R. Eliezer and R. Joshua did not differ concerning clean and unclean, that they must not be burnt [together], and concerning doubtful [terumah] and clean [terumah] that they may be burnt [together]. Concerning what did they differ? Concerning doubtful [terumah] and unclean [terumah], R. Eliezer maintaining: This must be burnt separately, and this separately; while R. Joshua ruled: Both of them, [may be burnt] together. But our Mishnah is according to R. Jose?⁷ — R. Jose says thus to R. Meir: Even R. Simeon, who in stating R. Joshua's opinion is lenient, is lenient only in respect of doubtful [terumah] and unclean [terumah]. but not in the case of clean and unclean.

R. Jose son of R. Hanina opposed terumah to Passover, and reconciled them. Did then R. Joshua say. Both together: But the following contradicts it: A cask of terumah wherein a doubt of uncleanness is born, R. Eliezer said: If lying in an exposed place, it must be laid in a hidden place; and if it was uncovered, it must be covered. R. Joshua said: If it is lying in a hidden place, one may lay it in an exposed place, and if it is covered, it may be uncovered.⁸ Thus only an indirect action [is permitted], but not [defiling] with [one's own] hands?⁹ — And he answered: one agrees with R. Simeon and according to R. Joshua's view, while the other agrees with R. Jose and according to R. Joshua's view.¹⁰ R. Eleazar opposed two teachings of terumah and reconciled them. Did R. Joshua say, only an indirect action [is permitted], but not with [one's own] hands? But the following contradicts it: If a cask of [wine of clean] terumah is broken in the upper vat, while [in] the lower there is unclean hullin: R. Eliezer and R. Joshua agree that if a rebi'ith thereof can be saved in purity, one must save it. But if not, — R. Eliezer ruled: Let it descend and be defiled, yet let him not defile it with [his own] hands; R. Joshua said: He may even defile it with his own hands? — And he answered: There it is different, because there is the loss of hullin. To this Raba demurred: In our Mishnah too there is the loss of wood? — Said Abaye to him: They cared about a substantial loss, but not about a slight loss.¹¹ And whence do you know that they cared about a substantial loss but not about a slight one? Because it was taught: If a cask of oil of [clean] terumah was broken in the upper vat, while in the lower is unclean hullin: R. Eliezer concedes to R. Joshua that if a rebi'ith thereof can be saved in purity, one must save it. But if not, let it descend and be defiled, yet let him not defile it with [his own] hands.¹² Why is oil different: because it is fit for lighting? Then wine too is fit for sprinkling?¹³ And should you answer, sprinkling is of no account, — surely, Samuel said in R. Hiyya's name: You drink [wine] at a sela' per log, whereas you sprinkle [with wine] at two sela's per log?¹⁴ — It refers to new [wine].¹⁵ But it is fit for ageing? — one will come to a stumbling-block through it.¹⁶ Then oil too, one will come to a stumbling-block through it? — He pours it into a dirty¹⁷ vessel.¹⁸ Wine too can be poured into a dirty vessel? — Seeing that it is required for sprinkling, will he pour it into a dirty vessel!

Now a stumbling-block itself is dependent on Tannaim.¹⁹ For it was taught: A cask of wine of terumah which was defiled, — Beth Shammai maintain: It must be poured out all at once; while Beth Hillel rule: It may be used for sprinkling. R. Ishmael son of R. Jose said: I will make a compromise. [If it is] in the field, it must be poured out all at once;²⁰ in the house, it can be used for sprinkling. Others state: In the case of new [wine], it must be poured out all at once; in the case of old, it can be used for sprinkling. Said they to him:

(1) Lev. XI. 33f.

(2) But if the sherez, were regarded as completely filling the oven, utensils therein too should be unclean, for direct contact therewith does defile them.

(3) Sc. unclean terumah and doubtful terumah.

(4) V. supra p. 15a for notes.

(5) Our Mishnah.

(6) I.e., R. Simeon and R. Jose differ on R. Joshua's opinion.

(7) How then can it be said to represent the view of R. Simeon?

(8) V. supra 15a for notes.

(9) Though it is doubtful.

(10) Who says, how can we burn even doubtful terumah together with unclean terumah? Thus he will certainly not permit more than indirect action.

(11) V. supra 15a and b for notes.

(12) All agree on this, because the loss of hullin is only slight, since the defiled terumah can be used for lighting.

(13) In a room, for its aroma. Hence here too there is only a slight loss.

(14) Thus it is even more important.

(15) Which lacks aroma.

(16) While it is ageing he may forget that it is unclean and drink it.

(17) Lit., 'repulsive'.

(18) So that it will not be fit for drinking.

(19) I.e., whether we fear it or not.

(20) Because there is no sprinkling in the field, nor may he bring it home, lest it become a stumbling-block in the meanwhile.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 21a

The compromise of a third [view] is not a compromise.¹ R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: The controversy² is where it falls into less than one hundred se'ahs of unclean hullin;³ but if it falls into one hundred [se'ahs] unclean hullin, all agree that it must descend and be defiled, and he must not defile it with [his own] hands.⁴ It was taught likewise: If a cask [of clean terumah] was broken in the upper vat, and beneath it there is one hundred [times as much] unclean hullin. R. Eliezer concedes to R. Joshua that if he can save a rebi'ith thereof in purity he must save it, but if not, let it descend and be defiled, but he must not defile it with [his own] hands. [But instead of] this [phrase]. 'R. Eliezer concedes to R. Joshua'. 'R. Joshua concedes to R. Eliezer' is required?⁵ — Said Raba: Reverse it. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: After all you need not reverse it: what case do we discuss here? That of a vessel, the inside is clean while its outside⁶ is unclean; you might say, Let us enact a preventive measure lest its outside touch the terumah. Therefore he informs us [otherwise].⁷

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. THE WHOLE TIME THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EAT [LEAVEN], ONE MAY FEED IT TO CATTLE, BEASTS,⁸ AND BIRDS, AND HE MAY SELL IT TO A GENTILE, AND BENEFIT THEREOF IS PERMITTED. WHEN ITS PERIOD HAS PASSED, BENEFIT THEREOF IS FORBIDDEN, AND HE MAY NOT FIRE AN OVEN OR A POT RANGE WITH IT. R. JUDAH SAID: THERE IS NO REMOVAL OF LEAVEN SAVE BY BURNING; BUT THE SAGES MAINTAIN: HE ALSO⁹ CRUMBLES AND THROWS IT TO THE WIND OR CASTS IT INTO THE SEA.

GEMARA. THE WHOLE TIME THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EAT [LEAVEN] ONE MAY FEED etc. Hence the whole time that one is not permitted to eat it, he may not feed [cattle. etc., therewith]: shall we say that our Mishnah is not according to R. Judah; for if R. Judah, surely there is the fifth hour when he may not eat, yet he may feed. For we learned: R. Meir said: One may eat [leaven] the whole of the five [hours] and must burn [it] at the beginning of the sixth. R. Judah said: One may eat the whole of the four [hours], keep it in suspense the whole of the fifth, and must burn it at the beginning of the sixth!¹⁰ — What then? It is R. Meir! [Then instead of] this [Phrase]. 'THE WHOLE TIME THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EAT, ONE MAY FEED,' THE WHOLE TIME THAT ONE eats, he MAY FEED is required?¹¹ — Said Rabbah b. 'Ulla: Our Mishnah agrees with R. Gamaliel, For we learned: R. Gamaliel said: Hullin may be eaten the whole of the four [hours] and terumah the whole of the five, and we burn [them] at the beginning of the sixth. And this is what he [the Tanna] states: THE WHOLE TIME THAT IT IS PERMITTED to a priest to eat terumah, a [lay] Israelite MAY FEED HIS CATTLE, BEASTS AND BIRDS with HULLIN.

For what purpose does he state, CATTLE and for what purpose does he state BEASTS? They are necessary: for if he stated CATTLE, [I might say.] that is because if they leave over it is fit for them;¹² but [as for] BEASTS, which if they leave over hide it,¹³ I would say [that it is] not [so]. While if he stated BEASTS, [I might say]. that is because if they leave over they at least hide it;¹⁴ but as for cattle, sometimes they leave over and he [the owner] may not think about it,¹⁵ and so transgress¹⁶ 'it shall not be seen and 'it shall not be found' on its account, [and therefore] I might say [that it is] not [so]: thus they [both] are necessary. What is the purpose of BIRDS? — Because he states CATTLE and BEASTS, he also states BIRDS.

AND HE MAY SELL IT TO A GENTILE. That is obvious?¹⁷ It is to reject [the view of] this Tanna. For it was taught: Beth Shammai maintain: A man must not sell his leaven to a Gentile, unless he knows thereof that it will be consumed before Passover; but Beth Hillel say: As long as he [the Jew] may eat it, he may sell it.

(1) Since Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel mention nothing about a house or a field, new or old, this is not a compromise but an independent view altogether; cf. supra 13a, p. 57, n. 5.

(2) Between R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

(3) The terumah in the upper vat being a se'ah. If terumah falls into one hundred times as much hullin it is nullified and permitted to a lay Israelite; if less, it is not nullified.

(4) Since it will still be fit for a lay Israelite.

(5) It is R. Eliezer who holds that he must never defile deliberately, while it is R. Joshua who permits deliberate defilement in other circumstances (v. supra 20b).

(6) Lit., 'back'.

(7) Thus 'R. Eliezer concedes to R. Joshua' applies not to the second clause but to the first, where it is stated that if he can save a rebi'ith in purity he must do so. Thereupon we are told that even if the outside of the vessel in which it is to be saved is unclean, so that there is the slight possibility of the terumah falling thereon and becoming contaminated, yet R. Eliezer, who rules that in no circumstances is deliberate defilement permitted, admits that he may use this for saving the terumah. If unclean liquid falls on the outside of a vessel it contaminates the outside, but not the inside, since the uncleanness of a vessel through liquids is by Rabbinical law only.

(8) Behemah refers to domesticated animals; hayyah to wild or semi-wild animals.

(9) 'Also' is absent in Alfasi and Asheri.

(10) 'Keeping it in suspense' means that animals may be fed with it, but it may not be eaten.

(11) The impersonal form used in the Mishnah implies that as long as one person may eat, another may feed his cattle.

(12) Later; they leave it on the ground and eat it later.

(13) With the result that the leaven may remain in his possession during Passover.

(14) So that it is not seen.

(15) To annul it before Passover, thinking it was already eaten.

(16) Lit., stands'.

(17) Surely this is no worse than any other benefit.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 21b

R. Judah B. Bathyra said: Kutah¹ and all kinds of kutah² may not be sold thirty days before Passover.³ AND BENEFIT THEREOF IS PERMITTED. That is obvious?⁴ It is necessary [to teach it] only where he charred it [in the fire] before its time,⁵ and he [the Tanna] informs us [that the law is] as Rabbah. For Rabbah said: If he charred it [in the fire] before its time, benefit [thereof] is permitted even after its time.⁶

WHEN ITS PERIOD HAS PASSED, BENEFIT THEREOF IS FORBIDDEN. That is obvious? — It is necessary [to state this] only in respect of the hours [when leaven is interdicted] by Rabbinical law.⁷ For R. Gidal said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph in R. Johanan's name: He who betroths from the sixth hour and onwards, even with wheat of Cordyene. We have no fear of his betrothal.⁸

AND HE MAY NOT FIRE AN OVEN OR A POT-RANGE WITH IT. That is obvious? — This is necessary only according to R. Judah, who maintained: There is no removal of leaven save by burning. You might argue, since R. Judah said, Its precept demands burning, then while he is burning it let him benefit from it. Hence we are informed [that it is not so].

Hezekiah said: How do we know that leaven during Passover is forbidden for [general] use?⁹ Because it is said, there shall no leavened bread be eaten:¹⁰ [meaning,] there shall not be in it permission [i.e.. the right] of eating.¹¹ [Thus] the reason is because the Divine Law wrote, ‘there shall no leavened bread be eaten’; but if ‘shall not be eaten’ were not written, I would say, prohibition of eating is implied, [but] prohibition of benefit is not implied. Now he differs from R. Abbahu, for R. Abbahu said: Wherever it is said, ‘It shall not be eaten,’ ‘that shalt not eat,’ ‘ye shalt not eat,’ the prohibitions of both eating and benefit [in general] are understood, unless the Writ expressly states [otherwise], as it does in the case of nebelah.¹² For it was taught: Ye shall not eat of [nebelah] anything that dieth of itself: thou mayest give it unto the stranger [ger] that is within thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto a foreigner:¹³ know only that it may be ‘given’ to a stranger¹⁴ or ‘sold’ to a foreigner [heathen]; how do I know [that] selling to a stranger [ger] [is permitted]? Therefore it is stated, ‘thou mayest give it unto the stranger [ger] that is within thy gates ... ‘or sell.’¹⁵ How do we know [that] giving to a foreigner [is permitted]? Because it is stated, ‘thou mayest give it, that he may eat it, or thou mayest sell it unto a foreigner’,¹⁶ thus the result is¹⁷ that [to] a stranger [ger] and a foreigner [heathen] alike, both selling and giving [are permitted]: this is R. Meir's view. R. Judah said: The words are as they are written, [viz..] to a ger it must be given and to a heathen it must be sold. What is R. Judah's reason? If you should think as R. Meir says, let the Divine Law write, thou mayest give it unto the stranger [ger] that is within thy gates, that he may eat it, and thou mayest sell it: why state ‘or’? Infer from this that the words are as they are written. And R. Meir?¹⁸ — ‘Or’ is to show that giving to a ger takes precedence over selling to a heathen. And R. Judah?— No verse is required for this: since you are commanded to maintain a ger, but you are not commanded to maintain a heathen,¹⁹ a verse is not required, [for] it stands to reason.

On the view of R. Meir who maintained, [to] a ger and a heathen alike, both selling and giving are permitted, it is well: since a verse is required to permit benefit from a nebelah, it follows that all other things forbidden in the Torah are forbidden in respect of both eating and [general] benefit. But according to R. Judah, who maintained, it comes from [the purpose of teaching that] the words are as they are written, whence does he know that all [other] things forbidden in the Torah are forbidden in respect of benefit? He deduces it from, [ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field;] ye shall cast it to the dogs:²⁰

'it' you may cast to dogs, but you may not cast to dogs all [other] things forbidden in the Torah.¹ And R. Meir?² — [He interprets:] 'it' you may cast to dogs, but you may not cast to dogs hullin killed in the Temple Court.³ And the other?⁴ — [Benefit from]⁵ hullin killed in the Temple Court is not [forbidden] by Scriptural law. R. Isaac of Nappaha⁶ objected: But what of the nervus ischiadicus, though the Divine Law saith, Therefore the children of Israel eat not the sinew of the thigh-vein,⁷ yet we learned: A man may send the thigh [of an animal] to a heathen with the nervus ischiadicus in it, because its place is distinguishable!⁸ — R. Abbahu holds, when nebelah was permitted [by the Torah], it, its forbidden fat, and its thigh sinew were permitted.⁹ This is well on the view that the sinews possess the power of imparting a taste.¹⁰ But on the view that the sinews possess no power of imparting a taste,¹¹ what can be said? — Whom do you know to maintain [that] the sinews have no power to communicate taste? R. Simeon. For it was taught: He who eats of the thigh sinew of an unclean animal, — R. Judah declares him liable on two [accounts],¹² while R. Simeon holds him non-culpable.¹³ [According to] R. Simeon, It is indeed forbidden for use too. For it was taught: The thigh sinew is permitted for use; this is R. Judah's view; but R. Simeon forbids it.

But what of blood, of which the Divine Law saith, No soul of you shall eat blood,¹⁴ yet we learned, Both these and those¹⁵ mingled in the duct and passed out to the brook of Kidron,¹⁶ and they were sold to gardeners as fertilizers, and trespass is committed in respect of them?¹⁷ — Blood is different, because it is likened to water, for it is written, Thou shalt not eat it, thou shalt pour it out upon the earth as water:¹⁸ just as water is permitted, so is blood permitted. Yet say, like water poured out as libations upon the altar?¹⁹ — Said R. Abbahu: 'as water' [means] like most water. Is then 'most water' written? — Rather, said R. Ashi: 'as water' which is poured out,²⁰ but not as water offered as a libation. Yet say, like water which is poured out in idol worship?²¹ — There too it is designated a libation, as it is written, They drink the wine of their drink offering [libation].²²

(1) I.e., you may not derive any benefit from them.

(2) What is the purpose of 'it', which expresses a limitation, seeing that he learns this from nebelah?

(3) This may not be eaten, and R. Meir deduces here that all benefit is forbidden, v. Kid. 57b.

(4) R. Judah: how does he know this?

(5) So Rashi, v. however Tosaf. s.v. הוֹלֵךְ

(6) Or, the smith. Many Rabbis were workers or tradesmen.

(7) Gen. XXXII, 33.

(8) The Jew need not remove the nervus ischiadicus before sending it, for fear that another Jew, seeing that the heathen had received it from a Jew, may think that the nerve has been removed and that it is all permitted, because one can easily recognize whether the nervus ischiadicus has been removed or not. Giving anything to a heathen is regarded as benefit, and we thus see that the benefit of this sinew is permitted, which conflicts with R. Abbahu's statement supra 21b.

(9) Therefore benefit from all forbidden fat and all sinews is permitted.

(10) E.g., if forbidden sinews are boiled together with meat, they impart a flavour to the meat, which renders that too forbidden, unless it is sixty times as much as the sinews. On that view the sinews are as flesh, and therefore when nebelah was permitted it included the sinews.

(11) Because they are not flesh, being merely like wood, and nevertheless they are prohibited: hence they cannot be included in the permission granted for nebelah.

(12) (i) Because it is of an unclean (i.e., forbidden) animal; (ii) because the thigh sinew itself is forbidden.

(13) He is not culpable on account of the unclean animal, because he holds that there is no taste in the sinew. Nor is he liable on account of the sinew, for this involves liability only when the flesh of that animal is permitted, but not when the flesh too is forbidden.

(14) Lev. XVII, 12.

(15) The residues of the blood of the 'inner' sin-offerings, which were poured out on the western base of the outer altar, and the residues of the blood of the 'outer' sin-offerings, which were poured out on the south base of the altar. These passed out through two small holes and mingled in a duct which ran through the Temple Court.

(20) As indicated by the words 'thou shalt pour it out'.

(21) Such water too is forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 22b

Now according to Hezekiah, in respect of what law is blood likened to water?¹ — For [the law of] R. Hiyya b. Abba in R. Johanan's name. For R. Hiyya b. Abba said in R. Johanan's name: How do we know that the blood of sacrifices does not make [anything] fit [to be defiled]? Because it is said, thou shalt pour it out upon the earth as water: blood which is poured out as water renders fit; blood which is not poured out as water does not render fit.

But what of the limb of a living animal, though it is written, thou shalt not eat the life with the flesh,² yet it was taught. R. Nathan said: How do we know that a man must not hold out a cup of wine to a nazirite or the limb of a living animal to the children of Noah?³ Because it is stated, thou shalt not put a stumbling-block before the blind.⁴ This implies that [giving] to dogs is permitted?⁵ — The limb of a living animal is different, because it is assimilated to blood, as it is written, Only be steadfast in not eating the blood; for the blood is the life.⁶ Then according to Hezekiah, in respect of what law is the limb from a living animal assimilated to blood?⁷ — He can answer you: It is blood which is assimilated to the limb from a living animal:⁸ just as a limb from a living animal is forbidden,⁹ so is the blood from a living animal forbidden,¹⁰ and which [blood] is that? The blood of arteries with which life goes out.¹¹

But what of the ox that is stoned, though the Divine Law saith, its flesh shall not be eaten,¹² yet it was taught: From the implication of the verse, the ox shall be surely stoned,¹³ do I not know that it is nebelah, and nebelah is forbidden as food? Why then is it stated, 'and its flesh shall not be eaten'? The Writ informs us that if it was [ritually] slaughtered after its trial was ended,¹⁴ it is forbidden. I only know this in respect of eating; how do we know it in respect of benefit? From the verse, but the owner of the ox shall be clear. How is this implied? Simeon b. Zoma said: As a man may say to his friend, 'So-and-so has gone out clear from his property, and has no benefit whatsoever from it.' Thus the reason is that 'but the owner of the ox shall be clear' is written; for if [we deduced] from 'it shall not be eaten' [alone], that would imply a prohibition of eating, but not a prohibition of benefit?¹⁵ — In truth 'it shall not be eaten' implies a prohibition of eating and a prohibition of benefit, and as to 'but the owner of the ox shall be clear,' that is stated¹⁶ in respect of the use of its skin;¹⁷ and it is necessary: you would think that I might argue, 'his flesh shall not be eaten' is written, [thus] only his flesh [is forbidden], but not his skin; therefore we are informed [otherwise]. But according to those

Tannaim who employ this verse for a different exegesis. [viz.] for half ransom and damages for children,¹⁸ how do they know [that] the use of the hide [is forbidden]? They infer it from eth besaro [his flesh], meaning, that which is joined to its flesh.¹⁹ And the other?²⁰ — He does not interpreteth.²¹ As it was taught, Simeon Imsoni²² — others state, Nehemiah Imsoni- interpreted every eth in the Torah;²³ [but] as soon as he came to, thou shalt fear [eth] the Lord thy God,²⁴ he desisted.²⁵ Said his disciples to him, ‘Master, what is to happen with all the *ethin*²⁶ which you have interpreted?’ ‘Just as I received reward for interpreting them’, he replied, ‘so will I receive reward for retracting’.²⁷ Subsequently²⁸ R. Akiba came and taught: Thou shalt fear [eth] the Lord thy God is to include scholars.²⁹ But there is ‘orlah,³⁰ whereof the Merciful One saith, Three years shall it be forbidden unto you: it shall not be eaten;³¹ yet it was taught: ‘It shall be as forbidden unto you: it shall not be eaten’. [Thus] I only know the prohibition of eating; whence do we know that a man may not benefit from it, that he may not dye or light a lamp with it? From the verse, then ye shall count [the fruit thereof] as forbidden: [three years shall they be] as forbidden [unto you]: it shall not be eaten;³¹ which is to include all of them.³² Thus the reason is that Scripture wrote, ‘then ye shall count the fruit thereof as forbidden . . . they shall be as forbidden; but if it were not so, I would say, it implies a prohibition of eating, [but] it does not imply a prohibition of benefit? — In truth ‘it shall not be eaten’ implies both a prohibition of eating and a prohibition of benefit, but there it is different, because it is written, ‘unto you’, and thus it is necessary: I might argue, since it is written, ‘unto you,’ [that implies] it shall be yours;³³ hence we are informed [that it is not so]. Then now that these verses³⁴ are written, what is the purpose of ‘unto you’? — For what was taught: ‘unto you’: this is to include what is planted

(1) Since he holds supra 21b that only the passive form, ‘shall not be eaten’, implies a prohibition of all benefit, but not the active ‘thou shalt not eat’, benefit from blood is permitted in any case, for the prohibition is not expressed in the passive. Then what is the purpose of assimilating blood to water?

(2) Deut. XII, 23. This is interpreted as an injunction against eating a limb torn from a living animal.

(3) The technical designation for all but Jews. A nazirite must not drink wine, nor may non-Jews eat of the limb of a living animal.

(19) Interpreting ‘eth’, the sign of the acc., as an extending particle.

(20) What does ‘eth’ teach on this view?

(21) As indicating extensions or having any particular significance apart from its grammatical one.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 23a

for the public. R. Judah said: It is to exclude what is planted for the public. What is the reason of the first Tanna? Because it is written, 'and ye shall have planted;' [this] implies [a law] to the individual, but it does not imply [a law] for the public;¹ [therefore] the Merciful One wrote, 'unto you', to include what is planted for the public. While R. Judah [argues]: 'and ye shall have planted' implies [a law] both to the public and to the individual, and 'unto you' [too] implies both for the public and for the individual: thus it is an extension after an extension, and an extension after an extension has no [other significance] save to limit.²

But there is terumah, of which the Merciful One saith, There shall no common man³ eat of the holy thing:⁴ yet we learned: An 'erub may be made for a nazirite with wine, and for a [lay] Israelite with terumah?⁵ — Said R. Papa: There it is different, because Scripture saith, your heave-offering:⁶ it shall be yours. And the other?⁷ It means, 'your heave-offering,' [viz..] that of all Israel.⁸

But what of a nazirite, though the Merciful One saith, from the kernels even to the husk, he shall not eat,⁹ yet we learned: An erub may be made for a nazirite with wine? — Said Mar Zutra, There it is different, because Scripture saith, [All the days of] his naziriteship:⁹ it shall be his.¹⁰ R. Ashi said: He shall be holy, he shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow long:¹¹ his [hair] growth is holy,¹² but nothing else is holy. Is then 'and nothing else' written?¹³ But it is clearly as Mar Zutra [stated].

But what of hadash,¹⁴ where the Merciful One saith, And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor fresh ears, until this selfsame day;¹⁵ yet we learned: He may cut [the corn] for fodder and feed his cattle?¹⁶ — Said R. Shemaiah, There it is different, because Scripture saith, [ye shall bring the sheaf of the firstfruits of] your harvest.¹⁷ [implying,] it shall be yours¹⁸ And the other?¹⁹ — Your harvest' implies that of all Israel.

But what of creeping things, where the Merciful One saith, It is a detestable thing; it shall not be eaten;²⁰ yet we learned: Hunters of beasts, birds, and fish, who chance upon unclean species, are permitted to sell them to Gentiles?—There it is different, because Scripture saith, [they are a detestable thing] unto you:²¹ it shall be yours. If so, [it should be permitted] at the very outset too?²² — Here it is different, because Scripture saith, and they shall be [a detestable thing]:²³ [meaning,] they shall be in their [forbidden] state. Now according to Hezekiah, for what purpose is 'shall not be eaten' written—so that 'unto you' is adduced to teach that it is permitted; let the Merciful One not write 'shall not be eaten,' so that 'unto you' will be unnecessary? — Hezekiah can answer you: My opinion²⁴ is indeed [deduced] from this.²⁵

But what of leaven, though the Merciful One saith, there shall no leavened bread be eaten,²⁶ yet it was taught. R. Jose the Galilean said: Wonder at yourself! how can leaven be prohibited for [general] use the whole seven [days]? — There it is different, because Scripture saith, neither shall there be leaven seen unto thee:²⁷ [this implies,] it shall be thine. And the Rabbis?²⁸ — Thine own thou must not see, but thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High. And the other?²⁹ ‘unto thee’ is written twice.³⁰ And the other? — One refers to a heathen whom you have conquered, and the other refers to a heathen whom you have not conquered.³¹ And the other?³² — ‘Unto thee’ is written three times.³³ And the other? — One refers to leaven [se'or], and one refers to leavened bread [hamez]. and they are [both] necessary.³⁴

Shall we say that it³⁵ is dependent on Tannaim? [And the fat of that which dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn of beasts.] may be used for all service [: but ye shall in no wise eat of it].³⁶ Why is ‘for all service’ stated? For I might think, for the service of the Most High let it be permitted, but for secular service let it be forbidden;³⁷ therefore it is stated, ‘for all service’: this is the view of R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba said: For I might think, for secular service let it be clean, [but] for service of the Most High let it be unclean;³⁸ therefore it is stated, ‘for all service’. Now R. Jose the Galilean [holds] that in respect of uncleanness and cleanness a verse is not required, a verse being required only in respect of what is forbidden and what is permitted. While R. Akiba [maintains]: [in respect of] what is forbidden and what is permitted no verse is required, a verse being required only in respect of uncleanness and cleanness.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 23b

Surely then they differ in this, [viz.]: R. Jose the Galilean holds, 'ye shall not eat' connotes both a prohibition of eating and a prohibition of benefit, and when the verse comes to permit nebelah, it comes in respect of benefit. While R. Akiba holds: it connotes a prohibition of eating, [but] does not connote a prohibition of benefit, and for what [purpose] does the verse come? In respect of uncleanness and cleanness! No: all hold that 'ye shall not eat' connotes both a prohibition of eating and a prohibition of benefit, but here they differ in this: R. Jose the Galilean holds, when nebelah was permitted,¹ it [alone] was permitted, [whereas] its fat [heleb] and its sinew² were not permitted, and [therefore] for what purpose is the verse required? It is in respect of permission for use. But R. Akiba holds: when nebelah was permitted, its fat [heleb] and its sinew too were permitted; hence for what purpose is the verse necessary? It is in respect of uncleanness and cleanness.

Now as to R. Jose the Galilean, we have found that the Divine Law permits heleb for use; but as for the sinew, let us say that it is forbidden?—If you wish I can say that it is in fact forbidden. Alternatively, it is adduced a minori: if heleb, for which there is a penalty of kareth, is permitted for use, how much the more the sinew, for which there is no penalty of kareth. But R. Simeon, who forbids it, [argues]: This can be refuted. As for heleb, that is because It is freed from its general [prohibition] in the case of a beast;³ will you say [the same] of the sinew, which was not freed from its general [prohibition] in the case of a beast?⁴ And the other? — We are speaking of cattle⁵ [behemah]; [and] in the case of cattle at all events it [sc. heleb] was not permitted.

Consider: we have raised objections from all these verses and answered them; [then] wherein do Hezekiah and R. Abbahu differ? — In respect of leaven during Passover, on the view of the Rabbis,⁶ [and] in respect of the ox that is stoned, and this on the view of all:⁷ Hezekiah deduces it⁸ from 'shall not be eaten', while R. Abbahu learns it from nebelah.⁹ Consider: according to both Masters they are forbidden for use: [then] wherein do they [practically] differ? — They differ in respect of hullin which was slaughtered in the Temple Court:¹⁰ Hezekiah holds, 'shall not be eaten'¹¹ is to exclude these,¹² while 'it'¹³ is to exclude hullin which was slaughtered in the Temple Court.¹⁴ R. Abbahu¹⁵ holds: 'it' is to exclude these, while hullin which was slaughtered in the Temple Court is not forbidden [for use] by Scriptural law.

One of the scholars sat before R. Samuel b. Nahmani, and he sat and said in R. Joshua b. Levi's name: How do we know of all prohibitions in the Torah, that just as they are forbidden for food, so are they also forbidden for use, and which are they? Leaven [hamez] during Passover and the ox that is stoned? ([You ask,] 'How do we know'! — learn it from 'it shall not be eaten'?—To him¹⁶ 'it shall not be eaten' implies a prohibition of eating, but it does not imply a prohibition of benefit. Then let him deduce it from nebelah?¹⁷ — He agrees with R. Judah, who maintained: The words are as they are written. If he agrees with R. Judah. let him deduce it whence R. Judah deduces it, [viz.] from 'ye shall cast it to the dogs'?¹⁸ — He holds that hullin which was slaughtered in the Temple Court is [forbidden for use] by Scriptural law.¹⁹ Whence then do we know it?) — From the verse, And no sin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tent of meeting to make atonement in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt with fire.²⁰ Now, 'it shall be burnt with fire' need not be stated;²¹ then what is the purpose of 'it shall be burnt with fire'? If it is unnecessary in its own connection, seeing that it is written, and, behold, it was burnt,²² apply its teaching to all [other] prohibitions of the Torah;²³

- (23) This is a principle of Talmudic exegesis: when a statement or verse is superfluous in its own connection, it is applied to other laws.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 24a

and if it is irrelevant in respect of eating,¹ apply the matter to the prohibition of benefit.² If so, just as there [it must be destroyed] by burning, so all prohibited things of the Torah [must be destroyed] by burning? _ Scripture saith, 'in the holy place . . . it shall be burnt with fire,' [that which is forbidden] in the holy place requires burning. but all the [other] forbidden things of the Torah do not require burning, But does this [phrase,] 'in the holy place . . . it shall be burnt with fire,' come for this [teaching]? Surely it is required for R. Simeon's [dictum]! For it was taught, R. Simeon said: 'In the holy place ... it shall be burnt with fire': this teaches concerning the sin-offering³ that we burn it in the holy place.⁴ Now, I only know this alone; how do we know it of the unfit of the [other] most sacred sacrifices and the emurim⁵ of the lesser sacrifices?⁶ Thereof it is stated, in the holy place . . . it shall be burnt with fire!⁷ — Said he to him,⁸ R. Jonathan thy teacher deduced it⁹ from this verse: And if aught of the flesh of the consecration, or of the bread, remain unto the morning, then thou shalt burn the remainder with fire; it shall not be eaten, because it is holy.¹⁰ Now 'it shall not be eaten' need not be stated:¹¹ then why is 'it shall not be eaten' stated? If it is irrelevant in respect of itself, seeing that it is written, 'then thou shalt burn the remainder with fire' apply its teaching to the other interdicts of the Torah. And if it is irrelevant in respect of eating, apply its teaching to the prohibition of benefit. If so, just as here [it must be destroyed] by burning, so all the forbidden things of the Torah [must be destroyed] by burning?-Scripture saith, 'then thou shalt burn the [nothar] remainder: nothar requires burning, but all [other] forbidden things of the Torah do not require burning.

Yet does this [verse] ‘it shall not be eaten’ come for this [teaching]? Surely it is required for R. Eleazar's [dictum]! For R. Eleazar said: ‘it shall not be eaten, because it is holy’: whatever of holy [flesh. etc.] that is unfit, the Writ comes to impose a negative injunction against eating it?¹² _ Said Abaye: After all [it¹³ is deduced] from the first verse,¹⁴ but reverse [the argument]: for let Scripture write, ‘it shall be burnt with fire,’ so that ‘it shall not be eaten’ will be superfluous; why then is ‘it shall not be eaten’ written? If it is irrelevant for itself, seeing that it is deduced by R. Eleazar's [exegesis],¹⁵ apply its teaching to all [other] interdicts of the Torah. And if it is irrelevant in respect of eating, apply its teaching to the prohibition of benefit. If so, just as here [it must be destroyed] by burning, so all the forbidden things of the Torah must be destroyed] by burning? — Scripture saith, ‘the [nothar] remainder’; ‘nothar’ requires burning, — but all [other] forbidden things of the Torah do not requires burning. R. Papa said to Abaye: Yet say that it¹⁶ comes to assign a negative injunction [specifically] for itself? For if [we learn] from R. Eleazar [‘s dictum], we do not flagellate for an implied negative injunction!¹⁷ — Rather, said R. Papa: [It¹⁸ is deduced] from this: And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten: it shall be burnt with fire.¹⁹ Now, ‘shall not be eaten’ need not be stated: why then is ‘shall not be eaten’ stated? If it is irrelevant for itself, seeing that it may be deduced a minori from tithe, which is lighter, [thus:] if tithe, which is light, yet the Torah said, neither have I put away thereof, being unclean,²⁰ how much the more sacred flesh, which is more stringent! And should you say, We cannot give a warning [of flagellation] as a result of an ad majus conclusion,²¹ but this is a hekkesh,²² for it is written, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil, or the firstlings of thy herd or of thy flock, nor any of thy vows which thou vowest, nor thy freewill-offerings etc.²³ Then why is ‘shall not be eaten’ stated? If it is irrelevant in its own case, apply its teaching to all [other] prohibitions of the Torah. And since it is irrelevant in respect of eating, apply it to benefit. If so, just as here [it must be destroyed] by burning, so all the forbidden things of the Torah require burning? — Scripture saith, ‘the [nothar] remainder’: nothar requires burning. but all [other] forbidden things of the Torah do not require burning.

Rabina said to R. Ashi: Yet perhaps [it teaches that] he transgresses two negative injunctions on its account?²⁴ Did not Abaye say: if he ate putitha²⁵ he is flagellated four times;²⁶ [for] an ant, he is flagellated five times;

(1) It certainly cannot teach that, since each prohibition of eating is stated separately.

(2) For ‘it shall be burnt’ shows that all benefit is forbidden, and this has now been applied to all other prohibitions.

(3) Rendered unfit.

(4) For ‘and, behold, it was burnt’ (v. n. 6) does not teach where it must be burnt.

(5) Lit., ‘devoted objects’; those portions of the sacrifices offered on the altar.

(6) Sacrifices were divided into two categories; (i) most sacred; these included the sin-offering, meal-offering, burnt-offering and guilt-offering. (ii) Sacrifices of lesser sanctity, e.g., the peace-offering and the thanksoffering. The question is: how do we know that if these are defiled or their blood is spilled, thus rendering them unfit, they must be burnt in the Temple Court? The flesh of the lesser sacrifices is not mentioned, for this was eaten outside the Temple precincts and consequently when unfit was burnt without the Temple Court, v. infra 49a.

(7) I.e., whatever would normally be consumed or otherwise disposed of in the holy place must now be burnt there.

(8) viz., this scholar to R. Samuel b. Nahmani.

(9) The prohibition of benefit as applied to other forbidden things in the Torah.

(10) Ex. XXIX, 34.

(11) Since we are told that it must be burnt.

(12) ‘Because it is holy’ is unnecessary, and therefore R. Eleazar utilizes it thus. Hence its transgression involves flagellation.

(13) The teaching of R. Joshua b. Levi.

(14) Viz., ‘and every sin offering’, etc.

(15) Without R. Eleazar's deduction, ‘it shall not be eaten’ would be necessary in spite of the statement ‘it shall be burnt with fire’, to show that it is subject to a negative injunction, which involves flagellation. But now that R. Eleazar has deduced a negative injunction in respect of all unfit sacrifices from, 'it shalt not be eaten because it is holy', this is superfluous.

(16) The verse 'it shall not be eaten' written here.

(17) I.e., where the action is not explicitly forbidden but only by an injunction stated in general terms, which includes a number of other actions too.

(18) V. p. 108, n. 9.

(19) Lev. VII, 19.

(20) Deut. XXVI, 14, q.v. This refers to the second tithe, which was eaten by its Israelite owner in Jerusalem, and who had to declare that he had not eaten it 'being unclean', which shows that this was forbidden. The sanctity of tithes is of course lighter than that of sacrifices.

(21) This is a general principle. Hence this argument does not suffice to make it an offence punishable by flagellation, and so 'shall not be eaten' is here required.

(22) V. Glos., an analogy between two laws which rests on a Biblical intimation (as Lev. XIV, 13) or on a principle common to both (Jast.). Flagellation is inflicted on the basis of a hekkesh.

(23) Deut. XII, 17. 'Vows' and freewill-offerings' are sacrifices, and 'Scripture, by coupling these with tithes, shows that they are the same.

(24) And is flagellated for each separately. In that case the verse is not superfluous.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 24b

[for] a hornet, he is flagellated six times?¹ — Said he to him: Wherever we can interpret we do interpret,² and not apply it to additional injunctions.

Now what is the purpose of 'and the flesh' [that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten]³ of the commencement of the verse?⁴ — It is to include wood and frankincense.⁵ What is the purpose of, 'And as for the flesh, every one that is clean shall eat thereof' of the end [of the verse]?⁶ — It is to include emurim.⁷ [But] emurim are learnt from elsewhere, for it was taught: But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, that pertain unto the Lord [having his uncleanness upon him]:⁸ this is to include the emurim?⁹ — There [the reference is to] the uncleanness of the person, [which is punishable] with kareth, [whereas] here [we treat of] the uncleanness of the flesh, [which is subject to] a negative injunction.¹⁰

R. Abbahu said in R. Johanan's name: [With regard to] all the prohibited articles of the Torah, we do not flagellate on their account save [when they are eaten] in the normal manner of their consumption. What does this exclude? — Said R. Shimi b. Ashi: It is to exclude [this. viz.,] that if he ate raw heleb, he is exempt [from punishment]. Others say. R. Abbahu said in R. Johanan's name: [With regard to] all the prohibited articles of the Torah, we do not flagellate on their account save [when they are used] in the normal manner of their usage. What does this exclude? Said R. Shimi b. Ashi: It is to exclude [this, viz.,] if he applied the heleb of the ox which is stoned¹¹ upon his wound, he is exempt;¹² and all the more so, if he eats raw meat, he is exempt. It was stated likewise: R. Ahab. R. 'Awia said in R. Assi's name in R. Johanan's name: If he applies the heleb of the ox which is stoned upon his verse does not bear upon its own subject at all, why specify 'the flesh'? Scripture could say, and that which toucheth, etc. would he is exempt, because [in the case of] all the interdicts of the Torah, we do not flagellate on their account save [when they are, used] in the normal manner of their usage.

R. Zera said, We too learned [thus]: 'One does not receive forty [lashes]¹³ on account of 'orlah,¹⁴ save for that which issues from olives or from grapes alone': but [for that which issues] from mulberries, figs and pomegranates [there is, as implied,] no [flagellation]. What is the reason? Is it not because he does not eat them in the normal manner of their usage?¹⁵ Said Abaye to him: That were well if he informed us¹⁶ of the fruit itself, where he did not eat it in the normal manner of its usage; but here [the reason¹⁶ is] because it¹⁷ is mere moisture.¹⁸

Abaye said: All agree in, respect of kil'ayim¹⁴ of the vineyard, that we flagellate on its account even [when one does] not [enjoy it] in the normal manner of its usage. What is the reason? Because 'eating' is not written in connection therewith. An objection is raised: Issi b. Judah said: How do we know that meat and milk [seethed together] are forbidden?¹⁹ It is stated here, for thou art a holy people [...thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk],²⁰ and it is stated elsewhere, And ye shall be holy men unto me; [therefore ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs]:²¹ just as there it is forbidden,²² so here too it is forbidden. Again, I know it only of eating; how do I know it of [general] use? I will tell you: [it follows] a minori. If 'orlah, though no sin was committed therewith,²³ is forbidden for use, then meat and milk [seethed together], wherewith a sin was committed], is it not logical that they are forbidden for use?

(1) In Lev. XI, 43, it is stated: Ye shall not make yourselves detestable with any swarming thing that swarmeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them. This is a twofold injunction. and since it does not specify 'that swarmeth upon the earth', it applies to both water reptiles and land reptiles. Further v.II, referring to unclean fish, states: and they shall be a detestable thing unto you; ye shall not eat of their flesh. This is a third injunction against water reptiles. And finally. in Deut. XIV, 10, there is a fourth injunction: and whatsoever hath not fins and scales ye shall not eat. The ant is a land reptile ('swarming thing'); hence the two injunctions of Lev. XI, 43 apply to it. There are also the following three: (i) Lev. XI, 41: And every swarming thing that swarmeth upon the earth ... shall not be eaten; (ii) ibid. 42: even all swarming things that swarm upon the earth them ye shall not eat, for they are a detestable thing: And (iii) ibid. 44: neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of swarming thing that moveth upon the earth. The hornet is a 'winged swarming thing' and also moves upon the earth. Hence it is subject to these five injunctions and also to that of Deut. XIV, 19: And all winged swarming things are unclean unto you: they shall not be eaten. Thus eating one forbidden thing can involve more than one penalty. and the same may apply here.

(2) As applying to another subject.

(3) Lev. VII, 19.

(4) Seeing that the

(5) Used in the sacrificial service: though these are not eatables, they nevertheless become unclean.

(6) The question is only in respect of 'and as for the flesh', the rest of the verse being utilized in Men. 25b.

(7) V. Glos. Teaching that if they are defiled and a priest eats them he transgresses the injunction against unclean flesh. The verse accordingly is read thus: and the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten... and the flesh, viz., the emurim. _ Since the emurim must be offered on the altar, the priest is a zar (stranger') in relation thereto, and transgresses on that account also.

(8) Lev. VII, 20.

(9) Which 'pertain unto the Lord'.

(10) The inclusion of emurim in the former would not prove its inclusion in the latter case, since the former is a graver offence, as proved by the greater penalty attaching to it.

(11) V. 22b.

(12) Because heleb is generally used for lighting and softening hides.

(13) I.e., flagellation. Actually only thirty-nine were given.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) For they are not generally pressed for their juice.

(16) That there is no flagellation.

(17) That which issues from mulberries, etc.

(18) Lit., 'sweat'. I.e., he did not eat fruit of 'orlah at all. Thus this does not support R. Johanan.

(19) The prohibition of seething a kid in its mother's milk (Deut. XIV, 21) is understood by the Talmud as a prohibition of seething any meat and milk together. The question here is how do we know that if seethed together they are forbidden to be eaten.

(20) Ibid.

(21) Ex. XXII. 30.

(22) I.e., 'holy man' etc. introduces a prohibition of eating.

(23) When it was planted.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 25a

[This can be refuted]. As for 'orlah, [that may be] because it had no period of fitness;¹ will you say [the same of] meat and milk [seethed together], seeing that they had a period of fitness? Then let leaven during Passover prove it: though it had a period of fitness, it is forbidden for use. [This again can be refuted]. As for leaven during Passover, [that may be] because he [the offender] is punished with kareth,² will you say [the same] of meat [seethed] in milk, where he is not punished with kareth? Then let kil'ayim of the vineyard prove it: though he [the offender] is not punished with kareth yet it is forbidden for use. Now if this is so,³ let us refute [it thus]: as for kil'ayim of the vineyard. [that may be] because we flagellate on its account even [when he does] not [use it] in the normal manner of its usage? And Abaye?⁴ — [He can answer] 'will you say' — with what?⁵ 'Will you say [the same] of meat [seethed] in milk, for which we do not flagellate save [when it is eaten] in the normal manner of its use' — is then 'eating' written in connection with meat [seethed] in milk?⁶ And the other who raises the objection holds: for that purpose⁷ it is deduced from nebelah:⁸ just as nebelah [must be enjoyed] in the normal manner of its usage,⁹ so [must] meat [seethed] in milk, in the normal manner of its usage. And Abaye? — [He argues]: for that reason 'eating' is not written in its own case,¹⁰ to teach that we flagellate on its account even [when one does] not [enjoy it] in the normal manner of its usage.

But let us refute it [thus]: as for kil'ayim, [that may be] because it had no period of fitness?¹¹ — Said R. Adda b. Ahabah: This¹² proves that [in] kil'ayim of the vineyard, their very stock is forbidden,¹³ [and so we cannot refute it thus] since it had a time of fitness before taking root.¹⁴

'R. Shemaiah objected: If one sets a perforated pot in a vineyard,¹⁵ if one two-hundredth part is added, it is [all] forbidden:¹⁶ thus, only if there is added, but not if there is not added?¹⁷ — Said Raba, Two verses are written: 'the fulness' is written, and 'the seed' is written.¹⁸ How is this [to be reconciled]? That which is sown¹⁹ from the very outset [becomes forbidden] on taking root;²⁰ that which was sown when [partly] grown,²¹ if it increased it is [forbidden];²² if it did not increase, it is not [forbidden]!²³

R. Jacob said in R. Johanan's name: We may cure ourselves with all things, save with the wood of the asherah.²⁴ How is it meant? If we say that there is danger,²⁵ even the wood of the asherah too [is permitted]; while if there is no danger, even all [other] forbidden things of the Torah too are not [permitted]? — After all [it means] that there is danger, yet even so the wood of the asherah [must] not be used. For it was taught, R. Eliezer said: If 'with all thy soul' is said, why is 'with all thy might' said? Or if 'with all thy might' is said, why is 'with all thy soul' said?²⁶ But it is to teach you: if there is a man to whom his person is dearer than his wealth, therefore, 'with all thy soul' is stated;²⁷ and if there is a man to whom his wealth is dearer than his person, therefore 'with all thy might' [i.e.. substance] is stated. When Rabin came,²⁸ he said in R. Johanan's name: We may cure [i.e., save] ourselves with all [forbidden] things, except idolatry, incest,²⁹

(1) From the time of its planting it was never fit for food.

(2) For eating it.

(3) Sc. Abaye's statement supra 24b.

(4) How will he meet this question?

(5) I.e.. how would you conclude this refutation?

(6) It is not! Hence this last assumption would be unwarranted, and could not overthrow the argument.

(7) The prohibition of meat seethed with milk.

- (10) I.e., in connection with milk seethed with meat.
- (11) It is now assumed that when two diverse species are planted together, the interdict of kil'ayim applies only to what grows after they are planted or sown, but not to the stock itself. Thus this added growth was never at any time fit for eating.
- (12) Sc. that we do not refute it thus.
- (13) Sc. that which was already grown before they were planted as kil'ayim.
- (14) The stock itself becomes forbidden, but only after it takes root.
- (15) The pot contains cereals, and being perforated it draws its sustenance from the soil of the vineyard, which renders it (the pot) forbidden as kil'ayim.
- (16) One two-hundredth part is inclusive, i.e., the addition is one two-hundredth of the present total, so that the original is only one hundred and ninety-nine times as much. If kil'ayim is mixed with permitted eatables, it is all forbidden unless the latter is two hundred times as much as the former.
- (17) Though it struck root; which shows that the original stock is not forbidden.
- (18) Deut. XXII, 9: lest the fulness of the seed which thou hast sown be forfeited. 'The fulness' implies the additional growth only, while 'the seed' implies the original stock.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 25b

and murder.¹ Idolatry, as we have stated.² Incest and murder, as it was taught: Rabbi said: For as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so is this matter.³ Now, what connection has a murderer with a betrothed maiden? Thus this comes to throw light, and is itself illumined.⁴ The murderer is compared to a betrothed maiden: just as a betrothed maiden must be saved [from dishonour] at the cost of his [her ravisher's] life, so [in the case of] a murderer, he [the victim] must be saved at the cost of his [the attacker's] life. Conversely, a betrothed maiden [is learned] from a murderer: just as [in the case of] murder, one must be slain rather than transgress, so a betrothed maiden must be slain yet not transgress.⁵ And how do we know it of murder itself?⁶ It is common sense. Even as one who came before Raba and said to him: The governor of my town has ordered me, 'Go and kill So-and-so, if not, I will kill you.' He answered him: 'Let him kill you rather than that you should commit murder; what [reason] do you see [for thinking] that your blood is redder? Perhaps his blood is redder.'⁷

Mar son of R. Ashi found Rabina rubbing his daughter with undeveloped olives of 'orlah.⁸ Said he to him: 'Granted that the Rabbis ruled [thus]⁹ in time of danger; was it [likewise] ruled when there is no danger?' 'This inflammatory fever is also like a time of danger,' he answered him. Others say, he answered him: 'Am I then using it in the normal manner of its usage?'

It was stated: [As to forbidden] benefit that comes to a man against his will, — Abaye said: It is permitted; while Raba maintained: It is forbidden. Where it is possible [to avoid it], while he intends [to benefit], or if it is impossible [to avoid it], yet he intends [to benefit], none dispute that it is forbidden. If it is impossible [to avoid it], and he does not intend [to benefit], none dispute that it is permitted. They differ where it is possible [to avoid it] and he does not intend [to benefit]; now, on the view of R. Judah, who ruled, That which is unintended is forbidden,¹⁰ none dispute that it is forbidden. Where do they differ? On the view of R. Simeon, who maintained: That which is unintended is permitted. Abaye rules as R. Simeon. But Raba [argues]: R. Simeon rules thus only where it is impossible [to do otherwise], but not where it is possible.¹¹

Others state: If it is possible [to avoid it], and he does not intend [to benefit], that is [the case of] the controversy between R. Judah and R. Simeon.¹² If it is impossible [to avoid it], and he does not intend [to benefit], none dispute that it is permitted. When do they differ? Where it is impossible [to avoid it] and he intends [to benefit]. Now, on the view of R. Simeon, who regards the intention,¹³ none dispute that it is forbidden. Where do they differ? On the view of R. Judah, who maintained: It makes no difference whether he intends or does not intend, if it is possible [to avoid it] it is forbidden. Abaye rules as R. Judah.¹⁴

(1) Lit., 'bloodshed'.

(2) Viz., the interdict of the wood of the asherah.

(3) Deut. XXII, 26. This refers to the ravishing of a betrothed maiden.

(4) I.e., the verse shows that the case of a murderer throws light upon that of a betrothed maiden, but is also itself illumined thereby.

(5) She should rather suffer death than dishonour.

(6) That one must allow oneself to be slain rather than commit murder.

(7) You have no right to murder him to save yourself; his life is no less valuable than your own.

(8) For a remedy.

(9) That anything may be used for a remedy.

(10) V. Shab. 22a.

(11) The controversy of R. Judah and R. Simeon is with respect to dragging a bench over an earthen floor on the Sabbath, because it is needed in another part of the room. The dragging may make a rut in the earth, which is forbidden. Now in Abaye's view, R. Simeon permits the unintentional even when the whole act is avoidable, e.g., the bench is light enough to be carried. But in Raba's view R. Simeon permits it only when the bench is too heavy for this, so that the dragging is unavoidable. — An action is regarded as unavoidable when its purpose — here to have the bench elsewhere — is permissible or necessary. Similarly below, lecturing to the masses is regarded as unavoidable.

(12) Raba too admits this.

(13) As the determining factor.

(14) Since R. Judah rules thus, we see that the matter always depends on whether it is avoidable or not; therefore if it is unavoidable it is permitted.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 26a

Raba says thus: R. Judah rules that the unintentional is the same as the intentional only in the direction of stringency, but he did not rule that the intentional is the same as the unintentional where it is in the direction of leniency.

Abaye said: Whence do I know it? Because it was taught: It was related of R. Johanan b. Zakkai that he was sitting in the shadow of the Temple and teaching all day.¹ Now here it was impossible [not to lecture], and he intended [to benefit from the shade], and it is permitted?² But Raba said: The Temple was different, because it was made for its inside.³

Raba said: Whence do I know it? Because we learned: There were passage ways opening in the upper chamber to⁴ the Holy of Holies, through which the artisans were lowered in boxes,⁵ so that they might not feast their eyes on the Holy of Holies. Now here it was impossible [to avoid going there], and he [the workman] intended [to gaze at the Holy of Holies], and it was forbidden. But is that logical? Surely R. Simeon b. Pazzi said in R. Joshua b. Levi's name on Bar Kappara's authority: Sound, sight, and smell do not involve trespass?⁶ Rather, they set up a higher standard for the Holy of Holies.⁷

Others state, Raba said: Whence do I know it? Because it was taught, R. Simeon b. Pazzi said in R. Joshua b. Levi's name on Bar Kappara's authority: Sound, sight, and smell do not involve trespass. [Thus] they merely do not involve trespass, but there is an interdict. Is that not for those who stand inside [the Temple],⁸ so that it is impossible [to avoid it], while there is, an intention [to enjoy], and it is forbidden? — No: it refers to those standing outside.⁹

[It was stated in] the text, 'R. Simeon b. Pazzi said in R. Joshua b. Levi's name on Bar Kappara's authority: Sound, sight, and smell do not involve trespass.' But, does not smell involve trespass? Surely it was taught: He who compounds incense in order to learn [the art thereof] or to give it over to the community¹⁰ is exempt; [if] in order to smell it,¹¹ he is liable; while he who smells it¹² is exempt, but that he commits trespass!¹³ Rather, said R. Papa: Sound and sight do not involve trespass, because they are intangible; and smell, after its smoke column has ascended,¹⁴ does not involve trespass, since its religious service has been performed.¹⁵

Shall we say that wherever the religious service has been performed no trespass is involved? But what of the separation of the ashes,¹⁶ though its religious service has been performed, yet it involves trespass, for it is written; and he shall put them [the ashes] beside the altar,¹⁷ [which means] that he [the priest] must not scatter nor use [them]?¹⁸ — Because [the references to] the separation of the ashes and the priestly garments are two verses written with the same purpose,¹⁹ and the teaching of two such verses does not illumine [other cases].²⁰ 'The separation of the ashes': that which we have stated. 'The priestly garments,' as it is written, and he shall leave them there:²¹ this teaches that they must be hidden.²² That is well on the view of the Rabbis who say, This teaches that they must be hidden. But according to R. Dosa who disagrees with them and maintains: But they are fit for an ordinary priest, while what does 'and he shall leave them there' mean? that he [the High Priest] must not use them on another Day of Atonement, what can be said? — Because the separation of ashes and the beheaded heifer²³ are two verses with the same teaching, and such two verses do not illumine [other cases]. That is well according to him who maintains, They do not illumine [other cases]; but on the view that they do illumine,²⁴ what can be said? — Two limitations are written: it is written, 'and he shall put them [the ashes]'; and it is written, [over the heifer] whose neck was broken [etc.].²⁵

Come and hear: If he took it [the heifer] into the team²⁶ and it [accidentally] did some threshing, it is fit;²⁷ [but if it was] in order that it should suck and thresh, it is unfit. Now here it is impossible [to do otherwise],²⁸ and he intends [to benefit], and he [the Tanna] teaches that it is unfit! — There it is different, because Scripture saith, 'which hath not been wrought with,' [implying] in all cases. If so, even in the first clause too [the same applies]?

(1) He was lecturing on the laws of Festivals to the masses, this being within thirty days before a Festival; v. supra 6a and b. As his own school-house was too small for the large number who wished to hear him, he taught in the open, choosing this site on account of the shade afforded by the high walls of the Temple.

(2) Though one must not derive any benefit from the Temple.

(3) It was normally used inside; hence the shade was not forbidden at all.

(4) Lit., 'the loft of'; v. Mid. IV, 5.

(5) I.e., closed lifts. When they had to pass there for making repairs.

(6) He who benefits from sacred things (hekdesh) commits trespass and is liable to a sacrifice. But no trespass is involved when he benefits by sound, sight or smell, e.g., when he hears the music in the Temple, sees the beauty of the Temple, or smells the frankincense. Consequently, even if workmen did look upon the Holy of Holies it would not really matter.

(7) Forbidding even that which the law permitted.

(8) I.e., those engaged on some Temple service.

(9) Who can avoid enjoying these things.

(10) For use in the Temple.

(11) I.e., he intends keeping it for smelling.

(12) Sc. the incense belonging to the community and in use in the Temple.

(13) The reference is to Ex. XXX, 33: Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon a stranger, he shall be cut off from his people (kareth). In the first case he is exempt from kareth, in the second he is liable, while in the third he is exempt from kareth but liable to a trespass-offering. This contradicts R. Simeon b. Pazzi.

(14) The incense was thrown upon burning coals, which caused a cloud or a column of smoke to ascend. This constituted its sacred service.

(15) The incense then does not count as the sacred things of the Lord, and it is to this case that R. Simeon b. Pazzi refers. But before the smoke has ascended trespass is involved, because the smell, being directly caused by the spices with which the incense is compounded, is regarded as tangible.

(16) A censerful (Yoma 24a) of the ashes of the daily burnt-offering was taken every day and placed at the side of the altar, where the earth absorbed it.

(17) Lev. VI, 3.

(18) Rashal reads: (teaching) that others must not commit trespass therein, but all of it must be beside the altar. — ‘All of it’ refers to the censerful.

(19) Lit., ‘which come as one’.

(20) This is a general principle of exegesis. When a law is taught in one case it may be extended to other cases too by general analogy. But when it is taught in two cases it cannot be extended; for if it were intended to illumine others too, it would be written in one instance only, and the second, together with all others, would follow from it.

(21) Lev. XVI, 23. This refers to the additional garments worn by the High Priest on the Day of Atonement when he entered the Holy of Holies.

(22) And all use is forbidden. Here too they had fulfilled their religious purpose.

(23) V. Deut. XXI, 1-9. There too it is written, ‘and shall break the heifer’s neck there in the valley (v. 4). ‘There’ indicates that it must remain there and all benefit thereof is forbidden, though its religious purpose had already been fulfilled.

(24) R. Judah holds his view: v. Sanh. 67b.

(25) Lit., ‘the one who is neckbroken’. Ibid. 6. ‘The’ too is a limitation and the combined effect of the two limitations is to exclude all other cases from the operation of this law, which forbids benefit even after the religious requirements have been carried out.

(26) Of three or four cows used for threshing; his purpose was that it should suck.

(27) To make atonement for a murder by an unknown person; v. Deut. ibid. The heifer was to be one ‘which hath not been wrought with and which hath not drawn in

(28) It must be taken into the team to suck.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 26b

— This can only be compared to the following: If a bird rested upon it [the red heifer], it remains fit;¹ but if it copulated with a male, it is unfit. What is the reason? — Said R. Papa: If it were written ‘abad’² and we read it ‘abad’, [I would say, it becomes unfit] only if he himself wrought with it. While if ‘ubad’³ were written and we read it ‘ubad’, [it would imply] even if it were of itself.⁴ Since however, it is written ‘abad’ [active], whilst read ‘ubad’ [passive]. ‘it was wrought with’ must be similar to ‘he wrought [with it]’:⁵ just as ‘he wrought [with it]’ must mean that he approved of it, so also ‘it was wrought with’ refers only to what he approved.⁶

Come and hear: He may not spread it [viz.,] a lost [raiment]⁷ upon a couch or a frame for his needs, but he may spread it out upon a couch or a frame in its own interests. If he was visited by guests, he may not spread it over a bed or a frame, whether in its interests or his own!⁸ — There it is different, because he may the yoke' (v.²). Though this heifer had threshed, it remains fit, because it had been taken into the team to feed, not to thresh. [thereby] destroy it,⁹ either through an evil eye or through thieves.

Come and hear: Clothes merchants sell in their normal fashion, providing that they do¹⁰ not intend [to gain protection] from the sun in hot weather¹¹ or from the rain when it is raining;¹² but the strictly religious¹³ sling them on a staff behind their back.¹⁴ Now here, though it is possible to do as the strictly religious, yet when he has no intention [of benefiting], it is permitted; this is a refutation of him who learns Raba's first version?¹⁵ This is [indeed] a refutation.

AND ONE MAY NOT FIRE etc. Our Rabbis taught: If an oven was fired with the shells of 'orlah'¹⁶ or with the stubble of kil'ayim of the vineyard, if new, it must be demolished; if old, it must be allowed to cool.¹⁷ If a loaf was baked in it, — Rabbi said: The loaf is forbidden;¹⁸ but the Sages maintain: The loaf is permitted.¹⁹ If he baked²⁰ it upon the coals, all agree that it is permitted.²¹ But it was taught: Whether new or old, it must be allowed to cool? — There is no difficulty: one agrees with Rabbi, the other with the Rabbis.²² Granted that you know Rabbi [to rule thus] because the benefit²³ of the fuel lies in the loaf; do you know him [to maintain this ruling] where two things produce [the result]?²⁴ — Rather, [reply thus:] There is no difficulty: one is according to R. Eliezer, the other according to the Rabbis. Which [ruling of] R. Eliezer [is alluded to]? Shall we say. R. Eliezer['s ruling] On se'or'?²⁵ For we learned: If se'or of hullin and [se'or'] of terumah fall into dough, and neither is sufficient to make [it] leaven, but they combined and made [it] leaven, — R. Eliezer said: I regard²⁶ the last;²⁷ but the Sages maintain: whether the forbidden matter falls in first or the forbidden matter falls in last, it never renders it forbidden

(1) It is not disqualified because it has been put to some use. The red heifer had to be one 'upon which never came yoke' (Num. XIX, 2), i.e., it had not been put to service.

(2) Active: 'with which he (the owner) had (not) wrought'.

(3) Passive: 'was (not) wrought with'.

(4) I.e., even if it were wrought with entirely without the owner's volition.

(5) I.e., though it may have been put to work without the knowledge of its master, it shall nevertheless be only such work as its master would have approved.

(6) Now, if a bird rests on it, the master does not approve, since he does not benefit; but he does benefit from its copulation. Similarly, if he takes the heifer into the team and it accidentally threshes, he does not benefit thereby, as the team itself would have sufficed. Therefore it is not made unfit, unless that was his express purpose. — Though one passage refers to the beheaded heifer, while the other deals with the red heifer, it is deduced in Sot. 46a by a gezerah shawah (v. Glos.) that they are alike in law.

(7) Which he has found, and awaiting the owner to come and claim it.

(8) Thus, though he must spread it out, yet since he intends to benefit himself, it is forbidden.

(9) Lit., 'burn it'.

(10) Lit., 'he does'. The singular taken in the distributive sense.

(11) Lit., 'in the sun'.

(12) The reference is to garments containing the forbidden mixture of wool and linen (v. Deut. XXII, 11), sold to heathens. Merchants slung their wares across their shoulders for display, and though it is like wearing them, and some protection is afforded thereby, it is permitted.

(13) Lit., 'the modest'.

(14) So that they do not actually lie upon them.

(15) V. supra 25b.

(16) I.e., the shells of nuts of 'orlah'.

(17) 'New' means that the oven has never been used yet. Before it is fit for use it must be burnt through so as to harden it, and if this was done with the shells of 'orlah', the oven must be demolished, since it was made fit with prohibited fuel.

But if it had been used before, the only benefit is that it is now hot: hence that benefit must be forfeited by allowing the oven to cool without using its heat.

(18) He holds that the benefit of the forbidden fuel is contained directly in the loaf.

(19) In their view the benefit of the forbidden fuel is not actually contained in the loaf, for the flame of the burning shells is not identical with the shells themselves. By the same reasoning they reject the ruling that if new, the oven must be destroyed, holding it sufficient that it should be allowed to cool.

(20) Lit., 'boiled'.

(21) When the nutshells or stubble are burnt through and a mass of coals, they are regarded as already destroyed and not in existence. Consequently, if he bakes the bread upon them, the bread is not regarded as having benefited directly from them, and even Rabbi admits that it is permitted.

(22) V. p. 121, n. 11.

(23) Lit., 'improvement'.

(24) For when the new oven is fired, bread is not baked in it yet, and it will have to be fired a second time. Thus the bread that is baked will be the product of two things: the forbidden fuel and the permitted fuel. We do not find Rabbi holding that this too is forbidden, and if it is not, there is no need to demolish the oven.

(25) Se'or is leaven with which other dough is made leaven. Hamez is leavened bread.

(26) Lit., 'come after'.

(27) The status of the dough is determined by which fell in last: if hullin, the dough is permitted to a lay Israelite; if terumah, it is forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 27a

unless it¹ contains sufficient to induce fermentation,² Now Abaye said: They learned this³ only where he anticipated and removed the forbidden matter; but if he did not anticipate and remove the forbidden matter, it is forbidden.⁴ this proves that the product of two causes is forbidden. Yet how do you know that R. Eliezer's reason is as Abaye [states it]: perhaps R. Eliezer's reason is because I follow the last, there being no difference whether he anticipated and removed the forbidden matter or he did not anticipate and remove the forbidden matter;⁵ but [if they fell in] simultaneously, then indeed it may be permitted?⁶ — Rather it is R. Eliezer' [s ruling] on the wood of the asherah [which is alluded to]. For we learned: If he took wood from it [sc. the asherah], benefit thereof is forbidden. If he fired an oven with it, if new, it must be destroyed; if old, it must be allowed to cool. If he baked bread in it, benefit thereof is forbidden; if it [the bread] became mixed up with others, and [these] others [again] with others,⁷ they are all forbidden for use. R. Eliezer said: Let him carry the benefit [derived thence]⁸ to the Dead Sea.⁹ Said they to him: You cannot redeem an idol. Granted that you hear R. Eliezer [to rule thus] in the case of idolatry, whose interdict is [very] severe; do you know him [to rule likewise] in respect of other interdicts of the Torah? — Then if so, to whom will you ascribe it?¹⁰ Moreover, it was explicitly taught: And thus did R. Eliezer declare it forbidden in the case of all interdicts in the Torah.

Abaye said: Should you say' that the product of two causes is forbidden, then Rabbi is identical [in view] with R. Eliezer.¹¹ But should you say. The product of two causes is permitted,¹² while here [Rabbi forbids the bread] because there is the improvement of the fuel in the bread, then plates, goblets, and regards that which completes the leavening having produced the whole of it. flask;¹³ are forbidden.¹⁴ They differ only in respect of an oven and a pot.¹⁵ On the view [that] the product of two causes is forbidden, these are forbidden; on the view [that] the product of two causes is permitted, these are permitted. Others state: Even on the view [that] the product of two causes is permitted, the pot is forbidden, for it receives the stew before the permitted fuel is placed.¹⁶

R. Joseph said in Rab Judah's name in Samuel's name: If an oven was fired [heated] with shells of 'orlah' or with stubble of kil'ayim of the vineyard, if new, it must be demolished; if old, it must be allowed to cool. If he baked bread in it, — Rabbi said: The bread is permitted; but the Sages maintain: The bread is forbidden. But the reverse was taught!¹⁷ — Samuel learned it the reverse. Alternatively, in general Samuel holds [that] the halachah is as Rabbi as against his, but not as against his colleagues, but here [he holds], even against his colleagues, and so he reasoned, I will recite it reversed, in order that the Rabbis may stand [as ruling] stringently.¹⁸

‘If he baked it upon the coals all agree that the bread is permitted’.¹⁹ Rab Judah in Samuel's name, and R. Hiyya b. Ashi in R. Johanan's name [differ therein]: one says. They learned [this] only of dying coals, but live²⁰ coals are forbidden;²¹ while the other maintains, Even live coals too are permitted. As for the view that live [coals] are forbidden, it is well, [the reason being] because there is the improvement of the fuel in the bread.²² But on the view that even live [coals] are permitted, then how is the bread which is forbidden because there is the improvement of the fuel in the bread conceivable according to Rabbi?²³ — Said R. Papa: When the flame is opposite it.²⁴

(1) The se'or' of terumah, v. Tosaf.

(2) If forbidden matter falls into permitted, it does not render it forbidden unless it imparts its taste to it. The se'or' imparts its taste to the dough when it makes it leaven. — Se'or' of terumah is designated forbidden matter, since it is forbidden to a lay Israelite.

(3) Sc. R. Eliezer's view.

(4) R. Eliezer holds that if the hullin fell in last, the dough is permitted. This is only if he removed the terumah immediately the hullin fell in, and before the dough was leavened. Though the terumah must have helped slightly in the leavening, yet since it is no longer there when the dough really becomes leaven, it is disregarded. But if the terumah was left there, the dough becomes forbidden even if the hullin fell in last.

(5) The reason being that he

(6) Because R. Eliezer permits the product of two causes.

(7) ‘And (these) others’ etc. is absent in the Mishnah in A.Z. 49b, and R. Tam deletes it here too.

(8) I.e., the value of the wood.

(9) But R. Eliezer admits that if the benefit is not thrown into the Dead Sea, the new oven must be destroyed, which proves that he holds that the product of two causes is forbidden (v. p. 122, n. 3).

(10) Lit., ‘upon whom will you cast it?’ This is the answer: there is none other to whom the Baraitha supra 26b can be ascribed. Hence it must be assumed that R. Eliezer draws no distinction between idolatry — and other interdicts.

(11) I.e., if the Baraitha supra 26b is to be explained thus: just as Rabbi forbids the bread baked by the heat of the nutshells of ‘orlah’, so he also forbids the new oven that is fired by same, because he holds that the product of two causes is forbidden. Hence the whole Baraitha states Rabbi's ruling, his view being identical with R. Eliezer's. Consequently the problem which he proceeds to state does not arise.

(12) Hence the first clause stating that a new oven must be destroyed cannot agree with Rabbi, but only with R. Eliezer.

(13) Of earthenware, which received their final hardening in a kiln heated by forbidden fuel.

(14) On all views. For they have been made fit for use and will be used without any further improvements, and there is direct benefit from forbidden matter.

(15) Both of which must be heated again before food is cooked or baked in them.

(16) The food for stewing is placed in the pot before the heat is applied to it. The mere placing is regarded as benefit, and this was made possible solely by the forbidden fuel.

(17) Supra 26b.

(18) And so that people might accept the stringent ruling.

(19) V. supra 26b.

(20) Lit., ‘whispering’. When the coals are burning brightly they seem to be moving and whispering to each other (Rashi).

(21) I.e., the bread is forbidden in Rabbi's view.

(22) For the fuel is regarded as still in existence and directly baking the bread.

(23) For obviously the bread does not bake until the fuel burns up, and by then it is a mass of coals.

(24) Directly opposite the bread through the oven mouth.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 27b

Whence it follows that the Rabbis who disagree with him permit it even when the flame is opposite it; then how is forbidden fuel conceivable according to the Rabbis?¹ — Said R. Ammi b. Hama: In the case of a stool.²

Rami b. Hama asked R. Hisda: If an oven was heated with wood of hekdes³ and bread is baked therein, what [is the law] according to the Rabbis who permit in the first case?⁴ — The bread is forbidden, he replied. And what is the difference between this and 'orlah'? — Said Raba: How compare! 'Orlah is annulled in two hundred [times its own quantity]; hekdes is not annulled even in one thousand [times its quantity].⁵ But said Raba, If there is a difficulty, this is the difficulty: Surely he who fires [the oven] commits trespass, and wherever he who fires [the oven] commits trespass, it [the fuel] passes out to hullin?⁶ — Said R. Papa: We treat here of wood of peace-offerings,⁷ and in accordance with R. Judah, who maintained: Hekdes, if [misappropriated for secular use] unwittingly, becomes hullin; if deliberately, it does not become hullin. Now what is the reason that if deliberately it does not [become hullin]? Since it does not involve a trespass-offering,⁸ it does not pass out to hullin; so peace-offerings too, since it [the misappropriation of this type of sacrifice] does not involve a trespass-offering, it does not pass out to hullin.

Yet whenever he that fires [the oven] commits trespass, it [the fuel] passes out to hullin? But it was taught: [In the case of] all which are burnt,⁹ their ashes are permitted [for use], except the wood of an asherah, while the ashes of hekdes are forbidden for ever?¹⁰ — Said Rami b. Hama: E.g., if a fire fell of its own accord on wood of hekdes, so that there is no man to be liable for trespass.¹¹ R. Shemaiah said: It¹² refers to those [ashes] which must be hidden,¹³ for it was taught: And he shall put them [the ashes]¹⁴ gently; and he shall put them — the whole thereof; and he shall put them [means] that he must not scatter them.¹⁵

R. JUDAH SAID: THERE IS NO REMOVAL etc. It was taught, R. Judah said: There is no removal of leaven save by burning, and logic impels this: if nothar, which is not subject to 'there shall not be seen' and 'there shall not be found', requires burning, then leaven, which is subject to 'there shall not be seen' and 'there shall not be found', how much the more does it require burning! Said they to him: Every argument that you argue [which] in the first place is stringent yet in the end leads to leniency is not a [valid] argument: [for] if he did not find wood for burning, shall he sit and do nothing, whereas the Torah ordered, Ye shall put away leaven out of your houses,¹⁶ [which means] with anything wherewith you can put it away? R. Judah argued again [with] another argument.¹⁷ Nothar is forbidden for eating and leaven is forbidden for eating: just as nothar [is disposed of] by burning, so is leaven [destroyed] by burning. Said they to him, Let nebelah prove [it]¹⁸ for it is forbidden for eating yet does not require burning. Said he to them, There is a difference:¹⁹ nothar is forbidden for eating and for [all] use, and leaven is forbidden for eating and for [all] use: just as nothar requires burning, so does leaven require burning. Let the ox that is stoned²⁰ prove it, they replied: it is forbidden for eating and for [all] use, yet it does not require burning. Said he to them, There is a difference: Nothar is forbidden for eating and for [all] use, and he [who eats it] is punished with kareth, and leaven is forbidden for eating and for [all] use, and he is punished with kareth: just as nothar [must be destroyed] by burning, so is leaven [destroyed] by burning. Said they to him, Let the heleb of the ox that is stoned prove it, which is forbidden for eating, for [all] use, and involves the penalty of kareth, yet it does not require burning.

(1) I.e., when do they prohibit benefit from forbidden fuel?

(2) Made of forbidden wood. One must not sit upon it, because he thereby benefits from the wood while it is yet fully in existence.

(3) V. Glos.

(4) Sc. where it is heated with 'orlah or kil'ayim.

(5) If 'orlah is accidentally mixed with two hundred times its own quantity of permitted produce and cannot be removed, it is annulled, and the whole is permitted. But hekdesch in similar circumstances is never annulled: thus its interdict is obviously more stringent.

(6) When one misappropriates hekdesch for secular use, he commits trespass and is liable to an offering for having withdrawn it from sacred ownership. Thus by this very act he converts it into hullin, and therefore the bread should be regarded as having been baked with ordinary fuel, hence permitted. This principle holds good of all hekdesch save animals dedicated for sacrifices and the service utensils in the Temple.

(7) I.e., wood dedicated for peace-offerings, which means that it is to be sold and peace-offerings bought with the money, peace-offerings belong to the category of 'sacrifices of lower sanctity', and do not involve a trespass-offering; nevertheless they are forbidden for secular use.

(8) Sacrifices were brought only for unwitting transgressions.

(9) Viz., leaven on Passover, unclean terumah, 'orlah and kil'ayim of the vineyard. Tem. 33b.

(10) V. Tem. 34a.

(11) Only then are the ashes of hekdesch for ever forbidden.

(12) The teaching cited.

(13) Viz., the censerful of ashes hidden at the base of the altar, v. supra 26a. Only these are for ever forbidden.

(14) Lev. VI, 3.

(15) V. supra 26a.

(16) Ex. XII, 15.

(17) Not on the basis of an a minori argument, but a gezerah shawah, the conclusion of which is accepted irrespective of the result.

(18) I.e., refute the argument.

(19) Between nebelah on the one hand and nothar and leaven on the other.

(20) V. Ex. XXI, 28.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 28a

R. Judah argued again [with] another argument: Nothar is subject to 'ye shall let nothing of it remain,'¹ and leaven is subject to 'ye shall let nothing of it remain':² just as nothar [is disposed of] by burning, so is leaven [disposed of] by burning. Said they to him, Let the guilt-offering of suspense³ and the sin-offering of a bird which is brought for a doubt,⁴ on your view,⁵ prove it: for they are subject to 'ye shall let nothing of it remain,'⁶ and we maintain that they require burning, while you say [it is disposed of] by burial.⁷ [Thereupon] R. Judah was silent. Said R. Joseph: Thus people say, The ladle which the artisan hollowed out, in it [his tongue] shall be burnt with mustard.⁸ Abaye said: When the maker of the stocks sits in his own stock, he is paid with the clue which his own hand wound.⁹ Raba said: When the arrow maker is slain by his own arrows, he is paid with the clue which his own hand wound.

BUT THE SAGES MAINTAIN: HE CRUMBLES AND THROWS IT etc. The scholars asked: How is it meant: He crumbles and throws it to the wind, or he crumbles and throws it into the sea; or perhaps, he crumbles and throws it to the wind, but he may throw it into the sea whole [without crumbling]? And we learned similarly in connection with an idol too: R. Jose said: He crushes and throws it to the wind or casts it into the sea. And the scholars asked: How is it meant: He crushes and throws it to the wind, or he crushes and casts it into the sea; or perhaps, he crushes and throws it to the wind, but he may cast it into the sea whole [without crushing?]¹⁰—Said Rabbah: It is logical that an idol, which goes into the Dead Sea, need not be crushed;¹⁰ leaven, which goes into other streams, needs crumbling. Said R. Joseph to him, On the contrary, the logic is the reverse: An idol, which does not dissolve, needs crushing; leaven, which dissolves, does not need crumbling. It was taught in accordance with Rabbah;¹¹ it was taught in accordance with R. Joseph.¹² It was taught in accordance with Rabbah: If he was walking in a wilderness, he crumbles it [the leaven] and casts it to the wind; if he was travelling in a ship, he crumbles it and casts it into the sea. It was taught in accordance with R. Joseph: If he was travelling in the desert, he crushes [the idol] and throws it to the wind; if he was travelling in a ship, he crushes and casts it into the sea. [The teaching requiring] ‘crushing’ is a difficulty according to Rabbah, [while the teaching requiring] ‘crumbling’ is a difficulty according to R. Jose? ‘Crushing’ is not a difficulty according to Rabbah: one means into the Dead Sea,¹³ the other means into other waters. ‘Crumbling’ is not a difficulty according to R. Joseph: One refers to wheat [grains],¹⁴ the other refers to bread.

MISHNAH. LEAVEN BELONGING TO A GENTILE OVER WHICH PASSOVER HAS PASSED¹⁵ IS PERMITTED FOR USE; BUT THAT OF AN ISRAELITE IS FORBIDDEN FOR USE, BECAUSE IT IS SAID, NEITHER SHALL THERE BE LEAVEN SEEN WITH THEE.¹⁶

GEMARA. Who is [the authority of] our Mishnah: it is neither R. Judah nor R. Simeon nor R. Jose the Galilean. What is this [allusion]? — For it was taught: [As to] leaven, both before its time and after its time, he transgresses a negative command on its account; during its time, he transgresses a negative command and [commits a sin subject to] kareth.¹⁷

(1) Ex. XII, 10.

(2) Since leaven must not be seen or found in the house after midday on the fourteenth of Nisan, it may obviously not remain there until then.

(3) I.e., doubt. When a man is in doubt whether he has committed a transgression for which, if certain, a sin-offering is due, he brings a guilt-offering of suspense.

(4) E.g., when a woman miscarries, and it is not known whether the fetus was viable or not.

(5) V. Tem. 34a. The Rabbis hold that this bird sin-offering must be burnt, while R. Judah maintains that it is cast into a waterduct which carries it off.

(6) In common with all sacrifices.

(7) This refers to the guilt-offering of suspense.

(8) Or, from it he shall swallow mustard.

(9) Jast. Rashi, he is paid by the uplifting— i.e., the work —of his own hand.

(10) For the Dead Sea is unnavigable; hence none will pick it up.

(11) That leaven requires ‘crumbling’.

(12) That an idol requires ‘crushing’.

(13) The idol need not be crushed before it is thrown thither.

(14) Which had turned leaven. These must be crumbled, i.e., scattered into the sea. But they may not be tied in a sack and thrown into the sea, lest someone finds the sack.

(15) I.e., it had been kept over Passover.

(16) Ex. XIII, 7.

(17) During its (forbidden) time means during Passover. Before its time, from six hours (mid-day) on the fourteenth of Nisan until evening, when Passover commences; after its time, after Passover — i.e., leaven which was kept from before until after Passover. He transgresses by eating it.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 28b

R. Simeon said: [As to] leaven, before and after its time, he does not transgress anything at all on its account; during its time, he transgresses on its account [an interdict subject to] kareth and a negative command. And from the hour that it is forbidden for eating, it is forbidden for [general] use; this agrees with the first Tanna. R. Jose the Galilean said: Wonder at yourself! How can leaven be prohibited for [general] use the whole seven [days]? And how do we know of him who eats leaven from six hours and onwards that he transgresses a negative command? Because it is said, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it:¹ this is R. Judah's opinion. Said R. Simeon to him: Is it then possible to say thus, seeing that it is already stated, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it; seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith?² If so, what does ‘thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it’ teach? When he is subject to [the injunction], arise, eat unleavened bread,³ he is subject to [the prohibition], ‘do not eat leavened bread’; and when he is not subject to, ‘arise, eat unleavened bread,' he is not subject to, 'do not eat leavened bread.'

What is R. Judah's reason? — Three verses are written: There shall no leavened bread be eaten;⁴ Ye shall eat nothing leavened;⁵ and Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it. One refers to before its time; another to after its time; and the third to during its time.⁶ And R. Simeon?⁷ — One refers to during its time. 'Ye shall eat nothing leavened' he requires for what was taught: Hamez.⁸ I only know [that it is forbidden] where it turned leaven of its own accord; if [it turned leaven] through another substance, how do we know it? Therefore it is stated, Ye shall eat nothing leavened.⁹ There shall no leavened bread be eaten' he requires for what was taught: R. Jose the Galilean said: How do we know that at the Passover of Egypt its [prohibition of] leaven was in force one day only? Because it is said, 'There shall no leavened bread be eaten', and in proximity thereto [is written], This day ye go forth.¹⁰ And R. Judah: how does he know [that it is prohibited when made leaven] through another substance? — Because the Divine Law expressed it in the term mahmezeth.¹¹ How does he know R. Jose the Galilean's [deduction]? — I can either say, because 'this day' is stated in proximity thereto.¹² Alternatively, he does not base interpretations on the proximity of verses.¹³

The Master said: 'And how do we know of him who eats leaven from six hours and onwards that he transgresses a negative command? Because it is said, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it: this is R. Judah's opinion. Said R. Simeon to him: Is it then possible to say thus, Seeing that it is already stated, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it; seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith?' Now as to R. Judah, R. Simeon says well to him? — R. Judah can answer you: [The purpose of] that [verse] is to make it a statutory obligation even for nowadays.¹⁴ And R. Simeon? Whence does he know to make it a statutory obligation [even nowadays]! — He deduces it from, at even ye shall eat unleavened bread.¹⁵ And R. Judah? — He requires that in respect of an unclean person or one who was on a distant journey. I might say, since he cannot eat the Passover sacrifice, he need not eat unleavened bread or bitter herbs either. Hence we are informed [that it is not so]. And R. Simeon? — For an unclean person or one who was on a distant journey no verse is required,¹⁶ because he is no worse than an uncircumcised person and an alien,¹⁷ for it is written, but no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof:¹⁸ 'thereof' he shall not eat, but he eats of unleavened bread and bitter herbs. And R. Judah? It is written in the case of one,¹⁹ and it is written in the case of the other.²⁰ Now, who is [the authority for] our Mishnah?²¹ If R. Judah, he states leaven without qualification, even that of a Gentile. And if R. Simeon,

(1) Deut. XVI, 3. 'It' refers to the Passover sacrifice, which was offered on the fourteenth of Nisan from mid-day and onwards; and the verse is interpreted: You are to eat no leavened bread at the time that you must offer the Passover sacrifice.

(2) Now, unleavened bread (mazzah) was not eaten before evening; hence 'therewith' must mean when the Passover sacrifice is eaten, viz., in the evening, and 'with it' must bear the same meaning in the first half of the verse.

(3) I.e., in the evening.

(4) Ex. XIII, 3.

(5) Ibid. XII, 20.

(6) On the meaning of these terms v. p. 129, n. 4.

(7) How does he interpret these verses?

(8) In Ex. XIII, 3 and Deut. XVI, 3 (E.V. leavened bread).

(9) Heb. mahmezeth. This implies even if fermentation was induced by something else.

(10) Ex. XIII, 4. He translates: There shall no leavened bread be eaten (on) this day (that) ye go forth.

(11) 'Leavened'; v. n. 8. This implies an additional teaching, for otherwise the three verses should use the same term, viz., hamez.

(12) Thus this too conveys an additional teaching.

(13) And thus he rejects the view that at the Exodus the prohibition of leaven was for one day only.

(14) The verse does not assimilate the prohibition of leavened bread to the precept of eating unleavened bread, in the sense that the former is valid only when the latter is, but the reverse: the latter is assimilated to the former. As long as leaven is prohibited, there is an obligation to eat unleavened bread, i.e., even nowadays, after the destruction of the Temple and the cessation of sacrifices. For I might think, since it is written, they shall eat it (sc. the Passover sacrifice) with unleavened bread and bitter herbs (Num. IX, 11), the obligation to eat unleavened bread holds good only as long as the Passover sacrifice is offered. Hence this verse teaches that it is not so.

(15) Ex. XII, 18. This is otherwise superfluous, since it is stated in v. 8, and they shall eat the flesh in that night ... and unleavened bread.

(16) That he has to eat unleavened bread.

(17) V. Ex. XII, 43. According to the Talmud, Shab. 87a this means a Jew whose acts have alienated him from Heaven, i.e., a nonconformist.

(18) Ibid. 48.

(19) Sc. an uncircumcised person and an 'alien'.

(20) Sc. an unclean person and one who was on a distant journey; v. infra 120a, p. 619, n. 6. Hence Deut. XVI, 3 is still required to show that the eating of unleavened bread is a permanent obligation.

(21) Here the Talmud reverts to its original question (supra a bottom), which was interrupted for a discussion of the various opinions quoted.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 29a

even that of an Israelite is indeed permitted.¹ while if [it is] R. Jose the Galilean, even during its time it is indeed permitted for [general] use? — Said R. Aha b. Jacob: In truth it is R. Judah, and he learns se'or [leaven] of 'eating' from se'or of seeing':² just as [with] the se'or [stated in connection] with 'seeing', you must not see your own, but you may see that belonging to others or to the Most High',³ so [with] the se'or [written in connection] with 'eating', you must not eat your own, but you may eat that belonging to others or to the Most High;⁴ and logically he [the Tanna of our Mishnah] ought to teach that it⁵ is permitted even for eating, but because he teaches that that of an Israelite is forbidden for use, he also teaches that that of a Gentile is permitted for use. Again, logically he ought to teach that even during its period it⁵ is permitted for use, but because he mentions after its period in connection with that of an Israelite, he also teaches about that of a heathen after its period.

Raba said: In truth it⁶ is R. Simeon; but R. Simeon does indeed penalize him, since he transgresses 'there shall not be seen' and 'there shall not be found' therewith.⁷ As for Raba, it is well: hence it is taught, BUT THAT OF AN ISRAELITE IS FORBIDDEN [FOR GENERAL USE], BECAUSE IT IS SAID, NEITHER SHALL THERE LEAVEN BE SEEN WITH THEE.⁸ But according to R. Aha b. Jacob, he should state, because [it is said], there shall no leavened bread be eaten?⁹ — Do you think that that¹⁰ refers to the second clause? [No,] it refers to the first clause, and he states thus: LEAVEN BELONGING TO A GENTILE OVER WHICH PASSOVER HAS PASSED IS PERMITTED FOR USE, BECAUSE IT IS SAID, NEITHER SHALL THERE BE LEAVEN SEEN WITH THEE, [implying] thine own thou must not see, but thou mayest see the leaven of strangers or of the Most High; and se'or of 'eating' is learnt from se'or of 'seeing'.

Now they¹¹ are consistent with their views. For it was stated: If one eats se'or belonging to a heathen over which Passover has passed, according to R. Judah's view, — Raba said: He is flagellated; while R. Aha b. Jacob said: He is not flagellated. Raba said, He is flagellated: R. Judah does not learn se'or of 'eating' from se'or of 'seeing'. While R. Aha b. Jacob, said, He is not flagellated: he learns se'or of 'eating' from se'or of 'seeing'.

But R. Aha b. Jacob retracted from that [view]. For it was taught: He who eats leaven of hekdes¹² during the Festival [Passover] commits trespass; but some say, He does not commit trespass.¹³ Who is [meant by] 'some say'? — Said R. Johanan, It is R. Nehunia b. ha-Kanah. For it was taught: R. Nehunia b. ha-Kanah used to treat the Day of Atonement as the Sabbath in regard to payment: just as [with] the Sabbath, he forfeits his life and is exempt from [payment], so [with] the Day of Atonement, he forfeits his life and is exempt from payment.¹⁴ R. Joseph said: They differ as to whether sacred food can be redeemed in order to feed dogs therewith. He who says [that] he commits trespass holds, One may redeem sacred food in order to feed dogs therewith; while he who rules [that] he does not commit trespass holds, One may not redeem [etc.].¹⁵

R. Aha b. Raba recited

- (1) For general use, after its time.
- (2) I.e., he learns the prohibition of eating se'or from that of seeing se'or.
- (3) V. supra 5b.
- (4) I.e., when R. Judah teaches supra 28b that leaven even after its period is forbidden, this analogy shows that that applies to leaven belonging to a Jew only.
- (5) The leaven of a Gentile.
- (6) Our Mishnah.
- (7) Thus the Mishnah states the Rabbinic law, while in the Baraita the Scriptural law is stated.
- (8) I.e., as a penalty for violating this injunction.
- (9) That being the verse quoted by R. Judah supra 28b.
- (10) The verse quoted in the Mishnah.
- (11) Sc. Raba and R. Aha b. Jacob.
- (12) V. Glos.
- (13) On committing trespass V. p, 117, n. 6. The first Tanna holds that leaven belonging to hekdesch has a value even during Passover. For he agrees with R. Simeon that leaven kept during Passover is Biblically permitted after Passover, and though R. Simeon penalizes its owner, that does not apply to hekdesch, since leaven of hekdesch falls within the permissive law 'but thou mayest see that of Heaven'. Thus this man, by eating it, has caused loss to the Temple treasury, and therefore he is liable to a trespass-offering. But the second Tanna, while admitting this, holds that since he incurs kareth for the eating of leaven, he is free from any lesser penalty, as explained in the Text.
- (14) It is a principle that if a man commits an act involving the death penalty and a monetary compensation. he is exempted from the latter owing to the greater punishment; this holds good
- (15) If these Tannaim held with R. Simeon that during Passover it is forbidden for general use, they would agree that he is not liable for trespass, since it was valueless when he actually ate it, notwithstanding that it would become valuable after Passover. But they hold with R. Jose the Galilean that leaven is permitted for use during Passover. Now, the only use to which leaven can be put then is to give it to dogs. This may be done with ordinary leaven, but there is a controversy in respect of sacred leaven. The first Tanna holds that it can be redeemed for that purpose: hence the leaven is valuable, and therefore the eater commits trespass. But the others ('some say') hold that sacred leaven may not be redeemed for dogs. Consequently it has no value, and the eater does not commit trespass.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 29b

this discussion in R. Joseph's name in the following version: All agree that one may not redeem sacred food in order to feed it to dogs, but here they differ in this, viz., whether that which has indirect monetary value¹ is as money. He who says [that] he commits trespass holds, That which has indirect monetary value is as money; while he who maintains [that] he does not commit trespass holds, That which has indirect monetary value is not as money.² R. Aha b. Jacob said: All agree that that which has indirect monetary value is as money, but here they differ in the controversy of R. Judah and R. Simeon. He who says [that] he is not liable for trespass holds as R. Judah,³ while he who rules [that] he is liable for trespass even if he is not actually executed. E.g., if he sets fire to another man's property on the Sabbath, since his violation of the Sabbath involves death, he is not liable for the damage. Now R. Nehunia b. ha-Kanah holds that it is the same if his act involves kareth instead of death: e.g., if he sets fire to another man's property on the Day of Atonement, the violation of which is punishable by kareth. — Thus in the present case he need not indemnify hekdesch for the leaven, in view of the kareth involved, and where that is so, there is no trespass-offering. agrees with R. Simeon.⁴ But it was R.

Aha b. Jacob himself who said that R. Judah learns se'or of 'eating' from se'or of 'seeing'?⁵ — Hence R. Aha b. Jacob retracted from that [statement].

R. Ashi said: All hold that we may not redeem [etc.], and that which has indirect monetary value is not as money. But here they differ in the controversy of R. Jose the Galilean and the Rabbis. He who rules [that] he is liable to trespass holds as R. Jose;⁶ while he who rules [that] he is not liable for trespass agrees with the Rabbis.

Rab said: Leaven, in its time,⁷ whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different⁸ kind, is forbidden; when not in its time, [if mixed] with its own kind, it is forbidden; [if with] a different kind, it is permitted. What are we discussing: Shall we say, where it imparts [its] taste [to the mixture], then [how state] when not in its time, if [mixed] with a different kind it is permitted? Surely it imparts taste!⁹ — Rather it refers to a minute quantity [of leaven]:¹⁰ 'leaven in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, is forbidden', Rab being consistent with his view. For Rab and Samuel both said: All forbidden things of the Torah, [if mixed] with their own kind, [render forbidden the mixture even] when there is a minute quantity; [if] with a different kind, [only] when [the forbidden element] imparts its taste. Now Rab forbade leaven in its time [when mixed] with a different kind on account of [a mixture with] its own kind. When not in its period [and mixed] with its own kind, it [the mixture] is forbidden in accordance with R. Judah: but [when leaven has no monetary value at all; nor has it any indirect monetary value, since it cannot be redeemed to feed it to dogs by selling it to a non-Jew for the purpose. mixed] with a different kind it is permitted, because [to forbid it] when not in its time and [mixed] with a different kind on account of [a mixture] with its own kind, — to that extent we do not enact a preventive measure.¹¹

Samuel said: Leaven, in its time, [if mixed] with its own kind, is forbidden; if with a different kind, it is permitted. When not in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, it is permitted. 'Leaven, in its time, [if mixed] with its own kind, is forbidden.' Samuel is consistent with his view. For Rab and Samuel both said: All prohibited things of the Torah, [if mixed] with their own kind, [render forbidden the mixture even] when there is a minute quantity; [if mixed] with a different kind, [only] when [the forbidden element] imparts [its] flavour. Now he does not forbid [leaven mixed] with a different kind on account of [a mixture with] its own kind. 'When not in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, it is permitted,' — in accordance with R. Simeon.

While R. Johanan said: Leaven, in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, is forbidden when it imparts [its] taste; when not in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, it is permitted. 'Leaven, in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, [is forbidden] when it imparts [its] taste.' R. Johanan is consistent with his view. For R. Johanan and Resh Lakish both maintain: All forbidden things in the Torah, whether [mixed] with their own kind or with a different kind, [render forbidden the mixture only] when they impart [their] taste.' 'When not in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, it is permitted,'- in accordance with R. Simeon.

(1) Lit., 'a thing which leads to money'.

(2) On this version both Tannaim agree with R. Simeon. Thus it has no present value at all, save an indirect value, since it can be used after Passover, and they disagree as to whether this deferred value can be regarded as immediate value.

(3) That all benefit is forbidden to an Israelite even after Passover, so that the

(4) That it is permissible for general use after Passover, even to an Israelite, and that it has a monetary value.

(5) Whereby leaven of hekdes is permitted for use during Passover even according to R. Judah.

(6) That benefit is permitted even during Passover. This leaven could be redeemed and used as fuel.

(7) V. supra p. 129, n. 4.

(8) Lit., 'not with its kind' — and similarly in the whole passage.

(9) It is a general principle that if something forbidden is mixed with something permitted and imparts its taste thereto, the whole mixture is prohibited.

(10) Insufficient to impart a flavour to the other.

(11) Gazar means to enact a preventive measure, i.e., to forbid one case which should be permitted because it might otherwise be thought that another case, which is actually forbidden, is permitted too.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 30a

Raba said: The law is: Leaven, in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, is forbidden [even] when there is a minute quantity, in accordance with Rab; when not in its time, whether [mixed] with its own kind or with a different kind, it is permitted, in accordance with R. Simeon. Yet did Raba say thus?¹ Surely Raba said, R. Simeon does indeed penalize him, since he transgressed 'there shall not be seen' and 'there shall not be found' with it?² — That is only in its natural state, but not when it is in a mixture.³ Now Raba⁴ is consistent with his view, For Raba said: When we were at R. Nahman's house, when the seven days of Passover were gone he would say to us, 'Go out and buy leaven from the troops.'⁵

Rab said: Pots must be broken on Passover.⁶ Why so? Let them be kept until after Passover and used with a different kind?⁷ — Lest he come to use it with its own kind. But Samuel maintained: They need not be broken, but can be kept until after its period and [then] used with their own kind⁸ or with a different kind. Now Samuel is consistent with his view. For Samuel said to the hardware merchants:⁹ Charge all equitable price for your pots, for if not I will publicly lecture [that the law is] in accordance with R. Simeon.¹⁰ Then let him lecture [thus] to them [in any case], seeing that Samuel holds as R. Simeon?¹¹ — It was Rab's town.

A certain oven was greased with fat.¹² [Thereupon] Raba b. Ahilai forbade for all time¹³ the bread [baked therein] to be eaten even with salt, lest he come to eat it with kutah.¹⁴ An objection is raised: One must not knead dough with milk, and if he does knead it, the whole loaf is forbidden, because it leads to sin.¹⁵ Similarly,

(1) That the leaven mixture is permitted after Passover.

(2) V. supra 29a.

(3) Even if he kept it in its natural, unmixed state during Passover and then it became mixed with other food, R. Simeon does not penalize him by disqualifying the mixture.

(4) Who accents the ruling of R. Simeon.

(5) Gentile troops quartered in the town, though they had baked it on Passover. — Their leaven was permitted after Passover since no transgression had been committed with it. — In the Diaspora Passover is kept for eight days, not seven. Raba probably mentions 'seven' loosely, using the Biblical phraseology, while meaning eight; v. S. Strashun R. Han. simply reads: 'when the days of Passover etc.'. V., however, Obermeyer, p. 99.

(6) Pots in which leaven is cooked absorb and retain some of the leaven. Now Rab holds that all leaven kept over Passover is forbidden after Passover, which includes absorbed leaven. Further, when other food is cooked in it after Passover the absorbed leaven imparts a flavour, and though it has a deteriorating effect, Rab holds that even such disqualifies the food. Thus the pots cannot be used after Passover; hence they must be broken.

(7) For only a very minute quantity is absorbed, and such, even according to Rab, does not disqualify a different kind.

(8) I.e., the same kind of leaven which was cooked in them before Passover.

(9) Lit., 'sellers of pots'.

(10) People did break their pots before Passover, and the merchants took advantage of the increased demand after Passover to raise prices. Thereupon Samuel threatened them that he would publicly lecture that leaven kept over Passover is not forbidden, so that people need not break their pots.

(11) As stated supra.

(12) Lit., 'grease'.

(13) Even if the oven should be fired and burnt through again.

(14) A preserve consisting of sour milk, bread-crusts and salt (Jast.). The bread of course receives the flavour of the fat, and must not be eaten with anything containing milk or a milk product.

(15) One may come to eat it with meat.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 30b

one must not grease an oven with fat, and if he does grease it, all the bread [baked therein] is forbidden until the oven is refired. Which [implies], if the oven is refired it is nevertheless permitted? This is a refutation of Raba b. Ahilai! — [It is indeed] a refutation.

Rabina said to R. Ashi: Now since Raba b. Ahilai was refuted, why did Rab say, Pots must be broken on Passover?¹ — There it was a metal oven, replied he, [whereas] here an earthen pot [is referred to]. Alternatively, both refer to earthenware: this [the oven] is fired from the inside;² while the other [the pot] is fired on the outside. And should you say, here too let him burn it [the pot] out from within, — he would spare it, lest it burst.³ Therefore a tiled pan,⁴ since it is burnt from without,⁵ is forbidden; but if he filled it with coals,⁶ it is permitted.

Rabina asked R. Ashi: What does one do about the knives on Passover? — I provide [make] new ones for myself, he replied. That is well for you, who can [afford] this, said he to him, [but] what about one who cannot [afford] this? I mean like new ones, he answered: [I thrust] their handles in loam, and their blades in fire, and then I place their handles in boiling water.⁷ But the law is: both the one and the other⁸ [need only be put] into boiling water, and in a 'first' vessel.⁹

R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: A wooden pot ladle must be purified¹⁰ in boiling water and in a 'first' vessel. [Thus] he holds, as it absorbs, so it exudes.¹¹

Meremar was asked: Glazed vessels, may they be used on Passover? About green ones there is no problem, as they are certainly forbidden;¹² the question is, how about black ones and white ones? Again, if they have splits there is no question, as they are certainly forbidden;¹³ the question is, what about smooth ones? Said he to him: We see that they exude,¹⁴ which shows that they absorb; hence they are forbidden; and the Torah testified concerning an earthen vessel that it [the absorbed matter] never passes out from its sides.¹⁵ And what is the difference in respect of wine of nesek,¹⁶ that Meremar lectured: Glazed vessels,¹⁷ whether black, white, or green, are permitted?¹⁸ And should you answer, [the interdict of] wine of nesek is [only] Rabbinical, [whereas that of] leaven is Scriptural, — surely whatever the Rabbis enacted, they enacted similar to Scriptural law? — Said he to him: This is used with hot [matter], while the other is used with cold.¹⁹

Raba b. Abba said in R. Hiyya b. Ashi's name in Samuel's name: All utensils which were used with leavened matter [hamez], cold, may be used with unleavened bread [mazzah], except a container of se'or, because it is strongly leaven.²⁰ R. Ashi said: And a haroseth²¹ container is like a container of se'or, because it is strongly leaven. Raba said: The kneading basins of Mahuza,²² since leaven is continually kneaded in them and leaven is kept in them are like a container of se'or, which is strongly leaven. That is obvious? — You might say, since they are wide, the air acts on them and they do not absorb. Therefore he informs us [otherwise].

MISHNAH. IF A GENTILE LENT [MONEY] TO AN ISRAELITE ON HIS LEAVEN,²³ AFTER PASSOVER IT IS PERMITTED FOR USE. WHILE IF AN ISRAELITE LENT [MONEY] TO A GENTILE ON HIS LEAVEN, AFTER PASSOVER IT IS PROHIBITED FOR USE.²⁴

GEMARA. It was stated: [In the case of] a creditor, — Abaye said: He collects retrospectively;²⁵ while Raba said: He collects from now and onwards.²⁶ Now, where the debtor sanctified [the pledge] or sold [it], all agree that the creditor can come and seize it,²⁷

- (1) For we see that greased ovens (these were generally of earth) can be reheated and then used, the heat expelling the traces of fat. Then let the pots too be subjected to fire, which would likewise expel the absorbed leaven.
- (2) Which is efficacious to expel absorbed matter.
- (3) Hence if he is told to burn it from within, he will burn it from without and think that enough.
- (4) A kind of plaque made of tiles upon which bread was baked.
- (5) The coals being under it and the bread on top.
- (6) On top.
- (7) This process frees them from their absorbed leaven.
- (8) Sc. the handle and the blade
- (9) A 'first' vessel means the vessel in which the water was boiled, while it is still at boiling point; a 'second' vessel is that into which the water is poured from the 'first'.
- (10) Hag'alah is the technical term for ridding a utensil of the forbidden matter which it has absorbed.
- (11) I.e., the same conditions are necessary to make it exude as those whereby it absorbed. Since the ladle absorbs the leaven from a 'first' vessel, for it is used for stirring contents of the pot on the fire, it exudes only when likewise placed in a first vessel.
- (12) These were made from an earth containing alum crystals and absorbed freely.
- (13) The splits permitting them to absorb.
- (14) I.e., they are porous.
- (15) Hence once forbidden they remain so for all time.
- (16) Neseq, lit., 'libation', is wine handled by a heathen. It is forbidden, because he may have dedicated it as a libation for his deity.
- (17) Which had contained wine of neseq.
- (18) For use, in spite of the wine which they had absorbed.
- (19) And of course it has greater powers of absorption in the former case.
- (20) And though the se'or placed therein was cold, yet it infects the vessel which in turn imparts a flavour of leaven to anything placed therein.
- (21) A paste made of flour and vinegar, used as a sauce or relish.
- (22) V. supra 5b, p. 20, n. 5.
- (23) The leaven being a pledge; the loan was made before Passover.
- (24) In both cases the leaven was seized for payment after Passover. V. infra Gemara.
- (25) I.e., if the creditor has to exact the pledge in repayment of the loan, the pledge is regarded as having retrospectively belonged to him from the time of the loan.
- (26) It is regarded as having belonged to him only from the moment he actually seized it.
- (27) From the purchaser, without compensation.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 31a

and the creditor can come and redeem it,¹ for we learned: He adds another denar and redeems this property.² They differ where the creditor sold or dedicated [it].³ Abaye said: 'He collects retrospectively'; since the time [for payment] came and he did not repay him, the matter was retrospectively revealed that from the [very] beginning it stood in his⁴ possession, and he rightly dedicated or sold [it]. But Raba ruled: 'He collects from now and onwards'; since if he [the debtor] had money, he could have quitted him with money, it is found that he [the creditor] acquires it only now.

Yet did Raba say thus? Surely Rami b. Hama said: if Reuben sold his estate to Simeon with security,⁵ and he [Simeon] set it [the money] up as a loan against himself,⁶ then Reuben died, and Reuben's creditor came and seized [the estate] from Simeon, whereupon Simeon went and satisfied him with money, it is by right that the children of Reuben can go and say to Simeon, 'As for us, we [maintain that] our father left [us] movables in your possession, and the movables of orphans are not under lien to a creditor.⁷ Now Raba said: If Simeon is wise, he lets them seize the land, and then he reclaims it from them.⁸ For R. Nahman said: If orphans seize land for their father's debt,⁹ a creditor [of their father] can in turn seize it from them. Now, if you agree that he [a creditor] collects retrospectively, it is right: for that reason he in turn can seize it from them, because it is just as though they had seized it in their father's lifetime. But if you say that he collects it from now and henceforth, why can he in turn seize it from them: surely it is as though the orphans had bought [immovable] property,¹⁰ and if orphans buy [immovable] property, is it then under a lien to [their father's] creditor? — There it is different, because he can say to them, just as I was indebted¹¹ to your father, so I was indebted to your father's creditor. [This follows] from R. Nathan[‘s dictum]. For it was taught, R. Nathan said: How do we know that if one man [claims a maneh from his neighbour, and his neighbor [claims a like sum] from another neighbour, that we collect from the one [the last] and give to the other [the first]? From the verse, and he shall give it unto him to whom he is indebted.¹²

We learned: IF A GENTILE LENT [MONEY] TO AN ISRAELITE ON HIS LEAVEN, AFTER PASSOVER IT IS PERMITTED FOR USE. It is right if you say that he collects retrospectively: therefore it is permitted for use. But if you say that he collects from now and henceforth, why is it permitted for use? [Surely] it stood in the possession of the Israelite! — The circumstances here are that he deposited it with him.¹³

Shall we say that it is dependent on Tannaim: If an Israelite lent [money] to a Gentile on his leaven, after Passover he does not transgress.¹⁴ In R. Meir's name it was said: he does transgress. Now do they not differ in this, viz., one Master holds [that] he collects retrospectively, while the other Master holds [that] he collects from now and onwards.¹⁵ — Now is that logical! Consider the second clause: But if a Gentile lent [money] to an Israelite on his leaven, after Passover he transgresses on all views. But surely the reverse [of the rulings in the first clause] is required: according to the view there [in the first clause] that he does not transgress, here he does transgress; [while] according to the view there that he does transgress, here he does not transgress!¹⁶

- (1) From hekdesch, at a mere trifle, not at its full value, so that some form of redemption may be observed.
 - (2) ‘Er. 23b. If the debtor dedicates to hekdesch property worth ninety manehs, while his debt is one hundred manehs, the creditor adds (i.e., gives) just one denar as a formal redemption and seizes it. Thus in both cases they agree that the pledge belonged retrospectively to the creditor.
 - (3) Before he actually foreclosed.
 - (4) The creditor's.
 - (5) A guarantee to indemnify S. against loss if a creditor of R. should seize it for debt.
 - (6) S. could not pay for the field, so he gave him an IOU for the sum, pledging his own property as security.
 - (7) Although their father had given security for this transaction, yet the orphans can plead, we inherited movables from our father which were in your possession, i.e., you merely owed him money, the field actually being yours; hence you should not have given that money to the creditor, because movables inherited by orphans are not subject to any lien; nor had you the right to withhold payment. Hence you still owe us the money.
 - (8) I.e., he pleads that he has no money; hence they must take the field in payment. This will prove retrospectively that they had inherited land, not movables. Then he can demand its return, since their father had indemnified him against loss.
 - (9) I.e., for a debt owing to their father.
 - (10) I.e., with the money owing to them they now purchased this estate.
 - (11) Lit., ‘pledged’.
 - (12) Num. V. 7, translating: and he (the third) shall give it unto him (the first) to whom he (the second) is indebted.
 - (13) It is now assumed that he deposited it with the Gentile as a pledge, and the Gentile acquires a title to it as such.
 - (14) If he takes the leaven for the debt and uses it.
 - (15) It being now assumed that he did not deposit his leaven with the Gentile.
 - (16) Since the case is reversed, the Gentile having lent money to the Jew, obviously the rulings too should be reversed, if they are dependent on whether the creditor collects retrospectively or from now and onwards.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 31b

Rather the circumstances here [in both clauses] are that he [the borrower] deposited it [the leaven] with him, and they differ in R. Isaac[‘s dictum]. For R. Isaac said: Whence do we know that the creditor acquires a title to the pledge?¹ Because it is said, [Thou shalt surely restore to him the pledge when the sun goeth down...] and it shall be righteousness unto thee:² if he has no title thereto, whence is his righteousness?³ Hence it follows that the creditor acquires a title to the pledge. Now the first Tanna holds, That⁴ applies only to an Israelite [taking a pledge] from an Israelite, since we read in his case, ‘and it shall be righteousness unto thee’; but an Israelite [taking a pledge] from a Gentile does not acquire a title.⁵ While R. Meir holds, [It follows] a fortiori; if an Israelite acquires from an Israelite, how much the more an Israelite from a Gentile! But if a Gentile lent [money] to an Israelite on his leaven, after Passover all agree that he transgresses: there the Gentile certainly does not acquire a title from the Israelite.⁶

We learned: IF A GENTILE LENT [MONEY] TO AN ISRAELITE ON HIS LEAVEN, AFTER PASSOVER IT IS PERMITTED FOR USE. Now even granted that he deposited it with him, surely you said that a Gentile does not acquire a title from an Israelite? There is no difficulty: there [in the Mishnah] it means that he said to him, ‘From now’;⁷ here [in the Baraita] it means that he did not say to him, ‘From now’,⁸ And whence do you assure that we draw a distinction between where he said ‘from now and where he did not say ‘from now’? — Because it was taught: If a Gentile deposited with an Israelite large loaves as a pledge,⁹ he [the Israelite] does not transgress; but if he said to him, ‘I have made them yours,’¹⁰ he transgresses. Why is the first clause different from the second? This surely proves that where he says to him, ‘from now,’ it is different from where he does not say, ‘from now. This proves it.

Our Rabbis taught: A shop belonging to an Israelite and its wares belong to an Israelite, while Gentile workers enter therein, leaven that is found there after Passover is forbidden for use, while it need not be stated for eating. A shop belonging to a Gentile and the wares belong to a Gentile, while Israelite workers go in and out, leaven that is found there after Passover may be eaten, while it is unnecessary to state [that] benefit [is permitted].¹¹

GEMARA. R. Hisda said: Yet he must annul it in his heart.¹⁴ A Tanna taught: How far is the searching of a dog? Three handbreadths.¹⁵ R. Aha the son of R. Joseph said to R. Ashi: As to what Samuel said, Money can only be guarded [by placing it] in the earth¹⁶ — do we require [it to be covered by] three handbreadths or not? — Here, he replied, we require three hand breadths on account of the smell [of the leaven];¹⁷ but there [it is put into the earth] in order to cover it from the eye; therefore three handbreadths are not required. And how much [is necessary]? — Said Rafram of Sikkara:¹⁸ one handbreadth.

- (20) I.e., he knew that it was terumah, even if he did not know that it was leaven.
- (21) If the terumah was unclean, when it has no other value, since unclean terumah may not be eaten. The reason is this: the law of restoring the principal plus a fifth, in kind, holds good only when the terumah is misappropriated unwittingly, the restoration being for the purpose of atonement. But when one appropriates it deliberately his act constitutes larceny, and he must return its value in money, not in kind, as in all cases of larceny. Leaven during Passover, however, has no monetary value, all benefit thereof being interdicted: hence he is free from payment.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 32a or anoints [therewith]; whether it was defiled or undefiled terumah, he must pay a fifth and a fifth of the fifth.¹ The scholars asked: When he repays, does he repay according to quantity² or according to value?³ Where it was originally worth four zuz while subsequently it was worth a zuz,⁴ there is no question, for he must certainly repay on the original [price]. according to its value,⁵ because it is no worse than a robber, for we learned: All robbers repay as at the time of the robbery.⁶ The question arises where it was originally worth a zuz while subsequently it was worth four. What then? Must he repay according to quantity, for he [the priest] can say, He ate a griwa,⁷ he must repay a griwa; or perhaps he repays according to the value: he ate [the worth of] a zuz, he repays [the worth of] a zuz? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: If he ate figs [of terumah] and repaid him dates, blessings be upon him! It is well if you say that he must repay according to quantity: therefore 'blessings be upon him,' because he ate a griwa of dried figs, which is worth a zuz, and he returns [him] a griwa of dates, which is worth four. But if you say that he pays according to its value, why should 'blessings be upon him': he ate for a zuz and he returns [as much as] for a zuz? — Said Abaye, Indeed he pays according to value, yet why should 'blessings come upon him'? Because he ate something for which buyers are not eager,⁸ and he pays [with] something for which buyers are eager.⁹

We learned: HE WHO EATS TERUMAH OF LEAVEN ON PASSOVER UNWITTINGLY, MUST PAY [TO THE PRIEST] THE PRINCIPAL PLUS A FIFTH. It is well if you say that he must pay according to quantity: then it is right. But if you say that he must pay according to the value, has then leaven on Passover any value? — Yes: the author of this is R. Jose the Galilean, who maintained: Leaven on Passover is permitted for use. If so, consider the second clause: IF DELIBERATELY, HE IS FREE FROM PAYMENT AND FROM [LIABILITY FOR] ITS VALUE AS FUEL. But if [the author is] R. Jose the Galilean, why is he free from payment and from [liability for] its value as fuel?¹⁰ — He holds as R. Nehunia b. ha-Kanah. For it was taught: R. Nehunia b. ha-Kanah used to treat the Day of Atonement as the Sabbath in regard to payment, etc.¹¹ This¹² is dependent on Tannaim: He who eats terumah of leaven on Passover is free from payment and from [liability for] the value of the fuel: this is R. Akiba's ruling. R. Johanan b. Nuri declares him liable. Said R. Akiba to R. Johanan b. Nuri: What benefit then has he [the priest] therein?¹³ R. Johanan b. Nuri retorted to R. Akiba: And what benefit has [the priest therein] that he who eats unclean terumah during the rest of the year must pay?¹⁴ Not so, replied he: if you speak of unclean terumah during the rest of the year, [that is] because though he [the priest] does not enjoy the right to eat it, yet he enjoys the right to use it as fuel.¹⁵ Will you say the same of this, in which he does not enjoy the right of eating or the right to use it as fuel? Hence, to what is this like: to terumah of mulberries and grapes which was defiled, in which he does not enjoy the right of eating or the right to use it as fuel.¹⁶ When is this said?¹⁷ When he separates terumah and it because leaven. But if he separates terumah of leaven [on Passover], all agree [that] it is not holy.¹⁸

Another [Baraita] taught: [And if a man eat of the holy things unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it,] and shall give unto the priest the holy thing;¹⁹ [that implies,] something which is fit to be holy, thus excluding him who eats terumah of leaven on Passover, [teaching] that he is free from payment and from holds good when one incurs 'death at the hands of heaven', which is the penalty for eating terumah deliberately. According to this, the first clause, UNWITTINGLY, must now mean that the eater knew neither that it was terumah nor that it was leaven; for if he knew that it was leaven he is liable to kareth, which frees him from payment. [liability for] its value as fuel: this is the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob; but R. Eleazar Hisma declares him liable. Said R. Eliezer b. Jacob to R. Eleazar Hisma: Yet what benefit has he [the priest] therein? R. Eleazar Hisma replied to R. Eliezer b. Jacob: And what benefit has he [therein] that he who eats unclean terumah during the rest of the year, must pay? Not so, answered he: if you speak of unclean terumah during the rest of the year, [that is] because though he [the priest] does not enjoy the right to eat it, yet he enjoys the right to use it as fuel; will you say [the same] of this, in which he does not enjoy the right of eating or the right to use it as fuel? Said he to him, In this too he has the right to use it as fuel, for if the priest wishes, he can place it before his dog or burn it under his pot.

(1) The first fifth becomes the same as the original terumah, and if he ate it, he must restore that fifth and a fifth thereof.

(2) Lit., 'measure'.

(3) The question arises because since he must repay in kind it is possible that the quantity is the deciding factor, as explained in the text.

(4) 'Originally' and 'subsequently' mean when he ate it and when he makes restoration respectively.

(5) This he must return quantitatively four times as much, and the fifth in addition.

(6) B.K. 93b; i.e., what its value was then.

(7) A dry measure equal to one se'ah.

(8) Sc. 'dried figs'. Lit., 'buyers do not leap upon it'.

(9) Sc. dates.

(10) Seeing that it has a monetary value.

(11) V. supra 29a and note a.l. The same

(12) Whether payment is to be made according to quantity or value.

(13) Seeing that it is forbidden to him for use, he suffers no loss.

(14) I.e., what benefit can a priest derive from unclean terumah, seeing that it must not be eaten. Yet if a lay Israelite eats it, all agree that he must pay. The text is in disorder, cf. Rashi and Tosef. Pes. I.

(15) Lit., 'though he has not in it a permission of eating, yet he has in it a permission of heating'. The other passages below have the same literal meanings.

(16) Strictly speaking, he enjoys the latter right, but it is unfit for fuel on account of the juice

(17) When is it conceivable that terumah of leaven should possess sanctity during Passover?

(18) Even according to R. Jose the Galilean, though he permits general benefit from leaven on Passover. The reason is given below.

(19) Lev. XXII, 14.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 32b

Abaye said: R. Eliezer b. Jacob, R. Akiba and R. Johanan b. Nuri all¹ hold [that] leaven during Passover is forbidden for use, and they differ in this, viz., R. Akiba² holds: He must pay according to value;³ while R. Johanan b. Nuri holds: He must pay according to quantity. That is obvious? — You might say, R. Johanan b. Nuri also holds as R. Akiba [that] he must pay according to value, but the reason that he declares him liable there is this, [viz..] because he agrees with R. Jose the Galilean who maintained, Leaven is permitted for use on Passover: [therefore] he informs us [that it is not so]. Yet perhaps that indeed is so? — If so, let R. Johanan b. Nuri answer R. Akiba just as R. Eleazar Hisma answered R. Eliezer b. Jacob.

Our Rabbis taught: He who eats as much as an olive of terumah⁴ must pay the principal plus a fifth. Abba Saul said: [He is not liable] unless it has the worth of a perutah.⁵ What is the first Tanna's reason? — Scripture saith, And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly⁶ and eating [requires] as much as an olive.⁷ And Abba Saul: what is [his] reason? — Scripture saith, and he shall give [unto the priest the holy thing].⁶ and giving is not less than the worth of a perutah. And the other too, surely 'eat' is written? That comes [to teach], excluding him who destroys [terumah].⁸ And the first Tanna, surely it is written, 'and he shall give'? — He requires that [to intimate that he must return] something which is fit to be holy.⁹

Our Rabbis taught: He who eats less than an olive of terumah must pay the principal, but he does not pay the [additional] fifth. How is it meant? If it is not worth a perutah, let him not pay the principal either; while if it is worth a perutah, let him pay a fifth too? — After all it means that it is worth a perutah, yet even so, since it was less than an olive he pays the principal but does not pay the fifth. The Rabbis stated this before R. Papa: This is not according to Abba Saul, for if according to Abba Saul, surely he says, since it is worth a perutah, even if it is less than an olive [the law applies]! — Said R. Papa to them: You may even say [that it agrees with] Abba Saul. Abba Saul requires both.¹⁰ Yet does Abba Saul require both? Surely we learned, Abba Saul said: For that which possesses the worth of a perutah he [the eater] is liable for payment; [for] that which does not possess the worth of a perutah he is not liable for payment. Said they [the Sages] to him. The worth of a perutah was stated in connection with a trespass-offering only;¹¹ but for terumah he is not liable unless it contains as much as an olive. Now if this is correct,¹² they should have stated, 'once it contains as much as an olive'?¹³ This is a refutation.

Now, R. Papa too retracted,¹⁴ for it was taught: [If any one commit a trespass,] and sin unwittingly:¹⁵ this excludes deliberate[tres pass]. But does this not follow a fortiori: if other precepts, for [the transgression of] which one is liable to kareth,¹⁶ yet [Scripture] exempts the deliberate offender in their case;¹⁷ [with regard to] trespass, which does not involve kareth, does it not follow that the deliberate transgressor is exempt? No: if you say [thus] in the case of other precepts, that is because he is not liable to death on their account; will you say [the same] of trespass, for which death is incurred?¹⁸ Therefore 'unwittingly' is stated, excluding deliberate [transgression]. Now R. Nahman b. Isaac said to R. Hiyya b. Abin: This Tanna, at first, regards kareth as severer, while subsequently he regards death [at the hands of Heaven] as more severe?¹⁹ And he answered him,

This is what he means: No; if you say [thus] in the case of other precepts, that is because he is not liable to death on their account for less than an olive; will you say [the same] of trespass, where death is incurred for less than an olive. Whereon he said to him, Thy mind be at rest, because thou hast set my mind at rest. Said he to him, What satisfaction [is there in this answer], seeing that Rabbah and R. Shesheth have swung an axe at it:²⁰ Whom do you know to maintain?

- (1) Rashi omits 'R. Eliezer b. Jacob' and 'all'.
- (2) And likewise R. Eliezer b. Jacob.
- (3) And since it has no value, the eater is exempt.
- (4) This refers to the rest of the year.
- (5) The smallest coin.
- (6) Lev. XXII, 14.
- (7) This is the smallest quantity to which the term 'eating' can be applied.
- (8) Without eating it; this law of the extra fifth does not apply in his case.
- (9) I.e., the return must be made in kind, which can itself be holy (viz, terumah), not in money, which cannot be terumah.
- (10) It must be worth not less than a perutah and be not less than an olive in size.
- (11) If he unwittingly converts hekdesch (q.v. Glos.) to secular use he is liable to a trespass-offering, providing the object so misappropriated is worth at least a perutah.
- (12) That Abba Saul requires both.
- (13) Since he too agrees to this, their view must be: once it contains the size of an olive he is liable even if it is not worth a perutah.
- (14) From his view that Abba Saul requires both.
- (15) Lev. V, 15: the passage deals with the trespass-offering for the misappropriation of hekdesch and the restitution of the principal plus a fifth.
- (16) V. Glos. E.g., if one consumes blood or forbidden fat (heleb).
- (17) From a sacrifice, which is due only for an unwitting offence.
- (18) Surely not. By 'death', death at the hands of Heaven is meant.
- (19) This follows from a comparison of the two halves of the argument.
- (20) I.e., proved it to be incorrect.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 33a

If he deliberately transgressed in respect of a trespass-offering,¹ [he is punished] by death? It is Rabbi. For it was taught: If he deliberately transgressed in respect of a trespass-offering, — Rabbi said: [He is punished] by death; while the Sages maintain: By a warning.² What is Rabbi's reason? — Said R. Abbahu: He derives identity of law from the fact that 'sin' is written here and in the case of terumah:³ just as terumah involves death, so trespass involves death. And from that [it also follows]: just as terumah [involves punishment] for as much as an olive, so trespass [involves punishment] for as much as an olive.⁴ Now R. Papa demurred:⁵ How do you know that Rabbi holds as the Rabbis;⁶ perhaps he agrees with Abba Saul, who said: If it possesses the worth of a perutah, even if it does not contain as much as an olive?⁷ But surely it was R. Papa who said [that] Abba Saul requires both? Hence this proves that he retracted.

Mar the son of Rabina said, This is what he⁸ means: No: if you say thus of other precepts — where the unintentional is not treated as intentional, for if he intended cutting what was detached but cut what is attached, he is not culpable;⁹ will you say [the same] in the case of trespass, where if he intended to warn himself with wool shearings of hullin but warned himself with the wool shearings of a burnt-offering he is liable to a trespass-offering?

R. Nahman b. Isaac said: He means this: If you say thus in the case of other precepts, that is because he who is not engaged therein is not declared culpable like he who is engaged therein, for if he intended picking up that which was detached but he plucked¹⁰ that which is attached [instead], he is not culpable;¹¹ will you say [the same] of trespass, where if he stretched out his hand to take a vessel and [incidentally] anointed his hand with holy oil,¹² he is liable for trespass?

The Master said: ‘When is this said? When he separates terumah and it became leaven. But if he separates terumah of leaven on Passover, all agree that it is not holy.’ Whence do we know this? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, Scripture saith, [The firstfruits of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thy oil ...] shalt thou give to him:¹³ but not for its light.¹⁴ R. Huna son of R. Joshua objected: One must not separate terumah from unclean [produce] for clean; yet if he separates [thus] unwittingly, his terumah is valid. Yet why? Let us say, ‘for him, but not for his light’? — There is no difficulty: There it enjoyed a time of fitness,¹⁵ whereas here¹⁶ it did not enjoy a time of fitness.¹⁷ And how is it conceivable that it had no time of fitness? E.g. if it became leaven whilst attached [to the soil].¹⁸ But if it became leaven when detached,¹⁹ would it indeed be holy?²⁰ — Yes, he replied: ‘the sentence is by the decree of the watchers, and the matter by the word of the holy ones’;²¹ and thus do they rule²² in the academy in accordance with my view.

When R. Huna the son of R. Joshua came,²³

- (1) I.e., he deliberately transgressed where an unwitting transgression involves a trespass-offering.
 - (2) I.e., flagellation. This is a technical term to denote that he has infringed an ordinary negative injunction, for which he is flagellated.
 - (3) Trespass: If a soul commit a trespass, and sin through ignorance in the holy things of the Lord (Lev. V, 15); Terumah: Lest they bear sin for it, and die therefor (Ibid. XXII, 9).
 - (4) This is the ‘axe’: according to this R. Hiyya b. Abin is obviously wrong.
 - (5) In objection to ‘those who swung the axe’.
 - (6) That as much as an olive is the minimum to involve payment or punishment in the case of terumah.
 - (7) Hence the same applies to trespass too, and thus R. Hiyya b. Abin's answer is correct.
 - (8) The Tanna of the cited teaching.
 - (9) This refers to the Sabbath, when one must not cut or pluck produce growing in the soil (‘attached’). In the present case he is not liable to a sin-offering, which is only due when a man sins in ignorance, i.e., where he intended to do what he did, but did not know that it was forbidden.
 - (10) Lit., ‘cut’.
 - (11) Here he was not engaged in plucking or cutting at all.
 - (12) There too he was not engaged in anointing at all.
 - (13) Deut. XVII, 4.
 - (14) I.e., the priest must be able to consume it himself and not have to burn it for its heat or light. Hence if it is separated in a state in which it cannot be eaten, as here, it does not become terumah.
 - (15) Before it became unclean it was fit to be separated as terumah.
 - (16) In the case of the leaven terumah.
 - (17) It was not fit to be terumah before Passover as it goes on explaining.
 - (18) Whilst before it is harvested it cannot be declared terumah.
 - (19) I.e., before Passover, so that it was fit to be terumah before the Festival.
 - (20) If separated as terumah during Passover.
 - (21) Dan. IV, 14; i.e., this is the view of great teachers.
 - (22) מור"י implies to give a practical, as opposed to a mere theoretical, ruling.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 33b

he said, Scripture saith, The firstfruits [of thy corn etc.], [implying] that its residue is distinct [in that it becomes permitted] to the Israelite,¹ [thus] this² is excluded, since its residue is not [so] distinct.³

R. Ala b. R. ‘Awia sat before R. Joshua and he sat and said in R. Johanan's name: If grapes are defiled, one may tread them out less than an egg in quantity at a time, and their wine is fit for libations.⁴ This proves that he holds that the juice is indeed stored up;⁵ [consequently] when is it [the juice] defiled? When he expresses it; [but] when he expresses it, its standard quantity [for defiling] is absent.⁶ If so, [he can tread] as much as an egg too, for we learned: If a man unclean through a corpse squeezes out olives or grapes exactly as much as an egg in quantity, they are clean?⁷ — There it is [thus] if he did it;⁸ here it is in the first instance [when he must not tread as much as an egg] for fear lest he come to tread⁹ more than an egg.¹⁰ Said R. Hisda to him, Who needs you and R. Johanan your teacher: whither then has their uncleanness¹¹ gone? This proves that he holds that the juice is indeed absorbed,¹² and since the [solid] eatable is defiled, the juice too is defiled. And do you not hold that the juice is stored up? he replied. Surely we learned: If he who is unclean through a corpse squeezes out olives and grapes exactly as much as an egg in quantity, they are clean. Now it is well if you say that the liquid is stored up: for that reason it is clean. But if you say [that] it is absorbed, why is it clean? — Said he to him: We discuss here grapes which were not made fit;¹³ when [then] do they become fit? when he squeezes them;¹⁴ but when he squeezes them the standard quantity [for defilement] is diminished.¹⁵ For if you should not say thus, [them] when it was taught, ‘To what is this like? To terumah of mulberries and grapes which were defiled, which is not permitted to him either for eating or for burning.’¹⁶ — but surely it may be eaten too, for if he wishes, he can tread them out less than an egg at a time?¹⁷ — Said Raba: It is a preventive measure,¹⁸ lest he come to a stumbling-block through them.¹⁹ Abaye said to him, Yet do we fear a stumbling-block? Surely it was taught: One may light [a fire] with bread or oil of terumah which was defiled!²⁰ — The bread he casts among the wood, he replied, and the oil of terumah he pours into a repulsive vessel.²¹

[It was stated in] the text: ‘One may light [a fire] with bread or oil of terumah which was defiled’. Abaye said in Hezekiah's name, and Raba said, The School of R. Isaac b. Martha said in R. Huna's name: They learned this of bread only, but not of wheat, lest he come to a stumbling-block through it.²² But R. Johanan said: Even wheat.²³ But why? Let us fear lest he come to a stumbling-block through it? — As R. Ashi said [elsewhere].

(1) I.e., by giving the firstfruits, viz., the terumah to the priest, the residue becomes permitted to the Israelite.

(2) Leaven separated as terumah during Passover.

(3) The residue, being leaven, remains forbidden to the Israelite.

(4) On the altar. Unclean food less than an egg in quantity cannot defile other eatables. Hence when he treads out the grapes in such small quantities, there is never enough to defile the exuded juice, and the wine manufactured therefrom is clean, and consequently fit for libations on the altar, for which, of course, only undefiled wine is valid.

(5) It is not joined, as it were, to the outer skin and part of it, but like a liquid that is kept in a vessel. For if it were held to be absorbed and part of the skin, it would become unclean simultaneously with the skin.

(6) As explained on p. 152, n. 14.

(7) This person defiles food, and the food in turn, if not less than an egg in quantity, defiles liquids. Here the man does not touch the expressed juice. Now after the first drop issues the residue is less than the necessary minimum and therefore it does not defile the liquid that follows

(8) If he squeezes as much as an egg, it is clean.

(9) I.e., tread out.

(10) If he comes to ask what to do, he is told to tread it less than an egg at a time. For if he is permitted to tread out exactly as much as an egg, he may exceed it, thus rendering the whole unclean.

(11) Of the grapes.

(12) As part of the grape, and does not stand separate.

(13) To become unclean. Before an eatable can become unclean it must have had moisture upon it.

(14) I.e., the first drop which exudes and touches the outer skin makes the grapes fit to become unclean.

(15) For after the first drop has oozed out, less than an egg in quantity is left.

(16) V. supra 32a.

(17) If we assume that the liquid is merely stored up. Hence it follows that the liquid is absorbed and is unclean simultaneously with the outer skins of the mulberries and grapes.

- (18) Sc. thus denying him the right to squeeze them out in such small quantities.
 (19) He may eat them whilst treading them.
 (20) And we do not fear that he may come to eat it.
 (21) So that in both cases he is not likely to eat it.
 (22) Even if wheat is thrown among wood it does not become repulsive.
 (23) Is permitted.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 34a

It refers to boiled [grains]. so that they are repulsive; so here too it refers to boiled [grains]. which are repulsive.¹

And where was R. Ashi's [explanation] stated? In reference to what R. Abin son of R. Aha said in R. Isaac's name: Abba Saul was the baker² in Rabbi's house, and they used to heat him hot water with wheat of defiled terumah, wherewith to knead dough in purity. But why? Let us fear lest he come to a stumbling-block through it?³ — Said R. Ashi: It refers to boiled [grains], which are repulsive.

Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanania b. Abin studied Terumot⁴ at Rabbah's academy. Rabbah b. Mattenah met them [and] asked them, What have you discussed in Terumoth, at the Master's academy? — Said they to him, But what is your difficulty? He replied. We learned: Plants of terumah⁵ which were defiled, and he [their owner] replanted them, are clean in that they do not defile [other eatables],⁶ but they are forbidden to be eaten [as terumah].⁷ But since they are clean in that they do not defile, why are they forbidden to be eaten? — Said they to him, Thus did Rabbah say: What is meant by 'forbidden'? They are forbidden to lay Israelites. Now what does he inform us? That that which grows of terumah is [itself] terumah! [But] we have [already] learned it [elsewhere]: That which grows of terumah is terumah?⁸ And should you answer: It refers to the second growth,⁹ and what does he inform us? [That this law holds good] in respect of that whose seed¹⁰ is not destroyed?¹¹ But surely we learned this too: [In the case of] tebel, that which grows out of it is permitted in a species whose seed is destroyed¹² but in the case of a species whose seed is not destroyed, even its second growth¹³ is forbidden for eating!¹⁴ — They were silent. Said they to him, Have you heard anything about this? Thus did R. Shesheth say, he answered, what does 'forbidden' mean? They are forbidden to priests, since they became unfit [for eating] through [his] mental neglect.¹⁵ That is correct on the view that mental neglect is an intrinsic disqualification,¹⁶ then it is well. But on the view that mental neglect is a disqualification of defilement,¹⁷ what can be said?¹⁸ For it was stated, [As to] mental neglect: R. Johanan said, It is a disqualification of defilement; while R. Simeon b. Lakish said, It is an intrinsic disqualification.¹⁹ 'R. Johanan said, It is a disqualification of defilement', for if Elijah should come and declare it clean,²⁰ we heed him.²¹ 'R. Simeon b. Lakish said, It is an intrinsic disqualification', for if Elijah should come and declare it clean, we do not heed him. R. Johanan raised an objection to R. Simeon b. Lakish: R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: There was a small passage between the stairway and the altar at the west of the stairway, whither they used to throw disqualified bird sin-offerings until [the flesh] became disfigured²² and then they passed out to the place of burning.²³ Now it is well if you say that [mental neglect] is a disqualification of uncleanness: therefore it requires disfigurement, lest Elijah may come and declare it clean.²⁴ But if you say that it is an intrinsic disqualification, what is the need of disfigurement? Surely it was taught, This is the general rule:

- (1) When thrown among the wood.
 (2) Lit., 'mixer' (of dough).
 (3) If the unclean wheat is kept for that purpose, as above.
 (4) The Tractate on the laws of Terumah.
 (5) E.g., cabbages and leeks which were separated as terumah.

- (6) Because the planting in the ground removes their uncleanness.
- (7) Maharam deletes the bracketed passage. — It is now assumed that the prohibition refers to priests, and they may not be eaten because they are defiled terumah, v. Ter. IX, 7.
- (8) Even in the case of a species whose original seed rots away in the earth.
- (9) Lit., ‘what is growth of what is grown’.
- (10) I.e., the original stock.
- (11) E.g., an onion, the original stock of which remains when it is planted. Now its original leaves grow larger, and this is referred to as the growth. But in addition it sends out fresh shoots altogether, which never were terumah: these are referred to as the second growth, and we are informed that even these are terumah.
- (12) E.g., if tebel of wheat is sown the crop is not tebel. Before produce becomes tebel one may make a light meal of it through he has not yet rendered the tithe and terumah; but nothing whatsoever may be eaten of it when it reaches the stage of tebel. Though that which grows from terumah remains terumah even if its seed is destroyed, that is merely a Rabbinical stringency, lest the priestly dues are thus evaded. But that which grows of tebel is not tebel but ordinary produce of which a light meal may be enjoyed until it becomes tebel, which happens when it is heaped up in a stack.
- (13) As explained in n. 7.
- (14) Because it retains the same status as that of its parent stock. The same logically applies to terumah that is sown.
- (15) And not because it is defiled terumah. The priest must always keep the terumah in mind; v. Num. XVIII, 8: behold, I have given thee the charge of mine heave offerings — ‘charge’ implies that
- (16) I.e., sacred food, even if proved not to have been defiled, becomes unfit thereby, because this neglect is in itself a disqualification.
- (17) I.e., it is not a disqualification in itself, but merely because while the priest was not thinking about it it might have become defiled.
- (18) For it has now been established that even when it is certainly unclean it regains its cleanliness when replanted.
- (19) [This question remains unanswered, v. R. Hananel.]
- (20) Elijah was regarded as the future resolver of all doubts; cf. B.M., Sonc. ed. p. 6, n. 2.
- (21) Declaring the terumah fit to be eaten.
- (22) I.e., by being kept overnight and thus becoming nothar (v. Glos.)
- (23) The reference is to the offerings disqualified through mental neglect.
- (24) In which case it should not have been burnt. But when it is disfigured it must be burnt in any case.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 34b

Wherever its disqualification is in itself, it must be burnt immediately; [if it is] in the blood¹ or in its owner,² [the flesh] must become disfigured and [then] it goes out to the place of burning.-

he must think of it. The terumah, having once become defiled, however, the priest would dismiss it from his mind, as he would abandon the hope of using it. Said he to him: This tanna is a tanna of the School of Rabbah b. Abbuha³ who maintained: Even *piggul*⁴ requires disfigurement.⁵

He [R. Johanan] raised an objection to him: If the flesh became unclean or disqualified, or if it passed without the curtains,⁶ R. Eliezer said: He [the priest] must sprinkle [the blood];⁷ R. Joshua said: He must not sprinkle [the blood].⁸ Yet R. Joshua admits that if he does sprinkle [it], [the sacrifice] is accepted.⁹ Now, what does ‘disqualified’ mean? Is it not through mental neglect?¹⁰ Now, it is well if you say that it is a disqualification of uncleanness, then it is conceivable that the headplate makes it accepted.¹¹ But if you say that it is an intrinsic disqualification why is it accepted?¹² What does ‘disqualified’ mean? It was disqualified by a tebul yom.¹³ If so, it is identical with ‘unclean?’ There are two kinds of uncleanness.¹⁴

When Rabin went up,¹⁵ he reported this teaching¹⁶ with reference to the terumah plants before R. Jeremiah, whereupon he observed: The Babylonians are fools. Because they dwell in a land of darkness¹⁷ they engage in dark [obscure] discussions.¹⁸ Have you not heard this [dictum] of R. Simeon b. Lakish in R. Oshaia's name: If the water of the Festival was defiled¹⁹ and he made level contact and then sanctified it, it is clean; if he sanctified it and then made level contact, it is unclean.²⁰ Now consider: this is ‘sowing’;²¹ what does it matter whether he made level contact and then sanctified it or he sanctified it and then made level contact? This proves that ‘sowing’ has no effect upon hekdes;²² so here too sowing has no effect upon terumah.²³

R. Dimi sat and reported this teaching.²⁴ Said Abaye to him, Does he R. Oshaia mean [that] he sanctified it in a vessel, but if [merely] verbally the Rabbis did not set a higher standard;²⁵ or perhaps for verbal [sanctification]²⁶ too the Rabbis set a higher standard? — I have not heard this, he replied, [but] I have heard something similar to it. For R. Abbahu said in R. Johanan's name: If grapes were defiled and he trod them and then sanctified them,²⁷ they are clean;²⁸ if he sanctified them and then trod them, they are unclean. Now grapes are [a case of] verbal sanctification, yet even so the Rabbis set a higher standard!²⁹ — Said R. Joseph: You speak of grapes! We treat here of grapes of terumah,³⁰ their verbal sanctification is being tantamount to the sanctification of a vessel.³¹ But those that require a vessel [for sanctification,³² where they are sanctified] verbally [maybe] the Rabbis did not set a higher standard.

‘If he trod them’ — [does that mean] even in great quantity? But did R. Johanan say thus? Surely R. Johanan said: if grapes are defiled, he may tread them out less than an egg in quantity at a time?³³ — If you wish I can say that here too [it means] less than an egg at a time. Alternatively, I can answer: There the case is that they [the grapes] had come into contact with a first degree [of uncleanness], so that they [the grapes] are a second. But here they come into contact with a second degree, so that they are a third.³⁴

Raba said: We too learned [thus]:³⁵ And he shall put thereto running [living] water in a vessel:³⁶ [this teaches] that its running must be [directly] into a vessel.³⁷ ‘And he shall put’ — this proves that it is detached, but surely this is attached!³⁸

- (1) E.g., if the blood was spilled before it could be sprinkled.
 - (2) E.g., if he became unclean before the Passover could be eaten and there were no others available to eat it, as the Passover may be eaten only by those registered for it.
 - (3) [R. Hananel seems to omit ‘is a ... who’. R. Simeon b. Lakish could certainly not refer to the School of Rabbah b. Abbuha, who was a disciple of Rab.]
 - (4) V. Glos. There the flesh itself is certainly disqualified.
 - (5) 73b.
 - (6) The partitions of the Temple corresponding to those of the Tabernacle (Jast.). Thus ‘without the curtains’ means without the enclosures of the Temple Court. This refers to sacrifices of the higher sanctity (v. p. 108, n. 2), whose flesh might not be eaten without these enclosures.
 - (7) He holds that the blood must be sprinkled even when there is no flesh.
 - (8) He holds that the blood is dependent on the flesh.
 - (9) This is a technical term denoting that the sacrifice fulfils its purpose.
 - (10) For there is no other disqualification, since defilement is stated separately. It cannot mean a disqualification through an illegitimate intention, e.g., if the officiating priest expressed his intention to eat the flesh outside the boundaries or after the time allotted for its eating, for then the blood too is disqualified and can certainly not be sprinkled.
 - (11) The headplate worn by the High Priest makes atonement in such a case, even if the flesh is definitely unclean; v. supra 16b. Nevertheless R. Joshua rules that the blood must not be sprinkled at the outset, for he holds that the acceptability conferred by the headplate is only if it was sprinkled, but it may not be sprinkled in the first place in reliance on the headplate.
 - (12) For the headplate cannot make atonement for such a disqualification.
 - (13) V. Glos. His touch disqualifies it, as he is not really clean until evening falls.
 - (14) V. Mishnah supra 14a and note a.l.
 - (15) From Babylonia to Palestine.
 - (16) Sc. of R. Shesheth.

(17) Babylonia is possibly so called on account of the Parsees (fire-worshippers). who forbade the Jews to have any light in their dwellings on their (the Parsees') festivals.

(18) I.e., they discuss laws without knowing their true meanings.

(19) 'Festival' without a further determination always means the Feast of Tabernacles. The 'water of the Festival' is that used for libations each day which was drawn the previous evening with great ceremony and joy. Here the reference is to the water for the Sabbath libation; fresh water could not be brought on the Sabbath, and therefore this water had to be made clean.

(20) Unclean water can be purified by placing it in a vessel and immersing the vessel in a mikweh (ritual bath) until the water in the vessel is level with and just touches the water of the mikweh. This is called hashshakah (lit. 'kissing') and the unclean water thereby becomes one with the mikweh, which of course is clean. The water libation was sanctified by formal dedication, or by being poured into a sacred service vessel.

(21) The process of levelling is regarded as 'sowing', as though the water were sown in the mikweh, just as unclean produce becomes clean if it is resown in the earth.

(22) Lit., 'there is no sowing for hekdesch' — to make it clean. The reason is because a higher standard of purity is required in the case of hekdesch.

(23) Hence the plants remain unclean in so far that they are forbidden to be eaten.

(24) Of. R. Oshaia.

(25) I.e., by formal dedication, v. n. 4.

(26) And in such a case levelling is considered effective.

(27) For its wine to be used for libations.

(28) V. supra 33b, where R. Johanan holds that the expressed juice of unclean grapes is clean.

(29) In declaring the expressed juice unclean, whereas it would be clean if it were not sanctified.

(30) The sanctification referred to is not as previously assumed (cf. p. 158. n. 11) for libations but for purposes of terumah.

(31) Since terumah can only be verbally sanctified, there being no sacred vessels to sanctify them.

(32) Such as wine for libations.

(33) V. supra p. 33f notes.

(34) V. supra 14a, p. 62, n. 2. When the grapes are unclean in the second degree they render the juice unclean in the first degree, it being a general rule that whatever disqualifies terumah, i.e., eatables unclean in the second degree, defiles liquids in the first degree (supra 14b). But when they are unclean in the third degree they cannot defile liquids. Hence if he first trod them, even in great quantity, they remain clean. But if he first sanctified them, the expressed juice is unclean, because the Rabbis set a higher standard for terumah.

(35) Viz., that the Rabbis set a higher standard for sacred objects, even when they were verbally sanctified.

(36) Num. XIX, 17.

(37) In which it is sanctified with the ashes of the red heifer, but it must not be collected in another vessel and then poured over into this.

(38) The passage is rather difficult. Rashi: 'And he shall put' implies that Scripture refers to detached water, i.e., water which does not form part of a stream but has been detached and collected in a vessel, whence it is poured into a second vessel containing the ashes. But when the Mishnah states that the running must be direct into the vessel, it insists on attached water, i.e., water forming part of the stream. This must be because the Rabbis set a higher standard. Tosaf.: 'and he shall put' implies that the water is regarded as detached water, which can be defiled, though actually it is running water, as stated, and consequently this proves that by Scriptural law sacred water cannot be made clean by 'levelling' (v. p. 158, n. 4). for levelling only renders it as attached water, whereas we see here that even when attached it is regarded as detached. And just as Scripture thus sets a higher standard for sacred water, so did the Rabbis set a higher standard for terumah. — Maharsha observes (on Rashi's explanation) that he does not see how this proves that the Rabbis set a higher standard even when they were verbally sanctified.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 35a

but it is a higher standard; so here too it is a higher standard.¹ R. Shimi b. Ashi said, We too learned thus: When he [an unclean person] has a ritual bath, he may eat tithe; when the sun sets,² he may eat terumah. [Thus] only terumah, but not sacred food.³ Yet why so? He is clean? But [you must say] it is a higher standard; so here too it is a higher standard. R. Ashi said, we too learned [thus]: And the flesh:⁴ this is to include fuel and frankincense.⁵ Are then fuel and frankincense capable of being defiled?⁶ But [you must say] it is a higher standard;⁷ so here too it is a higher standard.

MISHNAH. THESE ARE THE COMMODITIES WITH WHICH A MAN DISCHARGES HIS OBLIGATION ON PASSOVER:⁸ WITH WHEAT, WITH BARLEY, WITH SPELT, WITH RYE,⁹ AND WITH OATS. AND THEY DISCHARGE [IT] WITH DEMAI,¹⁰ WITH FIRST TITHE WHOSE TERUMAH HAS BEEN SEPARATED, AND WITH SECOND TITHE OR HEKDESH WHICH HAVE BEEN REDEEMED;¹¹ AND PRIESTS [CAN DISCHARGE THEIR OBLIGATION] WITH HALLAH AND TERUMAH. BUT [A MAN CAN]NOT [DISCHARGE HIS OBLIGATION] WITH TEBEL, NOR WITH FIRST TITHE WHOSE TERUMAH HAS NOT BEEN SEPARATED, NOR WITH SECOND TITHE OR HEKDESH WHICH HAVE NOT BEEN REDEEMED. [AS TO] THE [UNLEAVENED] LOAVES OF THE THANKS OFFERING¹² AND THE WAFERS OF A NAZIRITE,¹³ IF HE MADE THEM FOR HIMSELF,¹⁴ HE CANNOT DISCHARGE [HIS OBLIGATION] WITH THEM; IF HE MADE THEM TO SELL IN THE MARKET, HE CAN DISCHARGE [HIS OBLIGATION] WITH THEM.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: Kusmin [spelt] is a species of wheat; oats and rye are a species of barley; kusmin is gulba; shipon is dishra; shiboleth shu'al is foxears.¹⁵

Only these¹⁶ [are fit],¹⁷ but not rice or millet. Whence do we know it? — Said R. Simeon b. Lakish, and thus the School of R. Ishmael taught, and thus the school of R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught, Scripture saith, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it,' seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith:¹⁸ [with regard to] commodities which come to the state of leaven, a man discharges his obligation with unleavened bread [made] thereof; thus these are excluded, which do not come to the state of leaven but to the state of decay.

Our Mishnah does not agree with R. Johanan b. Nuri, who maintains: Rice is a species of corn, and kareth¹⁹ is incurred for [eating it in] its leavened state. For it was taught: R. Johanan b. Nuri Prohibits [the use of] rice and millet, because it is near to turn leaven. The scholars asked: does 'because it is near to turn leaven' mean that it quickly becomes leaven,²⁰ or perhaps it is near to leaven, but is not completely leaven?²¹ — Come and hear: For it was taught, R. Johanan b. Nuri said: Rice is a species of corn and kareth is incurred for [eating it in] its leavened state, and a man discharges his obligation with it on Passover. And thus R. Johanan b. Nuri used to say, Karmith [cow-wheat] is subject to hallah. What is karmith? — Said Abaye: Shezanitha [weed]. What is Shezanitha? Said R. Papa: A weed found among kalnitha.²²

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of Resh Lakish: [As to] dough which was kneaded with wine, oil or honey, kareth is not incurred for [eating it in] its leavened state.²³ Now, R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua sat before R. Idi b. Abin, while R. Idi b. Abin was sitting and dozing. Said R. Huna son of R. Joshua to R. Papa: What is Resh Lakish's reason? — He replied, Scripture saith, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it etc.: [In the case of] the commodities with which a man discharges his obligation in respect of unleavened bread, kareth is incurred for [eating them in] their leavened state; but [with regard to] this [dough], since a man cannot discharge his obligation therewith, because it is rich mazzah,²⁴ kareth is not incurred for its leaven. R. Huna son of R. Joshua objected to R. Papa: If he dissolves it²⁵ and swallows it, if it is leaven, he is punished with kareth; while if it is unleavened bread, he does not discharge his obligation therewith on Passover.²⁶ Now here, though a man does not discharge his obligation therewith as unleavened bread, yet kareth is incurred for its leaven? — [Thereupon] R. Idi b. Abin awoke [and] said to them, Children! This is the reason of Resh Lakish, because they are fruit juice,²⁷

(1) Sc. that the resowing of terumah does not permit it to be eaten (supra 34a).

- (2) Lit., 'his sun makes evening'.
- (3) If his uncleanness requires a sacrifice, e.g., in the case of a zab, he may not eat sacred food until he has brought the sacrifice, though he is completely clean.
- (4) Lev. VII, 19.
- (5) V. supra 24b and notes a.l.
- (6) Surely not, as they are not eatables!
- (7) Though fuel and frankincense cannot usually be defiled, a higher standard is set when they are to be used in the sacred service.
- (8) Unleavened bread is obligatory on the first night of Passover, as it is written, on the fourteenth day of the month at even ye shall eat unleavened bread (Ex. XII, 18). The Mishnah enumerates the species of corn with which this unleavened bread, eaten as an obligation, can be made.
- (9) Jast.: others: oats.
- (10) V. Glos.
- (11) One tenth (tithe) of the produce, called the first tithe, was given to the Levite, and he in turn gave a tenth thereof, called the terumah of tithe, to the priest. Another tenth of the produce, called the second tithe, was eaten by its owners (Israelites, as opposed to Levites and priests) in Jerusalem, or redeemed and the redemption money was expended in Jerusalem. Hekdesh (q.v. Glos.) could be similarly redeemed. The second tithe reference in the Mishnah is to places outside Jerusalem.
- (12) The thanksgiving was accompanied by forty loaves, thirty of which were unleavened.
- (13) V. Num. VI, 15.
- (14) For his own sacrifice.
- (15) Ears of corn foxtailed in shape. — The other words are the Aramaic in general use.

- (18) Deut. XVI, 3.
- (19) V. Glos.
- (20) And therefore it is altogether forbidden on Passover, as it turns leaven before it can be baked.
- (21) I.e., it can never become completely leaven. Hence R. Johanan b. Nuri prohibits its use on the first night for the fulfilment of one's obligations.
- (22) Papaver Spinosum (Jast.).
- (23) If no water at all was used in kneading it.
- (24) Unleavened bread made with wine etc., is a rich confection, whereas Scripture prescribes 'bread of poverty' (E.V. affliction — Deut. XVI, 3).
- (25) Sc. bread.
- (26) Because swallowing soaked bread is not eating.
- (27) Sc. wine, oil or honey, date-honey being meant.

and fruit juice does not cause fermentation.¹

AND THEY DISCHARGE THEIR OBLIGATION WITH DEMAI AND WITH THE FIRST TITHE etc. DEMAI? But it is not fit for him?² — Since if he wishes he can renounce his property, become a poor man, and eat demai,³ it is fit for him now too. For we learned: The poor may be fed with demai, and [Jewish] troops [in billets] [may be supplied] with demai.⁴ And R. Huna said, It was taught: Beth Shammai maintain: The poor may not be fed with demai, nor troops in billets; but Beth Hillel rule: The poor may be fed with demai, also troops in billets.

FIRST TITHE WHOSE TERUMAH HAS BEEN SEPARATED. That is obvious? Since its terumah has been separated, it is hullin?⁵ — It is necessary [to teach it] only where he anticipated it [in setting it aside⁶ while the corn was still] in the ears, and terumah of the tithe was taken from it, but the great terumah was not taken from it,⁷ this being in accordance with R. Abbahu. For R.

Abbahu said in the name of Resh Lakish: First tithe which he anticipated [the setting aside thereof] in the ears is exempt from the great terumah, for it is said, then ye shall offer up an heave offering of it for the Lord, a tithe of the tithe:⁸ I ordered thee [to offer] ‘a tithe of the tithe’, but not the great terumah plus the terumah of the tithe ‘of the tithe’. Said R. Papa to Abaye: If so, even if he anticipated it in the stack too,⁹ let it be exempt? — For your sake Scripture writes, out of all you, gifts ye shall offer every heave offering of the Lord,¹⁰ he answered him. And what [reason] do you see [to interpret thus]?¹¹ — The one has become corn [dagan], while the other has not become corn.¹²

THE SECOND TITHE AND HEKDESH WHICH HAVE BEEN REDEEMED etc. That is obvious? — We treat here of a case where he assigned¹³ the principal but did not assign the fifth:¹⁴ and he [the Tanna] informs us that the fifth is not indispensable.¹⁵

AND PRIESTS [DISCHARGE THEIR OBLIGATION] WITH HALLAH AND TERUMAH etc. This is obvious? — You might say, We require unleavened bread that is equally permitted] to all men. Therefore he informs us, [the repetition] ‘unleavened bread’, ‘unleavened bread’,¹⁶ is an extension.

BUT NOT WITH TEBEL etc. That is obvious? — It is necessary [to teach it] only of tebel made so by Rabbinical law, e.g., if it was sown in an unperforated pot.¹⁷

NOR WITH FIRST TITHE WHOSE TERUMAH HAS NOT BEEN SEPARATED. That is obvious? — It is necessary [to state it] only where it had been anticipated [and set aside] in the pile.¹⁸ You might argue as R. Papa proposed to Abaye;¹⁹ hence he [the Tanna] informs us [that it is] as Abaye answered him.

NOR WITH SECOND TITHE OR HEKDESH WHICH HAVE NOT BEEN REDEEMED etc. That is obvious? — It is necessary only where they have been redeemed; and what does they ‘HAVE NOT BEEN REDEEMED’ mean? That they have not been redeemed with their regulations.²⁰ [Thus:] it is second tithe which he redeemed with uncoined metal,²¹ for the Divine Law states, And thou shalt bind up [we-zarta] the money in thine hand,²² [implying], that which bears a figure [zurah].²³ [Again it is] hekdesch which was secularized²⁴ by means of land,²⁵ for the Divine Law stated, Then he shall give the money and it shall be assured to him.²⁶

Our Rabbis taught: One might think that a man can discharge his obligation with tebel which was not made ready.²⁷ (But surely all tebel indeed has not been made ready! — Rather say, with tebel which was not made ready with all its requirements, the great terumah having been separated from it whereas the terumah of tithe was not separated from it; [or] the first tithe, but not the second tithe, or even the poor tithe).²⁸ Whence do we know it?²⁹ Because it is stated, thou shalt not eat leavened bread with it:³⁰ teaching, [you must eat of] that the interdict of which is on account of ‘thou shalt not eat leavened bread with it’, thus this is excluded, for its interdict is not on account of ‘thou shalt not eat leavened bread with it’ but on account of ‘thou shalt not eat tebel’.³¹ Yet whither has the interdict of leaven gone?³² — Said R. Shesheth, The author of this is R. Simeon, who maintained, A prohibition cannot fall³³ upon another prohibition.³⁴ For it was taught, R. Simeon said:

(1) I.e., ‘leavening’.

(2) Demai may not be eaten until the tithe has been separated.

(3) A poor man need not separate tithe on demai.

(4) They too are regarded as poor, since they are not at home.

(5) I.e., permitted for food.

(6) Sc. the separation of the first tithe.

(7) The great terumah is a portion of the produce, unspecified by Scripture (the Rabbis prescribed from one fortieth to one sixtieth, according to the owner's generosity), which is the priest's due; for terumah of tithe v. note on Mishnah supra 35a. The great terumah must be separated first, and then the first tithe. But here the order was reversed and the Israelite separated his tithe while the grain was yet in the ears.

(8) Num. XVIII, 26.

(9) I.e., when it is no longer in the ears but piled up in stacks.

(10) Ibid. 29; i.e. 'all' is an extension, and shows that the offering is due even in such a case. — 'For your sake' or, 'concerning you' — to refute this possible view.

(11) To apply the limitation of the first verse to the one case and the extension of the second to the other — perhaps it should be reversed?

(12) The priestly due, i.e., the great terumah, is 'the firstfruits of thy corn' (Deut. XVIII, 4). Hence once it is piled up as corn it is due, and the Israelite cannot then evade his obligations by reversing the order. But before it is piled up there is no obligation for the great terumah; therefore if the Levite receives his first tithe then he is not defrauding the priest.

(13) Lit., 'gave' — for redemption.

(14) When a man redeemed second tithe or hekdesch he added a fifth of its value.

(15) To the validity of the redemption, and the redeemed produce may be consumed anywhere, even though the fifth has not been added.

(16) This may refer either to Deut. XVI, 4, 8, or in general to the fact that 'unleavened bread' is repeated several times.

(17) According to Scriptural law such is not tebel at all, and therefore I would think that a man discharges his obligation therewith.

(18) The tithe having been separated but not the great terumah.

(19) That it is exempt, supra.

(20) Lit., 'laws'.

(21) V. B.M. 47b for the meaning asimon.

(22) Deut. XIV, 25.

(23) The image stamped on the coin. This connects zarta with zurah.

(24) I.e., redeemed, whereby the hekdesch assumes an ordinary, non-holy character.

(25) I.e., land was given for its redemption.

(26) I.e., it can be redeemed by money, but not by land. Actually there is no such verse, but v. B.M., Sonc. ed. p. 321, n. 1.

(27) For eating, by separating the priestly and the Levitical dues.

(28) In the first, second, fourth, and fifth years after the 'years of release' (shemittah) the first and second tithes were separated. In the third and sixth years, the first and third tithes were separated, the latter being a poor tithe, i.e., it belonged to the poor.

(29) That he cannot discharge his obligation therewith.

(30) Deut. XVI, 3.

(31) I.e., the unleavened bread which one must eat must be such that, if leavened, it would be forbidden because it is leavened. But in the case of tebel, if it were leavened it would be forbidden because it is tebel.

(32) Surely it is still forbidden on account of leaven, tebel merely being an additional prohibition?

(33) I.e., become operative.

(34) I.e., when a thing is already forbidden on one score, another interdict cannot become operative at the same time. Thus here the prohibition of tebel is earlier; consequently the fact that it subsequently became leaven too is ignored, and it is regarded as prohibited on account of tebel only.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 36a

He who eats nebelah on the Day of Atonement is not liable [to a sin-offering].¹ Rabina said, You may even say [that it agrees with] the Rabbis: [the meaning is] that the interdict which is on account of 'thou shalt not eat leavened bread with it' alone, thus this is excluded, for its interdict is not on account of 'thou shalt not eat leavened bread with it' alone, but also on account of 'thou shalt not eat tebel'. Is then 'alone' written?² — Rather, it is clearly as R. Shesheth [stated].

Our Rabbis taught. You might think that a man can discharge his obligation with second tithe in Jerusalem; therefore it is stated, the bread of affliction [‘oni],³ teaching, [it must be] that which may be eaten in grief [aninuth].⁴ thus this is excluded, which is not eaten in grief but [only] in joy:⁵ this is the view of R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba said: [The repetition of] ‘unleavened bread’, ‘unleavened bread’, is an extension.⁶ If so, what is taught by ‘bread of affliction’ [‘oni]? It excludes dough which was kneaded with wine, oil, or honey.⁷ What is R. Akiba's reason? — Is then lehem [bread of] ‘oni [grief] written? Surely ‘ani [poverty] is written.⁸ And R. Jose the Galilean?⁹ — Do we then read it ‘ani? Surely we read it ‘oni. And R. Akiba? — The fact that we read it ‘oni [is explained] as Samuel's [dictum]. For Samuel said: Bread of ‘oni [means] bread over which many words are recited [‘onin].¹⁰ Yet does R. Akiba hold [that] dough which was kneaded with wine, oil, or honey is not [fit]? Surely it was taught: Dough must not be kneaded on Passover with wine, oil, or honey; and if one did knead it, — R. Gamaliel said: It must be burnt immediately;¹¹ while the Sages say: It may be eaten. Now R. Akiba related: I was staying [one Passover] with R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, and I kneaded dough for them with wine, oil or honey, and they said nothing to me. And though one may not knead, yet one may smooth the surface with them, — this is according to the first Tanna. But the Sages maintain: With that with which one may knead, one may smooth, while with that with which one may not knead, one may not smooth. And they all agree that dough may not be kneaded with lukewarm [water]!¹² — There is no difficulty: the one refers to the first day of the Festival; the other, to the second day of the Festival.¹³ As R. Joshua b. Levi said to his sons: For the first day¹⁴ do not knead [it] for me with milk;¹⁵ from then onwards knead it for me with milk. But it was taught: Dough must not be kneaded with milk, and if one does knead it, the whole loaf is forbidden, because it leads to sin?¹⁶ Rather, he said this: For the first day do not knead it for me with honey; from then onwards knead [it] for me with honey. Alternatively I can say: After all it means with milk, [but] as Rabina said, [When made] like the eye of an ox, it is permitted;¹⁷ so here too, [it was] like the eye of an ox.

‘And they all agree that dough may not be kneaded with lukewarm [water]’. Why is it different from meal-offerings: for we learned: All meal-offerings¹⁸ are kneaded with lukewarm water, and he [the official in charge] guards them that they should not become in connection with the eating of unleavened bread on the night of Passover. leaven? — If this was said of [very] careful men [priests], shall it [also] be said of those who are not careful?¹⁹ If so, let it also be permitted to wash [the grain];²⁰ why did R. Zera say in the name of Rabbah b. Jeremiah in Samuel's name: The wheat for meal-offerings must not be washed? — The kneading was done by careful men, but the washing would not be done by careful men.²¹ Yet must the kneading be done by careful men [priests]; surely it is written, and he shall bring it to Aaron's sons the priests: and he shall take thereof his handful.²² from the taking of the handful and onwards is the duty of the priesthood; this teaches concerning the pouring [of oil] and the mixing,²³ that it is valid [when done] by any man? — The kneading, granted that it is not [done] by careful men, yet it is [done] in the place of careful men.²⁴ For a Master said: The mixing is valid [if done] by a lay Israelite; [but if done] without the wall[s] of the Temple Court, it is invalid. Thus this excludes washing, which is not [done] by careful men nor in the place of careful men. And wherein do they [all other meal-offerings] differ from the meal-offering of the ‘omer,²⁵ for it was taught: The meal-offering of the ‘omer is washed and heaped up?²⁶ — A public [offering] is different.²⁷ Our Rabbis taught: You might think that a man discharges his duty with first fruits,²⁸ therefore it is stated, in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread,²⁹ teaching, [it must be] unleavened bread which is eaten in all your habitations, thus excluding first fruits, which may not be eaten in all your habitations save in Jerusalem [alone]: this is the view of R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba said: Unleavened bread and bitter herbs [are assimilated]:³⁰ just as bitter herbs which are not first fruits [are required],³¹ so unleavened bread which is not first fruits [must be eaten]. If so, just as bitter herbs of a species not subject to first fruits [are required], so unleavened bread of a species [of grain] not subject to first fruits [is meant],

- (1) Which eating on the Day of Atonement usually incurs, the reference being to eating in ignorance. The reason is that since it is forbidden on the score of nebelah, the interdict of the Day of Atonement cannot take effect. Thus the same applies here.
- (2) Surely not! Scripture does not imply this at all.
- (3) Deut. XVI, 3.
- (4) Connecting 'oni (אָנִי) with anah (אָנָה) to mourn or grieve, though the former is spelled with an א, while the latter is with an ה, these letters often being interchangeable in Semitic languages. — Aninuth denotes the state of grief between the death of a near relative, e.g., one's father, and his burial, the bereaved person then being called an onen.
- (5) An onen (v. preceding note) may not eat second tithe, cf. Deut. XXVI, 14: I have not eaten thereof (sc. second tithe) in my mourning
- (6) V. supra 35b and note a.l. Thus it includes second tithe.
- (7) Which makes it into 'rich' mazzah. The phrase is now translated: bread of poverty. from 'ani (אָנִי) poor.
- (8) Though the word is read 'oni, as though spelled with a waw (אָוִי), it is actually written 'ani (אָנִי), without a waw.
- (9) How does he rebut this?
- (10) A long liturgical service — called the haggadah — is read
- (11) R. Gamaliel holds that it ferments too quickly, and so to prevent it from becoming leaven it must be burnt immediately. But the Sages hold that it can be baked before it is leaven.
- (12) This causes fermentation very quickly.
- (13) On the night of the first day the mazzah must be 'bread of poverty', whereas this is a rich mazzah; hence it cannot be used. But on the second night any mazzah is permissible.
- (14) I.e., Passover night.
- (15) This too makes a 'rich' bread.
- (16) One may come to eat it with meat. This refers to the whole year.
- (17) I.e., when made very small, so that it is at once entirely eaten up, and nothing is left for later.
- (18) Which were offered unleavened.
- (19) This is the answer. The preparing of unleavened bread for meal-offerings was in the hands of priests, who were very careful and could be relied upon not to permit it to ferment. But unleavened bread for Passover is made in every home, and the people could not be trusted to take so much care.
- (20) I.e., to soak it slightly in water and then pound it so as to remove the bran and make a fine flour.
- (21) This was not the priest's duty.
- (22) Lev. II, 2.
- (23) Which preceded the taking of the handful; v. ibid. 1, 2.
- (24) I.e., in the Temple Court, which is frequented by priests, and these would take heed that whoever kneaded it should not permit fermentation.
- (25) V. Glos.
- (26) For the water to drain off.
- (27) This was a public offering, and everything in connection with it, right from the harvesting of the grain, was done under competent guidance and vigilance.
- (28) E.g., a priest to whom an Israelite brought the first fruits of his wheat harvest.
- (29) Ex. XII, 20.
- (30) Num. IX, 11: they shall eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs.
- (31) For only the seven species enumerated in Deut. VIII, 8, ('a land of wheat and barley, and vines and fig trees and pomegranates; a land of oil olive and honey') are subject to the law of first fruits.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 36b

[and] I will [thus] exclude wheat and barley, which species are subject to first fruits? Hence [the repetition,] 'unleavened bread', unleavened bread',¹ is stated as an extension. If [the repetition] 'unleavened bread, unleavened bread' is an extension, then even first fruits too [may be included]? — R. Akiba retracted.² For it was taught: You might think that a man can discharge his obligation with first fruits. Therefore it is stated, 'in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread', teaching, [it must be] unleavened bread which is eaten in all your habitations, thus excluding first fruits, which may not be eaten in all your habitations save in Jerusalem [alone]. You might think that I exclude second tithe too,³ but [the repetition] ‘unleavened bread’, ‘unleavened bread’, is stated as an extension. But what [reason] do you see to include second tithe and exclude first fruits? — I include second tithe because it can be permitted [to be eaten] in all habitations,⁴ in accordance with R. Eleazar, and I exclude first fruits, for which there is no permission in all habitations. For R. Eleazar said: Whence do we know in the case of second tithe that became defiled, that we can redeem it even in Jerusalem? From the verse, when thou art not able se'etho [to bear it].⁵ Now se'eth⁶ can only refer to eating, as it is said, And he took and sent mase'oth [messes] unto them from before him.⁷ Now, whom do you know to maintain that he fulfils his obligation with second tithe? R. Akiba.⁸ Yet he excludes first fruits through [the phrase] ‘in all your habitations’.⁹ This proves that he retracted.

And R. Jose the Galilean, let him deduce it from [the phrase] ‘the bread of affliction [‘oni]’, implying, that which can be eaten in grief, thus excluding this [sc. first fruits], which can be eaten only in rejoicing?¹⁰ — He holds as R. Simeon, For it was taught: First fruits are forbidden to an onen,¹¹ but R. Simeon permits [them]. What is the reason of the Rabbis?¹² — Because it is written, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates [the tithe of thy corn ... nor the heave-offering of thy hand],¹³ and a Master said: ‘The heave-offering of [terumoth] thy hand’ means first fruits. Thus first fruits are assimilated to tithe: just as tithe is forbidden to an onen,¹⁴ so are first fruits forbidden to an onen. And R. Simeon?¹⁵ — The Divine Law designated them ‘terumah’, [hence they are] like terumah: just as terumah is permitted to an onen, so are first fruits permitted to an onen. Now R. Simeon: granted that he does not accept the hekdesch,¹⁶ yet ‘rejoicing’ is nevertheless written in connection therewith, for it is written, and thou shalt rejoice in all the good etc.¹⁷ — That comes for the time of rejoicing.¹⁸ For we learned: From Pentecost until the Festival [of Tabernacles] he [the Israelite] brings [the first fruits] and recites [the ‘confession’];¹⁹ between the Festival and Hanukkah²⁰ he brings [the first fruits] but does not recite [the ‘confession’].

Our Rabbis taught: ‘Bread of poverty’, this excludes halut²¹ and ashishah [pancake].²² You might think that a man can discharge his obligation only with coarse bread;²³ therefore [the repetition] ‘unleavened bread’, ‘unleavened bread’, is stated as an extension, [intimating] even [if it is] like the unleavened bread of Solomon.²⁴ If so, why is ‘bread of poverty’ stated? To exclude halut and pancakes. And where is it implied that this [word] ‘ashishah’ denotes something of value?²⁵ — Because it is written, And he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, both to men and women, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh [eshpar] and an ashishah,²⁶ whereon R. Hanan b. Abba said: ‘Eshpar’ means one sixth [ehad mishshishah] of a bullock [par]; ashishah means [a cake made with] one sixth of an ephah [of flour].²⁷ Now he differs from Samuel, for Samuel said: Ashishah is a cask of wine, for it is written, and love casks of [ashishe] grapes.²⁸

Our Rabbis taught: One may not bake a thick loaf on Passover: this is the view of Beth Shammai;

(1) V. supra 35b and note a.l.

(2) From, the view that unleavened bread and bitter herbs are assimilated in this respect, and he accepts the deduction of R. Jose the Galilean.

- (15) How does he justify his view?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 37a

but Beth Hillel permit it. And how much is a thick loaf?¹ Said R. Huna, A handbreadth, because thus we find in the case of the shewbread [that it was] a handbreadth.² To this R. Joseph demurred: If they [the Sages] said [this] of men of care,³ did they say [it] of those who are not careful?⁴ If they said [this] of well-kneaded bread, did they say [it] of bread that is not well-kneaded? If they said [this] of dry logs, did they say [it] of damp logs? If they said [this] of a hot oven, did they say [it] of a cool oven? If they said [this] of a metal oven, did they say [it] of an earthen oven?⁵ Said R. Jeremiah b. Abba, I asked my teacher in private, and who is it? Rab — others state, R. Jeremiah b. Abba said in Rab's name, I asked my teacher in private, and who is it? Our holy Teacher.⁶ What is [meant by] a thick bread? Bread in large quantity.⁷ And why is it called a thick bread? Because it is much in kneading.⁸ Alternatively, in the locality of this Tanna bread in large quantity is called thick bread.

[Then] what is the reason:⁹ if because he takes unnecessary trouble,¹⁰ — why particularly on Passover: even on any [other] festival too [it is forbidden]? — That indeed is so, but this Tanna was engaged on¹¹ the festival of Passover. It was taught likewise:¹² Beth Shammai maintain: One may not bake thick bread on a festival,¹³ while Beth Hillel permit it.

Our Rabbis taught: You discharge [your obligation] with fine bread,¹⁴ with coarse bread,¹⁵ and with Syrian cakes shaped in figures. although they [the Sages] said, Syrian cakes shaped in figures must not be made on Passover. Rab Judah said: This thing Boethus b. Zonin asked the Sages: Why was it said [that] Syrian cakes shaped in figures must not be made on Passover? Said they to him, Because a woman would tarry over it and cause it to turn leaven. [But], he objected, it is possible to make it in a mould, which would form it without delay.¹⁶ Then it shall be said, replied they, [that] all Syrian cakes [shaped in figures] are forbidden, but the Syrian cakes of Boethus are permitted!¹⁷

R. Eleazar b. Zadok said: I once followed¹⁸ my father into the house of R. Gamaliel, and they placed¹⁹ before him Syrian cakes shaped in figures on Passover. Said I, 'Father, did not the Sages say thus, One may not make Syrian cakes shaped in figures on Passover?' 'My son', he replied, 'they did not speak of [the cakes of] all people, but only of those of bakers'.²⁰ Others say, he said thus to him: 'They did not speak of those of bakers, but [only] of those of private people'.²¹

R. Jose said: One may make Syrian cakes like wafers, but one may not make Syrian cakes like rolls. We learned elsewhere:²² Sponge cakes,²³ honey cakes, paste-balls,²⁴ cakes made in a mould, and mixed dough²⁵ are exempt from hallah.²⁶ What are cakes made in a mould? — Said R. Joshua b. Levi: That is halut²⁷ of private people.²⁸ Resh Lakish said: These are prepared in an ilpes.²⁹ While R. Johanan maintained: Those which are prepared in an ilpes are liable [to hallah], but these [are exempt] because they were prepared in the sun.

An objection is raised: Sponge cakes, honey cakes, and pasteballs: if prepared in an ilpes, they are liable [to hallah]; if in the sun, they are exempt. This is a refutation of R. Simeon b. Lakish? Said 'Ulla, R. Simeon b. Lakish can answer you: The case we treat of here is where he [first] heated [the ilpes] and then placed [the dough in it].³⁰ But what [is the law] if he [first] placed [the dough] and then heated it? Are they indeed exempt! Then instead of teaching [in] the second clause, 'if prepared in the sun, they are exempt', let him draw a distinction in that itself and teach: When is that? E.g., if he heated [it] and then placed [the dough]; but if he [first] placed [the dough] and then heated it, they are exempt? There is a lacuna[in this teaching], and it was thus taught: When is that? If he heated [it] and then placed [the dough]; but if he first for the shape to be exactly right and so may take too long over it. But private people are not so particular. placed [the dough] and then heated it, it becomes as though he prepared it in the sun, and they are exempt.

Come and hear: You discharge your duty with partially baked unleavened bread and unleavened bread which was prepared in an ilpes?³¹ — Here too it means that he [first] heats it and then places [the dough]. What is partially baked unleavened bread?³² — Said Rab Judah in Samuel's name: Whatever can be broken without threads dragging from it.³³

Raba said: And the same [rule applies to] loaves of the thankoffering.³⁴ That is obvious: 'bread' is written here and 'bread' is written there?³⁵ — You might say, since it is written, and he shall offer one

(1) Which Beth Hillel permit.

(2) Though the shewbread was unleavened (Men. 27a).

- (32) What is the minimum?
- (33) It must be baked at least as much as that.
- (34) The thankoffering was accompanied by forty loaves, which were sanctified by the killing of the sacrifice. As soon as the loaves have arrived at this stage of baking as defined by Rab Judah, they become sanctified by the slaughtering of the sacrifice, and the sacrifice itself valid.
- (35) Obviously then the same definition applies to both. Hallah: when ye eat of the bread of the land (Num. XV, 19); the thankoffering: Lev. VII, 13: with cakes of leavened bread etc.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 37b

out of each oblation,¹ 'one' [intimating] that he should not take a broken-off piece, whereas here it is as broken off:² therefore he informs us [that it is not so].

An objection is raised: The me'isah,³ Beth Shammai exempt it [from hallah], while Beth Hillel hold it liable [thereto]. The halitah,⁴ Beth Shammai hold it liable [to hallah], while Beth Hillel exempt [it]. Which is 'me'isah' and which is 'halitah'? 'Me'isah' is flour [poured] over boiling water; 'halitah' is boiling water [poured] over flour. R. Ishmael b. R. Jose ruled in his father's name [that] both are exempt — others state, that both are liable. But the Sages maintained: Both the one and the other, if prepared in an ilpes, each is exempt; in an oven, each is liable. Now according to the first Tanna, wherein does me'isah differ from halitah?⁵ — Said Rab Judah in Samuel's name, and thus did R. Johanan — others state, R. Joshua b. Levi-say: Just as there is a controversy in respect of the one so is there a controversy in respect of the other, and they [the two clauses] are contradictory, he who learnt the one not having learnt the other.⁶ Now it is at all events taught, 'But the Sages maintain: Both the one and the other, if prepared in an ilpes, each is exempt; in an oven, each is liable', which is a refutation of R. Johanan? — R. Johanan can answer you, It is dependent on Tannaim. For it was taught: You might think that me'isah and halitah are liable to hallah, therefore 'bread' is stated. R. Judah said: Nought is bread save that which is baked in an oven. Now R. Judah is identical with the first Tanna? Hence Surely they differ over that which is prepared in an ilpes: the first Tanna holds, That which is prepared in an ilpes is liable; while R. Judah holds, That which is prepared in an oven is exempt! — No: All (agree) that what is prepared in an ilpes is exempt, but they differ here, e.g., where he rebaked it in an oven,⁷ the first Tanna holding [that] since he rebaked it in an oven, it is called 'bread'; while R. Judah holds, Nought is bread save that which is baked in an oven from the very beginning, and since this was not baked in an oven from the very beginning, we do not call it 'bread'. Raba said, What is R. Judah's reason? — Because it is written, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven:⁸ bread which is baked in one oven is called bread, but that which is not baked in one oven is not called bread.⁹

Rabbah and R. Joseph were sitting behind R. Zera, and R. Zera was sitting in front of ‘Ulla. Said Rabbah to R. Zera, Ask ‘Ulla: What if he placed [the dough] within,¹⁰ and boiled it up¹¹ from without?¹² What shall I ask him, he replied, for if I ask him he will say to me, That then is the [very] preparation of an ilpes!¹³ — R. Joseph [then] said to R. Zera, Ask ‘Ulla: What if he placed [the dough] inside and the flame is opposite it?¹⁴ What shall I ask him, he replied. for if I ask him he will reply. Most poor people do this.¹⁵

R Assi said: Dough of second tithe, according to R. Meir,¹⁶ is exempt from hallah; according to the Rabbis,¹⁷ it is liable to hallah.

(1) Ibid. 14.

(2) Since it is not completely baked.

(3) A paste made of flour poured over boiling water, contrad. to halitah, where the boiling water is poured over flour, as explained in the text.

(4) V. preceding note.

(5) The Mishnah is first dismissed and explained, and then the point of the objection is stated.

(6) Me’isah and halitah are alike in law. One Tanna holds that in both Beth Hillel are more lenient, while another holds that Beth Shammai are more lenient in both.

(7) Sc. that which was prepared in an ilpes in the first place.

(8) Lev. XXVI, 26.

(9) Hence this excludes the case where it is first treated In an ilpes.

(10) Rashi: in an ilpes. Tosaf: in an oven.

(11) I.e., heated it.

(12) Rashi: He placed a bread dough in an ilpes, baking it with an outside fire: is it bread or not? Tosaf: He placed in an oven such dough as is generally prepared in an ilpes: does this render it bread or not?

(13) Which is a point of issue between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish.

(14) The flame itself bearing directly on the ilpes, which causes it to bake more quickly.

(15) They cannot afford much fuel, and so they have the flame directly opposite it. Hence this cannot change its status.

(16) Who holds in Kid. 54b that second tithe is sacred, not secular property, but that the Almighty favored the Israelite by permitting him to eat it himself.

(17) Who hold that it is secular property.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 38a

[As to] unleavened bread of second tithe, according to R. Meir, a man cannot discharge his obligation therewith on Passover; according to the Sages, a man can discharge his obligation therewith on Passover. [With regard to] a citron¹ of second tithe, according to R. Meir he cannot discharge his obligation therewith on the Festival; according to the Sages, a man can discharge his obligation therewith on the Festival. R. Papa demurred: as for dough, it is well, because it is written, of the first of your dough,² [implying] of your own.³ The citron too [is likewise], for it is written, and ye shall take unto yourselves,⁴ [implying] it shall be of your own. But as for unleavened bread, is then ‘your unleavened bread’ written?⁵ — Said Raba — others state, R. Yemar b. Shalmia: [The meaning of] ‘bread’ [here] is derived from ‘bread’ [elsewhere]. Here It is written, the bread of affliction.⁶ while there it is written, then it shall be, that when ye eat of the bread of the land [ye shall offer up an heave offering unto the Lord. Of the first of your dough etc.]:⁷ just as there [it means] of your own, so here too [it must be] of your own.

Shall we say that [the following] supports him: Dough of second tithe is exempt from hallah: this is the view of R. Meir; but the Sages maintain, It is liable? [You say], ‘Shall we say that this Supports him’: this is the identical statement! — This is what he says: Shall we say that since they differ in the case of dough, they differ in respect to those too;⁸ or perhaps it is different there, because ‘your dough’ ‘your dough’ is written twice?⁹

R. Simeon b. Lakish asked: Can a man discharge his obligation¹⁰ with the hallah of second tithe in Jerusalem? On the view of R. Jose the Galilean¹¹ there is no problem; seeing that he does not fulfil his obligation with hullin,¹² can there be a question about its hallah? Your question arises on the view of R. Akiba:¹¹ is it only with hullin that he can discharge his obligation. because if it is defiled it is permitted in [all] 'habitations',¹³ but with hallah, which if defiled, is not permitted in [all] the 'habitations' and is consigned to the fire,¹⁴ he cannot discharge his obligation: or perhaps we say, since if he had not designated it with the name [of hallah] and it became defiled, it would be permitted in [all] the 'habitations', and he could discharge [his obligation therewith], then now too he can discharge [his obligation with it]?¹⁵

Others state, this is certainly no question. for we certainly say 'since'.¹⁶ Your question arises in respect of hallah which was bought with the money of second tithe.¹⁷ Now, on the view of the Rabbis there is no question, for since they say that it¹⁸ is to be redeemed, it is [identical with] the tithe [itself].¹⁹ Your question arises on the view of R. Judah who said, It must be buried. For we learned: If that which was bought with second tithe money was defiled, it must be redeemed: R. Judah said, It must be buried.²⁰ Do we say, since if it were not purchased. and since if he had not designated it with the name [of second tithe] and it became defiled, it would be permitted in [all] 'habitations', and he could discharge his duty therewith, he can [therefore] discharge his duty therewith now too;²¹ or perhaps we say one 'since',²² but we do not say 'since twice'?²³ — said Raba: It is logical that the name of tithe is one.²⁴

THE UNLEAVENED LOAVES OF THE THANKS OFFERING AND THE WAFERS OF A NAZIRITE etc. Whence do we know it? — Said Rabbah, Because Scripture saith,

(1) One of the four species which are taken on the Feast of Tabernacles.

(2) Num. XV, 20.

(3) And whereas according to R. Meir second tithe is not 'your own'.

(4) Lev. XXIII, 40.

(5) Surely not! Therefore even if second tithe is not 'yours' according to R. Meir, the law is still complied with by eating second tithe, unleavened bread.

(6) Deut. XVI, 3.

(7) Num. XV, 19.

(8) Sc. the citron and unleavened bread.

(9) Which lays particular emphasis on 'your', as explained above.

(10) Relating to the eating of unleavened bread.

(11) V. supra 36a.

(12) I.e., with ordinary second tithe after the hallah has been separated.

(13) This is a technical term denoting all places outside Jerusalem. I.e., when defiled it can be redeemed even after it has entered Jerusalem and then eaten anywhere. The fact that it might be eaten anywhere strengthens the reason for assuming that one can discharge his obligation with it, v. supra 36b.

(14) Hallah is like terumah. Now when the hallah of second tithe is clean it must be eaten in Jerusalem, like all second tithe, while if it is defiled it may not be eaten at all, like all unclean terumah. Thus it can never be eaten without Jerusalem.

(15) For the mere fact that it is hallah is no drawback, as stated in the Mishnah supra 36a, while its being second tithe is not a drawback either, on R. Akiba's view. Why then should it be unfit if it is hallah of second tithe?

(16) I.e., this last argument is certainly valid.

(17) I.e., second tithe was redeemed, flour was bought with the money, and now hallah was separated from the dough.

(18) I.e., that which was purchased with second tithe money and which in turn became defiled, v. infra.

(19) And the same law applies.

(20) Its sanctity is too slight to permit of redemption. while it may not be eaten on account of its uncleanness.

(21) I.e., the food that is purchased with second tithe money cannot be more stringently regarded than second tithe itself.

For the fact that it cannot be redeemed is not due to its greater sanctity but on the contrary because its sanctity is too slight to be capable of transference.

(22) I.e., in the case of hallah set aside from the second tithe.

(23) I.e., in the case of hallah set aside from that which has been purchased with second tithe money.

(24) Whether it is actual tithe or bought with tithe money. Hence they are alike, and therefore he can fulfil his obligations with the hallah set aside from either.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 38b

And ye shall guard the unleavened bread:¹ [it must be] unleavened bread which is guarded for the sake of [the precept of eating] unleavened bread, thus excluding this, which is guarded not for the sake of unleavened bread but for the sake of a sacrifice. R. Joseph said, Scripture saith, seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread:² [that implies] unleavened bread which may be eaten seven days. thus excluding this, which is not eaten seven days but [only] a day and a night.³ It was taught in accordance with Rabbah; it was taught in accordance with R. Joseph. It was taught in accordance with Rabbah: You might think that he can discharge his obligation with the loaves of the thanksgiving and the wafers of a nazirite, therefore it is stated, 'And ye shall guard the unleavened bread', teaching [that it must be] unleavened bread which is guarded for the sake of [fulfilling the obligation of eating] unleavened bread, thus excluding this which is guarded not for the sake of unleavened bread but for the sake of a sacrifice. It was taught in accordance with R. Joseph: You might think that a man can discharge his obligation with the loaves of the thanksgiving and the wafers of a nazirite; therefore it is said, 'seven days ye shall eat unleavened bread', implying, unleavened bread which may be eaten seven days. thus excluding this, which may not be eaten seven days but [only] a day and a night.

Yet deduce it from [the fact that it is designated], 'the bread of affliction', teaching, [it must be] that which may be eaten in grief, thus excluding this, which is not eaten in grief but [only] in joy? — He holds as R. Akiba, who said, 'ani' is written.⁴ Then let him deduce it [from the fact] that it is rich unleavened bread?⁵ Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac: There is [only] a rebi'ith [of oil], and it is divided among many loaves.⁶ Yet deduce it [from the fact] that they might not be eaten in all habitations?⁷ — Said Resh Lakish: This proves that the loaves of the thanksgiving and the wafers of the nazirite could be eaten in Nob and Gibeon.⁸

It was taught. R. Il'ai said: I asked R. Eleazar, How about a man discharging his obligation with the loaves of the thanksgiving and the wafers of a nazirite? I have not heard, replied he. [So] I went and asked it before R. Joshua. Said he to me, Surely they [the Sages] said: [AS TO] THE [UNLEAVENED] LOAVES OF THE THANKS OFFERING AND THE WAFERS OF A NAZIRITE, IF HE MADE THEM FOR HIMSELF, HE CANNOT DISCHARGE HIS OBLIGATION WITH THEM; IF TO SELL IN THE MARKET, HE CAN DISCHARGE HIS OBLIGATION WITH THEM. When I went and discussed the matter before R. Eleazar, he said to me, By the covenant! These are the very words which were stated to Moses at Sinai. Others state: By the covenant! Are these the very words which were stated to Moses at Sinai? And is not a reason required?⁹ And what is the reason? — Said Rabbah: Whatever is for market, he may change his mind [about it]. and he says, 'If it is sold, it is sold; if it will not be sold, I will discharge my duty with it'.

(1) Ex. XII, 17 E.V. translates differently.

(2) Ibid. 15.

(3) V. Lev. VII, 15.

(4) v. Supra 36a for this passage.

(5) Since he follows the written text, ani, viz., poverty; for the unleavened cakes brought with a sacrifice were kneaded with oil, which makes them 'rich' bread (supra 36a).

(6) Only a quarter log of oil was used in the kneading of twenty large loaves: this would not make it rich mazzah.

(7) I.e., outside the walls of Jerusalem; v. supra 36a.

(8) Before the building of the Temple, Israel sacrificed at the 'high places', altars being erected at Nob and Gibeon, amongst other places. Resh Lakish observes that since we do not deduce the present law from the fact that these loaves might not be eaten in all 'habitations', it follows that there was a time when they were eaten without Jerusalem, viz., during the period of the high places at Nob and Gibeon, v. Zeb. 112b. There is an opposing view, that of R Simeon, that the thankoffering and the sacrifices of a nazirite could not be offered at the high places. v. Meg. 9b.

(9) Do you claim a divine origin for them that you draw this distinction without stating its grounds?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 39a

MISHNAH. AND THESE ARE THE HERBS WITH WHICH A MAN DISCHARGES HIS OBLIGATION ON PASSOVER:¹ WITH LETTUCE [HAZARETH]. WITH T A M K A,² WITH H A R H A B I N A,³ WITH ENDIVES ['ULSHIN] AND WITH MAROR.⁴ THE LAW IS COMPLIED WITH BY [EATING THEM] BOTH MOIST [FRESH] AND DRY, BUT NOT PRESERVED [IN VINEGAR], NOR STEWED NOR BOILED.⁵ AND THEY COMBINE TO THE SIZE OF AN OLIVE.⁶ AND YOU CAN DISCHARGE [YOUR OBLIGATION] WITH THEIR STALK[S]. AND WITH DEMAI, AND WITH FIRST TITHE THE TERUMAH OF WHICH HAS BEEN SEPARATED, AND WITH HEKDESH AND SECOND TITHE WHICH HAVE BEEN REDEEMED.⁷

GEMARA. H A Z E R E T H is hassa [lettuce]; 'U L S H I N is hindebi [endives]. TAMKA: Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: It is called temakta.⁸ H A R H A B I N A: R. Simeon b. Lakish said: [It is] the creeper of the palm tree. AND WITH MAROR: merirta.⁹

Bar Kappara taught: These are the herbs with which a man discharges his obligation on Passover: with endives, with tamka, with harhallin,¹⁰ with harhabinin,¹¹ and with lettuce. R. Judah said: Also with wild [field] endives and with garden endives and with lettuce. 'Garden endives and lettuce': but that is taught in the first section?¹² — This is what he says: Wild endives too are like garden endives and lettuce. R. Meir said: Also with 'aswaws, and tura and mar yero'ar.¹³ Said R. Jose to him: 'Aswaws and tura are one; and mar is yero'ar.¹⁴

The School of Samuel taught: These are the herbs with which a man discharges his obligation on Passover: With lettuce, with endives, with tamka, with harhabinin, with harginin,¹⁵ and with hardofannim.¹⁶ R. Judah said: Hazereth yolin [thistles] and willow lettuce too are like them. R. Judah said in R. Eliezer's name: 'Arkablin too,¹⁷ but I went about to all his [sc. R. Eliezer's] disciples and sought a companion¹⁸ but did not find one, but when I came before R. Eleazar b. Jacob he agreed with my words. R. Judah said: Whatever [plant which] contains an acrid [pungent] sap. R. Johanan b. Berokah said: Any [plant] the leaves of which look faded [bleached]. Others say: Every bitter herb contains an acrid sap and its leaves are faded. R. Johanan said: From the words of all of them we may learn [that every] bitter herb contains an acrid sap and its leaves are faded.¹⁹ R. Huna said: The halachah is as the 'Others'.

Rabina found R. Aha son of Raba going in search of merirta. Said he to him, What is [in] your mind: that it is more bitter? But we learned H A Z E R E T H; and the School of Samuel taught, Hazereth; while R. Oshaia said: The obligation is properly [fulfilled with] hazereth. And Raba said: What is hazereth? Hassa. What does hassa [symbolize]? That the Merciful One had pity [has] upon us. Further, R. Samuel b. Nahman said in R. Jonathan's name: Why were the Egyptians compared to maror?²⁰ To teach you: just as this maror, the beginning of which is soft while its end is hard,²¹ so were the Egyptians: their beginning was soft [mild]. but their end was hard [cruel]!²² — Then I retract, he replied.

R. Rehumai said to Abaye: How do you know that this 'maror'²³ means a kind of herb; say that it is the gall of Kufia?²⁴ — It is like unleavened bread:²⁵ just as unleavened bread is a product of the earth, so 'maror' means a product of the earth. Then say it is hirduf?²⁶ — It is like unleavened bread:²⁵ just as unleavened bread is a species of plant, so 'maror' means a species of plant. Then say it is harzipu?²⁷ — It must be like unleavened bread: just as unleavened bread is that which can be bought with second tithe money, so maror' is that which can be bought with second tithe money.²⁸

Rabbah son of R. Hanin said to Abaye: Say that maror means one [herb]?²⁹ — Merorim [plural] is written. Then say that merorim means two? — It is like unleavened bread: just as unleavened bread [can be of] many species.³⁰ so [can] maror [be of] many species.

Rabbah son of R. Huna said in Rab's name: [Regarding] the herbs whereof the Sages ruled that a man can discharge his duty with them on Passover, they all may be sown in one garden bed. Is this to say that they are not [forbidden] on account of kil'ayim?³¹ Raba objected: [Lettuce] and willow lettuce, [garden] endives and wild endives, [garden] leeks and wild leeks, [garden] coriander and wild coriander, mustard and Egyptian mustard [and] the Egyptian gourd and the bitter gourd, — all these are not kil'ayim with one another.³² [Thus] only lettuce with willow lettuce, but not lettuce with endives?³³ And should you answer, They are all taught together, surely Rab said: He teaches them in pairs? What did Rab mean by 'they are sown'? They are sown according to their law.³⁴ [You say], 'According to their law'! but we [already] learned it:

(1) Bitter herbs are eaten on the first two (in Palestine one) nights of Passover, v. Ex. XII, 8.

(2) A kind of cheveril (Jast.).

(3) A kind of creeper.

(4) Lit., 'bitter' (herb). A plant, prob. Cichorium litybus. Succory (Jast.).

(5) Shelukin means boiled to a pulp; mebushalin, boiled in the usual manner.

(6) That is the minimum quantity which must be eaten; and it can be made up of all these.

(7) v. p. 161, n. I.

(8) Rashi: marrubium, hoarhound (Jast.).

(9) The Aramaic for maror.

(10) A prickly plant, thistles.

(11) Pl. of harhabina.

(12) What does R. Judah add?

(13) Names of bitter herbs. v. next note.

(14) Jast. ferule. Rashal reads: Aswaws and tura are one, and it is bitter (mar), and that is (what is called) mar yero'ar.

(15) Jast.: garden ivy.

(16) Wall ivy.

(17) Jast.: prickly creepers on palm trees, palm ivy.

(18) To support me, that he too had heard it from R. Eliezer.

(19) I.e., all the herbs mentioned by the foregoing teachers possess these two features.

(20) In Ex. I, 14 where the Hebrew for embittered is from the same root as maror.

(21) The top is soft, while the stalk hardens like wood.

(22) At first they dealt mildly with the Israelites, but subsequently treated them with great cruelty. All this was adduced by Rabina, to show that merirta was not preferable.

(23) Prescribed in Ex. XII, 8. Merorim, pl. of maror, is the actual word used there.

(24) Name of a fish, supposed to be identical with colias.

(25) To which it is placed in juxtaposition, ibid.

(26) Jast.: a shrub or tree with bitter and stinging leaves, supposed to be rhododaphne, oleander.

(27) Name of a bitter herb, not generally eaten.

(28) This excludes harzipu, for only what is generally eaten can be bought; v. Deut. XIV, 26: all the things enumerated there are normal victuals.

(29) Viz., the most bitter of all.

(30) V. Mishnah Supra 35a.

(31) V.Glos.

(32) Kil. I, 2.

(33) I.e., these are heterogeneous.

(34) I.e., on the contrary, care must be taken not to sow them together, and when they are in one garden-bed the proper space must be left between the separate species.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 39b

A garden-bed which is six handbreadths square, may be sown with five species of seeds, four on the four sides of the bed and one in the middle!¹ — You might say that this applies only to seeds [cereals]. but not to vegetables;² therefore he³ informs us [otherwise]. Shall we [then] say that vegetables are stronger than seeds?⁴ But surely we learned: All Species of seeds may not be sown in one garden-bed [together]. [yet] all species of vegetables [herbs] may be sown in one seed-bed?⁵ - You might say, This maror⁶ is a species of seed [cereal]; hence he informs us [that it is not so].⁷ [You say]. ‘Seeds’! — Can you think so! But surely we learned, HERBS; and Bar Kappara [also] taught. ‘Herbs’; and the School of Samuel [also] taught ‘Herbs’?⁸ - He needs [to state it about] lettuce:⁹ I might argue. since it is destined to harden,¹⁰ we must allow it more space. [For] did not R. Jose b. R. Hanina say: If the cabbage stalk hardens, more room is given to it [up to] a beth roba’?¹¹ This proves that since it is destined to harden, we allow it more space: so here too we should give it more space. Hence he¹² informs us [otherwise].

THE LAW IS COMPLIED WITH BY [EATING THEM] BOTH MOIST [FRESH] OR DRY etc. R. Hisda said: They learned this only of the stalk; but in the case of the leaves, only moist [fresh] ones, but not dry ones. But since a later clause states, WITH THEIR STALK, it follows that the first clause [refers to] leaves? [That clause] indeed gives an explanation: when does he [the Tanna] teach, BOTH MOIST AND DRY? In reference to the stalk.

An objection is raised: One can discharge [the obligation] with them and their stalks, both moist and dry: this is R. Meir's view. But the Sages maintain: One can discharge [the obligation] with moist [fresh] ones, but one cannot discharge [the obligation] with dry ones. And they agree that one can discharge [the obligation] with them [when] withered,¹³ but not [when] preserved. stewed or boiled. This is the general principle of the matter: Whatever has the taste of maror, one can discharge the obligation with it; but whatever does not possess the taste of maror, one cannot discharge the obligation with it!¹⁴ — Explain it¹⁵ [as referring] to the stalk.

Our Rabbis taught: One cannot discharge [the obligation] with them [when] withered. In the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Zadok it was said: One can discharge [the obligation] with them [when] withered.

Rami b. Hama asked: How about a man discharging his obligation with second tithing maror in Jerusalem? On R. Akiba's view,¹⁶ there is no question: seeing that he discharges his obligation [there with] in the case of unleavened bread, [the tithing of] which is [enjoined] by Scripture. need you ask about maror, which is [only] Rabbinical.¹⁷ The question arises on the view of R. Jose the Galilean. What then? Is it only with unleavened bread, which is [tithed] by Scriptural law, that he cannot discharge his obligation, but with maror, which is [tithed] by Rabbinical law [only], he discharges his obligation; or perhaps whatever [measure] the Rabbis enacted, they enacted it similar to a Scriptural law?¹⁸ Said Raba: It is logical [that] unleavened bread and maror [are assimilated].¹⁹

MISHNAH. ONE MAY NOT SOAK BRAN FOR FOWLS, BUT ONE MAY SCALD IT. A WOMAN MAY NOT SOAK BRAN TO TAKE WITH HER²⁰ TO THE BATHS,²¹ BUT SHE MAY RUB IT ON HER SKIN. AND A MAN MAY NOT CHEW WHEAT AND PLACE IT ON HIS WOUND, BECAUSE IT TURNS LEAVEN.

G E M A R A. Our Rabbis taught: These are the things which cannot come to fermentation: That which is baked,²² boiled, and that which is scalded, having been scalded in boiling water. ‘That which is boiled’? But while it is being boiled it turns leaven! — Said R. Papa: He means: baked [mazzah] which was [then] boiled. It was taught. R. Jose b. R. Judah said: Flour into which there fell a dripping [of water]. even all day, does not come to fermentation.²³ Said R. Papa: Provided that it acted drop after drop.²⁴ The School of R. Shila said: Wattika²⁵ is permitted. But it was taught: Wattika is forbidden? — There is no difficulty: here it is such as is prepared with oil and salt;²⁶ there it is prepared with water and salt.²⁷ Mar Zutra said: A man must not line a pot with flour of roast grain, lest it had not been properly baked²⁸ and it comes to leaven.²⁹ R. Joseph said: A man must not scald

- (1) V. Shab. 84b (Sonc. ed.) note a.l. Then what does Rab add?
- (2) Because they draw their sustenance more vigorously, hence from a wider area.
- (3) Rab.
- (4) In drawing from the ground.
- (5) Cereal seeds must not be sown within this area, and the statement that five species of seeds may be sown in a plot six handbreadths square applies to vegetables (herbs) only.
- (6) I.e., the species enumerated supra in our Mishnah and Gemara.
- (7) This answer abandons the previous answer. Seeds (cereals) in fact require more space, for their drawing power is greater, and Rab informs us that maror belongs to the species of herbs, not seeds, and therefore the more lenient law applies to them.
- (8) All these authorities describe maror as herbs; how then could it be assumed that maror belongs to the class of cereals?
- (9) The last reply to the question, ‘What does Rab add’, being untenable, another answer is offered.
- (10) Its stalk becomes hard and thick.
- (11) A piece of ground of the capacity of one roba’ (quarter of a kab) of seed.
- (12) Rab.
- (13) This is not the same as dry.
- (14) Here too R. Meir seems to state that both the herbs themselves (i.e.. the leaves) and the stalks may be fresh or dry. And the Mishnah too evidently agrees with R. Meir, since the Rabbis maintain that dried herbs cannot be eaten.
- (15) The statement permitting its use dried.
- (16) v. supra 36a.
- (17) By scriptural law vegetables need not be tithed at all; hence Biblically speaking this maror is not second tithe.
- (18) So that maror is the same as unleavened bread.
- (19) v. supra p. 182, n. 6.
- (20) Lit., ‘in her hand’.
- (21) A bran paste was used as a depilatory or cosmetic.
- (22) Once unleavened bread is baked it can never turn leaven.
- (23) The incessant dripping prevents fermentation.
- (24) Without an appreciable interval between them.
- (25) Name of a certain pastry or tart made of flour.
- (26) Oil does not cause fermentation.
- (27) Then it is forbidden.
- (28) Lit., ‘boiled’.
- (29) Though roast grain is baked, and therefore can never become leaven, yet we fear that it may not have been fully baked, and when the dish is put into the pot with the water this flour will ferment.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 40a

two grains of wheat together, lest one becomes wedged in the cleft of the other, so that the column of water will not surround it on all¹ sides, and [thus] it will come to fermentation. And Abaye said: A man must not singe two ears of corn together. lest sap [water] issue from one and the other absorb it, and [thus] it will come to fermentation. Said Raba to him: If so, [forbid] even one also, lest it [the sap] issues from one end and the other end absorbs it? No, said Raba: It is sap [water] of fruit,² and sap of fruit does not cause fermentation. Now Abaye retracted from that [view], because as long as they [the grains] absorb [liquid], they do not ferment.³ For Abaye said: The jar for roasting [ears of corn]: if it is inverted, it is permitted;⁴ if upright, it is forbidden.⁵ Raba said: Even if upright it is still permitted [because] it is the sap of fruit, and the sap of fruit does not cause fermentation.

Our Rabbis taught: One may not wash⁶ barley on Passover; and if one did wash [them] and they split, they are forbidden;⁷ if they did not split, they are permitted. R. Jose said: He can soak them in vinegar. and the vinegar binds them.⁸ Samuel said: The halachah is not as R. Jose. R. Hisda said in Mar 'Ukba's name: It does not mean literally split, but [if they reach] such [a condition] that if placed on the mouth of a [wine] cask they will split of themselves. (⁹) But Samuel said: It means literally split. Samuel acted in the vicinity of the home of Bar Hashu [on the view that] 'split' is meant literally.¹⁰

Rabbah said: A conscientious man should not wash [corn].¹¹ Why particularly a conscientious man: even any other man¹² too, for surely it was taught: One may not wash barley on Passover? He says thus: He should not wash even wheat, which is hard.¹³ Said R. Nahman to him: He who will heed Abba¹⁴ will eat mouldy bread.¹⁵ For Surely the household of R. Huna washed [it], and the household of Raba b. Abin washed [it]. But Raba said: It is forbidden to wash [wheat]. But what of what was taught: You may not wash barley on Passover, [implying] barley only may not [be washed], but wheat is permitted? — He leads to a climax!¹⁶ It is unnecessary [to teach about] wheat, for since it has splits the water enters it;¹⁷ but barley, which is smooth, I would say that it is allowable. Therefore he informs us [otherwise]. Subsequently Raba said: It is permitted to wash [wheat]. For it was taught: One can discharge [the obligation] with fine bread and with coarse bread.¹⁸ Now fine bread is impossible without washing [the grain].

R. Papa raised an objection against Raba: [With regard to] the flours and fine meals of Gentiles, those of villages are clean, while those of towns are unclean. What is the reason that those of villages [are clean]? Is it not because they do not wash [the grain],¹⁹ yet he calls it 'fine meal'?²⁰ — Explain [this²¹ as referring to] 'flour'. After he [Raba] departed, he [R. Papa] said [to himself]. Why did I not cite him [an objection] from what R. Zera said in R. Jeremiah's name in Samuel's name: The wheat for meal offerings must not be washed; yet he calls it fine meal?²² Subsequently Raba said: It is obligatory to wash [the grain].²³ for it is said, And ye shall guard the unleavened bread.²⁴ Now, if not that it requires washing, for what purpose is the guarding?²⁵ If guarding for the kneading,²⁶ the guarding of kneading is not guarding,²⁷ for R. Huna said: The doughs of a heathen,²⁸ a man may fill his stomach with them,²⁹ providing that he eats as much as an olive of unleavened bread at the end. [Thus] only at the end, but not at the beginning:³⁰ what is the reason? Because he had not afforded it any guarding. Then let him guard it from the baking and onwards?³¹ Hence this surely proves that we require guarding from the beginning. Yet whence [does this follow]: perhaps it is different there, because when guarding became necessary.³² he did not guard it;³³ but where he did guard it when guarding became necessary. it may indeed be that the guarding at the kneading is [truly] considered 'guarding'.

Yet even so,³⁴ Raba did not retract. For he said to those who handled sheaves,³⁵ Handle them for the purpose of the precept.³⁶ This proves that he holds [that] we require guarding ab initio, from beginning to end. Mar the son of Rabina,

(1) Lit., 'four'.

(2) I.e., produce.

(3) MS.M. reads: as long as they (the liquids) are in motion (boiling), they do not create fermentation.

- (4) As the sap which is exuded runs out and is not re-absorbed by the other ears. — Therefore the same will hold good where he sings two ears of corn together, which on this view must be permitted. Thus he retracted from his former view.
- (5) Because the sap is retained in the vessel.
- (6) The verb connotes to moisten the grain before grinding.
- (7) Because then they turn leaven very quickly.
- (8) Prevents fermentation.
- (9) Then they are forbidden.
- (10) And since those about which he was consulted were not actually split, he ruled that they were permitted.
- (11) v. p. 186, n.8.
- (12) Lit., 'the whole world'.
- (13) And consequently is slower to ferment than barley. Others who are not so conscientious may moisten wheat, for only barley is forbidden in the Baraita.
- (14) Lit., 'father' - a title of respect.
- (15) I.e., unclean bread, since the wheat was not washed.
- (16) Lit., 'he states, it is unnecessary "(to teach etc.)"'.
 (17) And certainly causes it to ferment.
- (18) V. supra 37a.
- (19) And eatables cannot become unclean unless moisture has previously been upon them.
- (20) Which shows that fine bread is possible without washing.
- (21) The reference to villages.
- (22) Such is prescribed in Scripture for meal-offerings, v. Lev. II, i.
- (23) For preparing the unleavened bread.
- (24) Ex. XII, 17.
- (25) For the grain cannot ferment unless there is moisture upon it.
- (26) I.e., that when it is kneaded care must be taken that it does not turn leaven.
- (27) This verse implies that at a certain stage of its manufacture the unleavened bread must be guarded for the express purpose of fulfilling the law prescribing the eating of unleavened bread. Hence, if a man eats on the first night of Passover only unleavened bread which was not guarded expressly for that purpose, he does not do his duty. Now Raba states that the guarding that is given to it at the stage of kneading is not considered 'guarding' in this respect.
- (28) Which one recognizes as not having turned leaven.
- (29) On the first night of Passover.
- (30) I.e., the law is complied with only with this unleavened bread which he eats at the end, but not with the heathen's dough which he eats at the beginning. The unleavened bread eaten in fulfilment of the precept comes at the end of the meal with the Paschal lamb, v. infra 119b.
- (31) I.e., from when it is prepared for baking. viz., when it is shaped, moistened and put into the oven.
- (32) Lit., 'when it entered upon (the need for) guarding'. — I.e., at the beginning of the kneading process — from the moment when water was added to the flour making fermentation possible.
- (33) Though it nevertheless remained unleavened.
- (34) Though Raba's proof was refuted.
- (35) At harvest time, gathering and tying them. Lit., 'turned about'.
- (36) Bear in mind that they may be used for that purpose.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 40b

his mother stored [grain] for him in a trough.¹

A certain ship of grain foundered in Hishta,² [whereupon] Raba gave permission to sell [the grain]³ to Gentiles. Rabbah b. Lewai⁴ raised an objection against Raba: [With regard to] a garment wherein kil'ayim⁵ is lost,⁶ he must not sell it to a Gentile,⁷ nor may he make a saddle-cloth for an ass;⁸ but it may be made into shrouds for a corpse.⁹ What is the reason [that it may] not [be sold] to a Gentile? Surely it is because he might resell it to an Israelite?¹⁰ Subsequently Raba said, Let them sell it to Israelites, a kab¹¹ at a time,¹² so that it should be consumed before Passover.

Our Rabbis taught: One may not mash a dish on Passover;¹³ and he who wishes to mash, must put in the flour and then add the vinegar.¹⁴ But some say. He may even put in the vinegar [first] and then add the flour.¹⁵

Who is 'some say'? Said R. Hisda, It is R. Judah. For we learned: [In the case of] a stew pot or a boiling pot¹⁶ which he removed seething [from the fire].¹⁷ he must not put spices therein,¹⁸ but he

R. Han. reads: for the sake of unleavened bread — i.e., take care that no water falls on them and do not store them in a damp place. may put [spices] into a dish or a tureen.¹⁹ R. Judah said: He may put [spices] into anything except what contains vinegar or brine.²⁰ Yet let us establish it as R. Jose, for it was taught, R. Jose said: He can soak them in vinegar, and the vinegar binds them?²¹ — We know R. Jose [to rule thus] only when it is by itself, but not when it is in a mixture. 'Ulla said: Both the one and the other are forbidden,²² because, 'Go, go, thou nazirite', say we, 'take the most devious route, but approach not the vineyard'.²³ R. Papa permitted the stewards of the house of the Resh Galutha²⁴ to mash a dish with parched grains. Said Raba: Is there anyone who permits such a thing in a place where slaves are found?²⁵ Others say. Raba himself mashed a dish with parched grains.

MISHNAH. FLOUR MAY NOT BE PUT INTO HAROSETH²⁶ OR IN TO THE MUSTARD,²⁷ AND IF HE DID PUT [IT], IT MUST BE EATEN IMMEDIATELY;²⁸ BUT R. MEIR FORBIDS [IT]. ONE MAY NOT BOIL THE PASSOVER SACRIFICE, NEITHER IN LIQUIDS NOR IN FRUIT JUICE.²⁹ BUT ONE MAY BASTE AND DIP IT IN THEM.³⁰ THE WATER USED BY A BAKER MUST BE Poured OUT, BECAUSE IT PROMOTES FERMENTATION.

contents, as long as they are seething, cause any condiments put therein to boil likewise. This of course is forbidden on the Sabbath. GEMARA. R. Kahana said: The controversy is [about putting flour] into mustard; but [if it was put] into haroseth, all agree that it must be burnt immediately. And it was taught likewise: Flour must not be put into haroseth, and if he did put [it], it must be burnt immediately. [If put] into mustard, — R. Meir said: It must be burnt immediately; but the Sages rule: It must be eaten immediately.³¹

R. Huna the son of Rab Judah said in R. Nahman's name in Samuel's name: The halachah is as the words of the Sages. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to R. Huna the son of Rab Judah:

(1) For use on the night of Passover. This this too was guarded from the beginning.

(2) A canal in Babylonia. This happened before Passover.

(3) Which became leaven.

(4) Or, the Levite.

(5) V. Glos.

(6) I.e., a thread of the forbidden material was woven in the cloth, and its place is not known.

(7) For the latter may resell it to a Jew who will wear it in ignorance of the fact that it contains kil'ayim.

(8) Lest he subsequently remove it and sew it into a garment.

(9) Because it can henceforth not be used for any other purpose, since the raiment of the dead is forbidden for general use. On the other hand, the corpse is not subject to any of the laws of the Torah, v. Shab. 30a.

(10) Then the same should apply here.

(11) A measure of capacity one sixth of a se'ah.

(12) I.e., not selling a large quantity to any single person.

(13) I.e., make a mash of flour and vinegar in the usual way, which is to put in the vinegar first and then add the flour. This is forbidden, because it easily ferments and becomes leaven.

(14) The vinegar prevents fermenting.

- (15) Although the vinegar becomes mixed with the rest of the dish when it is put in first, it can still prevent the fermenting of the flour.
- (16) The first means a tightly covered pot.
- (17) At twilight on Friday.
- (18) After the Sabbath commences. The pot is a 'first vessel', i.e., it was used directly on the fire, and its
- (19) Containing a hot stew. The dish or the tureen is a 'second vessel', i.e., it was not used directly on the fire, and cannot make the spices boil.
- (20) Being sharp. they cause them to boil, though the vinegar or brine is mixed with the rest of the dish. By causing them to boil they prevent fermentation, and the same applies here.
- (21) Which prevents fermentation.
- (22) Whichever is put first. This was proverbial: a man must not venture into temptation, and a nazirite, who must not eat grapes, must not even go near a vineyard. Similarly, if a man is permitted to make the mash in one way, he will make it in the other way too.
- (23) Jast. s.v. אכונג conjectures that בורדקי is a corruption of that word.
- (24) Exilarch, the official title of the head of Babylonian Jewry.
- (25) As in the house of the Exilarch. They are very lax in any case, and such leniency will lead to even greater laxity.
- (26) A pap made of fruits and spices with wine or vinegar, used for sweetening the bitter herb on Passover night (Jast.).
- (27) Lest the flour become leaven.
- (28) Before it can ferment.
- (29) Though Scripture only mentions water, v. Ex. XII, 9.
- (30) I.e., the flesh may be greased
- (31) The greater strength of mustard retards fermentation, hence the controversy. But it ferments very quickly in haroseth.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 41a

Do you¹ say it in reference to haroseth.² or do you say it in reference to mustard? What is the practical difference? asked he. — In respect to R. Kahana's [dictum] — For R. Kahana said: The controversy is [about putting flour] into mustard; but [if it was put] into haroseth, all agree that it must be burnt immediately.³ I have not heard it, he replied to him, as if to say, I do not agree with it. R. Ashi said: Logic supports R. Kahana, since Samuel said: The halachah is not as R. Jose.⁴ Surely then, since it [vinegar] does not bind, it does indeed cause fermentation?⁵ — No: perhaps it neither binds nor promotes fermentation.

ONE MAY NOT BOIL etc. Our Rabbis taught: [Eat not of it raw, nor boiled at all] with water:⁶ I only know [that it may not be boiled] in water; whence do we know [it of] other liquids? You can answer, [it follows] a minor,' if water, which does not impart its taste,⁷ is forbidden; then other liquids, which impart their taste, how much with these liquids when it is being roasted, and the roasted meat may be dipped into liquids at the time of eating. more so!⁸ Rabbi said: 'With water': I only know it of water; whence do we know [it of] other liquids? Because it is stated, 'nor boiled at all',⁹ [implying] in all cases.¹⁰ Wherein do they differ? — They differ in respect of [that which is] roasted in a pot.¹¹ And the Rabbis: how do they utilize this [phrase] 'nor boiled at all'? — They employ it for what was taught: If he boiled it and then roasted it, or roasted it and then boiled it, he is liable.¹² As for 'if he boiled it and then roasted it, he is liable,' that is well, seeing that he boiled it.¹³ But if he roasted it and then boiled it, surely it is 'roast with fire'; why [then is he liable]? — Said R. Kahana: The author of this is R. Jose. For it was taught: The law¹⁴ is complied with by [eating] an [unleavened] wafer that is soaked¹⁵ or boiled, but not dissolved: this is the view of R. Meir. R. Jose said: The law is complied with by [eating] a wafer that is soaked, but not with one that is boiled, even if not dissolved.¹⁶ 'Ulla said: You may even say [that it agrees with] R. Meir;¹⁷ here it is different, because Scripture saith, 'nor boiled at all', [implying] in all cases.¹⁸

Our Rabbis taught: You might think that if he roasted it as much as it needs,¹⁹ he should be liable. Therefore it is stated: Eat not of it semi-roast nor boiled at all with water': semi-roast or boiled did I forbid²⁰ thee, but not that which is roasted as much as it needs.²¹ How is that meant? — Said R. Ashi: That he rendered it charred meat. Our Rabbis taught: You might think that if he ate as much as an olive of raw meat,²² he should be liable; therefore it is stated, Eat not of it semi-roast [na] nor boiled at all [with water]: semi-roast and boiled did I forbid thee, but not raw. You might think that it is permitted; therefore it is stated, 'but roast with fire'. How is 'na' understood? — Said Rab: as that which the Persians call abarnim.²³

R. Hisda said: He who cooks [food] in the hot springs of Tiberias on the Sabbath is not culpable;²⁴ if he boiled the Passover sacrifice in the hot springs of Tiberias, he is culpable. Wherein does the Sabbath differ, that [he is] not [culpable]? Because we require the product of fire,²⁵ which is absent! Then [in respect to] the Passover sacrifice too it is not a product of fire? — Said Raba, What is the meaning of his statement,²⁶ 'he is culpable'? That he transgresses on account of '[Thou shalt not eat . . .] but roast with fire.'²⁷ R. Hiyya son of R. Nathan recited this [dictum] of R. Hisda explicitly. [Thus:] R. Hisda said: He who cooks in the hot springs of Tiberias on the Sabbath is not culpable; but if he boiled the Passover sacrifice in the hot springs of Tiberias, he is culpable. because he transgressed on account of 'but roast with fire'.

Raba said: If he ate it semi-roast,

(1) Lit., 'does the Master'.

(2) That the paps ferment also with haroseth.

(3) Do you too accept this, or do you maintain that there is a controversy in respect of haroseth too?

(4) Supra 40a, q.v. in reference to vinegar.

(5) Which is the reason that flour must not be put into haroseth, since it contains vinegar, and it further follows that if put into it, it is forbidden. Hence when Samuel said that the halachah is as the Sages, that it is permitted, he must have referred to mustard, but not to haroseth.

(6) Ex. XII, 9.

(7) Lit., 'which does not lose its taste' (to the substance boiled in it).

(8) Since the sacrifice now has a foreign flavour.

(9) The emphatic 'at all' is expressed in Hebrew by the doubling of the verb.

(10) In whatever it is boiled.

(11) Without any liquid, save its own juice. If we deduce the interdict of other liquids a minori, this however is permitted. But when we learn it from the emphatic doubling of the verb, even this is forbidden. — The Passover sacrifice was roasted on a spit directly over the fire.

(12) To flagellation for eating it.

(13) In the first place. It can never be subsequently regarded as 'roast with fire'.

(14) Relating to the eating of unleavened bread on Passover.

(15) In another dish.

(16) Because It is not called bread, notwithstanding that it was previously baked in an oven. Similarly, if the Passover is boiled after being roasted, it is no longer regarded as 'roast with fire'.

(17) Viz., that once baked it retains its name as bread.

(18) Even after roasting. This answers the question, 'And the Rabbis: how do they utilize this (phrase), "nor boiled at all"?'.

(19) I.e., he overroasted it, thus burning it. I might think that this is not called 'roast with fire' but 'burnt with fire', and therefore he incurs flagellation for eating it.

(20) Lit., 'tell'.

(21) No interdict is violated by eating it thus.

(22) Of the Passover sacrifices.

(23) Half-done meat. v. Jast. s.v. אברנים.

(24) For the desecration of the Sabbath, because this is not really cooking.

(25) Before it can be called cooking.

(26) Lit. , 'which he states'.

(27) He is not culpable on account of, 'Thou shalt not eat of it. . . boiled with water' because this is not designated boiling. But the other portion of the verse, 'but roast with fire', is an implied negative injunction, the command being that you must not eat anything which is not roast, and what is boiled in the springs of Tiberias is therefore forbidden by implication. He thus holds that a man is flagellated for an implied negative injunction, i.e., one which is not explicitly stated.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 41b

he is flagellated twice;¹ if he ate it boiled, he is flagellated twice;² [if he ate] semi-roast and boiled, he is flagellated thrice. Abaye said: We do not flagellate on account of an implied prohibition. Some maintain: He is not indeed flagellated twice,³ but he is nevertheless flagellated once.⁴ Others say. He is not even flagellated once, because [Scripture] does not particularize its interdict, like the interdict of muzzling.⁵ Raba said: If he [a nazirite] ate the husk [of grapes]. he is flagellated twice; if he ate the kernel, he is flagellated twice; [for] the husk and the kernel, he is flagellated thrice.⁶ Abaye maintained: We do not flagellate on account of an implied prohibition — Some say: He is indeed not flagellated twice, but he is nevertheless flagellated once.⁷ Others maintain: He is not even flagellated once, because [Scripture] does not particularize its interdict, like the interdict of muzzling.

Our Rabbis taught: If he ate as much as an olive of semi-roast [paschal offering] before nightfall,⁸ he is not culpable; [if he ate] as much as an olive of semi-roast flesh after dark, he is culpable. If he ate as much as an olive of roast meat before nightfall, he does not disqualify himself from [being one of] the members of the company;⁹ [if he eats] as much as an olive of roast meat after dark,¹⁰ he disqualifies himself from [being one of] the members of his company.

Another [Baraita] taught: You might think that if he ate as much as an olive of semi-roast before nightfall he should be culpable; and it is a logical inference: if when he is subject to [the precept] 'arise and eat roast [flesh]',¹¹ he is subject to [the interdict] 'do not eat it semi-roast'; then when he is not subject to [the precept], 'arise and eat roast', is it not logical that he is subject to [the interdict] 'do not eat it semi-roast?' Or perhaps it is not so:¹² when he is not subject to [the precept]. 'arise and eat roast', he is subject to, 'do not eat it semi-roast', [while] when he is subject to [the precept], 'arise and eat roast', he is not subject to [the interdict] 'do not eat it semi-roast', and do not wonder [threat], for lo! it was freed¹³ from its general interdict in respect to roast.¹⁴ Therefore it is stated, 'Eat not of it semi-roast'; nor boiled at all [bashel mebusshal] with water, but roast with fire'. Now, 'but roast with fire' should not be stated;¹⁵ then why is 'but roast with fire' stated? To teach you: When he is subject [to the command]. 'Arise and eat roast', he is [also] subject to 'Eat not of it semi-roast'; when he is not subject to [the command]. 'Arise and eat roast', he is not subject to, 'Eat not of it semi-roast'.¹⁶

Rabbi said: I could read 'bashel'; why is 'mebusshal' stated [too]? For I might think, I only know it¹⁷ where he boiled it after nightfall. Whence do we know it if he boiled it during the day?¹⁸ Therefore it is stated, 'bashel mebusshal', [implying] in all cases. But Rabbi has utilized this 'bashel mebusshal' in respect of [flesh] roast[ed] in a pot and [flesh boiled] in other liquids?¹⁹ — If so,²⁰ let Scripture say either bashel bashel or mebusshal mebusshal:²¹ why 'bashel mebusshal'? Hence you infer two things from it.

Our Rabbis taught: If he ate roast [paschal offering] during the day. he is culpable; and [if he ate] as much as an olive of semi-roast after nightfall, he is culpable. [Thus] he teaches roast similar to half-roast: just as semi-roast [after nightfall] is [interdicted] by a negative injunction, so is roast [before nightfall] subject to a negative injunction. As for half-roast, it is well: it is written, 'Eat not of it semi-roast'. But whence do we know [the negative injunction for] roast? Because it is written, 'And they shall eat the flesh in that night': only at night, but not by day. But this is a negative injunction deduced by implication from an affirmative command, and every negative injunction deduced by implication from an affirmative command is [technically] an affirmative command?²² — Said R. Hisda, The author of this

- (1) Once on account of the injunction against semi-roast, and again because of the interdict, 'Eat not . . . but roast with fire'.
 - (2) On account of the injunction against boiled flesh, and again as in the case of semi-roast meat.
 - (3) Since he is flagellated on account of the direct prohibition, 'Eat not of it semi-roast', or, 'nor boiled', he is not flagellated on account of the implied interdict too.
 - (4) Rashi: E.g., he who boils it in the hot springs of Tiberias. Since there is no explicit injunction, we fall back upon the implied injunction. Tosaf.: If he was merely warned against violating the injunction, 'Eat not of it . . . but roast with fire'.
 - (5) V. Deut. XXV, 4. This is an interdict explicitly forbidding a particular action, and this is the model of all interdicts the disregard of which involves flagellation, since it immediately follows the law of flagellation (ibid. v. 3). But the interdict of 'eat not of it . . . but roast with fire' does not particularize any method of preparation as forbidden.
 - (6) V. Num. VI, 4: All the days of his naziriteship he shall eat nothing that is made of the grape vine, from the kernels eaten to the husk. According to Raba, the kernels and the husk are explicitly prohibited, while they are also included in the implied prohibition of 'he shall eat nothing that is made of the grape vine', and the offender is flagellated on account of each.
 - (7) Rashi: E.g., if he ate the leaves of the vine; cf. n. 2.
 - (8) Lit., 'while it was yet day' — on the fourteenth of Nisan.
 - (9) Each paschal offering had to be eaten by one company, the members of which had registered for that particular animal. It might not be eaten by two companies, while on the other hand no man might eat in two separate places. It is now taught that if he eats some roast meat before nightfall, he is not disqualified from eating elsewhere with his company after nightfall, the earlier eating not being regarded as eating of the paschal offering in this sense.
 - (10) Not in the company where he registered.
 - (11) I.e., perhaps a different argument is to be used.
 - (12) I.e., after nightfall.
 - (13) Lit., 'permitted'.
 - (14) For even roast paschal offering is not permitted before nightfall, as it is written, 'and they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire', which implies, but not before; at night this implied prohibition is lifted. Hence we might argue: granted that the general interdict is not lifted at the outset in respect of semiroast too, yet if he ate it he is not liable to punishment.
 - (15) For the previous verse states: And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire.
 - (16) I. e., flagellation for eating semi-roast meat of the paschal offering is incurred only on the evening of the fifteenth, when one is bidden to eat the roast of the Passover sacrifice, but not on the day of the fourteenth, before the obligation commences.
 - (17) That boiled paschal offering flesh must not be eaten.
 - (18) That even then it may not be eaten at night.
 - (19) Supra 41a.
 - (20) That that is its only teaching.
 - (21) Granted that the repetition is necessary, the same grammatical form could be repeated.
 - (22) Which does not involve flagellation.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 42a

is Rabbi. For it was taught: Either a bullock or a lamb that hath anything superfluous or lacking in its parts, that mayest thou offer for a freewill-offering; [but for a vow it shall not be accepted]:¹ that thou mayest dedicate² for the Temple repair,³ but thou mayest not dedicate unblemished [animals] for the Temple repair.⁴ Hence it was said, Whoever dedicates unblemished [animals] for the Temple repair transgresses an affirmative precept — I only know [that he transgresses] an affirmative precept: whence do we know [that he transgresses also] a negative injunction? Because it is stated, And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying [lemor]:⁵ this teaches concerning the whole section that it is subject to a negative injunction: this is R. Judah's view.⁶ Rabbi asked Bar Kappara: How does that imply it? Said he to him, Because it is written, 'lemor': a 'not' ['lo'] was stated in [these] matters.⁷ The School of Rab interpreted: Lemor, a negative injunction [law] was stated.

THE WATER USED BY A BAKER etc. One [Baraita] taught: You must pour [it] out on a slope. but you may not pour [it] out on broken [ground].⁸ While another [Baraita] taught: You may pour [it] out on broken ground? — There is no difficulty: here it means that it [the water] is abundant, so that it collects;⁹ there it means that it is not abundant, so that it does not collect.

Rab Judah said: A woman must knead [unleavened bread] only with water which was kept overnight.¹⁰ R. Mattenah taught this [in a public lecture] at Papunia.¹¹ On the morrow all took their pitchers and repaired to him and demanded of him, 'Give us water'. Said he to them, 'I meant with water which has been kept overnight'.

Raba lectured: A woman may not knead in the sun, nor with water heated by the sun, nor with water collected¹² from the caldron;¹³ and she must not remove her hand from the oven until she has finished all the bread;¹⁴ and she requires two vessels, one with which she moistens [the dough], and the other wherein she cools her hands.¹⁵ is now being discussed, has likewise the same superscription in v. I, q.v. The scholars asked: What if she transgressed and kneaded [in warm water]? Mar Zutra said: [The bread] is permitted; R. Ashi said: It is forbidden — Mar Zutra said, Whence do I know¹⁶ it?—Because it was taught: One may not wash barley on Passover; and if one did wash [them], if they split they are forbidden; if they did not split, they are permitted.¹⁷ But R. Ashi says: Will you weave all these things in one web?¹⁸ Where it was stated,¹⁹ it was stated; and where It was not stated, it was not stated.

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. NOW THE FOLLOWING [THINGS] MUST BE REMOVED²⁰ ON PASSOVER: BABYLONIAN KUTAH,²¹ MEDIAN BEER, IDUMEAN VINEGAR, EGYPTIAN ZITHOM,²² THE DYER'S BROTH,²³ COOK'S DOUGH,²⁴ AND THE SCRIBES' PASTE.²⁵ R. ELIEZER SAID: WOMEN'S ORNAMENTS TOO.²⁶ THIS IS THE GENERAL, RULE: WHATEVER IS OF²⁷ THE SPECIES OF CORN²⁸ MUST BE REMOVED ON PASSOVER. THESE ARE SUBJECT TO A WARNING',²⁹ BUT THEY DO NOT INVOLVE KARETH.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Three things were said of Babylonian kutah: it closes up the heart,³⁰ blinds the eyes, and emaciates the body. It closes up the heart, on account of the whey of milk; and it blinds the eyes, on account of the salt; and it emaciates the body, on account of the stale crusts.³¹

Our Rabbis taught: Three things increase one's motion, bend the stature, and take away a five hundredth part of a man's eyesight. They are these: Coarse black bread, new beer, and raw vegetables.

Our Rabbis taught: Three things decrease one's motion, straighten the stature, and give light to the eyes. These are they: White³² bread, fat meat, and old wine. White bread,

(9) Hence it may not be poured out there.

(10) Because in Nisan the water in the wells is warm (v. infra 94b). which hastens fermentation. Therefore it must be drawn the evening before it is required, so that it can cool off.

of fine meal. Fat meat, of a goat which was not opened.¹ Old wine: very old.² Everything that is beneficial for the one is harmful for the other,³ and what is harmful for one is beneficial for the other, save moist zangebila,⁴ long peppers, white bread, fat meat and old wine, which are beneficial for the whole body.

MEDIAN BEER. Because barley water is mixed into it. IDUMEAN VINEGAR. Because barley is cast into it. R. Nahman [b. Isaac] said:⁵ In former times, when they used to bring [wine] libations from Judah, the wine of Judah did not turn vinegar unless barley was put into it, and they used to call it simply vinegar.⁶ But now the wine of the Idumeans does not turn vinegar until barley is put into it, and it is called 'Idumean vinegar', in fulfilment of what is said, [Tyre hath said against Jerusalem...]

I shall be replenished, now that she is laid waste:⁷ if one is full [flourishing] the other is desolate, and if the other is full the first is desolate.⁸ R. Nahman b. Isaac quoted this: and the one people shall be stronger than the other people.⁹

It was taught, R. Judah said: Originally, he who bought vinegar from an 'am ha-arez¹⁰ did not need to tithe it, because it was a presumption that it was produced from nought but tamad.¹¹ But now, he who buys vinegar from an 'am ha-arez must tithe it.¹² Now does R. Judah hold [that] tamad is not liable to tithing, but we learned: He who makes tamad, pouring water on by measure, and [then] he finds the same quantity, is exempt [from tithing]:¹³ but R. Judah declares him liable?¹⁴ This is what he says: The 'amme ha-arez were not under suspicion in connection with tamad.¹⁵ Alternatively, they were under suspicion, yet there is no difficulty: the one refers to [tamad made with] the straining bag; the other refers to [tamad made of] kernels.¹⁶

AND EGYPTIAN ZITHOM. What is EGYPTIAN ZITHOM?-R. Joseph learned: [A concoction made of] a third part barley, a third part safflower, and a third part salt. R. Papa omitted barley and substituted wheat. And your token is 'sisan'.¹⁷ They soaked them [these ingredients], then roasted them, ground them and then drank them. From the [Passover] sacrifice¹⁸ until Pentecost, they who are constipated are relieved, while they who are diarrhoeic are bound. [But] for an invalid and a pregnant woman it is dangerous.¹⁹

AND DYER'S BROTH. Here it is explained: Bran water, with which lacca²⁰ is primed.

AND COOK'S DOUGH. A loaf [i.e., dough] made of corn less than a third grown, which she places on the mouth of the pot and it absorbs the froth.

AND SCRIBES' PASTE. Here it is explained: Shoemaker's paste.²¹ R. Shimi of Hozae²² said: It is a toilet paste used by the daughters of rich men, of which they leave [some] for the daughters of poor men.²³ But that is not so, for R. Hiyya taught: They are four commodities of general use²⁴ and three manufacturing commodities.²⁵ Now if you say that it is a toilet paste used by the daughters of rich men, what manufacturing commodities are there?²⁶ What then; [it is] shoemaker's paste? Then why does he call it SCRIBES' PASTE; he should say, cobbler's PASTE? — Said R. Oshaia to him: In truth it is shoemaker's paste; yet why does he call it: SCRIBES' PASTE? Because scribes too stick their papyruses together with it.

R. ELIEZER SAID: WOMEN'S ORNAMENTS TOO etc. WOMEN'S ORNAMENTS! can you think so!²⁷ Rather, say, WOMEN'S cosmetics TOO. For Rab Judah said in Rab's name: [As to] the daughters of Israel

- (12) Because it is probably from wine, which is nowadays of a poorer quality and readily turns vinegar. Of course, the 'am ha-arez himself should have tithed it, but they were suspected of neglecting tithes, and therefore the purchaser had to render tithe; v. Glos. s.v. Demai.
- (13) Because it is mere water, though it has slightly absorbed the appearance and taste of wine from the husks and kernels.
- (14) Because its appearance and taste determine its status as wine.
- (15) Because it was so cheap that even they would not grudge its tithes.
- (16) When tamad is made by pouring water over the lees in the strainer, it is wine, and is subject to tithes. But tamad made with kernels is merely coloured water, and is not subject to tithes at all.
- (17) 'Twigs'. R. Joseph (יֹסֵף) included barley (שְׁעֵרִי). both words containing an S (ס and ש) and the two ס in 'sisane' serve as mnemonic for this.

who have attained maturity but have not attained [their] years,¹ the daughters of poor men plaster them [the unwanted hairs] with lime; the daughters of wealthy men plaster them with fine flour; while royal princesses, with oil of myrrh as it is written, six months with oil of myrrh.² What is oil of myrrh? R. Huna b. Jeremiah said: Sakath.³ R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: Oil of olives which were not a third grown. It was taught, R. Judah said: Anpikanin⁴ is oil of olives which were not a third grown. And why do [women] rub it in [their skin]? Because it removes the hair and rejuvenates the skin.

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHATEVER IS OF THE SPECIES OF CORN. It was taught, R. Joshua said: Now since we learned, WHATEVER IS OF THE SPECIES OF CORN MUST BE REMOVED ON PASSOVER, why did the Sages enumerate these? So that fine flour, and wealthy women give the leavings to their poorer sisters, the daughters of scribes, who were generally poor. one should be familiar with them and with their names.⁵ As it once happened that a certain Palestinian⁶ visited Babylonia. He had meat with him and he said to them [his hosts], Bring me a relish.⁷ He [then] heard them saying, 'Take him kutah'. As soon as he heard kutah, he abstained.⁸

THESE ARE SUBJECT TO A WARNING'. Which Tanna [holds] that real leaven of corn in a mixture, and spoiled leaven⁹ in its natural condition, is subject to a negative injunction?¹⁰ — Said Rab Judah in Rab's name: It is R. Meir. For it was taught: Si'ur¹¹ must be burnt, and he may give it to his dog, and he who eats it is [punished] by forty [lashes].¹² Now this is self-contradictory. You say, 'si'ur must be burnt': this proves that it is forbidden for use. Then it is stated, 'and he may give it to his dog', which proves that it is permitted for use! This is its meaning: Si'ur' [i.e., what is si'ur] according to R. Meir [must be burnt] in R. Meir's opinion, and [what is si'ur'] according to R. Judah [must be burnt] in R. Judah's opinion. And he may give it to his dog, [i.e., what is si'ur'] according to R. Meir [may be given to a dog] in R. Judah's opinion. And he who eats it is [punished] by forty [lashes] — this agrees with R. Meir.¹³ [Thus] we learn that R. Meir holds that spoiled [leaven] in its natural state¹⁴ is subject to a negative injunction, and all the more real leaven of corn in a mixture.¹⁵

R. Nahman said, It is R. Eliezer. For it was taught: For real leaven of corn there is the penalty of kareth; for a mixture of it [one is subject to] a negative injunction: this is the view of R. Eliezer. But the Sages maintain: For real leaven of corn there is the penalty of kareth; for the mixture of it there is nothing at all.¹⁶ [Thus] we learn that R. Eliezer holds that real leaven of corn in a mixture is subject to a negative injunction, and all the more spoiled [leaven] in its natural state.¹⁷ Now R. Nahman, what is the reason that he does not say as Rab Judah? — He can tell you: perhaps R. Meir rules [thus] only there, [in respect of] spoiled [leaven] in its natural state, but not [in the case of] real leaven of corn in a mixture. And Rab Judah: what is the reason that he does not say as R. Nahman? He can tell you: [Perhaps]¹⁸ R. Eliezer rules [thus] only there, [in respect of] real leaven of corn in a mixture, but not [in the case of] spoiled [leaven] in its natural state.

It was taught in accordance with Rab Judah:¹⁹ Ye shall eat nothing leavened:²⁰ this is to include Babylonian kutah and Median beer and Idumean vinegar and Egyptian zithom. You, might think that the penalty is kareth; therefore it is stated, for whosoever eateth that which is leavened shall be cut off²¹ for real leaven of corn there is the penalty of kareth, but for the mixture of it [you are subject] to a negative injunction. Now, whom do you know to maintain [that] for the mixture of it [you are subject] to a negative injunction? It is R. Eliezer. Yet he does not state²² spoiled [leaven] in its natural state. This proves that R. Eliezer does not hold [that] spoiled [leaven is subject to a negative injunction].

Now R. Eliezer, whence does he know that the mixture of it involves a negative injunction: because it is written, ‘ye shall eat nothing leavened’? If so, let him [the offender] be liable to kareth that real leaven in a mixture is more stringent leaven than spoiled leaven in its natural state. too, since it is written, ‘for whosoever eateth that which is leavened . shall be cut off’? — He requires that for what was taught: ([Ye shall eat nothing] leavened):²³ I only know [that it is forbidden] where it turned leaven of itself; if [it fermented] through the agency of another substance, how do we know it? Because it is stated, for whosoever eateth that which is leavened shall be cut off. If so, [the teaching] of the negative injunction too comes for this purpose?²⁴ Rather, R. Eliezer's reason is [that he] deduces from ‘whosoever’.²⁵ [But] there too²⁶ ‘whosoever’ is written? — He requires that to include women.²⁷ But women are deduced from Rab Judah's [dictum] in Rab's name. For Rab Judah said in Rab's name, and the School of R. Ishmael taught likewise: when a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit:²⁸ the Writ assimilated woman to man in respect of all the penalties which are [decreed] in the Torah? It is necessary:

(1) I.e., they have grown the hair which is the evidence of maturity before the usual age, which is twelve years and a day. They would normally be ashamed and wish to remove it. Tosaf. in Shab, 80b s.v. שהגיעו omits ‘years’ and seems to translate: ‘who have reached their time (for marriage), and yet have not attained it’, so that they wish to make themselves more beautiful.

(2) Est. II, 12 q.v.

(3) Jast.: oil of myrrh or cinnamon.

(4) It is stated in Men. 86a that anpikanin must not be brought with a meal-offering. R. Judah explains what this is.

(5) That all may know that their use is forbidden on Passover.

(6) Lit., ‘son of the West’.

(7) To go with the meat.

(8) He knew that it contains milk, whilst they did not.

(9) ‘Nuksheh’, a leavened substance unfit for food.

(10) Babylonian kutah and Median beer both contain real leaven, but mixed with other substances; while women's paste is simply flour, unmixed, but spoiled and unfit for food.

(11) This is dough which is beginning to ferment, i.e., semi-leaven. At that stage it is unfit for eating, and therefore the same as spoiled leaven; v. infra 48b.

(12) This is the punishment for violating a negative injunction.

(13) V. infra 48b for the controversy between R. Meir and R. Judah as to what constitutes si'ur', semi-leaven. Now both R. Meir and R. Judah hold that use of si'ur, as each defines it respectively, is forbidden, and hence it must be burnt. But si'ur, as defined by R. Meir, is in R. Judah's opinion mazzah (unleavened bread), but as it is not fit for eating, it must be given to a dog. The final clause teaches this: according to R. Meir, he who eats si'ur, as defined by himself, is flagellated, though R. Judah holds that at that stage it is mazzah and may be eaten.

(14) Such as si'ur.

(15) Rab Judah being of the opinion

(16) No penalty is incurred.

(17) Thus R. Nahman holds that spoiled leaven unmixed is more stringent than real leaven in a mixture.

(18) [Added with MS.M.]

(19) That real leaven mixed is the more stringent.

(20) Ex. XII, 20.

(21) Ibid. 19.

(22) I.e., include.

(23) The bracketed passage is omitted in some edd. as well as supra 28b in the quotation of this Baraita.

(24) That a negative injunction is involved even in respect of that which is made leaven through a foreign substance. How then do we know that even for a mixture a negative injunction is transgressed?

(25) Heb. kol. This is an extension, and so teaches even the inclusion of a mixture.

(26) In reference to kareth.

(27) That they too are subject to the penalty of kareth.

(28) Num.V, 6.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 43b

you might argue, since it is written, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it; seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith:¹ whoever is subject to 'arise, eat unleavened bread', is subject to 'thou shalt eat no leavened bread'; hence these women, since they are not subject to, 'arise, eat unleavened bread', because it is an affirmative precept limited to time,² I would say that they are also not subject to, 'thou shalt eat no leavened bread'. Hence it [the verse] informs us [otherwise].

And now that they have been included in [the injunction of] 'thou shalt eat no leavened bread', they are also included in respect of eating unleavened bread, in accordance with R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said: Women are subject to the [precept of] eating unleavened bread by the law of Scripture, for it is said, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it; [seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread [therewith]: whoever is subject to 'thou shalt eat no leavened bread', is subject to the eating of unleavened bread; and these women, since they are subject to [the injunction of] 'thou shalt eat no leavened bread', are [also] subject to, 'arise, eat unleavened bread'.

And why do you prefer³ [to assume] that this 'whosoever is to include women, while you exclude its mixture; say that it is to include the mixture?⁴ — It is logical that when treating of eaters [Scripture] includes eaters; [but] when treating of eaters, shall it include things which are eaten?⁵ To this R. Nathan the father of R. Huna demurred: Then wherever [Scripture] treats of eaters does it not include things eaten? Surely it was taught: For whosoever eateth the fat [heleb] of the beast, of which men present an offering [made by fire to the Lord, even the soul that eateth it shall be cut off from his people]:⁶ I only know it of the heleb of unblemished [animals], which are fit to be offered [as sacrifices]; whence do we know it of the heleb of blemished animals? Therefore it is stated, 'of the beast'.⁷ Whence do we know it of the heleb of hullin? Because it is stated, 'For whosoever',⁸ Thus here, though [Scripture] treats of eaters, yet it includes things eaten? — Since there are no eaters there [to be included],⁹ it includes things eaten. Here, however, that there are eaters [to be included],¹⁰ he cannot abandon eaters and include things eaten.

Now as to the Rabbis who do not accept the view [that a negative injunction is violated through] a mixture, they do not interpret 'whosoever' [as an extension]. But then how do they know [that] women [are liable to kareth]?¹¹ — They do not interpret 'whosoever' [as an extension], but they do interpret 'for whosoever' [as such].¹² Then [according to] R. Eliezer, say that 'whosoever' is to include women; 'for whosoever' is to include the mixture [of leaven]?¹³ And should you answer, R. Eliezer does not interpret 'for whosoever' [as an additional extension] surely it was taught: For ye shall not burn any leaven...[as an offering made by fire unto the Lord]:¹⁴ I only know it of the whole of it;¹⁵ whence do I know [even] part of it?¹⁶ Because 'any' [kol] is stated. Whence do we know [that] its mixture¹⁷ [is forbidden]? Because it is stated for any [ki kol]. Whom do you know to interpret kol [as any extension]? R. Eliezer; and he [also] interprets 'for any' [ki kol]. This is [indeed] a difficulty.

R. Abbahu said in R. Johanan's name: In all the prohibitions of the Torah, a permitted [commodity] does not combine with a prohibited [commodity],¹⁸ except in the [case of the] prohibitions of a nazirite, for lo! the Torah said, [any] infusion [of grapes].¹⁹ While Ze'iri said: Also 'ye shall not burn any leaven'.²⁰ With whom [does this agree]? With R. Eliezer, who interprets kol.²¹ If so,

(1) Deut. XVI,3.

(2) Lit., 'caused by the time'. I.e., it is performed at certain times or seasons, and it is shown in Kid. 29a that women are exempt from such.

(3) Lit., 'what (reason) do you see?'

(4) While the limitation excludes women.

(5) Surely not.

(6) Lev. VII, 25.

(7) Implying whether it is fit for sacrificing or not.

(8) Which is an extension.

(9) For the inclusion of women in the prohibition and penalty follows from Rab's dictum supra 43a bottom.

(10) Viz., women, as explained supra.

(11) For eating leaven. For R. Eliezer interprets 'whosoever' in both cases, one as including a mixture, and the other as including women. But since the Rabbis do not interpret 'whosoever' as an extension, there is nothing to intimate the inclusion of women.

(12) Written in connection with kareth, Ex. XXI, 15 and 19.

(13) Teaching that kareth is involved, and not merely a negative precept.

(14) Lev. II, 11. For...any (E.V. For ye shall make no...) is ki...kol, the same words which are translated for whosoever' in the previous verses.

(15) I.e., where the whole of that which is burnt on the altar consists of leaven.

(16) Leaven must not even be used as part of the offering.

(17) I.e., anything containing a mixture of leaven.

(18) The minimum quantity to involve punishment is as much as an olive. Now, if a man eats half that quantity of heleb together with half that quantity of permitted meat simultaneously, the latter does not combine with the former, that it should be regarded as though he had eaten the full quantity of prohibited food.

(19) Num. VI, 3: neither shall he drink any infusion of grapes. By this the Talmud understands that he must not eat bread steeped in wine. Now bread itself is permitted, yet Scripture forbids the combination of bread and wine as though that also were forbidden, and if the two together amount to an olive, punishment is involved. For if Scripture refers to a case where the wine itself contains that quantity, why state it at all; obviously the wine is not less prohibited merely because it has been absorbed by the bread?

(20) Cf. Lev. I, 11. Rashi: if the priest put half an olive of leaven and half an olive of mazzah, not mixed together but each separately distinguishable, upon the altar, he incurs punishment. Tosaf. explains it differently.

(21) Supra: 'whence do I know (even) part of it' etc. He understands this to mean that there is half an olive of each.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 44a

in the matter of leaven too?¹ — That indeed is so; yet this² is to reject [the ruling] of Abaye, who said, There is burning [on the altar] in respect of less than an olive;³ therefore he informs us that there is no burning for less than an olive.

R. Dimi sat and reported this discussion. Said Abaye to R. Dimi: And [in] all [other] prohibitions of the Torah, does not a permitted commodity combine with a prohibited [commodity]? Surely we learned: If the mikpeh⁴ is of terumah, while the garlic and the oil are of hullin, and a tebul yom touched part of it, he disqualifies all of it.⁵ If the mikpeh is of hullin, while the garlic and the oil is of terumah, and a tebul yom touches part of it, he disqualifies only the place which he touches. Now we pondered thereon: why is the place where he touches unfit? Surely the seasoning⁶ is nullified in the greater quantity?⁷ And Rabbah b. Bar Hanah answered: What is the reason? Because a lay Israelite is flagellated on its account for [eating] as much as an olive.⁸ How is that conceivable?⁹ Is it not because the permitted [commodity] combines with the forbidden [commodity]? — No: what does ‘as much as an olive’ mean: that there is as much as an olive within the time of eating half [a loaf].¹⁰ Is then ‘as much as an olive within the time of eating half [a loaf]’ a Scriptural [standard]?¹¹ Yes, he answered him. If so, why do the Rabbis disagree with R. Eliezer in reference to Babylonian kutah?¹² — What then: [the reason is] because the permitted [commodity] combines with the prohibited commodity? Then after all why do the Rabbis differ from R. Eliezer in the matter of Babylonian kutah? But leave Babylonian kutah alone,¹³ because it does not contain as much as an olive within the eating of half [a loaf]. [For] if [it is eaten] in its natural state,¹⁴ so that he gulps it down and eats it, we disregard such a fancy as being exceptional.¹⁵ While if he dips [bread] into it¹⁶ and eats it, it does not contain as much as an olive within the time of eating half [a loaf].

He raised all objection against him: If there are two [stew] pots, one of hullin and the other of terumah, and in front of them are two mortars, one containing [condiments of] hullin and the other containing terumah, and the latter fell into the former, they are permitted,¹⁷ for I assume: the terumah fell into the terumah, and the hullin fell into the hullin. Now if you say that as much as an olive within the [time of] eating half [a loaf] is a Biblical [standard], why do we say, ‘for I assume, the terumah’ etc.?¹⁸ — Leave the terumah of condiments alone, he replied, which is [only] Rabbinical.¹⁹

He raised an objection against him: [If there are] two baskets, one containing hullin and the other containing terumah, and in front of them are two se'ah [of provisions], one of hullin and the other of terumah and these fell into those, they are permitted, for I assume: the hullin fell into hullin, [and] the terumah fell into the terumah. Now if you say that as much as an olive within the eating of half [a loaf] is a Scriptural [standard], why do we say, ‘because I assume’ [etc.]?²⁰ — Leave the terumah [set aside]

kutah there is as much as an olive of leaven, and for that he should be liable. at the present time²¹ he answered him, which is only Rabbinical.

Now does this [law of] the infusion [of grapes] come for this purpose?²² It is required for what was taught: ‘An infusion’:

(1) There too he learns that there is a negative injunction in respect of the mixture of leaven; hence he should likewise assume that it refers to half all olive of each.

(2) Sc. the particular mention of the burning of leaven on the altar.

(3) Even if one burns less than an olive of leaven on the altar, he is culpable, since the leaven itself, whatever its quantity, involves punishment.

(4) Jast.: a stiff mass of grist, oil and onions.

(5) A tebul yom (v. Glos.) disqualifies terumah. Since the main part of the dish is terumah, even the hullin too becomes unfit, because it is subsidiary to the terumah.

(6) I.e., the garlic and oil.

- (7) As explained in n. 4, it is merely subsidiary to the main dish.
- (8) Hence it is not regarded as nullified, in spite of its subsidiary nature.
- (9) "When a lay Israelite eats as much as an olive of that dish, he has not eaten that quantity of terumah. Why then is he flagellated?"
- (10) I.e., if he eats as much as half a loaf of eight average eggs in size, this half constituting an average meal, within the time that the normal eater requires for a meal, he will have eaten as much as an olive of terumah, and for that he is culpable. [According to Maim. Yad 'Erubin., half a loaf is equivalent to three average eggs].

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 44b

[this is] to intimate that the taste is as the substance itself, so that if he [the nazirite] steeped grapes in water and it possesses the taste of wine, he is culpable.¹ From this you may draw a conclusion for the whole Torah.² For if a nazirite, whose prohibition is not a permanent prohibition, and his prohibition is not a prohibition of [general] use,³ and there is a release for his prohibition,⁴ yet [Scripture] made the taste tantamount to the substance in his case; then kil'ayim, the prohibition of which is a permanent prohibition, and whose prohibition is a prohibition of [general] use, and there is no release from its prohibition, is it not logical that the taste should be treated as tantamount to the substance itself? And the same applies to 'orlah by two [arguments]!⁵ — The authority for this is the Rabbis, which R. Johanan⁶ stated [his ruling] in accordance with R. Akiba.

Which [ruling of] R. Akiba [is alluded to]? Shall we say, R. Akiba of our Mishnah, for we learned: 'R. Akiba said: If a nazirite soaked his bread in wine, and it contains sufficient to combine as much as an olive, he is culpable'? But whence [do you know that he means sufficient] of the bread and the wine; perhaps [he means] of the wine alone?⁷ And should you say, [if] of the wine alone, why state it? He informs us thus: [He is culpable] although it is a mixture!⁸ — Rather it is R. Akiba of the Baraita. For it was taught, R. Akiba said: If a nazirite soaked his bread in wine and ate as much as an olive of the bread⁹ and the wine [combined] he is culpable.

Now [according to] R. Akiba, whence do we know that the taste [of forbidden food] is like the substance itself?¹⁰ — He learns it from [the prohibition of] meat [seethed] in milk; is it not merely a taste,¹¹ and it is forbidden? so here too¹² it is not different. And the Rabbis?¹³ — We cannot learn from meat [seethed] in milk, because it is an anomaly.¹⁴ Yet what is the anomaly? Shall we say because this [sc. meat] by itself is permitted, and that [sc. milk] by itself is permitted, while in conjunction they are forbidden, but [with] kil'ayim too, this [species] by itself is permitted, and that [species] by itself is permitted, yet in conjunction they are forbidden? — Rather [the anomaly is] that if he soaked it all day in milk it is permitted,¹⁵ yet if he but seethed it [in milk] it is forbidden. Then R. Akiba too? [The prohibition of] meat [seethed] in milk is certainly an anomaly?¹⁶ — Rather he learns it from the vessels of Gentiles.¹⁷ The vessels of Gentiles, is it not merely a flavour [which they impart]? Yet they are forbidden; so here too it is not different. And the Rabbis?¹⁸ — The vessels of Gentiles too are an anomaly, for whatever imparts a deteriorating flavour is permitted,¹⁹ since we learn it from nebelah,²⁰ yet here it is forbidden.²¹ But R. Akiba [holds] as R. Hiyya the son of R. Huna, who said: The Torah prohibited [it] only in the case of a pot used on that very day, hence it is not a deteriorating flavour.²² And the Rabbis? — A pot used on that very day too, it is impossible that it should not slightly worsen [the food cooked in it].

R. Aha son of R. 'Awia said to R. Ashi: 'From the Rabbis let us learn the view of R. Akiba. Did not the Rabbis say, "An infusion": [this is] to intimate that the taste is tantamount to the substance itself. From this you may draw a conclusion for the whole Torah?' Then according to R. Akiba too [let us say]: 'An infusion': this is [to intimate] that the permitted commodity combines with the forbidden commodity. From this you may draw a conclusion for the whole Torah?²³ — Said he to him,

(1) For eating it. '.

(2) I.e., that the taste of all forbidden food is forbidden just as the substance itself. [That is provided the forbidden substance consisted originally of the size of an olive. This requirement distinguishes this principle from that of R. Johanan, in virtue of which what is permitted combines with what is forbidden, even though the latter is less in size than an olive's bulk.]

(3) Though he may not eat grapes or drink wine, etc., he may benefit from them.

(4) He can be absolved of his vow, whereupon it all becomes permitted.

(5) Rashi: 'orlah too is forbidden for use and there is no release for its prohibition. The third argument however cannot be applied here, as 'orlah is not permanently forbidden, since it is permitted after three years. Tosaf. explains it differently. — But incidentally we see that 'an infusion' is required for a different purpose.

(6) Supra 43b bottom.

(7) Viz., that the bread had soaked up that quantity of wine. Yet the term 'combine' is applicable, because the wine is not separate now but is spread through the bread.

(8) Of bread and wine, the wine not standing alone.

(9) The wine had not soaked through the whole olive-bulk of the bread, so that part of the bread is by itself; and the only reason for culpability must be the principle enunciated by R. Johanan.

(10) Since he utilizes 'an infusion' for the purpose just stated.

(11) Which the meat has received from the milk.

(12) I.e., in respect of all other forbidden food.

(13) Why cannot they learn it in the same way?

(14) Lit., 'a new law', i.e., it is peculiarly different from other laws, and therefore does not provide a basis for analogy.

(15) By Scriptural law, even to eat it; Scripture forbids it only when cooked in milk.

(16) How then can he derive it thence?

(17) Lit., 'the exudings (from the vessels) of Gentiles', i.e., vessels in which Gentiles cooked food. These must be purged with boiling water (this is called hage'alah) before they may be used, because they exude a flavour of the food which was boiled in them.

(18) V. n. 6.

(19) I.e., when the imparted flavour spoils the taste of the permitted food.

(20) Deut. XIV, 21: Ye shall not eat of

(21) They assume that the flavour exuded by the vessel has a deteriorating effect.

(22) Because it is still fresh.

(23) Then why did R. Johanan (Supra 43b bottom) limit this principle to a nazirite, seeing that his statement is in accordance with R. Akiba?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 45a

Because a nazirite and a sin-offering are two verses with the same teaching,¹ and they do not illumine [other cases].² 'A nazirite', that which we have stated. What is the reference to the sin-offering? — For it was taught: whatsoever shall touch in the flesh thereof shall be holy:³ you might think, even if it did not absorb [of the flesh of the sin-offering]; therefore it is stated, ‘in the flesh thereof’.⁴ Only when it absorbs in the flesh?⁵ ‘Shall be holy’, to be as itself, so that if it [the sin-offering] is unfit, that [which touches it] becomes unfit; while if it is fit, that may be eaten [only] in accordance with its stringencies.⁶

any thing that dieth of itself (nebelah); thou mayest give it unto the stranger. Hence whatever is fit for a stranger is designated nebelah, but what is unfit is not designated nebelah, in the sense that if it imparts a deteriorating flavour it does not render the food forbidden. Then, according to the Rabbis too, let a nazirite and a sin-offering be two verses with the same teaching and they do not illumine [other cases]? — They can answer: these are indeed [both] necessary.⁷ And R. Akiba?⁸ How are they [both] necessary? It is well [to say] that if the Merciful One wrote it in respect to a sin-offering, [the case of] a nazirite could not be derived from it, because we cannot derive hullin from sacred sacrifices.⁹ But let the Merciful One write it in respect to a nazirite, and then the sin-offering would come and be derived from it, seeing that all the prohibitions of the Torah are learnt from a nazirite. But the Rabbis can answer you: they [both] are indeed required; the sin-offering, to [show that] the permitted combines with the forbidden, while hullin cannot be deduced from sacred sacrifices; and ‘an infusion’, to intimate that the taste is as the substance itself, and from this you may draw a conclusion for the whole Torah. But R. Akiba maintains: both [are required] for [teaching] that the permitted combines with the forbidden, so that they are two verses with the same teaching, and all [instances of] two verses with the same teaching do not illumine [other cases].

R. Ashi said to R. Kahana: Then as to what was taught, [All the days of his Naziriteship shall he eat] nothing that is made of the grape vine, from the husks to the kernels:¹⁰ this teaches concerning a nazirite's prohibited commodities, that they combine with each other; — seeing that according to R. Akiba [even] the forbidden with the permitted combine, is it necessary [to state] the forbidden with the forbidden?¹¹ — Said he to him: The forbidden with the permitted [combine only when eaten] together; the forbidden with the forbidden, [even when eaten] consecutively.¹² which absorbs some of it. — Thus here too the permitted flesh combines with the forbidden, and all is regarded as forbidden. MISHNAH. [WITH REGARD TO] THE DOUGH IN THE CRACKS OF THE KNEADING TROUGH, IF THERE IS AS MUCH AS AN OLIVE IN ONE PLACE, HE IS BOUND TO REMOVE [IT]; BUT IF NOT, IT IS NULLIFIED THROUGH THE SMALLNESS OF ITS QUANTITY.¹³ AND IT IS LIKEWISE IN THE MATTER OF UNCLEANNES: IF HE OBJECTS TO IT, IT INTERPOSES;¹⁴ BUT IF HE DESIRES ITS PRESERVATION,¹⁵ IT IS LIKE A KNEADING-TROUGH.¹⁶

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: They learned this¹⁷ only of a place where it [the dough] does not serve¹⁸ for reinforcing [the trough]; but where it serves for reinforcing [it], he is not bound to remove it.¹⁹ Hence it follows that [where there is] less than an olive, even if it does serve for reinforcing [it], he is not obliged to remove it. Others recite it in reference to the second clause: BUT IF NOT, IT IS NULLIFIED THROUGH THE SMALLNESS OF ITS QUANTITY. Said Rab Judah in Samuel's name: They learned this only where it serves for reinforcing [the trough]; but where it does not serve for reinforcing [it], he is bound to remove it. Whence it follows that if there is as much as an olive, even where it serves for reinforcing [it], he is bound to remove it.

It was taught as the former version; It was taught as the latter version. It was taught as the former version: Dough in the cracks of the kneading trough, where it serves for reinforcing, it does not interpose,²⁰ and he [its owner] does not transgress.²¹ But [if it is] in a place where it does not serve for reinforcing, it interposes, and he transgresses. When is this said? Where there is as much as an olive. But if there is less than an olive, even where it does not serve for reinforcing, it does not interpose, and he does not transgress.

Again, it was taught as the latter version: Dough in the cracks of a kneading trough, where it serves for reinforcing,

(1) Lit., 'which come as one'.

(2) V. Supra p. 119, n. 2.

(3) Lev. VI, 20. 'Holy' means 'forbidden', in the sense that any other flesh which touches this flesh of the sin-offering becomes subject to the same laws and limitations as those to which the sin-offering is subject.

(4) Literal translation. I.e., it is forbidden only if it absorbs some of the sin-offering within itself.

(5) [The text of cur. edd. is difficult. A better reading is preserved in the Sifra a.l. 'till it absorbs', omitting the words 'in the flesh', and the deduction being from the word 'thereof'.]

(6) A sin-offering must be eaten within the sacred precincts, by male priests, and for one day and night only; similarly the food

(7) And where that is so, they do illuminate other cases, since neither could be deduced from the other.

(8) Does he not admit this?

(9) The latter being naturally more stringent. Hence the fact that there the permitted combines with the forbidden does not prove that it will also do so in the case of hullin, where the interdicted food is not sacred.

(10) Num. VI, 4.

(11) Surely it is obvious; why then is the verse required?

(12) For further notes on the whole discussion beginning with R. Abbahu's dictum in the name of R. Johanan on page 43b, v. Nazir, Sonc. ed. pp. 128ff.

(13) I.e., he has abandoned the normal use of the dough in flavour of the trough.

(14) V. infra n. 8; if he objects to it, it is regarded as a foreign body.

(15) I.e., he wants the dough to be there to close the crack.

(16) And it does not interpose.

(17) That if there is as much as an olive in one place it must be removed.

(18) Lit., 'it is not made for'.

(19) E.g., if the crack is at the bottom of the trough, and the dough fills it and so prevents the water from running out. It is then regarded as part of the trough, not as dough, and therefore it need not be removed. But if the crack is high up, it does not serve this purpose and must be removed.

(20) When a utensil is ritually unclean and cleansed in a ritual bath, nothing must interpose between the utensil and the water of the bath (called a mikveh); otherwise the ablution is invalid. This dough, since it reinforces the trough, is counted as part of itself and not as a foreign body, and therefore it is not an interposition between the trough and the water; hence the ablution is valid.

(21) The law of Passover by leaving it there and not removing it.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 45b

it does not interpose, and he does not transgress; [if it is] in a place where it does not serve for reinforcing, it interposes, and he transgresses. When is this said? When there is less than an olive; but if there is as much as an olive, even in a place where it serves for reinforcing, it interposes, and he transgresses. Then these are contradictory? — Said R. Huna: Delete the more lenient [Baraita] in favour of¹ the more stringent. R. Joseph said: You quote Tannaim at random!² This is a controversy of Tannaim. For it was taught: If a loaf went mouldy, he is bound to remove it, because it is fit to crumble and leaven many other doughs with it. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: When is this said? If it is kept for eating. But a mass³ of se'or which he put aside for sitting, he has nullified it.⁴ Now, since R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, 'He has nullified it', it follows that the first Tanna holds that he has not nullified it. This proves that he holds, wherever there is as much as an olive, even if he nullifies it, it is not nullified. Said Abaye to him: You have reconciled it where there is as much as an olive; [yet] have you reconciled it [where there is] less than an olive? Rather both the one and the other are [the rulings of] R. Simeon b. Eleazar, yet there is no difficulty: one [is taught where it is] in the place of kneading; the other, where it is not in the place of kneading.⁵ R. Ashi said: Do not assume that 'not in the place of kneading' means on the back of the trough [only], but [it means even] on the [upper] rim of the trough. That is obvious? — You might say, it sometimes splashes up and reaches there:⁶ hence he informs us [otherwise].

R. Nahman said in Rab's name: The halachah is as R. Simeon b. Eleazar. Yet that is not so, for R. Isaac b. Ashi said in Rab's name: If he plastered its surface⁷ with clay, he has nullified it. [Thus,] only if he plastered it, but not if he did not plaster it?⁸ He who recited this did not recite that.⁹ Others state, R. Nahman said in Rab's name: The halachah is not as R. Simeon b. Eleazar, for R. Isaac b. Ashi said in Rab's name: If he plastered its surface with clay, he has nullified it etc. R. Nahman said in Samuel's name: [If there are] two half olives¹⁰ and a thread of dough joining¹¹ them, we see: wherever if the thread were taken up these would be carried with it, he is bound to remove [them];¹² but if not, he is not bound to remove [them]. Said 'Ulla: This was said only of [dough in] a kneading trough; but [if they are] in the house, he is bound to remove [them].¹³ What is the reason? Because he may sometimes sweep them and they will fall together.

'Ulla said: They asked in the West [Palestine]: What of a room¹⁴ and an upper storey; what of a room and the [entrance] hall; what of two rooms, one within the other?¹⁵ The questions stand.

Our Rabbis taught: If a loaf went mouldy and it became unfit for human consumption, yet a dog can eat it, it can be defiled with the uncleanness of eatables, if the size of an egg, and it may be burnt together with an unclean [loaf] on Passover.¹⁶ In R. Nathan's name it was ruled: It cannot be defiled [as an eatable]. With whom agrees the following which we learned: A general principle was stated in respect to the laws of [ritual] cleanness: Whatever is set aside for human consumption is unclean,¹⁷ until it becomes unfit for a dog to eat? With whom [does this agree]? It is not in accordance with R. Nathan.

Our Rabbis taught: [With regard to] the trough of tanners¹⁸ into which he put flour,¹⁹ [if] within three days [before Passover], he is bound to remove it;²⁰ [if] before three days, he is not bound to remove it.²¹ Said R. Nathan: When is this said? If he did not put hides into it; but if he put hides into it, even [if it is] within three days, he is not bound to remove [the flour].²² Raba said: The halachah is as R. Nathan, even [if it is] one day, and even one hour [before Passover]. AND IT IS LIKEWISE IN RESPECT TO UNCLEANNESS: IF HE OBJECTS TO IT, IT INTERPOSES; BUT IF HE DESIRES ITS PRESERVATION, IT IS LIKE THE KNEADING-TROUGH. How compare: there the matter is dependent on the quantity [of the dough], [whereas] here the matter is dependent on [his] objecting [to it]? Said Rab Judah, Say: But in respect to uncleanness it is not so. Said Abaye to him, But he states, AND IT IS LIKEWISE IN RESPECT TO UNCLEANNESS? Rather, said Abaye, He means it thus: AND IT IS LIKEWISE

(1) Lit., 'before'.

(2) There is no reason for assuming that both Baraithas represent the view of the same Tanna.

(3) Kopeth really means a low seat or block.

(4) I.e., he gave up the nominal use of it as se'or and hence it no longer counts as leaven.

(5) in the second Baraitha, 'where it does not serve for reinforcing', refers only to a place where no kneading is done at all, e.g. at the upper edge; but dough in the cracks at the sides is regarded as reinforcing the trough, and hence it must be removed. But the first Baraitha holds that even in the latter case it does not reinforce it, though kneading is done there, while 'where it serves for reinforcing' refers to the bottom only. Hence this is what the first Tanna states: Where it serves for reinforcing, e.g., at the bottom, he does not transgress even if there is as much as an olive. Where it does not serve for reinforcing (i.e., to support the water), e.g., in the sides, which is a place for kneading yet not a place for the water, if there is as much as an olive, it interposes, and he transgresses. But if there is less than an olive, even if it is in the sides it does not interpose, for since it does help somewhat to support the dough which is kneaded there (viz., that it should not sink into the crack), it is nullified. But this Tanna does not discuss dough which is not in the place of kneading, viz., at the upper rim, and he would admit in that case that even if there is less than an olive it is not nullified.

While the second Tanna rules thus: If it is in the place where it affords support to the dough, i.e., in the sides, if there is less than an olive it does not interpose; if there is as much as an olive, it interposes, and this is the view of the first Tanna too. While where it is not made for reinforcing (or, supporting), i.e., at the upper rim, even less than an olive interposes, and this too agrees with the first Tanna.

(6) So that the rim is regarded as a place of kneading and must be removed, even if less than an olive. [MS.M. omits 'and reaches there'. V. also Rashi.]

(7) Sc. that of the mass of se'or which he set aside for sitting.

(8) Whereas R. Simeon b. Eleazar holds that it is nullified in any case.

(9) There are two opposing views on Rab's ruling.

(10) I.e., two pieces of dough, each the size of half an olive. — The reference is to the cracks in the kneading trough.

(11) Lit., 'between'.

(12) Because it is all one.

(13) Even if they are not thus united by a thread of dough.

(14) Bayith in the Talmud often has the meaning of a room in a house.

(15) I.e., if there is half an olive in one and half in the other: do we fear here too that they may be swept together?

(16) V. supra 15b.

(17) I.e., subject to defilement as an eatable.

(18) Into which they put hides for tanning.

(19) Which is used in the tanning process.

(20) Because it is still regarded as flour, and of course it is leaven.

(21) Because by Passover it will be so spoiled through the odour of the trough, even if there are no hides in it, that it will not be regarded as flour.

(22) Because the hides utterly spoil it.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 46a

IN RESPECT TO combining for UNCLEANNESS on Passover, whereas during the rest of the year there is a distinction. How is that? E.g., if there are eatables less than an egg in quantity,¹ and they were in contact with this dough: on Passover, when its prohibition renders the dough important,² it combines.³ [But] during the rest of the year, when the matter is dependent on [his] objecting, IF HE OBJECTS TO IT,⁴ it combines; [while] IF HE DESIRES ITS PRESERVATION, IT IS LIKE THE KNEADING-TROUGH. To this Raba demurred: Does he then teach, it combines; surely he teaches, IT INTERPOSES! Rather, said Raba: [The meaning is], AND IT IS LIKEWISE IN RESPECT TO cleaning⁵ the kneading-trough. How is that? E.g., if this kneading-trough became unclean, and he wishes to immerse it. On Passover, when its interdict [renders it] important, IT INTERPOSES, and the immersion is not efficacious for it. But during the rest of the year the matter is dependent on his objecting: IF HE OBJECTS TO IT, IT INTERPOSES, WHILE IF HE DESIRES ITS PRESERVATION, IT IS LIKE THE KNEADING-TROUGH. To this R. Papa demurred: Does he teach, And it is likewise in respect to cleanness? Surely he teaches, AND IT IS LIKEWISE IN RESPECT TO UNCLEANNESS! Rather, said R. Papa: [The meaning is], AND IT IS LIKEWISE IN RESPECT TO causing UNCLEANNESS to descend upon the kneading-trough. How so? E.g., if a sherez touched this dough: on Passover, when its interdict [renders it] important, IT INTERPOSES,⁶ and uncleanness does not descend upon it;⁷ [but] during the rest of the year, when the matter is dependent on [his] objecting, IF HE OBJECTS TO IT, IT INTERPOSES; WHILE IF HE DESIRES ITS PRESERVATION, IT IS LIKE [i.e., identical with] THE KNEADING-TROUGH.⁸

MISHNAH. [REGARDING] 'DEAF' DOUGH,⁹ IF THERE IS [A DOUGH] SIMILAR TO IT WHICH HAS BECOME LEAVEN,¹⁰ IT IS FORBIDDEN.

GEMARA. What if there is no [dough] similar to it? — Said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: [The period for fermentation is] as long as it takes a man to walk from the Fish Tower

[Migdal Nunia] to Tiberias, which is a mil.¹¹ Then let him say a mil? — He informs us this, [viz.] that the standard of a mil is as that from Migdal Nunia to Tiberias.¹²

R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: For kneading, for prayer, and for washing the hands, [the standard is] four mils.¹³ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: Aibu stated this,¹⁴ and he stated four [laws] about it,¹⁵ and one of them is tanning. For we learned: And all these, if he tanned them or trod on them to the extent of tanning,¹⁶ are clean,¹⁷ excepting a man's skin. And how much is 'the extent of tanning'? — Said R. Aibu in R. Jannai's name: The extent of walking four mils. R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: They learned this only [about going on] ahead: but [as for going] back, he need not return even a mil.¹⁸ Said R. Aha: And from this [we deduce]: it is only a mil that he need not go back, but less than a mil he must go back.

MISHNAH. HOW DO WE SEPARATE HALLAH ON THE FESTIVAL [FROM DOUGH WHICH IS] IN [A STATE OF] UNCLEANNESS?¹⁹ R. ELIEZER SAID: IT MUST NOT BE DESIGNATED WITH THE NAME [OF HALLAH] UNTIL IT IS BAKED.²⁰ THE SON OF BATHYRA SAID: LET IT [THE DOUGH] BE CAST INTO COLD WATER.²¹ SAID A. JOSHUA:

(1) This being the minimum standard which can defile.

(2) Lit., 'its prohibition is important .

(3) With the eatables. I.e., the dough, if an olive in quantity, is important in so far as its prohibition necessitates its removal, and owing to this it combines with the eatables to the standard of an egg, whereby if unclean they can together defile other food.

(4) Which gives it an importance.

(5) Lit., 'bringing it up' — from its uncleanness.

(6) Between the Sherez, (v. Glos.) and the trough.

(7) The trough does not become unclean, for we do not regard the sherez, as having touched it.

(8) So that the trough becomes unclean through the contact of the sherez with the dough.

(9) An idiomatic expression: dough in which it is doubtful whether leavening has set in or not. Another reading: 'potsherd' dough, i.e., dough whose surface has gone hard and smooth and contains no splits, which are the usual signs of fermentation, and thus there is doubt.

(10) I.e., dough which was kneaded at the same time.

(11) Two thousand cubits. This is generally regarded as an eighteen minutes' walk. If it is eighteen minutes since the dough was kneaded (before being set in the oven), it is leaven.

(12) I.e., that they are a mil apart.

(13) A paid kneader must go four mils to immerse the kneading vessels, if they are unclean. A man on a journey, when he wishes to stop for the night, must go on another four mils if there is a synagogue within that distance, to pray there. Similarly, he must go on four mils ahead to procure water for washing his hands prior to eating; but if no synagogue or water is available within that distance, he is not bound to undertake a longer journey.

(14) In the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish, and not R. Abbahu.

(15) Not three; i.e., the three already mentioned and another.

(16) Hides were spread out to be trodden on, and this was part of the tanning process.

(17) In Hul. 122a a number of animals are enumerated whose skins are the same as their flesh in respect of defilement, as they are likewise accounted as eatables (several animals unfit for food are included in the list). But if he tanned them, etc., they are clean, i.e., they lose the status of flesh and thus become clean.

(18) E.g., to procure water, etc.

(19) The reference is to Passover. Unclean hallah may not be eaten by the priest. Now this hallah may not be baked, since it cannot be eaten, and only the preparation of food is permitted on a Festival; it cannot be kept until evening, as it may turn leaven; nor may it be burnt or given to dogs, for sacred food must not be destroyed thus on a Festival. The actual Festival days are meant, i.e., the first and the last days (outside Palestine, the first two and the last two), but not the Intermediate Days, which possess only a semi sanctity.

(20) I.e., the dough must first be baked, and then all the unleavened mazzoth are put in a basket, and one mazzah or so is declared hallah for all. Usually hallah must be separated from the dough, but when this is impossible, or if it was not done, it is separated from the baked bread.

(21) I.e., the hallah must be separated from the dough in the usual way and placed in cold water until evening, to prevent it from fermenting.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 46b

NOW THIS IS THE LEAVEN CONCERNING WHICH WE ARE WARNED WITH [THE INJUNCTIONS], 'IT SHALL NOT BE SEEN , AND 'IT SHALL NOT BE FOUND,'¹ BUT HE SEPARATES IT AND LEAVES IT UNTIL THE EVENING, AND IF IT FERMENTS IT FERMENTS.²

GEMARA. Shall we say that they differ in respect of goodwill benefit, R. Eliezer holding, Goodwill benefit is considered money, while R. Joshua holds, Goodwill benefit is not money?³ — No: all hold [that] goodwill benefit is not money, but here they differ in respect to 'since'. For R. Eliezer holds: We say, since if he desires, he can have it [sc. the designation of hallah] revoked,⁴ it is his property.⁵ While R. Joshua holds: We do not say, since.⁶

It was stated: [With regard to] one who bakes [food] on a Festival for [consumption on] a weekday, — R. Hisda said: He is flagellated; Rabbah said: He is not flagellated. 'R. Hisda said, He is flagellated': We do not say, Since if guests visited him it would be fit for him [on the Festival itself].⁷ Rabbah said: He is not flagellated: we say, 'since' Said Rabbah to R. Hisda, According to you who maintain, We do not say, 'since', how may we bake on a Festival for the Sabbath?⁸ — On account of the 'erub⁹ of dishes, he answered him. And on account of an 'erub of dishes we permit a Biblical prohibition! — Said he to him, By Biblical law the requirements of the Sabbath may be prepared on a Festival, and it was only the Rabbis who forbade it, lest it be said, You may bake on a Festival even for weekdays;¹⁰ but since the Rabbis necessitated an 'erub of dishes for it,¹¹ he has a distinguishing feature.¹²

He [Rabbah] raised an objection against him: [In the case of] an animal at the point of death,¹³ he must not slaughter it¹⁴ save when there is time to eat as much as an olive of it roast before night.¹⁵ [Thus, it states when] he is able to eat [thereof], [that is] even if he does not wish to eat. Now according to me, who maintain that we say, 'since', it is well: since if he desires to eat, he is able to eat, for that reason he may slaughter. But according to you who maintain, we do not say, 'since', why may he slaughter? Said he to him, On account of the loss of his money. And on account of the loss of his money we permit a Biblical prohibition! Yes, he replied: on account of the loss of his money he determined in his heart to eat as much as an olive, and as much as an olive of flesh is impossible [to obtain] without slaughtering.

He [Rabbah] raised an objection against him: The shewbread

(1) I.e., even if it does turn leaven it is not subject to these prohibitions. The Gemara explains the reason.

(2) It does not matter.

(3) Goodwill benefit is a man's right to dispose of property to whomever he desires, though he may not keep it, and it is disputed whether such a right is accounted as of monetary worth. Naturally, even if it is, its value is small. Thus an Israelite must separate hallah, but he can give it to any priest he desires, and a friend of a particular priest might pay him a trifle to give it to that priest. Now, it has been stated supra 5b that the interdict against leaven being seen or found in the house applies only to one's own leaven. Now if goodwill benefit ranks as money, the hallah is accounted the Israelite's property, and therefore it is subject to this interdict: hence R. Eliezer holds that the dough must first be baked. But if goodwill benefit does not rank as money, the hallah is not accounted the Israelite's property, and therefore it is separated from the dough, and it does not matter if it turns leaven.

(4) When a man declares anything sacred, as hallah, it is really the equivalent of a vow that this shall be sacred, and therefore he can be absolved of it, whereby his declaration is annulled, just as in the case of other vows.

(5) Until he gives it to the priest. Therefore it is subject to these injunctions.

(6) We disregard this possibility, since in fact he has not revoked it. Hence it is not his property. But v. infra 48a, p. 227f.

(7) Therefore his action is not culpable.

- (8) But that we use this argument: since it is fit (of use) for him on that same day if he is visited by guests.
- (9) V. Glos.
- (10) Which is definitely forbidden.
- (11) I.e., for cooking on a Festival for the Sabbath.
- (12) Which makes it clear to him that cooking on Festivals is not permitted indiscriminately, but only for the Festival or the Sabbath.
- (13) Lit., 'in danger' — of death. Hence the owner wishes to slaughter it before it dies, which would render its flesh nebelah (v. Glos).
- (14) On a Festival.
- (15) Lit., 'while it is yet day', — i.e., on the Festival itself.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 47a

is eaten on the ninth, the tenth, or the eleventh [day],¹ neither earlier nor later.² How so? Normally it is eaten on the ninth [day]: it is baked on the eve of the Sabbath [and] eaten on the Sabbath [of the following week], [which is] on the ninth. If a Festival occurred on the eve of the Sabbath, it is eaten on the Sabbath, on the tenth.³ [If] the two Festival days of New Year⁴ [occurred before the Sabbath], it is eaten on the Sabbath on the eleventh day, because it [the baking of the shewbread] does not override either the Sabbath or the Festival. Now if you say [that] the requirements of the Sabbath may be prepared on a Festival, why does it not override the Festival?⁵ — Said he to him, A near shebuth they permitted; a distant shebuth they did not permit.⁶ Then according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, who said on the authority of R. Simeon the son of the Segan:⁷ It overrides the Festival, but it does not override the fast-day,⁸ what is to be said?⁹ — They differ in this: one Master holds, They permitted a near shebuth, [but] a distant shebuth they did not permit; while the other Master holds: a distant shebuth too they permitted.¹⁰

R. Mari raised an objection: The two loaves¹¹ are eaten neither less than two [days after baking] nor more than three [days after baking].¹² How so? They were baked on the eve of the Festival [and] eaten on the Festival, [i.e.,] on the second [day]. If the Festival fell after the Sabbath,¹³ they are eaten on the Festival, on the third [day], because it [the baking] does not override either the Sabbath or the Festival.¹⁴ But if you say [that] the requirements of the Sabbath may be prepared on the Festival, seeing that [those] of the Sabbath are permitted on the Festival, is there a question about [those] of the Festival on the Festival! There it is different, because Scripture saith, [Save that which every man must eat, that only may be done] for you:¹⁵ 'for you', but not for the Most High.¹⁶ Then according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who said on the authority of R. Simeon the son of the Segan: It overrides the Festival, what is there to be said? — He holds as Abba Saul, who interpreted: 'for you', but not for Gentiles.¹⁷

R. Hisda sent to Rabbah by the hand of R. Aha son of R. Huna: But do we say 'since'? Surely we learned: One may plough one furrow, and be culpable for it on account of eight negative injunctions. [Thus:] he who ploughs with an ox and an ass [together], which are sacred, [and the furrow consists of] kil'ayim in a vineyard,

(1) After it is baked. The shewbread was generally baked on Friday, placed on the Table in the Temple on the Sabbath, and removed the following Sabbath and eaten; when it was removed it was replaced by fresh bread.

(2) Lit., 'less' . . . 'more'.

(3) For it would have to be baked on Thursday.

(4) Even in Palestine, where all festivals were kept one day only, in accordance with Scripture, New Year was sometimes kept two days v. R.H. 30b.

(5) Since baking on a Festival for the Sabbath (without an 'erub) is thus but a Rabbinical prohibition (a shebuth; v. Glos.) and as since does not apply to the Temple.

(6) I.e., they permitted the abrogation of the shebuth in the Temple when it was shortly required, viz., for that same

Sabbath, but not when it would only be required a week later.

(7) V. supra 14a, p. 62, n. 1.

(8) Sc. the baking of the shewbread. The Fast-day is the Day of Atonement.

(9) Why may it not be baked on the Festival? Tosaf.: On my view, says Rabbah, there is no difficulty, as I maintain that this is precisely the point of the controversy: the first Tanna holds that the requirements of the Sabbath may not be prepared on a Festival, while R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that they may be prepared. But on your view that the first Tanna too holds that the requirements of the Sabbath may be prepared on a Festival, but that here it is forbidden as a distant shebuth, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel should merely state that even a distant Shebuth is permitted.

(10) And that is what R. Simeon b. Gamaliel really means.

(11) Which were brought on Pentecost, v. Lev. XXIII, 17.

(12) The figures are inclusive of the day on which they were baked.

(13) I.e., on Sunday, so that they would be baked on the previous Friday.

(14) Hence they could not be baked on the Festival itself and eaten on the same day.

(15) Ex. XII, 16.

(16) The two loaves, as well as the shewbread, are sacred, and regarded as being 'for the Most High'.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 47b

and it is the seventh year, on a Festival, [and he is] a priest and a nazirite, [while this furrow is] in unclean ground.¹ Now if we say 'since', let him not be liable for ploughing [on the Festival], since it is fit for covering the blood of a bird?² — Said R. Papa b. Samuel: The reference is to smooth, round stones.³ [But] they are fit for crushing?⁴ — Is then crushing permitted on the Festival?⁵ But they are fit for crushing in an unusual manner?⁶ — The reference is to rocky ground.⁷ Is then rocky ground capable of being sown? — It is rocky ground above, but powdered [loose] earth beneath. Then deduce it [that he is not culpable] because of the loose earth?⁸ But said Mar the soil of R. Ashi: The reference is to clayey earth.⁹ And is clayey earth capable of being sown? — It refers to swampy earth.¹⁰

Abaye raised an objection against him:¹¹ He who cooks the thigh sinew¹² on a Festival and eats it is flagellated five times. He is flagellated on account of cooking the sinew on a Festival;¹³ he is flagellated on account of eating the sinew; he is flagellated for cooking meat in milk; he is flagellated for eating meat [cooked] in milk;¹⁴ and he is flagellated on account of lighting [a fire].¹⁵ But if we say, 'since', let him not be liable on account of lighting, since it is fit for him for his [legitimate] needs? — Said he to him, Omit lighting and substitute the thigh sinew of a nebelah.¹⁶ But R. Hiyya taught: He is flagellated twice for his eating and thrice for his cooking; now if this is correct,¹⁷ he should say, thrice for his eating? — Rather, omit lighting and substitute the wood of mukzeh.¹⁸ And is mukzeh a Scriptural [interdict]? — Yes, he replied, for it is written, And it shall come to pass on the sixth day that they shall prepare that which they bring in;¹⁹ and its 'warning' [injunction] is [learnt] from here, [viz.,] from, thou shalt not do any manner of work.²⁰ Said he to him, But it was you who said, I asked of R. Hisda, — others state, I asked of R. Huna: What if he brought a lamb from the meadow²¹ and slaughtered it as a continual burnt-offering²² on a Festival?²³ And you said to us: He answered me, [It is written], And a lamb,²⁴ [implying], but not a firstling;²⁵ one, but not the tithe;²⁶ of the flock, this is to exclude a palges;²⁷

(2) When a bird is slaughtered its blood must be covered, v. Lev. XVII, 13. This ploughing crushes the earth and makes it fit for that purpose, and since a bird might be slaughtered on the Festival, that too would be necessary.

(3) The ploughing breaks up the earth into smooth, round lumps; these are not fit for covering the blood, for which crushed, dust-like earth is required. Rashi, however, merely reads: stones; v. Tosaf. s.v. באבנים מקורזלות.

(4) And then be used for covering the blood.

(5) Surely not.

- (6) Lit., 'as with the back of the hand'. Such a crushing is not Scripturally forbidden but merely as a Shebuth (v. Glos.). That being so, flagellation, which is administered for the violation of a Scriptural prohibition, should not be incurred.
- (7) Harder than ordinary stones; this cannot be crushed.
- (8) This makes his action non-punishable.
- (9) With which blood may not be covered.
- (10) Which is fit for sowing, yet cannot be crushed into dust for covering blood.
- (11) Against Rabbah.
- (12) Which may not be eaten, v. Gen. XXXII, 32.
- (13) Which is a forbidden labour, since it is not the preparation of food which may be eaten.
