DURING THE WEEK IN WHICH THE NINTH OF AB FALLS IT IS FORBIDDEN TO CUT THE HAIR AND TO WASH CLOTHES. R. Nahman said: This restriction only applies to the washing of clothes for immediate wear but the washing of clothes for storing is permissible. R.

Shesheth said: It is forbidden to wash clothes even for storing. R. Shesheth said: A proof for this is that the fullers in the house of Rab⁴ are then idle.

R. Hammuna raised an objection: ON THURSDAY IT IS PERMISSIBLE IN HONOUR OF THE SABBATH.⁵ What is permissible? Shall I say it is to wash clothes for immediate wear?⁶ Where does the honour of the Sabbath enter into it? It must surely mean, washing clothes for storing [till Sabbath], and this is permissible only on Thursday but not during other days of the week! — In reality [the Mishnah refers] to the washing of clothes for immediate wear and it speaks of a case where a man has only one shirt. For R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: When a man has one shirt only he may wash it in the middle days of the Festival.⁷ So too it has been stated: R. Benjamin said in the name of R. Eleazar: The restriction applies only to washing clothes for immediate wear but washing clothes for storing is permissible. An objection was raised against this: It is forbidden to wash clothes before the ninth of Ab even for storing them until after the ninth of Ab. And our [Babylonian] laundry work is like their [Palestinian] plain washing, [in respect of this prohibition],⁸ but flaxen garments are not included in this prohibition against laundry work. This is indeed a refutation.

R. Isaac b. Giyuri sent a message in the name of R. Johanan: Although the Rabbis declared that flaxen garments are not included in the prohibition against laundry work, yet it is forbidden to wear them [newly laundered] in the week in which the Ninth of Ab falls. Rab said: This applies to the days before the Ninth of Ab but on the days after it it is permissible to wear them. Samuel said: Even on the days after the Ninth of Ab it is forbidden to wear them. An objection was raised against this: The week in which the Ninth of Ab falls it is not permissible to cut the hair or to wash clothes, but on Thursday it is permissible in honour of the Sabbath. How is this to be understood? Should it fall on Sunday it is permissible to wash clothes the whole of the week, [but should it fall] on Monday or Tuesday or Wednesday or Thursday, before it it is not permissible, but after it, it is permissible; [should it fall] on Friday it is permissible to wash clothes on Thursday in honour of the Sabbath; if however he has not washed them on the Thursday it is permissible to wash them on the Friday from the hour of Minhah onwards. (Abaye, and some say, R. Aha b. Jacob expressed his strongest disapproval⁹ of any one who acted so.) Should [the Ninth of Ab] fall on Monday or on Thursday three people read the Law, and [of these the last] one also reads the prophetic lesson; but [should it fall] on Tuesday or Wednesday one reads the Law and he also reads the prophetic lesson. R. Jose says: Invariably three persons read the Law and the last one of these also reads the prophetic lesson. [Will not this Baraita be] a refutation of Samuel [who holds that it is not permissible to wash clothes, even on the days after the Ninth of Ab]? — Samuel will reply: Tannaim are divided on this point. For it has been taught: Should the Ninth of Ab fall on the Sabbath, and likewise if the eve of the Ninth of Ab falls on the Sabbath, one may eat and drink as much as he needs and he may load his table with as many viands as Solomon in his time did, but it is forbidden to cut the hair and to wash clothes, from the beginning of the month until after the fast; this is the opinion of R. Meir. R. Judah says: It is forbidden the whole month. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: It is forbidden only on that particular week. And elsewhere it has been taught: And mourning is observed from the beginning of the month until the fast; this is the opinion of R. Meir. R. Judah says: It is forbidden the whole month. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: It is forbidden only on that particular week.¹⁰

Said R. Johanan: All three authorities adduced their ruling from the same scriptural verse. For it is written, I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feasts, her new moons, and her sabbaths.¹¹ The one who says, from the beginning of the month until the fast adduces his opinion from 'her feasts';¹ the one who says, it is forbidden the whole month, from 'her new moons';² and the one who says, it is forbidden the whole week, from 'her sabbaths'.³ Raba said: The halachah is according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. And Raba further said: The halachah is according to R. Meir. And both decisions are in favour of the more lenient practice, and both are needed [to be stated]. For had it only been stated that the halachah is according to R. Meir, I might have said that the restriction is in force from the beginning of the month, therefore it is also clearly stated that the halachah is according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel; and had it only been stated that the halachah is according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, I would have said that the restriction continues even on the days after [the Ninth of Ab], therefore it is clearly stated that the halachah is according to R. Meir.⁴

ON THE EVE OF THE NINTH OF AB ONE MAY NOT PARTAKE OF A MEAL OF TWO COURSES etc. Rab Judah said: This restriction applies to any time after midday⁵ but not to any time before midday. Rab Judah further said: It applies only to the concluding meal [before the fast] but not to any other meal. And both decisions are in favour of the more lenient practice, and both are needed to be stated. For had it [only] mentioned the concluding meal, I would have said that the restriction held good of a meal partaken even at any time before midday, therefore it is clearly stated, from midday onwards. And had it only mentioned from midday onwards I would have said, that the restriction held good of a meal even though it be not the concluding meal, therefore it is clearly stated that it must be the concluding meal. It has been taught according to the first statement and it has also been taught according to the second statement. It has been taught according to the second statement: One who has a meal on the eve of the Ninth of Ab if it is his intention to have another meal [later] he may eat meat and drink wine; but if not, he may not eat meat nor drink wine. It has also been taught according to the first statement: On the eve of the Ninth of Ab one may not partake of a meal of two courses, nor may he eat meat nor drink wine. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: He should make a difference [in his diet]. What constitutes a difference in diet? If one is in the habit of having two courses he should have one only; and if he usually dines in the company of ten persons, he should dine with five; if it is his usual practice to drink ten cups [of wine] he should drink five only.⁶ These restrictions apply only to meals partaken from midday onwards, but not to meals partaken at any time before midday.

Another [Baraita] taught: On the eve of the Ninth of Ab a man may not partake of a meal of two courses, he should not eat meat, nor drink wine; this is the opinion of R. Meir. But the Sages say: He should make a difference [in his diet] and restrict his consumption of meat and wine. How should one restrict? If he was in the habit of eating one pound of meat he should eat one half only, if it is his usual practice to drink one log of wine he should drink one half log only; but if he is not in the habit of partaking any of these things he may not have these at all. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: If it was his habit to eat radish or savoury after his meal he may do so if he wishes. Another [Baraita] taught: At the meal intended to be the concluding one [prior to the fast of] the Ninth of Ab it is forbidden to eat meat or to drink wine or to bathe after the meal; at the meal which is not intended to be a concluding meal prior to the Ninth of Ab⁷ it is permissible to eat meat and to drink wine but not to bathe. R. Ishmael b. Jose said in the name of his father: So long as it is permissible to eat⁸ meat it is also permissible to bathe.

Our Rabbis have taught: All the restrictions that apply to the mourner hold equally good of the Ninth of Ab. Eating, drinking, bathing, anointing, the wearing of shoes and marital relations are forbidden thereon. It is also forbidden [thereon] to read the Law, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa or to study Mishnah, Talmud, Midrash, Halachoth, or Aggadoth;⁹ he may, however, read such parts of Scripture which he does not usually read and study such parts of Mishnah which he usually does not study;¹⁰ and he may also read Lamentations, Job and the sad parts of Jeremiah; and the school children are free from school for it is said, The precepts of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart.¹¹ R. Judah said: Even such parts of Scripture which he does not usually read he may not read, nor study parts of the Mishnah which he does not usually study, but he may read Job, Lamentations and the sad parts of Jeremiah; and the school children are free [from school] for it is said, 'The precepts of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart'.

NOR EAT MEAT NOR DRINK WINE. A Tanna taught: But he may eat salted meat¹² and he may drink [new] wine from his vat.¹³ For how long must meat remain in salt so as to render it permissible? For the length of time that peace-offering may be eaten.¹⁴ How long is wine considered new? As long as it remains in its first stage of fermentation. A Tanna taught: The law forbidding the use of liquids left uncovered does not apply to new wine in the first stage of fermentation.¹⁵ And how long does it take to ferment? — Three days.

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: The following was the practice of R. Judah b. Il'ai. On the eve of the Ninth of Ab there was brought to him dry bread with salt and he would take his seat between the [baking] oven and the [cooking] stove¹ and eat and he would drink with it a pitcher full of water and he would appear as if a near relation were lying dead before him.

Elsewhere we have learnt: Where it is the custom to do work on the Ninth of Ab we may do work, but where it is not the custom we may not; and everywhere the Scholars refrain from work. R.

Simeon b. Gamaliel says: [In this respect] a man should always consider himself a scholar. It has been taught likewise: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: [In this respect] let a man always consider himself a scholar that he may feel more strongly the fast.

A [Baraita] taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Any one who eats or drinks on the Ninth of Ab is as if he ate and drank on the Day of Atonement. R. Akiba says: Any one who does work on the Ninth of Ab will never see in his work any sign of blessing. And the Sages say: Any one who does work on the Ninth of Ab and does not mourn for Jerusalem will not share in her joy, as it is said, Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her; rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her.² From this originates what they [the Rabbis] have said: Everyone who mourns for Jerusalem merits to share in her joy, and any one who does not mourn for her will not share in her joy. It has also been taught likewise: Of him who eats meat and drinks wine on the Ninth of Ab Scripture says: And their iniquities are upon their bones.³

R. JUDAH MAKES IT OBLIGATORY TO TURN THE BED OVER, BUT THE WISE DID NOT AGREE WITH HIM IN THIS. It has been taught: [The Sages] said to R. Judah: If your view is followed what will happen to pregnant women and nursing mothers?⁴ — He replied to them: I too meant my statement to apply only where it is possible. It has also been taught likewise: R. Judah agrees with the Sages where it is not possible [to overturn the beds]; and the Sages agree with R. Judah where it is possible. What is the real difference between them? The difference between them arises in the case of other beds [not used for sleeping]. As it has been taught: When the Rabbis said that a man should turn over the bed, they meant not only his own bed but also all the beds [in the house]. Raba said: The halachah is according to our Tanna, but the Sages would not accept his [R. Judah's] view at all.

R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: THERE NEVER WERE IN ISRAEL GREATER DAYS OF JOY THAN THE FIFTEENTH OF AB AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT. I can understand the Day of Atonement, because it is a day of forgiveness and pardon and on it the second Tables of the Law were given,⁵ but what happened on the fifteenth of Ab? — Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: It is the day on which permission was granted to the tribes to inter-marry.⁶ Whence may this be adduced? — Scripture says, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded concerning the daughters of Zelophehad etc.,⁷ [meaning] ‘this thing’ shall hold good for this generation only. R. Joseph said in the name of R. Nahman: It is the day on which the tribe of Benjamin was permitted to re-enter the congregation [of Israel], as it is said, Now the men of Israel had sworn in Mizpah, saying: There shall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife.⁸ From what was their exposition?⁹ — Rab said: From the phrase ‘any of us’ which was interpreted to mean, ‘but not from any of our children’.

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: It is the day on which the generation of the wilderness ceased to die out. For a Master said: So long as the generation of the wilderness¹⁰ continued to die out there was no divine communication to Moses,¹¹ as it is said, So it came to pass, when all the men of war were consumed and dead . . . that the Lord spake unto me.¹² [Only then] came the divine communication ‘unto me’.

‘Ulla said: It is the day on which Hosea the son of Elah removed the guards which Jeroboam the son of Nebat had placed on the roads to prevent Israel from going [up to Jerusalem] on pilgrimage,¹³ and he proclaimed

, Let them go up to whichever shrine they desire. R. Mattenah said: It is the day when permission was granted for those killed at Bethar to be buried. R. Mattenah further said: On the day when permission was granted for those killed at Bethar¹ to be buried [the Rabbis] at Jabneh instituted [the recitation of] the benediction,² 'Who art kind and dealest kindly etc. '; 'Who art kind': Because their dead bodies did not become putrid;³ 'And dealest kindly': Because permission was granted for their burial. Rabbah and R. Joseph both said: It is the day on which [every year] they discontinued to fell trees for the altar.⁴ It has been taught: R. Eliezer the elder says: From the fifteenth of Ab onwards the strength of the sun grows less and they no longer felled trees for the altar, because they would not dry [sufficiently]. R. Menashya said: And they called it the Day of the Breaking of the Axe.⁵ From this day onwards,⁶ he who increases [his knowledge through study] will have his life prolonged, but he who does not increase [his knowledge] will have his life taken away.⁷ What is meant by 'taken away'? — R. Joseph learnt: Him his mother will bury.⁸

ON THESE DAYS THE DAUGHTERS OF JERUSALEM etc. Our Rabbis have taught: The daughter of the king borrows [the garments] from the daughter of the High Priest, the daughter of the High Priest from the daughter of the deputy High Priest,⁹ and the daughter of the deputy High Priest from the daughter of the Anointed for Battle,¹⁰ and the daughter of the Anointed for Battle from the daughter of an ordinary priest, and all Israel borrow from one another, so as not to put to shame any one who may not possess [white garments].

ALL THE GARMENTS REQUIRE RITUAL DIPPING: R. Eleazar said: Even though they lay folded in a box.¹¹

THE DAUGHTERS OF ISRAEL CAME OUT AND DANCED IN THE VINEYARDS. A Tanna taught: Whoever was unmarried repaired thither.

THOSE OF THEM WHO CAME OF NOBLE FAMILIES EXCLAIMED, 'YOUNG MAN etc.' Our Rabbis have taught: The beautiful amongst them called out, Set your eyes on beauty for the quality most to be prized in woman is beauty; those of them who came of noble families called out, Look for [a good] family for woman has been created to bring up a family; the ugly ones amongst them called out, Carry off your purchase in the name of Heaven, only on one condition that you adorn us with jewels of gold.

Ulla Bira'ah said in the name of R. Eleazar: In the days to come the Holy One, blessed be He, will hold a chorus for the righteous and He will sit in their midst in the Garden of Eden and every one of them will point with his finger towards Him, as it is said, And it shall be said in that day: Lo, this is our God, for whom we waited, that He might save us; this is the Lord for whom we waited, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation.¹²

Mishna - Mas. Shekalim Chapter 1

MISHNAH 1. ON THE FIRST OF ADAR¹ PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT IS MADE² CONCERNING THE PAYMENT OF THE SHEKELS³ AND CONCERNING THE DIVERSE KINDS.⁴ ON THE FIFTEENTH⁵ THEREOF THE SCROLL [OF ESTHER] IS READ IN WALLED CITIES, AND THE ROADS AND THE BROADWAYS⁶ AND THE RITUAL, WATER BATHS⁷ ARE REPAIRED, AND ALL PUBLIC DUTIES⁸ ARE PERFORMED, AND THE GRAVES ARE MARKED,⁹ AND [MESSENGERS] GO FORTH ALSO CONCERNING THE DIVERSE KINDS.¹⁰

MISHNAH 2. R. JUDAH SAID: AFORETIME THEY USED TO PLUCK UP [THE DIVERSE KINDS], AND CAST THEM BEFORE THE OWNERS.¹¹ [BUT] WHEN TRANSGRESSORS¹² INCREASED IN NUMBER, THEY USED TO PLUCK THEM UP AND CAST THEM ON THE ROADS.¹³ [FINALLY],¹⁴ THEY ORDAINED THAT THE WHOLE FIELD SHOULD BE DECLARED OWNERLESS PROPERTY.

MISHNAH 3. ON THE FIFTEENTH THEREOF TABLES [OF MONEY CHANGERS]¹⁵ WERE SET UP IN THE PROVINCES.¹⁶ ON THE TWENTY-FIFTH THEY WERE SET UP IN THE TEMPLE. WHEN [THE TABLES] WERE SET UP IN THE TEMPLE, THEY BEGAN TO DISTRAIN.¹⁷ WHOM DID THEY DISTRAIN? LEVITES AND ISRAELITES,¹⁸ PROSELYTES AND FREED SLAVES,¹⁹ BUT NOT WOMEN OR SLAVES OR MINORS.²⁰ A MINOR ON WHOSE BEHALF HIS FATHER HAD BEGUN TO PAY THE SHEKEL, MAY NOT DISCONTINUE IT AGAIN. BUT NO DISTRRAINT WAS LEVIED ON THE PRIESTS, IN ORDER TO PROMOTE PEACEFULNESS.²¹

MISHNAH 4. R. JUDAH SAID: BEN BUKRI TESTIFIED AT JABNEH THAT A PRIEST WHO PAID THE SHEKEL DID NOT COMMIT A SIN.²² BUT RABBAN JOHANAN THE SON OF ZACCAI SAID TO HIM: NOT SO, BUT A PRIEST WHO DID NOT PAY THE SHEKEL WAS GUILTY OF A SIN. ONLY THE PRIESTS EXPOUNDED THIS VERSE [THUS] FOR THEIR OWN BENEFIT: AND EVERY MEAL-OFFERING OF THE PRIEST SHALL BE WHOLLY BURNT, IT SHALL NOT BE EATEN:²³ IF THEREFORE THE 'OMER²⁴ AND THE TWO LOAVES²⁵ AND THE SHEWBREAD²⁶ ARE [BROUGHT] FROM OUR [CONTRIBUTIONS], HOW CAN THEY BE EATEN?²⁷

MISHNAH 5. ALTHOUGH IT WAS SAID THAT NO DISTRRAINT IS LEVIED ON WOMEN OR SLAVES OR MINORS, [YET] IF THESE PAID THE SHEKEL IT IS ACCEPTED OF THEM. IF A HEATHEN OR A CUTHEAN²⁸ PAID THE SHEKEL IT IS NOT ACCEPTED OF THEM. LIKEWISE BIRD-OFFERINGS OF MEN WHO HAD AN ISSUE,²⁹ AND BIRD-OFFERINGS OF WOMEN WHO HAD AN ISSUE,²⁹ AND BIRD-OFFERINGS OF WOMEN AFTER CHILDBIRTH,²⁹ AND SIN-OFFERINGS AND GUILT-OFFERINGS ARE NOT ACCEPTED OF THEM. BUT VOW-OFFERINGS³⁰ AND FREEWILL-OFFERINGS³¹ ARE ACCEPTED OF THEM. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: ALL OFFERINGS WHICH CAN BE MADE AS A VOW-OFFERING OR A FREEWILL-OFFERING³² ARE ACCEPTED OF THEM, BUT OFFERINGS THAT CANNOT BE MADE AS A VOW-OFFERING OR A FREEWILL-OFFERING³³ ARE NOT ACCEPTED OF THEM. AND THUS IT IS EXPLICITLY STATED IN [THE BOOK OF] EZRA, WHERE IT IS SAID: YE HAVE NOTHING TO DO WITH US TO BUILD A HOUSE UNTO OUR GOD.³⁴

MISHNAH 6. THE FOLLOWING ARE LIABLE [TO PAY] A SURCHARGE;³⁵ LEVITES AND ISRAELITES AND PROSELYTES AND FREED SLAVES,³⁶ BUT NOT PRIESTS OR WOMEN OR SLAVES OR MINORS.³⁷ IF A MAN PAID THE SHEKEL ON BEHALF OF A PRIEST, OR ON BEHALF OF A WOMAN, OR ON BEHALF OF A SLAVE, OR ON BEHALF OF A MINOR, HE IS EXEMPT.³⁸ IF A MAN PAID THE SHEKEL³⁹ ON HIS OWN BEHALF AND ON BEHALF

OF HIS FELLOW HE IS LIABLE TO PAY BUT ONE SURCHARGE, R. MEIR SAYS: TWO SURCHARGES. IF ONE GAVE A SELA' AND RECEIVED A SHEKEL,⁴⁰ HE IS LIABLE TO PAY TWO SURCHARGES.

MISHNAH 7. IF A MAN PAID THE SHEKEL⁴¹ ON BEHALF OF A POOR MAN OR ON BEHALF OF HIS NEIGHBOUR OR ON BEHALF OF HIS FELLOW-TOWNSMAN, HE IS EXEMPT [FROM A SURCHARGE]. BUT IF HE DID IT AS A LOAN TO THEM HE IS LIABLE. BROTHERS, WHO ARE PARTNERS,⁴² ARE EXEMPT FROM THE TITHE OF CATTLE⁴³ WHEN THEY ARE LIABLE TO A SURCHARGE.⁴⁴ BUT WHEN THEY ARE LIABLE TO THE TITHE OF CATTLE⁴⁵ THEY ARE EXEMPT FROM THE SURCHARGE.⁴⁶ AND HOW MUCH IS THE SURCHARGE? A SILVER MA'AH.⁴⁷ THUS R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY: HALF A MA'AH.

(1) The twelfth month of the year.

(2) Throughout the Land of Israel and the Diaspora.

(3) The annual contribution towards the upkeep of the Temple and its services which was obligatory on every adult male Israelite. It was derived from the Mosaic Institution described in Ex. XXX, 11-16 (cf. Introduction). The contribution had to be paid before the first of Nisan, the beginning of the religious year, and all public offerings brought during the new year had to come out of the new annual contributions.

(4) Of seeds, prohibited in Lev. XIX, 19; Deut. XXII, 9. Warning was given for the removal from fields and vineyards of a portion of plants which were of a kind different from the main growth, so as to reduce these foreign plants to a quantity which did not fall under the prohibition; cf. Kil. II, 1. Warning was given on the first of Adar before the plants had had time to grow up and render the whole field forfeit.

(5) The purim of Shushan. V. Esther IX, 18-19 and cf. Meg. I, 1ff.

(6) That had been damaged by the winter rains, for the benefit of the pilgrims who went up to Jerusalem for the Passover; or, according to Maimonides, for the benefit of fugitives to the Cities of Refuge; cf. Deut. XIX, 2ff and Mak. II, 5, Sonc. ed. p. 59.

(7) For the immersion of the ritually unclean. The rains might have carried soil into the pools, and thus reduced their water to less than the prescribed quantity of forty se'ahs; cf. Mik. I, 7; 'Ed. I, 3, Sonc. ed. p. 2, n. 7.

(8) That had not been fully performed during the rainy season. A list of these duties is given in the Palestinian Gemara and in the commentaries.

(9) Afresh with lime (cf. M.Sh. V, 1), after the old marks had become obliterated by the rains. These marks served to warn priests and Nazirites against approaching them and becoming defiled; cf. Num. XIX, 16; VI, 6; also Ezek. XXXIX, 15.

(10) To inspect the fields and do what is described in the following section.

(11) In order to shame them.

(12) Who fed their cattle on the uprooted plants.

(13) This prevented the obnoxious plants being used by the owners for cattle food.

(14) When even this failed to deter transgressors, since the uprooting saved them the labour of weeding their fields.

(15) For changing foreign coins of Jews from the Diaspora.

(16) Outside Jerusalem. According to others, outside the Temple (cf. infra and II, 1), and including also Jerusalem.

(17) The goods of those who had not yet paid their shekel.

(18) I.e., Jews who were not priests or Levites.

(19) These four classes were bound by law to pay the shekel.

(20) With these the payment of the shekel was a voluntary act.

(21) Lit., 'because of the ways of peace'. Because the priests contested their obligation to pay the shekel, as stated in the next section. The Palestinian Gemara seems to have read: 'Because of the respect due to them'.

(22) I.e., he may pay it, but he was not bound to pay it.

(23) Lev. VI, 16.

(24) The 'Sheaf of Waving', Lev. XXIII, 9ff; cf. Men. X, 1ff.

(25) Ibid. 17; cf. Men. XI, 1ff.

(26) Ex. XXV, 30; Lev. XXIV, 5ff. These three offerings were bought out of the Shekel fund (cf. infra IV, 1), but were consumed by the priests.

(27) But in reality Lev. VI, 16 applied only to private meal-offerings, and not to public offerings such as the 'Omer, the Two Loaves and the Shewbread.

(28) A person from Cutha, i.e., a Samaritan. It is an opprobrious designation derived from II Kings XVII, 24.

(29) Lit., 'nests', i.e. pairs of turtle-doves or young pigeons, of which one was a sin-offering and the other a burnt-offering; cf. Lev. XV, 14f, 25f; XII, 8.

(30) An undertaking with an expression which binds the person (הָרִי עָלַי infra VI, 6) to bring an offering.

(31) An undertaking with an expression which dedicates a particular animal as an offering (הָרִי זֶה). In this case if the animal died or was lost the undertaking is considered as discharged; cf. Kin. I, 1.

(32) To the altar, such as burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, fine flour, wine, frankincense, and wood.

(33) To the altar, but only to the Repair of the Temple.

(34) Ezra IV, 3.

(35) To compensate the Temple for any loss that might be incurred in changing the Shekel (half a sela') into sela's; v. next section.

(36) Who are bound by law to pay the Shekel.

(37) Who are not bound to pay it; cf. supra p. 2; nn. 9 and 10.

(38) Even if the payment of the Shekel was not a gift to them, but a loan which they promised to repay; cf. the next section.

(39) In one coin, viz., a sela'.

(40) As change.

(41) As a gift.

(42) In the inheritance of their father. Cf. Hul. I, 7; Bek. IX, 3.

(43) Of young born during their partnership. This tithe is a personal charge, and cattle held in partnership was exempt from it; cf. Bek. ibid.

(44) I.e., when they had become partners again after they had already shared out the inheritance.

(45) Viz., before they had shared out the inheritance, when the cattle is still considered as the property of their father.

(46) If their Shekels were paid out of the inheritance. Their Shekels are then considered as a gift from their father, and a gift Shekel is exempt from the surcharge.

(47) 1/24th of a sela', or 1/12th of the Shekel.

Mishna - Mas. Shekalim Chapter 2

MISHNAH 1. SHEKELS MAY BE CHANGED¹ INTO DARICS² IN ORDER TO [LIGHTEN] THE LOAD OF THE JOURNEY.³ JUST AS THERE WERE CHESTS⁴ IN THE TEMPLE SO WERE THERE CHESTS IN THE PROVINCE.⁵ IF THE PEOPLE OF A TOWN HAD SENT THEIR SHEKELS AND THEY WERE STOLEN OR LOST, THEN IF THE APPROPRIATION⁶ HAD ALREADY BEEN MADE⁷ [THE MESSENGERS] SWEAR THE OATH [OF ACQUITTAL]⁸ TO THE TREASURERS; BUT IF [THE APPROPRIATION HAD] NOT [YET BEEN MADE] THEY SWEAR TO THE TOWNSPEOPLE, AND THE TOWNSPEOPLE MUST PAY [FRESH] SHEKELS IN THE PLACE OF THE [LOST] SHEKELS. [IF THE LOST SHEKELS] WERE FOUND, OR IF THE THIEVES RESTORED THEM, THEN BOTH [THE FIRST SHEKELS AND THEIR SUBSTITUTES] ARE [ACCOUNTED SACRED] SHEKELS,⁹ BUT THEY CANNOT BE CREDITED [TO THE ACCOUNT] OF THE COMING YEAR.¹⁰

MISHNAH 2. IF A MAN GAVE HIS SHEKEL TO HIS FELLOW TO PAY IT ON HIS BEHALF, BUT [HIS FELLOW] PAID IT¹¹ ON BEHALF OF HIMSELF, THEN IF THE APPROPRIATION HAD ALREADY BEEN MADE¹² [HIS FELLOW] IS GUILTY OF SACRILEGE.¹³ IF A MAN PAID HIS SHEKEL OUT OF MONEY BELONGING TO THE SANCTUARY, THEN IF THE APPROPRIATION HAD ALREADY BEEN MADE AND AN ANIMAL [BOUGHT OUT OF THE APPROPRIATION] HAD ALREADY BEEN OFFERED, HE IS GUILTY OF SACRILEGE.¹⁴ [IF HE DID IT WITH MONEY WHICH WAS] THE VALUE OF SECOND TITHES¹⁵ OR THE VALUE OF SEVENTH YEAR PRODUCE,¹⁶ HE MUST

CONSUME [FOOD TO] THE VALUE THEREOF.¹⁷

MISHNAH 3. IF A MAN SAVED COINS AND SAID: LO, THESE ARE FOR MY SHEKEL, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: THE SURPLUS [OF THE COINS GOES TO THE CHESTS OF] FREEWILL-OFFERINGS.¹⁸ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: THE SURPLUS THEREOF IS COMMON PROPERTY.¹⁹ [IF HE SAID: FROM THESE COINS] I SHALL OFFER MY SHEKEL, [BOTH SCHOOLS] AGREE THAT THE SURPLUS THEREOF IS COMMON PROPERTY. [IF HE SAID]: THESE [COINS] ARE FOR A SIN-OFFERING, [BOTH] AGREE²⁰ THAT THE SURPLUS [GOES TO THE CHESTS OF] FREEWILL-OFFERINGS. [IF HE SAID]: FROM THESE I SHALL OFFER A SIN-OFFERING, [BOTH SCHOOLS] AGREE THAT THE SURPLUS IS COMMON PROPERTY.

MISHNAH 4. R. SIMEON SAID: WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SHEKELS AND A SIN-OFFERING?²¹ SHEKELS HAVE A FIXED VALUE, BUT A SIN-OFFERING HAS NO FIXED VALUE.²² R. JUDAH SAYS: SHEKELS ALSO HAVE NO FIXED VALUE. FOR WHEN THE ISRAELITES CAME UP OUT OF THE CAPTIVITY²³ THEY USED TO PAY THE SHEKEL IN DARICS,²⁴ THEN THEY PAID THE SHEKEL IN SELA'S²⁵ THEN AGAIN THEY PAID IT IN TIB'IN,²⁶ AND FINALLY THEY SOUGHT TO PAY IT IN DENARS.²⁷ BUT R. SIMEON SAID: NEVERTHELESS THE VALUE THEREOF REMAINED THE SAME FOR EVERYBODY, WHEREAS [IN THE CASE OF] A SIN-OFFERING ONE MAN MAY BRING IT OF THE VALUE OF ONE SELA', ANOTHER MAY BRING IT OF THE VALUE OF TWO SELA'S, AND AGAIN ANOTHER OF THREE SELA'S.

MISHNAH 5. THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY SET ASIDE FOR] SHEKELS IS COMMON PROPERTY, BUT THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY SET ASIDE FOR THE] TENTH OF THE EPHAH,²⁸ AND THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY SET ASIDE FOR] BIRD-OFFERINGS OF MEN WHO HAD AN ISSUE, FOR BIRD-OFFERINGS OF WOMEN WHO HAD AN ISSUE, FOR BIRD-OFFERINGS OF WOMEN AFTER CHILDBIRTH,²⁹ THEIR SURPLUS [GOES TO THE CHESTS OF] FREEWILL-OFFERINGS. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: OF ALL [MONIES SET ASIDE] FOR A SIN-OFFERING OR FOR A GUILT-OFFERING, THE SURPLUS [GOES TO THE CHESTS OF] FREEWILL-OFFERINGS. THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY SET ASIDE FOR] A BURNT-OFFERING [MUST BE USED] FOR A BURNT-OFFERING; THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY SET ASIDE FOR] A MEAL-OFFERING [MUST BE USED] FOR A MEAL-OFFERING; THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY SET ASIDE FOR] A PEACE-OFFERING [MUST BE USED] FOR A PEACE-OFFERING; THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY SET ASIDE FOR] A PASSOVER-OFFERING [MUST BE USED] FOR A PASSOVER-OFFERING; THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY RAISED FOR] THE OFFERINGS OF NAZIRITES³⁰ [MUST BE USED] FOR THE OFFERINGS OF OTHER NAZIRITES; THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY RAISED FOR] THE OFFERINGS OF A [PARTICULAR] NAZIRITE [MUST GO] TO THE [CHESTS OF] FREEWILL-OFFERINGS; THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY RAISED FOR] THE POOR [MUST BE USED] FOR [OTHER] POOR; THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY RAISED FOR] A [PARTICULAR] POOR PERSON³¹ [MUST BE GIVEN] TO THAT [POOR PERSON];³² THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY RAISED FOR THE RANSOM OF] CAPTIVES [MUST BE USED] FOR [THE RANSOM OF OTHER] CAPTIVES; THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY RAISED FOR THE RANSOM OF] A [PARTICULAR] CAPTIVE [MUST BE GIVEN] TO THAT CAPTIVE; THE SURPLUS OF [THE MONEY RAISED FOR THE BURIAL OF] THE DEAD [MUST BE USED] FOR [THE BURIAL OF OTHER] DEAD; THE SURPLUS OF [THE MONEY RAISED FOR THE BURIAL OF] A [PARTICULAR] DEAD PERSON [MUST BE GIVEN] TO HIS HEIRS. R. MEIR SAYS: THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY RAISED FOR THE BURIAL OF] A [PARTICULAR] DEAD PERSON MUST BE LAID ASIDE UNTIL ELIJAH COMES.³³ R. NATHAN SAYS: THE SURPLUS OF [MONEY RAISED FOR THE BURIAL OF] A [PARTICULAR] DEAD PERSON [MUST BE USED] FOR BUILDING A MONUMENT FOR HIM OVER HIS GRAVE.

- (1) Lit., 'may be combined' (for purposes of exchange).
- (2) A Persian gold coin; cf. Ezra II, 69; VIII, 27.
- (3) Of the coins on the way up to the Temple
- (4) Heb. 'Shoferoth' (שופרות), horns of blowing. The chests were shaped like the Shofar, narrow at the top where the opening was, and widening lower down. This shape was chosen to prevent the theft of the contents.
- (5) Cf. p. 2 n. 6.
- (6) Lit., 'heave-offering' (תרומה). This term is usually applied to the offering 'heaved' from produce and given to the priest. Here it designates the portion of the shekels taken up periodically in the store-chamber for the current needs of the Temple, as described below, III, 1ff.
- (7) By making the appropriation all the shekels which are due to come to the Temple become the property of the Temple, the appropriation being made also in respect of those shekel payments which had not yet reached the Temple at the time of appropriation. V. B.M. 58a, Sonc. ed. p. 344.
- (8) The oath which acquits unpaid guardians of responsibility for the loss of goods entrusted to them; cf. B.M. 33b.
- (9) Both are the property of the Temple.
- (10) They have to pay the shekel afresh in the next year.
- (11) By error.
- (12) By the appropriation the Temple had already secured possession of the shekel from the first man; cf. p. 5, n. 7.
- (13) In accordance with Lev. V, 15ff; since he used Temple property to discharge a debt. The authorities are divided as to whether in this case also, as in the following case, an animal has first to be offered out of the appropriation before he becomes guilty of sacrilege.
- (14) But otherwise he does not incur guilt, since he has not used Temple money for any common purpose, but only transferred it from one hallowed denomination to another.
- (15) The First Tithe of produce was given to the Levites, Num. XVIII, 21. The Second Tithe had to be consumed itself, or its value in money, in Jerusalem. Cf. Deut. XIV, 24ff; 'Ed. I, 9ff, Sonc. ed. p. 4, n. 16.
- (16) Which is liable to the law of 'Removal' (ביעור), and must be consumed before the Passover; cf. M.Sh. V, 6.
- (17) He must take money equal to the value of the shekel and declare that this money shall be in place of the Second Tithes money or of the Seventh Year produce money that had been given away as a shekel, and then he must use up this money in accordance with the rules laid down for the consumption of Second Tithes (M. Sh. II, 1-4), or of Seventh Year produce (Sheb. VIII, 1-5; IX, 8).
- (18) Cf. infra VI, 6. All the coins saved have become hallowed.
- (19) It may be expended by the owner at his will.
- (20) For the reason stated by R. Simeon in the next section.
- (21) That in the case of a shekel Beth Hillel always hold the surplus of the coins to be common property, but in the case of a sin-offering they agree with Beth Shammai, that in the condition stated in the last section, the surplus falls to the chest of freewill-offerings?
- (22) Hence all the coins might have been used up for a sin-offering, therefore they are all hallowed.
- (23) In the days of Cyrus.
- (24) Viz., half a daric.
- (25) Half a sela'.
- (26) טבעין plural of טבע , minted shekel.
- (27) Half of the tib'in. Some texts add: 'But they were not accepted of them'.
- (28) Lev. V, 11-13.
- (29) Cf. supra p. 3, n. 7.
- (30) Num. VI, 10ff, 14ff.
- (31) For a definite need.
- (32) For his other needs.
- (33) Who will solve the problem of what to do with it; cf. B.M., Sonc. ed. p. 6, n. 2.

Mishna - Mas. Shekalim Chapter 3

MISHNAH 1. AT THREE PERIODS OF THE YEAR WAS THE APPROPRIATION MADE

[FROM THE SHEKELS] IN THE CHAMBER:¹ HALF A MONTH² BEFORE THE PASSOVER, HALF A MONTH BEFORE PENTECOST, AND HALF A MONTH BEFORE THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES. THESE ARE ALSO THE SEASONS³ FOR THE TITHE OF CATTLE;⁴ THUS R. AKIBA. BEN 'AZZAI SAYS: ON THE TWENTY-NINTH OF ADAR,⁵ AND ON THE FIRST OF SIVAN,⁶ AND ON THE TWENTY-NINTH OF AB.⁷ R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON SAY: ON THE FIRST OF NISAN,⁵ ON THE FIRST OF SIVAN,⁶ AND ON THE TWENTY-NINTH OF ELUL. WHEREFORE DID THEY SAY, ON THE TWENTY-NINTH OF ELUL AND NOT ON THE FIRST OF TISHRI?⁸ BECAUSE THE FIRST OF TISHRI IS A FESTIVAL,⁹ AND IT IS NOT PERMITTED TO TITHE ON A FESTIVAL, THEREFORE THEY ADVANCE IT TO THE TWENTY-NINTH OF ELUL.

MISHNAH 3. [MEMBERS] OF RABBAN GAMALIEL'S HOUSEHOLD USED TO ENTER [THE CHAMBER] WITH THEIR SHEKEL BETWEEN THEIR FINGERS, AND THROW IT IN FRONT OF HIM WHO MADE THE APPROPRIATION, WHILE HE WHO MADE THE APPROPRIATION PURPOSELY PRESSED IT INTO THE BASKET.¹⁷ HE WHO MADE THE APPROPRIATION DID NOT MAKE IT UNLESS HE FIRST SAID TO THEM:¹⁸ SHALL I MAKE THE APPROPRIATION? AND THEY SAID TO HIM THREE TIMES:¹⁹ MAKE THE APPROPRIATION! MAKE THE APPROPRIATION! MAKE THE APPROPRIATION!

MISHNAH 4. WHEN HE MADE THE FIRST APPROPRIATION²⁰ HE COVERED [WHAT WAS LEFT] WITH LEATHER SPREADS,²¹ AND WHEN HE MADE THE SECOND APPROPRIATION²² HE AGAIN COVERED [WHAT WAS LEFT] WITH LEATHER SPREADS,²¹ BUT AFTER THE THIRD APPROPRIATION HE DID NOT COVER [WHAT WAS LEFT]. [HE COVERED AFTER THE FIRST TWO APPROPRIATIONS] LEST HE SHOULD FORGET AND MAKE A [FRESH] APPROPRIATION FROM SHEKELS FROM WHICH AN APPROPRIATION HAD ALREADY BEEN MADE. THE FIRST APPROPRIATION HE MADE ON BEHALF OF THE LAND OF ISRAEL, AND THE SECOND ON BEHALF OF THE CITIES NEAR THEREUNTO, AND THE THIRD ON BEHALF OF BABYLON AND ON BEHALF OF MEDIA AND ON BEHALF OF [OTHER] DISTANT COUNTRIES.

(1) In the Temple which serves as the Treasury.

(2) Lit., breaking (into two) I.e., half the period of the preparation for the festival during which the laws of the festival are being expounded.

(3) Lit., 'threshing floors' (גרנות), a term borrowed from the tithe of produce which becomes due when the produce reaches the threshing-floor.

(4) Lev. XXVII, 32; cf. Bek. IX, 5-6. These dates were chosen to enable cattle dealers to sell their young animals after the tithing for the requirement of sacrifices on the three great Festivals of Pilgrimage.

(5) A more definite date than the one given by R. Akiba.

- (6) The supply of young animals was smaller before Pentecost, and the longer period of half a month given by R. Akiba might cause a scarcity of animals for sacrifices on Pentecost.
- (7) And not on or about the first of Tishri. Ben 'Azzai holds that animals born during the month of Elul had to be tithed by themselves, and could not be mixed up with those born before Elul; cf. Bek. IX, 5.
- (8) Like the dates which they gave for Nisan and Sivan.
- (9) The Festival of the New Year.
- (10) Three se'ahs equal the Biblical ephah; cf. 'Ed., Sonc. ed. p. 2, nn. 3, 7.
- (11) To ensure that the contents of each basket would be expended in the order in which they had been taken up.
- (12) The J. Mishnah reads Gamma.
- (13) With a border folded up at the lower end of the cloak. Aruch explains it as a cloak with sleeves. The articles of apparel enumerated may serve as a receptacle for hiding a theft from the shekels.
- (14) I.e., to give no cause for suspicion.
- (15) Num. XXXII, 22.
- (16) Prov. III, 4.
- (17) To make sure that their shekels would be used for the purchase of the offerings enumerated infra IV, 1, and not be left in the residue, ibid. 4.
- (18) To those who stood outside the chamber; v. Maim. Yad. Shekalim, II, 5.
- (19) Cf. Men. X, 3.
- (20) The one taken before the Passover.
- (21) GR. . On which were laid the shekels that arrived later.
- (22) The one taken before Pentecost.

Mishna - Mas. Shekalim Chapter 4

MISHNAH 1. WHAT WAS DONE WITH THE APPROPRIATION? THEY BROUGHT THEREWITH THE DAILY BURNT-OFFERINGS¹ AND THE ADDITIONAL² BURNT-OFFERINGS AND THEIR DRINK-OFFERINGS, THE 'OMER AND THE TWO LOAVES AND THE SHEWBREAD³ AND ALL THE OTHER PUBLIC OFFERINGS.⁴ THOSE WHO WATCHED THE AFTERGROWTHS⁵ IN THE SEVENTH YEAR⁶ RECEIVED THEIR WAGES OUT OF THE APPROPRIATION FROM THE CHAMBER. R. JOSE SAYS: [IF A MAN WISHED] HE COULD VOLUNTEER TO WATCH WITHOUT PAYMENT. BUT THEY SAID TO HIM: THOU, TOO, DOST ADMIT THAT THEY⁷ CAN ONLY BE OFFERED OUT OF PUBLIC FUNDS.⁸

MISHNAH 2. THE [RED] COW⁹ AND THE SCAPEGOAT¹⁰ AND THE STRIP OF SCARLET¹¹ CAME OUT OF THE APPROPRIATION OF THE CHAMBER. THE VIADUCT FOR THE [RED] COW¹² AND THE VIADUCT FOR THE SCAPEGOAT¹³ AND THE STRIP OF SCARLET WHICH WAS BETWEEN ITS HORNS,¹⁴ AND [THE MAINTENANCE OF] THE POOL OF WATER,¹⁵ AND THE WALL OF THE CITY¹⁶ AND THE TOWERS THEREOF AND ALL THE NEEDS OF THE CITY¹⁷ CAME OUT OF THE REMAINDER¹⁸ IN THE CHAMBER. ABBA SAUL SAYS: THE VIADUCT FOR THE [RED] COW THE HIGH PRIESTS MADE OUT OF THEIR OWN [MEANS].

MISHNAH 3. WHAT WAS DONE WITH THE SURPLUS OF THE REMAINDER IN THE CHAMBER?¹⁹ THEREWITH WERE BOUGHT WINES, OILS AND FINE FLOURS,²⁰ AND THE PROFIT BELONGED TO THE SANCTUARY; THUS R. ISHMAEL. R. AKIBA SAYS: ONE MAY NOT DEAL WITH THE PROPERTY OF THE SANCTUARY,²¹ NOR WITH THE PROPERTY OF THE POOR.²²

MISHNAH 4. WHAT WAS DONE WITH THE SURPLUS OF THE APPROPRIATION:²³ [THEREOF WERE MADE] BEATEN PLATES OF GOLD FOR COVERING²⁴ THE INTERIOR OF THE HOLY OF HOLIES. R. ISHMAEL SAYS: THE SURPLUS [FROM THE SALE] OF THE

PRODUCE²⁵ WAS USED FOR THE ALTAR'S 'DESSERT',²⁶ AND THE SURPLUS OF THE APPROPRIATION WAS USED FOR THE VESSELS OF MINISTRATION. R. AKIBA SAYS: THE SURPLUS OF THE APPROPRIATION WAS USED FOR THE ALTAR'S 'DESSERT', AND THE SURPLUS OF THE DRINK-OFFERINGS²⁷ WAS USED FOR THE VESSELS OF MINISTRATION. R. HANANIAH THE CHIEF OF THE PRIESTS²⁸ SAYS: THE SURPLUS OF THE DRINK-OFFERINGS WAS USED FOR THE ALTAR'S 'DESSERT', AND THE SURPLUS OF THE APPROPRIATION WAS USED FOR THE VESSELS OF MINISTRATION. NEITHER OF THESE [TWO SAGES] ALLOWED [A PROFIT FROM THE SALE OF THE PRODUCE].²⁹

MISHNAH 5. WHAT WAS DONE WITH THE SURPLUS OF THE FRANKINCENSE:³⁰ THEY SET APART THEREFROM³¹ THE WAGES OF THE CRAFTSMEN,³² AND WHEN THEY HAD EXCHANGED IT³³ FOR THE WAGES OF THE CRAFTSMEN, THEY GAVE IT TO THE CRAFTSMEN AS THEIR WAGES, AND THEN THEY BOUGHT IT BACK AGAIN OUT OF A NEW APPROPRIATION.³⁴ IF THE NEW ONE³⁵ HAD ARRIVED IN TIME THEY BOUGHT IT BACK AGAIN WITH THE NEW APPROPRIATION, BUT IF NOT, THEY BOUGHT IT BACK AGAIN WITH THE OLD ONE.

MISHNAH 6. IF A MAN DEDICATED HIS POSSESSIONS TO THE SANCTUARY, AND THERE WAS AMONG THEM AUGHT THAT WAS FIT FOR PUBLIC OFFERINGS,³⁶ IT SHOULD BE GIVEN TO THE CRAFTSMEN AS THEIR WAGES; THUS R. AKIBA. BUT BEN 'AZZAI SAID TO HIM: THIS IS NOT IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE ESTABLISHED RULE.³⁷ NAY, RATHER, THEY SET APART THEREFROM³⁸ THE WAGES OF THE CRAFTSMEN, AND WHEN THEY HAD EXCHANGED IT FOR THE MONEY DUE TO THE CRAFTSMEN THEY GAVE IT TO THE CRAFTSMEN AS THEIR WAGES, AND THEN THEY BOUGHT IT BACK AGAIN OUT OF A NEW APPROPRIATION.

MISHNAH 7. IF A MAN DEDICATED HIS POSSESSIONS TO THE SANCTUARY AND THERE WERE AMONG THEM CATTLE FIT FOR THE ALTAR, MALES OR FEMALES, R. ELIEZER SAYS: MALES SHOULD BE SOLD³⁹ FOR THE USE OF BURNT-OFFERINGS AND FEMALES⁴⁰ SHOULD BE SOLD FOR THE USE OF PEACE-OFFERINGS, AND THE PRICE THEREOF TOGETHER WITH THE REST OF THE POSSESSIONS SHOULD GO TO THE REPAIR OF THE TEMPLE.⁴¹ R. JOSHUA SAYS: THE MALES SHOULD THEMSELVES BE OFFERED UP AS BURNT-OFFERINGS⁴² AND THE FEMALES SHOULD BE SOLD FOR THE USE OF PEACE-OFFERINGS, [AND FOR THE PRICE THEREOF BURNT-OFFERINGS SHOULD BE OFFERED],⁴³ AND THE OTHER POSSESSIONS SHOULD GO TO THE REPAIR OF THE TEMPLE. R. AKIBA SAYS: I PREFER THE OPINION OF R. ELIEZER ABOVE THE OPINION OF R. JOSHUA, FOR R. ELIEZER APPLIED A UNIFORM RULE,⁴⁴ BUT R. JOSHUA DIFFERENTIATED.⁴⁵ R. PAPIAS SAID: I HAVE HEARD A TRADITION IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE OPINIONS OF BOTH [SAGES]: THAT IF A MAN DEDICATED TO THE SANCTUARY IN DEFINITE TERMS⁴⁶ IT IS ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF R. ELIEZER,⁴⁷ BUT IF HE DEDICATED TO THE SANCTUARY IN INDEFINITE TERMS⁴⁸ IT IS ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF R. JOSHUA.⁴⁹

MISHNAH 8. IF A MAN DEDICATED HIS POSSESSIONS TO THE SANCTUARY AND THERE WERE AMONG THEM THINGS FIT FOR THE ALTAR [SUCH AS] WINES, OILS,⁵⁰ AND BIRDS,⁵¹ R. ELIEZER SAYS: THEY SHOULD BE SOLD FOR THE USE OF [OFFERINGS BELONGING TO] EACH PARTICULAR KIND, AND FOR THE PRICE THEREOF BURNT-OFFERINGS⁵² SHOULD BE OFFERED, WHILE THE OTHER POSSESSIONS SHOULD GO TO THE REPAIR OF THE TEMPLE.

MISHNAH 9. ONCE IN THIRTY DAYS PRICES WERE FIXED [ON BEHALF OF] THE CHAMBER.⁵³ IF A MAN HAD UNDERTAKEN TO SUPPLY FINE FLOURS AT FOUR [SE'AH'S

FOR A SELA'] AND THEY NOW STOOD AT THREE [SE'AHs FOR A SELA'] HE MUST [STILL] SUPPLY AT FOUR [SE'AHs]. [IF HE HAD UNDERTAKEN TO SUPPLY] AT THREE [SE'AHs FOR A SELA'] AND THEY NOW STOOD AT FOUR, HE MUST [ALSO] SUPPLY AT FOUR, FOR THE SANCTUARY HAS THE UPPER HAND.⁵⁴ IF THE FINE FLOUR BECAME WORM-EATEN THE LOSS IS HIS; IF THE WINE BECAME SOUR THE LOSS IS HIS. FOR HE IS NOT ENTITLED TO HIS MONEY⁵⁵ EXCEPT AFTER THE ALTAR HAS ACCEPTED THE OFFERING.⁵⁶

(1) Cf. Num. XXVIII, 1-8.

(2) The special offering for the Sabbath, the New Moon and the Festivals, enumerated in Num. XXVIII, 9-XXIX, 39.

(3) Cf. supra p. 3 nn. 2-4.

(4) E.g., frankincense and the drink-offerings ordained, infra VII, 6.

(5) Growing without human labor; cf. Lev. XXV, 5, 11.

(6) All produce of the Seventh Year was ownerless property and free to man and beast, Lev. ibid. 6-7. As the 'Omer and the Two Loaves had to be offered out of the new produce of the year, therefore in the Seventh Year guardians were set over a special field to guard its aftergrowths for the use of the 'Omer and the Two Loaves for that year, so that they might not be eaten by man or beast.

(7) The 'Omer and the Two Loaves.

(8) But if the watcher is unpaid the aftergrowths become automatically his own private property and could not be offered up; v. B.M., Sonc. ed. pp. 671ff and notes.

(9) Num. XIX, 1ff.

(10) Lev. XVI, 10, 21F.

(11) Which was thrown into the burning Red Cow, including also the accompanying cedar wood and hyssop, Num. XIX, 6. According to others, the strip of scarlet tied on the neck of the goat of the sin-offering in order to distinguish it from the scapegoat, Lev. XVI, 9; v. p. 13, n. 3.

(12) Across the valley which separated the Temple Mount from the Mount of Olives, over which the Red Cow was led by the priest. The viaduct was erected in order to protect the priest against defilement from the possible unsuspected presence of a grave in the valley; cf. Parah III, 6.

(13) A private exit leading out of Jerusalem for the man who carried away the scapegoat, to prevent his being mobbed; cf. Yoma 66a.

(14) Cf. Yoma 41b.

(15) In the Temple Court.

(16) Of Jerusalem.

(17) The maintenance of the water supply, the streets and markets, etc.

(18) What is left over from the shekels after the three appropriations had been made; v. supra III, 2, 4.

(19) After the needs enumerated in the foregoing section (viaducts etc.) had been satisfied.

(20) To be re-sold to those requiring them for their offerings.

(21) (a) Such trafficking is unseemly for the Temple v. Keth. 106b. [(b) Because trafficking may involve loss as well as gain, T.J. a.l.].

(22) 'Because a poor man might come unexpectedly and there would be nothing to give him'. Keth. ibid.; cf. however preceding note (b).

(23) After the needs enumerated in section 1 and the beginning of section 2 had been met.

(24) Cf. Num. XVII, 3; I Kings VI, 20ff.

(25) In accordance with his opinion in the last section.

(26) Lit., 'summer-fruit', eaten as dessert, a figurative name for the burnt-offerings which were offered after all the prescribed public and private offerings had been offered, to prevent the altar standing idle, v. Shebu., Sonc. ed. p. 50, n. 3.

(27) Sold by the officers of the Temple in accordance with infra V, 4.

(28) Segan, v. Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 97, n. 1.

(29) Against R. Ishmael, and in agreement with R. Akiba supra section 3.

(30) In conformity with an ancient tradition, the incense was prepared for the whole year in advance in a quantity of 365 minas, corresponding to the number of days in the solar year, with an extra three minas for the Day of Atonement, of which one mina was offered daily, one half in the morning and one half in the afternoon (cf. Ex. XXX, 7-8; Ker. 6a). But as the calendar year in force was the lunar year which consists usually of 354 days (excepting the leap year which has 384 days), there was at the end of most years a surplus of eleven minas. This surplus could not be carried over for use in the next year, since all public offerings made from the first of Nisan onwards had to come out of the appropriation of the new shekels (cf. p. 12, n. 4). Hence arose the problem how to enable the surplus from the old year to be used for the new year.

(31) From the shekels in the chamber. So Maimonides and Bertinore. [Aliter: From the surplus of the frankincense (Barneth a.l.). Cf. next section, n. 5.]

(32) Who compounded the incense, made the Shewbread, and guarded the aftergrowths in the Seventh Year; cf. supra section 1, and infra V], 1.

(33) The surplus of the incense, thereby divesting it of its hallowed character and rendering it 'common'. This roundabout method was adopted, instead of selling it straightway, out of reverence for its hallowed character.

(34) And it could be used for the new year.

(35) The contribution of the new shekel.

(36) Frankincense, wine, oil, or flour.

(37) As laid down in the last section.

(38) [מִזְבֵּחַ evidently refers to the dedicated objects fit for public offerings; cf. previous section, n. 6.]

(39) But they should not themselves be offered, as, according to the view of R. Eliezer, an ordinary dedication to the Temple belonged to the general Temple fund ('The Repair of the Temple').

(40) Females could not be used for burnt-offerings, but were good for peace-offerings; cf. Lev. I, 3, 10; III, 1, 6.

(41) Cf. II Kings XII, 6ff. This was equivalent to the general Temple fund.

(42) He holds that such was the intention of the dedication.

(43) But not as peace-offerings the flesh of which is eaten by the owner, it being assumed that his intention was to dedicate them exclusively to the altar.

(44) For cattle and other possessions.

(45) Between cattle and other possessions.

(46) Making special mention of the cattle among his possessions.

(47) That cattle should be treated in the same way as his other possessions.

(48) Without mentioning the cattle.

(49) That each is treated in the manner for which it is fit.

(50) For meal-offerings and drink-offerings; cf. Num. XXVIII, 5, 7, etc.

(51) Pigeons and turtle-doves.

(52) This is deduced from the wording of Lev. XXII, 18: Of all their vows and freewill-offerings . . . for a burnt-offering, v. T.J. a.l.

(53) The treasury chamber where the shekels were deposited; III, 1.

(54) Cf. Kid. 29a.

(55) Even if he had received it in advance.

(56) As a valid one.

Mishna - Mas. Shekalim Chapter 5

MISHNAH 1. THESE WERE THE OFFICERS¹ IN THE TEMPLE: JOHANAN THE SON OF PHINEAS WAS OVER THE SEALS, AHIJAH OVER THE DRINK-OFFERINGS,² MATTITHIAH THE SON OF SAMUEL³ OVER THE LOTS,⁴ PETHAHIAH OVER THE BIRD-OFFERINGS (THIS SAME PETHAHIAH WAS MORDECAI. WHEREFORE WAS HIS NAME CALLED PETHAHIAH? BECAUSE HE 'OPENED'⁵ MATTERS AND EXPOUNDED THEM, AND HE UNDERSTOOD THE SEVENTY TONGUES);⁶ THE SON OF AHIJAH WAS OVER THE SICKNESS OF THE BOWELS,⁷ NEHUNIAH WAS DIGGER OF DITCHES,⁸ GEBINI WAS THE CRIER,⁹ THE SON OF GEBER WAS OVER THE LOCKING OF THE GATES,¹⁰ THE SON OF BEBAI WAS OVER THE STRIPS,¹¹ THE SON OF ARZA OVER THE CYMBAL,¹² HYGROS THE SON OF LEVI OVER THE SINGING,¹³ THE HOUSE OF GARMU OVER THE MAKING OF THE SHEWBREAD,¹⁴ THE HOUSE OF ABTINAS OVER THE

PREPARING OF THE FRANKINCENSE,¹⁴ ELEAZAR OVER THE VEIL,¹⁵ AND PHINEAS OVER THE VESTMENTS.¹⁶

MISHNAH 2. THE TREASURERS WERE NOT LESS THAN THREE AND THE SUPERINTENDENTS NOT LESS THAN SEVEN, NOR MAY AUTHORITY BE EXERCISED IN MATTERS OF MONEY BY LESS THAN TWO [OFFICERS], EXCEPT [IN THE CASE] OF AHIJAH¹⁷ WHO WAS OVER THE SICKNESS OF THE BOWELS AND ELEAZAR¹⁷ WHO WAS OVER THE VEIL, FOR THESE HAD BEEN ACCEPTED BY THE MAJORITY OF¹⁸ THE PUBLIC.

MISHNAH 3. THERE WERE FOUR SEALS IN THE TEMPLE, AND ON THEM WAS INSCRIBED [RESPECTIVELY] 'CALF', 'RAM',¹⁹ 'KID', 'SINNER'.²⁰ BEN 'AZZAI SAYS: THERE WERE FIVE AND ON THEM WAS INSCRIBED IN ARAMAIC [RESPECTIVELY] 'CALF', 'RAM', 'KID', 'POOR²¹ SINNER', AND 'RICH²² SINNER'. [THE SEAL INSCRIBED] 'CALF', SERVED FOR THE DRINK-OFFERINGS²³ OF KINE, BOTH GREAT AND SMALL, MALE AND FEMALE; [THE ONE INSCRIBED] 'KID' SERVED FOR THE DRINK-OFFERINGS OF FLOCKS, BOTH GREAT AND SMALL, MALE AND FEMALE, WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THOSE OF RAMS; [THE ONE INSCRIBED] 'RAM' SERVED FOR THE DRINK-OFFERINGS OF RAMS ALONE; [THE ONE INSCRIBED] 'SINNER' SERVED FOR THE DRINK-OFFERINGS OF THE THREE ANIMALS [OFFERED] BY LEPERS.²⁴

MISHNAH 4. IF A MAN REQUIRED DRINK-OFFERINGS HE WOULD GO TO JOHANAN WHO WAS THE OFFICER OVER THE SEALS, AND GIVE HIM MONEY AND RECEIVE FROM HIM A SEAL. THEN HE WOULD GO TO AHIJAH WHO WAS THE OFFICER OVER THE DRINK-OFFERINGS, AND GIVE HIM THE SEAL, AND RECEIVE FROM HIM DRINK-OFFERINGS. AND IN THE EVENING THESE TWO [OFFICERS] WOULD COME TOGETHER, AND AHIJAH WOULD BRING OUT THE SEALS AND RECEIVE MONEY FOR THEIR VALUE. AND IF THERE WAS MORE [THAN THEIR VALUE] THE SURPLUS BELONGED TO THE SANCTUARY,²⁵ BUT IF THERE WAS LESS [THAN THEIR VALUE] JOHANAN WOULD PAY [THE LOSS] OUT OF HIS OWN MEANS; FOR THE SANCTUARY HAS THE UPPER HAND.

MISHNAH 5. IF A MAN LOST HIS SEAL HIS CASE WAS DEFERRED UNTIL THE EVENING.²⁶ IF THEN THEY FOUND [MONEY OVER] TO THE VALUE OF HIS LOST SEAL THEY GAVE [IT] TO HIM, PUT IF NOT HE HAD NOTHING. MOREOVER, ON THE SEALS WAS INSCRIBED THE NAME OF THE DAY [IN ORDER TO GUARD] AGAINST IMPOSTORS.²⁷

MISHNAH 6. THERE WERE TWO CHAMBERS IN THE TEMPLE, ONE THE CHAMBER OF SECRET GIFTS AND THE OTHER THE CHAMBER OF THE VESSELS. THE CHAMBER OF SECRET GIFTS — SIN-FEARING PERSONS²⁸ USED TO PUT THEIR GIFTS THEREIN IN SECRET, AND THE POOR WHO WERE DESCENDED OF THE VIRTUOUS WERE SUPPORTED THEREFROM IN SECRET. THE CHAMBER OF THE VESSELS — WHOEVER OFFERED A VESSEL AS A GIFT USED TO THROW IT THEREIN, AND ONCE IN THIRTY DAYS THE TREASURERS OPENED IT; AND ANY VESSEL THEY FOUND THEREIN THAT WAS OF USE FOR THE REPAIR OF THE TEMPLE THEY LEFT THERE; BUT THE OTHERS WERE SOLD AND THEIR PRICE WENT TO THE CHAMBER OF THE REPAIR²⁹ OF THE TEMPLE.

(1) According to an explanation in the Palestinian Gemara, the functionaries here enumerated were all contemporaries in a particular generation. Another, less likely, explanation given there is that these persons were the worthiest of all the occupants of the offices during the whole existence of the Second Temple. [According to Hoffmann (Die Erste Mishnah

p. 17) the officers enumerated here date from the time of Agrippa. This is disputed by Graetz MGWJ, XXXIV, 195ff and Buchler, Die Priester, p. 134ff.]

(2) Cf. infra 4.

(3) A saying of his in connection with the Temple service is recorded in Yoma 28a.

(4) By which the various labours connected with the service of the altar were distributed among the priests; v. Yoma II, 2ff.

(5) I.e. pathah (פתח). This is an allusion to the various difficult problems in connection with bird-offerings discussed in the Tractate Kinnim; cf. also Aboth. III, 19.

(6) The number of languages into which human speech was traditionally divided, corresponding to the seventy nations enumerated in Gen. X; cf. ibid. 5, 20, 31. Of Mordecai's skill in strange languages, cf. Meg. 13b. The whole bracketed passage is probably an interpolation. The Mordecai mentioned here is identified by the commentators with Mordecai Bilshan (בלשן from לשון , language) of Ezra II, 2. According to Rashi (Men. 64b, cf. Tosaf. ibid.) and Ibn Ezra (on Ezra loc. cit) this was the Mordecai of the Book of Esther.

(7) To cure it. The Palestinian Gemara adds that the priests were specially subject to this sickness, because they went about barefooted, ate much meat, and drank much water.

(8) To supply water to pilgrims to the Temple. Cf. B.K. Sonc. ed. p. 287.

(9) Who summoned the priests to their labours every morning; cf. Tam. III, 8; Yoma 20b.

(10) To lock them in the evening and open them again in the morning.

(11) Strips of cloth of which wicks were made for the lamps and torches of the Temple. So the Palestinian Gemara. The Babylonian Gemara (Yoma 23a) explains it as the straps with which Levites were scourged when found sleeping while on night duty as watchmen. But in Mid. I, 2 the sleeping watchman is beaten with a stick.

(12) That accompanied the singing of the Levites, Tam. VII, 3.

(13) Of the Levites, Tam. VII, 4; cf. Yoma 38a. [Whether Ben Arza was a priest or a Levite, v. Buchler op. cit. pp. 126f and 142f.]

(14) V. Yoma 38a.

(15) Over its manufacture, etc.; cf. infra VIII, 5.

(16) Of the priests.

(17) Who also handled money for the purchase of medicines and of materials for the Veil.

(18) Some texts omit 'the majority of'.

(19) Lit., 'male', the Aramaic name of the ram.

(20) I.e., leper. Leprosy was considered a punishment for certain serious transgressions; cf. 'Ar. 16a.

(21) Lev. XIV, 21ff.

(22) I.e., a leper who is not poor. He has to offer the sacrifices prescribed, Lev. ibid. 10.

(23) Including meal-offerings. These had to accompany every burnt-offering and peace-offering, but differed in their quantities according as the sacrifice was of kine, or of flocks, or a ram; cf. Num. XV, 3-10.

(24) As prescribed in Lev. XIV, 10, 21 respectively.

(25) Johanan could not claim it as his own.

(26) When the two officers met together to settle the daily account.

(27) Who might use for themselves seals lost by the officers or by the buyer, or who might buy seals when produce was cheap and use them in a time when produce became dear.

(28) Pious persons who sought to avoid publicity for their deeds of charity.

(29) Cf. supra p. 15, n. 8.

Mishna - Mas. Shekalim Chapter 6

MISHNAH 1. THERE WERE IN THE TEMPLE THIRTEEN CHESTS,¹ THIRTEEN TABLES AND THIRTEEN PROSTRATIONS. [MEMBERS] OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF RABBAN GAMALIEL AND OF R. HANANIAH THE CHIEF OF THE PRIESTS, USED TO PROSTRATE THEMSELVES FOURTEEN [TIMES]. AND WHERE WAS THE ADDITIONAL [PROSTRATION]? IN FRONT OF THE STORE OF WOOD² , FOR THUS THEY HAD A TRADITION FROM THEIR FOREFATHERS THAT THE ARK WAS HIDDEN THERE.³

MISHNAH 2. ONCE IT HAPPENED THAT A CERTAIN PRIEST WHO WAS BUSY⁴ [THERE] NOTICED THAT THE PAVEMENT WAS DIFFERENT [THERE] FROM THE OTHERS. HE WENT AND TOLD [IT] TO HIS FELLOW, BUT BEFORE HE HAD TIME TO FINISH HIS WORDS HIS SOUL DEPARTED. THEN IT BECAME KNOWN OF A SURETY THAT THE ARK WAS HIDDEN THERE.

MISHNAH 3. BUT WHERE DID THEY MAKE THE PROSTRATIONS? FOUR [TIMES] IN THE NORTH, FOUR [TIMES] IN THE SOUTH, THREE [TIMES] IN THE EAST, AND TWICE IN THE WEST, IN FRONT OF THE THIRTEEN GATES. THE SOUTHERN GATES CLOSE TO THE WEST⁵ [SIDE WERE]: THE UPPER GATE,⁶ THE GATE OF THE FUEL,⁷ THE GATE OF THE FIRSTBORN [ANIMALS],⁸ AND THE WATER GATE. WHEREFORE WAS ITS NAME CALLED THE WATER GATE? BECAUSE THROUGH IT WAS BROUGHT IN THE FLASK OF WATER FOR THE LIBATION ON THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES.⁹ R. ELIEZER THE SON OF JACOB SAYS: THROUGH IT THE WATERS TRICKLED FORTH¹⁰ AND IN THE HEREAFTER THEY WILL ISSUE OUT FROM UNDER THE THRESHOLD OF THE HOUSE.¹⁰ OVER AGAINST THEM¹¹ IN THE NORTH CLOSE TO THE WEST WERE:¹² THE GATE OF JECHONIAH, THE GATE OF THE OFFERINGS¹³ THE GATE OF THE WOMEN,¹⁴ AND THE GATE OF SONG.¹⁵ AND WHEREFORE WAS ITS NAME CALLED THE GATE OF JECHONIAH? BECAUSE THROUGH IT JECHONIAH WENT FORTH INTO HIS CAPTIVITY.¹⁶ IN THE EAST WAS THE GATE OF NICANOR,¹⁷ AND IT HAD TWO WICKETS,¹⁸ ONE TO THE RIGHT AND ONE TO THE LEFT. THERE WERE ALSO TWO GATES IN THE WEST WHICH [HOWEVER] HAD NO NAME.¹⁹

MISHNAH 4. THERE WERE THIRTEEN TABLES IN THE TEMPLE, EIGHT OF MARBLE IN THE PLACE OF SLAUGHTERING ON WHICH THE ENTRAILS WERE RINSED, AND TWO TO THE WEST OF THE ASCENT²⁰ [TO THE ALTAR], ONE OF MARBLE AND ONE OF SILVER; ON THAT OF MARBLE WERE PLACED THE LIMBS²¹ [OF THE OFFERINGS], AND ON THAT OF SILVER THE VESSELS OF MINISTRATION. THERE WERE TWO TABLES IN THE PORCH²² WITHIN THE ENTRANCE OF THE HOUSE,²³ ONE OF MARBLE AND THE OTHER OF GOLD; ON THAT OF MARBLE²⁴ THE SHEWBREAD WAS PLACED WHEN IT WAS BROUGHT IN,²⁵ AND ON THAT OF GOLD [THE SHEWBREAD WAS PLACED] WHEN IT WAS TAKEN OUT,²⁶ BECAUSE THINGS SACRED MAY BE RAISED [IN HONOUR] BUT NOT LOWERED.²⁷ AND WITHIN THERE WAS ONE [TABLE] OF GOLD ON WHICH THE SHEWBREAD LAY CONTINUALLY.²⁸

MISHNAH 5. THERE WERE THIRTEEN CHESTS²⁹ IN THE TEMPLE AND ON THEM WAS INSCRIBED [RESPECTIVELY] 'NEW SHEKELS',³⁰ 'OLD SHEKELS',³⁰ 'BIRD-OFFERINGS', 'YOUNG PIGEONS FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS', 'WOOD', 'FRANKINCENSE', 'GOLD FOR THE MERCY-SEAT',³¹ AND ON SIX [WAS INSCRIBED] 'FOR FREEWILL-OFFERINGS'. 'NEW SHEKELS' — THOSE FOR EACH YEAR; 'OLD SHEKELS' — WHOSOEVER HAS NOT PAID HIS SHEKEL IN THE PAST YEAR MAY PAY IT IN THE COMING YEAR; 'BIRD-OFFERINGS' — THESE ARE TURTLE-DOVES; 'YOUNG PIGEONS FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS' — THESE ARE YOUNG PIGEONS. BOTH [THESE TWO CHESTS] ARE FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS; THUS R. JUDAH. BUT THE SAGES SAY: [OF THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'BIRD-OFFERINGS' ONE [HALF] IS FOR SIN-OFFERINGS AND THE OTHER [HALF] FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS,³² BUT [OF THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'YOUNG PIGEONS FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS' ALL GOES TO BURNT-OFFERINGS.³³

MISHNAH 6. IF A MAN SAYS: 'LO,³⁴ UPON ME [BE THE DUTY OF OFFERING] WOOD', HE MAY NOT OFFER LESS THAN TWO LOGS; [IF HE SAYS: 'LO, UPON ME BE THE DUTY OF OFFERING] FRANKINCENSE', HE MAY NOT OFFER LESS THAN A HANDFUL [THEREOF]; [IF HE SAYS: 'LO, UPON ME BE THE DUTY OF OFFERING] GOLD', HE MAY NOT OFFER LESS THAN A GOLD DENAR.

‘ON SIX [WAS INSCRIBED] "FOR FREEWILL-OFFERINGS" — WHAT WAS DONE WITH THE FREEWILL-OFFERINGS? THEY BOUGHT WITH THEM BURNT-OFFERINGS, THE FLESH [OF WHICH] WAS FOR THE DIVINE AND THE HIDES FOR THE PRIESTS. THE FOLLOWING IS THE EXPOSITION WHICH WAS EXPOUNDED BY JEHOIDA THE HIGH PRIEST: IT IS A GUILT-OFFERING; HE IS CERTAINLY GUILTY BEFORE THE LORD³⁵ — THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WITH WHAT IS [LEFT OVER OF MONEY] OFFERED FOR A SIN-OFFERING OR A GUILT-OFFERING BURNT-OFFERINGS SHOULD BE BOUGHT, [OF WHICH] THE FLESH GOES TO THE DIVINE AND THE HIDES TO THE PRIESTS. THUS THE TWO STATEMENTS OF SCRIPTURE ARE FULFILLED: HE IS CERTAINLY GUILTY UNTO THE LORD³⁶ AND IT IS A GUILT-OFFERING UNTO THE PRIESTS.³⁷ AND SO IT SAYS AGAIN:³⁸ THE MONEY³⁹ FOR THE GUILT OFFERINGS AND THE MONEY FOR THE SIN-OFFERINGS WAS NOT BROUGHT INTO THE HOUSE⁴⁰ OF THE LORD; IT WAS THE PRIESTS’.⁴¹

(1) Cf. supra p. 5, n. 4.

(2) V. Mid. II, 5.

(3) According to one tradition, by King Josiah before the destruction of the First Temple, v. Yoma 53b.

(4) He was engaged in picking the sound wood from the mouldy wood, as mouldy wood was unfit for the altar, Mid. ibid. Cf. also Yoma 54a.

(5) I.e., in the direction from west to east; cf. Mid. II, 6.

(6) [The western-most gate, so called on account of its elevated position, as the Temple court was situated on an incline rising from east to west. V. Hollis F. J., The Archeology of Herod's Temple p. 297.]

(7) Through it the wood for the altar was brought in.

(8) Through it the firstlings were led in preparatory to sacrifice.

(9) Cf. Suk. IV, 9.

(10) Cf. Ezek. XLVII, 2. 1.

(11) I.e., exactly opposite them.

(12) V. p. 22, n. 5.

(13) Through it the Most Holy sacrifices were brought in.

(14) Women entered here to attend to their offerings.

(15) Through it were brought in the musical instruments.

(16) Cf. II Kings XXIV, 12ff.

(17) Named after a man who fetched its doors from Egypt; cf. Yoma 38a.

(18) [These probably gave access to the chambers situated on the north and south respectively of the Gate of Nicanor; cf. Mid. I, 4, v. Hollis op. cit. p. 302.]

(19) [V. Tosaf. Yom Tob a.l. and Hollis pp. 139-53 where the question why these two gates were not named is discussed.]

(20) The inclined plane by which the priests went up to the altar (cf. Ex. XX, 26). V. Mid. III, 3.

(21) To keep them fresh.

(22) Ulam, the hall leading to the interior of the Temple.

(23) The Temple proper.

(24) To keep them fresh.

(25) Waiting to be laid on the table of gold, cf. Ex. XXV, 30; Lev. XXIV, 6.

(26) On the Sabbath, to make room for the new Shewbread (Lev. ibid. 8; Men. XI, 8), and before it was distributed among the priests.

(27) Hence having rested for a week on a table of gold, the Shewbread could not now be laid again on any but another table of gold; cf. Men. VI, 7.

(28) Ex. XXV, 30.

(29) Which served as receptacles of money for the purposes denoted by the various inscriptions on them.

(30) These are couched in Aramaic.

(31) לכפרת , viz., for the Holy of Holies (Maimonides), as there was no Mercy-seat in the Second Temple. Others suggest the reading לכפורות , for basins; cf. Ezra I, 10; I Chron. XXVIII, 17.

(32) Therefore a man who was obliged to offer bird-offerings (which had to consist of a pair, one a sin-offering and the other a burnt-offering; cf. supra p. 3, n. 7) could throw money into this chest, and thereby discharge his obligation, since the offerings bought with the money of this chest would be in accordance with his requirements.

(33) Therefore only freewill-offerings could be thrown into this chest, but not obligatory offerings.

(34) Cf. Men. XIII, 3.

(35) Lev. V, 19. The phrase 'It is a guilt-offering' implies that it is like any other guilt-offering of which the priests had a share, in accordance with Lev. VII, 6; on the other hand, the following phrase 'He is certainly guilty unto the Lord' implies that the whole is offered unto the Lord and is consumed by the altar, without leaving a share to the priests, thus contradicting the previous phrase. This contradiction is overcome by assigning the surplus of money offered for a sin-offering or a guilt-offering to the purchase of burnt-offerings, of which part goes to the altar, the flesh, and part to the priests, the hides.

(36) Viz., the flesh of the offering brought from the surplus of the money intended for a guilt-offering.

(37) The priests take the hides.

(38) II Kings XII, 17.

(39) Viz., the surplus of money originally intended for a guilt-offering or for a sin-offering.

(40) This is interpreted as meaning 'for the Repair of the House of the Lord', cf. the preceding verses of the chapter.

(41) This is interpreted to mean: It should be devoted to a sacrifice, of which the priests enjoy a share — the hides.

Mishna - Mas. Shekalim Chapter 7

MISHNAH 1. IF MONEY WAS FOUND BETWEEN THE [CHEST INSCRIBED] 'SHEKELS'¹ AND THE [CHESTS INSCRIBED] 'FOR FREEWILL-OFFERINGS, AND IT WAS NEARER² TO [THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'SHEKELS', IT GOES TO THE SHEKELS; [IF NEARER TO THE CHESTS INSCRIBED] 'FOR FREEWILL-OFFERINGS', IT GOES TO FREEWILL-OFFERINGS; IF MIDWAY, IT GOES TO FREEWILL-OFFERINGS.³ [IF MONEY WAS FOUND] BETWEEN [THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'WOOD' AND [THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'FRANKINCENSE' AND IT WAS NEARER TO [THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'WOOD', IT GOES TO THE WOOD; [IF NEARER TO THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'FRANKINCENSE', IT GOES TO FRANKINCENSE; IF MIDWAY, IT GOES TO FRANKINCENSE.⁴ [IF IT WAS FOUND] BETWEEN [THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'BIRD-OFFERINGS' AND [THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'YOUNG PIGEONS FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS' AND IT WAS NEARER TO [THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'BIRD-OFFERINGS' IT GOES TO BIRD-OFFERINGS; [IF NEARER TO THE CHEST INSCRIBED] 'YOUNG PIGEONS FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS', IT GOES TO YOUNG PIGEONS FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS; IF MIDWAY, IT GOES TO YOUNG PIGEONS FOR BURNT-OFFERINGS.⁵ [IF IT WAS FOUND] BETWEEN COMMON [MONEY] AND [SECOND] TITHES [MONEY]⁶ AND IT WAS NEARER TO THE COMMON [MONEY], IT IS CONSIDERED COMMON [MONEY]; IF NEARER TO THE [SECOND] TITHES [MONEY], IT IS CONSIDERED [SECOND] TITHES [MONEY]; IF MIDWAY, IT IS CONSIDERED [SECOND] TITHES [MONEY]. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: SUCH MONEY IS ASSIGNED TO THAT WHICH IS NEARER TO IT, EVEN IF IT IS THEREBY MADE LESS IMPORTANT; BUT IF MIDWAY, IT IS ASSIGNED TO THAT WHICH IS THE MORE IMPORTANT.⁷

MISHNAH 2. IF MONEY WAS FOUND⁸ IN FRONT OF CATTLE DEALERS AT ANY TIME OF THE YEAR IT IS DEEMED TO BE [SECOND] TITHES [MONEY];⁹ [IF IT WAS FOUND] IN THE TEMPLE MOUNT IT IS DEEMED TO BE COMMON MONEY;¹⁰ [RUT IF IT WAS FOUND] IN JERUSALEM¹¹ DURING THE SEASON OF FESTIVALS¹² IT IS DEEMED TO BE [SECOND] TITHES [MONEY]. BUT ALL THE REST OF THE YEAR IT IS DEEMED TO BE COMMON [MONEY].¹³

MISHNAH 3. IF FLESH WAS FOUND IN THE TEMPLE COURT [AND IT WAS CUT UP IN]

LIMBS,¹⁴ [IT MUST BE TREATED AS BELONGING TO] BURNT-OFFERINGS; [BUT IF CUT UP IN ORDINARY] PIECES [IT MUST BE TREATED AS BELONGING TO] SIN-OFFERINGS.¹⁵ [IF FLESH WAS FOUND] IN JERUSALEM¹⁶ [IT MUST BE TREATED AS BELONGING TO] PEACE-OFFERINGS.¹⁷ IN EITHER CASE¹⁸ IT MUST BE LEFT TO BECOME DISFIGURED¹⁹ AND MUST THEN BE TAKEN AWAY TO THE PLACE OF BURNING. IF FOUND WITHIN THE BORDERS²⁰ [AND IT WAS CUT UP IN] LIMBS, [IT MUST BE TREATED AS] CARRION;²¹ [BUT IF CUT UP IN ORDINARY] PIECES, IT IS FIT FOR [FOOD].²² BUT [IF FOUND] DURING THE SEASON OF FESTIVALS, WHEN FLESH IS ABUNDANT,²³ IT IS FIT FOR [FOOD] EVEN WHEN CUT UP IN LIMBS.

MISHNAH 4. IF CATTLE WAS FOUND IN JERUSALEM AS FAR AS MIGDAL EDER,²⁴ AND WITHIN A LIKE DISTANCE ON ANY SIDE [OF JERUSALEM], MALES [MUST BE CONSIDERED AS BEING] BURNT-OFFERINGS, BUT FEMALES MUST BE CONSIDERED AS] PEACE-OFFERINGS.²⁵ R. JUDAH SAYS: IF THEY WERE FIT FOR THE PASSOVER-OFFERING,²⁶ [THEY MUST BE CONSIDERED AS] PASSOVER-OFFERINGS [WHEN FOUND] WITHIN THIRTY DAYS BEFORE THE FEAST [OF PASSOVER].²⁷

MISHNAH 5. AFORETIME THEY USED TO DISTRAIN²⁸ ANY ONE WHO HAD FOUND SUCH A [STRAY] ANIMAL, UNLESS HE ALSO OFFERED THE DRINK-OFFERINGS THEREOF. THEN MEN WOULD LEAVE THE ANIMAL AND RUN AWAY; SO THE COURT ORDAINED THAT THE DRINK-OFFERINGS THEREOF SHOULD BE OFFERED OUT OF PUBLIC FUNDS.

MISHNAH 6. R. SIMEON SAID: SEVEN THINGS THE COURT ORDAINED AND THAT WAS ONE OF THEM. [THE OTHERS WERE THE FOLLOWING:] IF A HEATHEN SENT A BURNT-OFFERING FROM THE LANDS BEYOND THE SEA AND WITH IT HE SENT THE DRINK-OFFERINGS²⁹ THEREOF, THEY ARE OFFERED OUT OF HIS OWN MEANS; BUT IF [HE DID] NOT [SEND THE DRINK-OFFERINGS THEREOF], THEY SHOULD BE OFFERED OUT OF PUBLIC FUNDS.³⁰ THUS [ALSO IN THE CASE OF] A PROSELYTE³¹ WHO HAD DIED AND LEFT SACRIFICES [TO BE OFFERED], THEN IF HE HAD ALSO LEFT THE DRINK-OFFERINGS THEREOF THEY ARE OFFERED OUT OF HIS OWN; BUT IF NOT, THEY SHOULD BE OFFERED OUT OF PUBLIC FUNDS.³⁰ IT WAS ALSO A CONDITION LAID DOWN BY THE COURT IN THE CASE OF A HIGH PRIEST WHO HAD DIED³² THAT HIS MEAL-OFFERINGS³³ SHOULD BE OFFERED OUT OF PUBLIC FUNDS.³⁰ R. JUDAH SAYS: [IT WAS OFFERED OUT] OF THE PROPERTY OF HIS HEIRS, AND HAD TO BE OFFERED OF THE WHOLE³⁴ [TENTH].

MISHNAH 7. [THEY FURTHER ORDAINED] CONCERNING THE SALT AND THE WOOD³⁵ THAT THE PRIESTS SHOULD MAKE USE THEREOF;³⁶ AND CONCERNING THE [RED] COW³⁷ THAT THE USE OF ITS ASHES SHOULD NOT INVOLVE THE GUILT OF SACRILEGE;³⁸ AND CONCERNING BIRD-OFFERINGS³⁹ WHICH HAD BECOME UNFIT [FOR SACRIFICE], THAT [OTHERS] SHOULD BE OFFERED [IN THEIR STEAD] OUT OF PUBLIC FUNDS. R. JOSE SAYS: [THE DEALER] WHO SUPPLIED THE BIRD-OFFERINGS WAS BOUND TO SUPPLY [AT HIS COST ALSO THOSE WHICH HAD TO BE OFFERED IN THE STEAD OF] THOSE WHICH HAD BECOME UNFIT.⁴⁰

(1) Cf. supra VI, 5 (p. 24).

(2) The presumption is that the money fell out of the chest nearest to it. This is deduced from Deut. XXI, 3; v. B.B. 23a.

(3) According to the rule laid down below, when the probabilities are evenly balanced, the money should be assigned to the holier of the two, which in this case is the chest of freewill-offerings, since its contents were spent entirely on burnt-offerings for the altar (supra VI, 6), whereas the contents of the chest of shekels were spent also on such less holy objects as the needs of the city of Jerusalem (supra IV, 2).

- (4) Because frankincense, which was an offering for the altar, was holier than the wood which merely served as fuel for the altar.
- (5) Which is the holier of the two, since one of the pair of bird-offerings was a sin-offering (cf. supra p. 3, n. 7), the flesh of which was eaten by the priests (Lev. VI, 19), whereas the burnt-offerings were all consumed by the fire of the altar.
- (6) Cf. supra p. 6, n. 5.
- (7) I.e., that which is holier.
- (8) In Jerusalem.
- (9) The presumption is that the money was lost by people who came to buy cattle for peace-offerings with their own second tithes money, or with the second tithes money left to them by their pilgrim friends when they returned home after the Festival. Here again the rule is followed that in case of doubt the money is to be assigned to the more hallowed object of the two.
- (10) Even during the Festival season. Though most of the money at the time is of second tithe, we assume that the money was lost before the Festival when common money is in ordinary circulation, v. n. 8.
- (11) Not in front of the cattle dealers.
- (12) When the city is full of pilgrims bringing second tithes money.
- (13) Because the streets of Jerusalem (as distinct from the Temple Mount, cf. n. 5) were swept daily, so that any second tithe money brought by the pilgrims would have been swept away. v. B.M. 26a.]
- (14) As prescribed for burnt-offerings in Tam. IV, 2 f.
- (15) Which were so cut up and divided among the priests.
- (16) Outside the Temple Court.
- (17) For these were the most frequent of the Lesser Holy offerings (קדשים קלים) which could be eaten in the Holy City outside the Temple Court; cf. Zeb. V, 7.
- (18) Whether found in the Temple Court or in the city. It cannot be eaten because it may have suffered some defilement.
- (19) It must be left untouched until the third day when such sacrificial flesh becomes 'Remnant' (נותר), and must be burnt, Lev. VII. 17. Cf. also Pes. VII, 9). It cannot, however, be burnt immediately when found, since it may never have suffered any defilement, and it is forbidden to burn sacrificial flesh which is still fit to be eaten.
- (20) Of the Land of Israel, i.e., outside Jerusalem. It is of course assumed that the majority of the inhabitants are Jews.
- (21) For so it was customary to dismember animals unfit for food and leave them to the dogs to tear at them; cf. Deut. XIV, 21.
- (22) One would not take the cutting up an animal in small pieces for dogs.
- (23) And is cut up in limbs for the Festival.
- (24) Cf. Gen. XXXV, 21; Micah IV, 8. It is situated south of Jerusalem on the Hebron road.
- (25) The finder must offer them as such; cf. supra p. 15, n. 7. Most cattle in Jerusalem and the vicinity were intended for sacrifices.
- (26) A male of the sheep or of the goats and one year old; cf. Ex. XII, 5.
- (27) For during that period such animals were mostly intended for the Passover offering.
- (28) His goods to pay for the necessary drink-offerings and meal-offerings; cf. supra p. 19, n. 4.
- (29) Viz. money to pay for them. The drink-offering itself which came from abroad could not be used, because it was considered unclean.
- (30) Out of the Shekel appropriation cf. p. 12, n. 4.
- (31) But in the case of an Israelite his heirs must pay for the drink-offerings.
- (32) And a successor had not yet been appointed.
- (33) The daily meal-offering, morning and evening, prescribed in Lev. VI, 12-16.
- (34) Whether it happened to be the morning or the evening meal-offering, the tenth of an epha was not to be divided as prescribed in Lev. ibid. 13.
- (35) That belong to the Sanctuary.
- (36) In connection with their consumption of the flesh of sacrifices.
- (37) Cf. Num. XIX, 1ff.
- (38) Cf. Lev. V, 14-16.
- (39) Bought by the Temple out of the money placed in the chest for bird-offerings by those on whom such an offering was an obligation; cf. supra p. 24, n. 9.
- (40) Just as the dealer had to make good other similar losses; cf. supra IV, 9.

Mishna - Mas. Shekalim Chapter 8

MISHNAH 1. ANY SPITTLE FOUND IN JERUSALEM¹ IS CLEAN² EXCEPT THAT WHICH IS [FOUND] IN THE UPPER MARKET;³ THUS R. MEIR. R. JOSE SAYS: AT OTHER TIMES OF THE YEAR⁴ [SPITTLE FOUND] IN THE MIDDLE⁵ [OF THE ROAD] IS UNCLEAN, WHILE [SPITTLE FOUND] AT THE SIDES⁶ [OF THE ROAD] IS CLEAN; BUT IN THE SEASON OF FESTIVALS⁷ [SPITTLE FOUND] IN THE MIDDLE [OF THE ROAD] IS CLEAN,⁸ WHILE [THAT WHICH IS FOUND] AT THE SIDES [OF THE ROAD] IS UNCLEAN; FOR SINCE [PERSONS WHO HAVE AN ISSUE] ARE FEW IN NUMBER, THEY BETAKE THEMSELVES [IN THE SEASON OF FESTIVALS] TO THE SIDES OF THE ROAD.⁹

MISHNAH 2. ALL VESSELS FOUND IN JERUSALEM¹⁰ IN THE WAY OF GOING DOWN TO THE PLACE OF IMMERSION¹¹ ARE UNCLEAN, [BUT THOSE FOUND] IN THE WAY OF GOING UP [FROM THE PLACE OF IMMERSION] ARE CLEAN; FOR THEY ARE NOT IN THE SAME CONDITION WHEN ON THE WAY GOING DOWN¹² [TO THE PLACE OF IMMERSION] AS ON THE WAY GOING UP¹³ [THEREFROM]; THUS R. MEIR. R. JOSE SAYS: THEY ARE ALL CLEAN,¹⁴ EXCEPT THE BASKET AND THE SHOVEL AND THE BONE CRUSHER¹⁵ WHICH ARE SPECIALLY CONNECTED WITH [WORK IN] BURIAL-PLACES.

MISHNAH 3. IF A [SLAUGHTERING] KNIFE WAS FOUND ON THE FOURTEENTH¹⁶ [OF NISAN] IT MAY BE USED FORTHWITH FOR SLAUGHTERING.¹⁷ [IF IT WAS FOUND] ON THE THIRTEENTH [OF NISAN] IT MUST BE IMMersed AGAIN¹⁸ [BEFORE USE]. BUT A CHOPPER,¹⁹ WHETHER [FOUND] ON THE FOURTEENTH OR ON THE THIRTEENTH, MUST BE IMMersed AGAIN [BEFORE USE]. IF THE FOURTEENTH FELL ON A SABBATH IT²⁰ MAY BE USED FOR SLAUGHTERING FORTH WITH;²¹ [IF FOUND] ON THE FIFTEENTH²² IT MAY ALSO BE USED FOR SLAUGHTERING FORTHWITH. IF [THE CHOPPER] WAS FOUND TIED TO A [SLAUGHTERING] KNIFE IT MAY BE TREATED AS THE KNIFE.²³

MISHNAH 4. IF THE VEIL²⁴ WAS DEFILED BY A DERIVED UNCLEANNESS,²⁵ IT IS IMMersed WITHIN²⁶ [THE PRECINCTS OF THE TEMPLE] AND BROUGHT IN AGAIN FORTHWITH; BUT IF IT WAS DEFILED BY A PRINCIPAL UNCLEANNESS,²⁵ IT MUST BE IMMersed OUTSIDE AND SPREAD OUT IN THE HEL.²⁷ IF IT WAS NEW IT WAS SPREAD OUT ON THE ROOF OF THE COLONNADE,²⁸ SO THAT THE PEOPLE MIGHT BEHOLD ITS FAIR WORKMANSHIP.

MISHNAH 5. RABBAN SIMEON THE SON OF GAMALIEL SAYS IN THE NAME OF R. SIMEON THE SON OF THE CHIEF [OF THE PRIESTS]:²⁹ THE VEIL WAS A HAND BREADTH IN THICKNESS AND WAS WOVEN ON SEVENTY-FOUR CORDS, EACH CORD MADE UP OF TWENTY-TWO THREADS. IT WAS FORTY CUBITS LONG AND TWENTY CUBITS BROAD, AND WAS MADE UP OF EIGHTY-TWO TIMES TEN THOUSAND.³⁰ TWO VEILS WERE MADE EVERY YEAR, AND THREE HUNDRED PRIESTS WERE NEEDED TO IMMERE IT.³¹

MISHNAH 6. IF FLESH OF THE MOST HOLY OFFERINGS WAS DEFILED, WHETHER BY A PRINCIPAL UNCLEANNESS³² OR BY A DERIVED UNCLEANNESS,³² WHETHER INSIDE OR OUTSIDE [THE PRECINCTS OF THE TEMPLE]. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IT MUST ALL BE BURNT WITHIN,³³ EXCEPT WHEN DEFILED OUTSIDE BY A PRINCIPAL UNCLEANNESS. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: IT MUST ALL BE BURNT OUTSIDE, EXCEPT THAT WHICH WAS DEFILED BY A DERIVED UNCLEANNESS WITHIN.

MISHNAH 7. R. ELIEZER SAYS: [FLESH³⁴ WHICH WAS DEFILED BY AN UNCLEANNESS, WHETHER INSIDE OR OUTSIDE [THE TEMPLE PRECINCTS], MUST BE BURNT WITHIN. R. AKIBA SAYS: WHERE IT WAS DEFIED THERE [ALSO] MUST IT BE BURNT.³⁵

MISHNAH 8. THE LIMBS OF THE DAILY³⁶ BURNT-OFFERING WERE PLACED ON THE HALF OF THE ASCENT³⁷ [TO THE ALTAR] DOWNWARDS ON THE WEST³⁸ SIDE, THOSE OF THE ADDITIONAL.³⁹ BURNT-OFFERING WERE PLACED ON THE HALF OF THE ASCENT DOWNWARDS ON THE EAST SIDE,⁴⁰ WHILE THOSE OF THE NEW MOON⁴¹ OFFERINGS WERE PLACED UNDER THE RIM⁴² OF THE ALTAR DOWNWARDS.

[THE LAWS OF] THE SHEKELS AND OF THE FIRST-FRUIT⁴³ HAVE FORCE ONLY DURING THE TIME OF THE EXISTENCE OF THE TEMPLE, BUT [THE LAWS OF] THE TITHE OF CORN⁴⁴ AND OF THE TITHE OF CATTLE⁴⁵ AND OF THE FIRSTBORN⁴⁶ ARE IN FORCE BOTH DURING THE TIME OF THE EXISTENCE OF THE TEMPLE AND WHEN THERE IS NO TEMPLE IN EXISTENCE. IF A MAN DEDICATED TO THE SANCTUARY SHEKELS AND FIRST-FRUIT WHEN THERE WAS NO TEMPLE IN EXISTENCE, THEY BECOME HOLY. R. SIMEON SAYS: IF HE SAID: 'THE FIRST-FRUIT BE HOLY,'⁴⁷ THEY ARE NOT HOLY.⁴⁸

(1) Where people were usually scrupulous in matters of purity. But outside Jerusalem, where people were not so scrupulous, all spittle found anywhere was declared by a preventive enactment of the Rabbis to be suspect of defilement: cf. Toh. IV, 5.

(2) It need not be suspected of being the spittle of a person who had an issue (cf. Lev. XV, 8), since persons with an issue formed an insignificant minority of the population of Jerusalem.

(3) This was frequented by heathen launderers and also by Jewish persons with an issue.

(4) When persons with a defilement were numerous.

(5) This was crowded by pedestrians.

(6) These were frequented by persons who were scrupulous about their purity and who shunned contact with the crowds in the middle of the road.

(7) When all who had a defilement sought to recover their purity, in order to be able to worship in the Temple.

(8) The crowd walking in the middle of the road may then be presumed to consist of people who had become free of defilement.

(9) So as not to cause a defilement to worshippers and pilgrims walking in the middle of the road.

(10) Outside Jerusalem all articles found anywhere were declared by a preventive enactment of the Rabbis to be suspect of defilement; cf. Toh. IV, 5; and supra n. 1.

(11) To be immersed for the purpose of purification; cf. Lev. XI, 32; XV, 17.

(12) When found on the way down they may be presumed to have been unclean vessels lost before immersion.

(13) When found on the way up they may be presumed to have been lost after immersion. So according to Maimonides. According to Rashi (Pes. 19b) the passage should be rendered as follows: 'For their way of going down (to the place of immersion) is not the same as their way of going up (therefrom),' i.e. things going down to immersion and things going up from immersion went by different routes.

(14) No suspicion need be entertained as to the purity of articles found in Jerusalem.

(15) (מריצה), from the root (רצי), an instrument for reducing the size of bones in order to get them into the basket for removal to the grave. So Maimonides. Others, after the T.J., a.l., explain it as some sort of conveyance or hand cart, from the root (רוי).

(16) The day of slaughtering of the Passover-offering; Ex. XII, 6.

(17) It may be presumed to have been purified for the slaughtering of the Passover-offering.

(18) Even though it may be presumed to have been immersed before by its previous owner. According to Maimonides it refers to the second sprinkling with the Ashes of Purification as prescribed in Num. XIX, 18-19, assuming that the previous owner had it sprinkled only once.

- (19) GR. , a large knife which can be used for slaughtering but is primarily designed for breaking bones, consequently it could not have been intended for use with the Passover-offering, of which no bones must be broken; cf Ex. XII, 46; Num. IX, 12. The probability, therefore, is that it had not been purified.
- (20) The chopper.
- (21) For as it is not permitted to purify vessels on the Sabbath, even a chopper may be presumed to have been purified before the fourteenth of Nisan.
- (22) The Festival day, on which purification was not permitted, so it must be presumed to have been purified before the Festival.
- (23) It may be used for slaughtering straightway, even if found on the fourteenth and not on a Sabbath.
- (24) Of the Temple, Ex. XXVI, 13ff.
- (25) Such as an unclean liquid; cf. 'Ed., Sonc. ed. p. 9 nn. 3, 4.
- (26) In the 'Sea of Solomon'; cf. I Kings VII, 23ff.
- (27) Or 'The Rampart', in the space between the Temple Court and the 'Soreg', or latticed fortifications; cf. Mid. II, 3. Some texts add: 'Because it needs (to wait for) the setting of the sun', before it can recover its purity; cf. Lev. XI, 3.
- (28) On the Temple Mount. From the Hel it could not be seen so well.
- (29) V. supra p. 14, n. 3.
- (30) Threads, or according to others, denars in value. Another reading is (רִיבוֹת) 'damsels', instead of (רִיבּוֹא) 'ten thousand'; i.e., it was woven by eighty-two young damsels.
- (31) When new and before being hung up; cf. Hag. III, 2. The comment of T.J. a.l. on these figures is: 'An exaggeration!' So Maimonides.
- (32) V. p. 34, n. 5.
- (33) Within the Temple Court in the place of Ashes (בֵּית הַדֶּשֶׁן), where the ashes of the altar were deposited; cf. Zeb. V, 2.
- (34) Of Most Holy offerings. No other defiled flesh was permitted to be burnt within the Temple Court.
- (35) Irrespective of the character if the source of defilement.
- (36) Cf. Num. XXVIII, 1-8. The limbs of the daily burnt-offering were not taken up to the altar direct but were first deposited on the ascent by one party of priests, selected by lot, and then another lot was cast for a second party to take them up from the ascent to the top of the altar; v. Yoma 25a and 26a.
- (37) Cf. supra p. 23, n. 13.
- (38) Some texts read 'on the east'.
- (39) For the Sabbath and Festivals; cf. Num. ibid. 9-10, 16ff.
- (40) Some texts read 'on the west'.
- (41) Num. ibid. 11-15.
- (42) Cf. Ex. XXVII, 5. [The reference is not to the rim itself but to a line on the ascent in direct level with the rim, Var. lec. On the rim of the altar above. The 'rim' in this case does not denote the one running about the middle of the altar, but the space on the top of the altar on its four sides for the treading of the priests' feet, v. Mid. III, 1.]

The reference is to present days when there is no Temple in existence, and when the words, 'thou shalt bring them to the house of the Lord' (Ex. XXIII, 19) do not apply, Bertinoro.]

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. THE MEGILLAH¹ IS READ ON THE ELEVENTH, THE TWELFTH, THE THIRTEENTH, THE FOURTEENTH, AND THE FIFTEENTH [OF ADAR], NEVER EARLIER AND NEVER LATER.² CITIES³ WHICH HAVE BEEN WALLED SINCE THE DAYS OF JOSHUA SON OF NUN⁴ READ ON THE FIFTEENTH; VILLAGES AND LARGE TOWNS⁵ READ ON THE FOURTEENTH. THE VILLAGES, HOWEVER, MAY [SOMETIMES] PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY.⁶ HOW DOES THIS WORK OUT? IF [THE FOURTEENTH OF ADAR] FALLS ON MONDAY,⁷ THE VILLAGES AND LARGE TOWNS READ ON THAT DAY AND THE WALLED PLACES ON THE NEXT DAY: IF IT FALLS ON TUESDAY OR ON WEDNESDAY, THE VILLAGES PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY,⁸ THE LARGE TOWNS READ ON THE DAY ITSELF, AND THE WALLED PLACES ON THE NEXT DAY. IF [THE FOURTEENTH FALLS] ON THURSDAY, THE VILLAGES AND LARGE TOWNS READ ON THAT DAY AND THE WALLED PLACES ON THE NEXT DAY: IF IT FALLS ON FRIDAY, THE VILLAGES PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY⁹ AND THE LARGE TOWNS AND WALLED PLACES READ ON THE DAY ITSELF.¹⁰ IF IT FALLS ON SABBATH, THE VILLAGES AND LARGE TOWNS PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY.⁹ AND THE WALLED PLACES READ ON THE NEXT DAY.¹¹ IF IT FALLS ON SUNDAY, THE VILLAGES PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY,⁹ THE LARGE TOWNS READ ON THE SAME DAY, AND THE WALLED CITIES ON THE DAY FOLLOWING.

GEMARA. THE MEGILLAH IS READ ON THE ELEVENTH. Whence is this derived? — [How can you ask,] ‘Whence is this derived’? Surely it is as we state further on,¹² ‘The Sages made a concession to the villages, allowing them to push the reading forward to the Court day, so that [they should have leisure to] supply food and water for their brethren in the large towns’? — What we mean [by our question] is this: Let us see now. All these dates were laid down by the Men of the Great Assembly.¹³ For if you should [deny this and affirm] that the Men of the Great Assembly laid down only the fourteenth and fifteenth, [is it possible that] the [later] Rabbis should have come and annulled a regulation made by the Men of the Great Assembly, seeing that we have learnt, ‘One Beth din cannot annul the ordinances of another unless it is superior to it in number¹⁴ and in wisdom’?¹⁵ Obviously, therefore, all these days must have been laid down by the Men of the Great Assembly, [and we ask therefore], where are they hinted [in the Scripture]? — R. Shaman b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture says, To confirm these days of Purim in their times.¹⁶ [which indicates that] they laid down many ‘times’ for them. But this text is required for its literal meaning?¹⁷ — If that were all, Scripture could say simply ‘at the [appointed] time’. What then is implied by ‘their times’? A large number of ‘times’! But still I may say that [the expression ‘their times’] is required to indicate that the time of one is not the same as the time of the other?¹⁸ — In that case, Scripture should say [simply], ‘their time’. Why does it say ‘their times’? So that you may infer from this all of them. But cannot I say that ‘their times’ means ‘numerous times’?¹⁹ — The expression ‘their times’ is to be interpreted in the same way as we should interpret ‘their time’: just as ‘their time’ would indicate two [days], so ‘their times’ indicates two [in addition].²⁰ But why not make these the twelfth and thirteenth? — For the reason given [elsewhere] by R. Samuel b. Isaac, that the thirteenth is a time of assembly for all,²¹ and no special indication is required for it in the text; so we may say here that the thirteenth day is a time of assembly and no special indication is required for it in the text. But why not say that the sixteenth and seventeenth are meant? — It is written, and it shall not pass.²²

R. Samuel b. Nahmani, however, explained thus. Scripture says. As the days wherein the Jews had rest from their enemies.²³ [The expression] ‘the days’ [would have sufficed] and we have ‘as the days', to include the eleventh and the twelfth. But cannot I say rather the twelfth and thirteenth? — R. Samuel b. Isaac said: The thirteenth is a time of assembly for all, and does not require special indication. But cannot I say the sixteenth and the seventeenth? — It is written, 'and it shall not pass'.

Why did R. Samuel b. Nahmani not derive the rule from the expression 'in their times'? — He does not accept the distinction [made above between] 'time', 'their time' and 'their times'. And why did R. Shaman b. Abba not derive the rule from the expression 'as the days'? — He can say to you: This is meant to make the rule apply to future generations.

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: This [rule stated in the Mishnah] is the ruling of R. Akiba the anonymous authority,²⁴ who draws the distinction between 'time', 'their time' and 'their times', but according to the Sages the Megillah is to be read only on the proper day.²⁵ The following was adduced in refutation of this: 'R. Judah said, When does this rule hold good? When the years are properly fixed²⁶ and Israel reside upon their own soil. But in these days, since people reckon from it,²⁷ the Megillah is to be read only on the proper day'. Now which authority is R. Judah here following? Shall I say, R. Akiba? This cannot be, because [according to him] the regulation²⁸ is in force in these days also. It must be then that he follows the Rabbis, and [even according to them] we read [on the other days] at any rate when the years are properly fixed and Israel reside on their own soil! Is not this a refutation of R. Johanan? — It is.

Some report as follows. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: This rule follows the ruling of R. Akiba the anonymous authority, but the Sages held that in these days, since people reckon from it, we read it only on the proper day. It has been taught to the same effect: 'R. Judah said: When does this rule hold good? When the years are properly fixed and Israel reside upon their own soil, but in these days, since people reckon from it, it is read only on the proper day.'²⁹

R. Ashi noted a contradiction between two statements of R. Judah

(1) Lit., 'scroll'. The scroll of the Book of Esther is meant (v. Introduction).

(2) Lit., 'neither less nor more'.

(3) כרכין (Sing. כרך). This word is generally applied to large centres of population with a more or less metropolitan character. In Mishnah Megillah, (cf. 19a), however, it seems to be used exclusively of walled towns, whatever their size.

(4) The Gemara infra discusses what is meant by this.

(5) כפרים ועירות גדולות. The expression 'villages and large towns' in the Mishnah here seems to be merely a periphrasis for 'other places', since, as appears from the Gemara, the distinction here is between places which were walled in the days of Joshua and places which were not. The epithet 'large' is added because the word עיר (or עירה) is also often used of a small place, hardly distinguishable from a village.

(6) Lit., 'the day of assembly', i.e. Monday or Thursday, when the Beth din sat in the towns, and the people came in from the villages. They were allowed to read the Megillah then because they were more likely to find someone who could read to them in the town than in their own village (Rashi). Another reason is also given in the Gemara infra.

(7) Lit., 'the second (day of the week)'. In the Talmud the days of the week are distinguished by the ordinal numbers.

(8) I.e., the previous Monday.

(9) I.e., the preceding Thursday.

(10) Reading on the Sabbath was prohibited, for fear the scroll might be carried from place to place. V. infra.

(11) On the Sunday.

(12) V. infra p. 116.

(13) Or 'synagogue'. A name given to Ezra and his Beth din and their successors, up to the time of Simon the Just. V. Aboth, Sonc. ed. p. 1, n. 5. According to the Talmud, the Book of Esther was composed by or under the direction of the Men of the Great Assembly.

(14) Of the members of the Beth din.

(15) Cf. M.K. 3b; Git. 36a.

(16) Esth. IX, 31. E.V. 'their appointed times'. The plural form 'times' is stressed.

- (17) Lit., 'for itself'; viz., the 14th and 15th mentioned in the text.
- (18) Viz., the time for the villages is not the same as that for the walled towns.
- (19) E.g., five or six.
- (20) To the fourteenth and fifteenth, viz., the eleventh and twelfth.
- (21) Rashi explains this to refer to the statement in the Scripture that on the thirteenth the Jews assembled and defended themselves. Asheri, however, points out that this has nothing to do with the reading of the Megillah, which was instituted to commemorate the resting, and he therefore prefers the explanation of R. Tam, that on the thirteenth the Jews assemble to observe the fast of Esther.
- (22) Ibid. 27. These words are interpreted to mean, 'the observance shall not pass beyond the fifteenth day'. E.V., and it shall not fail.
- (23) Ibid. 22.
- (24) So called because Rabbi in compiling the Mishnah usually followed R Akiba when he mentioned no authority.
- (25) Viz., the fourteenth and fifteenth of Adar.
- (26) I.e., when there is a Beth din which fixes new moons and leap years as occasion arises.
- (27) I.e. count thirty days from Purim to Passover, since the new moon of Nisan will not be promulgated by the Beth din
- (28) That the Megillah may be read on the eleventh, twelfth, or thirteenth.
- (29) And there is now no contradiction between R. Johanan and Rabbi Judah.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 2b

, and therefore attributed the statement in the Baraitha to R. Jose son of R. Judah. [He said]: Can R. Judah really have said that in these days, since people reckon from it, it is read only on the proper day? To this may be opposed the following:¹ R. Judah said, When [do they push forward the reading]? In places where the villagers go to town² on Monday and Thursday; but in places where they do not go to town on Monday and Thursday, it is read only on the proper day. But at any rate in places where they do go to town on Monday and Thursday it is read [on the earlier dates] even in these times'? He accordingly ascribed the statement in the Baraitha³ to R. Jose son of R. Judah. And because he finds a contradiction between two statements of R. Judah, is he entitled to ascribe the one in the Baraitha to R. Jose son of R. Judah? — R. Ashi had heard some report the statement in the name of R. Judah and some report it in the name of R. Jose son of R. Judah, and to avoid making R. Judah contradict himself he said that the one who ascribed the statement to R. Judah was not [reporting] accurately, while the one who ascribed it to R. Jose son of Judah was [reporting] accurately.

CITIES WHICH HAVE BEEN WALLED SINCE THE DAYS OF JOSHUA SON OF NUN READ ON THE FIFTEENTH. Whence is this ruling derived? — Raba replied: Because Scripture says, Therefore do the Jews of the villages that dwell in the unwalled towns,⁴ etc. Since the villages [are to read] on the fourteenth, the walled towns [must read] on the fifteenth. But why not say that the villages [should read] on the fourteenth, and those in walled towns not at all?⁵ — But are they not also Israelites? And moreover is it not written, From India into Ethiopia?⁶ But why not say that the villages [should read] on the fourteenth and those in walled towns on both the fourteenth and fifteenth, as it is written, that they should keep the fourteenth day of the month of Adar and the fifteenth day of the same yearly?⁷ — If the text had said, 'the fourteenth day and [we] the fifteenth', you would have been right. Now, however, that it is written 'the fourteenth day and [we-eth] the fifteenth — the eth⁸ comes and makes a distinction, so that the one set is on the fourteenth and the other set on the fifteenth. But why not say that the villages are on the fourteenth, and those surrounded [by a wall] can [celebrate] if they like on the fourteenth or if they like on the fifteenth? — The text says, in their seasons,⁹ the season of one is not the same as the season of the other. But why not say that they¹⁰ should celebrate on the thirteenth? — [They must do] as Susa [did].

We have accounted for the celebration [of Purim]; how do we know that the recital¹¹ [of the Megillah must be on these days]? — The text says, that these days should be remembered and kept;¹² ‘remembering’ is put on the same footing as ‘keeping’.

Our Mishnah does not take the same view as the following Tanna, as it has been taught: ‘R. Joshua b. Korha says: Cities which have been walled since the days of Ahasuerus read on the fifteenth’. What is the reason of R. Joshua b. Korha? — [They must be] like Susa: just as Susa has been walled since the days of Ahasuerus and reads on the fifteenth, so every city that has been walled since the days of Ahasuerus reads on the fifteenth. What then is the reason of our Tanna? — He draws an analogy between the two occurrences of the word perazi [villagers]. It is written here, Therefore the Jews of the villages [ha — perazim],¹³ and it is written in another place, beside the unwalled [ha — perazi] towns, a great many;¹⁴ just as there the reference is to towns which were [not] walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun, so here the reference is to towns which were [not] walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun.¹⁵

I can understand why R. Joshua b. Korha did not adopt the view of our Tanna; he does not accept the analogy of perazi and perazi.¹⁶ But why does not our Tanna accept the view of R. Joshua b. Korha? — [You ask] why does he not? Why, because he draws the analogy of perazi with perazi, of course! What the questioner meant was this: [On the view of our Tanna], whom did Susa follow?¹⁷ It followed neither the villages nor the walled towns!¹⁸ — Raba, or, as some say, Kadi,¹⁹ replied: Susa was an exception, because a miracle was performed in it.²⁰

We can understand according to the view of our Tanna why the text should say, city and city, town and town;²¹ ‘city and city’²² to make a distinction between those which were walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun and those which were walled in the days of Ahasuerus; ‘town and town’ likewise to distinguish between Susa and other towns.²³ But according to R. Joshua b. Korha, it is true we can account for ‘city and city’, as being intended to distinguish between Susa and other cities,²⁴ but what is the purpose of ‘town and town’? — R. Joshua b. Korha can answer: And can our Tanna explain the words satisfactorily? Since he draws the analogy between perazi and perazi,²⁵ why do we require the words ‘city and city’? The truth is that the text is inserted for a homiletical purpose, and to teach the rule laid down by R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi said: ‘A city²⁶ and all that adjoins it and all that is taken in by the eye with it is reckoned as city’.²⁷ Up to what distance? — R. Jeremiah, or you may also say R. Hiyya b. Abba, said: As far as from Hamthan²⁸ to Tiberias, which is a mil. Why not say [simply] a mil? — We learn from this what is the extent of a mil, namely, as far as from Hamthan to Tiberias.

R. Jeremiah — or you may also say R. Hiyya b. Abba — also said: The [alternative forms of the] letters M'N'Z'P'K²⁹ were prescribed³⁰ by the Watchmen.³¹ Do you really think so? Is it not written, These are the commandments,³² which implies that no prophet is at liberty to introduce anything new³³ henceforward? And further, R. Hisda has said: The Men and the Samek in the tablets

(1) Infra n. 4.

(2) Lit., ‘assemble’.

(3) The former of the statements quoted.

(4) Esth. IX, 19.

(5) Since no mention is made of walled towns in the context.

(6) These words occur in Esth. I, 1, and are used here loosely instead of the words in Esth. IX, 30. and he (Mordecai) sent letters to . . . the hundred and twenty — seven provinces of the kingdom of Ahasuerus.

(7) Ibid. 21.

(8) Eth is a sign of the accusative, and as its use is optional, it is usually interpreted as indicating something not specified in the text. The interpretation placed upon it here is rather unusual.

- (15) The word 'not' is not in the text of the original here, but is necessary for the sense. Rashi greatly simplifies the text by reading: 'Just as there (the villages were such) from the days of Joshua, so here, (the villages must have been such) from the days of Joshua'.
- (16) I.e., he had not learnt this particular gezerah shawah from his teacher, and therefore could not reply upon it.

- (23) Susa also having been an unwalled town till the time of Ahasuerus.
- (24) Rashi here reads, 'to distinguish between those which were walled from the days of Ahasuerus and those which were not yet walled in the days of Ahasuerus', and this seems to be required by the sense.

remained in place by a miracle.¹ — That is so; they were in use, but people did not know which form came in the middle of a word and which one at the end, and the Watchmen came and ordained that the open forms should be in the middle of a word and the closed forms at the end. But when all is said and done, [we have the text] 'these are the commandments', which implies that no prophet was destined ever to introduce an innovation hereafter?² — What we must say therefore is that they were forgotten³ and the Watchmen established them again.

R. Jeremiah — or some say R. Hiyya b. Abba — also said: The Targum⁴ of the Pentateuch was composed by Onkelos the proselyte under the guidance⁵ of R. Eleazar and R. Joshua.⁶ The Targum of the Prophets was composed by Jonathan ben Uzziel under the guidance of Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi,⁷ and the land of Israel [thereupon] quaked over an area of four hundred parasangs by four hundred parasangs, and a Bath Kol⁸ came forth and exclaimed, Who is this that has revealed My secrets to mankind?⁹ Jonathan b. Uzziel thereupon arose and said, It is I who have revealed Thy secrets to mankind. It is fully known to Thee that I have not done this for my own honour or for the honour of my father's house, but for Thy honour I have done it, that dissension may not increase in Israel.¹⁰ He further sought to reveal [by] a targum [the inner meaning] of the Hagiographa, but a Bath Kol went forth and said, Enough! What was the reason? — Because the date¹¹ of the Messiah is foretold in it.¹²

But did Onkelos the proselyte compose the targum to the Pentateuch? Has not R. Ika said in the name of R. Hananel who had it from Rab: What is meant by the text, And they read in the book, in the law of God, with an interpretation. and they gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading?¹³ ‘And they read in the book, in the law of God’: this indicates the [Hebrew] text; ‘with an interpretation’: this indicates the targum,¹⁴ ‘and they gave the sense’: this indicates the verse stops; ‘and caused them to understand the reading’: this indicates the accentuation,¹⁵ or, according to another version, the massoretic notes?¹⁶ — These had been forgotten, and were now established again.

How was it that the land did not quake because of the [translation of the] Pentateuch, while it did quake because of that of the prophets? — The meaning of the Pentateuch is expressed clearly, but the meaning of the prophets is in some things expressed clearly and in others enigmatically. [For instance,] it is written, In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon,¹⁷ and R. Joseph [commenting on this] said: Were it not for the targum of this verse, we should not know what it means.¹⁸ [It runs as follows]: ‘On that day shall there be great mourning in Jerusalem like the mourning of Ahab son of Omri who was killed by Hadadrimmon son of Rimmon in Ramoth Gilead¹⁹ and like the mourning of Josiah son of Ammon who was killed by Pharaoh the Lame in the plain of Megiddo’.²⁰

And I, Daniel, alone saw the vision; for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a great quaking fell upon them, and they fled to hide themselves.²¹ Who were these ‘men’ — R. Jeremiah — or some say, R. Hiyya b. Abba — said: These were Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. They were superior to him [in one way], and he was superior to them [in another]. They were superior to him, because they were prophets and he was not a prophet.²² He was superior to them, because he saw [on this occasion] and they did not see. But if they did not see, why were they frightened? — Although they themselves did not see, their star saw.²³ Rabina said: We learn from this that if a man is seized with fright though he sees nothing, [the reason is that] his star sees. What is his remedy? He should recite the shema’.²⁴ If he is in a place which is foul,²⁵ he should move away from it four cubits. If he cannot do this, he should say this formula: ‘The goat at the butcher's is fatter than I am’.²⁶

Now that you have decided that the words ‘city and city’ have a homiletical purpose, what is the purpose of the words ‘family and family’ [in the same verse]? — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: This contains a reference to the families of the Priests and Levites, [and indicates] that they should desist from their [Temple] service in order to come and hear the reading of the Megillah. For so said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: The Priests at their [Temple] service, the Levites on their platform,²⁷ the lay Israelites at their station²⁸ — all desist from their service in order to hear the reading of the Megillah. It has been taught to the same effect: Priests at their [Temple] service, Levites on their platform, lay Israelites at their station — all desist from their service in order to come and hear the reading of the Megillah. It was in reliance on this dictum that the members of the house of Rabbi²⁹ were wont to desist from the study of the Torah in order to come and hear the reading of the Megillah. They argued a fortiori from the case of the [Temple] service. If the service, which is so important, may be abandoned, how much more the study of the Torah?

But is the [Temple] service more important than the study of the Torah? Surely it is written, And it came to pass when Joshua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold there stood a man over against him, . . . (and he fell on his face.³⁰ Now how could he do such a thing, seeing that R. Joshua b. Levi has said that it is forbidden to a man to greet another by night, for fear that he is a demon? — It was different there, because he said to him, ‘I am captain of the host of the Lord’. But perhaps he was lying? — We take it for granted³¹ that they do not utter the name of heaven vainly).³² He said to him: This evening you neglected the regular afternoon sacrifice, and now you have neglected the study of the Torah.³³ Joshua replied: In regard to which of them have you come? He answered, 'I have come now'.³⁴ Straightway, Joshua tarried that night in the midst of the valley [ha-emek],³⁵ and R. Johanan said:

- (1) According to tradition, the letters on the tablets of Moses were cut completely through the stone, and therefore a letter which was wholly closed could keep in place only by a miracle. Hence the mem to which R. Hisda refers must have been wholly enclosed; which shows that such a mem must have been used already by Moses. This objection against R. Jeremiah is valid only if we suppose him to have been speaking of the closed forms of the letters, which is not necessarily the case. Cf. Shab. 104.

This shows that he tarried in the depths [‘umkah] of the halachah.¹ And R. Samuel b. Unia also said: The study of the Torah is greater than the offering of the daily sacrifices, as it says. ‘I have come now’ — There is no contradiction; in the one case² [the study] of an individual is meant, in the other³ that of the whole people.⁴ But is that of an individual unimportant? Have we not learnt: Women [when mourning] on a festival make a dirge⁵ but do not beat the breast. R. Ishmael says: If they are near the bier,⁶ they can beat the breast. On New Moon, Hanukkah and Purim they may make a dirge and beat the breast, but on neither the one nor the other do they wail;⁷ and in reference to this, Rabbah b. Huna said: The festival involves no restrictions in the case of a scholar, still less Hanukkah and Purim? — You are speaking of the honour to be paid to the Torah. The honour to be paid to the learning of an individual is important, the study of an individual is [comparatively] unimportant.

Raba said: There is no question in my mind that, as between the Temple service and the reading of the Megillah, the reading of the Megillah takes priority, for the reason given by R. Jose b. Hanina.⁸ As between the study of the Torah and the reading of the Megillah, the reading of the Megillah takes priority, since the members of the house of Rabbi based themselves [on the dictum of R. Jose].⁸ As between the study of the Torah and attending to a meth mizwah,⁹ attending to a meth mizwah takes precedence, since it has been taught: The study of the Torah may be neglected in order to perform the last rites or to bring a bride to the canopy. As between the Temple service and attending to a meth mizwah, attending to a meth mizwah takes precedence, as we learn from the text or for his sister,¹⁰ as it has been taught: ‘Or for his sister. What is the point of these words? Suppose he was on his way to kill his Paschal lamb or to circumcise his son, and he heard that a near relative had died,¹¹ shall I assume that he should defile himself? You must say, he should not defile himself. Shall I assume then that, just as he does not defile himself for his sister, so he should not defile himself for a meth mizwah?’¹² It says significantly, ‘or for his sister,’ it is for his sister that he may not defile himself, but he may defile himself for a meth mizwah.¹³ Raba propounded the question: As between the reading of the Megillah and [attending to] a meth mizwah, which takes precedence? Shall I say that the reading of the Megillah takes precedence in order to proclaim the miracle, or does perhaps [the burying of] the meth mizwah take precedence because of the respect due to human beings? — After propounding the question, he himself answered it saying, [Burying] the meth mizwah takes precedence, since a Master has said: Great is the [obligation to pay due] respect to human beings, since it overrides a negative precept of the Torah.¹⁴

The text [above states]: ‘R. Joshua b. Levi said: A city¹⁵ and all that adjoins it and all that is taken in by the eye with it is reckoned as city’. A Tanna commented: Adjoining, even if it is not visible, and visible even if it is not adjoining. Now we understand what is meant by ‘visible even though not adjoining’: this can occur for instance with a city situated on the top of a hill. But how can there be ‘adjoining but not visible’? — R. Jeremiah replied: If it is situated in a valley.

R. Joshua b. Levi further said: A city which was first settled and then walled is reckoned as a village.¹⁶ What is the reason? Because it is written, And if a man sell a dwelling house of a walled city,¹⁷ one, [that is,] which was first walled and then settled, but not first settled and then walled.

R. Joshua b. Levi also said: A city in which there are not ten men of leisure¹⁸ is reckoned as a village. What does he tell us? We have already learnt this: ‘What is a large town? One in which there are ten men of leisure. If there are less than this, it is reckoned as a village’. — He had to point out that the rule applies to a city,¹⁹ even though [leisured] people come there from outside.²⁰ R. Joshua b. Levi also said: A city which has been laid waste and afterwards settled is reckoned as a city. What is meant by ‘laid waste’? Shall I say, that its walls have been destroyed, in which case if it became settled²¹ it is reckoned as a city but otherwise not? [How can this be], seeing that it has been taught: R. Eleazar son of R. Jose says: [The text says], which has a wall;²² [which implies that it is to be reckoned as a city] even though it has not a wall now, provided it had one previously?²³ What then is meant by 'laid waste'? Laid waste of its ten men of leisure.

R. Joshua b. Levi further said:

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 4a

Lod and Ono and Ge Haharashim¹ were walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun. But did Joshua build these? Was it not Elpaal who built them, as it is written, And the sons of Elpaal Eber and Misham and Shemed, who built Ono and Lod, with the towns there of?² — But on your showing³ Asa built them, as it is written, And he built fenced cities in Judah?⁴ — R. Eleazar replied: These places were walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun. They were laid waste in the days of the concubine of Gibeon,⁵ and Elpaal came and rebuilt them. They again fell, and Asa came and repaired them. There is an indication of this in the text also, as it is written, For he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities.⁶ From this we can infer that they had already been towns beforehand; and this may be taken as proved.⁷

R. Joshua b. Levi also said: Women are under obligation to read the Megillah, since they also profited by the miracle then wrought.⁸ R. Joshua b. Levi further said: If Purim falls on a Sabbath, discussions and discourses are held on the subject of the day. Why mention Purim? The same rule applies to festivals also,⁹ as it has been taught: Moses laid down a rule for the Israelites that they should discuss and discourse on the subject of the day — the laws of Passover on Passover, the laws of Pentecost on Pentecost, and the laws of Tabernacles on Tabernacles! — It was necessary to state the rule [separately] in the case of Purim. For you might suggest that we should forbid this for fear of breaking the rule of Rabbah.¹⁰ We are therefore told that this is not so.

R. Joshua b. Levi further said: It is the duty of a man to read the Megillah in the evening and to repeat it in the day, as it is written, O my God, I cry in the daytime, but thou answerest not, and in the night season and am not silent.¹¹ The students took this to mean that the [Megillah] should be read at night, and the Mishnah relating to it should be learnt in the morning.¹² R. Jeremiah, however, said to them: It has been explained to me by R. Hiyya b. Abba [that the word ‘repeat’ here has the same meaning] as when, for instance, men say, I will go through this section and repeat it. It has also been stated: R. Helbo said in the name of ‘Ulla of Biri:¹³ It is a man's duty to recite the Megillah at night and to repeat it the next day, as it says, To the end that my glory may sing praise to thee [by day], and not be silent [by night]. O Lord, my God, I will give thanks to thee for ever.¹⁴

THE VILLAGES, HOWEVER, MAY PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY. R. Hanina said: The Sages made a concession to the villages by allowing them to push the reading forward to the Court day, in order that they might furnish food and water to their brethren in the cities.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 4b

This would show [would it not] that the regulation is for the benefit of the cities; but we have learnt: ‘If Purim falls on Monday, the villages and large towns read on that day’. Now if it is as you say, they should push the reading forward to the [previous] Court day? — This would bring it to the tenth, and the Sages did not fix the tenth [as a possible day].

Come and hear: ‘If it falls on Thursday, the villages and large towns read on that same day’. Now if it is as you say, they should push the reading forward to the [previous] Court day which is the eleventh? — We do not shift it from one Court day to another. Come and hear [again]: ‘R. Judah says: When [is the reading pushed forward]? In places where the villagers come into town on Mondays and Thursdays, but in places where they do not come into town on Mondays and Thursdays it is read only on the proper day'. Now if you assume that the regulation is for the benefit of the cities, because they do not come into town on Mondays and Thursdays; are the cities to be deprived of the benefit? — Do not read [in the dictum of R. Hanina] 'in order that they may furnish food and water', but read, 'because they furnish food and water to their brethren in the cities'.¹

HOW [DOES THIS WORK OUT]? IF IT FALLS ON MONDAY, VILLAGES AND LARGER TOWNS READ ON THAT SAME DAY etc. How is it that in the first clause of the Mishnah² the dates of the month are mentioned and in the second³ the days of the week?⁴ — Since (in the second clause) the dates of the month would have to go backwards,⁵ the Mishnah prefers to mention the days.⁶ IF IT FALLS ON FRIDAY etc. Which authority does our Mishnah follow? — [You may say], either Rabbi or R. Jose. How Rabbi? — As it has been taught: 'If it falls on Friday, villages and large towns push the reading forward to the Court day, and walled cities react on the day itself. Rabbi said: I maintain that towns should not have to shift their date,⁷ but both one and the other read on the day itself'. What is the reason of the First Tanna? — Because it is written, every year:⁸ just as every year towns read before cities, so in this case towns should read before cities. But why not argue thus: 'Every year': just as every year towns have not to shift their date, so here towns should not have to shift their date? — There is a special reason [for not reasoning thus here] since this is impracticable.⁹ What is Rabbi's reason? — [It is written], 'every year': just as in most years the towns have not to shift their date, so here they should not have to shift their date. But why not reason thus: 'every year': just as in most years towns read before walled cities, so here towns should read before walled cities? — There is a special reason [for not arguing thus here], because this is impracticable.¹⁰

How R. Jose? — As it has been taught: 'If it falls on Friday, walled cities and villages push the reading forward to the Court day, and large towns read on the day itself. R. Jose said: Walled cities do not read before towns, but both read on the day itself'. What is the reason of the First Tanna? — Because it is written, every year': just as in most years towns react on the fourteenth and their time is not the same as the time of the walled cities, so here towns should read on the fourteenth and their time should not be the same as the time of the walled cities. But why not reason thus: 'Every year': just as in most years walled cities do not read before towns, so here walled cities should not read before towns? — Here the case is different, because it cannot be avoided. What is R. Jose's reason? — [It says], 'every year': just as in most years walled cities do not read before towns, so here walled cities should not read before towns. But why not reason thus: 'Every year': just as in most years the time of one is not the same as the time of the other, so here the time of one should not be the same as the time of the other? — Here the case is different, because it cannot be avoided.

But did Rabbi really hold that towns should not shift their time to the Court day? Has it not been taught: 'If it falls on Sabbath, villages push the reading forward to the Court day, and large towns read on Friday and walled cities on Sunday. Rabbi said: My view is that, since the towns have to shift their time, they may as well shift it to the Court day'?¹¹ — Are the two cases parallel? In this last case, the proper time is Sabbath, and since they must shift they can shift [further]; but in our case the proper time is Friday.

Whose authority is followed in this dictum enunciated by R. Helbo in the name of R. Huna: 'If Purim falls on Sabbath, all shift the reading to the Court day'? 'All shift their reading', do you say? [How can this be] seeing that we have the walled cities which read on the Sunday? — What we should say is, 'All who are shifted are shifted to the Court day'. Which authority, [you ask]? — Rabbi.

But at any rate all agree that the Megillah is not to be read on Sabbath. What is the reason? — Rabbah replied: All are under obligation to read the Megillah, but not all are competent to read it, and there is therefore a danger that one may take the scroll in his hand and go to an expert to be instructed and [in doing so] convey it four cubits in a public domain. This is also the reason for [not blowing] the shofar on Sabbath and [for not carrying] the lulab.¹² R. Joseph said: It is because the poor are anxiously awaiting the reading of the Megillah.¹³ It has been taught to the same effect: 'Although it has been laid down that villages push the reading forward to the Court day, contributions are collected and distributed on the same day'. 'Although it has been laid down'! On the contrary, it is because it has been laid down!¹⁴ — Read therefore: Since it has been laid down that villages push the reading forward to the Court day, contributions are collected and distributed on the same day, because the poor are waiting anxiously for the reading of the Megillah, but

- (1) The concession was therefore made to them as a reward, but if they do not come into town there would be no concession in allowing them to read earlier.
 - (2) THE MEGILLAH IS READ ON THE ELEVENTH, THE TWELFTH etc.
 - (3) IF IT FALL, ON MONDAY etc.
 - (4) Lit., 'in the first clause he (the Tanna) takes the order of the months and in the second the order of the days'.
 - (5) If he specified the dates of the month instead of the days of the week, he would have to begin with the reading on the fourteenth, and then take the thirteenth and so on.
 - (6) Because as these go in regular order, it is easier to remember, and there is less danger of the Tanna making a mistake.
 - (7) Lit., 'towns should not be shifted from their place'.
 - (8) Esth. IX, 27.
 - (9) It is impracticable for towns to retain this date and also to read before the walled cities.
 - (10) It is impracticable for the towns to read before the walled cities and yet not shift their date.
 - (11) Lit., 'since they are shifted, let them be shifted to etc.'
 - (12) V. Glos.
 - (13) Because they expect to receive gifts immediately afterwards, and on Sabbath these could not be given.
 - (14) As otherwise they would receive them on the actual day of Purim.

Talmud - Mas. Megillah 5a

Rab said: On the actual day of Purim the Megillah can be read even by an individual, but on the alternative days² it should be read only in a company of ten. R. Assi, however, said: Whether on the actual day or on the alternative days, it should be read only in a company of ten. In a case which actually occurred, Rab gave weight to the opinion of R. Assi.³ But could Rab actually have said this?⁴ — Did not Rab Judah the son of R. Samuel b. Shilath say in the name of Rab: 'If Purim falls on Sabbath, Friday is the proper time'? — Friday the proper time! Surely Sabbath is the proper time! What Rab must have meant therefore is this: The alternative time is like the proper time.⁵ Just as at the proper time [the Megillah may be read] by an individual, so at the alternative time [it may be read] by an individual. — No. For the reading of the Megillah⁶ Rab requires ten. What then did he mean by saying 'Friday is the proper time'? His intention was to reject the opinion of Rabbi, who said that since the towns had to shift their time they might as well shift to the Court day. Here, therefore, Rab informs us that Friday is the proper day [to which they should shift].

MISHNAH. WHAT IS RECKONED A LARGE TOWN? ONE WHICH HAS IN IT TEN MEN OF LEISURE.⁷ ONE THAT HAS FEWER IS RECKONED A VILLAGE. IN RESPECT OF THESE⁸ IT WAS LAID DOWN THAT THEY SHOULD BE PUSHED FORWARD BUT NOT POSTPONED. THE TIME, HOWEVER, OF BRINGING THE WOOD FOR THE PRIESTS,⁹ OF KEEPING THE [FAST OF] THE NINTH OF AB,¹⁰ OF OFFERING THE FESTIVAL SACRIFICE,¹¹ AND OF ASSEMBLING THE PEOPLE¹² IS TO BE POSTPONED¹³ [TILL AFTER SABBATH] BUT NOT PUSHED FORWARD. ALTHOUGH IT WAS LAID DOWN THAT THE TIMES [OF READING THE MEGILLAH] ARE TO BE PUSHED FORWARD BUT NOT POSTPONED, IT IS PERMISSIBLE ON THESE [ALTERNATIVE] DAYS¹⁴ TO MOURN, TO FAST, AND TO DISTRIBUTE GIFTS TO THE POOR. R. JUDAH SAID: WHEN IS THIS?¹⁵ IN PLACES WHERE PEOPLE COME TO TOWN ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS. IN PLACES, HOWEVER, WHERE THEY DO NOT COME TO TOWN EITHER ON MONDAYS OR THURSDAYS, THE MEGILLAH IS READ ONLY ON ITS PROPER DAY.

GEMARA. [TEN MEN OF LEISURE]: A Tanna taught: The ten unoccupied men who attend synagogue.¹⁶

IN RESPECT OF THESE IT WAS LAID DOWN THAT THEY SHOULD BE PUSHED FORWARD BUT NOT POSTPONED. What is the reason? — R. Abba said in the name of Samuel: The text says, and he shall not go further.¹⁷ R. Abba further said in the name of Samuel: Whence do we know that years are not to be counted by days?¹⁸ Because it says, [It is the first to you] of the months of the year,¹⁹ [which implies] that you reckon a year by months but not by days. The Rabbis of Caesarea said in the name of R. Abba: How do we know that a month is not reckoned by its hours?²⁰ Because it says, until a month of days:²¹ you reckon a month by days, but you do not reckon a month by hours.²²

THE TIME, HOWEVER, OF BRINGING THE WOOD FOR THE PRIESTS, OF KEEPING [THE FAST OF] THE NINTH OF AB, OF OFFERING THE FESTIVAL SACRIFICE AND OF ASSEMBLING THE PEOPLE IS POSTPONED BUT NOT PUSHED FORWARD. [The reason for the Fast of] the ninth of Ab is that we do not hasten the approach of trouble. [The reason for] the festival sacrifice and the assembling of the people is that the time for their performance has not yet arrived.²³

A Tanna taught: ‘The festival sacrifice and all the period of the festival sacrifice is to be postponed’. We understand what is meant by the festival sacrifice, namely, that if its day happens to be Sabbath we postpone it till after the Sabbath. But what is meant by the ‘period of the festival sacrifice’? — R. Oshaia replied: What is meant is this: The festival sacrifice [is postponed if its time] occurs on Sabbath, and the ‘burnt-offering of appearance’²⁴ is postponed even till after the festival day which is the proper time for a festival sacrifice.²⁵ Which authority does this follow? Beth Shammai, as we have learnt: ‘Beth Shammai say, Peace-offerings may be brought on the festival, but without laying on of hands; not, however, burnt-offerings; while Beth Hillel say, Both burnt-offerings and peace-offerings may be brought, and hands may be laid on’.²⁶ Raba said: [The meaning is]: The festival sacrifice may be postponed for the whole period of the festival sacrifice,²⁷ but not more, as we have learnt: ‘If one did not bring a festival sacrifice on the first day of the festival, he may go on to do so throughout the festival, including the last day. If the festival terminated without his having brought the festival sacrifice, he need not bring another in compensation’.²⁸ R. Ashi said: [It means that] the festival sacrifice may be postponed for the whole period of the festival sacrifice,²⁹ and even on Pentecost which is only one day it may be postponed [for seven days], as we have learnt: [Beth Hillel] agree that if Pentecost falls on Sabbath, the day for killing [the sacrifice] is after the Sabbath’.³⁰ and bathed in the [bathhouse of the] marketplace¹ of Sepphoris on the seventeenth of Tammuz² and sought to abolish the fast of the ninth of Ab, but his colleagues would not consent. R. Abba b. Zabda ventured to remark:³ Rabbi, this was not the case. What happened was that the fast of Ab [on that year] fell on Sabbath, and they postponed it till after Sabbath, and he said to them, Since it has been postponed, let it be postponed altogether, but the Sages would not agree. He festival peace-sacrifice (hagigah) may be brought, this offering is not brought till the intermediate days. [R. ELeazar] thereupon applied to himself the verse, Better are two than one.⁴

But how could Rabbi have planted a shoot on Purim seeing that R. Joseph has learnt: [We read in connection with Purim] gladness and feasting and a good day;⁵ 'gladness': this teaches that it is forbidden on these days to mourn; 'feasting': this teaches that it is forbidden on them to fast; 'a good day': this teaches that it is forbidden on them to do work? — The fact is that Rabbi belonged to a place which kept Purim on the fourteenth, and when he planted, it was on the fifteenth. Is this so?⁶ Was not Rabbi in Tiberias, and Tiberias was walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun? — The fact is that Rabbi was in a place which kept on the fifteenth, and when he planted it was the fourteenth. But was he certain that Tiberias was walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun, seeing that Hezekiah read the Megillah in Tiberias both on the fourteenth and on the fifteenth, being uncertain whether it had been walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun or not? Hezekiah was in doubt, but Rabbi was certain. But even supposing he was certain, was he permitted to do this, seeing that it is written in Megillath Ta'anith,⁷ 'The fourteenth day and the fifteenth day are the days of Purim on which there is to be no mourning', and Raba said, The only purpose of mentioning these days [in Megillath Ta'anith]⁸ was to make whatever is forbidden on the one forbidden on the other also? — This applies only to mourning and fasting, but for abstention from work one day and no more is prescribed. Is that so? Did not Rab see a man sowing flax on Purim, and curse him, so that the flax did not grow? — There he [the man] was doing it on the day which he ought to have kept. Rabbah the son of Raba said. You may even say [that Rabbi planted] on the day [which he ought to have kept]: [the Jews] bound themselves [in the days of Esther] to abstain from mourning and fasting, but not from work, since first it is written, 'gladness and feasting and a good day', but afterwards it is written, that they should make them days of feasting and gladness',⁹ and 'a good day' is not mentioned. Why then did Rab curse that man? — It was a case of 'things which are permitted but others make a practice of abstaining from them'; but in Rabbi's place this¹⁰ was not the practice. Or if you like I can say that they did in fact make a practice of this, and Rabbi planted a festive shoot, as we have learnt:¹¹ If these days¹² pass and they are still not answered, they abstain to a certain extent from business, from building and from planting, from betrothing and from marrying,¹³ and a Tanna taught: 'Building' here means festive building; 'planting' means festive planting. What is festive building? If one builds a wedding residence for his son [on the occasion of his marriage]. What is a festive planting? If one plants a royal abarnaki.¹⁴

The text [above state]: 'Hezekiah read in Tiberias on the fourteenth and on the fifteenth, being doubtful whether it had been walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun or not'. But could he have been in doubt about Tiberias, seeing that it is written, And the fortified cities were Ziddim-zer and Hamath and Rakath and Kinnereth,¹⁵ and it is generally agreed that Rakath is Tiberias? — The reason why he was doubtful was because one side is bounded by the lake.¹⁶ If so, why was he in doubt? It certainly was not walled, as it has been taught : Which has a wall,¹⁷ and not merely a fence of houses.¹⁸ Round about:¹⁹ this excludes Tiberias, the lake forming its wall!²⁰ In respect of the houses of a walled town he was not in doubt; where he was in doubt was in respect of reading the Megillah. [He asked]: What constitutes the difference between villages and walled towns which are mentioned in connection with the reading of the Megillah? Is it that the former are exposed and the latter are not exposed, [in which case] Tiberias [belongs to the former] being also exposed, or is it that the latter are protected and the former are not protected, [in which case] Tiberias [belongs to the latter], being protected? That was why he was in doubt.

R. Assi read the Megillah in Huzal²¹ on the fourteenth and on the fifteenth, being in doubt whether it had been walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun or not. According to another report, R. Assi said: Huzal of the house of Benjamin was walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun.

R. Johanan said: When I was a boy, I made a statement about which I afterwards questioned the old men, and it was found that I was right: [I said:] Hamath is Tiberias. And why was it called Hamath? On account of the hot springs [hamme] of Tiberias. Rakath is Sepphoris, And why was it called Rakath? Because it slopes down like the bank [raktha] of a river. Kinnereth is Gennesaret. And why was it called Kinnereth? Because its fruits are sweet like the music of a harp [kinnor].¹ Raba said: Is there anyone who can maintain that Rakath is not Tiberias, seeing that when a man dies here [in Babylonia] they mourn for him there [in Tiberias] as follows: 'Great was he in Sheshach² and he has a name in Rakath',³ and when the coffin is taken there they mourn for him thus: 'Ye lovers of the remnants,⁴ dwellers in Rakath, go forth and receive the slaughtered of the depths'.⁵ When R. Zera departed, a certain mourner opened his dirge thus: 'The land of Shinar⁶ conceived and bore him, the beautiful land⁷ brought up her delight. Woe to me, saith Rakath, for her precious instrument is lost'!⁸ No, said Raba. Hamath is the hot springs of Gerar; Rakath is Tiberias; and Kinnereth is Gennesaret. Why is it called Rakath? Because even the least worthy⁹ of its inhabitants are full of religious performances like a pomegranate. R. Jeremiah said: Rakath is its proper name. And why is it called Tiberias? Because it is situated in the very centre¹⁰ of the land of Israel. Rabbah said: Rakath is its name. And why is it called Tiberias? Because its aspect is good.¹¹

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 6a

Zeira said: Kitron is Sepphoris. And why is it called Sepphoris? Because it is perched on the top of a mountain like a bird [zippor]. But is Kitron Sepphoris? Now Kitron was in the territory of Zebulun, as it is written, Zebulun drove not out the inhabitants of Kitron nor the inhabitants of Nahalol.¹² Now Zebulun complained of his portion, as it says, Zebulun was a people which shamed his soul to death.¹³ Why? Because Naphtali was on the high places of the field.¹⁴ Zebulun complained to the Holy One, blessed be he, saying: Sovereign of the Universe, to my brethren Thou hast given fields and vineyards and to me Thou hast given hills and mountains; to my brethren Thou hast given lands, and to me Thou hast given lakes and rivers. [God] replied: They will all require thee for the hilazon,¹⁵ as it says, and the hidden treasures of the sand,¹⁶ and R. Joseph learnt: 'Hidden' indicates the hilazon; 'treasures' indicates the tunny fish;¹⁷ 'sand' indicates white glass.¹⁸ Zebulun then said: Sovereign of the Universe, who will inform me?¹⁹ He replied: There they shall offer sacrifices of righteousness.²⁰ This shall be thy sign: whoever takes of thee without payment will not prosper in his business. Now if you assume that Kitron is Sepphoris, why did Zebulun complain of his portion, seeing that Sepphoris is an excellent spot? Nor can you say that it is not 'flowing with milk and honey'. For Resh Lakish has said: I have myself seen the trail of milk and honey²¹ round Sepphoris, and it is sixteen miles by sixteen miles. Nor can you say that [even so] his is not as good as his brothers, since Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: I have myself seen the trail of milk and honey of the whole land of Israel, and it extends [altogether] about as far as from Be Kubi²² to the Fort of Tulbanke, twenty-two parasangs in length and six parasangs in breadth?²³ Even so, he preferred fields and vineyards. This is also indicated by the language of the text, as it says, 'Naphtali upon the high places of the field'. This is a proof.

R. Abbahu said: [It is written], Ekron shall be rooted up,²⁴ this is Kisri the daughter of Edom,²⁵ which is situated among the sands, and which was a thorn in the side of Israel²⁶ in the days of the Greeks. When the House of the Hasmoneans grew powerful and conquered them, they called it 'the capture of the tower of Shir'.²⁷

R. Jose b. Hanina said: What is meant by the text, And I will take away his blood out of his mouth and his detestable things from between his teeth, and he also shall be a remnant for our God?²⁸ 'And I will take away his blood out of his mouth': this refers to their sacrificial shrines.²⁹ 'And his detestable things from between his teeth': this refers to their oracles.³⁰ 'And he also shall be a remnant for our God': these are the synagogues and houses of learning in Edom.³¹ And he shall be as a chief in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite:³² these are the theatres and circuses³³ in Edom in which one day the chieftains of Judah shall publicly teach the Torah. R. Isaac said: Leshem is Pamias.³⁴ Ekron shall be rooted out: this is Caesarea, the daughter of Edom, which was a metropolis³⁵ of kings. Some say that this means that kings were brought up there, and others that kings were appointed from there. Caesarea³⁶ and Jerusalem [are rivals]. If one says to you that both are destroyed, do not believe him; if he says that both are flourishing, do not believe him; if he says that Caesarea is waste and Jerusalem is flourishing, or that Jerusalem is waste and Caesarea is flourishing, you may believe him, as it says, I shall be filled, she is laid waste,³⁷ if this one is filled, that one is laid waste, and if that one is filled, this one is laid waste. R. Nahman b. Isaac derived the same lesson from here: and the one people shall be stronger than the other people.³⁸ R. Isaac also said: What is the meaning of the verse, Let favour be shown to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness?³⁹ Isaac said in the presence of the Holy One, blessed be He: Sovereign of the Universe, let mercy be shown to Esau. He replied: He is wicked. He said to Him; He has not learnt righteousness.⁴⁰ He replied: In the land of uprightness⁴¹ will he deal wrongfully.⁴² He said: If so, let him not behold the majesty of the Lord.⁴²

R. Isaac also said: What is meant by the verse, Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked, draw not out his bit,⁴³ so that they exalt themselves, selah?⁴⁴ Jacob said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Sovereign of the Universe, grant not to Esau the wicked the desire of his heart, draw not out his bit:

this refers to Germamia of Edom,¹ for should they but go forth they would destroy the whole world. R. Hama b. Hanina said: There are three hundred crowned heads in Germamia of Edom and three hundred and sixty-five chieftains in Rome,² and every day one set go forth to meet the other and one of them is killed, and they have all the trouble of appointing a king again.

R. Isaac also said: If a man says to you, I have laboured and not found, do not believe him. If he says, I have not laboured but still have found, do not believe him. If he says, I have laboured and found, you may believe him. This is true in respect of words of Torah,³ but in respect of business, all depends on the assistance of heaven. And even for words of Torah this is true only of penetrating to the meaning,⁴ but for remembering what one has learnt, all depends on the assistance of heaven.

R. Isaac also said: If you see a wicked man being favoured by fortune,⁵ do not contend with him, as it says, Do not contend with evildoers.⁶ Nor is this all, but he may even prosper in his undertakings, as it says, His ways prosper at all times.⁷ Nor is this all, but he may even be declared right, as it says, Thy judgments are far above out of his sight.⁸ Nor is this all, but he may even triumph over his enemies, as it says, As for all his adversaries, he puffeth at them.⁸ Is this so? Has not R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: It is permitted to contend with the wicked in this world, as it says, They that forsake the law praise the wicked, but such as keep the law contend with them.⁹ Also it has been taught: R. Dosethai b. Mathon says: It is permitted to contend with the wicked in this world. And if one should whisper to you saying, [As for the text] Do not contend with evildoers, neither be thou envious against them that work unrighteousness, one whose conscience smites him speaks thus, and the meaning is, Do not contend with the evildoer to be like evildoers, neither be envious of such as work unrighteousness; and so it says also, Let not thy heart envy sinners?¹⁰ — There is no contradiction; the one [piece of advice] refers to one's own affairs the other to religious matters.¹¹ Or if you like I may say that both refer to one's own affairs, and still there is no contradiction: the one is addressed to a man who is wholly righteous, and the other to one who is not wholly righteous,¹² as R. Huna said: What is the meaning of the verse, Wherefore lookest thou when they deal treacherously, and holdest thy peace when the wicked swalloweth up the man that is more righteous than he?¹³ He can swallow up one that is more righteous than himself, he cannot swallow up one that is completely righteous. Or if you like I can say that when fortune is smiling on him, the case is different.

'Ulla said: 'Greek Italy'¹⁴ is the great city of Rome,¹⁵ which covers an area of three hundred parasangs by three hundred. It has three hundred markets corresponding to the number of days of the solar year. The smallest of them is that of the poultry sellers, which is sixteen mil by sixteen. The king dines every day in one of them. Everyone who resides in the city, even if he was not born there, receives a regular portion of food from the king's household,¹⁶ and so does everyone who was born there, even if he does not reside there. There are three thousand baths in it, and five hundred windows the smoke from which goes outside the wall.¹⁷ One side of it is bounded by the sea, one side by hills and mountains, one side by a barrier of iron, and one side by pebbly ground and swamp.¹⁸

MISHNAH. IF THE MEGILLAH HAS BEEN READ IN THE FIRST ADAR AND THE YEAR HAS SUBSEQUENTLY BEEN PROLONGED,¹⁹ IT IS READ AGAIN IN THE SECOND ADAR. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE FIRST ADAR AND THE SECOND ADAR SAVE ONLY IN THE READING OF THE MEGILLAH AND THE DISTRIBUTION OF GIFTS TO THE POOR.²⁰

GEMARA. This [last statement] implies that in respect of the series of special portions²¹ they are on the same footing.²² Which authority does the Mishnah follow? [It would seem], neither the First Tanna nor R. Eliezer son of R. Jose nor R. Simon b. Gamaliel [in the following Baraita], as it has been taught: 'If the Megillah has been read in the first Adar and the year has then been prolonged, it is read in the second Adar, since all the precepts which are to be performed in the second Adar can be performed in the first,²³ except the reading of the Megillah'. R. Eliezer son of R. Jose says that it is not to be read [again] in the second Adar, because all precepts that are to be performed in the second Adar may be performed in the first. R. Simon b. Gamaliel says in the name of R. Jose that it is to be read again in the second, because precepts which are to be performed in the second Adar may not be performed in the first. They all however agree in regard to mourning and fasting, that they are forbidden on [the fourteenth and fifteenth of] both. Does not R. Simon b. Gamaliel here repeat the First Tanna? — R. Papa replied: They differ on the question of the series of special portions — the First Tanna holding that these should in the first instance be read in the second [Adar], but if they have been read in the first, this suffices. [But he also] excludes from this ruling the reading of the Megillah, [holding that], even though it has been read in the first [Adar], it must be read again in the second. R. Eliezer son of R. Jose on the other hand held that even the Megillah may in the first instance be read in the first [Adar], and R. Simon b. Gamaliel held that even the series of special portions, if they have been read in the first [Adar], must be read again in the second. Which authority then [does our Mishnah follow]? If [you say] the First Tanna, there is the difficulty of gifts.²⁴ If [you say] R. Eliezer son of R. Jose, there is the difficulty of the reading of the Megillah also. If [you say] R. Simon b. Gamaliel, there is the difficulty of the series of special portions! — In fact it is the First Tanna, and when he mentioned the reading of the Megillah, we suppose the same to apply to the gifts of the poor, since one depends on the other. Or if you like, I can say that in fact it is R. Simon b. Gamaliel, and there is an omission²⁵ in our Mishnah and what it means is this: ‘There is no difference between the fourteenth of the first Adar and the fourteenth of the second Adar save in the matter of reading the Megillah and gifts to the poor’. from which we infer that in regard to mourning and fasting they are on the same footing, while in regard to the special portions no ruling is given.²⁶ R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah²⁷ is as laid down by R. Simon b. Gamaliel, who gave it in the name of R. Jose. R. Johanan said: Both of them [R. Simon and R. Eliezer son of R. Jose] based their opinions on the same text, in every year.²⁸ R. Eliezer son of Jose reasoned: ‘In every year’; just as in most years [we think of] Adar as the month which adjoins Shebat, so here [we keep the precepts] in the Adar which adjoins Shebat. R. Simon b. Gamaliel again reasoned: Just as in most years [we think of] Adar as adjoining Nisan, so here [we keep the precepts] in the Adar which adjoins Nisan. Now we understand R. Eliezer son of R. Jose taking the view he did, because it is inherently probable, it being a rule that we do not postpone the performance of religious precepts.²⁹ But what is the reason of R. Simon b. Gamaliel? — R. Tabi said: The reason of R. Simon b. Gamaliel is that more weight is to be attached to bringing one period of redemption close to another.³⁰ R. Eleazar said: The reason of R. Simon b. Gamaliel is derived from this verse: to confirm this second letter of Purim.³¹ And it was necessary for the text to write

'the second' and also to write 'in every year'. For if I had to base the rule on 'every year', I could raise the difficulty stated above: therefore it is written 'second'.¹ And if I had been told only 'second', I might say that the Megillah is properly to be read both in the first and in the second. Therefore it says, in every year.² And what does R. Eliezer son of R. Jose make of this second? — He requires it for the statement enunciated by R. Samuel b. Judah. For R. Samuel b. Judah said: At first they [Mordecai and Esther] decreed the observance of Purim only in Susa, but afterwards³ throughout the world.

R. Samuel b. Judah said: Esther sent to the Wise Men saying, Commemorate me⁴ for future generations. They replied, You will incite the ill will of the nations against us.⁵ She sent back reply: I am already recorded in the chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia. Rab and R. Hanina and R. Johanan and R. Habiba record [the above statement in this form]: (in the whole of the Order Mo'ed, wherever this set of Rabbis is mentioned, R. Johanan is replaced by R. Jonathan).⁶ Esther sent to the Wise Men saying, Write an account of me for posterity. They sent back answer, Have I not written for thee three times⁷ — three times and not four?⁸ [And they refused] until they found a verse written in the Torah, Write this a memorial in a book,⁹ [which they expounded as follows]: 'Write this', namely, what is written here and in Deuteronomy;¹⁰ 'for a memorial', namely, what is written in the Prophets;¹¹ 'in a book', namely, what is written in the Megillah. The difference [between the first and second of these opinions] is also found between two Tannaim. 'Write this', what is written here.¹² 'For a memorial', namely, what is written in Deuteronomy. 'In a book', namely, what is written in the Prophets. So R. Joshua.¹³ R. Eliezer of Modi'im says: Write this', namely, what is written here and in Deuteronomy; for a memorial', namely, what is written in the Prophets; 'in a book', namely, what is written in the Megillah.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel; [The scroll] of Esther does not make the hands unclean.¹⁴ Are we to infer from this that Samuel was of opinion that Esther was not composed¹⁵ under the inspiration of the holy spirit? How can this be, Seeing that Samuel has said that Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit? — It was composed to be recited [by heart], but not to be written. The following objection was raised: 'R. Meir says that [the scroll of] Koheleth¹⁶ does not render the hands unclean, and that about the Song of Songs there is a difference of opinion. R. Jose says that the Song of Songs renders the hands unclean, and about Koheleth there is a difference of opinion. R. Simeon says that Koheleth is one of those matters in regard to which Beth Shammai were more lenient and Beth Hillel more stringent, but Ruth and the Song of Songs and

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Menasia said: Koheleth does not render the hands unclean because it contains only the wisdom of Solomon.¹⁸ They said to him], Was this then all that he composed? Is it not stated elsewhere, And he spoke three thousand proverbs,¹⁹ and it further says, Add thou not unto his words.²⁰ Why this further quotation? — In case you might object that he composed very much, and what it pleased him to write he wrote and what it did not please him he did not write. Therefore it says,²¹ Add thou not to his words.²²

It has been taught: R. Eleazar said: Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit, as it says, And Haman said in his heart.²³ R. Akiba says: Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit, as it says, And Esther obtained favour in the eyes of all that looked upon her.²⁴ R. Meir says: Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit, as it says, And the thing became known to Mordecai.²⁵ R. Jose b. Durmaskith said: Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit, as it says, But on the spoil they laid not their hands,²⁶ Said Samuel: Had I been there,²⁷ I would have given a proof superior to all, namely, that it says, They confirmed and took upon them,²⁸ [which means] they confirmed above²⁹ what they took upon themselves below. Raba said: All the proofs can be confuted except that of Samuel, which cannot be confuted. [Thus,] against that of R. Eleazar it may be objected that it is reasonable to suppose that Haman would think so, because there was no one who was so high in the esteem of the king as he was, and that when he spoke at length,³⁰ he was only expressing the thought concerning himself. Against the proof of R. Akiba it may be objected that perhaps the fact is as stated by R. Eleazar, who said that these words show that to every man she appeared to belong to his own nation.³¹ Against R. Meir it may be objected that perhaps the fact is as stated by R. Hiyya b. Abba who said that Bigthan and Teresh were two men from Tarsis.³² Against the proof of R. Jose b. Durmaskith it may be objected that perhaps they³³ sent messengers. Against the proof of Samuel certainly no decisive objection can be brought. Said Rabina: This bears out the popular saying, Better is one grain of sharp pepper than a basket full of pumpkins. R. Joseph said: It³⁴ can be proved from here: And these days of Purim shall not fail from among the Jews.³⁵ R. Nahman b. Isaac said, From here: Nor the memorial of them perish from their seed.³⁶

AND GIFTS TO THE POOR. R. Joseph learnt: And sending portions one to another³⁷ that means two portions³⁸ for one man. And gifts to the poor³⁹ that means two gifts to two men.⁴⁰ R. Judah Nesi'ah⁴¹ sent to R. Oshaia the leg of a third-born calf⁴² and a barrel of wine. He sent him back word saying,

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 7b

You have fulfilled in our person, O our teacher, the words, and sending portions one to another.¹ Rabbah sent to Mari b. Mar by Abaye a sackful of dates and a cupful of roasted ears of corn. Said Abaye to him: Mari will now say, 'If a countryman becomes a king, he does not take his basket off his neck'.² The other [Mari] sent him [Rabbah] back a sackful of ginger and a cup full of long-stalked pepper. Said Abaye: Now the Master [Rabbah] will say, I sent him sweet and he sends me bitter. Abaye said: When I went out of the Master's [Rabbah's] house, I was already full, but when I reached the other place³ they set before me sixty dishes of sixty different preparations, and I had sixty pieces from them. The last preparation was called pot-roast, and [I liked it so much that] I wanted to lick the dish after it. Said Abaye: This bears out the popular saying, The poor man is hungry and does not know it,⁴ or the other saying, There is always room for sweet things. Abaye b. Abin and R. Hananiah b. Abin used to exchange their meals with one another.⁵

Raba said: It is the duty of a man to mellow himself [with wine] on Purim until he cannot tell the difference between cursed be Haman' and 'blessed be Mordecai'.⁶

Rabbah and R. Zera joined together in a Purim feast. They became mellow, and Rabbah arose and cut R. Zera's throat.⁷ On the next day he prayed on his behalf and revived him. Next year he said, Will your honour come and we will have the Purim feast together. He replied: A miracle does not take place on every occasion. Raba said: If one eats his Purim feast on the night [of the fourteenth], he does not thereby fulfil his obligation. What is the reason? It is written, days of feasting and gladness.⁸ R. Ashi was sitting before R. Kahana. It grew late, and still the Rabbis did not arrive. He said to him, Why have not the Rabbis come? Perhaps they are busy with the Purim feast. He said to him: Could they not have had it last night? He replied: Is your honour not acquainted with the diction of Raba, 'If one eats his Purim feast on the night [of the fourteenth], he does not thereby fulfil his obligation'? He said to him; Did Raba really say so? (He replied Yes).⁹ He then repeated it after him forty times, until he had safely stored it in his mind.¹⁰

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN FESTIVALS AND SABBATH SAVE ONLY IN THE MATTER OF [PREPARING] FOOD.¹¹

GEMARA . We can infer from this that in the matter of preliminaries for preparing food¹² they are on the same footing. The Mishnah then does not agree with R. Judah, as it has been taught: 'There is no difference between festivals and Sabbath save in the matter of [preparing] food'. R. Judah, however, permits [on the festivals] the preliminaries for preparing food.¹² What is the reason of the First Tanna? The Scripture says: [Save that which every man must eat], that only [shall be prepared]:¹³ that and not its preliminaries. R. Judah, on the other hand, stresses the word for you:¹⁴ for you, which means, for all your requirements. Why then does not the other also admit this, seeing that it is written, 'for you'? — [This, he says, means], 'for you' and not for non-Jews; 'for you' and not for dogs. And [why does not] the other [adopt this view], seeing that it is written, 'that only'? [He replies]: It is written, 'that only', and it is written, 'for you'; we apply the one to preliminaries which can be attended to on the day before the festival, and the other to preliminaries which cannot be attended to on the day before the festival.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SABBATH AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT SAVE ONLY THAT THE DELIBERATE VIOLATION OF THE ONE IS PUNISHED BY A HUMAN COURT AND THE DELIBERATE VIOLATION OF THE OTHER BY KARETH.¹⁵

GEMARA. It is to be inferred from this that in respect of compensation¹⁶ they are on the same footing. Whose view does the Mishnah follow? — That of R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh, as it has been taught: R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh used to put the Day of Atonement on the same footing as Sabbath in respect of compensation: just as [one who deliberately breaks] Sabbath forfeits his life but is released from the obligation to make compensation,¹⁷ so [one who deliberately breaks] the Day of Atonement forfeits his life but is released from the obligation to make compensation.

We have learnt elsewhere: If any who have incurred the penalty of kareth are flogged — they become quit of their kareth, as it says, Then thy brother should be dishonoured in thine eyes;¹⁸ once he has been flogged, he is like thy brother.¹⁹ So R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel. Said R. Johanan: The colleagues of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel joined issue with him on this point. Raba said, They said in the school of Rab: We have [also] learnt [this]:²⁰ There is no difference between the Day of Atonement and Sabbath save that he who breaks the one is punished by a human court, while he who breaks the other is punished with kareth. Now if [R. Hananiah's opinion] is correct, then both are punished by the human court?²¹ — R. Nahman replied: Whose view is this?²² That of R. Isaac, who said that lashes are never inflicted on those who have incurred kareth, as it has been taught: Those who have incurred kareth are included in the general statement.²³ Why then is kareth specially mentioned in the case of [one who lies with] his sister?²⁴ To show that she is punished with kareth and not with lashes.²⁵ R. Ashi said: You may even say that it²⁶ is the view of the Rabbis:²⁷ in the case of the one [the breaker of Sabbath], the essential [punishment for] his presumption is inflicted by the human court, but in the case of the other, the essential punishment for his presumption consists in 'being cut off'.²⁸

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ONE WHO IS INTERDICTED BY VOW TO HAVE NO BENEFIT FROM HIS NEIGHBOUR AND ONE WHO IS INTERDICTED BY VOW FROM HIS FOOD, SAVE IN THE MATTER OF SETTING FOOT [ON HIS PROPERTY] AND OF UTENSILS WHICH ARE NOT USED FOR [PREPARING] FOOD.¹

GEMARA. It is to be inferred from this that in the matter of utensils which are used for preparing food they are on the same footing.

SETTING FOOT. But people are not particular about this?² — Raba said: Whose view is this? R. Eleazar's, who said that [even] a thing which is usually excused³ is forbidden to one who vows to have no benefit.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN VOWS AND FREEWILL-OFFERINGS SAVE THAT VOWED OFFERINGS HAVE TO BE REPLACED⁴ BUT FREEWILL-OFFERINGS NEED NOT BE REPLACED.

GEMARA. It is to be inferred from this that in respect of 'not delaying'⁵ they are on the same footing.

We have learnt in another place: What is a vow? Where a man says, I take upon me the obligation to bring a burnt-offering. What is a freewill-offering? Where a man says, Behold this is [to be] a burnt-offering. What then is the [practical] difference between vows and freewill-offerings? — If vowed animals die or are stolen or lost, the one who offered is under obligation to replace them;⁶ if freewill-offerings die or are stolen or lost, he is not under obligation to replace them.⁷ Whence is this rule derived? — As our Rabbis have taught: And it shall be accepted for him to make atonement upon him:⁸ R. Simeon says: That which is ‘upon him’⁹ he is under obligation to replace.¹⁰ How is it implied [that this substitute is upon him’]? — R. Isaac b. Abdini replied: Since he has said ‘[I take] upon me’, it is as if he had taken it upon his shoulder.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ONE SUFFERING FROM AN ISSUE WHO MAKES TWO OBSERVATIONS¹¹ AND ONE WHO MAKES THREE,¹² SAVE IN THE MATTER OF BRINGING A SACRIFICE.¹³

GEMARA. From this it is to be inferred that in the matter of [defiling] a bed or a seat¹⁴ and counting seven days¹⁵ they are on the same footing. Whence is this rule derived? — As our Rabbis have taught: ‘R. Simai says: The text specified two [observations]¹⁶ and designated the man as unclean, and also specified three¹⁷ and designated him as unclean’. How do we explain this? Two bring uncleanness but do not entail a sacrifice, three entail a sacrifice. But cannot I say that two bring uncleanness but do not entail a sacrifice, while three entail a sacrifice but no uncleanness?¹⁸ — To this you may answer that before he has three observations he must have two.¹⁹ Let me say then that two observations entail a sacrifice but not uncleanness,¹⁸ whereas three bring uncleanness also? — Do not imagine such a thing, since it has been taught: And the priest shall make atonement for him before the Lord from his issue;²⁰ this implies that some persons with an issue bring a sacrifice and some do not.²¹ How is this? if he has three observations, he brings a sacrifice, if only two, he does not bring. Or shall we expound differently and say that if he has two he brings the sacrifice, but if three he does not? — You can reply to this that before he has three he must have had two.²² And both the exposition of R. Simai and the text ‘from his issue’ are necessary [to prove this point]. For if I had only the dictum of R. Simai, I could raise against it the objection mentioned, and therefore I have recourse to ‘from his issue’. And if I had only ‘from his issue’, I should not know how many observations [are necessary for a sacrifice]; therefore I have the dictum of R. Simai.²³

Now, however, that you have assumed that the words ‘from his issue are to be used for a special exposition,²⁴ [I may ask], what lesson do you derive from the words and when he that hath an issue is cleansed from his issue?²⁵ That is required for the following lesson, as it has been taught: ‘And when he that hath an issue is cleansed’: that is to say, when the issue ceases.²⁶ ‘From his issue’: that is to say from his issue [only], and not from both his issue and his leprosy.²⁷ ‘Then he shall number’: this teaches us that one with an issue who has had two observations must count seven days [without issue]. But cannot this be deduced logically [as follows]?²⁸ If he defiles bed and seat, shall he not [all the more] be required to count seven days?

(1) The latter may take these liberties, the former may not.

(2) And therefore if one takes this liberty, he cannot be said to be deriving any benefit.

(3) וְיָתוּר Aliter: ‘The (retailer's customary) addition (to exact measure)’, and the accenting of which is not counted as receiving a benefit.

(4) Lit., one is responsible for them’. V. infra.

(5) To fulfil the undertaking, in accordance with Deut. XXIII, 22.

(6) Because the vow still stands.

(7) Because the undertaking applied only to that particular animal.

(8) So lit. E.V, ‘for him’. Lev. I, 4.

(9) I.e., the vow.

(10) Apparently R. Simeon renders: ‘Any animal will be accepted so long as it is "upon him"’.

(11) On a single day or two successive days.

(12) On one day or three successive days or two on one day and one on the next.

- (13) V. Lev. XV, 13-15.
- (14) Ibid. 4-6.
- (15) For his cleansing, after the cessation of the issue. Ibid.13.
- (16) Lev. XV, 2: When a man hath an issue out of his flesh, his issue is unclean.
- (17) Ibid. 3: And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness,
- (18) Viz., the stringent uncleanness of one with an issue (cf. nn. 3-4), but only the lighter uncleanness resulting from a discharge of semen. V. Deut. XXIII, 11-12.
- (19) And is already unclean as a zab.
- (20) Ibid. 15.
- (21) The proposition 'from' is stressed, as implying only part of these who have an issue.
- (22) And so already become liable for the sacrifice.
- (23) To show that it is three.
- (24) I.e., for some lesson not contained in the literal meaning of the words.
- (25) Ibid. 13.
- (26) V. next note.
- (27) If the one with an issue was also a leper, he need not wait for his counting till he is healed of his leprosy.
- (28) And why therefore is a text required?

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 8b

— This argument can be confuted by the case of the woman who is keeping day for day,¹ for such a one defiles bed and seat² but does not count seven days. And thus do not be surprised that this one also, although he defiles bed and seat, should not be obliged to count seven days. Therefore it says, 'from his issue, and he shall number', which implies that after part of his issue³ he shall number; this teache² with regard to one with an issue who has had two observations that he is required to count seven days.

R. Papa said to Abaye: Why do we use the one text 'from his issue' to include⁴ one with an issue who has had two observations, and the other text 'from his issue' to exclude⁵ one with an issue who has had two observations? — He replied: If you should assume that the former text⁶ is for the purpose of excluding, then the text could simply omit the word. And should you say, we could then derive the rule [that he is to count seven days] by a logical deduction, such a deduction could be confuted by the case of the woman who counts day for day. And should you say that this word is required to show that the text refers to one who is cleansed of his issue [only] and not [of his issue and] his leprosy, — in that case the text should say, 'and when he that hath an issue is cleansed', and no more. Why do I require, 'from his issue'? This teaches that one with an issue who has two observations is required to count seven days.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A LEPER WHO IS UNDER OBSERVATION⁷ AND ONE DEFINITELY DECLARED SUCH⁸ SAVE IN THE MATTER OF LEAVING THE HAIR LOOSE⁹ AND RENDING THE GARMENTS.¹⁰ THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A LEPER WHO HAS BEEN DECLARED CLEAN⁸ AFTER BEING UNDER OBSERVATION¹¹ AND ONE WHO HAS BEEN DECLARED CLEAN⁸ AFTER HAVING BEEN DEFINITELY DECLARED A LEPER SAVE IN THE MATTER OF SHAVING AND [OFFERING] THE BIRDS.¹²

GEMARA. From this it is to be inferred that in the matter of being sent outside [the camp]¹³ and uncleanness¹⁴ they are on the same footing. Whence is this rule¹⁵ derived? — As R. Samuel b. Isaac taught before R. Huna: Then the priest shall pronounce him clean; it is a scab; and he shall wash his clothes and be clean;¹⁶ which implies that he shall already have been [in a sense] clean¹⁷ from the first, not having been liable to rending the garments and loosening the hair. Said Raba to him. If that is so, then in regard to one with an issue, of whom it is written, and he shall wash his garments and be clean,¹⁸ how is it possible to say that he shall have been clean from the start? What it means then is, ‘clean now so far as not to defile earthenware vessels by moving them’,¹⁹ so that, even if he observes an issue again, he does not defile them retrospectively. So here, [the meaning is that] the leper is clean now to the extent of not defiling retrospectively by his entrance!²⁰ The fact is, said Raba, that we learn it from here: And the leper in whom the plague is;²¹ [that means] one whose leprosy is due to the state of his body, excluding this one²² whose leprosy is due to days.²³ Said Abaye to him: If that is so, then when it says, All the days wherein the plague is in him he shall be unclean,²⁴ are we to say that one whose leprosy is due to his state of body is required to be sent out of the camp, but one whose leprosy is not due to his state of body is not to be sent out of the camp? And should you reply that that is so, [how can this be] seeing that it states, THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A LEPER UNDER OBSERVATION AND ONE DEFINITELY DECLARED SUCH SAVE IN THE MATTER OF LOOSENING THE HAIR AND RENDING THE GARMENTS, from which it may be inferred that in the matter of being sent out [of the camp] and defiling by entrance they are on the same footing? — [The text might have said simply] ‘the days’, and it says, ‘all the days’, to bring a leper under observation within the rule of sending out [of the camp]. If that is the case, what is the reason that he is not required to shave and offer birds [which is not the case], as it states: THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A LEPER UNDER OBSERVATION AND ONE DEFINITELY DECLARED SUCH SAVE IN THE MATTER OF SHAVING AND OFFERING BIRDS? — Abaye replied: Scripture says: And the priest shall go forth out of the camp, and behold the plague of leprosy is healed in the leper;²⁵ this means, one whose leprosy is such because it requires healing,²⁶ and excludes one whose leprosy is such in virtue not of [requiring] healing but of days [of isolation].

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BOOKS [OF THE SCRIPTURE]²⁷ AND TEFILLIN AND MEZUZAH²⁸ SAVE THAT THE BOOKS MAY BE WRITTEN IN ANY LANGUAGE²⁹ WHEREAS TEFILLIN AND MEZUZAH MAY BE WRITTEN ONLY IN ASSYRIAN.³⁰ R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS THAT BOOKS [OF THE SCRIPTURE] ALSO WERE PERMITTED [BY THE SAGES] TO BE WRITTEN ONLY IN GREEK.

GEMARA. [From this we infer] that for requiring [the sheets] to be stitched with sinews³¹ and for defiling the hands³² both are on the same footing.

BOOKS MAY BE WRITTEN IN ANY LANGUAGE. The following seems to conflict with this: ‘[A Scriptural scroll containing] a Hebrew text written³³ in Aramaic or an Aramaic text written in Hebrew,³⁴ or [either] in Hebraic script,³⁵ does not defile the hands;³⁶ [it does not do so] until it is written in Assyrian script upon a scroll and in ink’! — Raba replied: There is no contradiction;

(1) If a niddah (v. Glos.) who is counting her eleven days between the menses sees blood on one or two of the days, she need not count seven clean days but becomes clean after ablution on the evening of the following day. V. Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 577, n. 2.

- (19) Without touching them. Such a defilement is termed היסט.
- (20) The rule was that a leper by entering a room defiled persons and things within it. The question thus remains, Whence is this rule (v. p. 45, n. 9) derived?
- (21) Lev. XIII, 45.
- (22) The leper under observation.

the one statement [that of the Mishnah] speaks of [books written in] our script,¹ the other of [books written in] their script.² Said Abaye to him: How have you explained the other statement [that of the Baraitha]? As referring to their script. [If so], why should it say, 'A Hebrew text written in Aramaic or an Aramaic text written in Hebrew'? The same would apply even to a Hebrew text which is written in Hebrew or an Aramaic text which is written in Aramaic, since it goes on to say. 'till it is written in Assyrian on a scroll in ink!'³ No. [What you must say is], there is no contradiction: the one statement [in the Mishnah] represents the view of the Rabbis, the other that of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. But if it is the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, what about Greek?⁴ — No. What you must say is, there is no contradiction; the one statement [in the Mishnah] refers to scrolls, the other to tefillin and mezuzahs. What is the reason [why] tefillin, and mezuzahs [must be written in Assyrian]? — Because in reference to them it is written, and they shall be,⁵ which implies, they shall be as they originally were. What cases are there of Aramaic which can be written in Hebrew? I grant you we find in the Torah yegar sahadutha;⁶ but here [in the case of tefillin, and mezuzoth] what Aramaic is there? — No. What you must say is, there is no contradiction; the one statement [in the Baraitha] refers to the Megillah, the other to the other books [of the Scripture]. What is the reason in the case of the Megillah? — Because it is written In regard to it, according to their writing and according to their language.⁷ What case of Aramaic being written in Hebrew is possible here? — R.

Papa said: And the king's pithgam⁸ shall be published;⁹ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: And all the wives shall give yekar¹⁰ to their husbands.¹¹ R. Ashi said: That statement [in the Baraitha] was made in reference to other books [of the Scripture], and it follows the view of R. Judah, as it has been taught: 'Tefillin and mezuzahs are to be written only in Assyrian, but our Rabbis allowed them to be written in Greek also'.¹² But is it not written, and they shall be? I must say therefore, 'Scrolls of the Scripture may be written in any language, and our Rabbis permitted them to be written in Greek'.¹³ They permitted! This would imply that the First Tanna forbade it! What I must say therefore is, 'Our Rabbis permitted them to be written only in Greek'. And it goes on to state, 'R. Judah said: When our teachers permitted Greek, they permitted it only for a scroll of the Torah'.¹⁴ This was on account of the incident related in connection with King Ptolemy,¹⁵ as it has been taught: 'It is related of King Ptolemy that he brought together seventy-two elders and placed them in seventy-two [separate] rooms, without telling them why he had brought them together, and he went in to each one of them and said to him, Translate¹⁶ for me the Torah of Moses your master.¹⁷ God then prompted each one of them and they all conceived the same idea and wrote for him, God created in the beginning,¹⁸ I shall make man in image and likeness,¹⁹ And he finished on the sixth day, and rested on the seventh day,²⁰ Male and female he created him²¹ [but they did not write 'created them'],²² Come let me descend and confound their tongues,²³ And Sarah laughed among her relatives,²⁴ For in their anger they slew an ox and in their wrath they digged up a stall,²⁵ And Moses took his wife and his children, and made them ride on a carrier of men;²⁶ And the abode of the children of Israel which they stayed in Egypt and in other lands was four hundred years,²⁷ And he sent the elect of the children of Israel,²⁸ And against the elect of the children of Israel he put not forth his hand;²⁹

(1) Even though in another language.

(2) The Scriptural text was transliterated into the characters of a foreign language.

(3) This shows, according to Abaye, that the Baraitha is speaking of the language independently of the script.

(4) According to Abaye the Baraitha, in saying, 'till it is written in Assyrian' forbids even Greek, which is allowed by R. Simeon.

I have taken not one valuable of theirs;¹ Which the Lord thy God distributed to give light to all the peoples;² And he went and served other gods which I commanded should not be served.³ They also wrote for him 'the beast with small legs' and they did not write 'the hare',⁴ because the name of Ptolemy's wife was hare,⁵ lest he should say, The Jews have jibed at me and put the name of my wife in the Torah.

R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS THAT BOOKS [OF THE SCRIPTURE] ALSO ARE PERMITTED TO BE WRITTEN ONLY IN GREEK. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah follows R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. R. Johanan further said: What is the reason of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel? Scripture says, God enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem;⁶ [this means] that the words of Japheth⁷ shall be in the tents of Shem. But why not say [the words of] Gomer and Magog?⁸ — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied: The real reason is because it is written, Let God enlarge [yaft] Japheth: implying, let the chief beauty [yafyuth] of Japheth⁹ be in the tents of Shem.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A PRIEST ANOINTED WITH THE OIL OF ANOINTMENT AND ONE WHO [ONLY] WEARS THE ADDITIONAL GARMENTS¹⁰ SAVE IN THE MATTER OF THE BULLOCK WHICH IS OFFERED FOR THE [UNWITTING BREAKING OF] ANY OF THE COMMANDMENTS.¹¹ THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A REGULAR¹² [HIGH] PRIEST AND ONE WHO HAS PASSED THROUGH [THE OFFICE]¹³ SAVE IN RESPECT OF THE BULLOCK OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AND THE TENTH OF THE EPHAH.¹⁴

GEMARA. [BETWEEN THE PRIEST ANOINTED etc.]. From this we infer that in the matter of the bullock of the Day of Atonement and the tenth of the ephah they are on the same footing. The Mishnah, it appears, does not concur with R. Meir; for with regard to the view of R. Meir, it has been taught: 'One who wears the additional garments [without having been anointed] brings the bullock which is offered [by the High Priest] for the [unwitting breaking of] any of the precepts'. So R. Meir. The Sages, however, say that he does not offer it. What is the reason of R. Meir? — As it has been taught: [If the] anointed [priest shall sin]:¹⁵ this tells me only of one anointed with the oil of anointment. How do I know that it applies also to one who [merely] wears the additional garments? — Because it says, the 'anointed'.¹⁶ How have you explained [the Mishnah]? As not concurring with R. Meir. Look now at the next clause: THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A REGULAR HIGH PRIEST AND ONE WHO HAS PASSED THROUGH THE OFFICE SAVE IN THE MATTER OF THE BULLOCK OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AND THE TENTH OF THE EPHAH. We infer from this that in all other matters they are on the same footing; and so we come round to the view of R. Meir, as it has been taught: 'If something happened to disqualify him and another priest was appointed to take his place, when the first returns to his service the second is still liable to all the obligations of the high priesthood'.¹⁷ So R. Meir. R. Jose said: The first returns to his service whereas the second is qualified to act neither as a high priest nor as an ordinary priest. R. Jose further said: it happened with R. Jose b. Ulam¹⁸ from Sephoris that a disqualification occurred to the high priest and they appointed him in his place, and the case eventually came before the Sages and they said: The first returns to his service. The second is qualified to act neither as a high priest nor as an ordinary priest: as a high priest, so as not to create enmity,¹⁹ as an ordinary priest, because we can raise to a higher grade of holiness but we never put down to a lower.²⁰ Are we then to say that the first clause [of the Mishnah] follows the Sages and the second R. Meir? — Said R. Hisda: Yes; the first clause follows the Sages and the second R. Meir. R. Joseph said: The whole gives the opinion of Rabbi, who combined the views of²¹ differing Tannaim.²²

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE²³ BETWEEN A GREAT HIGH PLACE²⁴ AND A SMALL ONE²⁵ SAVE IN THE MATTER OF THE PASCHAL LAMB OFFERING.²⁶ THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: ANY ANIMAL WHICH IS THE OBJECT OF A VOW OR A FREEWILL-OFFERING MAY BE BROUGHT ON A [SMALL] HIGH PLACE, ANY ANIMAL WHICH IS NOT THE OBJECT OF A VOW OR A FREEWILL-OFFERING MAY NOT BE BROUGHT ON A [SMALL] HIGH PLACE.

GEMARA. THE PASCHAL LAMB and nothing else?²⁷ — We should say, things like the paschal lamb.²⁸ Whose view is this? — R. Simeon's, as it has been taught: 'The congregation also did not offer [on the large high place] anything save paschal lambs and obligatory sacrifices for which there is a fixed time; but obligatory sacrifices for which there is no fixed time²⁹ were not offered either on the one or the other'.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SHILOH³⁰ AND JERUSALEM SAVE THAT IN SHILOH SACRIFICES OF LESSER SANCTITY³¹ AND SECOND TITHE³² COULD BE EATEN ANYWHERE WITHIN SIGHT [OF THE TOWN], WHEREAS IN JERUSALEM THEY HAD TO BE CONSUMED WITHIN THE WALLS. IN BOTH PLACES THE MOST HOLY SACRIFICES³³ WERE EATEN WITHIN THE CURTAINS.³⁴ AFTER THE SANCTIFICATION OF SHILOH

THE HIGH PLACES COULD AGAIN BECOME PERMITTED, BUT AFTER THE SANCTIFICATION OF JERUSALEM THERE CAN BE NO SUCH PERMISSION.

GEMARA. R. Isaac said: I have heard that sacrifices may be offered in the Temple of Onias¹ at the present day.² He was of opinion that the Temple of Onias is not an idolatrous shrine, and that the first holiness [of Jerusalem] was conferred on it for the time being but not for all time,³ as it is written, For ye are not as yet come to the rest and to the inheritance.⁴ 'Rest' here means Shiloh and 'inheritance' means Jerusalem, and 'inheritance' is put on the same footing as 'rest', [to show that] just as after the [destruction of the] 'rest' the high places were again permitted, so after the [destruction of the] 'inheritance' they will be permitted. They said to him: Do you really say so? He replied, No. Said Raba: By God! he did say it and I learnt it from him. Why then did he retract? On account of the difficulty raised by R. Mari. For R. Mari adduced the following in confutation: AFTER THE SANCTIFICATION OF SHILOH HIGH PLACES CAN AGAIN BE PERMITTED, BUT AFTER THE SANCTIFICATION OF JERUSALEM THERE CAN BE NO SUCH PERMISSION. We have also learnt further: After they [the Israelites] occupied Jerusalem, the high places were forbidden, and they were never permitted again, and it was the 'inheritance'. — There is a difference of Tannaim on this point, as we have learnt. 'R. Eliezer said: I have heard that when they were building the hekal⁵ [in the second Temple] they made curtains for the hekal and for the courtyard,⁵ the difference being that in the hekal they built [the walls] outside [the curtains]⁶ and in the courtyard they built [the walls] within [the curtains]. And R. Joshua said: I have heard that sacrifices may be brought even though there is no temple; that the most holy foods may be eaten, even though there are no curtains; and that foods of lesser sanctity and second tithe may be eaten even though there is no wall, because the first holiness was conferred on Jerusalem⁷ both for the time being and for all time.'⁷ We infer from this⁸ that R. Eliezer was of opinion that it was not [at first] sanctified for all time.⁹ Said Rabina to R. Ashi: How can we draw this inference? Perhaps all agree that the first holiness was conferred upon it for the time being and for all time, and one Master reported what he had heard and the other what he had heard. Should you ask, In that case, why were curtains needed according to R. Eliezer, we can answer that they were merely for privacy. Rather it is the following Tannaim who differ on this point as it has been taught: 'R. Ishmael son of R. Jose said: Why did the Sages enumerate these?¹⁰ Because when the exiles returned they found these cities [still walled] and sanctified them;¹¹ the others,¹² however, lost their privilege when the land lost its sanctity'. This shows that he was of opinion that the first holiness was conferred for the time being and not for the future. And a contradiction was pointed out with the following: 'R. Ishmael son of R.

Jose said: Were these all? Do we not find it said, Sixty cities, all the region of Argob,¹³ and it is written, All these were fortified cities with high walls?¹⁴ Why then did the Sages enumerate these? Because when the exiles returned, they found these [still walled] and sanctified them'.¹⁵ They sanctified then,

(2) This must refer to the period of the originator of the dictum, as the Temple of Onias did not exist any longer in the time of R. Isaac.

(3) Lit., 'for the future to come'. Hence after its destruction the high places would again be permitted.

(4) Deut. XII, 9.

(5) We assume for the present that the reason for the curtains was to invest the place with holiness enabling sacrifices to be offered and eaten pending the construction of the walls.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 10b

now, [say you]! Do we not say that they did not require to be sanctified?¹ What [you should say is], they found these and enumerated them. And not only in these alone, but in every one in regard to which you shall find a tradition from your ancestors that it was walled from the days of Joshua son of Nun, all these precepts² are to be observed, because the first holiness was conferred for the time being and for all future time. There is thus a contradiction between two statements of R. Ishmael! — Two Tannaim report R. Ishmael son of R. Jose differently. Or if you like, I can say that the latter dictum emanates from R. Eleazar b. Jose, as it has been taught: 'R. Eleazar b. Jose says: That has [no] wall;³ even though it has not now, but it had in previous times.'

And it came to pass in the days of Ahasuerus⁴ R. Levi, or some say R. Jonathan said: The following remark is a tradition handed down to us from the Men of the Great Assembly:⁵ wherever in the Scripture we find the term wa-yehi [and it was, and it came to pass], it indicates [the approach of] trouble.⁶ Thus, and it came to pass in the days of Ahasuerus — there was Haman. And it came to pass in the days when the Judges judged⁷ — 'there was a famine'. And it came to pass when man began to multiply⁸ — then 'God Saw that the wickedness of man was great'. And it came to pass, as they journeyed east⁹ — then 'they said, come let us build a city'. And it came to pass in the days of Amrafel¹⁰ — then 'they made war'. And it came to pass when Joshua was in Jericho¹¹ — then 'his [the angel's] sword was drawn in his hand'.¹² And the Lord was [wa-yehi] with Joshua¹³ — then, 'the children of Israel committed a trespass', And there was a certain man of Ramathaim-Zophim¹⁴ — then, for he loved Hannah but the Lord had shut up her womb'. And it came to pass when Samuel was old¹⁵ — then, 'his sons walked not in his ways'. And David had [wa-yehi] great success in all his ways¹⁶ — then, 'And Saul eyed David'.¹⁷ And it came to pass when the king dwelt in his house¹⁸ — then, 'Nevertheless thou shalt not build the house'.¹⁹ But is it not written, — And it came to pass on the eighth day,²⁰ and it has been taught, 'On that day there was joy before the Holy One, blessed be He, as on the day when heaven and earth were created. For it is written, And it came to pass

[wa-yehi] on the eighth day, and it is written in the other place, And there was [wa-yehi] one day'?²¹ Nadab and Abihu died on that day. But is it not written, And it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year,²² And it came to pass when Jacob saw Rachel,²³ and it is also written, And there there was evening and there was morning one day, and there is the second day and the third, and there are many other cases? — R. Ashi replied: The fact is that 'wa-yehi' sometimes has this signification and sometimes not, but the expression 'and it came to pass in the days of' always indicated trouble. Five times we find the expression 'and it came to pass in the days of'; viz., 'And it came to pass in the days when the Judges judged', 'and it came to pass in the days of Amrafel', 'and it came to pass in the days of Ahaz',²⁴ 'and it came to pass in the days of Jehoiakim'.²⁵

R. Levi further said: The following is a tradition that we have from our ancestors, that Amoz²⁶ and Amaziah²⁷ were brothers. What does this tell us?²⁸ — It confirms what was said by R. Samuel b. Nahmani in the name of R. Jonathan: Every bride who is modest in the house of her father-in-law is rewarded by having kings and prophets among her descendants. How do we prove this? From Tamar, as it is written, And Judah saw her and thought her to be a harlot; for she had covered her face.²⁹ Now because she had covered her face did he think her to be a harlot? Rather, what it means is that because she had covered her face in the house of her father-in-law and he did not know her, she was rewarded by having among her descendants kings and prophets; kings from David, and prophets — as R. Levi said, 'It is a tradition handed down to us from our ancestors that Amoz and Amaziah were brothers', and it is written, The vision of Isaiah son of Amoz.³⁰

R. Levi further said: We have a tradition from our ancestors that the ark took up no room.³¹ It has been taught to the same effect: 'The ark which Moses made had round it an [empty] space of ten cubits on every side'. Now it is written, And in front of the Sanctuary was twenty cubits in length [and twenty cubits in breadth],³² and it is also written, And the wing of the one cherub was ten cubits and the wing of the other cherub was ten cubits.³³ Where then was the ark itself? We must therefore conclude that it stood by a miracle [without occupying any room].³⁴

R. Jonathan prefaced his discourse on this section³⁵ with the text,³⁶ And I will rise against them, saith the Lord, and cut off from Babylon name and remnant', and offshoot and offspring, saith the Lord,³⁷ [which he expounded as follows]: 'Name' means script; 'remnant is language';³⁸ 'offshoot' is kingdom, and 'offspring' is Vashti.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: Instead of the thorn shall come up the cypress, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle:³⁹ 'Instead of the thorn': instead of the wicked Haman who put himself up as an object of worship, as it is written, and upon all thorns and upon all brambles⁴⁰ 'shall come up the cypress': this is Mordecai who was called the chief of all spices, as it is said, And do thou take to thee the chief spices, flowing myrrh,⁴¹ which [last words] we translate [in Aramaic], mar deki.⁴² 'Instead of the brier': instead of the wicked Vashti, the daughter of the wicked Nebuchadnezzar who burnt the ceiling of the house of the Lord; as it is written, its top was gold,⁴³ 'the myrtle shall come up': this is the virtuous Esther who is called Hadassah,⁴⁴ as it is said, And he brought up Hadassah.⁴⁵ 'And it shall be to the Lord for a name': this is the reading of the Megillah; 'and for an everlasting sign which shall not be cut off': these are the days of Purim.

R. Joshua b. Levi introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: And it shall come to pass that as the Lord rejoiced over you to do you good, so the Lord will rejoice over you to cause you to perish.⁴⁶ Now does the Holy One, blessed be He, rejoice in the downfall of the wicked? Is it not written, as they went out before the army, and say, Give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endureth for ever',⁴⁷ and R. Johanan said, Why are the words 'for he is good' omitted from this thanksgiving? Because the Holy One, blessed be He, does not rejoice in the downfall of the wicked? And R. Johanan further said, What is the meaning of the verse, And one came not near the other all the night?⁴⁸ The ministering angels wanted to chant their hymns, but the Holy One, blessed be He, said, The work of my hands is being drowned in the sea, and shall you chant hymns? — R. Eleazar replied: He himself does not rejoice, but he makes others rejoice. This is indicated also by the text, which writes yasis and not yasus;⁴⁹ which proves [what we said].

R. Abba b. Kahana introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: For to the man that is good in his sight he giveth wisdom, and knowledge and joy.⁵⁰ This, he said, is the righteous Mordecai. But to the sinner He giveth the task, to gather and to heap up;⁵⁰ this is Haman. That he may leave it to him, that is good in the sight of God;⁵⁰ this refers to Mordecai and Esther, as it is written, And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman.⁵¹

Rabbah b. 'Ofra introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: And I will set my throne in Elam, and will destroy from thence king and princes.⁵² 'King' indicates Vashti, and 'princes' indicates Haman and his ten sons.

R. Dimi b. Isaac introduced his discourse on this section with the following text:

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 11a

For we are bondmen; yet hath God not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia.¹ When was this? In the time of Haman. R. Hanina b. Papa introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads, we went through fire and through water:² through fire in the days of the wicked Nebuchadnezzar, and through water in the days of Pharaoh. But thou didst bring us out into abundance,² in the days of Haman.

R. Johanan introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: He hath remembered his mercy and his faithfulness to the house of Israel, all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our Lord.³ When did all the ends of the earth see the salvation of our Lord? In the days of Mordecai and Esther.⁴

Resh Lakish introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: As a roaring lion and a ravenous bear, so is a wicked ruler over a poor people.⁵ 'A roaring lion': this is the wicked Nebuchadnezzar, of whom it is written, A lion is gone up from his thicket.⁶ 'A ravenous bear': this is Ahasuerus, of whom it is written, And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear',⁷ and R. Joseph learnt: These are the Persians, who eat and drink like bears, and are coated with flesh like bears, and are hairy like bears, and can never keep still like bears.⁸ 'A wicked ruler': this is Haman. 'Over a poor people': this is Israel, who are poor in [the observance of] precepts.

R. Eleazar introduced his discourse on this with the following text: By slothfulness he that lays beams⁹ becomes poor [yimak], and through idleness of the hands the house leaketh.¹⁰ Through the slothfulness in which Israel indulged, not busying themselves with the Torah, the enemy of¹¹ the Holy One, blessed be He, became poor. The meaning of 'mak' is poor, as it says, And if he is too mak for thy valuation,¹² and mekoreh means only the Holy One, blessed be He, as it says, Who layest the beams [ha-mekareh] of thy upper chambers in the waters.¹³

R. Nahman b. Isaac introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: A Song of Ascents: If it had not been for the Lord who was for us, let Israel now say If it had not been the Lord who was for us when a man¹⁴ rose up against us¹⁵ — ‘a man’ and not a king.¹⁶

Raba introduced his discourse on this section from here: When the righteous are increased the people rejoice, but when the wicked beareth rule the people sigh.¹⁷ ‘When the righteous are increased the people rejoice’ — this is illustrated by Mordecai and Esther, as it is written, and the city of Shushan shouted and was glad.¹⁸ ‘But when the wicked beareth rule the people sigh’ — this is illustrated by Haman, as it is written, but the city of Shushan was perplexed.¹⁹ R. Mattenah made his introduction²⁰ from this verse: For what great nation is there that hath God so nigh to them.²¹ R. Ashi made it from this verse: Or hath God assayed etc.²²

And it came to pass [wa-yehi] in the days of Ahasuerus²³ etc. Rab said, [The word wa-yehi is equivalent to] ‘wai and hi’ [woe and mourning]. With reference to this it is written, and there ye shall sell yourselves unto your enemies for bondmen and for bondwomen, and no man shall buy you.²⁴

Samuel quoted: I did not reject them, neither did I abhor them to destroy them utterly.²⁵ ‘I did not reject them’ in the days of the Greeks; ‘neither did I abhor them’ — in the days of Nebuchadnezzar;²⁶ ‘to destroy them utterly’ — in the days of Haman; ‘and to break my covenant with them’ — in the days of the Persians;²⁷ ‘for I am the Lord their God’ — in the days of Gog and Magog.²⁸ In a Baraitha It was taught: ‘I have not rejected them’ — in the days of the Chaldeans, when I raised up for them Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah; ‘neither did I abhor them’ — in the days of the Greeks, when I raised up for them Simeon the Righteous and Hasmonai and his sons, and Mattathias the High Priest;²⁹ ‘to destroy them utterly’ — in the days of Haman, when I raised up for them Mordecai and Esther; ‘to break my covenant with them’ — in the days of the Persians,³⁰ when I raised up for them the members of the house of Rabbi and the Sages of the various generations. ‘For I am the Lord their God’ — in the time to come, when no nation or people³¹ will be able to subject them.

R. Levi introduced [his discourse] from this verse: But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land before you.³² R. Hiyya introduced [his discourse] from this verse: And it shall come to pass that as I thought to do unto them, so will I do unto you.³³

Ahasuerus: Rab said: He was [as his name implies], the brother of the head³⁴ and the counterpart of the head — ‘The brother of the head’: the brother of Nebuchadnezzar the wicked who was called head, as it is written, Thou art the head of gold.³⁵ ‘The counterpart of the head’: the one slew, the other sought to slay; the one laid waste, the other sought to lay waste, as it is written, And in the reign of Ahasuerus, in the beginning of his reign, wrote they an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.³⁶ Samuel said that [as his name indicates], the face of Israel was blackened³⁷ in his days like the sides of a pot. R. Johanan said that [his name indicates that] everyone who thought of him said ‘alas for my head’.³⁸ R. Hanina said, [it indicates that] all became poor³⁹ in his days, as it says, And the king Ahasuerus laid a tribute.⁴⁰

That [hu] is Ahasuerus. — [this means that] he persisted in his wickedness from beginning to end — [Similarly] this is [hu] Esau:⁴¹ the same in his wickedness from beginning to end. [Similarly], These are that [hu] Dathan and Abiram:⁴² the same in their wickedness from the beginning to the end. [Similarly], this same [hu] king Ahaz:⁴³ the same in his wickedness from the beginning to the end. [Similarly], Abram, the same [hu] is Abraham:⁴⁴ the same in his righteousness from the beginning to the end. [Similarly], These are that [hu] Aaron and Moses:⁴⁵ the same in their righteousness from the beginning to the end. [Similarly], And David, he was [hu] the smallest;⁴⁶ he persisted in his humility⁴⁷ from the beginning to the end; just as in his youth he humbled himself before anyone who was his superior in Torah, so in his kingship he humbled himself before anyone who was his superior in wisdom.

Who reigned: Rab said: this indicates that he raised himself to the throne.⁴⁸ Some interpret this to his credit, and some to his discredit. Some interpret it to his credit, holding that there was no other man equally fitted for the throne. Others interpret it to his discredit, holding that he was not fitted for the throne, but that he was very wealthy, and by means of lavish distribution of money rose to the throne.

From Hodu to Cush.⁴⁹ Rab and Samuel gave different interpretations of this. One said that Hodu is at one end of the world and Cush at the other, and the other said that Hodu and Cush adjoin one another, and that [the meaning is that] as he ruled over Hodu and Cush, so he ruled from one end of the world to the other. A similar difference occurs with reference to the words, For he had dominion over all the region on this side of the River, from Tiphseh even unto Gaza.⁵⁰ Here again Rab and Samuel interpreted differently. One said that Tiphseh is at one end of the world and Gaza at the other, and the other said that Tiphseh and Gaza are near one another [and that what is meant is that] as he [Solomon] ruled over Tiphseh and over Gaza, so he ruled over the whole world.⁵¹ Seven and twenty and a hundred provinces. R. Hisda said: At first he ruled over seven, then over twenty [more], and finally over a hundred [more]. But if you interpret thus, what of the verse, And the years of the life of Amram were seven and thirty and a hundred years?⁵² What lesson will you derive from that? — There is a difference here, because the whole text is superfluous. See now: it is written, from Hodu to Cush. Why then do I require, seven and twenty and a hundred provinces? You must conclude that it is for a special lesson .

Our Rabbis taught: Three [potentates] ruled over the whole globe,⁵³ namely, Ahab, Ahasuerus and Nebuchadnezzar.⁵⁴ Ahab, as it is written, As the Lord thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee etc.⁵⁵ Now if he was not king over them, how could he make them take an oath? Nebuchadnezzar, as it is written: And it shall come to pass that the nation and the kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon and will not put their neck under the yoke of the King of Babylon.⁵⁶ Ahasuerus, as we have pointed out above

(Mnemonic: Sh'S'D'K')¹ But are there no more? Is there not Solomon? — He did not retain his kingdom [till his death]. This is a sufficient answer for the one who holds that he was first a king and then a subject.² But for the one who holds that he was first a king, then a subject, and then a king again, what can we reply? — Solomon was in a different category, because he ruled over the denizens of the upper world³ as well as of the lower, as it says, And Solomon sat upon the throne of the Lord.⁴

But was there not Sennacherib, as it is written, Who are they among all the gods of these countries that have delivered their country out of my hand.⁵ — There was Jerusalem which he had not subdued.

But was there not Darius, as it is written, Then king Darius wrote unto all the peoples, nations and languages that dwell in all the earth, Peace be multiplied unto you?⁶ — There were the seven over which he did not rule, as it is written, It pleased Darius to set over the kingdom a hundred and twenty satraps.⁷ But there was Cyrus, of whom it is written, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdom of the earth hath the Lord given me?⁸ — There he was merely indulging in a boast.

In those days, when the king sat [on his throne].⁹ [How can this be] seeing that it says just afterwards, in the third year of his reign? — Raba said: What is meant by ‘when he sat’? After he began to feel secure. He reasoned thus: ‘Belshazar calculated and made a mistake; I have calculated and made no mistake’ — What is the meaning of this? — It is written, After seventy years are accomplished for Babylon I will remember you,¹⁰ and it is written, That He would accomplish for the desolations of Jerusalem seventy years.¹¹ He reckoned forty-five years of Nebuchadnezzar and twenty-three of Evilmerodach and two of his own, making seventy in all. He then brought out the vessels of the Temple and used them. And how do we know that Nebuchadnezzar reigned forty-five years? — As a Master has said: ‘They went into exile in the seventh year and they went into exile in the eighth year; they went into exile in the eighteenth year and they went into exile in the nineteenth year’ — [That is to say], in the seventh year after the subjection of Jehoiakim¹² they underwent the exile of Jeconiah, this being the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar.¹³ In the eighteenth year from the subjection of Jehoiakim¹⁴ they underwent the exile of Zedekiah, this being the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar,¹⁵ as a Master has said, In the first year [of his reign] he [Nebuchadnezzar] overthrew Nineveh; in the second year he conquered Jehoiakim¹⁶ and it is written, And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month in the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evilmerodach King of Babylon, in the year of his reign, lifted up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah and brought him forth out of prison.¹⁷ Eight and thirty-seven make forty-five of Nebuchadnezzar. The twenty-three of Evilmerodach we know from tradition. These with two of his own¹⁸ make seventy. He [Belshazar] said to himself, Now of a surety they will not be redeemed. So he brought out the vessels of the Temple and used them. Hence it was that Daniel said to him, but thou hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven, and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee.¹⁹ It is further written, In that night Belshazar the Chaldean king was slain,²⁰ and it is written, And Darius the Mede received the kingdom, being about threescore and two years old.²¹ He [Ahasuerus] said: He calculated and made a mistake,²² I will calculate and make no mistake. Is it written, ‘seventy years for the kingdom of Babylon?’²³ It is written, seventy years for Babylon. What is meant by Babylon? The exile of Babylon — How many years [is this reckoning] less [than the other]? Eight.²⁴ So in place of them he inserted one of Belshazar,²⁵ five of Darius and Cyrus,²⁶ and two of his own, which made seventy — When he saw that seventy had been completed and they were not redeemed, he brought out the vessels of the Temple and used them — Then the Satan came and danced among them and slew Vashti.

But he reckoned correctly? — He also made a mistake, since he ought to have reckoned from the destruction of Jerusalem.²⁷ Granted all this, how many years are short? Eleven. How long did he reign? Fourteen.²⁸ Consequently in the fourteenth year of his reign he ought to have rebuilt the Temple. Why then is it written, Then ceased the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem?²⁹ — Raba replied: The years were not full ones.³⁰

It has been taught to the same effect: There was yet another year left to Babylon,¹ and Darius arose and completed it.

Raba said: Daniel also made a mistake in this calculation, as it is written, In the first year of his reign, I Daniel meditated in the books [etc.].² From his use of the words 'I meditated' we can infer that he [at first] made a mistake.

All the same, there is a contradiction between the texts [is there not]? It is written [in one], when there are accomplished for Babylon,³ and it is written [in the other], for the desolations of Jerusalem? — Raba replied: [The first term] was for visitation [pekidah] only, and this was fulfilled, as it is written, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of the earth hath the Lord, the God of the heavens, given to me, and he hath charged [pakad] me to build him a house in Jerusalem.⁴

R. Nahman son of R. Hisda gave the following exposition. What is the meaning of the verse, Thus saith the Lord to his anointed to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden.⁵ Now was Cyrus the Messiah? Rather what it means is: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to the Messiah: I have a complaint on thy behalf against Cyrus.⁶ I said, He shall build my house and gather my exiles,⁷ and he [merely] said, Whosoever there is among you of all his people, let him go up.

The army of Persia and Media, the nobles. And elsewhere it is written, [The chronicles] of the kings of Media and Persia.⁸ [How is this]? — Raba replied: They [the Medes and Persians] made a stipulation with one another, saying, if we supply the kings, you will supply the Governors, and if you supply the kings we will supply the Governors.

When he showed the riches of his glorious [tif'ereh] kingdom. R. Jose b. Hanina said: This shows that he arrayed himself in priestly robes. It is written here, 'the riches of his glorious [tif'ereh] kingdom', and it is written elsewhere [in connection with the priestly garments], for splendour and for glory, [tif'ereh].⁹

And when these days were fulfilled.¹⁰ Rab and Samuel interpreted this differently. One said he was a clever king, and the other said that he was a foolish king. The one who held he was a clever king said that he did well in entertaining¹¹ his distant subjects first, because he could win over the inhabitants of his own city any time he wished. The one who held that he was foolish says that he ought to have entertained the inhabitants of his metropolis first, so that if the others rebelled against him, these would have supported him.

R. Simon b. Yohai was asked by his disciples, Why were the enemies of Israel¹² in that generation deserving of extermination? He said to them: Do you answer. They said: Because they partook of the feast of that wicked one.¹³ [He said to them]: If so, those in Susa should have been killed, not those in other parts?¹⁴ They then said, Give your answer. He said to them: It was because they bowed down to the image.¹⁵ They said to him, Did God then show them favouritism?¹⁶ He replied: They only pretended to worship,¹⁷ and He also only pretended to exterminate them; and so it is written, For he afflicted not from his heart.¹⁸ In the court of the garden of the king's palace.¹⁹ Rab and Samuel gave different interpretations of this — One said that those who had the entree²⁰ of the court were [entertained] in the court, and those who had the entree of the garden in the garden, and those who had the entree of the palace in the palace. The other said: He first put them in the court, and it did not hold them — Then he took them into the garden and it did not hold them; and finally he had to take them into the palace, and he found room for them. In a Baraitha it was taught: He took them into the court and opened two doors for them, one into the garden and one into the palace.

White [hur], fine cotton [karpas] and blue.²¹ What is hur? — Rab said, fine lace-work. Samuel said: He spread for them, carpets of white silk. Karpas: R. Jose b. Haninah said: [this means] cushions of velvet.²²

Upon silver rods and pillars of marble; the couches were of gold and silver.²¹ It has been taught: R. Judah said: Silver for some and gold for others, according to their degree. Said R. Nehemiah to him: If that were so, there would have been²³ jealousy at the banquet! No; the couches themselves were of silver and their feet of gold.

Green [bahat] and white marble.²¹ R. Assi said: [This means] stones that flash back at their owner;²⁴ and so it says, as the stones of a crown, glittering over his land.²⁵

And shell [dar] and onyx marble [sohareh].²¹ Rab said: This means rows [dari] upon rows.²⁶ Samuel says: There is a precious stone in the seaports called darah. He put it in the midst of the guests, and it lit up the place as at midday [Sahara].²⁷ In the school of R. Ishmael it was taught: It means that he gave a remission of taxes [deror] to all who dealt in merchandise [sehorah].

And they gave them drink in vessels of gold, the vessels being diverse [shonim] one from another.²⁸ It should have said, in different vessels? — Raba said: A bath kol²⁹ went forth and said to them, Your predecessors³⁰ met their end on account of vessels, and yet you use them again

And royal wine in abundance.²⁸ Rab said: This teaches that each one was given to drink wine older³² than himself.

And the drinking was according to law.³³ What is meant by ‘according to law’? — R. Hanan said in the name of R. Meir: According to the law of the Torah. Just as according to the law of the Torah the [quantity of] food exceeds the drink,³⁴ so in the feast of that wicked one there was more food than drink.

None did compel.³³ R. Eleazar said: This teaches that each one was given to drink from the wine of his own country.³⁵

That they should do according to every man's [ish, ish] pleasure.³³ Raba said: This means that they should do according to the will of Mordecai and Haman.³⁶ Mordecai [is called ‘man’] as it is written, A Jewish man;³⁷ and Haman, [as it is written], a man, an adversary and an enemy.³⁸

Also Vashti the queen made a feast for the women in the royal house.³⁹ It should have said, ‘the women's house’? — Raba said: Both of them [Ahasuerus and Vashti] had an immoral purpose. This bears out the popular saying, He with large pumpkins and his wife with small pumpkins.

On the seventh day, where the king's heart was merry with wine.¹ Was then his heart not merry with wine until then? — Rab said: The seventh day was Sabbath, when Israel eat and drink. They begin with discourse on the Torah and with words of thanksgiving [to God]. But the nations of the world, the idolaters, when they eat and drink only begin with words of frivolity. And so at the feast of that wicked one. Some said, The Median women are the most beautiful, and others said, The Persian women are the most beautiful. Said Ahasuerus to them, The vessel that I use is neither Median nor Persian, but Chaldean. Would you like to see her? They said, Yes, but it must be naked — (For man receives measure for measure.² This [remark] teaches you that the wicked Vashti used to take the daughters of Israel and strip them naked and make them work on Sabbath.³ So it is written, After these things when the wrath of the king Ahasuerus abated, he remembered Vashti and what she had done and what was decided against her.⁴ As she had done so it was decreed against her.)

And the queen Vashti refused.⁵ Let us see. She was immodest, as the Master said above, that both of them had an immoral purpose. Why then would she not come? — R. Jose b. Hanina said: This teaches that leprosy broke out on her. In a Baraitha it was taught that Gabriel came and fixed a tail on her.⁶

And the king was very angry,⁵ Why was he so enraged? — Raba said: She sent him back answer: Thou son of my father's steward,⁷ my father drank wine in the presence of a thousand,⁸ and did not get drunk, and that man has become senseless with his wine. Straightway, his wrath burnt within him.⁵

And the king said to the wise men.⁹ Who are the wise men? — The Rabbis. Who knew the times:⁹ that is, who knew how to intercalate years and fix new moons. He said to them: Try her for me. They said [to themselves]: What shall we do? If we tell him to put her to death, to-morrow he will become sober¹⁰ again and he will require her from us. Shall we tell him to let her go? She will lose all her respect for royalty. So they said to him: From the day when the Temple was destroyed and we were exiled from our land, counsel has been taken from us and we do not know how to judge capital cases. Go to Ammon and Moab¹¹ who have remained in their places like wine that has settled on its lees. They spoke to him thus with good reason, since it is written, Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity. Therefore his taste remaineth in him, and his scent is not changed.¹² Straightway [he did so, as we read], and the next unto him was Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish [etc.].¹³ R. Levi said: Every name in this verse contains a reference to the sacrifices. Thus, Carshena: the ministering angels said to the Holy One, blessed be He: Sovereign of the Universe, did they ever offer before thee lambs of the first year [karim bene shanah] as Israel offered before Thee? Shethar: did they ever offer before Thee two pigeons [shte torim]? Admatha: did they ever build before Thee an altar of earth [adamah]? Tarshish: did they ever minister before Thee in the priestly garments, of which it is written [that they contained] a beryl [tarshish], an onyx and a jasper?¹⁴ Meres: did they ever stir [mersu] the blood [of the sacrifice] before Thee? Marsena: did they ever stir [mersu] the meal-offerings before Thee? Memucan: did they ever prepare [hekinu] a table before Thee?

And Memucan said.¹⁵ A Tanna taught: Memucan is the same as Haman, And why was he called Memucan? Because he was destined [mukan] for punishment. R. Kahana said: From here we see that an ordinary man always pushes¹⁶ himself in front.¹⁷

That every man should bear rule in his house.¹⁸ Raba said: Had it not been for these first letters, there would have been left no shred or remnant of the enemies of Israel.¹⁹ People said: What does he mean by sending us word that every man should bear rule in his own house? Of course he should! Even a weaver in his own house must be commander!²⁰

And let the king appoint officers.²¹ Rabbi said: What is the meaning of the verse, Even prudent man dealeth with forethought, but a fool unfoldeth folly?²² 'Every prudent man dealeth with forethought': this applies to David, of whom, it is written, Wherefore his servants said unto him, Let there be sought for my lord the king a young virgin:²³ every one who had a daughter brought her.²⁴ But a fool unfoldeth folly': this applies to Ahasuerus, of whom it is written, and let the king appoint officers: whoever had a daughter hid her.²⁵

There was a certain Jew in Shushan the castle, etc. a Benjamite.²⁶ What is the point of this verse? If it is to give the pedigree of Mordecai, it should trace it right back to Benjamin!²⁷ [Why then were only these specified?] — A Tanna taught: All of them are designations [of Mordecai]. 'The son of Jair' means, the son who enlightened [he'ir] the eyes of Israel by his prayer. 'The son of Shimei means, the son to whose prayer God hearkened [shama']. 'The son of Kish' indicates that he knocked [hikkish] at the gates of mercy and they were opened to him. He is called 'a Jew' [yehudi] which implies that he came from [the tribe of] Judah, and he is called 'a Benjamite', which implies that he came from Benjamin. [How is this]? — R. Nahman said: He was a man of distinguished character.²⁸ Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: His father was from Benjamin and his mother from Judah. The Rabbis, however, said: The tribes competed with one another [for him]. The tribe of Judah said: I am responsible for the birth of Mordecai, because David did not kill Shimei the son of Gera, and the tribe of Benjamin said: He is actually descended from me. Raba said: The community of Israel explained [the two designations] in the opposite²⁹ sense: 'See what a Judean did to me and how a Benjamite repaid me!' What a Judean did to me viz., that David did not kill Shimei from whom was descended Mordecai who provoked Haman. 'And how a Benjamite repaid me', viz., that Saul did not slay Agag from whom was descended Haman who oppressed Israel. R. Johanan said: He did indeed come from Benjamin. Why then was he called 'a Jew'? Because he repudiated idolatry. For anyone who repudiates idolatry is called 'a Jew', as it is written, There are certain Jews¹ etc.

R. Simon b. Pazzi once introduced an exposition of the Book of Chronicles as follows: 'All thy words are one,² and we know how to find their inner meaning'. [It is written], And his wife the Jewess bore Jered the father of Gedor, and Heber the father of Socho, and Jekuthiel the father of Zanoah, and these are the sons of Bithya the daughter of Pharaoh, whom Mered took.³ Why was she [the daughter of Pharaoh] called a Jewess? Because she repudiated idolatry, as it is written, And the daughter of Pharaoh went down to bathe in the river,⁴ and R. Johanan, [commenting on this,] said that she went down to cleanse herself⁵ from the idols of her father's house. 'Bore': But she only brought him [Moses] up? — This tells us that if anyone brings up an orphan boy or girl in his house, the Scripture accounts it as if he had begotten him. 'Jered': this is Moses. Why was he called Jered? Because manna came down [yarad] for Israel in his days.⁶ 'Gedor': [he was so called] because he fenced in [gadar] the breaches of Israel. 'Heber', because he joined [hiber] Israel to their Father in heaven. 'Socho', because he was like a sheltering booth [sukkah] for Israel. 'Jekuthiel', because Israel trusted in God [kiwu le'el] in his days. 'Zanoah', because he made Israel abandon [hizniah] their iniquities. 'Father of', 'father of', 'father of': he was a father in Torah, a father in wisdom, a father in prophecy. 'These are the sons of Bithya whom Mered took'. Was Mered his name? Was not Caleb his name?⁷ — The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Let Caleb who rebelled [marad] against the plan of the spies come and take the daughter of Pharaoh who rebelled against the idols of her father's house.

Who had been carried away from Jerusalem.⁸ Raba said: [We understand this to mean] that he went into exile of his own accord.⁹

And he brought up Hadassah.¹⁰ She is called Hadassah¹¹ and she is called Esther. It has been taught: Esther was her proper name. Why then was she called Hadassah? After the designation of the righteous who are called myrtles,¹² for so it says, And he stood among the myrtle trees.¹³ R. Judah says: Hadassah was her name — Why then was she called Esther? Because she concealed [mastereth] the facts about herself, as it says, Ester did not make known her people or her kindred.¹⁴ R. Nehemiah says: Hadassah was her name. Why then was she called Esther? All peoples called her so after Istahar.¹⁵ Ben ‘Azzai said: Esther was neither too tall nor too short, but of medium size, like a myrtle. R. Joshua b. Korha said: Esther was sallow,¹⁶ but endowed with great charm.¹⁷

For she had neither father nor mother. [And it continues] and when her father and mother died.¹⁰ Why these last words?¹⁸ — R. Aha said: When her mother became pregnant with her, her father died; when she was born, her mother died.

And when her father and mother died, Mordecai took her for his own daughter.¹⁹ A Tanna taught in the name of R. Meir: Read not ‘for a daughter’ [le-bath], but ‘for a house’ [le-bayith].²⁰ Similarly it says: But the poor man had nothing save one little ewe lamb, which he had brought up and reared; and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own morsel, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter.²¹ Because it lay in his bosom, was it like a daughter to him? Rather what it means is like a wife; so here, it means a wife.

And the seven maidens who were meet to be given to her.²² Raba said: [They were seven so that] she could count the days of the week by them.

And he changed²³ her and her maidens. Rab said: [This means that] he gave her Jewish food to eat. Samuel, however, said, it means that he gave her chines of pork²⁴ while R. Johanan said that he gave her pulse, and so it says, So the steward took away their food and gave them pulse.²⁵

Six months with the oil of myrrh.²⁶ What is the oil of myrrh? R. Hiyya b. Abba said, Satchet;²⁷ R. Huna said, Oil from olives not a third grown. It has been taught: R. Judah says that anpikinun²⁸ is oil of olives not a third grown. Why is it used for smearing? Because it removes hair and makes the skin soft.

In the evening she went and on the morrow she returned.²⁹ From the discreditable account of that wicked man we can learn something to his credit, namely, that he did not perform his marital office by day.

And Esther obtained favour.³⁰ R. Eleazar said: This informs us that every man took her for a member of his own people.

So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus into his house royal in the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth:³¹ the month when body warms up body.³² And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and favour in his sight more than all the virgins.³³ Rab said: If he wanted to find in her the taste of a virgin he found it; if the taste of a married woman, he found it.

Then the king made a great feast.³⁴ He made a feast for her, and she did not tell him [who she was]. He remitted taxes,³⁵ and she did not tell him. He sent gifts,³⁶ and she [still] did not tell him.

And when the virgins were gathered together the second time, etc.³⁷ He went and took counsel of Mordecai who said, The way to rouse a woman is to make her jealous;³⁸ and even so she did not tell.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 13b

He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous?¹ In reward for the modesty displayed by Rachel, she was granted to number among her descendants Saul; and in reward for the modesty displayed by Saul, he was granted to number among his descendants Esther.² What was the modesty displayed by Rachel? — As it is written: And Jacob told Rachel that he was her father's brother.³ Now was he her father's brother? Was he not the son of her father's sister? What it means is this: He said to her, Will you marry me? She replied, Yes, but my father is a trickster, and he will outwit you.⁴ He replied, I am his brother in trickery. She said to him, Is it permitted to the righteous to indulge in trickery? He replied. Yes: with the pure thou dost show thyself pure and with the crooked thou dost show thyself subtle.⁵ He said to her, What is his trickery? She replied : I have a sister older than I am , and he will not let me marry before her. So he gave her certain tokens. When night came, she said to herself, Now my sister will be put to shame. So she handed over the tokens to her. So it is written, And it came to pass in the morning that, behold, it was Leah.⁶ Are we to infer from this that up to now she was not Leah? What it means is that on account of the tokens which Rachel gave to Leah he did not know till then. Therefore she was rewarded by having Saul among her descendants — What modesty did Saul display? — As it is written, But concerning the matter of the kingdom whereof Samuel spoke he told him not.⁷ He was therefore rewarded by having Esther among his descendants.

R. Eleazar further said: When the Holy One, blessed be He, assigns greatness to a man, he assigns it to his sons and his sons' sons for all generations, as it says, [With kings on the throne;] He setteth them for ever and they are exalted.⁸ If, however, he becomes arrogant, God humiliates him, as it says. And if they be bound in fetters etc.⁹

For Esther did the commandment of Mordecai.¹⁰ R. Jeremiah said: [This means] that she used to show the blood of her impurity to the Sages.

Like as when she was brought up with him.¹⁰ Rabbah b. Lema said in the name of Rab: [This means] that she used to rise from the lap of Ahasuerus and bathe and sit in the lap of Mordecai.¹¹

In those days, while Mordecai sat in the king's gate, Bigthan and Teresh were wroth.¹² R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: The Holy One, blessed be He, [once] caused a master to be wroth with his servants in order to fulfil the desire of a righteous man, namely Joseph, as it says, And there was with us there a young man, a Hebrew, etc.;¹³ and servants with their master in order to perform a miracle for a righteous man, namely, Mordecai, as it is written, 'And the thing was known to Mordecai etc. ' R. Johanan said: Bigthan and Teresh were two Tarseans¹⁴ and conversed in the Tarsean language. They said: From the day this woman came we have been able to get no sleep.¹⁵ Come, let us put poison in the dish so that he will die. They did not know that Mordecai was one of those who had seats in the Chamber of Hewn Stone,¹⁶ and that he understood seventy languages.¹⁷ Said the other to him, But are not my post and your post different?¹⁸ He replied: I will keep guard at my post and at yours. So it is written, And when inquisition was made, he was found,¹⁹ that is to say, they were not [both] found at their posts.

After these things.²⁰ After what? — Raba said: After God had created a healing for the blow [which was about to fall]. For Resh Lakish has said: The Holy One, blessed be He, does not smite Israel unless He has created for them a healing beforehand, as it says . When I have healed Israel, then is the iniquity of Ephraim uncovered.²¹ Not so, however, with the other nations: He smites them first, and then creates for them a healing, as it says: The Lord will smite Egypt, smiting and healing.²²

But it seemed contemptible in his eyes to lay hands on Mordecai alone.²³ At first he aimed at 'Mordecai alone', then at 'the people of Mordecai' — and who are these? The Rabbis; and finally at 'all the Jews'.

They cast pur, that is the lot.²⁴ A Tanna taught: When the lot fell on the month of Adar, he rejoiced greatly. saying, The lot has fallen for me on the month in which Moses died. He did not know, however, that Moses died on the seventh of Adar and was born on the sixth of Adar.

There is one people.²⁵ Raba said: There never was a traducer so skillful as Haman. He said to Ahasuerus, Come, let us destroy them. He replied: I am afraid of their God, lest He do to me as He did to my predecessors. He replied: They are 'negligent'²⁶ of the precepts. He said, There are Rabbis among them.²⁷ He replied. They are ‘one people’.²⁸ Should you say that I will make a void²⁹ in your kingdom, [I reply], they are ‘scattered abroad among the peoples’. Should you say. There is some profit in them, I reply, ‘they are dispersed’ [nifredu], like an isolated bough [peridah] that does not bear fruit. Should you say that they occupy one province, I reply, ‘they are in all the provinces of thy kingdom’. ‘Their laws are diverse from those of every other people’: they do not eat of our food, nor do they marry our women nor give us theirs in marriage, ‘Neither keep they the king's laws’, since they evade taxes the whole year³⁰ by their loitering and sauntering.³¹ ‘Therefore it profiteth not the king to suffer them’, because they eat and drink and despise the throne. For if a fly falls into the cup of one of them, he throws it out and drinks the wine, but if my lord the king were to touch his cup, he would dash it on the ground and not drink from it. ‘If it please the king, let it be written that they be destroyed, and I will pay ten thousand talents of silver’: Resh Lakish said: It was well known beforehand to Him at whose word the world came into being that Haman would one day pay shekels for the destruction of Israel. Therefore He anticipated his shekels with those of Israel. And so we have learnt: ‘On the first of Adar³² proclamation is made regarding the shekalim³³ and the mixed seeds’.³⁴

And the king said to Haman, The silver is given to thee and the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee.³⁵ R. Abba said:

Talmud - Mas. Megillah 14a

To what can we compare Ahasuerus and Haman at this point? To two men one of whom had a mound in the middle of his field and the other a ditch in the middle of his field. The owner of the ditch said, I wish I could buy that mound, and the owner of the mound said, I wish I could buy that ditch. One day they met, and the owner of the ditch said, Sell me your mound, whereupon the other replied, Take it for nothing, and I shall be only too glad.¹

And the king removed his ring.² R. Abba b. Kahana said: This removal of the ring was more efficacious than forty-eight prophets³ and seven prophetesses⁴ who prophesied to Israel; for all these were not able to turn Israel to better courses, and the removal of the ring did turn them to better courses.⁵

Our Rabbis taught: 'Forty-eight prophets and seven prophetesses prophesied to Israel, and they neither took away from nor added aught to what is written in the Torah save only the reading of the Megillah'. How did they derive it [from the Torah]? — R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Joshua b. Korha: If for being delivered from slavery to freedom we chant a hymn of praise, should we not do so all the more for being delivered from death to life? If that is the reason we should say Hallel⁶ also? — [We do not do so] because Hallel is not said for a miracle which occurred outside of the land of Israel. How then do we come to say it for the Exodus from Egypt which was a miracle which occurred outside the land of Israel? — As it has been taught: 'Until they entered the land of Israel, all lands were counted as proper for chanting a hymn of praise [for miracles done in them] — After they had entered the land, other countries were not counted as proper for chanting a hymn of praise [for miracles done in them]. R. Nahman said: The reading of the Megillah is equivalent to Hallel. Raba said:⁷ There is a good reason in that case [of the Exodus from Egypt] because it says [in the Hallel], Praise ye O servants of the Lord, who are no longer servants of Pharaoh — But can we say in this case, Praise ye, servants of the Lord and not servants of Ahasuerus? We are still servants of Ahasuerus! Whether on the view of Raba⁸ or on the view of R. Nahman,⁹ there is a difficulty in what has been taught [above], that 'after they had entered the land, other countries were not counted as proper for chanting a hymn of praise [for miracles done in them]'? — When the people went into exile, the other countries became proper as at first.

Were there no more prophets than these [forty-eight]? — Is it not written, How there was a man from Ramathaim-Zophim,¹⁰ [which we interpret], one of two hundred prophets [zophim]¹¹ who prophesied to Israel? — There were actually very many, as it has been taught, 'Many prophets arose for Israel, double the number of [the Israelites] who came out of Egypt', only the prophecy which contained a lesson for¹² future generations was written down, and that which did not contain such a lesson was not written.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: This [Ramathaim-Zophim] means, a man who came from two heights which faced one another.¹³ R. Hanin said: It means, a man who came from ancestors of the most exalted position.¹⁴ And who were they? The sons of Korah, as it says, And the sons of Korah did not die.¹⁵ A Tanna taught in the name of our Teacher:¹⁶ A special place was assigned¹⁷ to them in Gehinnom and they stood on it.

'Seven prophetesses'. Who were these? — Sarah, Miriam, Deborah, Hannah, Abigail, Hulda and Esther. 'Sarah', as it is written, The father of Milkah and the father of Yiscah',¹⁸ and R. Isaac said [on this]. Yiscah is Sarah; and why was she called Yiscah? Because she discerned [sakethah] by means of the holy spirit, as it is said, In all that Sarah saith unto thee, hearken to her voice.¹⁹ Another explanation is: because all gazed [sakin] at her beauty. ‘Miriam’, as it is written, And Miriam the prophetess the sister of Aaron.²⁰ Was she only the sister of Aaron and not the sister of Moses? — R. Nahman said in the name of Rab: [She was so called] because she prophesied when she was the sister of Aaron [only]²¹ and said, My mother is destined to bear a son who will save Israel. When he was born the whole house was filled with light, and her father arose and kissed her on the head, saying, My daughter, thy prophecy has been fulfilled. But when they threw him into the river her father arose and tapped her on the head, saying, Daughter, where is thy prophecy? So it is written, And his sister stood afar off to know;²² to know, [that is,] what would be with the latter part of her prophecy. ‘Deborah’, as it is written, Now Deborah a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth.²³ What is meant by a woman of flames²³ ? [She was so called] because she used to make wicks for the Sanctuary. And she sat under a palm tree²⁴ Why just a palm tree? — R. Simeon b. Abishalom said: [To avoid] privacy.²⁵ Another explanation is: Just as a palm tree has only one heart, so Israel in that generation had only one heart devoted to their Father in heaven. ‘Hannah’, as it is written, And Hannah prayed and said, My heart exulteth in the Lord, my horn is exalted in the Lord.²⁶ [She said], my horn is exalted’, and not, my cruse is exalted’, thus implying that the royalty of [the hour of] David and Solomon, who were anointed from a horn,²⁷ would be prolonged,²⁸ but the royalty of [the house of] Saul and Jehu,²⁹ who were anointed with a cruse, would not be prolonged.

There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none beside thee.³⁰ R. Judah b. Menashia said: Read not bilteka, ‘beside thee’], but read lebalotheka [‘to survive thee’]. For the nature of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like that of flesh and blood. It is the nature of flesh and blood to be survived by its works, but God survives His works. Neither is there any rock [zur] like our God.³⁰ There is no artist [zayyar] like our God. A man draws a figure on a wall, but is unable to endow it with breath and spirit, inward parts and intestines. But the Holy One, blessed be He, fashions a form within a form and endows it with breath and spirit, inward parts and intestines.

‘Abigail’, as it is written, And it was so, as she rode on her ass and came down by the covert of the mountain.³¹ ‘By the covert [sether] of the mountain’? It should say from the mountain’! — Rabbah b. Samuel said: It means that she came with reference to blood that came from the hidden parts [setharim]. She brought some blood and showed it to him.³² He said to her: Is blood to be shown by night? She replied: Are capital cases tried at night?³³ He said to her:

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 14b

He [Nabal] is a rebel against the king and no trial is necessary for him.¹ She replied; Saul is still alive, and your fame is not yet spread abroad in the world. Then he said to her: Blessed be thy discretion and blessed be thou, that hast kept me this day from bloodguiltiness.² The word damim [bloodguiltiness] is plural, to indicate two kinds of blood.³ The passage teaches that she bared her thigh⁴ and he went three parasangs by the light of it.⁵ He said, Listen to me. She replied, Let not this be a stumbling-block to thee.⁶ The word 'this' implies that something else would be, and what was that? The incident of Bathsheba; and so it was eventually.⁷ The soul of thy lord shall be bound up in the bundle of life.⁸ When she left him she said to him, and when the Lord shall have done good to my lord . . . then remember thy handmaid.⁹ R. Nahman said: This bears out the popular saying, While a woman talks she spins.¹⁰ Some adduce the saying: The goose stoops as it goes along, but its eyes peer afar.

'Hulda, as it is written, So Hilkiyah the priest and Ahikam and Achbor etc.¹¹ But if Jeremiah was there,¹² how could she prophesy? — It was said in the school of Rab in the name of Rab: Hulda was a near relative of Jeremiah, and he did not object to her doing so. But how could Josiah himself pass over Jeremiah and send to her? — The members of the school of R. Shila replied, Because women are tender-hearted.¹³ R. Johanan said: Jeremiah was not there, as he had gone to bring back the ten tribes. Whence do we know that they returned? — Because it is written, For the seller shall not return to that which is sold.¹⁴ Now is it possible that after the Jubilee had ceased¹⁵ the prophet should prophesy that it will cease? The fact is that it teaches that Jeremiah brought them back.¹⁶ Josiah the son of Amon ruled over them, as it says, Then he said, What monument is that which I see? And the men of the city told him, It is the sepulchre of the man of God who came from Judah, and proclaimed these things that thou hast done against the altar in Beth-el.¹⁷ Now what connection is there between Josiah and the altar in Bethel?¹⁸ What it teaches therefore is that Josiah reigned over them. R. Nahman said: We learn it from here: Also, O Judah, there is a harvest appointed for thee, when I would turn the captivity of my people.¹⁹

'Esther,' as it is written, Now it came to pass on the third day that Esther clothed herself in royalty.²⁰ Surely it should say, 'royal apparel'? What it shows is that the holy spirit clothed her. It is written here, 'and she clothed', and it is written in another place. Then the spirit clothed Amasai, etc.²¹

R. Nahman said: Haughtiness does not befit women. There were two haughty women, and their names are hateful, one being called a hornet²² and the other a weasel.²³ Of the hornet it is written, And she sent and called Barak,²⁴ instead of going to him. Of the weasel it is written, Say to the man,²⁵ instead of 'say to the king'.

R. Nahman said: Hulda was a descendant of Joshua. It is written here [in connection with Hulda]. The son of Harhas,²⁶ and it is written in another place [in connection with Joshua], In Timnath-Heres.²⁷ R. 'Ena Saba cited the following in objection to R. Nahman: 'Eight prophets who were also priests were descended from Rahab the harlot, namely, Neriah, Baruch, Serayah, Mahseyah, Jeremiah, Hilkiyah, Hanamel and Shallum.' R. Judah says: Hulda the prophetess was also one of the descendants of Rahab the harlot. [We know this] because it is written here 'the son of Tikvah' and it is written elsewhere [in connection with Rahab]. 'the line [tikvath] of scarlet thread'!²⁸ — He replied: 'Ena Saba'²⁹ — or, according to another report. 'Black bowl',³⁰ — the truth can be found by combining my statement and yours'.³¹ We must suppose that she became a proselyte and Joshua married her. But had Joshua any children? Is it not written, Nun his son, Joshua his son?³² — He had no sons, but he had daughters.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 15a

We admit that [some of] those [eight] mentioned above are expressly described [as prophets],¹ but how do we know that their fathers² [were prophets]? — From the dictum of ‘Ulla; for ‘Ulla said: Wherever a man's name is given along with that of his father as the author of a prophecy³ we know that he was a prophet son of a prophet. Where his own name is given but not that of his father, we know that he was a prophet but not the son of a prophet. Where his name and the name of his town are specified, we know that he came from that town — Where his name is given but not that of his town, we know that he was from Jerusalem — In a Baraita it was stated: If nothing is known about the character of a man or of his ancestors,⁴ and the Scripture mentions any one of them in connection with a praiseworthy action, as for instance, The word of the Lord which came to Zephaniah son of Cushi son of Gedaliah,⁵ we may know that he was a righteous man son of a righteous man; and wherever the Scripture mentions any one of them in connection with a reprehensible action, as for instance, And it came to pass in the seventh month that Ishmael the son...of Elishama came,⁶ we may know that he was a wicked man son of a wicked man.

R. Nahman⁷ said: Malachi is the same as Mordecai. Why was he called Malachi? Because he was next to the king.⁸ The following was cited in objection to this: ‘Baruch the son of Neriah and Serayah the son of Mahseyah and Daniel and Mordecai, Bilshan, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi all prophesied in the second year of Darius’! — This is a refutation.

It has been taught: R. Joshua b. Korha said: Malachi is the same as Ezra, and the Sages say that Malachi was his proper name. R. Nahman said: There is good ground for accepting the view that Malachi was the same as Ezra. For it is written in the prophecy of Malachi, Judah hath dealt treacherously and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem, for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which he loveth and hath married the daughter of a strange God.⁹ And who was it that put away the strange women? Ezra, as it is written, And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam answered and said unto Ezra: We have broken faith with our God and have married foreign women.¹⁰

The Rabbis taught: There have been four women of surpassing beauty in the world — Sarah, Rahab, Abigail and Esther. According to the one who says that Esther was sallow,¹¹ Vashti should be inserted in place of Esther.

Our Rabbis taught: Rahab inspired lust by her name; Jael by her voice; Abigail by her memory; Mical daughter of Saul by her appearance. R. Isaac said: Whoever says. ‘Rahab, Rahab’, at once has an issue. Said R. Nahman to him: I say Rahab, Rahab, and nothing happens to me! He replied: I was speaking of one who knows her and is intimate with her.

Now when Mordecai knew all that was done¹² [etc.]. What [was his cry]? — Rab said: He said, ‘Haman has raised himself above Ahasuerus’; Samuel said, ‘The upper king has prevailed over the lower king’.¹³

And the queen was exceedingly pained [wa-tithhalhal].¹⁴ What is the meaning of wa-tithhalhal?¹⁵ — Rab said: It means that she became menstruous; R. Jeremiah said that her bowels were loosened.

And Esther called Hatach.¹⁶ Rab said: Hatach is the same as Daniel. Why was he called Hatach? Because he was degraded [hataku-hu] from his position.¹⁷ Samuel said, Because all affairs of state were decided [nehtakim] by his voice.

To know what this was and why this was.¹⁶ R. Isaac said: She sent to him saying. Perhaps Israel have transgressed the five books of the Torah, in which is written, On this side and on this they were written.¹⁸

And they told Mordecai Esther's words.¹⁹ But Hatach did not go to him on this occasion.²⁰ This shows us that a recalcitrant answer²¹ need not be taken back [by the messenger].²²

Go, gather together all the Jews . . . which is not according to the custom.²³ R. Abba said: It will not be [she said] according to the custom of every other day. Till now [I have associated with Ahasuerus] under compulsion, but now I will do so of my own will.

And if I perish, I perish.²³ As I am lost to my father's house so I shall be lost to thee.²⁴

And Mordecai passed [wa-ya'abor].²⁵ Rab said: This indicates that he made the first day of Passover pass²⁶ as a fast day. Samuel said: It indicates that he crossed a stream [on that day].²⁷ Now it came to pass on the third day that Esther put on royalty.²⁸ Surely it should say, 'royal apparel'? — R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanina: This tells us that the holy spirit clothed her. It is written here, 'and she put on', and it is written elsewhere, And a spirit clothed Amasai.²⁹

R. Eleazar b. Hanina also said: Let not the blessing of an ordinary man be lightly esteemed in thine eyes, for two men great in their generation received from ordinary men blessings which were fulfilled in them. They were, David and Daniel. David was blessed by Araunah, as it is written, And Araunah said unto the king, The Lord thy God accept thee.³⁰ Daniel was blessed by Darius, as it is written 'Thy God whom thou servest continually, He will deliver thee.'³¹ R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: Let not the curse of an ordinary man be lightly esteemed in thine eyes, because Abimelech cursed Sarah, saying, Behold he is to thee a covering of the eyes,³² and this was fulfilled in her seed, [as it says], And it came to pass that when Isaac was old his eyes were dim.³³

R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: Come and observe that the way of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like the way of flesh and blood — The way of flesh and blood is that a man places a pot on the fire and then pours water into it, but God first puts in the water and then fixes the pot, to fulfil what is written, At the sound of his giving a multitude of waters in the heavens.³⁴

R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: Whoever reports a saying in the name of its originator brings deliverance to the world, as it says, And Esther told the king in the name of Mordecai.³⁵

R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: When a righteous man dies, he dies only for his own generation.³⁶ It is with him as with a man who loses a pearl. Wherever it is, it remains a pearl,³⁷ and is lost only to its owner.

Yet all this availeth me nothing.³⁸ R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanina: Because he saw Mordecai sitting in the king's gate, was this any reason why he should say, 'All this availeth me nothing'? The explanation is in the dictum of R. Hisda; for R. Hisda said: The one came [to the court] as a counsellor³⁹ and the other as an envoy.¹ R. Papa said: They also called him, The slave that was sold for loaves of bread.²

Yet all this availeth me nought. This tells us that all the treasures of that wretch were engraved on his heart, and when he saw Mordecai sitting in the king's gate he said, Yet all this³ availeth me nought.

R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: God will in the time to come be a crown on the head of every righteous man, as it is said, In that day shall the Lord of Hosts be for a crown of glory⁴ etc. What is meant by a 'crown of glory' [zebi] and a 'diadem [zefirath] of beauty'? For them that do his will [zibyono] and who await [mezapin] his glory. Shall He be so to all? [Not so]. since it says, 'unto the residue of [lish'ar] his people': that is, to whoever makes of himself a mere residue [shirayim]. 'And for a spirit of judgment': this indicates one who brings his inclination to trial.⁵ 'To him that sitteth in judgment': this indicates one who gives a true verdict on true evidence.⁶ 'And for strength': this indicates one who subdues his evil passions.⁷ 'That turn back the battle': this indicates those who thrust and parry⁸ in the war of the Torah. 'At the gate': these are the disciples of the wise who are early and late in synagogues and houses of study. Said the Attribute of Justice⁹ before the Holy One, blessed be He: Why this difference between these and the others? The Holy One, blessed be He, said to him: Israel busy themselves with the Torah, the other nations do not busy themselves with the Torah — He replied to Him, But these also reel through wine, and stagger through strong drink, they totter in judgment¹⁰ [paku pelilyah]; and 'paku' contains a reference to Gehinnom, as it says, that this shall be no stumbling-block [pukah] to thee;¹¹ and 'pelilyah' contains a reference to the judges, as it says. and he shall pay as the judges determine [bi-felilim].¹²

And stood in the inner court of the king's house.¹³ R. Levi said: When she reached the chamber of the idols, the Divine Presence left her. She said, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me.¹⁴ Dost thou perchance punish the inadvertent offence¹⁵ like the presumptuous one, or one done under compulsion like one done willingly? Or is it because I called him 'dog', as it says. Deliver my soul from the sword, mine only one from the power of the dog?¹⁶ She straightway retracted and called him lion, as it says. Save me from the lion's mouth.¹⁷

And it was so when the king saw Esther the queen.¹⁸ R. Johanan said: Three ministering angels were appointed to help her at that moment; one to make her head¹⁹ erect, a second to endow her with charm²⁰ and a third to stretch the golden sceptre. How much [was it stretched]? — R. Jeremiah said: It was two cubits long and he made it twelve cubits — Some say, sixteen, and some again twenty-four. In a Baraitha it was stated, sixty. So too you find with the arm of the daughter of Pharaoh,²¹ and so you find with the teeth of the wicked, as it is written, Thou hast broken [shibarta] the teeth of the wicked,²² and Resh Lakish said in regard to this, Read not shibarta but shirbapta [Thou hast prolonged]. Rabbah b. 'Ofra said in the name of R. Eleazar who had it from his teacher, who had it from his teacher, [that the sceptre was stretched] two hundred [cubits].

And the king said to her, What wilt thou, queen Esther? For whatever thy request, even to the half of the kingdom, it shall be given thee.²³ 'Half the kingdom', but not the whole kingdom. and not a thing which would divide the kingdom.²⁴ What could that be? The building of the Temple.

Let the king and Haman come unto the banquet.²⁵ Our Rabbis taught: What was Esther's reason for inviting Haman? — R. Eleazar said, She set a trap for him, as it says. Let their table before them become a snare.²⁶ R. Joshua said: She learnt to do so from her father's house, as it says. If thine enemy be hungry give him bread to eat, etc.²⁷ R. Meir said, So that he should not form a conspiracy²⁸ and rebel. R. Judah said: So that they should not discover that she was a Jewess.²⁹ R. Nehemiah said: So that Israel should not say, We have a sister in the palace, and so should neglect³⁰ [to pray for] mercy. R. Jose said: So that he should always be at hand for her.³¹ R. Simeon b. Menassiah said: [She said], Perhaps the Omnipresent will notice³² and do a miracle for us. R. Joshua b. Korha said: [She said], I will encourage him so that he may be killed, both he and I.³³ Rabban Gamaliel said: [She said]. Ahasuerus is a changeable king.³⁴ Said R. Gamaliel: We still require the Modean,³⁵ as it has been taught: R. Eliezer of Modi'im says, She made the king jealous of him and she made the princes jealous of him. Rabbah said: [She said], Pride goeth before destruction.³⁶ Abaye and Raba gave the same reason, saying: [She said], With their poison I will prepare their feast.³⁷ Rabbah b. Abbuha came across Elijah and said to him, Which of these reasons prompted Esther to act as she did? He replied: [All] the reasons given by all the Tannaim and all the Amoraim.

And Haman recounted unto them the glory of his riches and the multitude of his children.³⁸ How many are indicated by 'the multitude of his children'? — Rab said: Thirty. Ten died, ten were hung, and ten were reduced to beggary. The Rabbis, however, said: Those who were reduced to beggary numbered seventy, as it says, They that were full [sebe'im] have hired themselves out for bread.³⁹ Read not sebe'im, but shib'im [seventy]. Rami b. Abba said: In all they were two hundred and eight, as it says, And the multitude [we-rob] of his sons. But we-rob in gematria⁴⁰ is two hundred and fourteen?⁴¹ — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: The word is written defectively.⁴²

On that night the sleep of the king was disturbed.⁴³ R. Tanhun said: The sleep of the King of the Universe was disturbed. The Rabbis, however, say: Those above⁴⁴ were disturbed and those below⁴⁵ were disturbed. Raba said: It means literally ‘the sleep of king Ahasuerus. A thought occurred to him: What is the meaning of Esther inviting Haman? Perhaps they are conspiring⁴⁶ against me to kill me? He thought again: If that is so, is there no man who is my friend and who would tell me? Then he thought again: Perhaps there is some man who has done me a good turn and I have not rewarded him; and therefore men refrain from informing me. Straightway, he commanded to bring the book of records of the chronicles.⁴³

And they were read.⁴³ This [form of expression]⁴⁷ indicates that they were read of themselves.

And it was found [being] written.⁴⁸ It should say, a writing [kethab] was found? — This shows

There is nothing done for him.⁴ Raba said: [They answered him thus] not because they loved Mordecai but because they hated Haman.

He had prepared for him.⁵ A Tanna stated: [This means], he had prepared for himself.⁶

And do even so to Mordecai etc.⁷ Haman said to him: Who is Mordecai? He said to him: 'The Jew'. He said: There are many Mordecais among the Jews. He replied: 'The one who sits in the king's gate'. Said Haman to him: For him [the tribute] of one village or one river is sufficient! Said Ahasuerus: Give him that too; 'let nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken'.

Then took Haman the apparel and the horse.⁸ He went and found [Mordecai with] the Rabbis sitting before him while he showed them the rules of the 'handful'.⁹ When Mordecai saw him approaching and leading the horse, he became frightened and said to the Rabbis, This villain is coming to kill me. Get out of his way so that you should not get into trouble with him.¹⁰ Mordecai thereupon drew his robe round him and stood up to pray. Haman came up and sat down before them and waited till Mordecai had finished his prayer. He said to him: What have you been discussing? He replied: When the Temple stood, if a man brought a meal-offering he used to offer a handful of fine flour and make atonement therewith. Said Haman to them: Your handful of fine flour has come and displaced my ten thousand talents of silver. Said Mordecai to him: Wretch, if a slave acquires property, whose is the slave and whose is the property?¹¹ Haman then said to him: Arise and put on this apparel and ride on this horse, for so the king desires you to do. He replied: I cannot do so until I have gone into the bath and trimmed my hair, for it would not be good manners to use the king's apparel in this state. Now Esther had sent and closed all the baths and all the barbers' shops. So Haman himself took him into the bath and washed him, and then went and brought scissors from his house and trimmed his hair. While he was doing so, he sighed and groaned. Said Mordecai to him: Why do you sigh? He replied: The man who was esteemed by the king above all his nobles is now made a bath attendant and a barber. Said Mordecai to him: Wretch, and were you not once a barber in Kefar Karzum?¹² (For so a Tanna stated: Haman was a barber in Kefar Karzum twenty-two years.) After he had trimmed his hair he put the garments on him, and said to him, Mount and ride. He replied: I am not able, as I am weak from the days of fasting. So Haman stooped down and he mounted [on his back]. When he was up he kicked him. He said to him: Is it not written in your books,¹³ Rejoice not when thine enemy faileth?¹⁴ He replied: That refers to an Israelite, but in regard to you [folk] it is written, And thou shalt tread upon their high places.¹⁵

And proclaimed before him, This shall be done to the man whom the king delighted to honour.¹⁶ As he was leading him through the street where Haman lived, his daughter who was standing on the roof saw him. She thought that the man on the horse was her father and the man walking before him was Mordecai. So she took a chamber pot and emptied it on the head of her father. He looked up at her and when she saw that it was her father, she threw herself from the roof to the ground and killed herself. Hence it is written . . .¹⁷

And Mordecai returned to the king's gate. R. Shesheth said: This indicates that he returned to his sackcloth and fasting. But Haman hastened to his house, mourning and having his head covered; mourning for his daughter, and with his head covered on account of what had happened to him.

And Haman recounted unto Zeresh his wife and all his friends, etc. They are first called 'his friends' and then they are called 'his wise men'. R. Johanan said: Whoever says a wise thing even if he is a non-Jew¹⁸ is called 'wise'.

If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews. They said to him: If he comes from the other tribes, you can prevail over him, but if he is from the tribe of Judah or of Benjamin, Ephraim or Manasseh, you will not prevail over him. 'Judah', as it is written, Thy hand shall be on the neck of thine enemies.¹⁹ The others, because it is written of them, Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy might.²⁰

But falling thou shalt fall.²¹ R. Judah b. Ila'i drew a lesson from this verse, Saying: Why are two fallings mentioned here? Haman's friends said to him: This people is likened to the dust and it is likened to the stars. When they go down, they go down to the dust, and when they rise they rise to the stars. Came the king's chamberlains and hastened [wa-yabhilu] to bring Haman.²² The use of this word [wa-yabhilu]²³ tells us that they brought him all in confusion [behalah].

For we are sold, I and my people etc . . . For the adversary care²⁴ not that the king is endamaged.²⁵ She said to him: This adversary cares not for the damage of the king. He was angry with Vashti and killed her,²⁶ and he is angry with me and wants to kill me.

Then said the king Ahasuerus, and he said to Esther the queen.²⁷ Why 'said' and again 'said'? R. Abbahu replied: He first spoke to her through an intermediary.²⁸ When she told him that she came from the house of Saul,²⁹ forthwith, 'he said to Esther the queen'.

And Esther said, An adversary and an enemy, even this wicked Haman.³⁰ R. Eleazar said: This informs us that she was pointing to Ahasuerus and an angel came and pushed her hand so as to point to Haman.³¹

And the king rose in his wrath...and the king returned out of the palace garden.³² His returning is put on the same footing as his arising. Just as the arising was in wrath, so the returning was in wrath. For he went and found ministering angels in the form of men who were uprooting trees from the garden. He said to them, What are you doing? They replied: Haman has ordered us. He came into the house, and there 'Haman was falling³³ upon the couch'. 'Falling'? It should say. 'had fallen'? — R. Eleazar said: This informs us that an angel came and made him fall on it. Ahasuerus then exclaimed: Trouble³⁴ inside, trouble outside!

‘Then said the king, Will he even force the queen before me in the house? Then said Harbonah, etc.’ R. Eleazar said: Harbonah also was a wicked man and implicated in that plot.³⁵ When he saw that his plan was not succeeding, he at once fled, and so it is written, And he cast upon him and did not pity, from his hand he surely fleeth.³⁶

Then the king's wrath was assuaged.³⁷ Why are there two assuagings here?³⁸ — One of the [wrath of the] King of the Universe,³⁹ and the other of Ahasuerus. Others say, one [of the wrath] on account of Esther and the other on account of Vashti.

To all of them he gave to each man changes of raiment but to Benjamin he gave five changes of raiment.⁴⁰ Is it possible that that righteous man⁴¹ should fall into the very mistake from which he himself had suffered?

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 16b

For Raba b. Mehasia said in the name of R. Hami b. Guria, who said it in the name of Rab: Through two sela's weight of fine silk which Jacob gave to Joseph over what he gave to his brothers, a ball was set rolling and our ancestors eventually went down to Egypt! — R. Benjamin b. Japhet said: He gave him a hint that a descendant would issue from him who would go forth before a king in five royal garments, as it says, And Mordecai went forth from the presence of the king in royal apparel of blue etc.¹

And he fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck.² How many necks³ had Benjamin? — R. Eleazar said: He wept for the two Temples which were destined to be in the territory of Benjamin⁴ and to be destroyed. And Benjamin wept upon his neck:² he wept for the tabernacle of Shiloh which was destined to be in the territory of Joseph and to be destroyed.

And behold your eyes see and the eyes of my brother Benjamin.⁵ R. Eleazar said: He said to them: Just as I bear no malice against my brother Benjamin who had no part in my selling, so I have no malice against you.

That it is my mouth that speaketh unto you. As my mouth is, so is my heart.

And to his father he sent in like manner ten asses laden with the good things of Egypt.⁶ What are 'the good things of Egypt'? R. Benjamin b. Japhet said in the name of R. Eleazar: He sent him [old] wine which old men find very comforting.⁷

And his brethren also went and fell down before him.⁸ R. Benjamin b. Japhet said in the name of R. Eleazar: This bears out the popular saying, A fox in its hour — bow down to it. [You compare Joseph to] a fox! Where was his inferiority to his brothers? Rather if this was said [by R. Eleazar] it was applied as follows: And Israel bowed down upon the bed's head.⁹ R. Benjamin b. Japhet said in the name of R. Eleazar; A fox in its hour — bow down to it.¹⁰

And he comforted them and spoke kindly to them.¹¹ R. Benjamin b. Japhet said in the name of R. Eleazar: This tells us that he spoke to them words which greatly reassured them,¹² [saying], If ten lights were not able to put out one, how can one light put out ten?

The Jews had light and gladness and joy and honour.¹³ Rab Judah said: 'Light' means the Torah,¹⁴ and so it says. For the commandment is a lamp and the Torah is a light.¹⁵ 'Gladness' means a feast day; and so it says, And thou shalt be glad in thy feast.¹⁶ 'Joy' means circumcision; and so it says, I rejoice at thy word.¹⁷ 'Honour' means the phylacteries, and so it says, And all the peoples of the earth shall see that the name of the Lord is called upon thee, and they shall be afraid of thee;¹⁸ and it has been taught: R. Eleazar the Great says that this refers to the phylactery of the head.

And Parshandatha . . . the ten sons of Haman.¹⁹ R. Adda from Joppa said: The ten sons of Haman and the word 'ten' [which follows] should be said²⁰ in one breath. What is the reason? Because their souls all departed together. R. Johanan said: The waw of waizatha must be lengthened like a boat-pole of the river Libruth.²¹ What is the reason? Because they were all strung on one pole. R.

Shila, a man of Kefar Temarta, drew a lesson from this saying, All the songs [in Scripture] are written in the form of a half brick over a whole brick,²² and a whole brick²² over a half brick,²³ with the exception of this one and the list of the kings of Canaan²⁴ which are written in the form of a half brick over a half brick and a whole brick over a whole brick.²⁵ What is the reason? So that they should never rise again from their downfall.

And the king said to the queen, In Shushan the castle the Jews have slain . . .²⁶ The mode of expression informs us that an angel came and slapped him on his mouth.²⁷

But when she came before the king, he said along with the letter.²⁸ ‘He said’? It should be, ‘she said’! — R. Johanan said: She said, Let there be said by word of mouth what is written in the letter.²⁹

Words of peace and truth.³⁰ R. Tanhum said: [or, according to some, R. Assi]: This shows that the Megillah requires to be written on ruled lines, like the true essence of the Torah.³¹ And the ordinance of Esther confirmed.³² Only the ordinance of Esther and not the words of the fastings? — R. Johanan said: We must read thus: The words of the fastings [and their cry] and the ordinance of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim.³³

For Mordecai the Jew was next unto king Ahasuerus, and great among the Jews and accepted of the majority of his brethren.³⁴ Of the majority of his brethren but not of all his brethren; this informs us that some members of the Sanhedrin separated from him.³⁵

R. Joseph said: The study of the Torah is superior to the saving of life. For at first Mordecai was reckoned next after four, but afterwards next after five. At first it is written, Who came with Zerubabel, [namely] Jeshua, Nehemiah, Seraiah, Reelaiah, Mordecai, Bilshan,³⁶ and subsequently it is written, Who came with Zerubabel, Jeshua, Nehemiah, Azariah, Raamiah, Nahamani, Mordecai, Bilshan.³⁷

Rab — or, some say. R. Samuel b. Martha — said: The study of the Torah is superior to the building of the Temple, for as long as Baruch b. Neriah was alive Ezra would not leave him to go up to the land of Israel.³⁸ Rabbah said in the name of R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha: The study of the Torah is superior to the honouring of father and mother. For, for the fourteen years that Jacob spent in the house of Eber, he was not punished, since a Master has said:

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 17a

Why are the years of Ishmael mentioned? So as to reckon by them the years of Jacob, as it is written, And these are the years of the life of Ishmael, a hundred and thirty and seven years.¹ How much older was Ishmael than Isaac? Fourteen years, as it is written, And Abram was fourscore and six years old when Hagar bore Ishmael to Abram,² and it is also written, And Abraham was a hundred years old when his son Isaac was born to him,³ and it is written, And Isaac was threescore years old when she bore them.⁴ How old then was Ishmael when Jacob was born? Seventy-four. How many years were left of his life? Sixty-three; and it has been taught: Jacob our father at the time when he was blessed by his father was sixty-three years old. It was just at that time that Ishmael died, as it is written, Now Esau saw that Isaac had blessed Jacob...so Esau went unto Ishmael and took Mahlath the daughter of Ishmael Abraham's son the sister of Nebaioth.⁵ Now once it has been said, 'Ishmael's daughter' do I not know that she was the sister of Nebaioth? This tells us then that Ishmael affianced her and then died, and Nebaioth her brother gave her in marriage.⁶ Sixty-three and fourteen till Joseph was born⁷ make seventy-seven, and it is written, And Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh.⁸ This makes a hundred and seven. Add seven years of plenty and two of famine,⁹ and we have a hundred and sixteen, and it is written, And Pharaoh said unto Jacob, How many are the days of the years of thy life? And Jacob said unto Pharaoh, The days of the years of my sojournings are a hundred and thirty years.¹⁰ But [we have just seen that] they were only a hundred and sixteen? We must conclude therefore that he spent fourteen years in the house of Eber,¹¹ as it has been taught: 'After Jacob our father had left for Aram Naharaim two years.¹² Eber died'. He then went forth from where he was¹³ and came to Aram Naharaim. From this¹⁴ it follows that when he stood by the well he was seventy-seven years old. And how do we know that he was not punished [for these fourteen years]? As it has been taught: 'We find that Joseph was away from his father twenty-two years.¹⁵ just as Jacob our father was absent from his father'. But Jacob's absence was thirty-six years?¹⁶ It must be then that the fourteen years which he was in the house of Eber are not reckoned. But when all is said and done, the time he spent in the house of Laban was only twenty years?¹⁷ — The fact is that [he was also punished] because he spent two years on the way, as it has been taught: He left Aram Naharaim and came to Succoth and spent there eighteen months, as it says, And Jacob journeyed to Succoth, and built him a house, and made booths for his cattle;¹⁸ and in Bethel he spent six months and brought there sacrifices.

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. IF ONE READS THE MEGILLAH BACKWARDS,¹⁹ HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. IF HE READS IT BY HEART, IF HE READS IT IN A TRANSLATION [TARGUM] IN ANY LANGUAGE,²⁰ HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. IT MAY, HOWEVER, BE READ TO THOSE WHO DO NOT UNDERSTAND HEBREW²¹ IN A LANGUAGE OTHER THAN HEBREW. IF ONE WHO DOES NOT UNDERSTAND HEBREW HEARS IT READ IN HEBREW, HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. IF ONE READS IT WITH BREAKS,²² OR WHILE HALF-ASLEEP, HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. IF HE WAS COPYING IT, CORRECTING IT OR EXPOUNDING IT, THEN IF [IN DOING SO] HE PUT HIS MIND [ALSO TO THE READING] OF IT HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION, BUT OTHERWISE NOT. IF [THE COPY FROM WHICH HE READS] IS WRITTEN WITH SAM, WITH SIKRA, WITH KUMUS, OR WITH KANKANTUM,²³ OR ON NEYAR OR DIFTERA,²³ HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION; IT MUST BE WRITTEN IN HEBREW²⁴ ON PARCHMENT²⁵ AND IN INK.

GEMARA. Whence is this rule [not to read backward] derived? — Raba said: The text says, according to the writing thereof and according to the appointed time thereof:²⁶ just as the appointed time cannot be backward,²⁷ so the [reading from the] writing must not be backward. But does the text speak here of reading? It speaks of keeping, as it is written, that they would keep these two days? — The truth is that we derive the rule from here, as it is written: And that these days should be remembered and kept.²⁸ ‘Remembering’ is here put on the same footing as ‘keeping’: just as keeping cannot be in the wrong order, so remembering also.

A Tanna stated: The same rule applies to Hallel,²⁹ to the recital of the Shema’,²⁹ and to the ‘Amidah²⁹ prayer. Whence do we derive the rule as regards Hallel? — Rabbah said: Because it is written, From the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof [the Lord's name is to be praised].³⁰ R. Joseph said, [from here]: This is the day which the Lord hath made.³¹ R. Awia said: Let the name of the Lord be blessed.³² R. Nahman b. Isaac — or you may also say, R. Aha b Jacob — said, It is from here: From this time forth and for ever.³³

‘To the recital of the Shema’’, as it has been taught: The Shema’ must be recited as it is written.³⁴ So Rabbi. The Sages, however, say: It may be recited in any language. What is Rabbi's reason? Scripture says

, [And these words] shall be,¹ which implies, they shall be kept as they are. And what is the reason of the Rabbis? — Because Scripture says, Hear,² which implies, in any language which you understand. How then can Rabbi [hold otherwise], seeing that it is written, ‘hear’? — He requires that word for the injunction, ‘Let thine ear hear what thou utterest with thy mouth’. The Rabbis, however, concurred with the authority who said that if one recites the Shema’ without making it audible, he has performed his obligation. But the Rabbis too — [how can they hold as they do], seeing that it is written, ‘And they shall be’? — They require this for the injunction that it should not be recited backwards. Whence does Rabbi derive the rule that it should not be recited backwards? From [the use of the expression] ‘the words’, where ‘words’ [would have been sufficient]. The Rabbis, however, do not accept this distinction between ‘the words’ and ‘words’.

May we say that Rabbi was of opinion that the whole of the Torah has been ordained [to be recited] in any language?³ For should you assume that it has been ordained [to be recited] only in the holy tongue, why should the words ‘and they shall be’ be inserted [in reference to the Shema’]? — These were necessary. For it might have occurred to me to understand ‘hear’ in the same sense as the Rabbis:⁴ therefore the All-Merciful wrote ‘and they shall be’. May we then say that the Rabbis were of opinion that the whole of the Torah was ordained [to be recited] only in the holy tongue, since, should you assume that it was ordained to be recited in any language, [I might ask], why should ‘hear’ be inserted [in reference to the Shema’]? — This word is necessary. For it might occur to me to understand ‘and they shall be’ in the same sense as Rabbi. Therefore the All-Merciful wrote, ‘hear’.

‘To the ‘Amidah prayer’. Whence is this derived? — As it has been taught: ‘Simeon the Pakulite⁵ formulated eighteen blessings in the presence of Rabban Gamaliel in the proper⁶ order in Jabneh.⁷ R. Johanan said (others report, it was stated in a Baraitha): A hundred and twenty elders, among whom were many prophets, drew up eighteen blessings in a fixed order’.

Our Rabbis taught: Whence do we derive that the blessing of the Patriarchs⁸ should be said? Because it says, Ascribe unto the Lord, O ye sons of might.⁹ And whence that we say the blessing of mighty deeds?¹⁰ Because it says, Ascribe unto the Lord glory and strength.¹¹ And whence that we say sanctifications?¹² Because it says, Ascribe unto the Lord the glory due unto His name, worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.¹³ What reason had they for mentioning understanding¹⁴ after holiness? Because it says, They shall sanctify the Holy One of Jacob and shall stand in awe of the God of Israel,¹⁵ and next to this, They also that err in spirit shall come to understanding. What reason had they for mentioning repentance¹⁶ after understanding? Because it is written, Lest they, understanding with their heart, return and be healed.¹⁷ If that is the reason, healing should be mentioned next to repentance?¹⁸ — Do not imagine such a thing, since it is written, And let him return unto the Lord and He will have compassion upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.¹⁹ But why should you rely upon this verse? Rely rather on the other! — There is written another verse, Who forgiveth all thine iniquity, who healeth all thy diseases, who redeemeth thy life from the pit,²⁰ which implies that redemption and healing come after forgiveness. But it is written, ‘Lest they return and be healed’? That refers not to the healing of sickness but to the healing [power] of forgiveness. What was their reason for mentioning redemption in the seventh blessing?²¹ Raba replied: Because they [Israel] are destined to be redeemed in the seventh year [of the coming of the Messiah],²² therefore the mention of redemption was placed in the seventh blessing. But a Master has said, ‘In the sixth year will be thunderings, in the seventh wars, at the end of the seventh the son of David will come’? — War is also the beginning of redemption. What was their reason for mentioning healing in the eighth blessing? — R. Aha said: Because circumcision which requires healing is appointed for the eighth day, therefore it was placed in the eighth blessing. What was their reason for placing the [prayer for the] blessing of the years ninth? R. Alexandri said: This was directed against those who raise the market price [of foodstuffs], as it is written, Break thou the arm of the wicked; and when David said this, he said it in the ninth Psalm.²³

What was their reason for mentioning the gathering of the exiles after the blessing of the years? — Because it is written, But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches and yield your fruit to thy people Israel, for they are at hand to come.²⁴ And when the exiles are assembled, judgment will be visited on the wicked, as it says, And I will turn my hand upon thee and purge away thy dross as with lye,²⁵ and it is written further, And I will restore thy judges as at the first.²⁶ And when judgment is visited on the wicked, transgressors cease,²⁷ and presumptuous sinners²⁸ are included with them, as it is written, But the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed.²⁹ And when the transgressors have disappeared, the horn of the righteous is exalted,³⁰ as it is written, All the horns of the wicked also will I cut off, but the horns of the righteous shall be lifted up.³¹ And ‘proselytes of righteousness’³² are included with the righteous, as it says, thou shalt rise up before the hoary head and honour the face of the old man,³³ and the text goes on, And if a stranger sojourn with thee. And where is the horn of the righteous exalted? In Jerusalem,³⁴ as it says, Pray for the peace of Jerusalem, may they prosper that love thee.³⁵ And when Jerusalem is built, David³⁶ will come, as it says.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 18a

Afterwards shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God, and David their king.¹ And when David comes, prayer² will come, as it says. Even then will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer.³ And when prayer has come, the Temple service⁴ will come, as it says, Their burnt-offerings and their sacrifices shall be acceptable upon mine altar.⁵ And when the service comes, thanksgiving⁶ will come, as it says. Whoso offereth the sacrifice of thanksgiving honoureth me.⁷ What was their reason for inserting the priestly benediction after thanksgiving? Because it is written, And Aaron lifted up his hands toward the people and he came down from offering the sin-offering and the burnt-offering and the peace-offerings.⁸ But cannot I say that he did this before the service? — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, 'and he came down from offering'. Is it written 'to offer'? It is written, 'from offering'.⁹ Why not then say it [the priestly benediction] after the [blessing of] the Temple service? — Do not imagine such a thing, since it is written, whoso offereth the sacrifice of thanksgiving.¹⁰ Why base yourself upon this verse? Why not upon the other? — It is reasonable to regard service and thanksgiving as one. What was their reason for having 'give peace' said after the priestly benediction? — Because it is written, So they [the priests] shall put my name upon the children of Israel, and [then] I shall bless them;¹¹ and the blessing of the Holy One, blessed be He, is peace, as it says, The Lord shall bless his people with peace.¹²

Seeing now that a hundred and twenty elders, among whom were many prophets. drew up the prayers in the proper order, why did Simeon the Pakulite formulate them? — They were forgotten, and he formulated them afresh. Beyond this it is forbidden to declare the praise of the Holy One, blessed be He.¹³ For R. Eleazar said: What is the meaning of the verse, Who can express the mighty acts of the Lord, or make all his praise to be heard?¹⁴ For whom is it fitting to express the mighty acts of the Lord? For one who can make all his praise to be heard. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: One who descants upon the praises of the Holy One, blessed be He, to excess is uprooted from the world, as it says, Shall it be told to him that I should speak? Should a man [try to] say, surely he would be swallowed up.¹⁵ R. Judah a man of Kefar Gibboraya,¹⁶ or, as some say, of Kefar Gibbor Hayil,¹⁷ gave the following homily: What is meant by the verse, For thee silence is praise?¹⁸ The best medicine of all is silence. When R. Dimi came, he said: In the West¹⁹ they say: A word is worth a sela', silence two sela's.

IF ONE READS IT BY HEART, HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. Whence this rule? — Raba said: We explain the expression zekirah²⁰ in one passage from its use in another. It is written here, And these days shall be nizkarim²¹ [remembered] and it is written elsewhere, Write this le-zikaron [for a memorial] in the book.²² Just as there it was to be in a book, so here it must be in a book. But how do we know that this 'nizkarim' implies 'uttering'? Perhaps it means mere reading with the eyes? — Do not imagine such a thing, since it has been taught: 'Remember' [zakor].²³ Am I to say, this means only with the mind? When the text says, thou shalt not forget, the injunction against mental forgetfulness is already given. What then am I to make of 'remember'? This must mean, by utterance.²⁴

IF ONE READS IT IN A TRANSLATION, HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. How are we to understand this? Are we to suppose that it is written in Hebrew and he reads it in a translation? This is the same as reading by heart! — It is required for the case where it is written in a translation and he reads it in a translation.

IT MAY, HOWEVER, BE READ TO THOSE WHO DO NOT SPEAK HEBREW IN A LANGUAGE OTHER THAN HEBREW. But you have just said, IF ONE READS IT IN ANY [OTHER] LANGUAGE HE HAS NOT PERFORMER HIS OBLIGATION? — Rab and Samuel both answered that what is referred to here is the Greek vernacular. How are we to understand this? Shall we say that it is written in Hebrew and he reads it in Greek? This is the same as saying by heart? — R. Aha said in the name of R. Eleazar: What is referred to is where it is written in the Greek vernacular.

(R. Aha also said in the name of R. Eleazar: How do we know that the Holy One, blessed be He, called Jacob El [God]²⁵ Because it says, And the God of Israel called him [Jacob] El.²⁶ For should you suppose that [what the text means is that] Jacob called the altar El, then it should be written, 'And Jacob called it'. But [as it is not written so], we must translate, 'He called Jacob El'. And who called him so? The God of Israel).

An objection was brought [against the dictum of Rab and Samuel] from the following: 'If one reads it in Coptic,²⁷ in Hebraic,²⁸ in Elamean, in Median, in Greek, he has not performed his obligation'! — This [statement]²⁹ means only in the same sense as the following: 'If one reads it in Coptic to the Copts,³⁰ in Hebrew to the Hebrews, in Elamean to the Elameans, in Greek to the Greeks, he has performed his obligation'. If that is the case, why do Rab and Samuel explain the Mishnah to refer to the Greek vernacular? Let them make it refer to any vernacular? — The fact is that the Mishnah agrees with the Baraitha,³¹ and the statement of Rab and Samuel was meant to be a general one [thus]: Rab and Samuel both say that the Greek vernacular is good for all peoples. But it is stated, '[He may read] in Greek for the Greeks' — for the Greeks, that is, he may, but for others not? — They [Rab and Samuel] concurred with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, as we have learnt: 'Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Scrolls of the Scripture also were allowed to be written only in Greek'.³² Let them then say, The halachah is as stated by Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel? — Had they said, The halachah is as stated by Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, I should have understood them to mean that this is the case with other books of the Scriptures but not with the Megillah, of which it is written, according to the writing thereof.³³ Therefore we are told [that this is not so].

IF ONE WHO DOES NOT UNDERSTAND HEBREW HEARD IT READ IN HEBREW, HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. But he does not know what they are saying? — he is on the same footing as women and ignorant people. Rabina strongly demurred to this saying;³⁴ And do we know the meaning of ha-ahashteranim bene ha-ramakim?³⁵ But all the same we perform the precept of reading the Megillah and proclaiming the miracle. So they too perform the precept of reading the Megillah and proclaiming the miracle.³⁶

IF ONE READS IT WITH BREAKS [SERUGIN], HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. The Rabbis did not know what was meant by serugin,³⁷ until one day they heard the maidservant of Rabbi's household, on seeing the Rabbis enter at intervals, say to them, How long are you going to come in by serugin?

The Rabbis did not know what was meant by haluglugoth, till one day they heard the handmaid of the household of Rabbi, on seeing a man peeling portulaks, say to him, How long will you be peeling your haluglugoth?

The Rabbis did not know what was meant by, salseleah and it shall exalt thee.³⁸ One day they heard the handmaid of the house of Rabbi say to a man who was curling his hair, How long will you be mesalsel with your hair?³⁹

The Rabbis did not know what was meant by, Cast upon the Lord thy yehab and he shall sustain thee.⁴⁰ Said Rabbah b. Bar Hanah: One day I was travelling with a certain Arab⁴¹ and was carrying a load, and he said to me, Lift up your yehab and put it on [one of] the camels.

The Rabbis did not know what was meant by, we-tetethia bematate of destruction,⁴² till one day they heard the handmaid of the household of Rabbi say to her companion, Take the tatitha [broom] and tati [sweep] the house.

if with omissions,¹ he has not performed it. R. Muna said in the name of R. Judah: Even with breaks, if he stops long enough to finish the whole of it, he must go back to the beginning. R. Joseph said: The halachah is as stated by R. Muna in the name of R. Judah. Abaye inquired of R. Joseph: [When it says] 'long enough to finish the whole of it', does it mean from where he is to the end, or from the beginning to the end? He replied: It means from the beginning to the end, as otherwise there would be no fixed standard.² R. Abba said in the name of R. Jeremiah b. Abba who said it in the name of Rab: The halachah is as stated by R. Muna. Samuel, however, said: The halachah is not as stated by R. Muna. This is the version given in Sura. In Pumbeditha the following version is given: R. Kahana said in the name of Rab: The halachah is as stated by R. Muna, but Samuel said that the halachah does not follow R. Muna. R. Bibi reverses the statement, [making] Rab say that the halachah does not follow R. Muna and Samuel that it does follow R. Muna. R. Joseph said: Adopt³ the version of R. Bibi, since it is Samuel who takes note of the view of an individual authority,⁴ as we have learnt: 'If a woman was waiting for the levir [to make his decision], and a [younger] brother of his became affianced to her sister, the rule was laid down in the name of R. Judah b. Bathyra that the Beth din say to him, Wait till your elder brother acts [one way or the other];⁵ and Samuel said, The halachah is as stated by R. Judah b. Bathyra'.⁶

Our Rabbis taught: If the scribe had omitted letters or verses and the reader read them like the translator when he is translating,⁷ he has performed his obligation. The following was cited in objection to this: 'If letters in it [the scroll] are partially effaced or torn, if they are still legible, it may be used, but otherwise it may not be used'! — There is no contradiction: the one statement⁸ refers to the whole of it, the other⁹ to part of it.

Our Rabbis taught: If the reader omitted one verse, he must not say, I will finish reading it [the Megillah] and I will then read that verse, but he must read [again] from that verse. If a man enters the synagogue and finds that the congregation has read half, he must not say, I will read half with the congregation and then I will read the other half, but he must read it from the beginning to the end.

IF HE WAS HALF-ASLEEP, HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. What is meant by 'half-asleep'?¹⁰ — R. Ashi said: He is asleep and not asleep, awake and not awake; if he is called he responds, but he cannot give a rational answer, though if he is reminded [of what has been said] he remembers.

IF ONE WAS WRITING IT, EXPOUNDING IT, OR CORRECTING IT, IF HE PUT HIS MIND TO IT etc. How are we to understand this? If he was conning each verse and then writing it, what does it matter if he did put his mind to it? He is writing by heart! We must suppose therefore that he writes each verse and then recites it. But does he thereby perform his obligation? Has not R. Helbo said in the name of R. Hama b. Guria who said it in the name of Rab, The halachah follows the view of him who says that all of it [must be recited],¹¹ and even according to the one who says that it is sufficient [to recite] from 'A Jew was', it is necessary that the whole should be [already] written? We must suppose therefore that a Megillah lies before him and he reads from it, verse by verse, and then writes. Shall we then¹² say that this supports Rabbah b. Bar Hanah, for Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan. It is forbidden to write one letter [of the Megillah], save from a copy?

Perhaps [the Mishnah speaks only of a case] where he just happened [to have a copy before him].¹³

The text [above states]: ‘Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan, It is forbidden to write one letter save from a copy’. The following was cited in opposition to this: ‘It happened once that R. Meir went to prolong the year¹⁴ in Assia,¹⁵ and there was no Megillah there and he wrote one out by heart’! — R. Abbahu said: R. Meir is different, because to him could be applied the verse, Thine eyelids shall look straight before thee.¹⁶ Rami b. Hama asked R. Jeremiah from Difti:¹⁷ What is the meaning of ‘thine eyelids [‘af’apeka] shall look straight before thee’? — He replied: This refers to the words of the Torah, of which it is written, Wilt thou direct [ta’if] thine eyes from it? it is gone.¹⁸ And even so, R. Meir could produce them correctly. R. Hisda found R. Hananel writing scrolls without a copy. He said to him: You are quite qualified to write the whole Torah by heart,¹⁹ but thus have the Sages ruled: It is forbidden to write one letter save from a copy. Seeing that he said, ‘You are qualified to write the whole Torah by heart’, we may conclude that he could produce them correctly, and we see that R. Meir actually did write?²⁰ — In case of emergency it is different — Abaye allowed the members of the household of Bar Habu²¹ to write tefillin and mezuzoth²² without a copy. What authority did he follow? — The following Tanna, as it has been taught: R. Jeremiah says in the name of our Teacher:²³ Tefillin and mezuzoth may be written out without a copy, and do not require to be written upon ruled lines. The law, however, is that tefillin do not require lines,²⁴ but mezuzoth do require lines, and both may be written without a copy. What is the reason? — They are well known by heart.

IF IT WAS WRITTEN WITH SAM²⁵ etc. SAM: this is paint. SIKRA: this is vermilion. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: It is what we call sekarta [vermilion]. KUMUS: this is gum

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 19a

. KANKANTUM: this is bootmakers' blacking. DIFTERA: this is a skin which has been salted and put in flour but not treated with gall nuts. NEYAR: this is paper.¹

IT MUST BE WRITTEN IN HEBREW. As it is written, according to the writing² thereof, and according to the appointed time thereof.²

ON PARCHMENT AND IN INK. Whence this rule? — We explain writing' in one place by the use of the term in another. It is written here, And Esther the queen wrote,³ and it is written in another place, then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book.⁴

MISHNAH. A RESIDENT OF A TOWN WHO HAS GONE TO A WALLED CITY⁵ OR OF A WALLED CITY WHO HAS GONE TO A TOWN, IF HE IS LIKELY TO RETURN TO HIS OWN PLACE⁶ READS ACCORDING TO THE RULE OF HIS OWN PLACE,⁷ AND OTHERWISE READS WITH THE REST. FROM WHERE MUST A MAN READ THE MEGILLAH SO AS TO FULFIL HIS OBLIGATION? R. MEIR SAYS, [HE MUST READ] THE WHOLE OF IT; RABBI JUDAH SAYS, [HE MUST READ] FROM 'THERE WAS A JEW';⁸ R. JOSE SAYS, FROM 'AFTER THESE THINGS'.⁹

GEMARA. Raba said: This rule applies only if he¹⁰ intends to return on the night of the fourteenth; but if he does not mean to return on the night of the fourteenth, he reads with the rest. Said Raba: Whence do I derive this ruling? Because it is written, Therefore do the Jews of the villages that dwell in the unwalled towns.¹¹ See now. It is written, 'the Jews of the villages'. Why then should it be further written, 'that dwell in the unwalled towns'? This teaches us that one who is a villager for one day is called¹² a villager. We have proved this for a villager. How do we know that it applies also to inhabitants of walled towns? — It is reasonable to suppose that since a villager of one day is called a villager, a walled-city-dweller of one day is called a walled-city-dweller.

Raba also said: A villager who has gone to a town reads with the rest in any case. What is the reason? By rights he ought to read at the same time as the townspeople — and it is the Rabbis who made a concession to the villagers so that they might supply food and drink to their brethren in the large cities.¹³ Now this applies only so long as they are in their own place, but when they are in the town, they must read like the townspeople. Abaye raised an objection to this from the following: 'If a resident of a walled city has gone to a town, in any case he reads according to the custom of his own place'. 'A resident of a walled city', do you say? His rule depends on whether he means to return!¹⁴ What you must read, then, is 'a villager'.¹⁵ — But must you not [in any case] explain [the passage]?¹⁶ Read, [then] 'reads with the rest'.

FROM WHERE MUST A MAN READ THE MEGILLAH etc. It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai says, from 'On that night'.¹⁷ R. Johanan said: All these authorities derived their lesson from the same verse, viz., Then Esther the queen and Mordecai the Jew wrote all the acts of power.¹⁸ He who says that the whole Megillah must be read refers this to the power of Ahasuerus;¹⁹ he who says it must be read from 'there was a Jew', to the power of Mordecai; he who says from 'after these things', to the power of Haman; and he who says, from 'on that night', to the power of the miracle. R. Huna said: They derived it from here: And what did they see? For this reason. And what came upon them?²⁰ He who says that the whole of it must be read [interprets thus]: What had Ahasuerus seen to make him use the vessels of the Temple? It was for this reason, that he reckoned seventy years and they had not yet been redeemed;²¹ And what came upon them? that he put Vashti to death.

He who says that it should be read from 'there was a Jew' [interprets thus]: What had Mordecai seen that he picked a quarrel with Haman? It was for this reason, that he made himself an object of worship. 'And what came upon them'? that a miracle was performed [for him]. He who says that it is to be read from 'after these things', [interprets thus]: What did Haman see to make him pick a quarrel with all the Jews? It was for this reason, that Mordecai did not bow down or prostrate himself; 'and what came upon him'? They hung him and his sons on the tree. He who says that it is to be read from 'on that night' interprets thus: What did Ahasuerus see to make him order the book of chronicles to be brought? It was for this reason that Esther invited Haman with him. 'And what came upon them'? A miracle was performed for them.

R. Helbo said in the name of R. Hama b. Guria, who said it in the name of Rab: The halachah follows the view of him who says that the whole of it must be read; and even according to him who says that it need be read only from 'There was a Jew', it must all be written before him.²²

R. Hama b. Guria said in the name of Rab: The Megillah is called 'book'²³ and it is also called 'letter'.²⁴ It is called 'book' to show that if it is stitched with threads of flax,²⁵ it is not fit for use; and it is called 'letter' to show that if it is stitched with three threads of sinew, it may be used. R. Nahman said: This is only on condition that they are evenly spaced.²⁶

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: If one reads the Megillah from a volume containing the rest of the Scriptures,²⁷ he has not performed his obligation.²⁸ Raba said: This is the case only if it is not a little shorter or longer than the rest, but if it is a little shorter or longer than the rest,²⁹ there is no objection to it. Levi b. Samuel was reading before Rab Judah in a Megillah which was included in a volume of the Scriptures. He said to him: [I must tell you that] they have said: 'If one reads the Megillah from a volume containing the rest of the Scriptures, he has not fulfilled his obligation'.

R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: 'If one reads the Megillah in a volume containing the rest of the Scriptures, he has not fulfilled his obligation'; and he at once qualified this remark¹ by adding, 'in a congregation'.

R. Hiyya b. Abba also said in the name of R. Johanan: It is a rule deriving from Moses at Sinai that a space should be left unstitched [in the sefer torah];² and he at once qualified the remark by saying, 'this rule was laid down³ only so that it should not be torn'.⁴

R. Hiyya b. Abba also said in the name of R. Johanan: Had there been in the cave in which Moses and Elijah stood⁵ a chink no bigger than the eye of a fine needle, they would not have been able to endure the light, as it says, for man shall not see me and live.⁶

R. Hiyya b. Abba also said in the name of R. Johanan: What is the meaning of the verse, And on them was written according to all the words which the Lord spoke with you in the mount?⁷ It teaches us that the Holy One, blessed be He, showed Moses the minutiae of the Torah,⁸ and the minutiae of the Scribes,⁹ and the innovations which would be introduced by the Scribes; and what are these? The reading of the Megillah.¹⁰

MISHNAH. ALL ARE QUALIFIED TO READ THE MEGILLAH EXCEPT A DEAF PERSON,¹¹ AN IMBECILE AND A MINOR.¹² R. JUDAH DECLARES A MINOR QUALIFIED.

GEMARA. Who is the Tanna that maintains that [even if] the deaf person has read, it does not count?¹³ — R. Mattenah said: It is R. Jose, as we have learnt: 'If one reads the Shema' inaudibly, he has performed his obligation. R. Jose, however, says that he has not performed his obligation'. But why should we say that [our Mishnah] follows R. Jose and [lays down that] even if the deaf man has read, it does not count? Perhaps it follows R. Judah, and [what it means is that] the deaf man may not read in the first instance, but if he has read, his reading is accepted? — Do not imagine such a thing. For a deaf man is mentioned in the same category as an imbecile and a minor; just as the reading of an imbecile and a minor is not accepted, so the reading of a deaf man is not accepted. But perhaps there is one rule for the one and another rule for the other? — Since it states in the final clause that R. Judah declares a minor qualified, we may conclude that the first clause does not state the opinion of R. Judah. (But perhaps the whole of the Mishnah states the opinions of R. Judah? — Is it possible that he should disqualify in the first and permit in the second?)¹⁴ But perhaps the whole [of the Mishnah] gives the views of R. Judah, and he speaks of two kinds of minor, and there is an omission in the Mishnah, and it should run this: 'All are qualified to read the Megillah, except a deaf man, an imbecile and a minor. Of what kind of minor are we speaking? Of one who is not old enough to be trained in the performance of religious duties. But a minor who is old enough to be trained in religious duties¹⁵ may read even in the first instance, since R. Judah declares a minor qualified! — How then have you explained [the first clause of the Mishnah]? As following R. Judah and applying to an action already performed. What then of this statement made by Judah the son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi: 'One who can speak but not hear may set aside terumah in the first instance.'¹⁶ Whose view is this? If you say R. Judah's. [this cannot be, because] he would say, his blessing [once made] is a blessing, but he may not say it in the first instance. If you say R. Jose, this also cannot be, since he disallows the action even if already performed! What then will you say? That it follows R. Judah, and that he allows it even in the first instance?¹⁷ What then of this which has been taught: 'A man should not say the grace after food in his heart,¹⁸ but if he does do so, he has performed his obligation'. Whose opinion is this? It is neither that of R. Judah¹⁹ nor that of R. Jose. For if it were to follow R. Judah, it would allow this even in the first instance, and if R. Jose, it would disallow it even when performed! —

In fact it follows R. Judah,¹ and he holds that the act may be done even in the first instance, and there is no difficulty: in the first quotation² he is giving his own opinion, in the second³ that of his teacher, as it has been taught: 'R. Judah says in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah: One who recites the Shema' must do so audibly, as it says, Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is One,⁴ which implies. 'Let thine ear hear what thy mouth utters'. R. Meir says: [It says], which I command thee this day upon thy heart:⁵ according to the concentration of the mind, so is the value of the words. Now that you have come so far as this,⁶ you may even say that R. Judah was of the same opinion as his teacher, and the statement made by Judah the son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi follows R. Meir.

R. JUDAH DECLARES A MINOR QUALIFIED. It has been taught: 'R. Judah said: When I was a boy, I read it [the Megillah] before R. Tarfon and the elders in Lydda. They said to him: A proof cannot be adduced from a recollection of boyhood'.⁷ It has been taught: 'Rabbi said: When a boy, I read it before R. Judah. They said to him: A proof cannot be adduced from the very authority who allows [the act]'.⁸ Why did they not say to him, A proof cannot be adduced from recollections of boyhood? They gave him a double answer.⁹ For one thing, they said, you were a boy and besides, even had you been grown up, proof cannot be brought from the very authority who allows.

MISHNAH. THE MEGILLAH SHOULD NOT BE READ, NEITHER SHOULD

CIRCUMCISION BE PERFORMED, NOR A RITUAL BATH BE TAKEN,¹⁰ NOR SPRINKLING¹¹ BE PERFORMED, AND SIMILARLY A WOMAN KEEPING DAY FOR DAY¹² SHOULD NOT TAKE A RITUAL BATH UNTIL THE SUN HAS RISEN. BUT IF ANY OF THESE THINGS IS DONE AFTER DAWN HAS APPEARED,¹³ IT COUNTS AS DONE.

GEMARA. Whence this rule [about the Megillah]? — Because the Scripture says, and these days should be remembered [mentioned] and kept,¹⁴ which implies, that they are to be so by day, but not by night. Shall we say that this is a refutation of R. Joshua b. Levi; for R. Joshua b. Levi said: It is a man's duty to read the Megillah by night and a second time by day? — When the Mishnah makes this statement it is referring to the day reading.

NEITHER SHOULD CIRCUMCISION BE PERFORMED. Because it is written, And on the eighth day he shall be circumcised.¹⁵

NEITHER SHOULD A RITUAL BATH BE TAKEN NOR SPRINKLING BE PERFORMED. Because it is written, And the clean person shall sprinkle on the unclean . . . and on the seventh day:¹⁶ and bathing¹⁷ is put on the same footing as sprinkling.

AND SIMILARLY A WOMAN WHO IS KEEPING DAY FOR DAY SHOULD NOT TAKE A RITUAL BATH TILL THE SUN HAS RISEN. This is obvious! Why should a woman keeping day for day be different from all others who are under obligation to take ritual baths?¹⁸ — Her case had to be mentioned. For you might suppose that she should be on the same footing as the first observation of one with an issue, and the first observation of one with an issue has been put on the same footing as one with a seminal issue, as it is written, This is the law of him that hath an issue and of him from whom the flow of seed goeth out:¹⁹ just as one with a seminal issue takes his bath by day, so this one also should take his bath on the same day. This woman, however, cannot bathe on the day, because it is written, all the days of the issue of her uncleanness she shall be as in the days of her impurity;²⁰ so [you might say], by night at least she might keep watch for a short time²¹ and then bathe; therefore we are told that [she must not do this], because she requires to count [day for day];²²

IF ANY OF THESE THINGS IS DONE AFTER DAWN HAS APPEARED, IT COUNTS AS DONE. Whence is this rule derived? — Raba said: Because the Scripture says, And God called the light day;² that which gradually becomes light He called day.³ But according to this, [when it says] and the darkness He called night,⁴ [are we to explain] that which gradually becomes dark He called night? Is it not generally agreed that till the stars come out it is not night? No, said R. Zera; we derive it from here: So we wrought in the work; and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared;⁵ and it says further, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and may labour in the day.⁶ What is the point of the second quotation?⁷ — You might say that from the time of the first rising of the dawn it is not yet day, though from the time the sun begins to set it is already night and they were early and late.⁸ Therefore come and hear: that in the night they may be a guard to us, and may labour in the day.⁹ MISHNAH. THE WHOLE OF THE DAY IS A PROPER TIME FOR THE READING OF THE MEGILLAH AND FOR THE RECITING OF HALLEL¹⁰ AND FOR THE BLOWING OF THE SHOFAR¹⁰ AND FOR TAKING UP THE LULAB¹⁰ AND FOR THE MUSAF¹⁰ PRAYER AND FOR THE ADDITIONAL SACRIFICES¹¹ AND FOR CONFESSION OVER THE OXEN¹² AND FOR THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT MADE OVER THE TITHE¹³ AND FOR THE CONFESSION OF SINS ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT,¹⁴ FOR LAYING ON OF HANDS,¹⁵ FOR SLAUGHTERING [THE SACRIFICES], FOR WAVING,¹⁶ FOR BRINGING NEAR [THE VESSEL WITH THE MEAL-OFFERING TO THE ALTAR], FOR TAKING A HANDFUL, AND FOR PLACING IT ON THE FIRE,¹⁷ FOR PINCHING OFF [THE HEAD OF A BIRD-OFFERING]¹⁸ AND FOR RECEIVING THE BLOOD,¹⁹ AND FOR SPRINKLING,²⁰ AND FOR MAKING THE UNFAITHFUL WIFE DRINK²¹ AND FOR BREAKING THE NECK OF THE HEIFER²² AND FOR PURIFYING THE LEPER.²³ THE WHOLE OF THE NIGHT IS PROPER TIME FOR REAPING THE OMER,²⁴ AND FOR BURNING FAT AND LIMBS [ON THE ALTAR].²⁵ THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: ANY COMMANDMENT WHICH IS TO BE PERFORMED BY DAY MAY BE PERFORMED DURING THE WHOLE OF THE DAY, AND ANY COMMANDMENT WHICH IS TO BE PERFORMED BY NIGHT MAY BE PERFORMED DURING THE WHOLE OF THE NIGHT.

GEMARA. Whence this rule [about the Megillah]? — Because the Scripture says, And these days shall be mentioned and kept.²⁶

FOR READING THE HALLEL: as it is written, From the rising of the sun to its going down.²⁷ R. Joseph says: Because it is written, this is the day on which the Lord hath wrought.²⁸

FOR THE TAKING UP OF THE LULAB: as it is written, And ye shall take you on the first day.²⁹

FOR THE BLOWING OF THE SHOFAR, as it is written, it is a day of blowing the horn unto you.³⁰

FOR THE ADDITIONAL SACRIFICES, as it is written, each on its own day.³¹

AND FOR THE MUSAF PRAYER: because the Rabbis put this on the same footing as the additional sacrifices.

AND FOR THE CONFESSION MADE OVER THE OXEN, an analogy being drawn between the 'atonement' mentioned in this connection and that mentioned in connection with the Day of Atonement, as it has been taught in reference to the Day of Atonement: 'And he shall make atonement for himself and for his house:³² the text speaks of atonement made by words. And atonement is by day, as it is written, For on this day shall atonement be made for you.³³

AND FOR THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT MADE OVER THE TITHE: as it is written, And thou shalt say before the Lord thy God, I have put away the hallowed things out of my house,³⁴ and in the same context it says, This day the Lord thy God commandeth thee.³⁵

FOR LAYING ON OF HANDS AND FOR SLAUGHTERING: as it is written, and he shall lay his hand . . . and he shall kill,³⁶ and it is written in connection with killing, on the same day that ye sacrifice.³⁷

AND FOR WAVING: as it is written, and in the day when ye wave the sheaf.³⁸

AND FOR BRINGING NEAR; because this is compared to waving, as it is written, And the priest shall take the meal-offering of jealousy out of the woman's hand, and shall wave the meal-offering . . . and bring it near³⁹ [to the altar].

AND FOR PINCHING AND FOR TAKING A HANDFUL AND FOR BURNING AND FOR SPRINKLING, as it is written, in the day that he commanded the children of Israel [to present their offerings].⁴⁰

AND FOR MAKING THE UNFAITHFUL WIFE DRINK: The word 'law' which occurs in this connection is explained by its use in another.⁴¹ It is written here, and the priest shall execute upon her all this law,⁴² and it is written elsewhere, According to the law which they shall teach thee and according to the judgement⁴³

: just as judgement is by day,¹ so here it must be by day.

AND FOR BREAKING THE NECK OF THE HEIFER. In the school of R. Jannai it was said: [The word] 'atonement' is applied to it² as to holy things.

AND FOR THE PURIFICATION OF THE LEPER: as it is written, This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing.³

THE WHOLE NIGHT IS A PROPER TIME FOR REAPING THE 'OMER. Since a Master has said that reaping and counting are to be performed by night and the bringing by day.⁴

AND FOR BURNING FAT AND LIMBS: as it is written, All the night till the morning.⁵

THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: ANY COMMANDMENT THAT IS TO BE PERFORMED BY DAY CAN BE PERFORMED DURING THE WHOLE OF THE DAY. [The words] 'this is the general principle' are inserted to add what? — To add the setting of the cup⁶ and the removal of the cups, and in agreement with R. Jose, as it has been taught: 'R. Jose says: If he removed the old [shew-bread] in the morning and set the new one in the evening, there is no harm.⁷ What then do I make of the verse, before me continually?⁸ [This is to show that] the table of the Lord should not be without bread.⁹

A COMMANDMENT WHICH IS TO BE PERFORMED BY NIGHT MAY BE PERFORMED DURING THE WHOLE OF THE NIGHT. What does this add? — It adds the consumption of the paschal lamb, thus differing from R. Eleazar b. Azariah, as it has been taught: And they shall eat the flesh on that night:¹⁰ R. Eleazar b. Azariah said: It says here, on that night, and it says elsewhere, And I shall pass through the land of Egypt on that night:¹¹ just as there up to midnight [is meant], so here up to midnight [is meant].

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. HE WHO READS THE MEGILLAH MAY DO SO EITHER STANDING OR SITTING. WHETHER ONE READS IT OR TWO READ IT [TOGETHER] THEY [THE CONGREGATION] HAVE PERFORMED THEIR OBLIGATION. IN PLACES WHERE IT IS THE CUSTOM TO SAY A BLESSING,¹² IT SHOULD BE SAID, AND WHERE IT IS NOT THE CUSTOM IT NEED NOT BE SAID.

ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS AND ON SABBATH AT MINHAH,¹³ THREE READ FROM THE TORAH, NEITHER MORE NOR LESS, NOR IS A HAFTARAH¹⁴ READ FROM A PROPHET. THE ONE WHO READS¹⁵ FIRST IN THE TORAH¹⁶ AND THE ONE WHO READS LAST¹⁷ MAKE [RESPECTIVELY] A BLESSING BEFORE READING AND AFTER.¹⁸ ON NEW MOONS AND ON THE INTERMEDIATE DAYS OF FESTIVALS FOUR READ, NEITHER MORE NOR LESS, AND THERE IS NO HAFTARAH FROM A PROPHET. THE ONE WHO READS FIRST AND THE ONE WHO READS LAST IN THE TORAH MAKE A BLESSING BEFORE AND AFTER. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: ON ANY DAY WHICH HAS A MUSAF¹⁶ AND IS NOT A FESTIVAL FOUR READ; ON A FESTIVAL FIVE READ; ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT SIX READ; ON SABBATH SEVEN READ; THIS NUMBER MAY NOT BE DIMINISHED BUT IT MAY BE ADDED TO, AND A HAFTARAH IS READ FROM A PROPHET. THE ONE WHO READS FIRST AND THE ONE WHO READS LAST IN THE TORAH MAKE A BLESSING BEFORE AND AFTER. GEMARA. A Tanna stated: 'This [that one may read sitting] is not the case with the Torah'.¹⁹ Whence this rule? — R. Abbahu said: Because Scripture says, But as for thee, stand thou here by me.²⁰ R. Abbahu also said: Were it not written in the Scripture, it would be impossible for us to say it: as it were, the Holy One, blessed be He, also was standing.²¹

R. Abbahu further said: How do we know that the master should not sit on a couch and teach his disciples while they sit on the ground? Because it says, 'But as for thee, do thou stand here by me.'²²

Our Rabbis taught: From the days of Moses up to Rabban Gamaliel, the Torah was learnt only standing. When Rabban Gamaliel died, feebleness descended on the world, and they learnt the Torah sitting; and so we have learnt that 'from the time that Rabban Gamaliel died, [full] honour ceased to be paid to the Torah'.

One verse says, And I sat [wa-esheb] in the mount,²³ and another verse says, And I stood in the mount.²⁴ — Rab says: He [Moses] stood when he learnt and sat while he went over [what he had learnt]. R. Hanina said: He was neither sitting nor standing, but stooping. R. Johanan said: 'Sitting' [yosheb] here means only 'staying', as it says, And ye stayed [teshbu] in Kadesh many days.²⁵ Raba said: The easy things [he learnt] standing and the hard ones sitting.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 21b

A Tanna stated: This is not the case with [the public reading of] the Torah.

Our Rabbis taught: As regards the Torah, one reads and one translates,¹ and in no case must one read and two translate [together]. As regards the Prophets, one reads and two may translate, but in no case may two read and two translate. As regards Hallel and the Megillah,² even ten may read [and ten may translate].³ What is the reason? Since the people like it,⁴ they pay attention and hear.⁵

WHERE IT IS THE CUSTOM TO SAY A BLESSING, IT SHOULD BE SAID. Abaye said: This rule applies only to the blessing after the reading, but before the reading it is a religious duty to say a blessing, since Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: 'Over the performance of all religious precepts a blessing is said as one passes on ['ober] to perform them'. How can you prove that this 'passing on means 'just in front of'? — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: Scripture says, Then Ahimaaz ran by way of the plain and overran [wa-ya'abor] the Cushite.⁶ Abaye said: We prove it from here: And he himself passed over before them.⁷ Or, if you prefer, I can prove it from here: And their king is passed on before them and the Lord at the head of them.⁸

What blessing is said before the reading of the Megillah? — R. Shesheth from Kateriza happened [once to read] in the presence of R. Ashi, and he made the blessings M'N'H'.⁹ What blessing is said after it? — 'Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, king of the universe, [the God]¹⁰ who espoused our quarrel and vindicated our cause and executed our vengeance and punished our adversaries for us and visited retribution on all the enemies of our soul. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who avenges Israel on all their enemies'. Raba Says: [The concluding words are], 'The God who saves. R. Papa said: Therefore we should say both: 'Blessed art thou, O Lord, who avenges Israel on all their enemies, the God who saves'.

ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS AND ON SABBATH AT MINHAH THREE READ. What do these three represent? — R. Assi said: The Pentateuch, the Prophets and the Hagiographa. Raba said: Priests, Levites, and lay Israelites. But now, in the statement of R. Shimi, 'Not less than ten verses [of the Torah] should be read in the synagogue, the verse 'and [God] spoke to [Moses saying]' being counted as one',¹¹ — what do these ten represent? — R. Joshua b. Levi said: The ten men of leisure in the synagogue.¹² R. Joseph said: The ten commandments which were given to Moses on Sinai. (R. Levi said: The ten times hallel [praise] which David uttered in the book of Psalms.)¹³ R. Johanan said: The ten utterances with which the world was created.¹⁴ What are these? The expressions 'And [God] said' in the first chapter of Genesis.¹⁵ But there are only nine? — The words 'In the beginning' are also a [creative] utterance, since it is written, By the word of the Lord the heavens were made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.¹⁶

Raba said: If the first reads four verses¹⁷ he is to be commended; if the second reads four verses¹⁸ he is to be commended; if the third reads four verses he is to be commended. 'If the first reads four verses he is to be commended', as we have learnt: 'There were three bags holding three se'ahs¹⁹ each, in which the priests take up the money-offerings out of the [shekel] chamber,²⁰ and they were labelled Aleph, Beth, Gimel,²¹ so as to show which was taken out first, so that sacrifices could be brought from that one first, since it is a religious duty to offer from the first. 'If the middle one reads four verses, he is to be commended', as it has been taught: '[The seven lamps] shall give light in front of the candlestick;²² this teaches that they were made to face the western lamp²³ and the western lamp faced the Shechinah; and R. Johanan said: This shows that the middle one is specially prized'. 'If the last reads four verses he is to be commended': because of the principle that 'in dealing with holy things we promote but never degrade'.²⁴ R. Papa was once in the synagogue of Abe Gobar,²⁵ when the first one [who was called up] read four verses, and R. Papa commended him.

NEITHER LESS NOR MORE [etc.]. A Tanna stated: The one who reads first makes a blessing before the reading, and the one who reads last makes a blessing after it. Nowadays that all make a blessing both before and after the reading, the reason is that the Rabbis ordained this to avoid error on the part of people entering and leaving synagogue.²⁶

ON NEW MOONS AND ON THE INTERMEDIATE DAYS OF THE FESTIVAL FOUR READ. 'Ulla b. Rab enquired of Raba: How is the portion of New Moon²⁷ to be divided? [The paragraph commencing] 'command the children of Israel and say to them'²⁸ has eight verses. How are we to deal with them? Shall two persons read three verses each? Then two verses will be left [to the end of the paragraph], and it is not proper to leave over less than three verses to the end of the paragraph.²⁹ Shall two read four verses each? Then seven verses will be left altogether, [the paragraph beginning] 'and on the sabbath day'³⁰ being two, and [the paragraph beginning] 'and on your new moons'³¹ being five. How are we to do? Shall we read [as one portion] two from one paragraph and one from the next?

(3) Rashi omits these words on the ground that there is no Targum to the Hagiographa. Tosaf., however, points out that there is such a Targum, though it is not attributed to Jonathan b. Uzziel; v. supra 3a.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 22a

[This is not right], since we do not read less than three verses together at the beginning of a paragraph.¹ Shall the reader read two from one and three from the other? Then only two verses are left [to the end of the second paragraph]! — He replied: On this point I have not heard [any pronouncement], but I have learnt the rule in a somewhat similar case, as we have learnt: 'On Sundays, [the ma'amad² read the paragraph] "In the beginning" and "let there be a firmament",³ and to this a gloss was added, "In the beginning" is read by two and "let there be a firmament" by one', and we were somewhat perplexed by this. For that [the paragraph] 'let there be a firmament' can be read by one we understand, since it has three verses, but how can 'In the beginning, be read by two, seeing that it has only five verses, and it has been taught, 'He who reads in the Torah should not read less than three verses'? And it was stated [in answer] to this [question] that Rab says he should repeat,⁴ and Samuel says he should divide a verse. Rab said he should repeat. Why should he not say 'divide'? — He was of opinion that any verse which Moses had not divided, we may not divide, whereas Samuel held that we may divide. But surely, R. Hananiah the Bible teacher⁵ said, I was in great pain in the house of R. Hanina the great, and he would not allow me to make [additional verse] divisions save for the school children, because they are there to be taught? — Now what was the reason there [why he was allowed to make divisions]? Because it could not be avoided; here⁶ too it cannot be avoided. Samuel said that he divides. Why did he not say that he repeats? It is a precaution to prevent error on the part of those coming in and going out.⁷

An objection [against both these views]⁸ was brought from the following: 'A section of six verses may be read by two persons, a section of five verses must be read by one. If the first reads three verses, the second reads the remaining two from this section and one from the next; some, however, say that he reads three from the next, because not less than three verses should be read at the beginning of a section'.⁹ Now if it is as you said,¹⁰ then according to the one who says he should repeat, let him repeat, and according to the one who says he should divide, let him divide? — It is different here,¹¹ because this method is open to him.¹²

R. Tanhum, said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: The halachah follows the alternative opinion¹³ mentioned.

R. Tanhum also said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: Just as at the beginning of a section not less than three verses should be read, so at the end of a section not less than three verses should be left. Surely this is obvious! Seeing that in regard to the beginning of a section where the First Tanna is not so strict the alternative opinion is strict, is it not certain that in regard to the verses left [at the end of the section] where the First Tanna is strict the alternative opinion will also be strict? — You might argue that it is usual for people to come in [to synagogue during the reading of the law],¹⁴ but it is not usual for them to go out and leave the scroll of the law while it is being read;¹⁵ therefore we are told [that we do not argue thus]. But now with regard to the First Tanna: Why does he forbid [less than three verses] to be left [at the end of the section]? On account of people going out of synagogue,¹⁶ is it not? Then with regard to the beginning also he should take precautions on account of people coming in? — I can answer that a person coming in enquires [how much has been read].¹⁷

Rabbah the son of Raba sent to enquire of R. Joseph: What is the law?¹⁸ He sent him back word: The law is that the verse is repeated, and it is a middle reader¹⁹ who repeats.

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHENEVER THERE IS A MUSAF etc. The question was raised: How many read on a public fast day?²⁰ Shall we say that on New Moon and the intermediate days of the festival when there is an additional sacrifice four read, but here where there is no additional sacrifice this is not the case? Or shall we argue that here also there is an additional prayer?²¹ — Come and hear: ON NEW MOONS AND ON THE INTERMEDIATE DAYS OF FESTIVALS FOUR READ', from which we conclude that on public fasts only three read. Look now at the preceding clause: 'ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS AND ON SABBATH AT MINHAH THREE READ', from which we may conclude that on a public fast four read! The truth is that we cannot decide from here.

Come then and hear [this]: 'Rab happened to be at Babylon²² during a public fast. He came forward and read in the scroll of the law. Before commencing he made a blessing but after finishing he made no blessing. The whole congregation [afterwards] fell on their faces,²³ but Rab did not fall on his face'. Let us now see. Rab read as a lay Israelite.²⁴ Why then did he say no blessing after finishing? Was it not because another was to read after him? — No. Rab read as kohen,²⁵ for R. Huna also read as kohen.²⁶ I can understand R. Huna reading as kohen, because even R. Assi and R. Ammi who were distinguished kohanim of Eretz Israel showed deference to R. Huna.²⁷ But as to Rab there was Samuel [his Babylonian contemporary] who was a kohen and who took precedence of him?²⁸ — Samuel also showed deference to Rab, and it was Rab²⁹ who of his own accord paid him special honour³⁰ and this he did only in his presence, but not when he was not present. It is reasonable also to assume that Rab read as kohen, because if you presume that he read as a layman, why did he say a blessing before reading? — It was after the regulation³¹ had been made. If so, he should have said a blessing after reading also? — Where Rab was present there was a difference, because people came in [late]

Come and hear: 'The general principle is that wherever the people would be hindered from their work, as on a public fast and on the month of Ab, three read, and where the people would not be hindered from their work, as on New Moons and the intermediate days of festivals,² four read'. This settles the question. Said R. Ashi: But we have learnt differently, viz., THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHEREVER THERE IS A MUSAF BUT NOT A FESTIVAL FOUR READ: Now what is added [by the words 'THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE']? Is it not a public fast and the month of Ab? But according to R. Ashi,³ whose view then is recorded in the Mishnah? It is neither that of the First Tanna nor of R. Jose, as it has been taught: 'If it [the month of Ab] falls on Monday or Thursday, three read and one [of them] says a haftarah. If on Tuesday or Wednesday, one reads and [the same] one says the haftarah. R. Jose, however, says that in all cases three read and one [of them] says the haftarah'. But still⁴ the words 'THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE are difficult! — No. They add New Moon and the intermediate days. But as these are stated explicitly: ON NEW MOONS AND THE INTERMEDIATE DAYS FOUR READ? — [The Mishnah]⁵ is merely giving an indication that you should not say that the festivals and the intermediate days have the same rule, but you should take this as a general principle, that for every additional distinguishing mark an additional person reads. Hence on New Moon and the intermediate days, when there is an additional sacrifice, four read; on festivals, when [in addition] work is prohibited, five read; on the Day of Atonement when [in addition] there is a penalty of kareth, six read; on Sabbath when there is a penalty of stoning, seven read.

The text [above stated]: ‘Rab happened to be in Babylon on a public fast. He came forward and read in the scroll. He made a blessing before commencing, but made no blessing after finishing. The whole congregation [subsequently] fell on their faces, but Rab did not fall on his face’. Why did not Rab fall on his face? There was a stone pavement there and it has been taught: ‘Neither shall ye place any figured stone in your land to bow down upon it:⁶ upon it ye may not bow down in your land, but you may prostrate yourselves on the stones in the Temple’, this teaching is in accord with the opinion of ‘Ulla, who said: The Torah [here] is forbidding only a pavement of stone. If that is the case, why is only Rab mentioned? All the rest should equally have abstained? — It was in front of Rab. But could he not have gone among the congregation and fallen on his face? — He did not want to trouble the congregation.⁷ Or if you like I can say that Rab usually spread out his hands and feet [when he fell on his face], and he followed the opinion of ‘Ulla, who said, The Torah forbade only the spreading out of the hands and feet. But could he not have fallen on his face without spreading out his hands and feet? — He did not care to change his custom. Or if you like I can say that for a distinguished man the rule is different, as laid down by R. Eleazar; for R. Eleazar said: A man of eminence is not permitted to fall on his face⁸ unless he is [sure of being] answered like Joshua son of Nun, as it is written, Wherefore now art thou fallen upon thy face.⁹

Our Rabbis have taught: Kidah means falling upon the face, as it says, Then Bathsheba bowed [wa-tikod] with her face to the earth.¹⁰ Keri'ah means going down upon the knees, and so it says, [Solomon arose] from kneeling [mi-kroa'] on his knees.¹¹ Hishtahawa'ah is spreading out of the hands and feet, as it says, Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren come to prostrate ourselves [lehishtahawoth] before thee to the earth.¹²

Levi displayed a kidah¹³ in the presence of Rabbi and became lame.¹⁴ But was this the cause of his accident? Did not R. Eleazar Say: ‘A man should never complain against heaven, because a great man complained against heaven and he became lame; and who was he? Levi’?¹⁵ — Both things caused it. R. Hiyya b. Abin said: I saw Abaye and Raba bend over to one side.¹

ON FESTIVALS FIVE READ, ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT SIX etc. Whose view does the Mishnah embody? It is neither that of R. Ishmael nor of R. Akiba, as it has been taught: 'On festivals five read, on the Day of Atonement six, and on Sabbath seven. This number may neither be increased nor diminished. So R. Ishmael. R. Akiba says: On festivals five read, on the Day of Atonement seven and on Sabbath six. This number may not be diminished but it may be increased'. Whom [does the Mishnah follow]? If R. Ishmael, it conflicts with him over the additional number, if R. Akiba, it conflicts with him over the question of six and seven! — Raba said: The view is that of a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael, since in the school of R. Ishmael it was stated: 'On festivals five, on the Day of Atonement six, on Sabbath seven; this number may not be diminished but it may be increased. So R. Ishmael.' R. Ishmael is now in conflict with himself! — Two Tannaim report R. Ishmael differently.

Who is responsible for the statement which has been taught: 'On festivals people come late to synagogue and leave early.'² On the Day of Atonement they come early and leave late. On Sabbath they come early and leave early'³ Shall I say it is R. Akiba who makes an extra man [read on the Day of Atonement]? — You may also say it is R. Ishmael, [his reason being that] the order [of the service] of the day is very long.

What do these three, five and seven represent? — Different answers were given by R. Isaac b. Nahmani and one who was with him, namely, R. Simeon b. Pazzi, or, according to others, by R. Simeon b. Pazzi and one who was with him, namely, R. Isaac b. Nahmani, or according to others, R. Samuel b. Nahmani. One said that [these represent] the [respective number of Hebrew words in the three verses of the] Priestly benedictions,⁴ while the other said 'the three keepers of the door'.⁵ [The five represent] 'five of them that saw the king's face'⁶ [and the seven] 'seven men of them that saw the king's face'.⁷ R. Joseph learnt: Three, five and seven: 'three keepers of the door', five of them that saw the king's face', and 'seven that saw the king's face'. Said Abaye to him: Until to-day your honour never explained the reason to us, he replied: I never knew that you wanted to know. Did you ever ask me anything which I did not tell you?

Jacob the Mir⁸ asked R. Judah: What do the six of the Day of Atonement represent? — He replied: The six who stood at the right of Ezra and the six who stood at his left, as it says, And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood which they had made for the purpose, and beside him stood Mattithiah, Shema and Anaiah and Uriah and Hilkiah and Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiah, and Mishael and Malchijah and Hashum and Hashbaddanah, Zechariah, Meshullam.⁹ But these last are seven? — Zechariah is the same as Meshullam. And why is he called Meshullam? Because he was blameless [mishlam] in his conduct.

Our Rabbis taught: All are qualified to be among the seven [who read], even a minor and a woman, only the Sages said that a woman should not read in the Torah out of respect for the congregation.

The question was raised: Should the Maftir¹⁰ be counted among the seven? — R. Huna and R. Jeremiah b. Abba answered differently. One said that he does count and the other that he does not count. The one who says he does count points to the fact that he actually reads [from the Torah also], while the one who says he does not count relies on the dictum of 'Ulla, who said: Why is it proper for the one who reads the haftarah from the Prophet to read in the Torah first? To show respect for the Torah.¹¹ Since then he reads [only] out of respect for the Torah,¹² he should not be counted to make up the seven.

The following was cited in objection to this: 'He who says the haftarah from the Prophet should read not less than twenty-one verses, corresponding to [those read by] the seven who have read in the Torah'. Now if it is as you say,¹³ there are twenty-four? — Since it is only out of respect for the Torah [that he reads],

- (1) Because as men of eminence they were not permitted to fall right on their faces.
 - (2) They come late because they have been busy preparing the festival meal, and they leave early to enjoy the festival.
 - (3) They come early because their food is already prepared, and they leave early to enjoy Sabbath.

no corresponding verses [to those read by him] are required [in the prophetic reading]. Raba strongly demurred to this: There is, he said, [the haftarah of] 'Add your burnt-offerings'¹ in which there are not twenty-one verses, and yet we read it! — The case is different there, because the subject is completed [before twenty-one verses]. But where the subject is not completed, do we then not [read less than twenty-one]? Has not R. Samuel b. Abba said: Many times I stood before R. Johanan, and when I had read ten verses he said,² 'Stop [both of] you'? — In a place where there is a translator³ it is different, since R. Tahlifa b. Samuel has taught: This rule was laid down only for a place where there is no translator, but where there is a translator a stop may be made [earlier].

MISHNAH. THE INTRODUCTION TO THE SHEMA IS NOT REPEATED,⁴ NOR DOES ONE PASS BEFORE THE ARK,⁵ NOR DO [THE PRIESTS] LIFT THEIR HANDS,⁶ NOR IS THE TORAH READ [PUBLICLY] NOR THE HAFTARAH READ FROM THE PROPHET,⁷ NOR ARE HALTS MADE [AT FUNERALS],⁸ NOR IS THE BLESSING FOR MOURNERS SAID,⁹ NOR THE COMFORT OF MOURNERS,¹⁰ NOR THE BLESSING OF THE BRIDEGROOMS,¹¹ NOR IS THE NAME [OF GOD] MENTIONED IN THE INVITATION TO SAY GRACE,¹² SAVE IN THE PRESENCE OF TEN. FOR REDEEMING SANCTIFIED PROPERTIES¹³ NINE AND A PRIEST [ARE SUFFICIENT], AND SIMILARLY WITH HUMAN BEINGS.

GEMARA. Whence these rules?¹⁴ — R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: Because Scripture says, But I will be hallowed among the children of Israel:¹⁵ every act of sanctification requires not less than ten. How does the verse denote this? — As R. Hiyya taught: We explain the word 'among' here by reference to its use in another place. It is written here, 'But I will be hallowed among the children of Israel', and it is written elsewhere, Separate yourselves from among this congregation;¹⁶ and we further explain the word 'congregation' here by reference to what is written in another place, How long shall I bear with this evil congregation.¹⁷ Just as there ten are indicated,¹⁸ so here.

NOR ARE HALTS MADE [AT FUNERALS]. Since [the conductor of the funeral] requires to say, 'stand, dear friends, stand; sit, dear friends, sit',¹⁹ it is not proper²⁰ [to have less than ten].

NOR IS THE BLESSING OF MOURNERS NOR THE BLESSING OF BRIDEGROOMS SAID etc. What is the blessing of mourners? The blessing of the public square,²¹ since²² R. Isaac said in the name of R. Johanan: The blessing of mourners requires the presence of ten, the mourners not being counted; the blessing of bridegrooms requires the presence of ten, the bridegroom being counted.

THE NAME [OF GOD] IS NOT MENTIONED IN THE INVITATION TO SAY GRACE WITH LESS THAN TEN. Since the one who invites has to say, 'Let us bless our God', it is not seemly to do so with less than ten.

FOR REDEEMING PROPERTIES NINE AND A PRIEST. Whence is this rule derived? — Samuel said: Ten priests are mentioned in the section [dealing with sanctifications],²³ one for the actual priest required (and [the first] one [after] to limit),²⁴ and the rest constitute a limitation after a limitation, and a limitation after a limitation has the force of an addition, to include, namely, nine Israelites and one priest.²⁵ But cannot I [rather] say five priests and five Israelites?²⁶ — This is indeed a difficulty.

AND SIMILARLY WITH HUMAN BEINGS. But can a human being become sanctified?²⁷ — R. Abbahu said: It refers to one who says, 'My money [value] be upon me', as it has been taught: 'If a man says, My money [value] be upon me, we estimate his value as we would that of a slave'. And a slave is put on the same footing as landed property, as it is written, And ye may make them an inheritance for your children after you, to hold for a possession.²⁸

Tosaf. and Asheri) come into synagogue after the Shema' has been said, it is allowable for the congregation to repeat the kaddish and bareku and the first blessing before the Shema' for their benefit. From the context one would say that it means here more simply 'say the Shema' with its attendant blessings'. V. P.B. pp. 37ff. V. Rabbinowitz Mishnah Megillah, ad loc. IN A PROPHET, HOWEVER, [HE MAY GIVE HIM] THREE AT A TIME.¹ IF THE THREE VERSES CONSTITUTE THREE SEPARATE PARAGRAPHS,² HE MUST READ THEM [TO THE TRANSLATOR] ONE BY ONE. THE READER MAY SKIP [FROM PLACE TO PLACE] IN A PROPHET BUT NOT IN THE TORAH. HOW FAR MAY HE SKIP? [ONLY] SO FAR THAT THE TRANSLATOR WILL NOT HAVE STOPPED³ [BEFORE HE FINDS HIS PLACE].⁴

GEMARA. What do these three verses represent? — R. Assi said: The Pentateuch, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa.

HE SHOULD NOT READ TO THE TRANSLATOR MORE THAN ONE VERSE. IN A PROPHET, HOWEVER, HE MAY READ THREE. IF THE THREE VERSES CONSTITUTE THREE PARAGRAPHS, HE MUST READ THEM ONE BY ONE. For instance, [the three verses], For thus saith the Lord, ye were sold for nought; For thus saith the Lord God, my people went down aforetime to Egypt; Now therefore what do I here, saith the Lord.⁵

THE READER MAY SKIP IN A PROPHET BUT NOT IN THE TORAH. A contradiction was pointed out [between this and the following]: 'He [the High Priest] reads [on the Day of Atonement] "after the death"⁶ and "only on the tenth day".⁷ But he is skipping? — Abaye replied: There is no contradiction; in the one case the translator will have come to a stop [before the place is found] in the other case he will not have come to a stop.⁸ But it states in connection with this. THE READER MAY SKIP IN THE PROPHET BUT HE MAY NOT SKIP IN THE TORAH. AND HOW FAR MAY HE SKIP? SO FAR THAT THE TRANSLATOR WILL NOT HAVE STOPPED. From this we infer that in the Torah he may not skip at all? — The truth is, said Abaye, that there is no contradiction. In the one case [the reader deals] with one subject, in the other case with two; and in fact it has been taught: 'The reader may skip in the Torah [provided he keeps] to one subject, and in a Prophet even if he goes on to another subject'; and in both cases only so far that the translator will not have stopped [before he finds the place]. It has been taught in another place: 'The reader may not skip from one prophet to another. In the Twelve Minor Prophets he may skip,⁹ provided only that he does not skip from the end of the book to the beginning.'¹⁰

MISHNAH. THE ONE WHO SAYS THE HAFTARAH FROM THE PROPHET REPEATS ALSO THE BLESSINGS BEFORE THE SHEMA,¹¹ AND PASSES BEFORE THE ARK¹² AND LIFTS UP HIS HANDS.¹³ IF HE IS A CHILD,¹⁴ HIS FATHER OR HIS TEACHER PASSES BEFORE THE ARK IN HIS PLACE. A CHILD MAY READ IN THE TORAH AND TRANSLATE, BUT HE MAY NOT PASS BEFORE THE ARK NOR LIFT UP HIS HANDS. A PERSON IN RAGS¹⁵ MAY REPEAT THE BLESSINGS BEFORE THE SHEMA AND

TRANSLATE, BUT HE MAY NOT READ IN THE TORAH NOR PASS BEFORE THE ARK NOR LIFT UP HIS HANDS. A BLIND MAN MAY REPEAT THE BLESSINGS BEFORE THE SHEMA AND TRANSLATE. R. JUDAH SAYS: ONE WHO HAS NEVER SEEN THE LIGHT FROM HIS BIRTH MAY NOT RECITE THE BLESSINGS BEFORE THE SHEMA'.¹⁶

GEMARA. What is the reason [why the one who says the haftarah has this privilege]? — R. Papa said: As a mark of honour;¹⁷ R. Shimi said: Because otherwise quarrels might arise.¹⁸ What difference is there in practice between them? — There is a difference, in the case of one who reads gratis.¹⁹

We learn: IF HE IS A CHILD, HIS FATHER OR HIS TEACHER PASSES BEFORE THE ARK IN HIS PLACE. If now you say it is to avoid quarrels, will a child pick a quarrel? What then? It is a mark of respect? Does a child receive marks of respect? What you must say is, out of respect for his father and his teacher.

(1) Because if he makes a mistake, it does not matter so much.

(2) V. infra.

(3) Lit., 'so that the translator shall not (have to) pause'.

(4) I.e., he must not have much to unroll in the scroll.

(5) Isa. LII, 3, 4 and 5.

(6) Lev. XVI, 1ff.

(7) Ibid. XXIII, 26ff.

(8) Because the passages read by the High Priest are not far apart.

(9) As these were all written in one scroll,

(10) I.e., go backwards.

(11) V. supra. Sof. XIV, 8 refers this to the Shema' recited at the taking out of the law from the Ark; v. P.B. p. 145.

(12) To read the 'Amidah, and especially the kedushah.

(13) To say the priestly blessing. Why the maftir should have these privileges is not at all clear, and the 'lifting up of hands' certainly was the privilege of every priest. V. Rabinowitz, op. cit. MS.M. omits: 'AND LIFTS UP HIS HANDS.

(14) Under thirteen.

(15) So that most of his body is exposed.

(16) Which include a prayer of thanksgiving for the creation of light.

(17) I.e., as a kind of reward for having consented to read the haftarah.

(18) Between persons eager to act as reader.

(19) In which case there will not be such competition for the honour, and so there is no need to give the one who says the haftarah priority.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 24b

So here too, there is the question of quarrels, involving him or his teacher.

A PERSON IN RAGS MAY REPEAT etc. 'Ulla b. Rab enquired of Abaye: Is a child in rags allowed to read in the Torah?¹ He replied: You might as well ask about a naked one. Why is one without any clothes not allowed? Out of respect for the congregation. So here, [he is not allowed] out of respect for the congregation.

A BLIND MAN MAY REPEAT THE BLESSINGS etc. It has been taught: They said to R. Judah: Many have discerned sufficiently [with their mind's eye] to expound the Chariot,² and yet they never saw it? — What says R. Judah to this? — There [he can reply], all depends on the discernment of the heart, and the expounder by concentrating his mind can know, but here one reads for the benefit which he derives therefrom,³ and this one derives no benefit.⁴ The Rabbis, however, hold that he does derive a benefit, for the reason given by R. Jose, as it has been taught: R. Jose said: I was long perplexed by this verse, And thou shalt grope at noonday as the blind gropeth in darkness.⁵ Now what difference [I asked] does it make to a blind man whether it is dark or light? [Nor did I find the answer] until the following incident occurred. I was once walking on a pitch black night when I saw a blind man walking in the road with a torch in his hand. I said to him, My son, why do you carry this torch? He replied: As long as I have this torch in my hand, people see me and save me from the holes and the thorns and briars.⁶

MISHNAH. A PRIEST WHOSE HANDS ARE DEFORMED SHOULD NOT LIFT UP HIS HANDS [TO SAY THE PRIESTLY BLESSING]. R. JUDAH SAYS: ALSO ONE WHOSE HANDS ARE DISCOLOURED WITH WOAD⁷ SHOULD NOT LIFT UP HIS HANDS, BECAUSE [THIS MAKES] THE CONGREGATION LOOK AT HIM.⁸

GEMARA. A Tanna stated: The deformities which were laid down [as disqualifying] are on the face, the hands and the feet.⁹ R. Joshua b. Levi said: If his hands are spotted¹⁰ he should not lift up his hands. It has been taught similarly: 'If his hands are spotted, he should not lift up his hands. If they are curved inwards or bent sideways, he should not lift up his hands'.

R. Assi said: A priest from Haifa or Beth Shean¹¹ should not lift up his hands. It has been taught to the same effect: 'We do not allow to pass before the ark either men from Beth Shean or from Haifa or from Tib'onim,¹² because they pronounce alif as 'ayin and 'ayin as alif'.¹³

Said R. Hiyya to R. Simeon b. Rabbi: If you were a Levite, you would not be qualified to chant,¹⁴ because your voice is thick. He went and told his father who said to him: Go and say to him, When you come to the verse, And I will wait [we-hikethi] for the Lord,¹⁵ will you not be a reviler and blasphemer?¹⁶

R. Huna said: A man whose eyes run should not lift up his hands. But was there not one in the neighbourhood of R. Huna who used to spread forth his hands? — The townspeople had become accustomed to him.¹⁷ It has been taught to the same effect: 'A man whose eyes run should not lift up his hands, but if the townspeople are accustomed to him, he is permitted'. R. Johanan said: A man blind in one eye should not lift up his hands. But was not there one in the neighbourhood of R. Johanan who used to lift up his hands? — The townspeople were accustomed to him. It has been taught to the same effect: 'A man blind in one eye should not lift up his hands, but if the townspeople are accustomed to him, he is permitted'.

R. JUDAH SAYS: A MAN WHOSE HANDS ARE DISCOLOURED SHOULD NOT LIFT UP HIS HANDS. A Tanna stated: If most of the men of the town follow the same occupation it is permitted.

MISHNAH. IF ONE SAYS, I WILL NOT PASS BEFORE THE ARK [TO ACT AS READER] IN COLOURED ROBES, HE MUST NOT PASS BEFORE IT IN WHITE ROBES EITHER. [IF HE SAYS], I WILL NOT PASS BEFORE IT IN SHOES, HE MUST NOT PASS BEFORE IT BAREFOOT EITHER. A PHYLACTERY [FOR THE HEAD] WHICH IS MADE ROUND¹⁸ IS DANGEROUS¹⁹ AND HAS NO RELIGIOUS VALUE. TO PUT THEM ON THE FOREHEAD OR ON THE PALM OF THE HAND²⁰ IN THE MANNER OF THE HERESY,²¹ TO OVERLAY THEM WITH GOLD OR PUT [THE ONE FOR THE HAND] ON ONE'S SLEEVE IS THE MANNER OF THE OUTSIDERS.²²

GEMARA. [IN COLOURED ROBES]. What is the reason [why he must not act as reader]? We are apprehensive that he has a leaning towards minuth.²³

TO MAKE ONE'S PHYLACTERY ROUND IS DANGEROUS AND HAS NO RELIGIOUS

VALUE. May we say that our Mishnah teaches here the same as our Rabbis taught: 'That phylacteries should be square is a law set down by Moses at Sinai', and Raba explained [this to mean] in their seam and in their diagonal?²⁴ — R. Papa said: The Mishnah is speaking only of those which are made as round as a nut.²⁵

MISHNAH. IF ONE SAYS

- (1) A child not being forbidden to expose himself.
- (2) The first chapter of Ezekiel.
- (3) Viz., the light.
- (4) He does not enjoy the benefit of light.
- (5) Deut. XXVIII, 29.
- (6) So although blind, he does benefit by the light.
- (7) [Var. lec. add: 'or madder', a red dye].
- (8) And it is forbidden to look at the priests while saying the blessing, v. Hag. 16.
- (9) The priest said the blessing barefoot, v. Sot. 40a.
- (10) With white pustules. The deformity apparently is the same as that referred to in Lev. XIII, 39.
- (11) Towns in Palestine.
- (12) More correctly Tibe'on, perhaps the same as modern Tubun, W. of Sephoris.
- (13) V. Glos.
- (14) Lit., 'for the platform', on which the Levites stood while chanting.
- (15) Isa. VIII, 17.
- (16) Because he could not pronounce a heth and would say we-hikethi, which would mean 'And I shall smite'.
- (17) Lit. 'he had become familiar to the townspeople'.
- (18) Instead of cube-shaped.
- (19) [The capsule might penetrate his head during prostration at tahanun (supra p. 135 n. 6). V. Rashi and R. Hananel]. R. Tam takes this to mean that it will not avail him in time of danger. V. Shab. 49a.
- (20) According to the literal meaning of the text, and thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand and they shall be phylacteries between thine eyes. Deut. VI, 8.
- (21) Minuth (v. Glos. s.v. Min) Maim.: Sadducees. The reading 'Karaites' in some texts is a censor's variant.
- (22) This term apparently designates persons who followed the Rabbis only partially. According to the Rabbis, the phylacteries had to be made wholly of the skin of a clean animal and to be placed directly on the flesh.
- (23) Probably Judeo-Christianity, the Christians being particular about this. For other suggestions v. Rabinowitz, op. cit. a.l.
- (24) Apparently this means 'both in their base and in their height'.
- (25) But the shape of an egg or of a bean might be permitted (Rashi).

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 25a

'MAY THE GOOD BLESS THEE', THIS IS A CUSTOM OF HERESY.¹ [IF HE SAYS], 'MAY THY MERCIES REACH THE NEST OF A BIRD', 'MAY THY NAME BE MENTIONED FOR WELL-DOING', 'WE GIVE THANKS, WE GIVE THANKS',² HE IS SILENCED. IF HE INTRODUCES EUPHEMISMS INTO THE PORTION DEALING WITH FORBIDDEN MARRIAGES,³ HE IS SILENCED. IF HE SAYS, [INSTEAD OF] 'AND THOU SHALT NOT GIVE ANY OF THY SEED TO SET THEM APART TO MOLOCH', 'THOU SHALT NOT GIVE TO TRANSFER IT TO A GENTILE WOMAN',⁴ HE IS BOTH SILENCED AND REBUKED.⁵

GEMARA. We understand the prohibition of saying 'WE GIVE THANKS, WE GIVE THANKS', because he seems to be addressing two Powers;⁶ also of 'THY NAME BE MENTIONED FOR WELL-DOING', because this implies, for good, yes, for evil, no, and we have learnt, 'It is the duty of a man to bless [God] for evil in the same way as he blesses for good'.⁷ But what is the reason for prohibiting, 'MAY THY MERCIES REACH THE NEST OF A BIRD'?⁸ —

Different answers were given by two Amoraim in the West [Palestine], R. Jose b. Abin and R. Jose b. Zebida. One said, it is because he creates jealousy in the work of the creation,⁹ and the other says it is because he makes the commands¹⁰ of the Holy One, blessed be He, acts of grace, whereas they are only decrees.¹¹ A certain man went down [before the ark] in the presence of Rabbah and said, 'Thou hast shown pity to the nest of a bird, do thou have pity and mercy on us'; (Thou hast shown pity to an animal and its young,¹² do thou have pity and mercy on us). Said Rabbah: How well this Rabbi knows how to placate his Master! Said Abaye to him: But we have learnt, HE IS SILENCED? — Rabbah only wanted to sharpen Abaye's wits.

A certain [reader] went down before the ark in the presence of R. Hanina and said, 'The great, the mighty, the terrible, the majestic, the strong, the powerful God'. He said to him: Have you finished the praises of your Master? Even the first three, had it not been that Moses wrote them in the Law¹³ and the Men of the Great Synagogue came and ordained them,¹⁴ we should not recite; and you say all this! It is as if a man had thousands of thousands of denarii of gold and people to praise his wealth would say he had a thousand. Would it not be an insult to him?

R. Hanina said: Everything is in the hands of heaven except the fear of heaven¹⁵ as it says, And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God ask of thee but to fear.¹⁶ Are we to infer from this that fear is a small thing? — Yes; for Moses our teacher it was a small thing. In the same way, if a man is asked for a big article and he has it, it seems to him only small, but if he is asked for a small article and he has it not, it seems big to him.

R. Zera said: For one to say, 'Hear, Hear',¹⁷ is like saying, 'We give thanks, we give thanks'. The following was cited in objection to this: 'He who recites the Shema' and repeats is reprehensible'. He is only reprehensible, but we do not silence him? — There is no contradiction. In the one case we suppose he repeats each word as he says it,¹⁸ in the other that he repeats a whole sentence.¹⁹ Said R. Papa to him: But perhaps [the reason why he repeats] is because at first he was not thinking of what he said, and now he does think? — He replied: Is he to treat heaven like an ordinary acquaintance?²⁰ If he does not think of what he is saying, I will hit him with a hammer till he does think.

IF HE INTRODUCES EUPHEMISMS INTO THE PASSAGE DEALING WITH FORBIDDEN MARRIAGES, HE IS SILENCED. R. Joseph learned: [If, for example, he says] 'the shame of his father, the shame of his mother'.²¹

IF ONE SAYS, AND THOU SHALT NOT GIVE ANY OF THY SEED TO SET THEM APART etc. In the school of R. Ishmael it was stated: The text speaks of an Israelite who has intercourse with a Cuthean woman and begets from her a son for idolatry.²²

MISHNAH. THE INCIDENT OF REUBEN IS READ IN SYNAGOGUE BUT NOT TRANSLATED.²³ THE STORY OF TAMAR²⁴ IS READ AND TRANSLATED. THE FIRST ACCOUNT OF THE INCIDENT OF THE GOLDEN CALF²⁵ IS BOTH READ AND TRANSLATED, THE SECOND²⁶ IS READ BUT NOT TRANSLATED. THE BLESSING OF THE PRIESTS²⁷ IS READ BUT NOT TRANSLATED. THE STORIES OF DAVID²⁸ AND AMNON²⁹ ARE READ BUT NOT TRANSLATED. THE PORTION OF THE CHARIOT³⁰ IS NOT READ AS A HAFTARAH, BUT R. JUDAH PERMITS THIS. R. ELEAZAR SAYS: THE PORTION, MAKE KNOWN TO JERUSALEM',³¹ IS NOT READ AS A HAFTARAH.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Some portions [of the Scripture] are both read and translated, some are read but not translated, [and some are neither read nor translated].³² The following are both read and translated: (Mnemonic: B'L'T' 'E'K'N' N'SHP'H').³³ The account of the creation³⁴ is both read and translated. Certainly! — You might think that [through hearing it] people are led to inquire what is above and what is below,

- (1) Minuth (v. supra note 4); implying that only the good are invited to bless God (Rashi).
- (2) In the 'Amidah prayer.
- (3) Lev, ch. XVIII.
- (4) I.e., beget children from a Gentile woman. Aliter: 'To render pregnant a Gentile woman'. Either version is a departure from the text which is an injunction against Moloch worship. [Aruch (s.v. מולך): 'Thou shalt not give any of thy seed to the Arameans to set them apart to Moloch', implying that the prohibition applies only to the Moloch worship of a particular nation. Albeck Ch., Bericht Hochschule, Berlin 1930 p. 55 renders it: thou shalt not give thy seed to pass to heathendom, viz., to introduce them to the knowledge of heathen culture and custom.]
- (5) All this is explained in the Gemara.
- (6) V. Ber. 54a.
- (7) [The dualism of the Persians — the god of darkness and of light.]
- (8) With reference to the prohibition of taking both a bird and its nestlings. Deut. XXII, 6. 7.
- (9) As though God had mercy on birds and not on beasts.
- (10) Lit., 'his attributes'. [Herford sees in this a protest against the Pauline antithesis of Law and Grace, v. Christianity in Talmud and Midrash pp. 202ff.]
- (11) Which must be obeyed whether they are merciful or not.
- (12) V. Lev. XXII, 28. This sentence is bracketed in the text.
- (13) Deut. X, 17.
- (14) V. Neh. IX, 32.
- (15) It is left to the free choice of man whether to be Godfearing or not.
- (16) Deut. X, 12.
- (17) In reciting the Shema'.
- (18) I.e., he says, 'Hear, hear, Israel, Israel' which is only a stupidity.
- (19) I.e., he says, 'We give thanks to thee, we give thanks to thee', as if he were addressing two Powers.
- (20) Lit., 'Intimacy towards heaven!'
- (21) From prudery, instead of 'the nakedness'; Lev. XVIII, 7. [Maim: instead 'of thy father', 'of thy mother'].
- (22) Cf. Pseudo-Jonathan a.l. Apparently this is in flat contradiction with the Mishnah. Possibly R. Ishmael means to explain the words of the Mishnah which are somewhat obscure (Rashi). [According to Aruch's and Albeck's explanations (v. p. 149, n. 3) the Mishnah does not denounce R. Ishmael's version.]
- (23) Gen. XXXV, 22.
- (24) Ibid. XXXVIII.
- (25) Ex. XXXII, 1-20.
- (26) Ibid. 21-25. (So Maim).
- (27) Num. VI, 24-27.
- (28) II Sam. XI, 2-17.
- (29) Ibid. XIII, 1-4.
- (30) Ezek. I and X.
- (31) Ibid. XVI.
- (32) Wilna Gaon omits the words in brackets.
- (33) B = Bereshith (creation); L = Lot; T = Tamar; E = 'Egel (Calf); K = Kelaloth (curses); N = 'Oneshin (penalties); N = Amnon; Sh = Abshalom, P = Pilegesh (concubine); H = hoda' (make known).

and what is before and what is after.¹ Therefore we are told [that this is no objection]. The story of Lot and his two daughters² is both read and translated. Certainly! — You might think that [we should forbear] out of respect for Abraham. Therefore we are told [that this is no objection]. The story of Tamar and Judah is both read and translated. Certainly! — We might think that [we should forbear] out of respect for Judah. Therefore we are told [that this is no objection]; [the passage] really redounds to his credit, because [it records that] he confessed.³ The first account of the making of the Calf is both read and translated. Certainly! — You might think that [we should forbear] out of respect for Israel. Therefore we are told [that this is no objection]; on the contrary, it is agreeable to them,⁴ because it was followed by atonement.⁵ The curses and blessings⁶ are both read and translated. Certainly! — You might think that [we should forbear] lest the congregation should become disheartened; therefore we are told [that this is no objection]. Warnings and penalties are both read and translated. Certainly! — You might think that [we should forbear] for fear that they may come to keep the commandments out of fear;⁷ therefore we are told [that this is no objection]. The story of Amnon and Tamar is both read and translated. Certainly! — You might think that [we should forbear] out of respect for David. Therefore we are told [that this is no objection]. The story of the concubine in Gibeath⁸ is both read and translated. Certainly! — You might think [that we should forbear] out of respect for Benjamin. Therefore we are told [that this is no objection]. The passage commencing ‘Make known to Jerusalem her abominations’ is both read and translated. Certainly! — This is stated to exclude the view of R. Eleazar, as it has been taught: ‘On one occasion a man read in the presence⁹ of R. Eleazar ‘Make known to Jerusalem her abominations’. He said to him, While you are investigating the abominations of Jerusalem, go and investigate the abominations of your own mother. Inquiries were made into his birth, and he was found to be illegitimate.

Mnemonic: R'E'B'D'N').¹⁰ The incident of Reuben is read but not translated. On one occasion R. Hanina b. Gamaliel went to Kabul,¹¹ and the reader of the congregation read, ‘And it came to pass when Israel abode’,¹² and he said to the translator, Translate only the latter part of the verse, and the Sages commended his action. The second account of the Calf is read but not translated. What is the second account of the Calf? — From ‘And Moses said’ up to ‘and Moses saw’.¹³ It has been taught: A man should always be careful in wording his answers, because on the ground of the answer which Aaron made to Moses the unbelievers were able to deny [God], as it says, And I cast it into the fire and this calf came forth.¹⁴

The priestly blessing is read but not translated. What is the reason? — Because it contains the words, May he lift up.¹⁵

The accounts of David and Amnon are neither read nor translated.¹⁶ But you just said that the story of Amnon and Tamar is both read and translated? — There is no contradiction; the former statement refers to where it says ‘Amnon son of David’,¹⁷ the latter to where it says ‘Amnon’ simply.

Our Rabbis taught: Wherever an indelicate expression is written in the text, we substitute a more polite one in reading.¹⁸ [Thus for] yishgalenah¹⁹ [we read] yishkabenah;²⁰ [for] ba'apolim²¹ [we read] ba-tehorim;²² [for] hiryonim²³ [we read] dibyonim;²⁴ [for] le-ekol eth horehem we-lishtoth eth meme shinehem²⁵ [we read] le-ekol eth zo'atham we-lishtoth eth meme raglehem;²⁶ [for] la-mahara'oth²⁷ [we read] lemoza'oth.²⁸ R. Joshua b. Korha, however, says that the actual word la-mahara'oth²⁷ [is read] because it is a term of opprobrium for idolatry. R. Nahman said: All gibing²⁹ is forbidden save gibing at idolatry, which is permitted, as it is written, Bel boweth down, Nebo stoopeth³⁰ and the text goes on, They stoop, they bow down together, they cannot deliver the burden, etc. R. Jannai learns the same lesson from here: The inhabitants of Samaria shall be in dread for the calves of Beth Aven, for the people thereof shall mourn over it and the Priests thereof shall tremble for it, for its glory, because it is departed from it.³¹ Read not ‘its glory’ [kebedo], but ‘its burden’ [kebedo]. R. Huna b. Manoah said in the name of R. Aha the son of R. Ika: It is permitted to an Israelite to say to a Cuthean, Take your idol and put it in your shin tof.³² R. Ashi said: It is permissible to abuse a person of ill fame³³ with the term gimel shin.³⁴ It is permissible to praise a person of good report and if one does praise him, ‘blessings shall rest upon his head’.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 26a

THEY MAY BUY SCROLLS;¹ [IF THEY SELL] SCROLLS THEY MAY BUY A [SEFER] TORAH. BUT IF THEY SELL A [SEFER] TORAH THEY MAY NOT BUY WITH THE

PROCEEDS SCROLLS; IF [THEY SELL] SCROLLS THEY MAY NOT BUY WRAPPINGS; IF [THEY SELL] WRAPPINGS THEY MAY NOT BUY AN ARK; IF [THEY SELL] AN ARK THEY MAY NOT BUY A SYNAGOGUE; IF [THEY SELL] A SYNAGOGUE THEY MAY NOT BUY A TOWN SQUARE. THE SAME APPLIES TO ANY MONEY LEFT OVER.²

GEMARA. IF THE TOWNSPEOPLE SELL THE TOWN SQUARE. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: This is the view of R. Menahem b. Jose the anonymous author,³ but the Sages say that no sanctity attaches to the square. What is the reason of R. Menahem b. Jose? — Because the people pray in it on fast days⁴ and at gatherings of the ma'amad.⁵ What say the Rabbis to this? — That happens only exceptionally. IF [THEY SELL] THE SYNAGOGUE THEY MAY BUY AN ARK. R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: This rule applies only to a synagogue in a village, but a synagogue in a large town, since people from all parts come to it,⁶ may not be sold, it being regarded as belonging to a wider public. Said R. Ashi: As for this synagogue in Matha Mehasia,⁷ although people come to it from all parts, since they come at my discretion,⁸ I can if I like sell it. An objection was raised: 'R. Judah says: It is recorded of the synagogue of the coppersmiths⁹ in Jerusalem that they sold it to R. Eliezer and he used it for his own purposes'. And yet that was one in a large town? — That was a very small synagogue, and they themselves had made it.

The following was further raised in objection: 'In a house of the land of your possession:¹⁰ your possession is defiled by leprosy, but Jerusalem is not defiled by leprosy'.¹¹ R. Judah said: I have not heard this laid down save with respect to the area of the Sanctuary alone. We thus see that [according to R. Judah] synagogues and houses of study are defiled; and yet why [according to you] should this be, seeing that they belong to the town?¹² — I would emend [the above statement to read]: 'R. Judah says: I have not heard this rule laid down save in relation to a sanctified place only'.¹³

On what point do these [two authorities] join issue? — The First Tanna is of opinion that Jerusalem was not apportioned to [any of] the tribes,¹⁴ while R. Judah was of opinion that it was apportioned to [certain of] the tribes; and their difference is the same as that of the following Tannaim, as it has been taught: What [part of Jerusalem] was in the portion of Judah?¹⁵ The Temple mountain,¹⁶ the priestly chambers,¹⁷ and the courts.¹⁸ And what was in the portion of Benjamin? The hall¹⁹ and the sanctuary²⁰ and the holy of holies.²¹ A strip projected from the portion of Judah into the portion of Benjamin, and in it the altar [of sacrifice] was built, and every day the righteous Benjamin fretted over it, desiring to swallow it up, as it says, Crouching over it all the day.²² Therefore Benjamin was privileged to become the host of the Shechinah'.²³ The following Tanna, however, held that Jerusalem was not apportioned to any of the tribes, as it has been taught: 'People cannot let out houses²⁴ in Jerusalem as they do not belong to them. R. Eleazar b. Zadok says: They may not hire out beds either.²⁵ Therefore householders [who took in guests] would seize the skins of [visitors'] sacrifices forcibly'.²⁶ Abaye remarked: We may see from this that it is good manners for a man to leave his [empty] wine-flask and his skin-rug at his guest-house.

Raba said: This rule²⁷ was meant to apply only where the seven 'good men' of the town²⁸ did not sell in the assembly of the townspeople. But if the seven 'good men' of the town sold in the assembly of the townspeople, even if it was for a drinking place,¹ the transaction holds good. Rabina had the ground of a dismantled synagogue. He applied to R. Ashi to know whether he could plant seeds there. He replied: Go and buy it from the seven 'good men' of the town in the assembly of the townspeople, and you may then sow it.

Rami b. Abba was building a synagogue. There was a certain old synagogue which he wanted to pull down, so as to take bricks and beams from it and use them for the other. He was doubtful, however, how to interpret the dictum of R. Hisda; for R. Hisda² said: A man should not pull down a synagogue until he has built another [to take its place]. The reason there, [he knew] was so that there should be no negligence.³ But what was the rule in such a case as this?⁴ He applied to R. Papa, who forbade him; to R. Huna, and he also forbade him.

Raba said: A synagogue may be exchanged or sold [for secular purposes], but may not be hired or pledged. What is the reason?

[In the latter case] its holiness is still adhering to it.⁵ Its bricks also, may be exchanged or sold [for secular purposes], but not lent. This rule applies only to old ones,⁶ but in the case of new ones there is no objection.⁷ And even if we adopt the view that the mere intention [to use a thing for a certain purpose] has a certain force, this would be the case, for instance, with one who weaves a shroud for a dead body,⁸ but in this case [the objects in question] are like thread which has still to be woven into cloth, and no authority says [that in such a case there is force in mere intention].

[With regard to a synagogue which has been made] a gift, there is a difference of opinion between

R. Aha and Rabina, one forbidding [it to be used for secular purposes] and one permitting. The one who forbade did so on the ground that there is nothing to which its holiness is transferred,⁹ while the one who permitted it argued that if he [the giver] did not derive some benefit from the act¹⁰ he would not give it, so that in the end the gift is equivalent to a sale.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘Accessories of religious observances [when disused] are to be thrown away; accessories of holiness are to be stored away. The following are accessories of religious observances: a sukkah, a lulab, a shofar,¹¹ fringes. The following are accessories of holiness: large sacks for keeping scrolls of the Scripture in, tefillin and mezuzoth,¹¹ a mantle for a sefer torah,¹¹ and a tefillin bag and tefillin straps’. Raba said: At first I used to think that the stand [on which the sefer torah is placed] is an accessory to an accessory and that it is permitted.¹² When, however, I saw that the sefer torah is placed actually on it,¹³ I came to the conclusion that it is all accessory of holiness and is forbidden. Raba further said: At first I used to think that the curtain¹⁴ is an accessory of an accessory. When, however, I observed that it is folded over and a scroll is placed on it, I came to the conclusion that it is itself an accessory of holiness, and forbidden.

Raba further said: When an ark is falling asunder, to make it into a smaller ark is permitted, but to make it into a stand¹⁵ is forbidden. Raba further said: When a curtain is worn out, to make it into a mantle for a [whole] scroll of the Law is permitted, but for a single humash¹¹ is forbidden. Raba further said: These bags for humashim and boxes for scrolls¹⁶ are accessories of holiness and must be stored away [when disused]. Is not this obvious? — You might think that these are used not out of respect [for the scrolls] but merely for protection. Therefore we are told [that this is not so].

There was a synagogue of the Roman Jews¹⁷ which opened out into a room where a dead body was deposited.¹⁸ The kohanim¹⁹ wanted to go in there to pray, and they came and asked Raba [what they should do]. He said: Take the ark and put it down there,²⁰ since it is a wooden vessel which is meant to be stationary, and every wooden vessel which is meant to be stationary is immune from defilement and forms a partition to prevent the passage of defilement. Said the Rabbis to Raba: But sometimes it is moved while a scroll of the law is resting on it, and thus it becomes a vessel which is moved both when full and when empty? If that is so [he said], there is no remedy.

Mar Zutra said: Wrappings of scrolls which are worn out may be used for making shrouds for a meth mizwah;²¹ and this act constitutes their ‘storing away’.

Raba also said: A scroll of the law which is worn out may be buried by the side of a talmid hakam,¹⁹ even though he be one who only repeats halachoth.²² R. Aha b. Jacob said: It should be put in an earthenware vessel, as it says, And put them in an earthen vessel that they may continue many days.²³

R. Papi said in the name of Raba: To turn a synagogue into a college²⁴ is permitted; to turn a college into a synagogue is forbidden. R. Papa, however, also reporting Raba, states the opposite. R. Aha said:

(1) Bah. adds: ‘or for spreading out fruit’.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 27a

The statement of R. Papi is the more probable, since R. Joshua b. Levi said: It is permissible to make a synagogue into a beth hamidrash. This seems conclusive.

Bar Kappara gave the following exposition. 'What is the meaning of the verse, And he burnt the house of the Lord and the king's house and all the houses of Jerusalem even every great man's house burnt he with fire?'¹ 'The house of the Lord': this is the Temple. 'The king's house': this is the royal palace. 'All the houses of Jerusalem': literally. 'Even every great man's house burnt he with fire':² R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi gave different interpretations of this. One said, it means the place where the Torah is magnified; the other, the place where a prayer is magnified. The one who says Torah bases himself on the verse, The Lord was pleased, for his righteousness' sake to make the torah great and glorious.³ The one who says prayer bases himself on the verse, Tell me, I pray thee, the great things that Elisha has done;⁴ and what Elisha did, he did by means of prayer. It may be presumed that it was R. Joshua b. Levi who said, 'the place where Torah is magnified', since R. Joshua b. Levi said that a synagogue may be turned into a beth ha-midrash; which is a clear indication.

BUT IF THEY SELL A [SEFER] TORAH THEY MAY NOT BUY SCROLLS. The question was raised: What is the rule about selling an old sefer torah to buy a new one? Do we say that since we do not thus go to higher grade [in the use of the money] it is forbidden, or are we to say that since there is no higher grade to go to, there is no objection? Come and hear: BUT IF THEY SELL, A [SEFER] TORAH THEY MAY NOT BUY SCROLLS; it is scrolls that they may not buy, but to buy a [sefer] torah with the money of a [sefer] torah is unobjectionable! [No.] But the Mishnah speaks of some thing already done, we ask whether it may be done in the first instance? — Come and hear: A sefer torah may be rolled up in the wrappings of a humash, or a humash in the wrappings of a scroll of prophets and hagiographa, but prophets and hagiographa may not be rolled up in the wrappings of a humash, nor a humash in the wrappings of a sefer torah.⁵ Now it states here at any rate that a sefer torah may be rolled up in the wrappings of a humash; [as much as to say], in the wrappings of a humash it may be, but in those of [another] sefer torah it may not be?⁶ — Look at the succeeding clause: 'But a humash may not be rolled up in the wrappings of a sefer torah', which would imply that there is no objection against wrapping a sefer torah in those of another sefer torah? — The fact is that from this statement no conclusion can be drawn.

Come and hear: 'A [sefer] torah may be laid on another [sefer] torah, and a [sefer] torah on separate humashim, and separate humashim on scrolls of the prophets and hagiographa, but scrolls of the prophets and hagiographa may not be placed on humashim, nor humashim on a [sefer] torah'! — You speak here of laying; laying is different, because it is impossible to avoid it; for if you do not suppose this, [we may ask,] how are we allowed to roll up the scrolls, seeing that in so doing we lay one sheet on another? The fact is that since this cannot be avoided, it is permitted; and so here also, since it cannot be avoided,⁷ it is permitted.

Come and hear, since Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan, who had it from Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel: A man should not sell an old [sefer] torah in order to buy a new one with the proceeds! — There the reason is lest he should [afterwards] neglect to do so; here we speak of a case where the new one is written and waiting to be paid for. What is the rule [in such a case]? — Come and hear, since R. Johanan said in the name of R. Meir: A man should not sell a sefer torah save in order to study the Torah and to marry a wife. From this we may conclude [may we not] that there is no objection against buying one sefer torah with the proceeds of another? — Perhaps study comes under a different rule, since study leads on to practice. Marrying also [is permitted because it says], He created it not a waste, he formed it to be inhabited,⁸ but to buy a sefer torah with the proceeds of another is still not permitted.

Come and hear: 'A man should not sell a sefer torah even though he does not require it. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel went further and said: Even if a man has no food and he sells a sefer torah or his daughter, he will never have any luck⁹ [from that money]'.

THE SAME APPLIES TO ANY MONEY LEFT OVER. Raba said: This is the rule only if they had money left over from a sale; but if they had money left over from a collection, it is permitted [to use it for any purpose]. Abaye cited the following in objection to this: 'When does this rule apply? If they made no stipulation; but if they made a stipulation, they may even give it to the duchsusia'.¹⁰ Now how are we to understand this? Shall we say that they [the seven good men] sold [a holy article] and had money left over [after purchasing a new one]? Then even if they made a stipulation [that they could do what they liked with it], what does it avail?¹¹ We must say therefore that they collected money and had some left over, and the reason is given that 'they made a stipulation', but if they made no stipulation they cannot? — I still maintain that [what is meant is] that they sold and had something left, and the statement should run thus: 'When does this rule apply? When the seven "good men" of the town did not make any stipulation in the assembly of the townspeople; but if the seven good men of the town made a stipulation in the assembly of the townspeople, it may be used even for paying a duchsusia'.

Abaye said to a Rabbinical student who used to repeat¹² the Mishnah in the presence of R. Shesheth: Have you ever heard from R. Shesheth what is meant by duchsusia? — He replied: This is what R. Shesheth said: The town horseman.¹³ Abaye thereupon observed: This shows that a Rabbinical student who has heard something of which he does not know the meaning should ask one who is frequently in the company of the Rabbis, since he is almost certain to have heard the answer from some great man.

R. Johanan said in the name of R. Meir: If the representatives of one town¹⁴ go [on a visit] to another town and they are there rated for a charity contribution, they should pay it and on leaving they should bring the money with them¹⁵ to assist with it the poor of their own town. It has been taught to the same effect: 'If the men of one town go to another town and are there rated for a charity contribution, they should pay it, and when they leave they should bring the money back with them. If an individual, however, goes to another town and is there rated for a charity contribution, it is given to the poor of that town

R. Huna once proclaimed a fast day. R. Hana b. Hanilai and all the [leading] men of his place happened to visit him [on that day], and they were called upon for a charity contribution, and they gave it. When they were about to leave, they said to him [R. Huna], Kindly return it to us so that we may go and assist with it the poor of our own town. He replied to them: We have learnt: 'When does this rule apply? When there is no town scholar¹ in charge there; but if there is a scholar in control there, it should be given to the town scholar, and all the more so in this case, seeing that both my poor and your poor depend upon me.

MISHNAH. [A SYNAGOGUE² BELONGING TO A COMMUNITY³ SHOULD NOT BE SOLD TO A PRIVATE PERSON BECAUSE ITS SANCTITY IS [THEREBY] LOWERED. SO R. MEIR. THEY SAID TO HIM: IF SO, IT SHOULD NOT BE ALLOWED TO SELL FROM A LARGER TOWN TO A SMALLER ONE.

GEMARA. That was a sound objection raised by the Rabbis against R. Meir, [was it not]? What says R. Meir to this? — [To sell] from a large town to a small one [is unobjectionable], because if it was holy to begin with, it is still holy now. But if it passes from a community to an individual, there is no holiness left.⁴ [And what is the reply of] the Rabbis [to this]? — If that raises a scruple [in this case], in the other case also it raised a scruple, because 'in the multitude of people is the king's glory'.⁵

MISHNAH. A SYNAGOGUE MAY NOT BE SOLD SAVE WITH THE STIPULATION THAT IT MAY BE BOUGHT BACK [BY THE SELLERS] WHENEVER THEY DESIRE. SO R. MEIR. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, SAY THAT IT MAY BE SOLD IN PERPETUITY, SAVE FOR FOUR PURPOSES-FOR A BATH, FOR A TANNERY, FOR A RITUAL BATH, OR FOR A LAUNDRY. R. JUDAH SAYS: IT MAY BE SOLD FOR [TURNING INTO] A COURTYARD, AND THE PURCHASER MAY DO WHAT HE LIKES WITH IT.

GEMARA. On R. Meir's ruling, how do people live in it? [The rent they pay] would be interest!⁶ — R. Johanan replied: R. Meir gave this ruling on the basis of the view of R. Judah, who said that interest which is only contingent⁷ is permitted, as it has been taught:⁸ 'If a man lent another a maneh and the latter made a [conditional] sale to him of his field,⁹ if the vendor takes¹⁰ the produce, this is permitted, but if the purchaser takes the produce, it is forbidden.¹¹ R. Judah said that even if the purchaser takes the produce it is permitted. Said R. Judah further: It happened once that Boethus b. Zunin made a sale of his field with the permission of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, and the purchaser took the produce. They said to him: Do you cite that as a proof? It was in fact the vendor who took the produce and not the purchaser'. On what point of principle did they differ? — On the question of contingent interest; one authority [R. Judah] held that contingent interest is permitted, and the other held that it is forbidden. Raba said: All authorities agree that contingent interest is forbidden, and the point at issue is the taking of interest on condition of returning it. One authority [R. Judah] held that to take interest on condition of returning it [when the principal is returned] is permitted,¹² while the other held that it is forbidden.

THE SAGES SAY HE MAY SELL IT IN PERPETUITY etc. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: It is permitted to a man to make water within four cubits of where prayers have been said. Said R. Joseph: What has he told us? We have already learnt it: R. JUDAH SAYS: IT MAY BE SOLD FOR USE AS A COURTYARD, AND THE PURCHASER MAY DO WHAT HE LIKES IN IT; And even the Rabbis did not forbid save in the synagogue itself, since its sanctity is permanent, but for the four adjoining cubits, the sanctity of which is not permanent,¹³ they did not make such a rule.

A tanna recited in the presence of R. Nahman: One who has just said prayers may go a distance of four cubits and make water, and one who has made water may go a distance of four cubits and pray. He said to him: I grant you that one who has made water may go four cubits and pray; this we have learnt:¹⁴ 'How far should he remove from it and from excrement? Four cubits'. But why should one who has prayed remove four cubits before making water? If that is the rule, you have sanctified all the streets of Nehardea!¹⁵ Say, 'should wait' [the time it takes to go four cubits]. [Is that so?] I grant you that one who has made water should wait till he can go four cubits, on account of drippings [on his clothes]. But why should one who has just prayed wait long enough to go four cubits? — R. Ashi replied: Because for the time it takes to go four cubits his mouth is still full of his prayer¹⁶ and his lips are still muttering it. (Mnemonic Z'L'P'N').¹⁷ R. Zaccai was asked by his disciples: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He replied: Never in my life have I made water within four cubits of a place where prayers have been said, nor have I given an opprobrious epithet to my fellow, nor have I omitted [to perform] the sanctification of the [Sabbath] day.¹⁸ I had a grandmother who once sold her headdress so as to bring me [wine for] the sanctification of the day. It was taught: When she died she left him three hundred barrels of wine, and when he died he left his sons three thousand barrels.

R. Huna once came before Rab girded with a string. He said to him, What is the meaning of this? He replied: I had no [wine for] sanctification, and I pledged my girdle so as to get some. He said: May it be the will of heaven that you be [one day] smothered in robes of silk. On the day when Rabbah his son was married, R. Huna, who was a short man, was lying on a bed and his daughters and daughters-in-law stripped [clothes] from themselves and threw them on him until he was smothered in silks. When Rab heard he was chagrined and said, Why when I blessed you did you not say, The same to you, Sir?¹⁹

R. Eleazar b. Shammua' was asked by his disciples: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He replied: Never in my life have I made a short²⁰ cut through a synagogue, nor have I stepped upon the heads of the holy people,²¹ nor have I lifted my hands [to say the priestly blessing] without reciting a blessing.²²

R. Peridah was asked by his disciples: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He replied: Never in my life have I allowed anyone to be before me at the house of study

, nor have I said grace before a kohen,¹ nor have I eaten of a beast from which the priestly dues² have not been given,³ as R. Isaac said in the name of R. Johanan: It is forbidden to eat from an animal from which the priestly dues have not been given; and R. Isaac further said: To eat from an animal from which the priestly dues have not been given is like eating tebel.⁴ The law, however, is not as stated by him. 'Nor did I say grace before a kohen'. This implies that this is a meritorious action. But has not R. Johanan said: 'If a talmid hakam allows even a high priest who is all ignoramus to say grace before him, that talmid hakam commits a mortal offence,⁵ as it says, All that hate me [mesanne'ai] love death;⁶ read not mesanne'ai [that hate me], but masni'ai [that make me hated]?'⁷ — When R. Johanan made this remark, he was thinking of equals.⁸

R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh was asked by his disciples: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He replied: Never in my life have I sought respect through the degradation of my fellow, nor has the curse of my fellow gone up with me upon my bed, and I have been generous with my money.⁹ 'I have not sought respect through the degradation of my fellow', as illustrated by R. Huna who once was carrying a spade on his shoulder when R. Hana b. Hanilai wanted to take it from him, but he said to him, If you are accustomed to carry in your own town, take it, but if not, I do not want to be paid respect through your degradation. 'Nor did the curse of my fellow go up on my bed with me'. This is illustrated by Mar Zutra, who, when he climbed into his bed said, I forgive all who have vexed me. 'I have been generous with my money', as a Master has said, 'Job was generous with his money; he used to leave with the shopkeeper a perutah¹⁰ of his change'. R. Akiba asked R. Nehunia the great: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? His attendants came and beat him,¹¹ so he went and sat on the top of a date tree, and said to him: Rabbi, seeing that it says ‘a lamb’, why does it also say ‘one’?¹² Thereupon he [R. Nehunia] said, He is a rabbinical student, leave him alone. He then answered his question, saying, ‘One’ means ‘unique in its flock’. Then he said to him: Never in my life have I accepted presents, nor have I insisted on retribution [when wronged],¹³ and I have been generous with my money. ‘I have not accepted presents’, as illustrated by R. Eleazar, who, when presents were sent to him from the Prince would not accept them and when he was invited there would not go. He said to them: Do you not want me to live, since it says, He that hateth gifts shall live?¹⁴ R. Zera, when presents were sent to him from the Prince, would not accept them, but when he was invited there he used to go, saying, They derive honour from my presence. ‘Nor did I insist on retribution’, as Raba said: ‘He who waives his right to retribution¹⁵ is forgiven all his sins, as it says, that pardoneth iniquity and passeth by transgression.¹⁶ Whose iniquity is forgiven? The iniquity of him who passes by transgression.

Rabbi asked R. Joshua b. Korha: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He said to him: Do you begrudge me my life?¹⁷ Said Rabbi to him: This is [a point of] Torah, and it is important for me to learn. He replied: Never in my life have I gazed at the countenance¹⁸ of a wicked man; for so R. Johanan said: It is forbidden to a man to gaze at the form of the countenance¹⁹ of a wicked man, as it says, Were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee nor see thee.²⁰ R. Eleazar said: His eyes become dim, as it says, And it came to pass that when Isaac was old that his eyes were dim, so that he could not see;²¹ because he used to gaze at the wicked Esau. But was that the cause? Has not R. Isaac said: Let not the curse of an ordinary person ever seem of small account to thee, for Abimelech cursed Sarah, and it was fulfilled in her seed, as it says, Behold he is for thee a covering [kesuth] of the eyes.²² Read not ‘kesuth’ but ‘kesiyath’ [blinding]? — Both caused the affliction. Raba said. We learn it from here, It is not good to respect the person of the wicked.²³ When he was about to depart life, Rabbi said to him, Bless me. He said to him: May it be heaven's will that you attain to half my days. Not to their whole length [he exclaimed]? Shall those who succeed you,²⁴ [he replied] pasture cattle?²⁵

Abbuha b. Ihi and Minyamin b. Ihi [both left sayings on this subject]. One said: May I be rewarded²⁶ because I have never gazed at a Cuthean, and the other said, May I be rewarded because I have never gone into partnership with a Cuthean.

R. Zera was asked by his disciples: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He replied: Never in my life have I been harsh with my household, nor have I stepped in front of one greater than myself, nor have I meditated on the Torah in filthy alleys,²⁷ nor have I gone four cubits without Torah²⁸ and tefillin,²⁹ nor have I slept in the beth ha-midrash,²⁹ either a long or a short sleep,³⁰ nor have I rejoiced in the downfall of my fellow, nor have I called my fellow by his nickname, (or, as some report, ‘family nickname’).³¹

MISHNAH. R. JUDAH SAID FURTHER:³² IF A SYNAGOGUE HAS FALLEN INTO RUINS, IT IS NOT RIGHT TO DELIVER FUNERAL ORATIONS THEREIN NOR TO WIND ROPES³³ NOR TO SPREAD NETS NOR TO LAY OUT PRODUCE ON THE ROOF [TO DRY] NOR TO USE IT AS A SHORT CUT,³⁴ AS IT SAYS, AND I WILL BRING YOUR SANCTUARIES UNTO DESOLATION,³⁵ [WHICH IMPLIES THAT] THEIR HOLINESS REMAINS EVEN WHEN THEY ARE DESOLATE. IF GRASS COMES UP IN THEM, IT SHOULD NOT BE PLUCKED, SO AS TO EXCITE COMPASSION.³⁶

, nor to dress up in them, nor to stroll about in them, nor to go into them in summer to escape the heat and in the rainy season to escape the rain, nor to deliver a private funeral address¹ in them. But it is right to read [the Scriptures] in them and to repeat the Mishnah and to deliver public funeral addresses.² R. Judah said: When is this? When they are still in use; but when they are abandoned, grass is allowed to grow in them, and it should not be plucked, so as to excite compassion'. Who was speaking about grass? — There is an omission, and the statement should read thus: 'They should be swept and watered so that grass should not grow in them. R. Judah said: When is this? When they are in use; but when they are abandoned, grass is allowed to grow in them; if grass does grow, it is not plucked, so that it may excite compassion

R. Assi said: The synagogues of Babylon have been built with a stipulation,³ and even so they must not be treated disrespectfully. What [for instance] is this? — Doing calculations [for business purposes] in them. R. Assi said: A synagogue in which people make calculations is used for keeping a dead body in over night. You actually think it is used for keeping a dead body in? — Is there no way otherwise? But [say] in the end a meth mizwah⁴ will be kept there over night.

‘Nor to dress up in it’. Raba said: The Sages and their disciples are permitted — since R. Joshua b. Levi has said: What is the meaning of ‘Be Rabbanan’?⁵ The Rabbis’ house.

‘Nor to go into them in summer to escape the heat and in the rainy season to escape the rain’. For instance, Rabina and R. Ada b. Mattenah were once standing and asking questions of Raba when a shower of rain came on. They went into the synagogue, saying, Why we have gone into the synagogue is not because of the rain, but because the discussion of a legal point requires clarity, like a clear day.⁶

R. Aha the son of Raba asked R. Ashi: If a man has occasion to call another out of synagogue, what is he to do? He replied: If he is a rabbinical student, let him say some halachah; if he is a tanna,⁷ let him repeat a Mishnah; if he is a Kara,⁸ let him say a verse of Scripture; if none of these, let him say to a child, ‘Repeat me the last verse you have learnt’; or else let him stay a little while and then get up.

‘To deliver public funeral addresses⁹ in them’. What is meant by a public funeral address? — R. Hisda gave as an example, For instance, a funeral address at which R. Shesheth is present.¹⁰ R. Shesheth mentioned as an example: For instance, a funeral address at which R. Hisda is present.¹¹ Rafram had a funeral address delivered for his daughter-in-law in the synagogue, saying, To pay honour to me and to the dead¹² all the people will come.¹³

R. Zera delivered a funeral address for a certain rabbinical student in the synagogue, saying, Whether to pay honour to me or to pay honour to the dead, all the public will come.

Resh Lakish delivered a funeral address for a certain rabbinical student who frequented the Land of Israel and who used to repeat halachoth¹⁴ before twenty-four rows [of disciples]. He said: Alas! The Land of Israel has lost a great man. [On the other hand] there was a certain man who used to repeat halachoth, Sifra and Sifre and Tosefta,¹⁵ and when he died they came and said to R. Nahman, Sir, will you deliver a funeral oration for him, and he said, How are we to deliver over him an address: Alas! A bag full of books has been lost!¹⁶ Observe now the difference between the rigorous scholars of the Land of Israel and the saints of Babylon.¹⁷

We have learnt in another place:¹⁸ ‘Whoever makes use of a crown, passeth away [from the world]’ and Resh Lakish commented: This applies to one who accepts service from one who can repeat halachoth, and ‘Ulla said: A man may accept service from one who can repeat the four [orders of the Mishnah]¹⁹ but not from one who can [also] teach²⁰ them. This is illustrated by the following story of Resh Lakish, he was once traveling along a road when he came to a pool of water, and a man came up and put him on his shoulders and began taking him across. He said to the man: Can you read²⁰ the Scriptures? He answered, I can. Can you repeat the Mishnah? [He replied], I can repeat four orders of the Mishnah. Resh Lakish thereupon said: You have hewn four rocks, and you carry Resh Lakish on your shoulder? Throw the son of Lakisha into the water! He replied: I would sooner that your honour tell me something.²¹ If so, he replied, learn from me this dictum which was enunciated by R. Zera: ‘The daughters of Israel imposed spontaneously upon themselves the restriction that if they saw [on their garments] a spot of blood no bigger than a mustard seed, they waited for seven days without issue [before taking a ritual bath].²²

It was taught in the Tanna debe Eliyyahu:²³ 'Whoever repeats halachoth may rest assured that he is destined for the future world, as it says, His goings [halikoth] are to eternity.²⁴ Read not halikoth but halachoth'.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 29a

The study of the Torah may be suspended for escorting a dead body to the burying place and a bride to the canopy. It was recorded of R. Judah b. Ila'i that he used to suspend the study of the Torah for escorting a dead body to the burying place and a bride to the canopy. When does this rule [regarding the dead] apply? When there are not present sufficient numbers [to pay him due honour]; but if sufficient numbers are available, [the study of the Torah] is not suspended. What numbers are sufficient?—R. Samuel b. Inia said in the name of Rab: Twelve thousand and [in addition] six thousand trumpets, or, as according to another version, twelve thousand men of whom six thousand have trumpets. Ulla said: Enough to make a procession extending from the burying ground to the town gate. R. Shesheth said: The withdrawal of the Torah¹ should correspond to its delivery:² as its delivery was in the presence of sixty myriads, so its withdrawal should be accompanied by sixty myriads. This applies to one who knew by heart Scripture and Mishnah; but for one who [also] taught the Mishnah there is no limit.³

It has been taught: R. Simon b. Yohai said: Come and see how beloved are Israel in the sight of God, in that to every place to which they were exiled the Shechinah went with them. They were exiled to Egypt and the Shechinah was with them, as it says, Did I reveal myself unto the house of thy father when they were in Egypt.⁴ They were exiled to Babylon, and the Shechinah was with them, as it says, for your sake I was sent to Babylon.⁵ And when they will be redeemed in the future, the Shechinah will be with them, as it says, Then the Lord thy God will return [with] thy captivity.⁶ It does not say here we-heshib [and he shall bring back] but we-shab [and he shall return]. This teaches us that the Holy One, blessed be He, will return with them from the places of exile.

Where [is the Shechinah] in Babylon?-Abaye said: In the synagogue of Huza⁷ and in the synagogue of Shaf-veyathib⁸ in Nehardea. Do not, however, imagine that it is in both places,⁹ but it is sometimes in one and sometimes in the other. Said Abaye: May I be rewarded¹⁰ because whenever I am within a parasang¹¹ I go in and pray there.

The father of Samuel and Levi were sitting in the synagogue which 'moved and settled' in Nehardea. The Shechinah came and they heard a sound of tumult and rose and went out. R. Shesheth was once sitting in the synagogue which 'moved and settled' in Nehardea, when the Shechinah came. He did not go out, and the ministering angels came and threatened him. He turned to him and said: Sovereign of the Universe, if one is afflicted¹² and one is not afflicted, who gives way to whom? God thereupon said to them: Leave him.

Yet have I been to them as a little sanctuary.¹³ R. Isaac said: This refers to the synagogue and houses of learning in Babylon. R. Eleazar says: This refers to the house of our teacher¹⁴ in Babylon.

Raba gave the following exposition: What is the meaning of the verse, Lord, thou hast been our dwelling [ma'on] place?¹⁵ This refers to synagogues and houses of learning. Abaye said: Formerly I used to study at home and pray in the synagogue, but when I noticed¹⁶ the words of David, O Lord, I love the habitation [me'on] of thy house,¹⁷ I began to study also in the synagogue.

It has been taught: R. Eleazar ha-Kappar says: The synagogues and houses of learning in Babylon will in time to come be planted in Eretz Israel, as it says, For as Tabor among the mountains and as Carmel by the sea came.¹⁸ Now can we not draw an inference here a fortiori: Seeing that Carmel and Tabor which came only on a single occasion to learn the Torah are implanted in Eretz Israel, how much more must this be the case with the synagogues and houses of learning where the Torah is read and expounded!¹⁹

Bar Kappara gave the following exposition: What is the meaning of the verse, Why look ye askance [terazedun], ye mountains of peaks.²⁰ A bath kol²¹ went forth and said to them: Why do ye desire litigation [tirzu din] with Sinai? Ye are all full of blemishes as compared with Sinai. It is written here gabnunim [with peaks], and it is written elsewhere or crookedbacked [gibben] or a dwarf.²² R. Ashi observed: You can learn from this that if a man is arrogant, this is a blemish in him.

IT SHOULD NOT BE USED AS A SHORT CUT [KAPANDRIA]. What is kapandria?²³ Raba said: Kapandria is as its name implies. What does its name imply? As if one were to say, Instead of going round the block ['makifna adare], I will go through here. R. Abbahu said: If a road passed through there originally,²⁴ it is permitted. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: If one goes in without any intention of using it as a short cut, he may afterwards use it as a short cut. And R. Helbo said in the name of R. Huna: If one enters a synagogue to pray, he may²⁵ afterwards use it as a short cut, as it says, But when, the people of the land shall come before the Lord at the appointed seasons, he that entereth by way of the north gate to worship shall go forth by way of the south gate.²⁶

IF GRASS HAS GROWN IN IT, IT SHOULD NOT BE PLUCKED, SO AS TO EXCITE COMPASSION. But it has been taught: 'It should not be plucked and given as food [to cattle], but it may be plucked and left there'? — The statement in our Mishnah also refers to plucking and giving for food.

Our Rabbis taught: 'Burying grounds must not be treated disrespectfully. Cattle should not be fed in them, nor should a watercourse be turned through them, nor should grass be plucked in them, and if it is plucked, it should be burnt on the spot, out of respect for the dead'. To what do these last words apply? Shall I say, to the last clause? If it is burnt on the spot, what respect does this show for the dead? It must be then to the preceding clauses.

MISHNAH. IF THE NEW MOON OF ADAR FALLS ON SABBATH, THE PORTION OF SHEKALIM²⁷ IS READ [ON THAT DAY]. IF IT FALLS IN THE MIDDLE OF THE WEEK, IT IS READ ON THE SABBATH BEFORE, AND ON THE NEXT SABBATH THERE IS A BREAK.²⁸ ON THE SECOND [OF THE SPECIAL SABBATHS] ZAKOR²⁹ IS READ, ON THE THIRD THE PORTION OF THE RED HEIFER,³⁰ ON THE FOURTH THIS MONTH SHALL BE TO YOU.³¹ ON THE FIFTH THE REGULAR ORDER³² IS RESUMED. [THE REGULAR READING]³³ IS INTERRUPTED FOR ANY SPECIAL OCCASION: FOR NEW MOONS, FOR HANUKKAH, FOR PURIM, FOR FASTS, FOR MA'AMADOTH,³⁴ AND FOR THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.³⁵ and with regard to diverse seeds.¹ I can understand it being made for diverse seeds, because it is the time for sowing.² But what is the ground for making it for the shekels? — R. Tabi said in the name of R. Josiah: Because Scripture says, This is the burnt-offering of each new moon in its renewal.³ The Torah herein says to us: As you renew the month, bring an offering from the new contributions. And since it is in Nisan that we have to bring from the new contributions,⁴ we read beforehand on the first of Adar so that shekels should be brought [in time] to the Sanctuary. With whose view does this accord? Not with that of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For if you take the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, he requires [only] two weeks' [notice], as it has been taught: 'Moot points in the law of Passover are considered⁵ from thirty days before Passover; R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, says, from two weeks before'. You may even say it accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For since a Master has said that 'on the fifteenth of this month [Adar] tables⁶ are set up in the provinces and on the twenty-fifth in the Sanctuary',⁷ On account of the tables we read beforehand [on the first of Adar].⁸

What is the portion of Shekalim? — Rab said, Commanded the children of Israel and say unto them My food which is presented unto me,⁹ Samuel said, When thou takest.¹⁰ We call well see how, according to the one who says the portion is 'When thou takest', it is called the portion of Shekalim, because shekalim are mentioned in it. But according to the one who says it is 'My food which is presented to me', — are shekels mentioned there? — Yes; the reason is based on the dictum of R. Tabi.¹¹ I can well understand [the reason of] the one who says that 'Command the children of Israel' [should be read], because sacrifices are mentioned in it. But according to the one who says that 'When thou takest' should be read, are sacrifices mentioned there? It is the shekels for the sockets that are mentioned there!¹² — [The reason is] as R. Joseph learnt: 'There were three contributions;¹³ of the altar for the altar,¹⁴ of the sockets for the sockets, and of the repair of the House for the repair of the House'.¹⁵ There is a justification for the one who says that 'When thou takest' should be read, because he thus makes a difference between this New Moon and other New Moons. But the one who says that 'Command the children of Israel' should be read — what difference does he make?¹⁶ — He does make a difference, because on other New Moons¹⁷ six read in the portion of the day¹⁸ and one that of New Moon, whereas on this occasion all read in that of New Moon. This is a good answer for one who says that [when the Mishnah says that the 'REGULAR ORDER' IS RESUMED it means] 'the regular order of portions'; but according to the one who says that [what it means is that] the order of haftarahs¹⁹ is resumed [and the order of Pentateuch portions has not been interrupted], what difference is there [between this New Moon and others]? — There is a difference, because on other New Moons six read in the portion of the day¹⁸ and one the special portion for New Moon, whereas on this occasion three read in the portion of the day and four in that of New Moon.

On objection was raised:²⁰ 'When the New Moon of Adar falls on Sabbath, the portion of Shekalim is read, and the chapter of Jehoiada the Priest²¹ is said as haftarah'. Now according to the one who says that 'When thou takest' should be said, there is a good reason for reading Jehoiada the Priest as haftarah because it is similar in subject,²² as it is written [there], the money of the persons for whom each man is rated.²³ But according to the one who says that 'My food which is presented to me' is read, is there any similarity? — There is, on the basis of R. Tabi's dictum.²⁴

The following was then cited in objection: 'If it [the New Moon of Adar] falls on the portion next to it [the portion of Shekalim], whether before or after, they read it and repeat it'. Now this creates no difficulty for one who holds that 'When thou takest' is read because [the regular portion containing this passage] falls about that time.²⁵ But according to the one who says that 'My food which is presented to me' is read — does [the portion containing that passage] fall about that time?²⁶ — Yes, for the people of Palestine, who complete the reading of the Pentateuch in three years.²⁷

It has been taught in agreement with Samuel: 'When the New Moon of Adar falls on Sabbath, the portion 'When thou takest' is read, and the haftarah is about 'Jehoiada the Priest'.

R. Isaac Nappaha said: When the New Moon of Adar falls on Sabbath, three scrolls of the Law are taken out [of the Ark], and read out of — from one the portion of the day, from one the portion of New Moon,²⁸ and from one 'When thou takest'. R. Isaac b. Nappaha also said: When the New Moon of Tebeth falls on Sabbath, three scrolls of the Law are brought and read out of; from one the regular portion, from a second the portion of New Moon, and from the third that of Hanukkah.²⁹ Both statements are required. For if only the latter had been given, [I might think that] in this case R. Isaac required [three scrolls], but in the other case he followed the view of Rab who said that the portion of Shekalim is 'My food which is presented to me', and therefore two would be enough. Therefore we are told that this is not so. But why not state the former [only] and the other would not need to be stated? — One was inferred from the other.³⁰

It was stated: If the New Moon of Tebeth falls on a weekday, R. Isaac [Nappaha] says that three read the portion of New Moon and one the portion of Hanukkah. R. Dimi from Haifa, however, says that three read the portion of Hanukkah and one that of New Moon. Said R. Mani: The opinion of R. Isaac Nappaha is the more probable, because when it is a question between the regular and the intermittent, the regular takes precedence.³¹ R. Abin, however, said: The opinion of R. Dimi is the more probable. For what is it that causes a fourth man to read?³² The New Moon. Therefore the fourth ought to read the portion of the New Moon. What do we decide? — R. Joseph said: We take no notice of New Moon,³³ while Rabbah said, We take no notice of Hanukkah. The law, however, is that we take no notice of Hanukkah,' and New Moon is the main consideration.

It was stated: 'If it [the Sabbath of Shekalim] falls when the portion 'And thou shalt command'³⁴ is read, then six persons read from 'And thou shalt command' to 'When thou takest', and one from 'When thou takest' to 'Thou shalt also make'.³⁵ Abaye remarked:

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 30a

If that is done, people will say that that is where they stop.¹ No, said Abaye; six read from 'And thou shalt command' to 'Thou shalt also make', and one repeats and reads from 'When thou takest' to 'Thou shalt also make'.

The following was cited in objection to this: 'If it [the Sabbath of Shekalim] falls on the Sabbath of the portion adjoining it, whether just before or just after,² it is read and repeated'. Now if we accept the view of Abaye, this is quite in harmony with it; but on the view of R. Isaac Nappaha, it does conflict with it,³ [does it not]? — R. Isaac Nappaha can answer you: And on the view of Abaye does it create no difficulty? We may allow the Sabbath before it, but if it falls on the Sabbath after, where do you find a repetition? What you have to say in fact is that [according to Abaye] this portion [of Shekalim] is read on two successive Sabbaths;⁴ so I too can answer that it is read on two successive Sabbaths.

If it falls on the portion of 'When thou takest' itself, R. Isaac Nappaha says that six read from ‘Thou shalt also make’ to ‘And Moses assembled’,⁵ and one from ‘When thou takest’ to ‘Thou shalt also make’. Abaye strongly demurred to this, saying, Now people will say that we are reading backwards!⁶ No, said Abaye; Six read to ‘And Moses assembled’, and one repeats from ‘When thou takest’ to ‘Thou shalt also make’. It has been taught in agreement with Abaye: ‘If it falls on [the Sabbath of] ‘When thou takest itself, it is read on the Sabbath before’.

It was stated: ‘If the new moon of Adar falls on Friday, Rab says that [the portion of Shekalim] is read on the Sabbath before, while Samuel says that it is read on the Sabbath after’. Rab says it is read before, because otherwise there will be a shortage in the days of the tables.⁷ Samuel says it is read after, because after all the fifteenth day [from the new moon] falls on a Friday, and the tables will not be taken out till the Sunday; therefore we delay the reading [of the portion of Shekalim].

We have learnt: IF IT FALLS IN THE MIDDLE OF THE WEEK, IT IS READ ON THE SABBATH BEFORE, AND ON THE NEXT SABBATH THERE IS A BREAK. Does not this rule apply even where it falls on Friday? — No; only if it falls actually in the middle part of the week.

Come and hear: ‘Which is the first Sabbath [of the series]? That in the week succeeding which the new moon of Adar falls, even if it is on the Friday’. Now do not the words ‘even on Friday’ here [put Friday] on the same footing as the middle of the week, so that just as when it falls in the middle of the week we read before, so when it falls on Friday we read before? — Said Samuel: [The words ‘in the middle’ here mean], ‘on it’.⁸ So too a Tanna of the school of Samuel taught: ‘On it’. The same difference of opinion is found between Tannaim: ‘An interruption can be made [in the series] of Sabbaths. This is the ruling of R. Judah the Prince.⁹ R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: No interruption is made. Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar: When do I rule that no interruption may be made? When it [new moon] falls on Friday;¹⁰ but if it falls in the middle of the week, it [the portion of Shekalim] is read on the Sabbath before, even though that is still in Shebat’.¹¹

ON THE SECOND ZAKOR etc. It was stated: If Purim falls on Friday, Rab says that the portion of Zakor is read on the Sabbath before, while Samuel says it is read on the Sabbath after. Rab says it is read on the Sabbath before, so that the celebration [of Purim] should not precede the commemoration [of the miracle]. Samuel says on the Sabbath after; he can argue that since there are the walled cities which celebrate on the fifteenth, celebration and commemoration come together.

We learnt: ON THE SECOND ZAKOR. Now when the new moon [of Adar] is on Sabbath, Purim falls on Friday, and he states ON THE SECOND ZAKOR?¹² — R. Papa replied: What is meant by ‘second’ here? The second to the break.¹³

Come and hear: ‘Which is the second Sabbath? That in the week following which Purim falls, even if on Friday’. Now is not the Friday here mentioned meant to be on the same footing as the middle of the week, so that just as when it falls in the middle of the week we read before, so when it falls on Friday we read before? Said Samuel: [The proper reading is] ‘on it’;¹⁴ and so a Tanna of the school of Samuel taught, ‘On it’.

If it falls on Sabbath itself. R. Huna said, All authorities concur that the portion of Zakor is not read on the Sabbath before, whereas R. Nahman said, There is a difference of opinion on this point also. It was also stated: ‘R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Abba, who had it from Rab: If Purim falls on Sabbath, Zakor is read on the Sabbath before’.

ON THE THIRD THE PORTION OF THE RED HEIFER etc. Our Rabbis taught: Which is the third Sabbath? The one which follows Purim. It was stated: R. Hama b. Hanina said: The Sabbath next to the new moon of Nisan. There is no conflict [between these two statements]; the one refers to where the new moon of Nisan falls on Sabbath,¹⁵ and the other to where it falls in the middle of the week.¹⁶

ON THE FOURTH, THIS MONTH SHALL BE TO YOU. Our Rabbis taught: If the new moon of Adar falls on Sabbath, we read Ki Thissa¹⁷ and [the account of] Jehoiada as haftarah. Which is the first Sabbath? The one in the week following which the new moon of Adar falls, even if on Friday. On the second Sabbath Zakor is read, and for haftarah, I have visited.¹⁸ Which is the second Sabbath? The one in the week following which Purim falls, even if on Friday. On the third Sabbath the portion of the Red Heifer is read, and for haftarah, And I shall sprinkle on you.¹⁹ Which is the third Sabbath? The one which follows Purim. On the fourth 'This month'²⁰ is read, and for haftarah, Thus saith the Lord God, in the first month on the first of the month.²¹

(1) I.e., that the portion of Tezaweh extends to XXX, 16.

(2) I.e., the portion of Tezaweh or that of Wa-yakhel.

(3) Because there is no doubling according to R. Isaac Nappaha.

(4) Lit., 'he doubles it on Sabbaths'. Once qua Shekalim, and once as part of Ki Thissa; and this is the meaning of the word 'repeated' in the Baraita quoted.

(5) The beginning of the portion next to Ki Thissa — the portion Wa-yakhel. I. e., the whole portion Ki Thissa, commencing from Ex. XXX, 17 up to XXXIV, 35.

(6) Because the first verses of the portion (11-16) are read last.

(7) I.e., two full weeks will not elapse between the proclamation of the Shekalim and the setting of the tables on Adar 15.

(8) Viz., on the Sabbath itself.

(9) I.e., his version of the statement in the Mishnah was, 'Which is the first Sabbath? That on which etc.

(10) In which case even if it is read on the Sabbath after it would not affect the 'tables' as stated supra.

(11) The month preceding Adar.

(12) 'Second' being taken to mean the second Sabbath of the month.

(13) I.e., the Sabbath after the one on which there is no special portion.

(14) V. supra.

(15) In which case the 'portion of the red heifer' is read on the Sabbath preceding it.

(16) In which case the 'portion of the month' is read on the Sabbath preceding it.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 30b

Which is the fourth Sabbath? — The one immediately preceding the week in which the new moon of Nisan falls, even if on Friday.

ON THE FIFTH THE REGULAR ORDER IS RESUMED. What order? — R. Ammi said: The order of weekly portions: R. Jeremiah said, The order of haftarahs is resumed. Said Abaye: The opinion of R. Ammi is the more probable, Since we learnt: THE REGULAR READING IS INTERRUPTED FOR ANY SPECIAL OCCASION FOR NEW MOONS, FOR HANUKKAH, FOR PURIM, FOR FASTS, FOR MA'AMADOTH AND FOR THE DAY OF ATONEMENT. This accords well with the opinion of the one who says that the order of weekly portions is resumed,¹ seeing that a portion [of the Law] is read on weekdays.² But on the view of him who says that the order of haftarahs is resumed — is there any haftarah on [ordinary] weekdays?³ [What says] the other to this? — The one rule holds where it applies, and the other where it applies.⁴ But on fast days [according to R. Jeremiah], why should there be an interruption [of the regular portion]? Let us read in the morning from the portion of the week and at Minhah on the subject of the fast? — [R.

Jeremiah's ruling] supports R. Huna; for R. Huna said: 'In the morning of fast days there is a public assembly'.⁵ How do we act? Abaye said: From the morning to midday we examine the affairs of the town;⁶ from midday to evening, for a quarter of the day we read the portion of the Law and the haftarah, and for a quarter we offer up supplications as it says, And they read in the book of the law of their Lord a fourth part of the day, and another part they confessed and prostrated themselves before the Lord their God.⁷ But cannot I interpret this in the reverse way?⁸ — Do not imagine such a thing, since it is written, Then were assembled unto me every one that trembled at the words of the God of Israel because of the faithlessness of them of the captivity and I sat appalled unto the evening offering;⁹ and it goes on, And at the evening offering I arose up from my fasting.¹⁰

THE SECTION OF BLESSINGS AND CURSES.¹ THE SECTION OF CURSES MUST NOT BE BROKEN UP, BUT MUST ALL BE READ BY ONE PERSON. ON MONDAY AND THURSDAY AND ON SABBATH AT MINHAH THE REGULAR PORTION OF THE WEEK IS READ, AND THIS IS NOT RECKONED AS PART OF THE READING [FOR THE SUCCEEDING SABBATH],² AS IT SAYS,³ AND MOSES DECLARED UNTO THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL. THE APPOINTED SEASONS OF THE LORD;⁴ WHICH IMPLIES THAT IT IS PART OF THEIR ORDINANCE THAT EACH SHOULD BE READ IN ITS SEASON.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: ‘On Passover we read from the section of the festivals⁵ and for haftarah the account of the Passover of Gilgal’.⁶ Now⁷ that we keep two days Passover, the haftarah of the first day is the account of the Passover in Gilgal and of the second day that of the Passover of Josiah.⁸ ‘On the other days of the Passover the various passages in the Torah relating to Passover are read’⁹ What are these? — R. Papa said: The mnemonic is M'A'P'U'.¹⁰ ‘On the last day of Passover we read, And it came to pass when God sent,¹¹ and as haftarah, And David spoke’.¹² On the next day we read, All the firstborn,¹³ and for haftarah, This very day.¹⁴ Abaye said: Nowadays the communities are accustomed to read ‘Draw the ox’, ‘Sanctify with money’, ‘Hew in the wilderness’, and ‘Send the firstborn’.¹⁵ ‘On Pentecost, we read Seven weeks,¹⁶ and for haftarah a chapter from Habakuk.¹⁷ According to others, we read In the third month,¹⁸ and for haftarah the account of the Divine Chariot’.¹⁹ Nowadays that we keep two days, we follow both courses, but in the reverse order.²⁰ On New Year we read On the seventh month,²¹ and for haftarah, Is Ephraim a darling son unto me.’²² According to others, we read And the Lord remembered Sarah²³ and for haftarah the story of Hannah.²⁴ Nowadays that we keep two days, on the first day we follow the ruling of the other authority, and on the next day we say, And God tried Abraham,²⁵ with ‘Is Ephraim a darling son to me’ for haftarah. On the Day of Atonement we read After the death²⁶ and for haftarah, For thus saith the high and lofty one.²⁷ At minhah we read the section of forbidden marriages²⁸ and for haftarah the book of Jonah.²⁹

R. Johanan said:³⁰ Wherever you find [mentioned in the Scriptures] the power of the Holy One, blessed be He, you also find his gentleness mentioned. This fact is stated in the Torah, repeated In the Prophets, and stated a third time in the [Sacred] Writings. It is written in the Torah, For the Lord your God, he is the God of gods and Lord of lords,³¹ and it says immediately afterwards, He doth execute justice for the fatherless and widow. It is repeated in the Prophets: For thus saith the High and Lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity whose name is holy,³² and it says immediately afterwards, [I dwell] with him that is of a contrite and humble spirit. It is stated a third time in the [Sacred] Writings, as it is written: Extol him that rideth upon the skies, whose name is the Lord,³³ and immediately afterwards it is written, A father of the fatherless and a judge of the widows.

‘On³⁴ the first day of Tabernacles we read the section of the festivals in Leviticus, and for haftarah, Behold a day cometh for the Lord’.³⁵ Nowadays that we keep two days, on the next day we read the same Section from the Torah, but what do we read for haftarah.? — And all the men of Israel assembled unto King Solomon.³⁶ On the other days of the festival we read the section of the offerings of the festival.³⁷ On the last festival day we read, ‘All the firstlings’, with the commandments and statutes [which precede it],³⁸ and for haftarah, ‘And it was so that when Solomon had made an end’.³⁹ On the next day we read, ‘And this is the blessing’,⁴⁰ and for haftarah, ‘And Solomon stood’.⁴¹

R. Huna said in the name of R. Shesheth: On the Sabbath which falls in the intermediate days of the festival, whether Passover or Tabernacles, the passage we read from the Torah is ‘See, Thou [sayest unto me]’⁴² and for haftarah on Passover the passage of the ‘dry bones’,⁴³ and on Tabernacles, ‘In that day when Gog shall come’.⁴⁴ On Hanukkah we read the section of the Princes⁴⁵ and for haftarah [on Sabbath] that of the lights in Zechariah.⁴⁶ Should there fall two Sabbaths in Hanukkah, on the first we read [for haftarah] the passage of the lights in Zechariah and on the second that of the lights of Solomon.⁴⁷ On Purim we read ‘And Amalek came’.⁴⁸ On New Moon, ‘On your new moons’.⁴⁹ If New Moon falls on a Sabbath, the haftarah is [the passage concluding] ‘And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another’.⁵⁰ If it falls on a Sunday, on the day before the haftarah is, ‘And Jonathan said to him, tomorrow is the new moon’.⁵¹ R. Talmud - Mas. Megilah 31b

If the new moon of Ab falls on a Sabbath the haftarah is [the passage with the verse] 'Your new moons and your appointed seasons my soul hateth, they are a burden unto me'.¹ What is the meaning of 'they are a burden unto me'? God said: 'It is not enough for Israel that they sin before Me, but they impose on Me the burden of considering what punishment² I shall bring upon them'. On the Ninth of Ab itself what is the haftarah? — Rab said: '[The passage containing], How is she become a harlot'.³ What is the section from the Torah? — It has been taught: Others say, 'But if ye will not hearken unto me';⁴ R. Nathan b. Joseph says, 'How long will this people despise me';⁵ and some say, 'How long shall I bear with this evil congregation'.⁶ Abaye said: Nowadays the custom has been adopted of reading [from the Torah] 'When thou shalt beget children',⁷ and for haftarah, 'I will utterly consume them'.⁸

ON MA'AMADOTH THE ACCOUNT OF THE CREATION. Whence is this rule derived? — Said R.. Ammi: But for the ma'amadoth, the heaven and earth would not be firmly established, as it says, But for My covenant [which continues] day and night, I had not set the statutes of heaven and earth,⁹ and it is written, And he said, O Lord God, Whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it.¹⁰ Said Abraham before the Holy One, blessed be He: Sovereign of the Universe, perhaps God forbid, Israel will sin before Thee and Thou wilt do to them as Thou didst to the generation of the Flood and the generation of the Division?¹¹ He answered, Not so. He then said before Him: Sovereign of the Universe, by what shall I know this? He said: Take me a heifer of three years old¹² etc. He then said before Him: Sovereign of the Universe, This is very well for the time when the Temple will be standing, but in the time when there will be no Temple what will befall them? He replied to him: I have already fixed for them the order of the sacrifices. Whenever they will read the section dealing with them, I will reckon it as if they were bringing me an offering, and forgive all their iniquities.

ON FAST DAYS [THE PORTION OF] BLESSINGS AND CURSES IS READ, AND THERE MUST BE NO BREAK IN [THE READING OF] THE CURSES. Whence is this rule derived? — R. Hiyya b. Gamda replied in the name of R. Assi: Because Scripture says, My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord.¹³ Resh Lakish said: It is because a blessing¹⁴ should not be said for chastisement. How then is the reader to do? A Tanna taught: He commences his reading with a verse¹⁵ before them and concludes it with a verse after them. Said Abaye: This rule was laid down only for the curses in Leviticus, but in the curses in Deuteronomy a break may be made. What is the reason? — In the former Israel are addressed in the plural number and Moses uttered them on behalf of the Almighty;¹⁶ in the latter Israel are addressed in the singular, and Moses uttered them in his own name.¹⁷ Levi b. Buti was once reading the curses [in Deuteronomy] in the presence of R. Huna hesitatingly. Said R. Huna to him: Do just as you please, the rule [against making a break] applies only to the curses in Leviticus, but in those in Deuteronomy a break may be made.

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: Ezra made a regulation for Israel that they should read the curses in Leviticus before Pentecost and those in Deuteronomy before New Year. What is the reason? — Abaye — or you may also say Resh Lakish said: So that the year may end along with its curses. I grant you that in regard to the curses in Deuteronomy you can say, 'so that the year should end along with its curses'. But as regards those in Leviticus — is Pentecost a New Year? — Yes; Pentecost is also a New Year, as we have learnt: 'On Pentecost is the new year for [fruit of] the tree'.¹⁸

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: If old men say to you, 'throw down', and young men say to you 'build up' throw down and do not build up, because destruction by old men is construction, and construction by boys is destruction; and the example is Rehoboam son of Solomon.¹⁹

Our Rabbis taught: The place [in the Torah] where they leave off in the morning service on Sabbath is the place where they begin at Minhah; the place where they leave off at Minhah [on Sabbath] is the place where they begin on Monday; the place where they leave off on Monday is the place where they begin on Thursday; the place where they leave off on Thursday is the place where they begin on the next Sabbath. This is the ruling of R. Meir. R. Judah, however, says that the place where they leave off in the morning service on Sabbath is the place where they begin on [Sabbath] Minhah, on Monday, on Thursday, and on the next Sabbath. R. Zera said: The halachah is that the place where they leave off in the morning service on Sabbath is the place where they begin at Minhah, on Monday, on Thursday and on the next Sabbath. Why does he not say, 'the halachah follows Rabbi Judah'? —

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 32a

Because [the names] might be reversed.¹

Our Rabbis taught: [The one who reads] opens the scroll and sees [the place], then rolls it together and says the blessing, then opens it again and reads. So R. Meir. R. Judah says: He opens and looks and says the blessing, and reads. What is R. Meir's reason? — It is similar to that of 'Ulla [in a parallel case]; for 'Ulla said: Why did they lay down that he who reads from the Torah should not prompt the translator? So that people should not say that the translation is written in the Torah. So here [R. Meir's reason is], so that they should not say that the blessings are written in the Torah. And [what says] R. Judah [to this]? — With regard to translation a mistake might be made, but no mistake will be made with regard to the blessings.² R. Zera said in the name of R. Mattenah: The halachah is that he opens and looks, then says the blessing and reads. Why not say, 'The halachah follows R. Judah'? Because the names might be reversed.³

R. Zera said in the name of R. Mattenah. No sanctity attaches to the boards and to the platforms.⁴

R. Shefatiah said in the name of R. Johanan: When one rolls up a scroll of the Torah, he should make it close at a seam.⁵

R. Shefatiah further said in the name of R. Johanan: One who rolls together a sefer torah should roll it from without and should not roll it from within,⁶ and when he fastens it he should fasten it from within and should not fasten it from without.⁷

R. Shefatiah further said in the name of R. Johanan: If ten have had a reading of the Torah, the senior among them rolls up the sefer torah. He who rolls it up receives the reward of all of them, since R. Joshua b. Levi said: If ten have had a reading of the Torah, the one who rolls it up receives the reward of all of them. The reward of all of them, think you? No; say rather, he receives a reward equal to that of all of them.

R. Shefatiah further said in the name of R. Johanan: Whence do we know that we may avail ourselves of a chance utterance⁸ [as an omen]?⁹ Because it says, And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying.¹⁰ This applies, however, only if one hears the voice of a man in town and of a woman in the country,¹¹ and Only if it says, yes, yes, or no.¹²

R. Shefatiah further said in the name of R. Johanan: If one reads the Scripture without a melody¹³ or repeats the Mishnah without a tune,¹⁴ of him the Scripture Says, Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good etc.¹⁵ Abaye strongly demurred to this, saying, Because he cannot sing agreeably, are you to apply to him the verse, 'ordinances whereby they shall not live'? No; this verse is to be applied as by R. Mesharshia, who said: If two scholars live in the same town and do not treat one another's halachic pronouncements respectfully, of them the verse says, I gave them also statutes that were not good and ordinances whereby they should not live.

R. Parnak said in the name of R. Johanan: Whoever takes hold of a scroll of the Torah without a covering¹⁶ is buried without a covering. Without a covering, think you? — Say rather, without the covering protection of religious performances. Without religious performances, think you? — No, said Abaye; he is buried without the covering protection of that religious performance.¹⁷

R. Jannai the son of the old R. Jannai said in the name of the great R. Jannai: It is better that the covering [of the scroll] should be rolled up [with the scroll] and not that the scroll of the Torah should be rolled up [inside the covering].¹⁸

And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the appointed seasons of the Lord.¹⁹ It is part of their observance that [the section relating to] each one of them should be read in its season.

Our Rabbis taught: Moses laid down a rule for the Israelites that they should enquire and give expositions concerning the subject of the day — the laws of Passover on Passover, the laws of Pentecost on Pentecost, and the laws of Tabernacles on Tabernacles.

(1) I. e., the opinion of R. Judah might be assigned to R. Meir and vice versa.

(2) For everyone knows that they are not written in the Torah.

(3) V. p. 192, n. 3.

(4) הַלְּוָחֹת וְהַבִּימוֹת. Opinions are divided as to what is meant by these two terms. We should naturally suppose 'boards' to mean a kind of noticeboard in the synagogue and 'platforms' the stand from which the Torah is read. But there is good authority for supposing that both words are technical terms for parts of the scroll of the Torah, 'boards' being the side margins and 'platforms' the upper margins, and the meaning will be that no sanctity attaches to these if they have been cut away from the scroll (v. Tosaf.) [J. Meg. III, 1 reads בִּימָה וְלְוָחִין; this leads Krauss (Synagogale Altertumer, p. 388) to render, 'the reading desk (made of boards, on which the Torah was read) and the platform (on which it stood)'. In a word, the almemor].

(5) So that if it is accidentally pulled, it should come asunder easily without being torn.

(6) I. e., he should have the written side of the scroll facing him (Asheri).

(7) I. e., the wrapping should be fastened in such a way that he will not need to turn the scroll over when he comes to open it again (Asheri). Rashi explains this passage differently.

(8) בַּת קוֹל 'a reverberating sound', 'echoing', — as it were — a thought in one's mind (Rashi).

(9) In spite of the prohibition of divination (Deut. XVIII, 11).

(10) Isa. XXX, 21.

(11) I. e., in an unusual place.

(12) I. e., says the word twice.

(13) As indicated by the singing accents.

(14) To aid the memory (Tosaf.).

(15) Ezek. XX, 25.

(16) Lit., 'naked'.

(17) I. e., the precept of reading or rolling up the scroll which he performed at that time is not accounted to him as a merit (Tosaf.).

(18) [Aliter: It is better that the covering (of the scroll) should be rolled up (round the scroll) than that the scroll of the Torah (itself) should be rolled up. MS.M. reads, The covering should be rolled (round the scroll) but not the scroll itself (without a covering); v. R. Hananel and D.S. It may however mean: It is better that the covering should be rolled round the scroll than that the scroll should be wrapped up by being rolled along the scroll].

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. AN IRRIGATED FIELD¹ MAY BE WATERED DURING THE FESTIVAL² [WEEK] OR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR³ BOTH FROM A NEWLY-EMERGING SPRING AND FROM A SPRING THAT IS NOT JUST EMERGED, BUT NOT WITH WATER FROM STORED RAIN, NOR FROM A SWIPE-WELL;⁴ NOR MAY SMALL BASINS⁵ BE FORMED ABOUT THE VINES. R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH SAYS THAT A [WATER] CHANNEL MAY NOT BE NEWLY MADE DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], NOR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR; BUT THE SAGES SAY THAT A CHANNEL MAY BE NEWLY MADE IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR AND ONE THAT HAS GOT OUT OF ORDER MAY BE REPAIRED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. AND IMPAIRED WATER WORKS⁶ IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN MAY BE REPAIRED OR CLEANED OUT; AND ROADS, BROADWAYS AND [RITUAL] POOLS⁷ MAY BE PUT IN ORDER. AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED,⁸ AND GRAVESIDES MAY BE MARKED,⁹ AND [PUBLIC COMMISSIONERS] MAY SET OUT ALSO¹⁰ TO INSPECT DIVERSE¹¹ SEED-CROPS.

GEMARA. Now, one might argue that after [having permitted] watering FROM A NEWLY EMERGING spring — which is apt to come along tearing up [the soil]¹² — need further mention be made of [drawing from] A SPRING THAT IS NOT NEWLY EMERGING—which is unlikely to come tearing up [the soil]?¹³ — I may answer that it is necessary [to mention the latter]; for if [the Tanna] had mentioned only the newly emerging spring I might have said that only here [where it is] for an irrigation plot it is permitted — but not for a Baal-plot,¹⁴ because it is apt to come tearing up [the soil]; but [on the other hand], from a spring that is not newly emerging, which is unlikely to come tearing up [the soil], I might say that even a Baal-plot [may be watered]; therefore he informs us¹⁵ that there is no difference; be it a spring newly emerging, or a spring not newly emerging, an irrigation plot may be watered therefrom, but a Baal-plot may not be.¹⁶

And whence [know we] that the term BETH HA-SHELAHIN¹⁷ denotes a ‘thirsty’¹⁸ field? — It is written: When thou wast faint and weary,¹⁹ and we render the word ‘faint’ [in Aramaic] by meshalhi.²⁰ And whence [know we] that Beth ha-Baal²¹ denotes ‘settled’ soil? — It is written: For as a man be the husband [yib'al] of a maiden, so shall thy sons be as husbands unto thee²² and we render [in Aramaic], ‘Behold as a young man settles down with a maiden, thy sons shall become settled²³ in the midst of thee’.

Who may be the [unnamed] Tanna²⁴ who maintains that [work²⁵ to prevent] loss is allowed,²⁶ but [to augment] profit²⁷ is not allowed; and that even in [averting] loss we should not do any laborious work?²⁸ Said R. Huna: It is [the view of] R. Eliezer b. Jacob, as we learned:²⁹ R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Water may be trained along from tree to tree, provided that one does not water thus the entire field.³⁰

I grant³¹ you may understand R. Eliezer [b. Jacob]³² to disallow exertion to enhance profit,³³ but could you also understand him [from here] to disallow exertion [even] where loss is [involved]? Rather, said R. Papa, (whose view is it)?³⁴ It is R. Judah's, as it is taught: ‘A spring newly emerging may be [used for] watering even (a field that is)³⁵ a Baal-plot. So R. Meir; R. Judah³⁶ says, None but (a field that is)³⁵ a ‘languid plot’ that has dried up may be watered [therefrom]. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah says, Neither one nor the other.³⁷ R. Judah³⁸ went even further and said, ‘A person may not clean out a water channel³⁹ and [with the dredging] water his garden of debris — [heap]⁴⁰ during the festival week’. [Now] what is [meant by a ‘languid plot’] that dried up?⁴¹ If you say, literally dried up’ what is the good of watering it? — Said Abaye, It means that this [old] spring has run dry⁴² and another has [just] emerged [instead].⁴³ ‘R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, Neither one nor the other’. [By this he means to say that] it makes no difference whether the [old] spring has run dry or has not run dry, a newly emerging spring is not to be used.

But how [do you arrive at this conclusion]? Perhaps when R. Judah said that a languid plot may be watered from a newly emerging spring and a Baal-plot may not be,

- (1) בית השלחין means lit. 'a house of channels', i.e., a plot of land which owing to situation or climate or nature of the soil requires to be watered artificially. It is often a laborious process and at times of vital importance to the crop.
- (2) I.e., during the middle period of the two longer Feasts, namely, the 'Feast of Unleavened Bread' (Passover) and that of Tabernacles, v. Introduction.
- (3) Lit., 'the seventh year'. Every seventh year in the Jubilee cycle was ordained to be a year of remissness, or sabbath for the land, when the regular processes of agriculture for its improvement were to be suspended. V. Ex. XXIII, 10-11; Lev. XXV, 2ff and infra 3a.
- (4) קילון the Greek , a mechanical contrivance for raising water by water-wheel or bucket from a deep well, like the shadoof in Egypt and the denkli or paecottah in India. The reason for the objections is stated in the Gemara.
- (5) Circular depressions made about the stem of the vine, or a small trench drawn about a group of vines to retain the water. V. infra 4b.
- (6) Broken wells, cisterns or aqueducts; pools that have become muddy puddles, or blocked drains. (קילקולין _ Latin cloaculae, Baneth).
- (7) For priests and pilgrims to purify themselves ritually or their vessels that have met with defilement. Cf. Lev. XI, 24-40; XXII, 1-7.
- (8) E.g., removing rubbish and thorns, levelling the road and footways, mending bridges, etc. Cf. infra 5a.
- (9) With whitewash of lime to warn passers-by against defilement. Cf. infra 5a.
- (10) [MS.M. omits 'ALSO' which is difficult to explain. V. Tosaf. Yom Tob].
- (11) Lev. XIX, 19: Thou shall not sow thy field with two (or more kinds of) seeds (promiscuously). They are neither to be sown nor preserved by active process. Infra 2b, 6a and cf. Kil. I, 1, 9; Shek. I, 1, a.
- (12) I.e., by erosion, necessitating immediate repair of the damage during the restricted period.
- (13) Running on its habitual course.
- (14) בית בעל, lit., 'Baal's area', or field — an old pagan denomination of a fertile soil, i.e., a soil favoured by 'Baal Lord of the heavens', Baal-Shamen, with fertilizing rain and sunshine. V. Cooke's N.S.I. p. 45, n. 1 etc. and Robertson Smith's Religion of the Semites (ed. 1894) pp. 96-97. Cf. Isa. LV, 10 and Ta'an. 6b: 'Rain is earth's husband'; also Krauss, TA II, p. 546, n. 115.
- (15) From here to the end of the sentence is not in DS., being seemingly a gloss from 2b.
- (16) From a new or old spring.
- (17) Rendered 'AN IRRIGATED FIELD'.
- (18) Or 'a languid track.' The term שלחין (channels) is here explained by popular etymology as derived from שלהי (the gutturals ה and ח interchanging), 'weary', 'exhausted'. V. n. 2.
- (19) Deut. XXV, 18. Han. and Aruch s.v. שלה (VIII, 80b) quote more appropriately Gen. XXV, 29 referring to Esau's exhaustion and thirst. Cf. Isa. XXIX, 8 and Ps. LXIII, 2.
- (20) A participle Shafel from להי meaning 'exhausted'. This derivation is grammatically unsound. In B.B., Sonc. ed. p. 271 it is more correctly connected with the root in the sense of sending water across the fields in channels. Cf. Ezek. XXXI, 4; Ps CIV, 10; Job V, 10. It is surmised that the name of the Pool of Siloam (שילוא) is derived from the same root. V. Krauss, TA. II, p. 547, n. 117.
- (21) V. supra p. 2, n. 7.
- (22) Isa. LXII, 5.
- (23) Cf. our expressions husbandry and husbandman.
- (24) In the first clause of the Mishnah.
- (25) During the Festival week.
- (26) I.e., watering a languid soil.
- (27) E.g., watering a fertile field to make it still more productive.
- (28) Lit., 'excessive trouble', e.g., to use rainwater or raise water by swipe.
- (29) V. infra 6b, Mishnah.

- (30) To water the whole field in that manner is all exertion to be avoided during the Festival week.
- (31) Lit., 'say'.
- (32) So correctly, R. Han., DS.
- (33) As he forbids watering the entire field, presumably thinking it unnecessary to give it an extra watering to increase its fertility.
- (34) Omitted in DS.
- (35) A doublet occurring also in the texts given in the next note.
- (36) J.M.K. I, 1 (81a) and Tosef., I, I read here, 'and the Sages say' instead, showing that it is R. Judah's view that has been adopted in the Mishnah. Obviously, the Babylonian teachers engaged in this critical discussion did not have that reading.
- (37) I.e., that a newly emerging spring may not be used either for a generally nourished field (again at R. Meir's view), nor in a 'languid field' even where it has replaced a dried-up old spring (against R. Judah's view).
- (38) He went further in his restrictions, even in the case of a 'languid field'. (Tosaf. v. Ritba).
- (39) A running brook or ditch which has become muddy and shallow, which he may clean out under certain conditions discussed infra 4b.
- (40) Used as a vegetable garden or bed for nurslings. V. Tosaf. Lit., 'his garden and his ruin'.
- (41) I.e., that is waste.
- (42) Lit., 'it is dried up from this spring'.
- (43) [All of which shows that R. Judah does not permit any laborious work even in order to avert loss, as in the case of the old spring having dried up, whereas R. Judah permits watering from the new spring that has emerged but not from rain-water or a swipe-well, which is in agreement with our Mishnah].

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 2b

he was referring only to a newly emerging spring since it may come along tearing up [the soil]; but a spring that is not just newly emerging and which is unlikely to come along tearing up [the soil] he might allow even for a Baal-plot?¹ If [you take it] thus, then whom does our Mishnah represent?² The fact is that according to R. Judah it makes no difference, whether it be a newly emerging spring, or a spring not just newly emerging; in either case a languid plot may be watered [therefrom], but a Baal-plot may not be. And the reason why it states the 'newly emerging' spring³ is [merely] to show how far R. Meir is prepared to go, [namely], that even a newly emerging spring may be used for watering and even for a Baal-field!

It was stated: 'If one is [seen] weeding or watering his seedlings on the Sabbath,⁴ under what category [of the offence] should he be cautioned?⁵ — Rabbah said, [It comes] under the category of ploughing. R. Joseph said, under the category of sowing. Said Rabbah, My view seems the more reasonable, for what is the object of the plougher? To loosen the soil; here too, he loosens the soil. Said R. Joseph, My view seems the more reasonable, for what is the object of the sower? To promote the growth of the produce; here too, he promotes the growth of the produce.

Said Abaye to Rabbah, Your view presents difficulty and R. Joseph's view presents difficulty. Your view presents difficulty, for does the act come [only] under the category of ploughing [and] not under that of sowing [only]? R. Joseph's view presents difficulty, for does it come [only] under the category of sowing [and] not under that of ploughing also? And should you rejoin that where there are two [possible categories], the offender is liable only on one count, [this cannot be] for did not R. Kahana say that if one [incidentally] pruned [his tree] in cutting it for wood⁶ he is liable on two counts, one under the category of planting⁷ and one again under that of reaping?⁸ — This is a difficulty.⁹

R. Joseph, thereupon, put an objection to Rabbah from [the following]: One who weeds or covers [with earth] diverse-seeds¹⁰ receives [judicial] flogging. R. Akiba says, Also one who preserves [them].¹¹ Now this is in perfect accord with my view, as I say that [he who weeds is to be cautioned] under the category of sowing, which [explains the penalty] because sowing is [explicitly] forbidden in connection with diverse-seeds; but according to your view who say that [he is to be cautioned] under the category of ploughing, is ploughing forbidden in connection with diverse-seeds? — Said he [Rabbah] to him, [He¹² is flogged] under the category of preserving [them]. But surely, since the last clause states ‘R. Akiba says, Also one who preserves [them]’, may we not infer that according to the first Tanna the penalty is not on account of preserving [them]? — The entire statement is [to be taken as] recording R. Akiba's view, and the latter clause is explanatory: ‘On what ground does one who weeds or covers [with earth] diverse-seeds receive a flogging? Because he comes under the category of preserving, for R. Akiba says, Also he who preserves [them]’. What is R. Akiba's reason? — It is taught: — Thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of seed’.¹³ This tells me about ‘sowing’, whence [the prohibition against] preserving [what is already sown]? — From the instructive wording kil'ayim [diverse-seeds] in thy field not.¹⁴ We learned: AN IRRIGATED FIELD MAY BE WATERED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] OR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR. This [permission] is perfectly correct in regard to the festival [week] where [the prohibition is] merely to avoid exertion, but where loss is [threatened]¹⁵ the Rabbis have allowed it. But in regard to the sabbatical year, whether on the view that [watering] comes under the category of sowing¹⁶ or on the view that it comes under that of ploughing,¹⁷ is either sowing or ploughing permitted in the sabbatical year?¹⁸ — Said Abaye, Our Mishnah is speaking of the sabbatical year in the present time and it [expresses] the view held by Rabbi;¹⁹ for it is taught: Rabbi says, [It is written] And this is the manner of the release; release [by every creditor of that which he hath lent to his neighbour];²⁰ the text speaks here of two forms of release, one the release of the soil [from tillage]²¹ and the other the release of money²² [the juxtaposition of] which tells us that so long as you must release the soil [from tillage], you must release the money [debt], but when you do not release the soil, you need not release the money!²³ Said Raba [not necessarily], you may even say [it voices] the view of the Rabbis²⁴ and that they²⁵ are the principal [types of work] that the Divine Law has forbidden [explicitly],

(1) Whereas our Mishnah forbids watering a Baal-plot from a newly emerging spring. Consequently it will not represent the view of R. Judah.

(2) Lit., ‘to whom will you throw (trace the view of) our Mishnah’.

(3) In the cited Baraitha: the spring might as well have been left undefined, as either is allowed for a languid plot by R. Judah.

(4) Ritba reads on a festival, which is preferred by R. Moses Sofer. Cf. Mak., Sonc. ed., p. 149.

(5) An offender doing an act which is explicitly forbidden in Holy Writ had to be duly and accurately cautioned by two witnesses against that particular act, and informed of the exact penalty it involved, before he could be judicially punished by a duly constituted tribunal. Ploughing, sowing and mowing are of the thirty-nine main categories of work forbidden (Scripturally) on Sabbath or Festivals. For the list v. Shab. VII, 2 and Shab. 73aff.

(6) Lit., ‘he prunes and requires the wood’. Shab. 73b. Work on the Sabbath is to be purposive, whether intended or not. If one did what he desired to do, without knowing that such a thing was not to be done on the Sabbath, or forgetting for the moment that it was the Sabbath day, he would not be punishable, but would have to bring a sin-offering in Temple times.

(7) Pruning promotes growth and is therefore another form of sowing or planting.

(8) Having a definite purpose for the cuttings.

(9) Var. lec. omit this final admission. [The statement of R. Kahana, being of an Amora, is not deemed sufficiently authoritative to refute the views of Rabbah and R. Joseph. V. Tosaf. s.v. הייב.]

(10) Weeding and covering with earth diverse-seeds are here made punishable as sowing, v. Lev. XIX, 19 (cf. Deut. XXII, 9).

(11) Fencing in the plot to prevent cattle from trampling them out or feeding on the young blades. Cf. A.Z. 64a (Rashi and Tosaf.).

(12) He who weeds diverse-seeds.

(13) Lev. XIX, 19.

(14) Some explain a section of the Hebrew text of Lev. XIX, 19, namely, כלאים שדך לא תזרע כלאים, as it were two interlocked sentences, (i) כלאים שדך לא i.e., ‘Kil'ayim in thy field not’, (which forbids the presence and the preservation of diverse-seed crops in the field); and (ii) שדך לא תזרע כלאים i.e., ‘Thy field thou shalt not sow kil'ayim’ (which forbids sowing). This explanation, however, is very strained, as the variations in the parallel passages show, having puzzled the commentators. The readings ת"ל לא כלאים and ת"ל כלאים לא are both correct and to the same effect. It is the import of the wording rather than the form of the text that R. Akiba stressed. It is the diverse mixing or crossing — ‘kil'ayim’ — that is emphatically forbidden, be it of animal, or field, or raiment (Lev. XIX, 19) and fiercest of all in the (oliveyard or) vineyard (Deut. XXII, 9). Have no share by your action in producing kil'aym!

(17) Rabbah, above.

(18) Sowing, pruning, gleaning and reaping are directly forbidden in Lev. XXV, 4-5. Ploughing, however, is forbidden only indirectly, by implication from a positive law in Ex. XXIII, 11; XXXIV, 21. Note this point.

(19) R. Judah ha-Nasi, compiler of the Mishnah.

(20) Deut. XV, 2.

(21) I.e., let the soil lie fallow and the crops free and unguarded against the poor, Ex. XXIII, 11.

(22) Let slip the money debts owing to you.

(23) The interpretation is based on the ground that since the Nation, Israel as a whole, is no longer in possession of the Holy Land as his inheritance, the land laws relative to the sabbatical year and Jubilee re-distributions, which are made contingent on Israel's entry and possession (Lev. XXV, 2, 10ff; cf. ibid. XXVI, 34-35, and Deut. XXXI, 10-13) are of necessity in abeyance, for the time being. [This according to Rabbi, since the prohibition of tilling the soil on the sabbatical years nowadays is merely Rabbinical, it is not enforced where a loss is involved; hence the ruling of our Mishnah.]

(24) That the operation of the sabbatical year nowadays is Biblical.

(25) Those that are specified in the text of Holy Writ.

but derivative¹ operations it has not forbidden, for it is written: But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest for the land..., thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard. That which groweth of itself of thy harvest thou shalt not reap and the grapes of thy undressed vine thou shalt not gather.² Now, since pruning comes within the general process of sowing³ and grape-gathering within the general process of reaping,⁴ what law then did the All-Merciful desire to inculcate by inserting these [secondary processes] into the text? To indicate that only for these secondary processes [specified in the text] is one [to be] held liable⁵ and for [any] other [secondary processes] one is not [to be] held liable.⁶ Indeed not? Surely it has been taught: Thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard,⁷ that only forbids me sowing or pruning; whence is forbidden weeding or hoeing or the trimming of wilted parts? From the instructive [form of the] text: Thy field thou shalt not... thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field; no manner of work in thy vineyard. [Likewise] whence [is derived the rule] not to cut back shoots, or thin twigs or put up props for supporting [fruit trees]? From the [same] instructive text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. [Similarly] whence [is derived the rule] not to manure,⁸ or remove stones, or dust [with flower of sulphur]⁹ or fumigate the tree? From the instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not, that is, no manner of work in the field, no manner of work in the vineyard. Shall I say that one should not [even] stir the soil under the olive trees, nor use the hoe under the vines, nor fill the gaps [under the olive trees]¹⁰ with water nor make drills¹¹ for the vines? There is the Instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not sow [nor thy vineyard shalt thou prune]. Now, as ‘sowing’ was already embraced in the general terms of the ordinance,¹² why then was it singled out [for mention]? To provide ground for an analogy, namely that just as sowing has the special quality of being a work common to field and orchard,¹³ so is every [other] work that is common to field and orchard [forbidden]¹⁴ — [That is only] Rabbinically; and the text is adduced merely as a support.¹⁵ But, is it permitted to stir the soil [under the olive tree] in the sabbatical year? Surely [is it not taught]: It is written, But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie fallow;¹⁶ 'let it rest' — not to hoe; and '[let it] lie fallow — not to remove stones?' — Said R. 'Ukba b. Haba, there are two sorts of hoeing, one for strengthening the [olive] tree, and another to close up fissures; that for strengthening the tree is forbidden, whereas that for closing up fissures is allowed.¹⁷

It has been stated:¹⁸ — If one ploughed in the sabbatical year,¹⁹ R. Johanan and R. Eleazar²⁰ [took opposite views]. One said that he is flogged²¹ and the other said that he is not flogged.²² Might I suggest that the issue turns on the dictum of R. Ela as reported by R. Abin? For R. Abin reported R. Ela to have stated that wherever a general [proposition] is stated in the form of a positive command and a particular [specification] in the form of a negative injunction,²³ the hermeneutical rule of General-Particular-General²⁴ does not apply to it.²⁵ [Accordingly], the one who says the offender is flogged, did not agree with that dictum of R. Abin in the name of R. Ela,²⁶ while the other who says that the offender is not flogged did agree with the dictum of R. Abin [in the name of R. Ela]?²⁷ — Not [necessarily]. It can be maintained that nobody agrees with the dictum of R. Ela, as reported by R. Abin. As to the one who says that the offender is flogged²⁸ it of course is in order, while the other who says the offender is not flogged may tell you thus:²⁹ Consider: pruning comes within [the general process of] sowing and grape-gathering within [the general process of] reaping, what rule did the All-Merciful intend to inculcate by inserting these [secondary processes] into the text? To indicate that only for these secondary processes [specified in the text] is one [to be] held liable, but for any other secondary process³⁰ he is not [to be] held liable. But is he not? Surely it is taught: Thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard, this only forbids me sowing or pruning; whence is forbidden weeding, hoeing, or the trimming of wilted parts? From the instructive [form of] the text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field; no manner of work in thy vineyard. Whence [is derived the rule] not to cut back shoots, or thin twigs or put up props for [fruit] trees? From the [same] instructive text: thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. Whence [is derived the rule] not to manure, or remove stones, [or dust] or fumigate the trees? From the instructive text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [that is], no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. Am I then to say that one may not stir the soil under the olive trees, nor use the hoe under the vines, nor fill the [open] gaps [under the olives] with water, nor make drills for the vines? There is the instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not sow and thy vineyard thou shalt not prune. Now, sowing was already embraced in the general terms of the ordinance, why then was it singled out [for mention]? For the purpose of providing [ground for] an analogy, that just as sowing has the special quality of being a work common to field and vineyard, so is any other work that is common to field and orchard [forbidden]? — [That is only] rabbinically; and the text is [adduced] as a mere support.³¹

(1) Or secondary processes which are not unspecified.

(2) Lev. XXV, 4-5.

(3) Or planting, as explained above by R. Kahana.

(4) V. Shab. 73a.

(5) To a judicial flogging.

(6) I.e., scripturally (even according to the Rabbis) though reprehensible rabbinically.

(7) The order of the Hebrew words in the text is: 'Thy field thou shalt not sow nor thy vineyard shalt thou etc.'

(8) Yalkut reads: 'remove excrescences' or 'warts'.

(9) Thus J. Sheb. II, 2; Aruch explains 'remove dust from the foliage' and Rashi here takes it as covering with dust the exposed roots. The context seems to favour the first explanation here adopted.

(10) After thinning olive trees, by lifting some to give more room for the other young trees, the gap left in the soil would ordinarily be filled with manure and olive trees need much water. Cf. Sheb. IV, 5, and Sifra Behar Rabad's Commentary.

(11) Or small ridges with furrows on top between the vines. V. loc. cit.

(12) Lev. XXV, 4: But the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest for the land, a sabbath unto the Lord, in direct contrast to verse 3; there was therefore no further need to continue with specific instances of the prohibition, such as sowing the field and pruning the vineyard.

(13) I.e., common to both, agriculture and horticulture.

(14) [Excluding the last mentioned processes which are not common to both field and vineyard. At all events this teaching shows that a number of processes though of the secondary type are forbidden in the sabbatical year].

(15) I.e., mnemotechnical and Biblically only sowing, pruning, reaping and gleaning are forbidden explicitly. The inclusion of ploughing, digging, hoeing or watering in the prohibition is purely Rabbinic. Thus the ruling of the Mishnah that an irrigated field may be watered . . . in the sabbatical year has now been explained: by Abaye on the basis of Rabbi's view, namely, that the restrictions of the sabbatical year are not operative nowadays; and, on the other hand by Raba, on the view of the other Rabbis (who do not concede Rabbi's interpretation of Deut. XV, 2), by pointing out that 'watering' is, strictly speaking, not textually forbidden, it being a 'derivative' (secondary) process, and hence allowed by the Rabbis in the sabbatical year where damage (loss of crop) is likely.

(16) Ex. XXIII, 11.

(17) The former is for enhancing profit and the latter is prevention of loss, namely, to save the tree from bleeding or rotting.

(18) The same question is again discussed from a different angle in Palestinian schools.

(19) After having been duly cautioned.

(20) B. Pedath.

(21) As having offended against a Biblical prohibition.

(22) Because 'ploughing' is not distinctly forbidden, but is only an implied offence, for which no judicial flogging can be given.

(23) E.g., in Lev. XXV, 2-5. We have first a general ordinance in positive terms: The land shall keep a sabbath unto the Lord. Six years thou shalt sow . . . prune . . . gather in the produce thereof, but the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest unto the Lord (cf. Ex. XXIII, 11); then follow the particulars in negative terms. Thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard. That which groweth of itself thou shalt not reap and the grapes of thy undressed vines thou shalt not gather (Lev. XXV, 4-5). Then follows a general rule again in positive form: It shall be a year of solemn rest for the land.

(24) According to this rule, the particulars are in such a case considered typical as illustrations serving to include in the general rule all such items as are similar to the particulars. E.g. in Ex. XXII, 8 the text first states that an oath can be judicially imposed 'for every matter of trespass' (General term). This is followed by: 'for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment' (particulars), which again is followed finally by: 'for any manner of lost thing' (General). We infer from this that an oath can be imposed for things like those specified as typical instances, but not in the case of a dispute about land, being immovable property, or in the case of sanctuary-property, as it being not one's neighbour's property, or in the case of dispute about a slave, as being a (human) chattel, or about documents, as not being 'property', but merely instruments of evidence. Similarly in the case of the sabbatical year, if the particulars are typical of the general rule, one who does any of these would break the law.

(25) But it is treated merely as a general proposition which is followed only by a particularization, in which case the general proposition does not go beyond what has actually been specified by the particularization that follows it.

(26) I.e., he interprets the Sabbatical Ordinance as a pure instance of a General-Particular-General form and takes sowing, pruning, reaping and gleaning as typical illustrative instances and, accordingly, considers 'ploughing' as included in the general terms of the Ordinance and hence as a punishable offence.

(27) I.e., that the Sabbatical Ordinance cannot be treated as a pure form of General-Particular-General, it being negative in the particulars, which amounts to saying, 'Not a, not b, not c; these, I mean, precisely, and no others'. 'Ploughing' therefore is not included among the forbidden processes and hence is not a punishable offence.

(28) For ploughing in the sabbatical year.

(29) In interpreting the import of the wording of the text, to show that there is no penalty for ploughing, although the application of the General-Particular-General rule would indicate to the contrary.

(30) I.e., ploughing.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 3b

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said [the discussion went on]: Possibly, you might say that the offender be flogged [even] for the 'extension'? But the teaching was concluded¹ to prove that he was exempt. But [said he], I know not which was the teaching, nor what was [actually] meant by 'extension'.

R. Eleazar [b. Pedath] said that the 'extension' had reference to [the inclusion of] 'ploughing' [as a punishable offence], and the argument proceeded thus: Possibly [you might say] that he should be flogged for 'ploughing' [in the sabbatical year], the rule being inferred by [treating the sabbatical ordinance as a case of] General-Particular-General; then the teaching was concluded to prove exemption. For, if it [the flogging] were correct, what is the [legal] import of all those particulars [set out in the text]?

R. Johanan said [that the 'extension' had reference to] the extra days [of restriction] which the sages had added prior to New Year; and the argument proceeded thus: Possibly [you might say] that he should be flogged for [ploughing during] the extended extra period prior to New Year which is based on the text: 'In ploughing time and in reaping time thou shalt rest.'² Then the teaching was concluded to prove exemption [from a flogging], as we shall seek to explain presently.

What is meant by 'the days [of restriction] prior to New Year'? — According to what we learned: 'Up to what date may ploughing be done in a tree field [orchard] in the pre-sabbatical year? Beth Shammai say, As long as it is for the benefit of the fruit; Beth Hillel say, Up to the Feast of Weeks; and the [practical effect of] one ruling is much the same as that of the other.'³ And up to what date may they plough a "white field"⁴ in the pre-sabbatical year? Up to when the moisture gives out and as long as people till for planting their cucumber and gourd beds. Said R. Simeon, If that is so, you have handed over the Torah for every individual to determine for himself the right time! No: [I say], a "white field" [they may till] up to Passover and a tree field up to the Feast of Weeks'.⁵ (And Beth Hillel say up to Passover.)⁶

And⁷ R. Simeon b. Pazzi reported in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi who had it from Bar Kappara that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din took a vote on these two [terminal] periods⁸ and abrogated them. Said R. Zera to R. Abbahu, some say, Resh Lakish said to R. Johanan: How could Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogate a measure instituted by Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel? Surely we learned: 'No Beth din has power to nullify the words [ruling] of another Beth din unless it be superior to it in learning and number!'⁹ 'He was astonished for a while';¹⁰ then he replied: I say, they thus have stipulated among themselves that whoever might thereafter wish to abrogate that [measure] could come and abrogate it.¹¹ But was it their measure? Was it not an [ancient] halachah of Moses from Sinai?¹² As [in fact] R. Assi reported R. Johanan to have said in the name of R. Nehuniah¹³ a man hailing from the valley of Beth Hauran,¹⁴ that the [laws of] 'Ten Saplings,'¹⁵ the 'Willow'¹⁶ and the 'Water Libation'¹⁷ were 'halachah' of Moses from Sinai! — Said R. Isaac, When we received on tradition that law [of extra restriction] as [an ancient] halachah, It was only in reference to 'thirty days prior to the New Year'; thereafter came those [of Beth Shammai and Hillel] and instituted [the cessation] from Passover¹⁸ and the Feast of Weeks,¹⁹ and [at the same time] they stipulated with reference to their [measure] that whoever might [thereafter] wish to abrogate [them] might come and abrogate them.²⁰

But were these [termini] merely halachah [-usages]? Were they not [based on Biblical] texts? For is it not taught: [Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest]: in ploughing time and in reaping time thou shalt rest.²¹ Says R. Akiba,²² There is no need to be told [in the second clause] to desist from ploughing or reaping in the seventh year, since it is already stated [elsewhere at length]: thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard: [that which groweth of itself thou shalt not reap].²³ [It can be taken] only [to debar] ploughing in the pre-sabbatical year

(1) Lit., 'the Talmud took it up'. (3) As explained above. (4) The sabbatical year began with the New Year. It was necessary to stop tillage before that date; when, and where, did it originate? On what authority? These are the points to be discussed now at length.

(2) Ex. XXXIV, 21 The exposition of this follows presently.

(3) Sheb. I, 1.

(4) Preparing for a grain crop, i.e., of cereals or legumina. A white field=a sown field, not planted with trees that cast a shadow.

(5) Ibid. II, 1.

(6) This bracketed part is a meaningless gloss.

(7) [So MS. M. Cur. edd. insert 'And'].

(8) Passover (Nisan) and the Feast of Weeks (Sivan); after these were abrogated, tillage was again permitted down to New Year (Tishri).

(9) 'Ed. I, 5.

(10) A phrase from Daniel IV, 16. R. Abbahu or R. Johanan was for the moment puzzled for a reply.

(11) Should the exigencies of the time demand it.

(12) I.e., a rule of immemorial practice, whose origin is unknown. Cf. our expression 'as old as the hills'. Cf. 'Ed. VIII, 7; Yad. Malachi No. 663 and W. Bacher's Tradition und Tradenten etc. (1914) p. 33ff.

(13) Also Hunya, Huna or Huna. Bacher ibid. p. 38 sect. 11.

(14) A high plain S.E. of Damascus mentioned by Ezekiel, XLVII, 18, among the boundaries of Palestine (cf. R.H. 22b). Herod established there a protectorate under Zamaris, a Babylonian Jew who offered military safety to the Babylonian pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem. V. Josephus, Antiquities XVII, 11, 1-2.

(15) A young plantation in a field of fifty by fifty cubits in dimension with at least ten saplings may be tilled entirely for their benefit, down to the edge of the sabbatical year which began with New Year's day, the first of Tishri. This implies that with old trees tilling must cease before New Year.

(16) V. infra. Willows were carried in procession once round the altar during the first six days of Tabernacles and then fixed at the side of the altar. On the seventh day the circuit was made seven times. V. Suk. 45a, where Abbahu suggests a Biblical indication, Ps. CXVIII, 27.

(17) On the same occasions the grand celebration of the water libation took place in the Temple, a golden flagon being filled with water from Siloam, was brought amidst trumpet blasts to the Temple and poured on the altar by the High Priest.

(18) For a 'white field', growing cereals and legumina.

(19) For a tree field, an orchard.

(20) And it is only these two earlier terms, Passover and Feast of Weeks, up to thirty days before New Year that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogated. Cf. J. Sheb. I, 5.

(21) Ex. XXXIV, 21.

(22) As all manner of work is forbidden on the sabbath day, the particular stress on ploughing and reaping suggested a connection between the sabbath-day and the sabbath-year.

(23) Lev. XXV, 4-5.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 4a

[which may have beneficial effects] extending into the seventh year and [likewise] to the reaping of the seventh year's crops which mature in the post-sabbatical year.¹ Says R. Ishmael, [It is purely a Sabbath law]; as the ploughing [here forbidden on Sabbath] is optional ploughing,² so is the reaping [here mentioned] optional reaping; outside this [law] is the reaping [of the new barley] for the 'omer'³ which is a religious duty [by ordinance]!⁴ — In fact said R. Nahman b. Isaac, when we received on tradition [that the pre-sabbatic restrictions had their origin in] halachah [-usage], this had reference to the permission [of tilling for the benefit] of saplings;⁵ whereas the texts are for the prohibition of old trees.⁶ But since 'halachah [-usage] allowed [tillage down to New Year] for saplings, it is not obvious that old trees were forbidden? — What we must say therefore is, the halachah [-usage] as basis for the prohibition is [necessary] according to R. Ishmael,⁷ whereas the texts [serve as basis] according to R. Akiba.

But R. Johanan said that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogated those [restrictions] on Biblical authority. What was the reason? He deduced it by equating the term ‘Sabbath’ common to both⁸ the Sabbath-year and the Sabbath of Creation⁹ [thus]: Just as in the case of the Sabbath Day [work is forbidden] on the day itself, but on the day before and on the day after it is allowed, so [likewise] in the Sabbath Year [tillage is forbidden] during the year itself, but in the year before and in the year after it is allowed.

To this R. Ashi demurred: On the view that it [the restriction] is a halachah [-usage] can a gezerah shawah [deduction]⁸ come and eradicate a halachah [-usage]; and [likewise] on the view that it is [based on] a Biblical text, can a gezerah shawah⁸ come and eradicate a text! — But no, said R. Ashi, Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din concurred with R. Ishmael who held that [the presabbatical restrictions] were based on a halachah-usage. And when did the tradition of such halachah-usage [apply]? During the time when the Temple was still standing, like that of the water libation;¹⁰ but in times when the Temple is no longer standing the tradition of this halachah-usage does not apply.¹¹

BUT IT MAY NOT BE WATERED FROM [STORED] RAIN NOR BY THAT OF A SWIPE-WELL. It is quite correct [to prohibit water] from a swipe-well, because that is a rather extra trouble; but rain water-what trouble is there [in using it]? — Said R. Ela, reporting R. Johanan: Rain water is prohibited as a precaution on account of the swipe-well.¹² R. Ashi said: Rain water itself may [sometimes] come to be [just as difficult to draw¹³ as] the water of a swipe-well. And they differ on [the statement of] R. Zera; for R. Zera said that Rabbah b. Jeremiah, citing Samuel, said that rivers drawing from [adjoining] water pools may be used for watering during the festival week.¹⁴ One Master¹⁵ is in agreement with [the statement of] R. Zera, while the other¹⁶ is not in agreement with [the statement of] R. Zera. The text [above stated]: ‘R. Zera said that Rabbah b. Jeremiah, citing Samuel, said that rivers drawing from [adjoining] water pools may be used for watering during the festival week’. R. Jeremiah put all objection to him [R. Zera]: BUT... NOT WATERED FROM [STORED] RAIN NOR BY THAT OF A SWIPE-WELL!¹⁷ — Said R. Zera to him: Jeremiah, my son, these Babylonian pools are like water [pools] that do not fail.¹⁸

Our Rabbis taught: Ditches and pools¹⁹ [even though] filled with water on the day before the festival are debarred from being used for watering during the festival week,²⁰ but if a canal passes between them they may be used. Said R. Papa: This is only provided that the greater part of that field obtains its supply from that canal.²¹ R. Ashi said that [they may be used] even if the greater part of that field does not obtain its supply [from that canal], because since its flow is continuous [the owner] says. if it [the field] does not get enough drink on [this] one day, it will [soon] get its drink in two or three days.²² Our Rabbis taught: ‘If a pool gets tricklings from²³ an irrigated field [higher up], it may be used for watering another field’.²⁴ But is it not going [ultimately] to give out? — Said R. Jeremiah: For the present at any rate it is still trickling! Said Abaye: This is [permitted] only so long as the first source has not given out.²⁵

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Menassia says: Where two cultivated beds lie one above the other, one should not²⁶ draw from the [supply of the] lower to water the upper. R. Eleazar b. Simeon went even further, saying: Even in one bed, if half of it is low and the other half higher one should not draw from the low-lying part to water the upper part.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘One may raise [medallin]²⁷ for the vegetables if they are to be eaten; but if it is to improve their appearance it is forbidden’. Rabina and Rabbah of Thospia²⁸ were [once] walking on the road when they saw a certain man drawing buckets of water during the festival week.²⁹ Said Rabbah of Thospia to Rabina: Come, Sir, put a ban³⁰ on him. Said Rabina to him, But is it not taught: ‘One may raise³¹ for vegetables to be eaten’? — Replied Rabbah, Do you think that this medallin means one may raise water [in buckets]?³² [No], what medallin means is

(1) Accordingly 'ploughing' is Biblically forbidden in the pre-sabbatical extension and the offender would be liable to a flogging were it not for the inferences derived from the other text of Lev. XXV, 4-5, as expounded above, 3a. Cf. Tosaf. 3b s.v. שהרי and Han.

(2) I.e., not ordained to be done on any particular day.

(3) 'The sheaf of the first fruit of your (barley) harvest'. V. Lev. XXIII, 10ff. R. Ishmael holds that this may be reaped even on Sabbath. R. Ishmael's statement is for the moment irrelevant, though it comes in later. R. Akiba's dictum shows that the extension, i.e., the pre-sabbatical bar on tillage, is not merely a pristine halachah-usage, but has textual basis.

(4) Cf. M. Sheb. I, 4 and Mak., Sonc. ed. p. 48.

(6) Thirty days before New Year, which prohibition was extended by Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel to Passover and Feast of Weeks, according to the field.

(7) Who, unlike R. Akiba, uses that text for another point, namely, as permitting reaping the barley for the 'omer even on a Sabbath, if that is the date.

(8) Gezerah shawah (V. Glos.) which some admit and others do not.

(9) I.e., Ex. XXXIV, 21 taken with Lev. XXV, 2 ('a Sabbath-rest year-unto the Lord').

(10) Mentioned together with the tradition regarding the ten saplings, supra 3b.

(11) With the fall of the Temple and the Jewish State many of the laws appertaining to the Temple and the Land fell into abeyance owing to the force of circumstances. Recently, I. S. Zuri has attempted to establish that Rabban Gamaliel's abrogation was enacted soon after May 215 C.E. when Caracalla entered Antioch and thence marched his armies through Palestine on his way to Egypt, when the people had to pay 'annonae' to feed the armies. V. his שלאטון הנשיאות והועד I, Vol. III, 58-59.

(12) If stored rain water is permitted, one will also work a shadoof.

(13) When much of it has been drawn off he will have to go deep down with his bucket, with almost as much exertion as from a shadoof.

(14) [And we do not apprehend the possibility of the pool drying up when he might go and fetch water from another river, with all the extra trouble it involves.]

(15) R. Ashi.

(16) R. Johanan, who prohibits rain water on account of a swipe-well.

(17) [Presumably because we apprehend lest he may go deep down with his bucket should the water be drawn off and the same should apply to the case of R. Zera.]

(18) And there is no likelihood of leading to exertion during the Festival Week.

(19) The former rough-cut and the latter well-made (Commentators on Alfasi). J.M.K. I, 1 reads הפיסקין והבריכה, which points to the Latin piscina, reservoir, swimming bath or fish-tank.

(20) Because their supply comes from a distance and may entail exertion should the supply fail.

(21) I.e., if the supply is plentiful.

(22) Because he will get what he may and if not enough will readily wait for a day or two for another chance, without going to exertion during the festival week.

(23) [So MS.M. Cur. edd. 'trickles water (which one gets) from'].

to pull out [vegetables],¹ as we learned:² 'If one is [engaged in] thinning³ vines, just as he may thin his own, so also he may thin those due to the poor;⁴ so R. Judah. R. Meir says: He is permitted [to attend] to his own but not to those of the poor'.⁵ Said Rabina: But it is taught [explicitly]: 'One may raise water for vegetables if they are to be eaten'! — Said Rabbah [of Thospia] to Rabina: If it is thus taught, that settles the matter.⁶

NOR MAY SMALL BASINS [‘UGIOTH] BE FORMED ABOUT THE VINES. What is meant by ‘ugioth?⁷ — Said Rab Judah, [What we call] banki.⁸ It is also taught thus: These are ‘ugioth; light hoeing done about the roots of olives and at the roots of vines.⁹ [But] this is not so, for did not Rab Judah allow the family of Bar-Zittai¹⁰ to make banki in their vineyards? — This is not difficult: The one statement [in the Mishnah] refers to fresh [trenchings], the other [Rab Judah's] refers to re-trenching.¹¹

R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH SAYS A [WATER] CHANNEL MAY NOT BE NEWLY MADE [DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK, NOR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR; BUT THE SAGES SAY].¹² It is perfectly in order in regard to the festival week, because he performs laborious work, but what reason can there be [against making a channel] in the sabbatical year? — R. Zera and R. Abba b. Memel differ in the matter: One says [it is forbidden] because [the digger] seems to be doing spading [in his field]; the other says, because he is [thereby] preparing the banks for sowing. What is the [practical] difference between the two [explanations]? — There is a difference where water comes along forthwith; according to the one who says that [it is] because he is preparing the banks for sowing, there is [still an objection], but according to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be doing spading, there is none.¹³ But, the one who objects on the ground that he seems to be doing spading, should he not likewise object on the ground that he seems to be preparing the bank for sowing? — Rather, the [practical] difference between them is where he takes [the mould] from the trench and throws it outside. According to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be preparing the banks for sowing, there is no objection, whereas according to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be spading, there is [still an objection]. But, he who takes the view that he seems to be preparing the banks for sowing, should he not likewise admit the objection that he seems to be doing spading? — [No,] because one who does spading, as soon as he takes up a spadeful he puts it down again in its place.

Amemar taught this [clause of the] Mishnah with the explanation [that R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah forbids making a channel] ‘because he seems to be doing spading [in his field]’¹⁴ but felt some difficulty about it in view of another statement of R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah. Could R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah [said he] have held the view that wherever one seems to be spading [his field],¹⁴ it is forbidden? And he contrasted that with the [statement in the] following [Mishnah]:¹⁵ One may lay up a store of manure [in his field].¹⁴ R. Meir says he may not until he places it either three handbreadths below or three handbreadths above [the surface]. If he had some small quantity [already there] he may go on adding thereto. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah says [even then] he may not until he puts it down either three handbreadths below, or raises it three handbreadths above [the surface],¹⁶ or places it on a rock!’ — R. Zera and R. Abba b. Memel [explained this seeming discrepancy], one said: [The latter Mishnah means where], for instance, he has had the place excavated; the other said: [The reason there is because] the manure heap itself attests his intention.¹⁷

AND [A CHANNEL] THAT HAS GOT OUT OF ORDER MAYBE RE-PAIRED. What is meant by OUT OF ORDER? — Said R. Abba:¹⁸ ‘It means that if it is [now, for instance] but one handbreadth in depth, he may restore it to [a depth of] six handbreadths’. It is obvious that [to restore it] from half a handbreadth to [the original] three, seeing that there was [originally] scarcely any flow of water, it is nothing at all;¹⁹ [to deepen it] front two handbreadths to [the original] twelve²⁰ which involves extra exertion,²¹ is not [allowed]. What about [deepening it] front two [handbreadths] to [the original] seven? [Do we argue that] as in the first instance [it was explained above] he deepens it by five handbreadths, [from one to six], so here he deepens it by five handbreadths [from two to seven];²² or, maybe that as in this instance he [actually] deepens the channel by an extra handbreadth there is extra exertion, and hence it is forbidden? — It stands undecided.

Abaye allowed the people of Harmek to clear away²³ [the growths obstructing]²⁴ the canal.²⁵ R. Jeremiah allowed the people of Sacutha to dredge the canal that had become blocked.²⁶ R. Ashi allowed the people of Matha-Mehasia to clear obstructions from the river Barnis, saying that as the public obtained their drinking water from it it was virtually a [pressing] public need, and we learn: AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED.

(26) According to J.M.K. I, 2 it was a public bathing pool that had got into disorder at Sacutha and R. Abbahu allowed the repairing to be done in the festival week.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 5a

AND IMPAIRED WATER-WORKS¹ IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN MAY BE REPAIRED AND CLEANED OUT. [That is to say only] to repair, but not to be dug [afresh]. Said R. Jacob as reporting R. Johanan: This was taught only where there is no public need; but where there is public need² for it even [fresh] digging is allowed.

And where there is a public need is digging allowed? Surely it is taught: 'Wells,³ ditches or caverns of a private person may be cleaned out, and needless to say, those of the public; but wells, ditches or caverns of the public may not be dug and still less those of a private person'.⁴ Does not that mean that [digging is not allowed] even where the public has need of it? — No, [only] where the public has no need of it. Then similarly the reference to a private person is where the private person has no need of it, but in that case is 'cleaning out' allowed? Surely it is taught: 'Wells, ditches or caverns of a private person may have water run into them, but they may not be cleaned out, nor have their cracks plastered; but those of the public may be cleaned out and their cracks may be plastered'? — But what else [are we to say] but that the private person has need of it; in which case [the references to the public is similarly where the public has need of it? But where the public has need of it, is digging forbidden? Surely it is taught: 'Wells, ditches or caverns of a private person may have water run into them or be cleaned out; but their cracks may not be plastered, nor may the scourings be put into them,⁵ nor may they be plastered with cement. But those of the public may be dug and plastered with cement'.⁶ But [if so], the first [Baraita] is difficult. Explain it thus: 'Wells, [ditches or caverns] of a private person [may be cleaned out]' — providing he has need of them, 'and needless to say those of the public' — when the public has need of them, as then, even digging is allowed.⁷ 'But wells, ditches or caverns of the public are not to be dug' — when the public has no need of them, 'still less, those of a private person', as when a private person has no need of them, even cleaning out is not allowed. R. Ashi remarked: Our own Mishnah is also precisely worded [to the same effect] as it states AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED. What is the force of ALL? Is it not meant to include digging? — No; it is to include [other instances] such as are taught [in the following]: 'They [Public Commissioners] go forth to clear the roads of thorns, to mend the broadways and [main] highways and to measure the [ritual] pools; and if any [ritual] pools be found short of forty [cubic] se'ahs of water⁸ they train a continuous flow into it [to ensure] forty se'ahs'. And whence do we know that if they did not go forth and attend to all these [public needs], then if any blood be shed there [through] this neglect [Scripture] lays [blame] on them, as if they themselves had shed it? From the instructive text, And so blood be upon thee.⁹ But surely [the Mishnah does] state these instances expressly: AND ROADS, BROADWAYS AND [RITUAL] WATER POOLS AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED! What else [then] may be included under this word ALL? Is it not digging [afresh if required by the public]? This proves it.

AND GRAVESIDES MAY BE MARKED. R. Simeon b. Pazzi said: Where is an indication in the Torah that gravesides should be marked? In the instructive text: [And when they pass through . . . the land] and one seeth a man's bone then shall he set up a sign by it.¹⁰ Said Rabina to R. Ashi, But who told us that¹¹ before Ezekiel came? — [Said the other]: Accepting your view, with regard to the statement made by R. Hisda¹² [namely]: This point we do not learn from the law of our Master Moses; we learn it from the words of [prophet] Ezekiel the son of Buzi: No alien, uncircumcised in heart and uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into My Sanctuary.¹³ [We might equally ask], who had told us that before Ezekiel came and stated it? Only, that was first learnt by oral tradition and then Ezekiel came and gave us a textual basis for it; here too, it was first learnt as an oral tradition and then Ezekiel came and gave us a textual basis for it. R. Abbahu suggested that it may be derived from this [text]: And he shall cry, 'Unclean! Unclean!'¹⁴ [That is], impurity cries out [to the passer-by] and tells him, 'Keep off!' And R. 'Uzziel, the grandson of the elder R. 'Uzziel said the same, [that] impurity cries out and tells him, 'Keep off!' But was this [text] intended for this lesson? It is required for what has been taught: And he shall cry 'Unclean! Unclean!'; [this teaches that] one must needs make his distress known to many, that many pray for mercy on his behalf? — If that be so, let the text read 'Unclean' [but once]; why has it 'Unclean', 'Unclean' [twice over]? Infer [from it] the two points. Abaye said [that the rule¹⁵ may be derived] from here: And put not a stumbling-block before the blind.¹⁶ R. Papa said: And he will say, Cast ye up, cast ye up, clear the way.¹⁷ R. Hinena suggested, Take up the stumbling-block out of the way of My people.¹⁷ R. Joshua the son of R. Idi said: And thou shalt show them the way wherein they must walk.¹⁸ Mar Zutra said: And ye shall separate the Children of Israel from their uncleanness.¹⁹ R. Ashi said: And they shall have charge of My charge,²⁰ [which implies], make safeguards to My charge. Rabina said: And to him who ordereth²¹ [we-sam] his way will I show the salvation of God.²²

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, Whoever appraises [ha-sham] his ways [in this life]²³ becomes privileged to behold the salvation of the Holy One, blessed be He, for it is said: '[And to him] who ordereth his way'.²² Read not [we-sam]²⁴ who sets [his way], but [we-sham]²⁵ who appraises the worth [of his way], him will I show the divine salvation. R. Jannai had a certain disciple who daily raised critical points [at his college]²⁶ but refrained from raising any critical points at the periodic lectures of the Festival Sabbaths²⁷

. He [R. Jannai] applied to him the text: And to him who ordereth his way will I show the salvation of God.¹

Our Rabbis taught: 'No markings are made to indicate [the presence of] a piece of flesh² [from a corpse] no larger than an olive, nor of [human] bone no larger than a barley-corn,³ nor of any [human] remains which do not diffuse defilement under 'tent'.⁴ But markings are made to indicate [the presence of] a [human] spine, a skull or the major members of a skeleton or the major number of lesser bones thereof.⁵ And the markings are not made in cases of certainty⁶ but [only] in cases of uncertainty. These are [instances of] uncertainty: Leafy bowers,⁷ jutting ledges⁸ and a Peras-area.⁹ And the markings are not placed on the site of the impurity [itself], in order to avoid wasting what is [preserved as] pure;¹⁰ nor is the marking placed far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting any space¹¹ of the Land of Israel'.¹² But does not flesh of an olive's size from a human body diffuse defilement under a tent? For we learned: 'The following diffuse defilement by tent [overspreading]: Flesh of an olive's size from a human dead body . . .!' — Said R. Papa, We speak here of an olive's size precisely which after all shrinks [to less]: far better is it that terumah and other meats that are pure¹³ should be burnt [unnecessarily] on one occasion¹⁴ than that they should be burnt continuously.¹⁵

And these are [instances] of uncertainty: Leafy bowers and jutting ledges.¹⁶ 'Leafy bowers' [means] a tree which overspreads the ground¹⁷ and 'jutting ledges' are [stones]¹⁸ projecting from wall enclosure.¹⁷ 'And a Peras-area': as we learned: 'One who runs a plough over a grave makes the site a Peras-area'; and how much thereof has he thus affected? The full length of a furrow, one hundred cubits [each way].¹⁹ But does a Peras-area convey defilement by tent? Surely, Rab Judah, citing Samuel, said that one [a pilgrim] may walk across a Peras-area cautiously fanning his way [in front of him]!²⁰ Moreover, R. Judah b. Ammi, in the name of 'Ulla, said that a Peras-area which has been [much] trampled is [considered as] clean?²¹ — Said R. Papa: 'This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]. The former statement refers to a field where a grave has become lost;²² whereas the latter refers to a field where a grave had been run over by the plough'.²³ But is a field where a grave has been lost²⁴ [correctly] called a Peras-area? — Yes [indeed], for we learned: 'There are three kinds of Peras-areas — [a] a field where a grave has been lost²⁵ [b] a field where a grave has been run over by the plough²⁶ and [c] the weepers' field'.²⁷ What is the weepers' field? — R. Joshua²⁸ b. Abba explained in the name of 'Ulla that it is a field where they bid final farewell²⁹ to the dead. And wherefore [is it held as a defiling area]? — Said [R. Hisda, as reporting]³⁰ Abimi, [It is] because there is here a possibility³¹ of abandoned ownership.³² But does not a field where a grave has been run over by the plough require to be marked? Surely it is taught: 'If one came upon a marked field without knowing its character,³³ then if there are trees on it, it is thereby indicated that a grave in it had been run over by the plough;³⁴ if there are no trees, it is thereby indicated that a grave has been lost in it.³⁵ R. Judah says: [The presence of trees is no criterion] until there is some elder or disciple [to attest it], for not all are well versed on the subject [of proper markings]!' — Said R. Papa: What is taught in this [latter Baraita] refers to a field in which a grave had been lost, and which had [consequently] been marked. If there are trees on it, it is thereby indicated that a grave had been run over by the plough [subsequently]; if there are no trees on it, it is indicated that a grave had been lost in it.³⁶ But is there not a danger that the trees are situate within the field and the grave was outside?³⁷ — as 'Ulla said [elsewhere that we speak of a case where]³⁸ the trees are situate on the boundaries [of the field] here likewise they were situate on the boundary line.³⁹

(1) In appreciation of his disciple's thoughtful considerateness towards himself on those special public occasions. Cf. Ta'an. 9b and B.K. 117a.

(2) As flesh soon shrinks to less than its (traditional) minimum size of an olive and is then impotent to cause defilement without direct contact, Num. XIX, 13-16; Ohal. II, 3.

(3) Which is (traditionally) the minimum size for human bone to cause defilement by direct contact. V. references in previous note and Tosaf. s.v. עצם.

(4) Anything extending to one handbreadth over dead human remains represents the 'tent' of Num. XIX, 14, to diffuse defilement without contact, unless it is less than the minimum size.

(5) Any of these enumerated defile under cover without coming into direct contact with the object or grave. Any covering to the extent of one handbreadth, say his coat tail or sleeve spread, or hanging down over the spot, is enough to defile him, even if neither he nor his garment touch the unclean thing or spot.

(6) As people take care of their own accord not to run the risk of personal defilement or the loss of sacred meats.

(7) Lit., 'coverings', arbours, groves, avenues or single trees whose thick branches are full of foliage, constitute a 'tent', to spread the defilement to the walker; cf. Tosaf. s.v. אילן.

- (8) E.g., stone copings, boards and ledges projecting from cemetery walls each way within and without, constitute a 'tent'. These are doubtful, as one is not certain whether there is a corpse near by within.
- (9) Defined lower down. On the term v. Pes., Sonc. ed. p. 492, n. 4.
- (10) Which may be brought close to the grave and defiled before one is aware. To those pure' things belong e.g., the priest's due — terumah 'first-fruits', 'second tithe', etc. Cf. Num. XVIII, 11-13;26-30.

- (12) Cf. Sot. 30b.
- (13) Reading טהרות (instead of קדשים), as holy sacrificial meat is not carried about.
- (14) While the human dead flesh, soon after the burial is still of the size potent to defile.

- (16) Explaining the above technical terms.
- (17) Near a cemetery; Ohal. VIII, 2.

- (20) With bellows or a spade to blow away from his path, without touching any piece of splintered bone cast up by the plough. - (21) And need not be marked or avoided. (Han.).
- (22) And, as it cannot be located, the whole field is considered a place of defilement.
- (23) The plough, we assume, crushes the bones rendering them impotent to communicate tent-defilement.
- (24) So according to Wilna Gaon. Cur. edd., that was ploughed over.
- (25) Ohal. XVIII, 3.
- (26) Ibid. 2.

- (32) Loose limbs may have been dropped in transit, which the mourners being unable to identify, leave abandoned. On the practice of collecting bones after temporary burial and transferring them to their permanent place of rest v. infra 8a and Ber. 18a.
- (33) Whether a grave had been lost in it, and the field cannot then be traversed by 'fanning', or whether the grave had the plough run over it in which case it may be traversed by 'fanning'.
- (34) For the sake of the trees, this shows that a field in which a grave had been run over by the plough is marked.
- (35) As such a field is not to be planted, Ohal. XVIII, 3; Tosef. Ohal. XVII.
- (36) And had not been ploughed over.
- (37) I.e., where the soil had not been ploughed, so that it is treated like a field wherein a grave had been lost.
- (38) Ned. 42b.
- (39) And since dead are not buried on the road, the grave must be among the trees and has been run over by the plough, when the field has been tilled for the good of the trees.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 6a

But perhaps the defilement lies within the field while the trees stand on the outer sides [of it]?¹ — They were planted irregularly.² Or, if you like, I may explain by what was said above: Nor is the marking placed far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting any space of the Land of Israel.³

'R. Judah says [the presence of trees is no criterion] until there be some elder or disciple [to attest that it has been ploughed], for not all are well versed in the subject [of markings]'. Said Abaye: You may infer from here, that when a scholar is resident in a place, all local matters devolve upon him.

Said Rab Judah: If one comes across a [single] stone which is marked [with lime], the space under it is defiled; if two stones [with markings] then if there is lime on the space between them, the space between is defiled, and if there is no lime between them, the intervening space is clean, even though there is no [sign of] tilling [there]. But surely it is taught: 'If one comes upon one stone which is marked, the space under it is defiled, if on two stones, if there is tilling between them, the intervening space is clean, if not, it is defiled'? — Said R. Papa. Here [it is a case where] the lime had been poured on top of the stones and got spread here and there. [Now] if there is any tilling [in the space] between them, [the space] between is clean, because it may be presumed that the [splashed] lime had got peeled off by the tilling; whereas if there is not [any trace of tilling] the lime is intended to mark the space between and it is 'defiled'.

Said R. Assi:⁴ If one boundary is marked, that side [alone] is 'defiled', but the rest of the entire field is 'clean'. If two [are marked] those [alone] are 'defiled', but the rest of the entire field is 'clean'; if three [are marked], those are 'defiled', but the rest of the entire field is clean; if the four [boundaries are marked] they are clean and the entire field [within] is 'defiled', for the Master⁵ said: 'Nor is the marking place far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting space of the Land of Israel'.⁶

AND [PUBLIC COMMISSIONERS] SET OUT [ALSO] TO INSPECT DIVERSE SEED-CROPS. But do we set out for inspecting seed-crops during the festival week? This is contradicted by the [following]: On the first of Adar announcements are made about the [contribution of] shekels and about the diverse crops. On the fifteenth thereof the scroll [of Esther] is read in the [ancient] walled cities and [commissioners] go forth to clear the roads of thorns, mend the broadways, measure the [ritual] water-pools and to perform all public needs, and they mark the gravesides and go forth to inspect the diverse seed-crops?⁷ — R. Eleazar and R. Jose b. Hanina [gave differing explanations], One said, The latter statement speaks of earlier crops,⁸ the other of later⁹ crops; the other said, In one case⁸ [they go out to attend] to grain crops, in the others to vegetable crops.

R. Assi, reporting R. Johanan said: The rule laid down [in the Mishnah] applies only when the sproutings [of the season are late and] had not become recognizable¹⁰ [before then]; but where the sproutings had become recognizable [before], they went forth about them [even earlier].

Why do we particularly set out during the festival week? R. Jacob reporting R. Johanan explained that it was because the wages given for labour are then low with us.¹¹

R. Zebid, or some say, R. Mesharsheya said: From the afore — mentioned [explanation] you may infer that when pay was given,¹² it was given them out of the Terumah of the [Shekel] Chamber;¹³ for if you should suppose that they [the owners of the fields] themselves paid, what difference does it make to us? Let them pay whatever they ask.¹⁴

And how much [constitutes an admixture]?¹⁵ Said R. Samuel b. Isaac, The same as we learned:¹⁶ Every se'ah of seeds that contains one quarter [of a kab]¹⁷

(1) And the grave has not been disturbed at all. What is the indication of the trees in such a case?

(2) Not in even rows, but promiscuously and thus the whole site had to be disturbed by the ploughing.

(3) [And since the marking is in proximity to the trees, it is evident that the defilement lay between the trees].

(4) Explaining the precise principle and system of marking, by confining the markings close to the spot of defilement.

(5) In the Baraitha, supra 5b.

(6) [Consequently where the whole field was defiled the whole of the four boundaries had to be marked. As to the cleanliness of the boundaries themselves, v. Tosaf. s.v. אָמַר.]

- (17) A se'ah contains six kabs and a quarter of a kab's admixture is therefore one twenty-fourth of the se'ah, or enough seed to be sown in a field of 50 X 50 cubits.

of another kind must be reduced.¹ But it is taught: They [the authorities] introduced a rule that they should declare ownerless the [crop of the] entire field? — That is not difficult [to explain]. The former [Mishnah] states the practice before the [new] rule, while the latter [of the Baraita] gives the practice after the [introduction] of the rule, as it is [distinctly] taught: Formerly they [the public commissioners] used to uproot [the diverse-crop], throwing it to the cattle, at which the owners were doubly pleased, for one thing that they weeded their fields for them, and again that they threw [the forbidden crop] to the cattle; thereupon they made a [new] regulation that they should pull up [the forbidden crop] and cast it on the road. And still the owners were greatly pleased, because they weeded their fields. Thereupon they instituted that they should declare ownerless the crop of the entire field.²

MISHNAH. R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAYS: WATER MAY BE DRAWN FROM [ONE] TREE TO [ANOTHER] TREE,³ PROVIDED THE WHOLE FIELD IS NOT WATERED IN THIS WAY.⁴ SEEDS⁵ THAT HAVE NOT HAD [ANY] DRINK BEFORE THE FESTIVAL WEEK MAY NOT BE WATERED DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK.⁶ THE SAGES HOWEVER ALLOW IT IN BOTH THE ONE CASE AND THE OTHER.⁷

GEMARA. [NOT...THE ENTIRE FIELD]. Said Rab Judah,⁸ If the field has a clayey⁹ soil he may [water it].¹⁰ It is likewise taught:¹¹ When they said¹² that it is forbidden to water them during the festival [week], they referred only to seeds that had not drunk before the festival; but seeds that had drunk before the festival may [again] be watered during the festival [week]; and if the field was a clayey soil, it is allowed [to water it]. And a bare¹³ field is not watered during the festival [week]; but the Sages allow it¹⁴ in the one case and in the other. Said Rabina: You may infer from here that a garden plot may be sprinkled¹⁵ in the festival week. For in the case of a bare field, why is it [permitted]?¹⁶ Because it just quickens a tardy soil; here too, it just quickens a tardy soil.

Our Rabbis taught: 'A white field may be sprinkled¹⁷ in the sabbatical year, but not during the festival [week]'. But it has been taught: It may be sprinkled either in the sabbatical year or during the festival [week]?¹⁸ — Said R. Huna, This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]; the former [quotation] states the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob¹⁹ and the latter that of the Rabbis.²⁰

Another [Baraita] taught: A white field may be²¹ sprinkled in the pre-sabbatical year so that the greens may sprout in the sabbatical year. Nay, more, a white field may be²¹ sprinkled in the sabbatical year, so that the greens may sprout [better] in the post-sabbatical year.

MISHNAH. MOLES AND MICE MAY BE TRAPPED IN A TREE-FIELD OR WHITE FIELD IN THE USUAL WAY²² DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR: BUT THE SAGES²³ SAY, IN THE TREE-FIELD IN THE USUAL WAY AND IN THE WHITE FIELD NOT IN THE USUAL WAY: AND A BREACH MAY BE BLOCKED UP DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR ONE MAY BUILD IN THE USUAL WAY.

GEMARA. What is ESHUTH?²⁴ — Said Rab Judah: [It is] a creature which has no eyes. Raba b. Ishmael, some say, R. Yemar b. Shelemia, said, What [may be the] text [for this]? — ‘Let them [the wicked] be as a snail which melteth and passeth away; like the young mole [esheth]²⁵ which hath not seen the sun.’²⁶

Our Rabbis taught: Moles and mice may be trapped in a white field and in a tree-field in the usual way and ants’ holes may also be destroyed. How are they destroyed? Rabbah Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Earth is fetched from one hole and put into another and they²⁷ strangle each other. R. Yemar b. Shelemia said in the name of Abaye, That is [effective] only if [the nests are] situate on two sides of the river; and that [again], if there is no bridge; and that [again], if there is not [even] a [crossing] plank; and that [again], if there is not even a rope [to cross by].

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 7a

How much [apart]? — Up to a parasang.¹

R. JUDAH² SAYS: IN THE TREE-FIELD IN THE USUAL WAY AND IN THE WHITE FIELD NOT IN THE USUAL WAY. Our Rabbis taught: How is the usual way? He digs a hole and suspends a trap in it. How is the unusual way? He drives a stake [into the spot] or strikes it with a pick and flattens out the soil underneath.³ It is taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar⁴ says, When they⁵ said, [‘And in the white field not in the usual way’], they said it only in reference to a white field situate near the city; but in a white field that is situate near a tree-field [they may trap them] even in the usual way, lest these [pests] come away from the white field and destroy the tree-field.

AND A BREACH IS BLOCKED UP DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. How is it ‘blocked up’? — Said R. Joseph: With [a hurdle made of] twigs and daphne stakes. In a Baraitha it is taught: ‘Loose rubble is piled up without being plastered with clay.’⁶ Said R. Hisda, This⁷ is taught only with regard to a garden wall,⁸ but the wall of a court⁹ is built in the usual way. Might one suggest that the following supports him: A wall that is bulging out into the public domain may be pulled down and built in the usual way, because it constitutes a danger [to the passers-by]!¹⁰ — [Not necessarily]. There the reason is as stated: ‘Because it constitutes a danger’. Some [put the argument] as follows: Come and hear: A wall that is bulging out into the public domain may be pulled down and built in the ordinary way, because it constitutes a danger. That is, where it constitutes a danger he may, but if it is not a danger he may not build. May we see in this a confutation of R. Hisda? — [Not necessarily], as R. Hisda might reply: There¹¹ he may ‘pull down and build’, whereas here¹² he may build¹³ but not pull down. Then let one in that case¹¹ likewise [merely] pull down¹⁴ and not build!¹⁵ — If so, he might refrain even from pulling down.¹⁶ R. Ashi said: Our Mishnah, here, gives an indication to the same effect,¹⁷ for it states: BUT IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR, ONE BUILDS IN THE ORDINARY WAY. Now of what is it [that he may block up the breach]? If it means [the wall of] his courtyard, does this need to be stated?¹⁸ It can only be, therefore [a breach in] his garden [wall] although he might seem to be doing it in order to safeguard his fruits.¹⁹ You can infer it [from this].

MISHNAH.²⁰ R. MEIR SAYS: AN [INITIAL]²¹ INSPECTION OF LEPROUS SYMPTOMS MAY BE MADE [DURING THE FESTIVAL ‘WEEK’]²² FOR [THE PRIEST TO MAKE] A LENIENT PRONOUNCEMENT²³ [ON THE FINDINGS], BUT NOT TO MAKE A SEVERE²⁴ PRONOUNCEMENT; BUT THE SAGES SAY: [IT IS TO BE MADE] NEITHER FOR A LENIENT NOR FOR A SEVERE PRONOUNCEMENT.²⁵

GEMARA. It is taught: R. Meir says that an inspection is made [during the festival week] to make a lenient pronouncement but not for a severe one. R. Jose says: Neither for making a lenient nor a severe pronouncement;²⁶ as, if you arrive at the necessity of having to make a lenient pronouncement [on the findings] you are [likewise] bound to make a severe pronouncement. Said Rabbi: R. Meir's statement seems appropriately applied to the case of an [observational] detention²⁷ and R. Jose's to that of a decided leper.²⁸

Said Raba, In the case of one who is [as yet nominally] ‘clean’,²⁹ all are agreed that he is not examined.³⁰ In regard to one under preliminary [observational] detention, all agree that he is examined;³¹ where a difference of opinion arises is

- (20) The technical points involved in the discussion of this Mishnah bearing on the diagnosis of the symptoms of (biblical) leprosy and the treatment of the patient are the following: (a) The diagnosis may be made by any expert, priest or layman, 'save that the pronouncement of "cleanness" or "uncleanness" is assigned to the priest: if the priest be told that the man is "clean", he pronounces him clean; if he be told the man is "unclean", he pronounces him unclean'. Neg. III, 1. (b) On the findings of the first inspection the priest pronounced the patient either (i) as 'clean' and discharged, or as 'unclean', to be isolated; and (ii) in some cases of doubt, to be remanded for seven days' observational detention. Cf. Lev. XIII, 2-4ff; Neg. III, 3-4. (c) After a second inspection in doubtful cases, the priest pronounced the patient either 'clean' or 'unclean' as before, or if still in doubt a further remand for seven days' observational detention. Cf. Lev. ibid. 5-8; 13-17; Neg. ibid. 5-6. (d) On the third and final inspection he declared him 'clean' and discharged or 'unclean' to be isolated, until he recovered from his affection. During these periods the patient was allowed to consort with his wife. (e) On his recovery the patient went through two ritual purifications, (i) a preliminary, outside the town and returned home for seven days, during which, however, he was not to consort with his wife; cf. Lev. XIV, 2-8; Neg. XIV, 1-2. He then went through a second ritual purification which admitted him to the sanctuary for the sacrificial rites. Lev. XIV, 9ff; Neg. ibid. 3 and 7ff.

in the case of one under a second [observational] detention: one Master [R. Meir] considers that it is left to [the discretion of] the priest, so that if the patient is [found] 'clean' he declares him 'clean', and if he is [found] 'unclean' he holds his peace; while the other Master [R. Jose] considers that, [since] it is written: [This is the law of the plague and leprosy. . .], to pronounce it clean or unclean,¹ [the priest has no choice].²

The Master said: Said Rabbi, R. Jose's statement seems appropriately applied to the case of a decided leper³ and R. Meir's to one under [observational] detention.⁴ But the reverse⁵ is taught [elsewhere]? — Both versions are [variant] tannaitic interpretations of Rabbi's observation. One [authority]⁶ is of the opinion that the patient prefers the company of the world at large⁷ [during the Festival], while the other [authority]⁸ holds that he prefers to retain his wife's company.⁹

Is that to say that [according to Rabbi]¹⁰ a confirmed leper may have the use of the [conjugal] bed? — [Yes], it is taught: But he shall dwell outside his tent seven days,¹¹ [that is] he shall be¹² precluded from the use of the [conjugal] bed; for 'tent' means nothing but [living with] his wife, as it is said: Go, say unto them, return ye unto your tents.¹³ R. Judah says:¹⁴ [It is written,] [And after he is cleansed] they shall reckon for him seven days,¹⁵ [which implies that he is precluded only] while counting his seven days ['after he is cleansed] but not while he is a confirmed leper'. R. Jose b. Judah says: '[I take it to mean he is precluded] while counting seven days [and] all the more so while he is a confirmed leper'. 'And' 'said R. Hiyya: 'I argued on this point before Rabbi'. Our Master! [said I], You taught that [King] Jotham could not have been born unto Uzziahu¹⁶ save during the time that he was a confirmed leper,¹⁷ [to which] Rabbi replied, 'and I said so too'.¹⁸

Wherein do they differ? — R. Jose b. Judah argues that as the All Merciful has plainly indicated¹⁹ that a convalescent leper ['shall dwell outside his tent']²⁰ while counting his seven days [of preliminary ritual purification] it is all the more [to be expected that he be apart from his wife] while being in the state of a confirmed leper; and the [other] Master [Rabbi] argues that what has been plainly indicated is [to be kept as] indicated and what has not been indicated is not [to be assumed as] indicated.²¹

[Reverting to Raba's explanation above], do you mean to say that [the postponement of an unfavourable pronouncement or of the time of inspection]²² is [solely] dependent on the discretion of the priest?²³ — Yea, indeed, as it is taught [in the following]: And on a day when [raw flesh] shall be seen in him [he shall be unclean; and the priest shall lood on the raw flesh and pronounce him unclean],²⁴ which means that there is a day when you do see it in him as well as a day when you do not see it in him. Hence said they [the Sages] that if a groom developed symptoms of leprosy they grant him [delay of inspection to the end of] the seven days of the [marriage] feast,²⁵ whether it be his person, or his house²⁶ or his garment²⁷ [that is affected]; and likewise [if the symptoms developed] during a festival they grant him [the patient] all²⁸ the seven days of the festival: thus R. Judah. Rabbi says: There is no need [to resort to this text] as it says: And the priest shall command that they empty the house²⁹ [before the priest goes in to see the plague that all that is in the house be not made unclean].³⁰ Now if [the inspection is] here delayed for his convenience, which is just an optional [matter],³¹ may it not all the more be deferred for his [due observance of a] religious obligation?³² What is the [actual] issue between them? — Said Abaye: Merely the different expository results obtained by each from his text. And Rab said, it is the delay of inspection in an optional [matter]³³ that is the issue between them, R. Judah [holding] that from the [other] text [cited above by Rabbi]³⁴ we cannot learn [this],³⁵ as it is an anomaly,³⁶

(2) And he must declare one or the other, according to his findings.

(3) To make no inspection so as to avoid the adverse decision being given in the festival week.

(4) The order of the statements is reversed but not the substance.

(5) Viz., that R. Jose's ruling is appropriate to a case under second observation and R. Meir's to that of a confirmed leper.

- (6) The second Baraitha which regards the view of R. Meir as appropriate to a confirmed leper and that of R. Jose to a case under second detention.
- (7) Thus: R. Meir, having in mind a confirmed leper, says: 'Inspect him now to mitigate his plight. If he is still a leper, he loses nothing. If he is found cured, he can at once get back to the town by beginning his first ritual cleansing; and although he has thereupon to part from his wife for seven days, he does not mind it as he prefers to get back to his friends in town'. And R. Jose, thinking of the case of a second detention, says: 'No inspection! For if you find him a leper you must confirm him as such and send him into complete isolation, right away from everybody (save from his wife)'.
- (8) The first Baraitha quoted.
- (9) Thus: R. Jose, thinking of a confirmed leper says: 'No inspection! For if you examine and find him clean" (cured), he must at once begin counting seven days of his ceremonial cleansing (referred to infra) and live apart from his wife. Leave him alone, therefore, just now; he prefers his wife's company to getting back to the town'. And R. Meir, thinking of a case of second observation, says: 'Examine him to ease his plight. If you find him "clean" (cured) he is happy with the favourable decision; if "unclean", (make no pronouncement just yet, or) even if you declare him a confirmed leper and he had to be strictly isolated, he will not be much worse off, as he still retains his wife's company'.
- (10) As implied in the discussion.

inasmuch as wood and stones elsewhere are not subject to [ceremonial] uncleanness whereas here [in a house affected by leprosy] they are [made] subject to uncleanness. And [on the other hand] Rabbi says [that this text] is also needed.¹ For had the All Merciful prescribed [only], 'And on a day when [raw flesh] shall be seen in him . . .' I might have said that postponement [of inspection or pronouncement on the findings] is granted only for the [due observance of a] religious obligation, but not for the sake of an optional [matter]; therefore did the All Merciful prescribe also, 'And the priest shall command'. Again, had the All Merciful prescribed only 'And the priest shall command that they empty the house . . .', I might have said that [postponement is granted] in the case of these effects [of the house] because the uncleanness is not that of a person, but where the uncleanness is that of a person I might say that the priest should inspect him, [without delay]: therefore it is necessary [to have both texts].

The Master said: 'There is a day when you do see it in him and there is a day when you do not see it in him. How is this implied? — Said Abaye, If it is just so,² the Divine Law should have written: 'On a day [when]'; what then is the [import of] 'And on a day [when]'? From this you infer that there is 'a day' when you see in him . . . and there is 'a day' when you do not see . . . in him. Raba said: The whole text³ is redundant altogether for if it be just so,⁴ Divine Law might have had 'And when [raw flesh] is seen [in him]'. What then is the import of the [amplification] 'And on a day'?⁵ From this infer that there is a day when you do see it in him and there is a day when you do not see it in him.⁶ And Abaye?⁷ He needs that [to teach that the inspection is held] by 'day', and not at night.⁸ And whence derives Raba this [point] 'by day and not at night'? — It is derived by him from, 'According to all the sight of the eyes of the priest'.⁹ And Abaye? — He needs that [text] to exclude a person blind in one eye [inspecting a leper]. But does not Raba also require this text for that same point? — Yea, [he does] so also. But then, whence [does he derive the point] 'by day but not at night'? — He derives it from, 'Like as a plague was seen by me in the house',¹⁰ [that is, seen] by me, not by [the aid of] my [candle] light. And Abaye?¹¹ — If he did learn from there, I might have said that these [restrictions] obtain [only] where the uncleanness is not personal [of one's body]; but where uncleanness is that of the body, [it may be inspected] also by one's [candle] light. [Therefore] the [original] text¹² conveys it to us [best].

MISHNAH. FURTHERMORE R. MEIR SAID, A MAN MAY GATHER¹³ HIS FATHER'S AND MOTHER'S BONES,¹⁴ SINCE THIS IS [AN OCCASION] 'OF JOY' FOR HIM;¹⁵ R. JOSE SAYS, IT IS AN [OCCASION] 'OF MOURNING'¹⁶ FOR HIM. A PERSON SHOULD NOT STIR UP WAILING¹⁷ FOR HIS DEAD, NOR HOLD A LAMENTATION¹⁸ FOR HIM THIRTY DAYS BEFORE A FEAST.

GEMARA. AS IT IS A JOY FOR HIM. [The following] was cited in contrast to this: 'One who gathers his father's or mother's bones holds himself in mourning for them all the day,¹⁹ but in the evening he does not hold himself in mourning for them [any longer].' And R. Hisda commented thereon, even if he had them by him tied up in a sheet.²⁰ Said Abaye, I should suggest [it means], 'because the joyousness of the feast prevails with him'.²¹

A PERSON SHOULD NOT STIR UP A WAILING FOR HIS DEAD: What is the meaning of 'stirring up a wailing for one's dead'? Rab said: In Palestine [it is customary that] whenever a professional lamenter comes round people say, 'Let all those who are sore at heart weep with him.

THIRTY DAYS BEFORE A FEAST. Why [just] thirty days? R. Kahana said that Rab Judah as reporting Rab told him that once it happened that a man saved money to 'go up for the feast'²² [to Jerusalem] when a [professional] lamenter came and stopped at his door and the wife took her husband's savings and gave them to him, and so he was prevented from going. Then it was that they [the Rabbis] said, One should not stir up a wailing for his dead, nor hold a [funerary] lament for him thirty days before a Feast; but Samuel gave another reason, namely,

- (1) I.e., although Rabbi holds that delay is afforded in the case of body leprosy even for the sake of an optional matter on the analogy of leprosy of houses etc., yet he requires the verse quoted by R. Judah.
- (2) To be read just ordinarily.
- (3) The word 'on a day'.
- (4) To be read just ordinarily.
- (5) Which suggests, 'yet another day'.
- (6) Cf. Yeb. 72b.
- (7) Why does he not explain thus the redundant phrase 'on a day'?
- (8) Cf. Shab. 132a.
- (9) Lev. XIII. 12, so lit. This implies that it must be held by day when it can be seen well.
- (10) Ibid. XIV, 35.
- (11) Why does he not derive it from this latter text.
- (12) 'And on a day etc.' that there is a time when you see etc.
- (13) During the festival (week).
- (14) It was an ancient custom to give first a temporary burial, and after the flesh had decayed to transfer the bones to a reserved tomb or mausoleum, where they were kept in cedar or marble coffins. Cf. Sem. XII.
- (15) To perform a filial duty while he is free to go and 'bring them home' to their assigned resting place. There is another possible meaning, see the discussion later.
- (16) And should not be undertaken during the festival week.
- (17) The meaning apparently is (as explained by Rab later) to join others in lamenting their dead and resuscitate ones own old grief on the occasion. A funeral in the town or village provided a good occasion for such a renewed lament, when professional funerary orators, 'lamenters' and female dirge-singers, were available.
- (18) I.e., The ceremonial lament for an individual at the time of his death and funeral.
- (19) Contrary to R. Meir who allows it during the festival week and furthermore says, 'it is a joy for him'.
- (20) Even if he had not gathered them himself that day, their presence is mournful enough and it is surprising that R. Meir allowed transference and even said 'it was a joy for him'.
- (21) Not that it is an occasion of joy, but that the joy of the festive season prevails in dispensing with formal mourning. Or, that the performance of his filial duty will afford him a sense of satisfaction throughout the remaining festival days (J.M.K.).
- (22) On one of the three pilgrim feasts. V. Deut. XVI, 16. Cf. Ex. XXIII, 14ff. ibid. XXXIV, 23. The festival atmosphere is introduced by the study and discussion of its laws thirty days before. Pes. 6b.

because the dead cannot be put out of mind and heart for [at least] thirty days. What practical difference is there between the two [explanations]? — There is [a difference] between them, where [say], the [professional] lamenter does it without a charge.¹

MISHNAH. KUKIN² AND BURIAL PLACES³ MAY NOT BE DUG IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]: BUT KUKIN MAY BE ADAPTED⁴ DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND A NIBREKETH⁵ MAY BE MADE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND A BOX, WITH THE DEAD [BODY] CLOSE BY IN THE COURT [YARD]: R. JUDAH FORBIDS, UNLESS THERE ARE SAWN BOARDS AT HAND.

GEMARA. What are KUKIN and what are BURIAL PLACES? — Said Rab Judah, kukin are [recesses made] by excavation and 'burial-places' [are structures made by] building. It is [actually] taught thus: 'These are kukin and these are burial places: Kukin, are [niches made] by excavation and 'burial places' are [structures made] by building'.

BUT KUKIN MAY BE ADAPTED. How are they adapted? — Rab Judah said: If [for instance] one is [too] long it may be shortened. A. Tanna taught: ‘He lengthens or shortens [the recess] within⁶ [the cave]’.

AND THEY [MAY] MAKE A NIBREKETH⁷ . . . What is NIBREKETH?⁸ — Rab Judah said: It is [the same as] bekia’.⁹ But then, is it not taught: ‘The nibreketh and the bekia’ [etc.]?¹⁰ — Abaye, or as some say R. Kahana, replied [They have the same relation as] a trough and a troughlet.¹¹

AND A RON WITH THE DEAD [BODY] CLOSE BY IN THE COURT [YARD]. We learn here what our Rabbis taught [elsewhere]: ‘They [may] do all that the dead requires, they cut his hair and wash a garment for him and make him a box of boards that had been sawn on the day before the Festival. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, they [may] even bring trees and he saws them [into] boards in his house, behind closed doors’.

MISHNAH. ONE MAY NOT TAKE A WIFE DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], WHETHER A VIRGIN OR A WIDOW, NOR EFFECT A LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,¹² AS IT IS A REJOICING FOR THE GROOM; BUT ONE MAY REMARRY HIS DIVORCED WIFE. AND A WOMAN MAY MAKE HER ADORNMENTS IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. R. JUDAH SAYS, SHE MAY NOT USE LIME,¹³ AS THAT IS A [TEMPORARY] DISFIGUREMENT TO HER. AN ORDINARY PERSON SEWS IN THE USUAL WAY; BUT A CRAFTSMAN SEWS A TUCK-STITCH.¹⁴ AND THE CORDS¹⁵ IN BED-FRAMES MAY BE INTERLACED. R. JOSE SAYS, THEY MAY [ONLY] BE TIGHTENED. GEMARA. [A REJOICING FOR THE GROOM]. And if it is a rejoicing for him, what is amiss? — Said Rab Judah, as reporting Samuel, and so said R. Eleazar, as reporting R. Oshaia — and some say, R. Eleazar, as reporting R. Hanina: — It is [barred], because one ‘rejoicing’ may not be merged in another ‘rejoicing’.¹⁶ Rabbah son of R. Huna said: It is [barred] because he abandons the ‘rejoicing’ of the festival and busies himself with that of his wife. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: That explanation of Rabbah son of R. Huna is the same as that given by Rab. For R. Daniel b. Kattina reporting Rab, said, Whence [is the ruling] that ONE MAY NOT TAKE A WIFE DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]? For it is said, And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast,¹⁷ [that is,] in ‘thy feast’, but not with thy [new] wife [instead]. ‘Ulla said, [It is] because of the exertion [it occasions]. R. Isaac b. Nappaha said, Because it may cause a decline in marriage and parenthood.¹⁸

An objection was raised: ‘All those who have been declared to be forbidden to take wives during the festival [week]

(3) A sepulchral tomb, mausoleum, built above the ground.

(4) I.e., one of the loculi already excavated may be adapted to receive a particular corpse during the festival week.

(5) נברכת seems to denote a kind of (stone) tank, or trough used by fullers in which they soaked and cleansed soiled woollens. Cf. B.B. 19a. (Sonc. ed. p. 96). From the context however, it is quite obvious as Ritba points out — that here it is not the fuller's trough or tank, but the dead man's sarcophagus, a stone, clay or wooden coffin (box) that is allowed, such as the labella-troughs used as coffins.

(18) Lit., '(the precept of) being fruitful and multiplying. If marriages were to be deferred till the festival season when people are free, there would be a likelihood that some might never take place at other times, apart from the congestion that such a practice might cause; and others might come to nothing because of the delay through innumerable other causes. Marriage and parenthood are a primary duty of man and should receive every consideration. Cf. Gen. I, 27-28; II, 18, 24; IX, 1; Isa. XLV, 18.

are free to marry on the day previous to the festival', which presents a difficulty to all those authorities. — There is no difficulty: As to one who states [that it is forbidden] because of the 'rejoicing', [it may be said that] the main rejoicing [of a marriage celebration] lasts mainly one day.¹ As to the one who states [that it is] because of the exertion [it occasions here too] the main exertion falls on one day.¹ As to the one who says [that it is] because it may lead to a decline in marriage and parenthood, [it may be said] that for the sake of one day² a person would not put himself off [indefinitely].³ Whence do we derive the principle that 'rejoicing should not be merged in rejoicing'? From the text: So Solomon made the feast at that time and all Israel with him, a great congregation from the entrance of Hamath unto the Brook of Egypt, before the Lord our God seven days and seven days, even fourteen days.⁴ Now, if it is the fact that one rejoicing may be merged in another rejoicing, he should have kept back the consecration ceremony [of the Temple] for the time of the feast and then have held it for seven days [concurrently], for both one and the other.⁵ Maybe that the rule is [only] that we should not [deliberately keep a marriage] for the time of a festival,⁶ but where it so turns out to be [opportune], we might as well hold it then? — [If so], Solomon should have left some small part [unfinished].⁷ But perhaps this could not be done because we brook no delay in the building of the Temple!⁸ — Then he could have left [say], an ell of the Ravens' Scare Palisade.⁹ [But, it may be asked,] The ell of the Ravens' Scare Palisade was an essential part of the Temple building!¹⁰ Rather [it is derived] from [the fact that] the text is redundant. Consider, it is written 'fourteen days', wherefore the need of 'seven days and seven days'? Infer from this that these [first] seven days and those [second] seven days were distinct from each other.

R. Parnak, reporting R. Johanan, said that that year Israel did not observe the Day of Atonement, whereat they were perturbed, saying, that perhaps the enemies of Israel¹¹ had thereby incurred their doom;¹² whereat a Bath Kol¹³ came forth and announced to them: 'All of you are destined for the life of the world to come.¹⁴ What was the basis of their exposition? — They argued a fortiori [thus]: If within the Tabernacle, the sanctity of which was not to be in perpetuity,¹⁵ yet an individual's sacrificial gifts¹⁶ were allowed [at the consecration] to be offered on the Sabbath day,¹⁷ which [ordinarily] is an offence punishable by stoning¹⁸ to death; all the more is it the case [that it is permitted] with the Temple, the sanctification of which is to be for ever, and with public¹⁹ offerings, and that on the Day of Atonement, whose desecration is an offence punished only by kareth! But then, why were they perturbed? — Because there [in the former case] the offerings were brought as dues to the Supreme Being,²⁰ whereas here, they were brought for their [own] common needs.²¹ Then here too, should they not have made their offerings without partaking [on that day] of any meat or drink?²² — There is no joyous celebration without eating and drinking.²³

Whence do we know that at [the consecration of] the Tabernacle the Sabbath restrictions were suspended? Shall I say because it is written, 'On the first day [So-and-so offered] . . . on the seventh²⁴ day [So-and-so offered], then [say I], maybe it means the seventh day [in the order] of the offerings?²⁵ Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: The text says, 'On the day of the eleventh, day'²⁶ just as a day is continuous, so were the eleven days continuous.²⁷ But perhaps, it means [continuous] on days appropriate?' — Then there is yet another such text, On the day of the twelfth day,²⁸ — just as a day was continuous, so had the whole twelve days been entirely continuous. But that too, maybe means only continuous on days appropriate? — If that be so, why do I require two [peculiarly worded] texts?

Again, whence do we know that during the consecration of the Temple the restrictions of the Day of Atonement were suspended? — Shall I say because it is written, 'even fourteen days', maybe it means days appropriate?²⁹ — That is learnt from the analogy between the repeated word 'day' here and in the other place.³⁰

'Whereat a Bath kol came forth and announced to them: "All of you are destined for the life of the world to come".' And whence know we that pardon was granted them? — For R. Tahlifa taught: [It is written], On the eighth day he sent the people away and they blessed the king and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart for all the goodness that the Lord had shown unto David His Servant and to Israel His people.³¹ 'To their tents', that is, they went [home] and found their wives in [a state] of purity³² [to receive their husbands]; joyful', that is, that they had enjoyed the radiance of the Shechinah;³³ 'and glad of heart', that is, each man's wife conceived and bore him a male child. 'For all the goodness' that is, a Bath kol had come forth and announced to them: 'All of you are destined for the life of the world to come ; That the Lord had shown unto David His servant and to Israel His people': It is perfectly clear [as to what is referred to] by 'all the goodness shown to Israel His people', as indicating that God had granted them pardon for their sin against [the non-observance of] the Day of Atonement; but what is the point of 'the goodness shown unto David His servant'? — Said Rab Judah, as reporting Rab; At the moment when Solomon wanted to bring the Ark into the Temple, the gates held fast together. Solomon recited [a prayer of] four and twenty [expressions of] intercession³⁴ but had no response. He began [anew] and said: lift up your heads, O ye gates³⁵ and again he had no response. As soon as [however] he said: [Now therefore arise, O Lord God . . . Thou and the Ark of Thy strength . . .] O Lord, turn not away the face of Thine anointed, remember the good deeds of David Thy servant,³⁶ he was answered forthwith.³⁷ At that moment the faces of David's foes turned [livid] like the [blackened] sides of a pot and all became aware that the Holy One, blessed be He, had pardoned David that misdeed.³⁸

R. Jonathan b.'Asma³⁹ and R. Judah son of proselyte parents were studying the section of 'Vows'⁴⁰ at the school of R. Simeon b. Yohai. They had taken leave from him in the evening, but in the morning they came and again took leave from him. Said he to them: But did you not take leave of me yesternight? Said they to him: Our Master, You taught us, a disciple who had taken leave from his Master and remained overnight in the city must needs take leave from him once again, for it is said: 'On the eighth day⁴¹ he [King Solomon] sent the people away and they blessed the King,⁴² and [then] it is written: 'And on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away'.⁴³ Hence we learn from here that a disciple who had taken leave from his Master and remained overnight in the city must needs take leave from him once again. Said he to his son, 'These are men of countenance,⁴⁴ go along with them, that they may bless you'. He went and found them comparing text with text: It is written: Balance the path of thy feet and let all thy ways be established;⁴⁵ and it is written: Lest thou shouldst balance the path of life?⁴⁶ It is not difficult [to explain]: the former text applies where an obligation can be discharged through another person:⁴⁷

the latter where the obligation cannot be discharged through another person.¹ Again they were sitting and enquiring [into the following]: It is written: She [Wisdom]² is more precious than rubies; and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her',³ [which implies] that heaven's demands [of you] are comparable to Her,⁴ Again it is written: And all things desirable are not to be compared unto Her,⁵ [which means] that even things that are of Heaven's desire are not comparable to Her?⁶ The former text applies where the duty can be discharged through others, the latter — where the Duty cannot be discharged through others. Then [turning to him] they said: 'What is your business here?'⁷ He replied: 'Father told me, "Go along with them that they may bless you".⁸ Said they to him: 'May it be [Heaven's] pleasure that you sow and mow not; that what you bring in go not out; that what goes out you bring not in; that your house be desolate and your inn be inhabited; that your board be disturbed and you behold not a new year'. 'When he came home to his father, he said to him: 'So far were they from blessing me that they [even] distressed me sorely⁷. His father asked him: 'What did they say to you?' — They said thus and thus. Said the father to him: 'Those are all blessings. That "you sow and mow not [means], that you beget children and they do not die. That "what you bring in go not out" [means], that you bring home daughters-in-law and your sons do not die, so that their wives need not leave again. "What goes out you bring not in" [means], that you give your daughters [in marriage] and their husbands do not die so that your daughters need not come back. "That your house be desolate and your inn be inhabited" [means], that this world is your inn and the other world⁷ is a home, as it is written, Their grave is their house for ever;⁸ reading not "their inward thought" [Kirbam] but "their grave (Kibram) is their house for ever, and their dwelling places be for generations."⁸ "That your board be disturbed" [that is]; by sons and daughters and "that you behold not a new year [means] that your wife do not die and you have not to take you a new wife'.⁹

R. Simeon b. Halafta took his leave from Rabbi.¹⁰ Said Rabbi to his son: 'Go along with him that he may bless you' — Said [the parting Rabbi] to him: 'May it be [Heaven's] pleasure that you be not put to shame nor feel ashamed yourself'.¹¹ When he came to his father, he asked him: 'What did he say to you?' — He replied: 'He made some commonplace remark¹² to me — Said [Rabbi] to his son: 'He blessed you with the blessing with which the Holy One [blessed be He] blessed Israel twice over; for it is written: And ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied and shall praise the name of the Lord your God . . . And My people shall never be ashamed. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and there is none else; and My people shall never be ashamed.¹³

AND A WOMAN MAY MAKE HER TOILET DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. Our Rabbis taught: These are [permitted in] woman's adornment. She [plaits her hair]¹⁴ treats her [eyes] with kohl; fixes a parting,¹⁵ [trims her hair and nails¹⁴ and] puts rouge on her face; some say she may use a razor for her privy parts. R. Hisda's wife made her toilet in front of her daughter-in-law.¹⁶ R. Hina

b. Hinena sat before R. Hisda;¹⁷ as he sat he said that the instances [mentioned in the Mishnah] applied only to a young woman, but not to an elderly woman. Said R. Hisda to him: God! even to your mother, even to your mother's mother, yea even if she be standing at the [brink of the]¹⁸ grave, as the saying goes: 'At sixty as at six; the sound of a timbrel makes her nimble'.¹⁹

R. JUDAH SAYS SHE SHOULD NOT USE LIME. It is taught: R. Judah says, a woman should not use lime, as it is a disfigurement to her. R. Judah concedes, however, that [if it is] a lime [preparation] that can be peeled off during the festival week she may apply it during the festival week, because, although it is irksome to her at the moment, It is a pleasure to her afterwards. But does R. Judah hold this view? Surely we learned [elsewhere]: 'R. Judah said, Debts may be recovered [from pagan creditors during their festivals] as it is irksome to them'. They said to him, Although it is irksome [for them] at the moment, they feel pleased afterwards?²⁰ — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, Do not cite the rules for the festival week, as they all derive from the principle 'that though [the task] is irksome for the moment, it gives satisfaction afterwards'.²¹ Rabina remarked that [the recovery of debts is allowed because] to a pagan the payment of a debt is always irksome.

Rab Judah [reporting Rab]²² said: The daughters of Israel, who attain puberty before the [normal] age,²³ if they are poor, put on a cosmetic preparation made of lime; richer girls put on fine-flower,²⁴ and the wealthy²⁵ girls put on oil of myrrh, as it is said: 'Six mouths with the oil of myrrh'.²⁶ What is this 'oil of myrrh'? — Said R. Huna b. Hiyya, [It is what is called] stacte.²⁷ R. Jeremiah b. Ammi²⁸ said, It is oil obtained from olives that have reached but a third of their [normal] growth. It is taught: 'R. Judah says omphacinon²⁹ is an oil made of [unripe] olives that have reached but a third of their [normal] growth' — And why do they put it on? Because it is a depilatory and softens the flesh [skin].³⁰ R. Bebai had a dark-skinned³¹ daughter; he applied to her that unguent one limb at a time and this brought her a husband with four hundred zuzim.³² There was a pagan neighbour of his who had a daughter, and he applied it all over her at once [and] she died; [whereupon] he said, Bebai killed my daughter. Said R. Nahman: 'R. Bebai drinks beer, therefore his daughters needed unguents; [but as] we do not drink beer, our daughters need no unguents'.³³

(1) If there be no trusty person at hand or there be but one call, do not delay action to wait for some more important task; be it great or small, do it promptly, as delay may rob you of your chance of doing it, or you may be too late to do anything at all.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 10a

AN ORDINARY PERSON SEWS IN THE USUAL WAY. How do we define ‘an ordinary person’? — At the school of R. Jannai they said, [It means] anyone who cannot draw a needful during their festivals, as the means afforded them by the Jew may go to enhance the heathen celebrations. The settlement of a debt leaves the debtor with an easy mind. of stitches in one sweep. R. Jose b. Hainna said, [It means] anyone who cannot sew an even seam on the hem of his tunic.

BUT A CRAFTSMAN MAY SEW A TUCK-STITCH. What is meant by sewing a ‘tuck-stitch’? — R. Johanan said, [It means] ‘overstepping’.¹ Rabbah b. Samuel said, [It means that the stitches resemble] dogs’ teeth.²

AND THE CORDS MAY BE INTERLACED IN BED-FRAMES. [R. JOSE SAYS THEY MAY ONLY BE TIGHTENED]. What is meant by ‘interlacing’ and what by ‘tightening’? When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said that R. Hiyya b. Abba and R. Assi had different views on this, both reporting in the name of Hezekiah and R. Johanan. One said that ‘interlacing’ meant [interlacing] both the warp and the woof, and that ‘tightening’ meant putting in the warp without the woof;³ while the other said that ‘interlacing’ meant putting in the warp without the woof, and ‘tightening’ meant that he may tighten a girth cord if it has become slack.

But this cannot be [correct], for R. Tahlifa⁴ b. Saul taught: ‘And all agreed that no cords may be let in afresh’. Now this is perfectly in accord with the one who says that the ‘interlacing’ [permitted in the Mishnah] means interlacing both the warp and the woof, and that the ‘tightening’ [that R. Jose permitted] means putting in the warp without the woof; hence R. Tahlifa could say: ‘And all agreed that no cords may be let in afresh’ — But, according to one who says that ‘interlacing’ means putting in the warp without the woof and that ‘tightening’ means that he may tighten a cord if it has become slack, [how do you explain R. Tahlifa b. Saul's statement? For,] if you say that interlacing the warp and the woof is forbidden, need one [at all state] that cords are not to be let in afresh? — This is a difficulty. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to R. Hiyya b. Abin: Is there anybody who applies the term ‘Interlacing’ to inserting a warp without the woof? For surely we learned:⁵ R. Meir says: A bed [frame] is not [subject to ritual defilement] until three warp spaces in it have been crossed? The fact is that when Rabin came [from Palestine] he said that all agree that ‘interlacing’ means interlacing the warp and woof; but where the difference arose was on the interpretation of ‘tightening’; one Master held that the ‘tightening’ [that was permitted] was inserting the warp without the woof, and the other Master held [that what was allowed was] the tightening of a cord which has become slack. An objection was raised: Bed-frames may be interlaced [during the festival week] and needless to say that they may be tightened: these are the words of R. Meir. R. Jose says: They may be tightened, but not interlaced and 'Some say'⁶ that tightening may not be done at all — Now here [the several views are] perfectly [understandable] according to the one who says that by 'tightening' is meant 'inserting the warp without the woof', as then, 'Some' come and express their dissent [on that kind of mending]. But according to the one who says that by the 'tightening' [which is allowed] is meant that when a cord has become slack one may make it taut, then according to the view of 'Some' not even this [simple adjustment] is allowed! — Yes, indeed; because, since it is possible [temporarily] to fill [the sag] with bedclothes, we should not go to [further] exertion [during the festival week].

MISHNAH. AN OVEN STOVE⁷ OR MILL MAY BE SET UP [IN POSITION] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; R. JUDAH SAYS, A PAIR OF MILLSTONES IS NOT TO BE COMPRESSED FOR THE FIRST TIME [IN THE FESTIVAL WEEK].

GEMARA. What is meant by 'compressing'? — Rab Judah said that [it means] chiselling⁸ the millstones; R. Jehiel said, It means [fixing] an eye-hole.⁹ An objection was raised: An oven or stove [or mill] may be set up in the festival [week], provided that the work is not entirely completed; these are the words of R. Eliezer; but the Sages say, It may even be finished off. R. Judah, speaking in his¹⁰ name says: A new one may be set up and an old [mill] compressed, and 'Some'¹¹ say compressing may not be done at all. Now this accords well with the one who says that 'compressing' means scoring the mill [stones], hence this process is applicable in the case of an old mill; but according to the one who says that it means [fixing] an eye-hole, what fixing of an eye-hole does an old mill need?¹² — I may say, for instance, that it needs widening a little more. R. Huna [once] hearing someone scraping his millstones during the festival week said: 'Who is that? May he himself suffer desecration that desecrates the festival week!' He [evidently] held the view of 'Some say' [cited above]. R. Hama expounded:¹³ 'One [may] scrape millstones during the festival [week]'. In the name of our Master¹⁴ they said: One [may] trim the hoofs of the horse he rides or the ass he rides during the festival week; but not those of the ass turning the mill.¹ Rab Judah² declared it permissible to trim the hoofs of the ass turning the mill or to set up the mill or build a mill, or to construct a base for the mill or build a horse stable. Rab³ declared it permissible to curry horses and to construct a bed⁴ or make a mattress-box.⁵ Raba allowed bleeding of cattle during the festival week. Said Abaye to him: There is a Tanna who supports you: Cattle [may] be bled and no curative means are [to be] withheld from an animal during the festival week'. Raba allowed fulled clothes⁶ to be rubbed.⁷ On what ground? It is an ordinary unskilled process. Said R. Isaac b. Ammi, as citing R. Hisda: To pleat sleeve-ends⁸ is forbidden; on what ground? Because that is a craftsman's process.

Raba said: [With regard to] a man who levels up his ground, if it is to even [the slope of] the threshing floor⁹ it is allowed; if merely to level the soil, it is forbidden. How can one tell? If he takes up heaped [soft] soil to heap on [soft] soil, or stiff soil to lay on stiff soil, it shows that [it is done] for [improving] the threshing floor; but if he takes up heaped [soft] soil and casts it on the stiff soil, this shows that it is for [improving] the ground.¹⁰

Raba said: With regard to one who clears his field [of chips of wood], if it is for gathering [fire] wood, it is allowed; if for clearing the ground, it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he picks up the larger pieces and leaves the smaller, this shows that it is to gather [fire] wood; but if he picks up both large and small, this shows that it is to clear the field. Raba said also: With regard to one who opens [sluices] to let water run off into his field, if it be to get the fish,¹¹ it is permitted; if it is to water the soil, it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he opens two flood-gates one above¹² and another below,¹³ this shows that it is for getting the fish; but if only one gate, it is [obviously] for watering the soil. Raba further said: With regard to one who trims his palm,¹⁴ if it is for the [benefit of his] beasts it is allowed; but if for the [benefit of the] palm it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he trims one side only, this shows that it is for the beasts; if both one side and the other, it is for the [benefit of the] palm, and it is forbidden. And furthermore said Raba: Those [unripe] tauhla¹⁵ dates one may pick, but to press them is not permitted. R. Papa remarked that as [if these are left] the worms get at them, they are on the same footing as a business deal¹⁶ [the postponement of which] would entail loss,¹⁷ and therefore may be [pressed during the festival week]. Raba also said: Any business transaction whatsoever is forbidden. R. Jose b. Abin said: And if there be a risk of loss, it is permitted. Rabina had some deal on hand which would have fetched six thousand zuzim;¹⁸ he deferred the sale till after the festival and sold at twelve thousand. Rabina had advanced some money to the people living at Akra di-Shanutha.¹⁹ He came to consult R. Ashi and said: 'What about going over to them just now [during the festival week]?' — Said R. Ashi to him: 'As they had ready cash just then which they might not have later, it is [practically] like a deal [the postponement of which] would entail loss, and [accordingly] is allowed'. It is also similarly taught with reference to heathens: One may go to a heathen fair and buy cattle, male and female slaves, houses, fields and vineyards, and draw up contracts and have them registered at their Registry Offices,¹ because it is [practically] like rescuing something of which they [the heathens] had got possession. Rab permitted R. Hiyya b. Ashi to mend basket-traps² during the festival week. What is the reason? — It is ordinary [unskilled] work; but [to mend] mesh-nets is forbidden. What is the reason? It is work of craftsmanship. Rab Judah allowed Ammi the ovenmaker to put up ovens and Rabbah b. Ashbi he allowed to plait sieves. But this cannot be [correct], as Rabbah b. Samuel learned: And all [authorities] are agreed that an oven may not be set up for the first time [during the festival week]! — There is no difficulty [here]: The former ruling obtains during the 'warm season'³ while the latter ruling obtains in the 'rainy season'.⁴

MISHNAH. A PARAPET MAY BE PUT ROUND A ROOF OR [A RAILING ROUND] A GALLERY ROUGHLY BUT NOT IN FINISHED STYLE.⁵ PLASTER MAY BE SMEARED ON THE CREVICES⁶ AND FLATTENED DOWN WITH A ROLLER,⁷ WITH HAND OR FOOT, BUT NOT WITH RAMMING TOOLS.⁸ PIVOTS AND SOCKETS,⁹ LINTELS, LATCHES,¹⁰ BOLT-LOCKS AND DOOR-HANDLES¹⁰ THAT HAVE GIVEN WAY MAY BE REPAIRED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], ONLY THEY MUST NOT BE LEFT PURPOSELY FOR THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; AND ALL PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE.

GEMARA. What, for instance, is meant by putting up a parapet or railing 'roughly'? — R. Joseph explained: [Something like a fence of] palm-leaves and daphne-stakes.¹¹ A Tanna taught: One may pile up rubble without daubing with clay. PLASTER MAY BE SMEARED ON THE CREVICES AND FLATTENED DOWN WITH A ROLLER, WITH HAND OR FOOT, BUT NOT WITH RAMMING TOOLS. Now, if you say it is allowed to flatten down with a roller, need one [be told] 'with hand or foot'? — What it means is: One may smear [plaster on] the crevices and flatten down as with a roller, by hand or foot, but not with ramming-tools.

PIVOTS AND SOCKETS, LINTELS, LATCHES, BOLT-LOCKS AND DOOR-HANDLES THAT HAVE GIVEN WAY MAY BE REPAIRED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. Some contrasted this with [the following]: 'Up to his days,¹² the hammer was beating in Jerusalem during the festival [week] . . .', [that is], 'up to his days', but not thereafter!¹³ — [Said R. Huna]¹⁴ that is not difficult [to explain]; the reference there is to the smith's [hammer],¹⁵ while here [the tool allowed] is the joiner's [mallet].¹⁶ R. Hisda demurred to this [explanation] as according to this some will say that a loud din is forbidden, [but] a faint sound is allowed. No, said R. Hisda, it is not difficult [to explain]: One [the tool allowed here] is the bill-hook¹⁷ and the other [which is not allowed] is an adze.¹⁸ R. Papa said that in one statement we have the [older view held] before the restriction [had been introduced] and in the other the [later] view held after the restriction [was introduced]. R. Ashi said that one [Mishnah] expresses R. Judah's view¹⁹ and the other R. Jose's; for R. Isaac b. Abdimi said: 'Who may be the [anonymous] Tanna that [holds] that work must be done in a different way from the ordinary²⁰ [in working] during the festival [week] even where its [postponement would entail] loss? Not R. Jose'.²¹ Rabina said, Whose ruling do we follow nowadays when we raise the pivot-cups²² of the doors during the festival week? — R. Jose's. AND ALL PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE. On Baditha Luba,²³ everybody engaged in fishing and they brought in fish,²⁴ and Raba allowed to put them in salt. Said Abaye to him: But [why]? We learned: PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE? — Said he [Raba] to him, Since they brought them home with the intention of eating them and if they leave them [uneaten] they will be spoilt, it is similar to [a case of] business that might be lost and is therefore permitted.²⁵ And some say that Raba [actually] allowed them to him, But surely we learned: PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE go fishing,²⁶ fetch the fish home and put them in salt. Said Abaye to IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE! — Said he [Raba] to him, These may be eaten [also] by means of ‘pressing’, as was the case with Samuel when they applied pressure [to the fish in salt] sixty times²⁷ and he ate [thereof]. When Raba [himself] once happened to be at the house of the Exilarch,²⁸ they prepared for him [a dish of fish] pressed sixty times and he ate it. Rab was [on a festival week] once at Bar-Shappir²⁹ [Perissabora?] where they put before him some kind of fish [which was] a third boiled, a third salted and a third broiled. Rab said, Adda the fisherman told me that a fish is at its best when it is about to turn putrid. Rab also said this, Adda the fisherman told me: Broil the fish with his brother [salt], plunge it into its father [water], eat it with its son [sauce] and drink after it its father [water]. This too Rab said: Adda the fisherman told me: [After eating] fish, cress and milk occupy your body, don't occupy your couch.³⁰ And furthermore said Rab, Adda the fisherman told the: [After] fish, cress and milk drink [rather] water, not mead;³¹ mead and not wine. CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. IF ONE HAD [ALREADY] TURNED HIS OLIVES¹ WHEN MOURNING² OR SOME HINDRANCE BEFELL HIM, OR WORKMEN DISAPPOINTED HIM, HE MAY [DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK] PUT ON THE BEAM FOR THE FIRST TIME AND LEAVE IT [THUS] UNTIL AFTER THE FESTIVAL; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. R. JOSE SAYS, HE MAY DRAW OFF [THE OIL] AND COMPLETE THE PROCESS³ AND BUNG⁴ [THE JARS] IN HIS USUAL WAY [DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK].

GEMARA. The Mishnah begins with mourning and finally [only] deals with the festival [week]⁵ — Said R. Shisha⁶ son of Idi: This implies that things one is permitted [to do] during the festival [week] are forbidden him during [the week of] his mourning.⁷ R. Ashi says, [Not so], this wording is cast in the form of, 'No need to say' . . .,⁸ no need to say [that he may put on the beam for the first time] during [the week of] his mourning when [the restriction on work] is but rabbinical, but even during the festival [week], when [work] is restricted on Scriptural grounds, the Rabbis still permit it where loss is involved.

It was taught⁹ in the sense of R. Shisha son of Idi: These are the things they may do for the mourner during his [week of] mourning: If his olives had been turned they may put on for him [the beam for the first time], or if his wine [cask] is to be bunged, or his flax is to be lifted from the retting, or his wool is to be lifted from the dye-bath; and they may besprinkle his field¹⁰ for him when his turn for water-rights arrives. R. Judah says they may even sow for him the ploughed field or the field awaiting a flax-crop. Said they [the Rabbis] to him: [Not so], if the field is not sowed in the early season it could be sowed in the latter season and if it cannot be sowed with flax let it be sowed with some other kind [of crop].¹¹ Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, If his olives had been turned and there is no skilled worker save himself, or his cask is [ready] for bunging and there is no skilled worker save himself, or his flax is [ready] for lifting from the retting or his wool for lifting from the dye-bath and there is no skilled worker save himself, such a one may perform [his task] behind closed doors. Furthermore, said Rabban Gamaliel, if he is a skilled worker engaged in the service of the public, or a hairdresser or a bath-attendant in the service of the public, and the Festival is close at hand and there is no skilled worker save him, such a one may do the work. Farmkeepers,¹² tenant-farmers¹³ and contractors of labour may have others doing work for them.¹⁴ Ass-drivers, camel-drivers and bargemen may not work;¹⁵ but if they were [already] engaged on the job or were [just then] in the hire of others, they [themselves] may do their work.¹⁴ A daily worker¹⁶ may not work, even in another town.¹⁷ One who has others' work in hand,¹⁸ even if it is a contract job,¹⁹ he may not do it. [You say,] 'Even if it is a contract job', [which implies] and all the less so if it is not a contract job. On the contrary, a contract job is like his own [work]!²⁰ Rather, whether it is a contract job or not a contract job he may not do it. If his work²¹ was placed in the hand of others, they may not do it in his own house, but in another house they may do it.

Marion the son of Rabin and Mar the son of R. Aha the son of Raba had a yoke of oxen²² between them, when a misfortune²³ befell Mar the son of R. Aha the son of Raba; he broke up the team [and did not send his animal to work]. Said R. Ashi, A great man like Mar the son of R. Aha acting in such a manner! Granted that he minds not his own loss [of earning], is he not concerned about the loss [caused] to others? Surely it is taught: 'But if they were [already] engaged [on the job] or were [just then] in the hire of others, these may do their work'?²⁴ — He [Mar] however held the view that [the case of] a prominent man is different.²⁵

- (18) I.e., he does the work at home.
- (19) I.e., he is paid by piece and not by day.
- (20) And therefore should be forbidden.

- (22) Gemella. A pair of oxen owned in partnership which they let on hire to farmers.
- (23) A bereavement.
- (24) In the Baraitha cited above, with a slight variation in the order to suit the case.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 12a

Samuel said: '[If non-Jews] take work on contract they may not [work for a Jew]¹ within the [limits of the Sabbath] boundary;² but outside the boundary they may'. Said R. Papa, Even outside the boundary we do not say [they may] save where there is no town in the Vicinity; but where there is a town near by, it is forbidden. Said R. Mesharshaya: And even if there be not a town close by we [still] do not say [they may carry on the work] save on Sabbaths and festivals when there are not frequent [Jewish] passers-by, but during the festival week when people are often passing to and from the place it is forbidden. Mar Zutra son of R. Nahman had a mansion erected for himself by [non Jewish] contractor [builders] outside the boundary.³ R. Safra and R. Huna b. Hinena happened to come thither and did not enter his house; and some report that he [R. Nahman] himself did not enter the building. But did not Samuel say that contractors may not carry on their work within the boundary, but outside the boundary they may? — [The case of] a prominent man is different. Some say [his servant]⁴ had assisted then with straw. R. Hama allowed the Exilarch's table-stewards to do their work⁵ during the festival week; he said that as they received no remuneration they only intend to benefit him⁶ which concerns us nought.

Our Rabbis taught: Contracts may be made during the festival [week for work] to be executed after the festival [week]; but [to do it] during the festival [week] is forbidden. The general principle on this point is that whatever one may do himself he may tell a non-Jew to do; and what he himself may not do, he may not tell a non-Jew to do. Another [Baraitha] taught: Contracts may be made during the festival [week] to be executed after the festival [week], only that one should not measure, weigh or count [quantities] after the manner in which this is done on an ordinary day.

Our Rabbis taught: One may not bring a sire to mate during the festival week. Similarly, a 'first-born, sire should not⁷ be [used to] mate,⁸ nor a votive beast that has become disqualified.⁹ Another [Baraitha] taught: They may not bring a sire to mate during the festival week. R. Judah says, Where an ass is hankering [for the male] they may bring her the jackass to mate lest she become chilled. All other beasts are [merely] brought into the stalls.¹⁰

Our Rabbis taught: Sheep may not be turned out to graze in a hurdled enclosure¹¹ on Sabbaths, festivals, or in the festival week, but if they come [and do it] of their own accord,¹² it is allowed; and they may not be assisted [to it]. Nor may a watchman be assigned [to the shepherds] to move the sheep about.¹³ If [the herdsman was] engaged by the week, month, year or septennate, assistance may be given to these¹⁴ and a watch may be assigned to them to move the sheep about. Rabbi¹⁵ says, [This may be done] on the Sabbath by way of favour, on the festival for meals and during the festival [week] for payment. R. Joseph stated that the law is according to Rabbi.

MISHNAH. LIKEWISE IF ONE HAD HIS WINE [ALREADY] RUN INTO THE CISTERN THEN MOURNING BEFELL HIM, OR [SOME OTHER] HINDRANCE, OR WORKMEN DISAPPOINTED HIM, HE MAY DRAW OFF [THE WINE], COMPLETE THE PROCESS AND BUNG [THE CASKS] IN HIS USUAL WAY: THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JOSE; R. JUDAH SAYS, HE [MERELY] COVERS [THE CISTERN] WITH SHINGLES TO PREVENT IT TURNING SOUR.

GEMARA. [LIKEWISE IF ONE HAD etc.] And this [wine clause] is necessary. Because, if [the Tanna] had told us the first [clause alone], we might have argued that only in that case did R. Jose say [he may complete the process] as the loss on oil is considerable, whereas in the case of wine, where the loss is not much, one might presume that he concurred with the [stricter] view of R. Judah. And if [the Tanna] had told us the latter [clause alone], we might have argued that only in this case [of wine] did R. Judah say [he may not do more], whereas in that [former case of oil], one might presume that he concurred with the more [lenient] view of R. Jose: [therefore] it was necessary [to enunciate both clauses]. Said R. Isaac b. Abba,¹⁶ Who is the Tanna who requires that work [if done] should be done with a difference during the festival [week] where loss is threatened? It is not R. Jose.¹⁷ R. Joseph said, The halachah is according to R. Jose.

Some [scholars] asked of R. Nahman b. Isaac: Is it permitted to coat a mead-cask [with resin]¹⁸ in the festival week? — Said he to them: Sinai¹⁹ stated that the halachah is according to R. Jose. Supposing that R. Jose said [one may] in the case of wine, [does it follow] that he said [that one may] also in the case of mead? — [Indeed,] for what is the reason [that he allows] in the case of wine? [It is] because the loss on it is considerable; it is also considerable in the case of mead, as Abaye said, Mater²⁰ told me: 'Better a coated cask of Six se'ahs than an uncoated cask of eight se'ahs'.²¹

R. Hama b. Guria citing Rab said: The halachoth²² appertaining to the festival [week] are like the halachoth regulating the dealings with Kuthites.²³ What is the legal import [of this dictum]? — Said R. Daniel son of R. Ketina, It is to say that they are 'sterile'²⁴ [regulations] and communicate nought²⁵ to each other, as [for instance] Samuel said that they [may] coat a jug with pitch but may not coat a cask; while R. Dimi of Nehardea said that they [may] coat a cask with pitch but they may not coat a jug; one master being solicitous to avert loss,²⁶ the other master being solicitous to avoid exertion²⁷ [during the festival week]. Said Abaye, We have it as tradition²⁸ that the halachoth appertaining to the festival [week] are like the halachoth appertaining to the Sabbath:

- (1) People might say that they were given the work on the Sabbath.
- (2) On a Sabbath or Festival (Rash). V. however, Asheri.
- (3) On a Sabbath or a Festival.

- (17) Since R. Jose holds that he can complete the process in the usual way.
- (18) Or pitch, to make it air-tight. V. A.Z. 33a (Sonc. ed. p. 162). Han. takes it as sealing the stopper, by smearing it over with clay or pitch to prevent the wine or mead becoming vapid. The mead made from the syrup of dates was a Babylonian beverage, cf. Pes. 107a and 113b.
- (19) A complimentary appellation of R. Joseph as an eminent authority on the body of Baraita-comments (on the Mishnah), in contrast to Rabbah b. Ber. 64a and Hor. 14a, (Sonc. ed. p. 105).
- (20) Abaye was a posthumous child and his mother died in childbirth. He was brought up by a foster mother whose instructive sayings he frequently quotes as here. V. Kid. 31b.
- (21) A se'ah is about two and a third gallons.
- (22) Traditional rules of practice.
- (23) The Samaritans who, when friendly, were treated as observant Jews, and when hostile and making common cause with the heathens in persecuting Jews and jeering at their religious practices, were treated as heathens. The attitude towards them, therefore, varied from time to time, according to circumstances.
- (24) Some texts have עקודות 'tethered', i.e., inapplicable as 'rules in practice' owing to their frequent variability.
- (25) Serving no purpose as definite instances from which to argue any definite principle.
- (26) There is more loss involved in neglecting a cask than a jug, which is much smaller.
- (27) The exertion entailed in coating a cask is greater than with a jug.
- (28) Abaye often uses that expression.

R. Huna had his harvest reaped during the festival [week], whereupon Rabbah put an objection to R. Huna [from the following]: They may mill flour during the festival [week] for the requirements of the festival; what is not required for the festival is forbidden. A thing that is perishable in the festival [week] is permitted to be done; a thing that is not perishable in the festival [week] is forbidden. When does this [rule] obtain?² In the case of something that is [already] severed from the soil, but where [the crop is still] attached to the soil, even if all of it perish it is forbidden; but if he have not food to eat, he may reap, gather into sheaves, thresh, winnow, clean and mill,³ only that he shall not thresh with cows?⁴ — He replied: That [Baraitha] is but an individual⁵ opinion, and is not generally accepted by us, as it has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel stated a general rule in the name of R. Jose, Whatever is [already] severed from the soil, even though only part of it might perish, yet may it be worked; while that which is [still] attached to the soil, even though it might all perish, is forbidden. But if [as you say] that [anonymous] Baraitha be R. Jose's opinion, then he should also be allowed to thresh with cows!⁶ For Surely R. Isaac b. Abba said: 'Who is the Tanna that demands some variation In the working during the festival [week] where loss is involved? It is not R. Jose!⁷ — [Said R. Huna],⁸ He [R. Jose] might reply:⁹ 'Yea indeed, so; yet as one does not usually¹⁰ thresh with cows, threshing without them [during the festival week] would be no variation now.¹¹

Our Rabbis taught: Flour may be ground during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival; but if not for the requirements of the festival [week], it is forbidden. If, however, one ground¹² and had some flour over, he is allowed to use it.¹³ Trees may be cut down during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival, but if it is not for the needs of the festival it is forbidden; if one, however, had cut down¹² and had some over, it is permitted.¹³ [The ingredients] for brewing mead¹⁴ may be put in during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival; but if it is not needed for the festival it is forbidden; and if one put in [the ingredients]¹² and had some [brew] left over, it is permitted,¹³ provided only that there is no guile.¹⁵ A contradiction was raised [from the following]: 'They may put in [ingredients for brewing] mead during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival, but what is not for the needs of the festival is forbidden, be it a brew of dates or a brew of barley, and even though one have some old [brew] he may act with guile and drink of the new?'¹⁶ — There is a difference among Tannaim as was taught: There should be no resort to guile in such matters; R. Jose son of R. Judah says, One may act with guile [sometimes].¹⁷

Rab [once] had his harvest gathered for him in the festival week. Samuel heard [of it] and was annoyed. Might one suggest that Samuel concurred with the view of the individual authority?¹⁸ — No, it was a crop of wheat which [if left a while] would not have deteriorated. What is the reason that Rab acted thus? — He had not then [enough] to eat; and as for Samuel, he had not been fully informed [of the circumstances]. Or, [maybe he thought that the case of] a prominent person is different.

R. Judah the Prince¹⁹ [once] went out [on the Sabbath] wearing an amethyst²⁰ signet and [once] drank water which an Aramean [non-Jewish] cook²¹ had heated. R. Ammi hearing of it was annoyed. Said R. Joseph: What is the reason he was annoyed? Was it on account of the amethyst signet? Why, it is taught: Chains, earrings and rings are like all articles of dress that may be worn in the courtyard!²² [Again], if because he drank water which an Aramean had made hot? Why, Samuel b. Isaac, citing Rab, stated that whatever can be eaten raw is not [debarred] as in the category of heathen-cooked food! — [The case of] a prominent person is different.²³

R. Hananel, citing Rab, said that one may lop off branches from a palm tree during the festival [week] even though he needs only the chips.²⁴ Abaye denounced²⁵ this [dictum] vehemently. R. Ashi had a wood in Shelania. He went to cut it down during the festival week. Said R. Shela of Shelania to R. Ashi, What is your ground [for acting thus]? Is it because of what R. Hananel, citing Rab, said, that one may lop branches from a palm during the festival [week] even though he needs only three chips?²⁴ But surely Abaye denounced it vehemently! — Said he [R. Ashi] to him: 'I heard it not', as much as to Say, 'I do not concur [with Abaye's view]'. The hatchet then slipped threatening to cut off his leg. He then abandoned his task and came again.²⁶

Rab Judah permitted pulling up flax, picking hops and pulling up sesame crops. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: It is quite correct to do this in the case of flax, as if may be used for covering [fruits]; in the case of hops, as they may be used for [brewing] beer; but sesame — to what [immediate] use can it be put? — [It may be picked] on account of the seeds²⁷ it contains. R. Jannai had an orchard²⁸ that had become ripe for picking during the festival week [and] he picked it. The year [after] all the people kept their orchards waiting for the festival week. R. Jannai [thereupon] renounced his [proprietary rights in the] orchard that year.²⁹

MISHNAH. A MAN MAY BRING HIS FRUITS INDOORS FOR FEAR OF THIEVES AND PULL HIS FLAX OUT OF RETTING TO PREVENT IT SPOILING, PROVIDED HE DOES NOT PURPOSELY HOLD THE WORK OVER TILL THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; AND ALL THOSE WHO HAVE DELIBERATELY HAD THEIR WORK HELD OVER FOR THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] SHALL HAVE IT DESTROYED.³⁰

GEMARA. BRING INDOORS. A Tanna taught: Provided only that he bring them into his house privily. R. Joseph had some beams of timber which he brought in during daylight. Said Abaye, But it is taught: ‘Provided only that he bring them into his house privily’! — He replied, The [requisite] privacy for these is [attained best] during daylight, since at night more men would be needed and torchbearers too would be required, making much ado.³¹

AND PULLS HIS FLAX OUT OF RETTING. R. Jeremiah asked of R. Zera: If a man keeps work over for the festival [week] and dies, should his children be penalized after him? Should you cite³² [the case of],

(1) Cf. rules of Ulpian: ‘An in imperfect law is one which forbids something to be done, and yet if it be done, neither rescinds it nor imposes a penalty on him who has acted contrary to the Law’. I, 1.

(2) That which is perishable may be attended to in the festival week.

(3) I.e., one may do anything and everything that is necessary.

(4) I.e., he must introduce some variation. This Baraita forbidding to reap except in the case where he has no food to eat, refutes R. Huna who, it is assumed, was not short of ready food.

(5) R. Jose's view which is given in the citation that follows and which is, however, not generally accepted.

(6) Which, however, is distinctly debarred in the anonymous Baraita, above.

(7) As may be seen from his attitude in the first and second Mishnah (11b and 12a) in contrast to that of R. Judah in regard to both oil and wine. Whereas, In the anonymous Baraita ascribed to him he distinctly stipulates not to thresh with cows, insisting on a variation.

(8) To explain that there is really no contradiction in the discrepancy.

(9) SBH reads better: ‘Said he, R. Huna, to him (to Raba)’.

(10) Lit., ‘every day’.

(11) On the contrary to use cows would be in this case an undesirable offensive display of his work (Rashi).

(12) During the festival week for the needs of the festival.

(13) After the festival.

(14) Or beer.

(15) To prepare which under the guise of forgetfulness or mistake for the needs of the festival with the intention of having some left over after the festival.

(16) Indicating thereby that he made the brew for the festival week.

Or the phrase may possibly be a talisman ring having a setting of a Medusa head, a popular charm against spells and against the power of enemies; and, although this could not have been the case in our instance, it is not unlikely in the instance cited in 'Er. 69a, where the wearer on sighting R. Judah the Prince, quickly covered it; he is considered there as a semi-heathen or renegade.

(21) Or tavern keeper.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 13a

'One who had [craftily] clipped the ear of his first-born beast', and whose son is penalized after him,¹ [I can reply that] that is because that is [an offence against] a Scriptural prohibition. Or should you cite [the case of], 'One who sold his [non-Jewish] slave to a non-Jew', and whose son was penalized after him, [I can say that] that is because he debarred him daily from the [performance of] religious duties.² Here, what do we say? That the Rabbis' intention was to penalize the man personally and he is no more, or, maybe that it was only to impose a pecuniary penalty [on his estate] and that is to be had? — R. Zera replied, You learned it [in the Mishnah]: 'A field that has been cleared of thorns³ during the seventh year may be sowed in the post-sabbatical year; if it had been well improved⁴ or manured⁵ by hurdling cattle⁶ on it, it may not be sowed in the post-sabbatical year',⁷ and [on this Point] R. Jose b. Hanina said: 'We have it on tradition that if one had well improved his field and died, his son may Sow it'. This shows that our Rabbis did [intend to] penalize him,⁸ but his son the Rabbis did not [intend to] penalize; here too, then, it is the man himself that they would penalize, but his son the Rabbis would not have penalized. Said Abaye, We have it on tradition that if a man has defiled his fellow's clean [produce]⁹ and dies they do not penalize his son after him [to pay for the damage caused]. What is the reason? 'Imperceptible damage¹⁰ is not in the category of [legal] damage';¹¹ the man himself the Rabbis would have penalized, but his son the Rabbis would not have penalized.

MISHNAH. HOUSES, [STONES],¹² SLAVES AND CATTLE MAY NOT BE BROUGHT SAVE FOR THE NEEDS OF THE FESTIVAL, OR THE NEED OF A VENDOR WHO HAS NOT [ENOUGH] TO EAT. GEMARA. Raba asked of R. Nahman: What about [affording] 'earning-jobs'¹³ in aid of one who has not [enough] to eat? — He replied: We learned: OR THE NEED OF A VENDOR WHO HAS NOT [ENOUGH] TO EAT. What is this [relative] clause, 'Who has not enough to eat' intended to cover?¹⁴ Is it not to include such [casual] 'earning-jobs'? — Not [necessarily]; it is an explanatory clause.¹⁵ Thereupon Abaye pointed out to him an objection: 'One should not write credit-bills during the festival [week]; but if [the creditor] does not trust [the person] or he [the clerk] has not [enough] to eat, one may [then] write'.¹⁶ What is the clause, 'Or he has not [enough] to eat' intended to cover here? Is it not to include [casual] 'earning-jobs'?¹³ — [Yes], you may infer that.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: 'And the Sages say, Three craftsmen [may] do work until midday on the day preceding the [Feast of] Passover,¹⁷ [namely], tailors, hairdressers and fullers; tailors, for the same reason that a private person may do [some] sewing in his usual way during the festival [week]; hairdressers and fullers, for the same reason that persons returning home from abroad,¹⁸ or coming out of prison may crop their hair and wash their clothes during the festival [week]'.¹⁹ Now, if you presume that 'earning-jobs' are allowed²⁰ where one has not [enough] to eat, then also all [other] work should have been allowed here,²¹ because 'earning-jobs' are permitted²⁰ where one has not [enough] to eat! R. Papa demurred to this [argument]: Then accordingly, building [work should] be allowed,²² just as 'a wall which is bulging outward into the public domain, may be pulled down and rebuilt in the usual way,²³ because it is a [public] danger'!²⁴ Rabina also demurred to this [argument]: Accordingly then, a scrivener²⁵ should be allowed [to work]²² just as one may 'write marriage deeds,²⁶ bills of divorcement²⁷ and receipts'!²⁸ Said R. Ashi:²⁹ [How] can you argue thus from regulations governing the festival [week] to those governing the fourteenth of Nisan? Those governing the festival [week] are based on [the avoidance of] exertion and where loss is threatened the Rabbis have allowed [exertion]; whereas the regulations governing the fourteenth of Nisan are based on the exigencies of the Festival; anything which is required for the Festival our Rabbis have permitted and anything that is not required for the Festival our Rabbis have not permitted.

MISHNAH. ONE MAY NOT REMOVE [EFFECTS] FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE,³⁰ BUT ONE MAY REMOVE THEM TO HIS COURT. WARES³¹ MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN. IF ONE IS ANXIOUS ABOUT THE THINGS,³² HE MAY REMOVE THEM TO ANOTHER COURT.³³

GEMARA. [BUT ONE MAY REMOVE THEM TO HIS COURT]. But you said at first that one's effects may not be removed at all? — Said Abaye, The latter part comes to [tell] us that [to another] house in that [same] court he may [remove his effects].³⁴

AND WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN. Said R. Papa: Raba [once] gave us a test: We learned, 'WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN' and this he contrasted [with the following]: 'Wares may be conveyed [to]³⁵ and brought home from the house of the craftsman, even though they be not needed for the festival'!³⁶ And we replied to him: The latter [Baraita] refers to the fourteenth of Nisan, while here it refers to the festival week. Or, if you like, I might suggest that both [passages] refer to the festival week, [but that the ruling] here [obtains] where he trusts him³⁷ [and] the latter [ruling obtains] where he does not trust him.³⁸

(1) The firstborn male of 'clean' animals is from birth 'dedicated' or destined for the altar and its flesh is the priests' due (Num. XVIII, 15-18). It may not be used for work or be shorn, unless it be born blemished or becomes accidentally permanently maimed, when it is no longer fit for sacrifice (Deut. XV, 19-22; cf. Lev. XXII, 18ff). If the owner cunningly contrives to get it injured either to avoid the trouble and expense of keeping it or to have the flesh, he is penalized to have it buried and is mulcted to half its value for the loss he caused to a priest. V. Shul. 'Ar. Yor. De'ah. 309-310.

(2) Non-Jewish male slaves who (with their consent) had been circumcised (cf. Gen. XVII. 12-13) and (male and female) ritually received into the household, enjoyed the privileges of resting on the Sabbaths (Ex. XX, 10) and Feasts (Deut. XII, 12, 18) and to partake of holy meats (ibid. XVI, 11) even in the priest's household (Lev. XXII, 11) and to perform such Jewish religious observances as they chose. (Cf. Ber. 20a and Suk. 20b). By selling him to a non-Jew he debarred the slave from the religious observances he learned to love and enjoy, and for this heartless act the offending master was penalized by the loss of his monetary gain.

(3) Merely picked up, cleared, lifted from the soil by the first superficial ploughing which did not constitute working the soil, forbidden Scripturally.

(4) By regular harrowing or deeper or cross ploughing. V. Tosaf. s.v. נְטִיבָה and commentary of R. Samson of Sens on M. Sheb. IV, 2.

(5) By bringing cartloads of manure and methodically spreading it over the field.

(6) Methodically, instead of just letting cattle roam about on it.

(7) M. Sheb. IV, 2.

(8) For clearing thorns by harrowing, manuring and hurdling cattle on the field, are not of the processes explicitly forbidden in Scripture (Lev. XXV, 1-5); and though some included even such 'secondary processes' under the Scriptural prohibition (cf. supra 3a), the Rabbis did not press the penalty against the dead man's son.

- (9) Which had been carefully guarded by the owner from contamination, if the malefactor spitefully threw (for instance) a dead reptile on the heap of washed corn or among the gathered olives or grapes (cf. Lev. XI, 29-34). Priests' due of these could not be eaten, but might only be burnt as fuel. Pious lay-people would not buy such produce.
- (10) As there is no visible change in the produce that has been thus deteriorated, he call say that all is still as it was.
- (11) MS. M. and in parallel passages add here: 'The penalty (imposed) is rabbinical (in origin) '.
- (12) V. D.S. Other texts add also 'fields'.
- (13) I.e., find a poor man some odd, unnecessary job to do, as a chance of earning something wherewith to buy provisions for the Festival.
- (14) It is assumed that the words THE NEED OF A VENDOR imply that he has not enough to eat.
- (15) Explaining the phrase THE NEED OF A VENDOR. But there is no indication according to this interpretation of the Mishnah — to have any unnecessary job done in the festival week.
- (16) During the festival week, plainly allowing it as a means of helping the borrower or the (professional) scribe.
- (17) The fourteenth of Nisan, when from early afternoon the people began the preparation of the Paschal Lambs. Cf. pes. V, 1, 5ff.
- (18) Lit., 'from the maritime province', generally denoting the Diaspora.
- (19) V. Pes. 55b and cf. with the Mishnah 55a on the variations in the text.
- (20) During the festival week.
- (21) On the fourteenth of Nisan, instead of limiting the permission to three crafts only, because there may be other craftsmen who may be in need of money for food. But, as there is no mention of such a contingency there, it shows that even in such a case, unnecessary odd 'earning-jobs' may not be given in the festival week.
- (22) On the fourteenth of Nisan.
- (23) During the festival week.
- (24) V. supra 7a.
- (25) Lat. librarius.
- (26) The terms of the marriage contract agreed to by the parents, the bride and bridegroom.
- (27) To end an unhappy marriage all the sooner, it is allowed even in the festival week.
- (28) V. infra 18b.
- (29) There is a flaw in K. Shesheth's argument.
- (30) Either (i) from one house to another in the same court, or (ii) from another's house into his own, as this is gratifying to him. V. Han., Asheri and Ritba.
- (31) כְּלִים ; the term covers articles of household furniture, utensils, clothing and bedding; but obviously not tools, etc.
- (32) Fearing they might be stolen.
- (33) To ensure their safety.
- (34) Cf. p. 75. n. 9 (ii).
- (35) So SBH. p. 62. In our text as it stands, both here and pes. 55b מוֹלִיכִין might possibly refer to the conveyance of larger, unportable objects, while מוֹבִיאִין refers to smaller, portable things. The concluding words of this discussion, however, do not take note of this possibility.
- (36) V. pes. 55b.
- (37) The craftsman, and may leave his things with him safely to avoid all unnecessary 'exertion'.
- (38) Fearing they might be stolen.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 13b

And [in fact] it is taught [thus]: 'Wares may be brought [home] from the house of the craftsman, for instance, jugs from the jug maker's and tumblers from the glass maker's, but not wool from the dyer's nor articles from the house of the craftsman; but if he has not [enough] to eat one gives him his pay [in advance] and leaves the object with him, if however he does not trust him he leaves It In a house near him¹ and if he is anxious about the things lest they be stolen he² brings them home privily'.³ You have thus explained⁴ [the discrepancy] about 'bringing home', [but] the discrepancy about 'conveying' still remains a difficulty; for when it states WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME, [it follows] much less may one convey [wares to the house of the craftsman]! Hence [obviously] the explanation given at first⁵ is the correct one. MISHNAH. FIGS [WHILE DRYING]

MAY BE COVERED WITH STRAW;⁶ R. JUDAH SAYS, THEY MAY EVEN BE PILED UP [IN HEAPS].⁷ VENDORS OF FRUITS, CLOTHING AND [OTHER] WARES MAY SELL Privily FOR THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. FISHERMEN, GROATS-POUNDERS AND GRIST GRINDERS⁸ PLY THEIR TRADE PRIVILY FOR THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. R. JOSE SAYS, THEY HAVE IMPOSED A RESTRICTION ON THEMSELVES.⁹

GEMARA. R. Hiyya b. Abba and R. Assi differ [in their interpretation] both in the name of Hezekiah and R. Johanan.¹⁰ One says that the [former expression], they MAY BE COVERED, MEHAPPIN, means [covering but] lightly, and [the latter] MAY EVEN BE PILED UP, ME'ABBIN, means [spreading the straw] closely; the other says that MAY BE COVERED, means [spreading the straw] lightly or densely, while [the latter expression], MAY EVEN BE PILED UP, means making a sort of pile.¹¹ It is also taught thus: 'May be piled up [me'abbin] — making a sort of pile: these are the words of R. Judah'.

VENDORS OF FRUITS, CLOTHING AND [OTHER] WARES MAY SELL PRIVILY. The question was asked: Does THEY HAVE IMPOSED A RESTRICTION ON THEMSELVES, mean that they do not work at all, or perhaps that they do it privily? Come and hear: 'Vendors of fruits, clothing and [other] wares sell privily for the requirements of the festival [week]; R. Jose says, The Tiberian traders have imposed a restriction on themselves not to sell at all. Deerstalkers, fowlers and fishermen catch privily for the requirements of the festival [week]; it. Jose says, The catchers of Acra have imposed a restriction on themselves not to catch at all. Groats-pounders make hilka¹² [coarse meal], tragus¹³ [pulse-porridge] and tisana¹⁴ [pearl-barley] privily for the requirements of the festival [week]; R. Jose says, The gristpounders of Sepphoris have imposed a restriction on themselves not to pound at all'. Abaye explained:¹⁵ Hilka means [groats of] one [grain broken] in two;¹⁶ tragus, one into three;¹⁷ tisana, one into four.¹⁸ When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: [All these are] kuntha [spelt].

An objection was raised: Hilka, tragus and tisana are [considered as] 'tainted'¹⁹ everywhere.²⁰ Now this harmonizes well with the explanation that it is one [grain broken] in two, three or four; they are [considered] 'tainted' everywhere, because they have been rendered 'fit' [liable to take the taint of impurity]; but according to the explanation that they are all 'spelt', why then are they taken as 'tainted' everywhere, for these have not [necessarily] been rendered 'fit' [by damping]? [Sometimes they are], for instance, where the groats are [made of] peeled [spelt]; because, unless the grain had been soaked in water it would not peel. And why is it called hilka? Because it has had its 'tunic'²¹ [husk] taken off. An objection was raised: 'One who vowed [to abstain] from dagan²² is debarred even from [partaking of] the Egyptian bean²³ when dry, but is allowed to eat it when fresh [green];²⁴ and he is permitted rice,²⁵ hilka, tragus and tisana.²⁶ Now, this harmonizes well with the explanation that these [varieties] are so called because one [grain] is broken into two, three or four; it is Proper [to allow him to eat] because these [being now meal] no longer belong to the [category] of dagan [grain]; but according to him who says that hilka is [what we call] 'spelt', it is [still] properly [designated as] dagan! — This is a difficulty.

R. Huna²⁷ permitted vendors of Pot-herbs²⁸ to go and sell in the festival week in the market Place in the ordinary way. R. Kahana thereupon put an objection to him [from the following]: 'A shop which opens into a colonnade may be opened and closed in the ordinary way; if it opens into the public domain, [the shopkeeper] may open one door and close one; and on the day preceding the last day of the Feast [of Tabernacles]²⁹ he may bring out fruit and decorate the markets all round the town in honour of the last day of the Feast'. [That is to say], 'In honour of the last day of the Feast, [he may open]; but if not in honour of the last day of the Feast, he may not [open]! That is not difficult [to explain]: This latter prohibition refers to the sale of fruits, whereas in the former case it is the sale of seasoning [pot-herbs that is allowed].

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 14a

, OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE [JUST] GRANTED ABSOLUTION. AND LIKEWISE ONE WHO APPLIED TO A SAGE AND WAS ABSOLVED [BY HIM]. HAND-TOWELS, BARBERS' TOWELS AND BATH-TOWELS [MAY BE WASHED]. MEN OR WOMEN [AFFECTED] WITH 'THE FLUX'¹ OR MENSTRUANTS,² OR WOMEN AFTER CHILDBIRTH³ AND ALL THOSE EMERGING FROM [A STATE OF RITUAL.] IMPURITY⁴ TO [BEGIN] THEIR PURIFICATION ARE ALLOWED [TO WASH THEIR GARMENTS]; BUT ALL OTHER MEN ARE FORBIDDEN.

GEMARA. What is the reason that all other men are forbidden? — As we learned: 'Members of the ward on duty⁵ and [communal] Deputies at their Posts⁶ are forbidden [during their turn] to crop [their hair] or wash [their garments]. But on Thursday they are allowed, in honour of the Sabbath'. Now Rabbah b. Bar-Hana reporting R. Eleazar [as commenting on this] said: 'What is the reason [they may on Thursday]? So that they should not enter [on the duty of] their Ward in a state of untidiness'. Here also the reason is that they do not enter upon the festival in a state of untidiness.

R. Zera inquired: Suppose one had lost something on the day before the festival? [Do we say], since he was prevented [from attending to himself before] he may,⁷ or perhaps, as the reason is not obvious, he may not? — Said Abaye: [Obviously not], as people would then say: '[So] all Syrian [fancy] loaves are forbidden, but the Syrian [fancy] loaves of Boethus are allowed'?⁸ But admitting your argument [against], yet what about it. Assi's statement? who citing R. Johanan said: 'Anybody who has but one tunic⁹ is allowed to wash it during the festival week'. Would not people say in that case, too: '[So] all Syrian [fancy] loaves are forbidden, but the Syrian [fancy] loaves of Boethus are allowed'? — Surely it has been stated in this connection: 'Said Mar son of R. Ashi, His girdle¹⁰ proves his plight'.¹¹ R. Ashi's comments on our Mishnah were [in this form]: R. Zera enquired, What if a craftsman¹² had lost something on the day before the festival? Do we say that since he is a craftsman, the reason [why he is allowed] is obvious, or since the reason is not so obvious as in those other cases [mentioned in the Mishnah], he may not [attend to himself in the festival week]? Let this question stand [adjourned].¹³

[ONE ARRIVING HOME] FROM ABROAD [MAY CROP]. [The anonymous view of] our Mishnah is not that of R. Judah. For it is taught: R. Judah says, One arriving [home] from abroad may not crop himself [during the festival week] because he had set out [on his voyage] without the approval [of the Rabbis].¹⁴ Said Raba: 'If he merely went on a tour all [authorities] are agreed that he is forbidden;¹⁵ if to seek his bread, all are agreed that he is allowed.¹⁵ Difference of opinion arises only in the case of a voyage for business profits, one master looking upon it as equivalent to [mere] travelling, and the other master looking upon it as equivalent to seeking his bread'.

An objection was raised: 'Said Rabbi: R. Judah's opinion seems apposite where he had set out without approval and the Sages' opinion seems apposite where he had set out with approval'. Now, what is 'without approval'? If I say for going on a tour, did you not say that all are agreed that he is forbidden?¹⁵ Again [should it mean] for seeking [his] bread; surely did you not say that [if with this object] all are agreed that he is allowed?¹⁶ It is obvious therefore that it means for profit-seeking.¹⁷ Now consider the latter clause: 'And the Sages' opinion seems apposite where he had set out with approval'; what is meant by 'with approval'? If I say [approval to set out] for earning his bread, have you not said that all are agreed that he is allowed?¹⁶ Again, should it [rather] mean for profit [seeking]; but surely then, did you not say that' R. Judah's [adverse] opinion seems apposite in this case [that he is forbidden]?¹⁸ — This is what he [Rabbi] meant to say: The Rabbis accept R. Judah's opinion where he had started out 'without approval', and what means it? For going on a tour; because, even the Sages disagree with him only on [the question of a voyage] for gaining profit, whereas in regard to going on a tour they concur with him.¹⁹ And again, R. Judah accepts the Rabbis' opinion [that he may attend to himself]¹⁶ where he had set out 'with approval', and what means it? For seeking his bread; because even R. Judah disagrees with them only on [the question of a voyage] for gaining profit, whereas in regard to going out for seeking his bread he concurs with them.²⁰

Samuel said: 'If an infant is born during the festival [week] it is allowed to cut his hair²¹ during the festival [week] because there is no imprisonment²² more real than this'. [That is, only 'if . . . born] during the festival [week]' it may be done, but [if born] before then, it is [presumably] not allowed.²³

R. Phineas raised all objection: 'Every one of those mentioned [by the Sages] as being permitted to crop his hair during the festival [week] may [likewise] crop his hair during the [thirty]²⁴ days of his mourning';²⁵ [which means conversely] that every one of those who is forbidden to crop his hair during the festival [week] is [likewise] forbidden to crop his hair during the [thirty]²⁶ days of his mourning.

(8) A proverbial expression, protesting against discrimination. The origin of the proverb is found in Pes. 37a where it is objected to fancy-shaped loaves for Passover use, as the shaping of the piece of dough may delay the baking to the point of leavening. R. Boethus b. Zonin suggested that the use of moulds might easily obviate this fear, which evoked the (proverbial) retort.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 14b

Now if you say that there is a difference here in the case of the infant,¹ you are this implying that [the observance of] mourning obtains in the case of a minor, whereas it is taught: 'A minor's garment is rent out of grief of soul'² R. Ashi said [that the negative inference is faulty, for] does it [actually] state 'but those who are forbidden'³ Perhaps [it means to state] that some there are who are forbidden⁴ and some others who are permitted.⁵

Amemar, or some say. R. Shisha son of R. Idi, taught thus: 'Samuel said: "An infant may be cropped in the festival [week]: it makes no difference whether he was born during the festival [week] or was born before".' Said R. Phineas: We learned this also [indirectly] from [the following]: 'Every one of those mentioned [by the Sages] as being permitted to crop during the festival [week] may likewise crop his hair during the [thirty] days of his mourning'; which means conversely, but every one of those who is forbidden to crop during the festival [week] is likewise forbidden to crop during the [thirty] days of his mourning. Now if you say that a [newly-born] infant is forbidden [to be cropped] you find yourself [implying] that [the observance of] mourning obtains in the case of a minor; whereas it is taught [distinctly]: 'The garment of a minor is rent [merely] out of grief of soul'? — Said R. Ashi: [That negative inference is faulty for] does it [actually] state, 'But he who is forbidden [in the festival week] is also forbidden during his [thirty] days of mourning? Probably it means that some there are who are forbidden and some others who are permitted.

A mourner does not deport himself as one in mourning during a festival, as it is said: And thou shalt rejoice in the feast.⁶ [For], if his mourning began before [the festival], a positive precept incumbent on the community⁷ overrides one incumbent on him as an individual;⁸ and if his mourning began just then [during the festival], an individual's function cannot come and put off that of the public.

Now what about one separated [under a ban]? Should he deport himself as one in 'separation' during a festival? — Said R. Joseph: Come and hear: 'They [the Courts] deal with capital offenses, with [offenses involving judicial] floggings⁹ and monetary suits,¹⁰ [during the festival week]'. [This implies that] if one heeds not the [court's] decision, we put him under a ban.¹¹ Now if you presume that he should not deport himself during the festival like one under 'separation', [then] seeing that where one is already fallen under a ban, the festival comes and suspends [the ban],¹² shall we pronounce him banned in the first instance [during the festival]? Abaye replied: Perhaps [the object of the adjudication is] to examine the charge against him.¹³ For, should you not say thus, then 'capital offenses' therein mentioned would likewise mean indeed that they would have him slain; but surely thereby they [the judges] themselves would be debarred from 'rejoicing in the feast' [as is Scripturally ordained], as it is taught:¹⁴ Says R. Akiba: Whence may it be shown that a Sanhedrin [Court] that put a [sinning] soul to death do not taste [food] all that day? From the instructive text 'Ye shall not eat on the blood'.¹⁵ Therefore [I say] it must be only to examine the charge against him, and likewise here it is only to examine the charge against him. Said R. Joseph to him: If [you explain it] so, the result is that you delay the execution of his sentence [which is forbidden]?¹⁶ But [I take it], they come early in the morning and examine the charges against him; then they go home and eat and drink all that day¹⁷ and, coming back with the setting sun, they do give a final decision and [also] have him put to death.¹⁸

Said Abaye: Come and hear.¹⁹ OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE GRANTED ABSOLUTION.²⁰ Said Raba: Does it state: 'Whom the Sages granted absolution'? It says: OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE [JUST] GRANTED ABSOLUTION, [that is] where he [the offender] went and appeased the plaintiff and then came before our Rabbis²¹ and they then set him free [from restraints].²²

What about a leprous person; does he deport himself as a leper during the festival?²³ — Said Abaye: 'Come and hear: AND [ALSO] A NAZIR OR LEPER EMERGING FROM HIS [STATE OF] IMPURITY TO [BEGIN] HIS PURIFICATION [may crop his hair and wash his garments],²⁴ which implies that during the days of his impurity he does deport himself [as a leper]'! — [No]; the Tanna considered that this goes without saying [and is to be understood thus]: It goes without saying that he does not deport himself [as a leper] during the festival.²⁵ But when [he is emerging] into his state of cleanness we might [be inclined to] restrict him, in case he might defer²⁶ making his [preliminary] offerings [of purification].²⁷ Therefore he informs us [that he may, nevertheless].²⁸ Said Raba: Come and hear.²⁹ '[It is taught]: And the leper. [in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent and the hair of his head shall be loose . . .],³⁰ that is meant to include a High Priest [in this rule]'. Now [we learned] a High Priest all through the year is on a par with any other person on a festival, as we learned: The High Priest may make sacrifice [on the altar] even when he be onen,³¹ without however eating thereof! From this [latter restriction of even a High Priest] you can infer [about the former] that he should deport himself as a leper during the festival. — Infer that.

A mourner is forbidden to cut his hair, because since the Divine Law ordained the sons of Aaron:³² Let not the hair of your heads go loose,³³ we infer that for everybody else [cutting the hair] is forbidden

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 15a

. What about those 'separated' [under a ban], and [segregated] lepers in regard to cutting [their hair] during the festival week? — Come and hear. "Those "separated" [under a ban] and [segregated] lepers are forbidden to cut [their hair] and wash [their garments]. If one "separated" [under a ban] died,¹ the Beth din stone his coffin; R. Judah says, not that they set up a heap of stones over him like the heap of Achan,² but the Beth din send [commissioners]³ and have a large stone⁴ placed on his coffin, which teaches you that if anyone is placed under a ban and dies in his "separation", the Beth din stone his coffin'.⁵

A mourner is obliged to muffle his head. Since the All Merciful enjoined Ezekiel: And cover not thine upper lip,⁶ we infer that everybody else is obliged [to do so].⁷ What about one 'separated' [under a ban] in regard to muffling the head? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: 'And they⁸ muffle themselves and sit as men "separated" [under a ban] and like mourners until Heaven grants them mercy'. Said Abaye: Perhaps it is different with one who is 'separated' [under a ban] by displeasure of Heaven⁹ [as it were]; for that is [more] serious [than being in disfavour with man]!

What about a leper, in regard to muffling the head? — Come and hear: And he shall cover his upper lip;¹⁰ we infer from this that he is obliged to muffle his head. — Infer that.

A mourner is forbidden to put on tefillin.¹¹ Since the All Merciful ordained Ezekiel: Bind thy headtire upon thee,¹² this implies that everybody else is forbidden [to do so in deep mourning]. What about one 'separated' [under a ban], in regard to tefillin? — It stands [adjourned].

What about a leper, in regard to [putting on] tefillin? — Come and hear: [Holy Writ prescribes], 'And the leper';¹³ this [amplification] is to include [even] a High Priest [in this law];¹⁴ 'his clothes shall be perumim',¹⁵ that is, they shall be torn. 'And [the hair of] his head shall be parua'.¹⁶ 'Parua' means only letting the hair grow long;¹⁷ these are the words of R. Eliezer. R. Akiba explains [otherwise]: 'Shall be' is stated in connection with the leper's head;¹⁸ and 'shall be' is stated in connection with the leper's garment.¹⁹ [Therefore] just as 'shall be' stated in connection with the garment refers to something external to the body [clothes],²⁰ so also 'shall be' stated in connection with the head refers to something external to the body.²¹ What then [is to be discarded]? Is it not the reference to tefillin? — Said R. Papa, [Not necessarily these], it may refer to [not putting on] a cap or sudarium.²²

A mourner is forbidden to give the usual greeting [of wellbeing],²³ because the All Merciful said to Ezekiel: Sigh in silence.²⁴ What about one 'separated' [under a ban] in regard to [abstaining from] the usual greeting?²³ — R. Joseph said, Come and hear: And in regard to greeting one another 'with peace', as man to man, they [that are fasting]²⁵ behave like persons who are 'separated' [under a ban] by the Omnipresent.²⁶ Said Abaye to him, Perhaps [the case of] the 'separated' [as under a ban] by displeasure of Heaven is different because it is [more] serious.

What about a leper in regard to [abstaining from] greeting one 'with peace'? — Come and hear: [It is written]: And he shall cover his upper lip,²⁷ that is, his lips shall be compressed together, that he should behave like one 'separated' [under a ban] and like a mourner, and he is forbidden to greet one 'with peace' Infer that. Then why not solve now²⁸ [the above question] about one 'separated' [under a ban]?²⁹ — Said R. Aha b. Phineas in the name of R. Joseph: Does it [actually] state that he [the leper] is forbidden [to greet one 'with peace' like one 'separated']? It only states that he behaves like one 'separated' or like a mourner with reference to other things and at the same time that he is also forbidden to greet one 'with peace'.

A mourner is forbidden [to engage] in the words of the Torah, because the All Merciful said to Ezekiel: 'Sigh in silence'.³⁰ What about one 'separated' [under a ban engaging in] the words of the Torah? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: One 'separated' [under a ban] may teach [others] and others may teach him; he may be hired [for work] and others may be hired by him. One under anathema³¹ neither teaches others, nor do others recite it to him; he is not hired [for work] nor are others [to be] hired by him; but he recites to himself in order that he does not interrupt his study;³² and he makes a small stall for himself [as a means] for 'his livelihood'.³³ Whereat Rab³⁴ remarked, [As for instance] selling water at the pass of Araboth.³⁵ Infer from that.³⁶ What about a leper [engaging] in the words of the Torah? — Come and hear: [It is written], And make them known³⁷ unto thy children and thy children's children; the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb. [that they may learn to fear Me all the days . . . and that they may teach their children],³⁸ that is, just as [they heard God's word] then [at Sinai] with awe, fear, trepidation and perspiration;³⁹ [so be it now studied with awe, fear, trepidation and perspiration]. Hence sad they [the Sages], that men who are [affected] with flux,⁴⁰ lepers, or such as [in error] consorted with their wife while in separation⁴¹ are allowed to read [Scripture] out of the Torah [Pentateuch], the Prophets or the Hagiographa⁴² or to recite [orally] Mishnah,⁴³ Midrash,⁴⁴ Gemara,⁴⁵ Halachah or Aggadah,⁴⁶ while those who have night pollutions are forbidden.⁴⁷ You may infer it from that.

A mourner is forbidden to wash his clothes, for it is written, And Joab sent to Tekoa and fetched thence a wise woman and said unto her: 'I pray thee, feign thyself to be a mourner and put mourner apparel, I Pray thee and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead'.⁴⁸ What about the 'separated' [under a ban] and the lepers washing their clothes? — Come and hear: Persons 'separated' [under a ban] and lepers are forbidden to cut [their hair] or wash [their clothes]. You may infer it from here.

A mourner is in duty bound to rend [his garments], because the All Merciful enjoined the sons of Aaron, 'Neither rend [your clothes]'.⁴⁹ From here you infer that everyone else is bound to do it. What about one 'separated' [under a ban] rending his garments? It stands [adjourned].

What about the leper rending his garments? — Come and hear: 'His clothes shall be perumim'⁵⁰ which means they shall be rent. [Yes], infer it.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 15b

'[God says], "I have set the likeness of mine image on them and through their sins have I upset it; let your couches be overturned¹ on account thereof".' What about one 'separated' [under a ban] and a leper overturning couches? Let this stand [adjourned].

A mourner is forbidden to engage in work, for it is written: And I shall turn your feasts into mourning;² [hence we say] that just as it is forbidden to engage in work during a Feast [festival], so is it forbidden to engage in work during mourning. What about one 'separated' [under a ban] in regard to doing work? — Said R. Joseph: 'Come and hear: "When the Sages said that it is forbidden them³ to engage in work, [about themselves, bathe, don shoes. . .], they laid this down only for the daytime, but at night it is all permitted and [the same restrictions] you find also in the case of one 'separated' and a mourner."⁴ Does not this refer to all those [restrictions]?' — No, it is only to the other things, [but not to work].

Come and hear: 'One "separated" [under a ban] teaches [others] and others teach him; he is hired [for work] and others are hired by him'.⁵ You may infer from that. What about a leper engaging in work? — Let this stand [adjourned]. A mourner is forbidden to wash himself, as it is written, And anoint not thyself with oil,⁶ and bathing is implied in anointing.⁷ What about one 'separated' [under a ban] bathing? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: 'When the Sages said that it is forbidden then, to wash [on the fast day] they meant only in regard to washing the whole body, but one is permitted to wash one's face, hands or feet, and [the same restrictions] you find also in the case of one "separated" [under a ban] and a mourner'⁸. Now, does not this refer to all the restrictions? — No, [only] to the others [but not to bathing]. What about the leper washing himself? — Let this stand [adjourned].

A mourner is forbidden to put on sandals [shoes], as the All Merciful ordained Ezekiel, And put thy shoes upon thy feet,⁹ which implies that for everyone else it is forbidden [to do so]. What about one 'separated' [under a ban] putting on sandals? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: 'When the Sages said that it is forbidden then, [on the fast day] to put on sandals, they meant only in town, but on the road it is permitted. When, for instance? When one sets out on the road he puts on [shoes], on entering town, he takes them off: and [the same] you find also in the case of one "separated" [under a ban]'.⁸ Now, does not this refer to all those [restrictions]?¹⁰ — No, [only] to the other.¹¹ What about the leper putting on sandals? — Let this stand [adjourned].

A mourner is forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed, as it is written: And David comforted Bath-Sheba his wife and went in unto her,¹² which implies that before then¹³ it was forbidden [him]. What about one 'separated' [under a ban] in regard to the use of the [conjugal] bed? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: All those years that Israel spent in the wilderness they were 'separated' [under a ban]¹⁴ yet they used their [conjugal] beds.¹⁵ Said Abaye: But, maybe, the case of those who are 'separated' by [displeasure] of Heaven is different because it is less serious? [You say], 'less serious'! But you argued [before]¹⁶ that it was more serious? — He is uncertain on the point; [if you] go [and argue] this way, he rebuts it, and if you go [and argue] the other way, he [again] rebuts it. What about a leper, in regard to the use of the [conjugal] bed? — Come and hear, for it is taught: '[It is written], But [he] shall dwell outside his tent seven days',¹⁷ that is, he shall be like one 'separated' [under a ban] and like a mourner; and he is forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed, as '[outside] his tent' means only [apart from] his wife, as it is said: Go say to them: Return ye to your tents.¹⁸ You may infer it from that. Then could not one now by this [conclusion] solve the above question [on this point] about one 'separated' [under a ban]? — Said R. Huna¹⁹ son of Phineas in R. Joseph's name: Does it state [categorically] that he [the leper] is forbidden [like one 'separated']? It only states that he is like one 'separated' [under a ban] and like a mourner in respect of other things and that he be [also] forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed.²⁰

A mourner does not send his sacrifices [to the Temple], for it is taught: Says R. Simeon, [It is written, And thou shalt sacrifice] peace-offerings²¹ and eat there,²² and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God,²³ that is, one offers 'peace-offerings' [only] at times when one is untroubled,²⁴ but not at a time when one is onen,²⁵ What about one 'separated' [under a ban], should he [then] send his offerings? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: All those years that Israel spent in the wilderness they were 'separated' [under a ban]²⁶ and [yet] they sent their offerings [to the Tabernacle]. Said Abaye to him: But perhaps one 'separated' by [the displeasure of] Heaven is different, because it is not so serious? [You say], 'Not so serious'! But you argued [before] that it was more serious! — [Abaye] being uncertain on the point rebutted it [either way]. What about a leper, may he send his [sacrificial] offerings? — Come and hear: And after he [a defied priest] is cleansed²⁷ — [that is, cleansed]²⁸ after coming away from his dead near of kin — they shall reckon unto him seven days²⁹ — those are the seven days which he has to count³⁰ — and in the day that he goeth into the Sanctuary,³¹ into the inner court,³² to minister in the Sanctuary, he shall offer his sin-offering³³

- (29) The (above) ritual sprinkling from defilement by contact with the dead was done on the third and seventh days after having separated from the corpse; but the use of the phrase 'they shall reckon seven days' instead of 'they shall sprinkle upon him' is taken to be reminiscent of the seven days for a leper on his recovery and his preliminary ritual cleansing, before leaving his place of Isolation (Lev. XI V, 1-8), which were followed by another seven days of ritual purification before he may proceed on the eighth day with his final purification and atonement. (Ibid. 8-11). Accordingly, the case of a leprous priest is read into the text of Ezekiel. For obviously it would be useless to cleanse a leprous priest (or layman) from his defilement by the dead while still being unclean as a leper, and as such unfit to enter the camp or sanctuary.

— which is his [own meal-oblation¹ consisting of] one tenth part of an ephah [of fine flour]: These are the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon says, [the wording:] And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary [into the inner court to minister in the sanctuary], he shall offer his sinoffering² [implies that only] when he is fit to go into the sanctuary he is fit to offer up [his own oblation]: and when he is not fit to go into the sanctuary, he is not fit to offer up [his own oblation].³ Raba said: Whence do we know⁴ the regulation that we send a messenger of the Court?⁵ — From what is written: And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab.⁶ And whence do we know that we summon⁷ him to attend [in person]? — From what is written, And Moses said to Korah, Be thou and all thy congregation before the Lord, thou and Aaron [tomorrow].⁸ [Whence, to appear] 'before a great personage'? — From what is written, Before the lord.⁸ [To name both parties], 'thou and So-and-so'? — From what is written, Thou and they [that are with thee] and Aaron.⁸ That we fix a time? — As it is written, To-morrow.⁸ Time and again?⁹ — As it is written: They called there,¹⁰ Pharaoh the king of Egypt [the author of] 'commotion'; he hath let the appointed time pass by. [As I live, saith the King, the Lord of Hosts, surely like Tabor among the mountains and like Carmel by the sea, so shall he come].¹¹ And whence do we know that if one behaves insolently towards the Court's messenger and the latter comes and reports it, this is not deemed slander [on his part]? — As it is written: [And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab]; And they said: [We will not come up]⁶ . . . Wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? [We will not come up].¹² Whence do we derive that we [may] pronounce a shammetha¹³ [imprecation]? — From the text: Curse ye Meroz.¹⁴ Whence do we derive that it must be according to the considered opinion of some prominent person? — From the text: [Curse ye Meroz] said the angel of the Lord¹⁴ [to Barak]. And whence do we derive that we pronounce the herem?¹⁵ — From the [same] text: Curse ye a cursing.¹⁶ Whence do we derive that [it falls on one who] eats and drinks with the offender or stands within four cubits of him? — From the same text: [Curse ye a cursing] the inhabitants thereof.¹⁷ Whence do we derive that we publish the details of his offence? — From the [same] text: Because they [the denizens of Meroz] came not to the help of the Lord. And, said 'Ulla, Barak pronounced the shammetha¹⁸ against Meroz with [the blast of] four hundred horns. Some say that Meroz was [the name of] a great personage;¹⁹ others say that it was [the name of] a star,²⁰ as it is written [there]: They fought from Heaven, the stars in their courses fought against Sisera.²¹ Whence do we derive that his property may be forfeited?²² — From the text: And whosoever come not within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited and himself separated from the congregation of the captivity.²³ Whence do we derive that we may quarrel [with an offender], curse him, smite him, pluck his hair and put on him an oath?²⁴ — From the text: And I contended with them, and cursed them, and smote certain of them and plucked off their hair and made them swear by God.²⁵ Whence do we derive that we may fetter, arrest and prosecute them? — From the text: [Let judgment be executed upon him with all diligence], whether it be unto death, or to uprooting, or to confiscation of goods or to imprisonment.²⁶ What is meant by 'uprooting? Said [R.] Adda Mari, reporting Nehemiah b. Baruch, who said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Abin, who had it from Rab Judah, it mean the hardafah.²⁷ What is denoted by hardafah? — Said Rab Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shelath in the name of Rab: It means, They declare him 'separated'²⁸ forthwith; then [if he still persists] they repeat [the same declaration] after thirty days,²⁹ and finally they pronounce the herem on him after sixty days. Said R. Huna b. Hinena, This is what R. Hisda said: They [first] warn him on Monday, [then] on the Thursday³⁰ [following] and [again on the] Monday. This rule applies if he disregards a monetary judgment; but in a case of sheer contumacy the ban is imposed forthwith. When a certain butcher had been insolent to R. Tobai b. Mattena, Abaye and Raba were appointed³¹ to investigate and they pronounced the shammetha on him. In the end, the fellow went and appeased his litigant.³² Said Abaye, What is one to do? Should we absolve him now? The shammetha had not lasted [its] thirty days.³³ Shall we not absolve him? The Rabbis want to go in to him!³⁴ Said lie to R. Idi b. Abin: 'Have you [perchance] heard aught bearing on this?' He replied: 'Thus said R. Tahlifa b. Abimi as reporting Samuel: "A toot³⁵ binds and a toot releases!"' [Said Abaye] to him, Yea, but this obtains only in the case of disregarding a monetary decision, but in a case of contumacy [it holds] until it has rested on him for thirty days! Anyhow, that shows that Abaye was of opinion that if three people had pronounced the shammetha on a man three others cannot come and release him!³⁶ For the question was raised: If three people had pronounced the shammetha on a man, can three others come and remit it for him? — Come and hear: 'One who has been "separated" [under a ban] by the master is [deemed as] "separated" from the disciple;³⁷ but one who has been "separated" by the disciple is not [considered as] "separated" from the master. One who is "separated" by his own town is also "separated" from another town; but one who is "separated" by another town is not [considered] "separated" from his own town. One who is "separated" by the Nasi [Prince] is "separated" in all Israel; but one who is "separated" by all Israel is not [thereby] "separated" from the "Prince". Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says that if one of the disciples had "separated" someone and died, his part is not nullified'. From this you derive three points: — [a] That if a disciple 'separated' someone in [defence of] his personal dignity,³⁸ the 'separation' lies, and you infer [b] that each person revokes his own part, and you infer [c] that if a body of three have pronounced a shammetha on a person, three others may not come and release him.³⁹

body of three others [can] come and release him'. Said R. Ashi to Amemar, But it is taught: 'Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says that if one of the disciples "separated" someone and died, his part is not nullified'! Does not this mean, that it cannot be nullified at all? — No, [it means] not until a body of three others come and release him.

Our Rabbis taught: No 'separation' ban holds less than thirty days and no 'reproof'⁴⁰ holds less than seven days; and although there is no direct proof on that point, there is an [indirect] 'indication' of it: If her father had but spit in her face, should she⁴¹ not hide in shame seven days? [Let her be shut up without the camp seven days and after that he shall be brought in again].⁴²

R. Hisda remarked, 'Our "separation" [in Babylon] corresponds to their "reproof" [in Palestine]'. But is their 'reproof' of only seven days' duration, not more? Is it not a fact that R. Simeon, Rabbi's son, and Bar Kappara were once sitting rehearsing the lesson together when a difficulty arose about a certain passage⁴³ and R. Simeon said to Bar Kappara, 'This [matter] needs Rabbi [to explain it]', and Bar Kappara replied: 'And what forsooth can Rabbi [have to] say on this?' He went and repeated it to his father, [at which] the latter was vexed, and [when] Bar Kappara next presented himself before Rabbi, he said: 'Bar Kappara, I have never known you!'⁴⁴ He realized that he [Rabbi] had taken the matter to heart and submitted himself to the [disability of a] 'reproof' for thirty days. Again, on one occasion, Rabbi issued an order that they should not teach disciples in the open public market place. (What was his exposition?⁴⁵ — How beautiful are thy steps in sandals, O prince's daughter!⁴⁶ The roundings of thy thighs are like the links of a chain [the work of the hands of a skilled workman].⁴⁷ As the thigh is covered

(1) If he is a common priest, after full purification and re-admission into the inner court of the priests, he might on that very day officiate and offer up his own free-gift oblation (v. Men. 73-74a). This proves that as long as he is unclean, whether through contact with dead or through leprosy, he cannot bring his offerings.

(3) That is, R. Simeon does not allow a leper and common priest or a layman to send his offerings to the Temple until after his purification and atonement by sacrifices. For a leper had to attend in person to be purified by the stated ceremony (Lev. XIV, 11, 14-18, 20).

so the [discussions on the] words of the Torah are also [to be] under cover.)¹ — R. Hiyya went out and taught the sons of his two brothers in the [open] marketplace, Rab and Rabbah son of Kar Hana. Rabbi heard [of this and] was vexed. [When] R. Hiyya [next] presented himself before him, Rabbi said to him, 'Iyya!² Who is calling you outside?' He realized that he [Rabbi] had taken the matter to heart, and submitted himself to [the disability of] a 'reproof' for thirty days. On the thirtieth day Rabbi sent him a message saying 'Come!' Later he sent him a message not to come! (What³ was his idea in sending the first [message] and what in sending the second? At first he thought 'part of the day may be deemed equivalent to the whole day' and in the end he thought, we do not say part of the day may be deemed equivalent to the whole day'.)⁴ In the end he came. Said Rabbi to him, Why have you come? R. Hiyya replied: 'Because you, Sir, sent for me to come'. But then I sent to you not to come! He replied: 'The one [messenger] I saw and the other I have not seen'. Thereupon he [Rabbi] cited [as appropriate] the text: When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.⁵ Wherefore, Sir, [asked Rabbi] did you act thus [contrary to order]? — Because, replied R. Hiyya, it is written: Wisdom crieth aloud in the street: [She uttereth her voice in the broad places; she calleth at the head of the street; at the entrance of the gates, in the city she uttereth her words].⁶ Said Rabbi to him: ‘If you read Holy Writ [once], you have not read it a second time; if you have read it a second time, you have not read it a third time; and if you have read it a third time, they [who taught you] have not explained it to you’.⁷ [The text] ‘Wisdom crieth aloud in the streets’ is [to be taken] in the sense in which Raba [explained it];⁸ for Raba said: ‘If one studies the Torah indoors, the Torah proclaims his merit abroad’. But then is it not written [otherwise]: ‘From the beginning I have not spoken in secret’?⁹ — That has [special] reference to the ‘Kallah’ days.¹⁰ And what [use] does R. Hiyya make of the text — ‘The roundings of thy thighs’? — He explained it in reference to the dispensing of charity and acts of lovingkindness.¹¹ Thus¹² [you see] the disability of their ‘reproof’ [in Palestine] lasts thirty days! — The ‘reproof’ of a Nasi is different. And our ‘reproof’, how long [is its disability]? — One day [only], as in the case of Samuel and Mar ‘Ukba.¹³ When they were sitting together [at the College] engaging in the revision of some theme, Mar ‘Ukba sat before him¹⁴ at a distance of four cubits; and when they sat together at a judicial session, Samuel sat before him¹⁴ at a distance of four cubits and a place was dug out¹⁵ for Mar ‘Ukba where he sat on a matting so that what he¹⁶ said should be heard. Every day Mar ‘Ukba accompanied Samuel to his house. One day he¹⁶ was [rather] engrossed in a suit, and Samuel walked behind him. When he¹⁶ had reached his house, Samuel said to him: ‘Haven’t you been rather a long time at it?’¹⁷ Take up now my case!’¹⁸ He¹⁶ then realized that he [Samuel] felt aggrieved and submitted himself to the [disability of a] ‘reproof’ for one day.

There was a certain woman who sat sprawling on the footway fanning the husks out of her barley groats, and when a Collegiate was walking past her she did not make way for him. He said, ‘How impudent is this woman!’ She came before R. Nahman. Said he to her, Did you hear him utter the shammetha?¹⁹ She replied [she had] not. Said he to her, Go and submit yourself to the [disability of a] ‘reproof’ for one day.¹⁹ Zutra b. Tobiah was [once] expounding a Scriptural lesson in the presence of Rab Judah. Coming to the verse: And these are the last words of David,²⁰ he said to R. Judah. ‘Last words’: this implies that there were former words; which are those former [words]? He [Rab Judah] kept silent, without saying anything. Again said the former: ‘Last words! This implies there were former words; which are those former [words]’? — He [then] replied: What, think you that one who does not know an explanation of that text is not an eminent man? He [Zutra] realized that he [Rab Judah] had taken the matter to heart [and] submitted himself to the [disability of a] ‘reproof’ for one day. Now, however, that we have come upon this question: “Last words”, this implies that there were former words’, what were they? — [These:] And David spoke unto the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies and out of the hand of Saul.²¹ The Holy One, blessed ‘be He, said to David, David do you compose a song on the downfall of Saul? Had you been Saul and he David, I would have annihilated many a David out of regard for him. Hence it is written, ‘Shiggaion²² of David, which he said unto the Lord, concerning Cush a Benjamite.²³ Was Cush that Benjamite's name? And was not his name Saul? — But, just as a Cushite [Ethiopian]²⁴ is distinguishable by his skin, so was Saul distinguished by his deeds. In like manner you explain: ‘[And Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses] because of the Cushite woman that he had taken, to wife.²⁵ Was she a Cushite [woman]? Was not her name Zipporah? But as a Cushite woman is distinguishable by her skin so was also Zipporah distinguished by her deeds. In like manner you explain: Now Ebed-Melek the Cushite . . . heard.²⁶ Now was his name Cushite? Was not his name Zedekiah?²⁷ But as the Cushite is distinguishable by his skin so was Zedekiah distinguished by his deeds. In like manner you explain: Are ye not as the children of the Cushites unto me, O children of Israel, saith the Lord?²⁸ Now is their name [children of] Cushites? Was not their name [children of] Israel? The truth is that as the Cushite is distinguishable by his skin, so are Israel distinguished by their ways²⁹ from all other nations.³⁰

R. Samuel b. Nahmani citing R. Jonathan. explained: [And these were the last words of David], The saying of David the son of Jesse and the saying of the man raised on high,³¹ [means, it is] the saying of David the son of Jesse who established firmly the yoke [discipline] of repentance.³² [The spirit of the Lord spoke by the and His word was upon ny tongue]. The God of Israel said, The Rock of Israel spoke to me: Ruler over man shall be the righteous, even he that ruleth through the [reverent] fear of God.³³ What does this mean? — Said R. Abbahu, It means this: ‘The God of Israel said, to the [David] spake the Rock of Israel; I rule man; who rules Me? [It is] the righteous: for I make a decree and he [may] annul it’.³⁴

And these tire the names of the mighty of David: Josheb-basshebeth a Tahchemonite [etc.].³⁵ What does this mean? — Said R. Abbahu, It means: And these are the mighty deeds of David: ‘Josheb-basshebeth’ — [which means], sitting at the session;³⁶ [that is], When David sat at the College Session he was not seated on cushions and coverlets but on the [bare] ground.³⁷ For all the time that his Master, Ira the Jairite,³⁸ was alive he taught the Rabbis whilst being himself seated on cushions and coverlets; when his soul found rest David used to teach the Rabbis being himself seated on the ground.³⁹ Said they [the Rabbis] to him: ‘Sit, sit on the cushions and coverlets’; but he would not accede to their request.

‘Tahchemoni’.⁴⁰ Rab explained: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to him [to David], ‘Since you have humbled yourself you shall be like Me [that is], that I make a decree and you [may] annul it’. ‘Chief of the Captains’,⁴¹ [that is] you be chief next to the three Fathers. He is Adino⁴² the Eznite,⁴³ [that is] when he was sitting engaged in the [study of] Torah he rendered himself pliant as a worm, but when he went marching out to [wage] war he hardened himself like a lance. ‘On eight hundred slain at one time’, [that is] when he threw a javelin he felled eight hundred slain at one time and moaned for the [shortage of] two hundred, for it is written: How one should chase a thousand.⁴⁴ But an echo came forth and said: ‘Save only for the matter of Uriah the Hittite’!⁴⁵

Said R. Tanhuni son of R. Hiyya a man of Kefar Acco as citing R. Jacob b. Aha who reported R. Simlai; and some say, R. Tanhun, said as reporting R. Huna; and again some say, R. Huna alone said that if a disciple 'separates' someone in [defence of] his personal dignity his 'separation' is an [effective] . For it is taught: 'One who has been "separated" [as under a ban] by the Master is [deemed] "separated" from the disciple; but one who has been "separated" by the disciple is not [deemed] "separated" from the Master'.¹ [That means], not 'separated' from the Master; but in regard to everybody else he is ['separated']. [Now let us see; 'separated'] for what [offence]? If [it was imposed] for some offence towards Heaven, then there is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the Lord!² Therefore [presumably] it is only so³ [where a disciple had pronounced it] in [defence of] his personal dignity. R. Joseph said that a Collegiate⁴ may enforce his own rights in a matter where he is perfectly certain [as to the law]. There was once a certain Collegiate whose reputation was objectionable. Said Rab Judah, How is one to act? To put the shammetha on him [we cannot], as the Rabbis have need of him [as an able teacher]. Not to put the shammetha on him [we cannot afford] as the name of Heaven is being profaned. Said he to Rabbah b. Bar Hana, Have you heard alight on that point? He replied: 'Thus said R. Johanan: What means the text, For the priest's lips should keep knowledge and they should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts?⁵ [It means, that] if the Master is like unto a messenger of the Lord of Hosts, they should seek the law at his mouth; but if [he be] not , they should not seek the law at his mouth'. [Thereupon] Rab Judah pronounced the shammetha on him. In the end Rab Judah became indisposed. The Rabbis came to enquire about him and that man came along with them. When Rab Judah beheld him he laughed. Said the man to him: Not enough for him that he put upon that man [me] the shammetha, but he even laughs at me! Replied he [Rab Judah]: I was not laughing at you: but as I am departing to that World [beyond] I am glad to think that even towards such a personage as you I showed no indulgence. Rab Judah's soul came to rest.⁶ The man [then] came to the College [and] said, 'Absolve me'. Said the Rabbis to him, There is no man here of the standing of Rab Judah who could absolve you; but go to R. Judah Nesi'ah⁷ that he may absolve you. He went and presented himself to him. Said he to R. Ammi: 'Go forth and look into his case; if it be necessary to absolve him, absolve him'. R. Ammi looked into his case and had a mind to absolve him. Then R. Samuel b. Nahmani got up on his feet and said: 'Why, even a 'separation" imposed by one of the domestics in Rabbi's house was not lightly treated by the Rabbis for three years; how much more so one imposed by our colleague, Rab Judah!' Said R. Zera, From the fact that this venerable scholar⁸ should just now have turned up at this College after not having come here for many years, you must take it that it is not desirable to absolve that man. He [R. Judah Nesi'ah]⁹ did not absolve him. He went away weeping. A wasp then came and stung him in the privy member and he died. They brought him into 'The Grotto of the Pious', but they admitted him not.¹⁰ They brought him into 'The Grotto of the Judges' and they received him.¹¹ Why was he admitted there? — Because he had acted according to the dictum of R. Il'ai. For R. Il'ai says, If one sees that his [evil] yezer¹² is gaining sway over him, let him go away where he is not known; let him put on sordid¹³ clothes, don a sordid wrap and do the sordid deed that his heart desires rather than profane the name of Heaven openly.¹⁴

What [was the incident] of the domestic in Rabbi's house? It was one of the maidservants in Rabbi's house that had noticed a man beating his grown-up son and said, Let that fellow be under a shammetha! because he sinned against the words [of Holy Writ]: Put not a stumbling-block before the blind.¹⁵ For it is taught: 'And put not a stumbling-block before the blind', that text applies¹⁶ to one who beats his grown-up son.¹⁷

Resh Lakish was once guarding an orchard [when] a fellow came and ate [some] figs; he shouted at him, but the fellow heeded him not, [whereupon] he said: 'Let that fellow be under a shammetha!' He replied: 'Rather be that other fellow [Resh Lakish] under a shammetha! Though I have incurred a pecuniary liability towards you, did I incur a "separation"?' [Resh Lakish] went to the College [and reported it]; they said to him: 'His "separation" is a [justified]¹⁸ "separation", yours was not a [justified] "separation".' And what is the remedy for it? — 'Go to him that he [himself] may absolve you'. [But] I know him not! Said they to him [to Resh Lakish]: 'Go to the Nasi that he absolve you;' for it is taught: '[If] they "separate" him and he knows not who he was that "separated" him, let him go to the Nasi and let him absolve him from his "separation".'

Said R. Huna, At [one of the Synods at] Usha¹⁹ they made a regulation that if the Ab Beth din²⁰ committed an offence he was not to be [formally] 'separated', but someone was to tell him, Save your dignity and remain at home.²¹ Should he again offend they 'separate' him, because [otherwise there would be] a profanation of the Name [of God]. And this is at variance with Resh Lakish; for Resh Lakish said: If a scholar-disciple has committed an offensive deed they do not 'separate' him publicly, because it is said: Therefore shalt thou stumble' in the day and the prophet also shall stumble with thee in the night, [that is to say], Keep it dark,²² like night.

Mar Zutra, the Pious,²³ if ever a Collegiate incurred the shammetha, pronounced the shammetha first on himself²⁴ and then pronounced it on the culprit; as he entered his house he first absolved himself and then absolved the other.²⁵ Said R. Giddal, as citing Rab: 'A scholar-disciple may Pronounce "separation" on himself and absolve himself'. Said R. Papa, 'May [good] befall me, for I have never put the shammetha on any Collegiate.'²⁶ But then, when a Collegiate did incur the shammetha, how did he act? — As they do [in the West]; for in the West [Palestine] they appoint a tribunal for chastising a Collegiate but do not appoint a tribunal for pronouncing a shammetha.

What is [the etymology of the word] shammetha? — Said Rab, [It is], sham-mitha, 'death is there'. Samuel said, [It is], shemamah yihye,²⁷ 'he shall be a desolation'; and its effects adhere to one like grease to the oven. And this is in disagreement with [what] Resh Lakish said. For Resh Lakish said that just as when it [the herem] enters, it penetrates the two hundred and forty eight joints [on one's body],²⁸ so on its withdrawal it departs from the two hundred and forty eight joints. When it enters, as it is written; And the city shall be Herem, [a curse²⁹ [i.e.,] Herem being in its letter value two hundred and forty eight,³⁰ So at its withdrawal, as it is written: In wrath remember Rahem [to have compassion]³¹ the letter value being the same.

R. Joseph said, 'Cast a shammetha on the dog's tail and it will do its work'. For there was a dog that used to eat the Rabbis' shoes and they did not know what it was [that did it], so they pronounced a shammetha on the culprit, and the dog's tail caught fire and got burnt. There was a domineering fellow who bullied a certain Collegiate. The latter came before R. Joseph [for advice]. Said he to him: 'Go and put the shammetha on him'. 'I am afraid of him', he replied. Said he to him, 'Then go and take [out] a Writ³² against him.' — 'I am all the more afraid to do that!' Said R. Joseph to him: 'Take that Writ, put it into a jar, take it to a graveyard and hoot into it a thousand shipur [horn-blasts] on forty days'. He went and did so. The jar burst and the domineering bully died.

What is the [significance of using a] shipur'? — That he'll pay, the penalty.¹ What signifies the tabra² [tooting]? — Said R. Isaac son of R. Judah: [It suggests] 'the tumbling of high houses': for it is taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said that wherever the Sages set their eye against one, [the result was] either death or poverty.³

AND THE NAZIRITE OR LEPER, EMERGING FROM HIS [STATE OF] IMPURITY TO [A STATE OF] PURITY. . . R. Jeremiah enquired of R. Zera whether this [concession]⁴ was allowed [only] when they had not an [earlier] opportunity.⁴ or, maybe, even if they had an [earlier] opportunity? — He replied, We learned it [in a Baraita]:⁵ All those who were mentioned [in the Mishnah]⁶ as being allowed to crop their hair during the festival [week, are allowed] where they had no [earlier] opportunity, but if they had an [earlier] opportunity [and did not use it] are forbidden.⁷ The Nazirite and the leper [however] are allowed,⁷ even if they had an opportunity [and did not use it]; the reason being that they should not delay bringing their [prescribed] offerings⁸ [on their release from their respective restrictions].

A Tanna taught: A priest and a mourner also⁹ are allowed to crop themselves.⁷ Now, as to this mourner, under what conditions [may he do so]? Shall I assume that the eighth day of his [mourning] fell on the day before the festival? Then he ought to have trimmed himself then, on the day before¹⁰ the festival! Again, if the eighth day of his [mourning] came on a Sabbath which was the day before the festival; [if so] then he should have trimmed his hair on the Friday. as R. Hisda stated, citing Rabina b. Shila, that 'the rule in practice' followed Abba Saul's view and that the Sages concurred with Abba Saul,¹¹ [namely] that where the eighth day of his [mourning] came on a Sabbath which was the day before a festival, [in such a case] he was allowed to trim himself on the Friday!¹² — No, this [statement in the Baraita] is required for the case where the seventh day of his [mourning] came on a Sabbath which was also the day before the festival. [In that case] the external Tanna takes the view of Abba Saul who says that part of a day may be deemed as an entire day; and [accordingly] the seventh day of his [mourning] is counted both with the preceding and with the following period¹³ and as that happens to be a Sabbath day,¹⁴ the mourner was prevented [from trimming himself on the festival eve].¹⁵ [Whereas], our Tanna¹⁶ takes the view of the Sages who say that part of a day is not deemed as an entire day, and [accordingly] the mourner has not yet completed the seven days of his mourning [before the festival].¹⁷

Now as to the priest,¹⁸ under what conditions [may he]? Shall I assume that [the turn of] his Ward¹⁹ terminated on the day before the festival?²⁰ He should have trimmed himself then on the day before the festival! No, it is necessary to assume that [the turn of] his Ward terminated on the festival [day].²¹ [In that case], our Tanna¹⁶ then holds in view of what we learned: At three periods of the year, all the Wards have an equal right to [assist in placing] the 'ordained' parts²² of the festival offerings [on the altar] and sharing the 'shewbread'²³ — that we consider him as one whose Ward had virtually not yet completed [its turn].²⁴ Whereas the external Tanna holds that although [in a way] he belongs to the other Wards [also], his own Ward had nevertheless [actually] completed [its turn, and therefore he may trim himself].²⁵ Our Rabbis taught: All those who were mentioned [in the Mishnah] as being allowed to crop their hair during the festival [week] are likewise allowed to crop their hair during the days of their mourning. But surely it is taught that they are forbidden? — Said R. Hisda as citing R. Shela: When it is taught here that they 'are allowed [to crop their hair during the days of their mourning]', it refers only to persons who suffered one bereavement immediately after another. If it refers only [as you say] to persons who suffered one bereavement immediately after another, what is the point in wording it 'all those who were mentioned [in the Mishnah]' whereas [under such unfortunate circumstances] it is even applicable to anybody, as it is taught: 'If a person suffered one bereavement immediately after another and his hair has become oppressively [long], he may ease it with a razor and wash his raiment with water'? — But that has already been explained: R. Hisda said [it means], ease it with a razor but not with scissors: wash his raiment with water but not natron or lye.²⁶ [Furthermore] said R. Hisda: This [Baraita] indicates that [otherwise] a mourner is barred from washing [his clothes].

Our Rabbis taught: 'Just as it was said that cropping the hair during the festival [week] is not allowed, so is paring the nails during the festival [week] not allowed. This is R. Judah's opinion; but R. Jose allows it. And just as it was said that a mourner is not allowed to crop his hair within [the period of] his mourning, so is paring the nails not allowed to him within [the period of] his mourning. This is R. Judah's opinion; but R. Jose allows it that the Halachah follows the opinion of R. Jose [both] in regard to the festival [week] and to mourning. For Samuel said that in [questions appertaining to] mourning, the halachah follows the authority of the more lenient view.

Phineas, Mar Samuel's brother, suffered a bereavement¹ and Samuel called on him to ask him the cause of it.² Noticing that his nails were long, he asked him why he had not cut them. He replied: Had this happened to you, would you have been so regardless of it [as to cut them]? This was [inauspicious], 'like an error which proceedeth from a ruler';³ and Samuel [later] suffered a bereavement himself. When his brother [Phineas] called on him to ask the cause of it, Samuel took his cut nails and cast them down in front of his brother, saying, 'Do you not hold that a covenant has been made with the lips?'⁴ For R. Johanan said: Whence is derived the notion that the lips are subject to a covenant? From what is said: And Abraham said unto his young men: 'Abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad will go yonder; and we will worship and [we will] come back to you';⁵ and the words came true⁶ so that they both came back.

Some argued from the above [incident] that [only] the fingernails may [be cut],⁷ but not the toe-nails. But R. 'Anan b. Tahlifa said, 'I myself had it explained to me by Samuel, that there was no distinction made between the finger-nails and the toe-nails'. R. Hiyya b. Ashi citing Rab said: But with a nail-cutter it is forbidden. Said R. Shaman b. Abba: 'I was once standing before R. Johanan⁸ at the College during the festival week when R. Johanan bit off his nails and threw them away. Learn from this [incident] three points: Learn that it is allowed to take off nails during the festival week; that [doing it with the teeth] was not considered objectionable, and that [nails] may be thrown away'. But this [deduction] is not [correct]? as surely it is taught. 'Three things were said in reference to nails: One who buries them is righteous;⁹ one who burns them is pious¹⁰ and one who throws them away is a villain'! What is the reason? Lest a pregnant woman should step over them and miscarry; [but then], women do not 'often come to the College. And should you say that sometimes the nails are gathered and thrown away outside, once they have been shifted their spell has been lifted.¹¹

Rab Judah. as citing Rab, said: 'A pair [of scholars] came from Hammathan¹² before Rabbi . . .', and Mar Zutra taught [the same as a Baraitha]. 'A pair [of scholars] came from Hammathan before Rabbi, and asked him about [paring] the nails [during mourning]; and he permitted it to them. And if they had asked him about [trimming] the upper lip. he would¹³ have permitted it to them likewise'. And Samuel stated that they did ask him also about the upper lip and that he permitted them.

Abitol the hair-dresser¹⁴ said in the name of Rab that [trimming the] upper lip means from corner¹⁵ to corner; [and of the drooping ends¹⁶ too, all that causes inconvenience]. Said R. Ammi, And as regards the upper lip [it also means only] whatever part causes inconvenience. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, And to me [all of it]¹⁷ is like the [end of the] upper lip causing inconvenience.

And Abitol the hair-dresser, citing Rab, said [also this]: Pharaoh¹⁸ the contemporary of Moses, was [a puny fellow] a cubit [in height] with a beard a cubit long and his shock of hair¹⁹ a cubit and a span, justifying what is said: And He setteth up over it [the kingdom of men] the lowest of men.²⁰ And [furthermore] said Abitol the hair-dresser, as citing Rab, Pharaoh, the contemporary of Moses, was a Magus,²¹ because it is said: [Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning,] lo he goeth out unto the water.²²

AND THESE [MAY] WASH [THEIR CLOTHES] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], ONE ARRIVING FROM ABROAD.²³ R. Assi, as citing R. Johanan said that one who has but one tunic is allowed to wash it during the festival week. Thereupon R. Jeremiah put an objection to him: 'AND THESE [MAY] WASH [THEIR CLOTHES] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. ONE ARRIVING FROM ABROAD etc.' [which enumeration implies that only] those here mentioned may [wash] but one who has but one tunic²⁴ [may] not? — Said R. Jacob to R. Jeremiah [b. Tahlifa],²⁵ I will explain that to you: Our Mishnah [permits to wash] even if he has two garments if they be soiled.²⁶ R. Isaac son of R. Jacob b. Giyora sent [a message] in the name of R. Johanan that garments made of flax²⁷ one may wash during the festival week. Raba raised an objection: HAND-TOWELS, BARBERS'-WRAPS AND BATHTOWELS [MAY BE WASHED].

(18) Under Pharaoh, Rab alluded veiledly to the new Persian rulers as may be gathered from the following description of the Parthians (or Persians). Two Palestinian Rabbis had visited Nehardea and had there an awkward experience. R. Jose b. Kippar, on his return, explained his timidity, thus: 'Those people are a cubit (in height) with a cap a cubit high, speaking as ventriloquists, bearing formidable names (such as) Arda(shir) and Arta (xerxes) and having a shock of hair on their head. If they say, "Fetter" they put on fetters; if they say "Kill" they kill . . . and they were related to royalty', Git. 14b. 'Surena (a Parthian grandee) had his face painted and his hair parted after the fashion of the Medes, whereas the Parthians (whom he led against Crassus 53 B.C.E.) made a more terrible appearance with their shaggy hair gathered in a mass upon their forehead after the Scythian manner'. Plutarch's Lives, Crassus (Everyman's Library, Vol. II, pp. 292-293). 'But to describe their persons and customs (says Ammianus Marcellus) they are nearly all slight in figure, swarthy... fierce-looking with goat-like eyes, eyebrows arched in semi-circle and joined, handsome beards and long hair'. Amm. Marcell. Chapter XXIII, VI, 75 (Bohn's ed. pp. 343ff expedition of Julian in 363 C.E.).

(22) Ex. VII, 15. It is the reference to the light of morning which is the emphatic part of this quotation. Rab undoubtedly referred to the then national revival of Zoroastrianism on the defeat of Artaban IV and the overthrow of the Parthian, Arsacid dynasty by Ardashir I — (Artaxerxes) and the establishment of the Sassanid dynasty in 226 C.E. Artaban (who is said to have been friendly disposed towards Rab) was captured, held a prisoner and finally put to death in 233. i.e., at the time when Alexander Severus repelled the Persian attacks on the Roman outposts in Northern Mesopotamia. Ardashir 'was an ardent devotee of the Zoroastrian doctrine and closely connected with the Priesthood and in his royal style assumed the designation Mazdayasman' (i.e., devotee of Ahura-Mazda) and depicted himself on rock-reliefs as King and Ormuzd both on horseback, i.e., King and god as Pharaoh did of old. Shapur I, his son and successor, was more liberal and friendly to Samuel. Hence the discussion between Rab and Samuel (Shab. 75a) as to what is a magus, a sorcerer (a muttering quack-priest) or a blasphemer, reviler of God? On the historical facts cf. Enc. Brit. II (1911) Art. Peria, VIII, p. 219a-b.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 18b

This [detailed enumeration] implies that these only [one may wash], but not [all sorts of] garments made of flax? — Said Abaye to him, [Not necessarily]; Our Mishnah included even those other kinds [of material].¹ Said Bar Hedyā: I have myself seen at the lake of Tiberias [people] bringing along basins full of flax garments [and washing them] during the festival week. Abaye [however] strongly contested this [testimony]. Who can vouch to us that they did it with the approval of the Sages? Possibly they did so without the approval of the Sages!

MISHNAH AND THE FOLLOWING DOCUMENTS MAY BE INDITED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]: INSTRUMENTS OF BETROTHAL,² BILLS OF DIVORCE³ AND RECEIPTS;⁴ TESTA MENTS, BEQUESTS⁵ AND PROSBOLS;⁶ VALUATION CERTIFICATES⁷ AND ORDERS FOR ALIMONY;⁸ RECORDS OF HALIZAH⁹ AND OF REPUDIATION [OF MARRIAGE]¹⁰ AND ARBITRATION RECORDS;¹¹ JUDGMENT ORDERS AND DIPLOMATIC¹² CORRESPONDENCE.

GEMARA. [INSTRUMENTS OF BETROTHAL]. Said Samuel, 'One is allowed to betroth a woman during the festival week, [the reason being] lest another [rival suitor] anticipate him'. Might one suggest that [the wording here] lends support to Samuel's view: AND THE FOLLOWING MAY BE INDITED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]: INSTRUMENTS OF BETROTHAL. What is [meant by this]? Is it not actually inditing the formula of Kiddushin?¹³ — No, [it means, drawing up] the [preliminary] terms, and as R. Giddal, citing Rab, stated: 'How much do you give to your son?' 'So much and so much.' 'How much do you give to your daughter?' 'So much and so much'. [If] they then stood up and pronounced the 'dedication' [espousal formula] they have acquired their legal rights [to the offers]; these are [among] the matters that are [legally] acquired by word of mouth.¹⁴ Might one suggest [then] the following as lending support to him [to Samuel]? 'One may take a wife during the festival [week]. whether a virgin or a widow, but not effect a levirate marriage;¹⁵ as it is a rejoicing for him [the groom],¹⁶ [which implies] that betrothing is allowed. — Not [quite so]. He stated [the rule in the form] ‘Not merely [this is not allowed but even that]: Not merely [it is forbidden] to betroth,¹⁷ by which no scriptural obligation is carried out; but even to take [a wife in wedlock] whereby a scriptural obligation is fulfilled,¹⁸ he is forbidden. Come and hear [a support for this]: For it was learnt in the School of Samuel:¹⁹ [Grooms] may betroth, but not bring [a bride] home: and they may not make a feast of betrothal nor effect a levirate marriage, as this is a rejoicing for him [the groom]’. Infer this.²⁰

But [yet], could Samuel have said ‘Lest another [rival suitor] anticipate him’? Surely Rab Judah, as citing Samuel, said: [‘Forty days before the embryo is formed²¹ an echo issues²² forth [on high] announcing, "The daughter of So-and-so is [to be a wife] to Soand-so".’ [Similarly]. ‘Such and such a field²³ is [to belong] to Soand-so’. — No; what it means is, ‘Lest another [rival suitor] anticipate him’ by means of prayer, as is illustrated by what occurred to Raba, who overheard a certain fellow praying for grace saying: ‘May that girl be destined to be mine!’ Said Raba to the man: ‘Pray not for grace thus; if she be meet for you, you will not lose her, and if not, you have challenged Providence’.²⁴ Later he overheard him praying that either he should die before her or she before him. Said Raba to him: ‘[Praying Jack],²⁵ did I not tell you not to pray for grace in this matter?’ Thus said Rab in the name of R. Reuben b. Estroble, from the Torah,²⁶ from the Prophets and from the Hagiographa it may be shown that a woman is [destined to] a man by God. From the Torah: Then Laban and Bethuel answered and said, The thing proceedeth from the Lord.²⁷ From the Prophets: But his [Samson's] father and mother knew not that it was of the Lord.²⁸ And from the Hagiographa: House and riches are the inheritance of fathers, but a prudent wife is from the Lord.²⁹

And Rab said [also this] in the name of R. Reuben b. Estroble: ‘A person does not incur suspicion unless he has done the thing [suspected]; and if he has not done it wholly he has done it partly; and if he has not done it partly, he has a mind to do it; and if he has not had a mind to do it, he has seen others doing it and enjoyed [the sight of it]’. [As against this], R. Jacob [of Nehar Pekod]³⁰ raised an objection [from the following text]: ‘And the children of Israel did impute things that were not right unto the Lord their God.³¹ There they did it [purposely] to provoke [God].

Come [then] and hear [this statement]: And [Moses heard and fell on his face].³² What tidings had he heard? — Said R. Samuel b. Nahmani, as reporting R. Jonathan: [He heard that] they suspected him of [adultery with] a married woman, as it is said: And they were jealous³³ of Moses in the camp and of Aaron the holy one of the Lord.³⁴ And, said R. Samuel b. Isaac, this indicates that everyone was jealous of his wife because of Moses. — There [again] it was done out of hatred.³⁵

[Then] come and hear [this statement]: Said R. Jose, May my share be with him whom they suspect of something of which he is innocent. Nay further, R. Papa said, They suspected me myself of something of which I was innocent! — It is not difficult [to explain]. One [speaks of a] rumor that dies away, the other of a rumor that persists. And how long would a persistent rumor be? — Said Abaye. ‘Nanna’ told me, Local gossip lasts a day and a half; and that holds good only if it did not cease in the meantime, but if it had ceased in the meantime, we take no notice of it. If, however, it does cease in the meantime, the rule is [to disregard it] only where it was not [stopped] out of fear, but if it was stopped out of fear, it is not [to be disregarded]; again, the rule is [to disregard it] only where it does not break out again, but where it breaks out again [we do] not [disregard it]; also, the rule is [to disregard it] when he [the maligned] person has no enemies, but if he has enemies, [we say] it is his enemies who have spread the [adverse] rumor.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: A person [may] write [the scriptural sections for] phylacteries or mezuzoth for his own use [and spin on his thigh the blue threads for his own fringe],² and for others [he may do so] as a favour:³ this is R. Meir's view; R. Judah says, He may artfully dispose of his own and [then] write fresh ones for his own use. R. Jose says, He may write and sell [them] in his usual way enough for his [personal] requirements',⁴ Rab gave a decision to R. Hananel and some say, Rabbah b. Bar-Hanah to R. Hananel⁵ — that the halachah is that one [may] write and then in his way to the extent of his requirements.

AND [MAY] SPIN ON HIS THIGH BLUE-WOOL FOR HIS FRINGE. Our Rabbis taught: A person [may] spin on his thigh the blue [thread] for his fringe, but [may] not do so with a stone [as a spindle-whorl]: that is R. Eliezer's view; but the Sages say [he may] even with a stone. R. Judah says in his [R. Eliezer's] name: [He may] with a stone, but not with a spindle; but the Sages say, [He may] either with stone or with spindle. Said R. Judah as citing Samuel, and similarly R. Hiyya b. Abba said as citing R. Johanan: The halachah is that [one may spin the blue-wool for his fringe] whether with a stone [as whorl] or with a spindle;⁶ and it is also the halachah that one [may] write in his usual way and sell sufficient for his requirements.⁷

MISHNAH. IF ONE BURIES HIS DEAD THREE DAYS⁸ BEFORE A FESTIVAL, THE RESTRICTIONS⁹ APPERTAINING TO HIS SEVEN DAYS' MOURNING FALL AWAY; [IF HE BURIES HIS DEAD] EIGHT DAYS BEFORE A FESTIVAL, THE RESTRICTIONS OF THE THIRTY [DAYS] FALL AWAY,¹⁰ BECAUSE THEY [THE SAGES] SAID THAT THE SABBATH ENTERS INTO COUNT BUT DOES NOT INTERRUPT,¹¹ WHILE FESTIVALS INTERRUPT¹² AND DO NOT ENTER INTO COUNT.¹³ R. ELIEZER SAYS, SINCE THE SANCTUARY [AT JERUSALEM] WAS LAID IN RUINS, [THE FEAST OF] 'AZERETH'¹⁴ IS [RECKONED] AS AN [ORDINARY] SABBATH [DAY];¹⁵ RABBAN GAMALIEL SAYS, NEW YEAR AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT ARE [RECKONED] AS FESTIVALS; WHILE THE SAGES SAY, [THE RULE IS] NEITHER ACCORDING TO THE STATEMENT OF THE ONE NOR ACCORDING TO THE STATEMENT OF THE OTHER, BUT AZERETH IS [RECKONED] LIKE [THE OTHER] FESTIVALS AND NEW YEAR AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT ARE [RECKONED] AS A SABBATH [DAY].

GEMARA. [THE RESTRICTIONS... FALL AWAY]. Said Rab, [this means only] 'the restrictions'¹⁶ fall away, but the days [of mourning] do not fall away¹⁷ and so said also R. Huna:¹⁸ The 'restrictions fall away but the 'days' do not fall away; and R. Shesheth¹⁹ said that even the days also fall away.²⁰ What is the meaning of, 'But the days [of mourning] do not fall away'? [It means] that if he had not cropped his hair on the day before the festival he is forbidden to crop himself after the festival

Here it refers to the abstention, during the seven days of mourning, from work and bodily comforts — bathing, anointing, footwear and fresh clean clothes, i.e., the maintenance of a neglected disconsolate appearance in honour of the deceased. The public, religious, festive rejoicing suspends, or according to some, cancels the formal observance of sorrow.

(10) I.e., the remaining period of formal mourning down to thirty days lapses on his having duly observed the first seven days plus one day of the remaining period before the festival.

(11) I.e., it neither counts as a blank day, nor does it cancel the rest. The remaining days of mourning continue after the Sabbath.

(15) It enters into count and does not interrupt.

(16) I.e., only the outer, formal observances of mourning but not the obligation.

(17) I.e., the period of mourning of seven or (down to) thirty days (as the case may be, according to the wording of the Mishnah) is not canceled but only deferred pending the festive time.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 19b

and that is [exactly] what is taught [in a Baraita]: If one buries his dead three days before a festival his restrictions of the seven fall away;¹ if eight days before a festival his restrictions of the thirty fall away;¹ and he crops [his hair] on the day before the festival.² If he had not cropped himself on the day before the festival, he is forbidden to crop himself after the festival.³ Abba Saul says, He is permitted to crop himself after the festival; for just as the '[observed] obligation⁴ of three' [days] quashes the restriction of the seven⁵ so does the '[observed] obligation of seven' quash the 'restrictions of thirty'.⁶ [You Say, 'The observed obligation of] seven'? But we learned [in our Mishnah] 'eight' [days before the festival]! — Abba Saul maintains the view that part of a day is [reckoned] as an entire day and [here] the seventh day [of mourning] enters into the count both this way and that.⁷ R. Hisda, as citing Rabina son of Shela, said the halachah follows the opinion of Abba Saul;⁸ and the Sages concur with Abba Saul that when his eighth day comes on a Sabbath which is the day before a festival he is permitted to crop himself [even] in the Friday.⁹

Whose opinion is followed in the statement in which R. Amram, citing Rab, said: '[As to] the mourner, as soon as the comforters have risen to depart from his house, he is permitted to bathe'? Whose view [is it]? — It is Abba Saul's [view]. Said Abaye, The halachah follows Abba Saul's view in regard to the seventh day [of mourning] and the Sages concur with Abba Saul in regard to the thirtieth day [of mourning] that we say, part of the day is regarded as the whole day. Raba said, The halachah follows Abba Saul's view in regard to the thirtieth day, but in regard to the seventh day the halachah does not follow the view of Abba Saul. And the Nehardeans¹⁰ say the halachah follows Abba Saul's view in both instances, because Samuel stated that in matters appertaining to mourning the halachah is to follow the view of the more lenient authority.

Whence [in Scripture] do we derive the term of thirty days [of mourning]? — It is obtained by an analogy¹¹ between two texts which have in common the term pera' used [in connection] with mourning¹² and again used [in connection] with the Nazirite,¹³ [namely]: Here [in the law about mourning] it is written, Let not the hair of your heads grow long [tifra'u];¹² and there [in the law of the Nazirite] it is written: He shall let the locks of the hair of his head [pera'] grow long.¹³ Just as the period there [for the Nazirite] is thirty days, so also here [for the mourner] it is thirty days. And whence do we derive it there? — Said R. Mattena: An unspecified Nazirite-vow is [binding] for thirty days. What is the reason? The text there reads: He shall be [Yihyeh] holy;¹⁴ the [consonant] letter value of Yihyeh being [ten + five + ten + five] thirty.

Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua,¹⁵ [Authorities] all accept the view that when the third day [of mourning] occurs on the day before the festival the mourner is forbidden to wash [his whole body]¹⁶ till the evening.¹⁷ Said R. Nehemiah the son of R. Joshua: I once found R. Pape and R. Papa sitting together and stating that the halachah is in accordance with the statement of R. Huna the son of Joshua. Some report it thus: R. Nehemiah the son of R. Joseph said, I once found R. Pape, R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua sitting together and stating that all are agreed that when the third day occurs on the day before a festival, the mourner is forbidden to bathe till the evening.

Abaye enquired of Rabbah: What if one buried his dead during the festival? Does the festival enter into his counting of the thirty days, or does the festival not enter into his counting of the thirty days?¹⁸ I am not asking about [counting the festival as part of] the seven days, because the 'due observance of seven [days of mourning] does not obtain during the festival;¹⁹ but what I do ask is about the period of thirty days, because the 'due observance of thirty days does [partly] obtain during the festival;²⁰ what [is your view]? — He [Rabbah] replied, The [days of the] festival do not enter into the counting.

[Thereupon] he put to him an objection from [the following]: If one buried his dead two days before the festival, he counts five [supplementary] days after the festival,²¹ and his work is done [for him] by others; his men-servants and maid-servants do [their domestic] work quietly indoors, privily; and the public do not [need to] condole formally²² with him

(1) As then his obligation to the dead is already sufficiently fulfilled.

(2) In honour of the festival, although he is still within the thirty days.

(3) I.e., the remaining period of mourning up to thirty is resumed: it having been only suspended but not canceled.

(4) מצוה means a positive order and denotes rather the positive aspect, the active fulfillment of the obligation to the departed, in contrast to the גזירה, the restrictive aspect of mourning.

(5) Not to be resumed again.

(6) I.e., again, if he had not cropped himself before the festival he is permitted to do so immediately after the festival.

(7) I.e., that after part has served for the seventh day, the remainder can count as part of the eighth day with its easier regimen.

(8) [With reference to his latter ruling, cf. D.S. note 7 and Han].

(9) Though it is still the seventh.

(10) Represented by R. Han., Sanh. 17b. Also by R. Nahman b. Isaac (according to another source). V. A. Hyman, Toledoth II, p. 919.

(11) This question interrupts the discussion. The method of equalling two texts is gezerah shawah, v. Glos.

(12) V. Lev. X, 6; Aaron and his sons were thus commanded at the death of Nadab and Abihu, not to allow their hair to go loose, i.e., not to grow freely or long.

(13) Num. VI, 5. Cf. supra 15a.

(14) Num. VI, 5: י' 10, י" 5 (twice).

(15) The discussion on the former theme is resumed here.

(16) I.e., to bathe in warm water which affords pleasure.

(17) Even Abba Saul will in this case not regard a part of the day as the whole.

(18) Formal mourning after burial falls into three periods: (i) three days of weeping and (ii) up to the seventh day

(part-inclusive) for lamenting with abstention from work and attention to the person; then (iii) down to the thirtieth day (part-inclusive) in slightly mitigated formal mourning.

(19) Therefore it is certain that the mourner begins his observance of the seven after the festival; and as these had not begun, there was as yet no part to be taken, into account.

(20) For on it too, like during the thirty days, washing clothes and cropping hair are forbidden.

(21) To make up the requisite seven days of mourning.

(22) Lit., 'busy themselves'.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 20a

as they have already done that Service towards him during the festival. As a general principle on this matter [it may be stated]: 'Whatever appertains to the mourner [himself],¹ that the festival interrupts,² but whatever appertains to the [obligations of] the public,³ that the festival does not interrupt'. If he buried his dead three days towards the conclusion of the festival,⁴ he counts seven days [of mourning] after the festival. During the first four days [after the festival] the public engage [in condoling] with him, but in the last three days the public do not [need to] condole with him as they have already done [this service] towards him during the [three days within the] festival; and the festival enters into the counting. Now, does not [this last sentence] refer to the latter part [of the statement]?⁵ — No, [said Rabbah] it refers to the former part [of the statement].⁶ Thereupon he put an objection to him [from the continuation of the Baraitha]: The festival enters into the counting of thirty days: how, for instance? If one buried his dead at the beginning of the festival he counts seven days [of mourning] after the festival and his work is done by others; his men-servants and maid-servants do work quietly indoors, and the public do not [need to] engage [in condoling] with him, as they have already done that service towards him during the festival; and the festival enters in the counting!⁷ — That Is a confutation [of Rabbah].

When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported R. Johanan to have said, Even if one buried his dead during the festival;⁸ and similarly R. Eleazar gave as his decision to his son R. Pedath, Even if one buried his dead during the festival.

Our Rabbis taught: 'If one carried out the rule of overturning the couch⁹ for three days before the festival, he need not overturn it [any more] after the festival; these are the words of R. Eliezer; but the Sages say: [He need not] even if he had [done so] only for one day or even for one hour. Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, Those were the very words of Beth Shammai and the very words of Beth Hillel: for Beth Shammai say: 'For three days [before the festival]', and the Hillelites Say: Even [if] for one day'. R. Huna said: R. Hiyya b. Abba, as citing R. Johanan. stated¹⁰ — Simeon said that R. Johanan told R. Hiyya b. Abba and R. Huna: [He need not], even if he had [overturned the couch] for one day; even for one hour. Raba stated¹¹ that the halachah is according to our Tanna [of the Mishnah] who said three days.¹²

Rabina once came to Sura-cum-Euphrates.¹³ Said R. Habiba to Rabina: What is the law [on this point]? — He replied: 'Even [if he had the couch overturned] one day and even for one hour'. R. Hiyya b. Abba, R. Ammi and R. Isaac were [once] seated in the marquee of R. Isaac b. Eleazar¹⁴ when a discussion was begun between them: Whence is it authentically derived that the observance of mourning is for seven days? From the text, And I shall turn your feasts¹⁵ into mourning . . . [and I will make it as the mourning for an only son];¹⁶ just as the 'Feast' lasts seven days.¹⁵ so [the period of] mourning is also for seven days. But why not [draw an analogy with] the feast of 'Azereth,¹⁷ which lasts but one day? — [No], that [analogy] is needed [for another lesson] as explained by Resh Lakish; for Resh Lakish said in the name of R. Judah Nesi'ah:¹⁸ Whence is it derived that on [the receipt of] belated tidings¹⁹ [formal] mourning obtains for one day only? From the text, And I shall turn your feasts into mourning;²⁰ and we find 'Azereth as an instance where one day's celebration is designated [a 'Feast'].

Our Rabbis taught: On receiving near tidings [formal] mourning obtains for seven [days] as well as [up to] thirty [days]; on distant tidings, it obtains for one day only. Which are 'near' tidings and which 'distant' tidings? 'Near' tidings are [recent tidings] within, thirty [days] and 'distant' tidings are [belated tidings] after thirty [days]: these are the words of R. Akiba; the Sages, however, say, One and the same [practice obtains in both], on [the receipt of] 'near' tidings or of 'distant' tidings, [formal mourning] obtains for seven as well as [up to] thirty [days]. Said Rabbah b. Bar Hanah, as citing R. Johanan: Wherever you find a single authority expressing a lenient view and a number expressing a strict view, the halachah is in accordance with the strict view, save in this case: that although R. Akiba is lenient and the Sages are strict, the halachah is in accordance with R. Akiba, as Samuel stated, that in matters obtaining to mourning the halachah follows the lenient authority.

R. Hanina²¹ received tidings from Be[th]-Hozai about [the death of] his father; he consulted²² R. Hisda, [who] told him, 'On [receipt of] distant tidings [formal mourning] obtains for one day only'. R. Nathan b. Ammi received tidings from Be[th]-Hozai about his mother; he consulted²² Raba, who told him: The authorities have already stated [that] on [receipt of] distant tidings [formal mourning] obtains for one day only. Thereupon he put to him an objection [from the following]: When does this ruling apply? In the case of the [other] five nearest-of-kin [for whom mourning is] obligatory;²³ but for one's father or mother [mourning is for] seven [days] and [up to] thirty [days] — [Raba] replied: That is the ruling of an individual²⁴ with which we do not concur, as [will be made clear from what] is taught [in the following]: 'There was the case of the father of R. Zadok who had died at Ginzak,²⁵ and he was not informed till after three years. He [thereupon] came and asked of Elisha b. Abuyah and the elders that were with him and they told him to observe seven [days] and [up to] thirty, and when R. Ahiyya's son died in the Diaspora,²⁶ he [too] sat on his account seven and [observed mourning up to] thirty'. But this is not so? For when Rab, R. Hiyya's brother's son — who was also R. Hiyya's sister's son²⁷ — came up there [to Palestine], he [R. Hiyya] said to his nephew [Rab]: 'Is father alive'?²⁸

(1) I.e., the observance of formal mourning by the mourner.

(2) Is deferred till after the festival.

(3) Lit., 'the business of the public', i.e., to pay visits of condolence and offer words of comfort.

(4) בסוף הרגל probably a misreading of בתוך הרגל 'within', 'during the festival', as in MS.M.

(5) 'If one buried his dead during the festival, three days before towards conclusion . . .' As the seven days have been dealt with already, the last sentence must refer to the thirty days, namely, that the festival days enter into the counting; i.e., not as Rabbah replied, negatively.

(6) 'If one buried his dead two days before the festival', when two days of the seven were also two days of the thirty, as Abaye himself admitted when he put the question to Rabbah.

(7) Of the thirty days, obviously.

(8) That part of the festival enters in the counting of thirty days.

(27) R. Aha of Kafri married a widow and his eldest son Aybu married her daughter. From these unions Aha had a son R. Hiyya, and Aybu had a son Rab ('R. Abba the Long', later the famous principal of Sura). Rab's mother was R. Hiyya's half-sister (from one mother, i.e., R. Ala's second wife); and Rab's father Aybu was R. Hiyya's eldest half-brother (from the same father, namely, R. Aha of Kafri). R. Hiyya was therefore doubly related to his nephew Rab, being his paternal uncle as well as his maternal uncle, cf. Pes. 4a (Rashi).

(28) I.e., is my father Aha alive?

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 20b

He replied, 'Mother'¹ is alive'. [Again] he asked 'Is mother² alive'? He replied: 'Father is alive'.³ R. Hiyya thereupon said to his attendant: 'Take off my shoes and bring along my things after me to the [public] baths'. Now from this instance we learn three lessons: We learn that a mourner is forbidden to don shoes;⁴ that distant tidings [entail formal mourning] but for one day; and that part of the day is [deemed] as all entire day's [mourning]⁵ [In fact], R. Hiyya is one person and R. Ahiyya [whose son died in the Diaspora] is another person.⁶

Said R. Jose b. Abin: [If] one received near tidings on a festival and by the [time of its] termination it became distant tidings, [the festival-time] enters into the counting and [accordingly] he observes but one day [of formal mourning]. R. Adda⁷ of Caesarea recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one hears near tidings on a Sabbath day and by the termination of the Sabbath it has become distant tidings, he observes but one day [of formal mourning]. Does one [in such a case] rend his garment, or does he not rend his garment? — R. Mani said: He does not [need to] rend his garment; R. Hanina said, He does rend [his garment]. Said R. Mani to R. Hanina: My view that he does not rend [his garment] is consistent with the fact that there is no [observance of] 'seven'. But according to your view that he [should] rend his garment, tell me, is there a rending of [one's garment] without [the observance of] the seven [days of mourning]? But is there not? Surely, Isi, father of R. Zera — or as sonic say, R. Zera's brother, recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one had no tunic⁸ to rend [at the time] and he obtained one during the seven [days], he should rend it then; [if it became available] after the seven days, he does not rend it! [Thereupon] R. Zera chimed in after him: 'When does this ruling apply? In the case of the [other] five nearest-of-kin [for whom mourning is] obligatory,⁹ but in the case of father or mother one always rends one's garment!' — What you cited [in fact] refers to the deference to be shown to one's father or mother.¹⁰

Our Rabbis taught: For all [nearest-of-kin] mentioned in the Priest's Section¹¹ for whom a priest is to defile himself, a mourner is to observe [formal] mourning, namely, these: [For] his wife, father or mother, brother or [single] sister, son or daughter. To these they added: His brother or single sister from the same mother,¹² as well as his married sister, be it from the same mother or the same father.¹³ And just as he observes [formal] mourning for these, he likewise observes [formal] mourning for their relatives in the second degree:¹⁴ this is R. Akiba's ruling. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: [Extended, formal] mourning is not observed except for one's son's child and a father's father,¹⁵ and the Sages say [by way of definition]: Whomever he mourns for he should also mourn with.¹⁶ Is not the Sages' view [practically] the same as that of the former Tanna?¹⁷ — Not [quite]; there is a [practical] difference between them, whether [we require him to be, that is to say when he is] with him in the [same] house,¹⁸ as Rab¹⁹ said to his son Hiyya, and as R. Huna likewise said to his son Rabbah:²⁰ 'In her presence observe mourning; away from her presence do not observe mourning'.

[When] Mar Ukba's father-in-law's son died, he thought of sitting for him²¹ seven [days of mourning] and [continuing to] thirty. R. Huna going to his house found him [in formal mourning]. 'Do you desire', said he, 'to eat of mourners' fare?'²² They [the Sages] did not say that [one should observe formal mourning] out of deference to his wife only in the case of [the death of] his father-in-law or his mother-in-law,²³ as it is taught: 'If his father-in-law or mother-in-law died the husband may not compel his [mourning] wife to put on kohl or do her hair²⁴ [as usual], but he should overturn his [own] couch and observe [formal] mourning with her; and likewise she, when her father-in-law or mother-in-law dies, may not put on kohl or do her hair [as usual]; but she should overturn her couch and observe [formal] mourning with him'. And another Baraitha taught: 'Although it was stated [that] he may not compel his wife to put on kohl or do her hair [as usual] it is — said they — indisputably correct²⁵ that she [may] mix his wine for him, make his bed and wash his face, hands and feet'.²⁶ [Now the regulations in] the two citations contradict each other.²⁷ Hence infer from this that the one Baraitha refers to [the death of] a father-in-law or mother-in-law,²⁸ while the other to [the death of] other near of kin.²⁹ — This proves it.³⁰ It is also taught thus [explicitly]: 'They did not lay down [that one should observe formal mourning] out of deference to his wife, save [at the death of] his father-in-law or his mother-in-law alone'.

Amemar lost his son's son, and he rent [his garment]. Thereupon his son came and he [again] rent [his garment] in his [son's] presence. He then recollected that he had done it while sitting; he rose and relit [his garment again] standing. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: Whence do we derive that the rending [of a garment] is [to be done] standing? From the text: Then Job rose³¹ and rent his mantle.³²

(1) To evade a direct doleful reply, Rab said that his own mother was alive, but said nothing about his grandfather, R. Aha of Kafri.

(2) I.e., is my mother alive? I.e., R. Hiyya's mother, Rab's grandmother, R. Aha's wife.

(3) Again to evade the direct and sad answer Rab replied that his own father (i.e., Aybu, R. Hiyya's half-brother) was alive, but nothing about it. Hiyya's mother, Aha's wife. This is according to R. Hananel. Rashi and Tosaf. s.v. א"י offer different interpretations. V. Pes. 4a (Sonc. ed. p. 11.)

(4) Cf. supra p. 93.

(5) Even in the case of a parent one short while and one simple demonstration of respectful, sorrowful mourning, such as doffing the shoes, are enough; as soon after R. Hiyya went to the baths, which is forbidden to a mourner for a recent bereavement. Cf supra p. 101.

(6) That is, do not confuse Ahiyya of the Baraitha with Hiyya, Rab's uncle as being the same person who had acted differently on two occasions, at receiving belated distant news of the loss of a son and again of the loss of parents. They are two different persons.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 21a

But if that is so,¹ [the text]: And if he stand and say, I like not to take her,² [will be interpreted] similarly? But surely it is taught: [And if she loose the shoe from off the foot of a grownup levir], whether he be standing or sitting or stooping, [the ceremony is valid]?³ . — He replied: [It is because] there it is not written, 'And he stood and said';⁴ whereas here [in our instance] it is written, 'And Job rose and rent his mantle'. Rami b. Hama said: Whence [is it derived] that the rending [of a garment] is to be done standing? From what is said: And Job rose and rent his mantle. But perhaps what he did was something extra? For should we not say so, [what of the next thing Job did], And he shaved his head, [should we] likewise [have to conform with it]? — Rather it is [to be derived] from here: Then the king arose and rent his garments.⁵ But here too, perhaps, what he did was something extra? For should you not say so [what of the next thing he did], And he lay on the earth,⁵ [should we] likewise [have to conform with it]? Whereas it is taught: 'If a mourner sat on a bed,⁶ on a chair⁷ or on a stall for urns [and cans],⁸ or even goes to the extreme⁹ of sleeping on the bare ground, he has not discharged his duty [to the dead]'. And, explained R. Johanan, [It is] because he has not carried out the [custom of] overturning the bed? — He replied: [It means that David lay] as it were on the ground.

Our Rabbis taught: The following things are forbidden to a mourner: He is forbidden to do work, to bathe or anoint himself, to have [marital] intercourse, or don sandals; he is forbidden to read the Pentateuch, Prophets or Hagiographia, or to recite the Mishnah, or Midrash and halachoth or the Talmud or aggadoth.¹⁰ If, however, the public have need of him, he need not abstain. There was all actual case, when a son of R. Jose of Sepphoris¹¹ died, he went into the Beth Hamidrash¹² and expounded there all day long; [also¹³ when a daughter of Rabbi died at Beth-Shearim, he went into the Beth Hamidrash and expounded there all day long]. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah had a bereavement [and] he thought he ought not to go out to [give] his lecture. Said Rab to him, We learned:¹⁴ 'And if the public have need of him he does not refrain'. He then thought of calling upon his 'expositor' [assistant].¹⁵ When Rab said to him, 'We learned:¹⁴ 'Provided only that he does not place [at his side] an expositor [assistant]'. But then how is he to do? — After the manner taught [in the following]: 'It happened, that when a son of R. Judah b. Il'ai died, he went into the Beth Hamidrash and R. Hananiah b. Akabia also went in and sat him down at his side: he then whispered to R. Hananiah b. Akabia and R. Hananiah b. Akabia [whispered] to the Turgeman and the Turgeman spoke aloud to the public'.

Our Rabbis taught: '[During] the first three days a mourner is forbidden to put on phylacteries.¹⁶ From the third day onward, the third day included, he is allowed to put on phylacteries and he does not¹⁷ [have to] take them off at the entry of fresh personages [visitors]:¹⁸ this is R. Eliezer's opinion.

R. Joshua says, A mourner is forbidden to put on phylacteries [during] the first two days. From the second day onward, the second day included, he is allowed to put on phylacteries; but at the entry of fresh personages [visitors] he takes¹⁷ them off.¹⁹ Said R. Mattana: What is the reason for R. Eliezer's view? — Because it is written: And the days of weeping in the mourning of Moses were ended.²⁰ Said R. Ena: What is the reason for R. Joshua's view? — Because it is written: [And I will turn your feasts into mourning . . . And I will make it as the mourning for an only son] and the end thereof as a bitter day.²¹ But as to R. Joshua, surely it is written: [And the days of weeping in the mourning for Moses] were ended? — He may reply. The case of Moses was different; the mourning for him was [more] intense. And what of R. Eliezer too, surely it is written, 'And the day thereof [I will make] as a bitter day'? — The poignancy of the bitterness is but on one day. Said 'Ulla: The halachah follows R. Eliezer in regard to taking off [the phylacteries]²² and R. Joshua in regard to putting on [the phylacteries].²³ They enquired: What of the second day [of mourning], according to 'Ulla? Does he [at the entrance of fresh personages] have to take them off, or does he not [have to] take them off? — Come and hear: 'Ulla said: He takes them off and puts them on [the second day] even a hundred times'.²⁴ Likewise it is taught: Judah b. Tema Says, He takes them off and puts them on even a hundred times. Raba said, Having put them on he does not take them off. But was it not Raba who said [above],²⁵ The halachah follows our Tanna [of the Mishnah],²⁶ who says [that the minimum observance of formal mourning is] three [days]?

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 21b

— It is different in the case of a religious precept. [like phylacteries].¹

Our Rabbis taught: A mourner is forbidden, during the first three days [to do] work, even a poor man who receives maintenance from charity; thereafter he does [his work] privately, in his house: and a woman [in mourning] plies the spindle in her house.

Our Rabbis taught: A mourner should not go during the first three days to a place of mourning;² thereafter he may go but not take a place among the comforters, but among those who are [to be] comforted.

Our Rabbis taught: A mourner is forbidden during the first three days to give greeting [of peace];³ after three and to seven [days], he responds but does not give greeting [of peace]; thereafter he gives greeting [of peace] and responds in his usual manner.

[It is stated above] 'Forbidden during the first three days to give greeting of peace'. But surely it was taught: It happened, when [two]⁴ sons of R. Akiba, [bridegrooms],⁵ died, all Israel entered⁶ and made a great lament for them, and as the people were about to depart, R. Akiba stood on a large bench⁷ and addressed them: Our brethren, the House of Israel, hear ye! Even though these two sons were 'bridegrooms',⁸ I am⁹ consoled on account of the honour you have done [them].¹⁰ And even though you have come on account of Akiba, there is many an Akiba!¹¹ But this it is what you said [to yourselves]: The law of God is in his heart, [his footsteps will not falter].¹² All the more then, two-fold be your reward: Go home unto peace!¹³ — Deference towards the public is a different matter.

[It was stated above 'After three to seven [days]; he responds but does not give greeting [of peace]; thereafter, he gives greeting [of peace] and responds, in his usual manner'. Some contrasted this statement with the following: 'One who meets his fellow mourner within thirty days, tenders him [words of] consolation but enquires not about his peace; after the thirty days he enquires about his peace, but tenders him not [words of] consolation.'¹⁴ If his [friend's] wife had died and he married another [formally],¹⁵ he is not allowed to call at his house to tender him [there,¹⁶ words of] consolation; if he meets him in the street he expresses [his condolence] to him in a low voice and with downcast looks!¹⁷ — Said R. Idi b. Abin: The mourner enquires about the peace of others [within his period of mourning]¹⁸ because others' are abiding in peace; others enquire not about the peace of the mourner, because he is not abiding in peace [but in sorrow].¹⁹ But then, since it states [in the former Baraita]: [After three to seven days] 'he responds. . .', does this not imply that others may enquire [about the mourner's peace]?²⁰ — Where they are unaware [of his bereavement]. If so, does not the same apply also to the other earlier period?²¹ — [No,] then²¹ he is obliged to acquaint them [of his sorrow] and makes no [further] response, whereas here²² he need not acquaint them [of it].

Thereupon some contrasted [this latter Baraita] with the following: One who meets another mourner within a twelvemonth tenders him [words of] consolation, but does not enquire about his 'peace';²³ after a twelvemonth, he enquires about his 'peace and does not tender him [words of] consolation, but may refer to his sorrow indirectly.²⁴ Said R. Meir: If one meets another mourner after a twelvemonth and tenders him [then words of] consolation, to what can he be likened? To [the case of] a man who had his leg broken and healed when a physican met him and said to him, Come to me and let me break it and set it [again], to convince you that my medicaments are good? — This offers no difficulty: This last citation refers to [the death of] father or mother, while the former refers to [the death of] other near of kin. But in that case²⁵ too, why not tender him [words of] consolation indirectly? — Yes indeed [he may], and what means: ['After thirty days he may] not tender him

Our Rabbis taught: A mourner who arrives home during the first three days from a place in the near vicinity, counts [his days of mourning] with them.²⁶ If he came home from a distance, he counts on his own. Thereafter even if he came home from a place in the vicinity he counts on his own. R. Simeon says: Even if he came home on the seventh day from a place in the vicinity, he counts with them.²⁶

The Master said: 'During the first three days from a place in the vicinity, he counts with them'. R. Hiyya b. Abba, as citing R. Johanan said that this is done only where the chief person of the household was at home. The following question was then raised:

(1) Deut. VI, 8; XI. 18.

(2) Lit., 'House of mourning', i.e., either to a private house or to the cemetery to attend a funeral. Cf. Sem. VI.

(3) Lit., 'enquire about his "peace"' (welfare). E.g., Gen. XXIX, 6 and cf. supra p. 89, n. 10.

(4) Cf. D. note 7: probably during a plague.

(5) So Sem. III, 6. The expression denotes that they died in the prime of life, under thirty years of age.

(6) The cemetery.

(7) An improvised rostrum.

(8) V. p. 135 n. 8.

(9) The text reads, 'He is consoled' by way of euphemism, to avoid an omen for one who reads or recounts this.

(10) By your presence.

(11) I.e., I am not so great a man as to be entitled to it all.

(12) Ps. XXXVII, 31.

(13) Thus R. Akiba tendered 'peace' to his audience on the very first day of mourning. Cf. Sem. VIII, where this incident among others is told at length.

(14) Here ends the part that causes difficulty. The attempted reply follows later after the conclusion of the whole quotation.

(15) That is by betrothal within the thirty days of mourning: this is permitted for the sake of little children, left motherless; often it is the deceased wife's sister. He may thus marry her formally but is not to live with her as man and wife till after the period of mourning is over. Generally a widower should wait till after the three Festivals — Passover, Weeks and Tabernacles have passed, before he marries again. Cf. infra, 23a.

(16) Not to embarrass the second wife.

(17) Lit., 'with faint lip and heavy head', so as to avoid giving the impression of being cynical. | This Baraitha thus teaches that within the thirty days one may not greet a mourner, which is in opposition to the ruling of the former Baraitha that the mourner himself is permitted to exchange greetings once the seven days are over].

(18) Within the thirty days.

(19) [I.e., the two Baraithas are not contradictory: whereas the former teaches that the mourner may greet others within the thirty days, the latter forbids others to greet him within, that period.]

(20) And thus the two Baraithas are still contradictory.

(21) I.e., during the first three days.

(22) After three days.

(23) Whereas above it was ruled that after thirty days one may tender greetings.

(24) Rashi: He merely utters a word of comfort without mentioning the name of the deceased.

(25) I.e., in the case of other near-of-kin to which the former Baraitha refers.

(26) With the other members of the family.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 22a

What if the chief person¹ of the household had gone to the place of interment?² — Come and hear: For R. Hiyya b. Abba as citing R. Johanan. said that even if the chief person of the household went to the place of interment, he [still] counts with them. [You say] 'He counts with them?' Why, it is taught [definitely]: ‘He counts by himself’! — That is not difficult [to explain]: The former [ruling] obtains where he returned within three [days]; the latter [ruling] obtains where he had not returned within three [days]. Similar it is to what Rab told the sons of Hazzalponi:³ Those that come [home] within three [days] should count with you; those that do not come [home] within three [days] should count by themselves. Raba told the people of Mahoza: You who do not follow the bier,⁴ should begin counting [the days of mourning] as soon as you turn your faces from the city gates.

‘R. Simeon says, Even if he came home on the seventh day from a place in the vicinity he counts with them’. Said R. Hiyya b. Gamada that R. Jose b. Saul as reporting Rabbi said: That is [done] only where [on his arrival] he found comforters still present.⁵ R. ‘Anan then enquired: What if they [the comforters] had just made ready⁶ themselves to get up [and leave] but had not yet left? — This stands over [for a solution]. The fellow-collegiate of R. Abba b. Hiyya had it as a tradition from R. Abba — Who was that [fellow-collegiate]? — R. Zera; and some say that it was the fellow-collegiate of R. Zera who had heard it from R. Zera. — And who was that [fellow-collegiate]? — R. Abba son of R. Hiyya b. Abba — who reported R. Johanan [to have stated]: ‘The halachah is to follow R. Simeon b. Gamaliel’s view on the point of terefoth⁷ and the halachah is to follow R. Simeon on the point of mourning’. The view of R. Simeon on the point of mourning is this one which we have just cited; and the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel on terefoth is that which is taught:⁸ ‘If intestines had become perforated and mucilage blocks the perforation, it [the animal’s flesh] is kasher’.⁹ What is ‘mucilage’? — Said R. Kahana: it is the viscous matter inside the intestines which comes away under pressure. Said someone; May I be granted to go up to [Palestine] and learn the legal dictum from the mouth of the Master himself! When he went up he came upon R. Abba son of R. Hiyya b. Abba. Said he to him: ‘Did you, sir, say that the halachah is to follow R. Simeon b. Gamaliel on the point of terefoth’? — He replied: ‘I said that the halachah is not so’! And what about the point of mourning’, [is the halachah in that case] to follow R. Simeon? — He replied: Opinions are divided on that, as it has been stated: ‘R. Hisda said, [R. Simeon’s view is] the halachah, and R. Johanan said likewise; [but] R. Nahman said, [R. Simeon’s view is] not the halachah. The [present] halachah however does not follow R. Simeon b. Gamaliel’s view in terefoth; but as to the point of mourning, the halachah is like R. Simeon’s, because of Samuel’s dictum that in matters of mourning, the halachah is to follow the [view of the] lenient authority’.

[Our Rabbis taught]:¹⁰ ‘[If] for all [other] dead one expedites [the departure of] the bier,¹¹ he is praiseworthy; but in the case of one’s father or mother, he is blameworthy. If it was the day before the Sabbath or a festival,¹² [or if pouring rain was falling on it], he is praiseworthy, as he expedites [the interment] out of deference to his father or mother. For all [other] dead, if he desires, he minimizes his business¹³ or if he does not desire,

(1) Not necessarily the senior person of the family, but the person in charge of the affairs of the household.

(2) And was away for three days. Does he count on his return with the folks at home whose period of mourning commenced as soon as the cortege departed. or does he count from the time of interment?

(3) Cf. I Chron. IV, 3. Or were these Jewish converts of the Beni-Solibi clan of bedouin Arabs, hailing from the neighbourhood of Zulfa in N.E. Arabia? V. Enc. Brit. s.v. Bedouins, III, (11th ed.) p. 623h. [Obermeyer, p. 298, identifies it with Zalfiun near Sura, the seat of Rab.]

(4) [The cemetery was far removed from the town so as not to offend the susceptibilities of the Persians who disapproved of the burial of the dead; v. Obermeyer, p. 174].

(5) Lit., ‘at his side’.

(6) Lit., ‘bestirred themselves’.

(7) Plur. of trefa, a defect indicating a disease in animals or birds slaughtered for food. Cf. Hul. III, 1ff.

(8) תניא is more correct than תני Cf. Hul. 50a.

(9) Fit for Jewish consumption, not rejected on account of some organic defect.

(10) So D.S. and many other texts. Cf. Sem. IX.

(11) I.e., hastens the interment.

(12) When delay involves keeping the body till the day after their termination.

(13) I.e., his business affairs (Rashi) before the funeral. Or, according to Han. quoting Palestinian Talmud, he minimizes the expenses of the funeral and lament. Cf. J.M.k. III, 8.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 22b

he does not minimize it'; but for his father or mother he should minimize [his business].¹ For all [other] dead, if he desires, he bares [his shoulder] and if he does not desire he does not bare it; for his father or mother he must bare [his shoulder].² It happened once with a certain 'great man of the generation' whose father had died, that he desired to bare [his shoulder],³ and [another] 'great man of the generation' that was with him desired to bare his too, and on that account he [the mourner] refrained and did not bare [his shoulder].⁴

Said Abaye, The 'great man of the generation' referred to was Rabbi, and the [other] 'great man of the generation' that was with him was R. Jacob b. Aha [the elder]. Some say that 'the great man of the generation' was R. Jacob b. Alia and the [other] great man of the generation' that was with him was Rabbi. Now it seems correct if Rabbi was the 'great man of the generation' that was with him [with the mourner], we understand why [R. Jacob b. Aha]⁵ refrained and did not bare [his shoulder and heart];⁶ but according to the [other] report that Rabbi [was the mourner] and that R. Jacob b. Aha was the 'great man of the generation' that was with him, why did not he [Rabbi] bare [his shoulder and both hands] as Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [Rabbi's father] was the Nasi, and everybody should by rights have bared [their shoulders]!⁷ — This is difficult [to explain].

'For⁸ all dead one has his hair trimmed after thirty days; for one's father or mother [one lets his hair grow long]⁹ until his companions rebuke him. For all dead one enters a house of rejoicing after thirty days; for his father and mother [not] till after twelve months'. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah¹⁰ said:¹¹ 'And [one may go] to a joyous entertainment of comrades'.¹² An objection was raised: 'And [one may not go to a joyous [feast] as well as to [an entertainment of] rejoicing and to comrades [for] thirty days'!¹³ — This [divergence] presents difficulty.

Amemar taught [his comments] on that [same] Baraita thus: Said Rabbah b. Bar Hanali, 'But [to go] to a joyous entertainment of comrades is allowed forthwith'.¹⁴ But then [in another version] it is taught: '[One may go] to a joyous [feast] after thirty [days] and to an entertainment of comrades [after] thirty days'? — This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]; the latter [version] refers to a first¹⁵ [invitation to an] entertainment [of comrades], while the former [version] refers to a return entertainment¹⁶ [of comrades].

'For all¹⁷ [other] dead one makes a rent [in his tunic] of a handbreadth [in depth]; for one's father or mother [he rends his clothes] till he bares his heart [chest].' Said R. Abbahu, What text is there [which teaches this]? Then David took hold on his clothes and rent them,¹⁸ and there is no taking hold [of anything] by less than a hand's breadth.¹⁹

'For all [other] dead one rends only the uppermost [garment] even though he be wearing [then] ten; but for one's father or mother one rends them all'. And [the rending of] one's undershirt is not indispensable, be it in man or woman; R. Simeon b. Eleazar says. 'A woman rends her undermost garment and turns it [front to] back and then again rends her uppermost garment,²⁰ For all [other] dead, if one desire he divides the [upper] selvage-border of his [garment],²¹ and if he does not desire he does not divide it; for his father or mother he must divide, R. Judah says, Any rending [of a garment] that divides not the selvage-border thereof is mere make-believe. Said R. Abbahu: What is the reason for R. Judah's [statement]? — The text: [And Elisha saw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof! And he saw him no more] and he took hold of his own clothes and rent them in two pieces.²² Once it says 'and he rent them' do I not know that he rent them in two? But [the addition of 'in two'²³ implies] that [at the rent] the garments appeared as if torn into two [separate] pieces.²⁴

'For all [other] dead, one tacks²⁵ the rent together after seven [days] and [completely] reunites [the edges] after thirty [days]; for one's father or mother one tacks it together after thirty [days], but never reunites [the edges]; a woman tacks it together forthwith, out of the respect due to her. When R. Abin came [from Palestine] he said as citing R. Johanan: 'For all [other] dead, if one desires, he rends [his garment] with the hand, or if he desires he rends by an instrument; for one's father or mother one rends with the hand'. And R. Hiyya b. Abba said, as citing R. Johanan: 'For all [other] dead [one rends] inside;²⁶ for one's father or mother one rends outside'.²⁷

R. Hisda observed: And the same rule obtains²⁸ on the [death of a] Nasi. An objection was raised: '[Those other dignitaries]²⁹ were not deemed equal to one's father or mother save in regard to re-uniting [the edges of the rent] alone'. Does not this [inequality] hold also for the Nasi?³⁰ — No, the Nasi alone [is an exception].³⁰ The Nesi'ah³¹ died. Said R. Hisda to R. Hanan b. Raba:³² Turn the mortar³³, upside down, stand on it and show the rending [of garments] to all the people!

For a Hakam [sage]³⁴ one bares [the hand and shoulder] on the right; for the Ab Beth din, on the left, and for a Nasi on both sides'.

Our Rabbis taught: When a Hakam dies, his Beth Hamidrash is in vacation; when the Ab Beth din dies all the Colleges in his city are in vacation and [the people of the synagogue]³⁵ enter the synagogue[s] and change their [usual] places: those that [usually] sit in the north sit in the south and those that [usually] sit in the south sit in the north. When a Nasi dies, all the Colleges are in vacation³⁶ and the people of the synagogue enter the synagogue³⁷

(1) I.e., even after the burial, during the thirty days of mourning. Han. and Hay Gaon, quoted Otz. Hag. no. 199.

(2) And also bares his heart (chest). Sem. IX.

(3) For a Hakam (doyen), the (shoulder and) right hand are bared; for the president of the Beth din, the (shoulder and) left hand are bared; for the Nasi both (shoulders and) hands are bared. It happened, when R. Eliezer died, that R. Akiba bared 'both his hands' (arms) and beat his breast till it was bleeding and he said: my father, my father, the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. (II Kings, II, 12). Sem. IX. Cf. infra 22b.

(4) Here the series of citations from Sem. IX is interrupted by an observation of historical interest.

(5) D.S. and many other texts.

(6) Out of deference to Rabbi who was the Nasi, and therefore for him it was infra dignitatem. This was no disrespect to R. Jacob's father, as this is provided for in the rules: 'And if they (one's father or mother) seem not important (enough) for (the baring), he (the son) does not bare himself even for his father or mother'. Sem. IX. It should be noted that R. Jacob's father was not a qualified Rabbi, and that if 'Rabbi' Judah, the Nasi did out of deference to R. Jacob b. Aha bare himself, it would cause adverse comment among those present at the funeral. On R. Jacob b. Aha's status, v. Shab. 31a and A. Hyman, Toledoth s.v. II, 774a.

(12) שמהת מריעות. For the expression, cf. Judg. XIV, 10ff, where it is connected with a betrothal or marriage celebration. It is thus taken by SBH p. 110. Generally, however, it is taken to denote an ordinary social repast shared with one's intimate friends. The import of Rabbah's observation is rather ambiguous and, accordingly, taken variously: — (a) A comrade's entertainment may not be attended until before the thirty days are over, as there is conviviality, eating and drinking; much less may one go to a joyous celebration, such as a betrothal, or marriage ceremony with music and singing. (b) That a comrade's entertainment which provides enjoyment for one's own boon companions should not be entered upon before thirty days; but at a religious ceremonious celebration, a marriage ceremony, a circumcision etc. one may attend sooner, especially if one does not join in the feasting. V. Tosaf., Asheri par. 41, Nahmanides (Torath ha-Adam) and Ritba.

(13) [This proves that the two phrases are not identical].

(14) At the termination of the seven days.

(15) There are various readings: D.S. reads — ארשיותא ; SBH: ארשותא — from רשא , ‘to begin with’. Cf. Ber. 46a and Ritba:  — a ‘voluntary’ entertainment, which can be fixed for a later date.

(16) I.e., when it is his turn to entertain or to attend and he cannot defer it or absent himself and therefore may hold his entertainment forthwith. So Han.

and seven persons read [the weekly portions of the Torah]¹ and thereafter they come away. R. Joshua b. Korhah says, Not that they go and walk about in the street but they sit [at home] in silence.² Neither a halachic theme³ nor an aggadah should be discussed in the house of mourning. It was related of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel that he used to speak on halachic and aggadic themes in the house of mourning.

Our Rabbis taught: during the first week a mourner does not go out of the door of his house; the second week he goes out but does not sit in his [usual] place [in the synagogue];⁴ the third week he sits in his [usual] place but does not speak; the fourth week he is like any other person. Says R. Judah: There was no need to say ‘In the first week he does not go out of the door of his house’, as then everybody comes into his house to comfort him; [what it should] rather [say is that] the second [week] he does not go out of the door of his house; the third [week] he goes out but does not sit in his [usual] place [in the synagogue]; the fourth [week] he sits in his place but does not speak; in the fifth [week] he is like any other person. Our Rabbis taught: For [the whole] thirty days [the mourner is debarred from] taking a wife. If his wife died, he is forbidden to take another until three Festivals have gone by. R. Judah says. [Until] the first festival and the second he is forbidden [to marry]; before the third he is allowed. If he have no children he may take a wife forthwith,⁵ lest [otherwise]⁶ he may fail in [the duty of] procreation.⁷ If she left him little children, he is allowed to take a wife forthwith to take care of them. It happened that the wife of Joseph the Priest died and he said on the burial ground to her sister: Go and take care of your sister's children: nevertheless he did not go in to her [as husband] till a long time after. What is [meant by] a 'long time'? — R. Papa said, Alter thirty days.

Our Rabbis taught: [During the whole] thirty days [the mourner is debarred from donning] pressed⁸ clothes: it makes no difference whether they be old or new clothes coming out of the press.⁹ Rabbi says, They only forbade new clothes; R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon says, They only forbade new white linen clothes.

Abaye went out¹⁰ in a worn sarbal,¹¹ in accordance with Rabbi.¹² Raba went out¹³ in a new Roman re tunic,¹⁴ in accordance with R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon.¹⁵

BECAUSE THEY [THE SAGES] SAID¹⁶ THAT THE SABBATH ENTERS [INTO COUNT] BUT DOES NOT INTERRUPT; [WHILE FESTIVALS INTERRUPT, AND DO NOT ENTER INTO COUNT]. The Judeans and the Galileans [differed in regard to this Mishnah], the one party saying

(1) But pray individually, not as a congregational service. So Rashi. This however is contradicted by a responsum of Natronai Otz. Hag. (Lewin) n. 91.

(2) Han. Alfasi, MS.M. etc. read: 'sit in anguish'. Sem. X (end) enlarges: They sit or stand saddened and are like people who have Parnes (leader). When the time of rising arrives they minimize their affairs and rise'.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 23b

that [some] mourning is to be observed¹ on the Sabbath and the others saying that there is no [observance of] mourning on the Sabbath. Those that said that [some] mourning is observed on the Sabbath based themselves on the wording in the Mishnah, [THE SABBATH] ENTERS [INTO COUNT]; the others who said that mourning is not observed on the Sabbath based their view on the wording [AND] DOES NOT INTERRUPT. For, [said they], should you assume that mourning is to be observed on the Sabbath, why need we have [the reservation] AND DOES NOT INTERRUPT? But surely it states [also], [THE SABBATH] ENTERS [INTO COUNT]! — Because he has to teach in the latter part that [FESTIVALS]. . . DO NOT ENTER INTO COUNT, he teaches also [for the sake of symmetry] in the former part [THE SABBATH] ENTERS [INTO COUNT]. And as to the other side who said that [some] mourning is to be observed on the Sabbath, surely it states AND DOES NOT INTERRUPT? — Because he has to state in the latter part that [FESTIVALS] INTERRUPT [the mourning], he teaches also [for the sake of symmetry] in the former part [THE SABBATH. . .] DOES NOT INTERRUPT.

Might not one suggest that their disagreement goes back to the [divergent] views of [older] Tannaim [as set out in the following Baraita]? For it has been taught: ‘One who has his dead laid out before him eats [his meals] in another house [room]; if he have not another house [room], he eats in his friend's house; if he have not a friend's house [available], he makes him a partition [ten handbreadths high];² if he have not the wherewithal to make a partition, he turns away his face as he takes his meals. And he does not recline³ as he eats [nor does he eat his fill]⁴ — he eats not meat nor drinks wine, nor does he say the grace. nor does he invite others [partaking in the meal to join in grace with him]⁵ nor do others invite him,⁶ and he is exempt from a recital of Shema’,⁷ from Saying the Tefillah⁸ or donning phylacteries, and [exempt] from the performance of any religious duties that are commanded in the Torah. [When do these said restrictions obtain? On weekdays];⁹ but on Sabbath¹⁰ he takes meals reclining, eats meat and drinks wine, recites grace, invites others [to join him] and others invite him and it is incumbent on him to recite the Shema’ and to say the Tefillah¹¹ and to perform all the religious duties commanded in the Torah. Rabban Gamaliel¹² says,¹³ Since he re-enters into these several obligations [here mentioned] he enters into the obligation of all [religious duties].’ [And commenting on this] R. Johanan said that the actual difference between them is the question of ‘using the [marital] couch’.¹⁴ Now, is not this the issue between them: One Master¹⁵ takes the view that [some] mourning is to be observed on Sabbath and the other Master¹⁶ that there is to be no mourning on Sabbath? Why [do you think so]? Perhaps there¹⁷ the first Tanna might not have gone so far as to forbid,¹⁸ save only because his dead is still laid out in front of him; but here,¹⁹ he might not [forbid].²⁰ Again, Rabban Gamaliel there²¹ would not have gone so far as to allow,²⁰ save only because there²¹ the incidence of mourning has not yet occurred;²² whereas here,¹⁹ where the incidence of mourning has already occurred, he might also [forbid].²⁰

(1) privately, at home, e.g., covering the head, sleeping on an overturned couch, not occupying the marital couch, not greeting with ‘peace’. ‘In Judea they greeted mourners with "peace" on entering and leaving his house, to show that mourning did not obtain on Sabbath’. Sem. X (end.).

(2) This is a gloss — not found in the parallel texts — on the technical height of a partition. Cf. Shab. 6a — and Tosa, Suk. 5b s. v. עשרה.

(3) On a couch or seated round the table with others; that is, he does not have his meals in style.

(4) Sem. adds: ‘Nor does he eat all he requires’ — i.e., his fill.

(5) Three or more eating together should join as a group in saying grace. Cf. Ber. 45a.

(6) [Rashi Ber. 17b explains differently: He recites no benediction before meals, nor does he say grace after meals. Nor do others recite the benediction before meals on his behalf, nor does he join in the grace after meals.]

(7) ‘Hear, O Israel. . .’, Dent. VI, 4ff Cf. P.B. pp. 30ff

(8) The ‘Amidah, or the ‘Eighteen Benedictions (19) Prayer’ for weekdays. V. P.B. p. 44ff.

(9) So Sem. X.

(10) Sem. ibid. adds, he eats according to his requirements.

(11) The ‘Amidah or Seven Benedictions for the Sabbath. MS. M. omits ‘phylacteries’, as these are never donned on Sabbath.

(12) So also Sem. and other texts. In Ber. 17b Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.

(13) Sem. inserts: A mourner on Sabbath is as if he were no mourner.

(14) I.e., marital intercourse during the Sabbath, which is otherwise forbidden during the week of mourning. Rabban Gamaliel's statement implies that he is permitted to use the marital couch on the Sabbath of the week of mourning. Conjugal rights are among the Scriptural obligations of a husband to his wife. Ex. XXI, 10 and cf. Keth. 61a.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 24a

Mar Yohani¹ enquired of Samuel, Was there [some] mourning [to be observed] on Sabbath or was there no mourning on the Sabbath? — He replied, There is no mourning [to be observed] on the Sabbath.

Some Rabbis sitting in the presence of R. Papa reported in the name of Samuel that a mourner who used the conjugal couch during the [seven] days of his mourning is guilty of a mortal offence. Said R. Papa to them, What was reported was that it is 'forbidden', not 'a mortal offence', and in the name of R. Johanan it was reported [and not in the name of Samuel]; and if you heard aught [condemned] in the name of Samuel [as a mortal offence] it was this: 'Said R. Tahlifa b. Abimi, as reporting Samuel, A mourner who did not let his hair grow long and did not rend his clothes is guilty of a mortal offence. For it was said [to Aaron and his surviving sons]:² Let not the hair of your heads go loose neither rend your clothes, that ye die not. . . ,³ which [clearly] implies that any [other] mourner if he has not let the hair [of his head] go loose and has not rent his clothes, is guilty of a mortal offence'.

Rafram⁴, b. Papa said, It is taught in the Ebel Rabbathi:⁵ 'A mourner is forbidden to use the [conjugal] couch during his [seven] days of mourning'; and it happened [once] with one who used his [conjugal] couch during the [seven] days of his mourning that swine hauled away his carcass.⁶

Samuel said, Pahaz,⁷ are obligatory; Natar,⁷ are optional [on the Sabbath] i.e., the unveiling of the head,⁸ turning the rent side [of his garment] from front to back and tilting up the couch [into its normal position] are obligatory [on the mourner, in honour of the Sabbath]; donning sandals, the use of the conjugal bed and washing his hands and feet with warm water at [the approach of the] Sabbath even are optional.⁹ But Rab says, The unveiling of his head is also optional. Now, what is the difference in the case of the donning of sandals [on the Sabbath] that Samuel treats it as optional? [presumably] because not everyone usually wears shoes;¹⁰ is it not so likewise with the unveiling of the head, as not everybody generally goes about with head unveiled? — Samuel is consistent in this, as Samuel said, 'Any rending [of clothes] not done in the flush [of grief]¹¹ is not a [proper] rending, and any muffling [of the face] not alter the manner of the Ishmaelites,¹² is not a proper muffling [for a mourner]'. R. Nahman demonstrated it [by covering himself up in his mantle] right up to the sides of the beard.¹³

Said R. Jacob, as reporting R. Johanan: This statement was made [above]¹⁴ only in reference to one who has no shoes on his feet, but if he has shoes on his feet [on the Sabbath] his shoes give evidence about him.¹⁵

'Any rending [of clothes] not done in the flush [of grief] is not a [proper] rending'. But yet [when] they said to Samuel, 'Rab's soul has gone to rest', he rent on account of him thirteen garments [and] said: 'Gone is the man before whom I trembled'!¹⁶ When they told R. Johanan. 'The soul of R. Hanina has gone to rest', he rent on account of him thirteen robes¹⁷ of Milesian wool and said: 'Gone is the man before whom I trembled'!¹⁸ — Rabbis are in a different category, since their discussions are always recalled it is [for us] like 'the first flush [of grief]'.¹⁹

Said Rabin b. Adda to Raba: Your disciple R. Amram said that it was taught, 'A mourner [hearing of a fresh bereavement] at any time during the seven [days] rends his [clothes] in the forefront thereof, and if he has [occasion] to change [the garment], he changes and rends afresh; on the Sabbath he rends [on hearing the news] in the hinder part [of the garment]. and if he has [occasion] to change it, he changes but tears not [afresh]’?²⁰ — That was taught only where [it was] in honour of one's father or mother, [but not for other near of kin].

Are such rents [to be] sewed up²¹ or are they not [to be] sewed up? — On that, [Nahmani]²² father of R. Oshaia and Bar Kappara held different views, one saying that the rents are [to be] sewed up and the other saying that they are not [to be] sewed up. May it be inferred that it was the father of R. Oshaia that said that these were not [to be] sewed up, as R. Oshaia said that they were not [to be] sewed up; from whom had he heard this if not from his father? — Not [necessarily]: he [R. Oshaia] heard it from his master, [who was] Bar Kappara.

Raba said, A mourner may walk about in his [rent] wrap²³ indoors [on the Sabbath]. Abaye found R. Joseph going in and out of his house, his head covered with a sudarium²⁴ [on the Sabbath]. Said he to him:²⁵ Do you not, sir, hold the view that there is to be no [observance of] mourning on the Sabbath? — He replied: Thus said R. Johanan: ‘Intimate [forms of] mourning may be maintained [on the Sabbath]’.

R. ELIEZER SAYS, SINCE THE SANCTUARY [AT JERUSALEM] WAS LAID IN RUINS [THE FEAST OF] ‘AZERETH²⁶ [IS CONSIDERED] AS AN [ORDINARY] SABBATH, etc. Said R. Giddal b. Menashia as citing Samuel, The halachah follows the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel. And some attach this comment of R. Giddal b. Menashia to [the following Baraita]: ‘Any infant up to thirty days old is carried out in arms²⁷ and buried by one woman and two men, but not by one man and two women.’²⁸

Abba Saul says, Even by one man with two women. And they [the people] do not stand in line¹ on the [immature] infant's account, nor do they [need] to recite the [usual] mourners' benediction,² nor tender the [usual] condolence to the mourners. An infant thirty days old is taken forth [to burial] in a case.³ R. Judah says: Not a case that is borne on the shoulder, but one that is borne in the arms; and the people stand in line¹ on its account, and recite the [additional] mourners' benediction² and tender the [usual] condolence to the mourners. One twelve months old is taken forth [to burial] on a bier; R. Akiba says, If the infant is twelve months old and its limbs are like those of one two years old, or two years old and its limbs are like those of one twelve months old, it is carried out on a bier. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, For any one that is taken out on a bier the public [should] show their distress;⁴ for any one that is not taken out on a bier the public do not [need] to show their distress. R. Eleazar says, If he is known to the public at large, the public should participate in the proceedings; if he be not known to many [of the public] they do not [need] to participate. And what is the rule in respect of making lamentation for them? R. Meir in the name of R. Ishmael says: In the case of the poor lamentation is made for a child of three and in the case of the rich for a child of five.⁵ R. Judah speaking in his [R. Ishmael's.] name says: With the poor [they make a lament] for children of five; with the rich for children of six. And [as for] the children of 'elders', they are [treated] in the same way as the children of the poor.⁶ Said R. Giddal b. Menashia, as citing Rab,⁷ The halachah is as stated by R. Judah in the name of R. Ishmael.

R. 'Anani b. Sason⁸ gave a discourse at the door of the Prince⁹ [and said]: 'One day [of mourning] before 'Azereth¹⁰ [the Feast of Weeks] with [one day of] 'Azereth count as fourteen days [out of the thirty].' R. Ammi heard of this and was indignant saying. Is that his own view? It is what R. Eleazar [b. Pedath] said as citing R. Oshaia! R. Isaac the smith gave a discourse at the marquee¹¹ of the Exilarch [and said]: 'One day [of mourning] before 'Azereth with the [one day of] 'Azereth, count as fourteen days [out of the thirty]'. R. Shesheth heard of this and was indignant, saying, Is that his own view? It is what R. Eleazar said, as citing R. Oshaia! For R. Eleazar, citing R. Oshaia, said: Whence is derived the ruling that 'Azereth [the Feast of Weeks] is allowed a supplementary extension to full seven days?¹² From what is said: Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place He shall choose: on the Feast of Unleavened Bread and on the Feast of Weeks and on the Feast of Tabernacles; and they shall not appear before the Lord thy God empty.¹³ Just as the Feast of Unleavened Bread has a supplementary [period] to full seven days [for the celebration offerings],¹⁴ the Feast of Weeks¹⁵ has likewise a supplementary extension [for festive offerings] of full seven days.¹⁶ R. Papa invited¹⁷ the elder R. Awia [to act as expositor] and he expounded [the theme]: 'One day [of mourning] before New Year and New Year's Day [together] account for fourteen [out of the thirty days]'. Said Rabina, According to this, then, one day [of mourning] before 'the Feast' [of Tabernacles] together with the [seven days of the] festival and 'the Eighth Day' [of 'Solemn Assembly'] account [together] for twenty-one [out of the thirty days of mourning]. Rabina turned up at Sura-on the Euphrates¹⁸ when R. Habiba of Sura-on-the Euphrates put the question to him: Did you, sir, say that one day¹⁹ before New Year and New Year's Day [together] account for fourteen [out of the thirty days]? — He replied, I did say that, arguing on [the basis of] Rabban Gamaliel's view.²⁰

(16) The same argument applies to the analogy with the Feast of Tabernacles which has a range of eight days; but this argument is logically questioned, as thereby the one-day Feast of Weeks would be entitled to a day more than the seven-day Feast of Mazzoth; besides, it is shown that the eighth day of Tabernacles is, by virtue of its special sacrificial tariff a distinct Feast by itself. Cf. Hag. 17a and note discussion that follows.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 25a

GEMARA. [NONE REND etc.] even though [the dead be] a recognized scholar.¹ But then, it is taught [otherwise]: If a scholar dies, all are his near of kin?² 'All are his near of kin', say you? — Rather All are like his near of kin. — All rend their clothes on his account and all bare [their shoulders] on his account and all provide a repast for those that mourn on his account in the broad space?³ — It⁴ is a necessary ruling where the deceased was not a scholar. But then if the deceased was a worthy person, one is [still] in duty bound to rend his clothes, as it is taught: ‘Wherefore do a person's sons and daughters die in infancy? That one should weep and mourn for a worthy person.’ — [You say]. ‘That one should weep and mourn [for a worthy person]!’⁵ What, levy a distress on one [in advance]?⁶ — Say rather, ‘Because one has not wept and mourned for a worthy person’. — ‘For⁷ whoever weeps and mourns for a worthy person, all his sins are forgiven him, on account of the honour he rendered to him [the deceased]’? — It is necessary⁸ where the deceased is not a [particularly] worthy person. But yet if one stands here, at the time of a person breathing his last, one is [also] in duty bound [to rend his clothes]. as it is taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, One who stands near the dying, at the time when he breathes his last, he is in duty bound to rend [his clothes]: To what is this like? To a scroll of the Law that is burnt,⁹ when one is in duty bound to rend [his clothes]. — It is a necessary¹⁰ ruling where one was not standing there at the time when the dying breathed his last.

When the soul of R. Safra¹¹ went into repose, the Rabbis did not rend [their clothes] on account of him,¹² since, they said, We have not learnt from him [directly].¹³ Said Abaye, Is it taught: ‘When a Master died’? The teaching is: ‘When a scholar dies [all are his near-of-kin]’. Besides, we repeat daily the halachic interpretations reported [in his name] at the College! The [Rabbis of the College] then took the view that what was done was done.¹⁴ Said Abaye to them, We learned: ‘If a scholar dies, as long as they are engaged in a lament for him they are in duty bound to rend [their clothes]’. They thought then of rending forthwith [their clothes].¹⁵ Said Abaye to them, [No], it is taught: ‘A scholar is honoured at the lament held [on his account].’¹⁶

When the soul of R. Huna¹⁷ came to repose, they thought of Placing a scroll of the law on his bier.¹⁸ Said it. Hisda to them: Should one do for him now something that he did not countenance in his life-time? For R. Tahlifa¹⁹ said: I myself [once] saw R. Huna when he wanted to sit down on his couch, but there was a scroll of the law lying on it, so he put an inverted jar on the ground and put on it the scroll of the law. Obviously he thought that it was forbidden to sit on a couch when there was a scroll of the law lying thereon. Then the bier could not be got through the doorway²⁰ and they thought of letting it down from the roof. Said R. Hisda, I have learnt this from himself: ‘The honour of a scholar requires that his bier should pass through the door’. They then thought of transferring him from this bed to another, but said R. Hisda to them, I have learnt thus from himself: ‘The honour of a scholar requires that he should be taken out on the first bier’. For Rab Judah, as citing Rab, said, Whence is derived the lesson that the honour of a scholar requires that he should be borne on his first bier? From what is said: And they set the ark of God on a new cart²¹ and brought it out of the house of Abinadab that was on the hill.²² They then readied the gateway and brought it out.

R. Abba then opened [his funerary address]: ‘Our Master [said he] was worthy that the Shechinah²³ should abide with him, but [the fact of his being in] Babylon prevented it’.²⁴

Thereupon R. Nahman, son of R. Hisda — some say it was R. Hanan, son of R. Hisda — referred to [the text]: The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi in the land of the Chaldeans by the river Chebar.²⁵ His father tapped him with his sandal, saying to him: Have I not told you not to worry everybody [with this point]? What is meant by the [double expression] ‘Hayoh [hayah]’?²⁶ That it had been [had come] before [he came to Babylon].

When they brought him up thither [to Palestine, for burial] people told R. Ammi and R. Assi²⁷ that R. Huna had come. They said: ‘When we were there [in Babylon] we had not [a chance] of raising our heads because of him;²⁸ now that we have come here he is come after us’.²⁹ They then were told that it was his coffin that had arrived. R. Assi and R. Assi went out [to meet him]; R. Ela³⁰ and R. Hanina did not go out. Some say, R. Ela went out, R. Hanina did not go out. What was the reason of the one who went out? According to what is taught [in the following]: ‘If a coffin is passing [on its way] from place to place they stand in a row³¹ on account of the deceased, and say the mourners' benediction on account of him and also offer condolence to the mourners'. What was the reason of the one who did not go out? — According to what is taught [in the following]: 'If a coffin is passing [on its way] from place to place, they do not stand in a row on account of it, nor say on his account the mourners' benediction, nor [offer] condolence to the mourners'. These citations contradict one another! — This is not difficult [to explain]; the former [ruling obtains] where the body is intact; the latter where the body is not intact, and R. Huna's body was intact. Why did one not go out [to meet it]? Because he had not been fully informed of this. Then they said, Where shall we lay him to rest? [Said some, Let us lay him at the side of R. Hiyya];³² for R. Huna disseminated Torah in Israel³³ and R. Hiyya had likewise disseminated Torah³⁴ in Israel. Who will bring him into [the cave of] R. Hiyya? — Said R. Hagga 'I shall bring him in, because I sustained [revised] my studies [before him]³⁵ when I was but eighteen years of age, never having experienced the effects of an unchaste dream³⁶ and he made me his attendant³⁷ and therefore I know of his [pious] deeds. For one day the strap of his phylacteries was [accidentally] reversed,³⁸ whereupon he sat fasting forty days'. He then brought him in [to the cave].³⁹ Judah was laid there at the right of his father [R. Hiyya] and on his left was his [twin brother]⁴⁰ Hezekiah. Said Judah to Hezekiah: 'Rise from your place, for it is not good manners that R. Huna be left standing'. As he [Hezekiah] rose a column of fire rose with him⁴¹. R. Hagga, seeing that, was overcome with fear, set up the coffins and came away. And the reason that he came to no harm⁴² [from the pillar of fire] was because he set up the coffin of R. Huna.⁴³

When the soul of R. Hisda went to its rest they [the Collegiates] thought of placing a scroll of the law on his bier. Said R. Isaac to them: What he had disapproved of being done for his master, shall we now do to himself? They then thought that they should not stitch the rent in their garments, when R. Isaac b. Ammi said to them, It is taught:⁴⁴ In the case of a Scholar, [who died] as soon as they have turned away their faces, at the rear of the bier, they [may] stitch together [the rent]'.

When the soul of Rabbah⁴⁵ son of R. Huna went to its rest and [that of] R. Hamnuna, they took them [both] up thither.⁴⁶

As they came to a bridge the camels¹ halted. Said a certain Arab² to those [who accompanied the cortege], What is that?³ — They replied that the [deceased] Rabbis were doing honour to one another: one saying [as it were], 'You, Sir, proceed first', and the other saying, 'You, Sir, proceed first'. Said he, [the Arab]: [In my judgment],⁴ it is right that [a notable the son of a notable],⁴ Rabbah son of R. Huna, should take precedence. The camel bearing Rabbah son of R. Huna then passed along first. The molars and teeth of that Arab fell out.⁵ Then a certain child opened [his funerary oration] thus:

'A scion of ancient stock from Babylon⁶ came

With records of prowess in combat⁷ and fame;
Twice numerous pelican and bittern⁸ from far
Came for the ravage and ruin⁹ in Shinear.¹⁰
When [God] views His world with displeasure,
He seizes [great] souls in exacting measure,
Awaiting their coming as new brides, with delight
And, riding on Araboth¹¹ in empyrean height,

He welcomes the souls of the pure and right'.¹² When the soul of Rabina went Into repose, a certain orator opened [his funerary oration] thus:

'Ye Palms, sway your heads [and deplore]
A Saint, a noble Palm¹³ that is no more
Who days and nights in meditation spent;
For him, day and night, let us lament.'

Said R. Ashi to Bar-Kipok,¹⁴ What would you say on such a day [about me]? He responded thus:

'If a flame among the Cedars fall
What avails the lichen¹⁵ on the wall?¹⁶
If Leviathan¹⁷ by hook be hauled to land,
What hope have fishes of a shallow strand?
If fish in rushing stream by hook¹⁸ be caught
What death may in marshy ponds be wrought!'

Said Bar Abin¹⁹ to him: '[God] forbend that I should talk of "hook" or "flame" in connection with the righteous'. Then what would you say? — I should say:

'Weep ye for the mourners
Not for what is lost:
He found him rest;
'Tis we are let distressed'.

R. Ashi was' offended²⁰ with them,²¹ and their feet²² were turned.²³ On that day [of R. Ashi's demise] they did not come to make a lament for him, and that is what R. Ashi had said: 'Neither shall Bar-Kipok²⁴ bare [his shoulder] nor shall Bar-Abin²⁴ bare²⁵ [his shoulder, for me]'.

When Raba once came to Dagleth [Tekrit],²⁶ he said to Barabin,²⁷ Get up and say something. He rose and said [the following]:²⁸

When more than a 'third'²⁹ wadeth in water deep Remember the covenant³⁰ and mercy keep.³¹ We strayed from Thee as a wayward wife;³² Leave us not: as at Marah³³ save our life. R. Honin³⁴ was a son-in-law in the Nasi's family. He had no children but he prayed for mercy and had [his wish granted]. On the day when the child was [born] unto him he himself went to his repose, and the funeral orator on that occasion opened [his lament] thus:

Joy is turned to sorrow and Gladness linked with sadness.

When the time of joy³⁵ came nigh

The father heaved a dying sigh:

At [the birth of] his Gracious-little-son³⁶

The Gracious-sire's life was done.

They gave the child the name of Hanan after his father.

When the soul of R. Pedath³⁷ went into repose, R. Isaac b. Eleazar³⁸ opened [his address] thus: This day is as hard for Israel as the day when the sun set at noon-tide, as it is written: And it shall come to pass in that day . . . that I will cause the sun to go down at noon and I will darken the earth in the clear day. And I will turn your feasts into mourning and all your songs into lamentation. . . as the mourning of an only so,³⁹ And, said R. Johanan, that was the day of King Josiah's death.⁴⁰

When the soul of R. Johanan went into repose R. Ami observed [on his account] the seven [days of mourning] and the thirty. Said R. Abba son of R. Hiyya b. Abba: What R. Ammi did, he did but on his own initiative;⁴¹ for thus said R. Hiyya b. Abba, as citing R. Johanan: 'Even for his master who had taught him Wisdom⁴² one sits but one day'. When the soul of R. Zera⁴³ went into repose the orator of that occasion opened [his address] thus:

'The land of Shinear⁴⁴ was his home of birth

The land of Glory⁴⁵ reared her Darling⁴⁶ to fame;

"Woe is me!" saith Rakath⁴⁷ in lament,

For she hath lost her choicest ornament.'

When the soul of R. Abbahu went into repose the columns at Caesarea ran with tears.⁴⁸ At [the death of] R. Jose⁴⁹ the roof gutters at Sepphoris ran with blood. At that of R. Jacob [b. Aha],⁵⁰ Stars were visible in daytime. At that of R. Assi [all cedars]⁵¹ were uprooted; [at the death of R. Samuel b. Isaac]⁵¹ all trees were uprooted. At that of R. Hiyya [b. Abba]⁵⁰ fiery stones came down from the sky; at that of R. Menahem [b. Simai]⁵⁰ all images were effaced⁵² and came to be [used] as stone rollers;⁵³ at that of Tanhum son of R. Hiyya [of Kefar Acco]⁵¹ all human statues were torn out of their position; at that of [R. Isaac, son of R.]⁵¹ Eliashib seventy houses were broken into [by thieves] at Tiberias;⁵⁴ at that of R. Haninuna,⁵⁵ hail stones came down from the sky; at that of Rabbah and R. Joseph the rocks of the Euphrates kissed each other;⁵⁶ at that of Abaye and Raba the rocks of the Tigris kissed each other. When the soul of R. Mesharsheya went into repose the palms were laden with thorns.⁵⁷

Our Rabbis taught:

- (1) Which were carrying the coffins.
- (2) Tayi'a, the name of an Arab tribe which came to be used for Arabs in general.
- (3) What does this strange thing indicate?
- (4) The bracketed words which form the reading of MS.M. are here combined with the text of cur. edtl. to bring out the import of the Arab's remarks more fully.
- (5) A proverbial expression. He received the meed for his irreverence.
- (6) The Babylonian Exilarchs to which Rabbah b. R. Huna belonged traced their descent to Jehoiachim, King of Judah. V. JEV, 288ff.
- (7) Referring to his prowess and triumphs at the Collegiates' discussions.
- (8) An echo of Isa. XXXIV, 11; Zeph. II, 14.
- (9) Cf. Isa. LI, 19 and Jer. XLVIII, 3.
- (10) I.e., Babylon. Cf. Gen. XIV, 1.
- (11) Ps. LXVIII, 5 is taken as 'High-Heavens'; cf. v. 34 and Deut. XXXIII. Hoffin. Mid. Tann. ad loc. p. 221 and Hag. 12b.
- (12) With this thought, cf. Midr. Tehil. on Ps. CXVI, 15: Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints, a parable of a king who sent an eparchos (prefect) to a place which he directed well. Having completed his term, the king gave him another eparchia (province). In the place which he was leaving they praised him that he had directed them well, and in the place that he was entering they (also) praised him, that he was going to rule them well. Likewise, when the Holy One, blessed be He, sent a righteous man into the world to direct the age and he directed it well, on his departure from the world, people are distressed about him (leaving): for so long as the righteous man is among them he prevents tribulation from coming into the world while the Ministering Angels rejoice about his coming to abide among them. (Edition Buber, p. 478)
- (13) Cf. Ps. XCII, 13.
- (14) A noted orator.
- (15) The hyssop is frequently associated with the cedar, the high and low in contrast. Cf. Lev. XIV, 51, 52 and I Kings V, 13. Cf. 'And he (Solomon) spake of trees, from the cedar that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall'.
- (16) V. Elijahu Rabbah (ed. Fried.) XIV (XIII) p. 65.
- (17) The monster fish. 'Canst thou draw out Leviathan with a fish hook, or press down his tongue with a cord?' Job XL, 25. Cf. Isa. XXVII, 1; Ps. CIV, 25-26.
- (18) נפלה הרבה Var. lec. (v. D.S. p. 86) 'If rushing stream run dry What water may marshy ponds supply?' — Cf. Jer. XIV, 3; Ezek. XLVII, 11.
- (19) A noted orator.
- (20) Lit., 'his mind weakened', felt discouraged, disappointed.
- (21) At their ill-chosen metaphors, such as a flame among the cedars (cf. Judg. IX, 15); hooking the Leviathan (cf. n. 5), or marshy shallows, or 'what is lost', implying as it were that all his life's best work, the encouragement of scholarship and the careful redaction of the Talmud, are of no lasting value.
- (22) Lit., 'knees'.
- (23) I.e., they turned about and fled in confusion, ashamed of their indiscreet and almost impudent poetic effusion. For the idiomatic use of this expression, cf. R. Johanan's similar utterance in a sharp disputation with Resh Lakish who was his junior: 'We cut off the legs of the youngster'. Me'ila 7b and also Bez. 25b. The traditional interpretation takes it literally, that they both became crippled. V. next notes.
- (24) Yeb. 103a has בר קיפוף and בר אובא
- (25) I.e., shall not attend my funeral nor bare their shoulder as is done at the lament of a Principal of an Academy. Cf.

supra p. 140, n. 7. The traditional explanation takes the above observation as referring to their 'lameness' in connection with a discussion between R. Ashi and Amemar on the possibility of effecting the rite of halizah, i.e., taking off the shoe, by the levir or brother of a deceased childless husband, if he is a cripple where the malformation of his foot is such as to render it impossible to walk or don or take off a shoe, as required by Scriptural law. Deut. XXV, 5-10. According to this interpretation the translation of the sentence is: 'Neither Bar-Kipok nor Bar-Abin are fit to submit to the rite of halizah. V. Yeb., Sonc. ed. ' p. 709.

(26) דגלת . Tagrit, Tekrit or Tikrit (cf. Obermeyer p. 142). It could not be here the Tigris, as Mahoza itself lay on the Tigris. Tagrit or Tekrit lies higher up on the Tigris between Mosul and Baghdad and is often mentioned in Syrian literature.

(27) It seems doubtful whether it is the same Bar-Abin as above.

(28) The following poem seems to be part of a סליחה which had been composed by Bar-Abin on the occasion of a bad flooding of the Tigris in spring time, April-May, cf. Ta'an. 14a (bottom).

(29) A third of the country is flooded. Perhaps שלישית here refers to Israel, the Jewish quarter in the town. Cf. Isa. XIX, 24 and Shab. 88a.

(30) That a flood come not again. Cf. Gen. IX, 15, 16.

(31) Cf. Hab. III, 2 and P.B. P. 65.

(32) A faithless wife was tried by water, Num. V, 22. The flooding has made the waters undrinkable and caused many deaths.

(33) Var. lec. בזכות מי מרה by virtue of the old favour at Marah's water', or, as our text: באות מי מרה . Deliver us now miraculously as when the bitter water was healed and sweetened for our forefathers at Marah, Ex. XV, 23-25.

(34) probably pronounced Honein. He may be identical with 'Anani b. Sason mentioned supra 24b. R. Honein is cited infra 28a.

(35) The joyous birth of the child.

(36) הנינתו (from הנינה Grace) a diminutive form (fu'ailah) i.e., 'Little Honein' — a play on his father's name, from הנין (graced, favoured).

(37) So MS.M. and other texts; but cur. edd. R. Johanan, which seems however incorrect.

(38) Lived and taught at Caesarea.

(39) Amos VIII, 9-10.

(40) At Megiddo. V. Ii Chron. XXXV, 23-25; Rashi on v. 25; Targum on Lam. IV, 20; infra p. 188 and Ta'an. 22b.

(41) I.e., as his personal tribute to R. Johanan; but it is not to be taken as a rule to be followed generally.

(42) I.e., Torah.

(43) A great Babylonian sage highly esteemed for his learning, piety and noble character. Cf. supra 17a; Meg. 28a (twice) and Sanah. 14a (Sonc. ed., p. 65).

(44) Babylon.

(45) Palestine. Cf. Dan. XI, 16, 41.

(46) Cf. Jer. XXXI, 19.

(47) An ancient name identified with Sepphoris or Tiberias, both the seat of the Nasi. V. Meg. 6a (top).

(48) דמעתא (instead of מיא water, sweat). So MS. M., J.A.Z. III, 1 and other texts.

(49) Jose b. Halafta. J.A.Z. ibid. names Laodicea as the place.

(50) So MS.M.

(51) MS.M. and other texts, v. J.A.Z. ibid.

(52) As he refused to look even at the image of coins. Cf. J.A.Z. ibid. 'At the death of R. Nahum b. Simai they covered all the images, saying that as he never looked at them in his lifetime he should not see them after he fell asleep'.

(53) Cf. supra 11a.

(54) So MS.M. CC. more correctly than Nehardea of cur. edd., as J.A.Z. ibid. states it happened in Galilee and Ta'an. 23b shows this R. Isaac b. El. to have been with R. Mani of Tiberias. Besides, Nehardea had been in ruins since 259 C.E.

(55) Mentioned supra p. 158.

(56) I.e., they were thrown together, probably referring to the tier rocks which carried the bridges of the river. Cf. B.M. 86a where it is related that at Rabbah's death there arose so violent a storm that an Arab with his camel were bodily carried across the Nehar Papa canal. Cf. Obermeyer pp. 166 and 238.

(57) [According to the Meiri (Jerusalem 1937), these were figures of speech introduced by orators as the funerary orations respectively on the deaths of the above-named scholars, describing the gravity of the loss.]

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 26a

And these are rents that are not [to be] sewed up: One who rends [his clothes] for his father or mother; or his master who taught him Wisdom,¹ for a Nasi, or Ab Beth din;² or on hearing evil tidings or [hearing] God's name blasphemed, or when a scroll of the law has been burnt; or at the [sight of the ruined] cities of Judea, the Holy Temple or Jerusalem. And one rends [first] for the Temple and then enlarges [the rent] for Jerusalem.

‘For his father or mother or for his master who taught him Wisdom’. Whence derive we [these rulings]? — From what is written: And Elisha saw it and he cried: My father. my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof.³ ‘My father, my father’, that is, [to rend on the loss of] one's father or mother. ‘The chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof’, that is [for] a Master who taught one Torah. How exactly does it convey this [meaning]? — As R. Joseph rendered it [in Aramaic]: ‘My master, my master, who was better [protection] to Israel with his prayer than chariots and horsemen’.

And whence that these rents are not [to be] reunited? — From what is written [in the same passage]: And he [Elisha] took hold of his own clothes and rent them in two pieces.³ Once it says ‘and he rent then;’, do I not know that he rent them in two [asunder]? It must be meant to teach that the severed parts ever remain rent [apart] in two.⁴ Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: Elijah [however] is alive!⁵ — He replied, Since it is written there ‘And he saw ‘him no more,’ he was as dead to him [to Elisha].

‘For a Nasi or Ab Beth din or on hearing evil tidings’. Whence do we derive [these rulings]? — From what is written: Then David took hold of his clothes and rent them,’ and likewise all the men that were with him. And they wailed and wept and fasted until even, for Saul and for Jonathan his son and for the people of the Lord and for the house of Israel, because they were fallen by the sword.⁶ Now ‘Saul’, that is the Nasi [Prince]; ‘Jonathan’, that is the Ab Beth din. ‘And for the people of the Lord and for the house of Israel’, that refers to ‘evil tidings’ [that reached them].

Said Rab b. Shabba to R. Kahana: Might not one explain that [they did] not [rend their clothes] until [after hearing] all those misfortunes [that had then happened]?⁷ He replied, The repetition of ‘for’ this ‘and for’ that ‘and for’ separate the items [from one another]. Yet do we [have to] rend [clothes] on hearing evil tidings? For when they informed Samuel that King Shapur had slain twelve thousand Jews at Caesarea-Mazaca,⁸ he did not [then] rend his clothes? — They [the Sages] did not say [it should be done] save where the misfortune involves the larger part of the Community resembling the typical instance.⁹ And is it a fact that King Shapur slew Jews? For [it is reported] that King Shapur said to Samuel,¹⁰ ‘May [ill] befall me if I have ever slain a Jew!’ — For there, it was they [the Jews] that had brought it on themselves, as R. Ammi said, that the noise of the harp-strings¹¹ about Caesarea-Mazaca burst the wall of Laodicea.¹²

‘[Rents] on [hearing] God's name blasphemed’.¹³ Whence do we derive this? — From what is written: Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah who was over the household and Shebna the scribe and Joah the son; of Asaph the recorder to Hezekiah with their clothes rent and told him the [blasphemous] words of Rabshakeh.¹⁴

Our Rabbis taught: ‘It makes no difference whether one hears it [himself] or hears it from another who had heard it, he is in duty bound to rend [his clothes], but the witnesses are not in duty bound to rend [again on reporting] as they have already rent at the time they heard [the blasphemy]’. [You say], ‘as they have already rent at the time they heard [the blasphemy]’, what matters it, since they do hear it now [again in reporting]? — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, And it came to pass, when the King heard it, that he rent his clothes:¹⁵ the King [we are told], rent [his clothes], but they [who reported it] did not rend [again]. And whence [do we know] that these rents are not [to be] mended? — That is learnt from a comparison¹⁶ between the ‘rending’ [here] by King Hezekiah and ‘rending’ [elsewhere].¹⁷

‘[Rents] when a scroll of the law has been burnt’. What is the source for this? — What is written: And it came to pass when Jehudi had read three or four columns that he cut it with a penknife and cast it into the fire that was in the brazier.¹⁸ What is the point of saying ‘[had read] three or four columns’? — They told [King] Jehoiakim that Jeremiah had written a book of Lamentations, [and] he said to them: What is written there? [They quoted] ‘How doth the city sit solitary’.¹⁹ — [The King] replied: I am the King.²⁰ They then cited to him [the second verse]: She weepeth sore in the night. He replied [again]: I am the King. [They then cited the third verse]: Judah is gone into exile because of affliction. [Again he replied]: I am the King. [They continued with verse four]: The ways of Zion do mourn. I am the King [he replied]. [They continued with the fifth verse]: Her adversaries are become the head. He asked: Who said that? — [They continued with that same verse]: For the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions. Forthwith he [began to] cut out all the names of God mentioned therein and burnt them in the fire; hence it is written [in the report there]: Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the King, nor any of his servants that heard all these words,²¹ which implies that the [bystanders] should have rent [their clothes]. Said Abaye to R. Papa: Might it not be suggested that the reason [why they should have rent was] for hearing evil tidings?²² — He replied: [Hardly, for] were there at that time any evil tidings as yet?

Said R. Helbo, as citing R. Huna: One who witnesses a scroll of the law being torn²³ is in duty bound to make two rents: one on account of the [injury to the] parchment²⁴ and one for [the injury to] the writing, as [may be gathered] from what is said: Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah after that the King had burned the roll and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah.²⁵ ‘The roll,’ that is, the parchment and ‘and the words’, that is, the writing.²⁶

R. Abba and R. Huna b. Hiyya were once sitting together. R. Abba got up to [go and] relieve himself. He took off his head phylactery and put it down on a pillow, when a young ostrich came and wanted to swallow it.²⁷ Said he [R. Abba]: [If that had been swallowed] I should now have had to make two rents.²⁸ Said the other:²⁹ Whence do you derive this? A similar thing happened to me and I came to R. Mattenah [asking for guidance] and he had none to give me. I then came to Rab Judah and he told me: Thus said Samuel: ‘The [Rabbis] taught [that one should rend] only where [a sacred text is torn or burnt] by force majeure³⁰ and as in the example cited’.³¹ ‘Or at the [sight of the ruined] cities of Judea: the Holy Temple or Jerusalem’. Whence do we learn this? — From what is written: And it came to pass the second day after he³² had slain Gedaliah and no man knew it that there come certain men from Shechem, front Shiloh and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven and their clothes rent and having cut themselves, with meal-offerings and frankincense in their hand to bring them in the house of the Lord.³³ Said R. Helbo, as citing ‘Ulla of Berai who reported R. Eleazar: One who sees the cities of Judah in their [state of] ruin, recites the verse: Thy holy cities are become a wilderness,³⁴ and rends his garment. [On seeing] Jerusalem in its [state of] ruin, one recites: Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised Thee, is burned with fire and all our pleasant things are laid waste,³⁵ and rends his garment.

‘He [first] makes a rent for the Holy Temple and then enlarges [the rent] for Jerusalem’. [In contrast to this] some cited [the following Baraitha]: ‘It is all the same whether one hears [that Jerusalem is fallen into ruin]³⁶ or sees [Jerusalem in ruin he is] in duty bound to rend [his garment].³⁶ As soon as he reaches the Scopus he rends; and he rends for the holy Temple separately and for Jerusalem separately’? — This [seeming discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]. The former ruling obtains where he first [of all] encounters the site of the [ruined] Sanctuary³⁷ and the latter, where he encounters Jerusalem [ruins] first [and afterwards the Sanctuary].

Our Rabbis taught: 'And all these [rents] they may tack together,³⁸ baste or pick up [the frayed edges]³⁹ or with a ladderstitch, but may not reunite the edges [by a sewn seam]'.⁴⁰ Said R. Hisda:

It is said that there were then four hundred thousand inhabitants. Cf. Enc. Brit. (11th ed.) IV, 943a. The date 260 however makes this statement rather difficult, as Samuel died in 252 and Papa bar Nasr of Palmyra (Odenath) destroyed Nehardea 259. The occasion must therefore have been earlier, after the murder of Gordian III at Zaitha in 244 when Philip the Arab (of Hauran) made the best terms he could with Shapur [V. Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 26b

Nor may the Alexandrian¹ mending [be used]. Our Rabbis taught: One who rends [his garment] in a part that had been tacked together, basted, or [the edges] picked up by cross or ladderstitch, has not discharged his duty; if in a part which had been rejoined [in a seam], he has discharged his duty. Said R. Hisda: Also [if he rent] in a part [which had been done up] with the Alexandrian mending.

Our Rabbis taught: One is allowed to turn [a garment] upside down² and [then] completely mend the rent. R. Simeon b. Eleazar forbids complete mending of the rent. And just as the vendor [of the garment] is forbidden to reunite the rent [completely] the buyer too is forbidden to reunite it [completely] and accordingly the vendor is bound to inform the buyer of [the nature of the rent].

Our Rabbis taught: The initial rending is [to the extent of] a handbreadth,³ and any extension thereof⁴ is to be to the depth of three fingers: these are the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says: The initial rending is [to the extent of] three fingers and the extension may be as small as he cares.⁵ Said 'Ulla, The halachah; follows R. Meir in regard to the [initial] rending and in regard to the extension, the halachah follows R. Judah. It is likewise taught: R. Jose Says. The initial rending is [to the extent of] one handbreadth and the extension may be as little as one cares.⁵

Our Rabbis taught: If one was informed that his father died and he rent [his garment], [then] that his son died and he added thereto, the lower [inner portion] may be reunited; the upper parts is not to be reunited; that his son died and he rent his garment, [then] that his father died and he added thereto, the upper part may be reunited [and] the lower part⁶ is not to be reunited. [If one was informed] that his father died, that his mother died, that his brother died, that his sister died,⁷ he makes one rent for all. R. Judah b. Bathyra⁸ says: For all [near of kin he makes] one rent; for his father and/or mother⁹ [he makes] another rent: because a rent made for one's father or mother is not to be added to.¹⁰ What is the reason [for this differentiation]? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, it is because there is no extension [of a rent] in their case.¹¹ Samuel said: The halachah follows the view of R. Judah b. Bathyra. But did Samuel say that? Inasmuch Samuel stated that the halachah in matters of mourning is to follow the view of the [more] lenient authority!¹² — The [observance¹³ of] mourning comes under one category and the [act of] rending¹⁴ under another [category],

To what extent does one rend [his garment]? — To [exposing his breast down to] the [region of the] navel; some say, [only] down to the [region of the] heart — Although there is no [authentic] proof on this point, there is some [Scriptural] allusion to it, as it is said: And rend your hearts and not your garments.¹⁵ Having reached to the navel, [on hearing another evil report] he moves away a space of three fingers [from the former rent] and rends [afresh]. If the forepart of his garment is become full [of rents], he turns the garment front to back and then rends [again]; if it become full [of rents] in the upper parts. he turns the garment [upside] down; but one who rends the lower part or on the sides [of the garment] has not discharged his duty, save the High Priest, who rends [his garment] below.

[On the extension rending] R. Mattenah and Mar 'Ukba held different views and both advanced them in the names of [Abba] Samuel's father and R. Levi [b. Sisi]. One said: 'Anytime during the seven days. one rends [anew for another bereavement] and after the seven he [merely] adds [to the first rent]'. The other said: 'Anytime during the thirty. one rends [anew for another bereavement] and after the thirty he [merely] adds thereto'. To these statements R. Zera demurred. Now [said R. Zera], in regard to the one who says: 'Anytime during the seven days one rends [anew for another bereavement]',¹⁶ why [rend anew]? Because the rent may not be tacked together;¹⁷ then [in the case of a woman] in view of the Master's statement: 'A woman [mourner] tacks the rent together forthwith' [may she not] just as well [add even to the first rent]?¹⁷ — [No, because] there¹⁸ it is [a concession merely] out of the respect due to a woman.¹⁹ Again [said R. Zera], in regard to the one who says: 'Anytime during the thirty, one rends [anew for another],¹⁶ why is that? Because the rent is not to be reunited,²⁰ then [in the case of] a rent made for a father or mother that is never to be reunited, [may he not] just as well [add to the rent]?²¹ — [No, because] there [also the restriction is merely] out of the deference²² due to one's father and mother.

Our Rabbis taught: One who goes forth before the dead with a garment already rent, robs the dead and the living [relatives of their due]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: If a man says to his friend, 'Lend me your cloak and I shall go and visit my father who is ill', and he went and found him already dead, he rends it and then mends the rent. After returning home he returns the cloak and compensates him for the damage done by the rent; but if he had not informed him [of his intention to visit his sick father], he must not touch it.

Our Rabbis taught: If one who is ill sustains bereavement, they should not inform him thereof, lest he thereby become distracted in mind; nor do they direct to have any garments rent in his presence and they direct the women to keep silent [from lamenting] in his presence. Children may be made to rend their clothes in order to stir up sadness and garments are also rent for a father-in-law or mother-in-law, out of deference to one's wife. R. Papa said: It is taught in the Ebel Rabbathi:²³ 'A mourner should not set an infant on his knee, because the child may amuse him and he may thereby incur censure from his fellow men'.

NOR DO THEY PROVIDE A REPAST SAVE²⁴ [SEATED] ON UPRIGHT COUCHES.²⁵ Our Rabbis taught: 'One who goes to the house of a mourner, if he be on familiar terms with him, may provide the repast for him [to be taken]²⁶ on overturned couches, but if not, he provides the repast for him [to be taken] on couches in erect position'.²⁷

Raba suffered a misfortune and Abba b. Martha, who is the same as Abba b. Manyomi, went to the house [to provide the mourner's repast for him]. Raba sat on all upright couch while Abba b. Martha sat on an overturned one. Said Raba: How lacking in [good] sense²⁸ is that Associate of the Rabbis!

Our Rabbis taught: One who goes from place to place [and mourning befell him while being on the road],²⁹

(1) Neatly sewed together on the surface with the joined ends on the wrong side of the material, or darned invisibly, or a piece neatly let in. V. Tosaf. s.v. אִיחָוִי.

(2) I.e., adapting the bottom part for the neck.

(3) Four fingers, the width of the palm.

(4) on the intermediate occurrence of another bereavement.

(5) Lit., 'whatever it be'.

(6) Of the rent made for a parent.

(7) I.e., the news of their several deaths reached him simultaneously. J.M.K. III, 7 reads thus: 'Even if he heard of the death of his father and mother and of his Master who had taught him wisdom, he makes one rent for all'.

(8) J.M.K. III, 7 reads: 'R. Judah b. Tema says. 'He makes a rent for this one separately and for that one separately: only that he does not make that for his father and that for his mother as an extension". But is not this (latter part) to the same effect as the former part? Only, what he means is, that one shall make no extension on a rent made for a father or a mother'.

(9) Note the ambiguity indicated here by 'and/or', that is, either (a) a separate rent for father and mother jointly, quite apart from the rent made for the other near-of-kin on that occasion; or (b) a separate rent for each, even if the news of their deaths was communicated to him at the same moment. The former interpretation (with some reservations) is accepted by Ritba. V. infra n. 1.

- (10) Cf. n. 1 supra. Sem. IX reads as follows: One whose father and mother died (together) makes one rent for both; R. Judah b. Tema says: He makes a rent for this one separately and a rent for this one separately.
- (11) Tosaf. s.v. נָמַר fails to see the purport of this remark of R. Nahman b. Isaac and favours the view that the last clause ('because a rent made. . .') is probably a gloss (and is in fact not found in Sem. I.e.). Rabad, however, cited by Asheri, n. 71, explains the comment thus: Since a rent for a parent extends to the region of the heart (or even to the navel), any extension of it (for another sorrow) would fail to be any indication thereof, as his friends would take the enlarged rent as the sign of the mourners excessive grief for his parent.
- (12) Whereas R. Judah's view is in fact stricter than the first.
- (13) I.e. , the period of seven or thirty days. which begins after the interment.
- (14) Which is effected at the most poignant moment of grief, at witnessing the death of a beloved (even before the interment) or at the first intelligence of it. It is a tribute to the dead.
- (15) Joel II, 13.
- (16) It is the last part of the quotation on which the argument turns.
- (17) Within the seven days.
- (18) V. supra 22b, p. 142.
- (19) V. ibid. Not the law, whereas rending the garment is a duty according to the law for all, it is a tribute she owes to the dead, and like everybody else she should act in the regular way for all, i.e., rend anew.
- (20) During the thirty days. V. supra p. 143.
- (21) Even during the thirty days; as, even after the thirty days he would, according to the view expressed above, act like any other person according to the law and merely add to the rent a little, in tribute of the fresh loss; otherwise there is no concession in the case of a son mourning for a parent until the end of the year.
- (22) Not the law; hence after thirty days he merely adds to the rent.
- (23) Cf. supra p. 148, n. 10.
- (24) [MS.M. omits 'save', v. n. 6.]
- (25) For the reading. v. supra p. 154, n. I.
- (26) The one who provided the mourner's would also join him at the meal.
- (27) [Our Mishnah accordingly speaks of one who is not on familiar terms with the mourner. Raabad and others (v. Asheri) explain the Mishnah as referring to festival week, when in no case is the meal provided on overturned couches. As, however, no couches are overturned on festival week, the word 'SAVE' is redundant and on this interpretation is to be omitted, v. n. 3.]
- (28) As Raba and his visitor were not on intimate terms, it was presumptuous on the part of the visitor to sit low, while Raba out of deference to the visitor sat on the couch in its normal position.
- (29) So MS.M. Asheri and other texts.

if he can reduce his business affairs, he should do so, and if not, let him carry on with them [as best he may].

Our Rabbis taught: When do mourners overturn the beds? From the moment [the corpse] is taken from the house: these are the words of R. Eliezer; R. Joshua Says, From the moment that the rolling slab¹ closes the tomb. It happened [when] Rabban Gamaliel the Elder² died, as soon as he was taken out of the door of his house, R. Eliezer said to them,³ Overturn your beds. And after the 'rolling slab' had been placed [to close the tomb] R. Joshua said to them:³ 'Overturn your beds'. Said they to him, 'We have already overturned them by order of the Elder' [R. Eliezer].

Our Rabbis taught: When do they place the beds in erect position on the [approaching] eve of the Sabbath? From the time of the evening offering⁴ onwards'. Said Rabbah son of Huna,⁵ Nevertheless he [the mourner] does not sit down on it until it gets dark, and on the termination of the Sabbath, although he may have but one day [more] to sit [in mourning] he overturns it again.⁶

the beds he has in the house;⁷ even though he has ten beds in ten places, he overturns them all.⁸ And even if there be five brothers one of whom died, they all overturn [their beds].⁹ If, however, it be a bed specially set apart for vestments,¹⁰ that one need not be overturned. A dargesh¹¹ [couch] need not be overturned, but should be tilted up;¹² Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, [In the case of] a dargesh [it is enough if] he loosens the bolster-frame and lets it drop [down] of its own accord. What is a dargesh? — Said ‘Ulla, It is a Couch of Fortune.¹³ Said Rabbah to him: But then [how does that] meaning fit the ruling in reference to a king, for we learned:¹⁴ ‘[And when they provide for him the mourner's repast] all the people recline [at the repast] on the ground while the king sits on the dargesh’.¹⁵ Is there any reason why he should now be seated on [a special couch] which he had hitherto not been able to sit on?¹⁶ To this question R. Ashi demurred, [saying]: What is this difficulty? It may be just as exceptional as eating and drinking [with the king], because heretofore they [the people] did not provide for him food and drink, whereas now [in his mourning] they do provide for him food and drink! But, if difficulty there be [in the offered explanation] it arises from what is taught: ‘There is no need to overturn a dargesh, but he [merely] tilts it up’. Now if dargesh be a ‘Couch of Fortune’ why is there no need to overturn it, surely it is taught: ‘One who [has to] overturn his bed overturns not his own bed alone but all the beds he has in his house! And what is this difficulty? Why, a dargesh is similar to a bed specially set apart for vestments,¹⁷ as it is taught [there]: ‘If it be a bed specially set apart for vestments, that need not be overturned’. But if difficulty there be [in the explanation] it is this [from what is taught there]: ‘Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, [In the case of] a dargesh [it is enough if] he unfastens the inner bolster-frame and lets it drop [down]’. Now if you suppose that dargesh means a ‘Couch of Fortune’ , what bolster-frame is there [at all]?

When Rabin came [home from Palestine] he said, One of the Rabbis whose name is R. Tahlifa the Palestinian, who used to frequent the leather-mart, told me: What is a dargesh? It is [said he] a couch covered with a hide.¹⁸ It has also been stated: ‘R. Jeremiah said,¹⁹ In a dargesh the interlacing²⁰ [of the girths] is on the inside; in a bed [couch] the interlacing [of the girths] is on the outside’. Said R. Jacob b. Aha as reporting R. Joshua b. Levi: The halachah follows the opinion of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.²¹ Also this, R. Jacob b. Ala is to have said as reporting R. Assi that where a couch has projecting lean-backs,²² it is enough if he merely tilts it up.²³

Our Rabbis taught: If he slept [during the seven days] on a chair, or on a large bench for water-jugs²⁴ or [even] on the ground. he has not discharged his duty.²⁵ Said R. Johanan: [He has not discharged his duty] because he has not conformed to [the practice of] overturning the bed.²⁶

Our Rabbis taught: We may sweep or strew²⁷ [the floors] in a house of mourning and wash dishes, cups, jugs and wine-goblets²⁸ in a house of mourning; but do not bring perfumes²⁹ or spices into a house of mourning. But this is not [correct]? For Bar Kappara taught: One should not say a benediction for [enjoying the scent of] perfumery or spices in a house of mourning, which implies that while we do not say a benediction, they may yet be taken into the house? — That presents no difficulty: the former ruling is for the house of mourning,³⁰ while the latter ruling is for the house of comforters.³¹

MISHNAH. [PROVISIONS]³² SHOULD NOT BE CONVEYED TO THE HOUSE OF MOURNING ON AN [ORNAMENTAL] TRAY,³³ SALVER,³⁴ OR FRUIT-BASKET,³⁵ BUT IN [PLAIN] BASKETS. AND THE MOURNERS BENEDICTION [IN GRACE AFTER MEALS] IS NOT SAID DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. BUT COMFORTERS MAY STAND IN A ROW AND COMFORT [THEM].³⁶ AND THE MOURNERS GIVE LEAVE OF DEPARTURE TO THE MANY [COMFORTERS]. THE BIER IS NOT SET DOWN IN THE BROADWAY [DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK] SO AS NOT TO ENCOURAGE THE [FUNERARY] LAMENT; AND THE BIER OF WOMEN IS NEVER [SET DOWN IN THE BROAD WAY] FOR THE SAKE OF PROPRIETY.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Formerly they were wont to convey [victuals] to the house of mourning, the rich in silver and gold baskets and the poor in osier baskets of peeled willow twigs, and the poor felt shamed: they therefore instituted that all should convey [victuals] in osier baskets of peeled willow twigs out of deference to the poor.

Our Rabbis taught: Formerly, they were wont to serve drinks in a house of mourning, the rich in white glass vessels and the poor in coloured glass, and the poor felt shamed: they instituted therefore that all should serve drinks in coloured glass,³⁷ out of deference to the poor.³⁸ Formerly they were wont to uncover the face of the rich and cover the face of the poor, because their faces turned livid in years of drought and the poor felt shamed; they therefore instituted that everybody's face should be covered, out of deference for the poor.³⁸ Formerly, they were wont to bring out the rich [for burial] on a dargesh³⁹ aid the poor on a plain bier,¹ and the poor felt shamed: they instituted therefore that all should be brought out on a plain bier, out of deference for the poor. Formerly they were wont to set a perfuming-pan under [the bed of] those that died of intestinal disorders, and the living suffering from intestinal disorders felt shamed: they instituted therefore that it should be set under all [alike], out of deference to the living that suffer from intestinal disorders. Formerly they were wont to subject to [ritual] ablution all utensils that had been used by [dying] menstruants,² and the living menstruant women felt thereby shamed: they instituted therefore that they should subject utensils used by all [dying] women alike, out of deference to the living menstruants. Formerly they were wont to subject to [ritual] ablution all utensils used by those suffering from a flux.³ while dying, and the living suffering from a flux felt shamed: they therefore instituted that they should subject to ablution utensils used by all, out of deference to the living suffering from flux.⁴ Formerly the [expense of] taking the dead out [to his burial] fell harder on his near-of-kin than his death so that the dead man's near-of-kin abandoned him and fled, until at last Rabban Gamaliel came [forward] and, disregarding his own dignity, came out [to his burial] in flaxen⁵ vestments and thereafter the people followed his lead to come out [to burial] in flaxen vestments. Said R. Papa. And nowadays all the world follow the practice of [coming out] even in a paltry⁶ [shroud] that costs but a zuz.

THEY SET NOT DOWN THE BIER IN THE BROADWAY. Said R. Papa,⁷ in the case of a scholar [who died] no regard is paid to the festival [week].⁸ and much less so during Hanukkah⁹ or Purim,¹⁰ and this ruling obtains only in his presence, but away from his presence no [lament is allowed]. But that is not [correct]? For R. Kahana did make a lament for R. Zebid of Nehardea at Pum-Nahara? — Said R. Papi,¹¹ it was on the day of [receiving] the tidings [of his death] and that is deemed the same as in his presence.

Said ‘Ulla: [The technical meaning of] a hesped¹² is [lamenting with striking] upon the breast, as it is written: [Tremble ye... strip you... and gird sackcloth upon your loins]. striking upon the breast.¹³ [The technical meaning of] tippuah¹⁴ is clapping one's hands [in grief], and that of killus¹⁵ is [tapping] with the foot [in mourning].

Our Rabbis taught: One who does the tapping with the foot. should not do so when wearing either sandal or boot, because of the danger.¹⁶

Said R. Johanan, As soon as the mourner nods his head,¹⁷ the comforters are no longer allowed to remain seated by him. R. Johanan said also, All are in duty bound to rise at the Presence of the Nasi,¹⁸ save a mourner, or one who feels ill. And furthermore, said R. Johanan, To all we may say¹⁹ 'be seated' save to a mourner or one who feels ill.²⁰

Said Rab Judah, as citing Rab: A mourner is forbidden to eat of his own bread on the first day [of mourning].²¹ as the All-Merciful said to Ezekiel: And eat thou not the bread of men.²² Rabbah and R. Joseph alternately provided the repast to each other.

This also said Rab Judah as reporting Rab: When a person dies in town, all the townspeople are forbidden from doing work. R. Hammuna once came to Daru-matha;²³ he heard the sound of the funerary-bugle²⁴ [and] seeing some people carrying on their work, he said: Let the people be under the shammetha [ban]! Is there not a person dead in town? They told him that there was an Association²⁵ in the town. If so, said he to them, it is allowed you [to work]. And furthermore, Rab Judah said, as citing Rab, Whoever indulges in grief to excess over his dead will weep for another. There was a certain woman that lived in the neighbourhood of R. Huna; she had seven sons one of whom died [and] she wept for him rather excessively. R. Huna sent [word] to her: 'Act not thus'. She heeded him not [and] he sent to her: If you need my word it is well; but if not, are you anxious to make provision²⁶ for yet another? He [the next son] died and they all died. In the end he said to her, Are you fumbling with provision for yourself? And she died.

[Our Rabbis taught]:²⁷ 'Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him²⁸ [that is], 'Weep not for the dead' [that is] in excess, 'neither bemoan him' — beyond measure. How is that [applied]? — Three days for weeping and seven for lamenting and thirty [to refrain] from cutting the hair and [donning] pressed clothes; hereafter, the Holy One, blessed be He, says, 'Ye are not more compassionate towards him [the departed] than I'.

Weep sore for him that goeth away.²⁸ Said Rab Judah [as reporting Rab],²⁹ that means, Weep for him who goes [to his long home] childless.³⁰ R. Joshua b. Levi would not go to [visit] a house of mourning save to that of one who had gone childless, for it is written [said he]: Weep sore for him that goeth away,³¹ for he shall return no more nor see his native country.²⁸ R. Huna said this [verse refers to] one who committed a sinful act and repeated it again. R. Huna is here adhering to his own view, as he said: 'As soon as a person has continued a sinful act and has repeated it, it has become unto him permissible'. [You say]. 'Become unto him permissible'? Can you conceive such a thing? — Say rather that it has become unto him as though it were something permissible.

Said R. Levi: A mourner [during] the first three days should look upon himself as if a sword is resting between his shoulders;³² from the third to the seventh, as if it stands in the corner facing him; thereafter as if it is moving alongside him in the [broad] market place.

with reference to a woman who died in childbirth,¹ but [that of] other women may be set down [in the roadway]. R. Eleazar says: [The rule applies] even to other women, as it is written: And there Miriam died and was buried there,² which shows that her death was close to her [place of] burial. R. Eleazar also said that Miriam also died by the Divine kiss [like Moses]: We interpret the expression 'there' [used at Miriam's death] in the same sense as that of the expression 'there' used of Moses.³ Wherefore then is it not said about her [that she died] by the mouth of the Lord?³ Because it would be unbecoming to say so.

Said R. Ammi, Wherefore is the account of Miriam's death⁴ placed next to the [laws of the] red heifer?⁵ To inform you that even as the red heifer afforded atonement [by the ritual use of its ashes], so does the death of the righteous afford atonement [for the living they have left behind].

R. Eleazar said, Wherefore is [the account of] Aaron's death closely followed by [the account of the disposal of] the priestly vestments?⁶ [To inform you] that just as the priest's vestments were [means] to effect atonement,⁷ so is the death of the righteous [conducive to procuring] atonement.

Our Rabbis taught: If one die suddenly, this is [reckoned] as being 'snatched away'; if one is ill one day and dies, that is reckoned as being hustled away; R. Hanania b. Gamaliel says, That is death by a stroke, for it is said: Son of Man, behold I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a pestilential stroke,⁸ and it is written [there. after], So I spoke unto the people in the morning and at even my wife died.⁹ After two days' [illness], it is a rather precipitous death.¹⁰ [After] three — it is one of reproof; [after] four — it is one of rebuff [snubbing]; [after] five is the ordinary death of all men.¹¹ (Said R. Honin: What is the text [for this]? Behold thy days are approached that thou must die.¹² 'Behold' [accounts for] one;¹³ 'thy days' accounts for two [more]; 'are approached' [gives us] two [more], which makes five. 'Behold' makes one because the word for 'one' in Greek is hen.)¹³

'If one dies [under]¹⁴ fifty years [old] — that is death by kareth;¹⁵ at fifty-two years — that is the death of Samuel of Ramah; at sixty — that is by the hand of Heaven'.¹¹ (Said Mar Zutra: What is the text [for this]? Thou shalt come to thy grave in ripe age,¹⁶ as the [numerical value of the] word for 'in ripe age' yields sixty.) 'At seventy, it is the death of the hoary head; at eighty it is the death of a vigorous [old man]. for it is written, The days of our years are three score and ten, or even by reason of strength four score years.¹⁷ Said Rabbah,¹⁸ From fifty to sixty years [of age]. that is death by kareth, and the reason why this has not been mentioned was out of deference to [the prophet] Samuel of Ramah. R. Joseph, on his attaining the age of sixty, made a festival day for the Rabbis [of the Academy] saying. 'I have just passed beyond [the limit of] kareth'. Said Abaye to him: 'Granted, Sir, that you have passed the [limit of] kareth as to years. but as to the [limit of sickening] days¹⁹ have you escaped that'? He replied: 'Nevertheless, hold on to the half'.²⁰ R. Huna's soul went into repose suddenly²¹ and the Rabbis [of the academy] were perturbed [thereat] when Zoga²² who hailed from Adiabene taught them:²³ 'What we learned applies only when one has not attained the "age of strength" [eighty] but if one has attained the "age of strength" [eighty] a sudden death is dying by the kiss'.

Raba said: [Length of] life, children and sustenance depend not on merit but [rather on] mazzal.²⁴ For [take] Rabbah and R. Hisda. Both were saintly Rabbis; one master prayed for rain and it came, the other master prayed for rain and it came. R. Hisda lived to the age of ninety-two,²⁵ Rabbah²⁶ [only] lived to the age of forty. In R. Hisda's house there were held sixty marriage feasts, at Rabbah's house there were sixty²⁷ bereavements. At R. Hisda's house there was the purest wheaten bread for dogs, and it went to waste;²⁸ at Rabbah's house there was barley bread for human beings and that not to be had. This too, Raba said: These three requests I made of Heaven; two were granted me and one was not. [I prayed for] the scholarship of R. Huna and the wealth of R. Hisda which were granted me; but the modest disposition of Rabbah son of R. Huna,²⁹ that was not granted me.

R. Se'orim, Raba's brother, while sitting at Raba's bedside³⁰ saw him [Raba] going into sleep [dying],³¹ when he [the invalid] said to his brother: 'Do tell him,³² Sir, not to torment me'. R. Se'orim replied: 'Are you, Sir, not his intimate friend?'³³ Said Raba: 'Since [my] mazzal³⁴ has been delivered [to him], he takes no heed of me'. R. Se'orim then said to the dying: 'Do, Sir, show yourself to me [in a dream]'. He did show himself and when asked: 'Did you, Sir, suffer [pain]?' He replied: 'As from the prick of the cupping instrument'.

Raba, while seated at the bedside³⁰ of R. Nahman, saw him sinking into slumber [death].³⁵ Said he to Raba: 'Tell him,³⁶ Sir, not to torment me'. Said Raba: 'Are you, Sir, not a man esteemed?'³⁷ Said [R. Nahman] to him, 'Who is esteemed, who is regarded, who is distinguished [before the Angel of Death]?' Said [Raba] to him: 'Do, Sir, show yourself to me [in a dream]'. He did show himself. [Raba] asked him: 'Did you suffer pain, Sir'? He replied: 'As [little as] the taking of a hair from the milk; and were the Holy One, blessed be He, to say to me, Go back to that world as you were, I wish it not, for the dread thereof [of death] is great'.

R. Eleazar was eating some terumah [priest's holy food] when he³⁶ showed himself to him. Said he, Am I not [in the pious act of] eating terumah and is not that designated 'holy [meat]'?³⁸ The [fatal] moment [thus] was past! R. Shesheth caught sight of him³⁶ in the market place. Quoth he: 'Do you [seize me] in the market place like a beast? Come to [the] house'! R. Ashi³⁹ caught sight of him³⁶ in the market place. Quoth he: 'Grant me thirty days' respite and I shall revise my studies, inasmuch as you say [in Heaven above]: "Happy he that cometh hither [to Heaven] bringing his learning ready with him".'⁴⁰ he came [again] on the thirtieth day; quoth he, 'What is the urgency?' He replied: R. Huna⁴¹ b. Nathan is close on your heels⁴² and, 'No sovereignty encroaches upon the sphere of another even to a hair's breadth'.

As for R. Hisda, he³⁶ could never overcome him as his mouth was never silent from [repeating] his learning by rote. So he went and settled on the cedar tree of the Schoolhouse. The tree cracked; R. Hisda stopped [and] he overcame him.

As for R. Hiyya, he³⁶ could not gain access to him. So one day he adopted the guise of a poor man and came and rapped at the gate, saying, 'Bring me out some bread'. They [others] brought out some bread to him. Said he then to R. Hiyya: 'Don't you, Sir, treat the poor kindly? Why not, Sir, [also] treat kindly this man [standing outside]?'⁴³ He [R. Hiyya] opened the door to him,⁴⁴ whereupon, showing him a fiery rod, he made him yield his soul.

(2) Num. XX, 1, 'There' being repeated twice.

(3) Deut. XXXIV, 5: So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab by the mouth of the Lord. In the passage 'there' could have been omitted, and in the above passage we have also a superfluous 'there', which suggests the Gezerah shawah, v. Glos.

(4) Num. XX, I.

(5) Ibid. XIX. It is called a 'sin-offering' and the ritual use of its ashes afforded the means of purification as well as the desire to sanctification.

(42) I.e., waiting to succeed you.

(43) Why not yourself befriend me, this poor man, and give me the bread with your own hand?

(44) Cf. A.Z. 58a (Sonc. ed., 11. 289). Here probably to be one word הִדְלִיף 'he pushed the door aside'; cf. שֵׁנִי for a slab used for closing the entrance to a tomb.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 28b

MISHNAH. WOMEN MAY RAISE A WAIL DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], BUT NOT CLAP [THEIR HANDS IN GRIEF]; R. ISHMAEL SAYS, THOSE THAT ARE CLOSE TO THE BIER CLAP [THEIR HANDS IN GRIEF]. ON THE DAYS OF NEW MOON, OF HANUKKAH AND OF PURIM¹ THEY MAY RAISE A WAIL AND CLAP [THEIR HANDS IN GRIEF]. NEITHER ON THE FORMER² NOR ON THE LATTER OCCASIONS DO THEY CHANT A DIRGE. AFTER [THE DEAD] HAS BEEN INTERRED THEY NEITHER RAISE A WAIL NOR CLAP [THEIR HANDS IN GRIEF]. WHAT IS MEANT BY RAISING A WAIL' ['INNUY]?³ WHEN ALL SING IN UNISON. WHAT IS MEANT BY A DIRGE [KINAH]?⁴ WHEN ONE SPEAKS⁵ AND ALL RESPOND AFTER HER, AS IT IS SAID: AND TEACH YOUR DAUGHTERS WAILING AND ONE ANOTHER [EACH] LAMENTATION [KINAH].⁶ BUT AS TO THE FUTURE [DAYS] TO COME, [THE PROPHET] SAYS: HE WILL DESTROY DEATH FOR EVER AND THE LORD GOD WILL WIPE AWAY TEARS FROM OFF ALL FACES.⁷

GEMARA. What say the women [in lament]? — Said Rab.⁸ 'Cry woe o'er him that is now departing! Cry woe o'er his wounds⁹ [and smarting]!' Raba¹⁰ said, The women of Shoken-Zeb¹¹ speak thus:

'Cry woe o'er him that is departing!

Cry woe o'er his wounds and smarting!'

Raba also said, The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

'Withdraw the bone from out the pot¹²

And the kettles¹² fill with water [hot]'

Raba said this also: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

'Be muffled,¹³ ye high mountains,

[Clouds] covering your head;

Of high lineage and grand ancestry

Came he that is dead’.

Also this said Raba: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘Borrow [and buy] a Milesian¹⁴ robe

To dress a free-born son;

[Give it free of charge] for Provision left he none’.¹⁵

And furthermore said Raba: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘Comes hurrying and scurrying¹⁶ Tumbling aboard the ferry

And having to borrow his fare’.

Again this said Raba: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘Our brothers are merchants who

At the custom houses¹⁷ are searched’.

And again said Raba: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘This death or that death [is the end of the quest];

Our bruises are the rate of interest’.

It is taught: R. Meir was wont to say: ‘[It is written], It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting; for that is the end of all men and the living will lay it to heart.¹⁸ ["And the living will lay it to heart"], what is that? Things about death; if one makes lament, others will lament for him; if one assists at burial, others will bury him; if one bears the bier, others will bear him; if one raises [his voice]¹⁹ others will raise [their voice] for him’. Others read [the last]: ‘And he that raises not [himself with pride], others will raise him, as it is written: Glorify not thyself in the presence of the King and stand not in the place of great men; for better is it that it be said unto thee, Come up hither, than that thou shouldest be put lower in the presence of the prince.²⁰

Our Rabbis taught: When the sons of R. Ishmael died, four Elders went into his house to comfort him. R. Tarfon, R. Jose the Galilean, R. Eleazar b. ‘Azaria and R. Akiba. Said R. Tarfon to them: ‘Know ye, he is a great sage and erudite in homiletic exposition, let none of you break in while another is speaking’. Said R. Akiba: ‘And I be last!’ R. Ishmael opened²¹ [the conversation] and said: ‘His²² sins were many, his sorrowful bereavements came in close succession; he²² troubled his Masters once and a second time!’ R. Tarfon responded and said: ‘But your brethren, the whole house of Israel bewail the burning which the Lord hath kindled.²³ Is not this universal sorrow more due²⁴ now [even than there]? Why, if Nadab and Abihu who had performed but one office — as it is written: And the sons of Aaron presented the blood unto him²⁵ . . . were thus [universally mourned] — how much more due to the sons of R. Ishmael!’ R. Jose the Galilean then responded and said: It is written: And all Israel shall make lamentation for him and bury him.²⁶ Is not more due now? Why, if Abijah Jeroboam's son who had done but one good thing — as it is written: Because in him there is found some good thing towards the Lord God of Israel,²⁶ — was mourned in such universal manner, how much more is due to the sons of Ishmael!

What was that 'good thing'? R. Zeira and R. Hanina b. Papa [gave different explanations]: one saying that he left his charge [post] and went on a festive pilgrimage [to Jerusalem]; the other saying that he removed the military guards²⁷ that his father had posted on the roads to prevent the Israelites from going on a pilgrimage [to Jerusalem].²⁸

R. Eleazar b. 'Azaria then responded and said: 'Thou shalt die in peace and with the burning of thy fathers, the former kings that were before thee, so shall they make a burning for thee.'²⁹ Is not more due now? Why, if Zedekiah King of Judah who had performed but one office in having had Jeremiah lifted from the mire,³⁰ was to be mourned thus, how much more is due to the sons of Ishmael'!

R. Akiba then responded and said: 'In that day there shall be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon'.³¹ [On this] R. Joseph said, Had we not the [Aramaic Targum] rendering of that text, I would not have known what it said there: 'In that time the mourning at Jerusalem will be as great as the lament over Ahab son of Omri whom Hadadrimmon son of Tabrimmon had slain³² and as the lament over Josiah son of Amon whom Pharaoh the Lame³³ [Necho] had slain in the valley of Megiddon.³⁴ Is not more due now? Why, if Ahab King of Israel who had done but one good thing — as it is written: And the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Arameans [and died at even]³⁵ — was lamented thus how much more is due to the sons of Ishmael'!

Said Raba to Rabbah b. Mari, It is written about Zedekiah: Thou shalt die in peace,³⁶ yet it is written [thereafter]: Moreover he [Nebuchadnezzar] put out Zedekiah's eyes?³⁷ — He replied that R. Johanan had explained it thus, [namely] that Nebuchadnezzar died in Zedekiah's lifetime.³⁸ Again said Raba to Rabbah b. Mari, it is written: Therefore, behold I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace;³⁹ yet it is written [about him elsewhere]: And the archers shot at King Josiah,' [and the King said to his servants, Have me away for I am sore wounded;⁴⁰ And [on this last part] R. Judah citing Rab, commented: They riddled⁴¹ his body like a sieve! — This, too he replied, R. Johanan explained that the Temple had not been destroyed [as threatened] in his lifetime.

Said R. Johanan.⁴² Comforters are not permitted to say a word until the mourner opens [conversation], as it is said: So they sat down with him on the ground. . . and none spake a word unto him; for they saw that his grief was very great.⁴³ After this opened Job his mouth⁴⁴ . . . Then answered Eliphaz the Temanite.⁴⁵

Said R. Abbahu: Whence [derive we the practice] that the mourner reclines in the foremost place⁴⁶ [at the mourners' repast]? From what is said [by Job]: I chose out their way, and sat chief, and dwelt as a king it, the army, as one comforteth the mourners.⁴⁷ 'As one comforteth the mourners'? Does not that convey [rather] that he was [at the head in] comforting others? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [Not necessarily as] it is written Yenahem, it may be rendered, 'as when one comforteth mourners'.⁴⁸

Mar Zutra said: The rule might be [derived] from here:⁴⁹ And prince⁵⁰ be he who is embittered — distraught⁵¹ among those stretched [on couches].⁵² Said R. Hama b. Hanina, Whence [is derived the practice] that a bridegroom reclines in the foremost place [at the marriage feast]? From what is said: I will rejoice in the Lord . . . for He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation . . . as a bridegroom that ministers in his diadem as a priest.⁵³ Which means that just as a priest [with whom he is compared] is at the head, so is the bridegroom [placed] at the head. And whence have we this ruling about the priest himself? — From what is taught in [a Baraitha of] the School of R. Ishmael: And thou shalt sanctify him [the priest] for he offereth the bread of thy God,⁵⁴ which means, [sanctify him] in every matter appertaining to hallowed things, to be first to begin,⁵⁵ first to say grace, first to take a fair portion.

R. Hanina said: The dying gasps severely agitate the body

(11) Identified by Obermeyer. 190ff as Askun — Zefia, two places in close proximity on the eastern bank of the Tigris, a parasang (mile) from Sikara and, higher up. Mahoza, Raba's place.

(12) Reading מִכְבֵּא instead of מִכְבֵּא as in our text (or D.S. מִכְבֵּא) which means, 'Withdraw the bone from the molar tooth' which gives no sense, as the dying do not suck or gnaw a bone. It has hitherto defied all explanation. It is probably a misreading of כְּכַבֵּא from  or Latin cacabus a three-legged cooking pot synonymous with cucuma — קוּמְקוּם — associated here with אֲנִימֵיכִי =  (V. Shab. 41a) meaning: He's dead, he needs no broth; fill now the pots and kettles with hot water to wash the dead instead.

- (47) Job XXIX, 25. Possibly R. Abbahu and Mar Zutra (mentioned next) read into the terms 'chief' and 'king' the popular, familiar usage of these terms in Latin and Greek, by which they designated the person presiding over the toasts at the end of a feast, the rex convivii, basileus, or symposiarch. The following citation from Sem. XIV, (end), will make it clear: 'Ten cups (toasts) they drink in the house of mourning; two before the meal, five during the meal and three after the meal (namely) one for the benediction of the mourners, one for comforting the mourners and one (in reference) to acts of loving-kindness (the merits of the deceased; the bearers of the biers and the orators at the funeral; cf. Sot. 14a). Then they added more cups — one (toast) for the "chief of the synagogue", one for the "administrator of the synagogue" and one to (the memory of) Rabban Gamaliel. But when the Beth din saw that some were coming away drunk they issued an inhibition (on the innovation) and made them go back to the old practice'. For considerable divergencies v. Keth. 8b. Cf. Ber. 46b. In J. Ber. III, 1 it is stated that the cup for Rabban Gamaliel had been introduced after his death. Seemingly it was introduced to commemorate his great social reform in directing the simplification of funerals. Cf. supra 27b, p. 177.
- (48) Which is the equivalent of the passive 'as when mourners are being comforted'. For other instances of this use of the third person singular in the passive sense v. Gen. XLVIII, 1-2 (someone told Joseph, one told Jacob). Cf. Gesenius, Hebrew Grammar, 144, 3a. Or, it may be pointed ינחם = as when 'it being comforted', i.e., when comfort is being tendered to mourners.
- (49) Amos VI, 7. The rendering is here adapted to the requirements of the exposition. The prophet there threatens: Therefore now shall they (the callous revellers) go captive at the head of captives and the revelry (מריצה) of them that lay (סרוחים) stretching (on banqueting couches) shall pass away (סר). It is the three words, וסר מריצה סרוחים, in the second half of the sentence that are being strained to yield the sense required by Mar Zutra.
- (50) וסר (and shall pass away) = ושר (and prince be).
- (51) מריצה is divided into מר (bitter) and צה (moved, perturbed, distraught). Cf. Rashi on the parallel passage Keth. 69b. The term מריצה denotes solemn feasting, particularly a funerary repast, as seems clear from Jer. XVI, 5-8. Cf. Ar. Compl., a.v. Also, Kimhi on Jer. l.c. and on Amos, l.c.

like the rigging¹ at the edge of the mast.² R. Johanan said, like the top-sail³ at the edge of the mast.

R. Levi b. Hitha said: One bidding farewell to the dead should not say unto him 'Go unto peace', but 'Go in peace'; one bidding farewell to the living [friend] should not say to him 'Go in peace'. but 'Go unto peace'. One bidding farewell to the dead should not say to him, 'Go unto peace', because it is said [unto Abraham]: But thou shalt go to thy fathers in Peace,' thou shalt be buried.⁴ One bidding farewell to the living [friend]⁵ should not say to him, 'Go in peace', but 'Go unto peace', because there was David [who] said to Absalom, 'Go in peace,⁶ and he went and was hanged.⁷ Whereas, Jethro said to Moses, 'Go unto peace,⁸ [and] he went and succeeded.

And, said R. Hiyya b. Ashi as citing Rab, said: The disciples of the Sages have no rest even in the world to come, as it is said: They go from strength to strength, every one of them appeareth before God in Zion.

(1) So Rashi here (which is not of Rashi's authorship) and on Ber. 8b. In this naval simile we need not be surprised to find the terms used to be of Greek origin, just as we have many naval terms in English of Dutch origin. צפורי in the sense of 'rigging' is seemingly the Greek  = cord, rope, especially a ship's cable. The term may mean the 'top-sail',  Latin, siparum and supparum, which is defined by Festus as, Velum Minus in navi ut acation (acatum) majus; (v. Lewis and Short, Lat. Dict. s.v.).

(2) וושט, connected by Rashi with תורן (a mast) is the Greek **.

(3) פטורי is the Greek  which means, anything suspended aloft or fluttering in mid-air, a top-mast or pennant.

Mishna - Mas. Hallah Chapter 1

MISHNAH 1. FIVE SPECIES [OF CEREALS] ARE SUBJECT TO [THE LAW OF] HALLAH.¹ WHEAT, BARLEY, SPELT, OATS AND RYE.² THESE ARE SUBJECT TO HALLAH, AND [SMALL QUANTITIES OF DOUGH MADE OF THE DIFFERENT SPECIES] ARE RECKONED TOGETHER ONE WITH ANOTHER [AS ONE QUANTITY]³ AND ARE ALSO SUBJECT TO THE PROHIBITION OF [THE CONSUMPTION OF] 'NEW' [PRODUCE]⁴ PRIOR TO THE OMER,⁵ AND TO [THE PROHIBITION OF] REAPING PRIOR TO PASSOVER.⁶ IF THEY TOOK ROOT PRIOR TO THE OMER, THE OMER RELEASES THEM;⁷ IF NOT, THEY ARE PROHIBITED UNTIL THE NEXT OMER HAS COME.

MISHNAH 2. IF ONE HAS EATEN ON THE PASSOVER AN OLIVE-SIZE⁸ OF UNLEAVENED BREAD [MADE] OF THESE [CEREALS], HE HAS FULFILLED HIS OBLIGATION;⁹ [IF ONE HAS EATEN ON THE PASSOVER] AN OLIVE-SIZE OF LEAVEN [MADE OF THESE CEREALS], HE HAS INCURRED THE PENALTY OF KARETH.¹⁰ IF ONE OF THESE [CEREALS, HAVING BECOME LEAVENED,] HAS BECOME MIXED WITH ANY OTHER SPECIES, ONE TRANSGRESSES THE [LAWS OF] PASSOVER.¹¹ IF ONE HAS VOWED [TO ABSTAIN] FROM [CONSUMING] BREAD AND TEBU'AH [(CEREAL) PRODUCE].¹² HE IS PROHIBITED FROM CONSUMING THESE [FIVE SPECIES]; THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. MEIR. THE SAGES SAY: IF ONE HAS VOWED [TO ABSTAIN] FROM [CONSUMING] DAGAN [CORN], HE IS PROHIBITED FROM [CONSUMING] THESE [SPECIES] ONLY.¹³ THEY ARE SUBJECT TO HALLAH AND TITHES.¹⁴

MISHNAH 3. THE FOLLOWING ARE SUBJECT TO HALLAH, BUT EXEMPT FROM TITHES: LEKET,¹⁵ SHIKEHAH,¹⁶ PE'AH,¹⁷ AND PRODUCE, OWNERSHIP OF WHICH HAS BEEN WAIVED,¹⁸ AND THE FIRST TITHE¹⁹ OF WHICH TERUMAH [THE PRIEST'S PORTION] HAD BEEN TAKEN OFF,²⁰ AND THE SECOND TITHE,²¹ AND CONSECRATED [PRODUCE]²² WHICH HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, AND THAT WHICH REMAINS OVER FROM THE OMER,²³ AND GRAIN WHICH HAS NOT GROWN ONE-THIRD [RIPE].²⁴ R. ELIEZER SAID: GRAIN WHICH HAS NOT GROWN ONE-THIRD [RIPE] IS EXEMPT [ALSO] FROM HALLAH.²⁵

MISHNAH 4. THE FOLLOWING ARE SUBJECT TO TITHES, BUT EXEMPT FROM HALLAH: RICE, MILLET, POPPY-SEED, SESAMUM, PULSE,²⁶ AND LESS THAN FIVE-FOURTHS [OF A KAB] OF [THE FIVE KINDS OF] GRAIN,²⁷ SPONGE-BISCUITS, HONEYCAKES,²⁸ DUMPLINGS,²⁹ CAKE [COOKED] IN A PAN³⁰ AND MEDUMMA'³¹ ARE EXEMPT FROM HALLAH.

MISHNAH 5. DOUGH WHICH WAS ORIGINALLY [INTENDED FOR] FANCY-BAKING,³² AND FINALLY [COOKED AS] FANCY-BAKING, IS EXEMPT FROM HALLAH.³³ [IF IT WAS] ORIGINALLY [ORDINARY] DOUGH, BUT FINALLY [COOKED AS] FANCY-BAKING, [OR IF IT WAS] ORIGINALLY [INTENDED FOR] FANCY-BAKING, BUT FINALLY [COOKED AS ORDINARY] DOUGH, IT IS SUBJECT TO HALLAH; SIMILARLY ARE RUSKS³⁴ SUBJECT [TO HALLAH].³⁵

MISHNAH 6. THE [FLOUR-PASTE CALLED] ME'ISAH³⁶ BETH SHAMMAI DECLARE EXEMPT [FROM], BUT BETH HILLEL DECLARE SUBJECT [TO HALLAH].³⁷ THE [FLOUR-PASTE CALLED] HALITA³⁸ BETH SHAMMAI DECLARE SUBJECT [TO], AND BETH HILLEL DECLARE EXEMPT [FROM HALLAH].³⁹ AS FOR THE LOAVES OF THE THANKSGIVING SACRIFICE⁴⁰ AND THE WAFERS OF A NAZIRITE,⁴¹ — IF ONE MADE THEM FOR ONESELF, THEY ARE EXEMPT [FROM HALLAH].⁴² [IF ONE MADE THEM] TO SELL IN THE MARKET,⁴³ THEY ARE SUBJECT [TO HALLAH].

MISHNAH 7. IF A BAKER MADE DOUGH FOR DISTRIBUTING,⁴⁴ IT IS SUBJECT TO HALLAH.⁴⁵ IF WOMEN GAVE [FLOUR]⁴⁶ TO A BAKER TO MAKE FOR THEM DOUGH,⁴⁷ — AND IF THERE IS NOT IN THAT WHICH BELONGS TO [ANY] ONE OF THEM THE [MINIMUM] MEASURE,⁴⁸ IT⁴⁹ IS EXEMPT FROM HALLAH.⁵⁰

MISHNAH 8. DOUGH FOR DOGS⁵¹ AS LONG AS [IT IS SUCH AS] SHEPHERDS PARTAKE THEREOF,⁵² IS SUBJECT TO HALLAH;⁵³ AND ONE MAY MAKE AN 'ERUB⁵⁴ THEREWITH,⁵⁵ AND EFFECT A SHITTUF⁵⁶ THEREWITH;⁵⁵ AND ONE SHOULD SAY THE BLESSINGS FOR [BEFORE⁵⁷ AND AFTER⁵⁸ EATING] IT, AND ONE SHOULD SAY THE INTRODUCTORY FORMULA TO A CORPORATE RECITAL OF GRACE AFTER IT;⁵⁹ AND IT MAY BE COOKED ON A FESTIVAL,⁶⁰ AND A PERSON DISCHARGES THEREWITH ONE'S OBLIGATION ON THE PASSOVER;⁶¹ BUT IF [THE DOUGH BE SUCH AS] SHEPHERDS DO NOT PARTAKE THEREOF⁶² IT IS NOT SUBJECT TO HALLAH;⁶³ NOR MAY ONE MAKE AN 'ERUB THEREWITH, NOR EFFECT A SHITTUF THEREWITH; NOR SHOULD ONE SAY THE BLESSINGS FOR [BEFORE⁶⁴ AND AFTER]⁶⁵ IT, NOR SAY THE INTRODUCTORY FORMULA TO A CORPORATE RECITAL OF GRACE AFTER IT;⁶⁶ NOR MAY IT BE COOKED ON A FESTIVAL; NOR DOES A PERSON DISCHARGE THEREWITH ONE'S OBLIGATION ON THE PASSOVER. IN EITHER CASE IT IS SUSCEPTIBLE TO RITUAL DEFILEMENT AFFECTING FOODSTUFFS.⁶⁷

MISHNAH 9. IN THE CASE OF HALLAH AND TERUMAH; ONE IS LIABLE, ON ACCOUNT OF [HAVING EATEN] THEM, TO DEATH,⁶⁸ OR⁶⁹ TO [REPAY] 'ONE-FIFTH',⁷⁰ AND THEY ARE FORBIDDEN [AS FOOD] TO 'STRANGERS',⁷¹ THEY ARE THE PROPERTY OF THE PRIEST;⁷² THEY ARE VOID [IF ONE PART OF EITHER IS MIXED] WITHIN ONE-HUNDRED-AND-ONE [PARTS, THE REST BEING NON-SACRED DOUGH OR PRODUCE];⁷³ THEY REQUIRE WASHING OF ONE'S HANDS,⁷⁴ AND [WAITING UNTIL] THE SETTING OF THE SUN [PRIOR TO EATING THEM];⁷⁵ THEY MAY NOT BE TAKEN OFF A CLEAN [LOT]⁷⁶ FOR [DISCHARGING THE OBLIGATION⁷⁷ IN RESPECT ALSO OF] AN UNCLEAN [LOT],⁷⁸ AND [ARE NOT TAKEN OFF ONE LOT IN RESPECT ALSO OF ANY OTHER LOT]⁷⁹ EXCEPT OF SUCH [LOTS] AS ARE CLOSE TOGETHER,⁸⁰ AND FROM SUCH AS ARE [IN A] FINISHED [STATE].⁸¹ IF ONE SAID: ALL MY THRESHING-FLOOR IS TERUMAH, OR ALL MY DOUGH IS HALLAH, HE HAS NOT SAID ANYTHING, UNLESS HE HAS LEFT SOME OVER.⁸²

(1) The law relating to the portion of dough assigned to the priests in accordance with Num. XV, 17-21, . . . When ye eat the bread of the land . . . of the first of your dough ye shall set apart a cake (hallah) for a gift . . . Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the Lord a portion for a gift throughout your generations.

(2) V. Kil. I, notes. These species are held to be subject to Hallah because the word חלה (bread) is used here and also in connection with Passover, 'bread of affliction', Deut. XVI, 3. The argument, by gezerah shawah (v. Glos.) is: Since, in the case of Passover, חלה obviously implies a cereal capable of becoming leavened, so too does the capacity for leavening determine the liability of produce to hallah.

(3) Amounting to the minimum subject to hallah. It is only when all of these are mixed together in the flour, or if after having been kneaded separately, they are kneaded together, that this rule applies unconditionally. If, however, the doughs (each less than the minimum) were kneaded out of various species and later they stuck together (v. infra II. 4) their being deemed as forming one quantity liable to hallah depends on which particular species have been used (v. note ibid).

(4) V. Lev. XXIII, 14.

(5) 'This selfsame day' (ibid.) refers to the day on which the Omer was brought to the Temple. viz., the second day of Passover.

(6) V. ibid. v. 10ff. The expression 'The sheaf (Omer) of the first of your harvest', is taken to imply that the reaping of the Omer must be the first reaping, and that, therefore, there must be no reaping prior thereto, i.e., before Passover. The analogy between liability to hallah and liability to Hadash (the law relating to 'new' sc. produce) is based — by gezerah shawah — on the use of the term ראשית 'first' in the case of hallah (the first of your dough) as well as in the case of new produce (the first of your harvest).

(7) For harvesting.

(8) The statutory minimum in matters of this kind.

(9) Only species which are liable to leaven can, when deliberately prevented from doing so, serve for unleavened bread for Passover.

(10) 'Cutting off', 'excision'; a punishment by the hand of God as distinct from one by that of man; v. Ex. XII, 19: For whosoever eateth that which is leavened, that soul shall be cut off from the Congregation of Israel.

(11) If he keeps the mixture in his possession during the festival; v. Ibid. XII, 19; XIII. 7.

(12) A term which, in the opinion of all, denotes only the five species enumerated in Mishnah I.

(13) because they considered Tebu'ah and Dagan synonymous whereas H. Meir — who was at one with the Sages with regard to the word Tebu'ah — considered Dagan a more comprehensive term including also all seed- and pulse-foods and held that a man using that term in his vow debarred himself not only from the five species but also from seed- and pulse-foods.

(14) There are also other species subject to tithes, but the species so far enumerated are subject to both tithes and hallah. The Mishnah proceeds to specify categories which are subject to hallah but not to tithes, and vice-versa.

(15) Gleanings, v. Lev. XIX, 9.

(16) The Forgotten, sc. Sheaf. Deut. XXIV, 19.

(17) The Corner, sc. of the field. Lev. XIX, 9.

(18) Such waiving of ownership is termed hefker. It is only when the owner declared the produce hefker before smoothing the pile of grain that it is exempt from tithing. The Levites were entitled to tithes from commodities belonging to Israelites, in which the former, on account of being Levites, had no share (deduced from Deut. XIV, 29, v. T.J.); but since the Levites were included among those entitled to help themselves to the produce coming under the categories named (v. Deut. ibid.) the latter were not subject to being tithed for the benefit of the Levites.

(19) Assigned to the Levites.

(20) The terumah which the Levite had to give, a tithe out of the tithe received by him from the Israelite, to the Priests. In Ter. I, 5, a marginal reading is 'of which terumah had not been taken', meaning the terumah gedolah due from the Israelite to the Priest, The case contemplated in our reading is, according to T.J., one in which a Levite took his tithe from an Israelite whilst the grain was still in ears, and before the ordinary terumah had been taken off. In that event a Levite is bound to give thereof only his terumah (a tithe from the tithe he received) to the priest, but he is not expected to give to the priest anything on account of the terumah which would have accrued to the latter from the Israelite if the Levite had not claimed his tithe so soon. It might have been thought that as the Levite's portion in such a case contained something that might be regarded as due to the priest, it would, for that reason, be exempt from hallah; the Mishnah therefore makes it clear that it is subject thereto.

(21) Which at the end of the agricultural year was to be taken to Jerusalem and consumed there. In the event of inconvenience through distance, it was to be redeemed and the money spent in Jerusalem on food, drink and anointing oneself, in which case (v. Lev. XXVII, 31) the proceeds of the redemption were to be increased by an amount equal to one-fifth of the eventual sum total, i.e., by one-fourth of the money-value of the tithe. The Mishnah here intimates that in the event of the second tithe having been separated whilst the corn was in a state when it was not liable to terumah or tithes (viz., when still in ear, v. T. J. and L.) it is exempt from the (first) tithe even after redemption, cf. Terumah I, 5. Such redeemed second tithe is, however, subject to hallah, because the latter is to be taken from the dough, and at the time of kneading the produce is already hullin (non-sacred).

(22) Being Temple property, technically termed hekdesch. V. Lev. XXVII, 11-27; cf. infra III, 3.

(23) In the Omer they offered up one-tenth of an ephah taken from flour made from three se'ah of barley; the remainder of the flour (spoken of here) was redeemed and could thereafter be eaten by anybody, and was therefore subject to hallah. It is, on the other hand, exempt from tithes, because at the material time, i.e., 'when the pile was made even' it was Temple property and thus exempt from tithes.

(24) T.J. deduces this exemption from Deut. XIV, 22, Thou shalt surely tithe the produce of thy sowing, the argument being: If the sowing has been productive it is to be tithed, if it has not been productive (and if it has resulted in a crop less than one-third ripe it cannot be said to have been productive) it does not require to be tithed. To hallah, however, it is subject because even when only one-third ripe it is capable of leavening (v. supra I, n. 2).

(25) This view is based on Num. XV, 20, where with reference to hallah it is said: As that which is set apart (terumah) of the threshing-floor so shall ye set it (i.e., hallah) apart, from which R. Eliezer deduces that whatever applies to terumah applies equally to hallah and, therefore, that just as a grain which has not grown one-third ripe is exempt from terumah and tithes it is likewise exempt from hallah.

(26) These are liable to tithes as produce, but not being capable of leavening, are not subject to hallah (v. supra I, n. 2). There are other species of produce which do not leaven, but these are particularized because they were often milled into flour and made into dough.

(27) The statutory minimum amount subject to hallah, as laid down infra II, 6; somewhat over 3 1/2 lbs. V. 'Ed. I, 2 and notes (Sonc. ed.) p. 2.

(28) T.J. renders 'honey-milk (cake)'. v. Simponte a.l. Cake made of ordinary dough cooked in honey. According to some, also is made of dough kneaded with honey, it is exempt from hallah, but v. infra p. 328. n. 1.

(29) אסקריטין Jast. 'dumpling'. B. here and Rashi (to Pes. 37a) 'something made of a very soft (light) dough'. T.J. (p. 57) renders Halita, 'sold in the open market'. Halita, according to Pes. 37b (explaining the terms of Hallah I, 5), is dough made by pouring boiling water on flour, but according to R. Ishmael b. Jose (T.J.) it is flour poured into hot water. Aruch identifies the term with the Latin crustulum, 'small cake'. For other possible etymologies v. Kohut in Aruch Completum s.v.

(30) A cake or loaf prepared in a משרת pan (rather in a manner of frying) and not in an oven, and it is only something baked inside an oven and also styled bread (לחם) which is liable to hallah. T.J. renders halita, of water v. preceding note. Maim. emphasizes that the point about these four preparations is that from the very beginning they are kneaded with oil, or honey, or spices and are cooked in unusual ways, and are, in fact, designated not as bread but are named after the various admixtures which give them their distinctive character.

(31) I.e., produce or (as here) dough to which originally no holiness attached, but which by accidentally receiving an admixture of terumah of a quantity more than one-hundredth part of the original amount, becomes thereby prohibited to non-priests and permitted only to priests and is, therefore, not liable to hallah. Tosaf Yom-Tob and other commentators say that here the Mishnah has in mind post-Temple days, for the following reason: In Temple times hallah is a biblical precept, but medumma' is a Rabbinic institution (in purely Biblical law the admixture of terumah of a lesser quantity than the original amount of non-sacred produce is considered as neutralized, 'lost' and ritually of none effect, so that the whole mixed quantity would, in such a case, be non-sacred, hullin, and subject to hallah), and a remission resulting from the application of a Rabbinic ordinance cannot cancel a duty imposed by Scriptural command. In non-Temple times, however, when hallah, too, is only on Rabbinic authority, it can be, and is over-ridden by the Rabbinic regulation of medumma'.

(32) סופגנין, the word translated 'sponge-biscuits' in Mishnah 4, but used here for all fancy-baking, various kinds of which are enumerated there.

(33) This is explanatory of Mishnah 4.

(34) הקנובקאות, explained by Maim, and others as brittle cakes of parched flour kneaded with oil, which after having been baked, are crushed and prepared as gruel for very young children, v. Jast. For possible etymologies v. Aruch Completum.

(35) R. Joshua b. Levi (T.J. Hallah 58a) explains: Since these are to be crushed back into flour, it might have been thought that they are exempt from hallah, the Mishnah had, therefore, to make it clear that this is not the case.

(36) Made by pouring hot water on flour.

(37) Cf. 'Ed. V, 2 where this is mentioned as one of six exceptional instances in which Beth Hillel hold the stringent, and Beth Shammai the lenient view.

(38) Made by pouring flour into hot water (v. Mish. 4, n. 6).

(39) For the purposes of practical law the difference between me'isah and halita does not matter. The relevant difference between the two statements is that whilst the first-reported Tanna held that in this instance Beth Hillel were stringent and Beth Shammai the lenient, the latter Tanna held that the reverse was the case. The final state of the law with regard to any variety of plain dough is that if cooked inside an oven (i.e., baked), it is subject to hallah, but if cooked in a pan over a flame that passes underneath it, it is exempt.

(40) V Lev. VII, 22ff.

(41) Forming part of the sacrifice brought by a Nazirite when the period for which he vowed self-consecration is completed. Num. VI, 15. In fact, both loaves and wafers were required in either case.

(42) Being intended for the offering the dough was thus consecrated ab initio.

- (43) But, naturally, with the intention of making ordinary use of them should there be no buyers requiring them for sacrificial purposes; thus at the material time (viz., of kneading) these loaves or wafers were not consecrated.
- (44) In portions every one of which is less than the minimum liable to hallah.
- (45) Because it is obviously his intention, in the event of there being no customers, to bake it all himself,
- (46) But not money. v. Yoreh De'ah, 326, 3.
- (47) And he, without their knowledge, kneaded all the flour together.
- (48) Liable to hallah, viz., 1 1/4 kab, v. supra Mish. 4.
- (49) I.e., the whole dough.
- (50) Though the dough as a whole is now large enough to be subject to hallah; for the reason that it is taken for granted that those who gave their flour to the baker were 'particular' that their several quantities of flour be kneaded separately. — The Mishnah here speaks of women, because it is, as a rule, they who attend to a matter of this kind.
- (51) I.e., for baking bread or biscuits for dogs. It consisted of flour and coarse bran (T.J.).
- (52) When it contains rather less bran.
- (53) The law of hallah is introduced (Num. XV, 19), And it shall come to pass when ye eat of the bread . . . Since this dough (when baked) is fit for human food, it is liable to hallah.
- (54) Lit., 'a merging' of rights, interests or privileges; the legal device whereby permission is contrived for (a) carrying on the Sabbath from a private to a public domain, and vice-versa (v. Shabb. 6a), known as 'The 'Erub of Courtyards', for (b) walking on the Sabbath more than the Sabbath limit (2000 cubits) outside a town, known as 'The 'Erub of Boundaries', and for (c) cooking food on a festival for the following day, if a Sabbath, known as 'The 'Erub of Cooked Foods' (Bezah II, 1). In (a), the food, contributed to by all the participants and kept in a place accessible to all of them, creates and represents a community of possession, constituting the area concerned a private domain ad hoc; in (b), the placing of food at the Sabbath boundary is presumed to constitute, for those having and deemed as having, a share in that food, a 'dwelling-place' which serves as a starting-point for a further Sabbath-limit of 2000 cubits; in (c), the setting aside of food cooked on the day prior to the festival, and leaving it till the end of the Sabbath is presumed to have the effect of rendering the cooking on the festival day (originally permitted in the Bible, Ex. XII, 16 for that day only) merely a continuation of the cooking in preparation for the Sabbath which had been commenced on the week-day prior to the festival.
- (55) For the above purposes human food is obviously essential,
- (56) Lit., 'a partnership'; the full form is 'a partnership in an alley or street', presumed to create 'a private domain', and conferring the right to carry on the Sabbath between a number of courtyards and an alley into which these open. 'Shittuf' is similar in significance to 'Erub.
- (57) Viz., 'Who bringest forth bread from the earth', the benediction for bread.
- (58) ברכת המזון. The full form of Grace after Meals said only if bread was part of the meal, v. Ber. 44a.
- (59) When three or more adults have partaken of a common major meal (i.e., one of which bread formed part) a special formula (termed 'summoning') is pronounced by one of them, calling on his companions to join in Grace. V. Ber. 45a.
- (60) The law prohibiting work on festivals is qualified thus: No manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man may eat (Ex. XII, 16). The word rendered 'by you', viz., לכם, is capable of being translated 'for yourselves', from which the Rabbis infer that only food fit for human beings is permitted to be cooked on a festival.
- (61) Sc. to eat unleavened bread on the first night of Passover. Only that which is capable of leavening is (if fit for human food) subject to hallah, and is also (if deliberately prevented from leavening) usable for unleavened bread (v. supra I, 1, n. 2, 2, n. 3). In the course of mixing this dough it was intended that it should be eatable by human beings; it is therefore subject to the same laws as all dough meant for human consumption.
- (62) On account of there being too much bran in the mixture.
- (63) Because hallah is due only from 'your dough' (Num. XV, 20) i.e., dough fit for human consumption (Sifre Zutta). — According to Tosef. Hal. I and T.J. 58a this rule obtains only if the 'dog's dough' was baked in the shape of boards, i.e., quite unlike bread for human consumption, but not if baked in the shape of ככרין 'round cakes' (so Tosef. ed. Wilna. Jast reads there כעבין which he renders 'prongs', also in T.J. where some texts have כעבין) V. Yoreh De'ah 310, 9. In Pithehe Teshubah, ad loc., it is pointed out that the latter ruling can be applicable only to the Land of Israel where alone hallah is a Biblical precept (cf. infra IV, 8), and that, even so, the insistence on separating hallah from exclusively 'dog's dough' for no other reason than their having been baked in the shape of ordinary loaves, can be attributed only to the principle of 'appearance to the eyes', i.e., the desire to avoid even the merest semblance of wrong-doing, in conjunction with the maxim 'that which the Rabbis have decreed on account of appearances is prohibited even in the strictest privacy’.

(64) I.e., not ‘Who bringest forth bread from the earth’; the correct blessing in this case is ‘by Whose word all things came into being’, (so L. q.v.).

(65) I.e., not the full grace after meals. The correct one in this case is the shorter grace after food.

(66) I.e., if two of the three forming the (minimum) company at the meal have eaten bread made of ‘dog's dough’. If, however, two ate real bread, and only the third had the other kind (or any which is not considered bread), then the latter man may be reckoned in the company for purposes of zimmun.

(67) According to Lev. XI, 34. All food which may be eaten, that on which water cometh, shall be unclean, when it has come into contact with the carcass of an unclean swarming thing. The Rabbis understood ‘all food that may be eaten’ by anyone, whether man or beast; as long, therefore, as any food is fit for dogs, it is susceptible to ritual uncleanness. Dough, of course, satisfies the condition: ‘That on which water cometh’.

(68) Sc. ‘by the hand of heaven’, Sanh. 83a. This refers to a non-priest who has eaten either hallah or terumah wittingly, though without having been first warned. If he has eaten these after statutory warning, his punishment is ‘stripes’ (v. Ter. VII, 1). This is deduced from Lev. XXII, 9 in conjunction with v. 10 and v. 6, it being understood from the latter that by the ‘holy things’ spoken of throughout the passage, precisely terumah is intended (since only for eating terumah need the priest who had been unclean wait, on the day of his ablution, till sunset). V. Sanh. loc. cit. Hallah is considered as terumah since in Num. XV, 20 the latter term is applied also to the former.

(69) In ease of an unwitting transgressor.

(70) V. Lev. XXII, 14, And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it and shall give unto the priest the holy thing, i.e its cost. The added sum was to be equal to a fifth of the eventual total paid, i.e., a quarter of the assessed money-value of the consecrated produce or dough eaten. Cf supra 3, n. 4. The principal was to be paid to the priest whose property the terumah or hallah was, and the added sum to any priest.

(71) I.e., non-priests, non-Aaronides. Though this prohibition is already understood from the provisions preceding it in this Mishnah, its re-statement in positive form is not superfluous — as some authorities thought it to be — but is required to establish the fact that the prohibition is against non-priests consuming even less than the minimum quantity for which they are punishable.

(72) He may sell it, or acquire with it anything he wishes; if it should become unclean, he may use it as fuel over which to do cooking for himself.

(73) If the non-sacred is more than a hundred times the sacred (terumah or hallah), the non-sacred character of the mixture is in no wise affected; if the proportion of non-sacred to sacred is less than 100 to 1, the mixture is medumma’ and prohibited to non-priests (v. supra 4 n. 8).

(74) On the part of the priest, before touching or eating them. If he does not wash his hands specially he renders terumah (even of fruit) or hallah pasul i.e., unfit.

(75) A priest who has become unclean has to undergo ablutions and wait till after sunset before eating terumah (or hallah), Lev. XXII, 6-7.

(76) Of produce or dough.

(77) Of terumah, hallah or tithes.

(78) Terumah, hallah or tithes may be separated from one lot of produce or dough in a quantity sufficient to cover the terumah-, hallah- or tithe-obligation, also for other lots, but only if all such lots are close together; should one of the lots be unclean, the owner would be afraid to let it be close enough to the others lest the unclean touches the clean and makes the latter, too, unclean. Hence this regulation. Cf, infra IV, 6.

(79) So Maim. and other commentators.

(80) V. n. 5.

(81) Ma'as. I, 2ff, enumerate the stages at which various kinds of produce are considered in a ‘finished’ state, at which they severally become liable to have terumah or tithes separated from them. In the case of dough the time of separating hallah is when it has been rolled (v. infra III, 1).

(82) Terumah and hallah are both to be the ‘first’ of the produce or the dough respectively (Deut. XVIII, 4, Num. XV, 20), which implies that there must be some left over after they have been taken off.

MISHNAH 3. A WOMAN MAY SIT AND SEPARATE HER HALLAH¹³ [WHILST SHE IS] NAKED,¹⁴ SINCE SHE CAN COVER HERSELF¹⁵ BUT A MAN [MAY] NOT. IF ONE IS NOT ABLE TO MAKE ONE'S DOUGH IN CLEANNESSE HE SHOULD MAKE IT [IN SEPARATE] KABS,¹⁶ RATHER THAN MAKE IT IN UNCLEANNESSE;¹⁷ BUT R. AKIBA SAYS: LET HIM MAKE IT IN UNCLEANNESSE RATHER THAN MAKE IT [IN SEPARATE] KABS, SINCE THE SAME DESIGNATION AS HE GIVES TO THE CLEAN, HE LIKewise GIVES TO THE UNCLEAN; THE ONE HE DECLARES HALLAH TO THE NAME,¹⁸ AND THE OTHER HE DECLARES HALLAH TO THE NAME¹⁸ BUT [SEPARATE] KABS HAVE NO PORTION [DEVOTED] TO THE NAME.¹⁹

MISHNAH 4. IF ONE MAKES HIS DOUGH [IN SEPARATE] KABS,²⁰ AND THEY TOUCH ONE ANOTHER,²¹ THEY ARE EXEMPT FROM HALLAH,²² UNLESS THEY STICK TOGETHER.²³ R. ELIEZER SAYS: ALSO IF ONE SHOVELS²⁴ [LOAVES FROM AN OVEN] AND PUTS [THEM] INTO A BASKET,²⁵ THE BASKET JOINS THEM TOGETHER FOR [THE PURPOSES OF] HALLAH.²⁶

MISHNAH 5. IF ONE SEPARATES HIS HALLAH [IN THE STATE OF] FLOUR, IT IS NOT HALLAH,²⁷ AND IN THE HAND OF A PRIEST IT IS [AS] A THING ROBBED;²⁸ THE DOUGH ITSELF²⁹ IS STILL SUBJECT TO HALLAH,³⁰ AND THE FLOUR,³¹ IF THERE BE OF IT THE STATUTORY MINIMUM QUANTITY,³² IT³³ [ALSO IS] SUBJECT TO HALLAH,³⁴ AND IT IS PROHIBITED TO NONPRIESTS:³⁵ [THE LATTER IS] THE OPINION OF R. JOSHUA. THEY TOLD HIM OF AN OCCURRENCE WHEN A SCHOLAR — NONPRIEST — SEIZED IT.³⁶ SAID HE TO THEM: INDEED, HE DID SOMETHING DAMAGING TO HIMSELF,³⁷ BUT BENEFITING TO OTHERS.³⁸

MISHNAH 6. FIVE-FOURTHS [OF A KAB]³⁹ OF FLOUR⁴⁰ ARE SUBJECT TO HALLAH. [IF] THESE⁴¹ INCLUDING THEIR LEAVEN⁴² AND THEIR LIGHT BRAN AND THEIR COARSE BRAN [MAKE UP THE] FIVE-FOURTHS, THEY ARE SUBJECT;⁴³ IF THEIR COARSE BRAN HAD BEEN REMOVED FROM THEM⁴⁴ AND RETURNED TO THEM, THEY ARE EXEMPT.⁴⁵

MISHNAH 7. THE [STATUTORY MINIMUM] MEASURE OF HALLAH IS ONE TWENTY-FOURTH [PART OF THE DOUGH].⁴⁶ IF ONE MAKES DOUGH FOR ONESELF, OR ONE MAKES IT FOR HIS SON'S BANQUET,⁴⁷ IT IS ONE TWENTY-FOURTH. IF A BAKER MAKES TO SELL IN THE MARKET, AND SO [ALSO] IF A WOMAN⁴⁸ MAKES TO SELL IN THE MARKET, IT IS ONE FORTY-EIGHTH.⁴⁹ IF DOUGH IS RENDERED UNCLEAN EITHER UNWITTINGLY OR BY FORCE,⁵⁰ IT IS ONE FORTY-EIGHTH,⁵¹ IF IT WAS RENDERED UNCLEAN DELIBERATELY, IT IS ONE TWENTY-FOURTH, IN ORDER THAT ONE WHO SINS SHALL NOT PROFIT [FROM HIS SIN].⁵²

MISHNAH 8. R. ELIEZER SAID: HALLAH MAY BE TAKEN FROM [DOUGH] THAT IS

CLEAN, [IN A QUANTITY SUFFICIENT TO DISCHARGE THE OBLIGATION] IN RESPECT ALSO OF [DOUGH] THAT IS UNCLEAN!⁵³ HOW [MAY THIS BE DONE]? [IF ONE HAS] A CLEAN DOUGH AND AN UNCLEAN DOUGH, HE TAKES SUFFICIENT HALLAH⁵⁴ OUT OF A DOUGH, HALLAH WHEREOF HAD NOT YET BEEN TAKEN,⁵⁵ AND PUTS [DOUGH] LESS THAN THE SIZE OF AN EGG⁵⁶ IN THE MIDDLE,⁵⁷ IN ORDER THAT HE MAY TAKE OFF [THE HALLAH] FROM WHAT IS CLOSE TOGETHER,⁵⁸ BUT THE SAGES PROHIBIT.⁵⁹

(1) Sc. of Israel.

(2) Based on Num. XV, 18 ff. When ye come to the land whither I bring you . . . ye shall set apart hallah.....which implies that in Palestine dough from grain whether of native or foreign growth is subject to hallah (v. T.J.).

(3) Palestine.

(4) Abroad.

(5) Relying on When ye eat of the bread (i.e., cereal produce) of the land (ibid 19), whether made into dough in the Land or elsewhere (T.J.).

(6) Being of the opinion that the word 'There' (in Num. XV, 18, which literally translated is When ye come to the land which I bring you there) has the force of making the law of hallah applicable exclusively to dough kneaded in the Land (T.J.).

(7) Which has an aperture in its bottom, and (as explained by R. Judah) is aground on Palestinian soil, and thus anything grown in the soil in the boat sucks up sustenance from the soil of Palestine.

(8) And to all laws applicable to Palestinian produce (v. Maim.). On the 'SEVENTH YEAR' v. Ex. XXIII, 10 and Lev. XXV, 3-7; it is the subject of Tractate Shebi'ith in this Seder.

(9) V. supra n. 1. R. Judah explains what the first reported unnamed Tanna (R. Meir) meant. The term 'WHEN' used by R. Judah in the Mishnah introduces, as here, an explanation; in Baraitha it introduces, as a rule, a differing view (v. 'Ikkar Tosaf. Yom. Tob).

(10) Apparently even without water (v. infra p. 328, n. 1).

(11) There are two considerations that might have led people to assume a contrary ruling. (a) The principle indicated in I, 4 and 5 that any but plain dough, and especially such as had an admixture giving it a special character, is exempt from hallah. (b) If a standard for liquids affecting ritual considerations regarding food were sought, it could be found in the seven liquids (viz., wine, date-honey, blood, water, oil, milk and dew) which when they moisten food render it susceptible to uncleanness (v. p. 325. n. 1). It might have been thought that whichever liquids rendered the flour-paste susceptible to uncleanness, also rendered it subject to hallah, in which case it would have appeared as if only those fruit-juices which had the former effect and are numbered among the seven liquids (viz., wine, date-honey and oil) rendered dough kneaded with them subject to hallah, but that dough kneaded with other fruit-juices is exempt from hallah. Hence the need for the Mishnah to make it clear that dough kneaded with any fruit-juice is liable to hallah. On the other hand, however, according to I, 4 (v. p. 320, n. 5) cake dough prepared with date-honey appears to be exempt from hallah. Thus there seems to be no unexceptionable guidance on the subject of how fruit-juices affect liability to hallah in view of these uncertainties, the dilemma could, in practice, be solved either by separating hallah in such a case, but without reciting the blessing ('who . . . hast commanded us to separate hallah from the dough'), or by putting that doubtful dough close to dough that is certainly subjected to hallah, and take hallah from the latter for both (cf. supra I, 9). V. Yoreh De'ah, 329, 9 and the commentators ad loc.

(12) This can be the case only if fruit-juices are not considered as moisture rendering food liable to uncleanness, as it is only then that unclean hands will not make the dough (or whatever is baked therefrom) unclean. Incidentally the difficulty arises again in that three of the liquids rendering food susceptible to uncleanness are fruit-juices; but even if we should decide that 'fruit-juices' in this Mishnah means 'fruit-juices except those among the seven liquids' there should still arise the following dilemma: In non-Temple days hallah is separated (and a blessing recited), but it is not given to a priest to eat because hallah must be eaten only in the levitical purity of the person, which state of purity is virtually nonexistent in non-Temple times (owing to the absence of means of purification). Eo ipso the hand of the person separating the hallah, who too cannot be ritually clean, renders the hallah unclean, and it is for these reasons burnt. Now if it be the case that dough kneaded with fruit-juice is altogether insusceptible to defilement and yet liable to hallah, then since one is debarred from giving the hallah to a priest, the only alternative would be to burn perfectly 'clean' hallah, and that is a thing that should not be done. To avoid this dilemma it is strongly recommended by the authorities that those who bake should be sure always to mix into the dough some water or other liquid which renders it susceptible to uncleanness; hallah is then separated (accompanied with the recital of the appropriate blessing) and being through unavoidable conditions unclean is burnt (v. Yoreh De'ah ibid, 10).

(13) Pronouncing the appropriate benediction.

(14) Not withstanding the rule that in the presence of nakedness one is not permitted to utter sacred words (v. Per. 22b).

(15) By sitting with her feet together, so that the labia cannot be seen (Maim). The buttocks do not constitute 'nakedness' for the purpose of preventing the uttering of a benediction (v. Ber. 24a).

(16) Less than 1 1/4 kab being exempt from hallah (v. infra Mishnah 6).

(17) Which would result in wittingly defiling sacred matter, viz., hallah.

(18) Reading not בשם but לשם the variant mentioned in the commentators. For שם as The Name of God, v. Yoma III, 8 etc. and Marmorstein The Old Rabbinic Doctrine of God, p. 105.

(19) R. Akiba held that as hallah is given to the priest, whether — when it is clean — to be eaten or — when it is unclean — to be burnt by him as fuel for cooking for himself, it is — in either case — an expression of the Israelite's indebtedness to God, and of use to the priest, and should therefore not be avoided by deliberately kneading one's dough in quantities less than the minimum liable to hallah. R. Akiba's view is not accepted since as 'they said before R. Akiba: One does not say to a person: "Arise and commit a transgression so that thou mayest create for thyself an opportunity for a meritorious act", or "Arise and spoil in order that thou mayest mend"' (Tosef. Hal. 1, 8).

(20) Every separate piece of dough being thus exempt from hallah.

(21) In the course of baking (Maim.).

(22) But not from terumah, with regard to which, only proximity is required.

(23) Lit., 'bite [one into another]', stick together in the oven so that when pulling apart a portion of one loaf is detached by the other. Even so the effectiveness of such coalescence in rendering such loaves liable to hallah, depends on the precise species thus stuck together. V. infra IV, 2.

(24) Singly and separately, and they had not stuck together.

(25) Or any container.

(26) In Pes. 48b, it is discussed whether a flat board having no rim is to be considered as 'joining together' small quantities of dough for purposes of hallah, but the matter is left undecided. Later authorities recommend the covering over of all pieces of dough, or loaves, with a cloth, which has the same effect as a basket. (Yoreh De'ah, 325, 1).

(27) Because the commandment is definitely 'the first of your dough'.

(28) He must give it back to the Israelite, else by retaining it he would cause the latter to believe that he has duly performed the obligation of hallah, and that the dough he makes from the remaining flour is thereby exempt and permitted to be eaten, which is not the case (v. Kid. 46b).

(29) Made from the remaining flour.

(30) V. supra n. 7.

(31) Erroneously separated as hallah.

(32) 1 1/4 kab, or an Omer. v. infra Mish. 6.

(33) When made into dough.

(34) According to Maim. this liability is not a definite one.

(35) Lit., 'strangers'. This prohibition has, according to Rash and Asheri, no positive basis and is enacted only in view of the possibility of people seeing a non-priest eating something that had already been given to a priest, and thinking that the non-priest is committing the sin of partaking of consecrated food.

(36) קפשה the verb is, according to Maim. a cognate of כבש. Maim. appears to say that the word occurs often, and Emden (Glosses in Wilna Talmud) says. I know no place where it occurs except Lam. III, 16 (where the root is כפש). Maim. evidently thought of the frequent occurrence of כבש. The assumption, in T.J., is that this lay scholar not only seized the flour but also ate it, and thus demonstrated a view opposed to that of R. Joshua. L. assumed that the scholar, before eating the flour, had separated hallah from the flour, or that the latter was less in quantity than the statutory minimum and, of course, exempt from hallah.

(37) Since he is punished (T.J.).

(38) In that 'They eat and rely on him' (T.J.) which B. and L. and the codes apparently assume to mean that non-priests will be glad to partake of such flour and escape punishment by referring to a authoritative personal example. This interpretation was evidently felt to be, and indeed it is, strained and unsatisfactory; witness that some read the reverse (v. T.J.) viz., 'he did something that is benefiting to himself, but damaging to others' which is explained (ibid.), 'he benefited himself since — anyway — he ate it, but did a disservice to others who will think that what he has eaten is exempt from hallah, whereas it is subject.

(39) 1 1/4 of this measure, as standardized in Sepphoris, was equivalent to an Omer which in the wilderness was the standard measure of food per person per day (Ex. XVI, 16); v. supra I, 4.

(40) When made into dough.

(41) Quantities of flour.

(42) The leaven (yeast) put into the dough-mixture.

(43) Because such flour, though coarse, is largely used for human food, particularly by the poor.

(45) Because whilst it is usual, for the purposes of kneading dough, to sift flour and remove the coarse bran, it is not usual to put it back once it has been removed (T.J.); also, because coarse bran itself is not subject to hallah (Maim.).

(46) The proportions here laid down are not indicated in the Torah, but are 'a tradition of the Scribes'. T.J. explains that since Scripture says of hallah 'ye shall give', the amount handed over as hallah should be sufficiently appreciable to be handed over. From the minimum quantity of dough liable to hallah, viz., 1 1/4 kab (which == about 3 1/2 lbs), one twenty-fourth amounts to 2 to 2 1/2 ounces.

(47) No distinction is made between doughs whether big or small intended for private consumption

(48) This applies equally to a man in similar circumstances, viz., who bakes in a small way at home but for sale. The Mishnah speaks here of a woman because it was as a rule women who engaged in this kind of small baking-business. Again no distinction is made between doughs whether large or small, intended for trading purposes.

(49) T.J. (as corrected according to Tosef Hal. I, 6) explains the reason for varying the proportions: The individual person baking for one's private use is more liberal than the professional baker who bakes to sell and make profit. — In non-Temple times when, owing to the all-prevailing ritual uncleanness (from defilement, direct and indirect, by dead bodies) all hallah is unclean, and cannot be given to priests (even in Palestine, and certainly outside Palestine even in Temple times since there hallah is separated always in deference not to a Scriptural precept, but only to a Rabbinic requirement), just a kazayith 'the size of an olive' of dough is taken off and burnt.

(50) Of unavoidable or overpowering circumstances.

(51) The smaller proportion is laid down in this case because the hallah being unclean it may not be eaten and can serve the priest only as fuel (Rash and Bert.); also, because one should not deliberately increase the amount of such holy things as are ab initio and inevitably rendered unclean.

(52) I.e., so that no premium be placed on transgression by way of deliberate defilement of dough for the purpose of evading half of one's obligation in respect of hallah.

(53) Even if each dough is large enough to be itself subject to hallah. The advantage of this procedure is that the full quota of hallah in respect of all the doughs concerned could be eaten by the priest.

(54) I.e., the aggregate amount due from both doughs.

(55) Because it is not permitted to reckon in dough (already) exempt from hallah.

(56) 'Less than the size of an egg' is a quantity which even though it may itself become unclean, does not render other objects unclean by contact ('Orlah II, 4, end). For the principle that the standard proportion in matters of food rendered unclean by contact with or being in the same vessel as, a dead reptile, is 'the size of an egg', v. Yoma 79b-80a.

(57) The commentators amplify: the portion of clean dough already taken off as hallah is placed on the small piece put in the middle — between the two doughs — and lifted off as hallah for all the doughs together. By this method (a) all the dough has had the hallah levy discharged for it; (b) all the hallah is available as food (for the priest); (c) the (bulk of the) clean dough remains clean.

(58) V supra p. 326, n. 5.

(59) The Sages' ruling is due to the possibility of the two main pieces of dough coming into contact (Bert.) or the middle piece (advocated by R. Eliezer) being the size of an egg (Rashi, Sotah 30b). For a full examination of the possible reasons underlying the difference of opinion between R. Eliezer and the Sages on this point v. Sotah 30a — b.

Mishna - Mas. Hallah Chapter 3

MISHNAH 1. ONE MAY EAT IN A CASUAL MANNER FROM DOUGH BEFORE IT IS ROLLED,¹ IN [THE CASE OF] WHEATEN [FLOUR], OR BEFORE IT IS MIXED INTO A COHESIVE BATTER, IN [THE CASE OF] BARLEY [FLOUR].² [ONCE] ONE HAS ROLLED IT

[IN THE CASE OF] WHEATEN [FLOUR], OR ONE HAS MIXED IT INTO A COHESIVE PASTE, IN [THE CASE OF] BARLEY [FLOUR], ONE WHO EATS THEREOF,³ IS LIABLE TO DEATH.⁴ AS SOON AS SHE⁵ PUTS IN THE WATER SHE SHOULD LIFT OFF HER HALLAH,⁶ PROVIDED ONLY THAT THERE ARE NOT FIVE-FOURTHS [OF A KAB] OF FLOUR⁷ THERE.⁸

MISHNAH 2. [IF] THE DOUGH BECAME MEDUMMA⁹ BEFORE SHE HAD ROLLED IT, IT IS EXEMPT [FROM HALLAH].¹⁰ [IF] AFTER SHE HAD ROLLED IT, IT IS SUBJECT [THERETO].¹¹ [IF] THERE OCCURRED TO HER SOME UNCERTAIN UNCLEANNESS¹² BEFORE SHE HAD ROLLED IT, IT MAY BE COMPLETED¹³ IN UNCLEANNESS,¹⁴ [IF] AFTER SHE HAD ROLLED IT, IT SHOULD BE COMPLETED IN CLEANNESS.¹⁵

MISHNAH 3 . [IF] SHE¹⁶ CONSECRATED¹⁷ HER DOUGH BEFORE ROLLING IT, AND REDEEMED IT,¹⁸ SHE IS BOUND [TO SEPARATE HALLAH];¹⁹ [IF SHE CONSECRATED IT] AFTER ROLLING IT, AND REDEEMED IT, SHE IS [LIKEWISE] BOUND;²⁰ [BUT IF] SHE CONSECRATED IT BEFORE ROLLING IT, AND THE GIZBAR²¹ ROLLED IT, AND AFTER THAT SHE REDEEMED IT, SHE IS EXEMPT, SINCE AT THE TIME OF HER OBLIGATION²² IT WAS EXEMPT.²³

MISHNAH 4.²⁴ SIMILAR THERETO²⁵ [IS THE FOLLOWING]: [IF] ONE CONSECRATED HIS PRODUCE BEFORE IT REACHED THE STAGE [WHEN IT BECOMES LIABLE] FOR TITHES,²⁶ AND REDEEMED IT,²⁷ IT IS SUBJECT [TO TITHES];²⁸ [IF ONE CONSECRATED IT] AFTER IT HAD REACHED THE STAGE FOR TITHES, AND REDEEMED IT, IT IS [LIKEWISE] SUBJECT;²⁹ [BUT IF] ONE CONSECRATED IT BEFORE IT WAS 'COMPLETED',³⁰ AND THE GIZBAR 'COMPLETED' IT,³¹ AND AFTERWARDS [THE OWNER] REDEEMED IT, IT IS EXEMPT, SINCE AT THE TIME OF ITS OBLIGATION IT WAS EXEMPT.³²

MISHNAH 5. [IF] A NON-ISRAELITE GAVE [FLOUR] TO AN ISRAELITE TO MAKE FOR HIM DOUGH, IT IS EXEMPT FROM HALLAH;³³ IF HE [THE NON-ISRAELITE] GAVE IT TO HIM AS A GIFT, BEFORE ROLLING IT, HE IS LIABLE.³⁴ [IF] AFTER ROLLING IT, HE IS EXEMPT.³⁵ [IF] ONE MAKES DOUGH TOGETHER WITH A NON-ISRAELITE, [THEN] IF THERE IS NOT IN [THE PORTION] OF THE ISRAELITE THE [MINIMUM] MEASURE SUBJECT TO HALLAH,³⁶ IT IS EXEMPT FROM HALLAH.³⁷

MISHNAH 6. [IF] ONE BECAME A PROSELYTE AND HAD DOUGH, [THEN IF] IT WAS MADE³⁸ BEFORE HE BECAME A PROSELYTE, HE IS EXEMPT [FROM HALLAH]. [BUT IF] AFTER HE BECAME A PROSELYTE, HE IS LIABLE. ALSO IF THERE IS A DOUBT,³⁹ HE IS LIABLE;⁴⁰ BUT [A NON-PRIEST WHO HAS UNWITTINGLY EATEN OF SUCH HALLAH] IS NOT LIABLE IN RESPECT THEREOF TO [REFUND AN ADDITIONAL] 'ONE-FIFTH.'⁴¹ R. AKIBA SAID: IT ALL DEPENDS ON THE [TIME OF THE] FORMATION OF THE LIGHT CRUST IN THE OVEN.⁴²

MISHNAH 7. [IF] ONE MAKES DOUGH FROM WHEATEN [FLOUR] AND FROM RICE [FLOUR],⁴³ AND IT HAS A TASTE OF CORN, IT IS SUBJECT TO HALLAH,⁴⁴ AND ONE FULFILLS THEREWITH ONE'S OBLIGATION ON PASSOVER;⁴⁵ BUT IF IT HAS NO TASTE OF CORN, IT IS NOT SUBJECT TO HALLAH, NOR DOES ONE FULFIL THEREWITH ONE'S OBLIGATION ON PASSOVER.

MISHNAH 8. [IF] ONE HAS TAKEN LEAVEN⁴⁶ OUT OF DOUGH FROM WHICH HALLAH HAD NOT BEEN TAKEN,⁴⁷ AND PUT IT INTO DOUGH FROM WHICH HALLAH HAD BEEN TAKEN,⁴⁸ [THEN] IF HE HAS A SUPPLY FROM ANOTHER PLACE,⁴⁹ HE [RECKONS IN

WITH IT THE LEAVEN],⁵⁰ [AND] TAKES OUT⁵¹ [HALLAH] IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRECISE AMOUNT;⁵² BUT IF [HE HAS] NOT,⁵³ HE TAKES OUT ONE [PORTION OF] HALLAH FOR THE WHOLE [DOUGH].⁵⁴

MISHNAH 9. SIMILAR THERETO⁵⁵ [IS THE FOLLOWING]: IF OLIVES OF [REGULAR] PICKING⁵⁶ BECAME MIXED WITH OLIVES [LEFT OVER] FOR STRIKING-OFF⁵⁷ [BY THE NEEDY],⁵⁸ OR GRAPES OF [REGULAR] VINTAGE WITH GRAPES [LEFT OVER] FOR GLEANING [BY THE NEEDY],⁵⁹ [THEN] IF HE HAS A SUPPLY FROM ANOTHER PLACE⁶⁰ HE [RECKONS IN WITH IT THE REGULAR FRUIT CONTAINED IN THE MIXTURE, AND] TAKES OUT⁶¹ [TERUMAH AND TITHES] IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRECISE AMOUNT,⁶² IF [HE HAS] NOT,⁶³ HE TAKES OUT TERUMAH AND TERUMAH-OF-THE-TITHE⁶⁴ FOR ALL [THE FRUIT]⁶⁵ , AND [AS FOR] THE REST [OF THE DUES], [HE SEPARATES] THE TITHE AND THE SECOND TITHE⁶⁶ IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRECISE AMOUNT.⁶⁷

MISHNAH10 . IF ONE TAKES LEAVEN FROM A DOUGH OF WHEATEN [FLOUR]⁶⁸ AND PUTS [IT] INTO DOUGH OF RICE [FLOUR],⁶⁹ [THEN] IF IT HAS THE TASTE OF CORN, IT IS SUBJECT TO HALLAH,⁷⁰ [BUT] IF [IT HAS] NOT, IT IS EXEMPT.⁷⁰ IF [THAT IS] SO, WITH REGARD TO WHAT⁷¹ THEN DID THEY SAY:⁷² ‘[AN ADMIXTURE OF] TEBEL,⁷³ HOWEVER LITTLE OF IT⁷⁴ THERE BE, RENDERS FOOD PROHIBITED’? [WITH REGARD TO A MIXTURE OF] A SPECIES WITH ITS OWN SPECIES,⁷⁵ BUT [WITH REGARD TO A MIXTURE OF A SPECIES] NOT WITH ITS OWN SPECIES,⁷⁶ [THE PROHIBITION APPLIES ONLY] WHEN IT [THE TEBEL ADMIXTURE] IMPARTS TASTE.

- (1) I.e., properly kneaded, when it constitutes dough in the sense of the Biblical precept relating to hallah.
 - (2) Barley flour does not form so firm a dough as wheaten flour, and there is no point in waiting for a perfect dough which cannot be achieved.
 - (3) Without hallah having been taken from it. in that state it is termed Tebel.
 - (4) Sc. ‘by the hand of Heaven’, v. Lev. XXII. 9; cf., supra I, 9.
 - (5) This provision applies also to a man; but the Mishnah speaks here of a woman since (a) it is women who are usually occupied in baking, cf. supra II, 7, n. 2 and (b) the reason for the regulation which follows is the contingency of a condition more liable to occur with a woman than with a man.
 - (6) This a Rabbinic precautionary regulation, viz., to take off hallah at the earliest possible moment (even though the stage of liability according to Scriptural requirement has not fully been reached, v. supra n. 1) lest the dough become unclean before there is a chance of separating hallah from the rolled dough. In non-Temple times the point of anticipating possible defilement does not arise, and hallah should be taken off when the dough has been rolled, prior to dividing it up into loaves.
 - (7) Sc. left entirely unmixed with the water, and as dry flour not yet liable to hallah, being also of an amount large enough to become (when eventually mixed with water) liable thereto. T.J. rules that in these circumstances one may take hallah for the whole of the contents of the mixing vessel by deliberately and explicitly reckoning in the as yet unmixed flour which is in it. — Another reading is ‘provided only that there are five-fourths of flour’ etc. already mixed with the water.
 - (8) In the mixing vessel.
 - (9) V. supra I, 4, n. 8.
 - (10) For the reason explained ibid.
 - (11) It had already, through having been rolled, become liable to hallah, and this being a Biblical precept, it cannot be overridden by the Rabbinic regulation of Medumma’.
 - (12) V. Nid. 5a ff.
 - (13) Lit., ‘done’.
 - (14) Because in any case the hallah when taken will be unfit for eating owing to the possibility of its being unclean. Further, it is permitted to cause uncleanness to hullin (Sot. 30b) v. Hid. 6b (bottom).
 - (15) Because hullin which is subject to hallah is like hallah, and the latter, like all terumah (a term also applied to hallah) the cleanness of which is in doubt, must not be made unclean deliberately. Such 'hallah in suspense' is not to be eaten, as it may be unclean, nor may it be burnt, as it may be clean; one should wait until it becomes certainly unclean and then burn it (v. Nid. 7a).

(16) V. supra Mishnah I n. 5.

(17) V. Lev. XXVII, 14 and passim.

(18) Also before rolling. On 'redeeming' consecrated things. v. Lev. ibid. 15 and passim.

(19) Since at the material time, viz., that of rolling, it was her property (again), cf. supra I, 3.

(20) Since at the material time it was obviously her property.

(21) The Temple store-keeper who received and was in charge of consecrated objects.

(22) I.e., the time of rolling.

(23) Because at that time the dough was not her property, but that of the Sanctuary.

(24) This Mishnah occurs verbatim also in Pe'ah IV, 8. The reason for this repetition is discussed in T.J. Hal. ad loc. and T.J. Pe'ah ad loc.

(25) Lit., 'as something that goes in [the same way as] it (viz., the preceding case)', a case that takes the same course, follows the same lines.

(26) The several stages at which different kinds of produce become subject to tithes are particularized in Ma'as. I, 2 — 4.

(27) Also before the tithestage.

(28) Since at the material time it was his property (again).

(29) Since at the material time it was certainly his property.

(30) I.e., brought to the state at which it becomes subject to terumah and tithes. Such 'completed state' varies according to the produce, v. ibid. I, 5 ff.

(31) By the appropriate act which brings it to the terumah and tithe stage.

(32) Having been at the time Temple property.

(33) Since it is not the property of an Israelite, and it is only the 'first of your dough' which I commanded, Num. XV, 20.

(34) Because at the material time (viz., of rolling) it was the Israelite's property.

(35) Because at the material time, it was not the property of an Israelite.

(36) 1 1/4 kab., v. supra II, 6.

(37) The converse is implied, viz., if the portion belonging to the Israelite is itself sufficiently large to be subject to hallah, the hallah must be given accordingly.

(38) V. supra Mishnah I, n. 1.

(39) As to whether he was a proselyte at the material time.

(40) Since, however, it is doubtful whether the priest is entitled to it, it may be sold — instead of given — to him.

(41) Lev. XXII, 14 And if a man eat of the holy thing through error, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give unto the priest the holy thing. On 'one-fifth', v. supra I, 9, n. 4. p. 325, In our case, in view of the doubt, he is to separate as a compensatory quantity of dough as great as, but not greater than, he had eaten; because of the doubt too, he is permitted to sell it to the priest. V. preceding note. Cf. Demai I, 2.

(42) R. Akiba differs from the accepted view. From T.J. ad loc. it would appear as if R. Akiba is here confining himself to the case under discussion. Maim., however, basing himself on Sifre to Num. XV, 21 understands R. Akiba as regarding the formation of a light crust in the oven as the statutory stage at which dough, in all cases, becomes liable to hallah.

(43) Which is a species not subject to hallah, v. supra I, 4.

(44) Even if it contains less than the minimum (1 1/4 kab) liable to hallah. L. points out that this ruling applies exclusively in the case of wheat and rice, because of the latter's resemblance to the former; if, however, a species which is subject to hallah has been kneaded with some species which is exempt, then the resultant dough is subject to hallah only if both the following conditions are present: (a) the taste of corn is noticeable, and (b) it contains at least the minimum quantity (1 1/4 kab) of corn, even though the latter be exceeded by the non-labile species present in the mixture.

(45) Cf. supra I, 2.

(46) To be used for leavening another dough; likewise, for the purpose of this Mishnah, dough.

(47) Such dough, or produce, from which the priestly dues had not been separated is known as tebel and may not be eaten.

(48) This latter dough thereby becomes prohibited for eating (v. infra 10, n. 4) until an appropriate portion, such as the Mishnah proceeds to define, is separated as hallah.

(49) I.e., some dough from which or in respect of which no hallah had yet been taken.

(50) So Tosef.; so as to make up with the leaven the minimum subject to hallah.

(51) From the new supply.

(52) In respect of which no hallah had yet been taken, viz., the tebel leaven put into the dough, and the dough 'from another place'.

(53) Sc. any other such dough, or flour, to reckon in with the leaven.

(54) Including the leaven and the dough into which it had got mixed. In this case he takes off as hallah the appropriate proportion (1/24th or 1/48th, v. supra II, 7) of the whole dough.

(55) V. supra Mishnah 4, n. 17.

(56) Which are subject to terumah and tithes.

(57) A term suggested by the expression 'the striking-off of olives', Isa. XVII, 6, XXIV, 13.

(58) As commanded in Deut. XXIV, 20. When thou beatest thine olive-tree, thou shalt not go over the boughs again; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and the widow. These olives are exempt from priestly and levitical dues; v. Pe'ah I, 6.

(59) As commanded Deut. ibid. v. 21: When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean after thee; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. These gleanings are exempt from priestly and levitical dues; v. Pe'ah ibid.

(60) I.e., other lots of regular olives and grapes in respect of which terumah or tithes have yet to be taken.

(61) From the new supply.

(62) Viz., of the regular fruit mixed with the gleanings, plus the new supply, in respect of both of which terumah and tithes are still outstanding.

(63) I.e., no new supply.

(64) Otherwise called the 'tithe of the tithe', Num. XVIII, 26. I.e., the tithe which a Levite is enjoined to give to the priest out of the tithe which he, the Levite himself, receives from the Israelite (ibid. vv. 21ff). Here it means the amount that would become due for this 'tithe of the tithe', if the first tithe were to be taken off the total produce (which, in fact, is not the case; v. note 4) i.e., one-hundredth part of the latter.

(65) I.e., the gleanings together with the admixture of regular fruit which made the whole lot tebel.

(66) The designation given by tradition to the tithe (commanded in Deut. XIV, 22ff) which was itself, or its equivalent in money, to be taken to Jerusalem and there consumed in rejoicing.

(67) I.e. supposing the total that had got mixed up was 100 quarters, 50 of regular fruit (still to be tithed etc.), and 50 of gleanings (which do not require to be tithed etc.). In that case the owner is to give 2 quarters (i.e. one-fiftieth of the total) as terumah, and 1 quarter (one-hundredth of the total, v. note 1) as 'tithe of the tithe'. For the first tithe, however, he is to separate only 5 quarters (one-tenth of the 50 quarters which alone are liable to tithing) and deduct half a quarter in respect of the 'tithe of the tithe' (which he had already set aside), thus handing over to the Levite 4 1/2 quarters. The 'second tithe' he is to take from that which remains (over from the 50 quarters which were liable to tithing (after Simponte). L. explains the procedure thus: He separates terumah, tithe and second tithe from all the produce; from the first tithe he gives a tithe to the priest as the 'tithe of the tithe'; but to the Levite he gives only such part of the tithe as is due from the amount that had been originally liable to tithing. The second tithe he also gives as from the bulk amount. — The requirement, here, that terumah and terumah of the tithe be levied upon a larger amount of produce than are the other dues, is attributed to the circumstance that the penalty for infringement of the law of terumah of the tithe is death ('by the hand of heaven'; cf. I, 9 note 2), and so as to be certain of having fully complied with these precepts, the proportions to be set aside are computed on the maximum amount of produce so 'taxable'.

(68) Which is subject to hallah and from which hallah is still due.

(69) Which, as such, is not subject to hallah (v. supra I, 4).

(70) In accordance with the principle established in Mishnah 7.

(71) Vocalizing למה .

(72) The Sages, v. 'Abodah Zara 73b. Halevy, Doroth II, p. 830 says, אמרו ('they said') introduces a quotation from the Mishnah in its original form; such passages as ours are additions made at the time of the closing of the Mishnah for the purpose of finally elucidating the point under discussion by correlating all the relevant dicta having a bearing thereon.

(73) Eatables at the stage when they severally become subject to the separation of priestly and levitical dues, but before that separation has been effected, at which stage they may not be eaten.

(74) I.e., of the tebel.

(75) E.g., wheat which is tebel, with other wheat (or like species; v. infra IV, 2) which is not.

(76) E.g., wheat-dough which is tebel, with dough from a grain dissimilar thereto (v. IV, 2) which is exempt (either abintio or so rendered) from hallah, or with rice dough which is in no circumstances subject to hallah.

Mishna - Mas. Hallah Chapter 4

MISHNAH 1. IF TWO WOMEN¹ MADE [SEPARATE DOUGHS] FROM TWO [SEPARATE] KABS,² AND THESE [THE DOUGHS] TOUCHED ONE ANOTHER, [THEN] EVEN IF THEY ARE OF ONE SPECIES, THEY ARE EXEMPT [FROM HALLAH].³ BUT IF THEY BELONG TO ONE WOMAN, [THEN] IF IT BE [A CASE OF] ONE SPECIES WITH ITS [LIKE] SPECIES, THEY ARE SUBJECT [TO HALLAH].⁴ BUT WITH AN UNLIKE SPECIES, THEY ARE EXEMPT.⁵

MISHNAH 2. WHAT IS IT [THAT CONSTITUTES THE CATEGORY OF] A SPECIES WITH ITS [LIKE] SPECIES?⁶ WHEAT IS NOT RECKONED TOGETHER WITH ANY [SPECIES]⁷ OTHER THAN WITH SPELT; BARLEY IS RECKONED TOGETHER WITH ALL [SPECIES] EXCEPT WHEAT. R. JOHANAN B. NURI SAID, THE REST OF THE SPECIES⁸ ARE RECKONED TOGETHER ONE WITH ANOTHER.⁹

MISHNAH 3. [IF THERE ARE TWO DOUGHS FROM] TWO [SEPARATE] KABS,¹⁰ AND [DOUGH FROM] A KAB OF RICE,¹¹ OR [FROM] A KAB OF TERUMAH¹² [LYING] BETWEEN,¹³ THEY ARE NOT RECKONED TOGETHER;¹⁴ [IF THERE WAS] A THING [VIZ., DOUGH] FROM WHICH HALLAH HAD BEEN TAKEN¹⁵ [LYING] BETWEEN, THEY ARE RECKONED TOGETHER, SINCE IT¹⁶ HAD ALREADY [ONCE] BEEN SUBJECT TO HALLAH.¹⁷

MISHNAH 4. [IF DOUGH FROM] A KAB OF 'NEW' [CORN].¹⁸ AND [DOUGH FROM] A KAB OF 'OLD' [CORN]¹⁸ STUCK ONE WITH THE OTHER,¹⁹ R. ISHMAEL SAID: LET HIM TAKE [HALLAH] FROM THE MIDDLE,²⁰ BUT THE SAGES PROHIBIT.²¹ IF ONE HAS TAKEN HALLAH FROM [DOUGH MADE OUT OF] ONE KAB, R. AKIBA SAYS: IT IS HALLAH,²² BUT THE SAGES SAY: IT IS NOT HALLAH.²³

MISHNAH 5. [IF ONE HAS] TWO [SEPARATE] KABS [OF DOUGH]²⁴ FROM ONE OF WHICH HALLAH HAD BEEN TAKEN SEPARATELY, AND FROM THE OTHER [TOO,] SEPARATELY, AND HE WENT BACK [TO THEM] AND MADE [OF] THEM ONE DOUGH, R. AKIBA DECLARES IT EXEMPT,²⁵ BUT THE SAGES DECLARE IT LIABLE.²⁶ [THUS] IT IS FOUND THAT [THE VERY PROPOSITION²⁷ GIVING RISE TO] THE STRINGENCY OF THE ONE [RULING]²⁸ IS [THE PROPOSITION THAT GIVES RISE TO] THE LENIENCY OF THE OTHER [RULING].²⁹

MISHNAH 6. A MAN MAY TAKE THE REQUISITE AMOUNT FOR HALLAH OUT OF A [CLEAN] DOUGH FROM WHICH HALLAH HAS NOT [PREVIOUSLY] BEEN TAKEN — [HIS PURPOSE BEING] TO EFFECT IT IN CLEANNESS — BY WAY OF GOING ON SEPARATING [HALLAH] THEREFROM IN RESPECT OF [UNCLEAN] DEMAI,³⁰ UNTIL IT PUTRIFIES, SINCE HALLAH IN RESPECT OF DEMAI MAY BE TAKEN FROM CLEAN [DOUGH] IN RESPECT OF UNCLEAN [DOUGH], AND FROM [ONE DOUGH IN RESPECT OF ANOTHER DOUGH] WHICH IS NOT CLOSE TOGETHER.

MISHNAH 7. IF ISRAELITES WERE TENANTS OF GENTILES IN SYRIA,³¹ R. ELIEZER DECLARES THEIR PRODUCE SUBJECT TO TITHES AND TO [THE LAW OF] THE

SEVENTH [YEAR],³² BUT RABBAN GAMALIEL DECLARES [IT] EXEMPT.³³ RABBAN GAMALIEL SAYS: [ONE IS TO GIVE] TWO HALLAH-PORIONS IN SYRIA,³⁴ BUT R. ELIEZER SAYS: [ONLY] ONE HALLAH-PORION.³⁵ THEY³⁶ ADOPTED THE LENIENT RULING OF RABBAN GAMALIEL,³⁷ AND THE LENIENT RULING OF R. ELIEZER.³⁸ EVENTUALLY THEY WENT BACK [ON THIS PRACTICE]³⁹ AND INSTITUTED THE PRACTICE IN ACCORDANCE WITH RABBAN GAMALIEL IN BOTH RESPECTS.⁴⁰

MISHNAH 8. RABBAN GAMALIEL SAYS: THERE ARE THREE TERRITORIAL DIVISIONS⁴¹ WITH REGARD TO [LIABILITY TO] HALLAH: FROM THE LAND OF ISRAEL TO KEZIB⁴² — ONE HALLAH-PORION; FROM KEZIB⁴³ TO AMANAH⁴⁴ — TWO HALLAH-PORIONS: ONE FOR THE FIRE⁴⁵ AND ONE FOR THE PRIEST,⁴⁶ TO THE ONE FOR THE FIRE THE [RULE OF THE STATUTORY] PROPORTION APPLIES,⁴⁷ TO THE ONE FOR THE PRIEST THE [RULE OF THE STATUTORY] PROPORTION DOES NOT APPLY;⁴⁸ FROM THE RIVER⁴² TO AMANAH AND [THE ZONE] INWARD, TWO HALLAH-PORIONS: ONE FOR THE FIRE AND ONE FOR THE PRIEST, TO THE ONE [INTENDED] FOR THE FIRE THE [RULE OF THE STATUTORY] PROPORTION DOES NOT APPLY,⁴⁹ TO THE ONE [INTENDED] FOR THE PRIEST THE [RULE OF THE STATUTORY] PROPORTION APPLIES,⁵⁰ AND [A PRIEST] WHO HAS IMMERSSED HIMSELF DURING THE DAY [AND HAS TO WAIT TILL SUNSET FOR HIS PURIFICATION TO BE COMPLETE]⁵¹ MAY EAT IT.⁵² R. JOSE SAYS: ONE DOES NOT REQUIRE IMMERSION.⁵³ IT IS FORBIDDEN [AS FOOD] TO MEN WHO HAVE AN ISSUE,⁵⁴ TO WOMEN WHO HAVE AN ISSUE, TO WOMEN DURING MENSTRUATION,⁵⁵ TO WOMEN AFTER CHILDBIRTH,⁵⁶ BUT MAY BE EATEN WITH A 'STRANGER' AT THE [SAME] TABLE,⁵⁷ AND MAY BE GIVEN TO ANY PRIEST.⁵⁸

MISHNAH 9. THESE, TOO, MAY BE GIVEN TO ANY PRIEST:⁵⁹ DEVOTED THINGS,⁶⁰ FIRSTLINGS,⁶¹ THE [LAMB SUBSTITUTED AS] RANSOM FOR THE FIRSTLING OF AN ASS,⁶² THE SHOULDER, THE TWO CHEEKS AND THE MAW,⁶³ THE FIRST OF THE FLEECE,⁶⁴ OIL [FIT ONLY] FOR BURNING,⁶⁵ CONSECRATED FOOD [ORDAINED TO BE CONSUMED WITHIN THE PRECINCTS] OF THE SANCTUARY,⁶⁶ AND THE FIRST-RIPE FRUITS.⁶⁷ R. JUDAH PROHIBITS IN [THE CASE OF] FIRST-RIPE FRUITS.⁶⁸ [AS FOR] HORSEBEANS [SET ASIDE] FOR TERUMAH, R. AKIBA PERMITS,⁶⁹ BUT THE SAGES PROHIBIT.⁷⁰

MISHNAH 10. NITTAI [A MAN OF] TEKOA⁷¹ BROUGHT HALLAH-PORIONS FROM BE-JATTIR,⁷² BUT THEY DID NOT ACCEPT [THESE] FROM HIM.⁷³ THE MEN OF ALEXANDRIA BROUGHT THEIR HALLAH-PORIONS FROM ALEXANDRIA, BUT THEY DID NOT ACCEPT [THESE] FROM THEM.⁷³ THE MEN OF MOUNT ZEBOIM⁷⁴ BROUGHT THEIR FIRST-RIPE FRUITS PRIOR TO THE FESTIVAL,⁷⁵ BUT THEY DID NOT ACCEPT [THESE] FROM THEM, ON ACCOUNT OF THAT WHICH IS WRITTEN IN THE LAW: AND THE FEAST OF THE HARVEST, THE FIRST-FRUITS OF THY LABOURS, WHICH THOU SOWEST IN THE FIELD.⁷⁶

MISHNAH 11. BEN ANTIGONUS⁷⁷ BROUGHT UP⁷⁸ FIRSTLINGS FROM BABYLON, BUT THEY DID NOT ACCEPT [THESE] FROM HIM.⁷⁹ JOSEPH THE PRIEST⁸⁰ BROUGHT FIRST-RIPE FRUITS [IN THE FORM] OF WINE AND OIL,⁸¹ BUT THEY DID NOT ACCEPT [THESE] FROM HIM;⁸² HE ALSO BROUGHT UP HIS SONS AND MEMBERS OF HIS HOUSEHOLD TO CELEBRATE THE LESSER PASSOVER⁸³ IN JERUSALEM, BUT THEY TURNED HIM BACK,⁸⁴ SO THAT THE THING SHOULD NOT BECOME FIRMLY FIXED AS AN OBLIGATION. ARISTON⁸⁵ BROUGHT HIS FIRST-RIPE FRUITS FROM APAMEA⁸⁶ AND THEY ACCEPTED [THESE] FROM HIM,⁸⁷ BECAUSE THEY SAID,⁸⁸ ONE WHO OWNS [LAND] IN SYRIA IS AS ONE WHO OWNS [LAND] IN THE OUTSKIRTS OF JERUSALEM.⁸⁹

- (1) Not necessarily, but most likely to occur with women in the course of their household activities.
- (2) One kab is not subject to hallah, in accordance with the view of the School of Hillel ('Ed. I, 2).
- (3) Because as a rule each of the women not only does not contemplate her dough coming into contact with someone else's, but actually objects to it; the two kabs are, therefore, considered as separate (just as their owners deem them to be) despite the fact that by chance they touched or even stuck together.
- (4) In circumstances explained supra II, 4.
- (5) This exemption applies also in the event of the two doughs being of the same species but otherwise different, e.g., one of coarse and the other of fine flour (T.J.) or one seasoned with saffron and the other not (v. L.).
- (6) So that they might combine by contact to make up the requisite minimum (viz., 1 1/4 kab) to be subject to hallah. It should be noted that the considerations envisaged in this Mishnah have reference only to hallah but not to other priestly or levitical dues.
- (7) Of the five kinds of grain. v. supra I, 1.
- (8) Enumerated supra I, 1.
- (9) The question as to which species combine with which to form a minimum subject to hallah, arises only when the doughs touch or stick to one another; if any two or more species (liable to hallah) have mingled, either in the flour or in two kneading, they are without question 'reckoned together' (T.J.).
- (10) Both of one species which is liable to hallah.
- (11) A species not liable to hallah
- (12) Which, as a priestly perquisite, is not liable to hallah.
- (13) And sticking to the two on either side.
- (14) Because the connecting intervening piece of dough, whether it is of rice or terumah, is one not liable to hallah. T.J. explains the necessity for instancing both rice and terumah: (a) if rice only had been mentioned, it might have been thought that just rice is not to be 'reckoned in' for the reason that it is a species ab initio not subject to hallah, but that terumah, which is of course of grain, that is in itself liable to hallah, should be reckoned in; (b) if terumah alone had been mentioned it might have been inferred, that just terumah is not 'reckoned in' for the reason that an admixture of it to other dough, by making the whole Medumma' (v. I, 4, n. 8). renders it exempt from hallah, but that rice, an admixture of which to grain does not invariably impair the liability of the dough to hallah (v. III. and 10), might be 'reckoned in'.
- (15) And therefore no longer liable to hallah.
- (16) The piece of dough in the middle.
- (17) Constituting in this respect a category different from the preceding cases where the dough lying in the middle had never been liable to hallah.
- (18) According to Ter. I, 5, it is unavailing to separate terumah from one year's corn an amount large enough to cover the requirements for terumah in respect also of either the preceding or the following year's corn. The same rule applies mutatis mutandis to taking hallah.
- (19) Lit., 'hit one with the other', cf. supra II, 4, n. 2.
- (20) Where the two doughs run into one another, thus taking some from each.
- (21) The prohibition of the Sages is directed against taking, in these circumstances, just one hallah-portion even if it be out of the place where both doughs coalesce. The fact that the two doughs have stuck together certainly renders them jointly subject to hallah, but since one is of 'old' and the other of 'new' corn, the statutory proportion (1/24th or 1/48th v. supra II, 7) must be taken separately from each dough.
- (22) I.e., if subsequently the kab was increased to 1 1/4 kab, whereby the portion that had erroneously been taken off is deemed as having been only prematurely separated and retroactively made into hallah with all due sanctity attaching thereto.
- (23) Since at the time a portion was taken off the dough was, owing to the small amount thereof, not subject to hallah, the separation of the dough portion was gratuitous and entirely without effect on its non-sacred (hullin) status.
- (24) I.e., neither is large enough to be subject to hallah.
- (25) Since in accordance with the view enunciated in his name in Mishnah 4, the dough-portions taken separately from each of the doughs and, erroneously, but in good faith-intended as hallah, have been validated as such by the subsequent addition of the other dough.
- (26) In accordance with their view, contrary to R. Akiba's, in Mishnah 4.
- (27) Viz., that of R. Akiba set out supra n. I.
- (28) I.e., the stringency which results from the application of R. Akiba's view to the case in Mish. 4, where the owner is thereby deprived of the dough-portions which are, in that view, held to have been consecrated by him as hallah.

(29) I.e., the leniency which is the effect of the application of that same view to the case in our Mishnah, inasmuch as here the owner is thereby exempted from giving away a further portion of dough as hallah.

(30) Ordinarily demai denotes produce with regard to which there is suspicion, inasmuch as it has been obtained from an 'am ha-arez, that it may not have been properly tithed. Here, according to Maim. it means dough with regard to which there is doubt, for the same reason as above, whether hallah had been separated. Rash and Bert, say it means dough from grain that was demai (in the original sense, viz., in respect of tithes). Such corn presumed to have come from an 'am ha-arez was unclean and so, too, the dough made from it. L. reviews and criticizes the above interpretations and finally rejects them as untenable. His own interpretation is, that this Mishnah is concerned with dough bought from a Cuthean (Samaritan) and it is uncertain whether the latter has intended the dough for his own consumption (when, in view of known Samaritan religious scruples, he can be trusted to have separated hallah), or for sale (when one cannot assume that the Samaritan had separated hallah, inasmuch as the Samaritan code did not require hallah to be taken from dough intended for sale). Such dough is thus demai (in respect of hallah), and it is this kind of demai that is meant here. Furthermore, a Samaritan's dough is, failing certain knowledge to the contrary, unclean. The dough spoken of first in our Mishnah is also demai, but it is clean, either because the Samaritan had, in the presence of an Israelite, undergone ritual ablution from uncleanness immediately prior to preparing the dough, or because the flour had been mixed not with water but with fruit-juice (which does not render dough capable of contracting uncleanness; cf. supra II, 2, p. 328, n. 1). The position then is this: One dough is clean, the other unclean. In ordinary circumstances it is not permitted to take hallah from clean dough in sufficient quantity to exempt also unclean dough (v. supra I, 9), but because in our case both doughs are demai in respect of hallah, it is permitted to do so, as well as to take hallah from such a dough in sufficient quantity to exempt also other similar doughs without putting them close together.

(31) A geographical term denoting territories outside the boundaries of the Land of Israel (as delimited in Num. XXXIV) which were captured by King David before he completed the conquest of the Land of Israel proper (Jebus i.e. Zion remained in gentile possession till nearly the end of David's reign; v. II Sam. XXIV). It was agreed that these adjacent territories were of lesser sanctity than the Land proper, but there were differences of opinion as to which of the precepts enjoined for the Land of Israel were applicable also to Syria.

(32) Since in his view Syria was like the Land of Israel in these matters. In T.J. it is suggested that the intention of R. Eliezer in imposing this obligation was to 'fine' these Israelite tenants in Syria. Rash suggests that the purpose of the proposed fine was to discourage Jews from settling permanently in Syria. The law of the 'Seventh Year' is promulgated in Ex. XXIII, 10-11, Lev, XXV, 1 ff and forms the subject of tractate Shebi'ith in our Seder.

(33) Because he held that Syria was like the Land of Israel in regard to tithes etc., only if the land (in Syria) on which the produce was grown was the property of Israelites (v. end of chapter) but not when, as here, the latter were merely tenants.

(34) One portion to burn, because it is unclean (as everywhere outside the Land), and the other to give to a priest so as to prevent the law of hallah from being entirely forgotten (v. infra 9).

(35) Just as in the Land of Israel (v. n. i).

(36) The Jews in Syria.

(37) Exempting the produce of Israelite tenants in Syria from tithes and Shebi'ith.

(38) Demanding from them only one hallah-portion (instead of two as R. Gamaliel).

(39) Because they found that it was considered unworthy, and even wicked, to take advantage of the lenient rulings of two authorities when those rulings arose from opposing principles. The norm was that if you adopt the principle of one authority giving rise to a lenient ruling, you must consistently follow that principle wherever it applies, whether the effect of such application is a leniency or a stringency.

(40) Lit., 'ways'; i.e., both in the matter of tithes and Shebi'ith (where he is lenient) and in that of hallah (where he is stringent).

(41) Lit., 'lands'.

(42) For these geographical items v. Shebi'ith VI, 1. notes.

(43) That zone was authentic Land of Israel by reason of being within the boundaries mentioned in Num. XXXIV, having been occupied in the first conquest, and also reoccupied by the returned Babylonian exiles under Zerubbabel and Ezra, and therefore indubitably subject to the precepts bound up with the sanctity of the Land.

(44) A zone within the Pentateuchal boundaries of the Land of Israel and therefore originally holy; but since it had not been reoccupied by those who returned from Babylon, it did not re-assume complete holiness.

- (45) I.e., to be burnt by the owner, being unclean hallah. Since this zone was not restored to its original holiness, its hallah is unclean just as the hallah in any land outside the Land of Israel.
- (46) This is not mandatory, but instituted by the authorities to draw attention to the peculiar character of that zone with regard to sanctity. This procedure is to obviate on the one hand the likely erroneous notion that the territory is to be regarded as definitely outside the Land in respect of sanctity, and on the other hand the other mistaken notion that it is to be regarded as completely holy territory. The very contradictoriness of the procedure will stimulate enquiry which will enable people to learn of the special status of the zone.
- (47) Because this portion is in virtue of that zone having been originally holy and liable to hallah on Biblical authority — the direction to burn it being due solely to its being unclean, in which circumstances it would have to be burnt even in the Land of Israel proper.
- (48) Because this portion is only an institution of the Scribes.
- (49) Less than the minimum may be separated because (a) it is on solely Scribal authority and (b) because it is to be burnt.
- (50) This hallah-portion too is only on Scribal authority, but since it is to be eaten the full amount should be given.
- (51) V. supra I, 9, p. 326, n. 2. The regulations with regard to a person in that state are detailed in the tractate of that name Tebul Yom in seder Tohoroth.
- (52) Since this hallah-portion is on the authority only of the Scribes, the eating thereof is prohibited only to such as are in a state of actual uncleanness by reason of an issue or of menstruation (v. infra notes 4-6) but not to anyone unclean through any other cause, or whose cleanness is, as in the case of tebul yom, in a state of suspense until the end of the day.
- (53) So that, according to R. Jose, outside the Land, one who has had an issue may eat hallah.
- (54) V. Lev. XV, 2-15.
- (55) V. ibid. 19-30.
- (56) V. ibid. XII.
- (57) With consecrated food it is insisted that it should not be eaten by the priest at the same table where a non-priest is eating, lest the latter partake of the consecrated food either by accident or in error. Since the hallah-portion with which we are here concerned is not scripturally ordained this precaution is not required.
- (58) Maim. reproduces the T.J. interpretation of 'any priest', viz., 'be it a priest who is a kabir (i.e., a scholar) or one who is an 'am ha-rez (i.e., an unlearned person)'. Evidently what is meant is: whether the priest be one who takes care to eat consecrated food in cleanness, or one who does not. V. Bert. and Tusef. Yom Tob. Bert. writes as if Maim.'s explanation is at variance with that of the Talmud, whilst Maim. does nothing but reproduce T.J. verbatim.
- (59) V. preceding Mishnah, end n. 8.
- (60) V. Lev. XXVII, 28. No devoted thing, a man may devote to the Lord of all that he hath . . . shall be sold or redeemed: every devoted thing is most holy unto the Lord; Num. XVIII, 14: Every devoted thing in Israel shall be thine i.e., the priest's. Since it is to be redeemed with money, the latter may obviously be given to any priest without references to the likelihood of his being clean or unclean.
- (61) V. Ex XIII, 12: Thou shalt set apart unto the Lord all that openeth the womb; every firstling that is a male, which thou hast coming of a beast, shall be the Lord's, Deut. XV, 19 ff: All the firstling males of thy herd all of thy flock thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God . . . thou shalt eat it before the Lord thy God . . . in the place which the Lord shall choose (i.e. the Holy City of Jerusalem) . . . And if there be any blemish therein, lameness, or blindness, any ill blemish whatsoever, thou shalt not sacrifice it unto the Lord thy God. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates: the unclean and the clean may eat it. Reference to Num. XVIII, 17-18 shows that 'Thou shalt eat it' is addressed to the priest. It is clear that our Mishnah speaks of the flesh of a blemished firstling, and since this may be eaten by 'the unclean and the clean' it may, obviously, be given to any priest irrespective of his cleanness.
- (62) V. Ex. XIII, 13: And the firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb. This lamb is not considered consecrated (Bert.).
- (63) V. Deut, XVIII, 3: And this shall be the priests' due from the people, from them that offer a sacrifice, whether it be ox or sheep, that they shall give to the priest the shoulder, the two cheeks and the maw. V. n. 5 infra.
- (64) V. ibid. 4 . . . the first of thy fleece shalt thou give him.
- (65) I.e. , oil set aside as terumah, which has become unclean.
- (66) Since these are parts of sacrifices brought into the Sanctuary where no unclean priest may enter there is, obviously, no fear that it may be eaten by a priest during his uncleanness. (It is different with hallah and terumah; these may be - eaten outside sacred precincts where there are priests of all kinds, and care should therefore be taken that these priestly dues do not get into the hands of priests who are either unclean or possibly neglectful of their ritual cleanness.)

- (67) V. Num. XVIII, 13: The first-ripe fruits of all that is in their land, which they bring unto the Lord, shall be thine; every one that is clean in thy house may eat thereof. These were to be brought by the Israelite direct to the Sanctuary, v. n. 5.
- (68) R. Judah's reason is: Seeing that first-ripe fruits are not offered on the altar, ignorant priests are likely to underrate the sacredness of first-ripe fruits and to eat them prior to self-purification.
- (69) Sc. to give to any priest, since these are rarely eaten by human beings, and the likelihood of these being eaten by an unclean priest is therefore remote.
- (70) Seeing that they are sometimes eaten by human beings, no exception is to be made of them.
- (71) In South Judah v. Amos I, 1, II Sam. XIV, 2.
- (72) Reading with Kohut, Aruch Completum, s.v. יתיר יתיר יתיר (or spelt defectivum יתר) is mentioned Josh. XV, 48, XXI, 14, I Sam. XXX, 27, I Chron. VI, 42 in S. Judah. In T.J. Sheb. p. 36, it is mentioned among places on the borders of the Land of Israel in relation to the applicability of the laws of the sanctity of the Land. According to the above data it would be in the neighbourhood of Tekoa. It is this place that is probably meant by Schurer (Geschichte des Volkes Israel I, p. 693) when he identifies our place-name as Be-jittar. Hirschensohn, Sheba' Hokmoth s.v. בתיר thinks of Botrys on the North African coast.
- (73) For the reasons: (a) These hallah-portions could not be eaten, since, coming from not fully sacred territory, they were unclean. (b) They could not accept them and burn them, because (since their place of origin was in a zone of partial but not complete sanctity) the fact that such hallah is unclean is not generally known, and people might be led to think that clean hallah was being — and permitted to be — burnt in Palestine. (c) Accepting these hallah-portions and sending them out of Palestine to burn them, would lead people to think, entirely erroneously, that any hallah or terumah may be sent out of the Land of Israel. The only possible thing to do is to let these dough-portions remain till the Eve of Passover when they should be burnt with other leaven (T.J.).
- (74) Probably close to the valley of that name (I Sam. XIII, 18) and the town of that name (Neh. XI, 34) in Judea.
- (75) Azereth, a Rabbinic designation for the Feast of Weeks or Pentecost, on which the first-ripe fruits were due to be brought to the Temple. Lit., 'the closing', Pentecost being considered the closing festival to Passover.
- (76) Ex. XXIII, 16 (cf. Lev. XXIII, 15-21, Num. XXVIII, 26). According to this verse it was the first-fruits coming from 'that which thou sowest in the field' i.e., the 'Two Loaves' (which, too, were termed 'First-fruits') that were the first to be brought to the Temple, before the other first-ripe produce, indeed before any of the other priestly and levitical dues. Seemingly the refusal recorded here is contrary to Mishnah Men. X, 6 which lays it down that although the first-fruits are in the first instance not to be brought before the Two Loaves, nevertheless if one had already unintentionally done so, such first-fruits are valid. (They are not accepted at the time but laid aside till after the bringing of the Two Loaves on the day of the Festival, and then they are handed to the priest and the declaration prescribed in Deut. XXVI is recited.) T.J., however, explain that the refusal of the prematurely brought first-fruits, in our case, was on the ground that acceptance would, in the circumstances, have given the impression that it was the proper thing to bring first-fruits prior to the Feast of Weeks.
- (77) Var. lec.: Antinos.
- (78) To the Temple.
- (79) From Deut. XIV, 23. And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which He shall choose . . . the tithes of thy corn, thy wine and thine oil, and the firstlings of thy cattle and thy flocks, a deduction is made that even as terumah and tithes are not to be brought to the altar from outside of sacred territory so too are firstlings not to be brought from such places. Such firstlings are to be allowed to pasture till they become unfit for sacrifice and then they are eaten by priests (v. T.J.).
- (80) He was evidently well-known as one who was particularly concerned to avoid circumstances defiling the sanctity attaching to a priest (v. Zeb. 10a, Sifra to Lev. XXI, 2, 'Er. 47b; 'A.Z. 13a).
- (81) The law is that first-ripe fruits may be brought in liquid form only if there was such intention at the time of the picking of the olives or grapes.
- (82) Because there had been no prior intention to bring them in liquid form; T.J.
- (83) As a rule designated 'the Second Passover'. According to Num. IX, 1-12, a person who was unclean on the Eve of the Passover and therefore unable to offer up the Paschal Lamb, was to do so exactly a month later (i.e. on the eve of the 15th Iyyar). The occasion reported here was probably in the year when his wife died on the Eve of Passover. Unwilling to miss the Paschal Sacrifice, he was, then, most reluctant to allow himself to become defiled through her dead body (v. Num. XIX, II, 14) although the death of a wife is a case in which a man is permitted to defile himself (Lev. XXI, 2, where the phrase 'for his kin that is near unto him' refers, according to Rabbinic interpretation, to his wife). His colleagues, however, forcibly overcame his reluctance and he did allow himself to become unclean (Sifra loc. cit., Zeb. loc. cit. and parallels). V. Hyman, Toledoth Tannaim s.v. where he usually corrects an erroneous inference by Weiss (Dor I. P. 46, n. 2, p. 47) as to the date of the halachah permitting a priest to defile himself on the death of his wife.

(84) According to Ex. XXIII, 17, Passover was one of the three festivals when all males were to 'appear before the Lord', but that is ordained only for the real Passover and not for the 'Second (called here Lesser) Passover'. Pilgrimage to the Temple was of course permitted throughout the year and priests — like Joseph ha-Kohen — naturally had access to the Temple. Notwithstanding this and the fact that he was attending for the purposes of carrying out the precept of the 'Second Passover', he was turned back because he brought his young sons etc. with him, lest his act lead the public — as it was most likely to do — to an erroneous conclusion that the Second Passover required just like Passover itself not only the sacrifice of the Paschal Lamb by those who had been unable to do so on the real Passover, but also the pilgrimage of all males.

(85) Perhaps not the proper name of a man, but just a man of noble birth or standing.

(86) A few places of this name are known. Probably Paneas in Syria is meant here.

(87) First-ripe fruits were accepted from abroad, unlike terumah. The decision not to subject produce abroad to terumah is due to a desire to discourage priests from leaving the Holy Land as they would be tempted to do in order to collect terumah abroad. Owners had no need to 'bring' terumah to the Temple but just to distribute it among priests. Such a cause did not exist in the case of first-ripe fruits which had to be brought to the Sanctuary.

(88) The phrase indicates a reference to a Mishnah in the Mishnah-collection in its earliest form. Cf. supra III end.

(89) And the product of such Jewish owned land in Syria is accordingly subject to tithes etc. This is not the case if the land in Syria is held by Jews only on tenancy v. supra Mish. 7. V. Git. 8a for a list of particulars in which Syria is treated in law like the Land of Israel. MS. M. adds the following passage (which is quoted in B. K 110b and Hul. 133b as a Baraitha): Twenty-four dues were given to the priests: ten in the Temple and four in Jerusalem and ten within the borders (of the Land of Israel). These are the ten given them in the Temple: Sin-offerings, sin-offerings of birds, the unconditional and suspensive guilt-offerings, the peace-offering of the congregation, the log of oil of the leper, the remainder of the Omer, the Two Loaves, the Shewbread, the residue of the meal-offerings. And these are the four given in Jerusalem: The firstlings, the first-fruits, the heave-offering from the thank-offering, and the ram of the Nazirite, and the skins of hallowed sacrifices. And these are the ten given them within the borders: Terumah, terumah of the tithe, hallah, the first of the shearing, the priestly gifts (from every beast slaughtered for food), the redemption price of the firstborn son, the redemption price of the firstling of an ass, the field of possession, the devoted field, and what was wrongly obtained of a proselyte (who died without any legal issue). No priest who is not well versed in these things may receive them as gifts.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. FIFTEEN [CATEGORIES OF] WOMEN EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS¹ AND THE RIVALS OF THEIR RIVALS² AND SO ON, AD INFINITUM,³ FROM THE HALIZAH⁴ AND FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE;⁵ AND THESE ARE THEY: HIS DAUGHTER,⁶ THE DAUGHTER OF HIS DAUGHTER⁷ AND THE DAUGHTER OF HIS SON;⁷ THE DAUGHTER OF HIS WIFE,⁸ THE DAUGHTER OF HER SON AND THE DAUGHTER OF HER DAUGHTER; HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW,⁹ HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER,¹⁰ AND HIS FATHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER;¹⁰ HIS MATERNAL SISTER,¹¹ HIS MOTHER'S SISTER,¹¹ HIS WIFE'S SISTER AND HIS MATERNAL BROTHER'S WIFE;¹²

(1) Heb., zarah, צרה 'rival'. Where a husband has more than one wife, each woman is a zarah in relation to the other. The term is derived from צרר which signifies oppression, hence 'rival', 'adversary', as in I Sam. I, 6 (cf. Kimhi a.l.) or 'to tie up', 'to bind', hence 'associate', 'co-wife'.

(2) The co-wives of a rival through a second marriage.

(3) עד סוף העולם lit., 'to the end of the world'.

(4) הלצה (rt. הלץ, 'to take off' or 'to loosen'), the ceremony of drawing off the shoe of the brother of her husband who died without issue. According to Biblical law (v. Deut. XXV, 5-9) the brother-in-law must either marry the widow (v. following note) or be subjected to halizah.

(5) יבום, rt. יבם 'to marry the levir'. Any woman coming under the fifteen categories enumerated below is not only herself exempt from halizah and yibbum but exempts also her own rivals as well as the rivals of her rivals, ad infinitum, as explained anon.

(6) Who had been married to his brother who subsequently died childless. Since he is forbidden to marry his daughter he is thereby also forbidden to marry any of her rivals, the widows of his deceased childless brother. 'HIS DAUGHTER' includes even one born to him as a result of outrage, v. infra.

(7) Cf. previous note. All the fifteen categories enumerated are among the near relatives whom a man is forbidden to marry in accordance with the explicit and implicit prohibitions in Lev. XVIII, 6ff.

(8) From a former husband.

(9) Who, after the death of her husband, had married his brother who subsequently died childless.

(10) The prohibition to marry in this case is derived in Sanhedrin 75a from Lev. XVIII, 17.

(11) Who was married to his paternal brother. The laws of the levirate marriage and halizah are applicable to a paternal, but not to a maternal brother.

(12) Who, after the death of her husband, had married his paternal brother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 2b

THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER WHO WAS NOT HIS CONTEMPORARY,¹ AND HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW.² ALL THESE EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS AND THE RIVALS OF THEIR RIVALS, AND SO ON, AD INFINITUM, FROM THE HALIZAH AND FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. IF, HOWEVER, ANY AMONG THESE³ DIED,⁴ OR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL,⁵ OR WERE DIVORCED, OR WERE FOUND INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED;⁶ THOUGH, OF COURSE, ONE CANNOT SAY OF A MAN'S MOTHER-IN-LAW, OF THE MOTHER OF HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW AND OF THE MOTHER OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW THAT THEY WERE FOUND INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION OR THAT THEY MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL.⁷

HOW IS THE EXEMPTION OF THEIR RIVALS [BY THE WOMEN MENTIONED], TO BE UNDERSTOOD? IF A MAN'S DAUGHTER OR ANY OTHER OF THESE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES WAS MARRIED TO HIS BROTHER WHO HAD ALSO ANOTHER WIFE [AT THE TIME] WHEN HE DIED, THEN AS HIS DAUGHTER IS EXEMPT SO IS HER RIVAL

EXEMPT. IF HIS DAUGHTER'S RIVAL WENT AND MARRIED A SECOND BROTHER OF HIS,⁸ WHO ALSO HAD YET ANOTHER WIFE WHEN HE DIED, THEN AS THE RIVAL OF HIS DAUGHTER IS EXEMPT SO IS ALSO HIS DAUGHTER'S RIVAL'S RIVAL EXEMPT, EVEN IF THERE WERE A HUNDRED [BROTHERS].⁹

HOW [IS ONE TO UNDERSTAND THE STATEMENT THAT] IF THEY HAD DIED, THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED?¹⁰ IF A MAN'S DAUGHTER OR ANY OTHER OF THESE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES WAS MARRIED TO HIS BROTHER WHO HAD ALSO ANOTHER WIFE, THEN, IF HIS DAUGHTER DIED OR WAS DIVORCED, AND HIS BROTHER DIED SUBSEQUENTLY, HER RIVAL IS PERMITTED.¹⁰

THE RIVAL OF ANY ONE WHO IS ENTITLED TO MAKE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL¹¹ BUT DID NOT EXERCISE HER RIGHT, MUST PERFORM HALIZAH [IF HER HUSBAND DIED CHILDLESS], AND MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.¹²

GEMARA. Consider: All these¹³ are deduced from the [exemption of] a wife's sister.¹⁴ Why then was not HIS WIFE'S SISTER mentioned¹⁵ first?¹⁶ And if it be replied that the Tanna enumerated¹⁷ [the forbidden relatives] in the order of the degrees of their respective severity,¹⁸ and that it [our Mishnah] represents the view of R. Simeon who regards burning¹⁹ as the severest,²⁰ [it may be retorted that], if that is the case,²¹ HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW should have been mentioned¹⁶ first, since [Scripture] enunciated the principle of burning in the case of a mother-in-law.²² And, furthermore, HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW should have come¹⁵ immediately after HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, since, next to burning, stoning²³ is the severest penalty! — But [this in fact is the proper reply]: Since [the prohibition of intercourse with] 'HIS DAUGHTER'²⁴ has been arrived at by exposition²⁵ it is given preference.²⁶

(1) Lit., 'in his world', i.e., who died before he was born. Such a brother's widow and her rivals etc. are exempt. If, for instance, C was born after his brother A had died childless, so that his widow, N married (in accordance with the laws of the levirate marriage) a contemporary brother of his, B, who had another wife, or wives, and B also died childless, all B's widows are exempt from halizah and yibbum as far as C is concerned on account of N who is forbidden to him.

(2) Who married his brother after the death of his son. The marriage of a daughter-in-law is forbidden for ever, even after the death of one's son.

(3) Lit., '(in the case of) all of them'.

(4) Prior to the death of her husband who subsequently died childless.

(5) Such a declaration, mi'un מִיּוֹן, may be made against her husband (without any further necessity for a divorce) by a wife, while she is a minor, or as soon as she becomes of age, prior to cohabitation, in cases where she was betrothed either (a) as an orphan, by her mother or brothers or (b) even in the lifetime of her father (v. infra 109a) if she was once divorced (after her father had contracted for her a betrothal) and was betrothed again while still a minor.

(6) I.e., levirate marriage may be contracted, or halizah must be performed.

(7) For, having given birth they must be of age.

(8) Whenever one of the surviving brothers is not related to either of the widows, but another brother is, it is his duty to perform the levirate marriage or to submit to halizah.

(9) Everyone of whom had also another wife or wives and the rival's rival married them in turn, ad infinitum.

(10) V. p. 2, n. 7.

(11) A minor (V. supra, p. 2, n. 6).

(12) V. Gemara infra.

(13) Exemptions enumerated in our Mishnah.

(14) V. infra.

(15) Lit., 'let him teach'.

(16) In the list.

(17) Lit., 'took'.

(18) The degree of the severity of the penalty incurred by sexual intercourse with one of these relatives.

- (19) The death penalty incurred for sexual intercourse with one of the first eight categories enumerated in our Mishnah. V. Sanh. 75a.
- (20) Of the four death penalties. V. Sanh. 49b.
- (21) Lit., 'if so'.
- (22) Lev. XX, 14.
- (23) The penalty for intercourse with one's daughter-in-law. V. Sanh. 53a.
- (24) I.e., born as a result of outrage. V. supra p. 1, n. 6.
- (25) V. infra.
- (26) Lit., 'beloved to him'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 3a

Now that it has been stated that preference is given to whatever is arrived at by exposition, the Tanna should have placed⁹ HIS WIFE'S SISTER last!¹⁰ — As he was dealing with a prohibition due to sisterhood¹¹ he mentioned also HIS WIFE'S SISTER. Then let him relegate⁹ the entire passage¹² to the end!¹³ — But [this is really the explanation]: The Tanna follows the order of the respective degrees of kinship. He, therefore, mentions [first] HIS DAUGHTER, THE DAUGHTER OF HIS DAUGHTER AND THE DAUGHTER OF HIS SON because they are his own next of kin; and since he enumerated three generations of his relatives in descending order he enumerated also three generations of her¹⁴ relatives in descending order. Having enumerated three generations of her¹⁴ relatives in descending order he proceeded to enumerate also three generations of her relatives in ascending order. He then mentions HIS SISTER and HIS MOTHER'S SISTER who are his blood¹⁵ relatives;¹⁶ and while dealing with prohibitions due to brotherhood he also mentions HIS WIFE'S SISTER. And it would indeed have been proper that HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW should be placed before THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER WHO WAS NOT HIS CONTEMPORARY, since it is not on account of kinship¹⁷ that the latter is forbidden, but as he was dealing with a prohibition due to brotherhood he mentioned also THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER WHO WAS NOT HIS CONTEMPORARY and then mentioned HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW.

What argument can be advanced for using¹⁸ the expression EXEMPT¹⁹ and not that of²⁰ 'prohibit'?²¹ — If 'prohibit' had been used it might have been assumed that the levirate marriage only was forbidden but that halizah²² must nevertheless be performed,²³ hence it was taught²⁴ [that halizah also need not be performed]. Let it then be stated,²⁵ 'She is forbidden to perform halizah!²⁶ — No harm, surely, is thereby done.²⁷ But why indeed should not [the expression of prohibition be applicable to halizah]? If you were to say that halizah is permissible, [one might say that] levirate marriage is also permitted!²⁸ — As a rival²⁹ is forbidden only where the commandment [of the levirate marriage] is applicable but is permitted where the commandment is not applicable,³⁰ it was therefore necessary to use the expression, EXEMPT.³¹

What justification is there for stating, FROM THE HALIZAH AND FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE when it would have been sufficient to state³² FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE only?³³ — If FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE only had been stated it might have been assumed that she must perform halizah³⁴ though she is exempt from the levirate marriage, hence it was taught³⁵ that whoever is subject³⁶ to the obligation of levirate marriage is also subject to halizah and whosoever is not subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage is not subject to halizah.

Let it [first] be stated,³⁷ FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE [and then] FROM THE HALIZAH,³⁸ or else only FROM THE HALIZAH?³⁹ — This Mishnah represents the view of Abba Saul who maintains that the commandment of halizah takes precedence over that of levirate marriage.⁴⁰

What [was intended] to be excluded [by the] numeral at the beginning⁴¹ and what [again was intended] to be excluded [by the] numeral at the end?⁴²

- (1) In respect to their exemption from the levirate marriage.
- (2) By deduction from the law of a wife's sister.
- (3) V. n. 2.
- (4) Others, 'Rab', who was a disciple of R. Isaac b. Abdimi, v. Tosaf. s.v. דאמר a.l.
- (5) הנה ('they' or 'theirs') in Lev. XVIII, 10 which deals according to Talmudic interpretation with the daughter of his son, or of his daughter that was born from an outraged woman, but not with the daughter herself.
- (6) Ibid. v. 17 which places a daughter on the same footing as a son's and a daughter's daughter. By this analogy the inference is arrived at that intercourse even with a daughter from an outraged woman is forbidden.
- (7) זמה ('lewdness' or 'wickedness'), ibid. where the penalty of burning is not mentioned.
- (8) Ibid. XX, 14 where the penalty of burning with fire is explicitly stated. Thus it is shown that the very foundation of the prohibition of sexual intercourse with a daughter from an outraged woman, as well as the death penalty of burning which the crime involves, are entirely dependent on inferences arrived at by exposition, v. Sanh. 51a.
- (9) Lit., 'let him teach'.
- (10) In the list in our Mishnah; since, as will be shewn infra, the exemption from levirate marriage in respect of all the others is derived by exposition from 'his wife's sister'.
- (11) 'His mother's sister', v. our Mishnah.
- (12) Which deals with the prohibitions through sisterhood.
- (13) Of the list.
- (14) His wife's.
- (15) Lit., 'his own'.
- (16) While a daughter-in-law is not consanguineous.
- (17) A daughter-in-law should, consequently, receive priority.
- (18) In our Mishnah.
- (19) Which might imply that the levirate marriage in these cases is not obligatory but optional.
- (20) v. supra p. 4, n. 13.
- (21) Since, in fact, no marriage with a deceased brother's widow is permitted whenever the obligation of the levirate marriage does not exist.
- (22) V. Glos.
- (23) Since a prohibition could not very well apply to halizah which is a harmless act, the expression of 'prohibit' in respect of halizah would have been interpreted as a 'prohibition to be married to anyone before halizah had been performed'.
- (24) By the use of the expression, 'exempt'.
- (25) In our Mishnah.
- (26) And, consequently, the expression 'prohibit' which is preferable to that of 'exempt' (v. supra notes 6 and 8) could well be used for the levirate marriage.
- (27) Lit., 'what does he do', i.e., there is no reason why halizah should be forbidden. Hence the expression of 'prohibit' could not properly be used.
- (28) The expression of 'prohibit' in relation to halizah could, consequently, properly have been used. Why then was 'exempt' preferred to 'prohibit'?
- (29) Of one's daughter, for instance.
- (30) If his daughter, e.g., had married one who was not his near of kin, her rival, on the death of her husband, is not forbidden to marry the father; v. infra 13a.
- (31) 'Prohibit' might have implied that a daughter, e.g., always causes her rival to be prohibited to her father whether the precept of the levirate marriage is applicable or not.

(32) Lit., 'let him teach'.

(33) It is obvious that if one is exempt from the levirate marriage there could be no question of being subject to halizah which is only the result of a refusal to contract the prescribed marriage.

(34) In order that the law of the levirate marriage be not entirely abrogated.

(35) By the use of the expression, exempt'.

(36) Lit., 'goes up' sc. to the gate, i.e., the court (cf. Deut. XXV, 7.)

(37) In our Mishnah.

(38) The marriage surely is of greater importance than the halizah, the latter being only an alternative of the former. V. Deut. XXV. 7.

(39) The exemption from the marriage being then self-evident.

(40) Infra 39b, 109a. And if only FROM THE HALIZAH had been stated, there would be no basis for this inference.

(41) Of our Mishnah, 'FIFTEEN'.

(42) Of the list; 'ALL THESE', implying the 'FIFTEEN' mentioned. If nothing were to be excluded, there would be no need for the addition of a cardinal at the beginning, or of a reference to it at the end of a list which presumably enumerated all possible cases.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 3b

— [They were intended] to exclude the respective rulings of Rab and R. Assi.¹ What, [however, do the numerals] exclude according to Rab and R. Assi? — If they share each other's views, one numeral would serve to exclude the rival of one who made a declaration of refusal,² and the other to exclude the rival of a wife whom [her husband] remarried after having divorced her.³ If they do not share the views of each other, [each would regard] one [numeral as serving] to exclude the ruling of his colleague,⁴ and the other numeral, as serving to exclude either the rival of one who made a declaration of refusal² or the rival of a wife whom [her husband] remarried after having divorced her.³

According to Rab and R. Assi these⁵ should have been enumerated in our Mishnah! — [This could not be done] because the law of the rival's rival⁶ is not applicable [to these cases].⁷

Whence is this law⁸ derived?⁹ — [From] what our Rabbis taught: And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her, to uncover her nakedness, 'aleha [beside her] in her lifetime,¹⁰ what need was there for the expression 'aleha'?¹¹ Because it was stated, Her husband's brother shall go in 'aleha [unto her],¹² it might have been imagined¹³ that Scripture¹⁴ speaks even of any of all the forbidden relatives enumerated in the Torah. Hence it was here¹⁰ stated, 'aleha'¹⁵ and elsewhere¹² it was also stated 'aleha'.¹⁶ Just as elsewhere it is in the case of a precept¹⁷ so here also it is in the case of a precept;¹⁷ and yet did not the All Merciful say, Thou shalt not take.¹⁸ We are thus in a position to know the law concerning herself;¹⁹ whence do we derive the law concerning her rival? — From the Scriptural expression, To be a rival to her.¹⁰ We have so far deduced the law concerning her rival only. Whence do we arrive at the law concerning her rival's rival? — From the fact that Scripture uses the expression li-zeror²⁰ and not that of la-zor.²¹ Thus we have deduced the law concerning a wife's sister, whence is the law concerning the other forbidden relatives to be inferred? — It can be answered: As a wife's sister is singled out in that she is a forbidden relative, the penalty for presumptuous intercourse with her is kareth²² and for unwitting intercourse a sin-offering, and she is forbidden to the levir, so also any woman who is a forbidden relative, and the penalty for presumptuous intercourse with whom is kareth²² and for unwitting intercourse a sin-offering, is forbidden to the levir. Now we know the law concerning themselves only;²³ whence is the law concerning their rivals deduced? — It may be answered: As a wife's sister is singled out in that she is a forbidden relative, kareth is incurred by presumptuous intercourse with her and a sin-offering for unwitting intercourse, and she is forbidden to the levir, and her rival is forbidden, so also in the case of any woman who is a forbidden relative, and for presumptuous intercourse with whom is incurred the penalty of kareth and for unwitting intercourse a sin-offering, and who is forbidden to the levir, her rival is forbidden. Hence have the Sages said: FIFTEEN [CATEGORIES OF] WOMEN EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS AND THEIR RIVALS' RIVALS, AND SO ON, AD INFINITUM, FROM THE HALIZAH AND FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. One might assume that the six more rigidly forbidden relatives²⁴ are also included in the ruling,²⁵ so that their rivals also²⁶ are forbidden,²⁷ hence it must be stated:²⁸ As a wife's sister is singled out in that she is a forbidden relative, kareth is incurred for presumptuous intercourse with her and a sin-offering for unwitting intercourse, she may be married to the other brothers, but is forbidden to the levir, and her rival is forbidden, so also in the case of any woman who is a forbidden relative, for presumptuous intercourse with whom is incurred the penalty of kareth and for unwitting intercourse a sin-offering, who may marry one of the other brothers, but is forbidden to the levir, her rival also is forbidden; excluded, however, are the six more rigidly forbidden relatives. Since they may not be married to the other brothers, their rivals are permitted; for [the law of] 'rival'²⁹ is applicable only [to widows] of a brother.³⁰

Thus we have deduced the prohibition. Whence, however, is the penalty inferred? — Scripture said, For whosoever shall do any of these abominations etc. [shall be cut off from among their people.]³¹

The reason,³² then, is because the All Merciful has written, 'aleha',³³ otherwise it would have been said that levirate marriage may be contracted with the wife's sister; what is the reason? Is it because we assume that a positive precept,³⁴ supersedes a negative precept?³⁵ Surely, it is possible that³⁶ the rule that a positive precept supersedes a negative precept applies only where the latter is a mere prohibition; does it, however, supersede a prohibition involving the penalty of kareth?³⁵ Furthermore, whence is it derived that it may supersede even a mere prohibition?

(1) Infra 11a and 12a.

(2) A minor who was one of the wives of a deceased childless brother, on declaring her refusal to marry the levir, exempts thereby her rivals from the levirate marriage but not from halizah.

(3) If one of the widows of a deceased brother was divorced once, and then remarried to him after she had married another man, she causes the exemption of her rivals from the levirate marriage, v. infra 11b. The halizah, however, must be performed.

(4) According to Rab that of R. Assi, and vice versa.

(5) The subjects of their respective rulings, i.e., the sotah (v. Glos.) and the barren wife, who, they maintain, infra 11a, 11b, exempt their rivals both from the levirate marriage and from halizah.

(6) V. our Mishnah.

(7) Since neither a sotah nor a barren woman may marry any one of the brothers.

(8) Of our Mishnah, that forbidden relatives as well as their rivals and rivals' rivals, ad infinitum, are exempt from the levirate marriage and from halizah.

(9) Lit., 'whence these words'.

(10) Lev. XVIII, 18.

(11) Which does not add any point to the law enunciated.

(12) Deut. XXV, 5.

(13) Lit., 'I hear'.

(14) Since it drew no distinction between a brother's wife who was a forbidden relative and one that was not forbidden.

(15) I.e., 'beside her'.

(16) I.e., 'unto her'. In both cases the respective terms 'beside her' and 'unto her' are expressed by the same Heb. word עִלְיָהּ.

(17) That of levirate marriage.

(18) Two sisters, Lev. XVIII, 18. The verse in Lev. thus means that the prohibition of marrying the wife's sister is in force even where she is his dead brother's widow, in regard to whom the precept, 'her husband's brother shall go in unto her', might apply.

(19) Lit., 'there is not to me but she', sc. the forbidden relative herself.

(20) לָרִוּר 'to be a rival',

(21) לָצַר 'to oppress', the longer form li-zeror implies many rivals, i.e., rivals of the rivals. The last question and answer are deleted by R. Tam and Nahmanides. Cf. הַגְּהוּת הַגֵּר §

(22) V. Glos.

(23) The forbidden relatives.

(24) Enumerated infra 13a.

(25) Relating to the other forbidden relatives.

(26) If they and their rivals were married to a stranger.

(27) To marry the man whom the forbidden relatives themselves are not allowed to marry.

(28) Lit., 'say'.

(29) I.e., the rival's exemption from the levirate marriage and halizah.

(30) Where one of the widows is a forbidden relative of one of the surviving brothers and no forbidden relative of the deceased. As the relative is forbidden to marry the brother, her rival also is forbidden to him as 'his brother's wife'. Where the relative, however, is married to a stranger, her rival is permitted to those to whom the relative herself is forbidden.

(31) Lev. XVIII, 29.

(32) Why a wife's sister is forbidden the levirate marriage.

(33) V. the texts from Lev. and Deut. and the analogy supra.

(34) The commandment of the levirate marriage.

(35) The prohibition to marry one's wife's sister.

(36) Lit., 'say'.

— Because¹ it is written, Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff . . .² Thou shalt make thee twisted cords,³ and R. Eleazar said,⁴ 'Whence is the rule of proximity [of texts] derived from the Torah?'⁵ As it is said, They are established⁶ for ever and ever, they are done in truth and uprightness.⁷ Furthermore, R. Shesheth stated⁸ in the name of R. Eleazar who stated it in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah: Whence is it proved that a sister-in-law, who falls to the lot of a levir who is afflicted with boils, is not muzzled?⁹ From the Biblical text, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn,¹⁰ and in close proximity to it is written If brethren dwell together.¹¹ Furthermore R. Joseph said: Even he who does not base interpretations on the proximity [of Biblical texts] anywhere else does base them [on the texts] in Deuteronomy,¹² for R. Judah who does not elsewhere base any interpretations [on textual proximity], bases such interpretations on the Deuteronomic text.¹³ And whence is it proved that elsewhere he¹⁴ does not advance such interpretation?¹⁵ — From what has been taught: Ben 'Azzai said, It was stated, Thou shall not suffer a sorceress to live,¹⁶ and it is also stated, Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death;¹⁷ one subject was placed near the other to indicate that as the man who lies with a beast is to suffer the death penalty of stoning so also is a sorceress to suffer the death penalty of stoning. Said R. Judah to him: Shall we, because one subject was placed in close proximity to the other, lead out a person¹⁸ to be stoned? In truth¹⁹ [the penalty of the sorceress is derived from the following]: The necromancer and the charmer were included among the sorcerers; why then were they mentioned separately?²⁰ In order that the others may be compared to them, and to tell you that as the necromancer and the charmer are subject to the death penalty of stoning,²⁰ so is a sorceress also subject to the penalty of stoning.

And whence is it proved that in Deuteronomy he²¹ does advance such interpretation?¹⁵ — From what we learned: A man may marry a woman who has been outraged or seduced by his father or his son. R. Judah prohibits in the case of a woman outraged or seduced by one's father.²² And in connection with this, R. Giddal said in the name of Rab: What is R. Judah's reason? Because it is written, A man shall not take his father's wife, and shall not uncover his father's skirt,²³ the 'skirt' which his father saw he shall not uncover. And whence is it inferred that this is written with reference to an outraged woman? — From the preceding section of the text where it is written, Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver²⁴ near which it is stated, A man shall not take etc.²⁵ And the Rabbis?²⁶ — If one text had occurred in close proximity to the other the exposition would have been justified;²⁷ now, however, that it does not occur in close proximity²⁸ [it must be concluded that] the context speaks of a woman who is awaiting the decision of the levir²⁹ and that, [in marrying such a woman, a son]³⁰ transgresses two negative precepts.³¹

And what is the reason why [R. Judah] derives laws [from the proximity of texts] in Deuteronomy? — If you wish I might say: Because [there the deduction]³² is obvious; and if you prefer I might say: Because [there the text] is superfluous.³³ 'If you prefer I might say: Because [there the deduction] is obvious', for, otherwise,³⁴ the All Merciful should have written the prohibition in the section of forbidden relatives. 'And if you prefer I might say: Because [there the text] is superfluous', for otherwise³⁵ the All Merciful should have written, A man shall not take his father's wife.²⁵ what need was there for adding,³⁶ And shall not uncover his father's skirt?²⁵

(7) Ps. CXI, 8. The proximity of the two texts (Deut. XXII, 11 and 12) may consequently be taken to indicate that though the wearing of mingled stuff (linen and wool) is forbidden in ordinary cases (Deut. XXII, 11) it is nevertheless permitted in the case of the performance of a positive precept such as that of the making of 'twisted cords' or zizith (v. Glos.) on the four corners of a garment (ibid. v. 12).

(8) Mak. 23a.

(9) I.e., she is not prevented from objecting to the levirate marriage, and is entitled to halizah. 'Muzzled' (rt. מִזְמָז) is taken from Deut. XXV, 4 from which this law is derived.

(11) Ibid. v. 5, forming the introduction to the law of halizah. Thus it has been shewn that a law may be based on the proximity of Biblical texts, and this confirms the conclusion in respect of 'mingled stuff' in zizith (v. Deut. XXII, 11).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 4b

Hence it must be concluded that the text was meant to provide a superfluous text.¹

Similarly in the case of zizith,² if you wish I might reply:³ Because [there⁴ the deduction] is obvious. And if you prefer I might reply:⁵ Because [there⁶ the text] is superfluous.⁷ 'If you prefer I might say: Because [there the deduction] is obvious', for otherwise,⁸ the All Merciful should have written [the precept] in the section of zizith;⁹ with what other practical rule in view has he written it here?¹⁰ 'And if you prefer, I might reply: Because [there the text] is superfluous', for observe: It is written, Neither shall there come upon thee a garment of two kinds of stuff mingled together.¹¹ What need then was there for stating, Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff?¹² Hence it must be concluded that the object was to provide a superfluous text.¹³

But [surely] both these texts¹⁴ are required? For if the All Merciful had only written, Neither shall there come upon thee¹⁵ it might have been assumed that all kinds of 'putting on' were forbidden by the All Merciful, even that of clothes dealers,¹⁶ hence the All Merciful, has written, Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff,¹⁷ [showing that the 'putting on' must be] of the same nature as that of wearing for personal comfort. And if the All Merciful had only written, Thou shalt not wear¹⁸ it might have been assumed that only wear [is forbidden] because the pleasure derived therefrom is great, but not mere 'putting on', hence the All Merciful has written, Neither shall there come upon thee!¹⁹ — If so,²⁰ the All Merciful should have written, 'Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff' what need was there for adding, 'Wool and linen'? For²¹ observe: It is written, Neither shall there come upon thee a garment of two kinds of stuff mingled together,¹⁵ and in connection with this a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: Whereas garments generally²² were mentioned in the Torah, and in one particular case²³ Scripture specified wool and linen,²³ all must consequently be understood as having been made of wool and linen, what need, then, was there for the All Merciful's specific mention of wool and linen? Consequently it must be concluded that its object was to provide a superfluous text.²⁴

But the text²⁵ is still required [for another purpose]! For it might have been assumed [that the limitation²⁶ applies] only to 'putting on', where the benefit is not great, but that in respect of wear, the benefit from which is great, any two kinds were forbidden by the All Merciful, hence has the All Merciful written, 'wool and linen'!²⁷ — If so, Scripture should have omitted it altogether²⁸ and [the law²⁹ would have been] deduced [by analogy between] 'mingled stuff'³⁰ and 'mingled stuff'³¹ [the latter of which occurs in connection with the law] of 'putting on'.³²

As to the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael, is the reason [why 'mingled stuff' is permitted in zizith] because the All Merciful has written 'wool and linen', but if He had not done so, would it have been assumed that the All Merciful had forbidden two kinds of stuff in the zizith? But, surely. it is written, And they shall make them fringes in the corners of their garments³³ and a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael [taught]: Wherever 'garment' [is written] such as is made of wool or flax [is meant], and yet the All Merciful said that in them 'purple' shall be inserted, and purple, surely, is wool. And whence is it deduced that purple is wool? Since linen³⁴ is flax, purple must be wool.³⁵ —

[The text] was necessary; for it might have been assumed [that the interpretation is] according to Raba. For Raba pointed out a contradiction: It is written, the corner,³⁶ [which implies that the fringes must be of the same] kind of [material as that of the] corner,³⁷ but then it is also written, wool and linen.³⁸ How then [are these texts to be reconciled?] Wool and linen discharge [the obligation to provide fringes] both for a garment of the same, as well as of a different kind of material, while other kinds [of material]³⁹ discharge [the obligation for a garment made] of the same kind [of material] but not for one made of a different kind [of material].⁴⁰

But the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael,⁴¹ surely, does not hold the same view as Raba!⁴² — [The text]⁴³ is still necessary; for it might have been assumed that Raba's line of argument⁴⁴ should be followed: 'The corner' [implies that the fringes must be made of the same] kind of [material as the] corner, and that what the All Merciful meant was this: 'Make wool [fringes] for wool [garments] and linen ones for linen; only when you make wool fringes for wool garments you must dye them'; but no wool fringes may be made for linen or linen fringes for wool, hence the All Merciful has written 'wool and linen' [to indicate] that even wool fringes [may be] made for linen garments or linen fringes for woollen garments.⁴⁵

(19) Since both texts, then, are required for the purpose mentioned, how could they be employed for the deduction of a new law?

(20) That the texts were required only for the purpose mentioned.

(21) Should it be suggested that the text was required to indicate that the 'mingled stuff' forbidden was that of wool and linen.

(22) Without specifying the material they are made of.

(25) 'Wool and linen' (Deut. XXII, 11).

(26) Of the materials to wool and linen.

(27) How, then, could this text which is required for another purpose be expounded on the basis of semukim?

(28) Lit., 'kept silence from it'.

(29) Which has just been enunciated, i.e., that only wool and linen are forbidden.

(30) Deut. XXII, 11.

(31) Lev. XIX, 19.

(32) As the latter applies to wool and linen only, so also the former.

(33) Num. XV, 38.

(34) In the description of the materials of the High Priests' garments (Ex. XXXIX, 1ff).

(35) As the garments were either of wool or flax, and linen (flax) was specified in the case of one, all the others must have been wool. Now since it has been shewn that purple is wool, it obviously follows that woollen zizith or fringes are permissible in a garment of flax. What was the need, then, for a specific text to prove the permissibility of mingling wool and flax in zizith?

(36) Num. XV, 38.

(37) I.e., if the material of the corner is wool the fringes must be wool; if of flax the fringes must be of flax.

(38) Cf. Deut. XXII, 11f: Mingled stuff, wool and linen thou shalt make the twisted cords, which shews that the fringes may be made either of wool or of flax whatever the material of the corner might be.

(39) Silk for instance.

(40) So also according to the Tanna of R. Ishmael's school, (as will be explained in the Gemara anon) if Scripture had not specified 'wool and linen' it might have been assumed that in a woollen garment the fringes must be made of wool while in a garment of flax they must be made of flax, hence wool and linen were specified to shew on the basis of semukim that mingled stuffs also are allowed in zizith.

(41) At the moment it is assumed that the suggestion is that he is in agreement with Raba's argument in all respects.

(42) For, according to him, since 'garment' denotes only such as is made of wool and linen, garments made of other materials require no fringes (zizith). What need, then, was there for the expression of wool and linen to differentiate these from other materials?

(43) Wool and linen.

(44) Though not his view, applying his method of reasoning only in regard to a garment made of wool or linen.

(45) I.e., that mingled stuffs are permissible in the performance of the precept of zizith.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 5a

This¹ is satisfactory according to the view of the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael;² as to the Rabbis,³ however, how do they arrive at the deduction?⁴ — They derive it from his head;⁵ for it was taught: [Scripture stated], 'His head';⁵ what need was there for it?⁶ — Whereas it has been stated, Ye shall not round the corners of your head,⁷ one might infer that [this law⁸ applies to] a leper also, hence it was explicitly stated, his head;⁹ and this Tanna is of the opinion that rounding all the head is also regarded as 'rounding'.¹⁰ This [conclusion, however,] may be refuted: The reason why the prohibition of¹¹ 'rounding' [may be superseded is] because it is not applicable to everybody!¹² — But [the inference] is derived from his beard;¹³ as it was taught: 'His beard';¹³ what need was there for stating it?¹⁴ — Whereas it was said, Neither shall they shave off the corners of their beard,¹⁵ one might infer that this prohibition applies also to a leprous priest,¹⁶ hence it was explicitly stated, 'his beard'.¹⁷ And since there is no object in applying it to a prohibition which is not incumbent upon everybody,¹⁸ let it be applied to a prohibition which is incumbent upon all.¹⁹ But this²⁰ is still required [for its own context]! For since it might have been assumed that as priests are different from [other people]. Scripture having imposed upon them additional commandments, and so even a prohibition which does not apply to everybody is not superseded in their case; [therefore] it was necessary to teach us that it does supersede.²¹ — In truth the inference comes from 'his head' [in the manner deduced by] the following²² Tanna. For It was taught: His head:²³ what need was there for mentioning it?²⁴ Whereas Scripture had stated, There shall no razor come upon his head,²⁵ one might infer that the same prohibition is applicable to a leprous nazirite²⁶ also, hence it was explicitly stated, 'his head'.²⁷ This,²⁸ however, may be refuted: The reason why a [leprous] nazirite [may shave his head] is because he is also in a position to obtain absolution.²⁹ For, were not this the reason,³⁰ what then of the accepted rule,³¹ that no positive precept may supersede a negative and positive precept combined; why not deduce the contrary from the law³² of the [leprous] nazirite?³³ Consequently, [it must be conceded that] the reason why no deduction may be made [from the law of the nazirite is] because it may be refuted [on the grounds] that in his case absolution is possible; so here also the refutation may be advanced, 'Since in his case absolution is possible'!³⁴ — The deduction, in fact, is made

- (1) The deduction from semukim that a positive precept supersedes a negative one.
- (2) Since on the lines of his interpretation the text, 'wool and linen' is superfluous and consequently free for the deduction mentioned.
- (3) Who do not interpret 'garment' as denoting such as is of wool and flax.
- (4) The text, 'wool and linen', being required for the completion of the plain meaning of the text, there remains no superfluous expression for the deduction. V. supra n. 2.
- (5) Lev. XIV, 9, dealing with the purification of the leper.
- (6) It was previously stated, and shave off all his hair (Lev. XIV, 8) which obviously includes that of the head.
- (7) Lev. XIX. 27.
- (8) The prohibition to round the corners of the head.
- (9) Indicating that, despite the general prohibition, it is the leper's duty to round his head.
- (10) Though the text speaks of rounding the corners. Such a rounding then, though generally forbidden, is in the case of a leper, permitted, because Scripture explicitly stated 'shave all the hair of his head' (Lev. XIV, 9). Thus it has been proved that the positive precept of the shaving of the leper supersedes the prohibition of rounding off one's head. Similarly, in the case of the levirate marriage, it might have been assumed that the positive precept of marrying the deceased brother's widow supersedes the prohibition of marrying a wife's sister; hence the necessity for a special text (v. supra 3b end and p. 10, n. 7) to prove that it does not.
- (11) Lit., 'what as to the negative (command)'.
- (12) Lit., 'equal in all'; women being exempt. (V. Kid. 35b). The prohibition of the marriage of a wife's sister, however, is applicable to the man and to the woman, the brother-in-law as well as the sister-in-law.
- (13) Which also occurs in the regulations for the purification of the leper. (V. Lev. XIV, 9).
- (14) Seeing that it was previously mentioned (Lev. XIV, 8) that the leper must 'shave off all his hair', which obviously includes that of his beard.
- (15) Lev. XXI, 5.
- (16) The prohibition of shaving the corners of one's head having been addressed to the priests. V. Lev. XXI, 1ff.
- (17) Indicating that in the case of a leprous priest the precept of shaving supersedes the prohibition of 'shaving'.
- (18) That such a prohibition is superseded by a positive precept having been deduced supra from 'his head'.
- (19) Thus it has been proved that a positive precept supersedes any prohibition even if the latter is generally applicable. Marriage between a levir and his deceased brother's widow who is his wife's sister might, consequently, have been assumed to be permitted had not an explicit text pointed to its prohibition.
- (20) The text, 'his beard'.
- (21) How, then, can the same text which is required for the purpose mentioned also be used for a general deduction.
- (22) Lit., '(manner) of that'.
- (23) Lev. XIV, 9.
- (24) Cf. supra, p. 16, n. 7.
- (25) Num. VI, 5 dealing with the laws of the nazirite.
- (26) So Rashal. Cur. edd. read, 'leper and nazirite'.
- (27) Thus it is proved that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition. Cf. supra, note 7.
- (28) The deduction from the nazirite.
- (29) Heb. she'elah שאלה 'request', i.e., the nazirite may request a qualified person to disallow his vow and thus avoid the prohibition of shaving.
- (30) Lit., 'if you will not say so'.
- (31) Lit., 'that which is established for us'.
- (32) Lit., 'let it be deduced'.
- (33) The shaving of a nazirite's head is forbidden (a) by the precept that he must grow his hair long and (b) by the prohibition of allowing a razor to come upon his head.
- (34) Whence, then, is it proved that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition?

from the first cited text:¹ Since² Scripture could have used the expression, Thou shalt make thee fringes,³ what need was there for that of 'twisted cords'? Consequently it must have been intended for the purpose of allowing that text to be used for the deduction.⁴ But this⁵ is required for the determination of the number [of threads, thus]:⁶ ‘Twisted cord’ implies two threads,⁷ [and so] ‘twisted cords’⁸ implies four threads, therefore,⁹ one twisted cord is to be made [of the four] and from the middle of it separate threads¹⁰ are to hang down!¹¹ — If so,¹² Scripture should have stated, Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff wool and linen:¹³ what need was there to add ‘together’?¹³ Consequently it must have been intended for the purpose of allowing a free text for the deduction.¹⁴ But this text too¹⁵ is required for the deduction that two stitches¹⁶ form a combination¹⁷ and that one stitch does not! — If so, the All Merciful should have written, Thou shalt not wear wool and linen together; what need was there for inserting ‘mingled stuff’? Hence it must be concluded that the purpose was to allow a free text for deduction.¹⁸ But is not this text¹⁹ still required [for the deduction that ‘mingled stuff’²⁰ is not forbidden] unless it was hackled, spun and twisted?²¹ — But [the fact is that] all this is deduced from the expression of ‘mingled stuff’.²²

So far it has been shewn that a positive precept supersedes a mere prohibition,²³ where, however, do we find that it supersedes also a prohibition involving kareth,²⁴ and that in consequence [the explicit expression] ‘aleha’²⁵ should be required to forbid it?²⁶ And if it be replied that this²⁶ might be deduced from circumcision,²⁷ [it may be retorted]: Circumcision stands in a different category,²⁸ for concerning it thirteen covenants²⁹ were made!³⁰ From the paschal lamb?³¹ — The paschal lamb also stands in a different category³² since it too involves kareth!³⁰ From the daily offering?³¹ — The daily offering also stands in a different category³³ since it is also a regular [offering]!³⁰ [Now though] it³⁴ cannot be derived from one³⁵ it might be derived from two. From which shall it be derived? [If the reply is]: Let it be derived from circumcision and the paschal lamb, [it may be retorted]: These also involve kareth.³⁶ From the paschal lamb and the daily offering? — Both are also intended for the Most High.³⁷ From circumcision and the daily offering? — Both were also in force before the giving of the law,³⁸ this being according to the view of him who holds that the burnt-offering which Israel offered in the wilderness was the daily burnt-offering.³⁹ Nor [can the derivation be made] from all of them, since they were all in force before the giving of the law.⁴⁰

But [this is the reason for] the need of a special text.⁴¹ It might have been assumed⁴² that this⁴³ should be derived from the precept of honouring one's father and mother; for it was taught: Since one might have assumed that the honouring of one's father and mother should supersede the Sabbath, it was explicitly stated, Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, and ye shall keep My Sabbaths,⁴⁴ it is the duty of all of you⁴⁵ to honour Me. Now is not the case in point one where the parent said to him, ‘Slaughter for me’,⁴⁶ or ‘Cook for me’,⁴⁶ and the reason [why the parent must not be obeyed is] because the All Merciful has written, ‘Ye shall keep my Sabbaths’,⁴⁴ but had that not been so⁴⁷ it⁴⁸ would have superseded?⁴⁹ — No;

(1) ‘Mingled stuff’ in the case of zizith. (V. Deut. XXII, 11, 12 and supra p. 15, n. 3).

(2) Lit., ‘if so’, i.e., if according to the Rabbis the expression, ‘wool and linen’, is required for its own context and that text, therefore, is not available for deduction.

(3) The expression used in Num. XV, 38 in the section dealing with the precept of the fringes.

(4) That a positive precept supersedes a prohibition. Cf. supra, p. 10, n. 13.

(5) The expression of ‘twisted cords’, גְּדִילִים, Deut. XXII, 12.

(6) In the fringes.

(7) The twisted cord cannot be made of less than two threads.

(8) The plural, i.e., twice two.

(9) To harmonize this text (Deut. XXII, 12) which implies twisted cords, with that of Num. XV, 38, and that they put with the fringe of each corner a thread of blue, which implies only twisted threads.

(10) The four threads are inserted into the corner of the garment and, having been folded to form a fringe of eight threads, they are joined (by winding one of the threads round the others) into one twisted cord which extends over a section of length and is then separated again into eight separate threads.

(11) Men. 39b. Now, since the expression, ‘twisted cords’, is required for the determination of the number of the threads, how could the Rabbis deduce from it the law of 'mingled stuff' in the fringes?

(12) That the law of 'mingled stuff' in the fringes was not to be deduced from the text cited.

(21) An etymological explanation of, or a play upon, the words 'mingled stuff' שעטנו, in Deut. XXII, 11. שעטנו is assumed to be an abbreviation of שוע טוי ונוז.

(22) The use of the peculiar expression, שעטנו, and not the usual כלאים, implies both (a) the deduction mentioned, (v. previous note) and (b) the deduction that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition (v. supra p. 10, n. 13).

(28) Lit., 'what in respect of circum-cision'.

(29) The expression 'covenant' (in various grammatical forms) occurs thirteen times in Gen. XVII, the section dealing with the precept of circumcision, v. Ned. 31b.

(30) Hence it may also supersede the Sabbath. It supplies, however, no proof that a positive precept which is not so stringent (such as the marriage with the levir) also supersedes a prohibition involving kareth.

(31) The slaughtering of which (a positive precept) supersedes the Sabbath though slaughtering is manual work which is forbidden on the Sabbath under the penalty of kareth.

this is a case¹ of ass driving.² And [you say that] it does not supersede³ even in such a case?⁴ But then what of the generally accepted rule that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition. Should it not be inferred from this case that it does not supersede!⁵ And if it be replied that the prohibitions of the Sabbath are different⁶ because they are more stringent,⁷ surely the following Tanna, [it may be pointed out,] speaks of prohibitions generally⁸ yet no one advances any objection.⁹ For it was taught: Since it might have been assumed that if his father had said to him,¹⁰ ‘Defile yourself’,¹¹ or if he said to him, ‘Do not restore,’¹² he must obey him, it was explicitly stated, Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father, and ye shall keep my Sabbaths,¹³ it is the duty of all of you to honour Me!¹⁴ — The real reason¹⁵ is because this objection may be advanced: Those¹⁶ are in a different category¹⁷ since they are also essentials in the execution of the precept.¹⁸

But [the reason¹⁹ is because] it might have been assumed that this²⁰ should be derived from the precept of the building of the Sanctuary. For it was taught: Since it might have been assumed that the building of the Sanctuary should supersede the Sabbath, it was explicitly stated, Ye shall keep My Sabbaths, and reverence My Sanctuary;²¹ it is the duty of all of you to honour Me. Now is not the case in point one of [a father's order to his son to] build or to demolish,²² and yet the reason [why it does not supersede the Sabbath is] because the All Merciful has written, ‘Ye shall keep My Sabbaths’,²³ but had that not been written it would have superseded?²⁴ — No; the case in point is one of ass driving.²⁵

And [you say] that it²⁶ does not supersede a prohibition even in such a case?²⁷ But what of the generally accepted rule that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition? Should we not infer from this case that it does not supersede! And if it be replied that the prohibitions of the Sabbath are different²⁸ because they are of a more stringent nature,²⁹ surely the following Tanna [it may be pointed out] speaks of prohibitions generally³⁰ yet no one advances any refutation.³¹ For it was taught: Since it might have been assumed that if his father had said to him,³² ‘Defile yourself’,³³ or if he said to him, ‘Do not restore,’³⁴ he must obey him, hence it was explicitly stated, Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father etc.,³⁵ it is the duty of all of you to honour Me!³⁶ — The true reason³⁷ is because this objection may be advanced: Those³⁸ are in a different category³⁹ since they are also essentials in the execution of the precept.⁴⁰ [But the law relating to] essentials in the execution of a precept could be derived from the previously cited text!⁴¹ — That is so indeed. What need, then, was there for the text, Ye shall keep My Sabbaths, and reverence My Sanctuary?²³ — It is required for the following deduction:⁴² As it might have been imagined that a man should reverence the Sanctuary, it was explicitly stated in the Scriptures, Ye shall keep My Sabbaths, and reverence My Sanctuary;²³ the expression of ‘keeping’ was used in relation to the Sabbath and [in the same verse] that of ‘reverence’ in relation to the Sanctuary [in order that the following comparison may be made]: As in the case of ‘keeping’ used in relation to the Sabbath

(1) Lit., ‘negative precept’.

(2) I.e., where a father ordered his son to desecrate the Sabbath by driving an ass; a prohibition which, unlike slaughtering or cooking, does not involve the penalty of kareth. V. Shab. 154a.

(3) Lit., ‘and even thus’, sc. even the mere prohibition of ass driving.

(4) A mere prohibition not involving the penalty of kareth.

(5) Even a mere prohibition which does not involve the penalty of kareth.

(6) From other prohibitions.

(7) Since the infringement of any one of the laws of the Sabbath is regarded as the sin of idolatry (v. ‘Er. 69b), even a mere prohibition which does not involve kareth, cannot be superseded by a positive precept.

(8) Lit., ‘stands in the world’, i.e., he compares with the prohibitions of the Sabbath others which have no connection with it.

(9) That the prohibitions of the Sabbath being more stringent than others should not be compared with them.

- (10) His son who was a priest.
- (11) For the dead, which is forbidden to a priest. V. Lev. XXI, 1ff.
- (12) A lost animal. V. Deut. XXII, 1.
- (13) Lev. XIX, 3.
- (14) Thus it has been shewn that prohibitions generally may be compared with those of the Sabbath. The suggestion, therefore, that the parents' order supra concerned the performance of the act of ass driving is untenable. If, consequently, the order must have consisted of a request to perform an act involving the penalty of kareth, that case well supplies a satisfactory answer to the question (supra 5b) as to what need was there for the text, 'aleha', in Lev. XVIII, 18.
- (15) Why no satisfactory reply to the question, what need is there for the text 'aleha', may be obtained from the precept of honouring one's parents.
- (16) A father's orders to his son to slaughter or to cook on the Sabbath.
- (17) From such a precept as the levirate marriage.
- (18) Lit., 'it is a preparation of the precept'. The precept of honouring a father cannot possibly be performed by the son unless he actually executes the act of slaughtering or of cooking, which he has been ordered by his father to do, so that the fulfilment of the positive precept (honouring one's parents) is entirely dependent on its superseding the prohibition (that, e.g., of cooking). Hence it was necessary to have an explicit text to indicate that, even in such a case, a positive precept does not supersede a prohibition. In the case of the levirate marriage, however, the infringement of the prohibition is not absolutely essential to the fulfilment of the precept, since, instead of the marriage, halizah may be arranged, and the question remains, what need is there of the verse 'aleha'.
- (19) Why the text, 'aleha' (Lev. XVIII, 18) was needed to indicate that wherever the deceased childless brother's widow was the living brother's forbidden relative no levirate marriage must take place.
- (20) That a positive precept supersedes a prohibition involving kareth and consequently that the levirate marriage may take place even in such a case (v. previous note).
- (21) Lev. XIX, 30.
- (22) Actions which are among the principal classes of labour that are forbidden on the Sabbath under the penalty of kareth.
- (23) Lev. XIX, 30.
- (24) Thus it follows that a positive precept does supersede a prohibition even though the latter involves kareth.
- (25) Which does not involve kareth.
- (26) A positive precept.
- (27) Which does not involve kareth.
- (28) From other prohibitions.
- (29) Cf. supra p. 21, n. 13.
- (30) Cf. supra p. 21, n. 14.
- (31) Cf. supra p. 21, n. 15.
- (32) His son who was a priest.
- (33) Cf. supra p. 21, n. 17.
- (34) Cf. supra p. 21, n. 18.
- (35) Lev. XIX, 3.
- (36) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 2.
- (37) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 3.
- (38) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 4.
- (39) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 5.
- (40) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 6.
- (41) Lit., 'from there', from Lev. XIX, 3, and this superfluous text serves to extend the principle of a positive precept superseding a negative precept involving kareth to a case such as levirate marriage. Hence the need of the text 'aleha'.
- (42) Lit., 'for as it was taught'.

one does not reverence the Sabbath but Him who ordered the observance of the Sabbath, so in the case of 'reverence' used in relation to the Sanctuary, one is not to reverence the Sanctuary but Him who gave the commandment concerning the Sanctuary. And what is regarded as the ‘reverence of the Sanctuary’? — A man shall not enter the Temple mount¹ with his stick, shoes or money bag² or with dust upon his feet, nor may he use it for making a short cut,³ and spitting [is there forbidden] by inference a minori ad majus.⁴ This, however, might apply⁵ only to the time when the Sanctuary was in existence; whence is it deduced that the same holds good of the time when the Sanctuary no longer exists? It was expressly stated in Scripture, Ye shall keep My Sabbaths, and reverence My Sanctuary;⁶ as the ‘keeping’ that was used in relation to the Sabbath holds good forever, so also the ‘reverence’ used in relation to the Sanctuary must hold good forever.⁷

Really [the reason⁸ is because] it might have been assumed that this⁹ should be derived from the prohibition of kindling a fire [on the Sabbath]. For a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: Wherefore was it stated, Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations?¹⁰ ‘Wherefore ‘was it stated’!¹¹ Surely if one is to follow R. Jose, it was to intimate that [kindling a fire on the Sabbath is] a prohibition only;¹² and, if one is to follow R. Nathan, it was to intimate that even a single transgression involves one in the prescribed penalties;¹³ for it was taught: ‘The prohibition of kindling a fire [on the Sabbath] was mentioned separately¹⁴ in order to [indicate that its transgression is] a prohibition only;¹⁵ so R. Jose, while R. Nathan maintains that the intention was to intimate that even a single transgression involves the offender in the prescribed penalties’!¹³ And Raba explained that the Tanna¹⁶ found difficult the expression of habitations,¹⁷ [arguing thus]: What need was there for Scripture to state ‘habitations’? [Is not this¹⁸ obvious?] For consider: The observance of the Sabbath is a personal obligation, and any personal obligation is valid both in the Land [of Israel] and outside the land;¹⁹ what need, then, was there for the All Merciful to write it²⁰ in connection with the Sabbath? This was explained by a disciple in the name of R. Ishmael: Whereas it was stated in the Scriptures, And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be put to death,²¹ one might infer [that the death penalty may be executed] both on week-days and on the Sabbath and, as regards the application of the text, Everyone that profaneth it²² shall surely be put to death,²³ this might be said to refer to the several kinds of labour other than the execution of a judicial death sentence; or again it might be inferred²⁴ that it²⁵ refers even to a judicial execution of a death sentence and, as regards the application of He shall surely be put to death²³ [this might be said to refer] to week-days but not to the Sabbath; or again it might be thought²⁶ to apply also to the Sabbath; hence it was expressly stated, Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations,²⁷ and further on it is stated, And these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you throughout your generations in all your habitations;²⁸ as the expression of ‘habitations’ mentioned below²⁸ refers to the Beth din, so the expression ‘habitations’ mentioned here²⁷ refers also to the Beth din, and concerning this the All Merciful said, ‘Ye shall kindle no fire’.²⁹ Now, are we not to assume this statement to be in agreement with the view³⁰ of R. Nathan who holds that the object was to intimate that even a single transgression involves the offender in the prescribed penalties,³¹ and the reason³² is because the All Merciful has written, Ye shall kindle no fire,²⁷ but had that not been the case it would have superseded the [Sabbath]!³³ — No; this may be according to R. Jose.³⁴

Granted, however, [that it is according to the view of] R. Jose, might it not be suggested that R. Jose said that ‘kindling a fire [on the Sabbath] is mentioned separately in order to indicate that it is a mere prohibition’ [in the case only of] ordinary burning; the burning by the Beth din,³⁵ [however, is surely a case of] boiling of the metal bar³⁶ concerning which R. Shesheth said that there is no difference between the boiling of a metal bar and the boiling of dyes?³⁷ — R. Shimi b. Ashi replied: This Tanna³⁸ [requires Scriptural texts] not because elsewhere he holds that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition, but because this³⁹ might have been obtained by inference a minori ad majus; and it is this that he meant to say: ‘As regards the application of the text, Every one that profaneth it⁴⁰ shall surely be put to death,⁴¹ it might have been said to apply to the several kinds of labour other than that of the execution of a judicial death sentence, but that a judicial death sentence does supersede the Sabbath, by inference a minori ad majus:

- (9) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 8.
- (10) Ex. XXXV, 3.
- (11) The prohibition of kindling a fire, surely, is included in the general prohibition of labour on Sabbath.
- (12) I.e., only a negative commandment the transgression of which does not, like the other Sabbath offences, involve the penalties of stoning or kareth. The former, if the offender was warned beforehand of the consequence of his offence, the latter, where no such warning had been given.
- (13) Lit., 'to divide', i.e., one of the thirty-nine kinds of labour that are forbidden on the Sabbath was singly specified in order to indicate that to incur the prescribed penalties it is not necessary to commit all the thirty-nine transgressions (as the one general, all-embracing prohibition of about might have seemed to imply). The mention of one prohibition (kindling of fire) separately breaks up, so to speak, (divides), all the others into single units, indicating that, as in its own case, so in that of all the others first mentioned together with it, every single transgression involves the penalty of stoning, kareth, or a sin-offering.

- (26) Lit., 'or it is not but'.
- (27) Ex. XXXV, 3.
- (28) Num. XXXV, 29, referring to the death penalties of murderers.
- (29) I.e., execute no death penalty of burning on the Sabbath. The death penalty of 'burning' was executed by pouring molten lead through the condemned man's mouth into his body, thus burning his internal organs.
- (30) Lit., 'what, (is it) not?'
- (31) Of death or kareth. V. supra p. 25, n. 1.
- (32) Why the death penalty of burning — a kind of work — which according to R. Nathan would involve kareth must not be executed on the Sabbath.
- (33) Though the penalties involved include that of kareth. Thus it follows that a positive precept may supersede even such a prohibition. So also in the case of the levirate marriage it might have been assumed that the precept of marrying one's deceased childless brother's widow supersedes the prohibition of marrying a consanguineous relative despite the fact that such a transgression involves elsewhere the penalty of kareth; hence it was necessary for Scripture to add, 'aleha' (Lev. XVIII, 18), to indicate that even a levirate marriage is in such a case forbidden. (V. supra 3b and 5b).

principal kinds of labour which are forbidden on the Sabbath (v. Shab. 73a) and involve the penalty of kareth. Cf. supra p. 26, n. 8.

(38) Who deduced from Scriptural texts that a judicial death sentence may not be executed on the Sabbath.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 7a

If the Temple service which is of high importance and supersedes the Sabbath¹ is itself superseded by [a death sentence for] murder, as it is said, Thou shalt take him from Mine altar, that he may die,² how much more reasonable is it that the Sabbath which is superseded by the Temple service should be superseded by [a death sentence for] murder'. How, then, could it be said, 'Or it might rather [etc.]'?³ — He means this: The burial of a meth mizwah⁴ might prove [the contrary], since it supersedes the Temple service⁵ and does not nevertheless supersede the Sabbath.⁶ Then⁷ he argued: It might be inferred a minori ad majus that the burial of a meth mizwah should supersede the Sabbath, [thus]: If the Temple service which supersedes the Sabbath is superseded by the burial of a meth mizwah, by deduction from Or for his sister,⁸ how much more should the Sabbath which is superseded by the Temple service be superseded by the burial of a meth mizwah; hence it was explicitly stated, Ye shall kindle no fire.⁹ [etc].¹⁰

According to our previous assumption, however, that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition, what is meant by, 'Or it might rather [etc.]'?¹¹ — It is this that was meant: 'As regards the application of the text, Every one that profaneth it¹² shall surely be put to death,¹³ it might have been said to apply to the several kinds of labour other than the execution of a judicial death sentence, but that a judicial death sentence does supersede the Sabbath, for a positive precept¹⁴ supersedes the prohibition. Then¹⁵ he argued: It might be suggested that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition in the case of a mere prohibition only; has it, however, been heard to supersede a prohibition which involves kareth? Then he concluded: 'Even where¹⁶ a positive precept supersedes a prohibition, is not the prohibition of a more serious nature than the precept?'¹⁷ And yet the positive precept comes and supersedes the prohibited; on what grounds, then, should a distinction be made between a minor and a major prohibition?¹⁸ Hence it was explicitly stated, Ye shall kindle no fire⁹ [etc].¹⁹

But²⁰ [this is the reason why a specific text] was needed:²¹ It might have been assumed that this [case of a] brother's wife should be regarded as a subject which was included in a general proposition²² and was subsequently singled out in order to predicate another law,²³ the predication of which is not intended to apply to itself alone but to the whole of the general proposition. For it was taught: 'A subject which was included in a general proposition and was subsequently singled out, etc. How [is this to be understood]? But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings [that pertain unto the Lord], having his uncleanness upon him;²⁴ were not peace-offerings included among the other holy things?²⁵ Why, then, were they subsequently singled out? In order that [the others] may be compared to them, and in order to tell you that as peace-offerings are distinguished by being consecrated objects of the altar so must also all other things²⁶ be consecrated objects of the altar, the objects consecrated for Temple repair only being excluded.'²⁷ Similarly here it might have been argued:²⁸ Since a brother's wife was included among all the other forbidden relatives, why was she singled out? In order that [the others] may be compared to her, and in order to tell you that as a brother's wife is permitted²⁹ so also are all the other forbidden relatives permitted.³⁰

Are these, however, similar? There³¹ both the general proposition³² and the particular specification²⁴ relate to a prohibition, but here³³ the general proposition relates to a prohibition while the particular specification relates to something which is permitted!³⁴ This, surely, is rather to be compared to an object that was included in a general proposition and was subsequently singled out in order to be made the subject of a fresh statement, which you cannot restore to the restrictions of the general proposition unless Scripture specifically restores it; for it was taught: Anything which was included in a general proposition and was subsequently excluded in order to be made the subject of a fresh statement, cannot be restored to the restrictions of the general proposition unless Scripture has explicitly restored it.³⁵ How³⁶ [may this principle be illustrated]? And he shall kill the he-lamb in the place where they kill the sin-offering and the burnt-offering in the place of the Sanctuary; for as the sin-offering is the priest's so is the guilt-offering.³⁷ Now since there was no need to state, 'As the sin-offering so is the guilt-offering.'³⁸ why did Scripture explicitly state. As the sin-offering so the guilt-offering? Because seeing that the guilt-offering of the leper was singled out³⁹ in order to impart a new law concerning the thumb of the right hand and the great toe of the right foot,⁴⁰ it might have been assumed that it required no application of blood to, and no burning of the prescribed portions of the sacrifice upon the altar;

- (1) Labour prohibited on the Sabbath may be performed in connection with the service of the Temple.
 - (2) Ex. XXI, 14. This is taken to mean that he may be removed from the altar even if he has to perform service thereon.
 - (3) Supra 6b. Since the inference was made a minori ad majus how could anyone dispute it?
 - (4) V. Glos.
 - (5) A priest may defile himself by the burial of a meth mizwah though he thereby becomes disqualified from performing the Temple service. V. Meg. 3b.
 - (6) Burial is forbidden on the Sabbath. So also, it could be argued, the execution of a death sentence, though it supersedes the Temple service, need not necessarily supersede the Sabbath.

 - (18) As a positive precept supersedes an ordinary prohibition so it should also supersede one which involves kareth.
 - (19) V. supra note 3.
 - (20) Now that it is concluded that the need of the Scriptural text prohibiting the execution of a death sentence on Sabbath is because otherwise the permissibility thereof might have been argued a minori, and not on the ground of the principle that a positive command supersedes a prohibition, there is no proof available for the assumption that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition which involves kareth, and thus the original question again arises: What need was there for the specific text of Lev. XVIII, 18, 'aleha' (supra p. 8), to indicate the obvious? (i.e., that the positive precept of the levirate marriage does not supersede the prohibition of marrying a consanguineous relative).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 7b

hence it was explicitly stated, 'As the sin-offering so is the guilt-offering': As the sin-offering¹ requires application of the blood to, and burning of the prescribed portions upon the altar, so does the guilt-offering also require application of the blood to, and burning of the prescribed portions upon the altar.² Had Scripture not restored it,³ however, it would have been assumed that it was singled out only in respect of what was explicitly specified but not in any other respect;⁴ so also here,⁵ I would assume, only a brother's wife who was explicitly mentioned [can be said] to be permitted⁶ but not any of the other forbidden relatives!⁷

But⁸ it might have been assumed that the law of a wife's sister⁹ should be deduced from what has been found in the case of a brother's wife; as a levir may marry his brother's wife so he may also marry his wife's sister.¹⁰

Are, however, the two cases¹¹ similar? In the one case¹² there is only one prohibition; in the other¹³ there are two prohibitions!¹⁴ — It might have been assumed that since she¹⁵ was permitted¹⁶ [in respect of one prohibition]¹⁷ she was also permitted [in the case of the other].¹⁸ And whence is it derived that we assume that 'since something was permitted [in one respect] it was also permitted [in the other]'? — From what was taught: In the case of a leper whose eighth day [of purification]¹⁹ fell on the Passover eve,²⁰ and who, having observed a discharge of semen on that day,²¹ had taken a ritual bath, the Sages said: Although no other *tebul yom*²² may enter [the Temple mount],²³ this one²⁴ may enter, for it is better that the positive precept,²⁵ the non-observance of which involves kareth, shall supersede a positive precept²⁶ the infringement of which involves no kareth.²⁷ And in connection with this R. Johanan said: According to the Torah, not even [the infringement of] a positive precept is involved,²⁸ for it is said, And Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah . . . before the new court.²⁹ What is meant by the new court? Rabbi³⁰ replied: That they enacted therein new laws, ordaining that a *tebul yom*³¹ must not enter the camp of the Levites.³² And 'Ulla said: 'What is the reason?'³³ Since he was given permission³⁴ in respect of his leprosy,³⁵ permission was also given to him in respect of his discharge of the semen.³⁶ But is this case³⁷ similar to that of 'Ulla?

(7) The question consequently arises again: What need was there for 'aleha' in Lev. XVIII, 18. (Cf. supra p. 30, n. s).

(8) The reason why a superfluous text (v. previous note) was needed.

- (30) This is the reading also in Zeb. 32b. Cur. edd. enclose in parentheses ‘R. Johanan’.
- (31) V. Glos.
- (32) Which proves that the prohibition for a tebul yom to enter the Levitical camp was not of Pentateuchal origin, having been first enacted in the days of Jehoshaphat.
- (33) Why was a leper in the circumstances mentioned permitted to extend his hands into the Sanctuary whither an unclean person, according to ‘Ulla, may not project even part of his body?
- (34) To project his hands into the Sanctuary.
- (35) Despite the prohibition for an unclean person, though the days of his purification have been duly observed, to enter the Sanctuary even partially, prior to the offering of the prescribed sacrifices.
- (36) Thus it is proved that since something was permitted in one respect the permission remains in force even when another prohibition may be involved in another respect. The same argument might have also applied to a wife's sister or widow of a deceased brother. Hence the need of the text, ‘‘aleha’.
- (37) A brother's wife who is also one's wife's sister.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 8a

[The comparison] might well be justified where the deceased brother married [first]¹ and the surviving brother married [his brother's wife's sister] afterwards,² for, in this case, since the prohibition of brother's wife was removed,³ that of wife's sister⁴ is also removed; but where the surviving brother had married [first] and the deceased brother had married subsequently, the prohibition of wife's sister was Surely in force first!⁵ Furthermore, even where the deceased had married [first], [the comparison] would be justified in the case where the deceased had married and died, and the surviving brother had married afterwards so that [the widow] was eligible in the interval;⁶ where, however, the deceased had married, and before he died his wife's sister was married by his surviving brother, [his widow] was never for a moment eligible for his brother! Does not 'Ulla admit that if the leper observed semen on the night preceding the eighth day⁷ of his purification he must not project his hand into the Sanctuary on account of his thumb⁸ because at the time he was eligible to bring the sacrifice [of the cleansed leper]⁹ he was not free from uncleanness?¹⁰

But [this is really the explanation]: If 'aleha' was at all needed, [it was for such a case as] where the deceased brother had married [first] and died, and the surviving brother married [the widow's sister] subsequently.¹¹

If you prefer I can say [that the reason¹² is because] it¹³ might have been deduced by means of R. Jonah's analogy. For R. Jonah — others say, R. Huna son of R. Joshua — said: 'Scripture stated: For whosoever shall do any of these abominations shall be cut off,¹⁴ all forbidden relatives were compared to a brother's wife';¹⁵ [so in this case also it might have been said], as a brother's wife is permitted¹⁶ so also are all other forbidden relatives permitted; hence the All Merciful has written, 'aleha'.¹⁷

Said R. Aha of Difti¹⁸ to Rabina: Consider! All forbidden relatives¹⁹ might be compared to a brother's wife²⁰ and might equally be compared to a wife's sister,²¹ what reason do you see for comparing them to a wife's sister?²¹ Compare them rather to a brother's wife!²⁰ — If you wish I might say: When a comparison may be made for increasing as well as for decreasing restrictions, that for increasing restrictions must be preferred. If you prefer, however, I might say: In the former cases²² there are two prohibitions in the one as well as in the other,²³ and a double prohibition may justly be inferred from a double prohibition; in the latter case, however,²⁴ only one prohibition is involved,²⁵ and a double prohibition may not be inferred from a single one.

Raba said: [That] a forbidden relative herself²⁶ [may not contract the levirate marriage] requires no Scriptural text to prove it, since no positive precept can supersede a prohibition which involves kareth; if a Scriptural text was at all needed it was for the purpose of forbidding a rival.

And in the case of a forbidden relative is no Scriptural text required [to prohibit her levirate marriage]? Surely it was taught, 'Thus we are in a position to know the law concerning herself'!²⁷ — On account of her rival.²⁸ Was it not taught, however, 'Now we know the law concerning themselves'?²⁹ — On account of their rivals.³⁰

Come and hear: Rabbi said: [Instead of] and take, [Scripture stated], and take her,³¹ [and instead of] and perform the duty of a husband's brother [Scripture stated], and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,³¹ in order to prohibit³² [the levirate marriage of] forbidden relatives and their rivals!³³ — Read, 'To forbid [the levirate marriage of] the rivals of the forbidden relatives'. But two texts, surely, were mentioned;³⁴ was not one for the forbidden relative and the other for her rival? — No; both were for the rival, but one indicates prohibition³⁵ of a rival where the precept³⁵ is applicable, and the other indicates permission to marry the rival where the precept³⁵ is not applicable.³⁶ What is the reason? — [Because instead of] 'And perform the duty of a husband's brother' [Scripture stated] And perform the duty of a husband's brother UNTO HER, [which indicates that] only where levirate marriage is applicable is a rival forbidden³⁷ but where levirate marriage is not applicable³⁶ a rival is permitted.³⁷ R. Ashi said: [This³⁸ may] also be inferred from our Mishnah where it was stated, FIFTEEN [CATEGORIES OF] WOMEN EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS, but it was not stated, 'are exempt³⁹ and exempt [their rivals]'. This proves it.

In what respect does the case of a forbidden relative differ⁴⁰ that it should require no text?⁴¹ Obviously because no positive precept may supersede a prohibition which involves kareth. But then the case of a rival also should require no text,⁴¹ since no positive precept may supersede a prohibition which involves kareth!⁴² — Said R. Aha b. Bebai Mar to Rabina, Thus it has been stated in the name of Raba: In the case of a rival also no Scriptural text⁴¹ was needed; if a text was needed at all

- (1) His wife thus becoming a forbidden relative to his brother as 'brother's wife'.
 - (2) Thus adding to the one prohibition (v. previous note) the other of 'wife's sister'.
 - (3) By the precept of the levirate marriage, owing to the childlessness of the deceased.
 - (4) Since it was added subsequently.
 - (5) And could not consequently be removed by the removal of a prohibition which took effect subsequent to it.
 - (6) Between the death of her husband and the marriage of her sister by his surviving brother. This case would be analogous to that of the leper who was eligible to bring his sacrifices on the eighth day of his purification during the interval between the beginning of the day and the hour on that day he contracted a new uncleanness by his discharge.
 - (7) The night is reckoned as the beginning of the day following it.

 - (9) The eighth day of his purification.
 - (10) Owing to the discharge of the semen which occurred in the night. As a sacrifice must be brought in the day time only, there was not a single moment during which he was eligible to bring the sacrifices as being clean in all respects. The prohibition consequently remains in force. So also in the case of a wife's sister as regards the levirate marriage. The question, therefore, arises again, what need was there for the superfluous text of Lev. XVIII, 18. V. supra p. 30, n. 2.
 - (11) So that there was an interval during which he was permitted to marry the widow. V. p. 33. n. 11.

 - (34) Lit., 'he took.'
 - (35) Of the levirate marriage.
 - (36) As, for instance, in the case of a rival of a forbidden relative who married a stranger, v. infra 13a.
 - (37) To be married by the man to whom the relative herself is forbidden.
 - (38) Raba's statement that the prohibition to contract levirate marriage with a forbidden relative is so obvious that no Scriptural text is required to prove it.
 - (39) Which shews that the exemption of the forbidden relatives themselves from the levirate marriage (i.e., the prohibition ever to marry them) was taken in our Mishnah for granted.

(40) From the case of her rival.

(41) To prove its prohibition even in the case of the levirate marriage.

(42) Kareth being the penalty in both cases.

it was for the purpose of permitting a rival where the precept¹ is not applicable. What is the reason?² — Scripture stated, ‘aleha’,³ to indicate that only in the case of ‘unto her’⁴ is she⁵ forbidden,⁶ where the other, however, may not, she is permitted.

Said Rami b. Hama to Raba: Might it not be suggested⁷ that the forbidden relative⁸ herself is permitted⁹ where the precept¹⁰ is not applicable? — Is not [such an argument contrary to the principle of inference] a minori ad majus? Being forbidden where the precept¹⁰ is applicable, would she be permitted where the precept is not applicable? — [‘The case of a] rival’, the first replied, ‘could prove it, since she is forbidden⁹ where the precept¹⁰ is applicable, and is permitted⁹ where the precept¹⁰ is not applicable’. ‘It is for your sake,’ the other replied, ‘that Scripture states, In her life-time,¹¹ so long as she¹² lives’.¹³ But is not the expression,¹⁴ In her life-time,¹¹ required for the exclusion [of the prohibition of marriage] after her¹² death?¹⁵ — This is deduced from the text, And a woman to her sister.¹¹ If [the deduction were only] from the text. ‘And a woman to her sister’,¹¹ it might have been said that if she¹⁶ was divorced the sister would be permitted, hence it was expressly stated, ‘In her life-time.’¹¹ So long as she¹⁶ is alive, even though she has been divorced, [her sister must] not [be married].¹⁷ — But, said R. Huna b. Tahlifa in the name of Raba, two Scriptural texts are available; it is written, Thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her¹⁸ [implying two],¹⁹ and it is also written, To uncover her nakedness,²⁰ which implies that only one is forbidden; how then [are the two texts to be reconciled]? Where the precept²¹ is applicable both are forbidden;²² where the precept²¹ is not applicable she²³ is forbidden but her rival is permitted. Might not the deduction be reversed: Where the precept²¹ is applicable she²³ is forbidden but her rival is permitted, but where the precept is not applicable both are forbidden!²² — If so, ‘aleha’ should not have been stated.²⁴

Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: Whence is it derived that the expression ‘aleha²⁵ indicates prohibition? Is it not possible that it implies permission, and that it is this that the All Merciful meant to imply: Thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her,²⁵ neither herself nor her rival where ‘unto her’²⁶ is not applicable,²⁷ but where ‘unto her’²⁶ is applicable²⁸ both are permitted!²⁹ — If so, how could the ‘uncovering of the nakedness’ of one³⁰ be possible? If in the case where the precept³¹ is applicable, both are permitted;³² and if where the precept is not applicable both are forbidden!³³ [Reverting to] the [above] text, Rabbi said: Instead of And take, Scripture stated, ‘And take her’ and instead of ‘And perform the duty of a husband's brother’, Scripture stated, ‘And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her’, in order to prohibit [the levirate marriage of] forbidden relatives and their rivals. Are, then, rivals mentioned here at all? And, furthermore, the law of rivals has been derived from the expression To be her rival!³⁴ — The expression To be her rival is employed by Rabbi for R. Simeon's deduction.³⁵ Where,³⁶ however, is the rival mentioned?³⁷ — What he meant is this: If so,³⁸ Scripture should have stated, And take; why then did it state, ‘And he shall take her’?³⁹ To indicate that wherever there are two to be taken,⁴⁰ he⁴¹ having the choice of marrying whichever he prefers⁴² both are permitted,⁴³ but if not,⁴⁴ both are forbidden; And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,⁴⁵ indicates that where levirate marriage is applicable there is the rival forbidden, where, however, levirate marriage is not applicable the rival is permitted.

As to the Rabbis,⁴⁶ to what do they apply the verse ‘And he shall take her’? — They require it for the deduction of R. Jose b. Hanina. For R. Jose b. Hanina said: ‘And he shall take her’⁴⁵ teaches that he⁴⁷ may divorce her with a letter of divorce⁴⁸ and that he may remarry her;⁴⁹ And he shall perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her, even against her will.⁵⁰ And Rabbi?⁵¹ — The law of R. Jose b. Hanina is deduced from To a wife,⁴⁵ and that the marriage may take place against her will is deduced from Her husband's brother shall go in unto her.⁴⁵

What does Rabbi do with [the expression], ‘aleha’? — He requires it [for another deduction], as we learnt: The Beth din⁵² are under no obligation⁵³ unless [they ruled] concerning a prohibition the punishment for which is kareth, if the transgression was wilful, and a sin-offering if the transgression was unwitting; and so it is with the anointed High priest.

- (1) Of the levirate marriage.
 - (2) I.e., how is the permissibility deduced?
 - (3) Lev. XVIII, 18.
 - (4) Lit., ‘in the place of עליה with reference to the verse ‘Her husband's brother shall go in unto her’ (v. supra p. 8, n. 9) i.e., where the command of levirate marriage would otherwise apply.
 - (5) The rival.
 - (6) To be married, cf. supra p. 35, n. 12.
 - (7) On the lines of the argument just advanced.
 - (8) I.e., the wife's sister.
 - (9) To be married.
 - (10) Of the levirate marriage.
 - (11) Lev. XVIII, 18.
 - (12) One's wife.
 - (13) Her sister must not be married. (Other forbidden relatives, as has been shewn supra, are deduced from one's wife's sister).
 - (14) Lit., ‘that’.
 - (15) I.e., that the prohibition of a wife's sister which on the present assumption is limited to cases where the precept of levirate marriage is applicable, applies only during the lifetime of one's wife.
 - (16) The wife.
 - (17) But it can still be maintained that where no levirate marriage is applicable, there is no prohibition of marrying the wife's sister.
 - (18) Lev. XVIII, 18.
 - (19) I.e., that both the wife's sister and her rival are forbidden to be married. (This, as will be shewn infra, is deduced from the expression li-zeror.)
 - (20) Lev. XVIII, 18, emphasis on her (sing.).
 - (21) Of the levirate marriage.
 - (22) To be married.
 - (23) The forbidden relative herself.
 - (24) Since even without this additional phrase the two contradictory texts would have been naturally reconciled by applying the former (prohibition of both) to a case where the precept of the levirate marriage is inapplicable, and the latter (permission of the rival) to a case where it is applicable. The addition of the phrase must consequently have been intended to impart a new law, viz. that a rival is forbidden, like the forbidden relative herself, where the precept of the levirate marriage is applicable.
 - (25) Lev. XVIII, 18.
 - (26) V. supra p. 8, n. 9.
 - (27) I.e., where the law of the levirate marriage does not apply.
 - (28) Where levirate marriage does apply.
 - (29) The concluding part of the verse עליה בהייה meaning where he has to go ‘unto her’, the sister of his wife who is the widow of his brother, he may do so even in her (his wife's) life-time.
 - (30) V. Lev. XVIII, 18, implying, as explained supra, the prohibition of one only.
 - (31) Of the levirate marriage.
 - (32) So that there are two, not only one.

- (33) And there is none.
- (34) Heb. li-zeror (Lev. XVIII, 18), supra 3b. How then could it be said to be derived from a different text?
- (35) V. infra 28b.
- (36) V. Emden a.l. Cur. edd. read 'here'.
- (37) In Deut. XXV, 5, the text cited by Rabbi. Clearly, it was not mentioned at all; how then could Rabbi derive from the text a law concerning a subject of which no mention was made?
- (38) That the text refers to the forbidden relative only and not to a rival.
- (39) Deut. XXV, 5.
- (40) Lit., 'takings', i.e., when the deceased childless brother is survived by two widows, and the levir has to decide which of them to marry.
- (41) The levir.
- (42) I.e., when neither of the two is a forbidden relative.
- (43) The emphasis on 'her' in And take her implies that there is a choice between two, and the phrase 'and take her' is taken to imply that the levir is in a position to choose whichever he pleases, since either of them must be capable of having the phrase 'and take her' applied to her.
- (44) If one cannot be married by him on account of her being his forbidden relative.
- (45) Deut. XXV, 5.
- (46) Who made the deduction from li-zeror.
- (47) The levir.
- (48) After he married her; and she requires no halizah.
- (49) Though the precept of the levirate marriage has been fulfilled and she might have been assumed to be forbidden to him as a brother's wife. The text is interpreted as follows: And he takes her to him to wife, as soon as he has taken her, she is regarded henceforth in all respects as his wife, i.e., as if she had never been forbidden to him as a brother's wife.
- (50) Emphasis on 'unto her' (v. Tosaf).
- (51) Whence does he derive the law deduced by R. Jose b. Hanina?
- (52) Who are guilty of an erroneous ruling.
- (53) To bring the sacrifice prescribed in Lev. IV, 13ff.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 9a

Nor [are they liable] in respect of idolatry unless [they ruled] concerning a matter the punishment for which is kareth, if it was committed wilfully and a sin-offering if committed unwittingly;¹ and we also learnt: [For the unwitting transgression of any] commandment in the Torah the penalty for which, if committed wilfully, is kareth and, if committed unwittingly a sin-offering, the private individual brings a sin-offering of a lamb or a she-goat; the ruler brings a goat; and the anointed High Priest and the Beth din bring a bullock. In the case of idolatry the individual and the ruler and the anointed High Priest bring a she-goat while the Beth din² bring a bullock and a goat, the bullock for a burnt-offering and the goat for a sin-offering. Whence is this deduced? From the following. For our Rabbis taught: When the sin wherein they have sinned is known:³ Rabbi said, here⁴ we read 'aleha⁵ and further on⁶ we also read 'aleha;⁷ as further on⁶ the prohibition involves the penalty of kareth if the transgression was wilful and that of a sin-offering if it was unwitting, so here⁸ also, [the ruling must be concerning] a prohibition which involves the penalty of kareth if the transgression was wilful and that of a sin-offering if it was unwitting.⁹

Proof has thus been adduced for the case of the congregation; whence for that of the anointed High Priest? — It is written in relation to the High Priest, So as to bring guilt upon the people;¹⁰ this shews that the anointed High Priest is like the congregation. And for an individual and a ruler? — The inference is made by a comparison of Things¹¹ with Things.¹² 'Nor [are they liable] in respect of idolatry unless [their ruling] concerned a matter the punishment for which is kareth if it was committed wilfully, and a sin-offering if committed unwittingly'. As regards the congregation in the matter of idolatry, deduction¹³ is made by comparison between From the eyes¹⁴ and From the eyes.¹⁵ [The law¹⁶ of] a private individual, a ruler and an anointed High Priest [is deduced] from, And if one soul¹⁷ which implies that there is no distinction between a private individual, a ruler and an anointed High Priest, while the waw¹⁸ connects them with the previous subject,¹⁹ and consequently the latter²⁰ may be deduced from the former.²¹

Whence, however, do the Rabbis²² arrive at this inference?²³ — They deduce it from the Biblical interpretation which R. Joshua b. Levi taught to his son: Ye shall have one law for him that doeth aught in error. But the soul that doeth aught with a high hand etc.,²⁴ all the Torah is compared to the prohibition of idolatry;²⁵ as in regard to idolatry [obligation is incurred only where] the offence involves the punishment of kareth²⁶ when it was committed wilfully and a sin-offering²⁷ when committed unwittingly, so also in the case of any other transgression [it must be such] as involves kareth when committed wilfully and a sin-offering when committed unwittingly.

Proof has thus been found for the case of a private individual, a ruler and an anointed High Priest²⁸ both in regard to idolatry and the rest of the commandments; whence, however, [is it proved that the same law applies also to] the congregation in the case of idolatry? — Scripture said, And if one soul,²⁹ and the former³⁰ may be deduced from the latter.³¹ Whence, however, [is it deduced that the same law applies to] the congregation in the case of the other commandments? — Deduction is made by comparison between ‘From the eyes’ and ‘From the eyes’.³²

And what does Rabbi do with the text of One law?³³ — He applies it to the following.³⁴ Whereas we find that Scripture made distinction between individuals and a group,³⁵ individuals being punished by stoning and their money, therefore, being spared, while a group are punished by the sword and their money is consequently destroyed, one might also assume that a distinction should be made in respect of their sacrifices; hence it was explicitly stated, Ye shall have one law.³³

R. Hilkiah of Hagronia³⁶ demurred: Is the reason³⁷ because the All Merciful has written, Ye shall have one law,³³ so that had it not so been written it might have been thought that a distinction should be made [in respect of their sacrifices]? What, however, could they bring! Should they bring a bullock? The congregation,³⁸ surely, brings a bullock for the transgression of any one of all the other commandments!³⁹ [Should they bring] a lamb? An individual, surely, brings a lamb if he transgressed any of the other commandments!⁴⁰ A he-goat? A ruler brings one in the case of transgression of any of the other commandments!⁴⁰ A bullock for a burnt-offering and a goat for a sin-offering? Such, surely, are brought by the congregation in the case of idolatry!⁴⁰ Should they, then, bring a she-goat? This, surely, is also the sin-offering of a private individual!⁴¹ — [The text]⁴² was required, because it might have been suggested that whereas the congregation, in the case of an erroneous ruling, brings a bullock for a burnt-offering and a he-goat for a sin-offering, these⁴³ should also bring the same sacrifices, but] in the reverse order;⁴⁴ or [it might have been assumed to be] necessary⁴⁵ but that there was no remedy;⁴⁶ hence it was necessary to teach us.⁴⁷

Said Levi to Rabbi: What ground is there for stating⁴⁸ FIFTEEN? Sixteen should have been stated! — The other replied: It seems to me that this man has no brains in his head. ‘Do you mean’, he continued, ‘a man's mother who had been outraged by his father?’⁴⁹ The case of a man's mother who has been outraged by his father is a matter in dispute between R. Judah and the Rabbis,⁵⁰ and the author of our Mishnah does not deal with any controversial matter’. But does he not? Surely, the prohibition due to a Rabbinical ordinance and the prohibition due to the levir's sanctity,⁵¹ concerning which R. Akiba and the Rabbis are in dispute,⁵² are mentioned! — We mean, in our chapter. But, surely it was taught,⁵³ ‘Beth Shammai permit rivals to the other brothers and Beth Hillel prohibit them’!⁵⁴ — The view of Beth Shammai where it is in contradiction to that of Beth Hillel is of no consequence.⁵⁵ concerning which R. Simeon and the Rabbis are in dispute,¹ and which is nevertheless mentioned? — R. Simeon does not dispute the case where the birth² was first, and the levirate marriage³ later.⁴ Did not R. Oshaia, however, say¹ that R. Simeon disputed the first case also?⁵ — Surely. R. Oshaia's view was refuted.

Did not, however, Rab Judah state in the name of Rab, and R. Hiyya also taught: In the case of all these⁶ it may happen that she who is forbidden to one brother may be permitted to the other¹ while she who is forbidden to the other brother may be permitted to the one, and that her sister who is her sister-in-law may be subject either to halizah or to the levirate marriage.⁷ And Rab Judah interpreted [it⁸ as referring to those]⁹ from one's MOTHER-IN-LAW onwards but not to the first six categories. What is the reason? Because in the case of a daughter this¹⁰ is possible only [with one born] from a woman who had been outraged but not [with one born] from a legal marriage,¹¹ [and the author of our Mishnah] deals only with cases of legal matrimony and not with those of outraged women.¹² And Abaye interpreted it⁸ [as referring] also to a daughter from a woman who had been outraged, because, since [the application of Rab's statement] is quite possible in her case, it matters not whether she was born from a woman who was legally married or from one that had been outraged; but not to the wife of a brother who was not his contemporary. What is the reason? Because [the application of Rab's statement in this case] is possible only according to the view of R. Simeon and not according to that of the Rabbis, [the author of our Mishnah] does not deal with any matter which is in dispute. And R. Safra interprets it¹³ as referring also to the wife of a brother who was not his contemporary, and [in his opinion] it¹³ is possible in the case of six brothers in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.¹⁴

(1) Infra 18b.

(2) Of a third brother. (V. infra n. 4).

(3) Between the second brother and the widow of the first brother who died without issue (V. following note).

(4) In such a case, R. Simeon agrees that the third brother must not marry the widow, because at the time when he was born the widow was forbidden to him as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'. R. Simeon's disagreement with the Rabbis is limited to the case where the first brother, A, died childless and his widow was married to the second brother, B, prior to the birth of the third brother, C. If subsequently B died also childless, R. Simeon, contrary to the opinion of the Rabbis, allows the levirate marriage between the widow and C, because when C was born the widow was already the wife of B, and C's levirate marriage now is not due to A whose widow was a married woman when he was born, but to B whose contemporary he is.

- (5) I.e., where C (v. note 4) was born before the levirate marriage between A's widow and B took place.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 10a

And your mnemonic is, 'Died, born, and performed the levirate marriage; died, born, and performed the levirate marriage'!¹ — Rabbi² does not accept these rules.³

R. Adda Karhina stated before R. Kahana in the name of Raba: Rabbi, in fact, does accept these rules,⁴ but it was this that he meant to say to [Levi]:⁵ [The application of the statement⁴ to] a woman outraged by one's father is possible only in one [of its parts]; it is impossible, however, to apply it in [both its parts], for if Jacob outraged his two sisters,⁶ it is possible [to apply that part of the statement relating to] 'her sister who is her sister-in-law',⁷ but not that of 'she who is forbidden to one brother may be permitted to the other';⁸ and if he outraged two strangers,⁹ it is possible [to apply the statement], 'she who is forbidden to one brother may be permitted to the other'¹⁰ but not that of 'her sister who is her sister-in-law'.¹¹

R. Ashi said: Rabbi, in fact, does not accept these rules¹² and [our Mishnah] does deal with matters in dispute, and as to the meaning¹³ of 'It seems to me that this man has no brains in his head' which he¹⁴ addressed to him,¹⁵ what he meant was this: 'Why did you not carefully consider our Mishnah? For our Mishnah represents the view of R. Judah who forbids the marriage of a woman that was outraged by one's father,¹⁶ as it was taught: Six forbidden relatives come under greater restrictions,¹⁷ since they are to be married to strangers only,¹⁸ and their rivals are permitted.¹⁹ [These are:] his mother, his father's wife and his father's sister [etc.].²⁰ Now, what is meant by "his mother"? If it be assumed to mean one who was legally married to his father, such a woman surely is "his father's wife".²¹ Must it not consequently mean one who was outraged by his father? And yet it was stated, "since they are to be married to strangers only", implying "to strangers only but not to the brothers". Now, who has been heard to hold such an opinion? Surely it was R. Judah who forbids marriage with a woman who was outraged by one's father.²² Hence²³ it was not included in our Mishnah.'²⁴

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: [Such a levirate relationship]²⁵ is possible even according to R. Judah if and when one had married²⁶ illegally!²⁷ — The author of the Mishnah is not concerned with an 'if'.²⁸ Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: This²⁹ is also possible without the 'if',³⁰ where Jacob³¹ outraged his daughter-in-law, begat from her a son, and then Reuben³² died without issue, and she thus came into levirate relationship with her son;³³ and since she is forbidden to him,³⁴ her rival also is likewise forbidden!³⁵ — The other replied: [The author of our Mishnah] deals only with lawful brotherhood but not with brotherhood which is due to a forbidden act.

Levi nevertheless³⁶ inserted it³⁷ in his Mishnah. For Levi taught: One's mother sometimes exempts her rival³⁸ and sometimes she does not exempt her. If his mother, for instance,³⁹ was lawfully married to his father, and then she was married⁴⁰ to his paternal brother⁴¹ who subsequently died, such a mother does not exempt her rival.⁴²

- (1) Now, since in the case of 'the wife of a brother who was not his contemporary' the application of Rab's statement is only possible according to the view of R. Simeon but not according to that of the Rabbis, and since the statement is based on our Mishnah, it is obvious that our Mishnah deals also with a case which is in dispute.
- (2) Cf. Bah. Cur. edd. insert, 'but'.
- (3) Of Rab and R. Hiyya. Our Mishnah consequently deals only with that case in which R. Simeon and the Rabbis are in agreement. (V. supra 9b top).
- (4) Of Rab and R. Hiyya, supra 9b.
- (5) Whom he addressed supra 9a.
- (6) And after one of them had given birth to a child, C, and the other to one, D, the first was married by A and the second by B, two of Jacob's sons from another wife.
- (7) For should A and B die childless their wives who are sisters as well as sisters-in-law come under the law of the levirate marriage in relation to C and D the brothers of A and B.
- (8) Both being forbidden to C as well as to D. The mother of C is forbidden to C as mother and to D as mother's sister, and the mother of D is similarly forbidden to D and C.
- (9) Cf. n.8.
- (10) Since the women are strangers and the restrictions mentioned in note 10 do not apply.
- (11) The women being sisters-in-law only but not sisters. Thus it has been shewn that the statement could not be applied in its entirety to the case of an outraged woman. Hence it was excluded from the enumeration in our Mishnah.
- (12) Of Rab and Hiyya.
- (13) Lit., 'and what'.
- (14) Rabbi.
- (15) Levi, supra 9a.
- (16) Hence it is impossible for a mother, whether legally married or outraged, ever to come into levirate relationship with her son. (Cf. supra p. 45, n. 8.)
- (17) Than those relating to the fifteen enumerated in our Mishnah.
- (18) No paternal brother of the person concerned may ever marry them.
- (19) To marry the brother of their deceased husband who had been married to their rival (one of the six relatives) illegally (Maimonides). If the marriage was with a stranger the permissibility of marriage is obvious since the laws of rivals apply only to a brother's widow.
- (20) Infra 13a.
- (21) Who was specifically mentioned.
- (22) So that it is impossible for one ever to be subject to levirate marriage with his brother's wife whose legitimate or illegitimate son he is.
- (23) Since R. Judah holds such an opinion and the Mishnah represents his view.
- (24) Lit., 'he did not teach it'.
- (25) Cf. supra p. 46, n. 13.
- (26) The woman his father had outraged and who is also the mother of his brother.
- (27) Infra 78a. In such a case it is surely possible for a mother to come into the levirate relationship with her son.
- (28) Lit., 'when if he does not teach', i.e., he is not concerned with a levirate relationship that may arise out of a possible and unlikely breach of the law.
- (29) Levirate relationship with a mother. Cf. supra p. 46, n. 13.
- (30) I.e., even if the deceased brothers did not transgress the law.
- (31) The father of the deceased.
- (32) Her husband, Jacob's son.
- (33) Lit., 'and she fell before her son', who is the paternal brother of her deceased husband, Reuben.
- (34) As his mother.
- (35) Why then was not this case included in our Mishnah?
- (36) Despite Rabbi's abusive reply, supra 9a.
- (37) בדקוה lit., 'examined it', i.e., revised our Mishnah and added the case under discussion. [Levi drew up a collection of teachings like those of R. Hiyya and R. Oshaia, v. B.B., Sonc. ed. p. 216].
- (38) From halizah and the levirate marriage.

(39) Lit., 'how so?'

(40) Unlawfully.

(41) Which is a marriage forbidden under the penalty of kareth and is, therefore, illegal and invalid.

(42) The marriage having been invalid, the woman is not regarded as his brother's wife.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 10b

If his mother, however, was a woman that had been outraged by his father and was then married to his paternal brother who subsequently died, such a mother does exempt her rival.¹ And though the Sages taught in our Mishnah FIFTEEN we must add a case like this as a sixteenth.

Resh Lakish said to R. Johanan: According to Levi who maintains that an 'if'² is also included,³ let our Mishnah also include⁴ the case of a levir who gave halizah to his sister-in-law⁵ and later betrothed⁶ her and died without issue, for since [the widow of such a one] is forbidden,⁷ her rival also is forbidden!⁸ — The other replied: Because in this case the law of the rival of the rival⁹ cannot be applied.¹⁰ But could he¹¹ not have answered¹² him¹³ [that the brothers] are only subject to the penalties of a negative precept,¹⁴ and that those who are subject to the penalties of a negative precept are¹⁵ under the obligations of halizah and the levirate marriage?¹⁶ — He¹⁷ answered him¹⁸ in accordance with the view he¹⁸ holds. 'According to my view,' he¹⁹ argued, [the brothers] are only subject to the penalties of a negative precept,²⁰ and those who are subject to the penalties of a negative precept are²¹ under the obligations of halizah and the levirate marriage,²² but even according to your view that they are subject to the penalty of kareth [the case could not have been included in our Mishnah] because the law of the rival's rival cannot be applied'.²³

It has been stated: Where [a levir] had performed the ceremonial of halizah with his sister-in-law, and then betrothed her, Resh Lakish holds that he is not subject to the penalty of kareth for the haluzah,²⁴ but the other brothers are subject to kareth for the haluzah.²⁵ In the case of the rival,²⁶ both he²⁷ and the other brothers are subject to kareth for a rival.²⁸ R. Johanan, however, holds that neither he²⁷ nor the other brothers are subject to kareth either for the haluzah or for her rival.²⁹ What is the reason of Resh Lakish? — Scripture stated, That doth not build,³⁰ since he has not built he must never again build.³¹ He himself is thus placed under the prohibition of building no more,³² but his brothers remain in the same position in which they were before.³³ Furthermore, the prohibition to build no more applies only to herself,³⁴ her rival, however, remains under the same prohibition as before.³³ And R. Johanan?³⁵ — Is it inconceivable³⁶ that at first halizah should be allowed to be performed by any one of the brothers³⁷ and with either of the widows of the deceased brother³⁸ and that now one or other of these persons should³⁹ be involved in kareth!⁴⁰ But [in point of fact] he⁴¹ merely acts as agent for the brothers while she⁴² acts as agent for her rival.⁴³

R. Johanan pointed out to Resh Lakish the following objection: 'If a levir who submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law, later betrothed her and died,⁴⁴ [the widow] requires halizah from the surviving brothers'. Now, according to me who maintains that [the surviving brothers]⁴⁵ are subject to the penalties of a negative precept only, one can well understand why she requires halizah from the other brothers.⁴⁶ According to you, however, why should she require halizah?⁴⁷ — Explain, then, on the lines of your reasoning, the final clause, 'If one of the brothers⁴⁸ actually⁴⁹ betrothed her, she has no claim upon him'!⁵⁰ R. Shesheth replied: The final clause represents the opinion of R. Akiba who holds that a betrothal with those who are subject thereby to the penalties of a negative precept is of no validity.⁵¹ Should it not then have been stated, 'according to the view of R. Akiba she⁵² has no claim upon him'!⁵³

(1) Since her marriage with the deceased brother was not unlawful, her rival (any other wife of her husband) is subject to the same laws as any other rival in the case of the fifteen relatives of our Mishnah.

(2) Cf. p. 47, n. 4, supra.

- (3) By R. Judah who, as has been shown supra, is the author of our Mishnah. Though he prohibits the marriage of a woman that was outraged by one's father, he nevertheless, according to Levi's recital, included the case in our Mishnah.
- (4) Lit., 'teach'.
- (5) Whom he is in consequence forbidden to marry.
- (6) Since the marriage in such a case is forbidden under a negative precept the transgression of which does not involve the penalty of kareth, the betrothal is legally valid.
- (7) To the brothers of the levir who gave the halizah: this prohibition, according to Resh Lakish infra involving the penalty of kareth.
- (8) To the brothers. Why then was not this case also added to the fifteen?
- (9) V. our Mishnah.
- (10) Her rival (as well as herself), being forbidden to all the other brothers (as brother's wife or as the haluzah of one of the brothers), can never have any of the wives of the brothers as her rival. In the case of the forbidden relatives in our Mishnah, they are forbidden to one of the brothers only, hence they or their rivals are not otherwise precluded from marrying one of the other brothers.
- (11) R. Johanan.
- (12) Lit., 'and he should say'.
- (13) Resh Lakish.
- (14) If they married the haluzah, their deceased brother's widow, with whom halizah had been performed by one of them. According to R. Johanan, infra, contrary to the view of Resh Lakish, no penalty of kareth is involved in such a marriage, whether the transgressor be the brother who performed the halizah or any of the other brothers.
- (15) Unlike those subject to the penalty of kareth who are exempt from halizah and from the levirate marriage.
- (16) I.e., though the marriage with them is forbidden by a negative precept, they remain nevertheless under the obligations of the levirate relationship and must, therefore, undergo the ceremonial of halizah. Why, then, did not R. Johanan give Resh Lakish this reply which would well account for the omission from our Mishnah of the case he mentioned?
- (17) R. Johanan.
- (18) Resh Lakish.
- (19) R. Johanan.
- (20) V. p. 48, n. 13.
- (21) V. p. 48, n. 14.
- (22) Cf. previous note.
- (23) Cf. supra p. 48, n. 9.
- (24) V. Glos. I.e., for having intercourse with her. Consequently the betrothal is valid.
- (25) Consequently should any of the other brothers betroth the haluzah, the betrothal is invalid.
- (26) Of a haluzah (v. previous note). A rival is exempt from halizah and the levirate marriage by the action of the haluzah.
- (27) The levir who participated in the halizah.
- (28) V. infra 53a.
- (29) Infra 40b and l.c.
- (30) Deut. XXV, 9.
- (31) The imperfect יבנה may be rendered as a present as well as a future.
- (32) I.e., under a negative precept only which involves no kareth.
- (33) I.e., under the prohibition to marry a brother's wife, which involves the penalty of kareth.
- (34) The haluzah.
- (35) What reason does he advance for his opinions?
- (36) Lit., 'is there (such) a thing'?
- (37) Lit., 'if he prefers, this one participates in the halizah and if he prefers etc.'
- (38) Lit., 'and if he prefers he performs the halizah with that one and if he prefers etc'.
- (39) In case of a betrothal.
- (40) Though the others are not.
- (41) The brother who participated in the halizah.
- (42) The widow who performed the halizah ceremonial.

(43) Hence all the brothers as well as all the rivals are in this respect in exactly the same position. As the brother and the widow who between them carried out the halizah ceremonial are in a case of subsequent marriage exempt from kareth and are subject only to the penalties of a negative precept, so also are all the others on whose behalf they acted.

(44) Without issue.

(45) In subsequently marrying the haluzah.

(46) Since the negative precept which bars them from the levirate marriage does not supersede halizah.

(47) Marriage with them would involve the penalty of kareth, and whenever such a penalty is involved the parties are not subject to the laws of halizah!

(48) Other than the one who participated in the halizah.

(49) Lit., 'stood'.

(50) I.e., the betrothal is invalid, she receives no kethubah, and no divorce is needed. This obviously proves that the penalty for such an ensuing marriage is kareth, as Resh Lakish maintains; for had it been, as R. Johanan asserts, that of a negative precept only, the betrothal should have been valid.

(51) Keth. 29b, Kid. 64a, 68a, Sot. 18b, infra 52b, 69a.

(52) So Bah, a.l. Cur. edd., 'he'.

(53) Since it is the general opinion that such a betrothal is valid.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 11a

— This is rather a difficulty.

R. Ashi holds the same opinion as Resh Lakish¹ and explains it² in accordance with the ruling of R. Simeon.³ Rabina holds the same opinion as R. Johanan⁴ and explains it⁵ in accordance with the ruling of the Rabbis.⁶ 'R. Ashi holds the same opinion as Resh Lakish and explains it in accordance with the ruling of R. Simeon', thus: If [a levir] who submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law had subsequently betrothed her, she⁷ requires halizah from the brothers. Who are these brothers? Those born [subsequently].⁸ According to whose view? According to that of R. Simeon.⁹ If one of the previously born¹⁰ brothers, however, betrothed her, she has no claim upon him.¹¹ According to whose view? According to that of Resh Lakish.¹¹

'Rabina holds the same opinion as R. Johanan and explains it in accordance with the ruling of the Rabbis', thus: If [a levir] who submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law had subsequently betrothed her, she requires halizah from the brothers. Who are these brothers? Those born [prior to the halizah]. According to whom? According to R. Johanan.¹² If one of the subsequently¹³ born brothers, however, betrothed her, she has no claim upon him. According to whose view? According to that of the Rabbis.¹⁴

It has been stated: In the case where [the Ievir] had intercourse with his sister-in-law¹⁵ and one of the other brothers had intercourse with her rival, there is a difference of opinion between R. Aha and Rabina. One said: [It involves¹⁶ a transgression subject] to kareth and the other said: [The transgression] of a positive precept.¹⁷ He who said, '[A transgression subject] to kareth' follows Resh Lakish;¹⁸ and he who said, '[The transgression] of a positive precept' follows R. Johanan.¹⁹

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: The rival of a sotah²⁰ is for bidden.²¹ What is the reason?²² — Because uncleanness is ascribed to her²³ as to the cases of incest.²⁴ R. Hisda raised an objection:²⁵ R. Simeon²⁶ said, the intercourse²⁷ or halizah of the brother of the first husband exempts her rival!²⁸ — Rab can answer you, 'I speak of a sotah that is Biblically forbidden,²⁹ and you talk of a sotah that is only Rabbinically forbidden'.³⁰

But as to him who raised this objection, what did he imagine?³¹ — He thought that Rabbinical provisions were given the same force as Biblical laws.³²

R. Ashi raised an objection: If she³³ entered with the man into a private place and remained with him for a period sufficient for the consummation of defilement, she is forbidden to her house,³⁴ she may not eat of terumah,³⁵ and if he died she must undergo the ceremony of halizah

- (1) That any brother, other than the one who submitted to the halizah, who married the widow after she had performed the halizah is subject to the penalty of kareth (v. supra 10b).
 - (2) The first clause of the statement cited in the discussion between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish, according to which halizah is required.
 - (3) Who maintains that a brother born after the levirate marriage of his elder brother is not subject, in relation to the deceased brother, to the restriction of a 'brother who was not his contemporary'. The first clause then, which requires halizah, may consequently refer to brothers born after both the halizah and the betrothal had taken place. The widow of the levir not being forbidden to them on account of her first deceased husband, is subject to halizah on account of the second. (The final clause which clearly agrees with the view of Resh Lakish requires of course no explanation).
 - (4) Who maintains that the brother who performed the halizah as well as all the other brothers are forbidden to marry the widow subsequent to the halizah, not under the penalty of kareth but under that of a negative precept. Hence the ruling in the first clause that halizah is required.
 - (5) The final clause. (Cf. n. 2 supra).
 - (6) Who hold that even a brother born after the levirate marriage (v. n. 3 supra) is subject to the restrictions of 'a brother who was not his contemporary'. The final clause may accordingly refer to such brothers to whom the widow is forbidden for this reason (not on account of the halizah that had been performed) and the marriage or betrothal with whom is consequently invalid. (The first clause obviously is in agreement with R. Johanan).
 - (7) In the case where the levir who betrothed her also died without issue.
 - (8) After the halizah and the betrothal. Having been born after the halizah they have never been subject to the levirate relationship on account of the first deceased brother and the halizah of the levir had, therefore, imposed no restrictions upon them in relation to the widow.
 - (9) V. supra n. 3. Hence it is the duty of one of these brothers to submit to halizah which is incumbent upon them as brothers of the levir who also died without issue.
 - (10) Prior to the performance of the halizah.
 - (11) Since according to Resh Lakish the performance of the halizah by one of the brothers had caused the prohibition of the widow upon all other contemporary brothers under the penalty of kareth, such a betrothal is invalid.
 - (12) V. supra p. 51, n. 4.
 - (13) After the performance of the halizah.
 - (14) V. supra p. 51, n. 6.
 - (15) The widow of his deceased childless brother.
 - (16) For the other brother.
 - (17) The precept is to perform one levirate marriage but not more than one, a transgression to which no penalty is attached.
 - (18) In whose view (supra 10b) the levir who marries, or participates in halizah with the widow, does not act as the agent of the other brothers. Hence, despite the fact that in the levir's own case the prohibition to marry the rival is regarded as having the force of a positive precept, in that of the other brothers the original prohibition to marry a brother's wife remains in force and marriage with her involves, therefore, the penalty of kareth.
 - (19) Who regards the levir as the agent of the brothers (supra 10b). Hence they are subject to the same prohibition. As in the levir's own case so in that of the other brothers the levirate obligations supersede the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife, and with it the original penalty of kareth.
 - (20) סוֹטָה, a married woman suspected of adultery, who is subject to the ordeal prescribed in Num. V, 12ff. V. Glos.
 - (21) To the levir; in the case where there are witnesses that the sotah had committed the crime and her husband subsequently died childless. The rival and certainly the sotah herself are in such a case exempt from both the levirate marriage and the halizah.
 - (22) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit.
 - (23) She being defiled. Num. V, 13.
 - (24) Defile ye not yourselves. Lev. XVIII, 24. As the rival in the latter case is forbidden, so is she in the former.
 - (25) The following refers to a case where a woman married a second husband on the basis of a report by one witness that her first husband had died in a foreign country. If later it was discovered that her first husband was alive, she must be divorced by both. If both died childless prior to the divorce she requires halizah from a brother of each but may not, according to the Rabbis, marry either of them.

(26) Disagreeing with the Rabbis in one point.

(27) Her second marriage having been entered into through an innocent error, no penalty is incurred by her as far as her relationship with the levir from the first marriage is concerned. Hence, in the opinion of R. Simeon, either marriage or halizah is permitted, v. infra 87a.

(28) From this it follows that the rival of a married woman who had intercourse with another husband is permitted to the levir both according to R. Simeon and according to the Rabbis (the latter having only disputed the case of the married woman herself). Why, then, did Rab state that the rival of a sotah is forbidden?

(29) A woman that was faithless to her husband. (Num. V, 12ff).

(30) The woman who married a second husband under an honest misapprehension. Biblically she is permitted to live again with her husband since her second marriage was entered into on the basis of a report by a witness, on the strength of which she was by Biblical law fully permitted to contract the marriage.

(31) He must surely have known that the one was Biblical and the other only Rabbinical! וְדַקְאָרִי לָהּ מֵאֵי קִאָרִי אָרָא or אָרִי (cf. Gr. ) ‘to speak’, ‘enquire’, ‘argue’.

(32) Lit., ‘all that the Rabbis provided, like that of the Torah they provided’.

(33) A woman suspected by her husband who warned her not to seclude herself with a certain man.

(34) I.e., to her husband.

(35) V. Glos.; in the case where the husband is a priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 11b

though she may not marry the levir!¹ — Rab can answer you. ‘I speak of a definite sotah, and you speak of a doubtful one’. But why should a definite sotah be different? Obviously because in relation to her the expression of ‘uncleanness’ is used;² is not, however, the expression of ‘uncleanness’ also used in relation to a doubtful sotah! For it was taught: R. Jose b. Kipper said in the name of R. Eleazar, The remarriage by a husband of his divorced wife is forbidden after marriage³ and permitted after betrothal,⁴ because it is stated in the Scriptures. After that she is defiled.⁵ The Sages, however, say, the one as well as the other⁶ is forbidden,⁷ and the expression⁸ ‘After that she is defiled’ implies the inclusion of a sotah who secluded herself with a man!⁹ — The underlying meaning of ‘secluded herself’ is ‘sexual intercourse’. Why then did he say ‘secluded herself’? — In order to employ a euphemism.¹⁰ But in relation to sexual intercourse, [surely,] uncleanness was actually mentioned in the Scriptures. She being defiled secretly!¹¹ — To subject the offence¹² to a negative precept.¹³ And R. Jose b. Kipper?¹⁴ — He does not hold the view that a negative precept is applicable to a sotah, even in the case where she had actually committed adultery. What is the reason? — [Because in reference to the remarriage of a divorced wife] Scripture uses the expression of¹⁵ becoming¹⁶ as well as that of matrimony.¹⁷

Rab Judah inquired of R. Shesheth: What is the law in regard to the rival of a woman whom her former husband remarried after her second marriage and died?¹⁸ According to the view of R. Jose b. Kipper the question does not arise. For R. Jose b. Kipper having stated that ‘uncleanness’ is mentioned in the case of him who remarried his divorced wife, it follows that her rival is subject to the very same restrictions. And if [objection be raised] from the Scriptural text, She is an abomination,¹⁹ [it may be replied that the implication is] that she is an abomination and not her children,²⁰ her rival, however, being an abomination. The question, however, arises on the view of the Rabbis: Does the Scriptural text,²¹ despite the fact that the Rabbis had applied the expression ‘uncleanness’ to the sotah, also bear its ordinary meaning,²² or since it²³ was once torn away [from its ordinary meaning] it must in all respects so remain?²⁴ Others say: According to the Rabbis no question arises, for since the text has once been torn away [from its ordinary meaning] it must in all respects so remain. The question, however, arises according to the view of R. Jose b. Kipper: What is the law? [Is it assumed that] although R. Jose b. Kipper stated that the expression of ‘uncleanness’ refers to the remarriage of a divorced wife, the All Merciful has written ‘She is an abomination’ to indicate that ‘she’ is an abomination but not her rival,²⁵ or is the implication, perhaps, that ‘she’ is an abomination, but her children are not; a rival, however, being an abomination?²⁶ — The other replied: You have learnt it, ‘If one of them²⁷ was a permitted wife and the other a forbidden one; if he²⁸ submit to halizah he must submit to that of the forbidden one;²⁹ and if he marries he marries the permitted one.’²⁹ Now what is meant by ‘permitted’ and ‘forbidden’? If it be suggested that ‘permitted’ means permitted for all the world,³⁰ and ‘forbidden’ means forbidden for all the world,³¹ what practical difference, in view of the fact that she is in either case suitable for him,³² could this make to him? Consequently ‘permitted’ must mean permitted to him, and ‘forbidden’, forbidden to him; and this may happen where³³ he³⁴ remarried his divorced wife;³⁵ and yet it was taught, ‘and if he marries he marries the permitted one’!³⁶ — No; ‘permitted’ may still mean permitted to all the world³⁰ and ‘forbidden’, forbidden for all the world;³¹ and as to your question, ‘what practical difference, in view of the fact that she is in either case suitable for him, could this make’, one must take into account the moral lesson³⁷ of R. Joseph. For R. Joseph stated: Here³⁸ Rabbi taught that a man shall not pour the water out of his cistern so long as others may require it.³⁹

Come and hear: ‘Where a man remarried his divorced wife after she had been married,⁴⁰ she and her rival are to perform the halizah.’ Is it possible to say ‘she and her rival’?⁴¹ Consequently it must mean, ‘Either she or her rival.’⁴² Did you not, however, have recourse to an interpretation?⁴³ [You might as well] interpret thus: She is to perform halizah, while her rival may either perform halizah or be married by the levir.

R. Hiyya b. Abba said: R. Johanan inquired as to what is the law⁴⁴ in regard to a rival of a divorced woman whom her former husband remarried after her second marriage. Said R. Ammi to him: Enquire rather regarding herself!⁴⁵ — Concerning herself I have no question since her case may be inferred a minori ad majus: If she is forbidden to him⁴⁶ to whom she was originally⁴⁷ permitted, how much more so to the man⁴⁸ to whom she was originally⁴⁷ forbidden!⁴⁹ The question, however, remains concerning her rival: Is the inference a minori ad majus strong enough to exclude a rival⁵⁰ or not?

R. Nahman b. Isaac taught as follows: R. Hiyya b. Abba said, R. Johanan enquired as to what is the law⁴⁴ in regard to a divorced woman whom her husband remarried after her second marriage. Said R. Ammi to him: Enquire rather regarding her rival! — Concerning her rival I have no question, for an inference a minori ad majus⁵¹ is not strong enough to exclude a rival;⁵⁰ the question, however, remains regarding herself. Is the inference a minori ad majus strong enough [to be acted upon] where a precept⁵² is involved or not?

(1) If the sotah herself must go through the ceremony of halizah, much more so her rival; how then could Rab state that the rival of a sotah (and much more so the sotah herself, v. supra p. 53, n. 1) is exempt from halizah?

(2) Num. V, 13.

(3) With a second husband who subsequently died or divorced her.

(4) Where no marriage with the second man took place, and he died.

(5) Deut. XXIV, 4, referring, in the opinion of R. Eleazar, to a divorced woman who had married a second husband.

(6) Married or betrothed.

(7) This is deduced by the Sages from And goeth and becometh another man's wife (Deut. XXIV, 2) which, they maintain, implies betrothal as well as marriage.

(8) Lit., ‘but what do I establish’.

(9) That the husband must not take her back. This clearly shews that the expression of ‘uncleanness’ was also used concerning a doubtful sotah.

(10) Lit., ‘he took a nice (or superior) expression’.

(11) Num. V, 13; what need, then, was there for the implication of the text of Deut. XXIV, 4?

(12) Of remarrying a sotah.

- (13) Lit., 'to cause to stand concerning it in a negative (prohibition)'; the negative can only be derived from Deut. XXIV, 4: May not take her again to be his wife.
- (14) Who applies the entire text to the remarriage of a divorced wife, whence does he derive the law concerning the sotah?
- (15) Lit., 'it is written concerning it'.
- (16) Deut. XXIV, 2, And she departeth out of his house, and goeth and becometh (ותיתה) another man's wife.
- (17) Ibid., Or if the latter husband (השי) die, implying that the divorced woman's connection with the second man must be that of 'husband and wife', i.e., lawful matrimony. In the case of the sotah the intercourse was unlawful and cannot come, therefore, under the prohibition of Deut. XXIV, 4.
- (18) Is the rival subject to the levirate marriage and halizah?
- (19) Deut. XXIV, 4, dealing with a woman remarried after divorce. The text She is an abomination. תועבה היא might be taken to imply that the designation, and consequently the restrictions, refer to the woman only (היא= she) and not to her rival.
- (20) I.e., the exclusion of היא may refer not to her rival but to her children who, unlike their mother who is regarded as an 'abomination', may marry into priestly families.
- (21) Describing the woman (or the act of remarriage) as 'uncleanness'.
- (22) I.e., its bearing on the woman remarried (v. previous note), with whose case the text in its ordinary meaning is concerned, and consequently on her rival also.
- (23) The expression of uncleanness.
- (24) Lit., 'that it was uprooted it was uprooted', i.e., since it was removed from its context and applied to the sotah, it can never be re-applied to its original case. Hence a rival would not come under the same restrictions as the sotah herself.
- (25) To whom, consequently, the restrictions would not apply.
- (26) And consequently subject to the same restrictions as the woman herself.
- (27) Two widows of a brother who died without issue.
- (28) The levir.
- (29) Infra 44a, and thereby liberates also the other widow, her rival.
- (30) I.e., even to priests.
- (31) In case she was once, e.g., a divorced woman and is thus forbidden to marry a priest.
- (32) He being an ordinary Israelite.
- (33) Lit., 'and what is it'.
- (34) The deceased brother.
- (35) In which case the woman who was remarried is forbidden to the levir as she was forbidden to his deceased brother who had married her unlawfully, while her rival, having been lawfully married, is permitted to the levir.
- (36) Which clearly shews that the rival of a woman remarried by her former husband is subject to the levirate marriage.
- (37) Lit., 'because of'.
- (38) In the Mishnah cited where it is stated that halizah is to be performed with the forbidden one.
- (39) A man should not destroy anything which may be of use to others though it is of no use to him. In the case under discussion, the levir submits to halizah from the forbidden one and thus liberates the permitted one to marry even a priest to whom she would have been forbidden had the halizah been performed by her.
- (40) To a second husband who divorced her or died.
- (41) Halizah surely is performed by one of the widows only!
- (42) Which supplies an answer to the enquiry addressed by Rab Judah to R. Shesheth.
- (43) 'He and her rival' was interpreted as 'Either etc.'
- (44) In respect of the levirate marriage.
- (45) The remarried woman.
- (46) Her first husband.
- (47) Before she married her second husband.
- (48) The levir.
- (49) As brother's wife.
- (50) From the levirate marriage.
- (51) V. previous paragraph.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 12a

— The other replied,¹ You have learned it: If one of them was a permitted wife and the other a forbidden one; if she submits to halizah he must submit to that of the forbidden one; and if he marries, he marries the permitted one. Now, what is meant by 'permitted' and 'forbidden'? If it be suggested that 'permitted' means permitted to all the world and 'forbidden' means forbidden to all the world, what practical difference, in view of the fact that she is in either case suitable for him, could this make to him? Consequently 'permitted' must mean permitted to him, and 'forbidden', forbidden to him; and this may happen where he remarries his divorced wife; and yet it was taught. 'If he marries he marries the permitted one'!² — No; 'permitted' may still mean permitted to all the world, and 'forbidden', forbidden to all the world; and as to your question. 'What practical difference, in view of the fact that she is in either case suitable for him, could this make'? One must take into account the moral lesson of R. Joseph. For R. Joseph said: Here, Rabbi taught that a man shall not pour the water out of his cistern so long as others may require it.³

Come and hear: 'Where a man remarried his divorced wife after she had been married, she and her rival are to perform halizah.' Is it possible to say 'she and her rival'? Consequently it must mean, 'either she or her rival.'⁴ Did you not, however, have recourse to an interpretation? [You might as well] interpret thus: She is to perform halizah, while her rival may either perform halizah or be married by the levir.

R. Levi b. Memel said in the name of Mar 'Ukba in the name of Samuel: The rival of a mema'eneth⁵ is forbidden. To whom [is she forbidden]? If it be suggested, to the brothers,⁶ [it may be retorted], now that she herself⁷ is permitted,⁸ for Samuel said, 'If she refused one brother she is permitted to marry the other',⁹ is there any question that her rival is permitted!⁸ Hence [it means] to himself.¹⁰ Wherein, however, does the mema'eneth¹¹ differ¹² that she is in consequence permitted to the other brothers? Obviously, in that she had taken no action in relation to them;¹³ but her rival also had taken no action in relation to them!¹⁴ — It is an enactment made to prevent marriage with the rival of one's daughter¹⁵ who was a mema'eneth.¹⁶

Is, however, the rival of one's daughter who is a mema'eneth forbidden? Surely we learned, IF, HOWEVER, ANY AMONG THESE DIED, OR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, OR WERE DIVORCED¹⁷ [etc.] THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED. Now, against whom was the declaration of refusal made? If it be suggested that she refused the husband, then this case is identical with that of a divorced woman.¹⁸ Consequently it must refer to refusal of the levir!¹⁹ — No; it may, in fact, refer to the refusal of a husband, but there are two kinds of divorce.²⁰

Wherein, however, does the refusal of a husband differ?²¹ Obviously in that she thereby annuls the original marriage; but when she refused the levir she has also annulled the original marriage! — [It differs] in respect of what Rami b. Ezekiel had learnt. For Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: If she²² declared her refusal against the husband she is permitted to marry his father;²³ if against the levir, she is forbidden to his father.²⁴ From this it clearly follows that from the moment she becomes subject to the levirate marriage²⁵ she is looked upon as his²⁶ daughter-in-law; similarly here also²⁷ she is looked upon as the rival of his daughter from the moment she²⁸ becomes subject to the levirate marriage.

Said R. Assi: The rival of a woman incapable of procreation is forbidden,²⁹ for it is said in the Scriptures, And it shall be that the firstborn that she beareth,³⁰ which excludes a woman incapable of procreation, since she does not bear.³¹ R. Shesheth raised an objection: In the case where three brothers were married to three women who were strangers to one another, and one of them having died, the second brother addressed to her³² a ma'amar³³ and died, behold these³⁴ must perform the halizah but may not marry the levir; for it is said, And one of them die [etc.] her husband's brother shall go in unto her,³⁵ only she³⁶ who is tied to one levir³⁷ but not she who is tied to two levirs;³⁸ and concerning this it was taught: R. Joseph said, 'This is the rival of a paternal brother's wife whose prohibition³⁹ is due to her double subjection to the levirate marriage,⁴⁰ a case the like of which we do not find through out the Torah'.⁴¹ Now, what does the expression 'This is' exclude? Does it not exclude the rival of a woman incapable of procreation, who is permitted!⁴² — No; it excludes the rival of a woman incapable of procreation who is forbidden. What, then, is meant by the expression, 'This is'?⁴³ — It is that in this case, where the subjection to the levirate marriage has caused the prohibition, her rival requires halizah; in the case, however, of a woman incapable of procreation even halizah is not required. What is the reason? — The prohibition of the one⁴⁴ is Pentateuchal;⁴⁵ that of the other only Rabbinical.⁴⁶

We learnt; IF, HOWEVER, ANY AMONG THESE DIED, OR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, OR WERE DIVORCED, OR WERE FOUND INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED!⁴⁷ — This is no difficulty; the one⁴⁸ is a case where he⁴⁹ knew her defect⁵⁰ while the other⁵¹ is a case where⁵² he did not know of it.⁵³ The inference from our Mishnah also proves this; for it was stated WERE FOUND⁵⁴ and not 'were'. This proves it.

- (51) Our Mishnah.
- (52) The husband now deceased.
- (53) At the time he married her. Since her defect was unknown to him the marriage which had taken place under a misapprehension is invalid. The woman, therefore, is not his lawful wife, and her rival cannot be regarded as a legal rival. Hence the statement in our Mishnah that such a rival is permitted.
- (54) Implying discovery after the event, i.e., after the marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 12b

The law is that the rival of a woman incapable of procreation is permitted, even though he¹ knew her defect,² and even the rival of one's own daughter who was incapable of procreation [is permitted].³ But what about the expression WERE FOUND⁴ in our Mishnah? — Read, 'were'.

When Rabin came⁵ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The rival of a mema'eneth,⁶ the rival of a woman incapable of procreation, as well as the rival of a divorced woman who had been remarried to her former husband,⁷ are all permitted.

R. Bebai recited before R. Nahman: Three [categories of] women may⁸ use an absorbent⁹ in their marital intercourse:¹⁰ A minor, a pregnant woman and a nursing woman. The minor,¹¹ because [otherwise] she might¹² become pregnant, and as a result¹³ might die. A pregnant woman,¹¹ because [otherwise]. she might¹² cause her foetus to degenerate into a sandal.¹³ A nursing woman,¹¹ because [otherwise] she might¹² have to wean her child prematurely¹⁴ and this would result in his death. And what is the age of such a minor?¹⁵ From the age of eleven years and one day until the age of twelve years and one day. One who is under,¹⁶ or over this age¹⁷ must carry on her marital intercourse in the usual manner. This is the opinion of R. Meir. The Sages, however, say: The one as well as the other carries on her marital intercourse in the usual manner, and mercy will be vouchsafed from heaven,¹⁸ for it is said in the Scriptures. The Lord preserveth the simple.¹⁹

Since it has been stated, 'because she might become pregnant and as a result might die' it may be implied that it is possible for²⁰ a minor to be pregnant and not die. But, if so, one could imagine a case where²¹ a mother-in-law should be in a position to make a declaration of refusal,²² whereas we learned, ONE CANNOT SAY OF A MAN'S MOTHER-IN-LAW, THE MOTHER OF HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW AND THE MOTHER OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW THAT THEY WERE FOUND INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION OR THAT THEY MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL! — Read, 'because she might become pregnant and die';²³ for Rabbah b. Liwai said: She²⁴ is subject to an age limitation. Prior to that period²⁵ she does not conceive at all; during that period²⁵ she dies and her embryo dies; after that period²⁵ both she and her embryo survive. But is it really so? Surely, Rabbah b. Samuel recited: One cannot say of a man's mother-in-law, the mother of his mother-in-law and the mother of his father-in-law that they were found incapable of procreation or that they made a declaration of refusal, since they have already given birth to children!²⁶ — But [the reading], in fact, is, 'because she might become pregnant and as a result might die'. But, [then, the previously mentioned] difficulty remains!²⁷ — R. Safra replied: Children are like marks of puberty.²⁸ Others Say: Children are more conclusive proof than the marks of puberty. What practical difference is there between the two statements? — [It is this: That] even he who follows R. Judah who stated, '[a girl may exercise the right of refusal] until the black²⁹ predominates'³⁰ admits in the case of children.³¹

(1) The deceased brother, at the time when he married.

(2) And nevertheless consented to the marriage, which is consequently valid, and the woman is his lawful wife.

(3) The rival of a forbidden relative is forbidden only where the latter would have been subject to the precept of the levirate marriage if she had been no relative. In the case of a wife incapable of procreation, however, since she is not subject to the levirate marriage even where she is no relative at all, her rival even where she (the wife) is a forbidden relative, is regarded as the rival of one in relation to whom the precept of levirate marriage is not applicable at all. Cf. הלכות גדולות quoted by Rashi.

(4) V. p. 61, n. 14.

(5) From Palestine to Babylon.

(6) V. Glos. s.v. mi'un. In this case it refers to one who refused the levir (V. Rashi a.l.).

(7) After she had been married by a second husband who divorced her or died.

(8) [So Rashi. R. Tam: Should use, v. Tosaf s.v. שש.]

(9) מוך, hackled wool or flax.

(10) To prevent conception.

(11) May use the absorbent.

(12) Lit., 'perhaps'.

(13) סנדל lit., 'a flat fish', i.e., a flat, fish-shaped abortion due to superfetation.

(14) Owing to her second conception.

(15) Who is capable of conception but exposed thereby to the danger of death.

(16) When no conception is possible.

(17) When pregnancy involves no fatal consequences.

(18) To save her from danger.

(19) Ps. CXVI, 6; those who are unable to protect themselves.

(20) Lit., 'there is'.

(21) Lit., 'we found'.

(22) In the case, for instance, where the minor gave birth to a child in her twelfth year and that child was betrothed before the year was over. The minor who thus becomes a mother-in-law is entitled to make a declaration of refusal before, and until she enters her thirteenth year.

(23) I.e., while conception is a matter of doubt, death is a certainty whenever conception happened to take place.

(24) A minor.

(25) The age of eleven years and one day to the age of twelve and one day.

(26) Rabbah does not state, 'since they already grew up' but 'gave birth', which proves that even a minor (not yet grown up) is capable of bearing living children.

(27) From here it appears that a minor can bear children while from our Mishnah it follows that she cannot.

(28) As soon, therefore, as she gave birth to a child the minor is assumed to have passed out of the age of minority into that of puberty. Hence it is impossible for a mother, whatever her age, ever to make a declaration of refusal to which a minor only is entitled.

(29) I.e., the pubic hair.

(30) The growth of two hairs which the Rabbis regard as a definite mark of puberty not being considered by R. Judah as conclusive proof. Keth. 36a, B.B. 156a, Nid. 52a.

(31) That they provide definite proof of puberty irrespective of the state of the hair.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 13a

R. Zebid, however, stated: No children are possible prior to the appearance of the marks of puberty.¹ Then let an examination be held!² — There is the possibility that they might have fallen off.³ This reply is perfectly satisfactory according to him who holds that such a possibility is taken into consideration,⁴ what, however, can be said according to him who holds that no such contingency need be considered? — Even according to him who holds that no such contingency need be considered, the possibility must be taken into consideration in this case on account of the pains of birth.⁵

HOW IS THE EXEMPTION OF THEIR RIVALS [BY THE WOMEN MENTIONED] TO BE UNDERSTOOD? Etc. Whence is this law⁶ deduced? — Rab Judah replied: [From] Scripture which stated, li-zeror,⁷ [implying that] the Torah included many rivals.⁸ R. Ashi replied. 'It⁹ is arrived at by reasoning: Why is a rival forbidden? Surely because she takes the place of the forbidden relative; the rival's rival also takes the place of the forbidden relative'.

HOW [IS ONE TO UNDERSTAND THE STATEMENT THAT] IF THEY HAD DIED etc. Even if he¹⁰ married¹¹ first and then divorced?¹² This, then, would be contradictory [to the following Mishnah]: '[The case of] three brothers two of whom were married to two sisters and the third was married to a stranger, and one of the husbands of the sisters divorced his wife while the one who married the stranger died, and he who had divorced his wife then married the widow¹³ and died, is one concerning which it has been said, that if they died or were divorced, their rivals are permitted'.¹⁴ The reason, then,¹⁵ is because the divorce¹⁶ took place first and the marriage¹⁷ was subsequent to it, but had the marriage¹⁷ taken place first and the divorce¹⁶ after it, [the rival would] not [have been permitted]!¹⁸ — R. Jeremiah replied: Break it up!¹⁹ He who taught the one did not teach the other. The one Tanna²⁰ is of the opinion that it is the death²¹ which subjects the widow to the levirate marriage²² while the other²³ holds the opinion that it is the original marriage that subjects her to the levirate marriage.²⁴ Raba said: [Both statements] may, in fact, represent the views of [one Tanna,] it²⁵ being a case of 'this; and there is no need to state that'.²⁶

WHOSOEVER IS ENTITLED TO MAKE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL [etc.]. Then let her²⁷ declare her refusal now²⁸ and thus enable [her rival] to be married to the levir!²⁹ May it then³⁰ be suggested that this supports R. Oshaiah? For R. Oshaiah said: She³¹ may annul [the levir's] *ma'amar*³² by her declaration of refusal,³³ but may not sever by such a declaration the levirate bond!³⁴ — No;³⁵ the case of the rival of a forbidden relative is different;³⁶ for Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: If a minor made a declaration of refusal against her husband she is permitted to marry his father.³⁷ If, however, she made her declaration of refusal against the levir³⁸ she is forbidden to marry his father.³⁹ From this it clearly follows that from the moment she becomes subject to the levirate marriage⁴⁰ she is looked upon as his⁴¹ daughter-in-law; similarly here also⁴² she is looked upon as the rival of his daughter from the moment she becomes subject to the levirate marriage.⁴³ MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF THE FOLLOWING] SIX RELATIVES, MARRIAGE WITH WHOM IS MORE RESTRICTED THAN WITH THESE,⁴⁴ IN THAT THEY MAY ONLY BE MARRIED TO STRANGERS,⁴⁵ MARRIAGE WITH THEIR RIVALS IS PERMITTED:⁴⁶ HIS MOTHER.⁴⁷ HIS FATHER'S WIFE,⁴⁸ HIS FATHER'S SISTER,⁴⁸ HIS PATERNAL SISTER.⁴⁸ HIS FATHER'S BROTHER'S WIFE⁴⁸ AND HIS PATERNAL BROTHER'S WIFE.⁴⁸

BETH SHAMMAI PERMIT THE RIVALS⁴⁹ TO THE SURVIVING BROTHERS, AND BETH HILLEL PROHIBIT THEM.

(1) Should an apparent minor, whatever her age, ever give birth to a child it must be taken for granted that the marks of puberty had already appeared, and the age of minority had passed.

(2) Why should the existence of the marks be left to conjecture when an examination would definitely determine the facts?

(3) And the examination would prove nothing.

(4) This is a question in dispute in Nid. 46a.

(5) Which may have caused the falling off of the hair.

(6) Lit., 'these words'. That a rival's rival is also exempt.

(7) Lev. XVIII, 18, to be a rival. V. supra 3b.

(8) For explanation, v. p. 12, n. 8.

(9) The exemption of a rival's rival.

(10) The brother now deceased.

(11) The rival.

(12) His first wife, the forbidden relative. In such a case, is the rival, though the two were rivals prior to the divorce, permitted to the levir wherever the forbidden relative was dead or divorced at the time their husband died and the question of the levirate marriage arose?

(13) Lit., 'her',

(14) Infra 30a.

(15) Why the rival in this case is permitted.

(16) Of one of the sisters.

(17) Of the widow.

(18) How, then, could this be reconciled with our Mishnah from which it has been inferred that 'even if he married first and then divorced' the rival is permitted?

(19) תרבא, rt. תבר, Heb. שבר 'break', 'divide'.

(20) Of our Mishnah.

(21) Of the husband.

(22) And if at that time the women were no longer rivals it matters little whether marriage or divorce (cf. supra nn. 5 and 4) took place first.

(23) The Tanna of the Mishnah cited from 30a infra.

(24) Consequently, if the marriage of the second took place after the divorce of the first, levirate marriage is permitted since the two have never been real rivals. If, however, the marriage preceded the divorce, even if only by a fraction of time, the two have become rivals, and the rival of a forbidden relative is forbidden for ever, even after the rivalry had ceased.

(25) The statements and arrangement of our Mishnah and that cited from 30a infra

(26) זו ואין צריך לומר זו, one of the systems adopted in arranging legal statements. Our Mishnah permits 'this', the case of the rival whose marriage preceded the divorce of the forbidden relative, and consequently 'there is no need to state that', the case (infra 30a) of a rival whose marriage followed the divorce of the forbidden relative. (Cf. supra n. 12).

(27) The forbidden relative who is still a minor.

- (28) And thus annul the original marriage.
- (29) Since as a result of the annulment of the marriage the other would no more be the rival of a forbidden relative.
- (30) As such a declaration is not allowed.
- (31) A minor.
- (32) V. Glos. Since the actual marriage had not yet taken place.
- (33) She has only to perform the halizah; but there is no need for a divorce which would have been required had she been of age (v. infra 50b).
- (34) I.e., she has no power to annul the original marriage in order to be exempt thereby from halizah also. Similarly here (v. note 4) the declaration of the minor has no force to annul the original marriage and thus (v. supra note 3) to enable her rival to marry the levir.
- (35) The inference from our Mishnah provides no support for R. Oshaia.
- (36) The prohibition of a minor's declaration in this case is not Biblical, but a Rabbinical enactment made in order to prevent laxity in the law of rivals of forbidden relatives (cf. infra n. 17).
- (37) The refusal having completely annulled the marriage, the minor and her former father-in-law are now mere strangers.
- (38) I.e., after the death of her husband, when she became subject to the levirate marriage of his brother.
- (39) Her former father-in-law who is also the father of the levir whom she refused.
- (40) Lit., 'falling'.
- (41) The levir's father's.
- (42) The case of a rival of one's daughter.
- (43) Had the original marriage been allowed to be annulled by the daughter's present declaration, and had her rival in consequence been permitted to marry the minor's father, any rival of one's daughter might similarly be allowed and thus an important restriction against incest would be broken down. (V. supra n. 10 and cf. text and notes, supra 12a).
- (44) The fifteen enumerated in the previous Mishnah, supra 2af.
- (45) But never to one's paternal brothers.
- (46) Though they themselves ate forbidden. Their husbands having been strangers, the law prohibiting the marriage of rivals, which is only applicable in connection with the levirate marriage, does not apply. Should one's brother unlawfully marry one of these six relatives his marriage would be regarded as null and void and the law relating to the rivals would still be inapplicable. (Cf. Maimonides, Commentary on the Mishnah a.l.).
- (47) Who is also forbidden to his paternal brother as 'his father's wife'.
- (48) Who obviously stands in the same relationship to his paternal brother.
- (49) In respect of the levirate marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 13b

IF THEY¹ PERFORM THE HALIZAH,² BETH SHAMMAI DECLARE THEM INELIGIBLE TO MARRY A PRIEST,³ AND BETH HILLEL DECLARE THEM TO BE ELIGIBLE.⁴ IF THEY WERE MARRIED TO THE LEVIRS, BETH SHAMMAI DECLARE THEM ELIGIBLE [TO MARRY A PRIEST],⁵ AND BETH HILLEL DECLARE THEM INELIGIBLE.⁶ THOUGH THESE FORBODE WHAT THE OTHERS PERMITTED, AND THESE REGARDED AS INELIGIBLE WHAT THE OTHERS DECLARED ELIGIBLE, BETH SHAMMAI, NEVERTHELESS, DID NOT REFRAIN FROM MARRYING WOMEN FROM [THE FAMILIES OF] BETH HILLEL, NOR DID BETH HILLEL [REFRAIN FROM MARRYING WOMEN] FROM [THE FAMILIES OF] BETH SHAMMAI. [SIMILARLY, IN RESPECT OF] ALL [QUESTIONS OF RITUAL] CLEANNES AND UNCLEANNES, WHICH THESE DECLARED CLEAN WHERE THE OTHERS DECLARED UNCLEAN, NEITHER OF THEM ABSTAINED FROM USING THE UTENSILS OF THE OTHERS FOR THE PREPARATION OF FOOD THAT WAS RITUALLY CLEAN.⁷

GEMARA. R. Simeon b. Pazzi said: What is Beth Shammai's reason?⁸ — Because it is written, The outside⁹ wife of the dead shall not be married unto one not of his kin;¹⁰ 'outside'¹¹ implies that there is also an internal,¹² and the All Merciful said, She shall not marry [unto one not of his kin].¹³

And Beth Hillel?¹⁴ — They require the text for the exposition which Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that betrothal [by a stranger] is of no validity in the case of a sister-in-law?¹⁵ For it is said in the Scriptures, The wife of the dead shall not be married¹⁶ outside¹⁷ unto one not of his kin;¹⁸ there shall be no validity in any marriage of a stranger with her.¹⁹ And Beth Shammai? — Is it written ‘la-huz’?²⁰ Surely ‘huzah’²¹ was written. And Beth Hillel? — Since the expression used was huzah²² it is just the same as if la-huz had been written; as it was taught: R. Nehemiah said, ‘In the case of every word which requires a ‘lamed’ at the beginning²³ Scripture has placed a ‘he’²⁴ at the end; and at the School of R. Ishmael the following examples were given:²⁵ Elim, Elimah;²⁶ Mahanayim, Mahanayimah;²⁷ Mizrayim, Mizraimah;²⁸ Dibelathaimah;²⁹ Yerushalaimah;³⁰ midbarah.³¹

Whence do Beth Shammai derive the deduction made by Rab Judah in the name of Rab? — It is derived from Unto one not of his kin.³² Then let Beth Hillel also derive it from ‘Unto one not of his kin’! — This is so indeed. What need, then, was there for ‘huzah’? — To include one who was only betrothed.³³ And the others? — They derive it from the use of ha-huzah where huzah could have been used.³⁴ And the others? — A deduction from huzah ha-huzah does not appeal to them.

Raba said: Beth Shammai's reason³⁵ is that one prohibition³⁶ cannot take effect on another prohibition.³⁷ This explanation is satisfactory in the case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother married³⁸ afterwards, since the prohibition of marrying a wife's sister³⁹ could not come and take effect on the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife;⁴⁰ where, however, the surviving brother had married first⁴¹ and the deceased married later,⁴² the prohibition of ‘wife's sister’ was, surely, first!⁴³ — Since the prohibition of a ‘brother's wife’ cannot take effect on the prohibition of ‘wife's sister’, [any of the other widows] is the rival of a forbidden relative to whom⁴⁴ the precept of the levirate marriage is inapplicable, and is consequently permitted.⁴⁵

IF THEY HAD PERFORMED THE HALIZAH, BETH SHAMMAI DECLARE THEM INELIGIBLE etc. Is not this obvious?⁴⁶ — [It had to be stated] in order to exclude [the instruction] of R. Johanan b. Nuri who said: Come and let us issue an ordinance that the rivals⁴⁷ perform the halizah but do not marry the levir.⁴⁸ Hence it was taught that Beth Hillel declare them eligible.⁴⁹

IT THEY WERE MARRIED TO THE LEVIRS etc. BETH HILLEL DECLARE THEM INELIGIBLE. What need again was there for this? — Because it was taught, IF THEY PERFORM THE HALIZAH⁵⁰ it was also taught, IF THEY WERE MARRIED TO THE LEVIRS.⁵¹

We learned elsewhere: The Scroll of Esther⁵² is read on the eleventh, the twelfth, the thirteenth, the fourteenth or the fifteenth [of Adar].⁵³ but not earlier⁵⁴ or later.⁵⁵ Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: Apply here the text of Lo tithgodedu,⁵⁶ you shall not form separate sects!⁵⁷ (Is not Lo tithgodedu required for its own context, the All Merciful having said, ‘You shall not inflict upon yourselves any bruise for the dead’?⁵⁸ — If so, Scripture should have said, Lo tithgodedu,⁵⁹ why did it say ‘Lo tithgodedu’?⁶⁰ hence it must be inferred that its object was this.⁶¹ Might it not then be suggested that the entire text refers to this only?⁶² — If so, Scripture should have said, Lo thagodu,⁶³ why did it say ‘Lo tithgodedu’? Hence the two deductions.)⁶⁴ — The former answered: Have you not yet learned,⁶⁵ ‘Wherever it is customary to do manual labour on the Passover Eve until midday it may be done; wherever it is customary not to do any work it may not be done’?⁶⁶ The first said to him: I am speaking to you of a prohibition, for R. Shaman b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: ‘Scripture having said, To confirm these days of Purim in their appointed times,⁶⁷ the Sages have ordained for them different times,⁶⁸ and you speak to me of a custom!⁶⁹ But is there no prohibition there?⁷⁰ Surely we learned, ‘Beth Shammai prohibit work during the night⁷¹ and Beth Hillel permit it’!⁷² — The other said to him: In that case,⁷³ anyone seeing [a man abstaining from work] would suppose him to be out of work.⁷⁴ But do not BETH SHAMMAI PERMIT THE RIVALS TO THE OTHER BROTHERS AND BETH HILLEL FORBID THEM!⁷⁵

- (1) The rivals.
- (2) With the brothers.
- (3) In the opinion of Beth Shammai the halizah is legal and any woman who performed legal halizah is, like one divorced, forbidden to marry a priest.
- (4) In their opinion the halizah was unnecessary and may, therefore, be treated as if it had never taken place.
- (5) When their husbands die.
- (6) Because having married persons to whom they are forbidden they are regarded as harlots who are ineligible ever to marry a priest.
- (7) Lit., 'do clean things, these upon these'.
- (8) For permitting the rivals to marry the other brothers.
- (9) החוצה is rendered, 'the one who is the outside one', the word being regarded as an adjective fem. with the relative. E.V., 'abroad'.
- (10) Deut. XXV, 5.
- (11) I.e., the one who is not otherwise related to the levir.
- (12) Related to the levir.
- (13) But only unto her husband's brother (Deut. XXV, 5), which shews that a rival is permitted to the other brothers.
- (14) Who prohibit the rival to the brothers, how do they explain this text?
- (15) Before halizah had been performed.
- (16) Lit., 'she shall not be', לא תהיה (rt. היה).
- (17) Cf. E.V. for החוצה, supra note 3.
- (18) Deut. XXV, 5.
- (19) Lit., 'a stranger shall have no being (הויה of the root היה) in her'.
- (20) לחויץ, lit., 'to the outside'.
- (21) החוצה, v. supra note 3.
- (22) חוצה.
- (23) To indicate direction.
- (24) The he being the he local.
- (25) Lit., 'he recited' or 'taught'.
- (26) 'To אילם appears as אילמה (Ex. XV, 27) instead of לאילם.
- (27) 'To מחנים' appears as מחמימה (II Sam. XVII, 24) instead of למחמים.
- (28) 'To מצרים', מצרימה, Gen. XII, 10.
- (29) 'To דבלימה, דבלימה (Num. XXXIII, 47).
- (30) 'To ירושלים' (Jerusalem) ירושלימה (Ezek. VIII, 3).
- (31) 'To מדבר (wilderness or place-name) מדברב (I Chron. V, 9).
- (32) Deut. XXV, 5.
- (33) To the deceased brother. Such a widow also is subject to the levirate marriage as if she had been actually married. 'Huzah' implies (cf. supra p. 68, n. 3) 'outside', i.e., one who is not within the marriage bond.
- (34) The addition of the 'he' in החוצה where חוצה would have conveyed the same meaning implies the inclusion of the betrothed. (V. n. 6.)
- (35) V. p. 68, n. 2, supra.
- (36) That, e.g., of marrying a brother's wife.
- (37) That of marrying a forbidden relative (e.g., a daughter). Since the latter prohibition takes no effect in such a case, the forbidden relative whom the levirate bond does not consequently affect may be regarded as non-existent, so far as her levirate obligations are concerned. Her rivals, therefore, come under the category of complete strangers and are consequently permitted to the brothers.
- (38) A sister of his brother's wife.
- (39) Which arose later.
- (40) As legally the widow is only 'his brother's wife' but not 'his wife's sister', her rivals may justly be regarded as strangers who are permitted.
- (41) And his wife's sister has in consequence become forbidden to him.
- (42) When the prohibition of a brother's wife arose.

- (43) And consequently had taken effect; why then are her rivals permitted? This objection is based on the assumption that Raba, in stating the prohibition of marrying a forbidden relative cannot take effect owing to the prohibition of 'brother's wife', was referring only to such prohibitions as are due to a marriage contract, e.g., a wife's sister.
- (44) Lit., 'in the place'.
- (45) V. supra p. 69, n. 10.
- (46) What need then was there for stating it.
- (47) Of forbidden relatives.
- (48) And being subject to halizah, even though on account of a Rabbinical ordinance only, it might have been assumed that they are ineligible for marriage with a priest. (Cf. supra p. 67, n. 9.)
- (49) Indicating that the rivals in such a case are not even Rabbinically subject to the halizah.
- (50) For the reason given supra. V. previous note.
- (51) Halizah and marriage usually being the only alternatives.
- (52) מגילה 'scroll', always signifies in Rabbinical literature the Scroll of Esther, unless the context explicitly or implicitly points to any other scroll.
- (53) According to whether the readers live in a village, a town, or a town that had been walled in the days of Joshua, and according to the day of the week on which the feast of Purim occurs.
- (54) Than the eleventh.
- (55) Than the fifteenth. Meg. 2a.
- (56) לא תתגודדו (Deut. XIV, 1), rendered by E.V. Ye shall not cut yourselves, is here taken as a form of the root אגד, 'to bind', implying the formation of separate groups, sects, factions.
- (57) Why, then, was the Scroll allowed to be read on different days by different classes of people?
- (58) Cf. supra n. 13 for the rendering of E.V.
- (59) Which would have implied the prohibition of cutting or bruising the body. (V. p. 70, n. 13.)
- (60) The longer form, the Hithpael.
- (61) Lit., 'for this it came', to imply both 'cutting the body for the dead', and 'the formation of sects'.
- (62) The formation of sects.
- (63) Which would have been understood to refer to the undesirable formation of sects.
- (64) It has thus been shewn that the formation of sects is undesirable; why then was it allowed to form separate groups to read the Scroll of Esther on different dates?
- (65) Or 'You should have replied' (Rashi).
- (66) Which shews that, despite the undesirability of forming separate groups, different customs are allowed.
- (67) Esth. IX, 31, emphasis on 'appointed times', בזמניהם.
- (68) I.e., a group who were ordained to read the Scroll on a particular date must not read it on any other date.
- (69) Manual labour on the Passover Eve is universally permitted, and its prohibition in certain places is not a matter of law but merely a question of custom.
- (70) In the case of work on the Passover Eve. (Both the day and the night preceding the Passover are designated ערב פסח Passover Eve).
- (71) Preceding the first Passover night.
- (72) Which shews, since some would be acting in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai while others would follow Beth Hillel, that even in the case of a prohibition the formation of sects is allowed.
- (73) Lit., 'there', where some people do no work though permitted.
- (74) The question of sects does not arise in such a case.
- (75) A dispute which creates faction, some following the ruling of the one authority and others that of the other.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 14a

— Do you imagine that Beth Shammai acted in accordance with their views? Beth Shammai did not act in accordance with their views.

R. Johanan, however, said: They certainly acted [in accordance with their views]. Herein they¹ differ on the same point as do Rab and Samuel. For Rab maintains that Beth Shammai did not act in accordance with their views, while Samuel maintains that they certainly did act [in accordance with their views]. When?² If it be suggested, prior to the decision of the heavenly voice,³ then what reason has he who maintains that they did not act [in accordance with their own view]? If, however, after the decision of the heavenly voice, what reason has he who maintains that they did act [in accordance with their views]? — If you wish I could say, prior to the decision of the heavenly voice; and if you prefer I could say, after the heavenly voice. ‘If you wish I could say, prior to the heavenly voice’, when, for instance, Beth Hillel were in the majority: One maintains⁴ that they⁵ did not act [according to their view] for the obvious reason that Beth Hillel were in the majority; while the other maintains⁶ that they did act [according to their view, because] a majority is to be followed only where both sides are equally matched;⁷ in this case, however, Beth Shammai were keener of intellect. ‘And if you prefer I could say, after the heavenly voice’; one maintains that they⁵ did not act [according to their view] for the obvious reason that the heavenly voice had already gone forth;⁸ while the other who maintains that they did act [according to their view] is [of the same opinion as] R. Joshua who declared that no regard need be paid to a heavenly voice.⁹

Now as to the other who ‘maintains that they did act [according to their views]’¹⁰ — should not the warning, ‘Lo tithgodedu, you shall not form separate sects’¹¹ be applied? — Abaye replied: The warning against opposing sects is only applicable to such a case as that of two courts of law in the same town, one of whom rules in accordance with the views of Beth Shammai while the other rules in accordance with the views of Beth Hillel. In the case, however, of two courts of law in two different towns [the difference in practice] does not matter. Said Raba to him: Surely the case of Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel is like that of two courts of law in the same town! The fact, however, is, said Raba, that the warning against opposing sects is only applicable to such a case as that of one court of law in the same town, half of which rule in accordance with the views of Beth Shammai while the other half rule in accordance with the views of Beth Hillel. In the case, however, of two courts of law in the same town [the difference in practice] does not matter.

Come and hear: In the place of R. Eliezer, wood was cut on the Sabbath wherewith to produce charcoal on which to forge the iron.¹² In the place of R. Jose the Galilean the flesh of fowl was eaten with milk.¹³ In the place of R. Eliezer only¹⁴ but not in the place of R. Akiba; for we learnt: R. Akiba laid it down as a general rule that any labour which may be performed on the Sabbath Eve¹⁵ does not supersede the Sabbath!¹⁶ — What an objection is this! The case, surely, is different [when the varied practices are respectively confined to] different localities. What then did he who raised this question imagine?¹⁷ — It might have been assumed that owing to the great restrictions of the Sabbath [different localities are regarded] as one place, hence it was necessary to teach us [that the law was not so].

Come and hear: R. Abbahu, whenever he happened to be in the place of R. Joshua b. Levi, carried¹⁸ a candle,¹⁹ but when he happened to be in the place of R. Johanan²⁰ he did not carry a candle!²¹ — What question is this! Has it not been said that the case is different [when the varied practices are respectively confined to] varied localities? — This is the question:²² How could R. Abbahu act in one place in one way and in another place in another way?²³ — R. Abbahu is of the same opinion as R. Joshua b. Levi,²⁴ but when he happened to be in R. Johanan's place he did not move a candle out of respect for R. Johanan. But his attendant,²⁵ surely was also there!²⁶ — He gave his attendant the necessary instructions.

Come and hear: THOUGH THESE FORBADE WHAT THE OTHERS PERMITTED . . . BETH SHAMMAI, NEVERTHELESS, DID NOT REFRAIN FROM MARRYING WOMEN FROM THE FAMILIES OF BETH HILLEL, NOR DID BETH HILLEL [REFRAIN FROM MARRYING WOMEN] FROM THE FAMILIES OF BETH SHAMMAI. Now, if it be said that they²⁷ did not act [in accordance with their own view] one can well understand why THEY DID NOT REFRAIN [from intermarrying with one another].²⁸ If, however, it be said that they²⁷ did act [in accordance with their own view], why did they not refrain? That Beth Shammai did not refrain from marrying women from the families of Beth Hillel may well be justified because such²⁹ are the children of persons guilty only of the infringement of a negative precept;³⁰ but why did not Beth Hillel refrain from [marrying women from the families of] Beth Shammai? Such,³¹ surely, being children of persons who are guilty of an offence involving kareth, are bastards!³² And if it be suggested that Beth Hillel are of the opinion that the descendant of those who are guilty of an offence involving kareth is not a bastard,³³ surely, [it may be retorted], R. Eleazar said: Although Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are in disagreement on the questions of rivals, they concede that a bastard is only he who is descended from a marriage which is forbidden as incest and punishable with kareth! Does not this then conclusively prove that they²⁷ did not act [in accordance with their own view]? — No; they²⁷ acted, indeed, [in accordance with their own view], but they²⁷ informed them³⁴ [of the existence of any such cases] and they³⁴ kept away.

This³⁵ may also be proved by logical inference; for in the final clause it was stated. [SIMILARLY IN RESPECT OF] ALL [THE QUESTIONS OF RITUAL] CLEANNESS AND UNCLEANNES, WHICH THESE DECLARED CLEAN WHERE THE OTHERS DECLARED UNCLEAN, NEITHER OF THEM ABSTAINED FROM USING THE UTENSILS OF THE OTHERS FOR THE PREPARATION OF FOOD THAT WAS RITUALLY CLEAN.

(1) R. Johanan and R. Lakish.

(2) I.e., to what period does the dispute just mentioned refer?

(3) בַּת קוֹל (v. Glos. s.v. Bath Kol), which decided that the law in practice was always to be in accordance with the rulings of Beth Hillel (v. 'Er. 13a).

(4) Lit., 'according to him who said'.

(5) Beth Shammai.

(6) Lit., 'and he who said'.

(7) In qualifications and attainments.

(8) And decided the issue in favour of Beth Hillel.

(9) B.M. 59b, Ber. 52a, 'Er. 7a, Pes. 114a.

(10) Even after the heavenly voice.

(11) Cf. supra p. 70, n. 13.

(12) The knife required for the performance of circumcision. The circumcision of a child, his health permitting, must take place on the eighth day of his birth (v. Gen. XVII, 12) even though it happened to fall on a Sabbath when manual labour is prohibited. And since the precept itself supersedes the Sabbath, all its requisites such as the wood and coals (for the preparation of warm water) and the knife may also be performed on the Sabbath.

(13) Though it is forbidden to eat meat, or any dishes made of meat, together with milk or any preparation of milk. R. Jose exempts the flesh of fowl from the general prohibition of the consumption of meat and milk. Shab. 130a, Hul. 116a.

(14) Lit., 'yes'; only there was the preparation of the requisites of circumcision permitted on the Sabbath.

(15) Such as the cutting of wood, the production of coals and the forging of the knife.

(16) Now, in view of the undesirability of creating different sects, why were all these varied practices allowed?

(17) It should have been obvious to him that different localities may differ in their custom. (Cf. supra p. 53, n. 11.)

(18) Lit., 'moved'.

(19) On the Sabbath. A candle, though it was burning when Sabbath set in may, according to R. Joshua who follows R. Simeon in permitting mukzeh (v. next note), be moved on the Sabbath after the flame has gone out.

(20) R. Johanan, following R. Judah, forbids the carrying or moving of a candle that had been burning when the Sabbath set in though it had subsequently gone out. As it was burning at the commencement of the Sabbath it was at that time fit for no other use and is regarded, therefore, as mukzeh, i.e., 'something set aside', that is not to be used for any other purpose. Anything that was mukzeh when the Sabbath began remains so until it ends.

(21) Is not the practice of carrying a candle in one place and not carrying it in another as undesirable as the formation of opposing sects?

(22) Lit., 'we say thus'.

(23) Lit., 'how did he do here thus' (bis).

(24) V. supra note 3.

- (25) Who well knew that his master was of the same opinion as R. Joshua b. Levi. The שמעיה was in many cases both an attendant on the master and also one of his learned disciples.
- (26) And might move such a candle on the Sabbath even in R. Johanan's place.
- (27) Beth Shammai.
- (28) Since, in practice, both schools followed the same principles.
- (29) The descendants from the marriages with strangers contracted by the rivals who, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel, performed no halizah.
- (30) Even Beth Shammai who require the rivals to perform the halizah regard such marriages as the infringement of a prohibition only ('The wife of the dead shall not be married abroad', Deut. XXV, 5), which does not involve kareth. The children of such marriages are consequently not deemed to be bastards.
- (31) Descendants from marriages between rivals and brothers-in-law. Such marriages, which are permitted by Beth Shammai, are regarded by Beth Hillel as forbidden under the prohibition of marrying one's brother's wife, which involves the penalty of kareth.
- (32) How, then, did they intermarry with families containing such members?
- (33) A bastard being the descendant only of such marriages as are subject to one of the capital punishments that are carried out under the jurisdiction of a court.
- (34) Beth Hillel.
- (35) That Beth Shammai duly informed Beth Hillel of any families contracting marriages which according to the ruling of the latter were forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 14b

Now, if it be agreed that the required information was supplied¹ one well understands why they² did not abstain.³ If, however, it be assumed that no such information was supplied, one can still understand why Beth Shammai did not abstain from using the utensils of Beth Hillel, since that which was regarded by Beth Hillel as ritually unclean was deemed by Beth Shammai to be ritually clean; but why did not Beth Hillel abstain from using the utensils of Beth Shammai when that which was deemed clean by Beth Shammai was regarded as unclean by Beth Hillel? Must it not, then, be concluded that they supplied them with the required information! Our point is thus proved.

In what respect is the one⁴ more conclusive proof⁵ than the other?⁶ — It might have been thought that the case of a rival⁷ receives due publicity,⁸ hence it was necessary [for the inference from the final clause] to be cited.

[Reverting to] the previous text, 'R. Eleazar said: Although Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are in disagreement on the question of rivals they concede that a bastard is only he who is descended from a marriage forbidden as incest and punishable by kareth'. Who concedes? If it be said, Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel;⁹ this, surely, is obvious, since the children of those who are guilty of the infringement of a negative precept¹⁰ are deemed legitimate.¹¹ Must it not consequently be the case that Beth Hillel conceded to Beth Shammai;¹² but this very case is subject to the penalty of kareth! — The fact is that Beth Shammai conceded to Beth Hillel; and the purpose was to exclude the opinion of R. Akiba, who maintains that a descendant from persons guilty of the infringement of a negative precept is deemed a bastard.¹³ Hence it was taught¹⁴ that a descendant from persons guilty of the infringement of a negative precept is not deemed a bastard.

Come and hear: Although Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are in disagreement on the questions of rivals, sisters,¹⁵ an old bill of divorce,¹⁶ a doubtfully married woman,¹⁷ a woman whom her husband had divorced¹⁸ and who stayed with him over the night in an inn,¹⁹ money, valuables, a perutah and the value of a perutah,²⁰ Beth Shammai did not, nevertheless, abstain from marrying women of the families of Beth Hillel, nor did Beth Hillel refrain from marrying those of Beth Shammai. This is to teach you that they shewed love and friendship towards one another, thus putting into practice the Scriptural text, Love ye truth and peace.²¹ R. Simeon said: They abstained [from marrying] in cases of certainty but did not abstain in doubtful cases.²² Now, if you agree that they²³ acted [in accordance with their own views] one can well understand why they abstained. If, however, you assume that they did not so act, why did they abstain? — And how do you understand this? Even if it be granted that they did act (in accordance with their own views), one can only understand why Beth Hillel abstained from intermarrying with Beth Shammai, because the latter, in the opinion of Beth Hillel, were guilty of offences involving kareth and their descendants were consequently bastards; as to Beth Shammai, however, why did they abstain from intermarrying with Beth Hillel, when they were [even in the opinion of Beth Shammai] only guilty of the infringement of a negative precept and [their descendants] were consequently legitimate? — As R. Nahman said elsewhere that the statement was required only for the case of the rival herself, so here also the Statement is required for the case of the rival herself.²⁴

Why is a doubtful case different from a case of a certainty? Obviously because it is forbidden. Is not a doubtful case also forbidden? — Do not read, 'from a doubtful case', but 'from a case unknown', since when they received the information they kept away.²⁵ And what does he teach us thereby? That they shewed love and friendship to one another? But this is exactly the same as the first clause!²⁶ — He teaches us this: That the entire Mishnah represents the views of R. Simeon.

Come and hear: R. Johanan b. Nuri said: 'How is this law²⁷ to be promulgated in Israel? Were we to act in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai,²⁸ the child would, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel, be a bastard.²⁹ And were we to act in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel,³⁰ the child, according to the ruling of Beth Shammai, would be tainted;³¹ come, then, and let us issue an ordinance that the rivals

 - (2) Beth Hillel, who were the more rigorous in matters of ritual cleanness.
 - (3) From using the utensils of Beth Shammai. The fact that any vessel was not clean according to Beth Hillel would have been, they knew, duly communicated to them.
 - (4) The inference from the final clause of our Mishnah relating to ritual cleanness and uncleanness.

(28) Who permit the rivals to marry the brothers.

(29) Having been born from a forbidden marriage (that of a brother's wife) which involves kareth.

(30) Permitting rivals to marry strangers without previous halizah.

perform the halizah¹ but do not marry any of the brothers'.² They had hardly time to conclude the matter before confusion set in. Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel to them, 'What now could we do with previous rivals'!³ Now, if you assume that they⁴ acted [in accordance with their own rulings] one can understand why he said, 'What shall we do'.⁵ If, however, you assume that they did not so act, what is the meaning of 'What shall we do'?⁶ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: This⁷ was required only in the case of the rival herself;⁸ and this is the meaning of the objection 'what shall we do': 'How shall we, according to Beth Shammai, proceed with those rivals [who married⁹ in accordance with the rulings] of Beth Hillel? Should they be asked to perform the halizah, they would become despised by their husbands; and should you say, "Let them be despised", [it could be retorted]. Her ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace'.¹⁰

Come and hear: R. Tarfon¹¹ said: Would that the rival of [my] daughter¹² were to fall to my lot¹³ so that I could marry her!¹⁴ — Read, 'that I could make her marry [another]'.¹⁵ But he said, 'Would'!¹⁶ — It¹⁷ implies objection to the ordinance¹⁸ of R. Johanan b. Nuri.¹⁹

Come and hear: It happened that R. Gamaliel's daughter was married to his brother Abba who died without issue, and that R. Gamaliel married her rival!²⁰ — But how do you understand this? Was R. Gamaliel²¹ one of the disciples of Beth Shammai!²² But [this is the explanation]: R. Gamaliel's daughter was different because she was incapable of procreation.²³ Since, however, it was stated in the final clause, 'Others say that R. Gamaliel's daughter was incapable of procreation' it may be inferred that the first Tanna is of the opinion that she was not incapable of procreation! — The difference between them²⁴ is the question whether he²⁵ knew her²⁶ defect²⁷ or not.²⁸ And if you wish I might say that the difference between them²⁴ is the case where he²⁵ married [the rival] first and subsequently divorced [his wife].²⁹ And if you wish I might say that the difference between them²⁴ is whether a stipulation³⁰ in the case of matrimonial intercourse is valid.³¹

R. Mesharsheya raised an objection: It once happened that R. Akiba gathered the fruit of an ethrog³² on the first of Shebat³³ and subjected it to two tithes,³⁴ one³⁵ in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai³⁶ and the other³⁷ in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel.³⁸ This proves that they³⁹ did act [in accordance with their rulings!] — R. Akiba was uncertain of his tradition, not knowing whether Beth Hillel said the first of Shebat⁴⁰ or the fifteenth of Shebat.⁴⁰

Mar Zutra raised an objection: It once happened that Shammai the Elder's daughter-in-law was confined with child⁴¹ and he⁴² broke an opening through the concrete of the ceiling and covered it above the bed with the proper festival roofing⁴³ for the sake of the child.⁴⁴ Does not this prove that they³⁹ did act [in accordance with their rulings]?⁴⁵ — In that case, any onlooker might assume that it was done in order to increase the ventilation.⁴⁶

Mar Zutra raised an objection: It once happened with Jehu's Trough in Jerusalem, which was connected by means of a hole with a ritual bathing pool,⁴⁷ and in which⁴⁸ all ritual cleansing in Jerusalem was performed, that Beth Shammai sent and had the hole widened; for Beth Shammai maintain that the greater part [of the intervening wall] must be broken through.⁴⁹ But we have also learned that the combination of bathing pools⁵⁰ may be effected by a connecting tube of the size of the mouth-piece of a leather bottle in diameter and circumference,⁵¹ viz., a tube in which two fingers may conveniently be turned round.⁵² Does not this prove that they⁵³ did act [in accordance with their rulings]?⁵⁴ — There

- (1) So that any stranger might be permitted to marry them, even according to Beth Shammai.
- (2) And thus prevent their children from being branded bastards according to Beth Hillel. (V. supra note 6).
- (3) Tosef. Yeb, I; the rivals who, relying on Beth Shammai, married brothers-in-law, prior to the ordinance, whose children would, were the ordinance of R. Johanan b. Nuri to be accepted, become bastard.
- (4) Beth Shammai.
- (5) Since some may have married brothers-in-law. V. supra n. 1.
- (6) No such marriage could possibly have taken place.
- (7) R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's precaution.
- (8) Who may have married a stranger without previous halizah, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel. It has no reference at all to the children, who would not be regarded bastards even according to Beth Shammai.
- (9) Strangers, previously performing the halizah.
- (10) Prov. III, 17. The ways of the law must lead to no unpleasantness for the innocent.
- (11) A disciple of Beth Shammai.
- (12) Who was married to a brother of his.
- (13) As levir.
- (14) Which shews that Beth Shammai acted in accordance with their ruling that the rival of a forbidden relative is permitted to the brothers.
- (15) Which is, of course, permitted according to Beth Hillel. The Heb. אֲשַׁנְנָהּ 'I will marry her' (verb. neut. Kal) may be easily mistaken for אֲשַׁנְנֶהּ 'I will cause her to marry another' (verb. act. Hif.).
- (16) Which implies a desire to shew something novel. Marrying a stranger, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel, is the usual practice.
- (17) The expression 'would'.
- (18) Lit., 'to bring out', 'to exclude (the view)'.
- (19) Who desired to institute for rivals halizah to enable them to marry strangers, though prohibiting their marriage with the brothers
- (20) Thus acting in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai. (V. p. 79, n. 12.)
- (21) A descendant of the house of Hillel.
- (22) Obviously not. How, then, could it be assumed that he acted in accordance with a ruling of Beth Shammai?
- (23) And the rival of such a woman is permitted to the brothers. V. Mishnah supra 2b.
- (24) The 'Others' and the first Tanna.
- (25) The husband, R. Gamaliel's brother.
- (26) R. Gamaliel's daughter's.
- (27) At the time of their marriage.
- (28) V. supra 12a. According to the first Tanna, the rival of R. Gamaliel's daughter was permitted only because her husband was unaware of her defect, and their marriage consequently took place under a misconception. Such a marriage being invalid, R. Gamaliel's daughter was not a legal wife, and her rival consequently was a mere stranger to her father. According to the 'Others', who use the expression 'was incapable' and not 'was discovered to be incapable', the rival was permitted to R. Gamaliel irrespective of whether his daughter's defect had or had not been known, to her husband.
- (29) V. supra 13a. Such as was the case with R. Gamaliel's daughter. The first Tanna is of the opinion that the rival was permitted to R. Gamaliel because at the time his brother died she was no more his daughter's rival. The 'Others', however, maintain that so long as the two were rivals for any length of time (in this case, between the time of the marriage with the rival and the divorce of R. Gamaliel's daughter) they remain legally as rivals for all time, and the only reason why R. Gamaliel was allowed to marry the rival of his daughter was because his daughter had the defect of being incapable of procreation, and the rival of such a woman is permitted to the brothers. V. supra 2b.
- (30) That the woman, e.g., suffers from no illness or that she is not afflicted with any infirmity.
- (31) Such a stipulation was made by the husband in the case of R. Gamaliel's daughter. The first Tanna is of the opinion that the stipulation is valid, and since an infirmity was subsequently discovered, the marriage is null and void and the rival as a mere stranger is consequently permitted. The 'Others', however, regard a stipulation in connection with marital intercourse as invalid. R. Gamaliel's marriage with the rival was consequently permitted only because his daughter was incapable of procreation.

(32) V. Glos.

(33) The eleventh month in the Hebrew calendar, the first day of which is regarded by Beth Shammai as the New Year for trees. The period of the gathering was about the end of the second year of the septennial cycle and the beginning of the third.

(34) The 'second tithe' which is due in the second year of the septennial cycle, and the 'tithe for the poor' which is due in the third year of the cycle.

(35) The 'tithe for the poor'.

(36) According to whom, the first of Shebat being regarded as the beginning of the New Year for trees, the third year of the cycle had already begun, and the tithe due is, therefore, that of the poor.

(37) The 'second tithe'.

(38) Who, maintaining that the new year for trees does not begin until the fifteenth of Shebat, regard the first day of the month as still belonging to the concluding year, i.e., the second of the cycle in which the 'second tithe' is due. 'Er. 7a, R.H. 14a.

(39) Beth Shammai.

(40) Was the new year. Cf. supra nn. 5-7.

(41) During the Festival of Tabernacles when it is obligatory upon all males to dwell in booths (Lev. XXIII, 42), the roof of which must consist of branches or leaves or any similar material which grows from the ground (v. Suk. 2aff).

(42) Shammai.

(43) V. supra n. 10.

(44) Who was a male and, in the opinion of Beth Shammai, a male child, though still dependent on his mother, is like any male adult subject to the obligation of dwelling in a booth during the festival. Suk. 28a.

(45) Since according to Beth Hillel the child, being dependent upon his mother, is exempt from the obligation.

(46) The action, therefore, did not in any way demonstrate a disregard for the ruling of Beth Hillel.

(47) מִקְוֵה 'a gathering together', applied to a bath or pool containing forty se'ah of water, which is the prescribed minimum for a ritual bath.

(48) The trough, though containing less than the required minimum, was rendered ritually fit through fusion with the larger pool by means of the connecting hole.

(49) Mik. IV, 5.

(50) Which renders the smaller one, containing less than the prescribed minimum, ritually fit.

(51) Lit., 'like the tube of a leather bottle in its thickness and hollow space'.

(52) Hag. 21b, Mik. VI, 7; lit., 'as two fingers returning to their place'.

(53) Beth Shammai.

(54) Since the original tube, according to Beth Hillel, was quite sufficient, and they had nevertheless ordered its extension.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 15b

the onlooker might assume that the extension was made in order to increase the volume of the water.¹

Come and hear: R. Eleazar b. Zadok said: When I was learning Torah with R. Johanan the Horonite² I noticed that in the years of dearth he used to eat dry bread with salt. I went home and related it to my father, who said to me, 'Take some olives to him'. When I brought these to him and he observed that they were moist³ he said to me, 'I eat no olives'.⁴ I again went out and communicated the matter to my father, who said to me, 'Go tell him that the jar was broached,⁵ only the lees had blocked up the breach';⁶ and we learned: A jar containing pickled olives, Beth Shammai said, need not be broached;⁷ but Beth Hillel say: It must be broached.⁸ They admit, however, that where it had been broached and the lees had blocked up the holes, it is clean.⁹ And though he¹⁰ was a disciple of Shammai, he always conformed in practice¹¹ to the rulings of Beth Hillel. Now, if it be conceded that they¹² did act in accordance with their own rulings, one can well understand why his¹⁰ action was worthy of note;¹³ if, however, it were to be contended that they did not so act, in what respect was his conduct noteworthy!¹⁴

Come and hear: R. Joshua was asked, 'What is the law in relation to the rival of one's daughter'? He answered them, 'It is a question in dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel'. — 'But [he was asked] in accordance with whose ruling is the established law'? 'Why should you,' he said to them, 'put my head between two great mountains, between two great groups of disputants, aye, between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel? I fear they might crush my head! I may testify to you, however, concerning two great families who flourished in Jerusalem, namely, the family of Beth Zebo'im of Ben 'Akmai and the family of Ben Kuppai of Ben Mekoshesh,¹⁵ that they were descendants of rivals¹⁶ and yet some of them were High Priests who ministered upon the altar'. Now, if it be conceded that they¹⁷ acted [in accordance with their own rulings] it is quite intelligible why he said, 'I fear'.¹⁸ If, however, it be suggested that they¹⁷ did not so act, why did he say, 'I fear'?¹⁹ But even if it be granted that they did act [according to their rulings], what [cause had he for saying,] 'I fear'? Surely R. Joshua said that a bastard was only he who was a descendant of one of those who are subject to capital punishments which are within the jurisdiction of the Beth din!²⁰ — Granted that he²¹ was not a bastard, he is nevertheless tainted;²² as may be deduced by inference a minori ad majus from the case of the widow: If the son of a widow²³ who is not forbidden to all²⁴ is nevertheless tainted,²⁵ [how much more so the son of a rival]²⁶ who is forbidden to all.²⁷

They asked him concerning rivals and he answered them about the sons of the rivals! — They really asked him two questions: 'What is the law concerning the rivals? And if some ground could be found in their case in favour of the ruling of Beth Hillel, what is the law according to Beth Shammai in regard to the sons of the rivals, [who married]²⁸ in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel'?²⁹ What practical difference is there?³⁰ — That a solution may be found, according to Beth Hillel, for the question of the child³¹ of a man who remarried his divorced wife.³² Do we³³ apply the inference a minori ad majus, arguing thus: 'If the son of a widow who was married to a High Priest, who is not forbidden to all,³⁴ is nevertheless tainted,³⁵ how much more so the son of her³⁶ who is forbidden to all';³⁷ or is it possible to refute the argument, thus: 'The case of the widow is different because she herself is profaned'?³⁸ And he said to them, 'With reference to the rivals I am afraid.'³⁹

(1) V. note 2.

(2) [Cf. Hauran, mentioned in Ezek. XLVII, 18, south of Damascus, the Auranitis of the Graeco-Roman times.]

(3) Moisture renders fruit susceptible to Levitical uncleanness.

(4) He hesitated to eat them owing to the possibility (Rashi) or the certainty (Tosaf. a.l. s.v. אָמַר) that the earthen jar in which they were kept had been touched by an 'am ha-arez and, being moist, received the uncleanness imparted to them by the jar which, by Rabbinical enactment, had become unclean by the touch of the 'am ha-arez.

(5) Keeping olives in a broached container is clear evidence that the owner had no desire to retain the sap that exudes from the olives; and only liquids which are desired by the owner render the fruit susceptible to Levitical uncleanness.

(6) And thus the undesired 'moisture remained on the olives. As such moisture does not render the fruit susceptible to uncleanness (v. previous note) the olives may safely be eaten even by the scrupulous.

(7) Because in their opinion the moisture that exudes from the olives is regarded as a fruit juice which does not render food susceptible to Levitical uncleanness.

(8) The moisture is regarded by them as actual oil which does render food susceptible to uncleanness. Broaching is consequently necessary in order to indicate thereby that the owner had no desire to preserve the liquid.

(9) I.e., the liquid, having clearly been shewn to be unwanted, does not render the olives susceptible to Levitical uncleanness. 'Ed. IV, 6.

(10) R. Johanan the Horonite.

(11) Lit., 'all his deeds he only did'.

(12) Beth Shammai.

(13) Lit., 'that is his greatness'; i.e., his conduct was remarkable and worthy of note in that he acted according to the ruling of Beth Hillel despite the practice of his colleagues of acting in accordance with the rulings of their own School.

(14) Lit., 'what was his greatness'; he only acted on the same lines as the other disciples of Beth Shammai. Consequently it must be concluded that Beth Shammai did act in accordance with their own rulings.

(15) [A locality in Judaea; on the identification of the other names, v. Klein MGWJ 1910, 25ff, and 1917, 135ff and Buchler Priester, p. 186.]

(16) Who, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel, married strangers without previously performing halizah with the levirs.

(17) Beth Shammai.

(18) As the rivals, acting on the ruling of Beth Shammai, might have married the brothers, their children who, according to Beth Hillel, would thus be descendants of marriages forbidden under the penalty of kareth, would be deemed to be bastards. These would certainly resent R. Joshua's declaration in favour of Beth Hillel, and his life would thus be in danger.

(19) No one could possibly resent his decision since no one would be adversely affected by it. Cf. supra p. 83, n. 10, final clause.

(20) Infra 49a. Now, even if he had decided in favour of Beth Hillel no one would have been degraded thereby to the level of a bastard. Why then was he afraid?

(21) A descendant from a marriage punishable by kareth.

(22) Though not actually a bastard, he would, were he a kohen, be disqualified from the priesthood.

(23) Born from her marriage with a High Priest.

(24) A widow is forbidden only to a High Priest. V. Lev. XXI, 14.

(25) V. note 8.

(26) Cur. edd., 'etc.'

(27) A rival is forbidden to Israelites as well as priests.

(28) Strangers without previous halizah with the levirs.

(29) Are the children of such marriages, which are forbidden by a negative precept, disqualified from the priesthood?

(30) Since the halachah is according to Beth Hillel.

(31) A daughter.

(32) After she had been married to another man. Such remarriage is also forbidden (v. supra note 2) by a negative precept (V. Deut. XXIV, 1-4.)

(33) In this case according to Beth Hillel, as in the case of a rival's son according to Beth Shammai; both cases coming under the prohibition of a negative precept.

(34) V. p. 84, n. 10.

(35) V. p. 84, n. 8.

(36) A rival.

(37) A rival is forbidden to Israelites as well as to priests.

(38) On the death of the High Priest to whom she was unlawfully married she may not marry any more even an ordinary priest, and as she was a priest's daughter she is henceforth forbidden to eat terumah. On a woman, however, who was remarried after divorce no new restrictions are imposed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 16a

as to the sons of the rivals¹ I may testify to you'.²

Come and hear: In the days of R. Dosa b. Harkinas the rival of a daughter was permitted to marry the brothers.³ From this it may be inferred that [Beth Shammai] acted [in accordance with their own rulings].⁴ This proves the point.

[To turn to] the main text. In the days of R. Dosa b. Harkinas, the rival of a daughter was permitted to marry the brothers. This ruling was very disturbing to the Sages, because he⁵ was a great scholar⁶ and his eyes were dim so that he was unable to come to the house of study.⁷ When a discussion took place as to who should go and communicate with him, R. Joshua said to them, 'I will go'. 'And who after him?' — 'R. Eleazar b. Azariah.' 'And who after him?' — 'R. Akiba'. They went and stood at the entrance of his house. His maid entered and told him, 'Master, the Sages of Israel are come to you'. 'Let them enter', he said to her; and they entered. Taking hold of R. Joshua

he made him sit upon a golden couch. The latter said to him, 'Master, will you ask your other disciple to sit down?' 'Who is he?' [the Master] enquired. — 'R. Eleazar b. Azariah'. 'Has our friend Azariah a son?' [the Master] exclaimed, and applied to him this Scriptural text, I have been young and now I am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread;⁸ and so took hold of him also and made him sit upon a golden couch. 'Master', said he,⁹ 'will you ask your next disciple also to sit down?' 'And who is he?' [the Master] asked. — 'Akiba the son of Joseph'. 'You are,' [the Master] exclaimed, 'Akiba son of Joseph whose name is known from one end of the world to the other! Sit down, my son, sit down. May men like you multiply in Israel'. Thereupon they began to address to him all sorts of questions on legal practice¹⁰ until they reached that of the daughter's rival. 'What is the halachah', they asked him, 'in the case of a daughter's rival?' 'This,' he answered them, 'is a question in dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.' 'In accordance with whose ruling is the halachah?' — 'The halachah,' he replied, is in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel'. 'But, indeed,' they said to him, 'it was stated in your name that the halachah is in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai!' He said to them: 'Did you hear, "Dosa"¹¹ or "the son of Harkinas?"'¹² — 'By the life of our Master,' they replied. 'We heard no son's name mentioned.'¹³ 'I have,' he said to them, 'a younger brother who is a dare-devil¹⁴ and his name is Jonathan and he is one of the disciples of Shammai.¹⁵ Take care that he does not overwhelm you on questions of established practice, because he has three hundred answers to prove that the daughter's rival is permitted. But I call heaven and earth to witness that upon this mortar¹⁶ sat the prophet Haggai¹⁷ and delivered the following three rulings: That a daughter's rival is forbidden, that in the lands of Ammon and Moab the tithe of the poor is to be given in the Seventh Year,¹⁸ and that proselytes may be accepted from the Cordyenians and the Tarmodites.'¹⁹

A Tanna taught: When they came²⁰ they entered through one door; when they went out they issued through three different doors.²¹ He came upon R. Akiba, submitted his objections to him and silenced him.²² 'Are you', he called out, 'Akiba whose name rings from one end of the world to the other? You are blessed indeed to have won fame while you have not yet attained the rank of oxherds.' 'Not even,' replied R. Akiba, 'that of shepherds.'

'In the lands of Ammon and Moab the tithe of the poor is given in the Seventh Year,' because a Master said: Those who came up from Egypt²³ had conquered many cities which those who came up from Babylon²⁴ did not conquer, and the first sanctification²³ was intended for that time only but not for the future.²⁵ Hence they were allowed [cultivation]²⁶ in order that the poor²⁷ might find their support there in the Seventh Year.²⁸

'And that proselytes may be accepted from the Cordyenians and the Tarmodites'. But [the law, surely,] is not so! For Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: No proselyte may be accepted from the Cordyenians. — R. Ashi replied: The statement was Kartuenians,²⁹ as people, in fact, speak of 'disqualified Kartuenians'.

Others say: Rami b. Ezekiel learnt, 'No proselytes are to be accepted from the Kartuenians'. Are not Kartuenians the same as Cordyenians? — R. Ashi replied: No; Kartuenians are a class by themselves, and Cordyenians are a class by themselves, as people, in fact, speak of 'disqualified Kartuenians'.³⁰

Both R. Johanan and Sabya maintain that no proselytes may be accepted from the Tarmodites. Did R. Johanan, however, say such a thing? Surely we learned: All blood stains [on women's garments] that come from Rekem³¹ are levitically clean,³² and R. Judah declares them unclean because [the people there] were proselytes though misguided,³³ [those that come] from the heathens³⁴ are levitically clean.³⁵ And the difficult point was raised

(1) Whether they are tainted or not.

- (2) V. supra 15b, which shews that they were not tainted, since they were permitted to occupy the highest office in the priesthood.
- (3) Of the father of that daughter.
- (4) Since the permission to marry was issued by a brother of R. Dosa (v. infra) who was a member of Beth Shammai.
- (5) R. Dosa, who was thought to be the author of the ruling.
- (6) And they did not venture to act against his decision without first consulting him.
- (7) And was thus unaware that the general opinion at the College was against the ruling.
- (8) Ps. XXXVII, 25.
- (9) R. Joshua.
- (10) Lit., 'surrounded him with halachoth'.
- (11) I.e., that Dosa permitted the rival.
- (12) Without the mention of the name of the son.
- (13) Lit., 'not specifically', 'undefined'.
- (14) בכור שטן lit., 'the first-born of Satan', first in obstinate dispute (Jast.); Satansjunge similar to Teufelskerl (Golds.); keen and obstinate (Rashi). Some suggest בהור שונן 'keen — witted youth'. R. Dosa appears to have been playing upon the rhyme of ah katan, bekor satan, and Jonathan.
- (15) And it must have been Jonathan who dared to issue a ruling in accordance with the views of his school against those of Beth Hillel.
- (16) מדוכה or mortar-shaped seat.
- (17) [That does not mean that he was a contemporary of Haggai the prophet, but that he had an incontrovertible tradition on the matter, Me'iri.]
- (18) Of the septennial cycle. The countries of Ammon and Moab, though conquered by Moses and included in the boundary of the Land of Israel, were in the days of the Second Temple excluded. The laws of the Seventh or Sabbatical year, which apply to the Land of Israel, were consequently inapplicable to the lands of Ammon and Moab. Any Jews living in those countries, it was ordained by the Rabbis, were to be allowed to cultivate their fields in this year, but besides the 'first tithe' which is due in all other years, they were to give the tithe of the poor also.
- (19) Despite the opinion of some Rabbis that they were to be regarded as bastards. Cordyene or Kardu was in Babylon; Tarmod or Tadmor, (Palmyra) lay in an oasis of the desert of Syria. [According to Obermeyer (p. 133) the question as to the legitimacy of the offering of the Kardu was on account of the possible intermarriage of the non-Jewish inhabitants with the Jewish converts, won over to Christianity by the Christian missions from Edessa in the first century.]
- (20) To interview R. Dosa.
- (21) Either in order not to attract Jonathan's attention, or, on the contrary, in the hope that one of them at least might meet him.
- (22) Lit., 'and made him stand'.
- (23) In the days of Joshua.
- (24) In the days of Ezra.

that having stated categorically,¹ '[those that came] from the heathens' [he must also imply,] 'even those from Tarmod'² And R. Johanan replied: This proves that proselytes may be accepted from Tarmod.³ And if it be replied [that R. Johanan only said], 'This',⁴ but he himself does not hold this view,⁵ surely R. Johanan said, 'The halachah is in accordance with an anonymous Mishnah'⁶ — It is a question in dispute between Amoraim as to what was actually the view of R. Johanan.

Why are no [proselytes to be accepted] from Tarmod? — R. Johanan and Sabya give different reasons. One says, 'On account of the slaves of Solomon,'⁷ and the other says, 'On account of the daughters of Jerusalem.'⁸

According to him who Says. 'On account of the slaves of Solomon,' the reason is quite intelligible, because he may hold the opinion that the child of a heathen or a slave who had intercourse with a daughter in Israel is a bastard. According to him, however, who said, 'On account of the daughters of Jerusalem', what is the reason? — R. Joseph and the Rabbis dispute the point, and both of them in the name of Rabbah b. Bar Hana. One maintains that [the number was] twelve thousand [foot]men and six thousand archers, and the other maintains that there were twelve thousand men and, of these, six hundred archers. At the time when the heathens entered the Temple, everyone made for the gold and the silver, but they made for the daughters of Jerusalem; as it is said in the Scriptures. They have ravished the women in Zion, the maidens in the cities of Judah.⁹

R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: The following verse was uttered by the Genius of the Universe:¹⁰ I have been young and now I am old¹¹ For who else could have said it! If the Holy One, blessed be He, be suggested, is there any old age in his case? Then David must have said it? But was he so old? Consequently it must be concluded that the Genius of the Universe had said it.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani further said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is [the meaning of] the Scriptural text,¹² The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her treasures?¹³ — This [refers to] Ammon and Moab. At the time when the heathens entered the Temple all made for gold and silver, but they turned to the Scroll of the Law, saying, 'That in which it is written, An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord,¹⁴ shall be burned with fire.'

The Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob that they that are round about him should be his adversaries.¹⁵ Rab said: As, for instance, Humania towards Pum Nahara.¹⁶

Rab Judah said in the name of R. Assi: If at the present time a heathen betroths [a daughter in Israel], note must be taken of such betrothal since it may be that he is of the ten tribes.¹⁷ But, surely, anything separated [from a heterogeneous group] is re garded as having been separated from the majority!¹⁸ — [R. Assi's statement refers] to places where they have settled;¹⁹ for R. Abba b. Kahana said: And he put them in Halah and in Habor, on the river of Gozan, and the cities of the Medes;²⁰ Halah is Halwan,²¹ and Habor is Hadyab,¹ the river Gozan is Ginzak,² and the cities of the Medes are Hamdan³ and its neighbouring towns; others say, Nihar⁴ and its neighbouring towns. Which are its neighbouring towns? — Samuel replied: Karak,⁵ Moshki,⁶ Hidki⁷ and Dumkia.⁸ R. Johanan said: All these⁹ [were enumerated] in order to declare them as being unfit.¹⁰ When, however, I¹¹ mentioned the matter¹² in the presence of Samuel he said to me: Thy son,¹³ implies that he who is descended from an Israelitish woman may be called thy son, but thy son who is descended from a heathen woman is not called thy son but her son.¹⁴ But, surely, there were also daughters,¹⁵ and Rabina had said, 'From this it may be inferred that thy daughter's son born from [a union with] a heathen is called thy son'!¹⁶ — There is a tradition that the women of that generation were sterilized.¹⁷

Others read: When I mentioned the matter¹⁸ in the presence of Samuel he said to me, 'They did not move from there until they had declared them¹⁹ to be perfect heathens; as it is said in the Scriptures, They have dealt treacherously against the Lord, for they have begotten strange children.'²⁰

R. Joseph sat behind R. Kahana while R. Kahana sat before Rab Judah, and while sitting he made the following statement: 'Israel will make a festival when Tarmod will have been destroyed'.²¹ But, surely, it was destroyed! — That²² was Tammod.²³

R. Ashi said: Tarmod and Tammod are identical, but the city was rebuilt;²⁴ when it was destroyed on one side it was settled on the other side, and when the other side was destroyed it was settled on the first side.²⁵

R. Hammuna sat before 'Ulla and was engaged in discussing a traditional law when the latter remarked,²⁶ 'What a man! And how much more important would he have been²⁷ had not Harpania²⁸ been his [native] town'! As the other was embarrassed, he said to him, 'Where do you pay poll tax'? — 'To Pum Nahara', the other replied. 'If so', 'Ulla said, 'You belong to Pum Nahara'. What [is the meaning of] Harpania? — R. Zera replied: A mountain whither everybody²⁹ turns.³⁰ In a Baraitha it was taught: Whosoever did not know his family and his tribe³¹ made his way thither. Raba said: And it was deeper than the nether-world,³² for in the Scripture it is said, I shall ransom them from the power of the nether-world; I shall redeem them from death,³³ but for the unfitness of these there is no remedy at all; the unfit of Harpania on account of the unfit of Meshan,³⁴ and the unfit of Meshan on account of the unfit of Tarmod,³⁵ and the unfit of Tarmod on account of the slaves of Solomon.³⁶ Thus it is that people say, 'The small kab and the big kab³⁷ roll down to the nether-world, from the netherworld to Tarmod,³⁸ from Tarmod to Meshan, and from Meshan to Harpania.'³⁹

FIRST commits no error', since 'first' may signify¹ 'first to be subject [to the levirate marriage]'; and 'he who uses the expression SECOND also commits no error', since 'second' may signify 'second to marry',² Does not our Mishnah, however, include also³ the case of one who contracted the levirate marriage first and subsequently married his other wife?⁴ What, then, is meant by 'second'? Second in respect of her marriages.⁵

Where [in the Scriptures] is [the prohibition of marrying] 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary' written? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: Scripture states, If brethren dwell together,⁶ i.e., dwell in the world at the same time; the wife of one's brother who was not his contemporary is consequently excluded; 'together' implies who are together in respect of inheritance,⁷ a maternal brother is, therefore, excluded.

Rabbah said: [That legal] brothers [are only those who are descended] from the same father is deduced by a comparison of this 'brotherhood'⁸ with the 'brotherhood' of the sons of Jacob;⁹ as there [the brotherhood was derived] from the father¹⁰ and not from the mother,¹¹ so here also [the brotherhood spoken of is that] from the father and not from the mother.¹²

Let him rather deduce this 'brotherhood'⁸ from the 'brotherhood' of forbidden relatives!¹³ — Brethren⁸ may be deduced from brethren,⁹ but not brethren⁸ from thy brother.¹⁴ What practical difference is there [between the two expression]? Surely the School of R. Ishmael taught: And the priest shall return,¹⁵ and the priest shall come,¹⁶ 'returning' and 'coming' are the same thing!¹⁷ — Such an analogy is drawn only¹⁸ where there is no other identical word; when, however, there occurs another word which is identical, the analogy is made only with that which is identical.

Let him, then, deduce this 'brotherhood'¹⁹ from the 'brotherhood' in the case of Lot, since it is written in the Scriptures. For we are brethren!²⁰ -It stands to reason that the deduction should be made from the sons of Jacob. because the [analogous expression] is available for the purpose;²¹ for it could have been written, Thy servants are twelve sons of one man²² and yet 'brethren' also was written. Hence it must be inferred that the word was made available for the deduction.²³

It was necessary for Scripture to write brethren,²⁴ and it was also necessary to write together.²⁴ For had the All Merciful written 'brethren' only, it might have been suggested that this 'brotherhood' should be deduced from the 'brotherhood' in the case of Lot. And were you to reply that [the analogous word]²⁵, is not available for deduction,²¹ your statement would be negated,²⁶ [the analogous word] being indeed available; for whereas he could have written 'friends' and yet wrote 'brethren', the inference must be that the object was to render it available for analogous deduction; hence the All Merciful has written 'together', implying only those who are together in respect of inheritance.²⁷ If, [on the other hand,] the All Merciful had only written 'together', it might have been said to refer to such as have the same father and mother; [hence both expressions were] required.

But how could you have arrived at such an opinion?²⁸ The All Merciful has, surely, made²⁹ the levirate marriage dependent on inheritance,³⁰ and inheritance³¹ is derived from the father and not from the mother!³² -It³³ was necessary. For it might have been assumed that whereas this³⁴ is an anomaly,³⁵ a forbidden relative³⁶ having been permitted, the brotherhood must, therefore, be both paternal and maternal; [hence it was] necessary [to teach us that the law was not so].

R. Huna said in the name of Rab: If a woman awaiting the decision of the levir!³⁷ died, [the levir] is permitted to marry her mother. This obviously shews that he!³⁸ is of the opinion that no levirate bond³⁹ exists⁴⁰ let him then say, the halachah is in accordance with the view of him who said no levirate bond exists!⁴¹ — If he had said so, it might have been suggested that this applied only to the case of two⁴² but that in the case of one⁴³ a levirate bond does exist. Then let him say, 'The halachah is in accordance with him who said no levirate bond exists even in the case of one levir'!⁴⁴ — If he had said so it might have been assumed even where she⁴⁵ is alive;⁴⁶ hence he taught us that only after death and not when she is still alive, because it is forbidden to abolish the commandment of levirate marriages.

We learned, 'If his deceased brother's wife died he may marry her sister',⁴⁷ which implies that her sister only may be married but not her mother! — The same law applies even to her mother; only because he taught in the earlier clause 'if his wife died he is permitted to marry her sister' in which case only her sister is meant and not her mother, since the latter is Biblically prohibited, he also taught in the latter clause 'he is permitted to marry her sister'.⁴⁸

Rab Judah, however, said: If a woman awaiting the decision of the levir⁴⁹ died, the levir is still forbidden to marry her mother. This⁵⁰ obviously implies that he⁵¹ is of the opinion that a levirate bond exists,⁵² let him then say, the halachah is in accordance with the view of him who said a levirate bond exists!⁵³ -If he had said so it might have been suggested that this applied only to the case of one,⁵⁴ but in the case of two⁵⁵ no levirate bond exists. But the dispute,⁵⁶ surely, centered round the question of two!⁵⁷ — But [this is really the reply]: If he⁵¹ had said so⁵⁸

(58) That the halachah was in accordance with the view of him who said that a levirate bond exists between the widow and the levir prior to the levirate marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 18a

it might have been assumed [that this holds good only] while she is alive but that after death the bond is broken,¹ hence it was taught that the levirate bond is not automatically² dissolved.

May it be suggested that the following supports his view: 'If his deceased brother's wife died, the levir is permitted to marry her sister', which implies her sister Only but not her mother?³ — The same law may apply even to her mother; but because he taught in the earlier clause, 'if his wife died he is permitted to marry her sister', in which case her sister only is permitted and not her mother, the latter being forbidden Biblically, he also taught in the latter clause, 'he is permitted to marry her sister'.

R. Huna b. Hiyya raised an objection: IF HE ADDRESSED THE MA'AMAR TO HER AND DIED, THE SECOND MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT ENTER INTO THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁴ The reason then⁵ is because he addressed to her⁶ the ma' amar, but had he not addressed a ma'amar to her,⁵ the second also would have been permitted to enter into the levirate marriage with him. Now, if it be maintained that the levirate bond does exist,⁷ the second, owing to this bond, would be the rival of the 'wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'!⁸ — Rabbah replied: The same law, that the second must perform the halizah with, but may not be married to the levir, applies even to the case where no ma'amar was addressed to her;⁶ and the ma'amar was mentioned only in order to exclude the view of Beth Shammai. Since they maintain that the ma'amar effects a perfect contract,⁹ he teaches us [that it was not so].

Abaye pointed out the following objection to him:¹⁰ In the case of two [contemporary] brothers one of whom died without Issue, and the second determined¹¹ to address a ma'amar to his deceased brother's wife¹² but before he managed to address a ma'amar to her a third¹³ brother was born and he himself died, the first¹⁴ is exempt¹⁵ as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary' while the second¹⁶ either performs the halizah or enters into the levirate marriage.¹⁷ Now, if it be maintained that a levirate bond does exist,¹⁸ the second, owing to this bond, would be the rival of 'the wife¹⁹ of his brother who was not his contemporary'!²⁰ Whose view is this? It is that of R. Meir, who holds that no levirate bond exists.

Does R. Meir, however, maintain that no levirate bond exists?¹⁸ Surely we have learned: In the case of four brothers two of whom were married to two sisters, if those who were married to the sisters died, behold their widows perform the halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage [by either of the levirs].²¹ Now, if R. Meir is of the opinion that no levirate bond exists,²² these would come from two different houses,²³ and one brother could marry the one while the other could marry the other! — The fact is that [R. Meir maintains that] no levirate bond exists; [but the levirate marriage is nevertheless forbidden] because he is of the opinion that it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriages, it being possible that while one of the brothers married [one of the widowed sisters] the other brother would die,²⁴ and thus the precept of levirate marriages would be annulled.²⁵

If, however, no levirate bond exists, let [also the precept of the levirate marriage] be annulled! For R. Gamaliel who holds that no levirate bond exists²⁶ also [maintains that] the precept of the levirate marriage may be annulled; as we learned; R. Gamaliel said, 'If she²⁷ made a declaration of refusal²⁸ well and good;²⁹ if she did not make a declaration of refusal let [the elder sister] wait until [the minor] grows up³⁰ and this one³¹ is then exempt as his wife's sister'!³² -The other³³ said to him: Are you pointing out a contradiction between the opinion of R. Meir and that of R. Gamaliel?³⁴ No

[replied Abaye]; we mean to say this: Does R. Meir provide even against a doubtful annulment³⁵ and R. Gamaliel does not provide even against a certainty!³⁶ — It is quite possible that he who does not provide³⁷ makes no provision even against a certain annulment, while he who does provide³⁷ makes provision even against a doubtful annulment.³⁸

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: Rab Judah's statement³⁹ is Samuel's;⁴⁰ for we learnt:

- (1) Lit., 'burst', 'split'.
 - (2) Lit., 'by nothing', 'without formality', i.e., without the due performance of the halizah.
 - (3) Because she is presumably regarded as his mother-in-law.
 - (4) Supra 17a, q.v. for notes.
 - (5) Why the levirate marriage is forbidden to the second
 - (6) The first, the widow of the first deceased brother.
 - (7) Between the widow and the levir, from the moment her husband, the first brother, died.
 - (8) With whom levirate marriage is forbidden.
 - (9) Lit., 'acquires perfect possession', i.e., the widow is regarded as the legal wife of the second brother, and his own wife thus becomes her rival and is consequently exempt even from the halizah.
 - (10) To Rabbah.
 - (11) Lit., 'stood'.
 - (12) The widow of the first deceased brother.
 - (13) Lit., 'to him'.
 - (14) The widow of the first deceased brother.
 - (15) From the halizah and levirate marriage of the third brother.
 - (16) Her rival, the widow of the second deceased brother.
 - (17) With the third brother. Infra 19a.
 - (18) v. supra p. 99' n. 5.
 - (19) The bond being regarded to be just as binding as actual marriage.
 - (20) And she should be exempt.
 - (21) 'Ed. V, 5' infra 23b, 26a, 7b; because, obviously, both are bound by a levirate bond to both surviving brothers and each is the sister of a woman who is connected with either of the brothers by such a levirate bond.
 - (22) V. supra p. 99' n. 5.
 - (23) None of them standing in any marital relationship with either of the surviving brothers.
 - (24) And be prevented from marrying the other widow.
 - (25) Since the surviving brother would not be able to marry (or to participate in the halizah of) the second widow who is now his wife's sister.
 - (26) Infra 51a.
 - (27) A minor who was married to one brother while her sister had been married to another brother who died without issue.
 - (28) A minor may refuse to live with her husband and no divorce is needed in her case. V. Glos. s.v. m1 un.
 - (29) Lit., 'she refused'. By her declaration of refusal her marriage becomes null and void retrospectively. As she has thus never been the legal wife of the levir, her sister (being no more his 'wife's sister') may contract the levirate marriage with him.
 - (30) And becomes the legal wife of the surviving brother.
 - (31) I.e., the elder sister.
 - (32) Infra 79b, 109a; which shews that R. Gamaliel permits the annulment of the law of the levirate marriage. Similarly, if R. Meir maintains, like R. Gamaliel, that no levirate bond exists, he should also permit the annulment of the precept of the levirate marriage.
 - (33) Rabbah.
 - (34) Though they may agree on the question of the levirate bond, it does not necessarily follow that they agree also on the question of permission to annul the precept of the levirate marriage.
 - (35) Supra; the possibility that one of the brothers might die.
 - (36) It is a certainty that when the minor becomes of age the elder sister will be precluded from both marriage and halizah. This wide divergence of opinion is unlikely. Hence the fear of annulling the levirate marriage cannot be the reason for R. Meir's ruling in the above cited Mishnah; and consequently R. Meir cannot be of the opinion that no levirate bond exists.

(37) Against the annulment of the precept of the levirate marriage.

(38) So that R. Meir need not necessarily agree with R. Gamaliel on this point though he will agree with him on the question of the levirate bond.

(39) That if a woman awaiting the decision of the levir died, the levir is still forbidden to marry her mother (supra 17b end).

(40) Not Rab's who also was his teacher.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 18b

If the brother of the levir had betrothed the sister of the widow who was awaiting the levir's decision,¹ he is told, so it has been stated in the name of R. Judah b. Bathyra, 'Wait² until your brother has taken action';³ and Samuel said, 'The halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Judah b. Bathyra'.⁴ The other⁵ asked him: 'What [objection could there be] if the statement⁶ be attributed to Rab?⁷ Is it the contradiction between the two statements of Rab?⁸ Surely it is possible that these Amoraim⁹ are in dispute as to what was the opinion of Rab!' — Since this ruling was stated with certainty in the name of Samuel, while as to Rab's view [on the matter] Amoraim differ, we do not ignore¹⁰ the statement attributing it with certainty to Samuel in favour of the one¹¹ which involves Amoraim In a dispute as to the opinion of Rab.

Said R. Kahana: I reported the statement¹² in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, when he said: You teach it thus;¹³ our version is explicit:¹⁴ 'Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel, "If a woman awaiting the decision of the levir died, [the levir] is forbidden to marry her mother", from which it naturally follows that he is of the opinion that a levirate bond exists'.¹⁵ Samuel is here consistent; for Samuel said, 'The halachah is in accordance with the view of R. Judah b. Bathyra'.

Said [both statements¹⁶ are] necessary. For had he only stated, 'A levirate bond exists', it might have been assumed to refer to the case of one levir only¹⁷ but not to that of two,¹⁸ hence we are taught¹⁹ [that the Same law applies also to two]. And if it had only been stated, 'The halachah is in accordance with the opinion of R. Judah b. Bathyra', it might have been assumed [that the levirate bond is in force] while the widow²⁰ is alive but that after her death the bond is dissolved, hence we are taught²¹ that the levirate bond Is not dissolved automatically.²²

MISHNAH. IF THERE WERE TWO BROTHERS AND ONE OF THEM DIED,²³ AND THE SECOND PERFORMED THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH HIS [DECEASED] BROTHER'S WIFE, AND AFTER A [THIRD] BROTHER WAS BORN THE SECOND DIED,²³ THE FIRST²⁴ IS EXEMPT²⁵ ON ACCOUNT OF HER BEING THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER WHO WAS NOT HIS CONTEMPORARY', WHILE THE SECOND IS EXEMPT AS HER RIVAL.²⁶ IF HE²⁷ ADDRESSED TO HER²⁸ A MA'AMAR AND DIED,²⁹ THE SECOND MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH³⁰ BUT SHE MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. R. SIMEON SAID:³¹ HE³² MAY EITHER TAKE IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WHICHEVER OF THEM HE DESIRES³³ OR HE MAY PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH WHICHEVER OF THEM HE DESIRES.³³

GEMARA. R. Oshaia said: R. Simeon disputed the first case also²⁴ Whence is this inferred? From the existence Cf a Super. fluous Mishnah. For in accordance with whose view was it necessary to teach the clause of the first [Mishnah]? If it be suggested, [according to that] of the Rabbis, [it may be retorted]: If when the levirate marriage had taken place first and the birth³⁴ occurred afterwards, in which case he,³⁵ found her³⁶ permitted,³⁷ the Rabbis nevertheless forbade her,³⁸ is there any need [for them to specify prohibition in the case where] the birth³⁴ occurred first and the marriage took place afterwards!³⁹ Consequently⁴⁰ it must have been required [in connection with the view] of R. Simeon; and the first [Mishnah] was taught in order to point out to you how far R. Simeon⁴¹ is prepared to go⁴² while the last Mishnah was taught in order to show you how far the Rabbis⁴³ are prepared to go. It would, indeed, have been logical for R. Simeon to express his dissent in the first case, but he waited for the Rabbis to conclude their statement and then he expressed his dissent with their entire statement.⁴⁴

How, in view of what has been said,⁴⁵ is it possible according to R. Simeon to find a case of ‘a wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’?⁴⁶ — In the case of one brother who died and a second brother was subsequently⁴⁷ born;⁴⁸ or also in the case of two brothers⁴⁹ where the second has neither taken the widow in the levirate marriage nor died.⁵⁰

One can well understand [R. Simeon's reason]⁵¹ where the levirate marriage⁵² took place first and the birth⁵³ afterwards, for in this case he found her permitted;⁵⁴ where, however, the birth occurred first and the levirate marriage took place afterwards,⁵⁵ what [reason [could be advanced]]?⁵⁶ -He holds the opinion that a levirate bond exists⁵⁷ and that such a bond is like actual marriage.⁵⁸

R. Joseph demurred: If R. Simeon is in doubt as to whether in the case of a ‘levirate bond’ and a ‘ma amar’ combined the widow should or should not be regarded as married, need there be any [doubt in the case of] a ‘levirate bond’ alone?⁵⁹ Whence is this known?⁶⁰ — We have learned: In the case where three brothers were married to three women who were strangers [to one another] and, one of the brothers having died, the second brother addressed to her⁶¹, a ma'amar and died, behold these⁶² must perform halizah with, but may not marry the [surviving] levir; for it is said in the Scriptures, And one of them die [etc.], her husband's brother shall go in unto her,⁶³ only she⁶⁴ who is tied to one levir,⁶⁵ but not she who is tied to two levirs.⁶⁶ R. Simeon said: He⁶⁷ may take in levirate marriage whichever of them he pleases⁶⁸ and submits to the halizah of the other.⁶⁹ He must not take both widows in levirate marriage since it is possible that a levirate bond exists⁷⁰ and thus the two sisters-in-law⁷¹ would be coming

- (48) The levirate relationship here is entirely due to the deceased brother who was not the surviving brother's contemporary; and marriage is, therefore, rightly forbidden.
- (49) The first of whom died without issue.
- (50) The third brother, who was born after the death of the first, is forbidden to marry the widow whose connection with the first brother has never been severed, since the second has neither married her nor submitted to her halizah.

When the third brother is subsequently born the widow has no longer any connection with the deceased brother and cannot any more be regarded in relation to the third, as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'.
- (59) Obviously not. How then could it be said that R. Simeon definitely regards the 'levirate bond' alone as actual marriage?

(67) The levir.

(68) R. Simeon does not recognize a double bond. If the ma'amar addressed by the second brother was binding, the bond with the first brother, he maintains, was thereby severed, and there remains only the bond with the second; and if it was not binding then again only one bond exists, that with the first brother.

(69) Infra 31b. For the reason given anon.

(70) Between the levir (the second brother) and the first widow.

(71) The second brother's actual wife and the widow of the first to whom he addressed a ma'amar and who is his virtual wife.

from one house.¹ Nor must he take one in levirate marriage and thereby exempt the other, for it is possible that the levirate bond is not as binding as actual marriage, and the two sisters-in-law would thus be coming from two houses.² From this it clearly follows that he³ is in doubt.⁴ And should you reply that Biblically one of the widows may indeed be taken in levirate marriage and the other is thereby exempt, but that this procedure had Rabbinically been forbidden as a preventive measure against the possibility of the assumption that where two sisters-in-law came from two houses⁵ one may be taken in levirate marriage and the other is thereby exempt without any further ceremonial;⁶ surely [it may be pointed out] R. Simeon's reason is because of his doubt as to the validity of the levir's ma'amar!⁷ For it was taught: R. Simeon said to the Sages, 'If the ma'amar of the second brother is valid he⁸ is marrying the wife of the second; and if the ma'amar of the second is invalid he is marrying the wife of the first'! — Said Abaye to him:⁹ Do you not make any distinction between the levirate bond with one levir and the levirate bond with two levirs? It is quite possible that R. Simeon said the levirate bond is like actual marriage in the case of one levir only¹⁰ but not in that of two levirs.¹¹

Does R. Simeon, however, recognize such a distinction?¹² Surely it was taught: R. Simeon has laid down a general rule that wherever the birth¹³ preceded the marriage¹⁴ the widow is neither to perform halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage. If the marriage¹⁴ preceded the birth¹³ she may either perform the halizah or be taken in levirate marriage. Does not this apply to one levir?¹⁵ And yet It is stated 'she is neither to perform halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage'!¹⁶ — No; it applies to two levirs.¹⁷ But in the case of one levir,¹⁷ may she in such circumstances also¹⁸ either perform halizah or contract levirate marriage? If so, instead of stating, 'If the marriage preceded the birth she may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage' the distinction should have been drawn in this very case itself,¹⁹ thus: 'This applies only to the case of two brothers-in-law but with one brother-in-law she may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage'! — The entire passage dealt with two brothers-in-law.²⁰

What, then, is meant by the general rule?²¹ And a further objection²² was raised by R. Oshaia: If there were three brothers and two of them were married to two sisters, or to a woman and her daughter, or to a woman and her daughter's daughters or to a woman and her son's daughter, behold these²³ must²⁴ perform the halizah²⁵ but may not be taken in levirate marriage.²⁶ R. Simeon, however, exempts them.²⁷ Now, if it be assumed that R. Simeon is of the opinion that the 'levirate bond' has the same force as actual marriage, let [the third brother] take the first widow²⁸ in levirate marriage and let the other²⁹ be thereby exempt.³⁰ R. Amram replied: The meaning of 'exempt'³¹ is that he exempts the second widow,³² But has it not been taught: R. Simeon exempts them both?³³ -Raba replied: The second of the one pair and the second of the other pair.³⁴ Raba, however, was mistaken [in the interpretation] of the four pairs.³⁵ For, in the first instance, we have twice the word 'or',³⁶ and, furthermore, [if Raba's interpretation were the correct one]³⁷ it should [have read], 'R. Simeon exempts the four'.³⁸ Furthermore, it was taught: R. Simeon exempts both³⁹ from the halizah and from the levirate marriage, for it is said in the Scriptures, And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her,⁴⁰ when they become rivals to one another⁴¹ you may not marry even one of them!⁴² But, said R. Ashi: If they⁴³ had become subject [to the levir] one after the other, the law would indeed have been so.⁴⁴ Here,⁴⁵ however, we are dealing with the case where both become subject to him at the same time; and R. Simeon shares the view of R. Jose the Galilean who stated, 'It is possible to ascertain simultaneous occurrence'.⁴⁶

R. Papa⁴⁷ said: R. Simeon differs⁴⁸ only where the levirate marriage⁴⁹ took place first, and the birth⁵⁰ afterwards; he does not differ, however, when the birth⁵⁰ occurred first, and the marriage⁴⁹ took place afterwards; and both these cases⁵¹ are required on account of the Rabbis,⁵² and⁵³ [a stronger case is given after a weaker] 'not only this⁵⁴ but also that'.⁵⁵

It was taught in agreement with R. papa⁵⁶ and in contradiction to R. Oshaia: If one of two contemporary brothers died without Issue, and the second intended to address a ma'amar to his deceased brother's wife but before he was able to do so a third brother was born and he himself died, the first widow is exempt⁵⁷ as 'the wife of the brother who was not his contemporary', and the second⁵⁸ may either perform the halizah or be taken in levirate marriage. If, however, he⁵⁹ addressed a ma'amar to the widow and subsequently a third brother was born, or if a third brother was born first and he⁵⁹ addressed the ma'amar to the widow subsequently, and died, the first widow is exempt⁵⁷ as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary' while the second⁵⁸ must perform the halizah,⁶⁰ though she may not be taken in levirate marriage.

(1) One as actual, the other as virtual wife of the same husband, the second brother. The Torah required the levir 'to build up his brother's house' (Deut. XXV, 9) from which it is inferred that it is his duty to build up only a house but not houses, i.e., to marry his brother's one wife but not his two wives.

(2) Both of whom are subject to the levirate marriage. and one of whom cannot exempt the other.

(3) R. Simeon.

(4) As to whether a levirate bond exists. Cf. supra p. 105, n. 9.

(5) Where two brothers died simultaneously; when the one widow is as much tied to him as the other.

(6) Lit., 'with nothing'.

(7) Lit., 'saying and not saying' or 'ma'amar and not ma'amar'.

(8) The third brother.

(9) R. Joseph.

(10) As in our Mishnah where the first brother was survived by one brother only. The subsequent birth of a third brother does not affect the levirate any more than it can affect an actual marriage.

(11) Of which the cited Baraitha speaks. There, when the first brother died he was survived by two brothers.

(12) Between one levir and two.

(13) Of a third brother.

(14) Of the second brother with the widow of the first.

(15) Who survived the first deceased brother after whose death the third brother was born.

(16) Which proves that even in the case of one levir R. Simeon does not recognize the existence of a levirate bond.

(17) Cf. supra note 4.

(18) Where the birth of the third preceded the marriage of the second.

(19) Where birth preceded marriage.

(20) The Tanna preferred to draw a distinction between two sets of circumstances both of which relate to the brothers-in-law rather than to draw a distinction between one brother-in-law and two brothers-in-law in the same set of circumstances.

(21) According to which neither halizah nor levirate marriage is allowed whenever the birth preceded the marriage. Both, according to what has just been said, are permissible in the case of one levir.

- (22) Against the statement that R. Simeon regards the levirate bond as actual marriage.
- (23) The women enumerated.
- (24) If their husbands, the two brothers, died without issue.
- (25) With the third surviving brother.
- (26) By that brother; since both are equally related to him by the same 'levirate bond' and each is forbidden to him as the consanguineous relative of the woman connected with him by such bond.
- (27) Infra 28b; even from the halizah.
- (28) I.e., the widow whose husband had died first, and who, through the 'levirate bond', is regarded as the levir's virtual wife even before he married her.
- (29) Her consanguineous relative, the widow of the second deceased brother.
- (30) As a forbidden relative; being consanguineous with his virtual wife.
- (31) In R. Simeon's statement.
- (32) Whose husband died last. The first, however, is to be taken in levirate marriage.
- (33) Infra 28b, Rid. 50b.
- (34) 'Both' used by R. Simeon refers to the second of each pair. Raba assumed that the two brothers had married two sisters and also a mother and her daughter. One of the first is taken in levirate marriage and the others are thereby exempt either as 'forbidden relatives' or 'rivals'.
- (35) Enumerated in the cited Mishnah, assuming as he did that it meant marriage by the two brothers of more than one pair (v. previous note).
- (36) 'Or' occurs after the enumeration of each pair.
- (37) Viz., that R. Simeon's exemption refers to the second of each pair.
- (38) Since four pairs were enumerated.
- (39) Widows of the first brother.
- (40) Lev. XVIII, 18.
- (41) As in the case cited, where each of the two brothers was married to one of each pair, and when the first brother died all his widows became subject to levirate marriage with the second brother and thus become rivals.
- (42) Even the first widow. Consequently R. Simeon's exemption applies to all, which shews that he recognizes no distinction on the question of the levirate bond between one levir and two levirs!
- (43) The widows.
- (44) That the 'levirate bond' in the case of one levir being recognized even by R. Simeon as being as forcible as actual marriage. the levir (the third brother) marries the first while the other is exempt, though her husband (the second brother) died before he actually married the first.
- (45) In the Mishnah cited by R. Oshaia in objection against the view attributing to R. Simeon a distinction between one levir and two levirs.
- (46) I.e., to ascertain that two things occur exactly at one and the same moment, Bek. 17a. Hence it may happen that both brothers die simultaneously and both widows simultaneously become subject to the third brother and consequently, on the view of R. Simeon, both exempt from halizah and levirate marriage.
- (47) Disagreeing with R. Oshaia, supra 18b.
- (48) From the Rabbis of our Mishnah.
- (49) With the second brother.
- (50) Of the third brother.
- (51) 'Marriage before birth' in our Mishnah and 'birth before marriage' in the previous one.
- (52) To shew that they exempt not only in the one case but also in the other. Cf. infra notes 11-12
- (53) As to the objection raised (supra 18b): Since they exempt in the second case, what need was there to mention the first which could have been inferred from it a minori ad majus?
- (54) The case in the first Mishnah, the birth of the third brother before the marriage of the second, where the birth occurred while the widow was still under a prohibition to marry him.
- (55) The case in the second Mishnah, where the birth of the third brother occurred when the widow was already permitted to him.
- (56) That when the birth of the third brother occurred prior to the marriage of the second with the widow of the first, R. Simeon agrees with the Rabbis.
- (57) From marriage and halizah with the third brother.

(58) The widow of the second brother.

(59) The second brother.

(60) The ma'amar addressed to the first widow not having 'the same force as actual marriage to render the second brother's wife her rival to be exempt from halizah as well as from the levirate marriage with the third brother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 19b

R. Simeon said: Intercourse or halizah with the one of them¹ exempts her rival.² If, however, he³ participated in halizah with her to whom [the second brother had] addressed the ma'amar, her rival is not exempt.⁴ If he¹ married her⁵ and died, and a [third] brother was subsequently born, or if a [third] brother was born, and subsequently he married her⁵ and died, both [widows] are exempt from the halizah and the levirate marriage. If he married her⁵ and [after that a third] brother was born and then he himself died, both widows are exempt from the halizah and the levirate marriage; this is the opinion of R. Meir. R. Simeon, however, said: Since, when he⁶ came [into the world] he found her⁷ permitted to him,⁸ and she was never forbidden to him even for one moment, he⁶ may take in levirate marriage whichever of them he desires or he may participate in the halizah with whichever of them he desires. Now, in accordance with whose view was the case in the latter clause⁹ taught?¹⁰ If it be suggested that it was taught in accordance with the view of R. Meir,¹¹ it might be observed that, as R. Meir draws no distinction between marriage that was followed by birth and birth that was followed by marriage, all these cases should have been combined in one statement!¹² Consequently it must have been in accordance with the view of R. Simeon who thus differs¹³ only in the case where the levirate marriage was followed by birth¹⁴ but does not differ¹³ where birth was followed by levirate marriage.¹⁵ Our point is thus proved.

The Master said, '[If] the second intended to address a ma'amar to his deceased brother's wife but before he was able to do so, a third brother was born while he himself died, the first widow is exempt as "the wife of the brother who was not his contemporary and the second may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage'. What is meant by 'he intended' and what by 'he was not able'? If he did it, it is an accomplished fact;¹⁶ and if he did not do it, it is not an accomplished fact!¹⁶ -In fact [this is the meaning:] 'He intended' with her consent and 'he was not able' with her consent but against her wish.¹⁷

This,¹⁸ however, is not in agreement with the view of Rabbi. For it was taught: If a man addressed a ma'amar to his deceased brother's wife against her consent, Rabbi regards this as legal [betrothal].¹⁹ But the Sages say, This is not a legal [betrothal]. What is Rabbi's reason?-He deduces [this form of betrothal] from the intercourse with the wife of a deceased brother; as the Intercourse with the wife of a deceased brother may be effected against her will²⁰ so may the betrothal of the wife of a deceased brother be effected against her will. And the Rabbis?-They deduce it from the usual form of betrothal;²¹ as the usual betrothal can be effected with the woman's consent only so may the betrothal of a yebamah²² be effected with her consent only. On what principle do they differ? — One Master²³ is of the opinion that matters relating to a yebamah should be inferred from matters relating to a yebamah and the Masters²⁴ are of the opinion that matters of betrothal should be inferred from matters of betrothal.²⁵

'If, however, he addressed a ma'amar to the widow, and subsequently a third brother was born, or if a third brother was born first and he²⁶ addressed the ma'amar to the widow subsequently and died, the first widow is exempt as "the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary" while the second must perform the halizah, though she may not be taken in levirate marriage. R. Simeon said: Intercourse or halizah with the one of them exempts her rival'.²⁷ What is R. Simeon referring to?²⁸ If it should be suggested, 'To the case where the third brother was born first and he²⁶ addressed the ma'amar subsequently's surely it has been stated, that where birth preceded marriage R. Simeon does not differ from the Rabbis!²⁹ — But [the reference is] to the case where the ma'amar was addressed first and the third brother was born subsequently. Hence, 'if he participated in halizah with her to whom [the second brother had] addressed the ma'amar, her rival is not exempt', because³⁰ the [subjection of the] rival³¹ is a certainty³² while [the subjection of her] to whom the ma'amar had been addressed is doubtful,³³ and no doubt may over-ride³⁴ a certainty.

R. Manasseh b. Zebid sat in the presence of R. Huna, and in the course of the session he said: What is R. Simeon's reason?³⁵ — 'What is R. Simeon's reason'! [Surely it is] as it has been stated: The reason is 'because when he was born he found her permitted to him, and she was never forbidden him even for one moment'!³⁶ But [the question rather is] what is the reason of the Rabbis?³⁷ -Scripture said, A/Id take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,³⁸ the former levirate attachment still remains with her.³⁹ But then what of the following⁴⁰ where we learned, 'If he⁴¹ married her⁴² she is regarded as his wife in every respect'⁴³ and [in connection with this] R. Jose b. Hanina said, 'This teaches

(1) I.e., the second widow.

(2) As will be explained infra this applies to the case where the ma'amar was addressed to the first widow and the third brother was born subsequently, R. Simeon being of the opinion that it is uncertain whether the ma'amar has the same force as actual marriage or not. The rival is in either case exempt: If the ma'amar was binding, then even the first widow is according to R. Simeon permitted to the third brother, since it is a case of 'marriage prior to birth', and the halizah with the second consequently exempts the first as her rival, both having been married to the same husband; and if the ma'amar was not binding, the first widow is forbidden to the third brother as the widow of 'the brother who was not his contemporary' while the second is not her rival and may be taken in levirate marriage or perform the halizah.

(3) The third brother.

(4) Since it is possible that the ma'amar is not binding and she is in consequence forbidden to him as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary' and her halizah has no validity.

(5) The first widow.

(6) The third brother.

(7) The first widow.

(8) Having been born after her marriage with the second brother had entirely severed her connection with the first brother.

(9) Marriage between the second brother and the first widow, followed by the birth of the third brother, which again was followed by the death of the second.

(10) I.e., in accordance with whose view was it necessary to have the case of marriage prior to birth separated from that of marriage after birth?

(11) To indicate that even in such a case he forbids marriage.

(12) Lit., 'let him mix them and teach them'; the third case, 'if he married her and (after that a third) brother was born and then he himself died' should not have been separated from the previous two cases, since according to R. Meir it matters little whether marriage of the second brother with the first widow preceded or followed the birth of the third brother.

(13) From the Rabbis.

(14) As R. Papa stated. V. supra note 7.

(15) Contrary to the opinion of R. Oshaia.

(16) And the intention is of no consequence.

(17) The object of the statement being that the ma'amar has not even partially the force of marriage if it was made against the woman's will. The second widow may, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage.

(18) That the ma'amar addressed to the wife of a deceased brother (Yebamah. v. Glos.) is invalid unless she consented to the betrothal.

(19) Lit., 'he acquired'.

(20) V supra 8b.

(21) The betrothal of a stranger.

(22) The wife of a deceased brother.

- (26) The second brother.
- (27) Supra 19a-b, q.v. for notes.
- (28) In differing from the Rabbis. Lit., 'on what does he stand'.
- (29) But agrees that the first widow in relation to the third brother is to be regarded as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'. Now, since it is possible that the ma'amar is as valid as actual marriage, how could R. Simeon have permitted the rival of a forbidden relative? Furthermore, the expression 'she exempts her rival' would be unsuitable, since her rival has all the time been exempt as the 'wife of the brother who was not his contemporary'.
- (30) Lit., 'what is the reason'.
- (31) To the third brother.
- (32) If the ma'amar was valid both widows are subject to the third brother, since it is a case of marriage before birth; if the ma'amar is invalid, the second is still subjected to the levir since, no marriage having taken place, she is not the rival of a forbidden relative.
- (33) It being possible that the ma'amar is not valid, and the first widow thus remains forbidden to the third brother as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'. Halizah with her is, therefore, of no validity and cannot exempt the second widow.
- (34) Lit., 'puts out'.
- (35) For permitting levirate marriage with the third brother in the case where the second brother had married the first widow prior to the birth of the third brother.
- (36) Supra, q.v. for notes.
- (37) Why do they forbid the levirate marriage between the first widow and the third brother, where the only relationship between them is through the second brother, the relationship through the first brother having ceased with the levirate marriage of the widow by the second brother prior to the birth of the third?

that he may divorce her with a letter of divorce and that he may remarry her',¹ let it there also be said, 'And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,² the former levirate attachment still remains with her' and, consequently, she should require halizah [also]! — There the case is different; since Scripture stated, 'And take her to him to wife',² as soon as he married her she becomes his wife in every respect. If so, [the same deduction should be applied] here also! — Surely the All Merciful has written, 'And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her'.² And why the differentiation?³ - It stands to reason that permission⁴ should be applied to that which is [also otherwise] permitted,⁵ and that prohibition⁶ should be applied to that which is [also otherwise] prohibited.⁷

According to R. Simeon, however, who stated, 'Because when he was born he found her permitted, and she was never forbidden to him even for one moment',⁸ a brother, if this reason is tenable,⁹ should be allowed to take in levirate marriage his maternal sister whom his paternal brother had married prior to his birth, dying subsequently, since, when he was born, he found her permitted.¹⁰ — Whither did the 'prohibition of sister' vanish?¹¹ — Here, also, whither did the prohibition of 'the wife of the brother who was not his contemporary' vanish! — The one¹² is a prohibition which can never be lifted; the other¹³ is a prohibition which may be lifted.¹⁴

MISHNAH. A GENERAL RULE HAS BEEN LAID DOWN¹⁵ IN RESPECT OF THE DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE:¹⁶ WHEREVER SHE IS PROHIBITED¹⁷ AS A FORBIDDEN RELATIVE, SHE¹⁸ MAY NEITHER PERFORM THE HALIZAH NOR BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. IF SHE IS PROHIBITED BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT¹⁹ OR BY VIRTUE OF HOLINESS,²⁰ SHE MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH AND MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. IF HER SISTER IS ALSO HER SISTER-IN-LAW,²¹ SHE²² MAY PERFORM THE HALIZAH OR MAY BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²³

PROHIBITED BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT' [REFERS TO] THE SECONDARY DEGREES IN RELATIONSHIP FORBIDDEN BY THE RULING OF THE SCRIBES. 'PROHIBITED BY VIRTUE OF HOLINESS' [REFERS TO THE FOLLOWING FORBIDDEN CATEGORIES]: A WIDOW TO A HIGH PRIEST;²⁴ A DIVORCED WOMAN, OR ONE THAT HAD PERFORMED HALIZAH TO A COMMON PRIEST;²⁵ A FEMALE BASTARD OR A NETHINAH²⁶ TO AN ISRAELITE;²⁷ AND A DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE,²⁷ TO A NATHIN²⁸ OR A BASTARD.

GEMARA. What was the GENERAL RULE meant to include?²⁹ — R. R. b. papa replied: TO include the rival of a woman who was incapable of procreation, In agreement with the view of R. Assi.³⁰

Some there are who say:³¹ 'Whenever her prohibition is that of a forbidden relative then only is her rival forbidden; when, however, her prohibition is not that of a forbidden relative, her rival is not forbidden'. What was this meant to exclude? — R. R. replied: To exclude the rival of one incapable of procreation, contrary to the view of R. Assi.³⁰

IF HER SISTER IS ALSO HER SISTER-IN-LAW [etc.]. Whose sister? If the sister of her who is forbidden by Virtue of an ordinance of the Scribes be suggested, fit may be objected,] since, pentateuchally, she³² is subject to the levir, he would³³ come in marital contact with the sister of her who is connected with him by the levirate bond! — It means the sister of her who is prohibited to him as a forbidden relative.

PROHIBITED BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT', [REFERS TO] THE SECONDARY DEGREES. Why are these designated, PROHIBITED BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT'?-Abaye replied: Because it is a commandment to obey the rulings of the Sages.

PROHIBITED BY VIRTUE OF HOLINESS'... A WIDOW TO A HIGH PRIEST; A DIVORCED WOMAN, OR ONE WHO HAD PERFORMED THE HALIZAH, TO A COMMON PRIEST. Why are these designated 'PROHIBITED BY VIRTUE OF HOLINESS'?-Because It is written in the Scriptures, They shall be holy unto their God.³⁴

It was taught: R. Judah reverses the order: prohibited by virtue of a commandment [refers to the following prohibited categories:] a widow to a high priest; a divorced woman or one that had performed halizah, to a common priest. And why are these designated, prohibited by virtue of a commandment? — Because it is written in the Scriptures, These are the commandments.³⁵ prohibited by virtue of holiness [refers to] the secondary degrees of relationship forbidden by the rulings of the scribes. And why are these designated, prohibited by virtue of holiness?-Abaye replied: Because whosoever acts in accordance with the rulings of the Rabbis is called a holy man. Said Raba to him: Then he who does not act in accordance with the rulings of the Rabbis is not called a holy man; nor is he called a wicked man either?³⁶ — No, said Raba: 'Sanctify yourself by that which is permitted to you'.³⁷ between a nissu'in³⁸ widow and an erusin³⁸ widow. Now, one can well understand the reason the case of a nissu'in widow [since marriage with her is forbidden by] a positive³⁹ and a negative precept⁴⁰,⁴⁰ and no positive precept⁴¹ may override both a negative and a positive precept. In the case, however, of an erusin widow [marriage with whom is forbidden by] a negative precept only,⁴² let the positive precept⁴¹ override the negative⁴⁰ one? — R. Giddal replied in the name of Rab: Scripture stated, Then his brother's wife shall go up to the 'gate,⁴³ where there was no need to state his brother's wife;⁴⁴ why then was 'his brother's wife' specified? [To indicate that] there is a case of another⁴⁵ brother's wife who goes up for halizah but does not go up for levirate marriage.⁴⁶ And who is she? One of those prohibited⁴⁷ by a negative precept.⁴⁸

Might it⁴⁹ not be said [to include also] such as are subject to the penalty of kareth?⁵⁰ — Scripture said, If the man like not to take,⁵¹ if he likes, however, he may take her in levirate marriage, [hence it is to be inferred that] whosoever may go up to enter into levirate marriage may also go up to perform halizah and whosoever may not go up to enter into levirate marriage⁵² may not go up to perform halizah either. If so, the same should apply also to those forbidden by a negative Precept! — But, surely, the All Merciful has included them [by the expression] 'His brother's wife'. What ground is there for such differentiation?⁵³

— This¹ stands to reason, since betrothal of those forbidden by a negative precept is valid while the betrothal of those subject to kareth is not valid.

Raba raised an objection: In the case of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment or by virtue of holiness, with whom the levir had intercourse or participated in halizah, her rival is thereby exempt. Now, if one is to assume that those forbidden by a negative precept are Pentateuchally subject to halizah but not to the levirate marriage, why should her rival be exempt when he had intercourse with her? He raised the objection and he also supplied the answer: This is to be understood respectively;² 'he had intercourse with her' refers to one prohibited by virtue of a commandment,³ 'participated in halizah with her' refers to the one forbidden by virtue of holiness.⁴

Raba raised an objection: He who is wounded in the stones or has his privy member cut off, a man-made saris,⁵ and an old man, may either participate in halizah, or contract levirate marriage. How?⁶ If these died and were survived by brothers and by wives, and those brothers arose and addressed a ma'amar to the widows, or gave them letters of divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are legally valid;⁷ if they had intercourse with them, the widows become their lawful wives.⁸ If the brothers died and they⁹ arose and addressed a ma'amar to their wives, or gave them divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are valid,⁷ and if they had intercourse with them, the widows become their lawful wives but they¹⁰ may not retain them, because it is said in the Scriptures — He that is wounded in the stones or hath his privy member cut off shall not enter [into the assembly of the Lord] .¹¹ Now, if it could be assumed that those forbidden by a negative precept are Pentateuchally subject to halizah and not to levirate marriage, why should the widows become their lawful wives if they¹² had intercourse with them?¹³

But, said Raba, [say rather that] an erusin widow is forbidden¹⁴ by both a positive and a negative precept, for it is written in the Scriptures, They shall be holy unto their God.¹⁵ What, however, can be said in respect of a bastard or a nethinah?¹⁶ — It is written, And sanctify yourselves.¹⁷ If so,¹⁸ all the [negative precepts of the] Torah should be regarded as positive and negative since it is written in the Scriptures, And sanctify yourselves!¹⁷ But, said Raba, [the fact is that]¹⁹ an erusin widow is forbidden²⁰ as a preventive measure against the marriage of a nissu'in widow.²¹ What, however, can be replied in respect of a bastard and a nethinah?²² — [The prohibition in] the case where a precept is applicable²³ is a preventive measure against [a marriage] where no precept is applicable. If so, let one's paternal brother's wife not be allowed levirate marriage as a preventive measure against marriage with the wife of his maternal brother! — 'We All Merciful made levirate marriage dependent on inheritance²⁴ [and the relationship] is, therefore, well known.²⁵ A woman, then, who has no children should not be taken in levirate marriage as a preventive measure against the marriage of a woman who has children! — The All Merciful made levirate marriage dependent on [the absence of] children, [and the fact²⁶ would be] well known. The wife of one's contemporary brother should not be taken in levirate marriage as a preventive measure against marriage with the wife of one's brother who was not one's contemporary! — The All Merciful has made it²⁷ dependent on dwelling together²⁸ [and the fact]²⁹ is well known. All women should not be taken in levirate marriage as a preventive measure against the marriage of a woman incapable of procreation! — This³⁰ is unusual.³¹ A bastard and a nethinah also are unusual!³² — But, said Raba, [this is the reason]: The first act of Intercourse³³ is forbidden³⁴ as a preventive measure against a second act of intercourse.³⁵

It has been taught likewise: If they³⁶ had intercourse [with any of the forbidden women] they acquire [her as wife] by the first act of intercourse, but may not keep her for a second act of intercourse.³⁷

Subsequently Raba, others say R. Ashi, said: The statement I made³⁸ is valueless,³⁹ for Resh Lakish said, 'Wherever you come upon a combination of a positive and a negative precept and⁴⁰ you are able to act in conformity with both, well and good; but if not, the positive precept must override the negative'.⁴¹ Similarly here⁴² it is possible to perform halizah, whereby one is enabled to keep the positive as well as the negative precept.

An objection was raised: If they³⁶ had intercourse [with any of the forbidden women] they acquire [her as wife]!⁴³ — This is indeed a refutation.

It was stated: Concerning an act of intercourse between a High Priest and a widow⁴⁴ [there is a difference of opinion between] R. Johanan and R. Eleazar. One maintains that it does not exempt her rival,⁴⁵ and the other maintains that it does exempt her rival.⁴⁶)

(2) Lit., 'he taught to sides'.

(3) As defined in our Mishnah. I.e., a woman forbidden by Rabbinic ordinance but who is Pentateuchally permitted and subject to levirate marriage. Intercourse with her consequently exempts her rival.

(13) This proves that those forbidden by negative precept are subject to levirate marriage no less than to halizah, and thus the question remains, why should an erusin widow be forbidden in levirate marriage to a High Priest?

(14) To a High Priest.

(15) Lev. XXI, 6. This text adds a positive precept to the negative one of ibid. 14, and for this reason an erusin widow is forbidden in levirate marriage to a High Priest.

(16) Marriage with whom is forbidden by a negative precept only and yet may not be superseded by the positive precept of the levirate.

(17) Lev. XI, 44cf. p. 119, n. II.

(18) That Lev. XI, 44 provides a text from which a positive precept may be deduced and added to the negative one.

(19) Raba's answer thus being rebutted, there remains the question, why should an erusin widow be forbidden in levirate marriage to a High Priest.

(20) To a High Priest.

(21) Not because those forbidden by a negative precept may not contract levirate marriage. Pentateuchally, in fact, they may; and this is the reason why marital intercourse with such consummates marriage, as stated supra.

(22) Why are these forbidden levirate marriage?

(23) Such as the precept of the levirate marriage.

(30) That a woman should be incapable of procreation.

(31) And there is no need to provide against rare cases.

(32) And yet they were forbidden as a preventive measure.

(33) In the levirate marriage, Pentateuchally permissible even in the case of one forbidden by a negative precept, the positive precept overriding the negative.

(34) In the case of an erusin widow.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 21a

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 21a

In the case of a nissu'in widow they both agree¹ that it does not exempt, since no positive precept may override a combination of a positive and a negative precept.² They differ, however, in the case of an erusin widow. He who maintains that it³ exempts [does so because] a positive precept supersedes a negative one; and he who maintains that it³ does not exempt holds that the positive precept here does not supersede the negative one since [in this case] halizah is possible.⁴

An objection was raised: If they⁵ had intercourse [with any of the forbidden women] they acquire [her as wife]⁶ -This is indeed a refutation. May this⁷ be assumed to provide a refutation of the view of Resh Lakish also?⁸ -Resh Lakish can answer you: I said it only in the case where the precept is fulfilled; here, however, halizah as a substitute for the levirate marriage is not a fulfilment of the precept.⁹

Raba said: Where in the Torah may an allusion be found to [the prohibition of] relations in the second degree?¹⁰ It is said, For all these abominations have the men of the land done;¹¹ the expression, these¹² implies grave abominations, from which it may be inferred that there are milder ones. And what are these? The cases of incest of the second degree. What proof is there that 'these'¹² is an expression of gravity? — Because it is written in the Scriptures, And the mighty¹³ of the land he took away.¹⁴ May it be assumed that this view¹⁵ differs from that of R. Levi? For R. Levi said: The punishments for [false] measures are more rigorous than those for [marrying] forbidden relatives; for in the latter case the word used is El,¹² but in the former Eleh.¹⁶ — El implies rigour, but Eleh implies greater rigour than El.¹⁷ Is not Eleh written also In connection with forbidden relatives?¹⁸ -That [Eleh has been written] to exclude [the sin of false] measures from the penalty of kareth.¹⁹ In what respect, then,²⁰ are they²¹ more rigorous? — In the case of the former,²² repentance is possible; in that of the latter²³ repentance is impossible.²⁴

Rab Judah said: It²⁵ may be derived from the following: Yea he pondered, and sought out, and set in order many proverbs,²⁶ in relation to which 'Ulla said in the name of R. Eleazar, 'Before Solomon appeared, the Torah was like a basket without handles; when²⁷ Solomon came he affixed handles²⁸ to it.

R. Oshaia said: It²⁵ may be derived from the following: Avoid it, pass not by it; turn from it, and pass on.²⁹

Said R. Ashi: R. Oshaia's interpretation may be represented by the simile³⁰ of a man who guards an orchard. If he guards it from without, all of it is protected. If, however, he guards it from within, only that section in front of him is protected but that which is behind him is not protected. This statement of R. Ashi, however, is mere fiction.³¹ There,³² the section in front of him, at least, is protected; while here were it not for the prohibition of incest of the second degree, one would have encroached upon the very domain of incest.

R. Kahana said, it may be derived from here: Therefore shall ye keep My charge,³³ provide a charge to my charge.³⁴

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: This,³⁵ surely, is Pentateuchal!³⁶ — It is Pentateuchal' but the Rabbis have expounded it.³⁷ All the Torah, surely- was expounded by the Rabbis!³⁸ But [the fact is that the prohibition³⁹ is] Rabbinical, while the Scriptural text is [adduced as] a mere prop.⁴⁰

Our Rabbis taught: Who are the forbidden relatives in the second degree?⁴¹ — His mother's mother, his father's mother, his father's father's wife, his mother's father's wife, the wife of his father's maternal brother, the wife of his mother's paternal brother, the daughter-in-law of his son daughter-in-law his daughter. A man is permitted to marry the wife of his father-in-law and the wife of his step-son but is forbidden to marry the daughter of his step-son. His step-son is permitted to marry his⁴² wife and his⁴² daughter. The wife of his step-son may say to him, 'I am permitted to you though daughter is forbidden to you'.

Is not the daughter of, his step-son forbidden, it being written in the Scriptures, Her son's daughter or her daughters daughter?'³³ — As he wished to state in the latter clause, 'The wife of his step-son may say to him, "I am permitted to you though my daughter is forbidden to you", and though my daughter is forbidden to you Pentateuchally the Rabbis did not forbid me as a preventive measure', he stated in the previous clause also 'the daughter of his step-son'. If so,⁴³ could not the wife of his father-in-law also say, 'I am permitted to you and my daughter is forbidden to you', since she is his wife's sister?⁴⁴ -The prohibition of the one⁴⁵ is permanent;⁴⁶ that of the other is not.⁴⁷

Rab said: Four [categories of] women [forbidden in the second degree] are subject to a limitation.⁴⁸ Of these Rab knew⁴⁹ three: The wife of a mother's⁵⁰ paternal brother, the wife of a father's⁵¹ maternal brother, and one's daughter-in-law.⁵² Ze'iri, however, adds also the wife of his mother's father. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: Your mnemonic sign is, 'Above that of Rab'.⁵³ Why does not Rab include it?⁵⁴ — Because she⁵⁴ might be mistaken for the wife of one's father's father.⁵⁵ And Ze'iri?-Thither⁵⁶ one usually goes,⁵⁷ but hither⁵⁸ one does not usually go.⁵⁹

- (17) El and Eleh have the same meaning, but the additional eh (הי) at the end of the latter is taken to imply additional punishment.
- (18) Lev. XVIII, 26. האיל
- (19) Since the expression of 'abomination' has been applied in the Pentateuchal text to both false measures and forbidden relations, it might have been assumed that the sin of the former is, like the latter, subject to kareth. Hence the need for the excluding word.
- (20) If the penalty of kareth is inflicted for the sin of incest only and not for that of false measures.
- (21) The punishments for false measures.
- (22) Incest, so long as there was no Issue.
- (23) False measures.
- (24) V. B.B. 88b. One cannot by mere repentance make amends for robbing. The return of the things robbed must precede penitence. In the case of false measures it is practically impossible to trace all the individual members of the public that were defrauded.

(25) An allusion to the prohibition of relations in the second degree.

(26) Eccl. XII, 9.

(27) Lit., 'until'.

(28) אָרְבֵּי אָזְנוֹת, sing. אָזְנוֹת, 'ear' or 'handle'. The Heb. אָזְנוֹת (E.V. he pondered) is regarded as denominative of אָזְנוֹת, 'he made handles', i.e., he added restrictions to the commandments of the Torah, such as the prohibitions of incest of the second degree, which helped to preserve the original precepts of the Torah as handles are an aid to the preservation of the basket.

(29) Prov. IV, 15; an allusion to the Torah. One must add restrictions to its precepts, such as those of incest of the second degree, in order to keep away from any possible infringement of its original precepts.

(30) Lit., 'the parable of R. Oshaia, to what may the thing be compared?'

(33) Lev. XVIII, 30, dealing with incest.

(34) Or 'make a keeping to my keeping', a protection to my protection', i.e., 'add restrictive measures to safeguard my original precept'.

(35) R. Kahana's text.

(36) Why then is this class of incest described as of the 'second' degree?

(37) Hence it must come under the second degree.

(38) And yet no one would describe those laws as of the second degree!

(39) Of incest of the second degree.

(40) Heb., Asmakta, v. Glos.

(41) Of incest.

(42) The step-father's. (13) Lev. XVIII, 17. Why include it among incest of the second degree?

(43) [If this is the reason for including Pentateuchal prohibition in this list].

(44) [And thus let him also include the daughter of his mother-in-law.]

(45) Lit., that', the daughter of his step-son.

(46) Lit., 'it is definite to him'.

(47) The daughter of his mother-in-law is permitted to him after the death of her sister, his wife.

(48) Lit., 'break' i.e., only they themselves are forbidden but not their descendants or ancestors in the descending or ascending line. In the case of the other relatives in the second degree of incest the prohibition extends throughout all generations in the ascending. and descending lines.

(49) Lit., 'held in his hand'.

(50) But not, e.g., of a mother's mother's.

(51) Not of a father's father's.

(52) This case is discussed infra.

(53) Ze'ri's addition to the limitations is one generation above that of Rab. While the latter stops at the second generation (that of father and mother) the former goes as far as the third (mother's father).

(54) Ze'ri's addition, a mother's father's wife.

(55) Who is Pentateuchally forbidden. Were a limit to be set in the case of the former, a similar limit would erroneously be set to the latter.

(56) To the family of one's father.

(57) I.e., there is frequent social intercourse between the members of the family on the paternal side.

(58) One's mother's family.

(59) No mistake, therefore, could occur between a mother's father and a father's father. Hence no preventive measure is necessary.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 21b

Pentateuchal, it being written in the Scriptures, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law?¹ — Read, 'the daughter-in-law of his son'. But is there any limitation² for the daughter-in-law of one's son? Surely it was taught: His daughter-in-law is a forbidden relative, and the daughter-in-law of his son is a forbidden relative of the second degree; and the same principle is to be applied to one's son and son's son to the end of all generations!³ — But read, 'the daughter-in-law of his daughter' for R. Hisda said: I heard from a great man—And who is he? R. Ammi— [the following statement]: 'The daughter-in-law was forbidden only on account of the daughter-in-law'; and when the soothsayers⁴ told me, 'You will be a teacher', I thought, 'If I would be a great man⁵ I would explain it⁶ on my own; and should I be a Scripture teacher of little children I would ask the Rabbis who come to the school house.⁷ Now I am in a position to explain it on my own: The daughter-in-law of one's daughter was forbidden only on account of the daughter-in-law of one's son.

Said Abaye to Raba: I can explain it to you: Take as an example a daughter-in-law of the house of Bar Zithai.⁸ R. Papa said: As for example a daughter-in-law in the house of R. Papa b. Abba.⁹ R. Ashi said: As for example a daughter-in-law of the house of Mari b. Isak.⁹

An inquiry was made: What [is the law in respect of] the wife of a mother's maternal brother? Did the Rabbis forbid as a preventive measure only the wife of a father's maternal brother and the wife of a mother's paternal brother because in these cases there is a paternal strain,¹⁰ but where there is no paternal strain¹¹ the Rabbis did not pass any preventive measure, or is there no difference? R. Safra replied: She herself¹² is forbidden as a preventive measure; shall we come and superimpose a preventive measure upon a preventive measure! Said Raba: Are not others¹³ forbidden as a preventive measure to a preventive measure? His mother, e.g., is a forbidden relative, his mother's mother is a forbidden relative of the second degree, and yet was his father's mother forbidden as a preventive measure against his mother's mother¹³ And what is the reason? Because they are both called 'grandmother'¹⁴ His father's wife is a forbidden relative, his father's father's wife is a forbidden relative of the second degree, and yet was his mother's father's wife forbidden as a preventive measure against his father's father's wife! And what is the reason? Because they are both called 'grandfather'.¹⁵ The wife of his father's paternal brother is a forbidden relative, the wife of his father's maternal brother is a forbidden relative of the second degree, and yet was the wife of his mother's paternal brother forbidden as a preventive against the wife of his father's maternal brother! And what is the reason? Because they are both called uncle!¹⁵ What, then, is the law?¹⁶ Come and hear: When R. Judah b. Shila came¹⁷ he stated that In the West¹⁸ the rule was laid down¹⁹ that whenever a female²⁰ is a forbidden relative the wife of the male²¹ is forbidden in the second degree as a preventive measure; and Raba remarked: 'Is this a general rule? Surely one's mother-in-law is a forbidden relative and yet is one's father-in-law's wife permitted, the daughter of his mother-in-law is a forbidden relative and yet is the wife of the son of his mother-in-law permitted, his step-daughter is a forbidden relative and yet is the wife of his step-son permitted, the daughter of his step-daughter is a forbidden relative and yet is the wife of the son of his step-son permitted'; what, then, does R. Judah b. Shila's [reported rule] include? Does it not then include the case of the wife of a mother's maternal brother, since 'wherever a female²² as a forbidden relative²³ the wife of the male²⁴ is forbidden in the second degree as a preventive measure'!²⁵

What is the difference between those²⁶ and this?²⁷ — In this case²⁷ she becomes related to him by one act of betrothal;²⁸ in those cases²⁹ they do not become related to him until two acts of betrothal have taken place.³⁰

R. Mesharsheya of Tusaneya³¹ sent to R. Papi: Will our Master instruct us as to what is the law concerning the wife of the father's father's [paternal]³² brother, and a father's father's sister?³³ Seeing that the degree below is incest,³⁴ has a preventive measure been issued in respect also of the degree above,³⁵ or perhaps [not]. since the relationship has branched off?³⁶ Come and hear: Who are the forbidden relatives of the second degree [etc.];³⁷ and these³⁵ were not enumerated among them!³⁸ — Some might have been mentioned and others omitted.³⁹ What other omissions were made such as to justify this omission also? — The forbidden relatives of the second degree, of the School of R.

Hiyya,⁴⁰ were also omitted.

Amemar permitted the wife of one's father's father's brother and one's father's father's sister. Said R. Hillel to R. Ashi:⁴¹ 'I saw the [list of] forbidden relatives of the second degree of Mar the son of Rabana⁴² and sixteen were written down as forbidden cases. Would they not be the eight of the Baraita,⁴³ the six of the School of R. Hiyya,⁴⁴ and these two,⁴⁵ in all sixteen?-But according to your view there should be seventeen, since there is also the case of the wife of a mother's maternal brother, who in accordance with our decision is forbidden!' — 'This is no difficulty.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 22a

Those two which resemble one another¹ are reckoned as one, and thus [the total is] sixteen.' 'But, after all, I saw that these were written down as forbidden!'² The other said to him: 'Granted that this is so, would you have relied upon that list, if the cases had been written down as permitted? "Has Mar the son of Rabana signed them?" [you would have argued]. Now then that they have been written down as forbidden, [you might also argue]. "Mar the son of Rabana has not signed them".

It was taught at the School of R. Hiyya: The third generation of his son,³ of his daughter.⁴ of the son of his wife⁵ or of the daughter of his wife⁶ [is forbidden as incest of the] second degree; the fourth generation⁷ through his father-in-law⁸ or his mother-in-law⁹ [is forbidden as incest of the] second degree.

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Why is the wife included in the ascending line¹⁰ and not included in the descending line?¹¹ -In the case of the ascending line, where the prohibition is due to his wife, she is included; in the descending line, where the prohibition is not due to his wife,¹² she is not included. But, surely, there is the case of the son of his wife and the daughter of his wife whose prohibition is due to his wife who is, nevertheless, not included! — As he enumerated three generations in the descending line on his side¹³ and did not include her, he also enumerated three generations in the descending line on her side¹⁴ and did not include her.

Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: Are the second degrees of incest of the School of R. Hiyya subject to the limitation¹⁵ or not? Come and hear what Rab said: 'Four [categories of forbidden] women are subject to a limitation',¹⁶ but no more. But is it not possible that Rab was only referring to that Baraitha!¹⁷

Come and hear: 'The third' and 'the fourth',¹⁸ which implies the third and fourth generations only but no further. But is it not possible [that this meant] from the third generation onwards¹⁹ and from the fourth generation onwards!¹⁹

Raba said to R. Nahman, 'Has the Master seen the young scholar who came from the West²⁰ and stated: The question was raised in the West whether the second degrees of incest were forbidden as a preventive measure among proselytes or not?' — The other replied: Seeing that even in respect of actual incest 'but for the fear that they might be said to have exchanged a [religion of] stricter for [one of] more easy-going sanctity, the Rabbis would not have imposed upon them any preventive measures,²¹ is there any question [that they should have done so in respect of] the second degrees?

Said R. Nahman: As the subject of proselytes has come up,²² let us say something about them: Maternal brothers may not tender evidence;²³ if, however, they did, their evidence is valid.²⁴ Paternal brothers may tender evidence without challenge.²⁵

Amemar said: Even maternal brothers may tender evidence without challenge. And why is this case different from incest?²⁶ — Matters of incest lie in everybody's hands;²⁷ evidence is entrusted to Beth din, and [they know that] one who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born.²⁸

MISHNAH. IF ONE HAS ANY KIND OF BROTHER,²⁹ [THAT BROTHER] IMPOSES UPON HIS BROTHER'S WIFE THE OBLIGATION OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE AND IS DEEMED TO BE HIS BROTHER IN EVERY RESPECT. FROM THIS IS EXCLUDED A BROTHER BORN FROM A SLAVE OR A HEATHEN.³⁰

IF ONE HAS ANY KIND OF SON, [THAT SON] EXEMPTS HIS FATHER'S WIFE FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, IS LIABLE TO PUNISHMENT FOR STRIKING OR CURSING [HIS FATHER]. AND IS DEEMED TO BE HIS SON IN EVERY RESPECT. FROM THIS IS EXCLUDED THE SON OF A SLAVE OR A HEATHEN.³¹ GEMARA. What does the expression ANY KIND include? Rab Judah said: It includes a bastard. Is not this obvious? Surely, he is his brother! — It might have been assumed that 'brotherhood'³² here should be deduced from 'brotherhood' in the case of the sons of Jacob;³³ as there they were all legitimate and untainted, so here also [the brothers must be] legitimate and untainted; hence we were taught [that it is not so]. [Might we still suggest that it is so?] — Since he³⁴ has at any rate the power to confer exemption from the levirate marriage³⁵

he also has the power to impose the obligation of the levirate marriage.¹

AND IS DEEMED TO BE HIS BROTHER IN EVERY RESPECT. In respect of what, in actual practice?—That he is to be his heir and that he² may defile himself for him. Is not this obvious, he being his brother! — Whereas it is written, Except for his kin, that is near unto him,³ and a Master had said that 'his kin' refers to his wife, while [on the other hand] it is written, A husband among his people shall not defile himself, to profane himself,⁴ [which verses taken together mean],⁵ some kind of husband may defile himself and some kind of husband may not, and how [is this to be understood]? He may defile himself for his lawful wife but may not defile himself for his unlawful wife; and so here it might have been assumed that he may defile himself for a legitimate brother but may not defile himself for an illegitimate brother; hence it was taught [that it is hot so]. Might we still suggest that it is so? In that case she is liable at any moment to be sent away,⁶ but here he is his brother.

FROM THIS IS EXCLUDED A BROTHER BORN FROM A SLAVE OR A HEATHEN. What is the reason? Scripture stated, The wife and her children shall be the master's.⁷

IF ONE HAS ANY KIND OF SON, [THAT SON] EXEMPTS etc. What does ANY KIND include?—Rab Judah said: It includes a bastard. What is the reason? — Because Scripture stated, And have no [en lo] child⁸ which implies 'hold an inquiry⁹ concerning him.'¹⁰

AND IS LIABLE TO PUNISHMENT FOR STRIKING [HIM]. But why? One should apply here the Scriptural text, Nor curse a ruler of thy people.¹¹ only when he practises the deeds of thy people!¹² — As R. Phinehas in the name of R. Papa said [elsewhere] 'When he repented', so here also it is a case where he repented. Is such a persona however, capable of penitence? Surely we learnt: Simeon b. Menasya said, That which is crooked cannot be made straight.¹³ refers to him who had intercourse with a forbidden relative and begot from her a bastard! — Now, at any rate, he is practising 'the deeds of thy people'.¹⁴

Our Rabbis taught: He who has intercourse with his sister who is also the daughter of his father's wife¹⁵ is guilty¹⁶ on account of both his sister and his father's wife's daughter. R. Jose son of R. Judah said: He is only guilty on account of his sister but not of the daughter of his father's wife.

What is the Rabbis' reason? Observe, they would say, it is written, The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or the daughter of thy mother,¹⁷ what need was there for The nakedness of thy father's wife's daughter, begotten of thy father, she is thy sister?¹⁸ In order to intimate that he is guilty on account of both his sister and his father's wife's daughter. And R. Jose son of R. Judah? — Scripture stated, She is thy sister,¹⁹ you can hold him guilty on account of his sister, but you cannot hold him guilty for his father's wife's daughter. And to what do the Rabbis apply the expression, 'She is thy sister'?-They require it [for the deduction] that a man is guilty on account of his sister who is the daughter of his father and the daughter of his mother,²⁰ thus indicating that no prohibition²¹ may be deduced by logical argument.²² And R. Jose son of R. Judah?²³ -If so, the All Merciful should have written 'thy sister', what need was there for 'she is'? To indicate that you may hold him guilty on account of 'thy sister' but you cannot hold him guilty on account of 'his father's wife's daughter'. And the Rabbis? Although 'thy sister' was written, It was also necessary to write 'she is'; in order that no one should suggest that elsewhere a prohibition may be deduced by logical argument and that the All Merciful has written here, 'thy sister'²⁴ because Scripture takes the trouble to write down any law that may be deduced a minori ad majus; hence did the All Merciful write 'she is'.²⁵

And R. Jose son of R. Judah?-If so, the All Merciful should have written [the expression], 'She is thy sister' in the other verse.²⁶

And to what does R. Jose son of R. Judah apply the phrase Thy father's wife's daughter?²⁷ — He requires it for [the deduction]: Only she with whom your father can enter Into marital relationship, but a sister born from a slave or a heathen²⁸ is excluded, since your father cannot enter with her into marital relationship.²⁹

Might it not be said to exclude a sister born from one whom his father had outraged? — You cannot say this owing to Raba's statement. For Raba pointed out a contradiction: It is written In Scripture, The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover,³⁰ thus it follows that her³¹ son's daughter and her daughter's daughter are permitted; but [below] it is written, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter; [thou shalt not take] her son's daughter or her daughter's daughter.³² How then [are these to be reconciled]? The one³³ refers to a case of outrage,³⁴ the other³² to that of lawful marriage.

(19) Lev. XVIII, 11.

(20) Who was not his father's lawful wife; in the case, for instance, when he and his sister were born from one whom their father had outraged. This case could not be deduced from Lev. XVIII, 9, since the sister born as a result of outrage, spoken of there, is one who is the daughter of the father or of the mother, while the expression Thy father's wife's daughter refers to one born from a lawful marriage.

- (21) Such, e.g., as intercourse with a sister born from the same woman whom their father had outraged.
- (22) If a sister who is the daughter of only one of his parents is forbidden, how much more so a sister who is the daughter of both his parents. V. Mak., Sonc. ed. pp. 18 and 26.

- (25) Only she is, i.e., only in this case, where Scripture had explicitly stated it, is the prohibition in force; but elsewhere, where Scripture has not explicitly stated the prohibition, the inference a minori ad majus cannot bring a prohibition into force.
- (26) In Lev. XVIII, 9' which speaks of a sister born from a woman his father had outraged. Since, however, it was inserted in v.11 which speaks of a sister born from a marriage it must have been meant to imply. as R. Jose said supra, that one 'is only guilty of incest with his sister but not with that of the daughter of his father's wife'.

- (34) In which case a man may not marry the daughter of his own son or the daughter of his own daughter, and may marry the daughter of the son or the daughter of the daughter whom the outraged woman had from another husband; since he himself is not her lawful husband. As in the case of one's own son and one's own daughter, though the offspring of a woman he outraged, they are legally regarded as son and daughter. so is the sisterhood and brotherhood of such children regarded as legal.

Might it not be suggested that it excludes those who are subject to the penalties of negative precepts?¹ -R. Papa² replied: The betrothal of those forbidden under negative precept is valid,³ for it is written in the Scriptures, If a man have two wives, the one beloved and the other hated;⁴ can it be said that the Omnipresent loves the one⁵ or hates the other?⁶ But 'beloved' means beloved in her marriage;⁷ 'hated' means hated in her marriage;⁸ and yet the All Merciful has said if ... have.⁹ Might it be taken to exclude those who are liable to kareth?¹⁰ — Raba replied: Scripture said, The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or the daughter of thy mother, whether born at home, or born abroad,¹¹ whether your father is told, 'You may keep her' or whether your father is told, 'Let her go',¹² the All Merciful said, 'She is thy sister'.

Will you suggest [that what is meant is]: Whether your father is told, 'You may keep her' or whether your father is told, 'Let her go'. the All Merciful said, 'She is thy sister', to include his sister from a slave and a heathen! — Scripture stated, The father's wife's daughter,¹³ only she with whom your father can enter into marital relationship, but a sister from a slave or a heathen is excluded.¹⁴ And what ground is there for this?¹⁵ — It is logical to include those subject to kareth since generally¹⁶ their betrothal is valid.¹⁷ On the contrary! A slave and a heathen should have been included since on embracing the Jewish faith, betrothal with himself is also valid! — When any of these adopts the Jewish faith she becomes a different person.¹⁸

Whence do the Rabbis deduce the exclusion of a slave and a heathen?—They deduce it from The wife and her children shall be her master's.¹⁹ And R. Jose son of R. Judah?— One text refers to a slave and the other to a heathen. And both are required; for had we been informed [concerning the exclusion of the] slave, it might have been thought [that this was so in her case] because she has no recognized ancestry, but not in that of a heathen who has recognized ancestry. And had we been informed [of the exclusion of the] heathen, it might have been assumed [that this was so In her case] because she stands under no obligation In relationship to the observance of commandments,²⁰ but not In that of a slave who is [in some respects] attached to the observance of the commandments.²¹ Hence both were required.

With reference to the Rabbis, we have discovered [the reason for the exclusion of a] slave; whence do they derive [the exclusion of the] heathen? And should you suggest that we might derive it by inference from the slave, those²² were surely needed!²³ R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Scripture stated, For he will turn away thy son from following Me;²⁴ 'thy son born from an Israelitish woman is called thy son²⁵ but 'thy son who was born from a heathen is not called thy son²⁵ but her son.²⁶ Said Rabina: From this it follows²⁷ that the 'son of your daughter' who derives from a heathen is called 'thy son'.²⁸ Does this imply that Rabina is of the opinion that if a heathen or a slave had intercourse with a daughter of Israel the child is considered fit!²⁹ -Though he is admittedly no bastard neither is he considered fit; he is rather regarded³⁰ as a tainted Israelite.³¹

But does not that text³² occur in connection with the seven nations?³³ — For he will turn away³² includes all who turn away. This is satisfactory if we follow R. Simeon who expounds³⁴ his own reasons for Scriptural precepts;³⁵ whence, however, do the Rabbis³⁶ derive it according to their view?³⁷ — Who is the Tanna³⁸ who disputes the opinion of R. Jose son of R. Judah? It is R. Simeon.

(1) If his father, e.g., had married a bastard, who is forbidden by a negative Precept. the daughter from such a union should not be regarded as his legitimate sister.

(2) Aruch reads, 'Raba'.

(3) Hence the sisterhood must also be deemed legal.

(4) Deut. XXI, 15.

(5) Lit., 'is there a loved one before the Omnipresent'.

(6) I.e., the husband's love or hatred could not obviously influence a divine law; why then should his love or hatred be mentioned at all?

(7) I.e., permitted to marry him.

(8) I.e., forbidden to marry.

(9) תהיין (rt. היה 'to be'). i.e., the betrothal is Sc. remains valid.

(10) I.e., a daughter from such a marriage which is legally invalid should not be deemed one's legal sister.

(11) Lev. XVIII, 9.

(12) Whether he is permitted to live with her (בית at home) or not (חוץ abroad).

(13) Lev. XVIII, 11.

(14) Since betrothal or marriage with either is invalid.

(15) Lit., 'and what do you see', to apply the excluding text to a slave and a heathen. and the including one to those subject to kareth. Why not reverse the application?

(16) Lit., 'to the world', to those who are not forbidden relatives.

(17) The betrothal of a slave or a heathen, however, is always invalid.

(18) And is no longer regarded as a heathen or slave.

(19) Ex. XXI, 4.

(20) A heathen is under no obligation to observe the precepts of the Torah.

(21) A slave must observe certain commandments. V. Hag. 40.

(22) The texts speaking of the slave and the heathen, supra.

(23) In connection with their own context. They are not available for any deduction.

(24) Deut. VII, 4. The pronoun he in this clause must, according to Talmudic exposition, refer to the antecedent son in v. 3' thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, and not to son in the clause, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son. Had the reference been to the latter the reading in v. 4 would have been, for SHE (i.e., the heathen woman) will turn away thy son. 'He' must consequently refer to the heathen husband of the Israelitish woman who would turn away the son of his Israelitish wife, the (grand)son of her father. The son of his son born from the heathen. however, is obviously not called his (grand)son since, 'For he will turn etc.' does not apply to him.

(25) במך thy son or grandson.

(26) I.e., he is a heathen like his mother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 23b

MISHNAH. IF A MAN BETROTHED ONE OF TWO SISTERS AND DOES NOT KNOW WHICH OF THEM HE HAS

BETROTHED, HE MUST GIVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER.¹ IF HE DIED,² LEAVING A BROTHER,³ THE LATTER MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH BOTH OF THEM.⁴ IF HE HAD TWO BROTHERS,³ ONE IS TO PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH⁵ AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁶ IF THEY ANTICIPATED [THE BETH DIN] AND MARRIED THEM⁷ THEY ARE NOT TO BE [PARTED FROM] THEM.⁸

IF TWO MEN BETROTHED TWO SISTERS AND THE ONE DOES NOT KNOW WHOM HE BETROTHED AND THE OTHER DOES NOT KNOW WHOM HE BETROTHED, THE ONE MUST GIVE TWO LETTERS OF DIVORCE AND THE OTHER MUST ALSO GIVE TWO LETTERS OF DIVORCE. IF THEY DIED AND THE ONE LEFT A BROTHER AND THE OTHER ALSO LEFT A BROTHER, THE ONE BROTHER MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE TWO WIDOWS AND THE OTHER ALSO MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE TWO WIDOWS.⁹ IF ONE¹⁰ LEFT ONE BROTHER AND THE OTHER LEFT TWO, THE ONE BROTHER MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE TWO WIDOWS¹¹ AND [AS REGARDS] THE TWO, ONE PARTICIPATES IN THE

HALIZAH¹² AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.¹³ IF THEY ANTICIPATED [THE BETH DIN] AND MARRIED THEM,¹⁴ THEY ARE NOT TO BE DEPRIVED OF THEM.¹⁵ IF ONE¹⁰ LEFT TWO BROTHERS AND THE OTHER¹³ ALSO LEFT TWO, ONE BROTHER OF THE ONE PARTICIPATES IN THE HALIZAH WITH ONE WIDOW AND ONE BROTHER OF THE SECOND PARTICIPATES IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE OTHER WIDOW, [AND THEN THE OTHER] BROTHER OF THE FIRST MAY CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH THE HALUZAH OF THE SECOND¹⁶ AND [THE OTHER] BROTHER OF THE SECOND MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH THE HALUZAH OF THE FIRST. IF BOTH¹⁷ ANTICIPATED [THE BETH DIN] AND PARTICIPATED IN THE HALIZAH,¹⁸ THE [OTHER] TWO MUST NOT BOTH CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,¹⁹ BUT ONE MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH²⁰ AND THE OTHER MAY THEN CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²¹ IF BOTH²² ANTICIPATED [THE BETH DIN]²³ AND MARRIED²⁴ THEY ARE NOT TO BE DEPRIVED OF THEM.²⁵

GEMARA. Is it to be inferred from here that even betrothal which cannot culminate in connubial intercourse²⁶ is also valid?²⁷ — Here we are dealing with the case where they were known²⁸ but were later confused. This may also be proved by deduction, since it was stated, AND HE DOES NOT KNOW²⁹ and it was not stated ‘and it was not known’³⁰ This proves it.

What, then, does our Mishnah teach us?³¹ — The second clause was necessary:³² IF HE DIED AND LEFT A BROTHER, THE LATTER MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH BOTH OF THEM. IF HE HAD TWO BROTHERS, ONE IS TO PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, only halizah must be first and the levirate marriage afterwards, but not the levirate marriage first, since, thereby, he might infringe [the interdict against] the sister of her who is connected with him by the levirate bond.³³

IF TWO MEN BETROTHED TWO SISTERS etc. Does this imply that a betrothal which cannot culminate in connubial intercourse is also valid?³⁴ — Here also it is a case where they were known.³⁵ but were subsequently confused. This may also be proved by deduction, since it was stated, AND THE ONE DOES NOT KNOW,³⁶ and it is not stated ‘and it is not known’.³⁷ This proves it.

What, then, does our Mishnah teach us?³⁸ — It was necessary to have the latter clause,³⁹ IF THEY DIED ... AND ONE LEFT ONE BROTHER AND THE OTHER LEFT TWO, THE ONE BROTHER MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE TWO WIDOWS AND, [AS REGARDS] THE TWO, ONE PARTICIPATES IN THE HALIZAH AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁴⁰ Is not this obvious, being in the same case as the first clause?⁴¹ -It might have been assumed that [levirate marriage should be forbidden in the case of] two brothers as a preventive measure against the case Of one, hence we were taught [that it was not so], and also that halizah must be first and the levirate marriage afterwards, but the .levirate marriage must not take place first, for thereby, one might infringe [the interdict against] a yebamah's marriage to a stranger.

IF ONE LEFT TWO BROTHERS AND THE OTHER ALSO LEFT TWO etc. What need was there again for this statement? It is, surely. the same!⁴² — It might have been assumed that [the marriage should be forbidden] as a preventive measure against marrying without previous (halizah,⁴³ hence we were taught [that no such measure Was enacted].⁴⁴ Wherein does this case differ from the following in which we learned: In the case of four brothers two of whom were married to two sisters, and those who were married to the sisters died, behold their widows may only perform the halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage [by either of the levirs]?⁴⁵ -What a comparison!⁴⁶

(1) He is forbidden to live with either since each might be ‘his wife's sister’.

(2) Without issue.

(3) Who survived him.

(4) Since it is not known which is his sister-in-law. He may not marry the one and submit to halizah from the other, because the sister of a haluzah (v. Glos.) is Rabbinically forbidden. Even prior to the halizah with the one he may not marry the other; for if she is not his sister-in-law she is still forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.)

(5) With one of the widows.

(6) With the other, subsequent to the halizah of the first. This procedure is safe in either ease; if the second widow is really his sister-in-law he is legally entitled to marry her. But even if she is not, she is no longer forbidden as the sister of the first who was his zekukah since the halizah has severed the bond.

(7) Each brother married one of the sisters.

(8) Since each of them is entitled to marry one of the widows either as his yebamah (v. Glos.) or as a stranger. The question of the forbidden marriage of the sister of a zekukah does not arise, since both are now married, and the marriage of the zekukah to the one brother has severed her levirate bond with the other.

(9) Neither may marry any of the widows since either might happen to be the sister of his zekukah.

- (10) Of the deceased.
- (11) For the reasons explained supra p. 138, n. 9.
- (12) And thus, in case she is the actual yebamah, severs the levirate bond between her and the brothers. Her sister may then be married by the other brother in any case: If she is the sister-in-law he may rightly marry her; and if not, she is no longer forbidden as the sister of a zekukah in view of the fact that the halizah of the other had severed that bond.
- (13) V. previous note.
- (14) Each brother married one of the sisters.
- (15) V. p. 138. n. 13.
- (16) This Procedure enables both widows to marry. because in the case of each it may be said: If she is his yebamah, he may marry her since his brother did not participate in the halizah with her but with her sister who was a Perfect stranger to him, and the halizah with her is of no legal value. If, on the other hand, she is not his yebamah, he may certainly marry her as a stranger. The question of the 'sister of a zekukah' does not arise, since that bond has in any case been severed by the halizah in which his brother had participated with her sister.
- (17) Brothers of one of the deceased.
- (18) With both widows.
- (19) One brother with the one widow and the other with the other widow; because whichever widow any one of them would desire to marry might be the sister of his .zekukah.
- (20) With one 'of the widows.
- (21) With the other sister. For the reason cf. supra p. 139, n. 4.
- (22) The second two brothers.
- (23) After halizah was performed with the first.
- (24) Each one of them one of the sisters.
- (25) Cf. supra p. 138. n. 13.
- (26) It is now assumed that even at the time of the betrothal it was not known which of the sisters was betrothed; when, for instance, the man said 'I betroth one of you' and both appointed an agent to receive on their behalf the token of betrothal. In such a case the man may have no connubial intercourse with either of the women since each might be his wife's sister.
- (27) Since our Mishnah requires him to give a letter of divorce to each. Why then did this question remain a matter in dispute between Abaye and Raba in Kid. 51a?
- (28) At the time of the betrothal, as to which was, and which was not the betrothed one. Hence it was a betrothal which could culminate in connubial intercourse.
- (29) I.e., now.
- (30) Which would have implied that the identity of the betrothed was never known.
- (31) If the betrothal was valid and the man does not know now whom he betrothed it is self-evident that both women must be divorced!
- (32) And because of the second the first also had to be stated.
- (33) His zekukah. V. supra . 138, n. 11,
- (34) Cf. supra p. 140, n.11.
- (35) V.p. 140. n.12.
- (36) I.e., now,
- (37) V. p.140, n. 14.
- (38) V.p. 140, n. 15.
- (39) And because of the second the first also had to be stated.
- (40) This indicates that halizah must take place first.
- (41) Where it was stated that if there were two brothers one submits to halizah first while the other may subsequently contract the levirate marriage. (10) Lit., 'a yebamah for the street'. A yebamah who is subject to the levirate marriage may not be married by a stranger before the levir has submitted to halizah. For further notes on the whole passage v. Kid., Sonc. ed. pp. 26off.
- (42) As the one already made earlier in our Mishnah: ONE PARTICIPATES IN THE HALIZAH AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. There it is a case of two brothers and here also of two groups of two, one of each participating in halizah and the other contracting levirate marriage.
- (43) And each of the two brothers so marrying would infringe the prohibition against marriage of a doubtful yebamah and the sister of a zekukah.

(44) This could not have been inferred from the previous clause where only one marriage takes place. The fact that at least one of the sisters may not be married and must perform halizah only, would sufficiently indicate that in the case of the other also halizah by one brother must precede the marriage by the other. Where, however, as here, both sisters are married it might well have been considered likely that the law requiring previous halizah might be overlooked.

(45) 'Ed. V, 5, infra 26a. [According to Rashi (he question is from the concluding part of that Mishnah which reads, 'If they had forestalled (the Beth din) and married them, they must put them away', whereas in our Mishnah it is ruled that they are not to be parted. Aliter: In our Mishnah levirate marriage may take place after halizah had been performed, whereas in the other Mishnah no levirate marriage is allowed at all for fear it is contracted before halizah. v. Tosaf. ha-Rosh.]

(46) Lit., 'thus now'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 24a

There,¹ if one is to follow the view of him who said that a levirate bond does exist,² a levirate bond exists;³ and if one is to follow him who said⁴ that it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage,⁵ well, it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage. Here, however, it is possible to assume that every one will happen to get his own.⁶

IF BOTH ANTICIPATED [THE BETH DIN] AND MARRIED THEY ARE NOT TO BE PARTED FROM THEM etc. Shila recited:

Even if both were priests.⁷ What is the reason?⁸ — Because a haluzah is only Rabbinically forbidden,⁹ and in the case of a doubtful haluzah¹⁰ the Rabbis enacted no preventive measures.¹¹ But is a haluzah only Rabbinically forbidden? Surely it was taught: From Put away¹² one might only infer the prohibition concerning a divorced woman; whence that of a haluzah? Hence it was explicitly stated, And a woman!¹³ The prohibition is really Rabbinical, and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.¹⁴ allowed to marry one of the widows he would not be able either to contract levirate marriage or to participate in halizah with the other widow (she being forbidden to him as 'his wife's sister'), should the other brother happen to die before he married that widow; and thus the entire precept of levirate marriage would in such a case be annulled. GEMARA. Our Rabbis learned: And it shall be, that the firstborn¹⁵ implies¹⁶ that the commandment of the levirate marriage devolves upon the [surviving elder brother];¹⁷ that she beareth¹⁵ excludes a woman who is incapable of procreation, since she cannot bear children: shall succeed in the name of his brother,¹⁵ in respect of inheritance.¹⁸ You say, 'in respect of inheritance';¹⁹ perhaps it does not [mean that]. but, 'in respect of the name':²⁰ [If the deceased, for Instance, was called] Joseph [the child] shall be called Joseph; If Johanan he shall be called Johanan! — Here it is stated, shall succeed in the name of his brother¹⁵ and elsewhere it is stated, They shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance,²¹ as the 'name' that was mentioned there [has reference to] inheritance, so the 'name' which was mentioned here [has also reference] to inheritance. That his name be not blotted out¹⁵ excludes a eunuch²² whose name is blotted out.

MISHNAH. THE COMMANDMENT OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE DEVOLVES UPON THE [SURVIVING ELDER BROTHER]. IF A YOUNGER BROTHER, HOWEVER, FORESTALLED HIM, HE IS ENTITLED TO ENJOY THE PRIVILEGE.

Said Raba: Although throughout the Torah no text²³ loses its ordinary meaning, here the :gezerah shawah²⁴ has come and entirely deprived the text of its ordinary meaning.²⁵

But apart from the gezerah shawah, would it have been thought that 'name' actually signifies 'a name'? To whom, then, does the All Merciful address the instruction!²⁶ If to the levir, the wording should have been, 'shall succeed in the name of thy brother'; if to the Beth din, the wording should have been, 'shall succeed in the name of his father's brother'!²⁷ — It is possible that the All Merciful thus addressed the Beth din: Tell the levir, 'He²⁸ shall succeed to the name of his²⁹ brother'; but the gezerah shawah has come and deprived the text entirely [of its ordinary meaning].

Now that it has been stated that Scripture speaks of the elder brother only, why not assume that the firstborn must perform the duty of the levirate marriage and that any ordinary brother may not contract a levirate marriage at all!³⁰ — If so, what need³¹ was there for the All Merciful to have excluded the 'wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'?³²

R. Aha objected: Might it not be suggested that the exclusion³³ had reference to a mother's firstborn son!³⁴ -You could not possibly have assumed that,³⁵ since the All Merciful has made levirate marriage dependent on inheritance, and the right of inheritance derives from the father and not from the mother.³⁶ But might It not be suggested that where there is a firstborn the commandment of the levirate marriage shall be observed;³⁷ where, however, there is no firstborn the commandment of the levirate marriage shall not be observed?³⁸ Scripture stated, And one of them died;³⁹ does not this include also the case where the firstborn died,⁴⁰ and so the All Merciful has said that the younger shall perform the duty of the levirate marriage?

But perhaps⁴¹ [the text speaks of a case] where the younger died, and the All Merciful says that the firstborn shall perform the duty of the levirate marriage?-Surely, the All Merciful has excluded the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary!⁴²

May it be suggested that where there is no firstborn the younger brother, if he forestalled [the Beth din],⁴³ is entitled to the privilege,⁴⁴ but that where there is a firstborn the younger brother, even if he forestalled him, is not entitled to the privilege? — Scrip. stated, If brethren dwell together,⁴⁵ the dwelling of one brother was compared to that of the other.⁴⁶ May it be suggested that where there is a firstborn one turns to the eldest⁴⁷ but where there is no firstborn one does not turn to the eldest?⁴⁸ Why, then, did Abaye the Elder teach that the commandment to perform the duty of the levirate marriage is incumbent Upon the elder brother; if he refuses, the younger brother is approached,⁴⁹ if he also refuses,⁵⁰ the elder is approached again!⁵¹ — [Scripture has designated him] as the firstborn;⁵² as with the firstborn the cause is his birthright, so with the elder brother the cause is his Seniority. Might it be said that when the firstborn performs the duty of the levirate marriage he also takes the inheritance⁵³ but when an ordinary brother performs the duty of the levirate marriage, he⁵⁴ does not take the inheritance?⁵³ Scripture stated, Shall succeed in the name of his brother⁵⁵ and behold he has succeeded!⁵⁶

But since the All Merciful called him the firstborn;⁵⁷

(1) Where both sisters are bound by the levirate tie.

(2) Between the levir and his deceased brother's widow from the moment death took place.

(3) Consequently both widows are forbidden in levirate marriage, each being in relation to the other a sister of one's zekukah. But such prohibition is never removed even when one of them subsequently performed the halizah with one of the brothers and has thus severed her levirate bond, for once a yebamah is prohibited to her deceased husband's brother for a single moment, she is in the same category as a widow of a brother who died with issue.

(4) The reason why none of the surviving brothers may marry one of the two widows.

(5) Were one brother to be

(6) Now, if the widow whom one of them had married was really his yebamah. the other must be a total stranger to him and to the other brother; and since this might be said in the case of each pair of brothers where the marriage had already taken place. They are not, in the face of such a possibility. to be parted (Rashi). [According to the alternative interpretation (supra p. 142, n. 4.) in face of such a possibility the Rabbis saw no reason for enacting the preventive measure forbidding levirate marriage after halizah had been performed.]

(7) Who are forbidden to marry a haluzah.

(8) One of them, surely, must inevitably have married a haluzah since, In case she is not his yebamah, she is the betrothed of the stranger with whose brother (v. our Mishnah) she had performed halizah'

(9) To marry a Priest.

(10) As here where each brother can claim that the one he married was his yebamah.

(11) The prohibition consequently does not apply. Hence they may continue to live with the widows they had married.

may be rendered either, and it shall be (as E.V.) or and he (i.e., the levir) shall be as the Talmud here renders it.

(18) Only the brother who marries the widow, and no other brother, is entitled to the inheritance of the deceased.

(19) Taking the 'brother' who marries the widow as the subject of 'shall succeed'. (Cf. supra n. 3)'

(20) The subject of 'shall succeed' being 'the child' that will be born from the levirate union.

(21) Gen. XLVIII, 6.

(22) Since he is incapable of procreation. his wife is exempt alike from yibbum and halizah.

(23) Though it had been given a Midrashic interpretation.

(24) V. Glos. גזרה שוה the word analogy between the expression 'name' in the two cited texts.

(25) So that despite the ordinary meaning of the text, the child born from the levirate union need not be named after the deceased.

(26) About the name.

(27) Consequently. name in this text could not possibly have borne its ordinary meaning, but must have that given to it in the exposition supra. viz., that Beth din are instructed to hand over the inheritance Of the deceased to the levir who married his widow. An objection against Raba!

(28) The child that will be born.

(29) The levir's.

(30) Neither when there is, nor when there is not, a firstborn.

(31) Lit., 'why to me'.

(32) He would in any case have been excluded since he was not the firstborn.

(33) Of the 'wife of a brother who was not his contemporary'.

(34) Who was the paternal brother of the deceased.

(35) That a mother's firstborn should be regarded as the legal firstborn in respect of the levirate marriage.

(36) Hence there was no need to exclude him. The exclusion consequently indicates that by firstborn, in this context, any elder brother was meant.

(37) Either by the firstborn or by any other of the brothers, and that for this reason the exclusion of 'a brother who was not his contemporary' was necessary.

(38) At all; by any brother.

(39) Deut. XXV, 5, which refers to all cases, even to that where there were Only two brothers.

(40) Since the text does not specify any particular case.

(41) Lit., 'and say'.

(42) Were it as suggested this exclusion would be unnecessary. Cf. supra p. 145, nn. 6 and 13.

(43) Married before the Beth din could prevent him.

(44) Of the levirate marriage.

(45) Deut. XXV. 5.

(46) All brothers must be equal in respect of the levirate marriage.

(47) If the other brothers refused to marry the widow it should be his duty to marry her.

(48) Not being the firstborn it is no more his duty to marry the widow than it is that of his brothers.

(49) I.e., all the brothers are approached in the order of seniority. V. Tosaf. s.v. גַּיָּו, a.l., and cf. Rashi a.l.

(50) I.e., when the youngest of all has also refused to marry the widow.

(51) Now, since the brothers are approached, in the order of seniority, it is obvious that it is always the eldest, not necessarily the firstborn, upon whom the duty of the levirate marriage devolves!

(52) V. supra p. 144, n. 3.

(53) Of his deceased brother.

(54) The ordinary brother.

(55) Deut. XXV, 6.

(56) Hence any brother who marries the widow is entitled to the inheritance of the deceased.

(57) And not merely 'the elder' or 'the eldest'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 24b

what practical ruling was thereby intended?¹ — To impair his rights; As a firstborn does not take a double portion in his father's prospective property² in the same way as he does in that which is already in his possession,³ so does this one⁴ take no [double]⁵ portion in [his father's] prospective property⁶ as he does in that which is already in his possession.⁷

MISHNAH. IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF [INTERCOURSE]⁸ WITH A SLAVE WHO WAS LATER EMANCIPATED, OR WITH A HEATHEN WHO SUBSEQUENTLY BECAME A PROSELYTE, LO, HE MUST NOT MARRY HER.⁹ IF, HOWEVER, HE DID MARRY HER THEY NEED NOT BE PARTED.¹⁰ IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF INTERCOURSE⁸ WITH A MARRIED WOMAN¹¹ WHO, [IN CONSEQUENCE,] WAS TAKEN AWAY FROM HER HUSBAND,¹² HE MUST LET HER GO EVEN THOUGH HE HAD MARRIED HER.¹³

GEMARA. This implies that she may become a proper proselyte!¹⁴ But against this a contradiction is raised. Both a man who became a proselyte for the sake of a woman and a woman who became a proselyte for the sake of a man, and, similarly, a man who became a proselyte for the sake of a royal board, or for the sake of joining Solomon's servants,¹⁵ are no proper proselytes. These are the words of R. Nehemiah, for R. Nehemiah used to say: Neither lion-proselytes,¹⁶ nor dream-proselytes¹⁷ nor the proselytes of Mordecai and Esther¹⁸ are proper proselytes unless they become converted at the present time. How can it be said, 'at the present time'?—Say 'as at the present time'!¹⁹—Surely concerning this it was stated that R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha said in the name of Rab: The halachah is in accordance with the opinion of him who maintained that they were all proper proselytes. If so, this²⁰ should have been permitted altogether!²¹—On account of [the reason given by] R. Assi. For R. Assi said,²² Put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lip's etc.²³

Our Rabbis learnt: No proselytes will be accepted in the days of the Messiah.²⁴ In the same manner no proselytes were accepted in the days of David nor in the days of Solomon.²⁵ Said R. Eleazar: What Scriptural [support is there for this view]?—Behold he shall be a proselyte who is converted for my own sake,²⁶ he who lives with you shall be settled among you,²⁷ he only who 'lives with you' in your poverty shall be settled among you; but no other.

IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF INTERCOURSE WITH A MARRIED WOMAN etc. Rab said: [This²⁸ must be confirmed] by witnesses.²⁹ Said R. Shesheth: It seems³⁰ that Rab made this statement while he was sleepy and about to doze off;³¹ for it was taught: 'If a man is suspected of intercourse with a married woman who, in consequence was taken away from her husband³² and was subsequently divorced by another man,³³ he³⁴ need not part with her once he has married her'. Now, how is this to be understood? If it is a case where witnesses³⁵ are available, of what avail is it that another man stepped in and checked the rumour?³⁶ [Must we] not then [conclude that this is a case] where there were no witnesses;³⁵ and the reason³⁷ is because another man stepped in and checked the rumour, but had that not happened she would have been taken away from him?³⁸ — Rab can answer you: The same law, that where witnesses³⁵ are available she is taken away from him and that where no witnesses are available she is not taken away, applies also to the case where no other man stepped in and checked the rumour, but this it is that was meant: 'Even if another man stepped in and checked the rumour it is not proper for him³⁹ to marry her'.⁴⁰

An objection was raised: This⁴¹ has been said in the case only where she had no children,⁴² but if she has children⁴² she must not be divorced.⁴³ If, however, witnesses to the seduction⁴⁴ presented themselves, she must go away from him⁴⁵ even if she had ever so many children!⁴⁶ -Rab explains our Mishnah as dealing with the case where she has children and witnesses against her are available.

What, however, impels Rab to explain our Mishnah as dealing with a case where she has children and where witnesses against her are available, and to give as the reason why she is to be taken away, because witnesses are available, and [to imply that] if witnesses are not available she is not taken away; let him rather explain [our Mishnah as dealing with the case] where she has no children [and has to be taken away] even though no witnesses are available! Raba replied: Our Mishnah presented a difficulty to him. What point was there [he argued] for using the expression 'WAS TAKEN AWAY'?⁴⁷ It should have been stated 'he parted from her';⁴⁸ but any such expression as 'was taken away' implies 'by the Beth din' and the Beth din take away Only where witnesses are available.⁴⁹

If you prefer I may say that that Baraitha⁵⁰ represents the view of Rabbi;⁵¹ for It was taught: When a pedlar⁵² leaves a house and the woman within is fastening her sinner,⁵³ since the thing is ugly she must, said Rabbi, go.⁵⁴ If spittle is found⁵⁵ on the upper part of the curtained bed, since the thing is ugly,⁵⁶ she must, said Rabbi, go.⁵⁴

(1) For all practical purposes. as it has been shewn, the elder or eldest brother has the same privileges as the firstborn; why, then, was the expression בכור, (firstborn) used instead of גדול (elder or eldest) which would have included the firstborn?

(2) Property which was not in his father's possession at the time of his death.

(3) At the time he died.

(4) The levir who marries the widow and is given a double share (his and that of the deceased) in the inheritance of their father.

(5) Rashi. [Aliter: the levir inherits only such property of the deceased brother as had been in the latter's possession at the time of his death. Any property that fell into his possession subsequent thereto he shares equally with the other brothers. On this view the levir has no claim to the share which the deceased brother would have been entitled to in the property of their father had he survived the father, v. Nimmuke Joseph and Me'iri.]

(18) V. Esth. VIII, 17. Those who from similar motives of expediency adopt the Jewish faith.

- (37) Why the paramour need not divorce her once he has married her.
- (38) How then could Rab maintain that she is taken away Only where there are witnesses?
- (39) The paramour.
- (40) Only if he already married her may she in this case remain with him.
- (41) That the paramour must divorce her.
- (42) From the first husband.
- (43) A divorce would be regarded as a confirmation of the suspicion, and the children would thereby be tainted as bastards.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 25a

if shoes¹ lie under the bed, since the thing is ugly,² she must, said Rabbi, go.³ 'Shoes'?⁴ One can surely see whose they are! — Say rather the marks⁵ of shoes.⁶

The law is in accordance with the view of Rab,⁷ and the law is in accordance with the view of Rabbi.⁸

This, then, represents a contradiction between one law and the other! — There is no contradiction. One⁹ refers to a rumour that had ceased;¹⁰ the other, to a rumour that had not ceased. Where the rumour has not ceased, though no witnesses are available, [the law is] according to Rabbi; where the rumour has ceased but witnesses are available [the law is] according to Rab.

For how long [must a rumour continue in order to be regarded] as uninterrupted? Abaye replied: Mother¹¹ told me that a town rumour¹² [must remain uncontradicted for] a day and a half. This has been said Only in the case where It was not interrupted in the meantime. If, however, it was interrupted in the meantime, well, it was interrupted.¹³ This, however, is only when the interruption was not due to intimidation, but if it was due to intimidation, well, it was due to intimidation.¹⁴ This,¹⁵ however, has been said only in the case where no enemies are about, but where enemies are about, well, it must have been the enemies who published the rumour.¹³

We learned elsewhere: If a man divorced his wife because of a bad name,¹⁶ he must not remarry her; if on account of a vow he must not remarry her.¹⁷ Rabbah son of R. Huna¹⁸ sent to Rabbah son of R. Nahman: Will our Master Instruct us as to whether he¹⁹ must part with her if he did remarry her? The other replied: We have learnt It: IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF INTERCOURSE WITH A MARRIED WOMAN WHO [IN CONSEQUENCE] WAS TAKEN AWAY FROM HER HUSBAND²⁰ HE MUST LET HER GO EVEN THOUGH HE HAS MARRIED HER!²¹ He said to him: Are these two cases at all alike? There²² she was taken away;²³ here he²⁴ had let her go.²⁵

And Rabbah son of R. Nahman?²⁶ — In our Mishnah also we learned, ‘He let her go’.²⁷ But even now, are they at all alike? Here²⁸ it is the husband;²⁹ there³⁰ it is the seducer!³¹ — The other replied: They are indeed alike.³² For here³⁰ the Rabbis said, ‘he³³ must not marry her, and if he did marry he must let her go’ and there²⁷ also the Rabbis would Say, ‘he³⁴ must not remarry her and if he did remarry he must let her go’. This, however, is not [much of an argument]. There³⁰ he lends colour to the rumour,³⁵ while here it might well be assumed that he³⁴ investigated the rumour and found it to be groundless. MISHNAH. A MAN WHO BRINGS A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA³⁶ AND STATES, ‘IT WAS WRITTEN IN MY PRESENCE AND IT WAS SIGNED IN MY PRESENCE’, MUST NOT MARRY THE [DIVORCER'S] WIFE.³⁷ [SIMILARLY, IF HE STATES]. ‘HE DIED’, ‘I KILLED HIM’, OR ‘WE KILLED HIM’, HE MUST NOT MARRY HIS WIFE. R. JUDAH SAID:

[IF THE STATEMENT IS], ³⁶ KILLED HIM’, THE WOMAN MAY NOT MARRY [ANY ONE];³⁸ [IF, HOWEVER, IT IS], ‘WE KILLED HIM’,

THE WOMAN MAY MARRY AGAIN.³⁹

GEMARA. The reason then⁴⁰ is because he came FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, in which case we have to entirely upon him;⁴¹ but [had he come] from the Land of Israel, in which case we need not depend upon him,⁴² would he have been allowed to marry the divorcer's wife? But, surely, when the Statement is, ‘HE DIED’, in which case we do not depend entirely upon him since a Master said, ‘a woman⁴³ makes careful inquiry before she marries’⁴⁴ and yet it was stated, HE MUST NOT MARRY HIS WIFE! — There,⁴⁵ no document exists, but here⁴⁶ a document⁴⁷ does exist. For thus we have learned: Wherein lies the difference between [the admissibility of] a letter of divorce and [that of evidence of] death?⁴⁸ In that the document⁴⁷ supplies the proof.⁴⁹

[SIMILARLY, IF HE STATES], ‘HE DIED’, ‘I KILLED HIM’, OR ‘WE KILLED HIM’, HE MUST NOT MARRY HIS WIFE. Only he, then, must not marry his wife, she, however, may be married to another man? But, surely, R. Joseph said: [If a man stated], ‘So-and-so committed pederasty with me against my will’, he and any other witness may be combined⁵⁰ to procure his execution; [if, however, he said], ‘with my consent’,⁵¹ he is a wicked man concerning whom the Torah said, Put not thy hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness!⁵² And were you to reply that matrimonial evidence⁵³ is different because the Rabbis have relaxed the law in its case,⁵⁴ surely, [it may be pointed out], R. Manasseh stated:

- (1) So MSS. Cur. edd. add. 'overturned'.
- (2) The shoes indicating the presence of an unknown stranger on the bed.
- (3) Even if there were no witnesses that misconduct took place.
- (4) So MSS. Cur. edd. add. 'overturned'.
- (5) Lit., 'place of', i.e., the shoes have left marks on the floor.
- (6) Cur. edd. contain the following addition. 'Overturned under the bed, said Rabbi, since the thing is ugly she shall go'. All this with the exception of the first word is enclosed in parentheses. Cf. Rashal.
- (7) That no rumour or suspicion is to be relied upon in forbidding a wife to her husband. Only the evidence of witnesses may be acted upon.
- (8) Cf. supra p. 150, n. 7.
- (9) The law according to Rab.
- (10) I.e., when a contradictory rumour obtained currency.
- (11) His foster-mother. V. Kid. 31b.
- (12) דוּמָי, 'suspicion' or 'gossip'.
- (13) And it cannot any more be regarded as 'an uninterrupted rumour'.
- (14) The force of the rumour is not thereby impaired.
- (15) That an uninterrupted rumour is relied upon.
- (16) Suspected immorality.
- (17) V. Git., Sonc. ed. pp. 200ff, q.v. notes.
- (18) So Emden. Cur. edd: Omit 'R'.
- (19) Who divorced his wife 'because of a bad name'.
- (20) [So MS.M. in conformity with the text of our Mishnah. Cur. edd.: and he had let her go.]
- (21) So also in the case under discussion, though he married her, he must part from her.
- (22) In our Mishnah.
- (23) By the Beth din acting on the evidence of witnesses.
- (24) Her husband at his own discretion.
- (25) And the prohibition to remarry her is only Rabbinical. Hence it is possible that once he has remarried her he need not part from her.
- (26) How can he draw a comparison between two dissimilar cases?
- (27) Though there were no witnesses. Consequently, the woman is forbidden to her paramour Rabbinically only on the ground of suspicion (cf. supra p. 148. n. 10) and yet it was stated that he must part with her, which proves that even where the prohibition to marry is Rabbinical only (cf. supra note 9) the woman must be parted from the man.
- (28) Rabbah b. R. Huna's enquiry.
- (29) Whose remarriage of his former wife is obviously not suggestive of any immorality.
- (30) Our Mishnah.
- (31) Whose marriage with the woman undoubtedly lends colour to the rumoured suspicion. In such circumstances it is quite reasonable to order their separation. How can this, however, be used as an example for the case in the enquiry? (Cf. supra n. 13).
- (32) Since the prohibition in both cases is only Rabbinical.
- (33) Her paramour.
- (34) The woman's former husband.
- (35) Lit., 'he enforces the rumour'. Cf. supra n. 15.
- (36) מְדִינַת הַיָּם, lit., 'country of the sea', a term applied to all countries of the world exclusive of Palestine and Babylonia.
- (37) Since the validity of the divorce is entirely dependent on his word (v. infra n. 6) he may be suspected of giving false evidence with a view to marrying the woman himself. As, however, a woman is permitted to marry even if only a single witness had testified to the death of her husband, she is allowed to marry any other man.
- (38) Having admitted murder he cannot any longer be regarded as a reliable witness.

- (39) This is explained infra.
- (40) Why the man who brings the letter of divorce may not marry the divorcer's wife.
- (41) The divorce not being valid unless the carrier of the letter of divorce can testify that it was written and signed in his presence. (V. Git. 20).
- (42) Reliance being placed on the qualified scribes of Palestine, there is no need for the carrier of a letter of divorce to declare that he witnessed the writing and the signing of it.
- (43) Ab death of whose husband is attested by one witness Only.
- (44) And for this reason is allowed to remarry. Infra 53 b, 115a. 116b.
- (45) In the case of evidence of death.
- (46) Divorce.
- (47) The letter of divorce.
- (48) I.e., why are certain relatives accepted as legally qualified. carriers of a letter of divorce but not as witnesses to the death of a husband?
- (49) V. Git. 23b, infra 117a.
- (50) The two together forming a pair of witnesses, the minimum required for bringing about a man's condemnation by a court of law.
- (51) Was the crime committed.
- (52) Ex. XXIII, which shews that a man who admitted a criminal offence may not act as a witness at all!
- (53) In allowing a woman to marry on the evidence of the death of her husband.
- (54) In other cases two witnesses are required and in this case one is sufficient.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 25b

'One who is Rabbinically regarded as a robber¹ is eligible to be a witness in matrimonial matters;² one, however, who is Biblically regarded as a robber is ineligible to act as witness in matrimonial matters;³ would it then be necessary to assume that R. Manasseh holds the same opinion as R. Judah?⁴ - R. Manasseh can answer you: My statement may be reconciled even with the view of the Rabbis, but the reason of the Rabbis⁵ here is the same as that of Raba. For Raba said, 'A man is his own relative and consequently⁶ no man may declare himself wicked'.

Must it then be assumed that R. Joseph⁷ is of the same opinion as R. Judah?⁸ — R. Joseph can answer you: 'My Statement may be in agreement even with the view of the Rabbis, but matrimonial evidence⁹ is different, since the Rabbis relaxed the law in its case;¹⁰ and it is R. Manasseh who adopted the view of R. Judah'.

'I KILLED HIM' etc., 'WE KILLED HIM ... MAY MARRY etc. What is the practical difference between 'I killed him' and 'we killed him'?¹¹ — Rab Judah said: [Our Mishnah speaks of the case] where he said, 'I was present together with his murderers' —¹² Has it not, however, been taught: They said to R. Judah, 'It once happened that a robber when led out to his execution in the Cappadocian Pass¹³ said to those present,¹⁴ "Go and tell the wife of Simeon b. Kohen that I killed her husband when I entered Lud" [others Say: When he entered Lud], and his wife was permitted to marry again!¹⁵ He answered them: Is there any proof from there? [It was a case] where he said, 'I was present together with his murderers'.¹² But it was stated, 'a robber'! — He was apprehended on account of robbery.¹⁶ But it was stated, 'led out to his execution'! — [He was sentenced by] a heathen court of law who executed without due investigation.¹⁷

MISHNAH. A SAGE WHO HAS PRONOUNCED A WOMAN FORBIDDEN TO HER HUSBAND BECAUSE OF A VOW¹⁸ MUST NOT MARRY HER HIMSELF.¹⁹ IF, HOWEVER, A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL²⁰ OR PERFORMED HALIZAH IN HIS PRESENCE, HE MAY MARRY HER, SINCE HE [WAS BUT ONE OF THE] BETH DIN.²¹

GEMARA. This implies that if he had disallowed her vow, he would have been permitted to marry her!²² What then are the circumstances?²³ If [he acted] alone, could one disallow a vow? Surely²⁴ R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Amram that it was taught: The disallowance of vows is to be carried out by three! If, however, three were Present, would they be suspected? Surely we learned, IF, HOWEVER, A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL OR PERFORMED HALIZAH IN HIS PRESENCE, HE MAY MARRY HER, SINCE HE [WAS BUT ONE OF THE] BETH DIN!-The fact is that [he acted] alone, and²⁵ as R.

Hisda said in the name of R. Johanan, 'By a fully qualified individual',²⁶ so here also it is a case of one fully qualified individual.²⁶

IF A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, OR PERFORMED HALIZAH etc. The reason, then,²⁷ is because [he was one of a] Beth din,²⁸ but had he been one of a group of two only. would he not [have been permitted]? Wherein, then, does this case differ from the following concerning which it was taught:²⁹ If witnesses signed on [a document relating to] a purchased field or on a letter of divorce, the Rabbis do not apprehend such collusion!³⁰ — It is this very thing that he taught us,³¹ viz., that the opinion of him who said that a declaration of refusal may be made in the presence of two is to be rejected and that one is to infer³² that a declaration of refusal must be made in the presence of three.³³

The question was raised: If he³⁴ married her³⁵ must he part from her? R. Kahana said: Though he married, he must part from her. R. Ashi said: Once he has married, he need not part from her.

R. Zuti at the School of R. Papa recited [a teaching] in accordance with the opinion of him who said that if he³⁴ married her³⁵ he need not part from her. Said the Rabbis to R. Ashi: Is this³⁶ a tradition or a matter of opinion? He answered them: It is a Mishnah: If a man is suspected of intercourse with a slave who was subsequently emancipated, or with a heathen who subsequently became a proselyte, lo, he must not marry her; if, however, he did marry her the marriage need not be dissolved. Which proves

(1) A gambler, for instance, who is not Biblically forbidden to act as a witness. V. R.H. 220.

(2) V. note 4.

(3) Which proves that even in matrimonial matters a murderer (a man Biblically regarded as wicked) is not eligible as a witness.

(4) Who in our Mishnah rejected the evidence of the man who admitted murder. The halachah being according to the Rabbis who are the majority, would R. Manasseh ignore the majority in favour of a minority?

(5) For admitting the evidence of a man who announced himself as a murderer.

(6) As no relative is admitted as witness.

(7) Who does not admit the evidence of the man who declared himself a murderer, (supra 25a).

(8) V.p. 154, n. 9.

(9) V. p. 154, n. 4.

(10) V. supra p. 154, n. 5. Hence they also admitted the evidence of one who declared himself to be a murderer.

(11) In either case he admitted murder.

(12) But did not himself participate in the crime.

(13) Or 'ford'.

(14) Lit., 'to them'.

(15) Tosef. Yeb. IV; which proves that the evidence of a murderer is accepted.

(16) V. n. 10. He was Only present during the robbery.

(17) The condemned man, however, was not a murderer.

(18) Which the woman made. If she vowed, for instance, to derive no benefit from her husband, and he did not annul her vow; and on consulting the Sage and finding no ground for the remission of her vow (v. Ned. 22b), her vow was not disallowed and her husband was consequently forbidden to her.

(19) To avoid the suspicion that his motive in forbidding the woman was to marry her himself.

(20) V. Glos. s.v. mi'un.

(21) Declarations of refusal and the performance of halizah, unlike the disallowance or confirmation of vows, must always take place in the presence of a court of three; and a court of three would not be suspected.

(22) If her husband subsequently divorced her or died.

(23) Lit., 'in what are we engaged'.

(24) Cur. edd. add in parentheses. 'Rab said'.

(25) As to the difficulty of the implication that one individual should be in a position to disallow vows.

(26) A mumhe (v. Glos.) who, like a lay court of three, is empowered to disallow vows by himself. Ned. 78b, B.B. 120b, 121a.

(27) Why the Sage may marry the woman in question.

(28) Which consists of no less than three members.

(29) Cur. edd., we learned'.

(30) Lit., 'this thing'. They do not, as a precaution against collusion, forbid the witnesses the subsequent purchase of the field from the buyer. or the marriage with the woman in whose divorce they assisted. This obviously shews that even a group of two is not to be suspected!

(31) By mentioning Beth din which implies three members.

(32) From the mention of Beth din in our Mishnah.

(33) And not, as has been assumed, that only three are not to be suspected. Two also are above suspicion.

(34) The Sage referred to in our Mishnah (Rashb. and Asheri). The Sage or the man who delivered a letter of divorce mentioned in the previous Mishnah (Rashi and Maimonides). V. Wilna Gaon, Glosses, a.l.

(35) The woman who was forbidden to her husband or the one divorced (v. previous note).

(36) The statement R. Ashi made.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 26a

that [once a woman was married she] is not taken away because of a mere rumour; and so here also [the woman married] is not to be taken away because of a rumour.

MISHNAH. IF ALL THESE¹ HAD WIVES² WHO [SUBSEQUENTLY] DIED, [THE OTHER WOMEN]³ ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY THEM.⁴ IF THEY³ WERE MARRIED TO OTHERS⁵ AND WERE [SUBSEQUENTLY] DIVORCED,⁶ OR WIDOWED, THEY MAY BE MARRIED TO THESE.⁷ THESE⁸ ARE ALSO PERMITTED TO THEIR⁶ SONS OR BROTHERS.⁹

GEMARA. Only if they¹⁰ died¹¹ but not if they were divorced.¹² Said R. Hillel to R. Ashi: Surely, it was taught: Even if they were divorced! — This is no difficulty: The one¹³ refers to the case where they led¹⁴ a quarrelsome life;¹⁵ the other,¹⁶ where they¹⁷ had no quarrels.¹⁸ If you prefer I might say that the one as well as the other [refers to the case] where there were no quarrels, and yet there is no difficulty: The former¹⁶ is a case where the husband had led on [to the divorce];¹⁹ in the latter,²⁰ she led on to the divorce.

IF THEY WERE MARRIED etc. It was now assumed that death²¹ has reference to the case of death,²² and divorce²³ to that of divorce.²⁴ Must it then be said that our Mishnah²⁵ is in disagreement the delivery of the letter of divorce by the messenger, or the evidence of the man who testified to their husbands' deaths. with the view of Rabbi? For had it been in agreement with Rabbi, [a third marriage would not have been allowed], for he said that two occurrences constitute a hazakah.²⁶ — No;²⁷ death²⁸ [has reference] to divorce,²⁹ and divorce²⁸ to death.³⁰

THESE ARE ALSO PERMITTED TO THEIR SONS OR BROTHERS. Wherein is this different from the following where it was taught:³¹ A man who is suspected of intercourse with a woman is forbidden to marry her mother, her daughter and her sister.³² -It is the usual thing for women to pay frequent visits to other women;³³ it is not usual, however, for men to pay frequent visits to other men.³⁴ Or [this] also:³⁵ Women who do not cause one another to be forbidden by their cohabitation³⁶ do not particularly mind one another;³⁷ men, however, who do cause one another to be forbidden by their cohabitation³⁸ do mind one another.³⁴ If so,³⁹ [the same law⁴⁰ should] also [apply to] one's father!⁴¹ -The meaning is, 'There is no need',⁴² [thus]: There is no need [to state that the law⁴⁰ is applicable to] one's father before whom a son is shy;⁴³ but [in the case of] one's son⁴⁴ before whom a father⁴⁴ is not shy it might have been assumed [that this law was] not [to be applied], hence we were informed [that the same law was applicable to a son also].

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF] FOUR BROTHERS, TWO OF WHOM WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, IF THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED TO THE SISTERS DIED, BEHOLD. THESE⁴⁵ MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE [BY THE BROTHERS].⁴⁶ IF THEY HAD ALREADY⁴⁷ MARRIED THEM, THEY MUST DISMISS THEM. R. ELIEZER SAID: BETH SHAMMAI HOLD THAT THEY MAY RETAIN THEM, AND BETH HILLEL HOLD THAT THEY MUST DISMISS THEM.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS⁴⁸ WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE [OF THE BROTHERS] UNDER THE PROHIBITION OF INCEST,⁴⁹ HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT MAY MARRY HER SISTER,⁵⁰ WHILE TO THE SECOND BROTHER BOTH ARE FORBIDDEN.

[IF ONE SISTER,⁴⁸ WAS FORBIDDEN BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT⁵¹ OR BY VIRTUE OF HOLINESS⁵¹ SHE MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS⁴⁸ WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE BROTHER UNDER THE LAW OF INCEST AND THE OTHER SISTER WAS FORBIDDEN TO THE OTHER UNDER THE LAW OF INCEST, SHE WHO IS FORBIDDEN TO THE ONE IS PERMITTED TO THE OTHER AND SHE WHO IS FORBIDDEN TO THE OTHER IS PERMITTED TO THE FIRST. THIS IS THE CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT HAS BEEN SAID: WHEN HER SISTER IS HER SISTER-IN-LAW⁵² SHE MAY EITHER PERFORM HALIZAH OR BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁵³

GEMARA. This then⁵⁴ implies that a levirate bond exists;⁵⁵ for if no levirate bond exists, observe this point: These widows come from two different houses,⁵⁶ let one brother take in levirate marriage the one and the other brother the other!⁵⁷ — As a matter of fact it may still be assumed that no levirate bond exists⁵⁵ [but the levirate marriage is nevertheless forbidden] because he⁵⁸ is of the opinion that it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage, it being possible that while one of the brothers married [one of the widowed sisters] the other brother would die,⁵⁹ and the precept of levirate marriage would be annulled.⁶⁰ If so,⁶¹ [the same applies to] three [brothers] also!⁶² — This may be regarded as the case of 'There is no need etc.';⁶³ thus: There is no need to state three,⁶⁴ since the precept of levirate marriage would inevitably have to be annulled;⁶⁵ but [in the case of] four⁶⁶ [it might have been assumed that] one need not take precautions against [possible] death,⁶⁷ hence we were informed [that even in such a case levirate marriage is forbidden].⁶⁸ If so,⁶⁹

(1) Lit., 'and all of them'. The Sage, the messenger who brought a letter of divorce and the man who testified to the death of a husband. (V. previous two Mishnahs, supra 250, 25b).

(2) At the time of their action which resulted in enabling the women there mentioned to marry.

(3) I.e. the women concerned in their respective actions. V. previous note.

(4) Having had their own wives at the time they were engaged in the other women's affairs they are not to be suspected of any ulterior motives. Cf. supra p. 153, n. 2 and p. 155. n. 12.

(5) After the decision of the Sage,

(6) By their second husbands.

- (7) Cf. supra p. 157, n. 6.
- (8) V. p. 157, n. 8.
- (9) The prohibition being limited to themselves.
- (10) The wives of the Sage, messenger and witness (cf. supra p. 157, n. 6).
- (11) Lit., 'they died, yes'; only then is it permissible for the husbands to marry the women whom they had helped to obtain permission to marry.
- (12) It being possible that their action in favour of the women and the subsequent divorces were dictated by the same ulterior motive.
- (13) The Baraitha quoted by R. Hillel.
- (14) Before their respective husbands had acted in favour of the other women.
- (15) With their husbands. It is consequently obvious that the divorces were due to the domestic differences, and that the husband's subsequent actions were not dictated by ulterior motives.
- (16) That implied in our Mishnah.
- (17) V. supra note 5.
- (18) As husbands and wives lived in peace until the former had met the other women, there is good reason to suspect that the divorces were due to these meetings.
- (19) Hence there is cause for suspicion.
- (20) V. supra note 8.
- (21) Of the second husbands with whom marriage had taken place In the meanwhile.
- (22) In the second clause of the Previous Mishnah but one (supra 25a), where evidence was given that the woman's first husband had died or was killed.
- (23) Cf. supra n. 16.
- (24) Where a letter of divorce was brought by a messenger, (v. the first clause of the Mishnah supra 25a).
- (25) Which allows a woman to marry a third husband though her first two husbands had died or divorced her.
- (26) V. Glos. An established characteristic or defect in the woman, physical or moral, which confirms her as the cause of the death of her husbands or as the cause of the divorces. Hence, she should not have been permitted ever to marry again.
- (27) Our Mishnah does not differ from Rabbi.
- (28) V. p. 158, n.16. .
- (29) V. p.158,n.19.
- (30) V. supra p. 158. n. 17. Hence no two husbands died or divorced the same woman, and no hazakah could, therefore, have been constituted.
- (31) Cur. edd., 'we learned'.
- (32) Because there is reason to suspect that the marriage was planned by the man as a mere means of bringing him into closer association and intimacy with his paramour. Why, then, is this suspicion disregarded in the case of our Mishnah?
- (33) Misconduct may, therefore, occur and suspicion (v. previous note) is justified.
- (34) And suspicion that any intimate intercourse might take place would, therefore, be groundless.
- (35) May be said in reply.
- (36) With one another's husbands. The husband is not forbidden to his wife if cohabitation occurred between him and another woman.
- (37) V. note 8.
- (38) With one another's wives. The wife of one with whom the other cohabited is forbidden to her husband.
- (39) That men are watchful of one another, and that consequently there is no ground for suspicion.
- (40) Permitting the marriage of any of the women in question.
- (41) Why, then, does our Mishnah mention sons and brothers only?
- (42) Lit., 'it is not required he said'.
- (43) And would not venture to be too intimate with his wife.
- (44) Or brother.
- (45) The sisters.
- (46) The reason is explained in the Gemara, infra.
- (47) Lit., 'anticipated' (the ruling of the court).
- (48) In the case mentioned in the first paragraph of our Mishnah.
- (49) E.g., as a mother-in-law.

- (50) Who is not forbidden on account of her rival since the latter is biblically forbidden to the levir and cannot be regarded as his zekukah (v. Glos.).
- (51) The term is used in the Mishnah supra 20a and discussed in the Gemara loc. cit.
- (52) The wife of her husband's brother.
- (53) V. supra 20a. Cf. supra p. 162, n. 6.
- (54) The first clause of our Mishnah.
- (55) Between the widow of a deceased childless brother and his surviving brothers, in consequence of which each widow being a zekukah (v. Glos.), is forbidden as the sister of a zekukah.
- (56) They are the widows of two different husbands and neither of them stands in any marital relationship with any of the surviving brothers (v. previous note).
- (57) A levirate bond then obviously does exist. That being so, why has the question of the existence of a levirate bond remained a matter of dispute in Ned. 742 and supra 17b?
- (58) The author of our Mishnah.
- (59) And thus be prevented from marrying the other widow.
- (60) Because the surviving brother would then not be able either to marry, or to participate in the halizah with the second widow who by that time will have become his wife's sister. If, however, halizah only is performed with one brother and the death of the other should occur before the second widow had performed halizah with him, no difficulty would arise, since the first brother may then participate in the halizah of the second also.
- (61) That the reason for the prohibition of the levirate marriage with the widowed sisters is not the existence of a levirate bond but the endeavour to prevent the annulment of the precept of levirate marriage.
- (62) If two of them died childless and both their widows become subject to the levirate marriage or halizah of the third. In this case too the third brother must only participate in halizah; for, should he marry one of the sisters, the other would be forbidden, as the sister of his wife, either to marry him or to perform halizah with him.
- (63) Lit., 'it is not required, do we say'.
- (64) That where one of three brothers survived, no levirate marriage must take place.
- (65) Were he to marry one of the widows. Cf. supra p. 162, n. 8.
- (66) Brothers, two of whom survived.
- (67) And that consequently one brother should marry one of the widows and the other brother the other.
- (68) Because provision must always be made against possible death.
- (69) v. previous note.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 26b

the same applies to five brothers also!¹ -The possibility that two might die² need not be taken into consideration.

Rabbah³ son of R. Huna said in the name of Rab: If three sisters who are sisters-in-law fell to the lot of two brothers who are their brothers-in-law, one of the brothers participates in her halizah with one, and the other brother participates in the halizah with the other, but the third,⁴ requires halizah from both. Said Rabbah to him: Since you say that the third widow requires submission to halizah by both brothers, you must be holding the opinion that a levirate bond exists⁵ and that the halizah is of an impaired character,⁶ and that as an impaired halizah it must go the round of all the brothers;⁷ but if so, [the same should apply to] the first [two sisters] also!⁸ — If they⁹ had become subject [to the levirs] at the same time the law would indeed have been so;¹⁰ [the statement of our Mishnah, however,] was required only in the case where they become subject [to the levirs] one after another. When the first sister became subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage. Reuben¹¹ participated in her halizah;¹² when the second came Under the obligation. Simeon¹³ participated in her halizah;¹⁴ when the third came under the obligation.¹⁵ if the one brother participated in her halizah he removed his own levirate bond,¹⁶ and when the other participated in the halizah he likewise removed his own levirate bond. But, surely. Rab said that no levirate bond exists!¹⁷ — This statement¹⁸ he made in accordance with the opinion of him who maintains that a levirate bond does exist.

Samuel, however, stated that one brother participates in the halizah with all of them. But consider: We have heard Samuel say that a proper halizah is required for Samuel said:

- (1) Two of whom who were married to two sisters died and three survived. In this case also, if provision is to be made against the possibility of death, no levirate marriage should be allowed to any of the three survivors, since it might happen that two of the survivors would also die and the last and only surviving brother would be precluded from levirate marriage and halizah because the widows would then be his wife's sisters.
- (2) Lit., 'for the death of two'.
- (3) So Emden. Cur. edd., 'Raba'.
- (4) Lit., 'the middle one'.
- (5) V. supra p. 162, n. 3'
- (6) Since each brother may only participate in halizah with the widow but may not, as she is the sister of his haluzah (v. Glos.) marry her. Such a halizah is not of the same validity as one which is the alternative of a permitted levirate marriage.
- (7) The levirate bond between the widow and the other brothers cannot be dissolved by such a halizah with one of them. [Me'iri seems to have had a shorter and smoother text: . . . that a levirate bond exists and that an impaired halizah must go the round of all the brothers'.]
- (8) Since they, like the third, are subject to the levirate bond, and with them also only halizah, but not levirate marriage may take place, and their halizah also is consequently of an impaired character.
- (9) All the three sisters.
- (10) Halizah would have had to be performed by every one of them with every brother.
- (11) I.e., the first brother. Reuben was Jacob's first son (Gen. XXIX, 32).
- (12) This was a proper halizah since at that time he could have married her if he wished.
- (13) I.e., the second brother. Simeon was the second son of Jacob. (Cf. Gen. XXIX, 33)
- (14) This also was a proper halizah since he could marry her if he wished. She is no longer the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.) since the first brother had already performed with that zekukah proper halizah and had thereby severed the levirate bond between her and Simeon as well as between her and himself.
- (15) Levirate marriage is no more possible since, in the case of each brother, she is the sister of his haluzah, while exemption from halizah cannot be granted because the prohibition to marry the sister of one's haluzah is only Rabbinical and cannot supersede the Biblical precept which requires halizah where no levirate marriage takes place.
- (16) Which otherwise could not have been severed. V. previous note.
- (17) Supra 17b.
- (18) Reported supra by Rabbah b. R. Huna.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 27a

if he¹ participated in the halizah with the sisters, the rivals are not exempt;² how then should Reuben,³ where the halizah of Simeon⁴ has the force of a valid halizah,⁵ participate in an impaired halizah?⁶ — By saying. 'One brother participates in the halizah with all of them' he also meant 'the third widow'.⁷ But surely, 'All of them' was stated!⁸ -As the majority is on his side⁹ it may be described as 'All of them'. If you prefer I might say: Only in respect of exempting one's rival¹⁰ did Samuel say that proper halizah was required; as regards exempting herself, however, [any halizah]¹¹ sets her free.¹²

[To turn to] the main text,¹³ Samuel said: If he¹⁴ participated in the halizah with the sisters, the rivals are not exempt;¹⁵ ff with the rivals, the sisters are exempt.¹⁶ If he¹⁷ participated in the halizah with the one¹⁸ who had been divorced,¹⁹ her rival is not thereby exempt;²⁰ if with the rival²¹ the divorced woman is exempt —²² If he¹⁷ participated in the halizah with one¹⁸ to whom he addressed a ma'amar, her rival is not thereby exempt;²³ if with the rival,²⁴ the widow to whom the ma'amar had been addressed is exempt.²⁵

In what respect are the sisters different that [by their halizah] the rivals should not be exempted?

Apparently because [each one of them] is 'his wife's sister' through the levirate bond;²⁶ [but for this very reason] the sisters also, if he participated in the halizah with their rivals, should not be exempt, since those are the rivals of 'his wife's sister' through the levirate bond!²⁷ — Samuel holds the opinion that no levirate bond exists. But, surely, Samuel said that a levirate bond did exist!²⁸ -He was here speaking in accordance with the view of him who maintains that a levirate bond does not exist. If so,²⁹ why are not the rivals exempt when he participated In the halizah with the sisters? One can well understand why Rachel's³⁰ rival is not exempt; for, as he had already participated in the halizah of Leah³¹ and only subsequently participated in the halizah of Rachel, Rachel's halizah is a defective one;³² but Leah's rival should be exempt!³³ -When he³⁴ said that 'The rivals are not exempt', he meant indeed the rival of Rachel. But, surely, he used the expression 'rivals'!³⁵ -Rivals generally. If so,³⁶ how could the sisters be exempt if he participated in the halizah with their rivals? Is Rachel exempt by the halizah of her rival!³⁷ Surely we learned: A man is forbidden to marry the rival of the relative of his halizah³⁸ — Samuel also [is of the same opinion] but draws a distinction according to the manner In which³⁹ one began or did not begin: If one began with the sisters⁴⁰ he must not finish with the rivals,⁴¹ for we learned, 'A man is forbidden to marry the rival of the relative of his haluzah',⁴² but if he began with the rivals⁴³ he may finish even with the sisters,⁴⁴ for we learned, 'A man is permitted to marry the relative of the rival of his haluzah'.⁴⁵

R. Ashi said: Your former assumption⁴⁶ may still be upheld, and [yet no difficulty⁴⁷ arises] because the levirate bond is not strong enough to make the rival equal to the forbidden relative herself.⁴⁸

It was taught in agreement with the view of R. Ashi: If the levir participated in the halizah with the sisters, their rivals are not thereby exempt; but if with the rivals, the sisters are thereby exempt. What is the reason? Obviously⁴⁹ because he is of the opinion that a levirate bond exists and that that bond is not strong enough to make the rival equal to the forbidden relative herself.

R. Abba b. Memel said: Who is the author of this?⁵⁰ Beth Shammai; for we learned: Beth Shammai permit the rivals to the [surviving] brothers.⁵¹ If so,⁵² let them⁵³ be taken in levirate marriage also!⁵⁴ [This is] in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri who said: Come, let us issue an ordinance that the rivals perform the halizah but do not marry the levir.⁵⁵ But did not a Master say that they had hardly time to conclude the matter before confusion set in?⁵⁶ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: After him⁵⁷ they re-ordained it.

The question was raised:

- (1) A levir whose two deceased childless brothers were survived by two widows who were sisters, each of whom had also a rival.
 - (2) Because the halizah with the sisters is defective, the levir not being in a position to marry either of them. Cf. supra p. 263, n. 11,
 - (3) Cf. supra note 2,
 - (4) cf. note 4.
 - (5) Simeon, having participated in no halizah, the second sister is not the sister of his haluzah.
 - (6) In the case of Reuben who had already participated in the halizah of one sister, the halizah with the second is a halizah performed by the sister of his haluzah, which is not a completely valid operation.
 - (7) I.e., the second brother, after he participated in the halizah with the second widow, also participates in the halizah with he third (who is now the sister of his as well as of his brother's haluzah): and there is no need, according to Samuel, for a defective halizah to go the round of all the surviving brothers.
 - (8) How- then could the expression 'all' refer to the second and third widows only?
 - (9) Simeon having participated in the halizah of two widows out of the three.
 - (10) As he actually said, 'The rivals are not exempt'.
 - (11) Even a defective one.

- (12) In the case of the three widows mentioned above, where there are no rivals, the defective halizah is, therefore, valid even according to Samuel.
- (13) A passage from which was cited supra top of page.
- (14) V.p. 164,n. 10.
- (15) V.p. 164, n.11.
- (16) As the prohibition to marry the rivals is not so severe as that of the sisters, the halizah with the former is of greater validity and force than that with the latter. Cf. supra p. 163,n.11.
- (17) The levir.
- (18) Of two sisters-in-law, widows of the same brother.
- (19) By the levir prior to the halizah.
- (20) A halizah after a divorce is defective, since the levirate bond had already been partially severed by the divorce that preceded it.
- (21) Since no letter of divorce was given to her.
- (22) Infra 51a.
- (23) Since the halizah alone does not in this case exempt the widow; a divorce also, owing to the ma'amar, being required.
- (24) To whom no ma'amar had been addressed.
- (25) infra 53a.
- (26) In consequence of which he may marry neither of them and the halizah in which he participates is for this reason of a defective character.
- (27) A rival taking the place of a forbidden relative, being subject to the same restrictions as the relatives, is also forbidden to be taken in levirate marriage.
- (28) Supra 18b.
- (29) That no levirate bond exists and the halizah with the sisters is consequently perfectly valid.
- (30) I.e., the sister who was second to perform the halizah. Rachel was Jacob's second, Leah his first wife (v. Gen. XXIX, 23-28).
- (31) I.e., the first sister. Cf. previous note.
- (32) Because Rachel cannot any more be married to him owing to her being the sister of his haluzah.
- (33) Leah's halizah having been perfect, since the levir could have married her if he wished.
- (34) Samuel.
- (35) The plural.
- (36) That the expression of 'rivals' refers only to rivals of the sister who was second to perform the halizah and not to those of the first also.
- (37) Would the sister of a haluzah be exempt by the halizah of her rival?
- (38) Infra 40b. As he cannot marry the rival of Rachel who is his haluzah's sister, his halizah with her would be of a defective character which, consequently, could not exempt Rachel.
- (39) Lit., 'he said'.
- (40) Participated in the halizah with one of them.
- (41) By participating in the halizah with the rival of the second sister. Such halizah would not exempt the sister.
- (42) Much more so the relative herself. The halizah, therefore, being defective, would have to be performed by both the second sister and her rival.
- (43) If he participated in the halizah with the rival of the first sister.
- (44) He may participate in halizah not only with the rival of the second sister and thus exempt the sister herself, but also with the second sister and thus exempt her rival.
- (45) Rachel (the second sister), being the relative of Leah (the first sister) who is the 'rival' of the haluzah, is consequently permitted to marry the levir, and her halizah is, therefore, perfectly valid and exempts also her rival.
- (46) That the rivals are not exempted by the halizah of the sisters, owing to its defectiveness which is due to the existence of the levirate bond (cf. supra p. 164, n. 21).
- (47) As to why the halizah of the rival of the relative of a haluzah should be more valid than that of the relative of the haluzah herself (v. supra p. 266, n. 2).
- (48) The Rabbis who forbade the marriage of a zekukah owing to the levirate bond did not extend the prohibition to her rival. The halizah of the latter is, therefore, more valid and exempts also the former.

(49) Lit., 'not'?

(50) The Baraitha quoted.

(51) Supra 132, 'Ed. Iv, 8; as marriage with the rivals is permitted, their halizah also (cf. supra p. 163, n. 11) is perfectly valid.

(52) That the Baraitha quoted represents the view of Beth Shammai.

(53) The rivals.

(54) Why then was only halizah mentioned?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 27b

Between the one¹ who was given² a letter of divorce and the other¹ to whom a ma'amar had been addressed² who is to be preferred?³ Is she who was divorced to be preferred.⁴ or is, perhaps, she to whom the ma'amar had been addressed to be preferred since she is nearer to him in respect to intercourse? — R. Ashi replied, Come and hear: R. Gamaliel, however, admits⁵ that a letter of divorce⁶ after a ma'amar,⁷ and a ma'amar⁶ after a letter of divorce⁸ is valid.⁹ Now, if a letter of divorce has the preference.¹⁰ the ma'amar after it should have no validity; and if the ma'amar has the preference, the divorce after it should have no validity. Consequently it must be concluded that they have both equal validity. This proves it.

R. Huna¹¹ said in the name of Rab: If two sisters who were sisters-in-law became subject to one levir, the one is permitted¹² when he¹³ has participated in her halizah; and the other is permitted¹⁴ when he has participated in her halizah. If the first¹⁵ died¹⁶ he¹⁷ is permitted [to marry] the second,¹⁸ and there is no need to state that if the second¹⁹ died¹⁶ the first is permitted,¹⁴ since, as a sister-in-law who was permitted,²⁰ then forbidden²¹ and then again permitted,²² she returns to her former state of permissibility. R. Johanan, however, said: If the second¹⁹ died¹⁶ he¹⁷ is permitted to marry the first,²³ but if the first²⁴ died he is forbidden to marry the second.¹⁹ What is the reason? Because any sister-in-law to whom the injunction. Her husband's brother shall go in unto her²⁵ cannot be applied at the time of her coming under the obligation of the levirate marriage²⁶ is, indeed,²⁷ like the wife of a brother who has children and is, consequently, forbidden. But does not Rab hold the same view?²⁸ Surely Rab said: Any woman to whom the injunction, Her husband's brother should go in unto her²⁵ cannot be applied at the time of her coming under the obligation of the levirate marriage is, indeed, like the wife of a brother who has children and is, consequently, forbidden!²⁹ -That statement³⁰ applies only to the case where the woman is faced with the prohibition of 'a wife's sister', which is Pentateuchal,³¹ here, however, [the prohibition due to] the levirate bond is only Rabbinical.³²

R. Jose b. Hanina raised the following objection against R. Johanan:³³ IN THE CASE OF FOUR BROTHERS, TWO OF WHOM WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, IF THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED TO THE SISTERS DIED, BEHOLD, THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. But why? Let one of the brothers take on the duty of participating in the halizah with the second widow, and thus place the first widow, in relation to the second, in the category of a deceased brother's wife that was permitted- then forbidden, and then again permitted,³⁴ and thus she would return to her former state of permissibility! — The other replied: I do not know who was the author of the statement concerning the sisters.³⁵ But let him rather reply that the meaning of the expression of MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH, which had been used, indeed signifies that only one is to perform the halizah!³⁶ -The expression used was THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH.³⁷ Then let him reply that the expressions THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH³⁷ refers to women generally³⁸ who perform the halizah!-It was stated, BEHOLD THESE.³⁹ Let him, then, reply that [this is a case] where halizah was already performed by the first!⁴⁰ -[The expression] THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH

- (1) Of two widows of the same husband who was survived by one brother.
- (2) By the surviving brother.
- (3) In respect of the halizah, if that halizah is to exempt the rival. None of these widows may be taken in levirate marriage: the one, because a letter of divorce was given to her, and the other, because she is the rival of the former. The only question is, which of the two should perform the halizah and which should thereby be exempt.
- (4) I.e., shall she perform the halizah and thus exempt her rival? Cur. edd. add., 'because he began with her with halizah'. Rashal (Glosses. a.l.) reads, 'divorce' for 'halizah'. Both additions are absent in MSS, v. Tosaf. s.v. בעלה-
- (5) Though he holds that a divorce to one of the widows of his deceased brothers after a divorce to her rival is invalid (infra 50a).
- (6) To one of the widows of his deceased childless brother.
- (7) That had been first addressed to the other widow, her rival.
- (8) Given first to the other.
- (9) Infra 51a. Lit., 'there is'. If the ma'amar was made first, the subsequent divorce forbids the marriage of the second and also that of the first, the ma'amar to her not being regarded as actual marriage, and if the divorce was first and the ma'amar afterwards, the second widow also requires a divorce, the divorce of the first not having the force of halizah to invalidate the ma'amar addressed to the second.
- (10) Over the ma'amar.
- (11) Asheri: Judah.
- (12) To marry any stranger.
- (13) The levir.
- (14) To marry any stranger.
- (15) Widow; the one whose husband died first, and who became subject to the levirate marriage before the other.
- (16) Before she had performed the halizah with the levir.
- (17) The levir.
- (18) Since death had severed his levirate bond with the first, and the surviving widow is no longer the sister of a zekukah.
- (19) The widow of the brother who died after the first, and who became subject to the levirate marriage after the subjection of the first.
- (20) To the levir. At the time she became subject to him there was no other zekukah.

- (28) That had been advanced by R. Johanan.
- (29) Infra 30a, 111b.
- (30) Of Rab, just quoted.
- (31) As in the case of three brothers two of whom were married to two sisters (infra 30a) in connection with which Rab made his statement.
- (32) And is, therefore, removed as soon as one of the sisters dies.
- (33) The same objection applies to Rab also (Rashi). Cf. however, Tosaf. s.v. איתיביה a.l.

- (35) I.e., the Mishnah is not authoritative. —
- (36) Lit., 'she performs the halizah, (namely) one', i.e., the second widow.
- (37) חולצות the pr. particip. Plural.
- (38) In similar circumstances.
- (39) Which implies the two spoken of.

(40) So that the other, who is not exempted by that of the first, must also perform halizah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 28a

is an instruction as to what it is the proper thing to do.¹ Let him reply that it² was a preventive measure against the possibility of the levir's participating first in the halizah of the first!³ — It was stated, BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, i.e., the law of the levirate marriage is not applicable here at all.⁴ Let him, then, reply that it⁵ was a preventive measure in case he⁶ might die,⁷ it being forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage!⁸ — R. Johanan makes no provision against possible death.⁹ Then let him reply that it⁵ is the ruling of R. Eleazar¹⁰ who said that so long as she remained forbidden to him for one moment she is forbidden to him for ever!¹¹ — Since the latter clause [represents the view of] R. Eleazar,¹² the first clause cannot represent his view. Then let him reply that it¹³ is a case where they¹⁴ fell under the obligation¹⁵ at the same time, and that it represents the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean who maintains that it is possible to ascertain simultaneity!¹⁶ — The Tanna would not have recorded an anonymous Mishnah in agreement with the view of R. Jose the Galilean. Let him reply [that it¹³ is a case] where it is not known which¹⁷ came under the obligation¹⁵ first!¹⁸ — If that were the case¹⁹ how could it have been stated,²⁰ EVEN IF THEY HAD ALREADY MARRIED THEM THEY MUST DISMISS THEM! In the case of the first,²¹ at least, one can understand [the reason].²² since he can be told, 'Who permitted her to you'?²³ In the case, however, of the second,²⁴ the levir²⁵ could surely claim, 'My friend²⁶ has taken the second in levirate marriage²⁷ and I take the first' ²⁸ This, then,²⁹ is the reason why he³⁰ said to him,³¹ 'I do not know who was the author of the statement concerning the sisters'.³²

We learned: IF ONE OF THE SISTERS WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE [OF THE BROTHERS] UNDER THE PROHIBITION OF INCEST,³³ HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT MAY MARRY HER SISTER, WHILE TO THE SECOND BROTHER BOTH ARE FORBIDDEN. It was now assumed that his mother-in-law³⁴ came under the obligation³⁵ first.³⁶ Now, why [should both sisters be forbidden]?³⁷ Let the son-in-law undertake the duty of marrying first that sister who is not his mother-in-law,³⁸ and his mother-in-law, in relation to the other levir, would thereby come into the same category as a sister-in-law that was permitted,³⁹ then forbidden,⁴⁰ and then permitted again,⁴¹ who returns to her former state of permissibility! R. Papa replied: [They are forbidden] in a case where she who was not his mother-in-law came under the obligation⁴² first.⁴³

R. ELIEZER SAID: BETH SHAMMAI HOLD etc. The following was taught: R. Eliezer said: Beth Shammai hold that they may retain them, and Beth Hillel hold that they must dismiss them. R. Simeon said: They may retain them. Abba Saul said: Beth Hillel uphold in this matter the milder rule, for it was Beth Shammai who said that the women must be dismissed while Beth Hillel said they may be retained.⁴⁴

Whose view does R. Simeon represent?⁴⁵ If that of Beth Shammai,⁴⁶ he is merely repeating R. Eliezer; if that of Beth Hillel,⁴⁶ he is repeating Abba Saul! It was this that he meant: In this matter there is no dispute at all between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS etc. But we have learned this already: When her sister is her sister-in-law she may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage!⁴⁷ — [Both are] necessary. For had the law been stated there⁴⁸ it might have been assumed [to apply to that case alone],⁴⁹ because there is no need to enact a preventive measure against a second brother,⁵⁰ but not [to the case] here where it might be advisable to issue a preventive measure against a second brother.⁵⁰ And had the law been stated here,⁵¹ it might have been assumed [to apply to this case alone] because there is a second brother who proves it⁵² but not [to that case] where no second brother exists.⁵³ [Hence were both] required.

BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT etc. But we have [already] learned this also:

- (1) And not as to what is to be done in certain eventualities. Lit., 'for as at the beginning, it was taught'.
- (2) The provision that both widows are to perform halizah and that none may be taken in levirate marriage.
- (3) And then he would marry the second, in his erroneous assumption that, as he may participate in the halizah of the second and marry the first, so he may participate in the halizah of the first and marry the second. This, however, does not imply that if he already did participate in the halizah of the second he may not, after her death, marry the first. In this latter case the reason for the marriage with the first would be obvious and would leave no room for erroneous conclusions.
- (4) Even if halizah was first performed by the second.
- (5) The provision in our Mishnah that both widows must perform halizah and none of them may be taken in levirate marriage.
- (6) One of the surviving brothers who intended to marry one of the widowed sisters.
- (7) After the second brother had married the second widow and had thus become disqualified from marrying or participating in the halizah of the other — who is now forbidden to him as the sister of his wife.
- (8) And this only is the reason for the prohibition of the levirate marriage with either of the sisters. Had this prohibition been due to the levirate bond, as suggested, the first would certainly have been permitted to marry the levir after halizah with the second, which had severed the levirate bond, had taken place. Consequently, in the case discussed by R. Johanan, where the second died, and the preventive measure is not applicable, the first may indeed be taken in levirate marriage!
- (9) The ruling in our Mishnah could not, therefore, be due to a preventive measure.
- (10) Bah a.l. reads, 'Eliezer' throughout the context.
- (11) Infra 1092; while R. Johanan, agreeing with the Rabbis, may disregard this individual opinion.
- (12) His authorship being specifically stated there.

- (16) supra 19a, Bek. 92a
- (17) Of the two widowed sisters.
- (18) So that there is no known 'second' widow with whom to participate in the halizah
- (19) That the prohibition in our Mishnah to marry the two widowed sisters is entirely due to the fact that it is not known which of them was the first to become a widow and which was second; and that, had the fact been known, the first would have been permitted to be taken in the levirate marriage.
- (20) Lit., '(is it) that why it was stated'!
- (21) I.e., the levir who married first, Cf. Bah a.l. Cur. edd. read, ראשון for ראשונה
- (22) Why the woman must be dismissed.
- (23) Before the marital bond between him and her sister was severed she was forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah. Hence he must rightly dismiss her.
- (24) Levir (v. Bah) who married after his brother had married one of the widows. Cur. edd. שני for שניב.
- (25) When he is ordered to divorce the woman.
- (26) The levir who married first.
- (27) I.e., the sister who became widow second; and naturally no one could disprove his contention.
- (28) Who became permitted to him owing to the previous marriage of her sister who, he claims, was the second widow. The marriage of the second severs the marital bond between the sister and the levirs, and thus liberates the first from the prohibition of 'the sister of one's zekukah' and brings her under the category of 'permitted, forbidden and permitted again'.
- (29) Since this last suggested answer is also untenable.

- (33) If she was, for instance, his mother-in-law.
- (34) V. previous note. 'Mother-in-law' is taken as an instance of any forbidden relative.

- (35) Of the levirate marriage.
- (36) I.e., her husband died before the other brother.
- (37) To marry the other levir.
- (38) That widow is permitted to him, because she is neither his forbidden relative nor the sister of his zekukah, since a forbidden relative is not a zekukah.
- (39) Since at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage she was not the sister of a zekukah.

- (44) Tosef. v.
- (45) Lit., 'R. Simeon like whom'. He could not possibly advance a view of his own, since he is not sufficiently great to disagree either with Beth Shammai or with Beth Hillel.
- (46) I.e., if he maintains that what he said was their view.
- (47) Supra 20a, which Implies the law here stated, viz, that he is forbidden to marry the forbidden relative but may marry her sister.
- (48) And not here.
- (49) Where one brother only is involved.
- (50) Who might marry a sister of his zekukah by mistaking the reason for the levirate marriage of his brother.
- (51) And not there.
- (52) That there is a special reason why his brother may marry one of the sisters. The fact that he himself does not marry either of the sisters is sufficient proof that the sister of a zekukah is forbidden.
- (53) And people might erroneously infer that the sister of a zekukah is always permitted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 28b

If she is forbidden by virtue of a commandment or by virtue of holiness she must perform halizah and may not be taken in levirate marriage!¹ -There¹ it is a question of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment alone,² but here [it is a case of one] forbidden by virtue of a commandment and [by virtue of] her sister.³ Since it might have been assumed that the prohibition by virtue of a commandment shall take the same rank as the prohibition by the law of incest⁴ and [her sister] should, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage, hence we were taught [that the law is not so].

But how could she⁵ possibly be taken in levirate marriage? Since Pentateuchally she⁶ is to submit to him,⁷ he would come in contact with the sister of his zekukah⁸ -It might have been thought that such provision⁹ was made by the Rabbis for the sake of the precept,¹⁰ hence we were taught [that it was not so].

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS etc. What need was there again for this statement? Surely, it is precisely identical [with the one before]!¹¹ For what difference is there whether [a woman is forbidden] to one or to two?- [Both are] required. For had the former only¹² been stated, it might have been assumed [that the law was applicable there only] because there exists a second brother to indicate the cause,¹³ but not here where there is no second brother to indicate it.¹⁴ And if the statement had been made here only it might have been assumed on the contrary that both brothers afford proof in regard to each other,¹⁵ but not in the other case;¹⁶ [hence both were] required.

THIS IS THE CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT HAS BEEN SAID etc. What is the expression, THIS IS intended to exclude?¹⁷ -To exclude the case [where one sister was forbidden by] Virtue of a commandment to the one [brother]. and [the other sister was forbidden] by virtue of a commandment to the other. But what need was there for this [additional statement]? Surely it is precisely identical [with that mentioned before];¹⁸ for what difference is there whether it relates to one or to two! — It might have been thought that only where there is the necessity of providing for a preventive measure against a second brother do we not say that the prohibition by a commandment takes the same rank as a prohibition by the law of incest,¹⁹ but that where there is no necessity to provide against a second brother we do say that in the case of the one brother the prohibition by a commandment is to be given the same force as the prohibition by the law of incest, and that also in the case of the other brother the prohibition by a commandment is to be given the same force as the prohibition by the law of incest, and that the sisters may consequently be taken in levirate marriage; hence we were taught [that such an assumption is not to be made].

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab and so did R. Hiyya teach: In the case of all these²⁰ it may happen that she who is forbidden to one brother²¹ may be permitted to the other,²² and that her sister who is her sister-in-law may either perform the halizah or be taken in the levirate marriage;²³ and Rab Judah interpreted it²⁴ [as referring to those]²⁵ from one's mother-in-law onward but not to the first six categories. What is the reason? Because this²⁶ is only possible in the case of a daughter born from a woman who had been outraged.²⁷ but not in that of a daughter born from a legal marriage.²⁸ [and the author of that Mishnah]²⁹ deals only with cases of legal matrimony and not with those of outraged women.³⁰

Abaye. however, interprets i²⁴ as referring also to a daughter from a woman that had been outraged. because, since [the application of Rab's statement]³¹ is quite possible in her case, it matters not whether she was born from a woman who was legally married or from one that had been outraged; but not to the 'wife of a brother who was not his contemporary' since this³¹ is possible only according to the view of R. Simeon³² and not according to that of the Rabbis and he³³ does not deal with any matter which is a subject of controversy. But R. Safra interprets [it³⁴ as referring] also to the 'wife of a brother who was not his contemporary', and this³⁴ is possible in the case of six brothers in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.³⁵ And your mnemonic is, 'died, born, and performed the levirate marriage; died, born, and performed the levirate marriage'.³⁶ [Suppose. for instance]. Reuben and Simeon³⁷ were married to two sisters, and Levi and Judah were married to two strangers. When Reuben died, Issachar was born and Levi took the widow in levirate marriage. When Simeon died, Zebulun was born and Judah took [the second widow] in levirate marriage. When Levi and Judah subsequently died without issue and their widows fell under the obligation of the levirate marriage before Issachar and Zebulun, she³⁸ who is forbidden to the one³⁹ is permitted to the other⁴⁰ while she⁴¹ who is forbidden to the other⁴² is permitted to the first.⁴³

In the example of 'her sister who is her sister-in-law',⁴⁴ what need was there⁴⁵ for Judah to contract the levirate marriage? Even if Judah did not contract any levirate marriage it is also possible!⁴⁶ — Owing to the rival.⁴⁷ This⁴⁸ satisfactorily explains the case of the rival; what can be said, however, in respect of the rival's rival?⁴⁹ — If, for instance, Gad and Asher also subsequently married them.⁵⁰

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER SON'S DAUGHTER, BEHOLD, THESE⁵¹ MUST⁵² PERFORM THE HALIZAH⁵³ BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁵⁴ R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, EXEMPTS THEM.⁵⁵

IF ONE OF THEM⁵⁶ WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM BY THE LAW OF INCEST, HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF, HOWEVER, THE PROHIBITION IS DUE TO A COMMANDMENT OR TO HOLINESS, THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Simeon exempts both from the halizah and the levirate marriage. for it is said in the Scriptures, And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her:⁵⁷ when they become rivals to one another,⁵⁸ you may not marry even one of them.

IF ONE OF THEM WAS etc. What need was there again for this statement? Surely it is the same!⁵⁹ -It was necessary because of the opinion of R. Simeon: As it might have been assumed that, since R. Simeon had said that two sisters were neither to perform halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage. A preventive measure should be enacted⁶⁰ against two sisters generally.⁶¹ hence we were taught⁶² [that it was not so].⁶³

IF, HOWEVER, THE PROHIBITION IS DUE TO A COMMANDMENT etc.

(1) Supra 202, Sanh. 532.

(2) Only one sister-in-law being concerned.

(3) Since two sisters, the widows of the two brothers, are here involved, and one of them is forbidden not only as the sister of his zekukah but also by virtue of a commandment.

(4) As the one is not regarded as a zekukah so neither is the other.

(5) The sister of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment.

(6) The sister-in-law forbidden by virtue of a commandment.

(7) To levirate marriage; her prohibition being only Rabbinical.

(8) Which cannot obviously be permitted. What need, then, was there for a law that is so obvious.

(9) The permission to marry the sister of his zekukah.

(10) Of the levirate marriage. In order that this precept may be fulfilled they may have removed the prohibition of the marital bond, which is only Rabbinical, in cases where the woman is not forbidden by the law of incest but by virtue of a commandment only.

(11) Where one sister-in-law is similarly forbidden to one levir, and he is permitted to marry her sister.

(12) Lit., 'there'.

(13) Since one brother is forbidden to marry either sister it will be obvious that the brother was permitted to marry one of the sisters for a special reason.

(14) Since both brothers marry respectively the two sisters, it might be assumed that any levir may marry the sister of his zekukah.

(15) Since each brother is permitted to marry only one particular sister and not the other, it is obvious that the other is forbidden to him. The law of zekukah could not consequently be mistaken.

(16) Where there is only one brother, and no other brother to indicate that there is a special reason why the sister of his apparent zekukah, should be permitted to be taken in levirate marriage.

(17) THIS IS implies this and no other.

(18) In our Mishnah: [IF ONE SISTER] WAS FORBIDDEN BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT... SHE MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH AND MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

(19) V. supra p. 174. n. 6.

(20) The fifteen forbidden categories enumerated in the Mishnah, supra 2af.

(21) As a forbidden relative under the law of incest.

(22) With whom she is not so closely related.

(23) The prohibition of the one under the law of incest removes the marital bond, and her sister who, in consequence, is no longer the 'sister of a zekukah', may, therefore, be married to, or perform the halizah with the levir to whom the former is forbidden.

(24) Rab's statement.

(25) Of the fifteen relatives enumerated in the Mishnah mentioned.

(26) That two sisters shall be the daughters of two brothers, and that the one forbidden to one brother shall be permitted to the other brother. V. n. 8.

(27) If, of four brothers, A, B, C and D, A had a daughter from a woman he had outraged. and B had a daughter from the same woman whom he outraged after A, and these daughters of A and B, who are maternal sisters, married their father's brothers, C and D, who subsequently died without issue, A's daughter is permitted to B (who is her brother-in-law but otherwise a complete stranger) and is forbidden to A her father. For similar reasons A's daughter is permitted to A and forbidden to B. Thus it is possible for two sisters to marry the two levirs respectively because each one of them is a daughter of the other levir to whom she is forbidden by the law of incest.

(28) Since the mother of such a daughter would be forbidden to marry her husband's brother, even though she had been divorced by her husband after the birth of that daughter.

(29) Supra 2a, which is now under discussion.

(30) And since the case of a daughter could not be included (v. supra nn. 8 and 9), the other five cases which also bear on a daughter had equally to be excluded.

(31) V. supra p. 176. n. 7.

(32) Supra 18b. V. also R. Safra's interpretation and notes, Infra.

(33) Rab or R. Hiyya.

(34) Rab's statement.

(35) Who in certain circumstances permits the marriage of the 'widow of a brother who was not his contemporary'. V. supra 18b.

(36) v. infra, when (a) death, (b) birth and (c) marriage occurred in this order in the case of both groups of brothers.

(37) Jacob's sons, the sequence of whose births is known (v. Gen. XXIX. 32-XXX, 20), are taken here as an illustration of the possibility of the application of Rab's statement in certain circumstances of birth, death and marriage.

(38) The widow of Levi.

(39) To Issachar, because he was born before the marriage of Levi had removed the levirate bond between Reuben's widow and the other brothers, and thus came under the prohibition of marrying 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'.

(40) To Zebulun who was born after she had married Levi and the levirate bond between her and the other brothers had been removed.

(41) The wife of Judah.

(42) To Zebulun, to whom the widow of Simeon stands in the same relation as the widow of Reuben to Issachar. (V. supra note 9).

(43) Issachar who was Simeon's contemporary.

(44) Supra.

(45) In R. Safra's interpretation.

(46) For one sister to be forbidden to one brother and permitted to the other, and vice versa. Suppose Reuben died, and then Issachar was born, and Levi married the widow; then Simeon died, Zebulun was born, and Levi died; and the widows of Simeon and Levi came under the obligation of the levirate marriage with Issachar and Zebulun. Levi's widow is forbidden to Issachar owing to the levirate bond originating from her first husband, Reuben, (v. supra p. 177, n. 9) and is permitted to Zebulun (v. p. 177, n. 10), while Simeon's widow is forbidden to Zebulun (v. p. 177, n. 12) and permitted to Issachar (v. p. 177. n. 13). Now, since the point may be illustrated by five brothers, why was it necessary to bring in six?

(47) As the Mishnah under discussion (supra 2af) speaks of the rivals it was desired to give an illustration which may be applicable to rivals as well as to the forbidden relatives, and this could only be done by assuming that Judah married Simeon's widow. Had he not married her, the rival would have had to be not Judah's but Simeon's wife who would thus be forbidden to Zebulun not as 'rival' but as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'.

(48) The illustration with the six brothers.

(49) How is it possible that one rival's rival shall be forbidden to one brother and permitted to the other while the other rival's rival should be forbidden to the other brother and permitted to the first?

(50) The first wives of Levi and Judah (the rivals of their second wives, the widows of Reuben and Simeon). If Gad who married, say. the widow of Judah, and Asher who married, say. the widow of Levi died subsequently without issue and were survived by their wives who are now subject to the levirate marriage with Issachar and Zebulun the surviving brothers, Gad's first wife, the rival of his second wife (the widow of Judah) who was the rival of Simeon's wife, is forbidden to Zebulun as the rival's rival of the wife of Simeon who was not his contemporary, but is permitted to Issachar. Similarly Asher's first wife is forbidden to Issachar and permitted to Zebulun.

(51) The women enumerated.

(52) If their husbands, the two brothers, died without issue.

(53) With the third surviving brother.

(54) By that brother; since both are related to him by the 'levirate bond' and each is forbidden to him as the consanguineous relative of the woman connected with him by such bond.

(55) Even from the halizah. V. Gemara infra.

(56) The sisters.

(57) Lev. XVIII, 18.

(58) The Ievirate bond which subjects both to the same levir causing them to be rivals.

(59) As that which had been taught in an earlier Mishnah in the case of four brothers, supra 26a.

(60) Forbidding levirate marriage even where the prohibition of one is due to the law of incest.

(61) Lit., 'of the world'. If permission to marry one of the sisters were given where one is forbidden by the law of incest, it might be mistakenly concluded that levirate marriage is allowed even when none was forbidden by the law of incest.

(62) By the statement in our Mishnah that one IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

(63) The similar statement in the earlier Mishnah (supra 262) does not prove this point as far as R. Simeon is concerned, since it refers to the view of the Rabbis according to whom the marriage of the sister of a zekukah is only Rabbinically forbidden and no preventive measure is obviously required against a possible infringement of such a prohibition. According to R. Simeon, however, who regards the marriage of a sister of a zekukah as incest, a preventive measure might have been expected had not our Mishnah proved the contrary.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 29a

But did not R. Simeon state that two sisters¹ are neither to perform the halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage!² — This³ is a preventive measure against any other case where the prohibition is due to a commandment —⁴ This is a satisfactory explanation in respect of herself;⁵ what, however, can be said in respect of her sister?⁶ -The provision was made in the case of her sister as a preventive measure against herself.⁷ But, surely, no such preventive measures were made in the case where one was forbidden as incest!⁸ — A case of incest is different because people are well acquainted with it⁹ and it¹⁰ is well known.¹¹

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS UNMARRIED,¹² AND WHEN ONE OF THE SISTERS HUSBANDS DIED, THE UNMARRIED BROTHER ADDRESSED TO HER¹³ A MA'AMAR,¹⁴ AND THEN HIS SECOND BROTHER DIED, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE¹⁵ [REMAINS] WITH HIM WHILE THE OTHER IS EXEMPT¹⁶ AS BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER.¹⁷ BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, MAINTAIN THAT HE MUST DISMISS HIS WIFE¹⁸ BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE¹⁹ AND BY HALIZAH,²⁰ AND HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH.²¹ THIS IS THE CASE IN REGARD TO WHICH IT WAS SAID: WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS WIFE, AND WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS BROTHER'S WIFE.²²

GEMARA. What was THIS IS meant to exclude?²³ — To exclude the statement²⁴ of R. Joshua,²⁵ [and to indicate] that we do not act in accordance with his view but either in accordance with that of R. Gamaliel or that of R. Eliezer.

R. Eleazar said: It must not be assumed that a ma'amar according to Beth Shammai constitutes a perfect kinyan,²⁶ so that, if he²⁷ wishes to dismiss her, a letter of divorce is sufficient; but rather that, according to Beth Shammai, a ma'amar constitutes a kinyan only so far as to keep out the rival.²⁸ Said R. Abin: We also have learned the same thing: Beth Shammai said, 'They may retain them',²⁹ which implies that they may only retain them³⁰ but [that they may] not [marry them] at the outset.³¹

(1) Who are both subject to Ievirate marriage.

(2) Owing to the levirate bond which Pentateuchally binds both sisters to the levir. Why, then, should halizah be performed here where Pentateuchally both sisters are subject to the levirate marriage and each is, consequently, forbidden as the sister of a zekukah?

(3) The provision that halizah shall be performed.

(4) Were halizah to be discarded in this case, an erroneous conclusion might be formed that it is to be discarded in all cases where the prohibition is due to a commandment (as if it had been due to the Pentateuchal laws of incest). even if the question of the sister of a zekukah did not arise.

(5) The sister forbidden by a commandment.

(6) Why is she not exempt from the halizah as the sister of a zekukah?

(7) לְחַלְצָהּ לְחַלְצָהּ 'her ill-luck'. Others render, 'company'. As the sister who is forbidden by a commandment is subject to halizah (as a preventive measure, for the reason previously stated) so must her sister (so that one case be not mistaken for the other) be also subject to the same measure.

(8) V. our Mishnah: HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER, and no preventive measure against the sister was enacted.

(9) And would know that one sister was forbidden because of incest.

(10) The cause why the second sister is taken in levirate marriage.

(11) Lit., 'it has a voice'. And no one would in consequence permit elsewhere the marriage of the sister of another zekukah who is not forbidden by the laws of incest.

(12) בְּיָדָהּ 'empty'.

(13) The widow.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) The sister-in-law to whom he addressed the ma'amar though he had not actually married her. A ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes legal marriage in this respect. V. infra.

(16) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(17) Since her sister is regarded as legally married she is no more the sister of the levir's zekukah but of his wife.

(18) Cf. supra n. 4.

(19) Since the ma'amar is partially regarded as marriage.

(20) A ma'amar, according to Beth Hillel, does not constitute a proper marriage, and she is now the sister of a zekukah. V. following note.

(21) v. previous note. As the ma'amar did not constitute a proper marriage with her sister she is the sister of a zekukah who may not contract levirate marriage but must perform halizah.

(22) V. infra 109a. The second widow who becomes subject to him through the levirate law is not only herself forbidden to marry him (cf. note 10) but deprives him also of the first widow, his virtual wife. (Cf. note 9)-

(23) THIS IS implying this but not other cases.

(24) Lit., 'that'.

(25) Infra 109a.

(26) V. Glos., i.e., perfect marriage.

(27) The levir.

(28) I.e., her rival who is her sister does not cause her to be forbidden to the levir as the 'sister of a zekukah'.

(29) Supra 26a, in the case where the levirs married the sisters-in-law before consulting the Beth din as to the permissibility of their action.

(30) If they had already married them.

(31) Because each one is the sister of a zekukah. Lit., 'they may retain, yes; for as at the start, not'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 29b

Now, if it could be assumed that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes a perfect kinyan, let the one levir address a ma'amar¹ and constitute thereby a kinyan,² and let the other also address a ma'amar¹ and thereby constitute a kinyan.³ What then! [Is it your inference that] it⁴ keeps the rival completely out?⁵ Let then one levir address a ma'amar¹ and keep her out⁶ and let the other levir also address a ma'amar¹ and keep her out!⁷ What, however, may be said in reply? That a permitted ma'amar⁸ does keep the rival out, while a forbidden ma'amar⁹ does not keep her out; so also here, even according to him who maintains that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan, only a permitted ma'amar¹⁰ constitutes a kinyan. but a forbidden one⁸ does not.

R. Ashi taught it¹¹ in the following manner: R. Eleazar said: It must not be assumed that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, keeps the rival¹² completely out, and that she does not require even halizah; but rather it¹³ keeps her out¹⁴ and still leaves [a partial bond].¹⁵ Said R. Abin: We also have learned the same thing: Beth Shammai said, 'they may retain them',¹⁶ which implies that they may only retain them¹⁶ but [that they may] not [marry them] at the outset.¹⁷ Now, if it could have been assumed that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, keeps a rival out completely. let the one levir address a ma'amar,¹⁸ and thus keep her out.¹⁹ and let the other also address a ma'amar¹⁸ and so keep her out.²⁰ But. surely. it was taught. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE [REMAINS] WITH HIM WHILE THE OTHER IS EXEMPT AS HIS WIFE'S SISTER!²¹ — The fact is, a yebamah who is eligible for all²² is also eligible for a part;²³ a yebamah who is not eligible for all²⁴ is not eligible for a part.²⁵

Rabbah inquired: Does a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitute marriage or betrothal? — Said Abaye to him: On what practical issue [does this question bear]? Shall I say on [the issue] of inheriting from her,²⁶ defiling himself to her²⁷ or annulling her vows?²⁸ surely. [it could be answered that] seeing that in the case of²⁹ ordinary betrothal³⁰ R. Hiyya taught, that where the wife has only been betrothed³¹ [the husband] is neither subject to the laws of onan³² nor may he defile himself for her.²⁷ and she in his case is likewise not subject to the laws of onan³³ nor may she defile herself for him,³⁴ and that if she dies he does not inherit from her though if he dies she collects her kethubah,³⁵ is there any need [to speak of the case where] a ma'amar had been addressed!³⁶ Rather. [the question is] in respect of introduction into the bridal canopy: Does it³⁷ constitute a marriage and, therefore. no introduction into the bridal canopy is required.³⁸ or does it perhaps constitute betrothal and, consequently, introduction into the bridal canopy is required? The other replied: If where he did not address to her any ma'amar it is written [in Scripture]. Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,³⁹ even against her will, is there any need [to speak of the case where] he has addressed to her a ma'amar!⁴⁰ The former retorted: Yes;⁴¹ since I maintain that whenever a levir has addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, the levirate bond disappears and she comes under the bond of betrothal. What [then is the decision]? — Come and hear: In the case of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir.⁴² whether there be one levir or two levirs, R. Eliezer said. he⁴³ may annul [her vows]. R. Joshua said: [Only where she is waiting] for one and not for two.⁴⁴ R. Akiba said: Neither when she [is waiting] for one nor for two.⁴⁵ Now we pondered thereon: One can well understand R. Akiba, since he may hold that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one;⁴⁶ according to R. Joshua, the levirate bond may exist where there is one levir but not where there are two levirs.⁴⁷ According to R. Eliezer, however, granted that a levirate bond exists, one can understand why, in the case of one, he may annul, but why also in the case of two?⁴⁸ And R. Ammi⁴⁹ replied: Here it is a case where he addressed to her a ma'amar, and the statement represents the opinion of Beth Shammai who maintain that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan.⁵⁰ Now, if it be granted that it⁵¹ constitutes a marriage, it is quite intelligible why he may annul her vows. If. however, it be assumed that it constitutes only a betrothal, how could he annul her vows? Surely we learned: The vows of a betrothed girl may be annulled by her father in conjunction with her husband!⁵² -Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: What is meant by annulment? Jointly.⁵³

According to R. Eleazar, however, who holds that a ma'amar, In the opinion of Beth Shammai, constitutes a kinyan only so far as to keep out the rival, how⁵⁴ could the annulment be effected even jointly?⁵⁵ — R. Eleazar can answer you: When I said that it⁵¹ constitutes a kinyan so far only as to keep out the rival, [I meant to indicate] that a letter of divorce was not sufficient⁵⁶ but that halizah also was required;⁵⁷ did I say anything. however, as regards the annulment of vows! And if you prefer I might say. R. Eleazar can answer you: Is it satisfactorily explained according to R. Nahman b. Isaac?⁵⁸ Surely it was not stated 'they may annul' but 'he may annul'!⁵⁹ Consequently this must be a case where he⁶⁰ appeared before a court⁶¹ and⁶² a specified sum for alimony was decreed for her out of his estate; and [this is to be understood] In accordance with the statement R. Phinehas made in the name of Raba. For R. Phinehas stated in the name of Raba: Any woman that utters a vow does so on condition that her husband will approve of it.⁶³

- (1) To one of the sisters-in-law; since such an action is not forbidden.
- (2) v. Glos. i.e., perfect marriage.
- (3) The prohibition 'as sister of a zekukah' would consequently be removed and both levirs could properly marry the respective sisters-in-law.
- (4) The ma'amar.
- (5) V. supra p. 181, n. 17.
- (6) v. p. 181, n. 17.
- (7) V. supra p. 181, n. 17, and supra n. 6. Why, then, was levirate marriage with the two sisters forbidden!
- (8) One addressed to a sister-in-law in a case where levirate marriage with her was permissible at the time.
- (9) When two sisters were subject to the levirate marriage before the ma'amar had been addressed.
- (10) V. note 11.
- (11) The previous statement of R. Eleazar and R. Abin etc.
- (12) The sister-in-law who, like her sister (the other sister-in-law), is subject to the levirate bond.
- (13) The ma'amar.
- (14) So that she cannot cause the prohibition of the other to whom the ma'amar had been addressed.
- (15) Which necessitates her performing the halizah if she wishes to marry a stranger before he levir had properly married her sister.
- (16) V. supra p, 182, n. 1.
- (17) V. supra p. 182, n. 3.
- (18) v. supra p. 182, n. 4.
- (19) Cf. supra p. 181, n. 17.
- (20) Consequently it must be concluded that a ma'amar still leaves a partial bond, and that before the other sister had performed the halizah the first is forbidden as the sister of one's zekukah.
- (21) Which shews that no halizah at all is required!
- (22) For both levirate marriage and halizah, as in the case of our Mishnah where the ma'amar was addressed to one sister before the death of the husband of the other had subjected that other also to the same levir.
- (23) To the ma'amar which, in such circumstances. completely keeps out the other when she also, through her husband's subsequent death, comes under the obligation.
- (24) As in the Mishnah, supra 26a, where both widows were equally subject to the levirs at the time the ma'amar had been addressed, and none was eligible for both the levirate marriage and the halizah.
- (25) I.e., for the ma'amar which, in such a case, does not keep out the sister.
- (26) As a husband who is the heir of his wife.
- (27) If he is a priest who may defile himself by attending on the dead bodies of certain relatives of whom a wife is one.
- (28) A husband may annul the vows of his wife. v. Num. XXX. 7ff
- (29) Lit.. 'now'.
- (30) Lit., 'a betrothed in the world', i.e., ordinary betrothal which is pentateuchally valid.
- (31) But not yet married.
- (32) A mourner prior to the burial of certain relatives is called onan (v. Glos.) and is subject to a number of restrictions. If his betrothed died he may, unlike one whose married wife died, partake of holy things.
- (33) She also is allowed to partake of holy things.
- (34) During a festival when not only priests but also Israelites and women are forbidden to attend on the corpses of those who are not their near relatives. (V. R.H. 16b). Others render. 'nor need she defile etc'. Cf. Tosaf. a.l., s.v. ס
- (35) v. Glos., in a case where such a document was given to her at the betrothal, prior to the marriage (v. Keth. 89b).
- (36) A ma'amar is only a Rabbinical enactment. If Pentateuchal betrothal has not the force of a marriage in respect of the laws mentioned, how much less the Rabbinical ma'amar!
- (37) The ma'amar.
- (38) She being regarded as his wife even if connubial intercourse took place against her will, and should he wish to part with her, a Get will suffice without additional halizah.
- (39) Deut. XXV, 5-
- (40) Where there is, in addition to his claim as levir, the force of the ma'amar.
- (41) So Bah. a.l.
- (42) שומרת יבם V. Glos. s.v. shomereth yabam.

- (43) Any one of the levirs.
- (44) In the latter case neither of the levirs is entitled to annul her vows.
- (45) Ned. 74a.
- (46) Hence a levir is never entitled to the privilege of a husband in respect of the annulment of vows.
- (47) Since it is not known to which of them she is really subject, the bond between them and the widow is necessarily a weak one.
- (48) Only both together. but not one only, should be allowed to annul her vows.
- (49) Cur. edd. enclose in parentheses 'b. Ahabah'.
- (50) Ned. loc. cit.
- (51) The ma'amar.
- (52) But not by her husband alone. And, since the levir alone may here annul, a ma'amar must have the force of marriage.
- (53) The levir and her father, as in the case of a betrothal. Hence no proof may be adduced from here as to whether a ma'amar has the force of a marriage or of a betrothal.
- (54) Not having the force even of a betrothal.
- (55) Cf. supra note 8.
- (56) In the case of a yebamah to whom a ma'amar had been addressed.
- (57) If he did not wish to marry her.
- (58) Who holds that the father and husband jointly annul the vows of the widow to whom a ma'amar has been addressed.
- (59) The reading is יַרְוֵהָ (sing.). not יַרְוֵהוּ (plur.). How, then, could he state that two jointly annul her vows!
- (60) The levir. So Bah a.l. Cur. edd., 'she'.
- (61) Either before he addressed the ma'amar (according to R. Nahman b. Isaac) or after the ma'amar (according to R. Ammi).
- (62) As he refused either to marry, or to submit to her halizah.
- (63) Since she is maintained out of his estate he is regarded by her as husband and her vows are subject to his will. Hence he may also annul them. With the whole passage cf. Ned. 74a. Sonc. ed. pp. 233ff, q.v. notes.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 30a

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS DIED AND THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER MARRIED HIS WIFE AND THEN DIED HIMSELF, THE FIRST¹ IS EXEMPT² AS BEING A WIFE'S SISTER, AND THE SECOND IS EXEMPT² AS BEING HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE HAD ONLY ADDRESSED TO HER³ A MA'AMAR AND DIED, THE STRANGER IS TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁴

GEMARA. The reason⁵ is because he had addressed to her³ a ma'amar;⁶ had he, however, not addressed a ma'amar to her,³ the stranger also would have had to be taken in levirate marriage.⁷ This proves, said R. Nahman, that no levirate bond exists⁸ even in the case of one brother.⁹

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND WHEN THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED, ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS MARRIED HIS WIFE AND THEN DIED HIMSELF, THE FIRST¹⁰ IS EXEMPT¹¹ IN THAT SHE IS HIS WIFE'S SISTER, AND THE OTHER¹² IS EXEMPT AS HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE HAD ONLY ADDRESSED TO HER¹³ A MA'AMAR AND DIED, THE STRANGER MUST PERFORM HALIZAH¹⁴ BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. What need was there again [for the law in this Mishnah]? Surely it is the same:¹⁵ If there,¹⁶ where the wife's sister is only a rival to the stranger¹⁷ it has been said that the stranger is forbidden,¹⁸ how much more so¹⁹ here where the stranger is the rival to a wife's sister!²⁰ -The Tanna had taught first this,²¹ while the other²² was regarded by him as a permissible case, and so he permitted her.²³ Later, however, he came to regard it as a case that was to be forbidden;²⁴ and, as it was dear to him,²⁵ he placed it first; while the other Mishnah²⁶ was allowed to stand in its original form.²⁷

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND WHEN ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS DIED THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER MARRIED HIS WIFE, AND THEN THE WIFE OF THE SECOND BROTHER DIED, AND AFTERWARDS THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED ALSO, BEHOLD, SHE²⁸ IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM²⁹ FOR ALL TIME, SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT.³⁰

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Any yebamah to whom the instruction Her husband's brother shall go in unto her³¹ cannot be applied at the time she becomes subject to the levirate marriage, is indeed like the wife of a brother who has children, and is consequently forbidden.³² What new thing does he³³ teach us? Surely we have learned, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ALL TIME SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT! — It might have been assumed that this³⁴ applies only to the case where she³⁵ was not suitable for him³⁶ at all during the period of her first subjection;³⁷ but that where she³⁸ was at all suitable for him³⁹ during her first subjection⁴⁰ it might have been assumed that she³⁸ should be permitted, hence, he⁴¹ taught us [that It was not so].

But we have learned this also: If two brothers were married to two sisters, and one of the brothers died and afterwards the wife of the second brother died, behold, she⁴² is forbidden to him for all time, since she was forbidden to him for one moment!⁴³ — It might have been assumed [that this law is applicable] only there because she was completely forced out of that house;⁴⁴ but here, where she was not entirely forced out of that house,⁴⁵ it might have been said that as she is suitable for the brother who married the stranger she is also⁴⁶ suitable for the other brother,⁴⁷ hence he⁴¹ taught us [that she was not].

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS DIVORCED HIS WIFE, AND WHEN THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED HE WHO HAD DIVORCED HIS WIFE MARRIED HER AND THEN DIED HIMSELF- THIS IS A CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT WAS SAID: AND IF ANY OF THESE DIED OR WERE DIVORCED. THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED.⁴⁸ GEMARA. The reason⁴⁹ is because he⁵⁰ had divorced [his wife first] and [his brother]⁵¹ died afterwards,⁵² but [if the other]⁵¹ had died [first] and he⁵⁰ divorced [his wife] afterwards,⁵³ she⁵⁴ is forbidden.⁵⁵ Said R. Ashi: This proves that a levirate bond exists,⁵⁶ even where two brothers are involved.⁵⁷

But as to R. Ashi's [inference] does not that of R. Nahman⁵⁸ present a difficulty?-R. Ashi can answer you: The same law, that the stranger is to perform the halizah and that she is not to be taken in levirate marriage, is applicable⁵⁹ even to the case where no ma' amar had been addressed; and the only reason why ma'amar was at all mentioned⁶⁰ was in order to exclude the ruling of Beth Shammai. Since they maintain that a ma'amar constitutes

(1) Widow, who is now also the widow of the second deceased brother.

(2) From levirate marriage and halizah with the surviving brother.

(3) The first widow.

(4) With the surviving brother.

(5) Why the stranger is not to be taken in levirate marriage.

- (6) Since our Mishnah makes the stranger's exemption dependent on the ma'amar, whereby she became the first widow's rival.
- (7) Despite the fact that the first widow is also subjected to the levir for the levirate marriage.
- (8) Between the widow of the deceased brother and the levirs.
- (9) As here, where only one brother could possibly marry her, she being forbidden to the other as his wife's sister. Even in such a case the mere subjection of the widow to the levir (to be taken in levirate marriage or to perform the halizah) does not constitute a levirate bond to attach her to him as if she had been his actual wife.
- (10) Wife of the second deceased brother.
- (11) From marriage and halizah with the surviving brother.
- (12) The stranger, whom the second deceased brother had taken in levirate marriage.
- (13) To the stranger.
- (14) With the surviving brother.
- (15) As the law implied in the previous Mishnah.
- (16) In the previous Mishnah.
- (17) Who was the first and proper wife.
- (18) To be taken in levirate marriage.
- (19) Should the stranger be forbidden to be taken in levirate marriage.
- (20) Who was the first and proper wife.
- (21) The second Mishnah.
- (22) Mishnah, which is now the first.
- (23) I.e., allowed the stranger to be taken in levirate marriage by the surviving brother, because the prohibition that arose from her husband's 'wife's sister' was imposed upon her later, after she had been lawfully married to her husband and after a period during which, had he died without issue, she would have been permitted to be taken in levirate marriage by his brother. It was not the Tanna's Intention, therefore, to include this case in a Mishnah at all.
- (24) Since her rival was, after all, the surviving brother's wife's sister.
- (25) Owing to its novelty.
- (26) The second Mishnah.
- (27) Lit., 'did not move from its place'. though in the light of the newly added Mishnah it had obviously become superfluous.
- (28) The wife of the first brother.
- (29) The surviving brother.
- (30) Lit., 'hour'. When her husband died she was forbidden to his brother who was married to her sister as his 'wife's sister'. This prohibition remains permanently in force and is not removed even when her sister subsequently dies and she is no longer the levir's 'wife's sister'.
- (31) Deut. XXV, 5'
- (32) Even later when the cause of the prohibition is removed. Cf. our Mishnah.
- (33) Rab.
- (34) The law in our Mishnah.
- (35) The widow of the first brother.
- (36) The brother who was married to the second sister.
- (37) I.e., if her sister, the wife of the second brother, did not die until after she had married the brother whose wife was the stranger.
- (38) The widow of the first brother.
- (39) The brother who was married to the second sister.
- (40) If her sister died before she (the first widow) had married the other brother.
- (41) Rah.
- (42) The widow of the first brother.
- (43) Infra 32a.
- (44) When her husband died and she was not permitted to marry his only surviving brother whose wife's sister she was, her connection with her husband's family had been completely severed, she remaining free to marry any stranger.
- (45) Since she was still under the obligation of marrying the third brother who was married to the stranger.
- (46) Thanks to the levirate bond with a member of her deceased husband's family.

- (47) Who was the husband of her sister, now that the latter is dead.
- (48) The stranger who was taken in levirate marriage was never the rival of the sister of the wife of the surviving brother, since the sister had been divorced before the levirate marriage with the stranger had taken place.
- (49) Why the stranger who was taken in levirate marriage by one of the husbands of the sisters is permitted to the last surviving brother.
- (50) The brother who divorced his wife.
- (51) The first husband of the stranger.
- (52) So that the stranger was not even for one moment the rival of one of the sisters, either through marriage or through the levirate bond of subjection.
- (53) In which case the stranger came for a certain period under the levirate bond in respect of the husbands of the two sisters.
- (54) The stranger.
- (55) To marry the last surviving brother. Since she was, for a period at least, the rival of one of the sisters, through the levirate bond, she may never be married to the husband of that sister's sister (being forbidden to him as the rival of his wife's sister) even if the sister whose rival she was had been subsequently divorced and ceased to be her rival.
- (56) Between the widow of a deceased childless brother and the levirs.
- (57) Since, in the case under discussion, the widow whose husband died before one of the sisters had been divorced was subject to two levirs and is, nevertheless, regarded as the rival of the divorced sister, in consequence of which she is forbidden to the last surviving brother.
- (58) From a Mishnah supra, that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one brother.
- (59) Contrary to R. Nahman's inference.
- (60) In that Mishnah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 30b

a perfect kinyan,¹ he taught us² that [the halachah is] not in accordance with Beth Shammai.

But then as to R. Nahman's [inference] does not that of R. Ashi present a difficulty? And should you reply that the same law, that her rival is permitted,³ is also applicable to the case where he⁴ died first and the other brother⁵ divorced his wife afterwards,⁶ what [it could be objected] would THIS IS exclude? It might exclude the case where he⁵ married her⁷ first and then divorced his wife.⁸ This might be a satisfactory explanation if he⁹ holds the view of R. Jeremiah who said, 'Break it up: He who taught the one did not teach the other,'¹⁰ [for, if this is so]. one Tanna may hold the opinion that it is death¹¹ that causes the subjection¹² while the other might be of the opinion that it is the original marriage¹¹ that causes the subjection,¹³ and THIS IS would thus exclude the case where he first married⁷ and then divorced;¹⁴ if, however, he is of the same opinion as Raba who said, 'Both statements may in fact represent the views of one Tanna, it being a case of "this and there is no need to state that"',¹⁵ what does THIS IS exclude?¹⁶ — He⁹ has no alternative but to adopt the view of R. Jeremiah.

And according to Raba,¹⁷ the explanation would be satisfactory if he held the View of R. Ashi,¹⁸ for then, THIS IS would exclude the case of one who died without first divorcing his wife;¹⁹ if, however, he holds the same view as R. Nahman,²⁰ what would THIS IS exclude?²¹ -He²² has no alternative but to accept the view of R. Ashi. MISHNAH. [IF IN THE CASE OF ANY ONE OF] ALL THESE²³ THE BETROTHAL OR DIVORCE²⁴ WAS IN DOUBT, BEHOLD, THESE RIVALS MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH²⁵ BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²⁶ WHAT IS MEANT BY DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL? IF WHEN HE THREW TO HER A TOKEN OF BETROTHAL²⁷ IT WAS UNCERTAIN WHETHER IT FELL NEARER TO HIM²⁸ OR NEARER TO HER,²⁹ THIS IS A CASE OF DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL. DOUBTFUL DIVORCE? IF HE WROTE A LETTER OF DIVORCE IN HIS OWN HANDWRITING AND IT BORE NO SIGNATURES OF WITNESSES,³⁰ OR³¹ IF IT BORE SIGNATURES BUT NO DATE, OR IF IT BORE A DATE BUT THE SIGNATURE OF ONLY ONE WITNESS, THIS IS A CASE OF DOUBTFUL DIVORCE.

GEMARA. In the case of divorce, however, It is not stated IT WAS UNCERTAIN WHETHER IT FELL NEARER TO HIM OR NEARER TO HER; what is the reason?³² -Rabbah replied: This woman³³ is in a state of permissibility to all men;³⁴ would you forbid her [marriage] because of a doubt?³⁵ You must not forbid her because of a doubt!³⁶ Said Abaye to him: If so, let us also in the matter of betrothal say: This woman³⁷ is in a state of permissibility to the levir;³⁸ would you forbid her³⁹ because of a doubt? You must not forbid her because of a doubt! — There⁴⁰ [it leads] to a restriction.⁴¹ But it is a restriction which may lead to a relaxation! For, sometimes, he would betroth her sister⁴² by betrothal that was not uncertain, or it might occur that another man would betroth her also by a betrothal that was not uncertain and, as the Master has forbidden her rival to be taken in levirate marriage. it would be assumed that the betrothal of the first⁴³ was valid and that that of the latter was not!⁴⁴

- (36) The doubt here being whether the forbidden relative was divorced at all. In the three cases of divorce mentioned in our Mishnah, however, the prohibition is not due to doubtful divorce but to a defect or an irregularity in the document itself.
- (37) The rival.

In the latter case, the betrothal being regarded as invalid, the woman might illegally marry another man. In the former case, should he die without issue, his maternal brother might illegally marry her, believing her never to have been the wife of his brother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 31a

— Since she is required to perform halizah it is sufficiently known that it¹ is a mere restriction.² If so, let him, in the case of divorce also,³ state it,⁴ and require her to perform halizah, and it will be sufficiently known that it⁵ was a mere restriction!⁶ — Were you to say that she was to perform halizah it might also be assumed that she may be taken in levirate marriage.⁷ But here also,⁸ were you to say that she is to perform halizah, she might also be taken in levirate marriage!⁷ -Well, let her be taken in levirate marriage and it will not matter at all since thereby she only retains her former status.⁹

Abaye raised the following objection against him:¹⁰ If the house collapsed upon him¹¹ and upon his brother's daughter.¹² and it is not known which of them had died first, her rival must perform halizah¹³ but may not contract the levirate marriage.¹⁴ But why? Here also it may be said, 'This woman finds herself in the status of permissibility to all,¹⁵ would you forbid her [marriage on the basis] of a doubt? You must not forbid her [on the basis] of a doubt'! And should you suggest that here also the prohibition is due to a restriction, [it may be retorted that] it is a restriction which may result in a relaxation, for should you say that she is to perform the halizah she might also be taken in levirate marriage! — In respect of divorce which is of frequent occurrence the Rabbis enacted a preventive measure;¹⁶ in respect of the collapse of a house which is not of frequent occurrence the Rabbis did not enact any preventive measure. Or else:¹⁷ In the case of divorce, where the forbidden relative is demonstrably alive, were her rival to be required to perform halizah, it might have been thought that the Rabbis¹⁸ had ascertained that the letter of divorce was a valid document,¹⁹ and the rival might, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage. In the case of a house that has collapsed, however, could the Rabbis¹⁸ have ascertained [who was first killed] in the ruin!²⁰

Have we not learned a similar law in the case of divorce? Surely we learned: If she²¹ stood in a public domain, and he²² threw it²³ to her, she is divorced if it fell nearer to her; but if nearer to him she is not divorced. If it was equidistant,²⁴ she is divorced and not divorced. And when it was asked,

‘What is the practical effect of this’,²⁵ [the reply was] that if he was a priest she is forbidden to him;²⁶ and if she is a forbidden relative, her rival must perform the halizah.²⁷ We do not say, however, that were you to rule that she must perform halizah she might also be taken in levirate marriage!²⁸ -Concerning this statement, surely, it was said: Both Rabbah and R. Joseph maintain that here we are dealing with two groups of witnesses, one of which declare that it²³ was nearer to her and the other declares that it²³ was nearer to him, which creates a doubt involving a Pentateuchal [prohibition] —²⁹ Our Mishnah, however, speaks of one group.³⁰ where the doubt involved is only Rabbinical.³¹

Whence is it proved that our Mishnah speaks of one group? — On analogy with betrothal:³² As in betrothal only one group is involved so also in divorce³³ one group only could be involved. Whence is it known that in betrothal itself only one group is involved? Is it not possible that it involves two groups of witnesses! — If two groups of witnesses had been involved, she would have been allowed to contract the levirate marriage, and no wrong would have been done.³⁴ Witnesses stand and declare that it³⁵ was nearer to her,³⁶ and you say that she may be taken in levirate marriage and no wrong will be done!³⁷ Furthermore, even where two groups of witnesses are involved the doubt is only Rabbinical, since it might be said ‘Put one pair against the other and let the woman retain her original status’!³⁸ This indeed is similar to [the incident with] the estate of a certain lunatic. For a certain lunatic once sold some property. and a pair of witnesses came and declared that he had effected the sale while in a sound state of mind, and another pair came and declared that the sale was effected while he was in a state of lunacy. And R. Ashi said: Put two against two

 - (17) It may be replied.
 - (18) The scholars or experts who dealt with the case.
 - (19) And the forbidden relative was no more the wife of the deceased.
 - (20) It would be obvious, therefore, that the requirement of halizah was a mere restriction.
 - (21) The wife.
 - (22) The husband.
 - (23) The letter of divorce.
 - (24) Lit., ‘half on half’.
 - (25) The statement that she is divorced and not divorced.
 - (26) A priest must not marry or continue to live with a divorced woman.

(27) Git. 78a.

(28) Which shews that even in the case of divorce no preventive measure has been enacted.

(29) As two witnesses declare that the letter of divorce was nearer to the woman, and as evidence of two witnesses is Pentateuchally valid, the possibility that her rival is no more the rival of a forbidden relative must be taken into consideration, and she cannot be permitted to marry a stranger without previous halizah with the levir.

(30) One witness of which is contradicting the other.

(31) Hence, in the matter of betrothal, where the rival enjoyed the status of permissibility to the levir, the law that halizah is required in the case of such contradictory evidence could well be applied, since she cannot be deprived of her status by the evidence of the single witness who states that the token of betrothal was nearer to her. In the case of divorce, however, where the rival has the status of permissibility to marry any stranger, the law that halizah is required in the case of contradictory evidence of two single witnesses could not be applied. since the evidence of one witness is not sufficient to deprive her of that right. particularly as it can also be claimed that were she required to perform halizah she might be taken in levirate marriage also.

(32) Divorce and betrothal being mentioned side by side in this Mishnah.

(33) Had it been included in our Mishnah.

(34) Since the evidence of one pair would have been sufficient to confirm the rival in her status of permissibility to the levir. Hence, as levirate marriage was forbidden it cannot be a case of two groups of witnesses.

(35) The token of betrothal.

(36) Thus presenting a Pentateuchal doubt (cf. supra p. 195. n. 9).

(37) This, surely. might result in the breach of a Pentateuchal law!

(38) Why. then, even in the case of divorce itself, when the two groups of witnesses cancel each other, should the rival, who was hitherto in a state of permissibility to marry anyone. be required to perform halizah!

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 31b

and let the land remain in the possession of the lunatic! — Rather, said Abaye. Its friend telleth concerning it:¹ that which was taught in connection with betrothal² is also to be applied to divorce,³ and what was taught in connection with divorce⁴ is also to be applied to betrothal.

Said Raba to him: If its friend telleth concerning it' what was the object of stating THIS IS?⁵ -Rather, said Raba, whatever is applicable to betrothal⁶ is also to be applied to divorce, but certain points are applicable to divorce,⁷ which cannot be applied to betrothal. And THIS IS⁸ which was mentioned in the case of divorce is not to be taken literally. as THIS IS was used in connection with betrothal⁹ only because it was also used in connection with divorce.

What was THIS IS mentioned in connection with betrothal meant to exclude? — To exclude the question of date which is inapplicable to betrothal.¹⁰ And wherefore was no date ordained to be entered in [documents of] betrothal? This¹¹ may well be satisfactorily explained according to him who holds [that the date is required In a letter of divorce]¹² on account of the usufruct,¹³ since a betrothed woman has no [need to reclaim] usufruct —¹⁴ According to him, however, who holds [that it¹⁵ was ordained] on account of one's sister's daughter.¹⁶ the insertion of a date should have been ordained [in the case of betrothal also]¹⁷ — Since some men betroth with money¹⁸ and others betroth with a document the Rabbis did not ordain the inclusion of a date.

Said R. Aha son of R. Joseph to R. Ashi: What about the case of a slave of whom some acquire possession by means of money and others by means of a deed, yet the inclusion of a date has nevertheless been ordained by the Rabbis! — In that case¹⁹ acquisition is generally by means of a deed; here,²⁰ it is generally by means of money. If you prefer I might say: Because it is impossible.²¹ For how should one proceed? Were it²² to be left with her, she might erase it.²³ Were it²² to be left with him, it might happen that the betrothed might be his sister's daughter and he would shield her.²⁴ Were it to be left with the witnesses-well, if they remember²⁵ they could come and tender their evidence;²⁶ and if they do not,²⁷ they may sometimes consult the document and then come and tender evidence, while the All Merciful said, 'out of their mouth'²⁸ but not out of their writing. If so, let the same argument²⁹ be applied to divorce also! — There,³⁰ it³¹ comes to save her,³² here,³³ it³¹ comes to condemn her.³⁴

MISHNAH. IN THE CASE WHERE THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO THREE WOMEN WHO WERE STRANGERS [TO ONE ANOTHER]. AND ONE OF THEM HAVING DIED³⁵ THE SECOND BROTHER ADDRESSED TO HER³⁶ A MA'AMAR³⁷ AND DIED, BEHOLD, THESE³⁸ MUST PERFORM HALIZAH³⁹ BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE; FOR IT IS SAID. AND ONE OF THEM DIED [ETC.] HER HUSBAND'S BROTHER SHALL GO IN UNTO HER.⁴⁰ ONLY SHE WHO IS BOUND TO ONE LEVIR⁴¹ BUT NOT SHE WHO IS BOUND TO TWO LEVIRS.⁴² R. SIMEON SAID: HE MAY TAKE IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WHICHEVER OF THESE HE WISHES⁴³ AND THEN PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE OTHER.⁴⁴

GEMARA. If, however, the levirate bond with two levirs⁴⁵ is Pentateuchal,⁴⁶ even halizah should not be required! — But it⁴⁷ is only Rabbinical,⁴⁸ a preventive measure having been enacted against the possible assumption that two sisters-in-law coming from the same house⁴⁹ may both be taken in levirate marriage. Then let one be taken in levirate marriage and the other be required to perform halizah! — A preventive measure has been enacted against the possible assumption that one house was partially built and partially pulled down.¹ Well, let the assumption be made!² — Had he first contracted the levirate marriage and then participated in the halizah, no objection could be raised —³ The preventive measure, however, has been enacted against the possibility of his participating in the halizah first and contracting the levirate marriage afterwards and thus placing himself under the prohibition of That doth not build up,⁴ the All Merciful having said, 'Since he had not built⁵ he must never again build'.⁶

Raba said: If he⁷ gave a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar, her rival⁸ is permitted;⁹ but she herself is forbidden, because she might be mistaken for one who is the holder of a letter of divorce.¹⁰ Others say that Raba said: If he¹¹ gave a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar even she herself becomes permitted.¹² What is the reason? — Because what he has done to her he has taken back.¹³

MISHNAH. IF TWO BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, AND ONE OF THE BROTHERS DIED, AND AFTERWARDS THE WIFE OF THE SECOND BROTHER DIED, BEHOLD, SHE¹⁴ IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM¹⁵ FOREVER, SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT.¹⁶ GEMARA. Is not this obvious? If there,¹⁷ where she¹⁸ was not entirely excluded from that house¹⁹ it has been said, 'No',²⁰ how much more so here²¹ where the widow is completely excluded from that house!²² -The Tanna had taught first this,²¹ while the other²³ was regarded by him as a permissible case,²⁴ and so he permitted it —²⁵ Later, however, he came to regard it as a case that was to be forbidden;²⁶ and, as it was dear to him²⁷ he placed it first; while our Mishnah was allowed to remain in its original form.²⁸

Our Rabbis learned: If he²⁹ had intercourse with her,³⁰ he is guilty on account of both 'his brother's wife'³¹ and 'his wife's sister';³² so R. Jose. R. Simeon said: He is guilty on account of 'his brother's wife' only. But, surely, it was taught that R. Simeon said: He is guilty on account of 'his wife's sister' only! — This is no difficulty: There, it is a case where the surviving brother had married first³³ and the deceased had married afterwards;³⁴ here it is a case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother afterwards.³⁵ As to R. Simeon, in the case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother married afterwards, let her, since the prohibition of wife's sister cannot take effect, be permitted even to contract the levirate marriage! — R. Ashi replied: The prohibition of wife's sister remains suspended, and as soon as the prohibition of brother's wife is removed³⁶ the prohibition of wife's sister comes into force; hence It cannot be treated as non-existent.³⁷

Does, then, R. Jose hold the view that one prohibition may be imposed upon another? Surely, it was taught: A man who committed a transgression which involves two death penalties³⁸ is punished by the severer one. R. Jose said: He is to be dealt with in accordance with that prohibition which came into force first.³⁹ And it was taught: How is one to understand R. Jose's statement that sentence must be in accordance with the prohibition which came into force first? [If the woman was first] his mother-in-law⁴⁰ and then became also a married woman, he is to be sentenced for [an offence against] his mother-in-law; if she was first a married woman and then became his mother-in-law, he is to be sentenced for [an offence against] a married woman!⁴¹

(1) And the same procedure would unlawfully be followed in the case of two widows of the same brother.

(2) What objection can be raised against it?

(3) Lit., 'thus also', the assumption would not have mattered.

(4) אִשָּׁר לֹא יִבְנֶה Deut. XXV, 9.

(5) I.e., refused to marry his brother's widow, but participated in her halizah.

(6) Must never marry the other widow. The imperfect יִבְנֶה may be rendered as a past, present or future.

(7) The second brother who had addressed a ma'amar to the first brother's widow. V. our Mishnah.

(8) I.e., his first wife.

(9) To the third surviving brother if the second also died without issue. The two widows are no longer rivals since the divorce has annulled the ma'amar, and they, being the widows of two different brothers, are now coming from two different houses.

(10) . That was given to her in respect of the levirate bond as well as of the ma'amar, v. infra 52b. Such a sister-in-law is forbidden under the prohibition of 'That doth not build up (v. supra and notes 3, 4 and 5)' since in her case the levirate bond also had been severed.

(11) V. note 6.

(12) And she is thus subject to the third brother as the widow of the first.

(13) The ma'amar by which he bound her he has himself annulled.

(14) The widow.

(15) The surviving brother.

(16) Prior to his wife's death and after the death of her husband, however short that period may have been, she was forbidden to him as his wife's sister.

(17) The third Mishnah, on fol. 30a supra, where there were three brothers involved, two of whom were married to two sisters and one to a stranger.

(18) The widow of the first brother.

(19) For though she had been forbidden to the second brother, who was married to her sister, she was permitted to the third and she remained in the family.

(20) I.e., she has been forbidden to the second brother, after the death of the third brother who had married her, owing to the original prohibition which may have lasted one moment only. even after his wife (her sister) had died.

(21) Our Mishnah where only two brothers are involved.

(22) When her husband died there was not a single brother whom she was permitted to marry. What need, then, was there for our Mishnah?

(23) v. note 1.

(24) Since, there, she was not entirely forced out of the family.

(25) Hence he did not consider it necessary to enunciate It 10 a Mishnah.

(26) As, after all, in the case of the second brother, the levirate marriage was for a time forbidden to her.

(27) Owing to its novelty and its wider range.

(28) Lit. — 'did not move from its place'. Though in the presence of the other Mishnah it is indeed superfluous.

(29) The levir.

(30) The widow (v. our Mishnah), while his wife was still alive.

(31) Since she is exempt from the levirate marriage she is forbidden to the levir as any widow of a brother who has issue.

(32) So that if the offence was committed unwittingly he is liable to bring two sin-offerings.

(33) One of the sisters; and thus the prohibition of 'wife's sister' came into force first.

(34) The other sister. The added prohibition of 'brother's wife' could not take effect where one prohibition was already in force.

(35) Cf. previous two notes mutatis mutandis.

(36) יָרַב, lit., 'to split', hence removed'.

(37) Lit., 'it is not removed'. The levirate marriage is consequently forbidden.

(38) Intercourse, for instance, with a mother-in-law (which is punishable by burning) who was at the time a married woman (the penalty for which is strangulation).

(39) Tosef. Sanh. XII, Sanh. 81a.

(40) Having been a widow or divorcee at the time of his marriage.

(41) Though the penalty in this case (strangulation) is lighter than that for an offence against a mother-in-law (burning). This proves that one prohibition may not be imposed upon another. Had it been otherwise, the severer penalty should have been inflicted though the prohibition which had caused it came into force later.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 32b

— R. Abbahu replied: R. Jose admits¹ where the latter prohibition is of a wider range.²

This is satisfactory in the case where the surviving brother had married³ first and the deceased had married⁴ afterwards, since the prohibition, having been extended in the case of the brothers, had also been extended in his own case.⁵ What extension of the prohibition is there, however, where the deceased had married³ first⁶ and the surviving brother had married⁴ afterwards?⁷ And were you to reply: Because thereby⁸ he is forbidden to marry all the sisters,⁹ [it may be retorted that] such is only a comprehensive prohibition!¹⁰

The fact is, said Raba, he is deemed¹¹ to have committed two offences,¹² but is liable for one only.¹³

Similarly when Rabin came¹⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The offender is deemed¹¹ to have committed two offences, but he is only liable for one. What practical difference does this¹⁵ make?- That he must be buried among confirmed sinners.¹⁵

This¹⁶ is a question on which opinions differ. For It was stated: A common man¹⁷ who performed some Temple service on the Sabbath, is. R. Hiyya said, liable for two offences.' Bar Kappara said: He is only liable for one.¹⁸ R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath. 'By the Temple',¹⁹ [he exclaimed]. 'so have I heard from Rabbi:²⁰ two'! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi:²⁰ one'! R. Hiyya began to argue the point thus: Work on the Sabbath was forbidden to all [Israelites,] and when it was permitted in the [Sanctuary], it was permitted to the priests, hence it was permitted to the priests only, but not to common men. Here, therefore, is involved the offence of Temple service by a common man, and that of the desecration of the Sabbath. Bar Kappara began to argue his point thus: Work on the Sabbath was forbidden to all [Israelites]. but when it was permitted in the Sanctuary, it was permitted [to all], hence only the offence of Temple service by a common man is here involved.

A priest having a blemish who performed [some Temple] services²¹ while unclean is. R. Hiyya said, guilty of two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is guilty of one offence only. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi: two'! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple, thus have I heard from Rabbi: one'! R. Hiyya began to reason: [Temple service during one's] uncleanness was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary,²² it was permitted to priests who had no blemish — Hence it must have been permitted only to priests who had no blemish, but not to those who had. Consequently. both the offence of service being done by one with a blemish and that of service during one's uncleanness are here involved. Bar Kappara began to reason thus: [Temple service during] uncleanness was forbidden to all. When it was permitted at the Sanctuary.²³ was [universally] permitted.²⁴ Consequently. only one offence, that of service by one who had a blemish, is involved.

A common man who ate melikah²⁵ is. R. Hiyya said, guilty of two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is guilty only of one. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple. so I heard from Rabbi: two'! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple. so I heard from Rabbi: one'! R. Hiyya began to reason thus: Nebelah²⁶ was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary²⁷ it was permitted in the case of the priests. Hence it must be permitted to priests only and not to common men. Consequently. both the offence of consumption²⁸ by a common man, and that of melikah are here involved. Bar Kappara began to reason: Nebelah²⁶ was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary²⁷ it was [universally] permitted — Consequently. only the offence due to consumption²⁸ by a common man is here involved.

(1) That one prohibition may be imposed upon another.

(2) אסור מוסף lit., 'a prohibition which adds', i.e., one which causes an object (or a person) to be forbidden to others to whom it was not previously forbidden. Hence he admits the imposition of the prohibition of 'brother's wife' upon that of 'wife's sister', even where the latter prohibition was already in force, because the former, unlike the latter, is applicable not only to him alone but to the other brothers also. In the case, however, of a married woman who became his mother-in-law where the first prohibition was of a wider range (the woman being forbidden to all men except her husband) and the later one (forbidden to him only) of a restricted range, the second prohibition cannot be imposed upon the first. The reason why in the case of a mother-in-law who became a — married woman the sentence is to be that for an offence against a mother-in-law is not because the latter (which is of a wider range) cannot be imposed upon the former, but because wherever two penalties are to be inflicted the severer one (burning) supersedes the lighter one (strangulation).

(3) One of the sisters.

(4) The other sister.

(5) V. supra p. 202, n. 9.

(6) Bringing into force the prohibition of brother's wife which is applicable to all brothers.

(7) Adding the prohibition of wife's sister which, being applicable to himself only, is of a more restricted range, and cannot consequently be imposed on that of brother's wife, which preceded it.

(8) By marrying the other sister.

(9) While before this marriage the widow only was forbidden.

(10) אִיסוּר כּוֹלֵל lit., 'a prohibition which includes'. The additional prohibition includes the widow in the same manner only as it does the other sisters but, unlike an issur mosif (the prohibition of the wider range, v. supra p. 202, n. 9), it does not place any additional restriction as far as the widow herself is concerned upon any other men.

(11) Lit., 'I bring upon him'.

(12) I.e., in this sense only is R. Jose's statement, that he is guilty of two offences (supra 32a), to be understood.

(13) Because R. Jose. in fact, does not admit the imposition of one prohibition upon another.

(14) From Palestine to Babylon. (13) The fact that he is theoretically guilty of two offences.

(15) The Beth din had at its disposal two burial places, and offenders who were executed or died were buried in the one or the other according to the degree of their respective offences. (V. Sanh. 46a). The reference here will consequently be to an intentional transgression.

(16) Whether one act involving two transgressions is deemed to be one offence or two offences.

(17) זָר lit., 'a stranger', I.e., a non-priest.

(18) This is explained infra.

(19) Lit., 'the (Temple) service'.

(20) R. Judah the Prince, compiler of the Mishnah.

(21) Such as that connected with the rites of a congregational offering which may be performed in certain circumstances by priests (v. Yoma 6b). even when they are unclean, provided they are physically fit.

(22) Cf. previous note.

(23) v. p. 204, n' 7.

(24) Even to a priest afflicted with a blemish.

(25) מַלְיָקָה (rt. מַלְקָה 'to pinch'), applied to the meat, of a fowl whose head was 'pinched off', in accordance with Lev. I, 15.

(26) נְבֵלָה 'a corpse'. 'carrion', applied also to animals that have not been ritually slaughtered and the consumption of which is forbidden.

(27) Melikah being permitted to the priests.

(28) Of sacrificial meat.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 33a

What is the point at issue between them?¹ -R. Jose's view² with regard to a comprehensive prohibition.³ R. Hiyya is of the opinion that in the case of a comprehensive prohibition R. Jose deems the transgressor guilty of two offences,⁴ while Bar Kappara is of the opinion that he deems him guilty of one offence only.⁵ But what comprehensive prohibition. is here involved? In the case of a common man⁶ this⁷ may well be understood, since at first⁸ he was permitted to do ordinary work though forbidden to perform the Temple service, and when Sabbath came in, as he was now forbidden to do any other work,⁹ so he was also forbidden to perform the Temple service.¹⁰ [Similarly with a priest] who had a blemish,¹¹ since he was at first¹² permitted to eat [of sacrificial meat] though forbidden to perform the Temple service, now that he became defiled, as he was forbidden to eat of sacrificial meat¹³ so he was also forbidden to perform the Temple service.¹⁴ Mehkah, however, is only an illustration¹⁵ of prohibitions that set in simultaneously¹⁶ but not of a comprehensive prohibition!¹⁷ -Rather, the point at issue between them¹⁸ is that of simultaneous prohibitions' and R. Jose's view¹⁹ regarding them. R. Hiyya is of the opinion that in the case of simultaneous prohibitions R. Jose deems the transgressor guilty of two offences,²⁰ while Bar Kappara is of the opinion that he deems him guilty of one offence only.²¹ But how are here simultaneous prohibitions possible?²² — In the case of a common man who performed the Temple service on the Sabbath, when, for instance, he grew two hairs²³ on the Sabbath, so that the prohibitions of Temple service by a common man and of work on the Sabbath have simultaneously arisen.²⁴ [In the case of a priest] who had a blemish, also, when, for instance, he grew two hairs,²³ while he was unclean, so that [his disability as] a man with a blemish and his uncleanness²⁵ have simultaneously arisen.²⁶ Or else, if a man cut his finger with an unclean knife.²⁷

Now according to [the statement of] R. Hiyya it is quite possible to explain²⁸ that he²⁹ was taught³⁰ in accordance with the view of R. Jose, and that Bar Kappara was taught in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.³¹ According to [the statement of] Bar Kappara, however,³² did R. Hiyya swear falsely?³³ -Rather, the question at issue between them³⁴ is that of simultaneous prohibitions, and the view of R. Simeon³⁵ on the subject.

One can well understand why R. Hiyya took an oath. He did it in order to weaken the force³⁶ of R. Simeon's view.³⁷ What need, however, was there for Bar Kappara to take an oath? — This is a difficulty.

Now according to [the statement of] Bar Kappara, it is possible to explain³⁸ that when Rabbi taught him he was enunciating the opinion of R. Simeon,³⁹ and that when he taught R. Hiyya he was enunciating the opinion of R. Jose.⁴⁰ According to [the statement] of R. Hiyya, however,⁴¹ did Bar Kappara⁴² tell a lie?⁴³ R. Hiyya can answer you:⁴⁴ When Rabbi taught him, he taught him two instances⁴⁵ only where the transgressor is exempt⁴⁶

(1) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(2) Who maintains supra that in certain circumstances a prohibition may be imposed upon a prohibition which is already in force.

(3) אִיסוּר כּוֹלֵל Cf. supra p. 203. n. 8.

(4) Nebelah and melikah. V. supra. no. 3 and 4.

(5) And R. Jose's statement supra that the transgressor is guilty of two offences is, according to Bar Kappara, applicable only where the surviving brother had married one of the sisters before the deceased had married the other. (V. supra p. 203. nn. 1ff and relevant text). R. Simeon's statement, (supra 32a) that 'he is guilty on account of brother's wife only', which has been interpreted as referring to the case where the deceased had married prior to the surviving brother, is according to Bar Kappara, to be deleted from the Baraita.

(6) Who performed some Temple service on the Sabbath.

(7) That a comprehensive prohibition is involved.

(8) Before the Sabbath.

(9) Owing to Sabbath.

(10) The prohibition being 'comprehensive' in that it included both ordinary work and Temple service. It is not a 'prohibition of a wider range' since the prohibition of Temple service itself was in no way extended.

(11) Cf. supra, n. 2.

(12) Prior to his defilement.

(13) Owing to his uncleanness.

(14) The prohibition comprehending the Temple service as well as the consumption of sacrificial meat. Cf. supra. n' 5'

(15) Lit., 'it is found'.

(16) בַּת אֶחָת 'at once', 'at the same moment'. Before the head of the fowl was pinched off there was only the prohibition of nebelah (v. Glos.) which included also priests. The two prohibitions of nebelah and melikah as far as common men are concerned had set in simultaneously at the moment of the pinching off of the fowl's head.

(17) Since both have been simultaneous. How then could the dispute on melikah be dependent on the principle of a 'comprehensive prohibition'?

(18) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(19) V. supra p. 205. n. 8.

(20) R. Jose's statement (supra 32a). that the transgressor is guilty of the offences of (a) brother's wife and (b) wife's sister, is taken to refer to the case where the two brothers appointed an agent to betroth for them the two sisters, who in turn appointed an agent to act on their behalf. At the moment the agents carried out their mission both prohibitions had set in.

(21) Cf. supra p. 205, n. 11.

(22) As has been shewn, the instances mentioned, with the exception of melikah, are 'comprehensive prohibitions!'

(23) The marks of puberty.

(24) In this particular case, since prior to the manifestation of the marks of puberty he was considered a minor, and not subject to legal penalties.

(25) I.e., his liability to penalties for performing Temple service under such conditions.

(26) Cf. note 4, mutatis mutandis.

(27) Which act caused both the blemish and the uncleanness to set in at the very same instant.

(28) To reconcile the contradictory statements made by R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara both in the name of Rabbi.

(29) R. Hiyya.

(30) By Rabbi. Lit., 'when he taught him (it was)'.

(31) And that Bar Kappara may have misunderstood Rabbi to give him the opinion of R. Jose.

(32) Who asserts that Rabbi recognizes one offence only according to R. Jose.

(33) If R. Jose allows the lighter punishment, how much more so R. Simeon. If R. Hiyya. then, made the statement that Rabbi taught him that a double offence had been committed he could not have spoken the truth since according to Bar Kappara no authority ever held such a view.

(34) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(35) R. Hiyya maintains that R. Simeon subjected the transgression to one offence only in the case of a 'comprehensive prohibition'; but that in a 'simultaneous prohibition' he admits, like R. Jose, a double offence. Bar Kappara, on the other hand, maintains that R. Simeon disagrees with R. Jose even in regard to simultaneous prohibitions, always admitting one offence only.

(36) By his oath he affirmed that R. Simeon is in favour of the lighter course only in the case of a 'comprehensive prohibition' but not in that of 'simultaneous prohibitions'.

(37) Which is known to favour the lighter penalty.

(38) I.e., to reconcile the contradictory statements. v. supra, p. 207. n. 8.

(39) Favouring the lighter penalty.

(40) Who imposes the heavier penalty; but R. Hiyya mistook him to be reporting R. Simeon and thus the discrepancy arose.

(41) Who submitted that the heavier penalty was imposed even by R. Simeon, much more so by R. Jose.

(42) Who submitted that Rabbi taught him that the lighter penalty only was to be imposed.

(43) He could not have spoken the truth if R. Hiyya's report was at all correct. v. note 6.

(44) Bar Kappara did not tell a lie.

(45) The first two—that of a non-priest who performed the Temple service on the Sabbath and that of a priest who had a blemish and performed the Temple service while he was unclean.

(46) From one of the penalties.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 33b

. and [thereby he, in fact.] taught him the law of comprehensive prohibition¹ in accordance with the view of R. Simeon. Bar Kappara. however, considered the case of a common man who ate melikah and, as it seemed to be similar to the others, he treated it like the others.² When, later, he examined it³ and found it to be possible only as a case of simultaneity of prohibitions. he imagined that as this one³ is a case of simultaneity so are also the others cases of simultaneity;⁴ and as the others are cases where the transgressor is exempt⁵ so [he assumed] is this also one in which the transgressor is exempt.⁵

An objection was raised: If a common man performed some Temple service on the Sabbath, or if a priest having a blemish performed Temple service while he was levitically unclean, the offences of service by a common man and the desecration of the Sabbath or those of service by a man with a blemish and levitical uncleanness are here respectively involved. These are the words of R. Jose. R. Simeon who said: Only the offence of service by a common man or that of service by a man with a blemish respectively is here involved.⁶ [The case of] melikah, however, is here omitted.⁷ Now, on account of whom was it omitted?⁸ If it be suggested, on account of R. Jose⁹ [it may be retorted], if¹⁰ R. Jose subjects one to two penalties where the prohibition is comprehensive, how much more so¹¹ when it is simultaneous. Consequently It must have been¹² on account of R. Simeon¹³ who thus grants exemption only where the prohibition is comprehensive¹⁴ but imposes both penalties when the prohibitions are simultaneous —¹⁵ This, then, is a refutation against Bar Kappara!¹⁶ This is indeed a refutation.

‘If a common man performed some Temple service on the Sabbath’. Of what nature? If slaughtering, slaughtering is permitted by a common man.¹⁷ If reception¹⁸ or carriage.¹⁹ this involves only a mere movement.²⁰ If burning,²¹ surely R. Jose said, ‘The prohibition of kindling a fire [on the Sabbath]²² was mentioned separately²³ in order to [indicate that its transgression is] a prohibition only’!²⁴ — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: The slaughtering of the bullock of the High Priest,²⁵ and in accordance with the view of him who stated that the slaughtering of the bullock of the High priest on the Day of Atonement by a common man Is Invalid.²⁶ If so, what reason is there for mentioning a common man? Even a common priest would have been equally forbidden!²⁷ -What was meant was one who is a common man as far as It Is concerned.²⁸

R. Ashi demurred: Was any mention made of sin-offerings or of negative precepts?²⁹ Surely, only forbidden acts were spoken of!³⁰ — The point at issue is whether he is to be buried among confirmed sinners.³¹

MISHNAH. IF TWO MEN BETROTHED TWO WOMEN, AND AS THESE WERE ENTERING INTO THE BRIDAL CHAMBER, THEY EXCHANGED THE ONE FOR THE OTHER, BEHOLD, THEY³² ARE GUILTY OF AN OFFENCE AGAINST A MARRIED WOMAN. IF THEY³² WERE BROTHERS THEY ARE GUILTY ALSO OF AN OFFENCE AGAINST A BROTHER'S WIFE. IF [THE BETROTHED WOMEN] WERE SISTERS, THEY³³ ARE GUILTY ALSO ON ACCOUNT OF THE PROHIBITION, [AND THOU SHALT NOT TAKE] A WOMAN TO HER Sister.³⁴ IF THESE³⁵ WERE MENSTRUANTS [THEY³³ ARE GUILTY ALSO] ON ACCOUNT OF [THE LAW OF THE] MENSTRUANT.³⁶

THEY³⁵ MUST BE KEPT APART³⁷ FOR THREE MONTHS, SINCE IT IS POSSIBLE THAT THEY ARE PREGNANT.³⁸ IF THEY³⁵ WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN, THEY MAY BE RESTORED³⁹ AT ONCE. IF THEY³⁵ WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN THEY ARE DISQUALIFIED FROM THE PRIESTHOOD.⁴⁰

GEMARA. THEY EXCHANGED?⁴¹ Are we discussing wicked men!⁴² Furthermore, [there is the difficulty] of the statement made by⁴³ R. Hiyya. that⁴⁴ sixteen sin-offerings⁴⁵ are here [involved]. Is any sacrifice brought⁴⁶ where the act⁴⁷ was wilful?⁴⁸ Rab Judah replied: Read THEY WERE EXCHANGED.⁴⁹ This⁵⁰ may also be proved by logical reasoning. For in the latter clause it was stated, IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN THEY MAY BE RESTORED AT ONCE. Now, if the act⁴⁷ had been willful, would [this⁵¹ have been] permitted! — This is no difficulty. The seduction of a minor is deemed to be an outrage, and an outraged woman is permitted to an Israelite.⁴² But, then, what of that which is stated, that THEY MUST BE KEPT

APART FOR THREE MONTHS, SINCE IT IS POSSIBLE THAT THEY ARE PREGNANT, implying that if they were not pregnant they would be permitted. Now if the act⁵² had been wilful would she be permitted! Consequently⁵³ the reading must have been⁵⁴ THEY WERE EXCHANGED.⁵⁵ This may be taken as proved.

- (1) Though when the prohibitions in these cases should happen to be simultaneous, the double penalty would undoubtedly be imposed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 34a

And who is this Tanna¹ that admits the force² of a 'comprehensive prohibition', a 'prohibition of a wider range' and 'simultaneous prohibitions'?³ -Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: It is R. Meir; for we learnt:⁴ A man may sometimes consume one piece of food⁵ and incur thereby the penalty of four sin-offerings and one guilt-offering. [If. e.g., a man levitically] unclean ate suet⁶ that remained over from holy sacrifices,⁷ on the Day of Atonement⁸ R. Meir said: If this happened on⁹ the Sabbath and [the consumer] carried out [the suet] in his mouth, liability is incurred [for this act¹⁰ also].¹¹ They said to him: This¹⁰ is an offence of a different character.¹²

Whose view, however, IS R. Meir¹³ following? If he follows R. Joshua.¹⁴ surely the latter had said that he who made a mistake in respect of a commandment¹⁵ is exonerated!¹⁶ — Rather he follows the view of R. Eliezer.¹⁷ If you prefer I might say: He may, in fact, follow the view of R. Joshua, for R. Joshua's statement, that he who made a mistake in respect of a commandment is exonerated, may only be applicable to the case of the children,¹⁸ where one is pressed for time.¹⁹ but not in such a case as this,²⁰ where time is not pressing.²¹

What about terumah,²² where one is not pressed for time, and he²³ nevertheless exonerates! For we learnt: In the case of a priest who was In the habit of eating terumah and it then transpired that he was the son of a divorced woman or of a haluzah,²² R. Eliezer imposes payment of the principal and of a fifth,²⁴ and R. Joshua exonerates!²⁵ — Surely, in relation to this it was stated that R. Bibi b. Abaye said: We are here speaking of terumah²⁶ on the Eve of Passover when time is pressing.²⁷ If you prefer I might say: [Our Mishnah speaks] of simultaneous prohibitions, and may represent even the View of R. Simeon.²⁸

All these,²⁹ it may well be conceded, may occur [simultaneously] where [the brothers] appointed an agent³⁰ and [the sisters also] appointed an agent³¹ and one agent met the other;³² but how could such [simultaneity] occur with menstruation?³³ - R. Amram in the name of Rab replied: When the women's menstrual discharge continued from [the men's] thirteenth, until after their thirteenth [birthday], when these become subject to legal punishments; and from their own twelfth, until after their twelfth [birthday], when they themselves become subject to punishments.³⁴

THEY MUST BE KEPT APART. Surely, no woman conceives from the first contact.³⁵ R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abuha: Where contact was repeated. Why, then, did R.

Hiyya state, 'Behold sixteen offerings are here involved',³⁶ when, in fact,³⁷ there should be thirty-two?³⁸ And according to your line of reasoning, following the opinion of R. Eliezer who deems they are guilty for every sexual effort, are there not more?³⁹ But [your own answer would be] that he only takes into consideration the first effort. Well, here also, only the first contact is taken into consideration.

Said Raba to R. Nahman:

(1) In our Mishnah.

(2) Lit., 'to whom there is'.

(3) Wherever they can all be applied to the same person. If, e.g., A the brother of B betrothed C the sister of D, C is forbidden to B as 'his brother's wife' and as 'a married woman', both prohibitions having come into force simultaneously. If B subsequently betrothed D, her sister C becomes forbidden to him, by the comprehensive prohibition of 'his wife's sister', (comprehending all the sisters of D inclusive of C). When C becomes a menstruant she is forbidden to B as a menstruant also, this last being a prohibition of a wider range extending as it does the prohibition of the woman to A also.

(4) Cur. edd., 'it was taught'.

(5) Lit., 'there is one eating'.

(6) Forbidden fat.

(7) Nothar, v. Glos.

(8) The four sin-offerings are due for the eating of (a) holy food while the man is levitically unclean, (b) forbidden fat, (c) nothar and (d) food on the Day of Atonement; while the guilt-offering (asham me'loth) is incurred for the benefit the consumer (even though he were a priest) had from holy things which were to be burnt on the altar.

(9) Lit., 'it was'.

(10) Carrying on the Sabbath.

(11) Thus it is shewn that R. Meir recognizes the validity of the three kinds of prohibition: When the animal was consecrated, the prohibition of having any benefit from any part of it has been added to that of eating its suet (wider range). and when a piece of the suet became nothar (since it is thereby forbidden to be offered up on the altar, which is an added restriction) the prohibition of nothar has also been imposed in respect of its consumption by the priests (again wider range). When the priest becomes unclean and is consequently forbidden to consume any holy meat he is also forbidden to consume the nothar (comprehensive), and with the advent of the Day of Atonement the prohibition of the consumption of food generally on that day falls also on the nothar (again comprehensive). Finally, at the moment Sabbath sets in two more prohibitions are imposed (simultaneous) that of carrying on the Sabbath and that of eating on the Day of Atonement (Rashi) or those of carrying on the Sabbath and on the Day of Atonement (Tosaf., s.v. והוצתא a.I.).

(12) Lit., 'it is not from the (same) designation'. Shab. 102a, Shebu. 24b, Ker. 13b.

(13) Who, as has been shown, is represented by the Tanna of our Mishnah who admits the imposition of one prohibition upon another even where the performance of a commandment (e.g. marriage) was intended.

(14) Who is at variance on a similar question with R. Eliezer (Shab. 1370). Both R. Joshua and R. Eliezer were R. Meir's teachers.

(15) I.e., if his intention was to fulfil a precept and, through an error, his act resulted in a transgression. Cf. the case in our Mishnah and v. supra n. 1 —

(16) While our Mishnah declares the men guilty!

(17) v. supra. n. 2.

(34) A male becomes legally liable to punishments on the termination of his thirteenth, and a female on that of her twelfth year of age. If the respective agents of the two parties who were of the same age to a day, met sometime prior to the conclusion of the last day of the year (twelfth of the females and thirteenth of the males), and arranged for the betrothals to take effect on the following day when both parties become 'of age' (as otherwise the betrothals would not be valid) the betrothals and the prohibitions simultaneously come into force.

Surely Tamar¹ conceived from a first contact! The other answered him: Tamar exercised friction with her finger;² for R. Isaac said: All women of the house of Rabbi who exercise friction³ are designated Tamar. And why are they designated Tamar? — Because Tamar exercised friction with her finger. But were there not Er and Onan?⁴ — Er and Onan indulged in unnatural intercourse.

An objection was raised: During all the twenty-four months⁵ one may thresh within and winnow without;⁶ these are the words of R. Eliezer. The others said to him: Such actions are only like the practice of Er and Onan!⁷ -Like the practice of Er and Onan, and yet not [exactly] like the practice of Er and Onan: 'Like the practice of Er and Onan', for it is written in Scripture, And it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilt it on the ground;⁸ and 'not [exactly] like the practice of Er and Onan', for whereas there it was an unnatural act, here it is done in the natural way.

[The source for] Onan's [guilt] may well be traced, for it is written in Scripture, That he spilt it on the ground;⁸ whence however, [that of] Er?-R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, And He slew him also,⁹ he also died of the same death.¹⁰

[The reason for] Onan's [action] may well be understood, because he knew That the seed would not be his;⁸ but why did Er act in such a manner? — In order that she might not conceive and thus lose some of her beauty.

Our Rabbis taught [The woman also] with whom [a man shall lie],¹¹ excludes a bride;¹² so R. Judah. But the Sages say: This excludes unnatural intercourse.

Said Hon son of R. Nahman to R. Nahman: Does this imply that R. Judah is of the opinion that the Torah had consideration for the bride's make-up?¹³ — The other replied: Because no woman conceives from her first contact —¹⁴ On what principle do they differ? — The Rabbis are of opinion that 'carnally'¹¹ excludes the first stage of contact, and 'with whom'¹¹ excludes unnatural intercourse; but R. Judah is of the opinion that the exclusion of unnatural intercourse and the first stage of contact may be derived from 'carnally'.¹¹ while 'with whom'¹¹ excludes a bride.

When Rabin came¹⁵ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: A woman who waited ten years after [separation from] her husband, and then remarried, would bear children no more. Said R. Nahman: This was stated only in respect of one who had no Intention of remarrying: if, however, one's intention was to marry again she may conceive.

Raba said to R. Hisda's daughter:¹⁶ The Rabbis are talking about you. She answered him: I had my mind on you.

A woman once appeared before R. Joseph, and said to him: Master, I remained unmarried after [the death of] my husband for ten years and now I gave birth to a child — He said to her: My daughter, do not discredit the words of the Sages. She thereupon confessed, 'I had intercourse with a heathen'.¹⁷

Samuel said: All these women,¹⁸ with the exception of a proselyte and an emancipated slave who were minors, must wait three months.¹⁹ An Israelitish minor, however, must wait three months. But how [was she separated]?²⁰ If by a declaration of refusal,²¹ surely. Samuel said that she²² need not wait!²³ And if by a letter of divorce, surely Samuel has already stated this once! For Samuel said: If she' formally refused him²¹ she need not wait three months; if he gave her a letter of divorce she must wait three months!²⁴ -[It²⁵ was] rather in respect of unlawful intercourse, the Rabbis having made the provision¹ in the case of a minor² as a precaution against one who is of age.³ But is provision made in the case of a minor as a precaution against one who is of age? Surely we learnt, IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN THEY MAY BE RESTORED AT ONCE! — R. Giddal replied: This⁴ was a special ruling.⁵ Does this imply that such a case had actually occurred!⁶ — Rather [this is the meaning:] It⁴ was like a special ruling, since the exchange of brides is an unusual occurrence.⁷

[Others adopt] a different reading: Samuel said: All these women,⁸ with the exception of a proselyte and an emancipated slave who were of age. must wait three months.⁹ An Israelitish minor, however, need not wait three months. But how [was she separated]? If by a declaration of refusal, Surely Samuel has already stated this one! And if by a letter of divorce, Samuel surely stated that she' must wait! For Samuel said: If she exercise her right of refusal against him, she need not wait three months; if he gave her a letter of divorce she must wait three months! [It was] rather in respect of harlotry. and harlotry with a minor⁸ an unusual occurrence.⁷

Let, however, a preventive measure¹⁰ be made in respect of a proselyte and an emancipated slave with whom harlotry is not unusual! — He holds the same view as R. Jose. For it was taught: Proselytes,¹¹ captives or slaves¹¹ who were redeemed, or embraced the Jewish faith or were emancipated, must wait three months; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage.¹² Rabbah said: What is R. Jose's reason? He is of the opinion that a woman who plays the harlot makes use of an absorbent in order to prevent conception.¹²

Said Abaye to him: This¹³ is intelligible in the case of a proselyte; as her intention is to embrace the Jewish faith she is careful¹⁴ in order to know the distinction between the seed that was sown in holiness and the seed that was sown in unholiness. It¹³ is also [intelligible In the case of] a captive and a slave; since on hearing from their masters¹⁵ they exercise care.¹⁶ How is this¹³ to be applied. however, in the case of one who is liberated through the loss of a tooth or an eye?¹⁷ And were you to suggest that wherever something unexpected happens¹⁸ R. Jose admits,¹⁹ surely it was taught:²⁰ A woman who had been outraged or seduced must wait three months; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage!²¹ — Rather, said Abaye,²² a woman playing the harlot turns over In order to prevent conception.²³ And the other?²⁴ -There is the apprehension that she might not have turned over properly.²⁵

IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN etc. Only²⁶ priestly women but not an Israelitish woman?²⁷ -Read, 'If they were the wives of priests'.²⁸ Only 'priests' wives,²⁹ but not Israelites' wives?³⁰ Surely R. Amram said, 'The following statement was made to us by R. Shesheth who threw light on the subject³¹ from our Mishnah:³² An Israelite's wife³³ who was outraged, though she is permitted to her husband, is disqualified from the priesthood.³⁴ — Raba replied: It is this that was meant:³⁵ IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN³⁶ married to Israelites THEY ARE DISQUALIFIED from eating terumah at their parents' home.³⁷ [

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE¹ WHO WAS SUBSEQUENTLY FOUND TO BE PREGNANT, AND SHE GAVE BIRTH, HE IS, WHEREVER THE CHILD IS VIABLE,² PERMITTED TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES,³ AND HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD;⁴ BUT WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE,⁵ THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST.

IF A LEVIR MARRIED HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE¹ WHO IS FOUND TO HAVE BEEN PREGNANT,⁶ AND SHE GAVE BIRTH, HE, WHEREVER THE CHILD IS VIABLE, MUST⁷ DIVORCE HER. AND BOTH ARE UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF BRINGING AN OFFERING;⁸ BUT IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE, HE MAY RETAIN HER. IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD OF THE FIRST [HUSBAND] OR A SEVEN-MONTHS CHILD OF THE SECOND [HUSBAND]. SHE MUST BE DIVORCED, AND

THE CHILD IS LEGITIMATE,⁹ BUT THEY ARE UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF AN ASHAM TALUI.¹⁰ GEMARA. It was stated: In the case of a levir who participated In halizah with a pregnant woman who subsequently miscarried, R. Johanan said, She need not perform the halizah with the brothers; and Resh Lakish said: She must perform halizah with the brothers. 'R. Johanan said, She need not perform halizah with the brothers', because the halizah of a pregnant woman¹¹ is deemed to be proper halizah and marital contact with a pregnant woman is deemed to be proper marriage.¹² 'Resh Lakish said: She must perform halizah with the brothers', because the halizah with a pregnant woman is not deemed to be a proper halizah, nor is marital contact with a pregnant woman deemed to be a proper marriage. On what principle do they¹³ differ? — If you wish I might say: In the interpretation of a Scriptural text. And if you prefer I might say: On a logical point. 'If you wish I might say: In the interpretation of a Scriptural text';¹⁴ R. Johanan is of the opinion that the All Merciful said, And have no child,¹⁵ and this man¹⁶ surely has none; while Resh Lakish is of the opinion that And have no [en lo] child¹⁷ implies. 'Hold an inquiry¹⁸ concerning him'.¹⁹ 'And If you prefer I might say: On a logical point'; R. Johanan argues: Had Elijah²⁰ appeared and announced that the woman would miscarry. would she not have been subject to halizah or levirate marriage?²¹ Now also²² the fact is established retrospectively. And Resh Lakish maintains that a fact cannot be said to have been established retrospectively.

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST. This is quite correct according to my view: Since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a proper halizah he, consequently, renders her unfit. According to you, however, who maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not proper halizah, why does he render her unfit to marry a priest? — The other answered him: It²³ is only Rabbinical and it is a mere restriction.²⁴

Others say: Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a proper halizah it was justly stated as a restriction,²⁵ that HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST but not that 'she requires no halizah from the brothers';²⁶ according to you, however,²⁷ it should have been stated that 'she requires no halizah from the brothers'!²⁸ — The other replied: It should have been indeed;²⁹ only because in the first clause it was stated, HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT³⁰ it was also³¹ stated in the latter clause, HE RENDERS HER UNFIT.³²

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE, HE MAY RETAIN HER. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a proper halizah and marital contact³³ with a pregnant woman is a proper marriage. it was rightly stated HE MAY RETAIN HER.³⁴ According to you, however, who maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a valid halizah and the marital contact³⁵ with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, it should have been stated, 'He must repeat contact and only then he may retain her'! — The meaning of HE MAY RETAIN HER is that he must repeat contact and then HE MAY RETAIN HER, but not otherwise.³⁶

Others say: Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE HE MAY RETAIN HER. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a valid halizah and marital contact with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, it was rightly stated HE MAY RETAIN HER, [meaning that] he must repeat contact and then HE MAY RETAIN HER, since otherwise this³⁷ would not have been permitted.³⁸ According to you,³⁹ however, it should have been stated, 'If he wishes he may divorce her and if he prefers he may continue to live with her'! — It should have been indeed;⁴⁰ only because in the earlier clause it was stated HE MUST DIVORCE HER, it was also stated in the latter clause HE MAY RETAIN HER.

An objection was raised: 'Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, since it is possible that the child would be viable'. On the contrary! If the child were viable her rival would be exempt!⁴¹ — But read: Since it is possible that the child would not be viable.⁴² Now, if it could be imagined that marital contact with a pregnant woman is to be regarded as a valid marriage, why may not her rival be married? She should be exempted through the marital contact of her associate! — Abaye replied: Both⁴³ agree that by marital contact she does not exempt [her rival]; they differ only on the question of halizah. R. Johanan is of the opinion that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a valid halizah, though marital contact with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, while Resh Lakish is of the opinion that marital contact with a pregnant woman is no valid marriage, nor is halizah with a pregnant woman a valid halizah. Said Raba: Whatever is your opinion? If marital contact with a pregnant woman is a valid marriage, the halizah of a pregnant woman should be a valid halizah; or if marital contact with a pregnant woman is no valid marriage, the halizah of a pregnant woman also should be no proper halizah; for we have an established rule that whosoever is subject to the obligation of levirate marriage is also subject to halizah, and whosoever is not subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage is not subject to halizah!¹ Rather, said Raba, it is this that was meant:² Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, because it is possible that the child would be viable, and marital contact with a pregnant woman is no proper marriage nor is the halizah of a pregnant woman proper halizah, while the child does not bring exemption until he is actually born.³

It was taught in agreement with the view of Raba: Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, because it is possible that the child would be viable, and neither marital contact nor halizah but only the child brings exemption; and the child brings exemption only after he is born.

The reason, then,⁴ is because it is possible that the child might be viable, but where the child is not viable her rival is exempt;⁵ does this imply an objection against Resh Lakish?⁶ — Resh Lakish can answer you [that the Baraitha] is thus to be interpreted:⁷ Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married; since it is possible that the child may not be viable, and the halizah of a pregnant woman is no valid halizah nor is the marital contact with a pregnant woman a proper marriage; and were you to suggest that one should be guided by the majority of women, and the majority of women bear healthy children, [it could be retorted that] a child brings no exemption until he is actually born.⁸

Said R. Eleazar: Is it possible that there should exist [such a ruling as] that of Resh Lakish and that we should not have learnt it in a Mishnah? When he went out he carefully considered the matter and found one. For we learned: If people came to a woman whose husband and rival had gone to a country beyond the sea and told her, ‘Your husband is dead’,⁹ she may neither be married¹⁰ nor be taken in levirate marriage¹¹ until she has ascertained whether her rival¹² is pregnant.¹³ One can well understand why she may not be taken in levirate marriage, since it is possible that the child¹⁴ may be viable and [the levir] would thus¹⁵ infringe the Pentateuchal prohibition against [marrying] a brother's wife: but why should she not perform the halizah? It is possible to understand the reason why she must not perform the halizah within the nine months¹⁶ and also contract a marriage within nine months,¹⁶ since such [procedure would naturally be forbidden on account of the] doubt;¹⁷ but let her perform the halizah within the nine months¹⁶ and be married after the nine months!¹⁸ — But even in accordance with your view,¹⁹ let her perform the halizah and be married after the nine months!²⁰ The fact, however, is that nothing may be inferred from this;²¹ for both Abaye b. Abin²² and R. Hinena b. Abin²² stated:²³ It is possible that the child²⁴ might be viable²⁵ and you would then subject her to the necessity of an announcement²⁶ in respect of the priesthood.²⁷ — Well, let her be subjected!²⁸ — It may happen that someone would be present at the halizah and not at the announcement,²⁶ and would form the opinion that a haluzah was permitted to a priest.

Said Abaye to him: Was it stated, ‘She shall neither perform halizah nor be taken in levirate marriage’? The statement, surely, was, ‘She shall neither be married nor be taken in levirate marriage’²⁹ without halizah; if halizah, however, had been performed³⁰ she would indeed have been permitted!³¹

It was taught in agreement with Resh Lakish: Where a levir participated in the halizah with a pregnant woman who subsequently miscarried, she is required to perform halizah with the brothers.

Raba said: The law is in accordance with the views of Resh

!!

If on the other hand, a viable child had been born, exemption took effect at his birth, and subsequent marriage would consequently be lawful. As the Mishnah, however, forbids halizah and marriage even after the nine months, unless definite information about the rival had been received, it must be assumed to represent the view of Resh Lakish who deems a halizah invalid wherever the child is not viable and the ceremony took place during pregnancy. Lakish in the following three rulings.³² One is the ruling just spoken of. Another is his ruling in connection with the following Mishnah:³³ If a man³⁴ distributed his property verbally³⁵ and gave to one [son] more and to another less, or if he assigned to the firstborn a share equal to that of his brothers,³⁶ his arrangements are valid.³⁷ If, however, he said, ‘As an inheritance’,³⁸ his instructions are disregarded.³⁹ If he wrote⁴⁰ either at the beginning or the end or the middle, ‘as a gift’,⁴¹ his instructions are valid.⁴²

- (19) That halizah is forbidden because of the possibility that the rival was pregnant at the time halizah took place.

- (23) The reason why no halizah may take place.
- (24) Of the rival.
- (25) The birth of a viable child renders the halizah invalid and the woman is consequently permitted to marry a priest.
- (26) That the halizah was unnecessary and therefore invalid.
- (27) V. supra n. 7.
- (28) Lit., 'required'.
- (29) [Rashi apparently omits this and reads: 'She shall neither be married' without halizah].
- (30) Even within nine months.
- (31) To marry at the end of that period; the Baraita will then afford no support to Resh Lakish.
- (32) B.B. 129b, Hul. 77a.
- (33) Lit., 'because we learned'.
- (34) Lying on his death-bed.
- (35) I.e., explicitly intimated his desire and did not die intestate (v. Rashi, a.l.).
- (36) Lit., 'he made the firstborn equal to them', though Biblically he is entitled to a double portion.
- (37) Lit., 'his words stand', because a man is entitled to dispose of his property, as a gift, in any manner that may appeal to him.
- (38) I.e., if he distributed the shares as portions of an inheritance and not as gifts.
- (39) Lit., 'he said nothing'. One has no right to give instructions which are contrary to the law of the Torah which entitled every son to a portion and the firstborn to a double portion in the father's estate.
- (40) In disposing of his property in a written will.
- (41) I.e., used an expression denoting 'gift', even though it was accompanied by one denoting 'inheritance'. If he wrote, for instance, let a certain field (a) be presented to X that he may inherit it (beginning), or (b) inherited by X and be presented to him that he may inherit it (middle), or (c) be inherited by X and be presented to him (end).
- (42) B.B. 126b. V. supra note 6. So long as the expression of 'gift' was used, the other expression of 'inheritance' that may have been coupled with it, does not in any way affect the validity of the testator's instructions.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 36b

And [in connection with this] Resh Lakish stated: No possession is ever acquired,¹ unless the testator had said, 'Let X and Y inherit this and that particular field which I have assigned to them as a gift, so that they may inherit them'.² And the third³ is his ruling in connection with the following Mishnah:⁴ If a man assigned all his estate, in writing, to his son⁵ [to be his]⁶ after his⁷ death, the father may not sell it⁸ because it is assigned to the son, and the son may not sell it because it is in the possession of the father. If the father sold the estate, the sale is valid until his death.⁹ If the son sold it, the buyer has no claim whatsoever upon it until the father's death.¹⁰ And it was stated: If the son sold the estate¹¹ during the lifetime of his father, and died while his father was still alive, R. Johanan said: The buyer does not acquire ownership;¹² and Resh Lakish said: The buyer does acquire ownership.¹³ R. Johanan said that 'the buyer does not acquire ownership', because possession of usufruct is like possession of the capital;¹⁴ and Resh Lakish said that 'the buyer does acquire ownership', because possession of usufruct is not like possession of the capital.¹⁵

BUT IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE etc. A Tanna taught: It has been said in the name of R. Eliezer that¹⁶ he must put her out by means of a letter of divorce.¹⁷

Said Raba: R. Meir and R. Eliezer taught the same law.¹⁸ R. Eliezer, in the ruling just mentioned, R. Meir [in the following Baraita] wherein it was taught: A man shall not marry the pregnant, or nursing wife of another;¹⁹ and if he married, he must put her out and never remarry her; so R. Meir.

But the Sages said: He shall let her go.²⁰ and at the proper time²¹ he may marry her again.²²

Abaye said to him:²³ How do you arrive at such a conclusion which may possibly be wrong?²⁴ R. Eliezer's ruling might extend to the present case²⁵ only because the levir is encroaching²⁶ upon the prohibition of 'brother's wife', which is Pentateuchal,²⁷ but there,²⁸ where the prohibition is only Rabbinical,²⁹ he may hold the same view as the Rabbis. Alternatively, it is possible that R. Meir's ruling extends only to that case because the prohibition is Rabbinical,²⁹ and the Sages have given more force to their provisions than to those which are Pentateuchal,³⁰ but not to the case here,³¹ where the prohibition is Pentateuchal,²⁶ and people as a rule keep away from it.³²

Raba said: Even according to the ruling of the Rabbis³³ he must let her go from him by means of a letter of divorce.³⁴ Said Mar Zutra: This may also be deduced, since the expression used was 'he shall put her out'³⁵ and not 'he shall let her part'.³⁶ This proves it.

R. Ashi said to R. Hoshiaia son of R. Idi: 'Elsewhere it was taught.'³⁷ "R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Any human child³⁸ that survived for thirty days cannot be regarded as a miscarriage.³⁹ Had he not lived so long,⁴⁰ however, he would have been a doubtful case.⁴¹ But it was also stated: Where he⁴² died within thirty days⁴³ and she⁴⁴ was subsequently⁴⁵ betrothed,⁴⁶ Rabina said in the name of Raba that if she⁴⁴ was the wife of an Israelite⁴⁷ she must perform the halizah⁴⁸ and if she was the wife of a priest⁴⁹ she must not perform the halizah.⁵⁰ R. Mesharsheya⁵¹ said in the name of Raba: The one as well as the other must perform the halizah. Said Rabina to R. Mesharsheya:⁵¹

- (1) Where two fields were given to two persons and the expression of 'inheritance was used together with that of 'gift'.
 - (2) Both acquire possession of the respective fields because the testator had used the expression, 'which I have assigned to them as a gift', implying that the gift was made before it was assigned as an 'inheritance' (v. R. Gershom, B.B. 129a).
 - (3) Lit., 'and the other', the third ruling of Resh Lakish, which is an accepted halachah.
 - (4) Lit., 'because we learned'.
 - (5) Inserting the formula 'From this day and after my death'. The law that follows applies also to a gift made by any other person.
 - (6) The sons.
 - (7) The testator's.
 - (8) Either the land or its produce.
 - (9) Lit., 'sold until he dies'. Until then only may the buyer enjoy its usufruct.
 - (10) B.K. 88b, B.B. 1362.
 - (11) Assigned to him by his father for possession after his death.
 - (12) Even after the father's death, since the estate has never come into the son's possession.
 - (13) After the death of the father, as the representative of the son, who, were he alive, would have been entitled to the inheritance.
 - (14) Since the usufruct was in the ownership of the father, the capital, i.e., the soil, is also regarded as being in his possession, and the son, therefore, during the lifetime of his father is not entitled to transfer it to the buyer.
 - (15) B.K. l.c., B.B. 136af. The soil, therefore, was the undisputed property of the son who, consequently, was fully entitled to transfer it to the buyer.
 - (16) Contrary to the law of our Mishnah which allows the levir to continue his connubial association with his sister-in-law wherever the child is not viable.
 - (17) Though the death of the child has proved retrospectively that the levirate marriage was lawful, divorce is imposed upon such a union as a penalty for contracting it at a time when, owing to the uncertainty of the result of the pregnancy, it was of doubtful legality.
 - (18) Lit., 'said one word', that the penalty of divorce is imposed upon any union the legality of which was doubtful at the time the marriage was contracted.
 - (19) Though she is now a widow or divorced.
 - (20) V. infra for meaning.
 - (21) Lit., 'and when his time to marry arrives', i.e. at the end of the period of twenty-four months allowed for the nursing of a child.

(22) Sot. 262.

(23) Raba.

(24) Lit., 'from what? perhaps it is not (so)'.

(25) Lit., 'R. Eliezer did not so far say (his ruling) here'.

(26) It being possible that the child would be viable.

(27) For such a serious offence a penalty is rightly imposed.

(28) Marriage with an expectant. or nursing mother.

(29) Biblically one need not wait twenty-four months before marrying her.

(30) As people might be lax in the observance of a Rabbinical law it was necessary to impose a penalty for its non-observance.

(31) Marriage with an expectant yebamah.

(32) Or 'her', i.e., from marrying an expectant yebamah. No penalty. therefore, need be imposed upon an occasional offender.

(33) Who permit marriage after the period of twenty-four months had elapsed.

(34) Mere separation is not enough.

(35) יוציא Hif. of יצא 'to go out'.

(36) יפיש Hif. of פרש 'to separate'.

(37) Cf. Tosaf. Hul. 87b, s.v. תנן and Bek. 49a s.v. מת. Cur. edd., 'we learned'.

(38) Of doubtful premature birth. Lit., 'among man', opp. to cattle mentioned in the final clause.

(39) Tosef. Shab. XVI, Shab. 135b, Nid. 44b, infra 80b; and consequently exempts his mother from levirate marriage and halizah. In the case of a mature birth (cf. prev. note) the child exempts his mother on the first day of his birth. (V. Nid. 43b).

(40) [Rashi: By dying a natural death; Tosaf. If he was killed; for if he died a natural death within thirty days even the Rabbis would regard him as a miscarriage, v. Tosaf, s.v. היא].

(41) And his mother would have had to perform halizah only, but would not have been allowed to contract the levirate marriage.

(42) The child of a sister-in-law whose husband had died without having left any other issue.

(43) Of his birth.

(44) His mother, the widow of his deceased father.

(45) Lit., 'stood up.'

(46) To a stranger; believing that the birth of the child was sufficient to exempt her from the obligations of the levirate marriage and the halizah.

(47) I.e., if the man who betrothed her was an Israelite who may marry a haluzah.

(48) With the levir.

(49) Cf. supra 8. A priest may not marry a haluzah.

(50) Were she to perform it. her husband could not subsequently be allowed to live with her. Hence she is granted exemption from halizah by virtue of the child's birth alone.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 37a

Raba said so¹ in the evening, but on the following morning he retracted.² The other exclaimed, "So you have permitted;³ would that you permitted also abdominal fat!"⁴ Now, what is the law here in respect of the pregnant, or nursing wife of another man who was married to a priest? Did the Rabbis make any provision for a priest⁵ or not?' — The other⁶ replied:⁷ What a comparison!⁸ [The distinction]⁹ is well justified there;¹⁰ since the Rabbis differ from R. Simeon b. Gamaliel in maintaining that the child is deemed to be sound even though he did not live long enough,¹¹ we may, in the case of a priest's wife, where no other course is open,¹² act in accordance with the view of the Rabbis.¹³ Here,¹⁴ however, in accordance with whose view could we act? If in accordance with that of R. Meir, he surely stated that he¹⁵ must put her out and never remarry her! And if in accordance with the view of the Rabbis, they, surely, stated [that she must be sent away] by means of a letter of divorce!¹⁶

It was stated: [The case of the man who] betrothed a woman¹⁷ within the three [months]¹⁸ and fled, is one concerning which R. Aha and Rafram are at variance. One holds that the man is to be placed under the ban,¹⁹ but the other holds that his flight is sufficient.²⁰ Such an incident once happened, and Rafram ruled,²¹ 'His flight is sufficient'.²⁰

IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD etc. Said Raba to R. Nahman. Let the ruling be that one is to go by the majority of women, and the majority of women bear at nine months!²² — The other replied: Our women bear at seven months. 'Are your women', the first retorted, 'the majority of the world'! — 'What I mean', the other replied, 'is this: Most women bear at nine months and a minority at seven, and the embryo in the case of every woman who bears at nine is recognizable after a third of the period of her pregnancy;²³ and in the case of this woman, since her embryo was not recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy²³ [her presumption to belong to] the majority is impaired'.

If in the case of every woman, however, who bears at nine the embryo is recognizable after a third of the period of her pregnancy. it is obvious that with this [woman], since her embryo had not been recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, it must be a seven-months child of the second²⁴ husband! — But say rather: When a woman bears at nine months, her embryo in most cases is recognizable after a third of her pregnancy. and with this woman, since her embryo was not recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, [her presumption to belong to] the majority is impaired.

Our Rabbis taught: The first [child]²⁵ is fit to be a High priest,²⁶ and the second²⁷ is deemed a bastard owing to his doubtful origin.²⁸ R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He is not of doubtful bastardy.²⁹ What does he³⁰ mean?³¹ — Abaye replied: It is this that he meant, 'The first child²⁵ is fit to be a High priest²⁶ while the seconds is one of doubtful bastardy²⁹ and is consequently forbidden to marry a bastard.³² R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He is not one of doubtful bastardy but an assured bastard, and is consequently permitted to marry a bastard'. Raba replied: It is this that was meant: 'The first³³ is fit to be a High priest³⁴ and the second,³⁵ on account of his doubtful origin,³⁶ is deemed to be an assured bastard and is consequently permitted to marry a bastard; but R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He cannot be deemed an assured bastard on account of his doubtful origin;³⁶ he is, however, regarded as one of doubtful bastardy and is consequently forbidden to marry a bastard.³⁷ And they³⁸ differ in [the interpretation of a ruling] of R. Eleazar. For we learned: 'R. Eleazar said, persons of confirmed illegitimacy may [intermarry] with others of confirmed illegitimacy, but those of confirmed illegitimacy may not intermarry with those of doubtful illegitimacy;³⁹ nor those of doubtful, with those of confirmed illegitimacy; nor those of doubtful, with others of doubtful illegitimacy. And the following are of doubtful legitimacy: The shethuki,⁴⁰ the asufi⁴¹ and the Samaritan.⁴² And [in connection with this] Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab, 'The halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Eleazar, but when I stated this in the presence of Samuel⁴³ he said to me, "Hillel taught that the following ten different genealogical classes went up from Babylon:⁴⁴ priests, Levites, Israelites, profaned priests,⁴⁵ proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,⁴⁶ shetkuki⁴⁰ and asufi,⁴¹ and all these may inter marry",⁴⁷ and you state that the halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Eleazar'⁴⁸ Now Abaye upholds the opinion of Samuel who stated that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of Hillel and consequently brings the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob into harmony with the halachah so that there may be no contradiction between the one halachah and the other.⁴⁹ Raba, on the other hand, upholds the opinion of Rab who stated that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of R. Eleazar, and so he brings the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob into harmony with the halachah in order that there may be no contradiction

(1) That halizah must be performed even where the husband is a priest (R. Mesharsheya's version).

- (2) Exempting the widow from halizah where a priest is involved (Rabina's version).
- (3) Var. lec. 'permitted it'.
- (4) Shab. 136af.
- (5) That temporary separation until the twenty-four months had elapsed shall suffice and that, unlike an Israelite, the priest shall not be required to give a divorce. If an Israelite gives a divorce in such circumstances he may remarry the woman after the lapse of the forbidden period. A priest, however, being forbidden to marry a divorced woman, would never again be allowed to remarry her once she had been divorced.

- (21) Lit., 'said to them'.
- (22) The child would consequently be deemed to be the son of the first husband, and the marriage of his mother with the levir would be a forbidden union. The levir who thus married unlawfully his brother's wife should bring a sin-offering and not, as stated in our Mishnah, an asham talui.
- (23) Lit., 'her days'.
- (24) Lit., 'last'.
- (25) Born from the levirate marriage, and in respect of whom it is doubtful whether he is a nine-months child of the deceased or a seven-months one of the levir.
- (26) His legitimacy is beyond all doubt. If he is the son of the deceased brother he is legitimate, though the subsequent levirate marriage is a forbidden one; and if he is the son of the levir, the levirate marriage itself is a lawful union.
- (27) Any child after the first, born from the levirate marriage.
- (28) It being possible that the first child was the son of the deceased, and that the levirate marriage was consequently forbidden under the penalty of kareth. Children born from such a union are bastards.

- (37) Since it is equally possible that he himself is not a bastard.
- (38) Abaye and Raba in their differing explanations of the Baraita cited.
- (39) Since it is possible that a person of doubtful legitimacy may in fact be legitimate, and by marrying one whose illegitimacy is established a bastard, contrary to Pentateuchal law, would be 'admitted into the congregation'. (V. Deut. XXIII, 3).
- (40) שתוקי (rt. שתק 'to be silent'), he who knows his mother but does not know who was his father (v. Kid. 6); who 'keeps silent' about his origin.

- (42) Kid. 74a. In all these cases the legitimacy is doubtful: in the first two, because the father is unknown; and in the last, because the Samaritans did not observe all the laws of betrothal, and any Samaritan might be the issue of an illicit union between his father and a woman who had been legally betrothed to another man.

- (48) Kid. 75a. How, in view of Hillel's ruling (v. supra n. 1), could the halachah be said to be in agreement with the view of R. Eleazar according to whom certain classes, not being of confirmed illegitimacy, could never intermarry!
- (49) The halachah is always determined by the teachings of R. Eliezer h. Jacob whose information was well sifted and authoritative. (V. Git. 67a).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 37b

between one halachah and the other.

Said Abaye: Whence do I infer that R. Eliezer b. Jacob treats any doubtful case as a certainty? — [From] what was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, 'Behold, when a man has intercourse with many women and does not know with which particular woman¹ he had intercourse, and, similarly, when a woman with whom many men had intercourse does not know to which particular man her conception is due, the consequences are that a father will be marrying his daughter and a brother his sister, and the whole world will be filled with bastards,² and concerning this it was said, And the land became full of lewdness'.³ And Raba?⁴ — He can answer you: It is this that was meant, 'What might be the result'?⁵

More than that⁶ was said by R. Eliezer b. Jacob: A man shall not marry a wife in one country and then proceed to marry one in another country, since [their children]⁷ might marry one another and the result might be that a brother would marry his sister.⁸

But, surely, this could not be [the accepted ruling], for Rab, whenever he happened to visit Dardeshir,⁹ used to announce, 'Who would be mine¹⁰ for the day'! So also R. Nahman, whenever he happened to visit Shekunzib,¹¹ used to announce, 'Who would be mines for the day'!¹² — The Rabbis came under a special category since they are well known.¹³

But did not Raba say: A woman who had an offer of marriage and accepted must allow a period of seven ritually clean days to pass!¹⁴ — The Rabbis sent their representatives and these presented the announcements to the women.¹⁵ And if you prefer I might say: The Rabbis only had them¹⁶ in their private rooms;¹⁷ for the Master said, 'He who has bread in his basket cannot be compared to him who has no bread in his basket'.¹⁸

A Tanna taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: A man must not marry a woman if it is his intention to divorce her, for it is written, Devise not evil against thy neighbour, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee.¹⁹

If the 'doubtful son'²⁰ and the levir came to claim a share²¹ in the estate of the deceased,²² the 'doubtful son' pleading, 'I am the son of the deceased and the estate is mine', while the levir pleads, 'You are my son and you have no claim whatsoever upon the estate', it is a case of money of doubtful ownership,²³ and money the ownership of which is doubtful must be divided.²⁴

Where the ‘doubtful son’²⁰ and the sons of the levir came to claim their share²¹ in the estate of the deceased, the ‘doubtful son’ pleading, ‘I²⁵ am the son of the deceased and the estate is mine while the sons of the levir plead, ‘You are our brother and you have only a share equal to ours’, it was the intention of the Rabbis to submit to R. Mesharsheya that this was a case [identical with that] of a Mishnah wherein we learned, ‘He²⁶ does not inherit from them²⁷ but they inherit from him’,²⁸ since here the case is just the reverse:²⁹ There they tell him, ‘produce proof and take [your share]’³⁰ while here he tells them, ‘produce proof and take your share’.³¹ R. Mesharsheya, however, said to them, ‘Are [the two cases] equal? There, their claim is a certainty³² while his is doubtful,³³ while here both are doubtful!³⁴ If, however, a case is to be compared to a Mishnah it is to the following: That of a ‘doubtful son’³⁵ and the sons of the levir who came to claim³⁶ shares in the estate of the levir himself, where they can say to him: produce proof that you are our brother and take your share’.³⁷

If a ‘doubtful son’³⁵ and the sons of the levir came to claim³⁶ their shares in the estate of the levir after the levir had received his share in the estate of the deceased, the sons of the levir pleading, ‘produce proof that you are our brother and you will receive [your share]’, the ‘doubtful son’ can tell them, ‘Whatever you wish: If I am your brother, give me a share among you;³⁸ and if I am the son of the deceased, return to me the half which your father received when he shared the estate with me’.

Said R. Abba in the name of Rab: The judgment must stand.³⁹ R. Jeremiah said: The judgment is to be reversed.⁴⁰

May it be suggested that they⁴¹ differ on the same principle as that which underlies the dispute between Admon and the Rabbis? For we learned: If a man went to a country beyond the sea and [in his absence] the path to his field was lost,⁴² he shall, Admon said, use the shortest cut;⁴³ but the Sages said: He must purchase a path even though it will cost him a hundred maneh or else fly in the air.⁴⁴ And in discussing this [Mishnah it was pointed out] against the Rabbis that Admon was perfectly right; and Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab that here it is a case where [the fields of] four persons surrounded it on its four sides.⁴⁵ But [it was asked] what is Admon's reason? And Raba replied: Where four persons⁴⁶ derive their rights of possession from four persons⁴⁷ or where four persons derive it from one⁴⁵ all agree that these⁴⁸ can refuse⁴⁹ him; the dispute only concerns one person who derived his rights from four. Admon is of the opinion that he⁵⁰ can tell him, ‘At all events⁵¹ my path is in your fields’,⁵² while the Rabbis hold that the other can answer him, ‘If you will keep quiet, well and good;⁵³ and if not, I will return the deeds to their original owners whom you will have no chance to call to law’.⁵⁴ May it, then, be suggested that R. Abba⁵⁵ holds the view of the Rabbis⁵⁶ and R. Jeremiah⁵⁷ that of Admon?⁵⁸ R. Abba can tell you: I may even hold the view of Admon; he made his ruling there⁵⁹ only because he⁶⁰ can say to him,⁶¹ ‘Whatever you wish to plead,

- (26) The son concerning whom it is uncertain whether he was a nine months child of his mother's first, or a seven-months child of her second husband. Cf. supra n. 2.
- (27) Neither from the sons of his mother's first, nor from those of her second husband. As his claim is indefinite, since he cannot possibly know who his father really was, each group of heirs, whose claim to the estate of their respective fathers is definite and certain, can plead that he is not the son of their father.
- (28) Infra 100b. When he dies, the two groups of brothers, since they have exactly equal claims upon his estate, are entitled to equal shares in it.
- (29) While in the Mishnah cited their claim is certain and his is not, in this case his claim is certain while theirs is not. His claim is certain since at all events he is entitled either to all the estate (if he is the son of the deceased) or to a part at least (if he is the son of the levir), their claim, however, is doubtful since it is possible that he is the son of the deceased and they, as the sons of the levir, have no claim whatsoever upon the estate.
- (30) Cf. supra note 9.

- (32) They know exactly whose children they are and by virtue of whose rights they advance their claims.

- (35) V. supra p. 236, n. 2.
- (36) V. loc. cit. n. 3.
- (37) Here, as in the Mishnah, one claim is a certainty (that of the sons of the levir) while the other (that of the 'doubtful son') is not.
- (38) And the half he already received he would return. This, of course, applies to the case only where one share in the levir's estate exceeds half the estate of the first deceased brother.
- (39) Once the levir received a half of the estate of his deceased brother it cannot again be taken away from his heirs. The second claim of the 'doubtful son' is, therefore, invalid.
- (40) The sons of the levir must either return to the 'doubtful son' the half which their father had received or allow him in their father's estate a share equal to theirs.

my only path lies in your fields', but could such a plea be advanced here! And R. Jeremiah can tell you: I may uphold even the view of the Rabbis, for the Rabbis made their ruling there only because he can tell him, 'If you keep silence, well and good, and if not I will return the deeds to their original owners and you will have no chance to call them to law', but could such a plea be advanced here!

Where a 'doubtful son'¹ and a levir came to claim their shares² in the estate of the grandfather,³ the former⁴ pleading, 'I am⁵ the son of the deceased and half of the estate belongs, therefore, to me', while the levir pleads, 'You are my own son and you have, therefore, no share whatsoever', the levir's claim being a certainty⁶ and that of the 'doubtful son' a doubtful one,⁷ doubt may not supersede⁸ a certainty.

Where the 'doubtful son'¹ and the sons of the levir came to claim their shares² in the estate of their grandfather,⁹ the former⁴ pleading, 'I am⁵ the son of the deceased and half of the estate is, therefore, mine'¹⁰ while the sons of the levir plead, 'You are our brother and you have a share like one of us',¹¹ they receive the half which he concedes to them while he receives the third¹² which they concede to him, and thus a sixth¹³ remains,¹⁴ which, being property¹⁵ of uncertain ownership, is to be equally divided.¹⁶

Where the grandfather¹⁷ and the levir [claim their shares] in the estate of the 'doubtful son' or where the grandfather¹⁷ and the 'doubtful son' [claim their shares] in the estate of the levir, the estate is to be regarded as money of uncertain ownership and is to be equally divided.¹⁶ MISHNAH. and the levirate bond of a married woman renders her 'doubtfully married'.¹ 'The levirate bond of a betrothed woman renders her doubtfully betrothed', for were we to assume that she is regarded as definitely betrothed, [how could both] BETH SHAMMAI AND BETH HILLEL AGREE THAT SHE MAY SELL IT OR GIVE IT AWAY AND THAT HER ACT IS LEGALLY VALID when we learned: If she came into the possession of property while she was betrothed, Beth Shammai said, she may sell it, and Beth Hillel said, she may not sell it, but both agree that if she had sold or had given it away her act is legally valid!² Consequently³ it must be inferred that the levirate bond of a betrothed woman renders her 'doubtfully betrothed'.⁴ 'The levirate bond of a married woman renders her doubtfully married', for had it been possible to assume that she is regarded as definitely married, [how could] Beth Shammai state that THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE IT WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER when we learned: If she came into the possession of property while she was married, both⁵ agree that, if she had sold or given it away, her husband may seize it from the hand of the buyers!⁶ Consequently it must be inferred that the levirate bond of a married woman renders her 'doubtfully married'.⁷

Said Rabbah to him:⁸ Why, then, do they⁹ dispute on [the question of the estate] itself after the death [of the widow]? Let them rather dispute on the question of the usufruct while she is alive! No, said Rabbah, both clauses deal with property which came into her possession while she was married; and the levirate bond of a married woman stamps her as doubtfully married. In the first clause, therefore, where she is alive, she is the certain possessor¹⁰ while they are only doubtful possessors, and doubt cannot override a certainty.¹¹ In the final clause, however, where she is dead, both groups come equally as heirs¹² and are, therefore,¹³ to take equal shares.¹⁴

Abaye pointed out an objection against him:¹⁵ Cannot a doubt, in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai, override a certainty? Surely we learned: [In the case where] a¹⁶ house collapsed upon a man¹⁷ and his father or upon a man¹⁷ and those whose heir he was,¹⁸ and that man had against him the claim of his wife's kethubah¹⁹ or that of a creditor,²⁰ [and in the first case], the heirs of the father plead that the son died first and the father afterwards,²¹ while the creditor pleads that the father died first and the son afterwards,²² Beth Shammai hold [that the amount in dispute is] to be divided,²³ and Beth Hillel hold that the estate is to remain in its former status.²⁴ Now here, surely, [the claim of] the heirs of the father is a certainty²⁵ and that of the creditor is only a doubt²⁵ and yet²⁶ the doubtful claim overrides the certainty!²⁷ — Beth Shammai are of the opinion that a bond of indebtedness which is due for repayment is regarded as [already] repaid!²⁸

And whence do you derive this?²⁹ — [From] what we learned: If their husbands³⁰ died before they drank,³¹ Beth Shammai rule that they are to receive their kethuboth³² and that they need not drink,³³ and Beth Hillel rule that they either drink³³ or they do not receive their kethuboth.³⁴ [But how can it be ruled,] 'They either drink', when the All Merciful said, Then shall the man bring his wife³⁵ and he is not there! Consequently [the meaning must be that] as they do not drink they are not to receive their kethuboth.³² Now here, surely, it is a matter of doubt, it being uncertain whether she did play the harlot³⁶ or not,³⁷ and yet the doubt overrides the certainty.³⁸ Consequently³⁹ it must be inferred that a bond of indebtedness which is due for repayment is regarded as already repaid.⁴⁰

Abaye,⁴¹ then,⁴² should have raised his objection from this!⁴³ — [The law of] a wife's kethubah might be different owing to considerations of courtesy.⁴⁴

Then let him⁴⁵ raise his objection from the law of the kethubah in our Mishnah!⁴⁶ They⁴⁷ do not dispute this point.⁴⁸

But do they not? Surely we learned,⁴⁹ IF SHE DIED, WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH HER

KETHUBAH AND WITH PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER? BETH SHAMMAI SAID: THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE IT WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER; BETH HILLEL SAID: THE PROPERTY IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE IN WHOSE POSSESSION IT IS! — It is this that was meant: IF SHE DIED, WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH HER KETHUBAH? and then [the enquiry] was abandoned. As to PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER, BETH SHAMMAI SAID: THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER AND BETH HILLEL SAID: THE PROPERTY IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE IN WHOSE POSSESSION IT IS.

Said R. Ashi: The inference from the expressions in our Mishnah leads to the same conclusion,⁵⁰ for it was stated, THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER⁵¹ and it was not stated ‘the heirs of the father [are to share it] with the heirs of the husband’.⁵² This proves it.

[Reverting to the previous question,]⁵³ Abaye replied: The first clause [deals with property] that came into her possession while she was awaiting [the decision of] the levir,⁵⁴ and the latter clause [with such] as came into her possession while she was still with her husband.

(1) Cf. supra n. 3.

(2) Keth. 78a., Sonc. ed. pp. 490ff q.v.

(3) Since in the case of a definite betrothal Beth Hillel, contrary to the opinion of Beth Shammai do not allow the widow the right of sale or gift, while in the first clause of our Mishnah they do.

(4) Hence Beth Shammai, who concede to the widow the right to sell and to give away even where her betrothal was certain, with all the more reason concede such rights to the widow spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah where her betrothal is only doubtful. Beth Hillel, too, since in the case of a definite betrothal they agree that a sale or gift that had already taken place is valid, may rightly concede to the widow in the case of doubtful betrothal the full rights of selling and giving away.

(5) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(6) Keth. loc. cit.

(7) And so both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, who in the case of a definite marriage recognize the husband's right to seize from the buyers even property that his wife had already sold, agree that in the case of our Mishnah, the status of marriage being a matter of doubt, the husband's rights are also a matter of doubt. Hence Beth Shammai might well maintain that the property which is of doubtful ownership should be equally divided between the rival claimants, while Beth Hillel may maintain that the widow's right of possession is to be given priority since she came into the possession of the property at a time when her married status was a matter of uncertainty.

(8) ‘Ulla.

(9) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(10) Since the property is in any case hers.

(11) Hence Beth Shammai as well as Beth Hillel agree that she is fully entitled to sell the property or to give it away.

(12) Lit., ‘those come to inherit’ (bis). Had the levirate bond borne the same force as marriage the estate would undoubtedly have become the property of the levir only. Had it not borne the same force as marriage the estate would have been given to her father's heirs only, and the levir would have had no claim whatsoever. The claims of either group are consequently evenly balanced.

(13) Since the claim of either is equally doubtful.

(14) According to Beth Shammai. Beth Hillel's view, on the other hand, may be justified on the ground that the widow's father's heirs are her certain relatives and are, therefore, entitled to inherit that which was in her possession. No such claim, however, could be advanced by the husband's relatives since the husband himself was never for one moment in definite and undisputed possession of the property in question.

(21) The son did not consequently inherit from his father whose estate would, therefore, belong to the surviving heirs.

(22) And the son had, therefore, inherited his father's estate which may consequently be seized in payment of the son's debts.

(23) Between the creditor and the heirs, their respective claims being regarded by Beth Shammai as of equal force.

(24) B.B. 157a; With the heirs of the father. The claim of the heirs is regarded by Beth Hillel as a certainty, since they are in possession of the estate either as heirs of the father or as heirs of the son, while the claim of the creditor, being dependent on his being put into possession of the estate by the court, is of doubtful validity, and 'doubt cannot override a certainty'.

(25) v. supra n. 8.

(26) According to Beth Shammai.

(27) Lit., 'and doubt comes and takes away from the hands of certainty'. V. supra n. 8.

(28) Sot. 25a. The amount of the debt is deemed to be in the virtual possession of the creditor. The claims respectively of the heirs and the creditor are, consequently, of equal force. If the father died first his son inherited his estate and the creditor had immediately come into the legal possession of a share of the estate equal to the amount of his debt. If the son died first the heirs come into possession of the entire estate. As it is not known who died first the claims of the two parties are equally doubtful and of equal validity.

(38) Cf. supra p. 243, n. 12. Despite the doubt as to whether she is entitled to her kethubah she receives it, according to Beth Shammai; and she thus takes away the amount of her kethubah from the heirs of her husband who are the undoubted successors to his property.

(39) Since the rule is that 'doubt cannot override certainty's

(40) The kethubah is, therefore, deemed to have been collected as soon as the husband died, and the widow is consequently deemed to be the virtual possessor of such a portion of his estate as would cover the amount of her kethubah.

(41) Whose objection to Rabbah, supra, was based on a Mishnah from Baba Bathra.

(42) Since the principle of virtual possession did not occur to him as the reason for allowing a doubtful claim in face of certain one.

(43) The Mishnah just cited which is embodied in the Tractates of Sotah and Kethuboth both of which belong to the same order as our Tractate. Since the principles in both Mishnahs are identical, why did Abaye resort to a Mishnah in another order when one was available in our order of Nashim.

(44) הינא 'gracefulness', 'loveliness'. It is possible that in order that pleasant and cordial relations may exist between husband and wife the law has been enacted that, despite the general rule that 'doubt cannot override a certainty', a woman shall be privileged to collect her kethubah even when her own claim is of a doubtful character and that of her litigants is a certain one. No objection could, therefore, be put forward from such a special case; and Abaye had consequently to resort to a Mishnah in Nezikin. Other explanations of משום הינא (v. Jast.): 'In order to make her attractive', 'that women may be willing to marry'.

(45) Abaye.

(46) Where, according to Beth Shammai, the heirs of the father (by virtue of his being heir to his daughter, the widow), though their claim is of a doubtful nature, share the amount of the kethubah with the heirs of the husband whose rights to the amount of the kethubah (as the heirs of the husband) are certain. At the moment it is assumed that Beth Shammai's disagreement with Beth Hillel extends to the KETHUBAH as well as to the PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER; and 'considerations of courtesy' could not, of course, apply when the woman is dead and the claimants are her male heirs. Cf. Keth. 97b.

(50) That Beth Shammai's disagreement with Beth Hillel does not extend to the question of the kethubah.

(51) I.e., the former take a share in that which is virtually in the possession of the latter, viz., the melog property which belongs to the heirs of the wife's father.

(52) Which would have referred to the kethubah which is in the virtual possession of the husband's heirs,

(54) As the levirate bond is not strong enough to give the levir any right over that property, it is generally agreed that she and, in case of her death, her heirs also are entitled to dispose of it in any manner they like.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 39a

And Abaye¹ maintains that a husband's rights² have the same force as his wife's.³ Said Raba to him:⁴ If she came into possession of property while she was still With her husband, no one⁵ would dispute the view that his rights are superior to hers.⁶ Both [clauses of our Mishnah], however, [deal with property] which came into her possession while she was awaiting [the decision of] the levir; the first clause speaking of one to whom a ma'amar had not been addressed,⁷ and the final clause, of one to whom a ma'amar had been addressed.⁸ And Raba is of the opinion that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, renders [the widow] definitely betrothed and doubtfully married. She is deemed to be definitely betrothed in respect of excluding her rival;⁹ and she is deemed to be doubtfully married in respect of taking a share in the property.¹⁰

A statement was made in the name of R. Eleazar in agreement with Raba and a statement was made in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina in agreement with Abaye. Could R. Eleazar, however, have made such a statement? Surely R. Eleazar said: A ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes a kinyan in so far only as to keep out the rival!¹¹ — Reverse [the statements]. If you prefer I might say: There is really no need to reverse [them, for] R. Eleazar can tell you, 'What I said [amounted to this]: that a letter of divorce alone is not enough¹² but that she requires also halizah; did I state, however, that the ma'amar constitutes no kinyan even in respect of taking a share in her property'!¹³

Said R. Papa: The inference from our Mishnah is in agreement with the opinion of Abaye,¹⁴ although 'IF SHE DIED' presents a difficulty.¹⁵ Seeing that it was stated PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER, what is meant by COMES IN and what by GOES OUT? Obviously,¹⁶ 'COMES INTO the possession of her husband'¹⁷ and 'GOES OUT from the possession of her husband into the possession of her father'.¹⁸

'Although IF SHE DIED presents a difficulty': Why should they¹⁹ dispute [on the question of the property] itself, which can arise only in the event of the woman's death²⁰, let them rather dispute on the question of the usufruct which arises even when the woman is still alive!²¹ The fact is that no further objection [can be raised].²²

WHERE HE MARRIED HER, SHE IS DEEMED etc. For what practical law [was this statement needed]? — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: To indicate that he may divorce her by means of a letter of divorce²³ and that he may remarry her.

'He may divorce her by means of a letter of divorce'; Is not this obvious?²⁴ — It might have been assumed that, since the All Merciful said²⁵ And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,²⁶ she retains the obligation of the first levirate relationship²⁷ and so may be set free²⁸ only through halizah but not through a letter of divorce, hence it was necessary to teach us [that the law is not so].

‘He may remarry her’; Is not this obvious?²⁹ — It might have been assumed that since he³⁰ has already performed³¹ the commandment which the All Merciful has imposed upon him, she shall now be forbidden to him as the wife of his brother, hence it was necessary to teach us [that he may nevertheless remarry her]. Might it not be suggested that the law is so indeed?³² — Scripture stated, And take her to him to wife;³³ as soon as he has taken her she is deemed to be his wife in every respect.

SAVE THAT HER KETHUBAH etc. What is the reason? — A wife has been given³⁴ to him³⁵ from heaven.³⁶ If, however, she is unable nothing more’. The inference from our Mishnah is undoubtedly in agreement with the view of Abaye, the only difficulty being the one mentioned. to obtain her kethubah from her first [husband], provision was made that she [is to receive it] from the second³⁷ in order that it may not be easy for him to divorce her.³⁸

MISHNAH. THE DUTY OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE IS INCUMBENT UPON THE ELDEST [OF THE SURVIVING BROTHERS].³⁹ IF HE DECLINES, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN.⁴⁰ IF THEY ALL DECLINE, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED AND HE IS TOLD, ‘THE DUTY IS INCUMBENT UPON YOU; EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR PERFORM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF HE⁴¹ WISHED TO SUSPEND ACTION⁴² UNTIL A MINOR⁴³ BECOMES OF AGE, OR UNTIL THE ELDEST⁴³ RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA OR [UNTIL A BROTHER WHO WAS] DEAF⁴⁴ OR AN IMBECILE [SHOULD RECOVER],⁴⁵ HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO, BUT IS TOLD, ‘THE DUTY IS INCUMBENT UPON YOU; EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR PERFORM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. It was stated: [On the relative importance of] the intercourse of a younger, and the halizah of an elder brother there is a difference of opinion between R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. One holds that the intercourse of the younger is preferable and the other holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable. ‘One⁴⁶ holds that the intercourse of the younger is preferable,’ because the commandment, surely, is to perform the levirate marriage;⁴⁷ and ‘the other⁴⁶ holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable’, because in the presence of an elder brother the intercourse of the younger is valueless.⁴⁸

We learned, IF HE DECLINED, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN. Does not this mean that he declined to contract the levirate marriage but [was willing] to submit to the halizah? And yet it was stated, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN, which proves⁴⁹ that the intercourse of a younger brother is preferred! — No; he wished neither to submit to halizah nor to perform the levirate marriage. Similarly, then, in the case of the other brothers, [the meaning is that] they declined both halizah and levirate marriage;⁵⁰ why, then, is THE ELDEST AGAIN APPROACHED with the object of bringing pressure upon him? Let pressure be brought to bear upon them!⁵¹ — As the duty⁵² is incumbent upon him, pressure also must be used against him.

We learned, IF HE WISHED TO SUSPEND ACTION UNTIL A MINOR BECOMES OF AGE ... HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO. But if the intercourse of a minor is to be preferred, why IS HE NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since on becoming of age he might contract the levirate marriage! — Following your view [it might similarly be objected], why [if he wished to wait] UNTIL THE ELDEST RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA . . . HE IS

NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since on his return he might contract the levirate marriage!⁵³ The fact is that the performance of a commandment must not be delayed.⁵⁴

- (1) Since he explains the latter clause to be dealing with property that came into the wife's possession while her husband was still alive.
 - (2) To his wife's melog property.
 - (3) Lit., 'his hand is like her hand'. The husband's rights, according to Beth Hillel, he maintains, are in no way superior to those of his wife. Hence, when he dies and the widow comes only under the levirate bond, the levir's rights, which cannot have the same force as those of a husband, are inevitably inferior to those of the widow. The property, therefore, must remain in the possession of herself or her heirs. Beth Shammai, on the other hand, maintain that a husband's rights have more force than those of his wife. When he dies and the levir steps in by virtue of the levirate bond, the latter's rights, though inferior to those of the husband, are of equal force with those of the widow whose rights also are inferior to those of her husband.
 - (4) Abaye.
 - (5) Lit., all the world', even Beth Hillel.
 - (6) Lit., 'his hand is better than her hand', and the husband's heirs would consequently have been entitled to the property.
 - (7) By the levir, before the property came into her possession. The levirate bond alone is not sufficient to effect a transfer of the property to the levir.
 - (8) And after that the property came into her possession. As the ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, is regarded as virtual marriage (v. supra 29a), the levir also is entitled to the property. Hence it must be divided. Beth Hillel, on the other hand, not regarding a ma'amar as marriage, deny the levir all rights upon the property which is, therefore, to remain with the heirs of the woman.
 - (9) Her sister who does not cause her to be forbidden to the levir as 'his zekukah's sister'. V. supra 29a.
 - (10) The levir is not entitled to all the property as if he had actually married the widow, but only to a share of it.
 - (11) Supra 29a, Ned. 74a.
 - (12) When a ma'amar had been addressed to the widow.
 - (13) Certainly not. Consequently his statement in agreement with the view of Raba may be perfectly authentic.
 - (14) That the final clause deals with property that came into the woman's possession while she was still living with her husband.
 - (15) This is explained infra.
 - (16) Lit., 'not?'
 - (17) At the time they came into her possession.
 - (18) When she dies. The property must consequently have come into her possession when she was still living with her husband, as Abaye maintains.
 - (19) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
 - (20) Lit., 'and after death'.
 - (21) Lit., 'in her life and concerning the fruit'.
 - (22) Lit., 'and
 - (23) And no halizah is required.
 - (24) Since with the levirate marriage she assumes the status of a married woman.
 - (25) So MS.M. Cur. edd., add, 'It is written, And take her to wife'.
 - (26) Deut. XXV, 5; although it was already stated in the same verse, and take her to wife.
 - (27) So MS.M., cur. edd., 'the levirate relationship of the first'.
 - (28) Lit., 'yes'.
 - (29) Cf. supra n. 2.
 - (30) The levir.
 - (31) By his first marriage.
 - (32) That a brother's widow with whom levirate marriage was performed still requires halizah and may not be remarried by the levir after he had divorced her.
 - (33) Deut. XXV, 5; where only the latter part of the verse, And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her would have been sufficient. V. supra 8a.
 - (34) Lit., 'they caused him to acquire'.

(35) The levir.

(36) He has neither chosen her nor has he undertaken any obligations towards her. She was imposed upon him by the divine law of the levirate marriage. The claim of her kethubah must, therefore, be a charge upon the estate of her first husband whose choice she had been.

(37) The levir.

(38) Lit., 'that she may not be easy in his eyes to cause her to go out'.

(39) V. supra 24a.

(40) In the descending order of age.

(41) The eldest brother present on the spot. (Rashi).

(42) Lit., 'he hung' or 'suspended'. [Aliter. He referred (the action) to; v. n. 9].

(43) Brother.

(44) in Rabbinic literature usually signifies one who is deaf from birth. Hence 'a deaf-mute'.

(45) [Tosaf.: He referred her to a deaf brother etc.].

(46) Lit., 'he who'.

(47) Halizah being merely a substitute for it.

(48) Since the duty is, in the first instance, incumbent upon the elder.

(49) Since the younger brothers are asked to contract the levirate marriage when the elder expressed his willingness to submit to halizah.

(50) Since the same expression of unwillingness is used.

(51) If the eldest had only refused marriage but was willing to submit to halizah, as has first been assumed, one could explain our Mishnah to mean that 'THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED with a view to halizah'; he being the eldest, halizah also is first offered to him. If, however, he refused both halizah and marriage, as has now been explained, and the object of approaching him is coercion, why should the Beth din be troubled to summon him again in order to coerce him when any of the brothers who happens to be near at hand might just as well be coerced?

(52) Of the levirate marriage. V. our Mishnah.

(53) So marginal gloss. Cur. edd., 'and submits to halizah'.

(54) And this is the only reason why his request is not granted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 39b

Some say: As regards intercourse all agree that the intercourse of a younger brother is preferred.¹ They only differ on the halizah of a younger brother. And the statement² ran thus: [On the relative importance of] the halizah of a younger, and the halizah of an elder brother there is a difference of opinion between R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. One holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable, and the other holds that both are of equal importance. 'One³ holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable'⁴ because the commandment surely, is incumbent upon the elder. And the other [maintains that] the statement, 'the commandment is incumbent upon the elder', [was made] in respect of the levirate marriage; in respect of the halizah, however, they are both of equal importance.

We learned, IF THEY ALSO DECLINE, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED. Does not this mean that they declined to contract the levirate marriage but [were willing] to submit to halizah? And yet it was stated, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED, which proves that the halizah of the elder is preferred! — No; they declined the halizah as well as the levirate marriage.

Similarly, in the case of the eldest brother, he declined the halizah as well as the levirate marriage;⁵ why, then, IS THE ELDEST AGAIN APPROACHED with the object of coercing him? Let coercion be used against them!⁶ — As the duty⁷ is incumbent upon him, coercion also must be used against him.

Come and hear: IF HE WISHES TO SUSPEND ACTION . . . UNTIL THE ELDEST RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO. But if the

halizah of the eldest is preferable why IS HE NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since it is possible that when he returns he will submit to halizah! — Following your view [it might similarly be objected], why [if he wishes to postpone action] UNTIL A MINOR BECOMES OF AGE . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since, on becoming of age, he might contract the levirate marriage!⁸ The fact is that the performance of a commandment must not be delayed.⁹

We learned elsewhere: At first, when the object was the fulfilment¹⁰ of the commandment, the precept of the levirate marriage was preferable to that of halizah; now, however, when the object is not the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of halizah, it was laid down, is preferable to that of the levirate marriage.¹¹ Rab said: But no coercion¹² may be used.¹³

When they¹⁴ came before Rab he addressed them thus: 'If you¹⁵ wish, submit to halizah; if you prefer, contract the levirate marriage; the All Merciful has given you the choice:¹⁶ And if the man like not to take his brother's wife,¹⁷ implying, if he likes he may, whenever he wishes, submit to halizah or, if he prefers, contract the levirate marriage.'

Rab Judah also is of the opinion that no coercion may be applied; since Rab Judah has ordained [the following formula] for a deed of halizah: '[We certify] that So-and-so daughter of So-and-so brought before us into court her brother-in-law So-and-so, and we have ascertained him to be the paternal brother of the deceased. We told him, "If you wish to contract the levirate marriage, contract it, and if not, incline¹⁸ towards her your right foot". He inclined¹⁹ towards her his right foot and she removed his shoe from off his foot and spat out before him, a spittle which has been seen by the court upon the ground'.

R. Hiyya b. Iwya in the name of Rab Judah concluded²⁰ as follows: 'And we read before them [the relevant passage] that is written in the Book of the Law of Moses'.

'We ascertained him'. On this, R. Aha and Rabina are in dispute. One says: Through [qualified] witnesses. The other says: Even a relative and even a woman²¹ [may tender the evidence].

The law is that it²² is a mere intimation, and that even a relative and even a woman [may tender the evidence].

'At first, when the object was the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of the levirate marriage was preferable to that of halizah; now, however, when the object is not the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of halizah, it was laid down, is preferable to that of the levirate marriage'. Said Rami b. Hama in the name of R. Isaac: It was re-enacted that the precept of the levirate marriage is preferable to that of halizah.

Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him: Have the generations improved in their morals? — At first they held the opinion of Abba Saul, and finally they adopted that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: Abba Saul said, 'If a levir marries his sister-in-law on account of her beauty, or in order to gratify his sexual desires or with any other ulterior motive, it is as if he has infringed the law of incest; and I am even inclined to think that the child [of such a union] is a bastard'. But the Sages said, 'Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²³ whatever the motive'.²⁴

Who is the Tanna of the following statement which our Rabbis taught: 'Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²³ is a commandment; for originally²⁵ she stood in relation to him in the status of permissibility, then²⁶ she was forbidden to him, and then again²⁷ permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she reverts to her original status of permissibility, hence it was specifically stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²³ it is a commandment'. — Who, now, is the Tanna? — R. Isaac b. Abdimi replied. It is [the statement of] Abba Saul, and it is this that he meant: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²³ is a commandment; for originally²⁵ she stood in relation to him in the status of permissibility; he could have married her, if he wished, on account of her beauty and he could have married her, if he wished, in order to gratify his sexual desires; then²⁸ she was forbidden to him, and then again²⁹ permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she reverts to her original status of permissibility,³⁰ hence it was specifically stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her³¹ only with the intention of performing the commandment.³²

Raba said: You may even say [that the authorship³³ is that of] the Rabbis,³⁴ and it is this that was meant: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,³¹ is a commandment; for originally³⁵ she was in the status of permissibility; he could have married her if he wished and, if he preferred, he could have abstained from marrying her; then²⁸ she was forbidden to him, and then again²⁹ permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she was to revert to her original status of permissibility, so that, if he wished, he might marry her and, if he preferred, he could abstain from marrying her. [You say,] 'If he preferred he could abstain from marrying her'? Surely she is tied to him;³⁶ can she be set free by no act whatever! — Say rather: [It might have been assumed that] if he wished he might marry her, and, if he preferred, he might submit to halizah, hence it was specifically stated her husband's brother shall go in unto her,³¹ it is a commandment.³⁷

Read, then,³⁸ the first clause: 'It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place,³⁹ is a commandment; for originally¹ its status in relation to him was one of permissibility; then² it was forbidden, and again³ permitted; consequently one might assume that it reverts to its first status of permissibility, hence it was specifically stated, 'It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place,⁴ it is a commandment'. Now, according to Raba who said that it⁵ represents the view of⁶ the Rabbis, one could well explain that what is meant here⁷ is this: 'It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place⁴ is a commandment, for at first⁸ its status in relation to him was one of permissibility since, if he desired, he could eat it and, if he preferred, he could abstain from eating it; then⁹ it was forbidden, and again³ permitted; consequently it might be assumed that it reverts to its first status of permissibility¹⁰ so that, if he wished, he could eat it and, if he preferred, he could abstain from eating it. — [You say,] 'If he preferred he could abstain from eating it'? Surely it is written in the Scriptures, 'And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made'¹¹ which teaches that the priests must eat them, and that the owner attains thereby atonement! Say rather: [it might be assumed that] if he wished, he¹² may eat it¹³ himself and, if he preferred, another priest may eat it, hence it was specifically stated, 'It shall be eaten' without leaven in a holy place,¹⁴ it is a commandment.¹⁵ According to R. Isaac b. Abdimi, however, who said that it¹⁶ [represents the view of] Abba Saul, what two alternatives¹⁷ exist here?¹⁸ And were you to suggest¹⁹ that if he wished he could eat it¹³ to appease his appetite and, if he preferred, he could devour it gluttonously [can eating gluttonously] [it may be retorted] be described as proper eating? Surely Resh Lakish said, 'He who eats gluttonously on the Day of Atonement²⁰ is exempt [from kareth],²¹ since [Scripture has stated], 'Shall not be afflicted'²² [Were you to suggest], however,²³ that if he wished he could eat it²⁴ unleavened and, if he preferred, he could eat it leavened, surely [it might be retorted] it is written in Scripture, 'It shall not be baked with leaven their portion²⁵ from which Resh Lakish inferred that even their portion²⁶ must not be baked with leaven! Again [Were you, to suggest,]²³ that if he wished he could eat it²⁴ unleavened and, if he preferred, he could eat it as a dumpling,²⁷ how [it could be retorted] is one to imagine [such a dumpling]? If it is unleavened, well, then it is unleavened;²⁸ and if it is not unleavened, the All Merciful, surely, has said without leaven!²⁹ — No;³⁰ it³¹ may indeed be assumed to be unleavened; but the object of the exposition of the Scriptural text³² was to forbid it.³³ In respect of what practical issue, then,³⁴ has it been stated that a dumpling may be regarded as unleavened bread? — [The statement was made] to indicate that a man may perform with it³¹ his duty³⁵ on the Passover. Though he made it first into a dumpling, it is nevertheless designated the 'bread of affliction', since he subsequently baked it in an oven. Consequently a man may perform with it his duty³⁵ on the Passover. MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE HE IS REGARDED AS ONE OF THE OTHER BROTHERS IN RESPECT OF INHERITANCE.³⁶ IF, HOWEVER, THE FATHER³⁷ WAS LIVING,³⁸ THE ESTATE BELONGS TO THE FATHER.³⁹

HE WHO MARRIES HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE GAINS POSSESSION OF HIS BROTHER'S³⁷ ESTATE. R. JUDAH SAID: IN EITHER CASE,⁴⁰ IF THE FATHER³⁷ WAS LIVING³⁸ THE ESTATE BELONGS TO THE FATHER.

GEMARA. Is not this⁴¹ obvious? — It might have been presumed that halizah takes the place of the levirate marriage and he receives, therefore, all the estate, hence it was taught [that he does not].⁴² If so,⁴³ why was it stated that HE IS REGARDED AS ONE OF THE OTHER BROTHERS when it should have been stated, he is to be regarded only as one of the brothers! — In truth [this is the purpose of our Mishnah]: It might have been assumed that because he deprived her [of levirate marriage]⁴⁴ he shall be penalized,⁴⁵ hence we were taught [that he does receive a share].

IF, HOWEVER, THE FATHER WAS LIVING, [THE ESTATE BELONGS TO HIM], for a Master said that a father takes precedence over all his lineal descendants.⁴⁶

HE WHO MARRIES HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE etc. What is the reason? — The All Merciful said, Shall succeed in the name of his brother,⁴⁷ and behold he⁴⁸ has succeeded.

R. JUDAH SAID etc. Said 'Ulla: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah, and R. Isaac Nappaha likewise said: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah.

'Ulla, furthermore, (others say, R. Isaac Nappaha) said: What is R. Judah's reason? — Because it is written in Scripture, And it shall be, that the firstborn that he beareth,⁴⁹ [he is] like the firstborn; as the firstborn has nothing while his father is alive, so has this one⁵⁰ also nothing while his father is alive. If [one were to suggest that] as the firstborn receives a double portion after his father's death so shall this one also receive a double portion⁵¹ after his father's death, [it might be retorted]: Is it written, 'Shall succeed in the name of his father'? It is written, surely, Shall succeed in the name of his brother,⁵² not 'in the name of his father'.⁵³ Might it be suggested that, where the father is not alive to receive the inheritance,⁵⁴ the law of the levirate marriage should be carried out, but where the father is alive [and the levir] does not receive the inheritance the law of the levirate marriage shall not be carried out? — Has the All Merciful in any way made the levirate marriage dependent on the inheritance? The levir must contract the levirate marriage in any case, and if any inheritance is available he receives it; if not, he does not receive it.

The Bible teacher, R. Hanina, once sat before R. Jannai, and as he sat there he stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah. The other called out to him: Go out, read Biblical verses outside,⁵⁵ the halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah.

A tanna recited in the presence of R. Nahman: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah. The other said to him: In agreement with whom, then? In agreement with the Rabbis? This is surely obvious, [since in a dispute between] one individual and a majority the halachah is in agreement with the majority! — 'Shall I', the first asked him, 'reject it'?⁵⁶ 'No', the other replied, 'you were taught [that] the halachah is [in agreement with R. Judah] which, presenting to you a difficulty,⁵⁷ you reversed,⁵⁸ and in so far as you reversed it your wording is well justified.⁵⁹

HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER MOTHER, HER MOTHER'S MOTHER AND HER FATHER'S MOTHER; HER DAUGHTER, HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER AND HER SON'S DAUGHTER; AND ALSO HER SISTER WHILE SHE¹ IS ALIVE. THE OTHER BROTHERS, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED.² SHE¹ IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS FATHER AND HIS FATHER'S FATHER;³ HIS SON AND HIS SON'S SON; HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON.

A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH BUT IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE RIVAL OF THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH.

GEMARA. The question was raised: Were relatives of the second degree⁴ forbidden⁵ in the case of a haluzah as a preventive measure,⁶ or not? Did the Rabbis forbid marriage with relatives of the second degree, as a preventive measure,⁶ only in respect of a relative who is pentateuchally forbidden,⁷ but in respect of a haluzah⁸ the Rabbis did not forbid relatives of the second degree as a preventive measure, or is there perhaps no difference?⁹ — Come and hear: HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER MOTHER AND HER MOTHER'S MOTHER, but 'her mother's mother's mother' is not mentioned!¹⁰ [No.] It is possible that the reason why this relative was omitted¹¹ is because it was desired to state in the final clause, THE OTHER BROTHERS, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED, and, were 'her mother's mother's mother' also mentioned it might have been presumed that the brothers are permitted [to marry] her mother's mother's mother only¹² but not her mother's mother or her mother.¹³ Then let 'her mother's mother's mother' be mentioned, and let it also be stated: The brothers are permitted to marry all of them!¹⁴ — This is a difficulty.

Come and hear: SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS FATHER AND HIS FATHER'S FATHER. 'His father's father,' at any rate, was mentioned. Is not this¹⁵ due to¹⁶ the levir who participated in the halizah, through whom she is the daughter-in-law of his¹⁷ son?¹⁸ — No; this¹⁹ is due to the deceased through whom she is the daughter-in-law of his²⁰ son.²¹

Come and hear: AND HIS SON'S SON, Is not this¹⁹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is the wife of his²² father's father?¹⁸ — No; it¹⁹ is due to the deceased through whom she is his²² father's father's brother's wife.²¹ But, surely, Amemar permitted the marriage of one's father's father's brother's wife!²³ — Amemar interprets that²⁴ to refer to the son of the grandfather.²⁵ If so, [HIS SON, AND SON'S SON] are the same as HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON!²⁶ — Both his paternal brother and his maternal brother were specified.²⁷

Come and hear what R. Hiyya taught:²⁸ Four [categories of relatives are forbidden]²⁹ Pentateuchally³⁰ and four Rabbinically.³¹ His³² father and his³³ son, his³⁴ brother and his³⁵ brother's son are Pentateuchally forbidden;³⁰ his father's father³⁶ and his mother's father,³⁷ his son's son³⁸ and his daughter's son³⁹ are forbidden Rabbinically.⁴⁰ 'His father's father', at any rate, is mentioned here. Is not this⁴¹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his son's daughter-in-law?⁴² — No; it⁴¹ is due to the deceased⁴³ whose son's daughter-in-law she is.

Come and hear: 'His mother's father'.⁴⁴ Is not this⁴¹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his⁴⁵ daughter's daughter-in-law?⁴⁶ — No; it⁴¹ is due to the deceased⁴⁷ through whom she is his⁴⁵ daughter's daughter-in-law.

Come and hear: 'And his son's son'.⁴⁸ Is not this⁴¹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his father's father's wife?⁴² — No; it⁴¹ is due to the deceased⁴⁷ through whom she is his father's father's brother's wife. But, surely, Amemar permitted the marriage of one's father's father's brother's wife!⁴⁹ — Amemar explains that⁵⁰ to be due to the levir who participated in the halizah,⁵¹ but is of the opinion that relatives of the second degree were forbidden as a preventive measure even in respect of a haluzah.⁵²

Come and hear: 'And the son of his daughter'.⁴⁸ Is not this⁴¹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his mother's father's wife?⁴² — No; it⁴¹ is due to the deceased⁴⁷ through whom she is his mother's father's brother's wife. But, surely, no prohibition as a preventive measure was made in respect of the second degrees of incest!⁵³ Consequently⁵⁴ it must be due to the levir who participated in the halizah,⁵⁵ and thus it may be inferred that relatives of the second degree were forbidden as a preventive measure even in the case of a haluzah. This proves it.

A MAN IS PERMITTED etc. R. Tobi b. Kisna said in the name of Samuel: Where a man had intercourse with the rival of his haluzah the child [born from such a union] is a bastard. What is the reason? — Because she⁵⁶ remains under her original prohibition.⁵⁷

Said R. Joseph: We also have learned [to the same effect]: A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH. Now, if you grant that the rival is excluded⁵⁸ one can well understand why the man is permitted to marry her sister.⁵⁹ If it be maintained, however, that the rival has the same status as the haluzah, why [should her sister] be permitted [to him]?⁶⁰

May it be suggested that this⁶¹ furnishes an objection against R. Johanan who stated: Neither he⁶² nor the other brothers are subject to kareth either for [the betrothal of] a haluzah or for [the betrothal of] her rival?⁶³ — R. Johanan can answer you: Do you understand it!⁶⁴ Is the sister of a haluzah Pentateuchally forbidden?⁶⁵ Surely Resh Lakish said: Here⁶⁶ it was taught by Rabbi that the prohibition to marry the sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchal and that that of the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical!⁶⁷

Why is there a difference [in the law] between the one and the other?⁶⁸

-
- (1) The haluzah (v. Glos.).
 - (2) To marry the enumerated relatives of the haluzah.
 - (3) Bomberg ed. adds, 'and his mother's father'.
 - (4) E.g., the haluzah's mother's mother's mother or her father's mother's mother (Rashi). Cf. supra 21a.
 - (5) Rabbinically.
 - (6) Against marriage with relatives of the first degree.
 - (7) I.e. 'a wife's relatives whose prohibition is specifically stated in the Pentateuch.

- (8) Whose relatives, even of the first degree, are only Rabbinically forbidden.
- (9) In respect of the law of incest, between the relatives of a wife who are Pentateuchally forbidden and those of a haluzah who are only Rabbinically forbidden.
- (10) V. supra p. 259, n. 9.
- (11) Lit., 'that he did not teach'.
- (12) Because even in the case of one's wife she is not Biblically forbidden.
- (13) Who, in the case of one's wife, are Pentateuchally prohibited.
- (14) And the possible misinterpretation would thus be avoided.
- (15) Prohibition to marry a father's father.
- (16) Lit., 'what not, owing to'.
- (17) The father's father.
- (18) I.e., a relative of the second degree, which proves that even such relatives were forbidden in respect of a haluzah.
- (19) V. supra note 9.
- (20) V. supra n. 20.
- (21) In whose case the prohibition is Pentateuchal and provides no answer to our enquiry.
- (22) The son's son.
- (23) Supra 21b. How, then, according to Amemar, could this case be included among forbidden relatives?
- (24) The SON'S SON in our Mishnah.
- (25) The father of both the deceased and of the levir who submitted to the haluzah. Our Mishnah is thus interpreted: HIS FATHER is the father of the deceased and of the levir who participated in the haluzah; HIS SON, i.e., the son of the FATHER mentioned, who is the brother of the deceased and of the levir who participated in the haluzah; and HIS SON'S SON is the son of the son of the father mentioned, to whom the haluzah is forbidden as the wife of his father's brother.
- (26) V. supra n. 1.
- (27) The former by HIS SON AND HIS SON'S SON (v. supra n. 1) and the latter by HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON, the prohibitions being Pentateuchal since they are due to the woman's relationship with the deceased as his wife, and not to her relationship with the levir as haluzah, the prohibitions resulting from which could only be Rabbinical.
- (28) In respect of a haluzah.
- (29) To marry her.
- (30) Lit., 'from the words of the Torah', i.e., owing to their relationship to the haluzah as the wife of the deceased, and the prohibition to marry whom is specifically mentioned in the Pentateuch.
- (31) Lit., 'from the words of the Scribes'.
- (32) The levir's (who participated in the haluzah). The prohibition is Pentateuchal, it being due to his brother, the deceased, whose wife and whose father's daughter-in-law the haluzah was.
- (33) The levir's (v. supra n. 8). The haluzah is forbidden to him Pentateuchally as the wife of his father's brother.
- (34) The levir's (v. supra n. 8), who is also the brother of the deceased, and the haluzah is forbidden to him Pentateuchally.
- (35) The levir's (v supra n. 8), the deceased also having been his father's brother, and the prohibition is consequently Pentateuchal.
- (36) To whom the haluzah is forbidden as his son's daughter-in-law.
- (37) The prohibition being that of one's daughter's daughter-in-law.
- (38) It is now assumed that the prohibition to marry this relative is due to the levir who participated in the haluzah through whom she is his father's father's wife.
- (39) Whose mother's father's wife she was.
- (40) Cf. supra note 7, all being cases of the second degree, forbidden by a provision of the Rabbis only.
- (41) The prohibition to marry this relative.
- (42) Which proves that, even in respect of a haluzah, relatives of the second degree are prohibited.
- (43) In whose case the prohibition is Pentateuchal, and supplies no answer to our enquiry.
- (44) This is a citation from R. Hiyya's Baraita supra.
- (45) His mother's father's.
- (46) V. supra n. 2.
- (47) The prohibition being a preventive measure against the infringement of a Pentateuchal law. Consequently it supplies no proof in respect of our enquiry which is concerned with a preventive measure against an infringement of a Rabbinical law.

(48) V. supra n. 4.

(49) How then could such a case be included among forbidden relatives?

(50) 'Son's son' in R. Hiyya's Baraitha.

(51) The prohibition being that of 'his father's father's wife', as first assumed.

(52) According to those, however, who, contrary to the opinion of Amemar, forbid marriage with a father's father's brother's wife, the prohibition in R. Hiyya's Baraitha might still be attributed to the deceased (v. supra n. 7), and the original enquiry as to whether relatives of the second degree were forbidden in the case of a haluzah still remains unanswered.

(53) How then could it be suggested that the prohibition is due to the fact that the haluzah is the 'wife of the mother's father's brother' of the deceased?

(54) Lit., 'what, not'?

(55) The prohibition being that of 'his mother's father's wife' who is a relative of the second degree.

(56) The rival.

(57) Of 'brother's wife', which is subject to the penalty of kareth. Children born from a union that is forbidden under such a penalty are deemed to be bastards.

(58) [Lit., 'outside'. Rashi reads: 'Stands outside'.] From the restrictions of the haluzah, the latter not being regarded as her agent or representative.

(59) Since she herself remains forbidden to the levir as 'brother's wife', her sister is not the 'sister of a haluzah'.

(60) She should be forbidden as the sister of a haluzah! As she is permitted, however, it must be granted that the rival of a haluzah remains under the original prohibition of 'brother's wife', which entails the penalty of kareth. (V. supra n. 5).

(61) The inference from our Mishnah. (V. supra n. 8 second clause).

(62) The levir who submitted to halizah.

(63) Supra 10b; while from the inference of our Mishnah, as has been proved, the penalty for contracting a union with the rival of a haluzah is kareth!

(64) R. Joseph's argument.

(65) As R. Joseph implies by his assumption that if the rival had the same status as the haluzah her sister would be forbidden.

(66) In the following Mishnah to which he refers.

(67) The reason why the sister of a rival of a haluzah is permitted is not that assumed by R. Joseph. but the following: As the prohibition of the sister of a haluzah herself is only Rabbinical, the prohibition was not extended to the sister of the rival of the haluzah also.

(68) The first and second case of the final clause of our Mishnah. THE RIVAL OF THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH is surely as much of a stranger to him as THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 41a

— The Rabbis have enacted a preventive measure¹ in respect of her who accompanies the haluzah to court;² in the case, however, of her who does not accompany her to court³ the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure.⁴

MISHNAH. WHERE HE PARTICIPATED IN A HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE, AND HIS BROTHER MARRIED HER SISTER AND DIED,⁵ THE WIDOW⁶ MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁷

SIMILARLY⁸ WHERE A MAN DIVORCED HIS WIFE AND HIS BROTHER MARRIED HER SISTER AND DIED⁵ THE WIDOW IS EXEMPT.⁹

IF A BROTHER OF THE LEVIR HAD BETROTHED THE SISTER OF THE WIDOW WHO WAS AWAITING THE LEVIR'S DECISION, HE IS TOLD, SO IT HAS BEEN STATED IN THE NAME OF R. JUDAH B. BATHYRA, WAIT¹⁰ UNTIL YOUR BROTHER HAS ACTED'.¹¹ IF

HIS BROTHER HAS PARTICIPATED WITH THE WIDOW IN THE HALIZAH OR CONTRACTED WITH HER THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, HE MAY MARRY HIS [BETROTHED] WIFE. IF THE SISTER-IN-LAW DIED HE MAY ALSO MARRY HIS [BETROTHED] WIFE. BUT IF THE LEVIR DIED, HE¹² MUST RELEASE HIS [BETROTHED] WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH.¹³

GEMARA. What [is meant by] SIMILARLY?¹⁴ — Read: BUT WHERE A MAN DIVORCED.

Resh Lakish said: Here¹⁵ it was taught by Rabbi¹⁶ that [the prohibition to marry the] sister of a divorced wife is pentateuchal [and that of] the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical.

HAD BETROTHED [THE SISTER OF THE] WIDOW WHO WAS AWAITING THE LEVIR'S DECISION etc. Samuel said: The halachah is in agreement with the view of R. Judah b. Bathyra.¹⁷

The question was raised: If his wife¹⁸ died may he marry his sister-in-law?¹⁹ — Both Rab and R. Hanina stated: If his wife died he is permitted to marry his sister-in-law. But both Samuel and R. Assi stated: If his wife died he is forbidden to marry his sister-in-law. Said Raba: What is Rab's reason? — Because she is a deceased brother's wife who was permitted²⁰ then forbidden²¹ and then again permitted²² and who consequently reverts to her first state of permissibility.

R. Hammuna raised an objection: If two of three brothers were married to two sisters and the third was unmarried, and when one of the sisters' husbands died the unmarried brother addressed to the widow a ma'amar, and then the second brother²³ died,²⁴ and after him his wife also died,²⁵ that sister-in-law must perform halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.²⁶ But why?²⁷ Let her be regarded²⁸ as a deceased brother's wife who was permitted²⁹ then forbidden,³⁰ and then again permitted²² who reverts to her former state of permissibility!³¹ He remained silent. After the other went out he said: I should have told³² him that it³³ represents the view of R. Eleazar who maintains that once she has been forbidden to him for one moment she is forbidden to him for ever! Subsequently he remarked: It might be contended that R. Eleazar held that view only where she was not fit³⁴ at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage;³⁵ did he express such an opinion, however, in the case where she was fit³⁴ at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage?³⁶ Subsequently however, he said: Yes,³⁷ for, surely, it was taught: R. Eleazar said: If his³⁸ yebamah died, his wife is permitted to him; if his wife died, that yebamah must perform halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.

Must it then be assumed that Samuel and R. Assi are of the same opinion as R. Eleazar?³⁹ — The may be said to be in agreement even with the Rabbis. For the Rabbis differed from R. Eleazar⁴⁰ only because from the time she became subject to the levirate marriage and onward she was no longer forbidden to him.⁴¹ Here,⁴² however, where she was so forbidden⁴³ even the Rabbis agree.⁴⁴

MISHNAH. THE DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE⁴⁵ SHALL NEITHER PERFORM THE HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED.⁴⁶ SIMILARLY ALL OTHER WOMEN⁴⁷ SHALL BE NEITHER BETROTHED NOR MARRIED BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED⁴⁶ WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS, WHETHER DIVORCEES OR WIDOWS,⁴⁸ WHETHER MARRIED OR BETROTHED.

R. JUDAH SAID: THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED MAY BE BETROTHED [FORTHWITH], AND THOSE WHO WERE BETROTHED MAY EVEN BE MARRIED [FORTHWITH], WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE BETROTHED WOMEN IN JUDAEA, BECAUSE THERE THE BRIDEGROOM WAS TOO INTIMATE⁴⁹ WITH HIS BRIDE.⁵⁰

R. JOSE SAID: ALL [MARRIED] WOMEN⁵¹ MAY BE BETROTHED [FORTHWITH] EXCEPTING THE WIDOW⁵²

- (1) The prohibition to marry the rival of the relative of one's Haluzah.
- (2) I.e., her sister whom she takes with her to court when she goes to perform the halizah. The public, not being aware which of the sisters is the haluzah, might subsequently mistake the one for the other. Hence the rival of the sister was forbidden to the levir who participated in the halizah in order that people might not think that he married the rival of the haluzah herself.
- (3) The widow does not take her rival with her when she goes to court to perform halizah.
- (4) Since no one is likely to mistake the rival for the haluzah. Hence the law that the relative of the rival is permitted.
- (5) Without issue.
- (6) Being the sister of a haluzah.
- (7) The sister of a haluzah is (a) Pentateuchally permitted but (b) Rabbinically forbidden. Because of (a) she is subjected to the levirate bond and requires halizah, and because of (b) she is forbidden to contract the levirate marriage.
- (8) This expression is discussed in the Gemara infra.
- (9) From the halizah as well as from the levirate marriage. The sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchally forbidden to the divorcee.
- (10) With the consummation of the marriage.
- (11) I.e., until he had either contracted the levirate marriage or submitted to halizah. Before such action the sister of the widow is forbidden to him, as to all the other brothers, as the sister of their zekukah.
- (12) Being the only surviving brother and, consequently, the only one to whom the widow is subject.
- (13) Being the sister of his divorced wife she is not permitted to contract with him the levirate marriage. (Cf. supra p. 264, n. 11.
- (14) Seeing that the clause introduced by this expression is not at all similar to the previous one.
- (15) In the first two clauses of our Mishnah,
- (16) R. Judah the Prince, Redactor of the Mishnah.
- (17) That the levirate bond between the widow and all the surviving brothers remains in force until one of the brothers has contracted the levirate marriage or has submitted to halizah.
- (18) The sister of the widow of his deceased brother.
- (19) I.e., the widow whose deceased sister is now no more his wife.
- (20) When her husband died without issue.
- (21) When the brother had betrothed her sister.
- (22) When her sister died.
- (23) Of the two who married the two sisters.
- (24) And his widow, the sister of the first widow to whom the ma'amar had been addressed by the third brother, had thus come under the levirate bond and consequently caused her sister's prohibition to the third brother as 'the sister of his zekukah'.
- (25) When the first widow, the surviving sister, is no more the 'sister of his zekukah'.
- (26) Cf. supra 29a.
- (27) If Rab's reason as given by Raba is to be accepted, why should not the widow, now that her sister had died, be permitted to enter into levirate marriage?
- (28) On the analogy of Rab's reasoning.
- (29) When her husband died and the unmarried brother addressed a ma'amar to her.
- (30) When the second brother, the husband of the other sister, died.
- (31) Why then was it stated that she may not contract the levirate marriage and that she is restricted to halizah only?
- (32) Lit., 'why did I not tell'.
- (33) The Baraitha cited by R. Hamnuna.
- (34) To be married by the levir.
- (35) R. Eleazar's view was expressed in connection with a woman who had been divorced (and had thus become forbidden to the levir as the 'divorcee of his brother'), and then was remarried, and finally, on the death of her husband, became subject to the levir as the wife of his deceased childless brother (v. infra 108bf). In this case, when the widow became subject to the levirate obligations, she had been already, for a time, forbidden to the levir as the 'divorcee of his brother'.

(36) As is the case in the Baraita cited by R. Hamnuna. The prohibition there arose after she had become subject to the obligations of the levirate.

(37) I.e., R. Eleazar forbids levirate marriage for ever, if the widow was unfit for such a marriage for one single moment, even if at the time when she became subject to the levirate obligations she (the widow) was quite fit to contract the carriage.

(38) The levir's, who betrothed the sister of his yebamah.

(39) Who is in a minority, against that of the Rabbis. Would they agree with a minority against the ruling of the majority?

(40) In the case of a woman who had been divorced and then remarried and then became subject to the levirate obligation, infra 108b. Cf. supra p. 266, n. 16.

(41) The prohibition having ceased with the death of her husband when the obligation of the levirate had arisen.

(42) The case cited by R. Hamnuna.

(43) Because after she became subject to the levirate obligations he was for a time, owing to the death of his second brother, forbidden to her as the sister of his zekukah.

(44) That only halizah must be performed, levirate marriage being forbidden.

(45) Whose husband died without issue, and who became subject to the levirate obligations.

(46) From the date of her husband's death. The reasons are discussed in the Gemara infra.

(47) Whose husbands have died.

(48) The distinctions between these classes are discussed in the Gemara.

(49) Lit., 'his heart is bold', and cohabitation might have taken place.

(50) Cf. Keth. 12a,

(51) Whose husbands have died.

(52) Who must allow a period of thirty days to pass.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 41b

OWING TO HER MOURNING.¹

GEMARA. It is quite reasonable that she² shall not be taken [forthwith] in levirate marriage, since the child [whom she might bear] may be viable,³ and the levir would thus infringe the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife, which is Pentateuchal; but why should she not [forthwith] perform the halizah?⁴ Does this,⁵ then, present an objection against R. Johanan who said that the halizah of a pregnant woman is deemed to be a valid halizah?⁶ But has not an objection against R. Johanan once been raised?⁷ — [The question is whether] it may be assumed that an objection arises from here also?⁸ — No; here, the reason⁹ is this: The child might be viable;¹⁰ and you would in consequence subject her to the need for an announcement¹¹ in respect of the priesthood.¹² Well, let her be subjected!¹³ — It may happen that some people would be present at the halizah but would not be present at the announcement, and they would consider her ineligible to marry a priest.

This quite satisfactorily explains the case of a widow; what can be said, however, in respect of a divorced woman?¹⁴ — Because she would thereby¹⁵ lose her maintenance.¹⁶ This provides a quite satisfactory explanation in the case of a married woman; what can be said, however, in respect of a betrothed divorcee?¹⁷ — The reason¹⁸ is rather the ruling of¹⁹ R. Jose. For it was taught: A man once appeared before R. Jose and said to him; 'May halizah be performed within three months'? The master replied, 'She must not perform the halizah'. — 'Let her perform the halizah! What would she lose'?²⁰ Thereupon he recited for him this Scriptural text: If the man like not,²¹ [implying] that if he likes he may contract the levirate marriage; whosoever may go up²² to contract the levirate marriage may also go up to perform the halizah etc.²³

R. Hinena raised an objection: In doubtful cases halizah is performed and no levirate marriage may be contracted. Now, what is meant by 'doubtful cases'? If it be assumed to mean doubtful betrothal;²⁴ why, indeed, should no levirate marriage be contracted? Let the widow be taken in levirate marriage since no objection could possibly be raised!²⁵ Consequently,²⁶ the doubt must consist in the betrothal of two sisters when the man is uncertain which of them he betrothed;²⁷ and yet it was stated that halizah was to be performed!²⁸ — How now! There,²⁹ if Elijah were to come and point out the sister that was betrothed, she would be eligible for both halizah and levirate marriage;³⁰ here,³¹ however, were Elijah to come and declare that the widow was not pregnant, would anyone heed him and allow her to contract the levirate marriage? Surely even a minor who is incapable of pregnancy must wait three months!³²

Our Rabbis taught: A yebamah³³ is maintained during the first three months out of the estate of her husband. Subsequently³⁴ she is not to be maintained either out of the estate of her husband or out of that of the levir. If, however, the levir appeared in court³⁵ and then absconded, she is maintained out of the estate of the levir. If she became subject to a levir who was a minor she receives nothing from the levir. Does she, however, [receive her maintenance] from her husband's estate? — On this question, R. Aha and Rabina are in dispute. One holds that she receives and the other holds that she does not. And the law is that she receives nothing; for her penalty comes from heaven.

Our Rabbis learned: A yebamah,³⁶ with whom the brothers had participated in halizah within the three months, must wait three months.³⁷

- (1) Which terminates on the thirtieth day.
 - (2) The deceased brother's wife spoken of in our Mishnah.
 - (3) And the levirate obligations would thereby be removed.
 - (4) Marriage with an outsider could thus take place after three months, if she is found to be without child or if she miscarried.
 - (5) The implication that halizah is forbidden because it is possible that the woman will miscarry after the ceremony and, believing the halizah to have been valid, would remarry without performing the ceremony again while, in fact, the law is that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not valid.
 - (6) Supra 35b.
 - (7) V. n. 11; why then doubt it?
 - (8) So that if the first objection should ever be removed the second would still remain.
 - (9) Why halizah also must be postponed until three months have passed.
 - (10) And his birth would render the halizah invalid, and his mother would consequently be permitted to marry a priest whom, as a haluzah, she would not have been allowed to marry.
 - (11) That the halizah was invalid and that the widow is eligible to marry a priest.
 - (12) V. p. 268 n. 15.
 - (13) To the necessary announcement. What loss could such an announcement cause her?
 - (14) I.e., who had been a divorcee prior to her marriage with the deceased brother. Having been divorced once, she is forever ineligible to marry a priest, even though she were no haluzah. Why, then, should she be forbidden to perform the halizah forthwith?
 - (15) By performing the halizah before the three months have passed.
 - (16) Which she receives from her deceased husband's estate for a period of three months. This would cease with the performance of the halizah. [On this view the Mishnah does not state a prohibition but a piece of sound advice (Tosaf.)]
 - (17) A woman who has been betrothed whilst she was a divorcee and became a widow before the marriage took place. As a betrothed she is not entitled to maintenance from the dead man's estate, and as a divorcee she is not eligible to marry a priest. Why, then, should she not be allowed forthwith to perform the halizah?
 - (18) V. supra p. 268, n. 14.
 - (19) Lit., 'because of'.
 - (20) Lit., 'and what in it'.
 - (21) Deut. XXV, 7.
 - (22) Sc. to the gate (cf. loc. cit.) i.e., to court.
 - (23) 'And whosoever may not go up to contract the levirate marriage may not go up to perform the halizah' (v. supra 20a, 36a, infra 44a). Since the widow may not contract levirate marriage within three months, she may not perform halizah either. This, however, presents no objection to R. Johanan's ruling since, though it is improper to arrange a halizah within the three months, if halizah had actually taken place it is valid.

(24) Such as are dealt with in the Mishnah and subsequent Gemara supra 30b.

(25) Lit., 'and there is nothing in it'. If the widow's betrothal by the deceased was valid, the levirate marriage is also valid; and if it was not valid, the so-called widow is in reality an unmarried woman and may be married as a stranger.

(26) Lit., 'but not?'

(27) And he died without issue.

(28) Though no levirate marriage may be contracted owing to the doubt in the case of each sister that she might be the 'sister of a zekukah'. How, then, could it be said that halizah may be performed only where levirate marriage also is possible?

(29) Where it is uncertain which sister was betrothed.

(30) Each sister may consequently be regarded as virtually fit for the levirate marriage.

(31) A widow within the first three months after her husband's death.

(32) As levirate marriage is thus absolutely forbidden for the time being, the halizah also must be postponed until the time when levirate marriage would be permitted. [Where, however, the prohibition to contract levirate marriage is absolute, as, for example, in the case of a sister of a haluzah (supra 41a) halizah may be performed (Rashi).]

(33) Who awaits halizah or levirate marriage which is not to take place before three months have passed.

(34) Lit., 'from now and onwards'.

(35) In response to the widow's claim that he should contract levirate marriage or submit to halizah.

(36) V. p. 270, n. 10.

(37) Dating from her husband's death, and may contract marriage after that period.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 42a

If [the halizah was performed] after the three months, she need not wait three months.¹ Thus it may be inferred that the three months spoken of are [to be dated] from the time of the husband's death and not from the time of the levir's halizah.

Why [is the law here]² different from that of a letter of divorce where Rab maintains [that the waiting period is to date] from the time of the delivery³ and Samuel maintains [that it is to date] from the time of writing?⁴ — Raba replied: A minori ad majus, if you permitted marriage⁵ where a prohibition under the penalty of kareth is involved,⁶ how much more so [should marriage be permitted⁵ where only] an ordinary prohibition⁷ [is involved]!⁸

SIMILARLY ALL OTHER WOMEN. The case of a sister-in-law⁹ one can well understand, as has just been explained,¹⁰ but why ALL OTHER WOMEN?¹¹ — R. Nahman replied in the name of Samuel: Because Scripture said, To be a God unto thee and unto thy seed after thee,¹² a distinction must be made between the seed of the first husband and the seed of the second.

Raba raised an objection: Hence must a male proselyte and a female proselyte¹³ wait three months.¹⁴ Now, what distinction is there to be made here? — Here also there is the distinction to be made between seed that was sown in holiness and seed that was not sown in holiness.

Raba said: This¹⁵ is a preventive measure against the possibility of his¹⁶ marrying his paternal sister,¹⁷ contracting levirate marriage with the wife of his maternal brother,¹⁸ setting his mother free to marry anybody¹⁹ and releasing his sister-in-law to all the world.²⁰

R. Hanania raised an objection: In all these²¹ I read a provision against incest, but here²² it is a provision in favour of the child.²³ Now, if this²⁴ is tenable, all²⁵ would be due to a provision against incest! — The meaning of 'a provision in favour of the child' is that the child might not infringe a prohibition of incest'.²⁶

It is easy to understand why [a divorcee or widow] shall not marry after waiting a period of just two months because that would create a doubt as to whether the child is a nine-months one of the first²⁷ or a seven-months one of the second.²⁷ Let her wait, however, one month only and then marry, so that, should she give birth at seven months, the child would be a seven-months one of the last husband;²⁸ and should she give birth at eight months the child would obviously be a nine-months one of the first!²⁷ — Even if she gave birth at eight months it might still be assumed to be the child of the last husband since it may be that her conception was delayed one month.²⁹

Let her, then, wait two months and a half and marry, so that, were she to give birth at seven months, the child would obviously be a seven-months one of the last,²⁷ and were she to give birth at six months and a half, the child would naturally be a nine-months one of the first;³⁰ for had he been the son of the last he would not be viable as a six-and-a-half-months child. — Even if she gave birth at six and a half months it is still possible to assume the child to be that of the last husband, for Mar Zutra stated: Even according to him who said that a woman who bears at nine months does not give birth before the full number of months had been completed,³⁰ a woman who bears at seven months ‘does give birth before the full number of months has been completed;³⁰ for it is stated in Scripture, And it came to pass, after the cycles of days,’³¹ the minimum of ‘cycles’³² is two, and the minimum of ‘days’ is two.³³ Let her, then, wait a little³⁴ and marry, and when the three months³⁵ will have been fulfilled she might be examined!³⁶ — R. Safra replied: Married women are not examined, in order that they may not become repulsive to their husbands. Then let her be examined by her walk!³⁷ — Rami b. Mama replied: A woman conceals the fact³⁸ in order that her child may inherit his share in her [second] husband's estate. Where, however, it has been ascertained that she³⁹ was pregnant, let her be permitted to marry! Why then was it taught: A man shall not marry the pregnant, or nursing wife of another;⁴⁰ and if he married, he must divorce her and never again remarry her! — This⁴¹ is a preventive measure against the possibility of turning the foetus into a sandal.⁴² If so, [this should apply in the case] of one's own wife also!⁴³ — If according to him who said, ‘With an absorbent’,⁴⁴ she uses⁴⁵ an absorbent; and if according to him who said, ‘Mercy will be shewn from heaven’,⁴⁶ mercy will be shewn from heaven. Here also⁴⁷ [it could be argued]: If according to him who said, ‘With an absorbent’, she uses an absorbent; if according to him who said, ‘Mercy will be shewn from heaven’, mercy will be shewn from heaven! — [The prohibition]⁴⁸ is due, rather, to [the danger of abdominal] pressure.⁴⁹ If so, [this⁵⁰ applies in the case] of one's own wife also!⁵¹ — A man has consideration for his own.⁵² Here also⁵³ one would have consideration for the child!⁵⁴ — [The reason is]⁵⁵ rather because a pregnant woman is usually expected to breast-feed her child [and were she to marry during pregnancy] she might conceive again, her milk would become turbid, and she might thereby¹ cause the death of the child. If so, [this applies in the case] of the man's own child also! — His own child she would sustain with eggs and milk. Would she not sustain her own child also with eggs and with milk? — Her husband would not give her the means. Let her claim it² from the heirs!³ — Abaye replied: A woman would shrink from going to court⁴ and would rather let her child die.

WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS. Who are the VIRGINS and who are the BETROTHED?⁵ Who are NON-VIRGINS and who are MARRIED women?⁶ — Rab Judah replied, It is this that was meant: WHETHER VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS who became widows or were divorced⁷ either after betrothal or after marriage.⁸

R. Eleazar did not go one day⁹ to the Beth Hamidrash. On meeting R. Assi he asked him, 'What did the Rabbis discourse at the Beth Hamidrash?' The other replied 'Thus said R. Johanan: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose'.¹⁰ — Does this, then, imply that only individual opinion¹¹ is against him?¹² — Yes; and so it was taught: A [married woman] who was always anxious¹³ to spend her time¹⁴ at her paternal home,¹⁵ or who had some angry quarrel at her husband's home,¹⁶ or whose husband was in prison¹⁷ or was old or infirm,¹⁶ or who was herself infirm,¹⁸ or had miscarried after the death of her husband, or was barren, old, a minor, incapable of conception or in any other way incapacitated from procreation, must¹⁹ wait three months.²⁰ These are the words of R. Meir. R. Judah²¹ permits immediate betrothal and marriage.²²

R. Hiyya b. Abba said: R. Johanan retracted.²³ Said R. Joseph: If he retracted, he did so on account of what has been taught at the Vineyard.²⁴ For it was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: I heard from the mouth of the Sages in the Vineyard of Jabneh that all women must wait three months.²⁵

Said R. Jeremiah to R. Zerika: When you visit R. Abbahu point out to him the following contradiction: Could R. Johanan have said, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose' seeing that he stated elsewhere 'the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous Mishnah',²⁶ and we learned, ALL OTHER WOMEN SHALL BE NEITHER MARRIED NOR BETROTHED BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED, WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS!²⁷ The other replied, 'The one who pointed out to you this contradiction did not care much for [the quality of] flour.'²⁸ This is an anonymous Mishnah that was followed by a dispute,²⁹ where the halachah does not agree with the anonymous Mishnah; for R. Papa or, some say, R. Johanan stated: When a disputed ruling is followed by an anonymous one,³⁰ the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous ruling; when, however, an anonymous ruling is followed by a dispute,³¹ the halachah is not in agreement with the anonymous ruling.

R. Abbahu once walked leaning upon the shoulder of his attendant,³² R. Nahum, whilst gathering from him information as to traditional rulings.³³ He inquired of him: What [is the halachah] where a dispute is followed by an anonymous statement? The other replied: The halachah is in agreement with the anonymous statement, 'What [is the halachah], the first enquired, 'when] an anonymous statement is followed by a dispute'? The other replied: The halachah is not in agreement with the anonymous statement. 'What if the anonymous statement occurs in a Mishnah and the dispute in a Baraita'? The other replied: The halachah is in agreement with the anonymous statement. 'What if the dispute is in the Mishnah and the anonymous statement in the Baraita'? The other replied:

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 43a

If Rabbi¹ has not taught it,² whence would R. Hiyya³ know it! The first said to him: Surely we learned: A hackle for flax, whose teeth were broken off and two remained, is [susceptible to levitical] uncleanness, but [if only] one [tooth remained,⁴ it is levitically] clean.⁵ All the teeth, however, if they were removed one by one are individually [susceptible to levitical] uncleanness.⁶ A wool [comb] whose alternate teeth⁷ are broken off is levitically clean.⁸ If three consecutive⁹ teeth, however, remained, it is susceptible to levitical uncleanness. If one of these was a side tooth,¹⁰ [the comb] is levitically clean.¹¹ If two [teeth] were removed and someone used them as pincers, they are susceptible to levitical uncleanness. One [tooth also] that was adopted for [snuffing] the light,¹² or as a spool,¹³ is susceptible to levitical uncleanness.¹⁴ And we have it as a traditional ruling that the halachah is not in agreement with this Mishnah!¹⁵ — The other replied, ‘With the exception of this;¹⁶ for both R. Johanan and Resh Lakish stated: This is not [an authoritative] Mishnah’.

What is the reason? — R. Huna b. Manoah replied in the name of R. Idi son of R. Ika: Because the first clause is in contradiction to the second one. For at first it was stated that ‘a wool comb whose alternate teeth are missing is levitically clean’ from which it follows that if two consecutive teeth did remain it would be susceptible to uncleanness, while immediately afterwards it was stated, ‘If three consecutive teeth, however, remained it is susceptible to levitical uncleanness’ from which it follows that only three but not two! — What difficulty is this? It is possible that one¹⁷ refers to the internal,¹⁸ and the other¹⁹ the external teeth!²⁰

The contradiction, however, arises from the following²¹ It was taught first, ‘all the teeth, however, if they were removed one by one are individually susceptible to levitical uncleanness’ [implying], even though each tooth was not adapted [for the purpose] . Now read the final clause: ‘One tooth that was adapted for snuffing the light, or as a spool, is susceptible to levitical uncleanness’, [implying,] only when he adapted it but not when he did not adapt it! — Abaye replied: What is the difficulty? It is possible that the one [refers to a tooth] with a handle²² and the other [to a tooth] without a handle! R. Papa replied: What is the difficulty? It is possible that the one refers to small,²³ and the other to thick teeth.²⁴ [The reason]²⁵ is rather because accurate scholars add this conclusion: ‘These are the words of R. Simeon’.²⁶

R. Hiyya b. Abin sent the following message: Betrothal may take place within the three months, and the practice [of the Sages]²⁷ is also in accordance with this ruling. And R. Eleazar, too, taught us the same law in the name of R. Hanina the Great: The greater part of the first month, the greater part of the third one, and the full middle month.²⁸

Amemar permitted betrothal on the ninetieth day.²⁹ Said R. Ashi to Amemar: But, surely, both Rab and Samuel stated that the widow must wait three months exclusive of the day on which her husband died and exclusive of the day of her betrothal! — This ruling was stated in connection with a nursing mother; for both Rab and Samuel stated: She must wait twenty-four exclusive of the day on which the child was born and exclusive of the day of her betrothal.³⁰ Did not, however, a man once arrange a betrothal feast on the ninetieth days³¹ and Raba spoil his feast!³² — That was a wedding feast.

The law is that [a nursing mother] must wait twenty-four months, exclusive of the day on which the child was born and exclusive of the day on which she is to be betrothed. Similarly. One [who is not a nursing mother] must wait three months, exclusive of the day on which her husband died and exclusive of the day on which she is to be betrothed.

EXCEPTING THE WIDOW etc. R. Hisda said: [Cannot the law³³ be deduced by inference] from major to minor?³⁴ If when washing of clothes is forbidden,³⁵ betrothal is permitted, how much more should betrothal be permitted when the washing of clothes is permitted!³⁶ What is it?³⁷ — We learned: During the week in which the Ninth of Ab occurs it is forbidden to cut the hair and to wash clothes. On the Thursday, however, this is permitted in honour of the Sabbath.³⁸ And [in connection with this Mishnah] it was taught: Before this time³⁹ the public must restrict their activities in commerce, building and plantings but it is permissible to betroth though not to marry, nor may any betrothal feast be held!⁴⁰ — That was taught in respect of the period before that time.⁴¹ Said Raba, Even in respect of the ‘period before that time’⁴² [the law might be arrived at by inference from] major to minor: If where it is forbidden to trade it is permitted to betroth, how much more should betrothal be permitted where trade also is permitted! — Do not read, R. JOSE SAID: ALL [MARRIED] WOMEN⁴³ MAY BE BETROTHED but read, ‘ALL MARRIED WOMEN⁴³ may be married’.⁴⁴

(44) R. Jose's disagreement with R. Judah has no bearing on the question of marriage during mourning on which R. Judah and R. Jose are in agreement, the former also admitting that no marriage may be celebrated during the mourning period. R. Jose's disagreement relates to the general question of the remarriage of a married woman within three months after her husband died (or divorced her). While R. Judah permits a married woman within three months betrothal only, but not marriage, R. Jose permits marriage also.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 43b

Does not R. Jose, then, hold the view that it is necessary to make a distinction?¹ — If you wish I might say² that he does not. And if you prefer I might say that he does, in fact, hold [this view],³ but read, 'R. Jose said: All betrothed women who were divorced may be married'.⁴ If so, it⁵ is the same view as that of R. Judah!⁶ — The point at issue between them is the question of the betrothal⁷ of a married woman. R. Judah maintains that a married woman may be betrothed,⁷ while R. Jose maintains that a married woman may not be betrothed.⁷ But is R. Jose of the opinion that a married woman is forbidden betrothal?⁷ Surely it was taught, 'R. Jose said: All women⁸ may be betrothed,⁷ excepting the widow, owing to her mourning. And how long does her mourning continue? Thirty days. And all these must not marry before three months have passed'! — What an objection is this!⁹ If it be argued: Because it was stated, 'R. Jose said: All women may be betrothed', is this [it may be retorted] of greater force than our Mishnah? As that was interpreted to mean that 'betrothed women who were divorced may be married' so here also [it might be interpreted to mean], 'All betrothed women who were divorced may be married'! — [The objection,] however, [arises from] the final clause where it was stated, 'And all these must not marry before three months have passed', [implying that] only marriage is forbidden to them but they may well be betrothed!¹⁰ — Raba replied: Explain and reconstruct it¹¹ as follows:¹² R. Jose said: Betrothed women who were divorced may be married, excepting the widow owing to her mourning. And how long does her mourning continue? Thirty days. And married women may not be betrothed before three months have passed.¹³ But is any mourning to be observed by an erusin¹⁴ widow? Surely R. Hiyya b. Ammi taught: In the case of a betrothed wife,¹⁵ the husband is neither subject to the laws of onan¹⁶ nor may he defile himself¹⁷ for her;¹⁸ and she, [in his case,] is likewise not subject to the laws of onan¹⁶ nor may she defile herself for him;¹⁹ if she dies he does not inherit from her, though if he dies she collects her kethubah!²⁰ — The fact, however, is that this²¹ is a question in dispute between²² Tannaim. For it was taught: From the first day of the month²³ until the fast,²⁴ the public must restrict their activities in trade, building and planting, and no betrothals or marriages may take place.²⁵ During the week in which the Ninth of Ab occurs it is forbidden to cut the hair, to wash clothes;²⁶ and others say that this is forbidden during the entire month.²⁷ R. Ashi demurred: Whence is it proved that betrothal means actual betrothal! Is it not possible that it is only forbidden to give²⁸ a betrothal feast but that betrothal itself is permitted?²⁹ — If so, does 'no marriage may take place' also mean that the giving of a wedding feast is forbidden but marriage itself is permitted! — How now! In the case of a marriage without a feast there is still sufficient rejoicing;³⁰ in the case of betrothal, however, is there any rejoicing when no feast is held?³¹ The fact is, said R. Ashi, that recent mourning³² is different from ancient mourning,³³ and public mourning³³ is different from private mourning.³⁴ MISHNAH. - (18) A 'betrothed wife' not being regarded as being as near of kin as a married wife.
- (19) During a festival when Israelites and women (and not only priests) are forbidden to attend on a dead body (unless they are engaged in its burial) if they are not near relatives (cf. R.H. 16b). Others render, 'nor need she . . . him'. (V. Rashi a.l. and Tosaf. supra 29b s.v.).
- (20) V. Glos. in a case where the document was given to her at the betrothal. Supra 29b, B.M. 18a, Keth. 53a. The reference in the Mishnah hence cannot be to an erusin widow but to the prohibition of the betrothal of a widow within thirty days, which brings us back to the original question of R. Hisda.
- (21) Whether betrothal is forbidden or permitted before the Fast of Ab.
- (22) Lit., 'but it'.
- (23) Of Ab.
- (24) On the ninth of the month.
- (25) Ta'an. 26b.
- (26) Cut. edd. insert in parentheses, 'and it is forbidden to betroth'.
- (27) Ta'an. 29b. The Tanna of this Baraitha thus forbids betrothal before the Ninth of Ab though the Tanna of the Baraitha previously cited (supra 43a) permits it. The objection against R. Jose raised by R. Hisda from the first Baraitha is, therefore, untenable, since R. Jose may disagree with that Tanna and follow the view of the one in the second Baraitha, who forbids betrothal. R. Jose's statement in our Mishnah may consequently be read and interpreted as originally assumed, viz., that ALL (MARRIED) WOMEN MAY BE BETROTHED, the point at issue between him and R. Judah being the question of mourning during which in the opinion of the first betrothal is, and in the opinion of the latter is not forbidden.
- (28) Lit., 'to make'.
- (29) Cf. infra note 10.
- (30) Hence it is quite conceivable that marriage, even though no wedding feast is held, should be forbidden.
- (31) It is quite possible, therefore, that the 'betrothal' forbidden is only one celebrated with the holding of a festive meal, while betrothal alone is permitted. The second Baraitha would thus be in agreement with the first. How, then, could R. Jose, contrary to the rulings of the two Baraithas maintain that betrothal during mourning is forbidden?

(32) After a personal bereavement.

(33) That before the Fast of Ab in commemoration of historical events.

(34) Personal and recent grief is more poignant, and is subject to more stringent regulations than those of public mourning which is less rigid. Hence there need be no contradiction between R. Jose's ruling concerning the prohibition of betrothal during the widow's personal mourning and the permission of betrothal in the Baraitas which speak of public mourning. Consequently the assumption that the two Baraitas are in disagreement and that R. Jose follows the latter is no longer necessary. Both Baraitas, in fact, may permit betrothal before the Fast of Ab, and R. Jose also may share the same view.

(35) Surviving brother; v. Gemara.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 44a

IF ONE OF THESE, HOWEVER, WAS ELIGIBLE¹ AND THE OTHER INELIGIBLE,¹ THEN IF HE² SUBMITS TO HALIZAH IT MUST BE FROM HER WHO IS INELIGIBLE,³ AND IF HE CONTRACTS LEVIRATE MARRIAGE IT MAY BE EVEN WITH HER WHO IS ELIGIBLE.

GEMARA. FOUR BROTHERS? Is this conceivable!⁴ — Read, FOUR of the BROTHERS.

MAY. And is he allowed?⁵ Surely it was taught: Then the elder's of his city shall call him,⁶ 'they' but not their representative; 'and speak unto him'⁶ teaches that he is given suitable advice. If he,² for instance, was young and she⁷ old, or if he was old and she was young, he is told, 'What would you with⁸ a young woman?' or 'What would you with an old woman?' 'Go to one who is [of the same age] as yourself and create no strife in your house'⁹ — This is applicable to that case only where he can afford it.¹⁰ If so, even more wives also!¹¹ — Sound advice was given: Only four but no more, so that each may receive one marital visit a month.¹²

WHERE A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED etc. Let him contract levirate marriage with both! — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture stated, That doth not build up his brother's house,¹³ he builds one house¹⁴ but does not build two houses. Then let him submit to halizah from both of them! — Mar Zutra b. Tobia replied: Scripture stated, The house of him who had his shoe drawn off,¹⁵ he submits to the drawing off of the shoe in respect of one house but must not submit to the drawing off of the shoe in respect of two houses. Then let him submit to halizah¹⁶ from one and contract levirate marriage with the other! — Scripture stated, That doth not build,¹⁷ as he has not built¹⁸ he must never again build. Then let him contract levirate marriage with one and submit to halizah from the other! — Scripture states, If he like not,¹⁹ if, however, he liked, he may contract levirate marriage; whosoever may go up²⁰ to contract levirate marriage, may also go up to perform halizah and whosoever may not go up¹⁷ to contract levirate marriage²¹ may not go up to perform halizah. Furthermore, in order that it be not said that the same house²² is partially 'built' and partially 'drawn off'. But let them say! — If he had first contracted levirate marriage and then submitted to halizah this would have been so indeed;²³ it is possible, however, that he may submit to halizah and subsequently contract levirate marriage and thus place himself under the prohibition of that doth not build.²⁴

Might it be suggested that where there is only one,²⁵ the law of the levirate marriage shall be observed, but that where there are two, the law of levirate marriage shall not be observed! — If so, what need was there for the All Merciful to prohibit marriage with the rival of a forbidden relative? If any two rivals, it has been said, are not both subject to halizah and the levirate marriage, was there any need [to mention the exemption of] a rival of a forbidden relative! Why not? It is certainly needed! For it might have been assumed that the forbidden relative stands excluded, and her rival may, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage, hence it was taught that she also was forbidden! — But in fact [this is the proper explanation:] The repetition of his brother's wife²⁶ widened the scope.²⁷

IF ONE OF THEM, HOWEVER, WAS ELIGIBLE. Said R. Joseph: Here²⁸ it was taught by Rabbi²⁹ that a man should not pour the water out of his cistern while others may require it.³⁰

MISHNAH. A MAN WHO REMARRIED HIS DIVORCED WIFE,³¹ OR MARRIED HIS HALUZAH, OR MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH MUST DIVORCE HER, AND THE CHILD³² IS A BASTARD; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. AKIBA. BUT THE SAGES SAID: THE CHILD IS NOT A BASTARD. THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHERE A MAN MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE THE CHILD³² IS A BASTARD.

GEMARA. Does R. Akiba hold the view that the child of a man who MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH is a bastard? Surely Resh Lakish stated: Here³³ it was taught by Rabbi³⁴ [that the prohibition to marry] the sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchal and that that of the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical!³⁵ — Read,³⁶ THE RELATIVE OF HIS divorcee. This view may also logically be supported. For it was stated in the final clause, THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHEN A MAN MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE THE CHILD IS A BASTARD. Now, if you grant that her case³⁷ was under discussion one can well see the reason why the expression of THEY AGREE had been used; if you contend, however, that her case³⁷ was not under discussion what is the purport of THEY AGREE?³⁸

Is it not possible that we were informed³⁹ that the [offspring of a union] of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth is a bastard?⁴⁰ — This surely is taught below: ‘Who is a bastard? [The offspring of a union with] any consanguineous relative with whom cohabitation is forbidden; so R. Akiba. Simeon⁴¹ the Temanite said: [The offspring of any union] the penalty for which is kareth at the hands of heaven. And the halachah is in agreement with his view.⁴² But is it not possible that the Tanna⁴³ intended to indicate by his anonymous statement that the halachah is according to Simeon⁴¹ the Temanite?⁴⁴ — If so, he should have stated, ‘Others who are subject to the penalty of kareth’, why then [specify] THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE? Consequently it must be inferred that this case⁴⁵ was under discussion. But is it not indeed possible to maintain that it⁴⁵ was not under discussion, but because THE MAN WHO REMARRIED HIS DIVORCED WIFE OR MARRIED HIS HALUZAH OR THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH was spoken of,⁴⁶ he also introduced THE RELATIVE OF his divorcee’?⁴⁷

Would consequently [the offspring of a union with] the RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH, according to R. Akiba,⁴⁸ be a bastard!⁴⁹ — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan, This is R. Akiba's reason: Because Scripture stated, The house of him that had his shoe drawn off,⁵⁰ Scripture thus called it his house.⁵¹

R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi: All agree that, where a man remarried his divorced wife,

(1) To marry a priest. V. Lev. XXI, 7.

(2) The levir.

(3) So that the halizah shall not disqualify the eligible widow from marrying a priest.

(4) If there were only four brothers and all of them died, how could levirate marriage take place?

(5) To marry four wives.

(6) Deut. XXV, 8.

(7) The widow, his sister-in-law.

(8) Lit., ‘what to thee at’.

(9) Infra 101b. Similarly in the case of our Mishnah also the levir should have been advised not to undertake the responsibility of maintaining four wives.

(10) When he possesses the means.

(11) Should be allowed. Why then were FOUR only mentioned.

- (12) Once a week, on Friday evenings, is the time when scholars in moderate health should pay their marital visits (Keth 62b). More than four wives would reduce each one's visits to less than one per month.
- (13) Deut. XXV, 9: emphasis on 'house' (sing.).
- (14) I.e., marries one widow.
- (15) E.V., loosed, ibid. 10, emphasis on 'house'.
- (16) For this insertion v. Bah a.l.
- (17) Ibid. 9, emphasis on 'not build'.
- (18) I.e., did not contract levirate marriage.
- (19) Ibid. 7.
- (20) Sc. to the gale (ibid.), i.e., the court.
- (21) As is the case with the rival who may not contract levirate marriage, for the reason given supra, 'he builds one house but does not build two houses'.
- (22) Of the one brother.
- (23) What people might say about 'partially built' etc. would not have mattered.
- (24) V. supra note 5, 'as he has not built he must never again build'.
- (25) Widow.
- (26) Deut. XXV, 7.
- (27) Indicating that even where there are two rivals the precept of levirate marriage is to be observed.
- (28) By the instruction that halizah is to be performed by the ineligible, and not by the eligible widow.
- (29) R. Judah the Prince, Redactor of the Mishnah.
- (30) Though the levir himself would lose nothing by disqualifying the widow from marriage with a priest, he must not be the cause of her disqualification out of consideration for a priest who might wish to marry her.
- (31) After she had been married to another man.
- (32) The offspring of any such union.
- (33) In the Mishnah supra 41a to which Resh Lakish refers.
- (34) The Redactor of the Mishnah.
- (35) Supra 40b, 41a. The offspring of a union that is only Rabbinically forbidden would not be a bastard.
- (36) In R. Akiba's statement in our Mishnah.
- (37) That of the relative of a divorcee.
- (38) One does not AGREE in respect of a case that never was in dispute!
- (39) By the use of the expression AGREE.
- (40) I.e., the Rabbis AGREE in this case because it involves kareth, though they maintain that the offspring of those who are subject to the penalty of flogging only is not a bastard, AGREE would consequently provide no proof that R. Akiba spoke of the relative of a divorcee!
- (41) Cur. edd. add 'R'.
- (42) Infra 49a. The halachah must obviously be in agreement with the Rabbis who form the majority. Consequently there was no need for the Rabbis to state the same halachah in our Mishnah also. THEY AGREE must, therefore, imply that R. Akiba also spoke of the relative of a divorcee.
- (43) Of our Mishnah.
- (44) Hence the repetition in Our Mishnah of the one infra 49a. Cf. supra n. 5 second clause.
- (45) The case of the relative of one's divorcee.
- (46) And on which the Rabbis disagreed with R. Akiba. In the case of the RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH, however, R. Akiba, it might still be contended, regards the child as a bastard.
- (47) In whose case the Rabbis agree with R. Akiba.
- (48) Since the expression RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH in R. Akiba's statement is not amended to 'RELATIVE OF HIS divorcee'.
- (49) On what ground could R. Akiba maintain such an opinion?
- (50) Deut. XXV, 10.
- (51) The relative of a haluzah, according to R. Akiba, is consequently, like that of a divorcee, forbidden Pentateuchally. The offspring of a union with such a relative is, therefore, a bastard.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 44b

the child¹ is tainted in respect of the priesthood.² Who [is meant by] 'All agree'? — Simeon the Temanite. For although Simeon the Temanite stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging is not a bastard, he agrees that, though he is not a bastard, he is nevertheless tainted.³ This is deduced a minori ad majus from the case of a widow: If in the case of a widow married to a High Priest, the prohibition of whom is not applicable to all,⁴ her son¹ is tainted,³ how much more should the son of a divorcee be tainted, whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.⁵ [This argument, however], may be refuted: A widow's case may well be different⁶ because she herself becomes profaned and;⁷ and, furthermore, it is written in Scripture, She is an abomination,⁸ 'she'⁹ only is an abomination but her children are not an abomination. — Furthermore, it was taught: Where a man remarried his divorced wife, or married his haluzah, or married the relative of his haluzah, R. Akiba said, his betrothal of her is not valid,¹⁰ she requires no divorce from him, she is disqualified,¹¹ her child is disqualified,¹² and the man is compelled to divorce her. And the Sages said: His betrothal of her is valid, she requires a divorce from the man, she is fit, and her child is fit. Now, in respect of what?¹³ Obviously in respect of the priesthood!¹⁴ — No; in respect of entering the congregation.¹³

If so, in respect of whom is she¹⁵ fit? If it be suggested 'in respect of entering the congregation', is not this [it may be retorted] obvious? Has she become ineligible to enter the congregation because she played the harlot!¹⁶ Consequently it must mean in respect of the priesthood. Now, since she is [untainted] in respect of the priesthood, her child also must be [untainted] in respect of the priesthood!¹⁴ — Is this an argument? The same term may bear different interpretations in harmony with its respective subjects.¹⁷ This¹⁸ is also logically sound. For in the first clause¹⁹ it was stated, 'She is disqualified and her child is disqualified'. Now, in respect of what is 'she disqualified'? If it be suggested, 'in respect of entry into the congregation', does she [it may be retorted] become disqualified for entry into the congregation because she played the harlot!²⁰ Consequently it must mean 'in respect of the priesthood!' Now, again, in respect of what is 'her child disqualified'? If it be suggested, 'in respect of the priesthood' thus implying that he is permitted to enter the congregation, surely [it may be objected] R. Akiba stated that the child is a bastard!²¹ Obviously then 'in respect of entry into the congregation'.²² And, as in the first clause the same term bears different interpretations in harmony with its respective subjects, so may the same term in the final clause bear different interpretations in agreement with its respective subjects.²³ Also as to the expression²⁴, This is an abomination it [may be interpreted]: 'She is an abomination but her rival is no abomination'.²⁵ Her children, however, are an abomination.²⁶

The objection, however, from the 'widow' [still remains, thus]: 'A widow's case may well be different²⁷ because she herself becomes²⁸ profaned'²⁹ — But [the fact is that] if any statement was made³⁰ it was as follows:³¹ R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi, 'All agree that where a man cohabited with any of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth³² the child³³ is tainted'.³⁴ Who [is referred to by] 'All agree'? — R. Joshua. For although R. Joshua stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of kareth is not a bastard, he agrees that, though he is no bastard, he is nevertheless tainted.³⁵ This is deduced a minori ad majus from the case of a widow: If in the case of a widow married to a High Priest, the prohibition of whom is not applicable to all,³⁶ her son³⁷ is tainted,³⁵ how much more should the son of this woman be tainted whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.³⁸

And were you to object: A widow's case may be different³⁹ because she herself becomes profaned,⁴⁰ [it may be retorted that], here also, as soon as the man had any connubial relations with her he stamped her as a harlot.⁴¹

Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: All agree that where a slave or an idolater had intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite the child is a bastard. Who is meant by 'All agree'? —

Simeon the Temanite. For although Simeon the Temanite stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging is not a bastard, his statement applies only

- (1) The offspring of such a union.
 - (2) פגום defective, inferior (in status). If a male he is disqualified from the priesthood: and if a female she is ineligible to marry a priest. [Rashi reads simply: 'the child is tainted', so MS.M.]
 - (3) And disqualified for the priesthood.
 - (4) A widow is forbidden to a High Priest only, but not to an ordinary priest or an Israelite.
 - (5) No one, priest or Israelite, may remarry his divorced wife after she had been married to another man.
 - (6) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.
 - (7) Having once married a High Priest unlawfully, she may not marry after his death even an ordinary priest (v. Kid. 77a), and if she is a priest's daughter she loses her privilege to eat terumah (v. infra 68a). In the case of a remarried divorcee these restrictions do not apply, since she is permitted to eat terumah if she is a priest's daughter (v. infra 69a) while her prohibition to marry a priest is not due to her remarriage, but to her previous divorce.
 - (8) Deut. XXIV, 4.
 - (9) ה"י rendered by E.V., it; lit, 'she', is taken to refer to the woman. The Talmudic text here is not very clear. (V. supra 11b for a smoother text and further notes, and cf. Bah a.l.).
 - (10) Unions subject to the penalty of flogging are in his opinion invalid.
 - (11) May not marry a priest.
 - (12) Being deemed a bastard.
 - (13) Is the child regarded as fit. I.e. fit to marry a proper Israelite; v, Deut. XXIII, 1ff.
 - (14) Which is contrary to the conclusion arrived at by the argument a minori ad majus!
 - (15) The remarried divorcee.
 - (16) I.e., contracted a forbidden marriage.
 - (17) Lit., 'that as it is and that etc.'. The term 'untainted' in the case of the woman may have reference to priesthood, but in the case of the child it may refer to entry into the congregation; while in respect of the priesthood the child may well be regarded as tainted.
 - (18) The thesis that the interpretation of the same term may vary in harmony with its respective subjects though both appear in the same context.
 - (19) Of the cited Baraita.
 - (20) I.e., contracted a forbidden marriage.
 - (21) Who may not enter into the congregation. (V. Deut. XXIII, 3).
 - (22) Although the same term, in the same context, when applied to the mother, referred to the priesthood.
 - (23) V. supra p. 289. n. 10, for lit. meaning.
 - (24) From which it has been sought to prove supra that the inference from the case of a widow married to a High Priest cannot be upheld.
 - (25) I.e., the exclusion refers to her rival who may contract levirate marriage.
 - (26) I.e., disqualified from the priesthood. as has been inferred supra.
 - (27) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.
 - (28) V. supra p. 288, n. 13.
 - (29) Which leads to the conclusion that no inference a minori ad majus may be drawn from the case of the widow. How, then, could R. Joseph state in the name of R. Simeon, supra, that all agree that the child is disqualified?
 - (30) By R. Joseph in the name of R. Simeon, on the subject under discussion.
 - (31) Lit., 'thus it was said'.
 - (32) For that cohabitation.
 - (33) The offspring of such a union.
 - (34) V. supra p. 282, no. 8ff.
 - (35) And disqualified for the priesthood.
 - (36) A widow is forbidden to a High Priest only, but not to an ordinary priest or Israelite.
 - (37) The offspring of such a union.
 - (38) No one, priest or Israelite, may remarry his divorced wife after she had been married to another man.
 - (39) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(40) V. supra p. 288, n. 13.

(41) Because of the forbidden union, and she, like the widow who was married to a High Priest, is in consequence forbidden to marry even a common priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 45a

to the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging, since the betrothal in such a case is valid¹ but here, in the case of an idolater and a slave, since betrothal in their case is invalid,² they are like those whose union is subject to the penalty of kareth.³

An objection was raised: If a slave or an idolater had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard. R. Simeon b. Judah said: A bastard is only he who [is the offspring of a union which] is forbidden as incest and is punishable by kareth!⁴ — No, said R. Joseph, who [is referred to by] ‘all cable only according to the view of R. Akiba who regards a haluzah as a forbidden relative’,⁵ while he himself does not share the same view,⁶ he agrees⁷ in the case of an idolater and a slave. For when R. Dimi came⁸ he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abudimi in the name of our Master,⁹ ‘If an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard’.

R. Aha, the governor of the castle,¹⁰ and R. Tanhum son of R. Hiyya of Kefar Acco¹¹ once redeemed some captives who were brought from Armon to Tiberias,¹² [Among these] was one who had become pregnant from an idolater. When they came before R. Ammi he told them: It was R. Johanan and R. Eleazar and R. Hanina who stated that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child born is a bastard.

Said R. Joseph: Is it a great thing to enumerate persons?¹³ Surely it was Rab and Samuel in Babylon and R. Joshua b. Levi and Bar Kappara in the Land of Israel — (others say, ‘Bar Kappara’ is to be altered to¹⁴ the ‘Elders of the South’)¹⁵ — who stated that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite, the child born is untainted! — No, said R. Joseph, it¹⁶ is [the opinion of] Rabbi.¹⁷ For when R. Dimi came⁸ he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abudimi that it was reported in the name of our Masters that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: The child¹⁸ is tainted. In respect of what?¹⁹ If it be suggested in respect of entry into the congregation, surely [it may be retorted] R. Joshua b. Levi stated that the child was fit! It must be then in respect of the priesthood;¹⁹ for all Amoraim who declare the child¹⁸ fit admit that he is ineligible for the priesthood.²⁰ This is inferred by deduction from the case of a widow a minor ad majus. If in the case of a widow who was married to a High priest whose prohibition is not equally applicable to all²¹ her son²² is tainted,²³ how much more should the son of this woman²⁴ be tainted whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.²⁵ The case of a widow who was married to a High Priest may be different, since she herself becomes profaned!²⁶ — Here also,²⁷ as soon as cohabitation occurred the woman is disqualified;²⁸ for R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Simeon:²⁹ Whence is it inferred that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of a priest, of a Levite or of an Israelite, he disqualified her?³⁰ It was stated But if a priest's daughter be a widow, or divorcee;³¹ Only in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood or divorce is applicable;³² an idolater and a slave are consequently excluded since in relation to them no widowhood or divorce is applicable.³³

Said Abaye to him:³⁴ What reason do you see for relying upon R. Dimi?³⁵ Rely rather on Rabin!³⁶ For when Rabin came³⁷ he reported that R. Nathan and R. Judah the Prince ruled that such a child is legitimate;³⁸ and³⁹ R. Judah the Prince is, of course, Rabbi!

And Rab also ruled that the child is legitimate.⁴⁰ For once a man⁴¹ appeared before Rab and asked him, 'What [is the legal position of the child] where an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite?' 'The child is legitimate', the Master replied. 'Give me then your daughter' said the man. 'I will not give her to you' [was the Master's reply]. Said Shimi b. Hiyya to Rab. 'People say that in Media⁴² a camel can dance on a kab;⁴³ here is the kab, here is the camel and here is Media, but there is no dancing'!⁴⁴ 'Had he been⁴⁵ equal to Joshua the son of Nun I would not have given him my daughter', the Master replied. 'Had he been like Joshua the son of Nun', the other retorted, 'others would have given him their daughters, if the Master had not given him his; but with this man, if the Master will not give him, others also will not give him'.⁴⁶ As the man refused to go away he fixed his eye upon him and he died. R. Mattena also ruled that the child is legitimate.⁴⁷ Rab Judah also ruled that the child is legitimate.⁴⁷ For when one⁴⁸ came before Rab Judah, the latter told him, 'Go and conceal your identity⁴⁹ or marry one of your own kind'.⁵⁰ When such a man⁵¹ appeared before Raba he told him, 'Either go abroad or marry one of your own kind'.⁵²

The men of Be-Mikse⁵³ sent [the following enquiry] to Rabbah: What [is the law in respect of the legitimacy of the child of] one who is a half slave and half freed man⁵⁴ who cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite? — He replied: If [the child of] one who is fully a slave has been declared legitimate, is there any need [to question the case of the child of one who is only] a half slave!

R. Joseph said: The author of this traditional ruling⁵⁵

(1) V. supra 23a.

(2) V. Kid. 68b.

(3) The offspring from which is a bastard.

(4) Now this Tanna, whose view is exactly the same as that of Simeon the Temanite, indicates quite clearly that the offspring of a union with an idolater or slave is not a bastard! (V. supra n. 10). (12) That cohabitation with a deceased brother's wife after halizah with her rival has not the force of marriage and no divorce is required. The child from such a union would consequently be deemed a bastard.

(5) Infra 52b.

(6) But maintains that the child of such a union is no bastard.

(13) Just as a string of names could be quoted in support of the view that the child is a bastard, an equally imposing number could be quoted in opposition.

(14) Lit., 'and bring in'.

(15) [With particular reference to the scholars of Lydda among whom Bar Kappara and R. Joshua b. Levi were included.]

(16) The ruling that the child is a bastard.

(17) And it is Rabbi's fame and position, and not the number of comparatively minor authorities (v. supra n. 9), that imparted the force of law to this view.

(18) Born from a union between a Jewish woman and an idolater or a slave.

(19) Is the child deemed tainted. This applies to a female child who is disqualified from marrying a priest. A male child, being the son of an idolater or slave, cannot obviously ever be himself a priest.

is, of course,¹ Rab Judah.² But surely Rab Judah had explicitly stated: Where one who is a half slave and half freed man cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child born from such a union can have no redress!³ — Rab Judah's ruling⁴ was made only in the case where he⁵ betrothed⁶ the daughter of an Israelite,⁷ in consequence of which his partial slavery cohabits with a married woman.⁸

But did not the Nehardeans state in the name of R. Jacob that according to him who regards [the offspring]⁹ as illegitimate, the child is so regarded even [where cohabitation had taken place] with an unmarried woman; and according to him who regards [the child] as legitimate, the child is so regarded even [if the cohabitation had taken place] with a married woman! And the deduction by both¹⁰ was made from none other than the wife of one's father.¹¹ He who regards the child⁹ as illegitimate is of the opinion that as with the wife of one's father, betrothal with whom is invalid, the child is a bastard. So is the child a bastard in the case of all those¹² betrothal with whom is invalid. And he who regards the child as legitimate is of the opinion [that the comparison is]: As with the wife of one's father, betrothal with whom is invalid in the case of the son only,¹³ but is valid in the case of others;¹⁴ an idolater and a slave betrothal with whom is in all cases invalid are consequently excluded!¹⁵

Hence the statement of R. Judah¹⁶ must have been made in respect of one¹⁷ who had intercourse with a married woman, so that his emancipated side¹⁸ cohabits with a married woman.¹⁹

Rabina said: R. Gaza told me, 'R. Jose b. Abin happened to be at our place when an incident²⁰ occurred with an unmarried woman and declared the child to be legitimate: [and when it occurred] with a married woman he declared the child to be illegitimate'.

R. Shesheth said: R. Gaza told me that it was not R. Jose b. Abin but R. Jose son of R. Zebida, and that he declared the child to be legitimate, both in the case of the married, as well as in that of the unmarried woman.²¹

R. Aha son of Raba²² said to Rabina: Amemar once happened to be in our place and he declared the child²³ to be legitimate in the case of a married, as well as in that of an unmarried woman.

And the law is that if an idolater or a slave had cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is legitimate, both in the case of a married, and in that of an unmarried woman.²¹

Raba declared R. Mari b. Rache²⁴ to be a legitimate Israelite and appointed him among the pursers²⁵ of Babylon. And although a Master said: Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee . . . one from among thy brethren,²⁶ all appointments which you make must be made only 'from among thy brethren', [means that] such a man,²⁷ since his mother was a descendant of Israel, may well 'be regarded as 'one from among thy brethren'.

The slave of R. Hiyya b. Ammi once made a certain idolatress bathe for a matrimonial purpose.²⁸ Said R. Joseph: I could declare her to be a legitimate Jewess²⁹ and her daughter³⁰ to be of legitimate birth.³¹ In her case, in accordance with the view of R. Assi; for R. Assi said, 'Did she not bathe for the purpose of her menstruation'?³² In the case of her daughter, because when an idolater or a slave has intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite, the child [born of such a union] is legitimate.³³

A certain person was once named 'son of the female heathen'.³⁴ Said R. Assi, 'Did she not bathe for the purpose of her menstruation'?

A certain person was once named 'son of the male heathen'.³⁵ Said R. Joshua b. Levi, 'Did he³⁶ not bathe in connection with any mishap³⁷ of his'?³⁸

R. Hama b. Guria said in the name of Rab: If a man bought a slave from an idolater and [that slave] forestalled him and performed ritual ablution with the object of acquiring the status of a freed man, he acquires thereby his emancipation. What is the reason?

(1) Lit., 'who is it'?

(2) So that Rabbah's decision in the case of the half slave is based on a ruling of Rab Judah.

(3) I.e., he is a bastard, and may never marry a Jewess, How, then, could Rabbah regard the child of such a union as legitimate?

(4) That he can have no redress.

(5) The half slave,

(6) Not merely cohabited without betrothal.

(7) The betrothal, as far as his partial status of a slave is concerned, is invalid, while in respect of his partial state of emancipation it is valid. The Jewess is consequently his legal wife.

(8) The slave in him having cohabited with the woman who is legally betrothed to the emancipated part of him causes the offspring of the union to be deemed a bastard, as is the case with the offspring of any union between a betrothed or married woman and a stranger, be the latter Israelite, idolater or slave. If, however, cohabitation only between the half slave and a Jewess took place, 'without previous betrothal, the woman is not the legal wife of the 'half freed man' and the child born from the union is the child of an unmarried woman and is consequently legitimate, as Rabbah ruled. In the case of a full slave the question of betrothal does not arise since even if betrothal did take place it is invalid and the woman is legally deemed to be unmarried.

(9) Of a union between a Jewess and an idolater or a slave.

(10) He who regards the child as legitimate and the other who regards him as illegitimate.

(11) Betrothal of whom by the son is invalid and the offspring of any union between them is a bastard.

(12) Such as an idolater or a slave,

(13) Lit., 'to him'.

(14) So in all such cases, A child born from such unions only is illegitimate.

(15) The cases of these being different from that of 'father's wife', the child born from a union between a Jewess and any of these must be deemed to be legitimate. The father is entirely eliminated and the child is ascribed to the mother. Now, since the statement of the Nehardeans proves that there is no difference between an unmarried and a married (or betrothed) woman, the distinction drawn supra between cohabitation after a betrothal and one in the absence of betrothal is obviously untenable. The objection then against Rabbah's ruling remains!

(16) That the child has no redress.

(19) Cf. supra p. 295, n. 14. As the offspring of a union between an Israelite and a married woman is a bastard, so is that of the union between the semi-emancipated (cf. supra n. 10) and a married woman.

(28) The slave wished to take her as wife. Lit., 'wife', or 'wifehood'. He made her take a ritual bath in accordance with the requirements prescribed for the menstruant before she can be permitted connubial intercourse.

(29) Though the bath was taken for menstrual purification yet since an idolatress takes no such baths, it may be regarded as one for the purpose of her conversion also. Usually, before he may be admitted as a legitimate proselyte, the convert must both be circumcised and bathe in a ritual bath for the specific purpose of the conversion. V, infra 46b.

(30) Born from the slave and herself,

(31) Though she is the offspring of a union between a slave and a woman who, at the time of giving birth to her, had already enjoyed the status of a Jewess.

(32) So long as she bathed for one purpose she may be deemed to have bathed for the other also. (V. infra).

(33) For the reason given supra. Cf. supra p. 296. on. 6, 7 and text.

(34) Because his mother did not take a ritual bath at the time of her conversion to Judaism.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 46a

— The idolater has no title to the person [of the slave]¹ and he can transfer to the Israelite only that which is his. And [the slave], since he forestalled him and performed ritual ablution for the purpose of acquiring the status of a freed man, has thereby cancelled the obligations of his servitude, in accordance with the ruling of Raba. For Raba stated: Consecration,² leavened food³ and manumission⁴ cancel a mortgage.⁵

R. Hisda raised an objection: It happened with the proselyte Valeria⁶ that her slaves forestalled her and performed ritual ablutions⁷ before her. And when the matter came before the Sages they decided that the slaves had acquired the status of freed men.⁸ [From here it follows that] only if they performed ablution before her,⁹ but not if after her!¹⁰ — Raba replied: ‘Before her’ they acquire their emancipation whether the object of their bathing had, or had not been specified;¹¹ ‘after her’ emancipation is acquired only when the object had been specified,¹² but not when it had not been specified.¹³

R. Iwya said: What has been taught¹⁴ applies only to one¹⁵ who buys¹⁶ from an idolater; but the idolater himself¹⁷ may well be acquired;¹⁸ for it is written in Scripture, Moreover from the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy:¹⁹ you may buy of them but they may not buy of you, nor may they buy of one another.²⁰ ‘But they may not buy of you’. — What can this refer to? If it be suggested [that it refers] to one's manual labour, may not an idolater, [it may be asked,] buy an Israelite to do manual labour? Surely it is written, Or to the offshoot of a stranger's family,²¹ and a Master said that by ‘stranger's family’ an idolater was meant?²² Consequently it must refer to his person;²³ and the All Merciful said, ‘You may buy of them,²⁴ even their persons’. R. Aha objected: It²⁵ might be said [to refer to acquisition] by means of money and ritual ablution!²⁶ — This is a difficulty.

Samuel said: He²⁷ must be firmly held²⁸ while he is in the water;²⁹ as [was done with] Menjamin, the slave of R. Ashi who wished to perform ritual ablution,³⁰ and was entrusted to Rabina and R. Aha son of Raba. ‘Note’, [R. Ashi] said to them, ‘that I shall claim him from you’.³¹ They put a chain³² round his neck, and loosened it and again tightened it. They loosened it in order that there might be no interposition.³³ They then tightened it again in order that he might not forestall them and declare,³⁴ ‘I perform the ablution in order to procure thereby the status of a freed man’. While he was raising his head from the water they placed upon it a bucket full of clay and told him, ‘Go, carry it to your master's house.

R. Papa said to Raba: The master must have observed the men of Papa b. Abba's house who advance sums of money on people's accounts in respect of their capitation taxes,³⁵ and then force them into their service. Do they,³⁶ when set free, require a deed of emancipation or not? He replied: Were I now dead I could not have told you of this ruling. Thus said R. Shesheth: The surety for these people³⁷ is deposited in the king's archive, and the king has ordained that whosoever does not pay his capitation tax shall be made the slave of him who pays it for him.³⁸

R. Hiyya b. Abba once came to Gabla³⁹ where he observed Jewish women who conceived from proselytes who were circumcised but had not performed the required ritual ablution;⁴⁰ he also noticed that idolaters were serving⁴¹ Jewish wine and Israelites were drinking it,⁴² and he also saw that idolaters were cooking lupines and Israelites ate them;⁴³ but he did not speak to them on the matter at all. He called, however, upon R. Johanan who instructed him: Go and announce that their children are bastards; that their wine is forbidden as nesek wine;⁴⁴ and that their lupines are forbidden as food cooked by idolaters, because⁴⁵ they⁴⁶ are ignorant of the Torah.

‘That their children are bastards’, R. Johanan ruling in accordance with his view. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: A man cannot become a proper proselyte unless he has been circumcised and has also performed ritual ablution; when, therefore, no ablution has been performed he is regarded as an idolater; and Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan that if an idolater or a slave cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard.

‘That their wine is forbidden as nesek wine’, because a nazirite⁴⁷ is told, ‘Keep away; go round about; approach not the vineyard’.⁴⁸

‘That their lupines are forbidden as food cooked by idolaters, because they are ignorant of the Torah’. [Would their lupines have been] permitted if the men had been acquainted with the Torah? Surely R. Samuel b. R. Isaac stated in the name of Rab, ‘Any foodstuff that may be eaten raw does not come under the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters’, and since lupines cannot be eaten raw the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters should apply!⁴⁹ — R. Johanan holds the view as expressed in a second version. For R. Samuel b. R. Isaac stated in the name of Rab, ‘Whatever is not served on a royal table as a dish to be eaten with bread is not subject to the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters The reason, therefore,⁵⁰ is because they were ignorant of the Torah;⁵¹ for had they been acquainted with the Torah [their lupines would have been] permitted.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘If a proselyte was circumcised but had not performed the prescribed ritual ablution, R. Eliezer said, ‘Behold he is a proper proselyte; for so we find that our forefathers⁵² were circumcised and had not performed ritual ablution’. If he performed the prescribed ablution but had not been circumcised, R. Joshua said, ‘Behold he is a proper proselyte; for so we find that the mothers⁵³ had performed ritual ablution but had not been circumcised’. The Sages, however, said, ‘Whether he had performed ritual ablution but had not been circumcised or whether he had been circumcised but had not performed the prescribed ritual ablution, he is not a proper proselyte, unless he has been circumcised and has also performed the prescribed ritual ablution.

Let R. Joshua also infer from the forefathers, and let R. Eliezer also infer from the mothers! And should you reply⁵⁴ that a possibility⁵⁵ may not be inferred from an impossibility,⁵⁶ surely [it may be retorted] it was taught: R. Eliezer said, ‘whence is it deduced that the paschal lamb⁵⁷ of later generations⁵⁸ may be brought from hullin⁵⁹ only? Those in Egypt were commanded to bring⁶⁰ a Paschal lamb and those of later generations were commanded to bring a Paschal lamb; as the Paschal lamb spoken of in Egypt could be brought from hullin⁵⁹ only, so may also the paschal lamb which had been commanded to later generations be brought from hullin only’. Said R. Akiba to him, ‘may a possibility be inferred from an impossibility!’⁶¹ The other replied. ‘Although an impossibility, it is nevertheless a proof of importance and deduction from it may be made’!⁶² — But

(1) As will be explained infra, no idolater may acquire the person of another idolater.

(2) For the altar, of a pledged animal,

(3) Which is pledged to a non-Israelite but kept in the possession of an Israelite when the time for its destruction on the Passover Eve arrived. No leavened food may be kept in Jewish possession (though pledged to a non-Jew) from midday of Passover Eve until the conclusion of the Passover festival.

(4) Of a mortgaged slave, v. Git. 40b.

(5) Similarly here, the ritual ablution of the slave, for the purpose of procuring his manumission, cancelled his obligations to his idolatrous master, and ipso facto to his Jewish master who is only the representative of the former and can lay no greater claim to the slave than he.

Similarly nesek wine is forbidden only when an idolater has actually touched it; but as a preventive measure it has been forbidden, as here, even when contact was indirect.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 46b

all agree¹ that ritual ablution without circumcision is effective; and they differ only on circumcision without ablution. R. Eliezer infers from the forefathers,² while R. Joshua [maintains that] in the case of the forefathers also ritual ablution was performed. Whence does he³ deduce it?⁴ If it be suggested, 'From that which is written, Go unto the people, and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their garments,⁵ if where washing of the garments is not required⁶ ablution is required,⁷ how much more should ablution be required where washing of the garments is required',⁸ [it may be retorted that] that⁹ might have been a mere matter of cleanliness.¹⁰ — It is rather from here:¹¹ And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people,¹² and we have a tradition that there must be no sprinkling without ritual ablution.¹³

Whence does R. Joshua infer that the mothers performed ritual ablution? — It is a logical conclusion, for, otherwise,¹⁴ whereby did they enter under the wings of the Shechinah!¹⁵

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: A man can never become a proselyte unless he has been circumcised and has also performed the prescribed ritual ablution.¹⁶ Is not this obvious? [In a dispute between] an individual and a majority the halachah is, surely, in agreement with the majority!¹⁷ — The expression 'Sages' is in fact meant for¹⁸ 'R. Jose'. For it was taught: If [a proselyte] came and stated, 'I have been circumcised but have not performed ritual ablution' he is 'permitted to perform the ablution¹⁹ and [the proper performance of the previous circumcision] does not matter;²⁰ so R. Judah.

R. Jose said: He is not to be allowed ablution,²¹ Hence²² it is permissible for a proselyte²³ to perform the prescribed ablution on the Sabbath;²⁴ so R. Judah. R. Jose, however, said: He is not to be allowed to perform the ablution.²⁵

The Master said, 'Hence it is permissible for a proselyte to perform the prescribed ablution on the Sabbath; so R. Judah'.²⁶ Seeing that R. Judah stated that one²⁷ suffices is it not obvious that, if circumcision has been performed in our presence, he is permitted to perform ablution! Why then, 'Hence'?²⁸ — It might have been assumed that in the opinion of R. Judah, ablution forms the principal [part of the initiation],²⁹ and that ablution is not to take place on the Sabbath because, thereby, a man is improved;³⁰ hence we were taught³¹ that R. Judah requires either the one or the other.³²

'R. Jose, however, said: He is not to be allowed to perform the ablution'. Is not this obvious? Since R. Jose said that both³³ are required [ablution must be forbidden as] the improvement of a man³⁴ may not be effected on the Sabbath! — It might have been assumed that in the opinion of R. Jose circumcision forms the principal [part of the initiation] and that the reason there³⁵ is because the circumcision had not been performed in our presence³⁶ but where the circumcision had taken place in our presence³⁷ it might have been assumed that a proselyte in such circumstances³⁸ may perform the prescribed ablution even on the Sabbath, hence we were taught³⁹ that R. Jose requires both.³³

Rabbah stated: It happened at the court of R. Hiyya b. Rabbi (and R. Joseph taught: R. Oshaia b.⁴⁰ Rabbi;⁴¹ and R. Safra taught: R. Oshaia b. Hiyya)⁴¹ — that there came before him a proselyte who had been circumcised but had not performed the ablution.⁴² The Rabbi told him, 'Wait here until tomorrow⁴³ when we shall arrange for your ablution'. From this incident three rulings may be deduced. It may be inferred that the initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three men;⁴⁴ and it may be inferred that a man is not a proper proselyte unless he had been circumcised and had also performed the prescribed ablution; and it may also be inferred⁴⁵ that the ablution of a proselyte may not take place during the night.

Let it be said that from this incident it may also be inferred that qualified scholars are required!⁴⁶ — Their presence might have been a mere coincidence.⁴⁷

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: The initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three men; for law⁴⁸ has been written in his case.⁴⁹

Our Rabbis taught: As it might have been assumed that if a man came and said, 'I am a proselyte' he is to be accepted,⁵⁰ hence it was specifically stated in the Scriptures With thee,⁵¹ only when he is well known to thee. Whence is it inferred that if he came, and had his witnesses with him, [that his word is accepted]? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, And if a proselyte sojourn . . . in your land.⁵²

(8) As was the case when Israel received the Torah and were thus admitted into Judaism. (V. Ex, XIX, 10).

(9) The washing of the garments.

(10) And had no reference to Levitical purity. Such washing, therefore, can have no bearing on the question of the ritual ablution of proselytes.

(11) Is R. Joshua's deduction made.

- (14) Lit., 'for if so', if even ablution was not performed.
- (15) V. Glos. They could not have been initiated without any ceremonial whatsoever.
- (16) Ber. 47b.
- (17) And this view is held (supra 46a) by the Sages who obviously form a majority against the individual or joint opinions of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.
- (18) Lit., 'who are the Sages'?
- (19) And by this act alone he is admitted as a proper proselyte.
- (20) Lit., 'and what is there in it'. Whether the circumcision had been valid, having been performed for the specific ritual purpose of the proselyte's initiation into Judaism, or whether it had been invalid because it was carried out as a mere surgical operation or as a non-Jewish sectarian rite, is of no consequence, since the present performance of the ritual ablution is alone sufficient for the initiation.
- (21) Because both circumcision and ablution are required. As the validity of the former is in doubt (v. supra note 1) the latter must be allowed unless some act of circumcision (causing a few drops of blood to flow) had again been carried out specifically for the purpose of the initiation.
- (22) Since according to R. Akiba one act, either ablution or circumcision, suffices.
- (23) Who had been circumcised on Sabbath Eve in the ritually prescribed manner.
- (24) The ablution being of no consequence (v. supra on. 3 and 4), the proselyte's person in no way being improved by it, it is an act which is permitted on the Sabbath.
- (25) The ablution completes the initiation and thus effects the proselyte's improvement, which is an act forbidden on the Sabbath. Thus it has been shewn that the author of the view that both ablution and circumcision are required, given supra as the opinion of 'the Sages', is in fact R. Jose.
- (26) V, Bah. Cur. edd. omit the last three words.
- (27) Either circumcision or ablution.

(51) Lev. XIX, 33. And if a proselyte (גֵּר E.V., 'stranger') sojourn with thee.

(52) Ibid., i.e., as long as he is in your land even if he is not well known to you. Cf. n. 4, supra. Cur. edd. include here 'with thee' which should be omitted since the phrase has been previously employed as proof to the contrary that the proselyte must be well known.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 47a

From this I only know [that the law is applicable] within the Land of Israel, whence is it inferred [that it is also applicable] within the countries outside the Land? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, With thee, i.e., ‘wherever he is with thee’.¹ If so, why was the Land of Israel specified? — In the Land of Israel² proof must be produced;³ outside the Land of Israel⁴ no such proof need be produced; these are the words of R. Judah. But the Sages said: Proof must be produced both within the Land of Israel and outside the Land.

‘If he came and had witnesses with him,’ what need is there for a Scriptural text?⁵ R. Shesheth replied: Where they⁶ state, ‘We heard that he be came a proselyte at a certain particular court’. As it might have been taught that we are not to believe them,⁷ we were taught [that we do believe them].

‘In your land,⁸ from this I only know [that the law is applicable] within the Land of Israel, whence is it inferred [that it is also applicable] within the countries outside the Land? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, With thee, i.e., wherever he is with thee’. But this,⁹ surely, had been expounded already!¹⁰ — One is derived from With thee¹¹ and the other from With you.¹²

‘But the Sages said: Proof must be produced both within the Land of Israel and outside the Land’. But, it is written, surely, in your land!¹³ — That expression is required [for the deduction] that proselytes may be accepted even in the Land of Israel. As it might have been assumed that there they become proselytes only on account of the prosperity of the Land of Israel, and at the present time also, when there is no prosperity, they might still be attracted¹⁴ by the Gleanings,¹⁵ the Forgotten Sheaf,¹⁶ the Corner¹⁷ and the Poor Man's Tithe,¹⁸ hence we were taught [that they may nevertheless be accepted].

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan, ‘The halachah is that proof must be produced¹⁹ both in the Land of Israel and outside the Land’. Is this not obvious? [In a dispute between] an individual and a majority the halachah is, of course, in agreement with the majority!²⁰ — It might have been suggested that R. Judah's view is more acceptable since he is supported by Scriptural texts, ‘A hence we were taught [that the halachah is in agreement with the Sages].

Our Rabbis taught: And judge righteously between a man and his brother, and the proselyte that is with him;²¹ from this text²² did R. Judah deduce that a man who becomes a proselyte²³ in the presence of a Beth din is deemed to be a proper proselyte; but he who does so privately is no proselyte.²⁴

It once happened that a man came before R. Judah and told him, ‘I have become a proselyte privately’. ‘Have you witnesses?’ R. Judah asked. ‘No’, the man replied. ‘Have you children?’ — ‘Yes’, the man replied. ‘You are trusted’, the Master said to him, ‘as far as your own disqualification is concerned but you cannot be relied upon to disqualify your children.’²⁵

Did R. Judah, however, state that a proselyte is not trusted in respect of his children? Surely it was taught: He shall acknowledge²⁶ implies, ‘he shall be entitled to acknowledge him before others?’²⁷ From this did R. Judah deduce that a man is believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is firstborn’,²⁸ And as a man is believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is firstborn’ so is he believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is the son of a divorced woman’ or ‘the son of a haluzah’.²⁹ But the Sages say: He³⁰ is not believed!³¹ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is this that he³² really told him,³³ ‘According to your own statement you are an idolater, and no idolater is eligible to tender evidence’.³⁴

Rabina said: It is this that he³⁵ really told him,³⁶ ‘Have you children?’ [And when the other replied] ‘Yes’ [he asked] ‘Have you grandchildren’. [The reply being again] ‘Yes’, he told him ‘You are trusted so far as to disqualify your own children³⁷ but you cannot be trusted so far as to disqualify your grandchildren’.

Thus it was also taught elsewhere: R. Judah said, ‘A man is trusted in respect [of the status of] his young son but not in respect of that of his grown-up son; and R. Hiyya b. Abba explained in the name of R. Johanan that ‘young’ does not mean actually a minor and ‘grown-up’ does not mean one who is actually ‘of age’, but any young son who has children is regarded as of age while any grown-up son who has no children is deemed to be a minor. And the law is in agreement with R. Nahman b. Isaac.³⁸ But, surely, [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rabina!³⁹ — That statement was made with reference to the law of acknowledgement.⁴⁰

Our Rabbis taught: If at the present time a man desires⁴¹ to become a proselyte, he is to be addressed as follows: ‘What reason have you for desiring⁴² to become a proselyte; do you not know that Israel at the present time are persecuted and oppressed, despised, harassed and overcome by afflictions’? If he replies, ‘I know and yet am unworthy’,⁴³ he is accepted forthwith, and is given instruction in some of the minor and some of the major commandments. He is informed of the sin [of the neglect of the commandments of] Gleanings,⁴⁴ the Forgotten Sheaf,⁴⁵ the Corner⁴⁶ and the Poor Man's Tithes.⁴⁷ He is also told of the punishment for the transgression of the commandments. Furthermore, he is addressed thus: ‘Be it known to you that before you came to this condition, if you had eaten suet⁴⁸ you would not have been punishable with kareth, if you had profaned the Sabbath you would not have been punishable with stoning; but now were you to eat suet⁴⁸ you would be punished with kareth; were you to profane the Sabbath you would be punished with stoning’. And as he is informed of the punishment for the transgression of the commandments, so is he informed of the reward granted for their fulfilment. He is told, ‘Be it known to you that the world to come was made only for the righteous, and that Israel at the present time are unable to bear either too much prosperity. or too much suffering'. He is not, however, to be persuaded or dissuaded too much.¹ If he accepted,² he is circumcised forthwith. Should any shreds³ which render the circumcision invalid remain, he is to be circumcised a second time. As soon as he is healed arrangements are made for his immediate ablution, when two learned men must stand by his side and acquaint him with some of the minor commandments and with some of the major ones.⁴ When he comes up after his ablution he is deemed to be an Israelite in all respects.

In the case of a woman proselyte, women make her sit in the water up to her neck, while two learned men stand outside and give her instruction in some of the minor commandments and some of the major ones.

The same law⁵ applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave; and only where a menstruant may perform her ablution⁶ may a proselyte and an emancipated slave perform this ablution;⁷ and whatever is deemed an interception in ritual bathing⁸ is also deemed to be an interception in the ablutions of a proselyte, an emancipated slave and a menstruant.⁹

The Master said, 'If a man desires to become a proselyte . . . he is to be addressed as follows: "What reason have you for desiring to become a proselyte . . ." and he is made acquainted with some of the minor, and with some of the major commandments'. What is the reason? — In order that if he desire to withdraw let him do so;¹⁰ for R. Helbo said: Proselytes are as hard for Israel [to endure] as a sore,¹¹ because it is written in Scripture. And the proselyte¹² shall join himself with them, and they shall cleave¹³ to the house of Jacob.¹⁴

'He is informed of the sin [of the neglect of the commandment of] Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, the Corner and the Poor Man's Tithe'. What is the reason? — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Because a Noahide¹⁵ would rather be killed than spend so much as a perutah¹⁶ which is not returnable.¹⁷

'He¹⁸ is not, however, to be persuaded, or dissuaded too much'. R. Eleazar said: What is the Scriptural proof? — It is written, And when she saw that she was steadfastly minded to go with her, she left off speaking unto her.¹⁹ 'We are forbidden', she²⁰ told her,²¹ '[to move on the Sabbath beyond the] Sabbath boundaries'!²² — 'Whither thou goest' [the other replied] 'I will go'.²³

'We are forbidden private meeting between man and woman'!²⁴ — 'Where thou lodgest. I will lodge'²³

'We have been commanded six hundred and thirteen commandments'! — 'Thy people shall be my people'.²³

'We are forbidden idolatry'! — 'And thy God my God'.²³

'Four modes of death²⁵ were entrusted to Beth din'!²⁶ — 'Where thou diest, will I die'.²⁷

'Two graveyards²⁸ were placed at the disposal of the Beth din'! — 'And there will I be buried'.²⁷ Presently she saw that she was steadfastly minded etc.¹⁹

'If he accepted, he is circumcised forthwith'. What is the reason? — The performance of a commandment must not in any way be delayed.

'Should any shreds which render the circumcision invalid remain etc.', as we learned: These are the shreds which render the circumcision invalid: Flesh which covers the greater part of the corona,²⁹ [a priest having been so circumcised] is not permitted to eat terumah; and R. Jeremiah b. Abba explained in the name of Rab: Flesh which covers the greater part of the height of the corona.³⁰

'As soon as he is healed arrangements are made for his immediate ablution'. Only after he is healed but not before!³¹ What is the reason? — Because the water might irritate the wound.

'When two learned men must stand by his side'. Did not R. Hiyya, however, state in the name of R. Johanan that the initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three? — But, surely. R. Johanan told the tanna:³² Read, 'three'.

'When he comes up after his ablution he is deemed to be an Israelite in all respects'. In respect of what practical issue? — In that if he retracted and then betrothed the daughter of an Israelite he is regarded as a non-conforming Israelite and his betrothal is valid.³³

‘The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave’. Assuming this³⁴ to apply to the acceptance of the yoke of the commandments,³⁵ the following contradiction may be pointed out: This³⁶ applies only to a proselyte. but an emancipated slave need not accept!³⁷ — R. Shesheth replied: This is no contradiction, One statement is that of R. Simeon; the other, that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: And bewail her father and her mother etc.³⁸ This only applies when she did not accept,³⁹ but if she did accept,³⁹ her ablution may be arranged, and he is permitted to marry her forthwith. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Even though she did not accept³⁹ he may force her to perform one ablution as a mark of her slavery and a second ablution as a mark of her emancipation, and having liberated her

(9) Although the purpose of these ablutions is not, like that of the usual ablutions, to qualify for the eating, or the handling of, levitically clean things. The ablutions of the proselyte and the slave are only a part of their initiation ceremonial, while that of the menstruant has for its object the woman's permissibility to her husband.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 48a

he is permitted to marry her forthwith.¹

Raba said: What is R. Simeon b. Eleazar's reason?² — Because it is written, Every man's slave that is bought for money;³ [could it mean] the slave of a man and not the slave of a woman?⁴ But [this is the implication]: The slave⁵ of a man may be forcibly circumcised but no son of a man⁶ may be forcibly circumcised. And the Rabbis?⁷ — 'Ulla replied: As you, admittedly, may not by force circumcise the son of a man⁸ so you may not forcibly circumcise the slave of a man. But, surely, there is the Scriptural text, Every man's slave!⁹ — That text is required for a deduction made by Samuel. For Samuel stated: If a man declared his slave to be ownerless that slave acquires thereby his freedom and requires no deed of emancipation; for it is stated in Scripture. Every man's slave that is bought for money,³ [could it mean] the slave of a man and not the slave of a woman?¹⁰ But [the meaning is that] a slave who is under his master's control is a proper¹¹ slave but he who is not under his master's control is not a proper¹¹ slave.¹²

R. Papa demurred: It might be suggested that the Rabbis were heard¹³ in respect of a woman of goodly form¹⁴ only,¹⁵ because she¹⁶ is under no obligation to observe the commandments; but that in respect of a slave,¹⁷ who is under the obligation of observing commandments, even the Rabbis agree!¹⁸ For it was indeed taught. 'Both a proselyte and a slave bought from an idolater must make¹⁹ a declaration of acceptance'.²⁰ Thus it follows²¹ that a slave bought from an Israelite need not make a declaration of acceptance.²⁰ Now, whose view is this? If that of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, he, surely, had stated that even a slave bought from an idolater need make no declaration of acceptance!²² Consequently it must be the view of the Rabbis; and so it may be inferred that only a slave bought from an idolater is required to make a declaration of acceptance²⁰ but a slave bought from an Israelite is not required to make a declaration of acceptance.²³ But then the contradiction from the statement 'The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave'²⁴ remains! — That²⁵ was taught only with reference to the ablution.²⁶

Our Rabbis taught: And she shall shave her head, and do²⁷ her nails,²⁸ R. Eliezer said, 'She shall cut them'.²⁹ R. Akiba said, 'She shall let them grow'. R. Eliezer said:³⁰ An act³¹ was mentioned in respect of the head, and an act was mentioned in respect of the nails;³² as the former signifies removal, so does the latter also signify removal. R. Akiba said:³⁰ An act³¹ was mentioned in respect of the head and an act was mentioned in respect of the nails;³² as disfigurement is the purpose of the former so is disfigurement the purpose of the latter. The following, however, supports the view of R. Eliezer: And Mephibosheth the son of Saul came down to meet the king, and he had neither dressed his feet, nor had he done³³ 'his beard,³⁴ by 'doing'³⁵ removal was meant.

Our Rabbis taught: And bewail her father and her mother;³⁶

- (1) Thus it has been shown that while the first Tanna requires the slave's acceptance of the obligation of Judaism, R. Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 48b

R. Eliezer said: 'Her father' means her actual father; 'Her mother', her actual mother. R. Akiba said: 'Her father and her mother' refer to idolatry; for so Scripture says, Who say to a stock;¹ 'Thou art my father', etc.² A full month, 'month' means thirty days. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Ninety days. For 'month' means thirty days; 'full',³ thirty days; 'and after that' thirty days. Rabina demurred: Might it not be suggested that 'month' means thirty days; 'full', thirty days; 'and after that' as many again!⁴ — This is a difficulty.

Our Rabbis taught: Uncircumcised slaves may be retained; this is the opinion of R. Ishmael. R. Akiba said: They may not be retained.⁵ Said R. Ishmael to him: Behold it is written, And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed!⁶ 'This text', the other replied. speaks of a slave that has been bought at twilight,⁷ when there was not time enough to circumcise him.⁸

All at any rate agree that And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed⁶ was written in respect of an uncircumcised slave; whence may this be inferred? — From what has been taught: And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed,⁶ Scripture speaks of an uncircumcised slave. You say. 'Of an uncircumcised slave'; perhaps it is not so⁹ but of a circumcised slave? Since it has been stated 'That thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou,¹⁰ the circumcised slave has already been spoken of; to what then is one to apply 'And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed?'¹¹ Obviously to an uncircumcised slave. And the stranger¹² refers to a domiciled proselyte.¹³ You say. 'It refers to a domiciled proselyte'; perhaps it is not so,¹⁴ but to a true proselyte?¹⁵ Since it was stated, No' thy strange' that is with its thy gates,¹⁰ the true proselyte has already been mentioned; to what then is one to apply, and the stranger?¹² Obviously, to the domiciled proselyte.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: If a man bought a slave from an idolater, and the slave refused to be circumcised, he may bear with him for twelve months. [If by that time he had] not been circumcised, he must re-sell him to idolaters.

The following was said by the Rabbis in the presence of R. Papa: In accordance with whose view?¹⁶ Obviously not in accordance with that of R. Akiba, since he¹⁷ stated [that uncircumcised slaves] may not be retained.¹⁸ R. Papa answered them: It may be said to be the view even of R. Akiba; for this¹⁹ applies when no definite consent has ever been given,²⁰ but where definite consent²¹ had once been given,²² his original decision is taken into consideration.²³

R. Kahana stated: I mentioned this reported discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea and he said to me: If so, instead of R. Akiba replying²⁴ that '[the text speaks] of a slave that has been bought at twilight'. he should rather have given this reply!²⁵ — He gave him one of the two available solutions.

Rabin sent a message in the name of R. Il'ai, [adding]. 'All my masters have so reported in his name': Who is an uncircumcised slave that may be retained? He who was bought by his master with the intention of not having him circumcised.

The Rabbis argued the following in the presence of R. Papa; In accordance with whose view?²⁶ Obviously not in accordance with that of R. Akiba, since he²⁷ stated that [uncircumcised slaves] may not be retained! R. Papa answered: It may be said to be the view even of R. Akiba, for this²⁸ applies where he had made no stipulation with him,²⁹ but where a stipulation²⁹ was made, that stipulation must be taken into consideration.³⁰

R. Kahana said: When I mentioned the reported discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, he said to me: If so, instead of R. Akiba having recourse to the answer³¹ [that 'the text speaks] of a slave who has been bought at twilight when there was not time enough to circumcise him' he should rather have given this reply!³²

But even if your argument is admitted he should rather have given that reply!³³ But [the fact is], he mentioned one of two or three solutions.

R. Hanina b. Papi, R. Ammi, and R. Isaac Nappaha once sat in the ante-chamber³⁴ of R. Isaac Nappaha, and while there, they related: There was a certain town in the Land of Israel where slaves refused to be circumcised, and after bearing with them for twelve months they re-sold them to idolaters. In accordance with whose view? — In accordance with that of the following Tanna. For it was taught: If one bought a slave from an idolater, and the slave refused to be circumcised, he bears with him for twelve months. [If by that time] he has not been circumcised, he re-sells him to idolaters. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: In the Land of Israel he must not be kept owing to [possible] damage to levitically clean foodstuffs,³⁵ and in a town which is near the frontier³⁶ he must not be kept at all, since he might overhear some secret and proceed to report it to a fellow idolater.³⁷

It was taught: R. Hanania son of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Why are proselytes at the present time oppressed and visited with afflictions? Because they had not observed the seven Noahide³⁸ commandments.³⁹

R. Jose said: One who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born.⁴⁰ Why then are proselytes oppressed? — Because they are not so well acquainted with the details of the commandments as the Israelites.⁴¹

Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eleazar: Because they do not do it⁴² out of love⁴³ but out of fear.⁴⁴ Others said: Because they delayed their entry under the wings of the Shechinah. Said R. Abbahu, or it might be said R. Hanina: What is the Scriptural proof?⁴⁵ — The Lord recompense thy work, and be thy reward complete from the Lord, the God of Israel, under whose etc. thou art come to take refuge.⁴⁶

(1) The idol.

(2) Jer. II, 27.

(3) ימים lit., 'days'.

(4) Lit., 'like these', i.e., equal to the sum of these two numbers, sixty: the meaning of the text being: And after another one like that, i.e., after the completion of another period equal in duration to the former (a total of a hundred and twenty days) thou mayest go in unto her etc. (Deut. XXI, 23).

(5) Even for one day.

(6) Ex. XXIII, 12. This text, as will be explained infra, deals with an uncircumcised slave.

(7) On the Sabbath Eve.

(8) Circumcision in such a case being forbidden on the Sabbath. Only a circumcision which takes place on the eighth day of a child's birth, מילה מזמנה may be performed on the Sabbath. Since circumcision of the slave could not be performed until after the Sabbath, Scripture indicated by the injunction And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed that oven on the first Sabbath on which he is still uncircumcised he must observe the Sabbath rest.

(9) Lit., 'or it is not'.

(10) Deut. V, 24.

(11) V. p. 317, n. 10.

(12) Ex. XXIII, 22, והגר.

(13) Or, resident alien. גר תושב, a non Israelite domiciled in Palestine who renounces idolatry and observes also the other six of the seven Noahide commandments (V. Sanh. 56a). Opp. to גר צדק infra. Working on the Sabbath while in the employ of an Israelite (v. Tosaf. s.v. זיה a.l.) is regarded as idolatry (Rashi a.l.); hence it is forbidden even to the domiciled proselyte.

(14) Lit., 'or it is not'.

(15) גר צדק 'the proselyte of righteousness' who accepts all the obligations of an Israelite.

(16) Was R. Joshua b. Levi's statement made,

(17) Lit., 'for if R. Akiba, surely'.

(18) Even for one day.

- (19) R. Akiba's ruling that an uncircumcised slave may not be kept at all.
- (20) By the slave. He never agreed to the circumcision and to the adoption of the obligations of an Israelite slave.
- (21) Cf. supra n. 22.
- (22) Lit., 'the thing was not definitely decided'. If at the time he was bought he consented, though he subsequently retracted,
- (23) Lit., it was definitely decided'. Once he has consented he may be kept for twelve months in the expectation that he will consent again. (Cf. Rashi and Tosaf. s.v. היכא and תוספות ישנים a.l. for other interpretations).
- (24) To R. Ishmael's objection supra.
- (25) That the text speaks of a slave who has once consented. (V. p. 328, n. 23).
- (26) Was the ruling in the name of R. Il'ai made.
- (27) Lit., 'for if R. Akiba surely'.
- (28) V. supra p. 318, n. 20.
- (29) That he would not circumcise him.
- (30) Lit., 'surely he had made a stipulation.'
- (31) To R. Ishmael's objection supra.
- (32) That the text refers to a slave with whom his master had stipulated not to circumcise him.
- (33) The first answer of R. Papa. V. supra note 2.
- (34) קילעיא 'curtained enclosure' (Jast.). 'door' (Golds.).
- (35) E.g., terumah which would be defiled by the touch of the idolater who is always deemed to be levitically unclean.
- (36) Of the Land of Israel.
- (37) Across the frontier.
- (38) V. Sanh. 56a.
- (39) While they were still idolaters. Though they have now embraced Judaism they have yet to atone by their sufferings for their sins of the past.
- (40) All his previous sins are forgiven.
- (41) And cannot properly observe them.
- (42) The performance of the commandments.
- (43) Of the faith and the commandments.
- (44) Of divine punishment.
- (45) For the opinion advanced by the 'Others'.
- (46) Ruth II, 22. 'Thou art come' before 'to take refuge' implies haste. Ruth was given credit for the haste she made in entering under the divine wings. Delay in such action is culpable.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 49a

MISHNAH. WHO IS DEEMED TO BE A BASTARD?¹ [THE OFFSPRING OF A UNION WITH] ANY CONSANGUINEOUS RELATIVE WITH WHOM COHABITATION IS FORBIDDEN;² THIS IS THE RULING OF R. AKIBA. SIMEON THE TEMANITE SAID: [THE OFFSPRING OF ANY UNION] THE PENALTY FOR WHICH IS KARETH AT THE HANDS OF HEAVEN; AND THE HALACHAH IS IN AGREEMENT WITH HIS VIEW, AND R. JOSHUA SAID: [THE OFFSPRING OF ANY UNION]. THE PENALTY FOR WHICH IS DEATH AT THE HANDS OF BETH DIN.

SAID R. SIMEON B. 'AZZAI: I FOUND A ROLL OF GENEALOGICAL RECORDS IN JERUSALEM, AND THEREIN WAS WRITTEN, SO-AND-SO IS A BASTARD [HAVING BEEN BORN] FROM [A FORBIDDEN UNION WITH] A MARRIED WOMAN',³ WHICH CONFIRMS THE VIEW OF R. JOSHUA.

IF A MAN'S WIFE DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF HE DIVORCED HER AND THEN SHE DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF SHE WAS⁴ MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

IF A MAN'S SISTER-IN-LAW⁵ DIED, HE MAY MARRY HER SISTER. IF HE SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH AND THEN SHE DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF SHE WAS MARRIED⁶ TO ANOTHER MAN AND THEN DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

GEMARA. What is R. Akiba's reason? — Because it is written A man shall not take his father's wife and shall not uncover his father's skirt,⁷ he shall not uncover the skirt which his father saw; and he⁸ holds the same opinion as R. Judah who said that this Scriptural text⁷ speaks of a woman whom his father had outraged,⁹ and who is classed among those forbidden to him under the penalty for a negative precept;¹⁰ and since close to this [text occurs the commandment], A bastard shall not enter the assembly of the Lord,¹¹ it is obvious that the offspring of any such union¹² is deemed to be a bastard. According to R. Simai also who includes¹³ [the offspring of] any other union that is forbidden by a negative precept even though [the offenders are] not consanguineous relatives,¹⁴ and according to R. Yeshebab who includes¹³ even the offspring of a union forbidden under a positive commandment,¹⁵ the deduction¹⁶ is made from And . . . not.¹⁷

And Simeon the Temanite?¹⁸ — He holds the same opinion as the Rabbis who stated that the text¹⁷ speaks of a woman¹⁹ awaiting the levirate decision of his father,²⁰ the union with such a woman²¹ being forbidden under the penalty of kareth; and since close to this text appears. A bastard shall not enter,¹¹ it proves that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of kareth is deemed to be a bastard.

And R. Joshua?²² — The All Merciful should have written²³ 'Shall not uncover' only!²⁴ What need was there for 'Shall not take'?²⁵ Must it not, consequently, be concluded that it is this that was meant:²⁶ [The offspring] of [a union with her who is explicitly mentioned between] 'Shall not take' and 'Shall not uncover'²⁷ is deemed to be a bastard, but no others²⁸ are to be regarded as bastards.²⁹

Abaye said: All agree that if one cohabited with a menstruant

(1) V. Deut. XXIII, 2.

(2) Under the penalty of flogging (incurred for the infringement of a negative precept).

(3) Such a union is punishable by death at the hands of Beth din,

(4) After her divorce.

(5) The widow of his brother who died without issue.

(6) After the halizah.

(7) Deut. XXIII, 1.

(8) R. Akiba.

(9) Not his lawful wife. Infra 97a.

(10) Flogging (v. supra note 1).

(11) Deut. XXIII, 3.

(12) Forbidden under the penalty for a negative precept (v. supra p. 321, n. 1).

(13) In R. Akiba's category of bastards.

(14) Keth, 29b, Kid. 68a, the marriage, e.g., with one's divorced wife.

(15) The union, e.g., with an Edomite or an Egyptian (v. Deut. XXIII, 8-9) the prohibition of which is derived from the positive precept. The third generation that are born unto then, may enter into the assembly of the Lord (ibid. 9) from which it follows that only the third generation may enter; but not the first, or the second generation. Any prohibition that is derived from a positive precept has only the force of a positive precept and does not involve the penalty of flogging, much less that of kareth. V. Keth. 29b.

(16) That these categories are also classed as bastards.

(17) Deut. XXIII, 1b.

(18) Whence, in view of R. Akiba's deduction, does he derive his ruling in our Mishnah?

(19) Whose husband died without issue.

- (20) Who most decide whether to contract with her the levirate marriage or to submit to halizah from her.
- (21) As one's father's brother's wife.
- (22) Whence does he derive his ruling in out Mishnah?
- (23) If the text of Deut. XXIII, 1b speaks of a woman outraged by one's father (as R. Judah maintains) or of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir (as Simeon the Temanite asserts).
- (24) From which text alone R. Judah and the Rabbis could have deduced their respective rulings, while the case of one's father's wife would follow logically by inference a minori ad majus.
- (25) Cf. Rashal. Cur. edd. insert in parentheses, 'And shall not uncover.'
- (26) By the addition of the text Shall not take.
- (27) I.e., one's father's wife, forbidden under the death penalty at the hands of Beth din.
- (28) The offspring of unions which are forbidden under the penalty of kareth or flogging.
- (29) The proximity of Deut, XXIII, 3 (the text relating to the bastard) to that of v. 1, according to R. Joshua, beats on the case of a father's wife only (v. 2a). The mention of 'shall not uncover' (v. 1b) implies, if it refers to one's father's brother's widow awaiting the levir's decision (the view of the Rabbis and Simeon the Temanite), that cohabitation with her is forbidden to the levir's son by two negative precepts, those of Lev. XVIII, 24 and Deut. XXIII, 1b; and if it refers to a woman whom one's father has outraged (the view of R. Akiba and R. Judah). the text is required to lay down this very prohibition.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 49b

or with a sotah,¹ the child [born from either union] is no bastard.² 'A menstruant', since betrothal with her is valid because it is said, And her impurity be upon him,³ even at the time of her menstruation betrothal with her is valid.⁴ 'A sotah' also, since her betrothal is valid.⁵ It has been taught likewise: All agree that if one cohabited with a menstruant or with a sotah or with a widow awaiting the decision of a levir, the child [born from any such union] is no bastard.⁶ And Abaye?⁷ — He was in doubt in the case of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir as to whether [the law⁸ is] in agreement with Rab or with Samuel.⁹

SAID R. SIMEON B. AZZAI etc. [A tanna] recited: Simeon b. 'Azzai said, 'I found a roll of genealogical records in Jerusalem and therein was written "So-and-so is a bastard [having been born] from a forbidden union with] a married woman" and therein was also written "The teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity¹⁰ but thoroughly sifted".¹¹ And in it was also written, "Manasseh slew Isaiah"'.¹²

Raba said: He¹² brought him to trial and then slew him. He¹² said to him: Your teacher Moses said, 'For men shall not see Me and live'¹³ and you said, 'I saw the Lord sitting on a throne, high and lifted up'.¹⁴ Your teacher Moses said, 'For what [great nation is there, that hath God so nigh unto them], as the Lord our God is whensoever we call upon him',¹⁵ and you said, 'Seek ye the Lord when he may be found'.¹⁶ Your teacher Moses said, 'The number of thy days I will fulfil'¹⁷ but you said, 'And I will add on to your days fifteen years'.¹⁸ 'I know', thought Isaiah, 'that whatever I may tell him he will not accept; and should I reply at all, I would only cause him to be a wilful [homicide]'. He thereupon pronounced [the Divine] Name and was swallowed up by a cedar. The cedar, however, was brought and sawn asunder. When the saw reached his month he died. [And this was his penalty] for having said, 'And I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips'.¹⁹

[Do not] the contradictions between the Scriptural texts, however, still remain? — 'I saw the Lord',²⁰ [is to be understood] in accordance with what was taught: All the prophets looked into a dim glass,²¹ but Moses looked through a clear glass.²² As to 'Seek ye the Lord when he may be found [etc.] one [verse]¹⁶ applies to an individual,²³ the other²⁴ to a congregation. When [is the time for] an individual? — R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: The ten days between the New Year²⁵ and the Day of Atonement.²⁵ Concerning the number of thy days I will fulfil,²⁶ Tannaim are in disagreement. For it was taught: The number of thy days I will fulfil²⁶

- (4) The offspring of a forbidden but valid union cannot be considered a bastard.

refers to the years of the generations.¹ If one is worthy one is allowed to complete the full period; if unworthy. the number is reduced; so R. Akiba. But the Sages said: If one is worthy years are added to one's life;² if unworthy, the years of his life are reduced. They said to R. Akiba: Behold, Scripture says,³ And I will add unto your days fifteen years!⁴ He replied: The addition was made of his own,⁵ You may know [that this is so]⁶ since the prophet⁷ stood up and prophesied: Behold, a son shall be born to the house of David, Josiah by name,⁸ while Manasseh⁹ had not yet been born.¹⁰ And the Rabbis!¹¹ — Is it written 'from Hezekiah'? It is surely written, 'To the house of David';⁸ he¹² might be born either from Hezekiah or from any other person.¹³

IF A MAN'S WIFE DIED etc. IF A MAN'S SISTER-IN-LAW DIED etc. R. Joseph said: Here Rabbi taught an unnecessary Mishnah.¹⁴

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. R. GAMALIEL SAID: THERE IS NO [VALIDITY IN A] LETTER OF DIVORCE AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE,¹⁵ NOR IN A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR¹⁶ NOR IN AN ACT OF COHABITATION AFTER ANOTHER ACT OF

COHABITATION,¹⁷ NOR IN A HALIZAH AFTER ANOTHER HALIZAH.¹⁸ THE SAGES, HOWEVER, SAID: A LETTER OF DIVORCE HAS VALIDITY AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE,¹⁹ AND A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR;²⁰ BUT THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT AFTER COHABITATION OR HALIZAH.²¹

HOW [IS THE RELEASE FROM THE LEVIRATE BOND²² EFFECTED]? — IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH WITH HIM.²³ IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND PARTICIPATED IN THE HALIZAH, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN FROM HIM A LETTER OF DIVORCE.²⁴ IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, BEHOLD THIS IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT.²⁵

IF THE LEVIR GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN [A SECOND] LETTER OF DIVORCE²⁶ AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.²⁷ IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.²⁸ IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT²⁹ AFTER HALIZAH HAD BEEN PERFORMED.

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER HALIZAH³⁰

(1) The span of life allotted to every human being at his birth.

(2) The meaning of fulfil is addition to the allotted span of life.

(3) II Kings XX, 6.

(4) Emphasis on add.

(5) Years which were originally allotted to him and then curtailed.

(6) That the years added were only those allotted to Hezekiah at his birth and reduced at his illness.

(7) In the days of Jeroboam, long before the birth of Hezekiah.

(8) I Kings XIII, 2.

(9) From whom Josiah descended.

(10) At the time of Hezekiah's illness. Manasseh, in fact, was born three years after his father's illness (v. II Kings XXI, 2); and since the birth of his son Josiah was prophetically announced long before the birth of his father Hezekiah, it is obvious that the years allotted to Hezekiah at his birth extended beyond the year of his illness (to include the year of Manasseh's birth). Consequently, the original number must have been reduced at his illness; and, at his recovery, only that was added which was first reduced.

(11) How could they, in view of the argument advanced, maintain that view years were added to Hezekiah's life?

(12) Josiah.

(13) Of the house of David.

(14) Since the laws therein enumerated are self-evident. Lev. XVIII, 18, from where the prohibition of marrying the sister of one's wife originates, distinctly limits the prohibition to the wife's life-time: And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister . . . in her life-time. V. Rashi a.l. According to Tosaf (s.v. שנה a.l. q.v.) the unnecessary Mishnah is only that portion which relates to the sister-in-law whose case could be inferred from that of the wife a minori ad majus.

(15) Given in succession by one levir to two sisters-in-law, i.e., the widows of a deceased childless brother, or by two levirs to one sister-in-law. (The term sister-in-law used throughout this chapter is to be understood in the sense defined). The second divorce is invalid and the relatives of the second widow are, therefore, permitted to the levir, and so are the relatives of the one widow to the second levir. Whether the first divorce is valid or not, the second is at all events valueless. For if the first is valid the levirate bond with both the widows is thereby severed and the second widow (in the case of one levir) or the one widow (in the case of two Levirs) when receiving the second letter of divorce, is a complete stranger to the levir. If, on the other hand, the first divorce was invalid, the second also, for the same reason, is invalid.

(16) Addressed in succession (a) by one levir to two sisters-in-law or (b) by two levirs to one sister-in-law. The first ma'amar has satisfied all the requirements of the levirate obligations and, consequently, (a) the second widow, or (b) the one widow to whom the second ma'amar was addressed, requires no letter of divorce from (a) the one levir or (b) the second levir respectively. The second widow, moreover, does not cause the prohibition to the levir of the first widow, and her relatives also are permitted to the levir as are those of the one widow to the second levir.

(17) The second act by the one levir with the second widow or by the second levir with the one widow respectively, is deemed to be one of mere adultery and has no matrimonial validity to cause the prohibition of her relatives to the levir.

(18) Cf. supra n. 2. The first halizah has finally severed the levirate bond between the levir or the levirs and the widow or the widows. The second halizah is, therefore, valueless.

(19) The relatives of the second widow are, therefore, forbidden to the levir (as relatives of his legal divorcee), and the relatives of the one widow are similarly forbidden to the second levir. The first letter of divorce, the Sages maintain, is only partially valid since halizah also is required. The levirate bond consequently is not thereby completely severed and the second divorce brings the widow under the category of a divorced woman. Cf supra 327 n. 1.

(20) The first ma'amar effected only partial matrimony and the levirate obligations were not fully satisfied before the consummation of the marriage took place. The second ma'amar, since it was made before consummation had taken place, is, therefore, valid.

(21) Either of these acts satisfies fully all the requirements of the levirate obligations. The former effected complete union; the latter final severance. No act in connection with the levirate obligations that follows either of these can, therefore, have any validity.

(22) Between one levir and one sister-in-law. This section has no reference to the dispute in the previous section. V. Gemara infra.

(23) But no levirate marriage may now be contracted. The ma'amar alone has not completely satisfied the requirements of the levirate obligations (cf. supra n. 1), hence the need for halizah. Since, however, a divorce had been given the levir had placed himself under the prohibition of Deut. XXV, 9 'That doth not build': if he once refused to build he must never again build (v. supra 10b), hence the prohibition of the levirate marriage.

(24) To annul the ma'amar which, in some respects, has the force of a betrothal. The halizah alone is not enough since it only severs a levirate bond but does not annul a ma'amar.

(25) This is discussed in the Gemara infra.

(26) Even according to R. Gamaliel. The divorce is required to annul the ma'amar since it is possible that the first divorce was invalid and the ma'amar had, therefore, been valid. According to the Sages, who regard the divorce as partially valid, the ma'amar also is partially valid and a divorce is required to annul that part.

(27) In order to sever thereby the levirate bond. Levirate marriage, however, must not take place now after the delivery of the first letter of divorce (v. supra p. 325, n. 4 final clause).

(28) Levirate marriage is forbidden owing to the first divorce (v. supra p. 325, n. 4, final clause), a letter of divorce is required owing to the act of cohabitation, while halizah is necessary to sever the levirate bond.

(29) Whether it be the addressing of a ma'amar or cohabitation. The levirate bond has completely disappeared.

(30) Cf. supra n. 3. This refers to the cases where halizah was performed first. With reference to the last three cases, where cohabitation took place first, the expression should be 'no act is valid after cohabitation'. V. Gemara infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 50b

AND THE LAW IS THE SAME WHETHER THERE IS ONE SISTER-IN-LAW TO ONE LEVIR OR TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW TO ONE LEVIR.

HOW?¹ — IF THE LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO THE ONE² AND A MA'AMAR TO THE OTHER,² TWO LETTERS OF DIVORCE³ AND ONE HALIZAH⁴ ARE REQUIRED.⁵ IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE OTHER, [THE ONE] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE⁶ AND [THE OTHER MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH.⁷ IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND COHABITED WITH THE

OTHER, BOTH REQUIRE LETTERS OF DIVORCE⁸ AND [ONE MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH.⁹ IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER, IT IS NECESSARY FOR THE FIRST TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF DIVORCE.¹⁰

IF THE LEVIR GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER, HALIZAH IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH.¹¹ IF HE GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND COHABITED WITH THE OTHER, [THE SECOND] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE¹² AND MUST ALSO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.¹³ [IF HE GAVE] A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO THE OTHER, [THE SECOND] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND [ONE OF THEM MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH. [IF HE GAVE] A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS THE HALIZAH.¹⁴

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE ONE AND FROM THE OTHER, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH [FROM ONE] AND ADDRESSED [TO THE OTHER] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH THE ONE AND WITH THE OTHER, OR COHABITED [WITH THE ONE] AND ADDRESSED [TO THE OTHER] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER THE HALIZAH.¹⁵ [THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW] WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR TO TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW OR TWO LEVIRS TO ONE SISTER-IN-LAW.¹⁶

[IF THE LEVIR]¹⁷ SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER¹⁸ A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER THE HALIZAH, WHETHER [IT WAS PERFORMED] IN THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE,¹⁹ OR AT THE END.²⁰ IN THE CASE OF COHABITATION, IF IT TOOK PLACE FIRST NO ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT HAS ANY VALIDITY; IF IT OCCURRED, HOWEVER, IN THE MIDDLE²¹ OR AT THE END²² SOMETHING VALID²³ STILL REMAINS.²⁴ R. NEHEMIAH SAID: WITH COHABITATION AS WITH HALIZAH, WHETHER IT TOOK PLACE IN THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, OR AT THE END, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT.²⁵

GEMARA. Their difference²⁶ concerns only a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce and a ma'amar after another ma'amar, but one letter of divorce to one sister-in-law or one ma'amar to one sister-in-law is valid.²⁷

Why did the Rabbis say that a letter of divorce to one sister-in-law is valid?²⁸ — Because it is also valid elsewhere.²⁹ For should you suggest that it is not valid,³⁰ it might be argued that since a letter of divorce serves to release a woman and halizah serves to release a woman, as the letter of divorce is of no effect,³¹ so is the halizah also of no effect, and thus one would come to consummate marriage after halizah.³²

And why did the Rabbis say that a ma'amar with one sister-in-law is valid?³³ — Because it is valid elsewhere.³⁴ For should you say that it is not valid,³⁵ it might be argued that since a ma'amar serves the purpose of acquisition³⁴ and cohabitation serves the purpose of acquisition,³⁶ as a ma'amar is of no effect,³⁷ so is cohabitation also of no effect³⁸ and one would thus consummate marriage³⁹ after an act of cohabitation.⁴⁰

And why did the Rabbis say that after an invalid cohabitation something⁴¹ lingers?⁴² — It might be replied that if it is a cohabitation⁴³ after a letter of divorce,⁴⁴ a preventive measure was made⁴⁵ against cohabitation after halizah;⁴⁶ and if it is a cohabitation⁴³ after a ma'amar⁴⁴ a preventive measure had to be made⁴⁷ against cohabitation after cohabitation.⁴⁸

And why did the Rabbis say that after the invalid halizah⁴⁹ nothing lingers?⁵⁰ — It may be replied: What kind of preventive measure could have been enacted! Should halizah after a letter of divorce be forbidden as a preventive measure against halizah after halizah?⁵¹ Under such circumstances, surely, halizah might well be indefinitely continued!⁵² And should halizah after a ma'amar be forbidden as a preventive measure against halizah after cohabitation?⁵³ Surely [it may be replied] is not in the case of halizah after a ma'amar, a letter of divorce required in respect of one's ma'amar? So also in the case of halizah after cohabitation, a letter of divorce is required in respect of one's cohabitation.⁵⁴

Raba said:

- (1) How are the obligations of the levirate carried out where there is one levir and two sisters-in-law?
 - (2) Sister-in-law.
 - (3) One for each woman, in accordance with the view of the Sages in our Mishnah that a ma'amar after a ma'amar is valid.
 - (4) With either. The halizah with one exempts her rival.
 - (5) Levirate marriage, however, is now forbidden since one must not build two houses'. V. supra.
 - (6) Marriage with her must not be consummated on account of the divorce of the second; hence the necessity for a divorce to annul the ma'amar which the halizah cannot do.
 - (7) To sever thereby the levirate bond which a letter of divorce cannot do.
 - (8) On account of the ma'amar and the cohabitation respectively. The second widow may not be retained in matrimony owing to the bond of the ma'amar with the first.
 - (9) The other becoming thereby exempt from the levirate obligations. The divorce alone does not set the second free because the cohabitation with her was not the performance of a legal commandment but an unlawful act.
 - (10) The halizah of this second cannot annul the force of the ma'amar of the first.
 - (11) The halizah is performed by one who thereby exempts the other. V. Gemara infra.
 - (12) She is forbidden to the levir on account of the divorce of the first.
 - (13) Divorce alone is not enough since the cohabitation was unlawful (cf. supra note 3).
 - (14) The halizah of the second sets both widows free; and the divorce of the first is of no consequence.
 - (15) Cf p. 329, n. 4. The relatives of the second widow are permitted to him as if he had not acted at all after the first halizah.
 - (16) And the two levirs performed the above mentioned acts with the same widow.
 - (17) Where there was only one levir and one sister-in-law.
 - (18) The same sister-in-law.
 - (19) Between a ma'amar and a divorce. If, e.g., he gave a letter of divorce to one, submitted to halizah from the other and then addressed a ma'amar to one of them.
 - (20) After a ma'amar and a divorce. The halizah is invariably valid, and any ma'amar addressed subsequently has no validity at all, and the widow requires no divorce.
 - (21) If, e.g., he divorced one, cohabited with the other and addressed a ma'amar to a third, in which case the cohabitation, owing to the previous divorce, was unlawful.
 - (22) If he divorced one, addressed a ma'amar to the other, and then cohabited with one of them. V. supra n. 7.
 - (23) Of the levirate bond.
 - (24) Hence, in the first case (v. supra n. 7), the relatives of the last widow are forbidden to him, and in the second case (v. supra n. 8), halizah is required, since the levirate bond cannot be severed by a letter of divorce.
 - (25) After cohabitation a letter of divorce without halizah is enough, and betrothal of the other after cohabitation with the first is invalid.
 - (26) That of R. Gamaliel and the Sages in our Mishnah.

- (27) The divorce prevents subsequent levirate marriage under the prohibition of ‘that doth not build’ etc. (v. supra p. 328, n. 4, second clause); and the ma'amar prevents the levirate marriage of a rival under the injunction, ‘a levir may build one house but not two houses’, and necessitates also a letter of divorce should it be desired to cancel the ma'amar.
- (28) In the Pentateuch, surely, only halizah was prescribed and the prohibition under ‘that doth not build’ should apply to the prescribed ceremony only!
- (29) In the release of all married women.
- (30) And that the levir may marry the widow even after he gave her a letter of divorce.
- (31) v. supra n. 4.
- (32) And thus infringe a Pentateuchal prohibition.
- (33) Forbidding levirate marriage with her rival. Since, according to the Pentateuch, acquisition of the sister-in-law is effected by the consummation of the levirate marriage, that consummation only should have had the force of forbidding marriage with the rival.
- (34) The usual betrothal between man and woman, which is as binding as the consummation of marriage.
- (35) And that after a ma'amar had been addressed to a sister-in-law her rival may be married.
- (36) Cf. supra n. 7.
- (37) Without subsequent cohabitation.
- (38) Unless there was also a ma'amar.
- (39) With a rival.
- (40) With one of the widows. Such a marriage, however, would infringe (v. supra note 1) a Pentateuchal prohibition.
- (41) Of the levirate bond.
- (42) Halizah being required in the case of the second widow in addition to the letter of divorce. V. supra p. 330, nn. 6 and 7.
- (43) With one sister-in-law.
- (44) To the other.
- (45) V. p. 332. n. 16.
- (46) Were a letter of divorce alone, without halizah, permitted, it might have been assumed that as unlawful cohabitation is so effective it might also be effective enough to annul a previous halizah.
- (47) Cf. p. 332, n. 26, and p. 330, nn. 2 and 3.
- (48) It might have been assumed that as unlawful cohabitation has the force of validity even after a ma'amar which is a legal kinyan, it has also the same force after a kinyan that had been effected through lawful cohabitation. Acting on this argument one would infringe the prohibition of marriage with one's brother's wife.
- (49) Performed after a divorce or a ma'amar.
- (50) Should the levir subsequent to such a halizah address a ma'amar or give a letter of divorce to a third sister-in-law his act would have no validity whatsoever.
- (51) So that a levir does not submit to the halizah of two sisters-in-law in succession, and two levirs do not submit in succession to the halizah of one sister-in-law.
- (52) And none will be the worse for it.
- (53) That it be not assumed that halizah without a letter of divorce is sufficient after an act of cohabitation.
- (54) The implication of ‘nothing lingers after an unlawful halizah’ is the invalidity of all subsequent acts. Any previous act such as ma'amar or cohabitation is valid, and a letter of divorce to annul it is certainly required.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 51a

What is R. Gamaliel's reason?¹ — Because he was in doubt whether a letter of divorce does, or does not set aside [the levirate bond, and whether] a ma'amar does, or does not effect a kinyan.² ‘Whether a letter of divorce does, or does not set aside the levirate bond’: If the first³ does set aside [the levirate bond], what purpose could the latter serve?⁴ If the first³ does not set aside [the levirate bond], the latter also does not set it aside. ‘Whether a ma'amar does, or does not effect a kinyan’: if the first⁵ does effect a kinyan, what purpose could the latter serve?⁴ And if the first⁵ effects no kinyan, the latter also does not.

Abaye raised the following objection against him: R. Gamaliel, however, admits that ‘there is [validity in] a letter of divorce after a ma'amar,⁶ in a ma'amar after a letter of divorce,⁷ in a letter of divorce after cohabitation and a ma'amar,⁸ and in a ma'amar after cohabitation and a letter of divorce'.⁹ Now, if R. Gamaliel was in doubt,¹⁰ the cohabitation¹¹ should be regarded as if it had taken place at the beginning,¹² and thus constitute a kinyan; for surely we have learnt, IN THE CASE OF COHABITATION, IF IT TOOK PLACE FIRST, NO ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT HAS ANY VALIDITY!

But, said Abaye, though obvious to R. Gamaliel that a letter of divorce does set aside the levirate bond and that a ma'amar does effect a kinyan,¹³ the Rabbis have nevertheless ruled that with the sister-in-law a letter of divorce is partially valid and a ma'amar is partially valid. Consequently, a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce does not set aside the levirate bond since this¹⁴ was already set aside by the first,¹⁵ and a ma'amar after a ma'amar does not constitute a kinyan since this kinyan¹⁶ has already been constituted by the first,¹⁵ with a letter of divorce after a ma'amar, and a ma'amar after a letter of divorce, however, the one act¹⁷ sets aside¹⁸ while the other¹⁹ effects a kinyan.²⁰ (And the Rabbis?²¹ — [They hold that] the Rabbis have instituted for every levir a letter of divorce and a ma'amar in respect of every sister-in-law.)²²

But as to an invalid cohabitation²³ [according to R. Gamaliel]²⁴ it is [in one respect] of superior force to a ma'amar and [in another respect] of inferior force to a ma'amar. It is superior to a ma'amar, since whereas a ma'amar after another ma'amar is not effective,²⁵ an act of cohabitation after a ma'amar is effective.²⁶ It is inferior to a ma'amar, for whereas a ma'amar after a letter of divorce constitutes a kinyan of all that the letter of divorce has left,²⁷ cohabitation after a letter of divorce does not constitute a kinyan of all that the divorce has left.²⁸

Our Rabbis taught; How [are we to understand] R. Gamaliel's statement that there is [no validity in] a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce? If two sisters-in-law have fallen to the lot of one levir, and he gave a letter of divorce to one as well as to the other, he submits, in accordance with R. Gamaliel's statement, to halizah from the first,²⁹ and is forbidden to marry her relatives,³⁰ though the relatives of the second one are permitted to him.³¹ But the Sages said: If he gave a letter of divorce to one and to the other, he is forbidden to marry the relatives of both³² and he submits to halizah from either of them. And the same law applies where there are two levirs³³ and one sister-in-law.

What did R. Gamaliel mean by his statement that³⁴ there is no [validity in] a ma'amar after another ma'amar? If two sisters-in-law have fallen to the lot of one levir, and he addressed a ma'amar to the one as well as to the other, he gives, according to R. Gamaliel, a letter of divorce to the first, submits also to her halizah, and is in consequence forbidden to marry her relatives,³⁵ though the relatives of the second are permitted to him.³⁶ The Sages, however, said: He gives letters of divorce to both, and the relatives of both are forbidden to him,³² while he submits to halizah from one of them. And the same law is to be applied where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law.³⁷

The Master said, 'If he gave³⁸ a letter of divorce to one as well as to the other, he submits, according to R. Gamaliel's statement, to halizah from the first and is forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him'. Must this be assumed to present an objection against a ruling of Samuel, since Samuel stated, 'If he submitted to halizah from the one³⁹ who had been divorced,⁴⁰ her rival⁴¹ is not thereby exempt'!⁴² — Samuel can answer you: What I said was in agreement with him who maintains that a levirate bond exists,⁴³ while R. Gamaliel holds the opinion that no levirate bond exists.⁴⁴

Since R. Gamaliel, however, is of the opinion that no levirate bond exists,

(1) In our Mishnah, v. supra p. 327, nn. 1 and 2.

(2) To constitute a legal marriage.

- (3) Letter of divorce.
- (4) Obviously none. Consequently it is valueless.
- (5) Ma'amar.
- (6) If the ma'amar was addressed to one of the widows and the letter of divorce was subsequently given to the other, the first also is forbidden levirate marriage, while the relatives of both are forbidden to the levir.
- (7) If a letter of divorce was given to one of the widows first, and a ma'amar was subsequently addressed to the second, a letter of divorce must also be given to the second in order to annul thereby the force of the ma'amar.
- (8) Which was addressed to one of the widows prior to the cohabitation with the second that preceded the letter of divorce to the third. The validity of the letter of divorce causes the prohibition to the levir of the relatives of the third widow.
- (9) Given to one of the widows prior to the cohabitation with the second that preceded the ma'amar addressed to the third. The ma'amar constitutes a kinyan, and the relatives of the third widow are forbidden to the levir, while she herself can be released by a letter of divorce only.
- (10) As to the validity of a letter of divorce and a ma'amar given or addressed respectively to a sister-in-law.
- (11) Which took place between the other two acts.
- (12) And the act that follows it, whether it be the delivery of a letter of divorce or the addressing of a ma'amar, should in any case be invalid: In the case of a ma'amar, cohabitation, and divorce, if the ma'amar with the first was valid and effected kinyan, the cohabitation with the second was obviously invalid and much more so the letter of divorce that was given to the third. If, on the other hand, the ma'amar to the first was invalid, the cohabitation with the second widow that followed was obviously valid and there could consequently be no validity in the letter of divorce that was subsequently given to the third. Similarly in the case of divorce, cohabitation and ma'amar, if the letter of divorce given to the first widow was valid the cohabitation that followed had no validity and much more so the ma'amar that came last. If, on the other hand, the letter of divorce given to the first widow was invalid, the cohabitation with the second widow that followed was obviously valid and consequently there could be no validity in the ma'amar that was subsequently addressed to the third widow. In both cases, then, cohabitation which took place between the other two acts should be as valid as if it had taken place at the beginning.
- (13) Cohabitation, therefore, that follows either of these acts cannot have the same force as cohabitation that takes place first.
- (14) Whatever part of the levirate bond a divorce can set aside.
- (15) And the second can add nothing to it.
- (16) As far as a ma'amar has the force of constituting it.
- (17) The divorce.
- (18) Partially.
- (19) The ma'amar.
- (20) V. supra n. 4. In the case of a divorce after a ma'amar, that part of the levirate bond with the first widow which the ma'amar did not effect is set aside by the letter of divorce that was given to the second. Similarly, where there are two levirs and one widow, whatever was not covered by the kinyan of the ma'amar of the first levir is set aside by the letter of divorce of the second. So also in the case of a ma'amar after a letter of divorce, whatever part of the levirate bond remained after the letter of divorce had been given to the first widow (or to one widow by the first levir) is brought under the kinyan constituted by the ma'amar that has been addressed to the second widow (or to the one widow by the second levir).
- (21) The Sages in our Mishnah. How, in view of what has just been explained — can they maintain that A LETTER OF DIVORCE HAS VALIDITY AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE, AND A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR?
- (22) The divorce or ma'amar of one levir does not in any way affect the validity of that of any other levir, nor does any of these acts, performed by a levir in respect of one sister-in-law, affect his performance of these acts in respect of another sister-in-law. The divorce or ma'amar in respect of the first sister-in-law does not, therefore, affect that of the second, and the performance of the same acts by the first levir in respect of one sister-in-law does not invalidate the performance of these acts in respect of the same sister-in-law by the other levir. Hence the opinion of the Rabbis in our Mishnah.
- (23) That which was preceded by divorce or ma'amar.
- (24) Who stated that a letter of divorce following a cohabitation which followed a ma'amar, and a ma'amar following a cohabitation which followed a letter of divorce are valid.

(25) As has been stated supra.

(26) As may be inferred from the ruling concerning 'a letter of divorce after cohabitation and a ma'amar', which implies that cohabitation after a ma'amar is valid (Rashi). Cf. Tosaf. s.v. עדיפא, and תוספות ישנים a.l.

(27) For should a ma'amar, subsequent to the first, be addressed to a third widow it would be altogether invalid, R. Gamaliel invariably admitting no ma'amar after another ma'amar whether the first one was, or was not preceded by a letter of divorce.

(28) A ma'amar being valid even if it was addressed after an act of cohabitation that followed a letter of divorce.

(29) Though he could certainly submit to halizah from the second, the letter of divorce to whom is invalid, and thereby exempt the first also. He is advised, however, to submit to halizah from the first because by so doing he averts the prohibition to him of the second widow's relatives who, had he submitted to her halizah, would have become forbidden to him as the 'relatives of his haluzah'. The prohibition to him of the relatives of the first as 'relatives of his haluzah' is of no practical consequence since they are already, owing to the divorce he had given her forbidden to him as the 'relatives of his divorcee'.

(30) They being the relatives of both his divorcee and his haluzah. Cf. supra p. 336, n. 7.

(31) Because she is neither his haluzah nor his divorcee, the halizah not having been performed by her and the letter of divorce that was given to her being invalid.

(32) Both divorces being valid.

(33) And each of them gave a letter of divorce to the one sister-in-law. According to R. Gamaliel, halizah is performed with the first levir and the second levir is permitted to marry her relatives; while according to the Rabbis her relatives are forbidden to both levirs and the halizah is performed with either of them.

(34) Lit., 'how'.

(35) As the 'relatives of his haluzah'.

(36) Since she is neither his wife nor his haluzah nor his divorcee.

(37) Cf. supra n. 4.

(38) The Heb. uses here the present participle instead of the perfect used supra in the original.

(39) Of two sisters-in-law, the widows of his deceased childless brother.

(40) By him, prior to the performance of the halizah.

(41) Who had not been divorced and whose levirate bond has consequently still its full force.

(42) Supra 27a. A halizah performed by one whose levirate bond had been weakened by divorce cannot sever the levirate bond of the other which had never been weakened by divorce and had retained therefore its full force (v. supra n. 2). This is contradictory to R. Gamaliel's view according to which the halizah of the first, though it followed her divorce which had weakened her levirate bond, is effective enough to exempt her rival whose levirate bond retained its full force, since her divorce was invalid and might be regarded as never having taken place.

(43) Between the levir and the sister-in-law. This levirate bond can only be severed by a halizah which is free from all objection.

(44) v. infra 109a. Hence, even a halizah which is not free from objection is effective enough to sever it.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 51b

the Rabbis are presumably of the opinion that a levirate bond does exist,¹ and yet it was stated in the final clause, 'And the same law applies where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law'!² Must it then be said that this represents an objection to a statement made by Rabbah son of R. Huna in the name of Rab? For Rabbah son of R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: A halizah of an impaired character must go the round of all the brothers!³ — Rabbah son of R. Huna can answer you: Both according to the view of R. Gamaliel and that of the Rabbis no levirate bond exists,⁴ and their difference here extends only to the question of a divorce that followed another divorce and a ma'amar that followed another ma'amar.

The Master said, 'If he addressed a ma'amar to the one as well as to the other, he gives, according to R. Gamaliel, a letter of divorce to the first, submits also to her halizah, and is in consequence forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him'. Now, consider! Since R. Gamaliel holds that there is no [validity in a] ma'amar that follows another ma'amar, the first [sister-in-law] should even be permitted to contract the levirate marriage!⁵ — A preventive ordinance had to be made⁶ against the possibility of the levir's marrying the second.

R. Johanan said: R. Gamaliel, Beth Shammai, R. Simeon b. 'Azzai and R. Nehemiah are all of the opinion that a ma'amar constitutes a [fairly]⁷ perfect kinyan:⁸

As to R. Gamaliel, there is the statement already mentioned.⁹

Beth Shammai? — For we learned: If two of three brothers were married to two sisters and the third was unmarried, and when one of the sisters' husbands died, the unmarried brother addressed to her a ma'amar and then his second brother died, Beth Shammai say: His wife¹⁰ [remains] with him¹¹ while the other is exempt¹² as being his wife's sister.¹³ cannot have any validity¹⁴ if, however, the cohabitation of the first has no validity, then that of the second also has no validity.¹⁵ Now, the cohabitation of one who is nine years of age has been given by the Rabbis¹⁵ the same force as that of a ma'amar¹⁶ and yet R. Simeon stated that such cohabitation¹⁷ has no validity.¹⁸

Ben 'Azzai? — For it was taught: Ben 'Azzai stated, 'A ma'amar is valid after another ma'amar where it concerns two levirs¹⁹ and one sister-in-law,²⁰ but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir'.²¹

R. Nehemiah? — For we learned, R. NEHEMIAH SAID: WITH COHABITATION AS WITH HALIZAH WHETHER IT TOOK PLACE AT THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, OR AT THE END, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT. Now, an invalid cohabitation has been given by the Rabbis the same force as a ma'amar,²² and yet it was stated, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT.²³

HOW . . . IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR etc.

- (1) It is now assumed that, as the Rabbis disagreed with R. Gamaliel on the question of a divorce that followed another divorce, they disagreed also on that of the levirate bond.
 - (2) According to which the Rabbis maintain that either levir may submit to the halizah (v. supra p. 337, n. 4) and the performance of this impaired halizah exempts the other brother,
 - (3) V. supra 26b. The performance of it by one brother does not exempt any of the others!
 - (4) While Rabbah son of R. Huna himself does not follow this view but that of the authority who maintains that a levirate bond does exist.
 - (5) Since the ma'amar to the second had no validity at all.
 - (6) That levirate marriage shall not be contracted with the first.
 - (7) V. Rashi, a.l.
 - (8) I.e., it is regarded as a perfect kinyan in some, though not in all respects. Cf. Tosaf. s.v. דַּתְנִיָּא supra 19a.
 - (9) Supra, that a ma'amar is invalid after another ma'amar, because the first had already constituted an kinyan.
 - (10) I.e., the widow to whom he had addressed the ma'amar.
 - (11) Because the ma'amar he had addressed to her constituted a kinyan and she is regarded as his wife. Her sister, when she subsequently became subject to the levirate marriage through the death of her husband, could no more be married to him since at that time she was already 'his wife's sister'.
 - (12) Even from halizah.
 - (13) 'Ed. IV, 9, supra 29a. (10) Of two young levirs of the ages of nine years and one day. According to the Rabbis, if two levirs of such an age cohabited successively with their sister-in-law, the widow of their deceased brother, their acts have the same force as that of a ma'amar that followed a ma'amar. As with a ma'amar the second has also the validity of a betrothal and causes the prohibition of the sister-in-law to the first, so with cohabitation, the act of the second levir causes the sister-in-law to be forbidden to the first levir also. R. Simeon, however, regards the first act only as a valid kinyan. The other consequently is invalid. V. infra 96b. (11) Effecting a kinyan.

(14) The kinyan of the first would not admit it.

(15) Infra 96b.

(16) V. supra p. 339, n. 10.

(17) By the second levir.

(18) Obviously because the kinyan had been effected by the cohabitation of the first. Thus it follows that a ma'amar also (cohabitation and ma'amar having equal validity) effects kinyan.

(19) Each one of whom had addressed to the widow only one ma'amar.

(20) Since each levir is entitled to a ma'amar. V. supra 51a.

(21) The second ma'amar has no validity, because by the first ma'amar the levir had already effected the kinyan of the sister-in-law to whom he had addressed it.

(22) Since in both cases, divorce alone is not enough to sever the levirate bond, halizah also being required.

(23) Obviously because the cohabitation like a ma'amar had constituted a kinyan.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 52a

Is this an illustration of a letter of divorce after a letter of divorce?¹ Rab Judah replied it is this that was meant: [The illustration of] A LETTER OF DIVORCE AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE and OF A MA'AMAR AFTER AN OTHER MA'AMAR is as stated;² but³ HOW IS THE RELEASE [FROM THE LEVIRATE BOND EFFECTED] where there is one levir and one sister-in-law? — IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH WITH HIM.⁴

IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, BEHOLD THIS IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT. Might it be suggested that this provides support for R. Huna? For R. Huna stated: The precept of marriage with a sister-in-law is properly performed when the levir first betroths, and then cohabits with her.⁵ — One might read,⁶ THIS IS also IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT. Is not this obvious? — It might have been presumed that since a Master stated, 'If the levir addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, the levirate bond disappears, and he comes under the bond of betrothal and marriage',⁷ he⁸ is not performing the commandment,⁹ hence we were taught [that he does].

[To turn to] the main text. 'R. Huna said: The precept of marriage with a sister-in-law is properly performed when the levir first betroths and then cohabits with her. If he cohabited with her, and then addressed to her a ma'amar a kinyan is nevertheless constituted.' 'If he cohabited with her and then addressed to her a ma'amar is so obvious,¹⁰ since he had acquired her by the cohabitation!¹¹ — Read, rather, 'If he cohabited with her without previously addressing to her a ma'amar a kinyan is nevertheless constituted'. But was it not taught that the penalty of flogging¹² is inflicted upon him?¹³ — Chastisement¹⁴ was meant, which is a Rabbinical penalty.¹⁵ For Rab ordered the chastisement¹⁶ of any person who betrothed by cohabitation,¹⁷ who betrothed in the open street,¹⁸ or who betrothed without previous negotiation;¹⁹ who annulled a letter of divorce,²⁰ or who made a declaration against a letter of divorce;²¹ who was insolent²² towards the representative of the Rabbis,²³ or who allowed a Rabbinical ban upon him to remain for thirty days and did not come to the Beth din to request the removal of that ban; and of a son-in-law who lives in his father-in-law's house. [You say,] only if he lives,²⁴ but not if he only passes by? Surely, a man once passed by the door of his father-in-law's house, and R. Shesheth ordered his chastisement! — That man was suspected of immoral relations with his mother-in-law. The Nehardeans stated: Rab ordered the chastisement of none of these²⁵ except him who betrothed by cohabitation without preliminary negotiation. Others say: Even with preliminary negotiation; because [such a practice is sheer] licentiousness. Our Rabbis taught: How is betrothal effected with a ma'amar? — If he gave her²⁶ some money or anything of value.²⁷ And how is it effected by a deed? — 'How is it effected by a deed'? Surely as has been stated:²⁸ If he wrote for her on a piece of paper or on a sherd, although it was not worth even a perutah,²⁹ 'Behold thou art be trothed unto me'!³⁰ Abaye replied, It is this that was meant: How is the deed of the kethubah³¹ in a levirate marriage [to be drawn up]? He writes for her. 'I, So-and-so, son of So-and-so, undertake to feed and maintain in a suitable manner my sister-in-law So-and-so, provided that her kethubah remains a charge upon the estate of her first husband'.³² If, however, she is unable to obtain it from her first husband, provision was made by the Rabbis [that she is to receive it] from the second,³³ in order that it may not be easy for him to divorce her.³⁴

Abaye enquired of Rabbah: What is the law if he gave her³⁵ a letter of divorce and said, 'Behold thou art divorced from me, but thou art not permitted to any other man'?³⁶ The divorce of a sister-in-law being Rabbinically valid, [shall I say that] only a divorce which is valid in the case of a married woman is valid in the case of a sister-in-law, but a divorce which is invalid in the case of a married woman is also invalid in the case of a sister-in-law,³⁷ or [had provision to be made here³⁸ against] the possibility of mistaking it for an unqualified divorce?³⁹ — The other replied: Provision has to be made against the possibility of mistaking it for an unqualified divorce.³⁴ Rabbah b. Hanan demurred: Now then,⁴⁰ had he given her a mere scrap of paper would he also have disqualified her?⁴¹ The other replied: There [the scrap of paper] does not cause the woman to be unfit for a priest;⁴² here, however, [the qualified divorce] does cause the woman to become unfit for a priest⁴³, for it was taught, Neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband,⁴⁴ even if she was only divorced from her husband⁴⁵ they may not take her,⁴⁶ and that is what was meant by the 'scent of the divorce' that causes a woman's unfitness for a priest.⁴⁷

Rami b. Hama said: It has been definitely⁴⁸ stated that if a man said to a scribe, 'Write a letter of divorce for my betrothed so that when I have married her I may divorce her' the letter of divorce is valid,⁴⁹ because it was in his power⁵⁰ to divorce her;⁵¹

(1) The Sages speak of a letter of divorce another letter of divorce, while the illustration which follows describes a ma'amar that was followed by a letter of divorce!

(2) In the Baraitha supra 51a, 'Our Rabbis taught: How . . . R. Gamaliel's statement etc.' The Mishnah, however, provides no explanation of illustration of these cases, and proceeds to another point.

(3) This is the meaning of what follows.

(10) That a kinyan had been effected.

(11) What need then was there to state the obvious?

(12) Malkoth (v. Glos.) inflicted for the transgression of Pentateuchal negative precepts.

(13) For the omission of the ma'amar, prior to his cohabitation, A ma'amar is consequently (v. supra n. 9) a Pentateuchal requirement. How, then, could it be said that a kinyan may be constituted though the ma'amar had been omitted!

- (25) Cases, enumerated supra.
- (26) The levir to the sister-in-law.
- (27) And addressed to her the ma'amar in the prescribed form: 'Be thou betrothed unto me by this levirate ma'amar. Though betrothal with money in the case of an ordinary union constitutes perfect kinyan, in the case of betrothal by a levir (to whom a sister-in-law is ordinarily forbidden, and betrothal with whom is consequently invalid) betrothal alone, even when it concerns a levirate union, is not sufficient to constitute a kinyan until consummation of the marriage has taken place.
- (28) In the case of any other betrothal that is effected by means of a deed.
- (29) V. Glos.
- (30) Kid. 9a. As betrothal by money in the case of a levirate union takes the same form as that of an ordinary betrothal so should betrothal by deed!
- (31) By 'deed' the kethubah (v. Glos.) was meant and not the 'deed of the ma'amar'.
- (32) The deceased brother (supra 38a) because 'a wife has been given to him from heaven' (v. supra 39a and notes).
- (33) The levir who married her.
- (34) Cf. supra 39a.
- (35) The levir to the sister-in-law.
- (36) Does such a qualified divorce effect the prohibition of the widow to the levir and to his brother as if an unqualified divorce had been given to her? In the case of a married woman no divorce can release her unless it was free from all qualifying conditions.
- (37) Hence there is no validity in this divorce, and the sister-in-law remains permitted to the levirs as if no divorce had ever been given.
- (38) That the divorce is valid despite its qualification (v. supra n. 7).
- (39) Were the widow to be permitted to the levir after a qualified divorce she might erroneously be permitted even after an unqualified, and valid, divorce.
- (40) If provision has to be made against mistaking a valid, for an invalid document.
- (41) From subsequently marrying the levir.
- (42) Having no validity whatsoever it could never be mistaken for a proper divorce.
- (43) A priest causes his wife to be forbidden to him even if the divorce he gave her was only a qualified one.
- (44) Lev. XXI, 7.
- (45) I.e., if she was given a qualified divorce which does not set her free to marry any other man.
- (46) Since such a divorce has the validity of causing the woman's prohibition to her husband who is a priest it might easily be mistaken for a valid divorce. Hence the provision mentioned.
- (47) Git. 82b, infra 94a.
- (48) Lit., 'behold'.
- (49) If he gave it to her after marriage.
- (50) At the time the letter of divorce was written.
- (51) As his betrothed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 52b

if¹ for any other woman, the letter of divorce has no validity,² because it was not in his power to divorce her.³ Rami b. Hama inquired, however, what is the law if⁴ for one's sister-in-law?⁵ Is she, because she is bound to him,⁶ regarded as his betrothed⁷ or perhaps, since he addressed no ma'amar to her, she is not so regarded. This is undecided.⁸

R. Hanania inquired: What is the law if he⁹ wrote a letter of divorce in respect of his levirate bond but not in respect of his ma'amar, or in respect of his ma'amar and not in respect of his levirate bond?¹⁰ Is the ma'amar imposed upon the levirate bond,¹¹ so that the levir's action¹² is like that of divorcing half a woman,¹³ and when a man divorces half a woman his action, surely, has no validity at all; or do they remain independent of one another?¹⁴ — Might not this enquiry be solved by reference to Raba's ruling? For Raba ruled: If he¹⁵ gave her a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar, her rival¹⁶ is permitted!¹⁷ — This was obvious to Raba; to R. Hanania, however, it was a matter of doubt. What, then, is the decision? — This remains undecided.¹⁸

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: This¹⁹ is the view of R. Akiba who holds that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalties of a negative precept is of no validity; the Sages, however, maintain that there is some validity in acts after halizah. But how can you ascribe it²⁰ to R. Akiba? In the first section, surely, it was stated, IF THE LEVIR GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN [A SECOND] LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH, while if [this Mishnah represented the view of] R. Akiba would a ma'amar to her be valid after a letter of divorce had already been given to her? Surely it was taught: R. Akiba said, 'Whence is it deduced that if a man gives a letter of divorce to his sister-in-law she is thereby forbidden to him for ever? Because it was stated Her former husband, who sent her away, may not [take her again to be his wife],²¹ [i.e., immediately] after sending her away'!²² R. Ashi replied: A divorce given by levirs is only Rabbinically valid,²³ and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.²⁴ Likewise it was also taught: Rabbi said, this statement²⁵ was made only in accordance with the view of R. Akiba who treated a haluzah as a forbidden relative;²⁶ the Sages, however, maintain that there is some validity in acts after halizah; and I say, 'When [is betrothal after halizah valid]? Only when he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony,²⁷ but if he betrothed her for levirate union,²⁸ there is no validity in any such act after the halizah.²⁹ It was taught elsewhere: If a man submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law and then betrothed her, Rabbi said, 'If he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony it is necessary for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce, but if as for a levirate union there is no need for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce'. The Sages, however, said: 'Whether he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony or as for the levirate union it is necessary for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce'.

Said R. Joseph: What is Rabbi's reason?³⁰ — It was given the same legal force as that of the action of a person digging in the estate of a proselyte³¹ believing it to be his own,³² which constitutes no kinyan.³³ Said Abaye to him:³⁴ Are the two cases alike? There³⁵ he³⁶ had no intention at all of acquiring possession,³⁷ but here³⁸ his intention, surely, was to acquire possession!³⁹ This, indeed, could only be compared to the case of a person who digs in the estate of one proselyte and believes it to be that of another, where he does acquire possession!⁴⁰ No, explained Abaye, here we are dealing with a case where the levir said to her, 'Be thou betrothed to me by the ma'amar of the levirate union'. Rabbi is of the opinion that the ma'amar can only be imposed upon the levirate bond,⁴¹ but here⁴² the halizah had already previously removed the levirate bond.⁴³ The Rabbis, however, are of the opinion that the one is independent of the other.⁴⁴ If, then, the levir had said to her at first,⁴⁵ 'Be thou betrothed unto me by this ma'amar of the levirate union', would not his kinyan have been valid?⁴⁶ Consequently it is now also valid.

Raba said: Had he said to her,⁴⁷ 'By the ma'amar of the levirate union', there would be no disagreement [among the authorities] that it is valid; but here⁴⁸ we are dealing with a case where the levir said, 'Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate'. Rabbi is of the opinion

(1) The scribe was asked to write the letter of divorce.

(2) Even if it was given to the woman after he had married her.

(3) Since at that time she was to him a complete stranger.

(4) The scribe was asked to write the letter of divorce.

(5) The letter of divorce having been written before the levirate marriage, and delivered to the widow after it had taken place.

(6) By the levirate bond.

(7) And the divorce is consequently valid.

(8) Teku, v. Glos.

- (9) A levir after he addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law.
- (10) Is she thereby forbidden to him as if a valid divorce had been given to her?
- (11) And becomes united with, and inseparable from it.
- (12) In severing the bond or annulling the ma'amar.
- (13) Since the divorce in respect of his one connection with the woman has no validity in respect of his other connection which forms together with the first one complete whole.
- (14) Lit., 'that stands alone' (bis). The ma'amar and the levirate bond constitute separate and independent connections between the levir and the widow. Hence, if the divorce was for the levirate bond alone, the widow is forbidden to the levir who gave her the divorce (under the prohibition 'that doth not build etc.') as well as to his brothers (the levirate bond having been severed); and if the divorce was for the ma'amar only, the widow, though forbidden to the levir who gave her the divorce (for the reason stated), is nevertheless permitted to his brothers, since the levirate bond has never been severed.
- (15) The second of three brothers who had addressed a ma'amar to the first brother's widow. V. Mishnah supra 31b.
- (16) The second brother's first wife who, while the ma'amar remained in force, was forbidden to the third brother.
- (17) To the third surviving brother if the second brother also died without issue. The two widows, owing to the divorce which had annulled the ma'amar, are no longer rivals; and being now the widows of two different brothers, are in fact both permitted to the third brother. The widow to whom the divorce had been given is forbidden only as a preventive measure (v. supra 32b). From the fact, however, that the second brother's first wife is permitted to the third surviving brother it follows that the divorce (a) annuls the ma'amar and (b) does not sever the levirate bond. Had it not annulled the ma'amar, the widow would have been forbidden owing to the levirate bond emanating from two levirs; while if the levirate bond also had been severed she would have been forbidden to the third brother as 'brother's wife'. Why then was R. Hanania doubtful on the point?
- (18) Teku, v. Glos.
- (19) That no act is valid after halizah.
- (20) The quoted section of our Mishnah, and presumably all our Mishnah.
- (21) Deut. XXIV, 4.
- (22) Even before she had been married to a second husband. (V. Deut, XXIV, 2-4). The superfluous expression 'who sent her away' implies that divorce in a certain case, viz., in that of a sister-in-law, causes the permanent prohibition of the divorced woman to the man who divorced her immediately after divorce had taken place. Now, since betrothal of a sister-in-law by a levir who divorced her is forbidden by the negative precept of Deut. XXIV, 4, how could a ma'amar addressed to her after divorce have any validity?
- (23) Pentateuchally it has no validity at all.
- (24) Since the prohibition is not Pentateuchal the ma'amar is obviously valid.
- (25) That no act is valid after halizah.
- (26) As no act of betrothal is valid in the case of the latter so is no such act valid in that of the former.
- (27) By a form of betrothal prescribed in ordinary cases other than those of a levir. Such betrothal is valid even where it involves the transgression of a negative precept.
- (28) By addressing to her a ma'amar.
- (29) The halizah having severed the levirate bond, there is no room any more for the levirate betrothal. The action of any levir using it is consequently null and void.
- (30) For regarding as invalid a betrothal for a levirate union, when ordinary betrothal with the same woman would have been valid.
- (31) Who was survived by no Jewish heirs. Anyone digging in such ownerless property with the intention of acquiring it gains thereby full legal title thereto.
- (32) It having been situated in close proximity to his own estate.
- (33) As the digging (though a legal form of kinyan) is invalid because there was no intention to constitute a kinyan thereby, so also betrothal (though a legal kinyan) is invalid because the levir's intention was not to constitute an ordinary betrothal (which would indeed have been valid) but a levirate betrothal which after a halizah has no validity.
- (34) R. Joseph.
- (35) Digging in the estate of a proselyte.
- (36) The digger.
- (37) Since he believed the field to be his own.

- (38) Betrothal by the levirate formula.
- (39) Of his sister-in-law as his legal wife.
- (40) Since his intention was to execute by his act a legal kinyan, the mistake he made as to its owner is of no consequence. Similarly, here, the mistake in the nature of the union he was contracting should not affect the legality of the kinyan which he at all events intended.
- (41) Only where the levirate bond is still in force has the ma'amar the required validity.
- (42) Where halizah had been performed.
- (43) Hence the invalidity of the ma'amar.
- (44) A ma'amar is consequently valid even where no levirate bond exists.
- (45) Before the performance of the halizah.
- (46) Certainly it would. The force of the ma'amar irrespective of the levirate bond (v. supra n. 2) would have executed the kinyan.
- (47) After the introductory formula, 'Be thou betrothed unto me'.
- (48) The dispute between Rabbi and the Rabbis.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 53a

that a levirate bond does exist¹ but the halizah had previously removed that [levirate] bond.² The Rabbis, however, hold that no levirate bond exists.³ If, then, he had said to her at first,⁴ 'Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate' would not his word have been valid?⁵ Consequently it is now also valid.

R. Sherabia said: Had a proper halizah been performed all would agree that if he said to her,⁶ 'Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate', there is no validity in his betrothal. Here, however, the dispute relates to a halizah of an impaired character. One Master⁷ holds that a halizah of an impaired character provides [all the necessary] exemption,² and the Masters hold that a halizah of an impaired character provides no exemption.⁸

R. Ashi said: [No;] All agree that a halizah of an impaired character provides no exemption. Here,⁹ however, the dispute centres round the question whether a condition¹⁰ may affect the validity of halizah.¹¹ The Masters hold that a condition¹¹ does affect the validity of a halizah¹² and the Master¹³ holds that no condition may affect the validity of a halizah.¹⁴

Rabina said: [No;] All agree that a condition does affect a halizah. Here,⁹ however, the dispute is dependent on the question of the doubled condition.¹⁵ The Master¹³ holds that a doubled condition is essential¹⁶ and the Masters hold the opinion that a doubled condition is unnecessary.¹⁷

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER etc. It should also have been stated, 'No act is valid after cohabitation'!¹⁸ — Both Abaye and Raba replied: Read,¹⁹ 'NO ACT IS VALID AFTER cohabitation'. But our Tanna?²⁰ — [The statement regarding] the permissibility of the sister-in-law to marry anyone²¹ was preferred by him.²²

THE LAW IS THE SAME WHETHER THERE IS ONE SISTER-IN LAW . . . OR TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW. Our Mishnah²³ is not in agreement with the ruling of Ben 'Azzai. For it was taught: Ben 'Azzai stated: A ma'amar is valid after another ma'amar where it concerns two levirs²⁴ and one sister-in-law,²⁵ but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir.²⁶ HOW? . . . A MA'AMAR TO THE ONE etc. May it be suggested that this²⁷ provides support to a ruling of Samuel, Samuel having stated that if the levir had participated in the halizah with her to whom he addressed a ma'amar, her rival was not thereby exempt; and an objection to the ruling of R. Joseph?²⁸ — Does it state: He may participate in the halizah? What it states is 'had participated', implying a fait accompli.²⁹

A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER etc. May it be suggested that this³⁰ provides support to Rabbah son of R. Huna. For Rabbah son of R. Huna stated, 'A halizah of an impaired character must go the round of all the brothers'?³¹ — By IT IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH, widows generally³² were meant.³³

IF HE GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER. May it be suggested that this³⁴ provides support to the ruling of Samuel³⁵ and presents an objection against the ruling of R. Joseph?³⁶ — Does it state: He may participate in the halizah? What it states is 'had participated', implying a fait accompli.³⁷

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE ONE AND FROM THE OTHER, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH etc. It should also have been stated, 'No act is valid after cohabitation'!³⁸ Both Abaye and Raba replied: Read,³⁹ 'no act is valid after cohabitation'.

But our Tanna?⁴⁰ — [The statement on] the permissibility of the sister-in-law marrying anyone⁴¹ was preferred by him.⁴²

THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR TO TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW etc. According to R. Johanan who ruled that the whole house⁴³ stands under the prohibition of a negative precept,⁴⁴ it is intelligible why it was necessary to inform us⁴⁵ that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalties of a negative precept is invalid;⁴⁶ according to Resh Lakish, however, who ruled that all the house⁴⁷ is subject to the penalty of kareth,⁴⁸ was there any need to inform us that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves kareth is invalid?⁴⁹ — Resh Lakish can answer you: And even according to your conception was it necessary to tell us in the final clause, which speaks of the case where the LEVIR COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, that there was no validity in a betrothal with a married woman?⁴⁹ But the fact is that as he taught concerning the permissibility⁵⁰ of one levir and one sister-in-law,⁵¹ he also taught concerning two sisters-in-law and one levir. And since he taught concerning two sisters-in-law and one levir, he also taught concerning two levirs and one sister-in-law.

(1) I.e., the validity of such a formula elsewhere is absolutely dependent on the existence of the levirate bond.

(2) Hence the invalidity of the formula that followed it.

(3) The levirate bond does not in any way add to, or subtract from the force of the formula.

(4) Before the performance of the halizah.

(5) V. supra note 4.

(6) After the halizah, for instance, which has been performed after a divorce.

(7) Rabbi.

(8) The original bond remains and the halizah is altogether disregarded. Hence the validity of the formula after an improper halizah.

(9) The dispute between Rabbi and the Rabbis.

(10) Made by the levir. If, e.g., he submitted to the halizah on the understanding that the widow would give him a certain sum of money or render him some service.

(11) Where the condition had not been fulfilled.

(12) As the halizah is invalid (v. supra n. 3) the original bond remains and the formula is consequently valid.

(13) Rabbi.

(14) Even if the condition was not fulfilled the halizah remains valid. Hence there could be no force in the formula that follows it.

(15) תנאי כפול a stipulation and its alternative. The classical example is the condition made by Moses with the children of Gad and Reuben: If they passed the Jordan, the land of Gilead would be given to them; if they did not pass the Jordan, they would take their share in the land of Canaan. V. Num. XXXII, 29f.

- (16) As the levir's condition was not a 'doubled one' it has no validity. The halizah is consequently valid and the formula following it is invalid.
- (17) The condition being valid, the halizah depending on it, where it is unfulfilled, is invalid. Hence the validity of the levirate formula.
- (18) Since that section of our Mishnah deals not only with (a) certain acts after halizah but also with (b) certain acts after cohabitation.
- (19) [Var. lec., 'Both Abaye and Raba read'. The reading that follows actually occurs in Tosef. Yeb. VII. Cf. תוספות ישנים]
- (20) Why did he omit the mention of cohabitation?
- (21) I.e., the permissibility though halizah.
- (22) Hence halizah only was mentioned. After cohabitation the sister-in-law is permitted to one man (the levir) only. As the Tanna preferred the case of halizah to that of cohabitation and as the invalidity of any acts after cohabitation may be inferred from the invalidity of those after halizah, the Tanna did not consider it necessary to mention cohabitation at all.
- (23) Which admits the validity of a ma'amar after another ma'amar in the case of two sisters-in-law and one levir,
- (24) Each one of whom in turn addressed a ma'amar to the sister-in-law.
- (25) Each levir being entitled to a ma'amar. V. supra 51a.
- (26) The second ma'amar, contrary to the ruling of our Mishnah, has no validity because by the first ma'amar, in the opinion of Ben 'Azzai, the levir had exhausted all his rights.
- (27) The statement, THE ONE REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THE OTHER, but not the first to whom the ma'amar had been addressed, MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH because, obviously, halizah with the first does not exempt the second, her rival.
- (28) 'Who stated, supra 44a, 'A man should not pour the water out of his cistern while others may require it', i.e., a levir shall not cause the disqualification, by halizah, of the widow who is not otherwise disqualified, when the halizah could well be performed by the other widow who was in any case disqualified. In our Mishnah, contrary to R. Joseph's ruling, halizah is performed by the second who would in consequence be disqualified from marrying a priest, and not by the first who is already disqualified by the divorce she had been given.
- (29) The proper procedure, however, might still be for the halizah to be performed by the widow to whom the ma'amar had been addressed.
- (30) The statement in our Mishnah that HALIZAH IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH, which seems to imply that each widow must perform halizah where there is only one levir and, since the Mishnah also stated THAT THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR AND TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW OR TWO LEVIRS AND ONE Sister-IN-LAW, that where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law halizah must be performed with both levirs.
- (31) Supra 26b, 51a.
- (32) In similar circumstances,
- (33) But in every case the halizah is performed by one widow only and the other is thereby exempt. V. supra p. 330, n. 5.
- (34) The ruling that halizah is performed by the second widow and not by the first to whom the divorce had been given.
- (35) Who stated, supra 27a, that if the levir had participated in the halizah with her whom he had divorced, her rival is not thereby exempt. Consequently, as was stated in our Mishnah, the halizah is to be performed by the second.

- (43) I.e., all the brothers of the deceased including the levir who submitted to the halizah.
- (44) Both the levir and the other brothers (v. supra n. 13) are forbidden by the negative precept 'that doth not build' to marry the halizah or her rival. V. supra 10b.
- (45) By the statement that a ma'amar is invalid after halizah.
- (46) Had not this been indicated it might have been assumed that a betrothal of a woman forbidden only by a mere negative precept is legally valid.

(47) V. supra p. 351, n. 13.

(48) If any one of the brothers married the rival of the haluzah, or if any of them (other than the levir who participated in the halizah) married the haluzah herself; the prohibition in all these cases being that of marriage with 'a brother's wife' which is punishable by kareth. The prohibition of the levir who participated in the halizah to marry the haluzah herself is, of course, even according to Resh Lakish, only that of a negative precept (v. supra 10b).

(49) Such a ruling is surely obvious!

(50) I.e., that there is no validity in the betrothal.

(51) A ruling which was necessary, even according to Resh Lakish, since he also, like R. Johanan, subjects the marriage between the levir who submitted to the halizah and the haluzah to the penalty of a negative precept only (v. supra n. 3).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 53b

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR [and] GAVE etc. One can well understand why it was necessary [to lay down a rule¹ where] THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made² for a ma'amar that followed halizah³ as a preventive measure against a ma'amar that preceded halizah,⁴ it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was to be made. What need, however, was there for the ruling⁵ where THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE?⁶ — Read, then, according to your own view, the final clause, IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR or if he cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE. One can well understand [it might be argued here also] why it was necessary [to lay down a ruling⁷ where] the levir cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made for a divorce that followed cohabitation⁸ as a preventive measure against a divorce that preceded cohabitation,⁹ it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was required. But what need was there [for the ruling¹⁰ where] HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR?¹¹ But [the fact is that] as he taught, IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR,¹² he also taught: IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR. And since he desired to teach the rule where 'he cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE' he also taught, IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE.

IF IT TOOK PLACE¹³ etc. Our Mishnah cannot be reconciled with the opinion of the following Tanna: For it was taught: Abba Jose b. Johanan of Jerusalem reported in the name of R. Meir, 'Alike in the case of cohabitation or of halizah, [if it took place] first,¹⁴ no act that follows has any validity; but if it occurred in the middle¹⁴ or at the end,¹⁴ something valid still remains'. On this question, in fact, three different views have been expressed. The first Tanna is of the opinion that in the case of cohabitation, where a preventive measure is required,¹⁵ a preventive measure was made,¹⁶ but in the case of halizah where no preventive measure is called for¹⁷ no preventive measure was made. R. Nehemiah, on the other hand, is of the opinion that in the case of cohabitation also no preventive measure is called for.¹⁸ And as to your possible objection that provision should be made where cohabitation followed a letter of divorce as a preventive measure against cohabitation that followed a halizah,¹⁹ [it may be replied that] as halizah is a Pentateuchal law it is well known.²⁰ And as to your objection that provision should be made where cohabitation followed a ma'amar as a preventive measure against cohabitation that followed another cohabitation, [it may also be replied that] as kinyan by cohabitation is a Pentateuchal law it is certainly well known.²⁰ And Abba Jose b. Hanan,²¹ again, holds the same view as the Rabbis²² who ordained a preventive measure²² in the case of cohabitation,²³ and he made similar provision in the case of halizah as a preventive measure against cohabitation.

CHAPTER VI

MISHNAH. IF A MAN COHABITED WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE²⁴ WHETHER IN ERROR²⁵ OR IN PRESUMPTION,²⁶ WHETHER UNDER COMPULSION OR OF HIS OWN FREE WILL, EVEN IF HE ACTED IN ERROR AND SHE IN PRESUMPTION, OR HE IN PRESUMPTION AND SHE IN ERROR, OR HE UNDER COMPULSION AND SHE NOT UNDER COMPULSION, OR SHE UNDER COMPULSION AND HE NOT UNDER COMPULSION, WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST, OR ALSO THE FINAL STAGE OF CONTACT, HE CONSTITUTES THEREBY A KINYAN,²⁷ IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE²⁸ OF THE INTERCOURSE.²⁹

SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE³⁰ WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES ENUMERATED IN THE TORAH, OR WITH ANY OF THOSE WHO ARE INELIGIBLE TO MARRY HIM AS, FOR INSTANCE, A WIDOW WITH A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALUZAH WITH A COMMON PRIEST, A BASTARD OR A NETHINAH³¹ WITH AN ISRAELITE OR THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WITH A BASTARD OR A NATHIN, HE HAS THEREBY RENDERED HER INELIGIBLE,³² IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE OF THE INTERCOURSE.²⁹ GEMARA. What is the purport of EVEN? — [The formula of] 'It is not necessary' is thereby to be understood: It is not necessary [to state that a kinyan is constituted where] he acted in error³³ and her intention was the performance of the commandment³⁴ or where he acted in presumption and her intention was the performance of the commandment,³⁵ but even if he acted in error and she in presumption,³⁶ or³⁷ he in presumption and she in error, so that the intention of neither of them was the fulfilment of the commandment,³⁸ a kinyan is nevertheless effected.

R. Hiyya taught: Even if both acted in error, both in presumption, or both under compulsion.³⁹ How is one to understand the action UNDER COMPULSION in our Mishnah? If it be suggested [that] idolaters compelled him to cohabit with her, surely [it may be pointed out] Raba stated: There can be no compulsion in sexual intercourse since erection depends entirely on the will! But when he slept?⁴⁰ Surely Rab Judah ruled

(1) That there is no validity in the ma'amar.

(2) Even according to R. Akiba.

(3) By giving to the ma'amar the force of a valid betrothal and by subjecting the sister-in-law, in consequence, to the necessity of a divorce.

(4) Were the former to be regarded as invalid, the latter also might erroneously be so regarded.

(5) That there is no validity in the divorce where there is only one levir and one sister-in-law. (V. supra p. 331, n. 3).

(6) What possible consequences could ensue from the presumed validity of such a divorce that are not already in force as a result of the halizah? The halizah, like a divorce, causes the prohibition of the widow to the levir, and her relatives also are thereby forbidden as the relatives of his haluzah'!

(7) That nothing of the levirate bond remains after cohabitation and that, consequently, the divorce alone is a valid act and there is no need for halizah also.

(8) By requiring halizah in addition to the divorce.

(9) Were halizah to be dispensed with in the former case it might erroneously be presumed that as a letter of divorce alone is valid enough in this case it is also valid in the latter case, and thus divorce might be allowed to supersede the halizah of any sister-in-law.

(10) That there is no validity in the ma'amar.

(11) Of what consequence could the ma'amar be after cohabitation whereby the woman had become the levir's proper wife?

(12) Which was certainly necessary, as has just been explained.

(13) Lit., 'in the time when it is'.

(14) For an explanation of this term v. notes on our Mishnah supra.

- (15) Since something of the levirate bond remains after an improper cohabitation.
- (16) Hence he ruled that only when cohabitation had taken place at the beginning (but not when in the middle or at the end) does the levirate bond completely disappear.
- (17) Because in his opinion even an improper halizah is valid in all respects.
- (18) Maintaining as he does that nothing of validity remains either after halizah or after cohabitation.
- (19) Were the former to be regarded as valid the latter also might be so regarded.
- (20) And no one would draw comparisons between the two.
- (21) Abbreviation of 'Johanan'.
- (22) In our Mishnah.
- (23) V. supra 50b.
- (24) The widow of his deceased childless brother.
- (25) Not knowing that she was his sister-in-law.
- (26) To gratify his passions and with no intention of fulfilling the precept of the levirate marriage.
- (27) Lit., 'he acquires her'. The widow is deemed to be his legal wife. He is entitled to the heirship of her estate; and she can be released only by a letter of divorce.
- (28) Lit., 'and he made no distinction'.
- (29) Whether it was natural or unnatural.
- (30) In any of the circumstances mentioned.
- (31) Fem. of nathin, v. Glos.
- (32) To marry a priest, and to eat terumah even if she had previously been eligible to eat of it. This, of course, does not apply to the bastard and nethinah who are from birth ineligible either to marry a priest or to eat terumah. Their inclusion among the others merely serves the purpose of indicating that in their case also the penalty for illicit intercourse is imposed whether it was ONLY IN THE FIRST, OR ALSO IN THE FINAL STAGE.
- (33) Not knowing that she was his sister-in-law.
- (34) Of the levirate marriage.
- (35) In such cases the validity of the kinyan is obvious.
- (36) Cf. supra p. 355, n. 3.
- (37) So Bah a.l. Cur. edd. omit 'or he . . . error'.
- (38) Of the levirate marriage.
- (39) Kinyan is nevertheless constituted.
- (40) COMPULSION implying unconsciousness of action.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 54a

that one in sleep cannot acquire his sister-in-law!¹ But when accidental insertion occurred?² Surely Rabbah stated: One who fell from a roof and his fall resulted in accidental insertion, is liable to pay an indemnity³, for four things,⁴ and if the woman was his sister-in-law no kinyan is thereby constituted!⁵ — It is⁶ when, for instance, his intention was intercourse with his wife and⁷ his sister-in-law seized him and he cohabited with her.

How is one to understand, 'Both under compulsion', taught at the School of R. Hiyya? — When, for instance, his intention was intercourse with his wife and idolaters seized him,⁸ brought him and her⁹ into close contact and he cohabited with her.

Whence these words?¹⁰ — From what our Rabbis taught: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her¹¹ is a commandment.¹² Another interpretation: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will.¹³ But, surely, deduction has already been made from this text that it¹⁴ is a commandment!¹⁵ — That it¹⁴ is a commandment¹⁶ may be inferred from And if the man like not¹⁷ which implies that if he likes he contracts the levirate marriage;¹⁶ so that the other text¹¹ may serve the purpose of deducing,¹⁸ 'whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will'.¹⁹

Another [Baraita] taught: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,¹¹ in the natural way; and take her,¹¹ even though in an unnatural way;²⁰ and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto²¹ her,¹¹ only the cohabitation consummates her marriage, but neither money²² nor deed²² can consummate her marriage; and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,¹¹ even against her will.²³

The Master said:²⁴ 'Another interpretation: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her whether in error etc.' But, surely, deduction has been made from this text¹¹ that it²⁵ must be in the natural way! — This may be deduced from To raise up unto his brother a name,¹⁷ [i.e.,] only where a name is raised up;²⁶ so that the other text¹¹ may be employed for the deduction,²⁷ 'whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will.'²⁸

[To turn to] the main text. 'Rab Judah ruled that one in sleep cannot acquire his sister-in-law, for Scripture stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²⁹ only when the cohabitation was intentional'.³⁰ But, surely, it was taught: Whether he was awake or asleep! — Read: Whether she was awake or asleep. But, surely, it was taught: Whether he was awake or asleep; or whether she was awake or asleep! — This statement refers to one who was in a state of drowsiness. What state of drowsiness is hereby to be understood? R. Ashi replied: When a man is half asleep and half awake³¹ as, for instance, when he answers on being addressed but is unable to give any sensible reply, and when he is reminded of anything he can recall it.

[To turn to] the main text. Rabbah stated: One who fell from a roof, and his fall resulted in accidental insertion, is liable to pay an indemnity for four things, and if the woman was his sister-in-law no kinyan is thereby constituted. [He must pay her for] bodily injury, for pain inflicted, for enforced unemployment, and for medical expenses; but he is not liable to indemnify her for indignity, for a Master said, 'One is not liable to pay any indemnity for indignity unless it was intentionally caused'.³²

Raba said: If a levir's intention was to shoot³³ against a wall and he accidentally shot at his sister-in-law, no kinyan is thereby constituted;³⁴ if he intended, however, to shoot at a beast and he accidentally shot at his sister-in-law, kinyan is thereby constituted, since some sort of intercourse had been intended.

WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST . . . STAGE. 'Ulla stated: Whence is it proved that the first stage of contact is pentateuchally forbidden?³⁵ — It is said, And if a man shall lie with a menstruant woman,³⁶ and shall uncover her nakedness, he hath made naked her fountain³⁷ it is deduced from this text that the first stage of contact³⁸ is pentateuchally forbidden. Thus the case of a menstruant has been arrived at; whence that of other forbidden unions?³⁹ And were you to suggest that [their case] might be inferred from that of the menstruant, [it might be retorted] the menstruant is different since she causes the defilement of the man who cohabited with her.⁴⁰ — Rather the deduction³⁹ is made from 'a brother's wife' concerning whom it is written, And if a man shall take his brother's wife, she is a menstruant.⁴¹ Now is a brother's wife always menstruant?⁴² But [the meaning is] 'like a menstruant as with a menstruant the first stage constitutes the offence, so does the first stage constitute an offence with a brother's wife. But a brother's wife [it may be objected] is different since it is in his⁴³ power to increase the number, for should he wish, he could go on betrothing as many as a thousand!⁴⁴ — The deduction⁴⁵ is rather made from the 'father's sister' and 'the mother's sister'. For it is written in Scriptures And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister, for he hath made naked his near kin.⁴⁶ But it may be objected that a father's sister and a mother's sister come under a different category, since the prohibition in their case is natural.⁴⁷ — If it⁴⁵ cannot be deduced from one category⁴⁸ then let it⁴⁹ be deduced from the two categories.⁵⁰

From which⁵¹ however shall deduction be made? Were it made from a brother's wife⁵² and a father's sister⁵³ and a mother's sister,⁵³ [it might be objected that] those stand in a different category, since the prohibition of these is due to relationship!⁵⁴ — Deduction is rather made⁵⁵ from the menstruant⁵⁶ and a father's sister and a mother's sister. Those however [it may be objected] are in a different category since the prohibition is natural!⁵⁷ — The deduction⁵⁵ is rather made from the menstruant and a brother's wife; since no⁵⁸ objection can be raised [against the two].⁵⁹

R. Aha son of R. Ika demurred: A menstruant and a brother's wife are different,⁶⁰ since marriage with them cannot be permitted during the lifetime of the man who caused their prohibition! Would you, then, apply [their restrictions] to a married woman who might be permitted to marry even during the lifetime of the man who caused her prohibition?⁶¹

Said K. Aha of Difti to Rabina: Are a menstruant and a brother's wife forbidden to marry only during the lifetime of the man who caused their prohibition but permitted after that?⁶² With a menstruant, surely,

- (62) When the man died.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 54b

the prohibition depends on the number of days,¹ and with a brother's wife the All Merciful made her prohibition dependent on the birth of children!² — But the objection may be raised thus: A menstruant and a brother's wife are different,³ since the man who caused them to be forbidden cannot cause them to be permitted.⁴ Would you [then] apply their restrictions to a married woman whose permissibility is brought about⁵ by the man who caused her to be forbidden? But, said R. Johanan, or as some say, R. Huna son of R. Joshua, Scripture stated, For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off,⁶ all forbidden unions were compared to the menstruant;⁷ as the first stage constitutes the offence with the menstruant so does the first stage constitute the offence with all the others.

What need, then, was there⁸ to mention the menstruant in the context of brother's wife?⁹ — For an inference like that of R. Huna. For R. Huna stated: Whence in the Torah may an allusion to the sister-in-law¹⁰ be traced? [You ask,] 'Whence'? Surely it is written in Scripture, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her!¹¹ — [The query is] rather, whence the allusion that a sister-in-law is forbidden¹² during the lifetime of her husband?¹³ But surely this is a logical inference: Since the All Merciful said that she¹⁴ is permitted to marry after the death of her husband, it may be inferred that during the lifetime of her husband¹³ she is forbidden! — [No] for is it not possible [to maintain] that after the death of her husband it¹⁵ is a commandment, and during the lifetime of her husband it¹⁵ is only optional? Or else, [though] indeed,¹⁶ only after the death of the husband,¹⁷ and not during the lifetime of her husband; yet being a negative commandment¹⁸ that is derived from a positive one¹⁹ it has only the force of a positive commandment!²⁰ — Scripture stated: And if a man shall take his brother's wife, she is a menstruant.²¹ Now is a brother's wife always a menstruant?²² But the meaning is, 'like a menstruant': as a menstruant, although permitted afterwards,²³ is forbidden under the penalty of kareth during the period of her prohibition, so also a brother's wife, though permitted afterwards,²⁴ is forbidden under the penalty of kareth during the lifetime of her husband.

What need, however, was there to mention the first stage in connection with a father's sister or a mother's sister?²⁵ — For an inference like that mentioned in the following question which Rabina addressed to Raba: What is the law if a man passed the first stage in pederasty? [You ask,] 'What is the law in pederasty'? Surely it is written, As with womankind!²⁶ — But [the query is] what is the law when one passed the first stage with a beast? The other replied: No purpose is served by the text²⁷ in [forbidding] the first stage in the case of a father's sister and a mother's sister, since in their case the prohibition is arrived at by the comparison of R. Jonah, apply that text to the first stage with a beast.

Observe! Intercourse with a beast is among the offences subject to the death penalties of a Beth din; why then was the first stage in relation to it enumerated among offences that are subject to the penalty of kareth?²⁸ It should rather have been written among those which are subject to the death penalty of the Beth din,²⁹ and thus one offence that is subject to the death penalty of a court would be inferred³⁰ from a similar offence that is subject to the death penalty of a court! — Since the entire context³¹ was to serve the purpose of exposition,³² this thing³³ was also included that it may serve the purpose of exposition.

What is the exposition?³⁴ — It was taught, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister,³⁵ whether she is paternal or maternal. You say, 'Whether she is paternal or maternal', perhaps it is not so, but only when she is paternal and not when maternal? — This³⁶ is only logical: A man is subject to a penalty³⁷ in this case and he is also subject to penalty³⁷ in the case of his sister; as with his sister it is the same whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also³⁸ it is the same whether she is paternal or maternal. But might it not be argued³⁹ in this way: A man is subject to a penalty³⁷ in this case and is also subject to a penalty³⁷ in the case of his aunt;⁴⁰ as his aunt is forbidden only when she is paternal⁴¹ but not when maternal,⁴² so here also³⁸ when she is paternal and not when maternal! — Let us consider whom it more closely resembles. A prohibition which is natural⁴³ ought to be inferred from a prohibition which is also natural⁴⁴ but let no proof be adduced from an aunt whose prohibition is not natural.⁴⁵ But might it not be argued⁴⁶ thus: The relatives of a father⁴⁷ should be inferred from the relatives of a father⁴⁰ but let no proof be adduced from a sister who is one's own relative! Hence it was stated,⁴⁸ Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister,⁴⁹ implying⁵⁰ whether paternal or maternal, and Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister,⁵¹ implying also whether paternal or maternal.

What need was there to write it⁵² in respect of a father's sister and also in respect of a mother's sister?⁵³ — R. Abbahu replied: Both are required. For had the All Merciful written it⁵² in respect of a father's sister [it might have been assumed to apply to her alone] because her relationship is legally recognized,⁵⁴ but not to a mother's sister.⁵⁵ And had the All Merciful written it⁵⁶ in respect of a mother's sister [it might have been assumed to apply to her alone] because her relationship is certain, but not to her father's sister.⁵⁷ [Hence both were] required.

As to one's aunt concerning whom the Tanna had no doubt that she must be paternal⁵⁸ and not maternal, whence does he derive it? Raba replied: It is arrived at by a comparison between the words 'His uncle' [in two passages]: Here it is written, He hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness,⁵⁹ and there it is written, Or his uncle or his uncle's son may redeem him,⁶⁰ as there he must be paternal and not [necessarily] maternal⁶¹ so here also, he⁶² must be paternal⁶³ and not [necessarily] maternal. And whence is it⁶⁴ proved there? — Scripture stated, Of his family may redeem him,⁶⁰ and only a father's family may be called the proper family, but the mother's family cannot be called the proper family.⁶⁵

But surely we learned: If a man was told, 'Your wife is dead', and he married her paternal sister; [and when he was told] 'She⁶⁶ also is dead', he married her maternal sister; 'She⁶⁷ too is dead', and he married her paternal sister; 'She⁶⁸ also is dead', and he married her maternal sister, he is permitted⁶⁹ to live with the first,⁷⁰ third⁷¹ and fifth⁷² who also exempt their rivals;⁷³ but he is forbidden to live with the second and the fourth,⁷⁴ and cohabitation with one of these does not exempt her rival. If, however, he cohabited with the second after the death of the first, he is permitted to live with the second⁷⁵ and with the fourth⁷⁶ who also exempt their rivals,⁷³ but he is forbidden to live⁷⁷ with the third and with the fifth.⁷⁸

- (1) Even after the death of her husband she remains forbidden to marry anyone until the prescribed number of seven unclean days has passed.

- (71) As the union with the second was unlawful, on account of her being his wife's sister, the marriage with her had no validity. As she is not his wife, her sister is a perfect stranger to the man who married them both in succession. The marriage with her sister (his third wife) is consequently valid.
- (72) The union with the fourth being unlawful, owing to the legal marriage with her sister (the third wife) the marriage with the fifth is consequently legal. Cf. note 5.
- (73) If he died without issue, and one of his brothers submitted to halizah from one of them.

(74) Because the legality of his marriage with the first and third renders them respectively forbidden as 'his wife's sister'. Cf. note 5.

(75) As the death of the first has removed from her the prohibition of 'wife's sister', the marriage with her is legal.

(76) As the marriage with the second was legally valid, that with the third (as wife's sister) was invalid. The fourth (sister of the third) being in consequence a mere stranger is therefore permitted to be married. Cf. supra note 5.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 55a

From this it clearly follows that a wife's sister, whether she is paternal or maternal, is forbidden.¹ Whence, however, is this derived? — Deduction is made from one's sister; as a sister [is forbidden] whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also² whether she is paternal or maternal. But let the deduction³ be made from one's aunt; as one's aunt [is forbidden only when she is] paternal⁴ and not when maternal, so here³ also [the prohibition should apply when she is] paternal and not when maternal! — It stands to reason that the deduction should be made from one's sister, since [laws concerning] his own relatives⁵ [should be inferred] from [laws concerning others of] his own relatives.⁶ On the contrary! Deduction⁷ should have been made from one's aunt, since a relationship effected through betrothal⁸ [should be inferred] from one effected through betrothal!⁹ — The deduction⁷ is rather made from a brother's wife, since her relationship¹⁰ is through betrothal, and she is of his own relatives.

Whence, however, is [the law concerning] a brother's wife herself derived? — From what was taught: Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife,¹¹ whether he is paternal or maternal. You say, 'Whether he is paternal or maternal', perhaps it is not so, but only when paternal and not when maternal? This is a matter of logical argument: He is subject to a penalty here¹² and he is also subject to penalty [for intercourse] with his sister; as [the prohibition of] his sister applies whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also¹² [the prohibition applies] whether he¹³ was paternal or maternal. But might it not be argued¹⁴ thus: He is subject to a penalty here¹² and he is also subject to penalty [for intercourse] with his aunt. As therefore [the prohibition of] his aunt applies only when she is paternal¹⁵ and not when only maternal, so here¹² also [the prohibition applies only when he¹³ is] paternal and not when only maternal! Let us observe whom the case¹⁶ more closely resembles. Deduction concerning one's own relatives should be made from one's own relatives, and let no proof be adduced from one's aunt whose relationship is due to his father. But might it not be argued as follows:¹⁴ Deduction should be made concerning a relationship which is due to betrothal¹⁶ from a relationship that is due to betrothal,¹⁷ but let no proof be adduced from a sister the prohibition of whom is natural!¹⁸ — For this reason¹⁹ it was specifically stated in Scriptures, It is thy brother's nakedness,²⁰ implying²¹ whether he is paternal or only maternal.

Might it not be suggested that the one as well as the other²² speaks of the wife of a paternal brother, the one referring to a brother's wife who had children during the lifetime of her husband,²³ while the other refers to a brother's wife who had no children during the lifetime of her husband! — The case of one who had no children during the lifetime of her husband may be deduced from the statement of R. Huna.²⁴

Might not both²⁵ still speak of the wife of a paternal brother, the one referring to a brother's wife who had children during the lifetime of her husband and the other to one who had children after the death of her husband! — The case of one who had children after the death of her husband requires no Scriptural text; for since the All Merciful said that she who had no children was permitted, it is obvious that if she had children she is forbidden.

Is it not possible that she who has no children is forbidden to all men but permitted to the levir while she who has children is permitted both to all men and to the levir! Or else: If she has no children it is a commandment²⁶ but if she has children it is optional! Or else: [Though indeed] the levir may marry her if²⁷ she has no children but he may not if she has children, yet [as the prohibition²⁸ is] a negative commandment that is derived from a positive one²⁹ it has only the force of a positive commandment!³⁰ — For this reason Scripture wrote another text,³¹ He hath uncovered his brother's nakedness.³² But might it be said that the wife of a maternal brother is like the wife of a paternal brother, and that as the wife of a paternal brother is permitted³³ after the death of her husband, so is also the wife of a maternal brother³⁴ permitted after the death of her husband! — Scripture said, She is,³⁵ she retains her status.³⁶

What need was there to specify the penalty of kareth for intercourse with one's sister?³⁷ — To infer a ruling like that of R. Johanan. For R. Johanan stated: If one committed all these offences³⁸ in one state of unawareness, he is liable for every one of them.³⁹ According to R. Isaac, however, who stated, 'All those who are subject to the penalty of kareth were included in the general rule; and why was the penalty of kareth for [intercourse with] a sister stated separately? In order to indicate that his⁴⁰ penalty is kareth and not flogging',⁴¹ whence is the division⁴² deduced? — It is deduced from, And unto a woman . . . as long as she is impure by her uncleanness,⁴³ that guilt is incurred for every single woman.⁴⁴

For what purpose did the All Merciful write, They shall be child less⁴⁵ in the case of one's aunt?⁴⁶ — It is required for an exposition like that of Rabbah. For Rabbah pointed out the following contradiction: It is written, They shall be childless,⁴⁵ and it is also written, They shall die childless!⁴⁷ How [are these two versions to be reconciled]? If he has children he will bury them; if he has no children, he will be childless.⁴⁸

And it was necessary to write They shall be childless,⁴⁵ and it was also necessary to write, They shall die childless.⁴⁷ For had the All Merciful written only, They shall be childless,⁴⁵ it might have been assumed to refer to children born before the offence⁴⁹ but not to those born subsequent to the offence,⁵⁰ hence the All Merciful wrote, They shall die childless.⁴⁷ And had the All Merciful written, They shall die childless,⁴⁷ it might have been assumed to refer to those born subsequent to the offence,⁵¹ but not to those who were born previously,⁵⁰ [hence both texts were] required.

Whence [is the prohibition of] the first stage among those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments⁵² to be inferred? — As the All Merciful specified carnally⁵³ in the case of a designated⁵⁴ bondmaid,⁵⁵ it may be inferred that among all the others who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments,⁵⁶ the first stage by itself constitutes the offence.⁵⁷ On the contrary! As the All Merciful specified the first stage in the case of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth,⁵⁸ it may be inferred that among those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments consummation only constitutes the offence! — R. Ashi replied: If so,⁵⁹ Scripture should have omitted [the reference]⁶⁰ in the case of the designated handmaid.⁶¹

Whence [is the prohibition of] the first stage inferred in the case of offences for which priests alone are subject to the penalty of negative commandments?⁶² — This is arrived at by an analogy between the expressions of 'taking'.⁶³

Whence [is the prohibition⁶⁴ in respect of] those who are subject⁶⁵ to the penalty of a positive commandment⁶⁶ inferred?

(1) Since the third, the maternal sister of the second, is permitted only on account of the illegality of the marriage of the second, but is forbidden where the marriage with the second is legal.

(2) A wife's sister is forbidden.

(3) In respect of a wife's sister.

- (4) When her husband is his father's paternal brother.
- (5) A wife's sister whose relationship to him is due to his own (and not his father's) act of marriage with her sister.
- (6) His sister. An aunt's relationship, however, is due not to his own, but his father's relationship with her husband. V. supra.
- (7) In respect of a wife's sister.
- (8) A man's wife's sister is related to him through betrothal of her sister (his wife).
- (9) The aunt whose relationship to him is due to her betrothal by his uncle.
- (10) Like that of his wife's sister.
- (11) Lev. XVIII, 16.
- (12) For intercourse with a brother's wife.
- (13) The brother.
- (14) V. supra p. 363, n. 11.
- (15) When her husband is his father's paternal brother.
- (16) A brother's wife.
- (17) V. supra note 5.
- (18) It is due to vicissitudes of birth and not to any act of his.
- (19) To exclude this argument.
- (20) Lev. XVIII, 16b.
- (21) Since, in view of Lev. XVIII, 16a, it is superfluous.
- (22) The two sections of the verse cited.
- (23) Who divorced her.
- (24) Supra 54b; and no special text is needed for the purpose.
- (25) The two sections of the verse cited.
- (26) That the levir marries her.
- (27) Lit., 'yes'.
- (28) Not to marry a wife of a deceased brother if she has children.
- (29) Her husband's brother shall go in unto her if she has no children.
- (30) The penalty for the transgression of which is not that of kareth!
- (31) Which, in view of the texts from Lev. XVIII, 16a and b, is superfluous.
- (32) Lev. XX, 21, to indicate that the prohibition is to apply to all cases whether that of a paternal or only that of a maternal brother.
- (33) To marry the levir if her husband died without issue.
- (34) Who died childless.
- (35) E.V. 'it is'. Lev. XVIII, 16, which speaks also, as deduced supra, of the wife of a maternal brother.
- (36) As she was forbidden to the levir during the lifetime of her husband she remains so after his death.
- (37) Her case, surely, is included in Lev. XVIII, 29, among all the others with whom intercourse is forbidden under the penalty of kareth!
- (38) Of forbidden intercourse.
- (39) Mak. 14a, Ker. 2b. Because the penalty of kareth was specifically mentioned in the case of intercourse with a sister who is taken as an example for all the others included in the general statement in Lev. XVIII, 29. This is in accordance with the principle that if any case is included in a general rule and is then made the subject of a special statement, that which is predicated of it is to be applied to the whole of the general rule. Had not the sister been mentioned separately it might have been assumed that as all the offences were included in the general prohibition, and as they were all committed in one state of unawareness, one liability only is incurred for all.
- (40) The brother's.
- (41) Even though he had been duly warned.
- (42) That liability is incurred for every single offence even though all were committed in one state of unawareness.
- (43) Lev. XVIII, 19, emphasis on woman. Since, instead of the longer expression 'A woman . . . as long as she is impure by her uncleanness', the shorter one, 'a menstruant could have been used.
- (44) With whom intercourse took place; v. Mak. Sonc. ed. pp. 97ff.
- (45) Lev. XX, 21.
- (46) By childless ערירים the penalty of kareth is understood: Not only the offender but his children also are thereby cut off.

(47) Ibid. 20.

(48) V. infra nn. 5ff.

(49) The expression shall be childless would have been taken to imply that the children born prior to the offence would die as a result of the offence. The parents, however, would not die childless because the children born after the offence would live.

(50) Who would live. V. supra note 5.

(51) Shall die childless, being preceded by They shall bear their sin (Lev. XX, 20), implying that the penalty would affect only those children who were born after the sin had been committed.

(52) I.e., to flogging but not to kareth.

(53) Lev. XIX, 20, implying the second stage of consummation.

(54) הַרְוֵהָ This form of the kinyan by a Jewish slave of a Canaanitish bondwoman takes the place of the ordinary betrothal of a free woman.

(55) Intercourse with whom is forbidden by a negative commandment and is consequently subject to the penalty of flogging, in addition to the prescribed guilt-offering (v. Lev. XIX, 21f).

(56) Such as a bastard and an undesignated bondmaid.

(57) As only the designated bondmaid must pass the second stage in order to constitute an offence for which liability to a guilt-offering is incurred, it follows that in all the other cases, where no guilt-offering is ever incurred, the offence is constituted with the first stage alone.

(58) In Lev. XVIII, 29.

(59) That with all the others who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments the offence is not constituted unless, as with the designated bondmaid, the second stage was passed.

(60) 'Carnally'. Lit., 'let the text keep silence.'

(61) Since, however, the second stage was specifically postulated in her case, it follows that with all the others the first stage by itself constitutes the offence.

(62) From the designated maid supra only such prohibitions may be inferred as are applicable to all and not to priests only.

(63) The expression of 'taking' is used in the case of intercourse with a sister (Lev. XX, 17) which is punishable by kareth, and a similar expression is used in the case of marriages forbidden to priests under the penalty of a negative commandment (Lev. XXI, 7).

(64) Of the first stage.

(65) For intercourse with an Israelite's daughter.

(66) An Egyptian or an Edomite, for instance, (v. Deut. XXIII, 8, 9) whose prohibition to marry an Israelite's daughter is based on the positive precept, The third generation . . . shall (E.V. may) enter into the assembly of the Lord, which implies that the first and second generations must not. A negative precept derived from a positive one has the force of a positive precept.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 55b

— It is arrived at by an analogy between the two expressions of 'coming'.¹

Whence [the prohibition of a yebamah]² to a stranger?³ — If [one follows] him who holds that it⁴ is a negative precept,⁵ [it would be subject to the same restrictions as any other] negative precept;⁶ if [one follows] him who holds that it⁷ is a positive precept,⁸ [it would be subject to the same restrictions as any other] positive precept.⁶ Whence, however, [its⁹ force¹⁰ in respect of] the yebamah and the levir? — It is arrived at by the analogy between the two expressions of 'coming'.¹¹

Whence [its⁹ force¹² in respect of the kinyan], between husband and wife? — It is arrived at by comparison between the expressions of 'taking'.¹³

Raba said: For what purpose did the All Merciful write 'carnally' in connection with the designated bondmaid,¹⁴ a married woman,¹⁵ and a sotah?¹⁶ That in connection with the designated bondmaid [is required] as has just been explained.¹⁷ That in connection with a married woman excludes intercourse with a relaxed membrum.¹⁸ This is a satisfactory interpretation in accordance with the view of him who maintains that if one cohabited with forbidden relatives with relaxed membrum he is exonerated;¹⁹ what, however, can be said, according to him who maintains [that for such an act one is] guilty? — The exclusion is rather that of intercourse with a dead woman.²⁰ Since it might have been assumed that, as [a wife], even after her death, is described as his kin,²¹ one should be guilty for [intercourse with] her [as for that] with a married woman, hence we were taught [that one is exonerated]. What was the object of that²² of the sotah? — Such as was taught: Carnally²² excludes [the case where the husband's warning was] concerning something else. What is meant by 'something else'? R. Shesheth replied: The exclusion is the case where he warned her concerning unnatural intercourse. Said Raba to him: The text reads, As with womankind!²³ — Rather, said Raba, the exclusion is the case where the husband's warning concerned lecherous contact of her limbs. Said Abaye to him: Has the All Merciful forbidden [a wife to her husband] because of obscenity?²⁴ — Rather, said Abaye, the exclusion is the case where the husband's warning was concerning superficial contact.²⁵ This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who maintains that the first stage of contact²⁶ is the insertion of the corona;²⁷ what can be said, however, according to him who maintains that it²⁸ is the superficial contact!²⁹ — The exclusion is rather the case where he warned her concerning lecherous contact of her limbs; but³⁰ it was necessary [to state it, because] it might have been assumed that, as the All Merciful has made the prohibition³¹ dependent on the objection of the husband,³² [the woman should here be forbidden] since he objected,³³ hence we were taught [that such a case is excluded].

Samuel stated: The first stage is constituted by superficial contact.²⁵ This may be compared to a man who puts his finger to his mouth; it is impossible for him not to press down the flesh. When Rabbah b. Bar Hana came³⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: Consummation in the case of a designated bondmaid is constituted by the insertion of the corona.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: 'Carnally³⁵ implies that guilt is incurred only when intercourse was accompanied by friction';³⁶ does not this refer to friction of the membrum! — No; friction of the corona.

When R. Dimi came³⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona. They said to him: But, surely, Rabbah b. Bar Hana did not say so! — He replied: Then either he is the story-teller³⁷ or I.³⁸

When Rabin came³⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan, 'The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona'. He is certainly in disagreement with the report of Rabbah b. Bar Hana.³⁹ Must it be said, however, that he differs also from Samuel?⁴⁰ — No; [the entire process] from the superficial contact until the insertion of the corona is described as the first stage.⁴¹

When R. Samuel b. Judah came³⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan, 'The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona; and the final stage, by actual consummation.

(1) The expression of 'coming' is used with a case that is forbidden by a negative precept (Deut. XXIII, 3) as well as with those whose prohibition is derived from a positive precept (ibid. 9) and whose penalty is kareth. Cf. note 9 supra.

(2) Prior to halizah.

(3) Lit., 'to the street'.

(4) The marriage with a stranger before halizah had been performed.

(5) Derived from Deut. XXV, 5, Shall not be married abroad.

(6) And, as has been shewn supra, the first stage is included in the restrictions.

(7) The marriage with a stranger before halizah had been performed.

(8) From Deut. XXV, 5, it follows that the levir shall marry her (positive); hence no other (negative); and a negative precept derived from a positive one has the force of the positive.

(9) Of the first stage.

(10) To constitute levirate marriage as if actual cohabitation had taken place.

(11) Cf. supra p. 370, n. 10. The expression of 'coming' is also used in respect of the levir (v. Deut. XXV, 5).

(12) Cf. supra note 5.

(13) Used in the case of husband and wife (Deut. XXIV, 1) as well as in that of those whose penalty is kareth. Cf. supra p. 370, n. 10.

(14) Lev. XIX, 20.

(15) Ibid. XVIII, 20.

(16) Num. V, 13.

(17) Supra 55a.

(18) Since no fertilisation can possibly result.

(19) Shebu. 18a, Sanh. 55a.

(20) Even though she died as a married woman.

(21) In Lev. XXI, 2, where the text enumerates the dead relatives for whom a priest may defile himself. As was explained, supra 22b, his kin refers to one's wife.

(22) The expression 'carnally' in Num. V, 13.

(23) Lev. XVIII, 22, in which natural and unnatural intercourse are regarded as analogous (v. Sanh. 54a). What matters it then for which she was warned!

(24) Surely not. For mere laxity, in the absence of adultery, a wife would not have been subjected to such a severe penalty. What need then was there to state the obvious?

(25) Lit., 'kissing'.

(26) Which is forbidden.

(27) Infra. As this stage only constitutes cohabitation and causes the prohibition of the woman to her husband, it is possible to exclude from such prohibition the earlier stage of superficial contact.

(28) The 'first stage' that is forbidden.

(29) How can this be excluded from the prohibition in view of the ruling that the first stage does constitute cohabitation!

(30) Despite Abaye's objection (v. supra note 3).

(31) Of a sotah to her husband.

(32) The laws of the sotah apply only where such an objection or warning has been expressed.

(33) By his warning.

(34) From Palestine to Babylon.

(35) Lev. XIX, 20, dealing with a designated bondmaid.

(36) מִירוֹק 'friction', Syr.-Aram. rt. מִרְקָ So Golds. against Levy's (III, p. 260) Ergiessung which he regards as an error based on a misunderstanding of Rashi.

(37) Lit., 'liar'. Rabbah h. Bar Hana was a well known teller of hair-raising stories (Cf. B.B. 73aff). and sometimes made self-contradictory statements on questions of halachah also (cf. Hul. 97a, Kid. 75b).

(38) Lit., 'I lied', i.e., they had his word against Rabbah b. Bar Hana's, and it was for them to decide the report of which of them was the more reliable.

(39) Who regards this act as consummation.

(40) Who reported that superficial contact alone constitutes the first stage.

(41) On this both Samuel and Rabin agree; the one mentioning the beginning of the process and the other the conclusion.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 56a

Beyond this, the act is no more than superficial contact and one is exonerated in regard to it'. He thus differs from Samuel.

WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST, OR ALSO THE FINAL STAGE OF CONTACT HE CONSTITUTES THEREBY A KINYAN. In what respect is kinyan constituted? — Rab replied: Kinyan is constituted in all respects;¹ and Samuel replied: Kinyan is constituted only in respect of the things specified in the section,² viz., to inherit the estate of his brother³ and to exempt her⁴ from the levirate marriage.⁵ If [she⁶ became subject to the levir] after her marriage⁷ she may, according to the view of all,⁸ eat [terumah],⁹ since she has been eating it before.¹⁰ They differ only [where she became subject to the levir] after betrothal.⁷ Rab maintains that she may eat, since the All Merciful has included cohabitation in error, [giving it the same validity] as when done presumptuously. But Samuel maintains that the All Merciful has included it¹¹ in so far only as to put him¹² in the same position as the husband,¹³ but not to confer upon him more power than upon the husband.¹⁴ And [in giving this ruling] Samuel is consistent with his own view, for R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: wherever the husband entitles her to eat, the levir also entitles her to eat; and wherever the husband does not entitle her to eat the levir also¹⁵ does not entitle her to eat.

An objection was raised: 'If the daughter of an Israelite, capable of hearing, was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].¹⁶ If he died¹⁷ and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat;¹⁸ and in this respect the power of the levir is superior to that of the husband'. Now, according to Rab, this statement is perfectly satisfactory.¹⁹ According to Samuel, however, a difficulty arises!²⁰ Samuel can answer you: Read thus . . . who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah]; if, however, he married her and then became deaf she may eat it; if he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat it'.²¹ 'Then what is meant by 'in this respect'?²² — While if the husband had been deaf before,²³ she would not have been entitled to eat, if the levir had been deaf before²³ she may eat.

Others say: If [she²⁴ became subject to the levir] after her betrothal²⁵ all²⁶ agree that she may not eat [terumah], since 'she was not allowed to eat it during the lifetime of her husband. They differ only [when she became subject to the levir] after her marriage.²⁵ Rab maintains that she may eat, since she has been eating before; but Samuel maintains that she may not eat, because the All Merciful has included cohabitation in error, [giving it the same force] as cohabitation in presumption, only in respect of the things that were enumerated in the section,²⁷ but not in all other respects. But surely R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel, 'Wherever the husband entitles her to eat the levir also entitles her to eat'!²⁸ — Read: Every cohabitation whereby a husband entitles her to eat also entitles her to eat if performed by the levir, and every cohabitation whereby the husband does not entitle her to eat, does not entitle her to eat if performed by the levir.

An objection was raised: 'If the daughter of an Israelite capable of hearing was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].²⁹ If he died³⁰ and she became subject to a deaf levir she may eat;³¹ and in this respect the power of the levir is superior to that of the husband'. Now, according to Rab,³² this³³ might well be explained as was explained above,³⁴ according to Samuel, however, a difficulty arises!³⁵ — This is indeed a difficulty.

Our Rabbis taught: If the daughter of an Israelite capable of hearing was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].³⁶ If a son was born to her she may eat.³⁷ If the son died,³⁸ R. Nathan said, she may eat;³⁹ but the Sages said: She may not eat. What is R. Nathan's reason?⁴⁰ Rabbah replied: Because she was eating⁴¹ before. Said Abaye to him: What now? would the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest who subsequently died⁴² be entitled to eat [terumah] because she was eating it before? But⁴³ [the fact is that] as soon as [her husband] died his sanctity is withdrawn from her; so here also as soon as [the son] died his sanctity is withdrawn from her!⁴⁴ — Rather, said R. Joseph, R. Nathan holds that marriage with a deaf [priest]⁴⁵ does entitle the woman to eat terumah,⁴⁶ and that no prohibition⁴⁷ is to be made in respect of the marriage of a deaf priest⁴⁸ as a preventive measure against the betrothal of a deaf priest.⁴⁹ Said Abaye to him: If so,⁵⁰ what need was there [to state] 'If a son was born to her'? — Because of the Rabbis.⁵¹ Then⁵² R. Nathan should have expressed his disagreement with the Rabbis in the first clause!⁵³ — He allowed the Rabbis to finish their statement and then expressed his disagreement with them.⁵⁴ If so,⁵⁵ the statement should have read, 'If the son died she may not eat;⁵⁶ R. Nathan said: She may eat'⁵⁷ — This is a difficulty.

SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES. R. Amram said: The following statement was made to us by R. Shesheth

- (1) The yebamah may even eat of terumah if the levir was a priest.
 - (2) Deut. XXV, 5ff, which deals with the obligations and privileges of the levir and the yebamah.
 - (3) Inferred from v. 6 in the section.
 - (4) If he died without issue from her but had children from another wife, or if he divorced her.
 - (5) The first stage having the same validity as actual marriage.
 - (6) The sister-in-law upon whom one of the forms of kinyan, including cohabitation in error, spoken of in our Mishnah had been executed.
 - (7) With her husband, the levir's deceased brother.
 - (8) Rab and Samuel.
 - (9) If the levir was a priest.
 - (10) While she was still with her husband.
 - (11) Cohabitation in error.
 - (12) The levir.
 - (13) He is entitled to confer upon his sister-in-law the same rights that had been conferred upon her by her husband. Hence, if she was married and entitled to eat terumah the levir also may confer upon her this privilege.
 - (14) As her husband's priesthood did not entitle her to eat terumah during the period of their betrothal, since only actual marriage can confer this privilege, the levir also cannot now confer this privilege upon her.
 - (15) If the kinyan was in one of the imperfect forms spoken of in our Mishnah.
 - (16) Even after their marriage. The reason will be explained infra.
 - (17) After the marriage.
 - (18) After the levirate marriage. The cohabitation of a deaf levir is considered to be no less valid to constitute a kinyan than the imperfect forms of kinyan mentioned in our Mishnah which constitute kinyan in the case of any levir.
 - (19) Because he regards an imperfect cohabitation which in ordinary cases constitutes no kinyan as valid in the case of the levir.
 - (20) According to him, imperfect cohabitation confers no more rights through the levir than through the husband; and here it is stated that the levir entitles her to eat terumah though her husband could not confer this privilege upon her!
 - (21) Because she was entitled to the same privilege during the lifetime of her husband,
 - (22) If she is only entitled to the privilege she enjoyed during the lifetime of her husband, in what respect is 'the power of the levir superior to that of the husband'?
 - (23) He married her.
 - (24) V. supra p. 374, n. 6.
 - (25) V. loc. cit., n. 7.
 - (26) V. loc. cit., n. 8.
 - (27) V. loc. cit., n. 2.
 - (28) How then could Samuel maintain that 'she may not eat' even though she had enjoyed that privilege while her husband was alive?
 - (29) V. supra p. 374, n. 16.
 - (30) V. loc. cit., n. 17.
 - (31) V. p. 375, n. 1.
 - (32) Though he maintains (according to the second version) that the levir does not confer any privileges that were not previously conferred by the husband.
 - (33) The statement just cited that she may eat terumah if the levir is deaf though she was not permitted to eat it while her husband was alive.
 - (34) I.e., the explanation given supra, in reply to the objection raised against Samuel, may now be given as a reply to the objection against Rab, viz., that the clause, 'If however, he married her and then became deaf she may eat it', is to be inserted before 'If he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat', the last clause thus referring to a married woman that was permitted to eat terumah during the lifetime of her husband.

(35) Since, in his opinion (according to the second version), the deaf levir (whose kinyan has the same validity as that effected through the imperfect forms mentioned in our Mishnah) does not confer the privilege of eating terumah even if the woman had enjoyed the privilege while her husband was alive.

(36) V. supra p. 374. n. 16.

(37) The terumah; by virtue of her son, as deduced from Lev. XXII, 11, infra 67a.

(38) But was survived by his father.

(39) By virtue of her husband.

(40) Why may she eat now by virtue of her husband while in the previous case, where she never had a son, her husband could not confer that privilege upon her?

(41) V. supra note 9.

(42) Not being survived by any son.

(43) Since the law is that she may not.

(44) How, then, could R. Nathan allow her to continue to eat terumah?

(45) Where the betrothal took place while he was still capable of hearing.

(46) Because Pentateuchally the betrothal confers the privilege upon her. Its postponement until after the marriage is merely a preventive measure Rabbinically instituted (v. Keth. 57b). which is, of course, not applicable here where marriage with the deaf man had already taken place.

(47) Against the woman's eating of terumah.

(48) V. supra note 3.

(49) There is no need to provide against the possibility of mistaking betrothal for marriage and for thus allowing a woman to eat terumah immediately after betrothal, since it is well known that the betrothal of a deaf man has no validity. The Rabbis who forbid the woman to eat terumah even after the marriage, it may be explained, provided against the possibility of mistaking such a marriage which followed a betrothal that took place while the priest was still capable of hearing (which Pentateuchally entitles the woman to the privilege) for one which followed a betrothal that took place when he was already deaf and which is Pentateuchally invalid.

(50) If according to R. Nathan it is the marriage, even though there was no son, that entitles the woman to the terumah.

(51) Who in such a case only agree with R. Nathan that the woman may eat terumah.

(52) Since he maintains that after the marriage, though there was no son, the woman is entitled to the privilege.

(53) Where the woman is prohibited to eat terumah even after the marriage.

(54) With their views in both the first and the final clause.

(55) That R. Nathan reserved his opinion until the Rabbis had finished their full statement.

(56) Which would have concluded the statement of the Rabbis.

(57) I.e., R. Nathan's view would thus have come at the very end. As, however, his opinion is inserted before 'she may not eat' which is the statement of the Rabbis, it cannot be maintained any more that he was waiting until they had concluded their full statement, and the original difficulty consequently arises again.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 56b

who enlightened us on the subject¹ from our Mishnah. 'An Israelite's wife who was outraged, though she is permitted to her husband, is disqualified from the priesthood;² and so it was taught by our Tanna:³ SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES ENUMERATED IN THE TORAH, OR WITH ANY OF THOSE WHO ARE INELIGIBLE TO MARRY HIM; now, what is the purport of SIMILARLY? Does it not mean, WHETHER IN ERROR OR IN PRESUMPTION, WHETHER UNDER COMPULSION OR OF HIS OWN FREE WILL? And yet it was stated, HE HAS THEREBY RENDERED HER INELIGIBLE'.⁴ — No; SIMILARLY might refer⁵ to the FIRST STAGE.⁶ 'To the first stage' with whom? If it be suggested, 'With one of the forbidden relatives', does this then imply [it might be retorted] that the case of the forbidden relatives is derived from that of the sister-in-law?⁷ On the contrary, the case of the sister-in-law was derived from the forbidden relatives, since the original prohibition of the first stage was written in connection with the forbidden relatives! — Rather, SIMILARLY refers⁸ to Unnatural intercourse with forbidden relatives.⁹ On the contrary; the original prohibition of the various forms of intercourse with a woman was written in connection with the forbidden relatives!¹⁰ — Rather, SIMILARLY refers⁸ to unnatural intercourse with those [cohabitation with whom is] subject to the penalty of negative precepts.¹¹

Rabbah¹² stated: If the wife of a priest had been outraged, her husband suffers the penalty of flogging on her account¹³ for [cohabiting with] a harlot.¹⁴ Only for [cohabiting with] a harlot, but not for ‘defilement’?¹⁵ — Read, ‘Also for [cohabitation with] a harlot’.¹⁶

R. Zera raised an objection: And she be not seized,¹⁷ she is forbidden; if, however, she was seized¹⁸ she is permitted.¹⁹ But there is another woman who is forbidden¹⁹ even though she was seized.¹⁸ And who is that? The wife of a priest. Now, a negative precept²⁰ that is derived from a positive one²¹ has only the force of a positive precept!²² — Rabbah replied: All²³ were included in the category of harlot.²⁴ When, therefore, Scripture specified in the case of the wife of an Israelite that only if she be not seized¹⁷ she is forbidden but if she was seized¹⁸ she is permitted, it may be inferred that the wife of a priest retains her forbidden status.²⁵

Others say: Rabbah stated, If the wife of a priest had been outraged, her husband suffers for her the penalty of flogging²⁶ on account of ‘defilement’.²⁷ Only on account of ‘defilement’ but not for [connubial relationship with] a harlot. Thus it is obvious that [when the woman acted] under compulsion she is not to be regarded as a harlot. R. Zera raised an objection: ‘And she be not seized,²⁸ she is forbidden; if, however, she was seized²⁹ she is permitted. But there is another woman who is forbidden³⁰ even though she was seized.²⁹ And who is that? The wife of a priest’. Now, a negative precept³¹ that is derived from a positive one³² has only the force of a positive precept!³³ — Rabbah³⁴ replied: All³⁵ were included in [the prohibition to live with her] after that she is defiled.³⁶ When, therefore, Scripture specified in the case of the wife of an Israelite that only when she be not seized³⁷ she is forbidden, but if she was seized³⁸ she is permitted, it may be inferred that the wife of a priest retains her forbidden status.³⁹

MISHNAH. THE BETROTHAL OF A WIDOW TO A HIGH PRIEST AND OF A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALIZAH TO A COMMON PRIEST⁴⁰ DOES NOT CONFER UPON THEM THE RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH.⁴¹ R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, DECLARE THEM ELIGIBLE.⁴² IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE THEY REMAIN INELIGIBLE,⁴³ IF AFTER BETROTHAL THEY BECOME ELIGIBLE.⁴⁴

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Meir said, [this⁴⁵ may be arrived at by an inference] a minori ad majus: If permissible betrothal⁴⁶ does not confer the right of eating terumah, how much less forbidden betrothal.⁴⁷ They, however, replied: No; if you have said it⁴⁸ in respect of permissible betrothal⁴⁶ where the man may never confer the right of eating,⁴⁹ would you also say it⁴⁸ in respect of sinful betrothal⁴⁷ where the [priest], in other circumstances,⁵⁰ is entitled to confer the right of eating?⁵¹

R. Eleazar stated in the name of R. Oshaia: In the case where a priest who was wounded in the stones⁵² betrothed a daughter of an Israelite,⁵³ we have a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon. According to R. Meir who holds that a woman awaiting a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation⁵⁴ may not eat terumah, this woman also⁵⁵ may not eat; but according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who maintain that a woman awaiting a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation⁵⁴ may eat

(1) Lit., ‘and lit up our eyes’.

(2) Supra 35a. She may not marry a priest even after the death of her husband.

(3) In our Mishnah תונה = our Tanna (Rashi). ותנה תונה = and our Tanna also taught so. Others render תונה ‘confirmation: ותנה תונה = and the Tanna is (or provides) confirmation (v. Jast.). [Or, ותנה תונה

'The Tanna teaches', v. Epstein, Schwarz-Festschrift pp. 319ff].

(4) To marry a priest. Since a married woman is subject to the same restrictions as the 'forbidden relatives', she being included in the penalty of incestuous unions in Lev. XVIII (v. verse 20), it follows that whatever renders the forbidden relatives in our Mishnah ineligible to marry a priest renders a married woman also ineligible. As 'outrage' or 'intercourse under compulsion' is included, our Mishnah must be in agreement with the ruling of R. Shesheth.

(5) Lit., 'what'.

(6) I.e., as in the previously mentioned cases so in the following, the first stage has the same force as consummation. The ineligibility of an outraged woman, therefore, does not at all come within the purview of our Mishnah.

(7) Since the law in the latter is made to apply by comparison also to the former.

(8) Lit., 'what'.

(9) The meaning being that as with the sister-in-law so with the other forbidden relatives kinyan is constituted IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE OF THE INTERCOURSE, even if it was unnatural. Cf. supra p. 378, n. 6 second clause.

(10) The case of the sister-in-law is derived from them; not theirs from hers.

(11) Cf. supra p. 378, n. 6 and supra n. 2 mutatis mutandis.

(12) Cur. edd., 'Raba'.

(13) If he has intercourse with her.

(14) Who is forbidden to a priest (v. Lev. XXI, 7) whether her adultery was committed willingly or under compulsion. It is in the case of an Israelite only that a distinction is made between a woman's voluntary and compulsory adultery.

(15) If to an Israelite she is forbidden on account of her defilement when her act was voluntary (v. supra 11b), she should be forbidden to a priest on the same account even when her act was under compulsion!

(16) He suffers for both.

(17) Num. V, 13. E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(18) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(19) To her husband.

(20) That a priest must not live with his outraged wife.

(21) An Israelite only may live with such a wife.

(22) It is not punishable by flogging. How then could Rabbah subject the husband to such a penalty?

(23) Married women who played the harlot whether willingly or under compulsion.

(24) Who is forbidden to her husband by a negative precept.

(25) Her prohibition to the priest, even if she acted under compulsion, is consequently derived from the original negative precept, and not, as had been assumed, from the positive precept relating to an Israelite.

(26) If he has intercourse with her.

(27) V. supra p. 379, n.8.

(28) Num. V, 13. E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(29) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(30) To her husband.

(31) Cf. supra p. 379, n. 13 mutatis mutandis.

(32) An Israelite only may live with such a wife.

(33) V. supra p. 379, n. 15.

(34) So Bah. Cur. edd., 'Raba'.

(35) V. supra p. 379, n. 16.

(36) Deut. XXIV, 4.

(37) Num. V, 13, E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(38) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(39) Cf. supra note 1.

(40) Since such betrothal is unlawful.

(41) If they were the daughters of Israelites. If they were the daughters of priests, their right to the eating of terumah which they enjoyed prior to their betrothal, ceases with the forbidden betrothal. (V. Rashi s.v. לשון אחר a.l.) According to Tosaf. (s.v. בן a.l.) the Mishnah refers to the daughters of priests only. Cf. also תוספות ישנים a.l.

(42) During the period of betrothal, so long as actual marriage has not taken place.

(43) Since, in the case of priests' daughters, marriage caused their permanent profanation, and in that of others the privilege had never been conferred upon them.

(44) Even according to the first Tanna. Priests' daughters lose the privilege only during the period of betrothal. As soon as the betrothal period ends either through death or divorce they may again eat terumah; and in the case of widowhood they may also marry a common priest. Daughters of Israelites are entitled to the same privileges except that of eating of terumah to which, of course, they had never been entitled.

(45) The ruling that the betrothals spoken of in our Mishnah do not confer upon the daughter of an Israelite the privilege of eating terumah (v. Rashi, second explanation).

(46) When an Israelite betroths the daughter of an Israelite.

(47) Of which our Mishnah speaks. [Var. lec.: 'If permissible betrothal renders her ineligible (a priest's daughter is not allowed to eat terumah after her betrothal to an Israelite), how much more forbidden betrothal'. This reading — a reading which it must be confessed appears more feasible — is adopted by Tosaf. in view of their interpretation (v. supra p. 380, n. 17) that the Mishnah refers only to daughters of priests].

(48) That betrothal does not confer the privilege of eating terumah.

(49) An Israelite is neither himself entitled to the eating of terumah nor can he confer the right upon others.

(50) If he married a woman permitted to him.

(51) Obviously not. Hence the ruling in our Mishnah that the betrothals confer the privilege.

(52) One so incapacitated is not permitted to marry even the daughter of an Israelite, v. Deut. XXIII, 2.

(53) [Var. lec.: 'a daughter of a priest'. A reading adopted by Tosaf. on their interpretation (cf. n. 6)].

(54) I.e., if she was betrothed to a man whom she is forbidden to marry.

(55) Who married the incapacitated priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 57a

this woman also may eat.¹

Whence [is this² proved]? Is it not possible that R. Eleazar and R. Simeon maintain [their opinion] only there because in other circumstances³ he is entitled to confer the right of eating, but not here where he is never entitled to confer the right of eating!⁴ And were you to reply that here also he⁵ is entitled to confer upon the daughter of proselytes⁶ the right of eating, surely [it may be retorted] this very question was addressed by R. Johanan to R. Oshaia⁷ who gave him no answer!⁸

It was stated:⁹ Abaye said,¹⁰ Because¹¹ he is entitled to confer upon [his wife]¹² the right to eat [terumah] so long as he does not cohabit with her.¹³ Raba said,¹⁰ Because¹¹ he may confer the right of eating¹⁴ [terumah] upon his Canaanitish bondmen and bondwomen.¹⁵

Abaye did not give the same explanation as Raba because matrimonial kinyan may be inferred from matrimonial kinyan, but matrimonial kinyan may not be inferred from the kinyan of slaves. And Raba does not give the same explanation as Abaye because there¹⁶ it is different, since she has already been eating it previously.¹⁷ And Abaye?¹⁸ — [The argument], 'since she has already been eating' cannot be upheld;¹⁹ for should you not admit this,²⁰ a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest who subsequently died should also be allowed to eat terumah since she has already been eating it!²¹

And Raba?²² — There,²³ his kinyan had completely ceased;²⁴ here, however, his kinyan did not cease.²⁵

[To turn to] the main text. R. Johanan enquired of R. Oshaia: If a priest who was wounded in the stones married the daughter of proselytes does he confer upon her the right of eating terumah? The other remained silent and made no reply at all. Later, another great man came and asked him a different question which he answered. And who was that man? Resh Lakish. Said R. Judah the Prince to R. Oshaia: Is not R. Johanan a great man?²⁶ The other replied: [No reply could be given] since he submitted a problem which has no solution.

In accordance with whose view?²⁷ If according to R. Judah,²⁸ she is not entitled to eat terumah whether he²⁹ does or does not retain his holiness. For if he retains his holiness she may not eat since the Master said³⁰, 'The daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male who is unfit for the priesthood';³¹ and if he does not retain his holiness,³² she may not eat either, since it has been said that the assembly of proselytes is called an 'assembly'!³³ If, however, according to R. Jose,³⁴ she is entitled to eat terumah whether he does or does not retain his holiness. For if he retains his holiness she may eat, since he³⁵ stated that even when a proselyte married a proselyte his daughter is eligible to marry a priest;³⁶ and if he does not retain his holiness, she may also eat since he³⁵ said that the assembly of proselytes is not called an 'assembly'!³⁷ It must rather be³⁸ in accordance with the view of the following Tanna. For we learned: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, 'A woman who is the daughter of a proselyte must not be married to a priest unless her mother was of Israel',³⁹ And it is this that his question amounts to: Has only her eligibility⁴⁰ increased⁴¹ and consequently she is entitled to eat terumah⁴² or has perhaps her sanctity also increased⁴³ and consequently she is not permitted to eat?⁴⁴

Come and hear: When R. Aha b Hinena arrived from the South, he came and brought a Baraita with him: Whence is it deduced that if a priest, who is wounded in the stones, married the daughter of proselytes, he confers upon her the right to eat terumah? For it was stated, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money⁴⁵ etc.,⁴⁶ he may eat of it. Now, in accordance with whose view?⁴⁷ If it be suggested, 'according to R. Judah', surely [it may be retorted] he stated that whether he⁴⁸ does or does not retain his holiness she⁴⁹ is not permitted to eat.⁵⁰ And if⁵¹ 'in accordance with the view of R. Jose', what need [it may be asked] was there for a Scriptural text? Surely, he⁵² stated that whether he⁴⁸ does or does not retain his holiness she⁴⁹ is permitted to eat! Must it not [consequently be assumed that it⁵³ is] in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob? And so it may be inferred that only her eligibility⁵⁴ had been increased and that she is consequently permitted to eat. This proves it.

It was stated: Rab said,

- (1) Since through the kinyan of the betrothal the woman becomes the priest's acquisition and is, therefore, like himself, entitled to eat terumah so long as she does not become profaned (a halalah) through actual marriage.
 - (2) The ruling according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon just deduced.
 - (3) If he married a woman permitted to him.
 - (4) Since he is not permitted to marry any woman.
 - (5) The incapacitated priest, since he is only forbidden to enter into the assembly of the Lord (Deut. XXIII, 2), i.e., to marry a Jewess, but he is permitted to marry a proselyte.
 - (6) Who is not included in the assembly of the Lord. V. supra n. 7.
 - (7) Infra.
 - (8) As to whether such an incapacitated priest may confer upon the daughter of a proselyte the right of eating terumah. Since no answer was given, there is no proof that the right may be conferred at all. The difficulty consequently remains: How could the case of the incapacitated priest who can never confer the right upon others be inferred from the case of one who is, in certain circumstances, entitled to confer such a right?
 - (9) In reply to the difficulty raised. V. supra n. 10.
 - (10) The incapacitated priest is entitled to confer upon the woman he betrothed the right to eat terumah.
 - (11) In certain other circumstances.
 - (12) Whom he married before he had been incapacitated.
 - (13) After becoming incapacitated (v. infra 70a). Since he may confer the privilege of eating terumah in this case he may also confer it where the betrothal was unlawful, so long as the woman had not been profaned by him through marriage.
 - (14) מאכיל so MS.M. (Cur. edd מאכילה 'enables her to eat').
 - (15) As he may confer the privilege in that case he may also confer it upon the woman he betrothed.
 - (16) Where the incapacity occurred after marriage.

- (17) Prior to the man's incapacity. This, therefore, provides no proof that a man who is already incapacitated can also confer the privilege.
- (18) How does he reconcile the difference in two cases?
- (19) Lit., 'we do not say'.
- (20) But insist on upholding Raba's distinction.
- (21) Prior to her husband's death. As in this case the argument is obviously untenable so it is untenable in the case of the incapacitated priest.
- (22) How can he advance an argument that is untenable in the case cited?
- (23) Where the priest died.
- (24) As soon as the priest died, leaving no sons, their marital relationship was completely severed.
- (25) He is still her husband.
- (26) And so entitled to a reply.
- (27) Did R. Johanan ask his question.
- (28) Who, in Kid. 77a, differs from R. Jose on the question of the daughter of a proselyte.
- (29) The incapacitated Priest.
- (30) R. Judah.
- (31) הַחַלָּה halal. As he may not consequently marry a proselyte's daughter she is obviously forbidden to eat of the terumah.
- (32) And the priestly sanctity is consequently no reason for her prohibition to marry a halal.
- (33) An 'assembly of the Lord' into which an incapacitated person may not enter. (Cf. supra p. 382, nn. 7 and 8). The marriage is consequently forbidden and, therefore, confers upon the woman no right to the eating of terumah.
- (34) Did R. Johanan ask his question.
- (35) R. Jose. [So MS.M. cur. edd., 'a Master said'].
- (36) Kid. 77a. Hence she is not inferior in this respect to the daughter of an Israelite.
- (37) The marriage with her being consequently permissible, the right of eating terumah should obviously be conferred upon her.
- (38) R. Johanan raised his question.
- (39) Bik. I,5.
- (40) Where her mother was of Israel.
- (41) I.e., is she, if her mother was of Israel, thereby only enabled to marry a priests but is not regarded as a proper daughter of Israel to be included in the 'assembly of the Lord', so as to be forbidden to one incapacitated.
- (42) In any ease. Even if the incapacitated priest is holy he may marry her. And, as she is not included in the 'assembly' (v. supra n. 13), she is not forbidden to marry him.
- (43) And she is thus included in the 'assembly' and hence forbidden to marry one incapacitated.
- (44) Since the marriage was a forbidden one.
- (45) Lev. XXII, 11.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 57b

'The bridal chamber¹ constitutes kinyan² with ineligible women³ and Samuel said, 'The bridal chamber⁴ does not constitute kinyan² with ineligible women'.³ Said Samuel: Abba⁵ agrees with me in the case of a girl who is under three years of age and one day; since cohabitation with her constitutes no kinyan,⁶ the bridal chamber⁷ also constitutes no kinyan.⁶

Raba said, We also learned a similar Baraita:⁸ A girl who is three years of age and one day may be betrothed by cohabitation; if a levir cohabited with her, he has thereby acquired her;⁹ one incurs through her the guilt of intercourse with a married woman; she¹⁰ defiles her cohabitor in respect of his imparting defilement to the lower, as well as to the upper couch;¹¹ if she was married to a priest she may eat terumah, and anyone ineligible¹² who cohabited with her causes her ineligibility.¹³ Thus only a girl of the age of three years and one day, who is rendered ineligible by cohabitation, is also rendered ineligible through the bridal chamber; but a girl younger than three years and one day, who is not rendered ineligible by cohabitation, is not rendered ineligible through the bridal chamber either.¹⁴ This proves it.

Rami b. Hama stated: [In regard to the question whether] the bridal chamber¹⁵ constitutes kinyan¹⁶ with ineligible women,¹⁷ we arrive at a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon.

(1) Lit., 'there is huppah' (v. Glos.), even if it was unaccompanied by any other form of betrothal such as money, deed, or cohabitation (Rashi). On huppah v. Kid., Sonc. ed. p. 5, n. 7,

(2) To deprive the woman of her right to eat terumah where, as the daughter of a priest, she had previously been entitled to this privilege.

(3) Whom one is not permitted to marry; a widow, e.g., to a High Priest or a divorcee to a common priest. [On Rashi's interpretation which is followed here, both Rab and Samuel hold with R. Huna (v. Kid. 3a) that huppah by itself constitutes kinyan. They differ, however, in the case of ineligible women, Samuel being of the opinion that huppah with them constitutes no kinyan, since it does not allow them to enter into marital union. Rabbenu Tam, on the other hand, explains huppah here as having been preceded by kiddushin and with reference to the last clause of our Mishnah, the point at issue being whether with ineligible women it is considered nissu'in disqualifying the widow, or erusin; v. Tosaf s.v. בג].

(4) If unaccompanied by any other forms of matrimonial kinyan. V. supra n. 11.

(5) I.e., Rab, whose proper name was Abba. The former name (Rab == Master) was a title of honour conferred upon him as the Master par excellence of his time. According to Rashi, a.l., 'Abba' was a term of respect synonymous with 'prince' and 'master' by which Samuel, his younger contemporary, referred to Rab.

(6) V. supra p. 385, n. 12.

(7) Which constitutes kinyan only where cohabitation is possible, but which is not the case with a child under the age mentioned.

(8) From which the ruling on which Rab and Samuel are in agreement may be inferred.

(9) She is deemed to be his legal wife,

(10) During her period of menstruation.

(11) If he lies on a number of couches (coverlets, bed-spreads, and the like) resting one upon the other, he imparts levitical defilement to all, though he comes in direct contact with the uppermost one only.

(12) A bastard, for instance,

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 58a

According to R. Meir who holds that the betrothal causes ineligibility, the bridal chamber¹ also causes ineligibility, while according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who maintain that betrothal causes no ineligibility the bridal chamber also causes no ineligibility. But whence [is this proved]? Is it not possible that R. Meir advanced his view only there, in respect of betrothal, whereby kinyan is effected, but not in respect of the bridal chamber whereby no kinyan is effected!² Or else: R. Eleazar and R. Simeon may have advanced their view there only, in respect of betrothal, since it is not close to the act of intercourse; but the bridal chamber which is close to the act of intercourse, may well cause ineligibility.

But if anything can be said³ [it is, that the question⁴ depends] on the dispute between the following Tannaim: For it was taught, 'This class or that, [viz.,] eligible or ineligible women, who were married [to a priest], or who only entered [with him] into the bridal chamber without any intercourse having taken place, are entitled to sustenance from his estate and are also permitted to eat terumah'. 'Who only entered [etc.]' implies that 'were married' means that they were actually married!⁵ Must it not [consequently be concluded that the meaning is], 'as, for instance,⁶ when they entered the bridal chamber without any intercourse having taken place'? And yet it was stated that 'they are entitled to sustenance from his estate and are also permitted to eat terumah'.⁷ R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: Any woman whose cohabitation entitles her to the eating of terumah is also entitled to the eating of it through her entry into the bridal chamber, and any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah is not entitled through her entry into the bridal chamber also to the eating of it.⁸

Whence, [however, the proof]? Is it not possible that R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka is of the same opinion as R. Meir, who maintains that through betrothal alone a woman is not entitled to eat! — Instead, then, of the statement 'Any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah is not entitled through her entry into the bridal chamber also to the eating of it', the statement should have run, 'Any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah, is not entitled through her money⁹ also to the eating of terumah'. But is it not possible that as the first Tanna spoke of the bridal chamber he also spoke of the bridal chamber!

R. Amram stated, The following ruling was given to us by R. Shesheth and he threw light on the subject¹⁰ from a Mishnah: The bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women.¹¹ And the following Tanna taught the same thing:¹² 'Amen¹³ that I¹⁴ have not gone aside¹⁵ as a betrothed, as a married woman, as one awaiting the decision of the levir or as one taken [by the levir]'.¹⁶ Now, how is one to imagine the case of the 'betrothed'? If it be suggested that she was one who was warned¹⁷ while she was betrothed, and then she secluded herself¹⁸ and is now made to drink¹⁹ while she is still only betrothed; is a betrothed [it may be asked] subject to the drinking? Surely we learned: A betrothed or one awaiting the decision of a levir neither drinks²⁰ nor receives a kethubah!²¹ Should it, however, [be suggested that she is one] who was warned while she was betrothed, and then she secluded herself,²² and is now made to drink when she is already married; do the waters [it may be asked] test her? Surely it was taught: And the man shall be clear from iniquity,²³ only when the man is 'clear from iniquity' do the waters test his wife; when, however, the man is not 'clear from iniquity'²⁴ the waters do not test his wife!²⁵ Consequently [she²⁶ must be one] who was warned while she was betrothed and then she secluded herself,²² and subsequently entered the bridal chamber but there was no cohabitation. Thus²⁷ it may be inferred that the bridal chamber alone constitutes kinyan²⁸ with ineligible women.²⁹ Said Raba: Do you think that this³⁰ is an authenticated statement?³¹ Surely when R. Aha b. Hanina³² arrived from the South, he came and brought a Baraitha with him: Besides thy husband,³³ only when the cohabitation of the husband preceded that of the adulterer, but not when the cohabitation of the adulterer preceded that of the husband! Rami b. Hama replied: This³⁴ is possible where, for instance, he³⁵ cohabited with her while she was only betrothed and still in the house of her father. Similarly in respect of the woman awaiting the decision of the levir³⁶ [it must obviously be a case] where the man cohabited with her in the house of her father-in-law!³⁷

(1) Even in the absence of betrothal.

(2) The bridal chamber alone without the additional kinyan of money, deed, or cohabitation is of no validity. V. Kid. 5a.

- (3) On the lines of Rami b. Hama's statement.
- (4) Whether the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women. (Cf. supra p. 385, nn. 11 and 13).
- (5) Otherwise both expressions would have meant exactly the same classes. But this meaning is impossible in view of the fact that after actual marriage it is unanimously agreed that the woman is ineligible to eat terumah!
- (6) I.e., the expression 'or', וְ is to be understood as the equivalent of 'as for instance' כְּגוֹן, and the clause following is an illustration of the preceding one.
- (7) Which proves that, even where the union was a forbidden one, the entry into the bridal chamber alone does not deprive a woman of the right of eating terumah if she was previously entitled to it.
- (8) If she was the daughter of an Israelite (v. Keth. 57a). As the bridal chamber and cohabitation are in this case placed on the same level, it follows that in the case of the daughter of a priest also, if she loses her right to the terumah by cohabitation, she also loses it by entry into the bridal chamber. Thus it has been shewn that the question referred to by Rami b. Hama is a matter of dispute between the first Tanna and R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Broka.

- (22) With the suspected man, during the period of her betrothal.
- (23) Num. V, 31.
- (24) As in this case where he married her, despite her intimacy with the suspected man during her betrothal which had caused her prohibition to him.
- (25) Sotah 28a, 47b, Shebu. 5a, Kid. 27b.
- (26) The betrothed spoken of,
- (27) Since the woman is subjected to the test of the water though no cohabitation had taken place.
- (28) In the absence of cohabitation. Had not the bridal chamber constituted the kinyan, which brought the woman within the category of marriage, she would not have been subject to the test to which a married woman only must submit. (Cf. Num. V, 19, being under thy husband).
- (29) Among whom the Sotah is, of course, included. Cf. supra n. 5.
- (30) The Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth.

- (33) Num. V, 20.
- (34) The Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth.
- (35) The husband.
- (36) Since in her case also the cohabitation of the levir must precede that of the adulterer. Alternatively: Since she also is not subject to the test of the water.
- (37) So that his cohabitation took place prior to that of the suspected adulterer, which was also preceded by the warning of the levir and followed by the bridal chamber but by no cohabitation; and the woman is submitted to the test of the water of bitterness in respect of her suspected act during her betrothal! Alternatively: Since in her case, unlike that of the betrothed, the kinyan of the bridal chamber is not applicable.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 58b

Why then, do you call her 'a woman awaiting the decision of the levir' [when such a woman] is in fact his proper wife, since Rab had stated, 'kinyan is constituted in all respects'?¹ — [The Mishnah is] in accordance with the view of Samuel who stated, 'Kinyan is constituted only in respect of the things specified in the section'.²

Is not this³ adduced only as a reason and support for the opinion of Rab?⁴ And Rab, surely, had said that 'Kinyan is constituted in all respects'⁵ — Here we are concerned with a case where for instance he⁶ addressed to her a ma'amar,⁷ and it³ represents the view of Beth Shammai who maintain that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan.⁸ If so, she would be identical with the 'betrothed woman'⁹ — And according to your view, has not a 'married woman' and 'one taken [by the levir]' the same status?¹⁰ But [the explanation must be that] 'a married woman' refers to one's own wife, and 'one taken [by the levir]' refers to that of another man.¹¹ So here also 'betrothed' means his own and 'a woman awaiting the decision of the levir', that of another.¹¹

R. Papa said: I¹² represents the view of the following Tanna.¹³ For it was taught: It is not permissible to warn a betrothed woman in order that she may be made to drink¹⁴ while she is betrothed. She may, however, be warned in order that she may be made to drink when she is already married.¹⁵ R. Nahman b. Isaac explained: By implication.¹⁶

R. Hanina sent [an instruction] in the name of R. Johanan: A levir who addressed a ma'amar to his yebamah, while he has a living brother, causes her disqualification from the eating of terumah¹⁷ even if he is a priest and she the daughter of a priest.¹⁸ According to whom?¹⁹ If it be suggested, according to R. Meir, it is possible [it might be objected that] R. Meir said that one that is subject to an illegitimate cohabitation²⁰ is not permitted to eat terumah [only when the cohabitation is] Pentateuchally forbidden;²¹ did he, however, say [that the same law holds when the prohibition is only] Rabbinical? [Is it], however, [suggested that it was made] according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon? [It may be objected]: If the eating of terumah is permitted to one who is subject to a cohabitation which is pentateuchally forbidden, is there any need to speak of one which is only Rabbinically forbidden! When Rabin, however, came²² he stated: Where a levir addressed a ma'amar to his yebamah, all²³ agree that she is permitted to eat terumah. If he has a profaned brother,²⁴ all²³ agree that she is not permitted to eat.²⁵ They only differ where he²⁶ gave her²⁷ a letter of divorce.²⁸ R. Johanan maintains that she may eat, and Resh Lakish maintains that she may not eat. 'R. Johanan maintains that she may eat', for even the statement of R. Meir who holds that she may not eat applies only to one subject of a Pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation; where, however, it is only Rabbinically forbidden she may eat. 'And Resh Lakish maintains that she may not eat' for even the statement of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, who hold that she may eat, applies only to one who has elsewhere the right²⁹ to confer the privilege of eating, but not in this case,³⁰ since he has no right³¹ to confer the privilege elsewhere. And should you suggest that here also he has the right³¹ to confer the privilege of eating in the case where she returns,³² [it may be retorted that] one who returns³² severs her connection with him and resumes her relationship with her father's house;³³ but this woman³⁴ remains bound to him.³⁵

IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED etc. R. Hiyya b. Joseph enquired of Samuel: If a High priest betrothed a minor, who became adolescent³⁶ during her betrothal with him,³⁷

(1) Supra 56a, and the woman is regarded as his wife even if the cohabitation was not intended to serve as a legal matrimonial kinyan.

(2) Cf. loc. cit. and notes.

(3) The Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth.

(4) Who, contrary to the opinion of Samuel, maintains that the bridal chamber does constitute kinyan with ineligible women (supra 57b).

(5) V. supra note 3.

(6) The levir.

(7) And then cohabited with her adulterously in her father-in-law's house, with no intention of effecting a legal kinyan. Alternatively: Only a ma'amar was addressed to her but no cohabitation at all took place. The cohabitation of the adulterer which, according to this interpretation, precedes that of the levir does not affect the legality of the water test since in any case the cohabitation of the first husband (the deceased brother) preceded.

(8) Supra 29b. The sister-in-law thus loses entirely her former status of 'widow of a deceased brother' and assumes that of a 'betrothed woman'. Subsequent intercourse with her unless accompanied by the entry into the bridal chamber does not, therefore, change her status, as is the case where no ma'amar had been addressed, to that of a married woman. Her description, consequently, can only be that of 'one awaiting the decision of the levir'.

(9) Whose case had been specifically mentioned. Why should the same law be mentioned twice?

(10) And both were nevertheless specified.

(11) I.e., his brother's widow whom he married.

(12) The Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth.

(13) It being a case where the warning was given during betrothal, and the seclusion with the man took place after marriage and cohabitation. The water test is applied on the basis of that warning. Alternatively: The warning was given during betrothal and it was followed by the seclusion with the man, the test being applied after marriage. The previously cited deduction, that when the husband is not clear from iniquity the test is not admissible, is not accepted by this authority.

(14) The water of bitterness.

(15) Sotah 25a. The man in such a case is clear from iniquity. No proof may consequently be adduced from the Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth that the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan. Alternatively: This Tanna does not accept the deduction in respect of the husband's clearness from iniquity. (V. supra n. 4, end).

(16) וְיִשָּׁבֵר, v. Kid. 27b. The oath the woman is made to take at the drinking of the water of bitterness in respect of the days of her betrothal is not a direct oath but one added to that which she takes in connection with a suspected act after her marriage.

(17) Until marriage had been consummated.

(18) Because (v. infra) his brother might cohabit with her and thus cause her prohibition to marry either of them (v. supra 50b).

(19) Was R. Johanan's statement made.

(20) As, e.g., in this case, where either brother might marry her, while the cohabitation of one of them is Rabbinically forbidden.

(21) E.g., a widow to a High Priest.

(22) From Palestine to Babylon.

(23) R. Johanan as well as Resh Lakish.

(24) Halal (v. Glos.) whose cohabitation would disqualify her.

(25) Even though she is the daughter of a priest and even where the ma'amar had been addressed to her by a qualified priest, she is forbidden to eat terumah, owing to her being subject at least to one Pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation. Even R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who allow terumah in the case of a widow to a High priest do not allow it here since, unlike the High Priest who in cases other than that of the widow and the like is entitled to confer the right, the halal can never confer such a privilege upon anyone.

(26) A levir who was a priest.

(27) His yebamah who was the daughter of a priest.

(28) Which Rabbinically causes her prohibition to the levir, while Pentateuchally she is still awaiting cohabitation with him. She is thus awaiting a cohabitation which is Rabbinically forbidden.

(29) Through a similar act of betrothal.

(30) Where a letter of divorce was given.

(31) By means of a similar act of divorce.

(32) To the house of her father, if she was the daughter of a priest. Cf. Lev. XXII, 13.

(33) Her regaining the privilege of eating terumah is due to her relationship not with him but with her father's family.

(34) To whom the letter of divorce was given.

(35) Since a letter of divorce does not sever the levirate bond.

(36) בגרה v. infra p. 394 n. 7; perhaps of advanced age, when she is no more in possession of her full virgin powers (cf. Golds. a.l.). Such a woman is forbidden to a High priest by deduction from Lev. XXI, 13 And he shall take a wife in her virginity.

(37) Lit., 'under him'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 59a

what [is the law]:¹ Are we guided by the marriage² or by the betrothal?³ — The other replied to him: You have learned it: IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE THEY REMAIN INELIGIBLE; IF AFTER BETROTHAL THEY BECOME ELIGIBLE.⁴ The first said to him: With reference to rendering her a halalah,⁵ I have no doubt that it is the forbidden cohabitation⁶ that causes her to be a halalah. My question is only: What is implied by, And he shall take a wife in her virginity:⁷ Is the 'taking' of betrothal required,⁸ or is it the 'taking' of marriage that is required?⁹ The other replied, You have learned this also: [A priest who] betrothed a widow, and was subsequently appointed to be a High Priest, may consummate the marriage!¹⁰ — There it is different because it is written, Shall he take to wife.¹¹ Here also it is written wife!¹² — Only one¹³ but not two. And what is the reason?¹⁴ — In the case of the one,¹⁵ her body has undergone a change;¹⁶ in that of the other her body underwent no change.

MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST SHALL NOT MARRY A WIDOW¹⁷ WHETHER SHE BECAME A WIDOW AFTER A BETROTHAL OR AFTER A MARRIAGE. HE SHALL NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT.¹⁸ R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON PERMIT HIM TO MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT,¹⁸ BUT HE MAY NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS WOUNDED.¹⁹

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: A widow . . . shall he not take,¹⁷ whether she became a widow after a betrothal or after a marriage. Is not this obvious?²⁰ — It might have been assumed that [the meaning of] widow²¹ is to be inferred from widow²² in the case of Tamar; as there²² it was one after marriage, so here²¹ also it is one after marriage; hence we were taught [that any widow was meant]. But might it not be suggested that it is indeed so?²³ — [It is compared] to a divorced woman:²⁴ As 'divorced woman'²⁴ [includes any divorcee] whether after betrothal or after marriage,²⁵ so also 'widow'²⁴ [includes any widow] whether after betrothal or after marriage.

HE SHALL NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT. Our Rabbis taught: And he shall take a wife in her virginity²⁶ excludes one who is adolescent, whose virginity is ended; so R. Meir. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon permit the marriage of one who is adolescent. On what principle do they differ? — R. Meir is of the opinion that virgin²⁷ implies even [one who retains] some of her virginity; her virginity²⁸ implies only one who retains all her virginity;²⁹ in her virginity³⁰ implies only [when previous intercourse with her took place] in the natural manner,³¹ but not when in an unnatural manner.³² R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, however, are of the opinion that virgin would have implied a perfect virgin; her virginity implies even [one who retains] only part of her virginity;³³ in her virginity implies only one whose entire virginity is intact,³⁴ irrespective of whether [previous intercourse with her was] of a natural or unnatural character.³⁵

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: A woman who was subjected to unnatural intercourse is disqualified from marrying a priest.³⁶ Raba raised an objection: And she shall be his wife,³⁷ applies to a woman eligible to marry him. This excludes [the marriage of] a widow³⁸ to a High Priest,³⁹ of a divorced woman³⁸ and a haluzah³⁸ to a common priest. Now, how is one to understand [the outrage]?⁴⁰ If it be suggested that it was one of natural intercourse, what [it may be asked] was the object of pointing to her widowhood⁴¹ when [her prohibition] could be inferred from the fact that she had had carnal intercourse with a man?⁴² Must it not consequently [be assumed to be] a case of unnatural intercourse; and the only reason⁴³ [why the woman is forbidden⁴⁴ is] because she is a widow, and not because she had had carnal intercourse!⁴⁵

- (1) May he marry her despite her advanced age?
- (2) When she was already of age and consequently forbidden to him.
- (3) When she was still permitted.
- (4) From which it appears that, in respect of those who are ineligible to marry priests, marriage is the main factor. Had not the marriage to be taken into consideration a widow, for instance, who was betrothed to a High Priest would also be ineligible after his death.
- (5) 'Profaned' and forbidden to a priest.
- (6) I.e., the consummation of marriage.
- (7) Lev. XXI, 13.
- (8) And as at that time she was eligible he may now marry her.
- (9) As by that time she is already forbidden, he may not marry her, despite their permitted betrothal.
- (10) Infra 61a, which proves that betrothal is the main factor.
- (11) Lev. XXI, 14. From the superfluous word wife it is deduced (v. infra 61a) that in the case mentioned the High Priest may consummate the marriage. This, however, supplies no answer to the question under consideration.
- (12) Lev. XXI, 13.
- (13) Deduction may be made from the term 'wife'.
- (14) Lit., 'what do you see'? Why should the deduction be made to permit the marriage of the widow to a High Priest and not that of the minor who became adolescent?
- (15) The minor who became of age.
- (16) And she may, therefore, be regarded as a different person.
- (17) V. Lev. XXI, 14.
- (18) בונרת, one over twelve years and six months of age. Cf. supra p. 393, n. 5.
- (19) מוכת עץ lit., 'struck by wood', one who lost her hymen as the result of a blow.
- (20) The expression widow surely does not imply any distinction between the one and the other!
- (21) Spoken of in connection with a High Priest (Lev. XXI, 14).
- (22) Gen. XXXVIII, 11.
- (23) That only one after marriage was meant, as in the case of Tamar.
- (24) Spoken of in the same context in connection with a High Priest (Lev. XXI, 14).
- (25) So Yalkut. Cur. edd. reverse the order.
- (26) Lev. XXI, 13.
- (27) בתולה .
- (28) בתוליה .
- (29) Which excludes the one who is adolescent, whose virginity has ended.
- (30) בבתוליה , (Lev. XXI, 13).
- (31) Is she forbidden to a High Priest.
- (32) The superfluous ב (= in), in בבתוליה excludes unnatural intercourse, whereby 'virginity' is not affected.
- (33) Which includes the one who is adolescent.
- (34) Is permitted to be married by a High priest.
- (35) Even if it was unnatural she is forbidden, unless her virginity remained completely intact. Cf. supra n. 7. As, according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, one who is adolescent is permitted it was necessary to have the Scriptural text to exclude this case. According to R. Meir, however, who excludes one who is adolescent, there is no need any more to exclude this case which is easily inferred a minori ad majus from the former.
- (36) I.e., a High Priest who is permitted to marry a virgin only.
- (37) Deut. XXII, 29, referring to a virgin who had been outraged.
- (38) After her betrothal.
- (39) If it was he who committed the outrage.
- (40) If committed by a High Priest.
- (41) Lit., 'on account of widow'.
- (42) With the High Priest himself, who is forbidden to marry an outraged or seduced woman even if he himself had committed the offence.

(43) Lit., 'yes'.

(44) To the High Priest.

(45) Which proves that unnatural intercourse does not cause a woman to be forbidden to marry a High Priest. How then could Rab state that a woman in such circumstances is forbidden?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 59b

— This¹ represents the view of² R. Meir,³ while Rab holds the same view as R. Eleazar.⁴ If [Rab holds the same view] as R. Eleazar, what was the object of pointing to her previous carnal intercourse⁵ when [her prohibition] could have been inferred from the fact that she was a harlot,⁶ R. Eleazar having stated that an unmarried man who cohabited with an unmarried woman with no matrimonial intention renders her thereby a harlot!⁷ — R. Joseph replied:⁸ When, for instance, the woman was subjected to intercourse with a beast, where the reason of 'previous carnal intercourse may be applied but not that of harlot.'⁹ Said Abaye to him: Whatever you prefer [your reply cannot be upheld], If she is a be'ulah¹⁰ she must also be a harlot; and if she is not a harlot¹¹ she cannot be a be'ulah either! And were you to reply: This case is similar to that of a wounded woman,¹² [it may be pointed out] that if [the disqualification should be extended to] unnatural intercourse also,¹³ you will find no woman eligible to marry a [High Priest [since there is not one] who has not been in some way wounded¹⁴ by a splinter! No, said R. Zera,¹⁵ in respect of a minor who made a declaration of refusal.¹⁶

R. Shimi b. Hiyya stated: A woman who had intercourse with a beast is eligible to marry a priest.¹⁷ Likewise it was taught: A woman who had intercourse with that which is no human being,¹⁸ though she is in consequence subject to the penalty of stoning,¹⁹ is nevertheless permitted to marry a priest.²⁰

When R. Dimi came²¹ he related: It once happened at Haitalu²² that while a young woman was sweeping the floor²³ a village dog²⁴ covered her from the rear,²⁵ and Rabbi permitted her to marry a priest. Samuel said: Even a High Priest. But was there a High Priest in the days of Rabbi?²⁶ — Rather, [Samuel meant]: Fit for a High Priest.

Raba of Parzakaia²⁷ said to R. Ashi: Whence is derived the following statement which the Rabbis made: Harlotry is not applicable to bestial intercourse? — It is written, Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot, or the price of a dog,²⁸ and yet we learned that the hire of a dog²⁹ and the price of a harlot³⁰ are permitted³¹ because it is said, Even both these,²⁸ two only but not four.

Our Rabbis taught: [A High Priest] shall not marry the woman he himself has outraged or seduced.³² If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid.³³ He shall not marry a woman whom another man has outraged or seduced. If he did marry her, the child, said R. Eliezer b. Jacob, is profaned:³⁴ but the Sages said: The child is legitimate.³⁵

'If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid'. Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: But he must put her aside by a letter of divorce. What, then, [is the explanation] of the statement 'If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid'? — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: It was meant to imply that he pays no fine¹ in the case of a seduced woman.²

R. Gebiha of *Be Kathi*³ came and repeated the reported ruling⁴ in the presence of R. Ashi, whereupon the other said to him: Surely both Rab and R. Johanan stated '[a High Priest] must not marry a woman who is adolescent⁵ or "wounded",⁶ but if he married her, the marriage is valid', which clearly proves [that he may continue to live with the woman because in any case] she would ultimately have become adolescent and would ultimately have been 'wounded' by living with⁷ him; here also⁸ [she should be permitted to live with him because] ultimately she would have become a be'ulah by living with⁷ him! — This is a difficulty.

'He shall not marry a woman whom another man has outraged or seduced. If he did marry her, the child, said *R. Eliezer*⁹ b. Jacob, is profaned; but the Sages said: The child is fit'.¹⁰ Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob; and so said R. Giddal in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob. Others say: R. Huna stated in the name of Rab. What is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's reason?¹¹ — He is of the same opinion as R.

Eleazar.¹² But is the former of the same opinion as the latter? Surely we have an established tradition that ‘the teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity, but select’,¹³ while in this case R. Amram¹⁴ stated that the halachah is not in accordance with R. Eleazar!¹⁵ — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi explained: They¹⁶ differ [on the question whether the offspring] of a union forbidden by a positive commandment¹⁷ is deemed to be a halal. R. Eliezer b. Jacob is of the opinion [that the offspring] of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is deemed to be a halal while the Rabbis are of the opinion that the offspring of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is no halal. What is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's reason? — Because it is written, ‘A widow, or one divorced, or a profaned woman, or a harlot, these shall he not take,’ but a virgin etc.,¹⁸ and this is followed by the Scriptural injunction, ‘And he shall not profane¹⁹ his seed among his people,²⁰ which refers to all.²¹ And the Rabbis?²² — [By the expression] these¹⁸ the context is broken up.²³ But R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintains that the expression, these,¹⁸ serves the purpose of excluding the menstruant.²⁴

Whose view is represented in the following statement wherein it was taught: [Only the offspring] of these²⁵ is to be regarded a halal but no offspring of a menstruant is to be deemed a halal.²⁶ — Whose view? That of R. Eliezer b. Jacob. But on the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, the expression these²⁶ should have been written at the end!²⁷ — This is a difficulty.²⁸

Our Rabbis taught: For a betrothed sister,²⁹ R. Meir and R. Judah said, [a common priest]³⁰ may defile himself.³¹ R. Jose and R. Simeon said: He may not defile himself for her. For [a sister who was] outraged or seduced, all agree that he may not defile himself.³¹ As to one ‘wounded’,³² R. Simeon says he may not defile himself for her; for R. Simeon maintains that he may defile himself for one who is fit for a High Priest,³³ but he may not defile himself for one who is not fit for a High Priest.³⁴ For one who is adolescent, all agree³⁵ that he may defile himself.³⁶

What is R. Meir's and R. Judah's reason? — They make the following exposition: And for his sister a virgin,³⁷ excludes one who had been outraged or seduced.³⁸ It might be assumed that one who was ‘wounded’ is also to be excluded.³⁹ Hence it was specifically stated, ‘That hath had no husband,³⁷ only she whose condition is due to a man [is excluded]³⁹ but not one⁴⁰ whose condition is not due to a man. That is near,³⁷ includes a betrothed [sister]; unto him,³⁷ includes a sister who is adolescent.

What need was there for a Scriptural text in this case?⁴¹ Surely R. Meir stated, ‘virgin implies even [one who retains] some of her virginity’!⁴² — It was required, because it might have been assumed that the expression of virgin⁴³ shall be deduced from virgin elsewhere;⁴⁴ as there it refers to a na'arah⁴⁵ only, so here also it refers to a na'arah⁴⁵ only, hence we were taught [that the case here is different]. And what are the reasons of R. Jose and R. Simeon? — They make the following exposition: And for his sister a virgin,⁴³ excludes one who has been outraged, seduced or wounded;⁴⁶ that hath had no,⁴³ excludes one who is betrothed; that is near,⁴³ includes a betrothed who had been divorced; unto him,⁴³ includes one who is adolescent. ‘That is near, includes a betrothed who had been divorced’;

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 60b

but, surely, R. Simeon said, 'He may defile himself for one who is fit for a High Priest, but may not defile himself for one who is not fit for a High Priest'!¹ — There² it is different, because the All Merciful has included her [by the expression] near.³ If so, the 'wounded' also should be included! — Near³ implies one and not two. And what [reason for this]⁴ do you see? — To the body of the one something had been done while to that of the other nothing had been done.

As to R. Jose, since his colleague⁵ had left him,⁶ it may be inferred that in respect of the 'wounded', he himself is of the same opinion as R. Meir.⁷ Whence, however, does he derive it? — From That hath had no man. But deduction,⁸ surely, had already been made⁹ from this text! — One⁸ is deduced from That hath had no and the other¹⁰ from man.¹¹

"Unto him", includes one who is adolescent'. But surely R. Simeon stated that 'virgin' implied a perfect virgin!¹² — His reason there is also derived from here, because he makes the following exposition: since [the Scriptural text], 'unto him', was required to include one who is adolescent, it is to be inferred that 'virgin' implies a perfect virgin.

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai stated: A proselyte who is under the age of three years and one day is permitted to marry a priest,¹³ for it is said, But all the women children that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves¹⁴, and Phinehas¹⁵ surely was with them. And the Rabbis?¹⁶ — [These were kept alive] as bondmen and bondwomen.¹⁷ If so,¹⁸ a proselyte whose age is three years and one day¹⁹ should also be permitted! — [The prohibition is to be explained] in accordance with R. Huna. For R. Huna pointed out a contradiction: It is written, Kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him,²⁰ but if she hath not known, save her alive; from this it may be inferred that children are to be kept alive whether they have known or have not known [a man]; and, on the other hand, it is also written, But all the women children, that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves,¹⁴ but do not spare them if they have known. Consequently²¹ it must be said that Scripture speaks of one who is fit²² for cohabitation.²³

It was also taught likewise: And every woman that hath known man,²⁰ Scripture speaks of one who is fit²³ for cohabitation. You say, 'Of one who is fit for cohabitation'; perhaps it is not so but of one who had actual intercourse? — As Scripture stated, But all women children, that have not known man by lying with him,²⁴ it must be concluded that Scripture speaks of one who is fit for cohabitation.²³

Whence did they know?²⁵ — R. Hana²⁶ b. Bizna replied in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: They were made to pass before the frontplate.²⁷ If the face of anyone turned pale²⁸ it was known that she was fit for cohabitation; if it did not turn pale²⁸ it was known that she was unfit for cohabitation.

R. Nahman said: Dropsy is a manifestation of lewdness.

Similarly, it is said, And they found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead four hundred young virgins, that had not known man by lying with him;²⁹ whence did they know it?³⁰ R. Kahana replied: They made them sit upon the mouth of a wine-cask. [Through anyone who had] had previous intercourse, the odour penetrated; through a virgin, its odour did not penetrate. They should have been made to pass before the frontplate!³¹ — R. Kahana son of R. Nathan replied: It is written, for acceptance,³² for acceptance but not for punishment. If so, the same should have applied at Midian also!³³ R. Ashi replied: It is written, 'unto them', implying unto them³⁴ for acceptance but not for punishment; unto idolaters,³⁵ however, even for punishment.³⁶

R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Yohai.³⁷ Said R. Zera to R. Jacob b. Idi: Did you hear this³⁷ explicitly or did you learn it by a deduction? What [could be the] deduction? — As R. Joshua b. Levi related: There was a certain town in the Land of Israel the legitimacy of whose inhabitants was disputed, and Rabbi sent R. Romanos who conducted an enquiry and found in it the daughter of a proselyte who was under the age of three years and one day,³⁸ and Rabbi declared her eligible to live with a priest.³⁹ The other⁴⁰ replied:⁴¹ I heard it explicitly. And what [matters it] if it⁴² was learned by deduction?⁴³ — It is possible that there⁴⁴ it was different; since the marriage had already taken place he sanctioned it; for, indeed, both Rab and R. Johanan stated: A priest may not marry one who is adolescent or 'wounded', but if already married, he may continue to live with her. How now! There it is quite correct [to sanction the marriage since in any case] she would ultimately become adolescent while she⁴⁵ will be with him,⁴⁶ and she would also ultimately become a be'ulah while with him;⁴⁶ but here, would she ultimately become a harlot⁴⁷ while with him?⁴⁸ R. Safra taught [that he⁴⁰ arrived at it]⁴² by deduction, and, having raised the difficulty,⁴⁹ answered it in the same way.⁵⁰

A certain priest married a proselyte who was under the age of three years and one day. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him: What [do you mean by] this?⁵¹ — The other replied: Because R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi that the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Yohai.⁵² 'Go', the first said, 'and arrange for her release, or else I will pull R. Jacob b. Idi out of your ear'.⁵³

It was taught: And so did R. Simeon b. Yohai state that the graves of idolaters do not impart levitical uncleanness by an ohel,¹ for it is said, And ye My sheep the sheep of My pasture, are men;² you are called men³ but the idolaters are not called men.³

An objection was raised: And the persons were sixteen thousand!⁴ — This is due to [the mention of] cattle.⁵ Wherein are more than six-score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right and their left hand!⁶ — This is due [to the mention of] cattle.⁷ Whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify yourselves!⁸ — One of the Israelites might have been slain. And the Rabbis?⁹ — [Scripture states]. There lacketh not one man of us.¹⁰ And R. Simeon b. Yohai? — There lacketh not one man of us, through indulgence in sin.

Rabina replied: Granted that Scripture excluded them¹¹ from imparting uncleanness through an ohel,¹² because of the written text, When a man dieth in the tent,¹³ did Scripture also exclude them from [imparting uncleanness by] touch and carriage?¹⁴

MISHNAH. [A PRIEST WHO] BETROTHED A WIDOW, AND WAS SUBSEQUENTLY APPOINTED HIGH PRIEST, MAY CONSUMMATE THE MARRIAGE. IT ONCE HAPPENED WITH JOSHUA B. GAMALA THAT HE BETROTHED MARTHA THE DAUGHTER OF BOETHUS, AND THE KING APPOINTED HIM HIGH PRIEST, AND HE, NEVERTHELESS, CONSUMMATED THE MARRIAGE.

IF ONE AWAITING THE DECISION OF THE LEVIR¹⁵ BECAME SUBJECT TO A COMMON PRIEST WHO WAS SUBSEQUENTLY APPOINTED HIGH PRIEST, [THE LATTER], THOUGH HE ALREADY ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, MUST NOT CONSUMMATE THE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Whence is it deduced that [a priest] who betrothed a widow and was afterwards appointed High Priest may consummate the marriage? It is specifically stated in Scripture, Shall he take to wife.¹⁶ If so, [the same law should apply to] a yebamah awaiting the decision of the levir also! — A 'wife' but not a yebamah.

IT ONCE HAPPENED TO JOSHUA etc. He APPOINTED HIM¹⁷ but he was not elected!¹⁸ Said R. Joseph: I see here a conspiracy;¹⁹ for R. Assi, in fact, related that Martha the daughter of Boethus brought to King Jannai²⁰ a tarkab²¹ of denarii before he gave an appointment to Joshua b. Gamala among the High Priests.²²

MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST WHOSE BROTHER DIED²³ MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²⁴

GEMARA. He lays down a general rule implying²⁵ that there is no difference whether [the yebamah became a widow] after betrothal or after marriage! One can well understand [the case of the widow] after marriage, [since marriage with her is forbidden by] a positive²⁶ as well as by a negative commandment,²⁷ and no positive commandment²⁸ may override a negative and a positive commandment;²⁹ but [in the case of a widow] after betrothal, the positives should override the negative commandment!³⁰ — The first act of cohabitation³¹ was forbidden as a preventive measure against the second act of cohabitation.³²

MISHNAH. A COMMON PRIEST SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION,³³ UNLESS HE HAD ALREADY A WIFE³⁴ OR CHILDREN.³⁵ R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN THOUGH HE HAS HAD A WIFE AND CHILDREN HE SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, SINCE SUCH³⁶ [IS INCLUDED IN THE TERM OF] HARLOT MENTIONED IN THE TORAH.³⁷ BUT THE SAGES SAID: THE TERM HARLOT IMPLIES ONLY A FEMALE PROSELYTE,³⁸ FREED BONDMAID³⁸ AND ONE WHO HAS BEEN SUBJECTED TO MERETRICIOUS INTERCOURSE. GEMARA. Said the Exilarch³⁹ to R. Huna: What is the reason?⁴⁰ Obviously because of the duty of the propagation of the race; are, then, only priests commanded concerning the propagation of the race while Israelites are not commanded?⁴¹ The other replied:⁴² Because it was desired to state in the final clause, R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN THOUGH HE HAS HAD A WIFE

(2) Ezek. XXXIV, 31.

(3) אָדָם (Adam), in respect of levitical uncleanness by ohel. The expression אָדָם is also used in the Pentateuchal text dealing with the laws of the uncleanness of objects found in a tent in which lay a corpse. V. Num, XIX, 14ff. [This is held by R. Simeon b. Yohai to denote, as distinct from the other terms for 'man' (אִישׁ , גֵּבֵר , אָנוּשׁ), only an Israelite who, as a worshipper of the true God, can be said to have been like Adam created in the image of God. (Cf. Gen. I, 27 and V, I, where the Heb. text has in each case Adam for 'man'). Idol worshippers having marred the Divine image forfeit all claim to this appellation. V. also B.M. Sonc. ed. p. 651, n. 6].

(4) Num. XXXI, 40. Here also the Heb. equivalent for persons is אָדָם though it refers to the Midianites who were idolaters.

(5) V, ibid. 37ff. In contrast to cattle, idolaters also may be described as Adam (men).

(6) Jonah IV, 11. Cur, edd. add in parentheses 'and much cattle', Here also אָדָם is the original word rendered persons, though it refers to the idolaters of Nineveh.

(7) The conclusion of the verse reads, and also much cattle. Cf, supra n. 4.

(8) Num. XXXI, 19, speaking of the slain Midianites; which proves that the corpses of idolaters also impart levitical uncleanness!

(9) How could they infer from this text that idolaters also impart levitical uncleanness?

(40) Why a priest may not marry a woman incapable of procreation?

(41) Why then was only the priest mentioned?

(42) Priest only had to be mentioned.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 61b

AND CHILDREN HE SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, SINCE SUCH [IS INCLUDED IN THE TERM OF] HARLOT MENTIONED IN THE TORAH. Since priests only were commanded concerning the harlot while Israelites were not so commanded, therefore PRIEST only was mentioned.

Said R. Huna: What is R. Judah's reason? — Since it is written, And they shall eat, and not have enough, they shall commit harlotry and shall not increase,¹ any cohabitation which results in no increase is nothing but meretricious intercourse.

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, A priest shall not marry a minor. Said R. Hisda to Rabbah: Go and consider this matter,² for in the evening R. Huna will question you on the subject. When he went out he considered the point [and came to the conclusion that] R. Eliezer was of the same opinion as R. Meir and also of the same Opinion as R. Judah. 'He is of the same opinion as R. Meir' who takes exceptional cases³ into consideration;⁴ and 'also of the same opinion as R. Judah', who holds that a woman incapable of procreation is regarded as a harlot.⁵ But does he⁶ hold the same opinion as R. Meir? Surely it was taught: A minor, whether male or female, may neither perform, nor submit to halizah, nor contract levirate marriage; so R; Meir. They said to R. Meir: You spoke well [when you ruled], may neither perform, nor submit to halizah', since in the Pentateuchal section⁷ man was written,⁸ and we also draw a comparison between woman and man.⁹ What, however, is the reason why they may not contract levirate marriage? He replied: Because a minor male might be found to be a saris;¹⁰ a minor female might be found to be incapable of procreation; and thus the law of incest would be violated.¹¹ And it was also taught: A minor female may contract the levirate marriage¹² but may not perform halizah;¹³ so R. Eliezer!¹⁴

And does he hold the same opinion as R. Judah? Surely it was taught: Zonah¹⁵ implies, as her name [indicates, a faithless wife];¹⁶ so R. Eliezer. R. Akiba said: Zonah implies one who is a prostitute.¹⁷ R. Mathia b. Heresh said: Even a woman whose husband, while going¹⁸ to arrange for her drinking,¹⁹ cohabited with her on the way,²⁰ is rendered a zonah. R. Judah said: Zonah implies one who is incapable of procreation.²¹ And the Sages said: Zonah is none other than a female proselyte, a freed bondwoman, and one who has been subjected to any meretricious intercourse. R. Eleazar²² said: An unmarried man who had intercourse with an unmarried woman, with no matrimonial intent, renders her thereby a zonah!²³ No, said R. Adda b. Ahabah, the reference here²⁴ is to²⁵ a High Priest. For when does he acquire her [as his lawful wife]? Only when she grows up,²⁶ but, then, she is already a be'ulah.²⁷ Said Raba:²⁸ What thoughtlessness!²⁹ If her father had arranged her betrothal, then [the High Priest] would have acquired her from that very moment,³⁰ and if she herself had accepted the betrothal, is this³¹ then the view of R. Eliezer only³² and not that of the Rabbis!³³ No, explained Raba, it³⁴ refers indeed to a common priest, but [the prohibition to marry the minor] is a precaution against the possibility of her seduction³⁵ while living with him. If so, [the same should apply to] an Israelite also! — The seduction of a minor is regarded as an outrage, and an outraged woman is permitted in the case of an Israelite.³⁶ R. Papa replied: [It³⁴ speaks] of a High Priest, and it represents the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: A virgin;³⁷ as one might assume it to mean a minor, it was explicitly stated wife. If only 'wife' [had been written], it might have been assumed to mean one who is adolescent,³⁸ hence it was explicitly stated, 'a virgin'. How, then [is the text to be understood]? One who has emerged from her minority but has not yet attained adolescence.³⁹

R. Nahman b. Isaac explained.⁴⁰ It is the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: A virgin;³⁷ the only meaning of 'virgin' is damsel;⁴¹ and so it is said in Scripture, And the damsel⁴² was very fair to look upon, a virgin.⁴³ 'R. Eleazar said: An unmarried man who had intercourse with an unmarried woman, with no matrimonial intent, renders her thereby a zonah.' R. Amram said: The halachah is not in agreement with the opinion of R. Eleazar.

MISHNAH. A MAN SHALL NOT ABSTAIN FROM THE PERFORMANCE OF THE DUTY OF THE PROPAGATION OF THE RACE⁴⁴ UNLESS HE ALREADY HAS CHILDREN. [AS TO THE NUMBER]. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: TWO MALES, AND BETH HILLEL RULED: MALE AND A FEMALE, FOR IT IS STATED IN SCRIPTURE, MALE AND FEMALE CREATED HE THEM.⁴⁵

GEMARA. [This implies] if he has children, he may abstain from performing the duty of propagation but not from that of living with a wife.⁴⁶ This provides support for a statement R. Nahman made in the name of Samuel who ruled that although a man may have many children he must not remain without a wife, for it is said in the Scriptures, It is not good that the man should be alone.⁴⁷

Others read: [This⁴⁸ implies] if he has children he may abstain from performing the duty of propagation and also from that of living with a wife. May it, then, be said that this presents an objection against the statement R. Nahman made in the name of Samuel?⁴⁹ — No; if he has no children he must marry a woman capable of procreation; and if he has children he may marry a woman who is incapable of procreation. What is the practical difference?⁵⁰ — In respect of selling a Scroll of the Law for the sake of children.⁵¹ BETH SHAMMAI RULED: TWO MALES. What is Beth Shammai's reason? We make an inference from Moses, in connection with whom it is written, The sons of Moses: Gershom and Eliezer.⁵² And Beth Hillel? — We infer from the creation of the world. Let Beth Shammai also infer from the creation of the world! — The possible cannot be inferred from the impossible.¹ Let Beth Hillel, then, make the inference from Moses! — They can answer you: Moses did it with His consent.² For it was taught: Moses did three things on his own initiative and his opinion coincided with that of the Omnipresent. He separated himself from his wife,³ broke the Tables of Testimony⁴ and added one day.⁵

‘He separated himself from his wife’; what exposition did he make?⁶ — He said, ‘If to the Israelites, with whom the Shechinah spoke only for a while and for whom a definite time was fixed, the Torah nevertheless said, Come not near a woman,⁷ how much more so to me, who am liable to be spoken to at any moment and for whom no definite time has been fixed’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent; for it is said, Go say to them: Return ye to your tents; but as for thee, stand thou here by Me.⁸

‘He broke the Tables of Testimony’; what exposition did he make?⁶ — He said, ‘If of the Paschal lamb, which is only one of the six hundred and thirteen commandments, the Torah said, There shall no alien eat thereof,⁹ how much more should this apply to the entire Torah when all Israel are apostates’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent; for it is written, Which thou didst break¹⁰ and Resh Lakish explained: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses, ‘I thank you for breaking them’.¹¹

‘He added one day’ on his own initiative. What exposition did he make?¹² — ‘As it is written, And sanctify them to-day and to-morrow¹³ [It implies that] to-day shall be the same as to-morrow; as to-morrow includes the previous night¹⁴ so to-day must include the previous night. As, however, to-day's previous night has already passed away,¹⁵ it must be inferred that two days exclusive of to-day must be observed’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent, for the Revelation did not take place¹⁶ before the Sabbath.¹⁷

It was taught: R. Nathan stated: Beth Shammai ruled: Two males and two females;¹⁸ and Beth Hillel ruled: A male and a female.¹⁸ Said R. Huna: What is the reason which R. Nathan assigns for the opinion of Beth Shammai? Because it is written, And again she bore his brother Abel¹⁹ [which²⁰ implies:] Abel and his sister; Cain and his sister.²¹ And it is also written, For God hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel;²² for Cain slew him.²³ And the Rabbis? She was merely expressing her gratitude.²⁴

Elsewhere it was taught: R. Nathan stated that Beth Shammai ruled: A male and a female;²⁵ and Beth Hillel ruled: Either a male or a female.²⁵

Said Raba: What is the reason which R. Nathan assigns for the view of Beth Hillel? — Because it is said, He created it not a waste, He formed it to be inhabited,²⁶ and he²⁷ has obviously helped it to be inhabited.

It was stated: If a man had children while he was an idolater and then he became a proselyte, he has fulfilled, R. Johanan said, the duty of propagation of the race; and Resh Lakish said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation of the race. ‘R. Johanan said: He has fulfilled the duty of propagation’, since he had children. ‘And Resh Lakish said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation’ because one who became a proselyte is like a child newly born.

And they²⁸ follow their views.²⁹ For it was stated: If a man had children while he was an idolater and then he became a proselyte, he has, R. Johanan said, no firstborn in respect of inheritance,³⁰ since he already had³¹ the first-fruits of his strength.³² Resh Lakish, however, said: He has a firstborn son in respect of inheritance, for a man who became a proselyte is like a child newly born.

And [both statements³³ were] necessary. For if the first only had been stated [it might have been assumed that] only in that state- ment did R. Johanan maintain his view, since formerly he³⁴ was also subject to the obligation of propagation,³⁵ but in respect of inherit- ance, since [the proselyte's former children] are not entitled to heirship, it might have been presumed that he agrees with Resh Lakish. And were only the second stated [it might have been assumed that] only in that did Resh Lakish maintain his view but that in the former he agrees with R. Johanan. [Hence both were] necessary.

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish. At that time Berodach-baladan the son of Baladan, King of Babylon etc.³⁶ — The other replied: While they are idolaters they have legally recognized ancestry, but when they become proselytes they have no longer any legally recognized ancestry.

Rab³⁷ said: All agree that a slave has no legally recognized relatives, since it is written, Abide ye here with³⁸ the ass,³⁹ people who are like the ass.⁴⁰

An objection was raised: Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants!⁴¹ — R. Aba b. Jacob replied: Like a young bullock.⁴² If so, [the same reply could be given] there also!⁴³ — There it is different, since Scripture mentioned his⁴⁴ own name as well as his father's⁴⁵ name, while here⁴⁶ [the son's names] were not specified. If you prefer I might say: They⁴⁷ were elsewhere ascribed to their father and their father's father; as it is written, And King Asa sent them to Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimmon, the son of Hezion, the King of Aram, that dwelt at Damascus, saying.⁴⁸

It was stated: If a man had children and they died, he has fulfilled, said R. Huna, the duty of propagation. R. Johanan said: He has not fulfilled it. 'R. Huna said: He fulfilled' because [he follows the tradition] of R. Assi. For R. Assi⁴⁹ stated: The Son of David⁵⁰ will not come before all the souls in Guf⁵¹ will have been disposed of, since it is said, For the spirit that unwrappeth itself is from Me etc.⁵² And 'R. Johanan said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation' because we require [the fulfilment of the text] He formed it to be inhabited,⁵³ which is not the case here.⁵⁴ An objection was raised:

(54) The children being dead.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 62b

Grandchildren are like children!¹ — This was taught only in respect of supplementing.²

An objection was raised: Grandchildren are like children. If one of them died or was found to be a saris³ the father has not fulfilled the duty of propagation.⁴ Is not this a refutation against R. Huna?⁵ — It is indeed a refutation.

'Grandchildren are like children'. Abaye intended to say: A grandson for a son and a granddaughter for a daughter, and certainly a grandson for a daughter; but not a granddaughter for a son.⁶ But Raba said to him: We only require [the fulfilment of the text] He formed it to be inhabited,⁷ which is the case here.

All, at any rate, agree⁸ that two children of one⁹ are not sufficient. But [are they] not? The Rabbis surely said to R. Shesheth,¹⁰ 'Marry a wife and beget children', and he answered them, 'My daughters' children are mine'! — There he was merely putting them off, because R. Shesheth became impotent owing to the long discourses of R. Huna.¹¹

Said Rabbah to Raba b. Mari: Whence the statement made by the Rabbis that grandchildren are like children? If it be suggested that it is deduced from the Scriptural text, The daughters are my daughters and the children are my children,¹² would then [it may be objected] the same [meaning be given to the text] And the flocks are my flocks?¹² But [the meaning there is obviously] 'which you have acquired from me', so here also [the meaning may be], 'which you have acquired from me'! The deduction is rather made from the following:¹³ And afterwards Hezron went to the daughter of Machir the father of Gilead; . . . and she bore him Segub,¹⁴ and it is also written, Out of Machir came down lawgivers,¹⁵ and furthermore it is written, Judah is my lawgiver.¹⁶

Our Mishnah¹⁷ cannot represent the opinion of R. Joshua. For it was taught: R. Joshua said, If a man married in his youth, he should marry again in his old age; if he had children in his youth, he should also have children in his old age; for it said, In the morning¹⁸ sow thy seed and in the evening¹⁹ withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that, or whether they shall both be alike good.²⁰ R. Akiba said: If a man studied Torah in his youth, he should also study it in his old age; if he had disciples in his youth, he should also have disciples in his old age. For it is said, In the morning sow thy seed etc.²⁰

It was said that R. Akiba had twelve thousand pairs of disciples, from Gabbatha²¹ to Antipatris;²² and all of them died at the same time because they did not treat each other with respect. The world remained desolate²³ until R. Akiba came to our Masters in the South and taught the Torah to them. These were R. Meir, R. Judah, R. Jose, R. Simeon and R. Eleazar b. Shammua; and it was they who revived the Torah at that time. A Tanna taught: All of them²⁴ died between Passover and Pentecost. R. Hama b. Abba or, it might be said, R. Hiyya b. Abin said: All of them died a cruel death. What was it?—R. Nahman replied: Croup.²⁵

R. Mattena stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Joshua.²⁶

R. Tanhum stated in the name of R. Hanilai: Any man who has no wife lives without joy, without blessing, and without goodness. 'Without joy'. for it is written, And thou shalt rejoice, thou and thy house.²⁷ 'Without blessing', for it is written, To cause a blessing to rest on thy house.²⁸ 'Without goodness', for it is written, It is not good that the man should be alone.²⁹

In the West³⁰ it was stated:³¹ Without Torah and without a [protecting] wall. 'Without Torah', for it is written, Is it that I have no help³² in me, and that sound wisdom³³ is driven quite from me.³⁴ 'Without a [protecting] wall', for it is written, A woman shall encompass a man.³⁵

Raba b. 'Ulla said:³¹ Without peace, for it is written, And thou shalt know that thy tent³⁶ is in peace; and thou shalt visit thy habitation and shalt miss nothing.³⁷

R. Joshua b. Levi said: Whosoever knows his wife to be a God-fearing woman and does not duly visit her is called a sinner; for it is said, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace³⁸ etc.³⁹

R. Joshua b. Levi further stated: It is a man's duty to pay a visit to his wife when he starts on a journey; for it is said, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace etc.³⁷ Is this⁴⁰ deduced from here? Surely it is deduced from the following:⁴¹ And thy desire shall be to thy husband⁴² teaches that a woman yearns for her husband when he sets out on a journey! — R. Joseph replied: This⁴³ was required only in the case where her menstruation period was near.⁴⁴ And how near? Rabbah⁴⁵ replied: Twelve hours.⁴⁶ And this⁴⁷ applies only [when the journey is] for a secular purpose, but when for a religious purpose [it does not apply, since then] people are in a state of anxiety.⁴⁸ Our Rabbis taught: Concerning a man who loves his wife as himself, who honours her more than himself, who guides his sons and daughters in the right path and arranges for them to be married near the period of their puberty, Scripture says, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace.⁴⁹ Concerning him who loves his neighbours, who befriends his relatives, marries his sister's⁵⁰ daughter,

(1) Infra 70a. It is now assumed that whenever one's own child died the grandchild may take his place in exempting his grandfather from the duty of propagation. From this it follows that only living children or grandchildren exempt a man from the duty of further propagation. How then could R. Huna maintain that dead children also exempt one from this duty?

(2) If a man had only one son he is exempt from the duty of propagation if his son had a daughter. If, however, he once had a male and a female who subsequently died he is in any case exempt.

As this text implies that the lawgivers were descendants of Judah, Machir (Judges V, 14), a descendant of Manasseh, could not have been the paternal, but only the maternal ancestor of the lawgivers that descended from him. The lawgivers were thus the offspring of the union mentioned in I Chron. II, 21, between Hezron, a descendant of Judah, and a daughter of Machir. This then proves that the sons of one's daughter are also regarded as one's own sons.

and lends a sela'¹ to a poor man in the hour of his need, Scripture says, Then shalt thou call, and the Lord will answer; thou shalt cry and He will say: 'Here I am'.²

(Mnemonic: Woman and land help this two shoots, tradesmen inferior.)³

R. Eleazar said: Any man who has no wife is no proper man; for it is said, Male and female created He them and called their name Adam.⁴

R. Eleazar further stated: Any man who owns no land is not a proper man; for it is said, The heavens are the heavens of the Lord; but the earth hath he given to the children of men.⁵

R. Eleazar further stated: What is the meaning of the Scriptural text, I will make him a help meet for him?⁶ If he was worthy she is a help to him;⁷ if he was not worthy she is against him.⁸ Others say: R. Eleazar pointed out a contradiction: It is written kenegedo⁹ but we read kenegedo!¹⁰ — If he was worthy she is meet for him;¹⁰ if he was not worthy she chastises him.⁹

R. Jose met Elijah and asked him: It is written, I will make him a help;¹¹ how does a woman help a man? The other replied: If a man brings wheat, does he chew the wheat? If flax, does he put on the flax?¹² Does she not, then, bring light to his eyes and put him on his feet!

R. Eleazar further stated: What is meant by the Scriptural text, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh?¹³ This teaches that Adam had intercourse with every beast and animal but found no satisfaction until he cohabited with Eve.

R. Eleazar further stated: What is meant by the text, And in thee shall the families of the earth be blessed?¹⁴ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Abraham, 'I have two goodly shoots to engraft¹⁵ on you: Ruth the Moabitess and Naamah the Ammonitess'.¹⁶ All the families of the earth,¹⁴ even the other families who live on the earth are blessed only for Israel's sake. All the nations of the earth,¹⁷ even the ships that go from Gaul to Spain are blessed only for Israel's sake.

R. Eleazar further stated: There will be a time when all craftsmen will take up agriculture;¹⁸ for it is said, And all that handle the oar, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships; they shall stand upon the land.¹⁹

R. Eleazar further stated: No²⁰ occupation is inferior to that of agricultural labour; for it is said, And they shall come down.²¹

R. Eleazar once saw a plot of land that was ploughed across its width.²² 'Wert thou to be ploughed along thy length also',²³ he remarked, 'engaging in business would still be more profitable'. Rab once entered among growing ears of corn. Seeing that they were swaying²⁴ he called out to them, 'Swing as you will,²⁵ engaging in business brings more profit than you can do'.

Raba said: A hundred zuz²⁶ in business means meat and wine every day; a hundred zuz in land, only salt and vegetables.²⁷ Furthermore it causes him to sleep on the ground²⁸ and embroils him in strife.²⁹

R. Papa said, 'Sow³⁰ but do not buy,³¹ even if the cost is the same; there is a blessing in the former. Sell out³² to avoid disgrace;³³ but only mattresses, [not] however, a cloak, [since one] might not always again obtain [a suitable one].³⁴ Stop up³⁵ and you will need no repair;³⁶ repair³⁷ and you will not need to rebuild; for whosoever engages in building grows poor. Be quick in buying land; be deliberate in taking a wife. Come down a step in choosing your wife;³⁸ go up a step in selecting your shoshbin.³⁹

R. Eleazar b. Abina⁴⁰ said: Punishment comes into the world only on Israel's account; for it is said, I have cut off nations, their corners are desolate; I have made their streets waste,⁴¹ and this is followed by the text, 'I said: Surely thou wilt fear Me, thou wilt receive correction'.⁴²

Rab was once taking leave of R. Hiyya. The latter said to him, 'May the All Merciful deliver you from that which is worse than death'. 'But is there' [Rab wondered] 'anything that is worse than death'? When he went out he considered the matter and found [the following text]: And I find more bitter than death the woman etc.⁴³

Rab was constantly tormented by his wife. If he told her, 'Prepare me lentils', she would prepare him small peas; [and if he asked for] small peas, she prepared him lentils. When his son Hiyya grew up he gave her [his father's instruction] in the reverse order.⁴⁴ 'Your mother', Rab once remarked to him, 'has improved'!⁴⁵ 'It was I', the other replied, 'who reversed [your orders] to her'. 'This is what people say', the first said to him, 'Thine own offspring teaches thee reason';⁴⁶ you, however, must not continue to do so' for it is said, They have taught their tongue to speak lies, they weary themselves etc'.⁴⁷

R. Hiyya was constantly tormented by his wife. He, nevertheless, whenever he obtained anything suitable wrapped it up in his scarf and brought it to her. Said Rab to him, 'But, surely, she is tormenting the Master!' — 'It is sufficient for us', the other replied, 'that they rear up our children and deliver us from sin'.

Rab Judah was reading with his son R. Isaac the Scriptural text, And I find more bitter than death the woman. When the latter asked him, 'Who, for instance?' — 'For instance, your mother'. But,¹ surely, Rab Judah taught his son R. Isaac, 'A man finds happiness² only with his first wife; for it is said, Let thy fountain be blessed and have joy of the wife of thy youth';³ and when the latter asked him, 'Who for instance?' [he answered:] 'For instance, your mother'!⁴ — She was indeed irascible but could be easily appeased with a kindly word.⁵

How is one to understand the term a 'bad wife'? Abaye said: One who prepares for him⁶ a tray⁷ and has her tongue⁸ also ready for him. Raba said: One who prepares for him⁶ the tray and turns her back upon him.⁹

R. Hama b. Hanina stated: As soon as a man takes a wife his sins are buried;¹⁰ for it is said: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good and obtaineth¹¹ favour of the Lord.¹²

In the West,¹³ they used to ask a man who married, 'findeth or find?'¹⁴ Findeth, because it is written, Whoso findeth a wife, findeth a great good;¹² Find, because it is written, And I find more bitter than death the woman.¹⁵

Raba said: [If one has] a bad wife it is a meritorious act to divorce her,¹⁶ for it is said, Cast out¹⁷ the scoffer, and contention will go out; yea, strife and shame will cease.¹⁸

Raba further stated: A bad wife, the amount of whose kethubah¹⁹ is large,²⁰ [should be given] a rival at her side; as people say, 'By her partner rather than by a thorn'.²¹

Raba further stated: A bad wife is as troublesome as a very rainy day; for it is said, A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.²²

Raba further stated: Come and see how precious is a good wife and how baneful is a bad wife. 'How precious is a good wife', for it is written: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good.¹² Now, if Scripture speaks of the woman herself, then how precious is a good wife whom Scripture praises. If Scripture speaks of the Torah, then how precious is a good wife with whom the Torah is compared. 'How baneful is a bad wife', for it is written, And I find more bitter than death the woman.²³ Now, if Scripture speaks of herself, then how baneful is a bad wife whom Scripture censures. If Scripture speaks of Gehenna, then how baneful is a bad wife with whom Gehenna is compared.

Behold I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape.²⁴ R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: This refers to a bad wife, the amount of whose kethubah²⁵ is large.²⁶

The Lord has delivered me into their hands against whom I am not able to stand.²⁷ R. Hisda said in the name of Mar 'Ukba b. Hiyya: This refers to a bad wife the amount of whose kethubah²⁵ is large.²⁶ In the West²⁸ it was said: This refers to one whose maintenance depends on his money.²⁹

Thy sons and thy daughter's shall be given unto another people.³⁰ R. Hanan b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: This refers to one's father's wife.³¹

I will provoke them with a vile³² nation.³³ R. Hanan b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: This refers to a bad wife the amount of whose kethubah²⁵ is large.³⁴ R. Eliezer stated: This refers to the Sadducees;³⁵ for so it is said, The fool³² has said in his heart: 'There is no God' etc.³⁶ In a Baraita it was taught: This refers to the people of Barbaria³⁷ and the people of Mauretania³⁸ who go naked in the streets; for there is nothing more objectionable and abominable to the Omnipresent than the man who goes naked in the streets. R. Johanan said: This refers to the Parsees.³⁹

When R. Johanan was informed that the Parsees⁴⁰ had come to Babylon, he reeled and fell.⁴¹ When however he was told that they accepted bribes he recovered⁴² and sat down again.⁴³

They⁴⁴ issued three decrees as a punishment for three [transgressions]:⁴⁵ They decreed against [ritually prepared] meat,⁴⁶ because the priestly gifts⁴⁷ [were neglected]. They decreed against the use of baths, because ritual bathing [was not observed]. They exhumed the dead,⁴⁸ because rejoicings were held on the days of their⁴⁹ festivals; as it is said, Then shall the hand of the Lord be against you, and against your fathers,⁵⁰ and Rabbah b. Samuel said that that⁵¹ referred to the exhumation of the dead, for the Master said, 'For the sins of the living the dead are exhumed'.

Said Raba to Rabbah b. Mari: It is written, They shall not be gathered, nor be buried, they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth,⁵² but it is also written,⁵³ And death shall be chosen rather than life!⁵⁴ — The other replied: 'Death shall be chosen' for the wicked, in order that they may not live in this world and thus sin and fall into Gehenna.⁵⁵ It is written in the book of Ben Sira: —⁵⁶

A good wife is a precious gift;⁵⁷ she will be put in the bosom of the God-fearing man.⁵⁸ A bad wife is a plague to her husband. What remedy has he? — Let him give her a letter of divorce and be healed of his plague.

A beautiful wife is a joy to her husband;⁵⁹ the number of his days shall be double.⁶⁰

Turn away thy eyes from [thy neighbour's] charming wife lest thou be caught in her net. Do not turn in to her husband to mingle with him wine and strong drink; for, through the form of a beautiful woman, many were destroyed and a mighty host are all her slain.⁶¹

Many were the wounds of the spice-peddler,⁶² which lead him on to lewdness like a spark that lights the coal.⁶³

As a cage is full of birds so are [the harlots'] houses full of deceit .⁶⁴

Do not worry about to-morrow's trouble, for thou knowest not what the day may beget. To-morrow may come and thou⁶⁵ wilt be no more and so thou hast worried about a world which is not thine.⁶⁶

Keep away many from thy house; and do not bring everyone into thy house.

Many be they that seek thy welfare; reveal thy secret only to one of a thousand.

R. Assi stated: The son of David⁶⁷ will not come before all the souls in Guf⁶⁸ are disposed of; since it is said, For the spirit that enwrappeth itself is from Me, and the souls which I have made.⁶⁹

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, He who does not engage in propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; for it is said, Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed,⁷⁰ and this is immediately followed by the text, And you, be ye fruitful and multiply.⁷¹ R. Jacob said: As though he has diminished the Divine Image; since it is said, For in the image of God made he man,⁷² and this is immediately followed by, And you, be ye fruitful etc.⁷¹ Ben 'Azzai said: As though he sheds blood and diminishes the Divine Image; since it is said,⁷³ And you, be ye fruitful and multiply.⁷¹

They said to Ben 'Azzai: Some preach well and act well, others act well but do not preach well; you, however, preach well but do not act well!⁷⁴ Ben 'Azzai replied: But what shall I do, seeing that my soul is in love with the Torah; the world can be carried on by others.

Another [Baraita] taught : R. Eliezer said, Anyone who does not engage in the propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; For it is said, Whoso sheddeth mans's blood,⁷² and close upon it follows, And you, be ye fruitful etc.⁷¹ R. Eleazar b. Azariah said: As though he diminished the Divine Image. Ben 'Azzai said etc.⁷⁵ They said to Ben 'Azzai: Some preach well etc.⁷⁵

Our Rabbis taught: And when it rested, he said: 'Return O Lord unto the ten thousands and⁷⁶ thousands of Israel',⁷⁷

teaches that the Divine Presence does not rest on less than two thousand and two myriads of Israelites.¹ Should the number of Israelites happen to be two thousand and two myriads less one, and any particular person has not engaged in the propagation of the race, does he not thereby cause the Divine Presence to depart From Israel! Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eliezer: He deserves the penalty of death; for it is said, And they had no children,² but if they had children they would not have died. Others say: He causes the Divine Presence to depart from Israel; for it is said, To be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee;³ where there exists 'seed after thee' the Divine Presence dwells [among them]; but where no 'seed after thee' exists, among whom should it dwell! Among the trees⁴ or among the stones? MISHNAH. IF A MAN TOOK A WIFE AND LIVED WITH HER FOR TEN YEARS AND SHE BORE NO CHILD, HE MAY NOT ABSTAIN [ANY LONGER FROM THE DUTY OF PROPAGATION].⁵ IF HE DIVORCED HER SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY ANOTHER, AND THE SECOND HUSBAND MAY ALSO LIVE WITH HER [NO MORE THAN] TEN YEARS.⁶ IF SHE MISCARRIED [THE PERIOD OF TEN YEARS] IS RECKONED FROM THE TIME OF HER MISCARRIAGE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man took a wife and lived with her for ten years and she bore no child, he shall divorce her and give her her kethubah,⁷ since it is possible that it was he who was unworthy to have children from her.⁸ Although there is no definite proof for this statement⁹ there is nevertheless a [Scriptural] allusion to it: After Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan.¹⁰ This¹¹ teaches you that the years of his stay outside the Land¹² were not included in the number.¹³ Hence, if the man or the woman was ill, or if both were in prison, [these years] are not included in the number.¹⁴

Said Raba to R. Nahman: Let deduction be made from Isaac, concerning whom it is written, And Isaac was forty years old when he took Rebecca etc.¹⁵ and it is also written, And Isaac was threescore years old when she bore them!¹⁶ — The other replied: Isaac was barren.¹⁷ If so,¹⁸ Abraham also was barren!¹⁹ — That text²⁰ is required For a deduction in accordance with the statement of R. Hiyya b. Abba. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: Why were the years of Ishmael counted? In order to determine thereby the years of Jacob.²¹

R. Isaac stated: Our father Isaac was barren; for it is said, And Isaac entreated the Lord opposite²² his wife.²³ It does not say 'for his wife' but opposite. This teaches that both were barren.²⁴ If so, And the Lord let Himself be entreated of him²⁵ should have read, And the Lord let Himself be entreated of them!²⁵ — Because the prayer of a righteous man the son of a righteous man is not like the prayer of a righteous man the son of a wicked man.²⁶

R. Isaac stated: Why were our ancestors barren? — Because the Holy One, blessed be He, longs to hear the prayer of the righteous.

R. Isaac further stated: Why is the prayer of the righteous compared to a pitchfork?²⁷ As a pitchfork turns the sheaves of grain from one position to another, so does the prayer of the righteous turn the dispensations of the Holy One, blessed be He, from the attribute of anger to the attribute of mercy.

R. Ammi stated: Abraham and Sarah were originally of doubtful sex;²⁸ for it is said, Look unto to the rock whence you were hewn¹ and to the hole of the pit² whence you were digged,³ and this is followed by the text, Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bore you.⁴

R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Our mother Sarah was incapable of procreation; for it is said, And Sarai was barren; she had no child,⁵ she had not even a womb.⁶

Rab Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shilath stated in the name of Rab: That⁷ was taught only in respect of the early generations who lived many years. In respect of the later generations, however, whose years of life are few, only two years and a half, corresponding to three periods of pregnancy⁸ [are allowed].⁹

Rabbah stated in the name of R. Nahman: Three years [must elapse],⁹ corresponding to three remembrances;¹⁰ For a Master said: Sarah, Rachel and Hannah¹¹ were remembered on New Year's Day.¹²

Rabbah ruled: These general principles¹³ are to be disregarded.¹⁴ For consider: Who compiled our Mishnah? Rabbi, of course; but the years of life were already reduced in the days of David. For it is written, The days of our years are threescore years and ten.¹⁵

With regard to the assumption that 'it is possible that it was he who was unworthy to have children from her',¹⁶ is it not possible that it was she who was unworthy?¹⁷ — Since she is not commanded to fulfil the duty of propagation she is not so punished.¹⁸ But surely it is not so!¹⁹ For the Rabbis once said to R. Abba b. Zabda, 'Take a wife and beget children', and he answered them, 'Had I been worthy I would have had them from my first wife'! — There he was merely evading the Rabbis; for, in fact, R. Abba b. Zabda became impotent through the long discourses of R. Huna.²⁰

R. Giddal became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna,²⁰ R. Helbo became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna,²⁰ and R. Shesheth also became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna.²⁰

R. Aha b. Jacob was once attacked by dysuria,²¹ and when he was supported on the college cedar tree a discharge issued like a green palm shoot.

R. Aha b. Jacob stated: We were a group of sixty scholars, and all became impotent through the long discourses of R. Huna;²⁰ with the exception of myself who followed the principle, Wisdom preserveth the life of him that hath it.²²

IF HE DIVORCED HER SHE IS PERMITTED etc. Only a second husband²³ but not a third,²⁴ whose view, then, is represented by our Mishnah? — It is that of Rabbi. For it was taught: If she circumcised her first child and he died,²⁵ and a second one who also died,²⁵ she must not circumcise her third child; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, said: She circumcises the third, but must not circumcise the fourth child. But, surely, the reverse was taught,²⁶ now which of these is the latter?²⁷ — Come and hear what R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: It once happened with four sisters at Sepphoris that when the first had circumcised her child he died; when the second [circumcised her child] he also died, and when the third [circumcised her child] he also died. The fourth came before R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who told her, 'You must not circumcise [the child]' .²⁸ But is it not possible that if the third sister had come he would also have told her the same!²⁹ — If so,³⁰ what could have been the purpose of the evidence of R. Hiyya b. Abba? [No]. It is possible that he meant to teach us the following: That sisters also establish a presumption!³¹

Raba said: Now that it has been stated that sisters also establish a presumption, a man should not take a wife either from a family of epileptics, or from a family of lepers. This applies, however, only when the fact had been established by the occurrence of three cases.³²

What is the decision?³³ — When R. Isaac b. Joseph came he related: Such a case was once submitted to R. Johanan in the Synagogue of Ma'on³⁴ on the Day of Atonement which fell on a Sabbath. A woman, it happened, had circumcised her child³⁵ who died; her second [sister circumcised her child] and he also died, and her third sister appeared before him. He said to her, 'Go and circumcise him'. Said Abaye to him:³⁶ See, you have permitted³⁷ a forbidden³⁸ and a dangerous³⁹ act.

Abaye, however, relying upon this statement⁴⁰ married Homa the daughter of Isi son of R. Isaac the son of Rab Judah, although Rehaba of Pumbeditha had married her and died, and R. Isaac son of Rabbah b. Hana had subsequently married her and also died. And after he had married her, he himself died also.

Said Raba: Would any one else have exposed himself to such danger? Surely he himself had said that Abin was reliable⁴¹ but that Isaac the Red was not a person to be relied upon;⁴¹ that Abin was well acquainted with any change⁴² [in the views of R. Johanan] but Isaac the Red was not acquainted with any such changes! Furthermore, it might be said that their dispute⁴³ extended only to the case of circumcision; do they, however, differ also in the case of marriage? — Yes; for so it was taught: If a woman was married to one husband⁴⁴ who died, and to a second one who also died, she must not be married to a third; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: She may be married to a third, but she may not be married to a fourth.⁴⁵

In the case of circumcision, one can well understand [why the operation is dangerous with some children and not with others] since the members of one family may bleed profusely⁴⁶ while those of another family may bleed little;⁴⁷ what, however, is the reason in the case of marriage?⁴⁸ — R. Mordecai answered R. Ashi: Thus said Abimi from Hagronia in the name of R. Huna, 'The source⁴⁹ is the cause'.⁵⁰ But R. Ashi stated: '[The woman's] ill luck is the cause'.⁵⁰ What practical difference is there between them?⁵¹ — The difference between them is the case where the man only betrothed her and died,⁵² or also when he fell off a palm-tree and died.⁵²

SAID R. JOSEPH SON OF RABA to Raba: I enquired of R. Joseph whether the halachah is in agreement with Rabbi, and he replied in the affirmative. [I asked] whether the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, and he again replied in the affirmative. Was he thereby merely ridiculing me?' — The other replied: No; there are several anonymous statements [in the Mishnah] and he informed⁵³ you [that in the matter of] marriage and flogging [the anonymous Mishnah]⁵⁴ agrees with Rabbi, and that in the matter of menstrual periods and the ox [whose owner has been] fore-warned⁵⁵ [the anonymous Mishnah] agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

As to marriage, there is the statement just discussed.⁵⁶ 'Flogging'? — As we learned: A man upon whom the penalty of flogging had been repeatedly inflicted is to be placed⁵⁷ under confinement⁵⁸ and fed on barley, until his stomach bursts.⁵⁹

'The menstrual periods'? — As we learned: A woman may not

 - (26) Rabbi's opinion was attributed to R. Simeon and vice versa.
 - (27) The latter version of a statement is regarded as the more reliable, since the author may have recognized his error and changed his view.
 - (28) This incident must have occurred in the latter days of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, since it was witnessed by R. Johanan who already belonged to the first generation of Amoraim. As the ruling in this incident clearly shews, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel held at that time the view attributed to him in the first cited Baraita which must consequently be regarded as representing the later, and the more reliable version.

(29) And, consequently, the second Baraita might represent the later version!

(30) That R. Hiyya b. Abba's statement was not intended to testify that a presumption can only be established by the threefold repetition of an act.

(31) I.e., not only is presumption established when the act or incident is repeated three times in the case of one woman, but also when it is so repeated in the case of three sisters (women).

(38) As the third child was not permitted to be circumcised, the operation constituted manual labour which is forbidden on the Sabbath.

(39) The child might have died as a result of the operation as did the other two.

(40) Of R. Isaac in the name of R. Johanan, that a presumption can only be established when an incident has occurred three times.

(41) In the reports he made in the name of R. Johanan. Both Abin and R. Isaac the Red reported rulings in the name of R. Johanan.

regard her menstrual periods as regular¹ unless the recurrence had been regular three times. Nor is she released from the restrictions of an established regular period unless it has varied three² times.³

'And the ox [whose owner has been] forewarned'? — As we learned: An ox is not deemed a mu'ad unless [its owner] has been forewarned three times.⁴ Our Rabbis taught: A woman who had been married to one husband and had no children and to a second husband and again had no children, may marry a third man only if he has children. If she married one who has had no children she must be divorced without receiving her kethubah.

The question was raised: Where she married a third husband and bore no children, may her first two husbands reclaim [the respective amounts of her kethubah]?⁵ Can they plead, 'It has now been proved that you were the cause',⁶ or can she retort, 'It is only now that I have deteriorated'? — It stands to reason that she may plead, 'It is only now that I have deteriorated'.

The question was raised: If she married a fourth husband and gave birth to children, may she claim her kethubah from her third husband? — We advise her: 'Your silence is better than your speech'; for⁷ he⁸ could tell her, 'I would not have divorced you in such circumstances'.⁹ R. Papa demurred: Even if she keeps silence, should we remain silent? The divorce, surely,¹⁰ is annulled,¹¹ and her children are bastards! In truth,¹² the fact is,¹³ that it is assumed that she has now been restored to health.¹⁴

If the husband¹⁵ pleads, 'The fault is hers',¹⁶ and the wife pleads, 'The fault is his',¹⁷ R. Ammi ruled: In private matrimonial affairs¹⁸ the wife is believed. And what is the reason? — She is in a position to know whether emission is forceful,¹⁹ but he is not in a position to know it.

If the husband states that he intends taking another wife to test his potency.²⁰ R. Ammi ruled: 'He must in this case also divorce [his present wife] and pay her the amount of her kethubah; for I maintain that whosoever takes in addition to his present wife another one must divorce the former and pay her the amount of her kethubah.'

Raba said: A man may marry wives in addition to his first wife; provided only that he possesses the means to maintain them.

(1) To be deemed levitically clean until that period actually arrives. A woman of irregular periods is regarded as unclean for twenty-four hours prior to the monthly date on which her previous discharge occurred (v. Nid. 2a). Should a woman, the regularity of whose periods had been established omit to examine her body when menstruation is due, and subsequently find a discharge, we assume her retrospectively to have become unclean at the beginning of her period, while a woman whose periods are irregular cannot, of course, be subject to such restriction.

(2) If the change of date occurred no more than twice the restrictions remain in force (v. supra n. 8 last clause).

(9) That she was not really barren. By advancing such a plea the husband might retrospectively annul the divorce altogether.

(10) If the third husband's plea is tenable.

(11) Since it was given under a misapprehension.

(12) The third husband's plea is really untenable. Once he has determined to divorce her, at a time when her sterility was a matter of doubt, he cannot again retract.

(13) The reason why she cannot claim her kethubah.

(14) But was incapable of conception at the time of her divorce; and this is the reason why she has no claim for her kethubah upon the third man.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 65b

If the husband pleads¹ that his wife had miscarried within the ten years.² and she states, 'I had no miscarriage',³ R. Ammi ruled: She is believed in this case also; for if she had really miscarried she would not herself have sought to acquire the reputation of a barren woman.

A woman who miscarried, and then miscarried a second, and a third time, is confirmed as one subject to abortions.⁴

If he⁵ said, 'She miscarried two'⁶ and she said, 'three'⁷ — R. Isaac b. Eleazar stated: Such a case was dealt with at the college, and it was ruled that she was to be believed; for if she had not miscarried⁸ she would not herself have sought to acquire the reputation of producing only miscarriages.

MISHNAH. A MAN IS COMMANDED CONCERNING THE DUTY OF PROPAGATION BUT NOT A WOMAN. R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA, HOWEVER. SAID: CONCERNING BOTH OF THEM⁹ IT IS SAID, AND GOD BLESSED THEM; AND GOD SAID UNTO THEM: 'BE FRUITFUL, AND MULTIPLY.'¹⁰ GEMARA. Whence is this¹¹ deduced? R. Ile'a replied in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: Scripture stated, And replenish the earth, and subdue it;¹² it is the nature of a man to subdue but it is not the nature of a woman to subdue. On the contrary! And subdue it¹³ implies two!¹⁴ R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, And thou subdue it.¹⁵

R. Joseph said: Deduction¹⁶ is made from the following. I am God Almighty, be thou fruitful and multiply,¹⁷ and it is not stated, 'Be ye fruitful and multiply'.¹⁸

R. Ile'a further stated in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: As one is commanded to say that which will be obeyed,¹⁹ so is one commanded not to say that which will not be obeyed.²⁰ R. Abba stated: It²⁰ is a duty; for it is said in Scripture, Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee; reprove a wise man and he will love thee.²¹

R. Ile'a further stated in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: One may modify a statement in the interests of peace; for it is said in Scripture, Thy father did command etc. so shall ye say unto Joseph: Forgive, I pray thee now, etc.²² R. Nathan said: It²³ is a commandment; for it is stated in Scripture, And Samuel said: 'How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me', etc.²⁴

At the School of R. Ishmael it was taught: Great is the cause of peace. Seeing that for its sake even the Holy One, blessed be He, modified a statement; for at first it is written, My lord being old,²⁵ while afterwards it is written, And I am old.²⁶

R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA, HOWEVER, SAID. It was stated: R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi [are at variance]. One stated that the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Beroka, and the other stated that the halachah is not in agreement with R. Johanan b. Beroka. It may be proved that it was R. Johanan who stated that the halachah is not [in agreement etc.]. For R. Abbahu was once sitting [at the college] and reported in the name of R. Johanan that the halachah [was in agreement etc.], and R. Ammi and R. Assi turned away their faces.²⁷ Others say: R. Hiyya b. Abba made the report,²⁸ and R. Ammi and R. Assi turned away their faces. Said R. Papa: According to him who maintains that R. Abbahu made the statement²⁸ it is easy to understand that it was out of respect for the royal house that they²⁹ said nothing to him.³⁰ According to him, however, who maintains that R. Hiyya b. Abba made the statement,²⁸ they²⁹ should have told him that R. Johanan did not say so!

Now, what is the decision?³¹ — Come and hear what R. Aha b. Hanina stated in the name of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Assi: Such a case³² once came before R. Johanan at the Synagogue of Caesarea, and he decided that the husband must divorce her and also pay her the amount of her kethubah. Now, if it be suggested that a woman is not subject to the commandment,³³ how could she have any claim to a kethubah? — It is possible that this was a case where she submitted a special plea; as was the case with a certain woman who once came to R. Ammi and asked him to order the payment of her³⁴ kethubah. When he replied, ‘Go away, the commandment³⁵ does not apply to you’,³⁶ she exclaimed, ‘What shall become of a woman like myself³⁷ in her old age!’³⁸ ‘In such a case’, the Master said, ‘we certainly compel [the husband]’.³⁹

A woman once came [with a similar plea]⁴⁰ before R. Nahman. When he told her, ‘The commandment³⁵ does not apply to you’, she replied, ‘Does not a woman like myself³⁷ require a staff in her hand and a hoe for digging her grave’!⁴¹ ‘In such a case’, the Master said, ‘we certainly compel [the husband]’,³⁹

Judah and Hezekiah were twins. The features of the one were developed at the end of nine months, and those of the other were developed at the beginning of the seventh month.⁴² Judith,⁴³ the wife of R. Hiyya, having suffered in consequence agonizing pains of childbirth, changed her clothes [on recovery] and appeared⁴⁴ before R. Hiyya. ‘Is a woman’, she asked, ‘commanded to propagate the race’? — ‘No’, he replied. And relying on this decision,⁴⁵ she drank a sterilizing potion. When her action finally became known, he exclaimed, ‘Would that you bore unto me only one more issue of the womb!’⁴⁶ For a Master stated: Judah and Hezekiah were twin brothers and Pazi and Tawi

But does not the commandment apply to women? Surely, R. Aha b. R. Kattina related in the name of R. Isaac: It once happened in the case of a woman who was half slave and half free, that her master was compelled to emancipate her!² R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: People were taking liberties with her.³

CHAPTER VII

MISHNAH. IF A WIDOW [WHO MARRIED] A HIGH PRIEST⁴ OR IF A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALUZAH [WHO MARRIED] A COMMON PRIEST BROUGHT IN TO HER HUSBAND MELOG⁵ SLAVES AND ZON BARZEL⁵ SLAVES. THE MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH BUT THE ZON BARZEL SLAVES MAY EAT OF IT.⁶

THE FOLLOWING ARE MELOG SLAVES: THOSE WHO, IF THEY DIE, ARE THE WIFE'S⁷ LOSS AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES, ARE HER PROFIT. THOUGH IT IS THE HUSBAND'S DUTY TO MAINTAIN THEM, THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.⁶

THE FOLLOWING ARE ZON BARZEL SLAVES: IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE THE LOSS OF

THE HUSBAND AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES, ARE A PROFIT TO HIM. SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM,⁸ THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH.

IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, AND SHE BROUGHT HIM IN SLAVES, THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH WHETHER THEY ARE MELOG SLAVES, OR ZON BARZEL SLAVES.⁶ IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, HOWEVER, WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE AND SHE BROUGHT HIM IN SLAVES, THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH WHETHER THEY ARE MELOG SLAVES OR ZON BARZEL SLAVES.⁶

GEMARA. And MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH! What is the reason? Let them rather be regarded as a possession that was acquired by one in his possession [who is permitted to eat terumah]. for it was taught: Whence is it deduced that the wife whom a priest married or the slaves which he purchased may eat terumah.? It is said, But if a priest buy any soul the purchase of his money, he may eat of it.⁹ And whence is it deduced that if a woman¹⁰ purchased slaves¹¹ or if a priest's slaves purchased¹² other slaves, these may eat terumah? It is said, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money, he may eat of it;⁹ a possession which his possession has acquired may eat!¹³ — Whosoever may himself eat may confer the right of eating upon others but whosoever may not himself eat may not confer the right of eating upon others.¹⁴ May he not, indeed?¹⁵ There is, surely, the case of¹⁶ an uncircumcised man and that of all levitically unclean persons who may not themselves eat terumah and yet confer the right of eating it upon others!¹⁷ — In those cases¹⁸ they are merely suffering pain in their mouths.¹⁹ But there is, surely, the case of¹⁶ the bastard²⁰ Who may not eat terumah himself²¹ and yet may confer the right of eating it upon others!²² — Rabina replied. He speaks of an acquisition²³ that is permitted to eat: Any acquisition that may eat may confer the right of eating upon others, and any acquisition that may not eat may not confer the right upon others.

Raba, however, stated²⁴ that pentateuchally they²³ may in fact eat terumah; but it is the Rabbis who instituted the prohibition in order that the woman might complain, 'I am not allowed to eat; my slaves are not allowed to eat; I am only his mistress!', in consequence of which he would be likely to divorce her. R. Ashi stated:²⁴ The prohibition is a preventive measure against the possibility of her feeding them²⁵ with terumah after the death [of her husband].²⁶ Now, then,²⁷ a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest should also be forbidden to feed [her melog slaves with terumah] as a preventive measure against her feeding them after [her husband's] death!²⁸ — But, said R. Ashi, [our Mishnah refers to] a priestly widow²⁹ who³⁰ might draw the following conclusion:³¹ 'At first³² they³³ ate terumah at my paternal home;³⁴ and when I married this man³⁵ they³³ ate³⁶ of the terumah of my husband; they³³ should now,³⁷ therefore, revert to their former condition',³⁸ and she would not know that at first³⁹ she had not made of herself a profaned woman⁴⁰ while now⁴¹ she has made herself a profaned woman.⁴⁰ This explanation is quite satisfactory in the case of a priestly widow;⁴² what explanations however, is there in the case of a widow who is the daughter of an Israelite?⁴³

The Rabbis made no distinction between one widow and another.⁴⁴

It was stated: If a wife: who brought to her husband⁴⁵ appraised goods,⁴⁶ demands,⁴⁷ 'I will accept only my own goods',⁴⁸ and he replies 'I am only paying their value'⁴⁹ — in whose favour is judgment to be given? Rab Judah said:

(1) The two pairs of twins were children of R. Hiyya from Judith.

(2) So that she might be permitted to marry a free man, As a half slave she was not allowed to contract such a marriage. Now, since her master was compelled to give her the opportunity of marrying, it is obvious that the commandment of propagation applies to women also!

- (3) And marriage was her only protection; and this was the reason why her master was compelled to emancipate her.
- (4) Contracting thereby a forbidden union.
- (5) V. infra and Glos.
- (6) The reason is given in the Gemara.
- (7) Lit., 'died for her'.
- (8) He or his heirs must restore them to his wife in a healthy condition should he divorce her or die.
- (9) Lev. XXII, 11.
- (10) The daughter of an Israelite, who married a priest.
- (11) Out of her melog property the principal of which is hers.
- (12) With a sum of money that was given to them as their absolute property. on the condition that their master was to have no claim whatsoever upon it.
- (13) The expression, 'the purchase of his money is superfluous' and the text is, therefore, expounded thus: If the purchase of his money, i.e., a priest's wife or slave (who is the priest's acquisition) buy any soul, he (i.e., the one purchased) 'may eat of it'. Why then are not melog slaves, being an acquisition of the priest's wife, permitted to eat terumah?
- (14) The priest's wife in this case is not herself permitted to eat terumah, since her union with this priest is a forbidden one. V. Lev. XXI, 7,13 and supra p. 441, n. 1.
- (15) Lit., 'and not'?
- (16) Lit., 'and behold'.
- (17) Their slaves, e.g., are permitted to eat terumah. Cf. infra 70a.
- (18) Lit., 'there'.
- (19) I.e., their disability is restricted to their mouth alone. They are only temporarily forbidden to eat the terumah. At the moment their unclean period is over or circumcision is performed their rights are fully restored. In the case of the priest's wife in our Mishnah, however, the disability is permanent, since by her forbidden marriage she remains for ever a profaned woman.
- (20) I.e., mamzer, (v. Glos.) the issue of a union between a slave or idolater and a woman who was the issue of a marriage between a priest and the daughter of an Israelite.
- (21) Since he is neither priest nor even a legitimate Israelite.
- (22) His grandmother, the wife of the priest, may continue to eat terumah even after the death of her husband so long as the bastard (being a descendant of her husband through their daughter) is alive. As the widow of a priest she would have lost the privilege of eating terumah on her husband's death had there been no surviving descendants. V. infra 69b.
- (23) Not of a descendant.
- (24) In explaining the reason why MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.
- (25) The melog slaves.
- (26) Believing that, as she was allowed to feed them with terumah during the lifetime of her husband though they were her property, she may continue to do so even after his death. In the case of zon barzel slaves, however, no such error need be feared since the slaves are not hers, but his absolute property until the moment when it is surrendered to her by her husband or heir, v. infra.
- (27) If such an error as suggested is to be feared.
- (28) But our Mishnah distinctly states that her melog slaves also may eat terumah!
- (29) The daughter of a priest who, as a widow, married a High Priest, and thus became profaned through their forbidden marriage.
- (30) If her melog slaves were permitted to eat terumah while she lived with the High Priest.
- (31) After the High Priest's death.
- (32) During her first widowhood.
- (33) The melog slaves.
- (34) As a widow she then returned to her father's priestly house and was again entitled to eat terumah herself and to feed her slaves with it.
- (35) The High Priest.
- (36) Cf. supra n. 8.
- (37) When the High Priest died, though she remained a profaned widow who is, in fact, forbidden to eat terumah.
- (38) To be allowed again. as before, to eat terumah.

- (39) During her first widowhood.
- (40) Halachah (v. Glos.) through her forbidden marriage.
- (41) Having married a High Priest to whom a widow is forbidden.
- (42) V. supra p. 443, n. 7.
- (43) The error mentioned cannot occur in her case; but as our Mishnah draws no distinction between the two, the question remains: Why should not her melog slaves be permitted to eat terumah?
- (44) Lit., 'in her widowhood'. Were the feeding permitted in the case of the one, the other might erroneously be presumed to come under the same law.
- (45) As zon barzel property (v. Glos.).
- (46) Shum (v. Glos.). V. Ket. Sonc. ed. p 401. n. 11. In consideration of which he guarantees her a specified sum in her kethubah, which is recoverable by her at his death, or earlier if she is divorced.
- (47) When she claims her kethubah. v. supra n. 9.
- (48) I.e., the actual objects she had brought to her husband.
- (49) In accordance with the appraisal in the kethubah.

Judgment is to be given in her favour;¹ and R. Ammi said: Judgment is to be given in his favour. 'Rab Judah said: Judgment is to be given in her favour because [they represent] assets of her paternal property [which] belong to her. R. Ammi said: Judgment is to be given in his favour' for, as the Master said, [THE FOLLOWING ARE ZON BARZEL SLAVES:] IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE THE LOSS OF THE HUSBAND AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES- ARE A PROFIT TO HIM; [AND] SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH [they are therefore obviously regarded as his own].² R. Safra said: Was it stated, 'and they belong to him? The statements surely only reads, SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM! In fact, then, they may not belong to him at all. But [is it a fact that] those for whom he³ is responsible invariably eat terumah? Surely we learned: An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest may feed her on vetches of terumah. A priest, however, who hired a cow from an Israelite, though it is his duty to supply her with food,⁴ must not feed her on vetches of terumah!⁵ — How could you understand it thus! Granted that he is liable for theft or loss, is he also liable for accidents, emaciation or reduction in value!⁶ [The case⁷ in our Mishnah], surely, can only be compared to that in the final clause:⁸ An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest, guaranteeing him its appraised value,⁹ may not feed it on vetches of terumah. A priest, however, who hired a cow from an Israelite, guaranteeing him its appraised value,⁹ may feed it on vetches of terumah.¹⁰

Rabbah and R. Joseph were sitting at their studies at the conclusion of R. Nahman's school session, and in the course of their sitting they made the following statement: [A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Judah; and [another Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi. ['A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Ammi': Zon barzel slaves procure their freedom when the man,¹¹ but not when the woman [struck out] a tooth or an eye.¹² ['A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Judah': If a wife brought in to her husband appraised goods,¹³ the husband may not sell them even if it is his desire to do so.¹⁴ Furthermore, even if he brought in to her appraised goods of his own,¹⁵ he may not sell them even if he desired to do so. If either¹⁶ of them sold [any of the appraised goods] for their maintenance. Such an incident was once dealt with by R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, who ruled that the husband¹⁷ may seize them from the buyers.¹⁸

Raba¹⁹ stated in the name of R. Nahman: The law is in agreement with Rab Judah. Said Raba to R. Nahman: But surely [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi! Although [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi, Rab Judah's view is more logical, since any asset of a woman's paternal property [should rightly belong to her].

A woman once brought²⁰ in to her husband a robe of fine wool [which was appraised and included] in her kethubah. When the man died it was taken by the orphans and spread over the corpse. Raba ruled that the corpse had acquired it.²¹

Said Nanai son of R. Joseph son of Raba to R. Kahana: But, surely, Raba²² stated in the name of R. Nahman that the law is in agreement with Rab Judah!²³ The other replied: Does not Rab Judah admit that the robe had still to be collected [by the wife]?²⁴ Since it had still to be collected it remained in the husband's possession.²⁵ [In this ruling] Raba acted in accordance with his view [elsewhere expressed]. For Raba stated:²⁶ Consecration,²⁶ leavened food²⁶, and

(1) Her own objects must be returned to her.

(2) Cf. Bomberg ed. where an amplified version of this text is given including the clause enclosed here in square brackets.

(3) A priest.

(4) And though he is also responsible for the loss, or theft of the animal.

(5) 'A.Z. 15a; which shews that even an animal for which a priest is responsible (v. supra n. 2) is not permitted to eat terumah. How, then, could it be said, SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT?

(6) Certainly not. Such a restricted responsibility, therefore, is incomplete and does not confer the right to terumah.

(7) Of zon barzel.

(8) Of the Baraitha cited.

(9) Lit., 'if an Israelite appraised a cow from'. I.e., he undertook to make good to the owner any loss in the value of the animal between the date of hire and the date of the return.

(10) The animal being regarded as the priest's own property, in respect of its feeding on terumah, owing to his responsibility for the return of its full value. Thus it follows that, though an animal would be returned in body, should its value on the day of its return be equal to that of its appraised value, it is nevertheless, owing to the priest's complete responsibility, deemed to be the priest's property so long as it remains in his possession; so also in the case of zon barzel slaves: though they would ultimately be returned to the woman in body, they are regarded, in respect of terumah, as the property of the priest, who accepted full responsibility for them, so long as they remain with him.

(11) The husband, who is regarded, in agreement with R. Ammi, as the owner of the slaves.

(12) Cf. Ex. XXI, 26.

(13) Which the husband includes in her kethubah, and undertakes to return to her at their appraised value should he divorce her or die.

(14) It is his duty to keep them intact so that the objects themselves, not merely their value, may be returned to the woman in due course.

(15) Included them in the amount of her kethubah.

(16) Lit., 'both'. V. Rashi a.l.

(17) I.e., even he.

(18) If the woman died; the sale being deemed invalid. That the woman, when her husband dies or divorces her, may seize such property, in the event of a sale by him, is obvious.

(19) Wanting in MSS. which read 'R. Nahman stated'.

(20) In her dowry, as zon barzel.

(21) The shroud, wraps. or any article of dress that has covered the body of a corpse is deemed to be the dead man's property, and no living person may derive any benefit from it. V. Sanh. 47b.

(22) Cf. supra n. 7.

(23) That zon barzel property, such as the robe was, belongs to the wife'!

(24) Of course he does. The robe does not come into the actual possession of the woman until her claim is proved and the robe surrendered to her by the husband or his heirs.

(25) The orphans were, therefore, entitled to use it as part of the dead man's shroud. The woman's claim upon it is undoubtedly valid, but has not any greater force than that of the holder of a mortgage. V. infra note 3.

Rab Judah stated: If a wife brought to her husband² two articles worth a thousand zuz, and their value increased to two thousand, she receives one³ in settlement of her kethubah;⁴ and for the other⁵ she pays its price and receives it, since it represents assets of her paternal property.⁶

What are we taught by this⁷ statement! That assets of her paternal property belong to her? This, surely, has already been stated by Rab Judah!⁸ — It might have been assumed that that statement⁸ applied only where she came to claim [paternal property] as part of her kethubah, but not where she desired to take it in return for payment of its value, hence we were taught [that she may also pay its price and receive it].

MISHNAH. IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST WHO DIED AND LEFT HER PREGNANT, HER SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH⁹ IN VIRTUE OF THE SHARE OF THE EMBRYO,¹⁰ SINCE AN EMBRYO MAY DEPRIVE¹¹ [ITS MOTHER]¹² OF THE PRIVILEGE [OF EATING TERUMAH]¹³ BUT HAS NO POWER TO BESTOW IT UPON HER;¹⁴ SO R. JOSE. THEY¹⁵ SAID TO HIM: SINCE YOU HAVE TESTIFIED TO US IN RESPECT OF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST,¹⁶ THE SLAVES OF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, WHO A MARRIED TO A PRIEST WHO DIED AND LEFT HER WITH CHILD, SHOULD ALSO BE FORBIDDEN TO EAT TERUMAH ON ACCOUNT OF THE SHARE OF THE EMBRYO!¹⁷

GEMARA. A question was raised: Is R. Jose's reason¹⁸ because he is of the opinion that an embryo in the womb of a lay woman¹⁹ is regarded as a nonpriest,²⁰ or is his reason because only the born may bestow the right of eating but the unborn may not? — In what respect could this difference matter?²¹ — In respect of an embryo in the womb of a priest's daughter.²² Now, what is the reason? Rabbah replied: R. Jose's reason is this. He is of the opinion that an embryo in the womb of a lay woman¹⁹ is regarded as a non-priest.²⁰ R. Joseph replied: The born may bestow the privilege of eating while the unborn may not.

An objection was raised: They said to R. Jose: Since you have testified to us in respect of the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest, what is the law in respect of the daughter of a priest who was married to a priest? 'The first',²³ he replied, 'I heard;²⁴ but the other²⁵ I have not heard'.²⁶ Now, if you agree [that R. Jose's reason is because] an embryo in the womb of a lay woman²⁷ is regarded as a non-priest,²⁸ it was correct for him to say, 'The first I heard, but the other I did not'. If you maintain, however, [that R. Jose's reason is because] the born may bestow the right of eating and the unborn may not, what [could he have meant by] 'The first I have heard but the other I have not heard', when the principle is the same! — This is indeed a difficulty.

Said Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This²⁹ is the opinion of R. Jose; but the Sages said: If he³⁰ has children,³¹ they³² may eat [terumah] by virtue of his children;³³ if he has no children, they³² may eat by virtue of his³⁴ brothers, and if he has no brothers they³² may eat by virtue of the entire family.³⁵ 'This',³⁶ would imply that he³⁷ himself does not share the view;³⁸ but, surely, Samuel said to R. Hana of Bagdad, 'Go bring me a group of ten men that I may tell you in their presence³⁹ that if title is conferred upon an embryo [through the agency of a third party], it does acquire ownership'!⁴⁰ The fact is that 'this' here denotes that he⁴¹ also holds the same opinion. What, then, does he⁴¹ teach us?⁴² That the Rabbis disagree with R. Jose! But do they, in fact, disagree? Surely R. Zakkai stated:⁴³ This evidence⁴⁴ was submitted by R. Jose in the name of Shemaiah and Abtalion and they⁴⁵ agreed with him! — R. Ashi replied: Does it read, 'and they accepted'? It was only said, 'and they agreed', [which may only mean] that his view is logical.⁴⁶

left his widow with child,⁵² neither these nor the others⁴⁹ may eat it.⁵³ If he left children and also left his widow with child, the melog slaves may eat as she may eat;⁵⁴ but the zon barzel slaves may not eat, on account of the share of the embryo which may deprive [its mother]⁵⁵ of the privilege [of eating terumah] but has no power to bestow it;⁵⁶ so R. Jose. R. Ishmael son of R. Jose stated in the name of his father: A daughter may bestow the right of eating; a son may not.⁵⁷ R. Simeon b. Yohai said: [If the children⁵⁸ are] males, all [the slaves] may eat.⁵⁹ [If however they are] females, [the slaves] are not permitted to eat, since it is possible that the embryo might be a male;⁶⁰ and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all.⁶¹ What need was there to point⁶² to the possibility that the embryo might be a male when this⁶³ might be equally deduced [from the fact] that [even when the embryo is] a female it deprives them of the privilege!⁶⁴ — He meant to say: There is one reason and also an additional one. ‘There is the one reason’ that a female embryo also deprives [the slaves] of the privilege; and, furthermore,⁶⁵ ‘it is possible that the embryo might be a male and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all’.

‘[If the children are] males, [the slaves] may eat’. But, surely, there is an embryo in existence!⁶⁶ — He is of the opinion

- (51) The deceased priest.
- (52) And he is not survived by any other children.
- (53) Since the embryo cannot bestow the privilege (cf. supra n. 4) either upon his mother or upon the slaves.
- (54) The melog's slaves being the property of the widow and the embryo having no share in them. As by virtue of her living sons the widow is herself entitled to eat terumah she may also feed her slaves on it, Cf. supra n' 4.

- (58) Who survived the deceased priest.
- (59) On their account because the chances that the embryo will be a viable male and thus have a share in the slaves are so uneven that they may be disregarded. For, in the first instance, it is likely that the embryo will be a female and thus have no share at all in the slaves. And secondly, were it to be a male, it might yet be a miscarriage, which again would have no share in the slaves (v. infra).
- (60) Who, when born, will become the owner of the slaves.
- (61) The slaves, therefore, would be the property of the embryo which cannot bestow upon them the right of eating terumah.
- (62) As a reason why the slaves are forbidden to eat terumah in the latter case.
- (63) The prohibition upon the slaves.
- (64) Since the female embryo, when born, would be entitled to a share among the other daughters and now, therefore, as an embryo, deprives the slaves of the privilege.
- (65) Which is the other reason.
- (66) And it, owing to its share in them, should deprive the slaves of the privilege.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 67b

that no provision need be made against the less usual cases.¹ Or if you prefer I might say that he² is of the opinion that provision in fact must be made against the less usual cases also, [but here] a special arrangement might be made³ in accordance with a ruling of R. Nahman in the name of Samuel. For R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: Where orphans⁴ wish to divide the property of their [deceased] father, Beth din appoint a guardian for [every one of] them, and [each guardian] chooses for his ward a suitable portion. As soon, however, as they reach their majority they are entitled to enter a protest.⁵ In his own name, however, R. Nahman stated: Even when they reach majority they are not entitled to protest, for otherwise what validity is there in the authority of a Beth din!⁶

Must it be assumed that R. Nahman's ruling is a matter of dispute between Tannaim!⁷ — No; all accept R. Nahman's [arrange. ment],⁸ but the dispute here⁹ centres on the question whether¹⁰ provision was to be made against the less usual cases.¹¹

‘R. Ishmael], son of R. Jose, stated in the name of his father: A daughter may bestow the right of eating; a son may not.¹² Wherein lies the difference [between the son and the daughter]? If a son may not bestow the right of eating on account of the share of the embryo, a daughter also should not be entitled to bestow the right of eating on account of the share of the embryo! — Abaye replied: Here¹³ we are dealing with a small estate¹⁴ and in a case where there is a son¹⁵ as well as a daughter, [so that the slaves may eat the terumah] whatever be the assumption [as to the sex of the embryo]. If the embryo is a son then he is not better than the one who is already born.¹⁶ And if it is a daughter, then why does a daughter eat at all?¹⁷ Surely by virtue of an ordinance of the Rabbis.¹⁸ But so long as she has not seen the light¹⁹ no provision for her has been made by the Rabbis.²⁰ If you take it²¹ to refer²² to a small estate, [how will you] explain the final clause,²³ ‘since it is possible that the embryo might be a male, and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all’? On the contrary; a small estate belongs to the daughters! — The final clause refers to a large estate. But does a small estate belong to the daughters? Surely, R. Assi stated in the name of R. Johanan: Where male orphans forestalled [the ruling of Beth din] and sold a small estate, their sale is valid!²⁴ — But the fact is that by the mention of daughter ‘the mother’ is to be understood.²⁵ If so, this is exactly the same statement as that of R. Jose! — The entire statement was made by R. Ishmael son of R. Jose.

MISHNAH. AN EMBRYO,²⁶ A LEVIR,²⁷ BETROTHAL,²⁸ A DEAF-MUTE,²⁹ AND A BOY WHO IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD,³⁰ DEPRIVE [A WOMAN]³¹ OF THE RIGHT [OF EATING TERUMAH], BUT CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER,³² [EVEN WHEN] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD OR NOT,³³ OR WHETHER HE³⁴ HAS PRODUCED TWO HAIRS³⁵ OR NOT.

IF A HOUSE COLLAPSED UPON A MAN AND UPON HIS BROTHER'S DAUGHTER,³⁶ AND IT IS NOT KNOWN WHICH OF THEM DIED FIRST, HER RIVAL MUST PERFORM HALIZAH³⁷ BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.³⁸

GEMARA. AN EMBRYO, for if [its mother] is the daughter of a priest [who was married] to an Israelite [the embryo] deprives her of the privilege,³⁹ [for it is written]. As in her youth,⁴⁰ which excludes one who is with child.⁴¹ And if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest, the embryo does not bestow the privilege³⁹ upon her, because the living child does bestow the privileged but not the unborn.⁴²

A LEVIR, for if [his yebamah] is the daughter of a priest who was married to an Israelite, [the levir] deprives her of the privileged [for it is written], And is returned unto her father's house,⁴⁰ which excludes one who is awaiting the decision of the levir;⁴³ and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest [the levir] does not bestow the privilege upon her, because the All Merciful said, The purchase of his money.⁴⁴ while she is the purchase of his brother. BETROTHAL, for if [the woman] is the daughter of a priest [who was betrothed] to an Israelite, [betrothal] deprives her of the privilege,

- (1) Lit., 'a minority'. I.e., against the possibility that the embryo might be born a viable male. Against the possibility of male births there is the equal possibility of female births, and by adding the minority of miscarrying women to the half of female births, the male births are found to form only a minority.
- (2) R. Simeon.
- (3) The embryo is allotted as his share a portion of the estate exclusive of the slaves, who consequently form a portion of the shares of the living brothers, who, as their owners, bestow upon the slaves the right of eating terumah. Where, however, there are only daughters, such an arrangement cannot be made, since in such a case the embryo, in case he is born a viable male, is the sole heir and owner.
- (4) Who are minors.
- (5) Against the original division, and to demand a new one. The validity of acceptance of the shares by the guardians extends only to the produce or yield of the estate up to the date of the protest.

- (7) That R. Simeon, who permits the slaves to eat, in the case of sons, by adopting the arrangement mentioned, is of the same opinion as R. Nahman; while R. Jose, who forbids terumah to the slaves, maintaining as he evidently does that the arrangement is of no avail and that the division must be postponed until the heirs reach majority, is in disagreement with R. Nahman.
- (8) Wherever such had been made,
- (9) Between R. Jose and R. Simeon, supra 6a.
- (10) Where R. Nahman's arrangement had not been made,
- (11) R. Simeon permits the slaves to eat terumah, because he holds that no provision has to be made against the less usual cases (v. supra p. 451, n. 3) while R. Jose forbids them to eat it, because he maintains that provision must be made even against the less usual case.
- (12) This is now assumed to mean that where there is a daughter but no son, she bestows the right of eating terumah upon the slaves, but where there is a son, the slaves are not permitted to eat the terumah.
- (13) R. Ishmael's statement.
- (14) Which, by an ordinance of the Rabbis, must be handed over to the daughters for their maintenance while the sons receive nothing. v. B.B., 139b.
- (15) To whom the estate belongs in accordance with the Pentateuchal law.
- (16) Lit., 'exists', 'stands'. Since the Rabbis deprived the living son of his share and gave it to the daughters. they have, even more so, deprived the embryo of its share.
- (17) From her father's estate, though he is also survived by sons'
- (18) Pentateuchally she has no claim at all in the presence of a son.
- (19) Lit., 'came out into the air of the world'.
- (20) The embryo, consequently, cannot possibly have a share in the slaves, who may, therefore, eat terumah by virtue of the rights of the living children. Had there been a daughter only and no son, the slaves would not have been permitted to eat terumah on account of the embryo, which, were it a female, would have had in the slaves an equal share with their sister.
- (21) R. Ishmael's statement.
- (22) Lit., 'in what did you place it'.
- (23) Which presumably deals with a similar case.
- (24) Keth. 103a, Sotah 21b, B.B. 140a. Which proves that the estate, even when small, belongs to the sons also. How then could the slaves be permitted to eat terumah?
- (25) I.e., the mother of the embryo may feed her melog slaves with terumah as she herself is permitted to eat it by virtue of her living sons. A son, however, may not feed the zon barzel slaves with terumah owing to the share of the embryo.
- (26) Whose mother was (a) the daughter of a priest married to an Israelite, or (b) the daughter of an Israelite married to a priest, and whose father died before he (the embryo) was born.
- (27) The widow of whose deceased brother was (a) the daughter of a priest (he and his brother being Israelites), or (b) the daughter of an Israelite (he and his brother being priests).
- (28) Of (a) the daughter of a priest to an Israelite, or (b) the daughter of an Israelite to a priest.
- (29) Who is (a) an Israelite married to the daughter of a priest, or (b) a priest married to the daughter of an Israelite.
- (30) This is explained in the Gemara, infra.
- (31) If she is (a) the daughter of a priest (cf. last four notes).

- (32) If she is (b) the daughter of an Israelite (cf. supra notes 6-9).
- (33) This has no reference to what follows and is explained in the Gemara.
- (34) Who betrothed the woman.
- (35) Which are the marks of puberty, when he becomes legally entitled to contract a marriage.
- (36) To whom he had been married and who, like himself, died childless.
- (37) With the daughter's father, the brother of the deceased. Though the dead woman was his forbidden relative, her rival becomes subject to the halizah because it is possible that the woman had been killed before the man, and when the man died her former rival was no longer related to her. V. infra note 6.
- (38) Because it is also possible that the man was killed first and that the rival consequently remained forbidden to the levir as the rival of his daughter.
- (39) Of eating terumah.
- (40) Lev. XXII, 13.
- (41) Only when she returned unto her father's house as in her youth (v. ibid.), i.e., if, like a virgin, she has no child at all, not even an embryo, may she eat of her father's bread (ibid.) i.e., terumah.
- (42) This is deduced from Such as are born in his house etc. (Lev. XXII, 11) by taking the Kal יאכל in the sense of Hif. יאכל V Torath Kohanim, a.l., (v. Rashi).
- (43) Being dependent on the levir's will she cannot without his release, return to her father's house.
- (44) Lev. XXII, 11 emphasis on 'his.'

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 68a

since he acquires her by the betrothal;¹ and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was betrothed] to a priest, the betrothal cannot bestow the privilege upon her, owing to the ruling of 'Ulla.²

A DEAF-MUTE, for if [the woman] is the daughter of a priest [who was married] to [him³ who is] an Israelite, he deprives her of the privilege, since he⁴ acquired her by virtue of a Rabbinical enactment;⁵ and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to [him³ who is] a priest, he cannot bestow the privilege upon her, because the All Merciful said, The purchase of his money,⁶ while he³ is not eligible to execute any kinyan.

AND A BOY WHO IS NINE YEARS etc. This was assumed⁷ to refer to the case of a yebamah who was awaiting the decision of a levir who was nine years and one day old.⁸ Now, in what respect?⁹ If in respect of depriving her¹⁰ of the privilege,¹¹ a younger child would also equally deprive her of the privilege! And if in respect of bestowing the privilege,¹² a grownup levir also cannot bestow this privilege!¹³ — Abaye replied: We are dealing here with a levir of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabited with his yebamah¹⁴ who, according to Pentateuchal law, becomes his kinyan. Since it might have been assumed that, as Pentateuchally she becomes his kinyan, and his cohabitation also is legal, he should be entitled to bestow the privilege upon her, hence we were taught that the cohabitation of a boy who is nine years and one day old has been given the same validity only as that of a ma'amar by an adult.¹⁵ Said Raba to him: If so,¹⁶ [why] is it stated in the final clause, [EVEN WHEN] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD, OR NOT? If a boy who is certainly of the age of nine cannot bestow the privilege, is there any need to speak of a boy whose age is in doubt! — No, said Raba, [the Mishnah] deals with a boy of the age of nine years and one day belonging to one of the classes of disqualified persons who, by their cohabitation, deprive a woman¹⁷ of the privilege of eating terumah;¹⁸ as it was taught: An Ammonite,¹⁹ a Moabite,¹⁹ an Egyptian,²⁰ or an Idumean²⁰ proselyte, a Cuthean²¹, a nathin,²¹ a halal²¹ or a bastard, of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabits with the daughter of a priests of a Levite or of an Israelite, disqualifies her.²² But since it is stated in the final clause,²³ 'If they are not fit to enter the assembly of Israel they render [a woman] unfit', it may be inferred that the first clause does not deal with such disqualified persons! — The first clause speaks of those who are disqualified to enter the assembly, while the latter clause speaks of those who are disqualified to marry the daughter of a priest.²⁴

[To turn to] the main text:²⁵ An Ammonite,²⁶ a Moabite,²⁶ an Egyptian or an Idumean²⁷ proselyte, a Cuthean,²⁸ a nathin,²⁸ a halal²⁸ or a bastard, of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabits with the daughter of a priest, of a Levite or of an Israelite disqualifies her.²⁹ R. Jose said: Anyone whose children are disqualified causes disqualification;³⁰ he whose children are not disqualified does not cause disqualification.³⁰ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Whenever you may marry his daughter you may marry his widow,³⁰ and whenever you may not marry his daughter you may not marry his widow.³¹

Whence are these rulings³² deduced? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: Scripture stated, And if a priest's daughter be married unto to a strange man,³³ as soon as she has had connubial relations with a disqualified person³⁴ the latter disqualified her. But the text cited is surely required [for another] purpose, viz., that the All Merciful ordained that the daughter of a priest who was married to a layman³⁵ may not eat terumah! — That³⁶ may be deduced from the text, And is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father's bread.³⁷ Since the All Merciful ordained, And is returned unto her father's house . . . she may eat,³⁷ it follows that prior to that³⁸ she was not permitted to eat. But if [deduction were to be made] from that text,³⁷ [it may be objected] one might have assumed that as a negative precept³⁹ which is derived from a positive one⁴⁰ it has only the force of a positive precept,⁴¹ hence did the All Merciful write the other text⁴² to [indicate that it is] a negative precept! — [That it is] a negative precept may be deduced from, There shall no strange man⁴³ eat⁴⁴ of the holy things.⁴⁵

(1) And being, therefore, deemed to be his legal wife she is forbidden to eat terumah. V. Lev. XXII, 12.

(2) Though Pentateuchally a woman who is betrothed to a priest is entitled to the privilege of eating terumah, she has been forbidden to eat it during the period of betrothal, when she is still in her father's house, as a preventive measure against the possibility of her treating to it a brother or a sister of hers. V. Keth. 57b.

(3) The deaf-mute.

(4) Though mentally defective and, therefore, Pentateuchally ineligible to execute any kinyan.

(5) V. infra 112b.

(6) Lev. XXII, 11, emphasis on purchase (kinyan).

(7) By him who raised the following objection.

(8) And with whom no connubial intercourse had taken place.

(9) Is the age mentioned of any consequence.

(10) If she is the daughter of a priest, and the levir is an Israelite.

(11) Of the eating of terumah; the purpose of the ruling being to indicate that the levirate bond comes into force simultaneously with the levir's capability of cohabitation.

(12) When he is a priest and she is the daughter of an Israelite; the purpose being to indicate that, though he is capable of cohabitation, his levirate bond is not powerful enough to bestow upon his yebamah the privilege of eating terumah.

(13) As was explicitly stated earlier in our Mishnah.

(14) An act which in the case of a levir who is of age is valid.

(15) Which does not constitute complete kinyan (cf. supra 50a). The boy of the age of nine years and one day CANNOT consequently BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE any more than the others enumerated in our Mishnah. The ruling as to 'depriving a woman of the privilege' applies only to the cases of the EMBRYO, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL AND THE DEAF-MUTE but not to that of the boy of the age mentioned.

(16) That the boy of the age of nine years and one day was included only because of the ruling that he CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE, and that the ruling of 'depriving a woman of the privilege' does not apply to him, cf. supra n. 2.

(17) If she is the daughter of a priest.

(18) The boy of the age of nine years and one day accordingly deprives a woman of the privilege; and it is because of this ruling that the case of the boy was included in our Mishnah. The second ruling that certain persons CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE is not, of course, necessary in his case and applies only to the others enumerated, vi., THE EMBRYO, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL AND A DEAF-MUTE.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 68b

But that text is required for its own purpose!¹ The expression, 'There shall no strange man', is written twice.² But still is not this³ required for the exposition of R. Jose b. Hanina? For R. Jose b. Hanina stated: There shall no strange man³ implies, 'I have imposed upon you a prohibition concerning non-priests only but not concerning onan'⁴ — R. Jose b. Hanina's exposition may be deduced from the Scriptural use of the longer expression 'And there shall no strange man' instead of 'strange man'.⁵

But still is not this,⁶ required for the following which was taught:⁷ When she⁸ returns,⁹ she returns only to [the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and shoulder.¹⁰ And¹¹ R. Hisda stated in the name of Rabina b. R. Shila, 'What Scriptural text proves this? It is written, but if a priest's daughter be married unto a strange man, she shall not eat of the terumah of the holy things,¹² she must not eat of that which is set apart¹³ from the holy things'¹⁴ — If so,¹⁵ Scripture should have written. She shall not eat of the holy things'. why [then the longer expression], of the terumah of the holy things? Two deductions¹⁶ may, consequently be made.

We have now deduced¹⁷ [the law relating to] a priest's daughter;¹⁸ whence, however, is this deduced in respect of the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite? — As R. Abba stated in the name of Rab [that deduction is made from the Scriptural use of] ‘But a daughter’ [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used].¹⁹ so here also [deduction is made from the use of] ‘and a daughter’ [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used].²⁰ In accordance with whose view?²¹ Is it Only in accordance with that of R. Akiba who bases expositions on [superfluous] Wawin!²² — It²³ may be said to have been made even according to the view of the Rabbis, because the entire Scriptural expression, And a daughter²⁴ is superfluous.²⁵ [Thus the disqualification] in respect of terumah has been proved;²⁶ whence, [however, is it deduced that the disqualification extends also] to the prohibition of marrying a priest?²⁷ — Has not the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite been included²⁸ in respect of priestly marriage only? For, as regards terumah, neither of them is ever eligible to eat it.²⁹

Are they never eligible?³⁰ Such eligibility surely occurs when [a mother]³¹ eats terumah³² by virtue of the rights of her son!³³ — [The case of a mother, who eats terumah] by virtue of the rights of her son, may be deduced by inference a minori ad majus: If the daughter of a priest who eats the terumah by virtue of her own sanctity becomes disqualified³⁴ how much more so the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite who eats it only by virtue of the rights of her son.³⁵ [On the contrary], this [very point]³⁶ provides the reason.³⁷ A priest's daughter whose body is sacred is rightly disqualified,³⁴ this woman, however, whose own body is not sacred might not become disqualified!³⁸ — The fact is rather, that the prohibition³⁹ to marry a priest may be deduced a minori ad majus from a divorced woman: If a divorced woman who is permitted to eat terumah is nevertheless forbidden to marry a priest, how much more reason is there that such a woman⁴⁰ who is forbidden to eat terumah should be disqualified from marrying a priest.³⁵

May a prohibition, however, be deduced by logical argument!⁴¹

This⁴² is a mere elucidation [of the law].⁴³

Might it not be suggested [that the statement,] ‘she had connubial relations with a disqualified person’⁴⁴ [refers to persons cohabitation with whom is] subject to the penalty of kareth!⁴⁵ — The All Merciful said, If. . . be married,⁴⁶ only those with whom marriage is valid,⁴⁷ with those who are subject to the penalty of kareth marriage is not valid.⁴⁸ If so,⁴⁹ no idolater or slave should cause disqualification!⁵⁰ — These cause disqualification in accordance with a ruling of R. Ishmael. For R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Ishmael: Whence is it deduced that if an idolater or a slave cohabits with the daughter of an Israelite, of a priest or of a Levite, he disqualifies her?⁵¹ — It was stated in, But if a priest's daughter be a widow or divorced etc.,⁵²

(1) For the law concerning a non-priest. What proof then is there that a priest's daughter who married such a man is also subject to the same law?

(2) Once in Lev. XXII, 10, which refers to any non-priest; and a second time, ibid. 13. which speaks of the daughter of a priest who returns to her father's house, and concludes with the expression, There shall no strange etc. referring to the priest's daughter who is married to such a man.

(3) The second text, Lev. XXII, 13.

(4) Infra 70b, 71a. אֲנִינֹת the mourning of an onan, v. Glos.

(5) The superfluous and serves the purpose of R. Jose's deduction, and the remainder of the clause, therefore, indicates the negative precept.

(6) The text of Lev. XXII, 12.

(7) Infra 87a.

(8) The daughter of a priest who was divorced or became a widow and had no child.

(9) To her father's house.

(10) Which are also among the priestly gifts. Cf. Ex. XXIX, 27. Lev. VII, 34. X, 14.

(11) In explanation of the Baraitha.

(12) Lev. XXII, 12. תרומת הקדשים

(13) מורם of the same rt. as צרומת. V. supra n. 3.

(14) From the sacrifices, i.e., the breast and the shoulder. V. supra n. 1.

(15) That only one of the deductions mentioned is to be made from this text.

(16) That (a) a disqualified person disqualifies a priest's daughter with whom he cohabited (supra 68a), and (b) that when a priest's daughter returns as a widow or a divorcee to her father's house she is not permitted to eat of the breast and the shoulder of the peace-offerings.

(17) Lit., 'we found'.

(18) V. supra n. 7 (a).

(19) Infra 6a, 87a.

(20) The superfluous 'and' indicates a comparison between the daughter of the priest and the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite.

(21) Is the deduction made (v. n. 11).

(22) Plur. of waw 'and'. And not in accordance with the Rabbis who are in the majority? V. Sanh. 51b.

(23) The deduction from 'and a daughter'.

(24) Not only the jaw.

(25) Since the context, But if a priest . . . and such as are born in his house (Lev. XXII, 11) speaks of the relatives of a priest, it would have been obvious to whom v. 12 referred even if a priest's daughter were omitted, reading only. If she be married etc.

(26) Since Scripture mentions it. Lit., 'we found'.

(27) If a disqualified person cohabited with her. V. supra 68a.

(28) In the prohibition.

(29) Lit., 'for if for terumah, are they subjects of eating terumah?' As they are never allowed to eat terumah there is obviously no need to forbid it to them.

(30) To eat terumah. Lit., 'why not'.

(31) The daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite.

(32) After the death of her husband who was a priest.

(33) Who survived his father. A Scriptural text might consequently have been required to forbid a woman in such circumstances from eating terumah if she cohabited with a disqualified person!

(34) Lit., 'he (i.e., the disqualified man who cohabited with her) disqualifies her'.

(35) Hence no Scriptural text was needed to exclude her.

(36) The sacredness of the body of the priest's daughter.

(37) Why a priest's daughter only should be disqualified.

(38) Cf. supra notes 7 and 8 second clause.

(39) On the part of the daughter of a priest who cohabited with one of the disqualified persons mentioned.

(40) Cf. supra n. 13.

(41) A prohibition, which involves the penalty of flogging. must be derived from an explicit Scriptural text. V. Mak. 17b.

(42) The inference a fortiori mentioned.

(43) The actual prohibition, how ever, is based on the fact that she is forbidden to eat terumah; as she is forbidden to eat it owing to the loss of her sanctity, so is she forbidden to marry a priest.

(44) Who, as has been inferred, supra 68a, from a Scriptural text, causes her disqualification.

(45) A brother, for instance, betrothal with whom is invalid. What proof, however, is there that persons, such as a Cuthean, a nathin or a bastard, cohabitation with whom is subject to flogging only and betrothal with whom is valid, also disqualify a priest's daughter from marrying a priest?

(46) Lev. XXII, 12.

(47) Cause disqualification.

(48) Hence there was no need for a Scriptural text to exclude them. The text consequently refers to those who are subject to the penalty of flogging.

(49) That Scripture refers only to those with whom marriage is valid.

(50) But, as stated infra 69b, a slave does cause disqualification.

(51) From (a) marrying a priest; and (b) eating terumah in the case of the daughter of a priest, or in the case of the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite who was married to a priest who left her with children by virtue of whom she was entitled to the privilege of eating terumah.

(52) Lev. XXII, 13 which concludes, and is returned unto her father's house . . . she may eat of her father's bread, i.e., terumah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 69a

only in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood or divorce is applicable;¹ an idolater and a slave, however, are excluded, since in relation to them no widowhood or divorce is applicable.²

Thus we have found [the law concerning] the daughter of a priest;³ whence, however, [is the law concerning] the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite to be inferred? — As R. Abba stated in the name of Rab [that deduction is made from the Scriptural use of] ‘And a daughter’, [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used],⁴ so here also [deduction is made from the use of] ‘And a daughter’, [where only] ‘daughter’ could have been used.⁵ In accordance with whose view?⁶ Is it only in accordance with that of R. Akiba, who bases expositions on [superfluous] Wawin?⁷ — It⁸ may be said to have been made even according to the view of the Rabbis, because the entire [Scriptural expression] And a daughter⁹ is a superfluous text.¹⁰ But might it be suggested that in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood and divorce is possible,¹¹ [the woman]¹² may eat terumah if she¹³ has no children,¹⁴ and may not eat if she has children, but in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood and divorce are not possible¹⁵ she may eat terumah even if she¹³ has children?¹⁶ — If so,¹⁷ what need was there to include the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite!¹⁸

According to R. Akiba, however, who stated that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalty of a negative commandment has no validity and that the meaning of¹⁹ If . . . be married²⁰ to a strange man²¹ is ‘if she cohabits’,²² what need was there²³ [for] ‘widow or divorced’?²⁴ — The widow was stated²⁵ in order to restrict her privilege;²⁶ and the divorced woman, in order to relax her restrictions.²⁷ And [both²⁸ were] required. For had only the widow been mentioned it might have been assumed that only a widow may eat terumah if she has no children because she is eligible to marry a priest but, a divorced woman who is ineligible to marry a priest may not eat it even if she has no children. And had the divorced woman only been mentioned it might have been suggested that only a divorced woman may not eat terumah if she has children because she is ineligible to marry a priest, but a widow who is eligible to marry a priest may eat it even if she has children. [Hence both were] necessary.

Might it not be suggested [that the statement], ‘She had connubial relations with a disqualified person’²⁹ refers also to one who remarried his divorced wife!³⁰ — The All Merciful said, To a strange man, only one who was formerly a stranger to her.³¹ Her former husband³² is excluded since he was not formerly a stranger to her.

If so, a halal,³³ who is not a stranger³⁴ to her,³⁵ should not cause her disqualification! Scripture stated, He shall not profane his seed among his people;³⁶ ‘his seed’³⁷ is compared to himself, as he disqualifies³⁸ so does his seed disqualify.³⁹

Might it be suggested [that the disqualification⁴⁰ is effected] from the moment of betrothal?⁴¹ — [His case⁴² must be] similar to that of a High Priest with a widow. As a High Priest, in the case of a widow, [causes her disqualification] by cohabitation only,⁴³ so does this [person⁴⁴ cause disqualification] by cohabitation only.

Might it be suggested [that disqualification⁴⁰ is effected] only where there was betrothal as well as cohabitation? — His case⁴² must be similar to that of a High Priest with a widow. As the High Priest, [when he marries] a widow, [causes her disqualification] by cohabitation alone⁴⁵ so does this [person⁴⁶ cause disqualification] by cohabitation alone.

‘R. Jose however said: ‘Anyone whose children are disqualified causes disqualification, but he whose children are not disqualified does not cause disqualification’. What is the practical difference between the first Tanna and R. Jose? — R. Johanan replied: The difference between them is the case of an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation and an Idumean proselyte of the second generation.⁴⁷ And both of them⁴⁸ deduced their respective views from none other than [the disqualification] of a widow by a High Priest. The first Tanna reasons: As a High Priest whose cohabitation with a widow is forbidden causes her disqualification, so does this person⁴⁹ also cause disqualification. R. Jose, however, reasons thus: Like a High Priest. As a High Priest whose seed is disqualified causes disqualification, so does any other person cause disqualification only when his seed is disqualified; an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation is thus excluded, since his children are not disqualified, for it is written, The children of the third generation that are born unto them may enter into the assembly of the Lord.⁵⁰

‘R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Whenever you may marry his daughter, you may marry his widow etc.’ What is the practical difference between R. Jose and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel? ‘Ullah replied: The difference between them is the case of an Ammonite and a Moabite proselyte.⁵¹ And both of them⁵² derived their respective views from none other than [the disqualification] of a widow by a High Priest. R. Jose reasons thus: As with a High Priest who married a widow, his seed is disqualified and he himself causes disqualification, so does any other person cause disqualification only when his seed is disqualified. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, reasons thus: As with a High Priest who married a widow, all his seed⁵³ is disqualified and he himself causes disqualification, so does only such a person cause disqualification, all whose seed is disqualified; an Ammonite and a Moabite are, therefore, excluded since not all their seed are disqualified.⁵⁴ For a Master said: An Ammonite,⁵⁵ but not an Ammonitess; a Moabite,⁵⁵ but not a Moabite.⁵⁶ MISHNAH. THE VIOLATOR, THE SEDUCER AND THE IMBECILE⁵⁷ CAN NEITHER DEPRIVE A WOMAN⁵⁸ OF THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH NOR CAN THEY BESTOW THE RIGHT UPON HER.⁵⁹ IF THEY ARE, HOWEVER, UNFIT TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY OF ISRAEL⁶⁰ THEY DO DEPRIVE A WOMAN⁵⁸ OF HER RIGHT TO THE EATING OF TERUMAH.⁶¹ HOW? IF⁶² AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST⁶³ SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH.

(1) Viz., a legitimate Israelite. Only in such a case does the widow or divorced woman regain her right of eating terumah.

(2) Their betrothal and marriage having no validity.

(3) That intercourse with a slave or an idolater causes her disqualification.

(4) Supra 68b, infra 87b.

(5) Supra 68b, p. 459, n. 11.

(6) Was the deduction made.

(7) V. supra p 459, O. 13.

(8) The deduction from ‘And a daughter.’

(9) Lev. XXII, 13.

(10) As Lev. XXII, 13 follows v. 12 which deals with the daughter of a priest, the subject, ‘a priest's daughter’, of v. 13, could have been omitted as self-evident.’

(11) A legitimate Israelite or Levite.

(12) A priest's daughter after she had been divorced by her husband or become a widow.

(13) Cf. Rashi, Cur. edd., ‘to him’.

(14) From that husband. V. supra n. 8.

(15) An idolater, for instance, or a slave.

(16) The cohabitation with such a person having no legal effect whatsoever.

(17) That from the Scriptural text mentioned a relaxation of the law is to be deduced, its purpose being the indication that a priest's daughter is not disqualified even where she has issue from an idolater or a slave.

(18) If a priest's daughter is not disqualified, how much less the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite. The purpose of the Scriptural text, therefore, must be taken to be the disqualification of the daughter of a priest. The inclusion of the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite was, therefore, necessary to indicate that even if either of those was enjoying the privilege of eating terumah, by virtue of the rights of the children she had from a priest, she loses that privilege if she cohabited with an idolater or a slave even though the act resulted in no issue.

(19) Lit., 'and what'.

(20) תהיה lit., 'shall be'.

(21) Lev. XXII, 12.

(22) Since no legal marriage with any of the disqualified persons is at all possible.

(23) When cohabitation with an idolater or a slave had taken place.

(24) To exclude, as stated supra an idolater and slave, in relation to whom no widowhood or divorce is possible since they are surely included among the other disqualified persons betrothal or marriage with whom is invalid!

(25) Not for the purpose of the deduction made by R. Ishmael.

(26) To indicate that a priest's daughter who was the widow of an Israelite may not eat terumah if she has children, even after the death of her husband. Had no Scriptural text indicated this law it might have been assumed that she may eat terumah even if she had children from the Israelite.

(27) To allow her (cf. supra n. 4) to eat terumah where she has no issue from the Israelite. Had not Scripture indicated this law it might have been assumed that as the divorcee was forbidden to marry a priest so she was forbidden to eat terumah even if her union with the Israelite produced no issue.

(28) Widow and divorcee.

(29) Who, as deduced from a Scriptural text, supra 68a, causes the disqualification of the woman with whom he cohabited.

(30) After she had been married to another man. Such a marriage being forbidden (v. Deut. XXIV, 4), the first husband should be regarded as a 'strange man' (Lev. XXII, 12) and consequently included among the persons who cause a woman's disqualification. Why, then, was it stated (supra 44b) that a woman so remarried to her first husband is permitted to marry a priest and, all the more, to eat terumah! (V. Rashi a.l. Cf., however, Tosaf s.v. איה supra 44b).

(31) Who was never allowed to marry her.

(32) Lit., that'.

(33) V. Glos.

(34) V. Rash and Bah. Cut. edd. insert, 'formerly'.

(35) He may marry' a priest's daughter.

(36) Lev. XXI, 15, referring to a High Priest.

(37) I.e., a halal

(38) A widow whom he married from the eating of terumah (v. Kid. 77a).

(39) Any woman he marries.

(40) Of a woman by marrying a 'strange man', a disqualified person.

(41) הויה havayah as implied in the expression תהיה tihyeh '(she shall) be' Lev. XXII, 12 (of the same rt. היה), the woman remaining disqualified even if, owing to the death of the disqualified person no cohabitation took place.

(42) That of the disqualified person. deduced from the text mentioned.

(43) Since the text specifically mentions his seed (Lev. XXI, 15). V. also supra 56b.

(44) The disqualified person, V. supra n. 10.

(45) Since the disqualification is effected even if there was no betrothal.

(46) V. supra note 10.

(47) Who are themselves forbidden to marry into the congregation (v. Deut. XXIII, 8) but their children, being of the third generation, are permitted. (Ibid. 9). According to the first Tanna one of the second generation causes the disqualification of the woman he marries; while according to R. Jose he does not, because his children are not disqualified.

(48) R. Jose and the first Tanna.

(49) An Ammonite or a Moabite proselyte of the second generation, cohabitation with whom is forbidden. Cf. p. 464, n. 15.

(50) Deut. XXIII, 9.

- (51) According to R. Jose such a proselyte causes disqualification; according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel he does not. V. Gemara infra.
- (52) R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and R. Jose.
- (53) Daughters as well as sons.
- (54) Their daughters being permitted to marry into the congregation.
- (55) Shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord. Deut. XXIII, 4.
- (56) Infra 76b, Kid. 67b, Keth. 7b, Hul. 62b.
- (57) Even if betrothal took place. The action of an imbecile has no legal force.
- (58) If she is a priest's daughter entitled to eat terumah.
- (59) If they are priests and she is the daughter of an Israelite.
- (60) Those, e.g., who are enumerated in Deut. XXIII, 2ff.
- (61) Since she becomes profaned through their intercourse with her.
- (62) Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis, 'he was'. Bah reads instead, 'behold'.
- (63) Against her will or with her consent, but with no matrimonial intention.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 69b

IF SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NO LONGER EAT TERUMAH.¹ IF THE EMBRYO WAS CUT IN HER WOMB SHE MAY EAT.² IF³ A PRIEST HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. [EVEN IF] SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NOT EAT.⁴ IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD SHE MAY EAT.⁵ THE POWER OF THE SON IS THUS GREATER THAN THAT OF THE FATHER.⁶

A SLAVE, BY HIS COHABITATION, DEPRIVES A WOMAN⁷ OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH⁸ BUT NOT AS HER OFFSPRING.⁹ HOW? — IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST OR THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AND SHE BORE A SON BY HIM, AND THE SON WENT AND VIOLATED A BONDWOMAN WHO BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS A SLAVE;¹⁰ AND IF HIS FATHER'S MOTHER WAS AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH;¹¹ BUT IF SHE WAS A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER AND MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH.¹²

A BASTARD DEPRIVES A WOMAN¹³ OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH AND ALSO BESTOWS THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER.¹⁴ HOW? IF AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST OR A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AND SHE BORE A DAUGHTER BY HIM, AND THE DAUGHTER WENT AND MARRIED A SLAVE OR AN IDOLATER AND BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS A BASTARD; AND IF HIS MOTHER'S MOTHER WAS AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH; BUT IF SHE WAS A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.

A HIGH PRIEST SOMETIMES DEPRIVES A WOMAN¹³ OF HER RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH. HOW? IF A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE AND SHE BORE A DAUGHTER BY HIM, AND THE DAUGHTER WENT AND MARRIED A PRIEST AND BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS FIT TO BE A HIGH PRIEST, TO STAND AND MINISTER AT THE ALTAR. HE ALSO BESTOWS UPON HIS MOTHER¹⁵, THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH, BUT DEPRIVES¹⁶ HIS MOTHER'S MOTHER¹⁷ OF THIS PRIVILEGE. THE LATTER¹⁸ CAN RIGHTLY SAY, '[MAY THERE] NOT [BE ANOTHER] LIKE MY GRANDSON THE HIGH PRIEST WHO DEPRIVES ME OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH.

GEMARA. [Here]¹⁹ we learn what the Rabbis taught: If an imbecile or a minor married and died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from levirate marriage.²⁰

IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NO LONGER EAT. Since she may not eat when she is definitely with child, precaution should be taken against the possibility that she might be with child!²¹ Did we not learn, 'They²² must be kept apart²³ for three months, since it is possible that they are pregnant'?²⁴ Rabbah son of R. Huna replied: In respect of genealogy²⁵ precautions were taken;²⁶ in respect of terumah no such precautions were considered necessary. But was no such precaution considered necessary in respect of terumah? Surely, it was taught: [If a priest said]²⁷ 'Here is your letter of divorce [which shall become effective] one hour before my death', she is forbidden to eat terumah at once!²⁸ — In fact,²⁹ said Rabbah son of R. Huna, precautions were taken in respect of legitimate marriage,³⁰ but in respect of illegitimate intercourse³¹ no such precaution was considered necessary.³² But was such precaution, taken in respect of legitimate marriage? Surely, it was taught: If a priest's daughter was married to an Israelite who died,³³ she may perform her ritual immersion³⁴ and eat terumah the same evening!³⁵ — R. Hisda replied: She performs the immersion but may eat terumah only until the fortieth day. For if she is not found pregnant³⁶ she never was pregnant;³⁷ and if she is found pregnant,³⁸ the semen, until the fortieth day, is only a mere fluid.³⁹ Said Abaye to him: If so,⁴⁰ read the final clause: If the embryo in her womb can be distinguished she is considered to have committed an offence⁴¹ retrospectively!⁴² — The meaning is that⁴³ she is considered to have committed an offence⁴¹ retrospectively⁴⁴ to the fortieth day.⁴⁵

It was stated: Where a man cohabited with his betrothed in the house of his [future] father-in-law, Rab said: The child is a bastard; and Samuel said: The child is a shethuki.⁴⁶ Raba said: Rab's view is reasonable in the case where the betrothed woman was suspected of illicit relations with strangers.⁴⁷ Where, however, she is not suspected of illicit relations with strangers the child is ascribed to him.⁴⁸ Said Raba: Whence do I infer this? From the statement, IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD SHE MAY EAT. For how is this to be understood? If it be suggested to refer to a woman who is suspected of illicit relations with strangers, why should she be allowed to eat terumah when she bore a child!⁴⁹ Consequently it must refer to a woman⁵⁰ who was suspected of illicit relations with him only but not with strangers. Now, if there⁵¹ where she is forbidden to the one as well as to the other,⁵² the child is regarded as his⁵³ how much more so⁵⁴ here⁵⁵ where she is forbidden to all other men and permitted to him. Said Abaye to him: It may still be maintained that Rab is of the opinion that wherever she is suspected of illicit relations with him,⁵⁶ the child is deemed to be a bastard even where she is not suspected of such relations with others. What is the reason? Because it is assumed that as she exposed herself to the man who betrothed her so she exposed herself to others also; but our Mishnah⁵⁷ deals with the case where both of them⁵⁸ were imprisoned in the same gaol.⁵⁹

Others say: Where he⁵⁶ cohabited with her, no one disputes that the child is regarded as his; but the statement made was in the following form. Where a betrothed woman became pregnant, Rab ruled: Such a child is a bastard; and Samuel ruled: The child is a shethuki.⁶⁰ Raba said: Rab's view is reasonable where the woman was not suspected of illicit relations with him,⁵⁶ but was suspected of such relations with others,⁶¹

(1) The embryo causes its mother's disqualification. V. supra 67b.

(2) Immediately. And the same law applies where the embryo was born dead.

(3) Cur. edd., 'he was'; Bah, 'behold'.

(4) An embryo in the womb cannot confer upon its mother the privilege of eating terumah, as deduced from born in his house (Lev. XXII. 11). V. supra 67b.

(5) By virtue of the existence of a son, though he is illegitimate.

- (6) While the latter, as a violator or seducer, cannot confer the privilege, the son can.
- (7) If she is a priest's daughter entitled to eat terumah.
- (8) As explained supra 68b.
- (9) If the slave is the offspring of a priest's daughter who was married to an Israelite now dead, he does not deprive her of the right of returning to the house of her father again to eat terumah. V. infra for further explanation.
- (10) The child of a bondwoman, though of an Israelite father, is deemed a slave, as deduced from Ex. XXI, 4.
- (11) If her husband and her son (the father of the slave) are dead. Though the son of a son (like a son) confers upon his grandmother the right of eating terumah (v. infra 70a), the offspring of a union between an Israelite and a bondwoman is not regarded as the legitimate son of his father but as the child of his mother.
- (12) The slave not being regarded as legitimate offspring (cf. supra n. 2) to deprive her of the privilege.
- (13) If she is a priest's daughter entitled to eat terumah.
- (14) If she was the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest now dead.
- (15) Even after the death of his father.
- (16) As the living offspring of an Israelite.
- (17) Though his own mother is dead. Were it not for his existence, his grandmother would have regained her original right of eating terumah on the death of her daughter. V. infra 87a.
- (18) Lit., 'this'.
- (19) In the statement that an imbecile's betrothal neither confers upon a woman, nor deprives her of the right of eating terumah (v. our Mishnah), thus affirming that an imbecile's kinyan has no validity.
- (20) Tosef. Yeb. XI, infra 96b, 2b; because there is no validity whatsoever in the kinyan of his marriage.
- (21) And should, in consequence, be forbidden to eat terumah immediately after intercourse had taken place. Why then was it stated, IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE. . . SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH?
- (22) Women who have been exchanged for one another. (V. the Mishnah, supra 33b).
- (23) I.e., they are forbidden to cohabit with their husbands.
- (24) Supra 33b. Similar precaution, then, should have been taken here also!
- (25) The Mishnah cited is concerned with safeguarding the status of a legitimate child by taking the necessary precautions to distinguish him from the illegitimate.
- (26) In the interests of the purity of family life special precautions were necessary.
- (27) To his wife, the daughter of an Israelite.
- (28) Suk. 23b, Git. 28a, Ned. 3b; since the priest might die at any moment while the woman was indulging in the consumption of terumah. This proves that in respect of terumah also precautions were taken.
- (29) Withdrawing from his first reply.
- (30) Of which the Mishnah (supra 33a) cited speaks.
- (31) The subject of the section of our Mishnah under consideration.
- (32) V. supra 35a.
- (33) On the same day, after one act of cohabitation.
- (34) Prescribed in Lev. XV, 18.
- (35) No precaution being taken against the possibility that the woman may have conceived and thereby remained forbidden to eat terumah.
- (36) On the fortieth day.
- (37) And is allowed to eat terumah after that day also.
- (38) On the fortieth day.
- (39) And cannot be regarded as a child.
- (40) That prior to the fortieth day the woman is not regarded as pregnant.
- (41) Lit., 'injured'.
- (42) She pays compensation for any terumah she may have consumed by returning to the priest the principal plus a fifth. V. Lev. XXII, 14.
- (43) Lit., 'what'.
- (44) If she ate terumah at any time after the fortieth day.
- (45) But not earlier. She pays no compensation for any terumah she may have consumed prior to the fortieth day.
- (46) Only a doubtful bastard. V. Glos. and Kid. 6.
- (47) Lit., 'when she is spoken of in a low voice from (by) the world'.

- (48) The man who betrothed her.
- (49) There is no proof that the priest was the child's father.
- (50) Lit., 'but no'.
- (51) In our Mishnah.
- (52) To the violator and seducer as well as to any other man, for it is forbidden to have intercourse with a woman without betrothal.
- (53) The violator's or seducer's.
- (54) Should the child be regarded as the son of the man who betrothed her.
- (55) The case where the man cohabited with his betrothed.
- (56) The man who betrothed her.
- (57) Which regards the child as the son of the violator or seducer.
- (58) The man and the woman.
- (59) Where no intercourse with any other man was possible.
- (60) Only a doubtful bastard. V. Glos. and Kid. 6.
- (61) These being in the majority, the child is deemed to be the son of one of the strangers.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 70a

, but where she is suspected of illicit relations with him, the child is regarded as his, although she is also suspected of such relations with others. Said Raba: Whence do I derive this? From the Statement, IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD, SHE MAY EAT. For how is this to be understood? If it be suggested to refer to a woman who is suspected of illicit relations with him but not with strangers, was it at all necessary to state that she may eat terumah?¹ Consequently it must refer to a woman² who was suspected of illicit relations with strangers also. Now, if there,³ where she is forbidden to the one as well as to the other,⁴ the child is regarded as his,⁵ how much more so⁶ here⁷ where she is forbidden to any other man and is permitted to him.⁸ Said Abaye to him: It may still be maintained that Rab is of the opinion that wherever she is suspected of illicit relations with strangers the child is deemed to be a bastard even if she is also suspected of such relations with him; and our Mishnah deals with one who had not been suspected at all.⁹

A SLAVE, BY HIS COHABITATION, DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH etc. What is the reason?¹⁰ — Scripture stated, The wife and her¹¹ children shall be etc.¹²

A BASTARD DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH AND ALSO BESTOWS THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER. Our Rabbis taught: And have no child.¹³ So far I only know¹⁴ of her own child; whence her child's child? It was consequently stated, And have no child,¹³ implying 'any child whatsoever'.¹⁵ So far I only know of a legitimate child; whence the illegitimate child? It was stated, And have no [en lah]¹⁶ child,¹³ which implies, 'hold an enquiry'¹⁷ concerning her.'¹⁸ But from this text,¹³ surely, the deduction concerning a child's child was made! — No Scriptural text is really required for the inclusion of one's child's child, since children's children are like children;¹⁹ if a text is at all required it is for the inclusion of an illegitimate child.

Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: In accordance with whose view?²⁰ Is it only in accordance with that of R. Akiba who maintains that the offspring of a union between such whose intercourse involves them in the penalty of a negative precept is regarded as a bastard!²¹ — It may even be said to represent the view of the Rabbis, since in respect of an idolater and a slave they agree.²² For when R. Dimi came²³ he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abdimi in the name of our Master:²⁴ If an idolater or a slave cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite, the child born from such a union is deemed a bastard.

A HIGH PRIEST SOMETIMES DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF HER RIGHT. Our Rabbis taught:

[The grandmother might justly say], 'I would [willingly] be an atonement²⁵ for my grandson, the little cruse²⁶ who bestows upon me the privilege of eating terumah,²⁷ but would not be an atonement for my grandson, the big jar²⁸ who deprives me of the privilege of eating terumah.²⁷

CHAPTER VIII

MISHNAH. AN UNCIRCUMCISED [PRIEST]²⁹ AND ALL LEVITICALLY UNCLEAN PERSONS MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. THEIR WIVES AND SLAVES, HOWEVER, MAY EAT TERUMAH.³⁰ [A PRIEST WHO IS] WOUNDED IN HIS STONES³¹ AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF,³² AS WELL AS THEIR SLAVES, MAY EAT TERUMAH, BUT THEIR WIVES MAY NOT.³³ IF, HOWEVER, NO COHABITATION TOOK PLACE AFTER THE MAN WAS WOUNDED OR HAD HIS MEMBRUM CUT OFF, THE WIVES³⁴ ARE PERMITTED TO EAT.³⁵

WHO IS TERMED A PEZU' A DAKKAH?³¹ A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED EITHER IN BOTH HIS STONES, OR EVEN ONLY IN ONE OF THEM. AND A KERUTH SHOFEKAH ? A MAN WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF. IF, HOWEVER, [ANY PART] OF THE CORONA REMAINED, EVEN SO MUCH AS A HAIR'S BREADTH, THE MAN IS REGARDED AS FIT.

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Eliezer³⁶ stated, Whence is it deduced that an uncircumcised [priest] may not eat terumah? A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned in connection with the paschal lamb,³⁷ and A sojourner and a hired servant were also mentioned in respect of terumah,³⁸ as the paschal lamb, in connection with which 'A sojourner and a hired servant' were mentioned, is forbidden to the uncircumcised,³⁹ so is terumah, in respect of which 'A sojourner and a hired servant' were mentioned, forbidden to the uncircumcised. R. Akiba stated: This deduction is unnecessary. Since it was stated, What man soever,⁴⁰ the uncircumcised also is included.⁴¹

The Master said, 'R. Eliezer stated, "A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned in connection with the paschal lamb, and "A sojourner and a hired servant" were also mentioned in respect of terumah,'⁴² as the paschal lamb, in connection with which "A sojourner and a hired servant" were mentioned, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is terumah, in respect of which "A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned, forbidden to the uncircumcised'. Is it⁴³ free for deduction?⁴⁴ For if it is not free, the objection might be raised⁴⁵ that the paschal lamb may be different⁴⁶ since in connection with it one may also incur penalties⁴⁷ for pigul,⁴⁸ nothar⁴⁸ and uncleanness!⁴⁹ — It is certainly free for the deduction. Which expression⁵⁰ is free? Is it that of terumah? Surely it is required for its own purpose. For it was taught: A sojourner⁵¹ means one who is acquired for life⁵² and a hired servant⁵¹ means one who is acquired for a number of years.⁵³ But let 'sojourner' only be mentioned and a 'hired servant' be omitted and one would infer: If one who is acquired for life⁵⁴ is not permitted to eat terumah how much less one who is acquired only for a number of years! If so,⁵⁵ it might have been assumed that 'a sojourner' means one who is acquired for a number of years [and that only he may not eat terumah],⁵⁶ but that one who is acquired for life may eat,⁵⁷ hence the insertion of the expression, 'a hired servant', which explains the meaning of sojourner,⁵⁸ [viz.,] that it signifies one who, though acquired for life, may not eat!⁵⁹ — But [in fact] the one⁶⁰ mentioned in respect of the paschal lamb is free for deduction. For what could be the meaning of 'A sojourner and a hired servant' which the All Merciful wrote in connection with the paschal lamb?⁶¹ If it be suggested that it means the actual sojourner and hired servant,⁶² [could it have been imagined] that [an Israelite]⁶³ is exempt from the Paschal lamb because he is a sojourner or a hired servant? Surely, we have it as an established law in regard to terumah that such a person is not permitted to eat it,⁶⁴

(1) Certainly not; since the child is obviously the son of the priest.

(2) Lit., 'but no'.

- (3) In our Mishnah.
- (4) To the violator and seducer as well as to any other man.
- (5) The violator's or seducer's.
- (6) Should the child be regarded as the son of the man who betrothed her.
- (7) The case of the betrothed.
- (8) The man who betrothed her.
- (9) Either in respect of the violator or seducer on the one hand or in respect of any others. All that our Mishnah teaches is that if cohabitation with the former took place, even if only once, the child is regarded as his.
- (10) Why is he not regarded as the offspring of the priest? V. our Mishnah and supra p. 466, n. 16.
- (11) Emphasis on her.
- (12) Shall be her master's (Ex. XXI, 4), i.e., they are regarded (a) as slaves, and (b) as the offspring of the bondwoman. Hence they cannot be regarded as the offspring of the priest.
- (13) וּזְרַע אֵין לָהּ Lev. XXII, 13.
- (14) Had לָהּ been omitted.
- (15) Lit., 'from all (any) place'.
- (16) אֵין לָהּ.
- (17) עֵיִן ayayn 'examine', 'investigate'. The Aleph of אֵין is interchangeable with the 'Ayin of עֵיִן.
- (18) An enquiry is to be made whether she has any kind of son, i.e., even if only a bastard. Thus a bastard also is deemed to be her child. Cf. supra 22b.
- (19) Supra 62b.
- (20) Was it stated in our Mishnah that the offspring of a union between the daughter of an Israelite and an idolater or a slave (a union which is forbidden by a negative precept only, no kareth being involved, cf. supra 45a) is regarded as a bastard.
- (21) Does our Mishnah, then, represent the view of an individual, which is contrary to the expressed view of the majority.
- (22) With R. Akiba.
- (23) From Palestine.
- (24) Rabbi, Judah the Prince, the Master par excellence of his time. Cf. supra 45a.
- (25) הַרִינִי כַפְרַת an expression of respect or affection. Cf. Kid. 31b.
- (26) Metaph. for bastard. כּוֹזֵה cf. כּוֹם.
- (27) As stated in our Mishnah.
- (28) The High Priest. Cf. the colloquial expres. 'big pot'.
- (29) Though the uncircumcision was not due to any fault of his. If, e.g., he was forbidden circumcision because his brothers died as a result of such an operation. Cf. supra 64b.
- (30) By virtue of the rights of their husband and master. Uncircumcision and uncleanness are only temporary disqualifications which prevent the priest from eating terumah, while they continue. His sanctity and privileges, however, remain in force.
- (31) פְּצוּעַ דָּכָה
- (32) כְּרוֹת שִׁפְכָה
- (33) Because the cohabitation with these maimed priests causes the profanation of the women.
- (34) Who were married to them before they were maimed.
- (35) Terumah.
- (36) Cur. edd. 'Eleazar'. Cf. Tosaf. Sotah 240 s.v. וּרְבִי, and Men. 17b s.v. מֵאֵי.

- (41) In the prohibition; the text, according to Rabbinical interpretation, referring to the prohibition of eating terumah.
- (42) V. supra p. 473 notes.
- (43) The expression. 'A sojourner and a hired servant'.
- (44) I.e., is not the expression required in connection with the subject spoken of in the context.
- (45) Against deducing terumah from the Paschal lamb.

- (46) From terumah, i.e., subject to greater restrictions.
- (47) Kareth if the transgression was wilful, and a sin-offering if unwitting.
- (48) V. Glos.
- (49) How then could terumah which is not surrounded by such restrictions be deduced from it?
- (50) Of the two expressions, 'A sojourner and a hired servant'.
- (51) Lev. XXII, 20.
- (52) Lit., 'an everlasting possession', i.e., a Hebrew servant who, on refusing to go out free, has had his ear bored. (Cf. Ex. XXI, 5f).
- (53) The ordinary Hebrew servant who remains the property of his master for six years only, after which he goes out free for nothing (v. Ex. XXI, 2).
- (54) Who is in fact his master's absolute property.
- (55) If only the sojourner had been mentioned.
- (56) Since he is not his master's absolute possession.
- (57) Since he is the absolute property of his master.
- (58) Since a hired servant implies one who is acquired for a period, the other expression cannot refer to the same class of servant, but to one acquired for life. תושב E.V. a sojourner (rt. ישב 'to abide') implies longer service than that of the שכיר E.V., hired servant.
- (59) How, then, since the expression is required for the laws of terumah, could it be suggested that the expression, 'a sojourner and a hired servant', mentioned in connection with terumah, is free for deduction?
- (60) The expression 'A sojourner and a hired servant'.
- (61) Ex. XII, 45, a sojourner . . . shall not eat thereof.
- (62) I.e., a Hebrew servant who (a) serves his master for life or (b) for a period of years. Cf. supra p. 474, nn. 14 and 15.
- (63) Who is subject to the fulfilment of the commandments.
- (64) Though his master is a priest.

which proves¹ that his master does not acquire his person² so that here also³ his master does not acquire his person!⁴ [The expression]⁵ must consequently [have been written] for the purpose of the deduction.⁶

But is it⁷ not free in one direction only,⁸ while R. Eliezer⁹ was heard to state [that an analogy between expressions of which only] one¹⁰ is free¹¹ may be drawn, but may also be refuted!¹² — Since [the expressions]¹³ are not required [for their own context]¹⁴ one of them is allotted to the law¹⁵ in respect of which the inference is made¹⁶ and the other is allotted to the law from which the inference is made,¹⁷ so that a word analogy is obtained which is free in both directions.

Might¹⁸ [not the deduction be made:]¹⁹ As the paschal lamb is forbidden to an onan²⁰ so is terumah forbidden to an onan²¹ — R. Jose son of R. Hanina replied: Scripture stated, 'There shall no common man,²² I commanded you concerning its prohibition to the common man²³ but not concerning that of the onan. But might it be suggested: But not the uncircumcised!²⁴ Surely 'A sojourner and a hired servant'²⁵ was written.²⁶ And what reason do you see?²⁷ — It is logical to infer that the case of the uncircumcised is to be included, since²⁸ it involves the absence of an act²⁹ and that act is one affecting the man's own body; [the uncircumcised] is punishable by kareth;³⁰ the law²⁹ was in force before the Revelation;³¹ and the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars [one from eating of the paschal lamb].³² On the contrary; the case of the onan should have been included,³³ since mourning is an ever-present possibility,³⁴ is common to men as well as to women, and no man has the power to cure himself of it!³⁵ — Those³⁶ are more in number.

Raba said: Even if those³⁶ were not more in number, you could not suggest that uncircumcision, which is actually mentioned in respect of the Paschal lamb, should be excluded³⁷ while the mourning of an onan, which in the case of the paschal lamb itself was deduced from that of the tithe,³⁸ should be deduced from it.

Might³⁹ [it not be said:]⁴⁰ As the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar one from the eating of the paschal lamb, so should the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar one from the eating of terumah! — Scripture stated, When thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof,⁴¹ the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar one from the eating thereof, of the Paschal lamb only; the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves does not, however, debar one from the eating of terumah. If so,⁴² [why not] say, But no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof⁴³ [also implies:] He may not eat 'thereof' only but may eat terumah!⁴⁴ — Surely it was written A sojourner and a hired servant.⁴⁵ And what reason do you see?⁴⁶ — It is only logical to include a man's own circumcision, since the act is performed on his own person and its neglect is punishable by kareth. On the contrary; the circumcision of one's male children and slaves should have been excluded because it may occur at any time! — The former restrictions are more in number. And if you prefer I might say that even if those were not more in number your suggestion could not be entertained; for is there anything which is not debarred by his own state of uncircumcision but is debarred by that of the other!

Now that it has been said that the expression. 'Thereof,' was introduced for expository purposes. what⁴⁷ was the purpose of the text, There shall no alien eat of it?⁴⁸ — Only with regard to it⁴⁹

- (1) Since a Canaanite slave, whose body is acquired by the master, may eat of his terumah.
 - (2) The Hebrew servant sells only his labour, while he himself remains a free man.
 - (3) In respect of the Paschal lamb.
 - (4) As he is thus a free man, it is obviously his duty to observe the commandment of the Paschal lamb. What need then was there for the specification of A sojourner and hired servant?
 - (5) A sojourner and a hired servant. Ex. XII, 45.
 - (6) [The verse would then be referring to a non-jew, 'a sojourner' denoting a resident alien and 'a hired servant' an idolater. This, however, would be included in uncircumcised' (Ex. Xli, 48) and 'alien' (verse 43). Consequently the verse must have been written for deduction (Tosaf.)].

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 71a

does apostasy disqualify,¹ but in respect of tithe, apostasy does not disqualify.

What was the purpose of, But no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof?² — 'Thereof'³ only may he not eat, but he may eat of the unleavened bread and bitter herbs.⁴ And it was necessary for Scripture to specify⁵ both 'Uncircumcised' and 'There shall no alien.' For had the All Merciful mentioned the 'uncircumcised' only it might have been assumed [that the prohibition applies only to him], because he is repulsive. but not to an alien who is not repulsive. And had the All Merciful written only 'There shall no alien' it might have been assumed [that only he is subject to the prohibition]. because his heart is not directed towards heaven, but not the uncircumcised whose heart is directed towards heaven. [Hence both were] required.

What⁶ was the purpose of repeating the expression. 'Of it',⁷ twice? — As expounded by Rabbah in the name of R. Isaac.⁸

The Master said, 'R. Akiba stated: This deduction is unnecessary. Since it was stated, What man soever,⁹ the uncircumcised also was included'.¹⁰ Might it be suggested that it¹¹ includes the onan?¹² R. Jose b. Hanina replied: Scripture stated, There shall no common man,¹³ I commanded you concerning its prohibition to a common man¹⁴ but not concerning that of an onan.¹² Might it be suggested: But not the uncircumcised?¹⁵ — Surely, what man soever' was written.¹⁶ And what reason do you see?¹⁷ — It is logical that the case of the uncircumcised should be included, since¹⁸ it involves the absence of an act¹⁹ and that act is one affecting the man's own body; [the uncircumcised] is punishable by kareth;²⁰ the law²¹ was in force before the Revelation;²² and the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars [one from eating the paschal lamb].²³ On the contrary; the case of the onan should have been included,²⁴ since mourning is an ever-present possibility,²⁵ is common to men as well as women, and no man has the power to cure himself of It!²⁶

— Those²⁷ are more in number. Raba said: Even if those²⁷ were not more in number, you could not make your suggestion.²⁸ For Scripture stated, What man soever.²⁹ Now what disability is it that is applicable to a man and not to a woman? You must, of course, say that it is uncircumcision.

What expository use does R. Akiba³⁰ make of the expression A sojourner and a hired servant?¹³ R. Shemaia replied: To include³¹ a circumcised Arab and a circumcised Gibeonite.³² Are these, however, regarded as circumcised at all? Surely we learned: [If a man said]. ‘Konam³³, if I benefit from the uncircumcised’, he may benefit from uncircumcised Israelites³⁴ but is forbidden to benefit from circumcised idolaters.³⁵ [If he said]. ‘Konam’, if I benefit from the circumcised’, he is permitted to benefit from circumcised idolaters but is forbidden to benefit from uncircumcised Israelites!³⁶ — But In truth [the text referred to] includes³⁷ a proselyte who had been circumcised but did not perform the prescribed ritual immersion,³⁸ and a child who was born circumcised,³⁹ he⁴⁰ holding that it is necessary to provide for a few drops of the blood of the covenant⁴¹ to flow;⁴² while R. Eliezer⁴³ follows his own view, he having stated that ‘A proselyte who has been circumcised, though he has not performed his ritual immersion, is regarded as a proper proselyte’.⁴⁴ and he is also of the opinion that it is not necessary to provide for any drops of the blood of the covenant⁴¹ to flow where a child was born circumcised.³⁹

What expository use, however, does R. Eliezer make of the expression. What man soever?⁴⁵ — The Torah, [he maintains], speaks in the language of [ordinary] men.⁴⁶

R. Hama b. Ukba inquired: May an uncircumcised child⁴⁷ be anointed with the oil of terumah?⁴⁸ Does non-circumcision in the pre-circumcision period⁴⁹ constitute a bar⁵⁰ or not? — R. Zera replied: Come and hear: I only know [of the command]⁵¹ concerning the circumcision of the male children [which he has] at the time of the preparation⁵² [of the paschal lamb].⁵³ and concerning the slaves [which he has] at the time of the eating thereof;⁵⁴ whence, however, is it deduced that the restriction mentioned in respect of this category is to be applied to the other, and that of the other to this one?⁵⁵ Then⁵⁶ was specifically stated in both categories⁵⁷ so that an analogy between the two might be drawn.⁵⁸ Now, it is quite possible to imagine a man's slaves as being with him at the time of the eating of the paschal lamb but not at the time of its preparation,⁵⁹ when, for instance, he bought them in the meantime.⁶⁰ How is it possible, however, that a person's male children should be in existence during the eating and not during the preparation? Obviously only when birth occurred in the interval between the preparation and the eating.⁶¹ Thus it may be inferred that uncircumcision in the pre-circumcision period⁶² constitutes a legal status of uncircumcision.⁶³ Said Rabbah:⁶⁴ Do you understand this? The All Merciful said, Let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep⁶⁵ it; but such a child is not fit to be circumcised!⁶⁶ But what are we dealing with here? With a child⁶⁷ who recovered from a fever.⁶⁸ Then⁶⁹ let him be granted [a period of convalescence of] full seven days.⁷⁰ for⁷¹ Samuel said that a child who recovered from a fever must be allowed a period of convalescence of full seven days!⁷² — Where he was already granted the seven days' period.⁷³ He should, then,⁷⁴ have been circumcised in the morning!⁷⁵ — We require

- (54) Since Scripture stated, Every man's servant..when..circumcised. then shall he (i.e., his master) eat (Ex. XII, 44); one's own eating of the lamb is thus dependent on the circumcision of one's slaves.
- (55) I.e., that the non-circumcision of a person's children born to him subsequent to the preparation of the Paschal lamb debars him from the eating of it, and that the non-circumcision of his slave debars him not only from the eating of it but also from its preparation.

(56) י

(67) Over the age of eight days (cf. supra p. 480, n. 15).

(68) Lit., 'fever released him'. The fever from which he suffered during the time of the preparation of the Paschal lamb. While in his fever he was physically unfit for, and hence exempt from circumcision. Now that he has recovered he is, at the time of consumption of the Paschal lamb, physically fit, and consequently subject to circumcision.

(69) If the child recovered from an illness.

(70) Before circumcision is allowed.

(71) Cur. edd. encloses in parenthesis 'for . . . seven days'.

(72) Before the seven days are passed the child remains unfit for circumcision. How, then, could his state of lawful uncircumcision debar his father from the consumption of the Paschal lamb?

(73) And it expired on the Passover Eve.

(74) V. supra n. 9.

(75) I.e., before the time of the preparation of the Paschal lamb; and, since that was not done, the child was in a legal state of uncircumcision not only during the time of eating, but also during the time of the preparation. The difficulty then arises again: What need was there for a Scriptural text to include the prohibition of eating the Paschal lamb while such a child remained uncircumcised, when the preparation that must precede the eating is already forbidden!

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 71b

a full period of seven days.¹

But, surely, Luda'ah learned, 'The day of a child's recovery is like the day of his birth'.² Does not this mean that as in respect of the day of his birth no full period is required³ so is no full period required in respect of the day of his recovery? — No; the day of his recovery is superior to the day of his birth. For, whereas in respect of the day of his birth no full period is required,³ in respect of the day of his recovery a full period is required.¹ R. Papa replied:⁴ Where, for instance, the child had a pain in his eye and recovered⁵ in the meantime.⁶ Raba replied:⁷ Where, for instance, his father and mother were confined in prison.⁸ R. Kahana son of R. Nehemiah replied:⁷ Where, for instance, the child was a tumtum⁹ who in the meantime¹⁰ was operated upon and was found to be a male. R. Sherabia replied:⁷ 'Where, for instance, the child put forth his head out of the forechamber [of the uterus]'.¹¹ But can such a child survive? Surely it was taught: As soon as the child emerges into the air of the world the closed organ¹² is opened and the opened¹³ is closed,¹⁴ for otherwise he could not survive even for one hour!¹⁵ — Here we deal with a case where the heat of the fever sustained him. Whose fever? If 'his own fever' be suggested, he should, if such was the case, be allowed a full period of seven days!¹⁶ — It means, where the fever of his mother sustained him. And if you prefer I might say that the statement¹⁷ applies only when the child does not cry. When, however, it cries it undoubtedly survives.

R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Bana'ah: An uncircumcised [Israelite] is eligible to receive sprinkling;¹⁸ for so we find that our ancestors¹⁹ received sprinkling²⁰ while they were still uncircumcised, since it is said, And the people came up out of the Jordan on the tenth day of the first month,²¹ but on the tenth they were not circumcised owing to the fatigue of the journey; when, then, [could the sprinkling] have been performed?²² Obviously²³ while they were still uncircumcised.²⁴ But is it not possible that they prepared no Paschal lamb at all? — This suggestion cannot be entertained at all, since it is written, And they kept the Passover.²⁵ Mar Zutra demurred: It is possible that it²⁶ was a paschal lamb that was prepared in uncleanness!²⁷ — R. Ashi retorted: It was explicitly taught: They were circumcised, they performed their ritual ablutions, and they prepared their paschal lambs in a state of cleanness.

Rabbah b. Isaac stated in the name of Rab: The commandment of uncovering the corona at circumcision²⁸ was not given to Abraham; for it is said, At that time the Lord said unto Joshua: 'Make thee knives of flint etc.' [¹⁹ But is it not possible [that this applied to] those who were not previously circumcised; for it is written, For all the people that came out were circumcised,²⁹ but all the people that were born etc.?²⁹ — If so,³⁰ why the expression. 'Again!' Consequently³¹ it must apply to the uncovering of the corona.³² Why, then,³³ the expression, 'A second time?'³⁴ — To compare the termination of the circumcision with its commencement; as the commencement of the circumcision is essential³⁵ so is the termination of circumcision³⁶ essential;³⁷ for we learned, 'These are the shreds which render circumcision invalid: Flesh which covers the greater part of the corona; and [a priest whose circumcision was so defective] is not permitted to eat terumah'; and Rabina, or it might be said, R. Jeremiah b. Abba, stated in the name of Rab: Flesh which covers the greater part of the height of the corona.³⁸

Why were they not circumcised in the wilderness? — If you wish I might say: Because of the fatigue of the journey;

(1) Lit., 'from time to time. If the child, for instance, recovered in the afternoon, circumcision may not be performed before the same hour on the afternoon of the eighth day. If this day happens to be the Passover Eve, the child is not fit for circumcision at the time of the preparation though he may be fit at the time of eating.

(2) Shab. 137a.

(3) Circumcision may be performed at any hour on the eighth day of a child's birth without any regard to the hour at which he was born.

(4) It is possible for a child to be unfit for circumcision at the time of the preparation of the Paschal lamb and yet be fit at the time of eating.

(5) On the Passover Eve.

(6) Between the preparation and the eating. At the preparation the child was still unfit for circumcision; at the eating, however, he was fit, since no period of seven days' convalescence is allowed after recovery from such a minor ailment.

(7) V. supra note 1.

(8) At the time the Paschal lamb was prepared for them by an agent. At the time of eating, however, they were free. While in prison they were unable to perform, and consequently were exempt from the duty of circumcising their child. When they were set free they came under the obligation.

(9) V. Glos.

(10) Between the preparation and the eating of the Paschal lamb.

(11) Seven days prior to the Passover Eve; while birth was completed on the Passover Eve between the time of the preparation and the time of the eating. As the protrusion of the head constitutes birth in respect of circumcision (v. Nid. 29a) the operation must be performed as soon as birth is completed.

(12) The mouth.

(13) The navel.

(14) In the embryonic state the mouth is closed and the navel, by means of which it draws sustenance, open.

(15) Nid. 30b. Since it has no means whereby to draw sustenance.

(16) Like any other child recovering from a serious illness.

(17) That the child cannot survive.

- (19) Who were born in the wilderness and were not circumcised until they entered Canaan (cf. Josh. V. 4ff).
- (20) To enable them to eat of the Paschal lamb. They were all levitically unclean owing to contact with the dead in the wilderness. Such persons remain unclean for seven days and, before they are allowed to eat of the Paschal lamb, must, on the third and the seventh day, be sprinkled upon with the water of purification.
- (21) Josh. IV. 19.
- (22) It could not have been performed on the eleventh, since that would not allow a period of four days (v. supra n. 3) between the first and the second sprinkling if they were to participate in the meal of the Paschal lamb which is prescribed for the fourteenth.
- (23) Lit., 'not'?
- (24) I.e., either on the tenth, when they were still uncircumcised, or earlier. In either case it follows that the sprinkling which was performed while they were still uncircumcised enabled them to eat of the Paschal lamb.

and if you prefer I might say: Because the North wind¹ did not blow upon them. For it was taught: In all the forty years during which Israel was in the wilderness the North wind did not blow upon them. What was the reason? — If you wish I might say: Because they were under divine displeasure.² And if you prefer I might say: In order that the clouds of glory³ might not be scattered.

R. Papa said: Hence, no circumcision may be performed on a cloudy day or on a day when the South wind⁴ blows; nor may one be bled⁵ on such a day. At the present time, however, since many people are in the habit of disregarding these precautions,⁶ The Lord preserveth the simple.⁷

Our Rabbis taught: In all the forty years during which Israel was in the wilderness⁸ there was not a day on which the North wind⁹ did not blow at the midnight hour; for it is said, And it came to pass at midnight, that the Lord smote all the firstborn etc.¹⁰ How is the deduction arrived at? — By this we were taught that an acceptable time¹¹ is an essential.¹²

R. Huna said: A mashuk¹³ is Pentateuchally permitted to eat terumah but has been forbidden to do so by Rabbinical ordinance, because he appears to be like one uncircumcised.

An objection was raised: The mashuk requires to be [re-] circumcised!¹⁴ — Only by Rabbinical ordinance.

But he who raised the objection on what ground did he raise it, when it was definitely stated 'requires'!¹⁵ — He misunderstood the final clause: R. Judah said, He¹⁶ should not be circumcised because such an operation is dangerous in his case.¹⁷ They said to him: 'Surely many were circumcised in the days of Ben Koziba¹⁸ and yet gave birth to sons and daughters, [such circumcision being lawful] as, in fact, it is said in Scripture, Must needs be circumcised,¹⁹ even a hundred times. And, furthermore, it is said, He hath broken My covenant,²⁰ which includes the mashuk'.²¹ What need was there for the additional text? — In case you might argue that Must needs be circumcised²² includes only the shreds which render a circumcision invalid²³ [so he added]. Come and hear, He hath broken My covenant²⁰ which includes the mashuk.²⁴ He²⁵ consequently thought that, as the Talmud²⁶ made use of a Scriptural text, the law²⁷ must be pentateuchal; but the fact is that it is only²⁸ Rabbinical, and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.

An objection was raised: A tumtum²⁹ may not eat terumah,³⁰ but his women³¹ and slaves may eat of it. A mashuk³² and one born circumcised³³ may eat of it. The hermaphrodite³⁴ may eat terumah but not holy food³⁵ while the tumtum may eat neither terumah nor holy food.³⁶ At all events, it was taught here that the mashuk and one born circumcised may eat terumah; is not this a refutation against R. Huna!³⁷ — It is indeed a refutation.³⁸

The Master said, 'A tumtum may not eat terumah, but his women³⁹ and slaves may eat of it'. By what legal act could a tumtum acquire his wives?⁴⁰ If it be suggested, by betrothing them; for it was taught. 'If a tumtum betrothed a woman, his betrothal is valid and if he was betrothed by a man his betrothal is also valid',⁴¹ it might be retorted that the validity was intended only as a restrictive measure;⁴² was it, however, intended also as a relaxation of a law?⁴³ He⁴⁴ is possibly a woman, and no woman, surely, may betroth a woman! — Abaye replied: Where his testes can be distinguished externally. Raba replied: 'What is the meaning of "his women"? — His mother'. But [is not the case of his mother] self-evident? It might have been presumed that only one capable of procreation bestows the privilege of eating terumah, but one who is incapable does not bestow it, hence we were taught [that even a tumtum may bestow the privilege].

Come and hear: A tumtum may eat neither terumah nor holy food.⁴⁵ According to Abaye, this⁴⁶ is quite correct, since the first clause speaks of the certainly non-circumcised person⁴⁷ while the final clause speaks of the doubtful one; according to Raba, however, what need was there for the mention of the tumtum in the final clause? — The meaning of⁴⁸ tumtum⁴⁹ is 'the uncircumcised'.⁵⁰ If, however, one whose status as a non-circumcised person is in doubt is not permitted to eat terumah,⁵¹ would any one who is definitely an uncircumcised person be permitted to eat it?⁵² — The final clause is an interpretation of the first.⁵³ Why may not 'a tumtum eat terumah'? Because he might have the status of an uncircumcised person,⁵⁴ and a man who is uncircumcised 'may eat neither terumah nor holy food'.

May it be assumed that this⁵⁵ is a question in dispute among Tannaim: A mashuk,⁵⁶ and⁵⁷ a proselyte whose conversion took place while he was already circumcised,⁵⁸ and a child, the proper time of whose circumcision had passed,⁵⁹ and all other circumcised persons, this means to include one who has two foreskins, may be circumcised in the daytime only. R. Eleazar b. Simeon, however, said: At the proper time⁶⁰ children may be circumcised in the daytime only; and if not at the proper time they may be circumcised both by day and by night,¹ Do they not differ on the following principle: While one Master² is of the opinion that the circumcision of a mashuk is a pentateuchal law, the other Master³ is of the opinion that the circumcision of the mashuk is only a Rabbinical ordinance?⁴ — And can you understand this?⁵ Is there any authority who maintains that the duty to circumcise a child whose proper time of circumcision had passed⁶ is only Rabbinical!⁷ But the fact is that both⁸ agree that the circumcision of a mashuk is a Rabbinical ordinance,⁹ and that the duty to circumcise a child whose proper time of circumcision had passed, is Pentateuchal. Here,¹⁰ however, their difference depends on the following principle: One Master¹¹ holds that [the conjunctive in the expression]. And in the day¹² is to be expounded;¹³ and the other Master³ is of the opinion that [the conjunctive in] And in the day¹² is not to be expounded.¹⁴ [The exposition here is of the same nature] as the following:¹⁵ When R. Johanan was once sitting [at his studies] and expounding that 'nothar¹⁶ at its proper time¹⁷ may be burned in the daytime only,¹⁸ and if not at its proper time,¹⁹ it may be burned either in the day or in the night'. R. Eleazar raised an objection: I only know that a child whose circumcision takes place on the eighth day must be circumcised in the daytime only; whence, however, is it deduced that the case of a child whose circumcision takes place on the ninth, tenth, eleventh or twelfth²⁰ is also included? Because it was expressly stated, 'And in the day';²¹ and even he²² who bases no expositions on a Waw does base his exposition on the basis of a Waw and a He!²³ The other remained silent. After he went out, R. Johanan said to Resh Lakish: I observed that the son of Pedath²⁴ was sitting and making expositions like Moses in the name of the Almighty. 'Was this his'? Resh Lakish replied. 'It is really a Baraita'. 'Where', the first asked. 'was it taught'? — 'In Torath Kohanim'.²⁵ He went out and learned it²⁶ in three days; and was engaged in making deductions and drawing conclusions from it for a period of three months.

R. Eleazar stated: The sprinkling²⁷ performed²⁸ by an uncircumcised person is valid, for his status is similar to that of a tebul yom²⁹ who, though forbidden to eat terumah, is permitted to prepare³⁰ the red heifer.³¹

The case of the tebul yom,²⁹ however, might be different, since he is also permitted to eat tithel!³² — Are we speaking of eating?³³ We speak only of touching: If a tebul yom who is forbidden to touch terumah is permitted [to occupy himself] with the red heifer,³⁰ how much more so the uncircumcised who is permitted to touch terumah!

The same [law] was also taught [elsewhere]: The sprinkling³⁴ performed³⁵ by an uncircumcised man is valid; and such an incident once happened, and the Sages declared his sprinkling to be valid.

An objection was raised: If a tumtum³⁶ performed sanctification,³⁷ his sanctification is invalid, because he [has the status of the person whose uncircumcision is a matter of] doubt, and such a person is forbidden to perform sanctification.³⁷ If an hermaphrodite.³⁸ however, performed sanctification,³⁷ his sanctification is valid. R. Judah said: Even if an hermaphrodite performed sanctification his act has no validity. because [his sex might] possibly be that of a woman, and a woman is ineligible to perform sanctification.³⁹ At all events it was taught here that the uncircumcised or the person whose uncircumcision is a matter of doubt is forbidden to perform sanctification!³⁹ R. Joseph replied: This Tanna is one of the school of R. Akiba who include the uncircumcised in the same prohibition as that of the unclean; as it was taught: R. Akiba said, 'What man soever⁴⁰ includes also the uncircumcised'.⁴¹

Raba related: I was once sitting before R. Joseph when I raised the following difficulty: Then⁴² the Tanna⁴³ should not have omitted to state.⁴⁴ 'The uncircumcised and the unclean', and one would at once suggest that the author was R. Akiba!⁴⁵ — But does he not?⁴⁶ Surely it was taught: The uncircumcised and the unclean are exempt from appearing at the Festivals!⁴⁷ — There [the case is different], because he is a repulsive person.⁴⁸

They⁴⁹ follow their own respective views. For it was taught: All⁵⁰ are permitted to perform sanctification,⁵¹ with the exception of the deaf, the imbecile and the minor. R. Judah permits in the case of the minor but regards a woman and an hermaphrodite as unfit.⁵² What is the Rabbi's reason? — Because it is written, And for the unclean they shall take of the ashes of the burning of the purification from sin,⁵³ those who are ineligible⁵⁴ for the gathering⁵⁵ are also ineligible for the sanctification,⁵⁶ but those who are eligible⁵⁷ for the gathering⁵⁵ are also eligible for the sanctification.⁵⁸ And R. Judah?⁵⁹ — He can answer you: If so,⁶⁰ Scripture should have used⁶¹ the expression 'He shall take',⁶² why then, And they shall take?⁶³ To indicate that even those who are ineligible there⁶⁴ are eligible here. If so, a woman also should be eligible!⁶⁵ Shall he put⁶⁶ but not 'Shall she put'. And the Rabbis? — Had it been written, 'He shall take'⁶⁷ and 'Shall he put'.⁶⁷ it might have been assumed that only one individual must take⁶⁸ and only one must put,⁶⁹ hence did the All Merciful write, And they shall take.⁷⁰ And had the All Merciful written, 'And they shall take' and also 'Shall they put'.⁷⁰ it might have been assumed that two must take⁶⁸ and two must put,⁶⁹ hence did the All Merciful write, And they shall take⁶⁷ and Shall he put.⁶⁷ [to indicate that the rites are duly performed] even if two take⁶⁸ and one put.⁶⁹

(2) The first Tanna who restricts the time of the circumcision to the day only.

(3) R. Eleazar b. Simeon.

(4) Hence he permits its performance during the night also. Would then R. Huna's ruling agree with the view of one Tanna only!

(5) That the point at issue should be the one suggested.

(6) V. supra note 4.

(7) Certainly not. Being obviously a Pentateuchal law, the point at issue in the Baraitha cited cannot be the one suggested.

(13) Since the statement, In the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised (ibid.) would have sufficiently indicated that circumcision must be performed in the daytime, the addition of the conjunction waw is regarded as an indication that even a circumcision that takes place after its proper time must be performed in the daytime only. And the case of the mashuk was, by Rabbinical ordinance. given the same force as that of the child.

(14) Nothing may be inferred from the use of the conjunctive Waw, not even the case of the child whose proper time of

- circumcision had passed, much less that of the circumcision of the mashuk, which is altogether a Rabbinical enactment. The circumcision of either may consequently be performed in the night also.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 73a

And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean,¹ [since] clean [was mentioned]² the implication must be that he is [somewhat unclean.³ Thus it was taught that a tebul yom⁴ is permitted to prepare the red heifer.

R. Shesheth was asked: Is an uncircumcised person permitted to eat tithe:⁵ Is tithe deduced from the paschal lamb in the case of circumcision⁶ as the paschal lamb is deduced from tithe in the case of the mourning of an onan,⁷ or may only the major [sanctity] be deduced from the minor but not the minor from the major [sanctity]? He replied. You have learned this: In respect of terumah and the first ripe fruits⁸ one may incur the penalties of death⁹ and a fifth;¹⁰ these furthermore are forbidden to non-priests, they are the [undisputed] property of the priest,¹¹ they are neutralized¹² in one hundred and one,¹³ and they require washing of the hands,¹⁴ and sunset,¹⁵ All these restrictions apply to terumah and bikkurim only but not to tithe.¹⁶ Now, if that were so,¹⁷ it should have been stated here, 'The uncircumcised is forbidden to eat of them, which prohibition is not applicable to tithe'¹⁸ — He might have taught some¹⁹ and omitted others.²⁰

What else did he omit that he should have omitted this?²¹ — He omitted the following. In the final clause while it was stated: 'Some restrictions apply to tithe and the first ripe fruits, but not to terumah, since tithe and the first ripe fruits must be brought to the appointed place,²² they require confession²³ and are forbidden to an onan, and R. Simeon permits [the bikkurim to an onan]; they are,²⁴ furthermore, subject to removal;²⁵ but R. Simeon exempts them',²⁶ [the laws that] they may not be burned²⁷ even when levitically unclean,²⁸ and that the man¹ who eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged,² and that these laws do not apply to terumah, were not stated.³ This proves clearly that only some were taught and others were omitted.⁴

The Master said,⁵ 'And are forbidden to an onan, and R. Simeon permits [the bikkurim to an onan]'.⁶ Whence do they derive their views? — From the Scriptural text, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil or the firstlings of thy herd⁵ etc. nor the offering of thy hand,² and a Master said that 'the offering of thy hand' refers to bikkurim;⁷ and bikkurim were compared to tithe: As tithe is forbidden to the onan so are bikkurim also forbidden to the onan. And R. Simeon?⁸ — The All Merciful called them terumah: As terumah is permitted to the onan⁹ so are bikkurim permitted to the onan.

'They are, furthermore, subject to removal; but R. Simeon permits them'. One Master¹⁰ compares [bikkurim to tithe]¹¹ and the other Master does not.

'They may not be burned when levitically unclean, and the man who eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged'. Whence is this derived? — From what was taught: R. Simeon said, Neither have I burned¹² thereof, being unclean,¹³ whether I was unclean and it was clean or I was clean and it was unclean. I do not know, however, where one was forbidden to eat it'.¹⁴ (But, surely, in relation to it, the uncleanness of the body was specifically stated: The soul that touches any such shall be unclean until the even, and shall not eat of the holy things,¹⁵ unless he bathe his flesh in waters — This is the question: Whence the prohibition [to eat it] where the thing itself is unclean?¹⁶ It was expressly stated,¹⁷ Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn¹⁸ but further on¹⁹ it was stated. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates; the unclean and the clean may eat it alike as the gazelle, and as the hart,²⁰ and at the school of R. Ishmael it was taught that the unclean and the clean may eat together even on the same table, and the same plate, and no precautions need be taken. Thus the All Merciful stated, 'That, concerning which I told you there, Thou shalt eat it within thy gates,²⁰ you may not eat here'.²¹

'That these laws do not apply to terumah'. Whence do we derive this? — R. Abbahu replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture stated, Neither have I burnt thereof, being unclean,²² you may not burn 'thereof', but you may burn the oil of terumah if it has become unclean.²³ Might it not be suggested: You may not burn any 'thereof'. but you may burn holy²⁴ oil that became unclean? — This, surely, may be inferred a minori ad majus: If in respect of the tithe, the sanctity of which is of a minor character, the Torah stated, Neither have I burnt thereof, being unclean,²² how much more so in respect of holy food the Sanctity of which is of a major character. If so, terumah also might be inferred a minori ad majus! — Surely 'thereof' was written. And what reason do you see?²⁵ It is logical that holy food should not be excluded, since²⁶ [the following restrictions also apply to it:] piggul,²⁷ nothar,²⁷ sacrifice, me'ilah,²⁷ kareth,²⁷ and it is also forbidden to an onan.²⁷ On the contrary; terumah should not be excluded since [to it apply the restrictions of]²⁸ death.²⁹ a fifth,³⁰ it cannot be redeemed³¹ and it is forbidden to non-priests!³² — Those³³ are more in number. And if you prefer I might say: Kareth³⁴ is regarded as being of greater importance.

'The man that eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged, and that these laws do not apply to terumah'. He is apparently³⁵ exempt only from flogging, but a prohibition³⁶ remains. Whence is this derived? — Scripture stated. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates.³⁷ only 'it'³⁸ but not any other;³⁹ and a negative precept that is derived from a positive one [has only the force of] a positive.⁴⁰

R. Ashi said.⁴¹ From the first clause also⁴² you may infer that the Tanna taught some⁴³ and omitted others,⁴⁴ since he did not state

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 74a

'And they¹ apply in all² the years of the septennial cycle³ and cannot be redeemed', and that 'this does not apply to the [second] tithe'. This proves it.

Come and hear: 'If shreds⁴ which render the circumcision invalid remain, he may not eat terumah, nor the paschal lamb, nor holy food, nor tithe'. Does not tithe refer to the tithe of the corn? — No; the tithe of cattle.⁵ But is not the tithe of cattle the same as holy food?⁶ — Even on your view are we not told here of the paschal lamb and yet 'holy food' also is mentioned! — One can well understand why it was necessary to mention both the paschal lamb and holy food; for if the paschal lamb only had been stated it might have been assumed that it only is forbidden, because uncircumcision was written in Scripture in connection with the paschal lamb, but not holy food. And if holy food only had been stated it might have been assumed that what was meant by holy food was the paschal lamb.⁷ What need, however, was there for the mention here of the tithe of cattle!⁸ — [No, say,] rather, tithe refers to the first tithe; and this [teaching] is that of R. Meir who holds that the first tithe is forbidden to non-priests.⁹

Come and hear: Since R. Hiyya b. Rab of Difti has learned, 'An uncircumcised is forbidden to eat of both tithes', is not one the tithe of the corn and the other the tithe of the cattle! — Here also the first tithe was meant and the ruling is that of R. Meir.

Come and hear: 'An onan is forbidden to eat of tithe but is permitted to eat terumah, and [to engage] in the [preparation of] the red heifer;¹⁰ a tebul yom¹¹ is forbidden to eat terumah, but is permitted [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer, and to eat tithe; and he who was still short of atonement¹² is forbidden [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer, but is permitted to eat terumah and tithe'. Now, if it were so,¹³ it should have been stated, 'The uncircumcised is forbidden to eat terumah but is permitted [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer¹⁴ and to eat tithe'¹⁵ — This represents the view of a Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who includes the uncircumcised, like the unclean, in the prohibition.¹⁶ As it was taught: Any man soever¹⁷ includes the uncircumcised.

Who is the Tanna who differs from R. Akiba?¹⁸ — It is the Tanna who [is in disagreement with] R. Joseph the Babylonian. For it was taught: The burning¹⁹ by an onan or by one who is still short of atonement is valid; but R. Joseph the Babylonian said: That of the onan is valid but that of him who is short of atonement is not valid.²⁰

R. Isaac also is of the opinion that the uncircumcised is forbidden to eat [second] tithe. For R. Isaac stated: Whence is it deduced that the uncircumcised is forbidden to eat [second] tithe? 'Thereof' was stated in respect of [the] tithe,²¹ and 'thereof' was also stated in respect of the paschal lamb;²¹ as the paschal lamb, in respect of which 'thereof' was used, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is [the] tithe, in respect of which 'thereof' was used, forbidden to the uncircumcised. Is it²² free for deduction? For if it is not free, it could be objected: The Paschal lamb is rightly subject to the restriction²³ since one may incur in respect of it the penalties for piggul,²⁴ nothar' and levitical uncleanness!²⁵ — It is indeed free for the deduction. Which²⁶ is free? Raba replied in the name of R. Isaac: 'Thereof' is written three times in connection with the paschal lamb.²⁷ One is required for the paschal lamb itself;²⁸ one for the analogy;²⁹ and as to the third, according to him who maintains that Scripture intended³⁰ a positive precept to follow a negative³¹ one,³² 'thereof' was written [a second time],³³ because nothar was written [a second time];³³ and according to him who maintains [that the repetition of until the morning³⁴ was intended] to allow a second morning for its burning,³⁵ 'thereof' was written [a second time],³⁶ because until the morning³⁴ had to be written [a second time]. Also, in connection with tithe, 'thereof' was written three times. One is required for its own purpose;³⁷ one is required for the deduction which R. Abbahu made in the name of R. Johanan;³⁸ and the third is required for the exposition made by Resh Lakish. For Resh Lakish stated in the name of R. Simya: Whence is it deduced that second tithe which has become levitically unclean may be used for anointing? It is said, Nor have I given thereof for the dead,³⁹ only for a dead man have I not given, but I have given for a living man in the same manner as for the dead. Now, what is it that may be equally applied to the living and to the dead? You must say that it is anointing.⁴⁰ Mar Zutra demurred: It³⁹ might be suggested to refer to the purchase for the dead of a coffin and shrouds!⁴¹ — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: 'Thereof' means of the tithe itself.⁴² R. Ashi replied: Nor have I given³⁹ must be analogous to I have not eaten,³⁹ as there⁴³ it refers to the tithe itself so here also⁴⁴ it must refer to the tithe itself. But still it⁴⁵ is free, however, in one direction only!⁴⁶ [The analogy is] quite satisfactory according to him who maintains that deduction may be made [even in such a case]. and may not be refuted.⁴⁷ According to him, however, who is of the opinion that deduction may be made but also refuted, what can be said?⁴⁸ — R. Abbahu's deduction⁴⁹ may be inferred from the text cited in the statement which R. Nahman made in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha. For R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: What was meant by the Scriptural text, And I, behold, I have given thee⁵⁰ the charge of My heave-offerings?⁵¹ Scripture speaks of two kinds of terumah. One, clean terumah, and the other, unclean terumah; and concerning these the All Merciful said, 'It shall be thine,⁵⁰ even for burning under your dish.'⁵²

AND ALL LEVITICALLY UNCLEAN PERSONS etc. Whence is this deduced? — R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Ishmael: Scripture stated, What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath an issue etc.⁵³ Now, what is it that is equally

(1) Terumah and bikkurim.

(2) Lit., 'other', i.e., even in the third and sixth. V. next note.

- (3) And not only, like the second tithe, in the first, second, fourth and fifth years of the cycle.
- (4) Of the corona.
- (5) Which solves the question put to R. Shesheth.
- (6) Which is already mentioned.
- (7) Both were therefore necessary.
- (8) Which is included in 'holy food'. V. supra n. 2. Hence 'tithe' must mean second tithe, which solves the question put to R. Shesheth.
- (9) And owing to its sanctity it was also forbidden to the uncircumcised.
- (10) Since it is not offered on the altar, its sanctity is of a lesser degree.
- (11) V. Glos.
- (12) An unclean person the requirements of whose purification have, with the exception of the sacrifice prescribed for the unclean, been satisfied.
- (13) That the uncircumcised is permitted to eat second tithe.
- (14) As stated supra 72b.
- (15) Since this, however, was omitted it must be assumed that the omission was due to the fact that tithe is permitted to the uncircumcised!
- (16) To engage even in the preparation of the red heifer (supra 72b).
- (17) Lev. XXII, 4; lit., 'man man'.
- (18) And maintains (v. supra 72b) that the uncircumcised may deal with the red heifer.
- (19) Of the red heifer. V. Num. XIX, 5.
- (20) As the first Tanna differs from R. Joseph in respect of the man who was short of atonement, he presumably differs also in respect of the uncircumcised.
- (21) V. infra for further explanation.
- (22) The expression 'thereof' used in the analogy.
- (23) Its prohibition to the uncircumcised.
- (24) V. Glos.
- (25) Hence no analogy between it and tithe would be justified.
- (26) Of the expressions, 'thereof'.
- (27) Ex. XII, 9,10.
- (28) [In 'Ye shall not eat thereof raw' (verse 9) 'thereof' is required as otherwise it might have been assumed to refer to the unleavened bread and bitter herbs mentioned in the preceding verse (Tosaf)].
- (29) With second tithe.
- (30) By the text, Ye shall burn (that which remains) with fire (Ex. Xli, 10).
- (31) Ye shall let nothing thereof remain (ibid.).
- (32) In order to exempt the transgressor from the penalty of flogging. v. Mak. 4b.
- (33) In Ex. XII, 20., cf. previous note.
- (34) Ibid. Earlier in the text it was already stated, And ye shall let nothing thereof remain until the morning.
- (35) The morning after the first day of the Passover. V. Pes. 83b.
- (36) In Ex. XII. 10.
- (37) [The first 'thereof' to exclude the first tithe from the restriction in regard to onan (v. Glos) תום ישנים].
- (38) Permitting the burning of unclean oil of terumah for lighting purposes. V. supra 73b.
- (39) Deut. XXVI, 24.
- (40) It cannot refer to eating which is, of course, inapplicable to the dead.
- (41) And not to anointing. The deduction, consequently, would be that though unclean tithe may not be exchanged for money wherewith to buy the requirements of the dead, it being unfit as food, it may be exchanged for the purpose of buying anything for the living.
- (42) Not with the money for which it was exchanged.
- (43) In respect of eating.
- (44) The 'giving'.
- (45) The expression. 'Thereof'.
- (46) In that of the Paschal lamb; those occurring in the section of tithe being required for other deductions.
- (47) Nid. 22b.

(48) In view of the objection that the Paschal lamb is subject to restrictions which are inapplicable to the second tithe.

(49) From one of the expressions of 'thereof'.

(50) ¶⁵.

(51) Num. XVIII, 8.

(52) Since R. Abbahu's deduction may be made from this text, one of the expressions of 'thereof' remains free for the purpose of the analogy.

(53) Lev. XXII, 4.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 74b

applicable to all the seed¹ of Aaron? You must say that it is terumah.² But might it not be assumed to refer to the breast and the shoulder?³ — [These are] not [permitted] to [a woman] who returns.⁴ But terumah also is not permitted to a halalah!⁵ — A halalah is not regarded as of the seed of Aaron.⁶ And whence is it inferred that until he be clean⁷ means 'until sunset',⁸ perhaps it means, 'until the atonement is brought'? — This cannot be entertained. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael [taught] that Scripture⁷ speaks of a zab⁹ who noticed only two issues, and of a leper while under observation,¹⁰ both being cases similar to that of one who is unclean by the dead;⁷ as he who is unclean by the dead⁷ is not liable to bring an atonement so are these¹¹ such as are not liable to bring an atonement.¹² Let it be said, then, that this¹³ applies only to those who are not liable to bring an atonement, but that for those who are liable to an atonement,¹⁴ purification is incomplete until the atonement has been brought! Furthermore, in respect of what we learned, 'If he performed the prescribed ablution and came up from his bathing he may eat of the [second] tithe; after sunset he may eat terumah; and after he has brought his atonement he may also eat of the holy food',¹⁵ whence, it may also be asked, are these laws derived? — Raba replied in the name of R. Hisda: Three Scriptural texts are recorded: It is written, And shall not eat of the holy things, unless he bathe his flesh in water,¹⁶ implying if he bathed, however, he is clean. It is also written, And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and afterwards he may eat of the holy things.¹⁷ And finally, it is written, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean.¹⁸ How, [then, are these contradictory conditions¹⁹ to be reconciled]?²⁰ The first refers to [second] tithe; the second to terumah, and the third to holy food. Might not these be reversed?²¹ It is reasonable that terumah should be subject to the greater restriction, since²² it is also subject to the restrictions of the death penalty,²³ the fifth,²⁴ it cannot be redeemed,²⁵ and is also forbidden to the non-priest.²⁶ On the contrary; [second] tithe might be regarded as subject to the greater restriction, since it²⁷ has to be brought to the appointed place,²⁸ requires confession,²⁹ is forbidden to an onan, must not be burned³⁰ [even] when unclean, the penalty of flogging is incurred for eating it when it is unclean,³¹ and it is also subject to the law of removal!³² — The penalty of death, nevertheless, is of the greatest severity. Raba said: Apart from the fact that the death penalty is of the greatest severity it could not be said so;³³ for Scripture stated, soul.³⁴ Now, what is it that is equally [permitted] to every soul? You must admit that it is tithe.³⁵ Still, this³⁶ might apply only to one who is not liable to bring an atonement;³⁷ but where a man is liable to an atonement it might be said that [purification is not complete] until he has brought the atonement! — Abaye replied: Two Scriptural texts are recorded in the case of a woman in childbirth.³⁸ It is written, Until the days of her purification be fulfilled,³⁹ as soon as her days are fulfilled she is clean; and it is also written, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean,⁴⁰ how, [then, are the two to be reconciled]?⁴¹ The former applies to terumah, the latter to holy food.⁴²

But might not these be reversed?⁴³ — It stands to reason that holy food should be subject to the greater restriction,⁴⁴ since it is also subject to the restrictions of⁴⁵ piggul⁴⁶ nothar,⁴⁶ sacrifice, me'ilah,⁴⁶ kareth,⁴⁶ and is also forbidden to an onan.⁴⁶ On the contrary, terumah should be subject to the greater restriction,⁴⁷ since it is also subject to the restrictions⁴⁸ of⁴⁵ the death penalty,⁴⁹ the fifth,⁵⁰ it cannot be redeemed,⁵¹ and is also forbidden to the non-priest!⁵² — Those⁵³ are more in number.

Raba said: Apart from the fact that those⁵³ are more in number this⁵⁴ could not be maintained. For Scripture stated, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean,⁵⁵ which implies that [until that moment] she was unclean. Now, were it to be assumed that this text⁵⁶ speaks of holy food,⁵⁷ the text, And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten⁵⁸ should apply to it!⁵⁹ It must, therefore, be concluded that the text⁶⁰ speaks of terumah.

R. Shisha son of R. Idi demurred: How could it be said that the law of terumah was prescribed in this text?⁶⁰ Surely it was taught: [From the text]. Speak unto the children of Israel.⁶¹ one would only learn [that these laws⁶² are applicable to] the children of Israel; whence, however, is one to infer that they also apply to a proselyte or an emancipated slave? Scripture consequently stated,⁶³ Woman.⁶⁴ Now, if it were to be assumed that the text speaks of terumah, are a proselyte and an emancipated slave, [it may be asked,] permitted to eat terumah!⁶⁵ Said Raba: But does it⁶⁶ not?⁶⁷

(1) Males and females.

(2) It cannot refer to holy food of the higher degree of sanctity which is permitted to male priests only.

- (33) V. supra p. 502, n. 15.
- (34) Lev. XXII, 6.
- (35) This verse then must refer to tithe, and it requires ablution only and no waiting for sunset.
- (36) That purification in respect of terumah is complete even before the sacrifice had been brought.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 75a

Surely it is written,¹ She shall touch no hallowed thing² [which] includes terumah!³ The fact, however, is that Scripture enumerated a number of distinct subjects.⁴ Now what need was there for three distinct texts⁵ in respect of terumah! — They are all required. For were terumah to be deduced from Until he be clean,⁶ it would not be known whereby,⁷ hence did the All Merciful write, And when the sun is down, he shall be clean.⁸ And if the All Merciful had written only And when the sun is down,⁸ it might have been assumed [to apply to such a person] as is not liable to bring a sacrifice, but in the case of one who is liable it might have been presumed that cleanness is not effected before he has brought his atonement, hence the All Merciful wrote, Until. . . be fulfilled.⁹ And had the All Merciful written only, Until . . . be fulfilled,¹⁰ it might have been presumed that cleanness may be effected even without ablution, hence did the All Merciful write, Until he be clean.⁶

According. however, to that Tanna who disagrees with the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael, maintaining that the text⁶ speaks of a zab who had three attacks of gonorrhoea and of a confirmed leper,¹¹ and that the deduction from Until he be clean⁶ is 'until he brings his atonement,'¹² what need was there for two texts¹³ in respect of holy food? — [They are both] required. For had the All Merciful written about the woman after childbirth only,¹⁴ the law¹⁵ might have been said to apply to her only because her uncleanness is of long duration,¹⁶ but not to a zab. And had the All Merciful written the law¹⁷ in connection with a zab only,¹⁸ it might have been assumed to apply to him only since his uncleanness does not automatically cease,¹⁹ but not to a woman after childbirth.²⁰ [Hence both texts were] necessary.

What was the need²¹ for the text, It must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even?²² — R. Zera replied: In respect of touch,²³ as it was taught: And it shall be unclean²⁴ might have been taken to refer to all cases,²⁵ hence it was stated, Then shall it be clean.²⁶ And if only Then shall it be clean²⁶ had been stated it might have been assumed to refer to all cases,²⁷ hence it was stated, And it shall be unclean.²⁸ How then [are the two to be reconciled]? The one²⁹ refers to [second] tithe and the other³⁰ to terumah. But might not the deduction be reversed? — It stands to reason that as the eating of terumah is more restricted than the eating of tithe, so shall the touching of terumah be more restricted than the touching of tithe.

If you prefer I might say that the prohibition against the touching of terumah³¹ is deduced from the following. It was taught:³² She shall touch no hallowed thing,³³ is a warning against its consumption.³⁴ Perhaps it is not so, but against touching it? It was stated, She shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary,³³ the hallowed thing is thus compared to the sanctuary; as [an offence against] the sanctuary involves loss of life,³⁵ so [must the offence against] the hallowed thing be such as involves loss of life, while in respect of touch no loss of life is involved; and the reason [why eating] was expressed by a term denoting touch is to indicate that touching and eating are equally [forbidden].³⁶

[A PRIEST WHO IS] WOUNDED IN HIS STONES etc. Who is it that taught: A woman subject to a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation³⁷ may eat terumah?³⁸ — R. Eleazar replied: This question is the subject of a dispute, and the ruling here is that of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon.³⁹ R. Johanan said: [The ruling here] may even be that of R. Meir,³⁹ the circumstances here being different, since the woman has already been eating.⁴⁰ And R. Eleazar? — The argument, 'since she has already been eating' cannot be entertained; for should you not admit this,⁴¹ a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest and whose husband subsequently died, should also be permitted to eat terumah since she has already been eating it.⁴² And R. Johanan? — There,⁴³ his kinyan had completely lapsed;⁴⁴ here, however, his kinyan did not lapse.⁴⁵

WHAT IS TERMED A PEZU'A? Our Rabbis taught: What is termed a pezu'a dakkah? A man both of whose stones were wounded or even only one of them; even though they were only punctured, crushed, or simply defective. Said R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka: I heard from the mouth of the Sages at the Vineyard⁴⁶ at Jabneh that one having only one stone is a natural born eunuch⁴⁷ and is, therefore, a fit person. How could it be said that such a person is a natural born eunuch!⁴⁸ — Say rather, he is like a natural born eunuch and is, therefore, fit.⁴⁹

Is [a man whose stones are] punctured incapable of procreation? Surely, a man once climbed up a palm tree and a thorn pierced his stones, [his semen] issued like a thread of pus, and, [despite the accident], he begat children! — In that case, as a matter of fact, Samuel sent word to Rab, telling him, 'Institute enquiries respecting the parentage of his children'.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: A man whose stones have been injured by a supernatural agency¹ is regarded as a fit person.² Said Raba: This is the reason why the Scriptural text reads, Who is wounded³ and not 'the wounded'.⁴

In a Baraitha it was taught: It was said in Scripture. He who is wounded . . . shall not enter³ and it was also said, A bastard shall not enter,⁵ as the latter is the result of human action, so is the former the result of human action.⁶

Raba stated: Wounded³ applies to all,⁷ crushed³ applies to all,⁷ and cut off⁸ applies to all.⁹ 'Wounded applies to all': Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords of the stones were injured. 'Crushed applies to all': Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords were crushed. 'Cut off applies to all': Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords were cut off.

A certain Rabbi asked Raba: Whence is it inferred that the expression pezu'a dakkah⁸ refers to an injury in the privy parts; might it not be said to refer to the head? The other replied: As no number of generations is mentioned,¹⁰ it may be inferred that the reference is to the privy parts.¹¹ But is it not possible that the reason why no number of generations is given in this case is because only he himself¹² is forbidden,¹³ while his son and the son of his son are permitted! — [This must be] similar to the case of him whose membrum is cut off; as the latter involves the privy parts, so must the former involve those parts.

And whence is it inferred that the injury of the keruth shafekah¹⁴ himself involves his privy parts? Might it not be one involving his lips!¹⁵ — Shafekah¹⁶ is written, implying, 'at the spot where it discharges',¹⁷ But might it not refer to one's nose? — It is not written, '[Cut] at the organ that discharges', but 'a cut organ that discharges'; thus implying that organ which in consequence of a cut discharges, and in the absence of a cut does not discharge but flows out. This excludes the nose which in either case¹⁸ emits a discharge.¹⁹

In a Baraitha it was taught: It was said in Scripture. He who is wounded in his stones shall not enter,⁸ and it was also said. A bastard shall not enter,²⁰ as the latter refers to the privy parts, so does the former refer to the privy parts.

In a case where a puncture beginning below the corona terminated²¹ at the other end of it above the corona, R. Hiyya b. Abba desired to declare the sufferer as fit.²² Said R. Assi to him: Thus ruled R. Joshua b. Levi, '[A perforation of] any size in the corona constitutes a bar [against fitness]'.

IF, HOWEVER, ANY PART OF THE CORONA REMAINED etc. Rabina, while sitting [at his studies], raised the following question: Must the HAIR'S BREADTH of which they spoke extend over the entire circumference thereof or only over its greater part? — ‘The HAIR'S BREADTH’, said Rabbah²³ Tosfa'ah to Rabina, must extend over the greater part of it and towards its upper section’.²⁴

R. Huna ruled: If it²⁵ is cut away like a reed pen it constitutes no disqualification; if like a gutter²⁶ it causes disqualification. For in the latter case the air penetrates;²⁷ in the former it does not. R. Hisda, however, ruled: [If the cut was] in the shape of a gutter no disqualification is constituted; if it had the shape of a reed pen disqualification is constituted. For in the first case friction may be produced; in the latter it cannot.

Raba said: It is reasonable to adopt the view of R. Huna that in the latter case the air penetrates while in the former it does not. For in regard to friction it is only like a bung in a cask.²⁸

Said Rabina to Meremar: Thus said Mar Zutra in the name of R. Papa, ‘The law is that no disqualification is constituted whether the corona was cut away like a reed pen or like a gutter He raised, however, the question. [whether such a cut must be] below the corona or may even be above it?²⁴ — It is obvious that it may even be above it; for were it to be below the corona, the man would be regarded as fit even if the entire membrum there had been cut off. Rabina, however,²⁹ only desired to test Meremar.

Such an incident³⁰ once occurred at Matha Mehasia, and R. Ashi arranged for the corona to be cut into the shape of a reed pen, and then declared the man to be fit. It once happened at Pumbeditha that a man had his semen duct blocked, and the discharge of the semen made its way through the urinal duct. R. Bibi b. Abaye intended to declare the man fit. R. Papi, however, said to him, ‘Because you are yourselves frail beings you speak frail words;¹ through its proper duct it fertilizes but when not passing through its proper duct it does not fertilize.’

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: If it had a small perforation which was closed up, the man is deemed to be unfit if the wound re-opens when semen is emitted, but if it does not re-open the man is regarded as fit.

In respect of this ruling Raba raised the question: Where? If the perforation is below the corona,² [the man should remain fit] even if it were cut off! — It means, in the corona itself. So it was also stated elsewhere: R. Mari b. Mar said in the name of Mar Ukba in the name of Samuel: If a hole that has been made in the corona itself is closed, the man is disqualified if it re-opens when semen is emitted; but if it does not [re-open the man is deemed to be] fit.

Raba the son of Rabbah sent to R. Joseph: Will our Master instruct us how to proceed.³ The other replied: Warm barley bread is procured, and placed upon the man's anus. Thereby the flow of semen sets in, and the effect can be observed. Said Abaye: Is everybody like our father Jacob concerning whom it is written, My might, and the first-fruits of my strength,⁴ because he never before experienced the emission of semen!⁵ — No, said Abaye, coloured garments⁶ are dangled before him.⁷ Said Raba: Is everybody then like Barzillai the]Gileadite!⁸ — In fact it is obvious that the original answer is to be maintained.

Our Rabbis taught: If i⁹ was punctured [the man is regarded as] unfit, because the flow is sluggish.¹⁰ If it was closed up [he is deemed to be] fit, because he is then capable of production. And this is a case where the unfit may return to his former state of fitness. What does the expression ‘this’ exclude? — It excludes the case where a membrane was formed on the lungs in consequence of a wound; since such cannot be regarded as a proper membrane.¹¹

R. Idi b. Abin sent the following question to Abaye: How are we to proceed?¹² — A grain of barley is to be procured wherewith the spot¹³ is lacerated.¹⁴ Tallow is rubbed in, and a big ant, procured for the purpose, is allowed to bite in, and its head is severed.¹⁵ It must be a grain of barley; an iron instrument would cause inflammation. This procedure, furthermore, applies only to a small perforation; a large one would peel off.

Rabbah son of R. Huna stated: A man who urinates at two points is an unfit person.¹⁶

Said Raba: The law is in agreement neither with the view of the son nor with that of the father. As to the son, there is the statement just mentioned. As to the father? — Since R. Huna said: Women who practise lewdness with one another are disqualified from marrying a priest.¹⁷ And even according to R. Eleazar, who stated that an unmarried man who cohabited with an unmarried woman with no matrimonial intention renders her thereby a harlot, this disqualification ensues only in the case of a man;¹⁸ but when it is that of a woman¹⁹ the action is regarded as mere obscenity.

MISHNAH. A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES, AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF, ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY A PROSELYTE OR AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE. THEY ARE ONLY FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY,²⁰ AS IT IS SAID IN SCRIPTURE, HE THAT IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES OR HATH HIS PRIVY MEMBRUM CUT OFF SHALL NOT ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY OF THE LORD.²¹

GEMARA. R. Shesheth was asked: May a priest who is wounded in his stones marry a proselyte or an emancipated slave,²² does he²³ remain in his state of holiness and is consequently forbidden²⁴ or does he not remain in his state of holiness and is consequently permitted?²⁴ — R. Shesheth replied: You have learned this [law in the following]. ‘An Israelite who is wounded in his stones is permitted to marry a nethinah’.²⁵ Now, were it to be assumed that he²⁶ retains his holiness, the text, Neither shalt thou make marriages with them²⁷ should be applicable here.²⁸ Said Raba: Is the law there²⁹ due at all to sanctity or non-sanctity? [It is merely due to] the possibility that he³⁰ might beget a child who³¹ would proceed to worship idols. This, then, is applicable only when they³² are still idol worshippers. When, however, they are converted, they are undoubtedly permitted,³³ and it was only the Rabbis who placed them³⁴ under a prohibition as a preventive measure.³⁵ But such a preventive measure was instituted by the Rabbis in respect of those only who are capable of procreation, not in respect of those who are incapable of procreation.³⁶

Now, then,³⁷ a bastard also, since he is capable of procreation,³⁸ should also be forbidden,³⁹ while in fact, we have learned, ‘Bastards and nethinim may intermarry with one another’!⁴⁰ — In fact [this is the explanation:] the Rabbis instituted a preventive measure only in the case of the fit but not in that of the unfit.⁴¹

Subsequently Raba stated: What I said⁴² is of no consequence. For while they are still idolaters their marriages are invalid; only when they are converted are their marriages valid.⁴³

R. Joseph raised an objection: And Solomon became allied to Pharaoh King of Egypt by marriage, and took Pharaoh's daughter!⁴⁴ — He caused her to be converted. But, surely, no proselytes were accepted either in the days of David or in the days of Solomon!⁴⁵ — Was there any reason for it⁴⁶ but [that the motive of the proselytes might be the benefits] of the royal table?

(1) מוליתא = מולאאי ‘frail things’, applied to the speaker's clan as well as to his rulings. דאתו, ‘because you’. מולאאי may also mean ‘short lived people’ and דאתו according to Bah, should read דאתיתו משום דאתיתו מולאאי ‘because you are descendants of short lived people’. R. Bibi was a descendant of the house of Eli who were condemned to die young (v. I Sam. II, 32f). The expression may also, like a similar root in Arabic, bear the meaning of ‘foolishness’. (Cf. B.B. Such a woman¹ obviously was in no need of it.² But let the inference³ be drawn from the fact that she¹ was an Egyptian of the first generation!⁴ And were you to reply that those⁵ had already departed, and these⁶ are others;⁷ surely, it may be pointed out, it was taught: R. Judah stated, 'Menjamin, an Egyptian proselyte, was one of my colleagues among the disciples of R. Akiba, and he told me: I am an Egyptian of the first generation and married an Egyptian woman of the first generation; I shall arrange for my son to marry an Egyptian of the second generation in order that my grandson may be enabled to enter into the congregation of Israel!'⁸ R. Papa replied: Are we to take our directions from Solomon! Solomon did not marry at all,⁹ for it is written, Of the nations concerning which the Lord said unto the Children of Israel: 'Ye shall not go among them, neither shall they come among you; for surely they will turn away your heart after their gods'; Solomon did cleave unto them in love.¹⁰ The expression. And he become allied. . . in marriage,¹¹ however, presents a difficulty!¹² — On account of his excessive love for her. Scripture regards him as if he had become allied by marriage to her. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Surely we learned A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES, AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM VIRILE IS CUT OFF, ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY A PROSELYTE OR AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE, [from which it follows] that they are forbidden to marry a nethinah!¹³ — The other replied: According to your view,¹⁴ read the final clause, THEY ARE ONLY FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY, [from which it follows] that they are permitted to marry a nethinah! But [the fact is that] no inference may be drawn from this Mishnah.

MISHNAH. AN AMMONITE AND A MOABITE ARE FORBIDDEN¹⁵ AND THEIR PROHIBITION IS FOR EVER¹⁶, THEIR WOMEN, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED AT ONCE.¹⁷ AN EGYPTIAN AND AN EDOMITE ARE FORBIDDEN¹⁸ ONLY UNTIL THE THIRD GENERATION.¹⁹ WHETHER THEY ARE MALES OR FEMALES. R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, PERMITS THEIR WOMEN FORTHWITH.¹⁷ SAID R. SIMEON: THIS LAW²⁰ MIGHT BE INFERRED A MINORI AD MAJUS: IF WHERE THE MALES ARE FORBIDDEN FOR ALL TIME²¹ THE FEMALES ARE PERMITTED FORTHWITH,²² HOW MUCH MORE SHOULD THE FEMALES BE PERMITTED FORTHWITH WHERE THE MALES ARE FORBIDDEN UNTIL THE THIRD GENERATION ONLY.²³ THEY REPLIED: IF THIS²⁰ IS AN HALACHAH,²⁴ WE SHALL ACCEPT IT; BUT IF IT IS ONLY AN INFERENCE,²⁵ AN OBJECTION CAN BE POINTED OUT. HE REPLIED: NOT SO.²⁶ [BUT IN FACT] IT IS AN HALACHAH THAT I AM REPORTING.

GEMARA. Whence are these laws inferred? — R. Johanan replied: Scripture stated, And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said into Abner, the captain of the host: ‘Abner, whose son is this youth?’ And Abner said: ‘As thy soul liveth, O King, I cannot tell’.²⁷ But did he²⁸ not know him? Surely it is written, And he loved him greatly; and he became his armour bearer!²⁹ — He rather made the inquiry concerning his father. But did he not know his father? Surely it is written, And the man was an old man in the days of Saul, stricken in years among them;³⁰ and Rab or, it might be said, R. Abba, stated that this referred to the father of David, Jesse. who came in with an army³¹ and went out with an army!³¹ — It is this that Saul meant: Whether he descended from Perez,³² or from Zerah.³³ If he descended from Perez he would be king, for a king breaks³⁴ for himself a way and no one can hinder him. If, however, he is descended from Zerah he would only be an important man.³⁵ What is the reason why he gave instructions that enquiry be made concerning him? — Because it is written, And Saul clad David with his apparel.³⁶ being of the same size as his,³⁷ and about Saul it is written, From his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.³⁸ Doeg the Edomite then said to him,³⁹ ‘Instead of enquiring whether he is fit to be king or not, enquire rather whether he is permitted to enter the assembly or not!’ ‘What is the reason?’⁴⁰ ‘Because he is descended from Ruth the Moabitess’. Said Abner to him,⁴¹ ‘We learned: An Ammonite,⁴² but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,⁴² but not a Moabitess!⁴³ But in that case⁴⁴ a bastard⁴⁵ would’ imply: But not a female bastard?’ — ‘It is written mamzer [Which implies] anyone objectionable’.⁴⁶ ‘Does then⁴⁷ Egyptian⁴⁸ exclude the Egyptian woman?’ — ‘Here⁴⁹ it is different, since the reason for the Scriptural text is explicitly stated: Because they met you not with bread and with water;⁵⁰ it is customary for a man to meet [wayfarers]; It is not, however, customary for a woman to meet [them]’.⁵¹

‘The men should have met the men and the women the women!’

He⁵² remained silent, Thereupon. the King said.⁵³ ‘Inquire thou whose son the stripling is’.⁵⁴ Elsewhere he calls him youth,⁵⁵ and here⁵⁴ he calls him, stripling!⁵⁶ — It is this that he implied, ‘You have overlooked⁵⁷ an halachah,’ go and enquire at the college!’ On enquiry, he was told: An Ammonite,⁵⁸ but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,⁵⁸ but not a Moabitess.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 77a

As, however, Doeg submitted to them all those objections¹ and they eventually remained silent, he desired to make a public announcement against him.² Presently [an incident occurred]: Now Amasa was the son of a man, whose name was Ithna the Israelite, that went in to Abigail³ the daughter of Nahash,⁴ but elsewhere it is written, Jether the Ishmaelite!⁵ This teaches, Raba explained, that he girded on his sword like an Ishmaelite and exclaimed, 'Whosoever will not obey the following halachah will be stabbed with the sword; I have this tradition from the Beth din of Samuel the Ramathite: An Ammonite but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite, but not a Moabitess'!⁶ Could he, however, be trusted?⁷ Surely R. Abba stated in the name of Rab: Whenever a learned man gives directions⁸ on a point of law, and such a point comes up [for a practical decision], he is obeyed if his statement was made⁹ before the event;¹⁰ but if it was not so made he is not obeyed! Here the case was different, since Samuel and his Beth din were still living.¹¹

The difficulty,¹² however, still remains! — The following¹³ interpretation was given: All glorious is the king's daughter within.¹⁴ In the West¹⁵ it was explained. others quote it in the name of R. Isaac: Scripture said, And they said unto him: 'Where is Sarah thy wife?' etc.¹⁶

The question¹⁷ is a matter in dispute between Tannaim: An Ammonite,¹⁸ but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,¹⁸ but not a Moabitess. So R. Judah. R. Simeon, however, said: Because they met you not with bread and with water;¹⁹ it is customary for a man to meet etc.²⁰

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by, Thou hast loosed my bonds!²¹ David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, 'O Master of the world! Two bonds were fastened on me,²² and you loosed them: Ruth the Moabitess²³ and Naamah the Ammonitess.²⁴

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by the Scriptural text, Many things hast Thou done, O Lord my God, even Thy wondrous works, and Thy thoughts toward us?²⁵ It is not written, 'toward me', but toward us. This teaches that Rehoboam²⁶ sat on the lap of David when the latter said to him. 'Those two Scriptural verses²⁷ were said concerning me and you.'²⁸

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by the Scriptural text, Then said I: 'Lo, I am come with the roll of a book which is prescribed for me'?'²⁹ David said,³⁰ 'I thought I have come³¹ only now; but I did not know that in the Roll of the Book³² it was already³³ written about me'. For there it is written, That are found,³⁴ and here it is written. I have found³⁵ David My servant; with My holy oil have I anointed him.³⁶

'Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: The daughter of an Ammonite proselyte³⁷ is eligible to marry a priest. Said Raba b. 'Ulla to 'Ulla: In accordance with [whose view is your statement made]? If in accordance with that of R. Judah, he surely had stated that the daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male halal!³⁸ And if in accordance with the view of R. Jose, your statement is self-evident, for surely he had stated: Even where a male proselyte had married a female proselyte his daughter is eligible to marry a priest!³⁹ And were you to reply that this⁴⁰ applies to such as are fit to enter the assembly⁴¹ but not to this man who⁴² is not fit to enter the assembly⁴³ whence [it may be asked] is this distinction [inferred]! — It is inferred from the case of a High Priest who married a widow.⁴⁴ [But it may be objected] the marriage between a High Priest and a widow is different, since his cohabitation constitutes a transgression!⁴⁵ — [Then the case of the] halal proves it?⁴⁶ [But it may be objected that] a halal is different since his formation was in sin!⁴⁷ — [Then the case of the] High Priest⁴⁸ proves it; and thus the argument will go round,⁴⁹ though the aspect of the one is unlike that of the other and the aspect of the other is unlike that of the first, their common characteristic is that either of them is unlike the majority of the assembly⁵⁰ and his daughter⁵¹ is ineligible,⁵² so here also since he⁵³ is unlike the majority of the assembly,⁵⁴ his daughter should be ineligible.⁵² [But it may again be objected] their common characteristic⁵⁵ is different, since it also involves an aspect of sin!⁵⁶ Did you possibly⁵⁷ speak of an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite,⁵⁸ [informing us that], though his cohabitation is an act of transgression, his daughter is nevertheless eligible? — The other replied: Yes; for when Rabin came⁵⁹ he reported in the name of R. Johanan on the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte⁶⁰ and the daughter of an Egyptian of the second generation⁶⁰ that R. Johanan declared her eligible⁶¹ while Resh Lakish maintained that she was ineligible.⁶¹

‘Resh Lakish maintained that she was ineligible’, for he infers this case from that of a High Priest who married a widow. ‘R. Johanan declared her eligible’.

as R. Zakkai recited¹ in the presence of R. Johanan, '[The expression,] But a virgin of his own people shall he take to wife,² includes a woman who is fundamentally a proselyte³ who is eligible to marry a priest', and the other said to him, 'I learn: ["Since. instead of] 'His people'. Of his people [was written]. a virgin who descended from two peoples⁴ is also included", and you mention only a fundamental proselyte and no other!' Now. what is meant by 'two peoples'? If it be suggested that it refers to the case of an Ammonite who married an Ammonitess. and that these are described as of 'two peoples' because the males are forbidden and the females are permitted, such a case [it may be objected] is the same as that of a fundamental proselyte! Consequently it must refer to an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite.⁵

Others say: He said to him,⁶ 'I learn: ["Since, instead of] 'His people'. Of his people² [was written], a virgin who is descended from two peoples⁷ and from a people consisting of two groups of people⁸ is included", and you mention only a fundamental proselyte and no other!'⁹

According to this latter version, however,¹⁰ whence is it inferred that the daughter of an Egyptian of the second generation¹¹ is eligible to marry a priest? And should you suggest that this might be inferred from the case of an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite, [it may be objected that] the case of the Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite is different since the Ammonite females are eligible.¹² — An Egyptian of the second generation who married an Egyptian woman of the second generation might prove it.¹³ But [it may be objected that the case] of an Egyptian of the second generation who married an Egyptian woman of the second generation is different since his cohabitation constitutes no transgression? — An Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite might prove it,¹⁴ and thus the argument would go round etc.¹⁵

Said R. Joseph: This¹⁶ then it is that I heard Rab Judah expounding on 'His people. Of his people' and I did not [at the time] understand what he meant.¹⁷

When R. Samuel b. Judah came, he stated: Thus he¹⁸ recited in his¹⁹ presence: An Ammonite woman is eligible;²⁰ her son that is born from an Ammonite is ineligible; and her daughter that is born from an Ammonite is eligible. This, however, applies only to an Ammonite and an Ammonitess who were converted; but her daughter that was born from an Ammonite is ineligible. [On hearing this] the other said to him, 'Go recite this outside. For your statement that "an Ammonite woman is eligible" [is quite acceptable, since] Ammonite²¹ excludes the Ammonitess. That "her son that is born from an Ammonite is ineligible" [is also correct] since he is in fact an Ammonite. In what respect, however, is "her daughter that was born from an Ammonite eligible"? If in respect of entering the assembly, is there, now that her mother is eligible, any need to mention her! The eligibility must consequently be in respect of marrying a priest. [But then what of the statement], "this, however, applies only to an Ammonite and an Ammonitess who were converted; but her daughter that was born from an Ammonite is ineligible"? What is meant by "her daughter that was born of an Ammonite"? If it be suggested that it refers to an Ammonite who married an Ammonitess,²² then this is the same case as that of a fundamental proselyte!²³ Consequently it must refer to an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite'.²⁴ [Concerning this] he told him. 'Go recite this outside'.²⁵

AN EGYPTIAN AND AN EDOMITE ARE FORBIDDEN ONLY etc. What is the OBJECTION?²⁶ — Raba b. Bar Hana replied in the name of R. Johanan: Because it may be said that the case of forbidden relatives proves it,²⁷ since in respect of them the prohibition extends to the third generation only²⁸ [and is nevertheless applicable to] both males and females.²⁹ [But can it not be argued that the case] of forbidden relatives is different.³⁰ since in their case the penalty of kareth is involved?³¹ — [The case of the] bastard³² proves it. [But can it not be suggested that the case] of the bastard is different³³ since he is forever ineligible to enter the congregation?³⁴ — [The case of] forbidden relatives³⁵ proves it. Thus the argument could go round.³⁶ The aspects of one are unlike those of the other and the aspects of the other are unlike those of the first. Their common characteristic, however, is that both males and females are equally forbidden; so might one also include the Egyptian man and the Egyptian woman so that in their case also both males and females should be equally forbidden.³⁷ This common characteristic, however, [it may be retorted,] is different.³³ since in one respect it also involves kareth.³⁸ And the Rabbis?³⁹ They infer it⁴⁰ from the halal⁴¹ who is the offspring of a union between those who through it, are guilty of transgressing a positive commandment;⁴² and in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.⁴³ Then what is meant by, NOT SO?⁴⁴ — It is this that he said to them: As far as I am concerned, I do not accept the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob;⁴⁵ but according to you, since your view is that of R. Eliezer b. Jacob,⁴⁶ [my reply is that] IT IS AN HALACHAH THAT I AM REPORTING.⁴⁷

It was taught: R. Simeon said to them,⁴⁸ 'I am reporting an halachah and, moreover, a Scriptural text supports my view, [it having been written] sons⁴⁹ but not daughters'.

Our Rabbis taught: Sons,⁴⁹ but not daughters; so R. Simeon. R. Judah, however, said: Behold it is said in Scripture. The sons of the third generation that are born unto them;⁵⁰ Scripture has made them dependent on birth.⁵¹

R. Johanan said: Had not R. Judah declared, 'Scripture made them dependent on birth',⁵² he would not have found his hands and feet at the house of study.⁵³ For as a Master said that a congregation of proselytes is also called an assembly.⁵⁴

(1) I.e., from this statement it is deduced what was R. Johanan's view.

(2) Lev. XXI, 14.

(3) Or 'a proselyte of her own status' (Jast.). who was a proselyte from her birth, i.e., when her father and mother were converted after their marriage and before her birth. Where an Ammonite proselyte marries the daughter of an Israelite, the offspring of such a union is not fundamentally a proselyte and is ineligible to marry a priest since the union was a forbidden one.

(4) This is explained presently

(5) Thus it is proved (v. supra n. 4) that, in the opinion of R. Johanan, such a case is eligible.

(6) R. Johanan to R. Zakkai.

(7) From the daughter of an Israelite who married an Ammonite proselyte.

(8) I.e., whose father is the Ammonite proselyte, a descendant of a people whose males are forbidden and whose females are permitted.

(9) According to this version, unlike the former where it was arrived at by inference. R. Johanan's view is explicitly stated.

(10) Since the case of the Ammonite only was mentioned. (Cf. supra n. 2).

(11) Who married the daughter of an Israelite and thus contracted a forbidden union.

(12) While the Egyptian females, like the man, are forbidden for three generations.

(13) His daughter is permitted since she belongs to the third generation, although she also belongs to the Egyptian people whose males and females are equally forbidden. As this latter restriction is no bar in this case it should form no bar in the case of an Egyptian of the second generation who married the daughter of an Israelite.

(14) His daughter is eligible though his marriage constitutes a transgression.

(15) Continued as supra 77a.

(16) The ruling permitting the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte who married the daughter of an Israelite.

(17) R. Joseph, as a result of a serious illness, lost his memory and only dimly recollected some of the rulings and expositions of his teachers.

(18) R. Zakkai. V. supra.

(19) R. Johanan's.

(20) This is explained presently.

(21) Deut. XXIII, 4.

(22) Who were converted prior to the birth of their daughter.

(23) Who, as stated in the first clause, is eligible!

(24) The daughter being ineligible because of the forbidden marriage of her parents.

(25) In such a case also the daughter is eligible as deduced supra from the expression, Of his people (Lev. XXI. 14) instead of 'his people'.

(26) That can be advanced, according to the Rabbis, against R. Simeon's argument in our Mishnah.

(27) That R. Simeon's argument is untenable.

(28) Both in the ascending and the descending line.

(29) Similarly in the case of the Egyptian and the Edomite.

(30) I.e., it is more restricted than that of marriage with an Egyptian etc.

(31) Since they are subject to the one restriction (kareth) they are also subject to the other (equal prohibition of males and females). The case of the Egyptian and the Edomite, however, which does not involve kareth might not include the females either!

(32) Cohabitation with whom is not subject to the penalty of kareth, and both males and females are nevertheless equally subject to the prohibition.

(33) I.e., it is more restricted than that of marriage with an Egyptian etc.

(34) As he is subject to this restriction he is also subject to the other (cf. supra n. 1).

(35) Who are only forbidden to intermarry with each other, but are severally permitted to all the other members of the congregation.

(36) Should objection be raised against the case of the forbidden relatives, that of the bastard could be adduced as proof; and should objection be raised against that of the bastard, that of the forbidden relatives might be adduced as proof.

(37) This then, is the objection which the Rabbis could raise against R. Simeon's a minori argument.

(38) Even in the case of the bastard, kareth is involved as the penalty of his parents for the action which was the origin of his birth. In the case of the Egyptian and Edomite, however, there is no aspect whatsoever involving this penalty. The latter, therefore, cannot be deduced from the others.

(39) How could they still maintain their objection against R. Simeon's argument.

(40) The prohibition of the females.

(41) And not, as has previously been assumed, from the bastard.

(42) When, e.g., a High Priest married a seduced woman (cf. supra 60a) who is forbidden to him by virtue of the positive precept of Lev. XXI. 13.

(43) Who, contrary to the view of the Sages, regards such a child as halal (supra 59b and 60a). Thus it has been proved that even where no kareth is involved, both males and females (the halalah like the halal) are included in the prohibition. Similarly in the case of the Egyptians and the Edomites.

(44) The objection of the Rabbis is strong enough!

(45) Cf. supra p. 523. n. 13. ab. init., R. Simeon being of the opinion that the offspring of a union between those who are thereby guilty of transgressing a positive precept only is not regarded as a halal.

(46) And consequently you might derive the prohibition of the females from the law of the halal.

(47) And an objection is of no validity in the face of a definite tradition.

(48) The Rabbis of our Mishnah.

(49) בְּיָמֵינוּ Deut. XXIII, 9.

(50) Ibid. emphasis on are born.

(51) Irrespective of sex. Had the law applied to males only the clause 'that are born etc,' should have been omitted.

(52) I.e., that the females also are forbidden.

(53) His position would have been untenable.

(54) The assembly of the Lord (cf. Deut. XXIII, 2, 3, 4, 9. and Kid. 73a.).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 78a

how¹ could an Egyptian of the second generation ever attain purity!² But is not this possible when he transgressed and did marry one?³ — Scripture⁴ would not have written of a case of 'when'.⁵ Behold the case of the bastard which is one of 'when'⁶ and yet Scripture did write it!⁷ — It wrote of a 'when' [leading] to a prohibition;⁸ it would not have written of a 'when' [if it led] to permissibility.⁹ Behold the case of the man who remarried his divorced wife,¹⁰ which involves a 'when' [leading] to a permitted act¹¹ and yet did Scripture write of it! — In that case it was written mainly for the purpose of the original prohibition.¹²

Our Rabbis taught: If the expression of sons¹³ was used, why was also that of generations¹³ used; and if that of generations was used, why also that of sons?¹⁴ If the expression of 'sons' had been used and not that of 'generations'¹⁵ it might have been assumed that only the first and second son is forbidden but that the third¹⁶ is permitted, the expression of 'generations'¹⁷ was, therefore, used. And had the expression of 'generations' only been used and not that of sons,¹⁸ it might have been assumed that the precept was given only to those who stood at Mount Sinai,¹⁹ the expression of sons' was therefore used.²⁰ Unto them,²¹ Count from them.²² Unto them.²³ Be guided by the status of the ineligible among them.²⁴

It was necessary [for Scripture] to write unto them,²⁵ and it was also necessary for it to write, That are born.²⁵ For had the All Merciful written only. 'That are born', it might have been presumed that the counting must begin from their children,²⁶ hence did the All Merciful write 'Unto them'.²⁷ And had the All Merciful written only 'Unto them',²⁸ it might have been presumed that, where a pregnant Egyptian woman became a proselyte, she and her child are regarded as one generation. hence did the All Merciful write. 'That are born'.²⁹

It was, furthermore. necessary to write unto them²⁸ in this case,³⁰ and Unto him³¹ in respect of the bastard. For had the All Merciful used the expression here only,³⁰ [the restriction³² might have been assumed to apply to this case only], because the child descended from a tainted origin.³³ but not to a bastard, since he is descended from an untainted origin.³⁴ And had the All Merciful written the expression in respect of the bastard, [the restriction³² might have been presumed to apply to him only]. because he is for all time unfit to enter into the assembly, but not in this case.³⁵ [Both texts were, therefore,] required.

Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan: If an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian woman of the first generation, her son is [regarded as belonging to the] third generation. From this it is obvious that he³⁶ is of the opinion that the child is ascribed to him.³⁷

R. Joseph raised an objection: R. Tarfon said, 'Bastards may attain to purity. How? If a bastard married a female slave, their child is a slave. When, however, he³⁸ is emancipated he becomes a free man'.³⁹ This⁴⁰ clearly proves that the child is ascribed to her! — There it is different, because Scripture said, The wife and her children shall be her master's.⁴¹

Raba raised an objection: R. Judah related, 'Menjamin, an Egyptian proselyte. was one of my colleagues among the disciples of R. Akiba, and he once told me: I am an Egyptian of the first generation and married an Egyptian wife of the first generation; and I shall arrange for my son to marry an Egyptian wife of the second generation in order that my grandson shall be eligible to enter the congregation'.⁴² Now, if it could be assumed that the child is ascribed to his father, [he could have married a wife] even of the first generation!⁴³ — The fact is that⁴⁴ R. Johanan said to the Tanna:⁴⁵ Read, '[a woman of the] first generation'.

When R. Dimi came⁴⁶ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: If an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian wife of the first generation. her son is [regarded as belonging to the] second generation. From this it is obvious that a child is ascribed to his mother.

Said Abaye to him: What then of the following statement of R. Johanan. 'If a man set aside a pregnant beast as a sin-offering and it then gave birth, his atonement may be made, if he desires, with the beast itself, and, if he prefers, his atonement may be made with her young'.⁴⁷ This law would be intelligible if you admit that an embryo is not regarded as a part⁴⁸ of its mother, since this case would be similar to that of one who set aside as a security two sin-offerings,⁴⁹ in respect of which R. Oshaia had stated that a man who set aside two sin-offerings as a security⁴⁹ is to be atoned for with either of them, while the other goes to the pasture.⁵⁰ If you maintain, however, that an embryo is a part⁵¹ of its mother, the former is like the young of a sin-offering,⁵² and the young of a sin-offering is sent to die!⁵³ The other remained silent. 'Is it not possible', the first said to him, 'that there⁵⁴ it is different.⁵⁵ since it is written That are born,⁵⁶ Scripture made it dependent on birth'?⁵⁷ — 'Clever man',⁵⁸ the other replied, 'I saw your chief⁵⁹ between the pillars⁶⁰ when R. Johanan gave the following traditional ruling: The reason⁶¹ here is because it was written, That are born,⁵⁶ elsewhere, however, the child is ascribed to the father'.⁶²

What, however, of the following statement of Raba. 'If a pregnant gentile woman was converted, there is no need for her son to perform ritual immersion'.⁶³ Why⁶⁴ is there no need for him to perform immersion? Should you reply that it⁶⁵ is due to a ruling of R. Isaac; for R. Isaac stated: Pentateuchally [a covering of] the greater part,⁶⁶ if one objects to it,⁶⁷ constitutes legally an interposition,⁶⁸ and if one does not object to,⁶⁹ no legal interposition is constituted;⁷⁰

- (1) If Egyptian women were not included in the prohibition to enter the assembly.
- (2) Entry into the assembly. Egyptian women proselytes being regarded, like Israelites, as an assembly (v. supra n. 12), no Egyptian male proselyte of the first or second generations would ever be permitted to marry them. How then, since he can marry neither a woman of Israel nor a proselyte of his own people, would he ever produce a third generation (v. Deut. XXIII, 9) that would be fit to enter the assembly?

surely [it may be retorted] R. Kahana stated: This applies only in respect of its greater part, but when the whole of it is effected a legal interposition is constituted!¹ — The case of the embryo is different since its position² is that of its natural growth.³

When Rabina⁴ came, he stated in the name of R. Johanan: Among the other nations follow the male.⁵ If they are converted⁶ follow the more tainted of the two.⁷

'Among the other nations follow the male, as it was taught: Whence is it deduced that if one of the other nations⁸ cohabited with a Canaanitish⁹ woman and begat a son, that son may be purchased as a slave?¹⁰ It is said, Moreover of the children of the strangers¹¹ that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy.¹² As it might have been assumed that even if one of the Canaanites⁹ had cohabited with one of the women of the other [gentile] nations⁸ and begat a son, you may buy that son as a slave, it was explicitly stated, That they have begotten in your land;¹² only from those who were begotten¹³ in your land, but not from those who dwell in your land.¹⁴

‘If they are converted, follow the more tainted of the two’. In what case? If it be suggested that it refers to an Egyptian¹⁵ who married an Ammonitess,¹⁶ how could the expression ‘the more tainted of the two’, be applicable when Scripture explicitly said, An Ammonite,¹⁷ but not an Ammonitess?¹⁸ — Rather, the reference is to an Ammonite¹⁹ who married an Egyptian wife.²⁰ If [the child of such a marriage] is a male, he is ascribed to the Ammonite;²¹ if it is a female, she is ascribed to the Egyptian.²²

MISHNAH. BASTARDS AND NETHINIM²³ ARE INELIGIBLE,²⁴ AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME, WHETHER THEY BE MALES OR FEMALES.

GEMARA. Resh Lakish said: A woman bastard is eligible²⁵ after ten generations. This is derived from an analogy between tenth,²⁶ and tenth²⁷ mentioned in respect of the Ammonite and the Moabite; as in the latter case the females are permitted²⁷ so are they permitted in the former case.²⁸ Should you suggest that as in the latter case eligibility begins forthwith so it does in the former case, [it may be replied] that the analogy can only be effective in respect of the generations after the tenth.²⁹ But, surely, we learned, BASTARDS AND NETHINIM ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME, WHETHER THEY BE MALES OR FEMALES!³⁰ — This is no difficulty: One statement³¹ is in agreement with him who holds³² that a deduction is carried through in all respects,³³ while the other³⁴ is in agreement with him who maintains³² that a deduction is restricted by its original basis.³⁵

R. Eliezer was asked: What [is the legal position³⁶ of] a female bastard after ten generations? ‘Were anyone to present to me’, he replied, ‘a third generation. I would declare it pure!’ He is obviously of the opinion [that the stock of] a bastard does not survive.³⁷ So also did R. Huna state: A bastard's stock does not survive. Did we not learn, however, BASTARDS ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME? — R. Zera replied: It was explained to me by Rab Judah that those who are known³⁸ survive,³⁹ those who are not known³⁸ do not survive; and those who are partly known and partly unknown survive for three generations but no longer.

A certain man once lived in the neighbourhood of R. Ammi. and the latter made a public announcement that he was a bastard. As the other was bewailing the action,⁴⁰ [the Master] said to him: I have given you life.⁴¹

R. Hana b. Adda stated: David issued the decree of prohibition⁴² against the nethinim,⁴³ for it is said, And the king called the Gibeonites,⁴⁴ and said unto them-now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel etc.⁴⁵

Why did he issue the decree against them? — Because it is written. And there was a famine in the days of David three years. year after year.⁴⁶ In the first year he said to them, ‘It is possible that there are idolaters among you, for it is written, And serve other gods, and worship them . . . and he will shut up the heaven, so that there shall be no rain etc.’⁴⁷ They instituted enquiries but could not discover any idolaters. In the second year he said to them, ‘There may be transgressors among you, for it is written, Therefore the showers have been withheld and there hath been no latter rain; yet thou hadst a harlot's forehead etc.’⁴⁸ Enquiries were made but none was found. In the third year he said to them, ‘There might be among you men who announce specified sums for charity in public but do not give them, as it is written, As vapours and wind without rain, so is he that boasteth himself of a false gift’.⁴⁹ Enquiries were made and none was found. ‘The matter’, he concluded, ‘depends entirely upon me; Immediately, he sought the face of the Lord.’⁴⁶ What does this mean? — Resh Lakish explained: He enquired of the Urim and Tummim.⁵⁰ How is this inferred? R. Eleazar replied: It is arrived at by an analogy between two occurrences of the expression of ‘countenance of’; for here it is written, And David sought the countenance of the Lord,⁴⁶ and elsewhere it is written, Who shall enquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the countenance of the Lord.⁵¹ And the Lord said: 'It is for Saul and his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites'.⁵² 'For Saul', because he was not mourned for in a proper manner; 'and his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites'. Where, however, do we find that Saul 'put to death the Gibeonites'! The truth is that, as he killed the inhabitants of Nob, the city of the priests who were supplying them⁵³ with water and food, Scripture regards it as if he himself had killed them.

Justice is demanded for Saul because he was not properly mourned for, and justice is demanded because he put to death the Gibeonites?⁵⁴ — Yes; for Resh Lakish stated: What is meant by the Scriptural text, Seek ye the Lord, all ye humble of the earth, that have executed His ordinance?⁵⁵ Where there is his ordinance,⁵⁶ there are also his executions.⁵⁷

David said: As to Saul, there have already elapsed

 - (29) Since in the case of the bastard the prohibition of the first ten generations was explicitly stated and includes, as the term mamzer connotes (v. supra 76b), both men and women, whereas the prohibition after ten generations in the case of bastards is not stated explicitly but derived on the basis of analogy from an Ammonite, in respect of whom 'for ever' is

As the case of the bastard is deduced from that of the Ammonite in one respect, it must also agree with it in all other respects, including eligibility of the females after the tenth generation, as Resh Lakish ruled. It is only in respect of the first ten generations which are explicitly forbidden in Scripture that deduction could not be made (cf. supra p. 532, n. 15).

the twelve months of the [first] year¹ and it would be unusual to arrange for his mourning now. As to the nethinim,² however, let them be summoned and we shall pacify them. Immediately³ the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto them . . . 'What shall I do for you? and wherewith should I make atonement, that ye may bless the inheritance of the Lord'? And the Gibeonites said to him: 'It is no matter of silver or gold between us and Saul, or his house,' neither is it for us [to put] any man etc. . . . Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us and we will hang them up unto the Lord etc.'⁴. He tried to pacify them but they would not be pacified. Thereupon he said to them: This nation⁵ is distinguished by three characteristics: They are merciful, bashful and benevolent. 'Merciful', for it is written, And shew thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee.⁶ 'Bashful', for it is written, That His fear may be before you.⁷ 'Benevolent', for it is written, That he may command his children and his household etc.⁸ Only he who cultivates these three characteristics is fit to join this nation.⁹

But the king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bore into Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she bore to Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholathite.¹⁰ Why just these? — R. Huna replied: They¹¹ were made to pass before the Holy Ark. He whom the Ark retained [was condemned] to death and he whom the Ark did not retain was saved alive.

R. Hana b. Kattina raised an objection: But the king spared Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan the son of Saul!¹² — He did not allow him to pass.¹³ Was there favouritism then! — In fact he did let him pass and it retained him, but he invoked on his behalf divine mercy and it released him. But here, too, favouritism is involved!¹⁴ — The fact, however, is that he invoked divine mercy that the Ark should not retain him. But, surely, it is written, The fathers shall not be pit to death for the children etc.¹⁵ — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: It is better that a letter be rooted out of the Torah than that the Divine name shall be publicly profaned.¹⁶

And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harvest until water was poured upon them from heaven; and she suffered neither the birds of the air to rest on then by day, nor the beast of the field by night.¹⁷ But, surely, it is written, His body shall not remain all night upon the tree!¹⁸ — R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: It is proper that a letter be rooted out of the Torah so that thereby the heavenly name shall be publicly hallowed. For passers-by were enquiring, ‘What kind of men are these?’ — ‘These are royal princes’ — ‘And what have they done?’ — ‘They laid their hands upon unattached¹⁹ strangers’ — Then they exclaimed: ‘There is no nation in existence which one ought to join as much as this one. If [the punishment of] royal princes was so great. how much more that of common people; and if such [was the justice done for] unattached proselytes, how much more so for Israelites

A hundred and fifty thousand men immediately joined Israel; as it is said, And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bore burdens, and fourscore thousand that were hewers in the mountain.²⁰ Might not these have been Israelites? — This cannot be assumed, for it is written, But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondservants.²¹ But that²² might have represented mere public service!²³ — [The deduction,] however, [is made] from the following: And Solomon numbered all the strangers that were in the Land of Israel, etc. And they were found a hundred and fifty thousand etc. And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountains.²⁴

Was it David, however, who issued the decree of prohibition against the nethinim? Moses, surely, issued that decree, for it is written, from the hewer of thy wood to the drawer of thy water!²⁵ — Moses issued a decree against that generation only²⁶ while David issued a decree against all generations.

But Joshua, in fact, issued the decree against them, for it is written, And Joshua made them that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar of the Lord!²⁷ — Joshua made his decree for the period during which the Sanctuary was in existence²⁸ while David made his decree for the time during which the Sanctuary was not in existence.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 79b

In the days of Rabbi there was a desire to permit the nethinim.¹ Said Rabbi to them, 'We could very well surrender our portion; who could surrender the portion of the altar?'² He³ is thus in disagreement with R. Hiyya b. Abba. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: The portion of the congregation is forbidden for ever,⁴ and the portion of the altar is forbidden only when the Sanctuary is in existence, but when the Sanctuary is not in existence it is permitted.

MISHNAH. R. JOSHUA STATED: I HAVE HEARD⁵ THAT A SARIS⁶ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH⁶ AND THAT HALIZAH IS ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, AND ALSO THAT A SARIS⁶ DOES NOT SUBMIT TO HALIZAH AND THAT NO HALIZAH IS TO BE ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, AND I AM UNABLE TO EXPLAIN THIS.⁷ R. AKIBA SAID, I WILL EXPLAIN IT: A MAN-MADE SARIS⁸ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH AND HALIZAH IS ALSO ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, BECAUSE THERE WAS A TIME WHEN HE WAS IN A STATE OF FITNESS. A SARIS BY NATURE⁹ NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR IS HALIZAH ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, SINCE THERE NEVER WAS A TIME WHEN HE WAS FIT. R. ELIEZER SAID: NOT SO, BUT A SARIS BY NATURE⁹ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH AND HALIZAH IS ALSO ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, BECAUSE HE MAY BE CURED. A MAN-MADE SARIS¹⁰ NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR IS HALIZAH ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, SINCE HE CANNOT BE CURED. R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BEN MEGOSATH, WHO WAS A MAN-MADE SARIS LIVING IN JERUSALEM. THAT HIS WIFE WAS ALLOWED TO BE MARRIED BY THE LEVIR, THUS CONFIRMING THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA.

THE SARIS NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE

MARRIAGE, AND SO ALSO A WOMAN WHO IS INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION MUST NEITHER PERFORM HALIZAH NOR BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF A SARIS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, HE DOES NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.¹⁰ IF, HOWEVER, HE COHABITED WITH HER HE CAUSES HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.¹¹ SINCE HIS ACT IS SHEER PROSTITUTION.¹² SIMILARLY, WHERE BROTHERS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, THEY DO NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.¹¹ IF, HOWEVER, THEY COHABITED WITH HER, THEY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.¹¹ SINCE COHABITATION WITH HER IS AN ACT OF PROSTITUTION.¹³

GEMARA. Observe! R. Akiba was heard to state that ‘Those who are subject to the penalty of negative precepts¹⁴ are on a par with those who are subject to the penalties of kareth’;¹⁵ but those who are subject to the penalty of kareth are not eligible for halizah or levirate marriage!¹⁶ — R. Ammi replied: ‘What we are dealing with here is with a case, for instance, where his brother¹⁷ had married a proselyte; and R. Akiba is of the same opinion as R. Jose, who stated that an assembly of proselytes is not regarded as an assembly.’¹⁸ If so,¹⁹ he should also be permitted to contract levirate marriage!²⁰ — The law is so indeed; only because R. Joshua used the expression ‘SUBMITS TO HALIZAH’²¹ he [R. Akiba] also used the expression ‘SUBMITS TO HALIZAH’. This²² may also be proved by inference; for it was stated, R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BEN MEGOSATH, WHO WAS A MAN-MADE SARIS LIVING IN JERUSALEM, THAT HIS WIFE WAS ALLOWED TO BE MARRIED BY THE LEVIR,²³ THUS CONFIRMING THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA. This proves it.²²

Rabbah raised an objection: He who is wounded in the stones or has his privy member cut off, a man-made saris, and an old man, may either participate in halizah or contract levirate marriage. How?²⁴ If these died²⁵ and were survived by wives and brothers, and those brothers addressed a ma'amar to the wives, or gave them letters of divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are legally valid;²⁶ if they cohabited with them, the widows become their lawful wives.²⁷ If the brothers died and they²⁸ addressed a ma'amar to their²⁹ wives, or gave them divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are valid;³⁰ and if they cohabited with them the widows become their lawful wives, but they³¹ may not retain them, because it is said in Scripture. He that is wounded in the stones or hath his privy member cut off shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord.³² This clearly proves that we are dealing³³ with members of the assembly!³⁴ — The fact is, said Rabbah, that this³⁵ is a case where the widow became subject to him³⁶ first and he was subsequently maimed.³⁷ Said Abaye to him: Let the prohibition against the maimed man override the positive precept of the levirate marriage! Did we not learn [of a similar case]: R. Gamaliel said, If she³⁸ made a declaration of refusal³⁹ well and good;⁴⁰ and if not, let [the elder sister] wait until the minor grows up and she will then be exempt as his wife's sister.⁴¹ Thus it follows that the prohibition against a wife's sister has the force of overriding [that of the levirate marriage]; here also, then, let the prohibition against the maimed man have the force of overriding it! — But, said R. Joseph. this Tanna⁴² represents the view of the Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who maintains that [the issue] of a union which is subject to the penalty of negative precepts owing to consanguinity⁴³ is regarded as a bastard, but [the issue] of a union that is merely subject to the penalty of negative precepts is not a bastard.⁴⁴

The text, ‘To raise up unto his brother a name’⁴⁵ should be applicable to this case⁴⁶ also, but he,⁴⁷ surely, is incapable of raising it!⁴⁸ — Raba replied: If so,⁴⁹ there exists no woman who is eligible for the levirate marriage whose husband was not a saris by nature⁵⁰ for a short time, at least, prior to his death.⁵¹

Against R. Eliezer,⁵² however, Raba's reply⁵³ presents a [valid] objection! — There⁵⁴ it is only a general state of debility⁵⁵ that had set in.⁵⁶

What are we to understand by A SARIS BY NATURE? — R. Isaac b. Joseph replied in the name of R. Johanan: Any man

 - (32) Deut. XXIII, 2. V. Tosef. XI.
 - (33) In regarding the halizah and marriage with an impotent person as valid.
 - (34) How then could it be suggested that R. Akiba speaks of women proselytes who are not included in the term ‘assembly?’
 - (35) R. Akiba's statement in our Mishnah.
 - (36) As his deceased brother's wife.
 - (37) Since the obligation arose while the man was still in a state of potency, halizah with him is both necessary and valid.
 - (38) A minor who was given away in marriage by her mother or brothers after the death of her father and whose elder sister has now become subject to the levirate marriage of her husband.
 - (39) Mi'un (v. Glos.). No divorce is needed in the case of such a minor's marriage.
 - (40) Lit., ‘she refused’. Her marriage becomes null and void retrospectively, and, as she has thus never been the legal wife of the levir, her sister (who is now no more the levir's wife's sister) may well contract with him the levirate marriage.

(41) Supra 18a, infra 109a.

(42) Who, in fact, deals with a case where the impotency had set in prior to the obligation and yet permits the halizah.

(43) Of the contracting parties.

(44) This Tanna, like the Tanna of our Mishnah, thus draws a distinction between two classes of trespass that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts: (a) cases due to consanguinity and (b) other cases. While the former are subject to the restrictions of those who are liable to kareth, the latter are not. Maimed persons belong to the latter class and are consequently subject to the levirate law. Cf. supra 49a.

(45) Deut. XXV, 7.

(46) The maimed levir.

(47) Owing to his impotency at the time of the halizah.

(48) Though at some earlier period he might have been; why then should he be subject to halizah?

(49) If his former potency is not to be taken into consideration.

(50) Approaching death deprives a person of his generating powers, and he may then be regarded virtually as a saris.

(51) The widow of such a saris should consequently be exempt from halizah (v. our Mishnah). How, then, would a widow ever be subject to halizah? It must, therefore, be admitted that a person's former capacity for propagation is taken into consideration even though that capacity was subsequently lost.

(52) Who maintains that a manmade saris does not submit to halizah, though prior to his incapacitation he was capable of propagation.

(53) Which proves the contrary of R. Eliezer's statement (cf. supra n. 6).

(54) Where the power of propagation is lost on approaching death.

(55) Which precedes death.

(56) And this cannot at all be compared with the case of an actual saris whose incapacity is due to a definite defect in his generative organs.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 80a

who has not experienced a moment [of life] in a state of fitness.¹ How could this² be ascertained? — Abaye replied: [By observing whether] when he urinates no arch is formed. What are the causes?³ — That the child's mother baked at noon⁴ and drank strong⁵ beer.

R. Joseph said: It must have been such a saris⁶ of whom I heard Ammi saying. 'He who is afflicted from birth',⁷ and I did not know [at the time] to whom he was referring. But should we not take into consideration the possibility that he might have recovered in the meantime!⁸ — Since he suffered from affliction in his early as well as in his later life, no [possible interval of recovery] need be taken into consideration

R. Mari raised an objection: R. Hanina b. Antigonus stated, 'It⁹ is to be examined¹⁰ three times in eighty days'¹¹ — Precautions are to be taken in respect of one limb;¹² in respect of the entire body¹³ no such precautions need be taken.¹⁴

R. ELIEZER SAID: NOT SO etc. A contradiction may be pointed out: If at the age of twenty he¹⁵ did not produce two hairs,¹⁶ they¹⁷ must bring evidence that he is twenty years of age and he, being confirmed as a saris,¹⁸ neither submits to halizah nor performs the levirate marriage. If the woman¹⁹ at the age of twenty did not produce two hairs,²⁰ they²¹ must bring evidence that she is twenty years of age and she, being confirmed as a woman who is incapable of procreation neither performs halizah nor is taken in levirate marriage; so Beth Hillel. But Beth Shammai maintain that with the one as well as with the other [this takes place at] the age of eighteen. R. Eliezer said. In the case of the male, the law is in accordance with Beth Hillel and in the case Of the female, the law is in accordance with Beth Shammai because a woman matures earlier than a man!²² Rami b. Dikuli replied in the name Of Samuel: R. Eliezer changed his view.²³

The question was raised: From which statement did he withdraw? — Come and hear what was taught: R. Eliezer said. A congenital saris²⁴ submits to halizah, and halizah is arranged for his wife, because cases of such a nature are cured in Alexandria in Egypt.²⁵

R. Eleazar said: As a matter of fact he²⁶ did not change his view at all, but that statement²⁷ was taught in respect [of the age of] punishment.²⁸

It was stated: If a person²⁹ between the age of twelve years and one day³⁰ and that of eighteen years³¹ ate forbidden fat,³² and after the marks of a saris had appeared, he grew two hairs.³³ Rab ruled that the person is deemed to be a saris retrospectively.³⁴ But Samuel ruled [that the person is regarded as] having been a minor at that time.³⁵

R. Joseph demurred against Rab.³⁶ According to R. Meir,³⁷ a woman who is incapable of procreation³⁸ should be entitled to a fine!³⁹ — Abaye replied: She passes from her minority [directly] into adolescence.⁴⁰ The other said to him: May all such fine sayings be reported in my name. For so it was taught: A saris is not tried as a stubborn and rebellious son,⁴¹ because no stubborn and rebellious son is tried unless he bears the mark of the pubic hair.⁴² Nor is a woman who is incapable of procreation tried as a betrothed damsel⁴³ because from her minority she passes [directly] into adolescence.⁴⁴

R. Abbahu stated: On [the basis of] the marks of a saris, of a woman incapable of procreation, and of an eight-[month] child⁴⁵ no decision is made⁴⁶ until they attain the age of twenty.⁴⁷ Is, however, an eight-[month] child viable? Surely it was taught: An eight-month child is like a stone,⁴⁸ and it is forbidden to move him;⁴⁹ only his mother may bend over him and nurse him

- (1) I.e., who was born with defective organs.
 - (2) That a child was a saris from birth.
 - (3) Of congenital impotency.
 - (4) The heat of the oven combined with the heat of the day obviously affected the generative organs of the embryo.
 - (5) Others, 'pale', 'diluted'.
 - (6) The congenital eunuch or 'saris by nature' spoken of in our Mishnah.
 - (7) Lit., 'from his mother's bowels'.
 - (8) Between the periods of his early and present impotency. And since he was possessed of his manly powers even if only for a short time, how could he (v. our Mishnah) be regarded as a 'saris by nature'?
 - (9) The firstborn of a beast afflicted with a serious blemish which renders it unfit for the altar.
 - (10) To ascertain whether the blemish is a permanent one. If it was only a passing affliction it does not affect the legal fitness of the animal.
 - (11) At the beginning, middle and end of the period. Only where the blemish remained for the full eighty days is it regarded as permanent. If no examination was made in the middle of the period mentioned, the blemish cannot be deemed to be a permanent since it is possible that it had disappeared for some time and reappeared again V. Bek. 38b. Why, then, is the middle period disregarded in the case of the saris?
 - (12) The eye, for instance, which was the limb affected in the case cited.
 - (13) The impotency of the saris is an affliction affecting his body as a whole.
 - (14) It is unlikely that such a defect should appear, disappear and reappear again.
 - (15) A levir whose duty it is to contract levirate marriage or to submit to halizah.
 - (16) The marks of puberty.
 - (17) The relatives of the widow who wish to exempt her from the halizah and the marriage.
 - (18) By a display of the required symptoms.
 - (19) The widow whose husband had died without issue.
 - (20) The marks of puberty.
 - (21) The levir's relatives. Cf. supra note 9, mutatis mutandis.

- (22) Nid. 47b. Now, the case spoken of here is that of a congenital saris and yet R. Eliezer stated that he is subject neither to halizah nor to the levirate marriage, which is in direct contradiction to his statement in our Mishnah!
- (23) The two statements were made at an earlier and later period respectively.
- (24) V. supra p. 538. n. 11.
- (25) As this Baraitha agrees with our Mishnah and, in addition, contains also a reason for its statement, based on actual experience. it is reasonable to assume that R. Eliezer withdrew from his other view contained in the Baraitha of Niddah.
- (26) R. Eliezer.
- (27) Supra, that the age of a male is twenty, in agreement with Beth Hillel, and that that of a female is eighteen, in agreement with Beth Shammai.
- (28) At the ages stated males and females respectively, emerging from their state of minority and entering that of majority, become subject to all legal obligations and penalties. The statement has no reference at all to halizah or the levirate marriage.
- (29) The reference is to a female though the masc. gender 'saris' is used. The age of twelve years and one day is applicable to females only.
- (30) Below this age a girl is regarded as a minor.
- (31) This will be according to R. Eliezer, supra.
- (32) Or committed any other transgression. The eating of forbidden fat, חלב is invariably taken as the example of a punishable offence. Cf. Golds. a.l.
- (33) The marks of puberty.
- (34) From the age of twelve years and one day. Despite the absence of the hairs until after the age of eighteen. and their subsequent appearance. the girl is regarded as having passed into her majority at the earlier age of twelve years and one day. and consequently subject from that time to all legal penalties, the delay in the emergence of her marks of puberty being attributed to her mere impotence.
- (35) Between the ages of twelve and eighteen. Samuel holds that majority sets in at the latter age only when the girl's impotency is definitely established.
- (36) Who regards a girl, who was only subsequently found to be a saris, as having been a saris and consequently also of age from the moment she was twelve years and one day old.
- (37) Who exempts the seducer of a minor from the payment of the fine prescribed in Deut. XXII, 29.
- (38) The seducer of whom is also exempt from the fine mentioned (supra note 2) on the ground that, as she did not produce the required hairs, she was regarded at the time as a minor. V. Keth. 35b.
- (39) Because, since it was later established that she was sterile, she should be regarded (cf. supra note 1) as having been sterile, and so also of age, retrospectively.
- (40) The former age is twelve years and one day; the latter is twelve and a half plus one day. In the intervening age a girl is described as נערה damsel or maiden; and it is during this period (נערות) that she is entitled to the fine mentioned. The sterile woman does in fact become of age retrospectively, as Rab laid down, but she assumes the status of the adolescent woman who is not entitled to the fine.
- (41) Cf. Deut. XXI, 18ff.
- (42) Lit., 'lower beard'.
- (43) Who has been outraged (v. Deut. XXII, 23ff).
- (44) Cf. supra n. 5.
- (45) Born in the eighth month of conception. who, as a rule, is not viable.
- (46) As to whether in the case of the former they are impotent and of age, and in the case of the latter whether he is viable.
- (47) Between the age of twelve and this age the former are regarded as minors until they have produced two pubic hairs, if these appear before they were twenty; and if these were not produced at twenty their majority begins from the age of twelve. In the case of the child he cannot be regarded as viable before he has completed the twentieth year of his life.
- (48) Obviously because he is not viable.
- (49) On the Sabbath when only such objects may be moved as were intended to be used on that day. The moving of a stone is forbidden.

in order to avert danger!¹ — Here² we are dealing with one whose marks³ have not⁴ been developed.⁵ For it was taught: Who is an eight-month child? He whose months [of conception] have not been completed. Rabbi said: The marks, his hair and nails which were not developed, would indicate it.⁶ The reason then is because they were not developed, but had they been developed it would have been assumed that the child was a seven-month one⁷ only his [birth] was somewhat delayed.⁸

With reference, however, to the practical decision which Raba Tosfa'ah gave in the case of a woman whose husband had gone to a country beyond the sea and remained there for a full year of twelve months, where he declared the child legitimate,⁹ in accordance with whose [view did he act]? [Was it] in accordance with that of Rabbi who maintains that [birth] may be delayed!¹⁰ — Since R. Simeon b. Gamaliel also maintains that [birth may] be delayed. he acted in agreement with a majority. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Any human¹¹ child that lingers for thirty days can not be regarded as a miscarriage.¹²

Our Rabbis taught: Who is a congenital saris?¹³ Any person who is twenty years of age and has not produced two pubic hairs.¹⁴ And even if he produced them afterwards he is deemed to be a saris in all respects. And these are his characteristics: He has no beard, his hair is lank, and his skin is smooth. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said in the name of R. Judah b. Jair:¹⁵ Any person whose urine produces no froth; some say: He who urinates without forming an arch; some say: He whose semen is watery; and some say: He whose urine does not ferment. Others say: He whose body does not steam after bathing in the winter season. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said:¹⁵ He whose voice is abnormal so that one cannot distinguish whether it is that of a man or of a woman.

What woman is deemed to be incapable of procreation? — Any woman who is twenty years of age and has not produced two pubic hairs.¹⁴ And even if she produces them afterwards she is deemed to be a woman incapable of procreation in all respects. And these are her characteristics: She has no breasts and suffers pain during copulation. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said:¹⁵ One who has no mons veneris like other women. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: One whose voice is deep so that one cannot distinguish whether it is that of a man or of a woman.

It was stated: As to the characteristics of a saris, R. Huna stated, [Impotency cannot be established] unless they are all present. R. Johanan, however, stated: Even if only one of them is present.¹⁶ Where two hairs were produced¹⁷ all agree that impotency cannot be established unless all characteristics¹⁸ are displayed. They only differ in the case where these were not produced. With reference, however, to what Rabbah b. Abbuha said to the Rabbis, 'Examine R. Nahman. and if his body steams I will allow him to marry my daughter'; in accordance with whose view [was he acting]? [Was it] according to R. Huna!¹⁹ — No; R. Nahman had some stray hairs.²⁰

THE SARIS NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND SO ALSO A WOMAN WHO IS INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION etc. The saris was mentioned in the same way as the woman who is incapable of procreation; as the woman's incapacity is due to an act of²¹ heaven so must that of the saris be an act²¹ of heaven; and this anonymous [Mishnah] is in agreement with R. Akiba who stated [that halizah applies] only to a man-made [saris but] not [to one afflicted] by the hand of heaven.²²

IF A SARIS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, HE DOES NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED etc. The reason then [why when HE COHABITED WITH HER HE CAUSES HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED] is because he²³ cohabited with her; another man, however, does not;²⁴

(1) To the mother and the child. The latter might otherwise die of starvation before his time, and the former might contract serious illness through the accumulation of superfluous milk in her breasts. V. Tosef. Shab. XVI. Now, since the child, because he is not viable, is regarded as a stone (v. p. 545. n. 13), how could he ever attain the age of twenty?

(2) In the cited Baraita.

(3) Of viability. such as hair and nails.

(4) So Alfasi, Bah and some MSS. Cur. edd. omit, 'not' referring to R. Abbahu's statement.

(5) Where the marks, however, are developed. as is the case in the Baraita cited, the child may be viable.

(6) Tosef. Shab. XVI. Lit., 'concerning him', whether he is an eight-month child.

(7) A child whose development is completed in the seventh month is viable.

(8) R. Abbahu, supra, referring to such a case, teaches that, even according to Rabbi, no definite decision can be arrived at before the child has grown up and attained the age of twenty.

(9) Assuming, as he did, that it remained in utero three months after the nine-monthly period.

(10) Would he agree with an individual, against the opinion of a majority?

(11) In the case of an animal the period is eight days.

(12) Supra 36b, Shab. 135b, Nid. 44b. The child is assumed to be a seven-month one whose birth had been delayed and who is consequently viable.

(13) V. supra p. 538, n. 11.

(14) The usual marks of puberty.

(15) In reply to the question 'who is a saris?'

(16) Lit., 'by one of them'.

(17) Elijah Wilna deletes 'In the beard' of cur. edd. [The reference will be accordingly to an emergence of hairs after the age of twenty, for had they appeared earlier, he would no longer be regarded as a saris even in the face of all other characteristics of a saris, v. supra p. 543. Tosaf., however, retains the reading of our text and consequently draws a distinction between hairs of the beard and on any other part of the body. The former in themselves, unlike the latter, are not sufficient to establish potency. V. Tosaf. s.v. דְּהַבִּיָּא].

(18) Of a saris.

(19) Since the absence of one characteristic satisfied him, contrary to the opinion of R. Johanan supra.

(20) V. supra p. 547, n. 5. סִיכֵי pl. of סִיכָא.

(21) Lit., 'by the hands of'.

(22) The congenital eunuch or the saris by nature. Cf. supra p. 538. n. 11.

(23) The levir to whom, as his brother's wife, she is forbidden under the penalty of kareth.

(24) Cause her to be disqualified.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 81a

is this, then, an objection to the view of R. Hamnuna who stated that a widow awaiting the decision of her levir who committed adultery¹ is disqualified [from marrying her] brother-in-law!² — No; the same law³ is applicable to [the case of cohabitation with] another man also; Only because the first clause was taught in respect of himself,⁴ the latter clause also was taught in respect of himself.

SIMILARLY, WHERE BROTHERS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION etc. The reason then [why when THEY COHABITED WITH HER THEY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED] is because they cohabited with her, but had they not cohabited with her they would not;⁵ in accordance with whose view [is this statement made]? — Not in accordance with that of R. Judah; for should it [be suggested that it is in agreement with] R. Judah, he, surely, [it might be objected,] stated that a woman incapable of procreation is regarded as a harlot.⁶

MISHNAH. IF A PRIEST WHO WAS A SARIS BY NATURE⁷ MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HE CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH. R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON STATED: IF A PRIEST WHO WAS AN HERMAPHRODITE MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HE CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH.

R. JUDAH STATED: IF A TUMTUM,⁸ WAS OPERATED UPON⁹ AND HE WAS FOUND TO BE A MALE, HE MUST NOT PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH,¹⁰ BECAUSE HE HAS THE SAME STATUS AS A SARIS. THE HERMAPHRODITE MAY MARRY [A WIFE] BUT MAY NOT BE MARRIED [BY A MAN].¹¹ R. ELIEZER¹² STATED: [FOR COPULATION] WITH AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.¹³

GEMARA. [Is not this]¹⁴ obvious!¹⁵ — It might have been assumed that only one who is capable of propagation is entitled to bestow the right of eating¹⁶ and that he who is not capable of propagating is not entitled to bestow the right of eating; hence we were taught [that even the saris may bestow the right].

R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON STATED . . . HERMAPHRODITE. Resh Lakish said: He CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH but does not confer upon her the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder.¹⁷ R. Johanan, however, said: He also confers upon her the right to eat of the breast and shoulder.¹⁷

According to Resh Lakish,¹⁸ why is the breast and the shoulder different?¹⁹ [Obviously] because [it was] Pentateuchally [ordained].²⁰ [Was not] terumah, [however]. also Pentateuchally [ordained]? — We are dealing here with terumah at the present time,²¹ which [is only a] Rabbinical [ordinance].²² What is the law, however, when the Sanctuary is in existence?²³ [Obviously that terumah may] not [be eaten]!²⁴ Why, then, did he state, ‘But does not confer the right of eating the breast and the shoulder’?²⁵ He should rather have drawn the distinction in respect of the terumah itself, thus: This²⁶ applies only to Rabbinical terumah,²⁷ but not to terumah that has been Pentateuchally ordained!²⁸ — It is this, in fact, that he meant: When he²⁹ confers upon her³⁰ the right of eating, he enables her to eat terumah at the present time²⁷ only when it is a Rabbinical ordinance;³¹ he is not entitled, however, to confer upon her the right of eating terumah at the time when the law of the breast and the shoulder is in force,³² even if the terumah is only Rabbinical,³³ for she might in consequence also come to eat of Pentateuchal terumah.³⁴

‘R. Johanan, however, said: He also confers upon her the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder’. Said R. Johanan to Resh Lakish: Do you³⁵ maintain that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical ordinance? — ‘Yes’, the other replied, ‘for I read:³⁶ A cake of figs³⁷ among cakes of figs is neutralised’.³⁸ ‘But I’, said the first, ‘read, “A piece³⁹ among pieces⁴⁰ is neutralized”;⁴¹ you obviously believe that the reading⁴² is, “Whatsoever⁴³ one is wont to count”,⁴⁴ the reading in fact is, “That which one is wont to count”’.⁴⁵

What [Mishnah⁴⁶ is] it? — That wherein we learned: If a man had bundles of fenugreek of kil'ayim⁴⁷ of the vineyard⁴⁸ they must be burned.⁴⁹ If these were mixed up with others,⁵⁰

(1) With any man.

(2) As any harlot. Consequently she would also be forbidden to marry a priest. But according to the implication of our Mishnah she is not disqualified from marrying a priest!

(3) Of our Mishnah, that cohabitation with the widow causes her disqualification.

(4) The levir.

(5) Cause her to be disqualified.

(6) Supra 61a. Cf. supra p. 548, n. 8, mutatis mutandis.

(7) This excludes the man-made saris who stands under the prohibition of Deut. XXIII, 2, and cannot consequently confer upon his wife the right of eating.

(8) V. Glos.

(9) Lit., ‘was torn asunder’.

(10) If he has a brother who could participate in the ceremony instead of him.

- (11) He has the status of a male rather than that of a female, and his cohabitation with a male would be an act of sodomy.
- (12) 'Eleazar' according to תוספות יום טוב. Cf. however, Tosaf. s.v. רבי infra 84a.
- (13) On the difference between R. Eliezer and R. Judah. v. Gemara infra.
- (14) That the congenital saris bestows the right of eating terumah upon his wife.
- (15) His marriage being lawful; since he is not subject to the prohibition in Deut. XXIII, 2 (cf. supra note 3), he is obviously entitled to bestow the right.
- (16) Cf. Lev. XXII, 11. And such as are born in his house, they may eat of his bread, emphasis on born in his house. Cf. Rashi, a.l.
- (17) The priest's due from certain sacrifices. Cf. Lev. VII, 34.
- (18) Who forbids the breast and the shoulder to the wife of the hermaphrodite.
- (19) From terumah which may be eaten by her.
- (20) Cf. supra n. 1.
- (21) After the destruction of the Temple.
- (22) Pentateuchally it is only due while the Temple is in existence.
- (23) Cf. supra note 6.
- (24) By the wife of an hermaphrodite.
- (25) Drawing a distinction between terumah and other priestly gifts.
- (26) That the hermaphrodite confers upon his wife the right of eating.
- (27) After the destruction of the Temple.
- (28) Cf. supra note 6.
- (29) The hermaphrodite.
- (30) His wife.
- (31) Pentateuchally it is only due while the Temple is in existence.
- (32) When the Temple is in existence.
- (33) Such as that given from the fruit of the trees, which is at all times a Rabbinical ordinance only.
- (34) That which is given from corn, wine and oil.
- (35) Since you restrict the right of consumption to terumah and exclude that of the breast and the shoulder.
- (36) In a Baraitha. Cf. the Mishnah cited infra and note 11.
- (37) A number of figs pressed together.
- (38) If such a cake of terumah was mixed up with a hundred non-consecrated cakes of the same size, or if a cake of terumah that was levitically unclean was mixed up with a hundred such cakes of clean terumah, the entire quantity is permitted. in the latter case, to clean priests and, in the former case, to Israelites also. This proves that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical ordinance, since such neutralization, had the ordinance been Pentateuchal, would not, owing to its comparative importance (its high commercial value, v. infra), have been permitted. Though the terumah of figs, like that of all other fruit of trees, is at all times a Rabbinical ordinance only, its neutralization would not have been permitted at the present time had there been any Pentateuchal terumah in existence at the same time. The neutralization of the former would have been forbidden as a preventive measure against the possible assumption that the 'latter also might be neutralized.
- (39) Of an unclean sin-offering which is Pentateuchally forbidden. V. the Baraitha infra 81b.
- (40) Of clean meat.
- (41) And is permitted to be eaten. As a piece of meat which is Pentateuchally forbidden (v. supra n. 5) may be neutralized, even though its importance, owing to its commercial value, may be as high as that of a cake of figs, so may any food be neutralized even though its prohibition is Pentateuchal.
- (42) Cf. the Mishnah cited infra.
- (43) Any objects which any person whatsoever sells by counting the units. V. infra n. 11.
- (44) Cannot be neutralized.
- (45) 'Whatsoever' is more comprehensive than 'that'. According to the former reading, neutralization is not permitted in the case of any objects which are regarded as of sufficiently high commercial value to be sold not in bulk but in units. According to the latter reading, neutralization is permitted in all cases except those where the units are of such a high value that they are not sold save by counting single units. Now, since cakes of figs are not invariably sold in units they may of course be neutralized even though they consist of Pentateuchal terumah (cf. supra n. 7). Resh Lakish, therefore, remains with no proof whatsoever that terumah at the present time is a mere Rabbinical ordinance. [This interpretation which follows Rashi does not account for the phrase 'one is wont etc', mentioned also with the latter reading. Me'iri explains the former as including whatever is being sold as a rule by counting among the poor, whereas the latter requires the sale by counting to be the general practice among the rich as well as the poor. On either reading it is the general practice rather than the invariable rule which is the determining factor].

(46) Referred to by R. Johanan (cf. p. 551. n. 8).

(48) Cf. Deut. XXII, 9.

(49) This is deduced from the expression תקדש (ibid. R.V., forfeited; R.V. marg., consecrated), read as תוקדש 'shall be burned with fire'.

(50) Permitted bundles of fenugrec.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 81b

they must all be burned;¹ so R. Meir. The Sages, however, stated: They are neutralized in [a mixture of] two hundred and one.² R. Meir, [in his ruling,] is of the opinion that whatever³ might be counted causes forfeiture,⁴ while the Sages are of the opinion that only six things cause forfeiture.⁵ R. Akiba said: Seven. They are the following: Crack-nuts,⁶ the pomegranates of Badan,⁷ sealed jugs [of wine], young shoots of beet,⁸ cabbage roots and the Grecian gourd. R. Akiba adds also home made⁹ bread.¹⁰ Those which are subject to the law of 'orlah¹¹ [impart the prohibition of] 'orlah¹² [and those which are subject] to the law of kil'ayim of the vineyard¹³ [impart¹² that of the] kil'ayim of the vineyard.¹⁴ R. Johanan holds the view that the reading¹⁵ was, 'That which one is wont to count'¹⁶ while Resh Lakish holds the view that the reading was 'Whatsoever one is wont to count'.¹⁷

What [is the Baraita about the] piece?¹⁸ — It was taught: A piece of a levitically unclean sin-offering that was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean sin-offerings and, similarly, a piece of levitically unclean shewbread¹⁹ that was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean shewbread is neutralized.²⁰ R. Judah said: It is not neutralized.²¹ If, however, a piece of a levitically clean sin offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat, and similarly if a piece of levitically clean shewbread was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean unconsecrated bread, all agree that neutralization cannot take place.²² Now in the first clause, at any rate, it was stated that it 'is neutralized'!²³ — R. Hiyya son of R. Huna replied: In [the case where it was] crushed.²⁴ If so,²⁴ what is R. Judah's reason?²⁵

(1) The forbidden kil'ayim cannot be neutralized. The reason is given infra.

(2) I.e., if the permitted food is two hundred times the quantity of the forbidden kil'ayim.

(3) V. supra p. 551. n. 9.

(4) Lit., consecrates'. (Cf. R.V. and J.T., Deut. XXII, 9, be forfeited). All the mixture is forbidden on account of the importance (cf. supra p. 551, n. 11) of the forbidden object it contained, which can never be neutralized.

(5) Cf. supra n. 9.

(6) אגוזי פרך (cf. Jast. and Golds.). Rashi regards Perek as a place name. Parka (Perek) is situated in Samaria in the vicinity of Shechem.

(7) A Samaritan town north-east of Shechem lying in the valley Wadi Baidan.

(8) Or 'tomatoes'.

(9) Lit., 'of the master of the house'.

(10) Lit., 'loaves'.

(11) V. Glos. The nuts, pomegranates and jugs of wine.

(12) Upon the entire mixture.

(13) The beet, cabbage and gourd.

(14) 'Orlah III, 6, Bezaḥ 3b. Zeb. 72a.

(15) In the Mishnah cited.

(16) Cf. supra p. 551, n. 11. Only such objects cannot be neutralized. Cakes of figs and pieces of meat, however, since some people do not always sell them singly but in bulk, are of less commercial importance and may, therefore, be neutralized.

(17) Cf. supra p. 551, nn. 7 and 8. As cakes of figs are sometimes sold by being counted singly, they are regarded as commercially important objects which, were they Pentateuchally forbidden, could never be neutralized. As it was stated, however, that a cake of figs of terumah may be neutralized, it follows, according to Resh Lakish, that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical, and not a Pentateuchal ordinance.

(18) Mentioned by R. Johanan. Cf. supra p. 551. n. 5.

(19) Cf. Ex. XXV, 30.

(20) The entire mixture is regarded as clean sin-offering meat and clean shewbread respectively.

(21) The reason is discussed infra.

(22) Neutralization would have removed a Pentateuchal prohibition (that of eating consecrated food by a non-priest) from the piece of the sin-offering or from that of the shewbread. As, however, the entire mixture, which consists of pieces that are sometimes sold by number, may be eaten even without recourse to neutralization by a priest to whom it could be sold, though this might have to be done at a reduced cost, the law of neutralization, which is applied even in such circumstances whenever the prohibition is Rabbinical, as in the case of the cake of figs (supra), is not applied here where it is Pentateuchal.

(23) Though these objects are sometimes sold in units. This obviously proves that the reading was, as R. Johanan stated, 'That which one is wont to count'. How, then, could Resh Lakish maintain that the reading was 'Whatsoever one is wont to count'?

(24) When it is no longer sold in units but in bulk.

(25) Why does he in such a case object to neutralization?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 82a

— R. Judah follows his own view; for he stated:¹ The law of neutralization takes no effect in homogeneous objects.² [Had the piece] not been crushed, however, what [would have been the law]? Assumingly that it could not be neutralized! Why, then, was it taught. 'If, however, a piece of a levitically clean sin-offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat . . . neutralization cannot take place'?³ Let the distinction be drawn in [the case of consecrated meat] itself, thus: This⁴ applies only where it⁵ was crushed; but when it was not crushed it may not be neutralized! — He preferred [to speak of] a mixture of clean with clean.⁶

According to Resh Lakish,⁷ wherein lies the difference between the first clause and the final clause?⁸ — R. Shisha the son of R. Idi replied: The first clause deals with uncleanness that was due to liquids,⁹ which is only Rabbinical,¹⁰ while the final clause [deals with a prohibition]¹¹ which is Pentateuchal.¹² What, however, [would be the law in the case of] uncleanness through a reptile?¹³ Assumingly that no neutralization is permitted! Why, then, did he state in the final clause, 'If, however, a piece of levitically clean sin-offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat . . . neutralization cannot take place'?¹⁴ Let the distinction rather be drawn in [respect of consecrated meat] itself, thus: This¹⁵ applies only to uncleanness due to liquids, but when it is due to a reptile it may not be neutralized! — He preferred [to speak] of a mixture of clean with clean.¹⁶

Rabbah replied:¹⁷ The first clause [deals with] a prohibition under a negative precept¹⁸ while the final clause [deals with] one that involves the penalty of kareth.¹⁹ But surely was it not Rabbah who stated that in all Pentateuchal prohibitions there is no difference²⁰ between a prohibition that is due to a negative precept and one that involves kareth!²¹ — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi replied:¹⁷ [The law²² in the] final clause is due to the fact that [the consecrated food] is an object which may be made²³ permissible,²⁴ and any object which [in certain circumstances] becomes permitted²⁴ cannot be neutralized even in a thousand.²⁵ This statement of R. Ashi, however, is mere fiction.²⁶ For to whom [would the mixture become permitted]!²⁷ To²⁸ the priest it is permitted [all the time];²⁹ to the Israelite²⁸ it is for ever forbidden!³⁰ The statement of R. Ashi must consequently be regarded as mere fiction. But is R. Johanan of the opinion that terumah at the present time³¹ is Pentateuchal?³² Surely it was taught: If in front of two baskets, one of which contained unconsecrated fruit and the other that of terumah, were two se'ah measures, one containing unconsecrated fruit and the other that of terumah, and the latter fell into the former, behold these are permitted,³³ for it is assumed that the terumah fell into the terumah and the unconsecrated fruit fell into the unconsecrated fruit.³⁴ And [in reference to this ruling] Resh Lakish stated: 'Only if the unconsecrated fruit³⁵ was more than that of the terumah',³⁶ while R. Johanan stated, 'Even if the unconsecrated fruit were no more than the terumah'.³⁷ Now, according to Resh Lakish³⁸ the ruling³⁹ may well be justified since he may hold the opinion that with Rabbinically [forbidden food] also it is necessary⁴⁰ to have a larger quantity [of the permitted food]. According to R. Johanan.⁴¹ however, a difficulty arises!⁴² 'This'⁴³ [R. Johanan may reply] 'is the view of⁴⁴ the Rabbis,⁴⁵

(1) Zeb. 79a, Men. 22b.

(2) Lit., 'a kind in its kind does not cease to exist'.

(3) Thus drawing a distinction between a mixture of consecrated and unconsecrated meat.

(4) That neutralization takes place.

(5) The piece of the sin-offering.

(6) To indicate that even in such a case, where the law of neutralization might have been expected to apply (cf. Ter. V. 3-4). the mixture remains forbidden.

(7) Who explained the Baraitha under discussion to refer to a crushed piece.

(8) In either case the piece is Pentateuchally forbidden. As neutralization takes place in the case of the first clause owing to the insignificant value of the piece. neutralization should also take place, for the same reason, in the case of the final clause! According to R. Johanan, the reason for the difference between the two clauses has been explained supra p. 553, n. 6.

(9) If the crushed mixture was contained, for instance. in a vessel that had been in contact with unclean liquids.

(10) Pentateuchally no unclean liquid can impart uncleanness to a vessel.

(11) The consumption of consecrated food by a non-priest.

(12) Food Pentateuchally forbidden, if mixed with other food of the same kind, cannot be neutralized, according to this opinion. even if it is sold in bulk.

(13) Pentateuchal uncleanness.

(14) V. supra note 2.

(15) That neutralization takes place.

(16) V. supra p. 554, n. 5.

(17) To the objection raised against Resh Lakish.

(18) That of eating consecrated meat which is unclean. V. Lev. VII, 19.

(19) Were the crushed mixture which contained a piece of consecrated meat to be regarded as neutralized and treated like unconsecrated meat, it might be eaten by an unclean person who would thus incur the penalty of kareth for eating consecrated meat during his uncleanness. Cf. Lev. VII, 20.

(20) In respect of preventive measures enacted by the Rabbis.

(21) Infra 219a, where, however, the reading is 'Raba'.

(22) Disallowing neutralization.

(23) If the consumer is, for instance, a priest.

(24) Even though no neutralization were to take place.

(25) Times its quantity.

(26) בדוּתָא v. B. M., Sonc. ed., p. 47. n. 1.

(27) The law which rules out neutralization in the case of objects which may attain to a state of permissibility without this process, is applicable only to such objects as become permissible, i.e., which emerge from a state of prohibition into one of permissibility. Cf. Bezah 3b.

(28) Lit., 'if to'.

(29) He may eat the piece of consecrated food even if it were never mixed up with the unconsecrated food.

(30) If no neutralization were to be allowed.

(31) After the destruction of the Temple.

- (32) As stated supra 81a.
- (33) Even an Israelite may eat from the basket that contained the unconsecrated fruit.
- (34) Tosef. Ter. VI end; Pes. 9b, 44a; Naz. 36b.
- (35) In the basket.
- (36) In the se'ah measure. Only in such a case is the assumption mentioned made, because the terumah representing the smaller quantity might be regarded as neutralized even if it had fallen into the basket of the unconsecrated fruit.
- (37) No excess of unconsecrated fruit is necessary since the assumption mentioned is alone sufficient to establish the permissibility of the unconsecrated fruit.
- (38) Who, as stated supra, regards terumah at the present time as Rabbinical.
- (39) In the Baraitha cited.
- (40) To make the mentioned assumption.
- (41) In whose opinion terumah is Pentateuchal at the present time also.
- (42) How could the assumption mentioned be made in the case of a prohibition which is Pentateuchal!
- (43) The ruling in the Baraitha cited.
- (44) Lit., 'this according to whom?'
- (45) Who hold that terumah at the present time is only Rabbinical.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 82b

while I maintain the view of R. Jose'.¹ For it was taught in Seder 'Olam:² Which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it,³ they had a first,⁴ and a second⁵ possession,⁶ but they had no third one;⁷ and R. Johanan stated, 'Who is the author of Seder 'Olam? R. Jose'.⁸

But is R. Johanan of the opinion that in respect of a Rabbinically forbidden object no excess is required?⁹ Surely we learned: A ritual bath containing exactly forty se'ah [of water]¹⁰ to which one se'ah¹¹ was added and from which one se'ah¹² was taken off, is deemed to be ritually fit.¹³ And R. Judah b. Shila stated in the name of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan. 'As much as its greater part'.¹⁴ Does not this mean that the greater part must remain?¹⁵ — No; that the greater part must not be removed.¹⁶ And if you prefer I might say: Here¹⁷ it is different,¹⁸ since it may be said, 'For it is assumed'.¹⁹

We learned, THE HERMAPHRODITE MAY MARRY [A WIFE]²⁰ — Read, 'If he married',²¹ But, surely, it was stated MAY MARRY!²² — And even in accordance with your view what is the meaning of BUT MAY NOT BE MARRIED [BY A MAN]?²³ Consequently it must be granted that as MAY . . . BE MARRIED²³ implies an act that had already been performed, so also MAY MARRY implies an act that had already been performed. It may still be urged: No;²⁴ MAY MARRY implies that the act is permissible; but MAY NOT BE MARRIED²³ implies, not even if the act had already been performed.²⁵ But surely since it was taught in the final clause, R. ELIEZER STATED: [FOR COPULATION WITH] AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE, it is to be inferred that the first Tanna was doubtful on the point!²⁶ — The law²⁷ was clear to the one Master as well as to the other Master; the only difference between them was the question of stoning for copulation through either of his two organs. One Master²⁸ was of the opinion that the penalty of stoning is incurred by copulation through either of the two organs,²⁹ while the other Master³⁰ was of the opinion [that it is incurred through the male organ only] AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.

Rab said:

(1) Who stated in our Mishnah that the hermaphrodite may confer upon his wife the right of eating terumah. It was in reference to this that R. Johanan had stated that the hermaphrodite may also confer upon his wife the right of eating the breast and the shoulder, which are Pentateuchally ordained, since terumah also according to R. Jose is even at the present time a Pentateuchal ordinance.

- (2) Lit., 'Order of the World', a chronological work compiled in the first half of the second century by R. Jose b. Halafta.
- (3) Deut. XXX. 5, וירשנו וירשתה, the rt. of רש is repeated.
- (4) After the conquest in the days of Joshua
- (5) In the days of Ezra.
- (6) The sanctity of Eretz Israel having ceased with the destruction of the first Temple and the Babylonian exile, a second 'possession was necessary to restore to the land its sanctity.
- (7) Which was not necessary, the second sanctification having remained for all time. As the land thus remained sacred the Pentateuchal obligation of terumah also remained in force.
- (8) V. Nid. 46b.
- (9) To effect neutralization. It is now assumed that the reason why R. Johanan maintains that 'even if the unconsecrated fruit were no more than the terumah' it is permitted is because, in the case of a Rabbinical prohibition, neutralization is effected by the mere accident of the mixing of consecrated with unconsecrated fruit even though the latter did not form the larger part and not because he relies on the above mentioned assumption.
- (10) The minimum quantity of water that constitutes a ritual bath.
- (11) Of unsuitable liquid.
- (12) Of the entire quantity of forty-one se'ah.
- (13) Mik. VII, 2. The se'ah of unsuitable liquid is regarded as having been neutralized in the forty se'ah of water, so that when one se'ah of the mixture was subsequently removed, the minimum of forty se'ah of suitable liquid still remained in the bath.
- (14) Zeb. 22a. This is explained presently.
- (15) I.e., se'ah after se'ah of unsuitable liquid may be added and an equal quantity of the mixture may be successively removed only until a minimum of twenty-one se'ah of suitable water remains in the bath. Should there remain less, so that the suitable liquid no longer represents the greater part of the mixture, the bath would become ritually unfit. This (the unsuitability of certain liquids in a ritual bath being only a Rabbinical provision) proves that according to R. Johanan an excess is required even in the case of Rabbinical ordinances!
- (16) If only half of the suitable water remained the unsuitable liquid is neutralized, no excess being required.
- (17) The case in the Baraitha of Terumoth.
- (18) From the case of the ritual bath or other Rabbinical ordinances where an excess may in fact be required.
- (19) 'That the terumah fell into the terumah and the unconsecrated fruit etc.' (v. supra), so that no forbidden food had ever entered the basket of the unconsecrated fruit. Such an assumption is obviously inapplicable in the case of the bath.
- (20) נִשְׂא. This shews that he is regarded as a proper male. As such he should confer upon his wife the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder. How then could Resh Lakish maintain supra that he does not?
- (21) נִשְׂא i.e., if marriage had already taken place it is valid in so far as to require a letter of divorce for its dissolution since it is possible that he is a male. Originally, however, no such marriage is permitted owing to the equal possibility that he is not a male but a female.
- (22) Implying that marriage may be contracted in the first instance. CF. supra n.1.
- (23) נִשְׂא. Perfect. Surely this cannot refer to marriage in the first instance but to a marriage already performed?
- (24) The two expressions are not identical.
- (25) The difficulty against the view of Resh Lakish consequently remains, while the opinion of R. Johanan receives confirmation.
- (26) Whether the hermaphrodite is to be regarded as a male. This, then, presents an objection against the view of R. Johanan.
- (27) That the hermaphrodite is regarded as a male.
- (28) The first Tanna.
- (29) Even if it was effected through his female organ.
- (30) R. Eliezer.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 83a

Our Mishnah¹ cannot be maintained in the presence of the following Baraitha. For it was taught: R. Jose stated, 'The hermaphrodite is a creature sui generis, and the Sages did not determine whether he is a male or a female'.² On the contrary; the Baraitha² cannot be maintained in the face of our

Mishnah!³ — As R. Jose left his colleague⁴ it may be inferred that he changed his opinion.⁵

Samuel, however, said: The Baraitha² cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah.³ On the contrary; our Mishnah³ cannot be maintained in the face of the Baraitha,² since Samuel was heard to take note of an individual opinion!⁶ — This⁷ applies only to a case where the Mishnah is not thereby uprooted; when the Mishnah, however, is thereby uprooted it need not be taken into consideration.

At the school of Rab it was stated in the name of Rab that the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose in respect of the hermaphrodite and grafting; and Samuel stated: In respect of protracted labour and forfeiture.

As to the 'hermaphrodite', there is the ruling just mentioned.⁸ 'Grafting'? — As we have learned: There must be no planting, no sinking⁹ and no grafting on the eve of the Sabbatical Year¹⁰ within thirty days before the new year; and if one planted or sank or grafted, the tree must be uprooted.¹¹ R. Judah said: Any grafting¹² which takes no root within three days will never take root. R. Jose and R. Simeon stated: [Within] two weeks.¹³ And, [in reference to this.] R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha that according to him who stated, 'thirty days', thirty and thirty are required; according to him who stated 'three days', three and thirty are required;¹⁴ and according to him who stated 'two weeks', two weeks and thirty days are required.¹⁴

'And Samuel stated: In respect of protracted labour and forfeiture'. 'Protracted labour'? — As we learned: How long does the period of protracted labour¹⁵ continue? R. Meir said: Forty or fifty days.¹⁶ R. Judah said: Her [ninth] month is sufficient.¹⁷ R. Jose and R. Simeon said: Protracted labour cannot extend beyond two weeks.¹⁸ 'Forfeiture'? As we have learned: If one causes his vine to overhang¹⁹ above the crops of his neighbour, behold he causes thereby their forfeiture,²⁰ and he is liable to make compensation; so R. Meir. R. Jose and R. Simeon said:

- (1) Which attributes to R. Jose the opinion that the hermaphrodite bestows upon his wife the right of eating terumah.
 - (2) Tosef. Bik. II. Since his sex is a matter of doubt he cannot obviously bestow the right(v. p. 558, n. 12) upon his wife.
 - (3) V. p. 558. n. 12.
 - (4) In his statement in the Baraitha where he alone appears as the author. In the Mishnah both R. Jose and R. Simeon appear as the authors.
 - (5) Which he first expressed in our Mishnah.
 - (6) If that opinion is more rigid. (Cf. supra 41a Meg. 18b). Here too R. Jose's opinion in the Baraitha is more restrictive than his opinion in our Mishnah and should therefore be taken into consideration!
 - (7) That an individual opinion is to be taken into consideration.
 - (8) In our Mishnah (cf. Rashi a.l.).
 - (9) The sinking of a branch under the ground while one end of it remains attached to the tree and the other end is made to protrude from the ground so that in due course it may develop into an independent tree.
 - (10) Cf. Lev. XXV, 4ff.
 - (11) A tree does not take root according to this view, before thirty days from the day of its planting have elapsed, and by that time the Sabbatical Year has already begun where all such agricultural activities are forbidden.
 - (12) And similarly any planting or sinking.
 - (13) Sheb. II, 6.
 - (14) Since the last thirty days of the eve of the Sabbatical Year are regarded as part of the next Sabbatical Year (v. M.K. 3b). the plant, in order that it may be permitted, must have taken root prior to these last thirty days.
 - (15) During this period a woman is not subject to the restrictions of a zabah (v. Glos.), if the flow occurred during the eleven days that intervene between her menstrual periods, even if the discharge continued for three consecutive days. Such a continuous discharge at any other time, when it cannot be attributed to labour, subjects a woman to the uncleanness of a zabah. As in this case, however, the discharge may be regarded as that attendant on labour, the woman must observe only the days prescribed for one after childbirth (cf. Lev. XII, 2ff) and not those prescribed for a zabah (cf. ibid. XV, 25ff). V. Nid. 36b.

(16) Prior to the birth of the child.

(17) Should the flow begin prior to the ninth month and continue for three consecutive days she is regarded as a zabah.

(18) Nid. 36b.

(19) Lit., 'to cover'. 'to make a shadow'.

(20) Cf. Deut. XXII, 9.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 83b

No man can impose a prohibition upon that which is not his.¹

The question was raised: What would Samuel² have said with regard to the hermaphrodite?³ — Come and hear what Samuel said to R. Anan: The Baraita cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah.⁴

What would Samuel have said in respect of grafting?³ — Come and hear what Samuel said to R. Anan: Teach in accordance with the view of him who stated 'three and thirty'.

What is the opinion of Rab⁵ in respect of protracted labour?⁶ — This is undecided.⁷

What is Rab's Opinion in respect of forfeiture?⁶ R. Joseph replied. Come and hear what R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Jose.

Said Abaye to him:⁸ What reason do you see for relying upon this statement?⁹ Rely rather on that which R. Adda made in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose! — Who is it [that is referred to by the phrase] 'At the school of Rab it was stated'?¹⁰ R. Huna [of course];¹¹ and R. Huna it was who stated that the halachah is not in agreement [with R. Jose].¹²

R. JUDAH STATED: A TUMTUM etc. R. Ammi remarked: What would R. Judah¹³ have done with a case like that of the tumtum of Bairi,¹⁴ who, after having been placed upon the operating table¹⁵ and operated upon, begat seven children!¹⁶ And R. Judah?¹⁷ — He could tell you:¹⁸ An enquiry should be made as to the origin of his children.

It was taught: R. Jose son of R. Judah stated that a tumtum must not participate in halizah, since it is possible that on being operated upon he may be found to be a congenital saris.¹⁹ Is everyone then,²⁰ who is operated upon a male! — It is this that he meant: It is possible that on being operated upon he may be found to be a female; and were he found to be a male, it is even then possible that he might be found to be a congenital saris. What is the practical difference between them?²¹ — Raba replied: The practical difference between them is the question of disqualification²² where other brothers are in existence,²³ and that of halizah where no other brothers exist.²⁴

R. Samuel son of R. Judah said in the name of R. Abba, the brother of R. Judah b. Zabdi, in the name of Rab Judah in the name of Rab: In respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred through either of his organs.

An objection was raised: R. Eliezer stated, 'In respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred as in the case of a male. This, however, applies only to his male organ; but in respect of his female organ no penalty is incurred'²⁵ — He²⁶ holds the same opinion as the following Tanna. For it was taught: R. Simai stated that in respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred through either of his organs. What is R. Simai's reason? — Raba replied: Bar Hamduri has explained it to me as follows: And thou shalt not lie with a male, as well as with womankind;²⁷ what male is it that is capable of two manners of lying?²⁸ Obviously²⁹ the hermaphrodite. And the Rabbis? — Though he is capable of two manners of lying it is nevertheless written in Scripture.

With a male.³⁰ Whence, however, do the Rabbis³¹ derive the law concerning an ordinary male? — From And.³² Whence³³ the prohibition in respect of unnatural intercourse with a woman? — From Woman.³⁴

R. Shezbi stated in the name of R. Hisda: It is not in all respects that R. Eliezer maintains that the hermaphrodite is a proper male. Since, were you to say so, [such an animal]³⁵ would be fit for consecration.³⁶ And whence is it derived that it³⁷ may not be consecrated? — From what the Rabbis taught: [A bird] that was covered,³⁸ set aside [for idolatrous purposes], or worshipped, that was the hire of a harlot³⁹ or the price of a dog,³⁹ a tumtum or hermaphrodite, causes the defilement of one's clothes⁴⁰ by [contact with one's] oesophagus.⁴¹ R. Eliezer said: [A bird that was] a tumtum or hermaphrodite does not impart the defilement of clothes through contact with one's oesophagus; for R. Eliezer maintained that wherever male and female were mentioned,⁴² the tumtum and hermaphrodite are to be excluded; but [in the case of the sacrifice of a] bird, since in respect of it no mention was made of male or female, the tumtum and hermaphrodite are not to be excluded.⁴³ Glos.) which imparts uncleanness to one's clothes. V. infra n. 10.

- (41) I.e., through eating it. It is in this manner, and not by touch, that the nebelah of a clean bird (cf. Deut. XIV, 11) imparts uncleanness to a person.

A hybrid, terefah,¹ one that was extracted through the abdominal wall,² the tumtum and the hermaphrodite can neither become sacred nor can they impart sanctity to others; is and Samuel explained: They neither become sacred by means of exchange,³ nor do they impart sanctity [to any other beast]⁴ by causing it to become an exchange.⁵ This proves [what has been said].

R. ELIEZER STATED . . . THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE. It was taught: Rabbi related, 'When I went to learn Torah at [the school of] R. Eleazar b. Shammu'a, his disciples combined against me like the cocks of Beth Bukya⁶ and did not let me learn more than this single thing in our Mishnah: R. ELIEZER STATED: [FOR COPULATION WITH] AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.

CHAPTER IX

MISHNAH. SOME WOMEN ARE PERMITTED⁷ TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN⁷ TO THEIR LEVIRS,⁸ OTHERS ARE PERMITTED⁷ TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN⁷ TO THEIR HUSBANDS, OTHERS ARE PERMITTED TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER, WHILE OTHERS ARE FORBIDDEN TO THE FORMER AS WELL AS TO THE LATTER. IN THE FOLLOWING CASES THE WOMEN⁹ ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR LEVIRS: IF A COMMON PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST; IF A HALAL¹⁰ WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS¹¹ HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS;¹² IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, 'OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE PERMITTED⁷ TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN⁷ TO THEIR LEVIRS.

THE FOLLOWING⁹ ARE PERMITTED⁷ TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN⁷ TO THEIR HUSBANDS: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO BETROTHED A WIDOW¹³ HAD A BROTHER A COMMON PRIEST; IF ONE OF LEGITIMATE STATUS¹² WHO MARRIED A HALALAH¹⁰ HAD A BROTHER A HALAL;¹⁰ IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR HUSBANDS.

THE FOLLOWING¹⁴ ARE FORBIDDEN¹⁵ TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER;¹⁶ IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST, OR IF A COMMON PRIEST OF LEGITIMATE STATUS¹⁷ WHO MARRIED A HALALAH¹⁸ HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS,¹⁷ OR IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE FORBIDDEN¹⁵ BOTH TO THE FORMER AND THE LATTER.¹⁶ ALL OTHER WOMEN ARE PERMITTED¹⁵ TO BOTH THEIR HUSBANDS AND THEIR LEVIRS.

[IN RESPECT OF] RELATIVES OF THE SECOND GRADE, [WHO ARE FORBIDDEN] BY THE ORDINANCES OF THE SCRIBES,¹⁹ A WOMAN WHO IS WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND BUT NOT WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR,²⁰ IS FORBIDDEN TO THE HUSBAND AND PERMITTED TO THE LEVIR; [A WOMAN WHO IS WITHIN] THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR BUT NOT WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND IS FORBIDDEN TO THE LEVIR AND PERMITTED TO THE HUSBAND; [WHILE ONE WHO IS WITHIN] THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE ONE AND TO THE OTHER IS FORBIDDEN TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER. SHE CANNOT CLAIM EITHER KETHUBAH,¹⁸ OR USUFRUCT,²¹ OR ALIMONY, OR HER WORN CLOTHES.²² [SHOULD A] CHILD [BE BORN HE] IS ELIGIBLE [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD]; BUT THE HUSBAND MUST BE COMPELLED TO DIVORCE HER. A WIDOW, HOWEVER, WHO WAS MARRIED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCEE OR HALUZAH WHO WAS MARRIED TO A COMMON PRIEST, A BASTARD OR A NETHINAH²³ WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, OR THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A NATHIN²³ OR A BASTARD IS ENTITLED TO HER KETHUBAH.

GEMARA. What was the point in teaching MARRIED?²⁴ He could have taught: ‘Betrothed’!²⁵ And were you to reply that the reason [for the prohibition²⁶ is only] because he MARRIED, since [in that case]²⁷ a positive²⁸ as well as a negative²⁹ precept is involved,³⁰ but where betrothal only took place the positive precept²⁶ does override the negative;³¹ but [it could be retorted] the whole of our section deals with a positive,³² versus a negative precept.³³ and the positive nevertheless does not override the negative! — As it was desired to state in the final clause, A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW, [who is forbidden]³⁴ only where [the High Priest] MARRIED her, since in that case he caused her to be a halalah, but [not where he only] betrothed [her in which case] she is permitted [to his brother],³⁵ he taught in the first clause also: MARRIED.

But why should the expression³⁶ be determined by³⁷ the final clause? Let it be determined by³⁸ the middle clause: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO BETROTHED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A COMMON PRIEST!³⁹ — The determining factor,⁴⁰ rather, is the case immediately following in the same context.⁴¹ As it was desired to teach, IF A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS, where the reason [for her prohibition⁴² is] because [the halal] MARRIED her and thus caused her to become a halalah, but where he had only betrothed her she would have been permitted to him; MARRIED was, therefore, taught [here also].⁴³

What point, however, was there in teaching, A widow? He should have taught: ‘A virgin’!⁴⁴

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 84b

And should you reply that this Tanna holds the opinion that the original marriage¹ causes the subjection;² behold, [it may be pointed out, the case of] the HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS³ where it is not said that 'the original marriage causes the subjection'!⁴ — This⁵ is certainly due to the final clause. As it was desired to teach in the final clause, IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST OR A COMMON PRIEST, where [the prohibition⁶ applies to] a WIDOW only⁷ but [not to] a virgin who is eligible to marry him,⁸ therefore, WIDOW was taught [here also].⁹

R. Papa demurred: If the law is in agreement with the following ruling¹⁰ which R. Dimi, when he came,¹¹ reported in the name of R. Johanan, viz., that if an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian woman of the first generation her son is regarded as belonging to the second generation,¹² [our Mishnah] should also have taught: If an Egyptian of the second generation married two Egyptian women, one of the first, and the other of the second generation, and he had sons from the first and from the second, [the wives of these sons], if they¹³ married in the proper manner,¹⁴ are permitted to their husbands but forbidden to their levirs,¹⁵ and if they married in the reverse order¹⁶ [the wives] are permitted to their levirs¹⁷ and forbidden to their husbands;¹⁸ proselyte women¹⁹ are permitted to the one as well as to the other,²⁰ and women who are incapable of procreation are forbidden to the one as well as the other!²¹ — He taught some cases and omitted others. What else did he omit that he should have omitted this also? — He omitted [the case of the man] wounded in the stones.²² If this is all that can be pointed out,²³ the case of the man wounded in the stones cannot be regarded as an instance of an omission, since those that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts were [already] mentioned!²⁴ — Were not several specific cases mentioned²⁵ of those that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts? Surely it was stated, IF A COMMON PRIEST MARRIED A WIDOW and then again IF A HALAL MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS!²⁶ That case²⁷ was required [for the specific purpose] of informing us [that the law is] in agreement with [the ruling] Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab. For Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth.²⁸

But, surely, he taught regarding A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS and then again regarding AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE AND HE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD!²⁹ — This also is not a repetition of what was already taught, since thereby he taught us [first] regarding a negative precept which is not applicable to all³⁰ and then he taught us regarding a negative precept which is applicable to all. But did he not teach³¹ IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE!³² Consequently³³ it must be concluded that he taught some cases while others he omitted. This proves it.

[Reverting to] the main text, 'Rab Judah reported in the name Of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth'. Might it be suggested that the following provides support for his view? [It was stated], A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS; does not [this refer to] a priestess (who was fitting unto him),³⁴ and is not the meaning of³⁵ LEGITIMATE STATUS eligible for priesthood!³⁶ — No; [it might refer to] the daughter of an Israelite, and LEGITIMATE STATUS means³⁵ eligible for the assembly.³⁷ If so, HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS would also [mean] 'eligible for the assembly', from which it would follow that he himself is ineligible for the assembly!³⁸ Consequently it must refer to a priest; and since he is a priest she also must be a priestess.³⁹ What an argument! Each phrase may bear its own peculiar interpretation.⁴⁰

Rabin b. Nahman raised an objection: They shall not take . . . they shall not take⁴¹ teaches⁴² that the prohibition was addressed to the woman through the man!⁴³ — Raba replied, [This is the meaning]: Where the prohibition is applicable to him it is also applicable to her, but where it is not applicable to him it is also inapplicable to her.⁴⁴ Is this,⁴⁵ however, deduced from this text? Surely it was deduced from a text which Rab Judah expounded in the name of Rab! For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab and so it was taught at the school of R. Ishmael: When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit;⁴⁶ Scripture compared the woman to the man in respect of all the punishments in the Torah!⁴⁷ — If deduction had been made from that [text]⁴⁶ it might have been assumed [to apply only to] a prohibition that is equally applicable to all, but not to a prohibition that is not equally applicable to all.⁴⁸

(1) Of the deceased brother.

(2) Of the woman to the levirate marriage, i.e. , the widow's status at the time of her husband's death is determined by the status in which she found herself when he married her, not by that in which his death placed her, consequently if at the time of the marriage she was a virgin she would not have been regarded as a widow and would, therefore, have been permitted to marry a priest.

(3) Who becomes, thereby, disqualified from marrying his brother.

(4) Had this been the case, his brother should have been permitted to marry her, owing to the fact that at the time of her marriage with the deceased (when she presumably became subject to the levirate marriage) she was no halalah.

(5) The mention of WIDOW rather than 'virgin'.

(6) To her husband who was a High Priest. and to the levir who was a common priest.

(7) Who becomes a halalah through such a forbidden marriage.

(8) The High Priest, (her first husband) and, after his death, also his brother if he was a common priest.

(9) In the first case, that of the common priest who married a widow.

(10) Lit., 'if there is that'.

(11) From Palestine to Babylon.

(12) Supra 78a.

(13) The sons.

(14) I.e., if the son of the Egyptian of the second generation, who thus belongs to the third and is permitted to enter the assembly (v. Deut. XXIII, 9), married the daughter of an Israelite; while the other who belongs to the second generation married an Egyptian of the second generation.

(15) Should one of the brothers die without issue. The son of the third generation is forbidden to marry the Egyptian of the second generation, while the son of the second generation is forbidden to marry the daughter of an Israelite.

(16) I.e., if the son of the second generation married the daughter of an Israelite, while the son of the third generation married an Egyptian of the second generation.

(17) Cf. supra n. 5 mutandis mutandis.

(18) Cf. supra. 6 mutatis mutandis.

(19) Who are not included in the term 'assembly of the Lord' (v. Deut. XXIII, 9).

(20) Both the Israelite and (for the reason indicated in n. 10) the Egyptian of the second generation may marry a proselyte.

(21) The son of the second generation may not marry her because she is the daughter of an Israelite, while after his death she is forbidden to his brother because a woman who is incapable of procreation is not subject to the levirate marriage and is consequently forbidden to him as his brother's wife.

(22) In respect of such a maimed person, prohibition and permission similar to those in our Mishnah could be stated: If he is maimed and his brother is fit the woman is forbidden to him (v. Deut. XXIII, 2) and permitted to his brother; if he is fit and his brother maimed she is permitted to him and forbidden to his brother; if both are maimed etc. proselyte women are permitted to both.

(23) Lit., 'if because of'.

(24) And among these, this case also is included. What proof, then, is there that any cases other than that of R. Dimi were omitted?

(25) Lit., 'did he not teach and then taught again'.

(26) Which proves that the Mishnah did not avoid giving more than one example of the same type of prohibition.

(27) Of a halal who married a woman of legitimate status.

(28) Kid. 731, 76a, infra 85a. The purpose of our Mishnah in giving the law of the halal was not to teach the prohibition of the woman to the levir (which, of course, as pointed out supra, was unnecessary) but her permission to marry a husband though he is a halal and she is of legitimate status or of pure priestly stock. The prohibition to marry one of impure stock is incumbent upon the man and not upon the woman.

(29) Which shews that the Mishnah did not avoid giving more than one example of the same type of prohibition.

(30) The case of the halal is applicable to priests only, not to Israelites.

(31) Lit., 'surely he taught'.

(32) Also a case of a negative precept! (cf. n. 7). Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis 'and a bastard who married a bastard and he has a brother an Israelite', which Rashal omits.

(33) Lit., 'but not'?

(34) Though he may marry the daughter of an Israelite he should preferably marry the daughter of a priest. Cf. Pes. 49a. [The bracketed words are rightly omitted in MS.M].

(35) Lit., 'and what'.

(36) To marry a priest. Which is in agreement with the opinion of Rab.

(37) I.e. 'to marry an Israelite.'

(38) Surely not!

(39) I.e., since the term 'legitimate status in the case of the man has reference to a priest, so the reference in the case of the woman must be to a priestess which shews that a priestess may marry one of tainted birth.

(40) Lit., 'that as it is and that as it is'.

(41) Lev. XXI, 7.

(42) Since the expression was repeated.

(43) This is now assumed to mean that as the untainted priest may not marry a halalah so may not the untainted priestess marry a halal. An objection against the opinion of Rab.

(44) The halalah whom an untainted priest is forbidden to marry is herself forbidden to marry such a priest. The untainted priestess however, whom a halal is not forbidden to marry, may also marry the halal.

(45) The equality of men and women in respect of prohibitions

(46) Num. v, 6.

(47) Whether flogging or kareth.

(48) That of the priesthood does not apply to Israelites. Hence it was necessary to have the text of Lev. XXI, 7.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 85a

Behold, however, [the prohibition against] defilement¹ which is a prohibition that is not equally applicable to all² and [yet the sole] reason [why it is inapplicable to woman is] because the All Merciful wrote The sons of Aaron³ and not the daughters of Aaron; had, however, no such text been available⁴ it would have been assumed that women also come under the same obligation. What is the reason? Obviously⁵ because of the deduction Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab!⁶ — No; this might have been deduced from They shall not take.⁷

Others Say:⁸ [The prohibition in regard] to marrying had to be specified.⁹ Since it might have been assumed that it¹⁰ should be inferred from [that relating to] defilement,¹¹ therefore he taught us¹² [that women are subject to the same prohibition as men].

R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua once happened to be at Hinzebu,¹³ the town of R. Idi b. Abin, when the following question was asked of them: Were women of legitimate [priestly] status forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth or not? R. Papa replied, 'You have learned it [in the following]. Ten different genealogical classes went up from Babylon:¹⁴ Priests, Levites, Israelites, halalim,¹⁵ proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,¹⁶ shethuki¹⁷ and asufi.¹⁷ Priests, Levites and Israelites may intermarry with one another. Levites, Israelites, halalim, proselytes and emancipated slaves may intermarry with one another. Proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,¹⁶ shethuki¹⁷ and asufi¹⁷ are permitted to intermarry with one another.'¹⁸ That daughters of priests, however, [may be married to a] halal was not mentioned.¹⁹ Said R. Huna son of R. Joshua to him: Only cases where the women may marry the men, and the men may marry the women were enumerated;²⁰ the case of the Priest, however,²¹ was not mentioned, because a halalah, should he even desire to marry one, is forbidden to him.²² When they came before R. Idi b. Abin he said to them, 'O, school-children! Thus said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of illegitimate Status'.²³

[IN RESPECT OF] RELATIVES OF THE SECOND GRADE [WHO ARE FORBIDDEN] BY THE ORDINANCES OF THE SCRIBES etc. The men of Bairi²⁴ enquired of R. Shesheth: Is a woman who is of the second grade of kinship to her husband but not to her levir entitled to claim her kethubah from the levir or not? [Do we say that] since a Master said that her kethubah²⁵ is a charge on the estate of her first husband²⁶ she has no [claim upon the levir];²⁷ or, possibly, since the Rabbis have ordained that wherever she is unable to obtain it from her first husband²⁸ [she may collect it] from the second, she²⁹ is entitled to claim it³⁰ [from the levir]? R. Shesheth replied, 'You have learned this: Her kethubah²⁵ is a charge upon the estate of her first husband, but if she was a relative of the second grade of kinship to her husband she receives nothing even from the levir.

Does [the expression,³¹ however,] imply that some [widows] do receive their³⁰ kethubah from the levir!³² — There is a lacuna, and thus it is the correct reading.³³ Her kethubah²⁵ is a charge upon the estate of her first husband; and if she obtains nothing from the first, the Rabbis have ordained [that she is to receive it] from the second; but if she was a relative of the second grade of kinship to her husband she receives nothing even from the levir.

R. Eleazar enquired of R. Johanan: Is a widow [who was married] to a High Priest, or a divorcee or a haluzah [who was married] to a common priest entitled to maintenance or not? How is this question to be understood? If [it is a case] where she still lives with him,³⁴ would she, when it is his duty to divorce her,³⁵ be entitled to receive maintenance!³⁶ — This question was necessary in the case³⁷ where he went to a country beyond the sea and she borrowed money wherewith to maintain herself;³⁸ it being desired to ascertain³⁹ whether, [owing to the fact that] maintenance³⁹ among the conditions of the kethubah, she is entitled to maintenance just as she is entitled to the kethubah, or is she entitled to the kethubah only because she receives it and goes, but not to maintenance which might induce her to remain with him? — The other replied: She is not entitled to maintenance.⁴⁰ But, surely, it was taught: She is entitled to maintenance.⁴¹ — That was taught In respect of [alimony] after [her husband's] death.⁴²

Another reading:⁴³ He said to him, 'It was taught: She is entitled to maintenance'.⁴¹ 'Surely', [the other asked], 'it is his duty to divorce her!'⁴⁴ 'But then', [the first retorted], 'it was taught: She is entitled to maintenance'!⁴¹ — 'That', [the other replied], 'was taught in respect of [alimony] after his death'.⁴²

Our Rabbis taught: A widow [who was married] to a High Priest, or a divorcee or haluzah [who was married] to a common priest is entitled to her kethubah, usufruct,⁴⁵ alimony and worn clothes,⁴⁶ but she becomes thereby unfit, and her child is unfit, and [the husband] is compelled to divorce her. Relatives of the second grade of kinship [who are forbidden] by the ordinances of scribes are entitled neither to kethubah, nor to usufruct,⁴⁵ nor to alimony⁴⁶ nor to worn clothes;⁴⁶ the woman remains fit and her child is fit; but [the husband] is compelled to divorce her. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, 'Why was it ordained that a widow married to a High Priest is entitled to her kethubah? Because he becomes unfit⁴⁷ and she becomes unfit and wherever he becomes unfit and she becomes unfit⁴⁸

(43) Lit., 'there is one who says'.

(44) Cf. supra p. 574 n. 11. How, then, could he be expected to maintain her?

(45) Consumed by the husband from her melog (v. Glos.) property.

(46) Cf. nn. on our Mishnah.

(47) He is not permitted to perform the Temple service as long as he refuses to part with her. V. Bek. 45b and Git. 35b.

(48) [Tosaf.: 'Wherever he becomes unfit or she becomes unfit'. The resulting unfitness of either of them is sufficient to act as a deterrent to the woman in view of the effect it has on the child's fitness. R. Tam, on the other hand, whilst agreeing with this rendering, takes 'he' as referring to the child].

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 85b

[the Rabbis] have penalized him [by ordering him to pay her] kethubah.¹ And why was it ordained that relatives of the second grade of kinship, [who are forbidden] by the ordinances of the Rabbis, are not to receive their kethubah? Because the man remains fit and the woman remains fit, and wherever he as well as she remains fit [the Rabbis] have penalized her [by depriving her of her] kethubah.² Rabbi said, 'The former³ are prohibitions⁴ of the Torah, and prohibitions of the Torah require no reinforcement;⁵ while the latter⁶ are prohibitions of the scribes, and the prohibitions of the scribes require reinforcement.⁷ Another reason⁸ is: In the former case the man induces the woman⁹ [into the marriage];¹⁰ in the latter case she induces him.¹¹ Who stated the 'other reason'? One opinion asserts¹² that it was R. Simeon b. Eleazar who stated it; and he gave an answer¹³ [to the question] 'what is the reason'. 'What is the reason', [he said in effect,] 'why it was ordained that when the man is unfit and the woman is unfit the man is penalized by having to pay the kethubah? Because he induces the woman into the marriage.¹⁴ And what is the reason why when he remains fit and she remains fit she is penalized by losing her kethubah? Because she induces him, [into the marriage]'.¹⁵ Another opinion asserts¹² that it was Rabbi¹⁶ who stated it, because the case of the haluzah presented to him the following difficulty: A haluzah, surely, is only Rabbinically [forbidden to be married to a common priest]¹⁷ and yet she receives her kethubah.¹⁸ Thereupon he stated: Since the man disqualifies her by Rabbinical law¹⁹ it is he, [who in the former case], induces²⁰ her [into marriage]²¹ but in the latter case it is she that induces him [into marriage].²²

What practical difference is there between [the reason given by] Rabbi and [that given by] R. Simeon b. Eleazar? — R. Hisda replied: The practical difference between them is the case of a bastard or a nethinah [who was married] to an Israelite. According to him who gave the reason²³ that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case²⁴ also is Pentateuchal;²⁵ but according to him who gave as the reason,²³ that the man induces the woman²⁶ then here, it is she that induces him [into the marriage].²⁷ According to R. Eliezer, however, who²⁸ stated, 'Behold he²⁹ is both a slave and a bastard',³⁰ the woman, surely, would not induce the man at all!³¹ — Rather, said R. Joseph, the practical difference between them³² is the case of the man who remarried his divorced wife after she had been married.³³ According to him who gave the reason³⁴ that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case³⁵ also is Pentateuchal;³⁶ but according to him who gave as the reason³⁴ that the man induces the woman³⁷ then here, surely, she induces him.³⁸

But according to R. Akiba who stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of a negative precept is deemed to be a bastard,³⁹ she,⁴⁰ surely, would not induce the man at all!⁴¹

Rather, said R. Papai the practical difference between them⁴² is the case of a be'ulah⁴³ [who was married] to a High Priest.⁴⁴ According to him who gave as the reason³⁴ that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case also is Pentateuchal;⁴⁵ but according to him who gave as the reason³⁴ that the man induces the woman,³⁷ then here, surely, it is she that induces him.⁴⁶

According to R. Eliezer b. Jacob, however, who stated that the offspring of a union that is forbidden under a positive precept is deemed a halal,⁴⁷ she,⁴⁸ surely, would not at all induce him!⁴⁹

Rather, said R. Ashi, the practical difference between them⁴² is the case of the man who cohabits again with his doubtful sotah.⁵⁰ According to him who stated that the reason³⁴ is that [the prohibition is] Pentateuchal, then this case also is Pentateucha⁴⁶ but according to him who stated that the reason³⁴ is that the man induces the woman³⁷ here it is she that induces him.⁴⁶

And according to R. Mathia b. Heresh who stated that even a woman whose husband, while going to arrange for her drinking [of the water of bitterness]⁵¹ cohabited with her on the way, is rendered a harlot, she,⁵² surely, would not at all induce him [to such a marriage]⁵³ Rather, said Mar b. R. Ashi, the practical difference between them⁵⁴ is the case of a confirmed sotah⁵⁵.

MISHNAH. THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, WAS PREGNANT FROM A PRIEST, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A PRIEST; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP] TO AN ISRAELITE, MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.⁵⁶ THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A LEVITE, WAS PREGNANT FROM A LEVITE, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A LEVITE; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP] TO AN ISRAELITE MAY NOT EAT TITHE.⁵⁷ THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, WAS PREGNANT FROM A PRIEST, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A PRIEST; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP TO A LEVITE, MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE.

GEMARA. And granted that she⁵⁸ is [no more than] an ordinary woman,⁵⁹ is not any ordinary woman permitted to eat tithe?⁶⁰ R. Nahman replied in the name of Samuel: This ruling represents the view of R. Meir⁶¹ who stated: The first tithe is forbidden to common people.⁶² For it was taught:

- (1) The woman is already penalized by a marriage which taints both herself and her husband and which is naturally followed by an unhappy family life. In such circumstances the woman would either not consent to marriage or would be anxious to have such a union severed at the earliest possible moment. The penalty was, therefore, imposed upon the husband.
- (2) In order that she might, in consequence, be deterred from contracting such a marriage or, if contracted, be anxious to have it severed.
- (3) Lit., 'those', the marriage of a widow to a High Priest and that of a divorcee or haluzah to a common priest.
- (4) Lit., 'words'.
- (5) Hence there was no need to deprive the woman of her kethubah. Cf. supra n. 1.
- (6) Marriages with relatives of the second grade of kinship.
- (7) Cf. supra n. 1.
- (8) Why in the former case the man is to pay the kethubah while in the latter the woman loses her kethubah.
- (9) Lit., '(in) this he leads her'. מרגילה denom. of רגל 'foot' (cf. Jast.). Colds. (a.l.) renders 'befleckt er sie'.
- (10) The woman is reluctant to contract a marriage which taints her and her children.
- (11) As the marriage subjects neither the woman nor her children to any disability, it is assumed that she, as a woman, is more anxious than the man to marry.
- (12) Lit., 'there is (one) who said'.
- (13) Lit., 'he said'.
- (14) V. supra notes 8 and 9.
- (15) V. supra note 10.
- (16) Who had previously explained that the reason why the woman was deprived of her kethubah was because prohibitions of the scribes require reinforcement.
- (17) Cf. Kid. 78a.
- (18) If Rabbinical prohibitions require reinforcement the haluzah should not have been entitled to her kethubah. (Cf. supra p. 576, n. 2).

- (19) [(a) According to Rashi: from eating terumah; (b) MS. M. reads: 'he disqualifies her seed by rabbinic law'. Cf. also Me'iri].
- (20) V. supra p. 576, n. 8.
- (21) The woman is reluctant to contract such a union.
- (22) V. supra p. 576, n. 10.
- (23) Why in the former case, supra, the woman is entitled to her kethubah.
- (24) Of the bastard or the nethinah.
- (25) And the woman is, therefore, entitled to her kethubah.
- (26) Into the marriage.
- (27) She, being in any case forbidden to marry an Israelite, has nothing to lose by her marriage which, under certain conditions, may even be advantageous to her, since according to R. Tarfon (cf. Kid. 69a, supra 78a), it may enable her descendants to become proper Israelites. The woman, therefore, loses her kethubah.
- (28) Disagreeing with the view of R. Tarfon. (Cf. supra n. 11).
- (29) The son of a union between a bastard and a slave.
- (30) And can never become a legitimate Israelite. Cf. Kid. 69a.
- (31) Why then should she lose her kethubah?
- (32) Rabbi and R. Simeon b Eleazar.
- (33) After she had been married to another man. V. Rashi and cf. Bah a.l. Cur. edd. read, 'a divorced woman after she had been married'.
- (34) V. supra p. 57, n. 7.
- (35) The remarriage of one's divorcee.
- (36) It is pentateuchally forbidden to marry such a woman. (V. Deut. XXIV, 4). Cf. supra p. 57, n. 9.
- (37) Into the marriage.
- (38) Since the prohibition was addressed to the man; and neither the woman nor her children are subject to any disability in consequence of such a marriage.
- (39) V. supra 49a.
- (40) The divorced woman who has been married to another man and whose remarriage with her first husband is forbidden by a negative precept.
- (41) She would not be anxious to contract a union the issue from which would be bastards.
- (42) Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Eleazar.
- (43) A woman who has lost her virginity. v. Glos.
- (44) Such a union is forbidden under the positive precept. A virgin . . . shall he take (Lev. XXI, 14), and not by a negative one. A negative precept derived from a positive has only the force of a positive. The offspring therefore, would be no bastard even according to R. Akiba.
- (45) Cf. supra n. 11 and supra p. 57, n. 9.
- (46) V. supra note 5.
- (47) V. supra 600.
- (48) A be'ulah.
- (49) Since such a marriage would render her child a halal.
- (50) V. Glos. Such a woman is pentateuchally forbidden to her husband though the offspring of the union is not regarded as a bastard. V. supra 49b.
- (51) V. Num. V, 18f.
- (52) The doubtful sotah.
- (53) Which would render her a harlot and her children bastards.
- (54) Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. Simeon.
- (55) Who is Pentateuchally forbidden to her husband though their offspring is not deemed to be a bastard. As she herself is in any case forbidden to marry a priest she has nothing to lose by cohabiting with her husband, and she would consequently persuade him to live with her again. Hence the ordinance that in such a case she loses the rights to her kethubah.
- (56) As explained supra 67b.
- (57) Which is the due of the Levites. V. Num. XVIII, 24.
- (58) The daughter of the Israelite or the Levite who was betrothed etc. to a Levite and an Israelite respectively.

(59) זָרֵה (masc. זָר), lit., 'a stranger', not of priestly, or levitical stock.

(60) Of course she is. Why, then, does our Mishnah forbid it?

(61) Lit., 'this, who is it? It is R. Meir'.

(62) Supra 74a. Cf. supra note 1 and p. 579, n. 7.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 86a

Terumah to the priest and the first tithe to the Levite;¹ so R. Meir. R. Eleazar b. Azariah permits it to the priest,² 'Permits it'!³ Does this then imply that some authority forbids it?⁴ Read, therefore, 'He may give it to the priest also'. What is R. Meir's reason? R. Aha son of Rabbah replied on the authority of a traditional statement:⁵ For the tithe of the children of Israel, which they set apart as terumah unto the Lord,⁶ as terumah is forbidden to common people so is the first tithe forbidden to common people. May it be assumed that⁷ as in the case of terumah the penalties of death and of a fifth⁸ are incurred, so are the penalties of death and of a fifth incurred in the case of tithe? — Scripture stated, And die therein if they profane it⁹ . . . then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it;¹⁰ 'therein',¹¹ but not in the tithe; 'Into it'¹² but not unto tithe. And the Rabbis?¹³ — As terumah is a cause of tebel¹⁴ so is the first tithe a cause of tebel;¹⁵ and this is in agreement with what was taught: R. Jose said, It might have been presumed that guilt is incurred only for tebel from which nothing whatsoever¹⁶ had been set apart; whence is it deduced [that guilt is also incurred when] terumah gedolah¹⁷ had been set apart but not the first tithe,¹⁸ first tithe but not the second tithe¹⁹ or even if the poor man's tithe²⁰ [only had not been set apart]? Scripture stated, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates²¹ and further on it was stated, That they may eat within thy gates, and be satisfied;²² as 'Thy gates' which was stated below²² refers to the poor man's tithe,²³ so 'Thy gates' which was stated here²¹ refers to the poor man's tithe, and [concerning it] the All Merciful has said, Thou mayest not.²⁴ And if the deduction had been made from that text²⁵ only²⁶ it might have been assumed [to imply the penalty] of a negative precept²⁷ but not [the penalty of] death; hence we were taught [the earlier text²⁸ also].²⁹

Another reading: That the first tithe is a cause of tebel³⁰ may surely be deduced from the text cited by R. Jose!³¹ — If [deduction had been made] from that text²⁵ only³² it might have been assumed [to imply the penalty] of a negative precept²⁷ but not the penalty of death; hence we were taught [the earlier text²⁸ also].²⁹

How did you explain it?³³ In accordance with the view of R. Meir! Explain, then, the final clause: THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST and THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST . . . TO A LEVITE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE; what [bearing has the question of] non-priestly stock in this case?³⁴ — R. Shesheth replied: The meaning of³⁵ the expression,³⁶ SHE MAY NOT EAT is that she may not give permission to one to set apart³⁷ the tithe.³⁸ Does this³⁹ then imply that a married woman may give such permission? — Yes; and so it was taught: And ye may eat it in every place, ye and your household⁴⁰ teaches that a married daughter of an Israelite⁴¹ may give permission for terumah⁴² to be set apart.⁴³ You say: Permission for terumah⁴³ to be set apart; perhaps it is not so, but to eat it?⁴⁴ It can be replied: If she⁴⁵ may eat terumah which is subject to greater restrictions, how much more may she⁴⁶ eat tithe which is subject to lesser restrictions.⁴⁷ The text⁴⁸ must consequently⁴⁹ have taught that a married daughter of an Israelite may give permission for terumah⁴² to be set apart.⁴³

Mar the son of Rabana⁵⁰ stated: This⁵¹ teaches that she is not given a share in the tithe in the threshing-floors.⁵² This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who holds that this⁵³ is due to considerations of privacy governing the sexes;⁵⁴ according to him, however, who holds that this⁵³ is due to [possible abuse by] a divorced woman,⁵⁵ may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a Levite⁵⁶ eat tithe?⁵⁷ — And according to your argument, may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a priest eat terumah!⁵⁸ But [the fact is that the ordinance⁵⁹ is] a preventive measure against [abuse by] a divorced woman who was the daughter of an Israelite.⁶⁰ If so,⁶¹ what was the point in mentioning BETROTHED? [The same rule should be applied] even to one who was married! — As in the first clause BETROTHED was taught,⁶² BETROTHED was also taught in the final clause.⁶³

Our Rabbis taught: Terumah gedolah⁶⁴ belongs to the priest, and the first tithe belongs to the Levite; so R. Akiba. R. Eleazar b. Azariah said:

(1) As the terumah must be given to the priest and may be eaten by priests only and not by common people so must the first tithe also be given to Levites and be eaten by Levites only and not by common people (v. Rashi).

(2) Keth. 26a.

(3) The eating of tithe by a priest.

(4) Which is absurd. A priest, surely, is not included among the 'common' people to whom tithe should be forbidden!

(5) Attributed to R. Meir himself.

(6) Num. XVIII, 24; terumah (E.V. gift) and tithe having been mentioned in juxtaposition.

(7) Lit., 'if'.

(8) Cf. Lev. XXII. 14.

(9) Ibid. 9.

(10) Ibid. 14.

(11) Shall the penalty of death be incurred.

(12) Shall a fifth be added.

(13) How do they explain the comparison between the terumah and tithe to which Scripture points?

(14) טָבֵל v. Glos. The penalty for eating tebel is death.

(15) V. supra n. 18, though for the eating of the tithe itself no death penalty is incurred.

(16) Neither the priestly, nor the levitical dues.

(17) V. Glos.

(18) Which is not so sacred as terumah, being permitted to Levites.

(19) Which even common people are permitted to eat. Cf. Deut. XIV, 22-27.

(20) Which is not even sacred, it being regarded as mere alms.

(21) Deut. XII, 17, speaking of tithe.

(22) Ibid. XXVI, 12, speaking of the tithe of the poor man.

(23) The text speaking of the third year, (ibid.). The third and the sixth year of the Septennial cycle are the years in which the poor man's, instead of the second tithe is given to all who are in need of it.

(24) Eat, (ibid. XII, 17), before it is set apart from the produce.

(25) Deut. XII, 17, speaking of tithe.

(26) Lit., 'and if from there'.

(27) For the eating of the tithe, since the prohibition only was stated, but no death penalty was mentioned.

(28) Num. XVIII, 24.

(29) From which a comparison is made between the tithe and terumah. Cf. supra p. 580. n. 10.

(30) V. Glos.

(31) In the Baraitha just discussed. What need, then, was there for the comparison deduced from Num. XVIII, 24?

(32) Lit., 'if from that'.

(33) The reference to tithe in the case of THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A LEVITE, and THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE... TO AN ISRAELITE.

(34) Lit., 'what strangeness is there here'; neither the daughter of a priest nor the daughters of a Levite are 'strangers' or 'common' women to whom tithe is forbidden.

(35) Lit., 'what'.

(36) Lit., 'that was taught'.

(37) From the produce of her betrothed, or of the levir whose decision she is awaiting.

(38) And the terumah of this tithe (cf. Num. XVIII, 26) so that she might be enabled to eat of the tithe. The reason for the prohibition is not because the tithe is forbidden to her, but because she is not entitled to appoint an agent for the setting apart of terumah without the owner's knowledge.

- (39) Since BETROTHED was mentioned.
- (40) Num. XVIII, 31. The husband (ye) was compared to his wife (household; בֵּית term for 'wife').
- (41) I.e., one married to a Levite.
- (42) From her husband's produce.
- (43) Cf. supra note 5.
- (44) The tithe.
- (45) The wife of a priest, because she is entitled to the same rights as her husband.
- (46) The wife of a Levite who also, like the wife of the priest, is entitled to her husband's rights.
- (47) As this law is so obvious there was no need to have a Scriptural text from which to deduce it.
- (48) V. supra n. 7.
- (49) Lit., 'but'. Since it is available for a comparison between husband and wife.
- (50) Or 'Rabina' (v. Rashi).
- (51) The final clause in our Mishnah, THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE TO A PRIEST and THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST TO A LEVITE.
- (52) If she comes unaccompanied by her husband. The first clause will, however, refer to eating and is in accordance with R. Meir's view.
- (53) The prohibition to give a share in the terumah or tithe to a woman when she comes alone to the threshing-floor.
- (54) וְיָהוּדִי v. Glos. s.v. yihud and cf. infra 100a.
- (55) Who might continue to collect tithe at the threshing-floors even after her divorce from her husband when she returns to her former status of an ordinary woman and forbidden to share in the priestly dues and, according to R. Meir, also in the levitical tithe.
- (56) Another reading, 'May not the daughter of a priest eat terumah? — And according to your argument may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a Levite eat tithe?' Cur. edd. enclose the reading of our text in parenthesis.
- (57) Of course she may. Why, then, should she be refused a share in the tithe even in the absence of her husband!
- (58) She undoubtedly may. Why then is the wife of a priest refused a share in terumah in the absence of her husband (cf. infra 100a) irrespective of whether she is the daughter of a priest or of an Israelite?
- (59) V. p. 582, n. 20.
- (60) Such a preventive measure is, of course, applicable to the daughter of a Levite in respect of tithe in the same way as to the daughter of a priest in respect of terumah.
- (61) That the prohibition is merely a preventive measure.
- (62) In the first clauses the expression BETROTHED was essential, since the object of the Mishnah was to state that betrothal alone does not confer upon the daughter of an Israelite the right of eating terumah and tithe, and upon the daughter of a Levite the right to terumah, if the former was betrothed to a priest or a Levite and the latter to a priest; and that even betrothal, and not only marriage, deprives the daughter of a priest and the daughter of a Levite of the right of eating terumah and tithe respectively if the man was in the former case an Israelite or a Levite and in the latter case an Israelite.
- (63) Where the reference is to the woman's eligibility to call for a share in the tithe; though in this case the woman, whether betrothed or married, is subject to the same restriction.
- (64) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 86b

To the priest.¹ 'To the priest', but not to the Levite!² — Read: To the priest also.

What is R. Akiba's reason? — Because it is written, Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites, and say unto them;³ Scripture thus refers specifically to the Levites. And the other?⁴ — His view follows that of R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi stated: In twenty-four passages were the priests described as Levites, and the following is one of them: But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok.⁵ And R. Akiba? You cannot say so⁶ here; for it is written, And ye may eat it in every place,⁷ [it is to be given to him only] who 'may eat it in every place'; a priest, however, is excluded since he may not eat it in a graveyard.⁸ And the other? — [The meaning⁹ is] wherever he wishes: Neither is it required [to eat it within the] wall¹⁰ nor is a man subject to flogging for eating it while his body
