Another [Baraitha] taught: On the seventh of Adar Moses died, and on the seventh of Adar he was born. How do we know that he died on the seventh of Adar? For it is written: [i] So Moses the servant of the Lord died there;[7] [ii] And the children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab thirty days;[8] [iii] Moses thy servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over [this Jordan];[9] [iv] Pass through the midst of the camp, and command the people, saying: Prepare you victuals; for within three days ye are to pass over this Jordan;[10] and [v] and the people came up out of Jordan on the tenth day of the first month;[11] deduct[12] the preceding thirty three days,[13] thus you learn that Moses died on the seventh of Adar.[14]

And how do we know that he was born on the seventh of Adar? — For it is said: And he [Moses] said unto them, I am an hundred and twenty years old this day; I can no more go out and come in.[15] Now, 'this day' need not be stated;[16] why then is it stated? It teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, sits and completes the years of the righteous [exactly] from day to day and month to month, as it is said,the number of thy days I will fulfil.[17]

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai said: The Israelites were given three precepts[18] on their entry into the Land,[19] yet they are practised both within and without the Land, and it is logical that they shall be thus binding. If hadash, which is not permanently forbidden,[20] nor is [all] benefit thereof prohibited,[21] and its interdict can be raised,[22] is [nevertheless] operative both within and without the Land;[23] then kil'ayim, which are permanently forbidden,[24] of which [all] benefit is prohibited,[25] and the interdict of which cannot be raised, it surely follows that it has force both within and without the land; and the same logic applies to 'orlah on two [grounds].[26] R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said:

---

(1) V. GIos,

(2) So that the law of hadash was inoperative when they first entered Palestine.

(3) Ex. XVI, 35. 'Land inhabited' refers to cis-Jordania, not Gilead on the east of the Jordan, though two and a half tribes did settle there.

(4) But not Canaan itself.

(5) Hence 'until they came to a land inhabited' refers to the actual period of eating it, while it descended only 'until they came to the borders etc.', where Moses died.

(6) For they came to the wilderness of Sin on the fifteenth of the second month (Ex. XVI, 1), complained of the lack of food (ibid. 2f.), and received the manna on the following day (ibid. 6f, 13). As they ate it until the sixteenth of the first month forty years later, these forty years were short by one month.

(7) Deut. XXXIV, 5.

(8) Ibid. 8.

(9) Josh. I, 2.

(10) Ibid, 11. The month of Nisan.

(11) Ibid. IV, 19.

(12) From the 10th Nisan.
(13) N. ii and iv.
(14) From Adar 7th to Nisan 10th are 33 days.
(15) Deut. XXXI, 2.
(16) Obviously he gave his age as on that day.
(17) Ex. XXIII, 26. Hence he was then exactly a hundred and twenty years old, which was the day of his death; consequently he was born on that day too.
(18) Hadash, 'orlah and kil'ayim.
(19) Since there was no sowing, planting, or harvesting in the wilderness.
(20) But only up to and including the sixteenth of Nisan, the day on which the 'omer is offered.
(21) Though it may not be used for human consumption, it may be given to animals.
(22) Lit., 'permitted'. Even on the sixteenth itself, by the offering of the 'omer.
(23) Interpreting dwelling in Lev. XXIII, 14, 'wherever you live'.
(24) If diverse seeds are sown, their produce is forbidden for all time.
(25) Not only consumption.
(26) The third does not apply, 'orlah not being permanently forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 38b

All precepts which the Israelites were commanded [to practise] before their entry into the Land[1] are operative both within and without the Land; after their entry into the Land, are operative only within the Land, except release of money [debts] and liberation of slaves:[2] though they were commanded concerning these after their entry into the Land,is they are practised both within and without the Land. But the release of debts is a personal duty?[3] — It is necessary [to state it] Only because of what was taught. Rabbi said: And this is the manner of release: release [thou] [every creditor, etc.][4] the Writ speaks of two releases, the release of soil and the release of debt.[5] At the time when you release soil, you release debts; and at the time when you do not release soil, you do not release debts.[6] But perhaps it means thus: in the place that you must release soil [sc. Palestine], you must release debts; but in the place where you do not release soil [sc. in the Diaspora], you do not release debts?[7] Therefore it is stated, because the Lord's release hath been proclaimed,[8] teaching, under all circumstances.[9]

[Again], liberation of slaves is a personal obligation? — I might have thought, since it is written, and ye shall proclaim liberty throughout the land,[10] it holds good only in the Land, but not without; therefore it is stated, it is a jubilee,[11] implying, under all circumstances. If so, what is taught by 'the land'? — When liberation [of slaves] is in force in the Land, it is in force without; when it is not in force in the Land,[12] it is not in force without.

We learnt elsewhere: Hadash is forbidden by Scriptural law everywhere; [the prohibition of] 'orlah [without palestine] is a halachah, and [that of] kil'ayim is from the words of the Scribes.[13] What is meant by halachah? — Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: It is a law of the country.[14] 'Ulla said in R. Johanan s name: It is a halachah of Moses from Sinai.[15] Said 'Ulla to Rab Judah: On my view that it is a halachah of Moses from Sinai,[16] it is well; therefore we distinguish between doubtful 'orlah and doubtful kil'ayim. For we learnt: Doubtful 'orlah[17] is forbidden in the Land, permitted in Syria,[18] whilst outside the Land one may enter [a Genthe's field] and make a purchase,[19] providing, however, that he does not see him [the Gentile] gather ['orlah].[20] Whereas in respect to kil'ayim we learnt: If a vineyard is planted with vegetables,[21] and vegetables are sold outside it:[22] in the Land they are forbidden; in Syria, permitted; in the Diaspora he [the Gentile owner of the vineyard] may enter and gather them,[23] providing, however, that he [the Jew] does not personally[24] gather [them][25] But on your view,

---

(1) I.e., which rank as personal duties.

(2) The first in the seventh (Deut. XV, 1f) and the second in the jubilee year (Lev. XXV, 10). (15) This is questioned by the Gemara below.
(3) And therefore in force before they entered Palestine (Rashi).
(4) Deut. XV, 2.
(5) Deduced from the repetition of the word 'release'.
(6) By 'release of soil' is meant the return of land at jubilee (Lev. XXV, 10, 23, 28). Obviously this did not operate in the wilderness, when they had no land, and therefore debt release was inoperative too, though it is a personal obligation.
(7) Even in Temple times.
(8) Ibid.
(9) This follows from the emphasis suggested by the quotation.
(10) Lev. XXV, 10,
(11) Ibid,
(12) I.e., when there is no Temple.
(13) V. p. 79, n. 7. Biblically the law applies only to Palestine.
(14) It is practised voluntarily in the Diaspora.
(15) It is a compulsory prohibition going back to Moses, handed down by tradition, though not stated in the Bible.
(16) And so has the force of Biblical Law, v. infra p. 190, n. 11.
(17) Fruit of which it is not known whether it is of the first three years of planting or not.
(18) Syria was not originally part of Palestine but conquered by David (I Chron. XIX, 18f); and it is disputed whether David's conquest (technically called the conquest of an individual) conferred the full sanctity of Palestine upon it. This Tanna holds that it did not; consequently the law of 'orlah is not so stringent there, and so doubtful 'orlah is permitted. Yet one may not procure it in the first place, since Syria is not absolutely distinct from Palestine in sanctity.
(19) Of fruit, even if he knows that the Gentile sells 'orlah.
(20) [Of fruit which may be doubtful 'orlah.]
(21) Between the vines, which renders both forbidden as kil 'ayim of the vineyard.
(22) And there is a reasonable fear that they may be from the vineyard.
(23) And sell to a Jew.
(24) Lit., 'with his hand'.
(25) Comparing these two, we see that 'orlah is treated more stringently than kil 'ayim.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 39a

let it be taught in both cases either that he [the Jew] may enter and make a purchase, or that he [the Gentile] may enter and gather [them]?[1] — Samuel did indeed say to R. 'Anan, Read in both cases either that he [the Jew] may enter and make a purchase, or that he [the Gentile] may enter and gather [them]. Mar son of Rabbana recited it in the direction of leniency: In both cases he [the Gentile] may enter and gather them, provided that he [the Jew] does not personally gather.

Levi said to Samuel: Arioch,[2] Supply me with doubtful ['orlah] and I will eat [thereof].[3] R. Awia and Rabbah son of R. Hanan supplied each other with doubtful ['orlah].[4] The keen scholars of Pumbeditha[5] said. There is no 'orlah in the Diaspora. When Rab Judah sent [this ruling] to R. Johanan, he sent back: Conceal[6] [the law of] doubtful ['orlah],[7] destroy certain ['orlah], and proclaim that these fruits must be hidden,[8] and whoever maintains that there is no 'orlah in the Diaspora, he will have no offspring nor posterity 'that shall cast the line by lot in the congregation of the Lord'.[9] But with whom do they [the 'keen scholars'] hold? — With what was taught: R. Eleazar son of R. Jose said on the authority of R. Jose b. Durmaskah, who stated it on the authority of R. Jose the Galilean, who said it on the authority of R. Johanan b. Nuri, who said it on the authority of R. Eleazar the Great: There is no 'orlah in the Diaspora. Is there not? But we learnt: R. ELEAZAR SAID, HADASH TOO?[10] — Read, HADASH.[11]

R. Assi said in R. Johanan's name: [The prohibition of] 'orlah in the Diaspora is a halachah of Moses from Sinai.[12] Said R. Zera to R. Assi: But we learnt: Doubtful 'orlah is forbidden in the Land but permitted in Syria.[13] He was momentarily non — plussed;[14] [then] he answered him,[15] Perhaps it [the Mosaic halachah] was thus given: Doubtful [‘orlah] is permitted [in the Diaspora], certain [‘orlah] is forbidden.

R. Assi said in R. Johanan's name: One is flagellated for [violating the prohibition of] kil'ayim [in the Diaspora] by Biblical law. But we learnt,[16] kil ‘ayim [is forbidden] by the words of the Soferim?[17] — There is no difficulty: the one refers to kil'ayim of the vineyard, and the other to the grafting of [heterogeneous] tree[s].[18] That agrees with Samuel. For Samuel said: My statutes ye shall keep:[19] [that implies] the statutes which I decreed for you in former times.[20] Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind: thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of seeds.’[21] just as [the prohibition of] ‘thy cattle’ [means] by copulation, so is [that of] ‘thy field’ by grafting;[22] and just as [the law in regard to] ‘thy cattle’ is in force both within and without the Land, so is [that concerning] ‘thy field’ in force alike within and without the Land. But still, ‘thy field’ is written![23] — That is to exclude [diverse] seeds in the Diaspora.[24]

R. Hanan and R. ‘Anan were walking along a path, when they saw a man sowing [diverse] seeds together. Said one to the other, ‘Come, Master, let us ban him.’[25] ‘You are not clear [on this law],’ he replied. Again they saw another man sowing wheat and barley among vines. Said one to the other, ‘Come, Master, let us ban him.’ ‘You are not thoroughly versed [in this law],’ he rejoined. ‘Do we not fully accept R. Josiah's dictum, that [he is not guilty] unless he sows wheat, barley, and grape-stone in the [same] hand-throw?’[26] R. Joseph mixed seeds and sowed [them].[27] Thereupon Abaye protested: But we learnt: Kil'ayim is forbidden [in the] Diaspora by the words of the Scribes! — There is no difficulty, answered he. That [the Mishnah quoted] refers to kil'ayim of the vineyard; this [my action] is with kil'ayim of seeds. Kil'ayim of the vineyard, of which in the Land [all] benefit is forbidden, are also Rabbinically prohibited outside the Land; kil'ayim of seeds, however, of which [even] in palestine benefit is not forbidden,[28] are not prohibited by the Rabbis in the Diaspora. Subsequently R. Joseph said: My former statement was incorrect,[29] for Rab sowed the scholars’ garden[30] in separate beds.[31] What is the reason? Surely in order [to avoid] the mixture of kil'ayim?[32] Said Abaye to him: Now that were indeed well if we were informed

---

(1) Since ‘orlah and kil'ayim are alike, neither having Biblical force.

(2) A playful nickname, v. Gen. XIV, 9, Arioch king of Ellasar; by a pun, Ellasar was read al assur, and the phrase applied to Samuel: he was king, but not in ritual law. When Rab and Samuel differ in respect to civil law, the halachah agrees with Samuel; in ritual law, with Rab. V. Shab. 53a Marginal glosses. [S. Funk, Die Juden in Babylonian, I. p. 42, n. 2. takes the term to denote ‘the Tall’, and as a variant of Arika, a cognomen by which Rab was known, on account of his extraordinary stature.]

(3) I.e., gather fruit in my absence, so that I do not know whether it is ‘orlah; Others (mentioned in Tosaf. Ri) translate: supply me (with certain ‘orlah), Levi holding that the prohibition of ‘orlah is inoperative in the Diaspora.

(4) [By exchanging fruit cut by one in the absence of the other.]

(5) A great academy town in Babylon. The term ‘keen scholars’ denotes Eyfa and Abimi, the son of Rahaba (Sanh. 17b).

(6) Lit., ‘shut’.

(7) It is permitted, but since there is already a tendency to treat ‘orlah lightly, do not teach this publicly.

(8) I.e., not eaten.

(9) Micah II, 5.

(10) Since he adds hadash, he.evidently agrees with the first Tanna that ‘orlah is forbidden.

(11) I.e., only hadash, but not ‘orlah.

(12) Various views are held as to the exact meaning of this phrase. Some take it in its literal sense as indicating that the law in question was actually handed down from Moses. Others understand it more figuratively in the sense of a traditional law, whilst its alleged Mosaic origin is not to be taken literally’. V. Weiss, Dor., I. [For a full discussion of this phrase as well as of all the passages where it occurs, v. Bacher, W., Kohler-Festschrift pp. 56ff.]

(13) But if certain ‘orlah is forbidden in the Diaspora by Mosaic law, how can we be lenient in doubtful ‘orlah? (It is a general principle that when in doubt, we are stringent if the law is Biblical or Mosaic, lenient if it is only Rabbinical).

(14) [Lit., ‘was appalled for a who’, quoted from Dan. IV, 26.]
(15) Or possibly, the questioner himself suggested it.
(16) Cur. ed. read: R. Eleazar b. R. Jose said to him, But we learnt. This is obviously incorrect, since R. Eleazar b. R. Jose was a Tanna of an earlier generation, and so the Wilna Gaon deletes it. But Asheri reads: R. Eleazar said to R. Assi, which will refer to R. Eleazar b. Pedath, his contemporary.
(17) V. p. 79, n. 7.
(18) In the latter case diverse growths are actually grafted on each other: that is Biblically forbidden. But in kil'ayim of the vineyard diverse seeds are grown near each other, and though their roots may even intertwine, there is no actual grafting; that is forbidden by Rabbinic law only.
(19) Lev. XIX, 19.
(20) I.e., to the children of Noah. This follows because Scripture does not state, ye shall keep my statutes (E.V., which does translate thus, disregards the order of the Hebrew) but gives precedence to ‘my statutes,’ implying that they were already long in existence.
(21) Ibid.
(22) I.e., in both cases the actual fusion of diverse species is forbidden.
(23) Implying specifically thine, viz., Palestine.
(24) I.e., the planting of diverse seeds in a vineyard is not Biblically forbidden outside Palestine. That follows because the verb ‘to sow’ is more applicable to the sowing of seeds, and with that ‘thy field’ is linked. Nevertheless the analogy, which intimates that grafting is referred to, which is possible only in the case of trees, also shews that grafting is forbidden in the Diaspora too.
(25) For violating Rabbinic law.
(26) I.e., he must have two species of grain and the seed of the vine in his hand and cast them simultaneously into the soil.
(27) Not in a vineyard.
(28) Though diverse seeds may not be sown in Palestine, yet if sown one may benefit from (though not consume) the produce.
(29) Lit., ‘was nothing’.
(30) A vegetable garden for the benefit of his disciples.
(31) For different species.
(32) And this was outside Palestine.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 39b

[that he sowed] four [species] on the four sides of the bed and one [species] in the middle.[1] Here, however,[2] he did so on account of beauty, or [to save] the attendant trouble.[3]

MISHNAH. HE WHO PERFORMS ONE PRECEPT IS WELL REWARDED,[4] HIS DAYS ARE PROLONGED, AND HE INHERITS THE LAND,[5] BUT HE WHO DOES NOT PERFORM ONE PRECEPT, GOOD IS NOT DONE TO HIM, HIS DAYS ARE NOT PROLONGED, AND HE DOES NOT INHERIT THE LAND.[6]

GEMARA. But a contradiction is shewn: These are the things the fruit of which man eats in this world,[7] while the principal remains for him for the future world. Viz., honouring one's parents, the practice of loving deeds, hospitality to wayfarers,[8] and making peace between man and his neighbour; and the study of the Torah surpasses them all.[9] — Said Rab Judah: This is its meaning: HE WHO PERFORMS ONE PRECEPT in addition to his [equally balanced] merits[10] IS WELL REWARDED, and he is as though he had fulfilled the whole Torah. Hence it follows that for these others [one is rewarded] even for a single one![11] — Said R. Shemaiah: That teaches that if there is an equal balance, it tips the scale.[12]

Yet is it a fact that he who performs one precept in addition to his [equally balanced] merits is rewarded? But the following contradicts it: He whose good deeds outnumber his iniquities is punished,[13] and is as though he had burnt the whole Torah, not leaving even a single letter;[14] while he whose iniquities outnumber his good deeds is rewarded,[15] and is as though he had fulfilled the whole Torah, not omitting even a single letter! — Said Abaye: Our Mishnah means that a festive day and an evil day are prepared for him,[16] Raba said: This latter agrees with R. Jacob, who said: There is no reward for precepts in this world.[17] For it was taught: R. Jacob said: There is not a single precept in the Torah whose reward is [stated] at its side which is not dependent on the resurrection of the dead.[18] [Thus:] in connection with honouring parents it is written, that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee.[19] In reference to the dismissal of the nest[20] it is written, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days.[21] Now, if one's father said to him, 'Ascend to the loft and bring me young birds,' and he ascends to the loft, dismisses the dam and takes the young, and on his return falls and is killed — where is this man's happiness[22] and where is this man's prolonging of days? But 'in order that it may be well with thee', means on the day that is wholly good; and 'in order that thy days may be long', on the day that is wholly long.[23]

Yet perhaps there was no such happening?[24] — R. Jacob saw an actual occurrence. Then perhaps he[25] was meditating upon a transgression? — The Holy One, blessed be He, does not combine an evil thought with an [evil] act.[26] Yet perhaps he was meditating idolatry, and it is written, that I may take the house of Israel in their own heart?[27] — That too was precisely his point: should you think that precepts are rewarded in this world, why did the [fulfilment of these] precepts not shield him from being led to [such] meditation?[28]

Yet R. Eleazar said: Those who are engaged[29] on a precept are never harmed?[30] — There, when they are going [to fulfil the precept], it is different.[31] But R. Eleazar said: Those who are engaged on a precept are never harmed, either when going or returning? — It was a rickety ladder, so that injury was likely,[32] and where injury is likely one must not rely on a miracle, for it is written, and Samuel said: How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me.[33]

R. Joseph said: Had Aher[34] interpreted this verse[35] as R. Jacob, his daughter's son, he would not have sinned.[36] Now, what happened with Aher? Some say, he saw something of this nature.[37] Others say, he saw the tongue of Huzpith the Interpreter dragged along by a swine.[38] 'The mouth that uttered pearls licks the dust!' he exclaimed. [Thereupon] he went forth and sinned.[39]

R. Tobi son of R. Kisna pointed out a contradiction to Raba: We learnt: HE WHO PERFORMS ONE PRECEPT IS WELL REWARDED; hence, only if he [actively] performs it, but not otherwise. But the following contradicts this: If he sits and commits no transgression he is rewarded as though he has fulfilled a precept! — Said he to him: There it means, e.g., that he was tempted[40] and successfully resisted.[41] As in the case of R. Hanina b. Pappi, whom a certain matron urged [to immorality]. He pronounced a certain [magical] formula, whereupon his body was covered with boils and scabs;[42] but she did something and he was healed. So he fled and hid himself in a bath-house in which when [even] two entered, even in daytime, they would suffer harm.[43] The next morning the Rabbis asked him, 'Who guarded you?' Said he to them, 'Two

---

(1) I.e., sowing different species in the same bed, yet taking care according to the regulation to leave sufficient space between each for their roots not to intertwine; v. Shab. 84b. The only possible reason would then be that kil'ayim are forbidden outside Palestine.

(2) Since he did not observe this regulation.

(3) In fetching vegetables, he would know the place of each species.

(4) Lit., 'good is done to him'.

(5) I.e., the future world.

(6) The Mishnah is explained in the Gemara.

(7) I,e., he is rewarded for them in this world.

(8) [This does not occur in the Mishnah, Pe'ah I, whence the passage is quoted, and is omitted in MS.M.]

(9) Thus, only for these is one rewarded in this world, whereas the Mishnah states this of any precept. To the Rabbis study was not only a means to religious observance (cf. infra 40b: study is great, as it leads to action), but a religious act in itself, — indeed, one of the most important, as is shewn by this and numerous other passages in the Talmud. Nevertheless, they were far from believing that religious sincerity might be replaced by mere intellectualism; v. M. Joseph, Judaism as Creed and Life, p. 360.
(10) I.e., his good deeds and bad are exactly balanced, and then he performs a precept, thus tipping the scale.
(11) Even if he has no other good deeds to his credit — surely not!
(12) If one's good deeds and bad are exactly equal, yet among the good deeds is one of those enumerated above, it causes the former to preponderate.
(13) Lit., 'evil is done to him'.
(14) Thus he is purged of his sins in this world, that he may wholly enjoy the next.
(15) For his good deeds in this world, that he may wholly suffer punishment in the next.
(16) By 'good is done to him' the Mishnah means that he is punished in this world; this punishment is regarded as a festive day for him, since he thereby wholly enjoys the next. Conversely the second half of the Mishnah.
(17) But our Mishnah disagrees, and is literally meant, referring to this world.
(18) Which shews that the reward spoken of is in the next world. R. Jacob appears to identify the next world with resurrection; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 601, n. 3.
(19) Deut. V, 16.
(20) V. Ibid. XXII, 6f; that precept is always technically so named.
(21) Ibid.
(22) Lit., 'the goodness of his days'.
(23) I.e., both refer to the next world, not to this, and thereby emphasize that regard comes only then, but not in this world.
(24) R. Jacob bases his deduction on a hypothetical event which may never have happened.
(25) The one who was involved in this occurrence.
(26) For punishment. — I.e., one is not punished for mere intention.
(27) Ezek. XIV, 5: 'heart' implies intention; the reference is to idolatry; v. preceding verse, and thus we see that even the intention of idolatry is punished.
(28) Cf. Aboth IV, 2: 'the reward of a precept is a precept, and the punishment of transgression is transgression, for precept draws precept and transgression draws transgression'.
(29) Lit., 'sent'.
(30) How then could this have happened?
(31) But he was returning, having taken the bird etc.
(32) Lit., 'established'.
(33) 1 Sam. XVI, 2; he did not rely upon the fact that his mission was by God's command.
(34) Elisha b. Abuyah, a great scholar and R. Meir's teacher, who turned against the Torah, whereupon he was dubbed Aher, a different man, a stranger.
(35) The promise of reward and long life.
(36) He interpreted it literally, as referring to this world, and seeing that the promise was not fulfilled turned unbeliever.
(37) Stated above.
(38) Lit., 'a different thing' — a euphemism for swine, the unmentionable. — Huzpith was one of the martyrs slain in the Hadrianic persecution, after the fall of Bethar; v. Dor. II, 119. The Interpreter was a functionary who interpreted the public readings of the Torah to the people.
(39) According to this, it was the eternal question, why do the righteous suffer, which is even put into the mouth of Moses (Ber. 7a), which led him to religious apostasy. For other conjectures v. J.E. s.v. Elishah ben Abuyah.
(40) Lit., 'a matter of transgression came to his hand.'
(41) Lit., 'he was saved from it,'
(42) Belief in magic was very widespread in ancient times, and was even entertained by scholars. On the whole the Talmud was strongly opposed to it, as 'impairing the Divine Agencies' (Sanh. 67b; cf. Tosef. Sotah, XIV, 3; Sotah, IX, 3), and being bound up with idolatry. Nevertheless, in case of need it was resorted to and permitted, so long as pagan means were not employed. Thus healing by means of an amulet was permitted and its use regulated by law (Shab. 61a-b). Here, on the other hand, a Rabbi uses magic to cover himself with boils in order to resist immoral demands, and it is obviously permitted. The most potent means was an incantation, as here, particularly one which employed the name of God. V. Blau, Das altjudische Zauberwesen, pp. 117-146.

(43) From demons; yet he stayed there the night alone, and was unhurt.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 40a

Imperial [armour] bearers[1] guarded me all night.'[2] Said they to him, 'Perhaps you were tempted with immorality and successfully resisted?' For it was taught: He who is tempted with immorality and successfully resists, a miracle is performed for him.

[Bless ye the Lord, ye messenger's of his:] Ye mighty in strength, that fulfil his word, hearkening unto the voice of his word.[3] E.g., R. Zadok and his companions. R. Zadok was summoned by a certain matron [to immorality]. Said he to her, 'My heart is faint and I am unable; is there aught to eat?' She answered him, 'There is unclean food.' 'What am I to deduce from this?'[4] he retorted: 'that he who commits this [immorality] may eat this.'[5] She then fired the oven and was placing it [the forbidden meat] therein, when he ascended and sat in it. Said she to him, 'What is the meaning of this?' 'He who commits the one [immorality] falls into the other [the fire — of Gehenna]', was his reply. 'Had I known that it is so heinous,' said she, 'I would not have tormented you'.

R. Kahana was selling [work-] baskets, when a certain matron made [immoral] demands upon him. Said he to her, 'I will first adorn myself.' He [thereupon] ascended and hurled himself[6] from the roof towards earth, but Elijah came and caught him.[7] 'You have troubled me [to come] four hundred parasangs', he reproved him. 'What caused me [to do it],'[8] he retorted; 'is it not poverty?'[9] so he gave him a shifa[10] [full] of denarii.[11]

Raba pointed out a contradiction to R. Nahman. We learnt: These are the things the fruit of which man enjoys in this world, while the principal remains for him for the future world: Viz., honouring one's parents, the practice of loving deeds, and making peace between man and his neighbour, while the study of the Torah surpasses them all. Now, in reference to honouring one's parents it is written, that thy days may be long, and that it may go well with thee.[12] Of the practice of loving deeds it is written: He that pursueth after righteousness and loving kindness findeth life, righteousness and honour.[13] Of peacemaking it is said: Seek peace and pursue it;[14] and R. Abbahu said: We learn 'pursuing' from 'pursuing'. Here it is written: 'Seek peace and pursue it'; and elsewhere it is written: He that pursueth after righteousness and loving kindness.[15] Of the study of the Law it is written, for that is thy life, and the length of thy days.[16] But with respect to the dismissal of the nest[17] it is also written, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days:[18] then let this too be taught? — He teaches [some] and omits [others]. [What!] the Tanna states: 'These are the things,'[19] yet you say that he teaches [some] and omits [others]! — Said Raba, R. Idi explained it to me: Say ye of the righteous, when he is good, that they shall eat the fruit of their doings:[20] is there then a righteous man who is good and a righteous man who is not good? But he who is good to Heaven and good to man, he is a righteous man who is good; good to Heaven but not good to man, that is a righteous man who is not good.[21] Similarly you read: Woe unto the wicked [man] [that is] evil; for the reward of his hands shall be given unto him:[22] is there then a wicked man that is evil and one that is not evil? But he that is evil to Heaven and evil to man, he is a wicked man that is evil; he who is evil to Heaven but not evil to man, he is a wicked man that is not evil.

Merit has both stock and fruit,for it is said: Say ye of the righteous, when he is good etc.[23] Transgression has stock but not fruit,[24] for it is said: Woe unto the wicked when he is evil etc.[25] Then how do I interpret,[26] Therefore shall they [sc. the wicked] eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices?[27] Transgression which bears fruit[28] has fruit; that which does not bear fruit has no fruit.[29] Good intention is combined with deed,[30] for it is said: Then they that feared the Lord spoke one with another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.[31] Now, what is the meaning of 'that thought upon his name'? — Said R. Assi: Even if one [merely] thinks of performing a precept but is forcibly prevented the Writ ascribes it to him as though he has performed it. Evil intention is not combined with deed,[32] for it is said: If I regarded iniquity in my heart, The Lord would not hear.[33] Then how do I interpret, behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts?[34] Intention which bears fruit[35] the Holy One, blessed be He, combines with deed;[36] Intention which does not bear fruit the Holy One, blessed be He, does not combine with deed. Then what of the verse, that I may take the house of Israel in their own heart?[37] — Said R. Aha b. Jacob: That refers to idolatry, for a Master said: Idolatry is so heinous that he who rejects it is as though he admits [the truth of] the whole Torah.[38] 'Ulla said: [This is to be explained] as R. Huna. For R. Huna said: Once a man does wrong and repeats it, it is permitted him. 'It is permitted him'! can you really think so? — But it becomes to him as something permitted.[39]

R. Abbahu said on R. Hanina's authority: Better had a man secretly transgress than publicly profane God's[40] name, for it is said: As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God: Go ye, serve every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me: but my holy name shall ye not profane.[41]

R. Il'ai the Elder said: If a man sees that his [evil] desire is conquering him, let him go to a place where he is unknown, don black and cover himself with black,[42] and do as his heart desires,[43] but let him not publicly profane God's name.[44] But that is not so, for we learnt: He who is careless[45] of his Master's honour, it were well for him that he had not come Into the world. Now, to what does this refer? — Rabbah said: To one who gazes at the [rain]bow.[46] R. Joseph said: To one who secretly transgresses![47] — There is no difficulty: the one means where he can subdue his evil desires; the other, where he cannot.

We learnt elsewhere: Credit is not allowed[48] for the profanation of the [Divine] Name, whether It is unwitting or intentional.[49] What is meant by 'credit is not allowed?' — Said Mar Zutra: They [sc. Heaven] do not act like a shopkeeper.[50] Mar the son of Rabina said: This is to teach that if it [sc. one's account of sin and merit] is equally balanced, [the profanation of God's name] tips the scale.[51]

Our Rabbis taught: A man should always

---

(1) Var. lec.: Imperial Ethiopian (guards).

(2) Probably meaning, 'a special Providence watched over me'.

(3) Ps. CIII, 20.

(4) [From the fact that there is only unclean food available (Rashi). Others: 'What does it matter'?]

(5) The former is as heinous as the latter.

(6) Lit., 'fell'.

(7) V. note 5.

(8) Lit., 'caused it for me'.

(9) Which forces me to go hawking baskets among women.

(10) Jast. name of a measure, xestes. Rashi: name of a utensil.

(11) Elijah was supposed to appear among men very frequently, particularly to pious men, who were privileged to know his identity. Cf. Git. 70a, Sanh. 113a, Yoma 19b, et passim.

(12) Deut. V, 16.

(13) Prov. XXI, 21: 'life' is understood to refer to the next world, 'righteousness and honour' to the rewards in this.

(14) Ps. XXXIV, 25.

(15) Hence, just as the latter is rewarded in both worlds (v. n. 8), so is the former.

(16) Deut. XXX, 20: 'thy life' refers to this world, 'length of thy days', to the next.

(17) V. Deut. XXII, 6-7.

(18) Ibid.

(19) Which implies only these.
(20) Isa. III, 10.
(21) Hence the verse refers to the first, in connection with whom 'they shall eat the fruit of their doings', i.e., be rewarded in this world. But dismissing the dam is 'good to Heaven' only, i.e., it is obedience to God's will, but of no benefit to man.
(22) Ibid. 11.
(23) 'The fruit of his doings' implies reward over and above his merits.
(24) I.e., one is punished only according to his desserts.
(25) Only 'the reward of his hands' is mentioned, but not more.
(26) Lit., 'fulfil'.
(27) Prov. I, 31.
(28) E.g., when a great man sins he sets an evil example which is copied by others.
(29) In both, the principle of 'measure for measure' operates.
(30) And both are rewarded.
(31) Mal. III, 16.
(32) There is no punishment for mere intention.
(33) Ps. LXVI, 18; i.e., when it remained a mere intention 'in my heart', it was overlooked.
(34) Jer. VI, 19.
(35) I.e., which is followed by action.
(36) Punishing both.
(37) Ezek. XIV, 5. This shows that there is punishment for mere thought.
(38) Hence mere intention is punished.
(39) The blunting of man's finer perceptions which make him unable to distinguish between right and wrong is in itself sin's punishment. Cf. Yoma 39a: Sin dulls the heart of man; also Aboth: the punishment of sin is sin. — Hence, when the Writ intimates that evil intention is punished, it refers to a wrong twice committed: the intention to commit it a third time is then punished, even if not carried out. For by then it is not regarded as evil, and its non-performance is not due to repentance but because there was no need for it.
(40) Lit., 'Heaven's'.
(41) Ezek. XX, 39.
(42) His sombre garments may subdue his lust.
(43) If he is still unable to resist.
(44) By sinning where he is known.
(45) Lit., 'has no compassion'.
(46) Which was regarded as the manifestation of God's glory, and to gaze upon it was disrespectful (cf. Ex. XXIV, 9-11).
(47) Because he thereby shews that he fears man more than God.
(48) אין מקיפין , v. also n. 6.
(49) Cf. Mishnah, Aboth, IV, 5.
(50) Who gives long credit and then demands payment for many items; but every profanation is punished immediately.
(51) If his wrongdoings included this. God does not wait — i.e., 'give credit' — until another sin is committed, for that itself tips the scale. — Maharsha. [Rashi's explanation מקיפין is here understood in the sense of comparing, balancing the sins against the good deeds.]

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 40b

regard himself as though he were half guilty and half meritorious: if he performs one precept, happy is he for weighting himself down in the scale of merit; if he commits one transgression, woe to him for weighting himself down in the scale of guilt, for it is said, but one sinner destroyeth much good:[1] [i.e.,] on account of a single sin which he commits much good is lost to him.[2] R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: Because the world is judged by its majority, and an individual [too] is judged by his majority [of deeds, good or bad], if he performs one good deed, happy is he for turning the scale both for[3] himself and for the whole world on the side of merit; if he commits one transgression, woe to him for weighting himself and the whole world in the scale of guilt, for it is said: 'but one sinner, etc.' — on account of the single sin which this man commits he and the whole world lose much good.

R. Simeon b. Yohai said: Even if he is perfectly righteous all his life but rebels at the end, he destroys his former [good deeds], for it is said: The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression.[4] And even if one is completely wicked all his life but repents[5] at the end, he is not reproached with his wickedness,[6] for it is said, and as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness.[7] Yet let it be regarded[8] as half transgressions and half meritorious deeds! — Said Resh Lakish: It means that he regretted his former deeds.[9]

MISHNAH. HE WHO IS VERSED IN BIBLE, MISHNAH, AND SECULAR PURSUITS[10] WILL NOT EASILY[11] SIN, FOR IT IS SAID, AND A THREEFOLD CORD IS NOT QUICKLY BROKEN.[12] BUT HE WHO LACKS BIBLE, MISHNAH AND SECULAR PURSUITS DOES NOT BELONG TO CIVILISATION.

GEMARA. R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok said: To what are the righteous compared in this world? To a tree standing wholly in a place of cleanness, but its bough overhangs to a place of uncleanness; when the bough is lopped off, it stands entirely in a place of cleanness. Thus the Holy One, blessed be He, brings suffering upon the righteous in this world,[13] in order that they may inherit the future world, as it is said, and though thy beginning is small, yet thy latter end shall greatly increase.[14] And to what are the wicked compared in this world? To a tree standing wholly in a place of uncleanness, but a branch thereof overhangs a place of cleanness: when the bough is lopped off, it stands entirely in a place of uncleanness. Thus the Holy One, blessed be He, makes them prosper[15] in this world,[16] in order to destroy and consign them to the nethermost rung, for it is said: There is a way which seemeth right unto man, But at the end thereof are the ways of death.[17]

R. Tarfon and the Elders were once reclining in the upper storey of Nithza's house, in Lydda,[18] when this question was raised before them: Is study greater, or practice? R. Tarfon answered, saying: Practice is greater. R. Akiba answered, saying: Study is greater, for it leads to practice. Then they all answered and said:[19] Study is greater, for it leads to action.[20]

It was taught: R. Jose said: Great is learning, since it preceded hallah[21] by forty years, terumoth[21] and tithes by fifty-four years, shemittin[22] by sixty-one, and jubilees by one hundred and three.[23] A hundred and three? but it was a hundred and four![24] — He maintains that jubilee effects a release[25] at the beginning thereof. And just as learning preceded practice, so does the judgment thereof [in the next world] take precedence over that of practice,[26] in accordance with R. Hamnuna. For R. Hamnuna said: The beginning of man's judgment is in respect of study[27] alone, for it is said: The rejection[28] of water[29] is the beginning of judgment.[30] And just as the judgment thereof takes precedence over that of practice, so does the reward thereof, for it is said: And he gave them the lands and nations; and they took the labour of the people in possession: that they might keep [yishmeru] his statutes, and observe his laws.[31]

BUT HE WHO LACKS BIBLE, MISHNAH [etc.]. R. Johanan said: And he is unfit to testify.[32]

Our Rabbis taught: He who eats in the market-place is like a dog; and some say that he is unfit to testify.[33] R. Idi b. Abin said: The halachah agrees with the latter.[34]

Bar Kappara lectured: A bad tempered man

---

(1) Ecc, IX, 18.

(2) Viz., his meritorious deeds, being now outbalanced.
(3) Lit., 'of.
(4) Ezek. XXXIII, 12.
(5) The Heb. lit., means, 'but performs repentance, which demands more than mere regret but actual righting of wrongs committed.
(6) Lit., 'he is not reminded of his wickedness'.
(7) Ibid.
(8) Where the righteous rebels at the end.
(9) In that case his righteous past is completely disregarded.
(10) Heb. derek erez, lit., 'the way of the earth,' i.e., industry or commerce.
(11) Lit., 'quickly'.
(12) Ecc. IV, 12.
(13) Thus purging them of the little sin they do commit lopping off the branch inclining to an unclean place.
(14) Job VIII, 7.
(15) Lit., 'furnishes them with goodness'.
(16) Thus rewarding them for the little good they perform-lopping off the branch inclining to the place, that it may be disregarded in the next world.
(17) Prov. XIV, 12. — An attempt to answer the eternal question, why the wicked prosper and the righteous suffer.
(18) V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 502, n. 3.
(19) Probably, that was their final decision.
(20) This was a practical problem during the Hadrianic persecution, when both study and practical observance were forbidden, and the question was for which risks should sooner be taken. — Weiss. Dor., II, 125, Graetz, Geschichte, IV, p. 429.
(21) V. Glos.
(22) Plural of shemittah, q.v. Glos.
(23) The Torah was given to Israel two months after the Exodus from Egypt, whereas liability to hallah came into force forty years later, when they entered Palestine; terumoth and tithes fourteen years later after Palestine was conquered and allotted to the tribes; shemittah and jubilee seven and forty-nine years respectively after that.
(24) The jubilee is the fiftieth year, and it is assumed that its provisions (q.v. Lev. XXV, 8-13, 28, 33, 39-42, 47, 55) became operative only at the end of that year.
(25) I.e., its laws, which generally speaking effected the release of slaves and land, came into force.
(26) I.e., one is first judged for learning, and then in respect to the fulfilment of precepts.
(27) Lit., 'words of the Torah'.
(28) Lit., 'he who frees himself.
(29) I.e., the Torah; cf. Isa. LV, 1.
(30) Prov. XVII, 14; it is here so translated.
(31) Ps. CV, 44f.; v. supra 37a, where it is stated that 'ye shall keep' (tishmeru) refers to the study of the Mishnah. Thus study is mentioned before observance.
(32) Being so uncultivated he has no self-respect and is ready to testify falsely.
(33) He too lacks self-respect.
(34) Lit., with the 'some say'.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 41a

gains nothing but [the ill effect of] his temper;[1] but a good man is fed with the fruit of his deeds. And he who lacks Bible, Mishnah and worldly pursuits, vows not to benefit from him, as it is said: Nor sitteth in the seat of the scoffers:[2] his seat is the seat of scoffers.[3]

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. A MAN CAN BETROTH [A WOMAN] THROUGH HIMSELF OR THROUGH HIS AGENT. A WOMAN MAY BE BETROTHED THROUGH HERSELF OR THROUGH HER

AGENT. A MAN MAY GIVE HIS DAUGHTER IN BETROTHAL WHEN A NA'ARAH [EITHER] HIMSELF OR THROUGH HIS AGENT.

GEMARA. If he can betroth THROUGH HIS AGENT, is it necessary [to state] THROUGH HIMSELF? — Said R. Joseph: [This inclusion intimates that] it is more meritorious through himself than through his agent. Even as R. Safra [himself] singed an [animal's] head,[4] Raba salted shibbuta.[5] Some say that in this matter there is even a prohibition,[6] in accordance with Rab Judah's dictum in Rab's name; for Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: A man may not betroth a woman before he sees her, lest he [subsequently] see something repulsive in her, and she become loathsome to him, whereas the All-Merciful said, but thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.[7] And as to R. Joseph's statement,[8] it relates to the second clause: A WOMAN MAY BE BETROTHED THROUGH HERSELF OR THROUGH HER AGENT. Now, if she can be betrothed through her agent, is it necessary [to state] through herself? — Said R. Joseph: [This inclusion intimates that] it is more meritorious through herself than through her agent. Even as R. Safra [himself] singed an [animal's] head; Raba salted shibbuta. But there is no prohibition in this case,in accordance with Resh Lakish, who said: It is better to dwell with a load of grief than to dwell in widowhood.[9] A MAN MAY GIVE HIS DAUGHTER IN BETROTHAL WHEN A NA'ARAH. Only when a na'arah, but not when a minor: this supports Rab. For Rab Judah said in Rab's name: One may not give his daughter in betrothal when a minor, [but must wait] until she grows up and says: ‘I want So-and-so’.

Whence do we know [the principle of] agency?[10] — For it was taught: [When a man taketh a wife and . . . she find no favour in his eyes . . . then he shall write her a bill of divorcement . . .] and he shall send [her out of his house]:[11] this teaches that he may appoint an agent; then she shall send:[12] this teaches that she may appoint an agent; then he shall send, then he shall send her:[13] this teaches that the agent can appoint an agent.[14] Now, we have thus found [the principle of agency] in divorce: how do we know it in respect to kiddushin? And should you answer that it is derived from divorce [by analogy]; [I would answer] as for divorce, [agency may operate] because it can take place against her [the wife's] consent?[15] — Scripture saith, then she shall depart . . . and she shall be [another man's wife], thus assimilating marriage to divorce; just as an agent may be appointed for divorce, so may one be appointed for marriage.

Now, as to what we learnt: If one instructs his agent. ‘Go forth and separate [terumah]’: he must separate according to the owner's intentions;[16] and if he does not know the owner's intentions, he must make an average separation, [viz.,] one-fiftieth.

---

(1) Leanness (Rashi): had temper affects the health and the body becomes lean, but achieves nothing else!

(2) Ps. I, 1.

(3) Lacking these three, he can do nothing else but scoff and be ribald.

(4) In preparation for the Sabbath, though another could have done it for him.

(5) Name of a fish, conjectured by Jast. to be mullet.

(6) Against appointing an agent when he can do it himself.

(7) Lev. XIX, 18.

(8) That it is merely preferable, but there is no prohibition.

(9) V. supra p. 24, n. 7. I.e., for a woman even an unhappy marriage is better than singleness — hence there is no prohibition against being betrothed through a deputy.

(10) Lit., ‘sending’, i.e., that one can send another person to act on his behalf.

(11) V. Deut. XXIV, 1.

(12) Disregarding the mappik, which makes we-shillehah (שלחה) the third pers. masc. with the pronominal suffix, and reading it as third pers. fem.

(13) ‘Send’ is stated twice, in vv. 1 and 3.

(14) Rashi: these deductions are made because Scripture should have written, then he shall divorce. ‘Send’ intimates that the husband or wife can send, i.e., appoint a person to act on their behalf.

(15) But v. p. 35, n. 2.
(16) By Biblical law there is no fixed standard for terumah. The Rabbis, however, ruled that on the average it is one fiftieth of the crops: a generous man gives one fortieth, and a mean person not less than one sixtieth.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 41b

If he decreases by ten or increases it by ten,[1] his separation is valid.[2] How do we know this?[3] And should you answer that it is derived from divorce, [I would rejoin:] as for divorce, that [may be] because it is a secular matter![4] — Scripture saith, [Thus] ye also [shall offer an heave-offering] [where] 'ye' [alone would have sufficed],[5] to include an agent.[6]

But let Scripture write [it] in respect to terumah, and these [marriage and divorce] would come and be derived from it? — Because one can refute [the analogy], since it is possible by [mere] intention.[7]

Again, as to what we learnt: If a company lose their Paschal sacrifice[8] and instruct one [of their number], 'Go out, seek it, and slaughter it on our behalf; and he goes, finds, and slaughters it, while they [also] take [an animal] and slaughter [it]: if his is slaughtered first, he eats of his, and they eat[9] with him.[10] How do we know it?[11] And should you answer that it is derived from these, [I would rejoin:] as for these, [that may be] because they rank as secular in relation to sacred animals![12] — It is learnt from R. Joshua b. Karhah['s dictum]. For R. Joshua b. Karhah said: How do we know that a man's agent is as himself? Because it is said, and the whole assembly of the congregation shall kill it [the Passover sacrifice] at even:[13] does then the whole assembly really slaughter? surely, only one person slaughters [an animal]:[14] hence it follows that a man's agent is as himself.

Now, let the Divine Law write [the principle of agency] in respect to sacrifices, and these others can come and be derived from them? — Because it may be refuted: as for sacrifice, that is because most of their operations are through an agent.[15]

One cannot be derived from another: but let one be derived from two [others]?[16] — Which can be thus derived? Should the Divine Law not state it of sacrifices, that it may be derived from these others? As for these, [it might be argued] that [sc. agency] is because they rank as secular in comparison with sacrifices. Should the Divine Law omit it in the case of divorce, that it may be derived from the others: as for these, that is because intention has force in their case.[17] But let the Divine Law not write it of terumah, and it could be derived from the others![18] — That indeed is so. Then what is the purpose of 'ye', 'ye also'?[19] — It is needed for R. Jannai's dictum, viz., 'Ye also': just as ye are members of the covenant,[20] so must your agents be members of the covenant. For this, what need have I of a verse? It may be derived from R. Hiyya b. Abba's dictum in R. Johanan's name! For R. Hiyya b. Abba said in R. Johanan's name: A [heathen] slave cannot become an agent to receive a divorce from a woman's husband, because he himself is not subject to the law of marriage and divorce![21] — It is necessary. I might think that a slave [is ineligible], since he is not empowered to free [a married woman] at all.[22] But a heathen, since he is qualified to [separate] terumah of his own [crops], as we learnt: If a heathen or Cuthean[23] separates terumah, it is valid: I might think that he can also be appointed an agent [for a Jew]; hence we are informed [otherwise]. Now, according to R. Simeon who exempts [them],[24] for we learnt: A heathen's terumah creates a [forbidden] mixture,[25] and one is liable to an [additional] fifth on its account.[26] But R. Simeon exempts [it][27] — what is the need of ye', ye also'? — It is necessary: I might reason, Since a Master said: 'Ye', but not tenant-farmers;[28] 'ye,' but not partners;[29] 'ye,' but not guardians;[30] ye,' but not one who separates terumah upon what is not his,[31] then I might also say, ye,' but not your agents.[32] Hence we are informed [that it is not so].

Now, that is well according to R. Joshua b. Karhah.[33] But according to R. Nathan, who utilises this verse for a different exegesis, what can be said? For it was taught: R. Nathan said: How do we know that all Israel [may] fulfil their obligations[34]

---

(1) Giving one fortieth or one sixtieth.
(2) Lit., 'his terumah is terumah,' because he can maintain that he so judged the owner.
(3) That one can appoint an agent for this purpose.
(4) Whereas terumah being sacred, its separation may be stricter and require the actual owner.
(5) Lit., 'Scripture saith, ye, also ye.'
(6) It is a principle of exegesis that od (also) is an extension.
(7) A person may decide to separate a part of his grain (e.g., that in the right or left corner) as terumah and then eat the rest. This is obviously a leniency, and it may be argued that that is why one can also appoint an agent.
(8) The passover sacrifice was eaten by a group of people who had joined and arranged beforehand to eat a particular animal: unless one had thus 'counted himself in' before it was killed he could not eat thereof.
(9) Cur. ed.: eat and drink, but Wilna Gaon deletes 'and drink'.
(10) Since he was their agent. — Their own sacrifice is unfit.
(11) The principle of agency in sacrifices.
(12) Even terumah, for sacrifices have a higher degree of sanctity.
(13) Ex. XII, 6.
(14) Though it is eaten by several.
(15) From the receiving of the blood onward, everything in connection with sacrifices was performed by priests acting on behalf of the Israelites who offered them.
(16) By shewing that the factor common to both is also present in the third.
(17) Terumah, v. p. 206, n. 5; sacrifices: If one resolves to declare an animal a sacrifice, it is so, even without an explicit declaration. — Shebu. 26b.
(18) Sc. marriage and sacrifices, since either of the above refutations then apply.
(19) V. supra.
(20) With Abraham, Gen. XVII, 2; i.e., Jews. V. B.M. (Sonc. ed.) p. 415, n. 5.
(21) In the Jewish sense. This shews that it is mere logic that one cannot act as an agent where he cannot be a principal, and the same applies to the others.
(22) Lit.,' he is not a person of freeing at all.' It is impossible for a slave to free a married woman, sc. his wife, by divorce, since he cannot marry.
(23) After the overthrow of the Northern Kingdom of Israel and the deportation of its inhabitants the land was repopulated by various peoples, some of whom came from Cuth and gave their name to the new settlers as a whole. These accepted a form of semi-Judaism. Their status in respect to Jewry fluctuated; at times they were accepted as Jews, at others they were rejected. Finally they were definitely excluded from the Jewish people.
(24) Even if a Gentile does separate terumah, it is not valid and remains hullin.
(25) I.e., if it falls into a quantity of hullin less than a hundred times as much as itself, and cannot be separated, the whole ranks as terumah, and is forbidden to an Israelite.
(26) If an Israelite eats terumah unwittingly, he must make restoration of the principal plus a fifth; Lev. XXII, 14.
(27) Sc. the terumah separated by a Gentile on his crops from the law of terumah, i.e., he does not regard it as terumah at all.
(28) A tenant-farmer who leases land and pays a percentage of the crops as rent cannot separate terumah upon the landlord's share without his authority.
(29) Likewise, one partner in a field cannot separate terumah for the other without the latter's consent.
(30) Of orphans estates.
(31) This gives the reason for the preceding: tenant-farmers, etc., cannot separate terumah for the other's crops, because one may not separate for what is not his.
(32) I.e., under no circumstances can one separate terumah upon crops not belonging to him, even when authorised by their owner.
(33) Supra.
(34) Lit., 'go forth' (from their obligation).

by a single paschal sacrifice?[1] Because it is said: 'and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it at even': does then the whole assembly slaughter: surely, only one slaughters! But from this [it follows] that all Israel [may] fulfil their obligations by a single Paschal sacrifice. Then how does he know that an agent [may be appointed] for sacrifices? — From that itself.[2] Yet perhaps it is different there, because he [the slaughterer] is a partner therein? — But [it is derived] from this: they shall take to them every man a lamb, according to their fathers' houses, a lamb for an household.[3] But perhaps there too [the reason is] that he has a share therein? — If so, what is the need of two verses? [Hence,] if it has no purpose where it is relevant, apply the matter to where it does not belong.[4] But this [the latter verse quoted] is needed for R. Isaac's dictum. For R. Isaac said: A man [sc. an adult] can acquire[5] [on behalf of others], but a minor cannot acquire![6] — That is deduced from, according to every man's eating [ye shall make your count for the lamb].[7] But that is still required for intimating that a paschal sacrifice may be slaughtered [even] for a single person![8] — He agrees with the view that the passover lamb may not be slaughtered for an individual.[9]

Then when R. Giddal said in Rab's name, How do we know that a man's agent is as himself? Because it is written, [and ye shall take] one prince of every tribe [to divide the land for inheritance]:[10] let him derive agency from this [former verse]? — Now, is it reasonable that this [division of the land] was on the principle of agency! Surely minors are not subject thereto?[11] But [it must be interpreted] in accordance with Raba son of R. Huna. For Raba son of R. Huna said in the name of R. Giddal in Rab's name: How do we know that a right can be conferred upon a man in his absence? Because it is written, and one prince of every tribe [etc.].[12] Now, is that logical? Was it [the division, altogether] advantageous [to each]? Surely it also involved disadvantages, for some like mountain land but not the plain, and others prefer the plain but not the mountain land?[13] But it[14] is in accordance with Raba son of R. Huna, who said in the name of R. Giddal in Rab's name: How do we know that when orphans [i.e., minors][15] come to divide their father's estate, Beth din appoints a guardian on their behalf, whether to their advantage or disadvantage? ([You say,] 'To their disadvantage'! Why? — But [say thus:] to their [subsequent] disadvantage, but with the [original] intention that it shall be to their advantage.)[16] — From the verse, [and ye shall take] one prince of every tribe.[17]

R. Nahman said in Samuel's name: When orphans come to divide their father's estate, Beth din appoints a guardian for them,[18] and they select[19] a fair portion for each [orphan]; yet when they grow up, they can protest against [the division of the guardian]. R. Nahman, stating his own opinions ruled: When they grow up they cannot protest, for if so, wherein lies the strength of Beth din's authority?[20] Now, does then R. Nahman accept [this reasoning,] if so, wherein lies the strength of Beth din's authority? But we learnt: If the judges' valuation was at one sixth too little or at one sixth too much,[21] their sale is null. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Their sale is valid, [for] otherwise, wherein lies the strength of Beth din's authority? Whereon R. Huna b. Hinena said in R. Nahman's name: The halachah agrees with the Sages! — There is no difficulty:

---

(1) Though each receives an infinitesimal portion thereof, less than the size of an olive, which is the minimum that is called eating. In his view, the actual eating of the sacrifice was unessential, the main thing being the sprinkling of the blood.

(2) The fact remains that one slaughtered for all.

(3) Ex. XII, 3 thus one was to 'take', i.e., slaughter, on behalf of a whole household.

(4) This is a principle of Talmudic exegesis: if a teaching is unnecessary in its place, apply it elsewhere. Thus here too, both verses teach the principle of agency when the agent himself shares therein. Two verses being unnecessary, apply one to where the agent has no share at all in the matter of his agency.

(5) A Paschal lamb.

(6) [Although the minor himself has to to be counted in for the partaking of the Paschal lamb, he cannot acquire a share on behalf of others (Tosaf.)]

(7) Ibid. 4.
(8) Deducted from ‘manðs’, singular.
(9) V. Pes. 91b.
(10) Num. XXXIV, 18: each prince acted as agent for the whole tribe.
(11) And among those who received a portion in Palestine were minors; this proves that the princes were not acting as agents.
(12) By their division they conferred rights of ownership, though the recipients (i.e., the individuals) were not present.
(13) And one cannot act disadvantageously on another's behalf without his authorisation. Hence the princes were not proceeding on this principle either.
(14) The interpretation of the verse . . . one prince’, etc.
(15) [According to Maim. Yad, Nahaloth, X, 4. there were also some adults among them, for had they all been orphans, there would be no division of the estate, seeing that it would still have to be administered by a guardian. V. Maggid Mishneh a.l. and Tosaf. Ri.]
(16) I.e., this guardian acts in their behalf at law, and his acts are valid even if they subsequently tend to their loss, providing that his intentions in the first place were good.
(17) Who were to divide the land as fairly as possible, their actions being valid even if certain individuals were displeased.
(18) [Wilna Gaon: for the minors; cf. n. 3.]
(19) [Apparently the Beth din, cf. Maim. loc. cit. In the parallel passage Yeb. 67b, however, the reading is ‘he selects’ i.e., the guardian.]
(20) A guardian might just as well be appointed by a private individual, if the former's action can be overthrown.
(21) The judges made a valuation of a debtor's property, sold it and assigned the proceeds to the creditor in the former's absence, and erred in a sixth.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 42b

In the one case, they [the judges] erred; in the other, they[1] did not err. If they did not err, against what can they [the orphans] protest? — They can protest against the sites.[2]

R. Nahman said: When brothers divide, they rank as purchasers from each other:[3] [for an error of] less than a sixth, the transaction is valid; exceeding a sixth, it is null; [exactly] one sixth, it is valid, but the amount of error[4] is returnable.[5] Said Raba: When you say that [for an error of] less than a sixth the transaction is valid, that is only if one did not appoint an agent;[6] but if he appointed an agent, he can plead, ‘I sent you to benefit, not to injure me’.[7] And when you say, exceeding a sixth, the transaction is null, that is only if one did not say: ‘We will divide according to Beth din's valuation’; but if this was stipulated,[8] the transaction is valid. For we learnt: If the judges’ valuation was at one sixth too little or at one sixth too much, their sale is null. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Their sale is valid.[9] And when you say: ‘one-sixth, it is valid, but the amount of error is returnable’, that holds good only of movables, but as for real estate, the law of overreaching does not apply to land. Again, this was said of real estate only if the division was by valuation,[10] but not if the division was made by cord.[11] That is in accordance with Rabbah, who said,[12] Everything which [shews an error] in measure, weight or number, even if less than the standard of overreaching, is returnable.

Now, when we learnt: He who sends forth a conflagration by a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor, is not liable [for the damage caused] by law of man, yet liable by the law of Heaven.[13] But if he sends it by a normal[14] person, the latter is [legally] liable. Yet why so? Let us say that a man's agent is as himself.[15] — There it is different, for there is no agent for wrongdoing, for we reason: [When] the words of the master and the words of the pupil [are in conflict], whose are obeyed?[16]

Then when we learnt:[17] If the agent does not carry out his instructions,[18] the agent is liable for trespass: if he carries out his instructions, the sender[19] is liable for trespass.[20] Thus, at least, if he carries out the sender's instructions, the latter is liable for trespass. Yet why? Let us say: There is no agent for wrongdoing. — A trespass-offering is different, because the meaning of 'sin' is derived from terumah: just as an agent can be appointed for [separating] terumah, so can one be appointed in respect of trespass.[21] Then let us learn [a general law] from it?[22] — [We cannot,] Because trespass and mis — appropriation[23] are two verses with the same teaching,[24] and such cannot illumine [other cases].[25] 'Trespass,' as stated. What is the reference to misappropriation? — For it was taught:[26] 'For every word[27] of trespass': Beth Shammai maintain: This is to intimate liability for [expressed] intention as for actual deed.[28] But Beth Hillel rule: He is not responsible unless he actually misappropriates it, for it is said, ['to see] whether he have not put his hand,' etc. Said Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel, But it is said: 'For every word of trespass'! Beth Hillel retorted to Beth Shammai: But is it not said: 'to see whether he have not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods?' Said Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel: If so, what is the purpose of, 'for every word of trespass?' For I might think, I know it only of himself [the bailee]; how do I know it if he instructs his slave or agent?[29] Therefore it is said: 'For every word of trespass.'[30]

Now, that is well according to Beth Hillel. But according to Beth Shammai who interpret this verse as [shewing] that intention is as deed,

---

(1) [The guardians or the Beth din. v. p. 210, n. 7.]

(2) E.g., he who received a field in the south may demand it in the north, because he possesses another one there from a different source.

(3) [Had they ranked as heirs, the division would have to be exact to a farthing (Tosaf. Ri.)]

(4) Lit., 'overreaching'.

(5) v. B.M. 49b.

(6) To act at the division on his behalf, but acted himself. The reading in cur. edd. is 'if he did not appoint him an agent, but if he appointed him an agent' etc. This might mean that one brother appointed the other to act on his behalf. Asheri, however, omits the pronominal suffix.

(7) Thus he can repudiate him.

(8) Lit., 'but if he said, we will" etc.'

(9) Raba agrees with the latter, not as R. Nahman supra.

(10) All the land was valued, and then each took land to the value of his share. Thus one might have received a field twice as large as his brother's, the latter's being of choicer quality.

(11) I.e., by area, all the fields being of equal quality, and an error was made in measurement.

(12) In B.M. 56b and B.B. 90a the reading is Raba.

(13) I.e., morally, though not legally.

(14) Lit., 'sane'.

(15) So that the sender is liable.

(16) Obviously the master's. Hence if A instructs B to do wrong, B acts of his own accord, for were he merely carrying out instructions, he would obey God's behests in preference.

(17) Cur. edd: When it was taught. But BAH points out that the quotation that follows is a Mishnah in Me'il. 20a.

(18) Lit., 'did not do his sending'.

(19) Lit., 'the house owner'.

(20) A has money of hekdesh (q.v. Glos.) in his possession, and thinking it is secular, instructs B to make a purchase therewith. If B buys what he was told, A is liable; if he buys something else, he himself is liable, since he was not acting on A's behalf. — For converting sacred property to secular use-technically called withdrawing it from the ownership of hekdesh-one is liable to a trespass-offering.

(21) Terumah, Lev. XXII, 9: They shall therefore keep my charge, lest they bear sin for it: trespass, v, 15: If any one commit a trespass, and sin unwittingly in the holy things of the Lord. The employment of 'sin' in both cases intimates that the principle of agency operates for the latter as for the former.

(22) Viz., that one can appoint an agent for wrongdoing, and be legally responsible, just as in the case of trespass.

(23) Lit., 'the putting forth of the hand.' The language is based on Ex. XXII, 7, q.v.

(24) In both the principle of agency operates, though they are transgressions.

(25) V. supra p. 169, n. 7.
(26) If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall come near unto God, to see whether he have not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods. For every word of trespass etc. Ibid. 7f.
(27) Lit., translation; E.V.: 'matter'.
(28) The passage refers to a gratuitous bailee, who is not liable for theft unless he has previously misappropriated the deposit to his own use ('put his hand,' etc.,), in which case he becomes responsible for every mishap. Beth Shammai maintains that 'for every word' teaches that even if he merely says that he will put it to his own use he is liable.
(29) That he becomes liable on account of their misappropriation.
(30) Thus here too the principle of agency operates, though misappropriation is obviously wrong.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 43a

let us learn from it?[1] — Because trespass and killing and selling are two verses with the same teaching, and such do not illumine others. 'Trespass,' as said. What is the reference to 'killing and selling'? — Scripture saith, [If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep,] and kill it, or sell it; [he shall pay five oxen for an ox etc.,]:[2] just as selling is done through another,[3] so may the killing be [done] by another.[4] The School of R. Ishmael taught: 'or' extends the law to an agent.[5]

[Again,] that is well on the view that two verses with the same purpose cannot teach [concerning others]; but on the view that they can, what may be said? — The Divine Law revealed [the matter] in reference to [sacrifices] slaughtered without [the tabernacle]: blood shall be imputed unto that man: he hath shed blood:[6] 'that [man', who slaughtered without], but not his agent.

Now, we have found this of [sacrifices] slaughtered without: how do we know it of the whole Torah?[7] — It is derived from [sacrifices] slaughtered without. Instead of learning from [sacrifices] slaughtered without, let us learn from these others?[8] — The Divine Law reiterated, and that man shall be cut off: since it is irrelevant for its own subject,[9] apply its teaching to the rest of the Torah.[10]

But he who maintains that two verses with the same purpose do not teach,[11] how does he interpret the [limiting demonstrative] 'that' written twice?[12] — One is to exclude the case of two men who hold the knife and slaughter [the sacrifice without].[13] The other: 'that [man],' but not one who is compelled; 'that [man],' but not one in ignorance; 'that [man],' but not one led into error.[14] And the other?[15] — That follows from ha-hu, where hu would suffice.[16] And the other?[17] — He does not admit the exegesis of ha-hu [as opposed to] hu.[18]

Now, when it was taught: If he says to his agent, 'Go forth and slay a soul,' the latter is liable, and his sender is exempt. Shammai the Elder said on the authority of Haggai the prophet:[19] His sender is liable, for it is said, thou hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon.[20] What is Shammai the Elder's reason? — He holds that two verses with the same purpose throw light [on others], and he rejects the exegesis of ha-hu [as opposed to] hu.[21] Alternatively, he accepts that exegesis;[22] and what is meant by liable? He is liable by the laws of Heaven. Hence it follows that the first Tanna holds him exempt even by the law of Heaven![23] — But they differ in respect to a greater or a lesser penalty.[24] Another alternative: there it is different, because the Divine Law revealed it [thus:] 'and thou hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon'.[25] And the other?[26] — It counts to you as 'the sword of the children of Ammon: you cannot be punished for the sword of the children of Ammon, so will you not be punished for [the death of] Uriah the Hittite. What is the reason? He was a rebel against sovereignty, for he said to him [David], and my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open field,' [shall I then go into mine house, to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife?][27] Raba said: Should you say that Shammai holds that two verses with the same purpose illumine [others], and that he does not admit the exegesis of hu, ha-hu: [yet] he agrees that if one says to his agent, 'Go forth and have incestuous Intercourse, [or] 'eat heleb',[28] the latter is liable and his sender exempt, because we never find in the whole Torah that while one derives pleasure [from wrongdoing] another is liable.

It has been stated: Rab said: An agent can be a witness;[29] the school of R. Shila maintained: An agent cannot become a witness. What is the reason of the school of R. Shila? Shall we say, because he does not [explicitly] instruct him, 'Be a witness for me'? If so, if he betroths a woman in the presence of two, and does not instruct them, 'You are my witnesses', is the betrothal really invalid? — But [the reasons are these:] Rab said: An agent can be a witness,for he [the principal] [thereby] strengthens the matter.[30] Whereas the school of R. Shila maintained: An agent cannot become a witness; since a Master said: 'A man's agent is as himself,' he ranks as his own person.[31]

An objection is raised: If one says to three, 'Go forth and betroth the woman on my behalf,' one is an agent and the other two are witnesses: that is the view of Beth Shammai. But Beth Hillel rule: They are all his agents, and an agent cannot be a witness. Thus, their disagreement is only in respect of three,[32] but as for two, all agree that they cannot [be witnesses]![33] — He [Rab] holds with the following Tanna. For it was taught: R. Nathan said: Beth Shammai maintains: An agent and one witness [can attest an action]; but Beth Hillel rule: An agent and two witnesses [are required]. Does then Rab rule according to Beth Shammai?[34] — Reverse it.[35] R. Aha son of Raba taught it reversed: Rab said: An agent cannot be a witness; the school of R. Shila ruled: An agent can be a witness. And the law is that an agent can be a witness.

Raba said in R. Nahman's name: If one says to two, 'Go forth and betroth a woman for me,' they are both his agents and his witnesses.[36] It is likewise so in respect to divorce;[37]

---

(1) Sc. trespass, as above.

(2) Ex. XXI, 37 (E.V. XXII, 1).

(3) There must be another person, viz. the buyer.

(4) I.e., even if the thief does not personally kill it, but instructs another, he is liable.

(5) As in preceding note. — Hence on both exegeses, we have two verses with the same purpose.

(6) Lev. XVII, 4.

(7) That one cannot be an agent to violate a law of the Torah.

(8) Sc. trespass and killing and selling, that agency does operate.

(9) I.e., the emphasis on that man as excluding an agent is unnecessary, as it is intimated in the first half of the verse.

(10) V. p. 209, n. 3.

(11) So that non-agency for wrongdoing follows from the fact that the principle does operate in the case of trespass and misappropriation, as above.

(12) For these are now unnecessary.

(13) Implied by the sing., 'that man'.

(14) 'That man' denotes that he is fully aware of the forbidden nature of his action and does it of his own free will.

(15) Who holds that the limitation excludes an agent; how does he know these?

(16) Hu is either a pronoun = he, or demonstrative, = that. Ha-hu is hu written with the addition of the def. art., which form is used in this verse. In his opinion, hu alone would suffice, and the addition of ha indicates further limitation.

(17) How does he utilise the additional def. art?

(18) No particular emphasis is implied therein.

(19) An indication that the view expressed is very ancient.

(20) II Sam. XII, 9: the reference is to David, who encompassed the death of Uriah the Hittite through the Ammonites, for which the prophet Nathan held him personally responsible. Weiss, Dor. I, p. 150 deduces from the story in Josephus. Ant. XIV, 9, concerning Herod's trial, when the Sanhedrin would have had him executed because he ordered the execution of certain freebooters, though he certainly did not carry them out in person, that Shammai's view was thus based on ancient practice. It is doubtful, however, whether this proves anything. Such an execution, had it taken place, would have been for State reasons, which override the letter of the law. In the same way those who counselled Alexander Jannai to massacre eight hundred of his former opponents were subsequently executed too. [V. Zeitlin. JQR (N.S.) VIII, p. 150, for an ingenious suggestion that this statement is to be attributed to Shemaiah who figured in Herod's trial instead of Shammai.]

(21) Hence the principle of agency operates even for wrongdoing.

(22) So that there is no agency for wrongdoing.

(23) Surely not.

(24) The first Tanna holds the sender liable to a lesser penalty only, as an indirect cause, whereas Shammai regards him as the actual murderer and liable to the severest penalty.

(25) But elsewhere there is no agency for transgression.

(26) The first Tanna: how does he explain the implication of the verse?

(27) Ibid. XI, 11; thus he disobeyed David's orders, v. 8.

(28) V. Glos.

(29) If A instructs B to betroth a woman on his behalf, for which two witnesses are required, or to repay a debt to C on his behalf, B can carry out his instructions and simultaneously be a witness to the act.

(30) By appointing the agent a witness too.

(31) And the principal obviously cannot attest his own act.

(32) Who can be divided in the manner suggested by Beth Shammai.

(33) Which contradicts Rab.

(34) Surely not, it being a principle that the halachah always agrees with Beth Hillel.

(35) Applying Beth Shammai's view to Beth Hillel.

(36) In accordance with the law just stated.

(37) If a man instructs two persons to divorce his wife on his behalf, they act both as agents and as witnesses to the divorce.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 43b

and also in monetary cases.[1] Now, these are all necessary. For if we were informed [thus] of kiddushin, [I would say] that is because they come to render her forbidden;[2] but as for divorce, we might fear that he [one of these] desired her for himself.[3] Again, if we were informed [thus] of divorce, that may be because a woman is not eligible to two men; but as for a monetary matter, I might argue that these [witnesses] are sharing therein. Thus they are [all] necessary.

What is his[4] opinion? If he holds that he who lends [money] to his neighbour in the presence of witnesses must repay him [likewise] before witnesses, then these[5] are interested witnesses, for should they say: 'We did not repay him,' he [the debtor] can say to them, 'Then pay me!'[6] — But after all, he holds that he who lends money to his neighbour before witnesses need not repay him before witnesses, and since they can plead. 'We returned it to the debtor,' they can also testify, 'We repaid the creditor.' Now, however, that the Rabbis have instituted an oath of equity,[7] these witnesses [sc. the agents] must swear that they repaid him [the creditor], the creditor swears that he did not receive it [the repayment], and the debtor must repay the creditor.[8]

A MAN MAY GIVE HIS DAUGHTER [etc.]. We learnt elsewhere: A na'arah, who is betrothed[9] she or her father can accept her divorce. Said R. Judah: Two hands cannot have a privilege simultaneously, but [only] her father can accept her divorce. And she who cannot take care of her Get[10] cannot be divorced.[11] Resh Lakish said: Just as they differ in respect to divorce, so they differ in respect to kiddushin. R. Johanan maintained: They differ in respect to divorce [only], but as for kiddushin, all agree that her father [alone can accept kiddushin on her behalf] but not she herself. R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: What is R. Johanan's reason according to the Rabbis? As for divorce, since she reverts thereby to[12] parental control,[13] both she herself and her father [can accept it]. But kiddushin, which frees her from paternal authority, only her father [can accept it], but not she herself. But what of a declaration,[14] whereby she is freed from paternal control,[15] yet we learnt:

---

(1) Two men appointed agents to repay a debt can testify thereto.

(2) Through their testimony she is forbidden to all men, including themselves; what purpose can they have in lying?

(3) Lit., ‘Cast his eye upon her’ — and hence may be giving false testimony.
(4) R. Nahman's.
(5) Sc. the agents sent to repay.
(6) For he may have entrusted them the money before witnesses, which is the same as lending it to them. Hence they are personally concerned, and as such, inadmissible as witnesses. Cur. ed. proceed: But after all, he holds, etc. BAH gives the following version: Whilst if he holds that he who lends money to his neighbour before witnesses need not repay him before witnesses, what is the purpose of these witnesses? — But after all, he holds that when one lends money to his neighbour before witnesses he need not repay him before witnesses. Now, if he pleads, ‘I myself repaid you,’ that indeed is so (and further witnesses are not required). The circumstances here are that he pleads, ‘I repaid you by an agent,’ and for that very reason he requires witnesses. Whilst the witnesses themselves (who in this case are alleged to have been entrusted with the money for repayment), since they can plead, etc., (continuing as in our text).
(7) Lit., ‘oath of inducement’, v. B.M. (Sonc. ed.) p. 20 n. 4. By Biblical law, one must take an oath in respect of a rejected claim only if he partially admits it, but not if he entirely denies it. Hence, when the debtor pleads that he entrusted the money to two in the absence of witnesses, and they maintain that they returned it, thus altogether rejecting his claim, they are not liable to an oath. But the Rabbis imposed an oath even then: this is called an oath of equity.
(8) Notwithstanding the witnesses’ oath. For the creditor can plead: ‘I lent the money to the debtor, and thereby expressed my willingness to abide by his oath that he repaid me. But I cannot be forced to accept the oath of other persons.’ The witnesses, on the other hand, cannot simply testify that they repaid the creditor, without swearing, because if they maintained that they had returned the money to the debtor, they would have to swear an oath of equity, and so become interested witnesses.
(9) V. Glos.
(10) V. Glos.
(11) I.e., an idiot cannot be divorced, even by her father's acceptance of the deed. V. Git. (Sonc. ed.) p. 304. n. 7.
(12) Lit., ‘brings herself into.’
(13) Being only a na'arah and betrothed, not married.
(14) מאמר ma'amar. This is the technical term for the yabam's formal betrothal of his yebamah. which is accompanied by the gift of money, which is valid by Rabbinical law only, for by Biblical law cohabitation alone is recognised (supra 2a).
(15) If a betrothed maiden is widowed and the yabam makes a declaration, she is henceforth free from paternal control.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 44a

No declaration may be made to a minor [widowed] from erusin[1] except with her father's consent;[2] whereas in the case of a na'arah, either her own or her father's consent [is required]![3] But if stated, it was thus stated: R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: What is R. Johanan's reason according to the Rabbis? Kiddushin, which requires her consent, [only] her father [can accept it] but not she;[4] divorce, which is even against her will, either she or her father [can accept it].[5] But a declaration [too] requires her consent, yet it is taught, either she or her father [can accept it]? — There the reference is to a declaration which is [made] against her will, and it is in agreement with Rabbi. For it was taught: If one makes a declaration to his yebamah without her consent,[6] Rabbi ruled: He acquires her;[7] but the Sages say: He does not.

What is Rabbi's reason? — He deduces it from intercourse with a yebamah: just as intercourse with a yebamah [acquires her even] against her will, so here too [sc. declaration, it is valid even] against her will. But the Rabbis hold: We learn from [ordinary] kiddushin: just as kiddushin must be with her[8] consent, so here too her consent is required. Wherein do they differ? — Rabbi maintains: The provisions of a yebamah are to be learnt from a yebamah. But the Rabbis hold: Kiddushin should be learned from kiddushin.[9]

Reason too supports R. Johanan's answer,[10] since the second clause states: Which is not so in the case of kiddushin.[11] Shall we then say that this refutes Resh Lakish?[12] — Resh Lakish can answer you: That agrees with R. Judah, who ruled: Two hands cannot have a privilege simultaneously.[13] If

R. Judah, [why state,] 'which is not so in the case of kiddushin'; let him teach, which is not so in the case of divorce?[14] — That indeed is so: [but] as he teaches [the law of] declaration, which is similar to kiddushin, he also states: 'which is not so in the case of kiddushin'. Now, on R. Judah's view, why does declaration differ?[15] — Because she already stands tied [to the yabam].[16] Now that you have arrived at this [distinction], R. Johanan['s view] also need not cause you any difficulty at the very outset:[17] a declaration is different, because she already stands tied.

We learnt: A MAN MAY GIVE HIS DAUGHTER IN BETROTHAL WHEN A NA'ARAH, HIMSELF OR THROUGH HIS AGENT: only HIMSELF OR THROUGH HIS AGENT, but not through herself or her agent:[18] this refutes Resh Lakish? — Resh Lakish can answer you: This too is in accordance with R. Judah. Can you then interpret this as R. Judah['s ruling]? But the second clause[19] teaches: If one says to a woman, 'Be thou betrothed unto me with this date, be thou betrothed unto me with this one etc.'[20] Now we said thereon: Which Tanna [rules thus concerning] 'Be thou betrothed, be thou betrothed?'[21] And Rabbah replied: It is R. Simeon, who maintained, 'Unless he declared to each separately,' [I take] an oath.'[22] And should you answer: It is all the opinion of R. Judah, who, however, agrees with R. Simeon in the matter of detailed enumeration,[23] yet does he hold thus? Surely it was taught: This is the rule: For a comprehensive statement only one [sacrifice] is incurred; for a detailed enumeration each one separately involves liability:[24] this is R. Meir's opinion. R. Judah said: [If he declares, 'I take] an oath [that I am] not indebted to you, not to you, not to you,' he is liable in respect of each separately. R. Eleazar said: [If he declares, 'I am] not [indebted] to you, not to you, not to you, and not to you: [for this I take] an oath': he is liable in respect of each.[25] R. Simeon said: He is never liable [for each separately] unless he declares [I take] an oath to each separately![26] — But the whole is in accordance with R. Simeon, who in the matter of agency agrees with R. Judah.[27]

R. Assi did not go to the Beth Hamidrash.[28] Meeting R. Zera, he asked him, 'What has been taught to-day in the schoolhouse?' 'I too did not go,' he replied: 'but R. Abin was present, and he told me that the entire band [of disciples] agreed with R. Johanan;[29] and though Resh Lakish cried like a crane,[30] and when she is departed . . she may be [another man's wife],[31] none heeded him.' 'Is R. Abin reliable?' he asked him, 'Yes,' he replied: 'as from the sea into the frying pan!'[32] R. Nahman b. Isaac said: I [read in this story] neither R. Abin b. R. Hiyya nor R. Abin b. Kahana, but simply R. Abin. What does it matter? — In proving a self-contradiction.[33]

Raba asked R. Nahman:

---

(1) V. Glos.

(2) Otherwise it has no validity.

(3) This means that even where her action serves to free her from her father's control, her action has validity.

(4) In general, the consent of the person who cedes the woman is required. In the case of an adult that person is the woman herself; in the case of a na'arah or a minor it is her father.

(5) Seeing that their consent is not necessary, it does not matter who actually accepts the deed.

(6) Forcing the money of betrothal upon her and declaring, 'Behold, thou art betrothed unto me.'

(7) Though she belongs to him in any case and cannot be free without halizah, she now requires a divorce too.

(8) The woman's.

(9) And a declaration takes the form of ordinary kiddushin.

(10) That the reference is to a declaration which was made against her will.

(11) Viz., only her father can receive her kiddushin.

(12) Since a distinction is drawn between a declaration and kiddushin, because the former does not require her consent whereas the latter does, the same applies to kiddushin and divorce.

(13) Hence in the case of kiddushin only her father may receive it.

(14) Which would be more remarkable: even in divorce, which does not require the wife's consent, R. Judah rules that only her father can accept it.

(15) That he agrees that she herself can receive it.
(16) Hence the further step of a declaration is an easier one, and can be made either to her father or to herself.
(17) Sc. the difficulty raised above from the teaching relating to the yabam's declaration.
(18) Which proves that a na'arah who has a father cannot betroth herself, in refutation of Resh Lakish.
(19) Infra 46a.
(20) The Mishnah continues: if a single one of them is worth a perutah, she is betrothed, but not otherwise. — For since he stated: 'Be thou betrothed' before each date separately, it is not the equivalent of saying: 'Be thou betrothed unto me with all these dates.'
(21) That because he repeats it, each declaration is separately regarded.
(22) Shebu. 36b. If five men demand the return of their deposits from a certain person, who falsely denies liability, and takes an oath, 'I swear that I did not receive a deposit from you, not from you, not from you, etc., he incurs a separate sacrifice on account of each (v. Lev. V, 21.26). R. Simeon maintained: He incurs only one sacrifice for all, unless he declares to each one separately, 'An oath that I did not receive a deposit from you,' 'An oath that I did not receive a deposit from you,' etc., — Hence the Mishnah on 46a, which is a sequel to 41a, agrees with R. Simeon, not R. Judah.
(23) Viz., that each statement is regarded as separate only if it is separately enumerated, as above.
(24) The meaning of these terms is discussed in Shebu. 38a.
(25) By adding 'and' before the last (which is absent in R. Judah's premise) and employing the word 'oath' after the enumeration, he makes his declaration equivalent to a number of separate statements.
(26) Thus R. Judah definitely disagrees with R. Simeon.
(27) Viz., only her father can accept kiddushin, but not she herself. — 'Agency' here does not refer to the question whether she can appoint an agent, as it is generally admitted that a na'arah certainly cannot (infra b), but whether she herself can rank as her father's agent (since Scripture vested the power in him — supra 3b.) — Maharsha.
(28) V. Glos.
(29) Supra 43b.
(30) I.e., vehemently protested.
(31) Deut. XXIV, 2: from this it is deduced that marriage and divorce are on a par (supra 5a), and thus it supports Resh Lakish.
(32) כמין ימא לטיגני He had as little time to forget as a fish that is caught in the sea and put straight into the pan. [Others explain the phrase as names of two places next to each other. Horowitz Palestine, p. 323 n. 9. takes it as a corruption of comminatio litigo, R. Zera cautioning R. Assi to occasion no strife by impugning the authority of R. Abin.]
(33) Should a statement by either of these contradict this assertion of R. Abin, it does not matter, as a different person may be meant.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 44b

Can a na'arah appoint an agent to receive a divorce from her husband?[1] Does she rank as her father's hand, or as his court-yard?[2] Does she rank as her father's hand: just as her father can appoint an agent, so can she too appoint an agent. Or perhaps, she is as her father's court-yard, and [hence] she is not divorced until the Get actually reaches her hand. Now, is Raba doubtful about this? But Raba said: If he [the husband] writes a Get and places it in her slave's hand,[3] and he is asleep while she watches over him, it is a [valid] divorce; but if he is awake, it is not a [valid] divorce.[4] Now, why is it not a [valid] divorce if he is awake? [Surely] because he is as a court-yard guarded without her instructions. But if you think that she [a na'arah] is as her father's court-yard, then she should not be divorced even when the Get reaches her hand, since she is as her father's courtyard that is guarded without his instructions! Hence it must be obvious to him [Raba] that here she is as her father's hand, but this is his problem: is she as strong as her father's hand, so that she can appoint an agent, or not? — She cannot appoint an agent, he answered him.

He raised an objection: If a minor [ketannah] says: 'Accept my divorce on my behalf,' it is not a valid divorce until it reaches her hand.[5] Hence in the case of a na'arah it is a [valid] divorce![6] — The reference here is to one who has no father.[7] But since the second clause teaches: If her father says to him [the agent], 'Go and accept the Get for my daughter', should her husband wish to retract,[8] he cannot:[9] this proves that the first clause refers to one who has a father? — The text is defective, and should read thus: If a minor says: 'Accept my Get for me,' it is not a [valid] divorce until it reaches her hand; but in the case of a na'arah it is a [valid] divorce. When is that said? If she has no father. But if she has a father and he says: 'Go and accept the Get for my daughter', and [then] the husband wishes to retract, he cannot.

It has been stated: If a minor [ketannah] is betrothed without her father's knowledge,[10] Samuel said: She requires both Get and mi'un.[11] Said Karna: This is inherently open to objection:[12] if Get, why mi'un, and if mi'un, why Get?[13] Said they [the scholars] to him: But there is Mar 'Ukba and his Beth din at Kafri.[14] Then they reversed it[15] and sent it to Rab. Said he to them, 'By God! she requires both Get and mi'un, yet Heaven forfend that[16] the seed of Abba b. Abba[17] should say thus.'[18] And what is the reason? — Said R. Aba son of R. Ika: She needs a divorce, in case her father consented to the kiddushin,[19] while she needs mi'un, in case her father did not consent to the kiddushin, and it is said that the kiddushin with her sister [by the same man] is invalid.[20]

R. Nahman said: Providing that they negotiated [with the father].[21] 'Ulla said: She does not even require mi'un.[22] [What!] even though there were negotiations?[23] — He who learnt this did not learn the other.[24] Others say: 'Ulla said: If a minor [ketannah] is betrothed without her father's knowledge, she does not even require mi'un.[25]

R. Kahana objected: And if [any among] all these[26] died, protested,[27] were divorced,[28] or found to be constitutionally barren,[29] their fellow-wives are permitted [to the yabam]. Now, who betrothed her?[30] Shall we say, her father betrothed her? is then mi'un sufficient? She requires a proper Get![31] Hence it must surely mean that she betrothed herself, yet it is taught that she requires mi'un![32] — He raised the objection and he [himself] answered it: [We] suppose she had been treated as an orphan during her father's lifetime.[33]

R. Hamnuna objected: He [her father] may not sell her to relations. On the authority of R. Eleazar it was said: He may sell her to relations.

---

(1) That she shall be divorced immediately the Get reaches his hand.

(2) The question is posited on the view of the Rabbis (supra 43b) that in the case of a betrothed na'arah either her father or she herself can receive the divorce. It further postulates that the power is actually vested in him, her own being in virtue of his, and the problem is whether she is regarded as his hand or as his domain. For if the Get is placed in his domain she is divorced, and so it may be that the Rabbis reason that she herself is no worse (being under her father's authority), and on that score only can she accept her divorce.

(3) The reference is to an adult wife.

(4) V. Git. 77a-b: the divorce may be placed in the wife's domain, e.g., her court-yard. But it must be guarded through her own will, not at the instance of another person. Now, a Gentile slave is as her domain: if he is asleep and she watches over him, he is guarded through her. But if he is awake he guards himself, and so falls within the latter category.

(5) Because a minor cannot appoint an agent.

(6) As soon as her deputy receives it.

(7) Then a na'arah can certainly appoint an agent, since she is not under paternal authority. But Raba's question refers to a na'arah who has a father.

(8) After the deputy receives it.

(9) Because she is already divorced by the agent's acceptance.

(10) All agree that such betrothal is invalid.

(11) V. Glos.

(12) Lit., 'there is something within itself.

(13) Get is necessary where the marriage is valid by Biblical law, or where there is a Biblical tie; whereas mi'un dissolves a marriage that has Rabbinical force only.

(14) Let us ask him. [If Nehardea, the home of Samuel, is too distant to send for information, let us ask Mar 'Ukba in Kafri which is nearer to us. The reference is to ‘Ukba I. v. Funk. op. cit. I Note iv.] Kafri is a town in S. Babylon, Obermeyer, op. cit., p. 316.

(15) Ascribing Samuel's view to Karna and vice versa — possibly to see whether Karna's opinion expressed in Samuel's name would carry more weight.
(16) Lit., ‘have compassion upon.’
(17) Samuel's father.
(18) As reported to him.
(19) Then her betrothal is valid by Biblical law.
(20) If she is given a divorce, it will be assumed that her father consented to the betrothal, which had Biblical force. Consequently, should the same man then betroth her sister, it is quite invalid, since she is his divorced wife's sister (v. Lev. XVIII, 18, which is interpreted as applying to such a case). But her father may not have consented, and so neither the betrothal nor the divorce are Biblical, wherefore her sister's betrothal is valid and requires a divorce for its dissolution. (He could not keep the sister, for fear that the first marriage was legal.) Hence she needs mi'un, to draw attention to this possibility.
(21) And he consented (Tosaf. of Ri the Elder). Hence, when he subsequently betroths her without her father's knowledge, her father may thereafter consent, whereby the kiddushin becomes retrospectively valid, and so she needs a divorce. But otherwise she needs no divorce.
(22) Because a minor's action in her father's lifetime has not even Biblical force.
(23) Surely R. Nahman's reasoning is plausible.
(24) He who learnt that ‘Ulla differed from Samuel did not learn R. Nahman's proviso, and so assumed that Samuel gave his ruling even if there were no previous negotiations.
(25) It is one and the same, whether or not there were previous negotiations.
(26) The consanguineous relations enumerated in Yeb. 25, q.v. If A has a number of wives, one of whom, C, is interdicted to B, his brother, on the score of consanguinity, e.g., she is B's daughter, and A dies childless, all his other wives are exempt from yibum or halizah (q.v. Glos.), providing that C is alive and married to him at the time of his death.
(27) I.e., declared mi'un.
(28) Before his death.
(29) Even after his death; the marriage of such is invalid.
(30) This wife who protested.
(31) Since her father's betrothal is Biblically valid.
(32) Though her father was and is still alive (v. p. 224, n. 11.). This contradicts the last ruling reported in the name of ‘Ulla. — Mi'un only applies to the marriage of a minor.
(33) If a father marries (not merely betroths) his daughter as a minor and she is widowed or divorced as a minor, he has no more authority over her, and she is technically regarded as an orphan in her father's lifetime. If she then betroths herself while still a minor, her marriage is Rabbinically valid, and she can dissolve it on attaining her majority by mi'un.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 45a

And both agree that he may sell her, as a widow, to a High priest, and as divorced or a haluzah, to an ordinary priest. Now, this widow, — what are the circumstances? Shall we say that her father betrothed her? Can he [subsequently] sell her? But a man cannot sell his daughter to servitude after marriage![1] Hence it must surely mean that she betrothed herself, and yet he calls her a widow?[2] — R. Amram replied in R. Isaac's name: The reference here is to kiddushin of designation, and it is in accordance with R. Jose son of R. Judah, who maintained: The original money was not given for the purpose of kiddushin.[3]

It was stated: If he [who betrothed her without her father's knowledge] dies, and she falls before his brother for yibum — R. Huna said in Rab's name: She must perform mi'un on account of his declaration, but requires no mi'un on account of his levirate tie.[4] How so? If he [the yabam] makes her a declaration, she requires Get, halizah, and mi'un. She needs a Get, lest her father consented to the kiddushin of the second [the yabam];[5] she needs halizah in case her father consented to the first [brother's] kiddushin;[6] she needs mi'un, lest her father did not consent to the kiddushin of either the first or the second, and so it be said: Kiddushin with her sister has no validity.[7] But if he does not make a declaration to her, she merely requires halizah. For what will you say: let her also require mi'un, lest it be said that kiddushin with her sister is not valid[8] — but all know that [marriage with] the sister of a haluzah is [forbidden] by Rabbinical law [only],[9] for Resh Lakish said: Here Rabbi taught: The sister of a divorced woman is [forbidden] by Biblical law, whereas the sister of a haluzah, by Rabbinical law.[10]

Two men were drinking wine under willows[11] in Babylonia. [when] one of them took a goblet of wine, gave it to his fellow and said: 'Let thy daughter be betrothed to my son.' Said Rabina: Even on the view that we fear that the father may [subsequently] have consented,[12]

---

(1) Supra 18a.

(2) Shewing that the marriage is valid.

(3) V. supra 15b for notes on the whole passage.

(4) If the yabam makes a betrothal declaration to her, which, as already stated (supra p. 218, n. 8), is the Rabbinical equivalent of kiddushin in the case of a yabam, she needs mi'un in addition to the Get she requires. R. Huna proceeds to explain himself.

(5) The yabam's declaration was in the form of an ordinary betrothal. Hence, if the father did not consent to the first brother's kiddushin but did consent to the second's, she is betrothed to him, and needs a Get to dissolve the union.

(6) So that she is the second brother's yebamah. and requires halizah to gain her freedom.

(7) As on p. 224, n. 5. — Rashi observes that even if her father consented to the kiddushin of the first but not of the second, she needs mi'un, for she is only a haluzah in respect to the second, and his kiddushin with her sister is valid, whereas on account of the divorce it will be said that her sister's kiddushin is not valid. Hence the Talmud states: 'lest her father did not consent to the kiddushin of the first' unnecessarily — probably in order to achieve symmetry of style (but v. Tosaf.).

(8) On account of the halizah, which may be assumed to be certainly required by Biblical law.

(9) Hence if he does betroth her sister all know that it is Biblically binding, and a divorce is required.

(10) V. Yeb. 41a.

(11) Others: under an awning of mats.

(12) Supra.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 45b

we [certainly] do not say: 'Perhaps the son consented.'[1] But perhaps, urged the Rabbis to Rabina, he [the son] had appointed him [the father] his agent? — A man is not so insolent as to appoint his father an agent. But perhaps he [the son] had shewn a desire for her in his presence?[2] Said Rabbah b. Simi to them: The Master [Rabina] has [once] distinctly stated that he does not accept this view of Rab and Samuel.[3]

A certain man betrothed [a minor] with a bunch of vegetables in a market place.[4] Said Rabina. Even on the view that we fear lest her father consented, that is only [when it is done] in an honourable manner, but not contemptuously. R. Aba of Difti asked Rabina: What displayed contempt? the vegetables, or [the fact that it was done in] a market-place?[5] The practical difference arises if he betroths her with money in the market place, or with a bunch of vegetables at home. What then? — Both, he replied, are contemptuous.[6]

A certain man insisted, '[Our daughter must be married] to my relation;' whereas she [his wife] maintained, 'To my relation.' She nagged him until he told her that she could be [married] to her relation. Whilst they were eating and drinking,[7] his relation went up to a loft and betrothed her. Said Abaye: It is written: The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies.[8] Raba said: It is a presumption that one does not trouble to prepare a banquet and then destroy it.[9] Wherein do they differ? — They differ in the case where he did not trouble.[10] If she [a minor] became betrothed with her father's consent, and her father departed overseas, and she arose and married[11] Raba said: She may eat terumah[12] until her father comes and protests [against the nissu'in].[13] R. Assi said: She may not eat, lest her father return and protest, and so a zarah[14] will retrospectively be found to have eaten terumah. Such a case occurred, and Rab paid regard to[15] R. Assi's opinion. R. Samuel b. Isaac said: Yet Rab admits that if she dies he [her husband] is her heir,[16] [because] the ownership of money is vested in its possessor.[17]

If she became betrothed with [her father's] knowledge and married without his knowledge, and her father is present,[18] — R. Huna said: She may not eat [terumah]; R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: She may eat. 'R. Huna said: she may not eat': even on Rab's view that she may eat [in the first case], that is only there, since the father is absent;[19] but here, that the father is present, the reason he is silent is that he is angry.[20] 'R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: She may eat': even according to R. Assi, who ruled that she may not eat: it is only there, for her father might return and protest; but here, since he is silent, [it shows that] he does consent.

If she became betrothed and married without her father's knowledge, and her father is present, — R. Huna said: She may eat [terumah]: R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: She may not eat. Said 'Ulla: This [ruling] of R. Huna is 'as vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes':[21] if there, that her kiddushin was Biblically valid,[22] you say that she may not eat, how much more so here!

---

(1) After his father betrothed him without his knowledge. — A father is very anxious to see his daughter married, but a man takes more care. One has no rights over his son's marriage, unless he is authorised.

(2) And then his father need not be formally appointed an agent, on the principle: one can confer a benefit on another without the latter's knowledge.

(3) That we fear her father's subsequent consent; hence we certainly do not fear the son's subsequent consent or his previous intimation. This is the true reason of Rabina's ruling. His statement, 'even on the view, etc.,' was merely to give it wider acceptance.

(4) Without her father's knowledge.

(5) To betroth with vegetables is contemptuous treatment: likewise it is undignified to betroth in a market place (bizayon, used in the text, connotes both contemptuous and undignified). Now, to what would the father really take exception?

(6) And the father's subsequent consent need not be feared.

(7) At the betrothal festivities, before the actual betrothal.

(8) Zeph. III, 13; hence the father, having given his word, certainly did not consent now. — She was a minor.

(9) It had been prepared for the wife's relation and would now be lost! Hence the father certainly did not consent. (Or, he had certainly not instructed his daughter secretly beforehand to accept the kiddushin.)

(10) According to Abaye there is no fear of the father's consent; according to Raba, there is.

(11) Her betrothed, i.e., nissu'in were performed (q.v. Glos.).

(12) If her husband is a priest, though she is not; v. Lev. XXII, 11, which includes such.

(13) Though she may not eat terumah until after the huppah (v. Glos.), which took place without her father's consent, we take his consent to the huppah for granted, since he consented to the kiddushin, unless he returns and objects.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) Lit., 'feared'.

(16) A husband is his wife's heir after nissu'in, but not after kiddushin.

(17) Before nissu'in, the money certainly belongs to her father, and is therefore deemed in his possession. Since we do not know whether he will give the huppah his retrospective consent, it remains so.

(18) Lit., 'here'.

(19) Hence his consent may be taken for granted.

(20) That she became married without asking him.

(21) Prov. X, 26.

(22) Since she had her father's consent at kiddushin.

[Hence] the disciple's view[1] is preferable. Raba said: What is R. Huna's reason? Because she was treated as an orphan during her father's lifetime.[2]

It was stated: If a minor became betrothed without her father's knowledge: Rab said: Both she and her father can repudiate [it]. R. Assi said: Her father, but not she herself. R. Huna — others state, Hiyya b. Rab-raised an objection to R. Assi: [If a man entice a virgin . . . she shall surely . . . be his wife]. If her father utterly refuse [to give her unto him]:[3] I only know that her father [can refuse]: how do I know [it of] herself? Because it is stated: 'If he utterly refuse', [implying] in all cases![4] — Said Rab to them '[the scholars before whom the objection was raised]: Be not misguided![5] He can answer you that [we] suppose he did not entice her for the purpose of marriage. If he did not entice her with marital intent, is then a verse necessary![6] — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: It is to teach that he [her seducer] must pay the fine as for an enticed maiden.[7] R. Joseph said to him: That being so,[8] it was consequently taught: He shall surely pay a dowry for her to be his wife:[9] [this means] that she needs kiddushin from him. But had he seduced her with marital intent, why is kiddushin required?[10] — Said Abaye: [This does not follow:] She may need kiddushin with her father's knowledge.[11]

MISHNAH. HE WHO SAYS TO A WOMAN, 'BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME WITH THIS DATE, BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME WITH THIS ONE' — IF ANY ONE OF THEM IS WORTH A PERUTAH, SHE IS BETROTHED; IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED, [IF HE SAYS,] 'WITH THIS AND WITH THIS AND WITH THIS ONE' — AND THEY ARE ALL TOGETHER WORTH A PERUTAH, SHE IS BETROTHED; IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. IF SHE EATS THEM ONE BY ONE, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED UNLESS ONE OF THEM IS WORTH A PERUTAH.[12]

GEMARA. Which Tanna taught: 'BE THOU BETROTHED, BE THOU BETROTHED'? — Said Rabbah: R. Simeon, who maintained, Unless he declares ['I take] an oath' to each one separately.[13]

WITH THIS AND WITH THIS AND WITH THIS ONE [- AND THEY ARE ALL TOGETHER WORTH A PERUTAH, SHE IS BETROTHED; IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. IF SHE EATS THEM ONE BY ONE, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED UNLESS ONE OF THEM IS WORTH A PERUTAH]. To what does this refer? Shall we say, to the first clause — why particularly if she eats them; even if she lays them down it is also thus, since he says: 'BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME WITH THIS ONE'?[14] But if to the second clause — [and that] even [if there is a perutah's worth] in the first [only]? But it is a debt![15] — Said R. Johanan: Behold a table, meat and knife, yet we have no mouth to eat![16] Rab and Samuel said: After all, it refers to the first clause, but it teaches what is most noteworthy.[17] [Thus:] It is unnecessary to teach that if she lays them down she is [betrothed] only if [one] is worth a perutah, and not otherwise. But if she eats them, I might argue that since her benefit is immediate, she resolves to cede herself [even for less than a perutah]. Hence we are informed [otherwise]. R. Ammi said: After all, it applies to the second clause; and what is meant by, UNLESS ONE OF THEM IS WORTH A PERUTAH? Unless the last is worth a perutah. Said Raba: From R. Ammi's [explanation] three [corol — laries] may be inferred; [i] If one betroths with a debt, she is not betrothed;[18] [ii] If one betroths [a woman] with a debt and a perutah [i.e., cash], her mind is set upon the perutah,'[19]

---

(1) The opinion of R. Jeremiah b. Abba, R. Huna's disciple.

(2) Since her father saw her becoming betrothed and married, and did not protest, he must either have renounced his authority over her or tacitly consented, for otherwise he would not have maintained silence so long.

(3) Ex. XXII, 15f.

(4) 'Utterly' is expressed in Heb. by the doubling of the verb, and indicates extension. The objection assumes that he enticed her for the purpose of kiddushin, since intercourse itself may be such (supra 2a).

(5) Lit., ‘go not after the reverse’ (of what is right).
(6) That her father or she herself can refuse to marry him — surely that is obvious.
(7) Even if she herself refuses him.
(8) That the verse refers to enticement without marital intent.
(9) Ibid.
(10) That itself was betrothal.
(11) Even if her enticement had been for the same purpose.
(12) The meaning of this is discussed in the Gemara.
(13) V. supra 44a for notes.
(14) So that each statement is separate; v, p. 221, n. 1.
(15) If he says: ‘Be thou betrothed unto me with this one and this one, etc.,’ and she eats them one by one, his statement must be considered as a whole. Now, as soon as she eats one she cannot be betrothed by it, since his statement was as yet incomplete, and it becomes a debt, which cannot effect kiddushin.
(16) The Mishnah stands before us, but it is inexplicable.
(17) Lit., ‘it states it is unnecessary (to teach this, but even this).
(18) Otherwise there is no need to particularise the last.
(19) For here he betroths her with all the dates. But those she has eaten are a debt, as explained above, whilst the last, worth a perutah, is the coin actually given. Since the betrothal is valid, we must assume that she regards the last only, for if she regarded the debt and wished to be betrothed thereby, she could not.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 46b

[iii] Money in general is returnable.[1]

It was stated: If one betroths his sister:[2] Rab said: The money is returnable; Samuel ruled: The money is a gift. Rab said: The money is returnable: one knows that kiddushin with a sister is invalid, hence he resolved and gave it as a deposit. Then let him tell her that it is a deposit? — He thought that she would not accept it. But Samuel holds, the money is a gift; one knows that kiddushin with a sister is invalid, and therefore he resolved and gave it as a gift. Then let him tell her that it is a gift? — He thought that she would feel humiliated.

Rabina raised an objection: If one separates his hallah[3] from the flour, it is not hallah,[4] and is robbery in the priest's hand.[5] Now why is it robbery in the priest's hand? Let us say that a man knows that hallah is not separated from flour, and therefore he resolved and gave it as a gift? — There it is different, as it may result in wrong.[6] For the priest may happen to possess less than five quarters of flour and this besides; he will then knead them together and think that his dough is fit [to be eaten], and thus come to eat it in the state of tebel.[7] But you say that a man knows that hallah is not separated from flour! — He knows, yet not fully.[8] He knows that hallah is not separated from flour, yet not fully: for he thinks, What is the reason? Because of the priest's trouble;[9] well, the priest has forgiven his trouble.[10]

Yet let it be terumah [i.e., hallah], but that it shall not be eaten until hallah has been separated[11] for it from elsewhere?[12] Did we not learn: [If one separates terumah] from a perforated [pot] for [the produce grown in] an unperforated pot,[13] it is terumah,[14] but it may not be eaten until terumah and tithes are separated for it from elsewhere![15] In respect of two utensils he will obey, but not in respect of one.[16] Alternatively: the priest will indeed obey; but the owner[17] will think that his dough has been made fit,[18] and so come to eat it in a state of tebel.[19] But you have said that ‘a man knows that hallah is not separated from flour’? — He knows, but not fully. He knows that hallah is not separated from flour. Yet he does not know: for he thinks, what is the reason? On account of the priest's trouble: but he [the priest] has undertaken that trouble.[20]

Yet let it be terumah [i.e., hallah], but that he [the Israelite] shall make another separation.[21] Did we not learn: [If one separates terumah] from an unperforated pot upon [the contents of] a perforated one, it is terumah,[22] yet he must make another separation.[23] — But we have explained it that he obeys in respect to two utensils, but not in respect of one.[24]

Does he then not obey? Surely we learnt: If one separates a cucumber [as terumah] and it is found to be bitter, or a melon, and it is found to be putrid, it is terumah, but he must make another separation.[25] — There it is different, for by Biblical law it is proper terumah,[26] by R. Elai's [dictum]. For R. Ilai said: How do we know that if one separates from inferior [produce] for choice, the terumah is valid?[27] Because it is said, and ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, whet ye have heaved from it the best thereof[28] now, if it is not hallowed, why bear sin?[29] Hence it follows that if one separates from inferior for choice [produce], his separation is terumah.

Raba said [reverting to the Mishnah]:

---

(1) If one gives money for kiddushin, which for some reason is invalid, the money is not a gift but a deposit, and returnable; otherwise, even if the first only is worth a perutah, the kiddushin is valid. For when he completes his statement, the first dates, already eaten, are neither a debt, since they need not be returned, nor a gift, not having been given as such. It would therefore be as though he had stated: Be thou betrothed unto me with this (the first date), but let not the betrothal take effect until I have given you some more,' in which case she becomes betrothed when she receives the others even if the first has been consumed.

(2) Which of course is invalid.

(3) V. Glos.

(4) Since Scripture wrote, Of the first of your dough (Num. XV, 20).

(5) If he does return it.

(6) Lit., 'desolation'.

(7) v. Glos. Five quarters of a kab of flour is the smallest quantity liable to hallah; further, even a priest must separate hallah on dough from which no separation has been made, though he keeps it for himself. Now, if he possesses less, and this completes the quantity, he thinks that it is hallah, and so not liable, and therefore kneads it together with the rest without separating hallah.

(8) Lit., 'he knows and does not know'.

(9) I.e., he should have it ready, without the trouble of kneading it.

(10) And he thinks therefore that it is hallah after all.

(11) Lit., 'brought forth',

(12) I.e., from a different dough.

(13) Produce grown in a pot whose bottom is perforated and is thus connected with the earth is liable to terumah; if unperforated, it is not liable. — Thus he separates what is liable for what is not.

(14) In the sense that the priest need not return it.

(15) Since it is actually tebel, as there was no liability for the unperforated pot. — Produce becomes real terumah only when the separation is made on account of corn that is liable thereto. — Hence the same would apply to hallah.

(16) When a priest is told that the produce separated as terumah from a perforated pot upon an unperforated one is not really terumah, and is itself liable, he obeys, as he recognises a distinction between the two. But when told that the hallah separated from flour is not hallah, though the separation is from the same utensil, he will refuse to separate hallah upon that itself.

(17) I.e., the Israelite who separated it in the first place.

(18) Whereas it has not.

(19) And for this reason the dough must be returned.

(20) Since he accepted it.

(21) Without making it necessary for the priest to return it.

(22) In the sense that the priest need not return it.

(23) The rule is that both that which is separated as terumah and that for which it is separated must be liable to terumah. Here the former is not, and hence another separation must be made. — The same should apply here.

(24) V. p. 232, n. 9; the same holds good of an Israelite,

(25) Though the separation was made from the same utensil which contained the rest. It is obvious that we do not fear that he will disobey, for if we did, the first would have to be returned to ensure a second separation.
(26) Hence it cannot be returned, as the Israelite will mix it with the other produce, which is forbidden. On the other hand, even if he refuses to make a second separation, no harm is done, since the first was Biblically valid and the produce is no longer tebel.
(27) Lit., 'his terumah is terumah'.
(28) Num. XVIII, 32. This implies that one bears sin if he does not heave the best.
(29) For his action would simply be void.

This was taught only if he said to her, ‘With this and with this and with this.’ But if he said to her, ‘[Be thou betrothed unto me] with these,’ even if she eats [them one by one], she is betrothed:[1] when she eats, she eats her own.[2] It was taught in accordance with Raba: [If he says] ‘Be thou betrothed unto me with an acorn, a pomegranate and a nut’; or if he says to her, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me with these’ — if they are all together worth a perutah, she is betrothed; if not, she is not betrothed. ‘[Be thou betrothed unto me] with this and this and this’ — if they are all together worth a perutah, she is betrothed; if not, she is not betrothed. ‘With this one’ whereupon she took and ate it; ‘with this one’ — and she took and ate it; ‘and also with this one, and also with this one’ — she is not betrothed unless one of them is worth a perutah. Now, what is meant by this [clause], ‘with an acorn, a pomegranate, and or a nut’? Shall we assume that he said to her, ‘either’ with an acorn, a pomegranate, or a nut’? ‘If they are altogether worth a perutah she is betrothed’! But he said: ‘or’! Again if it means, ‘with an acorn and a pomegranate and a nut’ — then it is identical with ‘with this and with this!’[3] Hence it must surely mean that he said to her, ‘With these’. But since the second clause teaches: ‘or if he said to her, "Be thou betrothed unto me with these,"’ it follows that the first clause does not refer to ‘with these’! Hence it [must be taken] as [an] explanatory [clause]. ‘Be thou betrothed unto me with an acorn, a pomegranate and a nut’, that is, where he said: ‘Be betrothed unto me with these’.[4] Now, the final clause teaches: ‘With this one and she took and ate it: if one of them is worth a perutah she is betrothed, but not otherwise. Whereas the first clause draws no distinction whether she eats or lays it down. This proves that whenever he says to her, ‘with these,’ if she eats, she eats her own. This proves it.

[Reverting to the final clause of the Mishnah,] That is well on the view that it refers to the second clause, and what is meant by, UNLESS ONE OF THEM IS WORTH A PERUTAH? Unless the last is worth a perutah. Then here too [in the Baraitha just quoted] it means, unless the last is worth a perutah. But according to Rab and Samuel, who maintain that it refers to the first clause, it being necessary to state the case of eating: here comprehensive statements are given, but not detailed enumerations?[5] — This agrees with Rabbi, who said: There is no difference between ‘the size of an olive, the size of an olive,’ and ‘the size of an olive and the size of an olive’: they are [both] detailed enumerations.[6]

Rab said: If one betroths [a woman] with a debt, she is not betrothed:[7] a loan is given to be expended.[8] Shall we say that this is disputed by Tannaim: If one betroths [a woman] with a debt, she is not betrothed; but some say she is betrothed. Surely they differ in this: one Master holds that a loan is given to be expended, whereas the other holds that it is not?[9] — Now, is that plausible? Consider the second clause: And both agree in respect to purchase that he acquires it;[10] but if you say that a loan is given to be expended, wherewith does he acquire it? — Said R. Nahman: Huna our companion relates this [Baraitha] to another matter. We suppose the reference here is to the case where he said to her, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me with a maneh,’ and the maneh was found to be short of a denar:[11] one Master holds that she is bashful to claim it;[12] the other, that she is not.[13] If so, when R. Eleazar said: [If he declares,] ‘Be thou betrothed unto me with a maneh,’ and he gives her a denar, she is betrothed, and he must make it up — shall we say that he stated this ruling in dependence upon Tannaim?[14] — I will tell you: when the maneh lacks [but] a denar, she may be bashful to claim it; when the maneh is short of ninety-nine, she is [certainly] not bashful to claim it.[15]

An objection is raised: If he says to a woman, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me with the deposit which I have in thy possession,’ and she goes and finds that it is stolen or destroyed; if the value of a perutah is left thereof, she is betrothed; if not, she is not betrothed. But in the case of a debt, even if a perutah's worth thereof[16] is not left, she is betrothed. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said on R. Meir's authority: A debt

(1) If they are collectively worth a perutah.
(2) The kiddushin begins to take effect as soon as she accepts the first one.
(3) Why state it twice.
(4) [MS.M. has a much shorter and simpler text: Now what is meant by this (clause) 'with an acorn . . . or a nut'? E.g., where he said 'be betrothed unto me with these', and the final clause teaches 'with this one' etc.]
(5) How do they explain, 'unless one of them is worth a perutah'? For the clause, 'With this and this and this' is a comprehensive statement, in so far as it is taught that if they are all together worth, etc. Hence there is no clause in the Baraitha equivalent to the first clause in the Mishnah. Now, according to R. Ammi, it is well, since in the Mishnah too 'If she eats' refers to the second clause, viz., likewise to his comprehensive statement. But according to Rab and Samuel it must refer to a detailed enumeration, viz., by this, by this (not and by this); but such a clause is absent in the Baraitha.
(6) If one sacrifices an animal with the expressed intention of eating the size of an olive thereof after the time limit, the sacrifice is 'abomination', and he is liable to kareth (q.v. Glos.); if to eat it without the boundaries fixed for its eating, the sacrifice is unfit, but he is not liable to kareth. In the case of a combined intention, the latter ruling applies. R. Judah rules: The intention first expressed determines its particular law. Thereon Rabbi said: There is no difference whether he declares, 'I will eat the size of an olive after time, the size of an olive without the boundaries,' or 'I will eat the size of an olive after time and the size of an olive, etc.': both are detailed enumerations, the first of which determines its law according to R. Judah, and not comprehensive statements (i.e., combined intentions). Consequently, this clause of our Baraitha, 'With this one, etc.,' was not taught by the same Tanna as the former, but in agreement with Rabbi that even when he adds the copulative and with this one, each is a separate declaration: 'Be thou betrothed unto me with this one,' 'Be thou betrothed unto me with this one.' Hence when it is stated: 'If she ate, etc. ,'the same holds good even with greater force if she lays down each (v. Rab and Samuel's reasoning on 46a, which likewise applies here).
(7) Even if the money loaned is actually now in her possession.
(8) The debtor may expend it as he desires, and is not bound to put it in a business so that it should always be at hand when the creditor demands its return. Hence this money which she actually possesses is her own, and he gives her nothing at all. v. supra p. 21, n. 9.
(9) As explained in the previous note.
(10) If A sells land to B, B can acquire it in virtue of money he lent him previously (land being acquired by money, supra 26a), if A possesses the actual money loaned.
(11) The denar is the loan referred to.
(12) Hence she is not betrothed.
(13) She relies upon receiving it, and so the betrothal is valid.
(14) I.e., knowing that it is disputed by Tannaim.
(15) Hence all agree that she is betrothed.
(16) Of the actual money he lent her.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 47b

is the same as a deposit. Now, they differ only in so far as one Master holds that a debt, even if a perutah's worth thereof is not left [is valid kiddushin], whereas the other holds it is [valid] only if a perutah's worth thereof is left, but not otherwise: but all agree that if one betroths [a woman] with a debt [the money being still in her possession], she is betrothed! — Said Raba: Is it logical that this [Baraitha] is correct;[1] surely it is corrupt! [For] what are the circumstances of this deposit? If she guaranteed against loss,[2] it is identical with a loan.[3] If she did not guarantee against loss — if so, instead of the second clause teaching, 'but in the case of debt, even if a perutah's worth thereof is not left, she is betrothed' — let a distinction be made and taught in the case [of deposit] itself: when is that? Only if she did not guarantee against loss; but if she did, even if a perutah's worth thereof is not left, she is betrothed. But amend it thus: in the case of debt, even if a perutah's worth thereof is left, she is not betrothed. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said on R. Meir's authority: Debt is as a deposit.

Wherein do they differ? — Said Rabbah: I found the Rabbis at the schoolhouse sitting and explaining. They differ as to whether a loan vests in its owner [sc. the creditor] in respect of return, and likewise in respect of unpreventable accidents: one Master holds that a loan vests in the debtor, and likewise in respect of unpreventable accidents; and the other holds that it vests in the creditor, and even so in respect of unpreventable accidents.[4] But I told them , As for unpreventable accidents, all agree that it vests in the debtor. What is the reason? It is no worse than a loaned article:[5] if for a loaned article, which is returnable as it is, one is liable in respect of unpreventable accidents, how much more so for a debt![6] But here they [merely] differ as to whether a loan vests in its owner in respect of return.

If so, when R. Huna said: If one borrows an axe from his neighbour, if he clave [wood] therewith, he acquires it;[7] if not, he does not acquire it — shall we say that he gave his ruling as dependent upon [a dispute of] Tannaim?[8] — No. They differ only in respect of a [monetary] loan, which is not returnable as it is; but with the loan of an article which is returnable as it is, all agree [on the prin — ciple] 'if he clave therewith he indeed [acquires it,] but if he did not cleave therewith he does not acquire it'.[9]

Shall we say that this [Rab's dictum] is disputed by Tannaim? [For it was taught: If a man says to a woman:] 'Be thou betrothed unto me with a note of debt,' or if he has a loan in the hands of others[10] and transfers it to her,[11] R. Meir said: She is betrothed; the Sages ruled: She is not betrothed. Now, how is this 'note of debt' meant? Shall we say, a note of debt against others; then it is identical with 'a loan in the hands of others?' Hence it must surely mean a note against her debt,[12] and thus they differ in respect to betrothing [a woman] by a debt! — After all, it means a note of debt against others, and here they differ both on a debt contracted with a bond and a debt contracted verbally.[13] Concerning a debt contracted with a bond, wherein do they differ? In the dispute of Rabbi and the Rabbis. For it was taught: A note[14] is acquired by delivery; this is Rabbi's view.[15] But the Sages say: Whether he writes [a bill of sale] without delivering [the note itself] or whether he delivers it without writing [a bill of sale], he does not acquire it unless he both indites [a bill of sale] and delivers [the original note]. One Master agrees with Rabbi; the other does not agree with Rabbi.[16] Alternatively, none accept Rabbi's view, while here they differ in R. Papa's [dictum]. For R. Papa said: When one sells a note to his neighbour he must write for him [in the conveyance]: 'Acquire it together with all its obligations': one Master agrees with R. Papa; the other does not agree with R. Papa.[17] Alternatively, all agree with R. Papa. But here they differ over Samuel's dictum. For Samuel said:

---

(1) Lit., 'to be accepted.'

(2) To pay for any mishap.

(3) If lost or stolen, since it must be made good, just like a debt.

(4) All agree that a loan is given for expenditure: consequently, had she expended anything at all thereof, the betrothal is not valid. But here she had expended nothing of it: R. Simeon b. Eleazar holds that in such a case it vests in the creditor, and he can immediately demand its return, if he desires. Hence it is now that he gives it to the woman, and so she is betrothed. Likewise, should an unpreventable accident befall the money, the debtor is not responsible, since it is accounted as being in the creditor's possession. The first Tanna's view is the reverse.

(5) 'Milweh' applies to a monetary loan; 'She'elah', to the loan of an article.

(6) Which is certainly more in the debtor's possession, seeing that he is not bound to return the same coins.

(7) In the sense that it belongs to him for the period of the loan, and the lender cannot retract.

(8) Viz., that it agrees only with R. Meir. But according to the first Tanna, since an untouched loan does not stand in the creditor's possession and he cannot demand its return, the same applies here even if he did not cleave wood with it.

(9) Other coins may be substituted, but as for a loaned article, which must be returned itself, all agree that only if he clave therewith does he acquire, and not otherwise.

(10) I.e., he is a creditor.

(11) Lit., 'gave her (written) authority over them' to collect the debt for herself.

(12) I.e., against a debt she owes to him.

(13) The latter being 'a loan in the hands of others'.

(14) Lit., 'letters'.

(15) If A delivers his note against B to C, C acquires it forthwith.

(16) The circumstances being that he gave her the note, but did not write a bill of sale hereon.

(17) The circumstances being that he gave her the original note and wrote a bill of sale, but did not include this 'obligation' clause in it.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 48a

If one sells a note of debt to his neighbour and then renounces it [the debt], it is renounced; and even an heir can renounce it.[1] One Master agrees with Samuel; the other does not agree with Samuel.[2] Alternatively, all agree with Samuel,[3] and here they differ in respect to the woman. One Master holds, The woman has full confidence [in him], reasoning, he will not leave me in the lurch and renounce [the debt] in favour of another; whereas the other Master holds, The woman too has no confidence.

Wherein do they differ concerning a debt contracted verbally? — In [the law of] R. Huna in Rab's name. For R. Huna said in Rab's name: [If A says to B,] 'The maneh which I have in your possession, give it to C': [if said] 'in the presence of the three of them' [viz., A, B and C], he acquires it. One Master holds, Rab ruled thus only of a deposit, but not of a loan;[4] and the other maintains that there is no difference between a deposit and a loan.[5]

[Again,] Shall we say that this[6] is disputed by Tannaim? [For it was taught: If he says:] 'Be thou betrothed unto me with a note:' R. Meir said: She is not betrothed; R. Eleazar said: She is betrothed; the Sages ruled: The paper is valued: if it is worth a perutah, she is betrothed; if not, she is not betrothed. How is this note meant: shall we say, a note of debt against others — then R. Meir is self-contradictory?[7] Hence it must mean her own note of debt,[8] and thus they differ in respect to betrothal by debt! — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: The meaning here is that he betroths her with a deed unattested by witnesses,[9] R. Meir being in harmony with his view that the witnesses who sign dissolve [the marriage]; while R. Eleazar is in agreement with his opinion that the witnesses to the delivery dissolve it;[10] while the Rabbis are in doubt whether it is as R. Meir or R. Eleazar; therefore the paper is valued, [and] if it is worth a perutah she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed.[11]

Alternatively, [we] suppose, that it was not written specifically for her sake, and they differ in respect to Resh Lakish's [view]. For Resh Lakish propounded: What if a deed of betrothal is not written expressly for her [the betrothed's] sake? Do we assimilate betrothal to divorce: just as divorce must be expressly for her sake, so must betrothal be likewise; or perhaps, [different] forms of betrothal are assimilated to each other: just as betrothal by money need not be for her sake, so betrothal by deed need not be for her sake? After propounding, he resolved it: Betrothal is assimilated to divorce, [for Scripture writes] and when she is departed . . . she may be [another man's wife].[12] One Master agrees with Resh Lakish; the other does not.[13]

Alternatively, all agree with Resh Lakish, and here the circumstances are that it [the deed] was written expressly for her sake but without her knowledge, and they differ in the same dispute as Raba and Rabina, R. Papa and R. Sherabia. For it was stated: If it is written for her sake but without her knowledge, — Raba and Rabina maintain: She is betrothed; R. Papa and R. Sherabia rule: She is not betrothed.[14]

Shall we say that it [Rab's dictum] is dependent on the following Tannaim? For it was taught: [If a woman says to a man,] 'Make me a necklace, earrings and [finger] rings, and I will be betrothed unto thee,'[15] as soon as he makes them, she is betrothed: this is R. Meir's view. But the Sages rule: She is not betrothed until the money reaches her hand. What is meant by this 'money'? Shall we say, those self-same valuables? hence it follows that in the first Tanna's view even those self-same valuables [need] not [reach her hand]; then wherewith is she betrothed?[16] Hence it must surely refer to different money,[17] which proves that they differ over betrothal by debt. For it is assumed that all hold that wages are a liability from beginning to end, hence it is a debt;[18] surely then they differ in this: one Master holds, If he betroths [a woman] with a debt, she is betrothed, while the other holds that she is not? — No: all agree that if he betroths with a debt, she is not betrothed, but here they differ as to whether wages are a liability from beginning to end. One Master holds,

---

(1) Tosaf. suggests that the reason is that the sale of an IOU is only Rabbinically valid, and is therefore not strong enough to annul the first creditor's right of renunciation. [According to R. Tam (v. R. Nissim on Keth. 85b) it is based on the dual conception of the lien of the creditor or the debtor: (a) שעבוד הגוף a lien on his person; (b) שעבוד נכסים a lien on his property — a conception that has its parallel in the Greek and Old Babylonian Systems of Law. Whilst the latter is assignable, the former is not, and whenever the creditor chooses to renounce the inalienable part of his lien, the other automatically lapses; v. Neubauer. J. op. cit. pp. 112-114, n. 1.]

(2) The first Tanna agrees: hence the woman relies upon it, and the betrothal is valid.

(3) [And therefore in the case of an ordinary transaction of real estate, a note does not rank as money to confer possession upon the purchaser.]

(4) Hence in the case under discussion the woman is not betrothed.

(5) V. Git. (Sonc. ed.) p. 47. n. 3.

(6) Rab's dictum, supra 47a.

(7) V. supra 47b.

(8) Recording her debt.

(9) V. supra 2a; that is the note referred to here, but that it was not signed; it was, however, given to her in the presence of witnesses.

(10) This refers to a Get (q.v. Glos.) bearing no signature of witnesses. R. Meir holds that it is invalid, For only these witnesses give it its power of dissolution. R. Eleazar rules that it is valid, for the dissolution is really effected by the witnesses who attest its delivery. v. Git. 3b. The same applies to a deed of betrothal.

(11) Rashi and Tosaf. observe that the last clause must be omitted, For since we are in doubt, even if it is not worth a perutah she stands as doubtfully betrothed, and needs a divorce to free her.

(12) V. supra 95 for notes.

(13) Whilst the Rabbis are in doubt on the point.

(14) V. supra 9b for notes.

(15) In return for his labour, the gold being her own.

(16) Surely she must actually receive something!

(17) I.e., in addition to the jewels she must receive money.

(18) When a man does work, as he completes each perutah's worth his employer is liable for the payment of it. Consequently, when this goldsmith makes the jewellery, as soon as he finishes each perutah's worth of labour, she becomes indebted to him to the amount of a perutah, so that when he completes the work entirely, the fee, which is to effect betrothal, is a retrospective debt.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 48b

Wages are a liability only at the end;[1] whilst the other holds that wages are a liability from beginning to end. Alternatively, all hold that wages are a liability from beginning to end, and that betrothal by debt is invalid, but here they dispute whether an artisan gains a title to the improvement of the utensil; one Master holds that an artisan does acquire title to the improvement of the utensil, and the other holds that an artisan does not acquire title to the improvement of the utensil.[2] Alternatively, all hold that an artisan does not obtain a title to the improvement of the utensil, and that wages are a liability from beginning to end, and that betrothal with debt is not valid, but the circumstances here are that he added a particle [of metal] of his own: one Master holds, [When one betroths a woman with a] debt and a perutah, her mind is set upon the perutah;[3] the other holds, her mind is set upon the debt.[4] And [they differ] in the [same] dispute as the following Tannaim. For it was taught: '[Be thou betrothed unto me] with the wage [owing to me] for the work I have done for thee, ' she is not betrothed; with 'the wage for what I will do for thee,' she is betrothed. R. Nathan said: 'With the wage for what I will do for thee,' she is not betrothed; how much more so, 'with the wage [owing to me] for the work I have done for thee.' R. Judah the Prince said: In truth it was stated, whether [he declared], 'with the wage for what I have done,' or 'with the wage for what I will do for thee,' she is not betrothed; yet if he adds a consideration of his own, she is betrothed.[5] The first Tanna and R. Nathan differ in respect to wages.[6] R. Nathan and R. Judah the Prince differ in respect to [betrothal by] debt and a perutah: one holds that then her mind is set upon the debt, whereas the other holds that it is set upon the perutah.

MISHNAH. [IF A MAN SAYS TO A WOMAN], BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME WITH THIS CUP OF WINE,' AND IT IS FOUND TO BE OF HONEY, OR 'OF HONEY' AND IT IS FOUND TO BE OF WINE; 'WITH THIS SILVER DENAR,' AND IT IS FOUND TO BE OF GOLD, OR 'OF GOLD' AND IT IS FOUND TO BE OF SILVER; 'ON CONDITION THAT I AM WEALTHY,' AND HE IS FOUND TO BE POOR, OR 'POOR' AND HE IS FOUND TO BE RICH; SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. R. SIMEON SAID: IF HE DECEIVES HER TO [HER] ADVANTAGE,[7] SHE IS BETROTHED.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [Where he says] 'Be thou betrothed unto me with this cup' — one [Baraitha] taught: with that and its contents;[8] another taught; with that, but not with its contents; another taught: with its contents, but not with that itself. Yet there is no difficulty: one refers to water, another to wine, and the third to brine.[9]

IF HE DECEIVES HER TO [HER] ADVANTAGE, SHE IS BETROTHED, But does not R. Simeon agree [that if one sells] wine, and it is found to be vinegar, or, vinegar and it is found to be wine, both [the vendor and the purchaser] can retract?[10] This proves that some prefer wine and others prefer vinegar. So here too, some are pleased with silver and not with gold?[11] Said R. Shimi b. Ashi: I came across Abaye sitting and explaining this to his son: We deal here with a case where, for example, he said to his agent, 'Lend me a silver denar and go and betroth So-and-so on my behalf,' and he went and lent him a gold denar. One Master holds, [He was] particular [about this;][12] the other, that he merely indicated the place to him.[13] If so,[14] 'BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME' — BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO him is required; IF HE DECEIVES HER TO [HER] ADVANTAGE' — IF HE DECEIVES him TO [HIS] ADVANTAGE is required, 'IT IS FOUND [TO BE OF GOLD]' — but at the very outset it was of gold![15] — But, said Raba, I and a lion of our company, viz., R. Hiyya b. Abin, explained it, What are the circumstances here? If she said to her agent, 'Go forth and accept kiddushin on my behalf from So-and-so, who has proposed to me, "Be thou betrothed unto me with a silver denar"'; and went and was given a gold denar. One Master holds [she was] particular [about this]; the other, that she indicated the place to him. And what is [the meaning of] 'IT IS FOUND'?[16] It was wrapped up in a cloth.[17]

Abaye said: R. Simeon,[18] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, and R. Eleazar, all hold that one merely indicates the place.[19] R. Simeon, as stated. 'R. Simeon b. Gamaliel:' for we learnt:

---

(1) When the work is returned the whole wages become a simultaneous liability; hence there is no debt, and the betrothal is valid.

(2) When a man is employed by the hour, day, etc., all agree that his wages are a liability from beginning to end. Here, however, we deal with a case where he contracted for the work irrespective of time. In respect to this we have two views: one view is that the artisan acquires title to the increase in the value of the material upon which he works as a result of the improvements he effects, and when he gives it back, he is really selling it for the agreed cost of his labour. Hence, the woman is betrothed, since she receives something for which she would have to pay now. The other view is that he does not so acquire; consequently, his wages are a liability and debt, just as those of a time worker; and so she is not betrothed.

(3) His labour is a debt, whilst his own additional material is certainly like a coin given now. Since we assume that her mind is set upon the perutah, she is betrothed.

(4) Because its value exceeds his small addition.
(5) This proves that in R. Nathan's opinion she is not betrothed even then.
(6) Whether they are a liability from beginning to end or only at the end, but if the work is already done and in her possession, it is certainly a debt, on all views.
(7) The object being better than described.
(8) That is understood to be his meaning, and if they are together worth a perutah, she is betrothed.
(9) Or, oil. If the cup is filled with water, her mind is set upon the cup, hence that must be worth a perutah. With wine, she thinks of the wine, not the cup; with brine, (or oil) which must remain for some time in the cup, her mind is set upon both (Rashi).
(10) This is a Mishnah in B.B. 83b.
(11) Tosaf.: she may need the silver for its metal.
(12) He wanted to borrow only a silver denar, not gold; hence the betrothal is invalid.
(13) I.e., he intimated to him that he was to betroth that woman with money, but was not particular about the exact coin.
(14) That the reference in the Mishnah is to the agent.
(15) The agent knew full well that he was giving a gold denar.
(16) For here too it was thus given at the very outset.
(17) And it was discovered to be gold only upon reaching the woman's hand.
(18) I.e., b. Yohai.
(19) In circumstances similar to the above.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 49a

A plain divorce [bears] its witnesses on the inside; a folded one [bears] its witnesses on the outside.[1] If the signatures of a plain one are written on the outside, or of a folded one on the inside, both are invalid. R. Hanina b. Gamaliel said: If the signatures of a folded one are written on the inside it is valid, because it can be converted into a plain one.[2] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: It all depends on local custom.[3] Now, we pondered thereon: does not the first Tanna agree that local custom [is the determining factor]? To which R. Ashi[4] replied: In the place where a plain one is customary and a folded one is made, or in the place where a folded one is customary and a plain one is made, all agree that the objection [is valid]. Where do they differ? Where both are customary, and he [the husband] instructs him [the scribe], 'Make me a plain one,' and he goes and makes him a folded one. One Master holds that he particularised; the other, that he indicated a place to him.[5]

'R. Eleazar' — for we learnt: If a woman says: 'Accept a divorce on my behalf at such and such a place,' and he accepts it elsewhere: R. Eleazar ruled it valid. This shews that he holds that she merely indicated a place to him.

'Ulla said: The controversy [in the Mishnah] refers to a monetary advantage. But in an advantage of birth,[6] all agree that she is not betrothed. What is the reason? 'I do not want a shoe too large for my foot.' It was taught likewise. R. Simeon admits that if he deceives her by a superiority of birth she is not betrothed. R. Ashi said: This follows from our Mishnah too. For it states:[7] 'On condition that I am a priest,' and he is found to be a Levite, or 'a Levite', and he is found to be a priest, 'a Nathin,'[8] and he is found to be a mamzer,[9] or a mamzer', and he is found to be a Nathin [she is not betrothed]; and R. Simeon does not disagree. Mar, son of R. Ashi, demurred: If so, when it is stated: 'on condition that I have a daughter or maidservant [meguddeleth][10] that is grown up', whereas he has none; or on condition that he has not, and he has, which is a monetary advantage, does he not disagree there either! But [what you must say is that] he differs in the first clause,[11] and the same is understood of the second;[12] so here too [in respect to superiority] of birth, he differs in the first clause, and the same applies to the last clause. How compare! There, since both refer to a financial advantage, he differs in the first clause and the same is understood of the last. Here, however, that it is superiority of birth, if it is so that he disagrees, it should be taught. Alternatively, here too superior birth [is meant]. Do you think that meguddeleth means literally an adult; meguddeleth means of superior breeding,[13] for she [the woman betrothed] can say: 'It does not please me that she should take up my words and carry them about to the neighbours.'[14]

Our Rabbis taught: 'On condition that I am a karyana,'[15] once he has read three verses [of the Pentateuch] in the synagogue,[16] she is betrothed. R. Judah said: He must be able to read and translate it. Even if he translates it according to his own understanding! But it was taught: R. Judah said: If one translates[17] a verse literally, he is a liar; if he adds thereto, he is a blasphemer and a libeller.[18] Then what is meant by translation? Our [authorised] translation.[19] Now, that is only if he said to her 'karyana'. But if he says: 'I am a kara,'[20] he must be able to read the Pentateuch, Prophets and Hagiographa with exactitude.[21] [If he says,] 'On condition that I am learned' — Hezekiah said: [In] Halachoth.[22] R. Johanan ruled: In Torah.[23] An objection is raised: What is Mishnah?[24] R. Meir said: Halachoth. R. Judah said: Midrash.[25]

---

(1) V. B.B. 160a.

(2) By leaving it unsewn.

(3) If it is customary to write a folded divorce, a plain one is invalid, and vice versa. For when a husband authorizes the scribe to write a divorce, it is tacitly understood that he wants it written in accordance with local custom; for notes v. B.B. 160a.

(4) Rashal in B.B. 165a reads Abaye. R. Ashi, being later than Abaye, is obviously an incorrect reading in an argument by the latter, unless it is assumed that Abaye merely made the statement cited above, the Talmud itself elaborating it; v. Kaplan, Redaction of the Talmud, p. 222.

(5) I.e., gave him a general intimation that he wanted a divorce to be indited.

(6) E.g., if he says, on condition that I am a mamzer (q.v. Glos.). and is found to be a Nathin, i.e., of higher caste.

(7) Infra b.

(8) V. Glos.

(9) V. Glos.

(10) V. infra p. 249, n. 8.

(11) Viz., in the Mishnah on 48b.

(12) Infra b.

(13) So Rashi.

(14) And because she is of superior breeding she has access to them and is listened to, where she would not be otherwise.

(15) I.e., able to read the Bible.

(16) In Talmudic times the reading of the Pentateuch, which was an important part of Sabbath and Festival services, was performed by a number of congregants, each of whom read not less than three verses, and not by a Reader, as to-day.

(17) This refers to the public translations in the synagogue alongside the Reading of the Law, which was also a feature of ancient times.

(18) Meharef and megaddef are synonyms. [Tosaf. In the name of R. Hananel cites Ex. XXIV. 10: ויראו את אלקי ישראל of which the literal rendering 'they saw the God of Israel' conveys a lie, as God cannot be seen, whilst the added words in the rendering 'they saw the angel of the God of Israel' involves a blasphemy; for further examples v. Harkavy, A., Teshuboth ha-Geonim, pp. 124ff.]

(19) The Aramaic translation known as Targum Onkelos; v. Bacher, Die Terminologie der Tannaiten, pp. 205 et seq., also art. 'Targum' in J.E.

(20) Likewise 'reader', but the word implies wider erudition.

(21) Of course, with full understanding.

(22) Rashi: traditional laws dating back to Moses. The probable meaning is traditional statements of laws in general, such as form the Mishnah, but without the exegetical knowledge of their derivation from the Bible, particularly the Pentateuch, v, Glos. s.v. Halachah.

(23) This is now assumed to mean the written law, i.e., the Pentateuch.

(24) 'Learning' a word of the same root as in the phrase 'that I am learned'.

(25) Exegesis. The exegetical literature, e.g., Sifra and Sifre, containing the laws derived from the Pentateuch and the manner of derival. — Thus on both views the knowledge of the Torah alone is insufficient.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 49b

— What is meant by Torah? The exegesis [Midrash] of the Torah. Now, that is only if he says to her [‘on condition that I am] tinyana [learned]:’ but if he says to her, I am a tanna, he must have learned law, Sifra, Sifre and Tosefta.[1] ‘On condition that I am a disciple [talmid],’ we do not say, such as Simeon b. ‘Azzai and Simeon b. Zoma,[2] but one who when asked a single question on his studies in any place can answer it,[3] even in the Tractate Kallah.[4] ‘On condition that I am a Sage,’ we do not say, like the Sages of Jabneh[5] or like R. Akiba and his companions, but one who can be asked a matter of wisdom[6] in any place and he can answer it. ‘On condition that I am mighty,’ we do not say, [he must be] like Abner the son of Ner[7] and Joab son of Zeruiah,[8] but as long as he is feared by his companions on account of his strength. ‘On condition that I am wealthy,’ we do not say, like R. Eleazar b. Harsom and R. Eleazar b. Azariah,[9] but as long as he is honoured by his fellow citizens on account of his wealth. ‘On condition that I am righteous,’ even if he is absolutely wicked, she is betrothed, for he may have meditated repentance in his thoughts. ‘On condition that I am wicked,’ even if he is completely righteous, she is betrothed, for he may have meditated idolatry in his mind.

Ten kabs of wisdom descended to the world: nine were taken by Palestine and one by the rest of the world. Ten kabs of beauty descended to the world: nine were taken by Jerusalem and one by the rest of the world. Ten kabs of wealth descended to the world: nine were taken by the early Romans and one by the rest of the world. Ten kabs of poverty descended to the world: nine were taken by Babylon and one by the rest of the world. Ten kabs of conceit descended to the world: nine were taken by Elam[10] and one by the rest of the world. But did not conceit descend to Babylon! But it is written: Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, there came forth two women, and the wind was in their wings; now they had wings like the wings of a stork: and they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven. Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah? And he said unto me, To build her a house in the land of Shinar.[11] Whereon R. Johanan said: This refers to hypocrisy and conceit, which descended to Babylon! — Yes, it did come down hither, but made its way thither [to Elam]. This follows too because it is written, to build her a house:[12] this proves it. But that is not so, for a Master said: A sign of conceit is poverty, and poverty is found in Babylon! — By poverty,[13] poverty of learning is meant,[14] as it is written, we have a little sister, and she hath no breasts,[15] whereon R. Johanan said: This refers to Elam, which was privileged to study but not to teach.[16]

Ten kabs of strength descended to the world: nine were taken by the Persians, etc. Ten kabs of vermin descended to the world: nine were taken by Media, etc. Ten kabs of witchcraft descended to the world: nine were taken by Egypt,[17] etc. Ten kabs of sores descended to the world: nine were taken by swine, etc. Ten kabs of immorality descended to the world: nine were taken by Arabia, etc. Ten kabs of impudence descended to the world: nine were taken by Mesene.[18] Ten kabs of gossip descended to the world: nine were taken by women, etc. Ten kabs of drunkenness[19] descended to the world: nine were taken by Ethiopians, etc. Ten kabs of sleep descended to the world: nine were taken by slaves,[20] and one by the rest of the world.

MISHNAH. ‘[BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME] ON CONDITION THAT I AM A PRIEST,’ AND HE IS FOUND TO BE A LEVITE, OR ‘A LEVITE’ AND HE IS FOUND TO BE A PRIEST; A NATHIN,’[21] AND HE IS FOUND TO BE A MAMZER,[22] OR ‘A MAMZER’ AND HE IS FOUND TO BE A NATHIN; ‘A TOWNSMAN, AND HE IS FOUND TO BE A VILLAGER, OR ‘A VILLAGER’ AND HE IS FOUND TO BE A TOWNSMAN; ‘ON CONDITION THAT MY HOUSE IS NEAR TO THE BATHS,’ AND IT IS FOUND TO BE FAR, OR ‘FAR’ AND IT IS FOUND TO BE NEAR; ON CONDITION THAT HE HAS A DAUGHTER OR MAIDSERVANT[23] THAT IS GROWN UP,[24] AND HE HAS NOT, ‘OR ON CONDITION THAT I HAVE [THEM] NOT’, AND HE HAS; ‘ON CONDITION THAT HE HAS NO SONS’, AND HE HAS, OR 'ON CONDITION THAT HE HAS SONS, AND HE HAS NONE-IN ALL THESE CASES, EVEN IF SHE DECLARES, IT WAS MY INTENTION TO BECOME BETROTHED TO HIM NOTWITHSTANDING,' SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. IT IS LIKEWISE SO IF IT WAS SHE WHO DECEIVES HIM.

GEMARA. A certain man sold his property with the intention of emigrating to Palestine, but when selling he said nothing.[25] Said Raba: That is a mental stipulation,[26] and such is not recognised.[27] How does Raba know this? Shall we say, from what we learnt:

---

(1) Sifra is a halachic commentary on Leviticus, also known as Torath Kohanim, the Law of the Priests. Sifre is a similar work on Numbers and Deuteronomy. In Sanh. 86a R. Johanan ascribes all anonymous passages in them to R. Judah and R. Simeon respectively. Tosefta ('addition') is a collection of laws not included by Rabbi in his compilation of the Mishnah, and of lesser authority. A number of Rabbis had such collections, but only those of R. Hiyya and R. Oshaia were considered authentic. The relation of the Tosefta to the Mishnah is one of the unsolved problems of Talmudic literature, but it is highly probable that part of it at least was intended as an elaboration of the Mishnah.

(2) These, though disciples, i.e., not ordained as Rabbis, were renowned for their wide erudition. Cf. Sotah, 49b, Yeb. 63b.

(3) [ואומרו Lit., 'he says it', Kaplan, op. cit. p. 203 explains this term as denoting the ability to discuss the point in question, and not merely to quote correctly from some text.]

(4) One of the extra-canonical tractates. Rashi: though it is short and not difficult, it is enough if he can answer a question in it. Others (v. Tosaf. Ri) the laws of Festivals (Kallah was the name given to the general assemblies in Elul and Adar, when the laws of the Festivals were popularly expounded.), in which most people were well-versed. V. J.E. s.v. Kallah; v. [Higger, M. מסכתות כלה pp. 13ff.].

(5) A town to the north west of Jerusalem, whither R. Johanan b. Zakkai transferred the great Sanhedrin after the fall of Jerusalem; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 204 n. 8.

(6) Rashi: a matter dependent on logic.

(7) Formerly Ishbosheth's chief general against David, but subsequently he went over to David; II Sam. II, 8 seqq; III, 12 seqq.

(8) David's chief general.

(9) Who were credited with enormous wealth: V. Yoma 35b and Shab. 54b.

(10) V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 138, n. 1.

(11) Zech. V, 9f. Shinar is Babylon.

(12) Rashi offers two explanations: (i) the inf. 'to build' implies that it was only an intention, not subsequently carried out; (ii) the sing. 'her', instead of 'them', intimates that only one took up her permanent residence in Babylon, viz., hypocrisy.

(13) Which betokens conceit.

(14) The conceited man is too proud to seek learning from others.

(15) Cant. VIII, 8.

(16) V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 238. n. 5. Which proves that their conceit prevented them from attaining sufficient knowledge to teach.

(17) Cf. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 460. n. 6.

(18) The island formed by the Euphrates, the Tigris and the Royal Canal.

(19) Var. lec, 'blackness'.

(20) Cf. B.M. 64b-65a.

(21) V. Glos.

(22) V. Glos.

(23) V. supra p. 245.

(24) [Meguddeleth, others: 'a hairdresser' Tosaf. Ri].

(25) And subsequently he was prevented from going.

(26) Lit., 'it is words that are in the heart'.

(27) Lit., 'words that are in the heart are no words'. Even though we know that that was his reason, e.g., he had mentioned it previously.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 50a

[If his oblation be a burnt-offering of the herd, he shall offer it with a tale without blemish:] he shall offer it [at the door etc.]:[1] this teaches that he is compelled.[2] I might think, against his will-hence it is taught: 'with his free will'.[3] How is this possible? He is compelled, until he declares, 'I am willing'. Yet why, seeing that in his heart he is unwilling! Hence it must surely be because we rule; A mental affirmation is not recognised! — But perhaps it is different there, for we ourselves are witnesses that he is pleased to gain atonement. But [it follows] from the second clause: and you find it likewise in the case of women's divorce and slaves' manumission: he [the husband or master] is compelled, until he declares,'I am willing.'[4] Yet why: seeing that in his heart he is unwilling! Hence it must surely be because we say: A mental declaration is not recognised! — But perhaps it is different there, because it is a religious duty to obey the words of the Sages! — But, said R. Joseph, [it is deduced] from the following: If one betroths a woman and [then] declares, 'I thought her to be a priest's daughter, whereas she is the daughter of a Levite,' or 'a Levite's daughter and she is the daughter of a priest'; 'is poor, whereas she is wealthy', or 'is wealthy whereas she is poor' 'she is betrothed, because she has not deceived him. Yet why, seeing that he declares, 'I thought [etc.]'? But it must be because we say: A mental stipulation! — Said Abaye to him: Perhaps it is different there, for it [the ruling] is in the direction of stringency![5] — But, said Abaye, [it is deduced] from this: IN ALL THESE CASES, EVEN IF SHE DECLARES, 'IT WAS MY INTENTION TO BECOME BETROTHED TO HIM NOTWITHSTANDING', SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. Yet why, seeing that she declares, ' IT WAS MY INTENTION'? — But perhaps it is different there, for since he stipulated, it does not rest with her to set aside his stipulation! — But, said R. Hiyya b. Abin, this occurred at R. Hisda's,[6] and R. Hisda [went] to R. Huna's [academy, to discuss the matter], and it was solved from the following: If one says to his agent, 'Bring me [money] from the window [sill] or the chest,' and he brings it to him, even if the master says: 'I was thinking only of this [purse],'[7] yet since he brought him the money from this [place], the master is guilty of trespass.[8] Yet why, seeing that he says: 'I was thinking [etc.]ð? Hence it must surely be because we say that a mental declaration is null. Yet perhaps it is different there, because he comes to free himself from a sacrifice? — Then let him declare that he did it intentionally.[9] But it is unusual for a person to declare himself wicked? — Then let him say: 'I reminded myself.'[10] For it was taught: If the principal recollects [that it is of hekdesh] but not his agent, the latter is guilty of trespass.[11]

A certain man sold his property with the [express] intention of migrating to Palestine.[12] He migrated, but could not settle down. Said Raba: When one goes there, it is with the intention of settling, and this man has not settled.[13] Others state [that he ruled]: [He sold it] with the intention of migrating, and he has done so.[14] A certain man sold his property with the [express] intention of migrating to Palestine. Eventually he did not go. Said R. Ashi: He could have gone had he desired.[15] Others state [that R. Ashi declared]: Had he desired, could he have not gone?[16] Wherein do they differ? — They differ where an impediment cropped up on the road.[17]

MISHNAH. IF HE SAYS TO HIS AGENT, 'GO FORTH AND BETROTH TO ME SO-AND-SO IN SUCH AND SUCH A PLACE, AND HE GOES AND BETROTHS HER ELSEWHERE, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. 'SHE IS IN SUCH AND SUCH A PLACE, AND HE BETROTHS HER ELSEWHERE, SHE IS BETROTHED.

GEMARA. Now, we learned the same of divorce: If he says: 'Give my wife a divorce in such and such a place,' and it is given to her elsewhere, it is invalid. 'She is in such and such a place,' and it is given to her elsewhere, it is valid. And both are necessary. For if we were informed this of kiddushin, where he comes to unite her to himself,[18] [he may have thought:] 'in this place I am popular and nothing will be said against me, but in that place I am hated and slander[19] will be piled up against me.'[20] But in respect to divorce, seeing that he comes to drive her away, I might argue that he does not care.[21] And if we were informed this of divorce, [I might argue] in this place he is willing to be disgraced, but not in the other; [whereas] in respect to betrothal, I might argue that he does not care. Thus [both are] necessary. MISHNAH. IF HE BETROTHS A WOMAN ON CONDITION THAT SHE HAS NO VOWS UPON HER, AND IT IS FOUND THAT SHE HAS, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED, IF HE MARRIES HER[22] UNCONDITIONALLY, AND IT WAS FOUND SHE HAD VOWS UPON HER, SHE IS DIVORCED[23] WITHOUT HER KETHUBAH.[24] [IF HE BETROTHS HER] ON CONDITION THAT SHE HAS NO BLEMISHES, AND BLEMISHES ARE FOUND IN HER, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. IF HE MARRIES HER UNCONDITIONALLY AND BLEMISHES ARE FOUND IN HER, SHE IS DIVORCED WITHOUT HER KETHUBAH. ALL BLEMISHES WHICH INCAPACITATE PRIESTS [TO SERVE AT THE ALTAR] RENDER WOMEN UNFIT.[25]

GEMARA. And we learned this likewise [in the tractate] on Kethuboth.[26] Here he [the Tanna] desires [to give the ruling on] betrothal, and settlements are taught incidentally to betrothal. There settlements are necessary [to be dealt with], and betrothal is taught incidentally to settlements.

MISHNAH. IF HE BETROTHS TWO WOMEN WITH THE VALUE OF A PERUTAH, OR ONE WOMAN WITH LESS THAN A PERUTAH'S WORTH, EVEN IF HE SUBSEQUENTLY SENDS GIFTS,[27]

---

(1) Lev. I, 3: the second ‘he shall offer it’ is superfluous.

(2) To fulfil his vow.

(3) E.V. that he may be accepted.

(4) This refers to those who are compelled to free their wives or slaves.

(5) I.e., we may be uncertain whether a mental stipulation is valid or not. Consequently she is betrothed, in the sense that she is not free to remarry. Nevertheless, if she accepts kiddushin from another, she may be betrothed to the second, the betrothal of the first being null on account of the mental condition, and so she will require a divorce from both.

(6) I.e., he was requested to give a judicial ruling on such a matter.

(7) Whereas he brought the money from a different purse lying in the same place.

(8) The money brought to him was sacred money, for the unwitting secular use of which one is liable to a trespass-offering. Now, if this is done through an agent: if the agent carries out instructions, the principal is liable; if he does not carry out instructions, he himself is liable. (The liability is incurred not for actual use, but for taking it to use it, whereby it is removed from the ownership of hekdesh.)

(9) Which involves no sacrifice.

(10) After my servant went to expend it on my instructions.

(11) Hence if he wished to free himself by a lie he could have had recourse to this statement which is considered effective, and so we believe him that he meant a different purse; and yet he, not his agent, is liable, which proves that a mental declaration is not valid.

(12) Stating thus at the time of the sale.

(13) Hence the sale is null.

(14) Hence notwithstanding his return the sale stands.

(15) Hence the sale is valid.

(16) Surely he could (Rashi) — hence the sale stands. [Others: (even) if he desires he cannot go. Hence the sale is null. V, Joseph Karo on Tur. H.M. 206, and commentaries a.l.]

(17) E.g., it became infested with highwaymen. According to the first version, R. Ashi declared that he nevertheless could have gone, e.g., by joining a large company of travellers; hence the sale stands. But according to the second version, ‘could he have not gone,’ it is implied that there was nothing to prevent him. Here, however, there was, and so the sale is null.

(18) Lit., ‘bring her near’.

(19) Lit., ‘words’.

(20) Hence he was particular that she should be betrothed only where he stated.

(21) And when he says. ‘Divorce her in such and such a place,’ he merely indicates where she is to be found.

(22) This refers to nissu'in. q.v. Glos.
(23) Lit., ‘goes forth’.
(24) V. Glos.
(25) And they can be divorced without their kethubah.
(26) The Tractate dealing with women's settlements.
(27) Heb. siblonoth, cf. Gr.  ‘dona sponsalitia’, the gifts which one usually sent his betrothed.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 50b

SHE IS NOT BETROTHED, BECAUSE THEY WERE SENT ON ACCOUNT OF THE FIRST KIDDUSHIN.[1] IT IS LIKEWISE SO IF A MINOR BETROTHS.[2]

GEMARA. And it is necessary [to state both]. For if we were informed the case of a perutah's worth [for two women], [I might argue,] since money has gone forth from him, he may err [and think the kiddushin valid]. But [with respect to] less than a perutah's worth, I might say that he knows that kiddushin with less than a perutah's worth is invalid, and so when he sends gifts, he sends them as kiddushin.[3] And if these two cases were taught, that is because one may not be clear on a perutah's worth and less;[4] but when a minor betroths, all know that such betrothal is nothing; hence when he sends gifts, I might reason that he sends them as kiddushin. We are therefore informed otherwise.

It was stated: R. Huna said: We pay regard to[5] gifts: and Rabbah said likewise: We pay regard to gifts.[6] Rabbah said: An objection is raised against our teaching: EVEN IF HE SUBSEQUENTLY SENDS GIFTS, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED! — Abaye answered him: There the reason is as stated: BECAUSE THEY WERE SENT ON ACCOUNT OF THE FIRST KIDDUSHIN. Others state, Rabbah said: Whence do I know it?[7] From the reason stated: BECAUSE THEY WERE SENT ON ACCOUNT OF THE FIRST KIDDUSHIN: hence, it is [only] here, because he may err;[8] but elsewhere,[9] they [the gifts] may be kiddushin. And Abaye?[10] — The most remarkable case is taught.[11] It is unnecessary to state in general [that gifts are not betrothal], Seeing that he has not entered into the state of kiddushin at all.[12] But even here, when he has entered the state of kiddushin,[13] I might think that they [the gifts] are kiddushin:[14] hence we are informed [that it is not so].

What is our decision on the matter — R. Papa said: In that place where one [first] betroths and then sends gifts, we pay regard thereto;[15] but in that place where gifts are [first] sent and then one betroths, we have no fear. ‘[Where] one [first] betroths and then sends gifts’. — But that is obvious! — It is necessary [to state it] only where the majority [first] betroth and then send gifts; but the minority first send gifts and then betroth: I might argue, Let us pay regard to the minority; hence we are informed [otherwise].[16]

R. Aha son of R. Huna propounded to Raba: What if a deed of settlement became known in the market place?[17] — He replied: Simply because a marriage settlement becomes known in the market place we are to assume her a married woman! What is our decision thereon? — Said R. Ashi: ‘Where betrothal is [first] performed and then a kethubah[18] is written, we pay regard thereto; but in the place where they first write a kethubah and then betroth. we have no fear. In the place where there is [first] betrothal and then writing’ — but that is obvious! — It is necessary to state it only where scribes are rare: I might have thought that he just chanced to find a scribe:[19] hence we are informed [otherwise].

MISHNAH. IF ONE BETROTHS A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER OR A WOMAN AND HER SISTER SIMULTANEOUSLY,[20] THEY ARE NOT BETROTHED. AND IT ONCE HAPPENED TO FIVE WOMEN, AMONGST WHOM WERE TWO SISTERS, THAT A MAN GATHERED A BASKET OF FIGS, WHICH WAS THEIRS, AND WHICH WAS OF THE SEVENTH YEAR,[21] AND DECLARED, BE — HOLD, BE YE ALL BETROTHED UNTO ME WITH THIS BASKET, AND ONE ACCEPTED IT ON BEHALF OF ALL: THE SAGES RULED, THE SISTERS ARE NOT BETROTHED.

GEMARA. Whence do we know it? — Said Rami b. Hama: Because Scripture saith, and thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her [li-zeror]:[22] The Torah decreed that when they become rivals[23] to each other, he can have no marital connection with [even] one of them.[24] Said Raba to him: If so, how is it written, even the souls that do them shall be cut off from among their people:[25] but if kiddushin with her is not valid, is he then liable to kareth?[26] But, said Raba, the verse refers to consecutive [marriage],[27] and our Mishnah is in accordance with Rabbah, who said: That which cannot be [done] consecutively cannot be [done] simultaneously.

The text [stated]: 'Rabbah said: That which cannot be [done] consecutively cannot be done simultaneously.' Abaye raised an objection against him:

---

(1) But not as new kiddushin.

(2) And sends gifts on attaining his majority.

(3) And the fact that no declaration accompanies them makes no difference, such being unnecessary when preceded by marriage negotiations: v. supra 6a.

(4) He may have over-estimated the value of the article.

(5) Lit., 'fear'.

(6) If a marriage is arranged, and the would-be husband sends gifts in the presence of witnesses, we fear that these may be meant as kiddushin, and so she is a doubtful married woman. Should another man then betroth her, both must divorce her.

(7) That we pay regard to gifts.

(8) Thinking the first kiddushin valid.

(9) Where no kiddushin preceded the gifts.

(10) Does he accept this proof?

(11) Lit., 'he (the Tanna) says: "It is unnecessary".'

(12) The man not having given her previously any token of kiddushin.

(13) By actually offering something as such.

(14) For he discovered his error.

(15) If the gifts are first sent, we fear that they were meant for kiddushin.

(16) So the text in cur. edd. This however involves a difficulty: 'I might argue, let us fear the minority' implies that we are to impose a stringent ruling on that account, whereas here, by regarding the minority, we are lenient. Ri, quoted in Tosaf. s.v. dðv gives another reading: where gifts are first sent and then betrothal is performed — then it is obvious that she is not betrothed. It is necessary to state it only where the majority first send gifts and then betroth, yet a minority do the reverse. I might argue, let us fear the minority, so she is betrothed. Hence we are informed otherwise.

(17) A marriage settlement (kethubah) between a certain man and woman was seen, though it was not known whether they had actually become betrothed, and then she accepted kiddushin from another.

(18) V. Glos.

(19) And had the settlement drawn up before the betrothal, to take advantage of the scribe's presence.

(20) Saying, 'Be ye both betrothed unto me'.

(21) The Talmud discusses this below.

(22) Lev. XVIII, 18.

(23) Heb. zaroth, the technical designation of wives of the same husband in their relationship toward each other.

(24) It is now assumed that the verse refers to a simultaneous betrothal.

(25) Ibid. 29.

(26) V, Glos. in fact, he is not married to either, and so may take the sister.

(27) Lit., 'this after this'.

If one gives excessive tithes, his produce is made fit, but his tithes are unfit.[1] But why; let us say: That which cannot be [done] consecutively cannot be [done] simultaneously?[2] — Tithes are different, he replied, because it is possible in the case of half [grains]; for if one declares, 'Let half of each grain be sanctified [as tithe], it is sanctified.[3] But cattle tithes are impossible in halves,[4] and also impossible consecutively;[5] yet Rabbah said: If two [animals] came forth at the tenth, and he [their owner] proclaimed them both as 'tenth', the tenth and the eleventh are intermingled![6] — Cattle tithe is different, because it is valid in error. For we learnt: If the ninth was proclaimed 'tenth', the tenth, 'ninth', and the eleventh, 'tenth', all three are sanctified.[7] But what of the thanksgiving-offering which can neither be in error nor consecutively,[8] yet it was stated: If the thanksgiving-offering is slaughtered over eighty loaves, — Hezekiah said: Forty out of the eighty are sanctified; R. Johanan said: Not even forty out of the eighty are sanctified![9] — Was it not stated thereon: R. Joshua b. Levi[10] said: All agree that if he declared: 'Let forty out of the eighty be sanctified,' they are sanctified; 'forty are not to be sanctified unless eighty are sanctified,' they are not sanctified? They differ only where no specific statement is made:[11] one Master holds that his intention is [to arrange] for the risks;[12] the other, that his intention is for a large offering.[13] Now, why need Raba explain the Mishnah as Rabbah; let him deduce it from the fact that it cannot be followed by[14] intercourse?[15] — He [merely] explains it according to the view of Rami b. Hama.[16]

It was stated: Kiddushin which cannot be followed by intercourse, — Abaye says: It is valid kiddushin;[17] Raba said: It is not valid kiddushin. Raba said: Bar Ahina explained it to me: When a man taketh a woman and has intercourse with her;[18] [this teaches:] kiddushin[19] that can be followed by intercourse is [valid] kiddushin; that which cannot be followed by intercourse is not [valid] kiddushin.

We learnt: IF HE BETROTHS A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER OR A WOMAN AND HER SISTER SIMULTANEOUSLY, THEY ARE NOT BETROTHED. This implies, [if he betroths] one of a woman and her daughter or of a woman and her sister [without specifying which], she is betrothed: yet why, seeing that it is kiddushin which may not be followed by intercourse? Hence this refutes Raba! — Raba can answer you: Yet even on your view, consider the second clause: AND IT ONCE HAPPENED TO FIVE WOMEN, AMONGST WHOM WERE TWO SISTERS, THAT A MAN GATHERED A BASKET OF FIGS, WHICH WAS THEIRS, AND WHICH WAS OF THE SEVENTH YEAR, AND HE DECLARED, 'BEHOLD, YE ARE ALL BETROTHED UNTO ME WITH THIS BASKET, AND ONE ACCEPTED IT ON BEHALF OF ALL: THE SAGES THEN RULED, THE SISTERS ARE NOT BETROTHED. Thus, it is only the sisters who are not betrothed, but the strangers are. Now how is it meant? Shall we say that he declared: 'All of you'[20] — it is a case of 'you and the ass acquire', and such does not acquire.[21]

---

(1) Lit., 'spoiled'. After measuring off four measures, he separated one whole measure as tithe, instead of the half (= one tenth) due. Actually. however, only half becomes tithe, while the other half remains ordinary, untithed produce (tebel), and the two are inextricably mixed up. No man may eat tebel, not even a priest or a Levite, and hence the whole tithe is forbidden until it is made fit by a further proportionate separation.

(2) For if he first separates half a measure as tithe and then another half, the second is certainly not tithe. Accordingly, when he separates the whole simultaneously, none of it is tithe, on Rabbah's principle: why then is the produce fit?

(3) Hence, when he separates excessive tithes, it is as though he declared that only half of each grain in the whole measure shall be tithe. But one cannot betroth half a woman.

(4) One cannot count off nine animals and then declare the two halves of the next two as tithe.

(5) After declaring the tenth tithe, the eleventh cannot be declared likewise.

(6) One is actual tithe, and the other is treated as a peace-offering, though it is not known which is which. Yet why so? If he declares the tenth tithe and then the eleventh too, the second declaration is invalid. Why then is his simultaneous declaration valid?

(7) This is not the same as the case mentioned in the previous note, where the eleventh is deliberately and knowingly called ‘tenth’. — Hence, just as the eleventh is sanctified when it is designated ‘tenth’ in error, so are the tenth and the eleventh sanctified when designated simultaneously. But if one marries a second sister after the first in error, the second marriage is invalid; consequently they are invalid simultaneously.

(8) The thanksgiving-offering was accompanied by forty loaves, which were likewise sanctified (v. Lev, VII, 12ff: and Men. 76a). Now, if the animal is sacrificed to sanctify certain loaves, which, however, are not really those intended, they are not sanctified. Again, if after forty loaves are sanctified another forty are declared holy, the declaration is invalid.

(9) The controversy is assumed to centre on Rabbah's dictum. Hezekiah, R. Johanan's teacher, thus contradicts Rabbah.

(10) In ‘Er. 50a and Men. 78b the reading is R. Zera, and the same is required here.

(11) I.e., he merely declares that the slaughtering of the sacrifice shall hallow the loaves.

(12) He brings eighty so that if the forty sanctified loaves become unfit for any reason the other forty may replace them. Hence forty are sanctified.

(13) That the eighty should be sanctified: hence none are. This therefore has no bearing on Rabbah's dictum.

(14) Lit., ‘is not given over to’.

(15) For even if he betroths only one, but without specifying which, he cannot take either, for fear she is the sister of the betrothed, and Raba says below that such kiddushin is invalid.

(16) Who bases the ruling of the Mishnah on Lev. XVIII, 18.

(17) Hence he must divorce both, because of doubt.

(18) Deut. XXIV, 1.

(19) Implied by, when a man taketh, i.e., betroths.

(20) I.e., ‘All of you be betrothed to me’.

(21) If one bestows gifts upon a living person and an unborn child simultaneously, not even the first acquires his gift, because the second cannot, — metaphorically, ‘you and the ass acquire them’. Hence here too, since the sisters cannot acquire aught thereof as kiddushin, the others cannot either.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 51b

Hence it must surely mean that he said: ‘One of you,’[1] and it is taught that the sisters are not betrothed.[2] On Raba's view, the first clause is difficult; on Abaye's, the second. Abaye reconciles it according to his opinion. IF HE BETROTHS A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER OR A WOMAN AND HER SISTER SIMULTANEOUSLY, THEY ARE NOT BETROTHED; but if [he betrothed] one of a woman and her daughter or of a woman and her sister, she is betrothed. But if he says: ‘She of you who is eligible for intercourse, let her be betrothed unto me,’ she is not betrothed.[3] And thus IT ONCE HAPPENED TO FIVE WOMEN, AMONG WHOM WERE TWO SISTERS, THAT A MAN GATHERED A BASKET OF FIGS AND SAID, ‘She of you who is eligible [for intercourse], let her be betrothed unto me’: THE SAGES THEN RULED: THE SISTERS ARE NOT BETROTHED, Raba reconciled it with his opinion: If a man betroths one of a woman and her daughter or a woman and her sister, it is as though he betrothed A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER OR A WOMAN AND HER SISTER SIMULTANEOUSLY, AND THEY ARE NOT BETROTHED. AND IT THUS HAPPENED TO FIVE WOMEN, AMONG WHOM WERE TWO SISTERS, THAT A MAN GATHERED A BASKET OF FIGS AND DECLARED, ‘Behold, all of you, and one of the two sisters, are betrothed unto me with this basket’: THEN THE SAGES RULED: THE SISTERS ARE NOT BETROTHED.

Come and hear: If he gives his daughters in betrothal without specifying which, bogeroth[4] are not included.[5] But minors are included: yet why, Seeing that it is kiddushin which cannot be followed by intercourse?[6] which refutes Raba! — Raba can answer you: Here the circumstances are that there are only one bogereth and one minor. But ‘bogeroth’[7] is taught! — By bogeroth, bogeroth in general are meant.[8] If so,[9] why state it? — We refer to the case where she [the bogereth] appointed him [her father] an agent.[10] I might have thought that when he accepted kiddushin he did it on her behalf: hence we are informed that a man does not put aside that by which he benefits.[11] But do we not refer [even] to where she said to him, ‘Let my kiddushin be yours!’ — Even so, a man does not leave undone an obligation [sc. marrying his daughter] which falls [primarily] upon himself,[12] to perform

one which does not.[13]

Come and hear: If one has two groups of daughters by two wives, and he declares, 'I have given in betrothal my senior daughter, but do not know whether the senior of the seniors[14] or the senior of the juniors, or the junior of the seniors who is senior to the senior of the juniors,' all are forbidden, excepting the junior of the juniors: this is R. Meir's opinion![15] — Here the circumstances are that they were [originally] known, and [only] subsequently mixed up.[16] This maybe proved, for it is taught: 'I do not know,' not, it is not known. This proves it. If so, why state it? — To counter R. Jose, who said: A man does not permit himself to be brought into doubt;[17] hence we are informed that one does bring himself into doubt.

Come and hear: If a man betrothed one of two sisters and does not know which, he must give a divorce to both![18] — Here [too] the circumstances are that they were [originally] known but only subsequently intermingled. This too may be proved, for it is taught: 'he does not know,' not, it is not known. If so, why state it? — The second clause is necessary: If he dies, and has one brother, he must perform halizah[19] with both; if he has two [brothers], one performs halizah and the other yibum;[20] yet if they forestall [the Rabbis' ruling] and marry them, they are not compelled to divorce them,[21] [Thus:] only halizah and then yibum [is permissible], but not yibum and then halizah, because he may infringe [the interdict against] the sister of one bound to him by the Levirate tie.[22]

Come and hear: If two [strangers] betroth two sisters, and neither knows which, each must give two divorces![23] — Here too it means that they were [originally] known but [only] subsequently mixed up. This may be deduced too, for it is taught: 'neither knows,' not, it is not known: this proves it. If so, why state it?The second clause is necessary: If each dies, and each had one brother, this one must perform halizah with both, and the other must perform halizah with both. If one had one brother and the other two brothers,

---

(1) I.e., let the three strangers and one of you be betrothed to me.

(2) Proving that kiddushin which cannot be followed by intercourse is invalid.

(3) For neither is eligible.

(4) V. Glos.

(5) Because a father has no marriage rights over his adult daughters.

(6) As explained on p. 258, n. 2.

(7) Plural.

(8) I.e., in general when a man betroths his daughter without naming her, an adult is not meant.

(9) That he has only one adult and one minor daughter.

(10) To accept kiddushin on her behalf.

(11) Sc. the kiddushin of his minor daughter which belongs to him, whereas that of a bogereth is her own.

(12) Sc. the betrothal of his minor daughter.

(13) A bogereth can see to herself.

(14) From the earlier wife.

(15) This refutes Raba, since intercourse cannot follow such betrothal.

(16) He betrothed a particular daughter, but forgot which.

(17) V. Ned. 61b. So that all of whom there can be the least doubt are definitely excluded, and only the senior of the seniors is forbidden to strangers.

(18) Which again refutes Raba.

(19) V. Glos.

(20) V. Glos.

(21) Lit., 'they are not taken out of their hands'.

(22) Lit., 'he comes into contact with the sister etc'. — Thus: A betrothed X or Y, who are sisters, but does not remember which. On A's death, his brothers B and C perform halizah and yibum with X and Y respectively. Now, when B performs halizah with X, C may marry (perform yibum) Y. For if A had betrothed Y, she is C's yebamah, whom he must marry; while if A had betrothed X, Y is a stranger to C, and he may certainly marry her. For though Y is then the sister of X, who was bound to him by the Levirate tie, and such is forbidden, that tie has already been dissolved by the halizah which B performed. But before the tie is dissolved by halizah marriage is forbidden; hence only that order is permissible, viz., halizah by one brother first and then yibum by the second, (Of course, that is only permissive: the second too may perform halizah, if he does not wish to marry her.) The prohibition mentioned in this note is only Rabbinical, and therefore not insisted upon if the brothers marry both sisters without consulting a Rabbi previously, Yeb. 23b,

(23) This too refutes Raba: v. p. 258, n. 2.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 52a

the one [brother] must perform halizah with both, and of the two, one must perform halizah [first] and the other yibum; yet if they forestall [the Rabbis' ruling] and marry, they are not compelled to divorce them. Thus, only halizah and then yibum, but not yibum and then halizah, because he may infringe [the interdict against] a yebamah's marriage to a stranger.[1]

Come and hear: For Tabyumi learned: If A has five sons and B five daughters, and A declares; 'One of your daughters be betrothed to one of my sons,'[2] each requires five divorces. If one dies, each requires four divorces and halizah from one of them![3] And should you answer, here too it means that they were [originally] known and only subsequently mixed up — but it is taught: 'One of your daughters to one of my sons!'[4] This refutation of Raba is indeed a refutation. Now, the law agrees with Abaye in Y'AL KGM.[5]

IT HAPPENED TO FIVE WOMEN. Rab said: Four deductions follow from the Mishnah; yet Rab was sure only of three:[6] — [i] If one betroths [a woman] with seventh year produce, she is betrothed;[7] [ii] If he betroths her with a stolen article, even her own, she is not betrothed.[8] How does this follow? — Because it is stated: IT WAS THEIRS, AND IT WAS OF THE SEVENTH YEAR: thus, it is only because It was of the seventh year, and thus hefker;[9] but if of any other year,[10] it is not so.[11] [iii] A woman can be an agent for her companion,[12] even when she thereby becomes her rival.[13] And what is the fourth? — Kiddushin which cannot be followed by intercourse. — Then let him count it?[14] — Because he is doubtful whether it is [to be explained] according to Abaye or Raba.[15]

When R. Zera went up [to Palestine, from Babylon], he recited this pronouncement [of Rab] before R. Johanan. Said he to him: Did then Rab say thus! But did he himself not say [likewise]? Surely R. Johanan said: If one stole[16] [an article] and the owner did not abandon hope,[17] both cannot consecrate it: the one [the thief], because it is not his;[18] the other, because it is not [actually] in his possession! — He meant thus: Did Rab [truly] rule as I [did]?

An objection is raised: If one betroths a woman with an article of robbery, violence, or theft,[19] or if he snatches a sela' out of her hand and betroths her therewith, she is betrothed? — There it refers to her own robbery.[20] But since the second clause teaches 'or if he snatches a sela' out of her hand,' it follows that the first clause refers to robbery in general? — It is an explanation. If one betroths a woman with robbery. How so? If he snatches an article out of her hand and betroths her therewith.

---

(1) Lit., 'a yebamah to the market place'. — The general reasoning is the same as in the previous case. When the one brother frees both sisters by halizah, the others may perform halizah and yibum. But before the one brother has performed his task, one of the sisters may be his yebamah, and so neither of the other two brothers can perform yibum.

(2) His sons had authorised him.

(3) This contradicts Raba.

(4) Shewing that there was doubt at the very outset.

(5) An abbreviation of six laws; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 159, n. 3. The K stands for kiddushin which cannot be followed by coition. In every other controversy between Abaye and Raba the halachah is as the latter.

(6) As explained below — Lit., 'he held three in his hand.'

(7) Though it is free to all.

(8) 'Even her own' — and we do not say that her acceptance proves that she has forgiven him and renounced her rights therein, so that it ceases to be stolen property.

(9) V. Glos. Hence it is not stolen.

(10) Lit., 'the other years of the septennate.'

(11) But the betrothal is invalid.

(12) To accept kiddushin on her behalf.

(13) Zarah, q.v. Glos.

(14) Why is he in doubt?

(15) Supra 51a and b. According to their respective interpretations the Mishnah proves either that it is valid or that it is not; but Rab was not sure which interpretation was correct.

(16) Gazal denotes theft by violence.

(17) Of its return. Yi'ush is a technical term, despair or abandonment, whereby a stolen (or lost) article formally passes out of its first ownership into that of the person actually in possession. — The thief is then liable for having removed it from the ownership of the victim.

(18) But it is technically his if the owner abandons it.

(19) An article of robbery is one stolen by violence; 'theft' denotes stolen in secret; 'violence', an article forcibly taken from its owner and paid for.

(20) I.e., he robbed her, cf. p. 262, n. 7: the argument rejected there is admitted here.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 52b

But our Mishnah [deals with] her own robbery,[1] yet Rab said: She is not betrothed?

There is no difficulty: in the one case, he had [previously] negotiated [with her for marriage];[2] in the other, he had not negotiated.

A certain woman was washing her feet in a bowl of water, when a man came, snatched a zuz from his neighbour, threw it to her and exclaimed: 'Thou are betrothed unto me!' Then that man went before Raba, who said to him; None pay regard to R. Simeon's dictum, viz.: Robbery in general involves the owner's abandonment.[3]

A certain aris[4] betrothed [a woman] with a handful of onions.[5] When he came before Raba he said to him, 'Who renounced it in your favour?'[6] Now, that applies only to a handful;[7] but as for a bunch, he [the aris] can say to him [the landowner], 'As I have taken a bunch, do you take one: one bunch is the same as another.'[8]

A certain agent-brewer[9] betrothed [a woman] with a measure of beer.[10] Then the owner of the beer came and found him. Said he to him, 'Why did you not give [her] of this [beer, which is] stronger?' When he came before Raba, he said to him. 'Go to the better' was said only in reference to terumah.[11] For it was taught: In which case was it ruled that if one separates [terumah] without [the owner's] knowledge, his separation is valid? If one enters[12] his neighbour's field, gathers [the crops] and separates [terumah] without permission: and he [the owner] resents it as [akin to] theft, his separation is not valid; otherwise, it is. And how does one know whether he resents it as theft or not? If the owner comes and finds him, and says to him, 'Go to the better [produce]': and better [crops] are found, the separation is valid;[13] if not, it is invalid.[14] If the owner gathers [crops] and adds [to that already separated], in both cases his separation is valid. But here he acted thus[15] through shame;[16] hence she is not betrothed.

MISHNAH. IF ONE [A PRIEST] BETROTHS [A WOMAN] WITH HIS PORTION;[17]

WHETHER [IT IS OF] THE HIGHER OR OF THE LOWER SANCTITY,[18] SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.[19] [IF] WITH SECOND TITHE,[20] WHETHER UNWITTINGLY OR DELIBERATELY, HE DOES NOT BETROTH [HER]: THIS IS R. MEIR'S VIEW.[21] R. JUDAH SAID: IF UNWITTINGLY, HE HAS NOT BETROTHED [HER]; IF DELIBERATELY, HE HAS. [IF] WITH HEKDESH,[22] IF DELIBERATELY, HE HAS BETROTHED HER; IF UNWITTINGLY, HE HAS NOT: THIS IS R. MEIR'S VIEW. R. JUDAH SAID: IF UNWITTINGLY, HE HAS BETROTHED HER; IF DELIBERATELY, HE HAS NOT.[23]

GEMARA. Shall we say that our Mishnah does not agree with R. Jose the Galilean? For it was taught: [If any one sin] and commit a trespass against the Lord [. . . then he shall bring his guilt-offering]:[24] this is to include lower grade sacrifices as his [the individual's] property:[25] this is R. Jose the Galilean's opinion! — You may even say that it agrees with R. Jose the Galilean: he stated [that view] only whilst it [the animal to be sacrificed] is alive, but not after it is killed. What is the reason? When they[26] acquire [thereof], it is from the table of the Most High that they acquire [it].[27] This may be deduced too; because it is stated: IF ONE BETROTHS [A WOMAN] WITH HIS PORTION, WHETHER [IT IS OF] THE HIGHER OR OF THE LOWER SANCTITY, HE HAS NOT BETROTHED HER.[28]

Our Rabbis taught: After R. Meir's demise, R. Judah announced to his disciples, 'Let not R. Meir's disciples enter hither, because they are disputatious and do not come to learn Torah but to overwhelm one with halachoth.'[29] Yet Symmachus forced his way through and entered. Said he to them: Thus did R. Meir teach me: If one betroths [a woman] with his portion, whether of the higher or of the lower sanctity, he has not betrothed [her]. Thereupon R. Judah became incensed with them and exclaimed: 'Did I not say to you, Let not R. Meir's disciples enter hither, because they are disputatious and do not come to learn Torah but to overwhelm me with halachoth: how then does a woman come to be in the Temple Court?'[30] Said R. Jose, Shall it be said: Meir is dead, Judah angry, and Jose silent: what is to become of the words of the Torah? Cannot a man accept kiddushin on his daughter's behalf in the Temple Court? And cannot a woman authorize a messenger to receive her kiddushin in the Temple Court? Again, what if she forces herself in?[31]

It was taught: R. Judah said: She is betrothed;[32] R. Jose ruled: She is not betrothed. Said R. Johanan: Both derive [their views] from the same verse: This shall be thine of the most holy things, reserved from the fire.[33] R. Judah holds, 'thine' [implies] for all thy needs;[34] whereas R. Jose maintains it is as [what is offered on] 'the fire':[35] just as the fire is for consumption only,[36] so that too is for consumption [by the priest] only.[37]

R. Johanan said:

---

(1) Since it states 'IT WAS THEIRS'.

(2) Then she accepts it as kiddushin, and thereby it ceases to be robbery, as explained.

(3) V. n. 1. I.e., if we do not know whether the owner abandons the article or not, we assume that he does. Raba told him that this ruling is disregarded: hence the betrothal was invalid.

(4) A tenant-farmer, who pays a certain percentage of his crops as rent.

(5) Rashi. Jast.: leaves of onions, leek.

(6) The onions belong partly to the landlord; did he renounce his portion? I.e., it is theft, and the betrothal is invalid.

(7) Being an indeterminate quantity.

(8) Hence the kiddushin would be valid.

(9) Rashi: who brewed beer from dates supplied to him, receiving a fixed percentage of the profits.

(10) Others, reading 'pirzuma', the second run of barley beer.

(11) V. n. 6. infra.

(12) Lit., 'descends into'.

(13) For this proves that he meant what he said.

(14) For he thus sarcastically shewed his resentment. Now, this criterion applies only to terumah, since it must be separated in any case.
(15) Bidding him take stronger beer.
(16) Being ashamed to express an objection.
(17) Of the sacrifices.
(18) Sacrifices were of two degrees of sanctity: the higher (holy of holies), e.g., the sin-offering, and the lower (less holy), e.g., the peace-offering. The former were eaten by priests only; the latter, partly by priests and partly by their Israelite owners.
(19) Because it is regarded as God's, not the priests'.
(20) Which the Israelite separated and ate in Jerusalem.
(21) He regards second tithe too as God's.
(22) V. Glos.
(23) The reasons are explained in the Gemara.
(24) Lev. V, 21. The trespass referred to is repudiation of liability with a false oath.
(25) If one swears falsely that he did not vow a peace-offering, which is of the lower sanctity, he incurs this sacrifice. Though this law does not hold good in respect to God's property (deduced from, 'and deal falsely with his neighbour' ibid.), the phrase 'against the Lord' shews that even where there is an element of sanctity this sacrifice is involved. Hence it includes lower grade sacrifices, and thus teaches that these rank as the individual's property; this contradicts the ruling of the Mishnah.
(26) The owner and the Priest.
(27) I.e., having been sacrificed, it is certainly God's.
(28) 'HIS PORTION' implies that it is already divided — viz., after its death.
(29) To prove one ignorant.
(30) Sacrifices of the higher sanctity might not be taken out of the Temple Court, not even into the women's compartment. Rashi observes that women were forbidden to enter the Temple Court. Tosaf. holds this to be an error, and explains: how then does a woman come to be in the Temple Court for such a purpose? For that is too unusual to be dealt with.
(31) And accepts kiddushin, though she has no right to be there at all, according to Rashi; or, 'forces' is used metaphorically: what if she insists on entering there for that purpose, though it is unusual? (so presumably understood by Tosaf.)
(32) When given the priests' portion as kiddushin.
(33) Num. XVIII, 9.
(34) Which includes betrothal.
(35) Sc. on the altar.
(36) The portion belonging to God is consumed by fire on the altar, and cannot be disposed of in any other way.
(37) And he cannot put it to any other use.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 53a

A vote was taken [among scholars] and it was resolved: He who betroths with his portion, whether of the higher or of the lower sanctity, has not betrothed. But Rab maintained: The dispute continues.[1] Said Abaye: Reason supports R. Johanan. For it was taught: How do we know that meal-offerings may not be apportioned as against sacrifices?[2] From the verse, and every meal-offering that is baked in the oven . . . shall all the sons of Aaron have.[3] I might think that meal-offerings may not be apportioned as against sacrifices, seeing that they cannot replace them in poverty, yet meal-offerings may be apportioned as against fowl-offerings, since they do replace them in poverty:[4] therefore it is stated, and all that is dressed in the frying pan . . . shall all the sons of Aaron have.[5] I might think that meal-offerings cannot be apportioned as against fowl-offerings, since the latter are blood species and the former a species of flour, but that fowl-offerings may be apportioned as against [animal] sacrifices, since both are blood species; therefore it is stated, and in the baking pan.[6] I might think, fowl-offerings may not be apportioned as against animal sacrifices, since the preparation of the former is by hand, whereas that of the latter is with a utensil;[7] but that meal-offerings can be apportioned as against meal-offerings,[8] since the preparation of both is by hand:[9] therefore it is stated, and every meal-offering mingled with oil . . . shall all the sons of Aaron have.[10] I might think that a baking pan [offering] shall not be apportioned as against a frying pan [offering], or a frying pan [offering] as against a baking pan [offering], because one is made soft and the other hard;[11] but that one baking pan [offering] may be apportioned as against another,[12] and one frying pan [offering] against another, since both are hard or soft respectively; therefore it is said, or dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have.[13] Now, I might think that sacrifices of the higher sanctity[14] may not be [so] apportioned, yet those of the lower sanctity may be;[15] therefore it is stated: '[shall all the sons of Aaron have], a man as his brother,' and in proximity thereto,if [he offers it] for a thanksgiving:[16] just as higher sanctity sacrifices may not be [so] apportioned, so also offerings of the lower sanctity. 'A man' [teaches]: a man takes a share, even if he has a blemish, but not a minor, even if he is without blemish. Now, who is the author of an anonymous teaching in the Sifra? R. Judah:[17] And he states that it is not capable of apportionment at all.[18] This proves it.

Said Raba: And was it not taught as Rab too? But it was taught: The modest withdrew their hands, but the greedy shared.[19] [No.] By 'shared' is meant snatched [other priests' shares]. As the second clause states: It happened that one snatched his own and his neighbour's portion, and he was called Ben Hamzan[20] [robber] until the day of his death. Said Rabbah son of R. Shila: What verse [have we]?[21] — Rescue me, O my Lord, out of the hand of the wicked, Out of the hand of the unrighteous and violent [homez].[22] Rabbah said, [We learn it] from the following: learn to do well, seek judgment, set right the man of violence.[23]

WITH SECOND TITHE, WHETHER UNWITTINGLY OR DELIBERATELY, HE HAS NOT BETROTHED [HER]: THIS IS R. MEIR'S VIEW. R. JUDAH SAID: IF UNWITTINGLY, HE HAS NOT BETROTHED [HER]; IF DELIBERATELY, HE HAS etc. How do we know this? Said R. Aha son of Raba on the authority of tradition:[24] and all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord:[25] 'unto the Lord', and not for betrothing a woman therewith. But what of the terumah of the tithe,[26] whereof it is written, thus ye shall also offer an heave-offering unto the Lord [of all your tithes],[27] — yet we learnt: If one betroths with terumoth,[28] she is betrothed? — That is because 'unto the Lord' is not written there.[29] But what of hallah,[30] whereof it is written, [of the first of your dough] ye shall give unto the Lord,[31] — yet we learnt: If one betroths [a woman] with terumoth,[32] she is betrothed? — That is because 'holy' is not written there. But what of the seventh year, whereof it is written: For it is a jubilee; it shall be holy unto you,[33] yet we learnt: If one betroths with seventh year produce, [the woman is] betrothed?[34] — That is because 'unto the Lord' is not written there. But what of terumah, whereof it is written: Israel is holy unto the Lord, the first-fruits [i.e., terumah] of his produce,[35] — yet we learnt: If one betroths [a woman] with terumoth, she is betrothed? — That refers to Israel.

---

(1) There was no vote on the matter, in which case R. Judah would have revoked his ruling.

(2) One priest to receive meal-offerings and another portions of animal sacrifices to the equivalent value.

(3) Lev. VII, 9f; this implies that all the priests must share in the meal-offerings themselves.

(4) V. Lev. V, II.

(5) Ibid. This insistence that every kind of meal-offering shall be divided among all the priests shews that under no circumstance may they be divided against anything else.

(6) Lev. VII, 9. This being unnecessary for meal-offerings, which have already been dealt with in two verses, apply its teaching to the case under discussion.

(7) Fowl-offerings had their necks wrung by hand; animal sacrifices were slaughtered with a knife.

(8) One kind against another.

(9) The priest taking a handful of the meal and burning it on the altar-ibid. V, 12.

(10) I.e., each kind must be divided by all,

(11) The mahabath (baking pan) was very shallow, and the flour mingled with oil formed a thin dough which was fried by the fire; but the marhesheth (frying pan) was deep: this caused a thick dough which the fire could only cook.

(12) Do you take my portion in A's offering and give me your portion in B's.
(13) This further insistence teaches that each must keep his own.
(14) As the meal-offering.
(15) Do you take my portion of A's peace-offering and I will take yours in B's.
(16) Which is of lower sanctity.
(17) V. p. 247, n. 1.
(18) As explained: one portion cannot be exchanged for another. This proves that in his final opinion the priest's portion is not his own, to do as he likes with, but a gift from God to be consumed.
(19) This describes the state in the Temple after the death of Simeon the Just. Raba assumes that 'shared' means that they traded in their portions, bartering one for another. This must agree with R. Judah, who regards the priest's portion as his private property, to be used as he wishes, and shews that there was no majority decision.
(20) [A violent person. Ben (lit., 'son') expressing an attributive idea. V. Gesenius-Kautzsch Hebrew Grammar, 128t.]
(21) That hamzan connotes a man of violence, a robber.
(22) Ps. LXXI, 4.
(23) Isa. I, 17.
(24) I.e., it came to him anonymously; Kaplan, Redaction of the Talmud, p. 227.
(25) Lev, XXVII, 30.
(26) The tithe was given to the Levite, who further gave a tenth thereof, called the terumah of the tithe, to the priest.
(27) Num. XVIII, 28.
(28) Plur. of terumah, and this including the terumah of the tithe, v. infra 58a.
(29) It is the emphatic 'it is the Lord's' which teaches that it may not be used for betrothal.
(30) V. Glos.
(31) Num. XV, 21; unto the Lord is the same word in Heb. as it is the Lord's.
(32) Pl. of terumah; hallah is included in that term.
(33) Lev. XXV, 12.
(34) V. Mishnah on 50b re the man who betrothed five women with seventh year produce: the strangers among them were legally betrothed.
(35) Jer. II, 3.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 53b

But does that not follow automatically?[1] Rabin the Elder explained it before Rab:[2] Scripture saith, it is [hu] — it must remain in its natural form.[3]

[IF] WITH HEKDESH, IF DELIBERATELY, HE HAS BETROTHED HER; IF UNWITTINGLY, HE HAS NOT: THIS IS R. MEIR' S VIEW. R. JUDAH SAID: IF UNWITTINGLY, HE HAS BETROTHED HER; IF DELIBERATELY, HE HAS NOT. R. Jacob said: I heard from R. Johanan two [reasons on the laws concerning] the unwitting [use of] tithes [for betrothal], according to R. Judah, and the unwitting [use of] hekdesh, on R. Meir's view, [that] in both cases a woman is not betrothed therewith. One [reason] is that the woman does not wish it;[4] the other, that both do not desire it. But I do not know which is which.[5] Said R. Jeremiah: Let us consider. As for tithes, she is unwilling because of the trouble of the journey;[6] he, however, is pleased that the woman should become his without effort.[7] But as for hekdesh, both are unwilling that hekdesh should be secularised through them.[8] But R. Jacob maintained: The logic is the reverse. Can we not argued as for tithes, she is unwilling on account Of the trouble of the journey, whilst he is unwilling on account of the risks of the journey.[9] But as for hekdesh: it is indeed well that she is unwilling that hekdesh is secularised through her;[10] but is he then unwilling that the woman should become his without effort?[11]

Raba asked R. Hisda: The woman [it is said.] is not betrothed; does the money[12] pass out into hullin? — Seeing that the woman is not betrothed,[13] how is the money to pass out into hullin? R. Hiyya b. Abin asked R. Hisda: How is it in the case of purchase?[14] — In the case of purchase too, he replied, he gains no title. Thereupon he raised an objection: A shopkeeper ranks as a private individual: this is R. Meir's view. R. Judah maintained: A shopkeeper is as a money-changer.[15] Thus, they differ only in so far as one Master holds that a shopkeeper ranks as a money-changer. and the other regards him as a private individual. Yet all [including R. Meir] agree that if he expends it, trespass is committed?[16] — He argues on R. Judah's opinion. In my view, even if he expends it there is no trespass;[17] but even on your view,[18] you should at least agree with me that a shopkeeper is as a private individual. To which he answered him: No; he is as a money-changer.

Rab said:

---

(1) Since Israel is likened to terumah and as such designated 'holy to the Lord', it follows that the same applies to terumah.

(2) The reason of the Mishnah with reference to the second tithe.

(3) I.e., the tithe must be used just as it is given to the Levite, viz., consumed by him, and not diverted to another purpose.

(4) Had she known what it was, she would not have accepted it as kiddushin, and therefore it is betrothal in error.

(5) For which opinion he gave the first reason, and for which the second — The practical difference is this: where the first reason applies — if the woman explicitly declares that she had no objection, the betrothal is valid, and it may be assumed that the man too was willing.

(6) It has to be taken to Jerusalem.

(7) Giving her the tithe actually saves him trouble.

(8) When he gives her hekdesh he withdraws it from its sacred ownership and it becomes secular (hullin). But since this involves a sacrifice, it may be assumed that both are unwilling.

(9) Rashi offers two explanations: (i) Since the tithe must be consumed in Jerusalem, he must bear the risks of the road-risks to which a woman is more exposed than a man, for until it reaches Jerusalem it has no value. For if she redeems it, the money must be carried to Jerusalem, and so he is in the same position. (ii) Even if he bears no responsibility for the risks of the road, yet if she loses it she may be resentful with him for having betrothed her with something of which she derived no benefit, and therefore he too is displeased. Tosaf. accepts the second.

(10) Since she has no particular benefit therefrom — he would have given her something else.

(11) I.e., without any outlay of his own for the present.

(12) Which is hekdesh.

(13) So that his statement is null.

(14) On R. Meir's view, what if one unwittingly buys an article with money belonging to hekdesh; does he acquire it or not?

(15) Me'il. 21b. If the Temple treasurer deposits money of hekdesh with a money-changer and it is bound up, he may not use it; if he does, he is liable for trespass, not the treasurer. If loose, he may use it, for the treasurer knows that he is continually in need of change, and by giving it to him loose he tacitly authorizes him to use it: therefore, if he does, the treasurer is liable. But if he deposits it with a private individual, whether loose or bound up, the bailee may not expend it; therefore if he does use it he is liable. A shopkeeper stands midway between the two.

(16) Now, one is liable for trespass only if the money actually becomes hullin: but that in turn demands that the action shall be effective and the purchase valid.

(17) Because his action is invalid. (Consequently R. Meir must hold that trespass is possible only when one eats food of hekdesh.)

(18) That expenditure is trespass.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 54a

We have scrutinised R. Meir['s views] from every angle, and have not found that hekdesh, unwittingly used, is not secularised; if deliberately, it is.[1] But our Mishnah refers to priestly tunics which were not worn out, since they stand[2] to be used, for the Torah was not given to angels.[3] Come and hear: Worn out priestly tunics involve trespass: this is R. Meir's view. Surely the same holds good even if they are not worn out?[4] — No: only when they are worn out.[5]

Come and hear: Trespass can be committed with the new ones, but not with the old. R. Meir said: Trespass can be committed with the old too; for R. Meir used to say: Trespass can be committed with the surplus of the Chamber.[6] Yet why; let us say, since they stand to be used, for the Torah was not given to angels [no trespass is committed with them]. For the walls of the city and its towers came out of the Chamber surplus, as we learnt: The city wall and its towers and all city requirements were provided for out of the chamber surplus![7] — Say not 'R. Meir', but 'R. Judah'.[8]

Come and hear: For it was taught: R. Ishmael b. R. Isaac said: If the stones of Jerusalem fall out [of their place in the walls], no trespass is incurred with them: this is R. Meir's view! — Say not, 'R. Meir', but, 'R. Judah'. If R. Judah, is then Jerusalem [the city itself] sanctified? But we learnt: 'As the lamb', 'As the Temple sheds of cattle' or 'As the wood', 'As the [altar] fire', 'As the altar', 'As the Temple', [or] 'As Jerusalem . . .' R. Judah said: He who says: 'Jerusalem', has said nothing.[9] And should you answer, that is because he did not say: 'As Jerusalem',[10] — surely it was taught: R. Judah said: He who says: 'as Jerusalem' has said nothing, unless he relates his vow to that which is sacrificed in Jerusalem![11] —

---

(1) I.e., not a single statement by R. Meir elsewhere warrants this assumption, which is implicit in R. Johanan's explanation of the Mishnah.

(2) Lit., 'were given'.

(3) Lit., 'ministering angels'. Since the tunics are still fit For service, their unwitting use is no trespass, because they were sanctified in the first place on this tacit understanding. For the priests cannot be expected to disrobe immediately they finish the service and not wear them a moment after. Consequently, they do not pass out of the ownership of hekdesh through unwitting use, and therefore R. Meir holds that she is not betrothed.

(4) Thus proving that their unwitting use involves trespass. (There is no liability to a trespass-offering for the deliberate use of hekdesh.)

(5) Being unfit for service, they are not to be used.

(6) There was an annual tax of one shekel for the public sacrifices payable between the first of Adar and the first of Nisan. The money was placed in a chamber and with it were bought sacrifices between Passover and Pentecost. If the tax was paid between the second of Nisan and the first of Sivan in the year it fell due, it was placed in special chests, which bore the inscription, 'New shekels', with which were bought sacrifices between Pentecost and Tabernacles. The same applied to the shekels paid between the second of Sivan and first of Tishri. The chests were then placed in the shekel chamber where they were divided into three baskets, (v. Shek. III, I, 2.) If the tax was not paid in the year it was due but in the following, it was placed in other chests marked 'old shekels.' These, together with the surplus from the chamber fund each year, were not used for sacrifices but for general town purposes, such as repairing the walls, etc.

(7) This proves that though the money might be used for that, yet if it was unwittingly employed for another purpose, liability is incurred. Hence the same should apply to the priestly tunics.

(8) For R. Judah does indeed hold the view expressed in the last note, as shewn in our Mishnah too,

(9) I.e., the vow is invalid; v. Ned. (Sonc. ed.) p. 27.

(10) I.e., Jerusalem itself is sanctified, and so a vow that something (e.g., food) shall be as Jerusalem is valid and renders the object forbidden. But R. Judah's reason is that the vower omitted 'as'.

(11) For notes v. Ned. (Sonc. ed.) p. 28, n. 3,

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 54b

Two Tannaim differ as to R. Judah's view.[1]

'Ulla said on Bar Pada's authority: R. Meir used to say that hekdesh, deliberately used, is secularised; unwittingly, it is not secularised.[2] And only in respect to sacrifice was it said that it is secularised by unwitting [misuse].[3] But since it is not secularised, whereby does he become liable to a sacrifice?[4] But when Rabin came [from Palestine], he explained it in Bar Pada's name: R. Meir used to say that hekdesh, deliberately used, is secularised; unwittingly, is not secularised. And only in respect of consumption was it said that it is secularised by unwitting misuse.[5]

R. Nahman said in R. Adda b. Ahaba's name: The halachah agrees with R. Meir in respect to [second-] tithe, since the Tanna taught his view anonymously;[6] and the halachah is as R, Judah in respect to hekdesh, since the Tanna taught his view anonymously.

[We learnt anonymously] as R. Meir in respect to [second-] tithe. To what is the reference? For we learnt. Fourth year vintage:[7] Beth Shammai maintain: It is not subject to a fifth[8] or removal;[9] Beth Hillel rule: It is. Beth Shammai rule: The law of fallings and gleanings apply to it;[10] Beth Hillel say: It is all for the vault.[11] What is Beth Hillel's reason? — They deduce the meaning of 'holy' from [second-] tithe:[12] just as tithe is subject to a fifth and removal, so is fourth year vintage too. While Beth Shammai do not deduce the meaning of 'holy' from tithe. Now, when Beth Hillel rule that it is as [the second-] tithe, with whom do they hold? If with R. Judah, why is it all for the vault, but he maintains that the [second-] tithe is secular property?[13] Hence surely [they agree] with R. Meir.[14]

'[We learnt anonymously] as R. Judah in respect to hekdesh.' To what is the reference? — For we learnt: If he [the Temple treasurer] sends it[15] by a responsible person[16] and recollects[17] before it reaches the shopkeeper's hands, the latter is guilty of trespass when he expends it.[18] Yet did we not learn [anonymously] as R. Judah in respect to [second-] tithe? But we learnt: If one redeems his own second-tithe, he must add a fifth,[19] whether it was his [in the first place] or given to him as a gift.[20] Whose [view] is this? Shall we say: R. Meir's? Can one give it as a gift: surely he maintains that [second-] tithe is sacred property? Hence it must surely be R. Judah's![21] — No. After all, it is R. Meir's, but the circumstances are that [the donor] gave it to him [mixed up] in its tebel,[22] and he holds that unseparated gifts[23] rank as unseparated.[24]

Come and hear: If one redeems his own fourth year plantings,[25] he must add a fifth, whether it was [originally] his or given to him as a gift. Who is the author of this? Shall we say: R. Meir? Can one give it away; surely he deduces the meaning of 'holy' from second-tithe?[26] Hence it must surely be R. Judah![27] — [No.] After all, it is R. Meir; but here the circumstances are that he gave it in its budding stage;[28] and this does not agree with R. Jose, who maintained: Budding fruit is forbidden [as 'orlah],because it counts as fruit.[29] Come and hear: If he drew into his possession the [second-] tithe [of another] to the value of a sela', and had no time to redeem it[30] before it appreciated to two, he must pay a sela'[31] and thus profits a sela', and the second-tithe is his.[32] Now, whose view is this? Shall we say: R. Meir's; why does he profit a sela', Scripture saith, And he shall give the money, and it shall be assured to him?[33] Hence it must surely be R. Judah's! — It is indeed R. Judah's, but here we have one anonymous teaching, whereas there we have two.[34] But if an anonymous [ruling] was intentionally taught,[35] what does it matter whether there is one or two? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, The halachah is as R. Meir, since we learnt his view in Behirta.[36]

---

(1) According to the first who deals with trespass, R. Judah holds Jerusalem to be sanctified; according to the second, on vows, it is not.

(2) I.e., 'Ulla agrees with R. Johanan supra 53b.

(3) The Torah decreeing a sacrifice (Lev. V, 15). as though it were converted to hullin. Nevertheless it actually remains hekdesh.

(4) Seeing that his act is null.

(5) I.e., when the object is actually consumed; then it has obviously passed out of the ownership of hekdesh.

(6) As explained below. It is a general principle that if the view of an individual is found cited in a Mishnah anonymously, that is the halachah.

(7) The first three year's vintage of a vineyard, as the first three years' crop of any tree, was forbidden; the fourth year's was permitted, but on the same terms as second-tithe, viz., it had to be eaten in Jerusalem.

(8) If one redeems it and expends the money in Jerusalem, he need not add a fifth, which is necessary in the case of second-tithe.

(9) If an Israelite separated tithes but did not render them to their rightful owners, he might not keep them in his own house beyond the end of the third and the sixth years of the Septennate, but had to remove and give them to their owners. Likewise, second-tithe might not be kept in the house after that, but had to be taken to Jerusalem. This does not apply to fourth year vintage.
(10) Heb. peret and ‘olleloth respectively. Peret, single grapes that fall off during vintaging; ‘olleloth, small single bunches, which must not be vintaged but left for the poor, v. Lev, XIX, 10.
(11) I.e., it must all be gathered, to be made into wine.
(12) Fourth year produce, Lev. XIX, 24: But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy; second-tithe, ibid. XXVII, 30: and all the tithe of the land, . . is the Lords; it is holy unto the Lord.
(13) With respect to fallings and gleanings it is written: Lev. XIX, 10: and thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather the fallen fruit of thy vineyard. ‘Thy’ excludes sacred property, which is God's. But if Beth Hillel agree with R. Judah, second-tithe is secular, and since fourth year vintage is assimilated thereto, that also is likewise.
(14) And since the halachah is always as Beth Hillel, that is the equivalent of an anonymous teaching as R. Meir.
(15) Money of hekdesh.
(16) Pikeah, lit., ‘bright’, ‘understanding’, connotes the opposite of a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor, who are irresponsibles.
(17) That it is hekdesh.
(18) But not the treasurer; for since he recollected that it was hekdesh, its expenditure is not unwitting as far as he is concerned, and a trespass-offering is incurred only for unwitting misuse: v. Lev. V, 15, and sin through ignorance. This proves that it becomes hullin by unwitting, not deliberate use. For if deliberate use likewise secularises it, the treasurer should he liable, since its secularisation was pursuant to his action, which at the outset was unwitting.
(19) Lev, XXVII, 31: and if a man will redeem aught of his tithe, he shall add unto it the fifth part thereof.
(20) ‘His’, that it was separated of his own produce; ‘given to him as a gift,’ that somebody had tithed his produce and then given him the tithe.
(21) And it was taught anonymously.
(22) l.e., he gave him untithed corn, which therefore contained some second-tithe.
(23) ‘Gifts’ is the technical term for the priestly and Levitical dues, and here includes the second-tithe, though that belonged to the Israelite.
(24) There is an opposing view that they rank as already separated. According to that, if A gives B untithed corn (tebel), what should be separated is already separated, and therefore since on the present hypothesis this agrees with R. Meir that second-tithe is sacred property and cannot be given away, the tithe in it remains A's. Hence it is explained that he holds that it ranks as unseparated and so it can be given to B together with the rest.
(25) V. p. 273, n, 10.
(26) V. supra. Hence it is sacred property.
(27) Thus we have an anonymous Mishnah in agreement with R. Judah in respect to second-tithe.
(28) When the fruit is recognisable, after the flower has dropped off.
(29) On that view fourth year fruit, being sacred property, could not be given away. But here we hold that the term ‘fourth year fruit’ is as yet inapplicable, because it is not fruit at all.
(30) By paying the owner the money.
(31) , Because he acquired it by meshikah (v. Glos.) and it appreciated in his possession.
(32) Because the second-tithe is secular property, hence it is acquired by meshikah.
(33) Hence tithe is acquired only by money, not meshikah. Actually there is no such verse, and this would appear to be a free paraphrase of Lev. XXVII, 19: then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be assured to him; Tosaf. Shab. 128a s.v. i,bu. V. supra p. 12, n. 6. — The verse refers to the redemption of a sanctified field, and since R. Meir regards the second-tithe as sacred property, its teaching applies to that too.
(34) The anonymous Mishnah agreeing with R. Meir is found twice, in M.Sh. V, 3 and ‘Ed. IV, 5; that agreeing with R. Judah is found only in M.Sh. IV, 6.
(35) Thus, to shew that it is the halachah; v. p. 273. n. 9.
(36) Lit., ‘selected (Mishnah).’ another name for ‘Eduyyoth. This consists of testimonies by scholars on traditional laws, which were examined and declared authentic.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 55a

We learnt elsewhere: If an animal is found between Jerusalem and Migdal Eder[1] or an equal distance [from the city] in any direction: the males are burnt-offerings; the females are peace-offerings.[2] Now, can males be only burnt-offerings and not peace-offerings![3] — Said R. Oshaia: The reference here is to one who comes to accept responsibility for its value; and this is its meaning: we fear that they may be burnt-offerings; it being in accordance with R. Meir, who ruled: Hekdesh can be deliberately converted into hullin.[4] But can [an object of] intrinsic sanctity[5] be redeemed? Did we not learn: There cannot be consecutive trespasses in respect of sacred objects,[6] excepting in the case of [consecrated] animal[s] and vessels of ministry.[7] How so? If a man rode on a [dedicated] cow, then his neighbour came and rode, and then another came and rode, all are guilty of trespass. If he drank out of a golden goblet, then his neighbour came and drank, and then another, all are guilty of trespass? — The latter[8] is according to R. Judah; the former,[9] R. Meir. But from R. Judah we may understand R. Meir's view. Does not R. Judah maintain that hekdesh may be unwittingly converted into hullin, and yet intrinsic sanctity cannot be secularised;[10] hence according to R. Meir too, although hekdesh, by deliberate misuse, is secularised, yet intrinsic sanctity cannot be secularised![11] — There he does not intend to withdraw it into hullin; here he does.[12] But when do you know R. Meir to hold this? [Only] in the case of higher sanctity;[13] do you know him [to hold this view] in respect to lower sanctity?[14] — Said one of the Rabbis to him [the questioner], R. Jacob by name, It follows a fortiori: If objects of the higher sanctity can be secularised, surely those of the lower sanctity can be! It was stated likewise. R. Hama b. ‘Ukba[15] said in R. Jose son of R. Hanina's name: R. Meir used to assert, Hekdesh is secularised by deliberate conversion, but is not secularised by unwitting conversion; this applies to objects of both higher and lower sanctity, a fortiori: if objects of higher sanctity can be secularised, surely those of lower sanctity can be.

---

(1) Gen, XXXV, 21. Lit., ‘Fold Tower,’ a place not far from Jerusalem, on the road to Bethlehem.

(2) Most cattle that wandered out of Jerusalem had been consecrated for sacrifices, and cattle found within this distance were feared to have strayed out. The females are peace-offerings, since only males could be burnt-offerings (Lev. I, 3).

(3) Surely not. They may be the latter: how can they be sacrificed as burnt-offerings?

(4) The animal itself can certainly not be sacrificed. But if a person wishes to accept responsibility, redeem it, and so clear up all doubt, he must reckon with the possibility of its being a burnt-offering. Hence he must bring two animals or two sums of money and declare: ‘If this found animal is a burnt-offering, let it be redeemed by one animal, or by one sum, which shall be likewise a burnt-offering, and the other shall be a peace-offering. Whereas if it is a peace-offering, let it be redeemed by the second, and the first be a burnt- offering, while the animal found becomes hullin.

(5) Lit., ‘sanctity of the body,’ i.e., an animal which is sacred and without blemish, so that it can be offered on the altar; as opposed to monetary sanctity, e.g., a consecrated animal which subsequently receives a blemish; it cannot be sacrificed itself, but must be redeemed and another animal bought with the money, which is sacrificed.

(6) For when the first commits trespass they become hullin and cease to be subject to further trespass.

(7) Used in the Temple. These do not become hullin when secularly used, because they cannot be redeemed as long as they are fit for their purpose.

(8) The Mishnah just quoted.

(9) On the finding of an animal.

(10) For the latter Mishnah, which agrees with R. Judah, must refer to unwitting use, since no offering is incurred for deliberate misuse, and yet it teaches that animals of intrinsic sanctity involve consecutive trespasses, which proves that they are not secularised by the first misuse.

(11) For unwitting misuse, in R. Judah's opinion, is the same as deliberate misuse in R. Meir's.

(12) I.e,, deliberate conversion, according to R. Meir, is stronger than unwitting misuse, on R. Judah's opinion, and therefore it secularises even intrinsic sanctity.

(13) I.e., anything which is entirely used in the service of the Temple. E.g., an article consecrated for Temple repair, and a sacrifice of the higher sanctity, which belonged entirely to God, none of it being eaten by its owner.

(14) And the Mishnah on a strayed animal refers to such, since it may be a peace-offering, which is of the lower sanctity.

(15) Cur. ed.: Akiba; but a R. Hama b. R. Akiba is unknown in the Talmud.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 55b

Now, R. Johanan was astonished thereat:[1] is then a man bidden, 'Arise and sin, that you may achieve merit!'[2] But, said R. Johanan, we wait until it is blemished;[3] then two animals are brought, and a stipulation made.[4]

The Master said: 'Males are burnt-offerings.' But perhaps it is a thanksgiving-offering?[5] — A thanksgiving-offering too is brought .[6] But then loaves are required?[7] — Loaves too are brought. Yet perhaps it is a guilt-offering?[8] — A guilt-offering requires a two year old [animal], whereas a yearling was found. Then perhaps it is a guilt-offering of a leper or a nazir?[9] — These are rare. Yet perhaps it is a Passover sacrifice? — One takes great care of the Passover sacrifice in its season,[10] and when not in its season[11] it is a peace — offering.[12] Yet perhaps it is a firstling or tithe? — In what respect? That it may be eaten when blemished?[13] Here too, it is eaten when blemished.[14]

The Master said: 'Females are peace-offerings.' But perhaps it is a thanksgiving-offering? — He brings a thanksgiving-offering. But then loaves are required? — Loaves too are brought. But perhaps it is a sin-offering? — A sin-offering is a yearling, whereas a two year old was found. Yet perhaps it is a sin-offering which has passed its year?[15] — That is rare. Then what if a yearling is found? — It was taught: Hanina b. Hakinai said: A yearling she-goat is [sacrificed] as a sin-offering. 'As a sin-offering' — can you think so![16] — But, said Abaye, it is [treated] as a sin-offering:[17] it is led into a stable and left to perish.

Our Rabbis taught: An animal may not be bought with second-tithe money;[18]

---

(1) At R. Oshaia's explanation, supra a, top.

(2) For even if deliberate conversion is effective in respect of intrinsic sanctity, it is nevertheless forbidden; Men. 101a.

(3) When it loses its intrinsic sanctity — i.e., it may no longer be sacrificed, and as such must be redeemed, whereby it becomes hullin.

(4) V. p. 277, n. 1.

(5) Which may likewise be a male.

(6) I.e., two animals are sanctified; cf. p. 277, n. 1.

(7) V. Lev, VII, 2.

(8) And that cannot be settled by bringing a third, because a guilt-offering cannot be vowed but must be incurred by sin.

(9) V. Glos. These were yearlings.

(10) Animals were separated for that purpose on the tenth of Nisan and sacrificed on the fourteenth. During this time they were carefully guarded, and could not have strayed.

(11) I.e., if these are not sacrificed then.

(12) Which he does bring.

(13) I.e., the fear that it may be a firstling or tithe can affect only the question of their redemption when blemished; for these cannot be redeemed, even when blemished, but must be eaten in semi-sanctity, i.e., they must not be killed in the general abattoirs nor weighed with the ordinary weights, in order to emphasize their character.

(14) In the same manner as firstlings and tithes.

(15) Having been lost a long time.

(16) It may not be one, nor is a stipulation possible (v. p. 277, n. 1), since a sin-offering cannot be vowed.

(17) Which for any reason may not be sacrificed, e.g., if its owner dies.

(18) Without Jerusalem. Either because it may become emaciated through the journey (one explanation by Rashi), or for fear that its owner may be tempted to keep it at home for breeding (Tosaf.).

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 56a

and if one does buy: if unwittingly, the money must be returned to its place;[1] if deliberately, it must be brought up and consumed in the Place.[2] R. Judah said: That holds good if he intentionally bought it in the first place for a peace-offering;[3] but if it was his intention to turn the second-tithe money into hullin,[4] whether unwittingly or deliberately,[5] the money must be returned to its place.[6] But did we not learn: R. JUDAH SAID: IF DELIBERATELY, HE HAS BETROTHED [HER]?[7] — Said R. Eleazar: The woman knows that the second-tithe money does not become hullin through her [acceptance thereof as kiddushin], and so she will go up and expend[8] it in Jerusalem.[9]

R. Jeremiah demurred: But what of unclean cattle, slaves, and real estate, in regard to which a man knows that second-tithe money is not secularised by [the purchase of] them; yet we learnt: Unclean cattle, slaves, and land may not be bought with second-tithe money, even in Jerusalem; and if he does purchase [them], he must eat to the value thereof?[10] But [say] here [in the Mishnah] the reference is to a woman, a haberah,[11] who knows.[12]

The Master said: 'If he does purchase [them], he must eat to the value thereof.' Yet why: let the money return to its place, as there? — Said Samuel:

---

(1) The owner. The vendor is compelled to return the money, which must have been given in error. For the purchaser would surely rather carry money than drive an animal to Jerusalem,

(2) Sc. Jerusalem.

(3) Like all animals purchased with second-tithe money.

(4) I.e., he bought the animal intending to eat it outside Jerusalem (Rashi). Tosaf.: He stipulated that the animal should remain hullin, while the vendor should expend the money in Jerusalem.

(5) Whether he knew the money was of second-tithe or not.

(6) If unwittingly, because it was a transaction in error, as above; if deliberately, as a punishment to the vendor for acting as an accessory (Rashi). Tosaf.: In both cases, for fear that the vendor may eat the animal outside Jerusalem, thinking that the stipulation is invalid.

(7) V. Mishnah 52b. This shews that since there is no error, the Rabbis did not nullify the transaction as a penalty (Rashi). Tosaf.: This shews that we do not fear that the woman may expend the money outside Jerusalem, as otherwise his act would be nullified: why then do we fear it in the case of the vendor?

(8) Lit., 'eat'.

(9) Hence there is no question of penalizing anyone (Rashi). Tosaf.: But the vendor thinks that since when one usually buys an animal with second-tithe money, the animal becomes sanctified and the money hullin, so is it now, the stipulation being unable to abrogate normal practice.

(10) I.e., he must take fresh money and declare, 'Wherever the first money is, let it be redeemed by this,' and expend it in Jerusalem. But we do not assume that the vendor himself will take the money thither.

(11) Fem. of haber, associate, one who is learned and very strict in all matters of tithes and laws of purity. Some suggest that the unsettled state of Palestine during the Maccabean wars led to the neglect of tithes and Levitical purity by the masses, the so-called 'am ha-'arez (lit., 'people of the land'), and this, in turn, by reaction, was responsible for the promotion of associations (haburoth), the members of which (haberim) were pledged strictly to observe these laws, V. J.E. art, 'Haber'.

(12) That second-tithe money does not become hullin by her acceptance, and therefore she will expend it in Jerusalem. But the average seller does not know these laws.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 56b

This [holds good] if he [the vendor] has fled. Thus, the reason is that he has fled, but otherwise, we penalize the vendor:[1] but let us penalize the purchaser?[2] — Not the mouse steals, but the hole steals![3] Yet but for the mouse, what harm is done by the hole! — It is reasonable that where the transgression lies, there we impose a penalty.[4]

MISHNAH. IF HE BETROTHS [A WOMAN] WITH 'ORLAH, OR KIL'AYIM[5] OF THE VINEYARD, OR AN OX CONDEMNED TO BE STONED,[6] OR THE HEIFER WHICH IS TO BE BEHEADED,[7] OR A LEPER'S BIRD-OFFERINGS,[8] OR A NAZIRITE'S HAIR, OR THE FIRSTLING OF AN ASS, OR MEAT [SEETHED] IN MILK,[9] OR HULLIN[10] SLAUGHTERED

IN THE TEMPLE COURT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.[11] IF HE SELLS THEM AND BETROTHS [HER] WITH THE PROCEEDS,[12] SHE IS BETROTHED.[13]

GEMARA. WITH 'ORLAH: How do we know it? — Because it was taught: They shall be as uncircumcised unto you: it shall not be eaten:[14] thus I know only the prohibition of eating; whence do we know [that all] benefit [is forbidden], [i.e.,] that one must derive no benefit therefrom, [e.g.,] not dye nor kindle a lamp therewith? From the verse: 'Then ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised,' which includes all.

[WITH] KIL'AYIM OF THE VINEYARD. How do we know it? — Said Hezekiah, Scripture saith, [Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with divers seeds:] lest [the fruit of thy seed which thou hast sown, and the fruit of thy vineyard,] be defiled [tikdash]:[15] i.e., tukad esh [it shall be burnt in fire]. R. Ashi said: [Interpret,] Lest it be as sanctified.[16] If so, just as a sanctified object transfers its character to its purchase price,[17] and itself becomes hullin, so should kil'ayim of the vineyard transfer its character to its purchase price, and itself become hullin?[18] Hence it must clearly be [explained] as Hezekiah.

[WITH] AN OX CONDEMNED TO BE STONED. How do we know it? — Because it was taught: From the implication of the verse, the ox shall be surely stoned,[19] do I not know that it is nebelah,[20] which is forbidden as food? Why then is it stated, and his flesh shall not be eaten?[19] It informs you that if it was killed after the trial was ended,[21] it may not be eaten, How do we know that benefit [is forbidden]? From the verse, and the owner of the ox shall be clear. How is this implied? — Said Simeon b. Zoma: As a man may say to his friend, 'So-and-so has gone out clear from his property, and has no benefit whatsoever from it.' Now, how do you know that this [verse], 'and his flesh shall tot be eaten,' comes [to teach the law] if it is [ritually] killed after the trial is ended: perhaps where it is killed after sentence, it is permitted, and this [verse], 'and it shall not be eaten,' refers[22] to when it is indeed stoned, and [its teaching is that of] R. Abbahu in R. Eleazar's name. For R. Abbahu said in R. Eleazar's name: Wherever it is said: It shall not, be eaten, thou shalt not eat, ye shall not eat, the prohibitions of both eating and benefit [in general] are understood, unless the writ expressly states [otherwise], as it does in the case of nebelah![23] — That is only where the prohibition of food is derived from, it shall not be eaten;[24] but here the prohibition of eating follows from, 'it shalt surely be stoned': for should you think that it is written to intimate prohibition of benefit, Scripture should state, 'and he shall not benefit',[25] or, 'it shall not be eaten': why add, 'its flesh'? [To shew that] even if it is slaughtered like [other] flesh, it is [still] forbidden.

Mar Zutra objected: Yet perhaps that is only if one examines a stone, [finds its edge perfectly free from a notch] and kills therewith, for it looks like stoning; but not if it is slaughtered with a knife? — Is then a knife stipulated in the Torah?[26] Moreover, it was taught: One may slaughter with everything,[27] with a stone, glass, or a reed haulm.

But now that the prohibitions of both eating and benefit are derived from, 'it shall not be eaten,' what is the purpose of this [clause], 'and the owner of the ox shall be clear'?[28] — In respect of the benefit of its skin.[29] I might think, 'its flesh shall not be eaten' is written: [hence] its flesh is forbidden while its hide is permitted. Now, according to those Tannaim who employ this verse: 'and the owner of the ox shall be clear', as referring to half ransom and indemnification for children,[30] how do they know [that] the benefit of the hide [is forbidden]? — From 'eth besaro' ['its flesh'], meaning, that which is joined to its flesh.[31] And the other?[32]

---

(1) By making him return the money.

(2) That he should spend an equal sum in Jerusalem, or go to the vendor and declare, 'The money you hold is redeemed by this money I have,' and then expend the new money in Jerusalem (Tosaf.).

(3) The vendor makes possible this misuse of the money.

(4) The transgression, i.e., the money wrongly expended, lies with the vendor: hence he is penalized by the cancellation of the sale.
(5) V. Glos.
(6) V. Ex. XXI, 28f.
(7) V. Deut. XXI, 1-9.
(8) V. Lev. XIV, 1ff.
(9) Ex. XXIII, 19.
(10) V. Glos.
(11) Because all benefit of these is forbidden; hence she receives nothing of value.
(12) Lit., 'their money'.
(13) Because their forbidden character is not transferred to the money.
(14) Lev. XIX, 23.
(15) Deut. XXII, 9.
(16) Hence forbidden. Thus on both versions all benefit of kil'ayim is forbidden.
(17) Lit., 'holds its money', i.e., if sold, its prohibition passes on to the money paid.
(18) Whereas the Mishnah states that its prohibition is not transferable.
(19) Ex. XXI, 28,
(20) V. Glos.
(21) I.e., after sentence.
(22) Lit., comes.
(23) Deut. XIV, 21: Ye shall not eat any nebelah: thou mayest give it unto the stranger . . . or sell it unto a foreigner. Now, a stoned ox is nebelah, and so I might think that benefit is permitted; therefore Scripture states that its flesh shall not be eaten, thus intimating the contrary. And as to the verse 'and the owner of the ox shall be clear', it is needed for some other deduction v. infra.
(24) Then R. Abbahu's exegesis shews that 'eating' includes all benefit.
(25) When both eating and general benefit are to be forbidden, it is reasonable that the former only is mentioned as including the latter. But when only the latter is needed, the former already being known, surely benefit should be expressly stated?
(26) The Torah does not state that only a knife must be used in ritual killing: hence no distinction can be drawn.
(27) Which has a cutting edge free from notches. — Nevertheless, it had to be sharp enough to cut through the wind pipe and the gullet without undue delay; v, J.D. 23, – 4.
(28) Which was interpreted in the same way; supra.
(29) Teaching that even that is forbidden.
(30) Ransom, v. Ex. XXI, 28-30, 35f; it might be thought, by comparing these verses, that half ransom is payable. Payment for child: v. ibid. 22; I might think that the same holds good when the damage is done by a man's ox. Therefore 'and the owner of the ox shall be clear' (E.V. quit) teaches that he is free from both.
(31) Regarding eth, the sign of the acc., as an extending particle.
(32) What does eth teach on his view?

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 57a

He does not interpret eth.[1] As it was taught: Simeon the Imsonite[2] — others state, Nehemiah the Imsonite, — interpreted every eth in the Torah,[3] but as soon as he came to, thou shalt fear [eth] the Lord thy God,[4] he refrained.[5] Said his disciples to him, 'Master, what is to happen with all the ethin[6] which you have interpreted?' 'Just as I received reward for interpreting [them],' he replied: 'so do I receive reward for retracting.'[7] Subsequently[8] R. Akiba came and taught: Thou shalt fear [eth] the Lord thy God, that is to include scholars.[9]

THE HEIFER WHICH IS BEHEADED: How do we know it? — Said the School of R. Jannai: 'Forgiveness' is stated in connection therewith,[10] as with sacrifices.[11]

A LEPER'S BIRD-OFFERINGS: How do we know it? — For the School of R. Ishmael taught:

Qualifying and atoning [sacrifices] are mentioned within [the Temple], and qualifying and atoning [sacrifices] are mentioned without: just as with the qualifying and atoning [sacrifices] mentioned within [the Temple], qualifying is made equal to atoning [sacrifices], so with the qualifying and atoning [sacrifices] mentioned without, the qualifying [sacrifice] is made equal to that which atones.[12] It was stated: From what time are a leper's birds forbidden?[13] R. Johanan maintained: From the time of slaughter;[14] Resh Lakish said: From the time they are taken.[15] 'R. Johanan maintained, From the time of slaughter,' it is the slaughter that renders it forbidden. 'Resh Lakish said: From the time they are taken' — it is learned from the heifer that is to be beheaded. Just as the heifer that is to be beheaded is [forbidden] while it yet lives,[16] so are the leper's birds [forbidden] while yet alive. And from what time is the heifer that is to be beheaded itself forbidden? — Said R. Jannai: I have heard a time limit for it, but have forgotten it: while our colleagues maintain,[17] Its descent to the rugged valley,[18] that renders it forbidden.[19] If so, just as the heifer that is to be beheaded is not forbidden from the time it is taken, so are the leper's birds not forbidden from when they are taken? — How now! There it has another determining point;[20] but here, is there any other determining point?[21]

R. Johanan raised an objection to Resh Lakish: Of all clean birds ye may eat:[22] this includes the bird that is set free.[23] But these are they of which ye shall not eat:[24] that includes the slaughtered bird.[25] But should you think that it is forbidden while yet alive, is it necessary [to state it] after slaughter? — You might argue: It is analogous to sacrifices, which are forbidden whilst alive,[26] yet the slaughtering comes and qualifies them [as food]; therefore we are told [otherwise].

He raised an objection: If it is slaughtered and found to be trefa,[27] he must take a companion for the second,[28] and benefit from the first is permitted. But should you think that it is forbidden while yet alive, why may one benefit from the first![29] — The circumstances here are, e.g., it was found to be trefa in its inwards,[30] so that no sanctity fell upon it at all.

He raised an objection: If it is slaughtered without the hyssop, the cedar wood and the scarlet thread,[31] — R. Jacob said: Since it was set aside for its religious purposes it is forbidden; R. Simeon said: Since it was not slaughtered according to its regulations, it is permitted. Now, they differ only in so far as one Master holds that an unfit slaughtering[32] is designated slaughtering;[33] while the other Master holds that such is not designated slaughtering; but all agree at least that it is not forbidden while yet alive? — It is [a controversy of] Tannaim. For the School of Ishmael taught: 'Qualifying' and 'atoning' are mentioned within [the Temple], and 'qualifying' and 'atoning' are mentioned without: just as with the 'qualifying' and 'atoning' mentioned within, 'qualifying' is made equal to 'atoning', so with the 'qualifying' and 'atoning' mentioned without, 'qualifying' is made equal to 'atoning'.[34]

The text [above stated]: 'Of all clean birds ye may eat: this includes the bird that is set free. But these are they which ye shall not eat: that includes the slaughtered bird.' But may I not reverse it? — Said R. Johanan on the authority of R. Simeon b. Yohai: We do not find live creatures [permanently] forbidden.[35] R. Samuel son of R. Isaac demurred: Do we not? But

---

(1) As indicating extension or having any particular significance apart from its grammatical one.

(2) Jast. conjectures that it may mean from Amasia, in Pontus.

(3) As an extending particle.

(4) Deut. VI, 13.

(5) Considering it impossible that this fear should be extended to another.

(6) Pl. of eth.

(7) Lit., 'separating' (myself from them). Since the eth in one verse has no particular significance, it can have none elsewhere. — It is a tribute to his character that although he must have interpreted an enormous number, he was prepared to admit his error and set them all aside.

(8) Lit., ‘until’.
(9) Who are the depositaries of God's word; hence the verse exhorts obedience to religious authority.
(10) V. Deut. XXI, 8.
(11) Betrothal with which is invalid.
(12) ‘Qualifying’ means a sacrifice whose purpose it is to qualify one to enter the Temple and partake of sacred food, i.e., to purify him from uncleanness; ‘atoning’, a sacrifice to atone for sin. Now, in his purification rites, a leper brought birds, which were sacrificed without the Temple (Lev. XIV, 2ff.) and an animal guilt-offering, which was sacrificed within the Temple (vv. 10-13). Though technically called a guilt-offering, its purpose was nevertheless purificatory, since he had not sinned. Again, the purpose of the beheaded heifer, whose rites were performed without the Temple, was atonement. Whilst within the Temple, all other guilt-offerings, excepting the leper's, had the same object. Now, just as Scripture draws no distinction between a leper's guilt-offering (qualifying) and other guilt-offerings (atonement) which are sacrificed within the Temple, so is no distinction drawn between ‘qualifying’ and ‘atoning’ without the Temple, i.e., between a leper's birds and the beheaded heifer. Since therefore betrothal with the latter is invalid, it is likewise so with the former.
(13) That no benefit may be derived from them.
(14) Then the slaughtered one becomes forbidden, while the other (v. Lev, XIV, 7), is likewise forbidden from then until it is actually freed. — Tosaf.
(15) I.e., set aside for that purpose. On the bird that is freed v. preceding note
(16) Like all sacrifices, which are forbidden as soon as they are dedicated.
(17) Lit., ‘take it up to say’.
(18) V. Deut. XXI, 4 and Sot. (Sonc. ed.) p. 235, n. 6,
(19) But not as soon as it is taken.
(20) Whilst alive, viz., its descent etc.
(21) If not from when it is taken, what other point of demarcation during its lifetime is possible?
(22) Deut. XIV, 11.
(23) ‘All’ is an extension.
(24) Ibid. 12.
(25) Both referring to the leper's birds.
(26) From when they are dedicated.
(27) V. Glos.
(28) But not a fresh pair.
(29) For perhaps it was not trefa when taken, in which case, being fit for its ultimate purpose. it became forbidden. How then was that prohibition lifted?
(30) The type of trefa which must have been with it from the very beginning when taken.
(31) V. Lev. XIV, 4.
(32) I.e., unfit to achieve its object, owing to the absence of the hyssop etc.
(33) Hence it is forbidden.
(34) V. p. 284, n. 9. Hence, just as sacrifices (‘atoning’) are forbidden while alive, so are the leper's birds (‘qualifying’) too. Thus the School of Ishmael disagrees with R. Jacob and R. Simeon.
(35) Hence ‘they which ye shall not eat’ cannot include the bird that is freed.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 57b

what of a designated animal[1] and a worshipped animal,[2] which though living creatures, are yet forbidden?[3] — They are forbidden only in respect of the Most High, but are indeed permitted for ordinary use.[4] R. Jeremiah demurred: But animals, active or passive participants in bestiality attested by witnesses, are living creatures and yet forbidden?[5] But, said R. Johanan, we do not find as a rule live creatures that are [permanently] forbidden.[6]

The School of R. Ishmael taught: Because Scripture saith, and he shall let go the living bird it to the open field:[7] just as the field is permitted, so is this [bird] too permitted. Does ‘field’ come to teach this? But it is required for what was taught. ‘Field’ [teaches] that one must not stand in Joppa[8] and cast it into the sea, or in Gabbath[9] and cast it to the wilderness, or stand without the city and throw it into the city; but he must stand within the city and throw it beyond the wall. And the other?[10] — If so, Scripture should write, 'field': why 'the field'? Hence both are inferred. Raba said: The Torah did not order, 'Send it away', for a stumbling-block.[11]

WITH A NAZIRITE'S HAIR, How do we know it? Because Scripture saith, He shall be holy, he shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow long,[12] [teaching], his growth shall be holy.[13] If so, just as a holy object stamps its purchase price[14] and itself passes out into hullin, so should the nazirite's hair stamp its purchase price and itself pass out into hullin?[15] — Do we then read kodesh? We read kadosh.[16]

WITH THE FIRSTLING OF AN ASS. Shall we say that our Mishnah does not agree with R. Simeon? For it was taught: Benefit is forbidden from the firstling of an ass: this is R. Judah's opinion; but R. Simeon permits it! — Said R. Nahman in Rabbah b. Abbuha's name: This means after its neck was broken,[17] and so agrees with all.[18]

MEAT [SEETHED] IN MILK. How do we know it? — For the School of R. Ishmael taught: Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk [is stated] three times:[19] one is a prohibition against eating, one a prohibition of benefit [in general], and one a prohibition of seething.[20] Our Mishnah does not agree with the following Tanna. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Judah[21] said: Meat [seethed] in Milk may not be eaten, but benefit is permitted, for it is said: For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk;[22] whilst elsewhere it is said: And ye shall be holy men unto me: [therefore ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs.]:[23] just as there it may not be eaten, yet benefit is permitted, so here too.

AND HULLIN SLAUGHTERED IN THE TEMPLE COURT. How do we know it? — Said R. Johanan on R. Meir's authority: The Torah decreed, slaughter mine [i.e., sacrifices] in mine [i.e., the Temple] and thine [i.e., hullin] in thine [i.e., without the Temple]: just as mine [slaughtered] in thine is forbidden,[24] so is thine [slaughtered] in mine forbidden. If so, just as thine in mine is punished by kareth,[25] so is mine in thine punished by kareth? — Scripture saith, and he hath not brought it unto the door of the tent of meeting, to offer it as a sacrifice unto the Lord . . . then he shall be cut off:[26] for a sacrifice [slaughtered without] there is punishment of kareth, but not for hullin slaughtered in the Temple Court. [That being so,] it [the analogy] may be refuted: as for mine in thine [being forbidden], that is because it is punished by kareth! — But, said Abaye, [it is deduced] from this: and he shall kill it [at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation],[27] and he shall kill it [before the tabernacle of the congregation],[28] and, and he shall kill it [before the tabernacle of the congregation],[29] are three superfluous verses.[30] Now, why are they stated? Because it is said: If the place [which the Lord thy God shall choose to put his name there] shall be far from thee . . . then thou shalt kill [of thy herd etc.],[31] [teaching] you may kill far from the place [sc. the Temple], but not in the place, thus excluding hullin, [viz.,] that it may not be killed in the Temple Court. Again, I know this only of unblemished animals, which are eligible to be sacrificed: whence do I know to include blemished ones? I include blemished animals, since they are of a fit species.[32] Whence do I know to include beasts?[33] I include beasts, since they require shechitah,[34] as a [domestic] animal,[35] How do I know to include birds?[36] Therefore it is stated, and he shall kill it, and he shall kill it, and he shall kill it.[37] I might think, One may not kill [hullin in the Temple Court]; yet if he does, it is permitted [to eat it]: therefore it is stated: If the place be far from thee, then thou shalt kill . . . and thou shalt eat: you may eat what you kill far from the place, but not what you kill in the place, thus excluding hullin killed in the Temple Court.[38] Now, I know this only of unblemished animals,

---

(1) An animal designated as an idolatrous sacrifice.

(2) One itself worshipped as an idol.

(3) As sacrifices.

(4) Lit., ‘for a layman’.
(5) These are stoned, and benefit is forbidden as soon as they are sentenced.
(6) Hence it is illogical to reverse it.
(7) Lev. XIV, 7.
(8) Jaffa. On the sea coast.
(9) Later name For Gibbethon, in the territory of Dan. It bordered on the desert.
(10) The School of R. Ishmael: how do they know this?
(11) To order it to be freed and at the same time forbidden is a stumbling-block before any person who may capture and eat it, ignorant of its nature.
(12) Num. VI, 5.
(13) Hence forbidden.
(14) If sold; i.e., the money becomes sacred.
(15) Whereas the Mishnah (q.v. 56b) states the reverse.
(16) Not a nominal form but a verbal form. I.e., he himself is not holiness, but in a holy state, and hence not as strong as holiness itself, which teaches that his sanctity is nontransferable. — Actually, the word as written (ase) might read kodesh, but according to tradition (masorah) it is read kadosh.
(17) If unredeemed; v. Ex. XIII. 13.
(18) The Baraitha adds that R. Simeon agrees in that case.
(19) Ex. XXIII, 19; XXXIV, 26; Deut. XIV, 21.
(20) Even without the intention of eating it.
(21) Rashi (infra 58a) appears to read: R. Simeon b. Yohai. But in Bek. 10a the reading is, R. Simeon b. Judah on the authority of R. Simeon (i.e., b. Yohai).
(22) Deut. ibid.
(23) Ex. XXII, 30: ‘casting to the dogs’ is benefit.
(24) The consecrated animal is forbidden while yet alive, and becomes permitted through the sprinkling of its blood on the altar, which is absent if it is not killed in the Temple. The prohibition, dating from while it is alive, is naturally of benefit in general.
(25) V. Glos.
(26) Lev. XVII, 4.
(27) Lev. III, 2.
(28) Ibid. 8.
(29) Ibid. 13.
(30) They all refer to the killing of peace-offerings, and all imply a limitation: it, i.e., the peace-offering, is to be killed by the Tabernacle, but not others.
(31) Deut. XII, 21.
(32) I.e., fit for sacrifice.
(33) Hayyah, wild beast (e.g., the deer), as opposed to behemah, domestic animal.
(34) V. Glos.
(35) Hence, both may not be done in the Temple Court.
(36) Shechitah is not explicitly stated in the Bible in their case.
(37) One intimates that beasts shall not be killed in the Temple Court; one, fowls; as for the third, two explanations are offered: (i) that it excludes blemished animals; or (ii) that it teaches that these may not be eaten if killed within the Temple. — Hence, when the Baraitha states: I include blemished animals because . . . beasts because . . . the meaning is that these might be deduced by analogy, but for the three verses quoted.
(38) That it may not be eaten.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 58a

which are eligible to be sacrificed; how do I know to include blemished ones? I include blemished animals, seeing that they are of a fit species. And how do I know to include beasts? I include beasts, because they require shechitah, as domestic animals. How do I know to include birds? Therefore it is stated, and he shall kill it, and he shall kill it, and he shall kill it.[1] I might think, One may not kill [hullin in the Temple]; yet if he does, he may cast it to dogs: therefore it is taught, [ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field], ye shall cast it to the dogs:[2] 'it' ye may cast to the dogs, but not hullin killed in the Temple Court.

Mar Judah met R. Joseph and R. Samuel, son of Rabbah b. Bar Hanah, standing by the door of Rabbah's academy. Said he to them: It was taught: If one betroths [a woman] with the firstling of an ass, meat [seethed] in milk, or hullin killed in the Temple Court, R. Simeon maintained: She is betrothed; while the Sages rule: She is not betrothed. This proves that in R. Simeon's opinion hullin killed in the Temple Court is not Biblically forbidden.[3] But the following contradicts it: R. Simeon said: Hullin that was killed in the Temple Court must be burned, and likewise a beast of chase killed in the Temple Court![4] They were silent. When they came before Rabbah [and put the difficulty to him], he exclaimed: That controversialist [Mar Judah] has prompted you! The circumstances here[5] are that it was killed and found to be trefa. R. Simeon following his general view. For it was taught: If one kills[6] a trefa,[7] or if one kills [an animal] and it is discovered to be a trefa, both being hullin in the Temple Court,--R. Simeon holds that benefit is permitted; but the Sages forbid it.[8]

IF HE SELLS THEM AND BETROTHS HER WITH THE PROCEEDS, SHE IS BETROTHED. How do we know it? — Since the Divine Law revealed in reference to idolatry, [and thou shalt not bring an abomination into thine house,] lest thou be a cursed thing like it,[9] [which means,] whatever you produce out of it is as itself,[10] it follows that all other objects forbidden in the Torah are permitted.[11] Let us [rather] learn from it?[12] — Because idolatry and seventh year [produce] are two verses that come with the same teaching, and such do not illumine [others].[13] Idolatry, as stated. What about seventh year [produce]? — It is jubilee; it shall be holy unto you:[14] just as a holy object stamps its purchase price [with its own sacred character]. so does seventh year [produce] likewise. If so, just as a holy object stamps its purchase price but itself becomes hullin, so does the seventh year [produce] stamp its purchase price and itself becomes hullin?[15] Therefore it is stated: 'it shall be,' [meaning], it shall remain [be] in its present form. How so? If one buys meat with seventh year produce, both must be removed [from the house] in the seventh year;[16] [if he purchases] fish with the meat, the meat passes out [from seventh year provisions] and the fish enters [i.e., takes its place]; [if he barters] the fish for wine, the fish passes out and the wine enters; oil for the wine, the wine passes out and the oil enters. Thus, how is it? The last on each occasion is stamped with [the nature of] the seventh year, while the [original] produce itself remains forbidden. Now, that is well on the view that [two verses with the same teaching] do not illumine [others]; but on the view that they do, what can be said? — Limitations are written. Here it is written: 'lest thou be a cursed thing like it';[17] and there it is written, it is jubilee: [thus,] only it, but nothing else.[18]

MISHNAH. IF ONE BETROTHS [A WOMAN] WITH TERUMOTH,[19] TITHES, [PRIESTLY] GIFTS, THE WATER OF PURIFICATION AND THE ASHES OF PURIFICATION,[20] SHE IS BETROTHED, EVEN IF AN ISRAELITE.[21]

GEMARA. 'Ulla said: The benefit of disposal[22] does not rank as money. R. Abba [thereupon] raised an objection against 'Ulla: IF ONE BETROTHS [A WOMAN] WITH TERUMOTH, TITHES, [PRIESTLY] GIFTS, THE WATER OF PURIFICATION AND THE ASHES OF PURIFICATION, SHE IS BETROTHED, EVEN IF AN ISRAELITE![23] — He answered: This refers to an Israelite who inherited tebalim[24] from his maternal grandfather[25] [who was] a priest. Now he [Tanna of the Mishnah] holds that unseparated gifts are as though already separated.[26]

R. Hiyya b. Abin asked R. Huna: Does the benefit of disposal rank as money or not? — Said he to him: We have learned it: IF ONE BETROTHS [A WOMAN] WITH TERUMOTH, TITHES, [PRIESTLY] GIFTS, THE WATER OF PURIFICATION AND THE ASHES OF PURIFICATION, SHE IS BETROTHED, EVEN IF AN ISRAELITE. But did we not interpret it as referring to an Israelite who inherited tebalim from his maternal grandfather [who was] a priest, he questioned?

(1) I.e., since the three verses shew that these may not be killed in the Temple Court, just as an unblemished animal, they also shew that they are like it too in that they may not be eaten.
(2) Ex. XXII, 30.
(3) For if it were, it is worthless, since one may derive no benefit from it. But if it is Biblically permitted, she receives something of value, and is betrothed; when the Rabbis then forbid all benefit from it, they cannot thereby nullify a betrothal that is Biblically valid. — The reason of this Rabbinical interdict is that one seeing it may mistake it for a sacrifice that became unfit after it was killed, so that its blood could not be sprinkled, and think that one may benefit from such, whereas that is forbidden.
(4) But burial is insufficient. Now, if the interdict is only Rabbinical, why this stringency? Granted that it may be necessary in the case of an animal, which can be mistaken for a sacrifice which became unfit after it was killed (which must be burned, not buried), yet why demand it for a beast of chase, which cannot be mistaken? Hence the interdict must be Biblical: then it is logical that the Rabbis were stringent in the method of disposal.
(5) With the case of betrothal.
(6) I.e., by ritual shechitah.
(7) Perceptible as such even before it is killed.
(8) In R. Simeon's view, if the slaughter does not qualify it for food, because it is otherwise forbidden, it is not slaughter at all, and no interdict which would normally result from the killing takes effect. Therefore one may benefit therefrom and it is valid for betrothal.
(9) Deut. VII, 26.
(10) I.e., if an idol is sold, the money too is accursed, viz., forbidden.
(11) Sc. the money received for them if sold.
(12) That others are similar.
(13) V. p. 169, n. 7.
(14) Lev. XXV, 12.
(15) In the sense that it is no longer subject to seventh year prohibitions.
(16) I.e., private ownership must be renounced.
(17) The text as emended by Maharsha.
(18) I.e., the peculiar laws of idolatry and seventh year produce as stated here do not apply to anything else.
(19) Plur. of terumah, v. Glos.
(20) V. Num. XIX.
(21) I.e., even if he who betroths is an Israelite; that is the assumed meaning. Now, an Israelite has no direct benefit in these, save the indirect one of being able to dispose of them to whatever priest or Levite he desires; and she too has only the same benefit. Since the Mishnah rules that the betrothal is valid, it follows that this benefit of disposal is considered to possess a monetary value.
(22) V. preceding note; lit., 'the benefit of pleasure' — the pleasure of disposing to whomever one desires.
(23) This proves the reverse; v. n. 5.
(24) Pl. of tebel, q.v. Glos.; lit., 'tebalim fell to him'.
(25) Lit., 'from the house of the father of his mother'.
(26) Even a priest had to separate the priestly gifts. but retained them for himself. Hence the priestly dues contained in these tebalim belong to the heir, who may sell, since he cannot eat them himself, and so they rank as money. But ordinary gifts which must be given away do not rank as money.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 58b

— He replied: You are huza'ah.[1] So he was ashamed, for he thought that he meant it with reference to the subject.[2] I meant this, he reassured him, R. Assi of Huzal[3] agrees with you.

Shall we say that it[4] is a controversy of Tannaim? [For it was taught.] He who steals his neighbour's tebel must pay him the value of his tebel:[5] this is Rabbi's view. R. Jose son of R. Judah said: He must pay only for the hullin it contains. Surely they differ in this: one Master holds that disposal rights are money, while the other maintains that they are not? — No: all agree that disposal rights are not money, but here, however, the reference is to tebalim which he inherited from the house of his maternal grandfather, a priest, and they differ as to whether unseparated [priestly] dues are regarded as separated: one Master holds that they are regarded as separated,[6] and the other that they are not. Alternatively, all agree that they are regarded as separated, and disposal rights have no monetary value. Here, however, they differ in respect to Samuel's dictum, for Samuel said: One grain of wheat frees the whole stack:[7] One Master accepts Samuel's ruling; the other does not accept it.[8] Another alternative: All reject Samuel's dictum, but here this is Rabbi's reason, viz., the Rabbis penalized the thief. Another alternative: all agree with Samuel; but here this is R. Jose son of R. Judah's reason: The Rabbis penalized the owner, for he should not have tarried with his tebel.[9]

We learnt: IF ONE BETROTHS [A WOMAN] WITH TERUMOTH, TITHES, [PRIESTLY] GIFTS, THE WATER OF PURIFICATION AND THE ASHES OF PURIFICATION, SHE IS BETROTHED, EVEN AN ISRAELITE. But the following is opposed thereto: If one accepts payment for judging, his judgments are null; for testifying, his testimony is worthless; for sprinkling and mixing [with water] the ashes [of the Red Heifer],[10] his water is cavern water[11] and his ashes are ashes of a hearth![12] — Said Abaye. There is no difficulty: here it [the Mishnah] refers to payment for bringing [the ashes] and drawing [the water];[13] there, payment for sprinkling and mixing [are meant].[14] This may be proved too, for here it is stated: WITH THE WATER OF PURIFICATION AND THE ASHES OF PURIFICATION,[15] while there it is taught, for sprinkling and mixing. This proves it.

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. IF HE SAYS TO HIS NEIGHBOUR, 'GO FORTH AND BETROTH ME SUCH A WOMAN,' AND HE GOES AND BETROTHS HER TO HIMSELF, SHE IS BETROTHED TO THE SECOND. LIKEWISE, IF HE SAYS TO A WOMAN, 'BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME AFTER THIRTY DAYS,' AND ANOTHER COMES AND BETROTHS HER WITHIN THE THIRTY DAYS, SHE IS BETROTHED TO THE SECOND: THUS AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER [BETROTHED] TO A PRIEST MAY EAT TERUMAH.[16] [BUT IF HE DECLARES, BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME [FROM NOW AND AFTER THIRTY DAYS,'[17] AND ANOTHER COMES AND BETROTHS HER WITHIN THE THIRTY DAYS, SHE IS BETROTHED AND NOT BETROTHED [TO BOTH]:[18] AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER [THUS BETROTHED] TO A PRIEST, OR A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER TO AN ISRAELITE, MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.[19]

GEMARA. IF HE SAYS TO HIS NEIGHBOUR . . . A Tanna taught: What he did is done, but that he has behaved toward him as a cheat. And our Tanna?[20] — When he states: AND HE GOES,[21] he indeed means, He goes in cheating fashion. Why is it taught here, IF HE SAYS TO HIS NEIGHBOUR,

---

(1) This is explained in the text.

(2) Deriving the word from huza, 'shrub', he understood him to say 'You are a shrubcutter'; i.e., your suggestion shows that your knowledge is only fit for this work.

(3) An ancient town below Nehardea, but nearer to Sura, within whose province it lay in matters of jurisdiction. Obermeyer, p. 299f.

(4) The question whether disposal rights rank as money.

(5) Including the terumoth and tithes which were yet to be separated. Ran in Ned. 84b explains: including the value of the disposal rights of the terumoth and tithes.

(6) Hence they have a monetary value to the Israelite, and so the thief must pay for them.

(7) [The removal of one single grain is sufficient to raise the prohibition that rests on the stack, as far as a non-priest is concerned, though the precept of 'giving' terumah is not fulfilled except on setting aside for the priest an amount varying between one fortieth to one sixtieth.]

(8) It is now understood that the reference is to one's ordinary produce, not to a legacy. Now, Rabbi agrees with Samuel: hence the robbed person can say: 'It was all mine, for I would have separated only one grain.' According to this, the controversy refers only to the value of terumah, which, notwithstanding Samuel's dictum, varied from one fortieth to one sixtieth. But the thief is certainly not liable for the tithe it contains, on all views, since that must be one tenth.
(9) But should have separated the dues when the obligation arose.
(10) An unclean person. v. Num. XIX, 17ff.
(11) I.e., useless, for running ('living') water is specified; ibid. 17.
(12) I.e., like ashes of any substance, not those of the red heifer, hence unfit. — This shews that they have no monetary value, since payment is forbidden.
(13) That is permitted.
(14) Which is forbidden.
(15) [They were, that is to say, still unmixed, and he betrothed her with them. Tosaf. Ri.]
(16) Because she is certainly betrothed to him.
(17) As though it were a long ceremony, commencing immediately but requiring thirty days for its completion.
(18) I.e., she is not free from either, nor may she live with either; v. p. 47. n. 10.
(19) Her status being undetermined.
(20) Does he too not condemn him?
(21) Lit., 'AND HE WENT'.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 59a

whilst elsewhere[1] it is taught. 'If he says to his agent'?[2] — We are informed of something noteworthy here, and likewise there. We are informed of something noteworthy here: for if 'his agentð were stated: I might think, Only his agent is stigmatised a cheat, because he relies upon him, thinking, 'He will perform my bidding';[3] but as for his neighbour, seeing that he does not rely upon him,[4] I might say that he is not a cheat. There too we are taught what is noteworthy. For if it were stated: 'If he says to his neighbour.' I might think, Only if his neighbour betroths her elsewhere is she not betrothed, because he thinks that he will not trouble;[5] but as for his agent, who will trouble. I might think, He merely indicates the place to him.[6] Hence we are taught [otherwise].

Rabin[7] the pious went to betroth a certain woman for his son, but betrothed her for himself. But was it not taught. What he did is done, but that he has behaved toward him as a cheat? — They would not give her to him [his son]. Then he should have informed him![8] — He feared that in the meantime another man might come and betroth her.

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah gave money to Rab [and] instructed him, 'Buy this land for me,' but he went and bought it for himself. But did we not learn, What he did is done, yet he has behaved toward him as a cheat? — It was a stretch of land belonging to lawless[9] men;[10] for Rab they shewed respect. but would not for Rabbah b. Bar Hanah. Then he should have informed him? He feared that in the meantime another person might come and buy it.

R. Giddal was negotiating for a certain field, when R. Abba went and bought it. Thereupon R. Giddal went and complained about him to R. Zera, who went [in turn] and complained to R. Isaac Nappaha.[11] 'Wait until he comes up to us for the Festival,' said he to him. When he came up he met and asked him, 'If a poor man is examining[12] a cake[13] and another comes and takes it away from him, what then?' 'He is called a wicked man,' was his answer: 'Then why did you, Sir, act so?' he questioned him. 'I did not know [that he was negotiating for it],' he rejoined. 'Then let him have it now,' he suggested. 'I will not sell it to him,' he returned, 'because it is the first field [which I have ever bought]. and it is not a [good] omen;[14] but if he wants it as a gift, let him take it.' Now, R. Giddal would not take possession,[15] because it is written: But he that hateth gifts shall live,[16] nor would R. Abba, because R. Giddal had negotiated for it; and so neither took possession, and it was called 'The Rabbis' field'.[17]

LIKEWISE, IF ONE SAYS TO A WOMAN, BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME etc. What if another does not come and betroth her within these thirty days? — Rab and Samuel both rule: She is betrothed, even if the money [of betrothal] is consumed. What is the reason? This money is neither like a loan nor like a deposit. It is not like a deposit. [because] a deposit is consumed in its owner's possession,[18] whereas this is consumed in her possession. Again, it is not like a loan, [because] a loan is given to be expended,[19] whereas this was given to her for betrothal.

What if another does not come and betroth her, but she herself retracts? — R. Johanan said: She can retract, [because] words can come and nullify words.[20] Resh Lakish maintained: She cannot retract, [because] words cannot come and nullify words — R. Johanan refuted Resh Lakish: If he annuls,[21] if before he [his agent] has made a separation, his separation is invalid. Now here it is speech against speech,[22] yet one comes and nullifies the other? — Giving money into a woman's hand is different, because it is like action, and words cannot come and annul action.

He refuted him: If one sends a divorce to his wife, and then overtakes the messenger or sends [another] messenger after him and says to him, 'The divorce which I gave you is null,' it is indeed null. Now, giving the divorce into the messenger's hand is like giving money into a woman's hand, and yet it is taught: 'it is indeed null'? — There too, as long as the divorce has not reached her hand, it is speech against speech, and so one comes and annuls the other.

Resh Lakish objected to R. Johanan: All utensils become liable to[23] their uncleanness by intention, but ascend thence only by a change in substance.[24]

---

(1) Mishnah supra 50a.

(2) 'Agent' or 'messenger' implies that he sends him to a particular place to betroth her; 'neighbour', that he gives him a general commission, but does not send him: 'should you meet her, betroth her to me.'

(3) Lit., 'sending'.

(4) Because he did not actually send him.

(5) To go elsewhere, therefore he specifies that particular place.

(6) But does not insist upon it.

(7) Var. lec., R. 'Amram.

(8) To clear himself of unjust suspicions.

(9) Lit., 'strong'.

(10) Who would not allow any person to own a field near theirs.

(11) Or, the smith.

(12) Lit., 'turning over'.

(13) To buy it.

(14) To sell.

(15) Lit., 'descend to it'.

(16) Prov. XV. 27.

(17) [For the use of the students of the law, v. supra p. 192, n. 6.]

(18) In that he bears the loss.

(19) I.e., if one lends money to a woman and subsequently proposes it for kiddushin, the money was to have been spent before it was to effect betrothal, and therefore is theoretically non-existent.

(20) Her refusal can nullify his betrothal.

(21) If one appoints an agent to separate his terumah, and then cancels his authority.

(22) Both the appointment and the annulment are by words.

(23) Lit., 'go down to'.

(24) Lit., 'change (brought about) by action'. Utensils may become unclean only when they are finished for use; if they require smoothing, scraping, etc., they are not liable to uncleanness, unless their owner declares his intention to use them as they are. On the other hand, having done so, it is not enough that he subsequently declares he will not use them thus, in order to free them from their liability to uncleanness, unless he actually begins smoothing them. Or, if utensils are unclean, it is insufficient for him to declare that he will not use them any more, so that they should cease to be regarded as utensils, but must render them unfit for use by an act, e.g., break or make a hole in them.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 59b

An act can nullify both act and intention,[1] but intention can nullify neither act nor intention.[2] Now, it is well that it [intention] cannot nullify an act, because speech cannot nullify action; yet let it nullify intention?[3] — Intention, in respect to uncleanliness, is different, because it ranks as action, and in accordance with R. Papa. For R. Papa pointed out a contradiction. It is written, and if one put [yitten], whereas we read, and if it be put [yuttan]:[4] how is this [to be reconciled]? 'If it be put' [must be] similar to 'if one put': just as when one puts, he desires it, so when it is put, he must desire it.[5] R. Zebid recited this discussion in reference to the following: Likewise, if she authorized her agent to betroth her, and went and betrothed herself: if hers came first, her kiddushin is valid; if her agent's came first, her own kiddushin is not valid.[6] Now, what if she did not betroth herself, but retracted?[7] R. Johanan said: She can retract; Resh Lakish maintained: She cannot retract. R. Johanan said: She can retract: Speech comes and nullifies speech — Resh Lakish said: She cannot retract: speech cannot come and nullify speech R. Johanan refuted Resh Lakish: If he annuls, if he does so before he [his agent] has made a separation, his separation is invalid? — Said Raba: Here the circumstances are, e.g., that the owner anticipated [his agent] by separating terumah for his stacks, so that it is action. Resh Lakish refuted R. Johanan: All utensils become liable to their uncleanness by intention, but ascend thence only by a changeful act. An act can nullify both act and intention, but intention can nullify neither act nor intention. Now, it is well that it cannot nullify an act, because speech cannot nullify action; yet let it nullify intention? — He replied: Intention, in respect to uncleanness, is different, because it ranks as action, and in accordance with R. Papa. For R. Papa pointed out a contradiction. It is written: 'and if one put [yitten],' whereas we read: 'and if it be put [yuttan]': how is this [to be reconciled]? 'If it be put' [must be] similar to 'if one put': just as when one puts, he desires it, so when it is put, he must desire it.

R. Johanan objected to Resh Lakish: If one sends a divorce to his wife, and then overtakes the messenger or sends a messenger after him and says. 'The divorce which I gave you is null,' it is null. This is a refutation of Resh Lakish. It is indeed a refutation. Now, the law is as R. Johanan., even in the first [dispute]; for though we might argue [there]. 'Giving money into a woman's hand is different, for it is like an action,' yet even so, speech comes and nullifies speech. But one law contradicts another! For you say; The law is as R. Johanan, while we have an established principle that the law is as R. Nahman, For the scholars propounded: Can he change his mind and divorce therewith?[8] R. Nahman said: He can change his mind and divorce therewith; R. Shesheth ruled: He cannot change his mind and divorce therewith — And it is an established [principle] that the law is as R. Nahman![9] — Granted that he nullified it as far as the messenger is concerned, he did not nullify its efficacy as a divorce.[10]

SHE IS BETROTHED TO THE SECOND. Rab said: She is permanently betrothed to the second; Samuel ruled: She is betrothed to the second until [the end of the] thirty days, after which the betrothal of the second is lifted and that of the first is completed. R. Hisda sat, and found it difficult: Wherewith is the betrothal of the second lifted? — Said R. Joseph to him, You, Sir, learn this in connection with the first clause, and so find it difficult; but Rab Judah learns it in connection with the second clause, and finds no difficulty: FROM NOW AND AFTER THIRTY DAYS. etc. Rab said: She is permanently betrothed yet not betrothed; whereas Samuel ruled: She is betrothed and not betrothed only until [the end of the] thirty days, after which the betrothal of the second loses force and that of the first is completed. Now, Rab is in doubt whether it is a stipulation or a withdrawal;[11] whereas Samuel is certain that it is a stipulation. Now, this enters into the controversy of the following Tannaim: [If one declares, 'Be thou divorced] from to-day and after my death,' it is a divorce and not a divorce: this is the view of the Sages.[12] Rabbi ruled: It is indeed a divorce.[13] Then let Rab say: The halachah agrees with the Rabbis, and let Samuel say: The halachah is as Rabbi? — It is necessary. For if Rab said: The halachah is as the Rabbis, I might argue. [That is only] there, seeing that he comes to alienate her;[14] but here, that he comes to attach her [to himself]. I would say that he agrees with Samuel that it is a stipulation.[15] And if Samuel said: The halachah is as Rabbi, I would argue, That is only there, because there is no divorce after death;[16] but here, seeing that the kiddushin can take effect thirty days later, I might say that he agrees with Rab. Thus it is necessary.

Abaye said: On Rab's view, If one came and said to her, 'Behold, thou art betrothed to me from now and after thirty days'; then another came and said to her, 'Behold, thou are betrothed unto me from now and after thirty days':[17]

---

(1) E.g.. if he first slightly smoothed a utensil, shewing that he considered this enough, or declared his intention to use it without smoothing, and then began to smooth it properly, the latter act nullifies the former, and until he finished it is not liable to uncleanness.

(2) If he first declares his intention not to smooth it, or begins using it without smoothing, and then declares that he will smooth it, and so it is unfinished, his second intention cannot nullify his first, or his action.

(3) On R. Johanan's view that speech nullifies speech.

(4) Lev. XI, 38. Foodstuffs, e.g., grain, cannot become unclean unless they receive moisture after being harvested. Now, the text as it stands may be read יתן 'one puts', which implies that a person must actually wet it; but the traditional reading יותן 'it be put', implying even if water accidentally falls thereon.

(5) I.e., if it falls there in circumstances that the owner may be assumed to be pleased therewith, it becomes liable to uncleanliness. Thus Scripture intimates that mere thought has the force of action.

(6) V. infra 79a.

(7) cancelling her agent's authority. Rashi states: Whether she retracts in the agent's presence or not, Tosaf., more plausibly, explains: she retracted without informing the agent; for if she informed him it is obvious that she can withdraw.

(8) With a Get which he had annulled after giving it to the agent.

(9) Which proves that his second declaration does not nullify the validity of the document.

(10) I.e., he never intended to nullify the document itself, but merely the messenger's authority.

(11) When one declares, 'Be thou betrothed unto me from now and after thirty days', we do not know whether he means, 'Be thou betrothed unto me from now, providing that I am still willing in thirty days' time'; or, 'Be thou betrothed unto me from now — not after thirty days.' If the first is correct, when after thirty days he signifies his willingness, his betrothal was valid from the very beginning, and so the subsequent betrothal of another is null. But if the second is correct, this is the same as the first clause, and the second betrothal is valid. Hence her status remains permanently doubtful.

(12) Because we are doubtful: he might have meant, 'B thou divorced from to-day, providing that I die,' in which case it is valid, or, 'Be thou divorced from to-day — no! only after my death': then it is invalid. If he dies childless, she may not marry her brother-in-law, lest it was a divorce; nor is she free to marry a stranger, lest it was not, and so must be freed by halizah, q.v. Glos.

(13) For it was certainly a stipulation.

(14) And as it is hard for him, he postpones it as much as possible, and therefore he may have retracted.

(15) Because he certainly desires the betrothal to take effect as early as possible.

(16) That is generally known, and therefore it must have been a stipulation.

(17) Which ended within the thirty.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 60a

then another came and said to her, 'Behold, thou art betrothed to me from now and after thirty days':[1] she requires a divorce from the first and the second, but not from the last. For on either alternative:[2] if it is a stipulation, that of the first is [valid] kiddushin, but not those of the second and third; if it is withdrawal, that of the last is kiddushin, but not of the first and the second.[3] But is this not obvious? — I might say. This expression implies both stipulation and withdrawal, and she requires a divorce from each:[4] hence we are informed [otherwise]. 'Ulla said in R. Johanan's name: Even a hundred have a hold on her.[5] R. Assi said likewise in R. Johanan's name: Even a hundred have a hold on her. R. Mesharasheya son of R. Ammi said to R. Assi: I will explain R. Johananðs reason to you: they made themselves like a row of bricks, each leaving room for the next. R. Hanina raised an objection: [If one declares, 'Be thou divorced] from to-day and after my death,' it is a divorce and not a divorce, and if he dies, she must perform halizah, but not yibum.[6] Now, on Rab's view it is well, for this supports him; according to Samuel too, [there is no difficulty,] for [he may say], This agrees with the Rabbis, whereas I hold with Rabbi.[7] But according to R. Johanan who maintains that something is left over: every divorce which leaves something in her [tied to her husband] is entirely invalid:[8] then let him perform yibum? — Said Raba: The divorce is to free [her], and death is likewise; [hence] what the divorce leaves [undone] is completed by death — Abaye demurred: How compare! Divorce frees her from the yabam's authority, whereas death places her in the yabam's authority? But, said Abaye, there, what is the reason? As a preventive measure, on account of 'From to-day, if I die,' which is certainly a valid divorce.[9] Then let us enact that [if he says,] 'from to-day, if I die,' she shall perform halizah[10] on account of 'from to-day and after death!'[11] — Should you say that she must perform halizah, she may submit to yibum.[12] Then here too, if you say that she must perform halizah, she may submit to yibum? — Then let her, and it does not matter, seeing that it[13] is only a Rabbinical precaution.[14]

MISHNAH. IF ONE SAYS TO A WOMAN. 'BEHOLD, THOU ART BETROTHED UNTO ME[15] ON CONDITION THAT I GIVE THEE TWO HUNDRED ZUZ,' SHE IS BETROTHED, AND HE MUST GIVE IT. ON CONDITION THAT I GIVE THEE WITHIN THIRTY DAYS FROM NOW: IF HE GIVES HER WITHIN THIRTY DAYS, SHE IS BETROTHED; IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. ON CONDITION THAT I POSSESS TWO HUNDRED ZUZ, SHE IS BETROTHED, PROVIDING HE POSSESSES [THEM]. 'ON CONDITION THAT I SHEW THEE TWO HUNDRED ZUZ,' SHE IS BETROTHED, AND HE MUST SHEW HER. BUT IF HE SHEWS HER [MONEY LYING] ON THE COUNTER,[16] SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.[17]

GEMARA. It was stated: R. Huna said: [The Mishnah means] and he must give it;[18] Rab Judah said: When he gives it:[19] 'R. Huna said, and he must give it': it is a condition, [and so] he fulfils the condition and goes on.[20] 'Rab Judah said: When he gives it': when he gives it, the kiddushin is valid; nevertheless now it is not kiddushin. Wherein do they differ? — They differ where she stretches out her hand and accepts kiddushin from another: on R. Huna's view it is not kiddushin; on Rab Judah's it is kiddushin. Now, we learnt similarly with reference to divorce. If one says to his wife, 'Behold here is thy divorce on condition that thou givest me two hundred zuz,' she is divorced, and must give [it]. It was stated: R. Huna said: And she must give it; Rab Judah said: When she gives it. 'R. Huna said: And she must give it': it is a condition, [and so] she proceeds to fulfil the condition. 'Rab Judah said: When she gives it': when she gives it to him, then it is a divorce; now, however it is not a divorce.

---

(1) Or simply, 'Behold, thou art betrothed unto me. ð 'From now,' etc., is only mentioned as a parallel to the first two (Rashi).

(2) Lit., 'what will you?'

(3) Hence only the first and last are in doubt.

(4) The first may have meant to retract, so that the second's kiddushin is valid, whilst the second himself may have stipulated, in which case his is valid. Again, both the first and second may have retracted, so the third's is valid; thus all three are in doubt.

(5) The kiddushin of each has partial force, because the declaration means, Let the kiddushin commence now, but be completed only in thirty days' time. On this view there is no question of stipulation or withdrawal.

(6) V. p. 301. n. 1.

(7) V. supra 59b.

(8) Cf. supra p. 13, n. 10.
(9) And yibum is then forbidden. But when he says: ‘From to-day and after my death,’ people may confuse it with the other. Hence the Rabbis forbade yibum in both cases.
(10) Though actually it is unnecessary.
(11) Which, being invalid, leaves her tied to the yabam, and necessitates halizah; and, as stated, these two may be confused.
(12) Thinking that there is a real tie.
(13) Sc. the law that she must not submit to yibum.
(14) Lit., ‘fear’.
(15) E.g., with this perutah.
(16) Of a money-changer.
(17) Because it is understood that his own is meant.
(18) I.e., she is betrothed immediately, and then this obligation lies on him.
(19) Only then is she betrothed.
(20) I.e., when he can.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 60b

Wherein do they differ? — They differ where the divorce document is torn or lost [before the money is given]: according to R. Huna, it is a divorce; according to Rab Judah, it is not a divorce. Now, it is necessary [to state both cases]. For if we were told this of kiddushin [only, I would say] in that case R. Huna says thus, because he comes to attach her [to himself];[1] but as for divorce, where he comes to alienate her, I might say that he agrees with Rab Judah. And if the latter were taught: only there does R. Huna rule thus, for he [the husband] is not ashamed to demand it of her; but here [in the case of marriage], seeing that she is ashamed to demand it of him, I would argue that he agrees with Rab Judah. Thus both are necessary.

An objection was raised: ‘Here is thy divorce, on condition that thou givest me two hundred zuz,’ she is divorced even though the document is torn or lost;[2] yet she may not marry another until she has given it. Again, it was taught: ‘Here is thy divorce on condition that thou givest me two hundred zuz,’ and then he dies, if she gave it [before his death], she is not bound to the yabam; if not, she is bound to the yabam.[3] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: She can give it to his brother, father, or one of his relations.[4] Now, they differ only in so far as one Master holds, ‘To me’ [implies] ‘but not to my heirs’, whilst the other rules: ‘Even to my heirs’; but all agree that it is a condition, which refutes Rab Judah! — Rab Judah answers you: Who is the authority for this? Rabbi. For R. Huna said in Rabbi's name:[5] He who says. ‘On condition,’ is as though he says: ‘From now’;[6] but the Rabbis disagree with him, and I hold with the Rabbis.

The text [says]: R. Huna said in Rabbi's name: He who says. ‘on condition,’ is as though he says: ‘From now.’ R. Zera observed: When we were in Babylon[7] we used to say: With reference to R. Huna's dictum in Rabbi's name, ‘One who says: "on condition," is as though he says: "from now"’: the Rabbis dispute it. When I went up thither [Palestine], I found R. Assi sitting and expounding in R. Johanan's name: All agree that if he says: ‘on condition,’ it is as though he says: ‘From now’. They differ only in respect of ‘from to-day and after death’. And it was taught even so: ‘From to-day and after [my death]’: it is a divorce, yet not a divorce: this is the view of the Sages. Rabbi said: This indeed is a divorce.[8] Now, according to Rab Judah who maintains that they differ in respect of ‘on condition’ too’ instead of disputing in [the case of] ‘from to-day and after [my] death,’ let them dispute in respect of ‘on condition?’ — That is to teach you the extent of Rabbi's view,[9] that even in the case of ‘from to-day and after death,’ it is a valid divorce. Then let them dispute with reference to ‘on condition,’ to shew you the extent of the Rabbis’ view? — The extent of what is permitted is more important.[10]

ON CONDITION THAT I GIVE THEE WITHIN THIRTY DAYS FROM NOW' etc. But it is obvious? — I might have thought that it is not a condition,[11] and he said it to urge her on; hence we are told [that it is not so.]

ON CONDITION THAT I POSSESS TWO HUNDRED ZUZ' etc. But let us fear that he may possess it [secretly]? Moreover, it was taught: We fear that he may possess it? — There is no difficulty: The one refers to certain kiddushin; the other, to doubtful kiddushin.[12] 'ON CONDITION THAT I SHEW THEE TWO HUNDRED ZUZ' etc. A Tanna taught: Her purpose was to see none but his.

BUT IF HE SHEWS HER [MONEY LYING] ON THE COUNTER, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. But it is obvious? — It is necessary [to teach it] only even when he holds the money in an investment.[13] MISHNAH. [IF HE SAYS TO HER 'BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME][14] ON CONDITION THAT I OWN A BETH KOR[15] OF LAND',[16] SHE IS BETROTHED, PROVIDING THAT HE DOES OWN IT. ON CONDITION THAT I OWN IT IN SUCH AND SUCH A PLACE', IF HE OWNS IT THERE SHE IS BETROTHED, BUT IF NOT SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. 'ON CONDITION THAT I SHEW THEE A BETH KOR OF LAND,' SHE IS BETROTHED, PROVIDING THAT HE DOES SHEW IT TO HER. BUT IF HE SHEWS IT TO HER IN A PLAIN,[17] SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.

GEMARA. But let us fear that he may possess it? Moreover, it was taught. We fear that he may possess it? — There is no difficulty: the one refers to certain kiddushin; the other, to doubtful kiddushin.[18]

Why must it be taught with respect to both land and money? — It is necessary: for if we were told this of money, [I would say] that is because people are accustomed to hide money;[19] but as for land I would say: If he possesses land, it is known:[20] hence we are informed [otherwise].

ON CONDITION THAT I POSSESS IT IN SUCH AND SUCH A PLACE,' IF HE POSSESSES IT. etc. But it is obvious? — I might argue that he can say to her, 'What does it matter to you? I will take the trouble of bringing [its produce where you want it].' Hence we are informed [that it is not so].

ON CONDITION THAT I SHEW THEE A BETH KOR OF LAND. A Tanna taught: Her meaning was to see none but his.

BUT IF HE SHEWS IT TO HER IN A PLAIN, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. But that is obvious? — It is necessary [to teach it] only if he holds it on a farming tenancy.[21]

With respect to hekdesh we learnt:

---

(1) Therefore we assume that both are anxious for the kiddushin to be valid as early as possible, and determine that the first perutah shall effect it.

(2) By the time the condition is fulfilled. This contradicts Rab Judah.

(3) If her husband dies childless.

(4) Whereupon the divorce is retrospectively valid.

(5) The reading supra 8a is Rab, which is more correct per se, since Rab was his teacher. But as a Tanna is necessary here, it is referred to Rabbi.

(6) V. p. 29, n. 8.

(7) R. Zera hailed from Babylon. and went to study in Palestine.

(8) V. supra 59b.

(9) Lit., 'Rabbi's strength.'

(10) I.e., it is more important to shew how far one maintains that a particular act is valid, rather than the opposing view how far it is invalid, for one must be more positive to permit than to forbid.

(11) That it be given within the thirty days.

(12) If he is not openly in possession of the stipulated sum she is not betrothed with certainty; v. p. 47. n. 10.

(13) He was trading with another man's capital at a fixed percentage of profit and loss, so that he had a proprietary interest therein. Nevertheless she is not betrothed.

(14) E.g., with this perutah.

(15) An area which requires thirty se'ahs of seed, which is estimated at 1500 cubits X 50 cubits.

(16) Lit., 'earth'.

(17) Which does not belong to him.

(18) v. p. 305. n. 5.

(19) Hence even if he is not openly in possession of it, she is doubtfully betrothed.

(20) Lit., 'it has a voiceð.

(21) Paying an agreed percentage of the crops in rent; v. p. 305, n. 6.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 61a

He who sanctifies his field when Jubilee is in force, must pay [for its redemption] fifty silver shekels for [an area requiring] a homer of barley seed.[1] If it contains ravines ten handbreadths deep, or rocks ten handbreadths high, they are not measured with it;[2] if less than this, they are measured therewith. Now, we pondered thereon: Granted that they are not sanctified together with the [rest of the] field, yet let them be sanctified separately? And should you answer, whatever is less than a beth kor is not counted.[3] But the following contradicts it: [And if a man shall sanctify unto the Lord part of a] field [of his possession, etc.]:[4] why is this stated? Because it is said, the sowing of a homer of barley shall be valued at fifty [shekels of silver]; [hence] l know it only if he sanctifies in such a manner;[5] how do I know to include a lethek.[6] half a lethek, a se'ah, tarkab[7] half a tarkab, and even a quarter [se'ah]? Because it is stated: 'a field,' whatever its size! — Said Mar 'Ukba b. Hama: The reference here is to ravines filled with water, because they are unfit for sowing. This may be proved too, because it is taught analogous to high rocks.[8] This proves it. If so, [it is the same] even if less than this?[9] — Those are called basins of the field[10] and ridges[11] of the field.[12]

With respect to purchase we learnt: If one says to his neighbour, 'I sell you a beth kor of land,' and it contains ravines ten handbreadths deep or rocks ten handbreadths high, they are not measured with it. And Mar 'Ukba b. Hama said: Even if they are not filled with water. What is the reason? — Said R. Papa: Because a man does not wish to pay his money for one field and it should appear as two or three plots.[13] How is it here:[14] do we compare it with hekdesh or purchase? — It is rational that we compare it to hekdesh. because he can say to her, 'I will exert myself[15] sow it, and bring [you the crop].' MISHNAH. R. MEIR SAID: EVERY STIPULATION WHICH IS NOT LIKE THAT OF THE CHILDREN OF GAD AND THE CHILDREN OF REUBEN IS NOT A [VALID] STIPULATION, BECAUSE IT IS WRITTEN. AND MOSES SAID UNTO THEM, IF THE CHILDREN OF GAD AND THE CHILDREN OF REUBEN WILL PASS WITH YOU OVER THE JORDAN, [. . . THEN YE SHALL GIVE THEM THE LAND OF GILEAD FOR A POSSESSION]. AND IT IS ALSO WRITTEN. BUT IF THEY WILL NOT PASS OVER WITH YOU ARMED, THEN THEY SHALL HAVE POSSESSIONS AMONG YOU IN THE LAND OF CANAAN.[16] R. HANINA B. GAMALIEL MAINTAINED: THE MATTER HAD TO BE STATED. FOR OTHERWISE IT IMPLIES THAT THEY SHOULD HAVE NO INHERITANCE EVEN IN CANAAN.[17]

GEMARA. R. Hanina b. Gamaliel says well to R. Meir? — R. Meir answers you: Should you think that it does not come for [teaching] a double stipulation, it [Scripture] should write, 'but if they will not pass over . . . they shall have possession among you': why state, 'in the land of Canaan'?

(1) Whatever its actual value, in accordance with Lev. XXVII, 16.
(2) As part of the total area.
(3) Because that is the smallest area mentioned in Scripture.
(4) Ibid.
(5) I.e., this area.
(6) Half a kor.
(7) =Three kabs =half a se'ah.
(8) Where sowing is impossible.
(9) Ten handbreadths high or deep.
(10) Into which the water runs off.
(11) Lit., 'spine'.
(12) But are not considered as distinct. For fuller notes v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) pp. 429ff.
(13) Such deep ravines etc. break up the field.
(14) In our Mishnah, if the field contains such deep ravines which are not waterlogged.
(15) Lit., 'trouble'.
(16) Num. XXXII, 29f; but not Gilead. Though the second follows from the first, Moses stated both contingencies explicitly. Again, the positive ('will pass') precedes the negative ('will not pass'). and the condition ('if they pass over') precedes the apodosis ('then ye shall give' etc.). Hence every stipulation, to be valid, requires these three factors: (i) it must be double, stating both contingencies; (ii) the positive must precede the negative; and (iii) the condition must be stated before the act (Rashi. Raabad, Adreth and Tur). Maim. interprets: the condition must be stated before the act is agreed upon, but not after.
(17) But if the negative clearly follows from the positive, the condition need not be doubled. Rashi holds that he differs on this point only, agreeing on the other two, while Tosaf. maintains that he differs on all three.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 61b

This proves that it comes to necessitate a double stipulation. And R. Hanina b. Gamaliel? — If the Divine Law did not write, 'in the land of Canaan,' I would think that 'they shall have possession among you' in the land of Gilead, but nothing at all of the land of Canaan. And R. Meir? — 'Among you' implies, 'wherever you have possessions'.[1] It was taught: R. Hanina b. Gamaliel said: For example, to what may this matter be compared? To a man who divided his estate among his sons, and directed, 'That son shall inherit that field, that son shall inherit that field, while that son shall pay two hundred zuz and inherit that field.[2] But if he does not give it, he shall inherit the rest of my estate together with his brothers.' Now, what causes him to receive an inheritance together with his other brethren in the rest of the estate? His doubling [of the stipulation] effects it for him.[3] But the illustration is not similar to our Mishnah. There he states. [FOR OTHERWISE] IT IMPLIES THAT THEY SHOULD HAVE NO INHERITANCE EVEN IN CANAAN, which proves that the doubling served a purpose in respect of Gilead too;[4] whereas here he states: 'What causes him to receive an inheritance together with his other brethren in the rest of the estate? His doubling [of the stipulation] effects it for him,' which proves that the doubling is efficacious [only] in respect to the rest of the estate? — There is no difficulty: the former was before R. Meir told him [the implication of], 'then they shall have possession therein;'[5] the latter [the illustration], after R. Meir told him [the implication of], 'then they shall have possession therein'.[6]

As for R. Meir, it is well: hence it is written: If thou doest well, shalt thou not be rewarded? and if thou doest not well, sin coucheth at the door.[7] But according to R. Hanina, what is its purpose?[8] — I might have thought, If thou doest well, there is reward, but if thou doest not well, there is neither reward nor punishment. Hence we are informed [otherwise].

Now, as for R. Meir, it is well: hence it is written, then thou shalt be clear from this my oath;[9] but according to R. Hanina b. Gamaliel, what is its purpose?[10] — It is necessary: I might think, If she were willing but not they [sc. her family], he was to bring her against their will. Hence we are informed [otherwise]. What is the purpose of, 'and if the woman be not willing?'[9] — It is necessary: I might think, If they [her family] were willing but not she, he should bring her against her will. Hence we are informed [otherwise].

Now, as for R. Meir, it is well: hence it is written. If ye walk in my statutes . . . and if ye shall reject my statutes.[11] But according to R. Hanina b. Gamaliel, what is its purpose? — It is necessary. I might think, 'if ye walk in my statutes', [ye shall have] a blessing; 'but if ye shall reject my statutes,' neither a blessing nor a curse. Hence we are informed [otherwise].

Now, as for R. Meir, it is well: hence it is written: If ye be willing and obedient etc. . . . but if ye refuse and rebel.[12] But according to R. Hanina b. Gamaliel, what is its purpose? — It is necessary. I might think, 'If ye be willing,' [it will be] well; 'but if ye refuse,' [it will be] neither well nor good. So we are informed [that it is not so].

What is the meaning of,

---

(1) I.e., Canaan; hence R. Hanina's hypothetical assumption is impossible. — From the whole discussion it appears that even if they did not pass over they would still have a portion of Palestine. This is most unreasonable, and so Tosaf. explains the verses as follows: If they pass over armed at the head of the forces, bearing the brunt of the battle, they will be favoured with the special grant of Gilead. But if they merely take an equal share with their brethren in the conquest, they will receive the same as the rest, viz., a portion of Palestine proper.

(2) Which is worth more than his due share.

(3) [For but for the second claim, it might be maintained that if he does not give the two hundred zuz he can claim a share only in the third field, but receives nothing from the other two fields assigned to his two brothers. Similarly, in the verses under discussion, but for the second claim, it would be assumed that the Gaddites and Reubenites in the case of their non-fulfilment of the condition would share with the rest of the tribes the district of Gilead, while forfeiting all claim to the land of Canaan.]

(4) ['EVEN' implies that, but for this doubling, they would, on nonfulfillment of the condition, have no share in Gilead.]

(5) [R. Hanina in the Mishnah was but countering R. Meir's argument which he understood to be that the whole of the verses in question are required for the purpose of the doubling of the condition, and he thus said that the doubling was necessary, for without it, it would be assumed that they would have no share at all, even in the land of Canaan.]

(6) [When he learnt that R. Meir based his deduction from 'in the land of Canaan', he rejoined that these words are necessary to indicate that they would, on fulfilment of the condition, receive a share in the land of Canaan, as supra.]

(7) Gen. IV, 7.

(8) For one follows from the other.

(9) Ibid. XXIV. 8.

(10) Since it follows from the general context of the oath, q.v. (Tosaf.).

(11) Lev. XXVI, 3, 15.

(12) Isa. I, 19f.

'ye shall be fed with the sword'?[1] — Said Raba: Coarse salt, hard baked barley bread, and onions; for a Master said: Stale bread baked in a large oven with salt and onions is as harmful to the body as swords.

Now, as for R. Hanina b. Gamaliel, it is well: hence it is written: If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness, be thou free.[2] But according to R. Meir, it should [also] state, 'be thou strangled'?[3] — Said R. Tanhum: hinnaki is written.[4] [Then] as for R. Meir, it is well: hence it is written hinnaki. But according to R. Hanina b. Gamaliel. what is its purpose?[5] — It is necessary: I might think, If no man have lain [with thee] . . . be thou free; but if a man have lain [with thee], be thou neither free nor strangled, but merely [guilty of violating] a prohibition. Hence we are informed [otherwise].

As for R. Meir, it is well: hence it is written: He shall purify himself therewith on the third day, and on the seventh day, [then] he shall be clean: but if he purify not himself etc.[6] But according to R. Hanina b. Gamaliel, what is its purpose? — It is necessary: I might think, The precept of sprinkling is [that it be performed] on the third and the seventh [days]; yet if it is done only on one of these days, it is done [and effective]. Therefore we are told [that both days are essential]. What is the purpose of, and the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day?[7] — It is necessary: I might think, the third excludes the second, and the seventh excludes the sixth, because thereby one diminishes the days of purification; but if it is performed on the third and the eighth days. thereby increasing the period of purification. I might say that it is well. Hence we are informed [otherwise].[8] What is the purpose of, 'and on the seventh day he shall purify him'? — It is necessary: I might think, that [sc. sprinkling on these days] is only for sacred food,[9] but for terumah even one is sufficient: hence we are told [that it is not so]. MISHNAH. IF HE BETROTHS A WOMAN AND THEN DECLARES, 'I THOUGHT THAT SHE WAS A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER, WHEREAS SHE IS OF A LEVITE.' OR OF A LEVITE WHEREAS SHE IS OF A PRIEST; 'POOR', WHEREAS SHE IS WEALTHY, OR 'WEALTHY', WHEREAS SHE IS POOR, SHE IS BETROTHED, SINCE SHE DID NOT DECEIVE HIM. IF HE SAYS TO A WOMAN, BEHOLD, BE THOU BETROTHED UNTO ME AFTER I BECOME A PROSELYTE,' OR 'AFTER THOU BECOMEST A PROSELYTE, AFTER I AM LIBERATED,' OR 'AFTER THOU ART LIBERATED, AFTER THY HUSBAND DIES'. OR, 'AFTER THY SISTER DIES.'[10] OR 'AFTER THY YABAM PERFORMS HALIZAH FOR THEE'; SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. LIKEWISE, IF HE SAYS TO HIS NEIGHBOUR, IF THY WIFE BEARS A FEMALE, LET HER BE BETROTHED UNTO ME,' SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. (IF HIS WIFE, HOWEVER, IS PREGNANT, THE CHILD BEING DISCERNIBLE, HIS WORDS ARE VALID, AND IF SHE BEARS A FEMALE, SHE IS BETROTHED.)[11]

GEMARA. We learnt elsewhere: Terumah must not be separated from detached [corn] for that which is attached,[12] and if he does separate, his separation is not terumah. R. Assi asked R. Johanan: What if one declares, 'The detached produce of this furrow be terumah for the detached produce of this one, when it is plucked',[13] and then it is plucked? — He answered him: Whatever [act] lies in his power, is not as though that act were lacking.[14] He raised an objection: IF ONE SAYS TO A WOMAN, BEHOLD, THOU ART BETROTHED UNTO ME AFTER I BECOME A PROSELYTE, OR, 'AFTER THOU BECOMEST A PROSELYTE,' 'AFTER I AM LIBERATED, OR, 'AFTER THOU ART LIBERATED,' 'AFTER THY HUSBAND DIES,' OR, 'AFTER THY SISTER DIES,' OR, AFTER THY YABAM PERFORMS HALIZAH FOR THEE.' SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. As for all, it is well, for they are not in his power; but [to be] a proselyte surely lies in his power! — [To become] a proselyte is not in his power either. For R. Hiyya b. Abba said in R. Johanan's name:

---

(1) Ibid., so translated here.

(2) Num. V. 19; but the reverse contingency is left to be understood.

(3) If thou hast gone aside, etc.; i.e., the reverse.

(4) Which also suggests, hinnaki, be thou strangled. v. Shebu (Sonc. ed.) p. 213, n. 6 and Sot. (Sonc. ed.) P- 89, n. 2.

(5) Why write a word capable of two readings?

(6) Num. XIX, 12.

(7) Ibid. 19. This difficulty arises on all views: why repeat third and seventh?

(8) By this repetition.

(9) I.e., sacrifices, which require a very high degree of purity.

(10) I.e., his own wife, whether living with him or divorced.

(11) From R. Hanina's statement infra but is evident that the bracketed passage must be deleted.

(12) Produce is not liable to terumah until it is harvested, but not while it is yet attached to the soil, and one may not separate from what is liable for what is not liable.

(13) That refers to both clauses.

(14) Since it rests with him to harvest the produce, it is accounted as already harvested, and his declaration is valid.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 62b

A proselyte requires three [Israelites].[1] What is the reason? Judgment [mishpat] is written in connection therewith, as for a lawsuit:[2] who can say that these three will assemble for him?[3]

R. Abba b. Memel demurred thereto:[4] If so, if a man gives a perutah to his [heathen] bondmaid and says to her, 'Behold, thou art betrothed unto me after I liberate thee,' is it indeed [valid] kiddushin?[5] — How compare! There, she is originally like an animal,[6] whereas now [after liberation] she is an independent mind. Then when R. Oshaia said: If he gives his wife a perutah and says to her, 'Behold, thou art betrothed unto me after I divorce thee,' she is not betrothed: according to R. Johanan. is she indeed betrothed? — Granted that it rests with him to divorce, is it in his power to betroth her?[7] [From this answer, then,] solve R. Oshaia's problem. [Viz.] [What] if one gives two perutoth to a woman: With one he says to her, 'Be thou betrothed unto me to-day.' and with the other, 'Be thou betrothed unto me after I divorce thee': from this [then] deduce that it is not [valid] kiddushin! — [No.] Perhaps. just as kiddushin can be effective now, it can be effective afterwards.[8]

It was taught as R. Johanan: One must not separate from detached [produce] for attached; and if one does separate, his separation is not terumah. How so? If he declares, 'The detached produce of this furrow be terumah for the attached produce of that one,' or 'the attached produce of this furrow be terumah for the detached produce of that one', his statement is null. But if he declares, 'when it is cut off,' and then it is cut off, his declaration is valid. R. Eliezer b. Jacob went further.[9] Even if he declares, 'The detached produce of this furrow be terumah for the attached produce of this one,' or, 'the attached produce of this furrow be terumah for the detached produce of this one when it [the attached] is a third grown and cut off,' and it then grows to a third [of its full maturity] and is cut off, his declaration is valid.[10] Rabbah said: R. Eliezer b. Jacob ruled thus only of fodder,[11] but not of leek-like plants.[12] R. Joseph said: [He ruled thus] even of soft plants.[13] Where is it implied that this word 'agam' connotes leek-like plants? — R. Eleazar answered, because Scripture saith, is it to bow down his head as a rush [ke-agmon]?[14]

With whom does the following agree? For we learnt: IF ONE SAYS TO HIS NEIGHBOUR. 'IF THY WIFE BEARS A FEMALE, LET HER BE BETROTHED UNTO ME.' SHE IS NOT BETROTHED — whereon R. Hanina said: This was taught only if his wife is not pregnant; but if she is, his declaration is valid, — with whom [does it agree]? — If it is according to Rabbah, it means that her child was discernible; if as R. Joseph, even if her child is not discernible.[15] Others state, Rabbah said: R. Eliezer b. Jacob ruled thus only of the fodder of a naturally watered field, but not of the fodder of an artificially irrigated field.[16] R. Joseph said: Even of the fodder of an artificially irrigated field. With whom does the following agree? For we learnt: IF ONE SAYS TO

HIS NEIGHBOUR. 'IF THY WIFE BEARS A FEMALE, LET HER BE BETROTHED UNTO ME,' SHE IS NOT BETROTHED, whereon R. Hanina said: This was taught only if his wife was not pregnant; but if she was, his declaration is valid with whom [does it agree]? — It means that her child was discernible, and agrees with all.[17]

Abaye said: R. Eliezer b. Jacob, Rabbi, and R. Meir, all hold that one may transmit the title to an object which has not come into the world.[18] R. Eliezer b. Jacob, as stated. Rabbi, for it was taught:

---

(1) For the ceremony of conversion, v. Yeb. 47a.

(2) Lev. XXIV, 22: Ye shall have one manner of judgment (mishpat), as well as for the proselyte (so understood here; E.V. 'stranger') as for the homeborn. 'Mishpat' really means a judgment in a civil suit, for which three are required.

(3) Hence it is not in his power. Views on proselytes varied in ancient Israel, v. J.E. X. pp. 221ff. But as it may, the answer given here shews that one encountered real difficulties before he could be converted, and often was denied it altogether.

(4) Sc. R. Johanan's ruling.

(5) Surely not, though it does rest with him.

(6) In that she has no independent will.

(7) Surely not.

(8) That is R. Oshaia's problem: seeing that he can betroth her now he can do so for the kiddushin to become effective after divorce. But if he gives his wife kiddushin, to take effect after he divorces her, no part of his declaration is valid there and then.

(9) Lit., 'said more than this'.

(10) Though before it is a third grown it is not regarded as produce at all, and even if he harvested it then he could not tithe it (R.H. 13a), and so it is something as yet non-existent; moreover, it does not rest with him to make it grow. Yet R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintains that his declaration is valid, for one can transmit title of what is yet non-existent. (Here by his declaration he transmits a title to priests.)

(11) I.e., corn which can be cut before it is a third grown and used for fodder.

(12) Jast.: soft, bending plants, which cannot be used as fodder.

(13) Rabbah holds that soft plants have no real worth at all before they are a third grown; R. Joseph holds that even so it is sufficient for R. Eliezer b. Jacob's view to operate.

(14) Isa. LVIII, 5.

(15) 'Discernible' and 'not discernible' are compared respectively to fodder, which can be put to use, and to soft plants. which cannot (before they are a third grown). On both views, however, R. Hanina's interpretation implies that one can transmit the title of an object which is as yet non-existent, and hence agrees with R. Eliezer b. Jacob.

(16) The former is more certain than the latter, which permits human error and neglect.

(17) Since the development of the embryo does not depend on artificial means, it is similar to the fodder of a naturally watered field.

(18) I.e., as yet non-existent.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 63a

Thou shalt not deliver unto his master a servant [which is escaped from his master]:[1] Rabbi said: The Writ refers to one who buys a slave on condition that he emancipates him.[2] How so? Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: E.g., if he wrote for him, 'When I buy you, you belong to yourself from now.'[3]

R. Meir, for it was taught: If one says to a woman, 'Behold, thou art betrothed unto me after I become a proselyte', or, 'after thou becomest a proselyte', 'after I am freed,' or 'after thou art freed,' 'after thy husband dies,' or, 'after thy sister dies,' 'after thy yabam performs halizah for thee,' she is not betrothed. R. Meir said: She is betrothed.[4] R. Johanan the sandal maker said: She is not betrothed. R. Judah the Nasi[5] said: [By rights] she is betrothed, yet why did they [the Sages] say, she is not betrothed? Because of bad feeling.[6] Then let R. Judah the Nasi be counted too? — Rabbi and R. Judah the Nasi are identical. And let R. Akiba be counted too? For we learnt: [If a woman says to her husband,] 'Konam be my work for thy mouth,'[7] he need not annul it.[8] R. Akiba said: He should annul it, lest she do for him more than she is obliged to do for him![9] — But was it not stated thereon, R. Huna son of R. Joshua said: It means that she vowed, 'Let my hands be sanctified to their Maker,'[10] and her hands are in existence?[11]

MISHNAH. IF ONE SAYS TO A WOMAN, BEHOLD. THOU ART BETROTHED UNTO ME ON CONDITION THAT I SPEAK TO THE GOVERNOR ON THY BEHALF', OR 'THAT I WORK FOR THEE AS A LABOURER', IF HE SPEAKS TO THE GOVERNOR ON HER BEHALF OR WORKS FOR HER AS A LABOURER, SHE IS BETROTHED; IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED.

GEMARA. Resh Lakish said: Providing that he gives [her] the value of a perutah.[12] But not in payment [of speaking etc.]? Surely it was taught: '[Be thou betrothed unto me] in payment for that I drove thee on an ass,' or 'seated thee in the carriage or ship,' she is not betrothed.[13] 'In payment for that I will drive thee on an ass, or 'seat thee in a carriage or ship,' she is betrothed? And should you answer: Here too it means that he gives her the value of a perutah: but it states: 'in payment?' Again, it was taught: [If a woman says,] 'Sit with me as a companion, and I will become betrothed unto thee,' 'jest before me,' 'dance before me', 'do as was done in this public game',[14] we assess it: if it is worth a perutah, she is betrothed; if not, she is not betrothed. And should you answer, here too it means that he gives her the value of a perutah [in addition]; surely it states, we assess it, thus refuting Resh Lakish? — Resh Lakish can answer you: The Tanna of this Baraitha[15] holds, Wages are a liability only at the end; whereas our Tanna holds, Wages are a liability from beginning to end.[16] Now, what compels Resh Lakish to explain our Mishnah on the basis that wages are a liability from beginning to end and that he gives her [a perutah in addition]? — Said Raba: [For otherwise,] our Mishnah presents a difficulty to him: why state particularly, ON CONDITION: state, 'in payment for'? Hence this proves that wherever 'on condition' [is taught], it means that he gives her [something in addition].

MISHNAH. [IF HE SAYS,] 'ON CONDITION THAT [MY] FATHER CONSENTS,' IF HIS FATHER CONSENTS, SHE IS BETROTHED; IF NOT, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. IF HIS FATHER DIES, SHE IS BETROTHED; IF THE SON DIES, THE FATHER IS INSTRUCTED TO SAY THAT HE DOES NOT CONSENT.[17]

GEMARA. What is meant by 'ON CONDITION THAT [MY] FATHER CONSENTS?' Shall we say, providing that my father [explicitly] says 'yes'? Then consider the middle clause: IF HIS FATHER DIES, SHE IS BETROTHED. Surely he did not say 'yes!' Hence [it must mean]

---

(1) Deut. XXIII, 16.

(2) Or, for the purpose of emancipating him. If his master goes back on his word and the slave escapes, the Court must not deliver him up again.

(3) Thus he transmits to the slave something which, as far as he is concerned, is as yet non-existent, viz., his rights over him. (Such fall within the category of things which have not yet come into the world.) Since Rabbi applies the verse to such a case, he evidently holds such transmission valid.

(4) Though all these are non-existent at the time.

(5) The Prince.

(6) [Which such betrothal engenders in the mind of the sister and the husband whose death seems to be keenly awaited. R. Judah the Nasi refers to these two cases. In the other cases he agrees with R. Meir.]

(7) Forbidden be it by a vow, v. Ned. 85a.

(8) Since she must work for him, her vow is null in any case.

(9) For the extent of her obligation v. Ket. 64b. The vow in respect of the excess is binding, hence R. Akiba rules that her husband should annul it. This shews that he holds that one may make a binding declaration in respect of what is not yet in existence.

(10) In the sense that they may do nothing for her husband.
(11) Lit., 'in the world'.
(12) And stipulates, 'on condition that I speak' etc.
(13) Because this payment is a debt, which cannot effect kiddushin; v. supra 6b.
(14) Jast. Which games are alluded to is not stated. Rashi: Make for me such a masonry.
(15) Lit., 'this outside Tanna'.
(16) V. supra 48a.
(17) So that the kiddushin is null ab initio and she is not bound to the yabam.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 63b

'on condition that my father is silent.'[1] Then consider the last clause: IF THE SON DIES. THE FATHER IS INSTRUCTED TO SAY THAT HE DOES NOT CONSENT: yet why, seeing that he was silent?[2] Hence [it must mean that] he said to her, on condition that my father does not [explicitly] object': thus the first clause has one meaning, while the middle and the last clauses have a different meaning? — Said R. Jannai. Even so, Resh Lakish observed: This proves that in R. Jannai's opinion we strain the Mishnah by giving two different connotations [to the same phrase], so that it agrees with one Tanna, rather than give it one connotation by making it reflect [the views of] two Tannaim.[3] R. Joseph b. Ammi said: After all, it has one connotation, and what is meant by 'ON CONDITION THAT [MY] FATHER CONSENTS'? On condition that he does not protest within thirty days from now.[4]

MISHNAH. [IF A MAN DECLARES,] 'I HAVE GIVEN MY DAUGHTER IN BETROTHAL, BUT DO NOT KNOW TO WHOM I HAVE BETROTHED HER,' AND THEN ONE COMES AND STATES, I BETROTHED HER, HE IS BELIEVED. IF ONE SAYS, I HAVE BETROTHED HER,' AND ANOTHER [ALSO] SAYS, 'I BETROTHED HER,' BOTH MUST GIVE A DIVORCE;[5] BUT IF THEY WISH, ONE GIVES A DIVORCE AND THE OTHER MARRIES HER.

GEMARA. Rab said: HE IS BELIEVED to give her a divorce, but he is not believed to take her. He is believed to give her a divorce: no man sins without profit.[6] But he is not believed to take her: passion may have mastered him. R. Assi said: He is even believed to take her. Yet R. Assi admits that if she declares, 'I have been betrothed, but do not know to whom,' and one comes and says: 'I betrothed her,' he is not believed to take her.[7] We learnt: BUT IF THEY WISH, ONE GIVES A DIVORCE AND THE OTHER TAKES HER: this refutes Rab! — Rab can answer you. There it is different: since another is with him, he is indeed afraid.[8] It was taught as R. Assi: 'I have given my daughter in betrothal, but do not know to whom I betrothed her,' and one comes and says: 'I betrothed her,' he is believed, even to take her. If he takes her and [then] another comes and says: 'I betrothed her,' it does not rest with the latter to forbid her to him [the first]. [But] if a woman says: 'I have been betrothed, but do not know to whom,' and one comes and declares, 'I betrothed her,' he is not trusted to take her, because she will shield him.[9]

The Scholars propounded: Can we stone [her] on his statement?[10] — Rab said: We do not stone [her]; R. Assi said: We stone [her]. Rab said: We do not stone [her]: the Divine Law gave credence to the father in respect of an interdict[11] but not of execution. R. Assi maintained, We stone [her]: The Divine Law gave credence to the father in the whole matter. R. Assi said: Yet I admit that if she herself says: 'I was betrothed,' we do not stone [her].[12] R. Assi said further: These rulings of mine break roofs![13] [For one may argue:] If you say that we stone her where one who comes to take her may take her,[14] how much the more should she be stoned where one who comes to take her may not take her![15] Yet it is not so. The Divine Law gave credence to the father, but it gave no credence to her.[16] But R. Hisda ruled: In both cases we do not stone. Now, R. Hisda follows his opinion [elsewhere]. For R. Hisda said: [If a man declares,] 'This my son is nine years and a day.' [or] 'this my daughter is three years and a day,' he is believed in respect of sacrifice, but not in respect of flagellation or [other] punishment.[17] It was taught as R. Hisda: [If a man declares,] 'This my son is thirteen years and a day,' [or] this my daughter is twelve years and a day,'[18]

---

(1) I.e., does not explicitly object.

(2) And the Kiddushin became effective.

(3) For it could be explained that he simply said: 'on condition that my father consents' and that the first and the middle and last clauses represent two differing views as to its meaning: the Tanna of the first explains it to mean that his father is silent; whereas the one of the middle and last, that his father does not explicitly object.

(4) I.e., within any agreed period, and CONSENTS and DOES NOT CONSENT mean within that period.

(5) To free her for others.

(6) Why should he want to divorce her if she is not his wife?

(7) The reason is stated below.

(8) [He is afraid to lie for fear that the father who gave her in betrothal will remember that he was not the man, but the other, and thus expose him].

(9) If her father betrothed her one is afraid to lie, because he will certainly expose him if he remembers that this was not the man; hence he is believed. But a woman, in her eagerness for marriage, may conceal his falsehood, and he may count upon this: hence he is disbelieved.

(10) Lit., 'at his hand'. If her father declares that he gave her in betrothal, but does not produce witnesses, and then she is unchaste, is he believed to the extent of stoning the daughter for adultery? V. Deut. XXII, 21.

(11) By his declaration he interdicts her to all men.

(12) For subsequent unchastity.

(13) They are paradoxical.

(14) Viz., when her father states that he does not know to whom he betrothed her. The fact that another is permitted to take her shews that the father is not so absolutely believed as to render her forbidden to all, including the claimant; yet she is stoned for unchastity.

(15) Viz., when she herself declares that she does not know to whom she was betrothed. Since the claimant may not take her, we evidently regard her as a married woman absolutely. Surely then we should stone her for unchastity?

(16) Hence she is not stoned; nevertheless, the claimant may not take her, because she rendered herself, by her declaration, forbidden to all.

(17) The intercourse of a male or female of these ages (and upwards) is regarded as such in respect of adultery, incest, etc. Now, if these were committed unintentionally, so that a sacrifice is incurred, the father's statement is accepted. But if intentionally and attested by witnesses, thus involving flagellation or death, according to the nature of the offence, the father's uncorroborated statement is not believed. They themselves, being minors, are in any case exempt, but the reference is to their adult partners.

(18) At these ages they are adults.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 64a

he is believed in respect of vows, haramim,[1] sanctifications, and 'arakin;[2] but not in respect of flagellation and [other] punishments.

MISHNAH. [IF A MAN DECLARES.] 'I HAVE GIVEN MY DAUGHTER IN BETROTHAL,'[3] 'I GAVE HER IN BETROTHAL AND DIVORCED HER WHILST A MINOR,' AND SHE IS [NOW] A MINOR,[4] HE IS BELIEVED.[5] 'I GAVE HER IN BETROTHAL AND DIVORCED HER WHILST A MINOR,' AND SHE IS NOW AN ADULT, HE IS DISBELIEVED.[6] 'SHE WAS TAKEN CAPTIVE AND I REDEEMED HER,[7] WHETHER SHE IS A MINOR OR AN ADULT[8] HE IS DISBELIEVED.

GEMARA. Wherein do the first and the second clauses differ? — In the first clause, it is in his hand;[9] in the second, it is not in his hand. Is it not? Surely it is in his power to marry her to a halal,[10] whereby he unfits her for the priesthood![11] — That is no difficulty: it [our Mishnah] agrees with R.

Dosethai b. Judah, who maintained: The daughters of Israel are a purifying mikweh for halallim.[12]

But it is in his power[13] to marry her to a mamzer?[14] — This agrees with R. Akiba, who maintained, Kiddushin has no validity[15] with those [marriages forbidden by] negative injunctions.[16] But it is in his power to marry her, if a widow, to a High Priest, and in accordance with R. Simai; for it was taught: R. Simai said: [The issue] of all [marriages forbidden by a negative injunction] R. Akiba declared [to be] mamzer, excepting that of a widow [married] to a High Priest, since the Torah said, [a widow . . .] he shall not take, and he shall not profane [his seed]:[17] he renders [his seed] profane,[18] but not mamzer![19] — This is according to R. Yeshebab, who said: Come, let us cry out against Akiba son of Joseph[20] who declared: He who has no entry in Israel,[21] the issue is mamzer.[22] Now, on R. Yeshebab's view, it is well if he states an independent opinion [of R. Akiba's ruling].[23] But if he [merely] comes to combat R. Simai,[24] then it is [still] in his [the father's] power to marry her to a person forbidden by a positive injunction?[25] R. Ashi answered: Is it logical that the first clause [states that he is believed] because it is in his power? Granted that it is in his power to betroth her, is it in his power to divorce her? Moreover, if this person [to whom he desires to betroth her] says that he has no pleasure in her, can he then betroth her against his will? But, said R. Ashi, in the first clause the Divine Law declared him trustworthy, as R. Huna [said]. For R. Huna said in Rab's name: How do we know that a father is believed to interdict his daughter[26] by Biblical law? Because it is said: I gave my daughter unto this man [to wife]:[27] [with the words] 'unto a man,' he renders her forbidden [to all];[28] with 'this [one]', he frees her. [Now,] the Divine Law believed the father in regard to marriage[29] but in regard to captivity it did not believe him.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN SAYS AT THE TIME OF HIS DEATH I HAVE SONS, HE IS BELIEVED;[30] 'I HAVE BROTHERS,' HE IS DISBELIEVED.[31]

GEMARA. This shews that he is believed to free, but not to bind. Shall we say [then] that our Mishnah does not agree with R. Nathan? For it was taught: if at the time of betrothal one declares that he has sons, but at the time of his death he asserts that he has no sons; If at the time of betrothal he declares that he has brothers, while at the time of his death he declares that he has no brothers: he is believed to free, but not to bind: this is Rabbi's view. R. Nathan said: He is believed to bind too! — Said Raba, there it is different: since he retracts at the time of his death, I assume that he may be speaking truth. Abaye asked him: Does it [the reverse] not follow a minori: If there, though he contradicts his [former] words, you say that he may be speaking truth; surely it is all the more so in our Mishnah, where he does not contradict his [former] words! But, said Abaye, our Mishnah treats of one who is not presumed[32] to possess brothers or sons: hence we rule, since he is not presumed to possess either brothers or sons, if he says. 'I have sons,' he is believed;[33] but if he declares, 'I have brothers,' he is disbelieved, [because] it does not rest solely with him to forbid her to the whole world. [Whereas] the Baraitha refers

---

(1) V. Glos.

(2) V. Glos. As they are of age, their vows, etc., are valid, and the father is believed on the question of age.

(3) Rashal adds: a minor (ketannah). and it is likewise so in Asheri and Alfasi.

(4) When he makes this declaration.

(5) She may therefore not marry a priest; v. Lev. XXI, 7.

(6) The reason is explained in the Gemara.

(7) A woman taken captive above the age of three years and a day may not marry a priest, lest she was ravished in captivity.

(8) When he makes this declaration.

(9) Since she is now a minor, he can betroth her even now and accept a divorce on her behalf, thus disqualifying her from the priesthood. Hence he is believed.

(10) 'Profaned'; the issue of a widow married to a High Priest in violation of Lev. XXI. 14.

(11) She may not marry a priest after that; infra 74b.

(12) Pl. of halal. If a halal marries a Jewess born in legitimate wedlock, his daughter may marry a priest. Now, since his daughter is fit, his widow too (i.e., the Jewess herself) is fit, according to the principle: you may marry the widow of any man whose daughter you may marry. — Of course, a father can in any case render his daughter, a minor, unfit by marrying and divorcing her; but that is only for a priestly marriage, yet if he is a priest she may still eat terumah, whereas when he declares that she was taken into captivity he desires to disqualify her from terumah too. (Rashi)
(13) Lit., 'his hand'.
(14) V. Glos. This likewise renders her unfit, even to eat terumah.
(15) Lit., 'cannot take hold on'.
(16) Which includes a mamzer, Deut. XXIII, 3. Since the kiddushin is invalid, it does not disqualify her from the priesthood.
(17) Lev. XXI, 14f.
(18) I.e., hallel.
(19) Since the child is not mamzer, the kiddushin, though forbidden, is valid, because it is a principle that the issue of marriage that cannot be valid is mamzer. Further, being valid, it disqualifies her from the priesthood.
(20) I.e., R. Akiba.
(21) I.e., with whom marriage is forbidden.
(22) Thus in his view, R. Akiba holds that even the issue of a High Priest and a widow is mamzer, whence it follows that the marriage is entirely invalid, which in turn implies that she is not disqualified from terumah, as above. Thus the Mishnah agrees with R. Akiba as R. Yeshebab explains his view,
(23) I.e., the issue of all interdicted marriages, no matter how forbidden, is mamzer.
(24) Who excepted the issue of a widow and a High Priest; yet he too refers only to unions forbidden by a negative injunction.
(25) V. Deut. XXIII, 8f: Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite . . . thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian. The children of the third generation that are born unto them shall enter into the assembly of the Lord. The 'third generation' after conversion is meant; hence the first and second are forbidden, and since that is implied by a positive statement, the interdict too ranks as a positive injunction. — Such a marriage, on the present hypothesis, is valid, and disqualifies her from terumah, v. infra 74b.
(26) To all men, by maintaining that he betrothed her to a particular one.
(27) Lit., 'unto a man, this one'. Deut. XXII, 16.
(28) Even to this particular man.
(29) Provided she is not a bogereth. The whole section speaks of a na'arah.
(30) And his wife is exempt from yibum.
(31) And even if he is childless his wife is free to marry a stranger.
(32) Lit., 'it is not established to us'.
(33) Since he does not change her present status; and he is believed even if a man subsequently claims to be his brother.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 64b

to one who is presumed to have brothers but not sons. So we argue. Why should he lie? Why does he say it?[1] to free her from the yabam! Then he could Say, 'I will free her by a divorce [just before my death].' Now, Rabbi holds that [the argument,] 'why should I lie' is as [strong as] witnesses, so that the witnesses come and cancel[2] the presumption. But R. Nathan holds, [The argument,] 'why should I lie' is [only] as [strong as] a presumption, and one presumption cannot come and completely cancel another.[3] MISHNAH. IF ONE GIVES HIS DAUGHTER IN BETROTHAL WITH OUT SPECIFYING WHICH, THE BOGEROTH[4] ARE NOT INCLUDED. IF ONE HAS TWO GROUPS OF DAUGHTERS BY TWO WIVES, AND HE DECLARES, I HAVE GIVEN IN BETROTHAL MY ELDEST DAUGHTER, BUT DO NOT KNOW WHETHER THE ELDEST OF THE SENIORS OR THE ELDEST OF THE JUNIORS, OR THE YOUNGEST OF THE SENIORS WHO IS OLDER THAN THE SENIOR OF THE JUNIORS, ALL ARE FORBIDDEN, EXCEPT THE YOUNGEST OF THE JUNIORS: THIS IS R. MEIR'S OPINION. R. JOSE SAID: THEY ARE ALL PERMITTED, EXCEPT THE ELDEST OF THE SENIORS. I HAVE BETROTHED MY YOUNGEST DAUGHTER, BUT DO NOT KNOW WHETHER THE YOUNGEST OF THE JUNIORS OR THE YOUNGEST OF THE SENIORS, OR THE ELDEST OF THE JUNIORS WHO IS YOUNGER THAN THE YOUNGEST OF THE SENIORS,' THEY ARE ALL FORBIDDEN, EXCEPT THE ELDEST OF THE SENIORS; THIS IS R. MEIR'S VIEW. R. JOSE SAID: THEY ARE ALL PERMITTED, EXCEPT THE YOUNGEST OF THE JUNIORS.

GEMARA. But minors are [apparently] included; this proves that kiddushin that cannot be followed by intercourse is kiddushin?[5] — The circumstances are that there is only a bogereth and a minor. But 'BOGEROTH' is taught! — By 'bogeroth', bogeroth in general are meant. Then it is obvious: what business have bogeroth [here]?[6] — We refer here to where she [the bogereth] appointed him [her father] an agent. I might have thought that when he accepted kiddushin he did so on her behalf; hence we are informed that a man does not put aside something by which he benefits to do something by which he does not benefit. But do we not refer [even] to where she said to him, 'Let my kiddushin be yours!' — Even so, a man does not put aside a good deed which [primarily] rests on him and perform one which is not incumbent upon him.[7]

IF ONE HAS TWO GROUPS OF DAUGHTERS. Now, it is necessary.[8] For if we were told the first one, [I would say only] here does R. Meir rule [so], for since there is yet a younger one than this, he calls this one 'elder', but in the latter [clause], I might say that he agrees with R. Jose that only the youngest of all he calls 'young'. Again, if the latter [clause only] were stated: I would say that only there does R. Jose rule thus, but in the former he agrees with R. Judah.[9] Thus both are necessary.

Shall we say that R. Meir holds that a man places himself in a position of doubt, while R. Jose maintains that he does not?[10] But we know them [to hold] the reverse. For we learnt: If one vows, '[This be forbidden me] until Passover,' it is forbidden until it arrives; 'until Passover shall be', it is forbidden until it is gone.[11] 'Until pene [before][12] Passover': R. Meir ruled: It is forbidden until it comes; R. Jose said: Until it is gone![13] — Said R. Hanina b. Abdimi in Rab's name: The passage [on vows] must be reversed. And it was taught even so: This is a general principle: That which has a fixed time. and one vows, until' — R. Meir said: It means, Until it goes; R. Jose said: Until it comes.

Abaye said: The controversy refers [only] to two groups of daughters; but in the case of one group, all agree that 'elder' and 'younger' are literal,[14] [for] the middle one is called by name. R. Adda b. Mattena said to Abaye: If so,

---

(1) That he has sons.

(2) Lit., 'eradicate'.

(3) Thus: before marriage it was generally held that he had brothers but not sons, though there were no witnesses. Now, when he declared at betrothal that it was the reverse, we believe him; because he had no need to lie, since he could always free his wife from the yabam by a divorce. But the controversy arises where he retracts his words at death. Rabbi holds that the argument whereby we believed him at betrothal is as strong as witnesses, and completely eradicates the general pre-marriage presumption and establishes her as a woman not bound to a yabam. Hence it does not rest with him at death to interdict her. But R. Nathan holds that this argument does not completely eradicate the former presumption. Nevertheless, if he persists in his former statement we believe him; since, however, he reverses it at death, the original presumption holds good, and she is forbidden.

(4) Plur. of bogereth, v. Glos.

(5) V. supra 51a.

(6) For in any case the father has no authority over them, Now, it is well if the actual plural is meant, so that the Mishnah is necessary for its corollary that minors are included, thus shewing that kiddushin that cannot be followed etc. But if there is only one, neither the teaching itself nor its corollary is necessary.

(7) For notes on the whole passage and the Mishnah V. supra. 51b.

(8) For both clauses to be stated.

(9) By inverting the former reasoning.

(10) The meanings of 'my elder daughter' and 'my younger daughter' are doubtful. Thus R. Meir, by extending their scope, holds that he intends his words to bear a meaning which can be attributed to them only with doubt; whereas R. Jose maintains that he intends them to bear only that meaning which they certainly possess.

(11) I.e., the tense is regarded as future perfect — until it shall have been.

(12) [Of doubtful meaning, as each day of Passover is the one before the next day succeeding it (Rashi). For other interpretations. v. Ned. (Sonc. ed.) p. 191. n. 3,] let the middle one of the second [junior] group be permitted?[1] — The meaning here is that there are only an elder and a younger [daughter].[2] And reason supports this too: for if it is so,that there is [a middle one], let her be mentioned![3] But even on your view; the middle one of the first [senior] group, who is certainly doubtful and forbidden[4] — is she mentioned? — How compare! There [even] the one younger than her is taught as being forbidden, and the same applies to this [middle] one, who is older than her; but here,[5] if it is so that there is [a middle one], let her be mentioned! R. Huna, son of R. Joshua, said to Raba:[6] But Passover is as one group, and yet they differ? — There, he replied, they differ merely on language: one Master holds, 'until pene Passover' means until [just] before Passover, and the other maintains, until it has passed.[7]

(13) Thus R. Meir includes even a doubtful meaning, while R. Jose excludes it.

(14) I.e., the oldest and the youngest respectively.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 65a

MISHNAH. IF HE SAYS TO A WOMAN, 'I HAVE BETROTHED THEE,' AND SHE SAYS, THOU HAST NOT BETROTHED ME: HER RELATIONS[8] ARE FORBIDDEN TO HIM,[9] BUT HIS RELATIONS ARE PERMITTED TO HER. IF SHE SAYS, 'THOU HAST BETROTHED ME,' AND HE MAINTAINS, 'I HAVE NOT BETROTHED THEE,' HER RELATIONS ARE PERMITTED TO HIM. BUT HIS RELATIONS ARE FORBIDDEN TO HER. 'I HAVE BETROTHED THEE,' AND SHE REPLIES, THOU HAST BETROTHED NONE BUT MY DAUGHTER,' THE RELATIONS OF THE SENIOR [THE MOTHER] ARE FORBIDDEN TO HIM, WHILST HIS ARE PERMITTED TO THE SENIOR; THE JUNIOR'S RELATIONS ARE PERMITTED TO HIM, AND HIS RELATIONS ARE PERMITTED TO THE JUNIOR.[10] I HAVE BETROTHED THY DAUGHTER,' AND SHE REPLIES, 'THOU HAST BETROTHED NONE BUT MYSELF'; THE JUNIOR'S RELATIONS ARE FORBIDDEN TO HIM, WHILST HIS RELATIONS ARE PERMITTED TO THE JUNIOR; THE SENIOR'S RELATIONS ARE PERMITTED TO HIM, WHILST HIS RELATIONS ARE FORBIDDEN TO THE SENIOR.

GEMARA. IF HE SAYS TO A WOMAN, I HAVE BETROTHED THEE etc. Now, it is necessary.[11] For if we were informed this of him,[12] [that is] because a man does not care,[13] and so it happens that he speaks [thus].[14] But as for her, I might argue, were she not certain of her statement, she would not have made it,[15] and so her relations are forbidden to him. Hence we are informed [that it is not so].

I HAVE BETROTHED THEE,' AND SHE REPLIES ['MY DAUGHTER'] etc. Why do I need this too? — It is necessary. I might think, By Scriptural law the Merciful One gave credence to the father;[16] hence by Rabbinical law credence was given to her [sc. the mother], and so her daughter is interdicted on her statement. Hence we are informed [otherwise].

I HAVE BETROTHED THY DAUGHTER etc. What is the purpose of this too? Since the one is taught, the other is taught too.[17]

It was stated: Rab said: We force [him to divorce her]; Samuel said: We request. To what [does this refer]? Shall we say: To the first clause: there is neither compulsion nor request?[18] But if to the second clause:[19] as for requesting him, that is well; but we compel why? He can protest. 'I do not wish to be forbidden to her rela — tions![20] — But these rulings were stated in reference to each other.[21] Samuel said: He is asked to give her a divorce; Rab said: If he gives a divorce of his own accord,[22] he is compelled to pay the kethubah.[23] It was stated likewise: R. Aha b. Adda said in Rab's name — others state. R. Aha b. Adda said in R. Hamnuna's name in Rab's name: We compel and request. Both?[24] — This is the meaning: He is requested to grant a divorce; but if he gives a divorce of his own accord, he is compelled to pay the kethubah.

Rab Judah said: If a man betroths in the presence of one witness, we disregard[25] his kiddushin.[26] Rab Judah was asked: What if both admit it?[27] He answered 'Yes' and 'no', being uncertain.[28] It was stated: R. Nahman said in Samuel's name: If a man betroths in the presence of one witness, we disregard his kiddushin even if both admit it. Raba objected before R. Nahman: IF ONE SAYS TO A WOMAN, 'I HAVE BETROTHED THEE,' AND SHE SAYS, THOU HAST NOT BETROTHED ME: HER RELATIONS ARE FORBIDDEN TO HIM, WHILST HIS RELATIONS ARE PERMITTED TO HER. Now, if there are witnesses, why are his relations permitted to her? And if there are no witnesses, why are her relations forbidden to him?[29] Hence it surely means that there is one witness![30] — [No.] The meaning is that he says to her, 'I betrothed thee in the presence of So-and-so,[31] who have [since] gone overseas.'

He raised an objection: If one divorces his wife and then stays overnight with her in an inn: Beth Shammai rule: She does not require a second divorce from him; while Beth Hillel maintain: She does require a second divorce from him.[32] What are the circumstances? If there are witnesses,[33] what is Beth Shammai's reason? And if there are no witnesses, what is Beth Hillel's reason?[34] Hence it must surely mean that there is one witness![35] — Yet according to your view, consider the second clause: But they agree that if she was divorced after erusin,[36] she does not require a second divorce from him, because he is not intimate with her.[37] Now if you think that one witness is believed, what does it matter whether [the divorce was] from erusin or nissu'in? Hence the meaning here is that we have witnesses of privacy, but not of intercourse. Beth Shammai maintain: we do not

---

(1) This refers to the first clause of the Mishnah. There the middle one can be called 'elder' only by comparison with the youngest of all, which is the same as in the case of one group only.

(2) In the junior group.

(3) Sc. 'I do not know whether the middle one of the juniors'.

(4) Since she is a senior in comparison to those of the second group.

(5) With reference to the second group.

(6) Var. lec.: R. Adda b. Mattena said to Abaye.

(7) Taking pene to mean 'the turn', v. p. 325. n. 6.

(8) E.g., sister, mother, daughter.

(9) Because he himself has thrown an interdict upon them in respect of himself; v. p. 319. n. 8.

(10) Notwithstanding her mother's statement, because she has no power to cast an interdict upon her daughter.

(11) That all be taught.

(12) Viz., that when he says: 'I have betrothed thee,' his relations are not forbidden to her.

(13) If the relations of a particular woman are interdicted to him, he can marry someone else.

(14) Untruthfully.

(15) Since, unless he divorces her, she cannot marry at all.

(16) V. Mishnah 64a top.

(17) For the sake of parallelism.

(18) She is permitted to marry in any case-even his relations.

(19) Where she says: 'Thou hast betrothed me'.

(20) For if he divorces her, he establishes the presumption that she was his wife, and those relations who are interdicted even after divorce, e.g., a sister, are now forbidden to him.

(21) The reference is to the second clause, but Rab and Samuel do not dispute but supplement one another.

(22) And thus tacitly admits having betrothed her,

(23) v. Glos,
(24) Surely that is self-contradictory!
(25) Lit., 'have no fear of,
(26) She is not betrothed.
(27) Do we normally disregard because we disbelieve a single witness, but here, since both parties admit it, they are betrothed? Or perhaps kiddushin in the presence of one witness only is invalid?
(28) Lit., 'it was weak in his hand'. His answer vacillated.
(29) For unattested kiddushin is invalid,
(30) That proves that kiddushin in the presence of one witness is valid, since he is forbidden to her relations.
(31) In the presence of two witnesses.
(32) V. Git. 81a.
(33) That he betrothed her anew by intercourse.
(34) V. p. 328, n. 10.
(35) And they both admit, Beth Hillel holding that betrothal in the presence of one witness is valid.
(36) V. Glos.
(37) Lit., 'his heart is not bold towards her' — the marriage never having been consummated.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 65b

say. The witnesses of privacy are likewise witnesses of intercourse;[1] Beth Hillel hold: The witnesses of privacy are likewise witnesses of intercourse.[2] But they certainly agree that if she was divorced from erusin, we do not say that the witnesses of privacy are likewise witnesses of intercourse, because he is not intimate with her.

R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha said on Rab's authority: If a man betroths in the presence of one witness, we disregard his kiddushin even if both admit it. Rabbah son of R. Huna said: If a man betroths in the presence of one witness, the Great Court rules: We disregard his kiddushin. Who is the Great Court? — Rab.[3] Others state, Rabbah b. R. Huna said in Rab's name: If a man betroths in the presence of one witness, the Great Court rules: We disregard his kiddushin. Who is the Great Court? — Rabbi.[4]

R. Ahadaboi b. Ammi raised an objection: If two come from overseas with a woman and chattels;[5] and one maintains. 'This is my wife, this is my slave, and these are my chattels', whilst the other says: 'this is my wife, this my slave, and these are my chattels'. while the woman claims, 'These two are my slaves and the chattels are mine', she requires two divorces, and collects her kethubah out of the chattels. How is this meant? If this one has witnesses and the other has witnesses,[6] can she claim, 'These two are my slaves and the chattels are mine!' Hence it surely means that there is one witness?[7] — Now, is that logical? Is one witness believed when he is rebutted?[8] But as for permitting her to the world,[9] all agree that she is permitted; here, however, the meaning is this: she needs two divorces in order to collect her kethubah from the chattels,[10] and it is according to R. Meir, who ruled: Movables are mortgaged for the kethubah.[11]

What is the result of the matter? — R. Kahana maintained, We disregard his kiddushin; R. Papa said: We pay heed to his kiddushin.[12] R. Ashi said to R. Kahana: What is your opinion? that we learn the meaning of 'dabar' [matter] here from civil matters?[13] If so, just as there the admission of the litigant is as a hundred witnesses,[14] then here too the admission of the litigant is as a hundred witnesses![15] — There, he replied, he does no injury to others; here, however, injury is done to others.[16]

Mar Zutra and R. Adda the elder, sons of R. Mari b. Issur, divided their property between them. Then they went before R. Ashi and asked him: When the Divine Law said: 'at the mouth of two witnesses . . . shall a matter be established,' is it so that they [the litigants] cannot retract if they wish, whereas we do not desire to retract; or perhaps, a transaction can be established [i.e., given legal force] only by witnesses? — Witnesses were created only against liars, he answered them.[17]

Abaye said: If one witness says to a person[18] 'You ate heleb'.[19] while he is silent, he [the witness] is believed.[20] Now, a Tanna supports this: If one witness says to a person. 'You ate heleb,' and he replies, 'I did not eat,' he is not liable. Thus, it is only because he answered: 'I did not,' but if he is silent, he is believed.

Abaye also said: If one witness says to a person. Your clean [food] has been defiled,' and he is silent, he [the witness] is believed.[21] Now, a Tanna supports this: If one witness declares, 'They have been defiled',[22] and he [their owner] replies, 'They have not been defiled,'[23] he is not liable.[24] Thus, it is only because he says: 'No'; but if he is silent, he is believed.

Abaye also said: If one witness says to a person,

---

(1) I.e., we do not assume that since he is intimate with her he certainly cohabited in their privacy.

(2) And, moreover, we assume that this intercourse was not unchaste but for the purpose of betrothal; v. Git. 81b.

(3) Rab, on his return to Babylon after studying in Palestine, was recognised as the greatest scholar of his time.

(4) Par excellence, i.e., R. Judah the Nasi, compiler of the Mishnah.

(5) Lit., 'a bundle'.

(6) Of betrothal.

(7) And she requires a divorce.

(8) Surely not! Even if she only denies it he is disbelieved, and no divorce is necessary.

(9) I.e., to marry another.

(10) She can collect her kethubah only if both voluntarily divorce her, in which case she is in any circumstance entitled to the chattels, v. supra a.

(11) Hence she can collect it from the parcel of goods. and this is what the Baraitha informs us, v. Keth. 80b.

(12) She is in the position of a doubtfully married woman; v. p. 47, n. 10.

(13) Lit., 'money'. Here — Deut. XXIV, 1: When a man taketh a wife and . . . she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some unseemly matter (dabar) in her; civil suits — ibid. XIX, 15: at the mouth of two witnesses . . . shall a matter (dabar) be established. Hence, just as there two are needed, so for marriage.

(14) No stronger proof is required.

(15) Since both parties admit, the marriage should be valid.

(16) In that their marriage interdicts their consanguineous relations

(17) They are not essential for the validity of a transaction.

(18) Lit., 'him'.

(19) V. Glos.

(20) This offence involves a sin-offering; since the accused is silent, he is liable.

(21) And the owner must treat it as defiled, eating it only when he himself is unclean.

(22) Var. lec.: 'you have been defiled'.

(23) Var. lec.: 'I etc.

(24) To a sacrifice; the reference is to flesh of sacrifices, which may not be eaten when defiled, or when the eater is unclean.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 66a

'Bestiality was committed with your ox,' and he is silent, he is believed.[1] And a Tanna supports it: Or [an ox] with which a transgression was committed, or which had killed [a person] on the testimony of one witness, or by admission of its owner, he [the one witness] is believed.[2] How is this 'on the testimony of one witness' meant? If the owner admits, then it is 'by admission of the owner'? Hence it surely means that he is silent.

Now, it is necessary.[3] For if he told us this first one, [I would argue:] if he were not certain thereof himself, since he [otherwise] sacrifices[4] hullin in the Temple Court, he would not bring [an offering].[5] But as for 'Your clean food has been defiled,' we might say, the reason of his silence was that it is fit for him when he himself is unclean.[6] And if we were told of this: that is because he causes him a loss whilst he is clean;[7] but as for bestiality having been committed with his ox, he may say [to himself]. 'Not all oxen are for the altar.'[8] Thus all are necessary.

The scholars propounded: What if his wife [is charged with having] committed adultery on the testimony of one witness, and he [the husband] is silent?[9] — Abaye said: He is believed;[10] Raba said: He is disbelieved, because it is a sexual matter, and no sexual matter can be established by less than two.[11] Abaye said: Whence do I know[12] it? For there was a certain blind man who used to recite Baraithas in systematic order before Mar Samuel. One day it was late, but he did not come; so he sent a messenger for him. While the messenger was going by one road, he came by another. When the messenger returned, he stated that his [the blind man's] wife had committed adultery. When he came before Mar Samuel he said to him, 'If you believe him, go and divorce[13] her; if not, do not divorce her.' Now surely, 'if you believe him' means that he is not a robber?[14] And Raba?[15] — If you believe him as two [witnesses],[16] go and divorce her; if not, do not divorce her.

Abaye also said: Whence do I know it? Because it was taught. It once happened that King Jannai[17] went to Kohalith in the wilderness[18] and conquered sixty towns there. On his return he rejoiced exceedingly and invited all the Sages of Israel. Said he to them, 'Our forefathers ate mallows[19] when they were engaged on the building of the [second] Temple; let us too eat mallows in memory of our forefathers.' So mallows were served on golden tables, and they ate. Now, there was a man there, frivolous, evilhearted and worthless, named Eleazar son of Po'irah, who said to King Jannai. 'O King Jannai, the hearts of the Pharisees[20] are against thee.' 'Then what shall I do?' 'Test them[21] by the plate between thine eyes.'[22] So he tested them by the plate between his eyes. Now, an elder, named Judah son of Gedidiah, was present there. Said he to King Jannai. 'O King Jannai! let the royal crown suffice thee, and leave the priestly crown to the seed of Aaron.' (For it was rumoured that his mother had been taken captive in Modi'im.)[23] Accordingly, the charge was investigated, but not sustained,[24] and the Sages of Israel[25] departed in anger.[26] Then said Eleazar b. Po'irah to King Jannai: 'O King Jannai! That is the law even for the most humble man in Israel, and thou, a King and a High Priest, shall that be thy law [too]!'[27] 'Then what shall I do?' 'If thou wilt take my advice, trample then, down.'[28] 'But what shall happen with the Torah?' 'Behold, it is rolled up and lying in the corner: whoever wishes to study. Let him go and study!' Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: Immediately a spirit of heresy was instilled into him,[29] for he should have replied. 'That is well for the Written Law;[30] but what of the Oral Law?'[31] Straightway, the evil burst forth[32] through Eleazar son of Po'irah,[33] all the Sages of Israel were massacred, and the world was desolate until Simeon b. Shetah came and restored the Torah to its pristine [glory].[34] Now, how was it?[35] Shall we say that two testified that she was captured and two that she was not? what [reason] do you see to rely upon the latter rely upon the former?[36] Hence it must surely mean [that her captivity was attested] by one witness, and the reason [that his evidence was rejected] was that two rebutted him; but otherwise, he would have been believed.[37] And Raba? [He will reply:] After all, there were two against two, but it is as R. Aba b. R. Manyomi said [elsewhere]: that it refers to witnesses of refutation [hazamah]; so here too, there were witnesses of refutation.[38] Alternatively, this agrees with R. Isaac, who said: They substituted a bondmaid for her.[39] Raba said:

---

(1) The ox is rendered unfit as a sacrifice.

(2) 'Is believed' is absent in Zeb. 70b and Bek. 41a, whence this is quoted, but it is presupposed there, 'With which a transgression was committed' refers to bestiality in Bek. 41a; in Zeb. 70b it is a general term including bestiality.

(3) To state all three cases.

(4) Lit., prepares'. Var. lec.: eats.

(5) A sin-offering can be brought only when it is incurred, but if a person dedicates a sin-offering without being liable, it remains hullin. Hence this man would not be silent, thus admitting it, if the witnesses were false.

(6) Therefore he does not trouble to deny it. Yet actually the witness may not be believed, and the food remains fit even for a ritually clean person.
(7) Therefore he would deny it, if it were untrue.
(8) So that it is not worth while denying it; yet his silence may not imply agreement.
(9) When the witness testifies.
(10) In that the husband may not retain her as his wife, but must divorce her.
(11) E.g., marriage or divorce are invalid unless attested by two. This case too is a sexual matter.
(12) Lit., 'say'.
(13) Lit., 'send her forth'.
(14) I.e., that he is not ineligible to testify in general. Thus, since he did not rebut the witness, but was silent, he was to divorce his wife.
(15) How does he explain this?
(16) Then you are certain that he is right.
(17) I.e., John Hyrcanus, not Alexander Jannai, though Abaye held these to be identical, Ber. 29a; Halevi, Doroth, I, 3, p. 397, n. 13. [Friedlaender, I, JQR (N.S.) IV. pp. 443ff assigns the whole incident to Alexander Jannai].
(18) [In the course of his trans-Jordanic campaign.]
(19) The food of the very poor.
(20) The traditional, orthodox party, as opposed to the Sadducees.
(21) Lit., 'raise them up'. [הקם להם the phrase is difficult, and is so rendered by Graetz III, 678. Rashi takes it literally and explains: make them stand on their feet by wearing the plate on which the Divine Name is inscribed.]
(22) Worn by the High Priest; i.e., by their reactions toward your office as High Priest.
(23) In the days of Antiochus Epiphanes; Modi'm (Modim) was the birthplace of the Hasmoneans. As a son of a captive woman he would not be eligible for the priesthood.
(24) Lit., 'found'.
(25) [Identical with the Pharisees; v. Lauterbach, JQR (N.S.) VI, pp. 88ff.]
(26) Rashi: under the King's anger. Weiss, Dor, I, p. 133: in anger at the false accusation.
(27) There is probably a lacuna in the narrative, which may be supplied from Josephus. Ant. XIII, 10, – 6: The Rabbis sentenced him to flagellation, in accordance with the law of slander; but Eleazar urged that this was altogether inadequate in view of Jannai's exalted position, and proved that they secretly held with the slanderer (Goldschmidt). — In fact, the status of a person is taken into account when bodily injury is sustained (B.K. 83b), but not for slander.
(28) Destroy them.
(29) Jannai.
(30) I.e., the Pentateuch.
(31) The whole of the Rabbinical elaboration and development of the Written Law, so called because it was originally not committed to writing but preserved by oral tradition.
(32) Lit., 'blossomed'.
(33) [MS.M. adds 'and through Judah v. Gedidiah'.]
(34) In the reign of Queen Alexandra. The reference is probably to the educational reforms of setting up schools for children from the age of five or six. In B.B. 21a this is ascribed to Joshua son of Gamala, whereas in J. Keth. chapter VIII. end, it is attributed to Simeon b. Shetah. The latter was probably afraid to move himself in the matter, knowing that his actions were suspected by the Sadducees, and so he put himself in the background and worked through Joshua, who was persona grata with the ruling party. The whole Baraitha is carefully analysed and discussed in Halevi, Doroth, I, 3, pp. 397ff
(35) How was the charge found to be untrue?
(36) The Rabbis were extremely strict on the question of family purity, and therefore in such a case the former two witnesses could not be ignored (Tosaf.).
(37) This proves Abaye's point.
(38) Hazamah means refutation which takes the form of 'You who testify to having witnessed this at a certain place on a particular date were with us then elsewhere.' In that case the second witnesses were always believed; v. B.K. 72b.
(39) Sc. his mother, the captors being ignorant of it. Thus there was no real contradiction: two witnesses attested the capture of one whom they thought to be Hyrcanus's mother, and another two attested that it was a bondmaid.

Whence do I know it?[1] Because we learnt: R. Simeon said: It once happened that the water reservoir of Discus in Jabneh, which stood in the presumption of being full, was measured and found wanting.[2] Everything which had been rendered clean thereby. R. Tarfon declared clean and R. Akiba unclean.[3] Said R. Tarfon: This mikweh[4] stands in the presumption of being full,[5] and you come to declare it wanting because of a doubt: you must not declare it wanting on the strength of doubt. Said R. Akiba, This man[6] stands in the presumption of unclean, and you wish to declare him clean on the strength of doubt:[7] do not purify him on the strength of doubt.[8] R. Tarfon said: This may be compared to one [a priest] who stood and sacrificed on the altar, when he was discovered to be the son of a divorced woman or a haluzah, in which case his service [hitherto] is fit.[9] Said R. Akiba: This may be compared to one who stood and sacrificed on the altar, when it was learned that he was [physically] blemished, in which case his service is [retrospectively] unfit. Said R. Tarfon: You have compared it to a man with a blemish, while I have compared it to the son of a divorced woman or a haluzah. Let us then consider, to whom is it similar: if it is similar to the son of a divorced woman or a haluzah, we shall judge it like [the law] of a son of a divorced woman or a haluzah; if it is similar to a man with a blemish, we shall judge it like [the law] of one who has a blemish. [Thereupon] R. Akiba began to argue:[10] the unfitness of a mikweh is by one, and the unfitness of a man with a blemish is by one;[11] hence let not the son of a divorced woman or a haluzah prove it, since his unfitness [must be attested] by two. Again, the unfitness of a mikweh is in itself, and that of a man with a blemish is in himself: let not the son of a divorced woman or a haluzah prove it, seeing that his unfitness is through others.[12] Said R. Tarfon to him, 'Akiba! whoever separates himself from you is as though he separated himself from life!' Now, this case of a man with a blemish — whose unfitness is by one, how is it meant? If he contradicts him, is he [the witness] believed![13] Hence it must mean that he is silent, and by analogy, in the case of a son of a divorced woman or of a haluzah, he is also silent; and it is taught: 'The unfitness of a mikweh is by one, and the unfitness of a man with a blemish is by one; but let not the son of a divorced woman or of a haluzah prove it, since his unfitness [must be attested] by two!'[14] But Abaye maintains, After all, it means that he contradicts him; yet as to your argument. Why is he believed? [the answer is] because he can say to him, 'Strip, and I will shew you [the blemish].' And that is meant when it is taught: 'The unfitness of a mikweh is in itself and the unfitness of a man with a blemish is in himself,[15] but let not the son of a divorced woman or a haluzah prove it — whose unfitness is through others.'

And how do we know that the service of the son of a divorced woman or a haluzah is [retrospectively] fit? — Said Rab Judah in Samuel's name, Because Scripture saith, and it shall be unto him, and to his seed after him, [the covenant of an everlasting priesthood]:[16] this applies to both fit and unfit seed.[17] Samuel's father said, [It is deduced] from the following: Bless, Lord, his substance [helo], and accept the work of his hands:[18] accept even the profaned [hullin] in his midst.[19] R. Jannai said, [It is deduced] from this: And thou shalt come unto the priest that shall be in those days:[20] now, could you then imagine that a man should go to a priest who was not of his days? But this [must refer to one who] was [originally assumed to be] fit, and then became profane.[21]

How do we know that the service of a man with a blemish is [retrospectively] invalid? — Said Rab Judah in Samuel's name: Because Scripture saith, Wherefore say. Behold, I give unto him my covenant of perfection:[22] when he is perfect,[23] but not when he is wanting.[24] But shalom [peace] is written! — Said R. Nahman: The waw of shalom is broken off [in the middle].[25]

MISHNAH. WHEREVER THERE IS KIDDUSHIN AND THERE IS NO TRANSGRESSION,[26] THE ISSUE FOLLOWS THE STATUS OF THE MALE: SUCH IS THE CASE WHEN THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, A LEVITE OR AN ISRAELITE IS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, A LEVITE OR AN ISRAELITE.[27] BUT WHEREVER THERE IS KIDDUSHIN AND THERE IS

TRANSGRESSION, THE ISSUE FOLLOWS THE STATUS OF THE INFERIOR;[28] THIS IS THE CASE WHEN A WIDOW IS MARRIED TO A HIGH PRIEST, OR A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALUZAH TO AN ORDINARY PRIEST, OR A MAMZERETH OR A NETHINAH[29] TO AN ISRAELITE, AND THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE TO A MAMZER OR A NATHIN.[30] AND WHATEVER [WOMAN] WHO CANNOT CONTRACT KIDDUSHIN WITH THAT PARTICULAR PERSON[31] BUT CAN CONTRACT KIDDUSHIN WITH ANOTHER PERSON, THE ISSUE IS MAMZER. THIS IS THE CASE WHEN ONE HAS INTERCOURSE WITH ANY RELATION PROHIBITED IN THE TORAH.[32] AND WHATEVER [WOMAN] WHO CAN NOT CONTRACT KIDDUSHIN WITH THAT PARTICULAR PERSON OR WITH OTHERS, THE ISSUE FOLLOWS HER STATUS.; THIS IS THE CASE WITH THE ISSUE OF A BONDMAID OR A GENTILE WOMAN.

GEMARA. WHEREVER THERE IS KIDDUSHIN. R. Simeon[33] said to R. Johanan: Is it then a general principle that wherever there is kiddushin and there is no transgression the issue follows the status of the male? But what of

---

(1) That one witness is invalid in sexual matters, even if he is not rebutted.

(2) It was used as a ritual bath, which requires a minimum of forty se'ahs.

(3) R. Tarfon maintains that the reservoir is regarded as containing the standard quantity until it is actually found to be short, while R. Akiba holds that its shortage is retrospectively assumed.

(4) Ritual bath.

(5) Until it is found otherwise.

(6) Who performed his ablutions therein.

(7) For we do not know whether the bath contained the requisite quantity when he bathed therein or not.

(8) It is a general principle that in a case of doubt we retain the status quo. Here, however, by applying this principle to the bath and the man respectively, we obtain contradictory results, and hence the controversy of R. Tarfon and R. Akiba.

(9) Though it will be unfit in the future, nevertheless that unfitness does not operate retrospectively.

(10) Lit., 'judge'.

(11) A single person testifying that the mikweh is deficient, or that a priest has a blemish, disqualifies them, v. infra.

(12) His mother.

(13) Surely not!

(14) This supports Raba.

(15) I.e., it can he directly ascertained.

(16) Num. XXV, 13.

(17) But nevertheless, only if the service has already been performed.

(18) Deut. XXXIII, 11.

(19) Deriving חילו from חול 'profane'; cf. however, Mak, (Sonc. ed.) p. 79 n. 10. This refers to the tribe of Levi, hence the priesthood. The son of a divorced woman or a haluzah by a priest is a halal, which is connected here with helo and hullin.

(20) Deut. XXVI, 3.

(21) I.e., was proved to be such, The verse intimates that until he is proved profane, the 'going to him' for service, etc. is valid.

(22) Num. XXV, 12 (sic).

(23) I.e., unblemished,

(24) I.e., blemished,

(25) Being written with a broken waw (ו) instead of שלום (with a complete waw); this intimates that it must be read without it too, שלם shalem, = whole, perfect, sound.

(26) I.e., the betrothal is valid and permitted.

(27) The child has the father's status.

(28) Lit., 'the defective'.

(29) Fem. of mamzer and Nathin respectively.

(30) In all these cases the betrothal is valid, though forbidden,

(31) I.e., the kiddushin, even if contracted, is invalid.

(32) E.g., a sister, mother, etc. A married woman too is included.

(33) Probably, R. Simeon b. Lakish.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 67a

a proselyte who marries a mamzereth, where the kiddushin is valid and there is no sin, and yet the issue follows the status of the inferior?[1] For it was taught: If a proselyte marries a mamzereth, the issue is mamzer: this is the view of R. Jose! He replied: Do you think that our Mishnah agrees with R. Jose?[2] Our Mishnah is according to R. Judah, who maintained: A proselyte may not marry a mamzereth; hence there is kiddushin, but there is transgression, [and so] the issue follows the status of the inferior. Then let it be taught [in the Mishnah]?[3] — 'WHEREVER' of the second clause is taught as an extension.[4] Alternatively, it is after all, according to R. Jose, but 'THIS IS THE CASE'[5] is taught as a limitation.[6] Does then the 'THIS IS THE CASE' imply that there are no others? But what of a halal[7] who marries the daughter of an Israelite, where there is kiddushin and there is transgression, yet the issue follows the male?[8] — That is no difficulty: he [the Tanna of our Mishnah] holds with R. Dosethai son of R. Judah.[9] But what of an Israelite who marries a halalah,[10] where there is kiddushin and there is no transgression, and yet the issue follows the male? — 'WHEREVER' is stated in the first clause as an extension.[11] Then let it be explicitly taught? — Because it cannot be [conveniently] taught. [For] how shall it be stated: 'The daughter of a priest, a Levite, or an Israelite or a halalah who marries a priest, a Levite, or an Israelite?' Is then a halalah eligible to [marry] a priest?[12]

But there is the case of Rabbah b. Bar Hanah. For Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in R. Johanan's name: If an Egyptian of the second degree[13] marries an Egyptian woman of the first degree, her son ranks as third degree![14] — 'WHEREVER' of the first clause is stated as an extension; whereas according to R. Dimi, who maintained that he belongs to the second degree,[15] 'THIS IS THE CASE' is taught as a limitation.

But there is [the following]: For when Rabin came,[16] he said in the name of R. Johanan: In the case of [other] nations, follow the male;[17] if they become proselytes, follow the more inferior status[18] of the two! — 'THIS IS THE CASE' is taught as a limitation.

[Reverting to the authorship of the Mishnah:] How now! If you say that our Mishnah agrees with R. Judah, it is well: then 'WHEREVER' of the first clause includes an Israelite who marries a halalah[19] and the case of Rabbah b. Bar Hanah; while 'THIS IS THE CASE' excludes the cases of R. Dimi and Rabin.[20]

---

(1) Viz., it is mamzer.

(2) Who permits this union in the first place.

(3) Among the cases enumerated in this category

(4) I.e., to include cases not explicitly enumerated.

(5) Lit., 'and which is it? It is . . .

(6) Notwithstanding that a general principle is stated, the 'THIS IS THE CASE', teaches that it applies only to the cases enumerated.

(7) V. Glos.

(8) Hence this should be included in the first clause.

(9) That the daughter of this union may marry a priest, v. infra 74b, thus she does not follow the male.

(10) Fem. of halal.

(11) V. p. 338. n. 6.

(12) Surely not. Hence halalah could not be added simply, and so the Tanna implicitly includes it by stating 'WHEREVER'.

(13) I.e., the second generation after conversion, his father having been a proselyte.

(14) Hence, eligible to an ordinary Jewess, v. Deut. XXIII, 8. Thus, here we have kiddushin and no transgression, and the issue follows the male.

(15) Thus following the mother.

(16) V. p. 46, n. 6.

(17) If a man and a woman among them of two different peoples marry, the issue takes the father's status, v. infra.

(18) Thus, though their kiddushin is valid and involves no transgression, the status of the male is not invariably followed.

(19) His daughter may marry a priest, thus following her father's status. This union is permitted.

(20) As above.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 67b

[Again] 'WHEREVER' of the second clause includes a proselyte who marries a mamzereth. But if you say that it agrees with R. Jose: 'WHEREVER' of the first clause is [to be explained] as we have said: 'THIS IS THE CASE' [likewise] as we have said: but what is 'WHEREVER of the second clause to include?[1] — Now on your view, according to R. Judah, what is the purpose of the 'THIS IS THE CASE' of the second clause? Hence [you must say] because the first clause states 'THIS IS THE CASE', the second likewise states: THIS IS THE CASE. So here too, because the first clause states 'WHEREVER,' the second does likewise state WHEREVER.

The [above] text [states]: 'When Rabin came, he said in the name of R. Johanan: In the case of [other] nations, follow the male; if they become proselytes, follow the more inferior status of the two'. What is meant by 'In the case of [other] nations, follow the male'? — As it was taught: How do we know that if a member of one of the nations[2] has intercourse with a Canaanitish woman[3] and begets a son, you may buy him as a slave?[4] Because it is said: Moreover of the children of the residents that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy.[5] I might think that even if a Canaanite has intercourse with a woman of other nations and begets a son, you may buy him for a slave; therefore it is said, which they have begotten in your land:[6] only of those who are begotten in your land, but not of those who dwell in your land.[7]

'If they become proselytes, follow the more inferior status of the two.' In which case? Shall we say, in the case of an Egyptian who marries an Ammonitess? What inferior status is there? [The Torah decreed,] An Ammonite [shall not enter unto the assembly of the Lord . . . even to the tenth generation],[8] but not an Ammonitess![9] — But [it means] an Ammonite who marries an Egyptian woman: now, if [the issue] is male, he follows[10] him [the father];[11] and if [the issue] is female, she follows her [the mother].[12]

WHATEVER [WOMAN] WHO CANNOT CONTRACT KIDDUSHIN WITH THAT PARTICULAR PERSON. How do we know it? — For R. Hiyya b. Abin said in R. Johanan's name, the matter eventually being ascribed to the authority of R. Jannai, while R. Aha son of Raba said that it was eventually ascribed to the authority of R. Jose the Galilean: Scripture saith, And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be married to a strange man:[13] 'to a stranger', but not to relations.[14] R. Abba demurred to this: Yet say: 'a strange [man]', but not [her husband's] son?[15] — Of a son it is explicitly written: A man shall not take his father's wife;[16] what then is the purpose of 'a strange [man]' This proves, [it is to teach], to strangers, but not to relations. Yet perhaps both refer to the [husband's] son, one [treating of it] at the outset, the other, if performed![17] — [That it is interdicted] at the outset is deduced from a wife's sister: if one may not betroth a wife's sister, who is [forbidden on pain of] kareth;[18] how much the more so is this of those on account of whom death by Beth din is incurred![19] — Then perhaps both refer to a wife's sister, one [forbidding it] at the outset, the other, if performed![20] — That indeed is so. [Then] we have found [this] of a wife's sister; how we do know it of other consanguineous relations? — We learn then from a wife's sister: just as a wife's sister is distinguished in that she is a consanguineous relation with whom a deliberate offence[21] involves kareth, and an unwitting offence involves a sin-offering, and kiddushin with her is invalid;[22] so with every consanguineous relation, with whom a deliberate offence involves kareth and an unwitting offence a sin-offering, kiddushin is invalid. Now, as for all [others], it is well: they may be [so] derived; but as for a married woman and a brother's wife, it [the analogy] can be refuted [thus:] As for a wife's sister, that [the invalidity of kiddushin] is because she is not permitted [even] where there is a precept;[23] will you say [the same] of a brother's wife, who is permitted where there is a precept? [The analogy with] a married woman too may be refuted: as for these, that [the invalidity of kiddushin] is because she cannot be permitted whilst they who cast the interdict upon her are alive;[24] will you say [the same] of a married woman, who can be permitted during the lifetime of him who renders her forbidden?[25] — But, said R. Jonah others state, R. Huna son of R. Joshua — Scripture saith, For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off:[26] thus all consanguineous relations are assimilated to a wife's sister: just as kiddushin with a wife's sister is invalid, so is kiddushin with all other consanguineous relations invalid. If so,

---

(1) No other case of kiddushin being legally recognised but forbidden, where the issue follows the status of the inferior, is known, barring those enumerated in the Mishnah.

(2) Other than the seven which inhabited Palestine at the time of the Conquest. Deut. XX, 16f.

(3) I.e., a member of the seven nations.

(4) The law of Deut. XX, 16f does not apply to him.

(5) Lev. XXV, 45. This is preceded by (v. 44) of the nations that are round about you (i.e., not the seven nations), of them shall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids. Hence, 'Moreover,' etc., implies not only of them, but even of the residents etc. Since the members of the seven races are excluded (Deut. XX. 16f), it must mean, not only the pure members of the other nations, but even those borne by Canaanitish women.

(6) Lev. XXV, 45.

(7) The Canaanites. Thus in both cases the issue takes the status of the father.

(8) Deut. XXIII, 4.

(9) The 'of more inferior status of the two' implies that they are both inferior, but one more so than another. But an Ammonitess has no inferior status at all, for she may marry a Jew immediately after her conversion.

(10) Lit., 'cast him after.'

(11) And ranks as an Ammonite; neither he nor any of his male descendants will be permitted to marry a Jewess.

(12) And counts as an Egyptian woman of the second generation; the following generation will be permitted to marry a Jew or a Jewess. But she does not take her father's status to count as an Ammonitess, in which case she herself could marry a Jew.

(13) Deut. XXIV, 2.

(14) Who are interdicted by the laws of incest; i.e., marriage with these is invalid.

(15) Only then is kiddushin invalid. But kiddushin with any other consanguineous relation, though forbidden, may be valid.

(16) Ibid. XXIII, 1 (E.V. XXII, 30); 'shall not take' intimates that such 'taking.' viz., betrothal, is invalid.

(17) One shews that this marriage may not be contracted in the first place. Yet I might think that if contracted it is valid and necessitates a divorce for its dissolution; therefore the other shews that even if performed it is not recognised.

(18) V. Glos.

(19) The latter includes a husband's son.

(20) Lev. XVIII, 28, thou shalt not take a woman to a sister, teaches that kiddushin is forbidden; and Deut. XXIV, 2 'to a strange man' implying but not to relations, may intimate that such kiddushin is invalid if contracted. But with respect to other relations enumerated in Lev. XVIII, 7-17 in connection with which Scripture does not say: 'thou shalt not take' — a term implying 'betrothal' — kiddushin with them, though forbidden, may be valid.

(21) I.e., coition,

(22) Even when performed.

(23) If A and B, two brothers, are married to C and D, two sisters, respectively, and A dies childless, B may not take C, though if she were not his wife's sister it would be incumbent upon him (Deut. XXV, 5ff.).

(24) Even if one divorces his wife, her sister is still prohibited as long as the former lives.

(25) I.e., — by her husband's divorce. And thus the question remains, whence do we know that kiddushin is invalid with consanguineous relations?

(26) Lev. XVIII, 29; the chapter enumerates the forbidden consanguineous relations.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 68a

even a niddah too?[1] Why then did Abaye say: All agree that if one has inter — course with a niddah or a sotah,[2] the issue is not mamzer? — Said Hezekiah, Scripture saith, [and if any man lie with her,] and her menstruation[3] be upon him:[4] even during her 'menstruation' betrothal with her is valid.[5]

Consider: one can assimilate [all other consanguineous relations] to niddah, and one can assimilate her to a wife's sister:[6] what [reason] do you see to assimilate them to a wife's sister:[7] assimilate them to niddah? — [In a choice between] leniency and stringency, we assimilate to the case of stringency.[8]

R. Aha b. Jacob said: It is inferred a minori from yebamah: if kiddushin with a yebamah is invalid,[9] though she is [interdicted only] by a negative precept, how much the more so with those who are forbidden on pain of death or kareth! If so, should not others, interdicted [only] by negative precepts. be the same?[10] — Said R. Papa, of those interdicted by negative precepts it is explicitly stated: If there be to a man two wives, the one beloved, and the other hated.[11] Now is there before the Omnipresent a hated [woman] or a beloved one![12] But 'beloved' means beloved in her marriage, and 'hated' means hated in her marriage;[13] yet the Divine Law states: 'and if there be.'[14]

Now R, Akiba, who maintained, kiddushin with those who are interdicted by a negative precept is invalid, — to what does he apply, 'if there be'? — To [the betrothal of] a widow to a High Priest, and in accordance with R. Simai. For it was taught: R. Simai said: [The issue] of all [marriages forbidden by a negative injunction] R. Akiba declared mamzer, excepting that of a widow [married] to a High Priest, since the Torah said, [a widow . . . he shall not take,] and he shall not profane [his seed]:[15] he renders [his seed] profane, but not mamzer. But on the view of R. Yeshebab, who said: Come, and let us cry out against Akiba son of Joseph, who declared: He who has no entry in Israel, the issue is mamzer — it is well if R. Yeshebab comes to combat R. Simai; then it is right. But if he states an independent opinion, this including even those who are interdicted by a positive precept, to what can he apply it?[16] — To a non-virgin[17] [married] to a High Priest.[18] And wherein does it differ?[19] — Because it is a positive precept unapplicable[20] to all.[21] And the Rabbis: instead of explaining [the verse][22] as referring to those forbidden by negative precepts, let them refer it to those forbidden by positive precepts?[23] — Those who are forbidden by positive precepts, — how are they conceivable? If both are Egyptian women, both are 'hated'? If one is an Egyptian woman and the other a Jewess — we require that the 'two wives' shall be of one people: if [one is] a non-virgin [married] to a High Priest, — is it then written, [If] there be [two wives] to a priest?[24] And R. Akiba?[25] — You are forced to leave it to the verse to explain itself.[26]

AND WHATEVER [WOMAN] WHO CANNOT CONTRACT KIDDUSHIN etc. How do we know [it of] a Canaanitish bondmaid?[27] — Said R. Huna, Scripture saith, Abide ye here with ['im] the ass[28] — it is a people ['am] like unto an ass.[29] We have thus found that kiddushin with her is invalid:

---

(1) If one betroths a woman during her menstruation the kiddushin should be invalid, and as a corollary, the issue conceived during menstruation should be mamzer, these two being interdependent. The prohibition of intercourse with a niddah is also stated in that passage.

(2) V. Glos. The sotah is forbidden to her own husband too, and to this Abaye refers.

(3) E.V. 'impurity'

(4) Lev. XV, 24.
(5) Lit., 'there is (being) — sc. betrothal — with her.' The verb 'to be' is understood to mean betrothal.
(6) Both being mentioned in Lev. XVIII.
(7) So that the kiddushin is not legally recognised.
(8) Owing to the doubt.
(9) V. Yeb. 23b.
(10) Granted that they cannot be deduced a minori, yet they follow by analogy.
(11) Deut. XXI. 15.
(12) Surely it is unthinkable that God will change the law of inheritance because a man loves one woman or hates another! Hence one general law that the firstborn receives a double portion of the patrimony would have sufficed.
(13) I.e., the marriages being permitted and forbidden respectively.
(14) Intimating that the kiddushin is recognised.
(15) Lev. XXI, 14f,
(16) Sc. 'hated' and 'beloved'. For notes on this passage v. supra 64a.
(17) A woman who is not a virgin.
(18) Forbidden in Lev. XXI, 23f.
(19) Why is she different from an Egyptian or an Edomite woman, since all three are interdicted by a positive command?
(20) Lit., 'not alike'.
(21) And not as stringent.
(22) 'And if there be'.
(23) Since by analogy with yebamah kiddushin with the former should be invalid.
(24) Hence the verse cannot refer to a woman who is forbidden by a positive precept.
(25) How does he overcome these difficulties?
(26) It cannot refer to those who are interdicted by negative precepts, since the analogy with yebamah teaches otherwise. Hence it must refer exclusively to one of those just mentioned, in spite of their improbability
(27) That kiddushin with her is invalid.
(28) Gen. XXII, 5; said by Abraham to his slaves.
(29) By reading עם ('am) for עם ('im); a mere chattel of the master.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 68b

how do we know that the issue takes her status? — Because Scripture saith, the wife and her children shall be her master's.[1] How do we know [it of a freeborn] Gentile woman? — Scripture saith, neither shalt thou make marriages with them.[2] How do we know that her issue bears her status? — R. Johanan said on the authority of R. Simeon b. Yohai, Because Scripture saith, For he will turn away thy son from following me:[3] thy son by[4] an Israelite woman is called thy son, but thy son by a heathen is not called thy son.[5] Rabina said: This proves that thy daughter's son by a heathen is called thy son.[6] Shall we say that Rabina holds that if a heathen or a [non-Jewish] slave cohabits with a Jewess the issue is mamzer?[7] — [No.] Granted that he is not [regarded as] fit,[8] he is not mamzer either, but merely stigmatised as unfit.[9]

Now, that [verse] refers to the seven nations![10] whence do we know it of other nations? — Scripture saith, 'For he will turn away [thy son],' which includes all who may turn [him] away. That is well according to R. Simeon, who interprets the reason of Scripture.[11] But on the view of the Rabbis,[12] what is the reason?[13] — Scripture saith, and after that thou shalt go in unto her, and be her husband, [etc.],[14] whence it follows that before that kiddushin with her is invalid.

We have thus found that kiddushin with her is not recognised. How do we know that her child is as herself? — Scripture saith, If there be to a man [two wives] . . . and they bare to him [children]:[15] where we read 'if there be',[16] we also read: 'and they bare to him';[17] but where we do not read: 'If there be', we do not read: 'and they bare to him'. If so, is not a [heathen] bondmaid likewise? — Yes, it is even thus. Then what is the purpose of 'the wife and her children shall be her master's'? —

For what was taught:

---

(1) Ex. XXI, 4. This refers to a Gentile bondmaid given as wife to a Hebrew slave. The children remain slaves when their father is freed, shewing that they bear their mother's status.
(2) Deut. VII, 3. The verse implies that such marriage is not recognised.
(3) Ibid. 4.
(4) Lit., 'who comes'.
(5) [Although the text speaks both of the case of a Jewess becoming the wife of a heathen, and of a heathen becoming the wife of a Jew, yet it gives only one reason for the prohibition of intermarriage: viz., lest 'he turn aside thy son from following after me', a reason which, as it stands appears applicable only to one prohibition. Hence the verse must be taken not as expressing the fear lest the Jewish partner in a heathen marriage may turn aside from God, since this is evident and is equally applicable to both cases, but states an additional reason for the prohibition with reference to the offspring — the fear that the heathen father 'will turn aside thy son' i.e., the son of thy daughter who is legally a Jew 'from following after me'; whereas in the case where a Jew marries a heathen woman the fear does not arise, since the child follows her status, and is not considered 'thy son' Rashi.] Tosaf.: Since Scripture states 'son' and not 'seed' which would include the son's son, it is evident that the fear is only for thy 'son' born of a Jewess, but not his son, born of a Gentile. That must be because his son is a heathen too, like the mother.
(6) [According to Rashi's interpretation (n. 5), whereas R. Johanan's main emphasis is on the heathen status of the offspring of a heathen woman by a Jew, Rabina stresses the other inference — the status of the offspring of a Jewish woman by a heathen. v. Strashun.] Tosaf. I.e., a Jew. This follows because Scripture does not say: for he will turn away thy son and thy daughter. Now, 'and thy daughter' would likewise imply, but not thy daughter's son, as in n. 5, whence we would learn that her son by a heathen is also a heathen. Since he is not excluded, it follows that Scripture objects to his being 'turned away' too, because he is a Jew (Tosaf.)
(7) For, since he is called 'thy son', he is a Jew, not a heathen. Yet he is the issue of a Jewess by one with whom kiddushin is not recognised, and therefore mamzer, in accordance with the Mishnah. — In that case his status is worse, for as a mamzer he can never marry a legitimately born Jewess (Deut. XXIII, 3), whereas as a Gentile he can become a proselyte and marry a Jewess.
(8) V. next note.
(9) Pasul. As such only a priestly marriage is barred to him.
(10) V. Deut. VII, 1, 2.
(11) In the sense that when we know the reason of a precept, we may extend it to all other cases where the same applies, and conversely, exclude those where it does not.
(12) Who oppose this.
(13) Seeing that for he will turn away too refers to the seven nations.
(14) Deut. XXI, 13. The verse refers to a woman captured in war; since the members of the seven nations were to be utterly exterminated, this must allude to a member of other nations, 'After that' means after her period of mourning. etc.
(15) Deut. XXI, 25.
(16) I.e., kiddushin is valid; v. p. 343, n. 4.
(17) The child takes his status.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 69a

If he says to his bondmaid, 'Behold, thou art free, but thy child [yet to be born] shall be a slave,' the 'child is as herself: this is the view of R. Jose the Galilean; the Sages maintain: His words are valid,[1] for it is said: 'the wife and her children shall be her master's'. How does this teach it?[2] — Said Raba: This refers to R. Jose the Galilean's [ruling].[3]

MISHNAH. R. TARFON SAID: MAMZERIM[4] CAN BE PURIFIED.[5] HOW? IF A MAMZER MARRIES[6] A BONDMAID, HER SON IS A SLAVE;[7] IF HE IS FREED, IT IS FOUND THAT THE SON IS A FREE MAN.[8] R. ELIEZER SAID: BEHOLD, HE IS A SLAVE, A MAMZER.[9]

GEMARA. The Scholars propounded: Does R. Tarfon say [thus] at the very outset,[10] or only if it is already done?[11] — Come and hear: They [the Sages] said to R. Tarfon: You have purified the males,[12] but you have not purified the females.[13] Now, if you say that he means at the very outset, let a mamzereth[14] too be married to a slave?[15] — A slave has no paternity.[16]

Come and hear: For R. Simlai's host was a mamzer, and he [R. Simlai] said to him, 'Had I known you earlier,[17] I would have removed the stigma from[18] your sons.' Now, if you say that it [sc. R. Tarfon's device] is at the very outset, it is well: but if you say, only when already done, what is it [that he could advise him]?[19] — He would have advised him by saying to him, 'Go and steal, and then be sold as a Hebrew slave.'[20] Were there then Hebrew slaves in R. Simlai's time?[21] Surely a Master said: [The institution of] a Hebrew slave is practised only when Jubilee is practised?[22] Hence it surely follows that R. Tarfon means at the very outset. This proves it. Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: The halachah is as R. Tarfon.

R. ELIEZER SAID: BEHOLD, HE IS A SLAVE, A MAMZER, R. Eleazar said: What is R. Eliezer's reason? Because Scripture saith, [A mamzer . . . even to the tenth generation shall none enter] to him [into the assembly of the Lord]:[23] [this teaches,] follow his ineligibility.[24] And the Rabbis?[25] — That refers to an Israelite who marries a mamzereth. For I might think, it is written, by their families, by their father's house:[26] [therefore] 'to him' comes and excludes it.[27] And R. Eliezer?[28] — Surely, though it is written: 'by their families, by their father's house,' yet 'to him' comes and excludes it; so here too, though it is written , 'the wife and her children shall be her master's,' yet 'to him' comes and excludes it.[29] And the Rabbis? — Every child in the womb of a heathen bondmaid is like the young in an animal's womb.[30]

C H A P T E R I V

MISHNAH. TEN GENEALOGICAL CLASSES WENT UP FROM BABYLON:[31] PRIESTS, LEVITES, ISRAELITES, HALALIM,[32] PROSELYTES, FREEDMEN, MAMZERIM, NETHINIM,[33] SHETHUKI[34] AND FOUNDLINGS. PRIESTS, LEVITES AND ISRAELITES MAY INTERMARRY[35] WITH EACH OTHER. LEVITES, ISRAELITES, HALALIM, PROSELYTES, AND FREEDMEN MAY INTERMARRY. PROSELYTES AND FREEDMEN, MAMZERIM AND NETHINIM, SHETHUKI AND FOUNDLINGS, ARE ALL PERMITTED TO INTERMARRY. NOW, THESE ARE THEY: SHETHUKI: HE WHO KNOWS HIS MOTHER BUT NOT HIS FATHER; FOUNDLING: HE WHO WAS GATHERED IN FROM THE STREETS AND KNOWS NEITHER HIS FATHER NOR HIS MOTHER, ABBA SAUL USED TO CALL THE SHETKUKI 'BEDUKI'.[36]

GEMARA. TEN GENEALOGICAL CLASSES WENT UP FROM BABYLON. Why is it particularly taught: WENT UP FROM BABYLON; let him state, migrated to Eretz Yisrael? He thereby tells us something en passant. As it was taught: then shalt thou arise and get thee up unto the place which the lord thy God shall choose:[37] this teaches that the Temple is higher than the rest of Eretz Yisrael, and Eretz Yisrael is higher than all [other] countries. As for the Temple being higher than the rest of Eretz Yisrael, it is well: even as it is written,

---

(1) Lit., 'fulfilled'.

(2) The verse is assumed to be quoted by the Sages.

(3) Thus: only when the wife, i.e., the bondmaid, belongs to the master does the issue belong to him; but if she is free, the children are likewise.

(4) Pl. of mamzer.

(5) From their inferior status, which forbids them and their descendants ever to marry Jews.

(6) 'Marries' denotes a legal union; v. A. Buchler, MGWJ 1934 p. 133. n. 2.

(7) But not mamzer.

(8) Hence, permitted to marry a Jewess.

(9) And on obtaining his freedom he remains a mamzer.
(10) That this may be done in order to purify a mamzer.
(11) Because a mamzer is after all a Jew, and possibly may not marry a bondmaid.
(12) They can go where they are unknown, claim to be slaves, and marry bondmaids.
(13) Because a woman does not leave her home and disguise her identity in order to enter upon a forbidden marriage.
(14) Fem. of mamzer.
(15) Since none forbid her.
(16) The issue is not recognised as his, but as hers, and therefore if a mamzereth is married to a slave it will still remain mamzer.
(17) Before your marriage.
(18) Lit., 'purified'.
(19) He would surely not counsel him to do something that is forbidden in the first place!
(20) To whom a bondmaid is permitted. Of course, the same objection may still be raised: surely he would not advise him to steal! But then one could answer that he would advise him to sell himself, in accordance with the view that then too his master can give him a heathen bondmaid, supra 14b (Rashi).
(21) Lit., 'years'.
(22) Which it was not then.
(23) Deut. XXIII, 3.
(24) All his issue, no matter how born, share his own unfitness.
(25) R. Tarfon: how does he explain this?
(26) Num. IV, 2, and therefore the issue has the status of the father.
(27) I.e., this issue follows the mother, not the father.
(28) Does he not admit this?
(29) That in this case the child is not exclusively the master's, i.e., a slave, but also belongs to his father's rank and is a mamzer.
(30) Which has no connection with the male at all.
(31) After the first exile.
(32) V. Glos. s.v. halal.
(33) v. Glos. s.v. Nathin.
(34) Lit., 'the silenced one.' The Mishnah proceeds to define them.
(35) The language is Biblical: may come in unto each other; cf. Deut. XXIII, 2-4.
(36) Lit., 'one requiring examination.' The Gemara discusses this.
(37) Deut. XVII, 8, sc. the Temple.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 69b

[If there arise...] matters of controversy in thy gates: then thou shalt arise and go up.[1] But how do we know that Eretz Yisrael is higher than all [other] countries? — Because it is written: Therefore behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say: As the Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, as the Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all the countries whither I had driven them.[2]

Then why particularly state, WENT UP FROM BABYLON: let him teach, went up to Eretz Yisrael? — This supports R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said: Ezra did not go up from Babylon until he made it like pure sifted flour: then he went up.[3] Abaye said: We learnt: THEY WENT UP voluntarily; Raba said: We learnt: He [Ezra] brought them up [against their will]. And they differ over R. Eleazar ['s dictum,] viz.: Ezra did not go up from Babylon until he made it like pure sifted flour: then he went up. Abaye rejects it, Raba accepts it.[4] Alternatively, all accept R. Eleazar's dictum, but they differ in this: One Master [Abaye] holds that he [merely] separated them, whereupon they voluntarily ascended [to Palestine]:[5] the other Master holds that [even so] he led them up against their will.

Now, on the view that they went up [voluntarily], it is well: thus Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: All countries are as dough in comparison with Palestine,[6] and Palestine is as dough relative to Babylon.[7] But on the view that he [forcibly] led them up, they were indeed known?[8] — Granted that they were known to that gener — ation, they were not known to another generation. On the view that they went up, it is well: hence it is written: And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava; and there we encamped three days; and I viewed [i. e., scrutinized] the people, and the priests, and found there none of the sons of Levi.[9] But on the view that he brought them up — surely he was most careful with them![10] — Granted that he had been careful with the unfit,[11] yet he had not been careful with the fit.

PRIESTS, LEVITES, AND ISRAELITES. How do we know that they had come up? — Because it is written, so the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinim, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities.[12]

HALALIM, PROSELYTES AND FREEDMEN. How do we know halalim? For it was taught: R. Jose said: A presumptive right [hazakah] is powerful, as it is said: And of the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Hakkoz, the children of Barzillai, which took a wife of the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name. These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: therefore were they deemed polluted and put from the priesthood. And the Tirshatha[13] said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.[14] Now he[15] said to them, Behold, ye remain in your presumptive rights: whereof did ye eat in Exile? of the sacred food [eaten] in the country.[16] So now too [ye may partake] of the sacred food [consumed] in the country.[17]

But on the view that we promote from terumah to family purity,[18] those who ate terumah, they would come to promote them? — There it was different, because their presumptive status was weakened.[19] Then what is meant by 'Great is a presumptive right?'[20] — Because originally they ate Rabbinical terumah, and now they were to eat Biblical terumah.[21] Alternatively, after all they would now too eat only Rabbinical terumah,[22] not Biblical; for when do we promote front terumah to family purity? [Only when it is terumah] by Biblical law, but we do not promote [when it is terumah] by Rabbinical law. If so, why [state], 'Great is a presumptive right?' — Because formerly[23] there was no cause to forbid it on account of Biblical terumah,' but now,[24] though it might have been forbidden on account of Biblical terumah,[25] they [nevertheless] ate of Rabbinical, but not of Biblical [terumah]. But it is written: 'and the Tirshatha said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things': thus, only of the most holy things[26] might they not eat, but everything else they might eat? — This is what he said: [They were to eat] neither what is called kodesh [holy], nor what is called kodashim [holies]. 'Neither what is called kodesh', as it is written: There shall no stranger eat kodesh;[27] 'nor what is called kodashim,' as it is written: And if a priest's daughter be married unto a stranger, she shall not eat of the heave-offerings of the kodashim,[28] and a Master said [explaining this:] the priestly dues[29] of sacrifices

---

(1) Ibid. 8; 'In thy gates' implies anywhere in Palestine, whence one had to 'go up' to the Temple.

(2) Jer. XXIII, 7f.

(3) He intentionally took those of inferior rank so that they should not remain in Babylon, where, owing to the absence of leaders, they might mingle with the rest of the nation. Therefore the Tanna states: WENT UP FROM BABYLON, intimating that in that itself he had a purpose, apart from the rebuilding of Palestine, viz., to purge the Jews in Babylon.

(4) For such purging could only be effected by compulsion.

(5) In order to become mixed up with the others.

(6) Dough is a mixture of flour and water. I.e., the Jews there have not such a pure descent as those in Palestine.

(7) Cf. n. 2. Halevi, Doroth, 1, 3, p. 104 conjectures that this was due to the incessant wars with the Greeks, when many Jews and Jewesses were taken captive by the enemy, and the general weakening of Jewish observance during the Hellenizing period and later when the Sadducees ruled the country. The Jews in Babylon, however, were free from all this.

(8) In Palestine too, and restrained from intermarrying, so that Palestine remained just as pure as Babylon.

(9) Ezra VIII, 15. He had to scrutinize them, since those of inferior descent voluntarily joined them.

(10) He knew who they were; why scrutinize them?

(11) I.e., those of low descent.

(12) Ibid. II, 70.

(13) According to tradition it was Nehemiah.

(14) Ezra II, 61-63 [So to speak, 'never' since there was no Urim and Thummim in the second Temple. v. Sot. 48a'.]

(15) The Tirshatha.

(16) Gebul. country, is a technical term denoting any part of Palestine outside the Temple and Jerusalem. The reference is to terumah.

(17) But not sacrifices. This shews that 'they were deemed polluted' means that they were accounted halalim, who may not partake of sacrifices.

(18) If a priest is seen eating terumah in his town, where he is known, we assume that he is of pure descent, and permit another priest to marry his daughter.

(19) When it was seen that other priests ate sacrifices and they did not, it would be known that their genealogy was suspect (Rashi). Tosaf.: their status was weakened because they had failed to prove their pure descent.

(20) The phrase implies that it leads to some extraordinary concession. But since there was no reason to fear that continuance in their right would lead to error, R. Jose should simply have stated that a presumptive right in the past gives a claim for the future.

(21) Outside Palestine terumah is required by Rabbinical law only.

(22) Terumah on fruit and vegetables, which even in Palestine is only Rabbinical.

(23) Since outside Palestine there was none available.

(24) Lit., 'at the end'.

(25) On their return to Palestine. If they were permitted to eat Rabbinical, they might come to eat Biblical terumah.

(26) Which implies sacrifices of the higher sanctity; v. p. 264, n. 11.

(27) Lev. XXII, 10; E.V. 'of the holy things,' i.e., terumah, to which the whole passage refers.

(28) Ibid. 12; E.V. holy things.

(29) Lit., 'that which was separated', viz., the breast and shoulder.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 70a

she shall not eat.

PROSELYTES AND FREEDMEN. How do we know it? — Said R. Hisda, Because Scripture saith, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from the filthiness of the heathen of the land.[1]

MAMZERIM. How do we know it? — Because it is written: And Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the slave, the Ammonite, heard it:[2] and it is [also] written, [Moreover in those days the nobles of Judah sent many letters unto Tobiah . . .] For there were many in Judah sworn unto him, because he [Tobiah] was the son-in-law of Shechaniah the son of Arah; and his son Jehohanan had taken the daughter of Meshullam the son of Berchiah to wife.[3] Now he [the Tanna of our Mishnah] holds that if a heathen or a slave has intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite, the issue is mamzer.[4] That is well on the view that the issue is mamzer; but on the view that it is legitimate [kasher], what can be said? Moreover, how do you know that they had sons:[5] perhaps they did not have sons? Again, how do you know that they were [originally] here [in Babylon] and then migrated; perhaps they were there [in Palestine, from the beginning]? — But [it is learnt] from this: And these were they which went up from Tel-melah, Tel-harsha, Cherub, Addon, and Immer: but they could not shew their fathers' houses, nor their seed, whether they were of Israel.[6] Now 'Tel-melah'[7] refers to those people whose deeds were like those of Sodom, which was turned into a salt heap: 'Tel-harsha,'[8] to those who cry out 'Father,'and their mothers silence them;[9] but they could not shew their fathers' houses, nor their seed [i.e., their mothers], whether they were of Israel — this refers to foundlings, gathered in from the streets. 'Cherub, Addon and Immer':[10] R. Abbahu said: The Lord said: 'I said that Israel should be as precious to me as the cherub, whereas they made themselves like the leopard.'[11] Others state, R. Abbahu said: The Lord said: 'Though they have made themselves like the leopard, yet they are as precious to me as a cherub.'

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: He who takes a wife who is not fitting for him,[12] the Writ stigmatizes him as though he had ploughed the whole world and sown it with salt, as it is said: And these were they which went up front Tel-melah, Tel-harsha.[13]

Rabbah son of R. Adda said in Rab's name: He who takes a wife for the sake of money will have unworthy children, as it is said: They have dealt treacherously against the Lord; for they have borne strange children. And should you think, their money is saved [to them], — therefore it is stated: Now shall the new moon devour them with their portions.[14] And should you say, his portion, but not hers:[15] therefore it is stated: 'their portions'. And should you say [only] after a long time — therefore it is said: 'the new moon'. What does this imply? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: A month comes and a month goes and their money is lost.

Rabbah son of R. Adda also said — others state, R. Salla said in R. Hamnunaðs name: He who marries a wife who is not fit for him, Elijah binds him and the Holy One, blessed be He, flagellates him. And a Tanna taught: Concerning all these[16] Elijah writes and the Holy One, blessed he He, attests: 'Woe to him who disqualifies his seed, blemishes his family and him who takes to wife one who is not fit for him, Elijah binds and the Holy One, blessed be He, flagellates.'[17] And he who [continually] declares [others] unfit is [himself] unfit and never speaks in praise [of people]. And Samuel said: With his own blemish he stigmatizes [others] as unfit.

A certain man from Nehardea entered a butcher's shop in Pumbeditha and demanded, 'Give me meat!' 'Wait until Rab Judah b. Ezekiel's attendant takes his,' was the reply: 'and then we will serve you.' 'Who is Judah b. Shewiskel,[18] he exclaimed: 'to take precedence over me and be served before me!' When they went and told Rab Judah, he pronounced the ban against him. Said they to him, 'He is wont to call people slaves,' whereupon he had him proclaimed a slave. Thereupon that man went and summoned him to a lawsuit before R. Nahman. When the writ of summons was brought, he [Rab Judah] went before R. Huna [and] asked him, 'Shall I go or not?'[19] 'Actually,' he replied: 'you need not go, being a great man; yet in honour of the Nasi's house,[20] arise and go.' On his arrival there he found him making a railing.[21] Said he to him, Do you not accept R. Huna b. Idi's dictum in Samuel's name, Once a man is appointed head of a community, he may not do [manual] labour in the presence of three?[22] — 'I am [merely] making a small portion of a gundritha,'[23] he replied. 'Is not ma'akeh,[24] as written in the Torah, or mehizah,[25] as used by the Rabbis, good enough?'[26] he retorted. Said he to him, 'Sit you down on a karpita [seat].' 'Is not safsal, as used by the Rabbis, or iztaba, as commonly used,[27] good enough?' he asked. 'Will you partake of ethronga [citron],' he proceeded, 'Thus did Samuel say,' was his reply: 'he who says 'ethronga', is a third [puffed up] with arrogance: either ethrog, as it is called by the Rabbis, or ethroga, as it is popularly called.' 'Will you drink anbaga [cup of wine]?' he asked him. 'Are you then dissatisfied with isharagus, as it is called by the Rabbis, or anpak, as it is popularly pronounced?' he reproved him. 'Let [my daughter] Donag come and serve drink,' he proposed. 'Thus said Samuel,' he replied: 'One must not make use of a woman.' '[But] she is only a child!' — 'Samuel distinctly said: One must make no use at all of a woman, whether adult or child.' 'Will you send a greeting to [my wife] Yaltha,' he suggested. 'Thus said Samuel,' he replied, [To listen to] a woman's voice is indecent.' 'It is possible through a messenger?' 'Thus said Samuel,' he retorted

(1) Ezra VI, 21.
(2) Neh. II, 10.
(3) Ibid. VI, 17f. Shechaniah was a Jew.
(4) And we have a case of such intercourse in the verses quoted.
(5) Viz., Tobiah and his own son, by these Jewesses.
(6) Ibid. VII, 61.
(7) Lit., 'saltheap'.
(8) Lit., 'heap of silence'.
(9) Because they do not know their fathers — there are called shethuki in the Mishnah.
(10) 'Addon immer', changing 'Immer' to 'Amar', means, 'The Lord (Adon) saith'.
(11) Which is not particular to copulate with its own mate. So Israel, thereby producing mamzerim. The allusion to the deeds of Sodom is similar.
(12) I.e., of an unfit stock.
(13) Deriving harsha fr. harash, to plough. Because 'they could not shew' etc., i.e., they were ashamed of their unseemly marriages and strove to conceal them, they turned the world into a ploughed heap sown with salt.
(14) Hos. V. 7. 'Strange' — i.e., from the ways of decency.
(15) Because she did nothing wrong.
(16) Priests, Levites, and Israelites who marry a wife that is of unfit stock.
(17) Wilna Gaon deletes this; according to which render, 'and takes to wife'.
(18) A wilful and contemptuous mispronunciation of Ezekiel, meaning, the glutton (fr. shewiski, roast meat, i.e., the eater of roast meat).
(19) His eminent position entitled him to refuse to recognise R. Nahman's jurisdiction over himself.
(20) R. Nahman was the son-in-law of the Resh Galutha, the official head of Babylonian Jewry. R. Huna refers to the latter as nasi, which strictly speaking was the corresponding title of the head of Palestinian Jewry; cf. Hul. 124a.
(21) To the roof of his house, in accordance with Deut. XXII, 8.
(22) To preserve the dignity of his position.
(23) Balustrade.
(24) The Heb. for the same.
(25) Lit., 'barrier', the Rabbinical term.
(26) Lit., 'is it hateful?' — why such high-flown language?
(27) Others reverse it.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 70b

'One must not enquire after a woman's welfare.' 'Then by her husband!' 'Thus said Samuel,' said he, 'One must not enquire after a woman's welfare at all.' His wife sent [word] to him, 'Settle his case for him, lest he make you like any ignoramus!' 'What means your traveling hither?' he asked him. 'You sent me a writ of summons,' he replied. 'Seeing that I do not even know your way of speech,' he exclaimed: 'would I send you a writ of summons!' Thereupon he drew out the summons from his bosom and shewed [it] to him: 'Behold the man and behold the summons!' he said. 'Yet since you have come here.' he said: 'let us discuss the matter, that it may not be said that the Rabbis shew favour to each other.' Then he asked him, 'Why did you place that man under the ban?' 'Because he abused the Rabbis' messenger.' 'Then you should have punished him [by stripes], for Rab punished [with stripes] him who abused a messenger of the Rabbis.' — 'I dealt with him more severely.'[1] 'Why did you have it proclaimed that he is a slave?' He answered: 'Because he was wont to call [other] people slaves, and he who declares [others] unfit is [himself] unfit, and never speaks good [of anyone]; and Samuel said: With his own blemish he stigmatizes [others] as unfit.' 'But how did Samuel say this: only that one must suspect; yet did he say that he is to be [thus] proclaimed?' At this stage his opponent said to Rab Judah, 'You call me a slave, — I who am descended from the royal house of the Hasmoneans!' — 'Thus said Samuel,' he retorted: 'Whoever says: "I am descended from the house of the Hasmoneans is a slave.'[2] Said he[3] to him, 'Do you not agree with what was said by R. Abba in the name of R. Huna in Rab's name: Every scholar who proceeds to give a ruling:[4] if he has stated it before the event, he is heeded; if not, he is not heeded?'[5] — 'But there is R. Mattenah who supports me,' he replied. Now, R. Mattenah had not seen Nehardea for thirteen years, but on that day he visited it. Said he[6] to him, 'Do you remember what Samuel said when he stood with one foot on the bank and one foot on the bridge?'[7] — 'Thus said Samuel', he replied: 'He who claims, "I am descended from the royal house of the Hasmoneans", is a slave, because there remained of them only one maiden who ascended a roof, lifted up her voice and cried out', "Whoever says I am descended from the house of the Hasmoneans is a slave"; then she fell from the roof and died.' So he[8] was proclaimed a slave. On that day many kethuboth were torn up in Nehardea.[9] When he [Rab Judah] issued, they came out after him to stone him.[10] [But] he threatened them, 'If you will be silent, be silent; if not, I will disclose against you what Samuel said: There are two families in Nehardea, one called The House of Jonah [dove] and the other, The House of 'Urbathi [raven-like]; and the sign thereof is, The unclean is unclean and the clean clean.'[11] Thereupon they threw away the stones out of their hands, which created a stoppage in the royal canal.[12]

[At that time] Rab Judah announced in Pumbeditha: Adda and Jonathan are slaves; Judah b. Papa is mamzer: Bati b. Tobiah in his arrogance refused to accept a deed of manumission. Raba proclaimed in Mahuza:[13] The members of Bela, Dena, Tela, Mela and Zega[14] — all these are unfit. Rab Judah said: The members of Guba are Gibeonites; Durnunitha[15] is a village of Nethinim.[16] R. Joseph said: This Be Kubi [in the Vicinity] of Pumbeditha consists entirely of slaves.[17]

Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: Pashur son of Immer[18] had four hundred slaves — others say, four thousand slaves — and all became mixed up in the priesthood, and every priest who displays impudence is [descended] from none but them. Said Abaye: And they all dwell in the Wall[19] of Nehardea.[20] Now he [Rab Judah] differs from R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said: If you see a priest with brazen forehead, have no suspicions of him,[21] for it is said: Thy people are as the quarrelsome among priests.[22]

R. Abin b. R. Adda said in Rab's name: Whoever takes a wife who is not fit for him,[23] when the Holy One, blessed be He, causes His divine Presence to rest [on Israel], He testifies concerning all the tribes [that they are His people],[24] but does not testify unto him, for it is said: The tribes of the Lord are a testimony unto Israel:[25] when is it 'a testimony unto Israel'? When the tribes are 'tribes of the Lord'.[26] R. Hama b. R. Hanina said: When the Holy One, blessed be He, causes His divine Presence to rest, it is only upon families of pure birth in Israel, for it is said: At that time, saith the Lord, will I be the God of all the families of Israel[27] — not unto all Israel, but unto 'all the families of Israel', is said[28] — and they shall be my people. Rabbah son of R. Huna said: This is the extra advantage which Israel possesses over proselytes.[29] For in respect to Israel it is written, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people;[30] whereas of proselytes it is written, for who is he that hath boldness to approach unto me? Saith the Lord. And ye shall be my people', and I will be your God.[31]

R. Helbo said: Proselytes are as injurious to Israel as a scab, for it is said: And the stranger shall join himself with them, and they shall cleave [we-nispehu] to the house of Jacob.[32] Here it is written: 'wenispehu'; whilst elsewhere it is written. [This is the law for all manner of plague of leprosy . . .] and for a rising, or for a scab [sappahath].[33]

R. Hama b. Hanina said: When the Holy One, blessed be He,

---

(1) Tosaf. in Yeb. 52a suggests that the reason was because he had insulted the Rabbi himself.

(2) Because the dynasty was wiped out by Herod, who, in spite of ascending the throne, was always regarded by the Jew's as an Idumean slave. He, to exalt his children, called them Hasmoneans, v. B.B. 3b.

(3) Probably R. Nahman.

(4) In his teacher's name.

(5) I.e., when he gives a traditional ruling bearing on his own case, he is believed only if he had stated it before the same arose.
(6) Rab Judah.
(7) Or 'on the ferry-boat'.
(8) Rab Judah's litigant.
(9) Of women who belonged to that family, and accordingly bore the status of slaves, so that their marriage was invalid.
(10) For revealing their inferiority.
(11) The dove is a clean bird (i.e., fit for food); the raven is unclean. The House of Jonah is of pure descent; the other is not. Descendants of the two families were probably widespread in Nehardea, but their origin was forgotten: hence the threat.
(12) So many were there.
(13) On the Tigris, not far from Ktesifon; it is discussed at great length in Obermeyer, pp. 161-186.
(14) These are either places or family names. Probably they are contemptuous nicknames, which may mean, old rags, barrels, patches, stuffings and grape skins.
(15) The name of a place.
(16) From which it derives its name, 'dura' _ village, so Rashi, according to cur. ed. 'Nethinim villagers'.
(17) Who had intermingled with the populace, though they had never been formally manumitted.
(18) A priestly contemporary of Jeremiah who had him put in the stocks because of his dire prophecies of national disaster; (Jer. XX 1-6).
(19) Heb. Shura, the large circumvallation. v. next note.
(20) Var. lec.: in Sura and Nehardea.
(21) I.e., of an impure family descent.
(22) Hos. IV, 4.
(23) I.e., of an unfit stock.
(24) [Read preferably with MS.M. 'When the Holy One, blessed be He, testifies, He testifies concerning etc.,' omitting 'causes His divine Presence to rest.']
(25) Ps. CXXII. 4.
(26) Worthily married and born.
(27) Jer. XXXI, 1.
(28) The limitation must exclude those of questionable birth.
(29) Lit., 'which is between Israel and proselytes.'
(30) Ezek. XXXVII, 27; i.e., God calls them first, and they accept the call.
(31) Jer. XXX, 21f; i.e., they must first call upon God, Who willingly accepts them. There is no spirit of exclusiveness in this: God first appeared unto Israel; thereafter, He is ready to accept all who call upon Him.
(32) Isa. XIV, 1.
(33) Lev. XIV, 55. We-nispehu is thus connected with sappahath, and the former verse is translated: and they shall be as a scab to the house of Jacob. — Rashi states: because their lax observance of precepts sets a bad example to true born Jews. Tosaf. suggests the reverse: proselytes are more observant, and expose the laxity of other Jews! Cf. infra p. 387.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 71a

purifies the tribes, He will first purify the tribe of Levi, for it is said: And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver; and they shall offer unto the Lord offerings in righteousness.[1] R. Joshua b. Levi said: Money purifies mamzerim,[2] for it is said. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver.[3] What is meant by, and they shall offer unto the Lord offerings in righteousness? — Said R. Isaac: The Holy One, blessed be He, shewed charity[4] to Israel, in that a family once mixed up[5] remains so.[6]

The [above] text [states]: Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: All countries are as dough in comparison with Palestine, and Palestine is as dough relative to Babylon. In the days of Rabbi[7] it was desired to render Babylon as dough vis a vis Palestine.[8] Said he to them, You are putting thorns between my eyes![9] If you wish, R. Hanina b. Hama will join [issue] with you. So R. Hanina b. Hama joined [issue] with them and said to them, 'I have this tradition from R. Ishmael son of R. Jose who stated on his father's authority: All countries are as dough in comparison with Palestine, and Palestine is as dough relative to Babylon.'[10]

In the days of R. Phineas it was desired to declare Babylon as dough vis a vis Palestine.[11] Said he to his slaves, 'When I have made two statements in the Beth Hamidrash, take me up in my litter and flee.' When he entered he said to them, A fowl does not require slaughter by Biblical law. Whilst they were sitting and meditating thereon, he said to them, All countries are as dough in comparison with Palestine, and Palestine is as dough relative to Babylon. [Thereupon] they [his slaves] took him up in his litter and fled. They ran after, but could not overtake him. Then they sat and examined [their genealogies], until they came to danger;[12] so they refrained.[13]

R. Johanan said: By the Temple! It is in our power;[14] but what shall I do, seeing that the greatest men of our time are mixed up therein. [Thus] he holds with R. Isaac, who said: Once a family becomes mixed up, it remains so.[15] Abaye said: We have learnt likewise: There was a family, Beth ha-Zerifa, in Transjordania, which Ben Zion[16] forcibly expelled.[17] There was another, which Ben Zion forcibly admitted.[18] Such as these, Elijah will come to declare unclean or clean, to expel and admit.[19] [Hence, only] such as these, who are known; but once a family becomes mixed up, it remains so. It was taught: There was yet another, which the Sages declined to reveal, but the Sages confided it to their children and disciples once a septennate — others say, twice a septennate. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: Reason supports the view that it was once a septennate. Even as it was taught: [If one vows,] 'Behold, I will be a nazir[20] if I do not reveal the families [which are impure],' he must be a nazir, and not reveal the families.[21]

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in R. Johanan's name: The [pronunciation of the Divine] Name of four letters the Sages confide to their disciples once a septennate — others state, twice a septennate. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: Reason supports the view that it was once a septennate, for it is written, this is my name for ever [le'olam][22] which is written le'allem.[23] Raba thought to lecture upon it at the public sessions. Said a certain old man to him, It is written, le'allem [to be kept secret].

R. Abina opposed [two verses]: It is written: 'this is my mame'; but it is also written: 'and this is my memorial'?[24] — The Holy One, blessed be He, said: I am not called as I am written: I am written with yod he, but I am read, alef daleth.[25]

Our Rabbis taught: At first [God's] twelve-lettered Name[26] used to be entrusted to all people. When unruly men increased,[27] it was confided to the pious of the priesthood,[28] and these 'swallowed it'[29] during the chanting of their brother priests.[30] It was taught: R. Tarfon said: 'I once ascended the dais[31] after my mother's brother, and inclined my ear to the High Priest, and heard him swallowing the Name during the chanting of his brother priests.

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: The forty-two lettered Name[32] is entrusted only to him who is pious,[33] meek, middle-aged,[34] free from bad temper, sober,[35] and not insistent on his rights. And he who knows it, is heedful thereof,[36] and observes it in purity, is beloved above and popular below, feared by man,[37] and inherits two worlds, this world and the future world.[38]

Samuel said on the authority of an old man: Babylon stands in the presumption of being fit, until you know wherewith it became unfit;[39] other countries are presumed to be unfit, until you know wherewith they are fit.[40] As for Palestine, he who has the presumption of unfitness is unfit; he who has the presumption of fitness is fit. But this is self contradictory: you say, he who has the presumption of unfitness is unfit — hence, when undetermined,[41] he is fit; then you teach, he who has the presumption of fitness is fit hence, when undetermined, he is unfit? — Said R. Huna b. Tahlifa in Rab's name: There is no difficulty:

(1) Mal. III, 3.
(2) By means of their wealth they intermarry with Israel, and having thus mingled, they will not be separated in the future.
(3) I.e., those who married by means of their silver, He will purify by retaining them in Israel.
(4) Heb. zedakah: the same word denotes righteousness and charity, because charity is righteousness.
(5) With illegitimate elements.
(6) And no attempt is to be made to excise it.
(7) C. 135-220 C.E.
(8) To declare the families of Palestine of purer birth, so that if a Babylonian desired to marry into a Palestine family he would have to prove the purity of his own descent. — It was thought that by now the Palestinian families were pure, and so it was due to the honour of Palestine to make this change; Halevi, Doroth, 1, 3, p. 105.
(9) Rabbi was a descendant of Hillel, a Babylonian, and so this would cast a stigma upon his birth.
(10) I.e., a mere declaration cannot change an historical fact.
(11) Since he was a contemporary of Rabbi (R. Judah I), this is probably the same as referred to above.
(12) They discovered that some powerful families were of impure birth, and it would endanger their own lives to reveal it.
(13) Lit., 'separated themselves.'
(14) To reveal the families of impure birth in Palestine.
(15) V. p. 359, n. 10.
(16) A person of great importance and power. In 'Ed. VIII, 7 the reading is 'bene Zion,' the citizens of Jerusalem.
(17) I.e., he declared them unfit, so that other families would not intermarry with them.
(18) Lit, 'brought near.' He compelled their pure birth to be recognised.
(19) 'Ed. (Sonc. ed.) p. 50 notes 4-6.
(20) V. Glos.
(21) This shews how inadvisable and dangerous such action might be; hence once a septennate would have been enough.
(22) Ex. III, 15.
(23) Defectively without a waw, hence to be read le'allem, To be kept secret.
(24) Ibid. This implies that he gave him two names. One, His real Name, and the other, by which He was to be generally designated.
(25) The Tetragrammaton is yod he waw he; but it is read adonai _ alef dateth nun yod.
(26) V. n. 6 [This would suggest that they also hesitated to write or pronounce this latter name in full, but wrote or pronounced it merely Ad or Alef dateth. Lauterbach. J.Z. Proceedings of the Americas Academy for Jewish Research 1930-1931. p. 43.]
(27) And it was not fit that they should pronounce this.
(28) [To utter it at the priestly benediction, v. Sot. 38a.]
(29) I.e., pronounced it indistinctly.
(30) [I.e., while they were chanting the Tetragrammaton at the benediction.]
(31) Where the priests stood when they blessed the people.
(32) Maim. in 'Moreh' I, 62, conjectures that these multiliteral Names, of which no trace is found, were perhaps composed of several other divine names; also that not only the names were communicated, but their real meanings too. [On these names v. further Blau L. Das altjudische Zauberwesen pp. 137ff and Bacher. JE XI 264.]
(33) [צנוע denotes simply a modest man careful to carry out his religious obligations, a pious man, and not a member of a particular sect — an Essene. v. Buchler Types, pp. 59ff.]
(34) Lit., 'stands in the middle of his days'.
(35) Lit., 'he does not get angry, does not get drunk'.
(36) Not to use it lightly.
(37) Lit., 'his fear lies upon mankind.'
(38) In general the name of God was regarded more than a mere designation, but represented His nature or character and His relation to His people. It thus came to partake of His essence, His glory and power. This probably explains the mystic awe with which its pronunciation was surrounded, on the one hand, and the powers attributed to the right manipulation thereof on the other. Cf. Sanh. 91a: 'He who pronounces the Divine Name according to its letters loses his portion in the world to come; also 65b and 67b on the human powers of creation by means of the Sefer Yezirah, which Rashi a.l. explains was effected by combinations of the Divine Name. [On this subject v. Marmorstein The Old Rabbinic Doctrine of God, I, p. 17.]

(39) I.e., a Babylonian Jew is presumed to be of pure descent and fit to marry into any Jewish family, unless we definitely know the contrary.

(40) As stated on 76a; the four preceding generations must be examined.

(41) I.e., there is no presumption at all about him.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 71b

here it is to permit him to take a wife; there it is to take the wife from him.[1]

R. Joseph said: He whose speech is Babylonian is permitted to take a wife [of superior birth]. But nowadays that there are dissemblers, we fear [them].[2]

Ze'iri was evading R. Johanan, who was urging him, 'Marry my daughter.'[3] One day they were travelling on a road, when they came to a pool of water. Thereupon he placed R. Johanan on his shoulder and carried him across. Said he to him: 'Our learning is fit but our daughters are not? [On] what is your view [based]? Shall we say, because we learned, TEN GENEALOGICAL CLASSES WENT UP FROM BABYLON: PRIESTS, LEVITES [etc.]? Did then all the priests, Levites and Israelites go up? just as some of these were left, so were some of those [the unfit enumerated in the Mishnah] left [in Babylon].'[4] He [however] overlooked what R. Eleazar said: Ezra did not go up from Babylon until he made it like pure fine flour: then he went up.[5]

'Ulla visited Rab Judah in Pumbeditha. Seeing that R. Isaac, the son of Rab Judah, was grown up, yet unmarried,[6] he asked him, 'Why have you not taken a wife for your son?' 'Do I then know whence to take one?' he replied.[7] 'Do we know whence we are descended?' he retorted. 'Perhaps from those of whom it is written: They ravished the women in Zion, the maidens in the cities of Judah.[8] And should you answer: If a heathen or slave has intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite, the issue is fit, — then perhaps [we are descended] from those of whom it is written, that lie upon beds of ivory, and stretch themselves [seruhim] upon their couches.[9] Now, R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: This refers to people who pass water before their beds naked.[10] But R. Abbahu derided this: If so, see what is written: Therefore shall they now go captive the first that go captive[11] — because they pass water before their beds naked they shall go captive with the first that go captive! But, said R. Abbahu, this refers to people who eat and drink together, join their couches, exchange their wives and make their couches foul [masrihim] with semen that is not theirs.'[12] 'Then what shall I do?' he 'asked. 'Go after the peaceful,'[13] he replied.[14] As the Palestinians[15] make a test: When two quarrel, they see which becomes silent first and say: This one is of superior birth.

Rab said: Silence [peaceableness] in Babylon, is [the mark of][16] pure birth. But that is not so, for Rab visited the family of Shihla[17] and examined them; surely that means as to their genealogy? — No, by silence. He said thus to them:[18] Examine [them], whether they are silent [peaceable] or not. Rab Judah said in Rab's name: If you see two people continually quarreling, there is a blemish of unfitness in one of them, and they are [providentially] not allowed to cleave to each other.[19]

R. Papa the elder said on Rab's authority: Babylon is healthy; Mesene[20] is dead; Media is sick, and Elam is dying.[21] And what is the difference between sick and dying? — Most sick are [destined] for life; most dying are for death.[22]

How far does Babylon extend?[23] — Rab said: As far as the river 'Azak;[24] Samuel said: as far as the river Wani.[25] How far on the upper [reaches of] Tigris? Rab said: as far as Bagda[26] and Awana; Samuel said: as far as Moxoene.[27] Is then Moxoene itself not included? Surely R. Hiyya b. Abba said in Samuel's name: Moxoene is as the land of Exile[28] in respect to genealogy? — But as far as and including Moxoene. How far on the lower reaches of the Tigris? — Said R. Samuel: As far as lower Apamea.[29] There were two Apameas, an upper and a lower; one was fit [in respect to marriage] and the other unfit, and one parasang lies between them; and they [their inhabitants] were particular with each other, and did not even lend fire to each other.[30] And the sign whereby [you may recognise] the unfit is the one that speaks [the] Mesene [dialect].

How far [does it extend] on the upper reaches of the Euphrates? — Rab said: To Fort Tulbakene.[31] Samuel said: To the bridge of Be-pherat;[31] R. Johanan said: As far as the ford of Gizama.[32] Abaye — others state, R. Joseph — cursed Rab's [definition].[33] Only Rab's, but not Samuel's![34] — But he cursed Rab's, and all the more so Samuel's. Alternatively, he cursed [only] Rab's, after all, and not Samuel's, and the bridge of Be-Pherat [originally] lay below;

---

(1) I.e., to order him to divorce her. When one wishes to marry a woman of proved pure descent, he must prove his own fitness, if he lacks the established presumption. On the other hand, if he is married to such, he is not compelled to divorce her unless his own unfitness is established.

(2) This is not accepted as sufficient proof.

(3) Ze'iri being a Babylonian, whilst R. Johanan was only a Palestinian, he did not wish to marry his daughter, since the former are of purer birth.

(4) So that both are equal.

(5) V. p. 350, n. 2.

(6) On the importance of not leaving marriage too late cf. supra, 29b, 30a.

(7) I do not know who is of pure descent.

(8) Lam. V, 11.

(9) Amos VI, 4.

(10) Are bereft of the sense of modesty.

(11) Ibid. 7.

(12) The children of such are mamzerim.

(13) Lit., ‘silence’.

(14) Take someone from a peaceful family — those who are quarrelsome are probably unfit!

(15) Lit., ‘children of the West.’

(16) Lit., ‘that is’.

(17) The reading is doubtful; cur. odd.: vinegar dealers.

(18) To those who were with him.

(19) I.e., join in marriage.

(20) The island formed by the Euphrates, the Tigris and the Royal Canal.

(21) The Jews of Babylon are of pure descent; in Mesene they are all unfit (mamzerim); in the other two they are mixed.

(22) The majority of Media are pure; the majority of Elam are mamzerim.

(23) In respect of family purity.

(24) On the east of the Tigris.

(25) [Nahrewan, the grand canal east of the Tigris that flows parallel to it. Obermeyer. op. cit. p. 79. Both are given as eastern boundaries of Babylon.]

(26) [‘Aruch reads: Okbara and Awana. Both towns now on the western bank of the Tigris, but originally on its eastern bank, constituted the northern boundary of Babylon; loc. cit. p. 82.]

(27) A town west of the upper Tigris sources.

(28) Sc. Babylon. Rashi observes that Pumbeditha is so called in R.H. 23b.

(29) On the right bank of the Tigris; v. Obermeyer p. 86.

(30) To avoid intimacy which might lead to marriage.

(31) V. Obermeyer pp. 94-96; S. Funk, Die Juden in Bob. I, p. 13, n. 2, and infra, n. 8.

(32) Obermeyer p. 97 on the basis of other readings identifies this with Gidama, mentioned in Suk. 18a. Since R. Johanan's definition is not controverted, this must have been higher up than the other two, v. next note.

(33) Obermeyer p. 94 assumes that the Fort Tulbakene was lower than Pumbeditha, where both Abaye and R. Joseph were heads of the academy. Hence, this excluded Pumbeditha, which aroused their vehement opposition.

(34) Samuel's definition shut out even more, the bridge of Be-Pherat (for which v. Obermeyer p. 97) lying lower than Fort Tulbakene.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 72a

but now the Persians have set it higher.[1]

Abaye said to R. Joseph: How far does it extend on this [sc. the west] side of the Euphrates? Said he to him: What is your motive [in asking]: on account of Biram?[2] The most distinguished [families] of Pumbeditha took [wives] from Biram!

R. Papa said: Just as they differ over family purity, so they differ over divorce.[3] But R. Joseph said: They differ only in respect to genealogy, but as for divorce, all agree that it is as far as the second willow clump beyond the bridge.[4]

Rami b. Abba said: Habil Yamma[5] is the glory[6] of Babylon.[7] Shunya[8] and Gubya[9] are the glory of Habil Yamma. Rabina said: Zizura[10] too. It was taught likewise: Hanan b. Pinhas said: Habil Yamma is the glory of Babylon: Shunya and Gubya and Zizura are the glory of Habil Yamma. Said R. Papa: But nowadays Cutheans[11] have become mixed up with them. That [however] is not so: one [a Cuthean] sought a wife from them, but they did not give him.[12] What is Habil Yamma? — Said R. Papa: The Euphrates land near Borsif.[13]

A certain man said: 'I come from Shot-Mishot.'[14] R. Isaac Nappaha[15] stood up on his feet and declared: Shot-Mishot lies between the rivers.[16] And what if it is situated between the rivers? — Said Abaye in the name of R. Hama b. 'Ukba in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina: Between the rivers is as the Exile [sc. Babylon] in respect of genealogy. And where is that situated? — Said R. Johanan: From Ihi de Kira and upwards. But R. Johanan said: [The upper limit of Babylon is] as far as the ford of Gidama?[17] — Said Abaye: A strip issues [beyond that limit].[18]

R. Ika b. Abin said in the name of R. Hananel in Rab's name: Halwan and Nahawand are as the Exile in respect to genealogy.[19] Said Abaye to them [his disciples]: Disregard him: a yebamah has fallen to him there.[20] Is it then my [dictum]? he replied; it is R. Hananel's! So they went and enquired of R. Hananel, who said to them: Thus did Rab say: Halwan and Nahawand are as the Exile in respect to genealogy. Now, he differs from R. Abba b. Kahana, who said: What is meant by, [and the king of Assyria carried Israel away into Assyria,] and put them in Halah, and in Habor, on the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes?[21] Halah is Hulwan; Habor is Adiabene;[22] the river of Gozan is Ginzak;[23] the cities of the Medes are Hamadan[24] and its environs; others state, Nahawand and its environs. What are its environs? — Said Samuel: Karag, Moschi,[25] Hidki and Rumki. Said R. Johanan: And all these are unfit.[26] Now, it was assumed that Moschi is identical with Moxoene [so the difficulty arises]: Surely R. Hiyya b. Abin said in Samuel's name, Moxoene is as the Exile in respect to genealogy? — Hence Moschi is distinct from Moxoene.

And three ribs were in his mouth between his teeth:[27] Said R. Johanan: This refers to Hulwan, Adiabene and Nesibin,[28] which it [Persia] sometimes swallowed and sometimes spat out.[29]

And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear:[30] R. Joseph recited: This refers to the Persians, who eat and drink like a bear, are fleshy like a bear, overgrown with hair like a bear, and have no rest like a bear. When R. Ammi saw a Persian riding he would say: 'There is a wandering bear!'

Rabbi said to Levi:[31] 'Shew me the persians.' — 'They are like the armies of the House of David,' he replied. 'Shew me the Guebers.'[32] — 'They are like the destroying angels.' 'Shew me the Ishmaelites.' — 'They are like the demons of the privy.' 'Shew me the scholars of Babylon.' — 'They are like the Ministering Angels.'

When Rabbi was dying he said: 'There is [a town] Humania[33] in Babylon, which consists entirely of Ammonites; there is Misgaria[34] in Babylon, consisting entirely of mamzerim; there is Birka[35] in Babylon, which contains two brothers who interchange their wives; there is a Birtha di Satya[36] in Babylon: to-day they have turned away from the Almighty: a fishpond overflowed on the Sabbath, and they went and caught the fish on the Sabbath, whereat R. Ahi son of R. Josiah declared the ban against them, and they renounced Judaism.[37] There is a Fort Agama[38] in Babylon wherein dwells Adda b. Ahabah:

---

(1) Above Fort Tulbakene; hence Abaye and R. Joseph were not opposed to this.

(2) Which lay on the west of the Euphrates, some miles N.W. of Pumbeditha.

(3) If one brings a divorce from any country except Palestine and Babylon, he must declare that it was written and attested in his presence. R. Papa maintains that the controversies on the boundaries of Babylon apply to this too.

(4) Or, to the second boat of the (floating) bridge (Jast.).

(5) Lit., 'district of the sea: the entire region of Babylon which is traversed by river and canals. Obermeyer, pp. 118f.

(6) Lit., 'the adornment in purple.'

(7) Rashi: its inhabitants are of the purest birth in Babylon. It may also mean in general that it is the finest and most fertile district, as it actually was.

(8) A canal district in the vicinity of Pumbeditha; Obermeyer, pp. 122ff.

(9) A region behind Babylonia as one travels eastwards from the Tigris; Obermeyer p. 127.

(10) A district not far from the Tigris, the waters of whose canal debouched into the Tigris between Bagdad and Madain, ibid p. 125.

(11) V. p. 207, n. 9. [According to Obermeyer (p. 120) the reference is to the Christians that emigrated during the third and fourth centuries from Syria and Mesopotamia into Babylon.]

(12) Hence the rumour arose. Others explain: he (R. Papa) sought a wife etc., and in his spleen declared them impure! This is not very plausible (Rashi).

(13) The region traversed by the right arm of the Euphrates, which flows before Borsif (Babel). Ibid. p. 315. V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 748, n. 7.

(14) He wished to marry a Babylonian woman; Shot-Mishot, or Samosata, is one of the fords of the Euphrates.

(15) Or, the smith.

(16) Jast. observes: between the Euphrates and the Tigris. Obermeyer. pp. 100-1, thinks this altogether unlikely. 'Between the rivers' is the Talmudic idiom for a region of island formation, and here applies to the Euphrates region from Hit (Ihi de Kira) to Anah.

(17) Which is below Ihi de Kira.

(18) Which includes Shot-Mishot.

(19) Though these are in Media, Halwan lay on the great historic route from Babylon to Media, some forty-one parasangs from Bagdad. Nahawand was situated in the middle of Media, about fourteen parasangs from Hamadan in a southerly direction. Its Jewish community may have consisted then of Babylonian colonists, and hence the genealogical purity here ascribed to it. Obermeyer, pp. 106-8.

(20) And he asserts their pure birth because he wishes to marry her.

(21) II Kings XVIII, 11.

(22) A district of Assyria between the rivers Lycus and Caprus (fast.); v. also Obermeyer, p. 10.

(23) Rawlinson identifies this with Shiz, near the present-day town of Maragha, south-east of Urmiasee; ibid.

(24) Ektabana, capital of Media.

(25) So Obermeyer, p. 11. who treats this as two names. Jast. translates: the Fort of Moschi.

(26) I.e., of impure descent. Thus this identification disagrees with Rab.

(27) Dan. VII, 5.

(28) Or Nesibis, as it was generally called. A town in Mesopotamia, not included in the 'Exile' proper, which possessed an important Jewish community; ibid. p. 129.

(29) I.e., sometimes it ruled over them, sometimes not; v. ibid.

(30) Ibid.
(31) [Levi b. Sisi visited Babylonia, his original home, on his return to Palestine. Rabbi his teacher asked him for some information about the people of that country.]
(32) [The fanatical sect of Persian fireworshippers, v. Git. (Sonc. ed.) p. 63. n. 2.]
(33) On the right bank of the Tigris, below Shekanzib; Obermeyer, p. 192.
(34) Unidentified.
(35) Identified with Baratha by the river al-Melik: v. ibid. p. 73, n. 2.
(36) V. ibid. where it is identified with Baratha, which belongs to Greater Bagdad.
(37) [So Jast. Aliter: 'they were destroyed'.]
(38) Probably in the vicinity of Pumbeditha; ibid. p. 237, n. 3.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 72b

to-day he sits in Abraham's lap;[1] to-day Rab Judah was born in Babylon.' (For a Master said: When R. Akiba died, Rabbi was born; when Rabbi died, Rab Judah was born; when Rab Judah died, Raba was born; when[2] Raba died, R. Ashi was born.[3] This teaches that a righteous man does not depart from the world until [another] righteous man like himself is created, as it is said, the sun riseth and the sun goeth down:[4] before Eli's sun was extinguished, the sun of Samuel of Ramoth rose, as it is said, and the lamp of God was not yet gone out, and Samuel was laid down [etc.].)[5]

The Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that they that are round about hint should be his adversaries.[6] Said Rab Judah: E.g., Humania [in its relation] to Pum-Nehara.[7]

And it came to pass, when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died. Then fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said: Ah Lord God![8] Rab and Samuel — one said: It was in his favour;[9] the other, that it was in his disfavour. He who said that it was in his favour [explains it] as follows: For the governor[10] of Mesene was Nebuchadnezzar's son-in-law. He sent [word] to him: 'Of all the captivity which you have brought for yourself, you have sent none to stand before us.' He wanted to send him of the Israelites, [but] Pelatiah son of Benaiah said to him, 'We, who are more worthy [of higher rank], let us stand before thee here; and let our slaves go thither.' Thus the prophet cried, 'That he who did good for Israel should die in middle age!' And he who maintained that it was in his disfavour — for it is written, [Moreover the spirit lifted me up,] and brought me unto the east gate of the Lord's house, which looketh eastward: and behold, at the door of the gate five and twenty men; and I saw in the midst of them Joazaniah the son of Azzur, and Pelatiah the son of Benaiah, princes of the people.[11] And it is said: And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and behold, at the door of the Temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east.[12] Now, from the implication of what is said: 'and their faces toward the east,' do I not know that their backs were toward the west?[13] Why then is it stated: 'with their backs toward the temple of the Lord'? This teaches that they uncovered themselves and committed a nuisance against the Most High. Therefore the prophet said: 'Shall he who did this evil in Israel die [peacefully] on his bed!'[14]

It may be proved that it was Samuel who interpreted it to his discredit. For R. Hiyya b. Abin said in Samuel's name: Moxoene is as the Exile in respect to genealogy. As for Mesene, no fear was entertained for it, either on account of slavery or bastardy,[15] but that the priests who dwelt there were not scrupulous about divorced women![16] — After all, I may tell you that it was Samuel who explained it in his favour; yet Samuel is consistent with his view: for he said: If one renounces ownership of his slave, he goes out free and does not require a deed of manumission, for it is said, but every man's slave that is bought for money:[17] a man's slave, but not a woman's slave?[18] Hence [it means this]: a slave whose master has authority over him is called a slave; a slave whose master has no authority over him is not called a slave.[19]

Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: This[20] is R. Meir's view. But the Sages maintain: All countries have the legal status of fitness. Amemar permitted R. Huna b. Nathan to take a wife from Hozae.[21] Said R. Ashi to him: [On] what [do you base] your ruling? Because Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: This is R. Meir's view. But the Sages maintain: All countries have the legal status of fitness? But the School of R. Kahana did not learn thus,[22] and the School of R. Papa did not learn thus, and the School of R. Zebid did not learn thus? Nevertheless he did not accept this [ruling] from him, because he had heard it [sc. his own view] from R. Zebid of Nehardea.

Our Rabbis taught: Mamzerim and Nethinim will become pure in the future: this is R. Jose's view. R. Meir said: They will not become pure. Said R. Jose to him: But was it not already stated: And I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean?[23] R. Meir replied. When it is added, from all your filthiness and from all your idols,[23] [it implies] but not from bastardy. Said R. Jose to him: When it is [further] said, will I cleanse you,[23] you must say: From bastardy too.

As for R. Meir, it is well: hence it is written, and the bastard shall dwell in Ashdod.[24] But according to R. Jose, why 'and the bastard shall dwell in Ashdod'? — As R. Joseph translated it: The house of Israel shall dwell in security in their land, where [formerly] they were as strangers.[25]

Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: The halachah agrees with R. Jose. R. Joseph said: Had not Rab Judah ruled in Samuel's name that the halachah is as R. Jose, Elijah would have come and sent entire gangs away from us.[26] Our Rabbis taught: A proselyte may marry a mamzereth: this is R. Jose's view. R. Judah ruled: A proselyte may not marry a mamzereth. A proselyte, a freed slave, and a halal are permitted to [marry] a priest's daughter. What is R. Jose's reason? — 'Assembly' [kahal] is written five times:[27]

---

(1) Some say that this is a euphemism for death, in which case R. Adda b. Ahabah, who is frequently mentioned in the Talmud, is not meant, for he lived long after Rabbi's death. Others explain it as referring to circumcision; then it does refer to him.

(2) Maim. reads: before.

(3) In all cases, on the same day.

(4) Ecc. I, 5.

(5) I Sam. III, 3. Metaphorically. Eli's sun was not yet extinguished. etc.,

(6) Lam. I, 17.

(7) As stated above, Humania was entirely a non-Jewish town, while Pum-Nehara had an all-Jewish population. The former was inimical to the latter.

(8) Ezek. XI, 13.

(9) That the prophet cried out.

(10) [Istandar, A high Persian military and administrative rank, v. Funk, Schwarz Festschrift p. 433.]

(11) Ezek. XI, 1.

(12) Ibid. VIII, 16.

(13) The hekal, the Temple proper, was to the west of the Temple court, where they stood.

(14) The mention of twenty-five in both places shews that the same group is referred to.

(15) It was not feared that slaves or mamzerim had intermarried with the Jews there. — This shews that Samuel did not agree that the slaves of the Israelites were sent thither.

(16) Disregarding the injunction of Lev. XXI, 7.

(17) Ex. XII, 44.

(18) Surely not!

(19) Hence, when their masters renounced ownership and sent them to Mesene, they ipso facto ceased to be slaves.

(20) Sc. the Mishnah on 69a, which implies that only Babylon enjoys the legal status of unquestioned family purity, as explained by R. Eleazar in the Gemara.

(21) [Khuzistan, province S. of Babylon which lay outside the boundaries of Babylon as defined by the Amoraim supra.]

(22) On the contrary, they taught in Samuel's name that all countries are presumed to be unfit; supra 71b.

(23) Ezek. XXXVI. 25.

(24) Zech. IX, 6. I.e., apart from other Jews, because they will remain impure and forbidden to marry.

(25) So he translates mamzer. Joshua counted Ashdod as part of the land of Israel (Josh. XIII, 1-3); but it was not conquered, and so they were as strangers there. Now they should possess it. [V. Targum Pseudo-Jonathan on the Prophets, a.l.; cf. also Geiger, Urschrift p. 52ff who proves from here that, ממזר is a compound word from מעם זר 'a strange people', and had originally an ethnical connotation, which was subsequently transferred to denote offspring from forbidden marriages.]

(26) Of mamzerim or their descendants. The lit., translation is: necks and necks (tied together) by chains. According to another reading: necks (tied) by chains and chains.

(27) V. Deut. XXIII, 3f and 9. 'Assembly' in v. 2 is not counted, because it does not deal with unfitness on account of birth.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 73a

one refers to priests, one to Levites, one to Israelites; one to permit a mamzer [to intermarry] with a shethuki;[1] and one to permit a shethuki to [intermarry] with an Israelite.[2] As for the assembly of proselytes it is not designated 'assembly'.[3] But R. Judah argues: Priests and Levites are deduced from one 'assembly';[4] hence [one] is left in respect of an assembly of proselytes.[5] Alternatively, it indeed is so that they [sc. Priests and Levites] are two 'assemblies'; [but that] a mamzer [may intermarry] with a shethuki, and a shethuki with an Israelite, is deduced from one 'assembly': A mamzer shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord:[6] only a certain mamzer may not enter, but a doubtful mamzer may enter; [and again,] only into a certain assembly he may not enter, but he may enter into a doubtful assembly.[7] Another alternative: These too are two 'assemblies';[8] but R. Judah's opinion is [derived] from this: For the assembly, there shall be one statute for you, and for the ger [proselyte] that sojourneth with you.[9] But in R. Jose's view, 'one statute' breaks across the subject.[10]

'A proselyte, a freed slave and a halal are permitted to [marry] a priest's daughter.' This supports Rab. For Rab Judah said in Rab's name: Fit women [sc. daughters of priests] were not admonished against being married to the unfit.[11]

R. Zera lectured in Mahuza: A proselyte may marry a mamzereth. Thereupon everyone pelted him with stones.[12] Said Raba: Is there anyone who lectures thus in a place where proselytes abound! [Now] Raba lectured in Mahuza: A proselyte may marry a priest's daughter, [whereupon] they loaded him with silks. Then he lectured to them again: A proselyte is permitted [to intermarry] with a mamzereth. Said they to him: You have destroyed your first [teaching]. He replied: I have done what is best for you: if one [a proselyte] wishes, he can marry here [sc. a mamzereth]; if he wishes, he can marry there [sc. a priest's daughter]. Now, the law is: A proselyte is permitted to a priest's daughter and he is permitted to a mamzereth. He is permitted to a priest's daughter: fit women were not admonished against being married to the unfit.[13] And he is permitted to a mamzereth, in accordance with R. Jose.

NOW, THESE ARE THEY: SHETHUKI: HE WHO KNOWS [etc.] Raba said: By Biblical law a shethukiis considered fit. What is the reason? The majority are fit for her [sc. the mother],[14] while only a minority are unfit for her.[15] Now, if they went to her, then he who separates himself [from a mass] separates himself from out of the majority. What will you say: that she went to them? Then it is kabua',[16] and every case of kabua' is as half and half, whilst the Torah said: 'A mamzer shall not enter': only a certain mamzer may not enter, but a doubtful mamzer may enter; only into a certain assembly may he not enter, but he may enter into a doubtful assembly.[17] Then what is the reason that they [the Rabbis] ruled that a shethuki is unfit? — For fear lest he marry his paternal sister. If so, a shethuki should not marry a shethukith,[18] for fear lest he marry his paternal sister? — Do all such go [eternally] a-whoring?[19] Then let him not marry the daughter of a shethukith, lest he marry his paternal sister? But [you must answer that] it is rare: then here too,[20] it is rare![21] — But [the reason is:] a higher standard was set up in respect to genealogy.

Raba also said: By Biblical law, a foundling is fit. What is the reason? A married woman ascribes [an illegitimate child] to her husband.[22] What [fear] is there?[23] [Because of] a minority of arusoth[24] and a minority whose husbands have gone overseas?[25] But since there are unmarried [women], and also [children thrown away] on account of poverty,[26] it is half and half, and the Torah said: 'A mamzer shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord': only a certain mamzer may not enter, but a doubtful mamzer may; only into a certain assembly may he not enter, but he may enter into a doubtful one. Why then did they [the Rabbis] rule that a foundling is unfit? Lest he marry his paternal sister.[27] If so, one foundling should not marry another, lest he marry his sister by his father or and his mother? — Do all these go throwing [their children away]![28] Let him not marry the daughter of a foundling, lest he marry his sister? But [you must answer that] it is rare: then here too[29] it is rare![30] — But [the reason is:] a higher standard was set up in respect to genealogy.

Rabbah son of R. Huna said: If he [the foundling] is found circumcised,

---

(1) Though the former is certainly unfit, while the latter is doubtful.

(2) Though the former is of doubtful fitness while the latter is certainly fit. The last two are deduced by translating as in the text infra.

(3) Since there is no verse left to teach their inclusion, and hence the relevant prohibitions do not apply to them.

(4) Since both are of the tribe of Levi.

(5) That these too are included.

(6) Ibid. 3.

(7) V. n. 3.

(8) As R. Jose says: 'assembly' has to be stated twice for the marriage of a mamzer with a shethuki, and of a shethuki with an Israelite.

(9) Num. XV, 15. Now, 'for the assembly' is superfluous: hence it teaches that ger (proselyte) is included in the term wherever it is found.

(10) Shewing that 'ger' is not included in 'assembly'.

(11) I.e., to those who may not marry into the priesthood. Thus, whereas a priest may not marry the daughter of a halal, freedman or proselyte, the daughter of a priest may marry one of these. — This does not refer to the ordinary unfit, such as mamzerim or Nethinim.

(12) Mahuza contained many proselytes, whom this offended.

(13) V. n. 1.

(14) I.e., who might be the child's father.

(15) Since we know that the mother was unmarried, the only men whose issue is mamzer are mamzerim and consanguineous relations; for a heathen or slave does not produce mamzer. Thus only a minority are unfit in this respect.

(16) V. Glos.

(17) The following example illustrates the principles of 'separation' and kabua' (fixed). If there are ten butcher shops in a street, nine of which supply kasher meat (ritually fit), and one supplies trefa meat (not fit), and a piece of meat is found in that street, it is assumed to be kosher, following the majority. If, however, meat is bought in one of the shops, but it is not known of which, it is accounted as though there were an equal number of each, and on the usual principle in such cases, unfit. For in the first instance the meat was 'separated' from its appointed place, sc. the shop, whereas in the second it remained fixed (kabua') until purchased, when the doubt arose. Here too, all men are jointly looked upon as a mass stationed in one place. If one goes to the mother of this child, he 'separated himself from the majority, hence was probably eligible. But even if she goes to him, so that the minority count as much as the majority, it is still a matter of equal doubt, which in the case of mamzer is not forbidden.

(18) Fem. of shethuki.

(19) Are we to assume that every child of unknown parentage has the same father-surely not!

(20) With respect to a shethuki marrying an ordinary person.

(21) That he should chance upon his paternal sister, and therefore the possibility is disregarded. Hence the question remains, why is a shethuki forbidden?

(22) And would not cast him away.
(23) That the foundling may be mamzer?
(24) Pl. of arusah.
(25) And the foundling may be theirs.
(26) Lit., 'hunger,' — the child may be legitimately born. — The child of an unmarried woman is not mamzer.
(27) But there is no fear of his maternal sister, for since we know his intended mother-in-law as a virtuous woman, we do not suspect her of adultery and that this may be her son (Rashi). Of course, the same might be urged of his intended father-in-law, but that it is easier for a man to conceal an illegitimate liaison than for a woman (Maharsha).
(28) Are we to assume all foundlings the children of the same mother or father!
(29) With respect to a foundling marrying an ordinary person.
(30) V. p. 374, n. 4.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 73b

he is not [forbidden] on account of [the law of] a foundling.[1] If his limbs are set, he is not [forbidden] as a foundling. If he has been massaged with oil, fully powdered, has beads hung on him, wears a tablet [with an inscription] or an amulet,[2] he is not considered a foundling. If he is suspended on a palm tree, if a wild beast can reach him, he is [forbidden] as a foundling;[3] if not, he is not considered a foundling. [If exposed on] a sorb bush: near a town, he is considered a foundling;[4] if not, he is not a foundling. [If found in] a synagogue near a town where many congregate, it is not a foundling; otherwise, it is.[5]

Amemar said: [If found in] a pit of date stones,[6] he is considered a foundling; in the swift current of the river, he is not a foundling;[7] in shallow water,[8] he is a foundling: in the side passages off public thoroughfares, he is not a foundling; in a public thoroughfare, he is a foundling.[9] Said Raba: But in famine years he is not considered a foundling. This [dictum] of Raba, to what [does it refer]? Shall we say, to a public thoroughfare? because it is in famine years one [the mother] is to kill him! Again, if it refers to the side passages off a public thoroughfare, why particularly famine years? [It is so] even without famine years! — But Raba's [dictum] was stated in reference to what Rab Judah said in the name of R. Abba in the name of R. Judah b. Zabdi in Rab's name: As long as he [the exposed child] is in the street, his father and mother are believed concerning him;[10] but if he has been gathered in from the street, they are not believed concerning him. What is the reason? — Said Raba: Because he has already acquired the name of a foundling. Then Raba also said: But in famine years, even if he has been gathered in from the street: his father and mother are believed concerning him.

R. Hisda said: Three are believed there and then,[11] and these are they: a foundling, a midwife, and she who frees her companions [from the suspicion of uncleanness]. A foundling, as stated.[12] A midwife, as was taught: A midwife is believed when she states: 'This one issued first and this one issued second.'[13] When is that? [Only] if she did not go out [from the chamber of confinement] and return; but if she went out and then returned, she is not believed. R. Eliezer said: If she was known to have been at her post, she is believed; if not, she is not believed. Wherein do they differ? — They differ where she turned her face away.[14]

What is the reference to her who frees her companions? — For we learnt: If three women were sleeping in one bed, and blood was found under one of them, they are all unclean.[15] If one examined herself and was found to be unclean, she is unclean, while the others are clean. Said R. Hisda: [That means] that she examined herself forthwith.[16]

Our Rabbis taught: A midwife is believed when she affirms, 'This one is a priest, this one is a Levite, this one a Nathin, this one a mamzer.'[17] When is that? Only if no protest is raised: but if a protest is raised, she is not believed. What kind of a protest? Shall we say, a protest by one person? Surely R. Johanan said: A protest is invalid if made by less than two? Hence it means a protest by two. Alternatively, I may say [that] after all that it was a protest by one. Yet when did R. Johanan say: A protest is invalid if made by less than two? Only where we have a presumption of fitness;[18] but if there is no presumption of fitness,[19] even one is believed.

A vendor[20] is believed when he says: 'To this one I sold [it] and to this one I did not sell.' When is that? Only if his ware is in his hand; but if his ware is no longer in his hand, he is not believed.

---

(1) If he were not fit, his parents would not trouble to circumcise him.

(2) The last three are for identification.

(3) Were he legitimate, his parents would have taken greater care of him.

(4) Sorb bushes near a town were held to be haunted by demons.

(5) Synagogues far from town and when infrequented were likewise thought to be haunted.

(6) Where these are deposited as fodder.

(7) Parents would not trouble to place him in the middle of the river, where ships abound, if he were not fit.

(8) Formed by melting snow which affords no passage to ships.

(9) For it is dangerous to leave a child there.

(10) In their claim that he is their child.

(11) When the doubt first arises, but not afterwards.

(12) The parents' claim is admitted only while he is in the street, but not after.

(13) When twins are born.

(14) According to the first Tanna she is believed, but not in R. Eliezer's opinion, for by turning her back on the mother she left her post.

(15) In sleep they do not keep to the same spot all the time, and any one might have discharged the blood.

(16) שיעור וסת , v. Nid. 14b.

(17) If several women of different genealogical status are confined together.

(18) Which the protest seems to overthrow.

(19) As here, when the identity of the babes is in question.

(20) Lit., 'the owner of the ware'.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 74a

Then let us see whose money he holds? — This arises only when he holds [money] from both, and states: 'one [paid me] with my consent, and the other against my will,' and it is not known[1] which was with his consent and which against his will.

A judge is believed when he says: 'I have ruled in favour of this one; I have ruled against that one.' When is that? Only if the litigants are [yet] standing before him; but if they are no longer standing before him, he is not believed. Then let us see who holds the judgment writ in favour?[2] — This arises only if their judgment writ was torn. Then let us rejudge them? — [It is a case of] the judges' discretion.[3]

R. Nahman said: Three are believed with respect to a first-born. These are they: The midwife, the father and the mother. The midwife, [only] immediately. The mother, the first seven days;[4] the father, for all time. As it was taught: He shall acknowledge [the firstborn]:[5] [i.e.,] he shall acknowledge him before others. Hence R. Judah said: A man is believed when he says: 'This son is my first — born. And just as he is believed when he says: 'This son is my firstborn,' so is he believed when he says: 'This is the son of a divorced woman', 'this is the son of a haluzah'.[6] But the Sages say: He is not believed.[7]

ABBA SAUL USED TO CALL THE SHETHUKI 'BEDUKI'. What is [implied by] BEDUKI?[8]

Shall we say that we examine his mother, and if she maintains, 'I cohabited with a fit person,' she is believed? Then with whom [does this agree]? with R. Gamaliel! But we learnt it once. For we learnt: If she [an unmarried woman] is pregnant and is asked: 'What is the nature of this child?' and she replies, 'He is from So-and-so, who is a priest': R. Gamaliel and R. Eliezer said: She is believed; R. Joshua said: We do not live by her words.[9] Now, Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: The halachah agrees with R. Gamaliel![10] — One is to declare her [the mother] fit; the other is to declare her daughter fit.[11] Now, that is well on the view that he who declares her [the mother] fit, declares the daughter unfit.[12] But on the view that he who declares her fit declares her daughter fit [too], what does Abba Saul come to teach us? — Abba Saul's [ruling] is more remarkable than R. Gamaliel's. For if from there,[13] I might argue, [It is only] there, where most [men] are fit for her;[14] but here, that most [men] are unfit for her,[15] I might say, [she is] not [believed].[16] Hence it is necessary. Said Raba: The halachah agrees with Abba Saul.

MISHNAH. ALL WHO ARE FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY[17] MAY INTERMARRY WITH EACH OTHER; R. JUDAH FORBIDS IT. R. ELEAZAR SAID: CERTAIN [UNFITS] ARE PERMITTED [TO INTERMARRY] WITH CERTAIN [UNFITS].[18] CERTAIN [UNFITS] WITH DOUBTFUL [UNFITS], DOUBTFUL WITH CERTAIN, OR DOUBTFUL WITH DOUBTFUL, ARE FORBIDDEN. NOW, THESE ARE THE DOUBTFUL: SHETHUKI, FOUNDLINGS AND CUTHEANS.[19]

GEMARA. What is meant by 'ALL WHO ARE FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY'? Shall we say: Mamzerim and Nethinim, Shethuki and Foundlings? Surely that is taught in the first clause:[20] Mamzerim and Nethinim, Shethuki and Foundlings, are permitted to intermarry! Again, [when it states] 'R. JUDAH FORBIDS IT', to what does this refer? Shall we say, to certain with doubtful — but since the last clause states: R. ELEAZAR SAID: CERTAIN [UNFITS] ARE PERMITTED [TO INTERMARRY] WITH CERTAIN [UNFITS]; DOUBTFUL WITH CERTAIN, OR DOUBTFUL WITH DOUBTFUL, ARE FORBIDDEN, this proves that R. Judah does not hold thus. And should you answer: R. JUDAH FORBIDS IT refers to [the marriage of] a proselyte and a mamzereth, is it then taught, a proselyte with a mamzereth: ALL ARE FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY is taught![21] — Said Rab Judah,

---

(1) [Var. lec. 'he does not know', i.e., the seller does not recollect the matter; v. Tosaf.]

(2) The court issued a written verdict to each litigant.

(3) Where the verdict cannot be determined by reference to any law, the judge must use his own discretion, v. Keth. 85b. In such a case we cannot be certain that a re-trial will give the same verdict.

(4) On the eighth day the child is circumcised, and from then the right of recognition rests with the father.

(5) Deut. XXI, 57.

(6) Where the father is a priest, and thus declares the son a halal.

(7) This refers only to the son of a divorced woman etc. (Rashi) [V. however B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 530. n. 8.]

(8) Lit., 'examined.'

(9) I.e., she is disbelieved.

(10) Then why repeat it?

(11) R. Gamaliel refers to the woman herself, who has a presumptive status of fitness. Yet if she bare a daughter, a doubt is entertained, and the daughter may not marry a priest since there is no such presumption in her favour. But Abba Saul rules that the daughter too is fit.

(12) V. Keth. 13b. Hence Abba Saul goes beyond R. Gamaliel.

(13) Sc. the Mishnah of R. Gamaliel.

(14) E.g., if she is unbetrothed.

(15) E.g., if she is an arusah, so that all except the arus are unfit, in that a child by them is mamzer.

(16) When she asserts that the child is by the arus.

(17) I.e., to marry a legitimately born Jew: the language is Biblical, Deut. XXIII, 2-4.

(18) E.g., a mamzer with a Nathin.

(19) V. Glos. In Talmudic times their status fluctuated and the Rabbis seem to have been undecided how to regard them. As this Mishnah shews, they were still regarded as Jews, though falling within the category of 'doubtful' in respect of genealogy. In later times they were declared non-Jews absolutely.

(20) The Mishnah on 69a.

(21) V. supra 72a. And this does not include a proselyte.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 74b

This is its meaning: ALL WHO ARE FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY of priesthood — namely,[1] A female proselyte less than three years and one day, this disagreeing with R. Simeon b. Yohai[2] — MAY INTERMARRY WITH EACH OTHER.[3] Then let us relate it to one aged three years and a day, so agreeing even with R. Simeon b. Yohai? — If so, its refutation is at its side. [For we would then argue thus:] It is only because she is three years and a day; but if less than three years and one day, since she may enter into the assembly of priests, she is forbidden [to intermarry] with the others?[4] But what of [the case of her] who is less then three years and a day, according to R. Simeon b. Yohai, who, though she may enter into the assembly of priests, may yet intermarry with the others![5]

[But] is it a general principle that all who are forbidden to enter into the assembly of priesthood may intermarry with each other? But what of a widow, a divorced woman, a halalah and a zonah,[6] who are forbidden to enter into the assembly of priesthood,[7] and yet may not intermarry with these others? Furthermore, [the principle implies,] but one who is permitted [to marry into the priesthood] is forbidden [to intermarry with these]; but a proselyte is permitted to a priest's daughter, yet also permitted to a mamzereth![8] — But, said R. Nathan b. Hoshaia: This is what [the Mishnah] means: One whose daughter a priest may not marry — and who is that? a proselyte married to a proselyte, this agreeing with R. Eliezer b. Jacob[9] — may intermarry with these others.[10] Now, is it a general principle that one whose daughter a priest may not marry may intermarry with these? But what of [the case of] a halal who marries an Israelite's daughter, though a priest may not marry his daughter, yet he may not intermarry with these others?[10] — That is no difficulty: [our Tanna teaches] according to R. Dosethai b. Judah.[11] But what of a halal who marries a halalah, though a priest may not marry his daughter, yet he may intermarry with these others.[10] Furthermore, [the principle implies,] but one whose [daughter] is permitted [to marry a priest] is forbidden [to intermarry with these]; but what of a proselyte who marries an Israelite's daughter, though a priest may marry his daughter, yet he may intermarry with these others![12] — But, said R. Nahman in Rabbah b. Abbuha's name: Here they differ with respect to a mamzer from a sister and a mamzer from a married woman. The first Tanna holds that even a mamzer from a sister is mamzer; while R. Judah holds: from a married woman it is mamzer, but not from a sister.[13] Then what does he [the Tanna of our Mishnah] inform us? We have [already] learnt it: Who is mamzer? All who are subject to 'he shall not enter':[14] this is R. Akiba's view. Simeon the Temanite said: Whoever involves the penalty of kareth at the hands of Heaven;[15] and the halachah is as his ruling. R. Joshua said: Whoever involves the penalty of death by the Court![16] — But, said Raba, they differ in reference to an Ammonite and a Moabite convert, and this is its meaning: ALL WHO ARE FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY, — and who are they? an Ammonite and a Moabite proselyte — MAY INTERMARRY WITH EACH OTHER. If so, what is meant by R. JUDAH FORBIDS IT?[17] — This is its meaning: Though R. JUDAH FORBIDS a proselyte [to intermarry] with a mamzereth, that is only a proselyte who is eligible to enter into the assembly, but not Ammonite and Moabite proselytes, who are not eligible to enter into the assembly.

Our Rabbis taught: A male aged nine years and a day,[18] [whether he be] an Ammonite, Moabite, Egyptian or Edomite convert, or a Cuthean, Nathin, halal or mamzer, who has intercourse with the daughter of a priest, a Levite or an Israelite, he disqualifies her.[19] R. Jose said: He whose seed [i.e., issue] is unfit [for the priesthood] disqualifies,[20] but he whose issue is not unfit does not disqualify.

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said:

---

(1) Lit., ‘who is it?’

(2) ‘ASSEMBLY,’ according to this, refers to the priesthood, and this Tanna holds that even if a child less than three years and a day becomes a proselyte she is forbidden to a priest, thus disagreeing with R. Simeon b. Yohai, infra 78a.

(3) And R. Judah's statement can thus refer to the marriage of a proselyte and mamzereth.

(4) Sc. mamzer, etc.

(5) For since she may marry a mamzer, it follows that the assembly of proselytes is not designated ‘assembly’ (v. supra a); hence the same holds good if she becomes a proselyte before that age.

(6) Lev. XXI, 7: ‘harlot’. For the definition, v. Yeb. 61b.

(7) A widow may not marry a High Priest; the others are interdicted to all priests.

(8) As in n. 3.

(9) Infra 77a.

(10) Sc. mamzer, etc.

(11) Ibid. and supra 64a.

(12) Sc. mamzer, etc.

(13) The Mishnah does not refer to a proselyte at all, but to the question whether these two illegitimate children may intermarry. A sister is interdicted on pain of kareth, q.v. Glos; adultery with a married woman is punishable by death. The first Tanna treats the issue of both as mamzer, and he states, those who are forbidden to enter the assembly as mamzerim may intermarry. But R. Judah maintains that only the latter, forbidden on pain of death, is mamzer, but not the former; hence they may not intermarry.

(14) I.e., even the issue of a union interdicted by a mere negative precept.

(15) The child of such a union so forbidden.

(16) Thus this dispute is taught elsewhere (Yeb. 49a); why repeat it here?

(17) Surely these may marry a mamzer, since these do not come under the category of ‘assembly’.

(18) Before that he cannot engender.

(19) The first, to eat terumah; the other two, to marry a priest.

(20) The woman with whom be cohabits.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 75a

One whose daughter you [i.e., a priest] may marry, you may marry his widow; but one whose daughter you may not marry, you may not marry his widow.

Wherein do the first Tanna and R. Jose differ? — Said R. Johanan: They differ in respect to a [converted] Egyptian of the second [generation],[1] and both learn it from none but a High Priest with a widow. The first Tanna holds, it is like a High Priest with a widow: just as a High Priest with a widow, since his intercourse is sinful, he disqualifies her;[2] so all whose intercourse is sinful disqualify. While R. Jose holds, It is like a High Priest with a widow: just as a High Priest with a widow, his issue is unfit,[3] [and] he disqualifies [the widow]; so all whose issue is unfit disqualify, thus excluding an Egyptian of the second generation, whose issue is not unfit, for the Writ saith, The children of the third generation that are born unto them shall enter into the assembly of the Lord.[4]

‘R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: He whose daughter you, [i.e., a priest] may marry, you may marry his widow; but he whose daughter you may not marry, you may not marry his widow.’ Wherein do R. Jose and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel differ? — Said ‘Ulla: They differ in respect to an Ammonite and a Moabite proselyte;[5] and both learn it from none but a High Priest with a widow. For R. Jose maintains, It is like a High Priest with a widow: just as a High Priest with a widow, his issue is disqualified, and he disqualifies [the widow]; so all whose issue is disqualified, disqualify. While R. Simeon b. Gamaliel maintains, It is like a High Priest with a widow; just as a High Priest with a widow, all his issue is disqualified,[6] so everyone, all whose, issue, even the females, are disqualified [disqualifies his wife], thus excluding Ammonite and Moabite proselytes, whose females are eligible to enter into the assembly; for a Master said: An Ammonite [. . . shall not enter, etc.], but not an Ammonitess; a Moabite [shall not enter, etc.],[7] but not a Moabitess.

R. Hisda said: All agree that the widow of a member of a suspected family[8] is unfit for the priesthood. [For] who is the most lenient of these Tannaim? R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. Yet he says: He whose daughter you may marry, you may marry his widow; but he whose daughter you may not marry, you may not marry his widow. What does this exclude? It excludes the widow of a suspected family, [teaching] that she is unfit for the priesthood.[9] This conflicts with the following Tannaim: For we learnt: R. Joshua and R. Judah b. Bathyra testified[10] concerning the widow of a member of a suspected family, that she is fit for the priesthood. What is the reason? Because it is a double doubt,[11] and a double doubt [inclines] to a lenient ruling.[12]

CERTAIN [UNFITS] ARE PERMITTED [TO INTERMARRY] WITH CERTAIN [UNFITS]. Rab Judah said in Rab's name: The halachah is as R. Eleazar. When I stated it before Samuel, he observed to me, Hillel taught: Ten genealogical classes went up from Babylon and all are permitted to intermarry;[13] yet you say that the halachah is as R. Eleazar! Now, both Rab and Samuel are self-contradictory. For it was stated: If an arusah becomes pregnant:[14] Rab maintained: The child is mamzer;[15] while Samuel ruled: The child is shethuki and forbidden to a mamzereth! — Reverse it: Rab maintained: The child is shethuki; and Samuel ruled: The child is mamzer. What is the need of two?[16] — It is necessary. For if it were stated in this case [of our Mishnah, I would say, only] here does Rab rule thus, because the majority are eligible to her;[17] but there, that the majority are unfit for her,[18] I might argue that he agrees with Samuel. Again, If it were stated in the latter case, [only] there does Rab rule thus, because he [the issue] may be imputed to the arus; but in this [the former], I would say that he agrees with Samuel. Hence both are necessary.

Alternatively, you need not reverse it after all, and what does Rab mean by mamzer? Not that he may marry a mamzereth, but that he is forbidden to a daughter of Israel.[19] Now, when Samuel rules: The child is shethuki [it means] that he is forbidden to a daughter of Israel? If so, that is Rab's view! — But what is meant by shethuki? That he is 'silenced' from the rights of priesthood.[20] Surely that is obvious? If he is 'silenced' from the rights of an Israelite,[21] need it [be said] from the rights of priesthood! — But what is meant by shethuki? He is 'silenced' from his father's estate.[22] Surely that is obvious; do we then know who his father is? — This arises only where he has taken possession.[23] Alternatively, what is meant by shethuki? Beduki [examined]. That is [to say] we examine his mother, and if she maintains, 'I cohabited with a fit person,' she is believed.[24] With whom does this agree? — With R. Gamaliel? But Samuel has already stated it once! For we learnt: If she [an unmarried woman] was pregnant, and was asked: 'What is the nature of this child?' And she replied: 'He is by So-and-so, who is a priest': R. Gamaliel and R. Eliezer said: She is believed; R. Joshua said: We do not live by her words.[25] And Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: The halachah agrees with R. Gamaliel? — It is necessary. For if [I were to deduce] from there, I would argue, 'There, most men are fit for her;[26] but here, most men are unfit for her,[27] I would say [she is] not [believed]. Hence both are necessary.

It was taught: And thus did R. Eleazar say: A Cuthean may not marry a Cuthean. What is the reason? — Said R. Joseph: He was treated as a proselyte after ten generations. For it was taught: A proselyte, until ten generations, may marry a mamzereth; thereafter he is forbidden [to marry] a mamzereth. Others state: [He is permitted] until the name of heathenism has completely fallen away from him. Said Abaye to him: How compare! There it is a proselyte of ancient [stock] and a recent mamzereth, so it will be said: He is an Israelite marrying a mamzereth,' whereas here they are both alike? — But when R. Dimi came,[28] he said: R. Eleazar agrees with R. Ishmael,

---

(1) V. Deut. XXIII, 8f. The first Tanna holds that he disqualifies her; but R. Jose holds that he does not, since his issue, being of the third generation, is not unfit.

(2) As in n. 1.
(3) I.e, halal.
(4) Ibid.
(5) A male proselyte of these peoples may never intermarry with a Jew; a female, however, is permitted. R. Jose holds that his intercourse renders the woman unfit; R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, that it does not.
(6) Including females.
(7) Deut. XXIII, 4.
(8) עיסה , 'mixed dough'. I.e., a family in which a forbidden element is suspected to have entered; v. 'Ed. (Sonc. ed.) p. 48, n. 2 and Keth. 14a and b.
(9) For her husband might be a halal, in which case his daughter must not marry a priest; hence his widow too is forbidden.
(10) V. 'Ed. VIII, 3.
(11) Lit., 'the doubt of a doubt.' Thus, the unfitness even of her husband is only doubtful; and since her unfitness is through him, we regard it as a still weaker doubt, i.e., a double doubt.
(12) We always give a lenient ruling in such a case.
(13) Rashi: 'all' means the forbidden classes; Tosaf. explains: each category is permitted to marry within itself; on both views 'doubtful' may intermarry with 'doubtful,' thus disagreeing with R. Eleazar. — On 'Hillel taught' both Rashi and Tosaf. Ri observe: in the Baraitha based on this Mishnah of 'TEN GENEALOGICAL CLASSES'. Weiss. Dor. I, p. 175 (1924 ed.) conjectures that this might have been taught when Herod destroyed the ancient Book of genealogical records, of which this may be an extract. (The verb shanah employed here generally refers to a Mishnah, not a Baraitha.)
(14) And it is unknown whether by her arus or a stranger.
(15) Since the majority of men are forbidden to her, we regard it as certain that the child was born in adultery, and so it is a certain mamzer. Thus Rab treats a doubt as a certainty, which agrees with the first Tanna on 74a, that doubt and certainty may intermarry, and not with R. Eleazar.
(16) Why teach this conflict of Rab and Samuel twice?
(17) The Mishnah treats of a shethuki born of an unmarried woman; since most men are fit for her, it is unlikely that the issue is mamzer, and therefore must not intermarry with mamzer.
(18) Since she is an arusah.
(19) I.e., any Jewess. Thus this corresponds to Rab's ruling that the halachah is as R. Eleazar.
(20) If the arus is a priest, this child does not enjoy the privileges of priesthood, e.g., of eating terumah.
(21) He cannot marry a daughter of an Israelite.
(22) He does not inherit the estate of the arus.
(23) Claiming that the arus was his father. We might think that he retains it unless the contrary is proved. Hence Samuel teaches otherwise.
(24) Cf. supra 74a.
(25) I.e., she is disbelieved.
(26) Since she is unmarried.
(27) Since she is betrothed.
(28) V. p. 46, n. 6.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 75b and R. Ishmael agrees with R. Akiba. [Thus:] R. Eleazar agrees with R. Ishmael, who maintained: Cutheans are proselytes [through fear] of lions.[1] And R. Ishmael agrees with R. Akiba, who said: If a heathen or a slave has intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite, the issue is mamzer.[2] But does R. Ishmael hold with R. Akiba? Surely R. Johanan said on R. Ishmael's authority: How do we know that a heathen or a slave who has intercourse with the daughter of a priest, a Levite, or an Israelite, disqualifies her?[3] Because it is said: But if a priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, [and have no child. . . she shall eat of her father's bread,]:[4] [this holds good only of] one who comes within the ambit of widowhood. and divorce; thus excluding a heathen or a slave, who does not come within the ambit of widowhood and divorce.[5] Now should you think that he holds with R. Akiba — if he [the issue] is mamzer, is it necessary [to deduce] that he [the heathen] disqualifies by his intercourse![6] But R. Eleazar agrees with R. Ishmael who maintained that Cutheans are proselytes [through fear] of lions, and he also agrees with R. Akiba, who said: If a heathen or a slave has intercourse with a Jewess, the issue is mamzer.

Yet does R. Eleazar hold with R. Akiba? But R. Eleazar said: Though Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel differ with respect to co-wives,[7] they agree that mamzer is only from one who is forbidden on the score of consanguinity on pain of kareth![8] — But when Rabin came,[9] he said in the name of R. Hiyya in R. Johanan's name — others state, in the name of R. Abba b. Zabda in R. Hanina's name — others state, in the name of R. Jacob b. Idi in R. Joshua b. Levi's name: There are three opposing views in this matter: — [i] R. Ishmael holds: Cutheans are proselytes [through fear] of lions, and the priests who became mixed up in them were unfit priests, as it is said, and they made unto them from among themselves [mikezotham] priests of the high places,[10] whereon Rabbah b. Bar Hanah commented: from the most unworthy[11] of the people [sc. priests], and on that account they were disqualified. [ii] R. Akiba holds: Cutheans are true proselytes, and the priests who became mixed up in them were fit priests, as it is said: 'and they made unto them from among themselves priests of the high places,' which Rabbah b. Bar Hanah interpreted:[12] from the choicest[13] of the people. Yet why did they interdict them? — Because they subjected arusoth to yibum,[14]

---

(1) Cf. II Kings, XVII, 25. Therefore they are to be regarded as heathens.

(2) Thus the Cuthean (male) may be the issue of a Cuthean and a Jewess, hence mamzer; while the female may be born of two Cutheans, hence a heathen. Now a mamzer is a Jew, though debarred from a legitimately-born Jewess, and may not marry a heathen.

(3) If she is a priest's daughter, from eating terumah: the other two, from marrying a priest. Or, if she had been formerly married to a priest, who had died and left her with a son, who would otherwise entitle her to eat terumah, she is now forbidden.

(4) I.e., terumah, Lev. XXII, 13.

(5) I.e., only when she cohabits with one whose death leaves her a widow, or who can divorce her, does she remain fit to eat terumah. But not when she cohabits with a heathen or slave, for since these cannot legally marry her, they cannot give her the status of widowhood or divorce. — Where a woman is disqualified from eating terumah, she is certainly ineligible to marry a priest.

(6) Surely not, since the former involves even a greater degree of unfitness.

(7) V. Yeb. 13a.

(8) And a heathen or slave is not thus forbidden.

(9) V. p. 46, n. 6.

(10) II Kings XVII, 32.

(11) Lit., 'thorns', Heb. kozim: i.e.,the unfit priests.

(12) On R. Akiba's view.

(13) Var. lec.: 'nobles', Heb. kezinim, which shews the connection with kezotham.

(14) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 76a

but exempted married women.[1] What was their interpretation?[2] — The wife of the dead shall not marry without [ha-huzah] unto a stranger:[3] she who sat 'without' shall not marry a stranger; but she who did not sit 'without' may marry a stranger.[4] And R. Akiba follows his view, for he maintained, There is mamzer from those who are subject [only] to negative injunctions.[5] [iii] Some state, because they are not thoroughly versed in the [minute] details of precepts. Who is meant by 'some state?' — Said R. Idi b. Abin: It is R. Eliezer. For it was taught: The unleavened bread of a Cuthean is permitted,[6] and one fulfils his obligation therewith on Passover;[7] but R. Eliezer forbids it,[8] because they are not thoroughly versed in the [minute] details of precepts. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Every precept which Cutheans have adopted, they observe it with minute care, [even] more than the Israelites. But here [in respect to marriage], wherein are they not well-versed? — Because they are not well-versed in the law of betrothal and divorce.[9]

R. Nahman said in Rabbah b. Abbuha's name: A mamzer by a sister and a mamzer by a brother's wife became mixed up among them [the Cutheans].[10] What does he inform us? — That there is mamzer from those who are liable to kareth.[11] Then let one [only] be taught?[12] — The actual event happened thus. Raba said: A [heathen] slave and a bondmaid were mixed up in them. Now, on whose account is the interdict? On account of the bondmaid![13] Then let one [only] be taught! — The actual event happened thus.

MISHNAH. HE WHO MARRIES A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER[14] MUST INVESTIGATE HER DESCENT[15] UP TO FOUR MOTHERS, WHICH ARE EIGHT. [VIZ.,] HER MOTHER AND HER MOTHER'S MOTHER, HER MOTHER'S PATERNAL GRANDMOTHER[16] AND HER MOTHER, HER FATHER'S MOTHER AND THIS ONE'S MOTHER, HER FATHER'S PATERNAL GRANDMOTHER AND HER MOTHER.[17] [IN THE CASE OF] THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE OR AN ISRAELITE, ONE MORE IS ADDED.[18] WE MAKE NO INVESTIGATION FROM THE ALTAR AND UPWARDS, FROM THE DUKAN [DAIS] AND UPWARDS, NOR FROM THE SANHEDRIN AND UPWARDS.[19] AND ALL WHOSE PARENTS WERE ESTABLISHED TO HAVE BEEN AMONG THE PUBLIC OFFICERS[20] OR CHARITY OVERSEERS ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY INTO THE PRIESTHOOD, AND THEIR DESCENT IS NOT INVESTIGATED. R. JOSE SAID: ALSO WHOEVER WAS SIGNED AS A WITNESS IN THE OLD COURT[21] OF SEPPHORIS.[22] R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS SAID: ALSO ONE WHO WAS RECORDED IN THE KING'S LIST OF OFFICERS.[23]

GEMARA. Why are the women investigated but not the men? — When women quarrel among themselves, they quarrel [only] about immorality,[24] so that if there is anything,[25] it is not generally known.[26] But when men quarrel among themselves, they quarrel over birth;[27] if there is anything, it is generally known.

Now, let her too investigate his [forbears]? — This supports Rab. For Rab Judah said in Rab's name: Fit women were not admonished not to marry the unfit.[28]

R. Adda b. Ahabah recited: Four mothers, which are twelve.[29] In a Baraitha it was taught:' Four mothers, which are sixteen.[30] Now, as for R. Adda b. Ahabah, it is well;

---

(1) Altogether, even from halizah.

(2) That led them to this ruling.

(3) Deut. XXV, 5. On this translation, hahuzah is a locative adverb governed by 'marry'.

(4) Taking ha-huzah as an adjective qualifying wife: the dead man's wife who is without, shall not marry a stranger. A 'wife who is without' is an arusah, who may not live with her husband until nissu'in. [V. Samaritan version of the Bible, a.l. and Montgomery, The Samaritans, p. 185.]

(5) For actually we reject that interpretation, translating as the E.V., and so even a nesu'ah is interdicted by a negative injunction, and the issue is mamzer. Hence though R. Akiba holds that the Cutheans are true proselytes, yet they contain mamzerim, which precludes intermarriage with them. Hence the interdiction of marriage with them, as explained anon.

(6) To be eaten on Passover.

(7) One had to eat at least the size of an olive of unleavened bread of flour specially guarded and prepared for the fulfilment of the precept, 'on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread' (Ex. XII, 18). This Tanna holds that Cutheans know and are particular about this.

(8) I.e., one does not fulfil his obligation therewith.

(9) Thus, a woman may have been validly betrothed, yet they thought it invalid and permitted her to marry another, the issue by whom is mamzer. Another Cuthean, however, may be quite legitimate; therefore R. Eleazar forbids Cutheans to marry each other.

(10) Therefore one Cuthean may not marry another.

(11) By specifying a mamzer from an incestuous union with a sister, his intention is to teach that the issue of such, though forbidden only on pain of kareth, is mamzer, in opposition to the view (Yeb. 49a) that only when the union involves death by the court is the issue mamzer (v. Rashi).
(12) E.g., that a mamzer by a sister was mixed up among them.
(13) For, as shewn on 75b, R. Eleazar holds that the issue of a slave and a Jewess is legitimate; hence he must have declared the prohibition because of the bondmaid, whose issue has the status of a slave (supra 66b), and is forbidden to a Jew or Jewess.
(14) Lit., 'a priestly woman'.
(15) Lit., 'after her.'
(16) Lit., 'and her father's mother'.
(17) Thus the four are: her mother, her mother's paternal grandmother, her father's mother, and her father's paternal grandmother. Further, the mother of each of these is added, which gives eight. All these are examined, to see that none are unfit for a pure marriage.
(18) I.e., one generation further removed on the maternal side in both lines: to her mother and her mother's mother we add her mother's maternal grandmother, and to her father's grandmother, we add one mother more.
(19) If a priest, one of her forbears, was known to have served at the altar, or a Levite to have sung on the dais in the Temple, which was part of the Temple service, or if one was a member of the Sanhedrin, it is unnecessary to trace her descent any further.
(20) I.e., judges in ordinary courts, apart from the Sanhedrin (v. Gemara).
(21) ערכי הישנה , v. next note.
(22) Rashi's text appears to omit 'witness' in which case it means whoever stood on the list of judges. On both versions, the reason is that they were particular that these should be only men of proved purity of descent. [The meaning of the phrase ערכי הישנה is doubtful. Schurer II. 1. p. 138 (Eng. ed.) renders it 'the ancient government', , the reference being to the old government in Sepphoris, the members of which were all Israelites, in contradistinction to the later government set up by the Romans, in his view, in the days of Hadrian, which was of a mixed or heathen composition (Buchler JQR, XVI, p. 160 dates the change in the composition of the government to the days of Agrippa II). Render accordingly 'whoever was recognised as a member of the old government'. Another possible meaning is 'old archives' or 'old family registers'. v. Buchler Priester & Cultus, pp. 198ff.]
(23) Heb. isteratya; the Gemara discusses this.
(24) One accuses the other of immorality, but not of a blemished descent.
(25) Objectionable in their pedigree.
(26) Lit., 'it has no voice.'
(27) Each throwing up the other's blemished descent.
(28) V. supra p. 373, n. 1. — Hence it is unnecessary for her to investigate his ancestors.
(29) Adding one mother to each. V. p. 388, nn. 9 and 10.
(30) Adding one more mother and the grandmother to each.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 76b

he may relate it [his teaching] to the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite.[1] But must we say that the Baraitha disagrees [with the Mishnah]? — No: What is meant by ONE MORE? one more pair.[2]

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: This [sc. the Mishnah] is R. Meir's view. But the Sages maintain: All families stand in the presumption of fitness.[3] But that is not so, for R. Hama b. Guria said in Rab's name: Our Mishnah refers to where it[4] is contested![5] — The one who recited the former [in Rab's name] did not recite the latter.[6] Others state, Rab Judah said in Rab's name: This is R. Meir's view. But the Sages maintain: All families stand in the presumption of fitness. R. Hama b. Guria said in Rab's name: If it is contested, he must investigate her descent.[7]

WE MAKE NO INVESTIGATION FROM THE ALTAR AND UPWARDs. What is the reason? — Had she[8] not been examined, he would not have been promoted [to that dignity].

NOR FROM THE DAIS AND UPWARDS. What is the reason? — Because a Master said: For there sat those who certified the genealogy of the priestly and the Levitical families.[9] NOR FROM THE SANHEDRIN AND UPWARDS. What is the reason? — For R. Joseph learnt: Just as the court must be pure in righteousness, so must it be pure from any [genealogical] blemish.[10] Said Meremar: What verse teaches this?[11] Thou art all fair, my love; and there is no blemish in thee.[12] Perhaps a literal blemish [is meant]? — Said R. Aha b. Jacob: Scripture saith, that they may stand there with thee:[13] 'with thee' [implies,] like unto thee.[14] Yet perhaps that was on account of the Shechinah?[15] But[16] said R. Nahman: Scripture saith, so shall it be easier for thyself, and they shall bear the burden with thee:[17] 'with thee' [implies,] like unto thee.

ALL WHOSE PARENTS WERE NOT ESTABLISHED TO HAVE BEEN AMONG THE PUBLIC OFFICERS. Are we to say that [judges] were not appointed of [genealogically] unfit persons? But the following contradicts it: All are fit to adjudicate in civil matters, but not all are eligible to judge capital cases. Now, we pondered thereon: What does 'all' include? And Rab Judah said: It includes mamzer. — Said Abaye: In Jerusalem.[18] And so did R. Simeon b. Zera recite in Kiddushin of the School of Levi:[19] In Jerusalem.

OR CHARITY OVERSEERS, ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY [INTO THE PRIESTHOOD]. What is the reason? — Since they quarrel with people, for a Master said: Pledges are taken for charity, even on Sabbath eve,[20] if there were [a blemish in his family], it would be known.

R. Adda b. Ahabah's host was a proselyte, and he and R. Bibi were at variance, each claiming, I must carry on the administration of the town. So they went before R. Joseph. Said he to them, We learn it: One from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee:[21] all appointments[22] which thou makest must be only from the midst of thy brethren. Said R. Adda b. Ahabah to him: Even if his mother is a Jewess? — If his mother is a Jewess, he replied, we apply to[23] him, 'from the midst of thy brethren'. Therefore let R. Bibi, who is a great man, give his attention to Heavenly matters,[24] and do you, Sir, pay attention to affairs of the town.[25] Said Abaye: Therefore, when one provides a scholar with residence in his boarding house, let him provide it for one like R. Adda b. Ahabah, who is able[26] to argue[27] in his favour.

R. Zera took trouble over them [sc. proselytes]; Rabbah b. Abbuhah took trouble over them. In the west [Palestine] not even an Inspector of Measures[28] was appointed of them. In Nehardea, not even an irrigation superintendent was appointed of them.

R. JOSE SAID: EVEN ONE WHO WAS etc. What is the reason? They [first] investigated, and then allowed them to attest.

R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS etc. Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: [This refers to the officers] in the armies of the House of David. Said R. Joseph: What verse teaches this?[29] And they who were reckoned by genealogy for service in war.[30] And what is the reason?[31] — Said Rab Judah in Rab's name: In order that their own merit and the merit of their fathers might aid them. But there was Zelek the Ammonite;[32] surely that means that he was descended from Ammon? — No: that he dwelt in Ammon. But there was Uriah the Hittite;[33] surely that means that he was descended from Heth? — No: that he dwelt among the Hittites. But there was Ittai the Gittite.[34] And should you answer, here too it means that he dwelt in Gath, — but R. Nahman said: Ittai the Gittite came and destroyed it.[35] Moreover, Rab Judah said in Rab's name, David had four hundred children, all the offsprings of 'beautiful women,'[36] all with hair trimmed in front[37] and locks growing long;[38] and all sat in golden chariots and went at the head of armies, and they were the strong men[39] of the House of David! — They merely went to terrorise [the opposing armies].[40]

---

(1) As stated in the Mishnah.

(2) A mother and grandmother, which gives sixteen.
(3) Without investigation.
(4) The bride's pedigree.
(5) Two witnesses testify that it is rumoured that her descent is blemished, in which even the Rabbis would agree that investigation is required; why then does Rab ascribe the Mishnah only to R. Meir?
(6) If the Mishnah is assumed to reflect R. Meir's view, it means even if her purity is uncontested; if it is assumed to mean only where it is contested, it agrees even with the Rabbis.
(7) Even in the view of the Rabbis.
(8) The mother of the priest who served at the altar.
(9) And priests or Levites of impure descent were not permitted to sing in the Temple service or pronounce the priestly blessing. — Rashi states that this took place in the Hall of Hewn Stones, and the examiners were the Sanhedrin. Weiss, Dor p. 175, n. 2. inclines to the view that a special priestly court was set up for this purpose (Cf. 'the priestly court' mentioned in Keth. 12a), which sat in a place behind the veil. Wilna Gaon takes an intermediate position: this special court made the investigations, but the actual verdict was pronounced by the Sanhedrin.
(10) This refers to the larger or smaller Sanhedrin (v. Sanh. 2a), but not to an ordinary court.
(11) Lit., 'what is its verse?'
(12) Cant. IV, 7.
(13) Num. XI, 16: this refers to the seventy elders, who, together with Moses, were traditionally regarded as the first great Sanhedrin of seventy one.
(14) Of pure descent.
(15) The Divine Presence. For these were endowed with the power of prophecy (v. 25); yet subsequent Sanhedrins may not require unstained birth?
(16) So the reading in Sanh. 36b, and as required here.
(17) Ex. XVIII, 22. This likewise refers to the setting up of courts, and no mention is made of prophecy.
(18) Our Mishnah refers to Jerusalem, where only men of unsullied birth were permitted to be judges.
(19) I.e., in Levi's Baraitha on the Tractate Kiddushin. Z. Frankel, Darke ha'Mishnah, p. 313, and Weiss, Dor, II. 191-2 maintain that this was in opposition to Rabbi's Mishnah; Halevi, Doroth, II. 119-121 proves that it was not opposed but explanatory of and complementary to Rabbi's compilation.
(20) Charity was compulsory, and if one failed to pay his quota a pledge was forcibly taken from him; this naturally led to quarrels with the overseer.
(21) Deut. XVII, 55.
(22) Lit., 'settings.'
(23) Lit., 'read of.'
(24) Rashi: the charity collections and distribution, synagogue administration.
(25) E.g., taxation etc.
(26) Lit., 'knows'.
(27) Lit., 'turn (things) about.'
(28) Kori fr. kor, a measure.
(29) Lit., 'what is its verse?'
(30) I Chron. VII, 40.
(31) Why insist on pure birth?
(32) II Sam. XXIII, 37.
(33) II Sam. XXIII, 39.
(34) Ibid. XV, 19.
(35) Sc. Milcom, the idol of the Ammonites, and the whole point of R. Nahman's dictum is that he did this as a heathen. V. 'A. Z. 44a.
(36) Captured in war; v. Deut. XXI, 10-14.
(37) In Roman fashion, with a fringe on the forehead and curls hanging down on the temples.
(38) [Belurith (etym. obscure) a heathen fashion of growing locks from the crown of the head, hanging down in plaits at the back, v. Krauss, T.A. I 645.]
(39) Lit., men of fists.'
(40) But did not actually fight.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 77a

MISHNAH. THE DAUGHTER OF A MALE HALAL IS UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD FOR ALL TIME.[1] IF AN ISRAELITE MARRIES A HALALAH, HIS DAUGHTER IS FIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD. IF A HALAL MARRIES THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HIS DAUGHTER IS UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD.[2] R. JUDAH SAID: THE DAUGHTER OF A MALE PROSELYTE IS AS THE DAUGHTER OF A MALE HALAL. R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAID: IF AN ISRAELITE MARRIES A FEMALE PROSELYTE, HIS DAUGHTER IS FIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD, AND IF A [MALE] PROSELYTE MARRIES THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HIS DAUGHTER IS FIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD. BUT IF A MALE PROSELYTE MARRIES A FEMALE PROSELYTE, HIS DAUGHTER IS UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD. [THE SAME LAW APPLIES TO] A PROSELYTE AS TO FREED SLAVES, EVEN UNTO TEN GENERATIONS, [HIS DAUGHTER IS UNFIT] UNLESS HIS MOTHER IS OF ISRAELITE STOCK.[3] R. JOSE SAID: ALSO IF A MALE PROSELYTE MARRIES A FEMALE PROSELYTE, HIS DAUGHTER IS FIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD.

GEMARA. Why [state], FOR ALL TIME? — I might think, It is analogous to an Egyptian and an Edomite: just as there, after three generations [the interdict is lifted], so here too after three generations [the daughter is fit for the priesthood]. Therefore we are informed [otherwise].

IF AN ISRAELITE MARRIES A HALAL. How do we know it? — Said R. Johanan on the authority of R. Ishmael:[4] Here it is stated, and he shall not profane his seed among his people;[5] and there it is stated, he shall not defile himself, being a chief man among his people:[6] just as there, males but not females,[7] so here too, males but not females.[8] If so, let a High Priest's daughter [from a widow] be permitted [to marry a priest]? — Is it then written: '[and he shall not profane] his son'? 'His seed' is written, viz., he shall not profane his seed among his people.[9] Then let the daughter of his son be permitted? — It is written, he shall not profane his seed: [hence] his seed is assimilated to himself: just as his own daughter is unfit, so is his son's daughter unfit — Then let his daughter's daughter [too] be interdicted?[10] — If so, what is effected by the gezerah shawah?

IF A HALAL MARRIES THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HIS DAUGHTER IS UNFIT. But that is stated in the first clause: THE DAUGHTER OF A MALE HALAL IS UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD FOR ALL TIME? — Because the former clause teaches: IF AN ISRAELITE MARRIES A HALALAH, the latter clause also states: IF A HALAL MARRIES THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE.[11] Our Mishnah does not agree with R. Dosethai b. Judah. For it was taught: R. Dosethai b. Judah said: Just as the sons of Israel are a mikweh of purification for [female] halaloth, so are the daughters of Israel a mikweh of purification for [male] halalim.[12] What is R. Dosethai b. R. Judah's reason? — Scripture saith, 'he shall not profane his seed among his people': he profanes [his seed] among one people, but not among two peoples.[13]

Our Rabbis taught 'He shall not profane his seed:' I know [it] only [of] his seed; how do I know it of herself?[14] — Say, a minori: if his seed, that committed no sin, is profaned, she, who commits sin, how much the more so that she is profaned! Let him himself refute it: he commits sin, yet he is not profaned![15] As for himself, that is because he is not profaned in all other cases;[16] will you say [the same] of her, seeing that she is profaned in all other cases?[17] And should you desire to object, [then one can answer,] Scripture saith, 'he shall not profane his seed,' [which means,] This one shall not become profaned, who was [originally] fit and is [now] profaned.[18] What is meant by, 'and should you desire to object?' — [This:] and should you say, one can refute [it thus]: as for his seed, that is because he is conceived[19] in sin; [therefore] Scripture saith, 'he shall not profane his seed:' this one shall not become profaned, who was [originally] fit and is [now] profaned.

Our Rabbis taught: What is a halalah? One who was born of unfit persons. What is meant by unfit persons? Shall we say, unfit for him?[20] But what of him who takes back his divorced wife,[21] though she is unfit for him, yet her children are fit, as it is written, she is an abomination:[22] 'she is an abomination but her children are no abomination! — Said Rab Judah This is its meaning: What is a halalah? — One who was born of a priestly disqualification.[23] Only one who was born [of such a forbidden union], but not one who was not born [thus]? But what of a widow, a divorced woman or a zonah,[24] who were not born [thus], and yet [each] is a halalah.[25] — Said Rabbah, This is its meaning: Who is the halalah mentioned, that never enjoyed a period of eligibility? She who was born of a priestly disqualification. What is the meaning of 'mentioned?' — Said R. Isaac b. Abin: This is its meaning: Who is the halalah primarily [disqualified] by the words of the Torah, and who needs no Rabbinical definition?[26] One who was born of a priestly disqualification.

Our Rabbis taught [If a High Priest has intercourse with] a widow, a widow, a widow,[27] he incurs only one penalty.[28] [If a priest has intercourse with] a divorced woman, a divorced woman, a divorced woman, he incurs only one penalty. [If he has intercourse with] a widow, a divorced and profane woman, and a harlot [zonah],[29] if they [these disqualifications] are in this order,[30] he [the High Priest] is liable [for each intercourse]. But if she [first] committed harlotry,[31] was then profaned,[32] subsequently divorced, and finally widowed, he incurs only one penalty. The Master said: '[If a High Priest has intercourse with] a widow, a widow, a widow, he incurs only one penalty.' How is this widow meant? Shall we say that he has intercourse with Reuben's widow, with Simeon's widow, and with Levi's widow, why does he incur only one penalty?

---

(1) I.e., the daughter of a halal, or of the son or grandson of a halal, and of his male descendants for all generations, cannot marry a priest.

(2) This is implicit in the first statement.

(3) Lit., 'from Israel.'

(4) So the text as amended; cur. ed. Simeon.

(5) Lev. XXI, 15.

(6) Ibid. 4.

(7) Only males are forbidden to defile themselves through the dead.

(8) I.e., only the males are disqualified by a forbidden priestly marriage, but not the females; hence the daughters of the former are unfit for the priesthood, but not of the latter.

(9) Hence the gezerah shawah merely shews that the female offsprings of his female descendants are permitted, but not his own daughters.

(10) By the same reasoning.

(11) For the sake of parallelism.

(12) That their issue is eligible for the priesthood, v. supra p. 321. n. 3.

(13) I.e., only when he and his wife are of 'one people,' i.e., both halalim (profaned) is his seed halel too: but if his wife is of a different people, i.e., not a halalah, his seed is not halal either.

(14) That she is forbidden to a priest, after his death.

(15) [A priest who marries a woman forbidden to him is not disqualified from the priesthood, v. Bek. 45b and Git. 36b.]

(16) Even if he cohabits with a bondmaid or a harlot, he is not degraded from the priesthood.

(17) If a woman cohabits with a Cuthean, halal, etc., she is disqualified from the priesthood; supra 74b.

(18) Rashi: 'he shall not profane' is primarily applicable to the profaning of a person who was hitherto fit, viz., his wife. But, his seed is born profaned; hence, though the seed is mentioned in the verse too, the verb nevertheless relates to his wife.

(19) Lit., 'formed'.

(20) I.e., even if an Israelite marries a woman interdicted to him particularly (excluding a mamzereth, who is forbidden to all), the issue is halal.

(21) After she married another.

(22) Deut. XXIV, 4.

(23) I.e., of a person disqualified to marry a priest.

(24) V. Glos.

(25) When she marries a priest, or in the case of a widow, when she marries a High Priest.
(26) Lit., 'by the words of the soferim': v. p. 79, n. 7. — I.e., when Scripture says: They shall not take a woman that is profaned (halalah). (Lev. XXI, 7), it presupposes a recognised definition of halalah, even before the Rabbis extended its scope by their exegesis.
(27) To be explained anon.
(28) Viz., flagellation, the penalty for transgressing a negative injunction.
(29) The verse is quoted direct from Lev. XXI, 14, and the translation is accordingly that of the E.V.
(30) Thus: a widow remarried and was divorced; then she married a priest, whereby she was profaned; after this, e.g., she committed incest, thus becoming a zonah.
(31) Becoming a zonah.
(32) By marrying a priest.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 77b

Behold, they are separate persons and separate names! Again, if he has intercourse three times with the same widow, what are the circumstances? If he was not warned, it is obvious that he incurs only one penalty.[1] But if he was warned for each, why does he incur only one penalty? Did we not learn: If a nazir[2] drinks wine all day, he incurs only one penalty; if he is admonished, 'Do not drink,' 'do not drink,'[3] and he drinks, he is liable for each! — This arises only if he has intercourse with Reuben's widow, who was Simeon's widow who had been Levi's widow: I might think, Behold, they are separate names! We are therefore told that we require separate persons,[4] which is absent.

[If he has intercourse with] a widow, a divorced and profane woman, and a harlot. What is this Tanna's opinion? If he holds, one prohibition can fall on another,[5] then it is the reverse too.[6] Whilst if he holds, one prohibition cannot fall on another, it is not so even in this order![7] — Said Raba: This Tanna does not hold that one prohibition can fall upon another, but he does accept [the validity of] a prohibition of wider scope.[8] [Thus:] a widow is interdicted to a High Priest, but permitted to an ordinary priest; when she becomes divorced, since a prohibition is added in respect of an ordinary priest, it is added in respect of a High Priest; yet she is still permitted to partake of terumah. When she becomes profane, since a prohibition of eating terumah is added, a prohibition is added in respect of a High Priest. But what wider prohibition is there on account of zonah?[9] — Said R. Hama son of R. Kattina: Because the designation of harlotry [zenuth] disqualifies in the case of an Israelite.[10]

A Tanna recited before R. Shesheth: Whoever is included in [a virgin of his own people] shall he take [to wife],[11] is included in '[a widow, etc.,] he shall not take'; but whoever is not included in, 'shall he take,' is not included in, 'he shall not take':[12] this excludes a High Priest who marries his sister, a widow.[13] Said he to him: He who told you this, on whose authority is it? R. Simeon's, who maintains that one prohibition cannot fall upon another. For it was taught if one eats nebelah[14] on the Day of Atonement, he is exempt.[15] For if according to the Rabbis, — surely they maintain that one prohibition falls upon another. [He replied:] You may even say [that it agrees with] the Rabbis: When do the Rabbis maintain that one prohibition can fall upon another? Only a stringent prohibition upon a lighter one,[16] but a light prohibition cannot fall upon a more stringent one.[17]

Others state: This agrees with the Rabbis, who maintain, One prohibition can fall upon another; but when do they rule thus? Only that a more stringent prohibition [can fall] upon a lighter one; but a light one cannot fall upon a more stringent one. For if it is R. Simeon: seeing that a stringent prohibition cannot fall upon a light one, need a light prohibition upon a more stringent be stated? — I might think that a prohibition in connection with priesthood is different;[18] hence we are informed [that it is not so].[19]

R. Papa said to Abaye: When an Israelite has intercourse with his sister, he [certainly] renders her a zonah,' [but] does he render her a halalah [too] or not?[20] Do We says [it follows] a minori: if one becomes a halalah by those who are forbidden to her by [only] negative injunctions, how much more so by those who are forbidden on pain of kareth. Or perhaps, a halalah results from a priestly interdict only? — He answered: A halalah results from a priestly interdict only.

Rab said: How do we know this ruling[21] stated by the Rabbis [that] a halalah is only from a priestly interdict? Because it was taught: Let a divorced woman not be stated in reference to a High Priest, and it could be inferred a minori from an ordinary priest; for I would argue, If she is forbidden to an ordinary priest, can there be a question of[22] a High Priest? Why then is it stated? [To teach,] Just as a divorced woman is distinct from zonah and halalah in respect of an ordinary priest,[23] so is she distinct in reference to a High Priest. [But] that is obvious: is it [the sanctity of a High Priest] in any way diminished?[24] But [it is rather to teach] just as a divorced woman is distinct from zonah and a halalah in respect of an ordinary priest,[23] so is a widow distinct from a divorced woman, a halalah and a zonah in respect of a High Priest.[25] Why is halalah stated?[26] [To shew that] halalah results from a priestly interdict only.[27] Why is zonah stated?[26] — Zonah is stated here;[28] and it is also stated there:[29] just as here, his seed is profaned,[30] so there too, his seed is profaned.

Said R. Ashi: Therefore if a priest has intercourse with his sister,

---

(1) A penalty was not imposed unless the transgression was preceded by a warning as to implications of the offence. 'Not warned' means not warned for each intercourse separately.

(2) V. Glos.

(3) Before each time he drinks.

(4) For separate punishments.

(5) A thing, being forbidden on one score, can also be forbidden on another, so that two prohibitions are violated. Thus here, though she is forbidden as a divorced woman, the interdict of a harlot is also operative, if she becomes one after her divorce.

(6) Even if this order is not followed; v. 396 n. 9.

(7) No separate penalty is incurred for each.

(8) איסור מוסיף . I.e., which applies to more people. Then it can fall upon another prohibition even in respect of the person to whom the first also applies. For a fuller discussion of the various types of prohibitions, v. Shebu. (Sonc. ed.) p. 127. n. 1.

(9) What is now prohibited which was not before?

(10) If the wife of an Israelite commits adultery, he may not live with her. Thus, though in the case under discussion the prohibition of a zonah adds nothing, an extra penalty is incurred because harlotry in general is a wider prohibition.

(11) Lev. XXI, 14.

(12) I.e., the High Priest transgresses the latter only on account of a woman who would be permitted to him if she were a virgin.

(13) He is not liable because she is a widow, but because she is a sister.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) From kareth, the penalty for eating on the Day of Atonement. For nebelah is already forbidden by a negative injunction, and so the interdict of the Day of Atonement remains inoperative.

(16) E.g., the prohibition of eating on the Day of Atonement is more stringent than that of eating nebelah.

(17) The interdict against one's sister is graver than that of widow to a High Priest.

(18) Because Scripture imposed many additional injunctions upon priests from which others are free.

(19) Consequently the author may be R. Simeon, after all.

(20) So that the priest who has intercourse with her is flagellated separately on each score.

(21) Lit., 'thing'.

(22) Lit., 'is it necessary for?'

(23) If a divorced woman is also a zonah, the priest is doubly punished.

(24) Surely it is not less than that of an ordinary priest!

(25) If a widow is also one or all of these, he is punished on each score.

(26) In reference to a High Priest, seeing that she is prohibited to the ordinary priest.

(27) Because 'halalah' is superfluous. Rashi observes: this may be deduced from the Scriptural order, which places 'halalah' after 'divorced woman' and 'widow' who are forbidden to priests only, but not after zonah, a type of prohibition forbidden also to an Israelite, v. supra p. 398, n. 2, which shews that halalah results from an interdict confined to priests.
(28) Viz., in respect of a High Priest.
(29) In respect of an ordinary priest.
(30) As it is written, he shall not profane his seed.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 78a

he renders her zonah, not halalah. But if he again has intercourse with her, he renders her halalah.[1]

Rab Judah said: If a High Priest [has intercourse] with a widow, he is flagellated twice, once on account of, he shall not take,[2] and again on account of, he shall not profane.[3] Then let him be flagellated on account of, 'he shall not profane his seed'? — This means, if he does not consummate the intercourse.[4] Raba raised an objection: [If a High Priest has intercourse with] a widow and divorced woman,[5] he is flagellated on account of two injunctions.[6] Surely that means, two injunctions and no more? — No: two injunctions for the one, and two for the other.[7] If so, consider the second clause: [For] a divorced woman and haluzah[8] he is liable only on account of one? — This is its meaning: he is liable only on account of one [designation], yet after all, for two injunctions. Now, is a haluzah [forbidden only] by Rabbinical law?[9] Surely it was taught: [They shall not take a woman that is a harlot. . . and a woman] that is divorced.[10] I know it only of a divorced woman: how do I know it of a haluzah? Because it is said: 'and a woman'.[11] — It is Rabbinical, and the verse is a mere support.[12]

Abaye said: When he[13] betroths,[14] he is flagellated; [and] when he cohabits, he is flagellated. When he betroths he is flagellated on account of, 'he shall not take';[15] when he cohabits he is flagellated on account of, 'he shall not profane'.[16] Raba said: if he cohabits, he is flagellated;[17] if he does not cohabit, he is not flagellated [at all], because it is written, he shall not take . . . and he shall not profane: why must he not take? In order that he shall not profane.[18] And Abaye admits in the case of one who remarries his divorced wife,[19] that if he betroths but does not cohabit, he is not flagellated: the Divine Law saith, [he may not] take her again to be his wife,[20] which is absent here. And Raba admits in respect to a High Priest with a widow, that if he cohabits without betrothing, he is flagellated: the Divine Law saith, 'and he shall not profane his seed among his people', whereas he has profaned [it]. And both admit in the case of one who takes back his divorced wife, that if he cohabits without betrothal, he is not flagellated: The Torah forbade it by way of marriage.[21]

R. JUDAH SAID: THE DAUGHTER OF A MALE PROSELYTE IS LIKE THE DAUGHTER OF A HALAL. It was taught: R. Judah said: The daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male halal. And logic proves[22] it. If a halal, who [though he] comes from a fit origin,[23] [yet] his daughter is unfit;[24] then a proselyte, who comes from an unfit origin, his daughter is surely unfit! As for a halal, [it may be argued,] that is because his own formation is in sin![25] Then let [the union of] a High Priest with a widow prove it, for his formation was not in sin, yet his daughter is unfit.[26] As for a High Priest and a widow, that is because his cohabitation was in sin! Then let a halal prove it.[27] And so the argument revolves: the distinguishing feature of one is not that of the other; the feature common to both is that they are not as the majority of the community; so also do I adduce the proselyte, who is not as the majority of the community, and his daughter is unfit! [No:] what is the feature common to both? That they have an element[28] of sin![29] — Do not say, let [the union of] a High Priest with a widow prove it, but say: let a [converted] Egyptian of the first generation prove it.[30] As for a [converted] Egyptian of the first generation, that is because he is ineligible to enter into the assembly [at all]! Then let a halal prove it. And so the argument revolves, the distinguishing feature of one not being that of the other. The feature common to both is that they are not as the majority of the congregation and their daughter is unfit. So do I also adduce a proselyte, who is not as the majority of the community, and his daughter is unfit! [No:] As for the feature common to both, it is that they disqualify[31] by their intercourse. And R. Judah?[32] — A proselyte too disqualifies by his intercourse, and he deduces it by analogy from this very argument.[33]

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAID: A PROSELYTE [etc.]. It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai said: A female proselyte less than three years and a day is eligible to the priesthood, as it is said: But all the women children . . . keep alive for yourselves;[34] now, was not Phinehas among them?[35] But the Rabbis [interpret]: 'keep them alive for yourselves' as bondmen and bondwomen.

Now, all deduce from the same verse: Neither shall they take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away [i.e., divorced] but they shall take virgins of the seed of the house of Israel.[36] R. Judah holds: all the seed must be from Israel.[37] R. Eliezer b. Jacob holds: 'of the seed' [implies] even part of the seed.[38] R. Jose holds: whoever was conceived[39] in Israel.[40] R. Simeon b. Yohai holds: [It means] one whose virginity matured[41] in Israel.[42]

R. Nahman said to Raba:

---

(1) [Since as a result of the first intercourse she becomes forbidden to him also as zonah of the type which is interdicted only to priests.]

(2) Lev. XXI, 14.

(3) As explained on p. 395, n. 7, this refers primarily to the interdicted woman; hence he is punished for profaning her in violation of the negative injunction.

(4) So that there is no issue.

(5) The same woman being both.

(6) Lit., 'designations' (of negative precepts). Although one woman, she is forbidden by two separate injunctions, and he is punished for each.

(7) He is punished twice, as stated above, on account of her widowhood, and twice because she is divorced.

(8) Who is the same person.

(9) Since you say that he is flagellated only on account of one, viz., a divorced woman.

(10) Ibid. 7.

(11) 'And a woman' is superfluous, and its purpose is to include a haluzah. This shews that the interdict of her is Scriptural.

(12) But not the actual source of the law.

(13) A High Priest or an ordinary priest.

(14) An interdicted woman.

(15) 'To take' implies formal betrothal.

(16) V. p. 400, n. 5.

(17) Twice, as Abaye.

(18) Hence the first is dependent upon the second.

(19) After she married another. This does not refer particularly to a priest.

(20) Deut. XXIV, 4; i.e., 'not take' (sc. betrothal) is transgressed only when the marriage is consummated and she becomes his wife.

(21) Lit., 'taking'. [MS.M. adds: And both agree in the case of him who takes his haluzah (v. Glos.) that if he betroths and has no intercourse, he is not flagellated, for the Torah has prohibited it by way of, 'building up of a house', referring to Deut. XXV, 9.]

(22) Lit., 'gives'.

(23) I.e., his father is a Jew.

(24) For the priesthood.

(25) Being the issue of a forbidden union.

(26) As supra, 77a.

(27) When he marries and cohabits with the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite, there is no sin, and yet the halal's daughter is unfit.

(28) Lit., ‘side’.
(29) The union of a High Priest and a widow, and the birth of a halal, are all attended by sin. But that is not true of a proselyte.
(30) There is no element of sin, yet his daughter is unfit, for only the third generation may marry with Jews.
(31) A Jewess from the priesthood; supra 74b.
(32) How does he answer this?
(33) If the daughter of a halal who comes from a fit origin is unfit, how much more should the daughter of a proselyte who is of an unfit origin be unfit?
(34) Num. XXXI, 18; it refers to the war captives.
(35) And though he was a priest, these children were permitted in marriage.
(36) Ezek. XLIV, 22. The reference is to priests.
(37) Which excludes the daughter of a proselyte.
(38) Even if one side only is of Jewish birth, the daughter is fit.
(39) Lit., ‘sown’.
(40) Therefore even if both father and mother are converts, the daughter is fit, since she was conceived in Israel.
(41) Lit., was sown’.
(42) I.e., who becomes converted before three years and a day. At that day her virginity is mature, in that if destroyed it does not return.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 78b

This verse, the first part refers to a High Priest and the second to an ordinary priest?[1] — Yes, he replied. And is a verse thus written? — Even so, he replied, for it is written, and the lamp of God was not yet gone out, and Samuel was laid down [to sleep] in the Temple of the Lord.[2] But sitting was [permitted] in the Temple only to the Kings of the Davidic dynasty?[3] Hence [it must mean:] and the lamp of God was not yet gone out in the Temple of the Lord, and Samuel was laid down in his place.[4]

And a widow that is the widow of a priest they shall take.[5] Only of a priest, but not of an Israelite? — This is the meaning of ‘of a priest they shall take:’ those of the other priests[6] may take. It was taught likewise: . . . of a priest they shall take’: [i.e.,] those of the other priests may take. R. Judah interpreted: of those who can give [their daughters] in marriage to the priesthood they may take.[7] R. Judah is in harmony with his view, for he said: THE DAUGHTER OF A MALE PROSELYTE IS AS THE DAUGHTER OF A MALE HALAL: when you may marry his daughter, you may marry his widow; and when you may not marry his daughter, you may not marry his widow.[8] R. JOSE SAID: ALSO IF A MALE PROSELYTE MARRIES A FEMALE PROSELYTE. R. Hamnuna said on ‘Ulla's authority: The halachah is as R. Jose. And Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said likewise: The halachah is as R. Jose; but since the day that the Temple was destroyed, the priests have insisted on[9] a superior status, in accordance with R. Eliezer b. Jacob.[10] R. Nahman said: Huna told me: If he [a priest] comes to take counsel, we give him a ruling in accordance with R. Eliezer b. Jacob; but if he marries,[11] we do not compel him to divorce her,[12] in accordance with R. Jose.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN DECLAREs, ‘THIS SON OF MINE IS A MAMZER,’ HE IS DISBELIEVED. AND EVEN IF BOTH [THE HUSBAND AND WIFE] ADMIT THAT THE CHILD WITHIN HER IS MAMZER,[13] THEY ARE DISBELIEVED. R. JUDAH SAID: THEY ARE BELIEVED.

GEMARA. Why [state], EVEN IF BOTH [etc.]?[14] — He leads to a climax.[15] It goes without saying that he [the father], who cannot be certain thereof[16] [is disbelieved]; but even she [the mother], who is certain, is [also] disbelieved. And it goes without saying that they are disbelieved where he [the child] enjoys the presumption of fitness; but even [in the case of] an embryo, who does not enjoy the presumption of fitness, they are [still] disbelieved.

R. JUDAH SAID: THEY ARE BELIEVED. As it was taught: He shall acknowledge [the firstborn]:[17] [i.e.,] he shall acknowledge him before others. Hence R. Judah said: A man is believed when he says: 'This son is my first born.' And just as he is believed when he says: 'This son is my firstborn,' so is he also believed when he says, 'This is the son of a divorced woman'; 'this is the son of a haluzah.' But the Sages say: He is not believed.[18]

R. Nahman b. Isaac asked Raba: As for R. Judah, it is well: for that reason it is written: 'he shall acknowledge'. But on the view of the Rabbis, what is the purpose of, 'he shall acknowledge'? — Where acknowledgment is necessary.[19] In respect of what [is he believed]? to give him a double portion?[20] That is obvious, and what is the need of a verse; for if he desired to make him a gift, could he not do so? — This refers to property which he [the father] inherits [only] subsequently.[21] But according to R. Meir, who maintained: One can transmit property that is non-existent, what is the purpose of 'he shall acknowledge'? — Where he inherits it while he was dying.[22]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN AUTHORIZES HIS AGENT TO GIVE HIS DAUGHTER IN BETROTHAL,[23] AND THEN HE HIMSELF GOES AND GIVES HER IN BETROTHAL TO ANOTHER, IF THE [BETROTHAL] BY HIM WAS FIRST, HIS BETROTHAL IS VALID; IF THE AGENT'S WAS FIRST, THE LATTER'S BETROTHAL IS VALID. BUT IF IT IS UNKNOWN,

---

(1) For the first half prohibits marriage to a widow, while the second half 'and a widow that is a widow of a priest they shall take' permits it.

(2) I Sam. III, 3.

(3) And the same applies. of course, to lying.

(4) The sense of the verse is to be divided though the text itself does not indicate this.

(5) Ezek. XLIV, 22.

(6) I.e., but not a High Priest, of whom the first half of the verse speaks. Thus of (n) is understood as a partitive preposition.

(7) I.e., they may take the widow of a man whose daughter was fit for the priesthood, thus excluding the widow of a proselyte.

(8) V. supra 75a.

(9) Lit., 'practised'.

(10) Perhaps because the fall of the Temple robbed them of their higher dignity in respect to the sacrificial service, they found it necessary to safeguard it in other ways.

(11) The daughter of proselytes.

(12) Lit., 'we do not withdraw her from his hand.'

(13) That it was conceived in adultery.

(14) This appears to add nothing to the first clause.

(15) Lit., 'he states: "it is unnecessary (to teach this)'.

(16) The child's paternity.

(17) Deut. XXI, 17.

(18) V. supra 74a.

(19) E.g., if the son was overseas and his status unknown.

(20) Deut. XXI, 17,

(21) Lit., 'which falls to him afterwards', i.e., after declaring that this is his firstborn. — Now, when he declares thus, he cannot gift this legacy, which, as far as he is concerned, is non-existent; and yet he is believed in respect of a double portion for the son recognised by him as his firstborn.

(22) Though he could not make a gift just then, his previous recognition is valid. Tosaf. observes that a dying man's gift is valid, but that he is physically unable to make one. For fuller notes v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) pp. 530ff

(23) I.e., accept kiddushin on her behalf.

BOTH MUST GIVE HER A DIVORCE;[1] BUT IF THEY WISH, ONE GIVES A DIVORCE, AND THE OTHER MARRIES HER. LIKEWISE, IF A WOMAN AUTHORIZES HER AGENT TO GIVE HER IN BETROTHAL, AND SHE GOES AND BETROTHS HERSELF [TO ANOTHER]: IF HER OWN PRECEDED, HER BETROTHAL IS VALID; IF HER AGENT'S PRECEDED, HIS BETROTHAL IS VALID. AND IF THEY DO NOT KNOW, BOTH MUST GIVE HER A DIVORCE; BUT IF THEY WISH, ONE GIVES A DIVORCE AND THE OTHER MARRIES HER. GEMARA. And [both] are necessary. For if we were told [this] of him [the father], that is because a man is well-informed in matters of genealogy;[2] but as for a woman, who is not well-informed in matters of genealogy, I would say that her kiddushin is invalid.[3] And if we were told this of her, that is because a woman carefully investigates and [then] marries; but as for him [her father], I might argue that he does not care.[4] Thus they are necessary.

It was stated: If her father gives her in betrothal on the road, and she betroths herself in the town [to another], and she is now a bogereth,[5] Rab said: Behold, she stands[6] a bogereth before us![7] Samuel said: We regard[8] the kiddushin by both.[9] When [did the betrothals take place]? Shall we say, within the six [months],[10] — can Rab say in this case, 'Behold, she stands a bogereth before us' — surely she has only now become a bogereth![11] But if after six months, — can Samuel say in this case, 'We regard the kiddushin by both' — surely Samuel said: Between the states of na'arah and bogereth there is only six months! This arises only if the betrothal took place on the day that completed the six [months]: Rab said: 'Behold she stands a boger'eth before us' — since she is now a bogereth, [we assume] she was a bogereth in the morning too. But Samuel maintains, she may have brought the 'evidences' [of bogereth][12] only just now.

Now, according to Samuel, wherein does it differ from mikweh?[13] For we learnt: If a mikweh is measured and found to be deficient:[14] all acts of purification which have heretofore been effected through it, whether in private or in public ground, are unclean![15] — There it is different, because we can argue, Let the unclean person [or thing] stand in his presumptive status,[16] and say that he did not perform tebillah.[17] On the contrary, let the mikweh stand in its presumptive status,[18] and say that it was not deficient?[19] — But it is deficient before you! Then here too, she stands a bogereth before you! — She has [only] just now matured. Then there too, [let us say, only] just now has it become deficient? — There, there are two unfavourable conditions;[20] here, there is [only] one.[21]

Again, according to Samuel, wherein does it differ from 'barrel'? For it was taught: If one was wont to examine a barrel [of wine][22] in order continually to separate [terumah for other barrels] in reliance thereon,[23] and then it was found to be acid:[24] for full three days it is certain; there after it is doubtful.[25] Now, we opposed 'barrel' to 'mikweh': why is the latter certain and the former doubt — ful?[26] And R. Hanina of Sura answered: Who is the authority of [the Baraitha about the] 'barrel'? R. Simeon, who also in the case of the mikweh makes it doubtful. For it was taught: All acts of purification which have been heretofore effected through it, whether in private or in public ground, are unclean. R. Simeon ruled: In public ground, they are clean; in private ground, they are in suspense.[27] But in the view of the Rabbis it is retrospectively tebel![28] — There it is different, because one can say: 'Let the tebel stand in its presumptive status and say that it was not made fit.' On the contrary, let the wine stand in its presumptive status and say that it had not turned acid? — But lo! it is acid before you. Then here too, she stands a bogereth before you? — She has [only] just now become a bogereth. Then here too [let us say,] 'It has [only] just now turned acid'? — There, there are two unfavourable conditions;[29] but here there is only one.[30]

Shall we say: It is a dispute of Tannaim?

(1) If she desires to marry a third.
(2) Therefore when he gives her in betrothal, he is sure of his son-in-law's lineage and cancels his agent's authority.
(3) For when she accepts betrothal for herself she may feel uncertain of the man's birth, and therefore tacitly implies that if her agent betroths her to one of purer descent her own act shall be null.
(4) He is not so anxious for a pure match. Hence he did not cancel his agent's authority, but gave her in betrothal himself provisionally, in case his agent would not succeed in securing her betrothal.
(5) She is found on the same day to be a bogereth, over whom her father has no authority.
(6) Lit., 'is'.
(7) Hence the kiddushin by her is certainly invalid.
(8) Lit., 'fear'.
(9) V. p. 47, n. 10.
(10) That generally elapse between the state of a na'arah and that of a bogereth.
(11) But she must have been a na'arah when the betrothals took place.
(12) V. Nid. 47a.
(13) V. Glos.
(14) In water; a mikweh, to be ritually fit, must contain not less than forty se'ahs.
(15) If a doubt of uncleanness arises in private ground, the object in doubt is declared unclean; in public ground, it is clean, v. Sot. 28b. Here, wherever it is, the objects are unclean. This proves that we do not regard it as a matter of doubt, but assume that since the mikweh is deficient now, it was so before too. Then, by analogy, why not assume that since the woman is a bogereth now, she was one from the beginning of the day?
(16) Of uncleanness.
(17) Being in doubt, we have recourse to the status quo.
(18) Which is that it contains the full quantity.
(19) When immersion was performed.
(20) The person's presumptive uncleanness and the present deficiency of the mikweh.
(21) Viz., her present maturity. But on this day, which completes the six months between the na'arah and the bogereth states, she has no presumptive status for either, since it is the day of change.
(22) Every now and then, to see whether it had turned acid.
(23) By declaring, 'Let a certain quantity of wine in this barrel be terumah for another.'
(24) This Tanna regards wine and acid as two different commodities, and one cannot be terumah for the other.
(25) The meaning is disputed in B.B. 96a, two views being stated, (i) For the first three days after the last examination before the present one it was certainly wine, and any separation made then is valid. Afterwards it is doubtful; hence on the one hand, another separation must be made; on the other, what was already separated is forbidden to a lay Israelite, as it may still have been wine, (ii) For three days before this present examination it was certainly acid, and any separation made then is invalid. But before that it is doubtful, as explained in (i); for fuller notes v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 399.
(26) The mikweh is held to have been certainly deficient (v. p. 407, n. 1) hitherto, but we recognise a period of doubt for the barrel, as explained in the preceding note.
(27) I.e., doubtful.
(28) V. Glos. sc. the wine for which terumah was separated from this barrel hitherto. This contradicts Samuel, as before.
(29) (i) The presumptive status of the tebel; and (ii) its present acidity.
(30) V. p. 407, n. 7.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 79b

[For it was taught:] Who can collect from whom? He can collect from them without proof, but they cannot collect from him without proof: this is R. Jacob's view. R. Nathan said: If he is well, he must produce proof that he was sick; and if he is sick, they must produce proof that he was well.[1] Shall we say that Rab rules in accordance with R. Nathan;[2] while Samuel agrees with R. Jacob?[3] — Rab can tell you: I agree[4] even with R. Jacob. R. Jacob rules thus only there, since one can say: 'Let the money stand in its presumptive owner — ship'; but here, can we say: 'Let the body stand in its presumptive state'?[5] And Samuel can say: I agree even with R. Nathan: R. Nathan rules thus only there, since people in general are presumed to be well; [hence] he who withdraws himself from the generality must bring proof. But here, does she then withdraw herself from a previous presumptive status?[6]

Shall we say that it is a dispute of these Tannaim: [For it was taught:] If her father gives her in betrothal on the road, while she betroths herself in the town, and she is a bogereth:[7] one [Baraitha] taught: Behold, she stands a bogereth before us; and another taught: We fear [the validity of] the kiddushin of both. Surely one agrees with Rab, and the other with Samuel? — No. Both agree with Samuel: here she repudiates him [her father];[8] there she does not.[9] Then let us say, since the Baraithas do not differ, the amoraim too do not differ?[10] — Now, is that reasonable; surely R. Joseph son of R. Menasia of Dabil[11] gave a practical ruling in accordance with Rab, whereupon Samuel was offended and exclaimed: 'For everyone [wisdom] is meted out in a small measure, but for this scholar it was meted out in a large measure!'[12] Now, should you think that they do not differ, why was he offended? — Perhaps he gave his ruling where she repudiated him [her father].

Mar Zutra said to R. Ashi: Thus did Amemar say: The law is as Samuel; but R. Ashi said: The law agrees with Rab. And [the final ruling is:] The law is as Rab.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN EMIGRATED OVERSEAS TOGETHER WITH HIS WIFE, AND THEN HE, HIS WIFE, AND HIS CHILDREN RETURNED,[13] AND HE DECLARED, 'BEHOLD, THIS IS THE WOMAN WHO EMIGRATED WITH ME OVERSEAS, AND THESE ARE HER CHILDREN', HE NEED NOT BRING PROOF IN RESPECT OF THE WOMAN OR OF THE CHILDREN.[14] [IF HE DECLARES.] SHE DIED [ABROAD] AND THESE ARE HER CHILDREN,' HE MUST BRING PROOF OF THE CHILDREN, BUT NOT OF THE WOMAN.[15] [IF HE SAID,] 'I MARRIED A WOMAN OVERSEAS, AND BEHOLD, THIS IS SHE, AND THESE ARE HER CHILDREN: HE MUST BRING PROOF OF THE WOMAN,[16] BUT NOT OF THE CHILDREN.[17] [IF HE SAID,] 'SHE DIED, AND THESE ARE HER CHILDREN: HE MUST BRING PROOF OF THE WOMAN AND OF THE CHILDREN.

GEMARA. Rabbah son of R. Huna said: And in all cases it means that they cling to her.[18]

Our Rabbis taught: [If a man declares,] 'I married a woman overseas, he must bring proof about the woman, but not about the children; he must bring proof about the adults, but not about the minors.[19] Now, when is this said? In the case of one wife. But in the case of two wives,[20] he must bring proof about the woman and about the children whether adults or minors.[21]

Resh Lakish said:

---

(1) If a man dangerously ill writes off all his property, without leaving anything for himself, it is an implied condition that the gift shall be valid only if he dies; should he recover, the deed is null, though no stipulation was made. If a man in good health indites such a conveyance, it is valid. The dispute here refers to a case where a man, now well, pleads that the deed was written when he was sick, while the beneficiaries deny it; v. B.B. 153b.

(2) That the present state is also assumed to be the former state, unless the contrary is proved.

(3) That the present does not prove the past.

(4) Lit., 'say'.

(5) The body has none, since it is liable to natural change.

(6) Surely not, since it is natural for her to change on that day.

(7) As on p. 407, n. 7.

(8) Maintaining that she was a bogereth when he accepted kiddushin on her behalf; then only her own betrothal is valid.

(9) Then the kiddushin of both is regarded.

(10) Rab referring to the former case, Samuel to the latter.

(11) There is a Dabil in Armenia, with which this may be identical. On Jews in Armenia v. Obermeyer, p. 296. n. 4.

(12) He is so sure of his superior knowledge that he disregards betrothal by her father, though it may have been valid.
(13) He was childless when he emigrated.
(14) That the former is of pure birth, since her pedigree was already investigated when he married her, as supra 76a, or that the latter are her children (Rashi). Tosaf.: He need not prove that the children are both his and hers.
(15) Rashi: he must prove that the children are of that woman, but not that she was of good birth.
(16) That she is of good birth.
(17) That they are from this woman.
(18) The children are minors, who cling to this woman. Then her motherhood does not require proof.
(19) Who cling to her.
(20) He affirms that he married two wives, of whom one died, while these are the children of the survivor.
(21) The clinging of the young children does not prove her parentage, since she may be their foster-mother.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 80a

This was taught only in respect of Sanctities of the border,[1] but not in respect of genealogy.[2] But R. Johanan maintained: Even in respect of genealogy. Now, R. Johanan is in accord with his view [elsewhere]. For R. Hiyya b. Abba said in R. Johanan's name: We flagellate on the strength of presumption, we stone and burn on the strength of presumption, but we do not burn terumah on the strength of presumption. We flagellate on the strength of presumption, as Rab Judah. For Rab Judah said: If a woman was presumed a niddah by her neighbours, her husband is flagellated on her account as a niddah.[3] We stone and burn on the strength of presumption, as Rabbah son of R. Huna. For Rabbah son of R. Huna said: If a man, woman, boy and girl lived[4] in a house [together],[5] they are stoned and burnt on each other's account.[6] R. Simeon b. Pazzi said in R. Joshua b. Levi's name on Bar Kappara's authority: It once happened that a woman came to Jerusalem carrying an infant on her back; she brought him up and he had intercourse with her, whereupon they were brought before Beth din and stoned. Not because he was definitely her son, but because he clung to her.

But we do not burn terumah on the strength of presumption. For R. Simeon b. Lakish said: We burn [terumah] on the strength of presumption; whereas R. Johanan maintained, we do not. Now, they are in accord with their opinions. For we learnt: If a child is found at the side of a dough, and there is dough in his hand, R. Meir declares it clean; the Sages declare it unclean, because it is a child's nature to dabble.[7] Now, we pondered thereon: What is R. Meir's reason? [And the answer was:] He holds, most children dabble, yet there is a minority who do not, while the dough stands in the presumption of cleanness:[8] hence combine the minority with the presumption, and the majority is weakened. But the Rabbis [argue]: the minority is as non-existent:[9] [now, where there are] a majority and a presumption [opposed to each other], the majority is stronger.[10] Said Resh Lakish on R. Oshaia's authority: That is the presumption[11] on the strength of which terumah is burnt:[12] R. Johanan maintained: This is not the presumption on the strength of which terumah is burnt.[13]

Then on account of which presumption is terumah burnt, in R. Johanan's opinion?[14] — As it was taught: If there is a dough in a house wherein reptiles and frogs breed,[15] and pieces are found in the dough:[16] if they are mostly reptiles, it is unclean; if mostly frogs, it is clean.[17]

It was taught in accordance with R. Johanan: Two things lack the intelligence to be questioned, yet the Sages accounted them as though they possess it:[18] a child, and another. A child, as stated.[19] And another: what is it? — If there is dough in a house which contains fowls and unclean fluid, and holes are found

---

(1) 'Border' (gebul) is the technical term for Palestine outside Jerusalem. 'Sanctities of the border' are terumah, i.e., sacred food which may be consumed outside the Temple and Jerusalem. — If the man is a priest, we rely upon the fact that the children cling to this woman, who is known to be of good birth, and they may eat terumah.
(2) His daughters may not marry into the priesthood unless he proves that they are of this woman.

(3) V. Glos. If he cohabits with her, though there are no actual witnesses of her menstruation.
(4) Lit., 'were brought up'.
(5) As husband and wife, son and daughter.
(6) If the son cohabits with his mother, they are stoned; if the daughter with her father, they are burnt. Now, there is no actual proof of their relationship, save the general presumption.
(7) Rashi: the child certainly took the piece from the dough, and since it is his nature to dabble among refuse and unclean things. he is probably unclean (which is regarded as a certainty) and so defiles the dough. Tosaf.: the child is certainly unclean (because women, even when menstruants, fondle children; Tosaf. Toh. III) and the only question is whether he took the dough himself or it was given him. The Rabbis declare the large dough unclean, because it is a child's nature to dabble with food, and so he probably took it himself.
(8) As long as we do not know that it was defiled.
(9) I.e., it is completely disregarded.
(10) The majority argument favours the uncleanness of the dough. whereas its presumptive status is that it is clean.
(11) Sc. that it is a child's nature to dabble.
(12) If the dough is terumah it is burnt.
(13) And when the Sages declare it unclean they mean it must be kept in suspense without burning it. Thus we have here stated the opinions of R. Johanan and Resh Lakish mentioned supra.
(14) The words 'This is not the presumption etc.' implies that there is a presumption on account of which terumah is burnt.
(15) Dead reptiles are unclean and defile food; frogs are clean, cf. Lev. XI, 29ff.
(16) Evidently caused by these.
(17) And because of the presumption which is based on a majority of a definite number before us, i.e., the greater number of reptiles, this dough, if terumah is burnt, whereas in the case of the child we have no majority immediately available to go by. v. Hul. 11a.
(18) As stated, on p. 407. n. I, when a doubt of uncleanness arises in private ground, the object in doubt is unclean. That is only if that which causes the defilement has the intelligence to be questioned about it; if not, the object is clean, v. Sot. 28b.
(19) Legally a child lacks understanding; yet since the dough is declared unclean, the child is evidently considered to possess intelligence.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 80b

all over the dough,[1] the matter is in suspense: it may neither be eaten [as clean] nor burnt [as unclean].[2]

R. Joshua b. Levi said: We learnt this only of white [i.e., colourless] liquid; but as for red liquid, had it [the fowl] picked at the dough,[3] it would certainly be known. Yet perhaps the dough absorbed it? — Said R. Johanan: Beribbi[4] heard this thing, but not its explanation [which is this]: We learned this only of clear fluid in which a child's reflection may be seen but not of turbid fluid.[5]

MISHNAH. A MAN MAY NOT BE ALONE WITH TWO WOMEN, BUT ONE WOMAN MAY BE ALONE WITH TWO MEN. R. SIMEON SAID: EVEN ONE MAN MAY BE ALONE WITH TWO WOMEN, IF HIS WIFE IS WITH HIM,[6] AND HE MAY SLEEP WITH THEM IN AN INN, BECAUSE HIS WIFE WATCHES HIM. A MAN MAY BE ALONE WITH HIS MOTHER AND HIS DAUGHTER, AND HE MAY SLEEP WITH THEM IN IMMEDIATE BODILY CONTACT;[7] BUT WHEN THEY GROW UP, SHE MUST SLEEP IN HER GARMENT AND HE IN HIS.

GEMARA. What is the reason? — Tanna debe Eliyahu[8] [states]: Because women are temperamentally light-headed.[9]

How do we know it?[10] Said R. Johanan on the authority of R. Ishmael, Where do we find an allusion to yihud[11] in the Torah? — For it is written: If thy brother, the son of thy mother, entice thee [etc.]:[12] does then only a mother's son entice, and not a father's son? But it is to tell you: a son may be alone with his mother, but not with any other woman interdicted in the Torah. To what does the plain meaning of the verse refer?[13] — Said Abaye, It [Scripture] proceeds to a climax.[14] Thus: It goes without saying [that one should disregard] his father's son, for he may hate him[15] and give him evil counsel. But as for his mother's son, who does not hate him,[16] I might say, let him obey him. Therefore we are told [that it is not so].

Our Mishnah does not agree with Abba Saul. For it was taught: Within the first thirty days [of a child's birth] it may be carried out [for burial] in one's bosom,[17] and buried by one woman and two men,[18] but not by one man and two women. Abba Saul said: Even by one man and two women! — You may even say [that it agrees with] Abba Saul: in the time of grief one's passions are subdued.[19] But the Rabbis hold with R. Isaac, who said: Wherefore doth a living man mourn, a man that is in his sins?[20] even in a man's grief, his lusts prevail against him.[21] And Abba Saul?[22] — That is written with reference to one who complains of His [God's] measures, and this is its meaning: Why should he complain of His dispensation; has he then prevailed over his sin?[23] The life which I gave him is sufficient for him.[24] And the Rabbis?[25] — Even as the story of a certain woman: It once happened that she took him out.[26] BUT ONE WOMAN. Rab Judah said in Rab's name: We learnt this only of respectable persons; but as for profligates, [she may not be alone] even with ten. It once happened that ten men carried her [a married woman] out on a bier.[27] R. Joseph said: The proof is that ten people assemble and steal a joist, yet are not ashamed of each other.

Shall we say that the following supports him: Two scholars were sent with him,[28] lest he has intercourse with her on the way.[29] Thus, Only scholars, but not men in general?[30] — Scholars are different, because they know

---

(1) Made by the fowls' beaks.

(2) If it is terumah. This suspense is because the fowls may have drunk the fluid, and then picked at the dough with the liquid still dripping on their beaks. Since this and the case of the child are bracketed together, it follows that there too the matter is in suspense, which agrees with R. Johanan.

(3) With a dripping beak.

(4) V. p. 101, n. 8. Here referring to R. Joshua b. Levi.

(5) Both refer to coloured liquid. If clear, it soaks in easily, and the dough is therefore unclean. Turbid liquid, however, must leave some traces; hence it is clean.

(6) [Var. lec.: 'Even one man may be alone with two women; and if his wife is with him he may sleep with them in an inn etc.']

(7) I.e., a young boy with his mother and a young girl with her father.

(8) This is the name of a Midrash, consisting of two parts, called Seder Eliyahu Rabbah (large) and Seder Eliyahu Zuta (small) respectively.

(9) And even two may yield to temptation.

(10) The interdict against being alone with women.

(11) I.e., the prohibition of being alone with a woman.

(12) Deut. XIII, 6.

(13) R. Johanan's exegesis is obviously not intended to be the plain rendering of the text and does not really dispose of the difficulty.

(14) Lit., 'it says, it is unnecessary (to state the one).'

(15) Because be reduces his patrimony.

(16) Neither affects the other's heritage.

(17) I.e., without a special form of coffin.

(18) Not more than three are necessary in all.

(19) Lit., 'broken'.

(20) Lam. III, 39.

(21) Translating the verse: Of what avail is grief (to subdue lust)? As long as man lives, he must strive to conquer his desire for sin.
(22) How does he translate the verse?
(23) Lit., 'above'.
(24) Even if he suffers. — This is similar to the E.V.
(25) Assuming this interpretation to be correct — and it is certainly nearer to the text — what is their reason?
(26) Rashi: a woman carried out a live child, pretending that he was dead, so that she might satisfy her lust unsuspected. R. Han. explains it otherwise.
(27) As dead: but she was alive, and committed adultery with all.
(28) Lit., were given over to him.'
(29) This refers to a woman charged with adultery, who was tried by the water of bitterness (Num. V, 11-31). Until pronounced innocent she was interdicted to her husband too, and when he took her to Jerusalem for the ordeal two scholars accompanied him.
(30) Which proves that we fear adultery with them.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 81a

to warn him.[1]

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: We learnt this[2] only in town; but on a road, three are necessary, lest one has a call of nature, and so the other is left alone with a forbidden woman. Shall we say that the following supports him: Two scholars were sent with him, lest he has intercourse with her on the way. Two, and he [the husband] himself — that is three? — There it is in order that they may be witnesses against him.[3]

Rab and Rab Judah were walking on a road, and a woman was walking in front of them. Said Rab to Rab Judah, 'Lift your feet before Gehenna.'[4] 'But you yourself said that in the case of respectable people it is well,' he protested. 'Who says that respectable people mean such as you and I?' he retorted. 'Then such as who?' — E.g., R. Hanina b. Pappi and his companions.'[5]

Rab said: We flagellate on account of privacy, but do not interdict on account of same.[6] R. Ashi said: This was said only of privacy with an unmarried woman, but not with a married woman, lest a stigma be cast upon her children.[7] Mar Zutra punished and proclaimed.[8] R. Nahman of Parahetia[9] said to R. Ashi: You too should punish and proclaim! — Some may hear of the one but not of the other.

Rab said: We flagellate on account of an evil rumour,[10] because it is said. Nay [al], my sons; for it is no good report that I hear.[11] Mar Zutra laid a cord about his shoulders[12] and recited to him, 'Nay, my sons'.

Rabbah said: If her husband is in town we have no fear on account of privacy. R. Joseph said: If the door opens to the street, we have no fear on account of privacy. R. Bibi visited R. Joseph. Having dined,[13] he said to them [the servants], 'Remove the ladder from under Bibi.'[14] But Rabbah said: If her husband is in town, we have no fear on account of privacy? — R. Bibi was different, because she was his best friend,[15] and intimate with him.

R. Kahana said: If there are men without [i.e., in the outer chamber] and women within, we have no fear of privacy.[16] If there are men in the inner chamber and women in the outer, we have fear of privacy.[17] In a Baraitha the reverse was taught.[18] Said Abaye: Now that R. Kahana ruled thus, while the Baraitha taught the reverse, let us[19] act stringently. Abaye made a partition of jugs;[20] Raba made a partition of canes.

Abin[21] said: The sorest spot of the year[22] is the festival.[23] Certain [redeemed] captive women came to Nehardea. They were taken to the house of R. Amram the pious, and the ladder was removed from under them.[24] As one passed by,[25] a light fell on the sky lights;[26] [thereupon] R. Amram seized the ladder, which ten men could not raise, and he alone set it up and proceeded to ascend. When he had gone half way up the ladder, he stayed his feet and cried out, 'A fire at R. Amram's!' The Rabbis came and reproved him, 'We have shamed you!'[27] Said he to them: 'Better that you shame Amram in this world than that you be ashamed of him in the next.' He then adjured it [the Tempter] to go forth from him, and it issued from him in the shape of a fiery column. Said he to it: 'See, you are fire and I am flesh, yet I am stronger[28] than you.'[29]

R. Meir used to scoff at transgressors.[30] One day Satan appeared to him in the guise of a woman on the opposite bank of the river. As there was no ferry, he seized the rope[31] and proceeded across. When he had reached half way along the rope, he [Satan] let him go[32] saying: 'Had they not proclaimed in Heaven, "Take heed of R. Meir and his learning," I would have valued your life[33] at two ma'ahs.'[34]

R. Akiba used to scoff at transgressors. One day Satan appeared to him as a woman on the top of a palm tree. Grasping the tree, he went climbing up: but when he reached half-way up the tree he [Satan] let him go, saying: 'Had they not proclaimed in Heaven, "Take heed of R. Akiba and his learning," I would have valued your life at two ma'ahs.'

Pelimo used to say every day, 'An arrow in Satan's eyes!'[35] One day — it was the eve of the Day of Atonement — he disguised himself as a poor man and went and called out at his door; so bread was taken out to him. 'On such a day,' he pleaded, 'when everyone is within, shall I be without?' Thereupon he was taken in and bread was offered him. 'On a day like this,' he urged, 'when everyone sits at table,[36] shall I sit alone!' He was led and sat down at the table. As he sat, his body was covered with suppurating sores, and he was behaving repulsively.[37] 'Sit properly,' he rebuked him.

---

(1) But not because we fear adultery with others; v. Sot. 7a.

(2) That a woman may be alone with two men.

(3) If he cohabits, in which case she does not submit to the ordeal, v. loc. cit.

(4) Speed on ahead of her, lest we be tempted.

(5) V. supra 39b bottom.

(6) Rashi: one is flagellated for being alone with an unmarried woman, but she is not forbidden to her husband on that account. Tosaf.: an unmarried woman is not interdicted to a priest as a zonah (q.v. Glos.) for being alone with a man.

(7) Who may be suspected of bastardy.

(8) He punished privacy with a married woman, yet had it proclaimed that she had not committed adultery.

(9) [Not identified. MS.M.: Parazika, (Farausag) near Bagdad.]

(10) If one is rumoured to be doing wrong, he is flagellated.

(11) I Sam. II, 24. Al (אַל) introduces a negative injunction, and Rab translates: there is a negative injunction, my sons, in respect of a report that is not good.

(12) [I.e., inflicted punishment on the one who was subject to an evil report. The punishment for the offence mentioned here has no basis in the Bible, but belongs to the category of makkath marduth 'a beating for rebellion' instituted by the Rabbis for the enforcement of discipline, and which was not hedged about by the regulations which governed the infliction of the 'forty stripes' prescribed in the Bible]

(13) [Lit., ,'wrapt the bread', with allusion to the custom of placing salt or vegetables between slices of bread.]

(14) They were in an upper chamber, and then R. Joseph and his wife descended, leaving R. Bibi above. Before R. Joseph left the house he gave this order, so that R. Bibi should not go down and be alone with his wife.

(15) The ancient equivalent of 'best man' — here 'best woman — at marriage, v. B.B. 144b.

(16) The men can have no plausible excuse for going to the women, since their natural way leads to the street.

(17) The men's path lies through the women's chamber, and as stated before, one man may not be alone with a number of women.

(18) When men are in the outer chamber, we fear that one may pass into the inner chamber without the others noticing it. But if men are in the inner chamber, we are not afraid that a woman from the outer chamber will enter, because in any case one woman may be alone with two men; nor do we fear that a man may enter the women's chamber, since others will follow him, as that is their natural exit.

(19) This is the reading in the Asheri; cur. edd. 'I shall'.

(20) Where men and women assembled together, e.g.. for a sermon or at a wedding (Rashi).

(21) The Aruch reads: Abaye.

(22) When immorality is most to be feared.

(23) Because various people congregate then.

(24) They were lodged in an upper chamber; cf. story of R. Bibi and R. Joseph supra.

(25) The skylight which divided the upper from the lower storey.

(26) Which revealed her beauty to R. 'Amram below.

(27) You have made us put you to shame by revealing your burning passion.

(28) Lit., 'better'.

(29) On Satan as an independent being v. p. 142, n. 5.

(30) He maintained that they could easily subdue their evil desires if they wished.

(31) Rashi: a rope stretched from bank to bank over a plank bridge.

(32) By resuming his normal shape he freed him from temptation.

(33) Lit., 'blood'.

(34) A small coin, v. supra 12a. — i.e., I would have destroyed you as a worthless thing.

(35) Cf. supra 30a top.

(36) Lit., 'at the tray'.

(37) Wriggling, or perhaps scratching himself.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 81b

Said he, 'Give me a glass [of liquor],' and one was given him. He coughed and spat his phlegm into it. They scolded him, [whereupon] he swooned and died.[1] Then they [the household] heard people crying out, 'Pelimo has killed a man, Pelimo has killed a man!'[2] Fleeing, he hid in a privy; he [Satan] followed him, and he [Pelimo] fell before him. Seeing how he was suffering, he disclosed his identity and said to him, why have you [always] spoken thus?[3] Then how am I to speak?[4] You should say: 'The Merciful rebuke Satan.'[5]

Every time R. Hiyya b. Abba fell upon his face[6] he used to say, 'The Merciful save us from the Tempter.' One day his wife heard him. 'Let us see,' she reflected, 'it is so many years that he has held aloof from me: why then should he pray thus?'[7] One day, while he was studying in his garden, she adorned herself and repeatedly walked up and down before him. 'Who are you?' he demanded. 'I am Harutha,[8] and have returned to-day,' she replied. He desired her. Said she to him, 'Bring me that pomegranate from the uppermost bough.' He jumped up, went, and brought it to her. When he re-entered his house, his wife was firing the oven, whereupon he ascended and sat in it. 'What means this?' she demanded. He told her what had befallen. 'It was I,' she assured him; but he paid no heed to her until she gave him proof.[9] 'Nevertheless,' said he, 'my intention was evil.'[10]

That righteous man [R. Hiyya b. Ashi] fasted all his life, until he died thereof. Even as it was taught: Her husband hath made then, void, and the Lord shall forgive her:[11] of whom does the Writ speak?[12] Of a woman who made a nazirite vow and her husband heard of it and annulled it; but though she was unaware that her husband had annulled it , she drank wine and defiled herself through the dead.[13] When R. Akiba came to this verse, he wept. If of him who intended to eat swine's flesh but chanced upon sheep's flesh, yet the Torah decreed that he requires atonement; how much more so of him who intended to eat swine's flesh and actually ate swine's flesh![14] Similarly, you read: Though he knew it not, yet he is guilty, and shall bear his iniquity.[15] When R. Akiba came to this verse, he wept. If of him who intended to eat shuman[16] but chanced upon heleb,[17] yet the Torah said: 'though he knew it not, yet he is guilty, and shall bear his iniquity': how much more so of him who intended to eat heleb and actually ate heleb! Issi b. Judah said: 'Though he knew it not, yet he is guilty, and shall bear his iniquity' — for this thing[18] all grief-stricken must grieve.

A MAN MAY BE ALONE WITH HIS MOTHER. Rab Judah said in R. Assi's name: A man may be alone with his sister, and dwell with his mother and daughter [alone]. When he stated it in Samuel's presence, he said: One may not be alone with any person interdicted in the Torah, [and] even with an animal. We learnt: A MAN MAY BE ALONE WITH HIS MOTHER AND His DAUGHTER, AND HE MAY SLEEP WITH THEM IN IMMEDIATE BODILY CONTACT, — this refutes Samuel? — Samuel can answer you: And on your view, [how explain] what was taught: '[As regards] a sister, a mother-in-law, and all other forbidden relations of the Torah, one may be alone with them only when there are witnesses', thus, only in the presence of witnesses, but not otherwise? But [you must say] it is [a controversy of] Tannaim. For it was taught: R. Meir said: Guard me from my daughter; R. Tarfon said: Guard me from my daughter-in-law. But a certain disciple scoffed at him. Said R. Abbahu on the authority of R. Hanina b. Gamaliel, 'It did not take long[19] before that disciple offended through his mother-in-law.'

'Even with an animal.' Abaye cleared them from the whole field.[20] R. Shesheth had them put on the other side of the bridge. R. Hanan of Nehardea visited R. Kahana at Pum Nehara.[21] Seeing him sitting and studying while an animal stood before him, he said to him, 'Do you not agree, "even with an animal"?' 'I was thoughtless,' he replied.[22]

Raba said: A man may be alone with two yebamoth;[23] two co-wives, a woman and her mother-in-law, a woman and her mother-in-law's daughter, a woman and her husband's daughter,[24] and with a woman and a child who knows the meaning of intercourse but will not yield herself thereto.[25]

WHEN THEY GROW UP, SHE MUST SLEEP IN HER GARMENT, etc. What is the age?[26] Said R. Ada son of R. 'Azza in R. Assi's name: For a girl, nine years and a day; for a boy, twelve years and a day. Others state: for a girl, twelve years and a day; for a boy, thirteen years and a day.[27] And in both cases they must be, 'breasts fashioned and thine hair was grown.'[28] Rafram b. Papa said in R. Hisda's name: This was taught only of one [a girl] who is not shy of standing nude before him [her father]; but if she is shy of standing nude before him, it is forbidden [for them to sleep in bodily contact]. What is the reason? Temptation stirs[29] her.[30]

R. Aha b. Abba[31] visited R. Hisda, his son-in-law, and took his granddaughter and sat her on his lap. Said he to him, 'Do you not know that she is betrothed?' 'Then you have violated Rab's [dictum].' For Raba Judah said in Rab's name-others state, R. Eleazar [said] — One may not betroth his daughter while she is a minor, [but must wait] until she grows up and says: 'I want So-and-so.' 'But you too have transgressed Samuel's [ruling], for Samuel said: One must not handle[32] a woman. 'I agree with Samuel's other [dictum],' he retorted. For Samuel said,

---

(1) Feigned death.

(2) It was a ventriloquial trick of Satan.

(3) Cursing me.

(4) To drive you from me?

(5) Cf. Zech. III, 2: The Lord rebuke thee, o Satan.

(6) In Talmudic times after the 'Eighteen Benedictions' each person prayed privately for whatever he desired; these prayers are called 'supplications' (tahanunim), and one fell on his face when saying them. V. Elbogen, Der Judische Gottesdienst, pp. 73 ff.

(7) Surely he can restrain his passions.

(8) A well known prostitute of that town.
(9) The pomegranate.
(10) Lit., ‘for a forbidden thing’.
(11) Num. XXX, 13. This refers to the annulment of vows.
(12) How can forgiveness be necessary for breaking a vow when it has ceased to be binding?
(13) Both of which a nazir may not do.
(14) Lit., ‘it came up in his hand to eat, etc.’
(15) Lev. V, 17.
(16) Permitted fat.
(17) Forbidden fat.
(18) That one bears iniquity for sinning unintentionally.
(19) Lit., ‘there were not a few days’.
(20) When he had to pass through it, or when he was studying there.
(21) V. p. 51, n. 1.
(22) Tosaf. observes that these are cases of superstringency, but actually Jews are not suspected of pederasty or bestiality, v. infra.
(23) PI. of yebamah, q. v. Glos.
(24) All these are held to dislike each other, and so each will be afraid.
(25) The child is old enough to talk about it, but not old enough to experience desire.
(26) When they must not sleep in bodily contact?
(27) At these ages they attain their religious majority too.
(28) Ezek. XVI, 7 — desire is not awakened before then.
(29) Lit., ‘clothes’.
(30) Her shyness proves that she is sex conscious.
(31) Var. lec.: Hanan b. Raba.
(32) Lit., ‘make use of.

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 82a

All [is to be done] for the sake of Heaven.[1]

MISHNAH. AN UNMARRIED MAN MUST NOT BE AN ELEMENTARY TEACHER,[2] NOR MAY A WOMAN BE AN ELEMENTARY TEACHER. R. ELEAZAR SAID: ONE ALSO WHO HAS NO WIFE MUST NOT BE AN ELEMENTARY TEACHER.[3] R. JUDAH SAID: AN UNMARRIED MAN MUST NOT TEND CATTLE, NOR MAY TWO UNMARRIED MEN SLEEP TOGETHER UNDER THE SAME COVER,[4] BUT THE SAGES PERMIT IT.

GEMARA. What is the reason? Shall we say, on account of the children?[5] surely it was taught: Said they to R. Judah, Israel are not suspected of either pederasty or bestiality? — But an unmarried man [is forbidden] on account of the children's mothers, and a woman on account of their fathers.[6]

R. ELEAZAR SAID: ONE ALSO WHO HAS NO WIFE. The scholars propounded: [Does it mean,] one who has no wife at all,[7] or whose wife does not live with him? — Come and hear: Also one who has a wife but she does not live with him may not be an elementary teacher.

R. JUDAH SAID: AN UNMARRIED MAN MUST NOT TEND etc. It was taught: They said to R. Judah: Israel is suspected of neither pederasty nor bestiality.

MISHNAH. ONE WHOSE BUSINESS IS WITH WOMEN MUST NOT BE ALONE WITH WOMEN;[8] AND ONE SHOULD NOT TEACH HIS SON A WOMAN'S TRADE.[9] R. MEIR SAID: ONE SHOULD ALWAYS TEACH HIS SON A CLEAN AND EASY CRAFT, AND PRAY TO HIM TO WHOM [ALL] WEALTH AND PROPERTY BELONG. FOR NO CRAFT DOES NOT

CONTAIN [THE POTENTIALITIES OF] POVERTY AND WEALTH, FOR NEITHER POVERTY NOR WEALTH IS DUE TO THE CRAFT, BUT ALL DEPENDS ON ONES MERIT. R. SIMEON B. ELEAZAR SAID: HAVE YOU EVER SEEN A WILD BEAST OR A BIRD WITH A CRAFT? YET THEY ARE SUSTAINED WITHOUT ANXIETY. NOW, THEY WERE CREATED ONLY TO SERVE ME, WHILE I WAS CREATED TO SERVE MY MASTER: SURELY THEN I SHOULD MAKE A LIVING WITHOUT ANXIETY! BUT BECAUSE I HAVE ACTED EVILLY AND DESTROYED MY LIVELIHOOD.[10] ABBA GURION OF ZADIAN[11] SAID ON THE AUTHORITY OF ABBA GURIA: ONE SHOULD NOT TEACH HIS SON [TO BE] AN ASS-DRIVER, CAMEL-DRIVER, WAGGONER,[12] SAILOR, SHEPHERD, OR SHOPKEEPER, BECAUSE THEIR PROFESSION IS THE PROFESSION OF ROBBERS.[13] R. JUDAH SAID IN HIS NAME:[14] MOST ASS-DRIVERS ARE WICKED,[15] WHILE MOST CAMEL-DRIVERS ARE WORTHY MEN;[16] AND MOST SAILORS ARE PIOUS.[17] THE BEST OF DOCTORS ARE DESTINED FOR GEHENNA,[18] AND THE WORTHIEST OF BUTCHERS IS AMALEK'S PARTNER.[19]

R. NEHORAI SAID: I ABANDON EVERY TRADE IN THE WORLD AND TEACH MY SON TORAH ONLY, FOR MAN ENJOYS THE REWARD THEREOF IN THIS WORLD WHILE THE PRINCIPAL REMAINS TO HIM FOR THE WORLD TO COME. BUT ALL OTHER PROFESSIONS ARE NOT SO; FOR WHEN A MAN COMES TO SICKNESS OR OLD AGE OR SUFFERING AND CANNOT ENGAGE IN HIS CRAFT, HE MUST DIE OF STARVATION, WHEREAS THE TORAH IS NOT SO, FOR IT GUARDS HIM FROM ALL EVIL IN HIS YOUTH AND GIVES HIM A FUTURE AND HOPE IN HIS OLD AGE. OF HIS YOUTH WHAT IS SAID? BUT THEY THAT WAIT UPON THE LORD SHALL RENEW THEIR STRENGTH;[20] OF HIS OLD AGE WHAT IS SAID? THEY SHALL STILL BRING FORTH FRUIT IN OLD AGE.[21] AND THUS IT IS SAID OF OUR FATHER ABRAHAM, AND ABRAHAM WAS OLD . . . AND THE LORD BLESSED ABRAHAM WITH EVERYTHING.[22] WE FIND THAT OUR FATHER ABRAHAM OBSERVED THE WHOLE TORAH BEFORE IT WAS GIVEN, FOR IT IS SAID, BECAUSE THAT ABRAHAM OBEYED MY VOICE, AND KEPT MY CHARGE, MY COMMANDMENTS, MY STATUTES, AND MY LAWS.[23]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: He whose business is with women has a bad character. E.g., goldsmiths,[24] carders,[25] [handmill] cleaners,[26] pedlars, wool-dressers, barbers,[27] launderers, bloodletters,[28] bath attendants and tanners. Of these neither a king nor a High Priest may be appointed. What is the reason? Not because they are unfit, but because their profession is mean.

Our Rabbis taught: Ten things were said of a blood-letter. He walks on his side,[29] has a conceited spirit, and leans back[30] when sitting, has a grudging eye and an evil eye;[31] he eats much and excretes little;[32] and he is suspected of adultery, robbery[33] and bloodshed.[34]

Bar Kappara taught: One should always teach his son a clean and easy craft. What is it? — Said Rab Judah:

---

(1) To show my affection for my daughter's little girl.

(2) [The text is difficult. Rashi takes it as an elliptical phrase ‘An unmarried man shall not train himself to be a teacher of children; Krauss, T.A. p. 217, suggests: An unmarried man shall not teach as assistant to the Bible teacher; v. also Low, L. Gesammelte Schriften III. p. 17, n. 1.]

(3) This is discussed in the Gemara.

(4) Lit., ‘cloak’.

(5) Whom they teach — is it feared that they will commit pederasty with them?

(6) The children were brought to school by their parents.

(7) I.e., a widower.

(8) Even many, because he is intimate with them.

(9) I.e., a trade in women's requirements.
(10) Much of man's troubles are of his own making. — 'I have acted evilly' states this general truth, and is not to be confused with the doctrine of Original Sin, which is foreign to Judaism.
(11) [Identified with Bethsaida in Galilee, v. Klein, MGWJ. 1915, p. 167.]
(12) [In the separate editions of the Mishnah: a barber.]
(13) They lend themselves to fraud. — Drivers, because when sent on long journeys they hire themselves to others in time that is not their own; shepherds, because they lead their flocks into others' fields; shopkeepers, because it is easy to supply adulterated goods. — This probably reflects the actual state of the times.
(14) Abba Guria's.
(15) As explained in the previous note.
(16) Their way lies through the desert, the awe of which leads to humility and a Godfearing spirit.
(17) The dangers of the sea turn their thoughts to God.
(18) Rashi: being unafraid of sickness they are haughty before the Almighty. Again, their treatment is sometimes fatal; while on the other hand, by refusing treatment to the poor they may indirectly cause their death; or it is probable that it is not directed against healing as such, but against the 'advanced' views held by physicians in those days, (v. Jewish Chronicle, 1-3-35.)
(19) When they have animals of doubtful fitness for food they grudge their loss and sell them as fit.
(20) Isa. XL, 31.
(21) Ps. XCII, 15.
(22) Gen. XXIV, 1.
(23) Ibid. XXVI, 5.
(24) Who make trinkets for women.
(25) Who comb wool for women's garments.
(26) Used by housewives.
(27) Women take their children to them.
(28) Lit., 'a scraper', one who makes incisions in the skin to draw off blood.
(29) I.e., haughtily, putting on 'side'.
(30) Lit., 'suspends himself.
(31) He is miserly, and casts an evil eye upon people, so that they should need his services.
(32) [Because he joins his patients at the meals which follow the operation, and which must be the best food.]
(33) [His women patients rob their husbands in order to pay him for his services.]
(34) [By drawing off too much blood.]

Talmud - Mas. Kiddushin 82b

Quilting.[1]

It was taught: Rabbi said: No craft can disappear from the world — happy is he who sees his parents in a superior craft, and woe to him who sees his parents in a mean craft. The world cannot exist without a perfume-maker and without a tanner-happy is he whose craft is that of a perfume-maker, and woe to him who is a tanner by trade. The world cannot exist without males and without females-happy is he whose children are males, and woe to him whose children are females.[2]

R. Meir said: One should always teach his son a clean and easy craft, and earnestly pray to Him to Whom [all] wealth and property belong, for neither poverty nor wealth comes from one's calling, but from[3] Him to whom wealth and property belong, as it is said: The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts.[4]

R. SIMEON B. ELEAZAR SAID, HAVE YOU EVER SEEN [etc.]. It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: In my whole lifetime I have not seen a deer engaged in gathering fruits, a lion carrying burdens, or a fox as a shopkeeper, yet they are sustained without trouble, though they were created only to serve me, whereas I was created to serve my Maker. Now, if these, who were created only to serve me are sustained without trouble, how much more so should I be sustained without trouble, I who was created to serve my Maker! But it is because I have acted evilly and destroyed my livelihood, as it is said, your iniquities have turned away these things.[5]

R. NEHORAI SAID: I ABANDON EVERY TRADE etc. It was taught: R. Nehorai said: I abandon all trades in the world and teach my son only Torah, for every trade in the world stands a man in stead only in his youth, but in his old age he is exposed to hunger. But the Torah is not so: it stands by him in his youth and gives him a future and hope in his old age. Of the time of his youth what Is said? But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles.[6] Of his old age what is said? They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be full of sap and green.[7]

---

(1) Stitching in furrows; cf. supra 17a on needlework being easy.

(2) Probably not prejudice against the female sex, but because daughters were a greater anxiety — a dowry had to be found for them, and they easily got into mischief; cf. Sanh. 100b, the quotation from the Book of Ben Sira.

(3) Lit., 'to'.

(4) Hag. II, 8.

(5) Jer. V, 25.

(6) Isa. XL, 31.

(7) Ps. XCII, 15.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 2a

C H A P T E R I

MISHNAH. THE PRINCIPAL CATEGORIES OF DAMAGE[1] ARE FOUR: THE OX,[2] THE PIT,[3] THE 'SPOLIATOR' [MAB'EH][4] AND THE FIRE.[5] THE ASPECTS OF THE OX ARE [IN SOME RESPECTS] NOT [OF SUCH LOW ORDER OF GRAVITY] AS THOSE OF THE 'SPOLIATOR';[6] NOR ARE [IN OTHER RESPECTS] THOSE OF THE 'SPOLIATOR' [OF SUCH LOW ORDER OF GRAVITY] AS THOSE OF THE OX;[6] NOR ARE THE ASPECTS OF EITHER OF THEM, IN WHICH THERE IS LIFE, [OF SUCH LOW ORDER OF GRAVITY] AS THOSE OF THE FIRE WHICH IS NOT ENDOWED WITH LIFE;[6] NOR ARE THE ASPECTS OF ANY OF THESE, THE HABIT OF WHICH IS TO BE MOBILE AND DO DAMAGE, [OF SUCH LOW ORDERS OF GRAVITY] AS THOSE OF THE PIT OF WHICH IT IS NOT THE HABIT TO MOVE ABOUT AND DO DAMAGE.[6] THE FEATURE COMMON TO THEM ALL IS THAT THEY ARE IN THE HABIT OF DOING DAMAGE; AND THAT THEY HAVE TO BE UNDER YOUR CONTROL SO THAT WHENEVER ANY ONE [OF THEM] DOES DAMAGE THE OFFENDER IS LIABLE TO INDEMNIFY WITH THE BEST OF HIS ESTATE.[7]

GEMARA. Seeing that PRINCIPAL CATEGORIES are specified, it must be assumed that there are derivatives. Are the latter equal in law to the former or not?

Regarding Sabbath we learnt: The principal classes of prohibited acts are forty less one.[8] 'Principal classes' implies that there must be subordinate classes. Here the latter do in law equal the former; for there is no difference between a principal and a subordinate [prohibited act] with respect either to the law of sin-offering[9] or to that of capital punishment by stoning.[10] In what respect then do the two classes differ? — The difference is that if one simultaneously committed either two principal [prohibited] acts or two subordinate acts one is liable [to bring a sin-offering] for each act, whereas if one committed a principal act together with its respective Subordinate, one is liable for one [offering] only. But according to R. Eliezer who imposes the liability [of an offering] for a subordinate act committed along with its Principal,[11] to begin with why is the one termed 'Principal' and the other 'Subordinate'? — Such acts as were essential in the construction of the Tabernacle are termed 'Principal',[12] whereas such as were not essential in the construction of the Tabernacle are termed 'Subordinate.'

Regarding Defilements we have learnt:[13] The Primary Defilements: The [Dead] Reptile,[14] the Semen Virile[15]

---

(1) Explicitly dealt with in Scripture.

(2) Ex. XXI, 35.

(3) Ibid. 33.

(4) Cf. p. 9.

(5) Ex. XXII. 5.

(6) Hence the latter, if not specifically dealt with, would not have been derived from the former.

(7) When money is not tendered; cf. infra p. 33.

(8) Shab. VII, 2.

(9) Cf. Lev. IV, 27-35.

(10) Num. XV, 32-36.

(11) Shab. 75a.

(12) On account of their being stated in juxtaposition in Scripture; v. Ex. XXXV, 2-XXXVI, 7.

(13) Kel. I, 1.

(14) Lev. XI, 29-32.

(15) Ibid. XV, 17.

and the Person who has been in contact with a human corpse.[1] [In this connection] their Resultants[2] are not equal to them in law; for a primary defilement[3] contaminates both human beings and utensils,[4] while Resultants defile only foods and drinks,[5] leaving human beings and utensils undefiled.

Here [in connection with damages] what is the [relationship in] law [between the principal and the secondary kinds]? — Said R. Papa: Some of the derivatives are on a par with their Principals whereas others are not.

Our Rabbis taught: Three principal categories [of damage] have been identified in Scripture with Ox: The Horn, The Tooth, and The Foot. Where is the authority for 'Horn'? For our Rabbis taught: If it will gore.[6] There is no 'goring' but with a horn, as it is said: And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah made him horns of iron, and said, Thus saith the Lord, With these shalt thou gore the Arameans;[7] and it is further said, His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of a unicorn: with them he shall gore the people together etc.[8]

Why that 'further' citation? — Because you might perhaps say that Pentateuchal teachings cannot be deduced from post-Pentateuchal texts;[9] come therefore and hear: His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of a unicorn etc.[8] But is that a [matter of] deduction? Is it not rather merely an elucidation of the term 'goring'[10] as being effected by a horn?[11] — [Were it not for the 'further' citation] you might say that the distinction made by Scripture between [the goring of a] Tam[12] and [that of a] Mu'ad[13] is confined to goring effected by a severed horn,[14] whereas in the case of a horn still naturally attached, all goring is [habitual and consequently treated as of a] Mu'ad; come therefore and hear: His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of a unicorn, etc.[8]

What are the derivatives of Horn? — Collision, Biting, [malicious] Falling and Kicking.

Why this differentiation? If Goring is termed Principal because it is expressly written, If it will gore,[15] why should this not apply to Collision, as it is also written, If it will collide?[16] — That collision denotes goring, as it was taught: The text opens with collision[16] and concludes with goring[17] for the purpose of indicating that 'collision' here denotes 'goring'.

Why the differentiation between injury to man, regarding which it is written If it will gore,[18] and injury to animal regarding which it is written if it will collide?[19] — Man who possesses foresight is, as a rule, injured [only] by means of [wilful] 'goring',[20] but an animal, lacking foresight, is injured by mere 'collision'. A [new] point is incidentally made known to us, that [an animal] Mu'ad to injure man is considered Mu'ad in regard to animal,[21] whereas Mu'ad to injure animal is not considered Mu'ad in regard to man.[20]

'Biting': is not this a derivative of Tooth? — No; Tooth affords the animal gratification from the damage while Biting affords it no gratification from the damage.

'Falling and Kicking'; are not these derivatives of Foot? — No; the damage of foot occurs frequently while the damage of these does not occur frequently.

But what then are the derivatives which, R. Papa says, are not on a par with their Principals? He can hardly be said to refer to these, since what differentiation is possible? For just as Horn does its damage with intent and, being your property, is under your control, so also these [derivatives] do damage with intent and, being your property, are under your control! The derivatives of Horn are therefore equal to Horn, and R. Papa's statement refers to Tooth and Foot.

'Tooth' and 'Foot'- where in Scripture are they set down? — It is taught: And he shall send forth[22] denotes Foot, as it is [elsewhere] expressed, That send forth the feet of the ox and the ass.[23] And it shall consume[22] denotes Tooth as [elsewhere] expressed, As the tooth consumeth

---

(1) Num. XIX, 11-22.

(2) I.e., the objects rendered defiled by coming in contact with any Primary Defilement.

(3) Such as any one of these three and the others enumerated in Kelim I.

(4) Cf. Lev. XI, 32-33.

(5) V. ibid. 34.

(6) Ex. XXI, 28.

(7) I Kings XXII, 11.

(8) Deut. XXXIII, 17.

(9) [דברי קבדה 'words of tradition'; i.e. the teachings received on tradition from the prophets, a designation for non-Pentateuchal, primarily prophetic, texts. V. Bacher, op. cit., I, 166, II, 185.] The meaning of Ex. XXI, 28, should therefore not he deduced from I Kings XXII, 11.

(10) Which might surely he obtained even from post- Pentateuchal texts.

(11) Hence again why that 'further' citation?

(12) 'Innocuous,' i.e., an animal not having gored on more than three occasions; the payment for damage done on any of the first three incidents (of goring] is half of the total assessment and is realised out of the body of the animal that gored, cf. Ex. XXI, 35 and infra 16b.

(13) 'Cautioned,' i.e., after it had already gored three times, and its owner had been duly cautioned, the payment is for the whole damage and is realised out of the owner's general estate; v. Ex. XXI, 36, and infra 16b.

(14) As was the case in the first quotation from Kings.

(15) V. p. 2, n. 13.

(16) Ex. XXI, 35.

(17) Ibid. 36.

(18) V. p. 2, n. 13.

(19) V. p. 3; n. 10.

(20) As it is more difficult to injure a man than an animal.

(21) Cf. infra 205.

(22) Ex. XXII, 4.

(23) Isa. XXXII, 20.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 3a

to entirety.[1]

The Master has [just] enunciated: 'And he shall send forth denotes Foot , as it is [elsewhere] expressed, That send forth the feet of the ox and the ass.' His reason then is that the Divine Law[2] [also] says, That send forth the feet of the ox and the ass, but even were it not so, how else could you interpret the phrase?[3] It could surely not refer to Horn which is already [elsewhere] set down,[4] nor could it refer to Tooth since this is likewise [already] set down?[3] — It was essential[5] as otherwise it might have entered your mind to regard both [phrases][6] as denoting Tooth: the one when there is destruction of the corpus and the other when the corpus remains unaffected; it is therefore made known to us that this is not the case. Now that we have identified it with Foot, whence could be inferred the liability of Tooth in cases of non-destruction of the corpus? From the analogy of Foot;[7] just as [in the case of] Foot no difference in law is made between destruction and non-destruction of corpus, so [in the case of] Tooth no distinction is made between destruction and non-destruction of corpus.

The Master has [just] enunciated: ‘And it shall consume denotes Tooth, as elsewhere expressed, As the tooth consumeth to entirety.’ His reason then is that the Divine Law [also] says, As the tooth consumeth to entirety, but even were it not so, how else could you interpret the phrase? It could surely not refer to Horn which is already elsewhere set down,[4] nor could it refer to Foot, since this is likewise elsewhere set down?[3] — It is essential,[8] as otherwise it might have entered your mind to regard both phrases[6] as denoting Foot: the one when the cattle went of its own accord and the other[9] when it was sent by its owner [to do damage]; it is, therefore, made known to us that this is not so. Now that we have identified it with Tooth, whence could be inferred the liability of Foot in cases when the cattle went of its own accord? — From the analogy of Tooth;[10] just as in the case of Tooth there is no difference in law whether the cattle went of its own accord or was sent by its owner, so [in the case of] Foot there is no difference in law whether the cattle went of its own accord or was sent by its owner.

But supposing Divine Law had only written, And he shall send forth,[11] omitting And it shall consume, would it not imply both Foot and Tooth? Would it not imply Foot, as it is written, That send forth the feet of the ox and the ass? Again, would it not also imply Tooth, as it is written, And the teeth of beasts will I send upon them?[12] — If there were no further expression I would have said either one or the other [might be meant], either Foot, as the damage done by it is of frequent occurrence, or Tooth, as the damage done by it affords gratification.[13] Let us see now, they are equally balanced, let them then both be included, for which may you exclude?[14] — It is essential [to have the further expression], for [otherwise] it might have entered your mind to assume that these laws [of liability] apply only to intentional trespass,[15] exempting thus cases where the cattle went of its own accord; it is, therefore, made known to us that this is not the case.

The derivative of Tooth, what is it? — When [the cattle] rubbed itself against a wall for its own pleasure [and broke it down], or when it spoiled fruits [by rolling on them] for its own pleasure. Why are these cases different? Just as Tooth affords gratification from the damage [it does] and, being your possession, is under your control, why should not this also be the case with its derivatives which similarly afford gratification from the damage [they do] and, being your possession are under your control? — The derivative of Tooth is therefore equal to Tooth, and R. Papa's statement [to the contrary][16] refers to the derivative of Foot.

What is the derivative of Foot? — When it did damage while in motion either with its body or with its hair, or with the load [which was] upon it, or with the bit in its mouth, or with the bell on its neck. Now, why should these cases be different? Just as Foot does frequent damage and, being your possession, is under your control, why should not this also be the case with its derivatives which similarly do frequent damage and, being your possession, are under your control? The derivative of Foot is thus equal to Foot, and R. Papa's statement [to the contrary][17] refers to the derivative of the Pit.

What is the derivative of Pit? It could hardly be said that the Principal is a pit of ten handbreadths deep and its derivative one nine handbreadths deep, since neither nine nor ten is stated in Scripture! — That is no difficulty: [as] And the dead beast shall be his[18] the Divine Law declares, and it was quite definite with the Rabbis[19] that ten handbreadths could occasion death, whereas nine might inflict injury but could not cause death . But however this may be, is not the one [of ten] a principal [cause] in the event of death, and the other [of nine] a principal [cause] in the event of [mere] injury? — Hence [Rab Papa's statement] must refer to a stone, a knife and luggage which were placed on public ground and did damage. In what circumstances? If they were abandoned [there], according to both Rab and Samuel,[20] they would be included in [the category of] Pit;[21]

---

(1) I Kings XIV, 10. [‘Galal’, E.V.: ‘dung’, is interpreted as ‘marble’, ‘ivory’, which teeth resemble; cf. Ezra V, 8. V.

Tosaf. a.l.]
(2) [Lit., 'The Merciful One,' i.e., God, whose word Scripture reveals. V. Bacher, Exeg. Term., II, 207f.]
(3) V. p. 4, n. 6.
(4) Ex. XXI, 35-36.
(5) To cite the verse from Isaiah.
(6) Send forth and consume, cf. n. 2.
(7) Where no term expressing 'Consumption' is employed.
(8) To cite the verse from Kings.
(9) I.e., 'He shall send forth'.
(10) Where no term expressing 'sending forth' is employed.
(11) V. p. 4, n. 6.
(12) Deut. XXXII, 24.
(13) And thus there would be no definite sanction for action in either.
(14) V., however, infra p. 17, that Tooth and Foot were recorded in Scripture not for the sake of liability but to be immune for damage done by them on public ground.
(15) As signified by, 'He shall send forth'.
(16) Cf. supra p. 2.
(17) V. p. 6, n. 6.
(18) Ex. XXI, 34.
(19) Infra 50b.
(20) Infra p. 150.
(21) Being, like Pit, a public nuisance.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 3b

if [on the other hand] they were not abandoned, then, according to Samuel, who maintains that all public nuisances come within the scope of the law applicable to Pit, they would be included in Pit, whereas according to Rab, who maintains that in such circumstances they rather partake of the nature of Ox, they are equivalent in law to Ox.[1]

[And even according to Samuel] why should [the derivatives of Pit] be different? Just as Pit is from its very inception a source of injury, and, being your possession, is under your control, so is the case with these [derivatives] which from their very inception [as nuisances] also are sources of injury and being your possession, are under your control! — The derivative of Pit is therefore equal to Pit, and R. Papa's statement [to the contrary] refers to the derivative of 'Spoliator'. But what is it? If we are to follow Samuel, who takes 'Spoliator' to denote Tooth,[2] behold we have [already] established that the derivative of Tooth equals Tooth;[3] if on the other hand Rab's view is accepted, identifying 'Spoliator' With Man,[2] what Principals and what derivatives could there be in him? You could hardly suggest that Man [doing damage] while awake is Principal, but becomes derivative [when causing damage] while asleep, for have we not learnt:[4] 'Man is in all circumstances Mu'ad,[5] whether awake or asleep'? — Hence [R. Papa's statement[6] will] refer to phlegm[7] [expectorated from mouth or nostrils]. But in what circumstances? If it did damage while in motion, it is [man's] direct agency! If [on the other hand] damage resulted after it was at rest, it would be included, according to both Rab and Samuel,[8] in the category of Pit! — The derivative of 'Spoliator' is therefore equal to 'Spoliator'; and R. Papa's statement [to the contrary][6] refers to the derivative of Fire.

What is the derivative of Fire? Shall I say it is a stone, a knife and luggage which having been placed upon the top of one's roof were thrown down by a normal wind and did damage? Then in what circumstances? If they did damage while in motion, they are equivalent to Fire; and why should they be different? Just as Fire is aided by an external force, and, being your possession, is under your control, so also is the case with these [derivatives] which are aided by an external force, and, being your possession, are under your control! — The derivative of Fire is therefore equal to Fire; and R.

Papa's statement [to the contrary][6] refers to the derivative of Foot.

'Foot'! Have we not established that the derivative of Foot is equal to Foot?[9] — There is the payment of half damages done by pebbles [kicked from under an animal's feet] — a payment established by tradition.[10] On account of what [legal] consequence is it designated 'derivative of Foot'?[11] So that the payment should likewise be enforced [even] from the best of the defendant's possessions.[12] But did not Raba question whether the half-damage of Pebbles is collected only from the body of the animal or from any of the defendant's possessions?[13] — This was doubtful [only] to Raba, whereas R. Papa was [almost] certain about it [that the latter is the case]. But according to Raba, who remained doubtful [on this point], on account of what [legal] consequence is it termed 'derivative of Foot'?[14] — So that it may also enjoy exemption [where the damage was done] on public ground.[15]

THE SPOLIATOR [MABEH] AND THE FIRE etc. What is [meant by] MAB'EH? — Rab said: MAB'EH denotes Man [doing damage], but Samuel said: MAB'EH signifies Tooth [of trespassing cattle]. Rab maintains that MAB'EH denotes Man,[16] for it is written: The watchman said: The morning cometh, and also the night — if ye will enquire, enquire ye.[17] Samuel [on the other hand] holds that MAB'EH signifies Tooth, for it is written: How is Esau searched out! How are his hidden places sought out![18] But how is this deduced?[19] As rendered by R. Joseph:[20] How was Esau ransacked? How were his hidden treasures exposed?[21]

Why did not Rab agree with [the interpretation of] Samuel? — He may object: Does the Mishnah employ the term NIB'EH[22] [which could denote anything 'exposed']?

Why [on the other hand] did not Samuel follow [the inter pretation of] Rab? — He may object: Does the Mishnah employ the term BO'EH[23] [which could denote 'an enquirer']?

But in fact the Scriptural quotations could hardly bear out the interpretation of either of them. Why then did not Rab agree with Samuel? — THE OX [in the Mishnah] covers all kinds of damage done by ox.[24] How then will Samuel explain the fact that ox has already been dealt with? — Rab Judah explained: THE OX [in the Mishnah] denotes Horn, while MAB'EH stands for Tooth; and this is the sequence in the Mishnah: The aspects of Horn, which does not afford gratification from the injury [are not of such order of gravity] as those of Tooth which does afford gratification from the damage;[25]

---

(1) The derivatives of which are equal to the Principal.

(2) Infra p. 9.

(3) Supra p. 7.

(4) Infra p. 136.

(5) I.e., civilly liable in full for all misdeeds.

(6) V. p. 6, n. 6.

(7) I.e., the derivative of Man.

(8) V. p. 7, n. 4.

(9) Supra p. 7.

(10) Cf. infra p. 80.

(11) Since it pays only half the damage.

(12) Unlike half damages in the case of Horn where the payment is collected only out of the body of the animal that did the damage.

(13) Infra p. 83.

(14) V. p. 8, n. 10.

(15) Just as is the case with Foot, cf. infra p. 17.

(16) As possessing freedom of will and the faculty of discretion and enquiry, i.e., constituting a cultural and rational being; idiots and minors are thus excluded, cf. infra p. 502.

(17) תבעון בעיו Isa. XXI, 12; the root in each case being the same.

(18) נבעו Ob. I, 6; the root in each case being the same.

(19) I.e., how could a term denoting 'seeking out' stand for Tooth?

(20) Who was exceptionally well conversant with Targumic texts. Some explain it on account of his having been blind (v. infra p. 501), and thus unable to cite the original Biblical text because of the prohibition to recite orally passages from the Written Law, cf. Git. 60a. [Others ascribe the edition of the Targum on the prophets to him, v. Graetz (Geschichte IV, 326.]

(21) נבעו (E.V.: sought out), translated exposed, indicates exposure and may therefore designate Tooth which is naturally hidden but becomes exposed in grazing.

(22) In the passive voice.

(23) In the kal denoting mere action; the causative (hiph'il) is used with reference to Tooth which the animal exposes in grazing.

(24) Cattle, including Tooth.

(25) And therefore the liability of Tooth could not he derived from that of Horn.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 4a

nor are the aspects of Tooth, which is not prompted by malicious intention to injure, [of such order of gravity] as those of Horn which is prompted by malicious intention to do damage.[1] But can this not be deduced a fortiori? If Tooth, which is prompted by no malicious intention to injure, involves liability to pay, how much more so should this apply to Horn, which is prompted by malicious intention to do damage? — Explicit [Scriptural] warrant for the liability of Horn is, nevertheless, essential, as otherwise you might have possibly thought that I assume [immunity for Horn on] an analogy to the case of man- and maid-servants. Just as a man- and maid-servant, although prompted by malicious intention to do damage, do not devolve any liability [upon their masters],[2] so is the law here [in the case of Horn]. R. Ashi, however, said: Is not the immunity in the case of damage done by man-and maid-servants due to the special reason that, but for this, a servant provoked by his master might go on burning down[3] another's crops, and thus make his master liable to pay sums of money day by day?[4] — The sequence [of the analysis in the Mishnah] must accordingly be [in the reverse direction]: The aspects of Horn, which is actuated by malicious intention to do damage, are not [of such low order of gravity] as those of Tooth, which is not actuated by malicious intention to do damage; again, the aspects of Tooth which affords gratification while doing damage are not [of such low order of gravity] as those of Horn, which affords no gratification from the damage.[5] But what about Foot? Was it entirely excluded [in the Mishnah]? — [The generalisation,][6] Whenever damage has occurred, the offender is liable, includes Foot. But why has it not been stated explicitly? — Raba therefore said: THE OX [stated in the Mishnah] implies Foot,[7] while MAB'EH stands for Tooth; and this is the sequence [in the Mishnah]: The aspects of Foot, which does frequent damage, are not [of such low order of gravity] as those of Tooth, the damage by which is not frequent: again, the aspects of Tooth, which affords gratification from the damage, are not [of such low order of gravity] as those of Foot, which does not afford gratification from the damage.[8] But what about Horn? Was it entirely excluded [in the Mishnah]? — [The generalisation,] Whenever damage has occurred, the offender is liable, includes Horn. But why has it not been stated explicitly? — Those which are Mu'ad ab initio are mentioned explicitly [in the Mishnah] but those which initially are Tam,[9] and [only] finally become Mu'ad, are not mentioned explicitly.

Now as to Samuel, why did he not adopt Rab's interpretation [of the Mishnaic term MAB'EH]? — He may object: If you were to assume that it denotes Man, the question would arise, is not Man explicitly dealt with [in the subsequent Mishnah]: 'Mu'ad cattle and cattle doing damage on the plaintiff's premises and Man'?[10] But why then was Man omitted in the opening Mishnah? — [In that Mishnah] damage done by one's possessions is dealt with, but not that done by one's person.

Then, how could even Rab uphold his interpretation, since Man is explicitly dealt with in the subsequent Mishnah?[10] — Rab may reply: The purpose of that Mishnah is [only] to enumerate Man among those which are considered Mu'ad. What then is the import of [the analysis introduced by] THE ASPECTS ARE NOT etc.? — This is the sequence: The aspects of Ox, which entails the payment of kofer [for loss of human life],[11] are not [of such low order of gravity] as those of Man who does not pay [monetary] compensation for manslaughter;[12] again, the aspects of Man who [in case of human bodily injury] is liable for [additional] four items,[13] are not [of such low order of gravity] as those of Ox, which is not liable for those four items.[14]

THE FEATURE COMMON TO THEM ALL IS THAT THEY ARE IN THE HABIT OF DOING DAMAGE. Is it usual for Ox [Horn][15] to do damage? — As Mu'ad. But even as Mu'ad, is it usual for it to do damage? — Since it became Mu'ad this became its habit. Is it usual for Man to do damage? — When he is asleep. But even when asleep is it usual for Man to do damage? — While stretching his legs or curling them this is his habit.

THEIR HAVING TO BE UNDER YOUR CONTROL. Is not the control of man's body [exclusively] his own?[16] — Whatever view you take,[17] behold Karna taught: The principal categories of damage are four and Man is one of them. [Now] is not the control of a man's body [exclusively] his own? You must therefore say with R. Abbahu who requested the tanna[18] to learn, 'The control of man's body is [exclusively] his own,'

---

(1) And therefore the liability of Horn could not be derived from that of Tooth.

(2) Cf. infra p. 502.

(3) But v. infra pp. 47 and 112.

(4) Yad. IV, 6; and the suggested analogy is thus untenable.

(5) So that neither Horn nor Tooth could he derived from each other.

(6) Infra p. 36, v. Tosaf.

(7) And not Horn as first suggested.

(8) So that neither Foot nor Tooth could he derived from each other.

(9) As is the case with Horn.

(10) V. infra 15b.

(11) Lit., 'Ransom', i.e., monetary compensation for manslaughter, cf Ex. XXI, 30; v. Glos.

(12) V. Num. XXXV, 31-32. Hence Man could not be derived from Ox.

(13) I.e., Pain, Healing, Loss of Time and Degradation; cf. infra p. 473.

(14) Ox is liable only for Depreciation.

(15) According to Rab who takes Ox as including Horn.

(16) The phrase in the Mishnah is thus inappropriate to man.

(17) Even if you take Mab'eh as Tooth.

(18) [The term here designates one whose special task was to communicate statements of older authorities to expounding teachers, v. Glos.]

that here also it is to be understood that the control of man's body is his own.[1]

R. Mari, however, demurred: Say perhaps MAB'EH denotes water [doing damage], as it is written, As when the melting fire burneth, fire tib'eh [causeth to bubble] water?[2] — Is it written, 'Water bubbles'? It is written, Fire causes bubbling.[3] R. Zebid demurred: Say then that MAB'EH denotes Fire, as it is fire to which the act of 'tib'eh' in the text is referred? — If this be so what is then the explanation of THE MAB'EH AND THE FIRE? If you suggest the latter to be the interpretation of the former,[4] then instead of 'FOUR' there will be 'three'? If however, you suggest that OX constitutes two [kinds of damage],[5] then what will be the meaning of [the Mishnaic text]: NOR ARE

THE ASPECTS OF EITHER OF THEM [OX and MAB'EH] IN WHICH THERE IS LIFE? Is there any life in fire? Again, what will be conveyed by [the concluding clause] AS THOSE OF THE FIRE?

R. Oshaia: taught There are thirteen principal categories of damage: The Unpaid Bailee and the Borrower, the Paid Bailee and the Hirer, Depreciation, Pain [suffered]. Healing, Loss of Time, Degradation and the Four enumerated in the Mishnah, thus making [a total of] thirteen. Why did our Tanna mention [only the Four and] not the others? According to Samuel,[6] this presents no difficulty, as the Mishnah mentions only damage committed by one's possessions and not that committed by one's person, but according to Rab[7] let the Mishnah also mention the others? — In the mention of Man all kinds of damage committed by him are included. But does not R. Oshaia also mention Man?[8] — Two kinds of damage could result from Man: Man injuring man is treated as one subject, and Man damaging chattel[9] as another.

If this be so let R. Oshaia similarly reckon Ox twice, as two kinds of damage could result also from Ox: [i] Ox damaging chattel[9] and [ii] Ox injuring man? — But is that a logical argument? It is quite proper to reckon Man in this manner as Man damaging chattel pays only for Depreciation, while Man injuring man may also have to pay for four other kinds of damage,[10] but how can Ox be thus reckoned when the liability for damage done by it to either man or chattel is alike and is confined to [only one kind of damage, i.e.] Depreciation?

But behold, are not the Unpaid Bailee and the Borrower, the Paid Bailee and the Hirer, within the sphere of Man damaging chattel and they are nevertheless reckoned by R. Oshaia? — Direct damage and indirect damage are treated by him independently.

R. Hiyya taught: There are twenty-four principal kinds of damage: Double Payment,[11] Fourfold or Fivefold Payment,[12] Theft,[13] Robbery,[14] False Evidence,[15] Rape,[16] Seduction,[17] Slander,[18] Defilement,[19] Adulteration,[20] Vitiation of wine,[21] and the thirteen enumerated above by R. Oshaia,[22] thus making [the total] twenty-four.

Why did not R. Oshaia reckon the twenty-four? — He dealt only with damage involving civil liability but not with that of a punitive nature. But why omit Theft and Robbery which also involve civil liability? — These kinds of damage may be included in the Unpaid Bailee and the Borrower.[23] Why then did not R. Hiyya comprehend the former in the latter? — He reckoned them separately, as in the one case the possession of the chattel was acquired lawfully,[24] while in the other[25] the acquisition was unlawful.

[Why did not R. Oshaia]

---

(1) The Mishnaic wording refers to the other categories.

(2) Isa. LXIV, 1.

(3) Hence the term ‘tib'eh’ describes not the act of water but that of fire.

(4) The Mab'eh and the Fire will thus constitute one and the same kind of damage.

(5) And the other two will be: Pit and Fire.

(6) Who takes Mab'eh to denote Tooth and not Man; supra p. 9.

(7) Who takes Mab'eh to denote Man; supra p. 9.

(8) Why does he not include in Man all kinds of damage committed by him?

(9) Lit., ‘cattle’.

(10) I.e., Pain, Healing, Loss of Time and Degradation.

(11) As fine for theft; cf. Ex. XXII, 3.

(12) Fines for the slaughter or sale of a stolen sheep and ox respectively; cf. Ex. XXI, 37.

(13) I.e., the restoration of stolen goods or the payment of their value.

(14) I.e., the unlawful acquisition of chattels by violence; cf. Lev, V, 23.
(15) Cf. Deut. XIX, 19; v. Mak. I.
(16) I.e., fifty shekels of silver; cf. Deut. XXII, 28-29.
(17) Cf. Ex. XXII, 15-16.
(18) I.e., a defaming husband; v. Deut. XXII, 13-19.
(19) Of terumah (v. Glos.) which makes it unfit for human consumption.
(20) Of ordinary grain with that of terumah restricting thereby the use of the mixture to priestly families.
(21) Through idolatrous application by means of libation which renders all the wine in the barrel unfit for any use whatsoever; the last three heads of damage are dealt with in Git. V, 3.
(22) V. p. 13.
(23) I.e., when these are guilty of larceny; cf. Ex. XXII, 7.
(24) I.e in the case of the Unpaid Bailee and Borrower.
(25) I.e., in the case of Theft and Robbery.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 5a

deal with False Evidence, the liability for which is also civil? — He holds the view of R. Akiba who maintains that the liability for False Evidence [is penal in nature and] cannot [consequently][1] be created by confession.[2] But if R. Oshaia follows R. Akiba why does he not reckon Ox as two distinct kinds of damage: Ox damaging chattel and Ox injuring men, for have we not learnt that R. Akiba said: A mutual injury arising between man and [ox even while a] Tam is assessed in full and the balance paid accordingly?[3] This distinction could, however, not be made, since it is elsewhere[4] taught that R. Akiba himself has qualified this full payment.[5] For R. Akiba said: You might think that, in the case of Tam injuring man, payment should be made out of the general estate; it is therefore stated, [This judgment] shall be done unto it,[6] to emphasise that the payment should only be made out of the body of the Tam and not out of any other source whatsoever.

Why did R. Oshaia omit Rape, Seduction and Slander, the liabilities for which are also civil?[7] — What particular liability do you wish to refer to? If for actual loss, this has already been dealt with under Depreciation; if for suffering, this has already been dealt with under Pain; if for humiliation, this has already been dealt with under Degradation; if again for deterioration, this is already covered by Depreciation. What else then can you suggest? The Fine.[8] With this [type of liability] R. Oshaia is not concerned.

Why then omit Defilement , Adulteration and Vitiation of wine, the liabilities for which are civil? — What is your view in regard to intangible damage?[9] If [you consider] intangible damage a civil wrong, defilement has then already been dealt with under Depreciation; if on the other hand intangible damage is not a civil wrong, then any liability for it is penal in nature, with which R. Oshaia is not concerned.

Are we to infer that R. Hiyya considers intangible damage not to be a civil wrong? For otherwise would not this kind of damage already have been reckoned by him under Depreciation? — He may in any case have found it expedient to deal with tangible damage and intangible damage under distinct heads.

It is quite conceivable that our Tanna[10] found it necessary to give the total number [of the principal kinds of damage] in order to exclude those of R. Oshaia;[11] the same applies to R. Oshaia who also gave the total number in order to exclude those of R. Hiyya;[12] but what could be excluded by the total number specified by R. Hiyya? — It is intended to exclude Denunciation[13] and Profanation of sacrifices.[14]

The exclusion of profanation is conceivable as sacrifices are not here reckoned; but why is Denunciation omitted? — Denunciation is in a different category on account of its verbal nature with which R. Hiyya is not concerned. But is not Slander of a verbal nature and yet reckoned? — Slander is something verbal but dependent upon some act.[15] But is not False Evidence a verbal effect not connected with any act and yet it is reckoned? — The latter though not connected with any act is reckoned because it is described in the Divine Law as an act, as the text has it: Then shall ye do unto him as he had purposed to do unto his brother.[16]

It is quite conceivable that the Tanna of the Mishnah characterises his kinds of damage as Principals in order to indicate the existence of others which are only derivatives: but can R. Hiyya and R. Oshaia characterise theirs as Principals in order to indicate the existence of others which are derivatives? If so what are they? — Said R. Abbahu: All of them are characterised as Principals for the purpose of requiring compensation out of the best of possessions.[17] How is this uniformity [in procedure] arrived at? — By means of a uniform interpretation of each of the following terms: 'Instead',[18] 'Compensation',[19] 'Payment',[20] 'Money'.[21]

THE ASPECTS OF THE OX ARE [IN SOME RESPECTS] NOT [OF SUCH LOW ORDER OF GRAVITY] AS THOSE OF THE 'SPOLIATOR' [MAB'EH]. What does this signify? — R. Zebid in the name of Raba said: The point of this is: Let Scripture record only one kind of damage[22] and from it you will deduce the liability for the other![23] In response it was declared: One kind of damage could not be deduced from the other.[24]

NOR ARE THE ASPECTS OF EITHER OF THEM IN WHICH THERE IS LIFE. What does this signify? R. Mesharsheya in the name of Raba said: The point of it is this:

---

(1) Penal liabilities are created only by means of impartial evidence and never by that of confession; cf. infra 64b.

(2) Mak. 2b.

(3) V. infra p. 179.

(4) Infra pp. 180 and 240.

(5) Lit., 'broke the [full] force of his club' (Jast.); Rashi: 'of his fist'.

(6) Ex. XXI. 31.

(7) Cf. Keth. 40a.

(8) V. Deut, XXII, 29; Ex. XXII, 6; and Deut. XXII, 19.

(9) Cf. Git. 53a.

(10) Opening the Tractate.

(11) I.e., the additional nine kinds enumerated by him supra p. 13.

(12) I.e the eleven added by him supra. p. 14.

(13) Cf. infra 62a and 117a.

(14) Cf. Lev. VII, 18 and Zeb. I, 1 and II, 2-3.

(15) The consummation of the marriage rite according to R. Eliezer, or the bribery of false witnesses according to R. Judah; cf. Keth. 46a.

(16) Deut. XIX, 19.

(17) Cf. Ex. XXII, 4.

(18) I.e., for occurring in Ex. XXI, 36, and elsewhere.

(19) I.e., an expression such as, He shall give, cf. EX XXI, 32 and elsewhere.

(20) As in Ex. XXII, 8 and elsewhere.

(21) Such as, e.g., in Ex. XXI, 34 and elsewhere. [One of these four terms occurs with each of the four categories of damage specified in the Mishnah and likewise with each of the kinds of damage enumerated by R. Oshaia and R. Hiyya, thus teaching uniformity in regard to the mode of payment in them all.]

(22) I.e., Ox.

(23) I.e., Mab'eh.

(24) V. supra pp. 11-12.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 5b

Let Scripture record only two kinds of damage[1] and from them you will deduce a further kind of damage?[2] In response it was declared: Even from two kinds of damage it would not be possible to deduce one more.[3]

Raba, however, said: If you retain any one kind of damage along with Pit [in Scripture], all the others but Horn will be deduced by analogy;[4] Horn is excepted as the analogy breaks down, since all the other kinds of damage are Mu'ad ab initio.[5] According, however, to the view that Horn on the other hand possesses a greater degree of liability because of its intention to do damage,[6] even Horn could be deduced. For what purpose then did Scripture record them all? For their [specific] laws: Horn, in order to distinguish between Tam and Mu'ad;[7] Tooth and the Foot, to be immune [for damage done by them] on public ground;[8] Pit, to be immune for [damage done by it to] inanimate objects;[9] and, according to R. Judah who maintains liability for inanimate objects damaged by a pit,[10] in order still to be immune for [death caused by it to] man;[11] Man, to render him liable for four [additional] payments [when injuring man];[12] Fire, to be immune for [damage to] hidden goods;[13] but according to R. Judah, who maintains liability for damage to hidden goods by fire,[13] what [specific purpose] could be served?

---

(1) I.e., Ox and Mab'eh.

(2) I.e., Fire.

(3) For the reason stated in the Mishnah.

(4) To the feature common in Pit and the other kind of damage.

(5) I.e., it is usual for them to do damage, whereas Horn does damage only through excitement and evil intention which the owner should not necessarily have anticipated; cf. infra p. 64.

(6) Cf. supra p. 11 and infra p. 64.

(7) Infra p. 73.

(8) Infra p. 94.

(9) Infra 52a.

(10) Infra 53b.

(11) Infra 54a.

(12) Infra p. 473; cf. also supra pp. 12 and 13.

(13) Infra 61b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 6a

— To include [damage done by fire] lapping his neighbour's ploughed field and grazing his stones.[1]

THE FEATURE COMMON TO THEM ALL . . . What else is this clause intended to include? — Abaye said: A stone, a knife and luggage which, having been placed by a person on the top of his roof, fell down through a normal wind and did damage.[2] In what circumstances [did they do the damage]? If while they were in motion, they are equivalent to Fire! How is this case different? Just as Fire is aided by an external force[3] and, being your possession, is under your control, so also is the case with those which are likewise aided by an external force and, being your possessions are under your control. If [on the other hand, damage was done] after they were at rest, then, if abandoned, according to both Rab and Samuel, they are equivalent to Pit.[4] How is their case different? Just as Pit is from its very inception a source of injury, and, being your possession is under your control, so also is the case with those[5] which from their very inception [as nuisances] are likewise sources of injury, and, being your possession are under your control.[6] Furthermore, even if they were not abandoned, according to Samuel who maintains that we deduce [the law governing] all nuisances from Pit,[4] they are [again] equivalent to Pit? — Indeed they were abandoned, still they are not equivalent to Pit. Why [is liability attached] to Pit if not because no external force assists it? How then can you assert

[the same] in the case of those[5] which are assisted by an external force? — Fire,[7] however, will refute [this reasoning]. But [you may ask] why [is liability attached] to Fire if not because of its nature to travel and do damage?[8] — Pit, however, will refute [this reasoning]. The argument is [thus endlessly] reversible [and liability[9] can be deduced only from the Common Aspects].[10]

Raba said: [This clause is intended] to include a nuisance which is rolled about [from one place to another] by the feet of man and by the feet of animal [and causes damage]. In what circumstances [did it do the damage]? If it was abandoned, according to both Rab and Samuel,[11] it is equivalent to Pit! How does its case differ? Just as Pit is from its very inception a source of injury, and is under your control, so also is the case with that which from its very inception [as a nuisance] is likewise a source of injury, and is under your control. Furthermore, even if it were not abandoned, according to Samuel,[11] who maintains that we deduce [the law governing] all nuisances from Pit, it is [again] equivalent to Pit? — Indeed it was abandoned, still it is not equivalent to Pit: Why [is liability attached] to Pit if not because the making of it solely caused the damage? How then can you assert [the same] in the case of such nuisances,[12] the making of which did not directly cause the damage?[13] — Ox, however, will refute [this reasoning]. But [you may ask] why [is liability attached] to Ox if not because of its habit to walk about and do damage? — Pit will refute [this reasoning]. The argument is [thus endlessly] reversible as the aspect of the one is not comparable to the aspect of the other, [and liability[14] therefore can be deduced only from the Common Aspects].

R. Adda b. Ahabah said: To include that which is taught:[15] 'All those who open their gutters or sweep out the dust of their cellars [into public thoroughfares] are in the summer period acting unlawfully, but lawfully in winter; [in all cases] however, even though they act lawfully, if special damage resulted they are liable to compensate.' But in what circumstances? If the damage occurred while [the nuisances were] in motion, is it not man's direct act?[16] If, on the other hand, it occurred after they were at rest, [again] in what circumstances? If they were abandoned, then, according to both Rab and Samuel,[17] they are equivalent to Pit! How does their case differ? Just as Pit is from its very inception a source of injury, and, being your possession, is under your control, so also is the case with those which are likewise from their very inception [as nuisances] sources of injury and, being your possession, are under your control. Furthermore, even if they were not abandoned, according to Samuel,[17] who maintains that we deduce [the law governing] all nuisances from Pit, they are [again] equivalent to Pit? — Indeed they were abandoned, still they are not equivalent to Pit: Why [is liability attached] to Pit if not because of its being unlawful?[18] How then could you assert [the same] in the case of those which [in winter] are lawful? —

---

(1) As this damage is rather an unusual effect from fire and special reference is therefore essential.

(2) Cf. supra p. 8.

(3) I.e., the blowing wind.

(4) Infra 28b; v. supra p. 7.

(5) I.e., stone, knife and luggage referred to above.

(6) Cf. supra p. 7.

(7) Which is also assisted by an external force, i.e. the wind, but nevertheless creates liability to pay.

(8) Which cannot he said of stone, knife and luggage.

(9) Even when the nuisance has, like Fire, been assisted by an external force and is, like Pit, unable to travel and do damage.

(10) Referred to in the Mishnaic quotation.

(11) Infra 28b and supra p. 7.

(12) Which have been rolling about from one place to another.

(13) But the rolling by man and beast.

(14) Even in the case of nuisances that roll about.

(15) Cf. infra 30a.
(16) The liability for which is self-evident under the category of Man.
(17) Infra 28b and supra p. 7.
(18) It being unlawful to dig a pit in public ground.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 6b

Ox,[1] however, will refute [this reasoning]. But, you may ask, why [is liability attached] to Ox if not because of its nature to walk about and do damage? — PIt will refute [this reasoning]. The argument is [thus endlessly] reversible [and liability[2] can be deduced only from the Common Aspects].

Rabina said: To include that which we have learnt: 'A wall or a tree which accidentally fell into a Public thoroughfare and did damage, involves no liability for compensation. If an order had been served [by the proper authorities] to fell the tree and pull down the wall within a specified time, and they fell within the specified time and did damage, the immunity holds goods, but if after the specified time, liability is incurred.'[3] But what were the circumstances [of the wall and the tree]? If they were abandoned, then according to both Rab and Samuel,[4] they are equivalent to Pit! How is their case different? Just as Pit does frequent damage and is under your control, so also is the case with those which likewise do frequent damage and are under your control. Furthermore, even if they were not abandoned, according to Samuel.[4] who maintains that we deduce [the law governing] all nuisances from Pit, they are [again] equivalent to Pit? — Indeed they were abandoned, still they are not equivalent to Pit: Why [is liability attached] to Pit if not because of its being from its very inception a source of injury? How then can you assert [the same] in the case of those which are not sources of injury from their inception? — Ox, however, will refute [this reasoning]. But [you may ask] why [is liability attached] to Ox if not because of its nature to walk about and do damage? — Pit will refute [this reasoning]. The argument is [thus endlessly] reversible [and liability[5] can be deduced only from Common Aspects].

WHENEVER ANYONE OF THEM DOES DAMAGE THE OFFENDER IS [HAB] LIABLE. 'The offender is HAB!' — 'The offender is HAYYAB'[6] should be the phrase? — Rab Judah, on behalf of Rab, said: This Tanna [of the Mishnaic text] was a Jerusalemite who employed an easier form.[7]

TO INDEMNIFY WITH THE BEST OF HIS ESTATE. Our Rabbis taught: Of the best of his field and of the best of his vineyard shall he make restitution[8] refers to the field of the plaintiff and to the vineyard of the plaintiff, this is the view of R. Ishmael. R. Akiba says: Scripture only intended that damages should be collected out of the best,[9] and this applies even more so to sacred property.[10]

Would R. Ishmael maintain that the defendant, whether damaging the best or worst, is to pay for the best? — R. Idi b. Abin said: This is so where he damaged one of several furrows and it could not be ascertained whether the furrow he damaged was the worst or the best,in which case he must pay for the best. Raba, however, [demurred] saying: Since where we do know that he damaged the worst, he would only have to pay for the worst, now that we do not know whether the furrow damaged was the best or the worst, why pay for the best? It is the plaintiff who has the onus of proving his case by evidence. R. Aha b. Jacob therefore explained: We are dealing here with a case where the best of the plaintiff's estate equals in quality the worst of that of the defendant;[11] and the point at issue is [as follows]: R. Ishmael maintains that the qualities are estimated in relation to those of the plaintiff's estate;[12] but R. Akiba is of the opinion that it is the qualities of the defendant's possessions that have to be considered.[13]

What is the reason underlying R. Ishmael's view? — The term 'Field' occurs both in the latter clause[14] and the earlier clause of the verse;[15] now just as in the earlier clause it refers to the plaintiff's possessions, so also does it in the latter clause. R. Akiba, however, maintains that [the last clause,] Of the best of his field and of the best of his vineyard shall he make restitution[16] clearly refers to the possessions of the one who has to pay. R. Ishmael [on the other hand,] contends that both the textual analogy[17] of the terms and the plain textual interpretation are complementary to each other. The analogy of the terms is helpful towards establishing the above statement[18] while the plain textual interpretation helps to qualify [the application of the above[18] in] a case where the defendant's estate consists of good and bad qualities, and the plaintiff's estate likewise comprises good quality, but the bad of the defendant's estate is not so good as the good quality of the estate of the plaintiff;[19] for in this case the defendant must pay out of the better quality of his estate, as he cannot say to him, 'Come and be paid out of the bad quality' [which is below the quality of the estate of the plaintiff], but he is entitled to the better quality [of the defendant].

'R. Akiba said: Scripture only intended that damages be collected out of the best, and this applies even more so to sacred property.' What is the import of the last clause? It could hardly be suggested that it refers to a case where a private ox gored an ox consecrated [to the Sanctuary], for does not the Divine Law distinctly say, The ox of one's neighbour,[20] excluding thus [any liability for damage done to] consecrated chattel? Again, it could hardly deal with a personal undertaking by one to pay a maneh to the Treasury of the Temple, thus authorising the treasurer to collect from the best; for surely he should not be in a better position than a private creditor

---

(1) Which it is similarly lawful to keep, but which when doing damage creates nevertheless a liability to pay.

(2) Even in the cases referred to by R. Adda b. Ahabah.

(3) B.M. 117b.

(4) Infra 28b.

(5) Even in the case of the wall and the tree.

(6) A slight variation in the Hebrew text: a disyllable instead of a monosyllable.

(7) Preferred a contracted form.

(8) Ex. XXII, 4.

(9) Of the defendant's estate.

(10) I.e., property dedicated to the purposes of the sanctuary.

(11) The amount of damages, however, would never be more than could be proved to have been actually sustained.

(12) I.e., the quality of the field paid by the defendant as damages need not exceed the best quality of the plaintiff's estate. Hence, in the case in hand, the worst of the defendant's will suffice.

(13) The quality of the payment must therefore always he the best of the defendant's estate,

(14) I.e., of the best of his field . . . Ex, XXII,4.

(15) If a man shall cause a field or a vineyard to be eaten, ibid.

(16) Ex. XXII,4.

(17) The (Gezerah Shawah, v. Glos.

(18) 'That the qualities are estimated in relation to those of the plaintiff's estate.'

(19) The bad quality could not thus be tendered.

(20) Ex. XXI, 35.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 7a

who can collect nothing better than the medium quality.[1] If, however, you hold that R. Akiba authorises the payment of all loans out of the best, [the treasurer of the Temple could still hardly avail himself of this privilege as] the analogy between these two kinds of liability could be upset as follows: A private creditor is at an advantage in that for damages he will surely be paid out of the best, but is not the Temple Treasury at a very great disadvantage in this respect?[2] — It may still be maintained that it applies to the case where a private ox gored a consecrated ox, and in answer to the difficulty raised by you — that the Divine Law definitely says The ox of one's neighbour, thus exempting for damage done to consecrated property — it may be suggested that R. Akiba shares the view of R. Simeon b. Menasya as taught:[3] R. Simeon b. Menasya says: In the case of a consecrated ox goring a private one, there is total exemption; but for a private ox, whether Tam or Mu'ad, goring a consecrated ox, full damages must be paid.[4] If this is R. Akiba's contention, whence could it be proved that the point at issue between R. Ishmael and R. Akiba is as to the best of the plaintiff's equalling the worst of the defendant's? Why not say that on this point they are both of opinion that the qualities are estimated in relation to the plaintiff's possessions,[5] whereas the disagreement between them is on the point at issue between R. Simeon b. Menasya and the Rabbis [i.e., the majority against him], R. Akiba holding the view of R. Simeon b. Menasya, and R. Ishmael that of the Rabbis? — If so, what would be the purport of the first clause of R. Akiba, 'Scripture only intended that damages be collected out of the best'?[6] Again, would not then even the last clause 'And this even more so applies to sacred property' be rather illogically phrased?[7] Furthermore, R. Ashi said: It was explicitly taught: Of the best of his field and of the best of his vineyard shall he make restitution[8] refers to the field of the plaintiff and to the vineyard of the plaintiff: this is the view of R. Ishmael. R. Akiba [on the other hand] says: The best of the defendant's field and the best of the defendant's vineyard.

Abaye pointed out to Raba the following contradiction: Scripture records, Out of the best of his field and out of the best of his vineyard shall he make restitution[8] [thus indicating that payment must be made] only out of the best and not out of anything else; whereas it is taught: He should return,[9] includes payment in kind,[10] even with bran?[11] — There is no contradiction: the latter applies when the payment is made willingly, while the former refers to payments enforced [by law]. 'Ulla the son of R. Elai, thereupon said: This distinction is evident even from the Scriptural term, He shall make restitution,[8] meaning, even against his will. Abaye, on the other hand, said to him: Is it written yeshullam[12] ['Restitution shall be made']? What is written is yeshallem[13] ['He shall make restitution'], which could mean of his own free will! — But said Abaye: [The contradiction can be solved] as the Master[14] [did] in the case taught: An owner of houses, fields and vineyards[15] who cannot find a purchaser [is considered needy and] may be given the tithe for the poor[16] up to half the value of his estate.[17] Now the Master discussed the circumstances under which this permission could apply: If property in general, and his included, dropped in value, why not grant him even the value of more [than the half of his estate's value], since the depreciation is general? If, on the other hand, property in general appreciated, but his, on account of his going about looking here and there for ready money, fell in price,

---

(1) Git. V, 1.

(2) On account of the absolute immunity, as stated, for damage done to Temple property.

(3) Infra p. 212.

(4) R. Akiba thus maintains that the Temple Treasury will, for any damage sustained, be reimbursed out of the best of the defendant's estate.

(5) And where the plaintiff's best equals the defendant's worst, the latter will perhaps suffice according to all opinions.

(6) Which indicates that the interpretation of the Scriptural verse (Ex. XXII, 4) is the point at issue.

(7) As according to the view requiring full payment in all cases, the quality of the payment for damage done to sacred property may he higher than that paid for damage done to ordinary property, and in fact nothing less than the very best of the defendant's estate would suffice.

(8) Ex. XXII, 4.

(9) Ex. XXI, 34.

(10) Otherwise the Scriptural text would be superfluous, as payment in specie is evident in an earlier clause.

(11) Infra 9a.

(12) ישלם

(13) ישלם~

(14) Rabbah (Rashi).

(15) The value of which amounted to 200 zuz.

(16) Cf. Deut. XIV, 28-29; this tithe is distributed among those who possess less than two hundred zuz; Pe'ah VIII, 8.

(17) I.e., 100 zuz to enable him to sell his property for half its value which, it is assumed, he can at any time realise.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 7b

why give him anything at all?[1] And the Master thereupon said: No; the above law is applicable to cases where in the month of Nisan[2] property has a higher value, whereas in the month of Tishri[3] it has a lower value. People in general wait until Nisan and then sell, whereas this particular proprietor, being in great need of ready money, finds himself compelled to sell in Tishri at the existing lower price; he is therefore granted half because it is in the nature of property to drop in value up to a half, but it is not in its nature to drop more than that. Now a similar case may also be made out with reference to payment for damage which must be out of the best. If the plaintiff, however, says: 'Give me medium quality but a larger quantity', the defendant is entitled to reply: 'It is only when you take the best quality which is due to you by law that you may calculate on the present price; failing that, whatever you take you will have to calculate according to the higher price anticipated.'[4] But R. Aha b. Jacob demurred: If so, you have weakened the right of plaintiffs for damages in respect of inferior quality. When the Divine Law states out of the best,[5] how can you maintain that inferior qualities are excluded?[6] R — Aha b. Jacob therefore said: If any analogy could he drawn,[7] it may be made in the case of a creditor. A creditor is paid by law out of medium quality; if, however, he says: 'Give me worse quality but greater quantity,' the debtor is entitled to say, 'It is only when you take that quality which is due to you by law that you may calculate on the present price, failing that, whatever you take you will have to calculate according to the higher price anticipated.' R. Aha, son of R. Ika, demurred: If so, you will close the door in the face of prospective borrowers. The creditor will rightly contend, 'Were my money with me I would get property according to the present low price; now that my money is with you, must I calculate according to the anticipated higher price?' — R. Aha, son of R. Ika, therefore said: If any analogy could be drawn,[7] it is only with the case of a Kethubah[8] [marriage settlement][9] which, according to the law, is collected out of the worst quality. But if the woman says to the husband: 'Give me better quality though smaller quantity,' he may rejoin: 'It is only when you take the quality assigned to you by law that you may calculate in accordance with the present low price; failing that, you must calculate in accordance with the anticipated higher price.,

But be it as it is, does the original difficulty[10] still not hold good? — Said Raba: Whatever article is being tendered has to be given out of the best [of that object].[11] But is it not written: 'The best of his field'?[12] — But when R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua had arrived from the house of study[13] they explained it thus: All kinds of articles are considered 'best', for if they were not to be sold here they would be sold in another town;[14] it is only in the case of land which is excepted therefrom that the payment has to be made out of the best, so that intending purchasers jump at it.

R. Samuel b. Abba of Akronia[15] asked of R. Abba: When the calculation[16] is made, is it based on his own [the defendant's] property or upon that of the general public? This problem has no application to R. Ishmael's view that the calculation is based upon the quality of the plaintiff's property;[17] it can apply only to R. Akiba's view[17] which takes the defendant's property into account.[18] What would, according to him, be the ruling? Does the Divine Law in saying, 'the best of his field' intend only to exclude the quality of the plaintiff's property from being taken into account, or does it intend to exclude even the quality of the property of the general public? — He [R. Abba] said to him:[19] The Divine Law states, 'the best of his field' how then can you maintain that the calculation is based on the property of the general public?

He[20] raised an objection: [It is taught,] If the defendant's estate consists only of the best, creditors of all descriptions are paid out of the best; if it is of medium quality, they are all paid out of medium quality; if it is of the worst quality, they are all paid out of the worst quality. [It is only] when the defendant's possessions consist of both the best, the medium, and the worst [that] creditors for damages are paid out of the best, creditors for loans out of the medium and creditors for marriage contracts out of the worst. When [however] the estate consists only of the best and of the medium qualities, creditors for damages are paid out of the best while creditors for loans and for marriage contracts will be paid out of the medium quality. [Again] if the estate consists only of the medium and the worst qualities, creditors for either damages or loans are paid out of the medium quality whereas those for marriage contracts will be paid out of the worst quality.

---

(1) Since, in reality, his property is worth 200 zuz.

(2) It being the beginning of Spring and the best season for transactions in property, both for agricultural and building purposes.

(3) I.e., about October, being the end of the season.

(4) The scriptural verse, 'He shall return', introducing payment in kind, would thus authorise the calculation on the higher price anticipated whenever the plaintiff prefers a quality different from that assigned to him by law.

(5) Ex. XXII, 4.

(6) From the option of the plaintiff.

(7) To the case made out by the Master regarding the Tithe of the Poor referred to above.

(8) V. Glos.

(9) Git. V, 1.

(10) Raised by Abaye supra p. 24.

(11) I.e., when bran is tendered it is the best of it which has to he given.

(12) Confining it thus to land, for if otherwise why altogether insert 'of his field'?

(13) בי רב. V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed p. 387, n. 7.

(14) And could therefore be tendered.

(15) [Or Hagronia, a town near Nehardea, v. Obermeyer, J. Die Landschaft Babylonian, p. 265.]

(16) Of the best, medium and worst qualities, out of which to pay creditors for damages, loans and marriage-contracts respectively.

(17) Cf. supra p. 22.

(18) I.e., his estate is divided into three categories; best, medium and worst, out of which the payments will respectively be made.

(19) I.e., to R. Samuel, the questioner.

(20) I.e., R. Samuel.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 8a

If, however, the estate consists only of the best and of the worst qualities, creditors for damages are paid out of the best whereas those for loans and marriage contracts are paid out of the worst quality. Now[1] the intermediate clause states that if the estate consists only of the medium and the worst qualities, creditors for either damages or loans are paid out of the medium quality whereas marriage contracts will be paid out of the worst quality. If, therefore, you still maintain that the calculation is based only upon the qualities of the defendant's estate, is not the medium [when there is no better with him] his best? Why then should not the creditors for loans be thrown back on the worst quality? — This [intermediate clause] deals with a case where the defendant originally possessed[2] property of a better quality but has meanwhile disposed of it. And R. Hisda likewise explained this [intermediate clause] to deal with a case where the defendant originally possessed[2] property of a better quality but has meanwhile disposed of it. This explanation stands to reason, for it is taught elsewhere: If the estate consisted of the medium and the worst qualities, creditors for damages are paid out of the medium quality whereas those for loans and marriage contracts will be paid out of the worst quality. Now these [two Baraithas] do not contradict each other, unless we accept [the explanation that] the one deals with a case where the defendant originally owned property of a better quality but which he has meanwhile disposed of, while the other states the law for a case where he did not have[3] property of a quality better than the medium in his possession. It may, however, on the other hand be suggested that both [Baraithas] state the law when a better quality was not disposed of[4] and there is yet no contradiction, as the second [Baraitha] presents a case where the defendant's medium quality is as good as the best quality of the general public,[5] whereas in the first [Baraitha] the medium quality was not so good as the best of the public.[6] It may again be suggested that both [Baraithas] present a case where the defendant's medium quality was not better than the medium quality of the general public and the point at issue is this: the second [Baraitha] bases the calculation upon the qualities of the defendant's estate,[7] but the first bases it upon those of the general public.[8]

Rabina said: The point at issue is the view expressed by 'Ulla.[9] For 'Ulla said: Creditors for loans may, according to Pentateuchal Law, be paid out of the worst, as it is said, Thou shalt stand without, and the man to whom thou dost lend shall bring forth the pledge without unto thee.[10] Now it is certainly in the nature of man [debtor] to bring out the worst of his chattels. Why then is it laid down that creditors for loans are paid out of the medium quality?[11] This is a Rabbinic enactment made in order that prospective borrowers should not find the door of their benefactors locked before them. Now this enactment referred to by 'Ulla is accepted by the first [Baraitha] whereas the second disapproves of this enactment.[12]

Our Rabbis taught: If a defendant[13] disposed of all his land[14] to one or to three persons at one and the same time, they all have stepped into the place of the original owner.[15] [If, however, the three sales took place] one after another, creditors of all descriptions will be paid out of the [property purchased] last;[16] if this property does not cover [the liability], the last but one purchased estate is resorted to [for the balance]; if this estate again does not meet [the whole obligation], the very first purchased estate is resorted to [for the outstanding balance].

'If the defendant disposed of all his land to one' — under what circumstances [was it disposed of]? It could hardly be suggested [that it was effected] by one and the same deed, for if in the case of three persons whose purchases may have been after one another,[17] you state that, 'They all have stepped into the place of the original owner,' what need is there to mention one person purchasing all the estate by one and the same deed? It therefore seems pretty certain [that the estate disposed of to one person was effected by] deeds of different dates. But [then] why such a distinction?[18] Just as in the case of three purchasers [in succession] each can [in the first instance] refer any creditor [to the very last purchased property], saying, '[When I bought my estate] I was careful to leave [with the defendant] plenty for you to be paid out of,'[19] why should not also one purchaser [by deeds of different dates] be entitled to throw the burden of payment on to the very last purchased property, saying, '[When I acquired title to the former purchases] I was very careful to leave for you plenty to be paid out of'? — We are dealing here with a case where the property purchased last was of the best quality;[20] also R. Shesheth stated that [this law applies] when the property purchased last was of the best quality. If this be the case, why [on the other hand] should not creditors of all kinds come and be paid out of the best quality [as this was the property purchased last]? — Because the defendant may say to the creditors: 'If you acquiesce and agree to be paid out of the qualities respectively allotted to you by law, you may be paid accordingly, otherwise I will transfer the deed of the worst property back to the original owner — in which case you will all be paid out of the worst.'[21] If so,

---

(1) Here begins R. Samuel's argument.

(2) I.e., at the time when the loan took place, in which case the creditors then obtained a claim on the medium quality by the process of law.

(3) At the time when the loan took place, in which case the medium (in the absence of a better quality) was relatively the best, and therefore not available to creditors for loans.

(4) But was either retained, as is the case in the second Baraitha, or on the other hand not owned at all at the time of the loan as is the case in the first Baraitha.

(5) In such a case it is considered the best quality to all intents and purposes, as the calculation is based upon the general standard of quality.

(6) It is thus termed only medium and creditors for loans have access to it.

(7) Hence in the absence of a better quality in his own estate, that property which is termed medium in comparison to the general standard is the best in the eye of the law.
(8) According to which it is but medium.
(9) Git. 50a.
(10) Deut XXIV, 11.
(11) Git. V, 1.
(12) Maintaining that creditors for loans will always he paid out the worst quality.
(13) I.e., a debtor for damages, loans and marriage-settlements.
(14) Consisting of best, medium and worst qualities.
(15) So that creditors for damages, for loans and for marriage-settlements will he paid according to their respective rights.
(16) Whether it be best, medium or worst.
(17) Though on one and the same day; cf, Keth. 94a.
(18) I.e., why should the legal position of one purchaser be worse than that of three?
(19) As, according to a Mishnaic enactment (Git. V, 1), 'Property disposed of by a debtor could not he resorted to by his creditors so long as there are with him available possessions undisposed of.'
(20) In which case it is not in the interest of the purchaser that the last purchase should he available to any one of the creditors.
(21) At the hands of the debtor, according to the Mishnaic enactment, Git. V, 1.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 8b

why should the same not be said regarding creditors for damages?[1] It must therefore he surmised that we deal with [a case where the vendor has meanwhile died, and, as his] heirs are not personally liable to pay,[2] the original liability [which accompanied the purchased properties] must always remain upon the purchaser;[3] who could consequently no longer [threaten the creditors and] say this: ['If you acquiesce . . .'?][4] — But the reason the creditors cannot be paid out of the best is that the vendee may [repudiate their demand and] say to them: 'On what account have the Rabbis enacted that "property disposed of by a debtor can not be attached by his creditors so long as there are available possessions still not disposed of"[5] if not for the sake of protecting my interests? In the present instance I have no interest in availing myself of this enactment.' Exactly as Raba, for Raba elsewhere said: Whoever asserts, 'I have no desire to avail myself of a Rabbinical enactment' such as this is listened to.[6] To what does 'such as this' refer? — To R. Huna, for R. Huna said: A woman is entitled to say to her husband, 'I don't expect any maintenance from you[7] and I do not want to work for you.'[8]

It is quite certain that if the vendee[9] has sold the medium and worst qualities and retained the best, creditors of all descriptions may come along and collect out of the best quality. For this property was acquired by him last; and, since the medium and worst qualities are no more in his possession, he is not in a position to say to the creditors: 'Take payment out of the medium and worst properties, as I have no interest in availing myself of the Rabbinic enactment.'[10] But what is the law when the vendee disposed of the best quality and retained the medium and the worst? — Abaye at first was inclined to say: Creditors of all descriptions are entitled to come and collect out of the best.[11] But Raba said to him.[12] Does not a vendee selling [property] to a sub-vendee assign to him all the rights [connected] therewith] that may accrue to him?[13] Hence just as when the creditors come to claim from the vendee, he is entitled to pay them out of the medium and the worst [respectively], irrespective of the fact that when the medium and the worst qualities were purchased by him, the best property still remained free with the original vendor, and in spite of the enactment that properties disposed of cannot be distrained on [at the hands of the vendee] so long as there is available [with the debtor] property undisposed of,[14] the reason of the exception being that the vendee is entitled to say that he has no interest in availing himself of this enactment, so is the subvendee similarly entitled to say to the creditors: 'Take payment out of the medium and the worst.'[15] For the sub-vendee entered into the sale only upon the understanding that any right that his vendor may possess in connection with the purchase should also be assigned to him.

Raba said:[16] If Reuben disposed of all his lands to Simeon who in his turn sold one of the fields to Levi, Reuben's creditor may come and collect out of the land which is in the possession either of Simeon or Levi. This law applies only when Levi bought medium quality; but if he purchased either the best or the worst the law is otherwise, as Levi may lawfully contend: 'I have purposely been careful to buy the best or the worst, that is, property which is not available for you.'[17] Again, even when he bought medium quality the creditor will not have this option unless Levi did not leave [with Simeon] medium quality of a similar nature,in which case he is unable to plead, 'l have left for you ample land with Simeon;' but if Levi did leave with Simeon medium quality of a similar nature the creditor is not entitled to distrain on Levi who may lawfully contend, 'I have left for you ample land [with Simeon] to satisfy your claim from it.

Abaye said:[18] If Reuben had disposed of a field to Simeon with a warranty [of indemnity],[19] and an alleged creditor of Reuben came to distrain on it from Simeon, Reuben is entitled by law to come forward and litigate with the creditor, nor can the latter say to him: 'You [Reuben] are no party to me;'[20] for Reuben will surely say to him: 'If you will deprive Simeon of the field purchased by him from me, he will turn on me.'[21] There are some who say: Even if there were no warranty there the same law applies, as Reuben may say to the alleged creditor: 'I don't want Simeon to have any grievance against me.'

And Abaye further said:[22] If Reuben sold a field to Simeon without a warranty [for indemnity]

---

(1) I.e., they also should thus not he paid out of the best; like creditors for loans they would still he paid out of the medium quality, as the worst quality they could never lose.

(2) I.e., when no land was left in the inherited estate.

(3) For even by transferring the worst quality to the heirs he would not escape any liability affecting him.

(4) Since the liability upon him will thereby not be affected, why then should they, in such circumstances, not resort to the very best property purchased?

(5) Git. V, 1.

(6) Keth. 83a.

(7) Maintenance is a Rabbinical enactment for married women in exchange for their domestic work; cf. Keth. 47b.

(8) Keth. 58b.

(9) Who at successive sales purchased the whole estate of a debtor, and the last purchase was property of the best quality.

(10) As supra p. 31.

(11) At the hands of the sub-vendee, since nothing else of the same estate is with him to be offered to the creditors

(12) Cf. 'Ar. 31b.

(13) I.e., the vendee.

(14) Git. V, 1.

(15) At the hands of the vendee.

(16) Cf. Keth. 92b.

(17) Cf. supra p. 29.

(18) Cf. Keth. 92b and B.M. 14a.

(19) In case it is distrained on by the vendor's creditors.

(20) For he who has no personal interest in a litigation can be no pleader in it; cf. infra 70a.

(21) To be indemnified for the warranty.

(22) Keth. 92b-93a.

and there appeared claimants [questioning the vendor's title], so long as Simeon had not yet taken possession of it he might withdraw; but after he had taken possession of it he could no longer withdraw. What is the reason for that? — Because the vendor may say to him: 'You have agreed to accept a bag tied up with knots.'[1] From what moment [in this case] is possession considered to be taken? — From the moment he sets his foot upon the landmarks [of the purchased field]. This applies only to a purchase without a warranty. But if there is a warranty the law is otherwise. Some, however, say: Even if there is a warranty the same law applies, as the vendor may still say to him: 'Produce the distress warrant[2] against you and I will indemnify you.'

R. Huna said: [The payment for damages is] either with money or with the best of the estate.[3] R. Nahman objected to R. Huna [from the Baraitha]: He should return[4] shows that payment in kind is included, even with bran?[5] — This deals with a case where nothing else is available. If nothing else is available, is it not obvious? — You might have thought that we tell him to go and take the trouble to sell [the bran] and tender the plaintiff ready money. It is therefore made known to us [that this is not the case.].

R. Assi said: Money is on a par with land. What is the legal bearing of this remark? If to tell us what is best, is this not practically what R. Huna said?[6] It may, however, refer to two heirs[7] who divided an inheritance, one taking the land and the other the money. If then a creditor[8] came and distrained on the land, the aggrieved heir could come forward and share the money with his brother. But is this not self-evident? Is the one a son [to the deceased] and the other one not a son? There are some who argue [quite the reverse]: The one brother may say to the other, 'I have taken the money on the understanding that if it be stolen I should not be reimbursed by you, and you also took the land on the understanding that if it be distrained on there should be no restitution to you out of anything belonging to me.' It[9] will therefore refer to two heirs[7] who divided lands among themselves after which a creditor[8] came along and distrained on the portion of one of them.[10] But has not R. Assi already once enunciated this law? For it was stated;[11] [In the case of] heirs who divided [the land of the inheritance among themselves], if a creditor[8] came along and distrained on the portion of one of them, Rab said: The original apportionment becomes null and void. Samuel said: The portion is waived; but R. Assi said: The portion is refunded by a quarter in land or by a quarter in money.[12] Rab, who said that the partition becomes null and void, maintains that heirs, even after having shared, remain[13] co-heirs;[14] Samuel, who said that the portion is waived, maintains that heirs, after having shared, stand to each other in the relationship of vendees, each being in the position of a purchaser without a warranty [of indemnity];[15] R. Assi, who said that the portion is refunded by a quarter in land or by a quarter in money, is in doubt as to whether heirs, after having shared, still remain co-heirs[16] or stand in the relationship of vendees;[15] and on account of that [doubt] there must be refunded a quarter in land or a quarter in money.[17] What then is the meaning of 'Money is on a par with land'?[18] — In respect of being counted as 'best'. But if so, is not this practically what R. Huna said? — Read 'And so also said R. Assi . . .'

R. Zera said on behalf of R. Huna: For [the performance of] a commandment one should go up to a third. A third of what?

---

(1) I.e., you bought it at your own risk; the sale is thus the passing not of ownership but of possession.

(2) טירפא, document conferring the right of seizure of a debtor's property sold after the loan (Jast.).

(3) R. Huna refers either to the last clause of the Mishnah on p. 1 or to the problem raised by Abaye on p. 24.

(4) Ex. XXI, 34.

(5) Cf. supra p. 24.

(6) The text should thus run, 'And so also said R. Assi . . .'

(7) Lit. 'brothers'.

(8) Of the deceased.

(9) I.e., R. Assi's statement.

(10) [In which case R. Assi stated that the other can offer in refundment either money or land.]
(11) B.B. 107a.
(12) Cf. Bek. 48a.
(13) In this respect.
(14) So that all of them have to share the burden of the debt and if the portion of the one was distrained on, the portion of the other constitutes the whole inheritance which has equally to he distributed accordingly.
(15) Who cannot thus be reimbursed for the distress effected upon the portion assigned to any one of them.
(16) V. p. 34. n. 11.
(17) On the principle that in such and similar matters the two parties should equally have the benefit of the doubt (Rashi, according to one interpretation).
(18) Stated above by R. Assi.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 9b

You could hardly suggest 'a third of one's possessions,' for if so when one chanced to have three commandments [to perform at one and the same time] would one have to give up the whole of one's possessions? — R. Zera therefore said: For [performing a commandment in] an exemplary manner one should go up to a third of [the ordinary expense involved in] the observance thereof.

R. Ashi queried: Is it a third from within [the ordinary expense][1] or is it a third from the aggregate amount?[2] This stands undecided.

In the West[3] they said in the name of R. Zera: Up to a third, a man must perform it out of his own,[4] but from a third onwards he should perform it in accordance with the special portion the Holy One, blessed be He, has bestowed upon him.[5] MISHNAH. WHENEVER I AM UNDER AN OBLIGATION OF CONTROLLING [ANYTHING IN MY POSSESSION], I AM CONSIDERED TO HAVE PERPETRATED ANY DAMAGE THAT MAY RESULT.[6] WHEN I AM TO BLAME FOR A PART OF THE DAMAGE I AM LIABLE TO COMPENSATE FOR THE DAMAGE AS IF I HAD PERPETRATED THE WHOLE OF THE DAMAGE.

THE [DAMAGED] PROPERTY MUST BE OF A KIND TO WHICH THE LAW OF SACRILEGE[7] HAS NO APPLICATION. THE [DAMAGED] PROPERTY SHOULD BELONG TO PERSONS WHO ARE UNDER [THE JURISDICTION OF] THE LAW.[8] THE PROPERTY SHOULD BE OWNED. THE PLACE [OF THE DAMAGE] IS IMMATERIAL, WITH THE EXCEPTION OF PREMISES OWNED BY THE DEFENDANT OR PREMISES OWNED [JOINTLY] BY THE PLAINTIFF AND THE DEFENDANT. WHENEVER DAMAGE HAS OCCURRED, THE OFFENDER IS LIABLE TO INDEMNIFY WITH THE BEST OF HIS ESTATE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: 'WHENEVER I AM UNDER AN OBLIGATION OF CONTROLLING [ANYTHING IN MY POSSESSION], I AM CONSIDERED TO HAVE PERPETRATED ANY DAMAGE [THAT MAY RESULT]. How is that? When an ox or pit which was left with a deaf-mute, an insane person or a minor, does damage, the owner is liable to indemnify. This, however, is not so with a fire.' With what kind of case are we here dealing? If you say that the ox was chained and the pit covered, which corresponds in the case of fire to a hot coal, what difference is there between the one and the other? If on the other hand the ox was loose and the pit uncovered which corresponds in the case of fire to a flame, the statement 'This, however, is not so with a fire,' would here indicate exemption, but surely Resh Lakish said in the name of Hezekiah: They[9] have not laid down the law of exemption unless there was handed over to him[10] a coal which he has blown up, but in the case of a flame there will be full liability, the reason being that the danger is clear![11] — Still, the ox may have been chained and the pit covered and the fire likewise in a coal, yet your contention, 'Why should we make a difference between the one and the other?'

could be answered thus: An ox is in the habit of loosening itself; so also a pit is in the nature of getting uncovered; but a hot coal, the longer you leave it alone, the more it will get cooler and cooler. According to R. Johanan, however, who said[11] that even when there has been handed over to him[10] a flame the law of exemption applies, the ox here would likewise be loose and the pit uncovered; but why should we make a difference between the one and the other? — There, in the case of the fire, it is the handling of the deaf-mute that causes the damage, whereas here, in the case of the ox and the pit, it is not the handling of the deaf-mute that causes the damage.

Our Rabbis taught: There is an excess in [the liability for] Ox over [that for] Pit, and there is [on the other hand] an excess in [the liability for] Pit over [that for] Ox. The excess in [the liability for] Ox over [that for] Pit is that Ox involves payment of kofer[12] and the liability of thirty [shekels] for the killing of a slave;[13] when judgment [for manslaughter] is entered [against Ox] it becomes vitiated for any use,[14] and it is in its habit to move about and do damage, whereas all this is not so in the case of Pit. The excess in [the liability for] Pit over [that for] Ox is that Pit is from its very inception a source of injury and is Mu'ad ab initio which is not so in the case of Ox.[15]

---

(1) I.e., 33-1/3 per cent. of the cost of ordinary performance, the cost of the ordinary performance and that of the exemplary performance would thus stand to each other as 3 to 4.

(2) I.e., 50 per cent. of the cost of the ordinary performance; the cost of the ordinary performance and that of the exemplary performance would thus stand to each other as 2 to 3.

(3) Palestine.

(4) I.e., whether he possesses much or little.

(5) Cf. Shittah Mekubezeth and Nimmuke Joseph a.l. According to Rashi and Tosaf. a.l.: 'The cost up to a third remains man's loss in this world (as the reward for that will he paid only in the world to come); but the cost from a third onwards (if any) will he refunded by the Holy One, blessed be He, in man's lifetime.'

(6) From neglecting the obligation to control.

(7) Of consecrated things. cf. Lev. V, 15-16.

(8) Lit., 'sons of the Covenant', excluding heathens who do not respect the covenant of the law; v. infra p. 211, n. 6.

(9) I.e., the Rabbis of the Mishnah, v. infra 59b.

(10) I.e., to a deaf-mute, an insane person or a minor.

(11) Infra 59b.

(12) Cf. Ex. XXI, 29-30; v. Glos.

(13) Ibid. XXI, 32.

(14) V. infra p. 255.

(15) Cf. supra p. 3, nn. 6-7.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 10a

There is an excess in [the liability for] Ox over [that for] Fire and there is [on the other hand] an excess in [the liability for] Fire over [that for] Ox. The excess in [the liability for] Ox over [that for] Fire is that Ox involves payment of kofer and the liability of thirty [shekels] for the killing of a slave; when judgment [for manslaughter] is entered against Ox it becomes vitiated for any use;[1] if the owner handed it over to the care of a deaf-mute, an insane person or a minor he is still responsible [for any damage that may result];[2] whereas all this is not so in the case of Fire. The excess in [the liability for] Fire over [that for] Ox is that Fire is Mu'ad ab initio which is not so in the case of Ox.

There is an excess in [the liability for] Fire over [that for] Pit, and there is [on the other hand] an excess in [the liability for] Pit over [that for] Fire. The excess in [the liability for] Pit over [that for] Fire is that Pit is from its very inception a source of injury; if its owner handed it over to the care of a deaf-mute, an insane person or a minor, he is still responsible [for any damage that may result],[2] whereas all this is not so in the case of Fire. The excess in [the liability for] Fire over [that for] Pit is that the nature of Fire is to spread and do damage and it is apt to consume both things fit for it and things unfit for it, whereas all this is not so in the case of Pit.

Why not include in the excess of [liability for] Ox over [that for] Pit [the fact] that Ox is [also] liable for damage done to inanimate objects[3] which is not so in the case of Pit?[4] — The above [Baraitha] is in accordance with R. Judah who enjoins payment for damage to inanimate objects [also] in the case of Pit.[5] If it is in accordance with R. Judah, look at the concluding clause, 'The excess in [the liability for] Fire over [that for] Pit is that the nature of Fire is to spread and do damage, and it is apt to consume both things fit for it and things unfit for it; whereas all this is not so in the case of Pit.' 'Things fit for it:' are they not 'of wood'? 'Things unfit for it: are they not 'utensils'?[6] Now 'all this is not so in the case of Pit'. But if the statement is in accordance with R. Judah, did you not say that R. Judah enjoins payment for damage to inanimate objects [also] in the case of Pit? The Baraitha is, therefore, indeed in accordance with the Rabbis, but it mentions [some points] and omits [others].[7] What else does it omit that it omits that [particular] point?[8] — It also omits the law of hidden goods.[9] On the other hand you may also say that the Baraitha can still be reconciled with R. Judah, for 'things unfit for it' do not include utensils,[10] but do include [damage done by fire] lapping his neighbour's ploughed field and grazing his stones.[11]

R. Ashi demurred: Why not include, in the excess of liability for Ox Over [that for] Pit, [the fact] that Ox is [also] liable for damage done to consecrated animals that have become unfit [for the altar],[12] whereas this is not so in the case of Pit?[13] No difficulty arises if you assume that the Baraitha is in accordance with the Rabbis; just as it had omitted that point,[14] it omitted this point too. But if you maintain that the Baraitha is in accordance with R. Judah, what else did it omit that it omits this [one] point?-It omitted [Ox] trampling upon newly broken land.[15] [No! this is no argument,] for as to [Ox] trampling upon newly broken land there is no omission there, for this [is included in that which] has already been stated, 'It is in its habit to move about and do damage.'[16]

WHEN I HAVE PERPETRATED A PART OF THE DAMAGE. Our Rabbis taught: 'When I have perpetrated a part of the damage I become liable for the compensation for the damage as if I had perpetrated the whole of the damage. How is that? If one had dug a Pit nine handbreadths deep and another came along and completed it to a depth of ten handbreadths, the latter person is liable.' Now this ruling is not in accordance with Rabbi; for it was taught:[17] If one had dug a pit nine handbreadths deep and another came along and completed it to a depth of ten handbreadths, the latter person is liable. Rabbi says: The latter person is liable in cases of death,[18] but both of them in cases of injury![19] — R. Papa said: The Mishnaic ruling[20] deals with cases of death and is unanimous.[21] Some read: May we say that the Mishnah is not in accordance with Rabba? — R. Papa thereupon said: It deals with cases of death and is unanimous.

R. Zera demurred: Are there no other instances?[22] Behold there is [the case] where an ox was handed over to the care of five persons and one of them was careless, so that the ox did damage; that one is liable! — But in what circumstances? If without the care of that one, the ox could not be controlled, is it not obvious that it is that one who perpetrated the whole of the damage?[23] If, [on the other hand] even without the care of that one, the ox could be controlled, what, if anything at all, has that one perpetrated?

R. Shesheth, however, demurred: Behold there is [the case] where a man adds a bundle [of dry twigs to an existing fire]! — But in what circumstances?

---

(1) V. p. 37, n. 6.

(2) Cf. supra p. 36.

(3) Lit., 'utensils'.

(4) Cf. supra pp. 17 and 18.

(5) V. supra p. 18 and infra 53b.

(6) Metal or earthenware.
(7) Such as the distinction between Ox and Pit with reference to inanimate objects
(8) As a Tanna would not, in enumeration, just stop short at one point.
(9) For damage to which, according to the Rabbis, there is no liability in the case of Fire; cf. supra p. 18 and infra 61b.
(10) V. p. 38, n. 6.
(11) V. supra p. 18.
(12) On account of a blemish, cf, Lev. XXII, 20 and Deut. XV, 21-22; such animals have to be redeemed, in accordance with Lev. XXVII, 11-13 and 27.
(13) Cf. infra 53b.
(14) I.e., with reference to inanimate objects.
(15) Which is impossible in the case of Pit.
(16) And therefore, if the Baraitha were in accordance with R. Judah, the question, 'What else did it omit etc.', would remain unanswered.
(17) Cf. Tosaf, B.K. VI, 3 and infra 51a.
(18) As without the additional handbreadth done by him the pit would have been nine handbreadths deep which could not occasion any fatal accident; cf, supra p. 7.
(19) For even a pit nine handbreadths deep could occasion injuries.
(20) Which declares the latter person 'who perpetrated part of the damage' liable.
(21) I.e., is even in accordance with Rabbi.
(22) To illustrate the perpetration of a part of the damage involving liability for the whole of the damage.
(23) And not a part of it.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 10b

If without his co-operation the fire would not have spread, is it not obvious [that he is totally to blame]? If [on the other hand] even without his co-operation the fire would have spread, what, if anything at all, has he perpetrated?

R. Papa demurred: Behold there is that case which is taught: 'Five persons were sitting upon one bench and did not break it; when, however, there came along one person more and sat upon it, it broke down; the latter is liable' — supposing him, added R. Papa, to have been as stout as Papa b. Abba.[1] But under what circumstances? If without him the bench would not have broken, is it not obvious [that he is totally to blame]? If, on the other hand, without him it would also have broken, what, if anything at all, has he perpetrated? Be this as it may, how can the Baraitha be justified? — It could hold good when, without the newcomer, the bench would have broken after two hours, whereas now it broke in one hour. They[2] therefore can say to him: 'If not for you we would have remained sitting a little while longer and would then have got up.'[3] But why should he not say to them: 'Had you not been [sitting] there, through me the bench would not have broken'?[4] — No; it holds good when he [did not sit at all on the bench but] merely leaned upon them and the bench broke down. Is it not obvious [that he is liable]? — You might have argued '[Damage done by] a man's force is not comparable with [that done directly by] his body.'It is therefore made known to us that [a man is responsible for] his force [just as he] is [for] his body, for whenever his body breaks [anything] his force also participates in the damage.[5]

Are there no other instances? Behold there is that which is taught:[5] When ten persons beat a man with ten sticks, whether simultaneously or successively, so that he died, none of them is guilty of murder. R. Judah b. Bathyra says: If [they hit] successively, the last is liable, for he was the immediate cause of the death![6] — Cases of murder are not dealt with here.[7] You may also say that controversial cases are not dealt with.[7] Are they not? Did not we suggest that the Mishnah is not in accordance with Rabbi?[8] — That the Mishnah is not in accordance with Rabbi but in accordance with the Rabbis, we may suggest;[9] whereas that it is in accordance with R. Judah b. Bathyra, and not in accordance with the Rabbis, we are not inclined to suggest.[9]

I AM LIABLE TO COMPENSATE FOR THE DAMAGE. ‘I become liable for the replacement of the damage’ is not stated but ‘. . . TO COMPENSATE FOR THE DAMAGE’. We have thus learnt here that which the Rabbis taught elsewhere:[10] ‘“To compensate for damage" imports that the owners [plaintiffs] have to retain the carcass as part payment’. What is the authority for this ruling? — R. Ammi said: Scripture states, He that killeth a beast yeshallemennah [shall make it good];[11] do not read yeshallemennah [‘he shall pay for it’], but yashlimennah[12] [‘He shall complete its deficiency’]. R.Kahana infers it from the following: If it be torn in pieces, let him bring compensation up to [‘ad][13] the value of the carcass,’ he shall not make good that which was torn.[14] ‘Up to’ the value of the carcass[15] he must pay, but for the carcass itself he has not to pay. Hezekiah infers it from the following: And the dead shall be his own,[16] which refers to the plaintiff. It has similarly been taught in the school of Hezekiah: And the dead shall be his own,[16] refers to the plaintiff. You say ‘the plaintiff’. Why not the defendant? You may safely assert: ‘This is not the case.’ Why is this not the case? — Abaye said: If you assume that the carcass must remain with the defendant, why did not the Divine law, stating He shall surely pay ox for ox,[17] stop at that? Why write at all And the dead shall be his own?[18] This shows that it refers to the plaintiff.

And all the quotations serve each its specific purpose. For if the Divine Law had laid down [this ruling only in] the verse ‘He that killeth a beast shall make it good,’ the reason of the ruling would have been assigned to the infrequency of the occurrence,[19] whereas in the case of an animal torn in pieces [by wild beasts]’[20] which is [comparatively] of frequent occurrence, the opposite view might have been held;[21] hence special reference is essential.[20] If [on the other hand] this ruling had been made known to us only in the case of an animal torn in pieces.[22] it would have been explained by the fact that the damage there was done by an indirect agency,[23] whereas in the case of a man killing a beast, where the damage was done by a direct agency, the opposite view might have been held. Again, were this ruling intimated in both cases, it would have been explained in the one case on account of its infrequency,[24] and in the other account of the indirect agency,[25] whereas in the damage to which ‘And the dead shall be his own’[26] refers, which is both frequent and direct,[27] an opposite view might have been taken. If [on the other hand] this ruling had been intimated only in the case referred to by ‘And the dead shall be his own, it would have been explained by the fact of the damage having been done only by man's possession,[28] whereas in cases where the damage resulted from man's person[29] an opposite view might have been taken. Hence all quotations are essential.

R.Kahana said to Rab: The reason [for the ruling] is that the Divine Law says ‘And the dead shall be his own’, and but for this I might have thought that the carcass shall remain with the defendant [yet how can this be]? If, when there are with him[30] several carcasses he is entitled to pay him[31] with them, for the Master stated: He shall return,[32] includes payment in kind, even with bran,[33] what question then about the carcass of his own animal? — No, the verse is required only for the law regarding the decrease of the value of the carcass[34]

May we say that the decrease of the value of the carcass is a point at issue between Tannaitic authorities? For it has been taught: If it be torn in pieces, let him bring it for witness:[35]

---

(1) Who was very corpulent, cf. B.M. 84a. [According to Zacuto's Sefer ha-Yuhasin, the reference there is not to R. Papa but to Papa b. Abba]

(2) I.e., the five persons that had previously been sitting upon the bench.

(3) Therefore he is to he regarded as having perpetrated the whole, and not merely a part, of the damage.

(4) And why should he alone be liable?

(5) V. infra pp. 79-80.

(6) Sanh. 78a and infra p. 139. [Why then was this ruling of R. Judah not taken as a further illustration of the Mishnaic principle?]

(7) In the Mishnah before us (which presents the law of civil action and not that of murder).
(8) Cf. supra p. 39.
(9) As it is the view of the majority that prevails; Ex. XXIII, 2.
(10) Tosef. B.K. I. 1.
(11) ישלמנה Lev. XXIV, 18.
(12) Changing the vowels of the Hebrew verb; ישלמנה into ישלימנה
(13) Similarly by changing the vowel; the monosyllable עד (witness) is read עד 'up to'.
(14) Ex. XXII, 12.
(15) I.e., the amount required to make up the deficiency.
(16) Ex. XXI, 36.
(17) Ex. XXI, 36.
(18) Ibid; since it is self-evident that the defendant, having paid for the ox, claims the carcass.
(19) For a man to kill a beast with intent to cause damage to his neighbour.
(20) Ex. XXII, 12.
(21) In the interest of the plaintiff.
(22) V. p. 42, n. 11.
(23) I.e., not by the bailee himself but by a wild beast.
(24) I.e., man killing an animal.
(25) I.e., when the animal in charge was torn by beasts.
(26) I.e.,in the case of a goring ox, Ex. XXI, 36.
(27) The ox being his property, makes the owner responsible for the damage as if it were perpetrated by himself,
(28) I.e., by his cattle.
(29) Such as in Lev. XXIV, 18 and Ex. XXII, 12.
(30) I.e.,with the defendant.
(31) I.e., the plaintiff.
(32) EX.XXI, 34.
(33) Cf. supra p. 24.
(34) That is to he sustained by the plaintiff, since it becomes his from the moment of the goring.
(35) Ex.XXII, 12.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 11a

Let him[1] bring witnesses that it had been torn by sheer accident and free himself. Abba Saul says: Let him[2] [in all cases] bring the torn animal[3] to the Court. Now is not the following the point at issue: The latter maintains that a decrease in value of the carcass will be sustained by the plaintiff,[4] whereas the former view takes it to be sustained by the defendant? — No, it is unanimously held that the decrease will be sustained by the plaintiff. Here, however, the trouble of [providing[5] for bringing up] the carcass [from the pit] is the point at issue,[6] as [indeed] taught: Others say, Whence [could it be derived] that it is upon the owner of the pit to bring up the [damaged] ox from his pit? We derive it from the text, 'Money shall he return unto to the owner. And the dead beast'. . .[7] Abaye said to Raba: What does this trouble about the carcass mean? If the value of the carcass in the pit is one zuz,[8] whereas on the banks[9] its value will be four [zuz], is he not taking the trouble [of bringing up the carcass] solely in his own interests? — He [Raba], however, said: No, it applies when in the pit its value is one zuz, and on the banks its value is similarly one zuz. But is such a thing possible? Yes, as the popular adage has it, 'A beam in town costs a zuz and a beam in a field costs a zuz'.

Samuel said: No assessment is made in theft and robbery[10] but in cases of damage;[11] I, however, maintain that the same applies to borrowing,[12] and Abba[13] agrees with me. It was therefore asked: Did he mean to say that 'to borrowing the law of assessment does apply and Abba agrees with me,' Or did he perhaps mean to say that 'to borrowing the law of assessment does not apply and Abba agrees with me'? — Come and hear: A certain person borrowed an axe from his neighbour and broke it. He came before Rab, who said to him, 'Go and pay [the lender] for his sound axe.'[14] Now, can you not prove hence[15] that [the law of] assessment does not apply [to borrowing]?[16] — On the contrary, for since R. Kahana and R. Assi [interposed and] said to Rab, 'Is this really the law?' and no reply followed, we can conclude that assessment is made. It has been stated: 'Ulla said on behalf of R. Eleazar: Assessment is [also] made in case of theft and robbery; but R. Papi said that no assessment is made [in these cases]. The law is: No assessment is made in theft and robbery, but assessment is made in cases of borrowing, in accordance with R. Kahana and R. Assi.

'Ulla further said on behalf of R. Eleazar: When a placenta comes out [from a woman] partly on one day and partly on the next day, the counting of the days of impurity[17] commences with the first day [of the emergence]. Raba, however, said to him: What is in your mind? To take the stricter course? Is not this a strictness that will lead to lenience, since you will have to declare her pure[18] by reckoning from the first day? Raba therefore said: 'Out of mere apprehension, notice is taken of the first day [to be considered impure], but actual counting commences only with the second day.' What is the new point made known to us? That even a part of an [emerging] placenta contains a fetus. But have we not learnt this elsewhere:[19] 'A placenta coming partly out of an animal[20] renders [the whole of] it unfit for consumption,[21] as that, which is a sign of a fetus in humankind is similarly a sign of a fetus in an animal'? — As to this Mishnaic statement I might still have argued

---

(1) I.e.,the paid bailee who is defending himself against the depositor.

(2) V. p 43 n. 15.

(3) [עד :עדודה being an unaugmented passive participle from the root דדע, v. Halpern, B. ZAW, XXX, p. 57.]

(4) I.e., when the deposited animal has been torn not by accident, in which case the paid bailee has to indemnify. The torn animal is thus brought at once to the Court to ascertain its value at the time of the mishap.

(5) I.e , the expenses involved.

(6) Abba Saul maintains that the defendant has to do it, whereas the other view releases him from this.

(7) Ex. XXI, 34; the subject of the last clause is thus joined to the former sentence as a second object.

(8) A coin; V. Glos.

(9) Of the pit.

(10) In which case payment must b e made in full for the original value of the damaged article.

(11) Where the carcass may he returned to the plaintiff.

(12) Treated in Ex. XXII, 13.

(13) [I.e., Rab whose full name was Abba].

(14) B.M. 96b.

(15) When the value of the broken axe vas not taken into account, but full payment for the axe in its original condition was ordered.

(16) Since Rab ordered the borrower to pay in full for the original value of the axe.

(17) Which are seven for a male child and fourteen for a girl; cf. Lev. XII. 2 and 5.

(18) I.e., after the expiration of the 7 or 14 days for a male or female child respectively, when there commence 33 or 66 days of purity for a boy or girl respectively; cf. Lev. ibid. 4-5.

(19) Hul. 68a.

(20) Before the animal was slaughtered.

(21) As it is considered to contain a fetus which when born is subject to the law of slaughtering on its own accord.

that it is quite possible for a part of a placenta to emerge without a fetus, but that owing to a [Rabbinic] decree a part of a placenta is in practice treated like the whole of it;[1] it is therefore made known to us[2] that this is not the case.

'Ulla further said on behalf of R. Eleazar: A first-born son who has been killed within thirty days [of his birth] need not be redeemed.[3] The same has been taught by Rami b. Hama: From the verse, Shalt thou surely redeem[4] one might infer that this would apply even when the firstborn was killed within thirty days [of his birth]; there is therefore inserted the term 'but'[5] to exclude it.

'Ulla further said on behalf of R. Eleazar: [Title to] large cattle is acquired by 'pulling'.[6] But did we not learn, . . . by 'delivery'?[7] — He[8] follows another Tanna; for it has been taught:[9] The Rabbis say: Both one and the other[10] [are acquired] by 'pulling'. R. Simeon says: Both one and the other by 'lifting up'.

'Ulla further said on behalf of R. Eleazar: In the case of heirs[11] who are about to divide the estate among themselves, whatever is worn by them will [also] be assessed [and taken into account], but that which is worn by their sons and daughters is not assessed [and not taken into account].[12] R. Papa said: There are circumstances when even that which is worn by the heirs themselves is not assessed. This exception applies to the eldest of the heirs,[13] as it is in the interest of them all that his words should be respected.

'Ulla further said on behalf of R. Eleazar: One bailee handing over his charge to another bailee does not incur thereby any liability.[14] This ruling unquestionably applies to an unpaid bailee handing over his charge to a paid bailee in which case there is a definite improvement in the care; but even when a paid bailee hands over his charge to an unpaid bailee where there is definitely a decrease in the care, still he thereby incurs no liability, since he transfers his charge to a responsible person.

Raba, however, said: One bailee handing over his charge to another bailee becomes liable for all consequences. This ruling unquestionably holds good in the case of a paid bailee handing over his charge to an unpaid bailee where there is a definite decrease in the care; but even when an unpaid bailee hands over his charge to a paid bailee, where there is definitely an improvement in the care, still he becomes liable for all consequences, as the depositor may say [to the original bailee]: You would be trusted by me [should occasion demand] an oath [from you], but your substitute would not be trusted by me in the oath [which he may be required to take].[15]

'Ulla further said on behalf of R. Eleazar: The law is that distraint may be made on slaves.[16] Said R. Nahman to 'Ulla: Did R. Eleazar apply this statement even in the case of heirs[17] [of the debtor]? — No, Only to the debtor himself. To the debtor himself? Could not a debt be collected even from the cloak upon his shoulder?[18] — We are dealing here with a case where a slave was mortgaged,[19] as in the case stated by Raba, for Raba said:[20] Where a debtor mortgaged his slave and then sold him [to another person], the creditor may distrain on him [in the hands of the purchaser]. But where an ox was mortgaged and afterwards sold, the creditor cannot distrain on it [in the hands of the purchaser], the reason [for the distinction] being that in the former case the transaction of the mortgage aroused public interest[21] whereas in the latter case no public interest was aroused.[22]

---

(1) On account of mere apprehension, lest no distinction will he made between the emergence of the whole of the placenta and a part of it.

(2) In the statement of 'Ulla on behalf of R. Eleazar,

(3) Notwithstanding Num. XVIII, 15-16.

(4) Ibid. 15.

(5) Hebrew 'Ak אך being a particle of limitation.

(6) I.e., by the buyer; v, Glos. s.v. Meshikah.

(7) l.e., by the seller handing over the bit to the buyer; Kid. 25b.

(8) I.e., 'Ulla on behalf of R. Eleazar.

(9) Cf. Kid. 25b and B.B. 86b.

(10) I.e. Large and small cattle.

(11) Lit., 'brothers'.

(12) As it would be a degradation to them to be forced to appear before the court.

(13) In charge of the administration of the affairs of the heirs.

(14) Cf.B.M. 36a.
(15) The original bailee has thus committed a breach of the trust.
(16) Cf. B.B. 128a.
(17) Who inherited the slaves; v. supra p. 31.
(18) Why then speak about slaves?
(19) By the debtor who had meanwhile died.
(20) Infra 33b and B.B. 44b.
(21) So that the purchaser was no doubt aware of it and should consequently not have bought it.
(22) So that the purchaser is not to blame.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 12a

After R. Nahman went out 'Ulla said to the audience: 'The statement made by R. Eleazar refers even to the case of heirs.' R. Nahman said: 'Ulla escaped my criticism'. A case of this kind arose in Nehardea and the judges of Nehardea[1] distrained [on slaves in the hands of heirs]. A further case took place in Pumbeditha and R. Hana b. Bizna distrained [on slaves in the hands of heirs]. But R. Nahman said to them: 'Go and withdraw [your judgments], otherwise I will distrain on your own homes [to reimburse the aggrieved heirs].'[2] Raba, however, said to R. Nahman: 'There is 'Ulla, there is R. Eleazar, there are the judges of Nehardea and there is R. Hana b. Bizna [who are all joining issue with you]; what authorities is the Master following?' — He said to him:[3] 'I know of a Baraitha, for Abimi learned: "A prosbul[4] is effective only when there is realty[5] [belonging to the debtor] but not when he possesses slaves[6] only. Personalty is transferred along with realty[7] but not along with slaves."'[6]

May we not say that this problem is a point at issue between the following Tannaim? [For it was taught:] 'Where slaves and lands are sold, if possession is taken of the slaves no title is thereby acquired to the land, and similarly by taking possession of the lands no title is acquired to the slaves. In the case of lands and chattels, if possession is taken of the lands title is also acquired to the chattels,[7] but by taking possession of the chattels no title is acquired to the lands. In the case of slaves and chattels, if possession is taken of the slaves no title is thereby acquired to the chattels,[8] and similarly by taking possession of the chattels no title is acquired to the slaves. But [elsewhere] it has been taught: 'If possession is taken of the slaves the title is thereby acquired to the chattels.'[9] Now, is not this problem the point at issue: the latter Baraitha[9] maintains that slaves are considered realty [in the eye of the law], whereas the former Baraitha[10] is of the opinion that slaves are considered personalty? — R. Ika the son of R. Ammi, however, said: [Generally speaking] all [authorities] agree that slaves are considered realty. The [latter] Baraitha stating that the transfer [of the chattels] is effective, is certainly in agreement; the [former] Baraitha stating that the transfer [of the chattels] is ineffective, may maintain that the realty we require is such as shall resemble the fortified cities of Judah in being immovable. For we have learnt: 'Property which is not realty may be acquired incidentally with property which is realty[11] through the medium of either [purchase] money, bill of sale or taking possession.' [And it has been asked:][12] What is the authority for this ruling? And Hezekiah thereupon said: Scripture states, And their father gave them great gifts of silver and of gold and of precious things with fortified cities in Judah.[13] [Alternatively] there are some who report: R. Ika the son of R. Ammi said: [Generally speaking] all [authorities] agree that slaves are considered personalty. The [former] Baraitha stating that the transfer [of the chattels] is ineffective is certainly in agreement; the [latter] Baraitha stating that the transfer of the chattels is effective deals with the case when the chattels [sold] were worn by the slave.[14] But even if they were worn by him, what does it matter? He is but property[15] in motion, and property in motion cannot be the means of conveying anything it carries. Moreover, even if you argue that the slave was then stationary, did not Raba say that whatsoever cannot be the means of conveying while in motion cannot be the means of conveying even while in the state of standing or sitting?[16] — This law applies to the case where the slave was put in stocks. But behold has it not been taught: 'If possession is taken of the land, title is thereby acquired also to the slaves'?[17] — There the slaves were gathered on the land.[18] This implies that the Baraitha which stated that the transfer of the slaves is ineffective,[19] deals with a case where the slaves were not gathered on the land. That is all very well according to the version that R. Ika the son of R. Ammi said that slaves are considered personalty; there is thus the stipulation that if they were gathered on the land, the transfer is effective, otherwise ineffective. But according to the version which reads that slaves are considered realty, why the stipulation that the slaves be gathered on the land?

---

(1) Generally referring to R. Adda b. Minyomi; Sanh. 17b.

(2) As he considered them to have acted against established law, and so ultra vires; cf infra pp. 584ff. and Sanh. 33a.

(3) I.e., R. Nahman to Raba.

(4)  i.e., an official declaration made in court by a lender to the effect that the law of limitation by the Sabbatical year shall not apply to the loans contracted by him; cf. Sheb. X. 4 and Git. 36a. V. Glos.

(5) As realty even when sold by the debtor could be distrained on in the hands of the purchasers; cf. Git. 37a.

(6) As these are considered personalty. They cannot therefore be distrained on in the hands of heirs.

(7) I.e., the acquisition of land confers title to chattels bought at the same time. Kid. 26a; v. infra, p. 49.

(8) Slaves seem thus to be not realty.

(9) In this Baraitha slaves are treated like realty.

(10) Stating that by taking possession of slaves no title is acquired to chattels.

(11) Lit, 'property which affords no surety may be acquired along with property which does afford surety' (to creditors in case of non-payment of debts); Kid 26a.

(12) Kid. 26a.

(13) II Chron. XXI,3: with עִם is taken in the sense by means of.

(14) They are therefore part and parcel of the slave.

(15) Lit., a courtyard.

(16) Git. 21a, 68a; B.M. 9b.

(17) Apparently on account of the fact that these are treated like personalty.

(18) In which case even if they are not personalty their transfer has to he valid.

(19) When only incidental to the transfer of land.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 12b

Did not Samuel say that if ten fields in ten different countries are sold, as soon as possession is taken of one of them, the transfer of all of them becomes effective?[1] — But even if your reasoning be followed [that it is in accordance with the version reading that slaves are considered personalty], why again the stipulation that the slaves be gathered on the land? Has it not been established that the personalty' need not be gathered on the land? You can therefore only say that there is a distinction in law between movable personalty[2] and immovable personalty. Likewise here also [we say] there is a distinction in law between movable realty[3] and immovable realty: slaves [if realty] are movable realty whereas there [in the case of the ten fields] land is but one block.

THE [DAMAGED] PROPERTY MUST BE OF A KIND TO WHICH THE LAW OF SACRILEGE HAS NO APPLICATION etc. So long as [the penalty of] Sacrilege does not apply. Who is the Tanna [of this view]? — R. Johanan said: This is so in the case of minor sacrifices according to R. Jose the Galilean, who considers them to be private property; for it has been taught: If a soul sin and commit a trespass against the Lord and lie unto his neighbour.[4] . . this indicates also minor sacrifices,[5] as these are considered private property;[6] so R. Jose the Galilean. But, behold, we have learnt: If one betroths [a woman] by means of the priestly portion, whether of major sacrifices or of minor sacrifices, the betrothal is not valid.[7] Are we to say that this Mishnah is not in accordance with R. Jose the Galilean?[8] — You may even reconcile it with R. Jose the Galilean; for R. Jose the Galilean confines his remark to sacrifices that are still alive, whereas, in the case of sacrifices that have already been slaughtered, even R. Jose the Galilean agrees that those who are entitled to partake of the flesh acquire this right as guests at the divine table.[9] But so long as the sacrifice is still alive, does he really maintain that it is private property? Behold, we have learnt: A firstling, if unblemished, may be sold only while alive; but if blemished [it may be sold] both while alive and when slaughtered. It may similarly be used for the betrothal of a woman.[10] And R. Nahman said on behalf of Rabbah b. Abbuha:[11] This is so only in the case of a firstling at the present time,[12] in which, on account of the fact that it is not destined to be sacrificed, the priests possess a proprietary right; but at the time when the Temple still existed, when it would have been destined to be sacrificed, the law would not have been so.[13] And Raba asked R. Nahman: [Was it not taught:] If a soul sin and commit a trespass against the Lord and lie unto his neighbour. . .;[14] this indicates also minor sacrifices, as these are considered private property;[15] this is the view of R. Jose the Galilean? And Rabina replied that the latter case[16] deals with firstlings from outside [Palestine] and is in accordance with R. Simeon, who maintains that if they were brought [to Palestine] in an unblemished condition, they will be sacrificed.[17] Now this is so only if they were brought [to Palestine, which implies that] there is no necessity to bring them there in the first instance for that specific purpose.[18] Now, if it is the fact that R. Jose the Galilean considers them private property while alive,

---

(1) Kid. 27a.

(2) That is to he acquired along with realty; v. Kid. 27a.

(3) Which needs to be gathered on the land.

(4) Lev. V, 21.

(5) E.g., peace offerings, as these belong partly to the Lord and partly to the neighbour; some parts thereof are burnt on the altar but the flesh is consumed by the original owners.

(6) Pes. 90a.

(7) Kid. 52b.

(8) For according to him the flesh is private property and alienable,

(9) I.e., as merely invited without having in them any proprietary rights.

(10) M.Sh. I, 2.

(11) Tem. 7b.

(12) When no sacrifices are offered.

(13) The priests would not have had in it a proprietary right nor have been able to use it for the betrothal of a woman.

(14) Lev, V, 21.

(15) Even in Temple times, since the text requires the offender to bring a trespass offering.

(16) Where they are considered private property.

(17) Tem. III. 5.

(18) And since they need not be brought and sacrificed they are considered the private property of the priests as stated by R. Jose the Galilean.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 13a

why [did Rabina] not reply that the one[1] is in accordance with R. Jose the Galilean,and the other[2] in accordance with the Rabbis?[3] — It was said in answer: How can you refer to priestly gifts? Priestly gifts are altogether different[4] as those who are entitled to them enjoy that privilege as guests at the divine table.[5]

[To refer to] the main text : If a soul sin and commit a trespass against the Lord and lie unto his neighbour:[6] this indicates also minor sacrifices; this is the view of R. Jose the Galilean. Ben ‘Azzai says that it indicates [also] peace-offerings. Abba Jose b. Dostai said that Ben ‘Azzai meant to include only the firstling.

The Master said:[6] ‘Ben Azzai says that it indicates [also] peace-offerings.’ What does he mean to exclude? It can hardly be the firstling, for if in the case of peace-offerings which are subject to the laws of leaning,[7] libations[8] and the waving of the breast and shoulder,[9] you maintain that they are private property, what question could there be about the firstling?[10] — R. Johanan therefore said: He meant to exclude the tithe,[11] as taught: In the case of the firstling, it is stated, Thou shalt not redeem;[12] it may, however, if unblemished be sold while alive, and if blemished [it may be sold] alive or slaughtered; in the case of the tithe it is stated, It shall not be redeemed,[13] and it can be sold neither alive nor slaughtered neither when unblemished nor when blemished.[14] Rabina connected all the above discussion with the concluding clause: 'Abba Jose b. Dostai said that Ben 'Azzai meant to include only the firstling.' What does he mean to exclude? It can hardly be peace-offerings, for if the firstling which is holy from the very moment it opens the matrix,[15] is private property, what question could there be about peace-offerings?[16] — R. Johanan therefore said: He meant to exclude the tithe, as taught:[17] In regard to the firstling it is stated, Thou shalt not redeem;[18] it may, however, if unblemished be sold while alive and if blemished [it may be sold] alive or slaughtered; in regard to the tithe it is stated, It shall not be redeemed,[19] and it can be sold neither while alive nor when slaughtered, neither when unblemished nor blemished. But does he not say, 'The firstling alone'?[20] This is a difficulty indeed!

Raba [on the other hand] said: What is meant by 'THE [DAMAGED] PROPERTY MUST BE OF A KIND TO WHICH THE LAW OF SACRILEGE HAS NO APPlication' is that the property is not of a class to which the law of sacrilege may have any reference[21] but is such as is owned privately . But why does not the text say. 'Private property'? — This is a difficulty indeed!

R.Abba said: In the case of peace-offerings that did damage,[22] payment will be made[23] out of their flesh but no payment could be made out of their emurim.[24] Is it not obvious that the emurim will go up [and be burnt] on the altar? — No; we require to be told that no payment will be made out of the flesh for the proportion due from the emurim. But according to whose authority is this ruling made? If according to the Rabbis,[25] is this not obvious? Do they not maintain that when payment cannot be recovered from one party, it is not requisite to make it up from the other party? If according to R. Nathan,[26] [it is certainly otherwise] for did he not say that when no payment can be made from one party, it has to be made up from the other party? — If you wish, you may say: The ruling was made in accordance with R. Nathan; or, if you wish, you may say that it was made in accordance with the Rabbis. You may say that it was made in accordance with the Rabbis,for their ruling is confined to a case where the damage was done by two separate agencies,[27] whereas, in the case of one agency,[28] the plaintiff may be justified in demanding payment from whatever source he finds it convenient. Alternatively you may say that the ruling was made in accordance with R. Nathan, for it is only there [in the case of an ox pushing another's ox in a pit] that the owner of the damaged ox is entitled to say to the owner of the pit, 'I have found my ox in your pit; whatever is not paid to me by your co-defendant must be made up by you;'

---

(1) Maintaining that a firstling is the private property of the priest.

(2) I.e., the statement of R. Nahman that a firstling is not the private property of the priest.

(3) The opponents of R. Jose the Galilean.

(4) Even R. Jose regards them in no case as the property of the priest; all the Rabbis including R. Jose are thus unanimous on this matter. Hence Rabina was unable to explain the one Baraitha in accordance with R. Jose and the other in accordance with the Rabbis.

(5) Even while the firstling is still alive.

(6) Lev. V, 21.

(7) Ibid. III, 2.

(8) Num. XV, 8-II.

(9) Lev. VII, 30-34.

(10) The sacredness of which is of a lower degree and is not subject to all these rites. Consequently it should thus certainly be considered private property. It, of course, deals with a firstling outside Palestine which is not destined to he sacrificed.

(11) Of cattle dealt with in Lev. XXVII, 32-33.
(12) Num. XVIII, 17, the text is taken not to include alienation, in which case the sanctity of the firstling is not affected.
(13) Lev XXVII, 33; in this case, on account of Gezerah Shawah. i.e. a similarity of phrases between ibid. and verse 28, the right of alienation is included; cf, Bek. 32a.
(14) Tem. 8a. Because it is not private property.
(15) Ex. XIII, 12.
(16) That they should certainly be private property.
(17) Tem. 8a.
(18) Num. XVIII, 17.
(19) Lev. XXVII, 33.
(20) Excluding thus everything else, even peace-offerings.
(21) I.e. is not holy at all.
(22) While still Tam, when the payment must be made out of the body of the doer of the damage, v. infra p. 73.
(23) According to R. Jose the Galilean who maintains, supra p. 50, that minor sacrifices are considered private property.
(24) The part which has to he burnt on the altar; cf. Lev. III, 3-4.
(25) Infra 53a. where in the case of an ox pushing somebody else's animal into a pit, the owner of the pit pays nothing, though the owner of the ox does not pay full damages.
(26) Who makes the owner of the pit also pay.
(27) I.e., the ox and the pit, v. p. 53. n. 12.
(28) Such as in the case of peace-offerings dealt with by R. Abba.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 13b

but in the case in hand, could the plaintiff say, 'The flesh did the damage and the emurim did no damage'?[1]

Raba said: In the case of a thanksgiving-offering that did damage,[2] payment will be made[3] out of the flesh but no payment could be made out of its bread.[4] 'Bread'! Is this not obvious?[5] — He wanted to lead up to the concluding clause: The plaintiff partakes of the flesh,[6] while he, for whose atonement the offering is dedicated,[7] has to bring the bread. Is not this also obvious? — You might have thought that since the bread is but an accessory to the sacrifice,[4] the defendant may be entitled to say to the plaintiff. 'If you will partake of the flesh, why should I bring the bread?' It is therefore made known to us [that this is not the case, but] that the bread is an obligation upon the original owner of the sacrifice.

THE [DAMAGED] PROPERTY SHOULD BELONG TO PERSONS WHO ARE UNDER [THE JURISDICTION OF] THE LAW. What [person] is thereby meant to be excepted? If a heathen,[8] is not this explicitly stated further on: 'An ox of an Israelite that gored an ox of a heathen is not subject to the general law of liability for damage'?[9] — That which has first been taught by implication is subsequently explained explicitly.

THE PROPERTY SHOULD BE OWNED. What is thereby excepted? — Rab Judah said: It excepts the case [of alternative defendants] when the one pleads. 'It was your ox that did the damage,' and the other pleads. 'It was your ox that did the damage.' But is not this explicitly stated further on: If two oxen pursue another ox, and one of the defendants pleads. 'It was your ox that did the damage,' and the other defendant pleads, 'It was your ox that did the damage,' no liability could be attached to either of them?[10] — What is first taught by implication is subsequently explained explicitly. In a Baraitha it has been taught: The exception refers to ownerless property.[11] But in what circumstances? It can hardly be where an owned ox gored an ownerless ox, for who is there to institute an action? If on the other hand an ownerless ox gored an owned ox, why not go and take possession of the ownerless doer of the damage? — Somebody else has meanwhile stepped in and already acquired title to it.[12] Rabina said: It excepts an ox which gored and subsequently became consecrated or an ox which gored and afterwards became ownerless.[12] It has also been taught thus: Moreover said R. Judah:[13] Even if after having gored, the ox was consecrated by the owner, or after having gored it was declared by him ownerless, he is exempt, as it is said, And it hath been testified to his owner and he hath not kept it in, but it hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned.[14] That is so only where conditions are the same at the time of both the manslaughter and the appearance before the Court.[15] Does not the final verdict also need to comply with this same condition? Surely the very verse, The ox shall be stoned, circumscribes also the final verdict! — Read therefore: That is so only when conditions are the same at the time of the manslaughter and the appearance before the Court and the final verdict.[15]

WITH THE EXCEPTION OF PREMISES OWNED BY THE DEFENDANT: Because he may argue against the plaintiff, 'What was your ox doing on my premises?' OR PREMISES OWNED [JOINTLY] BY PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT. R. Hisda said on behalf of Abimi: [Where damage is done] in jointly owned courts, there is liability for Tooth and Foot,[16] and the [Mishnah] text is to be read thus: WITH THE EXCEPTION OF PREMISES OWNED BY THE DEFENDANT, where there is exemption. but in the case of PREMISES OWNED [JOINTLY] BY PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT, WHENEVER DAMAGE HAS OCCURRED,[17] THE OFFENDER IS LIABLE. R. Eleazar [on the other hand] said: There is no liability there for Tooth and Foot,[16] and the text is to be understood thus: WITH THE EXCEPTION OF PREMISES OWNED BY THE DEFENDANT OR [OF] PREMISES OWNED [JOINTLY] BY PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT, where there is also exemption. But WHENEVER DAMAGE HAS OCCURRED [otherwise] THE OFFENDER IS LIABLE etc. introduces Horn.[18] This would be in conformity with Samuel,[19] but according to Rab, who affirmed that ox in the Mishnaic text was intended to include all kinds of damage done by ox,[20] what was meant to be introduced by the clause, THE OFFENDER IS LIABLE? — To introduce that which our Rabbis have taught: WHENEVER DAMAGE HAS OCCURRED THE OFFENDER IS LIABLE introduces liability in the case of a paid bailee and a borrower, an unpaid bailee and a hirer, where the animal in their charge did damage, Tam paying half-damages and Mu'ad paying full damages. If, however, a wall[21] broke open at night, or robbers took it by force and it went out and did damage, there is exemption.

The Master said: 'WHENEVER DAMAGE HAS OCCURRED, THE OFFENDER IS LIABLE introduces liability in the case of an unpaid bailee and a borrower, a paid bailee and a hirer'. Under what circumstances? If the ox of the lender damaged the ox of the borrower, why should not the former say to the latter: 'If my ox had damaged somebody else's, you would surely have had to compensate;[22] now that my ox has damaged your own ox, how can you claim compensation from me?' Again, if the ox of the borrower damaged the ox of the lender, why should not the latter say to the former: 'If my ox had been damaged by somebody else's, you would surely have had to compensate me for the full value of the ox,[23] now that the damage resulted from your ox, how can you offer me half damages?[24] — It must therefore still be that the ox of the lender damaged the ox of the borrower, but we deal with a case where he [the borrower] has taken upon himself responsibility for the safety of the ox

---

(1) Hence the flesh need not pay for the emurim.

(2) While still Tam, in which case the payment must he made out of the body of the damage-doer, as infra p. 73.

(3) In accordance with R. Jose the Galilean that minor sacrifices are private property.

(4) I.e., accompanying the offering, cf. Lev. VII, 12-13.

(5) That the bread need not pay, since the bread did not do any damage.

(6) After the offering of the sacrifice.

(7) I.e.,(as a rule) the defendant.

(8) Who does not recognise the covenant of Law, and who does not consider himself bound to control his own cattle from doing damage to others.

(9) V. infra p. 211 and note 6.

(10) V. infra 35a. ‘Owned’ thus means ‘known to belong to a particular defendant.’
(11) Tosef. B.K. I, 1.
(12) In which case the plaintiff will recover nothing.
(13) Infra p. 254.
(14) Ex. XXI, 29.
(15) I.e., where the ox is privately owned all through.
(16) For which there is no liability in a public thoroughfare; cf. supra p. 17.
(17) Even by Tooth and Foot.
(18) For which there is liability even in a public thoroughfare
(19) Who maintains, supra pp. 9-11, that Mab'eh in the Mishnaic text denotes Tooth, and Ox signifies Foot, whereas Horn has not been dealt with explicitly.
(20) Supra p. 10; so that Horn has already been dealt with in the first Mishnah.
(21) Of a sound structure, cf. infra 55b-56a
(22) The borrower being responsible for the damage done by the ox whilst under his charge. V. infra 44b
(23) As laid down in Ex. XXII. 13.
(24) I.e., in the case of the borrower's ox having been Tam.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 14a

but not responsibility for any damage [that it may do].[1] If so, explain the concluding clause: ‘If a wall broke open at night, or if robbers took it by force and it went out and did damage, there is exemption.’ From this it may surely be inferred that [if this had happened] in the daytime, the borrower would have been liable. Why so, if he did not take upon himself responsibility for any damage [that it may do]? — The meaning must be as follows: [But] if he has taken upon himself responsibility for damage [that it may do], he would be liable to compensate, yet, if a wall broke open at night, or if robbers took it by force and it went out and did damage there is exemption [in such a case]. Is it really so?[2] Did not R. Joseph learn: In the case of jointly owned premises or an inn, there is liability for Tooth and for Foot? Is not this a refutation of R. Eleazar? — R. Eleazar may answer you as follows: Do you really think so? Are Baraithas not divided [in their opinions] on the matter?[3] For it was taught:[4] ‘Four general rules were stated by R. Simeon b. Eleazar to apply to the laws of torts: [In the case of damage done in] premises owned by the plaintiff and not at all by the defendant, there is liability in all; if owned by the defendant and not at all by the plaintiff, there is total exemption; but if owned by the one and the other, e.g., jointly owned premises or a valley, there is exemption for Tooth and for Foot, whereas for goring, pushing, biting, falling down, and kicking, Tam pays half-damages and Mu'ad pays full damages; if not owned by the one and the other, e.g., premises not belonging to them both, there is liability for Tooth and for Foot, whereas for goring, pushing, biting, falling down, and kicking, Tam pays half-damages and Mu'ad pays full damages.’ It has thus been taught here that in the case of jointly owned premises or a valley there is exemption for Tooth and Foot.[5]

Do then the two Baraithas contradict each other? — The latter Baraitha speaks of a case where the premises were set aside by the one and the other[6] for the purposes of both keeping fruits and keeping cattle in, whereas that of R. Joseph deals with premises set aside for keeping fruits in but not cattle, in which case so far as Tooth is concerned the premises are in practice the plaintiff's ground.[7] In fact the context points to the same effect. In the Baraitha here[8] the jointly owned premises are put on the same footing as an inn whereas in the Baraitha there[9] they are put on the same footing as a valley. This is indeed proved. R. Zera, however, demurred: In the case of premises which are set aside for the purpose of keeping fruits [of the one and the other].[10] how shall we comply with the requirement, and it feed in another man's field,[11] which is lacking in this case? — Abaye said to him: Since the premises are not set aside for keeping cattle in, they may well be termed ‘another man's field.’[12]

R. Aha of Difti[13] said to Rabina: May we say that just as the Baraithas[14] are not divided on the matter so also are the Amoraim[15] not divided on the subject?[16] He answered him: Indeed, it is so; if, however, you think that they are divided [in their views].[17] the objection of R. Zera and the answer of Abaye form the point at issue.[18]

[To revert] to the above text: 'Four general rules were stated by R. Simeon b. Eleazar to apply to the laws of torts: [Where damage is done in] premises owned by the plaintiff, and not at all by the defendant, there is liability in all.' It is not stated 'for all'[19] but 'in all', i.e., in the whole of the damage; is it not in accordance with R. Tarfon who maintains that the unusual damage occasioned by Horn in the plaintiff's premises will be compensated in full.[20] Read, however, the concluding clause: 'If not owned by the one and the other, e.g., premises not belonging to them both, there is liability for Tooth and for Foot.' Now, what is the meaning of 'not owned by the one and the other'? It could hardly mean 'owned neither by the one nor by the other, but by somebody else,' for have we not to comply with the requirement, and it feed in another man's field,[21] which is lacking in this case? It means therefore, of course, not owned by them both, but exclusively by the plaintiff,' and yet it is stated in the concluding clause, 'Tam pays half-damages and Mu'ad pays full damages,' which follows the view of the Rabbis who maintain that the unusual damage occasioned by Horn in the plaintiff's premises will still be compensated only by half-damages.[22] Will the commencing clause be according to R. Tarfon and the concluding clause according to the Rabbis? — Yes, even as Samuel said to Rab Judah: Shinena,[23] leave this Baraitha alone,[24] and follow my view that the commencement of the Baraitha is according to R. Tarfon and its conclusion according to the Rabbis. Rabina, however, said in the name of Raba: The whole Baraitha is according to R. Tarfon; what is meant by 'not owned by the one and the other' is that the right of keeping fruits there is owned not by both, the one and the other, but exclusively by the plaintiff, whereas the right of keeping cattle there is owned by both, the one and the other. In the case of Tooth the premises are in practice the plaintiff's ground,[25] whereas in the case of Horn they are jointly owned ground.[26] If so, how are the rules four in number?[27] Are they not only three? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied:

---

(1) In which case the lender still remains liable for any damage his ox may do.

(2) That R. Eleazar exempts Tooth and Foot doing damage in jointly owned premises.

(3) And my view is supported by one of them.

(4) Tosef. B.K. I, 6.

(5) Thus fully supporting the view of R. Eleazar and contradicting the teaching of R. Joseph's Baraitha.

(6) I.e., by both plaintiff and defendant.

(7) For the defendant had no right to allow his cattle to be there, and is therefore liable for Tooth, etc.

(8) I.e., of R. Joseph.

(9) Recording the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.

(10) I.e., by both plaintiff and defendant.

(11) Ex. XXII, 4; implying that the field should belong exclusively to the plaintiff.

(12) For the defendant had no right to allow his cattle to be there, and is therefore liable for Tooth, etc.

(13) [Identified with Dibtha near the famous city of Washit on the Tigris, Obermeyer, op. cit. p. 197].

(14) I.e., that of R. Joseph and that of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.

(15) R. Hisda and R. Eleazar.

(16) R. Hisda deals with a case where the keeping of cattle has not been permitted, while R. Eleazar deals with the case when the premises have been set aside for that also.

(17) When the premises have been set aside not for cattle, but for the keeping of fruit.

(18) R. Hisda is of Abaye's opinion. whereas R. Eleazar prefers R. Zera's reasoning.

(19) Which would mean for all kinds of damage.

(20) Cf. infra 24b.

(21) Ex. XXII, 4, indicating that the field has to belong to the plaintiff.

(22) Cf. infra 24b.

(23) [Lit., (i) 'sharp one', i.e, scholar with keen and sharp mind; (ii) 'long-toothed', denoting a facial characteristic; (iii) 'translator', Rab Judah being so called on account of his frequent translation of Mishnaic terms into the vernacular

Aramaic, Golomb, D. Targumno I, Introduction, XLVff.]

(24) [Give up your attempt to harmonize the two contradictory clauses.]

(25) As the right to keep fruits there is exclusively the plaintiff's.

(26) For they both may keep cattle there.

(27) Since in principle they are only three in number: (a) exclusively the plaintiff's premises. (b) exclusively the defendant's, and (c) partnership premises.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 14b

The rules are three in number, but the places to which they apply may be divided into four.[1]

MISHNAH. THE VALUATION [IS MADE] IN MONEY [BUT MAY BE PAID] BY MONEY'S WORTH, IN THE PRESENCE OF THE COURT AND ON THE EVIDENCE OF WITNESSES WHO ARE FREE MEN AND PERSONS UNDER THE JURISDICTION OF THE LAW. WOMEN ARE ALSO SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF TORTS. [BOTH] THE PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT ARE INVOLVED IN THE PAYMENT.

GEMARA. What is the meaning of THE VALUATION IN MONEY? Rab Judah said: This valuation must be made only in specie. We thus learn here that which has been taught by our Rabbis elsewhere:[2] In the case of a cow damaging a garment while the garment also damaged the cow, it should not be said that the damage done by the cow is to be set off against the damage done to the garment and the damage done to the garment against the damage done to the cow, the respective damages have to be estimated at a money value.

BY MONEY'S WORTH. [This is explained by what] our Rabbis taught [elsewhere]:[2] 'MONEY'S WORTH' implies that the Court will not have recourse for distraint save to immovable property. Nevertheless if the plaintiff himself seized some chattels beforehand, the Court will collect payment for him out of them.

The Master stated: "'MONEY'S WORTH" implies that the Court will not have recourse for distraint save to immovable property. How is this implied? Rabbah b. 'Ulla said: The article of distress has to be worth all that is paid for it [in money].[3] What does this mean? An article which is not subject to the law of deception?[4] Are not slaves and deeds also not subject to the law of deception?[4] — Rabbah b. 'Ulla therefore said: An article, title to which is acquired by means of money.[5] Are not slaves[6] and deeds[7] similarly acquired by means of money.[6] R. Ashi therefore said: 'Money's worth' implies that which has money's worth,[8] whereas chattels are considered actual money.[9] Rab Judah b. Hinena pointed out the following contradiction to R. Huna the son of R. Joshua: It has been taught: 'MONEY'S FORTH implies that the Court will not have recourse for distraint save to immovable property; behold, was it not taught: He shall return[10] includes 'money's worth', even bran?[11] — [In the former Baraitha] we are dealing with a case of heirs.[12] If we are dealing with heirs read the concluding clause: 'If the plaintiff himself seized some chattels beforehand, the Court will collect payment for him out of them.' Now, if we are dealing with heirs, how may the Court collect payment for him out of them? — As already elsewhere[13] stated by Raba on behalf of R. Nahman, that the plaintiff seized [the chattels] while the original defendant was still alive, so here too, the seizure took place while the defendant was still alive.

IN THE PRESENCE OF THE COURT,[14] [apparently] exempts a case where the defendant sold his possessions before having been summoned to Court. May it hence be derived that in the case of one who borrowed money and sold his possessions before having been summoned to Court , the Court does not collect the debt out of the estate which has been disposed of?[15] — The text therefore excepts a Court of laymen.[16]

ON THE EVIDENCE OF WITNESSES, thus excepting a confession of [an act punishable by] a fine for which subsequently there appeared witnesses, in which case there is exemption. That would accord with the view that in the case of a confession of [an act punishable by] a fine, for which subsequently there appeared witnesses, there is exemption;[17] but according to the opposite view that in the case of a confession of [an act punishable by] a fine for which subsequently appeared witnesses, there is liability,[17] what may be said [to be the import of the text]? — The important point comes in the concluding clause:

---

(1) [I.e.. partnership premises may he subdivided into two: (a) where both have the right to keep fruit, as well as cattle; (b) where the right to keep fruit is exclusively the plaintiff's.]

(2) Tosef. B.K., I.

(3) 'Money's worth' would thus mean 'property which could not be said to be worth less than the price paid for it,' and is thus never subject to the law of deception. This holds good with immovable property; cf. B.M. 56a.

(4) Cf. B.M. ibid.

(5) Kid. 26a.

(6) Cf. Kid. 23b.

(7) [Tosaf. deletes 'deeds' as these are not acquired by money but by Mesirah (v. Glos.). cf. B.B. 76a.]

(8) I.e., immovable property.

(9) As these could easily be converted into money, v. supra p. 26.

(10) Ex. XXI, 34.

(11) Supra p. 24.

(12) Who have to pay only out of the realty of the estate but not out of the personalty; cf. supra p. 31.

(13) Keth. 84b.

(14) Is taken to mean 'the payment in kind is made out of the possessions which are in the presence of the Court', i.e., not disposed of.

(15) Whereas the law is definitely otherwise as in B.B. X, 8.

(16) IN THE PRESENCE OF THE COURT does not refer to payment in kind but to the valuation which has to be made by qualified judges, v. infra 84b.

(17) Infra p. 429.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 15a

FREE MEN AND PERSONS UNDER THE JURISDICTION OF THE LAW. 'FREE MAN' excludes slaves;[1] 'PERSONS UNDER THE JURISDICTION OF THE LAW'[2] excludes heathens. Moreover, it was essential to exclude each of them. For if the exemption had been stated only in reference to a slave, we would have thought it was on account of his lack of [legal] pedigree[3] whereas a heathen who possesses a [legal] pedigree[4] might perhaps have been thought not to have been excluded. Had, on the other hand, the exemption been referred only to a heathen, we should have thought it was on account of his not being subject to the commandments [of the Law], whereas a slave who is subject to the commandments[5] might have been thought not to have been excluded. It was thus essential to exclude each of them independently.

WOMEN ARE ALSO SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF TORTS. Whence is derived this ruling? — Rab Judah said on behalf of Rab, and so was it also taught at the school of R. Ishmael:[6] Scripture states, When a man or woman shall commit any sin.[7] Scripture has thus made woman and man equal regarding all the penalties of the Law. In the School of Eleazar it was taught: Now these are the ordinances which thou shalt set before them.[8] Scripture has thus made woman and man equal regarding all the judgments of the Law. The School of Hezekiah and Jose the Galilean taught: Scripture says. It hath killed a man or a woman.[9] Scripture has thus made woman and man equal regarding all the laws of manslaughter in the Torah. Moreover, [all the quotations] are necessary: Had only the first inference[10] been drawn, [I might have said that] the Divine Law exercised mercy towards her so that she should also have the advantage of atonement, whereas judgments which concern as a rule man who is engaged in business, should not include woman. Again, were only the inference regarding judgments to have been made, we might perhaps have said that woman should also not be deprived of a livelihood, whereas the law of atonement should be confined to man, as it is he who is subject to all commandments, but should not include woman, since she is not subject to all the commandments.[11] Moreover, were even these two inferences to have been available, [we might have said that] the one is on account of atonement and the other on account of livelihood, whereas regarding manslaughter [it might have been thought that] it is only in the case of man, who is subject to all commandments, that compensation for the loss of life must be made, but this should not be the case with woman. Again, were the inference only made in the case of compensation for manslaughter, [it might have been thought to apply] only where there is loss of human life, whereas in the other two cases, where no loss of human life is involved, I might have said that man and woman are not on the same footing. The independent inferences were thus essential.

THE PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT ARE INVOLVED IN THE PAYMENT.

It has been stated:[12] The liability of half-damages[13] is said by R. Papa to be civil, whereas R. Huna the son of R. Joshua considers it to be penal.[14] R. Papa said that it is civil, for he maintains that average cattle cannot control themselves not to gore.[15] Strict justice should therefore demand full payment [in case of damage].[16] It was only Divine Law that exercised mercy [and released half payment] on account of the fact that the cattle have not yet become Mu'ad. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua who said that it is penal, on the other hand maintains that average cattle can control themselves not to gore.[17] Justice should really require no payment at all.[18] It was Divine Law that imposed [upon the owner] a fine [in case of damage] so that additional care should be taken of cattle. We have learnt: THE PLAINTIFF AND THE DEFENDANT ARE INVOLVED IN PAYMENT. That is all very well according to the opinion which maintains that the liability of half-damages is civil. The plaintiff [who receives only half his due] is thus indeed involved in the payment. But according to the opinion that the liability of half-damages is penal, in which case the plaintiff is given that which is really not his due, how is he involved in the payment? — This may apply to the loss caused by a decrease in the value of the carcass [which is sustained by the plaintiff].[19] 'A decrease in the value of the carcass'! Has not this ruling been laid down in a previous Mishnah : 'To compensate for the damage'[20] implying that the owners [plaintiffs] have to retain the carcass as part payment?[21] — One Mishnah gives the law in the case of Tam whereas the other deals with Mu'ad. Moreover these independent indications[22] are of importance: For were the ruling laid down only in the case of Tam, it might have been accounted for by the fact that the animal has not yet become Mu'ad, whereas in the case of Mu'ad I might have thought that the law is different; if on the other hand the ruling had been laid down only in the case of Mu'ad, it might have been explained as due to the fact that the damage is compensated in full, whereas in the case of Tam I might have thought that the law is otherwise. The independent indications were thus essential.

Come and hear: What is the difference [in law] between Tam and Mu'ad? In the case of Tam, half-damages are paid, and only out of the body [of the tort-feasant cattle], whereas in the case of Mu'ad full payment is made out of the best of the estate.[23] Now, if it is so [that the liability of half-damages is penal] why not mention also the following distinction, 'That in the case of Tam no liability is created by mere admission,[24] while in the case of Mu'ad liability is established also by mere admission'? — This Mishnah stated [some points] and omitted [others]. But what else did it omit that the omission of that particular point should be justified?[25] — It also omitted the payment of half-kofer [for manslaughter].[26] The absence of half-kofer [for manslaughter], however, is no omission, as the Mishnah may be in accordance with R. Jose the Galilean who maintains that Tam is not immune from half-liability for kofer [for manslaughter].[27]

Come and hear:

(1) From giving evidence,
(2) V. supra p. 36. n. 3.
(3) As his issue were considered the property of the owner, there being no parental relationship between him and them; cf. infra p. 508.
(4) Of free descent; cf. Yeb. 62a.
(5) Applicable to females; v. Hag. 4a.
(6) Cf. Kid. 35a.
(7) Num. V, 6. This quotation deals with certain laws of atonement.
(8) Ex. XXI. I.
(9) Ibid. XXI, 29.
(10) Dealing with atonement.
(11) Positive precepts prescribed for a definite time or certain periods do not as a rule apply to females; cf. Kid. 29a.
(12) Keth. 41a.
(13) Paid for damage done by (Horn of) Tam
(14) קנס Kenas, v. Glos.
(15) Lit. 'are not presumed to he safe'.
(16) As it was the effect of carelessness on the part of the owner.
(17) Lit., are presumed to be safe'.
(18) Since the owner could not have expected that his cattle would start goring.
(19) Who is in this way involved in the payment.
(20) Supra p. 36.
(21) Supra, p. 42.
(22) That it is the plaintiff who has to sustain any loss occasioned by a decrease in the value of the carcass.
(23) Mishnah, infra 16b.
(24) As penal liabilities are not created by admission; v. supra 5a.
(25) V. supra p. 39, n. I.
(26) [While a Mu'ad has to pay full compensation (Kofer, v. Glos.) for manslaughter. Ex XXI, 25-30, a Tam does not compensate even by half; v. infra 41b.]
(27) infra 26a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 15b

'My ox committed manslaughter on A'; or 'killed A's ox' '[in either case] a liability to compensate is established by this admission.[1] Now does this Mishnah not deal with the case of Tam?[2] — No, only with Mu'ad. But what is the law in the case of Tam? Would it really be the fact that no liability is established by admission?[3] If this be the case, why state in the concluding clause, 'My ox killed A's slave,'[4] no liability is created by this admission?[5] Why indeed not indicate the distinction in the very same case by stating: 'the rule that liability is established by mere admission is confined to Mu'ad, whereas in the case of Tam no liability is created by mere admission'?[6] — The Mishnah all through deals with Mu'ad.

Come and hear: This is the general rule: In all cases where the payment is more than the actual damage done, no liability is created by mere admission.[5] Now does this not indicate that in cases where the payment is less than the damage,[7] the liability will be established even by mere admission?[8] — No , this is so only when the payment corresponds exactly to the amount of the damages. But what is the law in a case where the payment is less than the damage? Would it really be the fact that no liability is established by admission? If this be the case, why state: 'This is the general rule: In all cases where the payment is more than the actual damage done, no liability is created by mere admission'?[9] Why not state simply: 'This is the general rule: In all cases where the payment does not correspond exactly to the amount of the damages . . ., which would [both] imply 'less' and imply 'more'?[10] This is indeed a refutation.[11] Still the law is definite that the liability of half-damages is penal. But if this opinion was refuted, how could it stand as a fixed law? — Yes!

The sole basis of the refutation is in the fact that the Mishnaic text[9] does not run '. . . where the payment does not correspond exactly to the amount of the damages'. This wording would, however, be not altogether accurate, as there is the liability of half-damages in the case of pebbles[12] which is, in accordance with a halachic tradition, held to be civil. On account of this fact the suggested text has not been adopted.

Now that you maintain the liability of half-damages to be penal. the case of a dog devouring lambs, or a cat devouring hens is an unusual occurrence,[13] and no distress will be executed in Babylon[14] — provided, however, the lambs and hens were big; for if they were small, the occurrence would be usual?[15] Should, however, the plaintiff[16] seize chattels belonging to the defendant, it would not be possible for us to dispossess him of them. So also were the plaintiff to plead 'fix me a definite time for bringing my case to be heard in the Land of Israel,' we would have to fix it for him; were the other party to refuse to obey that order, we should have to excommunicate him. But in any case, we have to excommunicate him until he abates the nuisance, in accordance with the dictum of R. Nathan. For it was taught:[17] R. Nathan says: Whence is it derived that nobody should breed a bad dog in his house, or keep an impaired ladder in his house? [We learn it] from the text, Thou bring not blood upon thine house.[18] M I S H N A H. THERE ARE FIVE CASES OF TAM AND FIVE CASES OF MU'AD. ANIMAL IS MU'AD NEITHER TO GORE, NOR TO COLLIDE, NOR TO BITE, NOR TO FALL DOWN NOR TO KICK.[19] TOOTH, HOWEVER, IS MU'AD TO CONSUME WHATEVER IS FIT FOR IT; FOOT IS MU'AD TO BREAK [THINGS] IN THE COURSE OF WALKING; OX AFTER BECOMING MU'AD; OX DOING DAMAGE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES; AND MAN,[20] SO ALSO THE WOLF, THE LION, THE BEAR, THE LEOPARD, THE BARDALIS [PANTHER] AND THE SNAKE ARE MU'AD. R. ELEAZAR SAYS: IF THEY HAVE BEEN TAMED, THEY ARE NOT MU'AD; THE SNAKE, HOWEVER, IS ALWAYS MU'AD.

GEMARA. Considering that it is stated TOOTH IS MU'AD TO CONSUME . . ., it must be assumed that we are dealing with a case where the damage has been done on the plaintiff's premises.[21] It is also stated[22] ANIMAL IS MU'AD NEITHER TO GORE . . . meaning that the compensation will not be in full, but only half-damages will be paid, which is in accordance with the Rabbis who say that for the unusual damage done by Horn [even] on the plaintiff's premises only half-damages will be paid.[23] Read now the concluding clause: OX AFTER HAVING BECOME MU'AD, OX DOING DAMAGE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES, AND MAN, which is in accordance with R. Tarfon who said that for the unusual damage done by Horn on the plaintiff's premises full compensation must be paid.[23] Is the commencing clause according to the Rabbis and the concluding clause according to R. Tarfon? — Yes, since Samuel said to Rab Judah, 'Shinena,[24] leave the Mishnah alone[25] and follow my view: the commencing clause is in accordance with the Rabbis, and the concluding clause is in accordance with R. Tarfon.' R. Eleazar in the name of Rab, however, said:

---

(1) Keth. 41a.

(2) And if the liability is created by admission it proves that it is not penal but civil.

(3) On account of its being penal.

(4) And the fine of thirty shekels has to he imposed; v, Ex. XXI, 32.

(5) Keth. 41a.

(6) Because it is considered penal.

(7) Such, e.g., as in the case of Tam.

(8) This proves that the penalty is not penal but civil, and this refutes R. Huna b. R. Joshua.

(9) Keth. 41a.

(10) Not to be civil.

(11) Of the view maintaining the liability of Tam to be penal.

(12) Kicked from under an animal's feet and doing damage; cf. supra p. 8.

(13) Falling thus under the category of Horn; as supra p. 4.
(14) As penal liabilities could be dealt with only in the Land of Israel where the judges were specially ordained for the purpose; Mumhin, v. Glos. s. v. Mumhe; cf. infra. 27b, 84a-b.
(15) And would come within the category of Tooth, the payment for which is civil.
(16) Even in Babylon.
(17) Infra 46a and Keth. 41b.
(18) Deut. XXII, 8.
(19) These are the five cases of Tam, v. supra p. 3.
(20) These are the five cases of Mu'ad, v. Glos.
(21) For if otherwise there is no liability in the case of Tooth; cf. Ex. XXII, 4, and supra, 5b.
(22) In the commencing clause of the Mishnah.
(23) Cf. supra 14a; infra 24b.
(24) V. supra p. 60, n. 2.
(25) Cf. supra p. 60, n. 3.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 16a

The whole Mishnah is in accordance with R. Tarfon. The commencing clause deals with premises set aside for the keeping of the plaintiff's fruits whereas both plaintiff and defendant may keep there their cattle. In respect of Tooth the premises are considered [in the eye of the law] the plaintiff's.[1] whereas in respect of Horn they are considered their common premises.[2] R. Kahana said: I repeated this statement in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, and he answered me, 'How can you say that the whole Mishnah is in accordance with R. Tarfon? Has it not been stated TOOTH IS MU'AD TO CONSUME WHAT EVER IS FIT FOR IT? That which is fit for it is included,[3] but that which is unfit for it is not included.[4] But did not R. Tarfon say that for the unusual damage done by Horn on the plaintiff's premises full compensation must be paid?' — It must, therefore, still be maintained that the Mishnah is in accordance with the Rabbis, but there are some phrases missing there; the reading should be thus: 'There are five cases of Tam,'[5] all the five of them may eventually become Mu'ad.[6] Tooth and Foot are however Mu'ad ab initio, and their liability is confined to damage done on the plaintiff's premises.'[7] Rabina demurred: We learn later on: What is meant by [the statement] OX DOING DAMAGE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES [etc.]?[8] It is all very well if you say that this damage has previously been dealt with;[9] we may then well ask 'What is meant by it?' But if you say that this damage has never been dealt with previously, how could it be asked 'What is meant by it?'[10] — Rabina therefore said: The Mishnah is indeed incomplete, but its meaning is this: 'There are five cases of Tam,'[5] all the five of them may eventually become Mu'ad[11] — Tooth and Foot are Mu'ad ab initio.[12] In this way Ox is definitely Mu'ad. As to Ox doing damage on the plaintiff's premises there is a difference of opinion between R. Tarfon and the Rabbis.[13] There are other damage-doers which like these cases are similarly Mu'ad, as follows: The wolf, the lion, the bear, the leopard. the panther, and the snake.' This very text has indeed been taught: 'There are five cases of Tam; all the five of them may eventually become Mu'ad. Tooth and Foot are Mu'ad ab initio. In this way Ox is definitely Mu'ad. As to Ox doing damage on the plaintiff's premises there is a difference of opinion between R. Tarfon and the Rabbis. There are other damage-doers which like these are similarly Mu'ad, as follows: The wolf, the lion, the bear, the leopard, the panther and the snake.'

Some arrived at the same interpretation by having first raised the following objection: We learn THERE ARE FIVE CASES OF TAM AND FIVE CASES OF MU'AD; are there no further instances?[14] Behold there are the wolf, the lion, the bear, the leopard, the panther and the snake![15] — The reply was: Rabina said: The Mishnah is incomplete and its reading should be as follows: There are five cases of Tam; all the five of them may eventually become Mu'ad — Tooth and Foot are Mu'ad ab initio. In this way Ox is definitely Mu'ad. As to Ox doing damage on the plaintiff's premises there is a difference of opinion between R. Tarfon and the Rabbis. There are other damage-doers which like these are similarly Mu'ad, as follows: The wolf, the lion, the bear, the leopard, the panther and the snake.

NOR TO FALL DOWN. R. Eleazar said: This is so only when it falls down on large pitchers, but in the case of small pitchers it is a usual occurrence.[16] May we support him [from the following teaching]: 'Animal is Mu'ad to walk in the usual manner and to break or crush a human being, or an animal, or utensils'? — This however may mean, through contact sideways.[17] Some read: R. Eleazar said: Do not think that it is only in the case of large pitchers that it is unusual, whereas in the case of small pitchers it is usual. It is not so, for even in the case of small pitchers it is unusual. An objection was brought: '. . . or crush a human being, or an animal or utensils?'[18] — This[19] may perhaps mean through contact sideways.[20] Some arrived at the same conclusion by having first raised the following objection: We have learnt: NOR TO FALL DOWN.[18] But was it not taught: '. . . or crush a human being, or an animal or utensils'?[18] R. Eleazar replied: There is no contradiction: the former statement deals with a case of large pitchers,[21] whereas the latter deals with small pitchers.[22]

THE WOLF, THE LION, THE BEAR, THE LEOPARD AND THE BARDALIS [PANTHER].[23] What is bardalis? — Rab Judah said: nafraza.[24] What is nafraza? — R. Joseph said: apa.[25] An objection was raised: R. Meir adds also the zabu'a.[26] R. Eleazar adds, also the snake.[27] Now R. Joseph said that zabu'a means apa![28] — This, however, is no contradiction, for the latter appellation [zabu'a] refers to the male whereas the former [bardalis] refers to the female,[29] as taught elsewhere: The male zabu'a [hyena] after seven years turns into a bat,[30] the bat after seven years turns into an arpad,[31] the arpad after seven years turns into kimmosh,[32] the kimmosh after seven years turns into a thorn, the thorn after seven years turns into a demon. The spine of a man after seven years turns into a snake,[33] should he not bow[34] while reciting the benediction, 'We give thanks unto Thee'.[35] The Master said: 'R. Meir adds also the zabu'a;

---

(1) As nobody else had the right to keep there fruits.

(2) Since both plaintiff and defendant had the right to keep there their cattle.

(3) In the category of Tooth.

(4) In the category of Tooth, but being unusual falls under the category of Horn; cf. supra 15b; infra 16b and 19b.

(5) I.e., 'goring', 'colliding', 'biting', 'falling down' and 'kicking'.

(6) These constitute the five cases of Mu'ad.

(7) Cf. Ex. XXII, 4, and supra, 5b. ['OX DOING DAMAGE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES' refers thus to Tooth and not to Horn.]

(8) [With reference to damage done by Horn, infra, 24b.]

(9) [In Our Mishnah, i.e.,the damage of Horn on the plaintiff's premises.]

(10) Cf. infra 24b.

(11) [The first clause of the Mishnah thus enumerates the five cases of Mu'ad as well as of Tam.]

(12) [But are not included in the 'five cases of Mu'ad', the clause being added only in parenthesis.]

(13) As infra p. 125.

(14) Of Mu'ad.

(15) Which are Mu'ad ab initio.

(16) And would thus not fall under the category of Horn but under that of Foot; cf, supra p. 4.

(17) Whereas to fall down upon pitchers may perhaps in all cases be unusual.

(18) Is usual.

(19) [So MS.M. Cur.edd, insert 'R. Eleazar said this etc.']

(20) V. p. 70. n. 5.

(21) Which is unusual.

(22) Which is usual.

(23) **

(24) נפרזא D.S. נפריא from נפר 'to run' or 'jump'.

(25) [אפא contraction of אפעא (hyena)].

(26) [Lit., 'the many-coloured'. Another term for hyena on account of its coloured stripes.]

(27) To those which are enumerated in the Mishnah as Mu'ad ab initio.
(28) If zabu'a means apa, how could bardalis, which is mentioned independently, also mean apa.
(29) So Rashi's second interpretation; others reverse.
(30) The male zabu'a is subject to undergo constant and rapid changes in the evolution of its physique, so that on account of these various transformations it has various appellations, such as bardalis, nafraza and apa [For parallels in ancient Greek and Roman literature for this belief, v. Lewysohn. Zoologie, p. 77.]
(31) I.e., a species of bat; cf. Targum Jonathan Lev, XI, 19, where Heb. עטלף is rendered ערפדא.
(32) I.e., a species of thorn (Jast.).
(33) Which is the symbol of ingratitude.
(34) And thus not appreciate the favours of eternal God bestowed upon mortal man. [This is but a quaint way of indicating the depths into which human depravity, which has its source in ingratitude to the Creator, may gradually sink.]
(35) Cf. P.B. p. 51.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 16b

R. Eleazar adds also the snake.' But have we not learned: R. ELEAZAR SAYS, IF THEY HAD BEEN TAMED, THEY ARE NOT MU'AD; THE SNAKE, HOWEVER, IS ALWAYS MU'AD?[1] — Read 'the snake'.[2] Samuel said: In the case of a lion on public ground seizing and devouring [an animal]. there is exemption;[3] but for tearing it to pieces and then devouring it there is liability to pay. In 'seizing and devouring there is exemption' on account of the fact that it is as usual for a lion to seize its prey as it is for an animal to consume fruits and vegetables; it therefore amounts to Tooth on public ground where there is exemption.[3] The 'tearing' [of the prey into pieces] is however not unusual with the lion.[4]

Should it thus be concluded that the tearing of prey is unusual [with the lion]? But behold, it is written: The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps?[5] — This is usual only when it is for the sake of his whelps. [But the text continues:] And strangled for his lionesses?[5] — This again is only when it is for the sake of his lionesses. [But the text further states:] And filled his holes with prey?[5] — [This too is usual only when it is done] with the intention of preserving it in his holes. But the text concludes: And his dens with ravin?[5] — [This again is only] when the intention is to preserve it in his dens. But was it not taught: 'Similarly in the case of a beast entering the plaintiff's premises, tearing an animal to pieces and consuming its flesh, the payment must be made in full'?[6] — This Baraitha deals with a case where the tearing was for the purpose of preservation. But behold, it is stated: 'consuming [its flesh]'? — It was by an afterthought that the beast consumed [it]. But how could we know that? Again, also in the case of Samuel why not make the same supposition?[7] — R. Nahman b. Isaac therefore said: Alternative cases are dealt with [in the Baraitha]: . . . If it either tears to pieces for the purpose of preservation, or seizes and devours [it], the payment must he in full.' Rabina, however, said that Samuel dealt with a case of a tame lion, and was following the view of R. Eleazar,[8] that that was unusual [with such a lion] If so, even in the case of seizing there should be liability! — Rabina's statement has, therefore, no reference to Samuel's case but to the Baraitha, which we must thus suppose to deal with a tame lion and to follow the view of R. Eleazar, that that was unusual [with such a lion].[9] If so, [no more than] half-damages should be paid![10] — [The lion dealt with] has already become Mu'ad. If so, why has this Baraitha been taught in conjunction with the secondary kinds of Tooth,[11] whereas it should have been taught in conjunction with the secondary kinds of Horn? This is indeed a difficulty.

M I S H N A H. WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE [IN LAW] BETWEEN TAM AND MU'AD? IN THE CASE OF TAM ONLY HALF-DAMAGES ARE PAID AND ONLY OUT OF THE BODY [OF THE TORT-FEASENT CATTLE], WHEREAS IN THE CASE OF MU'AD FULL PAYMENT IS MADE OUT OF ['ALIYYAH][12] THE BEST [OF THE ESTATE].

GEMARA. What is 'Aliyyah? — R. Eleazar said: The best of the defendant's estate as stated in Scripture: And Hezekiah slept with his fathers and they buried him [be-ma'aleh] in the best of the sepulchres of the sons of David;[13] and R. Eleazar said: be-ma'aleh means, near the best of the family, i.e., David and Solomon. [Regarding King Asa it is stated:] And they buried him in his own sepulchres which he had made for himself in the city of David and laid him in the bed which was filled with [besamim u-zenim][14] sweet odours and divers kinds of spices.[15] What is besamim u-zenim? — R. Eleazar said: Divers kinds of spices. But R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: Scents which incite all those who smell them to immorality.[16]

[Regarding Jeremiah it is stated:] For they have digged a ditch to take me and hid snares for my feet.[17] R. Eleazar said: They maliciously accused him of [having illicit intercourse with] a harlot. But R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: They maliciously accused him of having [immoral connections with] another man's wife. No difficulty arises if we accept the view that the accusation was concerning a harlot, since it is written: For a harlot is a deep ditch.[18] But according to the view that the accusation was concerning another man's wife, how is this expressed in the term 'ditch' [employed in Jeremiah's complaint]?[17] — Is then another man's wife [when committing adultery] excluded from the general term of 'harlot'? [On the other hand] there is no difficulty on the view that the accusation was concerning another man's wife, for Scripture immediately afterwards says: Yet Lord, Thou knowest all their counsel against me to slay me;[19] but according to the view that the accusation was concerning a harlot, how did they thereby intend 'to slay him'?[20] — [This they did] by throwing him into a pit of mire.[21]

Raba gave the following exposition: What is the meaning of the concluding verse: But let them be overthrown before Thee; deal thus with them in the time of Thine anger?[22] — Jeremiah thus addressed the Holy One, blessed be He: Lord of the Universe, even when they are prepared to do charity, cause them to be frustrated by people unworthy of any consideration so that no reward be forthcoming to them for that charity.[23]

[To come back to Hezekiah regarding whom it is stated:] And they did him honour at his death:[24] this signifies that they set up a college[25] near his sepulchre. There was a difference of opinion between R. Nathan and the Rabbis. One said: For three days,

---

(1) [Which seems to exclude the other animals enumerated in the Mishnah?]

(2) Do not read 'also the snake', but 'the snake', i.e. 'only the snake', excluding 'the hyena' introduced by R. Meir, as well as the other animals enumerated.

(3) Cf. Ex XXII, 4 and supra 5b.

(4) And falls thus under the category of Horn which is not immune even on public ground, cf. supra p. 67 and infra 19b.

(5) Nah. II, 13.

(6) Cf. infra 19b.

(7) [Why then doses he state that, where the lion tore and consumed, there is payment?]

(8) Supra p. 68.

(9) And comes therefore within the category of Horn, for which there is liability even on public grounds.

(10) For in the case of Horn only half-damages are paid on the first three occasions.

(11) I.e., infra 19b.

(12) עלייה

(13) II Chron. XXXII, 33. [The word במעלה (E.V.: 'ascent') is tendered as 'the best' from עלה 'to go up', 'to excel'.]

(14) בשמים וזנים

(15) II Chron. XVI, 14.

(16) [Deriving זנים from זנה to commit whoredom'.]

(17) Jer. XVIII, 22.

(18) Prov. XXIII, 27.

(19) Jer. XVIII, 23; referring to the death penalty prescribed for such an offence. See Lev. XX, 10.

(20) Since no death penalty is attached to that sin,
(21) Jer. XXXVIII, 6.
(22) Ibid. XVIII, 23.
(23) Cf. however Keth. 68a.
(24) II Chron. XXXII, 33.
(25) [Of students to study the law.]

and the other said: For seven days. Others, however, said: For thirty days.[1]

Our Rabbis taught: And they did him honour at his death, in the case of Hezekiah the king of Judah, means that there marched before him thirty-six[2] thousand [warriors] with bare shoulders;[3] this is the view of R. Judah. R. Nehemiah, however, said to him: Did they not do the same before Ahab?[4] [In the case of Hezekiah] they placed the scroll of the Law upon his coffin and declared: 'This one fulfilled all that which is written there.' But do we not even now do the same [on appropriate occasions]?[5] — We only bring out [the scroll of the Law] but do not place [it on the coffin].[5] It may alternatively be said that sometimes we also place [it on the coffin] but do not say. 'He fulfilled [the law] . . .'

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: I was once following R. Johanan for the purpose of asking him about the [above] matter. He, however, at that moment went into a toilet room. [When he reappeared and] I put the matter before him, he did not answer until he had washed his hands, put on phylacteries and pronounced the benediction.[6] Then he said to us: Even if sometimes we also say. 'He fulfilled [the law] . . .' we never say. 'He expounded [the law] . . .' But did not the Master say: The importance of the study of the law is enhanced by the fact that the study of the law is conducive to [the] practice [of the law]?[7] — This, however, offers no difficulty; the latter statement deals with studying [the law], the former with teaching [the law].

R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai:[8] What is the meaning of the verse: Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass?[9] Whoever is occupied with [the study of] the law and with [deeds of] charity, is worthy of the inheritance of two tribes,[10] as it is said: Blessed are ye that sow. . . Now, sowing [in this connection] signifies 'charity'. as stated, Sow to yourselves in charity, reap in kindness;[11] again, water [in this connection] signifies 'the law' as stated, Lo, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters.[12]

'He is worthy of the inheritance of two tribes:' He is worthy of an inheritance[13] like Joseph, as it is written: Joseph is a fruitful bough . . . whose branches run over the wall;[14] he is also worthy of the inheritance of Issachar, as it is written: Issachar is a strong ass.[15] There are some who say, His enemies will fall before him, as it is written: With them he shall push the people together, to the ends of the earth.[16] He is worthy of understanding like Issachar, as it is written: And of the children of Issachar which were men that had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do.[17]

C H A P T E R I I

M I S H N A H. WITH REFERENCE TO WHAT IS FOOT MU'AD?[18] [IT IS MU'AD:] TO BREAK [THINGS] IN THE COURSE OF WALKING. ANY ANIMAL IS MU'AD TO WALK IN ITS USUAL WAY AND TO BREAK [THINGS]. BUT IF IT WAS KICKING OR PEBBLES WERE FLYING FROM UNDER ITS FEET AND UTENSILS WERE [IN CONSEQUENCE] BROKEN, [ONLY] HALF-DAMAGES WILL BE PAID. IF IT TROD UPON A UTENSIL AND BROKE IT, AND A FRAGMENT [OF IT] FELL UPON ANOTHER UTENSIL WHICH WAS ALSO BROKEN, FOR THE FIRST UTENSIL FULL DAMAGES MUST BE PAID,[19] BUT FOR THE SECOND, [ONLY] HALF-DAMAGES WILL BE PAID.[20]

POULTRY[21] ARE MU'AD TO WALK IN THEIR USUAL WAY AND TO BREAK [THINGS]. IF A STRING BECAME ATTACHED TO THEIR FEET, OR WHERE THEY HOP ABOUT AND BREAK UTENSILS, [ONLY] HALF-DAMAGES WILL BE PAID.[20]

---

(1) Cf. M.K. 27b.

(2) This figure was arrived at by the numerical value of וְלֹ occurring here in the text.
(3) [As sign of mourning for a righteous man and scholar.]
(4) [Although he was an evil doer.] See Targum on Zech. XII, 11, and Meg. 3a.
(5) Cf., e.g., M. K. 25a and Men. 32b.
(6) V. P.B. p. 4.
(7) Meg. 27a; Kid. 40b; thus indicating that the practice of the law is superior to its study.
(8) V. A.Z. 5b.
(9) Isa. XXXII, 20.
(10) [Joseph and Issachar: the former is compared to an ox (Deut. XXXIII, 17) and the latter to an ass (Gen. XLIX, 14).]
(11) Hos X, 12.
(12) Isa. LV, 1.
(13) So MS.M. The printed editions have 'canopy'. [Rashi connects it with the descriptions of 'branches running over the wall.']
(14) Gen XLIX, 22.
(15) Ibid. 14.
(16) Deut. XXXIII, 17.
(17) I Chron. XII, 32.
(18) Referring to supra p. 68.
(19) As it is subject to the law of 'Foot'.
(20) Since it was broken not by the actual body of the animal (or poultry) but by its agency and force in some other object, it comes within the purview of the law of 'Pebbles'; v. Glos, Zeroroth
(21) Lit. 'The cocks'.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 17b

G E M A R A. Rabina said to Raba: Is not FOOT [Mentioned in the commencing clause] identical with ANIMAL [mentioned in the second clause]?[1] — He answered him: [In the commencing clause the Mishnah] deals with Principals[2] whereas [in the second clause] derivatives are introduced.[3] But according to this, the subsequent Mishnah stating, 'Tooth is Mu'ad . . . Any animal is Mu'ad . . .'[4] what Principals and what derivatives could be distinguished there?[5] — Raba, however, answered him humorously, 'I expounded one [Mishnah], it is now for you to expound the other.' But what indeed is the explanation [regarding the other Mishnah]? — R. Ashi said: [In the first clause, the Mishnah] speaks of 'Tooth' of beast, whereas [in the second place] 'Tooth' of cattle is dealt with. For it might have been thought that since he shall put in be'iroh [his cattle][6] is stated in Scripture, the law concerning Tooth should apply only to cattle, but not to beast; it is therefore made known to us that beast is included in the term 'animal'. If so, cattle[7] should be dealt with first! — Beast, which is deduced by means of interpretation, is more important [to the Mishnah which thus gives it priority]. If so, also in the opening Mishnah [dealing with FOOT, the same method should have been adopted] to state first that which is not recorded [in Scripture]?[8] — What a comparison! There [in the case of Tooth] where both [beast and cattle] are Principals, that which is introduced by means of interpretation is preferable; but here [in the case of Foot], how could the Principal be deferred and the derivative placed first?[9] You may alternatively say: Since [in the previous chapter the Mishnah] concludes with 'Foot',[10] it commences here with 'Foot'.

Our Rabbis taught: An animal is Mu'ad to walk in its usual way and to break [things]. That is to say, in the case of an animal entering into the plaintiff's premises and doing damage [either] with its body while in motion, or with its hair while in motion, or with the saddle [which was] upon it, or with the load [which was] upon it, or with the bit in its mouth, or with the bell on its neck,[11] similarly in the case of an ass [doing damage] with its load, the payment must be in full. Symmachus says: In the case of Pebbles[12] or in the case of a pig burrowing in a dunghill and doing damage. the payment is [also] in full.

[In the case of a pig] actually doing damage, is it not obvious [that the payment must be in full]?[13] — Read therefore: 'When it had caused [something of the dunghill] to fly out so that damage resulted therefrom, the payment will be in full.' But have Pebbles ever been mentioned [in this Baraitha, that Symmachus makes reference to them]? — There is something missing [in the text of the Baraitha where] the reading should be as follows: Pebbles, though being quite usual [with cattle, involve nevertheless] only half-damages; in the case of a pig digging in a dunghill and causing [something of it] to fly out so that damage resulted therefrom, only half-damages will therefore be paid. Symmachus, however, says: In the case of Pebbles, and similarly in the case of a pig digging in a dunghill and causing [something of it] to fly out so that damage resulted therefrom, the payment must he in full.

Our Rabbis taught: In the case of poultry flying from one place to another and breaking utensils with their wings. the payment must be in full: but if the damage was done by the vibration that resulted from their wings, only half-damages will be paid.[14] Symmachus. however, says: [In all cases] the payment must be in full.[15]

Another [Baraitha] taught: In the case of poultry hopping upon dough or upon fruits which they either made dirty or picked at, the payment will be in full; but if the damage resulted from their raising there dust or pebbles, only half damages[14] will be paid. Symmachus. however, says: [In all cases] the payment must be in full.

Another [Baraitha] taught: In the case of poultry flying from one place to another, and breaking vessels with the vibration from their wings, only half-damages will be paid. This anonymous Baraitha records the view of the Rabbis.[16]

Raba said: This fits in very well with [the view of] Symmachus who maintains that [damage done by an animal's] force[17] falls under the law applicable to [damage done by its] body;[18] but what about the Rabbis? If they too maintain that [damage done by an animal's] force is subject to the same law that is applicable to [damage done by its] body. why then not pay in full? If on the other hand it is not subject to the law of damage done by a body,. why pay even half damages? — Raba [in answer] said: It may indeed be subject to the law applicable to damage done by a body, yet the payment of half damages in the case of Pebbles is a halachic principle based on a special tradition.[19]

Raba said: Whatever would involve defilement in [the activities of] a zab[20] will in the case of damage involve full payment, whereas that which in [the activities of] a zab would not involve defilement,[21] will in the case-of damage involve only half damages. Was Raba's sole intention to intimate to us [the law of] Pebbles?[22] — No, Raba meant to tell us the law regarding cattle[23] drawing a waggon [over utensils which were thus broken].[24] It has indeed been taught in accordance with [the view expressed by] Raba: An animal is Mu'ad to break [things] in the course of walking. How is that? In the case of an animal entering into the plaintiff's premises and doing damage either with its body while in motion, or with its hair while in motion, or with the saddle [which was] upon it, or with the load [which was] upon it, or with the bit in its mouth, or with the bell on its neck, similarly in the case of an ass [doing damage] with its load, or again, in the case of a calf drawing a waggon [over utensils which were thus broken], the payment must be in full.

Our Rabbis taught: In the case of poultry picking at a cord attached to a pail so that the cord was snapped asunder and the bucket broken, the payment must be in full.

Raba asked: In the case of [cattle] treading upon a utensil which has not been broken at once, but which was rolled away to some other place where it was then broken, what is the law? Shall we go by the original cause [of the damage in our determination of the law], which would thus amount to damage done by the body,[25] or shall only [the result, i.e.] the breaking of the utensil be the determining factor, amounting thus to Pebbles? — But why not solve the problem from a statement made by Rabbah?[26] For Rabbah said:[27] If a man threw [his fellow's] utensil from the top of a roof and another one came and and broke it with a stick [before it fell upon the ground. where it would in any case have been broken], the latter is under no liability to pay, as we say. 'It was only a broken utensil that was broken by him.' [Is not this the best proof that it is the cause of the damage which is the determining factor?][28] — To Rabbah that was pretty certain, whereas to Raba it was doubtful.

Come and hear: 'Hopping [with poultry] is not Mu'ad.[29] Some however say: It is Mu'ad.'[30] 'Could 'hopping' [in itself] be thought [in any way not to be habitual with poultry]? Does it not therefore mean: 'Hopping that results in making [a utensil] fly [from one place to another so that it is broken] . . . 'so that the point at issue is this: The latter view maintains that the original cause [of the damage] is the determining factor[30] but the former maintains that only [the result, i.e.,] the breaking of the utensil is the determining factor?[31] — No,

---

(1) Wherefore then this redundancy?

(2) I.e. damage done by the actual foot.

(3) I.e. damage done by other parts of the body of the animal, cf. supra p. 6.

(4) [Infra 19b.

(5) For both clauses deal with actual 'eating'.

(6) Ex. XXII, 4. [בעיר תבעירה in Aramaic denotes, 'a grazing animal', 'cattle' (Rashi).]

(7) Which is more obvious.

(8) I.e. damage done by other parts of the body of the animal.

(9) 'Foot' is therefore put in the first place.

(10) Supra p. 68.

(11) CF. supra, p. 6.

(12) See supra p. 8.

(13) Why then was it deemed necessary to give it explicit treatment?

(14) As this kind of damage is subject to the law of Pebbles.

(15) For he maintains that even in the case of Pebbles full payment has to be made.

(16) Who hold that in the case of Pebbles only half payment is made.

(17) Such as in the case of Pebbles.

(18) Which is subject to the law of 'Foot'.

(19) See also supra 8.

(20) I.e., one afflicted with gonorrhoea who is subject to the laws of Lev. XV, 1-15; 19-24. Defilement is caused by him both by actual bodily touch and indirectly.

(21) E.g when the zab throws some article on a person levitically clean.

(22) Is not this obvious?

(23) Lit. 'calf'.

(24) That there is in such a case full payment, because if a zab were to sit in a waggon that passed over clean objects, defilement would have been extended to them — the damage and the defilement respectively being regarded as having been caused by the body and not by its force.

(25) Being therefore subject to the law of 'Foot'.

(26) Who was a predecessor of Raba.

(27) Cf. infra 26b.

(28) Seeing that the latter is under no obligation to compensate, but the whole liability to pay is upon the one who threw the utensil from the top of the roof.

(29) The payment for damage will therefore not be in full.

(30) Payment will thus be in full.

(31) Thus constituting Pebbles, for which payment will not be in full.

the ‘hopping’ only caused pebbles to fly, so that the point at issue is the same as that between Symmachus and the Rabbis.[1]

Come and hear: ‘In the case of poultry picking at a cord attached to a pail so that the cord was snapped asunder and the bucket[2] broken, the payment must be in full.’ Could it not be proved from this [Baraitha] that it is the original cause of the damage that has to be followed? — You may, however, interpret [the liability of full payment] to refer to the damage done to the cord.[3] But behold, is not [the damage of] the cord unusual [with poultry[4] and only half damages ought to be paid]? — It was smeared with dough.[5] But, does it not say ‘and the bucket [was] broken’?[6] This Baraitha must therefore be in accordance with Symmachus, who maintains that also in the case of Pebbles full payment must be made. But if it is in accordance with Symmachus, read the concluding clause: Were a fragment of the broken bucket to fly and fall upon another utensil, breaking it, the payment for the former [i.e., the bucket] must be in full, but for the latter only half damages will be paid. Now does Symmachus ever recognise half damages [in the case of Pebbles]? If you, however, submit that there is a difference according to Symmachus between damage occasioned by direct force[7] and that caused by indirect force,[8] what about the question raised by R. Ashi:[9] Is damage occasioned by indirect force according to Symmachus subject to the same law[10] applicable to direct force, or not subject to the law of direct force?[11] Why is it not evident to him that it is not subject to the law of direct force? Hence the above Baraitha is accordingly more likely to be in accordance with the Rabbis, and proves thus that it is the original cause that has to be followed [as the determining factor]![12] R. Bibi b. Abaye, however, said: The bucket [that was broken] was [not rolled but] continuously pushed by the poultry [from one place to another, so that it was broken by actual bodily touch].[13]

Raba [again] queried: Will the half damages in the case of ‘Pebbles’ be paid out of the body [of the tort-feasant animal][14] or will it be paid out of the best of the defendant's estate?[15] Will it be paid out of the body [of the tort-feasant animal] on account of the fact that nowhere is the payment of half damages made out of the best of the defendant's estate, or shall it nevertheless perhaps be paid out of the best of the defendant's estate since there is no case of habitual damage being compensated out of the body [of the tort-feasant animal]? — Come and hear: ‘Hopping [with poultry] is not Mu'ad. Some, however, say: It is Mu'ad.’ Could ‘hopping’ be said [in any way not to be habitual with poultry]? Does it not therefore mean: ‘Hopping and making [pebbles] fly,’ so that the point at issue is as follows: The former view maintaining that it is not [treated as] Mu'ad, requires payment to be made out of the body [of the tort-feasant poultry][14] whereas the latter view maintaining that it is [treated as] Mu'ad, will require the payment [of the half damages for Pebbles] to be made out of the best of the defendant's estate?[15] — No, the point at issue is that between Symmachus and the Rabbis.[16]

Come and hear: In the case of a dog taking hold of a cake [with live coals sticking to it] and going [with it] to a stack of grain where he consumed the cake and set the stack on fire, full payment must be made for the cake,[17] whereas for the stack only half damages will be paid.[18] Now, what is the reason [that only half damages will be paid for the stack] if not on account of the fact that the damage of the stack is subject to the law of Pebbles?[19] It has, moreover, been taught in connection with this [Mishnah] that the half damages will be collected out of the body [of the tort-feasant dog]. [Does not this ruling offer a solution to the problem raised by Raba?] — But do you really think [the law of ‘Pebbles’ to be at the basis of this ruling]?[20] According to R. Eleazar [who maintains[21] that the payment even for the stack will be in full and out of the body of the tort-feasant dog], do we find anywhere full payment being collected out of the body [of tort-feasant animals]? Must not this ruling[20] therefore be explained to refer to a case where the dog acted in an unusual manner in handling the coal,[22] R. Eleazar being of the same opinion as R. Tarfon, who maintains[23] that [even] for the unusual damage by Horn, if done in the plaintiff's premises, the payment will be in full?[24] — This explanation, however, is not essential. For that which compels you to make R. Eleazar maintain the same opinion as R. Tarfon, is only his requiring full payment [out of the body of the dog]. It may therefore be suggested on the other hand that R. Eleazar holds the view expressed by Symmachus, that in the case of Pebbles full damages will be paid; and that he further adopts the view of R. Judah who said[25] that [in the case of Mu'ad, half of the payment, i.e.] the part of Tam, remains unaffected, [i .e., is always subject to the law of Tam]; the statement that payment is made out of the body [of the dog] will therefore refer only to [one half] the part for which even Tam would be liable. But R. Samia the son of R. Ashi said lo Rabina: I submit that the view you have quoted in the name of R. Judah is confined to cases of Tam turned into Mu'ad [i.e. Horn],[25] whereas in cases which are Mu'ad ab initio[26]

---

(1) I.e., whether full or half payment has to be made for damage caused by Pebbles.

(2) Probably by rolling to some other place, where it finally broke.

(3) Whereas for the bucket only half damages will perhaps be paid.

(4) Being thus subject to the law of 'Horn'.

(5) In which case it is not unusual with poultry to pick at such a cord.

(6) Thus clearly indicating that the payment is in respect of the damage done to the bucket.

(7) Such as in the case of a bucket upon which pebbles were thrown directly by an animal.

(8) I.e., a second bucket damaged by a fragment that fell from a first bucket, which was broken by pebbles thrown by an animal.

(9) Infra 19a.

(10) I.e., to full payment.

(11) But merely to half damages.

(12) I.e., though the bucket rolled to some other place where it broke, the case is still subject to the law of Foot.

(13) And coming within the usual category of Foot.

(14) As in the case of Tam; cf. supra, p. 73.

(15) As in the case of Foot; cf. supra, p. 9.

(16) I.e., whether full or half damages are to be paid in the case of Pebbles.

(17) Being subject to the law applicable to Tooth, cf. supra p. 68.

(18) Infra 21b.

(19) Because the damage to the stack was not done by the actual body of the dog but was occasioned by the dog through the instrumentality of the coal, which, after having been put on a certain spot, spread the damage near and far.

(20) Of half damages for the stack.

(21) In a Baraitha.

(22) By taking it in its mouth and applying it to the stack, in which case it is subject to the law of 'Horn'.

(23) Supra p. 59 and infra 24b.

(24) [Though the payment will still be made out of the body of the tort-feasant animal.)

(25) Infra 39a. 45b.

(26) Such as Foot (and Pebbles at least according to Symmachus).

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 18b

you have surely not found him maintaining so! You can therefore only say that R. Eleazar's statement regarding full payment deals with a case where the dog has already become Mu'ad [to set fire to stacks in an unusual manner][1] and the point at issue will be that R. Eleazar maintains that there is such a thing as becoming Mu'ad [also] regarding [the law of] Pebbles[2] whereas the Rabbis maintain that there is no such thing as becoming Mu'ad in the case of Pebbles.[3] But If so what about another problem raised [elsewhere][4] by Raba: 'Is there such a thing as becoming Mu'ad regarding [the law of] Pebbles,[5] or is there no such thing as becoming Mu'ad in the case of Pebbles?'[6] Why then not say that according to the Rabbis there could be no such thing as becoming Mu'ad in the case of Pebbles, whereas according to R. Eleazar there may be a case of becoming Mu'ad even in the case of Pebbles? — Raba, however, may say to you: The problem raised by me [as to the possibility of becoming Mu'ad] is of course based on the view of the Rabbis who differ [in this respect] from Symmachus, whereas here [in the case of the dog] both the Rabbis and R. Eleazar may hold the view of Symmachus who maintains that Pebbles always involve payment in full. The reason, however, that the Rabbis order only half damages [to be paid][7] is on account of the fact that the dog handled the coal in an unusual manner[8] while it had not yet become Mu'ad [for that]. The point at issue between them[9] would be exactly the same as between R. Tarfon and the Rabbis.[10] But R. Tarfon who took the view that the payment will be in full may perhaps never have intended to make it dependent upon the body [of the tort-feasant cattle]?[11] — Cer tainly so, for he derives his view from [the law of] Horn on public ground[12] and it only stands to reason that Dayyo,[13] [i.e. it is sufficient] to a derivative by means of a Kal wa-homer[14] to involve nothing more than the original case from which it has been deduced.[15] But behold, R. Tarfon is expressly not in favour of the Principle of Dayyo?[13] — He is not in favour of Dayyo only when the Kal wa-homer would thereby be rendered completely ineffective[16] , but where the Kal wa-homer would not be rendered ineffective he too upholds Dayyo.[17]

To revert to the previous theme:[18] Raba asked: Is there such a thing as becoming Mu'ad regarding [the law of] Pebbles, or is there no such thing as becoming Mu'ad in the case of Pebbles? Do we compare Pebbles to Horn [which is subject to the law of Mu'ad] or do we not do so since the law of Pebbles is a derivative of Foot[19] [to which the law of Mu'ad has no application]?

Come and hear: "Hopping is not Mu'ad [with poultry]. Some, however, say: It is Mu'ad.' Could 'hopping' be thought [in any way not to be habitual with poultry]? It, therefore, of course means 'Hopping and making thereby [pebbles] fly.' Now, does it not deal with a case where the same act has been repeated three times, so that the point at issue between the authorities will be that the one Master [the latter] maintains that the law of Mu'ad applies [also to Pebbles] whereas the other Master [the former] holds that the law of Mu'ad does not apply [to Pebbles]? — No, it presents a case where no repetition took place; the point at issue between them being the same as between Symmachus and the Rabbis.[20]

Come and hear: In the case of an animal dropping excrements into dough. R. Judah maintains that the payment must be in full, but R. Eleazar says that only half damages will be paid. Now, does it not deal here with a case where the act has been repeated three times, so that the point at issue between the authorities will be that R. Judah maintains that the animal has thus become Mu'ad whereas R. Eleazar holds that it has not become Mu'ad?[21] — No, it deals with a case where no repetition took place, the point at issue between them being the same which is between Symmachus and the Rabbis. But is it not unusual [with an animal to do so]?[22] — The animal was pressed for space [in which case it is no more unusual]. But why should not R. Judah have explicitly stated that the Halachah is in accordance with Symmachus and similarly R. Eleazar should have stated that the Halachah is in accordance with the Rabbis?[23] — [A specific ruling in regard to] excrements is of importance, for otherwise you might have thought that since these [excrements formed a part of the animal and] were poured out from its body, they should still be considered as a part of its body,[24] it has therefore been made known to us that this is not so.[25]

Come and hear: Rami b. Ezekiel learned:[26] In the case of a cock putting its head into an empty utensil of glass where it crowed so that the utensil thereby broke, the payment must be in full, while R. Joseph on the other hand said[26] that it has been stated in the School of Rab that in the case of a horse neighing or an ass braying so that utensils were thereby broken, only half damages will be paid. Now, does it not mean that the same act has already been repeated three times,

---

(1) Being thus subject to the law applicable to Horn whereas in the case of Pebbles not accompanied by an unusual act, R. Eleazar would maintain the view of the Rabbis that the payment will not be in full.

(2) When thrown by an unusual act and repeated on more than three occasions; the payment would thus then have to be in full.

(3) But that in spite of all repetitions of the damage the payment will never exceed half damages on account of the consideration that the case of Pebbles in the usual way is always Mu'ad ab initio and yet no more than half damages is involved.

(4) Cf. infra p. 86.

(5) So that in the case of an animal making pebbles fly (by means of an unusual act) on more than three occasions, the payment will be in full, on the analogy with Horn

(6) The payment will thus never exceed half damages on account of the fact that the repetition on three occasions renders the act usual and makes it subject to the general laws of Pebbles, requiring half damages in the case of any usual act of an animal making pebbles fly.

(7) In the case of the dog.

(8) Coming thus within the category of Horn.

(9) I.e., between the Rabbis and R. Eleazar.

(10) With reference in damage done by Horn (Tam) on the Plaintiff's premises; cf. supra pp. 59. 84; infra p. 125.

(11) For since the payment is in full why should it not be out of the best of the defendant's estate? Cf. however supra p. 15, infra p. 180; but also pp. 23,212.

(12) Infra 24b.

(13) Lit., 'It is sufficient for it'.

(14) Lit. 'From Minor to Major'; v. Glos.

(15) Which was Horn on public ground where the payment in the case of Tam is made out of the body of the tort-feasant animal.

(16) Such as, e.g., to make on account of Dayyo, the payment in the case of Tam doing damage on the plaintiff's premises only for half damages — a payment which would be ordered even without a Kal wa-homer.

(17) The full payment in the case of Tam on the plaintiff's premises which is deduced from the Hal wa-homer, will therefore be collected only out of the body of the tort-feasant animal, on the strength of the Dayyo.

(18) Supra p. 85.

(19) Cf. supra 3b; v. also p. 85, n. 5.

(20) I.e., whether the payment for Pebbles generally be in full or half; cf. supra 17b.

(21) And thus the problem propounded by Raba is a point at issue between Tannaim.

(22) The case must accordingly come under the category of Horn where only half damages should he paid in the first three occasions.

(23) Why deal at all with the specific case of an animal dropping excrements?

(24) Any damage done by them should thus be compensated in full on the analogy of any other derivative of Foot proper.

(25) I.e., it does not come under the category of Foot proper but under that of Pebbles.

(26) Cf. Kid. 24b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 19a

so that the point at issue [between the contradictory statements] will be that the one Master [the former] maintains that the law of Mu'ad applies [also to Pebbles][1] whereas the other Master [the latter] holds that the law of Mu'ad does not apply [to Pebbles]?[2] — No, we suppose the act not to have been repeated, the point at issue being the same as that between Symmachus and the Rabbis. But is it not unusual [for a cock to crow into a utensil]?[3] — There had been some seeds there [in which case it was not unusual].

R. Ashi asked: Would an unusual act[4] reduce Pebbles [by half, i.e.,] to the payment of quarter damages or would an unusual act not reduce Pebbles to the payment of quarter damages?[5] — But why not solve this question from that of Raba, for Raba asked [the following]:[6] Is there such a thing as becoming Mu'ad in the case of Pebbles[7] or is there no such thing as becoming Mu'ad in the case of Pebbles?[8] Now, does not this query imply that no unusual act [affects the law of Pebbles]?[9] — Raba may perhaps have formulated his query upon a mere supposition as follows: If you suppose that no unusual act [affects the law of Pebbles], is there such a thing as becoming Mu'ad [in the case of Pebbles] or is there no such thing as becoming Mu'ad? — Let it stand undecided.

R. Ashi further asked: Is [damage occasioned by] indirect force, according to Symmachus,[10] subject to the law applicable to direct force or not so? Is he[11] acquainted with the special halachic tradition [on the matter][12] but he confines its effect to damage done by indirect force or is he perhaps not acquainted at all with this tradition? — Let it stand undecided.

IF IT WAS KICKING OR PEBBLES WERE FLYING FROM UNDER IT'S FEET AND UTENSILS WERE BROKEN, [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES WILL BE PAID. The following query was put forward: Does the text mean to say: 'If it was kicking so that damage resulted from the kicking, or in the case of pebbles flying in the usual way ... [only] half damages will be paid,' being thus in accordance with the Rabbis;[13] or does it perhaps mean to say: 'If it was kicking so that damage resulted from the kicking, or when pebbles were flying as a result of the kicking . . . [only] half damages will be paid.' thus implying that in the case of pebbles flying in the usual way, the payment would be in full, being therefore in accordance with Symmachus?[14]

Come and hear the concluding clause: IF IT TROD UPON A UTENSIL AND BROKE IT, AND A FRAGMENT [OF IT] FELL UPON ANOTHER UTENSIL WHICH WAS ALSO BROKEN, FOR THE FIRST UTENSIL FULL COMPENSATION MUST BE PAID, BUT FOR THE SECOND, [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES. Now, how could the Mishnah be in accordance with Symmachus,[14] who is against half damages [in the case of Pebbles]? If you, however, suggest that THE FIRST UTENSIL refers to the utensil broken by a fragment that flew off from the first [broken] utensil, and THE SECOND refers thus to the utensil broken by a fragment that flew off from, the second [broken] utensil, and further assume that according to Symmachus there is a distinction between damage done by direct force and damage done by indirect force [so that in the latter case only half damages will be paid], then [if so] what about the question of R. Ashi: 'Is [damage occasioned by] indirect force, according to Symmachus, subject to the law of direct force or not subject to the law of direct force?' Why is it not evident to him [R. Ashi] that it is not subject to the law applicable to direct force? — R. Ashi undoubtedly explains the Mishnah in accordance with the Rabbis, and the query[15] is put by him as follows: [Does it mean to say:] 'If it was kicking so that damage resulted from the kicking, or in the case of pebbles flying in the usual way . . . [only] half damages will be paid', thus implying that [in the case of Pebbles flying] as a result of kicking, [only] quarter damages would be paid on account of the fact that an unusual act reduces payment [in the case of Pebbles][16] or [does it perhaps mean to say:] 'If it was kicking so that damage resulted from the kicking or when pebbles were flying as a result of the kicking . . .half damages will be paid,' thus making it plain that an unusual act does not reduce payment [in the case of Pebbles]? — Let it stand undecided.

R. Abba b. Memel asked of R. Ammi, some say of R. Hiyya b. Abba, [the following Problem]: In the case of an animal walking in a place where it was unavoidable for it not to make pebbles fly [from under its feet], while in fact it was kicking and in this way making pebbles fly and doing damage, what would be the law? [Should it be maintained that] since it was unavoidable for it not to make pebbles fly there, the damage would be considered usual;[17] or should it perhaps be argued otherwise, since in fact the damage resulted from kicking[18] that caused the pebbles to fly? — Let it stand undecided.

R. Jeremiah asked R. Zera: In the case of an animal walking on public ground and making pebbles fly from which there resulted damage, what would be the law? Should we compare this case[19] to Horn[20] and thus impose liability; or since, on the other hand, it is a derivative of Foot, should there be exemption [for damage done on public ground]? — He answered him: It stands to reason that [since] it is a secondary kind of Foot [there is exemption on Public ground].[21]

Again [he asked him]: In a case where the pebbles were kicked up on public ground but the damage that resulted therefrom was done in the plaintiff's premises, what would be the law? — He answered him: if the cause of raising [the pebbles] is not there [to institute liability],[22] how could any liability be attached to the falling down [of the pebbles]? Thereupon he [R. Jeremiah] raised an objection [from the following]: In the case of an animal walking on the road and making pebbles fly either in the plaintiff's premises or on public ground, there is liability to pay. Now, does not this Baraitha deal with a case where the pebbles were made both to fly up on public ground and to do damage on public ground?[23] — No, though the pebbles were made to fly on public ground, the damage resulted on the plaintiff's premises. But did you not say [he asked him further, that in such a case there would still be exemption on account of the argument].'If the cause of raising [the pebbles] is not there [to institute liability], how could any liability be attached to the falling down [of the pebbles]?' He answered him: 'I have since changed my mind [on this matter].'[24]

He raised another objection: IF IT TROD UPON A UTENSIL AND BROKE IT, AND A FRAGMENT [OF IT] FELL UPON ANOTHER UTENSIL WHICH WAS ALSO BROKEN, FOR THE FIRST UTENSIL FULL COMPENSATION MUST BE PAID, BUT FOR THE SECOND [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES. And it was taught on the matter: This ruling is confined to [damage done on] the plaintiff's premises, whereas if it took place on public ground there would be exemption regarding the first utensil though with respect to the second there would be liability to pay. Now, does not the Baraitha present a case where the fragment was made both to fly up on public ground and to do damage on public ground?[25] — No, though the fragment was made to fly on public ground, the damage resulted on the plaintiff's premises.

But did you not say [that in such a case there would still be exemption on account of the argument]: 'If the cause of raising [the pebbles] is not there [to institute liability], how could any liability be attached to the falling down [of the pebbles?]'

---

(1) The compensation is therefore in full.

(2) Consequently only half damages will be paid.

(3) Coming thus under the category of Horn only half damages should be paid in the case of Tam.

(4) Done by an animal making pebbles fly through kicking.

(5) But the compensation of half damages will be made in all cases of Pebbles.

(6) Supra p. 85.

(7) For compensation in full.

(8) And no more than half damages will ever be paid

(9) For if otherwise, and quarter damages will be paid in the first instance of an unusual act in the case of Pebbles, how could the compensation rise above half damages?

(10) Who orders full compensation in the case of Pebbles; supra p. 79.

(11) I.e., Symmachus.

(12) Ordering only half damages; v supra p. 79.

(13) Who, against the view of Symmachus, order only half damages to be paid, supra p. 79.

(14) Who orders full compensation in the case of Pebbles; ibid.

(15) As to the reading of the Mishnaic text.

(16) As queried by R. Ashi himself, supra p. 88.

(17) Coming thus under the law applicable to Pebbles in the usual way.

(18) Which is an unusual act and should thus be subject to the query put forward by Raba regarding pebbles that were caused to fly by means of an unusual act.

(19) On account of the liability only for half damages.

(20) Where there is liability even on public ground.

(21) Cf. supra p. 9.

(22) Since it took place on public ground.

(23) Which is a refutation of R. Zera's first ruling.

(24) I.e., on the last point.

(25) Which shows that there is liability for Pebbles, i.e., for 'the second utensil,' on public ground, against the ruling of R. Zera.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 19b

— He answered him: 'I have since changed my mind [on this matter].''

But behold R. Johanan said that in regard to the liability of half damages there is no distinction between the plaintiff's premises and public ground. Now, does not this statement also deal with a case where the pebbles were made both to fly up on public ground and to do damage on public ground? — No, though the pebbles were made to fly up on public ground, the damage resulted on the plaintiff's premises. But did you not say [that in such a case there would still be exemption on account of the argument], 'If the cause of raising [the pebbles] is not there [to institute liability], how could any liability be attached to the falling down [of the pebbles]?' — He answered him: 'I have since changed my mind [on this matter].' Alternatively, you might say that R. Johanan referred only to [the liability attached to] Horn.[1]

R. Judah [II] the Prince and R. Oshaia had both been sitting near the entrance of the house of R. Judah, when the following matter was raised between them: In the case of an animal knocking about with its tail, [and doing thereby damage on public ground] what would be the law? — One of them said in answer: Could the owner be asked to hold the tail of his animal continuously wherever it goes?[2] But if so, why in the case of Horn shall we not say the same: 'Could the owner be asked to hold the horn of his animal continuously wherever it goes?' — There is no comparison. In the case of Horn the damage is unusual, whereas it is quite usual [for an animal] to knock about with its tail.[3] But if it is usual for an animal to knock about with its tail, what then was the problem?[4] — The problem was raised regarding an excessive knocking about.[5]

R. 'Ena queried: In the case of an animal knocking about with its membrum virile and doing thereby damage,[6] what is the law? Shall we say it is analogous to Horn?[7] For in the case of Horn do not its passions get the better of it, as may be said here also? Or shall we perhaps say that in the case of Horn, the animal is prompted by a malicious desire to do damage, whereas, in the case before us, there is no malicious desire to do damage?[8] — Let it stand undecided.

POULTRY ARE MU'AD TO WALK IN THEIR USUAL WAY AND TO BREAK [THINGS]. IF A STRING BECAME ATTACHED TO THEIR FEET OR WHERE THEY HOP ABOUT AND BREAK UTENSILS, [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES WILL BE PAID. R. Huna said: The ruling regarding half damages applies only to a case where the string became attached of itself, but in a case where it was attached by a human being the liability would be in full. But in the case where the string was attached of itself, who would be liable to pay the half damages? It could hardly be suggested that the owner of the string[9] would have to pay it, for in what circumstances could that be possible? If when the string was kept by him in a safe place [so that the fact of the poultry taking hold of it could in no way be attributed to him], surely it was but a sheer accident?[10] If [on the other hand] it was not kept in a safe place, should he not be liable for negligence [to pay in full]? It was therefore the owner of the poultry who would have to pay the half damages. But again why differentiate [his case so as to excuse him from full payment]? If there was exemption from full payment on account of [the inference drawn from] the verse, If a man shall open a pit,[11] which implies that there would be no liability for Cattle opening a Pit, half damages should [for the very reason] similarly not be imposed here as [there could be liability only when] Man created a pit but not [when] Cattle [created] a pit? — The Mishnaic ruling [regarding half damages] must therefore be applicable only to a case where the poultry made the string fly [from one place to another, where it broke the utensils, being thus subject to the law of Pebbles]; and the statement made by R.Huna will accordingly refer to a case which has been dealt with elsewhere [viz.]: In the case of an ownerless string, R. Huna said that if it had become attached of itself to poultry [and though damage resulted to an animate object tripping over it while it was still attached to the poultry] there would be exemption.[12] But if it had been attached to the poultry by a human being, he would be liable to pay [in full]. Under what category of damage could this liability come?[13] — R. Huna b. Manoah said: Under the category of Pit, which is rolled about by feet of man and feet of animal.[14]

MISHNAH. WITH REFERENCE TO WHAT IS TOOTH MU'AD?[15] [IT IS MU'AD] TO CONSUME WHATEVER IS FIT FOR IT. ANIMAL IS MUA'D TO CONSUME BOTH FRUITS AND VEGETABLES. BUT IF IT HAS DESTROYED CLOTHES OR UTENSILS, [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES WILL BE PAID.[16] THIS RULING APPLIES ONLY TO DAMAGE DONE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES, BUT IF IT IS DONE ON PUBLIC GROUND THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION.[17] WHERE, HOWEVER, THE ANIMAL HAS DERIVED SOME BENEFIT [FROM THE DAMAGE DONE BY IT], PAYMENT WILL [IN ANY CASE] BE MADE TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT. WHEN WILL PAYMENT BE MADE TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT? IF IT CONSUMED [FOOD] IN THE MARKET, PAYMENT TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT WILL BE MADE; [BUT IF IT CONSUMED] IN THE SIDEWAYS OF THE MARKET, THE PAYMENT WILL BE FOR THE ACTUAL. DAMAGE DONE BY THE ANIMAl. [SO ALSO IF IT CONSUMED] AT THE ENTRANCE OF A SHOP, PAYMENT TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT WILL BE MADE, [BUT IF IT CONSUMED] INSIDE THE SHOP, THE PAYMENT WILL BE FOR THE ACTUAL DAMAGE DONE BY THE ANIMAL.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Tooth is Mu'ad to consume whatever is fit for it. How is that? In the case of an animal entering the plaintiff's premises and consuming food that is fit for it or drinking liquids that are fit for it, the payment will be in full. Similarly in the case of a wild beast entering the plaintiff's premises, tearing an animal to pieces and consuming its flesh, the payment will be in full. So also in the case of a cow consuming barley, an ass consuming horse-beans, a dog licking oil, or a pig consuming a piece of meat, the payment will be in full. R. Papa [thereupon] said: Since it has been stated that things which in the usual way would be unfit as food [for particular animals] but which under pressing circumstances are consumed by them,[18] come under the designation of food, in the case of a cat consuming dates, and an ass consuming fish, the payment will similarly be in full.

There was a case where an ass consumed bread and chewed also the basket[19] [in which the bread had been kept]. Rab Judah thereupon ordered full payment for the bread, but only half damages for the basket. Why can it not be argued that since it was usual for the ass to consume the bread, it was similarly usual for it to chew at the same time the basket too? — It was only after it had already completed consuming the bread, that the ass chewed the basket. But could bread be considered the usual food of an animal? Here is [a Baraitha] which contradicts this: If it [the animal] consumed bread, meat or broth, only half damages will be paid.[20] Now, does not this ruling refer to [a domestic] animal?[21] — No, it refers to a wild beast. To a wild beast? Is not meat its usual food? — The meat was roasted.[22] Alternatively, you may say: It refers to a deer.[23] You may still further say alternatively that it refers to a [domestic] animal, but the bread was consumed upon a table.[24]

---

(1) Where indeed there is no distinction between public ground and the plaintiff's premises; (cf. however, the views of R. Tarfon, supra 14a;18a and infra 24b). but in regard to Pebbles, there is a distinction, and liability is restricted to the plaintiff's premises, according to the ruling of R. Zera.

(2) There will therefore be no liability.

(3) Coming thus under the category of Foot, for which there is no liability on public ground.

(4) Why should it not be regarded as a derivative of Foot?

(5) Whether it is still usual for it or not.

(6) On public ground.

(7) And there will be liability.

(8) It should therefore come under the category of Tooth and Foot, for which there is no liability on public ground.

(9) Not being the owner of the poultry.
(10) He should consequently be freed altogether.
(11) Ex. XXI, 33. (5) I.e., no responsibility is involved in cattle creating a nuisance. Cf. infra 48a; 51a.
(12) As there was no owner to the string, while the owner of the poultry could not be made liable for damage that resulted from a nuisance created by his poultry on the principle that Cattle, creating a nuisance, would in no way involve the owner in any obligation.
(13) Since that human being was neither the owner of the poultry nor the owner of the string, and the damage did not occur at the spot where he attached the string.
(14) For which there is liability, as explained supra p. 19.
(15) V. supra p. 68.
(16) For being an unusual act, it comes under the category of Horn.
(17) Cf. supra p. 17.
(18) E.g., horse-beans by an ass, or meat by a pig.
(19) Or 'split it', 'picked it to pieces' (Rashi).
(20) On the ground that the act was unusual and as such would come under the category of Horn.
(21) This shows that bread is not the usual food of animal.
(22) Which is in such a state not usually consumed even by a wild beast.
(23) Which, as a rule, does not feed on meat.
(24) Which was indeed unusual.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 20a

There was a case where a goat, noticing turnips upon the top of a cask, climbed up there and consumed the turnips and broke the jar. — Raba thereupon ordered full payment both for the turnips and for the jar; the reason being that since it was usual with it to consume turnips it was also usual to climb up [for them].

Ilfa stated: In the case of an animal on public ground stretching out its neck and consuming food that had been placed upon the back of another animal, there would be liability to pay; the reason being that the back of the other animal would be counted as the plaintiff's premises. May we say that the following teaching supports his view: 'In the case of a plaintiff who had a bundle [of grain] hanging over his back and [somebody else's animal] stretched out its neck and consumed [the grain] out of it, there would be liability to pay'? — No, just as Raba elsewhere referred to a case where the animal was jumping [an act which being quite unusual would be subject to the law of Horn[1]], so also this teaching might perhaps similarly deal with a case of jumping.

With reference to what was Raba's statement made? — [It was made] with reference to the following statement of R. Oshaia: In the case of an animal on public ground going along and consuming, there would be exemption, but if it was standing and consuming there would be liability to pay. Why this difference? If in the case of walking [there is exemption, since] it is usual with animal to do so, is it not also in the case of standing usual with it to do so? — [It was on this question that] Raba said: 'Standing' here implies jumping [which being unusual was therefore subject in the law of Horn].[1]

R. Zera asked: [In the case of a sheaf that was] rolling about, what would he the law? (In what circumstances? — When, e.g., grain had originally been placed in the plaintiff's premises, but was rolled thence into public ground [by the animal, which consumed the grain while standing on public ground], what would then be the law?)[2] — Come and hear that which R. Hiyya taught: 'In the case of a bag of food lying partly inside and partly outside [of the plaintiff's premises], if the animal consumed inside, there would be liability [to pay], but if it consumed outside there would be exemption.' Now, did not this teaching refer to a case where the bag was being continually rolled?[3] — No; read . '...which the animal consumed, for the part which had originally been lying inside[4]

there would be liability but for the part that had always been outside there would be exemption.' You might alternatively say that R. Hiyya referred to a bag containing long stalks of grass.[5]

ANIMAL IS MUA'D TO CONSUME BOTH FRUITS AND VEGETABLES. BUT IF IT HAS DESTROYED CLOTHES OR UTENSILS, [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES WILL BE PAID. THIS RULING APPLIES ONLY TO DAMAGE DONE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES, BUT IF IT IS DONE ON PUBLIC GROUND THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION. To what ruling does the last clause refer? — Rab said: [It refers] to all the cases [dealt with in the Mishnah, even to the destruction of clothes and utensils];[6] the reason being that whenever the plaintiff himself acted unlawfully,[7] the defendant, though guilty of misconduct, could be under no liability to pay. Samuel on the other hand said: It refers only to the ruling regarding [the consumption of] fruits and vegetables,[8] whereas in the case of clothes and utensils[9] there would be liability [even when the damage was done on public ground]. [The same difference of opinion is found between Resh Lakish and R. Johanan, for] Resh Lakish said: [It refers] to all the cases [even to the destruction of clothes and utensils].[10] In this Resh Lakish was following a view expressed by him in another connection, where he stated:[11] In the case of two cows on public ground, one lying down and the other walking about, if the one that was walking kicked the one that was lying there would be exemption [since the latter too misconducted itself by laying itself down on public ground], whereas if the one that was lying kicked the one that was walking there would be liability to pay. R. Johanan on the other hand said: The ruling in the Mishnah refers only to the case of fruits and vegetables, whereas in the case of clothes and utensils there would be liability [even when the damage was done on public ground]. Might it thus be inferred that R. Johanan was also against the view expressed by Resh Lakish even in the case of the two cows? — No; [in that case] he could indeed have been in full agreement with him; for while in the case of clothes [and utensils] it might be customary with people to place [their] garments [on public ground] whilst having a rest near by, [in the case of the cows] it is not usual [for an animal to lie down on public ground].[12]

WHERE, HOWEVER, THE ANIMAL HAS DERIVED SOME BENEFIT [FROM THE DAMAGE DONE BY IT]. PAYMENT WILL [IN ANY CASE] BE MADE TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT. How [could the extent of the benefit be] calculated? — Rabbah said: [It must not exceed] the value of straw [i.e. the coarsest possible food for animals]. But Raba said: The value of barley[13] on the cheapest scale [i.e. two-thirds of the usual price]. There is a Baraitha in agreement with Rabbah, and there is another Baraitha in agreement with Raba. There is a Baraitha in agreement with Rabbah [viz.]: R. Simeon b. Yohai said: The payment [to the extent of the benefit] would not be more than the value of straw.[14] There is a Baraitha in agreement with Raba [viz.]: When the animal derived some benefit [from the damage done by it], payment would [in any case] be made to the extent of the benefit. That is to say, in the case of [an animal] having consumed [on public ground] one kab[15] or two kabs [of barley], no order would be given to pay the full value of the barley [that was consumed], but it would be estimated how much might an owner be willing to spend to let his animal have that particular food [which was consumed] supposing it was good for it, though in practice he was never accustomed to feed it thus. It would therefore follow that in the case of [an animal] having consumed wheat or any other food unwholesome for it, there could be no liability at all.

R.Hisda said to Rami b. Hama: You were not yesterday with us in the House of Study[16] where there were discussed some specially interesting matters. The other thereupon asked him: What were the specially interesting matters? He answered: [The discussion was whether] one who occupied his neighbour's premises unbeknown to him would have to pay rent[17] or not. But under what circumstances? It could hardly be supposed that the premises were not for hire,[18] and he [the one who occupied them] was similarly a man who was not in the habit of hiring any,[19] for [what liability could there be attached to a case where] the defendant derived no benefit and the plaintiff sustained no loss? If on the other hand the premises were for hire and he was a man whose wont it was to hire premises, [why should no liability be attached since] the defendant derived a benefit and the plaintiff sustained a loss? — No; the problem arises in a case where the premises were not for hire, but his wont was to hire premises. What therefore should be the law? Is the occupier entitled to plead [against the other party]: 'What loss have I caused to you [since your premises were in any case not for hire]?'

---

(1) Which could not be exempted from liability even on public ground.

(2) If we were to go by the place of the actual consumption there would be exemption in this case, whereas if the original place whence the food was removed is also taken into account, there would be liability to pay.

(3) According to this Baraitha, the place of actual consumption was the basic point to be considered.

(4) Though removed by the animal and consumed outside.

(5) Which was lying partly inside and partly outside, and as, unlike grain, it constituted one whole, the place of the consumption was material.

(6) For which there would be no liability on public ground, although, being unusual, it would come under the category of Horn.

(7) By allowing his clothes or utensils to be on public ground.

(8) Cf. supra p. 17.

(9) As the damage would come under the category of Horn.

(10) V. p. 97, n. 5.

(11) V. infra 32a.

(12) It was therefore a misconduct on the the part of the animal to lie down, which makes it liable for any damage it caused, whilst it is not entitled to payment for any damage sustained.

(13) I.e., the value of the food actually consumed by the animal.

(14) Even when the animal consumed barley, as it might be alleged that straw would have sufficed it.

(15) A certain measure: v. Glos.

(16) Lit. 'in our district,' 'domain' בחהומא This word is omitted in some texts, v. D. S. a.l.

(17) For the past.

(18) And would in any case have remained vacant.

(19) As he had friends who were willing to accommodate him without any pay.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 20b

Or might the other party retort: 'Since you have derived a benefit [as otherwise you would have had to hire premises], you must pay rent accordingly'? Rami b. Hama thereupon said to R. Hisda: 'The solution to the problem is contained in a Mishnah.' — 'In what Mishnah?' He answered him: 'When you will first have performed for me some service.'[1] Thereupon he, R. Hisda, carefully lifted up his[2] scarf and folded it. Then Rami b. Hama said to him: [The Mishnah is:] WHERE, HOWEVER, THE ANIMAL HAS DERIVED SOME BENEFIT [FROM THE DAMAGE DONE BY IT,] PAYMENT WILL [IN ANY CASE] BE MADE TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT. Said Raba: How much worry and anxiety is a person [such as Rami b. Hama] spared whom the Master [of all] helps! For though the problem [before us] is not at all analogous to the case dealt with in the Mishnah, R. Hisda accepted the solution suggested by Rami b. Hama. [The difference is as follows:] In the case of the Mishnah the defendant derived a benefit and the plaintiff sustained a loss, whereas in the problem before us the defendant derived a benefit but the plaintiff sustained no loss. Rami b. Hama was, however, of the opinion that generally speaking fruits left on public ground have been [more or less] abandoned by their owner [who could thus not regard the animal that consumed them there as having exclusively caused him the loss he sustained, and the analogy therefore was good].

Come and hear: 'In the case of a plaintiff who [by his fields] has encircled the defendant's field on three sides, and who has made a fence on the one side as well as on the second and third sides [so that the defendant is enjoying the benefit of the fences], no payment can be enforced from the defendant [since on the fourth side his field is still open wide to the world and the benefit he derives is thus incomplete].'[3] Should, however, the plaintiff make a fence also on the fourth side, the defendant would [no doubt] have to share the whole outlay of the fences. Now, could it not he deduced from this that wherever a defendant has derived benefit, though the plaintiff has thereby sustained no loss,[4] there is liability to pay [for the benefit derived]? — That case is altogether different, as the plaintiff may there argue against the defendant saying: It is you that [by having your field in the middle of my fields] have caused me to erect additional fences[5] [and incur additional expense].

Come and hear: [In the same case] R. Jose said: [It is only] if the defendant [subsequently] of his own accord makes a fence on the fourth side that there would devolve upon him, a liability to pay his share [also] in the existing fences [made by the plaintiff].[6] The liability thus applies only when the defendant fences [the fourth side], but were the plaintiff to fence [the fourth side too] there would be no liability [whatsoever upon the defendant]. Now, could it not be deduced from this that in a case where, though the defendant has derived benefit, the plaintiff has [thereby] sustained no loss, there is no liability to pay? — That ruling again is based on a different principle, since the defendant may argue against the plaintiff saying: 'For my purposes a partition of thorns of the value of zuz[7] would have been quite sufficient.'

Come and hear: '[A structure consisting of] a lower storey and an upper storey, belonging respectively to two persons, has collapsed. The owner of the upper storey thereupon asks the owner of the lower storey to rebuild the ground floor, but the latter does not agree to do so. The owner of the upper storey is then entitled to build the lower storey and to occupy it until the owner of the ground floor refunds the outlay.'[8] Now, seeing that the whole outlay will have to be refunded by the owner of the lower storey, it is evident that no rent may be deducted [for the occupation of the lower storey]. Could it thus not be inferred from this ruling that in a case where, though the defendant has derived a benefit, the plaintiff has [thereby] sustained no loss,[9] there is no liability to pay? — That ruling is based on a different principle as the lower storey is by law accessory to the upper storey.[10]

Come and hear: [In the same case] R. Judah said: Even this one who occupies another man's premises without an agreement with him must nevertheless pay him rent.[11] Is not this ruling a proof that in a case where the defendant has derived benefit, though the plaintiff has [thereby] sustained no loss, there is full liability to pay? — That ruling is based on a different principle, since we have to reckon there with the blackening of the walls [in the case of newly built premises, the plaintiff thus sustaining an actual loss].

The problem was communicated to R. Ammi and his answer was: 'What harm has the defendant done to the other party? What loss has he caused him to suffer? And finally what indeed is the damage that he has done to him?' R. Hiyya b. Abba, however, said: 'We have to consider the matter very carefully.' When the problem was afterwards again laid before R. Hiyya b. Abba he replied: 'Why do you keep on sending the problem to me? If I had found the solution, would I not have forwarded it to you?'

It was stated: R. Kahana quoting R. Johanan said: [In the case of the above problem] there would be no legal obligation to pay rent; but R. Abbahu similarly quoting R. Johanan said: There would be a legal obligation to pay rent. R. Papa thereupon said: The view expressed by R. Abbahu [on behalf of R. Johanan] was not stated explicitly [by R. Johanan] but was only arrived at by inference. For we learnt: He who misappropriates a stone or a beam belonging to the Temple Treasury[12] does not render himself subject to the law of Sacrilege.[13] But if he delivers it to his neighbour, he is subject to the law of Sacrilege,[14] whereas his neighbour is not subject to the law of Sacrilege.[15] So also when he builds it into his house he is not subject to the law of Sacrilege until he actually occupies that house for such a period that the benefit derived from that stone or that beam would amount to the value of a perutah.[16] And Samuel thereupon said that the last ruling referred to a case where the stone or the beam was [not fixed into the actual structure but] left loose on the roof.[17] Now, R. Abbahu sitting in the presence of R. Johanan said in the name of Samuel that this ruling proved that he who occupied his neighbour's premises without an agreement with him would have to pay him rent.[18] And he [R. Johanan] kept silent. [R. Abbahu] imagined that since he [R. Johanan] remained silent, he thus acknowledged his agreement with this inference. But in fact this was not so. He [R. Johanan] paid no regard to this view on account of his acceptance of an argument which was advanced [later] by Rabbah; for Rabbah[19] said: The conversion of sacred property even without [the] knowledge [of the Temple Treasury] is [subject[20] to the law of Sacrilege][21]

---

(1) 'Then will I let you know the source.' The service thus rendered would on the one hand prove the eagerness of the enquirer and on the other make him appreciate the answer;.

(2) I.e.. the other's.

(3) B.B. 4b.

(4) Such as in the case before us where the fences were of course erected primarily for the plaintiff's own use.

(5) I.e., the fencing which was erected between the field of the defendant and the surrounding fields that belong to the plaintiff. This interpretation is given by Rashi but is opposed by the Tosaf. a.l. who explain the case to refer to fencing set up between the fields of the plaintiff and those of the surrounding neighbours.

(6) B.B. 4b.

(7) A small coin; v. Glos.

(8) B.M. 117a.

(9) [Since in this case the owner of the ground floor refused to build.]

(10) The occupation of the newly-built lower storey by the owner of the upper storey is thus under the given circumstances a matter of right.

(11) B.M. 117a.

(12) But which has been all the time in his possession as he had been the authorized Treasurer of the Sanctuary; v. Hag. 11a and Mei. 20a

(13) Since the offender was the Treasurer of the Temple and the possession of the consecrated stone or beam has thus not changed hands, no conversion has been committed in this case. As to the law of Sacrilege, v. Lev. V, 15-16, and supra, p. 50.

(14) For the conversion that has been committed.

(15) Since the article has already been desecrated by the act of delivery.

(16) Mei. V, 4. Perutah is the minimum legal value; cf. also Glossary.

(17) [As otherwise the mere conversion involved would render him liable to the law of Sacrilege.]

(18) For if in the case of private premises there would be no liability to pay rent, why should the law if Sacrilege apply on account of the benefit of the perutah derived from the stone or the beam?

(19) Cf. B.M. 99b, where the reading is Raba.

(20) As nothing escapes the knowledge of Heaven which ordered the law of Sacrilege to apply to all cases of conversion.

(21) Dealt with in Lev. V, 15-16.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 21a

just as the use of private property under an agreement [is subject to the law of Contracts].

R. Abba b. Zabda sent [the following message] to Mari the son of the Master:[1] 'Ask R. Huna as to his opinion regarding the case of one who occupies his neighbour's premises without any agreement with him, must he pay him rent or not?' But in the meanwhile R. Huna's soul went to rest. Rabbah b. R. Huna thereupon replied as follows: 'Thus said my father, my Master, in the name of Rab: He is not legally bound to pay him rent; but he who hires premises from Reuben may have to pay rent to Simeon.' But what connection has Simeon with premises [hired from Reuben, that the rent should be paid to him]? — Read therefore thus: '. . . [Reuben] and the premises were discovered to be the property of Simeon, the rent must be paid to him.' But [if so], do not the two statements [made above in the name of Rab] contradict each other? — The latter statement [ordering payment to Simeon] deals with premises which were for hire,[2] whereas the former ruling [remitting rent in the absence of an agreement] refers to premises which were not for hire. It has similarly been stated: R. Hiyya b. Abin quoting Rab said, (some say that R. Hiyya b. Abin quoting R. Huna said): 'He who occupies his neighbour's premises without any agreement with him is not under a legal obligation to pay him rent. He, however, who hires premises from the representatives of the town must pay rent to the owners.' What is the meaning of the reference to 'owners'? — Read therefore thus: '. . . [representatives of the town,] and the premises are discovered to be the property of [particular] owners, the rent must be paid to them.' But [if so,] how can the two statements be reconciled with each other? The latter statement [ordering payment to the newly discovered owners] deals with premises which are for hire,[2] whereas the former ruling [remitting rent in the absence of an agreement] refers to premises which are not for hire.

R.Sehorah slated that R. Huna quoting Rab had said: He who occupies his neighbour's premises without having any agreement with him is under no legal obligation to pay him rent, for Scripture says, Through emptiness[3] even the gate gets smitten.[4] Mar, son of R. Ashi, remarked: I myself have seen such a thing[5] and the damage was as great as though done by a goring ox. R. Joseph said: Pre mises that are inhabited by tenants[6] keep in a better condition. What however is the [practical] difference between them?[7] — There is a difference between them in the case where the owner was using the premises for keeping there wood and straw.[8]

There was a case where a certain person built a villa upon ruins that had belonged to orphans. R. Nahman thereupon confiscated the villa from him [for the benefit of the orphans]. May it therefore not be inferred that R. Nahman is of the opinion that he who occupies his neighbour's premises without having any agreement with him must still pay him rent? — [The case of the orphans is based on an entirely different principle, as] that site had originally been occupied by certain Carmanians[9] who used to pay the orphans a small rent.[10] When the defendant had thus been advised by R. Nahman to go and make a peaceful settlement with the orphans, he paid no heed. R. Nahman therefore confiscated the villa from him.

WHEN WILL PAYMENT BE MADE TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT? [IF IT CONSUMED [FOOD] . . . IN THE SIDEWAYS OF THE MARKET, THE PAYMENT WILL BE FOR THE ACTUAL DAMAGE DONE BY THE ANIMAL.] Rab thereupon said: [The last ruling ordering payment for the actual damage done extends] even to a case where the animal itself [stood in the market place but] turned its head to the sideways [where it in this wise consumed the food]. Samuel on the other hand said: Even in the case of the animal turning its head to the sideways no payment will be made for the actual damage done.[11] But according to Samuel, how then can it happen that there will be liability to pay for actual damage? — Only when, e.g., the animal had quitted the market place altogether and walked right into the sideways of the market place. There are some [authorities] who read this argument [between Rab and Samuel] independent of any [Mishnaic] text: In the case of an animal [standing in a market place but] turning its head into the sideways [and unlawfully consuming food which was lying there], Rab maintains that there will be liability [for the actual damage] whereas Samuel says that there will be no liability [for the actual damage]. But according to Samuel, how then can it happen that there will be liability to pay for actual damage? — Only when, e.g., the animal had quitted the market place altogether and had walked right into the sideways of the market place. R. Nahman b. Isaac raised an objection: [SO ALSO IF IT CONSUMED] AT THE ENTRANCE OF A SHOP, PAYMENT TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT WILL BE MADE.[12] How could the damage in this case have occurred unless, of course, by the animal having turned [its head to the entrance of the shop]? Yet the text states, PAYMENT TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT. [That is to say,] only to the extent of the benefit [derived by the animal] but not for the actual damage done by it?[13] — He raised the objection and he himself[14] answered it: The entrance to the shop might have been at a corner [in which case the animal had access to the food placed there without having to turn its head].

There are some [authorities], however, who say that in the case of an animal turning [its head to the sideways of the market place] there was never any argument whatsoever that there would be liability [for the actual damage done]. The point at issue between Rab and Samuel was in the case of a plaintiff who left unfenced a part of his site abutting on public ground, and the statement ran as follows: Rab said that the liability for the actual damage done could arise only in a case where [the food was placed in the sideways of the market to which] the animal turned [its head]. But in the case of a plaintiff leaving unfenced a part of his site abutting on public ground [and spreading out there fruits which were consumed by the defendant's animal] there would be no liability to pay [for the loss sustained].[15] Samuel, however, said that even in the case of a plaintiff leaving unfenced a part of his site abutting on to the public ground, there would be liability to pay [for the loss sustained]. Might it not be suggested that the basic issue [between Rab and Samuel] would be that of a defendant having dug a pit on his own site [and while abandoning the site still retains his ownership of the pit]?[16] Rab who here upholds exemption [for the loss sustained by the owner of the fruits] maintains that a pit dug on one's own site is subject to the law of Pit [so that fruits left on an unfenced site adjoining the public ground constitute a nuisance which may in fact be abated by all and everybody],[17] whereas Samuel who declares liability [for the loss sustained by the owner of the fruits] would maintain that a pit dug on one's own site could never be subject to the law of Pit![18] — Rab could, however, [refute this suggestion and] reason thus: [In spite of your argument] I may nevertheless maintain

---

(1) Cf. infra 97a; B.M. 64b.

(2) In which case the owner sustains a loss and rent must be paid.

(3) The Hebrew word She'iyyah שאייה rendered ‘emptiness’, is taken to be the name of a demon that haunts uninhabitated premises; cf. Rashi a.l.

(4) Isa. XXIV, 12.

(5) Lit ‘. . . him referring, to the demon.

(6) Who look after premises.

(7) I.e., between the reason adduced by Rab and that given by R. Joseph.

(8) In which case the premises had in any case not been empty and thus not haunted by the so-called demon ‘She'iyyah’. There would therefore be liability to pay rent. But according to the reason given by R. Joseph that premises inhabited by tenants keep in better condition as the tenants look after their repairs, there would even in this case be no liability of rent upon the tenant who trespassed into his neighbour's premises that had previously been used only for the keeping of wood and straw and thus liable to fall into dilapidation.

(9) I.e., persons who came from Carmania. According to a different reading quoted by Rashi a.l. and occurring also in MS.M., it only means ‘Former settlers’.

(10) In which case the plaintiffs suffered an actual loss, however small it was.

(11) Since the body of the animal is still on public ground.

(12) Supra p. 94.

(13) Supporting thus the view of Samuel but contradicting that of Rab.

(14) I.e., R. Nahman b. Isaac.

(15) But only for the benefit the animal derived from the fruits.

(16) The fruits kept near the public ground are a public nuisance and equal a pit, the ownership of which was retained and which was dug on a site to which the public has full access.

(17) Cf. infra 30a.

(18) Since the pit still remains private property.

that in other respects a pit dug on one's own site is not subject to the law of Pit, but the case before us here is based on a different principle, since the defendant is entitled to plead [in reply to the plaintiff]: ‘You had no right at all to spread out your fruits so near to the public ground as to involve me in liability through my cattle consuming them.' Samuel on the other hand could similarly contend: In other respects a pit dug on one's own site may be subject to the law of Pit, for it may be reasonable in the case of a pit for a plaintiff to plead that the pit may have been totally overlooked [by the animals that unwittingly fell in]. But in the case of fruits [spread out on private ground], is it possible to plead with reason that they may have been overlooked? Surely they must have been seen.[1]

May it not be suggested that the case of an animal 'turning its head [to the sideways]' is a point at issue between the following Tannaitic authorities? For it has been taught: In the case of an animal [unlawfully] consuming [the plaintiff's fruits] on the market, the payment will be [only] to the extent of the benefit; [but when the fruits had been placed] on the sideways of the market, the payment would be assessed for the damage done by the animal. This is the view of R. Meir and R. Judah. But R. Jose and R. Eleazar say: It is by no means usual for an animal to consume [fruits], Only to walk [there]. Now, is not R. Jose merely expressing the view already expressed by the first-mentioned Tannaitic authorities[2] , unless the case of an animal 'turning its head [to the sideways]' was the point at issue between them, so that the first-mentioned Tannaitic authorities[2] maintained that in the case of an animal 'turning its head [to the sideways]' the payment will still be fixed to the extent of the benefit it had derived, whereas R. Jose would maintain that the payment will be in accordance with the actual damage done by it?[3] — No; all may agree that in the case of an animal 'turning its head [to the sideways]' the law may prevail either in accordance with Rab or in accordance with Samuel; the Point at issue, however, between the Tannaitic authorities here [in the Baraitha] may have been as to the qualifying force of in another man's field.[4] The first Tannaitic authorities[2] maintain that the clause, And it [shall] feed in another man's field, is meant to exclude liability for damage done on public ground, whereas the succeeding authorities[5] are of the opinion that the clause And it [shall] feed in another man's field exempts [liability only for damage done to fruits which had been spread on] the defendant's domain.[6] On the defendant's domain! Is it not obvious that the defendant may plead: What right had your fruit to be on my ground?[7] — But the point at issue [between the authorities mentioned in the Baraitha] will therefore be in reference to the cases dealt With [above][8] by Ilfa[9] and by R. Oshaia.[10]

MISHNAH. IF A DOG OR A GOAT JUMPS DOWN FROM THE TOP OF A ROOF AND BREAKS UTENSILS [ON THE PLAINTIFF'S GROUND] THE COMPENSATION MUST BE IN FULL, FOR ANY OF THEM IS CONSIDERED MU'AD IN RESPECT OF THAT DAMAGE].[11] IF [HOWEVER] A DOG TAKES HOLD OF A CAKE [WITH LIVE COALS STICKING TO IT] AND GOES [WITH IT] TO A BARN, CONSUMES THE CAKE AND SETS THE BARN ON FIRE, [THE OWNER OF THE DOG] PAYS FULL COMPENSATION FOR THE CAKE,[12] WHEREAS FOR THE BARN [HE] PAYS [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES.

GEMARA. The reason of [the liability in the commencing clause] is that the dog or goat has jumped [from the roof][13] , but were it to have fallen down[14] [from the roof and thus broken utensils] there would be exemption. It can thus be inferred that the authority here accepted the view that the inception of [potential] negligence resulting in [mere] accident carries exemption.

It has been explicitly taught to the same effect: 'If a dog or goat jumps down from the top of a roof and breaks utensils [on the plaintiff's ground] the compensation must be in full; were it, however, to have fallen down[15] [and thus broken the utensils] there would be exemption.' This ruling seems to be in accord with the view that where there is negligence at the beginning[16] but the actual damage results from [mere] accident[17] there is exemption,[18] but how could the ruling be explained according to the view that upholds liability? — The ruling may refer to a case where the utensils had, for example, been placed very near to the wall so that were the animal to have jumped it would by jumping have missed them altogether; in which case there was not even negligence at the beginning.[19]

R. Zebid in the name of Raba, however, said: There are certain circumstances where there will be liability even in the case of [the animal] falling down. This might come to pass when the wall had not been in good condition.[20] Still what was the negligence there? It could hardly be that the owner should have borne in mind the possibility of bricks falling down[21] [and doing damage], for since after all it was not bricks that came down but the animal that fell down, why should it not be subject to the law applicable to a case where the damage which might have been done by negligence at the inception actually resulted from accident?[22] — No, it has application where the wall of the railing was exceedingly narrow.[23]

Our Rabbis taught: In the case of a dog or goat jumping [and doing damage], if it was in an upward direction[24] there is exemption;[25] but if in a downward direction there is liability.[26] In case, however, of man or poultry jumping [and doing damage], whether in a downward or upward direction, there is liability.[27]

---

(1) And since they were kept on private ground they could not be considered a nuisance. The animal consuming them there has indeed committed trespass.

(2) I.e., R. Meir and R. Judah; for the point at issue could hardly be the case of consumption on public ground where none would think of imposing full liability for the actual damage done, but it must be in regard to the sideways of the market.

(3) For in the case of turning the head it was none the more lawful to consume the fruits.

(4) Ex. XXII, 4.

(5) R. Jose and R. Eleazar.

(6) [But there would be no exemption according to R. Jose for consuming fruits even on the market.]

(7) There should thus be no need of explicit exemption.

(8) Supra p. 96.

(9) Dealing with an animal stretching out its head and consuming fruits kept on the back of the plaintiff's animal, in which case R. Meir and R. Judah impose the liability only to the extent of the benefit, whereas R. Jose and R. Eleazar order compensation for the actual damage sustained by the plaintiff.

(10) Imposing liability in the case of an animal jumping and consuming fruits kept in baskets: R. Meir and R. Judah thus limit the liability to the extent of the benefit derived, whereas R. Jose and R. Eleazar do not limit it thus.

(11) Coming thus within the purview of the law of Foot.

(12) Being subject to the law of Tooth.

(13) An act which is usual with either of them and thus subject to the law of Foot.

(14) By mere accident.

(15) By mere accident.

(16) For the owner should have taken precautions against its jumping.

(17) Since it fell down.

(18) Cf. infra 56a; 58a; B.M. 42a and 93b.

(19) But mere accident all through.

(20) The defendant is thus guilty of negligence.

(21) From the wall, which the defendant kept in a dilapidated state.

(22) Where opinions differ.

(23) Or very sloping. It was thus natural that the animal would be unable to remain there very long, but should slide down and do damage.

(24) An act unusual with any of them.

(25) From full compensation, whereas half damages will be paid in accordance with the law applicable to Horn.

(26) I.e., complete liability, as the act is usual with them and is thus subject to the law of Foot.

(27) As the act is quite usual with poultry, and as to man, he is always Mu'ad, v. supra p. 8.

But was it not [elsewhere] taught: 'In the case of a dog or goat jumping [and doing damage], whether in a downward or upward direction, there is exemption'?[1] — R. Papa thereupon interpreted the latter ruling[2] to refer to cases where the acts done by the animals were the reverse of their respective natural tendencies: e.g, the dog [jumped] by leaping and the goat by climbing. If so, why [complete] exemption?[3] — The exemption indeed is only from full compensation while there still remains liability for half damages.[3]

IF A DOG TAKES HOLD etc. It was stated: R. Johanan said: Fire [involves liability] on account of the human agency that brings it about.[4] Resh Lakish, however, maintained that Fire is chattel.[5] Why did Resh Lakish differ from R. Johanan? — His contention is: Human agency must emerge directly from human force whereas Fire does not emerge from human force.[6] Why, on the other hand, did not R. Johanan agree with Resh Lakish?[7] — He may say: Chattel contains tangible properties, whereas Fire[8] has no tangible properties.

We have learnt:[9] IF A DOG TAKES HOLD OF A CAKE [TO WHICH LIVE COALS WERE STUCK] AND GOES [WITH IT] TO A BARN, CONSUMES THE CAKE AND SETS THE BARN ALIGHT, [THE OWNER] PAYS FULL COMPENSATION FOR THE CAKE, WHEREAS FOR THE BARN [HE] PAYS [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES. This decision accords well with the view that the liability for Fire is on account of the human agency that caused it; in the case of the dog, there is thus some liability upon the owner of the dog as the fire there was caused by the action of the dog.[10] But according to the principle that Fire is chattel, [why indeed should the owner of the dog be liable?] Could the fire be said to be the chattel of the owner of the dog? — Resh Lakish may reply: The Mishnaic ruling deals with a case where the burning coal was thrown by the dog [upon the barn]: full compensation must of course be made for the cake,[11] but only half will be paid for the damage done to the actual spot upon which the coal had originally been thrown,[12] whereas for the barn as a whole there is exemption altogether.[13] R. Johanan, however, maintains that the ruling refers to a dog actually placing the coal upon the barn: For the cake[11] as well as for the damage done to the spot upon which the coal had originally been placed the compensation must be in full,[14] whereas for the barn as a whole only half damages will be paid.[15]

Come and hear: A camel laden with flax passes through a public thoroughfare. The flax enters a shop, catches fire by coming in contact with the shopkeeper's candle and sets alight the whole building. The owner of the camel is then liable. If, however, the shopkeeper left his candle outside [his shop], he is liable. R. Judah says: In the case of a Chanucah candle[16] the shopkeeper would always be quit.[17] Now this accords well with the view that Fire implies human agency: the agency of the camel could thus be traced in the setting alight of the whole building. But according to the view that Fire is chattel, [why should the owner of the camel be liable?] Was the fire in this case the chattel of the owner of the camel? — Resh Lakish may reply that the camel in this case [passed along the entire building and] set every bit of it on fire.[18] If so, read the concluding clause: If, however, the shopkeeper left his candle outside [his shop] he is liable. Now, if the camel set the whole of the building on fire, why indeed should the shopkeeper be liable? — The camel in this case stood still [all of a sudden].[19] But [it is immediately objected] if the camel stood still and yet managed to set fire to every bit of the building, is it not still more fitting that the shopkeeper should be free but the owner of the camel fully liable?[20] — R. Huna b. Manoah in the name of R. Ika [thereupon] said: The rulings apply to [a case where the camel] stood still to pass water;[21]

---

(1) Because the act is considered unusual with them.

(2) That exempts in acts towards all directions.

(3) For though the acts are unusual, they should be subject to the law of Horn imposing payment of half damages for unusual occurrences.

(4) Lit., 'his fire is due to his arrows'. Damage done by Fire equals thus damage done by Man himself.

(5) Lit., 'his property'.

(6) Since it travels and spreads of itself.
(7) That Fire is chattel.
(8) I e., the flame; cf. Bez. 39a.
(9) Supra p. 109.
(10) All the damage to the barn that resulted from the fire is thus considered as if done altogether by the dog that caused the live coals to start burning the barn.
(11) On account of the law applicable to Tooth.
(12) For the damage to this spot is solely imputed to the action of the dog throwing there the burning coal. The liability, however, is only for half damages on account of the law of Pebbles to which there is subject any damage resulting from objects thrown by cattle: cf. supra P. 79.
(13) Since the fire in this case could not be said to have been the obnoxious chattel of the owner of the dog [Nor could it be treated as Pebbles, since it spread of itself.]
(14) As the damage to this spot is directly attributed to the action of the dog.
(15) For any damage that results not from the direct act, but from a mere agency of chattels, is subject to the law of Pebbles ordering only half damages to be paid.
(16) Which has to be kept in the open thoroughfare; see infra p. 361.
(17) Ibid.
(18) The damage done to every bit of the building is thus directly attributed to the action of the camel.
(19) V. n. 4.
(20) For not having instantly driven away the camel from such a dangerous spot.
(21) And while it was impossible to drive it away quickly from that spot, the camel meanwhile managed to set every bit of the building on fire.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 22b

[so that] in the commencing clause the owner of the camel is liable, for he should not have overloaded [his camel],[1] but in the concluding clause the shopkeeper is liable for leaving his candle outside [his shop].

Come and hear: In the case of a barn being set on fire, where a goat was bound to it and a slave [being loose] was near by it, and all were burnt, there is liability [for barn and goat].[2] In the case, however, of the slave being chained to it and the goat[3] near by it and all being burnt, there is exemption [for barn and goat].[4] Now this is in accordance with the view maintaining the liability for Fire to be based upon human agency: there is therefore exemption here [since capital punishment is attached to that agency].[4] But, according to the view that Fire is chattel, why should there be exemption? Would there be exemption also in the case of cattle killing a slave?[5] — R. Simeon b. Lakish may reply to you that the exemption refers to a case where the fire was actually put upon the body of the slave[6] so that no other but the major punishment is inflicted.[7] If so, [is it not obvious?] Why state it at all? — No; it has application [in the case] where the goat belonged to one person and the slave to another.[8]

Come and hear: In the case of fire being entrusted to a deaf-mute, an idiot or a minor[9] [and damage resulting], no action can be instituted in civil courts, but there is liability[10] according to divine justice.[11] This again is perfectly consistent with the view maintaining that Fire implies human agency, and as the agency in this case is the action of the deaf mute [there is no liability]; but according to the [other] view that Fire is chattel, [why exemption?] Would there similarly be exemption in the case of any other chattel being entrusted to a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor?[12] — Behold, the following has already been stated in connection therewith:[13] Resh Lakish said in the name of Hezekiah that the ruling[11] applies only to a case where it was a [flickering] coal that had been handed over to [the deaf-mute] who fanned it into flame, whereas In the case of a [ready] flame having been handed over there is liability on the ground that the instrument of damage has been fully prepared. R. Johanan, on the other hand, stated that even in the case of a ready flame there is exemption, maintaining that it was only the handling by[14] the deaf-mute that caused [the damage]; there could therefore be no liability unless chopped wood, chips and actual fire were [carelessly] given him.

Raba said: [Both] Scripture and a Baraitha support [the View of] R. Johanan. 'Scripture': For it is written, If fire break out;[15] 'break out' implies 'of itself' and yet [Scripture continues], He that kindled the fire[16] shall surely make restitution.[17] It could thus be inferred that Fire implies human agency. 'A Baraitha': For it was taught. The verse,[17] though commencing with damage

---

(1) To the extent that the flax should penetrate the shop.

(2) But not for the slave, who should have quitted the spot before it was too late; cf. infra 27a.

(3) Whether chained or loose.

(4) Infra 43b and 61b. For all civil actions merge in capital charges and the defendant in this case is charged with murder (since the slave was chained and thus unable to escape death), and thus exempt from all money payment arising out of the charge; cf. infra 70b.

(5) V. Ex. XXI, 32, where the liability of thirty shekels is imposed upon the owner.

(6) The defendant has thus committed murder by his own hands.

(7) V. p.113. n. 8.

(8) Though the capital charge is not instituted by the owner of the goat, no damages could be enforced for the goat, since the defendant has in the same act also committed murder, and is liable to the graver penalty.

(9) Who does not bear responsibility before the law.

(10) Upon the person who entrusted the fire to the deaf-mute, etc. Mishnah, infra 59b.

(11) Cf. supra p. 38.

(12) Supra p. 36; infra 59b.

(13) Supra 9b.

(14) Lit., 'the tongs of'.

(15) Ex. XXII, 5.

(16) The damage that resulted is thus emphatically imputed to human agency.

(17) Ex. XXII 5.

done by property,[1] concludes with damage done by the person[2] [in order] to declare that Fire implies human agency.

Raba said: The following difficulty confronted Abaye:According to the view maintaining that Fire implies human agency, how [and when] was it possible for the Divine law to make exemption[3] for damage done by Fire to hidden things?[4] He solved it thus: Its application is in the case of a fire which would ordinarily not have spread beyond a certain point, but owing to the accident of a fence collapsing not on account of the fire, the conflagration continued setting alight and doing damage in other premises where the original human agency is at an end.[5] If so, even regarding unconcealed goods is not the human agency at an end?[6] — Hence the one maintaining that Fire implies human agency also holds that Fire is chattel,[7] so that liability for unconcealed goods would arise in the case where the falling fence could have been, but was not, repaired in time [to prevent the further spread of the fire], since it would equal chattel[8] left unguarded by the owner.[9] But if the one who holds that fire implies human agency also maintains that Fire is chattel,[7] what then is the practical point at issue?[10] — The point at issue is whether Fire[11] will involve the [additional] Four Items.[12]

[THE OWNER OF THE DOG] PAYS FULL COMPENSATION FOR THE CAKE WHEREAS FOR THE BARN [HE] PAYS [ONLY] HALF DAMAGES. Who is liable [for the barn]? — The owner of the dog. But why should not the owner of the coal also be made liable?[13] — His [burning] coal was [well] guarded by him.[14] If the [burning] coal was well guarded by him, how then did the dog come to it? — By breaking in. R. Mari the son of R. Kahana thereupon said: This ruling implies that the average door is not beyond being broken in by a dog.[15]

Now in whose premises was the cake devoured? It could hardly be suggested that it was devoured in the barn of another party,[16] for do we not require And shall feed in the field of another[17] [the plaintiff], which is not the case here? — No, it applies where it was devoured in the barn of the owner of the cake. You can thus conclude that [the plaintiff's food carried in] the mouth of [the defendant's] cattle

---

(1) I.e., by fire breaking out of itself.

(2) As implied in the clause, He that kindled the fire.

(3) Since in the case of Man doing damage such an exemption does not exist.

(4) V. supra pp. 18 and 39 and infra 61b.

(5) It is in this case (where the human agency is at an end) that there is exemption for hidden goods but liability for unconcealed articles.

(6) And there should therefore be exemption for damage done to all kinds of property.

(7) So that whenever the human agency is at an end, there would still be a possibility of liability being incurred.

(8) Lit., 'his ox'.

(9) Cf. infra 55b.

(10) I.e., what is the difference in law whether the liability for Fire is for the principles of human agency and chattel combined, or only on account of the principle of chattel? The difference could of course be only in the case where the human agency involved in Fire was not yet brought to an end. For otherwise the liability according to both views would only be possible on account of the principle of chattel, a principle which is according to the latest conclusion maintained by all.

(11) In cases where the human agency was not yet at an end.

(12) I.e., Pain, Healing, Loss of Time and Degradation, which in the case of Man, but not Ox, injuring men are paid in addition to Depreciation which is a liability common in all cases; v. supra p. 12. According to R. Johanan who considers Fire a human agency, the liability will be not only for Depreciation but also for the additional Four Items: whereas Resh Lakish maintains that only Depreciation will be paid, as in the case of damage done by Cattle.

(13) Since it was his coal that did the damage.

(14) He is therefore not to blame.

(15) For if otherwise the breaking in should be an act of unusual occurrence that should be subject to the law applicable to Horn, involving only the compensation of half damages for the consumption of the cake.

(16) I.e., a barn not belonging to the owner of the cake.

(17) Ex. XXII, 4.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 23b

is still considered [kept in] the plaintiff's premises.[1] For if it is considered to be in the defendant's premises why should not he say to the plaintiff: What is your bread doing in the mouth of my dog?[2] For there had been propounded a problem: Is [the plaintiff's food carried in] the mouth of [the defendant's] cattle considered as kept in the premises of the plaintiff, or as kept in the premises of the defendant? (Now if you maintain that it is considered to be in the defendant's premises, how can Tooth, for which the Divine Law imposes liability,[3] ever have practical application? — R. Mari the son of R. Kahana, however, replied: [It can have application] in the case where [the cattle] scratched against a wall for the sake of gratification [and pushed it down], or where it soiled fruits [by rolling upon them] for the purpose of gratification.[4] But Mar Zutra demurred: Do we not require, As a man taketh away dung till it all be gone,[5] which is not the case here?[6] — Rabina therefore said; [It has application] in the case where [the cattle] rubbed paintings[7] off [the wall]. R. Ashi similarly said: [It may have application] in the case where the cattle trampled on fruits [and spoilt them completely].[7])

Come and hear: If he incited a dog against him [i.e. his fellowman], or incited a serpent against him [to do damage], there is exemption.[8] For whom is there exemption? — There is exemption for the inciter, but liability upon the owner of the dog. Now if you contend that [whatever is kept in] the mouth of the defendant's cattle is considered [as kept in] the defendant's premises, why should he not say to the plaintiff: What is your hand doing in the mouth of my dog?[9] — Say, therefore, there is exemption also for the inciter;[10] or if you like, you may say: The damage was done by the dog baring its teeth and wounding the plaintiff.[11]

Come and hear: If a man caused another to be bitten by a serpent, R. Judah makes him liable whereas the Sages exempt him.[8] And R. Aha b. Jacob commented:[12] Should you assume that according to R. Judah the poison of a serpent is ready at its fangs, so that the defendant [having committed murder is executed by] the sword,[13] whereas the serpent [being a mere instrument] is left unpunished, then according to the view of the Sages, the poison is spitten out by the serpent of its own free will, so that the serpent [being guilty of slaughter] is stoned,[14] whereas the defendant, who caused it, is exempt.[15] Now if you maintain that [whatever is kept in] the mouth of the defendant's cattle is considered [to be in] the defendant's premises, why should not the owner of the serpent say to the plaintiff: 'What is your hand doing in the mouth of my serpent?' — Regarding [the] killing [of the serpent] we certainly do not argue thus. Whence can you derive [this]? — For it was taught: Where a man enters another's premises without permission and is gored there to death by the owner's ox, the ox is stoned,[14] but the owner is exempted [from paying] kofer[16] [for lost life].[17] Now 'the owner is exempted [from paying] kofer.' Why? Is it not because he can say, 'What were you doing on my premises?' Why then regarding the ox should not the same argument be put forward [against the victim]: 'What had you to do on my premises?' — Hence, when it is a question of killing [obnoxious beasts] we do not argue thus.

The goats of Be Tarbu[18] used to do damage to [the fields of] R.Joseph. He therefore said to Abaye: 'Go and tell their owners that they should keep them indoors.' But Abaye said: 'What will be the use in my going? Even if I do go, they will certainly say to me "Let the master construct a fence round his land."' But if fences must be constructed, what are the cases in which the Divine Law imposed liability for Tooth?[19] — [Perhaps only] when the cattle pulled down the fence and broke in, or when the fence collapsed at night. It was, however, announced by R. Joseph, or, as others say, by Rabbah: 'Let it be known to those that go up from Babylon to Eretz Yisrael as well as to those that come down from Eretz Yisrael to Babylon, that in the case of goats that are kept for the market day but meanwhile do damage, a warning is to be extended twice and thrice to their owners. If they comply with the terms of the warning well and good, but if not, we bid them: "Slaughter your cattle immediately[20] and sit at the butcher's stall to get whatever money you can."'

MISHNAH. WHAT IS TAM, AND WHAT IS MU'AD? — [CATTLE BECOME] MU'AD AFTER [THE OWNER HAS] BEEN WARNED FOR THREE DAYS [REGARDING THE ACTS OF GORING],[21] BUT [RETURN TO THE STATE OF] TAM AFTER REFRAINING FROM GORING FOR THREE DAYS; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. R. MEIR, HOWEVER, SAYS: [CATTLE BECOME] MU'AD AFTER [THE OWNER HAS] BEEN WARNED THREE TIMES [EVEN ON THE SAME DAY], AND [BECOME AGAIN] TAM WHEN CHILDREN KEEP ON TOUCHING THEM AND NO GORING RESULTS.

GEMARA. What is the reason of R. Judah?[22] — Abaye said: [Scripture states, Or, if it be known from yesterday, and the day before yesterday, that he is a goring ox, and yet his owner does not keep him in . . .[23]]: 'Yesterday', denotes one day; 'from yesterday' — two;[24] and 'the day before yesterday' — three [days]; 'and yet his owner does not keep him in' — refers to the fourth goring. Raba said: 'Yesterday' and 'from yesterday'[25] denote one day; 'the day before yesterday' — two, 'and he [the owner] does not keep him in,' then, [to prevent a third goring,] he is liable [in full].[26] What then is the reason of R. Meir?[27] — As it was taught: R. Meir said:

(1) And liability for the consumption of the food is not denied.
(2) [I.e., why should I be liable for the bread consumed in my (the defendant's) premises?]
(3) Ex. XXII, 4.
(4) Cf. supra p. 6.
(5) I Kings XIV, 10.
(6) On account of the fact that the corpus is in any of these cases not being destroyed; v. supra pp. 4-5.
(7) In which case there is total destruction of the corpus.
(8) Sanh. IX, 1; v. also infra 24b.
(9) For which the dog is not much to blame since it was incited to do it.
(10) I.e., both inciter and dog-owner will not be made liable.
(11) In which case his hand has never been kept in the mouth of the dog.
(12) Sanh. 78a.
(13) V. Sanh. IX. 1.
(14) In accordance with Ex. XXI, 28-29.
(15) Being a mere accessory.
(16) Lit., 'atonement', v. Glos.
(17) Contrary to the ruling of Ex. XXI, 30.
(18) A p.n. of a certain family.
(19) Ex. XXII. 4.
(20) Without waiting for the market day.
(21) Committed by his cattle.
(22) Making the law of Mu'ad depend upon the days of goring.
(23) Ex. XXI, 36.
(24) The Hebrew term מתמול denoting 'From yesterday' is thus taken to indicate two days.
(25) Expressed in the one Hebrew word מתמול.
(26) According to Rashi a.l. even for the third goring. But Tosaf. a.l. and Rashi B.B. 28a explain it to refer only to the goring of the fourth time and onwards.
(27) That the number of days is immaterial.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 24a

If for goring at long intervals [during three days], there is [full] liability, how much more so for goring at short intervals.[1] They,[2] however, said to him: 'A zabah[3] disproves your argument, as by noticing her discharges at long intervals [three cases of discharge in three days], she becomes [fully] unclean,[4] whereas by noticing her discharges at short intervals [i.e. on the same day] she does not become [fully unclean].'[5] But he answered them: Behold, Scripture says: And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue.[6] Zab[7] has thus been made dependent upon [the number of] cases of 'noticing', and zabah upon that of 'days'. But whence is it certain that 'And this'[6] is to exempt zabah from being affected by cases of 'noticing'?[8] Say perhaps that it meant only to exempt zab from being affected by the number of 'days'?[9] — The verse says, And of him that hath on issue, of the man, and of the woman.[10] Male is thus made analogous to female: just as female is affected by [the number of] 'days' so is man affected by 'days'.[11] But why not make female analogous to male [and say]: just as male is affected by cases of 'noticing',[8] so also let female be affected by cases of 'noticing'?[8] — But Divine Law has [emphatically] excluded that by stating, 'And this'.[12] On what ground, however, do you say [that the Scriptural phrase excludes the one and not the other]? — It only stands to reason that when cases of 'noticing' are dealt with,[13] cases of 'noticing' are excluded;[14] [for is it reasonable to maintain that] when cases of 'noticing' are dealt with,[13] 'days' should be excluded?[15]

Our Rabbis taught: What is Mu'ad? After the owner has been warned for three days;[16] but [it may return to the state of] Tam, if children keep on touching it and no goring results; this is the dictum of R. Jose. R. Simeon says: Cattle become Mu'ad, after the owner has been warned three times,[17] and the statement regarding three days refers only to the return to the state of Tam.

R. Nahman quoting Adda b. Ahabah said: 'The Halachah is in accordance with R. Judah regarding Mu'ad, for R. Jose agrees with him.[18] But the Halachah is in accordance with R. Meir regarding Tam,[19] since R. Jose agrees with him [on this point].' Raba, however, said to R. Nahman: 'Why, Sir, not say that the Halachah is in accordance with R. Meir regarding Mu'ad for R. Simeon agrees with him, and the Halachah is in accordance with R. Judah regarding Tam, since R. Simeon agrees with him [on this point]?' He answered him: 'I side with R. Jose, because the reasons of R. Jose are generally sound.'[20]

There arose the following question: Do the three days [under discussion] apply to [the goring of] the cattle [so that cases of goring on the same day do not count as more than one], or to the owner [who has to be warned on three different days]?[21] The practical difference becomes evident when three sets of witnesses appear on the same day [and testify to three cases of goring that occurred previously on three different days]. If the three days apply to [the goring of] the cattle there would in this case be a declaration of Mu'ad;[22] but, if the three days refer to the warning given the owner, there would in this case be no declaration of Mu'ad, as the owner may say: 'They have only just now testified against me [while the law requires this to be done on three different days].'

Come and hear: Cattle cannot be declared Mu'ad until warning is given the owner when he is in the presence of the Court of Justice. If warning is given in the presence of the Court while the owner is absent, or, on the other hand, in the presence of the owner, but outside the Court, no declaration of Mu'ad will be issued unless the warning be given before the Court and before the owner. In the case of two witnesses giving evidence of the first time [of goring], and another two of the second time, and again two of the third time [of goring], three independent testimonies have been established. They are, however, taken as one testimony regarding haza mah.[23] Were the first set found zomemim,[24] the remaining two sets would be unaffected; the defendant would, however, escape [full] liability[25] and the zomemim would still not have to pay him [for conspiring to make his cattle Mu'ad].[26] Were also the second set found zomemim, the remaining testimony would be unaffected; the defendant would escape [full] liability[25] and the zomemim would still not have to compensate him [for conspiring to make his cattle Mu'ad].[26] Were the third set also found zomemim, they would all have to share the liability [for conspiring to make the cattle Mu'ad];[27] for it is with reference to such a case that it is stated, Then shall ye do unto him as he had thought to have done unto his brother.[28] Now if it is suggested that the three days refer to [the goring of] the cattle [whereas the owner may be warned in one day], the ruling is perfectly right [as the three pairs may have given evidence in one day].[29]

---

(1) I.e., by goring three times in one and the same day.

(2) The other Rabbis headed by R. Judah his opponent.

(3) I.e., a woman who within the eleven days between one menstruation period and another had discharges on three consecutive days; cf. Lev.XV, 25-33.

(4) For seven days.

(5) I.e., for more than one day.

(6) Lev. XV, 3. This text checks the application of the a fortiori in this case as the explanation goes on.

(7) I.e., a male person afflicted with discharges of issue on three different occasions; cf. Lev. XV, 1-15.

(8) On one and the same day.

(9) So that he is affected only by that of the cases of 'noticing'.

(10) Lev. XV, 33.

(11) So that if one discharge lasted with him two or three days, it will render him zab proper.

(12) Lev. XV, 3.

(13) In Lev. ibid.

(14) Regarding zabah.

(15) In the case of zab.

(16) Regarding three acts of goring by their cattle.
(17) For three acts of goring.
(18) Thus constituting a majority against R. Meir on this point.
(19) I.e., the return to the state of Tam.
(20) Lit., 'his depth is with him.' v. Git. 67a.
(21) Regarding three acts of goring committed by his cattle even on one day.
(22) Though the evidence was given in one day.
(23) I.e., proved alibi of a set of witnesses, v. Mak. (Sonc. ed.) p. 1, n. 1.
(24) I.e., proved to have been absent at the material time of the alleged goring; v. Glos.
(25) As his cattle 'would have to be dealt with as Tam.
(26) In accordance with law of retaliation. Deut. XIX, 19. Since regarding the declaration of Mu'ad all the three pairs of witnesses constitute one set, and the law of hazamah applies only when the whole set has been convicted of an alibi.
(27) I.e., the half damages added on account of the declaration of Mu'ad, whereas the original half damages on account of Tam will be imposed only upon the last pair of witnesses.
(28) Deut. XIX. 19.
(29) And since they waited until the last day when they were summoned by the plaintiff of that day, it is plain that their object in giving evidence was to render the ox Mu'ad.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 24b

But if it be suggested that the three days refer to the warning given the owner,[1] why should not the first set say: 'Could we have known that after three days there would appear other sets to render the cattle Mu'ad?'[2] — R. Ashi thereupon said: I repeated this argument to R. Kahana, and he said to me: 'And even if the three days refer to [the goring of] the cattle,[3] is the explanation satisfactory? Why should not the last set say: "How could we have known that all those present at the Court[4] had come to give evidence against the [same] ox? Our aim in coming was only to make the defendant liable for half damages."?'[5] — [But we may be dealing with a case where] all the sets were hinting to one another[6] [thus definitely conspiring to act concurrently]. R. Ashi further said that we may deal with a case where all the sets appeared [in Court] simultaneously.[7] Rabina even said: 'Where the witnesses know only the owner but could not identify the ox.'[8] How then can they render it Mu'ad?[9] — By saying: 'As you have in your herd an ox prone to goring, it should be your duty to control the whole of the herd.'

There arose the following question: In the case of a neighbour's dog having been set on a third person, what is the law? The inciter could undoubtedly not be made liable,[10] but what about the owner of the dog? Are we to say that the owner is entitled to plead: 'What offence have I committed here?' Or may we retort: 'Since you were aware that your dog could easily be incited and do damage you ought not to have left it [unguarded]'?

R. Zera [thereto] said: Come and hear: [CATTLE BECOME AGAIN] TAM, WHEN CHILDREN KEEP ON TOUCHING THEM AND NO GORING RESULTS, implying that were goring to result therefrom there would be liability [though it were caused by incitement]! — Abaye however said: Is it stated: If goring results therefrom there is liability? What perhaps is meant is: If goring does result therefrom there will be no return to the state of Tam, though regarding that [particular] goring no liability will be incurred.

Come and hear: If he incited a dog or incited a serpent against him, there is exemption.[11] Does this not mean that the inciter is free, but the owner of the dog is liable? — No, read: '. . . the inciter too is free.'[12]

Raba said: Assuming that in the case of inciting a neighbour's dog against a third person, the owner of the dog is liable, if the incited dog turns upon the inciter, the owner is free on the ground that where the plaintiff himself has acted wrongly, the defendant who follows suit and equally acts wrongly [against the former] could not be made liable [to him]. R. Papa thereupon said to Raba: A statement was made in the name of Resh Lakish agreeing with yours; for Resh Lakish said:[13] 'In the case of two cows on public ground, one lying and the other walking, if the walking cow kicks the other, there is no liability [as the plaintiff's cow had no right to be lying on the public ground], but if the lying cow kicks the other cow there will be liability.' Raba, however, said to him: In the case of the two cows I would always order payment[14] as [on behalf of the plaintiff] we may argue against the defendant: 'Your cow may be entitled to tread upon my cow, she has however no right to kick her.'

MISHNAH WHAT IS MEANT BY 'OX DOING DAMAGE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES'?[15] IN CASE OF GORING, PUSHING, BITING, LYING DOWN OR KICKING, IF ON PUBLIC GROUND THE PAYMENT[16] IS HALF, BUT IF ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES R. TARFON ORDERS PAYMENT IN FULL[17] WHEREAS THE SAGES ORDER ONLY HALF DAMAGES.

R.TARFON THERE UPON SAID TO THEM: SEEING THAT, WHILE THE LAW WAS LENIENT TO TOOTH AND FOOT IN THE CASE OF PUBLIC GROUND ALLOWING TOTAL EXEMPTION[18] , IT WAS NEVERTHELESS STRICT WITH THEM REGARDING [DAMAGE DONE ON] THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES WHERE IT IMPOSED PAYMENT IN FULL, IN THE CASE OF HORN, WHERE THE LAW WAS STRICT REGARDING [DAMAGE DONE ON] PUBLIC GROUND IMPOSING AT LEAST THE PAYMENT OF HALF DAMAGES, DOES IT NOT STAND TO REASON THAT WE SHOULD MAKE IT EQUALLY STRICT WITH REFERENCE TO THE PLAINTIFFS PREMISES SO AS TO REQUIRE COMPENSATION IN FULL? THEIR ANSWER WAS: IT IS QUITE SUFFICIENT THAT THE LAW IN RESPECT OF THE THING INFERRED[19] SHOULD BE EQUIVALENT TO THAT FROM WHICH IT IS DERIVED:[20] JUST AS FOR DAMAGE DONE ON PUBLIC GROUND THE COMPENSATION [IN THE CASE OF HORN] IS HALF, SO ALSO FOR DAMAGE DONE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES THE COMPENSATION SHOULD NOT BE MORE THAN HALF. R. TARFON, HOWEVER, REJOINED: BUT NEITHER DO I

---

(1) In which case the three sets dealt with could not have given their evidence in one and the same day, but each set on the day the respective goring took place.

(2) Why then should the first set ever be made responsible for the subsequent rendering of the cattle Mu'ad.

(3) In which case the three pairs may have given their evidence in one day.

(4) I.e., the witnesses that constituted the former sets.

(5) The former sets, however, cannot plead thus since they waited with their evidence until the last day, when they appeared to the summons of the plaintiff of that day, in which case it is more than evident that all that concerned that plaintiff regarding the evidence of the earlier times of goring was solely to render the ox Mu'ad.

(6) And all gave evidence in one and the same day. Rashi a.l. maintains that this would still prove that the three days refer to the goring of the cattle and not to warning the owner. According to an interpretation suggested by Tosaf., however, the first and second sets who also appeared on the third day together with the third set, had already given their evidence on the first and second day respectively. The requirement of the three days could thus accordingly refer to warning the owner.

(7) Cf. n. 2.

(8) In which case the sole intention of all the sets of witnesses was the declaration of Mu'ad. They could not have intended to make the defendant liable for half damages since half damages in the case of Tam is paid only out of the body of the goring ox which the witnesses in this case were unable to identify. This explanation holds good only regarding the intention of the last set of witnesses, whereas the former sets, if for the declaration of Mu'ad they would necessarily have to record their evidence before the third time of goring, could then not have foreseen that the same ox (whose identity was not established by them) would continue goring for three and four times. Rashi thus proves that the three days refer not to warning the owner but to the times of goring committed by the cattle.

(9) Since the identity of the goring ox could not be established.
(10) For he, not having actually done the damage, is but an accessory.
(11) Cf. supra p. 117.
(12) Meaning thus that both inciter and owner are free.
(13) Supra p. 98.
(14) Even in the case of the walking cow kicking the lying cow.
(15) Referred to supra p. 68.
(16) While in the state of Tam; cf. supra p. 73.
(17) V. supra p. 68.
(18) Supra p. 17.
(19) I.e., Horn doing damage on the plaintiff's premises.
(20) I.e., Horn doing damage on public ground.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 25a

INFER HORN [DOING DAMAGE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES] FROM HORN [DOING DAMAGE ON PUBLIC GROUND]; I INFER HORN FROM FOOT: SEEING THAT IN THE CASE OF PUBLIC GROUND THE LAW, THOUGH LENIENT WITH REFERENCE TO TOOTH AND FOOT, IS NEVERTHELESS STRICT REGARDING HORN, IN THE CASE OF THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES, WHERE THE LAW IS STRICT WITH REFERENCE TO TOOTH AND FOOT, DOES IT NOT STAND TO REASON THAT WE SHOULD APPLY THE SAME STRICTNESS TO HORN? THEY, HOWEVER, STILL ARGUED: IT IS QUITE SUFFICIENT IF THE LAW IN RESPECT OF THE THING INFERRED IS[1] EQUIVALENT TO THAT FROM WHICH IT IS DERIVED.[2] JUST AS FOR DAMAGE DONE ON PUBLIC GROUND THE COMPENSATION [IN THE CASE OF HORN] IS HALF, SO ALSO FOR DAMAGE DONE ON THE PLAINTIFF'S PREMISES, THE COMPENSATION SHOULD NOT BE MORE THAN HALF.

GEMARA. Does R. Tarfon really ignore the principle of Dayyo?[3] Is not Dayyo of Biblical origin as taught:[4] How does the rule of Kal wa-homer[5] work? And the Lord said unto Moses, If her father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days?[6] How much the more so then in the case of divine [reproof] should she be ashamed fourteen days? Yet the number of days remains seven, for it is sufficient if the law in respect of the thing inferred[7] be equivalent to that from which it is derived![8] — The principle of Dayyo is ignored by him [R. Tarfon] only when it would defeat the purpose of the a fortiori,[9] but where it does not defeat the purpose of the a fortiori, even he maintains the principle of Dayyo. In the instance quoted there is no mention made at all of seven days in the case of divine reproof; nevertheless, by the working of the a fortiori, fourteen days may be suggested: there follows, however, the principle of Dayyo so that the additional seven days are excluded, whilst the original seven are retained. Whereas in the case before us[10] the payment of not less than half damages has been explicitly ordained [in all kinds of premises]. When therefore an a fortiori is employed, another half-payment is added [for damage on the plaintiff's premises], making thus the compensation complete. If [however] you apply the principle of Dayyo, the sole purpose of the a fortiori would thereby be defeated.[11] And the Rabbis?[12] — They argue that also in the case of divine [reproof] the minimum of seven days has been decreed in the words: Let her be shut out from the camp seven days.[13] And R. Tarfon?[14] — He maintains that the ruling in the words, 'Let her be shut out etc.', is but the result of the application of the principle of Dayyo[15] [decreasing the number of days to seven]. And the Rabbis? — They argue that this is expressed in the further verse: And Miriam was shut out from the camp.[16] And R. Tarfon? — He maintains that the additional statement was intended to introduce the principle of Dayyo for general application so that you should not suggest limiting its working only to that case where the dignity of Moses was involved, excluding thus its acceptance for general application: it has therefore been made known to us [by the additional statement] that this is not the case.

R. Papa said to Abaye: Behold, there is a Tanna who does not employ the principle of Dayyo even when the a fortiori would thereby not be defeated, for it was taught: Whence do we know that the discharge of semen virile in the case of zab[17] causes defilement [either by 'touching' or by 'carrying']?[18] It is a logical conclusion: For if a discharge[19] that is clean in the case of a clean person is defiling in the case of zab,[20] is it not cogent reasoning that a discharge[21] which is defiling in the case of a clean person,[22] should defile in the case of zab? Now this reasoning applies to both 'touching' and 'carrying',[23] But why not argue that the a fortiori serves a useful purpose in the case of 'touching', whilst the principle of Dayyo can be employed to exclude defilement by mere 'carrying'?[24] If, however, you maintain that regarding 'touching' there is no need to apply the a fortiori on the ground that [apart from all inferences] zab could surely not be less defiling than an ordinary clean person,[25] my contention is [that the case may not be so, and] that the a fortiori may [still] be essential. For I could argue: By reason of uncleanness that chanceth him by night[26] is stated in Scripture to imply that the law of defilement applies only to those whose uncleanness has been occasioned solely by reason of their discharging semen virile, excluding thus zab, whose uncleanness has been occasioned not [solely] by his discharging semen virile but by another cause altogether.[27] May not the a fortiori thus have to serve the purpose of letting us know that zab is not excluded?[28] — But where in the verse is it stated that the uncleanness must not have [concurrently] resulted also from any other cause?[29]

Who is the Tanna whom you may have heard maintain that semen virile of zab causes [of itself] defilement by mere 'carrying'? He could surely be neither R. Eliezer, nor R. Joshua, for it was taught:[30] The semen virile of zab causes defilement by 'touching', but causes no defilement by mere 'carrying'. This is the view of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua, however, maintains that it also causes defilement by mere 'carrying', for it must necessarily contain particles of gonorrhoea.[31] Now, the sole reason there of R. Joshua's view is that semen virile cannot possibly be altogether free from particles of gonorrhoea, but taken on its own it would not cause defilement. The Tanna who maintains this[32] must therefore be he who is responsible for what we have learnt: More severe than the former [causes of defilement][33]

---

(1) V. p. 125, n. 5.

(2) V. ibid. n. 6. [As in whatever way the argument is put the result is the same — namely, inferring Horn on the plaintiff's premises from Horn on public ground.]

(3) The Hebrew term meaning 'it is sufficient for it', and denoting the qualification applied by the Rabbis to check the full force of the a fortiori; v. Glos.

(4) B.B. II 1a; Zeb. 69b.

(5) The technical term for the logical inference, 'From minor to major,' v. Glos.

(6) Num. XII, 14.

(7) I.e., in the case of Divinity.

(8) I.e., the case of her father. [Hence, even in the case of Divinity, no more than seven days are inferred proving that Dayyo has a Biblical basis.]

(9) I.e., render it completely ineffective.

(10) Regarding compensation whether it be half or full in the case of Horn doing damage.

(11) V. p. 126, n. 9.

(12) I.e., the Sages in the Mishnah: how do they meet R. Tarfon's objection?

(13) Num. XII, 14.

(14) How can he state that no mention is made of seven days in connection with divine reproof?

(15) But not a decree per se.

(16) Num. XII, 15.

(17) A person afflicted with gonorrhoea: cf. Lev. XV, 1-15.

(18) As is the case with gonorrhoeal discharge.

(19) Such as saliva.

(20) Cf. Lev. XV, 8, and Niddah, 55b.
(21) Such as semen virile.
(22) Cf. Lev. XV, 16-17, and supra p. 2.
(23) As it is based on the law applicable to the saliva of zab.
(24) As is the case with the law applicable to semen virile of a clean person.
(25) Whose semen virile causes defilement by touching.
(26) Deut. XXIII, 11.
(27) I.e., by the affliction of gonorrhoea. [I may therefore have assumed that the semen virile of a zab causes no defilement, not even by 'touching'.]
(28) And since the a fortiori would still serve a useful purpose regarding defilement by 'touching', why should not the principle of Dayyo be employed to exclude defilement by mere 'carrying'? Hence this Tanna does not resort to Dayya even where the employment thereof would not render the a fortiori ineffective.
(29) The law applicable to semen virile to cause defilement by 'touching' is thus per se common with all kinds of persons. The inference by means of the a fortiori would therefore indeed be rendered useless if Dayyo, excluding as a result defilement by 'carrying', were admitted.
(30) Naz. 66a.
(31) Which defile both by 'touching' and by 'carrying'.
(32) That semen virile of zab defiles by mere 'carrying' even on its own.
(33) I.e., the three primary Defilements: Dead Reptile, Semen Virile and the Person contaminated by contact with a corpse, all of which do not defile by mere carrying'. v. supra p. 2.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 25b

are the gonorrhoeal discharge of zab, his saliva, his semen virile, his urine and the blood of menstruation, all of which defile whether by 'touching' or by mere 'carrying'.[1] But why not maintain that the reason here is also because the semen virile of zab cannot possibly be altogether free from particles of gonorrhoea? — If this had been the reason, semen virile should have been placed in juxtaposition to gonorrhoeal discharge. Why then was it placed in juxtaposition to saliva if not on account of the fact that its causing defilement is to be inferred from the law applicable to his saliva?[2]

R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina: Behold there is this Tanna who does not employ the principle of Dayyo even when the purpose of the a fortiori would thereby not be defeated. For it was taught: Whence do we learn that mats[3] become defiled if kept within the tent where there is a corpse? — It is a logical conclusion: For if tiny [earthenware] jugs that remain undefiled by the handling of zab[4] become defiled when kept within the tent where there is a corpse,[5] does it not follow that mats, which even in the case of zab become defiled,[6] should become defiled when kept within the tent where there is a corpse.[7] Now this reasoning applies not only to the law of defilement for a single day,[8] but also to defilement for full seven[9] [days]. But why not argue that the a fortiori well serves its purpose regarding the defilement for a single day,[10] whilst the principle of Dayyo is to be employed to exclude defilement for seven days? — He [Rabina] answered him: The same problem had already been raised by R. Nahman b. Zachariah to Abaye, and Abaye answered him that it was regarding mats in the case of a dead reptile[11] that the Tanna had employed the a fortiori, and the text should run as follows: 'Whence do we learn that mats[12] coming in contact with dead reptiles[13] become defiled? It is a logical conclusion: for if tiny [earthenware] jugs that remain undefiled by the handling of zab,[14] become defiled when in contact with dead reptiles,[15] does it not follow that mats which even in the case of zab become defiled,[16] should become defiled by coming in contact with dead reptiles?' But whence the ruling regarding mats[17] kept within the tent of a corpse? — In the case of dead reptiles it is stated raiment or skin,[15] while in the case of a corpse it is also stated, raiment . . . skin:[18] just as in the case of raiment or skin stated in connection with dead reptiles,[15] mats [are included to] become defiled, so is it regarding raiment . . . skin stated in connection with a corpse[18] that mats similarly become defiled. This Gezerah shawah[19] must necessarily be 'free',[20] for if it were not 'free' the comparison made could be thus upset: seeing that in the case of dead reptiles [causing defilement to mats], their minimum for causing uncleanness is the size of a lentil,[21] how can you draw an analogy to corpses where the minimum to cause uncleanness is not the size of a lentil but that of an olive?[22] — The Gezerah shawah must thus be 'free'. Is it not so? For indeed the law regarding dead reptiles is placed in juxtaposition to semen virile as written, Or a man whose seed goeth from him,[23] and there immediately follows, Or whosoever toucheth any creeping thing. Now in the case of semen virile it is explicitly stated, And every garment, and every skin, whereon is the seed of copulation.[24] Why then had the Divine Law to mention again raiment or skin in the case of dead reptiles?[25] It may thus be concluded that it was [inserted] to be 'free' [for exegetical purposes].[26] Still it has so far only been proved that one part [of the Gezerah shawah][27] is 'free'. This would therefore be well in accordance with the view maintaining[28] that when a Gezerah shawah is 'free', even in one of its texts only, an inference may be drawn and no refutation will be entertained. But according to the view holding[29] that though an inference may be drawn in such a case, refutations will nevertheless be entertained, how could the analogy [between dead reptiles and corpses] be maintained?[30] — The verbal congruity in the text dealing with corpses is also 'free'. For indeed the law regarding corpses is similarly placed in juxtaposition to semen virile, as written, And whoso toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead or a man whose seed goeth from him etc.[23] Now in the case of semen virile it is explicitly stated, And every garment, and every skin, whereon is the seed of copulation. Why then had the Divine Law to mention again raiment . . . skin in the case of corpses?[31] It may thus be concluded that it was [inserted] to be 'free' for exegetical purposes.[26] The Gezerah shawah is thus 'free' in both texts. Still this would again be only in accordance with the view maintaining[32] that when an inference is made by means of reasoning [from an analogy] the subject of the inference is placed back on its own basis.[33] But according to the view that when an inference is made [by means of an analogy] the subject of the inference must be placed on a par with the other in all respects, how can you establish the law [that mats kept in the tent of a corpse become defiled for seven days,[34] since you infer it from dead reptiles where the defilement is only for the day]?[35] — Said Raba: Scripture states, And ye shall wash your clothes on the seventh day,[36] to indicate that all defilements in the case of corpses cannot be for less than for seven [days].

But should we not let Tooth and Foot involve liability for damage done [even] on public ground because of the following a fortiori: If in the case of Horn[37] where [even] for damage done on the plaintiff's premises only half payment is involved, there is yet liability to pay for damage done on public ground, does it not necessarily follow that in the case of Tooth and Foot where for damage done on the plaintiff's premises the payment is in full, there should be liability for damage done on public ground? — Scripture, however, says, And it shall feed in another man's field,[38] excluding thus [damage done on] public ground.

---

(1) Kelim I, 3.

(2) It is thus proved that semen virile of zab causes of itself defilement by 'carrying' and not on account of the particles of gonorrhoea it contains.

(3) Which are not included among the articles referred to in Num. XXXI, 20.

(4) [As he is unable to insert even his small finger within. Earthenware is susceptible to levitical uncleanness only through the medium of its interior. Lev. XI, 33.]

(5) As stated in Num. XIX, 15; and every open vessel . . . is unclean.

(6) In accordance with Lev. XV, 4.

(7) Shab. 84a.

(8) Lit., 'defilement (until) sunset,' which applies to defilements caused by zab; v. Lev. XV, 5-11.

(9) Usual in defilements through a corpse; cf. Num. XIX, 11-16.

(10) [As is the case with the bed of a zab (cf. Lev. XV, 4), since it is derived from zab.]

(11) But not at all regarding corpses; the whole problem thus concerns only defilement for a day; v. infra.

(12) As mats are not included among the articles referred to in Lev. XI, 32.

(13) The minimum quantity for defilement by which is the size of a lentil, a quantity which can easily pass through the opening of the smallest bottle.

(14) As he is unable to insert even his small finger within. Earthenware is susceptible to levitical uncleanness only through the medium of its interior. Lev. XI, 33.
(15) Lev. XI, 32: . . . whether it be any vessel of wood or raiment or skin . . . it shall be unclean until the even.
(16) In accordance with Lev. XV, 4.
(17) Which are not included among the articles referred to in Num. XXXI, 20.
(18) Num. XXXI, 20: And as to every raiment and all that is made of skin . . . ye shall purify.
(19) The technical term for (an inference from) a verbal congruity in two different portions of the Law; v. Glos.
(20) Heb. מופנה (Mufnah), 'free', that is, for exegetical use, having no other purpose to serve, but solely intended to indicate this particular similarity in law.
(21) Hag. 11a; Naz. 52a.
(22) Naz. 49b.
(23) Lev. XXII, 4.
(24) Ibid. XV, 17.
(25) Lev. XI, 32.
(26) Thus to make the Gezerah shawah irrefutable.
(27) I.e., in the case of dead reptiles.
(28) Nid. 22b.
(29) Shab. 131a; Yeb. 70b.
(30) Since the refutation referred to above may be entertained.
(31) Num. XXXI, 20.
(32) Yeb. 78b.
(33) Becoming subject to the specific laws applicable to its own category. [So here mats in the tent of a corpse, though derived by analogy from reptiles, are subject to the laws of defilement by corpses. i.e., a defilement of 7 days.]
(34) Usual in defilements through a corpse; cf. Num. XIX, 11-16.
(35) Lev. XI, 32.
(36) Num. XXXI, 24.
(37) While in the state of Tam; cf. supra p. 73.
(38) Ex. XXII, 4.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 26a

But have we ever suggested payment in full? It was only half payment that we were arguing for![1] — Scripture further says, And they shall divide the money of it[2] [to indicate that this[3] is confined to] 'the money of it' [i.e.. the goring ox] but does not extend to compensation [for damage caused] by another ox.[4]

But should we not let Tooth and Foot doing damage on the plaintiff's premises involve the liability for half damages only because of the following a fortiori: If in the case of Horn, where there is liability for damage done even on public ground, there is yet no more than half payment for damage done on the plaintiff's premises,[5] does it not follow that, in the case of Tooth and Foot where there is exemption for damage done on public ground,[6] the liability regarding damage done on the plaintiff's premises should be for half compensation only? — Scripture says, He shall make restitution,[7] meaning full[8] compensation.

But should we not [on the other hand] let Horn doing damage on public ground involve no liability at all, because of the following a fortiori: If in the case of Tooth and Foot where the payment for damage done on the plaintiff's premises is in full there is exemption for damage done on public ground.[6] does it not follow that, in the case of Horn where the payment for damage done on the plaintiff's premises, is only half, there should be exemption for damage done on public ground? — Said R. Johanan: Scripture says. [And the dead also] they shall divide,[9] to emphasise that in respect of half payment there is no distinction between public ground and private premises.[10]

But should we not let [also] in the case of Man ransom be paid [for manslaughter][11] because of the following a fortiori: If in the case of Ox where there is no liability to pay the [additional] Four Items,[12] there is yet the liability to pay ransom [for manslaughter,[13] does it not follow that in the case of Man who is liable for the [additional] Four Items,[12] there should be ransom [for manslaughter]? — But Scripture states, Whatsoever is laid upon him: upon him[13] excludes [the payment of ransom] in the case of Man [committing manslaughter].

But should we not [on the other hand] let Ox involve the liability of the [additional] Four Items because of the following a fortiori: If Man who by killing man incurs no liability to pay ransom[14] has, when injuring man, to pay [additional] Four Items,[15] does it not follow that, in the case of Ox where there is a liability to pay ransom [for killing man],[16] there should similarly be a liability to pay the [additional] Four Items when injuring [man]? — Scripture states, If a man cause a blemish in his neighbour,[17] thus excluding Ox injuring the [owner's] neighbour.

It has been asked: In the case of Foot treading upon a child [and killing it] in the plaintiff's premises, what should be the law regarding ransom? Shall we say that this comes under the law applicable to Horn, on the ground that just as with Horn in the case of manslaughter being repeated twice and thrice it becomes habitual with the animal,[18] involving thus the payment of ransom,[19] so also seems to be the case here[20] with hardly any distinction; or shall it perhaps be argued that in the case of Horn there was on the part of the animal a determination to injure, whereas in this case the act was not prompted by a determination to injure? — Come and hear: In the case of an ox having been allowed [by its owner] to trespass upon somebody else's ground and there goring to death the owner of the premises, the ox will be stoned, while its owner must pay full ransom whether [the ox was] Tam or Mu'ad. This is the view of R. Tarfon. Now, whence could R. Tarfon infer the payment of full ransom in the case of Tam, unless he shared the view of R. Jose the Galilean maintaining[21] that Tam involves the payment of half ransom for manslaughter committed on public ground, in which case he[22] could rightly have inferred ransom in full [for manslaughter on the plaintiff's premises] by means of the a fortiori from the law applicable to Foot?[23] This thus proves that ransom has to be paid for [manslaughter committed by] Foot. R. Shimi of Nehardea, however, said that the Tanna[24] might have inferred it from the law applicable to [mere] damage done by Foot.[25] But [if so] cannot the inference be refuted? For indeed what analogy could be drawn to damage done by Foot, the liability for which is common also with Fire [whereas ransom does not apply to Fire]?[26] — [The inference might have been] from damage done to hidden goods [in which case the liability is not common with Fire].[27] Still what analogy is there to hidden goods, the liability for which is common with Pit [whereas ransom for manslaughter does not apply to Pit]?[28] — The inference might have been from damage done to inanimate objects[29] [for which there is no liability in the case of Pit].[30] Still what analogy is there to inanimate objects, the liability for which is again common with Fire? — The inference might therefore have been from damage done to inanimate objects that were hidden [for which neither Fire nor Pit involve liability]. But still what comparison is there to hidden inanimate objects, the liability for which is common at least with Man [whereas ransom is not common with Man]?[31] — Does this therefore not prove that he[32] must have made the inference from ransom [for manslaughter] in the case of Foot,[33] proving thus that ransom has to be paid for manslaughter committed by Foot? — This certainly is proved.

R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina: It even stands to reason that ransom has to be paid in the case of Foot. For if you say that in the case of Foot there is no ransom, and that the Tanna[34] might have made the inference from the law applicable to mere damage done by Foot,[35] his reasoning could easily be refuted. For what analogy could be drawn to damage done by Foot for which there is liability in the case of Foot [whereas this is not the case with ransom]? Does this [by itself] not show that the inference could only have been made from ransom in the case of Foot,[36] proving thus that ransom has to be paid for [manslaughter conmitted by] Foot? — It certainly does show this.

MISHNAH. MAN IS ALWAYS MU'AD WHETHER [HE ACTS] INADVERTENTLY OR WILFULLY, WHETHER AWAKE OR ASLEFP.[37] IF HE BLINDED HIS NEIGHBOUR'S EYE OR BROKE HIS ARTICLES, FULL COMPENSATION MUST [THEREFORE] BE MADE.

GEMARA. Blinding a neighbour's eye is placed here in juxtaposition to breaking his articles [to indicate that] just as in the latter case only Depreciation will be indemnified, whereas the [additional] Four Items [of liability][38] do not apply, so also in the case of inadvertently blinding his neighbour's eye only Depreciation will be indemnified, whereas the [additional] Four Items do not apply.

---

(1) On the analogy to Horn where the liability is only for half damages in the case of Tam. The Scriptural text may have been intended to exclude only full compensation.

(2) Ex. XXI, 35.

(3) I.e., the division of compensation.

(4) With the exception of course of damage done by Pebbles according to the Rabbis, who by the authority of a special Mosaic tradition order the payment of half damages; cf. supra p. 80.

(5) In accordance with the Rabbis who differ from R. Tarfon; v. supra p. 125.

(6) Supra p. 132.

(7) Ex. XXII, 4.

(8) Lit., ‘good’, ‘perfect’.

(9) [Ex. XXI, 35; the phrase being superfluous, as the text could have read, They shall divide the money of it and the dead.]

(10) Cf. supra p. 92.

(11) V. Supra p. 12.

(12) I.e., Pain, Medical Expenses, Loss of Time and Degradation, in addition to Depreciation, when injuring a human being; v. supra ibid.

(13) Ex. XXI, 30.

(14) V. supra p. 12.

(15) V. p. 133, n. 8.

(16) V. Ex. XXI, 30.

(17) Lev. XXIV, 19.

(18) Which becomes Mu'ad; v. supra p. 119.

(19) Ex. XXI, 30.

(20) With Foot, which is always considered Mu'ad; v. supra p. 11.

(21) Supra p. 66 and infra 48b.

(22) I.e., R. Tarfon.

(23) In the same way as he derived compensation in full for damage done by Horn on the plaintiff's premises, as argued by him, supra p. 125. [Thus: If in the case of Tooth and Foot, where there is no liability at all involved on public ground, there is liability to pay full ransom on the plaintiff's premises, does it not follow that Horn, which does involve at least payment of half ransom on public ground, should on the plaintiff's premises be liable to pay full ransom.]

(24) V. p. 134, n. 9.

(25) And not from the law applicable to manslaughter committed by Foot, in which case there may be no ransom at all. [Thus: If in the case of Foot, which involves no liability for damage on public ground, there is liability to pay in full in the plaintiff's premises, does it not follow that, in the case of Horn, involving as it does payment of half ransom on public ground, there should be payment of full ransom in plaintiff's premises.]

(26) For the person liable for arson may, in such a case, be indicted for manslaughter; cf. supra pp. 37-38 and p. 113.

(27) [Thus: If in the case of Foot, which involves no liability at all on public ground, there is full liability for hidden goods on the plaintiff's premises, does it not follow that, in the case of Horn, which involves liability to pay half damages on public ground, there should be payment of full ransom in plaintiff's premises?] Cf. supra p. 18.

(28) As stated supra p. 37.

(29) Cf. notes 2 and 4.

(30) V. supra p. 18.

(31) For all civil complaints are merged in the capital accusation of manslaughter; cf. supra, p. 113 and Num. XXXV, 32.
(32) I.e., R. Tarfon.
(33) V. supra. 134, n. 10.
(34) I.e., R. Tarfon
(35) V. supra p. 135, n. 2.
(36) V, supra p. 134, n. 10.
(37) Cf. supra p. 8.
(38) I.e., Pain, Medical Expenses, Loss of Time and Degradation; cf. supra p. 133 n. 8.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 26b

. Whence is this ruling[1] deduced? Hezekiah said, and thus taught a Tanna of the School of Hezekiah: Scripture states, Wound instead of a wound[2] — to impose the liability [for Depreciation] in the case of inadvertence as in that of willfulness, in the case of compulsion as in that of willingness. [But] was not that [verse] required to prescribe [indemnity for] Pain even in the case where Depreciation is independently paid? — If that is all,[3] Scripture should have stated, 'Wound for a wound',[4] why state, [wound] instead of a wound,[5] unless to indicate that both inferences be made from it?

Rabbah said: In the case of a stone lying in a person's bosom without his having knowledge of it, so that when he rose it fell down — regarding damage, there will be liability for Depreciation[6] but exemption regarding the [additional] Four Items;[7] concerning Sabbath[8] [there will similarly be exemption] as it is [only] work that has been [deliberately] purposed that is forbidden by the Law;[9] in a case of manslaughter[10] there is exemption from fleeing [to a city of refuge];[11] regarding [the release of] a slave,[12] there exists a difference of opinion between R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis, as it was taught:[13] If the master was a physician and the slave requested him to attend to his eye and it was accidentally blinded, or [the slave requested the master] to scrape his tooth and it was accidentally knocked out, he may now laugh at the master, for he has already obtained his liberty. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, says: [Scripture states] and [he] destroy it,[14] to make the freedom conditional upon the master intending to ruin the eye of the slave.

If the person, however, had at some time been aware of the stone in his bosom but subsequently forgot all about it, so that when he rose it fell down, — in the case of damage there is liability for Depreciation;[15] but though the exemption regarding the [additional] Four Items still holds good,[16] in the case of manslaughter[17] he will have to flee [to a city of refuge], for Scripture says, at unawares,[18] implying the existence of some [previous] knowledge [as to the dangerous weapon] and in the case before us such knowledge did at a time exist: concerning Sabbath,[19] however, there is still exemption; regarding [the release of] a slave the difference of opinion between R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis[20] still applies.

Where he intended to throw the stone to a distance of two cubits, but it fell at a distance of four,[21] if it caused damage, there is liability for Depreciation; regarding the [additional] Four Items there is still exemption;[16] so also concerning Sabbath,[19] for work [deliberately] planned is required [to make it an offence];[22] in the case of manslaughter,[23] And if a man lie not in wait,[24] is stated by Divine law, excluding a case where there was mention to throw a stone to a distance of two cubits but which fell at a distance of four.[25] Regarding [the release of] a slave, the difference of opinion between R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis[20] still applies. Where the intention was to throw the stone to a distance of four[21] cubits but it fell eight cubits away, — if it caused damage there will be liability for Depreciation; regarding the [additional] Four Items there is still exemption;[16] concerning Sabbath, if there was express intention that the stone should fall anywhere, there is liability for an offence,[21] but in the absence of such express intention no offence was committed;[26] in the case of manslaughter,[27] And if a man lie not in wait,[28] excludes a case where there was intention to throw a stone to a distance of four cubits, but which fell at a distance of eight. Regarding [the release of] a slave the difference of opinion between R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis[29] still applies.

Rabbah again said: In the case of one throwing a utensil[30] from the top of a roof and another one coming and breaking it with a stick [before it fell upon the ground where it would in any case have been broken], the latter is under no liability to pay; the reason being that it was only a utensil which was already certain to be broken that was broken by him.

Rabbah further said: In the case of a man throwing a utensil[31] from the top of the roof while there were underneath mattresses and cushions which were meanwhile removed by another person, or even if he [who had thrown it] removed them himself, there is exemption; the reason being that at the time of the throwing [of the utensil] his agency had been void of any harmful effect.[32]

Rabbah again said: In the case of one throwing a child from the top of the roof and somebody else meanwhile appearing and catching it on the edge of his sword, there is a difference of opinion between R. Judah b. Bathyra and the Rabbis.[33] For it was taught: In the case of ten persons beating one [to death] with ten sticks, whether simultaneously or consecutively, none of them

---

(1) That Man is Mu'ad to pay Depreciation for damage done by him under all circumstances.

(2) [Literal rendering of Ex. XXI, 25, which is superfluous having regard to Lev. XXIV, 19, If a man maim his neighbour, as he hath done so shall it be done to him.]

(3) That one is not merged in the other; cf. infra 85a.

(4) Expressed in Hebrew only by two words פצע בפצע

(5) For which three words are employed in the Hebrew text.

(6) For Man is Mu'ad to pay Depreciation even for damage done while asleep.

(7) On account of the absence of a purpose to do damage.

(8) I.e., if while unaware of the stone in his bosom he carried it with him into the open public thoroughfare, thus violating the Sabbath; cf. Shab. 96b.

(9) V. infra 60a; Hag. 10b.

(10) I.e., if, when the stone fell down, it killed a human being; v. Num. XXXV. 9-34.

(11) Since he never had any knowledge of the stone being in his bosom, he could in no way be made responsible criminally for the accidental manslaughter.

(12) I.e., when the stone in falling down destroyed the eye or the tooth of a slave; v. Ex. XXI. 26-27.

(13) Kid. 24b.

(14) Ex. XXI, 26.

(15) For Man is Mu'ad to pay Depreciation even for damage done while asleep.

(16) On account of the absence of a will to do damage.

(17) I.e., if when the stone fell down, it killed a human being; v. Num. XXXV, 9-34.

(18) Num. XXXV, 11, 15.

(19) I.e., if while unaware of the stone in his bosom he carried it with him into the open public thoroughfare, thus violating the Sabbath; cf. Shab. 96b.

(20) Supra p. 137.

(21) For the minimum of distance to constitute the violation of Sabbath by throwing an object in a public thoroughfare is four cubits; v. Shab. 96b.

(22) v. supra p. 137, n. 7.

(23) I.e., if when the stone fell down, it killed a human being; v. Num. XXXV, 9-34.

(24) Ex. XXI, 13.

(25) [According to one interpretation of Rashi, this is a case for exile; according to another, a case which is excluded from enjoying the protection of the city of refuge: v. Mak. 7b.]

(26) V. p. 137, n. 7.

(27) V. p. 138 n.3.

(28) Ex. XXI, 13.

(29) V. supra p. 137.
(30) Belonging to another. According to the interpretation of Rashi a.l. the utensil was thrown by its owner; cf. however, Rashi, supra 17b.
(31) Belonging to another.
(32) Lit., 'he had let his arrow off', it had spent its force; i.e., when the act of throwing took place it was by no means calculated to do any damage.
(33) According to R. Judah, the latter who caught it on the edge of his sword will be guilty of murder, but according to the Rabbis, no one is guilty of it.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 27a

is guilty of murder: R. Judah b. Bathyra, however says: If consecutively the last is liable, for he was the immediate cause of the death.[1] In the case where an ox meanwhile appeared and caught the [falling] child on its horns there is a difference of opinion between R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka and the Rabbis.[2] For it was taught: Then he shall give for the redemption of his life[3] [denotes] the value of the [life of] the killed person. R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka interprets it to refer to the value of the [life of] the defendant.[2]

Rabbah further said: In the case of one falling from the top of the roof and [doing damage by] coming into close contact with a woman, there is liability for four items,[4] though were she his deceased brother's wife[5] he would thereby not yet have acquired her for wife.[6] The Four Items [in this case] include: Depreciation, Pain, Medical Expenses and Loss of Time, but not Degradation. for we have learnt:[7] There is no liability for Degradation unless there is intention [to degrade].

Rabbah further said: In the case of one who through a wind of unusual occurrence fell from the top of the roof [upon a human being] and did damage as well as caused degradation, there will be liability for Depreciation[8] but exemption from the [additional] Four Items:[9] if, however, [the fall had been] through a wind of usual occurrence and damage as well as degradation was occasioned, there is liability for Four Items[4] but exemption from Degradation.[7] If he turned over [while falling][10] there would be liability also for Degradation for it was taught: From the implication of the mere statement, And she putteth forth her hand,[11] would I not have understood that she taketh him? Why then continue in the text and she taketh him?[12] — In order to inform you that since there existed an intention to injure though none to cause degradation [there is liability even for Degradation]. Rabbah again said: In the case of one placing a live coal on a neighbour's heart and death resulting, there is exemption;[13] if, however, it was put upon his belongings[14] which were [thereby] burnt, there is liability.[15] Raba said: Both of the two [latter cases] have been dealt with in Mishnah. Regarding the case 'on a neighbour's heart' we learnt:[16] If one man held another fast down in fire or in water, so that it was impossible for him to emerge and death resulted, he is guilty [of murder]. If, however, he pushed him into fire or into water, and it was yet possible for him to emerge but death resulted, there is exemption. Regarding the case 'Upon his belongings' we have similarly learnt:[17] [If a man says to another,] 'Tear my garment;' 'Break my jug;'[18] there is nevertheless liability [for any damage done to the garment or to the jug]. But if he said, '. . . upon the understanding that you will incur no liability,' there is exemption. Rabbah, however, asked: If a man placed a live coal upon the heart of a slave[19] [and injury[20] results therefrom], what should be the law?[21] Does it come under the law applicable in the case of a coal having been placed upon the body of the master himself,[22] or to that applicable in the case of a coal having been placed upon a chattel of his?[23] Assuming that it is subject to the law applicable in the case of a coal having been placed upon the heart of the master himself,[22] what should be the law regarding a live coal placed upon an ox [from which damage resulted]? — He himself answered the query thus: His slave is on a par with his own body,[22] whereas his ox is on a par with his chattels.[23]

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. IF A MAN PLACES A [KAD] PITCHER ON PUBLIC GROUND AND ANOTHER ONE COMES AND STUMBLES OVER IT AND BREAKS IT, HE IS EXEMPT. IF THE OTHER ONE WAS INJURED BY IT, THE OWNER OF THE [HABITH] BARREL IS LIABLE TO COMPENSATE FOR THE DAMAGE.

GEMARA. To commence with PITCHER[24] and conclude with BARREL![25] And we have likewise learnt also elsewhere:[26] If one man comes with his [habith] barrel and another comes with his beam and [it so happened that] the [kad] pitcher of this one breaks by [collision with] the beam of that one, he is exempt.[26] Here [on the other hand] the commencement is with barrel[25] and the conclusion with pitcher![24] We have again likewise learnt elsewhere: In the case of this man coming with a [habith] barrel of wine and that one proceeding with a [kad] pitcher of honey, and as the [habith] barrel of honey cracked, the owner of the wine poured out his wine and saved the honey into his barrel, he is entitled to no more than his service.[27] Here again the commencement is with pitcher[25] and the conclusion with barrel![25] R. Papa thereupon said: Both kad and habith may denote one and the same receptacle. But what is the purpose in this observation?[28] — Regarding buying and selling.[29] But under what circumstances? It could hardly be thought to refer to a locality where neither kad is termed habith nor habith designated kad, for are not these two terms then kept there distinct? — No, it may have application in a locality where, though the majority of people refer to kad by the term kad and to habith by the term habith, yet there are some who refer to habith by the term kad and to kad by the term habith. You might perhaps have thought that the law[30] follows the majority.[31]

---

(1) Cf. supra p. 41.

(2) Infra pp. 224-5. According to R. Ishmael compensation for manslaughter will have to be made by the owner of the ox, but according to the Rabbis there will be no payment, as the child at the time of the fatal fall was devoid of any value.

(3) Ex. XXI, 30.

(4) For since the falling down was caused by a wind of usual occurrence, it is considered wilful.

(5) V. Deut. XXV, 5, and Yeb. VI, 1.

(6) Cf. Kid. I, 1, and Yeb. 56a.

(7) Infra, 86b.

(8) For Man is Mu'ad to pay Depreciation even for damage done while asleep.

(9) On account of the absence of a will to do damage.

(10) Intending thus to fall upon a human being standing below so as to escape the worst effects of his falling, but without intention to degrade.

(11) Deut. XXV, 11.

(12) Ibid.

(13) Since the person upon whose heart the live coal had been placed was able to remove it.

(14) Lit., ‘garment’.

(15) [In this case, the failure of the owner to remove the coal could be explained as due to his belief that he could claim compensation.]

(16) Sanh. 76b.

(17) Infra p. 531.

(18) This does not imply release from liability, as he might have meant, ‘You may tear, if you wish it,’ with all the consequences it involves.

(19) In the presence of his master; cf. Tosaf. a.l.

(20) Not death.

(21) Regarding compensation, as he could have removed it.

(22) In which case there is exemption.

(23) Where there is liability.

(24) Heb. Kad.

(25) Heb. Habith.
(26) Infra p. 169.
(27) V. infra p. 685.
(28) How can it affect law.
(29) The two terms may be interchanged in contracts as they are synonyms.
(30) Regulating technical terms in contracts of sale.
(31) Who keep the two terms distinct.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 27b

It is therefore made known to us that we do not follow the majority[1] in [disputes on] matters of money.[2]

AND ANOTHER ONE COMES AND STUMBLES OVER IT AND BREAKS IT, HE IS EXEMPT. Why exempt? Has not one to keep one's eyes open when walking? — They said at the school of Rab, even in the name of Rab: The whole of the public ground was filled with barrels.[3] Samuel said: It is with reference to a dark place that we have learnt [the law in the Mishnah]. R. Johanan said: The pitcher was placed at the corner of a turning.[4] R. Papa said: Our Mishnah is not consistent unless in accordance with Samuel or R. Johanan, for according to Rab why exemption only in the case of stumbling [over the pitcher]? Why not the same ruling even when one directly broke it? — R. Zebid thereupon said in the name of Raba: The same law applies even when the defendant directly broke it; for AND STUMBLES was inserted merely because of the subsequent clause which reads, IF THE OTHER ONE WAS INJURED BY IT, THE OWNER OF THE BARREL IS LIABLE TO COMPENSATE FOR THE DAMAGE; and which of course applies only to ‘stumbling’ but not to direct breaking, in which case it only stands to reason that it is the plaintiff who is to blame for the damage he caused to himself. It was therefore on this account that ‘stumbling’ was inserted in the commencing clause.

R.Abba said to R. Ashi: In the West[5] the following [explanation] is stated in the name of R. ‘Ulla: [The exemption[6] is] because it is not the habit of men to look round while walking on the road.[7] Such a case occurred in Nehardea[8] where Samuel ordered compensation [for the broken utensil] and so also in Pumbeditha[8] where Raba similarly ordered compensation to he paid. We understand this in the case of Samuel who abided by the dictum he himself propounded,[9] but regarding Raba are we to say that he [also] embraced the view of Samuel? — R. Papa thereupon said: [In the case of Raba] the damage was done at the corner of an oil factory; and since it was usual to keep there barrels, he[10] ought to have kept his eyes open while walking there.[11]

R.Hisda dispatched [the following query] to R. Nahman: As there has already been fixed a fine[12] of three sela's[13] for kicking with the knee; five for kicking with the foot; thirteen for a blow with the saddle of an ass — what is the fine for wounding with the blade of the hoe or with the handle of the hoe? — The reply was forwarded [as follows]: ‘Hisda, Hisda! Is it your practice in Babylon to impose fines?[14] Tell me the actual circumstances of the case as it occurred.’ He[15] thereupon dispatched him thus: There was a well belonging to two persons. It was used by them on alternate days.[16] One of them, however, came and used it on a day not his. The other party said to him: ‘This day is mine!’ But as the latter paid no heed to that, he took a blade of a hoe and struck him with it. R. Nahman thereupon replied: No harm if he would have struck him a hundred times with the blade of the hoe. For even according to the view that a man may not take the law in his own hands[17] for the protection of his interests, in a case where an irreparable loss is pending[18] he is certainly entitled to do so.

It has indeed been stated: Rab Judah said: No man may take the law into his own hands for the protection of his interests, whereas R. Nahman said: A man may take the law into his own hands for the protection of his interests. In a case where an irreparable loss is pending, no two opinions exist that he may take the law into his own hands for the protection of his interests: the difference of opinion is only where no irreparable loss is pending. Rab Judah maintains that no man may take the law into his own hands for the [alleged] protection of his interests, for since no irreparable loss is pending let him resort to the Judge; whereas R. Nahman says that a man may take the law into his own hands for the protection of his interests, for since he acts in accordance with [the prescriptions of the] law, why [need he] take the trouble [to go to Court]?

R. Kahana [however] raised an objection; Ben Bag Bag said;[19] Do not enter [stealthily] into thy neighbour's premises for the purpose of appropriating without his knowledge anything that even belongs to thee, lest thou wilt appear to him as a thief. Thou mayest, however, break his teeth and tell him, 'I am taking possession of what is mine.'[20] [Does not this prove that a man may take the law into his own hands[21] for the protection of his rights?[22]] — He[23] thereupon said

---

(1) Cf. infra p. 263 and B.B. 92b.

(2) As the defendant is entitled to plead that he belongs to the minority.

(3) Such a public nuisance may thus be abated.

(4) The defendant is thus not to blame.

(5) I.e., in Eretz Yisrael, which is West of Babylon.

(6) For breaking the pitcher.

(7) Probably because the roads in Eretz Yisrael were in better condition than in Babylon; v. Shab. 33b; A. Z. 3a.

(8) A town in Babylon.

(9) That were the pitcher to have been in a visible place there would be liability.

(10) The defendant.

(11) And was thus to blame for the damage he had done.

(12) Cf. infra 90a, dealing with some other fixed fines.

(13) Sela' is a coin equal to one sacred or two common shekels; v. Glos.

(14) For the judicial right to impose fines is confined to Palestinian judges; cf. supra p. 67 and infra 84b.

(15) R. Hisda.

(16) Cf. B.B. 13a.

(17) I.e., resort to force.

(18) As where there is apprehension that the Court will be unable to redress the wrong done, e.g., in case all the water in the well will be used up.

(19) V. Ab. (Sonc. ed.) p. 76. n.7.

(20) Cf. Tosef. B.K. X.

(21) Since it is definitely stated that he may break his teeth . . . [The case dealt with here is where the loss is not irreparable, otherwise, as stated above, he would be allowed to enter even without permission.]

(22) Thus contradicting the view of Rab Judah.

(23) Rab Judah.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 28a

: It is true that Ben Bag Bag supports thy view; but he is only one against the Rabbis[1] who differ from him. R. Jannai [even] suggested that 'Break his teeth' may also mean to bring him before a court of justice. But if so, why 'and thou mayest tell him?' Should it not read 'and they[2] will tell him'? Again, 'I am taking possession of what is mine'; should it not be 'he is taking possession of what is his'? — This is indeed a difficulty.

Come and hear: In the case of an ox throwing itself upon the back of another's ox so as to kill it, if the owner of the ox that was beneath arrived and extricated his ox so that the ox that was above dropped down and was killed, there is exemption. Now, does not this ruling apply to Mu'ad[3] where no irreparable loss is pending? — No, it only applies to Tam[4] where an irreparable loss is indeed pending. But if so, read the subsequent clause: If [the owner of the ox that was beneath] pushed the ox from above, which was thus killed, there would be liability to compensate. Now if the case dealt with is of Tam,[5] why liability? — Since he was able to extricate his ox from beneath, which in fact he did not do,[he had no right to push and directly kill the assailing ox].[6]

Come and hear: In the case of a trespasser having filled his neighbour's premises with pitchers of wine and pitchers of oil, the owner of the premises is entitled to break them when going out and break them when coming in. [Does not this prove that a man may take the law into his own hands for the protection of his rights?][7] — R. Nahman b. Isaac explained: He is entitled to break them [and make a way][8] when going out [to complain] to the Court of Justice, as well as break them when coming back to fetch some necessary documents.

Come and hear: Whence is derived the ruling that in the case of a [Hebrew] bondman whose term of service, that had been extended by the boring of his ear,[9] has been terminated by the arrival of the Jubilee year[10] if it so happened that his master, while insisting upon him to leave, injured him by inflicting a wound upon him, there is yet exemption? We learn it from the words, And ye shall take no satisfaction for him that is . . . come again . . .[11] implying that we should not adjudicate compensation for him that is determined to 'come again' [as a servant].[12] [Does not this prove that a man may take the law into his own hands for the protection of his interests?][7] — We are dealing here with a case where the servant became suspected of intending to commit theft.[13] But how is it that up to that time he did not commit any theft and just at that time[14] he became suspected of intending to commit theft? — Up to that time he had the fear of his master upon him, whereas from that time[14] he is no more subject to his master's control.[10] R. Nahman b. Isaac said: We are dealing with a bondman to whom his master assigned a Canaanite maidservant as wife:[15] up to the expiration of the term this arrangement was lawful[15] whereas from that time this becomes unlawful.[16]

Come and hear:IF A MAN PLACES A PITCHER ON PUBLIC GROUND AND ANOTHER ONE COMES AND STUMBLES OVER IT AND BREAKS IT, HE IS EXEMPT. Now, is not this so only when the other one stumbled over it, whereas in the case of directly breaking it there is liability?[17] — R. Zebid thereupon said in the name of Raba: The same law applies even in the case of directly breaking it; for 'AND STUMBLES' was inserted merely because of the subsequent clause which reads, IF THE OTHER ONE WAS INJURED BY IT, THE OWNER OF THE BARREL IS LIABLE TO COMPENSATE FOR THE DAMAGE, and which, of course, applies only to stumbling but not to direct breaking, as then it is of course the plaintiff who is to blame for the damage he caused to himself. It was therefore on this account that 'stumbling' was inserted in the commencing clause.

Come and hear: Then thou shalt cut off her hand,[18] means only a monetary fine. Does not this ruling apply even in a case where there was no other possibility for her to save [her husband]?[19] — No, it applies only where she was able to save [him] by some other means.[20] Would indeed no fine be imposed upon her in a case where there was no other possibility for her to save [her husband]? But if so, why state in the subsequent clause: 'And putteth forth her hand,[21] excludes an officer of the Court of Justice [from any liability for degradation caused by him while carrying out the orders of the Court]'? Could not the distinction be made by continuing the very case[22] [in the following manner]: 'Provided that there were some other means at her disposal to save [him],[20] whereas if she was unable to save [him] by any other means there would be exemption'? — This very same thing was indeed meant to be conveyed [in the subsequent clause:] 'Provided that there were some other means at her disposal to save [him],[23] for were she unable to save [him] by any other means, the resort to force in her case should be considered as if exercised by an officer of the Court[24] [in the discharge of his duties] and there would be exemption.'

Come and hear:[25] In the case of a public road passing through the middle of a field of an individual, who appropriates the road but gives the public another at the side of his field, the gift of the new road holds good, whereas the old one will not thereby revert to the owner of the field. Now, if you maintain that a man may take the law into his own hands for the protection of his interests, why should he not arm himself with a whip and sit there?[26] — R. Zebid thereupon said in the name of Raba: This is a precaution lest an owner [on further occasions] might substitute a round- about way[27] [for an old established road]. R. Mesharsheya even suggested that the ruling applies to an owner who actually replaced [the old existing road by] a roundabout way.[27] R. Ashi said: To turn a road [from the middle] to the side [of a field] must inevitably render the road roundabout, for if for those who reside at that side it becomes more direct, for those who reside at the other side it is made far [and roundabout]. But if so, why does the gift of the new road hold good? Why can the owner not say to the public authorities: 'Take ye yours [the old path] and return me mine [the new one]'? — [That could not be done] because of Rab Judah, for Rab Judah said:[28] A path [once] taken possession of by the public may not be obstructed.

Come and hear: If an owner leaves Pe'ah[29] on one side of the field, whereas the poor arrive at another side and glean there, both sides are subject to the law of Pe'ah. Now, if you really maintain that a man may take the law into his own hands for the protection of his interests why should both sides be subject to the law of Pe'ah?[30] Why should the owner not arm himself with a whip and sit?[31] — Raba thereupon said: The meaning of 'both sides are subject to the law of Pe'ah' is that they are both exempt from tithing,[32] as taught:[33] If a man, after having renounced the ownership of his vineyard, rises early on the following morning and cuts off the grapes,[34] there applies to them the laws of Peret,[35] 'Oleloth,[36] 'Forgetting'[37] and Pe'ah[38] whereas there is exemption from tithing.[39]

MISHNAH. IF HIS PITCHER BROKE ON PUBLIC GROUND AND SOMEONE SLIPPED IN THE WATER OR WAS INJURED BY THE POTSHERD HE IS LIABLE [TO COMPENSATE]. R. JUDAH SAYS: IF IT WAS DONE INTENTIONALLY HE IS LIABLE, BUT IF UNINTENTIONALLY HE IS EXEMPT.

GEMARA. Rab Judah said on behalf of Rab: The Mishnaic ruling refers only to garments soiled in the water.[40]

---

(1) I.e., the majority of Rabbis.

(2) I.e., the Judges.

(3) In which case the Court would order compensation in full.

(4) Where compensation is only for a half, the plaintiff losing the other half.

(5) V. p. 145, n. 9.

(6) [Although there was the danger of his losing the full value of his ox.]

(7) Thus contradicting the view of Rab Judah.

(8) But no more.

(9) Ex. XXI, 6.

(10) Lev. XXV, 10, and Kid. 14b, 15a.

(11) Num. XXXV, 32.

(12) According to another rendering quoted by Rashi, it means 'that has to return' to his family, as prescribed in Lev. XXV, 10.

(13) In which case an irreparable loss is pending.

(14) I.e., the arrival of the Jubilee year.

(15) Ex. XXI, 4; Kid. 15a.

(16) Cf. Onkelos on Deut. XXIII, 18; hence the Master may use force to eject him.

(17) Thus opposing the view of R. Nahman.

(18) Deut. XXV, 12.

(19) Thus proving that even where irreparable loss is pending, as in this case, it is not permitted to take the law into one's own hands.

(20) In which case she acted ultra vires, i.e beyond the permission granted by law.
(21) Deut. XXV, 11.
(22) Dealing with a woman coming to rescue her husband.
(23) V. p. 147. n. 6.
(24) Lit. 'her hand is like the hand of the officer'.
(25) B. B. 99b.
(26) To keep away intruders; v. p. 147 n. 5.
(27) Which is of course not an equitable exchange in accordance with the law.
(28) B.B. 12a; 26b; 60b and 100a.
(29) I.e., the portion of the harvest left at a corner of the field for the poor in accordance with Lev. XIX. 9; XXIII, 22; v. Glos.
(30) Thus proving that even where irreparable loss is pending, as in this case, it is not permitted to take the law into his own hands.
(31) I.e., keeping the poor away from the Pe'ah on the former side.
(32) But they will by no means belong to the poor, for the portion left on the former side remains the owner's property.
(33) Infra 94a; Ned. 44b.
(34) So that ownership has been re-established.
(35) I.e.. grapes fallen off during cutting which are the share of the poor as prescribed in Lev. XIX, 10.
(36) Small single bunches reserved for the poor in accordance with Lev. XIX, 10, and Deut. XXIV, 21.
(37) I.e., produce forgotten in the field, belonging to the poor in accordance with Deut. XXIV, 19.
(38) I.e the portion of the harvest left at a corner of the field for the poor in accordance with Lev. XIX, 9; XXIII, 22; v. Glos.
(39) V. infra 94a. For the law of tithing applies only to produce that has never been abandoned even for the smallest space of time; v. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l.
(40) Rab maintains that the Mishnah deals with a case where the water of the broken pitcher has not been abandoned, so that it still remains the chattel of the original owner who is liable for any damage caused by it

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 28b

For regarding injury to the person there is exemption, since it was public ground[1] that hurt him.[2] When repeating this statement in the presence of Samuel he said to me: 'Well, is not [the liability for damage occasioned by] a stone, a knife or luggage[3] derived from Pit?[4] So that I adopt regarding them all [the interpretation]: An ox[4] excluding man, An ass[4] excluding inanimate objects! This qualification[5] however applies only to cases of killing, whereas as regards [mere] injury, in the case of man there is liability, though with respect to inanimate objects there is [always] exemption?'[6] — Rab [however, maintains[7] that] these statements apply only to nuisances abandoned [by their owners],[8] whereas in cases where they are not abandoned they still remain [their owner's] chattel.[9]

R. Oshaia however raised an objection: 'And an ox or an ass fall therein'.[4] 'An ox' excluding man; 'an ass' excluding inanimate objects. Hence the Rabbis stated: If there fell into it an ox together with its tools and they thereby broke, [or] an ass together with its equipment which rent, there is liability for the beast but exemption as regards the inanimate objects.[10] To what may the ruling in this case be compared? To that applicable in the case of a stone, a knife and luggage[11] that had been left on public ground and did damage. (Should it not on the contrary read, 'What case may be compared to this ruling?'[12] — It must therefore indeed mean thus: 'What may [be said to] be similar to this ruling? The case of a stone, a knife and luggage that had been left on public ground and did damage'.) 'It thus follows that where a bottle broke against the stone there is liability.' Now, does not the commencing clause[13] contradict the view of Rab,[14] whereas the concluding clause[15] opposes that of Samuel?[16] — But [even] on your view, does not the text contradict itself, stating exemption in the commencing clause[13] and liability in the concluding clause![15] Rab therefore interprets it so as to accord with his reasoning, whereas Samuel [on the other hand] expounds it so as to reconcile it with his view. Rab in accordance with his reasoning interprets it thus: The [above] statement[13] was made only regarding nuisances that have been abandoned, whereas where they have not been abandoned there is liability.[17] It therefore follows that where a bottle broke against the stone there is liability. Samuel [on the other hand] in reconciling it with his view expounds it thus: Since you have now decided that a stone, a knife and luggage [constitute nuisances that] are equivalent [in law] to Pit, it follows that, according to R. Judah who orders compensation for inanimate objects damaged by Pit,[18] where a bottle smashed against the stone there is liability.

R. Eleazar said: This ruling[15] refers only to a case where the person stumbled over the stone and the bottle broke against the stone. For if the person stumbled because of the public ground, though the bottle broke against the stone, there is exemption.[19] Whose view is here followed? — Of course not that of R. Nathan[20] . There are, however, some who [on the other hand] read: R. Eleazar said: Do not suggest that it is only where the person stumbled upon the stone and the bottle broke against the stone that there is liability, so that where the person stumbled because of the public ground, though the bottle broke against the stone, there would be exemption. For even in the case where the person stumbled because of the public ground, provided the bottle broke against the stone there is liability. Whose view is here followed? — Of course that of Nathan.[20]

R. JUDAH SAYS: IF IT WAS DONE INTENTIONALLY HE IS LIABLE, BUT IF UNINTENTIONALLY HE IS EXEMPT. What does INTENTIONALLY denote? — Rabbah said: [It is sufficient[21] if there was] an intention to bring the pitcher below the shoulder.[22] Said Abaye to him: Does this imply that R. Meir[23] imposes liability even when the pitcher slipped down [by sheer accident]? — He answered him:[24] 'Yes, R. Meir imposes liability even where the handle remained in the carrier's hand.' But why? Is it not sheer accident, and has not the Divine Law prescribed exemption in cases of accident as recorded,[25] But unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing?[26] You can hardly suggest this ruling to apply only to capital punishment, whereas regarding damages there should [always] be liability, for it was taught:[27] If his pitcher broke and he did not remove the potsherds, [or] his camel fell down and he did not raise it, R. Meir orders payment for any damage resulting therefrom, whereas the Sages maintain

---

(1) Lit 'ground of the world'.

(2) Whereas the water was only the remote cause of it.

(3) Even when not abandoned; cf. supra p. 7.

(4) Ex. XXI, 33.

(5) Excluding man.

(6) For killing and injury could not be distinguished in the case of inanimate objects. How then could Rab make him liable for soiled garments (and exempt for injury to the person)?

(7) The difference in principle between Samuel and Rab is that the former maintains that nuisances of all kinds, whether abandoned by their owners or not, are subject to the law applicable to Pit, in which case there is no liability either for damage done to inanimate objects or death caused to human beings, whereas the view of Rab is that only abandoned nuisances are subject to these laws of Pit, but nuisances that have not been abandoned by their owners are still his chattels, and as such have to be subject to the law applicable to ox doing damage, in which case no discrimination is made as to the nature of the damaged objects, be they men, beasts or inanimate articles; cf. also supra p. 38.

(8) In which case they are equal (in law) to Pits dug on public ground.

(9) They are thus subject to the law applicable to ox; v. supra p. 18.

(10) V. infra 52a.

(11) Even when not abandoned; cf. supra p. 7.

(12) Since the case of stone, knife and luggage is far less obvious than this case which is explicitly dealt with in Scripture.

(13) Making a stone, a knife and luggage subject to the law applicable to Pit.

(14) Who maintains that unless they have been abandoned they are subject to the law of Ox.

(15) Imposing liability in the case of a bottle having been smashed against the stone.

(16) According to whom it should be subject to the law applicable to Pit imposing no liability for damage done to inanimate objects.

(17) Even for damage done to inanimate objects, as they are subject not to the law of Pit but to that applicable to Ox.

(18) Supra p. 18.

(19) Since it was ownerless ground that was the primary cause of the accident.

(20) Who holds that where no payment can be exacted from one defendant, the co-defendant, if any, will himself bear the whole liability; cf supra p. 54 and infra 53a

(21) To constitute liability.

(22) Though there was no intention whatever to break it.

(23) Who is usually taken to have been the author of anonymous Mishnaic statements, especially when contradicting those of R. Judah b. Il'ai, his colleague.

(24) I.e., Rabbah to Abaye.

(25) Deut. XXII, 26.

(26) For so far as she is concerned it was a mishap.

(27) Infra 55a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 29a

that no action can be instituted against him in civil courts though there is liability[1] according to divine justice. The Sages agree however, with R. Meir that, in the case of a stone, a knife and luggage which were left on the top of the roof and fell down because of a wind of usual occurrence[2] and did damage, there will be liability.[3] R. Meir [on the other hand] agrees with the Sages that, regarding bottles that were placed upon the top of the roof for the purpose of getting dry and fell down because of a wind of unusual occurrence[4] and did damage, there is exemption.[5] [Does not this prove that even regarding damages all agree that there is exemption in cases of sheer accident?] — Abaye therefore said: It is on two points that they[6] differ [in the Mishnah]; they differ regarding damage done at the time of the fall [of the pitcher] and they again differ regarding damage occasioned [by the potsherds] subsequently to the fall. The difference of opinion regarding damage done at the time of the fall of the pitcher arises on the question whether stumbling implies negligence [or not];[7] one Master[8] maintaining that stumbling does imply negligence, whereas the other Master[9] is of the opinion that stumbling does not [necessarily] imply negligence.[10] The point at issue in the case of damage occasioned [by the potsherds] subsequently to the fall, is the law as applicable to abandoned nuisances;[11] one Master[8] maintaining that for damage occasioned by abandoned nuisances there is liability,[12] whereas the other Master[9] maintains exemption.[13] But how can you prove this?[14] — From the text which presents two [independent] cases [as follows]; SOMEONE SLIPPED IN THE WATER OR WAS INJURED BY THE POTSHERD; for indeed is not one case the same as the other,[15] unless it was intended to convey, 'Someone slipped in the water while the pitcher had been falling[16] or was injured by the potsherd subsequently to the fall.'

Now that the Mishnah presents two independent cases, it is only reasonable to assume that the Baraitha[17] similarly deals with the same two problems. That is all very well as regards the 'pitcher' where the two [problems] have application [in the case of damage done] at the time of the fall or subsequently to the fall [respectively]. But how in the case of the 'camel'? For though concerning damage occasioned subsequently to the fall, it may well have application where the carcass has been abandoned,[18] yet in the case of damage done at the time of the fall, what point of difference can be found?[19] — R. Aha thereupon said: [It deals with a case] where the camel was led in water along the slippery shore of a river.[20] But under what circumstances? If where there was another [better] way, is it not a case of culpa lata?[21] If on the other hand there was no other way [to pass through], is it not a case of no alternative? — The point at issue can therefore only be where the driver stumbled and together with him the camel also stumbled.

But in the case of abandoning nuisances,[22] where could [the condition of] intention [laid down by R. Judah] come in? — Said R. Joseph: The intention [in this case] refers to the retaining of the ownership of the potsherd.[23] So also said R. Ashi, that the intention [in this case] refers to the retaining of the ownership of the potsherd.

R. Eleazar said: 'It is regarding damage done at the time of the fall that there is a difference of opinion.' But how in the case of damage done subsequently to the fall? Would there be unanimity that there is exemption? Surely there is R. Meir who expressed [his opinion][24] that there is liability! What else [would you suggest? That in this case] there is unanimity [imposing] liability? Surely there are the Rabbis who stated [their view] that there is exemption! — Hence, what he means [to convey by his statement] 'damage done at the time of the fall', is that there is difference of opinion 'even regarding damage done at the time of the fall', making thus known to us [the conclusions arrived at] by Abaye.[25]

---

(1) For not having removed the potsherds or the camel that fell down.

(2) Which the defendant should have anticipated.

(3) For carelessness.

(4) Which could hardly have been anticipated.

(5) For in this case the defendant is not to blame for carelessness.

(6) I.e., R. Judah and the anonymous view which is that of R. Meir.

(7) As it was owing to the defendant having stumbled that his pitcher gave way.

(8) I.e., R. Meir.

(9) I.e., R. Judah.

(10) 'INTENTIONALLY' stated in the Mishnah would thus mean where there was intention actually to break the pitcher, for if the intention was merely to bring the pitcher below the shoulder it would come under the term 'UNINTENTIONALLY', the ground advanced by R. Judah is that in the case of stumbling and breaking a pitcher and doing thereby damage, no negligence was necessarily involved.

(11) Of which the defendant is no longer the owner.

(12) For the liability in the case of Pit is also where it has been dug in public ground and is thus ownerless.

(13) For he holds that the liability in the case of Pit is only where the defendant had dug it in his own ground and though he subsequently abandoned it he retained the ownership of the pit itself; cf. supra p. 107; and infra 50a.

(14) That the points at issue are twofold.

(15) Why then would one case not have sufficed?

(16) And the water was still in the process of being poured out.

(17) Supra p. 152.

(18) The point at issue thus consisting in the law applicable to abandoned nuisances.

(19) For the problem whether 'stumbling' implies negligence or not has surely no application where it was not the driver but the camel that stumbled.

(20) The stumbling of the camel is thus imputed to the driver.

(21) I.e., grave fault, which has nothing to do with the problem of stumbling.

(22) Which is the second point at issue between R. Judah and R. Meir.

(23) [R. Judah therefore means this: If he had the intention of retaining the shards he is liable; if he had no intention to do so but abandoned them, he is exempt.]

(24) Supra p. 152.

(25) Supra p. 153.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 29b

R. Johanan, however, said: 'It is regarding damage occasioned after the fall [of the pitcher] that there is a difference of opinion.' But how in the case of damage done at the time of the fall? Would there be unanimity [granting] exemption? Surely R. Johanan's statement further on[1] that we should not think that the Mishnah[2] [there] follows the view of R. Meir who maintains that stumbling constitutes carelessness, implies that R. Meir imposes liability.[3] What else [would you suggest? That there] be unanimity [imposing] liability? Surely the very statement made further on[1] by R. Johanan

[himself] that we should not think that the Mishnah[2] [there] follows the view of R. Meir, implies that the Rabbis would exempt![3] — Hence what he [R. Johanan] intends to convey to us is that abandoned nuisances have only in this connection been exempted from liability by the Rabbis since the very inception [of the nuisances][4] was by accident, whereas abandoned nuisances in other circumstances involve liability [even according to the Rabbis].[5]

It was stated: In the case of abandoned nuisances [causing damage], R. Johanan and R. Eleazar [differ]. One imposes liability and the other maintains exemption. May we not say that the one imposing liability follows the view of R. Meir,[6] whereas the other, who maintains exemption follows that of the Rabbis?[6] — As to R. Meir's view no one could dispute [that there should be liability].[7] Where they differ is as to the view of the Rabbis. The one who exempts does so because of the Rabbis,[8] while the other who imposes liability can say to you, 'It is I who follow the view even of the Rabbis, for the Rabbis who declare abandoned nuisances exempt do so only in one particular connection, where the very inception [of the nuisances][9] had been by accident, whereas abandoned nuisances in other connections involve liability.' May it not be concluded that it was R. Eleazar who imposed liability? For R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Ishmael:[10] There are two [laws dealing with] matters that are really not within the ownership of man but which are regarded by Scripture as if they were under his ownership. They are [the following]: Pit in public ground,[11] and Leaven after midday [on Passover eve].[12] It may indeed be concluded thus.[13]

But did R. Eleazar really say so? Did not R. Eleazar express himself to the contrary? For we have learnt;[14] 'If a man turns up dung that had been lying on public ground and another person is [subsequently] injured thereby, there is liability for the damage.' And R. Eleazar thereupon said: This Mishnaic ruling applies only to one who [by turning over the dung] intended to acquire title to it. For if he had not intended to acquire title to it there would be exemption. Now, does not this prove that abandoned nuisances are exempt? — R. Adda b. Ahabah suggested [that the amendment made by R. Eleazar] referred to one who has restored the dung to its previous position.[15] Rabina [thus] said: The instance given by R. Adda b. Ahabah may have its equivalent in the case of one who, on coming across an open pit, covered it, but opened it up again. But Mar Zutra the son of R. Mari said to Rabina: What a comparison! In the latter case, [by merely covering the pit] the [evil] deed of the original [offender] has not yet been undone, whereas in the case before us [by removing the dung from its place] the [evil] deed of the original [offender] has been undone! May it not therefore [on the other hand] have its equivalent only in the case of one who, on coming across an open pit, filled it up [with earth] but dug it out again, where, since the nuisance created by the original [offender] had already been completely removed [by filling in the pit], it stands altogether under the responsibility of the new offender? — R. Ashi therefore suggested [that the amendment made by R. Eleazar] referred to one who turned over the dung within the first three [handbreadths][16] of the ground [in which case the nuisance created by the original offender is not yet considered in law as abated]. But what influenced R. Eleazar to make the [Mishnaic] ruling[17] refer to one who turned over the dung within the first three [handbreadths of the ground], and thus to confine its application only to one who intended to acquire title to the dung,[18] excluding thereby one who did not intend to acquire title to it? Why not indeed make the ruling refer to one who turned over the dung above the first three handbreadths, so that even where one did not intend to acquire title to it the liability should hold good? — Raba [thereupon] said: Because of a difficulty in the Mishnaic text[17] [which occurred to him]: Why indeed have 'turning up' in the Mishnaic text and not simply 'raising,'[19] if not to indicate that 'turning up' implies within the first three handbreadths [of the ground].

Now [then] that R. Eleazar was the one who maintained liability,[20] R. Johanan would [of course] be the one who maintained exemption. But could R. Johanan really maintain this? Surely we have learnt: If a man hides thorns and broken glass [in public ground], or makes a fence of thorns, or if a man's fence falls upon public ground and damage results therefrom to another person, there is liability for the damage.[21] And R. Johanan thereupon said: This Mishnaic ruling refers to a case where the thorns were projecting into the public thoroughfare. For if they were confined within private premises[22] there would be exemption. Now, why should there be exemption in the case where they were confined within private premises if not because they would only constitute a nuisance on private premises? Does this then not imply that it is only a nuisance created upon public ground that involves liability, proving thus that abandoned nuisances do involve liability? — No, it may still be suggested that abandoned nuisances are exempt. The reason for the exemption in the case of thorns confined to private premises is, as it has already been stated in this connection,[21] that R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: Because it is not the habit of men to rub themselves against walls.[23]

But again, could R. Johanan [really] maintain this?[24] Surely R. Johanan stated:[25] The halachah is in accordance with anonymous Mishnaic rulings. And we have learnt: If a man digs a pit in public ground, and an ox or ass falls in and dies, there is liability.[26] [Does this not prove that there is liability for a pit dug in public ground?] — [It must] therefore [be concluded that] R. Johanan was indeed the one who maintained liability. Now then that R. Johanan was the one who maintained liability, R. Eleazar would [of course] be the one who maintained exemption. But did not R. Eleazar say

---

(1) Infra p. 166.

(2) Dealing with the case of the two potters, infra p. 166.

(3) For damage done at the time of the fall.

(4) I.e., when the pitcher gave way or the camel fell down.

(5) The statement made by R. Johanan that it was regarding damage occasioned after the fall (of the pitcher) that there was a difference of opinion would thus mean that the difference of opinion between R. Meir and the other Rabbis was only where the inception of the nuisance was with a fall, i.e. with an accident, as where the nuisance had originally been wilfully exposed to the public there would be liability according to all opinions.

(6) V. p. 155, n. 1.

(7) For R. Meir imposes liability for abandoned nuisances even where their very inception was by accident; v. Rashi, but also Tosaf. 29a.

(8) Supra p. 153.

(9) As when the pitcher gave way or the camel fell down.

(10) Pes. 6b.

(11) Which is not the property of the defendant, but for which he is nevertheless responsible on account of his having dug it.

(12) Lit., ‘from the sixth hour upwards’, when in accordance with Pes. I. 4, it becomes prohibited for any use and is thus rendered ownerless, but for its destruction the original owner is still held responsible.

(13) That according to R. Eleazar abandoning nuisances does not release from responsibility.

(14) Infra p. 161.

(15) In which case the defendant did not aggravate the position.

(16) According to the principle of Labud, which is the legal consideration of separated parts as united, one substance is not regarded as removed from another unless a space of not less than three handbreadths separates them.

(17) Infra p. 161.

(18) Lit., ‘and the reason is because he intended’, etc.

(19) Which would necessarily mean above the first three handbreadths of the ground level.

(20) In the case of abandoned nuisances that have caused damage.

(21) Infra p. 159.

(22) Although he subsequently abandoned it to the public.

(23) It is therefore the plaintiff himself who is to blame.

(24) That abandoning nuisances releases from responsibility.

(25) Shab. 46a.

(26) Infra 50b.

in the name of R. Ishmael etc.[1] [which proves that abandoned nuisances do involve liability]? — This presents no difficulty. One view[2] is his own whereas the other[3] is that of his master.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN POURS OUT WATER INTO PUBLIC GROUND AND SOME OTHER PERSON IS INJURED BY IT, THERE IS LIABILITY FOR THE DAMAGE. IF HE HIDES THORNS AND BROKEN GLASS, OR MAKES A FENCE OF THORNS, OR, IF A FENCE FALLS INTO THE PUBLIC GROUND AND DAMAGE RESULTS THEREFROM TO SOME OTHER PERSONS, THERE IS [SIMILARLY] LIABILITY FOR THE DAMAGE.[4]

GEMARA. Rab said: This Mishnaic ruling[5] refers only to a case where his garments[6] were soiled in the water. For regarding injury to himself there should be exemption, since it was ownerless ground that hurt him.[7] [But] R. Huna said to Rab: Why should not [the topmost layer of the ground mixed up with private water] be considered as private clay?[8] — Do you suggest [the ruling to refer to] water that has not dried up? [No.] It deals with a case where the water has already dried up. But why [at all] two [texts[9] for one and the same ruling]?[10] — One [text] refers to the summer season whereas the other deals with winter, as indeed [explicitly] taught [elsewhere]: All those who open their gutters or sweep out the dust of their cellars [into public thoroughfares] are, in the summer period, acting unlawfully, but lawfully in winter; [in all cases] even though when acting lawfully, if special damage resulted, they are liable to compensate.[11]

IF HE HIDES THORNS etc., R. Johanan said:[4] This Mishnaic ruling refers only to a case where the thorns were projecting into the public ground. For if they were confined within private premises there would be no liability. On what account is there exemption [in the latter case]? — R. Aha the son of R. Ika [thereupon] answered:[12] Because it is not the habit of men to rub themselves against walls.

Our Rabbis taught: If one hid thorns and broken glasses in a neighbour's wall and the owner of the wall came and pulled his wall down, so that they fell into the public ground and did damage, the one who hid them is liable. R. Johanan [thereupon] said: This ruling refers only to an impaired wall.[13] For in the case of a strong wall the one who hid [the thorns] should be exempt while the owner of the wall would be liable.[14] Rabina commented: This ruling[15] proves that where a man covers his pit with a neighbour's lid and the owner of the lid comes and removes his lid, the owner of the pit would be liable [for any damage that may subsequently be caused by his pit]. Is not this inference quite obvious?[16] — You might perhaps have suggested this ruling[15] [to be confined to the case] there, where the owner of the wall had no knowledge of the identity of the person who hid the thorns in the wall, and was accordingly unable to inform him of the intended pulling down of the wall, whereas in the case of the pit, where the owner of the lid very well knew the identity of the owner of the pit, [you might have argued] that it was his duty to inform him [of the intended removal of the lid].[17] It is therefore made known to us [that this is not the case].[18]

Our Rabbis taught: The pious men of former generations used to hide their thorns and broken glasses in the midst of their fields at a depth of three handbreadths below the surface so that [even] the plough might not be hindered by them. R Shesheth[19] used to throw them into the fire.[20] Raba threw them into the Tigris. Rab Judah said: He who wishes to be pious must [in the first instance particularly] fulfil the laws of [Seder] Nezikin.[21] But Raba said: The matters [dealt with in the Tractate] Aboth;[22] still others said: Matters [dealt with in] Berakoth.[23]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN REMOVES HIS STRAW AND STUBBLE INTO THE PUBLIC GROUND TO BE FORMED INTO MANURE, AND DAMAGE RESULTS TO SOME OTHER PERSON, THERE IS LIABILITY FOR THE DAMAGE, AND WHOEVER SEIZES THEM FIRST ACQUIRES TITLE TO THEM. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: WHOEVER CREATES ANY

NUISANCES ON PUBLIC GROUND CAUSING [SPECIAL] DAMAGE IS LIABLE TO COMPENSATE, THOUGH WHOEVER SEIZES OF THEM FIRST ACQUIRES TITLE TO THEM. IF HE TURNS UP DUNG THAT HAD BEEN LYING ON PUBLIC GROUND, AND DAMAGE [SUBSEQUENTLY] RESULTS TO ANOTHER PERSON, HE IS LIABLE FOR THE DAMAGE.

GEMARA. May we say that the Mishnaic ruling[24] is not in accordance with R. Judah? For it was taught: R. Judah says: When it is the season of taking out foliage everybody is entitled to take out his foliage into the public ground and heap it up there for the whole period of thirty days so that it may be trodden upon by the feet of men and by the feet of animals; for upon this understanding did Joshua make [Israel][25] inherit the Land. — You may suggest it to be even in accordance with R. Judah, for R. Judah [nevertheless] agrees that where [special] damage resulted, compensation should be made for the damage done. But did we not learn that R. Judah maintains that in the case of a Chanukah candle[26] there is exemption on account of it having been placed there with authorization?[27] Now, does not this authorization mean the permission of the Beth din?[28] — No, it means the sanction of [the performance of] a religious duty[29] as [indeed explicitly] taught: R. Judah says: In the case of a Chanukah candle there is exemption on account of the sanction of [the performance of] a religious duty.

Come and hear: In all those cases where the authorities permitted nuisances to be created on public ground, if [special] damage results there will be liability to compensate. But R. Judah maintains exemption![30] — R. Nahman said: The Mishnah[31] refers to the time when it is not the season to take out foliage and thus it may be in accordance with R. Judah. — R. Ashi further [said]:

---

(1) That there is liability for a pit dug in public ground, though it is ownerless.

(2) That abandoning nuisances releases from responsibility.

(3) That abandoning nuisances does not release from responsibility.

(4) Supra p. 158.

(5) Which, according to Rab, deals with a case where the water has not been abandoned, but remained still the chattel of the original owner.

(6) Those of the person who was injured.

(7) Whereas the water was but the remote cause of it.

(8) Lit., ‘his clay’. i.e., of the owner of the water.

(9) The one here and the other supra p. 149.

(10) Expounded by Rab here as well as supra pp. 149-150.

(11) Supra pp. 19-20.

(12) V. p. 159, n. 3.

(13) Which was likely to be pulled down.

(14) For not having taken proper care to safeguard the public.

(15) As stated in the Baraitha quoted.

(16) Why then had Rabina to make it explicit?

(17) Failing that, the sole responsibility should then fall upon him.

(18) But that the responsibility lies upon the owner of the pit.

(19) Who was stricken with blindness; cf. Ber. 58a.

(20) V. Nid. 17a.

(21) [By being careful in matters that may cause damage.]

(22) [Matters affecting ethics and right conduct. Var. lec., ‘Rabina’.]

(23) [The Tractate wherein the benedictions are set forth and discussed.]

(24) Imposing liability in the commencing clause.

(25) B.M. 118b. Why then liability for the damage caused thereby during the specified period permitted by law?

(26) Placed outside a shop and setting aflame flax that has been passing along the public road.

(27) Infra p. 361.

(28) A permission which has similarly been extended in the case of the dung during the specified period and should accordingly effect exemption.
(29) Which is of course absent in the case of removing dung to the public ground, where liability must accordingly be imposed for special damage.
(30) Does not this prove that mere authorization suffices to confer exemption? Cf. n. 2.
(31) V. p. 161, n. 5.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 30b

The Mishnah states, HIS STRAW AND STUBBLE which are slippery [and may never be removed into public ground even according to R. Judah].

WHOEVER SEIZES THEM FIRST ACQUIRES TITLE TO THEM. Rab said: Both to their corpus and to their increase [in value],[1] whereas Ze'ire said: Only to their increase but not to their corpus.[2] Wherein is the point at issue?[3] — Rab maintains that they [the Rabbis] extended the penalty to the corpus on account of the increase thereof, but Ze'ire is of the opinion that they did not extend the penalty to the corpus on account of the increase thereof.

We have learnt: IF HE TURNS UP DUNG THAT HAD BEEN LYING ON PUBLIC GROUND AND DAMAGE [SUBSEQUENTLY] RESULTS TO ANOTHER PERSON, HE IS LIABLE FOR THE DAMAGE. Now, [in this case] it is not stated that 'Whoever seizes it first acquires title to it.'[4] — [This ruling has been] inserted in the commencing clause, and applies as well to the concluding clause. But has it not in this connection[5] been taught [in a Baraitha]: They are prohibited [to be taken possession of] on account of [the law of] robbery?[6] — When [the Baraitha] states 'They are prohibited on account of robbery' the reference is to all the cases [presented] in the Mishnaic text[7] and [is intended] to [protect] the one who had seized [of them] first, having thereby acquired title [to them]. But surely it was not meant thus, seeing that it was taught:[8] 'If a man removes straw and stubble into the public ground to be formed into manure and damage results to another person, he is liable for the damage, and whoever seizes them first acquires title to them, as this may be done irrespective of [the law of] robbery. [However] where he turns up dung on public ground and damage [subsequently] results to another person, he is liable [to compensate] but no possession may be taken of the dung on account of [the law of] robbery'?[6] — R. Nahman b. Isaac [thereupon] exclaimed: What an objection to adduce from the case of dung! [It is only in the case of] an object that is susceptible to increase [in value] that the penalty is extended to the corpus[9] for the purpose of [discouraging any idea of] gain, whereas with regard to an object that yields no increase there is no penalty [at all].[10]

The question was asked: According to the view that the penalty extends also to the corpus for the purpose of [discouraging the idea of] gain,[9] is this penalty imposed at once[11] or is it only after some gain has been produced that the penalty will be imposed? — Come and hear: An objection was raised [against Rab] from the case of dung![12] But do you really think this [solves the problem]? The objection from the case of dung was raised only before R. Nahman expounded the underlying principle;[13] for after the explanation given by R. Nahman what objection indeed could there be raised from the case of dung?[14]

Might not one suggest [the argument between Rab and Ze'ire to have been] the point at issue between [the following] Tannaim? For it was taught: If a bill contains a stipulation of interest,[15] a penalty is imposed so that neither the principal nor the interest is enforced; these are the words of R. Meir, whereas the Sages maintain that the principal is enforced though not the interest.[16] Now, can we not say that Rab adopts the view of R. Meir[17] whereas Ze'ire follows that of the Rabbis?[18] — Rab may explain [himself] to you [as follows]: 'I made my statement even according to the Rabbis: for the Rabbis maintain their view only there, where the principal as such is quite lawful, whereas here in the case of nuisances the corpus itself is liable to do damage.' Ze'ire [on the other hand] may explain [himself] to you [thus]: 'I made my statement even in accordance with R. Meir; for R. Meir expressed his view only there, where immediately, at the time of the bill having been drawn up, [the evil had been committed] by stipulating the usury, whereas here in the case of nuisances, who can assert that [special] damage will result?'

Might not one suggest [the argument between Rab and Ze'ire to have been] the point at issue between these Tannaim? For it was taught: If a man removes straw and stubble into the public ground to be formed into manure and damage results to another person, he is liable for the damage, and whoever seizes them first acquires title to them. They are prohibited [to be taken possession of] on account of [the law of] robbery. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Whoever creates any nuisances on public ground and causes [special] damage is liable to compensate, though whoever takes possession of them first acquires title to them, and this may be done irrespective of [the law of] robbery. Now, is not the text a contradiction in itself? You read, 'Whoever seizes them first acquires title to them,' then you state [in the same breath], 'They are prohibited [to be taken possession of] on account of [the law of] robbery'! It must therefore mean thus: 'Whoever seizes them first acquires title to them,' viz., to their increase, whereas, 'they are prohibited to be taken possession of on account of [the law of] robbery,' refers to their corpus. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel thereupon proceeded to state that even concerning their corpus, 'whoever seizes them first, acquires title to them.' Now, according to Ze'ire, his view must unquestionably have been the point at issue between these Tannaim,[19] but according to Rab, are we similarly to say that [his view] was the point at issue between these Tannaim? — Rab may say to you: 'It is [indeed] unanimously held that the penalty must extend to the corpus for the purpose [of discouraging the idea] of gain; the point at issue [between the Tannaim] here is whether this halachah[20] should be made the practical rule of the law'.[21] For it was stated: R. Huna on behalf of Rab said: This halachah[20] should not be made the practical rule of the law,[22] whereas R. Adda b. Ahabah said: This halachah[20] should be made the practical rule of the law. But is this really so? Did not R. Huna declare barley [that had been spread out on public ground] ownerless, [just as] R. Adda b. Ahabah declared

---

(1) While on public ground.

(2) Which thus still remains the property of the original owner.

(3) I.e., what is the principle underlying it?

(4) This clause, if omitted purposely, would thus tend to prove that the penalty attaches only to straw and stubble and their like, which improve while lying on public ground, but not to dung placed on public ground, apparently on account of the fact that in this case there is neither increase in quantity nor improvement in quality while lying on public ground. This distinction appears therefore to be not in accordance with the view of Rab, maintaining that the penalty extend not only to the increase but also to the corpus of the object of the nuisance.

(5) I.e. in connection with the latter clause.

(6) Which shows that the penalty does not extend to the corpus.

(7) Even to straw and stubble.

(8) [V. D.S. a.l.]

(9) According to the view of Rab.

(10) For, since there is no gain, nobody is likely to be tempted to place dung on public ground.

(11) Even before any gain accrued.

(12) Although no increase will ever accrue there, thus proving that according to Rab the penalty is imposed on the corpus even before it had yielded any gain.

(13) That there is no penalty at all with regard to an object that yields no increase; whereas the query is based on the principle laid down by R. Nahman.

(14) Where no increase will ever accrue.

(15) Which is against the biblical prohibition of Ex. XXII, 24.

(16) Cf. B.M. 72a.

(17) Extending the penalty also to the corpus.

(18) I.e., the Sages who maintain that the penalty attaches only to the increase.

(19) For R. Simeon b. Gamaliel is certainly against his view.

(20) To extend the penalty to the corpus.

(21) As to whether people should be encouraged to avail themselves of it, or not.

(22) For the sake of not disturbing public peace.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 31a

the refuse of boiled dates [that had been placed on public ground] ownerless? We can well understand this in the case of R. Adda b. Ahabah who acted in accordance with his own dictum, but in the case of R. Huna, are we to say that he changed his view? — These owners [in that case] had been warned [several times not to repeat the nuisance].[1]

MISHNAH. IF TWO POTTERS WERE FOLLOWING ONE ANOTHER AND THE FIRST STUMBLED AND FELL DOWN AND THE SECOND STUMBLED BECAUSE OF THE FIRST, THE FIRST IS LIABLE FOR THE DAMAGE DONE TO THE SECOND.

GEMARA. R. Johanan said: Do not think [that the Tanna of] this Mishnah is R. Meir who considers stumbling as implying carelessness that involves liability.[2] For even according to the Rabbis who maintain [that stumbling is] mere accident for which there is exemption,[2] there should be liability here where he[3] had [meanwhile had every possibility] to rise and nevertheless did not rise. [But] R. Nahman b. Isaac said: You may even say that [the Mishnah speaks also of a case] where he[3] did not yet have [any opportunity] to rise, for he[3] was [surely able] to caution[4] and nevertheless did not caution. R. Johanan, however, considers that where he[3] did not yet have [any opportunity] to rise, he[3] could hardly be expected to caution as he was [surely] somewhat distracted.

We have learnt: If the carrier of the beam was in front, the carrier of the barrel behind, and the barrel broke by [colliding with] the beam, he[5] is exempt. But if the carrier of the beam stopped suddenly, he is liable.[6] Now, does this not mean that he stopped for the purpose of shouldering the beam as is usual with carriers, and it yet says that he is liable, [presumably] because [he failed] to caution?[7] — No, he suddenly stopped to rest [which is rather unusual in the course of carrying]. But what should be the law[8] in the case where he stopped to shoulder the beam? Would there then be exemption? Why then state in the subsequent clause,[9] 'Where he, however, warned the carrier of the barrel to stop, he is exempt'? Could the distinction not be made in the statement of the same case [in the following manner]: 'Provided that he stopped to rest; but if he halted to shift the burden on his shoulder, he is exempt'? — It was, however, intended to let us know that even where he stopped to rest, if he warned the carrier of the barrel to stop, he is exempt.

Come and hear: If a number of potters or glass-carriers were walking in line and the first stumbled and fell and the second stumbled because of the first and the third because of the second, the first is liable for the damage [occasioned] to the second, and the second is liable for the damage [occasioned] to the third. Where, however, they all fell because of the first, the first is liable for the damage [sustained] by them all. If [on the other hand] they cautioned one another, there is exemption. Now, does this teaching not deal with a case where there has not yet been [any opportunity] to rise?[10] — No, [on the contrary] they [have already] had [every opportunity] to rise. But what should be the law[8] in the case where they [have not yet] had [any opportunity] to rise? Would there then be exemption? If so, why state in the concluding clause, 'If [on the other hand] they cautioned one another, there is exemption'? Could the distinction not be made in the statement of the same case [in the following manner]: 'Provided that they have already had every opportunity to rise; but if they have not yet had any opportunity to rise, there is exemption'? — This is what it intended to let us know: That even where they [have already] had [every opportunity] to rise, if they cautioned one another, there is exemption.

Raba said: The first is liable for damage [done] to the second whether directly by his person[11] or by means of his chattels,[12] whereas the second is liable for damage to the third only if done by his person[13] but not if caused by his chattels. [Now,] in any case [how could these rulings be made consistent]? [For] if stumbling implies carelessness, why should not also the second be liable [for all kinds of damage]?[14] If [on the other hand] stumbling does not amount to carelessness, why should even the first not enjoy immunity?

---

(1) It was therefore a specially aggravated offence.

(2) Supra pp. 153 and 155.

(3) The first potter.

(4) The second potter to stop.

(5) The carrier of the beam.

(6) Infra p. 169.

(7) Which would thus support the interpretation given by R. Nahman and contradict the view expounded by R. Johanan.

(8) According to the view of R. Johanan.

(9) Infra p. 170.

(10) V. p. 166, n. 7.

(11) Being subject to the law applicable to damage done by Man.

(12) Which are subject to the law applicable to Pit.

(13) V. p. 167, n. 4

(14) Even if caused by his chattels.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 31b

— The first was certainly [considered] careless,[1] whilst, as to the second, he is liable for damage done by his person, [that is,] only where he [has already] had [the opportunity] to rise and did [nevertheless] not rise; for damage caused by his chattels he is [however] exempt, as he may say to him:[2] It is not I who dug this pit.[3]

An objection was raised [from the following Baraitha]: All of them are liable for damage [done] by their person,[4] but exempt for damage [caused] by their chattels.[4] Does [this Baraitha] not refer even to the first?[5] — No, with the exception of the first. But is it not stated, 'All of them ...'? — R. Adda b. Ahabah said: 'All of them' refers to [all] the plaintiffs.[6] [But] how is this? If you maintain that the first [is] also [included], we understand why the Baraitha says 'All of them'. But if you contend that the first is excepted, what [meaning could there be in] 'All of them'? Why [indeed] not say 'The plaintiffs'? — Raba [therefore] said: The first[7] is liable for both injuries inflicted upon the person of the second and damage caused to the chattels of the second, whereas the second[8] is liable to compensate the third only for injuries inflicted upon his person but not for damage[9] to his chattels; the reason being that the [person of the] second is subject to the law applicable to Pit, and no case can be found where Pit would involve liability for inanimate objects.[10] This accords well with the view of Samuel, who holds that all nuisances are [subject to the law applicable to] Pit.[11] But according to Rab who maintains that it is only where the nuisance has been abandoned that this is so, whereas if not [abandoned] it is not so,[12] what reason could be advanced?[13] — We must therefore accept the first version,[14] and as to the objection raised by you [from the Baraitha], 'All of them are liable',[15] it has already been interpreted by R. Adda b. Minyomi in the presence of Rabina to refer to a case where inanimate objects have been damaged by the chattels [of the defendant].[16]

The Master stated: 'Where, however, they all fell because of the first, the first is liable for the damage [sustained] by them all.' How [indeed can they all] fall [because of the first]? — R. Papa said: Where he blocked the road like a carcass, [closing the whole width of the road]. R. Zebid said: Like a blind man's staff.[17]

MISHNAH. IF ONE COMES WITH HIS BARREL AND AN OTHER COMES WITH HIS BEAM AND THE PITCHER[18] OF THIS ONE BREAKS BY [COLLISION WITH] THE BEAM OF THIS ONE, HE[19] IS EXEMPT, FOR THE ONE IS ENTITLED TO WALK [THERE AND CARRY BEAMS] AND THE OTHER IS ENTITLED TO WALK [THERE AND CARRY BARRELS]. WHERE THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM WAS IN FRONT, AND THE CARRIER OF THE BARREL BEHIND, AND THE BARREL BROKE BY [COLLISION WITH] THE BEAM, THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM IS EXEMPT.[20]

---

(1) [Since stumbling implies carelessness.]

(2) To the third.

(3) I.e., the nuisance was created not by the second, but caused by the first who fell.

(4) Whether to the person or to the chattels of the plaintiff.

(5) Who, according to Raba, is liable for damage caused even by his chattels to the person of the second as being subject to the law applicable to Pit. This Baraitha thus refutes Raba.

(6) The first is thus, as a matter of course, not included.

(7) Being subject to the law applicable to damage done by Man.

(8) Should be subject to the law applicable in Pit.

(9) Though done by the person of the second.

(10) Supra p. 18.

(11) Supra p. 150. [The person of the second may therefore be treated as Pit.]

(12) But is subject to the law applicable to Ox where damage to inanimate objects is also compensated.

(13) For the person of the second, though lying on the ground, has surely never been abandoned by him. Why then exemption for damage done by him to inanimate objects?

(14) Of the statement of Raba, according to which the first is liable for damage done whether by his person or by his chattels, whereas the second is liable for damage done only by his person but not if done by his chattels.

(15) For damage done by their person, but exempt for damage done by their chattels, including thus also the first.

(16) Which are subject to the laws of Pit involving no liability for inanimate objects. Were, however, the person of the plaintiff to have been injured, there would be no exemption even if the injury were caused by the chattels of the first, as expounded by Raba.

(17) [With which the blind gropes his way on either side of the road.]

(18) Cf. supra p. 142.

(19) The owner of the beam.

(20) For the carrier of the barrel who was behind should not have proceeded so fast.

BUT IF THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM [SUDDENLY] STOPPED, HE IS LIABLE.[1] IF, HOWEVER, HE CRIED TO THE CARRIER OF THE BARREL, HALT!' HE IS EXEMPT. WHERE, HOWEVER, THE CARRIER OF THE BARREL WAS IN FRONT, AND THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM BEHIND AND THE BARREL BROKE BY [COLLISION WITH] THE BEAM, HE IS LIABLE.[2] IF, HOWEVER, THE CARRIER OF THE BARREL [SUDDENLY] STOPPED, HE IS EXEMPT. BUT WHERE HE CRIED TO THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM, 'HALT!' HE IS LIABLE. THE SAME APPLIES TO ONE CARRYING A [BURNING] CANDLE WHILE ANOTHER WAS PROCEEDING WITH FLAX.

GEMARA. Rabbah b. Nathan questioned R. Huna: If a man injures his wife through conjugal intercourse, what is [the legal position]? Since he performed this act with full permission is he to be exempt [for damage resulting therefrom], or should perhaps greater care have been taken by him? — He said to him. We have learnt it: ... FOR THE ONE IS ENTITLED TO WALK [THERE AND CARRY BEAMS] AND THE OTHER IS ENTITLED TO WALK [THERE AND CARRY BARRELS].[3] Raba [however] said: There is an a fortiori [to the contrary]: If in the case of the Wood,[4] where this one [the defendant] was entering [as if] into his own domain, and the other [the plaintiff] was [similarly] entering [as if] into his own domain, it is nevertheless considered [in the eye of the law][4] that he entered his fellow's [the plaintiff's] domain, and he is made liable, should this case[5] where this one [the defendant][6] was actually entering the domain of his fellow [the plaintiff][7] not be all the more [subject to the same law]?[8] But surely [the Mishnah] states, . . . FOR THE ONE IS ENTITLED TO WALK THERE [AND CARRY BEAMS] AND THE OTHER IS ENTITLED TO WALK [THERE AND CARRY BARRELS, indicating exemption where the entry was sanctioned]! — There, both of the parties were simultaneously [active against each other], whereas here[9] it was only he[10] that committed the deed. Is she[11] [considered] not [to have participated in the act at all]? Is it not written, The souls that commit them shall be cut off from among their people?[12] — [It is true that] enjoyment is derived by both of them, but it is only he to whom the active part can be ascribed.

WHERE THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM WAS IN FRONT etc. Resh Lakish stated:[13] In the case of two cows on public ground, one lying down [maliciously] and the other walking about, if the one that was walking kicked the one that was lying, there is exemption [since the latter too misconducted itself by laying itself down on public ground], whereas if the one that was lying kicked the one that was walking, there is liability to pay. May not [the following be cited in] support of this:[14] WHERE THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM WAS IN FRONT AND THE CARRIER OF THE BARREL BEHIND, AND THE BARREL BROKE BY [COLLISION WITH] THE BEAM, HE IS EXEMPT. BUT IF THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM [SUDDENLY] STOPPED HE IS LIABLE. For surely [this latter case] here is similar to that of the lying cow kicking the walking cow,[15] and liability is stated! — But do you really think that this [liability] need be proved?[14] [The Mishnaic text however] not only fails to be of any support [in this respect], but affords a contradiction to Resh Lakish, [in whose view] the reason [even for the liability] is that the lying cow kicked the walking cow, thus [implying] that [the latter] sustained damage [because of the former cow] through sheer accident, and there would be exemption. Now, [the case of] the Mishnah surely deals with accidental damage, and still states liability? — The Mishnah [deals with a case] where the beam blocked the [whole] passage as if by a carcass,[16] whereas here [in the case dealt with by Resh Lakish] the cow was lying on one side of the road so that the other cow should have passed on the other side.[17]

But the concluding clause may [be taken to] support Resh Lakish. For it is stated, BUT IF THE CARRIER OF THE BARREL WAS IN FRONT AND THE CARRIER OF THE BEAM BEHIND, AND THE BARREL BROKE BY [COLLISION WITH] THE BEAM, HE IS LIABLE. IF, HOWEVER, THE CARRIER OF THE BARREL [SUDDENLY] STOPPED, HE IS EXEMPT.

Now, surely this case resembles that of the walking cow kicking the lying cow,[18] and the text states exemption? — No! The Mishnah [deals with the case where the damage was done in a usual manner as] he[19] was passing in the ordinary way, whereas here [in the case dealt with by Resh Lakish] it may be argued for the lying cow,[20] 'Even if you are entitled to tread upon me, you have still no right to kick me.'[21]

MISHNAH. IF TWO [PERSONS] WERE PASSING ONE ANOTHER ON PUBLIC GROUND, ONE [OF THEM] RUNNING AND THE OTHER WALKING OR BOTH OF THEM RUNNING, AND THEY WERE INJURED BY EACH OTHER, BOTH OF THEM ARE EXEMPT.[22]

GEMARA. Our Mishnah is not in accordance with Issi b. Judah. For it has been taught: Issi b. Judah maintains that the man who had been running is liable, since his conduct was unusual. Issi, however, agrees [that if it were] on a Sabbath eve before sunset there would be exemption, for running at that time is permissible. R. Johanan stated that the halachah is in accordance with Issi b. Judah. But did R. Johanan [really] maintain this? Has R. Johanan not laid down the rule that the halachah is in accordance with [the ruling of] an anonymous Mishnah?[23] Now, did we not learn . . . ONE [OF THEM] RUNNING AND THE OTHER WALKING OR BOTH OF THEM RUNNING . . . BOTH OF THEM ARE EXEMPT? — Our Mishnah [deals with a case] of a Sabbath eve before sunset. What proof have you of that? — From the text, OR BOTH OF THEM RUNNING . . . BOTH OF THEM ARE EXEMPT; [for indeed] what need was there for this to be inserted? If in the case where one was running and the other walking there is exemption, could there be any doubt[24] where both of them were running?[25] It must accordingly mean thus: ' Where one was running and the other walking there is exemption; provided, however, it was on a Sabbath eve before sunset. For if on a weekday, [in the case of] one running and the other walking there would be liability, [whereas where] both of them were running even though on a weekday they would be exempt.'

The Master stated: 'Issi, however, agrees [that if it were] on a Sabbath eve before sunset there would be exemption, for running at that time is permissible.' On Sabbath eve, why is it permissible? — As [shown by] R. Hanina: for R. Hanina used to say:[26]

---

(1) For he is to blame.

(2) For the carrier of the beam, who was in this case second, should have taken care to keep at a reasonable distance.

(3) This proves that where the act is sanctioned no liability is involved.

(4) Referring to Deut. XIX,5: As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree and the head slippeth from the helve and lighteth upon his neighbour ... cf. also infra p. 175

(5) I.e., the problem in hand.

(6) The husband.

(7) The wife.

(8) Of liability.

(9) V. p. 170 n. 6.

(10) I.e the husband.

(11) I.e the wife.

(12) Lev. XVIII, 29. [The plural indicates that both are regarded as having participated in the act.]

(13) Supra pp. 98 and 124.

(14) I.e., that misconduct involves liability for damage that may result.

(15) As here, too, the offender is to blame for misconduct.

(16) Consequently the liability extends even to accidental damage.

(17) [There could therefore be no liability attached except where the lying cow maliciously kicked her, but not for accidental damage.]

(18) In that there was contributory misconduct on the part of the plaintiff and his cow respectively.

(19) The carrier of the beam.

(20) Lit ‘she can say to her’.
(21) It was therefore requisite that Resh Lakish should express his rejection of this plausible argument.
(22) So long as they had no intention of injuring each other.
(23) Cf. supra p. 158.
(24) That there should be exemption.
(25) Where there was contributory negligence.
(26) Cf. Shab. 119a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 32b

‘Come, let us go forth to meet the bride, the queen!’ Some [explicitly] read:’. . . to meet Sabbath, the bride, the queen.’ R. Jannai, [however,] while dressed in his Sabbath attire used to remain standing and say: ‘Come thou, O queen, come thou, O queen!’

MISHNAH. IF A MAN SPLITS WOOD ON PRIVATE PREMISES[1] AND DOES DAMAGE ON PUBLIC GROUND, OR ON PUBLIC GROUND AND DOES DAMAGE ON PRIVATE PREMISES,[2] OR ON PRIVATE PREMISES[3] AND DOES DAMAGE ON ANOTHER'S PRIVATE PREMISES, HE IS LIABLE.

GEMARA. And [all the cases enumerated] are necessary [as serving respective purposes]. For if the Mishnah had stated only the case of splitting wood on private premises and doing damage on public ground, [the ruling could have been ascribed to the fact] that the damage occurred at a place where many people were to be found, whereas in the case of splitting wood on public ground and doing damage on private premises, since the damage occurred in a place where many people were not to be found, the opposite ruling might have been suggested.[4] Again, if the Mishnah had dealt only with the case of splitting wood on public ground and doing damage on private premises,[5] [the ruling could have been explained] on the ground that the act[6] was even at the very outset unlawful, whereas in the case of splitting wood on private premises[3] and doing damage on public ground, [in view of the fact] that the act[6] [as such] was quite lawful, the opposite view might have been suggested.[4] Again, if the Mishnah had dealt only with these two cases [the ruling could have been explained in] the one case on account of the damage having occurred at a place where many people were to be found, and [in] the other on account of the unlawfulness of the act,[6] whereas in the case of splitting wood on private premises[3] and doing damage on another's private premises, since the damage occurred in a place where many people were not to be found and the act[6] was quite lawful even at the very outset, the opposite view might have been suggested.[4] It was [hence] essential [to state explicitly all these cases].

Our Rabbis taught: ‘If a man entered the workshop of a joiner without permission and a chip of wood flew off and struck him in the face and killed him, he [the joiner] is exempt.[7] But if he entered with [the] permission [of the joiner], he is liable.’ Liable for what? — R. Jose b. Hanina said: He is liable for the four [additional] items,[8] whereas regarding the law of refuge[9] he is [still] exempt on account of the fact that the [circumstances of this] case do not [exactly] resemble those of the Wood.[10] For in the case of the Wood the one [the plaintiff] was entering [as if] into his own domain and the other [the defendant] was [similarly] entering [as if] into his own domain, whereas in this case the one [the plaintiff] had [definitely] been entering into his fellow's [the defendant's] workshop. Raba [however,] said: There is an a fortiori [to the contrary]: If in the case of the Wood where the one [the plaintiff] was entering to his own [exclusive] knowledge and that one [the defendant] was similarly entering of his own accord, it is nevertheless considered [in the eye of the law][10] as if he had entered with the consent of his fellow [the defendant] who thus becomes liable to take refuge, should the case before us, where the one [the plaintiff] entered the workshop with the knowledge of his fellow [the joiner], be not all the more subject to the same liability? Raba therefore said: What is meant by being exempt from [being subject to the law of] refuge is that the sin could not be expiated by mere refuge; the real reason of the statement of R. Jose b. Hanina being this: that his offence,[11] though committed inadvertently, approaches wilful carelessness.[12] Raba [on his own part] raised [however] an objection: If an officer of the Court inflicted on him[13] an additional [unauthorized] stroke, from which he died, he [the officer] is liable to take refuge on his account.[14] Now, does not [the offence] here committed inadvertently approach wilful carelessness?[12] For surely he had to bear in mind that a person might sometimes die just through one [additional] stroke. Why then state, 'he is liable to take refuge on his account'? — R. Shimi of Nehardea there upon said: [The officer committed the offence as he] made a mistake in [counting] the number [of strokes]. [But] Naba tapped R. Shimi's shoe[15] and said to him: Is it he who is responsible for the counting [of the strokes]? Was it not taught: The senior judge recites [the prescribed verses],[16] the second [to him] conducts the counting [of the strokes], and the third directs each stroke to be administered?[17] — No, said R. Shimi of Nehardea; it was the judge himself who made the mistake in counting.

A [further] objection was raised: If a man throws a stone into a public thoroughfare and kills [thereby a human being], he is liable to take refuge.[18] Now, does not [the offence] here committed inadvertently approach wilful carelessness?[19] For surely he had to bear in mind that on a public thoroughfare many people were to be found, yet it states, 'he is liable to take refuge'? — R. Samuel b. Isaac said: The offender [threw the stone while he] was pulling down his wall.[20] But should he not have kept his eyes open? — He was pulling it down at night . But even at night time, should he not have kept his eyes open? — He was [in fact] pulling his wall down in the day time, [but was throwing it] towards a dunghill. [But] how are we to picture this dunghill? If many people were to be found there, is it not a case of wilful carelessness?[19] If [on the other hand] many were not to be found there, is it not sheer accident?[21] — R. Papa [thereupon] said: It could [indeed] have no application unless in the case of a dunghill where it was customary for people to resort at night time, but not customary to resort during the day, though it occasionally occurred that some might come to sit there [even in the day time]. [It is therefore] not a case of wilful carelessness since it was not customary for people to resort there during the day. Nor is it sheer accident since it occasionally occurred that some people did come to sit there [even in the day time].

R. Papa in the name of Raba referred [the remark of R. Jose b. Hanina] to the commencing clause: 'If a man entered the workshop of a joiner without permission and a chip of wood flew off and struck him in the face and killed him, he is exempt.' And R. Jose b. Hanina [thereupon] remarked; He would be liable for the four [additional] items,[22] though he is exempt from [having to take] refuge.[23] He who refers this remark to the concluding clause[24] will, with more reason, refer it to the commencing clause,[25] whereas he who refers it to the commencing clause[25] maintains that, in the [case dealt with] in the concluding clause where the entrance had been made with [the] permission [of the joiner], he would be liable to take refuge.[23] But would he be liable to take refuge [in that case]?[24] Was it not taught: If a man enters the workshop of a smith and sparks fly off and strike him in the face causing his death, he [the smith] is exempt[26] even where the entrance had been made by permission of the smith? — [In this Baraitha] here, we are dealing with an apprentice of the smith. Is an apprentice of a smith to be killed [with impunity]? — Where his master had been urging him to leave but he did not leave. But even where his master had been urging him to leave, [which he did not do,] may he be killed [with impunity]? — Where the master believed that he had already left. If so, why should not the same apply also to a stranger?

---

(1) I.e., his own premises.

(2) Of a neighbour.

(3) V. p. 173, n. 5.

(4) Lit., 'I might have said no'.

(5) V. p. 173. n. 6.

(6) Of splitting wood.

(7) From fleeing to the city of refuge. Cf. Num. XXXV, 11-28,Deut. XIX, 4-6; and supra p. 137.

(8) In the case of mere injury; cf. supra p. 133.
(9) Laid down in the case of manslaughter.
(10) Referred to in the verse, As when a man goes into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die, he shall flee unto one of those cities, and live; Deut. XIX, 5. Cf. also supra p. 170.
(11) I.e., that of the joiner.
(12) In which case the taking of refuge is insufficient; cf. e.g. Num. XXXV, 16-21, and Deut. XIX, 11-13.
(13) On an offender sentenced to lashes.
(14) The victim's. Mak. III, 14.
(15) To draw his attention.
(16) Deut. XXVIII, 58 etc.; Ps LXXVIII, 38.
(17) Lit., says, "Smite him". Mak. 23a.
(18) Ibid. II. 2.
(19) In which case the taking of refuge is insufficient; cf. e.g. Num XXXV, 16-21 and Deut. XIX, 11-13.
(20) Cf. Mak. 8a.
(21) Why then be subject to the law of refuge?
(22) In the case of mere injury; cf. supra p. 133.
(23) In the case of manslaughter.
(24) Where the entrance had been made with the knowledge of the joiner.
(25) Where the entrance had been made without any imitation.
(26) From having to take refuge.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 33a

— A stranger need not fear the master-smith[1] whereas the apprentice is in fear of his master.[2] R. Zebid in the name of Raba referred [the remark of R Jose b. Hanina] to the following: [The verse,] And [it] lighteth [upon his neighbour],[3] excludes [a case] where the neighbour brings himself [within the range of the missile]. Hence the statement made by R. Eliezer b. Jacob: If a man lets [fly] a stone out of his hand and another [at that moment] puts out his head [through a window] and receives the blow [and is killed], he is exempt.[4] [Now, it was with reference to this case that] R. Jose b. Hanina said: He is exempt from having to take refuge,[5] but he would be liable for the four [additional] items.[6] He who refers this remark to this [last] case will with more reason refer it to the cases dealt with previously,[7] whereas he who refers it to those dealt with previously[7] would maintain that in this [last] case[8] the exemption is from all [kinds of liability].

Our Rabbis taught: If employees come to [the private residence of] their employer to demand their wages from him and [it so happens that] their employer's ox gores them or their employer's dog bites them, with fatal results, he [the employer] is exempt [from ransom].[9] Others,[10] however, maintain that employees have the right to [come and] demand their wages from their employer. Now, what were the circumstances [of the case]? If the employer could be found in [his] city [offices], what reason [could be adduced] for [the view maintained by] the 'Others'.[10] If [on the other hand] he could be found only at home, what reason [could be given] for [the anonymous view expressed by] the first Tanna? — No, the application [of the case] is where the employer could [sometimes] be found [in his city offices] but could not [always] be found [there]. The employees therefore called at his [private] door, when the reply was 'Yes'. One view[11] maintains that 'Yes' implies: 'Enter and come in.' But the other view[12] maintains that 'Yes' may signify: 'Remain standing in the place where you are.' It has indeed been taught in accordance with the view[12] maintaining that 'Yes' may [in this case] signify: 'Remain standing in the place where you are.' For it has been taught: 'If an employee enters the [private] residence of his employer to demand his wages from him and the employer's ox gores him or the employer's dog bites him, he [the employer] is exempt even where the entrance had been made by permission.' Why should there indeed be exemption[13] unless in the case where he called at the door and the employer said: 'Yes'? This thus proves that 'Yes' [in such a case] signifies: ‘Remain standing in the place where you are.

MISHNAH. IN THE CASE OF TWO TAM OXEN INJURING EACH OTHER, THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE WILL BE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE LAW OF HALF-DAMAGES.[14] WHERE BOTH WERE MU'AD THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE WILL BE IN FULL.[14] WHERE ONE WAS TAM AND THE OTHER MU'AD THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE FOR DAMAGE DONE BY MU'AD TO TAM WILL BE ON THE BASIS OF FULL COMPENSATION, WHEREAS THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE FOR DAMAGE DONE BY TAM TO MU'AD WILL BE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE LAW OF HALF-DAMAGES. SIMILARLY IN THE CASE OF TWO PERSONS INJURING EACH OTHER, THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE WILL BE IN FULL. WHERE MAN HAS DAMAGED MU'AD AND MU'AD HAS INJURED MAN, THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE WILL BE IN FULL. BUT WHERE MAN DAMAGED TAM AND TAM INJURED MAN, THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE FOR DAMAGE DONE BY MAN TO TAM WILL BE ON THE BASIS OF FULL COMPENSATION, WHEREAS THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE FOR DAMAGE DONE BY TAM TO MU'AD WILL BE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE LAW OF HALF-DAMAGES. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAYS: EVEN IN THE CASE OF TAM INJURING MAN THE PAYMENT OF THE DIFFERENCE WILL BE IN FULL.[15]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [The words of the Torah] According to this judgement shall be done unto it[16] [imply that] the judgement in the case of Ox damaging ox applies also in the case of Ox injuring man. Just as where Ox has damaged ox half-damages are paid in the case of Tam and full compensation in the case of Mu'ad, so also where Ox has injured man only half damages will be paid in the case of Tam and full compensation in the case of Mu'ad. R. Akiba, however, says: [The words,] ‘According to this judgement’ refer to [the ruling that would apply to the circumstances described in] the latter verse[17] and not in the former verse.[18] Could this then mean that the [full] payment is to be made out of the best [of the estate]?[19] [Not so; for] it is stated ‘Shall it be done unto it [self],’ to emphasise that payment will be made out of the body of Tam, but no payment is to be made out of any other source whatsoever.[20] According to the Rabbis then, what purpose is served by the word ‘this’? — To exempt from liability for the four [additional] items.[21] Whence then does R. Akiba derive the exemption [in this case] from liability for the four [additional] items? — He derives it from the text, And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour[22] [which indicates that there is liability only where] Man injures his neighbour but not where Ox injures the neighbour [of the owner]. And the Rabbis?[23] — Had the deduction been from that text we might have referred it exclusively to Pain,[24] but as to Medical Expenses and Loss of Time[25] we might have held there is still a liability to pay. We are therefore told[26] [that this is not the case].

MISHNAH. IF AN OX [TAM] OF THE VALUE OF ONE HUNDRED ZUZ HAS GORED AN OX OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED ZUZ AND THE CARCASS HAD NO VALUE AT ALL, THE PLAINTIFF WILL TAKE POSSESSION OF THE [DEFENDANT'S] OX [THAT DID THE DAMAGE].[27]

GEMARA. Who is the author of our Mishnah? — It is R. Akiba, as it has been taught: The ox [that did the damage] has to be assessed by the Court of law;[28] this is the view of R. Ishmael. R. Akiba, however, says: The [body of the] ox becomes transferred [to the plaintiff]. What is the point at issue? — R. Ishmael maintains that he [the plaintiff] is but a creditor and that he has only a claim of money against him [the defendant], whereas R. Akiba is of the opinion that they both [the plaintiff and defendant] become the owners in common of the ox[29] [that did the damage]. They [thus also] differ as to the interpretation of the verse, Then they shall sell the live ox and divide the money of it.[30] R. Ishmael maintains that it is the Court on which this injunction is laid by Divine Law,[31] whereas R. Akiba is of the opinion that it is the plaintiff and defendant on which it is laid.[32] What is the practical difference between R. Ishmael and R. Akiba? — There is a practical difference between them where the plaintiff consecrated the ox [that did the damage].[33]

Raba put the following question to R. Nahman: Should the defendant meanwhile dispose of the ox, what would be the law according to R. Ishmael? [Shall we say that] since R. Ishmael considers the plaintiff to be a creditor whose claim [against the defendant] is only regarding money, the sale is valid, or that

---

(1) Who should thus have borne in mind that the stranger might not yet have left the place. The smith should therefore not yet have allowed the the sparks to fly off.
(2) Who should not resonably have expected him to have still been there.
(3) Deut. XIX, 5; v. supra, p. 175, n. 3.
(4) Cf. Mak. 8a.
(5) In the case of manslaughter.
(6) Since it was an act of negligence to throw a stone where people are to be found.
(7) In the case of the joiner, who at least knew that a newcomer had entered his workshop.
(8) Dealt with by R. Eliezer b. Jacob, where the defendant is to blame as he put out his head after the stone had already been in motion.
(9) For which cf. Ex. XXI, 30. The vicious beast is, however, stoned; v. supra p. 118.
(10) According to Hor. 13b, the views of R. Meir were sometimes quoted thus; cf. however Ber. 9b; Sot. 12a; A.Z. 64b.
(11) I.e., that of 'Others'.
(12) Put forward by the first Tanna.
(13) Where the entrance had been made by permission.
(14) Cf. supra p. 73.
(15) Cf supra p. 15.
(16) Ex. XXI, 31.
(17) Ibid. XXI, 29 dealing with Mu'ad.
(18) Ibid. XXI, 28 dealing with Tam.
(19) As in the case of an injury done by Mu'ad. Cf. supra, p. 73.
(20) Cf. supra p. 15.
(21) V. supra p. 133.
(22) Lev. XXIV, 19.
(23) [Wherefore apply 'this' to deduce exemption from the four items, since that is already derived from this latter verse?]
(24) The liability for which is not in respect of an actual loss of value.
(25) The liability for which is in respect of an actual loss of money sustained.
(26) By the expression 'this'.
(27) As the full value of it corresponds in this case to the amount of half-damages.
(28) And if its value is not less than the amount of the half-damages, the defendant will have to pay that amount in full, whereas where the value of the ox that did the damage is less than the amount of the half-damages, the defendant will have to pay no more than the actual value of the ox that did the damage.
(29) Where its value is more than the amount of the half-damages.
(30) Ex. XXI, 35.
(31) I.e., to sell the live ox which is still the property of the defendant.
(32) As the live ox became their property in common where its value had been more than the amount of the half-damages.
(33) [According to R. Ishmael the consecration is of no legal effect, whereas R. Akiba would declare it valid.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 33b

since the ox is mortgaged to the plaintiff,[1] the defendant has no right [to dispose of it]? — He replied: The sale is not valid. But has it not been taught: In the case of [the defendant] having disposed of the ox, the sale is valid? — The plaintiff will still be entitled to come forward and distrain on it [from the purchaser].[2] But if he is entitled to come forward and distrain on it, to what purpose is the sale valid? — For the ploughing [the ox did with the purchaser].[3] Can we infer from this that in the case of a debtor having sold his chattels, a Court of law will distrain on them for a creditor?[4] — The case there [of the ox][5] is altogether different, since the ox is regarded as if [the owner] had mortgaged it [for half-damages]. But did Raba not say[6] that where a debtor has mortgaged his slave and then sold him [to a third person] the creditor is entitled to distrain on him, whereas where an ox has been mortgaged and then sold [to a third party] the creditor cannot distrain on it?[7] — Is not the reason in the case of the slave that the transaction has been widely talked about?[8] So also in the case of this ox; since it gored it has been talked about, and the name 'The ox that gored' given it.

R. Tahlifa the Western[9] recited in the presence of R. Abbahu: 'Where he sold the ox, the sale is not valid, but where he consecrated it [to the altar], the consecration holds good.' Who sold it? Shall I say the defendant? [In that case the opening clause,] 'Where he sold the ox, the sale is not valid', would be in accordance with the view of R. Akiba that the ox becomes transferred [to the plaintiff], while [the concluding clause.] 'Where he consecrated it, the consecration holds good' could follow only the view of R. Ishmael who said that the ox has to be assessed by the Court. If [on the other hand, it has been disposed of by] the plaintiff, would not [the opening clause.] 'Where he sold the ox, the sale is not valid', be in accordance with the view of R. Ishmael, while [the concluding clause.,] 'Where he consecrated it, the consecration holds good' could follow only the view of R. Akiba? — We may still say that it was the defendant [who disposed of it], and yet [both rulings] will be in agreement with all. 'Where he sold the ox, the sale is valid' [may be explained] even in accordance with R. Ishmael, for the ox is mortgaged to the plaintiff. 'Where he consecrated it, the consecration holds good,' [may again be interpreted] even in accordance with R. Akiba, on account of [the reason given] by R. Abbahu; for R. Abbahu [elsewhere] stated:[10] An extra precaution was taken[11] lest people should say that consecrated objects could lose their status even without any act of redemption.[12]

Our Rabbis taught: If an ox does damage while still Tam, then, as long as its case has not been brought up in Court, if it is sold the sale is valid; if it is consecrated, the consecration holds good; if slaughtered and given away as a gift, what has been done is legally effective. But after the case has come into Court,[13] if it is sold the sale is not valid; if consecrated, the consecration does not hold good; if slaughtered and given away as a gift, the acts have no legal effect; so also where [other] creditors stepped in first and distrained on the ox [while in the hands of the defendant], no matter whether the debt had been incurred before the goring took place or whether the goring had occurred before the debt was incurred, the distraint is not legally effective, since the compensation [for the damage][14] must be made out of the body of the ox [that did it].[15] But in the case of Mu'ad doing damage there is no difference whether the case had already been brought into Court or whether it had not yet come into Court; if it has been sold, the sale is valid; if consecrated, the consecration holds good; if slaughtered and given away as a gift, what has been done is legally effective, where [other] creditors have stepped in and distrained on the ox, no matter whether the debt had been contracted before the goring took place or whether the goring had taken place before the debt was incurred, the distraint is legally effective, since the compensation is paid out of the best of the general estate [of the defendant].[16]

The Master stated: 'If it is sold, the sale is valid'. [This can refer] to ploughing [done by the ox while with the vendee]. 'If consecrated, the consecration holds good'; on account of the reason given by R. Abbahu. 'If slaughtered and given away as a gift, what has been done is legally effective'. We can quite understand that where it has been given away as a gift the act should be legally effective, in respect of the ploughing [meanwhile done by the ox]. But in the case of it having been slaughtered, why should [the claimant] not come and obtain payment out of the flesh? Was it not taught: '[The] live [ox]:[17] this states the rule for when it was alive; whence do we know that the same holds good even after it has been slaughtered? Because it says further: And they shall sell the ox,[17] i.e., in all circumstances'? — R. Shizbe therefore said: What is referred to must be the diminution in value occasioned by its having been slaughtered.[18] R. Huna the son of Joshua thereupon said: This proves that if a man impairs securities mortgaged to his creditor, he incurs no liability. Is this not obvious?[19] — It might perhaps have been suggested that it was only there[20] where the defendant could argue, ' I have not deprived you of anything at all [of the quantity]', and could even say, 'it is only the mere breath [of life] that I have taken away from your security' [that there should be exemption], whereas in the case of impairing securities in general there should be liability; we are therefore told [that this is not the case]. But has not this been pointed out by Rabbah? For has not Rabbah stated: 'If a man destroys by fire the documents of a neighbour, he incurs no liability'?[21] — It might perhaps have been suggested that it was only there where the defendant could contend 'It was only a mere piece of paper of yours that has actually been burnt' [that there should be exemption], whereas in the case [of spoiling a field held as security] by digging there pits, ditches and caves there should be liability; we are therefore told that [this is not so, for] in the case here the damage resembles that occasioned by digging pits, ditches and caves,[22] and yet it is laid down that 'what has been done is legally effective'.

'Where [other] creditors stepped in first and distrained on the ox [in the hands of the defendant] no matter whether the debt had been incurred before the goring took place or whether the goring had taken place before the debt was incurred, the distraint is not legally effective, since the compensation must be made out of the body of the ox [that did the damage].' We understand this where the goring has taken place before the debt was incurred, in which case the plaintiff for damages has priority. But [why should it be so] where the debt has been contracted before the goring took place, [seeing that in that case] the creditor for the debt has priority?

---

(1) For if payment were not forthcoming the plaintiff would be entitled to distrain on the ox to the extent of the amount of the half-damages.

(2) V. p. 181, n. 8.

(3) Who will thus not have to pay for the use of the animal, [or, who will be permitted to put the ox to such service, v. Wilna Gaon, Glosses.]

(4) Whereas according to established law this is usually the case only with immovable property, cf. supra p. 62 but also B.B. 44b.

(5) That did damage by goring while still in the state of Tam.

(6) Supra p. 47. Cf. also B.B. 44b.

(7) Why then distrain on the ox in the case of goring when it had already been sold?

(8) V. B.B. loc. cit.

(9) The Palestinian.

(10) 'Ar. 33a.

(11) In the case of one who consecrates property on which there is a lien of a kethubah or a debt.

(12) It is therefore a better policy to declare the consecration valid and prescribe a nominal sum for redemption.

(13) Since when the ox is legally transferred to the plaintiff.

(14) Which will be only half of the actual amount of the loss sustained.

(15) Cf. supra p. 73.

(16) Cf. Tosef. B.K. V.

(17) Ex. XXI. 35.

(18) For which the defendant is thus not made responsible.

(19) That such an inference could be made; why then the special statement made by R. Huna?

(20) In the case of the ox that had been slaughtered.

(21) Infra p. 570.

(22) Since the damage is visible.

Moreover, even where the goring had taken place before the debt was contracted, was not the creditor actually first [in taking possession of the ox]?[1] Can it be concluded from this that where a creditor of a subsequent date has preceded a creditor of an earlier date in distraining on [the property of the debtor], the distraint is of no legal avail?[2] — No; I may still maintain that [in this case][3] the distraint holds good, whereas in the case there,[4] it is altogether different; as the plaintiff [for damages] may argue,[5] 'Had the ox already been with you [before it gored], would I not have been entitled to distrain on it while in your hands? For surely out of the ox that did the damage I am to be compensated.'

Our Rabbis taught: Where an ox[6] of the value of two hundred [zuz] gored an ox of the same value of two hundred [zuz] and injured it to the amount of fifty zuz, but it so happened that the injured ox [subsequently] improved and reached the value of four hundred zuz, since it can be contended that but for the injury it would have reached the value of eight hundred zuz, compensation will be [still] paid as at the time of the damage.[7] Where it has depreciated, the compensation will be paid in accordance with the value at the time of the case being brought into Court.[8] Where it was the ox which did the damage that [subsequently] improved, the compensation will still be made in accordance with the value at the time of the damage.[9] Where it has [on the other hand] depreciated, the compensation will be made in accordance with the value at the time of the case being brought into Court.[10]

The Master has said: 'Where it was the ox which did the damage that [subsequently] improved, the compensation will still be made as at the time of the damage.' This ruling is in accordance with R. Ishmael, who maintains that the plaintiff is a creditor and he has a pecuniary claim against him [the defendant]. Read now the concluding clause: 'Where it [on the other hand] depreciated, the compensation will be made in accordance with the value at the time of the case being brought into Court'. This ruling, on the other hand, follows the view of R. Akiba, that they both [plaintiff and defendant] become the owners in common [of the ox that did the damage]. [Is it possible that] the first clause should follow the view of R. Ishmael and the second clause follow that of R. Akiba? — No; the whole teaching follows the view of R. Akiba, for we deal here with a case where the improvement was due to the defendant having fattened the ox.[11] If the improvement was due to fattening, how could you explain the opening clause, 'where . . . the injured ox [subsequently] improved and reached the value of four hundred zuz . . . compensation will be paid as at the time of the damage'? For where the improvement was due to the act of fattening [by the owner], what need could there have been to state [that compensation for the original damage has still to be paid]? — R. Papa thereupon said: The ruling in the opening clause[12] applies to all cases, whether where the ox improved by special fattening or where it improved by itself: the statement of the rule was required for the case where the ox improved by itself — even then compensation will be paid as at time of the damage. The ruling in the concluding clause,[13] however, could apply only to a case where the improvement was due to special fattening.

'Where it[14] has depreciated, the compensation will be made in accordance with the value at the time of the case being brought into Court.' Through what can it have depreciated? Shall I say that it has depreciated through hard work? In that case [surely] the defendant can say, 'You cause it to depreciate![15] Could you expect me to pay for it?' — R. Ashi thereupon said: The depreciation [referred to] is due to the injury, in which case the plaintiff is entitled to contend, '[The evil effect of] the horn of your ox is still buried within the suffering animal.'[16]

MISHNAH. WHERE AN OX[17] OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ] GORED AN OX OF THE SAME VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ] AND THE CARCASS HAD NO VALUE AT ALL, R. MEIR SAID THAT IT WAS WITH REFERENCE TO THIS CASE THAT IT IS WRITTEN, AND THEY SHALL SELL THE LIVE OX AND DIVIDE THE MONEY OF IT.[18] R.

JUDAH, HOWEVER, SAID: THIS IS CERTAINLY THE HALACHAH,[19] BUT WHILE YOU FULFIL [BY THIS RULING THE INJUNCTION], 'AND THEY SHALL SELL THE LIVE OX AND DIVIDE THE MONEY OF IT,' YOU DO NOT FULFIL [THE NEXT INJUNCTION], 'AND THE DEAD OX ALSO THEY SHALL DIVIDE.'[20] THE CASE DEALT WITH BY SCRIPTURE IS THEREFORE WHERE AN OX OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ] GORED AN OX OF THE SAME VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ] AND THE CARCASS WAS WORTH FIFTY ZUZ: ONE PARTY WOULD HERE GET HALF OF THE LIVING OX TOGETHER WITH HALF OF THE DEAD OX[21] AND THE OTHER PARTY WOULD SIMILARLY GET HALF OF THE LIVING OX TOGETHER WITH HALF OF THE DEAD OX.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Where an ox of the value of two hundred [zuz] gored an ox of the same value of two hundred [zuz] and the carcass was worth fifty zuz, one party would get half of the living ox together with half of the dead ox and the other party would similarly get half of the living ox together with half of the dead ox. This is the [case of the goring] ox dealt with in the Torah, according to the view of R. Judah. R. Meir, however, says; This is not the [case of the goring] ox dealt with in the Torah, but where an ox of the value of two hundred [zuz] gored an ox of the same value of two hundred [zuz] and the carcass was of no value at all — this is the case regarding which it is laid down, 'And they shall sell the live ox and divide the money of it.' But how could I [in this case] carry out [the other direction],'And the dead ox also they shall divide'? [This only means that] the diminution [in value] brought about by the death[22] has to be [compensated] to the extent of one-half out of the body of the living ox. Now, since [in the former case][23] according to both R. Meir and R. Judah one party will get a hundred and twenty-five [zuz][24] and the other party will similarly get a hundred and twenty-five [zuz], what is the [practical] difference between them? — Raba thereupon said: The difference arises where[25] there has been a decrease in the value of the carcass,[26] R. Meir maintains that the loss in the value of the carcass has to be [wholly] sustained by the plaintiff,[27] whereas R. Judah is of the opinion that the loss in the value of the carcass will be borne by the defendant to the extent of a half.[28] Said Abaye to him:[29] If this be the case, will it not turn out that according to R. Judah

---

(1) Why should then the plaintiff for damages override the right of another creditor who had already taken possession of the ox?

(2) Whereas this is a point on which opinions differ; cf. Keth. 94a.

(3) Dealing with two creditors for loans.

(4) Where one of the creditors was a plaintiff for damages.

(5) Against the other creditor.

(6) In the state of Tam.

(7) And the defendant cannot put up the increase in the value of the injured ox as a defence, for but for the injury the ox might have reached the value of even eight hundred zuz.

(8) To the detriment of the defendant.

(9) This view apparently maintains that the plaintiff does not become an owner of a definite portion in the ox that did the damage, but becomes entitled merely to a certain sum of money to be collected out of the body of that ox.

(10) Seemingly because the plaintiff is according to this ruling regarded as having become at the time the goring took place an owner of a definite portion in the ox which has subsequently depreciated. For if he became entitled to a certain sum of money in the body of that ox, why should he suffer on account of depreciation?

(11) In which case it is only reasonable that the plaintiff should not be entitled to any share in the improvement that resulted from the fattening carried out by the defendant.

(12) Dealing with the case where it was the injured ox that improved and increased in value.

(13) Giving the law where the ox that had done the damage improved.

(14) I.e., the ox that had been injured, dealt with in the opening clause.

(15) By hard work.

(16) The depreciation is thus a direct result of the injury for which the defendant is responsible.

(17) In the state of Tam.

(18) Ex. XXI, 35.
(19) That half-damages should be paid in the case of Tam.
(20) As in the case specified by R. Meir the carcass had no value at all.
(21) Amounting altogether to one hundred and twenty-five zuz. The plaintiff would thus get seventy-five zuz in respect of the damage that amounted to one hundred and fifty zuz. Together with the fifty of the carcass of his ox the sum total will be one hundred and twenty-five zuz.
(22) Of the animal attacked resulting from the injuries inflicted upon it.
(23) Specified by R. Judah, where the carcass was worth fifty zuz.
(24) I.e., half of the value of the living ox and half of the value of the carcass.
(25) Since the death of the attacked ox.
(26) Before it has been sold.
(27) As according to R. Meir, the defendant has no interest whatsoever in the carcass.
(28) Since according to R. Judah, both the defendant and the plaintiff have to divide the value of the carcass.
(29) Raba.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 34b

[injury by] Tam would involve a more severe penalty than [injury by] Mu'ad?[1] And should you maintain that this indeed is so,[2] as we have learned: R. Judah says: In the case of Tam there is liability [where the precaution taken to control the ox has not been adequate] whereas in the case of Mu'ad there is no liability,[3] it may be contended that you only heard R. Judah maintaining this with reference to precaution, which is specified in Scripture,[4] but did you ever hear him say this regarding compensation? Moreover, it has been taught: R. Judah says: One might say that where an ox of the value of a maneh [a hundred zuz] gored an ox of the value of five sela' [i.e., twenty zuz] and the carcass was worth a sela' [i.e., four zuz], one party should get half of the living ox[5] together with half of the dead ox[6] and the other party should similarly get half of the living ox and half of the dead ox?[7] [This cannot be so]; for we reason thus: Has Mu'ad been singled out[8] to entail a more severe penalty or a more lenient one? You must surely say: [to entail] a more severe penalty. Now, if in the case of Mu'ad no payment is made but for the amount of the damage, should this not the more so be true in the case of Tam the [penalty in respect of which is] less severe?[9] — R. Johanan therefore said: The practical difference between them[10] arises where there has been an increase in the value of the carcass, one Master[11] maintaining that it will accrue to the plaintiff whereas the other Master holds that it will be shared equally [by the two parties].[12]

And it is just on account of this view that a difficulty was felt by R. Judah: Now that you say that the Divine Law is lenient to the defendant, allowing him to share in the increase [of the value of the carcass] , you might then presume that where an ox of the value of five sela' [i.e. twenty zuz] gored an ox of the value of a maneh [a hundred zuz] and the carcass was valued at fifty zuz, one party would take half of the living ox[13] together with half of the dead ox[14] and the other party would similarly take half of the living ox and half of the dead ox?[15] Say [this cannot be so, for] where could it elsewhere be found that an offender should [by order of the Court] be made to benefit as you would have the offender here in this case to benefit? It is moreover stated, He shall surely make restitution,[16] [emphasising that] the offender could only have to pay but never to receive payment. Why that additional quotation?[17] — [Otherwise] you might have thought this principle to be confined only to a case where the plaintiff was the loser,[18] and that where no loss would be incurred to the plaintiff — as e.g. where an ox of the value of five sela' gored an ox similarly of the value of five sela' [i.e. twenty zuz] and it so happened that the carcass [increased in value and] reached the amount of thirty zuz — the defendant should indeed be entitled to share in the profit;[18] hence the verse, He shall surely make full restitution, is adduced [to emphasise that in all cases] an offender could only have to pay but never to receive payment.

But R. Aha b. Tahlifa said to Raba: If so [that the principle to compensate by half for the decrease in value brought about by the death is maintained only by R. Meir], will it not be found that according to R. Judah Tam will involve the payment of more than half damages,[19] whereas the Torah [emphatically] stated, And they shall sell the live ox and divide the money of it? — [No;] R. Judah also holds that the decrease in value brought about by the death will be [compensated] by half in the body of the living ox.[20] Whence could he derive this?[21] — From [the verse], And the dead ox also they shall divide.[22] But did not R. Judah derive from this verse that one party will take half of the living ox together with half of the dead ox and the other party will similarly take half of the living ox and half of the dead ox?[23] — If that were all, the text could have run, 'And the dead ox [they shall divide].' Why insert 'also'? It shows that two lessons are to be derived from the verse.[24] MISHNAH. THERE ARE CASES WHERE THERE IS LIABILITY FOR OFFENCES COMMITTED BY ONE'S CATTLE[25] THOUGH THERE WOULD BE NO LIABILITY SHOULD THESE OFFENCES BE COMMITTED BY ONESELF. THERE ARE, AGAIN, CASES WHERE THERE IS NO LIABILITY FOR OFFENCES COMMITTED BY ONE'S CATTLE[25] THOUGH THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY WERE THESE OFFENCES COMMITTED BY ONESELF. FOR INSTANCE, IF CATTLE HAS BROUGHT INDIGNITY [UPON A HUMAN BEING] THERE IS NO LIABILITY,[26] WHEREAS IF THE OWNER CAUSES THE INDIGNITY THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY.[27] SO ALSO IF AN OX PUTS OUT THE EYE OF THE OWNER'S SLAVE OR KNOCKS OUT HIS TOOTH THERE IS NO LIABILITY,[28] WHEREAS IF THE OWNER HIMSELF HAS PUT OUT THE EYE OF HIS SLAVE OR KNOCKED OUT HIS TOOTH HE WOULD BE LIABLE [TO LET HIM GO FREE].[29] AGAIN, IF AN OX HAS INJURED THE FATHER OR MOTHER OF THE OWNER THERE IS LIABILITY,[30] THOUGH WERE THE OWNER HIMSELF TO INJURE HIS FATHER OR HIS MOTHER[31] THERE WOULD BE NO [CIVIL] LIABILITY.[32] SO ALSO WHERE CATTLE HAS CAUSED FIRE TO BE SET TO A BARN ON THE DAY OF SABBATH THERE IS LIABILITY,[30] WHEREAS WERE THE OWNER TO SET FIRE TO A BARN ON SABBATH[33] THERE WOULD BE NO [CIVIL] LIABILITY, AS HE WOULD BE SUBJECT TO A CAPITAL CHARGE.[32]

GEMARA. R. Abbahu recited in the presence of R. Johanan:[34] Any work [on the Sabbath] that has a destructive purpose entails no penalty [for the violation of the Sabbath], with the exception, however, of the act of inflicting a bodily injury, as also of the act of setting on fire. Said R. Johanan to him: Go and recite this outside[35] [for the exception made of] the act of inflicting a bodily injury and of setting on fire is not part of the teaching; and should you find grounds for maintaining that it is,[36] [you may say that] the infliction of a bodily injury refers to where the blood was required to feed a dog;[37] and in the case of setting on fire, where there was some need of the ashes.[37]

We have learnt: WHERE CATTLE HAS CAUSED FIRE TO BE SET TO A BARN ON THE DAY OF SABBATH THERE IS LIABILITY, WHEREAS WERE THE OWNER TO HAVE SET FIRE TO A BARN ON SABBATH THERE WOULD BE NO [CIVIL] LIABILITY. Now, the act of the owner is here placed on a level with that of Cattle; which would show, would it not, that just as in the act of Cattle there was certainly no intention to satisfy any need,

---

(1) For in the case of Mu'ad it is certainly the plaintiff who has to bear the whole loss occasioned by a decrease in the value of the carcass; cf. supra p. 65.

(2) And Tam will indeed involve a penalty more severe than that involved by Mu'ad.

(3) B.K. IV, 9.

(4) For which cf. infra, p. 259.

(5) Amounting to fifty zuz.

(6) That would amount to another ten zuz.

(7) The result would be that the plaintiff whose injured ox had altogether been worth twenty zuz would get damages amounting to sixty zuz.

(8) In Scripture; cf. Ex. XXI, 36.

(9) Why should then the defendant in the case of Tam share the loss occasioned by a decrease in the value of the carcass which he would not have to do in the case of Mu'ad?

(10) R. Meir and R. Judah.
(11) R. Meir, according to whom the defendant has no interest in the carcass.
(12) V. supra p. 189, n. 7.
(13) Amounting to ten zuz.
(14) That would amount to another twenty-five zuz.
(15) The result would be that the defendant instead of paying compensation would make a profit out of the offence, as in lieu of his ox which did the damage and which was worth twenty zuz he would get a total of thirty-five zuz.
(16) Ex. XXI, 36.
(17) I.e., why is not the first objection sufficient?
(18) Of the ten zuz that make the carcass worth more than the ox while alive.
(19) As e.g.. where an ox of the value of fifty zuz gored another's ox of the value of forty zuz and the carcass was worth twenty zuz, in which case the actual damage amounted to twenty zuz, half of which would be ten zuz, whereas if the plaintiff will get half of the living ox and half of the dead ox he shall be in receipt for damages, in addition to the value of the carcass, not of ten but of fifteen zuz.
(20) The sum total received by the plaintiff will therefore never be more than half of the actual loss sustained by him after allowing him, of course, the full value of the carcass of his ox.
(21) Since he is in disagreement with R. Meir as to the implication of the last clause of Ex. XXI, 35.
(22) Ex. XXI, 35.
(23) I.e., that the decrease in value brought about by the death will be compensated for by half in the body of the living ox. V. Supra p. 189.
(24) Viz., the principle laid down in the preceding note and the principle maintained by R. Judah, that the defendant as well as the plaintiff has an interest in the carcass and will share the profits of any increase in its value.
(25) Lit., 'ox'.
(26) As explained supra p. 134.
(27) Cf. B. K. VIII 1-2.
(28) To the law laid down in Ex. XXI, 26-27.
(29) In accordance with ibid, cf. also supra p. 137.
(30) For damages.
(31) Involving thus a capital charge, for which cf Ex. XXI, 15.
(32) As wherever a capital charge is involved by an offence, all civil liabilities that may otherwise have resulted from that offence merge in the capital charge; cf. supra p. 113.
(33) For which cf. Ex. XXXI, 14-15; but v. also ibid. XXXV, 2-3, Mekilta a.l. and Yeb. 7b, 33b and Shab. 70a.
(34) Cf. Shab. 106a.
(35) [I.e., your teaching is fit only for outside and not to be admitted within the Beth Hamidrash; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 425.]
(36) Cf. Shab. 75a; v. also B.K. VIII, 5.
(37) Which case involves the violation of the Sabbath because the purpose has not been altogether destructive.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 35a

so also the owner similarly had no intention to satisfy thereby any need, and yet it is stated THERE WOULD BE NO [CIVIL] LIABILITY AS HE WOULD BE SUBJECT TO A CAPITAL CHARGE?[1] No; it is the act of Cattle, which is placed on the same level as that of the owner himself, to show that just as in the act of the owner there had surely been the intention to satisfy some need, so also in the act of Cattle there must have been the intention to satisfy some need.[2] But how is this possible in the case of Cattle? — R. Iwiya replied: The case here supposed is one of an intelligent animal which, owing to an itching in the back, was anxious to burn the barn so that it might roll in the [hot] ashes. But how could we know [of such an intention]? [By seeing that] after the barn had been burnt, the animal actually rolled in the ashes. But could such a thing ever happen? — Yes, as in the case of the ox which had been in the house of R. Papa, and which, having a severe toothache, went into the brewery, where it removed the lid [that covered the beer] and drank beer until it became relieved [of the pain]. The Rabbis, however, argued in the presence of R. Papa: How can you say that [the Mishnah places the act of] Cattle on a level with [the act of] the owner himself? For is it not stated: IF CATTLE HAS BROUGHT INDIGNITY [UPON A HUMAN BEING] THERE IS NO LIABILITY,[3] WHEREAS IF THE OWNER CAUSES THE INDIGNITY THERE IS LIABILITY? Now, if we are to put the act of Cattle on a level with that of the owner himself, how are we to find intention [in the case of Cattle]?[4] — Where, for instance, there was intention to do damage, as stated by the Master[5] that where there was intention to do damage though no intention to insult, [liability for insult will attach]. Raba, however, suggested that the Mishnah here[6] deals with a case of inadvertence, [resembling thus Cattle which acts as a rule without any specific purpose] and [the law[7] was laid down] in accordance with the teaching at the School of Hezekiah. For it was taught at the School of Hezekiah:[8] [Scripture places in juxtaposition] He that killeth a man . . . and he that killeth a beast[9] .....[to imply that] just as in the case of killing a beast you can make no distinction whether it was inadvertent or malicious, whether intentional or unintentional, whether by way of coming down or by way of coming up,[10] so as to exempt from pecuniary obligation, but [in all cases] there is pecuniary liability,[11] so also in the case of killing man you should make no distinction whether it was inadvertent or malicious, whether intentional or unintentional, whether by way of coming down or by way of coming up so as to impose a pecuniary liability, but [in all cases] there should be exemption from pecuniary obligation.[12] Said the Rabbis to Raba: How can you assume that the ruling in the Mishnah refers to an inadvertent act?[13] Is it not stated there [that were the owner to have set fire to a barn on Sabbath there would be no civil liability] AS HE WOULD BE SUBJECT TO A CAPITAL CHARGE?[14] — It only means to say this: Since if he would have committed it maliciously he would have been liable to a capital charge, as, e.g., where he had need of the ashes, there should be exemption [from civil liability] even in such a case as this where he did it inadvertently.[15]

MISHNAH. IF AN OX WAS PURSUING AN OTHER'S OX WHICH WAS [AFTERWARDS FOUND TO BE] INJURED, AND THE ONE [PLAINTIFF] SAYS, 'IT WAS YOUR OX THAT DID THE DAMAGE, WHILE THE OTHER PLEADS, 'NOT SO, BUT IT WAS INJURED BY A ROCK [AGAINST WHICH IT HAD BEEN RUBBING ITSELF]',[16] THE BURDEN OF PROOF LIES ON THE CLAIMANT. [SO ALSO] WHERE TWO [OXEN] PURSUED ONE AND THE ONE DEFENDANT ASSERTS, 'IT WAS YOUR OX THAT DID THE DAMAGE', WHILE THE OTHER DEFENDANT ASSERTS, 'IT WAS YOUR OX THAT DID THE DAMAGE',

---

(1) Which would show that setting fire on Sabbath even for purely destructive purposes is a violation of the Sabbath, supporting thus the view of R. Abbahu and contradicting that of R. Johanan.

(2) Though with cattle there would really be no legal difference whatsoever whether this was the case or not.

(3) V. p. 192, n. 2.

(4) Being as it is altogether devoid of the whole conception of insult.

(5) Supra p. 141.

(6) Which exempts man setting fire on Sabbath from any civil liability involved.

(7) Exempting from civil liability in the case of Man.

(8) Keth. 35a, 38a; Sanh. 79b and 84b.

(9) Lev. XXIV, 21.

(10) Which, however, forms a distinction in the case of unintentional manslaughter with reference to the liability to take refuge, for which cf. Mak. 7b.

(11) As indeed stated supra p. 136.

(12) Even when there is no actual death penalty involved, and likewise in the Mishnah the man setting fire though inadvertently is exempt from all civil liability, so that you cannot infer therefrom that death penalty is attached to setting fire on Sabbath even for destructive purposes. V. supra p. 192. n. 8.

(13) In which case the capital punishment could never be applied.

(14) V. p. 192, n. 8.

(15) On the basis of the teaching of Hezekiah.

(16) Denying thus any liability.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 35b

NEITHER OF THE DEFENDANTS WILL BE LIABLE. BUT WHERE BOTH OF THE [PURSUING] OXEN BELONGED TO THE SAME OWNER,[1] LIABILITY WILL ATTACH TO BOTH OF THEM. WHERE, HOWEVER, ONE [OF THE OXEN] WAS BIG AND THE OTHER LITTLE[1] AND THE CLAIMANT MAINTAINS THAT THE BIG ONE DID THE DAMAGE,[2] WHILE THE DEFENDANT PLEADS, 'NOT SO, FOR IT WAS THE LITTLE ONE THAT DID THE DAMAGE', OR AGAIN WHERE ONE [OX] WAS TAM AND THE OTHER MU'AD AND THE CLAIMANT MAINTAINS THAT THE MU'AD DID THE DAMAGE[3] WHILE THE DEFENDANT ASSERTS, 'NOT SO, FOR IT WAS THE TAM THAT DID THE DAMAGE,' THE BURDEN OF PROOF LIES ON THE CLAIMANT. [SO ALSO] WHERE THERE WERE TWO INJURED OXEN, ONE BIG AND ONE LITTLE, SIMILARLY TWO PURSUERS, ONE BIG AND ONE LITTLE, AND THE PLAINTIFF ASSERTS THAT THE BIG ONE INJURED THE BIG ONE AND THE LITTLE ONE THE LITTLE ONE, WHILE THE DEFENDANT CONTENDS, 'NOT SO, FOR [IT WAS] THE LITTLE ONE [THAT INJURED] THE BIG ONE AND THE BIG ONE [THAT INJURED] THE LITTLE ONE'; OR AGAIN WHERE ONE WAS TAM AND THE OTHER MU'AD, AND THE PLAINTIFF MAINTAINS THAT THE MU'AD INJURED THE BIG ONE AND THE TAM THE LITTLE ONE, WHILE THE DEFENDANT PLEADS, 'NOT SO, FOR [IT WAS THE] TAM [THAT INJURED] THE BIG ONE AND THE MU'AD [THAT INJURED] THE LITTLE ONE,' THE BURDEN OF PROOF FALLS ON THE CLAIMANT.

GEMARA. R. Hiyya b. Abba stated: This [Mishnaic ruling][4] shows that [in this respect] the colleagues differed from Symmachus who maintained[5] that money of which the ownership cannot be decided has to be equally divided [between the two parties]. Said R. Abba b. Memel to R. Hiyya b. Abba: Did Symmachus maintain his view even where the defendant was as positive as the claimant?[6] — He replied: Yes, Symmachus maintained his view even where the defendant was as positive as the claimant. But [even if you assume otherwise],[7] how do you know that the Mishnah is here dealing with a case where the defendant was as positive as the claimant?[8] — Because it says, THE PLAINTIFF STATES 'IT WAS YOUR OX THAT DID THE DAMAGE', WHILE THE DEFENDANT PLEADS 'NOT SO. . . '[9] R. Papa, however, demurred to this, saying: If in the case presented in the opening clause the defendant was as positive as the claimant, we must suppose that in the case presented in the concluding clause the defendant was similarly as positive as the claimant. [Now,] read the concluding clause; WHERE, HOWEVER, ONE OX WAS BIG AND THE OTHER LITTLE, AND THE PLAINTIFF ASSERTS THAT THE BIG ONE DID THE DAMAGE WHILE THE DEFENDANT PLEADS 'NOT SO, FOR IT WAS THE LITTLE ONE THAT DID THE DAMAGE'; OR AGAIN WHERE ONE OX WAS TAM AND THE OTHER MU'AD, AND THE CLAIMANT MAINTAINS THAT THE MU'AD DID THE DAMAGE, WHILE THE DEFENDANT PLEADS, 'NOT SO, FOR IT WAS THE TAM THAT DID THE DAMAGE', THE BURDEN OF PROOF IS ON THE CLAIMANT. [Now this implies, does it not, that] where he does not produce evidence he will get paid in accordance with the pleading of the defendant. May it now not be argued that this [ruling] is contrary to the view of Rabbah b. Nathan, who said that where the plaintiff claims wheat and the defendant admits barley, he is not liable [for either of them]?[10] — You conclude then that the Mishnah deals with a case where one party was certain and the other doubtful.[11] Which then was certain and which doubtful? It could hardly be suggested that it was the plaintiff who was certain, and the defendant who was doubtful, for would this still not be contrary to the view of Rabbah b. Nathan?[12] It would therefore seem that it was the plaintiff who was doubtful[11] and the defendant certain. And if the concluding clause deals with a case where the plaintiff was doubtful and the defendant certain, we should suppose that the opening clause[13] likewise deals with a case where the plaintiff was doubtful and the defendant certain. But could Symmachus indeed have applied his principle even to such a case,[14] that the Mishnah thought fit to let us know that this view ought not to be accepted? — [Hence it must be said:] No; but that the concluding clause [deals with a case where] the plaintiff was doubtful and the defendant certain, and the opening clause[13] [presents a case where it was] the plaintiff who was certain and the defendant doubtful.[15] But [even in that case] the opening clause is not co-ordinate with the concluding clause?[16] — I can reply that [a case where the plaintiff is] certain and [the defendant] doubtful[17] and [a case where the claimant is] doubtful and [the defendant] certain[18] are co-ordinate[19] whereas [a case where the claimant is] certain and [the defendant also] certain is not co-ordinate with [a case where the claimant is] doubtful and [the defendant] certain.[20]

The above text states: 'Rabbah b. Nathan said: Where the plaintiff claimed wheat and the defendant admitted barley, he is not liable [for either of them].'[21] What does this tell us? Have we not already learnt [in a Mishnah]: where the plaintiff claimed wheat and the defendant admitted barley he is not liable?[22] If we had only [the Mishnah] there[22] to go by, I might have argued that the exemption was only from the value of the wheat,[23] while there would still be liability for the value of barley;[24] we are therefore told by Rabbah b. Nathan that the exemption is complete.

We have learnt: WHERE THERE WERE TWO INJURED OXEN, ONE BIG AND THE OTHER LITTLE etc. [Now this implies that] where he does not produce evidence he will get paid in accordance with the pleading of the defendant. But why not apply here [the principle of complete exemption laid down in the case of] wheat and barley? — The plaintiff[25] is entitled to get paid [only where he produces evidence to substantiate the claim], but will have nothing at all [where he fails to do so]. But has it not been taught; He will be paid for [the injury done to] the little one out of the body of the big and for [the injury done to] the big one out of the body of the little one? — Only where he had already seized them.[26] We have learnt: IF ONE WAS TAM AND THE OTHER MU'AD, AND THE PLAINTIFF CLAIMS THAT THE MU'AD INJURED THE BIG ONE[27] AND THE TAM THE LITTLE ONE WHILE THE DEFENDANT PLEADS, 'NOT SO, FOR [IT WAS THE] TAM [THAT INJURED] THE BIG ONE AND THE MU'AD [THAT INJURED] THE LITTLE ONE', THE BURDEN OF PROOF FALLS ON THE CLAIMANT. [Now this implies that] where he does not produce evidence he will get paid in accordance with the pleading of the plaintiff. But why should [the principle of complete exemption laid down in the case of] wheat and barley not be applied here? —

---

(1) And were in the state of Tam, in which case the half-damages are paid only out of the body of the ox that did the damage, as supra p. 73.

(2) And the body of the big one should secure the payment of the half damages.

(3) And the compensation should thus be made in full.

(4) That it is the claimant on whom falls the onus probandi.

(5) Infra p. 262 and B.M. 2b, 6a, 98b, 100a; B.B. 141a.

(6) In which case not the defendant but only the Court is in doubt.

(7) And suggest that where the defendant has been positive even Symmachus admits that the claimant will get nothing unless by proving his case.

(8) For in the cases dealt with in the Mishnah the defendant is usually unable to speak positively, as in most cases he was not present at the place when the alleged damage was done; cf. also Tosaf. a.l.

(9) Which is apparently a definite defence.

(10) For the claim of wheat has been repudiated by the defendant while the claim for barley admitted by him has tacitly been dispensed with by the plaintiff. The very same thing could be argued in the case of the Mishnah quoted above, where the claim was made in respect of the big one or the Mu'ad, and the defence admitted the little one or the Tam respectively.

(11) In which case the argument contained in the preceding note could no more be maintained.

(12) For surely the plaintiff, by his definite claim in respect of the big one or the Mu'ad, has tacitly waived his claim in respect of the little one or the Tam respectively.

(13) Where the defendant pleads that 'the pursued ox was injured by a rock...' .
(14) Which is really an absurdity, to maintain that a plaintiff pleading mere supposition against a defendant submitting a definite denial should in the absence of any evidence be entitled to any payment whatsoever.
(15) [How then could R. Hiyya maintain that our Mishnah deals with a case where both were certain in their pleas.]
(16) [If so, what is the objection of R. Papa to R. Hiyya's statement, since even on his view there is a lack of co-ordination between these two clauses in the Mishnah.]
(17) As in the case dealt with in the commencing clause.
(18) Which is the case in the concluding clause.
(19) Lit 'are one thing'.
(20) R. Papa was therefore loth to explain the commencing clause as dealing with a case where the defence as well as the claim was put forward on a certainty, but preferred to explain it as presenting a law-suit where, though the claim had been put forward positively, the defence was urged tentatively.
(21) V. p. 197. n. 2.
(22) Shebu. 38b.
(23) Which was denied by the defendant.
(24) Admitted by the defendant.
(25) In the case of the oxen.
(26) In which case the principle of complete exemption maintained by Rabbah b. Nathan apparently does not apply.
(27) V. p. 196. n. 1.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 36a

The plaintiff is entitled to get paid [only where he produces evidence to substantiate the claim] but [failing that he] will have nothing at all. But has it not been taught: He will be paid for [the injury done to] the little one in accordance with the regulations applying to Mu'ad and for [the injury done to] the big one out of the body of the Tam? — Only where he had already seized them.

BUT WHERE BOTH OF THE [PURSUING] OXEN BELONGED TO THE SAME OWNER, LIABILITY WILL ATTACH TO BOTH OF THEM. Raba of Parazika[1] said to R. Ashi: It can be concluded from this that where oxen in the state of Tam [belonging to the same owner] did damage, the plaintiff has the option to distrain either on the one or the other! — [No, replied R. Ashi, for] we are dealing here [in the Mishnah] with a case where they were Mu'ad.[2] If where they were Mu'ad how do you explain the concluding clause: WHERE, HOWEVER, ONE [OF THE OXEN] WAS BIG AND THE OTHER LITTLE AND THE CLAIMANT MAINTAINS THAT THE BIG ONE DID THE DAMAGE WHILE THE DEFENDANT PLEADS 'NOT SO, FOR IT WAS THE LITTLE ONE THAT DID THE DAMAGE' THE BURDEN OF PROOF FALLS ON THE CLAIMANT. For indeed where they were Mu'ad what difference could there be [whether the big one or the little one did the damage] since at all events he has to pay the full value of the ox? — He thereupon said to him: The concluding clause presents a case where they were Tam, though the opening clause deals with a case where the oxen were Mu'ad. Said R. Aha the Elder to R. Ashi: If the commencing clause deals with a case where the oxen were Mu'ad,[2] what is the meaning of 'LIABILITY WILL ATTACH TO BOTH OF THEM'? Should not the text run, 'The owner will be liable'? Again, what is the meaning of 'BOTH OF THEM'? — [The commencing clause also] must therefore deal with a case where the oxen were Tam, and the ruling stated follows the view of R. Akiba, that plaintiff and defendant become the owners in common [of the attacking ox].[3] Now this is so where 'BOTH OF THEM' [the oxen] are with the owner, in which case he cannot possibly shift the claim [from one to the other].[4] But if 'BOTH OF THEM' are not with him he may plead,[5] 'Go and produce evidence that it was this ox [which is still with me][6] that did the damage, and then I will pay you.'

CHAPTER I V

MISHNAH. IF A [TAM] OX HAS GORED FOUR OR FIVE OXEN ONE AFTER THE OTHER,

COMPENSATION SHOULD IN THE FIRST INSTANCE BE MADE [OUT OF THE BODY OF THE OX] FOR THE LAST OFFENCE. SHOULD THERE BE A SURPLUS,[7] COMPENSATION IS TO BE PAID ALSO FOR THE PENULTIMATE OFFENCE; SHOULD THERE STILL BE A SURPLUS, COMPENSATION IS TO BE MADE TO THE ONE BEFORE; THE LATER THE LIABILITY THE PRIOR THE CLAIM.[8] THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. MEIR. R. SIMEON SAYS: IF AN OX OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ] HAS GORED AN OX OF THE SAME VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ] AND THE CARCASS HAS NO VALUE AT ALL, THE PLAINTIFF WILL GET A HUNDRED ZUZ AND THE DEFENDANT WILL GET A HUNDRED ZUZ [OUT OF THE BODY OF THE OX THAT DID THE DAMAGE].[9] SHOULD THE SAME OX HAVE GORED ANOTHER OX OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ], THE SECOND CLAIMANT WILL GET A HUNDRED ZUZ, WHILE THE FORMER CLAIMANT WILL GET ONLY FIFTY ZUZ[10] AND THE DEFENDANT WILL HAVE FIFTY ZUZ [IN THE BODY OF HIS OX].[11] SHOULD THE OX HAVE GORED YET ANOTHER OX OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ], THE THIRD CLAIMANT WILL GET A HUNDRED [ZUZ] WHILE THE SECOND WILL GET ONLY FIFTY [ZUZ][10] AND THE FIRST TWO PARTIES[12] WILL HAVE A GOLD DENAR[13] [EACH IN THE BODY OF THE OX THAT DID THE DAMAGE].[11] GEMARA. Who is the author of our Mishnah? It is in accordance neither with the view of R. Ishmael nor with that of R. Akiba![14] For if it is in accordance with R. Ishmael, who maintains that they [the claimants of damages] are like any other creditors, how can it be said that THE LATER THE LIABILITY THE PRIOR THE CLAIM? Should it not be, the earlier the liability the prior the claim?[15] If, on the other hand, it is in accordance with R. Akiba who maintains that the ox becomes the common property [of the plaintiff and the defendant], how can it be said that, IN THE CASE OF THERE BEING A SURPLUS[16]

---

(1) [Identified with Faransag, near Bagdad, v. Obermeyer, op. cit., p. 269.]

(2) In which case the whole estate of the defendant can be distrained upon for the payment of damages; supra p. 73.

(3) Cf. supra p 181.

(4) So that there is no warrant for Raba of Parazika's inference.

(5) Against the plaintiff.

(6) And not the other ox that has been lost.

(7) In the body of the ox.

(8) Lit., 'the later always profits' as it is he who has the right of priority.

(9) As explained supra pp. 187-8.

(10) For the reason v. Gemara, infra p. 203.

(11) As the defendant and the first claimant became the owners of the ox in common.

(12) I.e the defendant and the first claimant.

(13) I.e., twenty-five zuz.

(14) For which cf. supra p. 181.

(15) As is usually the case with other creditors: v. p. 185.

(16) V.p. 201, n. 1.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 36b

COMPENSATION WILL BE MADE FOR THE PENULTIMATE OFFENCE? Should it not be 'Compensation will be made [proportionately] for each offence'? — Raba replied: The Mishnah is indeed in accordance with R. Ishmael, who holds that claimants [of damages] are like any other creditors; and as to your objection to the statement 'THE LATER THE LIABILITY THE PRIOR THE CLAIM', which you contend should be 'The earlier the liability the prior the claim', [it can be argued] that we deal here with a case where each plaintiff has [in turn] seized the goring ox for the purpose of getting paid [the amount due to him] out of its body, in which case each has in turn acquired [in respect of the ox] the status of a paid bailee, liable for subsequent damages done by it.[1] But if so, why does it say. SHOULD THERE BE A SURPLUS COMPENSATION IS TO BE PAID

ALSO FOR THE PENULTIMATE OFFENCE? Should it not be: 'The surplus will revert to the owner'?[2] — Rabina therefore said: The meaning is this: Should there be an excess in the damage done to him[3] over that done to the subsequent plaintiff, the amount of the difference will revert to the plaintiff in respect of the preceding damage.[4] So too, when Rabin returned [from Eretz Yisrael] he stated on behalf of R. Johanan that it was for the failure [to carry out their duty] as bailees that liability was incurred [by the earlier plaintiffs to the later].

How then have you explained the Mishnah? As being in accordance with R. Ishmael! If so, what of the next clause: R. SIMEON SAYS: WHERE AN OX OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ] HAS GORED AN OX OF THE SAME VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ] AND THE CARCASS HAD NO VALUE AT ALL, THE PLAINTIFF WILL GET A HUNDRED ZUZ AND THE DEFENDANT WILL SIMILARLY GET A HUNDRED ZUZ [OUT OF THE BODY OF THE OX THAT DID THE DAMAGE]. SHOULD THE SAME OX HAVE GORED ANOTHER OX OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ], THE SECOND CLAIMANT WILL GET A HUNDRED ZUZ, WHILE THE FORMER CLAIMANT WILL GET ONLY FIFTY ZUZ, AND THE DEFENDANT WILL HAVE FIFTY ZUZ [IN THE BODY OF THE OX]. SHOULD THE OX HAVE GORED YET ANOTHER OX OF THE VALUE OF TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ], THE THIRD PLAINTIFF WILL GET A HUNDRED [ZUZ], WHILE THE SECOND PLAINTIFF WILL GET FIFTY [ZUZ] AND THE FIRST TWO PARTIES WILL HAVE A GOLD DENAR [EACH IN THE BODY OF THE OX THAT DID THE DAMAGE]. This brings us back [does it not] to the view of R. Akiba, who maintains that the ox becomes the common property [of the plaintiff and the defendant].[5] Will then the first clause be in accordance with R. Ishmael and the second clause in accordance with R. Akiba? — That is so, since even Samuel said to Rab Judah, 'Shinena,[6] leave this Mishnah alone[7] and accept my explanation. that its first clause is [in accordance with] R. Ishmael and its second clause [in accordance with] R. Akiba.' (It was also stated that R. Johanan said: An actual case in which they would differ is where the plaintiff consecrates the goring ox [to the Temple].)[8]

We have learnt elsewhere:[9] If a man boxes another man's ear, he has to give him a sela'[10] [in compensation]. R. Judah in the name of R. Jose the Galilean says: A hundred zuz. A certain man having [been summoned for] boxing another man's ear, R. Tobiah b. Mattena sent an inquiry to R. Joseph, as to whether a Tyrian sela'[11] is meant in the Mishnah[12] or merely a sela' of [this] country.[13] He sent back a reply: You have learnt it: AND THE FIRST TWO PARTIES WILL HAVE A GOLD DENAR [EACH]. Now, should you assume that the Tanna is calculating by the sela'[13] of [this] country, [we may ask,] why does he not continue the division by introducing a further case where the amount [left for the first two] will come down to twelve [zuz] and one sela'?[14] To which R. Tobiah replied: Has then the Tanna to string out cases like a peddler?[15] What, however, is the solution?[16] — The solution was gathered from the statement made by Rab Judah on behalf of Rab:[17] 'Wherever money[18] is mentioned in the Torah, the reference is to Tyrian money, but wherever it occurs in the words of the Rabbis it means local[19] money.' The plaintiff upon hearing that said to the judge: 'Since it will [only] amount to half a zuz,[12] I do not want it; let him give it to the poor.' Later, however, he said; 'Let him give it to me, as I will go and obtain a cure for myself with it.' But R. Joseph said to him: The poor have already acquired a title to it, for though the poor were not present here, we [in the Court, always] act as the agents[20] of the poor, as Rab Judah said on behalf of Samuel:[21] Orphans

---

(1) As supra p. 57, and infra p. 255.

(2) Since it is not the owner but the claimant in regard to the penultimate offence who has to he liable in respect of the last offence.

(3) I.e., to the penultimate plaintiff.

(4) As e.g. where an ox of the value of a hundred zuz gored successively the ox of A the ox of B and the ox of C, and the damages amount to fifty, thirty and twenty zuz respectively, C will be paid the sum of twenty, B only ten, which is the difference between the compensation due to him and that due from him to C, and A will get twenty, which again is the difference between the compensation due to him from the owner (of the ox that did the damage) and that owing from him to B. All the payments together, which are twenty to A, ten to B and twenty to C, make only fifty, so that the balance of the value of the ox will go to its owner.

(5) For if otherwise, why should the first two parties (the owner and the first claimant) always be treated alike?

(6) Cf. supra p. 60, n. 2.

(7) And do not try to make it self-consistent.

(8) V. supra p. 181. [This bracketed passage is to be deleted with Rashi, v. D.S. a.l.]

(9) Infra p. 520

(10) A Palestinian coin, v. Glos.

(11) Four zuz, v. infra p. 521, n. 6.

(12) As stated by the anonymous view.

(13) Half a zuz.

(14) I.e. where the last claimant will have a maneh, the next fifty zuz, the rest one gold denar, and the first claimant and the owner 12 zuz and one sela' each.

(15) Who cries the whole list of his wares. Cf. Git. 33a.

(16) As to the exact meaning of sela'.

(17) Cf. Kid. 11b and Bek. 50b.

(18) [Lit 'silver'. The market value of silver coinage was determined by Tyre, v. Krauss, op. cit., II, 405]

(19) Lit., 'the country'.

(20) Lit., 'hand'.

(21) Git. 37a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 37a

do not require a prosbul:[1] and so also Rami b. Hama learned that orphans do not require a prosbul,[2] since Rabban Gamaliel and his Court of law are the representatives[3] of orphans.

The scoundrel Hanan, having boxed another man's ear, was brought before R. Huna, who ordered him to go and pay the plaintiff half a zuz.[4] As [Hanan] had a battered zuz he desired to pay the plaintiff the half zuz [which was due] out of it. But as it could not be exchanged, he slapped him again and gave him [the whole zuz].

MISHNAH. IF AN OX WAS MU'AD TO DO DAMAGE TO ITS OWN SPECIES BUT WAS NOT MU'AD TO DO DAMAGE TO ANY OTHER SPECIES [OF ANIMALS] OR IF IT WAS MU'AD TO DO DAMAGE TO THE HUMAN SPECIES BUT NOT MU'AD TO ANY SPECIES OF BEASTS, OR IF IT WAS MU'AD TO SMALL [CATTLE] BUT NOT MU'AD TO LARGE [CATTLE], IN RESPECT OF DAMAGE DONE TO THE SPECIES TO WHICH IT WAS MU 'AD THE PAYMENT WILL HAVE TO BE IN FULL, BUT IN RESPECT OF DAMAGE DONE TO THAT TO WHICH IT WAS NOT MU' AD, THE COMPENSATION WILL BE FOR HALF THE DAMAGE ONLY. THEY[5] SAID BEFORE R. JUDAH: HERE IS ONE WHICH WAS MU 'AD TO DO DAMAGE ON SABBATH DAYS BUT WAS NOT MU 'AD TO DO DAMAGE ON WEEK DAYS.[6] HE SAID TO THEM: FOR DAMAGE DONE ON SABBATH DAYS THE PAYMENT WILL HAVE TO BE IN FULL, WHEREAS FOR DAMAGE DONE ON WEEK DAYS THE COMPENSATION WILL BE FOR HALF THE DAMAGE ONLY. WHEN [CAN THIS OX] RETURN TO THE STATE OF TAM? WHEN IT REFRAINS [FROM GORING] ON THREE [CONSECUTIVE] SABBATH DAYS.

GEMARA. It was stated: R. Zebid said: The proper reading of the Mishnah [in the first clause is], 'BUT WAS NOT MU 'AD . . .';[7] whereas R. Papa said: The proper reading is 'IT IS NOT [THEREFORE] MU 'AD. . .'[8] R. Zebid, who said that'... BUT WAS NOT MU' AD . . .'is the proper reading of the Mishnah, maintained that until we know the contrary[9] such an ox is considered

Mu'ad [to all species]. But R. Papa, who said that '. . . IT IS NOT [THEREFORE] MU 'AD. . .' is the correct reading of the Mishnah, maintained that even though we do not know the contrary the ox is not considered Mu 'ad [save to the species to which it had actually been Mu'ad]. R. Zebid inferred his view from the later clause [of the Mishnah], whereas R. Papa inferred his view from the opening clause. R. Zebid inferred his view from the later clause which states, IF IT WAS MU 'AD TO SMALL [CATTLE] BUT NOT MU 'AD TO LARGE [CATTLE]. Now this is quite in order if you maintain that BUT WAS NOT MU'AD' is the reading in the Mishnah, implying thus that in the absence of definite knowledge to the contrary the ox should be considered Mu'ad [to all species]. This clause would then teach us [the further point] that even where the ox was Mu 'ad to small [cattle] it would be Mu 'ad also to large [cattle] in the absence of knowledge to the contrary. But if you maintain that '. . . IT IS NOT [THEREFORE] MU'AD . . .' is the correct reading of the Mishnah, implying that even though we know nothing to the contrary the ox would not be considered Mu 'ad, could it not then be argued thus: Since in the case where the ox was Mu 'ad to do damage to small creatures of one species it would not be considered Mu 'ad with reference to small creatures of another species even if we have no definite knowledge to the contrary, was there any need to state that where the ox was Mu 'ad to small [cattle] it would not be considered Mu 'ad to big [cattle]?[10] — R. Papa, however, may say to you: It was necessary to state this, since otherwise you might have been inclined to think that since the ox started to attack a particular species, it was going to attack the whole of that species without making a distinction between the large creatures of that species and the small creatures of that species, it was therefore necessary to let us know that [with reference to the large creatures] it would not be considered Mu'ad. R. Papa on the other hand based his view on the opening clause, which states: WHERE IT WAS MU 'AD TO THE HUMAN SPECIES IT WOULD NOT BE MU 'AD TO ANY SPECIES OF BEASTS. Now this would be quite in order if you maintain that 'IT IS NOT [THEREFORE] MU'AD . . .' is the text in the Mishnah denoting that even where we have no knowledge to the contrary the ox would not be considered Mu 'ad [to other species]; it was therefore necessary to make it known to us that even where the ox was Mu 'ad to the human species and though we knew nothing to the contrary, it would still not be Mu'ad to animals. But if you maintain that '. . . BUT WAS NOT MU 'AD . . .' is the correct reading of the Mishnah, implying that in the absence of knowledge to the contrary the ox would be considered Mu 'ad [to all species], could we not then argue thus: Since in the case where the ox was Mu'ad to one species of beast it would in the absence of knowledge to the contrary be considered Mu 'ad also to any other species of beast, was there any need to state that where the ox was Mu 'ad to the human species it would also be considered Mu 'ad to animals?[11] — R. Zebid may, however, say to you: The opening clause refers to the reversion of the ox to the state of Tam, as, e.g., where the ox had been Mu 'ad to man and Mu 'ad to beast but has subsequently refrained from [doing damage to] beast, having stood near cattle on three different occasions without goring. It might then have been argued that since it has not refrained from injuring men, its refraining from goring cattle should [in the eye of the law] not be considered a proper reversion [to the state of Tam].[12] We are therefore told that the refraining from goring cattle is in fact a proper reversion.

An objection was raised [from the following]: Symmachus says: If an ox is Mu'ad to man it is also Mu'ad to beast, a fortiori: if it is Mu'ad to injure man, how much more so is it Mu'ad to injure beast? Does this not prove that the view of the previous Tanna was that it would not be Mu'ad?'[13] — R. Zebid may, however, say to you: Symmachus was referring to the reversion to the state of Tam, and what he said to the previous Tanna was this: 'Referring to your statement that the refraining [from goring] beasts is a proper reversion, [I maintain that] the refraining [from goring] beasts is not a proper reversion, [and can prove it] by means of an argument a fortiori from the case of man. For since it has not refrained from [attacking] man, will it not assuredly continue attacking beasts?

R. Ashi said: Come and hear: THEY SAID BEFORE R. JUDAH: HERE IS ONE WHICH IS MU 'AD TO DO DAMAGE ON SABBATH DAYS BUT NOT MU 'AD TO DO DAMAGE ON WEEK DAYS. HE SAID TO THEM: FOR DAMAGE DONE ON SABBATH DAYS, THE PAYMENT

WILL HAVE TO BE IN FULL, WHEREAS FOR DAMAGE DONE ON WEEK DAYS THE COMPENSATION WILL BE FOR HALF THE DAMAGE ONLY. Now this is quite in order if you maintain that '. . . BUT WAS NOT MU'AD . . .' is the correct reading. The disciples were thus putting a question before him and he was replying to them accordingly. But If you contend that '. . .IS NOT [THEREFORE] MU 'AD . . .' is the correct text, [would it not appear as if his disciples] were giving instruction to him?[14] Again, what would then be the meaning of his reply to them?[15] R. Jannai thereupon said: The same can also be inferred from the opening clause, where it is stated: IN RESPECT OF DAMAGE DONE TO THE SPECIES TO WHICH IT WAS MU 'AD, THE PAYMENT WILL HAVE TO BE IN FULL, BUT IN RESPECT OF DAMAGE DONE TO THAT TO WHICH IT WAS NOT MU 'AD, THE COMPENSATION WILL BE FOR HALF THE DAMAGE ONLY. Now, this would be in order if you maintain that 'BUT IT WAS NOT MU 'AD . . .'[16] is the correct text, in which case the clause just quoted would be explanatory. But if you maintain that '. . . IT IS NOT [THEREFORE] MU'AD . . .'[17] is the correct text, this statement is complete in itself, and why then the further statement 'IN RESPECT OF DAMAGE DONE TO THE SPECIES TO WHICH IT WAS MU 'AD, THE PAYMENT WILL HAVE TO BE IN FULL, BUT IN RESPECT OF DAMAGE DONE TO THAT TO WHICH IT WAS NOT MU 'AD, THE COMPENSATION WILL BE FOR HALF THE DAMAGE ONLY? Have we not been told before how that in the case of Mu 'ad the payment is for half the damage whereas in the case of Mu'ad the payment has to be in full?[18] Yet even if you adopt the view of R. Papa,[19] where the animal gored an ox, an ass and a camel [successively] it would still become Mu 'ad to all [species of beasts].[20]

Our Rabbis taught: If the animal sees an ox and gores it, another ox and does not gore it, a third ox and gores it, a fourth ox and does not gore it, a fifth ox and gores it, a sixth ox and does not gore it, the animal becomes Mu'ad to alternate oxen.

Our Rabbis taught: If an animal sees an ox and gores it, an ass and does not gore it, a horse and gores it a camel and does not gore it, a mule and gores it, a wild ass and does not gore it, the animal becomes Mu'ad to alternate beasts of all species.

The following question was raised: If the animal [successively] gored

---

(1) Cf. supra p. 48, n. 4 and Glos.

(2) V. p. 204, n. 16.

(3) Lit., 'father'.

(4) As stated by the anonymous view.

(5) The disciples.

(6) Apparently we are to supply the words, 'what is the rule regarding it' the remark being intended as a question. But v. infra p. 208.

(7) As indeed rendered in the Mishnaic text.

(8) The Mishnah should accordingly open thus: 'If an ox is Mu'ad to do damage to its own species, it is not (therefore) Mu'ad to any other species (of animals)' etc., etc.

(9) E.g., by letting other animals pass in front of it and seeing that it does not gore them.

(10) Since it is much less likely to attack big animals than small ones. Why then, on R. Papa's reading, have this clause at all in the Mishnah?

(11) Which it would be more ready to attack than human beings.

(12) Cf. supra p. 119.

(13) In contradiction to the view of R. Zebid.

(14) I.e., we have to read their remark as a statement and not as a question.

(15) After they had already decided the question in the wording of the problem.

(16) V. p. 205, n. 6.

(17) V. p. 206, n. 1

(18) Cf. supra p. 73.

(19) That in absence of knowledge to the contrary it is not Mu ‘ad.
(20) And we should not require three gorings for each.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 37b

one ox, a [second] ox, and a [third] ox, an ass, and a camel, what is the legal position? Shall the last ox be counted together with the [first two] oxen, in which case the animal that gored will still be Mu'ad only to oxen whereas to any other species it will not be considered Mu'ad, or shall perhaps the last ox be counted together with the ass and camel, so that the animal that gored will become Mu'ad to all species [of beasts]? [Again,[1] where an animal has successively gored] an ass, a camel, an ox, another ox, and a [third] ox, what is the legal position? Shall the first ox be counted together with the ass and camel, so that the animal that gored will become Mu'ad to all species [of beasts], or shall it perhaps [rather] be counted together with the [other] oxen, in which case it will still be Mu'ad only to oxen, but not Mu'ad to any other species [of beasts]? [Again, where the consecutive gorings took place on] one Sabbath, [the next] Sabbath and [the third] Sabbath, and then on the [subsequent] Sunday and Monday, what is the legal position? Shall the last Sabbath be counted together with the [first two] Sabbaths, in which case the ox that gored would still be Mu'ad only for Sabbaths, whereas in respect of damage done on week days it would not yet be considered Mu ‘ad, or shall it perhaps be counted together with Sunday and Monday and thus become Mu'ad in respect of all the days [of the week]? [Again, where the consecutive gorings took place on] a Thursday, the eve of Sabbath and the Sabbath, then on [the next] Sabbath and [the third] Sabbath, what is the legal position? Shall the first Sabbath be counted together with Thursday and the eve of Sabbath and the goring ox thus become Mu ‘ad for all days, or shall perhaps the first Sabbath be counted together with the subsequent Sabbaths, in which case the goring ox would become Mu ‘ad only for Sabbaths? — These questions must stand over.

If [an ox has] gored an ox on the fifteenth day of a particular month, and [another ox] on the sixteenth day of the next month, and [a third ox] on the seventeenth day of the third month, there would he a difference of opinion between Rab and Samuel.[2] For it was stated:[3] If the symptom of menstruation has once been noticed on the fifteenth day of a particular month, [then] on the sixteenth day of the next month, and [then] on the seventeenth day of the third month, Rab maintained that a periodical recurrence[4] has thereby been established,[5] whereas Samuel said [that this periodicity is not established] until the skipping is repeated [yet] a third time.[6]

Raba said: Where an ox upon hearing the sound of a trumpet gores and upon hearing [again] the sound of a trumpet gores [a second time], and upon hearing [again] the sound of a trumpet gores [a third time], the ox will become Mu'ad with reference to the hearing of the sound of trumpets. Is not this self-evident? — You might have supposed that [the goring at] the first [hearing of the sound of the] trumpet [should not be taken into account as it] might have been due merely to the sudden fright that came over the ox.[7] We are therefore told [that it would be taken into account].[8]

MISHNAH. IN THE CASE OF PRIVATE OWNER'S[9] CATTLE[10] GORING AN OX CONSECRATED TO THE TEMPLE, OR CONSECRATED CATTLE GORING A PRIVATE OX, THERE IS NO LIABILITY, FOR IT IS STATED: THE OX OF HIS NEIGHBOUR,[11] NOT [THAT IS TO SAY] AN OX CONSECRATED TO THE TEMPLE. WHERE AN OX BELONGING TO AN ISRAELITE HAS GORED AN OX BELONGING TO A CANAANITE, THERE IS NO LIABILITY,[12] WHEREAS WHERE AN OX BELONGING TO A CANAANITE GORES AN OX BELONGING TO AN ISRAELITE, WHETHER WHILE TAM OR MU ‘AD,[13] THE COMPENSATION IS TO BE MADE IN FULL.[14]

GEMARA. The [ruling in the] Mishnah is not in accordance with [the view of] R. Simeon b. Menasya; for it was taught: Where a private ox has gored consecrated cattle or where consecrated cattle has gored a private ox, there is not liability, as it is stated: The ox of his neighbour,[15] not [that is to say] an ox consecrated to the Temple. R. Simeon b. Menasya, however, says: Where consecrated cattle has gored a private ox there is no liability, but if a private ox has gored consecrated cattle, whether while Tam or Mu 'ad, payment is to be made for full damage.[16] I might ask, what was the principle adopted by R. Simeon? If the implication of 'his neighbour'[15] has to be insisted upon,[17] why then even in the case of a private ox goring consecrated cattle should there not be exemption? If on the other hand the implication of 'his neighbour' has not to be insisted upon, why then in the case of consecrated cattle goring a private ox should there also not be liability? If, however, you argue that he[18] does in fact maintain that the implication of 'his neighbour' has to be insisted upon, yet where a private ox has gored consecrated cattle there is a special reason for liability inferred by means of an a fortiori argument from the case of private cattle [as follows]: If where a private ox has gored private cattle there is liability, should not there be all the more liability where it has gored consecrated cattle? Why then [did he] not employ the principle of Dayyo[19] [i.e. that it was sufficient] that the object[20] to which the inference is made should be on the same footing as the object from which it was made?[21] And since Tam involves there the payment of half damages, [why then should it not] here also involve the payment of half damages [only]? — Resh Lakish therefore said: Originally all cases came under the law of full compensation;[22] when Scripture therefore particularised 'his neighbour' in the case of Tam, it meant that it was only where damage had been done to a neighbour that Tam would involve half damages [only], thus implying that where the damage had been done to consecrated property, whether by Tam or Mu'ad. the compensation must be in full;

---

(1) Assuming that in the previous case we decide that the last ox will be counted with the first two oxen.

(2) According to Rab it would become Mu'ad to gore every month by missing a day, so that if in the fourth month it gores on the eighteenth day, the compensation would have to be in full, whereas according to Samuel the compensation would still be a half, as the animal could not become Mu'ad until the act of missing a day is repeated three times, so that full compensation would begin with the goring on the nineteenth day of the fifth month.

(3) Nid. 67a.

(4) [MS.M. adds 'in skipping', cf. Rashi.]

(5) And the menstruation could accordingly be expected on the eighteenth day of the fourth month.

(6) I.e., until in the fourth month the menstruation recurs on the eighteenth day, in which case it would be expected on the nineteenth day of the fifth month,

(7) So that full compensation should begin with the fifth occasion.

(8) And full liability will commence with the fourth goring at the sound of a trumpet.

(9) [Mishnah text: 'of an Israelite'.]

(10) Lit., 'ox'.

(11) Ex. XXI, 35.

(12) As Canaanites did not recognise the laws of social justice, they did not impose any liability for damage done by cattle. They could consequently not claim to be protected by a law they neither recognised nor respected, cf. J. T. a.l. and Maim. Yad, Niz. Mam. VIII, 5. [In ancient Israel as in the modern state the legislation regulating the protection of life and property of the stranger was, as Guttmann. M. (HUCA. III 1 ff.) has shown, on the basis of reciprocity. Where such reciprocity was not recognised, the stranger could not claim to enjoy the same protection of the law as the citizen.]

(13) I.e., the ox that did the damage.

(14) So that they should guard their cattle from doing damage. (Maim. loc. cit.)

(15) V. p. 211, n. 5.

(16) Cf. supra p. 23.

(17) To mean the ox of his peer, of his equal. [This would not exclude Gentiles in general as the term רעהו, his neighbour applies also to them (cf. Ex. XI, 2); cf. next page.]

(18) R. Simeon

(19) V. supra p. 126.

(20) Viz. consecrated cattle.

(21) Viz. private cattle.

(22) As in the case of Mu ‘ad where in contradistinction to Tam no mention was made of ‘his neighbour’: cf. Ex. XXI, 36.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 38a

for if this was not its intention, Scripture should have inserted [the expression] ‘his neighbour’ in the text dealing with Mu'ad.[1]

WHERE AN OX BELONGING TO AN ISRAELITE HAS GORED AN OX BELONGING TO A CANAANITE THERE IS NO LIABILITY etc. But I might here assert that you are on the horns of a dilemma. If the implication of ‘his neighbour’ has to be insisted upon, then in the case of an ox of a Canaanite goring an ox of an Israelite, should there also not be exemption? If [on the other hand] the implication of ‘his neighbour’ has not to be insisted upon, why then even in the case of an ox of an Israelite goring an ox of a Canaanite, should there not be liability? — R Abbahu thereupon said: The Writ says, He stood and measured the earth; he beheld and drove asunder the nations,[2] [which may be taken to imply that] God beheld the seven commandments[3] which were accepted by all the descendants of Noah, but since they did not observe them, He rose up and declared them to be outside the protection of the civil law of Israel [with reference to damage done to cattle by cattle].[4] R. Johanan even said that the same could be inferred from this [verse], He shined forth from Mount Paran,[5] [implying that] from Paran[6] He exposed their money to Israel. The same has been taught as follows: If the ox of an Israelite gores an ox of a Canaanite there is no liability,[7] but if an ox of a Canaanite gores an ox of an Israelite whether the ox [that did the damage] was Tam or whether it had already been Mu ‘ad, the payment is to be in full, as it is said: He stood and measured the earth, he beheld and drove asunder the nations,[2] and again, He shined forth from Mount Paran.[5] Why this further citation? — [Otherwise] you might perhaps think that the verse ‘He stood and measured the earth’ refers exclusively to statements [on other subjects] made by R. Mattena and by R. Joseph; come therefore and hear: ‘He shined forth from Mount Paran,’ implying that from Paran[8] he exposed their money to Israel.

What was the statement made by R. Mattena [referred to above]? — It was this. R. Mattena said: He stood and measured the earth; He beheld etc.[9] What did He behold? He beheld the seven commandments[10] which were accepted by all the descendants of Noah, and since [there were some clans that] rejected them, He rose up and exiled them from their lands.[11] But how can the word in the text[12] be [etymologically] explained to mean ‘exile’? — Here it is written ‘"wa-yatter" the nations’ and in another place it is [similarly] written, ‘"le-natter" withal upon the earth,’[13] which is rendered in the Targum[14] ‘to leap withal upon the earth’.

What was the statement made by R. Joseph [referred to above]? — It was this. R. Joseph said: ‘He stood and measured the earth; he beheld’ etc. What did He behold? He beheld the seven commandments which had been accepted by all the descendants of Noah, and since [there were clans that] rejected them He rose up and granted them exemption. Does this mean that they benefited [by breaking the law]? And if so, will it not be a case of a sinner profiting [by the transgression he committed]? — Mar the son of Rabana[15] thereupon said: ‘It only means that even were they to keep the seven commandments [which had first been accepted but subsequently rejected by them] they would receive no reward.’ Would they not? But it has been taught:[16] ‘R. Meir used to say, Whence can we learn that even where a gentile occupies himself with the study of the Torah he equals [in status] the High Priest? We find it stated: . . . which if a man do he shall live in them;[17] it does not say "priests, Levites and Israelites", but "a man", which shows that even if a gentile occupies himself with the study of the Torah he equals [in status] the High Priest.’ — I mean [in saying that they would receive no reward] that they will receive reward not like those who having been enjoined perform commandments, but like those who not having been enjoined perform good deeds: for R. Hanina has stated:[18] Greater is the reward of those who having been enjoined do good deeds than of those who not having been enjoined [but merely out of free will] do good deeds.[19]

Our Rabbis taught: The Government of Rome had long ago sent two commissioners to the Sages of Israel with a request to teach them the Torah. It was accordingly read to them once, twice and thrice. Before taking leave they made the following remark: We have gone carefully through your Torah, and found it correct with the exception of this point, viz. your saying that if an ox of an Israelite gores an ox of a Canaanite there is no liability,[20] whereas if the ox of a Canaanite gores the ox of an Israelite, whether Tam or Mu 'ad, compensation has to be paid in full. In no case can this he right. For if the implication of 'his neighbour' has to be insisted upon, why then in the case of an ox of a Canaanite goring an ox of an Israelite should there also not be exemption? If [on the other hand] the implication of 'his neighbour' has not to be insisted upon, why then even in the case of an ox of an Israelite goring an ox of a Canaanite, should there not be liability? We will, however, not report this matter to our Government.[21]

When R. Samuel b. Judah lost a dauther the Rabbis[22] said to 'Ulla: 'Let us go in and console him.' But he answered them: 'What have I to do with the consolation of the Babylonians,[22] which is [almost tantamount to] blasphemy? For they say "What could have been done," which implies that were it possible to do anything they would have done it.' He therefore went alone to the mourner and said to him: [Scripture says,] And the Lord spake unto me, Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle.[23] Now [we may well ask], could it have entered the mind of Moses to wage war without [divine] sanction? [We must suppose] therefore that Moses of himself reasoned a fortiori as follows: If in the case of the Midianites who came only to assist the Moabites[24] the Torah commanded 'Vex the Midianites and smite them,'[25]

---

(1) V. p. 212, n. 8.

(2) Hab. III, 6.

(3) V. A.Z. (Sonc. ed.) p. 5, n. 7.

(4) The exemption from the protection of the civil law of Israel thus referred only to the Canaanites and their like who had wilfully rejected the elementary and basic principles of civilised humanity

(5) Deut. XXXIII, 2. [The Mount at which God appeared to offer the Law to the nations, who, however, refused to accept it. V. A.Z. 2b.]

(6) On account of what occurred thereat.

(7) V. p. 211, n. 6.

(8) Cf. A. Z. 2a.

(9) Hab. III, 2.

(10) V. p. 213, n. 3.

(11) As described in Deut. II, 10-23.

(12) I.e., wa-yatter.

(13) Lev. XI, 21.

(14) Targum Onkelos, the Aramaic version of the Hebrew Bible; cf. J.E. s.v.

(15) [Ms.M.: Rabina.]

(16) Sanh. 59a; A. Z. 3a.

(17) Lev. XVIII, 5.

(18) Infra p. 501. and Kid. 31a.

(19) [For the idea underlying this dictum v. A.Z. (Sonc. ed.) p. 6, n. 1.]

(20) V. p. 211, n. 6.

(21) [The same incident is related with some variations in J.B.K. IV, 4, and Sifre on Deut. XXXIII, 3, where R. Gamaliel (II) is mentioned as the Sage before whom the Commissioners appeared, Graetz, Geschichte, IV, 108, places this in the days of Domitian (81-96) whose distrust of the Jews led him to institute an inquisition into their beliefs and teachings; Halevy, Doroth I.e. 350, in the days of Nerva who wished to find out whether there was any truth in the slander against the Jews encouraged by Domitian.]

(22) I.e., Babylonian Rabbis.

(23) Deut. II, 9.
(24) Cf. Num. XXII, 4.
(25) Ibid XXV, 17.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 38b

in the case of the Moabites [themselves] should not the same injunction apply even more strongly? But the Holy One, blessed be He, said to him: The idea you have in your mind is not the idea I have in My mind. Two doves have I to bring forth from them;[1] Ruth the Moabitess and Naamah the Ammonitess. Now cannot we base on this an a fortiori argument as follows: If for the sake of two virtuous descendants the Holy One, blessed be He, showed pity to two great nations so that they were not destroyed, may we not be assured that if your honour's daughter had indeed been righteous and worthy to have goodly issue, she would have continued to live?

R. Hiyya B. Abba said that R. Johanan had stated:[2] The Holy One, blessed be He, does not deprive any creature of any reward due to it, even if only for a becoming expression: for in the case of the [descendants of the] elder [daughter][3] who named her son 'Moab',[4] the Holy One, Blessed be He, said to Moses, Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle, [implying that] while actual hostilities against them were forbidden, requisitioning from them was allowed, whereas in the case of the younger [daughter][3] who called her son 'Ben Ammi',[5] the Holy One, Blessed be He, said to Moses: And when thou comest nigh over against the children of Ammon, distress them not, nor meddle with them at all,[6] thus implying that they were not to be subjected even to requisitioning.

R. Hiyya B. Abba further said that R. Joshua b. Korha had stated:[7] At all times should a man try to be first in the performance of a good deed, as on account of the one night by which the elder [daughter][8] preceded the younger she preceded her by four generations [in having a descendant] in Israel: Obed, Jesse, David and Solomon.[9] For the younger [had no descendant in Israel] until [the advent of] Rehoboam, as it is written: And the name of his mother was Naamah the Ammonitess.[10]

Our Rabbis taught: If cattle of an Israelite has gored cattle belonging to a Cuthean[11] there is no liability. But where cattle belonging to a Cuthean gored cattle belonging to an Israelite, in the case of Tam the payment will be for half the damage, whereas in the case of Mu'ad the payment will be in full. R. Meir, however, says: Where cattle belonging to an Israelite gored cattle belonging to a Cuthean there is no liability, whereas in the case of cattle belonging to an Israelite, whether in the case of Tam or in that of Mu'ad, the compensation is to be in full. Does this mean to say that R. Meir maintains that the Cutheans were lion-proselytes?[12] But if [so], an objection would be raised [from the following]:[13] All kinds of stains [found on women's underwear] brought from Rekem[14] are [levitically] clean.[15] But R. Judah considers them unclean, as the inhabitants [of that place] are mainly proselytes[16] who are in error;[17] from among Gentiles[18] they are considered clean. But [where they were brought] from among Israelites[19] or from Cutheans [after having been obtained from private places all agree in declaring them unclean.[20] But where they were brought from Cutheans who had already abandoned them to the public at large][21] R. Meir considers them unclean,[22] whereas the Sages consider them clean, for [even] they[23] were not suspected of being lax in [the exposing of women's stained underwear]. Now does this not prove that R. Meir was of the opinion that Cutheans were true proselytes? — R. Abbahu thereupon said: This was only a pecuniary disability that R. Meir[24] imposed upon them, so that [Israelites] should not intermingle with them.

R. Zera raised an objection [from the following]: These are the damsels through whom the fine[25] is imposed: If a man has connexion with a girl that is a bastard,[26] a Nethinah[27] or a Cuthean.[28] Now if you maintain that R. Meir imposed a pecuniary disability on them, why then not impose it in this case too,[29] so that [Israelites] should not mix with them? Abaye thereupon said:

(1) The Moabites and the Ammonites, who must therefore be saved.
(2) Naz. 23b and Hor. 10b.
(3) Of Lot; cf. Gen. XIX, 30-38.
(4) Lit., 'From father'.
(5) Lit., 'The son of my people'
(6) Deut. II, 19.
(7) Naz. ibid; and Hor. 11a.
(8) V. p. 216, n. 6.
(9) Cf. Ruth IV, 13-22.
(10) I Kings XIV, 31.
(11) I.e., members of the mixed tribes who had been settled on the territory of the former Kingdom of Israel by the Assyrian king and who were subsequently a great hindrance to the Jews who returned from the Babylonian captivity to revive their country and their culture; cf. II Kings, XVII. 24-41; Ezra IV, 1-24 and Neh. III, 33; IV, V, VI, 13.
(12) I.e., they accepted some of the Jewish practices not out of appreciation or with sincerity but simply out of the fear of the lions, which as stated in Scripture had been slaying them; cf. II Kings, XVII, 25.
(13) Nid. VII. 3.
(14) A place mainly inhabited by heathens who are not subject to the laws of purity and menstruation. [Rekem is identified by Targum Onkelos Gen. XVI, 14, with Kadesh; by Josephus (Ant. IV, 7, 1), with Petra.]
(15) As the underwear might naturally be supposed to have been worn by a heathen woman.
(16) Who are subject to all the laws of Scripture and whose menstrual discharge defiles any garment which comes in contact with it.
(17) And have lapsed from the observance of the Law.
(18) Those who have never embraced the religion of Israel and have thus never been subject to the laws of purity and menstruation.
(19) Who as a rule do not expose to the public garments stained with menstrual discharge.
(20) For both Israelites and Cutheans are subject to the laws of purity and menstruation.
(21) The bracketed passage follows the interpretation of this Mishnah given in Nid. 56b.
(22) For Cutheans in contradistinction to Israelites were, according to R. Meir, suspected of being lax in the matter of exposing to the public garments stained with menstrual discharge.
(23) I.e. Cutheans.
(24) Who in other respects considered them true proselytes.
(25) For seduction in accordance with Ex. XXII, 15-16, or for rape in accordance with Deut. XXII, 28-29.
(26) Cf. Deut. XXII, 29 and ibid. XXIII, 3.
(27) A Gibeonite, v. Glos.
(28) Keth. III, 1.
(29) By not allowing them to recover compensation for seduction.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 39a

[No exception was made in this case] so that the sinner[1] should not profit thereby. But let him pay the amount of the fine to the poor?[2] — R. Mari said: It would [in that case have remained] a pecuniary obligation without definite claimants[3] [and would thus never have been discharged].[4] MISHNAH. IF AN OX OF AN OWNER WITH UNIMPAIRED FACULTIES GORES AN OX OF A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT OR A MINOR,[5] THE OWNER IS LIABLE. WHERE, HOWEVER, AN OX OF A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT OR A MINOR HAS GORED AN OX OF AN OWNER WHOSE FACULTIES ARE UNIMPAIRED, THERE IS NO LIABILITY.[6] IF AN OX OF A DEAF-MUTE AN IDIOT OR A MINOR[7] HAS GORED, THE COURT OF LAW APPOINT A GUARDIAN, IN WHOSE PRESENCE WITNESSES WILL BE ABLE TO TESTIFY [THAT THE OX HAS GORED SO THAT IT WILL EVENTUALLY BE DECLARED MU'AD]. IF THE DEAF-MUTE RECOVERS HIS HEARING [OR SPEECH], OR IF THE IDIOT BECOMES SANE, OR IF THE MINOR COMES OF AGE, THE OX PREVIOUSLY DECLARED MU'AD WILL RETURN TO THE STATE OF TAM: THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. R. JOSE, HOWEVER, SAYS THAT THE OX WILL REMAIN IN STATUS QUO. IN THE CASE OF A STADIUM OX[8] [KILLING A PERSON], THE DEATH PENALTY IS NOT IMPOSED [UPON THE OX], AS IT IS WRITTEN: IF AN OX GORE,[9] EXCLUDING CASES WHERE IT IS GOADED TO GORE.

GEMARA. Is not the text in contradiction with itself? [In the first clause] you state, IF AN OX OF A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT OR A MINOR GORES AN OX BELONGING TO ONE WHOSE FACULTIES ARE UNIMPAIRED THERE IS NO LIABILITY, implying that a guardian is not appointed in the case of Tam to collect [the payment of half-damages] out of its body.[10] But read the following clause: IF AN OX OF A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT OR A MINOR HAS GORED, THE COURT OF LAW APPOINT A GUARDIAN IN WHOSE PRESENCE WITNESSES WILL BE ABLE TO TESTIFY [SO THAT IT WILL EVENTUALLY BE DECLARED MU'AD]. Now, does this not prove that a guardian is appointed in the case of Tam to collect [the payment of half-damages] out of its body? — Raba replied [that the text of the concluding clause] should be understood thus: If the oxen are presumed to be gorers, then a guardian is appointed and witnesses will give evidence for the purpose of having the cattle declared Mu'ad, so that should another goring take place,[11] the payment would have to come from the best [of the general estate].[12]

From the best of whose estate [would the payment have to come]? — R. Johanan said: From the best [of the estate] of the orphans;[13] R. Jose b. Hanina said: From the best [of the estate] of the guardian. But did R. Johanan really say so? [Has it not been stated that] R. Judah said in the name of R. Assi:[14] The estate of the orphans[13] must not be distrained upon unless where usury is consuming it, and R.. Johanan said: [Unless there is a liability] either for a bond bearing interest or to a woman for her kethubah,[15] [so as to save from further payment] on account of [her] maintenance?[16] — You must therefore reverse names [to read as follows]: R. Johanan said: From the best [of the estate] of the guardian, whereas R. Jose b. Hanina said: From the best [of the estate] of the orphans. Raba, however, objected, saying: Because there is a contradiction between R. Johanan in one place and R. Johanan in another place, are you to ascribe to R. Jose b. Hanina an erroneous view?[17] Was not R. Jose b. Hanina a judge, able to penetrate to the innermost intention of the Law? — We must therefore not reverse the names, [and the contradiction between the two views of R. Johanan[18] can be reconciled by the consideration that] a case of damage is altogether different.[19] R. Johanan stated that the payment must be made out of the best [of the estate] of the orphans, because if you were to say that it is to be out of the best [of the estate] of the guardians

---

(1) The seducer.

(2) So that the sinner should not benefit, but why pay the money to the Cuthean if R. Meir was inclined to impose a disability upon Cutheans?

(3) Any poor man claiming the money could be put off by the plea that he (the seducer) wished to give it to another poor man.

(4) If the Cuthean would not have been entitled to claim it.

(5) Usually up to the age of thirteen. These three form a category for themselves as they are not subject to the obligations of either civil or criminal law.

(6) In the case of Tam: v. the discussion in Gemara.

(7) By evidence having been delivered in the presence of the appointed guardian.

(8) [, the arena used for wild beast hunts and gladiatorial contests, v. Krauss, op. cit. III, 119.]

(9) Ex. XXI, 28.

(10) Cf.supra p. 73.

(11) But no payment will be made for damage done while the ox was Tam.

(12) V. p. 219, n. 6.

(13) Who were minors.

(14) ‘Ar. 22a.

(15) I.e., marriage settlement; v. Glos.

(16) For as long as the widow does not collect her kethubah, she receives her maintenance from the property of the orphans, v. Keth. XI, 1.

(17) [Raba regarded it as an adopted ruling not to distrain upon the estate of orphans. V. Asheri, a.l.]

(18) I.e., here and in ‘Ar. 22a.

(19) Presumably on account of public safety and public interest it is more expedient not to postpone payment until the orphans come of age.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 39b

people would certainly refrain from accepting this office and would do nothing at all [in the matter]. R. Jose b. Hanina, however, said that the payment should be made out of the best [of the estate] of the guardians. and that these should be reimbursed out of the estate of the orphans when the latter will have come of age.

Whether [or not] guardians could be appointed in the case of Tam to collect payment out of its body, is a point at issue between the following Tannaim: In the case of an ox whose owner has become a deaf-mute, or whose owner became insane or whose owner has gone abroad,[1] Judah b. Nakosa said on behalf of Symmachus that it would have to remain Tam[2] until witnesses could give evidence in the presence of the owner. The Sages, however, say that a guardian should be appointed in whose presence the evidence may be given. Should the deaf-mute recover his faculty [of hearing or speech], or the idiot become sane, or the minor come of age, or the owner return from abroad, Judah b. Nakosa said on behalf of Symmachus that the ox would revert to the state of Tam[3] until evidence is given in the presence of the owner, whereas R. Jose said that it would retain its status quo. Now, we have here to ask, what is the meaning of ‘it would have to remain Tam’[4] in the dictum of Symmachus? It could hardly mean that the ox cannot become Mu'ad at all, for since it is stated in the concluding clause, ‘The ox would revert to the state of Tam’, it is implied that it had formerly been Mu'ad. What then is the meaning of, ‘it would have to remain Tam’?[4] We must say, ‘It would remain Tam [complete],’[5] that is, we do nothing to diminish its value, which would, of course, show that [Symmachus holds] no guardian is appointed in the case of Tam to collect payment out of its body. ‘The Sages, however, say that a guardian should be appointed in whose presence evidence may be given’, from which it follows that [they hold] a guardian may be appointed in the case of Tam to collect payment out of its body.

And what is the point at issue in the concluding clause? The point at issue there is [whether or not a change of] control[6] should cause a change [in the state of the ox].[7] Symmachus maintains that [a change in] control causes a change [in the state of the ox],[7] whereas R. Jose holds that [a change of] control causes no change [in the state of the ox].

Our Rabbis taught: Where an ox of a deaf-mute, an idiot or a minor has gored, R. Jacob pays half-damages. What has R. Jacob to do with it?[8] — But read, ‘R. Jacob orders the payment of half-damages.’ With what case are we here dealing? If with a Tam, is this not obvious?[9] For does not any other owner similarly pay half-damages? If [on the other] hand we are dealing with a Mu'ad, then where proper precautions were taken to control it, why should any payment be made at all?[10] And if no precautions were taken to control it, why should not damages be paid in full? — Raba thereupon said: We are in fact dealing with a Mu'ad, and with a case where precautions of some inferior sort[11] were taken to control the ox, but not really adequate precautions. R. Jacob concurred with R. Judah who said[12] that [even in the case of Mu'ad, half of the payment, i.e.] the part due from Tam remains unaffected [being still subject to the law of Tam]; he also concurred with R. Judah in holding[13] that to procure exemption from the law of Mu'ad even inadequate precautions are sufficient;[14] and he furthermore followed the view of the Rabbis[15] who said that a guardian could be appointed in the case of Tam to collect payment out of its body.[16] Said Abaye to him:[17] Do they[18] really not differ? Has it not been taught: 'Where the ox of a deaf-mute, an idiot or a minor has gored, R. Judah maintains that there is liability to pay and R. Jacob says that the payment will be only for half the damage'? — Rabbah b. 'Ulla thereupon said: The 'liability to pay' mentioned by R. Judah is here defined [as to its amount] by R. Jacob.[19] But according to Abaye who maintained that they did differ, what was the point at issue between them? — He may tell you that they were dealing with a case of Mu'ad that had not been guarded at all, in regard to which R. Jacob would concur with R. Judah on one point but differ from him on another point. He would concur with him on one point, in that R. Judah lays down that [even with Mu'ad half of the payment, i.e.] the part due from Tam remains unaffected; but he would differ from him on another point, in that R. Judah lays down that a guardian should be appointed in the case of Tam to collect payment out of its body, whereas R. Jacob is of the opinion that a guardian could not be appointed and there could therefore be no payment except the half [which should be subject to the law] of Mu'ad.[20] Said R. Aha b. Abaye to Rabina: All would be very well according to Abaye who maintained that they differ;[21] he is quite right [in explaining the earlier statement of R. Jacob[22] to apply only to Mu'ad].[23] But according to Raba who maintained that they do not differ, why should the former statement [of R. Jacob] be referred only to Mu'ad? Why not also to Tam,

---

(1) Lit., 'the Province of the Sea'.
(2) בתמותו
(3) V. the discussion which follows.
(4) In the commencing clause.
(5) Reading בתמימותו instead of בתמותו.
(6) Such as from guardian to owner.
(7) I.e., from the state of Mu'ad to that of Tam.
(8) That he personally should have to pay compensation.
(9) Why then state this at all?
(10) Since so far as the owner was concerned the damage occurred by accident.
(11) For the various degrees of precaution cf. infra 55b.
(12) Supra p. 84 and infra p. 260.
(13) Infra p. 259.
(14) But this would not be sufficient in the case of Tam. Where therefore such a precaution has been taken to control a Mu'ad, the half-damages for which the Tam is liable would be enforced, but not the additional damages for which the Mu'ad is liable.
(15) The Sages, whose view was explained supra.
(16) Hence R. Jacob's ruling for the payment of half-damages.
(17) I.e., to Raba.
(18) R. Jacob and R. Judah.
(19) Who thus makes precise what R. Judah left unspecified.
(20) Which is paid out of the general estate.
(21) I.e., that R. Jacob maintained that no guardian could be appointed in the case of Tam, and R. Judah that he could.
(22) Where the view of R. Judah was not mentioned at all.
(23) Where no precaution to control the ox has been taken.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 40a

if he[1] follows the view of R. Judah,[2] in a case where the precautions taken to control the ox were of an inferior kind and not really adequate,[3] or if he[1] follows the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob,[4] where no precautions to control the ox had been taken at all,[5] as it has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Whether in the case of Tam or in the case of Mu'ad, if precautions of [at least] some inferior sort have been taken to control the ox, there would be no liability. The new point made known to us by R. Jacob would thus have been that guardians should be appointed even in the case of Tam to collect payment out of its body. [Why then did Raba explain the former statement of R. Jacob to refer only to Mu'ad? Why did he not explain it to refer to Tam also?] — [In answer] he[6] said: Raba made[7] one statement express two principles [in which R. Jacob is in agreement with R. Judah].[8]

Rabina stated that [the question whether or not a change of] control should cause a change [in the state of the ox] might have been the point at issue between them,[9] e.g., where after the ox had been declared Mu'ad, the deaf-mute recovered his faculty, or the idiot became sane, or the minor came of age, [in which case] R. Judah would maintain that the ox should remain in its status quo whereas R. Jacob would hold that [a change of] control should cause a change [in the state of the ox].

Our Rabbis taught: In the case of guardians, the payment [for damages] will be out of the best of the general estate, though no kofer[10] will be paid by them. Who is the Tanna who holds that [the payment of] kofer is but an act of atonement[11] [which would justify the exemption in this case], as [minor] orphans are not subject to the law of atonement? — R. Hisda said: It is R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka. For it was taught: [The words,] Then he shall give for the ransom of his life[12] [indicate] the value [of the life] of the person killed. But R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka interprets it to refer to the value [of the life] of the defendant. Now, is this not the point at issue between them,[13] that the Rabbis consider kofer to constitute a civil liability[14] whereas R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka holds kofer to be of the nature of propitiation?[15] — R. Papa said that this was not the case. For we may suppose all to agree that kofer is a kind of propitiation, and the point at issue between them here is merely that the Rabbis hold that this propitiatory payment should be fixed by estimating the value [of the life] of the person killed, whereas R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka maintains that it should be fixed by estimating the value of [the life of] the defendant. What reason have the Rabbis for their view? — The expression 'laying upon' is used in the later context[16] and the same expression 'laying upon' is used in an earlier context;[17] just as there it refers to the plaintiff, so does it here also refer to the plaintiff. But R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka argued that it is written, 'Then he shall give for the ransom of his life' [referring of course to the defendant]. And the Rabbis? — [They reply,] Yes, it does say 'The ransom of his life', but the amount must be fixed by valuing [the life of] the person killed.

Raba in his conversations with R. Nahman used to praise R. Aha b. Jacob as a great man. He[18] therefore said to him: 'When you come across him, bring him to me.' When he[19] later came to see him he[18] said to him: 'You may put problems to me', whereupon he[19] asked him: 'If an ox of two partners [kill a person] how is the payment of kofer to be made? Shall this one pay kofer and the other one kofer? But one kofer is mentioned by Divine Law and not two kofers! Shall this one [pay] half of the kofer and the other one half of the kofer? A full kofer is commanded by Divine Law and not half of a kofer!' While he[20] was still sitting and pondering over this, he[21] further asked him: We have learnt:[22] 'In the case of debtors for valuations[23] the Sanctuary treasury may demand a pledge, whereas in the case of those who are liable to sin-offerings or for trespass-offerings[24] no pledge can be enforced.' Now, what would be the law in the case of those liable to kofer? [Shall it be said that] since kofer is a kind of propitiation it should be subject to the same ruling as sin-offerings and trespass-offerings,[24] the matter being of serious moment to the defendant so that there is no necessity of enforcing a pledge from him; or [shall it] perhaps [be argued that] since it has to be given to a fellow man it is [considered] a civil liability, and as it does not go to the Temple treasury,[25] it is consequently not taken too seriously by the defendant, for which [reason there may appear to be some] necessity for requiring a pledge? Or, again, since the defendant did not [in this case] himself commit the wrong, for it was his chattel that did the wrong [and committed manslaughter], the whole matter might be considered by him as of no serious moment, and a pledge should therefore be enforced? — He[26] said to him: 'Leave me alone; I am still held prisoner by your first problem [that has not yet been answered by me].'

Our Rabbis taught: If a man borrowed an ox on the assumption that it is in the state of Tam but is subsequently discovered to have already been declared Mu'ad, [if goring is repeated while still with the borrower] the owner will pay one half of the damages and the borrower will pay [the other] half of the damages. But if it was declared Mu'ad while in the possession of the borrower, and [after it] was returned to the owner [it gored again] , the owner will pay half the damages while the borrower is exempt from any liability whatsoever.

The Master stated: 'If a man borrowed an ox on the assumption that it is in the state of Tam but was subsequently discovered to have already been declared Mu'ad, [if goring is repeated] the owner will pay one half of the damages and the borrower will pay [the other] half of the damages.' But why should the borrower not plead against the owner, 'I wanted to borrow an ox, I did not want to borrow a lion?' — Rab said: we are dealing here with a case where the borrower knew the ox to be a gorer.[27] Still why can he not plead against him: 'I wanted to borrow an ox in the state of Tam but I did not want to borrow an ox that had already been declared Mu'ad'? — [This could not be pleaded] because the owner might argue against him: 'In any case, even had the ox been still Tam, would you not have to pay half-damages? Now, also, you have to pay one half of the damages.' But still why can he not plead against him: 'Had the ox been Tam, damages would have been paid out of its body'?[28] — [This could similarly not be pleaded] because the owner might contend: 'In any case would you not have had to reimburse me [to the full extent of] the value of the ox?'[29] Why can he still not plead against him:

---

(1) I.e., R. Jacob.

(2) That an inferior degree of precaution is not sufficient in the case of Tam; v. infra p.259.

(3) Hence the liability to pay half-damages, a guardian being appointed to collect payment out of the body of the Tam.

(4) That a precaution of even an inferior degree suffices with Tam as well as with Mu'ad.

(5) V. p. 223, n. 10.

(6) I.e., Rabina.

(7) [So MS.M. deleting 'he means thus' in cur. edd. of Rashi.]

(8) [By explaining R. Jacob's earlier statement as referring to Mu'ad, he informs us that he shares the views of R. Judah both in regard to the question of precaution and that of the part due from Tam in case of a Mu'ad ox, whilst incidentally we also learn that guardians are appointed in case of Tam etc.]

(9) Between R. Jacob and R. Judah in the second cited Baraitha.

(10) Lit., 'atonement', or 'a sum of money', i.e., compensation paid for manslaughter committed by a beast in lieu of the life of the owner of the beast, as appears from Ex. XXI, 29-30; v. Glos.

(11) And not an ordinary civil obligation like damages.

(12) Ex. XXI, 30

(13) I.e., between R. Ishmael and the other Rabbis his opponents.

(14) The payment must therefore correspond to the value of the loss sustained through the death of the person killed.

(15) For since it was the life of the owner of the beast that should be redeemed the payment must surely correspond to the value of his life.

(16) Ex. XXI, 30.

(17) Ibid. XXI, 22.

(18) R. Nahman.

(19) R. Aha b. Jacob.

(20) V. p. 225, n. 6.

(21) V. ibid., n. 7.

(22) 'Ar. 21a.

(23) I.e. vows of value dealt with in Lev. XXVII, 2-8.

(24) Which are intended to procure atonement and which will consequently not be put off.

(25) [Lit., 'To the (Most) High.' Read with MS.M. 'Since it has to be given to a fellow man and not to the Treasury, it is a civil liability.']

(26) R. Nahman.

(27) Though he did not know that the ox had been declared Mu'ad.

(28) And not from my own estate.

(29) In payment of the ox you borrowed from me.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 40b

'Were the ox to have been Tam I would have admitted [the act of goring] and become exempt from having to pay'?[1] Moreover even according to the view[2] that the payment of half-damages [for goring in the case of Tam] is a civil liability,[3] why should the borrower still not argue: 'Had the ox been Tam I would have caused it to escape to the pasture'?[4] — We must therefore suppose the case to have been one where the Court of law stepped in first and took possession of the ox. But if so why should the owner pay one half of the damages? Why not plead against the borrower: 'You have allowed my ox to fall into the hands of a party against whom I am powerless to bring any legal action'? — [This could not be pleaded] because the borrower might retort to him: 'Were I even to have returned the ox to you, would the Court of Law not have taken it from you?' But why should the owner still not plead against the borrower: 'Were you to have returned it to me, I would have caused it to escape to the pasture'?[5] — [This could not be pleaded] because the borrower might argue against him: 'In any case would the damages not have been paid out of the best [of your general estate]?'[6] This indeed could be effectively argued [by the borrower] where the owner possessed property, but what could be argued in the case where the owner possessed no property? — What therefore the borrower could always argue against the owner is [as follows]: 'Just as I am under a personal obligation to you,[7] so am I under a personal obligation[7] to that party [who is your creditor], in virtue of the rule of R. Nathan, as it was taught,[8] 'R. Nathan says: Whence do we conclude that if A claims a maneh[9] from B, and B [claims a similar sum] from C, the money is collected from C and [directly] handed over to A? From the statement of Scripture:[10] And give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed.[11]

'If it was declared Mu'ad while in the possession of the borrower, and [after it] was returned to the owner [it gored again], the owner will pay half damages while the borrower is exempt from any liability whatsoever.' Does this concluding clause [not appear to prove that a change in the] control [of the ox][12] causes a change [in its status], while the preceding clause [tends to prove that a change in the] control [of the ox][13] causes no change [in its status]? — R. Johanan thereupon said: The contradiction [is obvious]; he who taught one clause certainly did not teach the other clause [in the text of the Baraitha]. Rabbah, however, said: Since the opening clause [tends to prove that a change in the] control[13] does not cause a change [in the status], the concluding clause [may also maintain that a change in the] control does not cause a change [in the status]. For the ruling in the concluding clause could be based on the fact that the owner may argue against the borrower, 'You had no legal right to cause my ox to be declared Mu'ad.'[14] R. Papa, however, said: Since the concluding clause [proves that a change in the] control[15] [of the ox] causes a change [in its status], the opening clause [may also maintain that a change in the] control [of the ox] causes a change [in its status]. For the ruling in the opening clause could be based upon the reason that wherever the ox is put, it bears the name of its owner upon it.[16]

IN THE CASE OF A STADIUM OX [KILLING A PERSON], THE DEATH PENALTY IS NOT IMPOSED [UPON THE OX] etc. The question was raised: What [would have been the position of such an ox] with reference to [its being sacrificed upon] the altar? — Rab said that it would have been eligible, whereas Samuel maintained that it would have been ineligible. Rab considered it eligible since it committed manslaughter only by compulsion, whereas Samuel considered it ineligible since it had been used as an instrument for the commission of a crime.

An objection was raised:[17] [Ye shall bring your offering] of the cattle[18] excludes an animal that has copulated with a woman and an animal that has copulated with a man;[19] even of the herd[18] excludes an animal that has been used as an instrument of idolatry; of the flock[18] excludes an animal that has been set apart for idolatrous purposes; and of the flock excludes an animal that has gored

[and committed manslaughter]. R. Simeon remarked upon this: If it is laid down that an animal that has copulated with a woman[19] [is to be excluded] why was it necessary to lay down that an animal goring [and committing manslaughter is also excluded]?[20] Again, if it is laid down that an animal that gored [and committed manslaughter is to be excluded], why was it necessary to lay down that an animal copulating with a woman [is also excluded]?[20] [The reason is] because there are features in an animal copulating with a woman which are not present in an animal goring [and committing manslaughter], and again there are features in an animal goring [and committing manslaughter] which are not present in the case of an animal copulating with a woman. In the case of an animal copulating with a human being the law makes no distinction between a compulsory[21] and a voluntary act [on the part of the animal],[22] whereas in the case of an animal goring [and committing manslaughter] the law does not place a compulsory act on the same footing as a voluntary one. Again, in the case of an animal goring [and committing manslaughter] there is liability to pay kofer,[23] whereas in the case of an animal copulating with a woman there is no liability to pay kofer.[24] It is on account of these differences that it was necessary to specify both an animal copulating with a woman and an animal goring [and committing manslaughter]. Now, it is here taught that in the case of an animal copulating with a human being the law makes no distinction between a compulsory and a voluntary act, whereas in the case of an animal goring [and committing manslaughter the law] does not place a compulsory act on the same footing as a voluntary one. What rule are we to derive from this? Is it not the rule in respect of eligibility for becoming a sacrifice [upon the altar]?[25] — No; the rule in respect of stoning.[26] This indeed stands also to reason, for if you maintain that it is with reference to the sacrifice that the law does not place a compulsory act on the same footing as a voluntary one in the case of an animal goring, [I would point out that with reference to its eligibility for the altar] the Scripture says nothing explicitly with regard either to a compulsory act or a voluntary act on its part. Does it therefore not [stand to reason that what we are to derive from this is] the rule in respect of stoning?

The Master stated: 'In the case of an animal goring [and committing manslaughter] there is liability to pay kofer, whereas in the case of an animal copulating with a woman there is no liability to pay kofer.' What are the circumstances? It could hardly be that while copulating with a woman it killed her, for what difference could be made between killing by means of a horn and killing by means of copulating? If on the other hand the act of copulating did not result in manslaughter, is the exemption from paying kofer not due to the fact that no killing took place? — Abaye said: We suppose, in fact, that it deals with a case where, by the act of copulating, the animal did not kill the woman, who, however, was brought to the Court of Law and by its orders executed. [In such a case] you might perhaps have thought

---

(1) For since the liability of half-damages in the case of Tam is only of a penal nature, confession by the defendant would have annulled the obligation; cf. supra. p. 62.

(2) V. supra p. 64.

(3) And confession would bring no exemption.

(4) And since the payment in the case of Tam is only out of its body he would have evaded it.

(5) V. p.227, n. 7.

(6) For in fact the ox had already been declared Mu'ad in the hands of the owner.

(7) To return the ox.

(8) Pes. 31a; Git. 37a; Keth. 19a, 82a; Kid. 15a.

(9) 100 zuz; cf. Glos.

(10) Num. V,7.

(11) Pointing thus to the last creditor.

(12) I.e. from the hands of the borrower to those of the owner.

(13) I.e, from the hands of the owner to those of the borrower.

(14) And it is because of this fact but not because of the change in the control that the ox reverts to the state of Tam.

(15) V. p. 228, n. 8.

(16) The ox therefore did not, by leaving the owner and coming into the hands of a borrower, undergo any change at all.
(17) From Bek. 41a;Tem. 28a.
(18) Lev. I, 2.
(19) Cf. Lev., XVIII, 23 and ib. XX,15-16.
(20) Since in both cases the animal is to be killed where the crime has been testified to by witnesses.
(21) As in the case of animal copulating with man.
(22) V. p. 229, n. 7.
(23) V. p. 224. n. 6.
(24) See the discussion which follows.
(25) Since this was the point under consideration, which solves the question as to the eligibility of a stadium ox for the altar.
(26) [In respect of which the difference between compulsory goring and voluntary goring is admitted.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 41a

that the execution amounted to manslaughter on the part of the animal; we are therefore told [that this is not the case]. Raba on the other hand held that [we deal here with a case where] while copulating with a woman the animal did kill her, and as for the objection what difference could be made between killing committed by means of horns and killing committed by means of copulating, [the answer would be that] in the case of Horn the animal purposes to do damage, whereas in this case [of copulating] the intention of the animal is merely for self-gratification. What is the point at issue [between these two explanations]?[1] — [Whether kofer should be paid] in the case of Foot treading upon a child in the premises of the plaintiff [and killing it].[2] According to Abaye there would be liability to pay kofer, whereas according to Raba no payment of kofer would have to be made.[3]

It was taught in accordance with the view of Rab: An ox trained for the arena [that killed a person] is not liable [to be stoned] to death , and is eligible for the altar, for it had been compelled [to commit the manslaughter].

MISHNAH. IF AN OX GORES A MAN AND DEATH RESULTS, IN THE CASE OF MU'AD THERE IS LIABILITY TO PAY KOFER,[4] BUT IN THE CASE OF TAM, THERE IS NO LIABILITY TO PAY KOFER. IN BOTH CASES, HOWEVER, THE OXEN ARE LIABLE [TO BE STONED] TO DEATH.[5] THE SAME [JUDGMENT APPLIES] IN THE CASE OF A [MINOR] SON AND THE SAME [JUDGMENT APPLIES] IN THE CASE OF A [MINOR] DAUGHTER.[6] BUT WHERE THE OX HAS GORED A MANSERVANT OR A MAIDSERVANT [AND DEATH HAS RESULTED], COMPENSATION HAS TO BE GIVEN TO THE AMOUNT OF THIRTY SELA',[7] WHETHER THE KILLED SERVANT WAS WORTH A HUNDRED MANEH[8] OR NOT WORTH ANY MORE THAN ONE DENAR.[9]

GEMARA. But since when it was still the state of Tam it had to be killed [for manslaughter], how could it ever have been possible to declare it Mu'ad? — Rabbah said: We are dealing here with a case where, e.g. it had been estimated that it[10] might have killed three[11] human beings.[12] R. Ashi, however, said that such estimation amount to nothing,[13] and that we are therefore dealing here with a case where the ox gored and endangered the lives of three human beings.[14] R. Zebid [on the other hand] said: [The case is one] where, for instance, it killed three animals.[15] But is an ox [which has been declared] Mu'ad to kill animals also Mu'ad to kill men?[16] — R. Shimi therefore said: [The case is one] where for instance it killed three heathens.[15] But is an ox [which has been declared] Mu'ad to gore persons who are heathens also Mu'ad with reference to those who are Israelites? — R. Simeon b. Lakish therefore said: [The case is one] where, for instance, it killed three persons who had already been afflicted with fatal organic diseases.[15] But is an ox [which has been declared] Mu'ad with reference to persons afflicted with fatal organic diseases also Mu'ad regarding persons in sound condition? — R. Papa therefore said: [The case is one where] the ox [on the first occasion] killed [a sound person] but escaped to the pasture,[17] killed again [a sound person] but similarly escaped to the pasture. R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: [The case is one] where, for instance, [two witnesses alleged in every case an alibi against the three pairs of witnesses who had testified to the first three occasions of goring,[17] and] it so happened that [after evidence had been given regarding the fourth time of goring the accusation of the alibi with reference to the first three times of goring fell to the ground as] a new pair of witnesses gave evidence of an alibi against the same two witnesses who alleged the alibi [against the three sets of witnesses who had testified to the first three occasions of goring]. Now this explanation would be satisfactory [if the three days required for] the declaration of Mu'ad refer to [the goring of] the ox[18] [so as to make sure that it has an ingrained tendency].[19] But if the three days are needed to warn the owner,[18] why should he not plead [against the plaintiff], 'I was not aware [that the evidence as to the first three gorings was genuine]'? — [This could not be pleaded where] e.g., it was stated [by the very last pair of witnesses] that whenever the ox had [gored and] killed he[20] had been present [and witnessed every occasion]. — Rabina said: [The case of an ox not being stoned after any of the first three fatal gorings might be] where, though recognising the owner of the ox[20] [the witnesses who testified to the first three time of goring] did not at that time recognise the identity of the ox [also].[17] But what could the owner[20] have done [where the ox that gored and killed had not been identified]?[21] — [He is culpable because] they could say to him: 'Knowing that an ox inclined to gore has been among your herd, you ought to have guarded the whole of your herd.'

IN BOTH CASES, HOWEVER, THE OXEN ARE LIABLE [TO BE STONED] TO DEATH. Our Rabbis taught: From the implication of the statement The ox shall be surely stoned[22] would I not have known that it becomes nebelah[23] and that by becoming nebelah it should be forbidden to be consumed for food?[24] Why then was it necessary to state further And his flesh shall not be eaten?[25] Scripture must therefore have intended to tell us that were the ox to be slaughtered after the sentence has been passed upon it, it would be forbidden to be consumed as food. This rule is thus established as regards food; whence could it be derived that it would also be forbidden for any [other] use whatsoever? The text therefore says, But the owner of the ox shall be quit.[25] How does this bear [on the matter in hand]? — Simeon B. Zoma said: [The word 'quit' is used here] as in [the colloquial expression,] So-and-so went out quit from his possessions without having any benefit of them whatsoever.

But how do we know that 'his flesh shall not be eaten' refers to a case where the ox has been slaughtered after the sentence had been passed on it, to indicate that it should be forbidden to be used as food? Why not rather suppose that where it has been slaughtered after the sentence had been passed on it, the ox would be eligible to be used for food, and take the words 'his flesh shall not be eaten' as referring to a case where the ox had already been stoned, and indicating that it should [then] be forbidden for any use whatsoever?[26] Such an implication is even in conformity with the view of R. Abbahu, for R. Abbahu said on behalf of R. Eleazar:[27] Wherever Scripture says either it shall not be eaten[28] or thou shalt not eat[29] or you shall not eat,[30] a prohibition both in respect of food and in respect of any [other] use is implied, unless where Scripture makes an explicit exception, as it did make an exception in the case of a thing that dies of itself, which may be given unto a stranger or sold unto a heathen![24] — It may, however, be argued against this that these words [of R. Abbahu] hold good only where the prohibition both in respect of food and in respect of any [other] use is derived from the one Scriptural text, [viz.,] 'it shall not be eaten', but here where the prohibition in respect of food is derived from '[the ox] shall be surely stoned', should you suggest that [the words] 'his flesh shall not be eaten' were meant as a prohibition for any use, [we may ask] why then did the Divine Law not plainly state 'No benefit shall be derived from it'? Or again, why not merely say, 'It shall not be eaten'? Why [the additional words] 'his flesh', if not to indicate that even where it had been made and prepared to resemble other meat, as where the ox was slaughtered, it should still be forbidden. Mar Zutra strongly demurred to this: Why not [he said] take this prohibition

(1) Given by Abaye and Raba respectively.
(2) Discussed supra p. 134.
(3) Since the intention of the animal was not to do damage.
(4) Ex. XXI, 30.
(5) Ibid. 28-29.
(6) Ibid. 31
(7) Ibid. 32.
(8) V. Glos.
(9) V. Glos.
(10) The ox.
(11) As Mu'ad could be only on the fourth occasion; cf. however Rashi a.l.; also Tosaf. a.l. and supra p. 119.
(12) Whom the ox pursued but who had a very narrow escape from death by running away to a safe place.
(13) Since no actual goring took place.
(14) Who, however, did not die until after the ox gored again on the fourth occasion, and it was on account of this delay that the ox was not stoned previously.
(15) In which case the ox should not be put to death.
(16) Cf. supra p. 4, and p. 205.
(17) The ox thus escaped death.
(18) Cf. supra p.121
(19) As in this case also the first three times of goring took place on three successive days.
(20) I.e. the defendant.
(21) How then could this be called warning?
(22) Ex. XXI. 28.
(23) I.e.. the carcass of an animal not ritually slaughtered.
(24) In accordance with Deut XIV, 21.
(25) V. p. 233, n. 6.
(26) For without this implication it would have followed the general rule that an animal which was not slaughtered in accordance with the requirements of the law could be used for any purpose but food; cf. Deut. XIV, 21 and Lev. VII, 24.
(27) Pes. 21b; Kid. 56b.
(28) Such e.g. as in Ex. XIII,3.
(29) See Lev. XVII, 12 but also Pes. 22a.
(30) Cf. e.g., Gen. XXXII, 33 and Pes. 22a and Hul. 100b.

to refer to a case where the slaughterer prepared[1] a piece of sharp flint and with it slaughtered the ox, which was thus dealt with as if it has been stoned, whereas where it had been slaughtered by means of a knife the prohibition should not apply? — To this it may be replied: Is a knife specifically mentioned in Scripture? Moreover we have learnt:[2] If one slaughters with a hand-sickle, with a flint or with a reed, the act of slaughtering has been properly executed.[2]

And now that the prohibition in respect both of food and of any [other] use has been derived from [the text] 'his flesh shall not be eaten', what additional teaching is afforded to me by [the words] 'The owner of the ox shall be quit'? — [The prohibition of] the use of the skin. For otherwise you might have been inclined to think that it was only the flesh that had been proscribed from being used, whereas the skin should be permitted to be used; we are therefore told [that this is not the case but] that 'the owner of the ox shall be quit.' But what of those Tannaim who employ this [text], 'The owner of the ox shall be quit' for deriving other implications (as we will indeed have to explain infra);[3] whence do they derive the prohibition against the making use of the skin? — They derive it from [the auxiliary term in the Hebrew text] 'eth his flesh', meaning, 'together with that which is joined to its flesh', that is, its skin. This Tanna,[4] however, does not stress [the term] 'eth' for legal expositions, as it has been taught:[5] Simeon the Imsonite, or as others read, Nehemiah the Imsonite, used to expound [the term] 'eth'[6] wherever it occurred in the Torah. When, however, he reached, Thou shalt fear eth the Lord thy God,[7] he abstained.[8] His disciples said to him: Rabbi, what is to be done with all the expositions of [the term] 'eth' which you have already given?[6] He said to them: Just as I have received reward for the [previous] expositions so have I received reward for the [present] abstention. When R. Akiba, however, came, he taught: 'Thou shalt fear eth the Lord thy God' implies that the scholarly disciples are also to be feared.

Our Rabbis taught: 'But the owner of the ox shall be quit' means, according to the view of R. Eliezer, quit from [paying] half kofer.[9] Said R. Akiba to him: Since any actual liability in the case of the ox itself [being a Tam] is not paid except out of its body,[10] [why cannot the owner say to the plaintiff,] 'Bring it to the Court of Law and be reimbursed out of it' ?[11] R. Eliezer then said to him: 'Do I really appear so [simple] in your eyes that [you should take] my exposition to refer to a case of an ox liable [to be stoned] to death? My exposition referred only to one who killed the human being in the presence of one witness or in the presence of its owner.'[12] In the presence of its owner! Would he not be admitting a penal liability?[13] — R. Eliezer maintains that kofer partakes of a propitiatory character.[14]

Another [Baraitha] teaches: R. Eliezer said to him: Akiba, do I really appear so [simple] in your eyes that [you take] my exposition to refer to an ox liable [to be stoned] to death? My exposition referred only to one who had been intending to kill a beast but [by accident] killed a man, [or where it had been intending to kill] an Egyptian and killed an Israelite, [or] a non-viable child and killed a viable child.[15] Which of the answers, was given first? — R. Kahana in the name of Raba said that [the answer about] intention was given first, whereas R. Tabyomi in the name of Raba said that [the answer about] having killed [the man in the presence of one witness etc.] was given first. R. Kahana, who in the name of Raba said [that the answer about] intention was given first, compared him to a fisherman who had been catching fishes in the sea;

---

(1) Lit., 'tested', that is, to see whether it was fit for ritual slaughetering.

(2) Hul. 15b.

(3) V. pp.236-239.

(4) Who needs the whole of the text to imply the prohibition of the skin.

(5) Kid. 57a; Bek. 6b and Pes 22b.

(6) To imply some amplification of the statement actually made.

(7) Deut VI. 13

(8) Being loth to put any being whatsoever on a par with God.

(9) In the case of Tam.

(10) As supra p. 73.

(11) But since the ox is put to death and the carcass including also the skin is proscribed for any use whatsoever, is it not evident that no payment could be made in the case of Tam killing a human being? Why then give a special indication to this effect?

(12) [In which case the ox is not stoned (v. Zeb. 71a: Rashi and Tosaf. s.v. עַל פִּי).]

(13) For the payment of half-damages in the case of Tam is, as decided supra p. 67 of a penal character and as such liability for it could in any case not be established by the admission of the defendant, for which cf. supra p. 62 and infra p. 429.

(14) And liability to it would thus have been established even by the admission of the defendant.

(15) V. supra p. 232. n.11.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 42a

when he caught big ones he took them and when he [subsequently] caught little ones he took them also.[1] But R. Tabyomi, who in the name of Raba said that [the answer about] having killed [the man in the presence of one witness etc.] was given first, compares him to a fisherman who was catching fishes in the sea and when he caught little ones he took them, but when he [subsequently] caught big ones he threw away the little ones and took the big ones.[2]

Another [Baraitha] teaches: 'And the owner of the ox shall be quit' [implies] according to the statement of R. Jose the Galilean, quit from compensating [in the case of Tam killing] embryos . Said R. Akiba to him: Behold Scripture states: If men strive together and hurt a woman with child etc.,[3] [implying that only] men but not oxen [are liable for killing embryos]![4] Was not this a good question on the part of R. Akiba? — R. 'Ulla the son of R. Idi said: [The implication drawn by R. Jose] is essential. For otherwise it might have occurred to you to apply [R. Akiba's] inference 'Men but not oxen' [exclusively to such] oxen as are comparable to men: Just as men are Mu'ad,[5] so also here the oxen referred to are Mu'ad, whereas in the case of Tam there should be liability. The Divine Law has therefore stated, 'The owner of the ox shall be quit', implying exemption [also in the case of Tam]. Said Raba thereupon: Is the native born to be on the earth and the stranger in the highest heavens?[6] No, said Raba. [The implication drawn by R. Jose] is essential [for this reason, that] you might have been inclined to apply the inference 'Men but not oxen' only to oxen which could be compared to men — just as men are Mu'ad so the oxen here referred to are Mu'ad — and to have extended the exemption to cases of Tam by an argument a fortiori. Therefore the Divine Law purposely states [further], The owner of the ox shall be quit [to indicate that only] in the case of Tam will there be exemption whereas in the case of Mu'ad there will be liability. Said Abaye to him: If that is so, why not argue in the same way in the case of payment for degradation; thus: [Scripture says] 'Men',[7] excluding oxen which could be compared with men: just as the men are Mu'ad so the oxen [thus exempted] must be Mu'ad, and a fortiori exemption is extended to cases of Tam. Thereupon the Divine Law on another occasion purposely states, 'The owner of the ox shall be quit' [to indicate that only] in the case of Tam will there be exemption, whereas in the case of Mu'ad there will be liability [for degradation]? Now you could hardly say that this is indeed the case, for if so why not teach that, 'the owner of the ox shall be quit' [means], according to R. Jose the Galilean, quit from compensating [both in the case of Tam killing] embryos and [in the case of it having caused] degradation?[8] — Abaye and Raba both therefore said: [You might have been inclined to suppose that] in the case of 'men' it is only where no mischief[9] [resulted to the woman] that a liability to pay [for the embryo is imposed] upon them whereas where a mischief [resulted to the woman] no civil liability[10] [is imposed] upon them,[11] but that it is not so with oxen, as in their case even if mischief [results to the woman] a liability to pay is imposed.[12] The Divine Law has therefore on another occasion purposely stated, The owner of the ox shall be quit, to indicate exemption [in all cases]. R. Adda b. Ahabah demurred to this, saying: Does then the matter of civil liability[13] depend upon the non-occurrence of mischief to the woman? Does this matter not depend upon intention [of the defendant]?[14] — R. Adda b. Ahabah therefore said: [You might have been inclined to think thus:] In the case of men where their purpose was to kill one another, even if mischief results to a woman, a civil liability[13] will be imposed, whereas where they purposed to kill the woman herself [who was in fact killed], no civil liability[13] would be imposed. In the case of oxen, however, even where their purpose was to kill the woman [who is indeed killed by them] a civil liability should be imposed for the embryo. [To prevent your reasoning thus] the Divine Law on another occasion purposely states, 'The owner of the ox shall be quit' to indicate exemption [altogether in the case of oxen]. And so also R. Haggai upon returning from the South, came [to the College] and brought the teaching [of a Baraitha] with him stating the case in accordance with the interpretation given by R. Adda b. Ahabab.

Another [Baraitha] teaches: 'The owner of the ox shall be quit' [implies], according to the statement of R. Akiba, quit from compensating for [the killing of] a slave.[15]

---

(1) So also here where the better answer was given first and the inferior one later. The answer about intention is considered the better one.

(2) Here also when R. Eliezer subsequently found a better answer he withdrew the answer which he had given first.
(3) Ex. XXI, 22.
(4) Why then a special implication to exempt Tam?
(5) V. supra p. 68.
(6) I.e., how would it be possible to have exemption in the case of Mu'ad and liability in the case of Tam?
(7) Deut. XXV, 11.
(8) But Mu'ad is liable.
(9) I.e., death.
(10) For the embryo.
(11) As all civil claims would merge in the capital charge; cf. supra p. 113 and infra p. 427, n. 2.
(12) For the civil liability of the owner should not be affected by the ox having to be put to death.
(13) V. p. 238, n. 4.
(14) For where he intended to kill another person and it was only by accident that the woman and her embryo were killed, there would, according to R. Adda b. Ahabah, be no capital charge but a civil liability; cf. for such a view infra p.252 and Sanh. 79a.
(15) V. supra p. 232.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 42b

But why should R. Akiba not argue against himself,[1] Since any actual liability in the case of the ox itself [being a Tam] is not paid except out of its body [why should not the owner say to the plaintiff] 'Bring it to the Court of Law and be reimbursed out of it'? — R. Samuel son of R. Isaac thereupon said: [This creates no difficulty; the case is one] where the owner of the ox slaughtered it before [the passing of the sentence].[2] You might suggest in that case that payment should be made out of the flesh; we are therefore told that since the ox [as such] had been liable [to be stoned] to death, no payment could be made out of it even where it was slaughtered [before the passing of the sentence]. But if so, why [did not R. Akiba think of this reply to the objection he made] to R. Eliezer[3] also, viz. that the owner of the ox slaughters it beforehand? — He could indeed have done this, but he thought that R. Eliezer[3] also probably had another explanation better than this which he would tell him. But why did R. Eliezer [himself] not answer him that he referred to a case where the owner slaughtered the ox beforehand? — He could answer: It was only there where the ox aimed at killing a beast but [by accident] killed a man, in which case it is not liable [to be stoned] to death, and you might therefore have thought there was a liability [for kofer], that there was a need for Scripture to indicate that there is [in fact] no liability. But here where the ox had originally been liable [to be stoned] to death, no Scriptural indication should be needed [to exempt from liability] even where the ox has meanwhile been slaughtered.[4] But should not the same argument be employed also regarding the exposition of R. Akiba?[5] — R. Assi therefore said: The explanation of this matter was delivered to me from the mouth of a great man, to wit, R. Jose b. Hanina [who said]: You might be inclined to think that since R. Akiba said, 'Even in the case of Tam injuring Man the payment of the difference must be in full',[6] the compensation for killing a slave should also be paid out of the best [of the general estate]. Divine Law therefore states, The owner of the ox shall be quit, [implying that this is not the case]. Said R. Zera to R. Assi: Did R. Akiba himself not qualify this liability? For it was taught:[7] R. Akiba says, As it might be thought that this full payment[8] has to be made out of the best [of the general estate], it is therefore further stated, According to this judgment shall it be done unto him,[9] [to emphasize that] payment is to be made out of its body, but no payment is to be made out of any other source whatsoever? — Raba therefore [gave a different explanation] saying: The implication is still essential, for otherwise you might have thought that since[10] I have to be more strict in the case of [killing] a slave than in the case of a freeman — for in the case of a freeman worth one sela' the payment[11] will be one sela', and of one worth thirty the payment will be thirty, whereas in the case of a slave even where he was worth one sela' the payment will have to be thirty[10] — there should be compensation for [the killing of] a slave[12] even out of the best of the estate,[13] the Divine Law therefore states, ' The owner of the ox should be quit' [implying that this is not the case]. It was taught in accordance with [the explanation given by] Raba: 'The owner of the ox should be quit' [implies], according to the statement of R. Akiba, quit from compensation for [the killing of] a slave. But is this not strictly logical?[14] For since there is liability [to pay compensation] for [the killing of] a slave and there is liability [to pay compensation] for [the killing of] a freeman;[11] just as where there is liability [to pay compensation] for [the killing of] a freeman a distinction has been made by you between Tam and Mu'ad,[15] why then in the case where compensation has to be paid for [the killing of] a slave should you similarly not make a distinction between Tam and Mu'ad? This conclusion could moreover be arrived at by the a fortiori argument: If in the case of [killing] a freeman where the compensation[11] is for the whole of his value a distinction has been made by you between Tam and Mu'ad,[15] then in the case of [killing] a slave where the compensation amounts only to thirty [sela'] should it not stand to reason that a distinction must be made by us between Tam and Mu'ad? — Not so, because (on the other hand] I am[16] more strict in the case of [killing] a slave than in that of [killing] a freeman. For in the case of a freeman, where he was worth one sela' the compensation will be one sela',[17] [where he was worth] thirty the compensation will be thirty, whereas in the case of a slave even where he was worth one sela' the compensation has to be thirty.[16] This might have inclined us to think that [even in the case of Tam] there should be liability. It was therefore [further stated], The owner of the ox shall be quit, implying quit from compensation for [the killing of] a slave.

Our Rabbis taught: [It is written,] But it hath killed a man or a woman.[18] R. Akiba says: What does this clause come to teach us? If that there is liability for the goring to death of a woman as of a man, has it not already been stated, if an ox gore a man or a woman?[19] It must therefore have intended to put the woman on the same footing as the man: just as in the case of a man the compensation[17] will go to his heirs, so also in the case of a woman the compensation will go to her heirs.[20] Did R. Akiba thereby mean [to put forward the view] that the husband was not entitled to inherit her? But has it not been taught: 'And he shall inherit her;[21] this shows that the husband is entitled to inherit his wife. This is the view of R. Akiba'?[22] — Resh Lakish therefore said: R. Akiba[23] stated this[24] only with reference to kofer which, since it has not to be paid save after [the] death [of the victim], is regarded as property in anticipation,[25] and a husband is not entitled to inherit property in anticipation as he does property in actual possession.[26] But why [should kofer not be paid except after death]?[27] — Scripture says: But it hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and its owner also shall be put to death. If there be laid on him a ransom.[28] But did R. Akiba not hold that damages [for injury also are not inherited by the husband]? Has it not been taught:[29] If one hurt a woman so that her embryo departed from her, compensation for Depreciation and for Pain should be given to the woman, compensation for the value of the embryo to the husband.[30] If the husband is not [alive], his due should be given to his heirs, and if the woman is not [alive at the time of payment] her due should be given to her heirs. [Hence] if the woman was a slave that had been emancipated[31]

---

(1) Exactly as he argued against R. Eliezer, supra p.236.

(2) In which case the flesh could legitimately be used as food; cf. infra p. 255.

(3) Supra p. 236.

(4) This was the reason why R. Eliezer answered as he did, and not as suggested here that the ox was slaughtered before the sentence had been passed on it.

(5) And if so, the original problem will recur: Why should R. Akiba not argue against himself as he did against R. Eliezer, supra p. 236.

(6) Supra p. 179.

(7) Cf. supra p. 180.

(8) In the case of Tam injuring a human being.

(9) Ex. XXI, 31.

(10) In the case of Mu'ad.

(11) I.e. kofer.

(12) In the case of Tam.
(13) There can thus no more arise the question, 'Since any actual liability in the case of the ox itself (being Tam) is not paid except out of its body, (why should not the owner say to the plaintiff) "Bring it to the Court and be reimbursed out of it"?' Cf. supra p. 236.
(14) Wherefore then the special inference from the verse?
(15) That in the case of Mu'ad, kofer is paid, but not in the case of Tam.
(16) In the case of Mu'ad.
(17) V. p. 241, n. 3.
(18) Ex. XXI, 29.
(19) Ibid. 28.
(20) Not to her husband.
(21) Num. XXVII, 11.
(22) B.B. 111b.
(23) [So MS. M., v. Rashi.]
(24) That the husband does not inherit the compensation due to the woman.
(25) As at the last moment of her life the liability for kofer was neither a chose in possession nor even a chose in action
(26) Cf. B. B. 113a and 125b.
(27) Why not say that as soon as the blow was ascertained to have been fatal the payment of kofer should be enforced?
(28) Implying that the payment of money as kofer is, like the killing of the ox, not enforced before the victim has actually died.
(29) Infra p. 280.
(30) V. Ex. XXI, 22.
(31) And the husband was of the same category.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 43a

or a proselytess the defendant would be the first to acquire title [to all the claims and thus be released from any liability]? — Rabbah thereupon said: We deal [in this latter case] with a divorced woman.[1] So also said R. Nahman [that we deal here] with a divorced woman. [But] I might [here] object: If she was divorced, why should she not also share in the compensation for the value of the embryo?[2] — R. Papa thereupon said: The Torah awarded the value of embryos to the husband even where the cohabitation had taken place not in a married state, the reason being that Scripture says: According as the cohabitator[3] of the woman will lay upon him.[4]

But why should not Rabbah refer the ruling[5] to the case where the payment of the compensation had been collected in money, and R. Nahman to the case where it had been collected out of land? For did Rabbah not say[6] that where an outstanding debt had been collected[7] out of land, the first-born son would take in it [a double portion],[8] but where it had been collected in money the first-born son would not [take in it a double portion]?[9] Or again did R. Nahman not say[10] that [on the contrary] where the debt had been collected in money the first-born would take [in it a double portion],[11] but where it has been collected out of land, the first-born son would not [take in it a double portion]?[12] — It could, however, be answered that these statements were made on the basis of the despatch of the Western Sages according to the view of the Rabbis,[13] whereas in the case here [where Rabbah and R. Nahman interpreted it to have referred to a divorced woman] they were stating the law as maintained by Rabbi.[14]

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: Where an ox killed a slave without purposing to do so, there would be exemption from the payment of thirty shekels, since it is written, He shall give unto their master thirty shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned,[15] [implying that] where the ox would be liable to be stoned the owner is to pay thirty shekels, but where the ox would not be liable to be stoned[16] the owner need not pay thirty shekels. Rabbah [similarly] said: Where an ox killed a freeman without purposing to do so there would be exemption from kofer, for it is written[17] The ox should be stoned and its owner also shall be put to death. If there be laid on him a ransom, [implying that] where the ox has to be stoned[16] the owner has not to pay kofer. Abaye raised an objection to this [from the following Mishnah]:[18] If a man says: 'My ox has killed so-and-so' or 'has killed so-and-so's' ox, [in either case] the defendant has to pay in virtue of his own admission. Now, does the payment [in the former case][19] not mean kofer [though the ox would not become liable to be stoned through the owner's admission]?[20] — No; [it means for] the actual value.[21] If [it means payment for] the pecuniary loss, read the concluding clause: [If he says], 'My ox has killed so-and-so's slave,' the defendant is not liable to pay in virtue of his own admission.[22] Now, if [the payment referred to in the first clause was meant for] the pecuniary loss, why is there no liability [to pay for the pecuniary loss in the case of a slave]?[23] — He, however, said to him: I could have answered you that the opening clause refers to the actual value[24] [of the killed person],[25] whereas the concluding clause refers to the fixed fine [of thirty shekels]. As, however, I have no intention to answer you by means of forced interpretations, [I will say that] both clauses do in fact refer to the actual value [of the killed person].

---

(1) For otherwise the husband would inherit her claim for damages.

(2) Since she was his wife no more.

(3) The Hebrew term בעל ('husband' E.V.) is thus understood.

(4) Ex. XXI, 22.

(5) That the damages will be paid to her heirs and not to the husband.

(6) B.B. l24b.

(7) After the death of a creditor.

(8) In accordance with Deut. XXI. 17.

(9) Because the debt collected after the death of the father was not a chose in possession in the lifetime of the creditor, and the first-born takes a double portion only 'of all that' his father 'hath' at the time of death. A husband is in a similar position, as he too has the right to inherit only chooses in possession at the lifetime of his wife.

(10) V. p. 243, n. 10.

(11) For the money collected is considered in the eye of the law as the money which was lent to the father of the debtor.

(12) V. p. 243, n. 13.

(13) V. p. 243, n. 10.

(14) That debts collected after the death of a creditor whether in species or out of land will be subject to the law of double portion in the case of a first-born and similarly to the law of a husband inheriting his wife. v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 518.

(15) V. Ex. XXI, 32.

(16) As e.g., where it killed a human being by accident.

(17) Ex. XXI, 29.

(18) Keth. III, 9.

(19) Where the defendant admitted that his ox killed a man.

(20) Without the corroboration of witnesses; v. supra p. 236, n. 8.

(21) I.e., the pecuniary loss sustained through the man's death. [It is distinguished from kofer in that the payment of the latter is an act of atonement to be compounded in no circumstance; v. Tosaf. s. v. מאי.]

(22) As the payment of thirty shekels in the case of a slave is of the nature of a penalty which could not be inflicted on the strength of the word of mouth of the defendant.

(23) Does this not prove that in the case of manslaughter committed by cattle no payment for the pecuniary loss would have to be made if you except kofer in the case of a freeman, and the thirty shekels in the case of a slave?

(24) I.e. the pecuniary loss sustained through his death.

(25) Which has to be paid even where kofer could for some reason or other not be imposed upon the defendant.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 43b

But [it is only in the case of] a freeman where kofer may sometimes be paid on the strength of the defendant's own admission — as where witnesses appeared and testified to the ox having killed [a freeman] without, however, knowing whether it was still Tam or already Mu'ad and the owner admits it to have been Mu'ad, in which case kofer would be paid on the strength of his own admission[1] — that [we say] where witnesses are not at all available payment will be made for the actual value [of the loss]. [Whereas] in the case of a slave where the fixed fine could never be paid through the defendant's own admission — since even where witnesses appear and testify to the ox having killed [a slave], without knowing whether it had still been Tam or already Mu'ad, and the owner admits that it had already been Mu'ad, no fine would be paid — [we say] where no witnesses at all are available there will be no payment even for the amount of the value [of the loss].

R. Samuel son of R. Isaac raised an objection [from the following teaching]: Wherever there is liability in the case of a freeman,[2] there is liability in the case of a slave both for kofer and for stoning. Now, how could kofer ever be [paid] in the case of a slave?[3] Does it therefore not surely mean the payment for the amount of the value [of the loss]?[4] — Some say that he raised the objection and he himself answered it, others say that Rabbah said to him: What is meant is as follows: Wherever there is liability for kofer [i.e.] in the case of a freeman killed intentionally [by the ox] as testified by witnesses, there is [a similar] liability for the fine in the case of a slave, and wherever there is liability for the amount of the value [of the loss, i.e.,] in the case of a freeman killed unintentionally, as testified by witnesses, there is also liability for the amount of the value [of the loss] in the case of a slave killed unintentionally, as testified by witnesses.[5] Raba, however, said to him: If so,[6] why in the case of Fire unintentionally[7] burning a human being [to death], as testified by witnesses, should there also not be liability to pay the amount of the value [of the loss]? And how did Raba know that no payment would be made [in this case]? Shall we say from the following Mishnah: '[Where fire was set to a barn and] a goat had been bound to it and a slave was loose near by it and all were burnt [with the barn] there would be liability.[8] But where the slave had been chained to it, and the goat loose near by it and all were burnt with it there would be no liability.'[9] [But how could Raba prove his point from this case here?][10] Did Resh Lakish not state that this case here should be explained as one where e.g., the defendant put the actual fire upon the body of the slave so that [no other[11] but] the major punishment had to be inflicted? But [it may perhaps be suggested that Raba derived his point] from the following [Baraitha]: For it has been taught: 'The excess in [the liability] for Fire over [that for] Pit is that Fire is apt to consume both things fit for it and things unfit for it, whereas this is not so in the case of Pit.'[12] It is not, however, said that 'in the case of Fire [where a human being has been burnt to death] unintentionally there is liability to pay for the pecuniary loss, whereas it is not so in Pit'.[13] But might [the Baraitha] not perhaps have stated [some points] and omitted [others]? — It must therefore have been that Raba himself was questioning whether in the case of Fire [burning a human being] unintentionally there would be payment for the amount of the value [of the loss] or whether there would be none. Should we say that it was only in the case of cattle — where if the manslaughter was unintentional kofer would be paid — that for unintentional manslaughter the amount of the value [of the loss] is to he paid — whereas in the case of Fire — where for intentional manslaughter no kofer would be paid[14] — there should be no payment of the amount of the value [of the loss] for unintentional manslaughter? Or [shall we] perhaps [rather say that] since in the case of Cattle [killing a person] unintentionally where no kofer is paid, the value [of the loss] is nevertheless paid, so should it also be with Fire where no kofer would be paid for intentional manslaughter, that nevertheless the value [of the loss] caused by unintentional manslaughter should be paid? But as no information was available to us [on this matter], it remained undecided.

When R. Dimi arrived [from Palestine] he said on behalf of R. Johanan: [The word] kofer [I understand]. What is taught by [the expression] If kofer?[15] It implies the inclusion of [the payment of] kofer in cases where there was no intention[16] [to kill] just as kofer [is paid] where there was intention. Abaye however said to him: If so , the same could now surely also be argued in the case of a slave: viz.: What is taught by [the expression] If a slave?[15] [It implies] that a slave killed unintentionally is subject to the same law as a slave, killed intentionally? If that is so, why did Resh

Lakish say that where an ox killed a slave unintentionally there would be exemption from the thirty shekels? He replied: Would you confute one person's view by citing another?[17]

When Rabin arrived [from Palestine] he said on behalf of R. Johanan: [The word] a slaves [I understand], What is taught by [the expression] If a slave? [It implied] that a slave [killed] unintentionally is subject to the same law as a slave [killed] intentionally. Now as regards Resh Lakish [who was of a different view in this respect] shall we also assume that just as he drew no lesson from the distinction between 'a slave' and 'if a slave', so he drew no lesson from the distinction between 'kofer' and 'if kofer'? — I may say that this was not so. From the distinction between 'a slave' and 'if a slave'[18] he did not draw a lesson, whereas from the distinction between 'kofer' and 'if kofer' he did draw a lesson. Why this difference? The expressions 'a slave' and 'if a slave' do not occur in the context dealing with payment,[19] whereas the expressions 'kofer' and 'if kofer' do occur in a context dealing with payment.

THE SAME JUDGMENT APPLIES IN THE CASE OF A SON OR IN THAT OF A DAUGHTER. Our Rabbis taught: [The text] Whether it have gored a son or have gored a daughter[20] [implies] that there is liability in the case of little ones just as in that of grown-ups. But surely this is only logical! For since there is a liability in the case of Man killing man there is similarly a liability in the case of Cattle killing man, just as where Man has killed man no distinction is made between [the victims being] little ones or grown-ups,[21] so also where Cattle killed man no distinction should be made between [the victims being] little ones or grown-ups? Moreover there is an a fortiori argument [to the same effect]; for if in the case of Man killing man where the law did no make [murderers who are] minors liable as [it did make] grown-ups,[22] it nevertheless imposed there liability for little ones as for grown-ups,

---

(1) As the ox in this case would be subject to be stoned, [and where the ox is stoned, the owner pays kofer].

(2) I.e. kofer.

(3) V. p. 244, n. 6.

(4) [This shows that pecuniary loss is paid in the case of a slave on his own admission even as in the case of a freeman.]

(5) [Though in the case of self-admission there will still be a distinction between the death of a freeman and that of a slave (by an ox) in regard to the payment of pecuniary loss.]

(6) [That there is payment of pecuniary loss, even where kofer is not payable.]

(7) [If intentionally, the civil liability would merge with the graver capital charge.]

(8) For the barn and the goat but not for the slave, as he should have run away.

(9) Infra 61b.

(10) By not extending the ruling in the second clause to refer also to the barn but confining it to the goat which should have run away, and to the slave, on the alleged ground that no compensation should be paid for the value of the loss occasioned by fire burning a human being to death.

(11) The ruling of exemption in the second clause is thus extended even to the barn.

(12) Supra p. 38.

(13) For which see supra p. 18 and infra 50b.

(14) For it merges with the graver capital charge.

(15) Ex. XXI, 30; for it is surely neither an optional nor a conditional liability.

(16) ['If' אם implying a case where kofer is imposed, though the ox is not stoned, i.e. where there was no intention (contrary to the view of Rabbah, supra); v. Malbim on Ex. XXI, 30.]

(17) As R. Johanan and Resh Lakish might perhaps have differed on this point.

(18) In Ex. XXI, 32.

(19) It could thus hardly have any bearing on the law of payment.

(20) Ibid. 31.

(21) Cf. Nid. 44a.

(22) See Lev. XXIV, 17 and Mek. on Ex. XXI, 12.

now in the case of Cattle killing man where the law made small cattle [liable] as [it did make] big cattle,[1] should it not stand to reason that there is liability for little ones as there is for grown-ups?[2] — No, [for it could have been argued that] if you stated this ruling in the case of Man killing man it was [perhaps] because [where Man injured man] there was liability for the four [additional] items,[3] but how would you be able to prove the same ruling in the case of Cattle where there could be no liability for the four [additional] items? Hence it is further laid down: Whether it have gored a son or have gored a daughter to impose liability for little ones as for grown-ups. So far I know this only in the case of Mu'ad.[4] Whence do I know it in the case of Tam? — We infer it by analogy: Since there is liability for killing Man or Woman and there is similarly liability for killing Son or Daughter, just as regarding the liability for Man or Woman you made no discrimination between Tam and Mu'ad,[5] so also regarding the liability for Son or Daughter you should make no discrimination between Tam and Mu'ad. Moreover there is an a fortiori argument [to the same effect]; for if in the case of Man and Woman who are in a disadvantageous position when damages had been done by them,[6] you have nevertheless made there no discrimination between Tam and Mu'ad, in the case of Son and Daughter who are in an advantageous position when damage has Been done by them,[7] should it not stand to reason that you should make no discrimination between Tam and Mu'ad? — [No,] you cannot argue thus. Can we draw an analogy from a more serious to a lighter case so as to be more severe [with regard to the latter]? If[8] the law is strict with Mu'ad which is a more serious case, how can you argue that it ought to be [equally] strict with Tam which is a lighter case? Moreover, [you could also argue that] the case of Man and Woman [is graver] since they are under obligation to observe the commandments [of the Law],[9] but how draw therefrom an analogy to the case of Son and Daughter seeing that they are exempt from the commandments?[10] It was therefore necessary to state [further]: Whether it have gored a son, or have gored a daughter; [the repetition of the word 'gored' indicating that no discrimination should be made between] goring in the case of Tam and goring in the case of Mu'ad, between goring in the case of killing and goring in the case of mere injury.

MISHNAH. IF AN OX BY RUBBING ITSELF AGAINST A WALL CAUSED IT TO FALL UPON A PERSON [AND KILL HIM], OR IF AN OX WHILE TRYING TO KILL A BEAST [BY ACCIDENT] KILLED A HUMAN BEING, OR WHILE AIMING AT A HEATHEN[11] KILLED AN ISRAELITE, OR WHILE AIMING AT NON-VIABLE INFANTS KILLED A VIABLE CHILD, THERE IS NO LIABILITY.

GEMARA. Samuel said: There is exemption [for the ox in these cases] only from [the penalty of being stoned to] death, but there is lability [for the owner] to pay kofer.[12] Rab, however, said: There is exemption here from both liabilities.[13] But why [kofer]?[14] Was not the ox Tam?[15] — Just as [in an analogous case] Rab said that the ox was Mu'ad to fall upon human beings in pits,[16] so also [in this case we say that] the ox was Mu'ad to rub itself against walls [which thus fell] upon human beings. But if so, why should the ox not be liable to [be stoned to] death? It is correct in this other case where we can explain that the ox was looking at some vegetables and so came to fall [into a pit],[17] but here what ground could we give [for assuming otherwise than an intention to kill on the part of the ox]? — Here also [we may suppose that] the ox had been rubbing itself against the wall for its own gratification.[17] But how can we know this?[18] — [By noticing that] even after the wall had fallen the ox was still rubbing itself against it.

---

(1) Cf. infra p. 380, and 'Ed. VI, 1.

(2) Why then was it necessary for Scripture to make this explicit in Ex. XXI, 31?

(3) For which cf. supra p. 12.

(4) As verse 31 follows 29 and 30 which deal with Mu'ad.

(5) As clearly seen in verses 29 and 30.

(6) I.e. they are liable to pay for it. Cf. supra p. 63 but also infra p. 502.

(7) For which they are not liable to pay; see infra p. 502.
(8) [Some texts omit, 'If . . . . Moreover,' v. D.S. a.l.]
(9) Cf. however, supra p. 64, but also Kid. I, 7.
(10) So long as they are minors and have not reached puberty for which cf. Nid. 52a.
(11) Cf. supra p. 211, n. 6.
(12) As also maintained by R. Johanan, supra p. 248, and still earlier by R. Eliezer, supra p. 237.
(13) For the reason v. supra 244
(14) In the case dealt with first in the Mishnah.
(15) In killing a human being by rubbing itself against a wall and thus causing it to fall. In the case of Tam no kofer is paid; see Ex. XXI, 28.
(16) Infra p. 274.
(17) And as intention to kill was lacking, no death penalty could be attached.
(18) Seeing that the ox was Mu'ad to rub itself against walls.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 44b

But granted all this, is this manner of damage[1] not on a par with that done by Pebbles[2] [where there would be no liability for kofer]?[3] — R. Mari the son of R. Kahana thereupon said: [We speak of] a wall gradually brought down by the constant pushing of the ox.[4]

It has been taught in accordance with Samuel and in refutation of Rab: There are cases where the liability is both for [stoning to] death and kofer: there are other cases, where there is liability for kofer but exemption from [stoning to] death; there are again [other] cases where there is liability [for stoning to] death but exemption from kofer; and there are still other cases where there is exemption both from [stoning to] death and from kofer. How so? In the case of Mu'ad [killing a person] intentionally, there is liability both for [stoning to] death and for kofer.[5] In the case of Mu'ad [killing a person] unintentionally there is liability for kofer but exemption from [stoning to] death. In the case of Tam [killing a person] intentionally there is liability [for stoning to] death but exemption from kofer. In the case of Tam [killing a person] unintentionally, there is exemption from both penalties. Whereas in case of injury [caused by the ox] unintentionally, R. Judah says there is liability to pay [damages], but R. Simeon says there is no liability to pay.[6] What is the reason of R. Judah? — He derives [the law of damages from] that of kofer: just as for kofer there is liability even where there was no intention [to kill], so also for damages for injuries there is liability even where there was no intention [to injure]. R. Simeon, on the other hand, derived [the law of damages] from that of the killing of the ox: just as the stoning of the ox is not required where there was no intention [to kill], so also damages are not required where there was no intention [to injure]. But why should R. Judah also not derive [the ruling in this case] from [the law applying to the] killing [of the ox]? It is proper to derive [a ruling regarding] payment from [another ruling regarding] payment, but it is not proper to derive [a ruling regarding] payment from [a ruling regarding] killing. Why then should R. Simeon also not derive [the ruling in this case] from [the law applying to] kofer? — It is proper to derive a liability regarding the ox[7] from another liability that similarly concerns the ox,[8] thus excluding kofer which is a liability that concerns only the owner.[9]

OR IF THE OX WHILE TRYING TO KILL A BEAST [BY ACCIDENT] KILLED A HUMAN BEING . . . THERE IS NO LIABILITY. Where, however, the ox had aimed at killing one human being and [by accident] killed another human being, there would be liability. [This implication of] the Mishnah is not in accordance with R. Simeon. For it has been taught: R. Simeon says: Even where [the ox] aimed at killing one person and [by accident] killed another person there would be no liability. What was the reason of R. Simeon? — Scripture states: The ox shall be stoned and its owner also shall be put to death,[10] [implying that only] in those cases in which the owner would be subject to be put to death [were he to have committed murder], the ox also would be subject to be put to death. Just as therefore in the case of the owner the liability arises only where he was aiming at the particular person [who was actually killed], so also in the case of the ox the liability will arise only where it was aiming at the particular person [who was actually killed]. But whence do we know that this is so even in the case of the owner himself?[11] — Scripture States: And lie in wait for him and rise up against him[12] [which indicates that he is not liable] unless he bad been aiming at the particular person [whom he killed]. What then do the Rabbis[13] make of [the words,] 'And lie in wait'? — It was said at the School of R. Jannai: They except [on the strength of them a manslaughter committed by] a stone being thrown into a crowd.[14] How is this to be understood? If you say that there were [in the crowd] nine heathens and one Israelite, why not except the case on the ground that the majority [in the crowd] were persons who were heathens?[15] And even where they were half and half, does not an accused in a criminal charge have the benefit of the doubt? — The case is one where there were nine Israelites and one heathen. For though in this case the majority [in the crowd] consisted of Israelites, still since there was among them one heathen he was an essential part [of the group], and essential part[16] is reckoned as equivalent to half, and where there is a doubt in a criminal charge the accused has the benefit.

MISHNAH. WHERE AN OX OF A WOMAN, OR AN OX OF [MINOR] ORPHANS, OR AN OX OF A GUARDIAN, OR AN OX OF THE WILDERNESS, OR AN OX OF THE SANCTUARY, OR AN OX OF A PROSELYTE WHO DIED WITHOUT [LEGAL] HEIRS,[17] [HAS KILLED A PERSON], IT IS LIABLE TO [BE STONED TO] DEATH. R. JUDAH SAYS: IN THE CASE OF AN OX OF THE WILDERNESS, AN OX OF THE SANCTUARY AND AN OX OF A PROSELYTE WHO DIED [WITHOUT HEIRS] THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION FROM [STONING TO] DEATH SINCE THESE HAVE NO [PRIVATE] OWNERS.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [The word] ox occurs seven times [in the section dealing with Cattle killing man][18] to include the ox of a woman, the ox of [minor] orphans, the ox of a guardian, the ox of the wilderness, the ox of the Sanctuary and the ox of a proselyte who died without [legal] heirs. R. Judah, however, says: An ox of the wilderness, an ox of the Sanctuary and an ox of a proselyte who died without heirs are exempt from [stoning to] death since these have no [private] owners.

R. Huna said: The exemption laid down By R. Judah extends even to the case where the ox gored and was only subsequently consecrated to the Temple, or where the ox gored and was only subsequently abandoned. Whence do we know this? — From the fact that R. Judah specified both an ox of the wilderness and an ox of a proselyte who died without heirs. Now what actually is 'an ox of a proselyte who died'? Surely since he left no heirs the ox remained ownerless, and this [category] would include equally an ox of the wilderness and an ox of the proselyte who died without heirs? We must suppose then that what he intended to tell us [in mentioning both] was that even where the ox gored but was subsequently consecrated, or where the ox gored but was subsequently abandoned, [the exemption would still apply] and this may be taken as proved. It has also been taught to the same effect:[19] R. Judah went even further, saying: Even if after having gored, the ox was consecrated or after having gored it became ownerless, there is exemption, as it has been said, And it hath been testified to his owner and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned.[20] This applies only when no change of status has taken place between the manslaughter and the appearance before the Court.[21] Does not the final verdict also need to comply with this same condition? Does not the same text, The ox shall be stoned,[22] [apply also to] the final verdict? — Read therefore: That is so only when no change in status has taken place between the manslaughter, the appearance before the Court, and the final verdict.

MISHNAH. IF WHILE AN OX [SENTENCED TO DEATH] IS BEING TAKEN OUT TO BE STONED ITS OWNER DECLARES IT SACRED, IT DOES NOT BECOME SACRED;[23] IF HE SLAUGHTERS IT, ITS FLESH IS FORBIDDEN [FOR ANY USE].[23] IF, HOWEVER. BEFORE THE SENTENCE HAS BEEN PRONOUNCED THE OWNER CONSECRATES IT, IT IS CONSECRATED, AND IF HE SLAUGHTERS IT, ITS FLESH IS PERMITTED [FOR FOOD].

IF THE OWNER HANDS OVER HIS CATTLE TO AN UNPAID BAILEE OR TO A BORROWER, TO A PAID BAILEE OR TO A HIRER, THEY ENTER INTO ALL LIABILITIES IN LIEU OF THE OWNER: IN THE CASE OF MU'AD THE PAYMENT WOULD HAVE TO BE IN FULL, WHEREAS IN THE CASE OF TAM HALF DAMAGES WOULD BE PAID.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If an ox has killed [a person], and before its judgment is pronounced its owner sells it,

---

(1) Being done not by the body of the ox but by something set in motion by it.

(2) Dealt with supra p. 79.

(3) [Kofer is imposed only where death was caused by the body of the ox even as is the case with 'goring'.]

(4) And was thus the whole time as it were a part of the body of the ox.

(5) Ex. XXI, 29-30.

(6) Cf. Tosef. B.K. IV.

(7) I.e. a liability to make good the damage done by the ox.

(8) Such as the death of the ox for the manslaughter it committed.

(9) As kofer is the ransom of his life.

(10) Ex. XXI, 29.

(11) Committing murder.

(12) Deut. XIX, II.

(13) Who differ from R. Simeon on this point. v. Sanh. 79a.

(14) And a person was killed.

(15) For in matters of judgment the principle of 'majority' is as a rule the deciding factor. [That does not mean to imply that the killing of a heathen was no murder. The Mekilta in Ex. XXI, 12 states explicitly that the crime is equally condemnable irrespective of the religion and nationality of the victim. But what it does mean is that the Biblical legislation in regard to crime did not apply to heathens. As foreigners they fully enjoyed their own autonomous right of self-help, i.e., blood feuds or ransom, prohibited by the Law to the Jews, and accordingly were not governed by the provisions made in the Bible relating to murder, v. Guttmann, loc. cit. p. 16 ff and supra p. 211, n. 6.]

(16) Lit., 'fixed'. For a full discussion of this passage, v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 531 and notes a.l.

(17) The ox thus becoming ownerless.

(18) Ex. XXI, 28-32.

(19) Supra p. 55.

(20) Ex. XXI, 29.

(21) Supra p. 56.

(22) Ex. XXI, 29.

(23) Cf. supra p. 234.

the sale holds good; if he declares it sacred, it is sacred; if it is slaughtered, its flesh is permitted [for food]; if a bailee returns it to the house of its owner, it is an effective restoration. But if after its sentence had already been pronounced the owner sold it, the sale would not be valid; if he consecrates it, it is not consecrated; if it is slaughtered its flesh is forbidden [for any use]; if a bailee returns it to the house of its owner, it is not an effective restoration. R. Jacob, however, says: Even if after the sentence had already been pronounced the bailee returned it to its owner, it would be an effective restoration. Shall we say that the point at issue[1] is that in the view of the Rabbis it is of no avail to plead[2] regarding things which became forbidden for any use, 'Here is your property before you',[3] whereas in the view of R. Jacob it can be pleaded even regarding things forbidden for any use, 'Here is your property before you'? — Rabba said: Both parties in fact agree that even regarding things forbidden for any use, the plea, 'Here is your property before you' can be advanced, for if it is as you said,[4] why did they not differ in the case of leaven[5] on Passover?[6] But the point at issue here [in the case before us] must therefore be whether [or not] sentence may be pronounced over an ox in its absence. The Rabbis maintain that no sentence can be pronounced over an ox in its absence, and the owner may accordingly plead against the bailee: 'If you would have returned it to me [before the passing of the sentence], I would have caused it to escape to the pastures, whereas you have allowed my ox to fall into the hands of those[7] against whom I am unable to bring any action'. R. Jacob, however, maintains that the sentence can be pronounced over the ox even in its absence, and the bailee may accordingly retort to the owner: 'In any case the sentence would have been passed on the ox.' What is the reason of the Rabbis? — [Scripture says]: The ox shall be stoned and its owner also shall be put to death[8] [implying that] the conditions under which the owner would be subject to be put to death [were he to have committed murder], are also the conditions under which the ox would be subject to be put to death; just as in the case of the owner [committing murder, the sentence could be passed only] in his presence,[9] so also [the sentence] in the case of an ox [could be passed only] in its presence. But R. Jacob [argues]: That applies well enough to the case of the owner [committing murder], as he is able to submit pleas, but is the ox also able to submit pleas?[10]

WHERE AN OWNER HAS HANDED OVER HIS CATTLE TO AN UNPAID BAILEE OR TO A BORROWER etc. Our Rabbis taught: The following four [categories of persons] enter into all liabilities in lieu of the owner, viz., Unpaid Bailee and Borrower, Paid Bailee and Hirer. [If cattle so transferred] kill [a person] if they are Tam, they would be stoned to death, but there would be exemption from kofer,[11] whereas in the case of Mu'ad, they would be stoned and the bailees in charge would be liable to pay kofer. In all cases, however, the value of the ox would have to be reimbursed to the owner by all of the bailees with the exception of the Unpaid Bailee. I would here ask with what circumstances are we dealing? If where the ox [was well] guarded, why should all of them[12] not be exempt [from having to reimburse the owner]? If on the other hand it was not guarded well, why should even the Unpaid Bailee not be liable?[13] — It might be said that we are dealing here with a case where inferior precautions[14] were taken to control the ox but not really adequate precautions.[15] In the case of an Unpaid Bailee his obligation to control was thereby fulfilled, whereas the others did thereby not yet fulfil their obligation to control. Still I would ask, whose view is here followed? If that of R. Meir

---

(1) I.e. between R. Jacob and the Rabbis.

(2) Against a depositor or against a person who was robbed of an article, before it became prohibited for any use.

(3) The reason is that, by becoming forbidden for any use, the things, though not undergoing any change in their external size and appearance, do not remain (in the eyes of the law) the same things as were previously deposited with the bailee or misappropriated by the robber, their status then having been different.

(4) That R. Jacob and the Rabbis differ on this point.

(5) Stolen before the eve of Passover.

(6) I.e. whether the leaven might be returned by the robber after the approach of Passover when it became forbidden for any use; cf. infra pp. 561, 572.

(7) I.e. the Court of Law.

(8) Ex. XXI, 29.

(9) For which cf. Num. XXXV, 12.

(10) That its presence should be required.

(11) Ex. XXI, 28.

(12) With the exception, however, of the borrower who is liable even for accidents.

(13) For he also is liable for carelessness.

(14) Such as e.g. a door which would withstand only an ordinary wind. V. infra 55b who maintained[1] that Hirer is subject to the same law as Unpaid Bailee, why is it not taught above 'with the exception of Unpaid Bailee and Hirer'? If [on the other hand the view followed] was that of R. Judah who maintained[1] that Hirer should be subject to the same law as Paid Bailee, why was it not taught 'with the exception of Unpaid Bailee, whereas in the case of Mu'ad they all would be exempt from kofer'?[2] — R. Huna b. Hinena thereupon said: This teaching is in accordance with R. Eliezer, who said,[3] that the only precaution for it [Mu'ad] is the slaughter knife, and who regarding Hirer might agree with the view of R. Judah that Hirer should be subject to the same law as Paid Bailee. Abaye, however, said: It could still follow the view of R. Meir, but as transposed by Rabbah b. Abbahu who learnt thus: How is the payment [for the loss of the article] regulated in the case of Hirer? R. Meir says: As in the case of Paid Bailee. R. Judah, however, says: As in the case of Unpaid Bailee.[4]

(15) So as to withstand a wind of even unusual force.

R. Eleazar said: Where an ox had been handed over to an Unpaid Bailee and damage was done by it, the bailee would be liable, but where damage was done to it, the bailee would be exempt. I would here ask what were the circumstances? If where the bailee had undertaken to guard the ox against damage, why even in the case where it was injured should there be no liability? If, on the other hand, where the bailee had not undertaken to guard against damage why even in the case where damage was done by the ox should there not be exemption? — Raba thereupon said: We suppose in fact that the bailee had undertaken to guard the ox against damage, but the case here is one where he had known the ox to be a gorer, and it is natural that what he did undertake was to prevent the ox from going and doing damage to others, but he did not think of the possibility of others coming and injuring it.

MISHNAH. IF THE OWNER FASTENED HIS OX [TO THE WALL INSIDE THE STABLE] WITH A CORD, OR SHUT THE DOOR IN FRONT OF IT IN THE ORDINARY WAY[5] BUT THE OX GOT OUT AND DID DAMAGE, WHETHER IT HAD BEEN TAM OR ALREADY MU'AD, HE WOULD BE LIABLE; THIS IS THE RULING OF R. MEIR. R. JUDAH, HOWEVER, SAYS: IN THE CASE OF TAM HE WOULD BE LIABLE, BUT IN THE CASE OF MU'AD HE WOULD BE EXEMPT, SINCE IT IS WRITTEN, AND HIS OWNER HATH NOT KEPT HIM IN,[6] [THUS EXCLUDING THIS CASE WHERE] IT WAS KEPT IN. R. ELIEZER SAYS: NO PRECAUTION IS SUFFICIENT [FOR MU'AD] SAVE THE [SLAUGHTER] KNIFE.

GEMARA. What was the reason of R. Meir? — He Maintained that normally oxen are not kept under control,[7] and the Divine Law enacted that Tam should involve liability to show that at least moderate precautions were required. Then the Divine Law stated further in the case of Mu'ad, And his owner hath not kept him in,[6] to show that [for this] really adequate precautions are required;[8] and the goring mentioned in the case of Tam is now placed on a par with the goring mentioned in the case of Mu'ad.[9] R. Judah, however, maintained that oxen normally are kept under control, and the Divine Law stated that in the case of Tam there should be payment to show that really adequate precaution is required. The Divine Law, however, goes on to say, And his owner hath not kept him in,[6] in the case of Mu'ad. [This would imply] that there should be there precaution of a superior degree. [These words, however, constitute] an amplification following an amplification, and as the rule is that an amplification following an amplification intimates nothing but a limitation,[10] Scripture has thus reduced the superior degree of the required precaution. And should you object to this that goring is mentioned in the case of Tam and goring is mentioned in the case of Mu'ad[9] [for mutual inference,[11] the answer is that in this case] the Divine Law has explicitly restricted [this ruling by stating] And his owner hath not kept him in,[6] [the word 'him' confining the application] to this one[12] but not to another.[13] But surely these words are needed for the stated purpose?[14] — [If that were so, the Divine Law should write surely, 'Hath not kept in'. Why does it say, hath not kept him in? To show that the rule applies to this one[15] but not to another.[16]

It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Whether in the case of Tam or in that of Mu'ad, as soon as even inferior precautions have been taken [to control the ox], there is exemption. What is his reason? — He concurs with R. Judah, in holding that in the case of Mu'ad precaution even of an inferior degree is sufficient, and he [extended this ruling to Tam as he] on the strength of [the mutual inference[17] conveyed by] the mention of goring in the case both of Tam and of Mu'ad.[17]

R. Adda b. Ahabah said: The exemption laid down by R. Judah applies only to the part of the payment due on account of the ox having been declared Mu'ad,[18] but the portion due on account of Tam remains unaffected.[19] Rab said: Where the ox was declared Mu'ad to gore with the right horn, it would thereby not become Mu'ad for goring with the left horn.[20] I would here ask: In accordance with whose view [was this statement made]? If in accordance with R. Meir, did he not say that whether in the case of Tam or in that of Mu'ad, precaution of a superior degree was needed?[21] If [on the other hand] in accordance with R. Judah,[22] why specify only the left horn? Even in the case of the right horn itself, does not one part of the payment come under the rule of Tam[23] and another under that of Mu'ad? I may say that in fact it is in accordance with R. Judah , and that Rab does not concur in the view. expressed by R. Addah b. Ahabah, and what Rab thus intended to say was that it was only in such an instance[24] that there would be in one ox part Tam and part Mu'ad

---

(1) Cf. infra 57b.

(2) For R. Judah maintains that even an inferior precaution in the case of Mu'ad suffices to confer exemption for any damage that has nevertheless resulted.

(3) Infra p. 259.

(4) V. p. 257, n. 7. [And since R. Meir also holds that Mu'ad requires adequate precaution, he rightly makes the Hirer liable to pay kofer as well as reimburse the owner.]

(5) So that it would be perfectly safe in the case of an ordinary wind; cf. infra 55b.

(6) Ex. XXI,36.

(7) Cf. supra p. 64.

(8) So that it would be safe even in the case of a wind of unusual force.

(9) To show that both require really adequate precaution.

(10) V. Shebu. (Sonc. ed.) p. 12, n. 3.

(11) Cf. supra p. 250. [So that for Tam too an inferior precaution should suffice.]

(12) To Mua'd.

(13) To Tam.

(14) Lit., ‘for the negative’, that is, that he is liable because be failed to take the necessary precautions.]

(15) V. p. 259, n.7.

(16) Ibid. n. 8.

(17) Ibid. n. 6.

(18) I.e. the half added on account of the ox having been declared Mu'ad.

(19) And thus constantly subject to the law of Tam.

(20) Damage done by the right horn would thus be subject to the degree of precaution required in the case of Mu'ad while damage done by the left horn would still remain subject to the degree of precaution needed in Tam.

(21) Thus so far as precaution is concerned there would in this case be no difference between the right horn and the left horn.

(22) Who demands a greater degree of precaution in case of a Tam than in that of a Mu'ad, and accordingly there would be no liability if the ox gored with the right horn after inferior precautions had been taken, whereas there would be liability with the left horn.

(23) Requiring on that account adequate precautions, in the absence of which there should be liability.

(24) Where the ox gored three times with the right horn and was declared Mu'ad accordingly, remaining thus Tam in respect of the left horn.

. But in the case of an ox which was altogether Mu'ad no element of Tam could be found in it at all.

R. ELIEZER SAYS: NO PRECAUTION IS SUFFICIENT [FOR MU 'AD] SAVE [THE SLAUGHTER] KNIFE. Rabbah said: What was the reason of R. Eliezer? Because Scripture says: And his owner hath not kept him in,[1] [meaning] that precaution would no more be of any avail for such a one. Said Abaye to him: If that is so, why not similarly say on the strength of the words, And not cover it[2] that a cover would no more be of any avail for such a [pit]? And if you say that this is indeed the case, have we not learnt, 'Where it had been covered properly and an ox or an ass has [nevertheless] fallen into it there is exemption'?[3] — Abaye therefore said: The reason of R. Eliezer was as taught [elsewhere]:[4] R. Nathan says: Whence do we learn that a man should not bring up a vicious dog in his house, or keep a shaky ladder in his house? Because it is said: Thou bring not blood upon thy house.[5]

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. IF AN OX HAS GORED A COW AND ITS [NEWLY-BORN] CALF IS FOUND [DEAD] NEAR BY, AND IT IS UNKNOWN WHETHER THE BIRTH OF THE CALF PRECEDED THE GORING[6] OR FOLLOWED THE GORING,[7] HALF DAMAGES[8] WILL BE PAID FOR [THE INJURIES INFLICTED UPON] THE COW[9] BUT [ONLY] QUARTER DAMAGES WILL BE PAID FOR [THE LOSS OF] THE CALF.[10] SO ALSO WHERE A COW GORED AN OX AND A [LIVE] CALF WAS FOUND NEAR BY, SO THAT IT WAS UNKNOWN WHETHER THE BIRTH OF THE CALF PRECEDED THE GORING[11] OR FOLLOWED THE GORING,[12] HALF DAMAGES CAN BE RECOVERED OUT OF THE COW, AND QUARTER DAMAGES OUT OF THE CALF.[13]

GEMARA. Rab Judah on behalf of Samuel said: This ruling is the view of Symmachus who held that money, the ownership of which cannot be decided has to be shared [by the parties].[14] The Sages, however, say that it is a fundamental principle in law that the onus probandi falls on the claimant. Why was it necessary to state 'this is a fundamental principle in law'? — It was necessary to imply that even where the plaintiff is positive and the defendant dubious[14] it is still the plaintiff on whom falls onus probandi. Or [we may say] it is also necessary in view of a case of this kind: For it has been stated:[15] If a man sells an ox to another and it is found to be a gorer, Rab maintained that the sale would be voidable,[16] whereas Samuel said that the vendor could plead 'I sold it to be slaughtered'.[17] How so? Why not see whether the vendee was a person buying for field work or whether he was a person buying to slaughter?[18] — Samuel's view can hold good where he was a person buying both for the one and the other. But why not see if the money paid corresponded to the value of an ox for field work, then it must have been purchased for field work; if, on the other hand it corresponded to that of an ox to be slaughtered, then it must have been purchased for slaughter?[19] — Samuel's view could still hold good where there was a rise in the price of meat so that the ox was worth the price paid for one for field work.

---

(1) Ex. XXI, 29.

(2) Ibid. 33

(3) Infra 52a.

(4) Supra p. 67.

(5) Deut. XXII, 8. The same prohibition applies to a goring ox.

(6) In which case the death of the calf could not he imputed to the goring of the ox.

(7) So that the miscarriage of the calf was a result of the goring.

(8) In the case of Tam.

(9) As these have certainly resulted from the goring of the ox.

(10) On account of the doubt.

(11) In which case the calf did not participate in the goring.

(12) So that the calf while it was still an embryo took part in the act of the cow.

(13) V. Gemara, infra p. 264.
(14) Cf. also supra p. 196.
(15) B.B. 92a.
(16) At the instance of the vendee.
(17) As Samuel follows his own view that this grand principle in law accepted by the Sages has to he applied in all cases and in all circumstances, as the Gemara proceeds to explain.
(18) Would this consideration not be a piece of good circumstantial evidence?
(19) As indeed maintained by R. Judah in a similar case dealt with in B. B. 77b; as to the other view, cf. Tosaf. a.l.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 46b

I may here ask: If the vendor had not the wherewithal for making payment, why not take the ox in lieu of money?[1] Do not people say, 'From the owner of your loan[2] take payment even in bran'? — No, this is to be applied where he had the wherewithal for making payment.[3] Rab who said that it was a voidable purchase maintained that we decide according to the majority of cases, and the majority of people buy for field work. Samuel, however, said that the vendor might plead against him, 'It was for slaughter that I sold it to thee,' and that we do not follow the majority,[4] for we follow the majority only in ritual matters, but in pecuniary cases we do not follow the majority, but whoever has a [pecuniary] claim against his neighbour the onus probandi falls upon him.

It has been taught to the same effect: 'Where an ox gored a cow and its [newly-born] calf was found [dead] nearby, so that it was unknown whether the birth of the calf preceded the goring, or followed the goring, half damages will be paid for [injuries inflicted upon] the cow but only quarter damages will be paid for [the loss of] the calf; this is the view of Symmachus. The Sages, however, say: If one claims anything from his neighbour, the onus probandi falls upon him.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani stated: Whence can we learn that the onus probandy falls on the claimant? It is said: If any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them,[5] [implying] 'let him bring evidence before them'. But R. Ashi demurred, saying: Do we need Scripture to tell us this?[6] Is it not common sense that if a man has a pain he visits the healer? No: the purpose of the verse is to corroborate the statement made by R. Nahman on behalf of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Whence can we learn that judges should give prior consideration to the first plaintiff?[7] It is said: If any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them[5] [implying]: let him cause his matters to be brought [first] before them. The Nehardeans however, said; It may sometimes be necessary to give prior consideration to the defendant, as for instance in a case where his property would otherwise depreciate in value.[8]

SO ALSO WHERE A COW GORED AN OX etc. [We have here] half damages plus quarter damages! Is it not [only] half of the damage that need be paid for? What then have full damages less a quarter to do here? — Abaye said: Half of the damage means one quarter of the damage,[9] and a quarter of the damage means one eighth of the damage.[10] It is true that where the cow and the calf belong to one owner, the plaintiff would be entitled to plead against the owner of the cow, 'In any case, have you not to pay me half damages?'[11] The ruling, however, applies to the case where the cow belonged to one and the calf to another.[12] Again, where the plaintiff claimed from the owner of the cow first it would still also make no difference, as he would be entitled to argue against the owner of the cow, 'It was your cow that did me the damage, [and it is for you to] produce evidence that there is a joint defendant with you.'[13] But where the rule applies is to a case where he claimed from the owner of the calf first, in which case the owner of the cow may say to him, 'You have made clear your opinion that there is a joint defendant with me.'[14] Some, however, say that even where the plaintiff claimed from the owner of the cow first, the latter might put him off by saying, 'It is definitely known to me[15] that there is a joint defendant with me.'[14] Raba said: Is then 'a fourth of the damage' and 'an eighth of the damage' mentioned in the text? Is not 'half damages' and 'quarter damages' stated in the text?[16] — Raba therefore said: We suppose that in fact the cow and the calf belonged to one owner,[17] and the meaning is this: Where the cow is available,[18] the payment of half damages will be made out of the cow.[19]

---

(1) Since the meat of the ox is worth the purchase money.

(2) I.e. from your debtor who is now the owner of the money lent to him; cf. the Roman 'Mutuum'.

(3) In which case the creditor is entitled to ready cash; cf. Tosaf. a.l. and supra 9a; 27a; B.B. 92b.

(4) Which is otherwise an accepted principle in Rabbinic Law; cf. Hul. 11b.

(5) Ex. XXIV, 14.

(6) Keth. 22a and Nid. 25a.

(7) I.e., where A instituted an action against B, and B on appearance introduced a counter-claim against A; cf. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l., and Sanh. 35a.

(8) Where, e.g., he has an opportunity of disposing of the estate concerned at a high price — an opportunity he might miss through any delay in a settlement of his counter-claim.

(9) I.e., a half of the half, as half constitutes the whole payment in the case of Tam.

(10) I.e., a quarter of the half.

(11) Since both the cow and the calf belong to you.

(12) As e.g., where the cow was sold with the exception of its offspring; Rashi.

(13) That is, that the calf took part in the goring, otherwise you must be held solely responsible.

(14) So that I cannot accordingly be held liable for all the damages.

(15) Unless you prove to the contrary.

(16) How then could Abaye interpret half-damages to mean quarter damages, and quarter damages to mean an eighth of the damage?

(17) In the case stated in the Mishnah.

(18) To be distrained upon for the damages in accordance with the law applicable to Tam.

(19) As she definitely did the damage.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 47a

But where the cow is not available, quarter damages will be paid out of the body of the calf.[1] Now this is so only where it is not known whether the calf was still part of the cow at the time she gored or whether it was not so, but were we certain that the calf was still part of the cow at the time of the goring[2] the whole payment of the half damages would be made from the body of the calf. Raba here adopts the same line of reasoning [as in another place], as Raba has indeed stated: Where a cow has done damage, payment can be collected out of the body of its calf, the reason being that the latter is a part of the body of the former, whereas in the case of a chicken doing damage, no payment will be made out of its eggs, the reason being that they are a separate [body].[3]

Raba further said: [Where an ox has gored a cow and caused miscarriage] the valuation will not be made for the cow separately and for the calf separately, but the valuation will be made for the calf as at the time when it formed a part of the cow; for if you do not adopt this rule,[4] you will be found to be making the defendant suffer unduly. The same method is followed in the case of the cutting off the hand of a neighbour's slave;[5] and the same method is followed in the case of damage done to a neighbour's field.[6] Said R. Aha the son of Raba to R. Ashi: If justice demands, why should not the defendant suffer? — Because he is entitled to say to him: 'Since it was a pregnant cow that I deprived you of, it is a pregnant cow which should be taken into valuation.'

There is no question that where the cow belonged to one owner and the calf to another owner, the value of the fat condition of the cow will go to the owner of the cow.[7] But what of the value of its bulky appearance? — R. Papa said: It will go to the owner of the cow. R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: It will be shared [by the two owners].[8] The law is that it will be shared [by the two owners].

MISHNAH.IF A POTTER BRINGS HIS WARES INTO THE COURTYARD OF ANOTHER PERSON WITHOUT PERMISSION, AND THE CATTLE OF THE OWNER OF THE COURTYARD BREAKS THEM, THERE IS NO LIABILITY.[9] MOREOVER, SHOULD THE ANIMAL BE INJURED BY THEM, THE OWNER OF THE POTTERY IS LIABLE [TO PAY DAMAGES]. IF, HOWEVER, HE BROUGHT [THEM] IN WITH PERMISSION,[10] THE OWNER OF THE COURTYARD IS LIABLE. SIMILARLY IF [A MAN] BRINGS HIS PRODUCE INTO THE COURTYARD OF ANOTHER PERSON WITHOUT PERMISSION AND THE ANIMAL OF THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES CONSUMES IT, THERE IS NO LIABILITY.[11] IF IT WAS HARMED BY IT THE OWNER WOULD BE LIABLE. IF, HOWEVER, HE BROUGHT THEM IN WITH PERMISSION,[10] THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES WOULD BE LIABLE. SO ALSO IF [A MAN] BRINGS HIS OX INTO THE COURTYARD OF ANOTHER WITHOUT

---

(1) On account of the doubt involved in the case dealt with in the Mishnah.

(2) In which case it participated in the goring.

(3) [So Rashi. Curr. edd. read 'mere excrement'.]

(4) But that the cow should be valued separately and the calf separately.

(5) [You do not value the hand separately, viz., what price a master would in the first instance be willing to take for depriving his slave of the use of his hand; but the difference in the value of a slave who had his hand cut off — a much smaller price.]

(6) [The valuation is not made on the basis of the single plot which has been damaged, but on the basis of its value in relation to the whole field.]

(7) As the embryo did not increase the fatness of the cow.

(8) As both the cow and embryo participate in the bulky appearance of the animal.

(9) As the plaintiff was a trespasser.

(10) In which case he was no trespasser

(11) V.p. 266, n. 7.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 47b

PERMISSION AND THE OX OF THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES GORES IT OR THE DOG OF THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES BITES IT, THERE IS NO LIABILITY. MOREOVER SHOULD IT GORE THE OX OF THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES ITS OWNER WOULD BE LIABLE. AGAIN, IF IT FALLS [THERE] INTO A PIT OF THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES AND MAKES THE WATER IN IT FOUL, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY. SO ALSO IF [IT KILLS] THE OWNER'S FATHER OR SON [WHO] WAS INSIDE THE PIT, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY TO PAY KOFER.[1] IF, HOWEVER, HE BROUGHT IT IN WITH PERMISSION, THE OWNER OF THE YARD WOULD BE LIABLE. RABBI, HOWEVER, SAYS: IN ALL THESE CASES THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES WOULD NOT BE LIABLE UNLESS HE HAS TAKEN IT UPON HIMSELF TO WATCH [THE ARTICLES BROUGHT INTO HIS PREMISES].

GEMARA. The reason why [the potter would be liable for damage occasioned by his pottery to the cattle of the owner of the premises] is because the entry was without permission, which shows that were it with permission the owner of the pots would not be liable for the damage done to the cattle of the owner of the premises and we do not say that the owner of the pots has by implication undertaken to watch the cattle of the owner of the premises. Who is the authority for this view? — Rabbi, who has laid down that without express stipulation no duty to watch is undertaken.[2] Now look at the second clause: IF HE BROUGHT THEM IN WITH PERMISSION, THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES WOULD BE LIABLE. This brings us round to the view of the Rabbis,[3] who said that even without express stipulation he makes himself responsible for watching. Moreover, [it was further stated]: RABBI SAYS: IN ALL THESE CASES THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES WOULD NOT BE LIABLE UNLESS HE HAS TAKEN UPON HIMSELF TO WATCH. [Are we to say that] the opening clause and the concluding clause are in accordance with Rabbi while the middle clause is in accordance with the Rabbis? — R. Zera thereupon said: The contradiction [is obvious]; he who taught one clause cannot have taught the other clause. Raba, however, said; The whole [of the anonymous part of the Mishnah] is in accordance with the Rabbis, for [where the entry was] with permission the owner of the premises undertook the safeguarding of the pots even against breakage by the wind.[4]

IF [A MAN] BRINGS HIS PRODUCE INTO THE COURTYARD OF ANOTHER OWNER etc. Rab said: This rule[5] applies only where the animal [was injured] by slipping on them, but if the animal ate them [and was thereby harmed], there would be exemption on the ground that it should not have eaten them.[6] Said R. Shesheth: I feel inclined to say that it was only when he was drowsy or asleep that Rab could have made such a statement.[7] For it was taught: If one places deadly poison before the animal of another he is exempt from the judgment of Man, but liable to the judgment of Heaven.[8] Now, that is so only in the case of deadly poison which is not usually consumed by an animal, but in the case of products that are usually consumed by an animal, there appears to be liability even to the judgment of Man. But why should this be so? [Why not argue:] It should not have eaten them? — I may reply that strictly speaking even in the case of produce there should be exemption from the judgment of Man, and there was a special purpose in enunciating this ruling with reference to deadly poison, namely that even where the article was one not usually consumed by an animal, there will still be liability to the judgment of Heaven. Or if you wish you may say that by the deadly poison mentioned was meant hypericum,[9] which like a fruit [is eaten by animals].

An objection could be raised [from the following]: If a woman enters the premises of another person to grind wheat without permission, and the animal of the owner consumes it, there is no liability; if the animal is harmed, the woman would be liable. Now, why not argue: It should not have over-eaten? — I can answer: [In what respect] does this case go beyond that of the Mishnah, which was interpreted [to refer to damage occasioned by] the animal having slipped over them? What then was in the mind of the one who made the objection? — He might have said to you; Your explanation is satisfactory regarding the Mishnah where it says, IF IT WAS HARMED BY IT [which admits of being interpreted] that the animal slipped over them. But here [in the Baraitha] it says, 'if the animal is harmed', without the words 'by them', so that surely the consumption [of the wheat] is what is referred to. And the other?[10] — He can contend [that the omission of these words] makes no difference.

Come and hear: If a man brought his ox into the courtyard of another person without permission, and it ate there wheat and got diarrhoea from which it died, there would be no liability. But if he brought it in with permission, the owner of the courtyard would be liable. Now why not argue: It should not have eaten?[11] — Raba thereupon said: How can you raise an objection from a case where permission was given[12] against a case where permission was not given?[13] Where permission was given, the owner of the premises assumed liability for safeguarding the ox even against its strangling itself.

The question was raised: Where the owner of the premises has assumed responsibility to safeguard [the articles brought in to his premises], what is the legal position? Has the obligation to safeguard been assumed by him [only] against damage from his own [beasts], or has he perhaps also undertaken to safeguard from damage in general? Come and hear: Rab Judah b. Simon learnt in the [Tractate] Nezikin of the School of Karna;[14] If a man brings his produce into the courtyard of another without permission, and an ox from elsewhere comes and consumes it, there is no liability. But if he brought it in with permission there would be liability. Now, who would be exempt[15] and who would be liable?[16] Does it not mean that the owner of the premises would be exempt[15] and[16] the owner of the premises would be liable?[17] — I may say that this is not so, it is the owner of the ox who would be exempt[15] and the owner of the ox who would be liable.[16] But if it refers to the owner of the ox,

---

(1) Ex. XXI, 29-30.

(2) [For the present it is assumed that the duty applies alike to the owner of the pottery in regard to the belongings of the owner of the premises as to the latter in regard to the pottery.]

(3) The representatives of the anonymous view cited on the Mishnah.

(4) Whereas the owner of the pottery could never be considered to have by implication accepted upon himself the responsibility for safeguarding the belongings of the owner of the premises.

(5) Imposing liability where the animal was injured by the produce.

(6) Cf. infra 57b.

(7) V. infra p. 376.

(8) V. infra 56a.

(9) [St. John's Wort.]

(10) Rab.

(11) So that the owner of the courtyard should not be liable for the harm occasioned by the wheat to the ox brought in with his permission.

(12) And the harm was done to the ox thus brought in with permission.

(13) I.e. where produce brought in without permission was eaten by the owner's animal which thereby suffered harm, in which case the owner though being a trespasser has still no liability to safeguard to that extent the belongings of the owner of the premises.

(14) [Karna, one of the Judges of the Exile, had a collection of Babylonian traditions, הלכתא דבבלאי (Gen. Rab. XXXIII), of pre-Amoraic days, v. Funk, S., Die Juden in Babylonian, I, n. 1.]

(15) In the absence of permission.

(16) Where permission was granted.

(17) [This shows that the responsibility assumed by the owner of the premises extends in regard to damages in general.]

what has permission or absence of permission to do with the case?[1] — I will answer; [Where the produce was brought in] with permission, the case would be one of Tooth [doing damage] in the plaintiff's premises,[2] and Tooth doing damage in the plaintiff's premises entails liability,[3] whereas in the absence of permission it would be a case of Tooth doing damage on public ground,[4] and Tooth doing damage on public ground entails no liability.[5]

Come and hear: If a man brings his ox into the premises of another person without permission, and an ox from elsewhere comes and gores it, there is no liability. But if he brought it in with permission there would be liability. Now, who would be exempt[6] and who would be liable?[7] Does it not mean that it is the owner of the premises who would be exempt[6] and the owner of the premises who would be liable?[7] — No, it is the owner of the ox [from elsewhere] who would be exempt[6] and similarly it is the owner of the ox [from elsewhere] who would be liable.[7] But if so, what has permission or the absence of permission to do with the case?[8] — I would answer that this teaching is in accordance with R. Tarfon, who held[9] that the unusual damage occasioned by Horn in the plaintiff's premises has to be compensated in full: [Where the ox was brought in] with permission the case would therefore be one of Horn doing damage in the plaintiff's premises[10] and the payment would have to be for full damages, whereas in the absence of permission it would amount to Horn doing damage on public ground,[4] and the payment would accordingly be only for half damages.

A certain woman once entered the house of another person for the purpose of baking bread there, and a goat of the owner of the house came and ate up the dough, from which it became sick and died. [In giving judgment] Raba ordered the woman to pay damages for the value of the goat. Are we to say now that Raba differed from Rab, since Rab said:[11] It should not have eaten?[12] — I may reply, are both cases parallel? There,[11] there was no permission and the owner of the produce did not assume any obligation of safeguarding [the property of the owner of the premises], whereas in this case, permission had been given and the woman had accepted responsibility for safeguarding[13] [the property of the owner of the premises]. But why should the rule in this case be different from [what has been laid down, that] if a woman enters the premises of another person to grind wheat without permission, and the animal of the owner of the premises eats it up, the owner is not liable, and if the animal suffers harm the woman is liable, the reason being that there was no permission, which shows that where permission was granted she would be exempt?[14] — I can answer: In the case of grinding wheat, since there is no need of privacy at all, and the owner of the premises is not required to absent himself, the obligation to take care [of his property] still devolves upon him, whereas in the case of baking where, since privacy is required,[15] the owner of the premises absents himself [from the premises], the obligation to safeguard his property must fall upon the woman.

IF A MAN BRINGS HIS OX INTO THE PREMISES OF ANOTHER PERSON [etc.]. Raba said: If he brings his ox on another person's ground and it digs there pits, ditches, and caves, the owner of the ox would be liable for the damage done to the ground, and the owner of the ground would be liable for any damage resulting from the pit. For though the Master stated:[16] [It says,] If a man shall dig a pit,[17] and not ‘if an ox [shall dig] a pit’, still here [in this case] since it was the duty of the owner of the ground to fill in the pit and he did not fill it in, he is reckoned [in the eyes of the law] as having himself dug it.[18]

Raba further said: If he brings his ox into the premises of another person without permission, and the ox injures the owner of the premises, or the owner of the premises suffers injury through the ox,[19] he is liable, but if it lies down,[20] he has no liability. But why should the fact of its lying down confer exemption?[21] — R. Papa thereupon said: What is meant by ‘it lies down’ is that the ox lays down its excrements [upon the ground], and thereby soils the utensils of the owner of the premises. [The exemption is because] the excrements[22] are a case of Pit, and we have never found Pit involving liability for damage done to inanimate objects.[23] This explanation is satisfactory if we adopt the view of Samuel who held[24] that all kinds of nuisances come under the head of Pit. But on the view of Rab who said[24] [that they do not come under the head of Pit] unless they have been abandoned,[25] what are we to say? — It may safely be said that excrements as a rule are abandoned.[26]

Raba said further: If one enters the premises of another person without permission, and injures the owner of the premises,[27] or the owner of the premises suffers injury through him[28] there would be liability;[29] and if the owner of the premises injured him, there would be no liability. R. Papa thereupon said: This ruling applies only where the owner had not noticed him. For if he had noticed him, the owner of the premises by injuring him would render himself liable, as the trespasser would be entitled to say to him: 'Though you have the right to eject me, you have no right to injure me.'[30] These authorities[31] followed the line of reasoning [adopted by them elsewhere], for Raba or, as others read, R. Papa stated:

---

(1) Since the defendant was not the owner of the premises.

(2) As the plaintiff obtained a legal right to keep there the object which was subsequently damaged by a stray ox.

(3) Ex. XXII, 4.

(4) I.e. on premises where the plaintiff has no more right than the owner of the ox, the defendant.

(5) Cf. supra p. 17.

(6) V. p. 270, n. 4.

(7) V. p. 270, n. 5.

(8) V. p. 270, n. 7.

(9) Supra p. 125.

(10) V. p. 270, n. 8.

(11) Supra p. 268.

(12) And the woman would therefore not have to pay for the damage sustained by the animal of the owner of the premises.

(13) V. the discussion that follows.

(14) Why then should the woman, the owner of the dough, have to pay?

(15) Lit., 'she requires privacy.' As the woman would usually have to uncover her arms.

(16) Infra p. 93 and cf. also supra 51a.

(17) Ex. XXI, 33.

(18) The owner of the ground is therefore liable for any damage resulting from the pit.

(19) By stumbling over it

(20) And, as it is assumed at present, it did damage thereby.

(21) If damage was done by it.

(22) As any other nuisance.

(23) For Scripture said: Ox and ass'; cf. supra p. 18.

(24) Supra p. 150.

(25) But where they were not abandoned they would be subject to the law applicable to Cattle, where there is no exemption for damage done to inanimate objects.

(26) Cf. B.M. 27a.

(27) [Whether with or without intention.]

(28) I.e. the trespasser, by stumbling over him.

(29) Upon the trespasser.

(30) Cf. supra p. 124.

(31) I.e. Raba and R. Papa.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 48b

Where both of them [plaintiff and defendant] had a right [to be where they were][1] or where both of them [on the other hand] had no right [to be where they were],[2] if either of them injured the other, he would be liable, but if either suffered injury through the other, there would be no liability. This is so only where both of them had a right to be where they were[1] or where both of them [on the other hand] had no right to be where they were,[2] but where one of them had a right and the other had no right, the one who had a right would be exempt,[3] whereas the one who had no right would be liable.[3]

IF IT FALLS [THERE] INTO A PIT OF THE OWNER AND MAKES THE WATER IN IT FOUL, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY. Raba said: This ruling applies only where the ox makes the water foul at the moment of its falling into the pit.[4] For where the water became foul [only] after it fell in, there would be exemption on the ground that [the damage done by] the ox[5] should then be [subject to the law applicable in the case of] Pit, and water is an inanimate object, and we never find Pit entailing liability for damage done to inanimate objects.[6] Now this is correct if we accept the view of Samuel who said[7] that all kinds of nuisances are subject to the law of Pit. But on the view of Rab who held[7] [that this is not so] unless they have been abandoned,[8] what are we to say? — We must therefore suppose that if the statement was made at all, it was made in this form: Raba said: The ruling [of the Mishnah] applies only where the ox made the water foul by [the dirt of] its body.[4] But where it made the water foul by the smell of its carcass there would be no liability, the reason being that the ox [in this case] was only a [secondary] cause [of the damage], and for a mere [secondary] cause there is no liability.

WHERE [IT KILLS] THE OWNER'S FATHER OR HIS SON [WHO] WAS INSIDE THE PIT, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY TO PAY KOFER. But why? Was the ox not Tam?[9] — Rab thereupon said: We are dealing with a case where the ox was Mu'ad to fall upon people in pits. But if so, should it not have already been killed [on the first occasion]?[10] — R. Joseph thereupon said: The ox was looking at some grass [growing near the opening of the pit] and thus fell [into it].[11] Samuel, however, said: This ruling is in accordance with R. Jose the Galilean, who held[12] that [killing by] Tam entails the payment of half kofer. ‘Ulla, however, said: It accords with the ruling laid down by R. Jose the Galilean in accordance with R. Tarfon, who said[13] that Horn doing damage in the plaintiff's premises entails the payment of full damages.[14] So here the liability is for the payment of full kofer.[15] ‘Ulla's answer satisfactorily explains why the text [of the Mishnah] says, IF HIS FATHER OR HIS SON WAS INSIDE THE PIT.[16] But if we take the answer of Samuel, why [is the ruling stated] only with reference to his father and his son?[16] Why not with reference to any other person? — The Mishnah took the most usual case.[17]

IF HE BROUGHT THEM IN WITH PERMISSION, THE OWNER OF THE PREMISES WOULD BE LIABLE etc. It was stated: Rab said: ‘The law[18] is in accordance with the first Tanna,’ whereas Samuel said, ‘The law[18] is in accordance with the view of Rabbi.’[19]

Our Rabbis taught: [If the owner of the premises says:] ‘Bring in your ox and watch it,’ should the ox then damage, there would be liability,[20] but should the ox suffer injury there would be no liability.[21] If, however, [the owner says], ‘Bring in your ox and I will watch it,’ should the ox suffer injury there would be liability,[21] but should it do damage[22] there would be no liability.[20] Does not this statement contain a contradiction? You say that [where the owner of the premises said:] ‘Bring in your ox and watch it,’ should the ox do damage there would be liability,[20] but should the ox suffer injury there would be no liability.[21] Now the reason for this is that he expressly said to the owner of the ox ‘watch it’ — [the reason, I mean,] that the owner of the ox will be liable and the owner of the premises exempt; from which I infer that if no explicit mention was made [as to the watching] the owner of the premises would be liable, and the owner of the ox exempt, indicating that without express stipulation to the contrary the former takes it upon himself to safeguard [the ox].[23] Now read the concluding clause: But [if he said]: ‘Bring in your ox and I will watch it’, should the ox suffer injury there would be liability,[24] but should it do damage there would be no liability, [the reason being that] he expressly said to him ‘and I will watch it’ — [the reason,] I mean, that the owner of the premises would be liable and the owner of the ox exempt; from which I infer that if there is no express stipulation, the owner of the ox would be liable and the owner of the premises exempt, as in such a case the owner of the premises does not take it upon himself to safeguard [the ox]. This brings us round to the view of Rabbi, who laid down [there would be no liability upon him][24] unless where the owner of the premises had taken upon himself to safeguard. Is then the opening clause in accordance with the Rabbis, and the concluding clause in accordance with Rabbi? — R. Eleazar thereupon said: The contradiction [is obvious]; he who taught one clause cannot have taught the other clause.[25] Raba, however, said: The whole [of the Baraitha] can be explained as being in accordance with the Rabbis; since the opening clause required the insertion of the words, 'watch it',[26] there were correspondingly inserted in the concluding clause the words 'And I will take care of it'. R. Papa, however, said: The whole [of the Baraitha] is in accordance with Rabbi;[27] for he concurred in the view of R. Tarfon who stated[28] that Horn doing damage in the plaintiff's premises would entail the payment of full damages. It therefore follows that where he expressly said to him, 'Watch it', he certainly did not transfer a legal right to him to any place in the premises, so that the case[29] becomes one of Horn doing damage in the plaintiff's premises, and [as already explained][30] where Horn does damage in the plaintiff's premises the payment must be for full damages. Where, however, he did not expressly say, 'Watch it', he surely granted him a legal right to place in the premises, so that the case is one of [damage done on] premises of joint owners and [as we know] where Horn does damage on premises of owners in common, there is no liability to pay anything but half damages.[31]

MISHNAH. IF AN OX WHILE CHARGING ANOTHER OX [INCIDENTALLY] INJURES A WOMAN WHO [AS A RESULT] MISCARRIES, NO COMPENSATION NEED BE MADE FOR THE LOSS OF THE EMBRYOS. BUT IF A MAN WHILE MEANING TO STRIKE ANOTHER MAN [INCIDENTALLY] STRUCK A WOMAN WHO THUS MISCARRIED HE WOULD HAVE TO PAY COMPENSATION FOR THE LOSS OF THE EMBRYOS.[32] HOW IS THE COMPENSATION FOR [THE LOSS OF] EMBRYOS FIXED? THE ESTIMATED VALUE OF THE WOMAN BEFORE HER MISCARRIAGE IS COMPARED WITH HER VALUE AFTER MISCARRIAGE.

---

(1) Such as e.g. on public ground or on their joint premises.

(2) E.g. where they were running on public ground, for which cf. supra p. 172.

(3) For incidental damage suffered through him.

(4) In which case the damage was direct.

(5) By becoming a stationary nuisance.

(6) Supra p. 18.

(7) V. p. 273, n. 3.

(8) V. p. 273, n. 4.

(9) In which case no kofer has to be paid.

(10) For in a case where the ox threw itself upon a human being in a pit to kill him it could hardly escape being sentenced to death and stoned accordingly. The explanations given supra pp. 232-3 on a similar problem could therefore hardly apply here.

(11) Without any intention to kill the human being in the pit. The ox is therefore exempt from being stoned, but the owner is nevertheless liable to pay kofer as this kind of damage comes under the category of Tooth, since the ox did it for its own gratification; cf. supra p. 6.

(12) Supra p. 66.

(13) V. p. 271, n. 6.

(14) Cf. also supra p. 134.

(15) Since the ox killed the human being on his own premises.

(16) So that he was killed on his own premises.

(17) For it is not quite usual that a person not of the household of the owner of the yard should be in the pit which was the private property of the owner.

(18) [V.l., 'The halachah is.']

(19) Cf. Bez. 40a.

(20) Upon the owner of the ox.

(21) Upon the owner of the premises.
(22) To the belongings of the owner of the premises.
(23) [MS. M. adds: This will be in accordance with the Rabbis who hold that in the absence of any express stipulation there is still the duty to watch.]
(24) Upon the owner of the premises.
(25) Cf. supra p. 268.
(26) As otherwise the owner of the premises would by implication, according to the Rabbis, have accepted liability to safeguard.
(27) For while the inference from the concluding clause holds good, this is not the case with that of the commencing clause, as even where no mention was made about watching the ox brought in, the owner of the premises would still not be liable for any damage done to it. There may, however, be a difference where it gored an ox of the owner of the premises if Rabbi followed the view of R. Tarfon as will be explained in the text.
(28) V. supra p. 125.
(29) Where the ox brought in gored an ox of the owner of the premises.
(30) V. p. 276, n. 6.
(31) Supra. p. 58.
(32) Ex. XXI, 22

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 49a

R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: IF THIS IS SO, A WOMAN AFTER HAVING GIVEN BIRTH INCREASES IN VALUE.[1] IT IS THEREFORE THE VALUE OF THE EMBRYOS WHICH HAS TO BE ESTIMATED, AND THIS AMOUNT WILL BE GIVEN TO THE HUSBAND. IF, HOWEVER, THE HUSBAND IS NO LONGER ALIVE, IT WOULD BE GIVEN TO HIS HEIRS. IF THE WOMAN WAS A MANUMITTED SLAVE OR A PROSELYTESS [AND THE HUSBAND, ALSO A PROSELYTE, IS NO LONGER ALIVE], THERE WOULD BE COMPLETE EXEMPTION.[2] GEMARA. The reason why there is exemption is because the ox was charging another ox, from which we infer that if it was charging the woman, there would be liability to pay. Will this not be in contradiction to the view of R. Adda b. Ahabah? For did not R. Adda b. Ahabah state[3] that [even] where Cattle were charging the woman, there would [still] be exemption from paying compensation for [the loss] of the embryos? — R. Adda b. Ahabah might reply: The same ruling [of the Mishnah] would apply even in the case of Cattle making for the woman, where there would similarly be exemption from paying compensation for [the loss of] the embryos. And as for the Mishnah saying IF AN OX WHILE CHARGING OTHER CATTLE, the reason is that, since it was necessary to state in the concluding clause BUT IF A MAN WHILE MEANING TO STRIKE ANOTHER MAN, this being the case stated in Scripture,[4] it was also found expedient to have a similar text in the commencing clause IF AN OX WHILE CHARGING ANOTHER OX.

R. Papa said: If an ox gores a woman-slave, causing her to miscarry, there would be liability to pay for the loss of the embryos, the reason being that [in the eyes of the law] it was merely a case of a pregnant she-ass being injured, for Scripture says, Abide ye here with the ass,[5] thus comparing this folk to an ass.[6]

HOW IS THE COMPENSATION FOR THE LOSS OF EMBRYOS FIXED etc.? 'COMPENSATION FOR THE EMBRYOS'? Should it not [also] have been 'Compensation for the increase in [the woman's] value caused by the embryos'?[7] — This indeed was what was meant: How is the compensation for the embryos and for the increase [in the woman's value] due to embryos fixed? Her estimated value before miscarriage is compared with her value after miscarriage.[8]

BUT R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID; IF THIS IS SO, A WOMAN AFTER HAVING GIVEN BIRTH INCREASES IN VALUE. What did he mean by this statement?[9] — Rabbah said; He meant to say this; Does a woman increase in value before giving birth more than after? Does not a woman increase in value after giving birth[10] more than before giving birth? It is therefore the value of the embryos which has to be estimated, and this amount will be given to the husband. It was taught to the same effect; Does the value of a woman increase more before giving birth than after giving birth? Does not the value of a woman increase after having given birth[10] more than before giving birth? It is therefore the value of the embryos which has to be estimated, and this amount will be given to the husband. Raba, however, said: What is meant is this.[11] 'Is a woman's increase in value wholly for [the benefit of the husband for] whom she bears, and has she no share at all in the increase [in the value][12] due to the embryo? It is therefore the value of the embryos which has to be estimated and this amount will be given to the husband, whereas the amount of the increase [in the value][12] caused by the embryos will be shared equally [between husband and wife].' It was similarly taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Is the increase in a woman's value wholly for [the benefit of the husband for] whom she bears, and has she herself no share at all in the increase [in her value] due to the embryos? No; there is a separate estimation for Depreciation[13] and also for Pain,[13] and the value of the embryos is estimated and given to the husband, whereas the amount of the increase in her value caused by the embryos will be shared equally [between husband and wife]. But is not R. Simeon b. Gamaliel contradicting himself [in this]?[14] — There is no contradiction, for one case[15] is that of a woman pregnant for the first time,[16] and the other of a woman who had already given birth to children.[17]

What was the reason of the Rabbis who stated that the amount of the increase [in the woman's value] due to the embryos also belongs to the husband? — As it was taught: From the words, so that her fruit depart from her,[18] cannot I understand that the woman was pregnant? Why then [the words] with child?[18] To teach you that the increase in her value due to pregnancy belongs to the husband. How then does R. Simeon b. Gamaliel expound the phrase 'with child'? — He required it for the lesson taught in the following: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Liability is never incurred save when the blow is given over against the place of the womb. R. Papa said: You are not to understand from this just over against the place of the womb, for wherever the bruise could be communicated to the embryo [will suffice];[19] what is excluded is a blow on the hand or foot, where there would be liability.

IF THE WOMAN WAS A MANUMITTED SLAVE,OR PROSELYTESS [AND THE HUSBAND, ALSO A PROSELYTE, IS NO LONGER ALIVE], THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION ALTOGETHER.[20] Rabbah said: This rule applies only where the blow was given during the lifetime of the proselyte [husband] and it was only after this that he died, for since the blow was given during the lifetime of the proselyte, he acquired title to the impending payment, so that when he subsequently died[21] the defendant became quit of it as it was an asset of the proselyte.[21] But where the blow was given after the death of the proselyte it was the mother who acquired title to the embryos, so that the defendant would have to make payment to her. Said R. Hisda: O, master of this [teaching]! Are embryos packets of money to which a title can be acquired? It is only when the husband is there[22] that the Divine Law grants payment to him, but not when he is no more.

An objection was raised:[23] 'Where a woman is struck and a miscarriage results, compensation for Depreciation and Pain is to be paid to the woman, but for the loss of the embryos to the husband; where the husband is no more alive it[24] is given to his heirs; so also where the woman is no more alive, it[25] is given to her heirs. Should she be a slave who has been manumitted, or a proselytess [whose husband, also a proselyte, is no longer alive], the defendant becomes entitled to it'?[26] — I would reply: Is there anything more in this case than in that of the Mishnah, which has been interpreted to refer to where the blow was given during the lifetime of the proselyte and [where it was only after this that] the proselyte died?[27] [Why therefore not interpret the text] here also as referring to a case were the blow was given during the lifetime of the proselyte and [where it was only after this that] the proselyte died![27] More-over, if you wish you may [alternatively] say that it might have referred even to a case where the blow was given after the death of the proselyte,

(1) V. the explanation in the Gemara.
(2) The reason being that in this case there is no legitimate plaintiff.
(3) Supra p. 239.
(4) Ex. XXI, 22.
(5) Gen. XXII, 5.
(6) I.e. a mere chattel of the Master.
(7) Before the miscarriage took place. For besides the loss of the value of the embryos there was a loss of the value of the woman herself that was increased by the embryos making her look bigger and stouter. [Rashi reads: 'Is this (referring to the valuation laid down in the Mishnah) compensation for the embryos? Is it not also compensation for the increase etc.?']
(8) [This valuation, that is to say, serves as compensation both for the embryos and for the increase etc.]
(9) For surely the anonymous Tanna expressed himself to the contrary.
(10) Through having emerged safely from the dangers of childbirth.
(11) By R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(12) Of her own body.
(13) Cf. supra p. 243 and Keth. VI, 1.
(14) For according to his other statement a woman increases in value after giving birth more than before.
(15) Where he stated that the value of a woman after having given birth is greater than that prior to having given birth.
(16) Where the circumstances are more complicated.
(17) In which case her value later is less than that prior to giving birth
(18) Ex. XXI, 22.
(19) To create liability.
(20) V. p. 277, n. 6.
(21) Without issue, leaving thus no heirs.
(22) I.e. alive.
(23) Cf. supra p. 234.
(24) I.e. the payment for the loss of the embryos.
(25) I.e. the payment for Depreciation and Pain.
(26) Even, it would seem, when the blow was given after the death of the proselyte, which contradicts the view of Rabbah.
(27) V. p. 280, n. 5.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 49b

but read in the text 'she would become entitled to it'.[1]

May we say that there is on this point[2] a difference between Tannaitic authorities? [For it was taught:] If a daughter of an Israelite was married to a proselyte and became pregnant by him, and a blow was given her during the lifetime of the proselyte,[3] the compensation for the loss of the embryos will be given to the proselyte. But if after the death of the proselyte![4] — One Baraitha teaches that there would be liability, whereas another Baraitha teaches that there would be no liability. Now, does this not show that Tannaim differ on this [point]?[5] According to Rabbah there is certainly a difference between Tannaim on this matter.[6] But what of R. Hisda?[7] Must he also hold that Tannaim were divided on it? — [No; he may argue that] there is no difficulty,[8] as one [Baraitha] accepts the view of the Rabbis[9] whereas the other follows that of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.[10] But if [the Baraitha which says that there is liability follows the view of] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, why speak only of compensation after the death [of the proselyte]? Would she even during [his] lifetime not have [a half of the payment]? — During [his] lifetime she would have only a half, whereas after death she would have the whole.[11] Or if you wish you may say that both this [Baraitha][12] and the other follow the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel,[10] but while one[12] deals with the increase in the value [of the woman caused] by the embryos, the other[13] refers to the compensation for the loss of the value of the embryos [themselves].[14] I would here ask, why not derive from the rule[12] regarding the increased value due to the embryos the other rule regarding the value of the embryos themselves?[15] And again, why not derive from the ruling[12] of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel also the ruling of the Rabbis?[16] — It may, however, be said that this could not be done. For as regards the increased value [of the woman due] to the embryos, seeing that she has some hold upon it,[17] she can acquire a title to the whole of it,[18] whereas in regard to the compensation for the embryos themselves, on which she has no hold,[19] she can acquire no title to them at all.

R. Yeba the Elder enquired of R. Nahman: If a man has taken possession of the deeds of a proselyte,[20] what is the legal position? [Shall we say that] a man who takes possession of a deed does so with intent to acquire the land [specified in the document], but has thereby not taken possession of the land, nor does he even acquire title to the deed, since his intent was not to obtain the deed?[21] Or [shall we] perhaps [say] that his intent was to obtain the deed also?[21] — He[22] said to him: Tell me, Sir, could he need it to cover the mouth of his flask? — He[23] replied: Yes indeed, [he could need it] to cover[the flask].

Rabbah stated: If the pledge of an Israelite is in the hands of a proselyte [creditor], and the proselyte dies [without any legal issue] and another Israelite comes along and takes possession of it,[20] it would be taken away from him, the reason being that as the proselyte has died, the lien he had upon the pledge has disappeared. But if a pledge of a proselyte [debtor] is in the hands of an Israelite, and the proselyte dies and another Israelite comes along and takes possession of it, the creditor would become owner of the pledge to the extent of the amount due to him, while the one who took possession of it would own the balance. Why should the premises [of the creditor where the pledge was kept] not render him the owner [of the whole pledge]? Did not R. Jose b. Hanina say that a man's premises effect a legal transfer [of ownerless property placed there] even without his knowledge? — It may be said that we are dealing here with a case where the creditor was not there.[24] For it is only where he himself[25] is there,[24] in which case should he so desire he would be able to take possession of it,[26] that his premises could [act on his behalf and] effect the transfer, whereas where he himself[25] was absent, in which case were he to desire to acquire title to it[26] he would have been unable to take possession of it, his premises could similarly not effect a transfer. But the law is that it is only where it [the pledge] was not [kept] in the [creditor's] premises that he would acquire no title to it.[27]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN DIGS A PIT IN PRIVATE GROUND AND OPENS IT ON TO A PUBLIC PLACE, OR IF HE DIGS IT IN PUBLIC GROUND AND OPENS IT ON TO PRIVATE PROPERTY, OR AGAIN, IF HE DIGS IT IN PRIVATE GROUND AND OPENS IT ON TO THE PRIVATE PROPERTY OF ANOTHER, HE BECOMES LIABLE[28] [FOR ANY DAMAGE THAT MAY RESULT].

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man digs a pit on private ground and opens it on to a public place, he becomes liable, and this is the Pit of which the Torah[29] speaks. So R. Ishmael. R. Akiba, however, says: When a man abandons his premises without, however, abandoning his pit, this is the Pit of which the Torah[29] speaks. Rabbah thereupon said: In the case of a pit on public ground there is no difference of opinion that there should be liability. What is the reason? — Scripture says, If a man open or if a man dig.[29] Now, if for mere opening there is liability, should there not be so all the more in the case of digging? [Why then mention digging at all?] Scripture must therefore mean to imply that it is on account of the act of opening and on account of the act of digging that the liability is at all brought upon him.[30] A difference arises

---

(1) In accordance with the view of Rabbah.

(2) In which Rabbah and R. Hisda differ.

(3) And a miscarriage resulted.

(4) I.e. if the blow was given after the death of the proselyte.
(5) I.e., whether the mother acquires a title to the embryos on the death of her husband, the proselyte, or not.
(6) He therefore followed the view of the former Baraitha laying down liability.
(7) Stating exemption.
(8) I.e., no contradiction between the two Baraithas, which do not deal with the payment for the loss of the embryos but with the payment for the loss of the increment in the value of the woman herself due to the embryos.
(9) Maintaining that the payment for the loss of the increment in the value of the woman herself also belongs to the husband, so that where he was a proselyte dying without issue there would be no liability at all upon the defendant.
(10) According to whom the payment for the loss of the increment in the value of the woman herself has to be shared by the mother and father, so that where he was a proselyte dying without issue she will surely not forfeit her due, but as to the embryos, all agree that the woman acquires in no circumstance title to them.
(11) For since the mother is a joint plaintiff with her husband regarding this payment, where he was a proselyte dying without issue she will remain the sole plaintiff and thus be entitled to the full payment.
(12) Stating liability.
(13) Stating exemption.
(14) To which the mother was never a plaintiff.
(15) That payment should be made to the mother, in contradiction to the view of R. Hisda.
(16) [That she should have the whole where the proselyte husband is no longer alive.]
(17) Even during the lifetime of her husband.
(18) At the demise of the proselyte without any legal issue.
(19) V. p. 282, n. 10.
(20) V. p. 282, n. 11.
(21) I.e., the mere value of the paper of the deed.
(22) R. Nahman.
(23) R. Yeba.
(24) [I.e., 'in town' (Rashi), or (according to Tosaf.) 'beside the premises,' v. B.M. 11a: 'non-guarded premises confer title only when the owner is standing beside them.']
(25) I.e., the owner of the premises.
(26) I.e., the pledge or any other ownerless article.
(27) For where the pledge was kept in the creditor's premises at the time of the demise of the proselyte without issue, the creditor would acquire title to the whole of it, though the creditor were out of town (Rashi). [Tosaf. renders, 'where the creditor was not beside the premises.']
(28) V. Gemara.
(29) Ex. XXI, 33-34
(30) I.e. where the ground of the pit that did the actual damage was not his at all.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 50a

only in regard to a pit on his own premises. R. Akiba maintains that a pit in his own premises should also involve liability, since it says, The owner of the pit,[1] which shows that the Divine Law is speaking of a pit which has an owner; R. Ishmael on the other hand maintaining that this simply refers to the perpetrator of the nuisance.[2] But what then did R. Akiba mean by saying, '[When a man abandons his premises without, however, abandoning his pit] — this is the Pit stated in the Torah'?[3] — [He meant that] this is the Pit with reference to which Scripture first began to lay down[4] the rules for compensation [in the case of Pit]. R. Joseph said: in the case of a pit on private ground there is no difference of opinion that there should be liability. What is the reason? Divine Law says, the owner of the pit, to show that it is a pit having an owner with which we are dealing.[5] They differ only in the case of a pit in public ground. R. Ishmael maintains that a pit on public ground should also involve liability, since it says, 'If a open . . . and if a man dig . . .' Now, if for mere opening there is liability, should there not all the more be so in the case of digging? Scripture therefore must mean to imply that it is on account of the act of opening and on account of the act of digging that the liability is at all brought upon him.[6] And R. Akiba? [He might reply that] both terms[7] required to be explicitly mentioned. For if the Divine Law had said only 'If a man open' it might perhaps have been said that it was only in the case of opening that covering up would suffice [as a precaution], whereas in the case of digging covering up would not suffice, unless the pit was also filled up. If [on the other hand] the Divine Law had said only If a man dig it might have been said that it was only where he dug it that he ought to cover it, as he actually made the pit, whereas where he merely opened it, in which case he did not actually make the pit, it might have been thought that he was not bound even to cover it. Hence it was necessary to tell us [that this was not the case but that the two actions are on a par in all respects]. But what then did R. Ishmael mean by saying, [If a man digs a pit in private ground and opens it on to a public place, he comes liable] and this is the Pit of which the Torah[8] speaks?[9] — This is the Pit with reference to which Scripture opens[10] the rules concerning damage [caused by Pit].

An objection was raised [from the following]: If a man digs a pit in public ground and opens it to private property there is no liability, in spite of the fact that he has no right to do so as hollows must not be made underneath a public thoroughfare. But if he digs pits, ditches or caves in private premises and opens them on to a public place, there would be liability. If, again, a man digs pits in private ground abutting on a public thoroughfare, such as e.g., workmen digging foundations, there would be no liability. R. Jose b. Judah, however, says there is liability unless he makes a partition of ten handbreaths in height or unless he keeps the pit away from the place where men pass as well as from the place where animals pass at a distance of at least four handbreadths.[11] Now this is so only in the case of foundations,[12] but were the digging made not for foundations there would apparently be liability. In accordance with whose view[13] is this? All would be well if we follow Rabbah, since the opening clause[14] would be in accordance with R. Ishmael and the later clause[15] in accordance with R. Akiba. But if we follow R. Joseph, it is true there would be no difficulty about the concluding clause[15] which would represent a unanimous view, but what about the prior clause[14] which would be in accordance neither with R. Ishmael nor with R. Akiba?[16] — R. Joseph, however, might reply: The whole text represents a unanimous view, for the prior clause deals with a case where the man abandoned neither his premises nor his pit.[17] R. Ashi thereupon said: Since according to R. Joseph you have explained the text to represent a unanimous view, so also according to Rabbah you need not interpret it as representing two opposing views of Tannaim. For as the prior clause[14] was in accordance with R. Ishmael, the later clause would also be in accordance with R. Ishmael; and the statement that this ruling holds good only in the case of foundations whereas if the digging is not for foundations there would be liability, refers to an instance where e.g., the digging was widened out into actual public ground.[18]

An objection was [again] raised: 'If a man digs a pit in private ground and opens it on to a public place he becomes liable, but if he digs it in private ground abutting on a public thoroughfare he would not be liable.' No difficulty arises if we follow Rabbah, since the whole text[19] is in accordance with R. Ishmael. But if we follow R. Joseph, no difficulty, it is true, arises in the prior clause[20] which would be in accordance with R. Ishmael, but what about the concluding clause[19] which would be in accordance neither with R. Ishmael nor with R. Akiba?[21] — He might reply that it deals with digging for foundations,[22] in regard to which the ruling is unanimous.

Our Rabbis taught:[23] If a man dug [a well] and left it open, but transferred it to the public,[24] he would be exempt,[25] whereas if he dug it and left it open without dedicating it to the public he would be liable. Such also was the custom of Nehonia the digger of wells, ditches and caves; he used to dig wells[26] and leave them open and dedicate them to the public.[24] When this matter became known to the Sages they observed, 'This man[27] has fulfilled this Halachah'. Only this Halachah and no more? — Read therefore 'this Halachah also'.

Our Rabbis taught: It happened that the daughter of Nehonia the digger of wells once fell into a deep pit. When people came and informed R. Hanina b. Dosa[28] [about it], during the first hour he said to them ‘She is well’, during the second he said to them, ‘She is still well’, but in the third hour he said to them, ‘She has by now come out [of the pit].’ They then asked her, ‘ Who brought you up?’ — Her answer was: ‘A ram[29] [providentially] came to my help[30] with an old man[31] leading it.’ They then asked R. Hanina b. Dosa, ‘Are you a prophet?’ He said to them, ‘I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. I only exclaimed: Shall the thing to which that pious man has devoted his labour become a stumbling-block to his seed?’[32] R. Aha, however, said; Nevertheless, his[33] son died of thirst, [thus bearing out what the Scripture] says, And it shall be very tempestuous round about him,[34] which teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, is particular with those round about Him[35] even for matters as light as a single hair.[36] R. Nehonia[37] derived the same lesson from the verse,[38] God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints and to be had in reverence of all them that are about Him. R. Hanina said: If a man says that the Holy One, blessed be He, is lax in the execution of justice, his life shall be outlawed, for it is stated, He is the Rock, His work is perfect; for all His ways are judment.[39] But R. Hana, or as others read R. Samuel b. Nahmani, said: Why is it written[40]

---

(1) Ex. XXI, 34

(2) But did not mean the legal owner of it.

(3) Since even according to R. Akiba the Torah deals with Pit on public ground.

(4) In verse 34.

(5) [As against R. Ishmael who requires the pit itself to be abandoned.]

(6) V. p. 284, n. 4.

(7) Of opening and of digging.

(8) V. p. 284, n. 3.

(9) Since even according to R. Ishmael the Torah deals with Pit on private ground.

(10) I.e., in verse 33.

(11) Rashal reads ‘cubits’.

(12) Which is a general practice.

(13) Either with that of R. Ishmael or with that of R. Akiba.

(14) Stating exemption in the case of Pit open to private ground.

(15) Implying liability in the case of Pit on private ground.

(16) For they both according to R. Joseph maintain liability for Pit on private ground.

(17) In which case the defendant is entitled to put in a defence of trespass on his ground against the plaintiff.

(18) But if the digging was not widened out into actual public ground there would be no difference as to the purpose of the digging for there would be exemption in all cases.

(19) V. p. 286, n. 5.

(20) Stating liability in the case of Pit on public ground.

(21) V. p. 286, n. 7.

(22) V. p. 286, n. 3.

(23) Tosef. B.K. VI.

(24) For the general use of the water.

(25) As it became communal property.

(26) Thus to provide water for the pilgrims who travelled to Jerusalem on the three festivals in accordance with Ex. XXXIV, 23.

(27) I.e. Nehonia.

(28) [On R. Hanina b. Dosa as a ‘man of deeds’ whose acts were viewed as acts of human love and sympathy rather than miracles, v. BŸchler, Types, p. 100ff.]

(29) The ram of Isaac, cf. Gen. XXII,13 and R.H. 16a.

(30) Lit., ‘was appointed for me.’

(31) Abraham.

(32) V. J. Shek. V. 1.

(33) Nehonia's.

(34) Ps. L, 3.

(35) I.e. the pious devoted to Him.
(36) The Hebrew term for 'tempestuous' is homonymous with that for 'hair'.
(37) 'Hanina' occurs in Yeb. 121b.
(38) Ps. LXXXIX, 8.
(39) Deut. XXXII, 4.
(40) Ex. XXXIV, 6.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 50b

'Long of sufferings'[1] and not 'Long of suffering'?[2] [It must mean,] 'Long of sufferings' to both the righteous[3] and the wicked.[4]

Our Rabbis taught: A man should not remove stones from his ground on to public ground. A certain man[5] was removing stones from his ground on to public ground when a pious man found him doing so and said to him, 'Fool,[6] why do you remove stones from ground which is not yours to ground which is yours?' The man laughed at him. Some days later he had to sell his field, and when he was walking on that public ground he stumbled over those stones. He then said, 'How well did that pious man say to me, "Why do you remove stones from ground which is not yours to ground which is yours?"'

MISHNAH. IF A MAN DIGS A PIT ON PUBLIC GROUND AND AN OX OR AN ASS FALLS INTO IT, HE BECOMES LIABLE. WHETHER HE DUG A PIT, OR A DITCH, OR A CAVE, TRENCHES, OR WEDGE-LIKE DITCHES, HE WOULD BE LIABLE. IF SO WHY IS PIT MENTIONED [IN SCRIPTURE]?[7] [TO TEACH THAT] JUST AS PIT CAN CAUSE DEATH BECAUSE IT IS USUALLY TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP], SO ALSO ALL [OTHER SIMILAR NUISANCES] MUST BE SUCH AS CAN CAUSE DEATH, [I.E.] TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP]. WHERE, HOWEVER, THEY WERE LESS THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP], AND AN OX AR AN ASS FELL INTO THEM AND DIED, THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION.[8] IF THEY WERE ONLY INJURED BY THEM, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY.

GEMARA. Rab stated: The liability imposed by the Torah in the case of Pit[9] is for the unhealthy air created by excavation, but not for the blow given by it. It could hence he inferred that he held that so far as the blow was concerned it was the ground of the public that caused the damage.[10] Samuel, however, said: For the unhealthy air, and, ˆ plus forte raison, for the blow. And should you say that it was for the blow only that the Torah imposed liability but not for the unhealthy air, (you have to bear in mind that] for the Torah[11] a pit is a pit, even where it is full of pads of wool. What is the practical difference between them? — There is a practical difference between them. Where a man made a mound on public ground: according to Rab there would in the case of a mound be no liability,[12] whereas according to Samuel there would in the case of a mound also be liability. What was the reason of Rab?[13] Because Scripture says, And it fall,[14] [implying that there would be no liability] unless where it fell in the usual way of falling.[15] Samuel [on the other hand maintained that the words] And it fall imply anything [which is like falling].[16]

We have learnt: IF SO WHY WAS PIT MENTIONED [IN SCRIPTURE]?[17] [TO TEACH THAT] JUST AS PIT CAN CAUSE DEATH BECAUSE IT IS USUALLY TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP], SO ALSO ALL [OTHER SIMILAR NUISANCES] MUST BE SUCH AS CAN CAUSE DEATH, [I.E.] TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP]. Now this creates no difficulty if we follow Samuel, since the phrase SO ALSO ALL would imply mounds also. But according to Rab, what does the phrase SO ALSO ALL imply?[17] — It was meant to imply trenches and wedge-like ditches. But are trenches and wedge-like ditches not explicitly stated in the text? — They were [first] mentioned and then the reason for them explained.

What need was there to mention all the things specified in the text? — They all required [to be explicitly stated]. For if only a pit had been explicitly mentioned, I might have said that it was only a pit where in ten handbreadths [of depth] there could be [sufficient] unhealthy air [to cause death] on account of its being small and circular, whereas in the case of a ditch which is long I might have thought that [even] in ten handbreadths of depth there would still not be [sufficient] unhealthy air [to cause death]. If [again] only a ditch had been mentioned explicitly, I might have said that it was only a ditch where in ten handbreadths [of depth] there could be [sufficient] unhealthy air [to cause death] on account of its being small, whereas in a cave which is square I might have thought that [even] in ten handbreadths of depth there would still not be [sufficient] unhealthy air [to cause death]. Again, if only a cave had been mentioned explicitly, I might have said that it was only a cave where in ten handbreadths [of depth] there could be [sufficient] unhealthy air [to kill] on account of its being covered, whereas in the case of trenches which are uncovered I might have thought that [even] in ten handbreadths [of depth] there would still not be [sufficient] unhealthy air [to cause death]. Further, if only trenches had been stated explicitly, I might have said that it was only trenches where in ten handbreadths [of depth] there could be [sufficient] unhealthy air [to cause death] on account of their not being wider at the top than at the bottom, whereas in wedgelike ditches which are wider at the top than at the bottom I might have said that [even] in ten handbreadths [of depth] there would still not be [sufficient] unhealthy air [to cause death]. It was therefore necessary to let us know [that all of them are on a par in this respect].[18]

We have learnt: WHERE, HOWEVER, THEY WERE LESS THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP] AND AN OX OR AN ASS FELL INTO THEM AND DIED, THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION.[19] IF THEY WERE ONLY INJURED BY THEM THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY. Now what could be the reason that where an ox or an ass fell into them and died there would be exemption? Is it not because the blow was insufficient [to cause death]?[20] — No, it is because there was no unhealthy air there. But if so, why where the animal was merely injured in such a pit should there be liability, seeing that there was no unhealthy air there? — I might reply that there was not unhealthy air there sufficient to kill, but there was unhealthy air there sufficient to injure.

A certain ox fell into a pond which supplied water to the neighbouring fields. The owner hastened to slaughter it, but R. Nahman declared it trefa.[21] Said R. Nahman: ‘Had the owner of this ox taken a kab[22] of flour and come to the house of study, where he would have learnt that "If the ox lasted at least twenty-four hours [before being slaughtered] it would be kasher",[23] I would not have caused him to lose the ox which was worth several kabs.’ This seems to show that R. Nahman held that a deadly blow can be inflicted even by an excavation less than ten handbreadths deep.[24]

Raba raised an objection to R. Nahman: WHERE, HOWEVER, THEY WERE LESS THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP] AND AN OX OR AND ASS FELL INTO THEM AND DIED, THERE SHOULD BE EXEMPTION. Now, is not the reason of this [exemption] because there was no deadly blow there?[25]

---

(1) אפים, the plural.

(2) אף, the singular.

(3) By not rewarding them in this world for their good deeds.

(4) By not punishing them in this world for their wicked deeds.

(5) B.K. Tosef. II.

(6) Raca.

(7) Ex. XXI, 33.

(8) As the death of the animal should in this case not be wholly imputed to the pit.

(9) On public ground.

(10) For which the defendant has not to be liable.

(11) Lit., ‘the Torah testified that etc.’, since ‘pit’ is left undefined.
(12) As no unhealthy air was created and the blow was given by the public ground.
(13) Is not a mound a nuisance?
(14) Ex. XXI, 33.
(15) Excepting thus a mound.
(16) I.e. including mounds.
(17) Since according to him there would be no liability for mounds.
(18) That the depth of ten handbreadths is sufficient to create enough unhealthy air to cause death in any one of these excavations.
(19) V. p. 289, n. 2.
(20) Though the air was not less unhealthy there will be no liability, thus contradicting the views of both Rab and Samuel.
(21) I.e. forbidden to be eaten in accordance with dietary laws; for the term cf. Ex. XII, 30 and Glossary.
(22) [(V. Glos.), i.e., provision for his journey.]
(23) Cf. Hul. 51b.
(24) For the pond in which the ox fell was only six handbreadths deep.
(25) Thus disproving the view of R. Nahman.

No; it is because there was no unhealthy air there. But if so, why where it was injured in such a pit would there be liability since there was no unhealthy air there? — He replied: There was not unhealthy air there sufficient to kill, but there was unhealthy air there enough to injure.

A further objection was raised: The scaffold [for stoning] was of the height of two men's statures.[1] And it has been taught regarding this: When you add the stature of the convict there will be there the height of three statures. Now, if you assume that a fall can be fatal even from a height of less than ten handbreadths, why was such a great height as that necessary? — But even according to your argument, why not make the height ten handbreadths only? This must therefore be explained in accordance with R. Nahman, for R. Nahman stated that Rabbah b. Abbuha had said: Scripture says, And thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself,[2] [which implies], ‘thou shalt choose for a convict the easiest possible execution.’[3] But if so, why not raise it still higher? — He would then become disfigured altogether.

A further objection was raised: If any man fall from thence;[4] ‘from thence’ but not into it. How is that so? Where the public road was ten handbreadths higher than the roof, and a man might fall from the former on to the latter, there is no liability [in respect of a parapet], but if the public road was ten handbreadths lower than the roof, and a man might fall from the latter on to the former, that there will be liability [in respect of a parapet]. Now, if you assume that a fall could be fatal even from a height of less than ten handbreadths, why should it be necessary to have the public road lower by [full] ten handbreadths?[5] — It was said in answer:[6] There is a difference in the case of a house, since if it is less than ten handbreadths [in height] it could not be designated ‘house’.[7] But if so, even now when from the outside it is ten handbreadths high, were you to deduct from that the ceiling and the plaster, from the inside it would surely not have the height of ten handbreadths?[8] — To this it was said in reply: [We are dealing here with a case] where, e.g., the owner of the house sank the floor from within.[9] But if so, even where the height from the outside was not ten handbreadths, it could still be possible that from the inside it was ten handbreadths, as for instance where he sank the floor still more? — The reason of R. Nahman must therefore have been this: he considered that from the abdomen of the ox to the level of the ground must be [at least] four handbreadths, and the pond feeding the fields must be six handbreadths;[10] this makes ten handbreadths, with the result that when the ox received the blow it was from the height of ten handbreadths that the blow was given.[11] But why then does the Mishnah say: JUST AS PIT CAN CAUSE DEATH BECAUSE IT IS USUALLY

TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP], SO ALSO ALL [OTHER SIMILAR NUISANCES] MUST BE SUCH AS CAN CAUSE DEATH, [I.E.] TEN HANDBREADTHS [DEEP]? Should not six handbreadths be enough?[12] — We could reply that the Mishnah deals with a case where the ox rolled itself over into the pit.[13] MISHNAH. WHERE THERE IS A PIT [IN CHARGE OF] TWO PARTNERS, IF THE FIRST ONE PASSES BY AND DOES NOT COVER IT, AND THE SECOND ONE ALSO [PASSES BY AND DOES] NOT COVER IT,[14] THE SECOND WOULD BE LIABLE.

GEMARA. I would here ask, how can we picture a pit in charge of two partners? True, we can understand this if we take the view of R. Akiba, who said that a pit in private ground would involve liability,[15] in which case such a pit could be found where they jointly own the ground and also a pit in it, and while they abandoned the ground [round about],[16] they did not abandon the pit itself. But if we take the view that a pit on private ground would involve exemption,[15] in which case liability could be found only where it was on public ground, how then is it possible for a pit in public ground to be in charge of two partners?[17] [For if you say that] both of them appointed an agent and said to him: 'Go forth and dig for us', and he went and dug for them, [we reply that] there can be no agency for a sinful act.[18] If again you say that the one[19] dug five handbreadths and the other one[19] dug another five handbreadths, [then we would point out that] the act of the former has become eliminated?[20] It is true that according to Rabbi,[21] we can imagine a pit [in charge of two partners] in respect of mere injury.[22] But in respect of death even according to Rabbi, or in respect whether of death or of mere injury[22] according to the Rabbis,[21] where could we find such a pit? — R. Johanan thereupon said: [We find such a pit] where e.g., both of them removed a layer of ground at the same time and thereby made the pit ten handbreadths deep.[23]

What opinion of Rabbi and what opinion of the Rabbis [was referred to above]? — It was taught:[24] Where one had dug a pit of nine handbreadths [deep] and another one came along and completed it to a depth of ten handbreadths, the latter would be liable.[25] Rabbi says: The last one is responsible in[26] cases of death,[27] but both of them in cases of injury.[28] What was the reason of the Rabbis? — Scripture says; If a man shall open . . . or if a man shall dig . . .[29] Now if for mere opening there is liability, should there not be all the more so in the case of digging? [Why then mention digging at all?] It must be in order to lay down the rule [also] for [the case of] one person digging [in a pit] after another,[30] [namely,] that [in such a case] the act of the one who dug first[31] is regarded as eliminated.[32] And Rabbi?[33] — He might rejoin that it was necessary to mention both terms,[34] as explained elsewhere.[35] And do not the Rabbis also hold that it was necessary?[35] — The reason of the Rabbis must therefore have been that Scripture says, If a man shall dig [indicating that] one person but not two persons [should be liable for one pit]. Rabbi, on the other hand, maintained that [the expression 'a man'] was needed to teach that if a man shall dig a pit [there would be liability] but not where an ox [dug] a 'pit'.[36] And the Rabbis?[37] [They might point out] 'a man . . . a pit' is inserted twice [in the same context].[29] And Rabbi? — He [could rejoin that] having inserted these words in the first text, Scripture retained them in the second also.

Now [according to the Rabbis who hold that Scripture intended to make only one person liable], whence could it be proved that it is the last person [that dug] who should be liable? Why not make the first person [who dug] liable? — Let not this enter your mind, since Scripture has stated, And the dead shall be his[38] [implying that the liability rests upon him] who made the pit capable of killing. But was not this [verse] 'And the dead shall be his' required for the lesson drawn by Raba? For did Raba not say:[39] If a sacred ox which has become disqualified [for the altar][40] falls into a pit, there would be exemption, as Scripture says 'And the dead beast shall be his' [implying that it is only] in the case of an ox whose carcass could be his[41] [that there would be liability]?[42] — To this I might rejoin: Can you not [at the same time] automatically derive from it that it is the man who made the pit capable of killing with whom we are dealing?

Our Rabbis taught: If one person has dug a pit to a depth of ten handbreadths and another person comes along and completes it to a depth of twenty, after which a third person comes along and completes it to a depth of thirty, they all would be liable. A contradiction was here pointed out:[43] If one person dug a pit ten handbreadths deep, and another came along and lined it with plaster and cemented it,[44] the second would be liable.

---

(1) Sanh. 45a.

(2) Lev. XIX, 18.

(3) V. Sanh. ibid.

(4) Deut. XXII, 8.

(5) Why should there be no liability to construct a parapet even where the public road was lower by less than ten handbreadths.

(6) Lit., 'He said to him'.

(7) Cf. B.B. 7a.

(8) In which case it would still not be termed house. Why then a parapet?

(9) So that the vertical height inside was not less than ten handbreadths.

(10) V. p. 292, n. 2.

(11) And as a fall from the height of ten handbreadths can be fatal R. Nahman had to declare the ox trefa.

(12) For from the abdomen of the ox to the level of the ground there are surely four handbreadths.

(13) But where the ox fell while walking, even where the pit was only six handbreadths deep the blow would be fatal.

(14) And damage occurred later.

(15) Supra 50a.

(16) In which case they cannot plead trespass on the part of the plaintiff as defence.

(17) For it is the one who dug it that should be responsible.

(18) It will accordingly be the agent and not the principal who will have to be subject to the penalty; cf. B.M. 10b.

(19) Partner.

(20) For it was the latter's act that made the pit complete and capable of causing all kinds of damage.

(21) V. p. 295.

(22) V. the discussion later.

(23) In which case they both made it complete and capable of causing all kinds of damage.

(24) V. supra 10a.

(25) V. p. 294, n. 7.

(26) Lit., 'after the last for'.

(27) For without the latter the pit would have been unable to cause death.

(28) For even without the latter the pit would have been able to cause injury.

(29) Ex. XXI, 33.

(30) The verse would thus imply a case where after one man opened the pit of nine handbreadths deep another man dug an additional handbreadth and thus made it a pit of ten handbreadths deep.

(31) The nine handbreadths.

(32) So that he should become released from any responsibility.

(33) How does he interpret the verse?

(34) Of opening and of digging.

(35) Supra p. 285.

(36) V. supra p. 272.

(37) Whence do they derive this latter deduction?

(38) Ex. XXI, 34.

(39) Infra p. 310.

(40) As it became blemished.

(41) I.e., could be used by him as food for dogs and like purposes.

(42) Excepting thus a scared ox falling into a pit and dying there, as no use could lawfully be made of its carcass.

(43) From the following Baraitha.

(44) Who thus made its width smaller and the air closer and more harmful.

Are we to say that the former statement[1] follows the view of Rabbi[2] whereas the latter[3] follows that of the Rabbis?[3] — R. Zebid thereupon said that the one statement as well as the other could be regarded as following the view of the Rabbis.[3] For even there [in their own case] the Rabbis would not say that the last digger should be liable, save in a case where the first digger did not make the pit of the minimum depth capable of killing, whereas [in this case] where the first digger made the pit of the minimum depth capable of killing even the Rabbis would agree that all the diggers should be liable.[4] But, [what of] the case of [the second] lining it with plaster and cementing it,[5] where the first digger made the pit of the minimum depth capable of killing, and yet it was said that the second would be liable? — It may be answered that the case there was where the unhealthy air was not sufficient to kill,[6] and it was the other person who, by diminishing the size of the pit increased the dangerous effect of the air so as to make it capable of killing. Some report that R. Zebid said that the one statement as well as the other could he regarded as following the view of Rabbi.[7] About the statement that they would all be liable there is [on this supposition] no difficulty. And as for the other statement that the second digger would be liable, this refers to a case where e.g., the unhealthy air was sufficient neither to kill nor to injure, and it was the other person who by diminishing the size of the pit increased the dangerous effect of the air so as to make it capable of both killing and injuring.[8]

Raba said: The case of a man putting a stone round the mouth of a pit and thereby completing it to a depth of ten handbreadths is one which brings us face to face with the difference of opinion between Rabbi and the Rabbis.[9] Is this not obvious? — You might perhaps think that [the difference of opinion] was only where the increase in depth was made at the bottom, in which case it was the unhealthy air added by the second digger that caused death, whereas where the increase was made from the top,[10] in which case it was not the unhealthy air added by him that caused the death, it might have been said that there was no difference of opinion.[11] We are therefore told[12] [that this is not the case].

Raba raised the question: Where [the second comer] filled in the one handbreadth [which he had previously dug] with earth, or where he removed the stones [which he had previously put round the mouth of the pit], what would be the legal position? Are we to say that he has undone what he had previously done,[13] or rather perhaps that the act of the first digger had already been merged [in the act of the second] and the whole pit had since then been in the charge of the second? — Let this remain undecided.

Rabbab b. Bar Hanah said that Samuel b. Martha stated: Where a pit is eight handbreadths deep, but two handbreadths out of these are [full] of water, there would be liability,[14] the reason being that each handbreadth [full] of water is equivalent [in its capacity to cause death] to two handbreadths without water. The question was thereupon raised: Where a pit is of nine handbreadths but one of these is full of water, what should be the law? Should we say that since there is not so much water there, there is not [so much] unhealthy air,[15] or rather that since the pit is deeper there is there [a quantity of] unhealthy air?[16] [Again], where the pit is of seven handbreadths and out of these three handbreadths are full of water, what would be the legal position? Should we say that since there is much water there, the unhealthy air is there [in proportion],[16] or rather that since it is not deep, there is no [great quantity of] unhealthy air there?[15] — Let these queries remain undecided.

R. Shezbi inquired of Rabbah: If the second digger makes it wider, what would be the law? — He replied: Does he not thereby diminish the unhealthy air?[17] Said the other to him: On the contrary, does he not increase the risk of injury?[18] — R. Ashi thereupon said: We have to consider whether [the animal] died through bad air, in which case [the second digger could not be responsible as] he diminished the unhealthy air, or whether it died through the fall, in which case [the second digger should be responsible as] he increased the risk of injury. Some report that R. Ashi said: We have to see whether [the animal] fell from this side [which was extended], in which [case the second digger would be responsible as] he increased the risk of injury, or whether it fell from the other side, in which case [the second digger would not be to blame, as] he diminished the unhealthy air in the pit.

It was stated: In regard to a pit as deep as it is wide [there is a difference of opinion between] Rabbah and R. Joseph, both of whom made their respective statements in the name of Rabbah b. Bar Hanah who said it in the name of R. Mani. One said that there is always unhealthy air in a pit unless where its width is greater than its depth,[19] the other said that there could never be unhealthy air in a pit unless where its depth was greater than its width.[20]

IF THE FIRST ONE[21] PASSED BY AND DID NOT COVER IT . . . From what point of time will the first one[21] be exempt from responsibility? — [There was a difference of opinion here between] Rabbah and R. Joseph, both of whom made their respective statements in the name of Rabbah b. Bar Hanah who said it in the name of R. Mani. One said, from the moment when the first partner leaves the second in the act of using the well; the other, from the moment when he hands over the cover of the well to him. [The same difference[22] is found] between the following Tannaim: If one [partner] was drawing water from a well and the other came along and said to him, 'Leave it to me as I will also draw water', as soon as the first left the second in the act of using it he would become exempt [from any responsibility]. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: [The exemption commences] from the time that the first hands over the cover to the second. In regard to what principle do they differ? — R. Eliezer b. Jacob held that there is bererah[23] [so that] the one [partner] was drawing water from his own[24] and so also the other [partner] was drawing the water from his own,[25] whereas the Rabbis maintained that there is no bererah.[26] Rabina thereupon said: They[27] have followed here the same line of reasoning as elsewhere, as we have learnt, Where partners have vowed not to derive benefit from one another they would not be allowed to enter premises jointly owned by them. R. Eliezer b. Jacob, however, says: The one partner enters his own and the other partner enters his own.[28] [Now, it was asked there,] in regard to what principle did they differ? — R. Eliezer b. Jacob held that there is bererah so that the one partner would thus be entering his own and the other partner would similarly be entering his own, whereas the Rabbis maintained that there is no bererah.

R. Eleazar said: If a man sells a pit to another, as soon as he hands over the cover of the pit to him, the conveyance is complete. What are the circumstances? If money was paid, why was the conveyance not completed by the money?[29] If possession was taken [of the pit], why was the conveyance not completed by possession?[29] — In fact, we suppose possession to have been taken [of the pit], and it was still requisite for the seller to say to the buyer, 'Go forth, take possession and become the owner',[30] but as soon as he handed over the cover to him, this was equivalent [in the eyes of the law] to his saying to him, 'Go forth, take possession and complete the conveyance.'

R. Joshua b. Levi said: If a person sells a house to another

---

(1) Making them all liable.

(2) Who in the case of mere injury makes them all liable.

(3) Making the second liable in all cases.

(4) Hence the liability upon all of them in the former Baraitha.

(5) V. p. 296, n. 7.

(6) As where its width was more than its depth.

(7) V. p. 296, n. 9.

(8) In which case it stands to reason that the second person only should be liable.

(9) As to whether the second person or both of them would be liable in cases of injury.

(10) As in the case stated by Raba.

(11) And that according to both Rabbi and the Rabbis the second person should not be liable.
(12) By Raba.
(13) And thus released himself from further responsibility.
(14) If an animal fell in and was killed.
(15) And should therefore be subject to the law applicable to a pit of less than ten handbreadths deep.
(16) And should thus be equal to that of a pit ten handbreadths deep.
(17) What liability had he thus incurred?
(18) On account of which he should surely bear responsibility.
(19) Implying that where the width is just equal to the depth there would still be unhealthy air there.
(20) But where the depth just equalled the width there would be no unhealthy air there.
(21) Of the partners.
(22) Between Rabbah and R. Joseph.
(23) I.e., retrospective designation, so that a subsequent selection or definition determines retrospectively a previous state of affairs that was undefined in its nature.
(24) Though this water which he subsequently drew was by no means defined at the time when the partnership was formed.
(25) So that one partner does not use the water of the other to become thereby a borrower of it and thus enter into responsibility regarding it.
(26) So that the water drawn by each of them consists of two parts: one from his own and the other from that of his fellow-partner, with reference to which he in the position of borrower, assuming thus full responsibility also for the part of the partner who is the lender.
(27) The Rabbis and R. Eliezer b. Jacob.
(28) And are consequently not deriving any benefit from one another. (Ned. 45b).
(29) In accordance with Kid. I, 5.
(30) B.B. 53a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 52a

as soon as he hands over the key to him, the conveyance is complete. What are the circumstances? If money was previously paid, why was the conveyance not completed by the money? If possession was taken, why was the conveyance not completed by possession? — We suppose that in fact possession was taken [of the house], and it was still requisite for the seller to say to the buyer, 'Go forth, take possession and become the owner', but as soon as he handed over the key to him, this was equivalent [in the eye of the law] to his saying to him, 'Go forth, take possession and complete the conveyance.'

Resh Lakish said in the name of R. Jannai: If a man sells a herd to his neighbour, as soon as he has handed over the mashkokith[1] to him, the conveyance is complete. What are the circumstances? If possession by pulling [has already taken place], why was the conveyance not completed by the act of pulling? If delivery [of the flock has already taken place], why was the conveyance not completed by the act of delivery?[2] — We suppose in fact that possession by pulling [has already taken place], and it was still necessary for the seller to say to the buyer, 'Go forth, take possession by pulling and become the owner,'[3] but as soon as he handed over the mashkokith to him, this was equivalent [in the eye of the law] to his saying, 'Go forth, take possession by pulling and complete the conveyance.' What is mashkokith? — Here[4] they explained it: 'The bell'. R. Jacob, however, said: 'The goat that leads the herd.' So too a certain Galilean[5] in one of his discourses before R. Hisda [said] that when the shepherd becomes angry with his flock he appoints for a leader one which is blind.

MISHNAH. IF THE FIRST ONE[6] COVERED IT AND THE SECOND ONE CAME ALONG AND FOUND IT OPEN AND [NEVERTHELESS] DID NOT COVER IT, THE SECOND WOULD BE LIABLE. IF [AN OWNER OF A PIT] HAD COVERED IT PROPERLY, AND AN

OX OR AN ASS [NEVERTHELESS] FELL INTO IT AND WAS KILLED, HE WOULD BE EXEMPT.[7] BUT IF HE DID NOT COVER IT PROPERLY, AND AN OX OR ASS FELL INTO IT AND WAS KILLED, HE WOULD BE LIABLE. IF IT FELL FORWARD, [BEING FRIGHTENED] ON ACCOUNT OF THE NOISE OF DIGGING, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY, BUT IF IT FELL BACKWARD ON ACCOUNT OF THE NOISE OF DIGGING, THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION.[8] IF AN OX FELL INTO IT TOGETHER WITH ITS IMPLEMENTS WHICH THEREBY BROKE, [OR] AN ASS TOGETHER WITH ITS BAGGAGE WHICH WAS THEREBY TORN, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY FOR THE BEAST BUT EXEMPTION AS REGARDS THE INANIMATE OBJECTS.[9] IF THERE FELL INTO IT AN OX, DEAF, ABNORMAL OR SMALL,[8] THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY. BUT IN THE CASE OF A SON OR A DAUGHTER,[10] A MANSERVANT OR A MAIDSERVANT, THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION.[9]

GEMARA. Up to when would the first partner be exempt [altogether]? — Rab said: Until he had time to learn [that the cover had been removed]. Samuel said: Until there was time for people to tell him. R. Johanan said: Until there was time for people to tell him and for him to hire labourers and cut cedars to cover it [again].

IF [AN OWNER OF A PIT] HAD COVERED IT PROPERLY AND AN OX OR AN ASS [NEVERTHELESS] FELL INTO IT AND WAS KILLED, HE WOULD BE EXEMPT. But seeing that he covered it properly, how indeed could the animal have fallen [into it]? — R. Isaac b. Bar Hanah said: We suppose [the boards of the cover] to have decayed from within.[11] It was asked: Suppose he had covered it with a cover which was strong enough for oxen but not strong enough for camels, and some camels happened to come first and weaken the cover and then oxen came and fell into the pit,[12] what would be the legal position? — But I would ask what were the circumstances? If camels frequently passed there, should he not be considered careless?[13] If camels did not frequently pass there, should he not be considered innocent?[14] — The question applies to the case where camels used to pass occasionally, [and we ask]: Are we to say that since from time to time camels passed there he was careless,[13] since he ought to have kept this in mind; or do we rather say that since at the time the camels had not actually been there, he was innocent? — Come and hear: IF HE HAD COVERED IT PROPERLY, AND AN OX OR AN ASS [NEVERTHELESS] FELL INTO IT AND WAS KILLED, HE WOULD BE EXEMPT.[15] Now, what were the circumstances? If it was covered properly, both as regards oxen and as regards camels, how then did any one fall in there? Does it therefore not mean ‘properly as regards oxen,

---

(1) V. the discussion later.

(2) In accordance with Kid. I, 4; v. also supra 11b.

(3) V. p. 300, n. 5.

(4) In Babylon.

(5) Who delivered popular discourses at R. Hisda's; cf. Shab 88a.

(6) Of the partners.

(7) As he is surely not to blame.

(8) V. the discussion in Gemara.

(9) As supra 25b.

(10) Though a minor.

(11) But not noticeable from the outside.

(12) For if the camels had fallen in he would have certainly been liable.

(13) Even regarding oxen, for he should have thought of the possibility that camels might come first and weaken the cover and oxen would then fall in.

(14) As he is surely not to blame.

(15) V. p. 301, n. 7.

but not properly as regards camels'?[1] Again, if camels frequently passed, why should he be exempt where he had been so careless? If [on the other hand] camels did not frequently pass, is it not obvious [that he is exempt since] he was innocent? Did it therefore not refer to a case where camels used to pass occasionally, and it so happened that when camels passed they weakened the cover so that the oxen coming [later on] fell? And [in such cases] the text says, 'he would be exempt.' Does not this prove that since at that time camels had not actually been there he would be considered innocent? — I would say, no. For it might still [be argued that the pit had been covered] properly both as regards oxen and as regards camels; and as for the difficulty raised by you 'how did any one fall in there?', [this has already been removed by] the statement of R. Isaac b. Bar Hanah that [the boards of the cover] decayed from within.[2]

Come and hear: BUT IF HE DID NOT COVER IT PROPERLY AND AN OX OR AN ASS FELL INTO IT AND WAS KILLED, HE WOULD BE LIABLE. Now what were the circumstances? If you say that it means not properly covered as regards oxen', [which would of course imply] also 'not properly covered as regards camels', is it not obvious? Why then was it necessary to state liability? Does it not therefore mean 'that it was properly covered as regards oxen but not properly covered as regards camels'?[1] [Again, I ask,] what were the circumstances? If camels frequently passed [is it not obvious that] he was careless? If [on the other hand] no camels were to be found there, was he not innocent? Does it not [therefore speak of a case] where camels used to arrive occasionally and it so happened that camels in passing had weakened the cover so that the oxen coming [later] fell in? And [in reference to such a case] the text states liability. Does this not prove that since from time to time camels did pass he should be considered careless as he ought to have borne this fact in mind? — In point of fact [I might reply, the text may still speak of a pit covered] 'properly' as regards oxen though 'not properly' as regards camels, and [of one where] camels frequently passed, and as for your question. '[Is it not obvious that] he was careless?' [the answer would be that] since the prior clause contains the words, 'If he covered it properly', the later clause has the wording, 'If he did not cover it properly'.[3]

Some report that certainly no question was ever raised about this, for since the camels used to pass from time to time he was certainly careless, as he ought to have borne this fact in mind. If a question was raised, it was on the following point: Suppose he covered it with a cover that was strong enough for oxen but not strong enough for camels and in a place where camels frequently passed, and it decayed from the inside, what should be the legal position? Should we say miggo,[4] [i.e.,] since he had been careless with respect to camels he ought to be considered careless also with respect to the [accidental] decay; or should we not say miggo? — Come and hear; IF HE COVERED IT PROPERLY AND AN OX OR AN ASS FELL INTO IT AND WAS KILLED, HE WOULD BE EXEMPT. And it was stated in connection with this ruling that R. Isaac b. Bar Hanah explained that the boards of the cover had decayed from the inside. Now, what were the circumstances? If we say that it means 'properly covered as regards oxen' and also properly covered as regards camels', and that it had decayed from the inside, is it not obvious that there should be exemption? For indeed what more could he have done? Does it not mean, therefore, properly covered as regards oxen though not properly covered as regards camels', and in a place where camels frequently passed, and it so happened that the cover decayed from the inside? And [in such a case] the text states exemption. Does this not prove that we should not say miggo, [i.e.] since he was careless with respect to camels he ought to be considered careless with reference to the decay? — No, it might still [be argued that the pit was covered] properly as regards camels as well as oxen, and it so happened that it became decayed from the inside. And as for your question 'if it becomes decayed [from inside] what indeed should he have done?' [the answer would be that] you might have thought that he ought to have come frequently to the cover and knocked it [to test its soundness], and we are therefore told [that he was not bound to do this].

Come and hear; BUT IF HE DID NOT COVER IT PROPERLY, AND AN OX OR AN ASS FELL INTO IT AND WAS KILLED, HE WOULD BE LIABLE. Now, what were the circumstances? Should you say that it means 'not properly covered as regards oxen, [which would of course imply also] 'not properly covered as regards camels', why then was it necessary to state liability? Does it not therefore mean [that it was covered] properly as regards oxen but not properly as regards camels? But again if camels frequently passed there, [is it not obvious that] he was careless? If [on the other hand] no camels were to be found there, was he not innocent? Does it therefore not deal with a case where camels did frequently pass, but [it so happened] that the cover decayed from the inside? And [in such a case] the text states liability. Does this not prove that we have to say miggo, [i.e.,] since he had been careless with respect to camels, he should be considered careless also with reference to decay?[5] — I would say, No. For it might still [be argued that the pit had been covered] properly as regards oxen but not properly as regards camels, and in a place where camels were to be found frequently, and [it happened that] camels had come along and weakened the cover so that when oxen subsequently came they fell into the pit. And as for your question, 'Is it not obvious that he was careless?' [the answer would be that] since the prior clause contained the words 'If he covered it properly', the later clause similarly uses the wording. 'If he did not cover it [properly]'.

Come and hear; 'If there fell into it an ox that was deaf, abnormal, small, blind or while it walked at night time, there would be liability.[6] But in the case of a normal ox walking during the day there would be exemption.'[7] Why so? Why not say that since the owner of the pit was careless with respect to a deaf animal he should be considered careless also with reference to a normal animal? Does not this show that we should not say miggo.' — This does indeed prove [that we do not say miggo].

IF IT FELL FORWARD etc. Rab said: 'FORWARD' means quite literally 'on its face',[8] and 'BACKWARD' means also literally, 'on its back',[9]

---

(1) And it so happened that camels weakened the cover, and when an ox or ass came later on it fell in.

(2) V. p. 302, n. 4.

(3) Though this ruling is obvious.

(4) Cf. Glos.

(5) no note.

(6) Infra 54b.

(7) As the owner of the pit could hardly have thought it likely that a normal ox walking during the day would fall into a pit.

(8) In which case it died from suffocation and there would be liability.

(9) Where the death could not have been caused by suffocation and there is therefore exemption.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 53a

the fall in each case being into the pit. Rab thus adhered to his own view as [elsewhere][1] stated by Rab, that the liability in the case of Pit imposed by the Torah[2] is for injury caused by the unhealthy air [of the pit] but not for the blow [given by it]. Samuel, however, said that where the ox fell into the pit, whether on its face or on its back, there would always be liability, since Samuel adhered to the view stated by him [elsewhere][1] that [the liability is] for the unhealthy air, and a plus forte raison for the blow. How then are we to understand [the words 'Where it fell] BACKWARD ON ACCOUNT OF THE NOISE OF DIGGING', in which case [we are told] there should be exemption? — As, for instance, where it stumbled over the pit and fell to the back of the pit, [i.e.,] outside the pit.[3]

An objection was raised [from the following: If it fell] inside the pit whether on its face or on its back there would be liability. Is not this a contradiction of the statement of Rab? — R. Hisda replied: Rab would admit that in the case of a pit in private ground[4] there would be liability, as the plaintiff could argue against the defendant: 'Whichever way you take it, if the animal died through the unhealthy air, was not the unhealthy air yours? If [on the other hand] it died through the blow, was not the blow given by your ground?[5] Rabbah, however, said: We are dealing here[6] with a case where the animal turned itself over; it started to fall upon its face but [before reaching the bottom of the pit it] turned itself over and finally fell upon its back, so that the unhealthy air which affected it [at the outset] really did the mischief. R. Joseph. however, said that we are dealing here[6] with a case where damage was done to the pit by the ox, i.e., where the ox made foul the water in the pit,[7] in which case no difference could be made whether it fell on its face or on its back, as there would always be liability.

R. Hananiah learnt [in a Baraitha] in support of the statement of Rab: [Scripture says] And it fall,[8] [implying that there would be no liability] unless where it fell in the usual way of falling.[9] Hence the Sages said: If it fell forward on account of the noise of digging there would be liability, but if it fell backward on account of the noise of digging there would be exemption, though in both cases [it fell] into the pit.

The Master stated: Where it fell forward on account of the noise of digging there would be liability. But why not say that it was the digger who caused it?[10] — R. Shimi b. Ashi thereupon said: This ruling is in accordance with R. Nathan, who stated that it was the owner of the pit who did the actual damage, and whenever no payment can be enforced from one [co-defendant] it is made up from the other[11] as indeed it has been taught: 'If an ox pushes another ox into a pit, the owner of the ox is liable, while the owner of the pit is exempt. R. Nathan, however, said that the owner of the ox would have to pay a half [of the damages] and the owner of the pit would have to pay the other half.' But was it not taught: R. Nathan says: The owner of the pit has to pay three-quarters, and the owner of the ox one quarter? — There is no contradiction, as the latter statement refers to Tam[12] and the former to Mu'ad.[13] On what principle did he base his ruling in the case of Tam? If he held that this [co-defendant] should be considered [in the eye of the law] as having done the whole of the damage, and so also the other co-defendant as having done the whole of the damage, why should not the one pay half and the other also pay half? If [on the other hand] he held that the one did half the damage and the other one also did half the damage, then let the owner of the pit pay half [of the damages] and the owner of the ox a quarter,[14] while the remaining quarter will be lost to the plaintiff? Raba thereupon said: R. Nathan was a judge, and went down to the depth of the law:[15] He did in fact hold that the one was considered as having done the whole of the damage and so also the other was considered as having done the whole of the damage; and as for your question 'Why should the one not pay half and the other half?' [he could answer] because the owner of the ox[16] could say to the owner of the pit, 'What will this your joining me [in the defence] benefit me?'[17] Or if you wish you may [alternatively] say that R. Nathan did in fact hold that the one did half of the damage and the other did half of the damage, and as for your question, 'Why not let the owner of the pit pay half and the owner of the ox a quarter while the remaining quarter will be lost to the plaintiff?' he might answer, because the owner of the killed ox would be entitled to say to the owner of the pit, 'As I have found my ox in your pit, you have killed it. Whatever is paid to me by the other defendant I do not mind being paid [by him], but whatever is not paid to me by him, I will require to be paid by you.'[18]

Raba said: If a man puts a stone near the mouth of a pit [which had been dug by another person] and an ox coming along stumbles over the stone and falls into the pit, we are here brought face to face[19] with the difference of opinion between R. Nathan and the Rabbis.[20] But is this not obvious? — You might perhaps have said that [the difference of opinion was confined to that case] where the owner of the pit could say to the owner of the ox, 'Had not my pit been there at all, your ox would in any case have killed the other ox,' whereas in this case the person who put the stone [near the pit] could certainly say to the owner of the pit, 'If not for your pit what harm would my stone have done? Were the ox even to have stumbled over it, it might have fallen but would have got up again.' We are therefore told [by this] that the other party can retort, 'If not for your stone, the ox would not have fallen into the pit at all.'

It was stated:

---

(1) Supra p. 289.

(2) Ex. XXI, 33-34.

(3) In which case the pit acted only as a secondary cause.

(4) Where the ground round about the pit has been abandoned, while the pit itself and the ground of it still remain with the owner.

(5) Since the pit and its ground remained yours.

(6) Where liability was stated.

(7) Cf. Mishnah 47b.

(8) Ex. XXI, 33.

(9) Cf. supra p. 290.

(10) Why then should the owner of the pit be liable? The digger too should also be exempt as he was but a remote cause to the damage that resulted.

(11) Cf. supra 13a.

(12) In which case the owner of the ox will pay quarter and the owner of the pit three quarters.

(13) Where both of them will pay equally.

(14) Which is half of the payment in the case of Tam.

(15) B.M. 117b; cf. also Hor. 13b.

(16) In the case of Tam.

(17) If I will have to pay half damages which is the maximum payment in my case.

(18) V. p. 307, n. 7. [And similarly in the case of our Mishnah since he cannot claim any damages from the digger, who was but a secondary cause, he is compensated by the owner of the pit.]

(19) As to whether the digger of the pit or the one who put the stone should be liable.

(20) According to whom the one who put the stone would alone have to pay.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 53b

Where an ox [of a private owner] together with an ox that was sacred[1] but became disqualified[2] [for the altar], gored [an animal]. Abaye said that the private owner would have to pay half damages,[3] whereas Rabina said that he would have to pay quarter damages.[3] Both the one and the other are speaking of Tam, but while Rabina followed the view of the Rabbis,[4] Abaye followed that of R. Nathan.[5] Or if you wish you may say that both the one and the other followed the view of the Rabbis,[4] but while Rabina was speaking of Tam[6] Abaye was speaking of Mu'ad. Some report that Abaye stated half damages and Rabina full damages. The one ruling like the other would refer to the case of Mu'ad, but while one[7] followed the Rabbis[8] the other[9] followed the view of R. Nathan.[10] If you wish you may say that the one ruling like the other followed the view of R. Nathan, but while ones was speaking of Mu'ad, the other[7] was speaking of Tam.[11]

Raba said: If an ox along with a man pushes [certain things] into a pit, on account of Depreciation[12] they would all [three][13] be liable, but on account of the four [additional] items[12] or with respect to compensation for the value of [lost] embryos.[14] Man would be liable[15] but Cattle and Pit exempt;[14] in respect of kofer[16] or the thirty shekels[17] for [the killing of] a slave, Cattle would be liable[18] but Man and Pit exempt;[19] in respect of damage done to inanimate objects or to a sacred ox which had become disqualified [for the altar], Man and Cattle would be liable but Pit exempt, the reason being that Scripture says, And the dead beast shall be his,[20] [implying that it was only] in the case of an ox whose carcass could be his[21] [that there would be liability], excluding thus the case of this [ox] whose carcass could not be his.[22] Does this mean that this last point was quite certain to Raba? Did not Raba put it as a query? For Raba asked; If a sacred ox which had become disqualified[23] [for the altar] fell into a pit, what would be the legal position? Shall we say that this [verse], And the beast shall be his, [confines liability to the case of] an ox whose carcass could be his, thus excluding the case of this ox whose carcass could never be his,[22] or shall we say that the words And the dead beast shall be his are intended only to lay down that the owners [plaintiffs] have to retain the carcass as part payment?[24] [The fact is that] after raising the question he himself solved it. But whence [then] would he derive the law that the owners [plaintiffs] have to retain the carcass as part payment ? — He would derive it from the clause and the dead shall be his own[25] [inserted in the case] of Cattle. What reason have you for rising [the clause] And the dead shall be his own [in the context dealing] with Cattle to derive from it the law that the owners [plaintiffs] have to retain the carcass as part payment, while you rise [the clause] And the dead beast shall be his[26] [in the context dealing] with Pit [to confine liability] to an animal whose carcass could be his?[27] Why should I not reverse [the implications of the clauses]? — It stands to reason that the exemption should be connected with Pit, since there is in Pit exemption also in the case of inanimate objects.[28] On the contrary, should not the exemption be connected with Cattle, since in Cattle there is exemption from half damages [in the case of Tam]? — In any case, exemption from the whole payment is not found [in the case of cattle].

WHERE THERE FELL INTO IT AN OX TOGETHER WITH ITS IMPLEMENTS WHICH THEREBY BROKE etc. This Mishnaic ruling is not in accordance with R. Judah. For it was taught: R. Judah imposes liability for damage to inanimate objects done by Pit. But what was the reason of the Rabbis?[29] — Because Scripture says, And an ox or an ass fall therein,[30] [implying] 'ox' but not 'man',[31] 'ass' but not 'inanimate objects'. R. Judah, [however, maintained that the word] 'or' [was intended] to describe inanimate objects while the [other] Rabbis

---

(1) Which is not subject to the law of damage; cf. supra pp. 50ff.

(2) Through a blemish. [As long as such an ox had not been redeemed, it is regarded as an ox of the sanctuary, v. supra 36b. Cur. edd. add in brackets, 'e.g., a first-born ox which cannot be redeemed.' It is however questionable whether such an ox is not to be considered a common animal, having regard to the fact that being blemished it is entirely the priests, no share thereof being offered up on the altar. MS. M. omits these words.]

(3) And the remaining part will be lost to the plaintiff.

(4) Maintaining that each defendant is only liable for himself.

(5) Who stated that if no payment can be enforced from a defendant, his co-defendant has to make it up.

(6) Where quarter damages is half of the maximum payment.

(7) Abaye.

(8) V. p. 309, n. 6.

(9) Rabina.

(10) V. p. 309, n. 7.

(11) Where half damages is the maximum payment.

(12) Cf. supra 26a.

(13) I.e. the man, the owner of the pit and the owner of the ox.

(14) V. supra 49a.

(15) Ex. XXI, 22.

(16) Ibid. 29-30.

(17) Ibid. 32.

(18) Ibid. 28-32.

(19) Supra 28b and 35a

(20) Ex. XXI, 34.

(21) I.e., could be used by him as food for dogs and like purposes.

(22) As no use could lawfully be made of a carcass of a sacred animal that died.

(23) Through a blemish.

(24) Supra 10b.
(25) Ex. XXI, 36.
(26) V. p. 310. n. 14.
(27) V. p. 310. n. 15.
(28) V. supra p. 302, n. 2.
(29) For maintaining exemption.
(30) Ex. XXI, 33.
(31) Dying through falling into a pit.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 54a

[argued that the word] 'or' was necessary as a disjunctive.[1] And R. Judah? — [He maintained that] the disjunction could be derived from [the use of the singular] And it fall.[2] And the Rabbis? — [They could reply that even the singular] And it fall could also imply many [things].[3]

May I say [that the expression] And it fall is intended as a generalisation,[4] while an ox or an ass [follows as] a specification, and where a generalisation is followed by a specification, the generalisation does not apply to anything save what is enumerated in the specification,[5] so that only in the case of an ox or an ass should there be liability, but not for any other object whatsoever? — No; for it could be said that [the clause] The owner of the pit shall make it good[6] generalises again. Now where there is a generalisation preceding a specification which is in its turn followed by another generalisation, you include only such cases as are similar to the specification.[5] [Thus here] as the specification refers to objects possessing life, so too all objects to be included [must be such] as possess life.[7] But [why not argue] since the specification refers to [animate] objects whose carcass would cause defilement whether by touching or by carrying,[8] should we not include [only animate] objects whose carcass would similarly cause defilement whether by touching or by carrying,[9] so that poultry would thus not be included?[10] — If so, the Divine Law would have mentioned only one object in the specification. But which [of the two][11] should the Divine Law have mentioned? Had it inserted [only] 'ox', I might have said that an animal which was eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar[12] should be included, but that which was not eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar[13] should not be included.[14] If [on the other hand] the Divine Law had [only] 'ass', I might have thought that an animal which was subject to the sanctity of firstborn[15] should be included, but that one which was not subject to the sanctity of firstborn[16] should not be included.[17] [But still why indeed not exclude poultry?] Scripture says: 'And the dead shall be his' [implying] all things that are subject to death. [If so,] whether according to the Rabbis who exclude inanimate objects, or according to R. Judah who includes inanimate objects, [the question maybe raised] are inanimate objects subject to death? It may be said that their breaking is their death. But again according to Rab who stated[18] that the liability imposed by the Torah in the case of Pit was for the unhealthy air [of the pit] but not for the blow [it gave], would either the Rabbis or R. Judah maintain that inanimate objects could be damaged by unhealthy air? — It may be said that [this could happen] with new utensils that burst in bad air. But was not this [clause] And the dead shall be his[19] required for the ruling of Raba?[20] For did Raba not say,[21] 'Where a sacred ox which had become disqualified [for the altar] fell into a pit, there would be exemption', as it is said: And the dead shall be his [implying that it was only] in the case of an ox whose carcass could be his [that there would be liability] and thus excluding the case of this ox whose carcass could never be his? — But Scripture says: He should give money unto the owner of it[19] [implying] that everything is included which has an owner. If so, why not also include even inanimate objects and human beings?[22] — Because Scripture says specifically 'an ox', [implying] and not 'a man', 'an ass' [implying] and not inanimate objects. Now according to R. Judah who included inanimate objects we understand the term 'ox' because it was intended to exclude 'man', but what was intended to be excluded by the term an ass? — Raba therefore said:[23] The term 'ass' in the case of Pit, on the view of R. Judah, as well as the term 'sheep' [occurring in the section dealing] with lost property[24] on the view unanimously accepted, remains difficult to explain.

IF THERE FELL INTO IT AN OX, DEAF, ABNORMAL OR SMALL THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY. What is the meaning of 'AN OX, DEAF, ABNORMAL OR SMALL'? It could hardly be suggested that the meaning is 'an ox of a deaf owner, an ox of an abnormal owner, an ox of a minor', for would not this imply exemption in the case of an ox belonging to a normal owner?[25] — R. Johanan said: [It means] 'an ox which was deaf, an ox which was abnormal, an ox which was small.'

---

(1) So that it should not be thought that there should be no liability unless both ox and ass fell in together.

(2) [So that 'or' carries the disjunction further to include utensils attached to the animal, v. Malbim, a.l.]

(3) As in Ex. XXXVI, 1; Deut. XIII, 3; I Sam. XVII, 34 etc.

(4) To include everything.

(5) [This is one of the principles of hermeneutics (Kelal u-ferat) according to R. Ishmael, v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 12, n. 9.]

(6) Ex. XXI, 34.

(7) Thus excluding inanimate objects.

(8) Lev. XI, 39-40.

(9) Lev. ibid. 26-28.

(10) As these do not cause defilement either by touching or by carrying.

(11) Ox and ass.

(12) As was the case with ox.

(13) Such as an ass, horse, camel and the like.

(14) Hence ass was inserted to include also animals not eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar.

(15) As was the case with ass; cf. Ex. XIII, 13.

(16) Such as e.g., a horse, camel and the like.

(17) Hence 'ox' was inserted, for though the species of ox is subject to the sanctity of firstborn and would in no case have been excluded, its insertion being thus superfluous was surely intended to include even those animals which are not subject to the sanctity of firstborn.

(18) Supra p. 289.

(19) Ex. XXI, 34.

(20) [How then deduce from it liability in case of poultry?]

(21) Supra p. 296.

(22) E.g., slaves.

(23) Cf. B.M. 27a.

(24) Deut. XXII, 1-3.

(25) Which is of course not the case at all

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 54b

Still, would not this imply exemption in the case of an ox which was normal?[1] — R. Jeremiah thereupon said: A particularly strong case is taken:[2] There could be no question that in the case of a normal ox there should be liability, but in the case of an ox which is deaf or abnormal or small it might have been thought that it was its deafness that caused [the damage to it] or that it was its smallness that caused it [to fall] so that the owner of the pit should be exempt.[3] We are therefore told [that even here he is liable]. Said R. Aha to Rabina: But it has been taught: If a creature possessing sense fell into it there would be exemption. Does this not mean an ox possession sense? — He replied: No, it means a man. [If that is so,] would not this imply that only in the case of a man who possesses sense that there would be exemption, whereas if he did not possess sense there would be liability, [and how can this be, seeing that] it is written 'ox' [which implies] 'and not man'? — The meaning of 'one possessing sense' must therefore be 'one of the species of rational being'. But he again said to him: Was it not taught: If there fell into it an ox possessing sense there would be exemption? — Raba therefore said: [The Mishnaic text indeed means] precisely an ox which was deaf, an ox which was abnormal, an ox which was small, for in the case of an ox which was normal there would be exemption, the reason being that such an ox should have looked more carefully while walking. So indeed was it taught likewise:[4] Where there fell into it an ox which was deaf, or abnormal or small, or blind or while walking at night time, there would be liability whereas if it was normal and walking during the day there would be exemption.

MISHNAH. BOTH AN OX AND ANY OTHER ANIMAL ARE ALIKE [BEFORE THE LAW WITH REFERENCE] TO FALLING INTO A PIT,[5] TO EXCLUSION FROM MOUNT SINAI,[6] TO PAYING DOUBLE [IN CASES OF THEFT],[7] TO RESTORING LOST PROPERTY,[8] TO UNLOADING [BURDENS TOO HEAVY FOR AN ANIMAL TO BEAR],[9] TO ABSTAINING FROM MUZZLING,[10] TO HETEROGENEOUS ANIMALS [BEING COUPLED[11] OR WORKING TOGETHER],[12] TO SABBATH REST.[13] SO ALSO BEASTS AND BIRDS ARE LIKE THEM. IF SO WHY DO WE READ, AN OX OR AN ASS? ONLY BECAUSE SCRIPTURE SPOKE OF THE MORE USUAL [ANIMALS IN DOMESTIC LIFE].

GEMARA. [WITH REFERENCE] TO FALLING INTO A PIT, since it is written, He should give money unto the owner of it,[14] [to include] everything that an owner has, as indeed already stated.[15] TO EXCLUSION FROM MOUNT SINAI [as it is written] Whether it be animal or man, it shall not live.[6] Beast[16] is included in 'animal' and [the word] 'whether' includes 'birds'. TO PAYING DOUBLE, as we said elsewhere:[17] [The expression] for all manner of trespass[18] is comprehensive. TO RESTORING LOST PROPERTY; [this is derived from the words] with all lost things of thy brother.[19] TO UNLOADING [BURDENS TOO HEAVY FOR AN ANIMAL TO BEAR]; we derive this [by] comparing [the term] 'ass'[9] with [the term] 'ass'[13] [occurring in connection] with the Sabbath.[20] TO [ABSTAINING FROM] MUZZLING; this we learn [similarly by] comparing [the term] 'ox'[10] with [the term] 'ox'[13] [used in connection] with Sabbath.[20] TO HETEROGENEOUS ANIMALS; the rule as regards ploughing we learn [by comparing the term] 'ox'[12] with the term 'ox'[13] used [in connection] with Sabbath;[20] and the rule as regards coupling we learn [by comparing the term] 'thy cattle'[11] with the term 'thy cattle'[13] [used in connection] with Sabbath. But whence are [all these rules known] to us in the case of Sabbath [itself]? — As it was taught: R. Jose says in the name of R. Ishmael: In the first Decalogue[21] it is said thy manservant and thy maidservant and thy cattle[22] whereas in the second Decalogue[23] it is said thy ox and thy ass and any of thy cattle.[24] Now, are not 'ox' and 'ass' included in 'any of thy cattle'? Why then were they singled out? To tell us that just as in the case of the 'ox and ass' mentioned here,[24] beasts and birds are on the same footing with them.[25] So also [in any other case where 'ox and ass' are mentioned] all beasts and birds are on the same footing with them. But may we not say that 'thy cattle' in the first Decalogue[21] is a generalisation, and 'thy ox and thy ass' in the second Decalogue is a specification, and [we know that] where a generalisation is followed by a specification, the generalisation does not include anything save what is mentioned in the specification,[26] [whence it would follow that only] 'ox and ass' are [prohibited][27] but not any other thing? — I may reply that the words 'and any of thy cattle' in the second Decalogue constitute a further generalisation, so that we have a generalisation preceding a specification which in its turn is followed by another generalisation; and in such a case you include also[28] that which is similar to the specification,[26] so that as the specification [here] mentions objects possessing life, there should thus also be included all objects possessing life. But, I may say, the specification mentions [living] things whose carcass would cause defilement whether by touching or by carrying.[29] [Why not say that] there should also be included all [living] things whose carcass would similarly cause defilement whether by touching or by carrying,[30] so that birds would thus not be included?[31] — I may reply: If that were the case, the Divine Law would have inserted only one [object in the] specification. But which [of the two][32] should the Divine Law have inserted? For were the Divine Law to have inserted [only] 'ox', I might have thought than an animal which was eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar[33] should be included, but one which was not eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar[34] should not be included, so that the Divine Law was thus compelled to insert also 'ass'.[35] If [on the other hand] the Divine Law had inserted [only] 'ass', I might have thought that [an animal which was subject to the] sanctity of first birth[36] should be included, but that which was not subject to the sanctity of first birth[37] should not be included; the Divine Law therefore inserted also 'ox'.[38] It must therefore [be said that] and all thy cattle is [not merely a generalisation but] an amplification.[39] [Does this mean to say that] wherever the Divine Law inserts [the word] 'all', it is an amplification? What about tithes where [the word] 'all' occurs and we nevertheless expound it as an instance of generalisation and specification? For it was taught:[40] And thou shalt bestow that money for all that thy soul lusteth after[41] is a generalisation; for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink[41] is a specification; or for all that thy soul desireth is again a generalisation. Now, where a generalisation precedes a specification which is in its turn followed by another generalisation you cannot include anything save what is similar to the specification. As therefore the specification [here][41] mentions products obtained from products[42] and which spring from the soil[43] there may also be included all kinds of products obtained from products[44] and which spring from the soil.[45] [Does this not prove that the expression 'all' was taken as a generalisation, and not as an amplification?][46] — I might say that [the expression] 'for all'[47] is but a generalisation, whereas 'all' would be an amplification. Or if you wish I may say that [the term] 'all' is also a generalisation, but in this case[48] 'all' is an amplification. For why was it not written And thy cattle just as in the first Decalogue? Why did Scripture insert here 'and all thy cattle' unless it was meant to be an amplification? — Now that you decide that 'all' is an amplification[49] why was it necessary to have 'thy cattle' in the first Decalogue and 'ox and ass' in the second Decalogue? — I may reply that 'ox' was inserted [to provide a basis] for comparison of 'ox' with [the term] 'ox' [used in connection] with muzzling; so also 'ass' [to provide a basis] for comparison of 'ass' with the term 'ass' [used in connection] with unloading; so again 'thy cattle' [to provide a basis] for comparison of 'thy cattle' with [the expression] 'thy cattle' [occurring in connection] with heterogeneity. If that is the case [that heterogeneity is compared with Sabbath breaking] why should even human beings not be forbidden[50] [to plough together with an animal]? Why have we learnt; A human being is allowed to plough [the field] and to pull [a waggon] with any of the beasts?[51] — R. Papa thereupon said: The reason of this matter was known to the Papunean,[52] that is R. Aha b. Jacob [who said that as] Scripture says that thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou[48] [it is only] in respect of the law of rest that I should compare them [to cattle] but not of any other matter.

R. Hanina b. 'Agil asked R. Hiyya b. Abba: Why in the first Decalogue is there no mention of wellbeing,[53] whereas in the second Decalogue

---

(1) And why should this be so?

(2) Lit., 'He states (a case) where there can be no question'.

(3) Putting in contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as a defence.

(4) Supra p. 305.

(5) V. Ex. XXI, 33.

(6) V. ibid., XIX, 13.

(7) V. ibid. XXII, 3.

(8) V. Deut. XXII, 1-3.

(9) V. Ex. XXIII, 5 and Deut. XXII, 4.

(10) V. Deut. XXV, 4.

(11) V. Lev. XIX, 19.

(12) V. Deut. XXII, 10.

(13) V. Ex. XX, 10 and Deut. V, 14.

(14) Ex. XXI, 34.

(15) Supra p. 313.

(16) [I.e., non-domesticated animals.]

(17) Infra p. 364.

(18) Ex. XXII, 8.
(19) Deut. XXII, 3.
(20) As explained anon.
(21) Ex. XX, 2-17
(22) Ibid. 10.
(23) Deut. V, 6-18.
(24) Ibid. 14.
(25) As will be shown anon.
(26) V. supra p. 312, n. 1.
(27) To work on the Sabbath.
(28) Lit., 'only'.
(29) Lev. XI, 39-40.
(30) Ibid. 26-28.
(31) As these do not cause defilement either by touching or by carrying.
(32) Ox and ass.
(33) As was the case with ox.
(34) Such as an ass, horse, camel and the like.
(35) Which would include also animals not eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar.
(36) As was the case with ass; cf. Ex. XIII, 13.
(37) Such as horses and camels and the like.
(38) To include those animals which otherwise would have been excluded; for since the species of ox is subject to the sanctity of first-born and would in no case have been excluded, its insertion being thus superfluous was surely intended to include even those animals which are not subject to the sanctity of first-born. On the other hand, birds should still be excluded since, unlike ox and ass, their carcasses do not defile, either by touching or by carrying.
(39) I.e., the term 'all' does more than generalize, for it includes everything. [On the difference between amplification ribbuy and generalisation kelal, v. Shebu. (Sonc. ed.) p. 12, n. 9.]
(40) V. infra 63a.
(41) Deut. XIV, 26.
(42) Such as wine from grapes.
(43) Which characterises also cattle.
(44) Excluding water, salt and mushrooms.
(45) Thus excluding fishes.
(46) Which would have included all kinds of food and drink.
(47) [בכל , the particle ב ('for') is taken as partitive.]
(48) In Deut. V, 14.
(49) At least in the case of the Sabbath, including thus all kinds of living creatures.
(50) For in the case of Sabbath, servants are included.
(51) Kil. VIII, 6.
(52) [Papunia was a place between Bagdad and Pumbeditha, v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 79, n. 8.]
(53) For honouring father and mother; v. Ex. XX, 12.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 55a

there is a mention of wellbeing?[1] — He replied: While you are asking me why wellbeing is mentioned there, ask me whether wellbeing is in fact mentioned or not, as I do not know whether wellbeing is mentioned there or not.[2] Go therefore to R. Tanhum b. Hanilai who was intimate with R. Joshua b. Levi, who was an expert in Aggadah. When he came to him he was told by him thus: 'From R. Joshua b. Levi I have not heard anything on the matter. But R. Samuel b. Nahum the brother of the mother of R. Aha son of R. Hanina, or as others say the father of the mother of R. Aha son of R. Hanina, said to me this: Because the [first tablets containing the] Commandments were destined to be broken.'[3] But even if they were destined to be broken, how should this affect [the mention of wellbeing]? — R. Ashi thereupon said: God forbid! Wellbeing would then have ceased in

Israel.[4]

R. Joshua[5] said: He who sees [the letter] teth[6] in a dream [may regard it as] a good omen for himself. Why so? If because it is the initial letter of [the word] 'Tob' ['good'] written in Scripture,[7] why not say [on the contrary that it is also the initial letter of the verb 'ta'atea'[8] commencing the Scriptural verse] And I will sweep it with the besom of destruction?[9] — We are speaking [here of where he saw in a dream only] one teth [whereas ta'atea contains two such letters]. But still why not say [that it might have referred to the word 'tum'ah'[10] as in the verse] Her filthiness is in her skirts?[11] — We are speaking of [where he saw in a dream the letters] 'teth' and 'beth'.[12] But again why not say [that it might have referred to the verb tabe'u[13] as in the verse], Her gates were sunk in to the ground?[14] — The real reason is that Scripture used this letter on the very first occasion to express something good, for from the beginning of Genesis up to [the verse] And God saw the light[15] no teth occurs.[16] R. Joshua b. Levi similarly said: He who sees [the word] hesped[17] in a dream [may take it as a sign that] mercy has been exercised towards him in Heaven, and that he will be released [from trouble].[18] provided, however, [he saw it] in script.

SO ALSO BEASTS AND BIRDS ARE LIKE THEM etc. Resh Lakish said: Rabbi taught here[19] that a cock, a peacock and a pheasant are heterogeneous with one another.[20] Is this not obvious?[21] — R. Habiba said: Since they can breed from one another it might have been thought that they constitute a homogeneous species; we are therefore told [by this that this is not the case]. Samuel said:[22] The [domestic] goose and the wild goose are heterogeneous with each other. Raba son of R. Hanan demurred [saying:] What is the reason? Shall we say because one has a long neck and the other has a short neck? If so, why should a Persian camel and an Arabian camel similarly not be considered heterogeneous with each other, since one has a thick neck and the other a slender neck? — Abaye therefore said: [It is because] one[23] has its genitals discernible from without while the other one[24] has its genitals within. R. Papa said: [It is because] one[23] becomes pregnant with only one egg at fecundation, whereas the other one[21] becomes pregnant with several eggs at one fecundation. R. Jeremiah reported that Resh Lakish said: He who couples two species of sea creatures becomes liable to be lashed.[25] On what ground?[26] R. Adda b. Ahabah said in the name of 'Ulla: This rule comes from the expression 'after its kind'[27] [in the section dealing with fishes] by comparison with 'after its kind'[28] [in reference to creatures] of the dry land. Rehabah inquired: If a man drove [a waggon] by means of a goat and a mullet together, what would be the legal position? Should we say that since a goat could not go down into the sea and a mullet could not go up on to the dry land, no transgression has been committed, or do we say that after all they are now pulling together?[29] Rabina demurred to this: If this is so, supposing one took wheat and barley together in his hand and sowed the wheat on the soil of Eretz Yisrael[30] and the barley on the soil outside Eretz Yisrael,[31] would he be liable [as having transgressed the law]?[32] — I might answer: Where is the comparison? There [in your case][33] Eretz Yisrael is the place subject to this obligation whereas any country outside Eretz Yisrael is not subject to this obligation; but here,[34] both one place[35] and the other[36] are subject to the obligation.[37] [

---

(1) Cf. Deut. V, 16, where the following occurs, That thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with the . . . .

(2) As no Halachic point was involved, R. Hiyya b. Abba did not observe the difference; see also Tosaf. B.B. 113a.

(3) Ex. XXXII, 19.

(4) I.e. if it would have been inserted in the first Decalogue it would have ceased altogether when the two tablets were broken.

(5) Some add 'b. Levi'.

(6) The ninth letter of the Hebrew alphabet.

(7) On so many occasions.

(8) I.e. to sweep with a besom.

(9) Isa. XIV, 23.

(10) Meaning defilement and filthiness.

(11) Lam. I, 9.
(12) The second letter of the Alphabet.
(13) I.e., they sunk.
(14) Lam. II, 9.
(15) Gen. I, 4.
(16) And since the first teth in Scriptures commences the word denoting 'good' it is a good omen to see it in a dream.
(17) Which denotes an elegy and a lamentation.
(18) As the word hesped could be divided thus: has pad [ah]. i.e. mercy has been exercised and release granted.
(19) By stating that the law of heterogeneity applies also to birds.
(20) I.e., we are justified in maintaining so.
(21) Since they are birds of different kinds.
(22) Bek. 8a.
(23) The wild goose.
(24) The domestic goose.
(25) As be transgressed the negative commandment of Lev. XIX, 19.
(26) Is not 'cattle' specified in Lev. XIX, 19?
(27) Gen. I. 21.
(28) Ibid. 25.
(29) And a sin has been committed.
(30) Which is subject to the law of not being sown with mingled seed.
(31) Which is not subject to this law.
(32) And since he would not be liable, what doubt could be entertained in the case of a goat and mullet?
(33) Of sowing a field with mingled seed.
(34) In the case of a goat and a mullet.
(35) The dry land.
(36) The sea.
(37) As derived above from the similarity of expressions 'after its kind'.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 55b

C H A P T E R V I

MISHNAH. IF A MAN BRINGS SHEEP INTO A SHED AND LOCKS THE DOOR IN FRONT OF THEM PROPERLY, BUT THE SHEEP [NEVERTHELESS] GET OUT AND DO DAMAGE, HE IS NOT LIABLE.[1] IF, HOWEVER, HE DOES NOT LOCK THE DOOR IN FRONT OF THEM PROPERLY, HE IS LIABLE.[2] IF [THE WALL] BROKE DOWN AT NIGHT, OR IF ROBBERS BROKE IN, AND THEY[3] GOT OUT AND DID DAMAGE, HE WOULD NOT BE LIABLE. IF [HOWEVER] ROBBERS TOOK THEM OUT [FROM THE SHED AND LEFT THEM AT LARGE AND THEY DID DAMAGE] THE ROBBERS WOULD BE LIABLE [FOR THE DAMAGE].[4] BUT IF THE OWNER HAD LEFT THEM IN A SUNNY PLACE, OR HE HAD HANDED A MINOR, AND THEY GOT AWAY AND DID DAMAGE, HE HANDED THEM OVER TO THE CARE OF A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT, HE WOULD BE LIABLE.[4] IF HE HAD HANDED THEM OVER TO THE CARE OF A SHEPHERD, THE SHEPHERD WOULD HAVE ENTERED [INTO ALL RESPONSIBILITIES] INSTEAD OF HIM. IF A SHEEP [ACCIDENTALLY] FELL INTO A GARDEN AND DERIVED BENEFIT [FROM THE FRUIT THERE], PAYMENT WOULD HAVE TO BE MADE TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT,[5] WHEREAS IF IT HAD GONE DOWN THERE IN THE USUAL WAY AND DONE DAMAGE, THE PAYMENT WOULD HAVE TO BE FOR THE AMOUNT OF THE DAMAGE DONE BY IT.[6] HOW IS PAYMENT MADE FOR THE AMOUNT OF DAMAGE DONE BY IT?[6] BY COMPARING THE VALUE OF AN AREA IN THAT FIELD REQUIRING ONE SE'AH[7] [OF SEED] AS IT WAS [PREVIOUSLY] WITH WHAT ITS WORTH IS [NOW]. R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, SAYS: IF IT CONSUMED RIPE FRUITS THE PAYMENT SHOULD BE FOR RIPE FRUITS; IF ONE SE'AH[8] [IT WOULD BE FOR] ONE

SE'AH, IF TWO SE'AHS [FOR] TWO SE'AHS.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: What is denominated 'properly' and what is not 'properly'? — If the door was able to stand against a normal wind,[9] it would be 'properly', but if the door could not stand against a normal wind, that would be 'not properly'. R. Manni b. Pattish thereupon said: Who can be the Tanna [who holds] that in the case of Mu'ad,[10] even inadequate precaution[11] suffices [to confer exemption]? It is R. Judah. For we have learnt: If the owner fastened his ox [to the wall inside the stable] with a cord or shut the door in front of it properly[12] and the ox got out and did damage, whether it was Tam or already Mu'ad, he would be liable; so R. Meir. R. Judah, however, says: In the case of Tam he would be liable, but in the case of Mu'ad exempt, for it is written, And his owner hath not kept him in[13] [thus excluding this case where] it was kept in. R. Eliezer, however, says: No precaution is adequate [for Mu'ad] save the [slaughter] knife.[14] [But does not an anonymous Mishnah usually follow the view of R. Meir?][15] — We may even say that it is in accordance with R. Meir, for Tooth and Foot are different[16] [in this respect], since the Torah required a lesser degree of precaution in their case as stated by R. Eleazar, or, according to others, as stated in a Baraitha: There are four cases [of damage] where the Torah requires a lesser degree of precaution. They are these: Pit and Fire, Tooth and Foot. Pit as it is written, And if a man shall open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit and not cover it,[17] implying that if he covered it[18] he would he exempt. Fire, as it is written, He that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution,[19] [that is to say] only where he acted [culpably], as by actually kindling the fire.[20] Tooth, as it is written, And he shall send forth,[21] [that is to say] only where he acted [wrongly] as by actually sending it forth.[20] It was [further] taught:[22] 'And he shall send forth'[23] denotes Foot, as in the similar expression, That send forth the foot of the ox and the ass;[24] And it shall consume denotes 'Tooth',[23] as in the similar expression, As the tooth consumeth to entirety.[25] This is so only for the reason that he acted [culpably] as by actually sending it forth or feeding it there,[26] whereas where he did not act [in such a manner] this would not be so. Rabbah said: The text of the Mishnah also corroborates [this view][27] by taking here the case of sheep. For have we not been dealing all along [so far] with an 'ox'?[28] Why then not say [here also] 'ox'?[29] What special reason was there for taking here SHEEP?[30] Is it not because the Torah required a lesser degree of precaution in their case[31] on account of the fact that it is not Horn that is dealt with here,[32] but Tooth and Foot that are dealt with here? It is thus indicated to us that [this kind of precaution[33] is] only in the case of Tooth and Foot which are Mu'ad [ab initio]; and this may be regarded as proved.

It was taught: R. Joshua said: There are four acts for which the offender is exempt from the judgments of Man but liable to the judgments of Heaven. They are these: To break down a fence in front of a neighbour's animal [so that it gets out and does damage];[34] to bend over a neighbour's standing corn in front of a fire;[34] to hire false witnesses to give evidence; and to know of evidence in favour of another and not to testify on his behalf.[35]

The Master stated: 'To break down a fence in front of a neighbour's animal.' Under what circumstances? If we assume that the wall was sound, why should the offender not be liable even according to the judgments of Man [at least for the damage done to the wall]? — It must therefore be

---

(1) As he is not to blame.

(2) As he did not discharge his duty of guarding his cattle.

(3) I.e., the sheep.

(4) Done by the sheep, since they have come into the possession of the robbers, who have thus become liable to control them.

(5) But not to the extent of the actual damage: cf. supra 19b.

(6) In accordance with the law of Tooth.

(7) V. Glos.

(8) V. Glos.

(9) Though unable to withstand an extraordinary wind.
(10) As in the case with Tooth and Foot.
(11) I.e., a door able to withstand a normal wind.
(12) Withstanding a normal wind.
(13) Ex. XXI, 36.
(14) Supra 45b.
(15) According to whom precaution of a lesser degree would not suffice.
(16) From Horn.
(17) Ex. XXI, 33.
(18) Though he did not fill it with sand.
(19) Ex. XXII, 5.
(20) But not where any precaution has been taken.
(21) Ex. XXII, 4.
(22) Cf. supra 2b.
(23) Ex. XXII, 4.
(24) Isa. XXXII, 20.
(25) I Kings XIV,10.
(26) V. supra n. 1.
(27) I.e. the distinction between Tooth and Horn.
(28) And not with sheep.
(29) Which as a rule stands for Horn.
(30) Which damages by Tooth and Foot.
(31) I.e. in Tooth and Foot.
(32) [MS. M. reads 'sheep'. Render accordingly: Because as to sheep there is no mention (in the Torah) in connection with Horn; only Tooth and Foot are mentioned in connection therewith.]
(33) Which would withstand only a normal wind.
(34) V. the discussion later.
(35) Tosef., Shebu. III.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 56a

where the wall was shaky.[1]

The Master stated: 'To bend over a neighbour's corn standing in front of a fire.' Under what circumstances? If we assume that the fire can now reach it in a normal wind, why is he not liable also according to the judgments of Man? — It must therefore be where it would reach them only in an unusual wind. R. Ashi said: What is referred[2] to is 'covering' the offender having caused the stalks to become hidden in the ease of Fire.[3]

The Master stated: 'To hire false witnesses.' Under what circumstances? If we assume for his own benefit,[4] should he not pay the money[5] and should he thus not also be liable even in accordance with the judgments of Man? — It therefore must mean for the benefit of his neighbour.[6]

'To know of evidence in favour of another and not to testify on his behalf.' With what case are we dealing here? If with a case where there are two [witnesses], is it not obvious that it is a Scriptural offence,[7] [as it is written], If he do not utter it then he shall bear his iniquity?[8] — It must therefore be where there is one [witness].[9]

(Mnemonic: He who does, Deadly poison, Entrusts, His fellow, Broken.)

But are there no more cases [of the same category]? Is there not the case of a man who does work with the Water of Purification[10] or with the [Red] Heifer of Purification,[10] where he is similarly exempt according to the judgments of Man but liable according to the judgments of Heaven?[11] Again, is there not the case of one who placed deadly poison before the animal of a neighbour, where he is exempt from the judgments of Man but liable according to the judgments of Heaven?[12] So also is there not the case of one who entrusts fire to a deaf-mute, an idiot or a minor [and damage results], where he is exempt from the judgments of Man but liable according to the judgments of Heaven?[13] Again, is there not the case of the man who gives his fellow a fright, where he is similarly exempt from the judgments of Man but liable according to the judgments of Heaven?[14] And finally is there not the case of the man who, when his pitcher has broken on public ground, does not remove the potsherds, who, when his camel falls does not raise it, where R. Meir indeed makes him liable for any damage resulting therefrom, but the Sages hold that he is exempt from the judgments of Man though liable according to the judgments of Heaven?[15] — Yes, there are surely many more cases [to come under the same category], but these four cases were particularly necessary to be stated by him,[16] as otherwise you might have thought that even according to the judgments of Heaven there should not be any liability. It was therefore indicated to us [that this is not so]. In the case of breaking down a fence in front of a neighbour's animal you might have said that since the wall was in any case bound to come down, what offence was committed, and that even according to the judgments of Heaven there should be no liability. It was therefore indicated to us [that this is not so]. In the case of bending over a neighbour's standing corn in front of a fire you might also have said that the defendant could argue, 'How could I know that an unusual wind would come?' and that consequently even according to the judgments of Heaven he should not be liable; it was therefore indicated to us [that this is not the case]. So also according to R. Ashi who said that the reference is to 'covering', you might have said that [the defendant could contend], 'I surely intended to cover and thus protect your property,[17] and that even according to the judgments of Heaven he should not be liable. It was therefore indicated to us [that this is not so]. In the case of hiring false witnesses you might also have said that the offender should be entitled to plead, 'Where the words of the Master[18] are contradicted by words of a disciple,[19] whose words should be followed?'[20] and that even according to the judgments of Heaven he should not be liable. It was therefore indicated to us [that this is not so]. In the case where one knows evidence in favour of another and does not testify on his behalf, you might also have said that [the offender could argue], 'Who can say for certain that even had I gone and testified on his behalf, the other party would have admitted [the claim], and would not perhaps have sworn falsely [against my evidence]?'[21] and that even according to the judgments of Heaven he should not be liable. It was therefore indicated to us [that this is not the case].

IF THE WALL BROKE DOWN AT NIGHT OR IF ROBBERS BROKE IN etc., Rabbah said: This[22] is so only where the animal undermined the wall. What then of the case where it did not undermine the wall?[23] Would there then be liability? Under what circumstances? If it be assumed that the wall was sound, why then even where it did not undermine it[23] should there be liability? What else could the defendant have done? But if, on the other hand, the wall was shaky, why even in the case where the animal undermined it should there be exemption? Is not this a case where there is negligence[24] at the beginning but [damage results from] accident[25] at the end? Your view is correct enough on the assumption[26] that where there is negligence at the beginning [and damage results through] accident at the end there is exemption, but if we take the view[26] that where there is negligence at the beginning though [damage results from] accident at the end there is liability, what can be said? — This ruling of the Mishnah therefore refers to a sound wall and even to a case where it did not undermine the wall.[27] For the statement of Rabbah was made with reference to [the ruling in] the concluding clause, IF THE OWNER HAD LEFT THEM IN A SUNNY PLACE OR HANDED THEM OVER TO THE CARE OF A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT OR A MINOR AND THEY GOT AWAY AND DID DAMAGE, HE WOULD BE LIABLE. Rabbah thereupon said: This would be so even where it undermined the wall. For there would be no doubt that [this would be so] where it did not undermine the wall[28] as there was negligence throughout, but even where it did undermine the wall,[29] the ruling[30] would also hold good. You might have said [in that case, that where it undermined the wall][29] it should be regarded as a case of negligence at the beginning but accident at the end.[31] It was therefore indicated to us[32] that [it is regarded as a case of] negligence throughout, the reason being that the plaintiff might say, 'You should surely have realised that since you left it in a sunny place, it will use every possible device for the purpose of getting out.

IF THE ROBBERS TOOK THEM OUT, THE ROBBERS WOULD BE LIABLE [FOR THE DAMAGE].[33]

---

(1) And should in any case have been pulled down.
(2) By the expression 'bending over'.
(3) For which there is no liability according to the view of the Rabbis (v. infra p. 357), and by his act he caused the owner of the corn the loss of all claim to compensation.
(4) I.e., to obtain money really not due to him.
(5) Which he obtained by false pretenses and by the evidence of the false witnesses whom he hired.
(6) I.e. to pay him money not due to him, and it so happened that the neighbour to whom the money was paid could not be made to give back the money he obtained by the false evidence.
(7) Why then state it here?
(8) Lev. V, 1.
(9) Whose evidence would merely entail the imposition of an oath upon the defendant, v. Shebu 40a.
(10) Thus disqualifying it from being used for the purpose of purification, Par. IV, 4.
(11) Git. 53a, and infra 98a.
(12) Supra 47b.
(13) Infra 59b.
(14) Infra 91a.
(15) Supra 28b.
(16) R. Joshua.
(17) But not to cause you the loss of compensation.
(18) Expressed in the Divine Law.
(19) I.e. mortal man.
(20) Surely the word of the former. The witnesses should therefore be exclusively responsible, as they should not have followed the advice of a man in contradiction to the words of the Law. The law of agency could on this account not apply in matters of transgression; cf. Kid. 42b and supra p. 294.
(21) Since one witness could not make the defendant liable for money payment but only for an oath.
(22) Exemption.
(23) Which fell down of itself.
(24) To leave an animal behind a shaky wall which could not withstand a normal wind.
(25) Viz., that the animal broke through it.
(26) Supra 21b.
(27) V. p. 327, n. 6.
(28) But managed to escape through the door.
(29) Which was very sound.
(30) Of liability.
(31) V. p. 327, n. 8.
(32) By Rabbah.
(33) V. p. 324, n. 4.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 56b

Is this not obvious, seeing that as soon as they took it out it was placed under their charge in all respects?[1] The ruling was necessary to meet the case where they merely stood in front of it[2] [thus blocking any other way for it while leaving open that leading to the corn]. This is on the lines of the statement made by Rabbah on behalf of R. Mattena who said it on behalf of Rab: If a man placed the animal of one person near the standing corn of another, he is liable.[3] 'Placed', [you say]? Is this not obvious? — The ruling was necessary to meet the case where he merely stood in front of it [blocking thus any other way for it while leaving open that leading to the corn]. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: Did you not explain to us that [the ruling of Rab referred to a case where] the animal was [not actually placed but only] beaten [with a stick and thus driven to the corn]? In the case of robbers also, [the ruling in the Mishnah similarly refers to a case where] they had only beaten it. IF HE HANDED THEM OVER TO THE CARE OF A SHEPHERD, THE SHEPHERD WOULD ENTER INTO ALL THE RESPONSIBILITIES INSTEAD OF HIM. I would here ask: 'Instead of whom?' If you say, instead of the owner of the animal, have we not already learnt elsewhere: 'If an owner hands over his cattle to an unpaid bailee or to a borrower, to a paid bailee or to a hirer, each of them would enter into the responsibilities of the owner'?[4] It must therefore mean, instead of a bailee,[5] and the first bailee would be exempt altogether. Would this not be a refutation of Raba? For did Raba not say: One bailee handing over his charge to another bailee becomes liable for all consequences?[6] — Raba might reply that 'he handed it over to a shepherd' means [the shepherd handed it over] to his apprentice, as it is indeed the custom of the shepherd to hand over his sheep to [the care of] his apprentice. Some say that since the text says, HE HANDED THEM OVER TO THE CARE OF A SHEPHERD and does not say 'he handed them over to another person,'it could from this be proved that the meaning of 'HE HANDED THEM OVER TO THE CARE OF A SHEPHERD' is that the shepherd handed [them] over to his apprentice, as it is indeed the custom of the shepherd to hand over [various things] to [the care of] his apprentice, whereas if [he handed it over] to another person this would not be so. May we say that this supports the view of Raba? For did Raba not say: One bailee handing over his charge to another bailee becomes liable for all consequences?[6] — It may however be said that this is no support. For the text perhaps merely mentioned the usual case, though the same ruling would apply [to a case where it was handed over] to another person altogether.

It was stated: A person taking charge of a lost article [which he has found],[7] is according to Rabbah in the position of an unpaid bailee,[8] but according to R. Joseph in the position of a paid bailee.[9] Rabbah said: He is in the position of an unpaid bailee, since what benefit is forthcoming to him? R. Joseph said: He is in the position of a paid bailee on account of the benefit he derives from not being required to give bread to the poor [while occupied in minding the lost article found by him];[10] hence he should be considered a paid bailee. Some, however, explain it thus: R. Joseph said that he would be like a paid bailee as the Divine Law put this obligation[11] upon him even against his will; he must therefore be considered as a paid bailee.[12] R. Joseph brought an objection to the view of Rabbah [from the following]:

---

(1) V. p. 325, n. 7.

(2) In which case the sheep did not come into the possession of the robbers.

(3) Though the animal which did the damage is not his.

(4) Supra 44b.

(5) I.e. where the sheep has already been in the hands of a bailee who later transferred it to a shepherd. By declaring the shepherd to be liable it is implied that the bailee will become released from his previous obligations.

(6) Even for accidents, as he had no right to hand over his charge to another person without the consent of the owner, v. supra 11b.

(7) And which he will have to return to the owner.

(8) To whom the law of Ex. XXII, 6-8 applies, and who is thus exempt where the article was stolen or lost.

(9) Who is subject to Ex. XXII, 9-12 and who is therefore liable to pay where the article was stolen or lost.

(10) As while a person is occupied with the performance of one commandment he is not under an obligation to perform at the same time another commandment; cf. Suk. 25a.

(11) Of looking after the lost article which he found.

(12) Who after receiving the consideration is similarly under an obligation to guard.

If a person returns [the lost article which he had found] to a place where the owner is likely to see it, he is not required any longer to concern himself with it. If it is stolen or lost[1] he is responsible for it.[2] Now, what is meant by 'If it is stolen or lost'? Does it not mean, 'If it is stolen while in his house or if it is lost while in his house'?[3] — No; it means from the place to which it had been returned.[4] But was it not stated, 'He is not required any longer to concern himself with it'?[5] — He answered him: We are dealing here with a case where he returned it in the afternoon,[6] Two separate cases are, in fact, stated in the text, which should read thus: If he returned it in the morning to a place where the owner might see it [at a time] when it was usual with him to go in and out so that he would most likely see it, he would no more be required to concern himself with it, but if he returned it in the afternoon to a place where the owner might see it[7] [since it was at the time] when it was not usual with him to go in and out [of the house] and he could thus not be expected to see it, if it was stolen or lost there, he would still be responsible for it. He then brought another objection [from the following]: He is always responsible [for its safety] until he has returned it to the keeping of its owner.[8] Now, what is the meaning of [the term] 'always'? Does it not mean 'even while in the keeper's house'[9] thus proving that he was like a paid bailee?[10] — Rabbah said to him: I agree with you in the case of living things, for since they are in the habit of running out into the fields they need special watching.[11]

Rabbah [on the other hand] brought an objection to the view of R. Joseph [from the following: The text says] 'Return';[12] this tells me only [that it can be returned] to the house of the owner. Whence [could it be derived that it may also be returned] to his garden and to his deserted premises? It says therefore further: Thou shalt return them[12] [that is to say] 'everywhere'.[13] Now, to what kind of garden and deserted premises [may it be returned]? If you say to a garden which is closed in and to deserted premises which are closed in, are these not equivalent to his house? It must surely therefore refer to a garden that is not closed in and to deserted premises that are not closed in. Does not this show that a person taking care of a lost article [which he has found] is like an unpaid bailee?[14] — He replied: In point of fact it refers to a garden which is closed in and to deserted premises which are closed in, and as for your questions, 'Are these not equivalent to his house?' [the answer would be that] it is thereby indicated to us that it is not necessary to notify the owner, as indeed [stated by] R. Eleazar,[13] for R. Eleazar said: In all cases notification must be given to the owner, with the exception, however, of returning a lost article, as the Torah uses in this connection many expressions of returning.[15]

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: Do you really not accept the view that a person minding a lost article [which he has found] is like an unpaid bailee? Did R. Hiyya b. Abba not say that R. Johanan stated that if a man puts forward a plea of theft [to account for the absence of] an article [which had been found by him] he might have to make double payment?[16] Now, if you assume that [the person minding the lost article] is like a paid bailee, why should he have to refund double [seeing that] he has to return the principal?[17] — He replied:[18] We are dealing here with a case where, for instance, he pleads [that it was taken] by all armed malefactor.[19] But, he rejoined:[20] All armed malefactor is surely considered a robber?[21] — He replied:[18] I hold that an armed malefactor, having regard to the fact that he hides himself from the public, is considered a thief.[22]

He[23] brought a [further] objection [from the following]:

---

(1) V. the discussion later.

(2) Tosef. B.M. II.

(3) But if he would have to pay where the article was stolen or lost this would prove that he is subject to the law of Paid Bailee.

(4) The liability would therefore be for carelessness.

(5) Why then should he be liable to pay when it was stolen or lost there?

(6) When the owner is usually in the fields and not at home.

(7) Had he been at home.
(8) V. p. 330, n. 8.
(9) Where it was stolen or lost.
(10) V. p. 330, n. 9.
(11) In which case any loss amounts to carelessness.
(12) Literal rendering of Deut. XXII, 1.
(13) B.M. 31a.
(14) And need not take as much care as a paid bailee would have to do.
(15) By doubling the verb 'in return', השב תשיבם
(16) If his false defence of theft has already been corroborated by all oath, v. infra 63a; 106b.
(17) For in his case the plea of an alleged theft would not be a defence but an admission of liability, and no oath would usually be taken to corroborate it. Moreover, the paid bailee could in such circumstances not be required to pay double even after it was found out that he himself had misappropriated the article in his charge.
(18) I.e. R. Joseph to Abaye.
(19) , 'a rover'. This case is a mere accident as the bailee is not to blame and would not have to pay the principal; this plea would therefore be not an admission of liability but a defence, and if substantiated by a false oath he would have to pay double.
(20) I.e. Abaye to R. Joseph.
(21) And if traced would have to pay the principal and not make double payment (v. infra). The bailee making use of such a defence should therefore never have to pay double, as his plea was not an alleged theft but an alleged robbery.
(22) And would therefore have to pay double when traced. The bailee by submitting such a defence and substantiating it by a false oath should similarly be liable to double payment as his defence was a plea of theft, although had it been true, he would not have to pay even the principal, because the case of an armed malefactor is one of accident, v. note 5.
(23) I.E., Abaye.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 57b

No.[1] Because you say that [a certain liability falls on] the unpaid bailee who is subject to pay double payment,[2] it does not follow that you can say the same in the case of the paid bailee who does not pay double payment.[3] Now if you assume that an armed malefactor is considered a thief,[4] it would be possible that even a paid bailee would [in some cases] have to make double payment, as where he pleaded that [the articles in his charge were taken] by an armed malefactor![5] — He replied:[6] What was meant is this: No. Because you say that a certain liability falls on the unpaid bailee, who has to make double payment,[2] whatever pleas he puts forward,[7] it does not follow that you can say the same in the case of the paid bailee who could not have to make a double payment except where he puts forward the plea that an armed malefactor[5] [took away the article in his charge]. He[8] again brought an objection [from the following]: [From the text] And it be hurt or die[9] I learn only the case of breakage or death. Whence [could there also be derived cases of] theft and loss?[10] An a fortiori argument may be applied here: If in the case of Paid Bailee who is exempt for breakage and death[11] he is nevertheless liable for theft[12] and loss,in the case of Borrower who is liable for breakage and death[9] would it not be all the more certain that he should be liable [also] for theft and loss? This a fortiori has indeed no refutation.[13] Now, if you assume that an armed malefactor is considered a thief why could there be no refutation [of this a fortiori]? It could surely be refuted [thus]: Why [is liability attached] to Paid Bailee if not because he might have to pay double payment where he puts forward the plea [that] an armed malefactor[5] [took the articles in his charge]?[14] — He said to him:[15] This Tanna held that the liability to pay the principal in the absence of any oath[16] is of more consequence than the liability for double payment which is conditioned by taking the oath.[17]

May we say that hɛ[18] derives support [from the following]: If a man hired a cow from his neighbour and it was stolen, and the hirer said, 'I would prefer to pay and not to swear'[19] and [it so happened that] the thief was [subsequently] traced, he should make the double payment to the hirer.[20] Now it was presumed that this statement followed the view of R. Judah[21] who said that

Hirer[22] is equal [in law] to Paid Bailee.[23] Since then it says 'the hirer said "I would prefer to pay and not to swear"',[19] this shows that had he wished he could have freed himself by resorting to the oath. Under what circumstances [could this be so]? Where, for instance, he advances the plea that an armed malefactor [took it].[24] Now seeing that it says, '. . . and it so happened that the thief was [subsequently] traced, he should pay the double payment to the hirer',[25] can it not be concluded from this that an armed malefactor is considered as a thief?[26] — I might answer: Do you presume that this statement follows the view of R. Judah who said that Hirer[22] is equal [in law] to Paid Bailee?[23] Perhaps it follows the view of R. Meir who said that Hirer is equal [in law] to Unpaid Bailee.[27] If you wish[28] I may say: [We should read the relevant views] as they were transposed by Rabbah b. Abbuha, who [taught thus]: How is the payment [for the loss of articles] regulated in the case of Hirer? R. Meir says: As in the case of Paid Bailee. R. Judah, however, says: As in the case of Unpaid Bailee.[29] R. Zera said:[30] We are dealing here with a case where the hirer advances the plea [that it was taken by] an armed malefactor, and it was afterwards discovered that [it was taken by] a malefactor without arms.[31]

IF A SHEEP [ACCIDENTALLY] FELL INTO A GARDEN AND DERIVED BENEFIT [FROM THE FRUITS THERE], PAYMENT WOULD HAVE TO BE MADE TO THE EXTENT OF THE BENEFIT. Rab said: [This applies to benefit derived by the animal] from [the lessening of] the impact.[32] But what when it consumed them? Would there be no need to pay even to the extent of the benefit? Shall we say that Rab is here following the principle laid down by him [elsewhere]? For did Rab not say, 'It should not have eaten'?[33] — But what a comparison! Rab said 'It should not have eaten' only there where it was injured [by over-eating itself], so that the owner of the fruits could say [to the plaintiff], 'I will not pay as it should not have eaten [my fruits]'. But did Rab ever say this in the case where the animal did damage to others that there should be exemption?

---

(1) This is a continuation of a Baraitha (now partly lost), which sought at the outset to derive a certain liability (undefined) in the case of a paid bailee by an a fortiori from the case of an unpaid bailee.

(2) V. p. 332, n. 2.

(3) V. p. 332, n. 3.

(4) V. p. 332, n. 9.

(5) V. p. 332, n. 5.

(6) I.e., R. Joseph to Abaye.

(7) I.e., by a thief whether armed or unarmed.

(8) I.e. Abaye.

(9) Ex. XXII, 13 dealing with a borrower.

(10) To involve liability.

(11) In accordance with Ex. ibid. 9-10.

(12) Ibid. 11.

(13) B.M. 95a.

(14) Whereas in the case of Borrower there could never be an occasion for double payment, as any plea of theft whether by an armed malefactor or by an ordinary thief would involve the payment of the principal and would thus be an admission of liability and not a defence at all.

(15) I.e., R. Joseph to Abaye.

(16) Such as is the case with the Borrower.

(17) Such as in the case of a Paid Bailee. Cf. also B.M. 41b and 94b.

(18) I.e. R. Joseph who maintains that a malefactor in arms is subject to the law applicable to an ordinary thief.

(19) In corroboration of my defence.

(20) For by offering to pay the value of the cow he acquired title to all possible payments with reference to it, B.M. 34a.

(21) As this view was followed in B.M. VII, 8; 36a; 97a; Jeb. 66b; Sheb. VIII, 1 and elsewhere; cf. also 'Er. 46b.

(22) Dealt with in Ex. XXII, 14.

(23) V. p. 330, n. 3.

(24) V. p. 332, n. 5.

(25) For by offering to pay the value of the cow he acquired title to all possible payments with reference to it.
(26) V. p. 332, n. 9.
(27) Who is exempt also where the article was stolen by an ordinary thief, in which case the thief referred to in the Baraitha did not necessarily mean a malefactor in arms but an ordinary thief.
(28) To bring the ruling into accord with R. Judah though the reason stated in n.10 may not apply.
(29) V. p. 334, n. 8.
(30) That a hirer might be subject to the law of Paid Bailee, and still the Baraitha affords no support to R. Joseph.
(31) I.e. an ordinary thief who has to pay double, whereas if he would have been with arms he might perhaps have been subject to the law applicable to a robber, and there would have been no place for double payment.
(32) As the fruits protected the animal from being hurt too much.
(33) V. supra 47b. And so here the owner of the animal might plead, 'it should not have eaten'.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 58a

Rab took a particularly strong instance.[1] There can be no doubt that where the benefit was derived from the animal having consumed the fruits payment would have to be made to the extent of the benefit. Regarding, however, [the benefit derived by the animal from the lessening of] the impact, it might have been thought that the fruits served only the purpose of 'preventing a lion from [damaging] a neighbour's property',[2] so that no payment should be made even to the extent of the benefit. It is therefore indicated to us [here that even this benefit has to be paid for]. But why not say that this is so?[3] — [No payment it is true could be claimed] in the case of preventing a lion from [damaging] a neighbour's property as [the act of driving the lion away] is voluntary, but in this case the act was not voluntary.[4] Or again, in the case of preventing the lion from [damaging] a neighbour's property, no expenses were incurred [by the act of driving away the lion], but in this case here there was [pecuniary] loss attached to it.

[How did the animal fall]?[5] — R. Kahana said: It slipped in its own water. Raba, however, said: [The rule would hold good even] where another animal pushed it down. The one who explains the ruling to apply where another animal pushed it down, would certainly apply it where it slipped in its own water.[6] But the one who explains the ruling to apply where it slipped in its own water [might maintain that] where another animal pushed it down there was negligence, and the payment should be for the amount of damage done by it, as the plaintiff would be entitled to say, 'You should have made them go past one by one.'

R. Kahana said: The Mishnaic ruling applies only to the bed [into which it fell].[7] If, however, it went from one bed to another bed, the payment[8] would be for the amount of damage done by it. R. Johanan, however, said that even where it went from one bed to another bed and did so even all day long, [the payment would be made only to the extent of the benefit], unless it left the garden and returned there again with the knowledge [of the owner]. R. Papa thereupon said: Do not imagine this to mean 'unless it left the garden to the knowledge of the owner and returned there again with the knowledge of the owner', for as soon as it left the garden to the knowledge of the owner, even though it returned again without his knowledge [there would already be liability],[9] the reason being that the plaintiff might [rightly] say: Since it had once become known [to it where it can find fruit, you should have realised that] whenever it broke loose it would run to that place.

IF IT WENT DOWN THERE IN THE USUAL WAY AND DID DAMAGE, THE PAYMENT WOULD HAVE TO BE FOR THE AMOUNT OF DAMAGE DONE BY IT. R. Jeremiah raised the question: Where it had gone down there in the usual way but did damage by water resulting from giving birth,[10] what would be the legal position? If we accept the view that where there is negligence at the beginning but [damage actually results] in the end from sheer accident there is liability,[11] no question arises.[12] Where we have to ask is if we accept the view[11] that where there is negligence at the beginning, but [damage actually results] in the end from sheer accident there is exemption. What

[in that case is the law]? Should we say that this is a case where there was negligence at first but the final result was due to accident, and therefore there should be exemption, or should we say [on the contrary that] this case is one of negligence throughout, for since the owner could see that the animal was approaching the time to give birth, he should have watched

---

(1) Lit., 'he says there can be no question'.

(2) For which no payment could be demanded, this being merely an act of goodwill and kindness, v. B.B. 52a.

(3) That he is 'preventing a lion' etc.

(4) The owner of the fruit should thus be entitled to compensation.

(5) That it should be considered a mere accident and the payment should only be to the extent of the benefit.

(6) As this is certainly a matter of accident.

(7) Regarding which the whole act is considered an accident.

(8) For the beds except the first one.

(9) To the full extent of the damage.

(10) Which was apparently an accident.

(11) V. Supra 21b.

(12) That there will be liability in this case too.

it and indeed taken more care of it? — Let this remain undecided.

HOW IS PAYMENT MADE FOR THE AMOUNT OF DAMAGE DONE BY IT? BY COMPARING THE VALUE OF AN AREA IN THE FIELD REQUIRING ONE SE'AH OF SEED AS IT WAS [PREVIOUSLY] WITH WHAT ITS WORTH IS [NOW] etc. Whence is this derived? — R. Mattena said: Scripture says, And shall feed in another man's field[1] to teach that the valuation should be made in conjunction with another field. But was this [verse] and shall feed in another man's field not required to exclude public ground [from being subject to this law]? — If so,[2] Scripture would have said 'and shall feed in a neighbour's field' or ['and shall consume] another man's field.' Why then is it said in another [man's] field [unless to teach that] the valuation should be made in conjunction with another field? Let us say then that the whole import [of this verse] was to convey only this ruling, there being thus no authority to exclude public ground? — If so,[3] Scripture would have inserted this clause in the section dealing with payment, e.g., 'of the best of his own field and of the best of his own vineyard shall he make restitution [as valued] in conjunction with another field.' Why then did Scripture put it in juxtaposition with and shall feed unless to indicate that the two [rulings] are to be derived from it.[4]

How is the valuation[5] arrived at? — R. Jose b. Hanina said: [The value of] an area requiring one se'ah of seed [is determined] in proportion to the value of an area requiring sixty se'ahs of seed. R. Jannai said: [The value of] an area requiring one tarkab[6] of seed [is determined] in proportion to the value of an area requiring sixty tarkabs of seed. Hezekiah said: [The value of] each stalk [consumed is determined] in proportion to the value of sixty such stalks.[7] An objection was raised [from the following:] If it consumed one kab in two kabs [of grain], it would not be right to ask payment for their full value,[8] but the amount consumed would have to be considered as if forming a little bed which would thus be estimated. Now, does this not mean that the bed will be valued by itself?[9] — No; in [the proportion of one to] sixty.[10]

Our Rabbis taught: The valuation is made neither of a kab by itself, as this would be an advantage to him,[11] nor of an area required for a kor[12] of seed, as this would be a disadvantage to him.[11] What does this mean? — R. Papa said: What is meant is this: Neither is a kab [of grain consumed] valued in conjunction with sixty kabs, as the defendant would thereby have too great an advantage,[13] nor is a kor valued in conjunction with sixty kors, as this would mean too great a disadvantage for the defendant.[14] R. Huna b. Manoah demurred to this, saying: Why then does it say, 'nor of an area required for a kor of seed'? [According to your interpretation] should it not have been 'nor a kor'?[15] — R. Huna b. Manoah therefore said in the name of R. Aha the son of R. Ika: What is meant is this: The valuation is made neither of a kab by itself, as this would be too great an advantage to the plaintiff, nor of a kab in conjunction with an area required for a kor of seed, as this would be too great a disadvantage for the plaintiff. It must therefore be made only in conjunction with sixty [times as much].

A certain person cut down a date-tree belonging to a neighbour. When he appeared before the Exilarch, the latter said to him: 'I myself saw the place; three date-trees stood close together[16] and they were worth one hundred zuz. Go therefore and pay the other party thirty-three and a third [zuz].' Said the defendant: 'What have I to do with an Exilarch who judges in accordance with Persian Law?' He therefore appeared before R. Nahman, who said to him [that the valuation should be made] in conjunction with sixty [times as much]. Said Raba to him:[17] If the Sages ordained this valuation in the case of chattels doing damage, would they do the same in the case of damage done by Man with his body? — Abaye, however, said to Raba: In regard to damage done by Man with his body, what is your opinion [if not] that which was taught: 'If a man prunes [the berries from] a neighbour's vineyard while still in the budding stage, it has to be ascertained how much it was worth previously and how much it is worth afterwards', but nothing is said of valuation in conjunction with sixty [times as much]? But has it not been taught similarly with respect to [damage done by] Cattle? For it was taught: If [a beast] breaks off a plant, R. Jose says that the Legislators of [public enactments[18] in Jerusalem stated that if the plant was of the first year, two silver pieces[19] [should be paid] but if it was in its second year, four silver pieces [should be paid]. If it consumed young blades of grain, R. Jose the Galilean says that it has to be considered in the light of the future value of that which was left in the field. The Sages, however, say that it has to be ascertained how much it [the field] was worth [previously] and how much it is worth [now].

---

(1) Ex. XXII, 4.

(2) I.e., were it intended only for that.

(3) V. p. 337, n. 7.

(4) I.e. that public ground be excluded and that the valuation be made in conjunction with another field.

(5) Of an area requiring one se'ah of seed.

(6) I.e. half a se'ah, amounting thus to three kabs, though originally it meant two kabs.

(7) The principle underlying this difference of opinion is made clear in the Baraitha that follows.

(8) Cf. supra p. 123.

(9) And not in proportion to the value of a bigger area. This refutes the views of all the cited authorities.

(10) [I.e., either 'se'ahs', 'tarkabs' or 'stalks' as the case may be.]

(11) V. the discussion infra.

(12) I.e., thirty se'ahs; cf. Glos.

(13) As the payment would be very small owing to the fact that the deficiency of one kab in an area required for sixty kabs of seed would hardly be noticed, and so would reduce the general price very little.

(14) For the deficiency of one kor, in an area required for sixty times as much, is conspicuous, and reduces the general price too much. The valutation of a se'ah will therefore be made in proportion to sixty se'ahs.

(15) Should be valued in this way.

(16) Lit., 'in one nest', or 'place'.

(17) R. Nahman.

(18) גוזרי גזירות Admon and Hanan b. Abishalom, identical with the 'Judges of Civil Law' דייני גזירות mentioned in Keth. XIII, 1 (Rashi). Little is known of their functions and power to enable us to explain their designation (Buchler, Das Synedrion, p. 113); cf. also Geiger, Urschrift, p. 119.]

(19) I.e two ma'ahs which were a third of a denar; cf. Glos.

If it consumed grapes while still in the budding stage, R. Joshua says that they should be estimated as if they were grapes ready to be plucked off. But the Sages [here too] say that it will have to be ascertained how much it was worth [previously] and how much it is worth [now]. R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon:[1] These rulings apply where it consumed sprouts of vines or shoots of fig-trees, but where it consumed [actual] figs or half-ripe grapes they would be estimated as if they were grapes ready to be plucked off.[2] Now, it is definitely taught here, 'The Sages say that it will have to be ascertained how much it was worth [previously] and how much it is worth [now]' and it is not said [explicitly that the valuation will be made] in conjunction with sixty [times as much]. Nevertheless you must say that it is implied that [the valuation is to be made] in conjunction with sixty [times as much]. So also then here, [in the case of Man it is implied that the valuation is to be] in conjunction with Sixty [times as much].

Abaye said: R. Jose the Galilean and R. Ishmael expressed the same view [in this matter]. R. Jose the Galilean as stated by us [above],[3] and R. Ishmael as taught [elsewhere]:[4] 'Of the best of his own field and of the best of his own vineyard shall he make restitution;[5] this means the best of the field of the plaintiff and the best of the vineyard of the plaintiff. This is the view of R. Ishmael. R. Akiba, however, says: Scripture only intended to lay down that damages should be collected out of the best and this applies even more to sacred property. Nor can you say that he [R. Ishmael] meant this in the sense of R. Idi b. Abin, who said [that it deals with a case where] e.g., the cattle consumed one bed out of several beds and we could not ascertain whether its produce was meagre or fertile, so that R. Ishmael would [thus be made to] order the defendant to go and pay for a fertile bed in accordance with the value of the best bed at the time of the damage. This could not be maintained by us, for the reason that the onus probandi falls upon the claimant. R. Ishmael[6] must therefore have meant the best of anticipation, i.e., as it would have matured [at the harvest time].

The Master stated: 'R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon: These rulings apply only where it consumed sprouts of vines or shoots of fig-trees,' [thus implying that] where it consumed grapes in the budding stage they would be estimated as if they were grapes ready to be plucked off. Read [now] the concluding clause: 'Where it consumed [actual] figs or half-ripe grapes they would be estimated as if they were grapes ready to be plucked off', [implying to the contrary that] where it consumed grapes in the budding stage it would have to be ascertained how much it was worth [previously] and how much it is worth [now]. [Is this not a contradiction?] — Rabina said: Embody [the new case in the text] and teach thus: 'These rulings apply only where it consumed sprouts of vines or shoots of fig-trees, for where it consumed grapes in the budding stage, or [actual] figs or half-ripe grapes they would be estimated as if they were grapes ready to be plucked off.' But if so would R. Simeon b. Judah's view not be exactly the same as that already stated by R. Joshua? — There is a practical difference between them as to [the deduction to be made for] the depreciation of the vines [themselves, through exhaustion, if the grapes had remained there until fully ripe],[7] though the views cannot be identified.[8] Abaye, however, said: They most assuredly could be identified. For who could be the Tanna who takes into consideration the depreciation of the vine, if not R. Simeon b. Judah? For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon b. Menasya:[9] [Even] in the case of Rape no compensation is made for Pain, as the female would [in any case] have subsequently to undergo the same pain through her husband.[10] The Rabbis however said to him: A woman having intercourse by her free will is not to be compared to one having intercourse by constraint.

Abaye further said: The following Tannaim and R. Simeon b. Judah expressed on this point the same view?[11] R. Simeon b. Judah's view as stated by us [above]. Who are the other Tannaim [referred to]? — As taught: R. Jose says: Deduct the fees of the midwife,[12] but Ben 'Azzai says: Deduct food.[13] The one who says, 'deduct the fees for the midwife' would certainly deduct food,[14] but the one who says, 'deduct food', would not deduct the fees for the midwife, as the plaintiff might say, ‘My wife is a lively person and does not need a midwife.’[15] R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua in an actual case[16] followed the view of R. Nahman and valued in conjunction with sixty times [as much]. According to another report, however, R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua valued a palmtree in conjunction with the small piece of ground.[16] The law is in accordance with R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua[17] in the case of an Aramean palm,[18] but it is in accordance with the Exilarch[19] in the case of a Persian palm.[20]

Eliezer[21] Ze'era

---

(1) B. Yohai.

(2) Keth. 105a.

(3) That it will have to be considered in the light of the future value of that which was left in the field.

(4) V. supra 6b.

(5) Ex. XXII, 4.

(6) [In the case where the quality of the bed consumed by the cattle was not in doubt.]

(7) [I.e., one view would maintain that this deduction has to be made, while the other would not maintain this.]

(8) [It cannot be stated precisely which authority is of the one and which of the other view.]

(9) Keth, 39a.

(10) Proving that a deduction from the amount of the damages is made on a similar accord.

(11) That a deduction should be made on this accord.

(12) From the payment for injuring a pregnant woman resulting in a miscarriage; cf. Ex. XXI, 22 and supra 49a.

(13) I.e. the special diet which would have been necessary during the confinement period.

(14) As the special diet would have been an inevitable expense.

(15) He would therefore have spared this expense.

(16) Where a human being did damage with his body.

(17) To value in conjunction with sixty times as much where a human being did damage with his body.

(18) Which is by itself of no great value.

(19) To value the tree by itself.

(20) Which is even by itself of considerable value.

(21) [V.l. Eleazar].

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 59b

once put on a pair of black shoes and stood in the market place of Nehardea. When the attendants of the house of the Exilarch met him there, they said to him: ‘What ground have you for wearing black shoes?’[1] — He said to them: ‘I am mourning for Jerusalem.’ They said to him: ‘Are you such a distinguished person as to mourn over Jerusalem?’[2] Considering this to be a piece of arrogance on his part they brought him and put him in prison. He said to them, ‘I am a great man!’ They asked him: ‘How can we tell?’ He replied, ‘Either you ask me a legal point or let me ask you one.’ They said to him: ‘[We would prefer] you to ask.’ He then said to them: ‘If a man cuts a date-flower, what payment should he have to make?’ — They answered him: ‘The payment will be for the value of the date-flower.’ ‘But would it not have grown into dates?’[3] — They then replied: ‘The payment should be for the value of the dates.’ ‘But’, he rejoined, ‘surely it was not dates which he took from him!’[4] They then said to him: ‘You tell us.’ He replied: ‘The valuation would have to be made in conjunction with sixty times as much.’[5] They said to him: ‘What authority can you find to support you?’ — He thereupon said to them: ‘Samuel is alive and his court of law flourishes [in the town].’ They sent this problem to be considered before Samuel who answered them: ‘The statement he[6] made to you, that the valuation should be in conjunction with sixty times [as much as the damaged date-flower][5] is correct.’ They then released him.

R. SIMEON SAYS: IF IT CONSUMED RIPE FRUITS etc. On what ground?[7] — The statement of the Divine Law, And shall feed in another man's field,[8] teaching that valuation is to be made in conjunction with the field applies to produce which was still in need of a field, whereas these fruits [in the case before us],[9] since they were no more in need of a field, must be compensated at their actual value.

R. Huna b. Hiyya said that R. Jeremiah stated that Rab gave judgment [in contradistinction to the usual rule][10] in accordance with R. Meir and [on another legal point] decided the law to be in accordance with R. Simeon. He gave judgment in accordance with R. Meir on the matter taught: If the husband drew up a deed for a would-be purchaser [of a field which had been set aside for the payment of the marriage settlement of his wife] and she did not endorse it, and [when a deed on the same field was drawn up] for another purchaser she did endorse it, she has thereby lost her claim to the marriage settlement; this is the view of R. Meir.[11] R. Judah, however, says: She might still argue, 'I made the endorsement merely to gratify my husband; why therefore should you go against me?'[12] [The legal point where] he decided the law to be in accordance with R. Simeon was that which we learnt: R. SIMEON SAYS: IF IT CONSUMED RIPE FRUITS, THE PAYMENT SHOULD BE FOR RIPE FRUITS, IF ONE SE'AH [IT WOULD BE FOR] ONE SE'AH, IF TWO SE'AHS, [FOR] TWO SE'AHS.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN PUTS HIS STACKS OF CORN IN THE FIELD OF ANOTHER WITHOUT PERMISSION, AND THE ANIMAL OF THE OWNER OF THE FIELD EATS THEM, THERE IS NO LIABILITY. MOREOVER, IF IT SUFFERED HARM FROM THEM, THE OWNER (OF THE STACKS WOULD BE LIABLE. IF, HOWEVER, HE PUT THE STACKS THERE WITH PERMISSION, THE OWNER OF THE FIELD WOULD BE LIABLE. GEMARA. May we say that this Mishnah is not in accordance with Rabbi? For if in accordance with Rabbi, did he not say[13] that unless the owner of the premises explicitly took upon himself to safeguard he would not be liable?[14] — R. Papa said: [Here we were dealing with] the watchman of the barns.[15] For since he said, 'Enter and place your stacks', it surely amounted to, 'Enter and I will guard for you'.[16]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN SENT OUT SOMETHING BURNING THROUGH A DEAF MUTE, AN IDIOT, OR A MINOR [AND DAMAGE RESULTED] HE WOULD BE EXEMPT FROM THE JUDGMENTS OF MAN, BUT LIABLE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE JUDGMENTS OF HEAVEN. BUT IF HE SENT [IT] THROUGH A NORMAL PERSON, THE NORMAL PERSON WOULD BE LIABLE. IF ONE PERSON [FIRST] SUPPLIES THE FIRE AND ANOTHER THE WOOD, HE WHO SUPPLIES THE WOOD WOULD BE LIABLE.[17] WHERE, [ON THE OTHER HAND], THE FIRST SUPPLIES THE WOOD AND THE SECOND THE FIRE, HE WHO SUPPLIES THE FIRE WOULD BE LIABLE.[17] BUT WHERE ANOTHER PERSON CAME ALONG AND FANNED THE FLAME, THE ONE WHO FANNED IT WOULD BE LIABLE.[17] IF IT WAS THE WIND THAT FANNED IT, ALL WOULD BE EXEMPT.

GEMARA. Resh Lakish said in the name of Hezekiah: The Mishnaic ruling[18] holds good only where he handed over a [flickering] coal to [the deaf mute] who fanned it into flame, but if he handed over to him something already in flame he would be liable, the reason being that it was his acts that were the [immediate] cause. R. Johanan, however, said: Even where he handed something already in flame to him, he would still be exempt, the reason being that it was the handling of the deaf mute that caused the damage; he could therefore not be liable unless where he handed over to him tinder,

---

(1) Cf. Ta'an. 22a. [Tosaf. regards the black lacing as the distinguishing mark of mourning, v. also Krauss, Talm. Arch. I, 628.]

(2) In such a manner.

(3) Why then not pay for actual dates of which the owner was deprived?

(4) Why then pay for ripe dates?

(5) Including the ground occupied by them.

(6) I.e. Eliezer Ze'era.
(7) Should the valuation not be made in conjunction with the field where ripe fruits were consumed.
(8) Ex. XXII, 4.
(9) In the statement of R. Simeon.
(10) That the law does not prevail in accordance with R. Meir against R. Judah: cf. 'Er. 46b
(11) For by endorsing the deed drawn up for the second purchaser and not that drawn up for the first one, she made it evident that on the one hand she was not out to please her husband by confirming his sale, and on the other that she was finally prepared to forego her claim.
(12) Keth. 95a.
(13) Supra 47b.
(14) Why then should the owner of the field be liable where the corn was stacked with his permission?
(15) As it was the custom to pile all the stacks of the villagers in one place and appoint a guardian to look after them.
(16) In accordance with the custom of the place.
(17) For he being last is mostly to blame.
(18) Of exemption from the judgments of Man.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 60a shavings and a light, in which case it was certainly his act that was the immediate cause.[1]

BUT IF HE SENT [IT] THROUGH A NORMAL PERSON, THE NORMAL PERSON WOULD BE LIABLE etc. IF ANOTHER PERSON CAME ALONG AND [LIBBAH] FANNED IT etc. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: He who reads in the [original] text libbah[2] is not mistaken; so also he who reads in the text nibbah[3] is similarly not mistaken.[4] He who has in the text libbah[2] is not mistaken, since we find [in Scripture] be-labbath esh[5] [in a flame of fire], and so also he who has in the text nibbah[3] is not mistaken, as we find, I create nib [the movement of] the lips.[6]

IF IT WAS THE WIND THAT FANNED IT, ALL WOULD BE EXEMPT. Our Rabbis taught: Where he fanned it [along with] the wind which also fanned it, if there was enough force in his blowing to set the fire ablaze he would be liable, but if not he would be exempt. But why should he not be liable, as in the case of one winnowing [on Sabbath, who is liable] though the wind was helping him?[7] — Abaye thereupon said: We are dealing here with a case where e.g., he blew it up in one direction and the wind blew it up in a different direction.[8] Raba said: [The case is one] where e.g., he started to blow it up when the wind was only normal, [and would have been unable to set it ablaze], but there [suddenly] came on an unusual wind which made it blaze up. R. Zera said: [The case is one] where e.g., he merely increased the heat by breathing heavily on it.[9] R. Ashi said: When we say that there is liability for winnowing where the wind is helping, this applies to Sabbath where the Torah prohibited any work with a definite object,[10] whereas here [regarding damage] such an act could be considered merely as a secondary cause, and a mere secondary cause in the case of damage carries no liability.

MISHNAH. IF HE ALLOWED FIRE TO ESCAPE AND IT BURNT WOOD, STONES OR [EVEN] EARTH, HE WOULD BE LIABLE, AS IT SAYS: IF FIRE BREAK OUT AND CATCH IN THORNS SO THAT THE STACKS OF CORN, OR THE STANDING CORN, OR THE FIELD BE CONSUMED THEREWITH: HE THAT KINDLED THE FIRE SHALL SURELY MAKE RESTITUTION.[11]

GEMARA. Raba said: Why was it necessary for the Divine Law to mention [both] 'thorns', 'stacks', 'standing corn' and 'field'? They are all necessary. For if the Divine Law had mentioned [only] 'thorns', I might have said that it was only in the case of thorns that the Divine Law imposed liability because fire is found often among them and carelessness in regard to them is frequent,[12] whereas in the case of 'stacks',[13] which are not often on fire and in respect of which negligence is not usual, I might have held that there is no liability. If [again] the Divine Law had mentioned [only] 'stacks', I might have said that it was only in the case of 'stacks' that the Divine Law imposed liability as the loss involved there was considerable, whereas in the case of 'thorns' where the loss involved was slight I might have thought there was no liability. But why was standing corn' necessary [to be mentioned]? [To teach that] just as 'standing corn' is in an open place, so is everything [which is] in an open space [subject to the same law].[14] But according to R. Judah who imposes[15] liability also for concealed articles damaged by fire, why had 'standing corn' [to be mentioned]? — To include anything possessing stature.[15] Whence then did the [other] Rabbis include anything possessing stature?[16] — They derived this from [the word] 'or' [placed before] 'the standing corn'.[17] And R. Judah? — He needed [the word] 'or' as a disjunctive.[17] Whence then did the [other] Rabbis derive the disjunction? — They derived it from [the word] 'or' [placed before] 'the field'. And R. Judah? — He held that because the Divine Law inserted 'or' [before] 'the standing corn' 'it also inserted 'or' [before] 'the field'. But why was 'field' needed [to be inserted]? — To include [the case of] Fire lapping his neighbour's ploughed field, and grazing his stones.[18] But why did the Divine Law not say only 'field',[19] in which case the others would not have been necessary? They were still necessary. For if the Divine Law had said 'field' only, I might have said that anything in the field would come under the same law, but not any other thing.[20] It was therefore indicated to us [that this is not so].

R. Samuel b. Nahmani stated[21] that R. Johanan said: Calamity comes upon the world only when there are wicked persons in the world, and it always begins with the righteous, as it says: If fire break out and catch in thorns.[22] When does fire break out? Only when thorns are found nearby. It always begins, however, with the righteous, as it says: so that the stack of corn was consumed:[23] It does not say 'and it would consume the stack of corn', but 'that the stack of corn was consumed' which means that the 'stack of corn' had already been consumed.

R. Joseph learnt: What is the meaning of the verse, And none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning?[24] Once permission has been granted to the Destroyer, he does not distinguish between righteous and wicked. Moreover, he even begins with the righteous at the very outset, as it says:[25] And I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.[26] R. Joseph wept at this, saying: So much are they[27] compared to nothing![28] But Abaye [consoling him,] said: This is for their advantage, as it is written, That the righteous is taken away from the evil to come.[29]

Rab Judah stated that Rab said:

---

(1) Supra 9b.

(2) לִיבָּה (connected with להב, 'flame'), to denote blazing up.

(3) [ניבה from נבא, 'to blow up' to blow a blaze'.]

(4) For similar textual remarks by the same sage, cf. A.Z. 2a.

(5) Ex. III, 2.

(6) Isa. LVII, 19. [The blaze is provided by 'the movement of the lips', i.e., by blowing with the mouth.]

(7) Cf. Shab. VII, 2; v. also B.B. 26a.

(8) So that the wind did not help him at all.

(9) But did not actually blaze it up.

(10) Whether man did it wholly by his own body or not.

(11) Ex. XXII, 5.

(12) As thorns are usually worthless and nobody minds them.

(13) Which are of great value and are usually looked after.

(14) Excluding thus hidden articles.

(15) Supra 5b.

(16) E.g., living objects and plants [Though the latter, unlike 'stacks' are still attached to the ground. Tosaf.]

(17) Cf. supra p. 311, and also Tosaf. Hul. 86b.

(18) V. p. 347. n. 5.
(19) Which includes everything.
(20) Such as the field itself.
(21) [Having stated 'standing corn', the Torah must have added 'field' to indicate the field itself.]
(22) Ex. XXII, 5.
(23) Used metaphorically to express the righteous.
(24) Ex. XII, 22.
(25) Ezek. XXI, 8.
(26) Thus mentioning first the 'righteous' and then the 'wicked'.
(27) I.e., the righteous.
(28) That they are punished even for the wicked.
(29) Isa. LVII, 1.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 60b

A man should always enter [a town] by daytime and leave by daytime, as it say's, And none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning.[1]

Our Rabbis taught: When there is an epidemic in the town keep your feet inside [the house], as it says, And none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning,[1] and it further says, Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee;[2] and it is again said: The sword without, the terror within shall destroy.[3] Why these further citations? — Lest you might think that the advice given above[4] refers only to the night, but not to the day. Therefore, come and hear: Come, my people, enter thou into thy chamber, and shut thy doors about thee.[5] And should you say that these apprehensions apply only where there is no terror inside,[6] whereas where there is terror inside[6] it is much better to go out and sit among people in one company, again come and hear: The sword without, the terror within shall destroy,[3] implying that [even where] the terror is 'within'[6] the 'sword'[7] will destroy [more] without. In the time of an epidemic Raba used to keep the windows shut, as it is written, For death is come up into our windows.[8]

Our Rabbis taught: When there is a famine in town, withdraw your feet,[9] as stated, And there was a famine in the land; and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there;[10] and it is further said: If we say: We will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city and we shall die there.[11] Why the additional citation? — Since you might think that this advice[12] applies only where there is no danger to life [in the new settlement], whereas where there is a danger to life [in the new place] this should not be undertaken, come and hear: Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Arameans; if they save us alive, we shall live.[13]

Our Rabbis taught: When there is an epidemic in a town, one should not walk in the middle of the road, as the Angel of Death walks then in the middle of the road, for since permission has been granted him, he stalks along openly. But when there is peace in the town, one should not walk at the sides of the road, for since [the Angel of Death] has no permission he slinks along in hiding.

Our Rabbis taught: When there is an epidemic in a town nobody should enter the House of Worship[14] alone, as the Angel of Death keeps there his implements. This, however, is the case only where no pupils are being taught there[15] or where ten [males] do not pray there [together].

Our Rabbis taught: When dogs howl, [this is a sign that] the Angel of Death has come to a town. But when dogs frolic, [this is a sign that] Elijah the prophet has come to a town. This is so, however, only if there is no female among them.

When R. Ammi and R. Assi were sitting before R. Isaac the Smith, one of them said to him: 'Will the Master please tell us some legal points?' while the other said: 'Will the Master please give us some homiletical instruction?' When he commenced a homiletical discourse he was prevented by the one, and when he commenced a legal discourse he was prevented by the other. He therefore said to them: I will tell you a parable: To what is this like? To a man who has had two wives, one young and one old. The young one used to pluck out his white hair, whereas the old one used to pluck out his black hair. He thus finally remained bald on both sides. He further said to them: I will accordingly tell you something which will be equally interesting to both of you:[16] If fire break out and catch in thorns; 'break out' implies 'of itself'. He that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution. The Holy One, blessed be He, said: It is incumbent upon me to make restitution for the fire which I kindled. It was I who kindled a fire in Zion as it says, And He hath kindled a fire in Zion which hath devoured the foundations thereof,[17] and it is I who will one day build it anew by fire, as it says, For I, [saith the Lord] will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and I will be the glory in the midst of her.[18] On the legal side, the verse commences with damage done by chattel,[19] and concludes with damage done by the person,[20] [in order] to show that Fire implies also human agency.[21]

Scripture says:[22] And David longed, and said, Oh that one would give me water to drink of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate. And the three mighty men broke through the host of the Philistines and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem that was by the gate etc. What was his difficulty?[23] — Raba stated that R. Nahman had said: His difficulty was regarding concealed articles damaged by fire[24] — whether the right ruling was that of R. Judah[25] or of the Rabbis;[26] and they gave him the solution, whatever it was. R. Huna, however, said: [The problem was this:] There were there[27] stacks of barley which belonged to Israelites but in which Philistines had hidden themselves, and what he asked was whether it was permissible to rescue oneself through the destruction of another's property.[28] The answer they despatched to him was: [Generally speaking] it is forbidden to rescue oneself through the destruction of another's property[29] you however are King and a king may break [through fields belonging to private persons] to make a way [for his army], and nobody is entitled to prevent him [from doing so].[30] But [some] Rabbis, or, as [also] read, Rabbah b. Mari, said: There were there[31] [both] stacks of barley belonging to Israelites and stacks of lentils belonging to the Philistines.[32] The problem on which instruction was needed was whether it would be permissible to take the stacks of barley that belonged to the Israelites and put them before the beasts [in the battle field], on condition of [subsequently] paying for them with the stacks of lentils that belonged to the Philistines. [The reply] they despatched to him [was]: If the wicked restore the pledge, give again the robbery,[33] [implying that] even where the robber [subsequently] pays for the 'robbery', he still remains 'wicked'. You, however, are King and a king may break through [fields of private owners] making thus a way [for his army], and nobody is entitled to prevent him [from doing so]. If we accept the view that he wanted to exchange,[34] we can quite understand how in one verse it is written, Where was a plot of ground full of lentils,[35] and in another verse it is written, Where was a plot of ground full of barley.[36] If we, however, take the view that he wanted to burn them[37] down, what need was there to have these two verses?[38] — He, however, might say to you that there were also there stacks of lentils which belonged to Israelites and in which Philistines were hidden.[39] Now on the view that he wanted to burn them[37] down, we can quite understand why it is written, But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it.[40] But according to the view that he wanted to exchange, what would be the meaning of and he defended it?[41] — That he did not allow them to exchange. According to [these] two views, we can quite understand why there are two verses.

---

(1) V. p. 348, n. 9.

(2) Isa. XXVI, 20.

(3) Deut. XXXII, 25.

(4) To keep indoors.

(5) Isa. XXVI, 20.

(6) The house.

(7) Of the Angel of Death.

(8) Jer. IX, 20.
(9) I.e., migrate to another place; see also B.M. 75b.
(10) Gen. XII, 10.
(11) II Kings VII, 4.
(12) Implied in Gen. XII, 10.
(13) II Kings VII, 4.
(14) [בית הכנסת Lit., 'House of meeting', the Synagogue. The origin of the term as applied to a synagogue is uncertain. It probably has its source in the assemblies called together for the purpose of considering problems of an economic and social character. These were probably attended with some sort of prayer and out of these evolved the regular meetings for prayers, v. Zeitlin, The Origin of the Synagogue in the Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research, 1930-31, p. 75 ff.]
(15) In the House of Worship.
(16) Ex. XXII, 5.
(17) Lam. IV, 11.
(18) Zech. II, 9.
(19) As the expression 'if a fire break out' means 'break out itself without any direct act on the part of man'; cf. supra p. 115.
(20) By saying, 'He that kindled a fire', implying that there was some direct act on the part of man to kindle the fire.
(21) V. supra p. 115.
(22) II Sam. XXIII, 15-16.
(23) For as 'water' is homiletically used as a metaphor expressing learning, it was aggadically assumed here that instead of actual water David was in need of some legal instruction, especially since mention was made in the verse of 'the gate' which was then the seat of judgment.
(24) As some of his men burned down a stack in which articles were hidden, v. p. 353. n. 6.
(25) Who imposes liability.
(26) Who maintain exemption.
(27) Near the battle-field.
(28) As the warriors of David burned the stacks down for strategical purposes and the problem was whether compensation was to be made or not.
(29) I.e. compensation should be made.
(30) V. Sanh. 20a.
(31) V. p. 351, n. 11.
(32) The enemy.
(33) Ezek. XXXIII, 15.
(34) Stacks of barley belonging to Israelites for stacks of lentils that belong to the enemy.
(35) II Sam. XXIII, 11.
(36) I Chron. XI, 13.
(37) I.e., the stacks of barley belonging to the Israelites without repaying them with the lentils of the enemy.
(38) In fact the two verses contradict each other.
(39) And which had thus also to be burned down.
(40) Ibid. 12. This would show that he did not let his warriors burn the stacks as this was not permissible by strict law.
(41) Since there was no question there of burning down.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 61a

But according to the view that his inquiry concerned concealed goods in the case of Fire, what need was there for the verses?[1] — He might say to you that besides [the problem of] hidden goods [in the case of Fire], one of the other problems [referred to above][2] was asked by him. Now according to the [other] two views we quite understand why it is written, But he would not drink thereof,[3] for he said, 'Since there is a [general] prohibition[4] I do not want it.'[5] But according to the view that his inquiry concerned hidden goods[6] in the case of Fire, was it not a traditional teaching which was despatched to him, [and that being so,][7] what would be the meaning of 'But he would not drink thereof'?[8] —

[The meaning would be] that he did not want to quote this teaching in their names,[9] for he said: 'This has been transmitted to me from the Court of Law presided over by Samuel of Ramah, that no halachic matter may be quoted in the name of one who surrenders himself to meet death for words of the Torah.'

But he poured it out unto the Lord.[3] We quite understand this according to the [other] two views, as he acted thus for the sake of Heaven.[10] But according to the view that [his inquiry concerned] hidden goods in the case of Fire, what would be the meaning [of this verse], 'but he poured it out unto the Lord'? — That he repeated this [halachic statement] in the name of general traditional learning.[11]

MISHNAH. IF IT CROSSED A FENCE FOUR CUBITS HIGH OR A PUBLIC ROAD[12] OR A CANAL, THERE WOULD BE NO LIABILITY.[13]

GEMARA. But was it not taught: 'If it crossed a fence four cubits high there would [still] be liability'? — R. Papa thereupon said: The Tanna of our ruling [here] was reckoning downwards; [at the height of] six cubits there would be exemption; at five cubits, there would be exemption; down to [the height of] four cubits[14] there would [still] be exemption. The Tanna of the Baraitha [was on the other hand] reckoning upwards; at [the height of] two cubits, there would be liability; of three cubits,[15] there would be liability; up to [the height of] four cubits, there would [still] be liability.

Raba said: [The height of] four cubits stated [in the Mishnah] as not involving liability would also suffice even where the fire passed over to a field of thorns. R. Papa, however, said: [The height of] four cubits should be calculated from the top of the thorns.

Rab said: The Mishnaic ruling applies only where the fire was rising in a column, but where it was creeping along there would be liability, even if it crossed a public road of about [the width of] a hundred cubits. Samuel [on the other hand] said that the Mishnah deals with a creeping fire; for in the case of a fire rising in a column there would be exemption if it crossed a public road of any width whatsoever. It was, however, taught in accordance with Rab: This ruling[16] applies only where it was rising in a column; if it was creeping along, and wood happened to be in its path, there would be liability were it even to pass over a public ground of about the width of a hundred mil.[17] If, however, it crossed a river or pool eight cubits wide, there would be exemption. A PUBLIC ROAD. Who was the Tanna [who laid this down]? — Raba said: He was R. Eliezer, as we have indeed learnt: 'R. Eliezer says: [If it was] sixteen cubits [wide] like the road in a public thoroughfare, [there would be exemption].[18]

OR A CANAL. Rab said: It means an actual river. Samuel, however, said: It means a pond for watering fields. The one who says it is an actual river [would maintain the same ruling[19]] even where there was no water there.[19] But the one who says it means a pond for watering fields [would hold that] so long as there was water there the ruling would apply, but not where no water was there.

Elsewhere we have learnt: 'Divisions [of fields] with respect to Pe'ah[20] are effected by the following: a brook, a shelulith, a private road and a public road.[21] What is shelulith? — Rab Judah stated that Samuel had said: A [low lying] place where rainwater collects.[22] R. Bibi, however, said on behalf of R. Johanan: A pond of water which [as it were] distributes spoil[23] to the banks. The one who says that it means a [low-lying] place where rain water collects would certainly apply the ruling to a pond of water,[24] but the one who says that it means a pond of water would on the other hand maintain that [low-lying] places where rain-water collects would not cause a division, as these

---

(1) I.e. the whole description of the barley and lentils.

(2) I.e., either to burn the stacks down or to exchange those of Israelites for those of the enemy.

(3) II Sam. XXIII, 16.
(4) In the case of an ordinary man.
(5) I.e., 'to avail myself of the royal prerogative in this respect.'
(6) [And the question was whether those of his men who had burnt the stack were to be made to pay for the hidden goods, cf. Tosaf. and Maharsha, מהדורא בתרא].
(7) [That the matter did not directly affect him.]
(8) Why then did he not accept it?
(9) [The names of those who volunteered to break through the enemy's lines (v. II Sam. XXIII, 16) in order to bring him a decision.]
(10) And did not take advantage of his privileged position as king.
(11) [And not in 'their names'.]
(12) Sixteen cubits wide.
(13) As this could not have been expected; it is thus considered a mere accident.
(14) Including a fence of the height of four cubits.
(15) But not including a fence of the height of four cubits. It thus follows that there is no contradiction between the two statements as where the fence was of the height of four cubits there will be exemption according to all views.
(16) Of exemption in the case of a fire crossing a public road.
(17) I.e., two thousand cubits; v. Glos.
(18) V. next Mishnah.
(19) On account of its great width.
(20) I.e., to leaving the corners of each separate field for the poor; see supra p. 148 and Glos.
(21) Pe'ah II, 1; cf. also B.B. 55a.
(22) As the term 'shalal' also denotes 'to gather'; cf. Bez. 7a.
(23) As shalal means 'spoil'; cf. Num. XXXI, 11.
(24) As this is of a more permanent nature.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 61b should more properly be called the receptacles of the land.[1]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN KINDLES A FIRE ON HIS OWN [PREMISES], UP TO WHAT DISTANCE CAN THE FIRE PASS ON [BEFORE HE BECOMES FREE OF LIABILITY]? R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH SAYS: IT HAS TO BE REGARDED AS BEING IN THE CENTRE OF AN AREA REQUIRING A KOR[2] OF SEED.[3] R. ELIEZER[4] SAYS: [A DISTANCE OF] SIXTEEN CUBITS [SUFFICES], EQUAL TO [THE WIDTH OF] A ROAD IN A PUBLIC THOROUGHFARE.[5] R. AKIBA SAYS FIFTY CUBITS. R. SIMEON SAYS: [SCRIPTURE SAYS] HE WHO KINDLED THE FIRE SHOULD MAKE RESTITUTION,[6] [WHICH SHOWS THAT] ALL DEPENDS UPON THE FIRE.

GEMARA. Did R. Simeon not hold that there is some fixed limit in the case of Fire?[7] Have we not learnt: 'No man shall fix[8] an oven on a ground floor unless there is a space of four cubits from the top of it [to the ceiling]. If he fixes it on an upper floor [he may not do so][8] unless there will be under it three handbreadths of cement; in the case, however, of a portable stove, one handbreadth will suffice. If [after all these precautions] damage has nevertheless resulted, payment must be made for the damage. R. Simeon says that these limits were only to intimate that if damage resulted [after they were observed] there should be exemption.[9] [Does this not prove that R. Simeon maintained a minimum limit of precaution?] — R. Nahman therefore stated that Rabbah b. Abbahu said: [The meaning of R. Simeon's phrase 'all thus depends upon the fire' is that] all should depend upon the height of the fire, [and that no general limits could be fixed].[10] R. Joseph, [however,] stated that Rab Judah said on behalf of Samuel: The halachah is in accordance with R. Simeon.[11] So also said R. Nahman, that Samuel said that the halachah was in accordance with R. Simeon.[11]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN SETS FIRE TO A STACK OF CORN IN WHICH THERE HAPPEN TO BE ARTICLES AND THESE ARE BURNT, R. JUDAH SAYS THAT PAYMENT SHOULD BE MADE FOR ALL THAT WAS THEREIN, WHEREAS THE SAGES SAY THAT NO PAYMENT SHOULD BE MADE EXCEPT FOR A STACK OF WHEAT OR FOR A STACK OF BARLEY. [WHERE FIRE WAS SET TO A BARN TO WHICH] A GOAT HAD BEEN FASTENED AND NEAR WHICH WAS A SLAVE [LOOSE] AND ALL WERE BURNT WITH THE BARN, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY.[12] IF, HOWEVER, THE SLAVE HAD BEEN CHAINED TO IT, AND THE GOAT WAS LOOSE NEAR BY IT, AND ALL WERE BURNT WITH IT, THERE WOULD BE EXEMPTION.[13] THE SAGES, HOWEVER, AGREE WITH R. JUDAH[14] IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO SET FIRE TO A CASTLE THAT THE PAYMENT SHOULD BE FOR ALL THAT WAS KEPT THEREIN, AS IT IS SURELY THE CUSTOM OF MEN TO KEEP [VALUABLES] IN [THEIR] HOMES.[15]

GEMARA. R. Kahana said: The difference [of opinion][16] was only where the man kindled the fire on his own [premises], from which it passed on and consumed [the stack standing] in his neighbour's premises, R. Judah imposing liability for damage done to Tamun[17] in the case of Fire whereas, the Rabbis[18] grant exemption. But if he kindled the fire on the premises of his neighbour, both agreed that he would have to pay for all that was there.[19] Said Raba to him: 'If so, why does it say in the concluding clause, THE SAGES, HOWEVER, AGREE WITH R. JUDAH IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO SET FIRE TO A CASTLE THAT THE PAYMENT SHOULD BE FOR ALL THAT WAS KEPT THEREIN'? Now why not draw the distinction in the same case by making the text run thus: These statements apply only in the case where be kindled the fire on his own [premises], whence it travelled and consumed [the stacks standing] in his neighbour's premises; but where he kindled the fire in the premises of his neighbour, all would agree that he should pay for all that was kept there? — Raba therefore said: They differed in both cases. They differed where he kindled the fire in his own [premises] whence it travelled and consumed [stacks standing] in his neighbour's premises, R. Judah imposing liability to pay for Tamun in the case of Fire, whereas the [other] Rabbis hold that he is not liable [to pay for Tamun in the case of Fire].[20] They also differed in the case where he kindled a fire in the premises of his neighbour, R. Judah holding that he should pay for everything that was there, including even purses [of money], whereas the Rabbis held that it was only for utensils which were usually put away in the stacks, stich as e.g. threshing sledges and cattle harnesses that payment would have to be made, but for articles not usually kept in stacks no payment would have to be made.

Our Rabbis taught: If a man sets fire to a stack of corn in which there were utensils and they were burnt, R. Judah says that payment should be made for all that was stored there, whereas the Sages say that no payment should be made except for a stack of wheat or for a stack of barley, and that the space occupied by the utensils has to be considered as if it was full of corn.[21]

---

(1) And should therefore not cause the fields to be considered separated from one another.

(2) V. Glos.

(3) As fire when rising in columns could not be expected to pass on to further distances.

(4) B. Hyrcanus.

(5) V. p. 355, n. 10.

(6) Ex. XXII, 5.

(7) [Assuming that what R. Simeon means is that it all depends on the damage caused by the fire irrespective of the distance.]

(8) I.e., the neighbours have the right to prevent him from doing so.

(9) B.B. II, 2.

(10) But each case should be considered in accordance with its own circumstances.

(11) [Only of this our Mishnah, but not of B.B. (Rashal).]

(12) For the goat and for the barn, but no liability whatever for the slave, for, since he was loose, he should have escaped.

(13) For the goat and even for the barn, for since the slave was chained a capital charge is involved, and all civil liabilities merge in capital charges; v. supra p. 113 and p. 192.

(14) Who ordains payment even for concealed articles.

(15) The law about hidden goods could therefore not be applicable in this case.

(16) Between the Sages and R. Judah

(17) I.e., something hidden; v. Glos.

(18) The Sages.

(19) For the act of trespass.

(20) Even for utensils which are customarily kept in stacks.

(21) For which payment will be made.

These statements apply only to the case where he kindled the fire on his own [premises] whence it travelled and consumed [the stack standing] in the premises of his neighbour; but where he kindled the fire in the premises of his neighbour, all agree[1] that he would have to pay for all that was kept there.[2] R. Judah, however, agreed with the Sages that in the case where a man granted his neighbour the loan of a particular place [in his field] for the purpose of piling up a stack, if [the borrower of the place] piled up stacks and hid [some valuable articles there][3] no payment would have to be made except for the value of the stack alone.[4] [So also where permission was granted] for the purpose of piling up stacks of wheat, and he piled up stacks of barley, or [permission was given for] barley and he piled up wheat, or even where he piled up wheat [for which the permission was granted], but covered it with barley, or again where he piled up barley but covered it with wheat; [in these cases] no payment would be made except for the value of the barley alone.[5]

Raba said: If a man gives a gold denar to a woman and says to her, 'Be careful with it, as it is a silver coin', if she damaged it she would have to pay for a gold denar because he could [rightly] plead against her: 'What business had you to damage it?' But if she was [merely] careless with it,[6] she would have to pay only for a silver denar, as she could [rightly] plead against him: 'It was only silver that I undertook to take care of, but I never undertook to take care of gold.' Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi: 'Do you state this in the name of Raba? We derive it quite definitely from the Baraitha [which states]: [If a man piled up] wheat [for which the permission was granted], but covered it with barley, or again [if he piled up] barley but covered it up with wheat, no payment would be made except for the value of the barley alone. Now, does this not prove that he is entitled to plead against the plaintiff: 'It was only barley that I undertook to take care of?' Here too she is surely entitled to plead against the depositor, 'I never undertook to take care of gold.'

Rab said: I have heard a new point with reference to the view of R. Judah [in the Mishnah here], but do not know what it is. Said Samuel to him: Does Abba[7] really not know what he heard with reference to R. Judah who imposes liability for damage done to Tamun in the case of Fire? It is that the judges must make the ordinance enacted for the benefit of a robbed person[8] extend also to the case of Fire.

Amemar raised the question: Would they similarly make the ordinance enacted for the benefit of a robbed person extend also to the case of an informer or not? According to the view[9] that we should not give judgment [against the defendant] in cases where the damage was [not actually done but] merely caused [by him],[10] there could be no question that also against informers we should not give judgment. But the question could still be raised according to the view that we should give judgment [against the defendant even] in cases where the damage was [not actually done but effectively and directly] caused by him.[10] Would the judges make the ordinance enacted for the benefit of a robbed person extend also to the case of an informer so that the plaintiff would by taking an oath [as to the exact amount of his loss] be paid accordingly, or should this perhaps not be so? — Let this remain undecided.

A certain man kicked another's money-box into the river. The owner came [into Court] and said: 'So much and so much did I have in it.' R. Ashi was sitting and pondering on it: What should be the law in such a case? — Rabina said to R. Aha the son of Raba, or, as others report, R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: Is this not exactly what was stated in the Mishnah? For we learnt: 'THE SAGES AGREE WITH R. JUDAH IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO SET FIRE TO A CASTLE, THAT PAYMENT SHOULD BE FOR ALL THAT WAS KEPT THEREIN, AS IT IS SURELY THE CUSTOM OF MEN TO KEEP [VALUABLES] IN [THEIR] HOMES. [Is this not equivalent to the case in hand?][11] — He, however, said to him: If he would have pleaded that he had money there, it would indeed have been the same.[11] But we are dealing with a case where he pleads that he had jewels there. What should then be the legal position? Do people keep jewels in a money-box or not? — Let this remain undecided.

R. Yemar said to R. Ashi: If he pleads that he had silver cups in the castle [which was burnt], what would be the law? — He answered him: We consider whether he was a wealthy man who was [likely] to have silver cups, or whether he was a trustworthy man with whom people would deposit such things. [If he is,] he would be allowed to swear and be reimbursed accordingly, but if not, he would not be believed [in his allegations without corroborative evidence].

R. Adda the son of R. Iwya said to R. Ashi: What is the [practical] difference between gazlan[12] and hamsan?[13] — He replied: A hamsan [one who expropriates forcibly] offers payment [for what he takes], whereas a gazlan does not make payment. The other rejoined: If he is prepared to make payment, how can you call him hamsan? Did R. Huna not say[14] that [even] where the vendor was [threatened to be] hanged [unless he would agree] to sell, the sale would be a valid sale?[15] — This, however, is no contradiction, as in that case, the vendor did [finally][16] say 'I agree', whereas here [in the case of hamsan] he never said 'I agree'.[17]

---

(1) [Tosaf. omits 'all agree that', and take this passage as a continuation of the words of the Sages.]

(2) According to Raba this refers only to utensils which are usually kept in stacks.

(3) And it so happened that they were all burned down by a fire kindled by the owner of the field.

(4) As the owner of the field knew only of the stacks.

(5) As where permission was granted for barley the owner of the field could not have expected that wheat would be piled up. Even where permission was given for wheat, if the stacks were covered with barley, the owner of the field can plead that he only noticed barley.

(6) And the liability upon her is only because of her undertaking to keep it as an unpaid bailee.

(7) Which was the personal name of Rab.

(8) That where the amount of the loss cannot be established by proper evidence the plaintiff is entitled to take an oath as to the loss he sustained; v. Shebu. VII, 1.

(9) Infra 117b.

(10) Such as, e.g., in the case of informers.

(11) For just as it is the custom of men to keep valuables in their homes, it is surely the custom of men to keep money in money boxes.

(12) I.e. robber.

(13) I.e., violent person.

(14) B.B. 47b.

(15) For since he took the money the sale could not be called forced.

(16) After the pressure brought to bear upon him.

(17) The sale could therefore not become valid.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 62b

MISHNAH. IF A SPARK ESCAPES FROM UNDERNEATH A HAMMER AND DOES DAMAGE, THERE WOULD BE LIABILITY. IF WHILE A CAMEL LADEN WITH FLAX WAS PASSING THROUGH A PUBLIC THOROUGHFARE THE FLAX GOT INTO A SHOP AND CAUGHT FIRE BY COMING IN CONTACT WITH THE SHOPKEEPER'S CANDLE, AND SET ALIGHT THE WHOLE BUILDING, THE OWNER OF THE CAMEL WOULD BE LIABLE.[1] IF, HOWEVER, THE SHOPKEEPER LEFT HIS CANDLE OUTSIDE [HIS SHOP], HE WOULD BE LIABLE.[2] R. JUDAH SAYS: IF IT WAS A CHANUKAH[3] CANDLE THE SHOPKEEPER WOULD NOT BE LIABLE.[4]

GEMARA. Rabina said in the name of Raba: From the statement of R. Judah we can learn that it is ordained to place the Chanukah candle within ten handbreadths [from the ground]. For if you assume [that it can be placed even] above ten handbreadths, why did R. Judah say that in the case of a Chanukah candle there would be exemption? Why should the plaintiff not plead against him: 'You should have placed it above the reach of the camel and its rider?' Does this therefore not prove that it is ordained to place it within the [first] ten handbreadths? — It can, however, be argued that this is not so. For it could still be said that it might be placed even above the height of ten handbreadths, and as for your argument 'You ought to have placed it above the reach of the camel and its rider', [it might be answered that] since he was occupied with the performance of a religious act, the Rabbis could not [rightly] make it so troublesome to him.[5] R. Kahana said that R. Nathan b. Minyomi expounded in the name of R. Tanhum:[6] 'If the Chanukah candle is placed above [the height of] twenty cubits it is disqualified [for the purpose of the religious performance],[7] like a sukkah[8] and an alley-entry.[9]

C H A P T E R V I I

MISHNAH. THERE IS MORE FREQUENTLY OCCASION FOR THE MEASURE OF DOUBLE PAYMENT[10] [TO BE APPLIED] THAN THE MEASURE OF FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENTS,[11] SINCE THE MEASURE OF DOUBLE PAYMENT APPLIES BOTH TO A THING POSSESSING THE BREATH OF LIFE AND A THING WHICH DOES NOT POSSESS THE BREATH OF LIFE, WHEREAS THE MEASURE OF FOUR-FOLD AND FIVE-FOLD PAYMENTS[11] HAS NO APPLICATION EXCEPT FOR AN OX AND A SHEEP [RESPECTIVELY] ALONE, AS IT SAYS 'IF A MAN STEAL AN OX OR A SHEEP AND KILL IT OR SELL IT, HE SHALL PAY FIVE OXEN FOR AN OX AND FOUR SHEEP FOR A SHEEP.'[12] ONE WHO STEALS [ARTICLES ALREADY STOLEN] IN THE HANDS OF A THIEF NEED NOT MAKE DOUBLE PAYMENT,[13] AS ALSO HE WHO SLAUGHTERS OR SELLS [THE ANIMAL] WHILE IN THE POSSESSION OF [ANOTHER] THIEF HAS NOT TO MAKE FOURFOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT.

GEMARA. That the measure of double payment applies both in the case of a thief and in the case of [an unpaid bailee falsely] alleging a theft,[14] whereas the measure of four-fold or five-fold payments has no application except in the case of a thief alone — [this, be it noted], is not taught here. This [omission] supports the view of R. Hiyya b. Abba, for R. Hiyya b. Abba stated that R. Johanan said: He who falsely alleges a theft [to account for the absence] of a deposit [entrusted to him], may have to make double payment;[14] so also if he slaughtered or sold it he may have to make four-fold or five-fold payment.[15] Some read as follows: Shall we say that this [omission] supports the view of R. Hiyya b. Abba who said in the name of R. Johanan: He who falsely alleges a theft [to account for the absence] of a deposit [entrusted to him] may have to make double payment; so also if he slaughtered or sold it, he may have to make four-fold or five-fold payment'? — But does your text say, 'There is no difference between [this[16] and that[17] except . . .]'? What it says is, THERE IS MORE FREQUENT OCCASION. — While some points were stated in the text others were omitted.[18]

AS THE MEASURE OF DOUBLE PAYMENT APPLIES BOTH TO A THING POSSESSING THE BREATH OF LIFE AND TO A THING WHICH DOES NOT POSSESS THE BREATH OF LIFE etc. Whence is this derived? As our Rabbis taught: For every matter of trespass[19] is a generalisation; whether it be for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment, is a specification; or for any manner of lost thing generalises again. We have thus here a generalisation preceding a specification which is in its turn followed by another generalisation,[20] and in such cases we include only that which is similar to the specification. Just as the specification here mentions an object which is movable and which has an intrinsic value, there should therefore be included any object which is movable and which has an intrinsic value. Real estate is thus excluded,[21] not being movable; slaves are similarly excluded as they are on the same footing [in the eye of the law] with real estate;[22] bills are similarly excluded, as though they are movable, they have no intrinsic value; sacred property is also excluded as the text speaks of 'his neighbour'. But since the specification mentions a living thing whose carcass would cause defilement whether by touching or by carrying,[23] [why not say] there should be included any living thing whose carcass similarly causes defilement whether by touching or by carrying[24] so that birds would not be included?[25] — How can you seriously say this? Is not raiment[26] mentioned here? It may, however, be said that it is only regarding objects possessing life that we have argued.[27] Why then not say in the case of objects possessing life that it is only a thing whose carcass causes defilement by touching and carrying that is included, whereas a thing whose carcass does not cause defilement by touching and carrying should not be included,

---

(1) V. supra 22a.

(2) As he is to blame for placing his candle outside his shop.

(3) Feast of Dedication.

(4) As he was entitled to place the Chanukah candle outside.

(5) As to make him place his Chanukah candle on a higher level.

(6) V. Shab. 21a.

(7) As when placed at such a high level it will not be noticed by passersby and publicity will not be given to the miracle.

(8) V. Glos. Cf. Suk. I, 1.

(9) V. 'Er, I, 1. An alley where a post or a stake would be required to be placed at the entrance for the purpose of enabling the inmates of that area to carry their domestic objects on the Sabbath day.

(10) For theft, in accordance with Ex. XXII, 3.

(11) For the slaughtering (or selling) of a sheep or ox respectively; cf. ibid. XXI, 37.

(12) Ibid.

(13) Since the article had in any case already passed out of the possession of the true owner.

(14) In accordance with Ex. XXII, 8.

(15) Infra p. 369.

(16) The measure of double payment.

(17) The measure of four-fold or five-fold payment.

(18) The omission of a particular point should therefore not be taken as a proof.

(19) Ex. XXII, 8.

(20) V. supra 54a.

(21) From the law of double payment.

(22) For which cf. Lev. XXV, 46.

(23) Lev. XI 39-40.

(24) Ibid. 26-28.

(25) As these do not cause defilement either by touching or by carrying.

(26) Which is not a living object at all.

(27) That they should be such that their carcasses would cause defilement whether by touching or by carrying.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 63a

as each item in a generalisation and specification[1] is expounded by itself,[2] so that birds would not be included? — If so, the Divine Law should have inserted only one item in the specification.[3] But which item should the Divine Law have inserted? For were the Divine Law to have inserted only 'ox' I might have suggested that an animal which was eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar[4] should be included, but one which was not eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar[5] should not be included. If on the other hand the Divine Law had inserted only 'ass'[6] I might have thought that an animal which is subject to the sanctity of first birth[7] should be included but that one which is not subject to the sanctity of first birth[8] should not be included. [Why then still not exclude birds whose carcasses would, unlike those of the ox and the ass, defile neither by touching nor by carrying?] — It may still be said that if so, the Divine Law would have inserted 'ox' and 'ass'. Why then was 'sheep' inserted, unless to indicate the inclusion of birds [which would otherwise have been excluded]? But still why not say that you can [only] include birds which are [ritually] clean[9] for food, as these in some way resemble sheep in that they defile the garments worn by him who swallows them[10] [after they have become nebelah],[11] whereas birds [ritually] unclean for food[12] which carry no defilement and do not cause the defilement of garments worn by him who swallows them[13] should not be included? — [The term] 'all' is an amplification.[14] [Does this mean to say that] whenever the Divine Law uses [the word] 'all' it is an amplification? What about tithes, where 'all' occurs and we nevertheless expounded it as a case of generalisation and specification? For it was taught: And thou shalt bestow that money for all that thy soul lusteth after[15] is a generalisation; for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink is a specification; or for all that thy soul desireth is again a generalisation. Now, where a generalisation precedes a specification which is in its turn followed by another generalisation, you include only that which is similar to the specification. As then the specification [here] mentions produce obtained from produce[16] which springs from the soil[17] there may also be included all kinds of produce obtained from produce[18] which springs from the soil.[19] [Does this not prove that the expression 'all' was taken as a generalisation, and not as an amplification?][20] — It may, however, be said that [the expression] 'for all'[15] is only a generalisation, whereas 'all' would be an amplification.[21] Or if you wish I may say that [the term] 'all' is also a generalisation, but in this case 'all' is an amplification. For at the very outset we find here a generalisation preceding a specification followed in its turn by another generalisation, as it is written: If a man deliver unto his neighbour,[22] which is a generalisation, money or stuff which is a specification, to keep which generalises again. Should you assume that this verse for any matter of trespass etc. was similarly inserted in order to give us a generalisation preceding a specification followed in its turn by another generalisation, why did the Divine Law not insert these items of the specification [of the latter verse] along with the items of the former generalisation, specification and generalisation?[23] Why was the verse for any matter of trespass inserted at all, unless to prove that [this 'all'] was meant as an amplification?[24] But now that you have decided that the term 'all' is an amplification,[25] why do I need all these terms of the specification?[26] — One to exclude real estate, a second to exclude slaves and the third to exclude bills; 'raiment' to exclude articles which have no specification;[27] 'or for any manner of lost thing' was meant as a basis for the view of R. Hiyya b. Abbah, as R. Hiyya b. Abba reported[28] that R. Johanan said:

---

(1) [MS.M. omits 'in a . . . . specification'.]

(2) V. infra 64b.

(3) Regarding objects possessing life.

(4) As was the case with ox.

(5) Such as an ass, horse, camel and the like.

(6) Which would include also animals not eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar.

(7) As is the case with ass; cf. Ex. XIII, 13.

(8) Such as horses and camels and the like.

(9) Deut. XIV, 11.

(10) Cf. Hul. 100b.

(11) I.e., a living creature which lost its life not through the prescribed method of ritual slaughter; cf. Glos.

(12) Enumerated in Lev. XI, 13-20 and Deut. XIV, 12-19.

(13) Cf. Hul. loc. cit.

(14) I.e., the term 'all' does more than generalise, for it includes everything, v. supra p. 317. n. 7.

(15) Deut. XIV, 26.

(16) Such as wine from grapes.

(17) Which characterises also cattle.

(18) Excluding water, salt and mushrooms.

(19) Thus excluding fishes. V. supra p. 317.

(20) Which would have included all kinds of food and drink.

(21) V. p. 318, n. 2.

(22) Ex. XXII, 6.

(23) In Ex. XXII, 6.

(24) [That is, with reference to the double payment, whereas the generalisation in the preceding verse refers to the oath (v. Shebu. 43a)].
(25) V. p. 366, n. 3.
(26) Ox, ass, sheep or raiment.
(27) According to Rashi it means that which has no distinguishing mark, but according to Tosaf, that which is not defined by measure, weight or number; see also Shebu. 42b and B.M. 47a.
(28) Supra 57a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 63b

He who falsely alleges the theft [to account for the non-production] of a find,[1] may have to make double payment,[2] as it says, 'for any manner of lost thing whereof one saith . . .'[3]

We have learnt elsewhere:[4] [If a man says to another] 'Where is my deposit?', and the bailee says 'It was lost', whereupon [the depositor says], 'I call upon you to swear' and the bailee says, 'So be it',[5] if witnesses testify against him that he himself had consumed it, he has to pay [only] the principal,[6] but if he admits [this] of himself, he has to pay the principal together with a fifth and a trespass offering.[7] [If the depositor says] 'Where is my deposit?', and the bailee answers 'It was stolen!', [whereupon the depositor says] 'I call on you to swear', and the bailee says, 'So be it',[5] if witnesses testify against him that he himself had stolen it, he has to make double payment,[8] but if he admits [this] on his own accord, he has to pay the principal together with a fifth and a trespass offering.[7] It is thus stated here that it is only where the bailee falsely alleges theft that he has to make double payment, whereas if he falsely alleges loss, he has not to make double payment. Again, even where he falsely alleges theft it is only where [he confirms the allegation] by an oath that he has to make double payment, whereas where no oath [follows] he has not to make double payment. What is the Scriptural authority for all this? — As the Rabbis taught: If the thief be found;[9] this verse deals with a bailee[10] who falsely alleges theft.[11] Or perhaps not so, but with the thief himself?[12] — As, however, it is further stated, If the thief be not found,[13] we must conclude that the [whole] verse[14] deals with a bailee falsely advancing a plea of theft.[15]

Another [Baraitha] teaches: If the thief be found: this verse deals with the thief himself.[16] You say that it deals with the thief himself. Why, however, not say that it is not so, but that it deals with a bailee falsely alleging theft? — When it further states, If the thief be not found this gives us the case of a bailee falsely alleging theft, How then can I explain [the verse] If the thief be found unless on the supposition that this deals with the thief himself![16] We see at any rate that all agree that [the verse] If the thief be not found deals with a bailee falsely alleging theft. But how is this implied [in the wording of the text]? — Raba said: [We understand the verse to say that] if it will not be found as he[17] stated[18] but that he himself had stolen it, he has to pay double. But whence can we conclude that this is so only in the case of an oath [having been falsely taken by the bailee]? — As it was taught: The master of the house shall come near unto the judges[13] to take an oath. You say to take an oath. Why not say, however, that this is not so, but to stand his trial?[19] — The words 'put his hand unto his neighbour's goods' occur in a subsequent section[20] and the words 'put his hand unto his neighbour's goods' occur in this section[13] which precedes the other one; just as there[20] it is associated with an oath,[21] so here also it should be associated with an oath. Now on the supposition[22] that one verse deals[23] with a thief and the other[24] with [a bailee falsely] alleging theft we quite understand why there are two verses; but on the supposition[25] that both of them deal with a bailee falsely alleging theft, why do I want two verses?[26] — It may be replied that one is to exclude the case of a false allegation of loss [from entailing double payment]. Now on the supposition[22] that one verse deals with a thief and the other with [a bailee falsely] alleging theft, in which case there will be no superfluous verse [in the text] whence can we derive the exclusion of a false allegation of loss [from entailing double payment]? — From [the definite article; as instead of] 'thief' [it is written] 'the thief'.[27] On the supposition[25] that both of the verses deal with [a bailee falsely] alleging theft, in which case Scripture excludes a bailee falsely alleging loss, how could [the fact that instead of] 'thief' [it is written] 'the thief' be expounded? — He might say to you that it furnishes a basis for the view of R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan, as R. Hiyya b. Abba stated[28] that R. Johanan said that he who falsely alleges theft in the case of a deposit would have to make double payment, and so also if he slaughtered or sold it he would have to make fourfold or five-fold payment. But on the supposition[22] that one verse deals with a thief and the other with [a bailee falsely] alleging theft, and that [the fact that instead of] 'thief', 'the thief' [is written] has been used to exclude a false allegation of loss [from entailing double payment], whence could be derived the view of R. Hiyya b. Abba?[28] — He might say to you: A thief and a bailee falsely alleging theft are made analogous to one another in Scripture,[29] and no objections can be entertained against an analogy.[30] This is all very well on the supposition that one verse deals with a thief and the other with [a bailee falsely] alleging theft. But on the supposition that both of them deal with [a bailee falsely] alleging theft, whence can the law of double payment[31] be derived in the case of a thief himself? And should you say that it can be derived by means of an a fortiori argument from the law of [a bailee falsely] alleging theft, [we may ask], is it not sufficient for the object to which the inference is made to be placed on the same footing as the object from which it is made,[32] so that just as there[33] [the penalty is entailed only where there] is false swearing, so here also[34] [it should be entailed only] where there is false swearing? — It could be derived by the reasoning taught at the School of Hezekiah. For it was taught at the School of Hezekiah: Should not Scripture have mentioned only 'ox' and 'theft'[35] as everything would thus have been included? — If so, I might say that just as the specification[36] mentions an object which is eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar any [living] object which is eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar should be included. What can you include through this? A sheep[37] [as subject to double payment].

---

(1) I.e., an article found by him and which he has to return to its owner.

(2) If he took an oath to substantiate his false plea.

(3) Ex. XXII, 8.

(4) Shebu. VIII, 3.

(5) Which amounts to an oath; cf. Shebu. 29b.

(6) But not double payment, as he did not allege theft.

(7) In accordance with Lev. V, 21-25.

(8) As by advancing the false plea of theft and substantiating it by an oath he became subject to the law applicable to theft.

(9) Ex. XXII, 6.

(10) I.e., unpaid.

(11) The clause therefore means this: if he (the bailee) be found to have been the thief, he should pay double.

(12) Whereas the bailee would never have to pay double.

(13) Ex. XXII, 7.

(14) Which should be construed thus: If it be not found as the bailee pleaded that it was stolen by a thief but that he himself was the thief etc.

(15) V. the discussion later.

(16) Who was found to have stolen the deposit, in which case the unpaid bailee is quit and the thief pays double.

(17) The bailee.

(18) That he became dispossessed of it by the thief.

(19) And be ordered to pay.

(20) Ibid. 10.

(21) For the text runs: The oath of the Lord be between them both to see whether he hath not put his hands unto his neighbour's goods.

(22) I.e., the second Baraitha.

(23) Ex. XXII, 6.

(24) Ex. XXII, 7.

(25) I.e., the first Baraitha.

(26) Presenting the same law.

(27) Thus pointing out that the liability for double payment is only where it was the plea of theft that was proved to have been false.

(28) Supra p. 364.

(29) To be subject to the law of double payment which may lead on to a liability of four-fold or five-fold payment.

(30) היקש infra 106b.

(31) For misappropriating either an animate or inanimate object.

(32) I.e., the principle of Dayyo, v. supra p. 126.

(33) In the case of the bailee falsely pleading theft.

(34) In the case of the thief himself.

(35) In Ex. XXII, 3.

(36) I.e., ox.

(37) Which is similarly eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 64a

But when the text continues ‘sheep’, we have sheep explicitly stated. How then am I to explain ‘theft’? To include any object. [If that is so] should Scripture not have mentioned only ‘ox’, ‘sheep’ and ‘theft’ since everything would have thus been included? — If so, I might still say that just as the specification[1] mentions an object which is subject to the sanctity of first birth,[2] so also any object which is subject to the sanctity of first birth [should be included].[3] Now what can you include through this? An ass [as subject to double payment]. But when the text goes on to mention ‘ass’, we have ‘ass’ explicitly stated. What then do I make of ‘theft’? To include any object. [If that is so], should Scripture not have mentioned only ‘ox’ ‘ass’, ‘sheep’ and ‘theft’ since everything would have accordingly been included? — If so, I might still say that just as the specification[4] mentions objects possessing life, so also any other objects possessing life [should be included]. What can you include through this? All other objects possessing life. But when the text continues ‘alive’, we have objects possessing life explicitly stated. How then am I to explain ‘theft’? [It must be] to include any other object whatsoever.[5]

The Master stated: ‘Should not Scripture have mentioned [only] "ox" and "theft"?’ — But does it say ‘ox’ and [then] ‘theft’? Is it not [first] ‘theft’ and [then] ‘ox’ which is written in the text?[6] And if you rejoin that the author of this argument took a hypothetical case, viz.: ‘If it were written [first] "ox" and [then] "theft", how in that case would you be able to say, ‘Just as the specification mentions etc.,’ since ‘ox’ would be the specification and ‘theft’ the generalisation, and in the case of a specification followed by a generalisation the generalisation is considered to add to the specification, so that all objects would be included? If, on the other hand, he based his argument on the actual order of the text, viz.: ‘theft’ and [then] ‘ox’, how again would you be able to say that ‘everything would have been included’, or ‘just as the specification mentions etc.’, since ‘theft’ would be the generalisation and ‘ox’ the specification, and in the case of a generalisation followed by a specification there is nothing included in the generalisation except what is explicit in the specification, [so that here] only ox [would be included] but no other object whatsoever? Raba thereupon said: This Tanna[7] based his argument upon the term ‘alive’ [that follows the specification], so that he argued on the strength of a generalisation[8] [followed by] a specification[9] [which was in its turn followed by] another generalisation.[10] But is the last generalisation[10] analagous in implication to the first generalisation?[11] There is, however, the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael who did expound texts of this kind on the lines of generalisations and specifications.[12] The problem was therefore this: Why do I require the words in the text, ‘If to be found it be found?’[13] Should not Scripture have mentioned only ‘theft’ and ‘ox’ and ‘alive’, and everything would have then been included?[14] — If so, I might say that just as the specification mentions an object which is eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar, so also any object eligible to be sacrificed upon the altar is [included]. What does this enable you to include? Sheep.[15] But when the text continues ‘sheep’, we have sheep explicitly stated. What then am I to make of ‘theft’? It must be to include any object. [If that is so] should Scripture not have mentioned only ‘theft’, ‘ox’, ‘sheep’ and ‘alive’ since everything would have then been included?[14] — If so, I might still say that just as the specification mentions an object which is subject to the sanctity of first birth, so also any object which is subject to the sanctity of first birth [should be included]. What does this enable you to include? Ass. But when the text continues ‘ass’, we have ass explicitly stated. What then am I to make of ‘theft’? It must be to include any object. [But in that case] should Scripture not have mentioned only ‘theft’, ‘ox’, ‘sheep’, ‘ass’ and ‘alive’, since everything would have then been included?[14] — If so I might still say that just as the specification mentions objects possessing life, so also any other object possessing life [should be included]. What does this enable you to include? All other objects possessing life. But when the text continues ‘alive’, objects possessing life are explicitly stated. What then am I to make of ‘theft’? [It must be] to include any other object whatsoever. And if so, why do I require the words ‘if to be found it be found[16] ?

---

(1) I.e., ox and sheep.

(2) In accordance with Ex. XIII, 12.

(3) Ass would thus also be included; cf. Ex. XXII, 13.

(4) Ox, sheep and ass.

(5) [Hence the derivation of double payment in the case of the thief himself.]

(6) [Being thus a generalisation followed by a specification, in which case the former includes only what is contained in the latter, v. P.B. p. 13.]

(7) Of the School of Hezekiah.

(8) I.e., ‘theft’.

(9) I.e., ‘ox, ass, sheep’.

(10) I.e., ‘alive’. — The argument will be explained anon.

(11) I.e., ‘theft’, being more comprehensive than ‘alive’.

(12) Cf. Zeb. 4b; 8b; and Hul. 66a.

(13) Literal rendering of Ex. XXII, 3. (E.V.: If the theft be certainly found in his hand.)

(14) Why indeed this emphasis on the verb ‘found’?

(15) V. supra p. 370, n. 7.

(16) V. note 2. This concludes the argument of the School of Hezekiah.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 64b

But if this is so, is not this a real difficulty?[1] — There is, however, a refutation of it.[2] For whence would you include any ‘other object’?[3] From [the implication of] the last generalisation.[4] Now, since this very generalisation consists in the term ‘alive’, of what service then is the argument based upon the generalisation followed by a specification which is in its turn followed by another generalisation? It can hardly be to add any [inanimate] object, since the word ‘alive’ is used there, implying only objects possessing life, but not any other object whatsoever. It was therefore because of this that it was necessary to state ‘if to be found it be found.’[5] It may however still be argued, does not this text contain two generalisations which are placed near each other?[6] — Rabina thereupon said: [We dispose of this difficulty] as stated in the West,[7] that wherever you find two generalisations near each other, place a specification between them and explain them as a case of a generalisation followed by a specification.[8] [Here then] place ‘ox’ between [the infinitive and the finite verb],[6] ‘if to be found it be found.’ Now, what additional objects would this introduce? If objects possessing life, are these not to be derived from the term ‘alive’? It must therefore be an object which does not possess life, and we expound thus: Just as the specification mentions an object which is movable and which has an intrinsic value, so also any object which is movable and which has an intrinsic value [should be included to be subject to the double payment]. Now, when you again place ‘ass’ between [the infinitive and the finite verb], ‘if to be found it be found’, what additional objects could this introduce? If an object not possessing life, was not this derived from [placing] ‘ox’ [between the two generalisations]?[6] It must therefore serve to introduce an object having specification.[9] But if so why do I require the word 'sheep'? — It must therefore be taken as a case of an amplification preceding a diminution followed in its turn by another amplification,[10] as indeed taught at the School of R. Ishmael. For it was taught at the School of R. Ishmael:[11] [The words 'in the waters',[12] 'In the waters', occurring twice in the text should not be treated as a generalisation followed by a specification, but as an amplification followed by a diminution followed in its turn by another amplification, to add everything. What, then, does it add in this case?[13] It adds all objects, But if so, why do I require all these specifications?[14] — One to exclude real estate; the second to exclude slaves, and the third to exclude bills; while 'theft' and 'alive' furnish a basis for the view of Rab who said[15] that the value of the principal is to be resuscitated as it was at the time of theft.[16]

But according to the view that one verse[17] deals with a thief himself and the other[18] with a bailee [falsely] alleging theft, so that the liability of a thief himself to pay double payment is thus derived from the text 'if the thief be found', how is the text 'If to be found it be found' etc. to be expounded? — He may employ it for teaching the view expressed by Raba b. Ahilai; for Raba b. Ahilai said:[19] What was the reason of Rab who maintained that a defendant admitting an offence for which the penalty is a fine would [even] where witnesses subsequently appeared still be exempt? As it is written: 'If to be found it be found' implying that if at the very outset it is found by witnesses then it will 'be' [considered] 'found' in the consideration of the Judges, excepting thus a case where it was the defendant who incriminated himself. Now again, according to the view that both verses deal with a bailee [falsely] advancing a plea of theft, in which case the text 'If to be found it be found' is employed to teach that there is double payment in the case of a thief himself, whence [in Scripture] do we derive the rule regarding a defendant incriminating himself? — From the text, 'Whom the judges shall condemn'[20] [which implies], 'but not him who condemns himself.' But according to the view that one verse deals with a thief and the other with a bailee [falsely] advancing a plea of theft and that the text of 'if to be found it be found' is to introduce the law where the defendant incriminates himself, how could the text, 'whom the judges shall condemn', be expounded? — He might say to you: That text was in the first instance employed to imply that a defendant admitting [an offence entailing] a fine [without witnesses subsequently appearing] would be exempt;[21] whereas the other view, that both of the verses deal with a bailee [falsely] advancing a plea of theft holds that a defendant admitting [an offence entailing] a fine for which witnesses subsequently appear is liable.[22] According to the view that one verse[23] deals with a thief and the other with a bailee [falsely] advancing a plea of theft, so that the case of a thief is derived from the verse there,[24] we have no difficulty with the text 'if to be found it be found', which is employed as a basis for the statement of Raba b. Ahilai, but why do I require all these specifications?[25] — For the reason taught at the school of R. Ishmael,[26] that any section written in Scripture and then repeated is repeated only for the sake of a new point that is added to it.[27] But why not say that even the thief himself should be subject to double payment only after having taken an oath falsely?[28] — Let not this enter your mind, for it was taught: 'R. Jacob says, He shall pay double[29] [even] where he took no oath. Why not rather say only where he took a false oath?[28] You can safely say that this could not be so.' Why could this not be so? — Said Abaye: For the Divine Law should then not have written 'he shall pay double' in the case of a thief, as this would have been derived by an a fortiori from the law applicable to a bailee falsely advancing a plea of theft: If a bailee falsely advancing a plea of theft, into whose hands the article had come lawfully, is ordered by Scripture to pay twice, should this not apply all the more strongly in the case of the thief himself, into whose hands the article came unlawfully? Why then did Scripture say 'He shall pay double' in the case of a thief himself, unless to imply liability even in the absence of an oath!

But how could this [text] 'If to be found it be found' be employed to teach this?[30] Is it not required for what was taught: 'his hand':[31]

---

(1) And how are we to meet the question of that Tanna?

(2) So that the emphasis on the verb becomes essential.
(3) To be subject to the law of theft.
(4) [It is a general principle that, in a proposition consisting of a generalisation followed by a specification which in its turn is followed by another generalisation, the inclusion of all things that are similar to the specification is in virtue of the last generalisation, since without it the proposition would include only what is included in the specification, v. p. 371, n. 3.]
(5) [To apply here the principle of generalisation, specification and generalisation.]
(6) I.e., the doubling of the verb expressing 'found'.
(7) In the Land of Israel.
(8) Cf. Shebu. 5a.
(9) To the exclusion of such as have no marks of identification. Cf. p. 367, n. 4.
(10) Cf. supra p. 366.
(11) V. p. 373, n. 6.
(12) Lev. XI, 9.
(13) Which would otherwise not have been subject to the law.
(14) [Strictly speaking, 'diminutions'.]
(15) Infra p. 376.
(16) I.e., that the payment of principal for a stolen article will be in accordance with its value at the time of the theft.
(17) Ex. XXII, 6.
(18) Ibid. 7.
(19) Infra 75a.
(20) Ex. XXI, 8.
(21) [While the other verse is to extend the exemption to the case where witnesses do subsequently appear. Had there been one verse only available, the exemption would have been limited to the former only.]
(22) As indeed maintained by Samuel, infra 75a.
(23) V. p. 374, n. 8.
(24) 'If the thief be found'.
(25) [Since the exclusion of 'real estate, slaves and bills' is already provided for in the verse, For all manner of trespass, etc,; v. supra p. 364.]
(26) Sot. 3a; Shebu. 19a.
(27) I.e., the exclusion of self-admission in case of a fine, as supra.]
(28) Since the law in this case is derived from the section dealing with the unpaid bailee who is not subject to pay double unless where he first took a false oath on the plea of alleged theft.
(29) Ex. XXII, 3.
(30) I.e., any of the above implications.
(31) Ex. XXII, 3.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 65a

this gives me the rule only as applying to his hand. Whence do I learn that it applies to his roof, his courtyard and his enclosure? It distinctly lays down: If to be found it be found [i.e.] in all places'?[1] — But if so[2] the text should have said either 'if to be found, to be found', or 'if it be found, it be found'?[3] The variation in the text[4] enables us to prove two points from it.

The above text states: 'Rab said: "The principal is reckoned as at the time of the theft,"[5] whereas double payment or four-fold and five-fold payments are reckoned on the basis of the value when the case was brought into Court.' What was the reason of Rab? — Scripture says 'theft' and 'alive'. Why does Scripture say 'alive' in the case of theft? [To imply] that I should resuscitate the principal in accordance with its value at the time of theft.[6] Said R. Shesheth: I am inclined to say that it was only when he was half asleep on his bed[7] that Rab could have enunciated such a ruling.[8] For it was taught: [If a thief misappropriated] a lean animal and fattened it, he has to pay the double payment or four-fold and five-fold payments according to the value at the time of theft. [Is this not a contradiction to the view of Rab?][9] — It might, however, be said [that the thief has to pay thus] because he can say, 'Am I to fatten it and you take it?'[10]

Come and hear: [If a thief misappropriated] a fat animal and caused it to become lean, he has to pay double payment or fourfold and five-fold payments according to the value at the time of theft. [Does this not contradict the ruling enunciated by Rab?][11] — There also [the thief has to pay thus] because we argue against him 'What is the difference whether you killed it altogether or only half-killed it.'[12] But the ruling enunciated by Rab[11] had reference to fluctuations in price. How are we to understand this? If we assume that it was originally worth one zuz and subsequently worth four zuz, would the statement 'the principal will be reckoned as at the time of theft not lead us to suppose that Rab differs from Rabbah? For Rabbah said:[13] If a man misappropriated from his fellow a barrel of wine which was then [worth] one zuz but which became subsequently worth four zuz, if he broke it or drank it he has to pay four,[14] but if it broke of itself he has to pay one zuz.[15] [Would Rab really differ from this view?][16] — It may however, be said that Rab's rule applied to a case where, e.g., it was at the beginning worth four [zuz] but subsequently worth one [zuz], in which case the principal will be reckoned as at the time of theft, whereas double payment or four-fold and five-fold payments will be reckoned on the basis of the value when the case came into Court. R. Hanina learnt in support of the view of Rab: If a bailee advanced a plea of theft regarding a deposit and confirmed it by oath but subsequently admitted his perjury and witnesses appeared and testified [to the same effect], if he confessed before the appearance of the witnesses, he has to pay the principal together with a fifth and a trespass offering;[17] but if he confessed after the appearance of the witnesses, he has to pay double payment[18] together with a trespass offering;[19] the fifth, however, is replaced by the doubling of the payment.[20] So R. Jacob.

---

(1) B.M. 10b and 56b.

(2) That it was meant to imply only one point.

(3) I.e., the verb would have been doubled in the same tense.

(4) In the tense of the verb, the infinite followed by the finite.

(5) V. supra p. 374.

(6) V. p. 374, n. 7.

(7) Lit., 'when lying down'.

(8) For a similar expression cf. supra p. 268.

(9) According to whom four-fold and five-fold payments are reckoned on the basis of the value when the case comes into court.

(10) Whereas where there was an increase in price or where the animal became fatter by itself, the ruling of Rab may hold good.

(11) V. p. 376, n. 11.

(12) The liability thus began at the time when the thief caused the animal to become lean.

(13) B.M. 43a.

(14) As was its value at the time when he damaged it.

(15) As was its value at the time of the theft.

(16) And maintain to the contrary that even where the thief broke it or drank it he would still pay only one zuz, which was its value at the time of the theft.

(17) In accordance with Lev. V, 24-25. [But not the doubling, since it is a fine which is not payable on self-admission.]

(18) V. p. 634, n. 7.

(19) V. p. 634, n. 6.

(20) Provided, however, that the doubling and the fifth are equal in amount.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 65b

The Sages, however, say: [Scripture says] In its principal and the fifth part thereof,[1] [implying that it is only] where money is paid as principal that a fifth has to be added, but where the money is not paid as principal[2] no fifth will be added.[3] R. Simeon b. Yohai says: No fifth or trespass offering is paid in a case where there is double payment.[4] Now it is said here that 'the fifth is replaced by the doubling of the payment;' this being the view of R. Jacob. How are we to understand this? If we say it was at the beginning worth four and subsequently similarly worth four, how could the fifth be replaced by the doubling of the payment when the doubling of the payment amounts to four and the fifth to one?[5] Does it therefore not refer to a case where at the beginning the value was four but subsequently fell to one zuz, so that the doubling of the payment is one zuz[6] and the fifth of the payment is also one zuz,[5] proving thereby that the principal will be reckoned as at the time of theft, whereas double payment or four-fold and five-fold payments will be reckoned on the basis of the value when the case comes into court? — Raba thereupon said: It could still be maintained that at the beginning it was worth four and now it is similarly worth four, for as to the difficulty with respect to the doubling of the payment being four and the fifth of the payment one zuz,[5] it might be said that [we are dealing here with a case] where e.g., he took an oath and repeated it four times, after which he confessed, and as the Torah says 'and its fifths',[7] the Torah has thus assigned many fifths to one principal.[8]

The Master stated: 'The Sages however say: [Scripture says] In its principal and the fifth part thereof [implying that it is only] where money is paid as principal that a fifth has to be added, but where the money is not paid as principal, no fifth will be added.' The trespass offering will nevertheless have to be brought. Why this difference? If he has not to pay the fifth because it is written, In its principal and the fifth part thereof, why should he similarly not have to pay the trespass offering seeing it is written, In its principal and the fifth part thereof . . . and his trespass offering?[9] — The Rabbis might say to you that by the particle 'eth' [occurring before the term denoting his trespass offering][10] Scripture separates them.[11] And R. Simeon b. Yohai?[12] — He maintains that by the 'waw' [conjunctive placed before the particle] 'eth' Scripture combines them.[13] And the Rabbis? — They may say that if this is so, the Divine Law should have inserted neither the 'waw' nor the 'eth'. And R. Simeon b. Yohai? — He might rejoin that as it was impossible for Scripture not to insert 'eth' so as to make a distinction between a chattel due to Heaven[14] and money due to ordinary men,[15] it was therefore necessary to add the 'waw' so as to combine the verses.

R. Elai said: If a thief misappropriates a lamb and it grows into a ram,[16] or a calf and it grows into an ox,[16] as the article has undergone a change[17] while in his hands he would acquire title to it,[18] so that if he slaughters or sells it, it is his which he slaughters it is his which he sells.[19] R. Hanina objected to R. Elai's statement [from the following teaching]: If he misappropriates a lamb and it grows into a ram,[16] or a calf and it grows into an ox,[16] he will have to make double payment or four-fold and five-fold payments reckoned on the basis of the value at the time of theft. Now, if you assume that he acquires title to it by the change, why should he pay?[20] Is it not his which he slaughtered, is it not his which he sold? — He replied:[21] What then [is your opinion]? That a change does not transfer ownership? Why then pay on the basis of the value at the time of theft[22] and not of the present value?[23] — The other replied:[24] He does not pay in accordance with the present value for the reason that he can say to him,[25] 'Did I steal an ox from you, did I steal a ram from you?' Said the other:[21] 'May the All-Merciful save me from accepting this view!' The other one retorted,[24] 'May the All-Merciful save me from accepting your view.'[26] R. Zera demurred saying: Why should he not indeed acquire title to it through the change in name?[27] Raba, however, said to him: An ox one day old is already called 'ox', and a ram one day old is already called 'ram'. 'An ox one day old is called "ox",' as written: When an ox or a sheep or a goat is born.[28] 'A ram one day old is called "ram",' as written: And the rams of thy flocks have I not eaten.[29] Does he mean that it was only the rams that he did not eat, and that he did eat the sheep? [Surely not!] — This shows that a ram one day old is already called 'ram'. But all the same does the objection raised against R. Elai[30] still not hold good? — R. Shesheth thereupon said: The teaching [of the Baraitha] is in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai, that a change leaves the article in the previous position and will accordingly not transfer ownership, as taught:[31] If he gave her [the harlot] as her hire wheat of which she made flour, or olives of which she made oil, or grapes of which she made wine, it was taught on one occasion that 'the produce is forbidden [to be sacrificed upon the altar],'[32] whereas on another occasion it was taught 'it is permitted',[33] and R. Joseph said: Gorion of Aspurak[34] learnt: 'Beth Shammai prohibit [the produce to be used as sacrifices],[35] whereas Beth Hillel permit it.' Now, what was the reason of Beth Shammai? — Because it is written 'Gam',[36] to include their transformations.[37] But Beth Hillel maintain that [the suffix them][38] implies 'them',[39] and not their transformations. And Beth Shammai? — They maintain that the suffix

---

(1) Lev. V, 24.

(2) As here, where double payment has to be made.

(3) Under any circumstances, even where the doubling of the payment and the fifth are not equal in amount, though the trespass offering will have to be brought.

(4) Infra 106a; Shebu. 37b.

(5) The fifth is 25% of the general sum which will have to be paid as principal plus a fifth thereof amounting thus to a fourth of the principal.

(6) As was the value at the time of the coming into court.

(7) E.V.: 'and the fifth part thereof'.

(8) I.e., a fifth will be paid for each false swearing.

(9) Lev. ib., 24-25.

(10) E.V.: 'And . . . his trespass offering, v. 25.

(11) So that the law regarding the trespass offering is not governed by the condition made in verse 24.

(12) [Who holds that he neither brings a trespass offering. How will he meet the argument from the particle 'eth'?]

(13) Making them subject to the same law.

(14) I.e., the trespass offering.

(15) I.e., the fifth.

(16) While still in his possession.

(17) The technical term is Shinnuy.

(18) Having, however, to repay the principal together with the double payment for the act of theft.

(19) The fine for the slaughter or sale will thus not be imposed upon him.

(20) The fine for the slaughter or sale.

(21) R. Elai to R. Hanina.

(22) When it was merely a lamb or a calf.

(23) When it already became a ram, or an ox, if the ownership has not changed.

(24) R. Hanina to R. Elai.

(25) I.e., the thief against the plaintiff.

(26) Cf. Shab. 84b and Keth. 45b.

(27) [Though 'growth' confers no title.]

(28) Lev. XXII, 27.

(29) Gen. XXXI, 38.

(30) By R. Hanina from the teaching imposing the fine of four-fold and five-fold payments.

(31) Infra p. 544 and Tem. 30b.

(32) In accordance with Deut. XXIII, 19.

(33) As it was not the same article which was given as hire.

(34) [Not identified, but probably in Asia; v. Neubauer, p. 386.]

(35) V. p. 380, n. 15.

(36) E.V.: 'even', and which is generally taken as an amplification.

(37) I.e., to prohibit even the articles into which the hire was transformed.

(38) שניהם , 'both of them' (E.V.: 'both these').

(39) I.e., the original articles themselves.

indicates 'them' and not their offsprings.[1] And Beth Hillel? — They reply that you can understand the two points from it: 'Them' — and not their transformations; 'them' — and not their offsprings. But as to Beth Hillel surely it is written Gam? — Gam presents a difficulty according to the view of Beth Hillel.[2]

Their[3] difference extends only so far that one Master[4] maintains that a change transfers and the other Master[5] maintains that a change does not transfer ownership, but regarding payment they both agree that the payment is made on the basis of the original value, even as it is stated:[6] 'He has to make double payment or fourfold and five-fold payments on the basis of the value at the time of the theft.' Are we to say that this [Baraitha] confutes the view of Rab in the statement made by Rab that the principal will be reckoned as at the time of theft, whereas double payment or four-fold and five-fold payments will be reckoned on the basis of the value when the case comes into Court? — Said Raba: [Where he pays with] sheep, [he pays] in accordance with the original value,[7] but [where he pays with] money [he pays] in accordance with the present value.

Rabbah said: That a change[8] transfers ownership is indicated in Scripture and learnt in Mishnah. It is indicated in Scripture in the words, He shall restore the misappropriated object which he violently took away.[9] What is the point of the words 'which he violently took away'? — It is to imply that if it is still as [it was when] he violently took it[10] he shall restore it, but if not, it is only the value of it that he will have to pay.[11] It is learnt [in the Mishnah]: If one misappropriates timber and makes utensils out of it, or wool and makes it into garments, he has to pay in accordance with the value at the time of robbery.[12] Or as also [learnt elsewhere]: If the owner did not manage to give the first of the fleece to the priest[13] until it had already been dyed, he is exempt,[14] thus proving that a change transfers ownership. So has Renunciation[15] been declared by the Rabbis to transfer ownership. We, however, do not know whether this rule is derived from the Scripture, or is purely Rabbinical. Is it Scriptural, it being on a par with the case of one who finds a lost article?[16] For is not the law in the case of a finder of lost property that, if the owner renounced his interest in the article before it came into the hands of the finder the ownership of it is transferred to the finder? So in this case, the thief similarly acquires title to the article as soon as the owner renounces his claim. It thus seems that the transfer is of Scriptural origin! Or are we to say that this case is not comparable to that of a lost article?[16] For it is only in the case of a lost article that the law applies, since when it comes into the hands of the finder,[17] it does so lawfully, whereas in the case of the thief into whose hands it entered unlawfully, the rule therefore might be merely of Rabbinic authority, as the Rabbis might have said that ownership should be transferred by Renunciation in order to make matters easier for repentant robbers. But R. Joseph said: Renunciation does not transfer ownership even by Rabbinic ordinance.

R. Joseph objected to Rabbah's view [from the following:] If a man misappropriated leavened food [before Passover],[18] when Passover has passed[19]

---

(1) Such as where, e.g., a cow was given as hire and it gave birth to a calf.

(2) V. supra 54a, and B.M. 27a.

(3) I.e., R. Elai's and R. Hanina's.

(4) R. Elai.

(5) R. Hanina.

(6) In the Baraitha cited supra p. 379.

(7) Rashi explains this to mean that as it was a sheep which he misappropriated it is a sheep which he has to return, but according to Tosaf. it does not refer to the object by which the payment is made but to the object of the theft, and means that if the change in price resulted from a change in the substance of the stolen object all kinds of payment will be in accordance with the value at the time of the theft, whereas where the change in the value was due to fluctuation in price the view of Rab would still hold good.

(8) In the substance of a misappropriated article.

(9) Lev. V. 23.

(10) I.e., without any change in the substance of the object.

(11) But not the misappropriated object itself.

(12) Infra p. 541.

(13) In accordance with Deut. XVIII, 4.

(14) On account of the change which took place in the colour of the wool. (Hul. 135a).

(15) Ye'ush, of the misappropriated article by its owner.

(16) Where Renunciation by the owner would release a subsequent finder from having to restore the article found by him, as derived in B.M. 22b from a Scriptural inference.

(17) After Renunciation.

(18) When it was permitted.

(19) So that the leavened food became forbidden for any use in accordance with Pes. 28a-30a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 66b

he can say to the plaintiff, 'Here is your stuff before you.'[1] Now, as this plaintiff surely renounced his ownership when the time for prohibiting leavened food arrived,[2] if you assume that Renunciation transfers ownership, why should the thief be entitled to say, 'Here is your stuff before you', when he has a duty upon him to pay the proper value?[3] — He replied:[4] I stated the ruling[5] only where the owner renounces ownership at the time when the thief is desirous of acquiring it, whereas in this case, though the owner renounced ownership, the thief had no desire to acquire it.[6]

Abaye objected to Rabbah's statement [from the following]: [The verse says,] 'His offering,[7] [implying] but not one which was misappropriated.'[8] Now, what were the circumstances? If we assume before Renunciation, why do I require a text, since this is quite obvious?[9] Should we therefore not assume after Renunciation, which would show that Renunciation does not transfer ownership?[10] Said Raba[11] to him: According to your reasoning [how are we to explain] that which was taught: [The verse says,] 'His bed[12] [implying] but not one which was misappropriated'? Under what circumstances? That, for instance, wool was misappropriated and made into a bed? But is there any [accepted] view[13] that a change [in substance] resulting from an act does not transfer ownership?[14] What you have to say is that it refers to a case where the robber misappropriated a neighbour's bed. So also here[15] it refers to a case where he misappropriated a neighbour's offering.[16] Abaye objected to R. Joseph's view [from the following]: In the case of skins belonging to a private owner, mere mental determination renders them capable of becoming [ritually] unclean[17] whereas in the case of those belonging to a tanner no mental determination[18] would render them capable of becoming unclean.[19] Regarding those in the possession of a 'thief', mental determination[20] will make them capable of becoming unclean,[21] whereas those in the possession of a 'robber' no mental determination[22] will render capable of becoming unclean.[23] R. Simeon says that the rulings are to be reversed: Regarding those in the possession of a 'robber', mental determination[22] will render them capable of becoming unclean,[24] whereas regarding those in the possession of a 'thief', no mental determination[20] will render them capable of becoming unclean, as in the last case the owners do not usually abandon hope of discovering who was the thief.[25] Does not this prove that Renunciation transfers ownership?[26] — He replied:[27] We are dealing here with a case where for example he had already trimmed the stolen skins [so that some change in substance was effected].[28] Rabbah son of R. Hanan demurred to this, saying: This was learnt here in connection with a [dining] cover,[29] and [skins intended to be used as] a cover do not require trimming as we have learnt:[30] Wherever there is no need for [finishing] work to be done, mental resolve[31] will render the article capable of becoming unclean, whereas where there is still need for [finishing] work to be done no mental resolve[31] will render it capable of becoming unclean, with the exception however, of a [dining] cover![32] — Raba therefore said: This difficulty was pointed out by Rabbah to R. Joseph for twenty-two years[33] without his obtaining any answer. It was only when R. Joseph occupied the seat as Head[34] that he explained it [by suggesting that] a change in name is equivalent [in the eye of the law] to a change in substance; for just as a change in substance has an effect because, for instance, what was previously timber is now utensils, so also a change in name should have an effect as what was previously called skin is now called [dining] cover.[35] But what about a beam where there is similarly a change in name as previously it was called a post and now ceiling, and we have nevertheless learnt that 'where a misappropriated beam has been built into a house, the owner will recover only its value, so as to make matters easier for repentant robbers'.[36] The reason is, to make matters easier for repentant robbers,

---

(1) As no change took place in the substance of the misappropriated article. (Infra p. 561.)
(2) I.e., on the eve of Passover.
(3) Since the misappropriated article became his.
(4) Rabbah to R. Joseph.
(5) That Renunciation transfers the ownership.
(6) As it was not in his interest to do so.
(7) Lev. I, 3.
(8) Infra p. 388.
(9) That a stolen object could not be brought to the altar.
(10) In contradiction to the view expressed by Rabbah.
(11) Var. lec., 'Rabbah'.
(12) Lev. XV, 5.
(13) With the exception of that of Beth Shammai (cf. supra p. 380). whose view is disregarded when in conflict with Beth Hillel (Tosaf.).
(14) Would the bed in this case not become the legal property of the robber?
(15) In the case of the sacrifice.
(16) [In which case the sacrifice is not acceptable even if offered after renunciation on the part of the original owner.]
(17) As his mental determination is final, and the skins could thus be considered as fully finished articles and thus subject to the law of defilement. (V. Kel. XXVI, 7.)
(18) To use them as they are.
(19) As a tanner usually prepares his skins for the public, and it is for the buyer to decide what article he is going to make out of them.
(20) On the part of the thief to use them as they are.
(21) For the skins became the property of the thief, as Renunciation usually follows theft on account of the fact that the owner does not know against whom to bring an action.
(22) On the part of the robber to use them as they are.
(23) For the skins did not become the property of the robber as robbery does not usually cause Renunciation, since the owner knows against whom to bring an action.
(24) For the skins became the property of the robber as the owner has surely renounced every hope of recovering them for fear of the robber who acted openly.
(25) Kel. XXVI, 8; infra p. 672.
(26) In contradiction to the view maintained by R. Joseph.
(27) R. Joseph to Abaye.
(28) On account of which the ownership was transferred.
(29) Since the case of the skins follows in the Mishnah that of the (dining) cover. [The dining cover (Heb. 'izba), was spread over the ground in the absence of a proper table from which to eat; cf. Rashi and Krauss, Talm. Arch., I, 376.]
(30) Kel. XXVI, 7.
(31) V. p. 384, n. 5.
(32) Since even without trimming the skins could be used as a cover.
(33) I.e., all the days when Rabbah was the head of the college at Pumbeditha; cf. Ber. 64a; Hor. 14a and Rashi Keth. 42b.
(34) In succession to Rabbah.
(35) Whereas mere Renunciation in the case of theft or robbery would not transfer ownership.
(36) 'Ed. VII, 9.

but if not for this, it would have to be restored intact?[1] — R. Joseph replied: A beam retains its name [even subsequently], as taught: 'The sides of the house';[2] these are the casings: 'and the thick planks'; these are the beams.[3] R. Zera said: A change which can revert to its original state is, in the case of a change in name, not considered a change.[4] But is a change in name that cannot revert to its original state[5] considered a change? What then about a trough, the material of which was originally called a plank but now trough, and we have nevertheless been taught[6] that a trough[7] which was first hollowed out and subsequently fixed [into a mikweh][8] will disqualify the mikweh,[9] but where it was first fixed [in to the mikweh] and subsequently hollowed out, it will not disqualify the mikweh![10] But if you maintain that a change in name has a legal effect, why then, even where he fixed it first and subsequently hollowed it out, should it not disqualify the mikweh![11] — The law regarding disqualification through drawn water[12] is different altogether, as it is only of Rabbinic sanction.[13] But if so, why even in the prior clause[14] should it not also be the same? — There, however, the law of a receptacle applied to it while it was still detached, whereas here it was never subject to the law of a receptacle while it was detached.

An objection was raised [from the following]: If a thief, a robber or an annas[15] consecrates a misappropriated article, it will be consecrated; if he sets aside a portion for the priest's gift,[16] it will be terumah;[17] or again if he sets aside a portion for the Levite's gift[18] the tithe will be valid.[19] [Now, does this not prove that Renunciation transfers ownership?][20] — It may be said that in that case there was also a change in name, as previously it was called tebel[21] while now it is called terumah.[17] So also in the case of consecration: previously it was called hullin,[22] but now it is called consecrated.

R. Hisda stated that R. Jonathan said: How do we learn [from Scripture] that a change transfers ownership? — Because it is said: He shall restore the misappropriated object.[23] What [then] is the point of the words, 'which he took violently away'?[23] [It must be to imply that] if it still is as when he took it violently[24] he shall restore it, but if not, it is only the value of it that he will have to pay.[25] But is this [text] 'which he took violently away'[23] not needed to exclude the case of robbery committed by a father, in which the son need not add a fifth [to the payment] for robbery committed by his father?[26] — But if so, the Divine Law should have written only 'he shall restore the misappropriated object.' Why should it further be written. 'which he took violently away'? Thus we can draw from it the two inferences. Some report: R. Hisda stated that R. Jonathan said: How do we learn [from Scripture] that a change does not transfer ownership? — Because it is said: He shall restore the misappropriated object, i.e., in all cases. But is it not written 'which he took violently away'? — That text is needed to indicate that it is only for robbery committed by himself that he has to add a fifth, but has not to add a fifth for robbery committed by his father.

'Ulla said: How do we learn [from Scripture] that Renunciation does not transfer ownership? Because it is said: And ye brought that which was misappropriated, and the lame and the sick.[27] 'That which was misappropriated' is thus compared to 'the lame': just as 'the lame' has no remedy at all

---

(1) In spite of the fact that a change in name took place.

(2) Ezek. XLI, 26.

(3) Hence after it became part of the ceiling it is still called beam.

(4) A beam by becoming part of a ceiling did not therefore really undergo a change in name, as the beam could be taken out and thus revert to its original state.

(5) Such as in the case of the skins made into covers.

(6) B.B. 65b.

(7) Through which rain or well water was conducted to a mikweh which should be a gathering of well or rain water that has not passed through a receptacle.

(8) Lit., ‘a gathering of water’ for ritual immersion; cf. Glos.
(9) As the trough in this case was considered a receptacle before it was fixed to the ground.
(10) As when the trough was fixed it was not a receptacle in the eye of the law and could not become such after it became part of the ground to which it was fixed.
(11) As by hollowing out the material which was originally called plank the name was changed into trough, and it should thus become a receptacle in the eye of the law. [Although this change was effected after it had been fixed to the soil, the fact that it goes by the name of a trough should in itself be sufficient to disqualify it for the use of the Mikweh; v. Asheri and Shittah Mekubezeth, a.l.]
(12) In receptacles poured into a mikweh.
(13) Cf. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) pp. 263 ff.
(14) Where he first hollowed it out and subsequently fixed it.
(15) The same as the hamsan, who, as explained supra p. 361 is prepared to pay for the objects which he misappropriates.
(16) In accordance with Num. XVIII, 11-12.
(17) V. Glos.
(18) Cf. Num. XVIII, 21.
(19) V. infra p. 674.
(20) For otherwise what right have they to consecrate or set aside the portions for the priest and Levite?
(21) I.e., produce from which the priest's and Levite's portion has not been set aside.
(22) I.e., unconsecrated property.
(23) Lev. V. 23.
(24) V. p. 382, n. 3.
(25) V. p. 382, n. 4.
(26) I.e., that the son should in this case not be subject to Lev. V, 24-25.
(27) Mal. I, 13.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 67b

[to render it qualified for the altar],[1] so also ‘that which was misappropriated’ has no remedy at all, no matter before Renunciation or after Renunciation. Raba said: [We derive it] from the following: ‘His offering,[2] but not one which was misappropriated.’[3] When is this? If we say before Renunciation, is this not obvious?[4] What then is the point of the verse? It must therefore apply to the time after Renunciation, and it may thus be proved from this that Renunciation does not transfer ownership. But did not Raba himself say[5] that the text referred to a robber misappropriating an offering of his fellow — If you wish I may say that he changed his mind on this matter.[6] Or if you wish I may say that one of these statements was made by R. Papa.[7]

THE MEASURE OF FOUR-FOLD AND FIVE-FOLD PAYMENTS DOES NOT APPLY EXCEPT IN THE CASE OF AN OX OR A SHEEP ALONE. But why not compare [the term] ‘ox’ to ‘ox’ in the case of Sabbath,[8] so that just as there beasts and birds are on the same footing with them [i.e. ox and ass],[9] so also here beasts and birds should be on the same footing with them [i.e. ox and sheep]? — Raba said: Scripture says ‘an ox and a sheep’, ‘an ox and a sheep’[10] twice, [to indicate that] only ox and sheep are subject to this law but not any other object whatsoever. I may ask: Which of these[11] would otherwise be superfluous? Shall we say that ‘ox and sheep’ of the concluding clause would be superfluous, and the Divine Law should have written ‘if a man shall steal an ox or a sheep and slaughter it or sell it, he should restore five oxen instead of it and four sheep instead of it’? Were the Divine Law to have thus written, would I not have thought that he should pay nine for each of them? And should you rejoin that it is written ‘instead of it’, ‘instead of it’ [twice in the text, so that] one ‘instead of it’ would then have been superfluous,[12] [I might retort that] this is required for a further exposition, as taught: It might be maintained that one who stole an ox worth a mina[13] would be able to restore for it five frail oxen. The text says, however, ‘instead of it’, ‘instead of it’ twice.[14] [‘Ox and sheep’ of the concluding clause is thus indispensable]. It thus appears that it is 'ox and sheep' of the prior clause which would have been superfluous, as the Divine Law should have written: 'If a man shall steal and slaughter it or sell it, he shall restore five oxen for the ox and four sheep for the sheep.' But had the Divine Law to have thus written, I might have thought that it was only where he stole the two animals and slaughtered them [that liability would be attached]! — But surely it is written 'and slaughtered it', implying one animal! It might still be thought that it was only where he stole the two animals and sold them [that liability would be attached]! — But surely it is written, 'and he sold it' implying one animal! It could still be argued that I might have thought that it was only where he stole the two animals and slaughtered one and sold the other [that liability would be attached]! — But surely it is written, 'or he sold it' [indicating that slaughtering and selling were alternative]! I might nevertheless still argue that it was only where he stole the two of them and slaughtered one and left the other, or sold one and left the other![15] — We must say therefore that it is 'ox' of the concluding clause and 'sheep' of the first clause which would have been superfluous, as the Divine Law should have written: 'If a man shall steal an ox and slaughter it or sell it, he shall restore five oxen instead of it and four sheep instead of the sheep.' Why then do I require 'ox' of the concluding clause and 'sheep' of the first clause? To prove from it that only ox and sheep are subject to this law,[16] but not any other object whatsoever.

ONE WHO STEALS FROM A THIEF [WHAT HE HAS ALREADY STOLEN] NEED NOT MAKE DOUBLE PAYMENT etc. Rab said: This Mishnaic ruling applies only where the theft took place before Renunciation; for if after Renunciation, the first thief would have acquired title to the article and the second thief would have had to make double payment to the first thief.[17] Said R. Shesheth: I am inclined to say that it was only when he was half asleep and in bed that Rab could have enunciated this ruling. For it was taught: R. Akiba said: Why has the Torah laid down that where the thief slaughtered or sold [the sheep or ox] he would have to make fourfold and five-fold payments [respectively]? Because he became thereby rooted in sin.[18] Now, when could this be said of him? If before Renunciation,

---

(1) Cf. Lev. XXII, 19-25.

(2) V. p. 353, n. 9.

(3) Supra p.383.

(4) V. p. 383, n. 11.

(5) Supra p. 384.

(6) As was the case with the same sage in Shab. 27a; Bez. 18a; Keth. 11b; B.B. 24a; Bek. 54b and Ker. 7a.

(7) Who was a disciple of Raba, and the views of the disciples were regarded as those of the Master. [This supports the reading (on p. 383), 'Raba', instead of 'Rabbah', given in our edition; v. Tosaf.]

(8) Deut. V, 14.

(9) As supra 54b.

(10) Ex. XXI, 37.

(11) 'An ox and sheep', whether on the first or second occasion.

(12) [I.e., if we were to assume that there is a payment of nine in each case.]

(13) V. Glos.

(14) That the payment should be in accordance with the animal slaughtered or sold, but this would still afford no proof against the assumption that there is a payment of nine in each case.

(15) ['Ox and sheep' of the earlier clause are therefore similarly indispensable.]

(16) Of five-fold and four-fold payments respectively.

(17) Who through Renunciation on the part of the owner became the legal possessor of the article.

(18) [His sin struck root in that he has deprived beyond retrieve the owner of his belongings.]

could he then be called 'rooted in sin' [since the sale is of no validity]? It must therefore be after Renunciation.[1] But if you assume that Renunciation transfers ownership, why should he make four-fold and five-fold payments,[2] when it is his that he slaughters and his that he sells? — It may, however, be said as Raba stated elsewhere,[3] that it means 'because he doubled[4] his sin,' so likewise here it means, 'because he doubled his sin.'[5]

Come and hear: 'He slaughtered it and sold it;[6] just as the slaughter cannot be undone so the sale cannot be undone.' Now, when could this be so? If before Renunciation, why can it not be undone?[7] It must surely therefore be after Renunciation.[1] But if you assume that Renunciation transfers ownership, why should he pay fourfold and five-fold[8] when it is his that he slaughters and his that he sells? — As R. Nahman stated elsewhere, that it means to except a case where he transferred the animal for thirty days,[9] so also here it means to except a case where he transferred the beast for thirty days.[10]

An objection was raised [against this]: If a man steals an article and another comes and steals it from him, the first thief has to make double payment, whereas the second will not pay [anything] but the principal alone.[11] If, however, one stole [a sheep or an ox] and sold it, after which another one came and stole it, the first thief has to make four-fold and five-fold payments [respectively], while the second has to make double payment.[12] If one stole [a sheep or an ox] and slaughtered it, and another one came and stole it, the first thief will make four-fold and five-fold payments [respectively], whereas the second has not to make double payment but to repay the principal only.[11] Now, it has been taught in the middle clause: 'If however, one stole [a sheep or an ox] and sold it, after which another came and stole it, the first thief has to make four-fold and five-fold payments [respectively], while the second has to make double payment.'[12] But when could this be? If before Renunciation, why should the second make[12] double payment?[13] Is there any authority who maintains that a change in possession without Renunciation transfers ownership? It must therefore be after Renunciation. But if you assume that Renunciation transfers ownership, why then has he to make four-fold and five-fold payments,[14] seeing that it is his which he sold? And further, it was taught in the opening clause: 'If a man steals an article and another comes and steals it from him, the first thief has to make double payment, but the second will not pay [anything] but the principal.'[11] Now, since it is the time after Renunciation with which we are dealing, if you assume that Renunciation transfers ownership, why should the second 'not pay anything but the principal'?[15] Does not this show that Renunciation does not transfer ownership, in contradiction to the view of Rab? — Raba said: Do you really think that the text of this teaching is correct? For was it not taught in the concluding clause: 'If one stole [a sheep or an ox] and slaughtered it and another came and stole it, the first thief will make fourfold and five-fold payments [respectively], whereas the second has to pay nothing but the principal'? Now, is there any authority who maintains that a change in substance does not transfer ownership?[16] It must therefore surely still be said that the whole teaching refers to the time before Renunciation, but we have to transpose the ruling of the concluding clause to the case in the middle clause, and the ruling of the middle clause to the case in the concluding clause and read thus: If one stole [a sheep or an ox] and sold it, and another came and stole it, the first thief has to make four-fold and five-fold payments [respectively], but the second has not to pay anything but the principal, as a change in possession without Renunciation transfers no ownership. If, however, one stole [a sheep or an ox] and slaughtered it and another came and stole it, the first thief makes four-fold and five-fold payments [respectively], and the second makes double payment,[17] as ownership was transferred [to the first thief] by the change in substance.' R. Papa, however, said: All the same[18] you need not transpose [the rulings], since [we may say that] the concluding clause is in accordance with Beth Shammai, who maintain[19] that a change leaves the article in its previous status. But if so [that it was after Renunciation], will not the opening clause and middle clause be in contradiction to the view of Rab? — R. Zebid therefore said: The whole text could still refer to the time before Renunciation, as we are dealing here with a case where the owner abandoned hope [of regaining the stolen object] when it was already in the possession of the buyer, but had not abandoned it while it was still in the possession of the thief, so that [so far as the buyer was concerned] there was Renunciation [as well as a change in possession].[20] You should, however, not think [that this is so] because we need both Renunciation and a change in possession for the purpose of transferring ownership, as even Renunciation alone would also transfer ownership[21] to the thief.[22] It is, however, impossible to find a case in which both the first thief and the second thief should simultaneously pay except in this way.[23]

It was stated: If the thief sells before Renunciation, R. Nahman said that he is liable, while R. Shesheth said that he is exempt. R. Nahman who said that he would be liable held that since the Divine Law says 'and he sold it' and as the thief [in this case] did sell it, it makes no difference whether it was before Renunciation or after Renunciation, while R. Shesheth, who said that he would be exempt, held that the liability was only where he sold it after Renunciation,[24] where the act has a legal validity, whereas before Renunciation, when the act has no legal validity,[25] there could be no liability, as selling is compared to slaughter where it is necessary that the act should be of practical avail. R. Shesheth said: Whence have I inferred the view expressed by me? It was taught: 'R. Akiba said: Why does the Torah say that where the thief slaughtered and sold the stolen [sheep or ox] he should make four-fold and five-fold payments respectively? Because he became thereby rooted in sin.' Now, when could this be said of him? If before Renunciation, could he then be called 'rooted in sin' [since the sale is of no legal validity]?[25] Must it therefore not be after Renunciation?[24] — Raba said: It only means, because he doubled his sin.[26]

Come and hear: 'And he slaughtered it or sold it,'[27] just as slaughter cannot be undone, so the sale [must be one] which cannot be undone.' Now, when could this be so? If before Renunciation, why can it not be undone?[28] Must it therefore not be after Renunciation,[29] thus proving that the liability is only if it is sold after Renunciation?[29] — But R. Nahman interpreted it merely to except a case where he transferred the animal for thirty days.[30] Also R. Eleazar maintained that the liability would be only after Renunciation, as R. Eleazar stated:

---

(1) In which case the article will have to remain with the purchaser, as a transfer of possession taking place after Renunciation certainly transfers ownership.

(2) For slaughtering or selling after Renunciation when the thief has already become the legal owner of the animal.

(3) Infra p. 393.

(4) Lit., 'repeated'.

(5) By selling the animal even though the sale is of no validity.

(6) V. p. 388, n. 11.

(7) For a transfer of possession before Renunciation will certainly transfer no ownership to the buyer.

(8) P. 390, n. 5.

(9) V. p. 394, n. 4.

(10) Not to be subject to the law of selling or slaughtering.

(11) To the first thief.

(12) To the purchaser.

(13) For a transfer of possession before Renunciation will certainly transfer no ownership to the buyer.

(14) For selling after Renunciation when the thief has already become the legal owner of the animal.

(15) Why not pay double to the first thief who had already become the legal owner of the object through Renunciation?

(16) [Why not pay double to the first thief who had already become the legal owner through effecting a change in the substance of the article stolen?]

(17) V. p. 391, n. 4.

(18) Even though the teaching refers to the time after Renunciation.

(19) Supra p. 380.

(20) And for this reason the second in the middle clause has to make double payment to the buyer.

(21) In accordance with the view of Rab.

(22) [Mss. omit rightly 'to the thief'; v. D.S. a.l.]

(23) For if Renunciation took place while the article was still in the hands of the first thief, he would not have to make four-fold and five-fold payments for a subsequent sale or slaughter.

(24) In which case the article will have to remain with the purchaser, as a transfer of possession taking place after Renunciation certainly transfers ownership.
(25) V. p. 391, n. 6.
(26) By selling the animal even though the sale is of no validity.
(27) Ex. XXI, 37.
(28) V. p. 391, n. 6.
(29) I.e., where the sale is of legal avail.
(30) But not any other case.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 68b

'You can take it for granted that in the ordinary run of thefts there is Renunciation on the part of the owner; since the Torah has laid down that where the thief slaughtered or sold [the stolen sheep or ox] he should pay fourfold or five-fold payments [respectively]. For is there not a possibility that the owner had not abandoned hope? We must therefore say that in the ordinary run of thefts there is Renunciation on the part of the owner.'[1] But why should the liability not hold good even where hope was not abandoned?[2] — I would say, let not this enter your mind. For selling is placed on a par with slaughter: just as in the case of slaughter his act is of practical avail, so also in the case of selling his act should be of practical validity; and if it takes place before Renunciation, what would be the legal validity?[1] But again can it not be [that the liability is confined to cases] where we actually heard the owner abandoning hope? — I would reply, let not this enter your mind. For selling is put on a par with slaughter, and just as slaughter involves liability [if carried out] immediately [after the theft], so would selling similarly involve liability soon after the theft.[3]

R. Johanan said to him:[4] The law in the case of stealing a man[5] could prove that even where there is no Renunciation on the part of the owner[6] there will be liability. This statement seems to show that R. Johanan held that selling before Renunciation involves liability.[7] What then about selling after Renunciation?[8] — R. Johanan said that the thief is liable, but Resh Lakish said he is exempt. R. Johanan who said that he would be liable held that the liability was both before Renunciation and after Renunciation. But Resh Lakish, who said that he would be exempt,[9] maintained that the liability was only before Renunciation, whereas after Renunciation he would have already acquired title to the animal, and it was his that he slaughtered and his that he sold.

R. Johanan objected to Resh Lakish's view [from the following:] If he stole [a sheep or an ox] and after consecrating it slaughtered it, he should make double payment[10] but would not make four-fold and five-fold payments.[11] Now, when could this be? If before Renunciation, how does the animal become consecrated? Does not the Divine Law say 'And when a man shall sanctify his house to be holy',[12] [implying that] just as his house is his,[13] so also anything he consecrates must be his?[14] It must therefore apply to the time after Renunciation.[15] Now the reason is that he consecrated it: he has not to make four-fold and five-fold payments because when he slaughtered the animal it was a consecrated animal that he slaughtered; had he not, however, consecrated it he would have had to make four-fold and five-fold payments if he would have slaughtered it. Now, if you assume that Renunciation transfers ownership why should he[16] pay since it was his that he slaughtered and his that he sold? — He replied:[17] We are dealing here with a case where, for instance, the owner[18] consecrated the animal while it was in the possession of the thief.[19] But will it in that case become consecrated? Did not R. Johanan say[20] that where a robber misappropriated an article and the owner has not abandoned hope of recovering it, neither of them is able to consecrate it: the one[21] because it is not his, the other[22] because it is not in his possession? — We might reply that he[23] had in mind the practice of the virtuous, as we have learnt: The virtuous[24] used to set aside money and to declare that whatever has been gleaned [by passers-by] from this [vineyard][25] shall be redeemed by this money.[26] But [if the owner consecrated the animal], has not the principal thus been restored to the owner? [Why then should a thief pay double on it? — We assume a case where the consecration took place] after the case came into court [and evidence had already been given against the thief]. What were the circumstances? If the judges had already ordered him to go and pay the owner, why should exemption be only where he consecrated the animal? Why even where the owner did not consecrate it should the thief be liable? For did Raba not say that if [after the judges said], 'Go forth and pay him,' the thief slaughtered or sold the animal, he would be exempt, the reason being that since the judges had given their final sentence on the matter, when he sold or slaughtered the animal, he became [in the eye of the law] a 'robber', and a 'robber' has not to pay four-fold and five-fold payments,[27]

---

(1) [Since he conditions the liability of the fourfold and five-fold by the fact that the owner had despaired of the stolen article, it is evident that he agrees with R. Shesheth.]

(2) [Even where the sale is of no legal avail.]

(3) R. Eleazar thus inferred from this that in ordinary thefts there is immediate Renunciation on the part of the owner.

(4) I.e., R. Eleazar.

(5) Ex. XXI, 16.

(6) For surely no human being will abandon himself.

(7) As also maintained by R. Nahman.

(8) Does he agree in this with Rab, supra p. 390?

(9) V. p. 390, n. 5.

(10) For the theft.

(11) For the slaughter as it was a consecrated animal that he slaughtered, and there is no liability for stealing and selling and slaughtering consecrated animals (infra p. 427; Git. 55b).

(12) Lev. XXVII, 14.

(13) For immovables even when misappropriated always remain in the possession of the owner

(14) Excluding thus a thief consecrating misappropriated property.

(15) In which case the article could become consecrated, as a transfer of possession following Renunciation transfers ownership.

(16) V. p. 390, n. 2.

(17) I.e., Resh Lakish to R. Johanan.

(18) Not the thief.

(19) [Before Renunciation.]

(20) Infra p. 397; B.M. 7a.

(21) The robber.

(22) The owner.

(23) I.e., Resh Lakish.

(24) [צניע (plur. צנועים) 'denotes a positive quality, probably nothing else but discretion or modesty', Buchler, Types (contra Kohler, who identifies the Zenu'im with Essenes) pp. 59 ff.]

(25) In its fourth year, the fruit of which is prohibited unless redeemed, cf. Lev. XIX, 24.

(26) Which seems to show that fruits already misappropriated could also be redeemed by the owner and thus also consecrated. (M.Sh. V, 1).

(27) For the distinction between robber and thief in this respect cf. infra p. 452.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 69a

but if they merely said to him, 'You are liable to pay him,' and after that he slaughtered or sold the animal, he would be liable to pay four-fold or five-fold payment, the reason being that since they have not pronounced final sentence upon the matter he is still a thief?[1] — No, its application is necessary where they have as yet merely said to him, 'You are liable to pay him'.

The above text states:[2] 'R. Johanan said: If a robber misappropriated an article and the owner has not abandoned hope of recovering it neither of them is able to consecrate it: the one[3] because it is not his, the other[4] because it is not in his possession.' Could R. Johanan really have said this? Did not R.

Johanan say[5] that the halachah is in accordance with an anonymous Mishnah; and we have learnt:[6] 'In the case of a vineyard in its fourth year, the owners used to mark it with clods of earth', the sign implying an analogy to earth: just as in the case of earth a benefit may ensue from it,[7] so also the fruit of this vineyard[8] will after being redeemed be permitted to be enjoyed. 'That of 'orlah[9] used to be marked with potsherds', the sign indicating a similarity with potsherds: just as in the case of potsherds no benefit ensues from them,[10] so also the fruit of 'orlah[9] could not be enjoyed for any use whatever. 'A field of graves used to be marked with lime', the sign having the colour of white, like corpses. 'The lime was dissolved in water and then poured out' so as to make its colour more white. 'R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: These practices were recommended only for the Sabbatical year,' when the fruits on the trees were ownerless;[11] 'for in the case of the other years of the Septennate,[12] you may let the wicked stuff themselves with it till they die.[13] The virtuous however used to set aside money and to declare that whatever has been gleaned from this [vineyard] shall be redeemed by this money.'[14] Does not this contradict R. Johanan? Nor can you urge in reply that the Tanna who recorded the practice of the virtuous was R. Simeon b. Gamaliel,[15] [and R. Johanan might therefore not have concurred with this anonymous view stated by a single Tanna] for did not Rabbah b. Bar Hanah say[16] that R. Johanan stated that whenever R. Simeon expressed a view in a Mishnah the halachah is in accordance with him, with the exception of his view regarding 'Suretyship'.[17] 'Sidon'[18] and the 'last [case dealing with] evidence'?[19] — I may reply that you should not read,[20] 'whatever has been gleaned'[21] but read 'whatever will be gleaned'[22] from this [vineyard]. But could R. Johanan have said this: Did not R. Johanan say that the virtuous and R. Dosa said the same thing, and, as we know, R. Dosa definitely stated 'whatever has been gleaned'?[21] For was it not taught:[23] R. Judah says: In the morning the owner of the field should get up and say 'whatever the poor shall glean during the day should be considered ownerless[24] [from the present moment]'.[25] whereas R. Dosa says: It is at eveningtide that he should say, 'Whatever the poor have gleaned shall be ownerless'![26] — I must transpose the view of R. Judah to R. Dosa[27] and the view of R. Dosa to R. Judah. But why transpose this teaching, and not transpose instead[28] the statement of R. Johanan, assigning to 'the virtuous and to R. Judah the same thing'? — It may, however, be said that it was impossible not to transpose this teaching,[29] since in this teaching[29] it is stated that R. Judah upholds bererah[30] and we find R. Judah holding in other places that there is not bererah as we have learnt[31]

---

(1) Subject to the law of paying four-fold and five-fold payments.

(2) Supra p. 396.

(3) The robber.

(4) The owner.

(5) Shab. 46a.

(6) M.Sh. V, I.

(7) In time, as after tilling, sowing and reaping.

(8) Cf. Lev, XIX, 24.

(9) I.e., during the first three years when the fruits are totally forbidden in accordance with Lev. XIX, 23.

(10) As nothing could grow in them properly.

(11) Cf. Lev. XXV, 6-7.

(12) When the fruits were not ownerless.

(13) As it was wrong for passers-by to misappropriate the fruits, they need not be warned by all these signs to abstain from using them in the forbidden manner. [This last passage occurs only in the Jerusalem version of the Mishnah, not in the Babylonian.]

(14) V. p. 396, n. 8.

(15) Who made the immediately preceding statement.

(16) B.M. 38b.

(17) In B.B. 174a.

(18) In Git. 77a.

(19) In Sanh. 31a.

(20) In the words of the 'virtuous'.

(21) In the past.
(22) In the future, so that the redemption will take effect retrospectively from the moment this statement was made, when the gleanings were still in the possession of the owner.
(23) Tosef. Pe'ah II, 4.
(24) As each two ears falling together may be gleaned by the poor who need not tithe them, but not so is the case regarding three ears falling together. Not all the poor, however, know this distinction. It is therefore meritorious on the part of the owner to abandon those which are gleaned by the poor unlawfully.
(25) I.e., retrospectively.
(26) [From this it follows that the declaration of the virtuous was likewise related to the past.]
(27) So that it was R. Dosa who said 'whatever the poor shall glean.'
(28) Of 'the virtuous and R. Dosa.'
(29) Where R. Judah and R. Dosa differ.
(30) I.e., Retrospective designation of that which was abandoned at a time when it was not defined; cf. also supra 51b.
(31) Tosef. Dem. VIII, 5.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 69b

: 'If a man buys wine from among the Cutheans[1] [and it was late on Friday towards sunset and he has no other wine for the Sabbath][2] may say 'two logs [out of a hundred[3]] which I intend to set aside are terumah,[4] ten are the first tithe[5] and nine the second tithe,' and these he may redeem [upon money anywhere in his possession],[6] and he may commence drinking at once. So R. Meir.[7] But R. Judah, R. Jose and R. Simon prohibit this.[8] To this I may rejoin: When all is said and done, why have you transposed [the views mentioned in the Baraitha]? Because R. Judah would otherwise contradict R. Judah! But would not now R. Johanan contradict R. Johanan? For you stated according to R. Johanan that we should not read 'whatever has been gleaned'[9] but read 'whatever will be gleaned',[10] thus proving that he upholds bererah[11] whereas in fact R. Johanan does not uphold bererah. For did not R. Assi say[12] that R. Johanan stated that brothers dividing an inheritance are like purchasers[13] [in the eye of the law], so that they will have to restore the portions to one another on the advent of the jubilee year?[14] — We must therefore still read[15] 'whatever has been gleaned',[9] and [say that] R. Johanan[16] found another anonymous Mishnah, as we have indeed learnt: ONE WHO STEALS [ARTICLES ALREADY STOLEN] IN THE HANDS OF A THIEF NEED NOT MAKE DOUBLE PAYMENT.[17] Why should this be? We grant you that he need not pay the first thief, [since Scripture says:] And it be stolen out of the man's house,[18] [implying] 'but not out of the house of the thief'. But why not pay the owner? We must say that this shows that the one[19] is not entitled to payment because the stolen article is not his, and the other one[20] is not entitled to payment as the article is not in his possession.[21] — But what induced him[22] to follow that anonymous Mishnah?[17] Why should he not act in accordance with the anonymous Mishnah dealing with the virtuous?[23] — Because he was supported by the verse: And when the man shall sanctify his house to be holy unto the Lord,[24] just as his house is in his possession,[25] so anything also which is in his possession can be sanctified.[26]

Abaye said: If R. Johanan had not stated that the virtuous[27] and R. Dosa[28] said the same thing,[29] I might have said that while the virtuous accepted the view of R. Dosa, R. Dosa did not uphold the practice of the virtuous. The virtuous accepted the view of R. Dosa; for if the Rabbis made things easier for a thief,[30] need we say they did so for the poor?[31] But R. Dosa did not uphold the practice of the virtuous: for it was only for the poor[31] that the Rabbis made things easier, whereas for the thief they did not make things easier.[30] Raba said: Had R. Johanan not stated that the virtuous and R. Dosa said the same thing, I should have said that the Tanna followed by the virtuous was R. Meir. For did not R. Meir say[32] that the [second] tithe[33] is Divine property,[34] and even so the Divine Law placed it in the owner's possession in respect of redemption, as written: And if a man will redeem aught of his tithe, he shall add unto it the fifth part thereof,[35] the Divine Law thus designating it 'his tithe' and ordering him to add a fifth.[36] The same applies to the vineyard in the fourth year, as can be derived from the occurrence of the term 'holy' there[37] and in the case of the tithe.[38] For it is written here 'shall be holy to praise',[37] and it is written in the case of tithe, 'And all tithe of the land whether of seed of the land or of the fruit of the tree it is holy':[38] just as the 'holy' mentioned in connection with tithe although it is divine property, has nevertheless been placed by the Divine Law in the possession of the owner for the purpose of redemption, so also the 'holy' mentioned in connection with a vineyard of the fourth year, although the property is not his own, has been placed by the Divine Law in his possession for the purpose of redemption; now seeing that even when it is in his possession it is not his and yet he may redeem it; hence he may be able to redeem it [also when out of his possession]. But in the case of the gleaning [of ears of corn] which is his own property,[39] it is only when it is [still] in his [own] possession that he is able to declare it ownerless, whereas when not in his possession he should not be entitled to declare it ownerless.[40]

Rabina said: Had R. Johanan not stated that the virtuous and R. Dosa said the same thing, I should have said that the Tanna stating the case of the virtuous was R. Dosa, so that this anonymous Mishnah would not refute the view of R. Johanan, for R. Johanan

---

(1) And has thus to set aside both the priestly portion, called terumah, and the first tithe for the Levite and the second tithe to be redeemed or partaken of in Jerusalem.

(2) And without having the time to separate the portions to be set aside.

(3) Logs (v. Glos.) which he bought.

(4) For the priests, (v. Glos.).

(5) For the Levites, v. Num. XVIII, 21.

(6) Cf. Deut. XIV, 22-25.

(7) Maintaining retrospective designation, so that the wine set aside after Sabbath for the respective portions will be considered the very wine which was destined at the outset to be set aside.

(8) As they maintain no retrospective designation which would make the wine drunk the unconsecrated and that which remained the part originally consecrated. [This shows that R. Judah does not uphold Bererah, thus necessitating the transposition of the Baraitha in Pe'ah.]

(9) V. p. 398, n. 7.

(10) V. p. 398, n. 8.

(11) V. p. 398, n. 16.

(12) Bez. 37b; Git. 25a and 48a.

(13) For the portion chosen by each brother for himself could not be considered as having thus retrospectively become the very inheritance designated for him.

(14) In accordance with Lev. XXV, 13.

(15) In the words of the 'virtuous'.

(16) [In maintaining that a consecration made by the owner even before renunciation is not valid, in opposition to the principle underlying the declaration of the 'virtuous'.]

(17) Supra p. 363.

(18) Ex. XXII, 6.

(19) The first thief.

(20) The owner.

(21) This proves that the lack of possession is a defect in the very ownership, and if an article out of possession is not subject to double payment it could neither be subject to the law of consecration and alienation which are incidents of ownership.

(22) V. I.e., R. Johanan.

(23) V. p. 396, n. 8.

(24) V. Lev. XXII, 14.

(25) V. p. 395, n. 8.

(26) Excluding thus an owner consecrating movables out of his possession; and because of this Scriptural authority R. Johanan deviated from the view of the 'virtuous'.

(27) Dealing with the vineyard in the fourth year misappropriated by passers by.

(28) Dealing with the gleaning of the poor.

(29) V. supra p. 398.
(30) To safeguard him from partaking of forbidden fruits.
(31) Who are not out to commit theft and should consequently the more so be safeguarded from partaking of produce that has not been tithed.
(32) Kid. 24a.
(33) To be partaken of in Jerusalem, cf. Deut. XIV, 22-26.
(34) So that the original owner is but an invitee without possessing any legal ownership.
(35) Lev. XXVII, 31.
(36) Whereas one redeeming the second tithe of another person does not add a fifth.
(37) Lev. XIX, 24.
(38) Ibid. XXVII, 30.
(39) In the case of each three ears falling together.
(40) [Thus, had not R. Johanan said that the virtuous and R. Dosa said the same thing, it could rightly be argued that the virtuous would not apply their principle to the gleaning.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 70a

would have been right in not concurring with an anonymous statement of a single Tanna. The Nehardeans said: We do not execute an assignment on movables[1] [which are outside the possession of the parties].[2] Said R. Ashi to Amemar: On what ground? He replied: Because of the view of R. Johanan. For R. Johanan said: If a robber has misappropriated an article and the owner has not abandoned hope of recovering it, neither of them is able to consecrate it; the one because it is not his, the other because it is not in his possession. Some read that the Nehardeans said: We do not execute an assignment on movables [the claim upon which] was denied [by a bailee]. The reason is that the claim was denied, as the deed of assignment would then appear a lie,[3] whereas where it is not denied, we would be able to execute. The Nehardeans further said: An assignment which does not contain the words, 'Go forth and take legal action so that you may acquire title to it and secure the claim for yourself' is of no validity, the reason being that the defendant might say to him:[4] 'You have no claim against me'. But Abaye said: If it is written, 'You will be entitled to a half or a third or a fourth of the claim', it would be valid, for since he is entitled to litigate regarding the half, he is also entitled to litigate regarding the whole.[5] Amemar said: [In any case] where the assignee became possessed of articles belonging to the defendant, we would not take them away from him.[6] But R. Ashi said: Since it was written for him,[7] 'Whatever will be imposed by the Court of Law I accept upon myself', he was surely appointed but an agent.[8] Some, however, say that he is made a partner. What is the practical difference?[9] Whether he may remain possessed of a half. The law is that he is appointed only an agent.[10] MISHNAH. IF A THIEF IS CONVICTED OF THE THEFT [OF A SHEEP OR AN OX] ON THE EVIDENCE OF TWO WITNESSES,[11] AND OF THE SLAUGHTER OR SALE [OF IT] BY THE SAME TWO, OR ON THE EVIDENCE OF ANOTHER TWO WITNESSES, HE HAS TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT.[12] IF HE STEALS AND SELLS ON THE SABBATH DAY,[13] OR IF HE STEALS AND SELLS FOR IDOLATROUS PURPOSES, OR IF HE STEALS AND SLAUGHTERS ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT,[14] OR IF HE STEALS FROM HIS OWN FATHER, AND AFTER HE HAD SLAUGHTERED OR SOLD, HIS FATHER DIED,[15] OR AGAIN, WHERE HE STEALS AND SLAUGHTERS AND THEN CONSECRATES IT, HE HAS TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT.[16] IF HE STEALS AND SLAUGHTERS TO USE THE MEAT FOR CURATIVE PURPOSES OR TO GIVE TO DOGS, OR IF HE SLAUGHTERS AND FINDS THE ANIMAL TREFA,[17] OR IF HE SLAUGHTERS IT AS UNCONSECRATED IN THE 'AZARAH,[18] HE HAS TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT.[19] R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, RULES THAT THERE IS EXEMPTION IN THESE [LAST] TWO CASES.[20]

GEMARA. Are we to say that the Mishnah is not in accordance with R. Akiba? For how could it be in accordance with R. Akiba who said that [the Scriptural term] 'Matter'[21] implies 'not half a matter'? As indeed taught:[22] R. Jose said: 'When [my] father Halafta went to R. Johanan b. Nuri to learn Torah, or as others, when R. Johanan b. Nuri went to [my] father

---

(1) Shebu. 33b and Bek. 49a.

(2) But if they are in the possession of a bailee they could be assigned as they are considered in the possession of the depositor (Tosaf.).

(3) Since the bailee denies them.

(4) The assignee.

(5) V. B.M. 8a.

(6) For the benefit of the defendant even where the prescribed clause 'to go forth and secure for himself' etc. was not inserted in the instrument of assignment. According, however, to Gaonic interpretation it means that the assignee may retain the articles against the assignor (v. Rashi).

(7) By the assignor.

(8) And could therefore not retain the articles either against the defendant in the circumstances dealt with in the first interpretation, or against the assignor in accordance with the Gaonic interpretation.

(9) Whether he was made a partner or an agent.

(10) [Asheri and Alfasi omit, 'The law is, etc.']

(11) Cf. Deut. XIX, 15.

(12) Respectively.

(13) For though it is prohibited to do any business transactions on the Sabbath day, no capital charge is thereby involved, and civil liability could thus be established; cf. Gemara.

(14) As for desecrating the Day of Atonement in contradistinction to the Sabbath no capital charge is involved, the sole punishment at the hand of man being thirty-nine lashes.

(15) And the thief became an heir to the estate.

(16) For the slaughter which preceded the consecration.

(17) I.e., ritually unfit to be eaten owing to an organic defect in the animal; v. Glos.

(18) I.e., the precincts of the Temple where only sacrificial animals might be slaughtered.

(19) As the ritual unfitness of the animal in the last two cases is not due to a defect in the act of slaughter but arises through other circumstances.

(20) For he is of the opinion that if the slaughter does for any reason whatsoever not effect the ritual fitness of the animal to be eaten, it is not considered in the eye of the law as a slaughter.

(21) A matter shall be established by two witnesses, Deut. XIX, 15.

(22) V. B.B. 56a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 70b

Halafta, he said to him: Suppose a man had the use of a piece of land for one year as testified by two witnesses, for a second year as testified by two other witnesses, and for a third year as testified by still two other witnesses, what is the position? — He replied: 'This is a proper usucaption'.[1] Whereupon the other rejoined: 'I also say the same, but R. Akiba joins issue on the matter for R. Akiba used to say: [Scripture states] A matter [implying] "but not half a matter"'![2] — Abaye, however, said: You may even say that this is in accordance with R. Akiba. For would R. Akiba not agree in a case where two witnesses state that a certain person had betrothed a woman[3] and two other witnesses testify that another person had subsequently had intercourse with her,[4] that though the evidence regarding the intercourse presupposes the evidence regarding the betrothal [in order to become relevant], nevertheless, since the evidence of betrothal does not presuppose the evidence of intercourse, each testimony should be considered a matter [complete in itself]? So also here, though the evidence regarding the slaughter presupposes the evidence regarding the theft [if it is to be relevant] nevertheless since the evidence regarding the theft does not presuppose the evidence regarding the slaughter, each testimony should be considered a matter [complete in itself].[5] But according to the Rabbis[6] what will this term 'matter' [implying] 'but not half a matter' exclude? — It will exclude a case where one witness testified that there was one hair on her back[7] and the other states that there was one hair in front. But [since each hair is testified to by one witness],[8] would this not be both half a matter and half a testimony?[9] — [We must say] therefore that it excludes a case where two witnesses testify that there was one hair on her back and two other witnesses state that there was one hair in front, as in this case the one set testify that she was still a minor[10] and the others similarly testify that she was still a minor.

IF HE STEALS AND SELLS ON THE SABBATH DAY . . . [HE HAS TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT]. But has it not been taught [elsewhere] that he would be exempt? — Said Rami b. Hama: If it was taught there that he would be exempt, it was only where the purchaser said to him:[11] 'pluck figs off my fig-tree[12] and transfer to me [in consideration of them] the objects you have stolen.'[13] It may however, be argued that seeing that if the purchaser claimed from him before us in the court[14] we would be unable to order him to go and to pay since [at the time of the alleged liability,] he became subject to a capital charge, why should not even the sale itself be declared no sale at all?[15] — R. Papa therefore said: There would be exemption [where the purchaser said to him], 'Throw your stolen objects [from a public thoroughfare] into my private courtyard,[16] and transfer to me [thereby][17] the objects you have stolen.'[18] Whom does this follow? R. Akiba,[19] who said that an object intercepted in the air is on the same footing [regarding the law of Sabbath] as if it had already come to rest.[20] For if we were to follow the other Rabbis,[21] while the possession of the stolen objects would be transferred as soon as they reached the air of the court-yard of the purchaser's house,[22] in regard to Sabbath the capital liability would not be incurred until they have reached the actual ground![19] — Raba thereupon said: It may still be in accordance with Rami b. Hama.[23] For the hire [of a harlot] was prohibited by the Torah[24] [from being used for the Temple] even [when given by a son] for having incestuous intercourse with his mother, irrespective of the fact that were she to have claimed it from him before us in the court, we should not have been able to order him to go and give her the hire.[25] We see then that although were she to have claimed it from him by law, we should have been unable to order him to go and pay her,[25] nevertheless when he of his own accord pays her [the hire] it will be subject to the law of the hire [of a harlot].[24] So also here regarding payment [for the figs plucked by the thief on the Sabbath], if the purchaser had claimed it by law in our presence, we should have been unable to order the thief to go and pay;[25]

---

(1) [In accordance with B.B. III, 1, that three years of undisturbed possession are required to establish a presumptive title on the part of a possessor.]

(2) [And here no two witnesses testify to more than one year of occupation, which is only a third of the matter in hand. And in our Mishnah the second set of witnesses testify to no more than half a matter, i.e. the slaughter, and according to R. Akiba, should not be able to convict the thief.]

(3) By a valid act of Kiddushin (v. Glos.), thus making her his wife.

(4) Lev. XX, 10.

(5) In which case even R. Akiba will allow such evidence to be given independently by separate sets.

(6) Who even in the case of undisturbed possession admit evidence given independently by three sets of witnesses testifying to each of the three years respectively.

(7) The reference is to the two hairs which are the sign of puberty in a girl. V. Nid. 52a.

(8) Whose evidence in such a case is of no effect whatsoever; cf. Deut. XIX, 15.

(9) And it is quite obvious that evidence of this kind is of no avail.

(10) As the appearance of one hair is no sign of puberty; but where different witnesses testify to different years, each year is considered a 'whole matter'.

(11) To the thief who sold him the animal.

(12) Which is a capital offence if done on the Sabbath; v. Shab. VII, 2.

(13) It thus follows that at the very moment when the sale was completed the thief was desecrating the Sabbath by an act which renders him liable to a capital charge in which all possible civil liabilities to take effect at that time have to merge.

(14) To give some consideration for the fig.

(15) For since the thief would have by law to pay nothing for the consideration given him on the part of the purchaser, there should in the eye of the law be lacking any consideration at all rendering the purchase null and void.

(16) And it is a capital offence to throw anything on Sabbath from a public thoroughfare to private premises; cf. Shab. XI, 1.
(17) I.e., by the animal entering into the premises of the prospective purchaser in accordance with B.M. 11a and supra p. 283.
(18) V. p. 405, n. 7.
(19) Shab. 4b; 97a and Git. 79a.
(20) So that the capital offence was committed at the very moment the transaction of sale became complete by the animal entering the air of the purchaser's court-yard; cf. B.M. 12a and Git. 79a.
(21) Who maintain that the capital offence of desecrating the Sabbath by throwing anything from a public thoroughfare into private premises will be committed only at the moment when the object thrown falls upon the ground.
(22) B.M. 12a and Git. 79a.
(23) That the purchaser said to the thief, 'Pluck off a fig of my fig-tree' etc., despite your objection as to the lack of consideration.
(24) Deut. XXIII, 19.
(25) As the very act that should cause pecuniary liability is a capital offence in which all possible civil liabilities have to merge.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 71a

nevertheless, since the thief was prepared to transfer the possession [of the stolen objects] to him by this procedure it should be considered a sale.

IF HE STEALS AND SLAUGHTERS ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT etc. I would ask, why [should this be so]? It is true that no capital punishment is attached here,[1] but there will at least be the punishment of lashes, and is it not an established ruling[2] that no man who is lashed can be ordered to pay?[3] — It may, however, be said that the Mishnah is in accordance with R. Meir who said[4] that a person who is lashed may also be ordered to pay.[3] But if in accordance with R. Meir, why should there be no liability even for slaughtering on the Sabbath?[5] And should you affirm that while he holds that one may be lashed and be ordered to pay, he[6] does not hold that one may be condemned to death and also ordered to pay. [I would ask,] does he really not [maintain this second ruling]? Was it not taught:[7] 'If he steals and slaughters on the Sabbath or if he steals and slaughters to serve idols,[8] or if he steals an ox condemned to be stoned[9] and slaughters it, he has to make four-fold or five-fold payment according to R. Meir,[10] but the Rabbis rule that there is exemption'? — I might reply that this ruling applies to all cases save this, for it was stated with reference to it that R. Jacob stated that R. Johanan said, or as others say, that R. Jeremiah stated on behalf of R. Simeon b. Lakish that R. Ile'a and the whole company[11] said in the name of R. Johanan that the slaughter [in that case] was carried out by another person [acting on behalf of the thief].[12] But how could the one[13] commit an offence[14] and the other[15] be liable to a fine?[16] — Raba replied: This offence here is different, as Scripture says: And slaughter it or sell it:[17] just as selling [becomes complete] through the medium of another person,[18] so also slaughter may be effected by another person. The School of R. Ishmael taught: [The term] 'or'[19] [inserted between 'slaughter' and 'selling' was meant] to include the case of an agent.[20] The School of Hezekiah taught: The term 'instead'[19] [was intended] to include the case of an agent.

Mar Zutra demurred to this. Is there [he said] any action for which a man is not liable if done by himself but for which he is liable if done by his agent? — R. Ashi said to him: In that case[21] it was not because he should not be subject to liability, but because he ought to be subject to a penalty[21] severer than that. But if the slaughter was carried out by another one, what is the reason of the Rabbis who ruled that there was exemption? — We might say that the Sages [referred to] were R. Simeon who stated that a slaughter through which the animal would not ritually become fit for food could not be called slaughter [in the eyes of the law].[22] But I would say, I grant you this in regard to serving idols and an ox condemned to be stoned, as [through the slaughter] the animal will in these cases not become fit for food,[23] but in the case of the Sabbath, does not the slaughter render the animal fit for food? For did we not learn that if a man slaughters on the Sabbath or on the Day of Atonement, though he is liable for a capital offence,[24] his slaughter is ritually valid?[25] — It may, however, be said that he[26] concurred with R. Johanan ha-Sandalar, as we have learned, If a man cooks [a dish] on the Sabbath, if inadvertently, [even] he himself[27] may partake of it,[28] but if deliberately, he should not partake of it[29] [on that day]. So R. Meir. R. Judah says: If inadvertently, he may eat it only after the expiration of the Sabbath,[30] whereas if deliberately he should never partake of it.[31] R. Johanan ha-Sandalar says: If inadvertently, the dish may be partaken of after the expiration of the Sabbath, only by other people, but not by himself, whereas if deliberately, it should never be partaken of either by him or by others.[32] What was the reason of R. Johanan ha-Sandalar? — R. Hiyya expounded at the entrance of the house of the prince:[33] Scripture says: Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore, for it is holy unto you.[34] Just as holy food is forbidden to be eaten,[35] so also what is unlawfully prepared on the Sabbath is forbidden to be partaken of. But, [you might argue,] just as holy food is forbidden for any use,[35] so should whatever is [unlawfully] prepared on the Sabbath also be forbidden for any use.[36] It is therefore stated further: 'Unto you',[34] implying that it still remains yours for general use.[37] It might [moreover] be thought that the prohibition extends even where prepared inadvertently, it is therefore stated: Everyone that profaneth it shall surely be put to death,[34] [as much as to say], I speak only of the case when it is done deliberately, but not when done inadvertently.

R. Aha and R. Rabina differ in this matter. One said that whatever is [unlawfully] prepared on the Sabbath is forbidden on Scriptural authority whereas the other [Rabbi] said that whatever is [unlawfully] prepared on the Sabbath is forbidden on Rabbinic authority. He who said that it was on Scriptural authority bases his view on the exposition just stated, whereas he who said that it was on Rabbinic authority holds that when Scripture says, 'It is holy', it means that it itself[38] is holy, but that which is [unlawfully] prepared on it is not holy. Now I grant you that according to the view that the prohibition is based on Scriptural authority, the Rabbis because

---

(1) V. p. 403, n. 4.

(2) Keth. 32a and B.M. 91a.

(3) For a civil liability arising out of an act done at the time when the transgression for which he is to be lashed was committed.

(4) Keth. 33b.

(5) Why then is it stated infra p. 427, that in this case there would be exemption?

(6) R. Meir.

(7) Keth. loc. cit.

(8) Which is a capital offence; cf. Ex. XXII, 19.

(9) Which is thus forbidden for any use; v. supra p. 234.

(10) Which shows that in R. Meir's opinion liability to pay may he added to capital punishment.

(11) [חבורתא , a term employed in designation of the corporate body of members of the Palestinian schools, primarily of the School of Tiberias. V. Bacher, MGWJ, 1899, p. 345.]

(12) In which case it is not the thief but the other person who is liable to the capital punishment.

(13) I.e., the agent.

(14) Of slaughtering a stolen animal.

(15) I.e., the thief.

(16) Of four-fold or five-fold payment.

(17) Ex. XXI, 37.

(18) For two parties are needed to a sale: one to sell and the other to buy.

(19) Ibid.

(20) To make the principal liable to the fine.

(21) I.e., capital punishment for desecrating the Sabbath or serving idols.

(22) V. p. 403, n. 10.

(23) For serving idols see A.Z. 54a; and Hul. 40a.
(24) In the case of Sabbath the offender would be subject to be stoned as in Ex. XXXV, 2 and Num. XV, 32-36, but in the case of the Day of Atonement he would only be subject to a heavenly punishment of being cut off from among his people, in accordance with Lev. XXIII, 30 and Ker. I, 1.
(25) Hul. 14a.
(26) I.e., R. Simeon.
(27) I.e., he who cooked it.
(28) Even on the same day.
(29) Nor anybody else.
(30) But on the same day neither he nor anybody else may partake of it.
(31) Though others may partake of it after the expiration of the Sabbath.
(32) V. Ter. II, 3. It thus follows that according to R. Johanan an animal deliberately slaughtered on the Sabbath will be forbidden as food; and since such a slaughter renders the animal unfit for food, it involves no liability of the fourfold or fivefold payment.
(33) [The reference is to R. Hiyya b. Abba II and R. Judah the Prince III whose home was at Sepphoris. V. zuri, Mishpat hazibburi, I, 281 ff.]
(34) Ex. XXXI, 14.
(35) Cf. Lev. V, 15-16.
(36) Not only for food to Israelites but also for any use whatever.
(37) For surely if it becomes forbidden for any use there would be no practical purpose in retaining ownership.
(38) I.e., the Sabbath itself.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 71b

of this have rightly ruled that there is exemption,[1] but according to the view that it is based on Rabbinic authority, why did the Rabbis rule that there is exemption?[2] — [Their exemption applies] to the other cases; to serving idols, and an ox condemned to be stoned.

But why does R. Meir impose liability in the case of slaughtering for the service of idols? For as soon as he starts the act of slaughtering in the slightest degree he renders the animal forbidden,[3] so that the continuation of the slaughter is done on an animal already forbidden for any use whatever, and as such, was he therefore not slaughtering that which no longer belonged to the owner?[4] — Raba replied: The rule applies to one who declares that it is only at the very completion of the act of slaughter that he intends to serve idols therewith. But what about an ox condemned to be stoned? Is it not forbidden for any use whatever, so that he slaughters that which does not belong to the owner?[4] — Raba thereupon said: We are dealing here with a case where the owner had handed over the ox to a bailee, and as it did damage [by killing a person] in the house of the bailee it was declared Mu'ad in the house of the bailee and its final verdict was issued while it was in the house of the bailee; R. Meir thus on one point concurred with R. Jacob and on another point he concurred with R. Simeon: On one point he concurred with R. Jacob who said that if even after its final verdict was issued the bailee restored it to the owner, it would be a legal restoration;[5] and on another point he concurred with R. Simeon who stated[6] that an object the absence of which entails money loss is regarded as possessing an intrinsic value,[7] as we have learned: R. Simeon says: In the case of consecrated animals[8] for the loss of which the owner is liable to replace them by others, the thief has to pay,[9] thus proving that an object whose absence entails money loss is regarded as possessing an intrinsic value.[10] R. Kahana said: When I reported this discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, I asked: How could you explain our Mishnah[11] to be [only] in accordance with R. Meir[12] but not in accordance with R. Simeon, since it is stated in the concluding clause, R. SIMEON HOWEVER RULES THAT THERE IS EXEMPTION IN THE LAST TWO CASES,[13] thus implying that in the other cases of the whole Mishnah he agrees? — He[14] however said to me; No, it merely implies that he agrees in the case of slaughtering or selling to use the meat for curative purposes or to give to dogs.[15]

IF HE STEALS FROM HIS OWN FATHER AND AFTER HE HAD SLAUGHTERED OR SOLD, HIS FATHER DIED, etc. Raba inquired of R. Nahman: If he steals an ox of two partners and after slaughtering it he confesses to one of them,[16] what would be the law?[17] — Shall we say that the Divine law says: 'Five oxen',[18] [implying] 'but not five halves of oxen', or do the 'five oxen' mentioned by the Divine Law include also five halves of oxen? — He replied:[19] The Divine Law says 'five oxen' [implying] 'but not five halves of oxen'.[20]

He, however, raised an objection against him [from the following]: IF HE STEALS FROM HIS FATHER AND AFTER HE HAD SLAUGHTERED OR SOLD, HIS FATHER DIED, HE HAS TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT. Seeing that the father died,[21] is not this case here on a par with a case where he went[22] and confessed to one of the partners, and it is yet stated that he has to make four-fold or five-fold payment? — He replied: Here we are dealing with a case where, for instance, his father has already appeared in the court before he died.[23] Had he not appeared in court, the son would not have had to make four-fold or five-fold payment. If so, instead of having the subsequent clause 'Where he steals of his father [who subsequently died] and afterwards he slaughters or sells, he has not to pay four-fold and five-fold payments,'[24] why should not [the Mishnah] make the distinction in the same case itself by stating, 'This ruling[25] applies only where the father appeared in court, whereas if he did not manage to appear in court, the thief would not have to make four-fold and five-fold payments'?[26] — He replied:[27] This is indeed so, but since the opening clause runs 'IF HE STEALS FROM HIS FATHER AND AFTER HE HAD SLAUGHTERED OR SOLD, HIS FATHER DIED', the later clause also has the wording, 'where he steals from his father and after his father died he slaughters or sells'. In the morning, however, he said to him:[27] When the Divine Law said 'five oxen' it also meant even five halves of oxen, and the reason why I did not say this to you on the previous evening

---

(1) As the slaughter of the animal on the Sabbath day would on Scriptural authority render the animal unfit for food and could according to R. Simeon not be considered a slaughter at all.

(2) Since according to substantive law the animal would be fit for use.

(3) Cf. Hul. 40a.

(4) V. p. 409, n. 8.

(5) Supra p. 255.

(6) Infra 437.

(7) So that since if the ox would not have been slaughtered the bailee would have been able to restore it intact without paying anything for its value, whereas now that the ox was stolen and slaughtered he would have to pay for the full value of the ox, the ox is considered of an intrinsic value though it was condemned to be stoned, and the thief has to pay the fine accordingly.

(8) Which as such are not subject to the law of the fine of double and four-fold and five-fold payment, as infra p. 427.

(9) The owner the full fine, v. Mishnah p. 427.

(10) To the one who would be liable to make the outlay of money, and for this reason R. Meir makes the thief liable for the payment of the four-fold or five-fold.

(11) Regarding the case of slaughtering on the Day of Atonement.

(12) Who holds one could be both lashed and ordered to pay.

(13) Supra p. 403.

(14) I.e., R. Zebid.

(15) Which forms a part of the last paragraph which is complete in itself.

(16) So that he will not have to pay any fine to this partner, as a confession in a matter of a fine carried exemption; v. supra p. 62 and infra p. 427.

(17) Regarding the other partner when witnesses will appear.

(18) Ex. XXI, 37.

(19) I.e., R. Nahman to Raba.

(20) There will therefore be here total exemption.

(21) And the thief becomes a partner together with the other brothers in the whole estate.

(22) Lit., 'forestalled' (witnesses).

(23) And the liability was already then fully established.

(24) Infra p. 427. For at the time of the slaughter or sale the thief was a joint owner of the animal.

(25) Of liability.

(26) Even where he slaughtered the animal or sold it before the death of his father.

(27) R. Nahman to Raba.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 72a

was because I had not yet partaken of [a dish of] beef [and felt too feeble to arrive at a carefully thought out conclusion]. But why then this difference between the earlier clause[1] and the later clause?[2] — He replied: In the earlier clause[1] we can rightly apply to the offence [the words] 'and he slaughters it', [in the sense that] the whole act is unlawful,[3] whereas in the concluding clause we cannot apply to the offence [the words] 'and he slaughters it' [in the sense that] the whole act is unlawful.[4]

IF HE SLAUGHTERS AND FINDS THE ANIMAL TREFA [OR WHERE HE SLAUGHTERS IT AS UNCONSECRATED IN THE 'AZARAH HE HAS TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT]. R. Habibi of Huzna'ah said to R. Ashi: This shows that [from the legal point of view] the term 'slaughter' applies to the act only at its completion for if it applied to the whole process from the beginning to the end, would he not as soon as he started the act of slaughtering in the slightest degree[5] render the animal ritually forbidden for any use,[6] so that what follows the beginning would amount to slaughtering an animal no more belonging to the owner?[7] — R. Huna, the son of Raba,[8] said to him: The liability might have been just for that commencement in the slightest degree.[9] R. Ashi, however, said to him: This is no refutation,[10] [since it says] 'and he slaughters it, we require the whole act of the slaughter, which is absent here. But what about the original difficulty?[11] — He thereupon said to him: R. Gamda stated thus in the name of Raba: We are dealing here with a case where, for instance, he cut a part of the organs of the animal outside of the 'Azarah, but completed the slaughter inside of the 'Azarah.[12]

Some attach this argument to the following statement: R. Simeon[13] said in the name of R. Levi the Elder: The term 'slaughter' applies to the act only at its very completion. R. Johanan, however, said it applies to the whole process from the beginning to the end. R. Habibi of Huzna'ah thereupon said to R. Ashi: Are we to say that R. Johanan held that [the prohibition of slaughtering] unconsecrated animals in the 'Azarah is not based on Scripture?[14]

---

(1) Where liability is stated.

(2) Stating exemption, since 'five oxen' imply also 'five halves' of oxen why then should he not pay the part due to his coheirs?

(3) As the slaughter took place while the father was still alive.

(4) For at the time of the slaughter the thief was already a joint owner of the animal.

(5) In the precincts of the Temple.

(6) Cf. Pes. 22a.

(7) For surely after it becomes forbidden for any use, there would be no practical use in retaining ownership.

(8) [Read with MS.M., 'R. Aba b. Raba' as on p. 414, v. D.S. a.l.]

(9) Before the animal became forbidden for any use.

(10) Of the proof suggested by R. Habibi.

(11) That, since the animal became forbidden for any use at the commencement of the slaughter, there should be no liability to pay the fine.

(12) So that the animal became forbidden for any use only at the completion of the slaughter, for which the thief has to pay the fine.

(13) [Read ‘Simeon b. Lakish’, v. D.S. a.l.]
(14) V. p. 413, n. 4.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 72b

For if you assume that it has Scriptural authority, then as soon as he starts the act of slaughtering in the slightest degree would he not render the animal ritually forbidden for any use, so that what follows the beginning would amount to slaughtering an animal no more belonging to the owner? — R. Aha, the son of Raba, said to him: The liability might be just for that commencement in the slightest degree. R. Ashi, however, said to him: This is no refutation;[1] [since it says] ‘and he slaughters it’ we require the whole act of the slaughter, which is absent here. But what about the original difficulty?[2] — He, thereupon, said to him that R. Gamda stated thus in the name of Raba: When does he become liable? When for instance he cuts a part of the organs of the animal outside of the ‘Azarah but completes the slaughter inside of the ‘Azarah.[3]

MISHNAH. IF A THIEF [IS CONVICTED OF THE THEFT OF AN OX] ON THE EVIDENCE OF TWO WITNESSES, AND OF THE SLAUGHTER OR SALE OF IT ON THE EVIDENCE OF THE SAME TWO, AND THESE WITNESSES ARE SUBSEQUENTLY PROVED ZOMEMIM,[4] THEY MUST PAY [THE ACCUSED] IN FULL.[5] IF, HOWEVER, THE THEFT [HAS BEEN ESTABLISHED] BY THE EVIDENCE OF ONE PAIR OF WITNESSES, AND THE SLAUGHTER OR SALE BY THAT OF ANOTHER PAIR,[6] AND BOTH PAIRS ARE PROVED ZOMEMIM, THE FIRST PAIR MAKES [THE ACCUSED] DOUBLE PAYMENT[7] AND THE SECOND PAIR THREEFOLD PAYMENT.[8] WHERE [ONLY] THE SECOND PAIR WERE PROVED ZOMEMIM, THE THIEF MAKES DOUBLE PAYMENT,[9] WHEREAS THEY PAY [HIM] THREEFOLD.[8] SHOULD ONE OF THE SECOND PAIR OF WITNESSES BE PROVED ZOMEM, THE TESTIMONY OF THE SECOND PAIR BECOMES NULL AND VOID.[10] SHOULD ONE OF THE FIRST PAIR OF WITNESSES BE PROVED ZOMEM, THE WHOLE TESTIMONY [OF BOTH PAIRS] BECOMES NULL AND VOID, FOR IF THERE WAS NO THEFT THERE COULD BE NO [ILLEGAL] SLAUGHTER OR SALE.[11]

GEMARA. It has been stated:[12] If a witness has been proved a zomem, Abaye says that he becomes disqualified retrospectively [from the time when he gave his evidence in court],[13] whereas Raba says that he is disqualified only for the future [from the time when he is proved zomem]. Abaye makes the disqualification retrospective on the ground that the witness has been shown to have been wicked at the time when he gave evidence, and the Torah says: Do not accept the wicked as a witness.[14] Raba, on the other hand, holds that the disqualification begins only from the moment when his deceit is proved, because the whole procedure of proving witnesses zomemim is anomalous. For this is a case of two witnesses against two; why then accept the evidence of the one pair rather than that of the other? At least let it take effect only from the time when the anomalous procedure is employed.

Some say that Raba really agrees with Abaye that the disqualification is retrospective, but rejects here this principle on practical grounds, because its adoption

---

(1) V. p. 413, n. 8.
(2) V. p. 413, n. 9.
(3) V. p. 413, n. 10.
(4) Lit., ‘plotters’, ‘schemers’ (plural of Zomem), i.e., witnesses proved by the subsequent evidence of two witnesses to have been absent at the time of the alleged offence; their punishment is by the law of retaliation. V. Deut. XIX, 18-19 and Mak. I, 2-4.
(5) I.e., five times the value of the alleged theft. V. Ex. XXI, 37.
(6) For which cf. supra pp. 403-5.

(7) Which he would have to pay through them for the alleged theft.
(8) I.e., the difference between the 'double' and the 'fivefold' payment intended by them to have been inflicted on the accused.
(9) As the evidence regarding the theft still holds good.
(10) Cf. Mak. I, 7.
(11) For the fine of fivefold includes the double payment for the theft so that when the latter could not be established as in the case here no fine could be imposed for the slaughter or sale.
(12) Cf. Sanh. 27a.
(13) Any evidence he gave in the intervening period becomes invalidated.
(14) An interpretation of Ex. XXIII, 1.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 73a might adversely affect purchasers.[1] What practical difference is there between the two versions?[2] — Where two witnesses have proved one of a pair zomem, and other two witnesses have proved the other one of the pair zomem;[3] or again, where the disqualification of the witnesses is based upon an accusation of larceny brought by a subsequent pair.[4] According to the version which makes Raba base his view[5] on the fact of the procedure being anomalous, he would not apply it here, whereas according to the version which makes his reason the fear of adversely affecting purchasers, it would hold good even here.[6]

R. Jeremiah of Difti said: R. Papa decided in an actual case in accordance with the view of Raba. R. Ashi, however, stated that the law agrees with Abaye. And the law agrees with Abaye [against Raba] on [the matters known as] Y'AL KGM.[7]

We have learnt: IF A THIEF [IS CONVICTED OF THE THEFT OF AN OX] ON THE EVIDENCE OF TWO WITNESSES, AND OF THE SLAUGHTER OR SALE OF IT ON THE EVIDENCE OF THE SAME TWO, AND THESE WITNESSES ARE SUBSEQUENTLY PROVED ZOMEMIM, THEY MUST PAY [THE ACCUSED] IN FULL. Does this not mean that they first gave evidence regarding the theft and then[8] gave evidence again regarding the slaughter, and that they were proved zomemim regarding their evidence about the theft and then were proved zomemim regarding their evidence about the slaughter? Now, if you assume that a witness proved zomem becomes disqualified retrospectively, [it would surely follow that] as soon as these witnesses were declared zomemim regarding the theft, it became clear retrospectively that when they gave evidence regarding the slaughter[9] they were already disqualified.[10] Why then should they pay [the retaliation penalty regarding their evidence] about the slaughter?[11] — It may be said that we are dealing here with a case where they were first declared zomemim regarding their evidence about the slaughter. But it may still be argued that after all since when they were subsequently declared zomemim regarding the theft, it became clear retrospectively that when they gave evidence regarding the slaughter, they had already been disqualified. Why then should they pay the retaliation penalty for the slaughter?[12] — This law would apply only when they testified at one and the same time to both theft and slaughter,[13] and were afterwards declared zomemim.[14]

May we say that this matter[15] formed the point at issue between the following Tannaim: If two witnesses gave evidence against a person that he had stolen an ox and the same witnesses also testified against him that he had slaughtered it, and were declared zomemim regarding the theft, as their evidence became annulled in part[16] it became annulled altogether. But if they were declared zomemim regarding the slaughter, the thief would still have to make double payment and they would have to pay [him] three-fold. R. Jose, however, said: These rulings[17] apply only in the case of two testimonies,[18] for in the case of one testimony the law is that a testimony becoming annulled in part becomes annulled altogether. Now, what is meant by 'two testimonies' and what is meant by 'one testimony'? Are we to say that 'two testimonies' means two absolutely independent testimonies, as in the case of two separate sets, and 'one testimony' means one set giving the two testimonies after each other, in which case R. Jose would hold that in the case of one testimony, i.e. where one set gave testimonies after each other, as, for instance where they had first given evidence about the theft and then gave evidence again about the slaughter, if they were subsequently declared zomemim with reference to their evidence about the slaughter, the law would be that a testimony becoming annulled regarding a part of it becomes annulled regarding the whole of it, and the witnesses would thus be considered zomemim also regarding the theft? On what could such a view be based? [Why indeed should the testimony given first about the theft be annulled through the annulment of a testimony given later?][19] Must we not therefore say that 'two testimonies' means one evidence resembling two testimonies, that is to say, where one set gives two testimonies one after the other[20] but not where there is one testimony in which all the statements are made at the same time? Now it was assumed that there was agreement on all hands that statements following one another within the minimum of time [sufficient for the utterance of a greeting] are equivalent in law to a single undivided statement. The point at issue therefore between them[21] would be as follows: The Rabbis[22] would maintain that a witness proved zomem is disqualified only for the future, and since it is from that time onwards that the effect of zomem will apply it is only with reference to the slaughter regarding which they were declared zomemim that the effect of zomem will apply, whereas with reference to the theft regarding which they were not declared zomemim the effect of zomem will not apply.[23] R. Jose would on the other hand maintain that a witness proved zomem would become disqualified retrospectively, so that from the very moment they had given the evidence, regarding which they were proved zomemim, they would be considered disqualified; from which it would follow that when they were declared zomemim regarding the evidence about the slaughter the effect of zomem should also be extended to the evidence regarding the theft, for statements following one another within the minimum of time [sufficient for the utterance of a greeting] are equivalent in law to a single undivided statement. [Would the view of Abaye thus be against that of the Rabbis?] — To this I might reply: Were statements following one another within the minimum of time [sufficient for the utterance of a greeting] equivalent in law to a single undivided statement, it would have been unanimously held [by these Tannaim] that the pair proved zomemim should become disqualified retrospectively. But here it is this very principle whether statements following one another within the minimum of time [sufficient for the utterance of a greeting] should or should not be equivalent in law to a single undivided statement that was the point at issue between them: The Rabbis maintained that statements following one another within the minimum of time [sufficient for the utterance of a greeting]

---

(1) Who innocently invited the same witnesses to attest the deeds of purchase.

(2) Regarding the view of Raba.

(3) Thus not being a case of two against two but two against one, and the procedure could not be termed anomalous.

(4) In which case the accused two or more cease to act in the strict capacity of witnesses, but become a party interested and partial in the accusation brought against them personally, and the procedure could no more be considered anomalous.

(5) Regarding witnesses proved zomemim.

(6) For so long as the witnesses were not officially disqualified it would be a great hardship to disqualify deeds signed by them at the invitation of innocent purchasers.

(7) A mnemonic composed of Y for 'Yeush, Abandonment, B.M. 21b-22b; E for 'Ed, Witness proved zomem, here under consideration; L for Lehi, pole forming a mark of an enclosure, 'Er. 15a; K for Kiddushin, a case of betrothal, Kid. 51a-52a; G for Gilluy, intimation affecting agency in the case of a bill of divorce, Git. 34a; and M for Mumar, a Defiant Transgressor whether or not he be eligible as witness, Sanh. 27a.

(8) On a subsequent occasion.

(9) I.e., on a subsequent occasion.

(10) From the moment they had given evidence regarding the theft.

(11) Since their evidence regarding slaughter fell to the ground even before they were proved zomemim with reference to it.

(12) Since their evidence regarding slaughter should have fallen to the ground even without their having to be proved zomemim with reference to it.
(13) In which case the retrospective disqualification through their becoming zomemim with reference to both slaughter and theft begins at the same time.
(14) [But first with reference to their evidence about the slaughter. MSS. rightly omit, 'and were . . . zomemim'.]
(15) In which Abaye and Raba differ.
(16) I.e., the theft.
(17) That the accused will still have to pay double payment.
(18) V. the discussion that follows.
(19) For surely a wrong committed at a later date could not affect the presumed integrity of a man on an earlier occasion.
(20) I.e., on different occasions.
(21) I.e., R. Jose and the other Rabbis.
(22) Representing the anonymous opinion cited first.
(23) And the accused will still have to pay double payment.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 73b

are not equivalent in law to a single undivided statement,[1] whereas R. Jose maintained that statements following one another within the minimum of time [sufficient for the utterance of a greeting] are equivalent in law to a single undivided statement.[2] But did R. Jose really maintain that statements following one another within the minimum of time [sufficient for the utterance of a greeting] are equivalent in law to a single undivided statement? For we have learnt: If a man declares: Let this animal be a substitute[3] for a burnt-offering, a substitute for a peace-offering, it will be a substitute for the burnt-offering,[4] according to the view of R. Meir, whereas R. Jose says: If from the outset he intended this,[5] his words would have to be acted upon,[6] as it was impossible for him to utter two terms at the same time, but if he first declared; 'Substitute for a burnt-offering', and then changed his mind and said, 'Substitute for a peace-offering', it will be a substitute for a burnt-offering only.[7] Now this statement we found strange; for is not the case of a change of mind obvious?[8] And R. Papa therefore said: We assume that the change of mind took place within the minimum of time [required for the utterance of a greeting]![9] [Does this not prove that R. Jose maintained that statements following one another within the minimum of time sufficient for the utterance of a greeting would not be equivalent in law to a single undivided statement?][10] — It may be said that there are two different minimums of time [within which two different kinds of greetings could be uttered], one sufficient for the greeting given by a disciple to his master, and the other sufficient for the greeting of the master to the disciple. Where[11] R. Jose does not hold [the two statements to be one] is where the interval is sufficient for the greeting of a disciple to the master, viz. 'peace [upon] thee, master [and] teacher,' as this is too long,[12] but where it is only sufficient for the greeting of the master to the disciple, 'peace [upon] thee,[13] he holds that they do [form one].

Raba stated: Witnesses [testifying to a capital charge] who have been proved wrong[14] [by a pair of other witnesses][15] and subsequently also proved zomemim, would be put to death, as the confutation was a first step in the subsequent proof of an alibi,[16] though the proof of this was not yet complete at that time. Raba said: [The authority] on which I base this is that which has been taught: [If a set of witnesses declare], We testify that so-and-so has put out the eye of his slave[17] and[18] knocked out his tooth[19] (and so indeed the master himself says), and these witnesses are [by subsequent witnesses] proved zomemim, they would have to pay[20] the value of the eye to the slave.[21] How are we to understand this? If we assume, according to the apparent meaning of the text, that there was here no other pair of witnesses,[22] why should they pay the value of the eye to the slave? After they have done their best to get him [undeservedly] freed, are they also to pay him the value of his eye? Moreover, should they in such a case not have to pay the owner for the full value of the slave [as they falsely demanded his freedom]? Furthermore, 'and so indeed the master himself says,' — how could the master be satisfied [with such a false allegation to his detriment]? Does it therefore not mean a case, e.g., in which a pair of witnesses had already appeared [previously] and stated that the master knocked out the slave's tooth and then put out his eye so that the master would have to pay him the value of his eye,[23] and a middle pair of witnesses appeared later and stated that the first put out the slave's eye and then his tooth, so that he would not have to give him anything but the value of his tooth,[24] so that the first set of witnesses confuted the middle set, and it is to this that the words refer 'and so indeed the master himself says', for he was well satisfied with the statement alleged by the middle set? The text then goes on: 'And these are [by subsequent witnesses] proved zomemim' — that is, the middle set — 'they would have to pay the value of the eye to the slave'.[25] Does not this show that the confutation is the first step in a subsequent proof of an alibi?[26] — Abaye said: No; [what we can assume is] that the statement of these witnesses was transposed by a [second] set of witnesses, who also proved them zomemim.[27] That this was so is evident,

---

(1) So that the evidence as to the theft and the evidence as to the slaughter could in no manner be considered as one, but are completely independent testimonies, and if the accusation of zomem was proved regarding the latter the former could not be affected.

(2) So that the evidence as to the theft and the evidence as to the slaughter form one testimony to all intents and purposes.

(3) See Lev. XXVII, 10.

(4) The earlier expression being the decisive one.

(5) I.e., that it should be a substitute for both offerings.

(6) And the animal will have to be kept until it becomes blemished when it will be sold and half of the money realised will be utilised for a burnt-offering, and the other half for a peace-offering.

(7) Tem. V, 4.

(8) V. p. 419, n. 4.

(9) Where it might have been suggested that the two utterances constituted a single indivisible statement.

(10) For if otherwise why should the first utterance be more decisive than the second?

(11) In the case of Tem. V, 4.

(12) Consisting as it does of four words. [MS.M. and Asheri omit '(and) teacher,' making it thus consist of three words.]

(13) Consisting only of two words.

(14) On the subject matter of their evidence, after sentence had been passed.

(15) For which, however, no retaliatory punishment could be imposed upon them, as Deut. XIX, 19, does not refer to witnesses who were contradicted on the subject matter of their evidence but against whom the accusation (in a sense) of an alibi was proved, i.e. where they were declared zomemim.

(16) [The term 'alibi' is used here for convenience sake, as it deals here with the presence or absence of the witnesses of the alleged crime at the time when it was committed, rather than with the presence or absence of the accused, as the term is generally understood.]

(17) For which he has to let him go free, cf. Ex. XXI, 26-27.

(18) Subsequently.

(19) For which he has to pay the five items in accordance with infra p. 473.

(20) In retaliation.

(21) Tosef. Mak. 1.

(22) Giving evidence for the slave.

(23) Which is of course more than that of his tooth.

(24) Which is less than that of his eye and thus giving evidence for the benefit of the master and against the slave.

(25) I.e., the difference between the value of the eye and the value of the tooth of which they conspired to deprive the slave.

(26) And that after the accusation of an alibi was proved, the law of retaliation will apply despite the fact that their evidence had already been previously impaired.

(27) [There were, that is to say, only two sets of witnesses, the former set testifying that the injury was done to the eye first and then to the tooth, while the second set giving evidence to the contrary and at the same time proving the first set zomemim, in which case the first would have to pay the slave the value of his eye.]

since, the later clause deals with witnesses whose statements were transposed by the same set of witnesses that proved them zomemim, so also the earlier clause deals with a case where the statements of the witnesses were transposed by the same subsequent set of witnesses who proved their alibi. For it says in the later clause: If a set of witnesses declare: We testify against so-and-so that he had first knocked out his slave's tooth and then put out his eye — as indeed the servant says — and they were by subsequent witnesses proved zomemim, they would have to pay the value of the eye to the master. Now how are we to understand this? If we assume that the witnesses of the second set did not agree [with those of the first set] regarding any injury at all, why then should the first witnesses not have to pay the master the whole value of the slave?[1] Does it therefore not mean that all the witnesses agreed that an injury was inflicted, but that the witnesses of the second set reversed the order stated by the first set of witnesses[2] while they also proved them zomemim? But still, what were the circumstances? If the witnesses of the second set post-dated the injury, why should the witnesses of the first set still not have to pay the master the whole value of the slave, since they falsely alleged liability to have rested upon a man at the time when that man was in fact not yet subject to any liability? — We must therefore say that the witnesses of the second set antedated the injury. But again, if [at the time when the witnesses of the first set gave evidence] the master had not yet appeared before the Court [on the matter], why should they still not have to pay him the whole value of the slave as at that time he was still a man subject to no liability?[3] — It must therefore deal with a case where he had already made his appearance before the Court.[4]

R. Aha the son of R. Ika said to R. Ashi: Whence could Raba prove this point?[5] It could hardly be from the earlier clause, for were the witnesses of the middle set[6] those who were confuted?[7] For indeed were they not proved zomemim; their statements would have remained the decisive evidence[8] as the case would have been decided according to their allegations, on the principle that in the total of two hundred[9] the sum of a hundred[10] is included. Does it not then clearly follow that it was the first set of witnesses[11] who were thus confuted[7] whereas the middle set of witnesses were not confuted at all?[12] — He replied: Raba maintained that as the earlier clause dealt with three sets [of witnesses giving evidence] the later clause similarly presented the law in a case where three sets [gave evidence], and tried thus to prove his point from the later clause. [For this clause would thus have dealt with a case] where e.g., a set of two witnesses had appeared and alleged that the master first knocked out his [slave's] tooth and then put out his eye, and after the verdict was given in accordance with their testimony a set of other witnesses arrived and stated that the first put out his [slave's] eye and then his tooth, thus contradicting the witnesses of the first set, and as these [latter] were also proved zomemim they would have to pay the value of the slave's eye[13] to the master. Now if you assume that a confutation is not considered a first step in a subsequent proof of an alibi, why should they have to pay anything[14] after they had already been confuted? Does this therefore not prove that a confutation does constitute a first step in a subsequent proof of an alibi? And Abaye? — He might have rejoined: I grant you that the earlier clause cannot be explained save on the assumption that there were three sets, for it was stated there ‘as indeed the master also says’,[15] but so far as the later clause is concerned, what need have I for three sets, since the statement ‘as indeed the slave also says’[16] is perfectly natural as the slave would surely say anything, being satisfied at the prospect of going free?[17]

R. Zera demurred [to the general implication]:[18] Why not say that when the master puts out his [slave's] eye

---

(1) Whom they wanted without proper ground to set free.

(2) I.e., while the former stated that the master first knocked out his slave's tooth and then put out his eye the second set testified that he first put out the slave's eye and then knocked out his tooth.

(3) And it was they who conspired to allege liability against him; cf. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l. and Mak. 5a.

(4) And he was ordered to let the slave go free on the strength of some testimony by earlier witnesses, without any direction as to any payment to be made to the slave who now seeks to recover from the master compensation for the eye or tooth.
(5) Even according to his interpretation that three sets of witnesses took part in the controversy.
(6) Stating that the master first put out the eye of his slave and then knocked out his tooth.
(7) I.e., the effect of their evidence invalidated.
(8) Against the earlier set testifying that the master first knocked out his slave's tooth and then put out his eye.
(9) I.e., e.g. the value of the eye, testified by the first.
(10) I.e., the value of the tooth, testified by the middle set.
(11) Stating that the master first knocked out his slave's tooth and then put out his eye.
(12) [And this clause can thus afford no proof to Raba's ruling.]
(13) I.e., the difference between the value of the eye and that of the tooth.
(14) Even when proved zomemim.
(15) Corroborating the witnesses stating that he put out the slave's eye and knocked out his tooth, for if these witnesses were the first to give evidence on the matter it would surely not be in the interest of the master to corroborate them. [R. Ashi does not accept as authentic the explanation given above in the name of Abaye, which was based on the assumption that Raba proved his ruling from the earlier clause, v. Tosaf. supra 73b. s.v. אמר .]
(16) In corroboration of the witnesses stating that the master knocked out his tooth and put out his eye.
(17) How much the more so in this case where the evidence of the witnesses is completely for the benefit of the slave.
(18) That a master knocking out the tooth of his slave and putting out his eye should do both — let him go free for the tooth and pay compensation for the eye.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 74b

the slave goes out free in lieu of his eye;[1] when he knocks out his slave's tooth the slave goes out in lieu of his tooth;[2] and so also when he puts out his eye and knocks out his tooth the slave should go out in lieu of both his eye and his tooth [and no payment for either of these should have to be made]? — Abaye said to him: It is to rule out this idea of yours that Scripture says: 'For his eye's sake',[3] implying 'not for the sake of both his eye and tooth'; 'for his tooth's sake'[4] but not for the sake of both his tooth and his eye.

R. Idi b. Abin said: We have also learnt to the same effect:[5] IF A THIEF [IS CONVICTED OF THE THEFT OF AN OX] ON THE EVIDENCE OF TWO WITNESSES, AND OF THE SLAUGHTER OR SALE OF IT ON THE EVIDENCE OF THE SAME TWO, AND THESE WITNESSES ARE SUBSEQUENTLY PROVED ZOMEMIM, THEY MUST PAY [THE ACCUSED] IN FULL. Does this not mean that the witnesses have first given evidence regarding the theft and then [some time later] testified to the slaughter, and that they were first proved zomemim regarding the theft and then [some time later] proved zomemim [also] regarding the slaughter? Now, the fact that they were proved zomemim regarding the theft is in itself a confutation of their evidence regarding the slaughter,[6] and it is nevertheless stated that 'THEY MUST PAY THE ACCUSED IN FULL'. But if you assume that a confutation is not the first step in a subsequent proof of an alibi, why should they pay the retaliation penalty for the slaughter? Does not this then show confutation is a first step in a subsequent proof of an alibi? — It may, however, be said that we are dealing here with a case where for example they were first proved zomemim regarding the slaughter.[7]

In this argument [between Raba and Abaye, earlier Sages already differed]: In the case where witnesses [testifying to a capital charge] were first contradicted by another set of witnesses and subsequently also proved zomemim [by a third set of witnesses] R. Johanan and R. Eleazar differed: one said they would be subject to the death penalty,[8] whereas the other said they would not be subject to the death penalty. There is proof that R. Eleazar was the one who said they would not be subject to the death penalty; for R. Eleazar said: 'If witnesses were confuted [but not proved zomemim] as to their evidence regarding a charge of murder, they would be lashed.[9] Now, if you assume that R. Eleazar was the one who said that [were they subsequently to be proved zomemim] they would be subject to the death penalty, why should they be lashed [when confuted]? Should we not regard the prohibition here laid down[10] as a preliminary warning that the death penalty will be exacted by a court of law,[11] and every prohibition which can serve as a preliminary warning of a death penalty to be exacted by a court of law does not entail liability for lashes?[12] Does not this show that R. Eleazar was the one who said that[13] they would be subject to the death penalty?[14] — This may indeed be regarded as proved.

[It has been stated that where witnesses were confuted but not proved zomemim as to their evidence regarding a capital charge] 'they would be lashed'.[9] But as this is a case where two witnesses contradict other two witnesses, how then could it appear right to you to rely upon those of the second set? Why not rely upon the others? — Abaye replied: This could be so only where the alleged victim came to us on his own feet [thus disproving the evidence of the first set].[15]

MISHNAH. IF THE THEFT [OF AN OX OR A SHEEP] WAS TESTIFIED TO BY TWO WITNESSES,[16] WHEREAS THE SLAUGHTER OR SALE OF IT WAS TESTIFIED TO BY ONLY ONE WITNESS OR BY THE THIEF HIMSELF, HE WOULD HAVE TO MAKE DOUBLE PAYMENT[17] BUT WOULD NOT HAVE TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD AND FIVE-FOLD PAYMENTS.[18] IF HE STOLE IT AND Slaughtered IT ON THE SABBATH DAY,[19] OR IF HE STOLE IT AND SLAUGHTERED IT FOR THE SERVICE OF IDOLS,[19] OR IF HE STOLE IT FROM HIS OWN FATHER WHO SUBSEQUENTLY DIED AND THE THIEF THEN SLAUGHTERED IT OR SOLD IT,[20] OR IF HE STOLE IT AND CONSECRATED IT [TO THE TEMPLE],[21] AND AFTERWARDS HE SLAUGHTERED IT OR SOLD IT, HE WOULD HAVE TO MAKE DOUBLE PAYMENT BUT WOULD NOT HAVE TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD AND FIVE-FOLD PAYMENTS. R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, SAYS: IN THE CASE OF CONSECRATED CATTLE, THE LOSS OF WHICH THE OWNER HAS TO MAKE GOOD, THE THIEF HAS TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT,[22] BUT IN THE CASE OF THOSE THE LOSS OF WHICH THE OWNER HAS NOT TO MAKE GOOD, THE THIEF IS EXEMPT.

GEMARA. Is it not obvious that a testimony from the mouth of one witness [should impose no liability to pay]? — It may, however, be said that what we are told here is that confession by the thief himself is analogous to evidence borne by one witness: just as in the case of evidence given by one witness, if another witness should come along and join him, the thief would be made liable;[23] so also in the case of confession by the thief himself, if witnesses should come along [and corroborate it], he would become liable. This deviates from the view of R. Huna stated on behalf of Rab. For R. Huna stated that Rab said: If a man confessed to a liability for a fine, even though witnesses subsequently appeared [and gave evidence to the same effect], he would be exempt.[24]

The above text states: R. Huna stated that Rab said: If a man confessed to a liability for a fine, even though witnesses subsequently appeared [and gave evidence to the same effect], he would be exempt. R. Hisda objected to [this view of] R. Huna [from the following]: It happened that R. Gamaliel [by accident] put out the eye of Tabi[25] his slave.[26] He rejoiced over it very much, [as he was eager to have this meritorious slave set free],[27] and when he met R. Joshua he said to him: 'Do you know that Tabi my slave has obtained his freedom?' 'How was that'? said the other. 'Because', he replied, 'I have [accidentally] put out his eye.' Said R. Joshua to him.' 'Your words have no force in law, since there were no witnesses for the slave.'[28] This of course implies that had witnesses at that time been available for the slave, R. Gamaliel would have been under obligation [to set him free]. Does not this show us that if a man confesses to a liability for a fine, if subsequently witnesses appear and testify to the same effect, he would be liable?[29] — R. Huna, however, said to him[30] that this case of R. Gamaliel was different altogether, as he made his confession not in the presence of the court of Law.[31] But was R. Joshua not the president of the Court of law?[32]

(1) Ex. XXI, 26.
(2) Ibid. 27.
(3) V. p. 427. n. 7.
(4) V. p. 427, n. 8.
(5) In the case made out by Raba where a contradiction of the subject matter of evidence was followed by proof of an alibi.
(6) For if the evidence regarding the theft fell to the ground it carried with it the evidence regarding the slaughter of the stolen animal.
(7) Which of course did not affect their evidence regarding the theft which was given on an earlier occasion.
(8) Agreeing thus with view of Raba.
(9) Because they transgressed the negative commandment, 'Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour'. Ex. XX, 13. and the punishment of thirty-nine lashes is administered for breaking such and similar negative commandments.
(10) Ex. XX. 13.
(11) Should the same witnesses afterwards become zomemim.
(12) Cf. Sanh. 86b; Mak. 13b and Shebu. 4a.
(13) Were they even subsequently proved zomemim.
(14) In which case the prohibition of this offence could thus never be able to serve as a warning of a pending execution at a court of law and lashes could therefore be administered.
(15) In which case their falsity has been proved beyond any doubt.
(16) Cf. Deut. XIX, 15.
(17) For the act of stealing testified to by two witnesses.
(18) As the act of slaughter or sale was testified to by one witness who, in matters of fine, could be of no effect at all even for the purpose of imposing an oath. [V. J. Shebu. VI, and S. Strashun's Glosses, a.1.] so also is the admission of the thief himself of no avail in these matters.
(19) Being a capital offence in which all possible civil liabilities have to merge.
(20) So that at the time of the slaughter or sale the thief was a joint owner of the animal.
(21) Temple property is not subject to the law of the fine.
(22) V. the discussion in Gemara.
(23) Cf. B.B. 32a and Sanh. 30a.
(24) From the fine; cf. supra p. 62.
(25) V. Suk. II,1 and Ber. II, 7.
(26) Who would thereby receive his freedom in accordance with Ex. XXI. 26.
(27) He was, however, unable to manumit him as it was considered a sin to manumit heathen slaves. V. Ber. 47b and Git. 38a.
(28) And the obligation imposed on a man to let his slave go free for his eye's sake and for his tooth's sake is only a matter of fine.
(29) In contradiction to the view of Rab stated by R. Huna.
(30) I.e., R. Hisda.
(31) And is therefore not considered in the eye of the law a legal confession to bar subsequent evidence.
(32) [Shortly after the death of R. Johanan b. Zakkai, v. Halevy, Doroth, I.e., p. 154, contra Weiss, Dor, 130.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 75a

— He was, however, at that time not sitting in the court of law. But has it not been taught that he said to him: 'Your words have no force in law, as you have already confessed'?[1] Must we not then say that Tannaim were divided on this matter, so that the Tanna who reported 'as there are no witnesses for the slave',[2] would maintain that if one confessed to liability for a fine and subsequently witnesses appeared and testified [to the same effect], he should be liable, whereas the Tanna who reported 'as you have already confessed', would maintain that if one confessed to liability for a fine, though witnesses subsequently appeared [and corroborated the confession], he would be exempt? — No, they might both have agreed that if one confessed to the liability of a fine, though witnesses subsequently appeared [and testified to the same effect], he would be exempt, and the point on which they differed might have been this: the Tanna, who reported 'as there are no witnesses for the slave', was of opinion that the confession took place outside the court of law,[3] whereas the Tanna, who reported 'as you already confessed', was of opinion that the confession was made at the court of law.

It was stated: If a man confesses to liability for a fine, and subsequently witnesses appear [and corroborate the confession], Rab held that he would be quit, whereas Samuel held that he would be liable. Raba b. Ahilai said: The reason of Rab was this. [We expound]: If it [was to] be found[4] by witnesses, it be [considered] found[4] in the consideration of the judges, excepting thus a case where a defendant incriminates himself.[5] Now why do I require this reasoning, seeing that this ruling can be derived from the text 'whom the judges shall condemn',[6] which implies 'not him who condemns himself'? It must be to show that if a man confesses to liability for a fine, even though witnesses subsequently appear [and testify to the same effect], there would be exemption. Samuel, however, might say to you that the doubling of the verb in the verse 'If to be found it be found' was required to make the thief himself subject to double payment, as taught at the School of Hezekiah.[7] Rab objected to [this view of] Samuel [from the following Baraitha:][8] If a thief notices that witnesses are preparing themselves to appear[9] and he confesses 'I have committed the theft [of an ox] but I neither slaughtered it nor sold it', he would not have to pay anything but the principal?[10] — He [Samuel] replied: We are dealing here with a case where, for instance, the witnesses drew back from giving any evidence in the matter. But since it is stated In the concluding clause: 'R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon says that the witnesses should still come forward and testify,' must we not conclude that the first Tanna maintained otherwise?[11] — Samuel thereupon said to him: Is there at least not R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon who concurs with me? I follow R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon. Now according to Samuel, Tannaim certainly differed in this matter. Are we to say that also according to Rab Tannaim differed in this?[12] — Rab might rejoin: My statement can hold good even according to R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon. For R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon would not have expressed the view he did there save for the fact that the thief made his confession because of his fear of the witnesses, whereas here he confessed out of his own free will, even R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon might have agreed [that the confession would bar any pending liability].[13]

R. Hamnuna stated: It stands to reason that the ruling of Rab was confined to the case of a thief saying, 'I have committed a theft' and witnesses then coming [and testifying] that he had indeed committed the theft, in which case he is quit, as he had [by the confession] made himself liable at least for the principal.[14] But if he first said, 'I did not commit the theft,' but when witnesses appeared and declared that he did commit the theft, he turned round and said, 'I even slaughtered [the stolen sheep or ox] or sold it,' and witnesses subsequently came [and testified] that he had indeed slaughtered it or sold it, he would be liable to pay [four-fold or five-fold payment], as [by this confession][15] he was trying to exempt himself from any liability whatever. [But] Raba said: I got the better[16] of the elders of the School of Rab,[17] for R. Gamaliel [by confessing the putting out of his slave's eye] was but exempting himself from any liability, and yet when R. Hisda stated this case [as a proof] against R. Huna[18] he was not answered thus.

It was similarly stated.[19] R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan, [that if a thief confessed] 'I have committed a theft', and witnesses then came along [and testified] that he had indeed committed the theft, he would be exempt, as in this case he had [by the confession] made himself liable at least for the principal; for where he had first said 'I did not commit the theft', but when witnesses appeared and declared that he did commit the theft he again came and said, 'I even slaughtered [the stolen sheep or ox] or sold it, and witnesses again came and testified that he had indeed slaughtered it or sold it, he would be liable to pay [four-fold or five-fold payment], as by his confession he was but exempting himself from any liability whatever. R. Ashi said: [Texts from] our Mishnah and the [above] Baraitha tend likewise to prove this distinction. From our Mishnah [the proof is] as we have learnt: IF THE THEFT [OF AN OX OR SHEEP] WAS TESTIFIED TO BY TWO WITNESSES, WHEREAS THE SLAUGHTER OR SALE OF IT WAS TESTIFIED TO BY

ONLY ONE WITNESS OR BY THE THIEF HIMSELF, HE WOULD HAVE TO MAKE DOUBLE PAYMENT BUT WOULD NOT HAVE TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD AND FIVE-FOLD PAYMENTS. Now, what is the need for the words. IF THE THEFT WAS TESTIFIED TO BY TWO WITNESSES? Why not simply state: 'If the theft and slaughter or [theft and] sale were testified to by one witness or by the thief himself, he would not have to pay anything but the principal alone'?

---

(1) Which implies that even if witnesses would subsequently appear and testify to the same effect, it would still be of no avail, thus agreeing with the view of Rab.

(2) As the text runs in the former teaching and which implies that if witnesses should come and testify for the slave he would obtain his freedom, in apparent contradiction to the view of Rab.

(3) [Where a confession is not regarded in the eye of the law as legal so as to bar subsequent evidence.]

(4) Ex. XXII. 3.

(5) V. supra 64b.

(6) Ex. XXII, 8.

(7) Supra p. 370.

(8) Cf. Shebu. VIII, 4, and Tosaf. infra 75b, s.v. בריתא .

(9) Before the court to give evidence against him.

(10) As confession to the liability for a fine carries exemption from the fine.

(11) I.e., that the evidence of the witnesses would be of no avail.

(12) And that R. Eleazar was against him.

(13) And no witnesses should be permitted to give evidence in the matter.

(14) Which proves that the confession was genuine.

(15) Which was thus not a genuine confession.

(16) In this matter.

(17) As R. Hamnuna was of the elders of the School of Rab; v. Sanh. 17b. [Var. lec.:. Raba said to him (to R. Hamnuna). You have got the better of the elders of the school of Rab (viz. R. Huna), v. Tosaf.]

(18) [I.e., against the ruling R. Huna reported in the name of Rab.]

(19) In support of the distinction made by R. Hamnuna.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 75b

Is not the purpose to indicate to us that it was only where the theft was testified to by two witnesses and the slaughter by one or by the thief himself, in which case it was not the confession[1] which made him liable for the principal, that we argue that confession by the thief himself is meant to be analogous to the testimony borne by one witness? So that just as in the case of testimony by one witness, as soon as another witness appears and joins him liability would be established, so also in the case of confession by the thief himself, if witnesses subsequently appear and testify to the same effect he would become liable. If, however, the very theft and slaughter [or theft and] sale were testified to by one witness or by the thief himself, in which case the confession made him liable at least for the principal, we would not argue that confession by the thief himself should be analogous to the testimony borne by one witness.[2] [The proof] from the Baraitha [is] as it was taught: If a thief notices that witnesses are preparing themselves to appear and he confesses, 'I have committed a theft [of an ox] but I neither slaughtered it nor sold it' he would not have to pay anything but the principal.[3] Now, what need is there for the words, 'and he confessed, I have committed the theft [of an ox] but I neither slaughtered it, nor sold it'? Why not simply state 'I have committed the theft [of an ox], or I slaughtered it or I sold it'? Is not the purpose to indicate that it was only where the thief confessed, 'I have committed the theft [of an ox]'. where it was he who by confession made himself liable for the principal, that he would be exempt from the fine, whereas if he had stated 'I have not committed any theft',and when witnesses arrived and testified that he did commit a theft, he turned round and confessed 'I have even slaughtered it or sold it', and witnesses subsequently appeared [and testified] that he had indeed slaughtered it or sold it, in which case it was not he who made himself liable for the principal, he would have to be liable for the fine, thus proving that a confession merely regarding the act of slaughter should not be considered a confession [to bar the pending liability of a fine]![4] — It may, however, be said that this is not so,as the purpose [of the apparently superfluous words] might have been to indicate to us the very ruling that since he confessed 'I have committed the theft [of an ox or a sheep]' even though he still said 'I have neither slaughtered it nor sold it' and witnesses appeared [and testified] that he did slaughter it or sell it, he would nevertheless be exempt from any fine, the reason being that the Divine Law says: 'Five-fold or four-fold payment[5] respectively, but not 'four-fold or three-fold payment'[6] respectively.

Shall we say that the following Tannaim differed on this point? [For it has been taught:] Where two witnesses testified to a theft [of an ox] and other two witnesses subsequently gave evidence that the thief had slaughtered it or sold it, and the witnesses regarding the theft were proved zomemim,[7] since the testimony became annulled regarding a part of it,[8] it would become annulled regarding the whole of it.[9] But if [only] the witnesses to the slaughter were proved zomemim, he would have to make double payment,[10] whereas they[11] would [have to pay him three-fold payment as restitution].[12] In the name of Symmachus it was, however, stated that they would have to make double payment,[13] whereas he would have to make three-fold payment for an ox and double payment for a ram.[13] Now, to what did Symmachus refer? It could hardly be to that of the opening clause,[14] for would Symmachus not agree that a testimony becoming annulled regarding a part of it should become annulled regarding the whole of it? If again he referred to the concluding clause,[15] did the Rabbis not state correctly that the thief should make double payment while the false witnesses would have to make three-fold payment? It must therefore be that there was another point at issue between them,[16] viz., where a pair of witnesses came and said to him: 'You have committed the theft [of an ox]'. and he said to them: 'It is true that I have committed the theft [of an ox] and even slaughtered it or sold it, but it was not in your presence that I committed the theft', and he in fact brought witnesses who proved an alibi[17] against the first witnesses that it was not in their presence that he committed the theft, while the plaintiff brought further witnesses who gave evidence against the thief that he had committed the theft [of an ox] and slaughtered it or sold it. They would thus differ as to the confession regarding the slaughter, the Rabbis holding that though in regard to the theft it was certainly because of the witnesses[18] that he confessed, the confession regarding the slaughter[19] should have the usual effect of confession and exempt him from the fine, whereas Symmachus held that since regarding the theft it was because of witnesses that he confessed, the confession of the slaughter should not have the [full] effect of a confession [as it did not tend to establish any civil liability], so that the first witnesses who were found zomemim[20] would have to pay him[21] double, whereas he[21] would have to pay three-fold for an ox and double for a ram![22] — R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: No, all might agree that the confession regarding the slaughter would not have the [exempting] effect of a confession, and where they differ here is regarding evidence given by witnesses whom you would be unable to make subject to the law applicable to zomemim, as e.g., where two witnesses came and said to him: 'You have committed the theft [of the ox]', and he said to them: 'I did commit the theft [of the ox] and even slaughtered it or sold it; it was, however, not in your presence that I committed the theft, but in the presence of so-and-so and so-and-so,' and he in fact brought witnesses who proved an alibi against the first witnesses, that it was not in their presence that he committed the theft, but so-and-so and so-and-so [mentioned by the thief] came and testified against him that he did commit the theft [of the ox] and slaughtered it or sold it. The point at issue in this case would be as follows: The Rabbis maintain that this last evidence was given by witnesses whom you would [of course] be unable to make subject to the law applicable to zomemim [as they were pointed out by the thief himself],[23] and any evidence given by witnesses whom you would be unable to make subject to the law applicable to zomemim could not be considered valid evidence,[24] whereas Symmachus maintained that evidence given by witnesses whom you would be unable to make subject to the law applicable to zomemim would be valid evidence.[25] But is it not an established tradition with us[26] that any evidence given by witnesses whom you would be unable to make subject to the law applicable to zomemim could not be considered valid evidence? — This is the case only where the witnesses do not know the exact day or the exact hour of the occurrence alleged by them,[27] in which case there is in fact no evidence at all, whereas here [your inability to make them subject to the law applicable to zomemim was only because] the thief himself was in every way corroborating their statements.

The Master stated: 'They[28] would have to make double payment. But since in this case the thief admitted that he did commit the theft, so that he would surely be required to pay the principal, [why should the witnesses proved zomemim have to make double payment?][29] — Said R. Eleazar in the name of Rab: Read:

---

(1) But the testimony of two witnesses.
(2) But a confession of this nature bars subsequent evidence in accordance with the view of Rab.
(3) Shebu. 49a.
(4) Supporting thus the distinction made by R. Hamnuna.
(5) Ex. XXI, 37.
(6) I.e., since he confessed regarding the theft, in which case he will only have to pay the principal, since the doubling of it is a fine, he will not be subject to the fine of slaughter or sale even when denied by him and testified to by two witnesses, on account of the fact that the payment in this case would have to be not five-fold but four-fold for an ox and not four-fold but three-fold for a sheep.
(7) V. Glos.
(8) I.e., regarding the theft.
(9) I.e., regarding also the slaughter or sale, for surely if there was no theft there, no slaughter and sale of a stolen animal could have been there.
(10) For the theft which was testified to by the other set of witnesses.
(11) The second set proved zomemim.
(12) In accordance with Deut. XIX, 19.
(13) V.. the discussion later on.
(14) Where the witnesses to the theft were proved zomemim.
(15) Where the witnesses to the slaughter or sale were proved zomemim.
(16) I.e., Symmachus and the Rabbis.
(17) V. p. 421, n. 1.
(18) I.e., the first set of witnesses.
(19) Which was not made through any fear.
(20) Regarding the theft.
(21) The thief.
(22) I.e., the prescribed fine for the slaughter or sale. This therefore proves that the Rabbis maintained that a confession which does not involve the liability of the principal should still have the effect of a confession, in contradiction to R. Hamnuna, whereas Symmachus would maintain that it should be devoid of the absolute exempting effect of a confession to liability for a fine.
(23) Against whom they gave evidence.
(24) [The thief would accordingly be exempt from the fine for the slaughter and sale of which he stands convicted, as it were on his own evidence.]
(25) [Hence the thief, on his part. would have to pay the exclusive fine for the slaughter or sale.]
(26) Cf. Sanh. 41a and 78a.
(27) Cf. Sanh. 40a.
(28) I.e., the witnesses who gave evidence regarding the theft and were proved zomemim.
(29) They should have to pay no more than the amount of a single payment.

the payment of doubling.[1]

IF HE STOLE IT AND CONSECRATED IT [TO THE TEMPLE] AND AFTERWARDS SLAUGHTERED IT OR SOLD IT, HE WOULD HAVE TO MAKE DOUBLE PAYMENT BUT WOULD NOT HAVE TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD AND FIVE-FOLD PAYMENTS. I would here Say: I grant you that he should not be liable for the slaughter, as when he slaughtered it, it was a consecrated animal which he slaughtered and he did not slaughter that which belonged to the owner. But why should he not be made liable for the very act of consecration?[2] For indeed what difference does it make to me whether he disposed of it to a private owner or whether he disposed of it to the ownership of Heaven? — This represents the view of R. Simeon who said[3] that consecrated objects, the loss of which the consecrator would have to make good, should be considered as if still remaining in the possession of the consecrator.[4] But since the concluding clause gives the view of R. Simeon,[3] the view stated in the previous clause is surely not that of R. Simeon. [Why then no liability for the act of consecration?] — We must therefore be dealing here with a case of minor sacrifices[5] and in accordance with R. Jose the Galilean, who declared[6] that minor sacrifices are private property and thus still remain in the possession of the consecrator. But what would be the law [where the thief consecrated the stolen sheep or ox] for most holy sacrifices?[7] Would he then have to make four-fold or five-fold payment for the act of consecration? If so, why read in the opening clause: 'If he steals and slaughters and consecrates it, he has to make four-fold or five-fold payment'?[8] Why not make the distinction in stating the very case itself: 'This ruling applies only in the case of minor sacrifices, but where he sanctified it for the most holy sacrifices he would have to make four-fold or five-fold payment [for the very act of consecration]'? — We must therefore still say that there is no difference whether [the animal was consecrated for the] most holy sacrifices or merely for minor sacrifices, and to the difficulty raised by you. 'What difference does it make to me whether he disposed of it to a private owner or whether he disposed of it to the ownership of Heaven', [it might be said in answer that] where he disposed of it to a private owner it was previously the ox of Reuben and has now become the ox of Simeon,[9] whereas where he disposed of it to the ownership of Heaven it was previously the ox of Reuben and still remains the ox of Reuben.[10]

R. SIMEON HOWEVER SAYS: IN THE CASE OF CONSECRATED CATTLE THE LOSS OF WHICH THE OWNER HAS TO MAKE GOOD, THE THIEF HAS TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT, BUT IN THE CASE OF THOSE THE LOSS OF WHICH THE OWNER HAS NOT TO MAKE GOOD, THE THIEF IS EXEMPT. I would here say: Granted that in the opinion of R. Simeon it makes no difference whether he disposed of it to a private owner or whether he disposed of it to Heaven,[11] has not the text to be transposed [so as to read as follows]: '[For consecrating the stolen animals as] sacrifices the loss of which he would have to make good the thief should be exempt, as they have not yet been removed altogether from his possession, whereas [for consecrating them as] sacrifices the loss of which he would not have to make good he should be liable, as in this case they have already been removed from his possession'?

It may be said that R. Simeon referred to a different case altogether, and the text [of the Mishnah] is to be read thus: If a man misappropriates an article [already stolen] in the hands of a thief he has not to make four-fold and five-fold payments. So also he who misappropriates a consecrated object from the house of the owner is exempt, the reason being that [the words] 'and it be stolen out of the man's house'[12] imply 'but not from the possession of the sanctuary'. R. Simeon, however, says: In the case of consecrated objects, the loss of which the owner has to make good, the thief is liable to pay, the reason being that to this case [the words of the text] 'and it be stolen out of the man's house'[12] [apply].[13] But in the case of those the loss of which the owner has not to make good, the thief is exempt, as we cannot apply the words 'and it be stolen out of the man's house'. Let us see. We have heard R. Simeon say[14] that a slaughter through which the animal would not ritually become fit for food could not be called slaughter [in the eye of the law]. Is the slaughter [outside the Temple precincts] of sacrifices not similarly a slaughter which would not render the animal fit for food?[15] [Why then should there be liability for slaughtering them thus?] — When R. Dimi arrived[16] he stated on behalf of R. Johanan [that the liability would arise] if the thief slaughtered the sacrifices while unblemished within the precincts of the Temple in the name of the owner. But has not the principal thus been restored to the owner [since the sacrifice produced atonement for him]?[17] — Said R. Isaac b. Abin: We presume that the blood was poured out [and thus not sprinkled upon the altar, so that no atonement was effected for the owner].[18] When Rabin arrived[16] he said on behalf of R. Johanan that the liability would only be where he slaughtered the sacrifices while unblemished within the precincts of the Temple but not in the name of the owner,[19]

---

(1) I.e., a single payment.

(2) As if he would have sold it.

(3) Mishnah supra p. 427.

(4) As they are still under his charge and the transfer was thus incomplete.

(5) Such as peace. offerings and thank-offerings and the like.

(6) Supra p. 50.

(7) Such as burnt-offerings, sin-offerings and the like.

(8) Supra p. 403.

(9) I.e., the transfer from the thief to the purchaser was complete in every respect.

(10) I.e., the transfer from the thief to the Temple was not so complete. as the sacrifice is still credited to him.

(11) So that for the very act of sanctification the thief will become liable for the fine as if he had sold the animal.

(12) Ex. XXII, 6.

(13) For since the loss of these consecrated objects would involve an outlay of money on the part of the original owner, they are in this respect in his ownership as they are under his charge; cf. supra p. 410.

(14) Supra p. 408.

(15) Cf. Lev. XVII. 3-9; Hul. 78a-80b.

(16) From Palestine to Babylon.

(17) Why then should liability for the fine be attached?

(18) Cf. Zeb. 25a.

(19) In which case the owner derives no benefit, as the sacrifice is not credited to him though otherwise it is perfectly valid; cf. Zeb. I,1.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 76b

whereas Resh Lakish said that there will be liability also if the thief slaughtered blemished sacrifices[1] outside the precincts of the Temple.[2] R. Eleazar was astonished at the statement of R. Johanan: Is it the slaughter that renders the sacrificed animal permissible for food?[3] Is it not the sprinkling of the blood that renders it permissible to be partaken of?[4] So also he was astonished at the statement of Resh Lakish: Is it the slaughter that renders the sacrificed animal permissible for food?[5] Is it not its redemption[6] that renders it permissible for food?[5] — It, however, escaped his memory that R. Simeon has laid down that whatever is ready to be sprinkled is considered as if it has already been sprinkled, and whatever is designated for being redeemed is considered as if it had already been redeemed[7] . 'Whatever is ready to be sprinkled is considered as if it had already been sprinkled' — as taught: R. Simeon says: There is nothar[8] which may be subject to defilement in accordance with the law applicable to the defilement of food,[9] but there is also nothar which is not subject to defilement in accordance with the law applicable to the defilement of food. How is this so? If it remains over night before the sprinkling of the blood,[10] it would not be subject to become defiled in accordance with the law applicable to the defilement of food,[11] but if after the sprinkling of blood,[12] it would be subject to become defiled in accordance with the law applicable to the defilement of food.[13] Now, it is an accepted tradition that the meaning of 'before sprinkling' is 'without it first having become fit to be sprinkled' and of 'after sprinkling', 'after it became fit for sprinkling'. Hence, 'where it remained overnight without having first become fit for sprinkling' could only be where there was no time during the day to sprinkle it, such as where the sacrifice was slaughtered close upon sunset, in which case it would not be subject to become defiled in accordance with the law applicable to the defilement of food; and 'where it remained over night after it had already become fit for sprinkling,' [could only be] where there was time during the [previous] day to sprinkle it, in which case it would be subject to become defiled in accordance with the law applicable to the defilement of food.[14] This proves that whatever is ready to be sprinkled is considered as if it had already been sprinkled.[15] 'Whatever is designated for being redeemed is considered as if it had already been redeemed,' — as taught: 'R. Simeon says:

---

(1) [I.e., an animal which became afflicted with a lasting blemish before it was dedicated (Rashi).]

(2) As these may be slaughtered outside the precincts of the Temple, even without being first redeemed.

(3) In the case of unblemished sacrifices slaughtered in the precincts of the Temple.

(4) It accordingly follows that the slaughter as such did not at that time render the animal ritually fit for food.

(5) In the case of blemished sacrifices slaughtered outside the precincts of the Temple.

(6) Subsequent to the slaughter thereof. Cf. Hul. 84a.

(7) So that the slaughter is considered fit; cf. Pes. 13b; Men. 79b and 102b.

(8) Lit., 'That which remaineth'; cf. Ex. XII, 10 and Lev. XIX, 6. denoting portions of sacrifices that had not been eaten or sacrificed upon the altar within the prescribed time and could then no more be sacrificed upon the altar or partaken of or put to any use but had to be burnt in a special place.

(9) Cf. Lev. XI, 34.

(10) In which case the portions have never been allowed to be partaken of.

(11) As according to Bek. 9b, food cannot become defiled unless it was permitted to be made use of as food.

(12) It was left over, in which case there was a time when the portions were ritually fit as food.

(13) Tosef. 'Uk. III, 7' in accordance with Lev. XI, 34.

(14) V. p. 439. n. 9.

(15) And made the sacrifice as if ritually fit to be partaken of.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 77a

The red heifer is subject to become defiled in accordance with the law applicable to the defilement of food,[1] since at one time it had ritual fitness to be used for food',[2]

---

(1) Cf. Lev. XI, 34.

(2) Tosef. Par. VI, 9; Shebu. 11b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 77b

and Resh Lakish observed that R. Simeon used to say that the red heifer could be redeemed even after [it was slaughtered and] placed upon the wood for burning[1] thus proving that whatever has the possibility of being redeemed[2] is considered as if it had already been redeemed.

We can understand why R. Johanan did not give the same answer [to the difficulty[3] propounded] as Resh Lakish,[4] as he was anxious to explain the ruling [of our Mishnah] even in the case of unblemished sacrifices. But why did Resh Lakish not give the same answer as R. Johanan?[5] — He could say: [Scripture says.] 'And he slaughtered it or sold it'[6] implying that it was only an animal [subject to this law] in the case of a sale that could be [subject to it] in the case of slaughter, whereas an animal which would not be [subject to this law] in the case of sale could similarly not be [subject to it] in the case of slaughter either. Now, in the case of these unblemished sacrifices, since if the thief had sold the sacrifices it would not have been a sale [to all intents and purposes],[7] they could not be [subject to this law even] when they were slaughtered. R. Johanan and Resh Lakish indeed followed their own lines of reasoning [elsewhere]. For it was stated: If a thief sells a stolen ox which is trefa,[8] according to R. Simeon,[9] R. Johanan said that he would be liable, whereas Resh Lakish said that he would be exempt. R. Johanan. who said that he would be liable, held that though this ox could not be subject to the law of slaughter it could yet be subject to the law of sale, whereas Resh Lakish who said that he would be exempt maintained that since this ox could not be subject to the law of slaughter, it could similarly not be subject to the law of sale either.

R. Johanan objected to [the view of] Resh Lakish [from the following]: If he stole a hybrid animal and slaughtered it, or a trefa animal and sold it, he would have to make double payment. Now, does not this ruling follow the view of R. Simeon,[10] thus proving that though this ox would not be subject to the law of slaughter it could nevertheless be subject to the law of sale? — He replied: No; this is the view of the Rabbis .[11] But if this is the view of the Rabbis, why should a trefa ox be subject only to the law of sale and not to the law of slaughter? — You say then that it is the view of R. Simeon.[9] Why then should a hybrid animal be subject only to the law of slaughter and not to that of sale? We must say therefore that though slaughter is mentioned[12] the same law was meant to apply also to sale; so also according to the Rabbis, though sale is stated in the text,[13] the same law was meant to apply to slaughter.[14] R. Johanan, however, might say that this does not follow. It is true that if you say that the ruling follows R. Simeon, there is no difficulty: since it was necessary to state liability regarding trefa in the one case [of sale] only, it states liability regarding a hybrid animal also in the one case [of slaughter] only. But if you say that this ruling follows the Rabbis, why not join them together, and state thus: 'If the thief misappropriated a hybrid animal and a trefa [sheep or ox] and slaughtered them or sold them, he would have to make four-fold or five-fold payment'! This indeed is a difficulty.

[But why should there be liability for four-fold or five-fold payment in the case of] a hybrid animal since Scripture says 'sheep'.[15] and Raba [elsewhere] said that this[16] is a locus classicus for the rule that wherever it says 'sheep', the purpose is to exclude a hybrid animal? — This case here is different, as Scripture says 'or',[17] implying the inclusion of a hybrid animal. [Does this mean to say that] the term 'or' everywhere implies an amplification? Was it not taught:[18] 'When a bullock or a sheep:[19] this excepts a hybrid; or a goat:[19] this excepts an animal looking like a hybrid'? — Said Raba: The term 'or' in the one case is expounded in accordance with the subject matter of the verse, and the term 'or' in the other case is similarly expounded in accordance with the subject matter of that verse. Here in connection with theft where it is written 'an ox or a sheep', since it is impossible to produce a hybrid from the union of these two,[20] the term 'or' should be expounded to include[21] a hybrid [of a different kind], whereas in connection with sacrifices where it is written 'a sheep or a goat',[19] where it is possible for you to produce a hybrid from their union,[22] the term 'or' should rightly be taken to exclude[23] [the hybrid].

---

(1) And this is the ritual fitness as food.

(2) Though it was in fact never redeemed.

(3) As to how could the slaughter in the case of a sacrifice render the stolen animal ritually fit for food and thus make the thief liable for the fine.

(4) Who stated that the animal was blemished and slaughtered outside the precincts of the Temple.

(5) That an unblemished animal was slaughtered in the precincts of the Temple but not in the name of the owner.

(6) Ex. XXI, 37.

(7) Cf. Pes. 89b.

(8) V. Glos.

(9) Who in the case of slaughtering such an animal maintains exemption; v. supra p. 403.

(10) For if otherwise, why not state slaughter also in the case of trefa.

(11) According to whom even for slaughter in the case of trefa there is liability for the fine (supra p. 403).

(12) In the case of a hybrid animal.

(13) Dealing with trefa.

(14) [But according to R. Simeon a trefa is not subject even to the law of sale.

(15) In Ex. XXI, 37.

(16) The word 'sheep' in Lev. XXII, 28; v. Hul. 78b.

(17) Ex. XXI, 37.

(18) Hul. 38b.

(19) Lev. XXII, 27.

(20) As an ox could not possibly be the father of the offspring of a sheep.

(21) For if to exclude there was no need for this 'or'.

(22) As a sheep could be the father of the young of a goat.

(23) For if to include there was no need for this 'or' to be inserted.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 78a

But in connection with sacrifices it is also written 'a bullock or a sheep', in which case it is impossible for you to exclude a hybrid born from these two, why then should we not employ the term 'or' to include [a hybrid of a different kind]? — Since the term 'or' in the later phrase[1] is to 'be employed to exclude, the term 'or' in the earlier phrase[2] should similarly be employed to exclude. But why not say on the contrary that, as the term 'or' in the earlier phrase has to be employed to amplify, so also should the term 'or' in the later phrase? — Would this be logical? I grant you that if you say that the term 'or' meant to exclude, then it would be necessary to have two [terms 'or'] to exclude, for even when a hybrid has been excluded, it would still be necessary to exclude an animal looking like a hybrid. But if you say it is meant to amplify, why two amplifications [in the two terms 'or']? For once a hybrid is included, what question could there be of an animal looking like a hybrid. To what halachah then would the statement made by Raba refer, that this is a locus classicus for the rule that wherever it says 'sheep'. the purpose is to exclude a hybrid? If to sacrifices, is it not explicitly said: 'A bullock or a sheep which excepts a hybrid' ? If to the tithes [of animals] , is not the term 'under'[3] compared to 'under' used in connection with sacrifices [making it subject to the same law]? If to a firstling, is the verb expressing 'passing'[4] not compared to 'passing'[3] used in connection with tithe? Or again we may say, since where the animal only looks like a hybrid you say that it is not [subject to the law of firstling], since it is written: 'But the firstling of an ox'[5] [which implies that the rule holds good] only where the parents were of the species of 'ox' and the firstling was of the species of 'ox', what question can there be regarding a hybrid itself? — The statement made by Raba must therefore have referred to the firstling of an ass,[6] as we have learnt:[7] It can not be redeemed either by a calf or by a wild animal or by a slaughtered sheep or by a trefa sheep or by a hybrid or by a koy.[8] But if we accept the view of R. Eleazar, who allows redemption with a hybrid sheep, as we have learnt: R. Eleazar allows the redemption to be made with a hybrid, for it is a sheep,[7] to what halachah [can we refer the statement of Raba] ? — R. Eleazar might reply that the statement made by Raba is to teach [the prohibition of] an unclean animal[9] born from a clean animal[10] which became pregnant from an unclean animal [being forbidden as food].[11] this opinion not being in accordance with R. Joshua. for R. Joshua derived[12] this prohibition from the verse 'the sheep of sheep and the sheep of goats'.[13] which implies that unless the father was a 'sheep' and the mother a 'sheep' [the offspring is forbidden for food]. But could a clean animal become pregnant from an unclean animal? — Yes, since it is known to us

---

(1) Dealing with 'sheep' and 'goat'.

(2) Where 'bullock' and 'sheep' are mentioned.

(3) Lev. XXVII, 32.

(4) Ex. XIII, 12.

(5) E.V. 'a cow'. Num. XVIII. 17.

(6) Which has to be redeemed by a sheep (Ex. XIII. 13). so that a hybrid would therefore not be eligible.

(7) Bek. 1,5.

(8) I.e., a kind of an antelope about which there was a doubt whether it belongs to the species of cattle or to that of beasts of the forest. [V. Lewysohn. Zoologie, p. 115 ff. who identifies it with the Gr. , 'goat-stag' mentioned by Plinius.]

(9) E.g.. a swine; v. Lev. XI, 7.

(10) Such as a sheep.

(11) Such as where a cow became pregnant from a horse and gave birth to a foal or where a sheep became pregnant from a swine and gave birth to a swine.

(12) Cf. Bek. 7a.

(13) Deut. XIV, 4.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 78b

that it could become pregnant from an animal with uncloven hoofs, [which though born from parents belonging to the species of ox, is considered unclean] in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.[1]

Raba asked: [If one vowed.] 'I take upon myself to sacrifice a burnt — offering.'[2] and he set aside an ox and somebody came and stole it , should the thief be entitled to free himself[3] by paying for a sheep, if we follow the Rabbis, or even for a burnt-offering of a bird, if we follow R. Eleazar b. Azariah, as we have learnt:[4] [If one vowed.] 'I take it upon myself to bring a burnt-offering.' he may bring a sheep;[5] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says that he may even bring a turtle — dove or a young pigeon?[6] What should be the legal position? Shall we say that since he undertook to bring something called a burnt-offering [the thief may be entitled to restore the minimum burnt-offering], or perhaps the donor might be entitled to say to him: 'I am anxious to do my duty in the best manner possible'? After he put the question, on second thoughts he decided that the thief might free himself by paying a sheep, according to the view of the Rabbis, or even a burnt-offering of a bird, according to the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah. R. Aha the son of R. Ika taught this as a definite ruling, [as follows]: Raba said: [If one vowed.] 'I take it upon myself to sacrifice a burnt-offering.' and he set aside an ox and somebody came and stole it, the thief may free himself by paying for a sheep, if we follow the Rabbis, or even for a burnt-offering of a bird, if we follow R. Eleazar b. Azariah.

MISHNAH. IF HE SOLD [THE STOLEN SHEEP OR OX] WITH THE EXCEPTION OF ONE HUNDREDTH PART OF IT,[7] OR IF HE HAD SOME PARTNERSHIP IN IT[8] [BEFORE HE STOLE IT] OR IF HE SLAUGHTERED IT AND IT BECAME NEBELAH[9] UNDER HIS HAND, OR IF HE STABBED IT OR TORE LOOSE [THE WIND PIPE AND GULLET BEFORE CUTTING],[10] HE WOULD HAVE TO MAKE DOUBLE PAYMENT[11] BUT WOULD NOT HAVE TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD AND FIVE-FOLD PAYMENTS.

GEMARA. What is meant by 'with the exception of one hundredth part of it'? — Rab said: With the exception of any part that would be rendered permissible [for food] together with the bulk of the animal through the process of slaughter.[12] Levi, however, said: With the exception even of its wool. It was indeed so taught in a Baraitha: 'With the exception of its wool.'

An objection was raised [from the following]: 'If he sold it with the exception of its fore-paw, or with the exception of its foot, or with the exception of its horn, or with the exception of its wool, he would not have to make four-fold and five-fold payments. Rabbi, however, says: [If he reserved for himself] anything the absence of which would prevent a [ritual] slaughter, he would not have to pay four-fold and five-fold payments, but [if he reserves] anything which is not indispensable for the purposes of [ritual] slaughter[13] he would have to make four-fold or five-fold payment. But R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: If he reserved its horn he would not have to make four-fold or five-fold payment; but if he reserved its wool he would have to make four-fold or five-fold payment'. This presents no difficulty to Levi, as he would concur with the first Tanna, but with whom does Rab concur?[14] — It may he said that Rab concurs with the following Tanna, as taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar said:[15] 'If he sold it with the exception of its fore-paw or with the exception of its foot he would not have to make four-fold or five-fold payment. But if with the exception of its horn or with the exception of its wool he would have to make four-fold and five-fold payments'. What is the point at issue between all these Tannaim? — The first Tanna held that [to fulfil the words] 'and he slaughter it'[16] we require the whole of it, as also [to fulfil the words] 'and he sell it' we require the whole of it.[17] Rabbi, however, held that 'and he slaughter it' refers only to those parts the absence of which would render the slaughter ineffective, excluding thus anything which has no bearing upon the slaughter, while 'and he sell it' is of course analogous to 'and he slaughter it'. R. Simeon b. Eleazar, on the other hand, maintained that the horn not being a part which is usually cut off could be reckoned as a reservation, so that he would not have to make four-fold and five-fold payments, whereas the wool of the animal being a part which is usually shorn off could not be reckoned as an reservation, and he would thus have to make four-fold or five-fold payment. But the other Tanna of the School of R. Simeon b. Eleazar maintained that its fore-paws or feet which require slaughter [to render them permissible] form a reservation, and he would not have to pay four-fold and five-fold payments, whereas its horns or its wool, as they do not require slaughter [to render them permissible] would not constitute a reservation. But does R. Simeon b. Eleazar not contradict himself? — Two Tannaim report differently the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.

Our Rabbis taught: He who steals a crippled, or a lame, or a blind [sheep or ox], and so also he who steals an animal belonging to partners [and slaughters it or sells it] is liable [for four-fold and five-fold payments]. But if partners committed a theft they would be exempt.[18] But was it not taught: 'If partners committed a theft, they would be liable'?[19] — Said R. Nahman: This offers no difficulty, as the former statement deals with a partner stealing from [the animals belonging to him and] his fellow — partner, whereas the latter states the law where a partner stole from outsiders.[20] Raba objected to [this explanation of] R. Nahman [from the following]: 'Lest you might think that if a partner steals from [the animals belonging to himself and to] his fellow — partner, or if partners commit the theft, they should be liable, it is definitely stated, 'And slaughter it',[21] showing that we require the whole of it, which is absent here' — [Does this not prove that partners stealing from outsiders are similarly exempt?] — R. Nahman therefore said: The contradiction [referred to above] offers no difficulty, as the statement [of liability] referred to a partner slaughtering[22] with the authorisation of his fellow — partner,[23] whereas the other ruling referred to a partner slaughtering without the authorization of his fellow-partner.[24]

R. Jeremiah inquired: If the thief sold a stolen animal with the exception of the first thirty days,[25] or with the exception of its work[26] or with the exception of its embryo,what would be the law?[27] If we accept the view that an embryo is [an integral part like] the thigh of its mother,[28] there could be no question that this would be a sure reservation. The question would arise only if we accept the view that an embryo is not like the thigh of its mother. What indeed should be the law? Shall we say that since it is joined to it, it should count as a reservation, or perhaps since it is destined to be separated from it, it should not be considered a reservation? Some state the question thus: [Shall we say that] since it is not like the thigh of its mother, it should not count as a reservation, or perhaps since at that time it requires [the union with] its mother to become permissible for food through the process of slaughter[29] it should be equal to a reservation made in the actual body of the mother? — Let this stand undecided.

R. papa inquired: If the thief after stealing mutilated it and then sold it, what would be the law?[30] Shall we say that [since] all that he stole he did not sell [he should be exempt], or perhaps [since] in what he sold he reserved nothing [for himself he should be liable]? — Let this [also] stand undecided.

Our Rabbis taught: If he stole [a sheep or an ox] and gave it to another person who slaughtered it, or if he stole it and gave it to another person who sold it,

---

(1) Cf. Bek. 6b.

(2) In which case he would be responsible for the loss of the sacrifice which he set aside, having to replace it with another sacrifice, and the thief would therefore according to R. Simeon be liable to the donor.

(3) So far as the owner is concerned.

(4) Men. 107a.

(5) Which could also be brought as a burnt offering; cf. Lev. 1,10.

(6) Cf. ibid. 14.

(7) The exemption here is because the sale did not extend to the whole animal.

(8) In which case not the whole act of the sale was unlawful.

(9) V. Glos.

(10) Thus rendering the animal nebelah.

(11) For the act of theft.

(12) This law would thus not extend to a case where the wool or the horns were excepted from the sale.

(13) E.g., the fore-paw.

(14) For he could not follow the views of Rabbi according to whom even where the fore-paw (which is rendered permissible through the process if slaughter) was excepted, the thief would still have to make four-fold or five-fold payment.

(15) According to the tradition if another School, v. discussion which follows.

(16) Ex. XXI, 37.

(17) Without any exception whatever. (5) Where he excepted it from the sale.

(18) Tosef. B.K. VII, 4.

(19) B.M. 8a.

(20) Where there is liability.

(21) Ex. XXI, 37.

(22) An animal stolen by both of them and for which they both have to share the fine for the theft.

(23) And since in this case the law of agency applies even for the commission of a sin (v. supra 71a), they would both have to share the fine for the slaughter too.

(24) In which case the fellow-partner could certainly not be made liable to pay anything for the slaughter nor again the one who slaughtered the animal, since we could not make him liable for the whole of the slaughter, as though he slaughtered the whole of the animal he was a thief but of half of it.

(25) During which period the thief should still retain it.

(26) The vendee may slaughter it forthwith, but any work done by it should be credited to the vendor.

(27) Regarding the payment of the fine.

(28) Cf. Tem. 30b and also supra p. 265.

(29) In accordance with Hul. 74a.

(30) Regarding the payment of the fine.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 79a

or if he stole it and consecrated it, or if he stole it and sold it on credit, or if he stole it and bartered it, or if he stole it and gave it as a gift, or if he stole it and paid a debt with it, or if he stole it and paid it for goods he had obtained on credit, or if he stole it and sent it as a betrothal gift to the house of his father-in-law, he would have to make four-fold and five-fold payments.[1] What is this meant to tell us? [Is not all this obvious?] — The new point lies in the opening clause: 'If he stole [a sheep or an ox] and gave it to another person who slaughtered it', [which implies] that in this case the law of agency has application even for a matter involving transgression.[2] Though in the whole of the Torah [there is] no [case of an] agent entrusted with a matter involving transgression [rendering the principal liable], sin this case an agent entrusted with a matter involving transgression would render his principal liable, the reason being [that Scripture says]: 'And he slaughter it or sell it', implying that just as a sale cannot be effected without the intervention of some other person,[3] so also where the slaughter was effected [by some other person authorised by the thief to do so the thief would be liable]. There is also a new point in the concluding clause: 'Where he stole it and consecrated it', which tells us that it makes no difference whether he disposed of it to a private person or whether he disposed of it to the ownership of Heaven.[4]

MISHNAH. IF HE STOLE [A SHEEP OR AN OX] IN THE PREMISES OF THE OWNERS AND SLAUGHTERED IT OR SOLD IT OUTSIDE THEIR PREMISES, OR IF HE STOLE IT OUTSIDE THEIR PREMISES AND SLAUGHTERED IT OR SOLD IT ON THEIR PREMISES, OR IF HE STOLE IT AND SLAUGHTERED IT OR SOLD IT OUTSIDE THEIR PREMISES, HE WOULD HAVE TO MAKE FOUR-FOLD OR FIVE-FOLD PAYMENT.[5] BUT IF HE STOLE IT AND SLAUGHTERED IT OR SOLD IT IN THEIR PREMISES, HE WOULD BE EXEMPT.[6] IF AS HE WAS PULLING IT OUT IT DIED WHILE STILL IN THE PREMISES OF THE OWNERS, HE WOULD BE EXEMPT,[6] BUT IF IT DIED AFTER HE HAS LIFTED IT UP[7] OR AFTER HE HAD ALREADY TAKEN IT OUT OF THE PREMISES OF THE OWNERS,[8] HE WOULD BE LIABLE.[9] SO ALSO IF HE GAVE IT TO A PRIEST FOR THE REDEMPTION OF HIS FIRST-BORN SON[10] OR TO A CREDITOR, TO AN UNPAID BAILEE, TO A BORROWER, TO A PAID BAILEE OR TO A HIRER, AND AS HE WAS PULLING IT OUT[11] IT DIED WHILE STILL IN THE PREMISES OF THE OWNERS, HE WOUld BE EXEMPT; BUT IF IT DIED AFTER HE HAD LIFTED IT UP OR ALREADY TAKEN IT OUT OF THE PREMISES OF THE OWNERS, HE[12] WOULD BE LIABLE.

GEMARA. Amemar asked: Was the formality of pulling instituted[13] also in the case of bailees[14] or not? — R. Yemar replied: Come and hear: IF HE GAVE IT TO A PRIEST FOR THE REDEMPTION OF HIS FIRST-BORN SON, TO A CREDITOR, TO AN UNPAID BAILEE, TO A BORROWER, TO A PAID BAILEE OR TO A HIRER AND AS HE WAS PULLING IT OUT IT DIED WHILE IN THE PREMISES OF THE OWNERS HE WOULD BE EXEMPT. Now, this means, does it not, that the bailee was pulling it out, thus proving that the requirement of pulling was instituted also in the case of bailees?[15] — No, he rejoined; the thief was pulling it out.[16] But was not this already stated in the previous clause?[17] — There it was stated in regard to a thief stealing from the house of the owners, whereas here it is stated in regard to a thief stealing from the house of a bailee. Said R. Ashi to him [Amemar]: Do not bring such arguments; what difference does it make whether the thief stole from the house of the bailee or from the house of the owners?[18] No; it must mean that the bailee was pulling it out, thus proving that pulling was instituted also in the case of bailees.[15] This can indeed he regarded as proved.

It was also stated that R. Eleazar said: Just as the Sages instituted pulling in the case of purchasers, so also have they instituted pulling in the case of bailees.[19] It has in fact been taught likewise: Just as the Sages instituted pulling in the case of purchasers, so have they instituted pulling in the case of bailees, and just as immovable property is transferred by the medium of money payment, a deed or possession,[20] so also is the case with hiring which is similarly acquired by the medium of money, a deed or possession. The hire of what? If you say

---

(1) Tosef. B.K. VII.

(2) For which cf. supra 71a, so that the principal will be liable to the fine for the act of slaughter committed by his agent.

(5) Cf. Kid. 42b and supra 51a.

(3) I.e. the purchaser.

(4) Provided, however, that he did not consecrate it to be sacrificed as an offering upon the altar, in which case the transfer would not he complete as supra 76a, but where the animal was blemished and he consecrated it to become a permanent asset of the Temple treasury (Tosaf.).

(5) For as soon as he removed it from the premises of the owners the act of theft became complete.

(6) As in this case the theft has never become complete.

(7) As by lifting up possession is transferred even while in the premises of the owner; cf. Kid. 25b.

(8) By the act of pulling possession is not transferred unless the animal has already left the premises of the owners.

(9) For as soon as the animal came into the possession of the thief the theft became complete.

(10) I.e., for the five shekels; v. Num. XVIII. 16.

(11) V. the discussion in Gemara.

(12) The thief.

(13) As it was instituted in the case of purchasers for which cf. B.M. IV. 1 and 47b.

(14) So that the act of pulling would be essential for making the contract of bailment complete.

(15) So that by the act of pulling carried out by the bailee the contract of bailment became complete and the animal could thus be considered as having been transferred from the possession of the owner to that of the thief represented by the bailee who acted on his behalf.

(16) After the owner handed over the animal to any one of those enumerated in the Mishnah.

(17) That the act of pulling is one of the requirements essential to make the theft complete.

(18) Why then deal with them separately.

(19) B.M. 99a.

(20) Cf. Kid. 27a.

the hire of movables, are movables transferred by a deed?[1] — Said R. Hisda: The hire of immovable property.

R. Eleazar stated: If a thief was seen hiding himself in forests [where flocks pasture] and slaughtering or selling [there sheep or oxen], he would have to make four-fold or five-fold payment. But why so, since he did not pull the animal?[2] — Said R. Hisda: We suppose that he struck it with a stick [and thus drew it towards himself]. But I would still ask, since he was seen doing this [publicly], should he on this account not be [subject to the law applicable to] a robber [who has not to pay any fines]?[3] — Since [at the same time] he was hiding himself from the public he is [subject to the law applicable to] a thief.[4]

How then would you define a robber? — Said R. Abbahu: One, for instance, like Benaiah the son of Jehoiadah, of whom we read:[5] And he plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand and slew him with his own spear. R. Johanan said: Like the men of Shechem of whom we read:[6] And the men of Shechem set liers in wait for him on the tops of the mountains, and they robbed all that came along that way by them: and it was told Abimelech. Why did R. Abbahu not give his instance from this last source? He could say that since these were hiding themselves they could not be called robbers. And R. Johanan? — He could argue that the reason they were hiding themselves was so that people should not notice them and run away from them.[7] The disciples of R. Johanan b. Zakkai asked him why the Torah was more severe on a thief[8] than on a robber.[9] He replied: The latter[10] puts the honour of the slave[11] on the same level as the honour of his owner,[12] whereas the former[13] does not put the honour of the slave on the same level as the honour of the master [but higher], for, as it were, he acts as if the eye of Below[14] would not be seeing and the ear of Below would not be hearing, as it says: Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?[15] Or as it is written: And they say, The Lord will not see, neither will the God of Jacob give heed;[16] or, as again it is written, For they say, the Lord hath forsaken the earth and the Lord seeth not.[17] It was taught:[18] R. Meir said: The following parable is reported in the name of R. Gamaliel. What do the thief and the robber resemble? Two people who dwelt in one town and made banquets. One invited the townspeople and did not invite the royal family, the other invited neither the townspeople nor the royal family.[19] Which deserves the heavier punishment? Surely the one who invited the townspeople but did not invite the royal family.

R. Meir further said: Observe how great is the importance attached to labour, for in the case of an ox [stolen and slaughtered] where the thief interfered with its labour[20] he has to pay five-fold, while in the case of a sheep where he did not disturb it from its labour[21] he has to pay only four-fold. R. Johanan b. Zakkai said: Observe how great is the importance attached to the dignity of Man, for in the case of an ox which walks away on its own feet[22] the payment is five-fold, while in the case of a sheep which was usually carried on the thief's shoulder only four-fold has to be paid.[23]

MISHNAH. IT IS NOT RIGHT TO BREED SMALL CATTLE[24] IN ERETZ YISRAEL.[25] THEY MAY HOWEVER BE BRED IN SYRIA OR IN THE DESERTS OF ERETZ YISRAEL. IT IS NOT RIGHT TO BREED HENS[26] IN JERUSALEM ON ACCOUNT OF THE SACRIFICES,[27] NOR MAY PRIESTS DO SO THROUGHOUT THE WHOLE OF ERETZ YISRAEL, ON ACCOUNT OF THEIR FOOD[28] WHICH HAS TO BE RITUALLY CLEAN.[29] IT IS NOT RIGHT TO BREED PIGS IN ANY PLACE WHATEVER.[30] NO MAN SHOULD BREED A DOG[31] UNLESS IT IS ON A CHAIN. IT IS NOT RIGHT TO PLACE NETS FOR DOVES UNLESS AT A DISTANCE OF THIRTY RIS[32] FROM INHABITED SETTLEMENTS.[33]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: It is not right to breed small cattle in Eretz Yisrael but they may be bred in the woods[34] of Eretz Yisrael or in Syria even in inhabited settlements, and needless to say also outside Eretz Yisrael. Another [Baraitha] taught: 'It is not right to breed small cattle in Eretz Yisrael. They may, however, be bred in the deserts of Judah and in the desert at the border of Acco.[35] Still though the Sages said: 'It is not right to breed small cattle' it is nevertheless quite proper to breed large cattle, for we should not impose a restriction upon the community unless the majority of the community will be able to stand it. Small cattle could be imported from outside Eretz Yisrael, whereas large cattle could not be imported from outside Eretz Yisrael.[36] Again, though they said: 'It is not right to breed small cattle', one may nevertheless keep them before a festival for thirty days and similarly before the wedding festivity of his son for thirty days. He should, however, not retain the animal last bought for thirty days [if these expire after the festival]. So[37] that if the festival had already gone, though since from the time he bought the animal until that time thirty days had not yet elapsed we do not say that a period of thirty days is permitted for keeping the animal, but [we are to say that] as soon as the festival has gone he should not retain it any longer.

---

(1) Are they not acquired solely by the medium of pulling as stated in Kid. ibid.?

(2) The theft never became complete.

(3) For a robber has to restore only the article taken by him or its value.

(4) Who is liable to fine.
(5) II Sam. XXIII, 21.
(6) Jud. IX, 25.
(7) But not out of any fear.
(8) That he has to pay double payment for the theft and four-fold and five-fold payments for the subsequent slaughter or sale of the stolen sheep and ox respectively in accordance with Ex. XXI, 37.
(9) Who has to pay only the thing misappropriated by him or its value, in accordance with Lev. V, 23.
(10) I.e., the robber by committing the crime publicly.
(11) I.e., human society.
(12) I.e., the Creator.
(13) I.e., the thief by committing his crime by stealth.
(14) Euphemism for 'Heaven'; cf. Ab. II. 1.
(15) Isa. XXIX. 15.
(16) Ps. XCIV. 7.
(17) Ezek. IX, 9.
(18) [Rashal deletes 'It was taught', as this is the continuation of the preceding passage in Tosef. B.K. VII.]
(19) So also in the case of the thief and the robber the former equals the former and the latter the latter; cf. however B.B. 88b.
(20) For an ox usually labours in the field; cf. Deut. V, 14; Isa. XXX, 24 and Prov. XIV, 4.
(21) As it is in any case not fit for work.
(22) While the thief misappropriates it.
(23) Mek. on Ex. XXII, 6.
(24) As these usually spoil the crops of the field. Cf. supra p. 118.
(25) Where the produce of the fields was of public concern.
(26) As these usually peck in dunghills and expose impurities.
(27) Which are eaten there and might easily be defiled by some impurity brought by the chickens.
(28) Consisting mainly of terumah (v. Glos.).
(29) In accordance with Lev. XXII. 6-7.
(30) Cf. Gemara.
(31) As by barking it might frighten pregnant women and cause miscarriages.
(32) I.e., four miles, cf. Glos.
(33) So that doves belonging to private owners in the settlement should not be enticed into the nets.
(34) Which were considered common property.
(35) [MS.M.: Kefar Amiko, N. of Acco, v. Klein, NB.p.9.]
(36) And cattle could not be dispensed with in an agricultural country where they are vital for field work.
(37) [Following MS.M., which omits 'For you might think' occurring in cur. edd., the whole passage appears to be a copyist's gloss on the cited Baraitha; v. D.S. a.l.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 80a

'A cattle dealer may, however, buy and slaughter, or buy and [even] keep for the market. He may, however, not retain the animal he bought last for thirty days.'

R. Gamaliel was asked by his disciples whether it is permissible to breed [small cattle]. He said to them: 'It is permissible.' But did we not learn: 'IT IS NOT RIGHT TO BREED'? — What they asked him was really this: 'What about retaining [it]?'[1] He said to them: 'It is permissible, provided it does not go out and pasture with the herd, but is fastened to the legs of the bed.'

Our Rabbis taught:[2] There was once a certain pious person[3] who suffered with his heart, and the doctors on being consulted said that there was no remedy for him unless he sucked warm milk every morning. A goat was therefore brought to him and fastened to the legs of the bed, and he sucked from it every morning. After some days his colleagues came to visit him, but as soon as they noticed the goat fastened to the legs of the bed they turned back and said: 'An armed robber[4] is in the house of this man, how can we come in to [see] him?' They thereupon sat down and inquired into his conduct, but they did not find any fault in him except this sin about the goat. He also at the time of his death proclaimed: 'I know that no sin can be imputed to me save that of the goat, when I transgressed against the words of my colleagues.'

R. Ishmael[5] said: My father's family belonged to the property owners in Upper Galilee. Why then were they ruined? Because they used to pasture their flocks in forests, and to try money cases without a colleague.[6] The forests were very near to their estates, but there was also a little field near by [belonging to others], and the cattle were led by way of this.

Our Rabbis taught: If a shepherd[7] desires to repent,[8] it would not be right to order him to sell immediately [the small cattle with him], but he may sell by degrees. So also in the case of a proselyte to whom dogs and pigs fall as an inheritance,[9] it would not be right to order him to sell immediately, but he may sell by degrees. So also if one vows to buy a house, or to marry a woman in Eretz Yisrael,[10] it would not be right to order him to enter into a contract immediately, until he finds a house or a woman to suit him. Once a woman being annoyed by her son jumped up [in anger] and swore: 'Whoever will come forward and offer to marry me, I will not refuse him', and as unsuitable persons offered themselves to her, the matter was brought to the Sages, who thereupon said: Surely this woman did not intend her vow to apply save to a suitable person. Just as the Sages said that it is not right to breed small cattle, so also have they said that it is not right to breed small beasts. R. Ishmael said: It is however allowed to breed village dogs,[11] cats, apes, huldoth sena'im [porcupines], as these help to keep the house clean.[12] What are 'huldoth sena'im'? — Rab Judah replied: A certain creeping animal of the harza [species]. Some say, of the harza [species][13] with thin legs which pastures among rose-bushes, and the reason why it is called 'creeping' is because its legs are [short and] underneath it.

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: We put ourselves in Babylon with reference to the law of breeding small cattle on the same footing as if we were in Eretz Yisrael. R. Adda b. Ahabah said to R. Huna:[14] What about your small cattle? He answered him: Ours are guarded by Hoba.[15] He, however, said to him: Is Hoba prepared to neglect her son so much as to bury him?[16] In point of fact, during the lifetime of R. Adda b. Ahabah, no children born of Hoba survived to R . Huna. Some report : R. Huna said: From the time Rab arrived in Babylon,[17] We put ourselves in Babylon with reference to breeding small cattle on the same footing as if we were in Eretz Yisrael.

Rab and Samuel and R. Assi once met at a circumcision of a boy,[18] or as some say, at the party for the redemption of a son.[19] Rab would not enter before Samuel,[20]

---

(1) For a festival; cf. Tosaf. a.l.

(2) Tem. 15b.

(3) [R. Jehudah b. Baba, Tosef. B.K. VIII, 4; cf. however, Tem. 15b and Buchler, Gal. 'Am-ha'ar. p. 191.]

(4) As a goat is prone to pasture anywhere and thus spoil the crops of the public.

(5) [Var. lec., 'R. Simeon Shezuri'.]

(6) Cf. Aboth. IV. 10 and Sanh. I, 1.

(7) Possessing cattle of his own; cf. B.M. 5b.

(8) By taking upon himself not to breed small cattle.

(9) From his heathen relatives; cf. Kid. 17b.

(10) [Tosef. B.K. VIII omits ' Eretz Yisrael'.]

(11) Which are small and harmless.

(12) Tosef. B.K. VIII.

(13) [Harza probably denotes 'digger', and harza 'stinging', v. Lewysohn, Zoologie. p. 94.]

(14) Cf. Naz. 57b.

(15) Who was the wife of R. Huna.

(16) Surely since she has to mind her children she cannot conscientiously guard the cattle. (Tosaf.)

(17) [In 219 C.E. V. Funk, Die Juden in Babylonian, I, note III.]

(18) Lit 'the week of the son', as the circumcision is performed on the eighth day; cf. Lev. XII, 3. [On the term, 'week of the son' v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 246. n. 8.]

(19) I.e., in the case of a first-born who has to be redeemed on the 31st day; cf. Num. XVIII, 16.

(20) For the reason to be stated.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 80b

nor Samuel before R. Assi,[1] nor R. Assi before Rab.[2] They therefore argued who should go in last, [and it was decided that] Samuel should go in last, and that Rab and R. Assi should go in [together]. But why should not either Rab or R. Assi have been last? — Rab [at first] was merely paying a compliment to Samuel,[3] to make up for the [regrettable] occasion when a curse against him[4] , escaped his lips;[5] for that reason Rab offered him precedence.[6] Meanwhile a cat had come along and bitten off the hand of the child. Rab thereupon went out and declared in his discourse: 'It is permissible to kill a cat, and it is in fact a sin to keep it,[7] and the law of robbery[8] does not apply to it, nor that of returning a lost object to its owner.'[9] Since you have stated that it is permissible to kill it, why again state that it is a sin to keep it? — You might perhaps think that though it is permissible to kill it, there is still no sin committed in keeping it; we are therefore told [that this is not so]. I could still ask: Since you have said that the law of robbery[8] does not apply to it, why again state that the law of returning a lost object to its owner does not apply to it?[10] — Said Rabina: This refers to the skin[10] of the cat [where it was found dead]. An objection was raised [from the following]: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: It is permissible to breed village dogs, cats, apes and porcupines, as these help to keep the house clean. [Does this not prove that it is permissible to breed cats?] — There is, however, no contradiction, as the latter teaching refers to black cats, whereas the former deals with white ones.[11] But was not the mischief in the case of Rab done by a black cat? — In that case it was indeed a black cat, but it was the offspring of a white one. But is not this the very case about which Rabina raised a question? For Rabina asked: What should be the law in the case of a black cat which is the offspring of a white one? — The problem raised by Rabina was where the black was the offspring of a white one which was in its turn a descendant of a black cat, whereas the accident in the case of Rab occurred through a black cat which was the offspring of a white one that was similarly the offspring of a white cat.

(Mnemonic: Habad Bih Bahan).[12]

R. Aha b. Papa said in the name of R. Abba b. Papa who said it in the name of R. Adda b. Papa, or, as others read, R. Abba b. Papa said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Papa who said it in the name of R. Aha b. Papa, or as others read it still differently, R. Abba b. Papa said in the name of R. Aha b. papa who said it in the name of R. Hanina b. Papa: 'It is permissible to raise an alarm [at public services][13] even on the Sabbath day for the purpose of relieving the epidemic of itching; if the door to prosperity has been shut to an individual it will not speedily be opened; and when one buys a house in Eretz Yisrael, the deed may be written even on the Sabbath day. An objection was raised [from the following:] 'Regarding any other misfortune[14] that might burst forth upon the community, as e.g. itching. locusts, flies, hornets, mosquitoes, a plague of serpents and scorpions, no alarm was raised by [public service, on the Sabbath] but a cry was raised [by privately reciting prayers]?[15] [Does this not prove that no public prayers are to be held on this score on Sabbath?] — There is no contradiction, as the latter case refers to [the period when the plague is in] the moist stage whereas the former deals with dry itching,[16] as R. Joshua b. Levi said:[17] 'The boils brought upon the Egyptians by the Holy One, blessed be He,[18] were moist within but dry without, as it says 'And it became a boil breaking forth with blains upon man and upon beast.'[18]

What is the meaning of the words, 'if the door to prosperity has been shut to an individual it will not speedily be opened'? — Mar Zutra said: It refers to ordination.[19] R. Ashi said: One who is in disfavour is not readily taken into favour.[20] R. Aha of Difti said: He will never be taken into favour. This, however, is not so; for R. Aha of Difti stated this as a matter of personal experience.[21] 'In the case of him who buys a house in Eretz Yisrael the deed may be written even on the Sabbath day.'[22] You mean to say, on the Sabbath?[23] — It must therefore mean as stated by Raba in the case mentioned there,[24] that a Gentile is asked to do it; so also here a Gentile is asked to do it. For though to ask a Gentile to do some work on the Sabbath is Shebuth,[25] the Rabbis did not maintain this prohibition in this case on account of the welfare of Eretz Yisrael.[26] R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: He who purchases a town in Eretz Yisrael can be compelled to purchase with it also the roads leading to it from all four sides[27] on account of the welfare of Eretz Yisrael.

Our Rabbis taught:[28] Joshua [on his entry into Eretz Yisrael] laid down ten stipulations:

---

(1) On account of seniority.
(2) Whose disciple he was.
(3) Who was the youngest of them.
(4) I.e., Samuel.
(5) For which cf. Shab. 108b.
(6) [But not because he considered Samuel his superior, with the result that, were they to go in together, they would be faced with the dilemma as to which of the two was to enter first; v. Shittah Mekubezeth a.l.]
(7) Cf. Sanh. 15b and supra p. 67.
(8) Lev. XIX. 13.
(9) As required in Deut. XXII,1-3.
(10) That it need not be returned.
(11) Which constitute a danger.
(12) An aid to recollect order of names of the sons of R. Papa that follow in pairs.
(13) On the lines described in Ta'an. 1, 6 and III, 1 etc.
(14) I.e., other than those enumerated in Ta'an. III, 1-8.
(15) Ta'an. 14a.
(16) Which is more dangerous.
(17) Bk. 41a.
(18) Ex. IX, 10.
(19) [Once a man fails in his attempt to secure ordination he cannot obtain it so easily any more.]
(20) Cf. B.B. 12b.
(21) And it should therefore not necessarily be made a general rule.
(22) Cf. Git. 8b.
(23) When it would be a capital offence; cf. Shab. VII. 2.
(24) Shab. 129a and Bez. 22a.
(25) Lit., 'abstention', but which came to denote a matter of mere Rabbinic prohibition on Sabbath and festivals; v. Bez. V, 2.
(26) As they similarly dispensed with Shebuth in the case of Temple service; cf. Pes. 65a.
(27) As transport affects vitally the progress and prosperity of a country.
(28) Cf. 'Er. 17a.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 81a

That cattle be permitted to pasture in woods;[1] that wood may be gathered [by all] in private fields;[1] that grasses may similarly be gathered [by all] in all places, with the exception, however, of a field where fenugrec is growing;[1] that shoots be permitted to be cut off [by all] in all places. with the exception, however, of stumps of olive trees;[1] that a spring emerging [even] for the first time may be used by the townspeople; that it be permitted to fish with an angle in the Sea of Tiberias, provided no sail is spread as this would detain boats [and thus interfere with navigation]; that it be permitted to ease one's self at the back of a fence even in a field full of saffron; that it be permitted [to the public] to use the paths in private fields until the time when the second rain is expected;[2] that it be permitted to turn aside to [private] sidewalks in order to avoid the road-pegs; that one who has lost himself in the vineyards be permitted to cut his way through when going up and cut his way through when coming down;[3] and that a dead body, which anyone finds has to bury should acquire [the right to be buried on] the spot [where found].

'That cattle be permitted to pasture in woods.' R. Papa said: This applies only to small cattle pasturing in big woods[4] for in the case of small cattle pasturing in small woods or big cattle in big forests it would not be permitted,[5] still less big cattle pasturing in small woods.[5]

'That wood may be gathered [by all] in private fields: 'This applies only to [prickly shrubs such as] Spina regia and hollow.[6] For in the case of other kinds of wood it would not be so. Moreover, even regarding Spina Regia and hollow, permission was not given except where they were still attached to the ground, but after they had been already broken off [by the owner] it would not be so.[7] Again, even in the case of shrubs still attached to the soil, permission was not given except while they were still in a wet state, but once they had become dry it would not be so.[7] But in any case it is not permitted to uproot [them].

'That grasses may similarly be gathered [by all] in all places, with the exception, however, of a field where fenugrec is growing.' Does this mean to say that fenugrec derives some benefit from grasses?[8] If so, a contradiction could be pointed out [from the following:] 'If fenugrec is mixed up with other kinds of grasses, the owner need not be compelled to tear it out[9] [for he will do it in any case on account of the fact that the grasses spoil the fenugrec'.[10] Now, does this not prove that grasses are disadvantageous to fenugrec?] — Said R. Jeremiah: There is no contradiction, for while the latter statement refers to the seeds,[11] the former deals with the pods.[12] It is only to the seeds that grasses are disadvantageous as they make them lean, whereas to the pods[13] they are advantageous, for when placed between grasses they get softer. Or if you like I can say that while one statement refers to fenugrec sown for the use of man, the other refers to fenugrec sown for animals, for since it was sown for animals grasses are also required for it. How can we tell [for what it was sown]?[13] — R. Papa said: If made in beds it is sown for man, but if not in beds it is for animals.

'That shoots be permitted to be cut off [by all] in all places, with the exception, however, of stumps of olive trees.' R. Tanhum and R. Barias explained in the name of a certain old man that in the case of an olive tree the size of the length of an egg has to be left over at the bottom; in the case of reeds and vines [it is only] from the knot and upwards[14] [that it is permitted to cut off shoots]; in the case of all other trees [it is permitted only] from the thick parts of the tree but not from the central part of the tree, and only from a new bough that has not yet yielded fruit but not from an old bough which is yielding fruit; again, only from such spots [on the tree] as do not face the sun

---

(1) The reason is given below.

(2) I.e., the seventeenth of Marcheshvan; cf. Ta'an. 6b and Ned VIII,5.

(3) Though damage be done thereby to the vineyard.

(4) Where the trees would thereby not be damaged.

(5) On account of the damage which could be done to the trees.

(6) Or other kinds of thorns and thistles.

(7) As they would then be the exclusive property of the owner.

(8) Which have thus to be preserved.

(9) So as not to transgress Lev. XI. 19: 'thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed'; cf. also Shek. I, 1-2.

(10) Kil. II,5.

(11) Which will be used for sowing purposes.

(12) Which are used as food.
(13) So that the stipulation of Joshua should have practical application where it was sown for the use of man.
(14) Cf. B.B. 80b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 81b

but not from a spot which does face the sun,[1] for so it says 'And for the precious things of the fruits of the sun'.[2]

'That a spring emerging [even] for the first time may be used by the townspeople.' Rabbah son of R. Huna said that the owner[3] is [still] entitled to be paid for its value. The law, however, is not in accordance with this view.

'That it be permitted to fish with an angle in the Sea of Tiberias provided that no sail is spread, as this would detain boats.' It is, however, permitted to fish by means of nets and traps. Our Rabbis taught: 'The tribes stipulated with one another at the very outset that nobody should spread a sail and thus detain boats. It is, however, permitted to fish by means of nets and traps.'[4]

Our Rabbis taught: The Sea of Tiberias was included in the portion of Naphtali. In addition, he received a rope's length of dry land on the southern side to keep nets on, in fulfilment of the verse, Possess thou the sea and the South.[5]

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Anything found on the mountains detached from the soil was considered as belonging to all the tribes,[6] but if still attached [to the ground] as belonging to the particular tribe [in whose territory it was found]. There was, however, no tribe in Israel which had not land[7] both on the hills and in the vale, in the South and in the valley. as stated: Turn you and take your journey and go to the hill — country of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereunto, in the plain, in the hills and in the vale, and in the South, and by the sea side[8] etc., for you can similarly find the same regarding the Canaanites, perizites and Ammonites who were before them, as stated: 'and unto all nigh thereunto',[8] proving that the same applied to those who were nigh thereunto.

'That it be permitted to ease one's self at the back of a fence even though in a field full of saffron.' R. Aha b. Jacob said: This permission was required only for the taking of a pebble from the fence.[9] R. Hisda said: This may be done even on the Sabbath.[10] Mar Zutra the Pious used to take a pebble from a fence and put it back there and tell his servant[11] to go and make it good again.

'That it be permitted to use the paths in private fields until the time when the second rain is expected.' R. papa said that regarding our land [here in Babylon], even after the fall of [mere] dew this would be harmful.

'That it be permitted to turn aside to [private] sidewalks in order to avoid road pegs.' As Samuel and Rab Judah were once walking on the road, Samuel turned aside to the private sidewalk. Rab Judah thereupon said to him: Do the stipulations laid down by Joshua hold good even in Babylon? — He answered him: I say that it applies even outside Eretz Yisrael. As Rabbi and R. Hiyya were once walking on the road they turned aside to the private sidewalks, while R. Judah b. Kenosa went striding[12] along the main road in front of them. Rabbi thereupon said to R. Hiyya. 'Who is that man who wants to show off[13] in front of us?' R. Hiyya answered him: 'He might perhaps be R. Judah b. Kenosa who is my disciple and who does all his deeds out of pure piety.'[14] When they drew near to him they saw him and R. Hiyya said to him: 'Had you not been Judah b. Kenosa, I would have sawed your joints with an iron saw.'[15]

'That one who lost himself in the vineyards should be permitted to cut his way through when going up and cut his way through when coming down.' Our Rabbis taught: He who sees his fellow wandering in the vineyards is permitted to cut his way through when going up and to cut his way through when coming down until he brings him into the town or on to the road; so also one who is lost in the vineyards may cut his way through when going up and cut his way through when coming down until he reaches the town or the road.[16] What is the meaning of 'so also'? [Is the latter case not obvious?][17] — You might think that it is only in the case of a fellow-man wandering, in which case he[18] knows where he is going to, that he may cut his way through, whereas in the case of being lost himself, when he does not know where he is going to, he should not be permitted to cut his way through but should have to walk round about the boundaries. We are therefore told that this is not so — Cannot this permission be derived from the Pentateuch? For it was taught: 'Whence can it be derived that it is obligatory to restore the body of a fellow-man?[19] Because it is said: And thou shalt restore it to him[20] [implying him himself, i.e., his person.'[21] Why then was it necessary for Joshua to stipulate this?][22] — As far as the Pentateuch goes, he[23] would have to remain standing between the boundaries [and walk round about]; it was therefore necessary for Joshua to come and ordain that he be permitted to cut his way through when going up and cut his way through when coming down.

'That a dead body, which anyone finding has to bury, should acquire the [right to be buried on the] spot [where found].' A contradiction could be pointed out [from the following:] If one finds a dead person lying on the road, he may remove him to the right side of the road or to the left side of the road. If on the one side of the road there is an uncultivated field and on the other a fallow field, he should remove him to the uncultivated field;[24] so also where on the one side there is a fallow field but on the other a field with seeds he should remove him to the fallow field.[25] But if both of them are uncultivated, or both of them fallow, or both of them sown he may remove him to any place he likes.[26] [Does this not contradict your statement that a dead person acquires the right to be buried on the spot where he was found?] — Said R. Bibi: The dead person [in the latter case] was lying broadways across the boundary so that since permission had to be given to remove him from that spot[27] he may be removed to any place he prefers.

I would here ask: Are these stipulations[28] only ten [in number?] Are they not eleven? — [The permission] to use the paths in private fields is [implied in] a statement made by Solomon, as taught: If a man's produce has already been removed entirely from the field, and nevertheless he does not allow persons to enter his field, what would people say of him if not, 'What [real] benefit has that owner from his field, for in what way would people do him any harm?' It was regarding such a person that the verse says: While you can be good do not call yourself bad.[29] But is it [anywhere] written:[30] 'While you can be good do not call yourself bad'? — Yes, it is written to a similar effect: Withhold not good from him to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thy hand to do it.[31]

But were there no more stipulations?[32] Was there not the one mentioned by R. Judah? For it was taught: 'When it is the season of removing dung, everybody is entitled to remove his dung into the public ground and heap it up there for the whole period of thirty days so that it may be trodden upon by the feet of men and by the feet of animals; for upon this condition did Joshua transfer the land to Israel as an inheritance.[33] Again, was there not also the one referred to by R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka? For it was taught: R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: It is a stipulation of the Court of Law that the owner of the bees[34] be entitled to go down into his fellow's field and cut off his fellow's bough [upon which his bees have settled] in order to rescue the swarm of his bees while paying only the value of his fellow's bough; it is [similarly] a stipulation of the Court of Law that the owner of wine should pour out his wine [from the flask] so as to save in it the honey of his fellow[35] and recover the value of his wine out of the honey of his fellow; it is [again] a stipulation of the Court of Law that [the owner of a bundle of wood] should remove the wood [from his ass] and load [on his ass] the flax of his fellow [from the back of the ass that fell dead][36] and recover the value of his wood out of the flax of his fellow; for it was upon this stipulation that Joshua transferred the land to Israel for an inheritance.'[37] [Why then were these stipulations not included?]

— Views of individual authorities were not stated [among the stipulations that have unanimous recognition].

---

(1) Such as from the sides of the tree.
(2) Deut. XXXIII, 14.
(3) Of the ground where the spring emerged.
(4) Tosef. B.K. VIII.
(5) Deut. XXXIII. 23.
(6) who had an equal right to the spoil.
(7) Cf. B.B. 122a.
(8) In Deut. 1, 7.
(9) Though it would thereby become impaired.
(10) Cf. Shab. 81.
(11) On a weekday.
(12) Upon the road pegs.
(13) By not taking advantage of the stipulation of Joshua and thus showing himself more scrupulous than required by strict law.
(14) Lit., 'in the name of Heaven', and not to show off.
(15) A metaphor for excommunication.
(16) Tosef. B.M. II.
(17) As it is surely covered by the ruling in the former case.
(18) I.e., the guide.
(19) When in danger, just as it is obligatory to restore him his lost chattels.
(20) Deut. XXII. 2.
(21) Cf. Sanh. 73a.
(22) Seeing that it can be derived from the Pentateuch.
(23) The one who lost his way.
(24) So as to interfere as little as possible with agriculture.
(25) V. p. 463,n.9.
(26) 'Er. 17b.
(27) So as not to cause defilement to all those who pass that way.
(28) Enumerated in the cited Baraitha supra p. 459.
(29) Cf. Ber. 30a.
(30) In Scripture.
(31) Prov. III, 27.
(32) Made by Joshua.
(33) Tosef. B.M. XI; supra 30a.
(34) Which settled upon a neighbour's tree.
(35) Carried by him in a jug which suddenly gave way, and the contents which were much more valuable than wine thus became in danger if being wasted.
(36) And which is thus in danger of being wasted if not rescued in time.
(37) Infra 114b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 82a

But did not R. Abin upon arriving [from Palestine] state on behalf of R. Johanan that the owner of a tree which overhangs a neighbour's field as well as the owner of a tree close to the boundary has to bring the first-fruits [to Jerusalem][1] and read the prescribed text[2] as it was upon this stipulation [that trees might he planted near the boundary of fields and even overhang a neighbour's field] that Joshua transferred the land to Israel[3] for an inheritance.[4] [How then could R. Johanan describe this as a stipulation of Joshua when it was not included in the authoritative text of the Baraitha cited enumerating all the stipulations of Joshua?] — It must therefore be that the Tanna[5] of [the text enumerating] the ten stipulations laid down by Joshua was R. Joshua b. Levi.[6] R. Gebiha of Be Kathil[7] explicitly taught this in the text: 'R. Tanhum and R. Barias stated in the name of a certain sage, who was R. Joshua b. Levi, that ten stipulations were laid down by Joshua.'

The [following] ten enactments were ordained by Ezra: That the law be read [publicly] in the Minhah[8] service on Sabbath; that the law be read [publicly] on Mondays and Thursdays; that Courts be held on Mondays and Thursdays; that clothes be washed on Thursdays; that garlic be eaten on Fridays; that the housewife rise early to bake bread; that a woman must wear a sinnar;[9] that a woman must comb her hair before performing immersion;[10] that pedlars [selling spicery] be allowed to travel about in the towns,[11] He[12] also decreed[13] immersion to be required[10] by those to whom pollution has happened.[14]

'That the law be read [publicly] in the Minhah service on Sabbath:' on account of shopkeepers [who during the weekdays have no time to hear the reading of the Law].

'That the law be read [publicly] on Mondays and Thursdays.' But was this ordained by Ezra? Was this not ordained even before him? For it was taught: 'And they went three days in the wilderness and found no water,[15] upon which those who expound verses metaphorically[16] said: water means nothing but Torah,[17] as it says: Ho, everyone that thirsteth come ye for water.[18] It thus means that as they went three days without Torah they immediately became exhausted. The prophets among them thereupon rose and enacted that they should publicly read the law on Sabbath, make a break on Sunday, read again on Monday, make a break again on Tuesday and Wednesday, read again on Thursday and then make a break on Friday so that they should not be kept for three days without Torah.'[19] — Originally it was ordained that one man should read three verses or that three men should together read three verses, corresponding to priests, Levites and Israelites.[20] Then Ezra came and ordained that three men should be called up to read, and that ten verses should be read, corresponding to ten batlanim.[21]

'That Courts be held on Mondays and Thursdays' — when people are about, as they come to read the Scroll of the Law. 'That clothes be washed on Thursdays' — that the Sabbath[22] may be duly honoured.

'That garlic be eaten on Fridays' — because of the 'Onah.'[23] as it is written: 'That bringeth forth its fruit in its season'[24] and Rab Judah, or as others say R. Nahman, or as still others say R. Kahana, or again as others say R. Johanan, stated that this refers to him who performs his marital duty every Friday night.[25]

Our Rabbis taught: Five things were said of garlic: It satiates, it keeps the body warm, it brightens up the face, it increases semen, and it kills parasites in the bowels. Some say that it fosters love and removes jealousy.

'That a housewife rise early to bake bread'[26] — so that there should be bread for the poor.[27]

'That a woman must wear a sinnar — out of modesty.

'That a woman comb her hair before performing the immersion.' But this is derived from the pentateuch! For it was taught:[28] 'And he shall bathe [eth besaro] his flesh in water[29] [implying] that there should be nothing intervening between the body and the water; "[eth besaro] his flesh", "eth" [including] whatever is attached to his flesh,[30] i.e. the hair.' [Why then had this to be ordained by Ezra?] — It may, however, be said that as far as the Pentateuch goes it would only have to be necessary to see that the hair should not he knotted or that nothing dirty should be there which might intervene,

(1) Cf. Ex. XXIII. 19.
(2) I.e. Deut. XXVI, 5-10, which could he recited only by one who was the sole legitimate owner of both the fruits and the tree and the ground.
(3) And no misappropriation could thus he traced in the produce of such trees.
(4) How then could R. Johanan, who was an Amora, differ from Tannaitie views?
(5) [MSS omit rightly, 'the Tanna.']
(6) [Who was himself an Amoraic sage from whom R. Johanan might have differed in this case as he did on many other occasions, cf. e.g., Ber. 3b and Meg. 27a.]
(7) [Kathil on the Tigris, N. of Bagdad, Obermeycr, op. cit. p 143.]
(8) I.e., afternoon; cf. Ber. IV, 1.
(9) A sort of garment, breeches (Rashi), or belt. The word is of doubtful origin.
(10) In a ritual plunge bath called Mikweh.
(11) Even against the wishes of the townspeople; cf. B.B. 22a.
(12) I.e., Ezra.
(13) Cf. Ber. 22b.
(14) Cf. Lev. XV, 16; Deut. XXIII, 11-12. [For a discussion of the ten enactments of Ezra, v. Hoffmann, Magazin, 1883 , 48ff.]
(15) Ex. XV. 22.
(16) Doreshe Reshumoth; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 712. n. 12.
(17) Cf. supra p. 76.
(18) Isa. LV, 1.
(19) [Why then was it necessary for Ezra to enact this?]
(20) In which groups the people were classed.
(21) The ten persons released from all obligations and thus having leisure to attend to public duties, and to form the necessary quorum for synagogue services; cf. Meg. 1, 3; v. also Meg. 21b.
(22) Cf. Isa. LVIII. 13 and Shab. 119a.
(23) I.e., the duty of marriage; cf. Ex. XXI, 10 and Keth. V, 6.
(24) Ps. I, 3.
(25) Cf. Keth. 62b.
(26) [J. Meg. IV adds 'on Fridays'.]
(27) Cf. Keth. 67b.
(28) 'Er. 4b.
(29) Lev. XIV, 9.
(30) For a similarity v. supra p. 235.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 82b

whereas Ezra came and ordained actual combing.[1]

'That pedlars selling spicery be allowed to travel about in the towns' — for the purpose of providing toilet articles for the women so that they should not be repulsive in the eyes of their husbands.

'He also decreed that immersion was required for those to whom pollution had happened.' Is not this in the pentateuch, as it is written: And if the flow of seed go out front him, then he shall bathe all his flesh in water?[2] — The pentateuchal requirement referred to terumah and sacrifices and he came and decreed that even for [the study of] the words of the Torah [immersion is needed].

Ten special regulations were applied to Jerusalem:[3] That a house sold there should not be liable to become irredeemable;[4] that it should never bring a heifer whose neck is broken;[5] that it could never be made a condemned city;[6] that its houses would not become defiled through leprosy;[7] that neither beams nor balconies should be allowed to project there; that no dunghills should be made there; that no kilns should be kept there; that neither gardens nor orchards should be cultivated there, with the exception, however, of the garden of roses[8] which existed from the days of the former prophets;[9] that no fowls should be reared there, and that no dead person should be kept there over night.[10]

'That a house sold there should not be liable to become irredeemable' — for it is written: Then the house that is in the walled city shall be made sure in perpetuity to him that bought it throughout his generations[11] and as it is maintained[12] that Jerusalem was not divided among the tribes.[13]

'That it should never bring a heifer whose neck is broken' — as it is written: If one be found slain in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee to possess it,[14] and Jerusalem [could not be included as it] was not divided among the tribes.[13]

'That it could never be made a condemned city' — for it is written, [One of] thy cities,[15] and Jerusalem was not divided among the tribes. 'That its houses could not become defiled through leprosy' — for it is written, And I put the plague of leprosy in the house of the land of your possession,[16] and Jerusalem was not divided among the tribes.[13]

'That neither beams nor balconies should be allowed to project' — in order not to form a tent spreading defilement,[17] and not to cause harm to the pilgrims for the festivals.[18]

'That no dunghills be made there' — on account of reptiles.[19]

'That no kilns be kept there' — on account of the smoke.[20]

'That neither gardens nor orchards be cultivated there' — on account of the bad odour [of withered grasses].

'That no fowls be bred there' on account of the sacrifices.

'That no dead person be kept there overnight' — this is known by tradition.

IT IS NOT RIGHT TO BREED PIGS IN ANY PLACE WHATEVER. Our Rabbis taught: When the members of the Hasmonean house were contending with one another, Hyrcanus was within and Aristobulus without [the city wall].[21] [Those who were within] used to let down to the other party every day a basket of denarii, and [in return] cattle were sent up for the regular sacrifices.[22] There was, however, an old man[23] [among the besiegers] who had some knowledge in Grecian Wisdom[24] and who said to them: 'So long as the other party [are allowed to] continue to perform the service of the sacrifices they will not be delivered into your hands.' On the next day when the basket of denarii was let down, a swine was sent up. When the swine reached the centre of the wall it stuck its claws into the wall, and Eretz Yisrael quaked over a distance of four hundred parasangs[25] by four hundred parasangs. It was proclaimed on that occasion: Cursed be the man who would breed swine and cursed be the man who would teach his son Grecian Wisdom. It was concerning this time that we have learnt[26] that the 'Omer[27] was once brought from the gardens of Zarifin and the two loaves[28] from the Valley of En Soker.[29]

But was Grecian Wisdom proscribed? Was it not taught that Rabbi stated: 'Why use the Syriac language in Eretz Yisrael

---

(1) For the sake of absolute certainty.

(2) V. Lev. XV. 16.

(3) V. Yoma 23a; 'Ar. 32b and Tosef. Neg. VI, 2. [According to Krauss, REJ. LIII, 29 ff., some of these regulations relate only to the Temple Mount.]

(4) As should be the case with dwelling houses of a walled city (cf. Lev. XXV, 29-30); but is on the other hand considered as a house of a village which has no wall round about it; (ibid. 31.).
(5) As required in Deut. XXI, 3-4 in the case of a person found slain and it be not known who hath slain him.
(6) Which would he subject to Deut. XIII, 13-18.
(7) Cf. Lev. XIV, 34-53.
(8) Where the Jordan resin grew; cf. Ker. 6a.
(9) [Cf. II Kings XXV, 4; Jer. XXXI, 4; Neh. III, 15. V. Krauss, loc. cit. p. 33.]
(10) Cf. Hag. 26a; v. infra, p. 469.
(11) Lev. XXV. 29-30.
(12) Cf. Yoma 12a.
(13) But was kept in trust for all Israel and could therefore not be subject to a law where absolute private ownership is referred to.
(14) Deut. XXI, 1.
(15) Ibid. XIII, 13.
(16) Lev. XIV, 34.
(17) Cf. Num. XIX, 14.
(18) By the spread of defilement.
(19) Which thrive in dunghills, and as soon as they die they become a source of defilement.
(20) Which would blacken the buildings of the town; cf. B.B. 23a.
(21) [In the parallel passage the roles are reversed, Aristobulus being besieged and Hyrcanus laying the siege; v. Graetz, Geschichte III, p. 710 ff. Cf. Josephus, Ant. XIV, 2,2.]
(22) Cf. Num. XXVIII, 2-4.
(23) [Identified with Antipater, an ally of Hyrcanus, v. Graetz, op. cit. 711.]
(24) [‘Sophistry’. v. Graetz, loc. cit.]
(25) V. Glos.
(26) Men. 64b. [The places are identified respectively with Sarafand near Lydda and Assakar near Nablus.]
(27) Lit., ‘a sheaf’, denoting the public sacrifice of the first-fruits of the harvest described in Lev. XXIII, 10-14.
(28) Cf. ibid. 17.
(29) Sot. 49b and Men. 64b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 83a

[where] either the Holy Tongue or the Greek language [could be employed]?’ And R. Jose said: ‘Why use the Aramaic language in Babylon [where] the Holy Tongue or the Persian language [could be used]?’ — It may, however, be said that the Greek language is one thing and Grecian Wisdom is another. But was Grecian Wisdom proscribed? Did not Rab Judah say that Samuel stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel: ‘[The words] Mine eye affected my soul because of all the daughters of my city[1] [could very well be applied to the] thousand youths who were in my father's house; five hundred of them learned Torah and the other five hundred learned Grecian Wisdom, and out of all of them there remain only I here and the son of my father's brother in Asia’?[2] — It may, however, be said that the family of R. Gamaliel was an exception, as they had associations with the Government, as indeed taught: ‘He who trims the front of his hair[3] in Roman fashion is acting in the ways of the Amorites.’[4] Abtolmus b. Reuben however was permitted to cut his hair in the Gentile fashion as he was in close contact with the Government. So also the members of the family of Rabban Gamaliel were permitted to discuss Grecian Wisdom on account of their having had associations with the Government.

NO MAN SHOULD BREED A DOG UNLESS IT IS ON A CHAIN etc. Our Rabbis taught: No man should breed a dog unless it is kept on a chain. He may, however, breed it in a town adjoining the frontier where he should keep it chained during the daytime and loose it only at night. It was taught: R. Eliezer the Great says that he who breeds dogs is like him who breeds swine. What is the practical bearing of this comparison? — That he[5] be declared cursed.[6] R. Joseph b. Manyumi said in the name of R. Nahman that Babylon was on a par with a town adjoining the frontier.[7] This, however, was interpreted to refer to Nehardea. R. Dostai of Bira[8] expounded: And when it rested, he said, Return O Lord unto the tens of thousands [and] the thousands of Israel.[9] This, [he said,] teaches that the Shechinah[10] does not rest upon Israel if they are less than two thousand plus two tens of thousands.[11] Were therefore the Israelites [to be twenty-two thousand] less one, and there was there among them a pregnant woman thus capable of completing the number, but a dog barked at her and she miscarried, the [dog] would in this case cause the Shechinah to depart from Israel. A certain woman[12] entered a neighbour's house to bake [there bread], and a dog suddenly barked at her, but the owner of the house said to her: Do not be afraid of the dog as its teeth are gone. She, however, said to him: Take thy kindness and throw it on the thorns, for the embryo has already been moved [from its place].

IT IS NOT RIGHT TO PLACE NETS FOR DOVES UNLESS AT A DISTANCE OF THIRTY RIS FROM INHABITED SETTLEMENTS. But do they proceed so far? Did we not learn that a dove-cote must be kept at a distance from the town of fifty cubits?[13] — Abaye said: They certainly fly much further than that, but they eat their fill within fifty cubits.[14] But do they fly only thirty ris and no more? Was it not taught: 'Where there is an inhabited settlement no net must be spread even for a distance of a hundred mil'? — R. Joseph said: The latter statement refers to a settlement of vineyards;[15] Rabbah said that it refers to a settlement of dove-cotes.[15] But why not lay down the prohibition to spread nets on account of the dovecotes themselves?[16] — If you like I can say that they belong to Cutheans,[17] or if you like I can say that they are ownerless, or if you again like I can say that they are his own. [

---

(1) Lam. III, 51.

(2) Sot. 49b and Git. 58a. [This proves that even Grecian Wisdom was not proscribed.]

(3) [Like a fringe on the forehead and lets the curls hang down on the temples (Jast.).]

(4) Which should not be imitated.

(5) Who breeds a dog.

(6) As if he would breed swine.

(7) Cf. 'Er. 45a.

(8) [In Galilee, v. Klein, op. cit., p. 39.]

(9) Num. x, 36; E.V.: unto the many thousands of Israel.

(10) The Divine Presence.

(11) I.e. , twenty-two thousand, comprising the minimum of the plural tens of thousands which is twenty thousand and the minimum of the thousands which is two thousand, cf. also Yeb. 64a.

(12) Cf. Shab. 63a; and supra p. 271.

(13) So that the doves should not consume the produce of the town. (B.B. 11,5.]

(14) On account of which a dove-cote need not be kept away from the town for more than fifty cubits.

(15) Where the doves could thus take rest and fly on to great distances.

(16) Why then base the prohibition upon the proximity of a settlement?

(17) Who did not recognise the necessity of being scrupulous to such an extent and should therefore not be treated better than they treated others: cf. supra p. 211, n. 6. [For a full discussion of the regulations laid down in our Mishnah and developed in the Gemara, as well as their application in the practical life of the Jewish communities in Talmudic times, v. Krauss, REJ, LIII, 14-55.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 83b

CHAPTER VIII

MISHNAH. ONE WHO INJURES A FELLOW MAN BECOMES LIABLE TO HIM FOR FIVE ITEMS: FOR DEPRECIATION, FOR PAIN, FOR HEALING, FOR LOSS OF TIME AND FOR

DEGRADATION. HOW IS IT WITH 'DEPRECIATION'? IF HE PUT OUT HIS EYE, CUT OFF HIS ARM OR BROKE HIS LEG, THE INJURED PERSON IS CONSIDERED AS IF HE WERE A SLAVE BEING SOLD IN THE MARKET PLACE, AND A VALUATION IS MADE AS TO HOW MUCH HE WAS WORTH [PREVIOUSLY]. AND HOW MUCH HE IS WORTH [NOW]. 'PAIN' — IF HE BURNT HIM EITHER WITH A SPIT OR WITH A NAIL, EVEN THOUGH ON HIS [FINGER] NAIL WHICH IS A PLACE WHERE NO BRUISE COULD BE MADE, IT HAS TO BE CALCULATED HOW MUCH A MAN OF EQUAL STANDING WOULD REQUIRE TO BE PAID TO UNDERGO SUCH PAIN. 'HEALING' — IF HE HAS STRUCK HIM, HE IS UNDER OBLIGATION TO PAY MEDICAL EXPENSES. SHOULD ULCERS [MEANWHILE] ARISE ON HIS BODY, IF AS A RESULT OF THE WOUND, THE OFFENDER WOULD BE LIABLE, BUT IF NOT AS A RESULT OF THE WOUND, HE WOULD BE EXEMPT. WHERE THE WOUND WAS HEALED BUT REOPENED, HEALED AGAIN BUT REOPENED, HE WOULD STILL BE UNDER OBLIGATION TO HEAL HIM. IF, HOWEVER, IT HAD COMPLETELY HEALED [BUT HAD SUBSEQUENTLY REOPENED] HE WOULD NO MORE BE UNDER OBLIGATION TO HEAL HIM. 'LOSS OF TIME' — THE INJURED PERSON IS CONSIDERED AS IF HE WERE A WATCHMAN OF CUCUMBER BEDS[1] [SO THAT THE LOSS OF SUCH WAGES[2] SUSTAINED BY HIM DURING THE PERIOD OF ILLNESS MAY BE REIMBURSED TO HIM]. FOR THERE HAS ALREADY BEEN PAID TO HIM THE VALUE OF HIS HAND OR THE VALUE OF HIS LEG [THROUGH WHICH DEPRIVATION HE WOULD NO MORE BE ABLE TO CARRY ON HIS PREVIOUS EMPLOYMENT]. 'DEGRADATION' — ALL TO BE ESTIMATED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE STATUS OF THE OFFENDER AND THE OFFENDED.

GEMARA. Why [pay compensation]? Does the Divine Law not say 'Eye for eye'?[3] Why not take this literally to mean [putting out] the eye [of the offender]? — Let not this enter your mind, since it has been taught: You might think that where he put out his eye, the offender's eye should be put out, or where he cut off his arm, the offender's arm should be cut off, or again where he broke his leg, the offender's leg should be broken. [Not so; for] it is laid down, 'He that smiteth any man. . .' 'And he that smiteth a beast . . .'[4] just as in the case of smiting a beast compensation is to be paid, so also in the case of smiting a man compensation is to be paid.[5] And should this [reason] not satisfy you,[6] note that it is stated, 'Moreover ye shall take no ransom for the life of a murderer, that is guilty of death',[7] implying that it is only for the life of a murderer that you may not take 'satisfaction',[8] whereas you may take 'satisfaction' [even] for the principal limbs, though these cannot be restored.' To what case of 'smiting' does it refer? If to [the Verse] 'And he that killeth a beast, shall make it good: and he that killeth a man, shall be put to death',[9] does not this verse refer to murder?[10] — The quotation was therefore made from this text: And he that smiteth a beast mortally shall make it good: life for life,[11] which comes next to and if a man maim his neighbour: as he hath done so shall it be done to him.[12] But is [the term] 'smiting' mentioned in the latter text?[12] — We speak of the effect of smiting implied in this text and of the effect of smiting implied in the other text: just as smiting mentioned in the case of beast refers to the payment of compensation, so also does smiting in the case of man refer to the payment of compensation. But is it not written: And he that smiteth[13] any man mortally shall surely be put to death[14] [which, on account of the fact that the law of murder is not being dealt with here,[15] surely refers to cases of mere injury and means Retaliation]?[16] — [Even this refers to the payment of] pecuniary compensation. How [do you know that it refers] to pecuniary compensation? Why not say that it really means capital punishment?[17] — Let not this enter your mind; first, because it is compared to the case dealt with in the text, 'He that smiteth[13] a beast mortally shall make it good', and furthermore, because it is written soon after, 'as he hath done so shall it be done to him',[18] thus proving that it means pecuniary compensation. But what is meant by the statement, 'if this reason does not satisfy you'? [Why should it not satisfy you?] — The difficulty which further occurred to the Tanna was as follows: What is your reason for deriving the law of man injuring man from the law of smiting a beast and not from the law governing the case of killing a man [where Retaliation is the rule]? I would answer: It is proper to derive [the law of] injury[18] from

[the law governing another case of] injury,[19] and not to derive [the law of] injury[18] from [the law governing the case of] murder. It could, however, be argued to the contrary; [that it is proper] to derive [the law of injury inflicted upon] man from [another case of] man but not to derive [the law of injury inflicted upon] man from [the case of] beast. This was the point of the statement 'If, however, this reason does not satisfy you.' [The answer is as follows:] 'It is stated: Moreover ye shall take no ransom for the life of a murderer that is guilty of death; but he shall surely be put to death, implying that it was only 'for the life of a murderer' that you may not take ransom whereas you may take ransom [even] for principal limbs though these cannot be restored.' But was the purpose of this [verse], Moreover ye shall take no ransom for the life of a murderer, to exclude the case of principal limbs? Was it not requisite that the Divine Law should state that you should not make him[20] subject to two punishments, i.e. that you should not take from him pecuniary compensation as well as kill him? — This, however, could be derived from the verse, According to his crime,[21] [which implies that] you can make him liable for one crime but cannot make him liable for two crimes.[22] But still was it not requisite that the Divine Law should state that you should not take pecuniary compensation from him and release him from the capital punishment? — If so the Divine Law would have written, 'Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for him who is guilty [and deserving] of death'; why then write 'for the life of a murderer' unless to prove from it that it is only 'for the life of a murderer' that you may not take ransom, whereas you may take ransom [even] for principal limbs though these could not be restored? But since it was written, Moreover ye shall take no ransom [implying the law of pecuniary compensation in the case of mere injury], why do I require [the analogy made between] 'smiting' [in the case of injuring man and] 'smiting' [in the case of injuring beast]? — It may be answered that if [the law would have had to be derived only] from the former text, I might have said that the offender has the option, so that if he wishes he may pay with the loss of his eye or if he desires otherwise he may pay the value of the eye; we are therefore told [that the inference is] from smiting a beast: just as in the case of smiting a beast the offender is liable for pecuniary compensation so also in the case of injuring a man he is liable for pecuniary compensation.

It was taught: R. Dosthai b. Judah says: Eye for eye means pecuniary compensation. You say pecuniary compensation, but perhaps it is not so, but actual retaliation [by putting out an eye] is meant? What then will you say where the eye of one was big and the eye of the other little, for how can I in this case apply the principle of eye for eye? If, however, you say that in such a case pecuniary compensation will have to be taken, did not the Torah state, Ye shall have one manner of law,[23] implying that the manner of law should be the same in all cases? I might rejoin: What is the difficulty even in that case? Why not perhaps say that for eyesight taken away the Divine Law ordered eyesight to be taken away from the offender?[24] For if you will not say this,

---

(1) As even a lame or one-armed person could be employed in this capacity.

(2) But not of the previous employment on account of the reason which follows.

(3) Ex. XXI, 24.

(4) Lev. XXIV; for the exact verse see the discussion that follows.

(5) But no resort to Retaliation.

(6) Lit., 'If it is your desire to say (otherwise).'

(7) Num. XXXV, 31.

(8) I.e., ransom, and thus release him from capital punishment.

(9) Lev. XXIV, 21.

(10) Where retaliation actually applies.

(11) Ibid. 18.

(12) Ibid. 19.

(13) E.V.: 'killeth'.

(14) Ibid. 17.

(15) As follows in the text, ' Breach for breach, eye for eye' etc.

(16) The phrase, 'be put to death', would thus refer exclusively to the limb which has to be sacrificed in retaliation.
(17) As indeed appears from the literal meaning of the text.
(18) Lev. XXIV, 19.
(19) I.e., where Man injured beast.
(20) The murderer.
(21) Deut. XXV, 2.
(22) Cf. Mak. 4b and 13b.
(23) Lev. XXIV, 22.
(24) Without taking into consideration the sizes of the respective eyes.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 84a

how could capital punishment be applied in the case of a dwarf killing a giant or a giant killing a dwarf,[1] seeing that the Torah says, Ye shall have one manner of law, implying that the manner of law should be the same in all cases, unless you say that for a life taken away the Divine Law ordered the life of the murderer to be taken away?[2] Why then not similarly say here too that for eyesight taken away the Divine Law ordered eyesight to be taken away from the offender?

Another [Baraitha] taught: R. Simon b. Yohai says: 'Eye for eye' means pecuniary compensation. You say pecuniary compensation, but perhaps it is not so, but actual retaliation [by putting out an eye] is meant? What then will you say where a blind man put out the eye of another man, or where a cripple cut off the hand of another, or where a lame person broke the leg of another? How can I carry out in this case [the principle of retaliation of] 'eye for eye', seeing that the Torah says, Ye shall have one manner of law, implying that the manner of law should be the same in all cases? I might rejoin: What is the difficulty even in this case? Why not perhaps say that it is only where it is possible [to carry out the principle of retaliation that] it is to be carried out, whereas where it is impossible, it is impossible, and the offender will have to be released altogether? For if you will not say this, what could be done in the case of a person afflicted with a fatal organic disease killing a healthy person?[3] You must therefore admit that it is only where it is possible [to resort to the law of retaliation] that it is resorted to, whereas where it is impossible, it is impossible, and the offender will have to be released.

The School of R. Ishmael taught: Scripture says: So shall it be given to him again.[4] The word 'giving' can apply only to pecuniary compensation. But if so, would the words, As he hath [given a blow that] caused a blemish,[4] similarly refer to money?[5] — It may be replied that at the School of R. Ishmael this text was expounded as a superfluous verse; since it has already been written, And if a man maim his neighbour,' as he hath done so shall it be done to him.[6] Why after this do we require the words, so shall it be given to him again? It must, therefore refer to pecuniary compensation. [But still,] why the words, as he hath [given a blow that] caused a blemish in a man? Since it was necessary to write, so shall it be given to him again,[7] the text also writes, as he hath [given a blow that] caused a blemish in a man.

The School of R. Hiyya taught: Scripture says, Hand in hand,[8] meaning an article which is given from hand to hand, which is of course money. But could you also say the same regarding the [next] words, foot in foot? — It may be replied that at the School of R. Hiyya this text was expounded as a superfluous verse, for it has already been written: Then shall ye do unto him as he had purposed to do unto his brother.[9] If then you assume actual retaliation [for injury], why do I require the words, hand in hand? This shows that it means pecuniary compensation. But still, why the words, foot in foot? — Having written 'hand in hand', the text also wrote 'foot in foot'.[8]

Abbaye said: [The principle of pecuniary compensation] could be derived from the teaching of the School of Hezekiah. For the School of Hesekiah taught: Eye for eye, life for life,[10] but not 'life and eye for eye'. Now if you assume that actual retaliation is meant, it could sometimes happen that eye and life would be taken for eye, as while the offender is being blinded, his soul might depart from him. But what difficulty is this? perhaps what it means is that we have to form an estimate,[11] and only if the offender will be able to stand it will retaliation be adopted, but if he will not be able to stand it, retaliation will not be adopted? And if after we estimate that he would be able to stand it and execute retaliation it so happens that his spirit departs from him, [there is nobody to blame,] as if he dies, let him die. For have we not learnt regarding lashes: 'Where according to estimation he[12] should be able to stand them, but it happened that he died under the hand of the officer of the court, there is exemption [from any blame of manslaughter]'.[13]

R. Zebid said in the name of Raba: Scripture says, Wound for would:[14] This means that compensation is to be made for pain even where Depreciation [is separately compensated].[15] Now, if you assume that actual Retaliation is meant, would it not be that just as the plaintiff suffered pain [through the wound], the offender too would suffer pain through the mere act of retaliation?[16] But what difficulty is this? Why, perhaps, not say that a person who is delicate suffers more pain whereas a person who is not delicate does not suffer [so much] pain, so that the practical result [of the Scriptural inference] would be to pay for the difference [in the pain sustained]!

R. Papa in the name of Raba said: Scripture says, To heal, shall he heal;[17] this means that compensation is to be made for Healing even where Depreciation [is compensated separately]. Now, if you assume that Retaliation is meant, would it not be that just as the plaintiff needed medical attention, the defendant also would surely need medical attention [through the act of retaliation]? But what difficulty is this? Why perhaps not say that there are people whose flesh heals speedily while there are others whose flesh does not heal speedily, so that the practical result [of the Scriptural inference] would be to require payment for the difference in the medical expenses!

R. Ashi said: [The principle of pecuniary compensation] could be derived from [the analogy of the term] 'for' [occurring in connection with Man] with the term 'for' occurring in connection with Cattle. It is written here, 'Eye for eye,' and it is also written there, he shall surely pay ox for ox.[18] [This indicates that] just as in the latter case it is pecuniary compensation that is meant, so also in the former case it means pecuniary compensation. But what ground have you for comparing the term 'for' with 'for' [mentioned in connection] with cattle, rather than with the 'for' [mentioned in connection] with [the killing of] man, as it is written, thou shalt give life for life,[19] so that, just as in the case of murder it is actual Retaliation, so also here it means actual Retaliation? — It may be answered that it is more logical to infer [the law governing] injury from [the law governing another case of] injury[18] than to derive [the law of] injury from [the law applicable in the case of] murder.[19] But why not say on the contrary, that it is more logical to derive [the law applying to] Man from [a law which similarly applies to] Man[19] than to derive [the law applying to] Man from [that applying to] Cattle? — R. Ashi therefore said: It is from the words for he hath humbled her,[20] that [the legal implication of 'eye for eye'] could be derived by analogy, as [the law in the case of] Man is thus derived from [a law which is similarly applicable to] Man, and the case of injury from [a similar case of] injury.

It was taught: R. Eliezer said: Eye for eye literally refers to the eye [of the offender]. Literally, you say? Could R. Eliezer be against all those Tannaim [enumerated above]?[21] — Raba thereupon said: it only means to say that the injured person would not be valued as if he were a slave.[22] Said Abaye to him: How else could he be valued? As a freeman? Could the bodily value of a freeman be ascertained by itself? — R. Ashi therefore said: It means to say that the valuation will be made not of [the eye of] the injured person but of [that of] the offender.[23]

An ass once bit off the hand of a child. When the case was brought before R. Papa b. Samuel he said [to the sheriffs of the court], 'Go forth and ascertain the value of the Four items.'[24] Said Raba to him: Have we not learnt Five [items]? — He replied: I did not include Depreciation. Said Abaye to him: Was not the damage in this case done by an ass, and in the case of an ass [injuring even man] there is no payment except for Depreciation?[25] — He therefore ordered [the sheriffs], 'Go forth and make valuation of the Depreciation.' But has not the injured person to be valued as if he were a slave? — He therefore said to them, 'Go forth and value the child as if it were a slave.' But the father of the child thereupon said, 'I do not want [this method of valuation], as this procedure is degrading.' They, however, said to him, 'What right have you to deprive the child of the payment which would belong to it?'[26] He replied, 'When it comes of age I will reimburse it out of my own.

An ox once chewed the hand of a child. When the case was brought before Raba, he said [to the sheriffs of the court], 'Go forth and value the child as if it were a slave.' They, however, said to him, 'Did not the Master [himself] say that payment for which the injured party would have to be valued as if he were a slave,[27] cannot be collected in Babylon?'[28] — He replied, 'My order would surely have no application except in case of the plaintiff becoming possessed of property belonging to the defendant.'[29] Raba thus follows his own principle, for Raba said: Payment for damage done to chattel by Cattle[30] or for damage done to chattel by Man can be collected even in Babylon,[31] whereas payment for injuries done to man by Man or for injuries done to man by Cattle cannot be collected in Babylon. Now, what special reason is there why payment for injuries done to man by Cattle cannot [be collected in Babylon] if not because it is requisite [in these cases that the judges be termed] Elohim,[32] [a designation] which is lacking [in Babylon]? Why then should the same not be also regarding payment for [damage done] to chattel by Cattle or to chattel by Man, where there is similarly

---

(1) Where the bodies of the murderer and the murdered are not alike.

(2) Without considering the weights and sizes of the respective bodies.

(3) In which case the murderer could not be convicted by the testimony of witnesses; v. Sanh. 78a.

(4) Lev. XXIV. 20.

(5) Which could of course not be maintained.

(6) Ibid. 19.

(7) To indicate that pecuniary compensation is to be paid.

(8) Deut. XIX, 21. (E.V.: Hand for hand, foot for foot.)

(9) Ibid. 19.

(10) Ex. XXI, 24.

(11) Whether the offender would stand the operation or not.

(12) Who is subject to the thirty-nine lashes for having transgressed a negative commandment.

(13) Mak. III. 14.

(14) Ex. XXI, 25.

(15) V. supra 26b.

(16) How then could there he extra compensation for pain?

(17) Ex. XXI, 19. (E.V.: shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.)

(18) Ibid. 36.

(19) Ibid. 23.

(20) Deut.XXII, 29.

(21) Proving against Retaliation.

(22) In the manner described supra p. 473.

(23) As the pecuniary compensation in this case is a substitution for Retaliation.

(24) Enumerated supra p. 473.

(25) V. supra 26a.

(26) Cf, infra 87b.

(27) I.e., where the damages could otherwise not be ascertained.

(28) Because the judges there have not been ordained as Mumhe (v. Glos.) who alone were referred to by the Scriptural term Elohim standing for 'judges' as in Ex. XXI, 6 and XXII, 7-8, and who alone were qualified to administer penal justice; cf. Sanh. 2b, 5a, and 14a and supra p. 144.

(29) Cf. supra p. 67.

(30) Lit., 'ox'.

(31) As these matters are of a purely civil nature and of frequent occurrence, as brought out by the discussion which follows.

(32) As in Ex. XXI, 6 and XXII, 7-8.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 84b

required the designation of Elohim which is lacking [in Babylon]? But if on the other hand the difference in the case of chattel [damaged] by Cattle or chattel [damaged] by Man is because we [in Babylon] are acting merely as the agents [of the mumhin[1] judges in Eretz Yisrael] as is the practice with matters of admittances and loans,[2] why then in the case of man [injured] by Man or man [injured] by Cattle should we similarly not act as their agents as is indeed the practice with matters of admittances and loans?[2] — It may, however, be said that we act as their agents only in regard to a matter of payment which we can fix definitely, whereas in a matter of payment which we are not able to fix definitely [but which requires valuation] we do not act as their agents. But I might object that [payment for damage done] to chattel by Cattle or to chattel by Man we are similarly not able to fix definitely, but we have to say, 'Go out and see at what price an ox is sold on the market place.' Why then in the case of man [injured] by Man, or man [injured] by Cattle should you not similarly say, 'Go out and see at what price slaves are sold on the market place'? Moreover, why in the case of double payment[3] and four-fold or five-fold payment[4] which can be fixed precisely should we not act as their agents?[5] — It may, however, be said that we may act as their agents only in matters of civil liability, whereas in matters of a penal nature[6] we cannot act as their agents. But why then regarding payment [for an injury done] to man by Man which is of a civil nature should we not act as their agents? — We can act as their agents only in a matter of frequent occurrence, whereas in the case of man injured by Man which is not of frequent occurrence we cannot act as their agents. But why regarding Degradation,[7] which is of frequent occurrence, should we not act as their agents? — It may indeed be said that this is really the case, for R. Papa ordered four hundred zuz to be paid for Degradation. But this order of R. Papa is no precedents for when R. Hisda sent to consult R. Nahman [in a certain case] did not the latter send back word, 'Hisda, Hisda, are you really prepared to order payment of fines in Babylon?'[8] — It must therefore be said that we can act as their agents only in a matter which is of frequent occurrence and where actual monetary loss is involved,[9] whereas in a matter of frequent occurrence but where no actual monetary loss is involved, or again in a matter not of frequent occurrence though where monetary loss is involved we cannot act as their agents. It thus follows that in the case of man [injured] by Man, though there is there actual monetary loss, yet since it is not of frequent occurrence we cannot act as their agents, and similarly in respect of Degradation, though it is of frequent occurrence, since it involves no actual monetary loss, we cannot act as their agents.

Is payment for damage done to chattel by Cattle really recoverable in Babylon? Has not Raba said: 'If Cattle does damage, no payment will be collected in Babylon'?[10] Now, to whom was damage done [in this case stated by Raba]? If we say to man, why then only in the case of Cattle injuring man?[11] Is it not the fact that even in the case of Man injuring man[12] payment will not be collected in Babylon? It must therefore surely refer to a case where damage was done to chattel and it was nevertheless laid down that no payment would be collected in Babylon![13] — It may, however, be said that that statement referred to Tam,[14] whereas this statement deals with Mu'ad.[15] But did Raba not say that there could be no case of Mu'ad[16] in Babylon? — It may, however, be said that where an ox was declared Mu'ad there [in Eretz Yisrael][17] and brought over here [in Babylon, there could be a case of Mu'ad even in Babylon] — But surely this[18] is a matter of no frequent occurrence, and have you not stated that in a matter not of frequent occurrence we cannot act as their agents? — [A case of Mu'ad could arise even in Babylon] where the Rabbis of Eretz Yisrael came to Babylon and declared the ox Mu'ad here. But still, this also is surely a matter of no frequent occurrence,[19] and have you not stated that in a matter not of frequent occurrence we cannot act as their agents? — Raba must therefore have made his statement [that payment will be collected even in Babylon where chattel was damaged by Cattle] with reference to Tooth and Foot which are Mu'ad ab initio.

PAIN: — IF HE BURNT HIM EITHER WITH A SPIT OR WITH A NAIL, EVEN THOUGH ON HIS [FINGER] NAIL WHICH IS A PLACE WHERE NO BRUISE COULD BE MADE etc. Would Pain be compensated even in a case where no depreciation was thereby caused? Who was the Tanna [that maintains such a view]?Raba replied: He was Ben ‘Azzai, as taught: Rabbi said that ‘burning’[20] without bruising is mentioned at the outset, whereas Ben ‘Azzai said that [it is with] bruising [that it] is mentioned at the outset. What is the point at issue between them? Rabbi holds that as ‘burning’ implies even without a bruise, the Divine Law had to insert ‘bruise’,[21] to indicate that it is only where the burning caused a bruise that there would be liability,[22] but if otherwise this would not be so,[23] whereas Ben ‘Azzai maintained that as ‘burning’ [by itself] implied a bruise, the Divine Law had to insert ‘bruise’ to indicate that ‘burning’ meant even without a bruise.[24] R. Papa demurred: On the contrary, it is surely the reverse that stands to reason:[25] Rabbi who said that ‘burning’, [without bruising] is mentioned at the outset holds that as ‘burning,’ implies also a bruise, the Divine Law inserted ‘bruise’ to indicate that ‘burning,’ meant even without a bruise,[26] whereas Ben ‘Azzai who said that [it was] with bruising [that it] was mentioned at the outset maintains that as ‘burning’ implies even without a bruise, the Divine Law purposely inserted ‘bruise’ to indicate that it was only where the ‘burning’ has caused a bruise that there will be liability, but if otherwise this would not be so; for in this way they[27] would have referred in their statements to the law as it stands now in its final form. Or, alternatively, it may be said that both held that ‘burning’ implies both with a bruise and without a bruise, and here

---

(1) V. Glos. s.v. Mumhe.

(2) For which cf. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 4, n. 3.

(3) For theft.

(4) For having slaughtered or sold the stolen sheep and ox respectively.

(5) Why then should these not be adjudicated and collected in Babylon?

(6) As is the case with double payment and four-fold or five-fold payment.

(7) [Omitting with MS.M. ‘blemish’ paid in case of rape, and occurring in cur. edd.]

(8) Cf. supra 27b.

(9) Excluding thus a loss of mere prospective profits.

(10) V. supra p. 481, n. 5.

(11) Which is of no frequent occurrence at all.

(12) Which is of slightly more frequent occurrence.

(13) This contradicts the statement made by the same Raba (supra p. 481) that payment for damage done to chattel by Cattle will be collected even in Babylon.

(14) In which case the payment is of a penal nature (as decided supra p. 67), which cannot be collected in Babylon.

(15) Where the payment is of a strictly civil nature, and accordingly collected even in Babylon.

(16) Regarding damage done by Horn, for since for the first three times of goring no penalty could be imposed in Babylon, the ox could never be declared Mu'ad.

(17) Where the judges are Mumhin and thus qualified to administer also penal justice.

(18) I.e., to bring over an ox already declared Mu'ad in Eretz Yisrael to Babylon.

(19) Cf. Keth. 110b.

(20) Ex. XXI, 25.

(21) Ibid.

(22) For the payment of Pain.

(23) I.e., Pain would not be compensated since no depreciation was thereby caused.

(24) Pain would therefore even in this case be compensated in accordance with Ben ‘Azzai who could thus be considered to have been the Tanna of the Mishnaic ruling.

(25) That the Tanna of the Mishnaic ruling was most probably Rabbi and not his opponent, and moreover the statements made by Rabbi and Ben ‘Azzai should be taken to give the final implication of the law and not as it would have been on first thoughts.
(26) So that Pain will be paid even in this case according to Rabbi who was the Tanna of the Mishnaic ruling.
(27) I.e., Rabbi and Ben ‘Azzai.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 85a

they were differing on the question of a generalisation and a specification placed at a distance from each other,[1] Rabbi maintaining that in such a case the principle of a generalisation followed by a specification does not apply,[2] whereas Ben ‘Azzai maintained that the principle of a generalisation followed by a specification does apply.[3] And should you ask why, according to Rabbi, was it necessary to insert ‘bruise’,[4] [the answer would be that it was necessary to impose the payment of] additional money.[5] IT HAS TO BE CALCULATED HOW MUCH A MAN OF EQUAL STANDING WOULD REQUIRE TO BE PAID TO UNDERGO SUCH PAIN. But how is pain calculated in a case where Depreciation [also has to be paid]?[6] — The father of Samuel[7] replied: We have to estimate how much a man would require to be paid to have his arm cut off. To have his arm cut off? Would this involve only Pain and not also all the Five Items?[8] Moreover, are we dealing with fools [who would consent for any amount to have their arm cut off]? — It must therefore refer to the cutting off of a mutilated arm.[9] But even [if the calculation be made on the basis of] a mutilated arm, would it amount only to Pain and not also to Pain plus Degradation, as it is surely a humiliation that a part of the body should be taken away and thrown to dogs? — It must therefore mean that we estimate how much a man whose arm had by a written decree of the Government to be taken off by means of a drug would require that it should be cut off by means of a sword. But I might say that even in such a case no man would take anything [at all] to hurt himself [so much]? — It must therefore mean that we have to estimate how much a man whose arm had by a written decree of the Government to be cut off by means of a sword would be prepared to pay that it might be taken off by means of a drug. But if so, instead of TO BE PAID should it not be written ‘to pay’? — Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua: It means that payment to the plaintiff will have to be made by the offender to the extent of the amount which the person sentenced would have been prepared to pay.

‘HEALING’: — IF HE HAS STRUCK HIM HE IS UNDER OBLIGATION TO PAY MEDICAL EXPENSES etc. Our Rabbis taught: Should ulcers grow on his body as a result of the wound and[10] the wound break open again, he has still to heal him and is liable to pay him for Loss of Time, but if it was not caused through the wound he has not to heal him and need not pay him for Loss of Time. R. Judah, however, said that even if it was caused through the wound, though he has to heal him, he has not to pay him for Loss of Time. The Sages said: The Loss of Time and Healing [are mentioned together in Scripture:][11] Wherever there is liability for Loss of Time there is liability for Healing but wherever there is no liability for Loss of Time there is no liability for Healing. In regard to what principle do they[12] differ? — Rabbah said: ‘I found the Rabbis at the School of Rab sitting and saying[13] that the question whether [or not] a wound may be bandaged[14] [by the injured person] was the point at issue. The Rabbis[15] maintained that a wound may be bandaged, whereas R. Judah maintained that a wound may not be bandaged, so that [it was only] for Healing of which there is a double mention in Scripture[16] that there is liability,[17] but for Loss of Time of which there is no double mention in Scripture there is no liability. I, however, said to them that if a wound may not be bandaged there would be no liability even for Healing.[18] We must therefore say that all are agreed that a wound may be bandaged, but not too much; R. Judah held that since it may not be bandaged too much [it is only] for Healing of which there is a double mention in Scripture that there will be liability, but for Loss of Time of which there is no double mention in Scripture there will be no liability, whereas the Rabbis maintained that since Scripture made a double mention of healing there will be liability also for Loss of Time which is compared to Healing. R. Judah, however, maintained that there will be no liability for Loss of Time as Scripture excepted this by [the term] ‘only’;[11] to which the Rabbis[19] might rejoin that 'only' [was intended to exclude the case] where the ulcers that grew were not caused by the wound. But according to the Rabbis mentioned last[20] who stated that whenever there is liability for Loss of Time there is liability for Healing, whereas where there is no liability for loss of Time there could be no liability for Healing — why do I require the double mention of Healing? — This was necessary for the lesson enunciated by the School of R. Ishmael, as taught: 'The School of R. Ishmael taught: [The words] "And to heal he shall heal''[21] [are the source] whence it can be derived that authorisation was granted [by God] to the medical man to heal.'[22]

Our Rabbis taught: Whence can we learn that where ulcers have grown on account of the wound and[23] the wound breaks open again, the offender would still be liable to heal it and also pay him for [the additional] Loss of Time? Because it says: Only he shall pay for the loss of his time and to heal he shall heal.[24] [That being so, I might say] that this is so even where the ulcers were not caused by the wound. It therefore says further 'only'. R. Jose b. Judah, however, said that even where they were caused by the wound he would be exempt, since it says 'only'. Some say that [the view of R. Jose that] 'even where they were caused by the wound he would be exempt' means altogether from any [liability whatsoever],[25] which is also the view of the Rabbis mentioned last. But others say that even where they were caused by the wound he would be exempt means only from paying for additional Loss of Time, though he would be liable for Healing. With whom [would R. Jose b. Judah then be concurring in his statement]? With his own father.[26]

The Master stated: '[In that case I might say] that this is so even where the ulcers were not caused by the wound. It therefore says further "only".' But is a text necessary to teach [that there is exemption] in the case where they were caused not by the wound?[27] — It may be replied that what is meant by 'caused not by the wound' is as taught: 'If the injured person disobeyed his medical advice and ate honey or any other sort of sweet things, though honey and any other sort of sweetness are harmful to a wound, and the wound in consequence became gargutani [scabby], it might have been said that the offender should still be liable to [continue to] heal him. To rule out this idea it says "only".'[28] What is the meaning of gargutani? — Abaye said: A rough seam.[29] How can it be cured? — By aloes, wax and resin.

If the offender says to the injured person: 'I can personally act as your healer',[30] the other party can retort 'You are in my eyes like a lurking lion.'[31] So also if the offender says to him 'I will bring you a physician who will heal you for nothing', he might object, saying 'A physician who heals for nothing is worth nothing.' Again, if he says to him 'I will bring you a physician from a distance', he might say to him, 'If the physician is a long way off, the eye will be blind [before he arrives].'[32] If, on the other hand, the injured person says to the offender, 'Give the money to me personally as I will cure myself', he might retort 'You might neglect yourself and thus get from me too much.' Even if the injured person says to him, 'Make it a fixed and definite sum', he might object and say, 'There is all the more danger that you might neglect yourself [and thus remain a cripple], and I will consequently be called "A harmful ox."'

A Tanna taught: 'All [the Four Items][33] will be paid [even] in the case where Depreciation [is paid independently].' Whence can this ruling be deduced? — Said R. Zebid in the name of Raba: Scripture says: Wound for wound,[34] to indicate the payment of pain even in the case where Depreciation [is paid independently].[35] But is not this verse required

---

(1) Such as here the term 'hurts' which is a generalisation as it implies all kinds of burning whether with a bruise or without a bruise, and the term 'bruise' which specifies an injury with a bruise, are separated from each other by the intervening clause 'wound for wound'.

(2) To render the generalisation altogether ineffective; cf supra p. 371.

(3) Even in such a case.

(4) Since the term 'burning' is a generalisation and by itself implies both with a bruise and without a bruise.

(5) I.e., for Depreciation as explained by Rashi, or for the Pain where the burning left a mark and thus aggravated the ill feeling (Tosaf).
(6) Such as where an arm was cut off and Depreciation had already been paid.
(7) Abba b. Abba.
(8) Whereas the problem raised deals with a case where the other items have already been paid for.
(9) Which is still attached to the body but unable to perform any work.
(10) [Maim. Yad, Hobel, II, 19 reads 'or'.]
(11) Ex. XXI, 19.
(12) I.e., R. Judah and the other Rabbis.
(13) In the name of Rab; cf. Suk. 17a.
(14) To prevent the cold from penetrating the wound though the bandage may cause swelling through excessive heat.
(15) In opposing R. Judah.
(16) Ex. XXI, 19 lit., 'to heal he shall heal'.
(17) Though the plaintiff had no right to bandage the wound which caused the ulcers to grow.
(18) Since the plaintiff would be to blame for the ulcer that grew through the bandage if he had no right to put it on.
(19) I.e., the first Tanna.
(20) Under the name of Sages.
(21) Cf. p. 487, n. 6.
(22) And it is not regarded as 'flying in the face of Heaven'; v. Ber. 60a.
(23) V. p. 486, n. 5.
(24) Ex. XXI, 19.
(25) Even from Healing.
(26) I.e., R. Judah who orders payment for Healing but not for Loss of Time.
(27) Why indeed would liability have been suggested?
(28) Implying that the liability is qualified and thus excepted in such and similar cases.
(29) Rashi: 'wild flesh'.
(30) And need thus not employ a medical man.
(31) I.e., 'I am not prepared to trust you'; cf. B.M. 101; B.B. 168a.
(32) [So S. Strashun; Rashi: 'If the physician is from far he might blind the eye'; others: 'A physician from afar has a blind eye'. i.e., he is little concerned about the fate of his patient.]
(33) I.e., Pain, Healing, Loss of Time, and Degradation.
(34) Ex. XXI, 25.
(35) Supra 26b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 85b

to extend liability [for Depreciation] to the case of inadvertence equally with that of willfulness, and to the case of compulsion equally with that of willingness? — If so [that it was required only for such a rule] Scripture would have said 'Wound in the case of wound'; why [say] '. . . for wound', unless to indicate that both inferences are to be made from it?[1] R. Papa said in the name of Raba: Scripture says And to heal shall he heal,[2] [thus enjoining] payment for Healing even in the case where Depreciation is paid independently. But is not that verse required for the lesson taught at the School of R. Ishmael for it was indeed taught at the School of R. Ishmael that [the text] 'And to heal he shall heal' [is the source] whence it is derived that authorisation was granted [by God] to the medical man to heal?[3] — If so [that it was to be utilised solely for that implication] Scripture would have said, 'Let the physician cause him to be healed' — This shows that payment for Healing should be made even in the case where Depreciation [is paid independently]. But still, is not the text required as said above to provide a double mention in respect of Healing? — If so, Scripture should have said either 'to cause to heal [and] to cause to heal'[4] or 'he shall cause to heal [and] he shall cause to heal.[5] Why say 'and to heal he shall heal'[6] unless to prove that payment should be made for Healing even in the case where Deprecation [is paid independently].

From this discussion it would appear that a case could arise where the Four Items would be paid even where no Depreciation was caused. But how could such a case be found where no Depreciation was caused? — Regarding Pain it was stated: 'PAIN': — IF HE BURNT HIM EITHER WITH A SPIT OR WITH A NAIL, EVEN ON HIS [FINGER] NAIL WHICH IS A PLACE WHERE NO BRUISE COULD BE MADE, Healing could apply in a case where one had been suffering from some wound which was being healed up, but the offender put on the wound a very strong ointment which made the skin look white [like that of a leper] so that other ointments have to be put on to enable him to regain the natural colour of the skin — Loss of Time [without Depreciation could occur] where the offender [wrongfully] locked him up in a room and thus kept him idle. Degradation [could apply] where he spat on his face.

'LOSS OF TIME': — THE INJURED PERSON IS CONSIDERED AS IF HE WERE A WATCHMAN OF CUCUMBER BEDS. Our Rabbis taught: '[In the case of assessing] Loss of Time, the injured person is considered as if he would have been a watchman of cucumbers. You might say that the requirements of justice suffer thereby, since when he was well[7] he would surely not necessarily have worked for the wages of a watchman of cucumber beds but might have carried buckets of water and been paid accordingly, or have acted as a messenger and been paid accordingly.[8] But in truth the requirements of justice do not suffer, for he has already been paid for the value of his hand or for the value of his leg.[9]

Raba said: If he cut off [another's] arm he must pay him for the value of the arm, and as to Loss of Time,[10] the injured person is to be considered as if he were a watchman of cucumber beds; so also if he broke [the other's] leg, he must pay him for the value of the leg, and as to Loss of Time the injured person is to be considered as if he were a door-keeper; if he put out [another's] eye he must pay him for the value of his eye, and as to Loss of Time the injured person is to be considered as if he were grinding in the mill; but if he made [the other] deaf, he must pay for the value of the whole of him.[11]

Raba asked: If he had cut off [another man's] arm and before any appraisement had been made he also broke his leg, and again before any appraisement had been made he put out his eye, and again before any appraisement had been made he made him at last deaf, what would be the law? Shall we say that since no valuation has yet been made one valuation would be enough, so that he would have to pay him altogether for the value of the whole of him, or shall perhaps each occurrence be appraised by itself and paid for accordingly? The practical difference would be whether he would have to pay for Pain and Degradation of each occurrence separately. It is true that he would not have to pay for Depreciation, Healing and Loss of Time regarding each occurrence separately, the reason being that since he has to pay him for the whole of him the injured person is considered as if killed altogether, and there could surely be made no more payment than for the value of the whole of him; but in respect of Pain and Degradation the payment should be made for each occurrence separately, as he surely suffered pain and degradation on each occasion separately. If, however, you find it [more correct] to say that since no appraisement had been yet made he can pay him for the value of the whole of him altogether, what would be the law where separate appraisements were made? Shall we say that since separate valuations were made the payment should be for each occurrence by itself, or since the payment had not yet been made he has perhaps to pay him for the value of the whole of him? This must remain undecided.

Rabbah asked: What would be the law regarding Loss of Time that renders the injured person of less value [for the time being]. How could we give an example? For instance, where he struck him on his arm and the arm was broken but will ultimately recover fully.[12] What would be the legal position?[13] [Shall we say that] since it will ultimately recover fully he need not pay him [for the value of the arm], or perhaps [not so], since for the time being he diminished his value? — Come and hear:[14] If one strikes his father and his mother without making on them a bruise,[15] or injures another man on the Day of Atonement,[16]

---

(1) Ibid.

(2) Ex. XXI, 19. [The emphasis indicates that this payment had to be made in all circumstances.]

(3) V. supra p. 488.

(4) I.e., a repetition of the infinitive.

(5) I.e., a repetition of the verb in the finite mood.

(6) I.e., on one occasion the verb is in the infinitive and on the other in the finite mood.

(7) Cf. Rashi; but also Tosaf. a.l.

(8) Why then not pay him for Loss of Time in accordance with the proper wage?

(9) In the way of Depreciation, and could in fact no more work in his previous employment but in a different capacity such as a watchman of cucumbers or a doorkeeper.

(10) During the days of illness when he is totally unable to do any work.

(11) As by having been made deaf he is unfit to do anything.

(12) In which case the depreciation is but temporary.

(13) Regarding the payment for Depreciation.

(14) Infra p. 87a.

(15) In which case the capital offence of Ex. XXI, 25 has not been committed; v. Sanh. 84b.

(16) The violation of which entails no capital punishment at the hands of a court of law; cf. Lev. XXIII, 30 and Ker. I,1. Again, though lashes could be involved in this case in accordance with Mak. III, 2, the civil liability holds good as supra p. 407.

he is liable for all of the Five Items. Now, how are we to picture no bruise being made [in such a case]? Does this not mean, e.g., where he struck him on his arm which will ultimately recover[1] and it is nevertheless stated that he 'is liable for all of the Five Items'?[2] — It may, however, be said that we are dealing here with a case where e.g.,he made him deaf[3] without making a bruise on him. But did Rabbah not say[4] that he who makes his father deaf is subject to be executed,[5] for it is impossible to cause deafness without first making a bruise through which a drop of blood falls into the ear?[6] — It must therefore be said that we are dealing here with a case where e.g. he shaved him [against his will] — But will not the hair grow again in the case of shaving? And that is the very question propounded.[7] — It may, however, be said that we are dealing here with a case where e.g. he smeared nasha[8] over it so that no hair will ever grow there again. Pain [in such a case should similarly be paid] where he had scratches on his head and thus suffered on account of the sores. Healing [should similarly be paid] as it requires curing. Loss of Time would be where he was a dancer in wine houses and has to make gestures by moving his head and cannot do so [now] on account of these scratches.[9] Degradation [should certainly be paid], for there could hardly be a case of greater degradation.

But this matter which was doubtful to Rabbah was quite certain to Abaye taking one view, and to Raba taking the opposite view. For it was stated: If he struck him on his arm and the arm was broken but so that it would ultimately recover completely, Abaye said that he must pay for General Loss of Time[10] plus Particular Loss of time, whereas Raba said that he will not have to pay him anything but for the amount of the Loss of Time[11] for each day [until he recovers].

It was stated: If a man cuts off the arm of a Hebrew servant of another, Abaye said that he will have to pay the servant for General Loss of Time, and the master for Particular Loss of Time, whereas Raba said that the whole payment should be given to the servant[12] who would have to [invest it and] purchase real property whose produce would be enjoyed by the master. There is no question that where the servant became [through the injury] depreciated in his personal value while no loss was caused so far as the master was concerned, as for instance, where the offender split the top of the servant's ear or the top of his nostrils,[13] the whole payment would go to the servant himself. It was only where the depreciation affected the master [also][14] that Abaye and Raba differ. 'DEGRADATION': — ALL TO BE ESTIMATED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE STATUS OF THE OFFENDER AND THE OFFENDED. May we say that our Mishnah is in agreement neither with R. Meir nor with R. Judah but with R. Simeon? For it was taught: 'All [sorts of injured persons] should be considered as if they were freemen who have become impoverished since they are all the children of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob;[15] this is the view of R. Meir. R. Judah says that [Degradation in the case of] the eminent man [will be estimated] in accordance with his eminence, [whereas in the case of] the insignificant man [it will be estimated] in accordance with his insignificance. R. Simeon says that wealthy persons will be considered merely as if they were freemen who have become impoverished, whereas the poor will all be put on the level of the least among them.[16] Now, in accordance with whom is our Mishnah? It could not be in accordance with R. Meir, for the Mishnah states that all are to be estimated in accordance with the status of the offender and the offended, whereas according to R. Meir all [sorts of persons] are treated alike. It could similarly not be in accordance with R. Judah, for the Mishnah [subsequently] states[17] that he who insults even a blind person is liable, whereas R. Judah[18] says that a blind person is not subject to the law of Degradation. Must the Mishnah therefore not be in accordance with R. Simeon?[19] — You may say that they are [even] in accordance with R. Judah. For the statement made by R. Judah that a blind person is not subject to the law of Degradation means that no payment will be exacted from him [where he insulted others], whereas when it comes to paying him [for Degradation where he was insulted by others], We would surely order that he be paid. But since it was stated in the concluding clause 'If he insulted a person who was sleeping he would be liable [to pay for Degradation], whereas if a person who was asleep insulted others he would be exempt', and no statement was made to the effect that a blind person insulting others should be exempt, it surely implied that in the case of a blind person[20] there was no difference whether he was insulted by others or whether he insulted others, [as in all cases the law of Degradation would apply]![21] — It must therefore be considered as proved that the Mishnaic statements were in accordance with R. Simeon.

Who was the Tanna for what our Rabbis taught: If he intended to insult a katon[22] but insulted [by accident] a gadol[23] he would have to pay the gadol the amount due for the degradation of the katon, and so also where he intended to insult a slave but [by accident] insulted a freeman he would have to pay the freeman the amount due for the degradation of the slave? According to whom [is this teaching]? It is in agreement neither with R. Meir nor with R. Judah nor even with R. Simeon, it being assumed that katon meant 'small in possessions' and gadol [similarly meant] 'great in possessions'. It could thus hardly be in accordance with R. Meir, for he said that all classes of people are treated alike. It could similarly not be in accordance with R. Judah, for he stated that in the case of slaves no Degradation need be paid. Again, it could not be in accordance with R. Simeon, since he holds that where the offender intended to insult one person and by an accident insulted another person he would be exempt, the reason being that this might be likened to murder, and just as in the case of murder there is no liability unless where the intention was for the particular person killed,[24] as it is written: 'And lie in wait for him and rise up against him'[25] [implying, according to R. Simeon, that there would be no liability] unless where he aimed at him particularly, so should it also be in the case of Degradation, that no liability should be imposed on the offender unless where he aimed at the person insulted, as it is written: 'And she putteth forth her hand and taketh him by the secrets'[26] [which might similarly imply that there should be no liability] unless where the offence was directed at the person insulted. [Who then was the Tanna of the teaching referred to above]? — It might still be said that he was R. Judah, for the statement made by R. Judah that in the case of slaves there would be no liability for Degradation means only that no payment will be made to them, though in the matter of appraisement we can still base the assessment on them. Or if you like I may say that you may even regard the teaching as being in accordance with R. Meir, for why should you think that gadol means 'great in possessions' and katon means 'small in possessions', and not rather that gadol means an actual gadol [i.e. one who is of age] and katon means an actual katon [i.e. a minor]? But is a minor subject to suffer Degradation? — Yes, as elsewhere stated by R. Papa, that if where he is reminded of some insult he feels abashed[27] [he is subject to Degradation] so also here

---

(1) For since no bruise was made it will surely recover.
(2) In which Depreciation is included.
(3) In which case he will never recover,
(4) Infra 98a.
(5) For having committed a capital offence in accordance with Ex. XXI, 25.
(6) And since a capital offence would thus have been committed no civil liabilities could be entailed; cf. infra p. 502.
(7) Which problem could thus be solved.
(8) I.e., the sap of a plant used as a depilatory; cf. also Mak. 20b.
(9) [MSS. omit 'on account of these scratches', apparently as it is the nasha which was smeared over his head which prevents his appearing in his dancing role.]
(10) Another term for Depreciation.
(11) But not for the temporary depreciation in value.
(12) [Tosaf. reads: 'to the master' as it is the master who is the primary loser in consequence of the servant's enforced idleness.]
(13) Through which injury the servant is not hindered from performing his usual work.
(14) Cf. Rashi and Tosaf. a. l.
(15) V. infra 90b.
(16) I.e., among the poor.
(17) Infra p. 496.
(18) Infra pp. 495-499.
(19) [Who also does not treat all persons alike.]
(20) Whom the Mishnaic statement makes subject to the law of Degradation.
(21) This would contradict R. Judah, who maintained that a blind person would not have to pay Degradation.
(22) Denotes either 'small', or a minor,
(23) Denotes either 'great' or 'one who is of age'.
(24) As indeed maintained by R. Simeon; cf. Sanh. 79a and supra p. 252.
(25) Deut. XIX, 11.
(26) Ibid. XXV, 11.
(27) Infra 86b.

he was a minor who, if the insult were mentioned to him, would feel abashed.

MISHNAH. ONE WHO INSULTS A NAKED PERSON, OR ONE WHO INSULTS A BLIND PERSON, OR ONE WHO INSULTS A PERSON ASLEEP IS LIABLE [FOR DEGRADATION], THOUGH IF A PERSON ASLEEP INSULTED [OTHERS] HE WOULD BE EXEMPT. IF ONE IN FALLING FROM A ROOF DID DAMAGE AND ALSO CAUSED [SOMEBODY] TO BE DEGRADED, HE WOULD BE LIABLE FOR DEPRECIATION BUT EXEMPT FROM [PAYING FOR] DEGRADATION UNLESS HE INTENDED [TO INFLICT IT].[1]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If he insulted a person who was naked he would be liable[2] though there could be no comparison between one who insulted a person who was naked[3] and one who insulted a person who was dressed. If he insulted him in the public bath he would be liable though one who insulted a person in a public bath[3] could not be compared to one who insulted a person in the market place.

The Master stated: 'If he insulted a person who was naked he would be liable.' But is a person who walks about naked capable of being insulted?[4] — Said R. Papa: The meaning of 'naked' is that a wind [suddenly] came and lifted up his clothes, and then some one came along and raised them still higher, thus putting him to shame.

'If he insulted him in the public bath he would be liable.' But is a public bath a place where people are apt to feel offended?[5] — Said R. Papa: It meant that he insulted him[6] near the river.[7]

R. Abba b. Memel asked: What would be the law where he humiliated a person who was asleep but who died [before waking]?[8] — What is the principle involved in this query?[9] — Said R. Zebid: The principle involved is this: [Is Degradation paid] because of the insult, and as in this case he died before waking and was never insulted [no payment should thus be made], or is it perhaps on account of the [public] disgrace, and as there was here disgrace [payment should be made to the heirs]? — Come and hear: R. Meir says: A deaf-mute and a minor are subject to [be paid for] Degradation, but an idiot is not subject to be paid for Degradation. Now no difficulty arises if you say that degradation is paid on account of the disgrace; it is then quite intelligible that a minor [should be paid for Degradation]. But if you say that Degradation is paid on account of the insult, [we have to ask,] is a minor subject to feel insulted? — What then? [You say that] Degradation is paid because of the disgrace? Why then should the same not apply even in the case of an idiot? — It may, however, be said that the idiot by himself constitutes a disgrace which is second to none. But in any case, why not conclude from this statement that Degradation is paid on account of the disgrace, for if on account of the insult, is a minor subject to feel insulted? — As elsewhere stated by R. Papa, that if where the insult is recalled to him he feels abashed [he is subject to Degradation]; so also here he was a minor who when the insult was recalled to him would feel abashed.

R. Papa, however, said that the principle involved in the query [of R. Abba] was this: [Is Degradation paid] because of personal insult, and as in this case [where] he died [before waking he did not suffer any personal insult, no payment should be made], or is [Degradation paid] perhaps on account of the insult suffered by the family? — Come and hear: A deaf-mute and a minor are subject to [be paid for] Degradation but an idiot is not subject to [be paid for] Degradation. Now no difficulty arises if you say that Degradation is paid on account of the insult suffered by the family; it is then quite intelligible that a minor [should be paid for Degradation]. But if you say that Degradation is paid on account of personal insult [we have to ask], is a minor subject to personal insult? — What then? [Do you say] that Degradation is paid because of the insult sustained by the members of the family? Why then should the same not apply in the case of an idiot? — It may, however, be said that the idiot by himself constitutes a Degradation [to them] which is second to none. But in any case, why not conclude from this statement that Degradation is paid on account of the insult suffered by the family, for if on account of personal insult[10] , is a minor subject to personal insult? — Said R. Papa: Yes, if when the insult is mentioned to him he feels insulted, as indeed taught: 'Rabbi says: A deaf-mute is subject to [be paid for] Degradation, but an idiot is not subject to [be paid for] Degradation, whereas a minor is sometimes subject to be paid and sometimes not subject to be paid [for Degradation].' The former [must be] in a case where, if the insult is mentioned to him, he would feel abashed, and the latter in a case where if the insult is recalled to him he would not feel abashed.

ONE WHO INSULTS A BLIND PERSON . . . IS LIABLE [FOR DEGRADATION]. This Mishnah is not in accordance with R. Judah. For it was taught: R. Judah says: 'A blind person is not subject to [the law of] Degradation. So also did R. Judah exempt him from the liability of being exiled[11] and from the liability of lashes[12] and from the liability of being put to death by a court of law.'[13] What is the reason of R. Judah? — He derives [the law in the case of Degradation by comparing the term] 'thine eyes' [inserted in the case of Degradation[14] from the term] 'thine eyes'[15] occurring in the case of witnesses who were proved zomemim:[16] just as there[17] blind persons are not included[18] so also here[19] blind persons should not be included. The exemption from the liability to be exiled is derived as taught: Seeing him not[20] excepts a blind person;[21] so R. Judah. R. Meir on the other hand says that it includes a blind person.[22] What is the reason of R. Judah? — He might say to you [as Scripture says]: 'As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood',[23] which might include even a blind person. The Divine Law therefore says 'Seeing him not' to exclude [him]. But R. Meir might contend that as the Divine Law inserted 'Seeing him not' [which implies] an exception, and the Divine Law further inserted unawares'[24] [which similarly implies] an exception, we have thus a limitation followed by another limitation, and the established rule is that a limitation followed by another limitation is intended to amplify.[25] And R. Judah? — He could argue that the word 'unawares' came to be inserted to except a case of intention. [Exemption from] liability to be put to death by a court of law is derived [from comparing the term] 'murderer' [used in the section dealing with capital punishment[26] with the term] 'murderer' [used in the section setting out] the liability to be exiled.[27] [Exemption from] liability of lashes is learnt [by comparing the term] 'wicked' [occurring in the Section dealing with lashes[28] with the term] 'wicked'[26] occurring in the case of those who are liable to be put to death by a court of law.

Another [Baraitha] taught: R. Judah says: A blind person is not subject to [the law of] Degradation.

---

(1) Supra p. 140.
(2) Even where the insult was caused by further uncovering him; cf. Tosaf. a.l,
(3) In which case the payment will be much less.
(4) By means of being further uncovered; again, how could a naked person be further uncovered?
(5) By means of being uncovered, since everybody is uncovered there.
(6) By uncovering him.
(7) Where people merely bathe their legs and are therefore fully dressed.
(8) So that he personally never felt the humiliation.
(9) Why indeed should there by any payment in such a case.
(10) no note.
(11) For inadvertently killing a person.
(12) When transgressing a negative commandment.
(13) For committing a capital offence.
(14) Deut. XXV, 12.
(15) Ib., XIX, 21.
(16) I.e., against whom the accusation of an alibi was proved; v. Glos.
(17) In the case of witnesses.
(18) For since a blind person could not see he is disqualified from giving evidence, on the strength of Lev. v, 1; cf. Tosaf, B.B. 129a, s.v. אי , and Asheri B.B. VIII, 24; but v. also Shebu. 33b.
(19) In the case of Degradation.
(20) Num. XXXV, 23.
(21) From being subject to the law of exile.
(22) Mak. 9b.
(23) Deut. XIX, 5.
(24) Ibid. 4.
(25) Cf. supra p. 259.
(26) Num. XXXV, 31.
(27) Deut. XIX, 3.
(28) Deut. XXV, 2.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 87a

So also did R. Judah exempt him from all the judgments of the Torah. What is the reason of R. Judah? — Scripture says: Then the congregation shall judge between the smiter and the avenger of blood according to these ordinances,[1] whoever is subject to the law of the 'smiter' and 'the avenger of blood' is subject to judgments, but he[2] who is not subject to the law of the 'smiter' and the 'avenger of blood' is not subject to judgments.

Another [Baraitha] taught: R. Judah.says: 'A blind person is not subject to [the law of] Degradation. So also did R. Judah exempt him from all commandments stated in the Torah.' R. Shisha the son of R. Idi said: The reason of R. Judah was because Scripture says: Now this is the commandment, the statutes and the ordinances;[3] he who is subject to the 'ordinances' is subject to 'commandments' and 'statutes',but he who is not subject to 'ordinances' is not subject to 'commandments' and 'statutes'. R. Joseph stated:[4] Formerly I used to Say: If someone would tell me that the halachah is in accordance with R. Judah who declared that a blind person is exempt from the commandments, I would make a festive occasion for our Rabbis, because though I am not enjoined[5] I still perform commandments, but now that I have heard the statement of R. Hanina, as R. Hanina indeed said[6] that greater is the reward of those who being enjoined do [good deeds] than of those who without being enjoined [but merely of their own free will] do [good deeds], if someone would tell me that the halachah is not in accordance with R. Judah I would make a festive occasion for our Rabbis, because if I am enjoined to perform commandments the reward will be greater for me.

MISHNAH. ON THIS [POINT] THE LAW FOR MAN IS MORE SEVERE THAN THE LAW FOR CATTLE, VIZ., THAT MAN HAS TO PAY FOR DEPRECIATION, PAIN, HEALING, LOSS OF TIME AND DEGRADATION;[7] AND HE PAYS ALSO FOR THE VALUE OF EMBRYOS,[8] WHEREAS IN THE CASE OF CATTLE THERE IS NO PAYMENT FOR ANYTHING BUT DEPRECIATION,[9] AND THERE IS EXEMPTION FROM [PAYING] THE VALUE OF EMBRYOS.[8] ONE WHO STRIKES HIS FATHER AND HIS MOTHER WITHOUT, HOWEVER, MAKING A BRUISE ON THEM,[10] OR ONE WHO INJURED HIS FELLOW ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT[11] IS LIABLE FOR ALL [THE FIVE ITEMS]. ONE WHO INJURES A HEBREW SLAVE[12] IS SIMILARLY LIABLE FOR ALL OF THEM, WITH THE EXCEPTION, HOWEVER, OF LOSS OF TIME IF HE IS HIS OWN SLAVE. ONE WHO INJURES A CANAANITE SLAVE[13] BELONGING TO ANOTHER PERSON IS [SIMILARLY] LIABLE FOR ALL [THE FIVE ITEMS]. R. JUDAH, HOWEVER, SAYS THAT NO DEGRADATION IS PAID IN THE CASE OF [CANAANITE] SLAVES. A DEAF-MUTE, AN IDIOT AND A MINOR ARE AWKWARD TO DEAL WITH, AS HE WHO INJURES THEM IS LIABLE [TO PAY], WHEREAS IF THEY INJURE OTHERS THEY ARE EXEMPT. [SO ALSO] A SLAVE AND A [MARRIED] WOMAN ARE AWKWARD TO DEAL WITH, AS HE WHO INJURES THEM IS LIABLE [TO PAY], WHEREAS IF THEY INJURE OTHERS THEY ARE EXEMPT,[14] THOUGH THEY MAY HAVE TO PAY AT A LATER DATE; FOR IF THE WOMAN WAS DIVORCED[15] OR THE SLAVE MANUMITTED,[16] THEY WOULD BE LIABLE TO PAY. HE WHO SMITES HIS FATHER OR HIS MOTHER MAKING ALSO A BRUISE ON THEM[17] OR HE WHO INJURES ANOTHER ON THE SABBATH[18] IS EXEMPT FROM ALL [THE FIVE ITEMS], FOR HE IS CHARGED WITH A CAPITAL OFFENCE.[19] [SO ALSO] HE WHO INJURES A CANAANITE SLAVE OF HIS OWN IS EXEMPT FROM ALL [THE ITEMS].[20]

GEMARA. R. Eleazar inquired of Rab: If one injures a minor daughter of another person, to whom should [the payment for] the injury go?[21] Shall we say that since the Divine Law bestowed upon the father [the right to] the income of [his daughter during the days of her] youth,[22] the payment for an injury should also be his, the reason being that her value was surely decreased [by the injury], or [shall we say that it was] perhaps only the income of youth[23] that the Divine Law granted him, since if he wishes to hand her over [in marriage e.g.,] to one afflicted with leprosy he could hand her over,[24] whereas the payment for injury might not have been granted to him by the Divine Law, since if he wishes to injure her he would not have had the right to injure her?[25]

---

(1) Num. XXXV, 24.

(2) Such as a blind person.

(3) Deut. VI, 2.

(4) Kid. 31a.
(5) As R. Joseph became blind through an illness; cf. Shab. 109a.
(6) V. supra p. 215.
(7) As supra p. 473.
(8) Cf. Ex, XXI, 22 and supra p. 277.
(9) V, supra 26a.
(10) In which case the capital offence of Ex. XXI,15 has not been committed; v. Sanh. 84b.
(11) The violation of which entails no capital punishment at the hands of a court of law; cf. Lev. XXIII, 30 and Ker. I, 1. Again, though lashes could be involved in this case in accordance with Mak. III, 2, the civil liability holds good as supra p. 407.
(12) Cf. Ex. XXI, 2-6.
(13) V. Lev. XXV, 44-46.
(14) Irrespective of the equality of all before the law, as supra p. 63, no payment could be made here as the possessions of slaves form a part of the estates of their masters as in Kid. 23b, and the property of a married woman is usually in the usufruct of the husband, cf, Keth, IV, 4,
(15) When her estate will return to her.
(16) And property was subsequently acquired by him.
(17) Which is a capital offence, v. Ex. XXI. 15; supra p. 492.
(18) Thus involving capital punishment, v. Shab. 106a; supra p. 192.
(19) In the punishment for which all civil liabilities merge; v. supra p. 192.
(20) For so far as the master is concerned the slave is but his chattel. He will, however, be liable to heal him; Tosaf, a.l.; Git. 12b.
(21) I.e., whether to her or to her father.
(22) Cf. Keth. 46b.
(23) Such as the consideration given by a prospective husband for marrying him, or the hire of her labour and the like.
(24) As could be inferred from Deut. XXII, 16,
(25) Moreover he would thereby commit the sin implied in Deut. XXV, 3.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 87b

— He replied: 'The Torah did not bestow upon the father [any right] save to the income of youth alone.'

An objection was raised[1] [from the following]: ONE WHO INJURES A HEBREW SLAVE IS SIMILARLY LIABLE FOR ALL OF THEM, WITH THE EXCEPTION HOWEVER OF LOSS OF TIME IF HE IS HIS OWN SLAVE![2] — Abaye replied: Rab surely agrees regarding the item of Loss of Time, as the work of her hands during the period preceding the age of womanhood[3] belongs to her father. A [further] objection was raised [from the following]: 'If one injures his son who has already come of age[4] he has to compensate him straight away, but if his son was still a minor[5] he must make for him a safe investment [out of the compensation money], while he who injures his minor daughter is exempt, and what is more, if others injure her they are liable to pay the compensation to her father'?[6] — The rulings here similarly refer to Loss of Time.[7]

Is it really a fact that in the case of a son who has already come of age the father has to compensate him straight away? [If so,] a contradiction could be pointed out [from the following:] 'If one injures the sons and daughters of others, if they have already come of age, he has to pay them straight away, but if they are still minors he should make for them a safe investment [out of the compensation money], whereas where the sons and daughters were his own, he would be exempt [altogether]'![8] — It may, however, be said that there is no difficulty, as the ruling here [stating exemption] refers to a case where the children still reclined at the father's table,[9] whereas the ruling there[10] deals with a case where they did not recline at his table. But how could you explain the former teaching to refer to a case where they did not recline at his table? For if so, read the concluding clause: 'Whereas he who injures his minor daughter is exempt, and what is more, even others who injure her are liable to pay the compensation to her father.' Why not pay her, since she has to maintain herself? For even according to the view[11] that a master may say to his slave, 'Work with me though I am not prepared to maintain you,' surely this applies only to a Canaanite slave to whom the master can say, 'Do your work during the day and in the evenings you can go out and look about for food,'[12] whereas in the case of a Hebrew slave in connection with whom it is written, Because he fareth well with thee,[13] implying 'with thee in food and with thee in drink',[14] this could certainly not be maintained; how much the more so then in the case of his own daughter?[15] — As stated[16] [in another connection] by Raba the son of R. 'Ulla, that the ruling applies only to the surplus [of the amount of her earnings over the cost of maintenance], so also here in this case this ruling applies only to the surplus [of the amount of compensation over the cost of maintenance]. You have then explained the latter statement [that there is exemption in the case of his own children] as dealing with a case where the children reclined at his table. Why then [in the case of children of other persons] is it stated that 'if they had already come of age he has to pay them straight away, but if they were still minors he should make for them a safe investment [out of the compensation money]? Why should the compensation not be made to their father?[17] — It may, however, be said that the father would be particular only in a matter which would cause him a loss,[18] whereas in regard to a profit coming from outside[19] he would not mind [it going to the children]. But what about a find which is similarly a profit coming from outside, and the father still is particular about it?[20] — It may be said that he is particular even about a profit which comes from outside provided no actual pain was caused to the children through it,[21] whereas in the matter of compensation for injury where the children suffered actual pain and where the profit comes from outside he does not mind. But what of the other case[22] where the daughter suffered actual pain and where there was a profit coming from outside and the father nevertheless was particular about it as stated 'What is more, even others who injure her are liable to pay the compensation to her father'? — It may still be said that it was only in that case[22] where the father was an eccentric person who would not have his children at his table that he could be expected to care for the matter of profit coming even from outside, whereas in the case here[23] where he was not an eccentric person, as his children joined him at his table it is only regarding a matter which would cause him a loss that he would be particular, but he would not mind about a matter of profit coming from outside.

What is meant by 'a safe investment'?[24] — R. Hisda said: [To buy] a scroll of the Law.[25] Rabbah[26] son of R. Huna said: [To buy] a palm tree, from which he gets a profit in the shape of dates.

Resh Lakish similarly said that the Torah did not bestow upon the father any right save to the income of youth alone. R. Johanan however said: 'Even regarding wounding.' How can you think about wounding?[27] Even R. Eleazar did not raise a question[28] except regarding an injury

---

(1) [Lit., 'he objected to him.' The objector was evidently not R. Eleazar, as Abaye is the one who replies to the objection.]

(2) Why then should the payment for Loss of Time in the case of a minor girl not go to her father to whom the hire for her labour would belong?

(3) Which begins six months after puberty was reached at approximately the age of twelve; cf. Nid. 45b; 65a and Keth. 39a.

(4) I.e., usually over the age of thirteen; cf. Glos. s.v. Gadol.

(5) I.e., before the age of thirteen; v. Glos. s.v. Katon.

(6) [Is this not against the view of Rab who stated that damages paid for injuring a minor girl would not go to her father?]

(7) For which all agree that payment must be made to the father.

(8) [Does the latter ruling not apply even where the sons and daughters had already come of age, in contradiction to the ruling stated in the former teaching?]

(9) I.e., were maintained and provided by him with all their needs; cf. B.M. 12b.
(10) Stating liability.
(11) Git. 12a.
(12) [Eg. where the work he performs is not worth the cost of his maintenance, v. Git. 12a.]
(13) Deut. XV, 16.
(14) He must share the same pleasures and comforts as the Master. Cf. Kid. 20a.
(15) [Why therefore should the compensation be paid to the father and not to her in a case where she has to maintain herself?]
(16) Keth. 43a.
(17) Since they are maintained by him.
(18) Such as if he would have to pay compensation where he himself injured them.
(19) As where others injured them and would have to pay compensation.
(20) Cf. B.M. 12b.
(21) Such as e.g., in the case of a find.
(22) I.e., in the former teaching.
(23) I.e., in the latter teaching.
(24) B.B. 52a.
(25) Cf. Er. 64a.
(26) B.B. 52: 'Raba'.
(27) Which would usually not decrease her pecuniary value.
(28) Supra p.502.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 88a

through which her pecuniary value is decreased,[1] whereas regarding mere wounding, through which her pecuniary value would not [usually] decrease there was never any question [that the compensation would not go to the father. How then could R. Johanan speak of mere wounding?] — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: We suppose the wound to have been made in her face, thus causing her pecuniary value to be decreased. ONE WHO INJURES A CANAANITE SLAVE BELONGING TO ANOTHER PERSON IS [SIMILARLY] LIABLE FOR ALL [FIVE ITEMS]. R. JUDAH, HOWEVER, SAYS THAT NO DEGRADATION IS PAID IN THE CASE OF [CANAANITE] SLAVES. What is the reason of R. Judah? — As Scripture says:[2] 'When men strive together one with another' the law applies to one who can claim brotherhood and thus excludes a slave who cannot claim brotherhood.[3] And the Rabbis?[4] — They would say that even a slave is a brother in so far as he is subject to commandments. If this is so, would you say that according to R. Judah witnesses proved zomemim[5] in a capital accusation against a slave would not be subject to be put to death in virtue of the words:[6] 'Then shall ye do unto him as he had purposed to do unto his brother'?[7] — Raba said that R. Shesheth stated: The verse concludes:[6] 'So shalt thou put away the evil from among you', implying 'on all accounts' — Would you say that according to the Rabbis[8] a slave would be eligible to be chosen as king?[9] — I would reply: According to your reasoning would the same difficulty not arise regarding a proselyte, whichever view we accept[10] unless we suppose that when Scripture says 'One from among thy brethren',[11] it implies 'one of the choicest of thy brethren'?[12] — But again would you now also say that according to the Rabbis, a slave would be eligible to give evidence,[13] since it says, And behold, if the witness be a false witness and hath testified falsely against his brother?[14] — 'Ulla replied: Regarding evidence you can surely not argue thus. For that he[15] is disqualified from giving evidence can be learnt by means of an a fortiori from the law in the case of Woman: for if Woman who is eligible to enter [by marriage] into the congregation [of Israel] is yet ineligible to give evidence,[16] how much more must a slave who is not eligible to enter [by marriage] into the congregation [of Israel] be ineligible to give evidence? But why is Woman disqualified if not perhaps because she is not subject to the law of circumcision? How then can you assert the same In the case of a slave who is subject to circumcision?[17] — The case of a [male] minor will meet this objection, for in spite of his being subject to circumcision he is disqualified from giving evidence.[18] But why is a minor disqualified if not perhaps because he is not subject to commandments?[19] How then can you assert the same in the case of a slave who is subject to commandments?[20] — The case of Woman will meet this objection, for though she is subject to commandments she is disqualified from giving evidence. The argument is thus endlessly reversible. There are features in the one instance which are not found in the other, and vice versa. The features common to both[21] are that they are not subject to all the commandments[22] and that they are disqualified from giving evidence. I will therefore include with them a slave who also is not subject to all the commandments and should therefore also be disqualified from giving evidence. But why [I may ask] is the feature common to them[21] that they are disqualified from giving evidence if not perhaps because neither of them is a man?[23] How then can you assert the same in the case of a slave who is a man? — You must therefore deduce the disqualification of a slave from the law applicable in the case of a robber.[24] But why is there this disqualification in the case of a robber if not because his own deeds caused it? How then can you assert the same in the case of a slave whose own deeds could surely not cause it?[25] — You must therefore deduce the disqualification of a slave from both the law applicable to a robber and the law applicable to either of these [referred to above].[26] Mar, the son of Rabina, however, said: Scripture says: 'The fathers shall not be put to death through[27] the children';[28] from this it could be inferred that no sentence of capital punishment should be passed on [the evidence of] the mouth of [persons who if they were to be] fathers would have no legal paternity over their children.[29] For if you assume that the verse is to be taken literally, 'fathers shall not be put to death through children', meaning, 'through the evidence of children', the Divine Law should have written 'Fathers shall not be put to death through their children'. Why then is it written 'children', unless to indicate that no sentence of capital punishment should be passed on [the evidence of] the mouth of [persons who if they were to be] fathers would have no legal paternity over their children? If that is so, would you also say that the concluding clause 'neither shall the children be put to death through the fathers' similarly implies that no sentence of capital punishment should be passed on [the evidence of] the mouth of [witnesses who as] children would have no legal filiation with respect to their fathers, and therefore argue that a proselyte[30] should similarly be disqualified from giving evidence?[31] — It may be said that there is no comparison: It is true that a proselyte has no legal relationship to his ancestors, still he has legal relationship with his descendants, [but we may therefore] exclude a slave who has relationships neither with ancestors nor with descendants. For if you should assume that a proselyte is disqualified from giving evidence, the Divine Law should surely have written: 'Fathers shall not be put to death through their children', which would mean what we stated, that they would not be put to death through the evidence of children, and after this the Divine Law should have written: 'Neither shall children be put to death through fathers,' as from such a text you would have derived the two rules: one that children should not be put to death through the evidence of fathers and the other that no sentence of capital punishment should be passed on [the evidence of] the mouth of [witnesses who as] children have no legal filiation with respect to their fathers.[32] The disqualification in the case of a slave would surely have been derived by means of an a fortiori from the law applicable to a proselyte: for if a proselyte, who has no legal relationship to his ancestors but has legal relationship to his descendants, is disqualified from giving evidence, how much more must a slave who has legal relationship neither to ancestors nor to descendants be disqualified from giving evidence? But since the Divine Law has written: 'Fathers shall not be put to death through children', which implies that no sentence of capital punishment should be passed on [the evidence of] the mouth of [witnesses who as] fathers would have no legal paternity over their children, we can derive from this that it is only a [Canaanite] slave who has relationship neither to ancestors nor to descendants that will be disqualified from giving evidence, whereas a proselyte will be eligible to give evidence on account of the fact that he has legal paternity over his children. If you object, why did the Divine Law not write: 'Neither shall children be put to death through their fathers', and why did the Divine Law write 'And neither shall children be put to death through fathers', which appears to imply that no sentence of capital punishment should be passed [on the evidence of] the mouth of [witnesses who as] children would have no legal filiation with respect to fathers,[33] [my answer is that] since it was written, 'Fathers shall not be put to death through children', it was further written, 'neither shall children be put to death through fathers.'[34]

A DEAF, MUTE AN IDIOT AND A MINOR ARE AWKWARD TO DEAL WITH. The mother of R. Samuel b. Abba of Hagronia[35] was married to R. Abba,[36] and bequeathed her possessions to R. Samuel b. Abba, her son. After her death

---

(1) And a loss thus caused to the father.
(2) Deut. XXV, 11.
(3) Cf. supra p. 63.
(4) The representatives of the anonymous opinion cited first in the Mishnah.
(5) I.e., where an alibi was proved against them; cf. Glos.
(6) Deut. XIX, 19.
(7) Since a slave according to R. Judah could not he considered a brother.
(8) Who consider a slave a brother.
(9) Where the text in Deut. XVII, is states, One from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee.
(10) For a proselyte is unanimously considered a brother.
(11) Deut. XVII, 15.
(12) Cf. Yeb. 45b; [and for this reason a slave is not eligible for kingship, not because he is not considered a brother.]
(13) Which would not be in conformity with R. H. I., 8.
(14) Deut. XIX, 18.
(15) I.e., a slave.
(16) V. Shebu. 30a.
(17) Cf. Gen. XVII, 12 and Yeb. 48b.
(18) Cf. B.B. 155b.
(19) Cf. supra p. 250.
(20) In the same way as a woman; cf. Hag. 4a.
(21) I.e., in Woman and male Minor.
(22) Cf. Kid. 29a.
(23) As a minor has not yet reached manhood.
(24) Who is disqualified from giving evidence though being a 'man' and eligible to enter by marriage into the Congregation; cf. Ex. XXIII, 1.
(25) Having done nothing criminal.
(26) I.e., a woman or male minor, the common feature being that they do not observe all commandments — the robber on account of his criminality, the woman or male minor because neither is subject to all the commandments.
(27) E.V. 'for'.
(28) Deut. XXV, 16.
(29) Such as slaves; cf. supra p. 63.
(30) Who has no legal filiation with respect to his ancestors; cf. Yeb. 62a.
(31) Which would not be in conformity with Nid. 49b.
(32) Which would have excluded also a proselyte.
(33) [Excluding thus a proselyte.]
(34) And while the phraseology of the concluding clause follows that of the commencing clause it is not usual in Scripture that the commencing clause should alter its phraseology because of the style of the concluding clause.
(35) V. supra p. 27, n. 1.
(36) He was not the father of R. Samuel as her former husband's name was also Abba.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 88b

R. Samuel b. Abba went to consult R. Jeremiah b. Abba who confirmed him in possession of her property. R. Abba thereupon went and related the case to R. Hoshaia. R. Hoshaia then went and spoke on the matter with Rab Judah who said to him that Samuel had ruled as follows: If a woman disposes of her melog[1] possessions during the lifetime of her husband and then dies, the husband is entitled to recover them from the hands of the purchasers.[2] When this statement was repeated to R. Jeremiah b. Abba, he said: I [only] know the Mishnaic ruling which we have learnt: 'If a man assigns his possessions to his son, to take effect after his death,[3] neither can the son alienate them [during the lifetime of the father] as they are then still in the possession of the father, nor can the father dispose of them since they are assigned to the son. Still, if the father sells them, the sale is valid until his death; if the son disposes of them the purchaser has no hold on them until the father dies.'[4] This implies, does it not, that when the father dies the purchaser will have the possessions [bought by him from the son during the lifetime of the father], and this even though the son died during the lifetime of the father, in which case they had never yet entered into the possession of the son? For so it was laid down by R. Simeon b. Lakish, who said[5] that there should be no difference whether the son died in the lifetime of the father, in which case the estate never came into the possession of the son, or whether the father died in the lifetime of the son, in which case the estate had entered into the possession of the son; the purchaser would [in either case] acquire title to the estate. (For it was stated:[6] Where the son sold the estate[7] in the lifetime of the father and it so happened that the son died during the lifetime of the father, R. Johanan said that the purchaser would not acquire title [to the estate], whereas Resh Lakish said that the purchaser would acquire title [to the estate]. R. Johanan, who held that the purchaser would not acquire title to the estate, would say to you that the Mishnaic statement, 'If the son disposed of them the purchaser would have no hold on them until the father dies, 'implying that at any rate after the death of the father the purchaser would own them, refers to the case where the son did not die during the lifetime of the father, so that the estate had actually entered into the possession of the son, whereas where the son died during the lifetime of the father, in which case the estate had never entered into the possession of the son, the purchaser would have no title to the estate even after the death of the father. This shows that in the opinion of R. Johanan a right to usufruct amounts in law to a right to the very substance [of the estate],[8] from which it follows that when the son sold the estate [during the lifetime of his father] he was disposing of a thing not belonging to him.[9] Resh Lakish on the other hand said that the purchaser would [in all cases] acquire title [to the estate after the death of the vendor's father], for the Mishnaic statement, 'If the son disposed of them the purchaser would have no hold on them until the father died,'implying that at least after the death of the father the purchaser would own them, applies equally whether the son did not die in the lifetime of the father, in which case the estate had entered into the possession of the son, or whether the son did die during the lifetime of the father, in which case the estate never did come into the possession of the son, [as in all cases] the purchaser would acquire title [to the estate as soon as the vendor's father died]. This shows that in the opinion of Resh Lakish a right to [mere] usufruct does not yet amount to a right in the very substance [of the estate], from which it follows that when the son sold the estate [during his father's lifetime] he was disposing of a thing that legally belonged to him.[10]) Now both[11] R. Jeremiah b. Abba and Rab Judah, concur with Resh Lakish,[12] and R. Jeremiah b. Abba accordingly argues thus: If you assume that a right to usufruct amounts [in law] to a right in the very substance, why then on the death of the father, if the son has previously died during the lifetime of his father, should the purchaser have any title to the estate, since when the son sold it he was disposing of a thing not belonging to him? Does not this show that a right to [mere] usufruct does not amount to a right to the very substance?[13] When, however, the argument was later repeated in the presence of Rab Judah, he said that Samuel had definitely stated: 'This case[14] cannot be compared to that stated in the Mishnah.' On what ground? — R. Joseph replied: We should have no difficulty if the case in the Mishnah were stated in a reversed order, i.e., 'If a son assigns his possessions to his father [to take effect after the son's death, and the father sold them during the lifetime of the son and died before the son,' and if the law would also in this case have been that the purchaser acquired title to the possessions] it would indeed have been possible to prove from it that a right to usufruct does not amount to a right to the very substance. But seeing that what it actually says is, 'If a father assigns his possessions to his son,' [the reason why the sale by the son is valid is] that [since] he was eligible to inherit him, [the father by drawing up the deed must necessarily have intended that the transfer to the son should have legal effect forthwith].[15] Said Abaye to him: Does only a son inherit a father, and does a father never inherit a son?[16] It is therefore to be assumed that such a deed was drawn up only for the purpose of keeping the possessions out of the hands of the children,[17] and similarly also here[18] the deed might have been drawn up for the sole purpose of keeping the possessions out of the hands of his brothers![19] — The reason of [Samuel's remark that] 'This case cannot be compared to that stated in the Mishnah' is because of the [Rabbinic] enactment at Usha. For R. Jose b. Hanina said: It was enacted at Usha that if a woman disposes of her melog possessions during the lifetime of her husband and subsequently dies, the husband will be entitled to recover them from the hands of the purchasers.[20] R. Idi b. Abin said that we have been taught to the same effect: [Where witnesses state,] 'We can testify against a particular person that he has divorced his wife and paid her for her kethubah',[21]

---

(1) Lit., 'plucking', but which denotes a wife's estate in which her husband has the right of usufruct and for which he hears no responsibility regarding any loss or deterioration, v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 206, n. 7.

(2) According to which statement R. Abba and not R. Samuel would be entitled to the possessions in direct contradiction to the judgment given by R. Jeremiah.

(3) [The father retaining for himself the right for life to the usufruct.]

(4) B.B. 136b.

(5) Ibid.

(6) B.B. 136a.

(7) [Assigned to him to be his after his father's death.]

(8) As indeed followed by him in Git. 47b and elsewhere.

(9) For since the father still had for life the right to usufruct he was for the time being the legal owner of the very substance of the estate, though the son had the reversionary right.

(10) Since he had the reversionary right while the father possessed merely for time being the right to usufruct. [The bracketed passage is an interpolation and not part of R. Jeremiah's argument.]

(11) [So MS.M. cur. edd. read, 'We now assume.']

(12) [That the sale is valid even where the son died in the lifetime of the father.] Cf. Yeb. 36b.

(13) Hence the gift of the mother to R. Samuel her son should become valid at her death in spite of the right to usufruct vested in R. Abba her second husband during her lifetime.

(14) I.e., the gift of the mother to R. Samuel her son.

(15) For if otherwise why was the deed necessary at all? [Whereas in the case of Samuel b. Abba, the deed was necessary for in the absence of one the estate would be inherited by the husband. V. B.B. 111b]

(16) Cf. B.B. VIII, 1. The same argument if at all sound could thus accordingly be raised even in the case made out by you where a son bequeathed his possessions to his father.

(17) Of the son who made the bequest in favour of his father, as otherwise the sons children would have been first to inherit him in accordance with Num. XXVII, 8.

(18) Where the father bequeathed his possessions to a son.

(19) I.e., from the brothers of the particular son in whose favour the bequest was made, as otherwise they would also have had a part in the inheritance on account of their being sons of the same father, and it was not intended that the transfer to the son should have legal effect forthwith. This being so, the case of Samuel b. Abba is on all fours with the Mishnah!

(20) For the right of the husband to the possessions of his wife took effect at the time of the wedding and thus preceded the act of the sale. V. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 208.

(21) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 89a

while the woman in question was still with him[1] and in fact looking after him, and the witnesses were subsequently proved zomemim, it would not be right to say that they should pay [the woman][2] the whole amount of her kethubah, [as she did not lose anything] but the satisfaction of the benefit of [being provided with] her kethubah.[3] How could [the value of] the satisfaction of the benefit of her kethubah be arrived at?[3] An estimate will have to be made of how much a man would be prepared to pay as purchase money for the kethubah of this [particular woman] which can mature only after she is left a widow or divorced, since, were she [previously] to die her husband would inherit her.[4] Now, if you assume that this enactment of Usha is of no avail, why is it certain that her husband would inherit her? Why should she be unable to sell her kethubah outright?[5] Abaye said: If all this could be said[6] regarding melog possessions,[7] can it also be said[8] regarding the possessions [placed in the husband's hands[9] and secured[10] as if they were] 'iron flocks'?[11]

Abaye further said: Since the subject of the [mere] satisfaction of a benefit has been raised, let us say something on it. The [purchase money of this] satisfaction of the benefit would belong solely to the woman. For if you assume that it should be subject to [the rights of] the husband, why could the witnesses not argue against her: 'What loss did we cause you, for should you even have sold the satisfaction of the benefit, the husband would have taken away [the purchase money] from you'? — R. Shalman, however, said: Because [even then] there would have been ample domestic provision.[12]

Raba stated: 'The law is that the purchase money for the satisfaction of the benefit belongs solely to the woman, and the husband will have no right to enjoy any profit [that may result from it], the reason being that it was only profits that the Rabbis assigned to him,[13] whereas profits out of profits[14] were not assigned to him by the Rabbis.

When R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua came from the College they said: We have learnt to the same effect as the enactment of Usha [in the following Mishnah]: A SLAVE AND A WOMAN ARE AWKWARD TO DEAL WITH, AS HE WHO INJURES THEM IS LIABLE [TO PAY], WHEREAS IF THEY HAVE INJURED OTHERS THEY ARE EXEMPT.[15] Now, if you assume that the enactment of Usha is not effective why should she not sell her melog[16] property and with the purchase money pay the compensation? — But even according to your reasoning, granted that the enactment of Usha is effective, in which case she would be powerless to alienate altogether her melog possessions, yet let her sell the melog estate for what the satisfaction of the benefit would fetch[17] and with his purchase money pay the compensation? It must therefore Surely be said that the ruling applies where she had no melog property; so also [according to the other view] the ruling would apply only where she possessed no melog property. But why should she not sell her kethubah for as much as the satisfaction of the benefit will fetch[17] and thus pay compensation? — The ruling is based on the view of R. Meir, who said that it is prohibited for any man to keep his wife without a kethubah even for one hour.[18] But what is the reason of this? So that it should not be an easy matter in his eyes to divorce her. In this case too he will surely not divorce her, for if he were to divorce her those who purchased the kethubah would certainly come and collect the amount of the kethubah from him. [Why then should she not be compelled by law to sell her kethubah and pay her creditors?] — We must therefore say that the satisfaction of such a benefit is a value of an abstract nature[19] and abstract values are not considered mortgaged [for the payment of liabilities]. But why not? Could these abstract values not be sold for actual denarii? — We must therefore [say that it would not be practical to compel her to sell her kethubah] on account of the statement of Samuel. For Samuel said:[20] Where a creditor assigns a liability on a bill to another and subsequently releases the debtor from payment, the debt is considered cancelled. Moreover, the creditor's heir may cancel the liability.[21] I would, however, ask: Why should she not be compelled to sell it and pay with the proceeds the compensation, though if she should subsequently release her husband from the obligation the release would be legally valid? — It may be replied that since it is quite certain that where there is an obligation on the husband the wife will release him,it would not be right to make a sale which will straight away be nullified. Should you say, why should she not assign her kethubah to the person whom she injured, thus letting him have the satisfaction of the benefit,

---

(1) I.e., that particular person who was her husband, as he had never divorced her.

(2) In retaliation, as required in Deut. XIX, 19.

(3) Since it was but a conditional liability, i.e., becoming mature either through her being divorced or through her remaining a widow.

(4) And there would then be no occasion for the payment of the kethubah (cf. Mak. 3a).
(5) If the husband would have no right to recover the possessions thus alienated. Why then should the witnesses not pay the woman the full amount of the kethubah?
(6) By R. Jeremiah against Rab Judah, thus ignoring the enactment of Usha.
(7) In which the husband had only the right of usufruct while the substance belonged to the wife; v. Glos.
(8) [That the woman should be able to sell outright.]
(9) As absolutely his own property.
(10) By him on his general estate to pay her for them her Kethubah in case she would become a widow or divorced.
(11) Zon barzel. I.e., 'flocks' sold on credit and the payment made secure as 'iron', v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 206, n. 3.
(12) As it is also for her benefit that the income of her husband increases.
(13) Out of the substance belonging to her. Cf. Keth. 47b and 79b.
(14) Such as here in the case of the purchase money.
(15) V. supra p. 502, n. 1.
(16) V. Glos.
(17) I.e., that the purchaser should stand in her place and become entitled to it in case she should become a widow or divorced.
(18) Keth. 57a.
(19) Lit., 'words', 'an order for payment'.
(20) B.M. 20a; B.B. 147b.
(21) It would therefore not be practical to compel her to sell her kethubah, for she might subsequently release the husband from the liability of the kethubah.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 89b

for even if she should subsequently release her husband from the obligation, the purchaser[1] would lose nothing as now too she pays him nothing on account of the compensation, [my answer is that] as it is in any case quite certain that where there is an obligation on the husband the wife will release him, it would not be proper to trouble the Court of Law so much for nothing. But seeing that it was taught: 'So also if she injures her husband she does not forfeit her kethubah'.[2] why should she in this case not assign her kethubah to the husband and thus let him have the satisfaction of the benefit as compensation for the injury, for even if she releases her husband from the obligation no loss will result therefrom? — This teaching is surely based on the view of R. Meir who said[3] that it is prohibited for any man to keep his wife without a kethubah even for one hour, the reason being that it should not be an easy matter in the eyes of the husband to divorce a wife. So also here if the kethubah be assigned to him he might easily divorce her and have her kethubah for himself as compensation for the injury. But if so [even now that the kethubah remains with her] would he just the same not find it easy to divorce her, as he would retain the amount of her kethubah as compensation for the injury? [This however would not be so where] e.g., the amount of her kethubah was much more than that of the compensation as on account of the small amount of the compensation he would surely not risk losing more.[4] But again if the amount of her kethubah exceeded that of an ordinary kethubah as fixed by the Law,[5] why should we not reduce the amount to that of the ordinary kethubah fixed by the Law,[6] and she should assign the difference to the husband as compensation for the injury? [This could not be done where,] e.g. the amount of her kethubah did not exceed that of the ordinary kethubah fixed by the Law and the compensation for the injury was assessed to be four zuz, as it is pretty certain that for four zuz he will not risk losing twenty-five [sela'].[7] But what of that which was taught: 'Just as she cannot [be compelled to] assign her kethubah[8] so long as she is with her husband, so also she cannot [be compelled to] remit [anything of] her kethubah so long as she is with her husband'?[9] Are there not times when she would be forced to remit, as, for example where the amount of her kethubah exceeded the amount of an ordinary kethubah fixed by the Law? — Said Raba: This concluding paragraph refers to the clause inserted in the kethubah regarding the male children,[10] and what was meant was this: Just as in the case of a wife assigning her kethubah to others she does thereby not impair the clause in the kethubah regarding the male children, the reason being that she might have been compelled to do it on account of a pressing need for money, so should also be the case where a wife assigns her kethubah to her own husband, that she would thereby not impair the clause in the Kethubah dealing with male children on the ground that she might have been compelled to do this for lack of funds.

May we say that the enactment of Usha was a point at issue between the following Tannaim? For one [Baraitha] teaches that melog slaves are to go out free for the sake of a tooth or an eye[11] if assaulted by the wife,[12] but not if assaulted by the husband,[13] whereas another [Baraitha] teaches that [they are not to go out free] when assaulted either by the husband or by the wife. Now it was thought that all authorities agree that a right to usufruct does not constitute in law a right to the very substance. Are we not to suppose then that the point at issue between them was that the one who held that they are to go out free if assaulted by the wife did not accept the enactment of Usha, while the one who held that they are not to go out free when assaulted either by the husband or by the wife accepted the enactment of Usha?[14] — No; it is quite certain that the enactment of Usha was unanimously accepted, but the former Baraitha was formulated before the passing of the enactment while the other one was formulated after. Or if you like I may say that both the one Baraitha and the other dealt with conditions prevailing after the enactment, and also that both accepted the enactment of Usha, but the authority who held that the slaves are to go out free if assaulted by the wife and not by the husband did so on account of a reason underlying a statement of Raba, for Raba said:

---

(1) I.e., the injured person.

(2) Tosaf. B.K. IX, 8.

(3) V. supra, p. 515, n. 6.

(4) [I.e., the difference between the large amount of the kethubah and the amount due to him as compensation.]

(5) The Bible, i.e., two hundred zuz where she was a virgin at the time of the marriage. Cf. Ex. XXII, 16; Keth. I, 2.

(6) [To provide against the prohibition in the view of R. Meir.]

(7) == 100 zuz, which is the minimum amount of a kethubah even in the case of a non-virgin; v. Keth. I, 2.

(8) [For any damage done to others (Tosaf.).]

(9) [For any damage done by her to her husband (Tosaf.) V. Tosaf. B.K. IX.]

(10) Which runs as follows: 'The male children which you will have with me shall inherit the amount of your kethubah over and above their appropriate portions due to them together with their brothers (if any of another mother).' V.B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 546, n.16.

(11) Cf. Ex. XXI, 26-27.

(12) Who possesses the ownership of their substance.

(13) Who has in them but the right of usufruct.

(14) According to which the wife would not be able to impair the right of the husband, [nor would the husband on the other hand be able to impair the right of the wife to the slaves whose substance is actually hers.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 90a

'The Consecration [of cattle[1] to the altar, the prohibition of] leaven[2] [from any use] and the manumission of a slave[3] release any of these articles [if mortgaged] from the burden of the mortgage.[4] Are we then to say that this statement of Raba constituted a point at issue between these Tannaim? — No; it is possible that all concurred in the ruling of Raba [in general cases], but in this particular case here the Rabbis[5] [might perhaps] have specially protected the mortgage of the husband.[6] Or again if you like I may say that these Tannaim were unanimous in not accepting the enactment of Usha, but in the case here they might have differed as to whether the right to usufruct amounts in law to a right to the very substance, exactly as this was the dividing point between the following Tannaim. For it was taught:[7] 'If an owner sells his slave to a man with whom he stipulates that the slave shall still remain to serve him for the next thirty days, R. Meir says that the vendor[8] would be subject to the law of "a day or two"[9] because the slave was still "under" him,' his view being that the right to a usufruct in the slave amounts in law to a right to the very substance of him.

‘R. Judah on the other hand says that it is the purchaser who would be subject to the law of "a day or two"[10] because the slave was "his money",’ his view being that a right to a usufruct in the slave does not amount in law to a right to the very substance of him. ‘But R. Jose says that both of them[11] would be subject to the right of "a day or two": the vendor because the slave was still "under" him and the purchaser because the slave was already "his money",’for he was in doubt whether a right to a usufruct should amount to a right to the very substance or should not amount to a right to the very substance, and, as is well known, a doubt in capital charges should always be for the benefit of the accused.[12] ‘R. Eliezer on the other hand says that neither of them would be subject to the law of "a day or two": the purchaser because the slave is not "under" him, and the vendor because he is not "his money".’ Raba said: The reason of R. Eliezer was because Scripture says, For he is his money,[13] implying that he has to be ‘his money’ owned by him exclusively.[14] Whose view is followed in the statement made by Amemar that if a husband and wife sold the melog property [even simultaneously], their act is of no effect? Of course the view of R. Eliezer.[15] So too, who was the Tanna who stated that which our Rabbis taught: ‘One who is half a slave and half a freeman,[16] as well as a slave belonging to two partners does not go out free for the mutilation of the principal limbs,[17] even those which cannot be restored to him’? Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi: Thus was it stated in the name of Raba, that this ruling gives the view of R. Eliezer. For did R. Eliezer not say that ‘his money’ implied that which was owned by him exclusively? So also here ‘his slave’[18] implies one who is owned by him exclusively.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN BOXES ANOTHER MAN'S EAR, HE HAS TO PAY HIM[19] A SELA’.[20] R. JUDAH IN THE NAME OF R. JOSE THE GALILEAN SAYS THAT [HE HAS TO PAY HIM] A MANEH.[20] IF HE SMACKED HIM [ON THE FACE] HE HAS TO PAY HIM TWO HUNDRED ZUZ;[20] [IF HE DID IT] WITH THE BACK OF HIS HAND HE HAS TO PAY HIM FOUR HUNDRED ZUZ. IF HE PULLED HIS EAR, PLUCKED HIS HAIR, SPAT SO THAT THE SPITTLE REACHED HIM, REMOVED HIS GARMENT FROM UPON HIM, UNCOVERED THE HEAD OF A WOMAN IN THE MARKET PLACE, HE MUST PAY FOUR HUNDRED ZUZ.

---

(1) That had previously been mortgaged for a liability.

(2) [In Jewish possession during the Passover which had previously been mortgaged for a liability to a non-Jew]

(3) V. p. 498, n. 5.

(4) So also here though the right of the husband in the melog (v. Glos.) slave is impregnable in the case of a sale or gift, it must give way in the case of manumission.

(5) According to the second Baraitha.

(6) To be inviolable even in the case of a manumission.

(7) B.B. 50a.

(8) During the thirty days.

(9) Stated in Ex. XXI, 21 and according to which if an owner smites his servant, who after having continued to live for a day or two, dies, he would not be punished, though in the case of a stranger the slayer would be liable to death in all circumstances.

(10) Even during the thirty days that the slave had to be with the vendor.

(11) I.e., the vendor and the purchaser.

(12) B.B. 50b; Sanh. 79a also supra p. 253.

(13) Ex. XXI, 21.

(14) [Raba stresses the word ‘his’.]

(15) Who considers neither the vendor nor the purchaser as the true owner, and so should be the case regarding husband and wife in the melog estate.

(16) As where the slave belonged to two partners and one of them manumitted him; cf. Git. 41a.

(17) Which are twenty-four in number; cf. Kid. 25a.

(18) Ex. XXI, 26.

(19) On account of Degradation.

(20) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 90b

THIS IS THE GENERAL PRACTICE, THOUGH ALL DEPENDS UPON THE DIGNITY [OF THE INSULTED PERSON]. R. AKIBA SAID THAT EVEN THE POOR IN ISRAEL HAVE TO BE CONSIDERED AS IF THEY ARE FREEMEN REDUCED IN CIRCUMSTANCES, FOR IN FACT THEY ALL ARE THE DESCENDANTS OF ABRAHAM, ISAAC AND JACOB.[1] IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A CERTAIN PERSON UNCOVERED THE HEAD OF A WOMAN IN THE MARKET PLACE AND WHEN SHE CAME BEFORE R. AKIBA, HE ORDERED THE OFFENDER TO PAY HER FOUR HUNDRED ZUZ. THE LATTER SAID TO HIM, 'RABBI, ALLOW ME TIME [IN WHICH TO CARRY OUT THE JUDGMENT];' R. AKIBA ASSENTED AND FIXED A TIME FOR HIM. HE WATCHED HER UNTIL HE SAW HER STANDING OUTSIDE THE DOOR OF HER COURTYARD, HE THEN BROKE IN HER PRESENCE A PITCHER WHERE THERE WAS OIL OF THE VALUE OF AN ISAR,[2] AND SHE UNCOVERED HER HEAD AND COLLECTED THE OIL WITH HER PALMS AND PUT HER HANDS UPON HER HEAD [TO ANOINT IT]. HE THEN SET UP 'WITNESSES AGAINST HER AND CAME TO R. AKIBA AND SAID TO HIM: HAVE I TO GIVE SUCH A WOMAN[3] FOUR HUNDRED ZUZ?' BUT R. AKIBA SAID TO HIM: 'YOUR ARGUMENT IS OF NO LEGAL EFFECT, FOR WHERE ONE INJURES ONESELF THOUGH FORBIDDEN, HE IS EXEMPT,[4] YET, WERE OTHERS TO INJURE HIM, THEY WOULD BE LIABLE: SO ALSO HE WHO CUTS DOWN HIS OWN PLANTS, THOUGH NOT ACTING LAWFULLY,[5] IS EXEMPT,[4] YET WERE OTHERS TO [DO IT], THEY WOULD BE LIABLE.

GEMARA. It was asked: Is it a Tyrian maneh[6] of which the Mishnaic text speaks or is it only a local maneh[7] which is referred to? — Come and hear: A certain person boxed another's ear and the case was brought before R. Judah Nesi'ah.[8] He said to him: 'Here I am and here is also R. Jose the Galilean, so that you have to pay the plaintiff a Tyrian maneh.' Does this not show that it is a Tyrian maneh which is spoken of in the text? — It does.

What is the meaning of, 'Here I am, and here is also R. Jose the Galilean'? If you say he meant, 'Here I am who witnessed you [doing this] and here is also R. Jose the Galilean who holds that the payment should be a Tyrian maneh; go therefore and thus pay him a Tyrian maneh', would this not imply that a witness is eligible to act [also] as judge? But [how can this be, since] it was taught: If the members of the Sanhedrin saw a man killing another, some of them should act as witnesses and the others should act as judges: this is the opinion of R. Tarfon. R. Akiba [on the other hand] said that all of them are considered witnesses and [they thus cannot act as judges, for] a witness may not act as a judge.[9] Now, even R. Tarfon surely did not mean more than that a part of them should act as witnesses and the others act as judges, but did he ever say that a witness [giving evidence] should be able to act as judge? — The ruling there[10] [that witnesses actually giving evidence would not be eligible to act at the same time as judges] referred only to a case such as where e.g., they saw the murder taking place at night time when they were unable to act in a judicial capacity.[11] Or if you like I may say that what R. Judah Nesi'ah said to the offender was, 'Since I am here who concur with R. Jose the Galilean who stated that a Tyrian maneh should be paid, and since there are here witnesses testifying against you, go and pay the plaintiff a Tyrian maneh.'

Does R. Akiba really maintain that a witness cannot [at the same time] act as judge? But it has been taught: [As Scripture says] And one smite another with a stone or with his fist,[12] Simeon the Temanite remarked that just as a fist is a concrete object that can be submitted for examination to the assembly of the judges and the witnesses, so also it is necessary that all other instruments should be able to be submitted [for consideration] to the assembly of the judges and the witnesses, which excludes the case where the instrument of killing disappeared from under the hands of the witnesses.[13] Said R. Akiba to him: [Even if the instrument was placed before the judges], yet did the actual killing take place before the judges of the Court of Law that they should be expected to know how many times the murderer struck the victim, or again the part of the body upon which he struck him, whether it was upon his thigh or upon the tip of the heart? Again, supposing the murderer threw a man down from the top of a roof or from the top of a mansion house so that the victim died, would the court of law have to go to the mansion or would the mansion have to go to the court of law? Again, if the mansion meanwhile collapsed, would it be necessary to erect it anew [as it was before for the inspection of the court of law]?[14] We must therefore say that just as a fist is a definite object that was placed before the sight of witnesses [when the murder was committed] so also it is necessary that all other instruments should have been placed before the sight of the witnesses, which excludes the case where the instrument of killing disappeared from under the hand of the murderer who is thus free.' We see then that R. Akiba said to him, 'did the actual killing take place before the judges of the Court of Law that they should be expected to know how many times the murderer struck the victim . . . ?' which would imply that if he had killed him in their presence, [they who were the] witnesses would have been able to act as judges! — He was arguing from the point of view of R. Simeon the Temanite but this was not his own opinion.

Our Rabbis taught: 'If an ox while still Tam[15] killed [a person] and subsequently also did damage, the judges will adjudicate on the loss of life[16] but will not adjudicate on the pecuniary damage.[17] In the case however of Mu'ad[18] killing a person and subsequently doing damage the judges will first deal with the pecuniary matter[19] and then adjudicate on the loss of life.[20] But if [for some reason or other], they have already adjudicated on the capital matter it would no more be possible to start dealing with the pecuniary matter.' But even if they first adjudicated on the capital matter, what has happened that it should no more be possible for them to start dealing with the pecuniary matter? Raba said: 'I found the Rabbis at the School of Rab[21] sitting and stating that this teaching follows the view of R. Simeon the Temanite who said that just as a fist is a definite object which can be submitted to the consideration of the assembly of the judges and the witnesses,

---

(1) Cf. B.M. VIII, 1.

(2) A small coin; v. Glos.

(3) Who had herself for the mere value of an isar, publicly uncovered her own head.

(4) From any pecuniary punishment.

(5) Cf. Deut. XX, 19.

(6) Consisting of twenty-five sela's, v. supra p. 204. n. 4.

(7) Which was only an eighth part of a Tyrian maneh; cf. supra p. 204.

(8) I.e., R. Judah II, the Prince.

(9) Sanh. 34b; B.B. 114a.

(10) In the case of Sanhedrin witnessing a murder.

(11) As judgments could be passed only at day time; cf. Sanh. IV, 1. [But where witnessed during the daytime, they can immediately act in the dual capacity of judges and witnesses.]

(12) Ex. XXI, 18.

(13) [Though the witnesses had an opportunity of examining the killing instrument, where the Judges had no such opportunity, no death penalty can be passed.]

(14) [In which case the court relies on the examination made by the witnesses; v. Tosef. Sanh. XII.]

(15) V. Glos.

(16) Cf. Ex. XXI, 28.

(17) Cf. ibid. 35.

(18) V. Glos.

(19) Cf. ibid. 36.

(20) Cf. ibid. 29-30.

(21) Cf. supra p. 487.

[so also all other instruments should be able to be submitted to the consideration of the assembly of the judges and the witnesses], which shows that the inspection[1] [of the instrument] by the Court of Law is essential [before any liability can be imposed]; and in this case where the sentence has already been passed on the ox to be stoned[2] it would not be possible to keep the ox for inspection[1] by the Court of Law, as we could not delay[3] the execution of the judgment. I said to them: 'You may even say that the teaching follows the view of R. Akiba, for we may have been dealing here with a case where the defendant ran away.'[4] But if the defendant ran away even in the case where the capital matter has not yet been adjudicated, how would it be possible to deal with the pecuniary matter in the absence of the defendant? — It was only after the evidence of the witnesses had already been accepted that he ran away.[5] Be that as it may, whence could the payment come[6] [since the defendant ran away]?[7] — Out of the hire obtained from ploughing [done by the ox]. But if so, why also in the case of Tam, should the pecuniary matter not be adjudicated first and the payment made out of the hire obtained from ploughing, and then adjudicate the capital matter? — Said R. Mari the son of R. Kahana: This indeed proves that the hire obtained from ploughing forms a part of the general estate of the owner.[8]

The question was raised: Is an inspection [of the instrument] essential also in the case of mere damage, or is no inspection necessary in the case of mere damage? Shall we say that it is only regarding murder[9] that we have to inspect the instrument, as by means of one instrument life could be taken, while by means of another life could not be taken, whereas regarding mere damage any instrument would be sufficient, or is there perhaps no difference? — Come and hear: 'Just as Pit can cause death because it is usually ten handbreadths [deep], so also [other similar nuisances] should be such as can cause death, [i.e.,] ten handbreadths [deep]. If, however, they were less than ten handbreadths [deep] and an ox or an ass fell into them and died there would be exemption, but if only injured by them there would be liability.'[10] Is not the Tanna here reckoning upwards — so that what he says is that a pit of a depth of from one handbreadth to ten handbreadths could not cause death though it could cause damage, implying that a pit of any depth would involve liability in the case of mere damage and thus indicating that no inspection is necessary regarding mere damage? — No, he reckoned downwards, and thus meant to say that only a pit of ten handbreadths could cause death whereas a Pit a little less than ten handbreadths could cause[11] only damage and not death, so that it may therefore still be argued that inspection might be essential even regarding mere damage and that in each case it may be necessary that the instrument be such as would be fit to cause the particular damage done.

Come and hear: If [the master] struck his slave on the eye and blinded him, or on his ear and deafened him, the slave would on account of that go out free,[12] but if he struck on an object which was opposite the slave's eye through which he lost his sight or on an object which was opposite his ear through which he lost his hearing, the slave would [on account of this] not go out free.[13] Is not the reason of this that consideration of the instrument is required [before any liability can be imposed],[14] which proves that the inspection of the instrument is essential also in the case of mere damage? — No; the reason is because we say that it was the slave who frightened himself, as taught: If a man frightens another he is exempt according to the judgments of Man but liable according to the judgments of Heaven; thus if he blew into his ear and deafened him he would be exempt, but if he actually took hold of his ear and blew into it and thus deafened him he would be liable.[15]

Come and hear: Regarding the Five Items,[16] an estimation will be made and the payment made straight away, though Healing and Loss of Time will have to be estimated for the whole period until he completely recovers. If after the estimation was made his health continued to deteriorate, the payment will not be more than in accordance with the previous estimation. So also if after the estimation was made he recovered rapidly, payment will be made of the whole sum estimated. Does this not show that estimation is essential also in the case of mere damage? — That an estimate has to be made of the length of the illness likely to result from the wound[17] has never been questioned by us, for it is certain that we would have to make such an estimation; the point which was doubtful to us was whether we estimate if the instrument was one likely to do that damage or not. What is indeed the law? — Come and hear: Simeon the Temanite said[18] that just as a fist is a definite object that can be submitted to the consideration of the assembly of the judges and the witnesses, so also all other instruments should be able to be submitted to the consideration of the assembly of the judges and the witnesses. Does this not show that the inspection of the instrument is essential even in the case of mere damage? — It does indeed.

The Master stated: 'So also if after the estimation was made he recovered rapidly payment will be made of the whole sum estimated.' This appears to support the view of Raba. For Raba said: An injured person whose illness was estimated to last the whole day but who, as it happened recovered in the middle of the day and performed his usual work, would still be paid for the whole day, as the unexpected recovery was an act of mercy especially bestowed upon him from Heaven.

IF HE SPAT SO THAT THE SPITTLE REACHED HIM . . . HE HAS TO PAY FOUR HUNDRED ZUZ. R. Papa said: This Mishnaic ruling applies only where it reached him [his person], but if it reached only his garment this would not be so. But why should this not be equivalent to an insult in words? — It was stated in the West[19] in the name of R. Jose b. Abin that this could indeed prove that where the insult was merely in words, there would be exemption from any liability whatsoever.

ALL DEPENDS UPON THE DIGNITY. . . The question was raised: Did the first Tanna mean by this to mitigate or to aggravate the penalty? Did he mean to mitigate the penalty, so that a poor man would not have to be paid so much, or did he perhaps mean to aggravate the penalty, so that a rich man would have to be paid more? — Come and hear: Since R. Akiba[20] stated THAT EVEN THE POOR IN ISRAEL HAVE TO BE CONSIDERED AS IF THEY ARE FREEMEN WHO HAVE BEEN REDUCED IN CIRCUMSTANCES, FOR IN FACT THEY ALL ARE THE DESCENDANTS OF ABRAHAM, ISAAC AND JACOB, does this not show that the first Tanna meant to mitigate the penalty?[21] — It does indeed.

IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A CERTAIN PERSON UNCOVERED THE HEAD OF A WOMAN [IN THE MARKET PLACE . . . FIXED A TIME FOR HIM]. But is time allowed[22] [in such a case]? Did R. Hanina not say that no time is granted in cases of injury? — No time is granted in the case of injury where there is an actual loss of money,[23] but in the case of Degradation, where there is no actual loss of money, time[22] to pay may be granted.

HE WATCHED UNTIL HE SAW HER STANDING OUTSIDE THE DOOR OF HER COURTYARD [. . . FOR IF ONE INJURES ONESELF, THOUGH IT IS FORBIDDEN TO DO SO . . .] But was it not taught: R. Akiba said to him, 'You have dived into the depths and have brought up a potsherd in your hand,[24] for a man may injure himself'? — Raba said: There is no difficulty, as the Mishnaic statement deals with actual injury, whereas the other text referred to Degradation. But surely the Mishnah deals with Degradation,

---

(1) Lit., 'estimation'.

(2) Lit., 'to be killed'.

(3) V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 222, and notes.

(4) So that in his absence we cannot adjudicate the matter.

(5) In which case though judgment could be passed regarding the pecuniary liability it is of no use to do so as the defendant when running away took all available funds with him.

(6) Even in the case where the capital matter has not yet been adjudicated.

(7) With all his available funds.
(8) And could thus not become subject to be paid for damages in the case of Tam, where payment could only be made out of its own body; cf. supra p. 73. [The plaintiff, however, could not take the ox itself in payment as it is to be stoned. V. Tosaf.]
(9) Cf. Num. XXXV, 17, 18 and 23.
(10) V. supra 50b.
(11) I.e., is fit to cause.
(12) Cf. Ex. XXI, 26-27.
(13) Kid. 24b; infra 88a.
(14) And the act of the master in the second case is not considered a cause adequate to effect such a result.
(15) Kid. ibid, and cf. supra 56a.
(16) Enumerated Mishnah supra p. 473,
(17) Lit. 'how long he is likely to suffer . . . and how long he will not.'
(18) Supra pp. 522-3
(19) [This usually represents R. Jeremiah.] Cf. Sanh. 17b.
(20) [And yet R. Akiba does not impose more than four hundred zuz, the same amount as mentioned by the first Tanna.]
(21) [The figure 400 mentioned by him being a maximum whereas R. Akiba would award this amount to all alike.]
(22) For the execution of a judgment.
(23) Sustained by the plaintiff.
(24) I.e., you have gone to a great amount of trouble which could however be of no practical avail.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 91b

and it nevertheless says: If one injures oneself, though it is forbidden to do so, he is exempt? — It was this which he[1] said to him: 'There could be no question regarding Degradation, as a man may put himself to shame, but even in the case of injury where a man may not injure himself, if others injured him they would be liable.' But may a man not injure himself? Was it not taught: You might perhaps think that if a man takes an oath to do harm to himself and did not do so he should be exempt. It is therefore stated: 'To do evil or to do good,'[2] [implying that] just as to do good is permitted, so also to do evil [to oneself] is permitted; I have accordingly to apply [the same law in] the case where a man had sworn to do harm to himself and did not do harm?[3] — Samuel said: The oath referred to was to keep a fast.[4] It would accordingly follow that regarding doing harm to others[5] it would similarly mean to make them keep a fast. But how can one make others keep a fast? — By keeping them locked up in a room. But was it not taught: What is meant by doing harm to others? [If one says], I will smite a certain person and will split his skull?[3] — It must therefore be said that Tannaim differed on this point, for there is one view maintaining that a man may not injure himself and there is another maintaining that a man may injure himself. But who is the Tanna maintaining that a man may not injure himself? It could hardly be said that he was the Tanna of the teaching, And surely your blood of your lives will I require,[6] [upon which] R. Eleazar remarked [that] it meant I will require your blood if shed by the hands of yourselves,[7] for murder is perhaps different. He might therefore be the Tanna of the following teaching: 'Garments may be rent for a dead person[8] as this is not necessarily done to imitate the ways of the Amorites. But R. Eleazar said: I heard that he who rends [his garments] too much for a dead person transgresses the command,[9] 'Thou shalt not destroy',[10] and it seems that this should be the more so in the case of injuring his own body. But garments might perhaps be different, as the loss is irretrievable, for R. Johanan used to call garments 'my honourers',[11] and R. Hisda whenever he had to walk between thorns and thistles used to lift up his garments Saying that whereas for the body [if injured] nature will produce a healing, for garments [if torn] nature could bring up no cure.[12] He must therefore be the Tanna of the following teaching: R. Eleazar Hakkapar Berabbi[13] said: What is the point of the words: 'And make an atonement for him, for that he sinned regarding the soul.'[14] Regarding what soul did this [Nazarite] sin unless by having deprived himself of wine? Now can we not base on this an argument a fortiori: If a Nazarite who deprived himself only of wine is already called a sinner, how much the more so one who deprives oneself of all matters?'[15]

HE WHO CUTS DOWN HIS OWN PLANTS . . . Rabbah b. Bar Hanah recited in the presence of Rab: [Where a plaintiff pleads] 'You killed my ox, you cut my plants, [pay compensation', and the defendant responds:] 'You told me to kill it, you told me to cut it down', he would be exempt. He [Rab] said to him. If so you almost make it impossible for anyone to live, for how can you trust him? — He therefore said to him: Has this teaching to be deleted? — He replied: No; your teaching could hold good in the case where the ox was marked for slaughter[16] and so also the tree had to be cut down.[17] If so what plea has he against him? — He says to him: I wanted to perform the precept myself in the way taught: 'He shall pour out . . . and cover it',[18] implying that he who poured out[19] has to cover it; but it once happened that a certain person performed the slaughter and another anticipated him and covered [the blood], and R. Gamaliel condemned the latter to pay ten gold coins.[20]

Rab said: A palm tree producing even one kab of fruit may not be cut down. An objection was raised [from the following]: What quantity should be on an olive tree so that it should not be permitted to cut it down? A quarter of a kab.[21] — Olives are different as they are more important. R. Hanina said: Shibhath[22] my son did not pass away except for having cut down a fig tree before its time. Rabina, however, said: If its value [for other purposes] exceeds that for fruit, it is permitted [to cut it down]. It was also taught to the same effect: 'Only the trees of which thou knowest'[23] implies even fruit-bearing trees;[24] That they be not trees for meat, means a wild tree. But since we ultimately include all things, why then was it stated, That they are not trees for food? To give priority[25] to a wild tree over one bearing edible fruits.

---

(1) I.e., R. Akiba.

(2) Lev. V, 4.

(3) Shebu. 27a.

(4) But in other ways a man may not injure himself.

(5) Dealt with in Shebu 27a.

(6) Gen. IX, 5.

(7) I.e., for committing suicide.

(8) Cf. II Sam. I, 11, and II Kings II, 12. Cf. also Sanh. 52b.

(9) According to the text, 'Will be lashed on account of transgressing' which could however hardly be substantiated; Cf. Tosaf. a.l.

(10) Deut. XX, 19.

(11) Sanh. 94a.

(12) Cf. Taan. 23a.

(13) A title of some scholars who belonged to the school of R. Judah the prince.

(14) Num. VI, 11; E.V.: for that he sinned by the dead.

(15) R. Eleazar Hakkapar is thus the Tanna forbidding self-injury.

(16) Such as where it killed a human being; cf. Ex. XXI, 28.

(17) Such as where it constituted a danger to the public or where it was planted for idolatrous purposes; cf. Deut. XII, 3.

(18) Lev. XVII, 13.

(19) I.e., he who acted as slaughterer.

(20) Hul. 87a.

(21) Sheb. IV, 10. [Why then should the palm tree require a bigger quantity?]

(22) B.B. 26a. There he is called 'Shikhath'.

(23) Deut. XX, 20.

(24) [That is where it is known that they no longer produce any fruits, v. Malbim, a.l.]

(25) To be cut down.

As you might say that this is so even where the value [for other purposes] exceeds that for fruits, it says 'only'.[1] Samuel's field labourer brought him some dates. As he partook of them he tasted wine in them. When he asked the labourer how that came about, he told him that the date trees were placed between vines. He said to him: Since they are weakening the vines so much, bring me their roots tomorrow.[2] When R. Hisda saw certain palms among the vines he said to his field labourers: 'Remove them with their roots. Vines can easily buy palms but palms cannot buy vines.'[2]

MISHNAH. EVEN THOUGH THE OFFENDER PAYS HIM [COMPENSATION], THE OFFENCE IS NOT FORGIVEN UNTIL HE ASKS HIM FOR PARDON, AS IT SAYS: NOW THEREFORE RESTORE THE MAN'S WIFE ETC.[3] WHENCE CAN WE LEARN THAT SHOULD THE INJURED PERSON NOT FORGIVE HIM HE WOULD BE [STIGMATISED AS] CRUEL? FROM THE WORDS: SO ABRAHAM PRAYED UNTO GOD AND GOD HEALED ABIMELECH ETC.[4] IF THE PLAINTIFF SAID: 'PUT OUT MY EYE, CUT OFF MY ARM AND BREAK MY LEG,' THE OFFENDER WOULD NEVERTHELESS BE LIABLE; [AND SO ALSO EVEN IF HE TOLD HIM TO DO IT] ON THE UNDERSTANDING THAT HE WOULD BE EXEMPT HE WOULD STILL BE LIABLE. IF THE PLAINTIFF SAID: 'TEAR MY GARMENT AND BREAK MY PITCHER,' THE DEFENDANT WOULD STILL BE LIABLE, BUT IF HE SAID TO HIM: '[DO THIS] ON THE UNDERSTANDING THAT YOU WILL BE EXEMPT,' HE WOULD BE EXEMPT.[5] BUT IF ONE SAID TO THE DEFENDANT: 'DO THIS TO A THIRD PERSON[6] ON THE UNDERSTANDING THAT YOU WILL BE EXEMPT,' THE DEFENDANT WOULD BE LIABLE, WHETHER WHERE THE INJURY WAS DONE TO THE PERSON OR TO HIS CHATTELS.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: All these fixed sums stated above[7] specify only the payment [civilly due] for Degradation. For regarding the hurt done to the feelings of the plaintiff, even if the offender should bring all the 'rams of Nebaioth'[8] in the world,[9] the offence would not be forgiven until he asks him for pardon, as it is written: Now therefore restore the man's wife for he is a prophet and he will pray for thee.[10] But is it only the wife of a prophet who has to be restored, whereas the wife of another man need not be restored? R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Johanan: 'Restore the man's wife' [surely implies] in all cases; for as to your allegation, Wilt thou slay even a righteous nation? Said he not unto me, She is my sister and she even she herself said: He is my brother,[11] [you should know that] he is a prophet who has already [by act and deed][12] taught the world that where a stranger comes to a city whether he is to be questioned regarding food and drink — or regarding his wife, whether she is his wife or sister. From this we can learn that a descendant of Noah[13] may become liable to death if he had the opportunity to acquire instruction[14] and did not do so [and so committed a crime through the ignorance of the law].

For to close the Lord had closed up [all the wombs of the house of Abimelech].[15] R. Eleazar said: Why is 'closing up' mentioned twice?[16] There was one 'closing up' in the case of males, viz. semen [virile], and two in the case of females, viz. semen and the giving of birth. In a Baraitha it was taught that there were two in the case of males, viz. semen [virile] and urinating, and three in the case of females, i.e. semen, urinating and the giving of birth. Rabina said: Three in the case of males, viz. semen [virile], urinating and anus, and four in the case of females, viz. semen and the giving of birth, urinating and anus. 'All the wombs of the house of Abimelech.' It was stated at the College of R. Jannai that even a hen of the house of Abimelech did not lay an egg [at that time].

Raba said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the lesson taught by our Rabbis that one who solicits mercy for his fellow while he himself is in need of the same thing, [will be answered first]? — He replied: As it is written: And the Lord changed the fortune of Job when he prayed for his friends.[17] He said to him: You say it is from that text, but I say it is from this text: 'And Abraham prayed unto God and God healed Abimelech and his wife and his maidservants,'[18] and immediately after it Says: And the Lord remembered Sarah as he had said, etc.,[19] [i.e.] as Abraham had [prayed and] said regarding Abimelech.

Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the proverbial saying that together with the thorn the cabbage is smitten?[20] — He replied: As it is written, Wherefore will ye contend with Me, ye all have transgressed against Me, says the Lord.[21] He said to him: You derive it from that text, but I derive it from this, How long refuse ye[22] to keep My commandments and My laws.[23] Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: It is written: 'And from among his brethren, he took five men.[24] Who were these five? — He replied: Thus said R. Johanan that 'they were those whose names were repeated [in the Farewell of Moses].'[25] But was not the name Judah repeated too?[26] He replied: The repetition in the case of Judah was for a different purpose, as stated by R. Samuel b. Nahmani that R. Johanan said: What is the meaning of the words, Let Reuben live and not die, in that his men become few, and this is for Judah?[27] All the forty years that the Israelites were in the wilderness the bones of Judah were scattered[28] in the coffin[29] until Moses came and solicited for mercy by saying thus to God: Master of the universe, who brought Reuben to confess[30] if not Judah?[31] Hear [therefore] Lord the voice of Judah! Thereupon each limb fitted itself into its original place.[32] He was, however, not permitted to ascend to the heavenly gathering[33] until Moses said: And bring him in unto his people.[34] As, however, he did not know what the Rabbis were saying and was thus unable to argue with the Rabbis on matters of the law, Moses said: His hands shall contend for him![34] As again he was unable to bring his statement into accord with the Halachah, Moses said, Thou shalt be a help against his adversaries![34]

Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence[35] can be derived the popular saying that poverty follows the poor?[36] — He replied: We have learnt:[37] 'The rich used to bring the first fruits[38] in baskets of gold and silver, but the poor brought it in wicker baskets made out of the bark of willow, and thus gave the baskets as well as the first-fruits to the priest.'[39] He said to him: You derive it from there, but I derive it from this:

---

(1) Which qualifies and thus exempts such a case from giving priority to wild trees over those bearing edible fruits.

(2) As the value of the produce of vines surpasses that of palms.

(3) Gen. XX, 7.

(4) Ibid. 17.

(5) For the distinction between injury to the person and damage to chattels see the Gemara.

(6) Lit., 'to such and such person'; cf. Ruth IV, 1.

(7) Supra pp. 520-1.

(8) Isa. LX, 7.

(9) For the purpose of propitiation.

(10) Gen. XX, 7.

(11) Ibid. 4-5. [Ms.M. 'He learned it from thee'; i.e. thy conduct in questioning a stranger, of which he as 'a prophet' became cognisant, put him on his guard. Cf. Mak. 9a.]

(12) Ibid. XVIII, 2-8.

(13) Who is subject to the seven commandments of civilized humanity enumerated in Sanh. 56a; cf. also supra.

(14) Regarding the elementary laws of humanity.

(15) Gen. XX, 18; E.V.: For the Lord had fast closed up. . .

(16) I.e., in the infinitive and finite mood.

(17) Job XLII, 10.

(18) Gen. XX, 17.

(19) Gen. XXI, I.

(20) I.e., that the good are punished with the bad.

(21) Jer. II, 29.

(22) [Including, as it were, Moses and Aaron.]

(23) Ex. XVI, 28.
(24) Gen. XLVII, 2.
(25) Deut. XXXIII, 2-29; (besides Judah) the five were as follows: Dan, Zebulun, Gad, Asher and Naphtali. These names had to be repeated in the blessing as they were the weakest among the tribes.
(26) As in Deut. XXXIII, 7 (though his tribe was by no means among the weak ones).
(27) Deut. XXXIII, 6.7.
(28) I.e., they were not kept together.
(29) As the bones of all the heads of the tribes just as those of Joseph were, according to homiletic interpretation, carried away from Egypt to the Promised Land. Cf. Mid. Rab. on Gen. L, 25.
(30) Cf. Gen. XXXV, 22 and XLIX, 4.
(31) Who made public confession in Gen. XXXVIII, 26.
(32) I.e., they were again made into one whole.
(33) Where matters of law are considered; cf. B.M. 86a.
(34) Deut. XXXIII, 7.
(35) V. Mak. 11b.
(36) B.B. 174b.
(37) Bik. III, 8.
(38) Cf. Ex. XXXIV, 26.
(39) So that the rich took back their gold or silver baskets, whereas the poor did not receive back their baskets made of the bark of the willow.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 92b

And shall cry unclean, unclean.[1]

Rabbah [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the advice given by our Rabbis:[2] Have early breakfast in the summer because of the heat, and in the winter because of the cold, and people even say that sixty[3] men may pursue him who has early meals in the mornings and will not overtake him? — He replied: As it is written, They shall not hunger nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor sun smite them.[4] He said to him: You derive it from that text but I derive it from this one, And ye shall serve the Lord your God:[5] this [as has been explained] refers to the reading of Shema'[6] and the Tefillah,'[7] 'And he will bless thy bread and thy water:'[5] this refers to the bread dipped in salt and to the pitcher of water;[8] and after this, I will take [Mahalah, i.e.] sickness away from the midst of thee.[5] It was [also] taught: Mahalah[9] means gall;[10] and why is it called mahalah! Because eighty-three different kinds of illnesses may result from it [as the numerical value of mahalah amounts exactly to this];[11] but they all are counteracted by partaking in the morning of bread dipped in salt followed by a pitcher of water.

Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the saying of the Rabbis: 'If thy neighbour calls thee an ass put a saddle on thy back?'[12] — He replied: As it is written: And he said: Hagar, Sarai's handmaid; Whence camest thou and whither goest thou? And she said: I flee from the face of my mistress Sarai.[13]

Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying: 'If there is any matter of reproach in thee be the first to tell it?' — He replied: As it was written: And he said, I am Abraham's servant.[14]

Raba again said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying: 'Though a duck keeps its head down while walking its eyes look afar'? — He replied: As it is written: And when the Lord shall have dealt well with my lord then remember thy handmaid.[15] Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying, 'Sixty[16] pains reach the teeth of him who hears the noise made by another man eating[17] while he himself does not eat'? — He replied: As it is written, But me, even me thy servant and Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not called.[18] He said to him: You derive it from that verse, but I derive it from this verse, And Isaac brought her unto his mother Sarah's tent, and took Rebekah and she became his wife; and he loved her. And Isaac was comforted for his mother;[19] and soon after it is written, And again Abraham took another wife and her name was Keturah.[20]

Raba [further] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying, 'Though the wine belongs to the owner, the thanks are given to the butler'? — He replied: As it is written, And thou shalt put of thy honour upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may hearken,[21] and it is also written, 'And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hands upon him; and the children of Israel hearkened unto him. etc.[22]

Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying, 'A dog when hungry is ready to swallow even his [own] excrements'?[23] — He replied: As it is written, The full soul loatheth an honeycomb, but to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet.[24]

Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying, 'A bad palm will usually make its way to a grove of barren trees'? — He replied: This matter was written in the Pentateuch, repeated in the Prophets, mentioned a third time in the Hagiographa, and also learnt in a Mishnah and taught in a Baraitha: It is stated in the Pentateuch as written, So Esau went unto Ishmael;[25] repeated in the prophets, as written, And there gathered themselves to Jephthah idle men and they went out with him;[26] mentioned a third time in the Hagiographa, as written: Every fowl dwells near its kind and man near his equal;[27] it was learnt in the Mishnah: 'All that which is attached to an article that is subject to the law of defilement,[28] will similarly become defiled, but all that which is attached to anything which would always remain [levitically] clean would similarly remain clean;[29] and it was also taught in a Baraitha: R. Eliezer said: 'Not for nothing did the starling follow the raven, but because it is of its kind.'[30] Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying: 'If you draw the attention of your fellow to warn him [and he does not respond], you may push a big wall and throw it at him'?[31] — He replied: As it is written: Because I have purged thee and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more.[32]

Raba again said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying: 'Into the well from which you have once drank water do not throw clods?' He replied: As it is written: Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother; thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian because thou wast a stranger in his land.[33]

Raba again said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular Saying, 'If thou wilt join me in lifting the burden I will carry it, and if not I will not carry it?' — He replied: As it is written: And Barak said unto her, If thou wilt go with me, then I will go; but if thou wilt not go with me, I will not go.[34]

Raba again said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular Saying: 'When we were young we were treated as men, whereas now that we have grown old we are looked upon as babies'? — He replied: It is first written: And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light,[35]

---

(1) Lev. XIII, 45. I.e., in addition to the affliction of the leprosy, he is compelled by Jaw to make it public.

(2) Cf. B.M. 107b.

(3) A common hyperbolical term.

(4) Isa. XLIX, 10. Which might imply as follows: If they will neither hunger nor thirst, but eat in time and drink in time, then neither the heat nor the sun shall smite them.

(5) Ex. XXIII, 25.

(6) [Lit., 'Hear (O Israel!)' introducing the three passages from Scriptures (Deut. VI, 4-9; XI, 13-21; Num. XV, 37-41) recited twice daily — in the morning and the evening.]
(7) [Lit., 'Prayer', the 'Eighteen Benedictions', the main constituents of the regular prayers recited three times daily.]
(8) Constituting the meal of breakfast after the morning prayer; cf. however Shab. 10a and Pes. 12b.
(9) E.V., disease.
(10) [Evidently connecting mahalah with Gr.  (Preuss, Medezin, p. 215.]
(11) מחלה == forty, eight, thirty and five.
(12) I.e., do not quarrel with him for the purpose of convincing him otherwise.
(13) Gen. XVI, 8.
(14) Ibid. XXIV, 34.
(15) 1 Sam. XXV, 31. Spoken by Abigail to David and hinting thus that she would wish to become his wife in future days.
(16) V. supra p. 534, n.13.
(17) Cf. Keth. 61.
(18) I Kings, 1, 26.
(19) Gen. XXIV, 67.
(20) Ibid. XXV, 1.
(21) Num. XXVII, 18-20.
(22) Deut. XXXIV, 9. Though the spirit of wisdom belongs to God it is nevertheless ascribed to Moses.
(23) [Others: 'stones'.]
(24) Prov. XXVII, 7.
(25) Gen. XXVIII, 9.
(26) Judges XI, 3.
(27) Ecclesiasticus. XIII, 15.
(28) Such as where a metal hook was fixed into a wooden receptacle, which is subject to the law of defilement.
(29) Such as where the hook was stuck into a piece of wood which did not form a receptacle; v. Kel. XII. 2.
(30) Hul. 65a. [The reference is to the small Egyptian raven incident, v. Gen. Rab. LXV, and R. Eliezer had probably a similar incident in mind.]
(31) I.e., you can no more be responsible for any misfortune that his inattention may bring upon him.
(32) Ezek. XXIV, 13.
(33) Deut. XXIII, 8.
(34) Judges IV, 8.
(35) Ex. XIII, 21.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 93a

but subsequently it is written: Behold I send an angel before thee to keep thee by the way.[1]

Raba [again] said to Rabbah b. Mari: Whence can be derived the popular saying: 'Behind an owner of wealth chips are dragged along'? — He replied: As it is written: And Lot also who went with Abram had flocks and herds and tents.[2]

R. Hanan said: He who invokes the judgment of Heaven against his fellow is himself punished first, as it says, And Sarai said unto Abram, My wrong be upon thee[3] etc., and it is subsequently written, And Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her.[4] This, however, is the case only where justice could be obtained in a temporal Court of Law. R. Isaac said: Woe to him who cries [for divine intervention] even more than to him against whom it is invoked! It was taught likewise: Both the one who cries for divine intervention and the one against whom it is invoked come under the Scriptural threat,[5] but punishment is meted out first to the one who cries, [and is] more severe than for the one against whom justice is invoked.[6] R. Isaac again said: The curse of an ordinary man should never be considered a trifling matter in your eyes,[7] for when Abimelech called a curse upon Sarah it was fulfilled in her seed, as it says, Behold it is for thee a covering of the eyes,[8]

[which implies that] he said to her, ‘Since thou hast covered the truth from me and not disclosed that he was thy husband, and hast thus caused me all this trouble, let it be the will [of Heaven] that there shall be to thee a covering of the eyes,’[9] and this was actually fulfilled in her seed, as it is written: And it came to pass that when Isaac was old and his eyes were dim so that he could not see.[10] R. Abbahu said: A man should always strive to be rather of the persecuted than of the persecutors as there is none among the birds more persecuted than doves and pigeons, and yet Scripture made them [alone][11] eligible for the altar.[12]

IF THE PLAINTIFF SAID: PUT OUT MY EYE . . . ON THE UNDERSTANDING THAT HE WOULD BE EXEMPT, HE WOULD STILL BE LIABLE. IF THE PLAINTIFF SAID: TEAR MY GARMENT ON THE UNDERSTANDING THAT YOU WILL BE EXEMPT HE WOULD BE EXEMPT. R. Assi b. Hama[13] said to Rabbah:[14] Why is the rule differing in the former case and in the latter case? — He replied: [There is liability in] the former case because no man truly pardons the wounding of his principal limbs. The others rejoined: Does a man then pardon the inflicting of pain, seeing that it was taught: ‘If the plaintiff had said, "Smite me and wound me on the understanding that you will be exempt," the defendant would be exempt.’ He had no answer and said: Have you heard anything on this matter? — He[15] thereupon said to him: This is what R. Shesheth has said: The liability is because [the plaintiff had no right to pardon] the discredit to the family. It was similarly stated: R. Oshaia said: Because of the discredit to the family, whereas Raba said: Because no man could truly pardon the injury done to his principal limbs. R. Johanan, however, said: Sometimes the term ‘Yes’ means ‘No’[16] and the term ‘No’ means ‘Yes’ [as when spoken ironically].[17] It was also taught likewise: If the plaintiff said, ‘Smite me and wound me,’ and when the defendant interposed, ‘On the understanding of being exempt, the plaintiff replied, ‘Yes,’ there may be a ‘Yes’ which implies ‘No’ [i.e., when spoken ironically]. If the plaintiff said, ‘Tear my garment,’ and when the defendant interposed, ‘On the Understanding of being exempt, he said to him, ‘No’, there may be a ‘No’ which means ‘Yes’ [such as when spoken ironically].[17]

IF THE DEFENDANT SAID: BREAK MY PITCHER AND TEAR MY GARMENT, THE DEFENDANT WOULD STILL BE LIABLE. A contradiction was pouched out: "’To keep"[18] but not to destroy; "to keep", but not to tear; "to keep" but not to distribute to the poor,’ [in which case the liability of bailees would not apply. Why then liability in the Mishnah]?[19] — Said R. Huna: There is no difficulty, as here[20] the article came into his hands,[21] whereas there[22] the article did not come into his hands.[23] Said Rabbah to him: Does the expression ‘To keep’[24] not imply that the article has come into his hands? — Rabbah therefore said: This case as well as the other is one in which the article has come into his hands, and still there is no difficulty, as in the case here[25] the article originally came into his hands[21] for the purpose of being guarded, whereas there[22] it came to his hands for the purpose of being torn.

A purse of money for charity having been brought to Pumbeditha, R. Joseph deposited it with a certain person who, however, was so negligent that thieves came and stole it. R. Joseph declared liability [to pay], but Abaye said to him: Was it not taught: ‘To keep’[24] but not to distribute to the poor? — R. Joseph rejoined: The poor of Pumbeditha have a fixed allowance,[26] and the charity money could thus be considered as having been deposited ‘to keep’ [and not to distribute it to the poor].[27] [

---

(1) Ibid. XXIII, 20.

(2) Gen. XIII, 5.

(3) Ibid. XVI, 5.

(4) Ibid. XXIII, 2.

(5) Cf. Ex. XXII, 23.

(6) As in the case of Sarah; Gen. XVI, 5 and ibid. XXIII, 2.

(7) Cf. Ex. XXII, 23.

(8) Gen. XX, 16.
(9) I.e., blindness.
(10) Gen. XXVII, 1.
(11) Among birds.
(12) Cf. Lev.I, 14.
(13) [MS.M.: 'R. Joseph b. Hama' the father of Raba.]
(14) Raba in the text and 'Rab' in the text of Asheri, v. Marginal Glosses in cur. edd.
(15) I.e., R. Assi.
(16) Cf. supra pp. 178-9.
(17) According to Rashi there is strictly speaking no difference between the case dealt with in the commencing and that of the concluding clause; as all depends upon the implied intention, the illustration being in each case taken from what is usual, for while a man will pardon damage done to his chattel, he will not do so in regard to personal pain. But that this was not so was maintained by Tosaf.
(18) Ex. XXII, 6.
(19) Where he gave him the pitcher to break it and the garment to tear it.
(20) In the case of the Mishnah.
(21) I.e., to the hand of the one who did the damage.
(22) In Ex.
(23) But was destroyed before it actually reached the hand of the bailee.
(24) Ibid.
(25) In the case of the Mishnah.
(26) So much per week.
(27) As there were in that case definite plaintiffs.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 93b

CHAPTER IX

MISHNAH. IF ONE MISAPPROPRIATES PIECES OF WOOD AND MAKES UTENSILS OUT OF THEM, OR PIECES OF WOOL AND MAKES GARMENTS OUT OF THEM, HE HAS TO PAY FOR THEM IN ACCORDANCE WITH [THEIR VALUE AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY.[1] IF ONE MISAPPROPRIATED A PREGNANT COW WHICH MEANWHILE GAVE BIRTH [TO A CALF], OR A SHEEP BEARING WOOL WHICH HE SHEARED, HE WOULD PAY THE VALUE OF A COW WHICH WAS ABOUT TO GIVE BIRTH [TO A CALF], AND THE VALUE OF A SHEEP WHICH WAS READY TO BE SHORN [RESPECTIVELY]. BUT IF HE MISAPPROPRIATED A COW WHICH BECAME PREGNANT WHILE WITH HIM AND THEN GAVE BIRTH, OR A SHEEP WHICH WHILE WITH HIM GREW WOOL WHICH HE SHEARED, HE WOULD PAY IN ACCORDANCE WITH [THE VALUE AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY. THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: ALL ROBBERS HAVE TO PAY IN ACCORDANCE WITH [THE VALUE OF THE MISAPPROPRIATED ARTICLES AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY.

GEMARA. Shall we say that it is only where he actually made utensils out of the pieces of wood [that the Mishnaic ruling will apply], whereas if he merely planed them this would not be so?[2] Again, it is only where he made garments out of the wool that this will be so, whereas where he merely bleached it this would not be so! But could not a contradiction be raised from the following: 'One who misappropriated pieces of wood and planed them, stones and chiselled them, wool and bleached it or flax and cleansed it, would have to pay in accordance with [the value] at the time of the robbery'?[3] — Said Abaye: The Tanna of our Mishnah stated the ruling where the change [in the article misappropriated] is only such as is recognised by the Rabbis, that is, where it can still revert [to its former condition] and of course it applies all the more where the change is such[4] as is recognised by the pentateuch:[5] [for the expression ONE WHO MISAPPROPRIATES] PIECES OF WOOD AND MAKES OUT OF THEM UTENSILS refers to pieces of wood already planed, such as ready-made boards, in which a reversion to the previous condition is still possible, since if he likes he can easily pull the boards out [and thus have them as they were previously]; PIECES OF WOOL AND MADE GARMENTS OUT OF THEE also refers to wool which was already spun, in which [similarly] a reversion to the previous condition is possible, since if he likes he can pull out the threads and restore them to the previous condition; the same law would apply all the more in the case of a change [where the article could no more revert to the previous condition and] which would thus be recognised by the pentateuch.[5] But the Tanna of the Baraitha deals only with a change [where the article could no more revert to its previous condition and] which would thus be recognised by the pentateuch, but does not deal with a change [in which the article could revert to its previous condition and which would be] recognised only by the Rabbis. R. Ashi, however, said: The Tanna of our [Mishnah also] deals with a change which would be recognised by the pentateuch, for by PIECES OF WOOD AND MAKES UTENSILS OUT OF THEM he means clubs, which were changed by planing them; by PIECES OF WOOL AND MAKES GARMENTS OUT OF THEM he similarly means felt cloths, which involves a change that can no more revert to its previous condition.

But should bleaching be considered a change?[6] Could no contradiction be raised [from the following]: 'If the owner did not manage to give the first of the fleece to the priest until it had already been dyed, he would be exempt,[7] but if he only bleached it without having dyed it, he would still be liable'?[8] — Said Abaye: This is no difficulty, as the former statement is in accordance with R. Simeon and the latter in accordance with the Rabbis; for it was taught: 'If after the owner had shorn his sheep he span the wool or wove it, this portion would not be taken into account[9] [with the other wool which was still left in a raw state];[10] but if he only purified it, R. Simeon says: It would [still] not be taken into account, whereas the Sages say that it would be taken into account. But Raba said that both statements might be in accordance with R. Simeon, and there would still be no difficulty, as in one case[11] [the process of bleaching was] by beating the wool [where no actual change took place], whereas in the other case[12] the wool was corded with a comb. R. Hiyya b. Abin said that in one case[11] the wool was merely washed [so that no actual change took place]. whereas in the other[12] it was whitened with sulphur. But since even dyeing is according to R. Simeon not considered a change, how could bleaching be considered a change, for was it not taught: 'Where the owner had shorn one sheep after another and in the interval dyed the [respective] fleeces, [or shorn] one after another and in the interval spun the wool, [or shorn] one after another and in the interval wove the wool, this portion would not be taken into account,[9] but R. Simeon b. Judah said in the name of R. Simeon[13] that if he [only] dyed the wool it would be taken into account'?[14] — Said Abaye: There is no difficulty, as the former statement was made by the Rabbis according to R. Simeon whereas the latter[15] was made by R. Simeon b. Judah according to R. Simeon. But Raba said: You may still say that the Rabbis did not differ from R. Simeon b. Judah on this point,[16] for dyeing might be different, the reason being that since the colour could be removed by soap, [it is not considered a change], and as to the statement made there, 'If the owner did not manage to give the first of his fleece to the priest until it had already been dyed he would be exempt' which has been stated to be accepted unanimously, this deals with a case where it was dyed with indigo [which could not be removed by soap].

Abaye said: R. Simeon b. Judah, Beth Shammai, R. Eliezer b. Jacob. R. Simeon b. Eleazar and R. Ishmael all maintain that a change leaves the article in its previous status: R. Simeon b. Judah here in the text quoted by us; but what about Beth Shammai? — As it was taught:[17] 'Where he gave her as her hire wheat of which she made flour, or olives of which she made oil, or grapes of which she made wine,' one [Baraitha] taught that 'the produce is forbidden to be sacrificed upon the altar,' whereas another [Baraitha] taught 'it is permitted'. and R. Joseph said: Gorion

---

(1) I.e., of the pieces of wood and wool but not of the utensils and garments respectively, as by the change which took place he acquired title to them; cf. supra p. 384.

(2) I.e., the ownership would thereby not be transferred to the robber.
(3) The reason being that through the change which took place the ownership was transferred.
(4) I.e., where the article can no longer revert to its former condition; v. supra p. 386.
(5) To transfer ownership.
(6) In regard to which it was stated in the Baraitha that the robber will thereby acquire title to the wool.
(7) As by this change the original obligation was annulled and the owner acquired unqualified and absolute right to the wool.
(8) Hul. XI, 2; v. supra p. 382. Does not this prove that mere bleaching unlike dyeing does not constitute a change?
(9) In regard to the first fleece offering the minimum of which is according to R. Dosa b. Harkinas the weight of seven maneh and a half collected equally from not less than five sheep, but according to the Rabbis one maneh and a half collected equally from the same number of sheep would suffice; cf. Hul. XI, 2. A maneh amounts to twenty-five sela's; for Samuel's view according to the Rabbis cf ibid. 137b.
(10) On account of the change which had been made.
(11) Not considering it a change.
(12) Considering it a change.
(13) I.e., R. Simeon b. Yohai; cf. Sheb. 2b.
(14) This shows that R. Simeon b. Yohai does not consider dyeing a change, much less bleaching.
(15) v. p. 443. n. 5.
(16) As to the view of R. Simeon b. Yohai on this matter.
(17) For notes on passage following v. supra p. 380.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 94a

of Aspurak taught: ‘Beth Shammai prohibit the produce to be used as sacrifices, whereas Beth Hillel permit it.’ Now, what was the reason of Beth Shammai? — Because it is written gam, to include their transformation. But Beth Hillel maintains that hem implies only them and not their transformations. Beth Shammai, however, maintains that though hem is written, what it implies is ‘them and not their offsprings’. Beth Hillel still argue that you can understand both points from it: ‘them and not their transformations, them and not their offsprings.’ But how could Beth Hillel explain the insertion of gam? Gam offers a difficulty according to the view of Beth Hillel.

What about R. Eliezer b. Jacob? — As it was taught:[1] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: If one misappropriated a se'ah[2] of wheat and kneaded it and baked it and set aside a portion of it as hallah,[3] how would he be able to pronounce the benediction?[4] He would surely not be pronouncing a blessing but pronouncing a blasphemy, as to such a one could be applied the words: The robber pronounceth a benediction [but in fact] contemneth the Lord.[5]

What about R. Simeon b. Eleazar? — As it was taught: This principle was stated by R. Simeon b. Eleazar: In respect of any improvement carried out by the robber, he would have the upper hand; if he wishes he can take the improvement, or if he wishes he may say to the plaintiff: ‘Here take your own.’ What is meant by this [last] statement?[6] — Said R. Shesheth: This is meant: Where the article has been improved, the robber may take the increased value, but where it has deteriorated he may say to him: ‘Here, take your own,’ as a change leaves the article in its previous status. But if so why should it not be the same even in the case where the article was improved? We may reply, in order to make matters easier for repentant robbers.[7]

What about R. Ishmael? — It was taught:[8] [Strictly speaking,] the precept of Pe'ah[9] requires that it should be set aside from standing crops. If, however, the owner did not set it aside from standing crops he should set it aside from the sheaves; so also if he did not set it aside from the sheaves he should set it aside from the heap [in his store] so long as he has not evened the pile. But if he had already evened the pile[10] he would have first to tithe it and then set aside the Pe'ah for the poor.

Moreover, In the name of R. Ishmael it was stated that the owner would even have to set it aside from the dough and give it to the poor.[11] Said R. papa to Abaye: Why was it necessary to repeat and bring together all these Tannaitic statements for the sole purpose of making us know that they concurred with Beth Shammai?[12] — He replied: It was for the purpose of telling us that Beth Hillel and the Beth Shammai did probably not differ at all on this matter. But Raba said: What ground have we for saying that all these Tannaim follow one view? Why not perhaps say that R. Simeon b. Judah meant his statement there[13] to apply only to the case of dyeing on account of the fact that the colour could be removed by soap, and so also did Beth Shammai mean their view there to apply only to a religious offering because it looks repulsive, or again that R. Eliezer b. Jacob meant his statement there to apply only to a benediction on the ground that it was a precept performed by the means of a transgression,[14] and so also did R. Simeon b. Eleazar mean his view there to apply only to a deterioration which can be replaced, or again R. Ishmael meant his view there to apply only to the law of Pe'ah, on account of the repeated expression. 'Thou shalt leave'?[15] If however you argue that we should derive the law[16] from the latter case,[17] [it might surely be said that] gifts to the poor are altogether different,[18] as is shown by the question of R. Jonathan. For R. Jonathan asked concerning the reason of R. Ishmael: 'Was it because he held that a change does not transfer ownership, or does he as a rule hold that a change would transfer ownership, but here it is different on account of the repeated expression, Thou shalt leave'![19]

But if you find ground for assuming that the reason of R. Ishmael was because a change does not transfer ownership, why then did the Divine Law repeat the expression 'Thou shalt leave'?[15] Again, according to the Rabbis, why did the Divine Law repeat the expression 'Thou shalt leave'? — This [additional] insertion was necessary for that which was taught:[20] If a man after renouncing the ownership of his vineyard gets up early on the following morning and cuts off the grapes, he will be subject to the laws of Peret, 'Oleloth, Forgetting and Pe'ah,[21] but will be exempt from tithes.

Rab Judah said that Samuel stated that the halachah is in accordance with R. Simeon b. Eleazar.[22] But did Samuel really say so? Did not Samuel state that assessment of the carcass is made neither in cases of theft nor of robbery, but only of damage?[23] I grant you that according to Raba who said that the statement made there by R. Simeon b. Eleazar related only to a deterioration where a recovery would still be possible, there would be no difficulty since Samuel in his statement that the halachah is in accordance with R. Simeon b. Eleazar [who holds] that a change leaves the article in its previous status, referred to the case of deterioration where a recovery would still be possible, whereas the statement made there[23] by Samuel that assessment of the carcass is made neither in the case of theft nor of robbery but only of damage would apply to deterioration where no recovery seems possible. But according to Abaye who said that the statement made by R. Simeon b. Eleazar [also] referred to deterioration where a recovery is no more possible, how can we get over the contradiction? — But Abaye might read thus: Rab Judah said that Samuel stated:

---

(1) Cf. Sanh. 6b.

(2) V. Glos.

(3) I.e., the priestly portion set aside from dough. cf. Num. XV, 19-21.

(4) According to Asheri on Ber. 45a it refers to the grace over the meal.

(5) Ps. X. 3; [E.V.: And the covetous renounceth, yea, contemneth the Lord. In spite of the many changes the wheat had undergone it is still not his and not fit to have a blessing uttered over it.]

(6) For in the case of improvement it is surely not in the interests of the robber to plead, 'Here is thine before thee.'

(7) Cf. supra p. 383 and infra 547.

(8) Sanh. 68a; Mak. 16b.

(9) 'The corners of the field', cf. Lev. XIX. 9.

(10) When the grain becomes subject to the law of tithing; cf. Ber. 40b and Ma'as. I, 6.

(11) In spite of the many changes which had been made.

(12) Whose views have generally not been accepted; cf. 'Er. 13b.

(13) Regarding the dyeing of the wool which was subject to the law of the first of the fleece to be set aside for the priest.
(14) v. Ber. 47b.
(15) Lev. XIX. 10 and XXIII, 22 — implying in all circumstances.
(16) That change does not transfer ownership.
(17) I.e., from the law of Pe'ah.
(18) [Adreth. S., Hiddushim, improves the text by omitting: 'If however . . . different.']
(19) [This concludes Raba's argument. V. Adreth, loc. cit.]
(20) For notes v. supra pp. 148-9.
(21) On account of the repeated 'Thou shalt leave'.
(22) That in cases of deterioration the robber will be entitled to say. 'Here there is thine before thee.'
(23) Explained supra p. 44.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 94b

They said that the halachah is in accordance with R. Simeon b. Eleazar though Samuel himself did not agree with this.

R. Hiyya b. Abba said that R. Johanan stated that according to the law of the Torah a misappropriated article should even after being changed be returned to the owner in its present condition, as it is said: He shall restore that which he took by robbery[1] — in all cases. And should you cite against me the Mishnaic ruling,[2] my answer is that this was merely an enactment for the purpose of making matters easier for repentant robbers.[3] But did R. Johanan really say this? Did R. Johanan not say[4] that the halachah should be in accordance with an anonymous Mishnah, and we have learnt: 'If the owner did not manage to give the first of the fleece to the priest until it had already been dyed, he is exempt'?[5] — But a certain scholar of our Rabbis whose name was R. Jacob said to them: 'This matter was explained to me by R. Johanan personally, [that his statement referred only to a case] where, e.g., there were misappropriated planed pieces of wood out of which utensils were made, as after such a change the material could still revert to its previous condition.[6]

Our Rabbis taught: 'If robbers or usurers [repent and of their own free will] are prepared to restore [the misappropriated articles], it is not right to accept [them] from them, and he who does accept [them] from them does not obtain the approval of the Sages.'[7] R. Johanan said: It was in the days of Rabbi that this teaching was enunciated, as taught: 'It once happened with a certain man who was desirous of making restitution that his wife said to him, Raca, if you are going to make restitution, even the girdle [you are wearing] would not remain yours, and he thus refrained altogether from making repentance. It was at that time that it was declared that if robbers or usurers are prepared to make restitution it is not right to accept [the misappropriated articles] from them, and he who accepts from them does not obtain the approval of the Sages.'

An objection was raised [from the following:] 'If a father left [to his children] money accumulated by usury, even if the heirs know that the money was [paid as] interest, they are not liable to restore the money [to the respective borrowers].[8] Now, does this not imply that it is only the children who have not to restore, whereas the father would be liable to restore?[9] The law might be that even the father himself would not have had to restore, and the reason why the ruling was stated with reference to the children[10] was that since it was necessary to state in the following clause 'Where the father left them a cow or a garment or anything which could [easily] be identified, they are liable to restore [it], in order to uphold the honour of the father,' the earlier clause similarly spoke of them. But why should they be liable to restore[11] in order to uphold the honour of the father? Why not apply to them [the verse] 'nor curse the role, of thy people',[12] [which is explained to mean.] 'so long as he is acting in the spirit of 'thy people'?[13] — As however, R. Phinehas [elsewhere][14] stated, that the thief might have made repentance, so also here we suppose that the father had made repentance. But if the father made repentance, why was the misappropriated article still left with him? Should he not have restored it?[15] — But it might be that he had no time to restore it before he [suddenly] died.

Come and hear: Robbers and usurers even after they have collected the money must return it.[16] But what collection could there have been in the case of robbers. for surely if they misappropriated anything they committed robbery, and if they had not misappropriated anything they were not robbers at all? It must therefore read as follows: 'Robbers, that is to say usurers, even after they have already collected the money, must return it.'[17] — It may, however, be said that though they have to make restitution of the money it would not be accepted from them. If so why have they to make restitution? — [To make it quite evident that out of their own free will] they are prepared to fulfil their duty before Heaven.[18]

Come and hear: 'For shepherds, tax collectors and revenue farmers it is difficult to make repentance, yet they must make restitution [of the articles in question] to all those whom they know [they have robbed].[19] — It may, however, [also here] be said that though they have to make restitution, it would not be accepted from them. If so why have they to make restitution? — [To make it quite evident that out of their free will] they are prepared to fulfil their duty before Heaven. But if so why should it be difficult for them to make repentance?[20] Again, why was it said in the concluding clause that out of articles of which they do not know the owners they should make public utilities,[21] and R. Hisda said that these should be wells, ditches and caves?[22] — There is, however, no difficulty, as this teaching[23] was enunciated before the days of the enactment,[24] whereas the other statements were made after the enactment. Moreover, as R. Nahman has now stated that the enactment referred only to a case where the misappropriated article was no more intact, it may even be said that both teachings were enunciated after the days of the enactment, and yet there is no difficulty,

---

(1) Lev. V. 23.

(2) That payment is made in accordance with the value at the time of robbery.

(3) v. p. 545. n. 6.

(4) Shab. 46a and supra p. 158.

(5) For notes v. supra p. 382. [This shows that change transfers ownership even where the consideration of penitents does not apply.]

(6) [In which case but for the consideration of penitent robbers, change transfers no ownership. Where the change. however, cannot be reverted, it confers unqualified ownership.]

(7) Rashi renders 'no spirit of wisdom and piety resides in him', but see also Tosaf. Yom Tob. Aboth III, 10.

(8) Tosef. B.M. V, 8.

(9) [Whereas above it is stated that the monies thus returned are not accepted.]

(10) And not to the father himself

(11) In the case dealt with in the concluding clause.

(12) Ex. XXII, 27.

(13) Excluding him who wilfully violates the laws of Israel.

(14) Hag. 26a.

(15) [I.e. not to retain it with him, despite the refusal of the owners to accept it (v. Tosaf.).]

(16) B.M. 62a.

(17) Does this not prove that the misappropriated money if restored would be accepted from them?

(18) As it is only in such a case that the restored money will not be accepted.

(19) Tosef B.M. VIII. Does this not prove that misappropriated articles if restored would be accepted?

(20) Since no actual restitution will have to be made.

(21) Cf. Az. 29a.

(22) And thus provide water to the general public among whom the aggrieved persons are to be found.

(23) Where actual restitution is implied.

(24) Which was ordained in the days of Rabbi.

as the latter deals with a case where the misappropriated article is still intact whereas the other teaching refers to a case where the misappropriated article is no more intact. But what about the girdle [referred to above],[1] in which case the misappropriated article was still intact? — What was meant by 'girdle' was the value of the girdle. But is it really the fact that so long as the misappropriated article was intact our Rabbis did not make this enactment?[2] What then about the beam in which case the misappropriated article was still intact and we have nevertheless learnt: [R. Johanan b. Gudgada testified] that if a misappropriated beam has been built into a house, the owner will recover only its value?[3] — That matter is different altogether, for since the house would otherwise be damaged. the Rabbis regarded the beam as being no longer intact.[4]

IF ONE MISAPPROPRIATED A PREGNANT COW WHICH MEANWHILE GAVE BIRTH [TO A CALF] etc. Our Rabbis taught: 'He who misappropriates a sheep and shears it, or a cow which has meanwhile given birth [to a calf], has to pay for the animal and the wool and the calf;[5] this is the view of R. Meir. R. Judah says that the misappropriated animal will be restored intact.[6] R. Simeon says that the animal will be considered as if it had been insured with the robber for its value [at the time of the robbery].' The question was raised: What was the reason of R. Meir? Was it because he held that a change leaves the article in its existing status?[7] Or [did he hold] in general that a change would transfer ownership, but here he imposes a fine [upon the robber], the practical difference being where the animal became leaner?[8] — Come and hear: If one misappropriated an animal and it became old, or slaves and they became old, he would still have to pay according to [their value at][9] the time of the robbery, but R. Meir said that in the case of slaves[10] [the robber] would be entitled to say to the plaintiff: 'Here, take your own.'[11] It thus appears that in the case of an animal [even R. Meir held that] the payment would have to be in accordance with [the value at] the time of the robbery.[9] Now, if you assume that R. Meir was of the opinion that a change leaves the article in its previous status,[12] why even in the case of an animal [can the robber not say. 'Here, take your own']? Does this therefore not prove that even R. Meir held that a change would transfer ownership, and that [in the case of the wool and the calf] it was only a fine which R. Meir imposed on the robber? — It may, however, be said that R. Meir was arguing from the premises of the Rabbis, thus: According to my view a change does not transfer ownership, so that also in the case of an animal [the robber would be entitled to say. 'Here, take your own'], but even according to your view, that a change does transfer ownership, you must at least agree with me in the case of slaves, who are compared to real property, and, as we know, real property is not subject to the law of robbery.[13] The Rabbis, however, answered him: 'No, for slaves are on a par with movables [in this respect].'[14]

Come and hear: [If wool was handed over to a dyer] to dye it red but he dyed it black, or to dye it black but he dyed it red, R. Meir says that he would have to pay [the owner of the wool] for the value of the wool.[15] [It thus appears that] he had to pay only for the original value of the wool but not for the combined value of the wool and the improvement [on account of the colour]. Now, if you suppose that R. Meir held that a change would not transfer ownership, why should he not have to pay for the combined value of the wool and the improvement? Does this therefore not prove that R. Meir held that a change would transfer ownership and that here [in the case of the calf] it was only a fine that R. Meir imposed [upon the robber]? — This could indeed be proved from it. Some even say that this question was never so much as raised; for since Rab transposed [the names in the Mishnah] and read thus: If one misappropriated a cow which became old, or slaves who became old, he would have to pay in accordance with [the value at] the time of the robbery;[16] this is the view of R. Meir, whereas the Sages say that in the case of slaves the robber would be entitled to say, Here, take your own',[16] it is quite certain that according to R. Meir a change would transfer ownership, and that here [in the case of a calf] it was only a fine that R. Meir imposed [upon the robber]. But if a question was raised, it was this: Was the fine imposed only in the case of wilful misappropriation whereas in the case of inadvertent misappropriation[17] the fine was not imposed, or perhaps even for inadvertent misappropriation the fine was also imposed? — Come and hear: Five [kinds of creditors] are allowed to distrain only on the free assets [of the debtor];[18] they are as follows: [creditors for] produce,[19] for Amelioration showing profits,[20] for an undertaking to maintain the wife's son or the wife's daughter,[21] for a bond of liability without a warranty of indemnity[22] and for the kethubah of a wife where no property is made security.[22] Now, what authority have you heard lay down that the omission to make the property security[22] is not a mere scribal error[23] if not R. Meir?[24] And it is yet stated: 'Creditors for produce and Amelioration showing profits [may distrain on free assets in the hands of the debtor].' Now, who [are creditors for Amelioration showing] profits?[25] They come in, do they not, where the vendor has misappropriated a field from his fellow and sold it to another who ameliorated it and from whose hands it was subsequently taken away. [The law then is that] when the purchaser comes to distrain

---

(1) Supra p. 548.

(2) And the actual article would have to be restored.

(3) Cit. V, 5; 'Ed. VII, 9' and supra p. 385.

(4) And the actual beam would not have to be restored. Its value will, however, be paid on account of the fact that the beam was actually in the house.

(5) [The payment, that is to say, will have to be made for the combined value of the calf and wool and the improvement.] Cf. B.M. 43b.

(6) [I.e., in the state it is at the time of payment. The robber will, however, have to make up in money for the difference in the value of the cow as it stood at the time of the robbery. The difference between R. Simeon and R. Judah will be explained anon.]

(7) And no ownership could thereby be transferred.

(8) Where according to the former consideration the robber would escape further liability by restoring the animal, but according to the latter he would have to pay for the difference.

(9) As the change transferred the ownership to the robber.

(10) Who are subject to the law applicable to immovables.

(11) Mishnah, infra p. 561.

(12) And no ownership could thereby be transferred.

(13) Cf. Suk. 30b and 32a.

(14) Cf. supra 12a.

(15) For by acting against the instructions of the owner he rendered himself liable to the law of robbery; Mishnah infra 100b.

(16) V. infra p. 561.

(17) As in the case of the dyer, supra p. 552.

(18) But not if the landed property is already in the hands of a third party such as a purchaser and the like.

(19) Such as where a field full of produce was taken away in the hands of a purchaser through the fault of the vendor: the amount due to the purchaser for his loss of the actual field could be recovered even from property already in the hands of (subsequent) purchasers, whereas the amount due to him for the value of the produce he lost could be recovered only from property still in the hands of the vendor; cf. Git. V, I and B.M. 14b.

(20) Such as where the purchaser spent money on improving the ground which was taken away from him through the fault of the vendor.

(21) Cf. also Keth. XII, 1.

(22) I.e., where the particular clause making the property security was omitted in the document. V. Keth. 51b.

(23) But has legal consequences.

(24) V. B.M. I, 6 and ibid. 14a.

(25) Lit., 'how is this possible?'

he will do so for the principal even on [real] property that has been sold, but for the Amelioration only on assets which are free [in the hands of the vendor]. [But this is certain,] that the owner of the field is entitled to come and take away the field together with the increment. Now, do we not deal here with a purchaser who was ignorant of the law and did not know whether real property is subject to the law of robbery or is not subject to the law of robbery?[1] And even in such a case the owner of the field will be entitled to come and take away the land together with the increment. Does not this show that even in the case of inadvertent misappropriation,[2] [R. Meir] would impose the fine? — It may however be said that this is not so, [as we are dealing here] with a purchaser who is a scholar and knows very well[3] [that real property is not subject to the law of robbery].[1]

Come and hear: [If wool was handed over to a dyer] to dye it red but he dyed it black, or to dye it black and he dyed it red, R. Meir says that he would have to pay [the owner of the wool] for the value of the wool.[4] [It thus appears that he has to pay] only for the original value of the wool but not for the combined value of the wool and the improvement [on account of the colour]. Now, if you assume that R. Meir would impose the fine even in the case of inadvertent misappropriation why should he not have to pay for the combined value of the wool and the improvement? Does this not prove that it is only in the case of wilful misappropriation that the fine is imposed but in the case of inadvertent misappropriation the fine would not be imposed? — This could indeed be proved from it.

'R. Judah says that the misappropriated [animal] will be restored intact. R. Simeon says that the animal be considered as if it had been insured with the robber for its value [at the time of the robbery].' What is the practical difference between them?[5] — Said R. Zebid: They differ regarding the increased value [still] attaching to the misappropriated article. R. Judah maintained that this would belong to the plaintiff[6] whereas R. Simeon was of the opinion that this would belong to the robber.[7] R. papa, however, said that both might agree that an increased value [still] attaching to the misappropriated article should not solely belong to the plaintiff,[8] but where they differed was as to whether the robber should be entitled to retain a half or a third or a fourth[9] for [his attending to the welfare of the article]. R. Judah maintaining that an increased value [still] attaching to the misappropriated article would belong solely to the robber,[10] whereas R. Simeon maintained that the robber would be paid only to the extent of a half, a third or a fourth.

We have learnt: 'BUT IF HE MISAPPROPRIATED A COW WHICH BECAME PREGNANT WHILE WITH HIM AND THEN GAVE BIRTH, OR A SHEEP WHICH WHILE WITH HIM GREW WOOL WHICH HE SHEARED, HE WOULD PAY IN ACCORDANCE WITH [THE VALUE AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY.' That is so only if the cow has already given birth, but if the cow has not given birth yet it would be returned as it is. This accords well with the view of R. Zebid who said that an increased value still attaching to the misappropriated article would according to R. Judah belong to the plaintiff; I [the Mishnah] would then be in accordance with R. Judah. But on the view of R. papa who said that it would belong to the robber,[10] it would be in accordance neither with R. Judah nor with R. Simeon? — R. Papa might say to you that the ruling [stated in the text] would apply even where the cow has not yet given birth, as even then he would have to pay in accordance with [the value at] the time of the robbery. For as for the mention of 'giving birth', the reason is that since the earlier clause contains the words 'giving birth', the later clause similarly mentions 'giving birth'. It was taught in accordance with R. papa: 'R. Simeon says that [the animal] is to be considered as if its pecuniary value had been insured with the robber, [who will however be paid] to the extent of a half, a third or a fourth [of the increase In value].'[11]

R. Ashi said: When we were at the School of R. Kahana, a question was raised with regard to the statement of R. Simeon that the robber will be paid to the extent of a half, a third or a fourth [of the increase in value] whether at the time of his parting with the misappropriated article he can be paid in specie, or is he perhaps entitled to receive his portion out of the body of the misappropriated animal. The answer was found in the statement made by R. Nahman in the name of Samuel: 'There are three cases where increased value will be appraised and paid in money. They are as follow's: [In the settlement of accounts] between a firstborn and a plain son,[12] between a creditor and a purchaser.[13] and between a creditor[13] and heirs.'[14] Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Did Samuel really say that a creditor will have to pay the purchaser for increased value? Did Samuel not state[15] that a creditor distrains even on the increment?[16] — He replied: There is no difficulty, as the former ruling applies to an increment which could reach the shoulders to be carried away.[17] whereas the latter ruling deals with an increment which could not reach the shoulders to be carried away.[18] He rejoined:[19] Do not cases happen every day where Samuel distrains even on an increment which could reach the shoulders to be carried away? — He replied: There is still no difficulty,

---

(1) V. p. 552. n. 1.

(2) Such as was the case here with the purchaser.

(3) Also that the field has been misappropriated by the vendor (cf. Shittah Mekubezeth a.l.) and as such is guilty of wilful misappropriation.

(4) V. Mishnah infra 100b.

(5) I.e., R. Judah and R. Simeon.

(6) Since the article has to be restored intact.

(7) [Since the payment is made according to the value at the time of the robbery.]

(8) Lit., 'should belong to the robber', but which means that it will not solely belong to the plaintiff, as will soon become evident in the text.

(9) I.e., in accordance with the definite percentage in the profits fixed in a given province to be shared by a contractor for his care and attendance to the welfare of the article in question; cf. B.M. V, 4-5.

(10) As the expression 'intact' means intact as it was at the time of the robbery.

(11) V. p. 555. n. 4.

(12) As the firstborn son has two portions in the estate as it was left at the time of the death of the father, but only one portion in the increased value due to amelioration after the father's death, so that by taking two portions in the estate the firstborn would have to pay back the other sons their appropriate portions in the increased value of the additional portion taken by him; cf. B.B. 124a.

(13) I.e., a creditor distraining on a field that originally belonged to his debtor but which was subsequently disposed of or inherited by heirs and the purchaser or heirs increased its value by amelioration.

(14) V. B.M. 110b.

(15) B.M. ibid. and 14b; Bk. 42a.

(16) Without paying for it, v. B.M. ibid.

(17) As where the produce is quite ripe and could be separated from the ground in which case it is the property of the purchaser. V. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 183. n. 3.

(18) I.e., which is inseparable from the ground and which is distrained on together with the field by the creditor.

(19) I.e., Rabina to R. Ashi.

as this is so only where the amount of the debt owing to the creditor covers both the land and the increment,whereas the former ruling[1] applies where [the debt due to him] is only to the extent of the land. He rejoined: I grant you that on the view[2] that [even] if the purchaser possesses money he has no right to bar the creditor from land by paying in specie, your argument would be sound, but according to the view that a purchaser possessing money can bar the creditor from the field by paying him in specie, why should he not say to the creditor, 'If I had had money, I would surely have been able to bar you from the whole field [by paying you in specie]; now also therefore I am entitled to be left with a griva[3] of land corresponding to the value of my amelioration'?[4] — He replied: We are dealing here with a case where the debtor expressly made that field a security, as where he said to him: 'You shall not be paid from anything but from the field.'[5]

Raba stated: [There is no question] that where the robber improved [the misappropriated article] and then sold it, or where the robber improved [the misappropriated article] and then left it to his heirs, he has genuinely sold or left to his heirs the increment he has created.[6] Raba [however] asked: What would be the law where [after having bought the misappropriated article from the robber] the purchaser improved it? After asking the question he himself gave the answer: That what the former sold the latter, was surely all rights[7] which might subsequently accrue to him.[6]

Raba [again] asked: What would be the law where a heathen[8] [misappropriated an article and] improved it? — Said R. Aha of Difti to Rabina: Shall we trouble ourselves to make an enactment[9] for [the benefit of] a heathen? — He said to him: No; the query might refer to the case where. e.g., he sold it to an Israelite. [But he retorted:] Be that as it may, he who comes to claim through a heathen [predecessor], could surely not expect better treatment than the heathen himself. — No: the query could still refer to the case where, e.g., an Israelite had misappropriated an article and sold it to a heathen who improved it and who subsequently sold it to another Israelite. What then should be the law? Shall we say that since an Israelite was in possession at the beginning and an Israelite was in possession at the end, our Rabbis would also here make [use of] the enactment, or perhaps since a heathen intervened our Rabbis would not make [use of] the enactment? — Let it remain undecided.

R. papa stated: If one misappropriated a palm tree from his fellow and cut it down, he would not acquire title to it even though he threw it from [the other's] field into his own land, the reason being that it was previously called palm tree and is now also called palm tree.[10] [So also] where out of the palm tree he made logs he would not acquire title to them, as even now they would still be called logs of a palm tree.[10] It is only where out of the logs he made beams that he would acquire title to them.[11] But if out of big beams he made small beams he would not acquire title to them,[12] though were he to have made them into boards he would acquire title to them.[11]

Raba said: If one misappropriated a Lulab[13] and converted it into leaves he would acquire title to them, as originally it was called Lulab whereas now they are mere leaves.[11] So also where out of the leaves he made a broom he would acquire title to it, as originally they were leaves whereas now they form a broom,[14] but where out of the broom he made a rope he would not acquire title to it since if he were to undo it, it would again become a broom.

R. papa asked: What would be the law where the central leaf[15] of the Lulab became split? — Come and hear: R. Mathon said that R. Joshua b. Levi stated that if the central leaf of the Lulab was removed the Lulab would be disqualified [for ritual purposes].

---

(1) Ordering payment for the amelioration.

(2) B.M. 15b and 110b.

(3) The size of a field needed for a se'ah of seed.

(4) Why then should the creditor distrain on the whole field together with the amelioration?

(5) In which case the purchaser can in no circumstance bar the creditor from the field.

(6) So that the purchaser (or heir) will be entitled to the half or third or quarter in profits to which the robber would have been entitled, according to the view of R. Simeon.

(7) Cf. supra p.32.

(8) Who neither respects nor feels bound by Rabbinic enactments.

(9) That according to R. Simeon payment is to be made for amelioration to the extent of a half or third or quarter.

(10) [The change involved does not confer ownership enabling him to make restitution by payment in money.]

(11) V. p. 552. n. 6.

(12) V. p. 552. n. 5.

(13) I.e., a palm branch used for the festive wreath on the Feast of Tabernacles in accordance with Lev. XXIII, 40.

(14) V. p. 543, n. 6.

(15) Cf. Suk. 32a and Rashi.

Now, would not the same law apply where it was merely split?[1] — No; the case where it was removed is different, as the leaf is then missing altogether. Some [on the other hand] read thus. Come and hear what R. Mathon said, that R. Joshua b. Levi stated that if the central leaf was split it would be considered as if it was altogether removed and the Lulab would be disqualified;[1] which would solve [R. papa's question].

R. papa [further] said: If one misappropriated sand from another and made a brick out of it, he would not acquire title to it, the reason being that it could again be made into sand, but if he converted a brick into sand he would acquire title to it. For should you object that he could perhaps make the sand again into a brick, [it may be said that] that brick would be [not the original but] another brick, as it would be a new entity which would be produced.

R. Papa [further] said: If one misappropriated bullion of silver from another and converted it into coins, he would not acquire title to them, the reason being that he could again convert them into bullion, but if out of coins he made bullion he would acquire title to it. For should you object that he can again convert it into coins, [my answer is that] it would be a new entity which would be produced. If [the coins were] blackened and he made them look new he would thereby not acquire title to them,[2] but if they were new and he made them black he would acquire title to them, for should you object that he could make them look again new, [it may be said that] their blackness will surely always be noticeable.

THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: ALL ROBBERS HAVE TO PAY IN ACCORDANCE WITH [THE VALUE OF THE MISAPPROPRIATED ARTICLES AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY. What additional fact is the expression. THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE intended to introduce? — It is meant to introduce that which R. Elai said: If a thief misappropriated a lamb which became a ram, or a calf which became an ox, as the animal underwent a change while in his hands he would acquire title to it, so that if he subsequently slaughtered or sold it, it was his which he slaughtered and it was his which he sold.[3]

A certain man who misappropriated a yoke of oxen from his fellow went and did some ploughing with them and also sowed with them some seeds and at last returned them to their owner. When the case came before R. Nahman he said [to the sheriffs of the court]: 'Go forth and appraise the increment [added to the field].' But Raba said to him: Were only the oxen instrumental in the increment, and did the land contribute nothing to the increment?[4] — He replied: Did I ever order payment of the full appraisement of the increment? I surely meant only half of it. He, however, rejoined:[5] Be that as it may, since the oxen were misappropriated they merely have to be returned intact, as we have indeed learnt: ALL ROBBERS HAVE TO PAY IN ACCORDANCE WITH [THE VALUE] AT THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY. [Why then pay for any work done with them?] — He replied: Did I not say to you that when I am sitting in judgment you should not make any suggestions to me, for Huna our colleague said with reference to me that I and 'King' Shapur[6] are [like] brothers in respect of civil law? That person [who misappropriated the pair of oxen] is a notorious robber, and I want to penalise him.

MISHNAH. IF ONE MISAPPROPRIATED AN ANIMAL AND IT BECAME OLD, OR SLAVES AND THEY BECAME OLD, HE WOULD HAVE TO PAY ACCORDING TO [THE VALUE AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY.[7] R. MEIR, HOWEVER, SAYS THAT IN THE CASE OF SLAVES[8] HE MIGHT SAY TO THE OWNER: HERE, TAKE YOUR OWN. IF HE MISAPPROPRIATED A COIN AND IT BECAME CRACKED, FRUITS AND THEY BECAME STALE OR WINE AND IT BECAME SOUR, HE WOULD HAVE TO PAY ACCORDING TO [THE VALUE AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY.[7] BUT IF THE COIN WENT OUT OF USE, THE TERUMAH[9] BECAME DEFILED,[10] THE LEAVEN FORBIDDEN [FOR ANY USE

BECAUSE] PASSOVER HAD INTERVENED,[11] OR IF THE ANIMAL [HE MISAPPROPRIATED] BECAME THE INSTRUMENT FOR THE COMMISSION OF A SIN[12] OR IT BECAME OTHERWISE DISQUALIFIED FROM BEING SACRIFICED UPON THE ALTAR,[13] OR IF IT WAS TAKEN OUT TO BE STONED,[14] HE CAN SAY TO HIM: 'HERE, TAKE YOUR OWN.'

GEMARA. R. Papa said: The expression IT BECAME OLD does not necessarily mean that it actually became old, for [the same law would apply] even where it had otherwise deteriorated. But do we not expressly learn. IT BECAME OLD?[15] — This indicates that the deterioration has to be equivalent to its becoming old, i.e., where it will no more recover health. Mar Kashisha, the son of R. Hisda, said to R. Ashi: It has been expressly stated in the name of R. Johanan that even where a thief misappropriated a lamb which became a ram, or a calf which became an ox,[16] since the animal underwent a change while in his hands he would acquire title to it, so that if he subsequently slaughtered or sold it, it was his which he slaughtered and it was his which he sold.[17] He said to him: Did I not say to you that you should not transpose the names of scholars?[18] That statement was made in the name of R. Elai.[19]

R. MEIR, HOWEVER. SAYS THAT IN THE CASE OF SLAVES HE MIGHT SAY TO THE OWNER, 'HERE TAKE YOUR OWN.' R. Hanina b. Abdimi said that Rab stated that the halachah is in accordance with R. Meir. But how could Rab abandon the view of the Rabbis[20] and act in accordance with R. Meir? — It may, however, be said that he did so because in the text of the [relevant] Baraitha the names were transposed. But again how could Rab abandon the text of the Mishnah and act in accordance with the Baraitha?[21] — Rab, even in the text of our Mishnah, had transposed the names. But still what was the reason of Rab for transposing the names in the text of the Mishnah because of that of the Baraitha? Why not, on the contrary, transpose the names in the text of the Baraitha because of that of our Mishnah? — It may be answered that Rab, in the text of our Mishnah too, was taught by his masters to have the names transposed. Or if you like I may say that [the text of a Mishnah] is not changed [in order to be harmonised with that of a Baraitha] only in the case where there is one against one, but where there is one against two,[22] it must be changed [as is indeed the case here]; for it was taught:[23] If one bartered a cow for an ass and [the cow] gave birth to a calf [approximately at the very time of the barter], so also if one sold his handmaid and she gave birth to a child [approximately at the time of the sale], and one says that the birth took place while [the cow or handmaid was] in his possession and the other one is silent [on the matter], the former will obtain [the calf or child as the case may be], but if one said 'I don't know', and the other said 'I don't know', they would have to share it. If, however, one says [that the birth took place] when he was owner and the other says [that it took place] when he was owner, the vendor would have to swear that the birth took place when he was owner [and thus retain it], for all those who have to take an oath according to the law of the Torah, by taking the oath release themselves from payment;[24] this is the view of R. Meir. But the Sages say that an oath can be imposed neither in the case of slaves nor of real property.[25] Now [since the text of our Mishnah should have been reversed,[26] why did Rab[27] state that] the halachah is in accordance with R. Meir? Should he not have said that the halachah is in accordance with the Rabbis?[27] — What he said was this: According to the text you taught with the names transposed, the halachah is in accordance with R. Meir.[27]

---

(1) [Should it be disqualified, it would, if occurring whilst in the possession of the robber, be considered a change and confer ownership.]

(2) V. p. 543. n. 5.

(3) Supra 379.

(4) Why then should the whole amount of the increase due to the amelioration be paid to the plaintiff?

(5) Raba to R. Nahman.

(6) Meaning Samuel, who was a friend of the Persian King Shapur I, and who is sometimes referred to in this way; cf. B.B. 115b. [To have conferred the right of bearing the name of the ruling monarch, together with the title 'tham',

'mighty'. was deemed the highest honour among the Persians, and 'Malka', 'King'. is apparently the Aramaic counterpart of the Persian title 'Malka' (v. Funk, Die Juden in Babylonien. I, 73). On Samuel's supreme authority in Babylon in matters of civil law, v. Bek. 49b.]

(7) As the change transferred the ownership to him.

(8) Who are subject to the law applicable to immovables, where the law of robbery does not apply.

(9) V. Glos.

(10) And thus unfit as food; cf. Shab. 25a.

(11) Cf. Pes. II. 2.

(12) Such as in Lev. XVIII, 23; cf. also supra p. 229.

(13) Such as through a blemish, hardly noticeable, as where no limb was missing; cf. Zeb. 35b and 85b; v. also Git. 56a.

(14) As in the case of Ex. XXI. 28.

(15) In which a temporary deterioration could hardly be included.

(16) [Although there is an inevitable and natural change.]

(17) [And he would be exempt from the threefold and fourfold restitution.]

(18) Lit., 'people'.

(19) And not in that of R. Johanan: supra p. 379.

(20) The representatives of the anonymous view of the majority cited first in the Mishnah.

(21) In accordance with the anonymous view of the majority cited in the Baraitha.

(22) I.e., where two Baraithas are against the text of one Mishnah.

(23) B.M. 100a, q.v. for notes.

(24) Shebu. VII, 1.

(25) Cf. Shebu. VI, 5. It is thus evident that it was the majority of the Rabbis and not R. Meir who considered slaves to be subject to the law of real property.

(26) In which case it was the Rabbis who maintained that slaves are subject to the law of real property.

(27) Meaning that slaves are on the same footing as real property.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 97a

But did Rab really say that slaves are on the same footing as real property? Did R. Daniel b. Kattina not say that Rab stated that if a man forcibly seizes another's slave and makes him perform some work, he would be exempt from any payment?[1] Now, if you really suppose that slaves are on the same footing as real property. why should he be exempt? Should the slave not be considered as still being in the possession of the owner?[2] — We are dealing there[3] with a case [where he took hold of the slave at a time] when [the owner] usually required no work from him, exactly as R. Abba sent to Mari b. Mar, saying. 'Ask R. Huna whether a person who stays in the premises[4] of another without his knowledge must pay him rent or not, and he sent him back reply that 'he is not liable to pay him rent'.[5] But what comparison is there? There is no difficulty [in that case][6] as if we follow the view that premises which are inhabited by tenants keep in a better condition,[5] [we must say that] the owner is well pleased that his house be inhabited. or again if we follow the view[5] that the gate is smitten unto roll,[7] [we can again say that] the owner benefited by it. But here [in this case][8] what owner could be said to be pleased that his slave became reduced [by overwork]? — It may, however, be said that here[9] also it may be beneficial to the owner that his slave should not become prone to idleness.

Some at the house of R. Joseph b. Hama used to seize slaves of people who owed them money, and make them perform some work. Raba his son said to him: Why do you, Sir, allow this to be done? — He thereupon said to him: Because R. Nahman stated that the [work of the] slave is not worth the bread he eats. He rejoined:[10] Do we not say that R. Nahman meant his statement only to apply to one like Daru his own servant who was a notorious dancer in the wine houses, whereas with all other servants who do some work [the case is not so]? — He however said to him: I hold with R. Daniel b. Kattina, for R. Daniel b. Kattina said that Rab stated that one who forcibly seizes another's slave and makes him perform some work would be exempt from any payment, thus proving that this is beneficial to the owner, by preventing his slave from becoming idle. He replied:[10] These rulings [could apply] only where he has no money claim against the owner, but [in your case], Sir, since you have a money claim against the owner, it looks like usury, exactly as R. Joseph b. Manyumi said [namely] that R. Nahman stated that though the Rabbis decided that one who occupies another's premises without his consent is not liable to pay him rent, if he lent money to another and then occupied his premises he would have to pay him rent.[11] He thereupon said to him: [If so,] I withdraw.

It was stated: If one forcibly seizes another's ship and performs some work with it, Rab said that if the owner wishes he may demand payment for its hire, or if he wishes he may demand payment for its wear and tear. But Samuel said: He may demand only for its wear and tear. Said R. Papa: They do not differ as Rab referred to the case where the ship was made for hire and Samuel to the case where it was not made for hire. Or if you like, I can say that both statements deal with a case where it was made for hire, but whereas [Rab deals with a case] where possession was taken of it with the intention of paying the hire,[12] '[Samuel refers to one] where possession was taken of it with the intention of robbery.[13]

IF HE MISAPPROPRIATED A COIN AND IT BECAME CRACKED etc. R. Huna said: IT BECAME CRACKED means that it actually cracked, [and] IT WENT OUT OF USE means that the Government declared it obsolete. But Rab Judah said that where the Government declared the coin obsolete it would be tantamount to its being disfigured,[14] and what was meant by IT WENT OUT OF USE is that the inhabitants of a particular province rejected it while it was still in circulation in another province. R. Hisda said to R. Huna: According to your statement that IT WENT OUT OF USE meant that the Government declared it obsolete, why [in our Mishnah] in the case of fruits that became stale, or wine that became sour, which appears to be equivalent to a coin that was declared obsolete by the Government, is it stated that HE WOULD HAVE TO PAY IN ACCORDANCE WITH [THE VALUE AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY?[15] — He replied: There [in the case of the fruits and the wine] the taste and the smell changed, whereas here [in the case of the coin] there was no change [in the substance]. Rabbah on the other hand said to Rab Judah: According to your statement that where the Government declared the coin obsolete it would be tantamount to its having been cracked, why in [our Mishnah in] the case of terumah that became defiled, which appears to resemble a coin that was declared obsolete by the Government[16] is it stated that he can say to him, 'HERE, TAKE YOUR OWN'? — He replied: There [in the case of the terumah] the defect[17] is not noticeable, whereas here [in the case of the coin] the defect is noticeable.[18]

It was stated: If a man lends his fellow [something] on [condition that it should be repaid in] a certain coin, and that coin became obsolete, Rab said

---

(1) B.M. 64b.

(2) So that payment for work done by him would have to be enforced.

(3) Lit., 'here'.

(4) [Which the owner is not accustomed to let — a case similar to the one where the owner requires no work from the slave.]

(5) V. supra 21a for notes.

(6) Of the house.

(7) Isa. XXIV, 12.

(8) Of the slave.

(9) [Amounting as it does to the taking of interest.]

(10) I.e., Raba to his father, R. Joseph.

(11) So that it should not look like usury.

(12) In which case the hire may be claimed.

(13) In which case no more than compensation for the wear and tear could be enforced.

(14) Since it would nowhere have currency.

(15) As the change transferred the ownership.

(16) For just as the latter case was proscribed by the political realm, the former was proscribed by the spiritual realm.

(17) By becoming defiled.

(18) As the coins which are in circulation have a different appearance.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 97b

that the debtor would have to pay the creditor with the coin that had currency at that time,[1] whereas Samuel said that the debtor could say to the creditor, 'Go forth and spend it in Meshan.'[2] R. Nahman said that the ruling of Samuel might reasonably be applied where the creditor had occasion to go to Meshan, but if he had no occasion [to go there] it would surely not be so. But Raba raised an objection to this view of R. Nahman [from the following]: 'Redemption [of the second tithe] cannot be made by means of money which has no currency, as for instance if one possessed koziba-coins,[3] of Jerusalem,[4] or of the earlier kings;[5] no redemption could be made [by these].'[6] Now, does this not imply that if the coins were of the later kings, even though analogous [in one respect] to coins of the earlier kings,[7] it would be possible to effect the redemption by means of them?[8] — He, however, said to him that we were dealing here with a case where the Governments of the different provinces were not antagonistic to one another. But since this implies that the statement of Samuel [as explained by R. Nahman] referred to the case where the Governments of the different provinces were antagonistic to one another, how would it be possible to bring the coins [to the province where they still have currency]?[9] — They could be brought there with some difficulty, as where no thorough search was made at the frontier though if the coins were to be discovered there would be trouble.

Come and hear: Redemption [of the second tithe] cannot be effected by means of coins which have currency here[10] but which are actually [with the owner] in Babylon;[11] so also if they have currency in Babylon but are kept here.[10] [But] where the coins have their currency in Babylon and are in Babylon redemption can be effected by means of them. Now, it is at all events stated here [is it not] that no redemption could be effected by means of coins which though having currency here[10] are actually [with the owner] in Babylon irrespective of the fact that the owner will have to go up here?[12] — We are dealing here with a case where the Governments [of the respective countries] were antagonistic to each other.[13] But if so how would coins which have currency in Babylon and are kept in Babylon be utilised as redemption money?[14] — They may be utilised for the purchase of an animal [in Babylon]. which can then be brought up to Jerusalem. But was it not taught[15] that there was an enactment that all kinds of money should be current in Jerusalem?[16] — Said R. Zera: This is no difficulty, as the latter statement refers to the time when Israel had sway [in Eretz Yisrael] over the heathen whereas the former referred to a time when the heathen governed themselves.[17]

Our Rabbis taught: What was the coin of Jerusalem?[18] [The names] David and Solomon [were inscribed] on one side and [the name of] Jerusalem on the other. What was the coin of Abraham our Patriarch? — An old man and an old woman[19] on the one side, and a young man and a young woman[20] on the other.

Raba asked R. Hisda: What would be the law where a man lent his fellow something on [condition of being repaid with] a certain coin,[21] and that coin meanwhile was made heavier?[22] — He replied: The payment will have to be with the coins that have currency at that time. Said the other: Even if the new coin be of the size of a sieve? — He replied: Yes, Said the other: Even if it be of the size of a 'tirtia'![23] — He again replied. Yes. But in such circumstances would not the products have become cheaper?[24] — R. Ashi therefore said: We have to look into the matter. If it was through the [increased weight of the] coin that prices [of products] dropped we would have to deduct [from the payment accordingly],

(1) I.e., at the time of the payment.
(2) [Mesene, a district S.E. of Babylon. It lay on the path of the trade route to the Persian Gulf. V. Obermeyer. op. cit., 89 ff.]
(3) Coins struck by Bar Cochba, the leader of the uprising in Eretz Yisrael against Hadrian. [The name Koziba has been explained either as derivation from the city Kozeba, his home, or as 'Son of Lies', a contumelious designation when his failure belied all the hopes reposed in him, v. Graetz, Geschichte, p. 136.]
(4) [Probably the old shekels. According to Rashi render: namely, Jerusalem coins.]
(5) [Either the Seleucidean Kings or former Roman Emperors.]
(6) Tosef. M. Sh. 1, 6.
(7) Such as where they were declared obsolete in a particular province.
(8) Even where one had not occasion to go there, which refutes R. Nahman's view.
(9) Even though one had occasion to go there.
(10) In Jerusalem.
(11) Where they have no currency.
(12) [Lit. 'there'. The text does not read smoothly, and is suspect. MS.M. in fact omits 'Now . . . here.']
(13) To a greater degree, so that thorough searches are made and the transport of coins would constitute a real danger.
(14) Which would have to be spent for certain commodities to be partaken of in Jerusalem.
(15) Cf. I.M. Sh. I. 2.
(16) How then were Babylonian coins not current there?
(17) A euphemism for Israel.
(18) Cf. p. 556. n. 7.
(19) I.e., Abraham and Sarah.
(20) I.e., Isaac and Rebeccah.
(21) V. p. 566, n. 4.
(22) [The question is according to the view of Rab, ibid., that payment has to be made with the coin that had currency at the time.]
(23) A quoit of certain size.
(24) A larger supply being obtained by the heavier coin, and the increase would appear as usury.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 98a

but if it was through the market supplies[1] that prices dropped, we would not have to deduct anything. Still,[2] would the creditor not derive a benefit from the additional metal? — [We must] therefore [act] like R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua who gave judgment in an action about coins, according to [the information[3] of] an Arabian agoran,[4] that the debtor should pay for ten old coins [only] eight new ones.[5]

Rabbah stated: He who throws a coin of another [even] into the ocean[6] is exempt, the reason being that he can say to him, 'Here it lies before you, if you are anxious to have it take it.' This applies, however, only where [the water was] clear so that it could be seen, but if it was so muddy that the coin could not be seen this would not be so. Again, this holds good only where the throwing was merely indirectly caused by him,[7] but if he took it in his hand he would surely have already become subject to the law of robbery[8] and as such would have been liable to make [proper] restitution.[8]

Raba raised an objection [from the following:] 'Redemption [of the second tithe] cannot be made by means of money not in one's actual possession, such as if he had money in Castra or in the King's Mountain[9] or if his purse fell into the ocean; no redemption could then be effected'.[10] — Said Rabbah: The case [of redemption] of tithe is different, as it is required there that the money should be [to all intents and purposes] actually in your hand, for the Divine Law says, And bind up the money in thy hand,[11] which is lacking in this case.[12]

Rabbah further said: One who disfigures a coin belonging to another is exempt, the reason being that he did not do anything [to reduce the substance of the coin]. This of course applies only where he knocked on it with a hammer and so made it flat, but where he rubbed the stamp off with a file he certainly diminished its substance [and would thus be liable]. Raba raised an objection [from the following:] 'Where [the master] struck [the slave] upon the eye and blinded him or upon the ear and deafened him the slave would on account of that go out free,[13] but [where he struck on an object which was] opposite the slave's eye and he lost his sight or [on an object which was] opposite his ear through which he lost his hearing the slave would [on account of this] not go out free'![14] — Rabbah, however, follows his own reasoning, for Rabbah stated: He who makes his father deaf is subject to be executed,[15] for it is impossible to cause deafness without first making a bruise through which a drop of blood falls into the ear.[16]

And Rabbah [further] stated: He who splits the ear of another's cow[17] is exempt, the reason being that [so far as the value of] the cow [is concerned it] remains as it was before, for he did not do anything [to reduce it], since not all oxen are meant to be sacrificed upon the altar.[18] Raba raised an objection [from the following]: If he did work with the water of Purification or with the Heifer of Purification he would be exempt according to the judgments of Man but liable according to the judgments of Heaven.[19] Now surely this is so only where mere work was done with it,[20] in which case the damage [done to it] is not noticeable, whereas in the case of splitting where the damage is noticeable there would also be liability according to the judgments of Man?[21] — It may, however, be said that the same law would apply in the case of splitting, where he would similarly be exempt [according to the judgments of Man], and that what we are told here is that even in the case of mere work where the damage is not noticeable there would still be liability according to the judgments of Heaven.

Rabbah further stated: If one destroyed by fire the bond of a creditor he would be exempt, because he can say to him, 'It was only a mere piece of paper of yours that I have burnt.'[22] Rami b. Hania demurred: What are the circumstances?

---

(1) I.e., through the supply surpassing the demand.

(2) [Even if the drop in the prices was due to the latter cause.]

(3) [That ten old coins had the weight of eight new ones.]

(4) Market commissioner.

(5) If, however, the increase in weight was less than 25%, the new coins paid would have to be equal in number to the old ones; so Rashi; Tosaf. explains differently.

(6) Lit., 'the great sea', the Mediterranean.

(7) [On the principle that damage caused by indirect action is not actionable.]

(8) Cf. Lev. V, 23.

(9) [Har-ha-Melek, also known as Tur Malka. There is still a good deal of uncertainty in regard to the identification of these two localities. Buchler JQR. 1904. 181 ff. maintains that the reference in both cases is to Roman fortifications, access to which was barred to the Jews, the former being simply the Roman Castra, the latter, a fortification situated somewhere in Upper Idumea. For other views, v. Schlatter, Tage Trojans, p. 28, and Neubauer, Geographie, p. 196.]

(10) M.Sh. I, 2. Now, if coins thrown into the ocean are not considered as lost to the owner, as indeed suggested by Rabbah. why should no redemption be effected?

(11) Deut. XIV, 25.

(12) On account of which no redemption could be effected.

(13) In accordance with Ex. XXI, 26-27.

(14) Supra 91a. Does this not prove that even where the substance was not reduced, such as in the case of deafening, still so long as the damage was done there is liability?

(15) As having committed the capital offence of Ex. XXI. 25, v. supra 86a.

(16) [And for the same reason the slave would be set free.]

(17) Rendering her thus disqualified as blemished for the altar; cf. Lev. XXII, 20-25.

(18) Cf. Kid. 66a.

(19) I.e., the ‘red heifer’ rendering it thus disqualified in accordance with Num. XIX. 2 and 9.
(20) V. supra 56a.
(21) Thus contradicting the view of Rabbah.
(22) V. supra 33b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 98b

If there are witnesses who know what were the contents of the bond why not draw up another bond which would be valid? If on the other hand such witnesses are not available, how could we know [what were the contents]?[1] — Raba said: [The case could arise] where the defendant takes the plaintiff's word [as to the contents of the bond]. R. Dimi b. Hanina said that [regarding this ruling] of Rabbah there was a difference of opinion between R. Simeon and our [other] Rabbis. According to R. Simeon who held[2] that an object whose absence would cause an outlay of money is reckoned in law as money there would be liability,[3] but according to the Rabbis who said that an object whose absence would cause an outlay of money is not reckoned in law as money there would be no liability. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua demurred: I would suggest that you have to understand R. Simeon's statement, that an object whose absence would cause an outlay of money is reckoned in law as money, to apply only to an object whose substance is its intrinsic value, exactly as [in another case made Out by] Rabbah, for Rabbah said that where leaven was misappropriated before [the arrival of] Passover and a third person came along and burnt it, if this took place during the festival he would be exempt as at that time all are enjoined to destroy it,[4] but if after Passover[5] there would be a difference of opinion between R. Simeon and our Rabbis, as according to R. Simeon who held that an object whose absence would cause an outlay of money is reckoned in law as money, he would be liable,[6] while according to our Rabbis who said that an object whose absence would cause an outlay of money is not reckoned in law as money, he would be exempt. [But whence could it be proved that even] regarding an object whose substance is not its intrinsic value R. Simeon similarly maintained the same view?

Amemar said that the authority who is prepared to adjudicate liability in an action for damage done indirectly[7] would similarly here adjudge damages to the amount recoverable on a valid bill. but the one who does not adjudicate liability in an action for damage done indirectly would here adjudge damages only to the extent of the value of the mere paper. It once happened that in such an action Rafram compelled R. Ashi[8] and damages were collected [from him] like a beam fit for decorative mouldings.[9]

BUT IF . . . THE LEAVEN [HE MISAPPROPRIATED BECAME FORBIDDEN FOR ANY USE BECAUSE] PASSOVER HAD INTERVENED . . . HE CAN SAY TO HIM: HERE, TAKE YOUR OWN. Who is the Tanna who, in regard to things forbidden for any use, allows [the offender] to say, ‘Here, take your own’? — R. Hisda said: He is R. Jacob, as indeed taught: If an ox killed [a person], and before its judgment was concluded its owner disposed of it, the sale would hold good; if he pronounced it sacred, it would be sacred; if it was slaughtered its flesh would be permitted [for food]; if a bailee returned it to [the house of] its owner, it would be a legal restoration. But if after its sentence had already been pronounced, the owner disposed of it, the sale would not be valid; if he consecrated it, it would not be sacred; if it was slaughtered its flesh would be forbidden [for any use]; if a bailee returned it to [the house of] its owner, it would not be a legal restoration. R. Jacob, however, says: Even if after the sentence had already been pronounced the bailee returned it to its owner, it would be a legal restoration.[10] Now, is not the point at issue between them[11] that R. Jacob, in the case of things forbidden for any use, allows the offender to say. ‘Here, take your own’, whereas the Rabbis disallow this in the case of things forbidden for any use?[12] Rabbah said to him:[13] No; all may agree that even regarding things forbidden for any use the offender is allowed [in certain circumstances] to say, ‘Here, take your own’, for if otherwise. why did they[11] not differ in the case of leaven during Passover?[14] Rabbah therefore said: Here [in the case before us] the point at issue must be whether [or not] sentence may be pronounced over an ox in its absence. The Rabbis hold that sentence cannot be pronounced over an ox in its absence so that the owner may plead against the bailee thus: 'if you had returned it to me [before the passing of the sentence], I would have driven it away to the pastures,[15] whereas now you have surrendered my ox into the hands of those against whom I am unable to bring any action.'[16] R. Jacob, however, holds that sentence can be pronounced over the ox even in its absence, so that the bailee may retort to the owner thus: In any case the sentence would have been passed on the ox, even in its absence.

R. Hisda came across Rabbah b. Samuel and said to him: Have you been taught anything regarding things forbidden for any use?[17] — He replied: Yes, I was taught [the following]: 'He shall restore the misappropriated object.[18] What is the point of the additional words, which he violently took away? [It is that] so long as it was intact he may restore it.[19] Hence did the Rabbis declare that if one misappropriated a coin and it went out of use, fruits and they became stale, wine and it became sour,[20] terumah[21] and it became defiled,[22] leaven and [it became forbidden for any use because] Passover intervened,[23] an animal and it became the instrument for the commission of a sin,[24] or an ox and [it subsequently became subject to be stoned,[25] but] its judgment was not yet concluded, he can say to the owner, 'Here, take your own.' Now, which authority can you suppose to apply this ruling only where the judgment was not yet concluded, but not where the judgment was already concluded, if not the Rabbis, and it is at [the same time] stated that [if he misappropriated] leaven and [it became forbidden for any use because] Passover intervened[26] he can say to him, 'Here, take your own'?[27] — He replied:[28] If you happen to meet them[29] [please] do not tell them anything [of this teaching].[30]

['If one misappropriated] fruits and they became stale . . . he can say to him: "Here, take your own."' But did we not learn:[31] [IF HE MISAPPROPRIATED] FRUITS AND THEY BECAME STALE . . . HE WOULD [CERTAINLY] HAVE TO PAY ACCORDING TO [THE VALUE AT] THE TIME OF THE ROBBERY? — Said R. Papa: The latter ruling[32] refers to where the whole of them became stale,[33] the former to where only parts of them became stale.

MISHNAH. IF AN OWNER GAVE CRAFTSMEN [SOME ARTICLES] TO SET IN ORDER AND THEY SPOILT THEM, THEY WOULD BE LIABLE TO PAY. WHERE HE GAVE A JOINER A CHEST, A BOX OR A CUPBOARD[34] SET IN ORDER AND HE SPOILT IT, HE WOULD BE LIABLE TO PAY. IF A BUILDER UNDERTOOK TO PULL DOWN A WALL AND BROKE THE STONES OR DAMAGED THEM, HE WOULD BE LIABLE TO PAY, BUT IF WHILE HE WAS PULLING DOWN THE WALL ON ONE SIDE ANOTHER PART FELL ON ANOTHER SIDE, HE WOULD BE EXEMPT, THOUGH, IF IT WAS CAUSED THROUGH THE KNOCKING, HE WOULD BE LIABLE.

GEMARA. R. Assi said: The Mishnaic ruling could not be regarded as applying except where he gave a joiner a box, a chest, or a cupboard to knock a nail in and while he was knocking in the nail he broke them. But if he gave the joiner timber to make a chest, a box or a cupboard and after he had made the box, the chest or the cupboard they were broken by him, he would be exempt,[35] the reason being that a craftsman acquires title to the increase in [value caused by the construction of] the article.[36] But we have learnt: IF AN OWNER GAVE CRAFTSMEN SOME ARTICLES TO SET IN ORDER AND THEY SPOILT THEM THEY WOULD BE LIABLE TO PAY. Does this not mean that he gave them timber to make utensils?[37] — No, [he gave them] a chest, a box or a cupboard.[38] But since the concluding clause in the text mentions 'chest, box or cupboard' is it not implied that the opening clause refers to timber? — It may, however, be said that [the later clause] only means to expand the earlier [as follows]: 'In the case where an owner gave craftsmen some articles to set in order and they spoiled them, how would they be liable to pay? As, e.g., where he gave a joiner a chest, a box, or a cupboard.' There is also good reason for supposing that the text [of the latter clause] was merely giving an example. For should you assume that the opening clause refers to timber, after we have been [first] told that [even] in the case of timber they would be liable to pay and that we should not say that the craftsman acquires title to the increase in [value caused by the construction of] the article, what necessity would there be to mention afterwards chest, box and portable turret?[39] — If only on account of this, your point could hardly be regarded as proved, for the later clause might have been inserted to reveal the true meaning of the earlier clause, so that you should not think that the earlier clause refers to [the case where he gave the joiner a] chest, box and cupboard, whereas [where he gave him] timber the law would not be so; hence the concluding clause specifically mentions chest, box and cupboard[38] to indicate that the opening clause refers to timber, and that even in that case the craftsman would be liable to pay.[37] May we say that he[40] can be supported [from the following]: If wool was given to a dyer

---

(1) [To know what liability to impose on him.]

(2) Supra 71b.

(3) Since the creditor has through the destruction of his bond suffered an actual loss of money.

(4) Cf. Pes. II. 2.

(5) When though forbidden to be used for any purpose it is still not under an injunction to be destroyed; cf. Pes. II. 2.

(6) To the robber, since the robber would have been able to restore the leaven to the owner and say. 'Here there is thine before thee', whereas after the leaven was destroyed he would have to pay the full original value if the leaven.

(7) I.e., R. Meir; cf. infra 100a.

(8) [Who in his childhood had destroyed a bond of a creditor.]

(9) A metaphorical expression for 'straight and exact and out of the best of the estate', as supra p. 16; v. Rashi and Sh.M. a.l.

(10) v. supra 45a for notes.

(11) R. Jacob and the Rabbis.

(12) Our Mishnah thus represents the view of R. Jacob.

(13) I.e., to R. Hisda.

(14) Whether a robber would be entitled to restore it and plead 'Here there is thine before thee'.

(15) And no sentence would have been passed on it.

(16) [I.e., the court. This plea would, however, not apply to leaven where the incidence of the prohibition is not due to an act of the robber but to the intervention of the Passover (Rashi).]

(17) [Whether the plea 'Here, take your own' is admissible in their case.]

(18) Lev. V, 23.

(19) Though it meanwhile became valueless.

(20) [MS.M. rightly omits 'wine and it became sour' as in this case payment is according to value at time of robbery; Var. lec. and he poured from it a libation (to an idol).]

(21) V. Glos.

(22) V. p. 561, n. 4.

(23) V. ibid., n. 5.

(24) V. ibid., n. 6.

(25) V. ibid., n. 8.

(26) V. p. 561, n. 5.

(27) Thus confirming the view of Rabbah as against that of R. Hisda.

(28) I.e., R. Hisda to Rabbah b. Samuel.

(29) My colleagues.

(30) For a similar attitude cf. 'Er. 11b where R. Shesheth said so to the same Rabbah b. Samuel, and ibid. 39b where the same R. Shesheth said so to Raba(== Rabbah) b. Samuel.

(31) In our Mishnah.

(32) Where payment must be made.

(33) And the change was definite.

(34) Lit., 'a turret', a cupboard in the form of a turret.

(35) So far as the increase in value caused by the construction of the article is concerned, [for when he parts with it he effects a sale of the improvement of the article and the stipulated sum paid to him is but the purchase money for the same.]

(36) Cf. B.M. 112a.

(37) And their liability would thus extend to the whole value of the utensils made by them.

(38) For some repair, in the performance of which they were broken.

(39) In which case the law is quite evident.

(40) I.e., R. Assi.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 99a

and it was burnt by the dye, he would have to pay the owner the value of his wool.[1] Now, it is only the value of the wool that he has to pay, but not the combined value of the wool and the increase in price.[2] Does this not apply even where it was burnt after the dye was put in,[3] in which case there has already been an increase in value, which would thus show[4] that the craftsman acquires title to the improvement carried out by him on any article? — Said Samuel: We are dealing here with a case where, e.g., it was burnt at the time when the dye was put in,[5] so that there has not yet been any increase in value. But what would it be if it were burnt after it was put in?[6] Would he really have to pay the combined value of the wool and the increase? Must we not therefore say that Samuel did not hold the view of R. Assi?[7] — Samuel might say to you that we are dealing here with a case where e.g., both the wool and the dye belonged to the owner, so that the dyer had to be paid only for the labour of his hands.[8] But if so, should it not have been stated that the dyer would have to pay the owner for the value of both his wool and his dye? — Samuel was only trying to point out that a refutation[9] would be possible.[10] Come and hear:[11] If he gave his garment to a craftsman and the latter finished it and informed him of the fact, even if from that time ten days elapsed [without his paying him] he would through that not be transgressing the injunction thou shalt not keep all night.[12] But if [the craftsman] delivered the garment to him in the middle of the day, as soon as the sun set [without payment having been made] the owner would through that transgress the injunction. Thou shalt not keep all night.[13] Now, if you assume that a craftsman acquires title to the improvement [carried out by him] on any article,[14] why should the owner be transgressing[15] the injunction. Thou shalt not keep all night? — Said R. Mari the son of R. Kahana: [The work required in this case was] to remove the woolly surface of a thick cloth where there was no accretion.[16] But be it as it may, since he gave it to him for the purpose of making it softer, as soon as he made it softer was there not already an improvement? — No; the ruling is necessary [for meeting the case] where he hired him to stamp upon it [and undertook to pay him] for every act of stamping one ma'ah,[17] which is but the hire [for labour].

But according to what we assumed previously that he was not hired for stamping,[18] [this ruling] would have been a support to [the view of] R. Shesheth, for when it was asked of R. Shesheth[19] whether in a case of contracting the owner would transgress[20] the injunction, Thou shalt not keep all night, or would not transgress, he answered that he would transgress! But are we [at the same time] to say that R. Shesheth differed from R. Assi?[21] — Samuel b. Aha said: [R. Shesheth was speaking] of a messenger sent to deliver a letter.[22]

Shall we say [that the same difference is found between] the following Tannaim? [For it was taught: If a woman says,] 'Make for me bracelets, earrings and rings,[23] and I will become betrothed unto thee,'[24] as soon as he makes them she becomes betrothed [unto him];[25] this is the view of R. Meir. But the Sages say that she would not become betrothed until something of actual value has come into her possession.[26] Now, what is meant by actual value? We can hardly say that it refers to this particular value,[27] for this would imply that according to R. Meir [it was] not [necessary for her to come into possession] even of that value. If so, what would be the instrument to effect the betrothal?[25] It therefore appears evident that what was meant by 'actual value' was some other value.[28] Now again, it was presumed [by the students] that according to all authorities there is continuous [growth of liability for] hire from the very commencement of the work until the end of it,[29] and also that according to all authorities if one betroths [a woman] through [foregoing] a debt [owing to him from her], she would not be betrothed.[30] Would it therefore not appear that they[31] differed on the question whether a craftsman acquires title to the improvement carried out by him upon an article, R. Meir maintaining that a craftsman acquires title to the improvement carried out by him upon an article,[32] while the Rabbis maintained that the craftsman does not acquire title to the improvement carried out by him upon an article?[33] — No; all may agree that the craftsman does not acquire title to the improvement carried out by him upon an article, and here they differ as to whether there is progressive [liability for] hire from the very commencement of the work until the very end, R. Meir maintaining that there is no liability for hire except at the very end,[34] whereas the Rabbis maintained that there is progressive [liability for] hire[35] from the commencement until the very end.[36] Or if you wish I may say that in the opinion of all there is progressive [liability for] hire[35] from the very commencement to the end,[36] but here they[37] differ [in regard to the law] regarding one who betroths [a woman] by [forgoing] a debt [due from her], R. Meir maintaining that one who betroths [a woman] by [forgoing] a debt [due from her] would thereby effect a legal betrothal, whereas the [other] Rabbis maintained that he who betroths [a woman] by [forgoing] a debt [due from her] would thereby not effect a valid betrothal.[38]

---

(1) Infra 100b.

(2) Caused by the process of dyeing.

(3) Lit., 'after falling in'. i.e. after the dye had already exercised its effect on the wool which thereby increased in value.

(4) Since he has to pay only for the wool and nor for its increase in value.

(5) Lit., 'at the time of falling in', i.e., before the dye has yet exercised any effect on the wool.

(6) V. supra n. 3.

(7) According to whom even then only the original value of the wool would have to be paid for. [Which means that R. Assi's view cannot stand since in civil law we follow the ruling of Samuel?]

(8) In which case the craftsman acquires no title to the increase in value, since the dye which imparts to the wool the increased value is not his.

(9) Of the proof advanced in support of R. Assi.

(10) Without, however, intending to oppose R. Assi.

(11) Cf. B.M. 112a.

(12) Lev. XIX, 13.

(13) V. p. 576, n. 11.

(14) So that when he parts with it he effects a sale of the improvement of the article and the stipulated sum paid to him is but the purchase money for the same.

(15) For surely by not paying purchase money in time a purchaser would not render himself liable to this transgression.

(16) To which the worker should acquire title.

(17) v. Glos.

(18) But for the completion of a certain undertaking, [in which case he would be a contractor and in a sense a vendor and yet the injunction of not delaying the payment of the hire applies.]

(19) V. B.M. 112a.

(20) By not paying the stipulated sum in time.

(21) Who maintained that a craftsman (i.e., a contractor) becomes the owner of the improvement carried out by him upon the article and when parting with it is but a vendor to whom purchase money has to be paid, and to whom the injunction does not apply.

(22) Where there is no tangible accretion to which a title of ownership could be acquired, and to which consequently there applies the injunction.

(23) The woman giving the man the material.

(24) This was spoken by an unmarried woman to her prospective husband.

(25) In accordance with Kid. I,1.

(26) Kid. 48a.

(27) I.e., the bracelets.

(28) I.e., irrespective of the bracelets, earrings and rings made by him. Whereas according to R. Meir these alone suffice.

(29) I.e., that strictly speaking each perutah of the hire becomes due as soon as work for a perutah is completed; a perutah is the minimum value of liability; v. Glos.
(30) As this is not reckoned in law sufficient consideration; cf. Kid. 6b and 47a.
(31) I.e., R. Meir and the Rabbis.
(32) So that when he makes her bracelets, earrings and rings out of her material, the improvement becomes his and could therefore constitute a valid consideration.
(33) But since the improvement was never his he only had an outstanding debt for the hire upon the other party who was in this case his prospective wife, and as the forfeiture of a debt is not sufficient consideration some 'actual value' must be added to make the consideration valid.
(34) I.e., when he restores her the manufactured bracelets etc., in which case the hire had previously never become a debt.
(35) Which thus becomes a debt rising from perutah to perutah (and as such could not constitute valid consideration).
(36) V. p. 578, n. 7.
(37) R. Meir and the Rabbis.
(38) V. p. 578, n. 8.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 99b

Raba, however, said that all might have been agreed that there is progressive [liability for] hire from the very commencement until the end, and also that one who betroths [a woman] by [forgoing] a debt [due from her] would not thereby effect a valid betrothal, and it was again unanimously held that a craftsman does not acquire title to the improvement carried out by him upon an article,[1] and here we are dealing with a case where, e.g., he added a particle out of his own [funds[2] to the raw material supplied by her], R. Meir holding that where the [instrument of betrothal] is both [the foregoing of] a debt and [the giving of] a perutah,[3] the woman thinks more[4] of the perutah,[2] whereas the Rabbis held that where the [instrument of betrothal] is both [the foregoing of] a debt and [the giving of] a perutah, she thinks more of the debt [which she is excused].

This was also the difference between the following Tannaim, as taught: [If a man says,] 'In consideration of the hire for the work I have already done for you[5] [be betrothed to me],'[6] she would not become betrothed,[7] but [if he says], 'In consideration of the hire for work which I will do for you [be betrothed to me]', she would become betrothed. R. Nathan said that if he said, 'In consideration of the hire for work I will do for you,' she would thereby not become betrothed; and all the more so in this case where he said, 'In consideration of the hire for work I have already done for you.' R. Judah the Prince, however, says: It was truly stated that whether he said, 'In consideration of the hire for the work I have already done for you,'[6] or, 'In consideration of the hire for work I will do for you,' she would not thereby become betrothed, but if he added a particle out of his own funds[8] [to the raw material supplied by her], she would thereby become betrothed.[9] Now, the difference between the first Tanna and R. Nathan is on the question of the liability for hire [whether or not it is progressive from the very commencement],[10] while the difference between R. Nathan and R. Judah the Prince is on the question [what is her attitude when the betrothal is made both by the foregoing of] a debt [and the giving of] a perutah.[11]

Samuel said: An expert slaughterer who did not carry out the slaughter properly[12] would be liable to pay, as he was a damage-doer, [and] he was careless, and this would be considered as if the owner asked him to slaughter for him from one side[13] and he slaughtered for him from the other. But why was it necessary for him to say both 'he was a damage-doer [and] he was careless'? — If he had said only he was a damage-doer,I might have said that this ruling should apply only where he was working for a hire,[14] whereas where he was working gratuitously this would not be so; we are therefore told, [that there is no distinction as] he was careless. R. Hama b. Guria raised an objection to this view of Samuel [from the following]: If an animal was given to a slaughterer and he caused it to become nebelah,[15] if he was an expert he would be exempt, but if an amateur[16] he would be liable.

If, however, he was engaged for hire, whether he was an amateur or expert he would be liable. [Is this not in contradiction to the view of Samuel?] — He replied:[17] Is your brain disordered? Then another one of our Rabbis came along and raised the same objection to his view. He said to him:[18] 'You surely deserve to be given the same as your fellow.[19] I was stating to you the view of R. Meir and you tell me the view of the Rabbis! Why did you not examine my words carefully wherein I said: "For he was a damage-doer [and] he was careless, and this should be considered as if the owner asked him to slaughter for him from one side[20] and he slaughtered for him from the other." For surely who reasons in this way if not R. Meir, who said that a human being has to take greater heed to himself?' But what [statement of] R. Meir [is referred to]? We can hardly say the one of R. Meir which we learned: (Mnemonic: KLN)[21] 'If the owner fastened his ox [to the wall inside the stable] with a cord or shut the door in front of it properly but the ox [nevertheless] got out and did damage, whether it had been Tam or already Mu'ad he would be liable; this is the opinion of R. Meir,'[22] for surely, in that case, there they differed as to the interpretation of Scriptural Verses![23] — It therefore seems to be the one of R. Meir which we learned: [If wool was handed over to a dyer] to dye it red but he dyed it black, or to dye it black and he dyed it red, R. Meir says that he would have to pay [the owner] for the value of the wool.[24] But did he not there spoil it[25] with his own hands?[26] — The reference therefore must be to the one of R. Meir which was taught: 'If a pitcher is broken and [the potsherds] are not removed, or a camel falls down and is not raised, R. Meir orders payment for any damage resulting therefrom, whereas the [other] Sages say that no action can be instituted in civil courts though there is liability according to divine justice,'[27] and we came to the conclusion[28] that they differed as to whether or not stumbling implies negligence.

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said that R. Johanan stated that an expert slaughterer who did not carry out the slaughter properly[29] would be liable to pay, even if he was as skilled as the slaughterer of Sepphoris. But did R. Johanan really say so? Did Rabbah b. Bar Hanah not say that such a case came before R. Johanan in the synagogue of Maon[30] and he said to the slaughterer. 'Go and bring evidence that you are skilled to slaughter hens, and I will declare you exempt'? — There is, however, no difficulty, as the latter ruling was [in a case where the slaughterer was working] gratuitously whereas the former ruling applies [where the slaughterer works] for hire,[31] exactly as R. Zera said: If one wants the slaughterer to become liable to him,[32] he shall give him a dinarius beforehand.[31]

An objection was raised: If wheat was brought to be ground and the miller omitted to moisten it and he made it into branflour or coarse bran, or if flour [was given] to a baker and he made out of it bread which crumbled, or an animal to a slaughterer and he rendered it nebelah,[33] he would be liable, as he is on the same footing as a worker who receives hire.[34] [Does this not imply that he was working gratuitously? — No.] read: 'Because he is a worker receiving hire.'[31]

A case of magrumeta[35] was brought before Rab, who declared it trefa and nevertheless released the slaughterer from any payment. When R. Kahana and R. Assi met that man[36] they said to him: 'Rab did two things with you.' What was meant by these two things? If you say it meant two things to his[36] disadvantage, one that Rab should have declared it kasher in accordance with R. Jose b. Judah,[37] whereas he declared it trefa in accordance with the Rabbis,[37] and again that since he acted in accordance with the Rabbis,[37] he should at any rate have declared the slaughterer liable, is it permitted to say a thing like that? Was it not taught:[38] When [a judge] leaves [the court] he should not say, 'I wanted to declare you innocent, but as my colleagues insisted on declaring you liable I was unable to do anything since my colleagues formed a majority against me,' for to such behaviour is applied the verse, A tale-bearer revealeth secrets?[39] — It must therefore be said that the two things were to his[36] advantage, first that he did not let you eat a thing which was possibly forbidden, secondly that he restrained you from receiving payment which might possibly have been a misappropriation.

It was stated: If a denar was shown to a money changer [and he recommended it as good] but it was subsequently found to be bad, in one Baraitha it was taught that if he was an expert he would be exempt but if an amateur he would be liable, whereas in another Baraitha it was taught that whether he was an expert or an amateur he would be liable. R. Papa stated: The ruling that in the case of an expert he would be exempt refers to such, e.g., as Dankcho and Issur[40] who needed no [further] instruction whatever, but who made[41] a mistake regarding a new stamp at the time when the coin had just [for the first time] come from the mint.

There was a certain woman who showed a denar to R. Hiyya and he told her that it was good. Later she again came to him and said to him, 'I afterwards showed it [to others] and they said to me that it was bad, and in fact I could not pass it.' He therefore said to Rab: Go forth and change it for a good one and write down in my register that this was a bad business. But why [should he be different from] Dankcho and Issur[42] who would be exempt because they needed no instruction? Surely R. Hiyya also needed no instruction? — R. Hiyya acted within the 'margin of the judgment,'[43] on the principle learnt by R. Joseph: 'And shalt show them[44] means

---

(1) V. p. 578, n. 11.

(2) Which could constitute valid consideration.

(3) I.e., a coin which constitutes the minimum of value in legal matters.

(4) V. Sanh. 19b.

(5) The article having been already returned to her.

(6) This was spoken to a prospective wife.

(7) V. p. 578. n. 8.

(8) V. p. 579, n. 7.

(9) Kid. 48b.

(10) [R. Nathan holding that it is, whereas the first Tanna holds that there is no liability except at the very end.]

(11) [R. Nathan maintains that the woman thinks primarily of the debt, while, according to R. Judah the Prince she thinks more of the perutah.]

(12) As required by the ritual, and has thus rendered the animal unfit for consumption according to the dietary laws.

(13) Of the throat.

(14) Where he could be made liable even in the absence of carelessness.

(15) I.e., unfit for consumption through a flaw in the slaughter; v. Glos.

(16) As he had no right to slaughter.

(17) I.e., Samuel to R. Hama.

(18) I.e., Samuel to the other Rabbi.

(19) R. Hama.

(20) V. p. 580, n. 9.

(21) Keyword consisting of the Hebrew initial words of the three teachings that follow.

(22) Supra 45b.

(23) [V. loc. cit. This case cannot accordingly be appealed to as precedent.]

(24) Infra 100b.

(25) Lit., 'burn it'.

(26) Since he intended to dye it in that colour in which he actually dyed it, whereas in the case of the slaughterer, the damage looks more like an accident.

(27) Supra 28b-29a.

(28) [R. Meir holding that a human being must take greater heed to himself.]

(29) V. p. 580, n. 8.

(30) [In Judah, I Sam. XXIII, 24.]

(31) V. p. 580, n. 10.

(32) Were the slaughter not carried out effectively.

(33) V. p. 581, n. 1.

(34) Tosef. B.K. X, 4 and B.B. 93b.

(35) I.e., where the slaughter was started in the appropriate part of the throat but was finished higher up, in which matter there is a difference of opinion between R. Jose b. Judah and the Rabbis in Hul. 1, 3.

(36) I.e., the owner of the animal.

(37) Hul. ibid.

(38) Sanh. 29a.

(39) Prov. XI, 13.

(40) Two renowned money changers in those days.

(41) Lit., 'But where was their mistake; they made, etc.

(42) V. p. 583. n. 8.

(43) For the sake of equity and mere ethical considerations. [On this principle termed lifenim mi-shurath ha-din according to which man is exhorted not to insist on his legal rights. v. Herford, Talmud and Apocrypha, pp. 140, 280. That there was nothing Essenic in that attitude, but that it is a recognised principle in Rabbinic ethics has already been shown by Buchler, Types, p. 37.]

(44) Ex. XVIII, 20; the verse continues, the way wherein they must walk and the work.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 100a

the source of their livelihood;[1] the way means deeds of lovingkindness; they must walk means the visitation of the sick; wherein means burial, and the work means the law; which they must do means within the margin of the judgment.'[2] Resh Lakish showed a denar to R. Eleazar who told him that it was good. He said to him: You see that I rely upon you. He replied: Suppose you do rely on me, what of it? Do you think that if it is found bad I would have to exchange it [for a good one]? Did not you yourself state that it was [only] R. Meir who adjudicates liability in an action for damage done indirectly,[3] which apparently means that it was only R. Meir who maintained so whereas we did not hold in accordance with his view? — But he said to him: No; R. Meir maintained so and we hold with him. But to what [statement of] R. Meir [was the reference]? It could hardly be the one of R. Meir which we learned: If a judge in giving judgment [in a certain case] has declared innocent the person who was really liable or made liable a person who was really innocent, declared defiled a thing which was levitically clean, or declared clean a thing which was really defiled,[4] his decision would stand, but he would have to make reparation out of his own estate,[5] for was it not taught in connection with this that R. Elai said that Rab stated[6] that [this would be so] only where he personally executed the judgment by his own hand?[7] The reference therefore appears to be the one of R. Meir which we learned: [If wool was handed over to a dyer] to dye it red but he dyed it black, or to dye it black and he dyed it red, R. Meir says that he would have to pay [the owner] for the value of his wool.[8] But did he not in that case also spoil it with his own hands?[9] The reference must therefore be to the one of R. Meir which we learned: He who with [the branches of] his vine covers the crops of his fellow renders them proscribed[10] and will be liable for damages.[11] But there also did he not do the mischief with his own hands? The reference must therefore be to the one of R. Meir which was taught: 'If the fence of a vineyard [near a field of crops] is broken through,

---

(1) Either the means of an honest livelihood, as explained by Rashi on B.M. 30b or the study of the living law, as interpreted by Rashi a.l.

(2) B.M. 30b.

(3) Supra 98b.

(4) And it so happened that that thing was consequently mixed with clean things and this spoiled them all; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 210, nn. 6-8.

(5) Bk. IV, 4.

(6) Bek. 28b.

(7) I.e., where he acted both as judge and executive officer, in which case the damage was directly committed by him personally.

(8) V. next Mishnah.

(9) By dyeing it the wrong colour.

(10) In accordance with Deut. XXII, 9.

(11) Kil. VII, 4.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 100b

[the owner of the crops] may request [the owner of the vineyard] to repair it;[1] so also if it is broken through again he may similarly request him to repair it. But if the owner of the vineyard abandons it altogether and does not repair it he would render the produce proscribed and would incur full responsibility.[2]

MISHNAH. IF WOOL WAS GIVEN TO A DYER AND THE DYE[3] BURNT IT, HE WOULD HAVE TO PAY THE OWNER THE VALUE OF HIS WOOL. BUT IF HE DYED IT KA'UR,[4] THEN IF THE INCREASE IN VALUE[5] IS GREATER THAN HIS OUTLAY THE OWNER WOULD GIVE HIM ONLY THE OUTLAY, WHEREAS IF THE OUTLAY[6] WAS GREATER THAN THE INCREASE IN VALUE HE WOULD HAVE TO PAY HIM THE AMOUNT OF THE INCREASE, [WHERE WOOL WAS HANDED TO A DYER] TO DYE RED AND HE DYED IT BLACK, OR TO DYE BLACK AND HE DYED IT RED, R. MEIR SAYS THAT HE WOULD HAVE TO PAY [THE OWNER] FOR THE VALUE OF HIS WOOL. R. JUDAH, HOWEVER, SAYS: IF THE INCREASE IN VALUE[7] IS GREATER THAN THE OUTLAY, THE OWNER WOULD PAY THE DYER HIS OUTLAY, WHEREAS IF THE OUTLAY EXCEEDED THE INCREASE IN VALUE HE WOULD HAVE TO PAY HIM NO MORE THAN THE INCREASE.[8]

GEMARA. What does KA'UR mean? — R. Nahman said that Rabbah b. Bar Hanah stated: It means that the 'copper'[9] dyed it. What is meant by saying that the 'copper' dyed it? — Said Rabbah b. Samuel:

---

(1) For otherwise he would have to remove his vines four cubits from the border; cf. B.B. 26a.

(2) V. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 2 and notes.

(3) Lit., 'The cauldron', 'the dyer's kettle'.

(4) Explained in the Gemara.

(5) Resulting from the work done by him.

(6) Incurred by the dyer.

(7) V. p. 585, n. 11.

(8) V. supra 95a-b.

(9) **

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 101a

He dyed it with the sediments of the kettles.

Our Rabbis taught: If pieces of wood were given to a joiner to make a chair and he made a bench out of them, or to make a bench and he made a chair out of them R. Meir says that he will have to refund to the owner the value of his wood, whereas R. Judah says that if the increase in value exceeds his outlay the owner would pay the joiner his outlay, whereas if the outlay exceeds the increase in value he would have to pay him no more than the increase. R. Meir, however, agrees that where pieces of wood were given to a joiner to make a handsome chair out of and he made an ugly chair out of them, or to make a handsome bench and he made an ugly one if the increased value would exceed the outlay the owner would pay the joiner the amount of his outlay, whereas if the outlay exceeded the increase in value he would have to pay him no more than the amount of the increase.

It was asked: Is the improvement effected by colours a [separate] item independent of the wool, or is the improvement effected by colours not a [separate] item independent of the wool? How can such a question arise in practice? The case can hardly be one where a man misappropriated pigments and after having crushed and dissolved them he dyed wool with them,for would he not have acquired title to them through the change which they underwent?[1] — No; the query could have application only where he misappropriated pigments already dissolved and used them for dyeing, so that if the improvement effected by colours is a [separate] item independent of the wool the plaintiff might plead: 'Give me back the dyes which you have taken from me',[2] but if on the other hand the improvement effected by colours is not a [separate] item independent of the wool the defendant might say to him: 'I have nothing of yours with me.' But I would here say: [Even] if the improvement effected by colours is not a [separate] item independent of the wool, why should the defendant be able to say to him: 'I have nothing of yours with me', seeing that the plaintiff can say to him: 'Give me back the pigments of which you have deprived me'?[3] — We must therefore take the other alternative: Are we to say that the improvement effected by colours is not a [separate] item independent of the wool and the defendant would have to pay him,[4] or is the improvement effected by colours a [separate] item independent of the wool and the defendant can say to him: 'Here are your dyes before you and you can take them away.'[5] But how can he take them away? By means of soap? But soap would surely remove them without making any restitution![6] — We must therefore be dealing here [in the query] with a case were e.g., a robber misappropriated dyes and wool of one and the same owner, and dyed that wool with those dyes and was returning to him that wool. Now, if the improvement effected by colours is a [separate] item independent of the wool, the robber would thus be returning both the dyes and the wool, but if the improvement effected by colours is not a [separate] item independent of the wool, it was only the wool which he was returning, whereas the dyes he was not returning.[7] But I would still say: Why should it not be sufficient [for the robber to do this] seeing that he caused the wool to increase in value?[8] — No: the query might have application where coloured wool had meanwhile depreciated in price.[9] Or if you wish I may say that it refers to where e.g., he painted with them an ape[10] [in which case there was thereby no increase in value]. Rabina said: We were dealing here [in the query] with a case where e.g., the wool belonged to one person and the dyes to another,[11] and as an ape[12] came along and dyed that wool of the one with those dyes of the other; now, is the improvement effected by the colours a [separate] item independent of the wool so that the owner of the dyes is entitled to say to the owner of the wool: 'Give me my dyes which are with you',[13] or is the improvement effected by colours not a [separate] item apart from the wool, so that he might retort to him: 'I have nothing belonging to you'? — Come and hear: A garment which was dyed with the shells of the fruits of 'Orlah[14] has to be destroyed by fire.[15] This proves that appearance is a distinct item [in valuation]![16] — Said Raba: [It is different in this case where] any benefit visible to the eye[17] was forbidden by the Torah as taught Uncircumcised: it shall not be eaten of;[18] this gives me only its prohibition as food. Whence do I learn that no other benefit should be derived from it, that it should not be used for dyeing with, that a candle should not be lit with it? It was therefore stated further, Ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised: . . . . uncircumcised, it shall not be eaten of, for the purpose of including all of these.[19]

Come and hear: A garment which was dyed with the shells [of the fruits] of the sabbatical year has to be destroyed by fire![20] — It is different there, as Scripture stated: 'It shall be'[21] implying that it must always be as it was.[22]

---

(1) And the whole liability upon him would be to pay the original value of the dyes as supra p. 541.

(2) Since his dyes form now an integral part of the defendant's wool.

(3) And with reference to which you have accordingly become subject to the law of robbery.

(4) For the dyes.

(5) I.e., remove them from the wool.

(6) To which a robber is subject; cf. Lev. V, 23.

(7) And would therefore still have to pay for the dyes.

(8) By having dyed it with the dyes misappropriated from the same plaintiff.

(9) And the increase through the process of dyeing is below the price of the dyes, [in which case the plaintiff can say that he would have sold the pigments before the depreciation].
(10) Or as interpreted by others 'a basket of willows' which he misappropriated from the same plaintiff.
(11) And it was not a case of misappropriation at all.
(12) Belonging to no particular owner who could be made liable.
(13) V. p. 587. n. 2.
(14) I.e., the fruit in the first three years of the plantation of the tree; cf. Glos.
(15) 'Orl. III, 1. 'Orlah is proscribed from any use; cf. Lev. XIX, 23.
(16) To render the garment itself proscribed.
(17) Cf. Me'il. 20a.
(18) Lev. XIX, 23.
(19) Pes. 22b. Kid. 56b. 'Orlah thus affords no precedent.
(20) Now, could it not be proved from this that mere colour is a distinct item!
(21) Lev. XXV, 7.
(22) Even after it has been changed and altered by various processes.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 101b

Raba pointed out a contradiction. We have learnt: 'A garment which was dyed with the shells [of the fruits] of 'Orlah has to be destroyed by fire,' thus proving that colour is a distinct item; but a contradiction could be pointed out: 'If a quarter [of a log][1] of [the] blood [of a dead person] has been absorbed in the floor of a house, [all in] the house[2] would become defiled,[3] or as others say, '[all in] the house would not be defiled'; these two statements, however, do not differ, as the former refers to utensils which were there at the beginning,[4] whereas the latter refers to the utensils which were brought there subsequently [after the blood was already absorbed 'in the ground].[5] 'If the blood was absorbed in a garment, we have to see: if on the garment being washed a quarter [of a log] of blood would come out of it,[6] it would cause defilement,[7] but if not, it would not cause defilement'![8] — Said R. Kahana: The ruling stated in this Mishnah is one of concessions made in respect of quarters [of a log], applicable in the case of blood of one weltering in his blood who defiles by [mere] Rabbinic enactment.[9]

Raba again pointed out a contradiction: We have learnt: '[Among] the species of dyes, the aftergrowths of woad and madder are subject to the law of the sabbatical year,[10] and so also is any value received for them subject to the law of the sabbatical year; they are subject to the law of removal[11] and any value received for them is similarly subject to the law of removal,'[12] thus proving that wood is subject to the sanctity of the sabbatical year; but a contradiction could be pointed out: 'leaves of reeds and leaves of vines which have been heaped up for the purpose of making them into a hiding place upon a field, if they were gathered to be eaten would be subject to the sanctity of the sabbatical year but if they were gathered for firewood they would not be subject to the sanctity of the sabbatical year'![13] — But he himself answered: Scripture stated: 'for food',[14] implying that the law applies only to produce from which a benefit is derived at the time of its consumption,[15] so that the wood for fuel is excluded as the benefit derived from it[16] is after its consumption. But is there not the wood of the pine tree [used for torches] from which a benefit is derived at the time of its consumption? — Raba said:

---

(1) A liquid measure; cf. Glos.
(2) Subject to defilement.
(3) As a quarter of a log of blood of a dead person is equal in law to the corpse itself and is subject to Num. XIX, 14.
(4) I.e., before the blood was absorbed in the ground when it caused defilement.
(5) And could no more cause defilement.
(6) As to the way of calculation, v. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l.
(7) As the blood is in stich a case still considered present and existing in the garment.

(8) Because the blood could no more be considered present in the garment. Oh. III, 2. This proves that a mere colour is not a distinct item.
(9) Since it was doubtful whether the quarter of the log of blood oozed out while the person was still alive and clean or afterwards and unclean; cf. Nid. 71a.
(10) Lev. XXV. 2-7.
(11) From the house into the field as soon as similar crops are no more to be found in the field; cf. Sheb. IX. 2-3.
(12) Sheb. VII, 1.
(13) Suk. 40a. Now, does this not prove that wood is not subject to the law of the sabbatical year?
(14) Lev. XXV, 6.
(15) Such as is the case with fruits as food.
(16) For heating purposes.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Kama 102a

Wood as a rule is meant for heating.[1]

R. Kahana said: Whether [or not] we say in regard to the Sabbatical Year that wood is meant as a rule for heating was a matter of difference between the following Tannaim, as taught: The produce of the Sabbatical Year should be handed over neither for the purpose of steeping nor for the purpose of washing with them. R. Jose, however, says that the products of the Sabbatical Year may be put into steep and into the wash.[2] Now, what was the reason of the Rabbis?[3] Because Scripture said, 'for food' implying not for the purpose of steeping, 'for food' and not for the purpose of washing. But R. Jose said that Scripture stated 'for you',[4] implying, for all your needs. But also according to the Rabbis was it not stated: 'for you'? — 'for you'[5] should be analogous to 'for food', referring thus to any uses by which a benefit is derived from the products at the very time of their consumption, excluding thus the purposes of steeping and washing where the benefit is derived from the products after their consumption.[6] But what does R. Jose make of 'for food'?[7] — He might say to you that that was solely necessary for the ruling [of the Baraitha], as taught: 'for food', but not for a plaster. You say 'for food', but not for a plaster; why perhaps not otherwise, 'for food' but not for the purpose of washing? When it says 'for you'[8] the purpose of washing is indicated; what then do I make of 'for food' [if not] 'for food', but not for a plaster. But what reason had you for including the purpose of washing and excluding the purpose of a plaster? — I include the purpose of washing as this is a requirement shared alike by all people,[9] but exclude the purpose of plaster which is a requirement not shared alike by all people.[10] Now, whose view would be followed in that statement which was taught: "'for food" but not for a plaster. "for food" but not for perfume, "for food" but not to make it into an emetic'? — It must be in accordance with R. Jose, for if in accordance with the Rabbis, the purpose of washing and steeping [should also be excluded].

