- (11) V. Glos. A dead person is absolved from the precepts of the Torah, and so the prohibition of mixed stuffs does not apply.
- (12) If he sold them in the presence of a Jew, they might be bought by a Jew. Loaves baked by a heathen are disallowed, so that there would be no fear lest they would be bought by a Jew.
- (13) And this rule should also apply to wheat.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 66a

When old wine [falls] upon grapes, all agree that [they are prohibited, if] it imparts a flavour. In the case of new wine [which falls] upon grapes, Abaye said that [they are prohibited] however small the quantity be, but Raba said that it must impart a flavour. Abaye said that [they are prohibited] however small the quantity be for the reason that we use the criterion of flavour, and since both [the wine and grapes] have one flavour, it is a case of one species being mixed with the same species, and in such circumstances a minimum quantity [suffices to disqualify]. Raba, on the other hand, said that it must impart a flavour for the reason that we use the criterion of name; and since they each have a distinctive name it is a case of one species [being mixed] with a different species, and in such circumstances [the disqualification depends upon the prohibited element] imparting its flavour [to the mixture].¹

We learnt: IF YEN NESEK FELL UPON GRAPES etc. Now it is assumed that [the reference is to] new wine upon grapes; and yet [are they not disqualified only] if it imparts a flavour?² — No, [they are prohibited] however small the quantity be. Since, however, it states in the sequel: THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHATEVER DERIVES ADVANTAGE [FROM YEN NESEK BY ITS] IMPARTING A FLAVOUR IS PROHIBITED; WHATEVER DOES NOT DERIVE ADVANTAGE [FROM YEN NESEK BY ITS] IMPARTING A FLAVOUR IS PERMITTED, it follows that we are dealing here with a case where it does impart a flavour. What, then, of Abaye?³ — [He explains] our Mishnah as referring to old wine [which fell] upon grapes.⁴

If wine-vinegar [becomes mixed] with malt-vinegar or wheat-yeast with barley yeast,⁵ Abaye said: [The mixture is prohibited when the unlawful element] imparts a flavour and we use the criterion of flavour; and since each has a separate flavour, it is a case of one species [being mixed] with a different species, and in such circumstances [the disqualification depends upon the prohibited element] imparting its flavour [to the mixture]. Raba, on the other hand, said: [It is prohibited] however small the quantity be and we use the criterion of name; and since each is called vinegar or yeast, they belong to the same species and a minimum quantity [suffices to disqualify] with what belongs to the same species. Abaye said: Whence do I declare that we use the criterion of flavour? As we learnt: Spices of two or three different categories⁶ which belong to the same species,⁷ or three species [of one category], are prohibited⁸ and may be combined together;⁹ and Hezekiah said: We are dealing here with kinds of [condiments which impart a flavour of] sweetness¹⁰ because they are appropriately used for sweetening what is cooked. Now this is quite right if you maintain that we use the criterion of flavour, since they all taste alike; but should you maintain that we use the criterion of name, each of them has a separate name!¹¹ — Raba, however, can reply:¹² Whose teaching is this? It is R. Meir's, as it has been taught: R. Judah says in the name of R. Meir: Whence is it that all the prohibited things of the Torah may be combined together?¹³ — As it is stated, Thou shalt not eat any abominable thing¹⁴ — everything which I declared to be abominable comes within the law of Thou shalt not eat.¹⁵

If [prohibited] vinegar fell into [permitted] wine, all agree that it depends on whether it imparts a flavour;¹⁶ but if [prohibited] wine fell into [permitted] vinegar,¹⁷ Abaye said [that it is prohibited] however small the quantity be, and Raba said [that it depends upon whether the forbidden element] imparts a flavour. Abaye said [that it is prohibited] however small the quantity be,

(1) What the proportion of the forbidden element must be to the whole for the mixture to be allowed is discussed at the end of this Gemara (p. 329).

(2) This refutes Abaye.

(3) Who prohibits them however small be the quantity of wine which fell upon them.

(4) And then all agree that the prohibition depends on the flavour.

(5) I.e., the wine-vinegar being neseq and the wheat-leaven being part of a heave-offering.

(6) Viz., they are forbidden for common use under different headings, as, e.g., 'orlah, heave-offering etc.

(7) E.g., white pepper, black pepper, etc.

(8) When they impart a flavour to food with which they have been mixed.

(9) If each one by itself is not sufficient to impart a flavour but together they are ('Orlah, II, 10).

(10) They must all have the same taste if they are to be combined together to disqualify the mixture.

(11) Why then should they combine?

(12) He rejects Hezekiah's interpretation.

(13) If each element is itself insufficient to disqualify.

(14) Deut. XIV, 3.

(15) Consequently the criterion in regard to combination is neither name nor taste. The forbidden character of the several spices is in itself sufficient to make them combine.

(16) Because the vinegar is not affected either in its odour or taste before it mixes with the wine and it is thus a case of the mixture of two species.

(17) As soon as the wine begins to fall into the vessel, it is affected by the odour of the vinegar, even before the two liquids actually mix.

because where the smell [of the wine] is that of vinegar and the taste is of wine it is regarded as vinegar;¹ it is then a case of one species [being mixed] with the same species and in such circumstances a minimum quantity [suffices to disqualify]. Raba, on the other hand, said [that it depends upon whether the forbidden element] imparts a flavour, because when the smell [of the wine] is vinegar and the taste is of wine it is regarded as wine, and it is a case of one species [being mixed] with a different species, and in such circumstances [the disqualification depends upon the prohibited element] imparting its flavour [to the mixture].

If a heathen [smelt the wine] of an Israelite through the bung-hole² it is all right; but if an Israelite does this with the wine of a heathen Abaye declared it prohibited whereas Raba declared it permitted. Abaye declared it prohibited because the smell is something actual, whereas Raba declared it permitted because the smell is not something actual. Raba said: Whence do I maintain that the smell is not considered anything at all? As we have learnt: If they used cumin of a heave-offering as fuel for an oven and baked a loaf in it, the loaf is permitted because it [absorbs] not the taste but the smell of the cumin.³ [How does] Abaye [meet this argument]? — It is different in this instance because the prohibited element was burnt. R. Mari said: This is like [the difference between the following] Tannaim: If a man removes a warm loaf [from the oven] and places it upon a cask of wine⁴ which is heave-offering, R. Meir prohibits and R. Judah permits it;⁵ R. Jose permits it with a wheaten-loaf but prohibits it with a barley-loaf because the latter absorbs [the fumes of the wine]. Is not the issue here that one Master regards smell as something actual and the other regards it as nothing at all? From Raba's viewpoint the Tannaim do certainly differ on this matter;⁶ but from Abaye's viewpoint are we to say that the Tannaim differ on this matter!⁷ — Abaye can reply: Has it not been stated in this connection: Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: With a hot loaf and open cask

(1) The smell of vinegar is stronger than of wine, and people would judge the mixture by the odour.

(2) To see whether it was matured.

(3) Ter. X, 4. And if the smell were considered something actual, the loaf would be prohibited.

(4) The mouth of the cask being open so that the smell of the wine penetrates the loaf.

(5) To a non-priest.

(6) Because his opinion coincides with R. Judah's, whereas R. Meir by prohibiting the loaf obviously takes notice of the smell of the wine.

(7) Abaye could explain that even R. Judah regards smell as something actual, only his opinion is that the loaf does not absorb the fumes of the wine.

all agree that it is prohibited;¹ with a cold loaf and a stoppered cask all agree that it is permitted; they only differ when the loaf is hot and the cask stoppered or when the loaf is cold and the cask open; and the case under consideration² is like a hot loaf upon an open cask.

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHATEVER DERIVES ADVANTAGE [FROM YEN NESEK BY ITS] IMPARTING A FLAVOUR etc. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: Such is the legal decision.³ Further declared Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This teaching only applies when [the vinegar] fell into hot split beans;⁴ but if it fell into cold split beans⁵ and he then warms them⁶ the effect is to improve them and only in the end are they deteriorated, and therefore they are prohibited. Similarly when Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported that Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan : This teaching only applies when [the vinegar] fell into hot split beans; but if it fell into cold split beans and he then warms them the effect is to improve them and only in the end are they deteriorated, and therefore they are prohibited. There was a similar report from Rab Dimi when he came [from Palestine, and he added] that they used to do this⁷ on Sabbath-eves in Sephoris and they called them cress-dish.⁸

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: When [the Rabbis] use the phrase 'it imparts a worsened flavour,' [they do not mean] that we are to say that a certain dish lacks salt or is oversalted, or lacks spice or is over-spiced;⁹ but [what they do mean is] any food which is not lacking in anything and is not eaten because of this.¹⁰ Another version is: R. Simeon b. Lakish said: When [the Rabbis] use the phrase 'it imparts a worsened flavour', we do not attribute [the bad flavour to the fact that] a certain dish lacks salt or is oversalted, or lacks spice or is over-spiced, but [we declare that] now only it has deteriorated [owing to the mixture].¹¹

R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan: Whenever the flavour and substance [of the prohibited element in a mixture are perceptible] it is prohibited [and one who eats it] is liable to the punishment of lashes; and that is a quantity equal to the size of an olive [of the prohibited element mixed] with a quantity equal to half a loaf.¹²

(1) Because the smell certainly affects the loaf.

(2) The Israelite smelling the heathen's wine through the bung-hole.

- (3) Viz., that when the wine or vinegar causes a deterioration in the value of the food-stuff it is permitted.
- (4) The effect is to spoil them.
- (5) Which improves the flavour.
- (6) In order to destroy the advantage of the vinegar.
- (7) Pour vinegar upon cold split beans.
- (8) Cf. supra 30b.
- (9) And would not for that reason be eaten quite apart from the disqualifying matter which has been mixed with it.
- (10) Viz., the bad flavour which resulted from the mixture with disqualifying matter. Only in that circumstance does it become permitted.
- (11) This is a less strict view than what is given in the previous version; because even if it is under- or over-seasoned, it may still be allowed when mixed with what is unlawful, provided this imparted a bad flavour.
- (12) I.e., a quantity equal to the size of four eggs (Rashi). To be liable he must in addition have eaten the minimum amount spread over a period which is defined by the phrase 'in which one could eat half a loaf.'

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 67b

If the taste [is perceptible] but not the substance,¹ it is prohibited but he is not punished with lashes; should, however, [the unlawful element] have intensified the flavour so as to worsen it, then it is permitted. Let him then say [more explicitly] that if it imparts a worsened flavour it is permitted! — He thereby informs us that it is so even when there is another element in it which worsens the flavour, and [that] the legal decision is in accord with the second version of R. Simeon b. Lakish's statement.²

R. Kahana said: We learn from the words of them all³ that when [the forbidden element] imparts a worsened flavour it is permitted. Abaye said to him: As regards all the rest of them very well, but since R. Simeon b. Lakish has the words, 'When [the Rabbis] use the phrase,' it follows that he personally does not hold that view. Are we, then, to infer that there are some who maintain that when [the forbidden element] imparts a worsened flavour it is prohibited? — Yes, for it has been taught: Whether it imparts a worsened or improved flavour it is prohibited — such is the statement of R. Meir; R. Simeon says: If improved it is prohibited but if worsened it is permitted. What is R. Meir's reason? — He derives it from the vessels of Gentiles. The vessels of Gentiles, do they not impart a worsened flavour [to the food cooked in them]? and yet the All-merciful forbade them;⁴ so here also it makes no difference [and it is prohibited]. How does the other [viz., R. Simeon establish his view]? — In the same manner as R. Huna the son of R. Hiyya who said: The Torah only forbade a utensil which had been used [by a Gentile] the same day, the effect of which is not to worsen the flavour. [What reply is made to this by] the other? — Even in the case of a pot used [by a Gentile] the same day it is impossible that it should not worsen [the flavour] a little. And what is R. Simeon's reason? — Because it has been taught: Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself [nebelah]; thou mayest give it unto the stranger that is within thy gates⁵ — whatever is fit for use by a stranger is called nebelah,

(1) It had become dissolved in the mixture.

(2) The more lenient view is adopted.

(3) Rab Judah, R. Dimi, Resh Lakish, R. Abbahu.

(4) They must be rinsed with boiling water before a Jew may use them. This law is based on Num. XXXI, 23; v. p. 362.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 68a

and whatever is unfit for use by a stranger is not called nebelah.¹ How does R. Meir [explain the verse]? — Its purpose is to exclude what was tainted from the outset.² How does R. Simeon [meet this argument]? — An animal tainted from the outset does not require to be specially excluded because it is nothing more than dust.³

‘Ulla said: The difference [between R. Meir and R. Simeon] is over the circumstance where [the mixture] is improved [by the addition of the forbidden element] and in the end deteriorates, but if it deteriorates in the first instance all agree that it is permitted. R. Haga quoted against ‘Ulla: If wine [which is nesek] fell into lentils or vinegar into split beans it is prohibited, but R. Simeon permits it. Hence is a case where it deteriorates from the outset, and for all that they differ! — ‘Ulla replied: Haga is ignorant of what the Rabbis are here discussing and yet quotes it in objection. With what are we dealing here? E.g., it fell into cold split beans and he then warms them, the effect of which is to improve them, and only in the end are they deteriorated, and so they are prohibited. R. Johanan, on the other hand, said: The difference is when [the mixture] deteriorates from the outset. The question was asked: Is the difference over a case where it deteriorates from the outset and all agree that it is prohibited when it first improves and only in the end deteriorates, or perhaps in either event there is a difference of opinion?⁴ — The question remains unanswered.

R. Amram said: Is it possible that R. Johanan's statement⁵ should have any substance and not be the subject of a Mishnaic teaching? He went forth and examined and found a teaching. For we learnt: If non-holy yeast fell into dough and was sufficient to leaven it and did actually leaven it, and subsequently there fell into it yeast of a heave-offering or yeast of mixed plantings⁶ sufficient to cause leavening, it is prohibited — but R. Simeon permits it.⁷ Now, here is a case where [the mixture] deteriorated from the outset⁸ and yet they differ!⁹ — R. Zera said: It is otherwise with dough because it is capable of fermenting many other pieces of dough.¹⁰

Come and hear!¹¹ If yeast of a heave-offering and also some which was non-holy fell into dough,¹² each being sufficient to cause leavening, and they leavened it, then it is prohibited; but R. Simeon permits it. If the yeast of a heave-offering fell in first, all agree that it is prohibited,¹³ but if the non-holy yeast fell in first and then the yeast of a heave-offering or mixed plantings,¹⁴ it is prohibited, but R. Simeon permits it. Now here is a case where it deteriorated from the outset and yet they differ! Should you answer that here also

(1) I.e., if it was unfit for consumption because it was so deteriorated, the prohibition departs from it.

(2) So that it had never been fit for consumption; consequently the prohibition of nebelah does not apply to it.

(3) It is not regarded as an animal at all.

(4) Viz., R. Meir prohibits and R. Simeon permits it.

(5) That the difference is when the mixture deteriorates from the outset.

(6) Prohibited by the law of Lev. XIX, 19.

(7) ‘Orlah II, 10.

(8) Since it was already leavened before the prohibited yeast fell into it. The effect must be to spoil the dough.

(9) This supports R. Johanan.

(10) The yeast that fell into the dough deteriorated it from the point of view of eating; yet it was an advantage by rendering it capable of leavening other pieces of dough.

(11) Another attempt is made to find a teaching in support of R. Johanan's statement.

(12) At the same time, and the combined quantity was greater than was necessary for leavening.

(13) Because there was improvement at first and only in the end it deteriorated because of the second quantity of yeast.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 68b

R. Zera's explanation applies,¹ come and hear the continuation [of this teaching]: If wine [which is nesek] fell into lentils or vinegar into split beans, it is prohibited, but R. Simeon permits it. Now here is a case where it deteriorated from the outset and for all that they differ! Should you answer that here also what ‘Ulla taught R. Haga applies, viz., where it first improved and only in the end deteriorated, do they differ in a case where it first improves and only in the end deteriorates? For behold it taught: If the yeast of a heave-offering fell in first,² all agree that it is prohibited! Is it not then to be concluded from this that there is difference of opinion even when it deteriorated from the outset? — Draw that conclusion.

Why were the three clauses³ which are taught necessary? — It is quite right that he quotes the third because he thereby teaches us that there is difference of opinion even when it deteriorated from the outset. The second likewise [taught us that] if it improved and in the end deteriorated all agree that it is prohibited. But why [quote] the first clause? Since in the third clause, where no improvement at all occurred, the Rabbis prohibit it, how much more so [must they prohibit it] where there was improvement! — Abaye said: The first clause is necessary because of R. Simeon,⁴ and the Rabbis spoke thus to R. Simeon: This dough should take two hours to leaven and what caused it to leaven in one hour? — [Yeast which was] prohibited.⁵ How does R. Simeon [meet this argument]? — When there was improvement it was caused by both [kinds of yeast]⁶ and when there was deterioration it was also caused by both. But according to R. Simeon, the lawful and prohibited elements should be combined and render [the dough] prohibited! — R. Simeon follows his own opinion, viz., that even two prohibited elements⁷ are not to be combined,⁸ for we have learnt: ‘Orlah and mixed plantings may be combined; R. Simeon says that they may not be combined.’⁹

A mouse fell into a cask of beer and Rab prohibited the beer. Some Rabbis mentioned this in the presence of R. Shesheth and remarked: He evidently was of the opinion that when it imparts a worsened flavour it is prohibited. [R. Shesheth] said to them: Rab certainly maintains elsewhere that when it imparts a worsened flavour it is permitted. Here, however, we have an anomaly since it is something repugnant and people recoil from it; and even then the Divine Law prohibited it¹⁰ with the consequence that although it imparts a worsened flavour it is nevertheless prohibited. The Rabbis said to R. Shesheth: According to your argument [a creeping thing] should defile¹¹ whether moist or dry; why then have we learnt: They defile when moist but not when dry!¹² — And according to your reasoning semen should defile whether moist or dry; why then have we learnt: It defiles when moist but not when dry! What, however, you could say is that the semen of which the Divine Law speaks [as defiling] is such as is capable of causing fertilisation; and likewise here [in connection with creeping things] the Divine Law uses the expression when they are dead,¹³ i.e., when they have the appearance of being dead.¹⁴ R. Shimi of Nehardea objected: Is [the mouse something] repugnant; is it not brought upon the table of kings! — R. Shimi of Nehardea said:¹⁵ There is no contradiction, for [what is served at meals] is the fieldmouse and [what fell into the beer] was the domestic mouse.

Raba said: The legal decision is that when it imparts a worsened flavour it is permitted, but what was Rab's reason [for prohibiting it] in the case where a mouse fell into beer I do not know. Was it because he held that when it imparts a worsened flavour it is prohibited and the legal decision is not in agreement with him, or because he held that when it imparts a worsened flavour it is permitted but a mouse in the beer causes an improvement [to the flavour]!

The question was asked:

(1) That there is a special feature about dough, and no general rule can be deduced from it.

(2) Cf. n. 1.

(3) (a) Holy and non-holy yeast fell in the dough at the same time. (b) The holy yeast fell in first. (c) Yen nesek fell into lentils.

(4) Who permits the dough when the unlawful yeast fell in simultaneously.

(5) Consequently the yeast was at first an advantage and only in the end a cause of deterioration, and even R. Simeon admits that this is prohibited.

(6) And not only by the prohibited yeast.

(7) Each of which is insufficient in quantity.

- (8) To constitute a quantity sufficient to render something prohibited.
- (9) 'Orlah, II, 1.
- (10) Lev. XI, 29. That the mouse was eaten, v. Isa. LXVI, 17.
- (11) For the reason that the Torah prohibited it despite its repugnance.
- (12) Liquid being a conductor of defilement.
- (13) Lev. XI, 32, only then does contact cause defilement.
- (14) I.e., when they are moist.
- (15) [To be deleted with MS. M.]

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 69a

How is it if [a mouse] fell into vinegar?¹ — R. Hillel said to R. Ashi: Such an incident happened with R. Kahana and he prohibited it. [R. Ashi] replied to him: In that case [the mouse] may have been dissolved into pieces.² Rabina thought to apply here the standard of a hundred and one³ since it is not less than with the heave-offering in connection with which we learnt: A heave-offering [mixed with the non-holy] is neutralised when the proportion is one in a hundred.⁴ R. Tahlifa b. Giza said to Rabina: Perhaps [the case under discussion] is like spices of a heave-offering [which fell into] a pot of food the taste of which is not neutralised. R. Ahai estimated that with vinegar the proportion must be fifty [to one].⁵ R. Samuel the son of R. Ika estimated that with beer the proportion must be sixty [to one]. The legal decision in either case is sixty [to one], and it is so with all things prohibited by the Torah.

MISHNAH. IF A HEATHEN WAS CONVEYING JARS OF WINE TOGETHER WITH AN ISRAELITE FROM PLACE TO PLACE, AND IT MAY BE PRESUMED THAT [THE WINE] IS UNDER SUPERVISION, IT IS PERMITTED. BUT IF [THE ISRAELITE] INFORMED HIM THAT HE WAS GOING AWAY [AND HE WAS ABSENT A LENGTH OF TIME] SUFFICIENT FOR THE OTHER TO BORE A HOLE [IN A JAR], STOP IT UP AND [THE SEALING CLAY] TO BECOME DRY, [THE WINE IS PROHIBITED]. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: [A LENGTH OF TIME] SUFFICIENT FOR HIM TO OPEN A CASK,⁶ RESTOPPER IT AND [THE NEW STOPPER] TO BECOME DRY.⁷ IF [AN ISRAELITE] LEFT HIS WINE⁸ IN A WAGGON OR A SHIP WHILE HE WENT ALONG A SHORT CUT, ENTERED A TOWN AND BATHED, IT IS PERMITTED. BUT IF HE INFORMED HIM THAT HE WAS GOING AWAY [AND HE WAS ABSENT A LENGTH OF TIME] SUFFICIENT FOR THE OTHER TO BORE A HOLE, STOP IT UP AND [THE SEALING CLAY] TO BECOME DRY, [THE WINE IS PROHIBITED]. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: [A LENGTH OF TIME] SUFFICIENT FOR HIM TO OPEN A CASK, RESTOPPER IT AND [THE NEW STOPPER] TO BECOME DRY. IF [AN ISRAELITE] LEFT A HEATHEN IN HIS SHOP, ALTHOUGH HE KEPT GOING IN AND OUT, [THE WINE THERE] IS PERMITTED. BUT IF HE INFORMED HIM THAT HE WAS GOING AWAY [AND HE WAS ABSENT A LENGTH OF TIME] SUFFICIENT FOR THE OTHER TO BORE A HOLE, STOP IT UP AND [THE SEALING CLAY] TO BECOME DRY, [THE WINE IS PROHIBITED]. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: [A LENGTH OF TIME] SUFFICIENT FOR HIM TO OPEN A CASK, RESTOPPER IT AND [THE NEW STOPPER] TO BECOME DRY. IF HE WAS EATING WITH HIM AT A TABLE AND SET SOME FLAGONS UPON THE TABLE AND OTHERS UPON A SIDE-TABLE⁹ AND LEAVING THEM THERE WENT OUT, WHAT IS UPON THE TABLE IS PROHIBITED¹⁰ AND WHAT IS UPON THE SIDE-TABLE IS PERMITTED;¹¹ . AND SHOULD HE HAVE SAID TO HIM, 'MIX [SOME OF THE WINE WITH WATER] AND DRINK,' WHAT IS UPON THE SIDE-TABLE IS LIKEWISE PROHIBITED.¹² OPENED CASKS¹³ ARE PROHIBITED, AND THE CLOSED ONES ARE PERMITTED [EXCEPT WHEN HE WAS ABSENT A LENGTH OF TIME] SUFFICIENT FOR [THE HEATHEN] TO OPEN, RESTOPPER AND [THE NEW STOPPER] TO BECOME DRY.

GEMARA. How is the phrase, IT MAY BE PRESUMED THAT [THE WINE] IS UNDER SUPERVISION to be defined? — As it has been taught: Behold a man's ass-drivers and workmen¹⁴ are laden with things which are ritually clean; and though he be more than a mil¹⁵ apart from them, his ritually clean things retain their state of purity; but if he said to them, 'Go on and I will follow you,' as soon as they are out of sight his ritually clean things lose their state of purity. What is the difference between the first and second circumstance [that one is permitted and the other prohibited]?¹⁶ — R. Isaac said: The first refers to when he purified his ass-drivers and workmen for the task.¹⁷ If that is so, it should apply also to the second clause!¹⁸ — An 'am ha-arez¹⁹ is not particular about the touch of his fellow.²⁰ If that is so, it should apply also to the first clause!²¹ — Raba said:

- (1) Do we say that the mouse does not affect the taste since it is so sharp?
 - (2) And R. Kahana prohibited the vinegar from fear that a piece might be swallowed. Therefore no answer to the question can be inferred from this incident.
 - (3) If the permitted quantity is a hundred times as much as the prohibited element, the mixture is allowed.
 - (4) V. Ter. IV, 7.
 - (5) Owing to its pungent flavour the proportion is halved, i.e., the quantity of vinegar must be fifty times as much as the bulk of the mouse, if the liquid is to be permitted.
 - (6) I.e., remove the clay stopper which is sealed on to the cask.
 - (7) R. Simeon does not accept the first teaching because, in his opinion, the new patch of clay in the side of the jar could easily be detected.
 - (8) In charge of a heathen. Since he is unaware how long the owner will be away, he is afraid to tamper with the jars.
 - (9) Delphica mensa.
 - (10) Because from the fact that he was eating with the Jew, he would assume that he had the right to drink some of the wine and by touching it he renders it nesek.
 - (11) [As it is unusual for a guest to help himself from the provisions on the side-table.]
 - (12) Acting upon the permission, he may have touched the wine on the side-table.
 - (13) In the room where the heathen had been eating with a Jew and received permission to drink some wine.
 - (14) Belonging usually to the 'Am-ha-arez class. Their touch would defile what is ritually clean.
 - (15) A thousand paces; and he cannot see at such a distance what they might do with the loads.
 - (16) Even in the first circumstance described, inasmuch as the men are carrying the load they must necessarily touch and defile it.
 - (17) Through immersion in a ritual bath.
 - (18) Being cleansed how could they defile the load?
 - (19) V. Glos.
 - (20) Who, being ritually unclean, would communicate defilement to the load; and since the owner is out of sight, the men would not be careful to avoid such contact.
 - (21) Because he could not watch what happened at a distance of a mil.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 69b

It refers to when [the owner] could come upon them by some by-path.¹ If that is so, it should apply also to the second clause! — Since he had told them, 'Go on and I will follow you,' their mind is at rest.² IF [AN ISRAELITE] LEFT A HEATHEN IN HIS SHOP etc. IF [AN ISRAELITE] LEFT HIS WINE IN A WAGGON OR A SHIP etc. [Both the circumstances] are necessary; for if he had only taught the case of a heathen [conveying jars of wine], since the man thought that perhaps [the Israelite] would come and observe him,³ but when [the wine is left] in a waggon or ship, conclude [that it must be prohibited because the heathen] could put the ship to sea and do whatever he wished [to the wine].⁴ If, however, he had only taught the instance [of wine being left] in a waggon or ship, [it might have been assumed that it was permitted] because the man would have thought, 'Perhaps [the owner] will come by another path or stand upon the bank and observe me,' but when a heathen [is left] in his shop, conclude [that it must be prohibited because] he could shut the door and do whatever he wished. Hence he informs us [that in such a circumstance the wine is not necessarily prohibited].

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: The difference⁵ is over [a stopper of] lime,⁶ but with one of clay⁷ all agree [that he must have been absent a length of time] sufficient for him to open, restopper and [the new stopper] to become dry. Against this statement the following is quoted: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said to the Sages: But [if he bored a hole in a jar] cannot his stopping be detected either on the outside⁸ or the inside!⁹ This is all right if you maintain that there is difference of opinion [when the stopper is] of clay and hence [R. Simeon b. Gamaliel] teaches that the stopping can be detected either on the outside or the inside. If, on the other hand, you maintain that there is difference of opinion [when the stopper is] of lime, then it is all right as regards the inside since it can be known, but as regards the outside it cannot be known! — R. Simeon b. Gamaliel was uncertain what the Rabbis intended; so he spoke to them as follows: If you refer [to a stopper of] clay, then his stopping can be detected on the outside or the inside; but if you refer to one of lime, granted that it cannot be known on the outside, yet it can be known on the inside! [What was the answer of] the Rabbis? — Since it cannot be known on the outside, it would not occur to him to reverse [the stopper] and inspect it; or also at times [the new stopping] hardens.¹⁰

Raba said: The halachah agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, since there is an anonymous Mishnah in accord with him; for we learn: IF HE WAS EATING WITH HIM AT A TABLE AND SET SOME FLAGONS UPON THE TABLE AND OTHERS UPON A SIDE-TABLE AND LEAVING THEM THERE WENT OUT, WHAT IS UPON THE TABLE IS PROHIBITED AND WHAT IS UPON THE SIDE-TABLE IS PERMITTED; AND SHOULD HE HAVE SAID TO HIM, 'MIX [SOME OF THE WINE WITH WATER] AND DRINK,' WHAT IS UPON THE SIDE-TABLE IS LIKEWISE PROHIBITED. OPENED CASKS ARE PROHIBITED, AND THE CLOSED ONES ARE PERMITTED [EXCEPT WHEN HE WAS ABSENT A LENGTH OF TIME] SUFFICIENT FOR [THE HEATHEN] TO OPEN, RESTOPPER AND [THE NEW STOPPER] TO BECOME DRY. Obviously [this teaching agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel; so why does Raba mention the fact]! — You might have said that the whole of the passage was taught by R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. Hence we are informed [that it is not so].¹¹ Now since we have established the fact that [the halachah] agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, viz., we need not be concerned about the possibility of a hole being bored in a jar, and inasmuch as the halachah also agrees with R. Eliezer, viz., we need not be concerned about the possibility of the seal being forged,¹² what is the reason that we do not nowadays leave [stoppered casks] in charge of a heathen? — On account of the vent.¹³

Raba said: If Israelites were reclining at table with a Gentile harlot, the wine is permitted because while lust would be strong in them

(1) The men would then be afraid to defile their load.

(2) They are not under observation and would be careless. Accordingly the phrase UNDER SUPERVISION means that the heathen is afraid to tamper with the wine because he might be observed by the owner.

(3) Tampering with the wine, and for this reason he would be afraid to do so, and consequently the wine is permitted.

(4) Therefore the Mishnah has to state this case separately, and draw a distinction between whether the owner informed or did not inform the heathen of his intention to be absent for a while.

(5) Between the Rabbis and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel in the Mishnah.

(6) Because this is white from the beginning, and a new stopper of this material could not be easily detected.

(7) This is of a dark colour at first, and only after several days becomes white. Tampering would be readily noticed.

(8) The newness of the inserted material would be apparent.

(9) Even if the heathen smoothed the outside surface, he could not do this inside the jar; consequently the Jew could soon discover if anything was wrong by examining the stopper on the inside. If, then, R. Simeon holds that the new stopper can always be detected, why does he disagree with the Rabbis in the Mishnah?

(10) Both on top and bottom alike, so that detection is difficult.

(11) I.e., from 'If he was eating' is not part of R. Simeon's statement which precedes, although it harmonises with his view.

(13) Through which the fumes of the wine are allowed to escape. A heathen might draw off some of the wine through it. Another reading is shibba, 'plug'. This could be taken out and the wine interfered with.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 70a

a desire for yen nesek would not be strong in them.¹ If, however, Gentiles were reclining at table with an Israelite harlot the wine [which belongs to her] is prohibited. Why? — Because she would be held in contempt by them and be influenced to follow them.²

In a certain house was stored wine belonging to an Israelite. A heathen entered and locked the door behind him. There was a crack in the door through which the heathen was discovered standing among the jars. Raba said: All those which were opposite the crack are permitted,³ but those on either side are prohibited.

Wine belonging to an Israelite was stored in a house where an Israelite resided above and a heathen below.⁴ Once they heard a sound of quarrelling [in the street] and went out. The heathen came back first and locked the door behind him. Raba said: The wine is permitted on the ground that [the heathen] must have thought, 'Just as I came back first, so might the Israelite have come back first and be sitting upstairs watching me.'

There was some wine belonging to an Israelite stored in an inn, and a heathen was discovered among the jars. Raba said: If he could be convicted of theft the wine is permitted, otherwise it is prohibited.⁵

Wine [of an Israelite] was stored in a house and a heathen was discovered among the jars. Raba said: If he has an excuse⁶ the wine is prohibited, otherwise it is permitted.⁷ Against this is quoted: If the inn was locked⁸ or [the Israelite] said to him,⁹ 'Keep watch,' it is prohibited.¹⁰ Is it not to be supposed that [the wine is prohibited] even when the heathen has no excuse?¹¹ — No, [the cited teaching applies] when he has an excuse.¹²

An Israelite and a heathen were sitting and drinking wine together. The Israelite heard the sound of prayer in a Synagogue; so he arose and went there. Raba said: The wine is permitted on the ground that [the heathen] must have thought, 'He will remember the wine at any moment and return.'

An Israelite and a heathen were sitting in a ship. The Israelite heard the sound of the ram's horn announcing the advent of the Sabbath;¹³ so he left [the ship] and went ashore. Raba said: The wine is permitted on the ground that [the heathen] must have thought, 'He will remember the wine at any moment and return.' But if [it is supposed that the heathen would not think so] on account of its being the Sabbath, behold Raba has said: Issur the proselyte¹⁴ once told me, 'When we were still Gentiles we declared that Jews do not observe the Sabbath, because if they did observe it how many purses would be found in the streets!¹⁵ I did not¹⁶ then know that we follow the view of R. Isaac who said: If a person finds a purse on the Sabbath he may carry it for distances less than four cubits.'¹⁷

A lion once roared in an [Israelite] wine-press and a heathen [who was working in it], on hearing this, hid among the jars. Raba said: The wine is permitted on the ground that he must have thought, 'Just as I am hiding here, so also may the Israelite be hiding behind me and watching me.'

Some thieves came up¹⁸ to Pumbeditha and opened many casks. Raba said: The wine is permitted. What was his reason? — Because the majority of thieves [in that part of the country] are Israelites.

The same thing happened in Nehardea and Samuel said: The wine is permitted. According to whom [was this decision made]? Was it according to R. Eliezer who said: When there is uncertainty about his entrance¹⁹ he is undefiled; for we have learnt: If a person entered [the fields in] a valley during the rainy season²⁰ and there was a source of defilement in a certain field, and he said, 'I walked in that place but am not sure whether I did or did not enter that field,' R. Eliezer says: When there is uncertainty about his entrance²¹ he is undefiled but if the uncertainty is about his having touched [the unclean object] he is defiled!²² — No, it is different there [in the case of the thieves] because there are some who open [the casks] to search for money;²³ thus there is a double uncertainty.²⁴ [

- (1) And they would prevent her touching it. [So, R. Nissim Gerondi (Ran.)]
- (2) She would raise no objection if they touched the wine.
- (3) It was assumed that the heathen would be afraid to tamper with these because he might be under observation.
- (4) The wine was stored below, but the Jew was able to see it.
- (5) V. supra 61b.
- (6) By pretending that he was looking for something, it is evidence that he went there with the intention of tampering with the wine.
- (7) Being confused and unable to give an explanation, it is assumed that he was too afraid to have come there with the intention of disqualifying the wine.
- (8) In which was a heathen together with the wine of a Jew.
- (9) To a heathen outside the door.
- (10) Because relying on the owner's absence, the heathen could interfere with the wine.
- (11) For being suspiciously close to the wine. This contradicts Raba's decision.
- (12) If he is found near the jars.
- (13) That was the signal for work to cease. A description is given in Suk. V, 5. V. also Josephus, War, IV, ix, 12.
- (14) V. B.B. (Sonc, ed.) p. 644, n. 15.
- (15) Which Jews would have to throw away if in their possession when Sabbath began, and no other Jew could pick up.
- (16) [Alfasi reads 'they (the Gentiles) do not know.']
- (17) I.e., he carries it a distance less than four cubits and stops a while, and so on until he reaches his house. This explains why purses are not found in the streets on the Sabbath.
- (18) [From some district in the South (v. Obermeyer, op. cit., p. 253).]
- (19) Whether a ritually clean person had entered a ritually defiled place. Similarly here there is doubt whether the thieves were heathens.
- (20) The fields are then sown and are regarded as a private domain.
- (21) Into the field where the defiled object was.
- (22) Toh. VI, 5; v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 225.
- (23) [So Rashi. The difficulty is obvious. V.l.: 'Since they opened many casks (it is clear that) the intention was for money.' V. D.S. a.l., n. 9. This implies that in Nehardea too 'many' casks were opened. The word is missing in cur. edd. but occurs in several texts; cf. Tosaf. s.v. פתחו.]
- (24) Besides the doubt whether they were heathens, there was the additional doubt whether they interfered with the wine since they were only searching for money. [In this case even the Rabbis who oppose R. Eliezer will agree that the wine is permitted.]

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 70b

A [heathen] girl¹ was found among jars of wine holding some of the froth in her hand. Raba said: The wine is permitted on the ground that she probably obtained it from the outside of the cask, and although none was there any more² [at the time she was discovered] we say she happened to find some.

Some troops³ once came up to Nehardea and opened several casks. When R. Dimi arrived [from Palestine] he said: A similar occurrence came before R. Eleazar and he permitted [the wine], but I do not know whether he did so because he agreed with the view of R. Eliezer who said that when there is uncertainty about his entrance he is undefiled or whether he did so because he held the opinion that the majority of the men who were in the troops⁴ were Israelites. But if that is so⁵ this is not a case of uncertainty about entrance; but uncertainty about touching!⁶ — Since, however, they opened many,⁷ conclude that they opened them with the intention of [searching for money]⁸ and so it is like a case of uncertainty about entrance.⁹

An [Israelite] woman who dealt in wine left the key of her door in charge of a heathen woman. R. Isaac said in the name of R. Eleazar: A similar occurrence was once brought before our House of Study [and they permitted the wine because] they maintained that she only entrusted her with charge of the key.¹⁰ Abaye said: We have likewise learnt similarly: If a person entrusts his keys to an ‘am ha-arez his things which are in a state of ritual purity remain undefiled because he only entrusted him with charge of the key.¹¹ Since his things which are in a state of ritual purity remain undefiled, this must be all the more true in the matter of yen nesek. Is this to say that the law of ritual purity is more stringent than that of yen nesek? — Yes, for it has been stated: If a courtyard is divided off by pegs,¹² Rab said that the ritually clean things [of a haber] are defiled,¹³ but [if the resident on the other side is] a heathen he does not render the wine [of the haber] nesek; and R. Johanan said: Also his ritually clean things remain undefiled. Against this is quoted: [If there are two courtyards one within the other,] the inner belonging to a haber and the other to an ‘am ha-arez, the haber may lay out his fruits there¹⁴ and leave utensils there, even though the hand of the ‘am ha-arez can reach to it.¹⁵ This contradicts Rab's statement! — Rab can answer you: It is different in this case because he can be regarded as a thief.¹⁶

Come and hear: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: If the roof of a haber is higher than the roof of an ‘am ha-arez, the former may lay out his fruits there and leave utensils there, provided the hand of the ‘am ha-arez cannot reach to it.¹⁷ This contradicts R. Johanan's statement! — R. Johanan can answer you: It is different in this case because he could offer the excuse that his intention was to take measurements.¹⁸

Come and hear: If the roof of a haber adjoined that of an ‘am ha-arez, the former may lay out his fruits there and leave utensils there, even though the hand of the ‘am ha-arez can reach to it. This contradicts Rab's statement!¹⁹ — Rab can answer you: Is there not R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who shares my view?²⁰ I made my statement in agreement with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. MISHNAH. IF A BAND OF MARAUDERS²¹ ENTERED A CITY IN PEACE-TIME, THE OPEN CASKS ARE PROHIBITED AND THE SEALED ARE PERMITTED; IN WAR-TIME BOTH ARE PERMITTED BECAUSE THEY HAVE NOT THE LEISURE TO OFFER LIBATIONS.

(1) She being only a child, the presumption was that she knew nothing about disqualifying the wine and her intentions were innocent.

(2) [Ms.M. omits ‘any more’.]

(3) [Or, ‘a commander’ (Rashi).]

(4) [Lit., ‘who came with those troops,’ or with that commander.]

(5) Viz., his doubt was whether they were Jews. [Delete, however, with Ms.M. ‘if that is so.’]

(6) In regard to which even R. Eliezer adopts the more rigorous view, since the doubt is whether it was Jews who opened the casks.

(7) More casks than were required only for drinking.

(8) And there was no thought of disqualifying the wine.

(9) In respect of which a more lenient view is taken by R. Eliezer; and so the wine was permitted.

(10) And not of the wine-store itself.

(12) And not by a high partition, and a haber lives on one side and an ‘am ha-arez on the other.

(13) Since it is presumed the ‘am ha-arez has touched them.

(14) Because the ‘am ha-arez has not to walk through it to reach his own courtyard.

- (15) The 'am ha-arez if found in the courtyard of the haber.
- (16) But this cannot be assumed when the one courtyard is only divided off by pegs.
- (17) Tosef. Toh. IX.
- (18) From his roof to construct a building, and for that reason he stretched out his hand. [V.I. 'I merely stretched myself.']
- (19) [In Tosef. Toh. IX, the reading is 'provided the 'am ha-arez cannot reach,' which is in support of Rab.]
- (20) He added above the condition, 'provided the hand of the 'am ha-arez cannot reach to it.'
- (21) Some edd. add: of heathens.

GEMARA. I quote in contradiction to this: When a city has been captured by besieging troops, all the wives of priests therein are disqualified [to their husbands]!¹ — R. Mari said: [The soldiers] have no leisure to offer libations, but they have it to satisfy their lust.

MISHNAH. IF A HEATHEN SENT TO ISRAELITE CRAFTSMEN A CASK OF YEN NESEK AS THEIR WAGE, THEY ARE ALLOWED TO SAY, GIVE US ITS VALUE IN MONEY';² BUT AFTER [THE WINE] HAS COME INTO THEIR POSSESSION [THE EXCHANGE] IS PROHIBITED.³

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: A man is allowed to say to a heathen, 'Go and settle for me the king's portion.'⁴ Against this is quoted: A man may not say to a heathen, 'Go in my place [and give a bribe] to the official'! — Rab retorted: You speak of a case where a man says, 'Go in my place [and give a bribe] to the official.'⁵ But the circumstance [where I give permission is quite different] and is the equivalent of: He may, however, say to him, 'Save me from the official.'⁶ MISHNAH. IF [AN ISRAELITE] SELLS HIS WINE TO A HEATHEN, SHOULD HE HAVE SETTLED THE PRICE BEFORE HE MEASURED IT OUT, THE PURCHASE-MONEY IS PERMITTED; BUT SHOULD HE HAVE MEASURED IT OUT BEFORE HE SETTLED THE PRICE,⁷ THE PURCHASE-MONEY IS PROHIBITED.

GEMARA. Amemar said: Acquisition by meshikah⁸ does apply to a Gentile.⁹ You may ascertain this from the practice of the Persians who send presents¹⁰ to one another and never retract.¹¹ R. Ashi said: I certainly maintain that acquisition by meshikah does not apply to a Gentile, and the reason why [the Persians] do not retract is due to the spirit of pride which possesses them.¹² R. Ashi said: What is my authority for this statement? That which Rab told the [Israelite] wine-sellers, viz., 'When you measure wine for Gentiles, first take the money and then measure for them, and if they have not the cash with them, lend it to them and get it back later so that it should be a loan [of money] with them; for should you not act in this manner, when it becomes yen nesek it will be in your possession and when you receive payment it will be for yen nesek.' Now should it enter your mind [argued Rab Ashi] that acquisition by meshikah does apply to a Gentile,

(1) Keth. 27a. The assumption is that they were violated; and a priest's wife, even when dishonoured by force, is disqualified to her husband.

(2) Because their wages were due in money.

(3) Once in their possession the wine belongs to them, and to get money in exchange for it is the equivalent of its sale.

(4) The royal levy on the subject's produce which was paid in kind. If what the heathen paid over included yen nesek, it is permitted although the Jew is discharging his obligation with what is prohibited.

(5) Therefore if the heathen presents him with wine, it is as though the Israelite had given it, and he cannot use yen nesek for that purpose.

(6) To secure himself from molestation he requests the heathen to make a present to the official. He would be willing to make a gift of money; so if the heathen gave him wine, he is not technically the Jew's agent in the presentation of that wine and for that reason it is allowed.

(7) The heathen has not acquired the wine by drawing it towards himself; but by touching it he rendered it nesek. Therefore the Jew is in fact selling disqualified wine.

(9) Before the payment of the money, whether the seller or purchaser is a Gentile; consequently in the circumstance described in the Mishnah the money should be permitted.

(10) [Another rendering: 'Samples'. Rashi in name of Gaonim.]

(11) Because having once passed into the possession of the receiver it is considered his property. [Or, having accepted the samples, the transaction is deemed closed.]

then as soon as the Gentile drew [the wine] to himself he acquired it¹ and it did not become yen nesek until he touched it!² — It would indeed not be so if the wine was measured and poured [by the Israelite] into the Israelite's vessel;³ but it is necessary [to suppose the circumstance] where [the Israelite] measured and poured it into the Gentile's vessel.⁴ At all events when [the wine] enters the interior of the vessel [the Gentile] acquired it,⁵ and it does not become yen nesek until it reached the bottom of the vessel.⁶ Are we, then, to conclude that the flow is a connecting link?⁷ — No; if the Gentile was holding the vessel in his hand it would indeed not be so;⁸ but it is necessary [to suppose the circumstance] where it was resting upon the ground.⁹ But let [the Gentile's] vessels acquire [the wine] for him!¹⁰ Is it to be deduced from this that when the purchaser's vessels are in the possession of the seller the former has not become the owner?¹¹ — No; I can always maintain that the purchaser does acquire them; but with what are we dealing here?¹² E.g., when there is some wine held back on the mouth of the smaller vessel¹³ through which the former wine becomes all the while nesek even before [it enters the Gentile's vessel].¹⁴ According to whom will this be? — It will not be in accord with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel; for if it were in accord with him, behold he has said: All of it may be sold to a heathen with the exception of the value of the yen nesek which is in it!¹⁵ — Against whom is this argument [directed]? Against Rab; but he himself declared that the halachah agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel only when a cask [of yen nesek] became mixed with other casks but not when wine [which is nesek] became mixed with other wine.

Against [the statement of Amemar that acquisition by meshikah does apply to a Gentile] is quoted: If one bought scrap metal from a heathen and found an idol amongst it, should he have drawn it to himself before paying over the purchase price he can return the idol; but should he have drawn it after paying over the purchase money, he casts [the profit he derives from it] into the Salt Sea!¹⁶ Now if it enters your mind that acquisition by meshikah does apply to a Gentile, how can he return it?¹⁷ — Abaye said: Because it appears to be a purchase in error.¹⁸ Raba said: Is there a purchase in error in the first circumstance and not in the second!¹⁹ — But, said Raba: There is a purchase in error in both circumstances; but in the first, since he had not paid over the money, it does not appear like an idol in the possession of an Israelite, whereas in the second, since he had paid over the money, it does appear like an idol in the possession of an Israelite.²⁰

Mar Kashisha, son of R. Hisda, said to R. Ashi: Come and hear: IF [AN ISRAELITE] SELLS HIS WINE TO A HEATHEN, SHOULD HE HAVE SETTLED THE PRICE BEFORE HE MEASURED IT OUT, THE PURCHASE-MONEY IS PERMITTED. Now should you maintain that acquisition by meshikah does not apply to a Gentile, why is the purchase-money permitted?²¹ — [R. Ashi replied:] With what are we dealing here? When he paid him the denar²² beforehand. [Mar Kashisha said]: If so, I quote the continuation: BUT SHOULD HE HAVE MEASURED IT OUT BEFORE HE SETTLED THE PRICE THE PURCHASE-MONEY IS PROHIBITED. Now if he paid him the denar beforehand, why should the purchase-money be prohibited? — [R. Ashi replied:] But according to you who maintain that acquisition by meshikah does apply to a Gentile, why in the first circumstance is the purchase-money permitted and prohibited in the second! What you have to say is that when he settled the price his mind is made up [to acquire the wine] and if he had not settled the price his mind is not made up. Similarly, according to my view, even when he has paid him the denar in advance, should he have settled the price his mind is made up and if he had not settled the price his mind is not made up.²³

Rabina said to R. Ashi: Come and hear: R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: A son of Noah²⁴ is put to death for stealing less than a perutah's worth [of the property of an Israelite] and is not obliged to make restitution. Now if you maintain that acquisition by meshikah does not apply to a Gentile, why should he be put to death?²⁵ — Because he caused trouble to an Israelite.²⁶

(2) In that case how could Rab insist on payment first on the ground that otherwise the Israelite would be selling yen neseq, since on the supposition that a Gentile acquires by meshikah the wine does not become nesek until after it had passed into his possession? Therefore the supposition is wrong and we must conclude that meshikah does not apply to a Gentile.

(3) The wine would not become nesek until after it had passed into the Gentile's possession by his touching it.

(4) The wine would then become nesek as soon as it was poured out because the vessel is prohibited and communicates forthwith the prohibition to the wine, even before the heathen drew it towards himself; so there is nothing to prove that meshikah does not apply to a Gentile.

(5) If he held the vessel while the wine was poured into it.

(6) Why then should Rab require the money to be paid first, seeing that the wine does not become nesek until after it had passed into the possession of the Gentile?

(7) [I.e., the flow of the liquid connects the two vessels and conveys the prohibition of the Gentile's vessel to that of the Israelite's, from which it is poured out, making the wine it contains nesek even before it had been acquired by the Gentile.] This question is debated in B.B. 85b. V. also supra 56b, and infra 72b.

(8) [Rab would not demand the payment of the money first, because he might hold that the flow is no connecting link.]

(9) While the wine is poured out, and in that circumstance Rab does prohibit the money unless paid first, since the wine becomes nesek while still in the possession of the Israelite.

(10) [Why then should Rab demand payment in advance?]

(11) Of the contents which the seller put into them even before the purchaser takes hold of the vessels, so that the wine becomes nesek even before it passed into the possession of the Gentile.

(12) The reason why Rab demanded payment in advance was not based on the law of meshikah but is to be sought in the cause which is now explained.

(13) Of the Gentile into which the wine is poured from the Israelite's vessel. These drops retained on the rim are yen neseq before the wine enters the interior of the vessel and becomes the possession of the Gentile.

(14) [Every portion of the wine passing over the brim becomes contaminated through these drops.]

(15) V. infra 74a, referring to yen neseq which fell into a vat. [Likewise here the money of all the wine apart from the value of the drops retained on the brim should be permitted.]

(17) It is then an idol in a Jew's possession and his duty is to destroy it.

(18) The Jew did not intend to buy an idol; for that reason he may return it.

(19) If that were the true explanation, it should hold good in both instances.

(20) And if he received money back for its return, the impression would be that he had sold the idol to the heathen.

(21) Since on that hypothesis the wine belongs to the Jew until he is paid and it becomes nesek by the heathen touching it before he pays for it.

(22) Representing the cost of the wine. The money was handed over before the wine was measured out.

(23) That is the criterion underlying the Mishnah and it has no bearing on the question of meshikah.

(24) Who took upon himself seven precepts (v. supra p. 314) one of which was to abstain from robbery, v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 381, n. 5.

(25) Since technically what had been stolen is still the Jew's property.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 72a

And what means 'he is not allowed an opportunity of making restitution'?¹ — [It signifies that] he does not come within the scope of the law of restitution.² If that is so I quote the continuation of the teaching: If his neighbour came and stole it from him, [that man] is put to death on account of it. Now this is quite right with the first circumstance because [the original thief] caused trouble to an Israelite; but what had [the second thief] done in the latter circumstance [to be put to death]?³ Consequently we must deduce from this that acquisition by meshikah does apply to a Gentile! [Yes,] draw that conclusion.

A man once said to his neighbour, 'If I sell this piece of land, I will sell it to you';⁴ but he went and sold it to another person. R. Joseph said: The first one acquired it.⁵ Abaye said to him: But he had not settled the price!⁶ [R. Joseph asked:] And whence do you declare that wherever he had not settled the price he has not acquired it? — [He replied:] As we learn in our Mishnah: IF [AN ISRAELITE] SELLS HIS WINE TO A HEATHEN, SHOULD HE HAVE SETTLED THE PRICE BEFORE HE MEASURED IT OUT, THE PURCHASE-MONEY IS PERMITTED; BUT SHOULD HE HAVE MEASURED IT OUT BEFORE HE SETTLED THE PRICE THE PURCHASE-MONEY IS PROHIBITED. [Now,] how is it then? — [How can you ask,] how is it then? It is as we have stated.⁷ — Perhaps the seriousness of yen neseq makes a difference! — Come and hear: R. Idi b. Abin said: A similar occurrence⁸ came before R. Hisda who referred it to R. Huna. The latter expounded it from the following: For it has been taught: If a man took possession of another's ass-drivers and workmen⁹ and brought them into his own house, whether he settled the price before measuring [the fruits] or measured them without having settled the price, he has not acquired them and both can retract. If, however, he unloaded them and brought them into his house, then should he have settled the price before he measured them neither can retract, and should he have measured them before settling the price both can retract.¹⁰

A man once said to his neighbour, 'If I sell this piece of land I will sell it to you for a hundred zuz.' He later sold it to another for a hundred and twenty. R. Kahana said: The first man acquired it. Rab Jacob of Nehar-pekod objected: As to this man, [it was] those zuz that compelled him.¹¹ The legal decision agrees with R. Jacob of Nehar-pekod.

If [the seller] said to [the would-be purchaser], 'When the article has been valued by three persons [we will settle the price accordingly],' even if two of the three agree [on the price it must be accepted]; but if he said, 'As three will declare [the price to be],' then there must be three who agree on the price.¹² If he said, 'When it has been valued by four persons,'¹³ then there must be four who agree on the price; so how much more so if he said to him, 'As four will declare [the price to be].' If he said to him, 'When the article has been valued by three persons' and three men came and valued it, and then the other said, 'Let three different men come who are better qualified,' R. Papa said: He has the right to object.¹⁴ R. Huna the son of R. Joshua demurred: How can we know that the latter three will be better qualified; perhaps the first three were better qualified!¹⁵ The legal decision agrees with R. Huna the son of R. Joshua.

MISHNAH. IF [AN ISRAELITE] TOOK THE FUNNEL AND MEASURED [WINE] INTO A HEATHEN'S FLASK AND THEN MEASURED SOME INTO AN ISRAELITE'S FLASK, SHOULD A DROP OF THE [FIRST] WINE HAVE REMAINED [IN THE FUNNEL], THEN [THE WINE MEASURED INTO THE SECOND FLASK] IS PROHIBITED. IF HE Poured FROM [HIS OWN] VESSEL INTO [A HEATHEN'S] VESSEL, [THE WINE IN THE VESSEL] FROM WHICH HE Poured IS PERMITTED AND [THE WINE IN THE VESSEL] INTO WHICH HE Poured IS PROHIBITED.

GEMARA. We have learnt elsewhere: An outflow, a downward stream of water and dripping liquid do not form a connecting link to communicate either defilement or purification,¹⁶ but a pool of water is a connecting link to communicate both defilement and purification.¹⁷ R. Huna said: An outflow, a downward stream of water and dripping liquid form a connecting link in connection with yen neseq.¹⁸ R. Nahman asked R. Huna: Whence have you this? If from [the Mishnah] which we learnt: An outflow, a downward stream of water and dripping liquid do not form a connecting link to communicate either defilement or purification, [and you argue that] it is only in connection with defilement and purification that it does not form a link but it does in connection with yen neseq; in that case I cite the continuation, viz., but a pool of water is a connecting link to communicate both defilement and purification, [and you must by analogy deduce that] it is only in connection with defilement and purification that it does form a link but it does not in connection with yen neseq! So there is no inference to be drawn from this extract.

We learnt: IF [AN ISRAELITE] TOOK THE FUNNEL AND MEASURED [WINE] INTO A HEATHEN'S FLASK AND THEN MEASURED SOME INTO AN ISRAELITE'S FLASK,

- (1) The property being ex hypothesi the Jew's.
 - (2) For the very reason that he had not technically acquired the Jew's property.
 - (3) He would not be executed for stealing the property of a non-Jew; hence he is regarded as having stolen what belonged to a Jew. Consequently what was in the possession of 'the son of Noah' was Jewish property and he had acquired it by meshikah.
 - (4) [This was attended by a formal kinyan (Rashi).]
 - (5) If he pays the price given by the purchaser.
 - (6) [The kinyan is of no effect, since in the absence of the fixation of any price the mind of the seller is not made up (Rashi).]
 - (7) Viz., the criterion is the settling of the price.
 - (8) Viz., similar to the sale of the field.
 - (9) I.e., a man is conveying fruits to market laden upon asses or carriers, and a would-be purchaser leads the asses and men into his own house, which is evidence of his intention to buy the produce.
 - (10) It follows that the criterion is the settling of the price. Accordingly in the case mentioned above, the man cannot claim the field.
 - (11) The offer of the higher price may have tempted him to dispose of it; and if it had not been made he would not have sold the field.
 - (12) In the former instance the three constituted a Court, and with a Court of three judges the verdict of two is adopted.
 - (13) Since a Court never consists of four, the intention when arranging for that number must have been to secure a unanimous valuation.
 - (14) To the first valuation and ask for three other valuers.
 - (15) The bargaining could then be drawn out indefinitely.
 - (16) So that if what is below is ritually unclean what is on top is not similarly affected; and if a ritual bath does not contain the requisite minimum quantity of water, an outflow etc. cannot be reckoned in to make up the deficiency.
 - (17) Toh. VIII, 9.
 - (18) So that if wine is poured into a vessel which contains yen neseq the former is contaminated.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 72b

SHOULD A DROP OF THE [FIRST] WINE HAVE REMAINED [IN THE FUNNEL], THEN [THE WINE MEASURED INTO THE SECOND FLASK] IS PROHIBITED. How is the wine left [in the funnel] rendered prohibited? Must it not be by the outflow?¹ So deduce from this that the outflow is a connecting link. [But against such a conclusion] R. Hiyya taught: [Our Mishnah refers to the circumstance where] his flask forced the wine back;² therefore if his flask did not force it back, how is it? It is not [prohibited]. May you then not solve from the foregoing that the outflow is not a connecting link? — No; it merely proves that when his flask forced the wine back it is prohibited,³ but the question whether the outflow [is or is not a connecting link] remains.

Come and hear: IF HE Poured FROM [HIS OWN] VESSEL INTO [A HEATHEN'S] VESSEL, [THE WINE IN THE VESSEL] FROM WHICH HE Poured IS PERMITTED. Hence what is between [the two vessels] is prohibited; so deduce from this that the outflow is a connecting link! But if the outflow is a connecting link, then what is inside [the first] vessel should likewise be prohibited! — This is no difficulty, because [we have here a case where] he cuts off [the outflow].⁴ Nevertheless [we do deduce from this that]⁵ the outflow is a connecting link! But according to your reasoning I will quote the continuation: AND [THE WINE IN THE VESSEL] INTO WHICH HE Poured IS PROHIBITED. Hence what is between [the two vessels] is permitted! Consequently no inference is to be drawn from this Mishnah.⁶

Come and hear: If he pours from a cask into a vat [which contains yen neseq], the jet of liquid which descends from the rim of the cask is prohibited!⁷ — R. Shesheth explained this [extract] as referring to a heathen pouring out so that [the wine flows] because of his action.⁸ But if it is a heathen pouring out, what is in the cask is likewise prohibited!⁹ — [What is disqualified] because of a heathen's action is prohibited by the Rabbis,¹⁰ and they decreed only against what issued [from the cask] and not against what was inside it.¹¹

R. Hisda told the [Israelite] wine-dealers: When you measure wine for heathens, either cut off [the outflow] or pour it in with a splash.¹² Raba told the [Israelites] whose occupation was to pour wine: When you pour wine, let no heathen come near to help you, lest you forget yourselves and rest [the vessel] upon his [hands] and [the pouring] result from his action and [the wine] be prohibited.

A man was drawing wine¹³ through [a siphon consisting of] a large and small tube. A heathen came and laid his hand upon the large tube,¹⁴ and Raba disqualified all the wine.¹⁵ R. Papa said to Raba — another version is, R. Adda b. Mattena said to Raba; and still another version is, Rabina said to Raba: Was it on account of the outflow? So is it to be deduced from this that the outflow is a connecting link? — [Raba answered: No;] it is different in this instance, because all the wine is drawn through the siphon.¹⁶

Mar Zutra son of R. Nahman said: It is permitted [to drink from] a vessel containing several tubes,¹⁷ provided the Israelite stops first but not when a heathen stopped first.¹⁸ Rabbah son of R. Huna visited the house of the exilarch and allowed [the company which included Gentiles] to drink from a vessel containing several tubes.

(1) Which connected the wine poured into the Jew's vessel with what was left in the funnel, and this was previously made neseq by the flow into the heathen's vessel.

(2) The heathen's flask being full, some wine flowed back into the funnel. According to this explanation, the wine in the funnel was contaminated not because the outflow formed a link.

(3) [Even if no drop of wine remained in the funnel (Tosaf.).]

(4) Before the wine enters the heathen's flask he moves aside the vessel from which he is pouring out so that the outflow does not connect the two.

(5) [The bracketed words are from Ms. M.]

(6) Whether the outflow is a link or not.

(7) The inference must then be that the flow is a link.

(8) In that case the flow was disqualified by the heathen and not by the contents of the vat.

(9) And not merely the outflow; why, then, does the extract refer to the outflow only as being prohibited?

(10) And not by the Torah.

(11) This extract accordingly does not establish the view that the outflow forms a link.

(12) I.e., a connecting flow must be avoided; he held that it did form a link.

(13) [From a full cask to an empty one.]

(14) [The side from which the wine flowed into the empty cask (Rashi).]

(15) [Even the wine in the full cask.]

(16) For this reason it must be considered as though he had touched the whole quantity of wine and not merely what was in the tube.

(17) So that many can drink at the same time; this is permitted even when a heathen is one of the number.

(18) If the heathen stopped first, what he had drawn into the tube but not drunk would flow back and disqualify the remainder.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 73a

Some say that Rabbah son of R. Huna himself drank from such a vessel. MISHNAH. YEN NESEK IS PROHIBITED AND RENDERS [OTHER WINE] PROHIBITED BY THE SMALLEST QUANTITY. WINE [MIXED] WITH WINE AND WATER WITH WATER¹ [DISQUALIFIES] BY THE SMALLEST QUANTITY. WINE [MIXED] WITH WATER AND WATER WITH WINE [DISQUALIFIES WHEN THE PROHIBITED ELEMENT] IMPARTS A FLAVOUR. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WITH THE SAME SPECIES [THE MIXTURE IS DISQUALIFIED] BY THE SMALLEST QUANTITY, BUT WITH A DIFFERENT SPECIES [IT IS DISQUALIFIED WHEN THE PROHIBITED ELEMENT] IMPARTS A FLAVOUR.

GEMARA. When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported that R. Johanan said: If one pours yen nesek from a cask into a vat,² even the whole day long, the former is all the while annulled.³ We learnt: YEN NESEK IS PROHIBITED AND RENDERS [OTHER WINE] PROHIBITED BY THE SMALLEST QUANTITY! Does not this mean when the forbidden element fell into the permitted? — No, when the permitted fell into the prohibited.⁴

Come and hear: WINE [MIXED] WITH WATER [DISQUALIFIES WHEN THE PROHIBITED ELEMENT] IMPARTS A FLAVOUR. Does not this mean when prohibited wine fell into permitted water? — No, when permitted wine fell into prohibited water. If, however, the first clause [deals with] prohibited water, the second clause must likewise [deal with] prohibited water, but in the second clause he teaches: WATER WITH WINE [DISQUALIFIES WHEN THE PROHIBITED ELEMENT]⁵ IMPARTS A FLAVOUR!⁶ — R. Dimi can reply to you: Throughout our Mishnah it deals with the permitted falling into the prohibited, the first clause when permitted wine fell into prohibited water and the second when permitted water fell into prohibited wine.

When R. Isaac b. Joseph came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of R. Johanan: If one pours yen nesek from a small cooler⁷ into a vat, even the whole day long, the former is all the while annulled. This applies only to a small cooler whose jet is not considerable⁸ but not to a cask whose jet is considerable.

When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of R. Johanan: If yen nesek fell into a vat and a ewer of water also fell into it, we consider the permitted [portion of the wine] as nonexistent and as for the remainder the water may prevail over it and annul it.⁹ When R. Samuel b. Judah came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of R. Johanan: This teaching only applies when the ewer of water fell in first, but if it did not fall in first a species met with its own species and is aroused.¹⁰ There are some who connect [this statement of R. Samuel b. Judah's] with our Mishnah: WINE [MIXED] WITH WINE [DISQUALIFIES] BY THE SMALLEST QUANTITY. R. Samuel b. Judah said in the name of R. Johanan: This teaching only applies when a ewer of water did not fall into it, but if a ewer of water did fall into it we consider the permitted [portion of the wine] as non-existent and as for the remainder the water may prevail over it and annul it. What difference is there whether [R. Samuel's statement] is connected with our Mishnah or Rabin's statement? — He who connects it with our Mishnah does not require [the ewer of water to fall in] first, but he who connects it with Rabin's statement does require [it to fall in] first.

It has been stated: If yen neseq fell into a vat and a ewer of water also fell into it,

- (1) When one liquid has been used for a libation.
 - (2) And the wine in the vat is of sufficient quantity to absorb the yen neseq poured into it, viz., the proportion of sixty to one; v. supra 69a.
 - (3) Each portion of yen neseq is absorbed as it falls into the vat, however large the aggregate be, and the wine may be sold or used for any other purpose but actual drinking (Rashi).
 - (4) Whereas R. Dimi referred to the prohibited falling into the permitted; hence the difference.
 - (5) I.e., the water, on the present assumption.
 - (6) And so it is not true here that the prohibited element is absorbed.
 - (7) A stone vessel containing a strainer and having an indented (comb-like) rim (Jast.).
 - (8) And there is always a preponderance of pure wine of sixty to one.
 - (9) I.e., so long as the water is sixty times as much as the yen neseq the mixture is not disqualified.
 - (10) The two combine so that the wine is disqualified even if the quantity of water which mixes with it subsequently is sixty times the yen neseq.

Hezekiah said that should [the mixture] have become increased in quantity through the prohibited element,¹ then it is prohibited; but should it have become increased in quantity through the permitted element,² then it is permitted. R. Johanan, however, said: Even when it becomes increased in quantity through the prohibited element it is permitted.³ R. Jeremiah said to R. Zera: Does this mean that Hezekiah and R. Johanan differ over the same issue as R. Eliezer and the Rabbis, for we have learnt: If leaven of non-holy and leaven of an offering fell into dough, and in each there was an insufficient quantity to cause fermentation, but added together they caused fermentation, R. Eliezer says: I decide according to which [leaven entered the dough] last. But the Sages say: Whether the disqualifying matter fell in first or last, [the dough] is not prohibited unless there is in it a sufficient quantity [of disqualifying matter] to cause fermentation!⁴ But how can you understand the passage in this way, for behold Abaye explained: The teaching [of R. Eliezer] only applies when he first removed the disqualifying matter, but if he did not first remove the disqualifying matter, [the dough] is prohibited.⁵ Now, then, with whom does Hezekiah agree!⁶ — But here the point of difference is⁷ whether we consider [the pure wine as non-existent],⁸ Hezekiah holding that we do not and R. Johanan that we do. Does, however, R. Johanan hold that we do consider [the pure wine as non-existent]? For behold R. Assi asked R. Johanan: How is it if there were two goblets, one containing secular wine and the other wine of a heave-offering, and a man diluted them with water and then mixed the two together?⁹ And he did not offer a decision!¹⁰ — At first he gave no decision but subsequently he did. For it has been similarly reported: R. Ammi said in the name of R. Johanan — another version is, R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: If there were two goblets, one containing secular wine and the other wine of a heave-offering, and a man diluted them with water and then mixed the two together, we consider the permitted element as non-existent and as for the remainder the water may prevail over it and annul it.

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WITH THE SAME SPECIES [THE MIXTURE IS DISQUALIFIED] BY THE SMALLEST QUANTITY, BUT WITH A DIFFERENT SPECIES [IT IS DISQUALIFIED WHEN THE PROHIBITED ELEMENT] IMPARTS A FLAVOUR. Rab and Samuel both declare: With all the prohibited things of the Torah, should the mixture consist of the same species [it is disqualified] by the smallest quantity and with different species when [the prohibited element] imparts a flavour. What do the words THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE mean [accordingly] to include? — To include all the prohibited things of the Torah. R. Johanan and R. Simeon b. Lakish both declared: With all the prohibited things of the Torah, whether mixed with the same species or not, [they are disqualified when the prohibited element] imparts a flavour, with the exception of produce from which the heave-offering has not been taken and yen nesek. In these instances with the same species [the mixture is disqualified] by the smallest quantity, but with a different species when [the prohibited element] imparts a flavour. What [then] do the words THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE mean to include? — To include produce from which the heave-offering has not been taken.

There is a teaching in agreement with Rab and Samuel, and also one in agreement with R. Johanan and R. Simeon b. Lakish. There is a teaching in agreement with Rab and Samuel, viz.: With all the prohibited things of the Torah, should the mixture consist of the same species [it is disqualified] by the smallest quantity, and with different species when [the prohibited element] imparts a flavour. There is a teaching in agreement with R. Johanan and R. Simeon b. Lakish, viz.: With all the prohibited things of the Torah, whether mixed with the same species or not, [they are disqualified when the prohibited element] imparts a flavour, with the exception of produce from which the heave-offering has not been taken and yen nesek. In these instances with the same species [the mixture is disqualified] by the smallest quantity, but with a different species when [the prohibited element] imparts a flavour. This is quite right with yen nesek because of the seriousness of idolatry; but why with produce from which the heave-offering has not been taken? — Like its permissibility is its prohibition; for Samuel said: One grain of wheat can free the heap.¹¹ And we learnt to the same effect: When [the Rabbis] declared that produce from which the heave-offering has not been taken renders [a mixture] prohibited by the smallest quantity, it refers to the same species, but when it is with a different species it must impart a flavour.¹²

(1) I.e., the water fell into the pure wine, and then yen nesek fell into it; and although the water is more than sixty times the forbidden element, the whole is prohibited. This teaching is at variance with that reported by Rabin in the preceding paragraph.

(2) The pure wine fell in last. In that event the yen nesek was annulled by the water before the other wine fell into it, and so the mixture is permitted.

(3) This is consistent with the view expressed in his name in the last paragraph. Since the water fell in first, it is not a case of a species meeting with its own species.

(4) [Supra p. 243. R. Jeremiah assumes that Hezekiah will hold with R. Eliezer that we decide according to which element entered last, whereas R. Johanan will agree with the Sages.]

(5) Whichever fell in last.

(6) According to R. Eliezer the contents of the vat would be prohibited whichever fell in last since the forbidden element had not been removed; and according to the Rabbis it would be allowed in any event.

(7) Not which fell in first or last.

(8) In calculating whether the water is sixty times as much as the yen nesek which fell into the vat.

(9) In the final mixture the water is sixty times as much as the holy wine.

(10) [This shows that R. Johanan was not quite decided on the question whether 'we consider etc.']

(11) The Torah does not prescribe how much is to be removed to constitute a heave-offering, so the obligation can be discharged with the smallest quantity. The same criterion is therefore applied to its power of rendering a mixture prohibited.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 74a

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING ARE PROHIBITED AND RENDER PROHIBITED¹ BY THE SMALLEST QUANTITY: [A CASK OF] YEN NESEK,² AN IDOLATROUS OBJECT,³ SKINS OF ANIMALS WHICH HAVE HOLES OVER THE REGION OF THE HEART,⁴ AN OX WHICH HAD BEEN STONED,⁵ AN HEIFER WHOSE NECK WAS BROKEN,⁶ BIRDS BROUGHT AS AN OFFERING BY A LEPER,⁷ THE HAIR-OFFERING OF A NAZIRITE,⁸ THE FIRSTLING OF AN ASS,⁹ FLESH COOKED IN MILK,¹⁰ THE SCAPEGOAT,¹¹ AND NON-CONSECRATED ANIMALS SLAUGHTERED IN THE TEMPLECOURT.¹² BEHOLD THESE ARE PROHIBITED

AND RENDER PROHIBITED BY THE SMALLEST QUANTITY.

GEMARA. On what basis does the Tanna make his enumeration? If he enumerates objects which are [customarily] numbered,¹³ then he should include slices of meat from an animal which had not been ritually slaughtered; if they are objects which may not be put to any use, then he should include leaven during Passover! — R. Hiyya b. Abba — another version is, R. Isaac the smith — said: The Tanna enumerates the objects to which both criteria apply, viz., they are customarily numbered and may not be put to any use.¹⁴ In that case he should include the nuts of Perek and the pomegranates of Baddan¹⁵ because they are customarily numbered and may not be put to any use! [The compiler of the Mishnah] treated of them elsewhere,¹⁶ [and he enumerated a list of which he stated:] Those which belong to 'orlah-fruit come within the law of 'orlah, and those which belong to mixed plantings of a vineyard come within the law of mixed plantings of a vineyard. Then he should include the loaves of a householder¹⁷ with reference to the law of leaven during Passover!¹⁸ — The teacher whom you have heard expressing this opinion is R. Akiba; and [the compiler of the Mishnah] has already stated there:¹⁹ R. Akiba adds the loaves of a householder.

BEHOLD THESE. What do these words intend to exclude? — To exclude things which are customarily numbered but are not prohibited for all use, or the things which are prohibited for all use but are not customarily numbered.²⁰ MISHNAH. IF YEN NESEK FELL INTO A VAT, THE WHOLE OF IT IS PROHIBITED FOR ALL USE. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: THE WHOLE OF IT MAY BE SOLD TO HEATHENS WITH THE EXCEPTION OF [A QUANTITY CORRESPONDING TO] THE VALUE OF THE YEN NESEK IN IT.

GEMARA. Rab said: The halachah agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel when a cask [of yen nesek] has been mixed with other casks, but not when it is a matter of wine [which is nesek becoming mixed with other] wine. Samuel, on the other hand, said: Even when it is wine mixed with wine. Similarly said Rabbah b. Bar Hanah in the name of R. Johanan: Even when it is wine mixed with wine. Similarly said R. Samuel b. Nathan in the name of R. Hanina: Even when it is wine mixed with wine. Similarly said R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Even when it is wine mixed with wine. R. Nahman said: In practice the rule to follow in connection with yen nesek is that when wine is mixed with wine it is prohibited and a cask mixed with casks is permitted;²¹ but with ordinary wine²² even when it is a matter of wine being mixed with wine it is permitted.²³

(1) What they are mixed with, irrespective of the proportion of the forbidden element to the whole.

(2) When confused with other casks of wine.

(3) E.g., an image which had been worshipped confused with others of a similar kind which had not been worshipped.

(4) V. supra 29b.

(12) V. B.K. 70a.

(13) With such objects each one is a separate entity, and therefore it cannot be annulled by becoming absorbed in the rest.

(14) [Thus excluding from his ruling leaven during Passover, unless it is of a large size, and slices of meat which had not been ritually slaughtered.]

(15) They are both localities in Samaria (cf. Rashi). These nuts and pomegranates are included in a list of fruits which are counted when sold and render prohibited what they are mixed with if they are in a state of 'orlah. V. 'Orlah III, 7. [Tosaf. Yeb. 81b s.v. פֶּרֶךְ takes the former to mean 'crack nuts'.]

- (16) Loc. cit. Having dealt with them in that Tractate, the Mishnah does not include them here.
- (17) As distinct from the loaves of a baker which are smaller.
- (18) Because both criteria apply to them.
- (19) V. 'Orlah loc. cit.
- (20) These do not render prohibited by the smallest quantity.
- (21) For use only (but not for drinking) apart from the value of one cask. This agrees with Rab.
- (22) Belonging to heathens which had not been used for a libation.
- (23) For use only (not for drinking). With the deduction of the value of the heathen's wine.

Talmud - Mas. Avodah Zarah 74b

MISHNAH. IF A HEATHEN COVERED A STONE WINE-PRESS WITH PITCH¹ IT MAY BE SCOURED AND IS THEN CLEAN; BUT IF IT WAS OF WOOD, RABBI SAYS THAT IT MAY BE SCOURED² AND THE SAGES SAY THAT HE MUST PEEL OFF THE PITCH.³ IF IT WAS OF EARTHENWARE, EVEN THOUGH HE PEELED OFF THE PITCH IT IS PROHIBITED.⁴

GEMARA. Raba said: [Scouring is necessary] only when he coated it with pitch,⁵ but not if he trod [his grapes] in it.⁶ This is obvious since the Mishnah stated: COVERED . . . WITH PITCH! — You might have said that the same law⁷ applied even if he trod them in it, and the reason why he stated the circumstance of coating with pitch is because he mentioned the customary practice.⁸ He accordingly informs us [that rinsing is sufficient if the heathen trod grapes in it]. Another version is: Raba said: [Scouring is necessary] only when he coated it with pitch, but if he trod [his grapes in a press which had been covered with pitch] scouring is insufficient.⁹ This is obvious, since the Mishnah stated: COVERED... WITH PITCH! — You might have said that the same law¹⁰ applied even when he trod them in it, and the reason why he stated the circumstance of coating with pitch is because he mentioned the customary practice. He accordingly informs us that [scouring suffices] only when he coated it with pitch but if he trod in it scouring is insufficient. As when a man came before R. Hiyya and said to him, 'Provide for me a man to purify my winepress.' [R. Hiyya] said to Rab, 'Go with him and see that there is no ground for complaint against me in the House of Study.'¹¹ He went and noticed that [the sides of the press] were very smooth; so he said, 'Here it will surely be sufficient with scouring.' But as he proceeded [with his examination] he noticed a crack at the bottom and saw that it was full of wine; so he said, 'Here it will not be sufficient with scouring but it will have to be scraped.' That is what my uncle¹² intended when he said to me, 'See that there is no ground for complaint against me in the House of Study.'

Our Rabbis taught: As for the winepress, ladle and funnel¹³ belonging to a heathen, Rabbi permits them after scouring, whereas the Sages prohibit them. Rabbi, however, admits that flasks¹⁴ belonging to a heathen are prohibited. What is the difference between one and the other? — In the latter he puts wine to be kept but not in the former.¹⁵ Should [the winepress, ladle or funnel] be of wood or stone he scours them,¹⁶ and if they had been covered with pitch they are prohibited.¹⁷ But we learnt: IF A HEATHEN COVERED A STONE WINEPRESS WITH PITCH IT MAY BE SCOURED AND IS THEN CLEAN! — Our Mishnah refers to when he had not trodden in it,¹⁸ and the quoted Baraitha to when he had trodden in it.¹⁹

The Master said, 'As for the winepress, ladle and funnel²⁰ belonging to a heathen, Rabbi permits them after scouring, whereas the Sages prohibit them.' But we learnt: IF IT WAS OF EARTHENWARE, EVEN THOUGH HE PEELED OFF THE PITCH IT IS PROHIBITED! — Raba said: This last clause of our Mishnah gives the view of the Rabbis.²¹

Raba expounded: 'Scald the vat!'²² When Raba sent [empty] jars to Harpania²³ he placed them mouth downwards [in sacks] the hem of which he sealed, being of the opinion that the Rabbis decreed against every utensil into which [wine] is put for keeping [by a heathen] even temporarily.

With what does one scour them? — Rab said: With water; Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: With ashes. When Rab said with water, [did he mean] with water and not with ashes; and when Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said with ashes [did he mean] with ashes and not with water! — Rather

- (1) The custom was to throw in some wine to remove the smell of the pitch.
 - (2) With water and ashes.
 - (3) A thicker coating is necessary with wood and it would absorb a greater quantity of wine.
 - (4) Because of the absorptive power of the earthenware.
 - (5) And threw wine into the vat.
 - (6) Without coating it with pitch; in that circumstance rinsing is sufficient.
 - (7) That scouring is necessary.
 - (8) Viz., to throw wine into a vat after pitching it.
 - (9) The pitch must also be peeled off, because the wine must have penetrated the cracks in the pitch.
 - (10) That scouring is sufficient.
 - (11) I.e., see that the cleaning is done according to law that the man's wine should not be disqualified.
 - (12) Either 'my friend' or 'my uncle', this being the relationship of Rab and R. Hiyya. V. Sanh. 5a.
 - (13) Made of earthenware and not covered with pitch.
 - (14) When made of earthenware and not covered with pitch.
 - (15) Consequently there is less time for the wine to become absorbed, and scouring makes them fit for use.
 - (16) On this point they all agree.
 - (17) Unless the pitch is scraped off.
 - (18) So if the press was of stone, all agree that scouring is enough, and if of wood only Rabbi requires it to be scoured.
 - (19) In that event, whether it is of stone or wood, the pitch must be scraped off.
 - (20) [I.e., of earthenware, since those of wood or stone are mentioned later.]
 - (21) And Rabbi differs from them.
 - (22) Of a heathen before a Jew may use it.
 - (23) A town in Babylon. He sent them in charge of a heathen. He took these precautions to guard against the carrier putting his wine into the jars, even for a short while, and disqualifying them. [Harpania on the Tigris, South of Babylon, was one of the most fruitful districts in the country; and Raba, whose home was Mahuza, also on the Tigris, sent down his empty casks to Harpania in order to import wine from there. V. Obermeyer, op. cit., p. 200.]

did Rab intend with water and then with ashes, and Rabbah b. Bar Hanah intended with ashes and then with water. Nor is there any difference between them, since one was referring to what is dry and the other to what is moist.¹

It has been stated: The School of Rab said in the name of Rab: [The number of processes is] two and three;² but Samuel maintained that it is three and four.³ Thus they taught in Sura, but in Pumbeditha they taught: The School of Rab said in the name of Rab: [The number of processes is] three and four; but Samuel maintained that it is four and five. Nor is there any contradiction [in the two versions], since the latter counts the final rinsing with water [as a separate process] whereas the former does not.

The question was put to R. Abbahu: How is it with wicker-nets⁴ used by Gentiles? — R. Abbahu answered: You have learnt the law: If his winepress and oil-press were defiled and he wished to prepare [wine or oil] in them in a state of purity, the boards [on the sides], the troughs and supporting-beams⁵ must be rinsed, and as for the wicker-work, if it is made of willows and hemp, it must be scoured, but if of bast and reeds, it must remain unused for twelve months.⁶ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: He leaves them from one period of wine-pressing to another and from one period of oil-pressing to another. But that agrees with the statement of the first Tanna!⁷ — The issue between them is the matter of the early and late ripening [of the grapes].⁸ R. Jose says: If he desires to purify them at once, he should pour over them boiling water or scald them with olive-water.⁹ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says in the name of R. Jose: He leaves them beneath a pipe through which there is a continuous stream of water or in a fountain with flowing water. For how long? — An 'onah.¹⁰ The same provisions made with regard to yen nesek are made with regard to purification.¹¹ But is not the order reversed, since we are dealing here¹² with purification? — Rather [say] they made the same provisions with regard to yen nesek as they made for purification.

How long is an 'onah? — R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: Either a day or a night. R. Hana-She'ina — according to another version, R. Hana b. She'inah — reported that Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: Half a day and half a night. R. Samuel b. Isaac said: There is no contradiction [in the two definitions], the former referring to the time of the spring and autumn equinox¹³ and the latter to the summer and winter solstice.¹⁴

Rab Judah said: Filter-bags used by Gentiles, if made of hair, are to be rinsed, if of wool they must be scoured, and if of flax they must be left unused [for twelve months]; and if there be any knots in them they must be untied.¹⁵ Wicker-baskets and strainers used by Gentiles, if plaited from strips of palm-fibre, must be rinsed,

(1) If the traces of the wine had dried in the vat, it is rinsed with water and then rubbed with ashes; but if the moisture of the wine was still present the order was reversed.

(2) I.e., with a moist vat first ashes then water, and with a dry vat first water then ashes and again water.

(3) With a moist vat, ashes, water and ashes, and if he then rinses with water, this is not counted because the purpose is only to wash away the ashes; and with a dry vat the process is water, ashes, water and ashes.

(4) Which are placed over the grapes to prevent them from being scattered during the pressing (Rashi). How are these cleaned for use by a Jew?

(5) [Or 'twigs used as brooms in the wine press' (Rashi).]

(6) [This solves the question put to R. Abbahu. V. Asheri a.l.]

(7) Since the interval was twelve months; so why is it mentioned separately?

(8) The time of pressing varies according to the state of ripening and it may not be exactly twelve months.

(9) The water in which olives are boiled to make them soft.

(12) In the Tosef. just cited.

(13) When day and night are of equal duration, i.e., twelve hours.

(14) At such times of the year it is not correct to say either a day or a night since they are unequal. We then have to say half a day and half a night, i.e., twelve hours.

(15) Before they are rinsed or scoured.

if of twigs they must be scoured, and if of flax they must be left unused [for twelve months]; and if there be any knots in them they must be untied.

It has been stated: If an 'am ha-arez¹ stretched his hand into a winepress and touched [one of] the clusters, Rabbi and R. Hiyya [express different opinions]. One says that the cluster and all that is around it are defiled² but the press as a whole is undefiled, whereas the other says that the entire press is also defiled. According to him who maintained that the clusters and all that is around them are defiled but the press as a whole is undefiled, why should there be a difference, since we learnt:³ 'If a reptile is found in an oil-mill, it only defiles the place it touches, but if there is flowing liquid it is all defiled'? — In this latter case there is no division at all,⁴ but in the former the clusters are separate. The Rabbis taught R. Jeremiah — another version is, [they taught] R. Jeremiah's son — in agreement with him who says that the cluster and all that is around it are defiled but the press as a whole is undefiled.

MISHNAH. IF [AN ISRAELITE] PURCHASES COOKING-UTENSILS⁵ FROM A HEATHEN, THOSE WHICH ARE CUSTOMARILY CLEANSED BY IMMERSION⁶ HE MUST IMMERSE, BY SCALDING HE MUST SCALD, BY MAKING WHITE-HOT IN THE FIRE HE MUST MAKE WHITE-HOT IN THE FIRE. A SPIT AND GRILL MUST BE MADE WHITE-HOT, BUT A KNIFE MAY BE POLISHED AND IS THEN RITUALLY CLEAN.

GEMARA. It has been taught: They al⁷ need to be immersed in [a ritual bath containing a minimum of] forty se'ah.⁸ Whence is this derived? — Raba said: Because Scripture states, Every thing that may abide the fire ye shall make to go through the fire, and it shall be clean.⁹ Scripture¹⁰ has here added for you an additional [process of] cleansing. Bar Kappara taught: From the text, [Nevertheless it shall be purified] with the water of separation,¹¹ I might have inferred that [a Gentile's utensil] requires sprinkling [with this water] on the third and seventh day;¹² therefore the word nevertheless is used, the purpose of which is to make a distinction. If that be so, what is the purpose of the words with the water of separation [niddah]? It signifies water in which a niddah¹³ immerses. And it was necessary for Scripture to write both and it shall be clean, and with the water of separation. If it had only written, and it shall be clean, I might have thought, it shall be clean means by any quantity of water, so the Divine Law wrote, with the water of separation; and if the Divine Law had only written, with the water of separation, I might have thought that [it only becomes ritually clean] at sunset as happens with a niddah, so the Divine Law wrote and it shall be clean, i.e., immediately [after the immersion].

R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Even new utensils¹⁴ must be included, since old ones when made white-hot are regarded as new and for all that require to be immersed. R. Shesheth raised the objection: If this be so, shearing-scissors should likewise [be immersed if obtained from a heathen]! — [R. Nahman] replied: The Scriptural passage deals with utensils connected with a meal. R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: The teaching only applies to utensils which are purchased as then happened,¹⁵ but not when they are borrowed.

R. Isaac b. Joseph bought a vessel made from a mixture of earth and animal's ordure from a heathen and thought to immerse it. A certain Rabbi, named R. Jacob, said to him: It was explained to me by R. Johanan that the Scriptural passage deals only with utensils of metal.

R. Ashi said: Utensils of glass, since they can be repaired when broken, are like utensils of metal.¹⁶ As for a glazed utensil R. Aha and Rabina differ; one maintains [that it must be treated] according to its original state,¹⁷ while the other maintains [that it must be treated] according to its final state.¹⁸ The legal decision is [that it must be treated] according to its final state.

The question was asked: How is it with [a new vessel which had been given by a heathen] as a pledge? — Mar son of R. Ashi said: A heathen deposited a silver goblet with my father as a pledge, and he immersed it and drank from it; but I do not know whether it was because he considered a pledge to be the same as a bought article or for the reason that he saw that the heathen's intention was to leave it with him.¹⁹

Our Rabbis taught: If [an Israelite] purchases cooking-utensils from a heathen, the unused articles are to be immersed and are then clean; as for those which were used for cold things, such as cups, jugs and flasks, they must be rinsed and immersed and are then clean; but as for those which were used for hot things, such as boilers, kettles and heating vessels, they must be scalded and immersed and are then clean. Utensils used with fire, such as spits and grills, must be made white-hot and immersed and are then clean. If, with all of them, any had been used [by an Israelite] before it was immersed or scalded or made white-hot, one authority teaches that [the contents] are prohibited whereas another teaches that they are permitted. There is, however, no contradiction; for one decides according to him who said that when [the forbidden element] imparts a worsened flavour it is prohibited and the other according to him who said that when it imparts a worsened flavour it is permitted.²⁰ But according to him who maintains that when it imparts a worsened flavour it is permitted, in which circumstance can the prohibition of the Divine Law against the use of Gentiles' vessels²¹ apply?²² — R. Hiyya, the son of R. Huna²³ said: The Torah only forbade a utensil which had been used [by a Gentile] the same day since the effect is not to worsen the flavour. Then let [the utensils which had been used] from then onwards be permitted [without cleansing]! — The decree was made against those which had not been used the same day on account of those which had been used the same day.¹ What of the other authority? — [His view is] that a utensil used the same day also imparts a worsened flavour.²

R. Amram pointed out the following contradiction to R. Shesheth: We learn: A SPIT AND GRILL MUST BE MADE WHITE-HOT; but it has been learnt with reference to the holy flesh: A spit and grill must be scalded with boiling water!³ — He replied: Amram, my son, what have the sacred utensils to do with Gentiles' vessels since the former absorbed what is permitted and the latter what is prohibited! Raba said: At all events what they discharge is prohibited!⁴ — But, said Raba, what does the term hag'alah ['scalding'] imply?⁵ Merikah and shetifah ['rinsing and washing'].⁶ Abaye said to him: What comparison is this? Merikah and shetifah are with cold water whereas hag'alah applies to boiling water! — But, said Abaye, let his fellow tell concerning him.⁷ Here [in the Mishnah] he taught that it must be made white-hot and scalding also applies,⁸ and there [in connection with the holy flesh] he taught that they must be scalded and making them white-hot also applies. Raba answered him: If that be so, let him teach both in one passage and one of them in the other, and then it would be possible to say, 'Let his fellow tell concerning him'!⁹ But, said Raba, [in the case of] the holy flesh [the cleansing of the vessels by means of scalding] follows the reason given by R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha, viz., Every day scalding was carried out with respect to the preceding day's [offerings].¹⁰ This is quite right with the peace-offerings which could be eaten on the second day [after the sacrificial act]; in this case the process of scalding would be performed before [the traces of the offering] became 'left over'.¹¹ With a sin-offering, however, since it must be eaten the same day [as sacrificed] and the following night, when he cooks to-day a sin-offering, there would be [traces thereof] 'left over'; so if he further cooked in it on the morrow either a peace-offering or sin-offering, then what was 'left over' of to-day's sin-offering would be discharged into the sin-offering or peace-offering of the next day!¹² — I can reply: It is not necessary [to arrive at such a conclusion], for if he cooks to-day a sin-offering, then he again cooks to-day a peace-offering [so that the time-limit of the morrow's sin-offering and the peace-offering of the preceding day will expire simultaneously;] and then he may cook in it the morrow's peace-offering!¹³ If that be so, then scalding would likewise be unnecessary!¹⁴ This [indeed] is a difficulty. R. Papa said: [The reason is that] one is encrusted and the other is not.¹⁵ R. Ashi said: [The reason is] certainly as was originally explained, viz., in the former they absorbed what is permitted and in the latter what is prohibited, and as for your¹⁶ objection that what it gives forth when it discharges is prohibited, [the reply is] that at the time of discharging there is nothing which is prohibited apparent.¹⁷

For how long must they be made white-hot? — R. Mani said: Until the accretion falls off. And how is scalding done? — R. Huna said: A small vessel must be placed inside a large vessel.¹⁸ What, however, is to be done with a large vessel? — Come and hear: There was a pot in the house of R. Akabiah¹⁹ [which had to be scalded]; so he made for it

- (1) Theoretically they do not need cleansing, but as a precaution Rabbinic law does not draw the distinction.
- (2) [The prohibition against the use of such utensils proves that the effect of a deteriorating flavour is also prohibited.]
- (3) Zeb. 97a. Before they may be used again on account of the 'remnant' they have absorbed of previous sacrifices. V. next note.
- (4) If the flesh of the sacrifice remains on them beyond the prescribed period it becomes prohibited and the traces of it left behind affect the next offering which is roasted on them. If a priest ate of it he incurred the penalty of excision, v. Lev. VII, 18.
- (5) In the passage quoted about the 'holy flesh.' [Delete with Ms.M. 'also' in curr. edd.]
- (6) [I.e., in addition to the cleansing by fire, the Torah has demanded 'rinsing and washing'.]
- (7) I.e., let one passage explain the other. The phrase is actually a quotation from Job XXXVI, 33, but given a different sense.
- (8) Both processes are necessary.
- (9) Only when the Mishnah or Baraita expressly mentioned that both processes are necessary either with the sacred utensils or a Gentile's vessels could such an inference be drawn.
- (10) The cooking of each day served to clean away what the utensil absorbed on the preceding day before it actually became 'left over', so that nothing could remain beyond the prescribed period. For that reason the process of making it white-hot was not required with the spit or grill, and scalding sufficed.
- (11) Which may no longer be eaten and must be burnt as 'an abomination'. V. Lev. VII, 18.
- (12) Because before the daily scalding occurred, the time-limit of the preceding day's offering would have expired. [The text in curr. edd. is difficult. Read with Ms. M., 'When he cooks to-day's sin-offering and boils in it tomorrow's peace-offering, then what etc.']
- (13) In this way the difficulty of the 'left over' is obviated. [The bracketed passage is likewise difficult, and is best deleted with Ms.M.]
- (14) Since there would be nothing 'left over' to remove from the utensil.
- (15) The Gentile's utensil, which may not have been in constant use, becomes encrusted and must be made white-hot. The sacred vessels, on the other hand, are in regular use and escape this crust. For that reason scalding is sufficient.

(17) What is 'left over' is nothing more than vapour of the cooked flesh and that need not be treated so seriously.

(18) The utensil to be cleansed must be placed inside a larger pot, filled with boiling water. The whole of the former is thus affected by the boiling water.

(19) [V.l. Mar 'Ukba or R. 'Ukba.]

a rim of dough around its mouth and filled it with water which he boiled up.¹ Raba said: Who could have been clever enough to do this if not R. Akabiah who is a great man! He was of the opinion that as [a vessel] absorbs so it discharges; as [its rim] absorbs by the splashings [of the food which is cooked in the pot] so [the boiling water] would cause [the rim] to discharge by means of the splashings.

BUT A KNIFE MAY BE POLISHED AND IS THEN RITUALLY CLEAN. R. 'Ukba b. Hama said: One plunges it ten times in soil.² R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: That is, in untilled soil. R. Kahana said: [This holds good only] of a knife which is in sound condition and has no notches. It has been also taught to the same effect: With a knife in sound condition and without notches one plunges it ten times in soil. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: [This holds good only] to eat cold food with it.³ Thus Mar Judah and Bati b. Tobi were sitting with King Shapur and a citron was set before them. [The king] cut a slice and ate it, and then cut a slice and handed it to Bati b. Tobi. After that he stuck [the knife] ten times in the ground, cut a slice [of the citron] and handed it to Mar Judah. Bati b. Tobi said to [the king], 'Am I not an Israelite!' He replied, 'Of him I am certain that he is observant [of Jewish law] but not of you.' According to another version he said to him, 'Remember what you did last night!'⁴

(1) The purpose of the rim was that the boiling water should overflow the top of the vessel and every part of it be scalded.

(2) In addition to polishing it with a rough cloth (Rashi).

(3) For hot food it must be scalded.

(4) According to the Persian rule of hospitality, the king sent a slave-girl to each of them the night before. Mar Judah refused to receive her but the other did not. [Bati was a half-manumitted slave. Tosaf. s.v. אֵידָכָר.]

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. IF THE COURT¹ RULED THAT 'ANY ONE OF THE [RITUAL.] COMMANDMENTS MENTIONED IN THE TORAH MAY BE TRANSGRESSED, AND AN INDIVIDUAL PROCEEDED AND ACTED THROUGH ERROR², IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING, WHETHER THEY³ ACTED [THUS]⁴ AND HE ACTED WITH THEM⁵ OR THEY ACTED⁴ AND HE ACTED AFTER THEM OR EVEN IF THEY DID NOT ACT⁴ AND HE ACTED,⁴ HE IS EXEMPT,⁶ BECAUSE HE RELIED ON [A RULING OF] THE COURT. [IF, HOWEVER, WHEN] THE COURT ISSUED [AN ERRONEOUS] RULING ONE OF THEM,³ WHO KNEW THAT THEY HAD ERRED, OR A DISCIPLE WHO WAS HIMSELF CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW, PROCEEDED AND ACTED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING, WHETHER THEY³ ACTED⁴ AND HE⁷ ACTED WITH THEM OR THEY ACTED AND HE ACTED AFTER THEM OR THEY DID NOT ACT AND HE ACTED,⁴ HE IS LIABLE,⁸ SINCE HE⁹ WAS NOT DEPENDENT UPON [THE RULING OF] THE COURT. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: HE WHO IS [IN A POSITION] TO RELY UPON HIMSELF IS SUBJECT TO A PENALTY, AND [ONLY] HE WHO MUST DEPEND UPON THE COURT IS EXEMPT.⁶

GEMARA. Samuel said: A court is never responsible¹⁰ unless they ruled.¹¹ 'You are permitted'. R. Dimi of Nehardea said: Unless they ruled, 'You are permitted to act'. What is the reason? — Because [otherwise]¹² the decision is not final. Said Abaye: We also have learned the same: If he¹³ returned to his [home] town and continued to teach as he had taught,¹⁴ he is exonerated. If, however, he issued instructions [for the public] to act,¹⁵ he is subject to the penalty.¹⁶ Said R. Abba: We also have learned the same: If the court decided¹⁷ that she¹⁸ may be married, and she went and contracted a forbidden union¹⁹, she²⁰ must bring an offering, because the court permitted her only to marry.²¹ Rabina said: We also have learned the same: IF THE COURT RULED THAT ANY ONE OF THE [RITUAL] COMMANDMENTS MENTIONED IN THE TORAH MAY BE TRANSGRESSED.²² Nothing more [need he said about it]. Some read as follows:²³ Samuel said: A court is not responsible unless they' ruled, 'You are permitted to act'.²⁴ R. Dimi of Nehardea said.' Even [if the ruling was], 'You are permitted' the decision is [regarded as] final. But surely, said Abaye, we have not so learnt: If he returned to his [home] town and continued to teach as he had taught he is exonerated. If, however, he issued instructions [for the public] to act, he is subject to penalty!²⁵ But surely, said R. Abba, we have not so learned: If the court decided that she may be married and she went and committed adultery, she must bring an offering, because the court permitted her only to be married!²⁶ But surely, said Rabina, We have not so learned: IF THE COURT RULED THAT ANY ONE OF THE [RITUAL] COMMANDMENTS MENTIONED IN THE TORAH MAY BE TRANSGRESSED!²⁶ Nothing more [need be said about it]. AND AN INDIVIDUAL PROCEEDED AND ACTED THROUGH ERROR IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING. Let it be taught, AND HE ACTED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING; what need was there for²⁷ THROUGH ERROR! — Raba replied: [The addition of] THROUGH ERROR [was meant] to include [the following case]. If the court ruled that suet²⁸ was permitted [to be eaten], and a person mistook²⁹ suet for fat and ate it,³⁰ he is exonerated;³¹ [while] ACCORDING TO THEIR RULING [implies] at their actual ruling.³² Others read [as follows]. Raba said: Only a person who ACTED THROUGH ERROR [NAMELY] IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING IS EXONERATED, but he who mistook suet for fat³³ and ate it is liable.³⁴ That which was obvious to Raha was raised by Rami b. Hama as a question. For Rami b Hima asked.' What [is the law where] the court ruled that suet was permitted and a person mistook it for fat³⁵ and ate it?³⁶ — Raba replied: Come and hear: AN INDIVIDUAL PROCEEDED AND ACTED THROUGH ERROR IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING etc. Why should it be necessary to state³⁷ THROUGH ERROR [and also] IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING.³⁸ Obviously³⁹ to include [the following case]: Where the court ruled that suet was permitted and a person mistook suet for fat and ate it, he is exonerated!⁴⁰ — Perhaps [it may be retorted, our Mishnah means to] exempt a person only when he ACTED THROUGH ERROR [namely] IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING, but when he mistook suet for fat and ate it he is liable. Others say that Raba said: Come and hear AN INDIVIDUAL PROCEEDED AND ACTED THROUGH ERROR IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING. This surely implies⁴¹ that only when he acted THROUGH ERROR [namely] IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING he is exonerated, but when he mistook suet for fat and ate it he is liable!⁴² — Perhaps [it was retorted, our Mishnah implies] either THROUGH ERROR or IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING.⁴³ [The following are] in dispute [on the case mentioned]: If the court ruled that suet was permitted and a person mistook suet for fat and ate it, Rab said: He is exonerated, and R. Johanan said: He is liable. An objection was raised: Of the common people [sin] in doing⁴⁴ excludes⁴⁵ the apostate.⁴⁶ R. Simeon b. Jose said in the name of R. Simeon: This is not necessary; since it is written, [And doeth] through error [any of all the things], which [the Lord hath commanded] not to be done, and is guilty; if [his sin] . . . be known to him,⁴⁷ [which shows that only] he who repents when it becomes known to him [that he has sinned] brings a sacrifice for a sin he committed through error, but he who does not repent when he becomes aware [of his sin] does not bring a sacrifice for a sin he has committed through error.⁴⁸ Now, if [this view] is tenable, surely [it may be objected], he⁴⁹ would not repent even when he becomes aware [of the facts]!⁵⁰ — R. Papa replied: R. Johanan holds the view that since the court would repent when [the error] became known to them, and he⁵¹ also would then repent, [such a person] may justly be described as one who repents of his action when he becomes aware [of his sin], and he is, therefore, liable. Raba said: Rab agrees that he is not counted in the making up of the majority of the congregation.⁵² What is the reason? Scripture says, through error, implying [that no sacrifice is to be brought] unless all of them shared⁵³ one and the same ‘error’. WHETHER THEY ACTED [THUS] AND HE ACTED WITH THEM etc. What need was there⁵⁴ to teach all these?⁵⁵ [In the case of] the former section, this may be justified [as being a climactic arrangement]: ‘not only this but also that:’ in the later section, however, where liability is spoken of, the order, surely, should have been reversed!⁵⁶

(1) rich. Beth din, House of Judgement or Law, v. Glos.

(2) This will be explained in the Gemara Infra.

(3) The members of the court.

(4) In accordance with their decision.

(5) Eating, e.g., together with them blood or suet.

(6) From bringing the prescribed sin offerings. V. Lev. IV, 27 ff.

(7) The member of the court or the disciple who knew the ruling to be erroneous.

(8) To bring the prescribed sin offerings. Cf. n. 6. supra.

(9) Being capable of deciding such matters for himself.

(10) Lit., ‘guilty’, ‘culpable’.

(11) Lit., ‘until they’ would say’ to them’, i.e., to the public. (12) Unless the ruling was issued in this definite form it is not regarded as final. [Cf. B. B. 130b.] Hence, in the case there the entire, or the majority of the public transgressed by relying on a ruling of a court to which the formula ‘You are permitted’ was not added, neither they nor the court are under an obligation to bring a sin offering (v. Lev. IV, 13 ff). nor is an individual in the case of such a ruling entitled to claim exemption by reason of his reliance upon the court. (The question whether, in any case, the court or the congregation, are to bring the offering is a matter of dispute, infra).

(12) If ‘to act’ is not added.

(13) A ‘rebellious elder’ who defied the authority of the supreme court in Jerusalem. Deut. XVII, 8 ff.

(14) Before the decision of the supreme court.

(16) Sanh. 86b. The expression ‘to act’ in this case implies final decision, similar to the formula ‘You are permitted to act’ required by R. Dimi.

(17) Lit., ‘they taught her or directed her’.

(18) A woman the death of whose husband is attested by one witness only. (In the case of two witnesses no special ruling of a court is necessary.)

- (19) Which was in any case forbidden to her.
- (20) Her husband having subsequently appeared.
- (21) I.e., to contract a lawful marriage. Yeb. 87b. Since the expression 'decided' and not merely 'allowed' is used, a definite and final decision is meant. Cf. supra note 5.
- (22) 'Ruled . . . may be transgressed', implies definite and final decision to act. Cf. previous note.
- (23) Lit., 'there are who say'.
- (24) V. supra p. I for notes.
- (25) V. supra p. 2 for notes. This proves, contrary to the view of H. Dimi, that the formula 'you are permitted' is not sufficient unless 'to act' is added!
- (26) V. supra p. for notes, and Previous note.
- (27) Lit., 'Why to me'.
- (28) 'Forbidden fat', v. Lev. III, 17. VII, 25.
- (29) Lit., 'it was exchanged for him'.
- (30) Thus sinning through error, though not 'serially 'at their ruling', since he ate the suet not because he depended upon the court but lease he thought the suet was fat.
- (31) Because even if he had known it to be suet he would have eaten it, relying on the ruling of the court.
- (32) I.e., the case where a person ate suet not through his own error but through his reliance upon the ruling of the court.
- (33) V. supra note 5.
- (34) Since his error was not due to the Court's ruling. The Mishnah had to specify both 'through error', and 'in accordance with their ruling', to indicate that where the sin was due to his error alone he is liable.
- (35) V. p. 3, n. 5.
- (36) Is he exempt from a sin offering because the court permitted the eating of suet; or is he liable since he ate the suet not because of his reliance upon the court but through his own error of mistaking suet for fat?
- (37) Lit., 'why to me'.
- (38) [Delete with MS. M.: IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING, v. D.S. a.l.]
- (39) Lit., 'not'?
- (40) I.e., in accordance with the first version of Raba's statement.
- (41) Lit., 'what, not'
- (42) I.e., in accordance with the second version of Raba's statement.
- (43) And one is exonerated in either case Hence a person mistaking suet for fat would also be exonerated.
- (44) Lev. IV, 27.
- (45) 'Of the people', מֵעַם, the ו partitive implying. 'not all of them'.
- (46) From whom no offering is to be accepted.
- (47) Lev. IV, 22f
- (48) An apostate does not repent when he becomes aware of his sin.
- (49) The person who mistook suet for fat.
- (50) Because even when it was brought us his notice that he ate suet he would not repent, in view of the ruling of the court. How then could R. Johanan subject one in such a case to the obligation of a sacrifice?
- (51) The person who mistook the suet for fat.
- (52) The sacrifice of a bullock on the part of the congregation (Lev. IV, 13 ff) is brought only when all or at least a majority of the people had committed the same sin through the error of the court. Eating forbidden food by mistake is not the same as eating it deliberately in reliance upon the decision of a court, though erroneous (MS. M. preserves a clearer inference: Num. XV, 26, For in respect of all the people it was done in error.)
- (53) Lit., 'were in'.
- (54) Lit., 'wherefore to him'.
- (55) Acting with, acting after, etc. (10) Not only is one exonerated when acting together with the court (a definite case of dependence on it) but also when acting after them, not only when the court also has so acted but even when one acted alone but in reliance on the court's ruling.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 2b

— This is a case¹ [of anti-climax]: ‘this, and there is no need to say that.’ ONE OF THEM WHO KNEW THAT THEY HAD ERRED, OR A DISCIPLE WHO WAS HIMSELF CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW. What need was there for the two? — Raba replied: Both are required, since, otherwise, it might have been assumed that the reference was only to² one who possesses learning and is also capable of logical reasoning and deduction but not to one possessing learning and no capacity for logical reasoning. Said Abaye to him: Surely, CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW implies the possession of knowledge and also capacity for logical reasoning! What I mean, the other replied, is this: If [the inference had to be derived] from that,³ it might have been assumed that the reference is only to² one who possesses learning and is also capable of logical reasoning and deduction, but not to one possessing learning and no capacity for logical reasoning and deduction; hence it was taught, CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW [so that] from the superfluous Mishnah [it may be inferred that the reference includes] even him who possesses learning only, though incapable of logical reasoning and deduction, [as well as] him who is only capable of logical reasoning and deduction though he possesses no learning. CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW etc. Like whom, for instance? — Raba replied: For instance, like Simeon b. Azzai and Simeon b. Zoma.⁴ Said Abaye to him: In the case of such [scholars] it would be a wilful transgression!⁵ And according to your argument, [the other replied, how will you explain] the following wherein it was taught: ‘In doing one,⁶ [implies that if] an individual acts on his own authority he is liable; if under the authority of the ruling of the court, he is exonerated. How is this so? [In the case where] the court ruled that suet was permitted and it was known to one of them, or to a disciple sitting before them and capable of deciding matters of law, such for instance as Simeon b. ‘Azzai, that they erred, it might have been assumed that he is exonerated, hence it was expressly taught, in doing one,⁷ [implying that if] an individual acts on his own authority he is liable: if under the authority of the ruling of the court he is exonerated’?⁸ How then could this⁹ be possible? [Obviously] in such a case as where [the scholar] knew that it¹⁰ was prohibited, but erred in the [interpretation of the] precept of obeying the words of the Sages;¹¹ according to my view also¹² it is a case where they erred in the [interpretation of the] precept of obeying the words of the Sages. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: HE WHO IS [IN A POSITION] TO RELY UPON HIMSELF IS SUBJECT TO A PENALTY. What does this include? It includes one who usually disregards¹³ the decisions of the court.¹⁴ ‘HE WHO MUST DEPEND UPON THE COURT includes [the case where] the court issued a decision and when they discovered that they erred they retracted.¹⁵ But this, surely, is explicitly stated!¹⁶ — It was first stated here and later it was amplified. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: This¹⁷ is the view of R. Judah, but the Sages maintain that an individual who acted in accordance with [an erroneous] ruling of the court is liable. Which [statement of] R. Judah [is referred to]? — It was taught: If any one person...sin through error in doing,¹⁸ behold there are three limitations¹⁹ [to indicate that only] he who acts on his own authority is liable; [but he who acts] on the authority of the ruling of the court is exonerated. Which [statement of the] Rabbis?²⁰ — It was taught: Lest it be said²¹ that a minority of the congregation who committed a sin are subject to the obligation of a sacrifice because the court does not bring a bullock on their account,²² but a majority of the congregation who had committed a sin should be exempt because the court brings a bullock on their account,²² Scripture expressly stated, Of the common people²³ [to indicate that] even if a majority of them²⁴ or all of them. Now, in what [circumstances was the sin spoken of committed]? If it be suggested through error in action,²⁵ how [it may be asked] does the court enter at all into the question²⁶ when [the commission of the sin] was not on the authority of the ruling of the court? Does then a court bring [a sacrifice] when [the commission of the sin] was not under the authority of their ruling!²⁷ If, however, [it be suggested that the sin had been committed] under the authority of the ruling of the court, surely [it may be pointed out] the text, Of the common people,²³ was written in reference to error in action!²⁵ Consequently²⁸ [it must be concluded that] it is this that was meant: A minority of the congregation who committed a sin through error in action²⁵ are liable, because the court does not bring a bullock on their account in [the case where a sin was committed] on the authority of the ruling of the court, and yet they²⁹ are liable.³⁰ [Since, however,] one might assume that a majority of the congregation who committed [a sin] through error in action²⁵ should be exempt because the court brings a bullock on their account when [the sin was committed] under the authority of the ruling of the court, it was expressly taught, ‘Of the common people’³¹ [to include] even a majority of them.³² Said R. Papa: Whence [is this proved]? Is it not possible that neither they nor the court [bring any sacrifice]!³³ — If so,³⁴ why should it be sought to prove that a majority is liable?³⁵ Must it not then be concluded that [in the case of] a minority acting under a court's ruling it had been definitely established that they were liable, though they had acted under the authority of the ruling of a court;³⁶ for [otherwise] it should have been sought first to prove that a minority is liable, when sinning through error of action, and then should have come the attempt to prove that a majority also is liable when sinning through error of action. Consequently, since³⁷ the attempt has not been made [first] to prove that a minority is liable, when sinning through error of action, and only finally to prove that a majority [also] is liable when sinning through error of action, it must be concluded that a minority [committing a sin] under the ruling of the court are liable [to bring] a lamb or a goat, and likewise when they committed the sin under no authority from the ruling of a court, through error of action, they are also liable.³⁸ Consider, however, this: Both [Baraitas]³⁹ have been taught⁴⁰ anonymously, whence then [is it proved] that the first one [represents the view of] R. Judah and the last [that of] the Rabbis? Might not the reverse be suggested! — Who has been heard to make an exposition on limitations in such a manner?⁴¹ Surely it was R. Judah: for it has been taught: R. Judah said:

Whereas in the case of a majority, since the court brings a bullock on their account, they should be exempt in respect of error in action.

Consequently it must be concluded that a minority (committing a sin) under the ruling' etc.]

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 3a

This is the law of the burnt offering,¹ behold these are three exclusions.² And if preferred I might say, [the statement beginning] 'Lest it be said'³ cannot be attributed to R. Judah, for in it was taught, 'Where a majority of the congregation committed a sin, the court brings a bullock on their account', while⁴ R. Judah had said, 'The congregation only have to bring [the sacrifice] but not the court'; as we learned: R. Judah said: Seven tribes who committed a sin⁵ bring seven bullocks.⁶ R. Nahman, however, said in the name of Samuel: This⁷ is the view of R. Meir, but the Sages maintain that an individual who acted in accordance with [an erroneous] ruling of the court is liable. Which [statement of] R. Meir and which of the Rabbis? — It was taught, 'If they had ruled and acted accordingly, R. Meir exonerates them and the Sages consider them liable'. Now, who are 'those that acted'? If the court be suggested, what [it may be retorted] is the reason of the Rabbis who consider them liable? Surely it was taught, 'Since it might have been assumed that a court who issued [an erroneous] ruling and acted accordingly are liable, it was expressly taught. The assembly, and do,⁸ indicate that] action depends on the assembly⁹ and ruling depends on the court.'¹⁰ If, again,¹¹ [it be suggested that the meaning¹² is that] the court ruled and the majority of the congregation acted accordingly, the question arises] what is the reason why R. Meir exonerates them? Must it not then be concluded¹³ [that the meaning¹⁴ is that] the court ruled and a minority of the congregation acted accordingly, and that the principle underlying their¹⁵ dispute is the following: The Master¹⁶ holds that an individual who acted under the authority of the ruling of the court is exonerated, and the Masters hold that an individual who acted under the authority of the ruling of the court is liable! R. Papa. however, said: All agree¹⁷ that an individual who acted under the authority of the court's ruling is exonerated, but they differ [on the question] whether the court is counted in the making up of a majority of the congregation.¹⁸ The Masters hold that the court is counted in the making of a majority of the congregation¹⁹ and the Master holds that the court is not to be counted in making up a majority of the congregation. And if preferred I might say [that the meaning²⁰ is that] the court ruled and a majority of the congregation acted accordingly: and²⁰ by 'Sages' was meant²¹ R. Simeon who stated that both the congregation and the court bring [a sin offering].²² And if you prefer I might say [that they differ in the case where] one tribe acted in accordance with the ruling of its own court: and by 'Sages' R. Judah was meant; for it was taught, 'A tribe that acted on the authority of [an erroneous] ruling of its court, that tribe is liable.'²³ And if you prefer I might say [that the dispute relates to] such a case as where the sin was committed by six [tribes] who formed a majority of the congregation or by seven [tribes] although they did not form a majority of the congregation, and [the anonymous author of] our Baraita²⁴ is²¹ R. Simeon b. Eleazar; for it was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar said in his²⁵ name. ‘Six [tribes] who form a majority of the congregation or seven [tribes] although they do not form a majority of the congregation, who have committed a sin are liable [to bring a sin offering].²⁶ R. Assi said: In [the case of an erroneous] ruling [of a court]²⁷ the majority of the inhabitants of the Land of Israel are to be taken into account,²⁸ for it is said, So Solomon held the feast at that time, and all Israel with him, a great congregation, from the entrance of Hamath unto the Brook of Egypt, before the Lord our God, seven days and seven days, even fourteen days.²⁹ Now, consider, it is written, and all Israel with him a great congregation, what need was there for,³⁰ from the entrance of Hamath unto the Brook of Egypt? From this it may be inferred that only these³¹ are included in the³² ‘congregation’ but those are not.²⁸ It is obvious [that the case where] a majority³³ has been reduced³⁴ to a minority [is a matter of] dispute between R. Simeon and the Rabbis.³⁵ What, [however, is the law where] a minority³⁶ has become³⁷ the majority?³⁸ Do R. Simeon and the Rabbis differ [in this case also]. R. Simeon, who is guided by³⁹ [the status of the person at the time of the] discovery [of the sin], holding them liable,⁴⁰ and the Rabbis who are guided by [the status of the person at the time of the] commission of the sin, exonerating them,⁴¹ or not? — How could [such a thing]⁴² be imagined! It might well be said that R. Simeon was heard to be guided by³⁹ [the time of the] discovery [of the sin] also:⁴³ was he heard, however, [to be guided by the time of the] discovery alone!⁴⁴ For had that been the case⁴⁵ they⁴⁶ should have brought [their offering] according to their present status.⁴⁷ Consequently [it must be concluded that] R. Simeon requires both commission of the sin and its discovery.⁴⁸ The question was raised: What [is the law where] the court ruled that suet was permitted and a minority of the congregation acted accordingly, and, after the court had withdrawn their decision and again issued a similar ruling, another minority acted accordingly? [Are we to say,] since this is a case of two distinct spells of awareness,⁴⁹ they do not combine,⁵⁰ or perhaps, since both⁵¹ [are concerned with] suet they combine? And if some ground could be found for the decision⁵² that, since both⁵¹ [are concerned with] suet, they combine, [the question arises,] what [is the law where one] minority [was involved] in the forbidden fat of⁵³ the maw and [another] minority in the forbidden fat of⁵³ the small bowels? Is it certain that in these cases,⁵⁴ since [the prohibitions] are derived⁵⁵ from⁵⁶ two [distinct] texts, they⁵⁷ do not combine, or, perhaps, since both⁵¹ [are concerned with] forbidden fat, they⁵⁷ combine. And if some ground should be for the decision⁵² that, [since the two kinds bear] the name of ‘forbidden fat’, they⁵⁷ combine, [the question may be asked,] what [is the law where one] minority [was involved] in the [eating of] suet and [another] minority in that of blood? Is it certain that in this case,⁵⁸ since these are two [distinct] prohibitions they⁵⁹ do not combine, or perhaps, since the same kind of sacrifice has to be brought in both cases,⁶⁰ they combine? And if some ground could be found for the decision⁶¹ that, since the same kind of sacrifice has to be brought in both cases, they⁵⁹ combine, [the question might be asked,] What is the law [where one] minority [was involved] in [the eating of] suet and [another] minority in idolatry? Is it certain that in this case,⁵⁸ [since] neither the prohibitions nor the sacrifices are alike [they⁵⁹ are not to be combined] or, perhaps, since [the punishment] in both cases⁶² is that of kareth⁶³ they are to be combined. — These questions remain undecided.⁶⁴ The question was raised: [What is the law where] a court ruled that suet was permitted and a minority of the congregation acted accordingly, and the members of that court died and another court that was appointed also issued a similar ruling and another minority acted [in accordance with that ruling]? According to him who stated that the court brings [the sacrifice] no question arises, for, surely, they are no more in existence. The question, however, arises what [is the law] according to him who stated that the congregation bring [the sacrifice]? The congregation, surely, exists:⁶⁵ or is it, perhaps, necessary¹ [to have in the case of both minorities] the ruling² of the court that ruled [in the first instance]. — This is undecided. R. Jonathan said: Where a hundred [judges] sat down to consider a decision they are not liable³ unless all of them arrived at the same [erroneous] decision; for it is said, and if the whole congregation of Israel shall err⁴ [which implies] that they must all⁵ err.⁶ Said R. Huna son of Hoshaiyah: Logical deduction leads to the same conclusion.⁷ For throughout the Torah there is an established rule that a majority is like the whole and yet it was written here, 'the whole congregation'; and since such is the case⁸ [it must be concluded that] even if there were a hundred.⁹ We learned, [WHEN] THE COURT ISSUED [AN ERRONEOUS] RULING AND ONE OF THEM, WHO KNEW THAT THEY HAD ERRED OR A DISCIPLE WHO WAS HIMSELF CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW PROCEEDED AND ACTED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR RULING, WHETHER THEY ACTED AND HE ACTED WITH THEM OR THEY ACTED AND HE ACTED AFTER THEM, OR THEY DID NOT ACT AND HE ACTED, HE IS LIABLE, SINCE HE WAS NOT DEPENDENT UPON [THE RULING OF THE COURT]. [From this it follows that only] that person¹⁰ is liable, but another¹¹ is exempt; but why? The decision, surely, was not unanimous!¹² — Here it is a case where that person¹³ nodded with his head.¹⁴ Come and hear: If the court issued a ruling, and one of them knew that they erred and said to them, 'You are mistaken', they are exempt.¹⁵ The reason, then, why they are exempt is because he said to them, 'You are mistaken', had he however remained silent they would have been liable and their decision would have been regarded as unanimous;¹⁶ but why? Surely, they did not all arrive at the same decision? — It may be answered that here also it is a case where he nodded with his head. R. Mesharsheya raised an objection: Our Rabbis relied upon the words of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and upon the words of R. Eleazar the son of R. Zadok who said, 'No law may be imposed upon the public unless a majority of the people can endure it'; and R. Adda b. Abba said: What Scriptural proof is there for this view? Ye are cursed with a curse, yet ye rob me, even this whole nation.¹⁷ Now, surely, it is written here, 'This whole nation,' and yet a majority is regarded as the whole.¹⁸ [Is not this] a refutation of the view of R. Jonathan?¹⁹ — This is a refutation. Why then did the All-Merciful say, 'the whole congregation'? — It is this that was meant: Where they are all present²⁰ the decision is valid; but if not, their decision is invalid. R. Joshua said: When ten sit in judgment, the responsibility rests upon²¹ all of them. Is not this obvious? It teaches us that even a disciple in the presence of his Master [must share the responsibility].²² When R. Huna went to court he took with him ten students of the college, 'in order that', he said, 'each of us²³ might receive only a chip of the beam',²⁴ When an animal suffering from an organic disease was brought before R. Ashi²⁵ he used to bring together ten ritual slaughterers²⁶ of Matha Mehasia²⁷ and made them sit down before him, saying, 'In order that each of us might receive only a chip of the beam'.²²

MISHNAH. WHERE A COURT ISSUED A DECISION,²⁸ AND LATER DISCOVERED THAT THEY HAD ERRED AND WITHDREW THEIR DECISION, WHETHER THEY BROUGHT THEIR OFFERING²⁹ OR WHETHER THEY DID NOT BRING THEIR OFFERING, IF AN INDIVIDUAL³⁰ PROCEEDED AND ACTED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THEIR [ERRONEOUS] DECISION, R. SIMEON EXONERATES HIM AND R. ELEAZAR DECLARES [HIS CASE] DOUBTFUL.³¹ WHICH CASE MAY BE REGARDED DOUBTFUL? IF HE³² WAS³³ AT HOME, HE IS LIABLE.³⁴ IF, HOWEVER, HE WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA HE IS EXEMPT. SAID R. AKIBA: I AGREE THAT A PERSON IN SUCH A CASE³⁵ IS NEARER TO EXONERATION THAN TO CULPABILITY. SAID BEN 'AZZAI TO HIM: HOW DOES SUCH A PERSON DIFFER FROM ONE WHO REMAINS AT HOME? HE WHO REMAINS AT HOME IS IN A POSITION TO ASCERTAIN THE FACTS³⁶ BUT THE OTHER WAS NOT IN SUCH A POSITION.³⁷ IF THE COURT RULED THAT AN ENTIRE PRINCIPLE HAS TO BE UPROOTED; IF THEY SAID, FOR EXAMPLE, THAT [THE LAW CONCERNING THE] MENSTRUANT³⁸ IS NOT FOUND IN THE TORAH OR THE [LAW CONCERNING THE] SABBATH IS NOT FOUND IN THE TORAH OR [THE LAW CONCERNING] IDOLATRY IS NOT FOUND IN THE TORAH, THEY ARE EXEMPT. IF, HOWEVER, THEY RULED THAT A PART [OF A COMMANDMENT] WAS TO BE ANNULLED AND A PART RETAINED, THEY ARE LIABLE. HOW IS THIS SO? — IF THEY SAID: [THE LAW CONCERNING THE] MENSTRUANT OCCURS IN THE TORAH BUT IF A MAN HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A WOMAN THAT AWAITS A DAY CORRESPONDING TO A DAY³⁹ HE IS EXEMPT, [OR THAT THE LAW CONCERNING THE] SABBATH OCCURS IN THE TORAH BUT IF A MAN CARRIES ANYTHING FROM A PRIVATE DOMAIN TO A PUBLIC DOMAIN HE IS EXEMPT, [OR THAT THE LAW OF] IDOLATRY OCCURS IN THE TORAH, BUT IF A MAN ONLY BOWS DOWN TO AN IDOL HE IS EXEMPT, THEY ARE LIABLE; FOR SCRIPTURE SAYS, AND IF SOME THING BE HID,⁴⁰ 'SOMETHING BUT NOT THE ENTIRE PRINCIPLE.

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: What is R. Simeon's reason? Because he acted on the authority of the court. Others say that Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: R. Simeon used to say that [in the case of] any ruling [of the court], which has spread⁴¹ to a majority of the congregation, if an individual acted according to it he is exempt;⁴² for [he ruling was given for the purpose⁴³ of distinguishing between one who acts in error⁴⁴ and one acting presumptuously.⁴⁵ An objection was raised: The bullock required⁴⁶ when a matter was hid from the congregation,⁴⁷ and the goats [of atonement] for idolatry⁴⁸ are to be purchased from a collection made for the purpose:⁴⁹ these are the words of R. Simeon. R. Judah said: They are taken⁵⁰ from the funds of the Temple treasury.⁵¹ Now, why?⁵² Since a collection is made for the purchase of the sacrifices, the facts became known!⁵³ — If you wish I might say: It is a case, for instance, where the object of the collection was not stated.⁵⁴ And if you prefer I might say: In the case, for instance, where he was not in town.⁵⁵ And if you prefer I might say: Rab holds the same view as the other Tanna,⁵⁶ [in whose name] the reverse was taught: 'A collection is made for the occasion;⁵⁷ these are the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon said: They are taken from the funds of the Temple treasury.'⁵⁸ It was taught: R. Meir declares him⁵⁹ liable and R. Simeon exonerates him; R. Eleazar said, 'doubtful'; in the name of Symmachus it was said, 'suspended'. Said R. Johanan: The difference between them⁶⁰ is the obligation to bring an ashm talui.⁶¹ Said R. Zera: [As to an] analogy [in respect of the view] of R. Eleazar — to what may the thing be compared? To the case of a man who ate something about which it is doubtful whether it was suet or fat,⁶² who, when it becomes known to him⁶³ brings a guilt offering.⁶⁴

- (16) Cf. note 8.
- (17) Mal. III. 9.
- (18) Since both R. Simeon and R. Eleazar had said, 'a majority of the people'. v. A.Z. 36a.
- (19) Who said supra that a majority of the court is not regarded as the whole.
- (20) Though their opinions differ.
- (21) Lit., 'the collar (or 'chain') hangs on the neck of'.
- (22) Sanh. 10a.
- (23) Lit., 'we'.
- (24) That the responsibility for any wrong decision might be shared by all of them.
- (25) For him to decide whether it was ritually fit for human consumption.
- (26) Who were familiar with the ritual laws relating to diseased animals.
- (27) A suburb of the town of Sura; v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 10, n. 1.
- (28) And a majority of the people acted accordingly.
- (29) Lit., 'their atonement', the sin offering prescribed in Lev. IV, 13ff.
- (30) Who was unaware that the decision is as rescinded.
- (31) It cannot be determined whether such a case comes under the category of dependence upon the court or under that of acting independently. Hence an asham talui (v. Glos.) must be brought.
- (32) The transgressor who claims not to have heard that an erroneous decision had been withdrawn.
- (33) Lit., 'sat'.
- (34) To bring an asham talui (v. Glos.).
- (35) Lit., 'in this, that he'.
- (36) Lit., 'it was possible for him to hear'.
- (37) Cf. previous note. Since it was an impossibility for him to ascertain the facts his action is regarded as entirely dependent upon the court's decision. Hence he is exonerated.
- (38) Cf. Lev. XV, 19ff: XVIII, 19.
- (39) If during the eleven day's (which follow the seven unclean days that a woman must observe after her menstruation (cf. Lev. XV, 19), she noticed any kind of blood, it is not regarded as the blood of menstruation but as a mere flow; and she need not, therefore, count seven days (as in the case of menstruation) but waits only one day, after which she is again clean.
- (40) Lev. IV, 13.
- (41) Lit., 'went out'.
- (42) [Even after the court had retracted, provided he was unaware of the retraction.]
- (43) Lit., 'was not given but'.
- (44) Believing the decision of the court to be a correct one and thus acting upon it.
- (45) (And this reason applies even after the court has withdrawn its decision.)
- (46) As an offering.
- (47) In consequence of which they committed a transgression, and when the error was discovered must bring an offering, cf. Lev. IV, 13.
- (48) Cf. Num. XV, 24.
- (49) Lit., 'in the beginning they called for them'. Every member of the congregation makes a special contribution towards the cost of the sacrifice.

(50) Lit., 'they come', i.e., they are purchased.

(52) Why does R. Simeon exempt the individual in our Mishnah?

(53) Lit., 'it is to be known'. Since every individual contributes towards the cost of the offering everyone must be aware of the fact that the court has retracted!

(54) Hence it is quite possible for individuals to be unaware of the retraction of the court.

(55) He should not know, therefore, of the retraction of the court even if those in town were informed of the object of the collection.

(57) V. supra p. 18, n. 10.

(58) So that, according to R. Simeon, individuals might be unaware of the fact that the court had retracted, and are, therefore, as stated by him in our Mishnah, exonerated.

(59) An individual who acted in accordance with an erroneous ruling of the court after it had been rescinded.

(60) R. Eleazar who said, 'doubtful' and Symmachus who said 'suspended'.

(61) V. Glos. According to R. Eleazar such an offering is to be brought as is the case with all 'doubtful' trespasses. According to Symmachus, however, his offering is 'suspended' and he consequently brings nothing.

(62) Lit., 'doubtful suet, doubtful fat', and he took it to be fat.

(63) That it might have been suet.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 4a

And there is no need¹ [to say that this is so] according to him, who holds that the public bring the offering, since [in that case] the matter is well known;² but even according to him who holds that the court brings the sacrifice, in which case the matter is not well known,³ [the asham talui must be brought, because] had he inquired he would have been told.⁴ R. Jose b. Abin — others say, R. Jose b. Zebida — said: [As to an] analogy [in respect of the view'] of Symmachus — to what may the thing be compared? To [the case of] a man who brought [an offering for] his atonement at twilight when there was doubt whether it was still day⁵ and⁶ his atonement was effective or night has already fallen⁷ and his atonement was not effective,⁶ who does not bring an asham talui.⁸ And there is no need⁹ [to say that this is so] according to him who holds that the court bring [the sacrifice] since [in that case] the matter is not sufficiently known;¹⁰ but even according to him who holds that the public bring the sacrifice, in which case the matter is well known and people could have told him,¹¹ [this case is nevertheless the same] as¹² that of doubt whether it was still day, or night has already fallen.¹³ For even if he had wished to ask he might not have found anyone who could tell him.¹⁴ SAID BEN 'AZZAI TO HIM: HOW DOES SUCH A PERSON DIFFER FROM ONE WHO REMAINS etc. R. Akiba, surely, answered Ben 'Azzai well!¹⁵ — Raba replied: The difference between them is [the case of one who started on a journey.¹⁶ According to Ben 'Azzai he is liable because he is still at home;¹⁷ according to R. Akiba he is exempt since he has already started on his journey.¹⁸ IF THE COURT RULED THAT AN ENTIRE PRINCIPLE WAS TO BE UPROOTED. Our Rabbis taught: And something be hid,¹⁹ but not when an entire commandment be uprooted. How? One might assume that if they said, for example, that [the law concerning] the menstruant is not found in the Torah [or the law concerning] the Sabbath is not found in the Torah [or the law concerning] idolatry is not found in the Torah — they are liable,²⁰ hence it was expressly stated, 'And something be hid'²¹ but not when an entire commandment he hid. They are consequently exempt. One might assume, however, that if they said: [The law' concerning] the menstruant occurs in the Torah but if a man has intercourse with a woman that awaits a day corresponding to a day²² is exempt [or that the law concerning] the Sabbath occurs in the Torah but if a man carries anything from a private domain into a public domain he is exempt. [or that the law' concerning] idolatry occurs in the Torah but if a man only bows down to an idol he is exempt, they²³ are exempt, hence it was expressly stated, 'and something he hid' but not the entire principle. The Master said, 'One might assume that . . . they are exempt'. But [it may be asked] if when [the ruling was that] part [of a commandment] be retained and a part annulled they are exempt. and when an entire principle be uprooted they are also exempt, in what case, then, would they be liable?²⁴ — The Tanna bad raised his question thus: It might have been assumed that dabar'²⁵ means the entire commandment,²⁶ hence it was expressly said. And something be hid. How does this prove it? — 'Ulla replied: In this text, read, 'and a part of a thing was hid'.²⁷ Hezekiah replied: Scripture says. And do any of the commandments²⁸ [which implies] of the commandments,²⁹ but not all the commandments. Does not commandments' denote the plural?³⁰ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, commandment.³¹ R. Ashi replied: Dabar,³² here, is to be deduced from dabar' mentioned in the case of a 'rebellious elder.'³³ For concerning a 'rebellious elder' it was written, If there arise a matter too hard for thee³⁴ . . . thou shalt not turn aside from the sentence which they shall declare unto thee, to the right hand, nor to the left hand,³⁵ as in the case of the 'rebellious elder' the meaning is 'a part of the thing' and not all the thing³⁶ so in the case of an [erroneous] ruling, [of a court] a part of the thing [is meant] and not an entire principle. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: The court is liable only when they ruled concerning a prohibition³⁷ which the Sadducees³⁸ do not admit,³⁹ but if concerning a prohibition³⁷ which the Sadducees admit⁴⁰ they are exempt.⁴¹ What is the reason? It is a matter which anyone can learn at school.⁴² We learnt: [THE LAW' CONCERNING THE] MENSTRUANT OCCURS IN THE TORAH BUT IF A MAN HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A WOMAN THAT AWAITS A DAY CORRESPONDING TO A DAY HE IS EXEMPT. But why? Surely [the law concerning] a woman that awaits a day corresponding to a day is mentioned in the Scriptures: Then she shall number to herself,⁴³ teaches that she counts one [day] for one [day]!⁴⁴ — They might rule that the first stage of contact is permitted and only the consummation of coition is forbidden. Surely this also is written in the Scriptures: He hath made naked her fountain!⁴⁵ — They might rule that in the natural way it is forbidden; in an unnatural way it is permitted. but, surely, it is written, As with womankind.⁴⁶ — They might rule that in the natural way even the first stage of contact is forbidden; in the unnatural way, however, consummation of coition only is forbidden but the first stage of contact is permitted. If so, [the same might apply] even [to the case of] a menstruant also!⁴⁷ — The fact, however, is [that the ruling might have permitted]⁴⁸ even in the natural way⁴⁹ alleging [that the prohibition of] the first stage⁵⁰ has reference to a menstruant woman only.⁵¹ And if you prefer I might say: The — ruling may have been that a woman is not regarded as a *zabah*⁵² except during the day time because it is written, all the days of her issue.⁵³ We learnt: [THE LAW CONCERNING THE] SABBATH OCCURS IN THE TORAH BUT IF A MAN CARRIES ANYTHING FROM A PRIVATE DOMAIN INTO A PUBLIC DOMAIN IS EXEMPT [etc.]. But why? Surely the prohibition of carrying from [one domain into another] is mentioned in the Scriptures: Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on [the Sabbath day]!⁵⁴ — They ruled that carrying out alone is prohibited but bringing in is permitted. And if you prefer I might say: They ruled that only carrying out and bringing in⁵⁵ is prohibited but handing across and throwing⁵⁶ is permitted.⁵⁷ We learnt: [THE LAW CONCERNING] IDOLATRY OCCURS IN THE TORAH BUT IF A MAN ONLY BOWS DOWN TO AN IDOL HE IS EXEMPT [etc.]. But why? The case of him, who bows down is certainly mentioned in the Scriptures: for it is written, Thou shalt bow down to no other god!⁵⁸ — They ruled that bowing down is prohibited only when performed in the usual manner but if in an unusual manner it is permitted. And if you prefer I might say: They ruled that bowing itself in a natural manner is only then prohibited when the hands and the feet are stretched out but bowing without stretching out the hands and the feet is permitted.

(2) And every individual is thus acquainted with the retraction of the court.

(3) And it might have been assumed that the transgressor could justify his action by claiming that he was not aware of the retraction of the court.

(4) As he did not take the trouble to inquire he must himself bear part of the responsibility.

(5) Sacrifices may only be offered in the day time.

(6) So MS.M., Cur. edd., 'it was atoned for him'.

- (7) Lit., 'from when it was dark'.
- (8) V. Glos.
- (9) V. supra p. 19. n. 12.
- (10) Hence the individual can justify his action by pleading ignorance of the retraction and claiming reliance upon the court's original ruling.
- (11) Cf. Bomberg ed.
- (12) So Ma'aseh Rab, quoted in marginal glosses, a.l., Cur. edd., 'in'.
- (13) As no sacrifice is required in the latter case so it is not required in the former.
- (14) So MS.M. v. D.S. a.l., Cur. edd. 'whom to ask'.
- (15) How then, could the latter differ from the former's view?
- (16) Lit., 'he took hold of the way', i.e., he already left his house but is still in town.
- (17) The town being regarded as home MS.M. reads, 'in town' for, 'in his house' of cur. edd.
- (18) Being pre-occupied with the anxieties of travel he is not in a position to pay attention to what is happening in the town.
- (19) Lev. IX, 13; then a sacrifice is to be brought.
- (20) To bring the prescribed offering.
- (21) V. p. 20,11 13.
- (22) V. Supra p. 17, n. 10.
- (23) The court or the public.
- (24) since it is impossible that there should be no liability at all, how could such an assumption be entertained?
- (25) דבר rendered something, may also signify 'a thing', i.e., an entire commandment.
- (26) And that only when an entire commandment was uprooted is liability incurred, but not when a part only was annulled.
- (27) The Mem, מ in ונעלם דבר is read twice; once as the final letter of ונעלם and again as the initial of דבר having the force of the partitive; מדבר '(a part) of a thing'.
- (28) Lev. ibid.
- (29) I.e., a part was annulled and a part retained.
- (30) Lit., 'two'. Does not 'any of the commandments' imply one of several, and not a part of one,
- (31) מצות (with the omission of the waw of the plural) is to be read as mizwath, מצות , sing. const., 'commandment of', not mizwoth in the plur.
- (32) דבר 'thing'. (Lev. ibid.).
- (33) An elder who defies the authority of the supreme Court in Jerusalem.
- (34) Deut. XVII, 8.
- (35) Ibid. v. II.
- (36) V. Sanh. 88b.
- (37) Lit., 'thing'.
- (38) A sect believing in the Scriptures (the Written Law) but not in the Rabbinic interpretations and traditions (Oral Law).
- (39) I.e., a prohibition not mentioned in the Scriptures.
- (40) A Biblical law'.
- (41) Because their ruling, being Contrary to what everybody is expected to know, has no validity whatsoever.
- (42) Lit 'it (is a matter of) go read at school'. There was no reason why anyone should rely upon the court's erroneous ruling when any school boy knew it to be contrary to a Biblical prohibition.
- (43) Lev. XV, 28.
- (44) Cf. supra p. 17, n. 10. Since she is thus Biblically' considered unclean how could a court rule that one having intercourse with her is exempt?
- (45) Lev. XX,18.
- (46) Ibid. 13. The plural משכב implies natural, and unnatural intercourse.
- (47) Why then was the case of a woman who 'awaits a day corresponding to a day' given as an illustration when the case of a menstruant, already mentioned, should supply the same illustration.
- (48) The first stage of Contact.
- (49) In the case of one 'who awaits a day corresponding to a day'; only consummation of coition being forbidden in her case.

(51) Thus permitting a forbidden act which the Sadducees do not admit.

(52) A woman who has an issue of blood not in the time of her menstruation, and is subject to certain laws of uncleanness and purification (Lev. XV, 25 ff).

(53) Lev. XV, 26. Emphasis being laid on days.

(54) Jer. XVII, 22. Why then should there be liability to a communal offering seeing that the Court ruled against a specific Biblical prohibition?

(55) So Bomberg ed. Cur. edd. delete 'Carrying in' [V. shap. 96b, where 'carrying in' is treated as a specific Biblical prohibition as well as 'carrying forth'.]

(56) From one domain into another.

(57) These are not mentioned in the Scriptures.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 4b

R. Joseph enquired: What [is the law where the court ruled that] ploughing is not forbidden on the Sabbath, is it assumed that, as they had admitted the whole law,¹ the ruling is deemed to be a partial annulment and a partial retention [of a law]² or, perhaps, since they have uprooted altogether the law of ploughing it is deemed to be an uprooting of an entire principle? — Come and bear! [THE LAW CONCERNING THE] MENSTRUANT OCCURS IN THE TORAH BUT IF A MAN HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A WOMAN THAT AWAITS A DAY CORRESPONDING TO A DAY HE IS EXEMPT [. . . THEY ARE LIABLE]. But why? surely, [the law concerning] a woman that awaits a day corresponding to a day has been uprooted completely!³ — R. Joseph can reply⁴ [that the law of] a woman that awaits a day corresponding to a day, that has been mentioned, is to be explained as above.⁵ Come and bear: [THE LAW CONCERNING THE] SABBATH OCCURS IN THE TORAH BUT IF A MAN CARRIES ANYTHING FROM A PRIVATE DOMAIN INTO A PUBLIC DOMAIN HE IS EXEMPT [. . . THEY ARE LIABLE]. But why? Surely, [the law concerning] carrying from [one domain into another] has been completely uprooted!³ — There also the explanation is as given above.⁵ Come and hear: [THE LAW CONCERNING] IDOLATRY OCCURS IN THE TORAH BUT IF A MAN ONLY BOWS DOWN TO AN IDOL HE IS EXEMPT [. . . THEY ARE LIABLE]. But why? Surely, the law concerning bowing to an idol has been completely uprooted!⁶ — It may be reported that [the law of] bowing also is to be explained as above.⁷ R. Zera enquired: What [is the law where the court ruled that] no Sabbath is to be kept in the seventh⁸ year? Wherein did they err? — In the following text: In ploughing time and in harvest thou shalt rest,⁹ when ploughing is carried on, [they explained,] Sabbath is to be observed but when no ploughing is carried on Sabbath is not to be observed. Is it to be assumed that, as they retain it¹⁰ in the other years of the Septennial, [their ruling] is deemed to be a partial annulment and a partial retention [of a law] or, perhaps, since they are uprooting it in the seventh year it is deemed to be an uprooting of an entire principle? Rabina replied: Come and hear! If a prophet taught¹¹ that any thing¹² of the words of the Torah was to be uprooted, he is guilty; if only to annul a part of it and to retain a part he is, R. Simeon said, exempt. And in respect of idolatry, even if he said that the idol be worshipped only to-day and destroyed to-morrow, he is guilty.¹³ From this¹⁴ it may be inferred that [the ruling that] no Sabbath is to be kept in the Sabbatical year is to be deemed as partial annulment and partial retention.¹⁵ This proves it.

MISHNAH. IF THE COURT RULED AND ONE OF THEM KNEW THAT THEY HAD ERRED AND SAID TO THEM, YOU ARE MISTAKEN', OR IF THE MUFLA¹⁶ OF THE COURT WAS NOT PRESENT,¹⁷ OR IF ONE OF THEM WAS A PROSELYTE OR A BASTARD OR A NATHIN¹⁸ OR TOO OLD TO HAVE CHILDREN,¹⁹ THEY ARE²⁰ EXONERATED, FOR CONGREGATION WAS MENTIONED²¹ HERE²² AND CONGREGATION WAS MENTIONED FURTHER ON,²³ AS CONGREGATION FURTHER ON [REFERS TO MEN] ALL. (IF WHOM

MUST BE CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW²⁴ SO [IN THE CASE OF] CONGREGATION. MENTIONED HERE [THE RULING IS INVALID] UNLESS²⁵ THEY ARE ALL CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW.

GEMARA. OR IF THE MUFLA OF THE COURT WAS NOT PRESENT. Whence is this derived? — R. Shesheth replied, and so It was taught by the School of R. Ishmael: Why has it been said that a court that ruled concerning a prohibition²⁶ which the Sadducees admit, are exempt? because they should have learned and did not learn; [in the case of] the absence of the mufla of the court they are also exempt, because they should have learned and did not learn.²⁷ CONGREGATION WAS MENTIONED HERE AND CONGREGATION WAS MENTION FURTHER IN . . . UNLESS THEY ARE ALL CAPABLE OF DECIDING MATTERS OF LAW. And whence is this²⁸ derived there? — For R. Hisda said: Scripture states, That they may stand there with thee;²⁹ with thee implies ‘such as are like thee’. Might it not be suggested that with thee [has reference] to the divine presence?³⁰ — but, said R. Nahman b. Isaac. Scripture states, And they shall bear the burden with thee,³¹ ‘with thee’ implies ‘such as are like thee’.³²

MISHNAH. IF THE COURT ISSUED A [WRONG] DECISION UNWITTINGLY AND ALL THE PEOPLE ACTED UNWITTINGLY ACCORDINGLY, A BULLOCK MUST BE BROUGHT.³³ [IF THE COURT RULED] WILFULLY AND [THE PEOPLE] ACTED UNWILLINGLY ACCORDINGLY, A LAMB OR A GOAT³⁴ MUST BE BROUGHT. [IF THE COURT RULED] UNWILLINGLY AND [THE PEOPLE] ACTED WILLINGLY ACCORDINGLY, THEY ARE EXEMPT.

GEMARA. [IF THE COURT RULED] UNWITTINGLY AND [THE PEOPLE] ACTED WILFULLY, THEY ARE EXEMPT. [From this³⁵ it follows] that one acting unwittingly though in a way similar to one acting wilfully, is liable; and how’ is this to be imagined? When e.g., the court ruled that suet was permitted and a man mistook it for fat and ate it.³⁶ May it then he suggested that this answers Rann b. Hania's enquiry!³⁷ — He can tell you: Because in the first clause it was taught, [IF THE COURT RULED] WILFULLY AND THE PEOPLE ACTED UNWITTINGLY it was also taught in the final clause,³⁸ [IF THE COURT RULED] UNWITTINGLY AND [THE PEOPLE] ACTED WILFULLY.³⁹

MISHNAH. IF THE COURT ISSUED AN [ERRONEOUS] RULING AND. ALL THE PEOPLE OR A Majority OF THEM ACTED ACCORDINGLY, A BULLOCK MUST BE BROUGHT.⁴⁰ AND IN [THE CASE OF] IDOLATRY A BUTTOCK OR A GOAT⁴¹ ARE TO BE BROUGHT; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. R. JUDAH SAID: THE TWELVE TRIBES BRING TWELVE BULLOCKS,⁴² AND IN RESPECT OF IDOLATRY TWELVE BULLOCKS AND TWELVE GOATS.

(1) Lit., ‘thing’, the corpus of all the laws of Sabbath.

(2) Hence, in accordance with our Mishnah, they are liable.

(3) And yet it is regarded in our Mishnah as partial annulment only. So also in the case of the law of ploughing its denial where the other laws of the Sabbath are retained, should be regarded as partial annulment.

(4) Lit. ‘he said to you’.

(5) Supra 4a, where it was explained that only a part of that law was annulled.

(8) v. Ex. XXIII, 10F, DEUT. XV, 1FF.

(9) Ex. XXXIV, 21.

(10) The Sabbath.

(12) A Complete law.

- (13) Sanh, 90a.
- (14) That worshipping idols on one day and destroying them in another is regarded as partial annulment and partial retention of the law of idolatry.
- (15) Like the case of idolatry cited the law of the Sabbath was, according to the ruling, to be retained at one time and annulled at another.
- (16) מופלא lit., 'distinguished'; an expert not a member of the court, to whom doubtful points are submitted and by whose directions the court is guided in its deliberations. For a fuller discussion of the term, v. Sanh. 9Sonc.ed.) p. 574, n. 1.
- (17) Lit., 'there'.
- (18) נתין lit., 'given', i.e., dedicated in the service of the Temple and the people. A descendant of the Gibeonites (Josh. IX, 3ff) whom Joshua made into hewers of wood and drawers of water (ibid. v. 27) and David excluded from intermarriage with the Community (Yeb. 78b) [They are not competent to act as members of the Beth din, v. Sanh. 32a]
- (19) Others: 'too aged, or one who never had children.' [These too may not act on the Beth din, v. Sanh. 36b]
- (20) So MS. M. Cur. edd 'he is exempt', is obviously a misprint.
- (21) Lit., 'for it was said'.
- (22) In the case of an erroneous ruling of the court, Lev'. IV, 13.
- (23) In respect of the Sanhedrin. (V. Num. XV, and Sanh. 2a.)
- (24) Proof of this is given in the Gemara infra.
- (25) Lit., 'until',
- (26) Lit., 'thing'.
- (27) And as such are in be considered wilful transgressors.
- (28) That they' must all be capable of deciding matters of law.
- (29) Num. XI, 16.
- (30) I.e., though God said to Moses, 'Gather unto Me seventy' men', they are to remain 'with thee', i.e., with Moses, and must not venture into the divine presence.
- (31) Ex, XVIII, 22. The section deals with the appointment of judges.
- (32) V. Sanh, (Sonc. ed.) p. 230.
- (33) It will be explained infra by' whom it is to be brought.
- (34) V. Lev, IV, 27ff, 32ff.
- (35) The mention of wilful action only for which a sacrifice cannot atone,
- (36) His eating of the suet was done unwittingly since he believed to be permitted fat, it is nevertheless similar to wilful action since in fact he has not been acting on the strength of the court's decision,
- (37) V. Supra 2a.
- (38) By way of contrast.
- (39) Hence no deduction can be made, and Rami's enquiry remains unanswered.
- (40) Lev. IV, 13ff.
- (41) Num. XV, 24. V. Gemara, infra.
- (42) In his view the people and not the court bring sacrifices, and each tribe is called 'congregation' (kahal).

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 5a

R. SIMEON SAID: THIRTEEN BULLOCKS;¹ AND IN RESPECT OF IDOLATRY, THIRTEEN BULLOCKS AND THIRTEEN GOATS: A BULLOCK AND A GOAT FOR EACH TRIBE, AND A BULLOCK AND A GOAT FOR THE COURT. IF THE COURT RULED [ERRONEOUSLY] AND SEVEN TRIBES OR A MAJORITY OF THEM² ACTED ACCORDINGLY, A BULLOCK IS TO BE BROUGHT; AND IN RESPECT OF IDOLATRY, A BULLOCK AND A GOAT MUST BE BROUGHT; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. R. JUDAH SAID: THE SEVEN TRIBES WHO SINNED MUST BRING SEVEN BULLOCKS AND THE REST OF THE TRIBES WHO DID NOT SIN MUST BRING BULLOCK[S]³ (IN THEIR ACCOUNT, BECAUSE EVEN THOSE WHO DID NOT SIN MUST BRING OFFERINGS ON ACCOUNT OF THESE WHO SINNED. R. SIMEON SAID: EIGHT BULLOCKS; AND IN RESPECT OF IDOLATRY, EIGHT BULLOCKS AND EIGHT GOATS, A BULLOCK AND A GOAT FOR EVERY TRIBE AND A

BULLOCK AND A GOAT FOR THE COURT. IF THE COURT OF ONE OF THE TRIBES RULED [ERRONEOUSLY], AND THAT TRIBE ACTED ACCORDINGLY, THAT TRIBE IS LIABLE, BUT ALL THE OTHER TRIBES ARE EXEMPT; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. BUT THE SAGES SAY: NO LIABILITY IS INCURRED EXCEPT AS A RESULT OF THE RULINGS OF THE SUPREME COURT ONLY; FOR IT IS STATED, AND IF THE WHOLE CONGREGATION OF ISRAEL SHALL ERR,⁴ BUT NOT THE CONGREGATION OF ONE PARTICULAR TRIBE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: It might have been assumed that, if it had come to the knowledge of the court that a ruling of theirs was erroneous and they had forgotten what the ruling was,⁵ they are liable,⁶ hence it was expressly stated, When the salt was known,⁷ [implying] not, however, when only those who sinned were known. Wherein they have sinned⁸ [implies that] if two tribes had sinned they must bring two bullocks,⁹ if three had sinned three have to be brought. But is it not possible that this only means¹⁰ that if two individuals had sinned they bring two bullocks, if three had sinned they bring three? It was expressly stated. The congregation,¹¹ [showing that] only a congregation is liable, and that every congregation¹² is liable. How? If two tribes sinned they bring two bullocks, if seven sinned they bring seven, and also the other tribes who did not sin bring each a bullock on account of the former,¹³ because even those who had not sinned must bring sin offerings, because of those who sinned — Hence Scripture stated, ‘congregation’, in order to impose the obligation upon every congregation: these are the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon said: If seven tribes sinned they bring seven bullocks, and the court also brings a bullock on account of them, for ‘congregation’ was mentioned below¹⁴ and ‘congregation’ was also mentioned above,¹⁵ as ‘congregation’ that was mentioned above means both the court and the congregation¹⁶ so ‘congregation’ that was mentioned below means both the court and the congregation. R. Meir said: If seven tribes had sinned the court brings a bullock on their account but they themselves are exempt, for ‘congregation’ was mentioned below¹⁴ and ‘congregation’ was mentioned above,¹⁵ as ‘congregation’ that was mentioned above refers to the court and not to the people¹⁷ so ‘congregation’ that was mentioned below refers to the court and not to the people. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said in his name: If six tribes had sinned and they¹⁸ represent a majority of the people, or seven, although they¹⁸ do not represent a majority of the people, they bring a bullock. The Master said: ‘When the sin was known [implying], not, however, when only those who sinned were known’. Who is the author of this statement? — Rab Judah said in the name of Rab (others say Raba): It is not¹⁹ R. Eliezer, for it was taught:²⁰ R. Eliezer said,²¹ ‘Whatever your assumption [he must bring a sin offering], for if he ate the suet he is liable and if he ate the nothar²² he is also liable.’²³ R. Ashi said: It may even be said to be R. Eliezer, for here the case is different since it is written, [When the sin] wherein they have sinned [is known]²⁴ But surely, there²⁵ also it is written, [If he sin], wherein he has sinned, [be known to him]²⁶ — That²⁷ is required for the purpose of excluding the case of one who performed a forbidden act while his intention was to perform a different act.²⁸ What is the reason of R. Judah? — He holds the opinion that ‘congregation’ was written four times: ‘Congregation’, the congregation congregation, the congregation.²⁹ One of these is to indicate [that] the obligation bring offering falls on every congregation;³⁰ one is to indicate that the ruling depends on the court and the action depends on the congregation;³¹ one is to indicate attraction,³² and one has reference to a tribe that acted in accordance with the [erroneous] ruling of its own court.³³ And R. Simeon maintains that ‘congregation’ was written three times: The congregation, congregation, the congregation³⁴ because the expression, from the eyes of the congregation is the usual form of Biblical speech — as people say, ‘from the eyes of so and so’,³⁵ one of these³⁶ is to indicate that the obligation to bring an offering falls on every congregation.³⁷ and the other two [are required for the following deduction]: ‘Congregation’ was mentioned below and ‘congregation’ was mentioned above, as below the reference is to the court together with the congregation, so here also it refers to the court together with the congregation.³⁸ And R. Meir makes no exposition on congregation, the congregation. Consequently, congregation was written only twice, and both are required [for the following deduction]: ‘congregation was mentioned below and ‘congregation’ was mentioned above, as below the reference is to the court and not to the congregation, so here also the reference is to the court and not to the congregation.³⁸ As to R. Simeon b. Eleazar, what is his reason? It is written, And it shall be it from the eyes of the congregation³⁹ which clearly refers to a minority, since it is written, from the eyes,⁴⁰ but it is also written, For in the respect of all the people it was done in error,⁴¹ which indicates that the reference is only to⁴² a majority and not to a minority; how', then, [are these contradictory deductions to be reconciled]? — If the sin was committed by six tribes who represent the majority of the congregation or by seven, even though they do not comprise a majority of the congregation, they are liable.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 5b

And whence does R. Simeon and R. Meir¹ infer that the ruling depends on the court and the action depends on the congregation?² — Abaye replied: For Scripture stated, And it shall be it from the eyes of the congregation the sin be committed unwittingly.³ Raba said: [It is inferred] from, In respect of all the people it was done in error.⁴ And [both texts are] required. For if the All Merciful had written only, 'And it shall be if from the eyes of the congregation the sin be committed unwittingly it might have been assumed that the reference⁵ is even to a minority', hence it was written, In respect of all the people it was done in error. And if only In respect of all the people it was done in error had been written, It might have been assumed [that there is no obligation]⁶ unless the court⁷ committed the sin together with the majority, hence it was written. Did it shall be if from the eyes of the congregation the sin be committed unwittingly. But, surely, both these texts speak rather of⁸ idolatry! — From the eyes⁹ is inferred from [the other expression] from the eyes.¹⁰ IF THE COURT OF ONE etc, The question was raised: Where one tribe acted on the [erroneous] ruling of the supreme court, do the other tribes, according to the view of R. Judah, bring sin offerings] or not? Is it assumed that only where seven tribes [have sinned] do the other tribes bring [sin offerings] together with them because they¹¹ constitute a majority, but not where one tribe¹² [only had sinned] since it does not constitute a majority, or is there, perhaps, no difference? — Come and hear! 'What do they bring? One bullock. R. Simeon said two bullocks.' Now, under what circumstances?¹³ If it be suggested where seven tribes had sinned. [it might be retorted.] R. Simeon, 'surely, requires [in such a case] eight [bullocks]!¹⁴ If, again,¹⁵ [it be suggested,] where one tribe had sinned, [it may be asked] under what authority?¹⁶ If on the ruling of its own court, R. Simeon, surely, does not in such a case admit liability!¹⁷ Consequently it must be a case¹⁸ of acting under the ruling of the supreme court; who, however, is the first Tanna?¹⁹ If it be suggested R. Meir, be, [it may be asked] surely requires a majority;²⁰ consequently,²¹ it must be R. Judah!²² — It may be argued²³ that here it is a case²⁴ where a sin was committed by six tribes who constituted a majority of the congregation and it²⁵ is the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar said in his name, 'Six [tribes] who form a majority of the congregation or seven [tribes], although they do not form a majority of the congregation who committed a sin, bring a bullock.'²⁶ Come and hear: R. Judah said, 'If a tribe acted on the ruling of its own court, that tribe is liable²⁷ and all the other tribes are exempt: if, [however, it acted] on the ruling of the supreme court. even the other tribes are liable. This proves it. Said R. Ashi: This may also be deduced from our Mishnah, for it was taught, AND THAT TRIBE ACTED ACCORDINGLY, THAT TRIBE IS LIABLE, BUT ALL THE OTHER TRIBES ARE EXEMPT; what need was there for the statement, THE OTHER TRIBES ARE EXEMPT when²⁸ it was stated, THAT TRIBE IS LIABLE? Surely, since it was stated, THAT TRIBE IS LIABLE it is obvious that THE OTHER TRIBES ARE EXEMPT! This, consequently, teaches us the following: That only when [one tribe acted] on the ruling of its own court are the other tribes exempt, but if on the ruling of the supreme court even the other tribes are liable — This proves it. The question was raised: Does one tribe who acted on the [erroneous] ruling of the supreme court bring [a sin offering],²⁹ according to R. Simeon, or not?³⁰ Come and hear! 'What do they bring? One bullock. R. Simeon said: Two bullocks.' Now, under what circumstances? If it be suggested that seven tribes had sinned, [it may be retorted that in such a case not] two bullocks but eight bullocks are required! Consequently it must be a case where one tribe had sinned, but, [it may be asked,] under what authority?³¹ If on the ruling of its own court, R. Simeon surely does not in such a case admit liability! Consequently, [it must be a case of a tribe's acting] under the ruling of the supreme court!³² Who, however, is to be understood to be the first Tanna? If [it be suggested] R. Meir, be, surely, [it may be asked,] requires a majority!³³ If R. Judah. [surely he holds] that other tribes also must bring;³⁴ consequently, it must be [the view of] R. Simeon b. Eleazar, and as it has been taught.³⁵ Come and hear: But the Sages say. 'One is never liable except when acting on a ruling of the supreme court.'³⁶ Now, who are the Sages? If it be suggested R. Meir, surely. [it may be retorted,] be requires a majority!³³ Consequently it must represent the view of R. Simeon. This proves it. And whence do R. Judah and R. Simeon infer that one tribe is called 'congregation'? — It may be replied: Because it is written, And Jeheshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the Lord before the new court.³⁷ What is meant by 'new'? — R. Johanan replied: They issued new regulations ordaining that an unclean man who bathed during the day³⁸ must not enter the camp of the Levites. R. Aha b. Jacob demurred: How [does this prove it]?³⁹ Is it not possible that Jerusalem is different since Benjamin also was there!⁴⁰ — But, said R. Aha b. Jacob, because it is written, And he said unto me: Behold, I will make thee fruitful and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a congregation of Peoples;⁴¹ but who was born to him at that time? Only Benjamin! Consequently it must be concluded that the All Merciful said thus: Another congregation will now be born unto thee.⁴² Said R. Shaba to R. Kahana: Is it not possible that the All Merciful said to him⁴³ thus: 'When Benjamin will have been born to you there will be twelve tribes so that you might then be called congregation'? — He said to him: Would twelve tribes, then, be called 'congregation' while eleven tribes would not be called 'congregation'.⁴⁴ It was taught, R. Simeon said: What need was there for stating. And a second young bullock shalt thou take for a sin offering⁴⁵ If it is to teach that there were two, surely, [it may be pointed out] it has already been stated, And he shall offer the one for a sin offering and the other for a burnt offering, unto the Lord!⁴⁶ But [the purpose of the statement is this]: As it might have been assumed that this sin offering was to be eaten by the Levites⁴⁷ it was expressly stated, And a second young bullock,⁴⁸ [implying that it is] second to the burnt offering; as the burnt offering must not be eaten so must not this sin offering be eaten. Similarly, said R. Jose: The children of the captivity, that were come out of exile, offered burnt offerings unto the God of Israel twelve bullocks . . . all this was a burnt offering;¹ can it be imagined that 'all this was a burnt offering' [is to be taken literally]? Is it possible for a sin offering to be a burnt offering?² But [this is the meaning]: all this was like a burnt offering, as a burnt offering must not be eaten so were those sin offerings not to be eaten,' for it was taught:³ R. Judah said, 'They brought them for the sin of idolatry'.⁴ Furthermore, Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: [They brought them] for the sin of idolatry that had been committed in the days of Zedekiah. According to R. Judah one can well understand these twelve sin offerings to be possible in the case, for example, where the sin was committed by twelve tribes who must bring twelve goats — or again where the sin was committed by seven tribes where others must bring offerings on account of them.⁵ According to R. Simeon, also, this is possible in the case, for example, where the sin was committed by eleven tribes who bring eleven goats, the twelfth⁶ being that of the court, According to R. Meir, however, who said that the court, and not the congregation, bring the sin offering. how could [the bringing of] twelve offerings be possible? — In the case, for instance, where they sinned, and sinned again and again unto the twelfth time. But surely, those who had committed the sin⁷ were dead!⁸ — R. Papa replied: The tradition that a sin offering the owner of which died must be left to die,⁹ is applicable only to the offering¹⁰ of an individual, but not to that of a congregation — because a congregation does not die.¹¹ Whence does R. Papa derive this law? If it be suggested, from the Scriptural text, Instead of thy fathers shall be thy sons,¹² if so, [it may be asked], this should apply to the offering of an individual also! — But R. Papa draws his inference from the goat of the new moon¹³ concerning which the All Merciful said that it was to be brought from the funds of the Temple treasury.¹⁴ but surely, some of Israel had died,¹⁵ how then¹⁶ could those who survived bring [the new moon sin offering]? From this it must consequently be inferred that a sin offering of the congregation — whose owners had died, may be offered. Are these at all alike? [In the case of] the goat for the new moon it is possible that none of the congregation had died, but here¹⁷ [the owners] had certainly died! — R. Papa's proof, however, is derived from here: Because it is written, Forgive, O Lord, thy people Israel, whom thou hast redeemed¹⁸ [which implies that] this offering is fit to atone even for those who departed from Egypt,¹⁹ for it is written, Whom thou hast redeemed.²⁰ Is this, however, a proper analogy? There²¹ they were all²² present, and since [the heifer] atones for the living it may also atone for the dead: here,²³ however, were there any survivors? — Yes; there were indeed, for it is written, But many of the priests and Levites and heads of fathers' houses etc.²⁴ Is it not possible that they²⁵ were only a minority²⁶ and not a majority?²⁷ — Surely it is written, So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people. . . . and the noise was heard afar off.²⁸ Were they not, however, wilful sinners?²⁹ — That³⁰ was a temporary measure. This³¹ may also be arrived at by reasoning. For should this not be granted, on whose behalf, [it may be asked,] were the ninety and six rams and seventy and seven lambs?³² But, [it must be granted, that] it was a temporary measure; in this respect also it must have been a temporary measure. Our Rabbis taught: If one of the congregation died³³ they are still liable; if one of the court, they are exempt. Who is the author [of this statement]? — R. Hisda, in the name of R. Zera in the name of R. Jeremiah, in the name of Rab, said: It is R. Meir who maintains that the court, and not the congregation, bring the sin offering. Hence, when one of the congregation dies they are still liable since all the members of the court are alive; if, however, one of the court dies they are exempt, because it is then a sin offering one of whose joint owners died; and for this reason they are exempt. R. Joseph demurred: Let this statement be established in accordance with the view of R. Simeon who maintains that the court together with the congregation [bring the sin offering]. Hence, when one of the congregation dies, they are still liable because a congregation does not die;³⁴ if one of the court dies they are exempt for the reason given, because it is a sin offering [one] of [whose] joint owners [died]! — Abaye said to him: We have heard R. Simeon say that a sin offering in joint ownership is not to be left to die;³⁵ for it was taught, 'If the bullock and the goat of the Day of Atonement were lost and others were set aside in their stead,³⁶ all these must be left to die; so R. Judah. R. Eleasar and R. Simeon said: They shall be left to the pasture,³⁷ because no congregational sin offering may be left to die.'³⁸ — Said R. Joseph to him: Do you speak of priests! Priests are different, because they are called 'congregation'; for it is written, And he shall make atonement for the priests and for all the people of the congregation.³⁹

Simeon stated that, unlike the sin offering of an individual, it must not be left to die. Now, since according to R. Simeon no sin offering in joint ownership may be left to die, it is possible that in this case only, where the atonement was performed with a substituted animal, are the original ones to be left to the pasture, but where one of the joint owners died (no animal having been substituted for the original one) it is possible that R. Simeon even allows the sacrifice to be offered on the altar, Hence the Baraita cited cannot be taken, as A. Joseph suggested, to represent his view (Rashi). [Or, better, since the other joint owners (the surviving members of the court) are alive there is no reason why it should not be sacrificed by them (Tosaf. Asheri).]
- (39) Lev, XVI, 33. 'priests' being placed on the same footing as 'congregation', [Tosaf. Asheri reads, 'they are considered a people by themselves, since they are mentioned separately.] A court, however, cannot be regarded as a 'congregation' and if one of them died their joint sin offering, according to R. Simeon, may have to be killed.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 6b

If so,¹ however, let them also bring a bullock in the case of an erroneous ruling! And if it be said that this is really the case,² then there would be more tribes!³ — But, said R. Aha, son of R. Jacob: The tribe of Levi is not called 'congregation',⁴ for it is written, Behold, I will make thee fruitful and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a congregation of peoples etc.⁵ He who has a possession is designated 'congregation', but he who has no possession is not designated 'congregation'.⁶ If so,⁷ there would be less than twelve tribes! — Abaye replied: Ephraim and Manasseh, even as Reuben and Simeon, shall be mine.⁸ Said Raba: But, surely, it is written, They shall be called after the name of their brethren it, their inheritance,⁹ [which shows that] they were compared only in regard to 'inheritance' but not in any other respect!¹⁰ — Were they not? Surely, they were also separated [when mentioned] in [connection with] the banners!¹¹ — Their campings were like their possessions; in order to show respect to their banners. But, surely, they were also separated in respect of their princes!¹² — That was done in order to show honor to the princes, as it was taught: ‘Solomon celebrated seven days of dedication; what reason did Moses have for celebrating twelve days of dedication? In order to show honor to the princes.’ What becomes of that?¹³ — Come and hear that which has been taught: R. Simeon said: The following five kinds of sin offerings are to be left to die.¹⁴ The young of a sin offering,¹⁵ the exchange of a sin offering, a sin offering whose owner died — a sin offering whose owner has received atonement¹⁶ and a sin offering that passed the age of a year. And since in the case of a congregation one cannot speak of the young of a sin offering, because no female offering is ever brought¹⁷ by a congregation; and one cannot speak of an exchange of a sin offering in the case of a congregation because a congregation may not exchange an offering;¹⁸ and one cannot speak, in the case of a congregation, of a sin offering whose owner died because a congregation does not die; while as regards one whose owner had received atonement and one that passed the age of a year we have not heard;¹⁹ one might suppose that they should be left to die, it is, therefore, pointed out²⁰ that what is vague may be inferred from what is explicit; as in regard to the law²¹ of the young of a sin offering, the exchange of a sin offering and one whose owner had died we find that it applies only to an individual owner²² and not to a congregation, so also the law²¹ in regard to the case of one whose owner has received atonement and one that passed the age of a year it is applicable to an individual and not to a congregation.²³ But may that which is possible²⁴ be deduced from that which is impossible?²⁵ — R. Simeon received the tradition [in regard to the five kinds of sin offering that they must be left to die] from one common source.²⁶

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. AN ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST²⁷ WHO MADE A DECISION FOR HIMSELF²⁸ THROUGH ERROR AND ACTED UNWITTINGLY ACCORDINGLY, MUST BRING A SIN OFFERING OF A BULLOCK.²⁹ IF, HOWEVER, HE MADE THE DECISION THROUGH ERROR BUT ACTED UPON IT WILFULLY, OR MADE IT WILFULLY BUT ACTED UPON IT UNWITTINGLY, HE IS EXEMPT; FOR A DECISION A HIGH PRIEST MADE FOR HIMSELF IS LIKE A RULING ISSUED BY THE COURT TO THE CONGREGATION.³⁰

GEMARA. THROUGH ERROR AND ACTED UNWITTINGLY ACCORDINGLY MUST BRING A SIN OFFERING OF A BULLOCK. Is not this Obvious? — Abaye replied: The case dealt with here is one, for example, where³¹ he made a decision and forgot on what ground his decision had been made, and at the time of his action³² he declared, ‘I am acting on the strength of my³³ decision;’ in view of the fact that [in such a case] it might be assumed that, since, had he recollected³⁴ he might have retracted, he is like a wilful sinner³⁵ and, therefore, not liable to a sin offering, hence it was taught [that it is not so]. OR MADE IT WILFULLY BUT ACTED UPON IT UNWITTINGLY etc. Whence these words? — For our Rabbis taught: So as to bring guilt upon the people,³⁶ proves³⁷ that the anointed High Priest is like the congregation.³⁸ Could not this be arrived at by deduction?

(1) Lit., ‘From now’, if the priests are designated ‘congregation’.

(2) Lit., ‘thus also’.

(3) Thirteen; while R. Simeon speaks of no more than twelve tribes,

(4) And the same applies to the priests who are descendants of that tribe. Hence the Baraitha, contrary to R. Joseph's arguments, cannot be reconciled with the view of R. Simeon (Rashi). [Tosaf. Asheri: priests nevertheless are considered a ‘people’ in respect of the sacrifice one of the joint owners of which died, so that the Baraitha can be in agreement with R. Simeon.]

Similarly since the second case (the 'exchange') applies only to an individual to the exclusion even of joint partners (v. Tem, 13a), the others too must be similarly restricted, It thus follows that according to R. Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 7a

A congregation, [it might be argued,] is excluded from the law relating to¹ an individual and the anointed High Priest is excluded from the law relating to an individual; as the congregation is only liable [to bring a sin offering] where there was ignorance of the law² together with error in action³ so an anointed High Priest should only be liable where there was ignorance of the law together with error in action! Or it might be argued thus:⁴ A ruler is excluded from the law relating to an individual⁵ and an anointed High Priest is excluded from the law relating to an individual; as a ruler brings a sin offering where there was only error in action without ignorance of the law so an anointed High Priest should bring a sin offering where there was error in action without ignorance of the law! — Let us, then, see whom he more resembles. The congregation brings a bullock but does not bring an asham talui⁶ and an anointed High Priest brings a bullock and does not bring an asham talui;⁷ as the congregation is liable to a sin offering only where there was ignorance of the law together with error in action so an anointed High Priest should be liable only where there was ignorance of the law together with error in action! Or argue thus: A ruler brings a goat for the sin of idolatry⁸ and also brings an asham waddai⁹ and an anointed High Priest brings a goat for idolatry and also an asham waddai; as a ruler brings a sin offering where there was error in action only¹⁰ so the anointed High Priest brings a sin offering where there was error in action only. Hence¹¹ it was definitely stated, So as to bring built upon the people¹² to show that¹³ an anointed High Priest is like the congregation; as the congregation bring a sin offering only where there was ignorance of the law together with error in action so the anointed High Priest brings a sin offering only where there was ignorance of the law together with error in action. Since it might be suggested that as [in the case of] a congregation, [if the court] ruled and the congregation acted in accordance with their decision they are liable, so [in the case of] an anointed High Priest where he ruled and they acted in accordance with his ruling he is also liable, it was, therefore, definitely stated, Then let him offer for his sin, which he hath sinned,¹⁴ [which shows that] he brings a sin offering for his own sin¹⁵ only, and that he does not bring a sin offering for the sins of others.¹⁶ The Master said, 'An anointed High Priest brings a bullock and does not bring an asham talui.' Whence is it deduced that he does not bring an asham talui? — For it is written,¹⁷ And the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning the error which he committed,¹⁸ [which shows that] only he whose sin and error are alike¹⁹ [brings an asham talui], but not²⁰ an anointed High Priest whose error and sin are not alike, for it is written, So as to bring guilt upon the people²¹ which shows²² that an anointed High Priest is like the congregation.²³ Did he not, however, speak at that point²⁴ [on the assumption that]. So as to bring guilt upon the people²¹ had not been written!²⁵ — But [the fact is that the mention of] guilt offering²⁶ is irrelevant²⁷ MISHNAH. IF [THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST] GAVE [AN ERRONEOUS] DECISION ALONE²⁸ AND ACTED [ACCORDINGLY] ALONE, HE MARES HIS ATONEMENT ALONE.²⁹ IF HE GAVE HIS RULING TOGETHER WITH [THE COURT OF] THE CONGREGATION AND ACTED ACCORDINGLY TOGETHER WITH THE CONGREGATION, HE MAKES HIS ATONEMENT TOGETHER WITH THE CONGREGATION.³⁰ THE COURT IS NOT LIABLE³¹ UNLESS THEY RULED TO ANNUL PART OF A COMMANDMENT AND TO RETAIN A PART OF IT; AND SO [IT IS WITH] THE HIGH PRIEST. NOR [ARE THEY LIABLE] FOR IDOLATRY UNLESS THEY RULED TO ANNUL THE LAW IN PART AND TO RETAIN IT IN PART.

GEMARA. Whence are these laws³² derived? — [From that] which our Rabbis taught; It might have been assumed that if he³³ ruled together with [the court of] the congregation and acted together with the congregation he must bring a bullock independently, this being arrived at by the following argument: A ruler is excluded from the law relating to an individual³⁴ and an anointed High Priest is excluded from the law relating to an individual; [if the argument — then, be advanced that] as a ruler, if he committed a sin alone, brings his offering alone and if he committed the sin together with the congregation he makes atonement together with the congregation, so in the case of a High Priest, if he sinned alone he must bring a sin offering alone, and if he sinned together with the congregation he must make his atonement together with the congregation, [it can be retorted] no; if this³⁵ applies to the ruler who makes his atonement together with the congregation on the Day of Atonement, must it also apply to an anointed High Priest who does not make his atonement together with the congregation on the Day of Atonement! Consequently, since his atonement is not made together with the congregation on the Day of Atonement it might have been assumed that he must bring a bullock as a sin offering independently, hence it was expressly stated, For his sin which he hath sinned,³⁶ how [is this to be understood]? If he sinned alone he brings his sin offering alone, and if he sinned together with the congregation he makes his atonement together with the congregation.³⁷ How is this³⁸ to be imagined? It be suggested, that he is a mufla³⁹ and they⁴⁰ are not mufla'in,⁴¹ is it not obvious that he must make his atonement alone since their ruling has no legal force⁴² and every individual⁴³ must bring a lamb or a goat!⁴⁴ And if [it be suggested] that they are mufla'in and he is not a mufla,⁴⁵ why should he make his atonement alone? His ruling, surely, has no legal force!⁴⁶ —

- (1) Lit., 'general rule', that of bringing a sin offering of a lamb or a goat (Lev. IV. 27ff). The congregation brings a bullock (ibid. 23ff).
- (2) On the part of the court.
- (3) On the part of the congregation.
- (4) Lit., 'finish and go to this way'.
- (5) Cf. n. 3. A ruler brings a goat as a sin offering (Lev. IV, 22 ff).
- (6) V. Glos. Such a guilt offering is brought only by an individual when it is doubtful whether he committed a sin. [This cannot apply to a congregation whose offering is limited to a sin through an erroneous decision.]
- (7) When his sin is in doubt, v. infra.

- (19) I.e., an ordinary individual in whose case error in action alone involves him in the obligation of bringing a sin offering as if he was also ignorant of the law.
- (20) Lit., 'he went out', 'excluded'.
- (21) Lev. IV, 3.
- (22) Lit., 'behold'.
- (23) Before obligation to bring a sin offering is incurred by him, both error in action as well as ignorance of the law are necessary'.
- (24) Lit., 'until here'; i.e., iii the argument, supra, where it was attempted to show that the High Priest resembles the congregation.
- (25) Lit., 'he did not say', i.e., if the assumption is that the text had not been written, how can this presumably non-existent text be adduced as proof?
- (26) The asham talui, v. Glos.
- (27) Lit., 'he took it without any purpose,' the resemblance between an anointed High Priest and the congregation being their respective obligations to bring a bullock, and not a goat or a lamb, as a sin offering, being in itself sufficient to compare the High Priest to the Congregation.
- (28) Though the court had at the same time ruled erroneously concerning another prohibition, e.g., he having permitted suet, and they an idolatrous cult,
- (29) He brings the offering of a bullock on his own behalf.
- (30) His atonement is effected by the communal offering.

- (32) Lit., 'words'; the first two laws in our Mishnah relating to an anointed High Priest.
- (33) A High Priest.
- (34) Cf. supra p. 43, n.6.
- (35) Lit., 'you said'. That if he sinned together with the congregation he brings his offering together with them.
- (36) Lev. IV, 3. I.e., he brings an offering alone, only where he alone has sinned.
- (37) Thus the first two laws in our Mishnah have been proved.
- (38) That where a High Priest ruled erroneously alone he must bring his sin offering alone, though the court had at the same time ruled erroneously concerning another prohibition, e.g., he having permitted suet, and they an idolatrous rite. [R. Han. explains the question as referring to where he sinned together with the congregation in which case he makes his atonement together with them.]

(39) V. Glos. Tosaf. Asheri, cf. also Tosaf. Sanh. 16b, s.v. מַטְלָא .]

(40) The court who ruled erroneously concerning a prohibition other than that permitted by the High Priest.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 7b

R. Papa replied; in the case, for instance, where both¹ were mufla'in. Abaye proposed to say that IF [THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST] GAVE [AN ERRONEOUS] DECISION² ALONE AND ACTED [ACCORDINGLY] ALONE, is to be understood³ [as referring to a High Priest and a court] who live⁴ in two different places and ruled respectively concerning two different prohibitions. Raba, however, said to him; Is then diversity of domicile⁵ the determining factor? [Surely not]; but even if they dwell' in the same place. so long as they ruled concerning two different prohibitions, he⁶ is regarded as having sinned alone. It is obvious that if he⁶ [transgressed⁷ in respect of the prohibition] of Suet and they⁸ in respect of idolatry. he [is regarded as] having sinned alone, because these prohibitions are distinct in origin⁹ and distinct in respect of sacrifices, he⁶ bringing a bullock and they⁸ a bullock and a goat.¹⁰ so that they bring, in addition, a goat and he does not bring one; and much more so¹¹ if he transgressed in respect of idolatry and they in respect of suet, since these prohibitions are entirely distinct in respect of their sacrifices, he having to bring a goat¹² and they a bullock; what, however, is the law where he transgressed in respect of the forbidden fat of the entrails and they in respect of the forbidden fat of the small bowels? Is it assumed that, though they are alike in respect of sacrifices, they are nevertheless, being derived from two different Biblical texts, to be regarded as distinct in their origins¹³ or, perhaps, since the designation of 'fat' is the same [in both cases, they are regarded as one]. If some reason could be found for the assumption¹⁴ that [since] the designation of 'fat' is the same [in both cases, they are to be regarded as one], what is the law, [it may be asked], where he⁶ transgressed in respect of suet and they⁸ in respect of blood? Is it assumed [that these are distinct prohibitions since] they are distinct in their origins, or, perhaps, since they are alike in respect of sacrifices, [they are to be regarded as one] the determining factor being the sacrifice?¹⁵ — This remains undecided.¹⁶ THE COURT IS NOT LIABLE UNLESS THEY RULED TO ANNUL PART OF A COMMANDMENT AND TO RETAIN A PART OF IT etc. Whence is it derived that [they are not liable] UNLESS THEY RULED TO ANNUL PART OF A COMMANDMENT AND TO RETAIN A PART OF IT? — As it has been said in the preceding¹⁷ chapter; And a thing be hid,¹⁸ i.e. 'a thing' but not an entire principle.¹⁹ AND SO IT IS WITH THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST. Whence is this deduced? — [From the text] wherein it is written, So as to bring guilt upon the people,²⁰ which shows²¹ that the anointed High Priest is like the congregation. NOR [ARE THEY LIABLE] FOR IDOLATRY etc. Whence is this derived? — [From] what our Rabbis taught: From the fact²² that idolatry was singled out²³ it might have been assumed that only the uprooting of the entire principle involves the bringing of a sacrifice,²⁴ hence it was stated here, from the eyes²⁵ and elsewhere it was stated, from the eyes,²⁶ as elsewhere the court is meant²⁷ so here also the court was meant;²⁷ and as further on only a think²⁸ [was hid]²⁶ but not an entire principle so here also²⁹ a part only, not an entire principle, must have been annulled.

MISHNAH. THE OBLIGATION [UPON THE COURT TO BRING A SACRIFICE]³⁰ IS INCURRED ONLY WHERE IGNORANCE OF THE LAW WAS ACCOMPANIED BY ERROR IN ACTION, AND SO [IT IS WITH THE] ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST; NOR [DO THEY INCUR

OBLIGATION] IN THE CASE OF IDOLATRY UNLESS IGNORANCE OF THE LAW WAS ACCOMPANIED BY ERROR IN ACTION. GEMARA. Whence is this³¹ deduced? — [From] what our Rabbis taught: They err³² might have been assumed to imply obligation for error in action, hence it was stated, They err and a thing be hid,³² indicating that no obligation is incurred unless ignorance of the law was accompanied by error in action. AND SO [IT IS WITH] THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST. Whence is this deduced? — From the Scriptural text, So as to bring guilt upon the people.³³ which shows³⁴ that the anointed High Priest is like the congregation. NOR [DO THEY INCUR OBLIGATION] IN THE CASE OF IDOLATRY UNLESS IGNORANCE OF THE LAW WAS ACCOMPANIED BY ERROR IN ACTION. Whence is this derived? — [From what] our Rabbis taught: In view of the fact that the prohibition of idolatry was singled out it might have been assumed that obligation is incurred even for error in action, hence it was stated here, from the eyes,³⁵ and elsewhere it was stated, from the eyes.³⁶ [to indicate that] as further on no obligation is incurred unless ignorance of the law was accompanied by error in action so here also no obligation is incurred unless ignorance of the law was accompanied by error in action. Since the anointed High Priest was not mentioned³⁷ in connection with idolatry, our Mishnah must represent the view of³⁸ Rabbi. For it was taught: [As to the obligation to bring a sacrifice on the part of] an anointed High Priest in the case of idolatry, Rabbi said, [it depends] on his error in action, and the Sages said, [only if this was accompanied] by ignorance of the law. Both, however, agree³⁹ that the sacrifice he brings is a goat, and both also agree³⁹ that he does not bring an asham talui.⁴⁰ Consider, however, [this point]; Has [the anointed High Priest] been specified³⁷ in connection with [the offence] concerning which the punishment is kareth, if it was committed wilfully, and a Sin offering if committed unwittingly?⁴¹ And yet it must be admitted⁴² that though he was mentioned in the one case⁴³ the same law applies to the other,⁴⁴ so here also⁴⁵ he was mentioned in the first case⁴⁶ and the same law applies to the second. What is Rabbi's reason? — Scripture states, And the priest shall make atonement for the soul that erreth, when he sinneth through error.⁴⁷ The soul, refers to⁴⁸ the anointed High Priest; that erreth, refers to the ruler; when he sinneth through error, implies, according to⁴⁹ Rabbi, 'this shall be deemed a "sin"⁵⁰ even if due to error in action alone⁵¹. But the Rabbis are of the opinion [that the reference is to] him whose sin depends on error in action, the anointed High Priest, however, being excluded, since his 'sin'⁵² does not depend solely on error in action but also on ignorance of the law.⁵³ 'Both, however, agree that the sacrifice he brings is a goat like [that of any other] individuals' Whence is this deduced? — [From that] which Scripture stated, And If one person,⁵⁴ implying that there is no difference between a private individual, a ruler, or an anointed High Priest. Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 8a

'And both also agree that he does not bring an asham talui'. Whence is this deduced? — From the Scriptural text. And the priest shall make atonement for him concerning the error which he committed.¹ Rabbi is of the opinion [that only] he whose 'sin'² depends entirely on error in action³ [brings such a guilt offering]; a High Priest, however,⁴ whose sin⁵ does not [invariably] depend entirely on error in action alone but also on ignorance of the law, is excluded. Is it, then, written 'entirely'?⁵ — [Virtually] Yes; for otherwise⁶ it should have been written, 'Concerning his error'; what need was there for which he committed! Its object, consequently, must be, to teach us that [there is no obligation] unless all one's sin⁷ is dependent on error in action.⁸ And the Rabbis?⁹ — Only he whose sin⁷ depends on error in action alone [is liable]; an anointed High Priest, however, is excluded since his sin⁷ does not depend on error in action alone, either in idolatry or in the other commandments, but on ignorance of the law together with error in action.

MISHNAH. THE COURT IS UNDER NO OBLIGATION¹⁰ UNLESS THEY RULED CONCERNING A PROHIBITION¹¹ THE PUNISHMENT FOR WHICH IS KARETH,¹² IF IT WAS TRANSGRESSED WILFULLY, AND A SIN OFFERING IF TRANSGRESSED UNWITTINGLY; AND SO [IT IS WITH] THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST. NOR [ARE THEY LIABLE] IN RESPECT OF IDOLATRY UNLESS THEY RULED CONCERNING A MATTER THE PUNISHMENT FOR WHICH IS KARETH, IF IT WAS COMMITTED WILFULLY, AND A SIN OFFERING IF COMMITTED UNWITTINGLY.

GEMARA. Whence is this deduced? — From the following.¹³ Rabbi said: Here¹⁴ it is stated ‘aleha,¹⁵ and further on¹⁶ it is stated ‘aleha;¹⁷ as further on¹⁶ the prohibition involves the penalty of kareth,¹⁸ if it was transgressed wilfully, and that of a sin offering if transgressed unwittingly, so¹⁴ here also, [the ruling must be concerning] a prohibition which involves the penalty of kareth, if it was transgressed wilfully and that of a sin offering if transgressed unwittingly. Proof has thus been found for the case of the congregation, whence that of the anointed High Priest? — So as to bring guilt upon the people¹⁹ shows²⁰ that the anointed High Priest is like the congregation. As to a ruler? — The inference is made by a comparison of ‘commandments’;²¹ with ‘commandments’ in respect to a ruler it is written, And doeth [through error] any one of all the commandments which the Lord,²² and in respect of the congregation it is written, And do any of the commandments,²³ as the [obligation of the] congregation relates to a prohibition involving kareth, if it was transgressed wilfully, and a sin offering if transgressed unwittingly, so also the obligation of a ruler relates to a prohibition involving kareth, if it was transgressed wilfully, and a sin offering if transgressed unwittingly. As to an ordinary individual? — Scripture states, And if any one,²⁴ and the latter is inferred from the former.²⁵ NOR [ARE THEY LIABLE] IN RESPECT OF IDOLATRY UNLESS THEY RULED etc. Whence [is this law deduced] in regard to idolatry? — [From] what our Rabbis taught: From the fact that idolatry was singled out²⁶ it might have been assumed that, [in regard to it] obligation is incurred even in respect of a prohibition which does not involve kareth when it was transgressed wilfully and a sin offering when transgressed unwittingly,²⁷ hence it was stated here, From the eyes²⁸ and elsewhere it was stated, From the eyes.²⁹ as there obligation is incurred only in respect of a prohibition involving kareth when it was transgressed wilfully and a sin offering when transgressed unwittingly, so here also obligation is incurred only in respect of a prohibition involving kareth when it was transgressed wilfully and a sin offering when transgressed unwittingly. Proof has thus been found for the case of the congregation. whence that of an ordinary individual, a ruler or an anointed High Priest? — Scripture stated, And if one person.³⁰ [which implies that] there is no distinction between a private individual, a ruler, or an anointed High Priest. All of them, are included in the general expression of one person, and the latter may be deduced from the former.³¹ [This explanation] is satisfactory in accordance with the view of him who employed³² the expression of ‘aleha for an analogical purpose, as stated above; whence, however, do the Rabbis, who employed ‘aleha in connection with the laws of incest and rival wives,³³ deduce that obligation is incurred only where the prohibition involves kareth when it was transgressed wilfully, and a sin offering when transgressed unwittingly? — They deduce it from that which R. Joshua b. Levi taught his son: Ye shall have one law for him that doeth aught in error. But the soul that doeth aught with a high hand etc.,³⁴ all the commandments of the Torah were compared to the prohibition of idolatry;³⁵ as in regard to idolatry obligation is incurred only where the offence involves the punishment of kareth when it was committed wilfully, and a sin offering when committed unwittingly, so also here obligation is incurred only where the offence involves kareth when committed wilfully and a sin offering when committed unwittingly. Proof has thus been found³⁶ for the case of a private individual, a ruler and an anointed High Priest both in regard to idolatry and the rest of the commandments; whence, however, [is it proved that the same applies to the] congregation? The former³⁷ is deduced from the latter.³⁸ As to Rabbi,³⁹ what does he do with R. Joshua b. Levi's text? He applies it to the following:⁴⁰ Since we find that Scripture made a distinction⁴¹ between a majority and individuals, a majority being punished by the sword and their money destroyed⁴² while individuals are punished by stoning and their money is spared.⁴³ it might have been assumed that a distinction should also be made in respect of their sacrifices,⁴⁴ hence⁴⁵ it was expressly stated, Ye shall have one law etc.⁴⁶ R. Hilkiyah of Hagronia⁴⁷ demurred: is the reason⁴⁸ because Scripture did not differentiate in this respect, but had it differentiated it would have been suggested that a distinction should be made [in respect of their sacrifices]? What, however, could they⁴⁹ bring! Should they bring a bullock? The congregation, surely, brings a bullock for the infringement of any of the other commandments!⁵⁰ Should they bring a bullock for a burnt offering and a goat for a sin offering? The congregation, surely, brings such offerings in respect of idolatry!⁵¹ Should they bring a goat? A ruler, surely, brings such an offering in the case of his transgression of any of the other commandments!⁵¹ Should they bring a goat? This, Surely, is also the sacrifice of an individual!⁵¹ — It⁵² is required; because it might have been suggested that whereas the congregation brings a bullock for a burnt offering and a goat for a sin offering, these⁵³ should reverse the procedure and bring a bullock for a sin offering and a goat for a burnt offering. Or [the meaning⁵⁴ may be]; It might have been assumed to be necessary⁵⁵ and that consequently there is no remedy for them,⁵⁶ hence it was taught [that there was no such necessity].⁵⁵ All,⁵⁷ at any rate, agree that if these verses were written [for any purpose at all] they were written for that of idolatry; but what is the proof? Raba, (others say R. Joshua b. Levi, and again others say, Kadi), replied: Scripture says; And when ye shall err, and not observe all these commandments.⁵⁸ Now, which is the commandment that is as weighty as all other commandments? Surely⁵⁹ it is that concerning idolatry. The School of Rabbi⁶⁰ taught; Scripture Says, Which the Lord hath spoken unto Moses,⁶¹ and it is also written That the Lord hath commanded you by the hand of Moses.⁶² Now, which is the commandment that was given in the words of the Holy One, blessed be He, and also by the hand of Moses? Surely⁶³ it is that of idolatry; for R. Ishmael recited; [The words] I⁶⁴ and Thou shalt not have⁶⁵ were heard⁶⁶ from the mouth of Omnipotence.⁶⁷ The School of R. Ishmael taught:

From the day that the Lord gave commandments, and onward throughout your generations;¹ which is the commandment that was spoken at the very beginning?² Surely³ it is that of idolatry.⁴ But did not a Master state that Israel was given ten commandments at Marah!⁵ — But⁶ the best proof is that given at first.⁷

MISHNAH. [THE COURT] ARE UNDER NO OBLIGATION [TO BRING A SIN OFFERING] FOR THE TRANSGRESSION⁸ OF A POSITIVE OR A NEGATIVE COMMANDMENT RELATING TO THE SANCTUARY; NOR [DOES ANYONE]⁹ BRING AN ASHMTALUI¹⁰ FOR THE TRANSGRESSION OF A POSITIVE OR A NEGATIVE COMMANDMENT RELATING TO THE SANCTUARY. THEY¹¹ ARE LIABLE, HOWEVER,¹² FOR THE TRANSGRESSION¹³ OF A POSITIVE, OR A NEGATIVE COMMANDMENT RELATING TO THE MENSTRUANT; AND [ANY OTHER INDIVIDUALS] BRING AN ASHAM TALUI FOR THE TRANSGRESSION OF A POSITIVE OR NEGATIVE COMMANDMENT RELATING TO THE MENSTRUANT. WHICH IS THE POSITIVE COMMANDMENT CONCERNING THE MENSTRUANT? [THE COMMANDMENT]. SEPARATE THYSELF FROM THE MENSTRUANT.¹⁴ AND THE NEGATIVE COMMANDMENT? — DO NOT COME IN UNTO THE MENSTRUANT.¹⁵

GEMARA. Whence is it deduced¹⁶ that elsewhere¹⁷ the congregation is not liable to bring a sacrifice and that an individual also is not liable to bring an asham talui?¹⁸ — R. Isaac b. Abdimi replied: Scripture said, And he is guilty in connection with a sin offering¹⁹ and an asham talui,²⁰ and it also said, And they are guilty in connection with the congregation;²¹ as [the phrase] ‘and he is guilty’ in connection with an individual refers to the fixed sin offering²² So And are guilty, said in connection with the congregation, also refers to the fixed sin offering, and, furthermore, as the congregation brings only the fixed sin offering, so is the asham talui²³ brought only in the case of doubt in respect of one's liability to the fixed sin offering.²⁴ If so, the same law should also apply to a sliding scale sacrifice²⁵, for Surely it is written, And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things?²⁶ — Deduction may be made from the analogy between ‘is guilty’ and ‘are guilty’, but no deduction may be made from an analogy between ‘is guilty’ and ‘he shall be guilty’. But what is the difference? The School of R. Ishmael taught. [with reference to the expressions.] The priest shall return²⁷ and The priest shall come²⁸ that ‘returning’ and ‘coming’ mean the same thing!²⁹ Furthermore, let deduction be made from And he is guilty, said in connection with uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things; for it is written, And [it being hidden from him that] he is unclean and he is guilty!³⁰ — R. Papa replied: An analogy is drawn only between the expressions. And he is guilty, and, The commandments of the Lord [on the one hand],³¹ and the expressions. And are guilty, and, The commandments of the Lord³² [on the other].³³ Said R. Shimi b. Ashi to R. Papa; Then let deduction be made from the analogy between, ‘And he is guilty, and, Bearing of iniquity³⁴ [used in reference to the asham talui] and he is guilty, and, Bearing of iniquity³⁵ [that occur in connection with sliding scale sacrifices]! — But, said R. Nahman b. Isaac: Deduction is made from analogy between ‘he is guilty’, and The things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done³⁶ [used in reference to asham talui] and ‘they are guilty’ and ‘The things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done³⁷ [that’ occur in connection with the congregational sin offering];³⁸ no proof, however, may be adduced from, The hearing of the voice,³⁹ Swearing clearly with the lips,⁴⁰ and uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things,⁴¹ concerning ‘which it has not been said, ‘he is guilty’ and ‘The things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done’.

MISHNAH. [THE COURT] ARE UNDER NO OBLIGATION [TO BRING AN OFFERING] FOR [AN ERRONEOUS RULING RELATING TO] THE HEARING OF THE VOICE [OF

ADJURATION].⁴² FOR SWEARING CLEARLY WITH THE LIPS⁴³ AND FOR UNCLEANNESS RELATING TO THE SANCTUARY AND ITS CONSECRATED THINGS;⁴⁴ AND THE RULER IS SIMILARLY [EXEMPT]; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JOSE THE GALILEAN. R. AKIBA SAID; THE RULER IS LIABLE⁴⁵ IN THE CASE OF ALL THESE EXCEPT THAT OF HEARING OF THE VOICE [OF ADJURATION], BECAUSE THE KING⁴⁶ MAY NEITHER JUDGE NOR BE JUDGED, NEITHER MAY HE GIVE EVIDENCE NOR MAY EVIDENCE BE TENDERED AGAINST HIM.⁴⁷ GEMARA. ‘Ulla said: What is the reason of R. Jose the Galilean? — Scripture said, And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things;⁴⁸ whoever is subject to liability for every one of these is liable for any of them, and whosoever is not subject to liability for every one of these is not liable for any of them.⁴⁹ Might not this⁵⁰ be suggested to imply that liability is incurred for one⁵¹ even where a person is not subject to liability for all!⁵² — But the following is the source from which⁵³ R. Jose the Galilean derives his reason. It was taught: R. Jeremiah⁵⁴ used to say, it was stated in the Scriptures,

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 9a

His means suffice not¹ and later it was stated again. His means suffice not² [to indicate that] only he who is subject to the vicissitudes of³ poverty and wealth [is subject to the laws mentioned], a ruler and an anointed High Priest, however, are excluded since they can never be reduced to poverty. As to 'a ruler', — it is written, And doeth any one of all the things which the Lord his God hath commanded,⁴ [implying], he above whom there is none but the Lord his God;⁵ as to 'an anointed High Priest', — It is written, And the priest that is highest among his brethren,⁶ [meaning,] who is greatest among his brethren in beauty, strength, wisdom and wealth. Others say: Whence is it proved that if he has nothing of his own he must be made to be greater than his brethren? For it was expressly stated, And the priest that is highest among his brethren upon whose head [the anointing oil] is poured,⁶ he must be made greater than his brethren. Rabina enquired of R. Nahman b. Isaac: What is the law of a ruler who was stricken with leprosy;⁷ [was his obligation] completely set aside,⁸ or was he only temporarily exempted?⁹ — He said to him: [Does he bring] of yours or of his own!¹⁰ It was taught: R. Akiba said: An anointed High Priest is exempt from all these.¹¹ Raba said: What is R. Akiba's reason? — Scripture stated, This is the offering of Aaron and his sons,¹² [implying] that only this [one] is obligatory upon him but no other such offering¹³ is obligatory upon him. Might it not be suggested that the All Merciful has exempted him only from the poorest offering which is¹⁴ a tenth part of an ephah¹⁵ but not¹⁶ [from those other offerings that are brought in case of] poverty and wealth!¹⁷ — his cannot be imagined at all, for it is written, And the priest shall make atonement for him as touching his sin that he hath sinned in any of these things,¹⁸ whoever may receive atonement by everyone of these¹⁹ may also receive atonement by any of the others,²⁰ but whosoever may not obtain atonement by every one of these may not obtain atonement by any of the others. Now, however,²¹ since it is written, And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things,²² is the meaning there also that whosoever is liable for everyone of these can also become liable for any of the others and whosoever is not liable for everyone of these cannot become liable for the others! Why then have we learned that R. Akiba said: A ruler is liable for all except for hearing of the voice? — Both Abaye and Raba replied: [The expression] in any²³ is regarded by him as proof but that of in one²⁴ is not regarded by him as proof. But why is 'in any' regarded as proof? — Because the All Merciful has written in at the end in connection with the law of the tenth part of an ephah; thus indicating that whosoever is liable to bring the tenth part of an ephah can also come under the obligation to bring any of the others. For could it have been imagined that a person may be liable for one of these offerings [alone] although he cannot become liable for any of the others, in any of these things²⁵ should have been written either in connection with the offering to the poor²⁶ or with that for the rich!²⁷

MISHNAH. [FOR THE UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION OF ANY OF] ALL THE COMMANDMENTS IN THE TORAH THE PENALTY FOR WHICH, IF COMMITTED WILFULLY, IS KARETH AND, IF COMMITTED UNWITTINGLY, A SIN OFFERING, THE INDIVIDUAL BRINGS AS AN OFFERING A LAMB OR A GOAT;²⁸ THE RULER BRINGS A GOAT;²⁹ AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST AND THE COURT BRING A BULLOCK.³⁰ IN THE CASE OF IDOLATRY, THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE RULER AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST BRING A GOAT³¹ WHILE THE COURT BRING A BULLOCK AND A GOAT, THE BULLOCK FOR A BURNT OFFERING AND THE GOAT FOR A SIN OFFERING.³² THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE RULER ARE BOTH SUBJECT TO THE OBLIGATION OF AN ASHAM TALUI,³³ BUT THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST AND THE COURT ARE EXEMPT. THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE RULER AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST ARE SUBJECT TO THE OBLIGATION OF AN ASHAM WADDAI,³⁴ BUT THE COURT IS EXEMPT. [FOR UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION] IN RESPECT OF THE HEARING OF THE VOICE [OF ADJURATION],³⁵ FOR SWEARING CLEARLY WITH THE LIPS³⁶ AND FOR UNCLEANNESS RELATING TO THE SANCTUARY AND ITS CONSECRATED THINGS, THE COURT IS EXEMPT AND THE INDIVIDUAL, THE RULER³⁷ AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST ARE LIABLE, WITH THIS EXCEPTION,³⁸ THAT THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST IS NOT LIABLE FOR A TRANSGRESSION RELATING TO THE UNCLEANNESS OF THE SANCTUARY AND ITS CONSECRATED THINGS; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. SIMEON. WHAT DO THEY³⁹ BRING? A SLIDING SCALE SACRIFICE. R. ELIEZER SAID: THE RULER BRINGS A GOAT.⁴⁰

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Simeon laid down the following rule; Wherever the individual is liable to an asham talui⁴¹ the ruler is subject to the same obligation, while an anointed High Priest and the court are exempt; and wherever the individual is liable to an asham waddai⁴¹ a ruler and an anointed High Priest are subject to the same obligation while the court is exempt. In respect of hearing of the voice, swearing clearly with the lips, and the uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things, the court is exempt while a ruler and an anointed High Priest are liable, except that the ruler is not liable in respect of hearing of the voice nor the anointed High Priest in respect of uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things. Wherever an individual is liable to a sliding scale sacrifice, the ruler is subject to the same obligation while the anointed High Priest and the court are exempt. Is not this teaching self-contradictory? First it is stated that an anointed High Priest is not liable in respect of uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things. [from which it follows that] he is exempt only in respect of uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things but that in respect of hearing of the voice and swearing clearly with the lips he is liable; now read the final clause; 'Wherever an individual is liable to a sliding scale sacrifice, the ruler is subject to the same obligation while an anointed High Priest and the court are exempt;' since the exemptions of the High Priest and that of the court were mentioned together⁴² [it follows that] as the court is exempt from all these⁴³ so is the anointed High Priest exempt from all these.

- (5) I.e., he must be supreme in all things including wealth.
- (6) Lev. XXI, 10.
- (7) And was in consequence deposed from office.
- (8) Hence he is never liable to such an offering.
- (9) While he held office. Hence he must bring the offering now.
- (10) Lit., 'treasure'. As he would obviously have to bring the offering out of his own funds there can be no difference between his being in, or out of office. His wealth, which is the cause of his exemption, has not been lost or diminished by his deposition. There is, therefore, no need for him to bring an offering even after his deposition.
- (11) As regards the bringing of a sliding scale sacrifice.
- (12) Lev. VI, 13. with reference to the special priestly offering of a tenth part of an ephah.

Akiba maintain that a High Priest is exempt from these offerings if his transgression related to any of those enumerated in our Mishnah.
- (18) Lev. V. 13.

- (27) A lamb or a goat (ibid. v. 6). Since, however, it was written in connection with the tenth part of an ephah (the poorest of the offerings) it must have been intended for the purpose of indicating that whosoever is exempt from that offering is also exempt from the rest. An anointed High Priest being exempt from that offering by deduction from Lev. VI, 23 (v. supra), is also exempt from all the others.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 9b

Are not, then, these two statements contradictory! — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: There is really no contradiction, one statement referring¹ to the poor² and the other¹ to the poorest;³ and R. Simeon is of the same opinion as R. Akiba in respect of the one, and disagrees with him in respect of the other. He is of the same opinion as R. Akiba that in respect of the poorest offering the High Priest is exempt,⁴ and disagrees with him in respect of the poor.⁵ WITH THIS EXCEPTION, THAT THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST IS NOT LIABLE etc. Hezekiah said; What is A. Simeon's reason?⁶ — Because it is written,⁷ That soul shall be cut off from the midst of the assembly⁸ [which implies that] only he whose offering is like that of the 'assembly' [is liable];⁹ he,¹⁰ however, since his offering is not like that of the 'assembly',¹¹ is excluded. If so, [it may be asked, the offering of] a ruler also is not like that of the 'assembly'!¹² — It is like [that of the 'assembly'] in the atonement of the Day of Atonement. If so, [it may again be asked.] the priests also are not like the 'assembly' in the atonement of the Day of Atonement!¹³ — Priests are like the 'assembly' in respect of the other commandments throughout the year. But the anointed High Priest also is like [the 'assembly'] in respect of the other commandments of the year! — But. said Raba. say thus: He whose sin is like that of individuals; and who are they? The 'assembly'.¹⁴ R. ELIEZER SAID; THE RULER BRINGS A GOAT etc. Said R. Johanan; R. Eliezer referred only to the uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things¹⁵ because the punishment of kareth was mentioned concerning it as in the case of the fixed sin offering.¹⁶ R. Papa said; Logical argument leads to the same conclusion. For if it be imagined that R. Eliezer referred to all of them.) consider this; Since the goat of a ruler or the bullock of an anointed High Priest corresponds to the sin offering of an individual it should also have been stated that an anointed High Priest brings a bullock in respect of a transgression relating to the 'hearing of the voice' and the 'swearing clearly with the lips'! As, however, the anointed High Priest was not mentioned, it must be concluded that the reference is only to the uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things from which the anointed High Priest is exempt.¹⁷ R. Huna son of R. Nathan said to R. Papa: How is this inferred? Is it not possible that R. Eliezer refers to all of them,¹⁸ but in the case of an anointed High Priest he holds the same opinion as R. Akiba who maintains that the anointed High Priest is exempt in the case of all of them?¹⁹ — He replied to him; And does R. Akiba exempt him from the bringing of the bullock!²⁰ And there is nothing more [to be said on the subject]. R. Johanan said; R. Eliezer admits that he²¹ does not bring a guilt offering.²² A tanna recited before R. Shesheth: An asham talui²³ is offered for [the unwitting transgression of the law of] uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things. He said to him: Who could have told you this? Obviously R. Eliezer who²⁴ said: Because kareth was mentioned in connection with it, as in the case of a fixed sin offering, a goat must be offered by the ruler for it;²⁵ but R. Johanan Surely said that R. Eliezer admitted that he²¹ does not bring an asham talui! — This is a difficulty.

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. IF AN ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST COMMITTED A SIN AND SUBSEQUENTLY RELINQUISHED²⁶ HIS HIGH PRIESTHOOD,²⁷ AND SIMILARLY IF A RULER COMMITTED A SIN AND SUBSEQUENTLY LOST²⁶ HIS RANK,²⁸ THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST BRINGS²⁹ A BULLOCK, AND THE RULER BRINGS A GOAT. IF THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST RELINQUISHED²⁶ HIS HIGH PRIESTHOOD²⁷ AND COMMITTED A SIN AFTERWARDS, AND, SIMILARLY, IF A RULER LOST²⁶ HIS RANK AND COMMITTED A SIN AFTERWARDS, THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST STILL BRINGS A BULLOCK WHILE THE RULER [BRINGS THE SAME SIN OFFERING] AS A LAYMAN.

GEMARA. Now that it had to be stated [that if a High Priest] relinquished his High Priesthood

- (2) In the case of an offering brought by a poor man (turtledoves or pigeons) the High Priest is liable in respect of 'Hearing of the voice' and 'Swearing with the lips'.
- (3) In which case the High Priest is exempt, as deduced supra 9a.
- (4) As deduced from who is the offering', supra p. 60.
- (5) Though R. Akiba exempts the High Priest in this case also R. Simeon does not, as he does not accept the argument based on the text, 'And the priest shall . . . in any,' loc. cit.
- (6) I.e., why does he exempt a High Priest from transgressions relating to uncleanness of the Sanctuary and its consecrated things
- (7) In connection with such transgressions. (V. previous site.)
- (8) 'Assembly' — congregations'. Num. XIX, 20.
- (9) V. p. 63, n. 9.
- (10) Lit., 'this', the High Priest.
- (11) On the Day of Atonement his offering is a bullock and that of the congregation is a goat.
- (12) For a transgressions committed during the year a ruler brings a goat while the congregation brings a bullock. Why, then, was only a High Priest, and not also a ruler excluded?
- (13) The offering of the priests is the same as that of the High Priest. Since they, like him, differ from the congregation they also should be exempt like him from the same offering (v. p. 63. n. S).
- (14) If individuals, or a congregation, committed a sin through 'error in action', where there was no 'ignorance of the law', every one of them must bring a sin offering. A High Priest, however, is not liable to bring an offering unless his error in action was also accompanied by ignorance of the law.
- (15) Only in that case does a ruler bring an offering of a goat instead of a sliding scale sacrifice.
- (16) Which is brought by individuals only for offenses involving the penalty of kareth, if committed wittingly; and as in the case of a fixed sin offering, the offering for this offence of uncleanness to be brought by the ruler must be that of a goat. In respect, however, of transgressions relating to 'hearing of the voice' and 'swearing with the lips' which are not subject to the penalty of kareth if committed wilfully. the offering of a ruler, in the case of error, is not a goat but the same as that of a private individual — a sliding scale sacrifice. (9) I.e., that a ruler brings an offering of a goat for 'hearing of the voice', 'swearing', and uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things.
- (17) As suited by R. Simeon in the Mishnah.
- (18) V. p. 64, n. 9.
- (19) Cf supra p. 60. And he consequently could not have mentioned the High Priest.
- (20) He only exempts him from a sliding scale sacrifice. Had R. Eliezer therefore been referring to all the other offenses, he should have mentioned the High Priest as well as the ruler. [There is no warrant for the assumption that R. Akiba would not exempt the High Priest from bringing a bullock. On the other hand if R. Papa's statement was a mere suggestion, it would be devastating for his claim that logical reasoning is in support of R. Johanan. The words 'He replied . . . bullock' are accordingly suspect, especially as they do not occur in MS.M., v. Tosaf. Asheri.]
- (21) The ruler.
- (22) MS.M. reads asham talui. I.e., he agrees with the Mishnah supra p. 56. without differentiating between a ruler and an ordinary individual.
- (23) V. Glos.
- (24) In giving the reason why a ruler brings a goat for all offence of uncleanness relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things.
- (25) And from this the liability to an asham talui is obviously deduced.
- (26) Lit., 'he passed'.

- (29) As a sin offering.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 10a

and committed a sin afterwards he still must bring a bullock, was it also necessary to state [that he brings a bullock] where he sinned first and relinquished his high priesthood afterwards? — Since it was stated¹ in respect of a ruler that if he lost his rank and committed a sin afterwards he brings [the same sin offering] as a layman it stated in respect of an anointed High Priest that if he committed a sin and afterwards relinquished [his high priesthood] he brings a bullock.² Whence are these laws derived? — [From] that which our Rabbis taught: Then let him offer for his sin³ teaches that he⁴ brings his sin offering even [if he sinned] after he relinquished office. For it might have been argued,⁵ if a ruler who brings a sin offering in case of error in action alone does not bring his sin offering⁶ after he lost his rank how much less an anointed High Priest who does not bring his sin offering in case of error in action alone but only where error in action was accompanied by ignorance of the law; hence Scripture expressly stated, ‘Then let him offer for his sin,’⁷ which teaches that he brings [the same offering] for his sin even [if he sinned] after he relinquished his office. [And in case it be argued:] Let, then [the law that] a ruler also⁸ brings [the same sin offering]⁹ be deduced by an inference from major to minor:¹⁰ If an anointed High Priest who does not bring a sin offering for error in action alone brings nevertheless [the same] sin offering¹¹ [even if he sinned] after relinquishing office, how much more should a ruler who brings a sin offering for error in action alone, bring the same sin offering¹² [even if he sinned] after losing his rank; Scripture expressly stated, When a ruler sinneth,¹³ only when he is ‘a ruler’¹⁴ but not when he is a layman.

MISHNAH. IF THEY¹⁵ COMMITTED A SIN BEFORE THEY WERE APPOINTED, AND WERE SUBSEQUENTLY APPOINTED, THEY ARE REGARDED¹⁶ AS LAYMEN. R. SIMEON SAID: IF THEIR SIN CAME TO THEIR KNOWLEDGE BEFORE THEY WERE APPOINTED THEY ARE LIABLE, BUT IF AFTER THEY WERE APPOINTED THEY ARE EXEMPT. WHO IS MEANT BY RULER? A KING; FOR IT IS STATED IN THE SCRIPTURES, ANY OF ALL THE THINGS WHICH THE LORD HIS GOD HATH COMMANDED,¹⁷ HE ABOVE WHOM THERE IS NONE BUT THE LORD HIS GOD. GEMARA. Whence are these laws derived? — [From] that which our Rabbis taught: If the anointed priest shall sin,¹⁸ excludes sins committed previously.¹⁹ Could not this law, however, be arrived at by logical reasoning: If a ruler who brings a sin offering for error in action alone does not bring one for sins committed previously,²⁰ how much less should a High Priest, who brings a sin offering only where error in action was accompanied by ignorance of the law, bring one for sins committed previously! But no; if this²¹ is said to apply to a ruler who indeed does not bring his sin offering after he lost his rank, could it be said to apply also to an anointed High priest who does bring his sin offering even after he relinquished office?²² Since he brings his sin offering even after relinquishing office it might have been assumed that he brings also for sins committed previously,¹⁹ hence Scripture stated, ‘The anointed priest shall sin’¹⁸ [which teaches that] if he sinned while he was already anointed High Priest he brings [the prescribed sin offering], if, however, when he was still one of the common people he does not bring it. A similar discussion also took place²³ in respect of a ruler: When in ruler sinneth²⁴ excludes sins he committed previously.¹⁹ Could not this law, however, be arrived at by logical reasoning: If an anointed High Priest who brings his sin offering even [if he sinned] after he relinquished office does not, nevertheless, bring one for sins he committed previously,¹⁹ how much less should a ruler who does not bring his sin offering²⁵ [if he sinned] after he lost his rank, bring one for sins he committed previously. The anointed High Priest [it may, however, be retorted] may well be exempt from bringing²⁶ because he is also exempt [where his sin consisted] of error in action alone, could it be said, however, [that the same law should apply] to a ruler who does bring one [where his sin consisted] of error in action alone? Now, since he brings ‘for error in action alone it might be assumed that he brings also for sins he committed previously,²⁷ hence Scripture stated, ‘When a ruler sinneth,’²⁸ only if he sinned when he was already ruler,²⁹ but not if he sinned while he was still a layman. Our Rabbis taught: When³⁰ a ruler sinneth³¹ might have been taken to imply a decree, hence Scripture stated, If the anointed priest shall sin;³² as there the meaning is ‘if and when³³ he sinneth’ so here also the meaning is ‘if and when he sinneth’. The Master said, ‘[It] might have been taken to imply a decree’; but could one possibly imagine such a thing!³⁴ — Yes, it may be answered, for we find that it is written in the Scripture, And I shall put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession,³⁵ which is an announcement to them that they will be visited by plagues; these are the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon said: [This text] excludes³⁶ plagues due to supernatural causes.³⁷

Now, as³⁸ R. Judah declared [that the Scriptural text is] an announcement, so here also it might have been assumed that the text implies a decree, hence 'if' had to be written.³⁹ According to R. Simeon, however, do not plagues that are due to supernatural causes impart Levitical uncleanness? Surely it was taught, When a man shall have,⁴⁰ implies 'from the time of the promulgation onwards'.⁴¹ May not this, however, be arrived at by logical deduction? Uncleanness [is mentioned in connection] with one who has an issue,⁴² and uncleanness [is mentioned in respect] of plagues; as in the case of a man who has an issue, [the laws of uncleanness are applicable only] from the time of their promulgation onwards,⁴³ so in the case of plagues [their laws of uncleanness are applicable only] from the time of their promulgation onwards! No; if [this restriction] is applicable to a man who has an issue, because he does not become unclean where it was due to accident, could it also be said to apply to plagues which do impart uncleanness even where they were due to supernatural causes.⁴⁴ Hence Scripture stated, 'When a man shall have'⁴⁵ which implies, 'from the time of the promulgation onwards'!⁴⁶ — Raba replied: The exclusion⁴⁷ refers to plagues that are due to ghosts,⁴⁸ R. Papa replied: The exclusion refers to plagues that are due to witchcraft.⁴⁸ Our Rabbis taught: When in ruler sinneth⁴⁹ excludes a sick man. Should he, because he is, sick, be removed from his rank? — R. Abdimi b. Hama replied: The exclusion refers to a ruler who became leprous; as it is said, And the Lord smote the king, so that he was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in the house of freedom,⁵⁰ and Jotham the king's son wins over the household.⁵¹ Since it is stated, In the house of freedom⁵⁰ it must be inferred that until then he was a servant;⁵² as is illustrated in the case⁵³ of R. Gamaliel⁵⁴ and R. Joshua.⁵⁵ They once traveled on board a ship. R. Gamaliel had with him some bread only, while R. Joshua had with him bread and flour. When R. Gamaliel's bread was consumed he depended on R. Joshua's flour. 'Did you know', the former asked him, 'that we should be so much delayed that you brought flour with you?' The latter answered him, 'A certain star rises once in seventy years and leads the sailors⁵⁶ astray, and I suspected it might rise and lead us astray.' 'You possess so much knowledge', the former said to him, 'and yet must travel on board a ship!'⁵⁷ The other replied, 'Rather than be surprised at me, marvel at two disciples you have on land, R. Eleazar Hisma and R. Johanan b. Gudgada,⁵⁸ who are able to calculate how many drops there are in the sea, and yet have neither bread to eat nor raiment to put on. He decided to appoint them as supervisors,⁵⁹ and when he landed⁶⁰ he sent for them, but they did not come.⁶¹ He sent for them a second time and when they came he said to them, 'Do you imagine that I offer you rulership?

It is servitude that I offer you; as it is said, And they spoke to him saying: If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day.¹ Our Rabbis taught: When a ruler sinneth;² R. Johanan b. Zakkai said: Happy³ is the generation whose ruler brings a sacrifice for a sin he has committed unwillingly. If its ruler brings a sacrifice, is there any need to say what one of the common people would do; and if he brings a sacrifice for a sin he has committed unwillingly, is there any need to say what he would do in case of a sin committed wilfully? Raba son of Rabbah demurred: Now, then, it is written, And he shall make restitution for that which⁴ he hath done amiss in the holy thing,⁵ and concerning Jeroboam the son of Nebat it is written, Which⁴ he hath sinned, and wherewith⁶ she hath made [Israel] to sin,⁷ could the meaning there⁸ also be, 'happy is that generation'? — Here the case is different, because Scripture deliberately changed the expression.⁹ R. Nahman b. Hisda made the following exposition: What is meant by the Scriptural text: There is a vanity which is done upon the earth: [That⁴ there are righteous men, unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again there are wicked men to whom it happeneth] etc?¹⁰ Happy¹¹ are the righteous men unto whom it happeneth in this world according to the work of the wicked in the world to come;¹² woe¹³ to the wicked men to whom it happeneth in this world according to the work of the righteous in the world to come.¹⁴ Said Raba: Would the righteous, then, if they enjoyed both worlds find it so distasteful? — But, said Raba, happy¹¹ are the righteous men unto whom it happeneth in this world according to the work of the wicked in this world;¹⁴ woe¹³ to the wicked men unto whom it happeneth in this world according to the work of the righteous in this world.¹² R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua once came before Raba. 'Have you', he asked them, 'mastered¹⁵ this or that tractate?' 'Yes', they replied. 'Are you', he asked, 'a little better off?'¹⁶ 'Yes', they replied, 'for we have bought some¹⁷ land.' He, thereupon, exclaimed:¹⁸ Happy are the righteous unto whom it happeneth in this world according to the work of the wicked in this world. Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: What is meant by the Scriptural text, For the ways of the Lord are right, and the just do walk in them; but transgressors do stumble therein?¹⁹ This may be applied²⁰ to two men both of whom roasted their paschal lambs, and one of them ate his with the intention of performing the commandment, while the other ate his merely to enjoy a substantial meal.²¹ To him who ate with the intention of performing the commandment [applies], The just do walk in them,²² while to him who ate merely to enjoy a substantial meal [applies], But transgressors do stumble therein.²² Said Resh Lakish to him: Do you call him 'wicked'? Granted he has not performed the commandment to perfection, has he not, however, eaten of the paschal lamb? But it²² may be applied²³ to two men, one of whom had his wife and his sister with him at home and the other also had his wife and sister with him at home. One happened to come in contact with his wife while the other happened to come in contact with his sister. To him who happened to come in contact with his wife [applies] The just do walk in them,²² while to him who happened to come in contact with his sister [applies], But transgressors do stumble therein.²² What a comparison! We spoke of one way;²⁴ but here, is it not a case of two ways?²⁵ But it²² may be applied²³ to Lot and his two daughters. To them, whose intention was the performance of a commandment [applies], The just do walk in them,²² but to him, since his intention was to commit a sin [applies], But transgressors do stumble therein.²² Is it not possible that he also intended to perform a commandment? R. Johanan replied: This entire verse shows that his intention was transgression: And Lot lifted up²⁶ [is analogous to], His Master's wife lifted up her eyes;²⁷ His eyes²⁶ [is analogous to] Samson said. . . . 'Get her for me, for she is pleasing in my eyes;²⁸ And beheld²⁶ [is analogous to], Shechem the son of Hamor beheld her;²⁹ All the plain³⁰ of the Jordan²⁶ [is analogous to], For on account of a harlot in man is brought to a loaf³⁰ of bread;³¹ That it was well watered²⁶ [is analogous to], I will go after my lovers, that give me my bread and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oil and my drink. But was he³² not a victim of circumstances?³³ — It was taught in the name of R. Jose son of R. Honi: Why is there a point on the waw of u-be-kumah³⁴ mentioned in connection with the elder daughter? To indicate that though he did not know when she lay down³⁵ he well knew when she arose.³⁵ What, however, could he do?³⁶ Surely what was done could not be undone?³⁷ — Matters might have been different: He should not have drunk again on the following evening. Rabbah made the following exposition: What is meant by the Biblical text, A brother transgressed against a strong city, and their contentions are like the bars of a castle?³⁸ — A brother transgressed against a strong city refers to Lot who separated himself from Abraham;³⁹ and their contentions are like the bars of the castle, because he caused contentions between Israel and Ammon, as it is said, An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord.⁴⁰ Raba (others say R. Isaac) made the following exposition: What is the meaning of the Biblical text, He that separateth himself seeketh his own desire, and snarleth against all sound wisdom?⁴¹ — He that separateth himself seeketh his own desire, refers to Lot who separated himself from Abraham: And snarleth⁴² against all sound wisdom, for his shame was exposed⁴³ in the Synagogues and in the houses of study, as we learnt: An Ammonite and a Moabite are forbidden [to enter into the assembly] for ever. ‘Ulla said: Tamar⁴⁴ committed adultery and Zimri⁴⁵ also committed adultery. Tamar committed adultery and kings and prophets descended from her;⁴⁶ Zimri committed adultery and through him many ten thousands of Israel fell.⁴⁷ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: A transgression with good intent is more meritorious than the performance of a commandment with no intent; for it is said, Blessed above women Jael be,⁴⁸ the wife of Heber the Kenite, above women in the tent shall she be blessed.⁴⁹ Who are the women in the tent? Sarah, Rebeka, Rachel and Leah. But this⁵⁰ is not so! For did not Rab Judah say in the name of Rab: Let a man always engage in Torah and the performance of commandments even though his motive may be ulterior,⁵¹ because even ulterior motive will ultimately lead to disinterested [study and performance]?⁵² Say. ‘Like the meaningless performance of a commandment.’⁵³ R. Johanan said: That profligate⁵⁴ had seven sexual connections at that hour; for it is said, Between her feet he sunk, he fell. he lay etc.⁵⁵ But, surely, she enjoyed the transgression! — R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Even the favours of the wicked are distasteful to the righteous. [Reverting to] the above text,⁵⁶ ‘Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Let a man always engage in Torah and the performance of commandments even though his motive be ulterior, because ulterior motive will ultimately lead to disinterested [study and performance;]’⁵⁷ for as a reward for the forty-two sacrifices which the wicked Balak offered⁵⁸ he gained the privilege of having Ruth descended from him; for R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: Ruth was the daughter of the son of Eglon who was the son of the son of Balak the King of Moab. R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: Whence is it deduced that the Holy One, blessed be He, does not deprive one even of the reward for an elegant expression? From here: Whereas in the case of the elder daughter,⁵⁹ who called her son Moab,⁶⁰ the All Merciful said to Moses, Be not at enmity with Moab, neither contend with them in battle,⁶¹ ‘battle’ only must not [be contended with them] but annoying them was well permitted; in the case, however, of the younger daughter, who called her son Ben-ammi,¹ He told him, Harass them not, nor contend with them² at all, even annoying them was not permitted. R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Joshua b. Korha: One should always perform a good deed³ as early as possible, for as a reward for the one night by which she⁴ anticipated the younger⁵ the elder⁵ gained the privilege of royal status [in Israel]⁶ four generations earlier.⁷ Our Rabbis taught: Of the common people⁸ excludes an anointed High Priest;⁹ 'of the common people' excludes a ruler.⁹ Have not these been once excluded, the anointed High Priest having been subjected to the offering¹⁰ of a bullock and the ruler to that¹⁰ of a he goat? — Since it might have been assumed that an anointed High Priest brings a bullock only where ignorance of the law was accompanied by error in action but where there was error in action alone he brings a lamb or a she-goat,¹¹ hence it was expressly stated, 'of the common people,' to exclude an anointed High Priest,¹² 'of the common people', to exclude a ruler. This reply satisfactorily explains the case of the anointed High Priest, but as regards that of the ruler, he, surely, does bring [his particular] offering even where there was only error in action!¹³ — R. Zebid replied in the name of Raba: Here it is a case¹⁴ where he ate, for instance, suet of the size of an olive¹⁵ while he was still a commoner, then he was appointed to rulership and then his transgression came to his knowledge;¹⁶ it might have been assumed that he must bring a lamb or a she goat,¹⁷ hence it was stated [that the law was not so].¹⁸ This explanation is quite satisfactory according to R. Simeon who is guided by¹⁹ [the time the sin was brought to his] knowledge;²⁰ what, however, can be said according to the Rabbis who are guided by [the time] the sin was committed?²¹ — But, said R. Zebid in the name of Raba, here it is a case¹⁴ where he ate, for instance, suet of the size of half an olive while he was a commoner and then he was appointed to rulership and finished it,²² and after that his transgression came to his knowledge; since it might have been assumed that these²³ are combined²⁴ and he must bring an offering of a lamb or a she goat, hence it was stated [that the law was not so].²⁵ Raba enquired of R. Nahman: Does rulership constitute a break? How is this to be understood? Where a man, for instance, ate suet of the size of half an olive while he was commoner, then he was appointed to rulership, and when he relinquished office he finished it;²² are [the two halves] in the previous case²⁶ not combined merely because he ate the one half when he was a commoner and the other when he was ruler, but in this case,²⁷ since he ate both halves²⁸ when he was a commoner, the two are combined, or is there perhaps no difference? — This may be solved from the following: For 'Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: If a man having eaten suet had set aside a sacrifice,²⁹ and then changed his faith and subsequently retracted, his offering, since it had been suspended,³⁰ must remain so for ever.³¹ How now! An apostate is not a person qualified to bring a sacrifice, but this ruler is, surely, one who is well qualified to bring a sacrifice. R. Zera enquired of R. Shesheth: What is the law if, while a commoner, [the ruler]³² ate something concerning which there is doubt as to whether it was not suet,³³ and having been appointed to rulership the doubt came to his knowledge?³⁴ According to the Rabbis who are guided by the time the sin was committed³⁵ there can be no question that he must bring an asham talui; the question, however, arises according to R. Simeon; does the change³⁶ affect a case of doubt as it does one of certainty³⁷ or does it, perhaps, affect a case of certainty only, because the ruler has to bring a different sacrifice,³⁸ but here, since his sacrifice does not change,³⁹ it might be said that he must bring an asham talui? — This remains undecided.⁴⁰ Our Rabbis taught: Of the common people⁴¹ excludes an apostate.⁴² R. Simeon b. Jose said in the name of R. Simeon: [And doeth through] error [any of all the things] which [the Lord his God hath commanded] not to be done, and is guilty⁴³ implies that only he who repents when he becomes conscious of his sin brings a sacrifice for his error, but he who does not repent on becoming conscious of his sin does not bring a sacrifice for his error. What practical difference is there between them?⁴⁴ — R. Hammuna replied: The difference between them lies in the case of one who, being an apostate in respect of the eating of suet, brings a sacrifice for eating blood; the Masters hold that since he is an apostate in respect of the eating of suet he is also regarded as an apostate in respect of the eating of the blood,⁴⁵ while the Master holds that in respect of blood, at least, he repents when he becomes conscious of his sin.⁴⁶ But, surely, Raba stated that all agreed that an apostate in respect of the eating of suet is not regarded as an apostate in respect of the blood! — But here they⁴⁴ differ in regard to one who eats carrion⁴⁷ to satisfy his appetite,⁴⁸ and suet was mistaken by him for permitted fat and he ate it;⁴⁹ the Masters are of the opinion that, as he would have eaten it to satisfy his appetite even wilfully,⁵⁰ he is treated as an apostate,⁴⁵ while the Master is of the opinion that, as he does not eat forbidden food when he can obtain permitted food, he is not regarded as an apostate.⁵¹ Our Rabbis taught: He who eats suet is considered an apostate; and who is an apostate?⁵² He who eats meat that is nebelah or trefa;⁵³ loathsome creatures or reptiles; or he who drinks wine of libation.⁵⁴ R. Jose son of⁵⁵ R. Judah said: Also he who wears a garment made of wool and linen mingled together.⁵⁶ The Master said: ‘He who eats suet is considered an apostate; and who is an apostate? He who eats the meat that is nebelah or trefa.’ What does this mean?⁵⁷ — Rabbah b. Bar Dana replied in the name of R. Johanan: It is this that was meant: If a man eats suet merely in order to satisfy his appetite he is considered an apostate, but if in defiance of the law he is considered a Sadducee.⁵⁸ And which apostate, in the absence of declared motive, is to be regarded a Sadducee? He who⁵⁹ eats the meat of animals that is nebelah or trefa, loathsome creatures or reptiles, or he who drinks wine of libation.⁶⁰ ‘R. Jose son of R. Judah said: Also he who wears a garment made of wool and linen mingled together.’ What is the practical difference between them?⁶¹ — The difference between them is the case of a mingled texture forbidden only Rabbinically; the Masters hold the opinion that only when something is Biblically forbidden is he [who disregards it] to be deemed an apostate but if it is only Rabbinically forbidden one is not to be deemed an apostate; while the Master is of the opinion that in respect of a mingled texture, since its prohibition is well known, one is deemed an apostate [if he disregards it] even though the prohibition is only Rabbinical. [Concerning this law] there is a dispute between R. Aha and Rabina. One maintains [that he who eats forbidden food] in order to satisfy his appetite is deemed an apostate, but if in defiance of the law he is deemed to be a Sadducee; and the other maintains that even in defiance of the law he is deemed an apostate; but who is a Sadducee? He who worships idols. An objection was raised: ‘If he ate one flea or one gnat he is considered an apostate;’ in this case, surely, he acted in defiance of the law⁶² and yet he is called an apostate! — There it is a case where he said, ‘I would like to feel the taste of forbidden food.’⁶³ WHO IS MEANT BY RULER? A KING etc. Our Rabbis taught: A ruler⁶⁴ might signify the ruler of a tribe, like Nahshon the son of Amminadab, hence it was stated, Of all the things which the Lord his God hath commanded,⁶⁵ and further on it stated, That he may learn to fear the Lord his God,⁶⁶ as further on the reference is to him¹ who has none above him save the Lord his God so in the case of the ruler the reference is to him above whom there is none save the Lord his God. Rabbi enquired of R. Hiyya: 'Is one like myself to bring a he-goat?'² 'You have your rival in Babylon,'³ the other replied. 'The Kings of Israel and the Kings of the House of David,' the first objected, 'bring sacrifices independently of one another!' 'There,' the other replied, 'they were not subordinate to one another, here,⁴ however, we are subordinate to them.'⁵ R. Safra taught thus: Rabbi enquired of R. Hiyya, 'Is one like myself to bring a he-goat?'² 'There,'⁶ the other replied, 'is the scepter; here⁴ only the law giver;' as it was taught. The scepter shall not depart from Judah⁷ refers to the exilarch in Babylon who rules Israel with the scepter; nor the ruler's staff from between his feet⁷ refers to the grandchildren of Hillel⁸ who teach the Torah to Israel in public.⁹

MISHNAH. AND WHO IS THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST?¹⁰ HE WHO WAS ANOINTED WITH THE ANOINTING OIL¹¹ AND NOT HE [WHO MERELY MINISTERS] IN MORE GARMENTS.¹² THE ONLY DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A HIGH PRIEST WHO IS ANOINTED WITH THE ANOINTING OIL AND THE [ONE WHO MERELY MINISTERS] IN MORE GARMENTS IS THE BULLOCK¹³ THAT IS OFFERED FOR [THE UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION OF] ANY OF THE COMMANDMENTS.¹⁴ AND THE ONLY DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE ACTING, AND THE RETIRED¹⁵ HIGH PRIEST IS THE BULLOCK ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AND THE TENTH PART OF THE EPHAH.¹⁶ THEY¹⁷ ARE BOTH EQUAL IN THE TEMPLE SERVICE OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT, AND BOTH ARE COMMANDED TO MARRY A VIRGIN¹⁸ AND ARE FORBIDDEN TO MARRY A WIDOW.¹⁹ BOTH MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR [THE DEAD BODIES OF] THEIR RELATIVES,²⁰ NEITHER MAY THEY LET THEIR HAIR GROW WILD, NOR MAY THEY REND²¹ THEIR CLOTHES, AND BOTH ENABLE THE MANSLAYER TO RETURN.²²

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: The anointing oil which Moses prepared in the wilderness²³ was used for the boiling of²⁴ the roots;²⁵ these are the words of R. Judah. R. Jose said: Surely it did not suffice even for the dabbing of the roots!²⁶ But the roots were soaked in water and over its surface the oil was poured, which thus absorbed the scent and retained it. Said R. Judah to him: Did, then, only one miracle happen with the anointing oil? Surely, it was originally only twelve logs and with it was anointed the Tabernacle and its furniture, Aaron and his sons, throughout the seven days of consecration, and all of it still remained intact for the time to come, as it is said, This shall be a holy anointing oil unto Me throughout your generation.²⁷ Another [Baraita] taught: And Moses took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein,²⁸ R. Judah said: With the anointing oil which Moses prepared in the wilderness there occurred many miracles from the beginning to the end. Originally it only measured twelve logs. Now, consider how much the pot absorbed, how much the roots absorbed, and how much the fire burned, and yet it sufficed for the anointing of²⁹ the Tabernacle and its furniture, and Aaron and his sons, throughout the seven days of consecration; and High Priests and kings also were anointed with it. And even a High Priest who was the son of a High Priest must be anointed,³⁰ but a king who was the son of a king need not be anointed. And if it be asked: Why was Solomon anointed?³¹ It was due, [it may be replied], to the dispute of Adonijah; and so was Joash anointed on account of the claims of Athaliah, and Jehoahaz on account of Jehoiakim who was older than he by two years; and that oil remains for the time to come, as it is said, This shall be a holy anointing oil unto Me throughout your generations,³² the numerical value of Zeh³³ is twelve — logs. The Master said, 'And even a High Priest who is the son of a High Priest must be anointed.' Whence is this deduced? — [From the Scriptures] wherein it is written, And the anointed priest that shall be in his stead from among his sons;³⁴ Scripture should have stated, 'And the priest that shall be in his stead³⁵ from among his sons,' why, then, the anointed? Consequently it must have been intended to imply³⁶ that even the son³⁷ of a High Priest succeeds to his father's office only if he was anointed: otherwise³⁸ he does not. The Master said, 'But a king who is the son of a king need not be anointed.' Whence is this deduced? R. Aha b. Jacob replied: [From Scripture] wherein it is written, To the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom [he and his children] etc.³⁹ which implies that the kingship is an inheritance.⁴⁰ Whence is it deduced that in cases of dispute anointing is required, and that the king is not entitled to transmit the kingship as he desires? — R. Papa replied: Scripture stated, He and his children in the midst of Israel,⁴¹ only when there is peace in Israel may the text, He and his children, be applied to him even though no anointing had taken place. A Tanna taught: Jehu the son of Nimshi also was anointed only on account of the dispute of Joram. This surely could have been deduced from the fact that he was the first of a dynasty! — There is a lacuna in the text and the following should be inserted: 'The kings of the House of David were anointed: the kings of Israel were not anointed.'⁴² Whence is this deduced? — Raba replied: Scripture stated, Arise, anoint him; for this is he, etc.,⁴³ only he requires anointing but no other [who is not of the Davidic dynasty] requires anointing. The Master said, 'Jehu the son of Nimshi also was anointed only on account of the dispute of Joram.' Is it permissible to make inappropriate use⁴⁴ of the sacred oil on account of the dispute of Joram the son of Ahab? — As R. Papa said elsewhere⁴⁵ that the anointing was performed with pure balsam,⁴⁶ so here also it was performed with pure balsam. 'And Jehoahaz on account of Jehoiakim who was older than he by two years.' But was he older than he? Surely it is written, And the sons of Josiah: the firstborn Johanan, the second Jehoiakim, the third Zedekiah, the fourth Shallum,⁴⁷ and R. Johanan said that Shallum is identical with Zedekiah, and Johanan with Jehoahaz! — Jehoiakim was in fact older, but the meaning of firstborn⁴⁸ is 'first in succession to the kingship.' Do, however, younger sons succeed to kingship before the older ones? Surely, it is written, But the kingdom gave he to Jehoram, because he was the firstborn!⁴⁹ — Jehoram was worthily filling the place of his ancestors;⁵⁰ Jehoiakim was not worthily filling the place of his ancestors. The Master said, 'Shallum is identical with Zedekiah, and Johanan with Jehoahaz.' Were they not, however, enumerated individually, for it is written, the third, the fourth?⁵¹ — 'Third' means third of the sons, and 'fourth' means fourth in succession to the kingdom, since Jehoahaz reigned first, then Jehoiakim, then Jekoniah and finally Zedekiah. Our Rabbis taught: Shallum is identical with Zedekiah. Then why was he called Shallum? Because he was perfect⁵² in his deeds. Others say: Shallum implies that the kingdom of David came to end⁵³ in his days. And what was his real name? Mattaniah; as it is stated, And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah his father's brother king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah.⁵⁴ He said to him, 'May God justify⁵⁵ my judgment against you, should you rebel against me,' as it is said, And he⁵⁶ brought him under an oath;⁵⁷ and it is also written, And he also rebelled against King Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear by God.⁵⁸

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 12a

Was, however, the anointing oil in existence [in the days of Jehoahaz]? Surely it was taught: At the time when the Holy Ark was hidden away there were also hidden the anointing oil, the jar of manna,¹ Aaron's rod with its almonds and blossoms,² and the coffer which the Philistines had sent to Israel as a gift and concerning which it is said, And put the jewels of gold, which ye returned Him for a guilt offering, in a coffer by the side thereof; and send it away that it may go.³ And who hid them? It was Josiah, King of Judah, who hid them; because, having observed that it was written in the Torah, The Lord will bring thee and thy king . . . [unto a nation that thou hast not known],⁴ he gave orders that they shall be hidden away, as it is said, And he said unto the Levites that taught all Israel, that were holy unto the Lord, 'Put the Holy Ark into the house which Solomon the son of David, King of Israel, did build; there shall no more be a burden upon your shoulders; now serve the Lord your God and his people Israel;'⁵ and R. Eleazar stated: The inference⁶ is arrived at by an analogy between the expressions. 'There' and 'there',⁷ 'To he kept'⁸ and 'to he kept',⁹ and 'generations' and 'generations'!¹⁰ — R. Papa replied: [Jehoahaz was anointed] with pure balsam. Our Rabbis taught: How were the kings anointed? — In the shape of a wreath. And the priests? — In the shape of a Chi. What is meant by 'the shape of a Chi'! — R. Menashya b. Gadda replied: In the shape of a Greek . One [Tanna] reported that oil was poured upon his head first and afterwards some oil was applied between his eyelids, but another [Tanna] reported that first some oil was applied between his eyelids and afterwards oil was poured upon his head!¹¹ — This is a matter of dispute between Tannaim. Some maintain that anointing takes precedence while others maintain that the pouring takes precedence. What reason is advanced by him who maintains that pouring takes precedence? — [The fact] that it is written. And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head and anointed him, to sanctify him.¹² And what reason is offered by him who maintains that anointing takes precedence? — He holds this opinion because a similar procedure is found in connection with the vessels of ministry.¹³ But, surely, And he poured¹² is written first, and only afterwards And he anointed!¹² — The meaning intended is this: What is the reason why he poured? Because he had already anointed. Our Rabbis taught: It is like the precious oil . . . coming down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, etc.,¹⁴ two drops like pearls hung from Aaron's beard. R. Papa said: A Tanna taught that when he spoke¹⁵ they ascended and lodged at the root of his beard. And concerning this matter, Moses was anxious. He said, 'Have I, God forbid, made an improper use of the anointing oil?'¹⁶ A heavenly voice came forth and called out, Like the precious oil . . ., like the dew of Hermon;¹⁷ as the law of improper use of holy objects is not applicable to the dew of Hermon, so also is it not applicable to the anointing oil on the beard of Aaron. Aaron however, was still anxious. He said, 'It is possible that Moses did not trespass, but I may have trespassed'. A heavenly voice came forth and said to him, Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity;¹⁸ as Moses is not guilty of trespass, so are you not guilty of trespass. Our Rabbis taught: The kings are anointed only at a fountain that their sovereignty may endure, as it is said, And the king said unto them: 'Take with you the servants of your lord . . . and bring him down to Gihon'.¹⁹ R. Ammi said: He who wishes to ascertain whether he will live through the year or not shall, during the ten days between the New Year and the Day of Atonement, kindle a lamp in a house wherein there is no draught. If the light continues to burn he may know that he will live through the year. He who desires to engage in business and wishes to ascertain whether he will succeed or not, let him rear up a cock; if it grows plump and fine he will succeed. He who desires to set out on a journey and wishes to ascertain whether he will return home again or not. let him station himself in a dark house; if he sees the reflection of his shadow he may know that he will return home again. This, however, is not a proper thing to do, lest his courage fail him and he meet with misfortune in consequence. Said Abaye: Now that it has been said that omens are of significance, a man should make a regular habit of eating,²⁰ at the beginning of the year, pumpkin, fenugreek, leek, beet and dates.²¹ R. Mesharsheya said to his sons: Whenever you intend coming in for your lesson with your master revise the subject first and then enter the presence of your master; and when you sit before him, look at his mouth, for it is written, But thine eyes shall see thy teacher.²² When you practice your lessons, practice them by a river of water so that as the waters advance continually, so may your acquired knowledge advance continually. Rather sit on the rubbish heap of Matha Mehasia²³ than in the palaces of Pumbeditha. Rather eat an unsavory gildana²⁴ of Matha Mehasia than the kuthha²⁵ of the lofty mansions.²⁶ My horn is exalted in the Lord;²⁷ my horn is exalted but not my flask: The kingdoms of David and Solomon who were anointed with a 'horn'²⁸ endured; the kingdoms of Saul and Jehu who were anointed with a 'flask'²⁹ did not endure. HE WHO WAS ANOINTED WITH THE ANOINTING OIL etc. Our Rabbis taught: 'Anointed' might imply a king, hence it was stated 'priest'. If only 'priest' had been stated one might have applied it to the High Priest who was dedicated by the additional garments only, hence it was stated, 'anointed'. If only 'anointed' had been written one might have applied it to the priest anointed for war,³⁰ hence it was stated, and the anointed Priest³¹ above whom there is no other anointed [Priest]. How is this inferred? — As Raba said that 'the thigh'³² implies the right thigh, so here also 'the anointed' implies the most important of the anointed. The Master said, 'Anointed might imply a king.' Does a king bring a sin offering of a bullock? Surely it is a he-goat that he brings!³³ — It³⁴ was necessary, since it might have been assumed that only for error in action does a king bring a sin offering of a he-goat but that for ignorance of the law he brings a bullock, hence it was necessary to teach us [that he never brings a bullock]. THE ONLY DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A [HIGH PRIEST WHO IS] ANOINTED WITH THE ANOINTING OIL etc. Our Mishnah cannot be reconciled with the view of R. Meir; for should it be assumed to agree with the view of R. Meir it may be pointed out that it was taught: A High Priest who is dedicated by the additional garments brings a bullock which is the prescribed sin offering for the transgression of all the commandments; these are the words of R. Meir, but the Sages did not agree with him. What is R. Meir's reason? Because it was taught: Anointed only implies a High Priest who was anointed with the anointing oil, whence, however, is it deduced that one dedicated by the additional garments only is also subject to that law? For it was expressly stated, If the priest the anointed.³⁵ To whom, then is our Mishnah to be attributed? To the Rabbis!³⁶

Read, however, the final clause: THE ONLY DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE ACTING, AND THE RETIRED HIGH PRIEST IS THE BULLOCK ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AND THE TENTH PART OF THE EPHAH. This,¹ surely, must represent the view of R. Meir! For it was taught: If some disqualification occurred in the High Priest who consequently retired and another priest was anointed in his stead, when the first² returns to his ministry the other retains all the obligations relating to the priesthood; these are the words of R. Meir. R. Jose said: The first returns while the second is rendered unfit either as a High Priest or as an ordinary priest. Said R. Jose, once it happened with Joseph the son of Ailim of Sepphoris³ that, a disqualification in the High Priest having occurred, he⁴ was appointed in his stead; and when the incident was submitted to the Sages they ruled that the first returns to his ministry while the second is rendered unfit either as a High Priest or as an ordinary priest. [He is unfit as] a High Priest owing to enmity;⁵ [and he is unfit as] an ordinary priest, because, in the sphere of holiness, you may ascend, not descend.⁶ Does the first clause,⁷ then, represent the view of the Rabbis and the final clause⁷ that of R. Meir! — R. Hisda replied: Yes; the first clause represents the view of the Rabbis and the final clause that of R. Meir. R. Joseph replied: The author of our Mishnah is Rabbi who based⁸ it upon the opinions of two Tannaim. Raba replied: The views represented⁹ are those of R. Simeon who agrees with R. Meir in one respect and differs from him in the other; as it was taught: The things which distinguish a High Priest from an ordinary priest are the following: The bullock that is offered for [the unwitting transgression of any of] all the commandments, and the bullock of the Day of Atonement, and the tenth part of the ephah; he must neither let his hair grow wild nor may he rend his garments, but he tears them from below while the ordinary priest tears them from above; he must not defile himself by [coming in contact with the dead bodies even of his] relatives; he is commanded to marry a virgin and is forbidden to marry a widow; he¹⁰ enables the manslayer to return to his home;¹¹ he may offer sacrifices even while an onan,¹² though he must not then eat of the sacrificial meat or take a share of it; he offers up his portion first and receives his portion first; he ministers in eight garments, and the entire service of the Day of Atonement may be performed by him alone; and he is also exempt from bringing a sacrifice for an unwitting transgression of defilement relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things. And all these laws are applicable to the High Priest who is dedicated by the additional garments alone, with the exception of the bullock that is offered for [the unwitting transgression of any of] 'all the commandments'. All these laws, furthermore, are also applicable to an anointed High Priest who [having acted as substitute] has retired from office, with the exception of the bullock of the Day of Atonement and the tenth part of the ephah. All these laws are inapplicable to a Priest anointed for War, with the exception of the five things that are specified in the Biblical Section under discussion: He must not let his hair grow wild nor may he rend his garments, he must not defile himself for the dead bodies of his relatives, he is commanded to marry a virgin and forbidden to marry a widow, and enables the manslayer to return to his home;¹³ so R. Judah. But the Sages said: He does not enable [the manslayer] to return.¹⁴ And whence is it proved that this Baraita represents the view of R. Simeon? — R. Papa replied: Who was it that was heard to say that [the High Priest] is exempted in regard to an unwitting transgression of defilement relating to the Sanctuary and its consecrated things? Surely it was R. Simeon.¹⁵ ‘With the exception of the five things that are specified in the Biblical section under discussion.’ Whence is this inference?¹⁶ — From that which our Rabbis taught: And the priest that is highest among his brethren,¹⁷ refers¹⁸ to the High Priest; upon whose head the anointing oil is poured,¹⁷ refers to the Priest who is anointed for War; and that is consecrated to put on the garments,¹⁷ refers to the High Priest who is dedicated by the additional garments alone. Concerning all of them it is stated, He shall not let the hair of his head grow wild,¹⁹ nor rend his clothes, neither shall he go in to any dead body.²⁰ As one might assume that all of them may offer sacrifices while onans, it was specifically stated, For the consecration of the anointing oil of his God is upon him,²¹ upon ‘him’²² but not upon his associate.²³ Now that Scripture has excluded him²³ it might have been assumed that he is not commanded to marry a Virgin, hence it was stated, And he [shall take a wife in her virginity].²⁴ On this point²⁵ Tannaim are in dispute: And he shall take a wife in her virginity,²⁴ after Scripture has excluded him²³ it included him again; so R. Ishmael. R. Akiba said: One could well have known²⁶ [this law]²⁷ in the case where he²⁸ was [temporarily] removed on account of a mishap²⁹; whence, however, could it have been inferred [in the case where he was permanently removed] on account of disqualifying blemishes? Hence it was stated, ‘And he.’²⁴ Raba inquired of R. Nahman: May an anointed High Priest who was stricken with leprosy³⁰ marry a widow;³¹ is he only suspended³² or is he exempt from all the duties of the High Priesthood?³³ — He³⁴ was unable to give an answer.³⁵ Once R. Papa was sitting at his studies and raised the same inquiry. Said Huna the son of R. Nahman to R. Papa: We have learned [such a law]:³⁶ ‘One could well have known [this law] in the case where he was [temporarily]³⁷ removed on account of a mishap; whence, however, could it be inferred [in the case where he was permanently] removed on account of disqualifying blemishes? Hence it was stated, ‘and he’. He³⁸ thereupon arose, kissed him on his head and gave him his daughter. MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST RENDS HIS GARMENTS³⁹ FROM BELOW AND AN ORDINARY PRIEST FROM ABOVE. A HIGH PRIEST MAY OFFER SACRIFICES WHILE AN ON AN THOUGH HE MAY NOT EAT [OF THE SACRIFICIAL MEAT]; BUT AN ORDINARY PRIEST MAY [IN SUCH CIRCUMSTANCES] NEITHER OFFER SACRIFICES NOR EAT [OF SACRIFICIAL MEAT].

GEMARA. Rab said: BELOW means actually below⁴⁰ and ABOVE means actually above.⁴¹ Samuel, however, said: BELOW means beneath the binding⁴² and ABOVE means above the binding,⁴³ the one as well as the other being round the neck. An objection was raised: In respect of all relatives⁴⁴ a man may, if he wishes, sever⁴⁵ his binding, and if he wishes he need not sever his binding. In respect of his father and mother, however, he must sever.⁴⁶ Now, since [a tear made in such a manner]⁴⁷ is elsewhere [regarded as a legally proper] tear, the prohibition for a High Priest to tear his garments should be applied to such a tear also!⁴⁸ — Samuel is of the same opinion as R. Judah who said: Any tear that does not sever one's binding is nothing more than a wanton rent.⁴⁹ Is R. Judah, however, of the opinion that the law of rending one's garments is applicable to a High Priest? Surely it was taught: If Scripture had only stated, ‘He shall not let the hair of a head go loose, nor rend a garment’ it might have been assumed that Scripture spoke of the head and the garment of a sotah,⁵⁰ hence it was expressly stated, He shall not let the hair of his head grow wild, nor rend his clothes.⁵¹ showing that the requirements of letting one's hair grow wild or rending one's garments⁵² are not at all applicable to him;⁵³ so R. Judah. R. Ishmael said: He does not rend his clothes in the manner of other people, but he rends from below while an ordinary priest rends from above!⁵⁴ — Samuel holds the same opinion as R. Judah in one respect⁵⁵ and disagrees with him in another.⁵⁶

MISHNAH. WHATEVER IS MORE FREQUENT THAN ANOTHER TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER THAT OTHER, AND WHATSOEVER IS MORE SACRED THAN ANOTHER TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER THAT OTHER. IF THE BULLOCK OF THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST AND THE BULLOCK OF THE CONGREGATION ARE SIMULTANEOUSLY PRESENTED,⁵⁷

THE BULLOCK OF THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST MUST PRECEDE THAT OF THE CONGREGATION IN ALL ITS DETAILS.⁵⁸

GEMARA. Whence are these laws deduced? — Abaye replied: From Scripture which stated, Besides the burnt offering of the morning which is for a continual burnt offering.⁵⁹ Now consider, since it was written the burnt offering of the morning, what need was there for writing again continual burnt offering? Consequently it was this that the All Merciful intended: Whatsoever is more frequent takes precedence. AND WHATSOEVER IS MORE SACRED THAN ANOTHER TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER THAT OTHER. Whence is this deduced? — From what was taught at the School of R. Ishmael: Thou shalt sanctify him [the priest] therefore,⁶⁰ in respect of any matter of sanctity; he must be the first in the reading of the Law, the first in the recital of any benediction⁶¹ and the first in receiving a handsome portion.

- (55) That a rent that does not cut the binding round the neck is of no legal or religious significance.
- (56) While R. Judah exempts the High Priest entirely from the law of rending one's clothes, Samuel maintains that a High Priest must rend his garments but only from below the binding.

Talmud - Mas. Horayoth 13a

IF THE BULLOCK OF THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST AND THE BULLOCK OF THE CONGREGATION etc. Whence is this deduced? — From what our Rabbis taught: And he shall burn it ins he burnt the first bullock;¹ what need was there to state, the first?² In order to indicate that it³ must precede the bullock of the congregation in all its details.⁴ Our Rabbis taught: If the bullock of the anointed High Priest and the bullock of the congregation are simultaneously presented, the bullock of the anointed High Priest must precede the bullock of the congregation in all its details,⁴ forasmuch as the anointed High Priest effects the atonement and the congregation receives the atonement, it is reasonable that he who effects atonement shall take precedence over him who receives the atonement; and so it is also stated [in Scripture]. And have made atonement [i] for himself, and [ii] for his household, and [iii] for all the assembly of Israel.⁵ The bullock that is offered for a sin committed by the congregation through ignorance of a law is to precede the bullock for the sin of idolatry. What is the reason? — The one is a sin offering and the other⁶ is a burnt offering, and it was taught, ‘What need was there for Scripture to state, And he shall offer that which is for the sin offering first?’⁷ If merely in order to teach that the sin offering was to be the first, surely, it has already been stated, And he shall prepare the second for a burnt offering, according to the ordinance!⁸ Consequently it must be concluded that in this text there has been laid down the general principle⁹ that all sin offerings are to precede the burnt offerings that are presented together with them; and, there is an accepted tradition that even a sin offering consisting of a bird is to precede a burnt offering consisting of a beast.’ The bullock for idolatry is to precede the goat for idolatry. Why? The one surely, is a sin offering while the other is a burnt offering! — In the West¹⁰ it was explained in the name of Rabbah¹¹ b. Mari: Because an Aleph is wanting in the Hattath¹² for idolatry, the written form being le-Hatth.¹³ Raba replied: Because According to the ordinance¹⁴ was written concerning it.¹⁵ The goat for idolatry is to precede the goat of the ruler. What is the reason? — The one is for a congregation while the other is for an individual. The he-goat of a ruler is to precede the she-goat of a private individual. What is the reason? — The one is for a sovereign; the other for a commoner. The she-goat of an individual is to precede the ewe-lamb of an individual.¹⁶ But, surely, it was taught that the ewe-lamb of an individual must precede the she-goat of an individual! — Abaye replied: This is a matter of dispute between Tannaim. One Master holds the view that a she-goat is preferable since it has also the advantage of being the offering of an individual for the sin of idolatry, while the other Master is of the opinion that a ewe-lamb is preferable since it has the advantage of having its fat tail also offered on the altar. The omer¹⁷ must precede the lamb that is brought together with it. The two loaves¹⁸ are to precede the lambs¹⁹ that are brought with them. This is the general rule: The offering which is due to the sanctity of²⁰ the day is to precede the offering the presentation of which is due to²⁰ the bread.²¹ MISHNAH. A MAN TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER A WOMAN IN MATTERS CONCERNING THE SAVING OF LIFE AND THE RESTORATION OF LOST PROPERTY, AND A WOMAN TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER A MAN IN RESPECT OF CLOTHING AND RANSOM FROM CAPTIVITY. WHEN BOTH ARE EXPOSED TO IMMORAL DEGRADATION IN THEIR CAPTIVITY THE MAN'S RANSOM²² TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER THAT OF THE WOMAN.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man and his father and his teacher were in captivity he takes precedence over²³ his teacher and his teacher takes precedence over his father,²⁴ while his mother takes precedence over all of them. A scholar takes precedence over a king of Israel, for if a scholar dies there is none to replace him²⁵ while if a king of Israel dies, all Israel are eligible for kingship. A king takes precedence over a High Priest, for it is said, And the king said unto them: Take with you the servants of your lord etc.²⁶ A High Priest takes precedence over a prophet, for it is said, And let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him there,²⁷ Zadok being mentioned before Nathan; and furthermore it is stated, Hear now, O Joshua the High Priest, thou and thy fellows etc.;²⁸ lest it be assumed that these were common people it was expressly stated, For they are men that are a sign,²⁸ and the expression ‘sign’ cannot but refer to a prophet as it is stated, And he²⁹ give thee a sign or a wonder.³⁰ A High Priest anointed with the anointing oil takes precedence over one who is only dedicated by the additional garments. He who is dedicated by the additional garments takes precedence over an anointed High Priest who has retired from office owing to a mishap. An anointed High Priest who has retired from office on account of a mishap takes precedence over one who has retired on account of his blemish. He who has retired on account of his blemish takes precedence over him who was anointed for war purposes only. He who was anointed for war takes precedence over the Deputy High Priest.³¹ The Deputy High Priest takes precedence over the amarkal.³² What is amarkal? — R. Hisda replied: He who commands³³ all. The amarkal takes precedence over the Temple treasurer. The Temple treasurer takes precedence over the chief of the watch.³⁴ The chief of the guard takes precedence over the chief of the men of the daily watch.³⁵ The chief of the daily watch takes precedence over an ordinary priest. The question was raised: In respect of Levitical uncleanness,³⁶ who takes precedence, the Deputy High Priest or the Priest anointed for War? — Mar

Zutra the son of R. Nahman replied: Come and hear what has been taught: If a Deputy High Priest or a Priest anointed for War were going on their way and came upon a corpse the burial of which is obligatory upon them,³⁷ it is better that the Priest anointed for War shall defile himself rather than the Deputy High Priest; for if the High Priest meet with some disqualification the Deputy High Priest steps in to perform the Temple service. Has it not been taught, however, that the Priest anointed for War takes precedence over the Deputy High Priest? — Rabina replied: That Baraitha deals with the question of saving life.³⁸

MISHNAH. A PRIEST TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER A LEVITE, A LEVITE OVER AN ISRAELITE, AN ISRAELITE OVER A BASTARD, A BASTARD OVER A NATHIN,³⁹ A NATHIN OVER A PROSELYTE, AND A PROSELYTE OVER AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE. THIS ORDER OF PRECEDENCE APPLIES ONLY WHEN⁴⁰ ALL THESE WERE IN OTHER RESPECTS EQUAL. IF THE BASTARD, HOWEVER, WAS A SCHOLAR AND THE HIGH PRIEST AN IGNORAMUS,⁴¹ THE LEARNED BASTARD TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER THE IGNORANT HIGH PRIEST.

GEMARA. A PRIEST TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER A LEVITE for it is stated The sons of Amram: Aaron and Moses; and Aaron wins separated that he should be sanctified as most holy.⁴² A LEVITE takes precedence OVER AN ISRAELITE for it is stated, At that time the Lord separated the tribe of Levi etc.⁴³ AN ISRAELITE takes precedence OVER A BASTARD for the one is of legitimate birth and the other is not. A BASTARD takes precedence OVER A NATHIN for the one comes from an eligible origin and the other from a non-eligible origin. A NATHIN takes precedence OVER A PROSELYTE for the one was brought up with us in holiness and the other was not brought up with us in holiness. A PROSELYTE takes precedence OVER AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE for the one was included in the curse⁴⁴ and the other was not included in the curse. THIS ORDER OF PRECEDENCE APPLIES ONLY WHEN ALL THESE WERE IN OTHER RESPECTS EQUAL etc. Whence is this deduced? — R. Aha son of R. Hanina replied: From Scripture which states, She⁴⁵ is more precious than rubies,⁴⁶ i.e., more precious than the High Priest who enters into the innermost⁴⁷ sanctuary. It was taught, R. Simeon b. Yohai said: It stands to reason that an emancipated slave should take precedence over a proselyte, for the one was brought up with us in holiness and the other was not; but the former was included in the curse⁴⁴ while the latter was not. R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok was asked by his disciples: Why are all willing to marry a proselyte while not all are willing to marry an emancipated slave? He answered them: The one was included in the curse⁴⁸ while the other was not. Another explanation is that the one is known to protect her chastity while the other is not. R. Eleazar⁴⁹ was asked by his disciples: Why does a dog know its owner while a cat does not? He answered them: If he who eats something of that from which a mouse has eaten loses his memory, how much more so the animal which eats the mouse itself! R. Eleazar⁵⁰ was asked by his disciples: Why do all persecute the mice? — Because of their bad nature. What is it? Raba replied: They gnaw even at clothes⁵¹

R. Papa replied: They gnaw even at the handle of a hoe. Our Rabbis taught: Five things make one forget one's studies: Eating¹ something from which a mouse or a cat has eaten, eating¹ the heart of a beast, frequent consumption² of olives, drinking³ the remains of water that was used for washing, and washing⁴ one's feet one above the other. Others say: He also who puts his clothes under his head [forgets his studies]. Five things restore one's learning:⁵ Wheaten bread and much more so wheat⁶ itself, eating¹ a roasted⁷ egg without salt, frequent consumption⁸ of olive oil, frequent indulgence in wine and spices, and the drinking³ of water that has remained from kneading. Others say: Dipping one's finger in salt and eating is also included. 'Frequent consumption of olive-oil'. This corroborates the view of R. Johanan who said: As the olive causes one to forget seventy years of study, so does olive oil restore seventy years of study. 'Frequent indulgence in wine and spices'. This corroborates the view of Raba who said: Wine and spices have made me wise. 'Dipping one's finger in salt' — Said Resh Lakish: One only. This is a matter of dispute between Tannaim: R. Judah said, one finger but not two; R. Jose said, two but not three. Your mnemonic⁹ is the third finger.¹⁰ Ten things adversely affect one's study: Passing¹¹ under the bit of a camel and much more so under the camel itself, passing¹¹ between two camels, passing between two women, the passing of a woman¹² between two men, passing under the offensive odour of a carcass, passing under a bridge under which water has not flowed for forty days, eating bread that was insufficiently baked, eating meat out of a soup-ladle, drinking from a streamlet that runs through a graveyard, and looking into the face of a dead body. Others say: He who reads an inscription upon a grave is also [subject to the same disability]. Our Rabbis taught: When the Nasi¹³ enters, all the people rise and do not resume their seats until he requests them to sit. When the Ab-beth-din¹⁴ enters, one row rises on one side¹⁵ and another row on the other [and they remain standing] until he has sat down in his place. When the Hakam¹⁶ enters, every one [whom he passes] rises and sits down [as soon as he passed] until the Sage has sat down in his place. Sons of sages, and scholars may, if the public is in need of their services, tread upon the heads of the people.¹⁷ If one [of them] went out in his need to ease himself he may re-enter and sit down in his place.¹⁸ Sons of a scholar¹⁹ whose father holds the office of Parnas²⁰ may, if they possess the capability of understanding [the discourses], enter and sit down before their father with their backs to the people. When, however, they do not possess the capability of understanding [the discourses] they enter and sit down before their father with their faces towards the public. R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok said: In a festive gathering²¹ also they are treated as attachments [to their father].²² The Master said, 'If he went out in his need to ease himself he may re-enter and sit down in his place.' R. Papa said: This applies only²³ to the minor [functions of the body] but not to the major [functions], since he should have examined himself before; for Rab Judah said: A man should always make a habit of easing himself early in the morning and late in the evening in order that there be no need for him to go far.²⁴ Now,²⁵ however, that everybody²⁶ is weaker the same rule applies even to the larger functions. 'R. Eleazar son of R. Sadok said: At a festive gathering also they²⁷ are treated as attachments [to their father].' Raba said: Only during the lifetime of their father and in the presence of their father. R. Johanan said: That instruction²⁸ was issued²⁹ in the days of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel [III], when R. Simeon b. Gamaliel was the President, R. Meir the Hakam,³⁰ and R. Nathan the Ab-beth-din.³¹ Whenever R. Simeon b. Gamaliel entered all the people stood up for him; when R. Meir and R. Nathan entered all the people stood up for them also. Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel: Should there be no distinction between my [office] and theirs? And so he issued that ordinance.³² R. Meir and R. Nathan were not present on that day. Coming on the following day and seeing that the people did not rise for them as usual, they inquired as to what had happened.³³ On being told that R. Simeon b. Gamaliel had issued that ordinance, R. Meir said to R. Nathan, 'I am the Hinkam and you are the Ab-heth-din, let us retaliate.³⁴ Now, how are we to proceed against him? — Let us request him to discourse³⁵ upon the tractate of 'Ukzin with which he is unfamiliar,³⁶ and as he will be unable to discourse upon it³⁷ we shall tell him: Who can express the mighty acts of the Lord; make all His praise to be heard;³⁸ for whom is it becoming to express the mighty acts of the Lord? For him who can make all his praise to be heard. We shall then depose him and I shall become Ab-beth-din and you the Nasi.' R. Jacob b. Korshai on hearing this conversation³⁹ said, 'The matter might, God forbid, lead to [the Nasi's] disgrace.' So he went and sat down behind R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's study, expounding [the tractate of 'Uksin], and repeating it again and again. He⁴⁰ said, 'What could this mean?⁴¹ Did anything, God forbid, happen at the college!' He concentrated his attention and familiarized himself with it. On the following day when they said to him, 'Will the Master come and discourse on 'Uksin', he began and discoursed upon it.

After he had finished he said to them, 'Had I not familiarized myself with it, you would have disgraced me!' He gave the order and they were removed from the college. Thereupon they wrote down scholastic difficulties on slips of paper which they threw into the college.⁴² That which he⁴³ solved was disposed of⁴⁴ and as to those which he did not solve they wrote down the answers and threw them in. Said R. Jose to them:⁴⁵ The Torah is without and we are within! Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel to them:⁴⁵ We shall re-admit them⁴⁶ but impose upon them this penalty, that no traditional statement shall be reported in their names. [As a result] R. Meir was designated 'others', and R. Nathan 'some say'. In their dreams they received a message to go and pacify⁴⁷ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. R. Nathan went; R. Meir did not, for he said: Dreams are of no consequence.⁴⁸ When R. Nathan came,⁴⁹ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel remarked to him: The honorable position⁵⁰ of your father has indeed helped you to become Ab-beth-din; shall we therefore make you also Nasi? Rabbi taught his son R. Simeon: Others say that if it⁵¹ had been an exchanged beast it would not have been sacrificed.¹ The latter said to him: Who are those whose waters we drink but whose names we do not mention? Rabbi answered him: These are men who wished to uproot your dignity and the dignity of your father's house. His son said to him: As well their love, as their hatred and their envy is long ago perished!² Rabbi said to him, The enemy has disappeared; the swords³ are forever.⁴ The other said to him: This applies only to the case where their actions were successful; in the case of these Rabbis, however, their actions were not successful. Subsequently he repeated his lesson [as follows]: It was said in the name of R. Meir that if it had been an exchanged beast it would not have been sacrificed. Raba said: Even Rabbi who was unassuming used the expression,⁵ 'it was said in the name of R. Meir', and did not say 'R. Meir said'. R. Johanan said: [On the following point] there is a difference of opinion between R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis. One view is⁶ that a well-read scholar⁷ is superior [to the keen dialectician] and the other view is⁶ that the keen dialectician⁸ is superior. R. Joseph was a well-read scholar; Rabbah was a keen dialectician. An enquiry was sent up to Palestine:⁹ Who of these should take precedence? They sent them word in reply: 'A well-read scholar is to take precedence'; for the Master said, 'All are dependent on the owner of the wheat'.¹⁰ R. Joseph, nevertheless, did not accept office. Rabbah was head¹¹ for twenty-two years and only after this period did R. Joseph take up the office.¹² Throughout the years of Rabbah's rectorship. Rab Joseph did not call to his house even a cupper.¹³ Abaye. Raba, R. Zera and Rabbah b. Mattana once sat studying together and felt the need to appoint a head.¹⁴ They agreed¹⁵ that whosoever would make a statement which could not be refuted shall become head. The statements of all of them were refuted, but that of Abaye was not. When Raba¹⁶ saw that Abaye held up his head, he called out to him: 'Nahmani,¹⁷ begin and say something'. The question was asked: Between R. Zera and Rabbah son of R. Mattana which is the superior? R. Zera was keen-witted but undecided¹⁸ while Rabbah son of R. Mattana was slow but able to arrive at conclusions.¹⁹ Now, what is the answer? — This must remain undecided.²⁰

MISHNAH. OATHS ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR;¹ THE LAWS CONCERNING THE DISCOVERY OF HAVING [UNCONSCIOUSLY] SINNED THROUGH UNCLEANNESS ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR;² THE LAWS CONCERNING CARRYING ON THE SABBATH ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR;³ THE SHADES OF LEPROUS AFFECTIONS ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR.⁴

WHERE⁵ THERE IS KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING AND AT THE END BUT FORGETFULNESS BETWEEN,⁶ A 'SLIDING SCALES' SACRIFICE IS BROUGHT.⁷ WHERE THERE IS KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING BUT NOT AT THE END, THE GOAT THE BLOOD OF WHICH IS SPRINKLED WITHIN THE VEIL ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT⁸ TOGETHER WITH THE DAY OF ATONEMENT ITSELF HOLD THE SIN IN SUSPENSE⁹ UNTIL IT BECOME KNOWN TO THE SINNER, AND HE BRINGS THE 'SLIDING SCALE' SACRIFICE. WHERE THERE IS NO KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING BUT THERE IS KNOWLEDGE AT THE END, THE GOAT SACRIFICED ON THE OUTER ALTAR TOGETHER WITH THE DAY OF ATONEMENT ITSELF BRING HIM FORGIVENESS;¹⁰ FOR IT IS SAID: '[ONE HE-GOAT FOR A SIN-OFFERING] BESIDE THE SIN-OFFERING OF ATONEMENT':¹¹ [THEY ARE LIKENED TO ONE ANOTHER SO THAT WE MAY DEDUCE THAT] BOTH ATONE FOR SIMILAR KINDS OF SIN: JUST AS THE 'INNER' GOAT¹² ATONES ONLY FOR AN UNCONSCIOUS SIN — WHERE THERE WAS KNOWLEDGE [AT THE BEGINNING], SO THE 'OUTER'¹³ GOAT ATONES ONLY FOR AN UNCONSCIOUS SIN — WHERE THERE WAS KNOWLEDGE [AT THE END]. WHERE THERE IS NO KNOWLEDGE EITHER AT THE BEGINNING OR AT THE END, THE GOATS OFFERED AS SIN-OFFERINGS ON FESTIVALS AND NEW MOONS BRING ATONEMENT. THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. JUDAH [B. ILA'I]. R. SIMEON [B. YOHAI] HOLDS THAT THE FESTIVAL GOATS ALONE AND NOT THE NEW MOON GOATS ATONE FOR THIS CLASS OF UNCONSCIOUS OFFENCE.¹⁴ AND FOR WHAT DO THE NEW MOON GOATS BRING ATONEMENT? —

(1) Positive and negative with reference to both future action (I swear I shall . . . ; I swear I shall not . . .) and past action (I swear I did . . . ; I swear I did not . . .). V. Lev. V, 4.

(2) A person defiled by dead man or carrion who, forgetful of his uncleanness, eats holy food or enters the sanctuary; or, does either of these two actions, whilst conscious of his uncleanness, but not of eating holy (sacrificial) food or entering the sanctuary. V. Lev. V, 2ff.

(3) Two kinds of Hoza'ah, carrying out: standing in public ground, stretching out the hand to private ground, and withdrawing an object; standing in private ground, and removing an object thence to public ground. And two kinds of Haknasah, bringing in: standing in private ground, stretching out the hand to public ground, and withdrawing an object; standing in public ground, and removing an object thence to private ground.

(4) Bahereth, white like snow; Se'eth, like white wool; Sid ha-hekal, white like the plaster of the Temple walls; and Kerum Bezah, white like the membrane round an egg: they are all different shades of white. V. Lev. XIII, 2ff.

(5) The laws of uncleanness are here discussed. The Gemara (3a) explains why these laws rather than the laws of oaths are discussed first. The Sabbath and leprosy laws are explained in their own tractates, and are only mentioned here en passant simply because of their similarity in that they are 'two, subdivided into four'.

(6) I.e., Knowledge at the time of becoming unclean, but forgetfulness (v. n. 2) at the actual moment of eating the holy food or entering the sanctuary.

(7) According to the pecuniary circumstances of the sinner: a lamb or goat, if he be wealthy; two turtledoves or two young pigeons, if he cannot afford a lamb; or the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour, if he be poor (Lev. V, 6-11).

(8) Lev. XVI, 15.

(9) Shielding the sinner from punishment.

(10) For he can never bring a sacrifice himself, since there was no knowledge at the beginning.

(12) I.e., 'the sin-offering of atonement.'

(13) The 'he-goat for a sin-offering.'

FOR A RITUALLY CLEAN MAN WHO ATE HOLY FOOD THAT HAD BECOME UNCLEAN. R. MEIR SAYS: ALL THE GOATS [EXCEPT THE 'INNER'] HAVE EQUAL POWERS OF ATONEMENT FOR TRANSGRESSIONS OF THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNESS IN CONNECTION WITH THE TEMPLE¹ AND HOLY FOOD THEREOF.² NOW, R. SIMEON HOLDS THAT THE NEW MOON GOATS BRING ATONEMENT FOR A CLEAN MAN WHO ATE UNCLEAR HOLY FOOD; AND THE FESTIVAL GOATS ATONE FOR TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNESS WHERE THERE WAS NO KNOWLEDGE EITHER AT THE BEGINNING OR AT THE END; AND THE 'OUTER' GOAT OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT FOR TRANSGRESSION OF THESE LAWS WHERE THERE WAS NO KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING BUT THERE WAS KNOWLEDGE AT THE END. THEY³ [THEREFORE] SAID TO HIM: 'IS IT PERMITTED TO OFFER UP THE GOAT SET APART FOR ONE DAY ON ANOTHER?'⁴ HE REPLIED 'YES!' THEY [HOWEVER] ARGUED WITH HIM: 'SINCE THEY ARE NOT EQUAL IN THE ATONEMENT THEY BRING, HOW CAN THEY TAKE EACH OTHER'S PLACE?' HE REPLIED: 'THEY ARE ALL AT LEAST EQUAL [IN THE WIDER SENSE] IN THAT THEY ALL BRING ATONEMENT FOR TRANSGRESSIONS OF THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNESS IN CONNECTION WITH THE TEMPLE AND HOLY FOOD THEREOF.' R. SIMEON B. JUDAH SAID IN HIS NAME:⁵ THE NEW MOON GOATS BRING ATONEMENT FOR A CLEAN PERSON WHO ATE UNCLEAR HOLY FOOD; THE FESTIVAL GOATS, IN ADDITION TO BRINGING ATONEMENT FOR SUCH A CASE, ATONE ALSO FOR A CASE WHERE THERE WAS NO KNOWLEDGE EITHER AT THE BEGINNING OR AT THE END; THE 'OUTER' GOAT OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT, IN ADDITION TO BRINGING ATONEMENT FOR BOTH THESE CASES, ATONES ALSO FOR A CASE WHERE THERE WAS NO KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING BUT THERE WAS KNOWLEDGE AT THE END. THEY ACCORDINGLY ASKED HIM: 'IS IT PERMITTED TO OFFER UP THE GOAT SET APART FOR ONE DAY ON ANOTHER?' HE SAID, 'YES!' THEY [FURTHER] SAID TO HIM: 'GRANTED THAT THE DAY OF ATONEMENT GOAT⁶ MAY BE OFFERED UP ON THE NEW MOON, BUT HOW CAN THE NEW MOON GOAT BE OFFERED UP ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT TO BRING ATONEMENT FOR A TRESPASS THAT IS NOT WITHIN ITS SCOPE?' HE REPLIED: 'THEY ARE ALL AT LEAST EQUAL [IN THE WIDER SENSE] IN THAT THEY ALL BRING ATONEMENT FOR TRANSGRESSIONS OF THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNESS IN CONNECTION WITH THE TEMPLE AND HOLY FOOD THEREOF.

FOR WILFUL TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNESS IN CONNECTION WITH THE TEMPLE AND HOLY FOOD THEREOF, THE 'INNER' GOAT OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT TOGETHER WITH THE DAY OF ATONEMENT ITSELF BRING FORGIVENESS.⁷ FOR OTHER TRANSGRESSIONS OF THE TORAH, LIGHT AND GRAVE, WILFUL AND UNCONSCIOUS, KNOWN AND UNKNOWN, POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE, THOSE PUNISHABLE BY KARETH⁸ AND THOSE PUNISHABLE BY DEATH IMPOSED BY THE COURT — FOR ALL THESE THE SCAPEGOAT⁹ BRINGS ATONEMENT TO ISRAELITES, PRIESTS, AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST. WHAT [THEN] IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ISRAELITES, PRIESTS, AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST?¹⁰ — [NONE], SAVE THAT THE BULLOCK¹¹ BRINGS ATONEMENT TO THE PRIESTS FOR TRANSGRESSIONS OF THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNESS IN CONNECTION WITH THE

TEMPLE AND HOLY FOOD.¹² R. SIMEON SAYS: JUST AS THE BLOOD OF THE GOAT THAT IS SPRINKLED WITHIN THE VEIL BRINGS ATONEMENT FOR ISRAELITES, SO THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK BRINGS ATONEMENT FOR PRIESTS; AND JUST AS THE CONFESSION OF SINS PRONOUNCED OVER THE SCAPEGOAT BRINGS ATONEMENT FOR ISRAELITES, SO THE CONFESSION PRONOUNCED OVER THE BULLOCK BRINGS ATONEMENT FOR PRIESTS.¹³ GEMARA. Now, the Tanna has just ended the treatise Makkoth; why does he study Shebu'oth?¹⁴ — Because he learned:¹⁵ For rounding the corners of the head¹⁶ the penalty of lashes is incurred twice, once for each corner;

(1) Lit., 'sanctuary'.

(2) They all equally atone for sins committed unconsciously, whether there was no knowledge at the beginning but knowledge at the end, or no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end; and for a clean man who ate unclean holy food.

(3) The Sages.

(4) If, for example, the goat set apart for offering on the Day of Atonement was lost, and was found only after another had been offered in its place, is it permissible to offer it up on a festival or new moon?

(5) Another version of R. Simeon b. Yohai's view.

(6) Because it is more inclusive.

(8) Extinction by divine intervention; v. Glos.

(9) Lit., 'the one to be sent away'.

(10) This apparent contradiction of the former statement is explained in the Gemara (13b).

(11) The bullock brought by the High Priest, Lev. XVI, 3-6.

(12) Whereas for Israelites the 'inner' and 'outer' goats bring atonement for these transgressions; the scapegoat, however, brings atonement both to Israelites and priests for all other transgressions.

(13) Disagreeing with the previous Tanna who holds that the scapegoat brings atonement to both Israelites and priests for other transgressions, he contends that the scapegoat is for Israelites only; the sprinkling of the blood of the 'inner' goat (attended by no confession) brings atonement to Israelites for transgressions connected with uncleanness; the confession over the scapegoat (attended by no blood sprinkling) brings atonement to Israelites for other transgressions. Similarly, the sprinkling of the blood of the bullock brings atonement to priests for transgressions connected with uncleanness; and the confession over the bullock brings atonement to them for other transgressions; v. 13b. seq.

(14) Shebu'oth follows immediately upon Makkoth in the Mishnah. What connection is there between the two treatises that the Tanna studies them in this order?

and for shaving the beard, five times, twice for each cheek,¹ and once for the point of the chin. Since he has been discussing a single prohibition involving two punishments, he continues with OATHS ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR. Why did the Tanna enumerate all the instances of 'two, subdivided into four' only in this treatise, and not in the treatise Shabbath, when discussing the laws of carrying, nor in the treatise Nega'im, when discussing the shades of leprous affections? — I will tell you: The laws of oaths and uncleanness are mentioned together in the Bible,² and are akin to each other in that their transgressor brings a 'sliding-scale' sacrifice;³ the Tanna therefore mentions them together here, and, having mentioned these two, he includes the rest also.

Having begun with the laws of oaths, why does the Tanna proceed to explain the laws of uncleanness first? Because the laws of uncleanness are few he disposes of them first; then he proceeds to explain the laws of oaths which are more numerous.

OATHS ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR. TWO: I shall eat; I shall not eat. SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR: I have eaten; I have not eaten.

THE LAWS CONCERNING THE DISCOVERY OF HAVING [UNCONSCIOUSLY] SINNED THROUGH UNCLEANNESS ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR. TWO: The discovery of having been unclean and partaken of holy food; and the discovery of having been unclean and entered the Temple [the uncleanness having been forgotten in both cases]. Subdivided INTO FOUR: The discovery that it was holy food he had eaten while being unclean [having forgotten that it was holy during the eating of it]; and the discovery that it was the Temple he had entered while being unclean [having forgotten it was the Temple at the time of entering].

THE LAWS CONCERNING CARRYING ON THE SABBATH ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR. TWO: The carrying out by the poor man; and the carrying out by the householder.⁴ SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR: The bringing in by the poor man; and the bringing in by the householder.

THE SHADES OF LEPROUS AFFECTIONS ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR. TWO: Se'eth and Bahereth. SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR: The derivative of Se'eth, and the derivative of Bahereth.⁵

Who is the Tanna of our Mishnah? — It is neither R. Ishmael nor R. Akiba! It is not R. Ishmael, for he states: He is guilty only when the oath is in the future tense.⁶ And it is not R. Akiba, for he states: He is guilty only in the cases where he forgets his uncleanness [while eating holy food or entering the Temple], but not in the cases where he forgets that it is the Temple he is entering [or that the food is holy while he is unclean].⁷

If you wish, I can say the Tanna of our Mishnah is R. Ishmael, or, if you prefer, I can say it is R. Akiba. It may be R. Ishmael. [Of the four kinds of oaths mentioned, not all are equally serious; but] two incur punishment, and the other two do not. Or, it may be R. Akiba. Two [of the cases of transgression through uncleanness] incur punishment, and two do not. In some cases there is no punishment?

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 3b

But does not the Tanna mention them together with the laws concerning the shades of leprosy: just as in these laws all four shades make him unclean, necessitating a sacrifice, so here [in the case of oaths and uncleanness] all must be equal, necessitating a sacrifice? — Verily, the Tanna is R. Ishmael; and though in the case of oaths R. Ishmael excludes the past tense, it is only to free the transgressor from bringing a sacrifice¹ [if he transgresses unwittingly], but not to free him from lashes [if he transgresses wilfully].² And this will be in accordance with Raba's dictum, for Raba said:³ Clearly did the Torah state that a false oath is like a vain oath⁴ [for lashes]; just as a vain oath which is necessarily in the past [being untrue the moment it is uttered, is attended by the penalty of lashes], so is a false oath in the past [attended by the penalty of lashes].

Granted in the case of the oaths, 'I have eaten,' 'I have not eaten,' [he is guilty and receives the lashes, if they are false], as Raba says. Also, in the case of 'I shall not eat,' and he ate, he is guilty [and receives lashes], for he has transgressed a negative precept involving action; but in the case of 'I shall eat,' and he did not eat, why should he receive lashes, since the transgression is of a negative precept involving no action?⁵ [Where then are the four kinds of punishable oaths?] — R. Ishmael holds that the violation of a negative precept not involving action is also punishable by lashes. If so, R. Johanan contradicts himself; for R. Johanan said: The rule is in accordance with the anonymous Mishnah;⁶ and yet we find it stated: 'I swear I shall eat this loaf today,' and the day passed, and he did not eat it; R. Johanan and Resh Lakish both say he does not receive lashes, R. Johanan's reason for his opinion being because it is a negative precept not involving action, and the transgression of a negative precept involving no action is not liable to lashes; and Resh Lakish's reason being because it is an 'uncertain warning',⁷ and an uncertain warning is not a warning — R. Johanan found another anonymous Mishnah [which agrees with his view] Which one? Is it the following anonymous Mishnah? For we learnt: 'But he who leaves over a portion of even a ritually clean paschal lamb; or breaks the bone of an unclean paschal lamb, does not receive the forty lashes.'⁸ Granted that he who breaks the bone of an unclean paschal lamb does not receive lashes, because it is written: Ye shall not break a bone thereof⁹ — of a ritually clean and not of a disqualified paschal lamb. But he who leaves over a portion of a clean paschal lamb — why should he be exempt, unless it be because he is transgressing a negative precept not involving action, and a negative precept not involving action is not liable to punishment? [This, then, is the anonymous Mishnah with which R. Johanan agrees.] But how do you know that this Mishnah is reflecting the view of R. Jacob, who holds that the violation of a negative precept involving no action is not punishable by lashes? Perhaps it is reflecting the view of R. Judah [b. Ila'i], who holds that this transgression is not punishable by lashes, because Scripture has come to appoint a positive precept to follow the negative precept,¹⁰ but otherwise it would be punishable by lashes. For it is taught: Ye shall let nothing remain until the morning; but that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire:¹¹ Scripture has come to appoint the positive precept to follow the negative precept to teach us that this negative precept is not punishable by lashes, — this is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Jacob says, this is not the reason;¹² but rather because it is a negative precept not involving action, and the disregard of a negative precept not involving action is not punishable by lashes.¹³ But he found the following anonymous Mishnah: 'I swear I shall not eat this loaf, I swear I shall not eat it;' and he ate it,

(2) According to this, our Mishnah, in enumerating four kinds of oaths, is referring to wilful transgression.

(3) V. infra 21a.

(4) A vain oath is an oath which is demonstrably untrue on the face of it, e.g., 'I swear this is gold' (pointing to a lump of wood or stone). A false oath is an oath which is not, on the face of it, demonstrably untrue, e.g., 'I swear I have eaten a loaf of bread.' It may be true; it is false only if he has not eaten.

(6) Which, in the present instance, is shown to be in accordance with R. Ishmael's view that a negative precept not involving action is liable to the punishment of the forty lashes.

(7) If a transgressor is not warned immediately before committing the sin, the punishment is not inflicted. In this case the actual moment of transgression is uncertain, for he has the whole day in which to fulfil his oath.

(12) Lit., 'not of the same denomination.'

(13) And since the exemption of the transgressor from lashes in the cited Mishnah may be due to R. Judah's reason and not R. Jacob's, the question remains, which is the anonymous Mishnah which supports R. Johanan?

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 4a

he is guilty of transgressing only one oath:¹ this is the 'useless oath'² for which the punishment of lashes is inflicted for wilful transgression, and the sliding-scale sacrifice for unwitting transgression.³ This is the oath for which the punishment of lashes is inflicted for wilful transgression, but in the case: 'I swear I shall eat,' and he did not eat, [we may deduce] he would not receive lashes. [Presumably because the transgression involves no action, and this anonymous Mishnah would be the one with which R. Johanan agrees.] Now, well! This Mishnah is anonymous, and our Mishnah is anonymous; why does R. Johanan prefer the ruling of this Mishnah rather than of ours? But [might it not be asked as a counter-question] even according to your argument, how can Rabbi⁴ himself agree with both? — At first, Rabbi held that a negative precept not involving action is punishable by lashes, and, therefore, stated the ruling of our Mishnah anonymously; afterwards, he held it is not so punishable, and stated the ruling of the second Mishnah anonymously, and [though he had changed his view] he allowed the first Mishnah to stand also.⁵

You have explained our Mishnah as being in accordance with R. Ishmael's view, and as referring to lashes for wilful transgression: if so, what lashes can there be in connection with the shades of leprosy? — There are lashes in the case where one cuts off his leprous spot; and as R. Abin said in the name of R. Ila'a; for R. Abin said in the name of R. Ila'a: Whenever there occur in Holy Writ the expressions 'take heed', 'lest', or 'do not', they are negative precepts.⁶ In connection with carrying on the Sabbath what lashes can there be? Is it not a negative precept which requires the warning that its violation is punishable by death?⁷ and every such negative precept is not punishable by lashes?⁸ — For this very reason we have explained the Mishnah as being in accordance with R. Ishmael's view, who holds that a negative precept requiring the death warning is [if the lashes warning be given] punishable by lashes.⁹ But, were it not for this, would it have been possible to explain the Mishnah as being in accordance with R. Akiba's view? [Surely not! For] has it not been shown that the laws of uncleanness in our Mishnah are not in accordance with his views? — But did you not say that even according to R. Ishmael, the Mishnah would have to be interpreted as referring to wilful transgressions involving the punishment of lashes; and, if so [were it not for the fact that R. Akiba holds that a negative precept requiring the death warning is not punishable by lashes, even if the lashes warning be given],¹⁰ we could just as easily have explained the Mishnah as being in accordance with R. Akiba's view, and as referring to lashes.¹¹

If so,¹² the phrase THE DISCOVERY OF HAVING SINNED THROUGH UNCLEANNESS [implying unconscious sinning] is inappropriate; the appropriate expression would be 'warnings against sinning through uncleanness'? — This question need cause no difficulty: the Tanna means 'the laws concerning the knowledge of the warnings against sinning' . . . If so, how can there be TWO, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR? There are only two!¹³ Further, WHERE THERE IS KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING AND AT THE END, BUT FORGETFULNESS BETWEEN . . . How can there be forgetfulness, if the Mishnah is referring to wilful transgression and lashes? Further, A 'SLIDING SCALE' SACRIFICE IS BROUGHT [obviously refers to wilful transgression]?¹⁴ — Hence, said R. Joseph, we must conclude that the Tanna of the Mishnah is Rabbi himself, who [as editor] incorporates the views of both Tannaim; for the laws of uncleanness he gives the view of R. Ishmael, and for the laws of oaths he gives the view of R. Akiba [the Mishnah referring accordingly to unwitting transgression]. Said R. Ashi: I repeated this statement [of R. Joseph's] to R. Kahana; and he said to me: Do not think that [R. Joseph meant that] Rabbi simply incorporated in the Mishnah the views of both Tannaim, he himself not agreeing; but the fact is that Rabbi himself, for a sufficiently good reason, agrees [with R. Ishmael in the laws of uncleanness and with R. Akiba in the laws of oaths]. For it is taught: Whence do we deduce that one is not liable [to bring a sacrifice] except when there is knowledge at the beginning and at the end and forgetfulness between? Scripture records: It was hidden from him — twice.¹⁵ This is the opinion of R. Akiba. Rabbi said: This deduction is not necessary. Scripture says:

(1) The first: for, having uttered the first oath, the loaf is already prohibited to him; and when he utters the second oath, he is, as it were, swearing to fulfil a mizvah [i.e., to fulfil the first oath]; and he who swears to fulfil a mizvah, and does not fulfil it, is not liable to punishment; v. infra 27a.

(3) Infra 27b.

(4) Rabbi Judah the Prince, redactor of the Mishnah. Why does he include both anonymous Mishnahs, if they contradict each other?

(5) Lit., 'the Mishnah was not removed from its place', Rabbi relying on the intelligence of the student to realise that the second Mishnah is the authoritative one. R. Johanan, therefore, agrees with the second Mishnah.

(6) Deut. XXIV, 8: Take heed in the plague of leprosy. Cutting off a leprous spot is therefore a violation of a negative precept, punishable by lashes.

(7) The violation of a negative precept is punishable only if the appropriate warning be given by witnesses.

(8) Even if the warning was, erroneously, that its violation was punishable by lashes.

(10) Ibid.

(11) And not to an offering.

(12) If the Mishnah refers to wilful transgression and lashes.

(13) Warnings: against eating holy food whilst unclean, and against entering the Temple whilst unclean.

(14) And the question, 'Who is the Tanna of our Mishnah?' still remains unanswered.

(15) Lev V, 2, 3. One being superfluous, it is to teach that the uncleanness was hidden from him after having been known to him (i.e., knowledge at the beginning); knowledge at the end is obviously necessary, otherwise how does he know to bring a sacrifice? (Tosaf).

it was hidden from him [i.e., forgotten], therefore, it must have been known to him at the beginning; then Scripture says: and he knows of it¹ [i.e., at the end], hence, knowledge is essential both at the beginning and at the end. If so, why does Scripture say: it was hidden from him — twice? — In order to make him liable both in the case of forgetfulness of the uncleanness, and in the case of forgetfulness of the Temple or holy food.²

Concerning the laws of uncleanness, then, Rabbi has his own reason; but concerning oaths, where we do not find that he gives a reason of his own, how do we know [that he holds OATHS ARE TWO, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR]? — It is a reasonable assumption; for, what is R. Akiba's reason for including oaths in the past tense for liability? — Because he expounds 'amplifications and limitations'³ We find that Rabbi also expounds 'amplifications and limitations'. For it is taught:⁴ Rabbi said: The first-born of man may be redeemed⁵ by all things except bonds; but the Rabbis⁶ said: The first-born of man may be redeemed by all things except slaves, bonds, and lands. What is Rabbi's reason? — He expounds [the verse in accordance with the principle of] 'amplifications and limitations': And those that are to be redeemed from a month old — the verse amplifies; according to thy valuation, five shekels of silver — the verse limits; shalt thou redeem — the verse again amplifies; since it amplifies, limits, and amplifies, it includes everything, and excludes only bonds. But the Rabbis expound [the verse in accordance with the principle of] 'generalisations and specifications': And those that are to be redeemed from a month old — the verse generalises; according to thy valuation, five shekels of silver — the verse specifies; shalt thou redeem — the verse again generalises; since it generalises, specifies, and generalises, you must include in the 'generalisation' only those things which are similar to the 'specification': just as the specification is clearly movable and of intrinsic value, so all things which are movable and of intrinsic value [may be used for redeeming the first-born]; but you must exclude lands, which are not movable, and slaves, which have been likened to lands,⁷ and bonds, which, though they are movable, are not of intrinsic value. [Hence, since Rabbi expounds 'amplifications and limitations', he agrees with R. Akiba.]

Rabina said to Amemar: Does Rabbi really expound ‘amplifications and limitations’? Surely, Rabbi expounds ‘generalisations and specifications’! For it is taught:⁸ [Then thou shalt take] an awl . . .⁹ Hence I deduce that an awl may be used; whence do I deduce also a sharp wooden prick, thorn, needle, borer, or stylus? — It is said: Thou shalt take — anything that may be taken by hand. This is the opinion of R. Jose, son of R. Judah. Rabbi said: and awl — just as an awl is of metal, so only those things which are of metal [may be used]. And we explained the reason for their argument thus: Rabbi expounds ‘generalisations and specifications’,¹⁰ and R. Jose son of R. Judah expounds

(2) This proves that the statement THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNES ARE TWO SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR represents the view of Rabbi.

(3) Infra 26a. R. Akiba expounds the verse (Lev. V, 4) thus: If any one swear clearly with his lips — ‘amplification; (i.e., all oaths); to do evil or to do good — ‘limitation’ (i.e., this particularisation limits the general statement to oaths which are similar to the particular in that they are in the future tense); Whatsoever it be that a man utter clearly with an oath — another ‘amplification’ (this additional general statement serves to amplify the particular, adding even oaths which are not similar to it, i.e., even those in the past tense, and excluding only swearing to transgress a precept).

(5) V. Num. XVIII, 15, 16.

(6) Representing the opinion of teachers in general. And those that are to be redeemed is a general statement, implying that they may be redeemed with all things; this is followed by a particular statement five shekels of silver, limiting redemption to that alone; then follows another general statement shalt thou redeem — apparently with all things. According to Rabbi, the particular (five shekels) implies that the first generalisation is to be taken as including all things which are similar to the particular, and the final generalisation adds even things which are not entirely similar to the particular, excluding only that which is most dissimilar. According to the Rabbis, the particular limits the first generalisation to that particular alone, excluding even similar things, but the final generalisation adds all similar things, excluding all things which are dissimilar. Though in this verse both generalisations precede the particular (and those that are to be redeemed from a month old shalt thou redeem, according to thy valuation, for five shekels of silver), the procedure is, in such a case, to assume that the particular is between the two generalisations. Rabbi’s method of exposition is called ‘amplification and limitation’ (Ribbu u-Mi’ut ריבוי ומיעוט); the other is called ‘generalisation and specification’ (Kelal u-ferat כלל ופרט). The former is more inclusive than the latter.

(7) Lev. XXV, 46: And ye may make them (the slaves) and inheritance for your children, to hold for a possession.

(9) Deut. XV, 17, referring to a Hebrew slave who does not desire to be set free at the end of six years.

(10) Explaining the verse thus: Thou shalt take — a ‘generalisation’; an awl — a ‘specification’; and thrust it through his ear and into the door — another ‘generalisation’ (i.e., anything that may be thrust); in such a case, only those things which are similar to the specification (in the present instance, made of metal) are included. But R. Jose includes everything, excluding only the use of a poison which is powerful enough to bore a hole.

‘amplifications and limitations’.¹

True, elsewhere he expounds ‘generalisations and specifications’, but here [in connection with the redemption of the first-born he expounds ‘amplifications and limitations’, and] his reason is that which was taught in the Academy of R. Ishmael, for in the Academy of R. Ishmael it was taught:² In the waters, in the waters — twice.³ This is not ‘generalisation and specification’, but ‘amplification and limitation’. And the Rabbis [who disagree with Rabbi in connection with the redemption of the first-born — what is their reason]? Rabina said: They agree with the Western [Palestinian] Academies who hold that where there are two general statements followed by a particular, the particular should be regarded as being between the two general statements, and the verse may then be expounded on the principle of ‘generalisations and specifications’.

Now that you say that Rabbi [as a general rule] expounds ‘generalisations and specifications’, the difficulty concerning oaths [in our Mishnah] necessarily remains.⁴ We must perforce say, therefore, that [in the Mishnah] he gives R. Akiba's view on oaths, but he himself does not agree.

To revert to the main subject:⁵ ‘Whence do we deduce that one is not liable except when there is knowledge at the beginning and at the end and forgetfulness between? Scripture records: It was hidden from him — twice. This is the opinion of R. Akiba. Rabbi said: This deduction is not necessary. Scripture says: It was hidden from him, — therefore it must have been known to him at the beginning; then Scripture says: And he knows of it [i.e., at the end], hence, knowledge is essential both at the beginning and at the end. If so, why does Scripture say: it was hidden from him — twice: — In order to make him liable both in the case of forgetfulness of the uncleanness, and in the case of forgetfulness of the Temple or holy food.’

The Master said: ‘And it was hidden from him, therefore it must have been known to him’. How do you conclude this? Raba said: Because it is not written: ‘and it is hidden from him’.⁶ Abaye said to him: If so, in connection with the wife suspected of infidelity, when Scripture says: And it was hidden from the eyes of her husband,⁷ will you reason from this also that he knew at the beginning? [Surely not, for] if he knew, the waters would not test her, as it is taught: And the man shall be clear from iniquity, and that woman shall bear her iniquity:⁸ when the man is clear from iniquity, the waters test his wife; but when the man is not clear from iniquity,⁹ the waters do not test his wife.¹⁰ And further, in connection with the Torah it is written: It is hid¹¹ from the eyes of all living, and from the birds of the heavens it is kept secret;¹² will you conclude from this that they knew it? [Surely not, for] it is written: Man knows not the value thereof.¹³ Of necessity then, said Abaye, Rabbi holds that the knowledge gained from a teacher¹⁴ is also called knowledge. But if so, said R. Papa to Abaye, the statement in the Mishnah WHERE THERE IS NO KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING, BUT THERE IS KNOWLEDGE AT THE END [is incomprehensible, for] is there anyone who has not even the knowledge gained from a teacher? He replied: Yes! it is possible in a child taken into captivity among heathen.

THE LAWS CONCERNING CARRYING ON THE SABBATH ARE OF TWO KINDS, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR. We learnt there:¹⁵ The laws concerning carrying on the Sabbath are two, subdivided into four inside;¹⁶ and two, subdivided into four outside.¹⁷ Why does our Mishnah here state simply: TWO, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR, and nothing else, whereas the Mishnah there states: Two, subdivided into four inside; and two, subdivided into four outside? — The Mishnah there deals mainly with the Sabbath laws, and therefore mentions the Principals and Derivatives, but our Mishnah here, which is not concerned mainly with the Sabbath laws mentions the Principals only and not the Derivatives. Which are the principals? — Carrying out: the laws of carrying out are only two.¹⁸ [and our Mishnah says: TWO, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR]! And perhaps you will say, [our Mishnah means] two hoza'oth [carrying out] which are punishable, and two which are not.¹⁹ [That is not possible, for] they are mentioned together with the shades of leprous affections, and just as those are all punishable, so are these? — We must necessarily say, said R. Papa, that the other Mishnah, which deals mainly with the Sabbath laws, mentions those which are punishable, and those which are not; but our Mishnah mentions only those which are punishable, and not those which are not. Which are those that are punishable? Carrying out: these are only two!²⁰ The Mishnah means two hoza'oth and two haknasoth. But the Mishnah says hoza'oth!²¹ — Said R. Ashi: The Tanna calls haknasah also hoza'ah. How do you know?

(1) Which shows that Rabbi does not expound ‘amplifications and limitations’, and that therefore he does not agree with R. Akiba.

(3) Lev. XI, 9: These may ye eat of all that are in the waters: whatsoever hath fins and scales in the waters, in the seas, and in rivers, them may ye eat. In the waters is a general statement; in the seas and in the rivers is a particular. In this verse the particular is not between the two general statements, but follows them. In such a case, R. Ishmael's Academy assert, the verse is expounded on the principle of 'amplifications and limitations'. Rabbi agrees, and he therefore expounds similarly the verse about the redemption of the first-born.

(4) For if Rabbi does not expound 'amplifications and limitations' he cannot agree with R. Akiba, who includes oaths in the past tense.

(14) The theoretical knowledge that one who touches an unclean thing becomes unclean is also considered knowledge for the purpose of 'knowledge at the beginning', even if he did not realise at the moment of touching the unclean thing that he had become unclean. According to this, there is always 'knowledge at the beginning', the only exception being the case of a child taken into captivity among heathen.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 5b

— Because we learnt: He who carries out from one domain to another domain [on the Sabbath] is guilty.¹ And are we not concerned there also with bringing in, and yet he calls it hoza'ah.? [No!] Perhaps [the Tanna means] carrying out from a private domain to a public domain. — If so, let him say distinctly: He who carries out from a private domain to a public domain [is guilty]; why does he say: 'from one domain to another domain'? Obviously, to include even bringing in from a public domain to a private domain; and he calls it hoza'ah — What is the reason? — The withdrawing of an object from its place the Tanna calls hoza'ah. Rabina said: The Mishnah also lends support to this view, for it states: The laws of carrying [Yezi'oth] on the Sabbath are two, subdivided into four inside; and two, subdivided into four outside: and it goes on to explain haknasah [bringing in]!² This is conclusive. Raba said: The Tanna means domains; there are two kinds of domain³ with regard to carrying on the Sabbath.

THE SHADES OF LEPROUS AFFECTIONS ARE TWO, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR. We learnt there:⁴ the shades of leprous affections are two, subdivided into four: Bahereth intensively white, like snow; secondary to it [i.e., its derivative], Sid ha-hekal; Se'eth like white wool; secondary to it, Kerum bezah.⁵ R. Hanina said: the Tanna who stated this Mishnah of leprous affections⁶ is not R. Akiba; for, if it were R. Akiba, then, since elsewhere he enumerates them one above the other,⁷ Sid hekal cannot combine with any other shade; for, with which shade will you combine it? Will you combine it with Bahereth? There is Se'eth which is [one degree] higher than it [intervening, Bahereth being two degrees higher]. Will you combine it with Se'eth.? It is not its derivative. If so, Kerum bezah also — with what will you combine it? Will you combine it with Se'eth? There is Sid which is [one degree] higher than it [intervening, Se'eth being two degrees higher]. Will you combine it with Sid? It is not of its kind.⁸

(2) The poor man, having withdrawn an object from public territory, stretches out his hand into the house, and hands it to the householder; the poor man is guilty. V. Mishnah, Shah. 2a.

(3) Public and private, which produce four punishable transgressions, two hoza'oth and two haknasoth. Raba endeavours to explain why the Tanna uses the word yezi'oth and not hoza'oth; and he explains that it means 'goings out', i.e., roads or paths which go out or lead out, and is therefore equivalent to domains (Tosaf).

(5) V. supra Mishnah, note 4.

(6) In the form of principals and derivatives, implying that a principal combines with its derivative to form the requisite size of כְּגַרְיִם garis, bean, to mark the person thus afflicted a leper.

(7) According to their degree of whiteness — Bahereth, Se'eth, Sid, Kerum; holding that two shades, if separated by only one degree, may combine.

(8) For Sid and Kerum are derivatives of two different principals.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 6a

This is no question: without Sid hekal, Kerum bezah would present no difficulty, for, although Kerum bezah is [two degrees] lower than Se'eth, Scripture says: For Se'eth and for Sappahath.¹ Sappahath is secondary to Se'eth although it is much [i.e., two degrees] lower. But Sid hekal presents a difficulty: [with what shade can it combine?] Obviously, then, our Mishnah [in making Sid secondary to Bahereth, and Kerum secondary to Se'eth] is not in accordance with R. Akiba's view.

And where have we heard R. Akiba [enumerating the shades of leprosy] one above the other? Shall we say, in the following [Baraita], where it is taught that R. Jose said: Joshua, the son of R. Akiba, asked R. Akiba. 'Why did they say the shades of leprous affections are two, subdivided into four?' He replied. 'What should they say?' 'They should say', [said his son, 'All shades] from Kerum bezah and upwards are unclean'. He replied. '[The Rabbis stated the law in the form of two, subdivided into four] so that we may deduce that they combine with each other.' His son argued. 'They could have said. "[All shades] from Kerum bezah and upwards are unclean, and combine with each other".' He replied. '[The Rabbis stated it in the form of two, subdivided into four] to teach us that a priest who is not well versed in them and their names is not competent to inspect the leprous shades.' Now, [in his question], Joshua did not suggest [that they could have said that the shades from Kerum bezah and upwards are unclean and combine, and the shades] from Sid hekal and upwards are unclean and combine. And because he did not say this, we may deduce that he had heard that R. Akiba held that they all combine with Se'eth,² [But this is not conclusive], as [R. Akiba may perhaps hold that] Se'eth combines with its derivative, and Bahereth with its derivative.³ Well, then from R. Hanina's statement [we may deduce that R. Akiba enumerates the shades one above the other], for R. Hanina said: To what may R. Akiba's statement be compared? — To four tumblers of milk; into one there fell two drops of blood; into the second, four drops; into the third, eight drops; and into the fourth, twelve drops — some say, sixteen drops. They are all shades of white, but one above the other. [No!]⁴ When did you hear R. Akiba holding this view — only in connection with variegated leprosy,⁵ but did you hear it in connection with plain [white leprosy]? And if you will say that, just as he holds this view in connection with variegated leprosy, so he holds it in connection with plain; are you really sure that he holds it [even] in connection with variegated leprosy? Is it not taught: R. Akiba says: the redness in this and in that [Bahereth and Se'eth] is like wine mixed with water, except that Bahereth is white like snow, and Sid is fainter than it.

(1) Lev. XIV, 56: For a rising and for a scab. Sappahath (translated 'scab') is from a root meaning 'to Join', 'be added

- to'. It is here taken to denote that which is joined, attached to Se'eth (translated 'rising'), i.e., its derivative Kerum bezah.
- (2) Because he suggests that the Rabbis could have said: the shades from Kerum and upwards are unclean and combine: without differentiating a derivative for Bahereth and a derivative for Se'eth. Hence we may deduce that Se'eth has two derivatives, Sid and Kerum (because Sappahath, which implies derivatives, is connected with Se'eth in Holy Writ), both of which combine with it and each other, and that Bahereth being only one degree higher than Se'eth also combines with Se'eth; but Bahereth has no derivative. Thus R. Akiba holds they are one above the other.
- (3) And Joshua really asked: Let them say the shades from Kerum and upwards and from Sid and upwards are unclean and combine; but R. Jose was not particular to quote him verbatim.
- (4) Neither is this conclusive.
- (5) Reddish-white; v. Lev. XIII, 19

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 6b

And if it is [as you say, that R. Akiba holds they are one above the other, i.e., Bahereth, then Se'eth], he should have said: White wool [i.e., Se'eth] is fainter than it? — That is so [R. Akiba really said Se'eth, and not Sid]. And so said R. Nathan: R. Akiba did not say: Sid is fainter than it, but white wool [i.e., Se'eth] is fainter than it.

And how do we know that Bahereth is brilliantly white? Abaye said: Because Scripture says: And if the bright spot be white . . .¹ That is white and no other is [as] white [as it].

Our Rabbis taught: Bahereth is deep; and so Scripture says: And the appearance thereof [of the Bahereth] is deeper than the skin² — like the appearance of the sun which is deeper than the shade. Se'eth: Se'eth denotes high; and so Scripture says: Upon all the high mountains and upon all the hills that are lifted up.³ Sappahath: Sappahath denotes an attachment [i.e derivative]; and so Scripture says: And he shall say: Attach me, I pray thee, [to one of the priest's offices].⁴ We find a derivative for Se'eth.⁵ Whence do we deduce that there is a derivative for Bahereth.⁶ R. Zera said: The word 'white' is mentioned with Se'eth,⁷ and the word 'white' is mentioned with Bahereth.⁸ Just as the 'white' mentioned with Se'eth has a derivative, so the 'white' mentioned with Bahereth has a derivative.⁹ In a Baraita it is taught: Scripture put Sappahath¹⁰ between Se'eth and Bahereth¹¹ to teach you that just as there is a derivative for Se'eth, so there is a derivative for Bahereth.

Se'eth is like white wool. What white wool? — R. Bibi said that R. Assi said: Clean wool of a new-born lamb which is covered, up [to be made] into a cloak of fine wool.¹²

R. Hanina said: The Rabbis' enumeration [of the four shades] — to what may it be likened? To two Kings and two Governors: the King of this is higher than the King of that; and the Governor of this is higher than the Governor of that.¹³ But this [enumeration] is one above the other!¹⁴ — Well then, the King of this is higher than his own Governor; and the King of that is higher than his own Governor.¹⁵ R. Adda bar Abba said: It is like King, Alkafta,¹⁶ Rufila,¹⁷ and Resh Galutha.¹⁸ But this is one above the other! Well then, it is like King, Rufila, Alkafta, and Resh Galutha. Raba said: It is like King Shapur and Caesar.¹⁹ R. Papa said to Raba: Which of them is greater? He replied: You eat in the forest!²⁰ Go forth and see whose authority is greater in the world; for it is written: It shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.²¹ Said R. Johanan: This is wicked Rome²² whose authority is recognised all over the world. Rabina said: It is like a [new white] woollen garment, and a worn-out woollen garment; and a [new white] linen garment, and a worn-out linen garment.²³

WHERE THERE IS KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING ETC. Our Rabbis taught: How do we know that Scripture [in demanding a sliding scale sacrifice for uncleanness] refers only to cases where the Temple is entered or holy food eaten while unclean?²⁴ — There is a good argument for this deduction. Scripture warns against uncleanness,²⁵ and punishes it,²⁶ and also enacts that a sacrifice be brought for uncleanness.²⁷ Now just as Scripture, in warning against uncleanness and punishing it, did so only in cases where the Temple was entered or holy food eaten while unclean; so when it enacted that a sacrifice be brought for uncleanness, it did so only in cases where the Temple was entered or holy food eaten. Then let us include Terumah²⁸ [for sacrifice, if eaten while unclean], since Scripture also warned [against its being eaten while unclean] and punished [the transgressor with death by divine intervention]?²⁹ — We do not find that the sin for which the death penalty by divine intervention is inflicted [for wilful transgression] should be punishable by sacrifice [for unwitting transgression].³⁰ You may say it is only the case in regard to a fixed sacrifice, but

(13) Bahereth, the King (i.e., principal) of Sid, is higher than Se'eth, the King of Kerum; and Sid, the Governor (i.e., second in command) of this King (Bahereth), is higher than Kerum, the Governor of that King (Se'eth). According to this, the order is: Bahereth, Se'eth, Sid, Kerum.

(14) Which is R. Akiba's and not the Rabbis' enumeration.

(18) Chief of the Babylonian Jews.

(19) I.e., Persian King and Roman Emperor, each having an adjutant.

(20) You live in a forest, and know not what is going on in the world. Surely you know that the Roman Emperor is greater! R. Papa, however, asked the question, because Raba had mentioned Shapur before Caesar. Raba had done so, because he was a Persian subject.

(23) New garments are whiter than worn-out ones. New woollen and linen garments are closer to each other in whiteness than are the new and worn-out garments of each kind; so the two principals are, according to the Rabbis, nearer to each other than are principal and derivative of each kind.

(24) Lev. V, 2. The verse merely states: If anyone touch any unclean thing . . . , making no mention of eating holy food or entering the Temple while unclean.

(25) Num. V, 2-3: Command the Children of Israel that they put out of the camp . . . whosoever is unclean . . . that they defile not their camp; this is explained (Pes. 67a) as a warning against entering the Temple while unclean. Lev. XXII, 4: He shall not eat of the holy things until he be clean; this is the warning against eating holy food while unclean.

(26) With Kareth for willing transgression; Num. XIX. 13: Whosoever toucheth the dead . . . and purifieth not himself — he hath defiled the tabernacle of the Lord — that soul shall be cut off; this is the punishment for entering the Temple while unclean. Lev. VII, 20: Anyone that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings . . . having his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be cut off; this is the punishment for eating holy food while unclean.

(27) For unwitting transgression.

(28) The priest's share of the produce, which is holy in a minor degree; v. Glos.

(29) מיתה Mithah, as distinct from Kareth (v. Glos.). Lev. XXII, 4: He shall not eat of the holy things until he be clean; this is explained (Yeb. 74b) as being a warning also against eating Terumah while unclean, holy things including Terumah. Ibid. 9: They shall therefore keep My charge, lest they bear sin for it, and die therein, if they profane it; this is the punishment for eating Terumah while unclean.

(30) When wilful transgression is punished by Kareth, unwitting transgression is punished by sacrifice (Hor. 8a).

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 7a

a sliding scale sacrifice should perhaps be, as in the case of 'hearing the voice of adjuration'¹ and 'swearing clearly with the lips'² [where a sliding scale sacrifice is brought for unwitting transgression, though neither Kareth nor death [by divine intervention] is inflicted for wilful transgression]? — Scripture says: [Whatsoever his uncleanness be] by which [he becomes unclean].³ By which, excludes Terumah.⁴ Let us rather say that by which excludes Temple [and holy food] in that a sliding scale sacrifice shall not suffice, but a fixed sacrifice be necessary? Raba said of Rabbi: He draws water from deep pits;⁵ for it was taught: Rabbi said: I read, [If any one touch any unclean thing, whether it be the carcass of an unclean] beast [or the carcass of unclean cattle . . .].⁶ Why should cattle be written?⁷ — [To deduce the following:] Here it is said unclean cattle, and further on it is said unclean cattle.⁸ Just as there it refers to eating holy food while unclean, so here it refers to eating holy food while unclean. Thus we deduce the law regarding eating holy food while unclean; whence do we deduce the law regarding entering the Temple while unclean? — Scripture says: She shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary.⁹ Sanctuary is equated with holy food. — If so, Terumah also [should be included for sliding scale sacrifice, if eaten while unclean], for it has been said that she shall touch no hallowed thing includes Terumah?¹⁰ — [No!] Scripture limits the application of the law by the expression, by which.¹¹ — Let us say that the expression by which excludes Temple [and not Terumah]? — It is reasonable not to exclude Temple, because the same punishment, Kareth, is inflicted [for wilfully entering the Temple, or eating holy food, while unclean].¹² — On the contrary, Terumah should not be excluded, because the act of transgression consists of eating, just as in the case of holy food [whereas in the case of the Temple, it is entering it which constitutes the transgression]? Well then, said Raba:¹³ Why is the punishment of Kareth for eating peace offerings [i.e., holy food] while unclean mentioned three times in Holy Writ?¹⁴ — Once for a general statement,¹⁵ once for a particular, and once for the uncleanness written in the Torah without being defined,¹⁶ so that I know not what it means. You may say, then, it means eating holy food while unclean; and since it is unnecessary to have another prohibition for eating holy food while unclean, for I deduce that from Rabbi's statement, you may utilise the prohibition for entering the Temple while unclean. — But this [extra Kareth] we require for R. Abbahu's deduction! For R. Abbahu said: Why does Scripture mention Kareth three times for eating peace offerings [while unclean]? — Once for a general statement, once for a particular, and once for things which are not eaten.¹⁷ And according to R. Simeon who holds that things which are not eaten are not punishable by Kareth if eaten during uncleanness,¹⁸ [we still require the extra Kareth to deduce that] the 'inner' sin offerings¹⁹ are included,²⁰ for we might have thought that, since R. Simeon holds that sacrifices which are not offered on the outer altar, as are peace offerings, are not subject to the law of piggul,²¹ therefore they are also not subject to the law of uncleanness;²² he therefore teaches us that they are. [The third Kareth, then, is necessary for this deduction. How then shall we deduce that an unclean person entering the Temple brings a sliding scale sacrifice?] — Well then, the Nehardeans say in the name of Raba:²³ Why does Scripture mention 'uncleanness' three times²⁴ in connection with peace offerings? — Once for a generalisation, once for a particular, and once for the uncleanness written in the Torah without being explained, so that I know not what it means. You may say then, it refers to eating holy food while unclean, and since it is unnecessary to have another prohibition for that, for I deduce that from Rabbi's statement, you may utilise the prohibition for entering the Temple while unclean. But this [extra word 'uncleanness'] we also require; since Scripture had to write [the extra] Kareth for R. Abbahu's deduction, it perforce had to write also [the extra] 'uncleanness', for without it the phrase would have been meaningless? — Well then, said Raba: We deduce [that an unclean person entering the Temple brings a sliding scale sacrifice] from [the similarity of phrases] 'his uncleanness', 'his uncleanness'. Here it is written: [If he touch the uncleanness of man] whatsoever his uncleanness be.²⁵

- (15) Lev. XXII, 3: Whosoever he be . . . that approacheth unto the holy things. This is a generalisation — holy things; Lev. VII, 20: Anyone that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of the peace offerings. This is a particular specification — peace offerings. Now, peace offerings are included in holy things: why should they be specified separately? — In order that we may deduce that only holy things which are sacrificed on the altar (as are peace offerings) are included in the law regarding uncleanness, but offerings for the Temple repair are excluded. (Rashi.)
- (16) The Kareth in Lev. VII, 21, being superfluous, is for the purpose of teaching that it is the punishment for the witting transgression of that sin (eating holy food while unclean), the unwitting transgression of which is punished by a sliding scale sacrifice in Lev. V, 2 (which is there not fully defined). And since we already know that unwittingly eating holy food while unclean punishable by a sliding scale sacrifice (from Rabbi's deduction, v. supra), we may apply the superfluous Kareth for deducing that it is the punishment for the witting transgression of that sin, the unwitting transgression of which is punishable by a sliding scale sacrifice, i.e., entering the Temple while unclean (for, eating holy food while unclean we already know).

- (21) Zeb. 43a. פִּיגּוּל (abomination, Lev. VII, 18; XIX, 7, 8) is a sacrifice left over beyond the time limit for its consumption; its eating is punishable by Kareth. Piggul is mentioned only in connection with peace offerings. The 'inner' sin offerings, according to R. Simeon, are, therefore, not subject to the law of piggul.
- (22) Anyone eating an 'inner' sin offering while unclean would not be liable to Kareth for witting transgression, or sliding scale sacrifice for unwitting transgression.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 7b

And there it is written: He shall be unclean; his uncleanness is yet upon him.¹ Just as there it refers to entering the Temple while unclean,² so here it refers to entering the Temple while unclean. — If so, why is the expression by which necessary?³ — To include [that he who eats] the carcass of a clean bird⁴ [and enters the Temple or eats holy food must bring a sliding scale sacrifice]. — But you said that by which is intended to exclude [and not include]! For the very reason that it does exclude it is superfluous: it is written: Or if he touch [the uncleanness]⁵ — this implies that only that which defiles by touch is included [in the regulation of the sliding scale sacrifice], but that which does not defile by touch is not included.⁶ Then it is written also: by which⁷ which implies limitation. We have, then, limitation after limitation; and limitation after limitation serves to amplify.⁸ WHERE THERE IS KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING BUT NOT AT THE END, THE GOAT THE BLOOD OF WHICH IS SPRINKLED WITHIN THE VEIL etc.

Our Rabbis taught: And he shall make atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleannesses of the Children of Israel . . .⁹ It is possible in this phrase to include three types of uncleanness — the uncleanness of idolatry, the uncleanness of incest, and the uncleanness of bloodshed. Of idolatry the verse says: [He hath given of his seed unto Molech] to defile My sanctuary.¹⁰ Of incest it says: Ye shall keep My charge, that ye do not any of these abominable customs . . . that ye defile not yourselves therein.¹¹ Of bloodshed it says: And thou shalt not defile the land.¹² Now, I might have thought that for these three types of uncleanness this ['inner'] goat atones, therefore the text says: Of the uncleannesses of the Children of Israel,¹³ and not 'all the uncleannesses'. [These three are excluded, because] what [uncleanness] do we find that the text has differentiated from all other uncleannesses? — You must say, it is the uncleanness of [the transgressor who enters] the Temple or [eats] holy food;¹⁴ so here also [the text in stating that the inner goat atones for the transgression of the laws of uncleanness refers to] the uncleanness connected with Temple and holy food.¹⁵ This is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Simeon says: From its own text it may be deduced, for it says. And he shall make atonement for the holy place, of the uncleannesses . . ., [i.e.,] of the uncleannesses of the holy place.¹⁶ Now, I might have thought that for every uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food¹⁷ this goat atones, therefore the text says: And of their transgressions, even all their sins¹⁸ — sins are equated with transgressions; just as transgressions are not liable for sacrifice,¹⁹ so sins [in this verse] are those which are not liable for sacrifice.²⁰ And how do we know that [only] when there is knowledge at the beginning and not at the end does this goat hold the sin in suspense?²¹ — Because the text says, even all their sins — implying sins for which a sin offering may ultimately be brought.²²

The Master stated: 'It is possible in this phrase²³ to include three types of uncleanness — the uncleanness of idolatry, the uncleanness of incest, and the uncleanness of bloodshed.' With reference to idolatry, how is it possible? If it was witting transgression, the transgressor suffers the death penalty;²⁴ if unwitting, he brings a sacrifice.²⁵ — [Yes, it may atone] for witting transgression without warning,²⁶ or unwitting transgression before it becomes known to him.²⁷

(2) Ibid: He hath defiled the Tabernacle of the Lord.

(3) V. supra p. 22, n. 5. It had been suggested that by which excludes Terumah; but that argument had been refuted; and now we find that we even require an extra deduction to include Temple; we should therefore not have included Terumah in any case, even without the limitation of by which.

(4) A dead clean bird defiles on being eaten, and not on being touched, as does a dead beast. V. Zeb. 69b.

(5) Lev. V, 3.

(6) Hence the carcass of a clean bird is automatically excluded.

(7) Ibid. Whatsoever his uncleanness be by which he is unclean. By which implies some limitation or exclusion.

(8) A double limitation is equivalent to an amplification, just as a double negative is equivalent to a positive. This is one of the thirty-two hermeneutical principles by which R. Eliezer, son of R. Jose the Galilean, expounds Holy Writ. In the present instance the double limitation serves to include that he who eats the carcass of a clean bird and enters the Temple or eats holy food must bring a sliding scale sacrifice.

(22) הטאתם which may be atoned for by הטאת; i.e., where there is knowledge at the beginning, but not at the end; a sacrifice is brought later when knowledge comes to the sinner. But where there is knowledge at the beginning, there is no possibility that a sacrifice may ultimately be brought.

(27) The inner goat will hold the sin in suspense till it become known to him, and he brings a sacrifice.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 8a

With reference to incest also, how is it possible? If it was witting transgression, the transgressor suffers the death penalty;¹ if unwitting, he brings a sacrifice.² — [Yes, it may atone] for witting transgression without warning, or unwitting transgression before it becomes known to him. With reference to bloodshed also, how is it possible? If it was witting transgression, the transgressor suffers the death penalty;³ if unwitting, he is exiled?⁴ — [Yes, it may atone] for witting transgression without warning, or unwitting transgression before it becomes known to him, or for cases where the punishment of exile is not inflicted.⁵

The Master has stated: 'I might have thought that for these three types of uncleanness this goat atones, therefore the text says, of the uncleannesses, and not "all the uncleannesses." What do we find that the text has differentiated from all other uncleannesses? — The uncleanness connected with Temple and holy food; so here also [the text refers to] the uncleanness connected with Temple and holy food. This is the opinion of R. Judah.' What is the differentiation [alluded to]? — [In that] he [alone]⁶ brings a sliding scale sacrifice.⁷ Then include idolatry;⁸ and as to the differentiation, it is in that the sinner brings a she-goat and not a lamb?⁹ — R. Kahana said: We mean a differentiation to relax,¹⁰ but this is a differentiation to restrict.¹¹

Then include a woman after childbirth, for the text differentiates in her case in that she brings a sliding scale sacrifice?¹² — R. Hoshai said: [The verse says,] all their sins,¹³ and not 'all their uncleannesses.' And according to R. Simeon b. Yohai who said that a woman after childbirth is also a sinner,¹⁴ what shall we say?¹⁵ — R. Simeon is consistent in that he holds 'from its own text it may

Then include a leper [who also brings a sliding scale sacrifice]?¹⁷ — R. Hoshaia said [the verse says]: all their sins; and not ‘all their uncleannesses’.¹⁸ And according to R. Samuel b. Nahman who said, for seven sins leprosy afflicts man,¹⁹ what shall we say?²⁰ — There the leprosy itself atones for him;²¹ and the sacrifice is merely to permit him to join the congregation. Then include a Nazirite²² who has become unclean, for the text differentiates in his case in that he brings turtledoves or young pigeons?²³ — R. Hoshaia said [the verse says]: all their sins, and not ‘all their uncleannesses.’²⁴ And according to R. Eleazar ha-Kappar who said that a Nazirite is also a sinner,²⁵ what shall we say?²⁶ — He agrees with R. Simeon who holds that ‘from its own text it may be deduced.’²⁷

The Master has stated: ‘R. Simeon said from its own text it may be deduced, for it says: And he shall make atonement for the holy place, of the uncleannesses . . . of the uncleannesses of the holy place.’ R. Simeon argues well. [Why then does not] R. Judah [accept this deduction]?²⁸ — He may say to you that [and he shall make atonement . . .] is required [to teach us] that just as he does in the Holy of Holies,²⁹ so shall he do [outside the veil] in the Temple. And how does R. Simeon [deduce this]? — He deduces it from and so shall he do.³⁰ And R. Judah [cannot he also deduce it from this phrase? — No!] From this phrase we might have thought that he must bring another bullock and goat to do [the service outside the veil in the Temple], therefore the text teaches us [and he shall make atonement for the holy place, implying that he shall use the same bullock and goat, and so shall he do means that he shall repeat the service outside the veil]. And R. Simeon [why does he not agree with this argument of R. Judah? — Because the phrase] and so shall he do for the tent of meeting implies everything.³¹

The Master stated: ‘I might have thought that for every uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food this goat atones, therefore the text says: and of their transgressions, even all their sins [- sins are equated with transgressions; just as transgressions are not liable for sacrifice, so sins in this verse are those which are not liable for sacrifice: but a sin which is liable for sacrifice is excluded, i.e., the inner goat does not atone for it].’³² Which is it [that is excluded]? Where there is knowledge at the beginning and at the end. [Surely for such a sin] the transgressor must bring a sliding scale sacrifice!³³ The deduction is not necessary save in the case where the sin becomes known to the transgressor near sunset [on the eve of the Day of Atonement].³⁴ I might have thought that [in the meantime] until he brings his sacrifice,

(10) A sliding scale sacrifice is an act of leniency on the part of Holy Writ enabling the sinner to bring an offering according to his means (v. p. 1, n. 7) — a differentiation characteristic of the inner goat of the Day of Atonement, which is a sacrifice bought from public funds, and secures for the individual sinner the suspension of his sin.

Therefore the phrase and he shall make atonement for the holy place, of the uncleannesses is superfluous, and hence may of be utilised for the deduction that the inner goat atones only for the uncleannesses of the holy place, i.e., Temple and holy food.
- (32) V. supra p 26.
- (33) Why then do we require the deduction to exclude such a sin from the atonement effected by the inner goat.

the inner goat should hold the sin in suspense, therefore the text teaches us [that it does not].

The Master stated: 'How do we know that, when there is knowledge at the beginning and not at the end, this goat holds the sin in suspense?' 'How do we know'! What is his question?¹ — This is his question: Now that you say, 'sins are equated with transgressions: just as transgressions are not liable for sacrifice, so sins are those which are not liable for sacrifice;' you might logically argue, just as transgressions are never liable for sacrifice, so sins are those which are never liable for sacrifice; and which are they? Those where there is no knowledge at the beginning but knowledge at the end; but where there is knowledge at the beginning and not at the end, since, when the knowledge comes to him at the end, he is liable to bring a sacrifice, let us say that the inner goat should not hold the sin in suspense! And if you² should say, where there is no knowledge at the beginning but knowledge at the end, the outer goat together with the Day of Atonement atones?² — I might have thought that we should reverse [the atonements].³ Therefore the text says: even all their sins, so that we may infer that they are ultimately liable for a sin offering⁴ [i.e., the inner goat holds in suspense those sins where there is knowledge at the beginning but not at the end]. But why should it not atone completely [instead of merely holding the sin in suspense till he brings his sacrifice]? — If it had been written: '[And he shall make atonement . . . of their transgressions and] of their sins,'⁵ I should have agreed with you: but now that it is written: '[of their transgressions], even all their sins,' [the text means that it holds in suspense] such transgressions as may ultimately be atoned for by sin offerings.⁶

Now since it does not atone completely, what is the purpose of holding it in suspense? — R. Zera said: So that if he dies [before the knowledge comes to enable him to bring his sacrifice] — he dies without sin. Said Raba to him: If he dies, his death purges him from sin;⁷ but, said Raba, the inner goat [by holding the sin in suspense] shields him from suffering⁸ [until he brings his sacrifice].

WHERE THERE IS NO KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING BUT KNOWLEDGE AT THE END THE GOAT SACRIFICED ON THE OUTER ALTAR AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT ATONE, etc.

Now, they⁹ have been equated with each other; let the inner goat, then, atone for its own [where there is knowledge at the beginning and not at the end] and for that for which the outer goat atones [where there is no knowledge at the beginning but at the end], and the outcome of this would be [that there would be atonement] in such case where the outer goat was not sacrificed.¹⁰ [No!] The text says: [And Aaron shall make atonement upon the horns of it] once [in the year; with the blood of the sin offering of atonement once in the year shall he make atonement for it]:¹¹ one atonement it atones, but it does not effect two atonements. Well, let the outer goat atone for its own and for that for which the inner goat atones; and the outcome of this would be [that there would be atonement] in such case where uncleanness occurred between the offering of this [inner goat] and that [outer goat].¹² No! The text says: once in the year — this atonement shall be

(1) It has just been deduced that the inner goat atones for sins which are not liable for sacrifice, and such a sin is not liable for sacrifice at present.

(2) V. Mishnah: hence we know that the inner goat does not atone for it, and therefore, of necessity it will atone for the sin where there is knowledge at the beginning and not at the end, then why his question?

(3) Viz. the inner goat should atone for the sin where there is no knowledge at the beginning but knowledge at the end, because it is never liable for sacrifice; and the outer goat should hold in suspense the sin where there is knowledge at the beginning but not at the end.

(4) V. supra p. 27, n. 5.

(5) Cf. Lev. XVI, 16. ומפשעיהם ומהטאתם

(6) Sins is explanatory of transgressions, i.e., the inner goat atones for the transgressions until such time as they enter the category לכל הטאתם, i.e., until a sin offering is brought; therefore the inner goat atones temporarily, not permanently; in other words, it holds the sin suspense.

(7) Since it was an unwitting sin; death purges also certain witting transgressions for which repentance alone does not suffice, such as the profanation of the Name; v. Yoma 86a.

(8) For certain offences for which Kareth (v. Glos.) is the penalty repentance alone does not suffice, but sufferings are inflicted on the transgressor to purge him from his sin; v. Yoma 86a.

only once a year.¹

And according to R. Ishmael who holds that where there is no knowledge at the beginning but knowledge at the end the transgressor must bring a [sliding scale] sacrifice,² for which sin will the outer goat atone? For that where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end. But for this the goats offered on the festivals and New Moons make atonement!³ He agrees with R. Meir who holds that ALL THE GOATS GIVE EQUAL ATONEMENT FOR THE UNCLEANNES CONNECTED WITH THE TEMPLE AND HOLY FOOD. In that case, for what purpose was the outer goat equated with the inner?⁴ — [To teach us that] just as the inner does not atone for other sins, so the outer does not atone for other sins.

WHERE THERE IS NO KNOWLEDGE EITHER AT THE BEGINNING OR AT THE END THE FESTIVAL AND NEW MOON GOATS BRING ATONEMENT: THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. JUDAH [B. ILA'I].

Said Rab Judah that Samuel said: What is R. Judah's reason? — Because the text says: And one goat for a sin offering unto the Lord:⁵ for a sin which is known only to the Lord⁶ shall this goat atone. — But this [superfluous word] we require for the deduction of R. Simeon b. Lakish, for R. Simeon b. Lakish said: 'Why is the New Moon goat different in that [the phrase] onto the Lord is used in connection with it? — [Because] the Holy One, blessed be He, said: This goat shall be an atonement [for Me, as it were,] for my diminishing the size of the Moon!'⁷ — If so [for R. Simeon b. Lakish's deduction], the text could have said: '[a sin offering] for the Lord'; why 'to the Lord'? For our deduction. Then say that it is solely for this deduction [and eliminate R. Simeon b. Lakish's deduction]. If so, the text could have said: 'a sin offering of the Lord;' why 'to the Lord'? Hence we deduce both.

Let it [the New Moon goat] atone also for other sins [which are known only to the Lord, i.e., are unknown to the transgressor]! — In the school of R. Ishmael it was stated that since this [outer goat of the Day of Atonement] comes at a fixed season, and this [New Moon goat] comes at a fixed season; then, just as this [outer goat] atones only for the uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food,⁸ so this [New Moon goat] atones only for the uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food.

Thus we find [that] the New Moon goats [atone for this class of sin]; whence do we know [that] the festival goats [atone for it]? And if you will say that this also follows from the deduction of the school of R. Ishmael,⁹ it is possible to refute [this reasoning]: if [the deduction is made] from the New Moon [goat, it may be argued] that it is more frequent [than the festival goat, therefore it atones for this sin, but the festival goat may not atone for it]; and if [the deduction is made] from the Day of Atonement [goat, it may be argued] that the atonement of the Day is more inclusive,¹⁰ [therefore the outer goat of the Day atones for this sin, but the festival goat may not atone for it]. And if you will say,

(1) No other sacrifice can make this atonement.

(5) Num. XXVIII, 15: referring to the New Moon goat.

(6) But unknown to others, i.e., where there is no knowledge at all either at the beginning or at the end. This deduction is made because the text could have said: one goat for a sin offering; the words unto the Lord are superfluous.

(7) V. Hul. 60b: It is written: 'And God made the two great lights' (sun and moon — apparently equal); and it is written: 'the greater light' and 'the lesser light' (obviously unequal)! The moon said to the Holy One, blessed be He: 'How can two kings use one crown?' He replied: 'Go and diminish thyself'.

(8) For it has been equated with the inner goat: supra p. 2.

(9) The festival goat comes at a fixed season, and the New Moon goat comes at a fixed season, and the Day of Atonement goat comes at a fixed season: the first may be deduced from either of the other two.

(10) Atoning for all sins, whereas the festival does not atone; and though Holy Writ states clearly that the festival goat atones, it may be that it has not the power to atone for a sin (such as entering the Temple or eating holy food while unclean), the witting transgression of which is punishable by Kareth.

but we deduced the New Moon [goat] from the Day Of Atonement [goat],¹ and did not refute the argument, [therefore let us deduce the festival goat from the Day of Atonement goat; it may be said in reply that with reference to the New Moon goat] atonement is distinctly mentioned in the text [for a sin which is unknown to the transgressor];² and what we desired is merely an intimation [that only the unknown sins connected with Temple and holy food are intended]; but here it may be said that the whole law we cannot deduce.³ Well then, just as R. Hama b. Hanina said [elsewhere: the text could have said] 'one goat', [but it says] 'and one goat';⁴ so here [the text could have said] 'one goat', [but it says] 'and one goat';⁵ so that the festival goats are equated with the New Moon goats; just as the New Moon goats atone only for sins where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end,⁶ so the festival goats atone only for sins where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end.

The question was propounded: when R. Judah said [that the New Moon and festival goats atone] for sins where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end, does this statement apply only to a sin which will ultimately remain unknown [to the transgressor], but a sin which will ultimately become known⁷ is counted as if there were knowledge at the end, and consequently is atoned for by the outer goat [of the Day of Atonement] together with the Day of Atonement; or [does his statement include] even a sin which will ultimately become known, since actually at this moment it [is unknown and] may be termed a 'sin which is known only to the Lord'? — Come and hear: It has been taught: For sins where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end, and for a sin which will ultimately become known, the festival and New Moon goats atone: this is the opinion of R. Judah.

R. SIMEON SAYS THE FESTIVAL GOATS ATONE [FOR THIS CLASS OF SIN], BUT NOT THE NEW MOON GOATS. [AND FOR WHAT DO THE NEW MOON GOATS ATONE? FOR A RITUALLY CLEAN MAN WHO ATE HOLY FOOD THAT HAD BECOME UNCLEAN.]

R. Eleazar said that R. Oshaia said: What is R. Simeon's reason?⁸ — The verse says: And it hath He given you to bear the iniquity of the congregation.⁹ This verse refers to the New Moon goat;¹⁰ and we deduce [by analogy, because of the use of the identical word] iniquity, from the ziz:¹¹ here it is said iniquity, and there it is said iniquity;¹² just as there it refers to the uncleanness of the flesh,¹³ so here it refers to the uncleanness of the flesh.¹⁴ [But, since we deduce one from the other, let us say,] just as there it refers to offerings, so here it refers [only] to offerings,¹⁵ [and let it not atone for a clean man who ate unclean holy food. No!] It is written: 'the iniquity of the congregation'.¹⁶ Well now, we deduce one from the other; then let the New Moon goat atone for its own,¹⁷ and also do the work of the ziz, and the outcome would be [that there would be acceptance of the offering though unclean,] even when the ziz is broken? — [No!] the verse says: the iniquity¹⁸ — one iniquity it bears, but it does not bear two iniquities. Well then, let the ziz atone for its own¹⁹ and for that for which the New Moon goat atones, and the outcome would be [that there would be atonement] for uncleanness²⁰ which occurred between this [New Moon] and the next?²¹ [No!] the verse says: it²² hath He given you to bear the iniquity of the congregation — it bears the iniquity, but no other bears the iniquity. R. Ashi said: Here²³ it is written the iniquity of the congregation — congregation and not holy things; and there²⁴ it is written the iniquity of the holy things — holy things and not congregation.

Hence we find that the New Moon goats atone for a clean man who ate unclean holy food. How do we know that the festival goats atone for [sins of uncleanness] where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end? — As R. Hama b. Hanina said [elsewhere,²⁵ the text could have said:] 'one goat', [but it says:] 'and one goat'; so here [the text could have said:] 'one goat', [but it says:] 'and one goat'.²⁶

- (1) Just as this comes at a fixed season etc., supra p. 33.
- (2) Num. XXVIII, 15: a sin offering to the Lord, as explained above.
- (3) For, since it is necessary to deduce the whole law that the festival goats atone for these sins of uncleanness, the argument may be refuted: the Day of Atonement goat atones for these sins of uncleanness because its atonement is more inclusive, but the festival goats may not have the power to atone for sins which are punishable by Kareth for witting transgression.
- (4) Infra 10a.
- (5) Num. XXVIII, 22: the Passover goat; XXIX, 5: the New Year goat; XXIX, 16: the Tabernacles goat. In these verses the text has 'and one goat for a sin offering'; the superfluous, vav (ו) and, which is a conjunction, implies that the law with reference to these goats is connected with and is the same as that of the first mentioned goat, i.e., of the New Moon (XXVIII, 15). In connection with the Pentecost goat (XXVIII, 30) the text has 'one goat' (not and), but as long as and occurs in even one of the festivals, the other festivals may be likened to it: v. Tosaf.
- (6) This was deduced (supra 9a) from the phrase 'sin offering to the Lord', and by analogy from the Day of Atonement goat: just as this comes at a fixed season, etc.
- (7) E.g., if he was seen to become unclean and to enter the Temple, he will be told later.
- (8) For saying that the New Moon goat atones for a clean man who ate unclean holy food.
- (9) Lev. X, 17.
- (10) V. Zeb. 101b.
- (11) High Priest's plate of pure gold worn on the forehead: Ex. XXVIII, 36.
- (12) And it (the ziz) shall be upon Aaron's forehead, and Aaron shall bear the iniquity committed in the holy things; Ex. XXVIII, 38.
- (13) The ziz makes the sacrifice acceptable if the flesh or blood or fat had become unclean, and another need not be offered; but it does not atone for the uncleanness of the person offering the sacrifice: v. Men. 25b.
- (14) Hence, the New Moon goat atones for a clean man who ate unclean holy food.
- (15) The ziz does not atone for any sin, but makes the offering acceptable if it had become unclean. Let the atonement of the New Moon goat be limited likewise; it will be useful in the event of the ziz becoming broken.
- (16) Implying that it atones for sins committed by men.
- (17) For a clean man who ate unclean holy food.
- (18) 'It (the New Moon goat) hath He given you to bear the iniquity' (Lev. X, 17).
- (19) To make acceptable an offering the flesh of which had become unclean.
- (20) I.e., the guilt incurred by a clean man eating unclean holy food.
- (21) If the New Moon goat alone atones for this kind of sin, a clean man eating unclean holy food immediately after the New Moon would not have atonement until the next New Moon; but if the ziz atones, he will have immediate atonement, for the ziz is worn continually by the High Priest.
- (22) אִתָּהּ, the New Moon goat.
- (23) Lev. X, 17: referring to the New Moon goat; therefore it atones for a clean man who ate unclean holy food.
- (24) Ex. XXVIII, 38: referring to the ziz; therefore it makes acceptable an offering the flesh of which had become unclean.
- (25) Infra 10a.
- (26) Num. XXVIII, 22; XXIX, 5, 16: referring to the festival goats: and one goat for a sin offering. The 'and' connects and equates the festival goats with the New Moon goat mentioned in the text immediately before them.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 10a

Thus the festival goats are equated with the New Moon goats; just as the New Moon goats atone for something connected with holy things, so the festival goats atone for something connected with holy things. And if you should say, let them [the festival goats] atone for that for which the New Moon goat atones, [we would reply. No! for] we have said: it [hath He given to you to bear the iniquity] — it [the New Moon goat] bears the iniquity, and no other bears the iniquity. And if you should say, let them atone for that for which the Day of Atonement [outer] goat atones,¹ [we would reply. No! for] we have said: once in the year [shall he make atonement for it]² — this atonement [of the Day of Atonement outer goat] shall be only once a year. For what, then, do they [the festival goats] atone? If for a case where there is knowledge at the beginning and at the end, the transgressor must bring a [sliding scale] sacrifice? If for a case where there is knowledge at the beginning and not at the end, this is a case where the inner goat and the Day of Atonement hold the sin in suspense? If for a case where there is no knowledge at the beginning but at the end, for this the outer goat and the Day of Atonement atone? Of necessity, therefore, they [the festival goats] atone for a case where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end.

R. MEIR SAYS ALL THE GOATS HAVE EQUAL POWERS OF ATONEMENT, etc.

Said R. Hama b. Hanina: what is R. Meir's reason? — The text [could have] said: 'one goat', [but it says:] 'and one goat' — all the goats are thus equated with each other: the conjunction and adds to the preceding subject. It was at first assumed that each deduced [its additional powers of atonement] from its neighbour;³ [but that cannot be, for] R. Johanan said: In the whole Torah a law may be deduced by analogy from another law which has itself been deduced by analogy, except in the case of holy things, where a law may not be deduced by analogy from another law which has itself been deduced by analogy.⁴ — This need cause no difficulty: they may all deduce from the first.⁵ Granted, in every case where the text has 'and one goat',⁶ but in the case of Pentecost and the Day of Atonement where the text has not 'and one goat', how can we deduce [their laws]? — Well then, said R. Jonah, the verse says: 'These ye shall offer unto the Lord in your festivals'⁷ — all the festivals are equated with each other.⁸ But the New Moon is not a festival! Verily, the New Moon is also called a festival, as Abaye said [elsewhere], — for Abaye said Tammuz of that year⁹ they made a full month [of thirty days], as it is written: He hath called a solemn assembly [or, festival] against me to crush my young men.¹⁰

R. Johanan said: R. Meir agrees that the goat offered within [the veil on the Day of Atonement] does not atone their¹¹ atonements, nor do they atone his atonement. He does not atone their atonements: he atones one atonement, and does not atone two atonements;¹² they do not atone his atonement, for the verse says: once in the year [shall he make atonement]¹³ — this atonement shall be only once in the year. It was likewise taught [in a Baraitha]: For a case where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end, and for a case where there is no knowledge at the beginning but knowledge at the end, and for a clean man who ate unclean holy food, the festival goats and the New Moon goats and the goat offered outside [the veil on the Day of Atonement] bring atonement: this is the opinion of R. Meir. The inner goat, however, he leaves out, and that they [the others] atone [his atonement] he also leaves out.¹⁴

NOW, R. SIMEON SAYS THE NEW MOON GOATS ATONE FOR A CLEAN MAN WHO ATE UNCLEAN HOLY FOOD, etc.

Granted that the New Moon goats do not atone for that for which the festival goats atone, because the text says: [It hath He given you to bear] the iniquity¹⁵ — one iniquity it bears, but it does not bear two iniquities; but let the festival goats atone for that for which the New Moon goats atone? — [No!] The text says: it¹⁶ [hath He given you to bear the iniquity] — it bears the iniquity, but no other bears the iniquity.¹⁷ Granted that the festival goats do not atone for that for which the Day of Atonement goat atones, because the text says: once in the year [shall he make atonement]¹⁸ — this atonement shall be only once a year; but let the Day of Atonement goat atone for that for which the festival goats atone? [No!] The text says: [And Aaron shall make atonement upon the horns of it] once¹⁹ — one atonement it atones, but it does not atone two atonements. But once is written in connection with the inner goat [and not the outer]! — The text says: [One goat for a sin offering,]²⁰ beside

(2) Ex. XXX, 10; supra 8b.

(3) The Passover goat (Num. XXVIII, 22) is mentioned in Holy Writ immediately after the New Moon goat; it is equated with it, and therefore, like it, atones for a clean man who ate unclean holy food (R. Meir agreeing with R. Simeon that the New Moon goat atones for a clean man who ate unclean holy food.) The Tabernacles goat (Num. XXIX, 16), mentioned immediately after the Day of Atonement goat, is equated with it, and therefore, like it, atones for a case where there is no knowledge at the beginning but at the end; and the Day of Atonement goat, being equated with the Tabernacles goat, atones, like it, for a case where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end. Similarly, all the goats deduce the necessary laws from each other, each one from its nearest neighbour in Holy Writ; the result is that they all equally atone for all things which they atone for individually.

(4) How then, for example, can R. Meir deduce that the Day of Atonement goat atones for a clean man who ate unclean holy food? This has to be deduced first from the Tabernacles goat, which in its turn (being likened to the Passover goat) has to be deduced from the New Moon goat?

(5) They need not deduce, by gradual stages, each one from its nearest neighbour, but they may all equally and simultaneously deduce from the New Moon goat to atone for a clean man who ate unclean holy food; and the New Moon goat may deduce from them (the festival goats) to atone for a case where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end. And all may deduce from the Day of Atonement goat to atone for a case where there is no knowledge at the beginning but at the end; and the Day of Atonement goat from them for a case where there is no knowledge either at the beginning or at the end.

(6) The and adds to the preceding subject, and equates them with each other.

(8) New Moon is included in festival: mo'ed (מועד), appointed season, is the word used in the text.

(9) The second year after the Exodus. The twelve men who went to reconnoitre the land of Canaan left on the 29th of Sivan, and returned on the 8th of Ab (the 2 last days of Sivan, 30 days of Tammuz, and 8 days of Ab 40 days). And the people wept that night (Num. XIV, 1), i.e., on the eve of the 9th of Ab. Because they wept for no reason that night, it was fixed as an annual night of weeping for the future. (The first and second Temples were destroyed on that date); v. Ta'an. 29a.

(10) Lam. I, 15: according to Abaye the verse means this: He called a mo'ed, מועד (festival), i.e., He intercalated an extra day, making Tammuz 30 days, so that the 30th day was proclaimed New Moon (festival), in order to crush my young men, in order that the night of weeping (9th of Ab) would coincide with the date my young men were to be crushed centuries later at the time of the destruction of the Temple.

the sin offering of atonement¹ — hence the outer is equated with the inner.

R. SIMEON B. JUDAH SAID IN HIS [R. SIMEON B. YOHAI'S] NAME: [THE NEW MOON GOATS ATONE FOR A CLEAN MAN WHO ATE UNCLEAR HOLY FOOD; THE FESTIVAL GOATS, IN ADDITION TO ATONING FOR A CLEAN MAN WHO ATE UNCLEAR HOLY FOOD, ATONE ALSO FOR A CASE WHERE THERE WAS NO KNOWLEDGE EITHER AT THE BEGINNING OR AT THE END; THE OUTER GOAT OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT, IN ADDITION TO ATONING FOR A CLEAN MAN WHO ATE UNCLEAR HOLY FOOD, AND FOR A CASE WHERE THERE WAS NO KNOWLEDGE EITHER AT THE BEGINNING OR AT

THE END, ATONES ALSO FOR A CASE WHERE THERE WAS NO KNOWLEDGE AT THE BEGINNING BUT THERE WAS KNOWLEDGE AT THE END.]

What is the difference: the New Moon goats do not atone for that for which the festival goats atone because the text says: [it hath He given you to bear] the iniquity² — one iniquity it bears, but it does not bear two iniquities; then let the festival goats also not atone for that for which the New Moon goats atone, because the text says: it [hath He given you to bear the iniquity]³ — it bears the iniquity, but no other bears the iniquity?⁴ — Because [the emphasis on] it does not seem justified to him.⁵

What is the difference: the festival goats do not atone for that for which the Day of Atonement goat atones, because the text says: once in the year [shall he make atonement]⁶ — this atonement [of the Day of Atonement goat] shall be only once a year; then let the Day of Atonement goat also not atone for that for which the festival goats atone, because it is written: [And Aaron shall make atonement upon the horns of it] once⁷ — one atonement it atones, but it does not atone two atonements?⁸ [The emphasis on] once does not seem justified to him. Why? — For it is written in connection with the inner goat [and not the outer]. If so, let the festival goats also atone for that for which the Day of Atonement goat atones, because once [in the year] is written in connection with the inner goat [and not the outer]. In reality, [the emphasis on] once does seem justified to him,⁹ but here it is different, for the text says: And Aaron shall make atonement upon the horns of it once in the year — the horns, namely, of the inner altar: with reference to this [we say that] it atones one atonement and not two atonements, but with reference to the outer [we may say] it atones even two atonements.¹⁰

Ulla said that R. Johanan said: The regular offerings which are not required for the community are redeemed unblemished.¹¹ Rabbah sat and stated this law. Said R. Hisda to him: Who heeds you and R. Johanan, your teacher! Whither has the holiness in them departed!¹² He replied to him: Do you not hold that we do not say, 'whither has the holiness in them departed'?¹³ For we learnt in a Mishnah:¹⁴ The remainder of the incense — what was done with it?¹⁵ The wages of the workmen were allocated [from the Temple treasury],¹⁶ and the extra incense was exchanged for this money, and given to the workmen as their wages, and was then re-bought [from them] with the new donations.¹⁷ Now why [should this procedure be permitted]? Let us say, 'whither has the holiness in them departed'?¹⁸ — He said to him: You argue from incense! Incense is different,

(3) Ibid.

(4) Why, then, does R. Simeon differentiate, and say that the festival goats do atone for that for which the New Moon goats atone?

(5) It hath He given you to bear the iniquity does not necessarily imply that no other goat can bear the iniquity. It may mean that it (the New Moon goat) was also, in addition to other goats, given the power of bearing the iniquity (of a clean man who ate unclean holy food). But the emphasis on iniquity he holds to be justified, for this word is clearly singular: the verse therefore implies that the New Moon goat atones for only one iniquity.

(6) Ex. XXX. 10: second half of the verse.

(7) Ibid.: first half of the verse.

(8) Why then does R. Simeon say that the Day of Atonement goat does atone also for that for which the festival goats atone?

(9) For, though it is written in connection with the inner goat, it has already been explained that the outer is equated with the inner (v. supra p. 2). Hence, the latter half of the verse: with the blood of the sin offering of atonement once in the year shall he make atonement for it implies that the atonement of the sin offering (i.e., inner goat, and also outer goat, for it has been equated with it) is only once a year, i.e., the other goats (such as the festival goats) cannot make this atonement.

(10) The first half of the verse does not mention the sin offering (i.e., inner goat), but only the inner altar; therefore we cannot say that the deduction that it atones only one atonement refers also to the outer goat; for the outer goat has been equated with the inner goat, but not with the inner altar; hence the outer goat of the Day of Atonement atones also for that for which the festival goats atone.

(11) In the Temple store-room for congregational offerings there had always to be at least six lambs which had been examined and found free from blemish ('Ar. 13a), in order that there should always be a ready supply for the two daily offerings (Num. XXVIII, 1-4). On the first of Nisan the lambs of the previous year (i.e., the day before) were not permitted to be sacrificed, because congregational sacrifices were not allowed to be bought with the previous year's donations to the Treasury; hence there were always four lambs left which are not required for the community. These could be redeemed, though they were unblemished, although an individual's offering may not be redeemed unless it has a blemish which disqualifies it as a sacrifice (Men. 101a). The method of redemption was to exchange the four lambs for their money equivalent, the lambs becoming hullin (un-holy), and the money becoming holy, and being utilised for making gold plates to cover the walls and floor of the Holy of Holies. Since the lambs were now not holy, they could be re-bought with the money subscribed in the New Year (1st of Nisan) to the Temple treasury.

(12) Since they were consecrated bodily (קדושת הגוף), and not merely for their value (קדושת דמים), how can they become hullin if they are unblemished?

(14) Shek. IV, 5.

(15) The incense (Ex. XXX, 34-36) was compounded from eleven ingredients: balm, onycha, galbanum, frankincense (in quantities of seventy manehs each in weight), myrrh, cassia, spikenard, saffron (sixteen manehs each), costus (twelve manehs), aromatic bark (three manehs), and cinnamon (nine manehs) — altogether 368 manehs, one for each day of the year (half in the morning, and half in the evening) and three extra for the Day of Atonement (v. Ker. 6a). But in an ordinary lunar year there were 11 manehs over (the lunar year being 354 days); and though these 11 manehs were necessary for supplementing the incense in intercalary years, they had to be bought from the new donations every 1st of Nisan (Tosaf). Some method had to be devised, therefore, of making the remainder of the old incense valid for the new year. — The lye obtained from a species of leek and the Cyprus wine which are mentioned in connection with the incense, were not actual ingredients, but were used simply for whitening the onycha, and also for making its odour more pungent (Ker. 6a).

(16) Omit זמנה in the text. The workmen were the family of Abtinah who were skilled in compounding the incense for the Temple: Yoma 38a.

(17) The incense, having been exchanged for the money, became hullin, and could be re-bought with the donations of the new year, becoming holy again, and valid for the new year.

(18) And not permit the incense which had once been holy to become hullin; yet we do not say this. It is assumed at present that the mortar in which the incense is pounded, being a holy vessel, makes the incense bodily holy.

for it has [only] a monetary holiness.¹ — If so, let it not become invalid by [the touch of] a tebul yom,² and yet it has been taught: As soon as it [the incense] is placed in the mortar it becomes liable to invalidation by [the touch of] a tebul yom! But perhaps you will say, all things which have only a monetary holiness are liable to invalidation by [the touch of] a tebul yom — [that cannot be,] for we have learnt:³ The meal-offerings⁴ are liable to be trespassed against⁵ as soon as they are verbally consecrated; when they are consecrated in the vessel,⁶ they become liable also to invalidation by [the touch of] a tebul yom, and one lacking atonement,⁷ and by linah.⁸ [Hence we may deduce:] 'When they are consecrated in the vessel' — yes, [they become liable to invalidation by the touch of a tebul yom,] but before they are consecrated in the vessel — no!⁹ — Well then, is it [the incense] holy bodily? If so, let it become invalidated [also] by linah, and yet we have learnt:¹⁰ The handful,¹¹ and the frankincense,¹² and the incense, and the meal-offering of the priests,¹³ and the meal-offering of the anointed [High] Priest,¹⁴ and the meal-offerings brought with libations,¹⁵ are liable to be trespassed against as soon as they are verbally consecrated; when they are consecrated in the vessel, they become liable also to invalidation by [the touch of] a tebul yom, and one lacking atonement, and by linah, [Hence we may deduce:] When 'they are consecrated in the vessel' — yes, [they become liable to invalidation by linah,] but before they are consecrated in the vessel — no.¹⁶ He said to him: You argue from [the fact that it is not invalidated by] linah [that therefore the incense is not bodily holy]! Incense is different [it is bodily holy even in the mortar, but is not invalidated by linah], because it retains its form all the year.¹⁷ Nevertheless, the question remains¹⁸ [since the incense is bodily holy]: whither has the holiness in them departed? — Rabbah said: The Beth din make a mental stipulation that if they are required, they are required [i.e., utilised]; but if not, they shall be holy only for their value.¹⁹

Said Abaye to him: But you, Sir, yourself said, if one consecrates a male [ram] to be holy only for its value, it nevertheless becomes bodily holy?²⁰ This is no question: [I said it becomes bodily holy] in the case where he said it should be holy for its value to buy a burnt offering;²¹ but if he said it should be holy for its value to buy libations [it does not become bodily holy].²² — Abaye asked him, [It was taught:]²³ The bullock and [inner] goat of the Day of Atonement which were lost, others being set apart in their stead,

(1) It is holy only for its value, and not bodily holy. The mortar in which it is pounded is not deemed to be a holy vessel; the incense can, therefore, be redeemed for money and become hullin, but why should the daily offerings which are actually holy bodily, be redeemable if unblemished?

(2) Lit., ‘bathed on that day’: a person who, having become unclean, and bathed, is not restored to perfect ritual cleanliness till sunset (Lev. XXII, 6, 7). His touch, before sunset, defiles holy objects. If the incense is not holy bodily, it should not become invalid by the touch of a tebul yom. (The holier the object the more easily it is liable to defilement.)

(3) Me'i. 9a.

(4) Of an individual who had sinned (Lev. V, II), מנחת חוטא; or a voluntary meal-offering (Men. 103a); or that which is brought with a thanksgiving sacrifice (Lev. VII, 12, 13).

(5) Lev. V, 15: unlawful use of sacred property constitutes מעילה, trespass.

(6) Having been brought to the Temple, and placed in the appropriate holy vessel, their holiness is increased.

(7) An unclean person such as a זב; (gonorrhoeist: Lev. XV, 1-15); זבה (woman having irregular issue of blood: Lev. XV, 25-30); woman after childbirth (Lev. XII, 1-8); and leper (Lev. XIV, 1-32); must bring a sacrifice on becoming clean. Before the sacrifice is brought the person is מחוסר כפורים; v. Ker. 8b. Strictly speaking, these four do not ‘lack atonement’, for they have committed no sin; they merely have to bring a sacrifice in order to be permitted to partake of holy food.

(8) Being kept over night.

(9) Hence things which have only a monetary, and not a bodily, holiness, are not liable to invalidation by the touch of a tebul yom; why then should the incense, if it has only a monetary holiness, become invalidated by the touch of a tebul yom?

(11) Lev. II, 2: a handful (three middle fingers bent over the hollow of the palm) was taken by the priest from an individual's meal-offering, and burnt on the altar; the rest was eaten by the priest.

(12) Ibid. I: frankincense was put on the meal-offering to flavour it.

(15) Num. XXVIII and XXIX: these meal-offerings are wholly burnt.

(16) This vessel is not the mortar in which the incense is pounded, but the vessel in which it is placed when brought to the altar to be burnt; for, while in the mortar, the Baraitha states, it is invalidated by the touch of a tebul yom, and not by linah, whereas this Mishnah states that when the incense is consecrated in the vessel it is invalidated also by linah; obviously, therefore, this is a different (holier) vessel. The incense, then, before it is placed in this holier vessel is not bodily holy.

(17) Linah does not alter its appearance or freshness as it would, for example, in the case of meat. When consecrated in the vessel, however, it is liable to invalidation by linah (though it still retains its form), because all other things consecrated in a vessel are liable to invalidation by linah; if incense were not so liable, it might sometimes be erroneously inferred that the others were also not so liable.

(18) Both in the case of incense and the daily offerings; why should they be redeemable if bodily holy?

(19) The authorities, when buying animals for the daily offerings, or when having the incense compounded, decide that only that which is necessary for that year shall become bodily holy; and that the rest shall become holy only for their value, and therefore be redeemable.

(20) And cannot be redeemed, because it is itself fit for a sacrifice. Accordingly, even granted that the Beth din do make the stipulation that they shall be holy only for their value, the daily offerings and incense ought still to retain their bodily holiness, and the question. ‘Whither has the holiness in them departed?’ remains.

(21) And since the ram is itself fit for a burnt offering, it cannot be sold in order that for its money another ram may be bought.

(22) Similarly, the Beth din have the power to stipulate at the outset that the daily offerings or incense not required shall become holy only for their value to provide gold plates for the floor and walls of the Holy of Holies.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 11b

and also the goats to atone for idolatry¹ which were lost, others being set apart in their stead — they all die.² This is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon say: They pasture till they become unfit [for sacrifice],³ then they are sold, the money going as a donation [to the Temple treasury], for a congregational sin-offering does not die.⁴ — Why [should they be starved, or pasture till they become blemished]? Let us say the Beth din make a mental stipulation [that if they be lost and found again they be redeemed unblemished]? — You quote the case of lost sacrifices! Lost sacrifices are different, because they are rare.⁵ But the red heifer⁶ is rare, and yet it was taught:⁷ The red heifer is redeemed on account of any disqualification in it; if it died, it is redeemed; if it was slaughtered,⁸ it is redeemed; if he found another which was more excellent, it is redeemed;⁹ but if he had already slaughtered it on its wood-pile,¹⁰ it can never be redeemed?¹¹ The red heifer is different, for it is in the category of holy things for Temple repair.¹² If so,¹³ how is it redeemed if it died or was slaughtered [outside the prescribed place], surely we require ‘placing and valuation’?¹⁴ — This will be in accordance with R. Simeon, who says that holy things for the altar are subject to the law of ‘placing and valuation’, but holy things for the Temple repair are not subject to the law of ‘placing and valuation’.¹⁵ If it is in accordance with R. Simeon's view, how will you explain the last clause:¹⁶ If he had already slaughtered it on its wood-pile, it can never be redeemed? Surely, it has been taught:¹⁷ R. Simeon says. ‘The red heifer defiles the defilement of edibles,¹⁸ because it had a period of fitness.’¹⁹ And R. Simeon b. Lakish said: ‘R. Simeon used to say that the red heifer may be redeemed [even] on its woodpile!’²⁰ Well, then, the red heifer is different, because it is expensive.²¹

The Master said: ‘If it died, it is redeemed.’ Do we then redeem holy things in order to feed dogs?²² — R. Mesharsheya said: [It is redeemed] for the sake of its hide.²³ Do the Beth din, then, make a mental stipulation [merely] for the sake of its hide?²⁴ — R. Kahana said: ‘Men say, of a camel the ear [is valuable].’²⁵

He further asked him:²⁶ THEY SAID TO R. SIMEON: IS IT PERMITTED TO OFFER UP THE GOAT SET APART FOR ONE DAY ON ANOTHER? HE SAID TO THEM: IT MAY BE OFFERED. THEY ARGUED WITH HIM: SINCE THEY ARE NOT EQUAL IN THE ATONEMENT THEY BRING, HOW CAN THEY TAKE EACH OTHER'S PLACE? HE REPLIED: THEY [ARE ALL AT LEAST EQUAL IN THE WIDER SENSE IN THAT THEY] ALL BRING ATONEMENT FOR TRANSGRESSIONS OF THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNES IN CONNECTION WITH THE TEMPLE AND HOLY FOOD THEREOF.²⁷ Now, why [should R. Simeon give such an unconvincing reply]? Let him say, the Beth din make a mental stipulation in their case!²⁸ — You argue thus against R. Simeon! R. Simeon does not hold that the Beth din are empowered to make a mental stipulation; for R. Idi b. Abin said that R. Amram said that R. Johanan said: The regular offerings which are not required for the community are, according to R. Simeon, not redeemed unblemished;²⁹ and, according to the Sages, are redeemed unblemished.

Who are the Rabbis who disagree with R. Simeon [and hold that the Beth din make a mental stipulation]? Shall we say they are the Rabbis [who state the law] of incense?³⁰

- (3) By becoming blemished.
- (4) I.e., is not starved to death. Sin-offerings of individuals are, in certain circumstances, starved to death; but not congregational sin-offerings. V. Tem. 15a.
- (5) It is rare for a sacrifice to be lost, and the Beth din, therefore, do not deem it necessary to make a stipulation for such an infrequent occurrence.

- (10) In the proper place and in accordance with the prescribed ritual.
- (11) Even if he finds a better one. Since everything in connection therewith has been correctly performed, it would not be seemly to redeem it and make it hullin (v. Glos.). Now reverting to the first clause of this Baraita, how could it be redeemed without a blemish, seeing that the Beth din do not make mental stipulations in connection with rare matters?
- (12) קדשי מזבח I.e., holy only for its value, and not for offering on the altar, and therefore redeemable without a blemish. קדשי בדק הבית is equivalent to קדושת דמים; v. Yoma 42a.
- (13) If it is holy only in respect of its value.
- (14) Lev. XXVII, 11, 12; He shall place (lit., cause to stand) the beast before the priest. And the priest shall value it. The beast must be able to stand on its feet to be valued and redeemed. If it died or was slaughtered, it cannot stand: how, then, can it be redeemed? It appears that if it were holy for the altar, the question would not arise, for, according to one authority (v. Tem, 32b), offerings for the altar, when redeemed, do not require 'placing and valuation'. V. Tosaf.
- (15) Tem, 32b: they may be redeemed even if they are not able to stand,
- (16) Lit., 'say the last clause.'
- (17) Tosaf. Parah VI.
- (18) After it has been slaughtered, its flesh can become unclean by contact with the carcass of an unclean animal (or clean animal not ritually killed), and it can then make edibles unclean by contact. Although the enjoyment of any kind of benefit from it is prohibited, and, according to R. Simeon, only edibles that are permitted are considered edibles capable of receiving and transmitting defilement (Men. 101b), it is, nevertheless, counted as an edible, because there was a time when the use of it might have been permitted, as explained infra. If it be asked, surely the flesh of the red heifer itself defiles without contact with a carcass, v. Hul. 82a, Rashi; B.K. 77a, Tosaf., for an explanation.
- (19) I.e., capable of being counted fit as an edible.
- (20) I.e., if a better one was obtainable, the heifer could be redeemed even after having been ritually slaughtered. This is the period of fitness to which R. Simeon alludes, and in virtue of which the flesh is regarded by him as an edible; R. Simeon holding that whatever is capable of being redeemed is counted as if it were redeemed. How, then, can the Baraita be in accordance with R. Simeon's view, since the last clause in it states that if he slaughtered it on its wood-pile it can never be redeemed?
- (21) The Baraita will not be in accordance with R. Simeon's view; and the reason for its statement that if he found a better heifer it can be redeemed, is that the Beth din make a mental stipulation to that effect; and though a red heifer is rare, yet, because it is expensive, the Beth din deem it worth while to make such a stipulation. The red heifer was expensive because it was difficult to obtain one which fulfilled all the ritual requirements: e.g., two black or white hairs rendered it unfit (Parah II, 5). A perfectly red heifer was so rare that almost any price could be demanded by the owner. Dama b. Nethina, a heathen, received 600,000 gold denarii for a red heifer (Kid. 31a).
- (22) If it died, its consumption is prohibited.
- (23) Which may be utilised.
- (24) Which is such an insignificant item.
- (25) A proverb current in his day. Of a valuable animal even a small part is valuable.
- (26) Abaye asked Rabbah.

(28) That if a goat set apart for the Day of Atonement, for example, is not offered on that day, it may be offered on a festival or New Moon. V. Rashal, comment on Rashi, a.l.

(29) This proves that he does not hold that the Beth din are empowered to make a mental stipulations; (v. supra 11a).

(30) Supra 10b. The incense left over at the end of the year was redeemed, because the Beth din made a mental stipulations to that effect.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 12a

[It may be retorted,] Incense is different, because it cannot be put to pasture.¹ Well, then, the Rabbis [who State the law] of the red heifer.² [But again it may be urged:] Perhaps the red heifer is different, because it is expensive!³ — Well, then, the Rabbis [of our Mishnah] who argued with him.⁴ [But here again,] how do you know that it is R. Judah⁵ [who argues with R Simeon], and that thus he argues with him: 'It is right according to my view, holding as I do that the Beth din make a mental stipulation; therefore the goat set apart for one day may be offered on another; but according to you who say, no, [we do not say the Beth din make a mental stipulation], why should the goat set apart for one day be offered on another?' — [How do you know this?] Perhaps it is R. Meir⁶ [who argues with R. Simeon], and thus he argues with him: 'It is right according to my view, holding as I do that all the goats bring equal atonement, therefore the goat set apart for one day may be offered on another; but according to you [who do not hold that all the goats bring equal atonement], why should the goat set apart for one day be offered on another?' [Who, then, are the Rabbis who disagree with R. Simeon, holding that the Beth din make a mental stipulation?] — But. R. Johanan had a tradition that, according to R. Simeon, they [the daily offerings] are not redeemed [unblemished]; and, according to the Sages, they are redeemed.⁷

And according to R. Simeon who does not hold that the Beth din make a mental stipulation [that the daily offerings which are not required should be redeemed], what is done with them? R. Isaac said that R. Johanan said: They are offered as dessert⁸ to the altar.

R. Samuel, son of R. Isaac, said: R. Simeon admits, however, that the goats for a sin-offering are not themselves offered as dessert for the altar, but their money equivalent;⁹ for here [in the case of the surplus daily offering], it was originally intended for a burnt-offering, and it is now also a burnt-offering; but there [in the case of the sin-offering], it was originally intended for a sin-offering, and now it will be a burnt-offering; [it is, therefore, not permitted to be offered up itself,] a restriction being imposed even after [the congregation have had] atonement [with another sin-offering], as a preventive measure [in case it may be offered up] before [the congregation have had] atonement [with another].¹⁰

Abaye said: We have also learnt [in a Baraitha]:¹¹ The bullock and [inner] goat of the Day of Atonement which were lost, others being set apart in their stead; and also the goats to atone for idolatry which were lost, others being set apart in their stead — they all die: this is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon say: They pasture till they become unfit [for sacrifice], and then they are sold, the money going as a donation [to the Temple treasury],¹² for a congregational sin-offering does not die!¹³ — Now, why [should they pasture till they become blemished and then be sold]? Let them be offered up themselves as burnt-offerings [as dessert for the altar]. Obviously, therefore, [since they do not say this], we may deduce that a restriction is imposed [even] after atonement as a preventive measure [in case they may be offered up] before atonement.

Raba said: We have also learnt:¹⁴ . . . and the second one¹⁵ pastures till it becomes unfit [for sacrifice], when it is sold, and the money goes as a donation [to the Temple treasury].¹⁶ Now, why [should it pasture till it becomes blemished and then be sold]? Let it be offered up itself as a burnt-offering [as dessert for the altar]. Obviously, therefore, [since this is not done,] we may deduce that a restriction is imposed [even] after atonement as a preventive measure [in case it may be offered up] before atonement, Rabina said: We have also learnt.¹⁷ A guilt offering¹⁸ the owner of which died, or obtained atonement [with another], pastures till it becomes unfit [for sacrifice],¹⁹ when it is sold, and the money goes as a donation [to the Temple treasury]. R. Eliezer says: It dies.²⁰ R. Joshua says: He brings a burnt-offering for its money.²¹ Now, let it be offered up itself as a burnt-offering [as dessert for the altar]. Obviously, therefore, [since this is not done,] we may deduce that a restriction is imposed [even] after atonement as a preventive measure [in case it may be offered up] before atonement. This is conclusive.

This has also been taught [in the following Baraitha].²² What do they bring from the surplus [congregational offerings]?

(1) Therefore the Beth din make a mental stipulation, but in the case of the regular daily offerings that are left over at the end of the year, since they may be put to pasture till they become blemished, and then redeemed, the Beth din would make no mental stipulations. The Rabbis who state the law of incense may, therefore, agree with R. Simeon in the case of the daily offerings. Who, then, are the Rabbis who disagree with him?

(2) Supra 11b. The red heifer may be redeemed unblemished.

(3) Therefore the Beth din deem it worth while to make a mental stipulation, but in the case of the daily offerings which are not expensive, the Beth din possibly do not make a mental stipulation.

(4) Thus: Since the goats are not equal in the atonement they bring, and since you do not hold that the Beth din can make a mental stipulation that if the goat of the Day of Atonement, for example, was lost and found later, it may be offered on a subsequent festival, how according to you, can the goat set apart on one day be offered on another? These Rabbis, then, themselves hold that the Beth din can make a mental stipulation.

(5) Who agrees with R. Simeon that the goats do not bring equal atonement (v. supra. Mishnah 2a), and disagrees with him only in that he holds that the Beth din make a mental stipulation that the goats can take each other's place.

(6) Who holds that all the goats bring equal atonement (v. supra Mishnah 2b). R. Judah, however, may not argue with R. Simeon, as he may not hold that the Beth din make a mental stipulation, and R. Meir's question to R. Simeon could quite as easily be directed against R. Judah too. R. Judah, also, would agree with R. Simeon's reply.

(7) Because they do hold that the Beth din make a mental stipulation.

(8) קיץ is summer fruit, v. II Sam. XVI, 1, 2. These burnt offerings were consumed by the altar after the usual obligatory offerings had been consumed, just as summer fruit (dessert) is taken at the end of a meal. Barth (Jahrb. der jud. Liter. Gesel. VII. 129), connects קיץ המזבח with the Syriac קיסא 'wood', and translates it 'fuel for the altar', i.e., the extra burnt offerings are used as fuel for the altar when the ordinary offerings have been consumed. This is ingenious, but farfetched, and against the Talmud's own explanation of the word (infra 12b, top) 'as white figs for the altar'. Barth's objection that קיץ though meaning 'summer fruit', never has the meaning 'dessert', is unreasonable, for fruit is obviously dessert. — R. Simeon holds that the superfluous regular offerings are sacrificed on the altar as congregational freewill burnt-offerings, because they were originally intended as burnt-offerings (though as regular offerings and not as dessert); just as he holds, in the Mishnah, that a goat which was not offered on a festival may be offered on the New Moon or Day of Atonement because, though not exactly the same, they are all at least equal in that they atone for the sins of uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food.

(9) If, for example, the New Moon goat for the month of Adar was lost, and found in Nisan, it cannot be offered up then, for it was bought with money from the previous year, but it may be used as dessert for the altar; it cannot, however, itself be offered on the altar as a burnt-offering, for it was originally intended as a sin-offering. It is allowed to pasture till it becomes blemished, and is then redeemed, and the money is expended on the purchase of an animal for a burnt-offering as dessert for the altar.

(10) After the congregation have had atonement with another sin-offering there is no reason why this sin-offering should not itself be permitted to be offered up as a burnt-offering as dessert for the altar. It is, however, prohibited, for, if it were permitted, it might be taken as a precedent for offering it up as a burnt-offering even before the congregation have had atonement with another sin-offering, when it is still a sin offering, having been expressly allocated for that purpose.

(11) V. supra 11a. Confirming that R. Simeon holds sin offerings may not themselves be used as dessert for the altar, but only their money equivalent may be used, because a restriction is imposed even after atonement, in case they may be offered up before atonement.

(14) Another confirmation.

(15) Two goats were required for the Day of Atonement (Lev. XVI, 5-10), one of which, after lots had been cast, was offered up as a sin-offering, and the other hurled down a steep precipice in the wilderness (Yoma 67a). If the goat which had to be sent into the wilderness died, two other goats had to be obtained, and lots cast again. There were now two goats for a sin-offering to the Lord, the one left over from the first pair and one from the second pair. One of them was offered up as a sin-offering, and the other left to pasture till it became blemished, when it was sold, and the proceeds expended on a burnt-offering as dessert for the altar.

(16) Yoma 62a: 'Because a congregational sin-offering does not die.' It is R. Simeon who is known to hold this view; and yet he says that the goat is not itself offered up as dessert for the altar, but is sold, after it becomes blemished, and a burnt-offering bought from the proceeds.

(18) Lev. V, 15-26; XIV, 12; XIX, 20-22; Nuns. VI, 12. There are different kinds of guilt-offerings, v. Zeb. V, 5.

(19) A sin-offering would, in such circumstances, be starved to death, v. Tem. 16a. Where a sin-offering is starved, a guilt-offering pastures, Tem. 18a.

(20) Holding the view that a guilt-offering is like a sin-offering; v. Zeb. 2a.

(21) The owner of the guilt-offering who obtained atonement with another sells this one, and for its money brings a burnt-offering; it is counted as his own private burnt-offering, and he must therefore supply the libations to go with it. According to the first view, as it comes from funds that had gone to the Temple treasury, it is counted as a congregational burnt-offering, and the libations are supplied from the public funds. V. Tem. 20b.

(22) In confirmation that surplus congregational offerings remaining over at the end of the year are used as dessert for the altar, as R. Simeon holds; but v. Tosaf.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 12b

Dessert like white figs¹ for the altar. But it is written: For any leaven or honey ye shall not offer up as smoke, as an offering made by fire unto the Lord?² — R. Hanina explained: [The burnt-offerings are dessert for the altar] as white figs are [dessert] for man.

R. Nahman son of R. Hisda expounded: A burnt-offering of a bird is not offered as dessert for the altar.³ Raba said: This is an absurdity! Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to Raba: Wherein lies its absurdity? I told it him; and in the name of R. Shimi of Nehardea I told it him; for R. Shimi of Nehardea said: The surplus offerings are utilised as congregational donations;⁴ and a burnt-offering of a bird cannot be a congregational burnt offering.⁵

And Samuel also agrees with R. Johanan,⁶ for Rab Judah said that Samuel said: In the case of congregational offerings, it is the knife that draws them to what they are.⁷

It has also been taught likewise:⁸ And R. Simeon admits that the goat which was not offered on a festival may be offered on the New Moon; and if it was not offered on the New Moon, it may be offered on the Day of Atonement; and if it was not offered on the Day of Atonement, it may be offered on a festival; and if it was not offered on this festival, it may be offered on another festival; for it was originally intended only to make atonement on the outer altar.

AND FOR WILFUL TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF UNCLEANNES IN CONNECTION WITH THE TEMPLE AND HOLY FOOD THEREOF THE GOAT OFFERED WITHIN [THE VEIL] AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT ITSELF BRING ATONEMENT.⁹

How do we know this? For our Rabbis learnt. [Scripture says:] And he shall make atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleannesses of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions, even all their sins:¹⁰ Transgressions mean rebellious acts,¹¹ and thus it says, The king of Moab hath rebelled against me;¹² and also, Then did Libnah revolt at the same time.¹³ Sins mean unwitting sins, and thus it says: If any one shall sin through error.¹⁴

FOR OTHER TRANSGRESSIONS OF THE TORAH, LIGHT AND HEAVY, WILFUL AND UNWITTING, KNOWN AND UNKNOWN, POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE, THOSE PUNISHABLE BY KARETH AND THOSE PUNISHABLE BY DEATH AT THE HAND OF THE BETH DIN FOR ALL THESE THE SCAPEGOAT BRINGS ATONEMENT.¹⁵

Surely LIGHT is equivalent to POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE; HEAVY is equivalent to THOSE PUNISHABLE BY KARETH AND THOSE PUNISHABLE BY DEATH AT THE HAND OF THE BETH DIN; KNOWN is equivalent to WILFUL; and UNKNOWN is equivalent to in UNWITTING!¹⁶ — Rab Judah said: Thus he means:¹⁷ For other transgressions of the Torah, whether light or heavy, whether committed unwittingly or wilfully — those committed unwittingly, whether their doubtful commission¹⁸ was known to him or not known to him; and these are the light transgressions: positive and negative; and these are the heavy transgressions: those punishable by kareth and those punishable by death at the hand of the Beth din. That positive precept [for transgression of which the scapegoat atones] — how is this [to be understood]? If he did not repent, [why should the scapegoat atone? Surely it is written:] The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination!¹⁹ If he did repent, [why do we require the scapegoat? Repentance on] any day avails, for it was taught: If he transgressed a positive precept and repented, he does not move from there until he is forgiven!²⁰ — R. Zera said:

(1) V. Ber. 40b.

(2) Lev. II, 11. Any sweet fruit juice is called honey. (Rashi, a.l.) How, then, can you use the expression like white figs for the altar?

(3) The money obtained from selling superfluous congregational sin-offerings or individual guilt-offerings is not expended on buying a turtle-dove or young pigeon to be offered as dessert for the altar.

(4) And the money obtained from their sale is used for providing burnt-offerings as dessert for the altar on behalf of the congregation.

(5) Lev. I, 14: He shall bring his offering of turtle-doves or of young pigeons. His offering: an individual may bring a bird as an offering, but not a congregation. (Sifra.)

(6) Supra 12a, that, according to R. Simeon, the surplus of regular offerings are used as dessert for the altar; and, according to the Rabbis, they are redeemed unblemished, and are re-bought to be sacrificed as regular offerings in the coming year; so that, both according to R. Simeon and the Rabbis, the regular offerings themselves are sacrificed, and they need not be put to pasture till they become blemished.

(7) It is the slaughtering knife, or, in other words, the moment of slaughter, that determines their purpose. Before they are slaughtered, however, they may be changed, according to R. Simeon, from one type of offering to another, e.g., from regular burnt-offerings to dessert (also burnt-offerings); and, according to the Rabbis who hold that the Beth din have the power to make a mental stipulation, the year's surplus of regular offerings may be redeemed unblemished, and later re-bought and sacrificed as regular offerings in the coming year. V. Rabbenu Hananel and Tosaf. a.l.; Zeb. 6b, Rashi and Tosaf.

(8) Confirmation of Samuel's statement that congregational offerings are drawn by the knife to be what they are; and that even R. Simeon holds this view. The Rabbis obviously hold this view, for they say the Beth din have the power to stipulate that the surplus regular offerings may be redeemed unblemished; but even R. Simeon, who disagrees with them, nevertheless holds that an offering which was set apart for one purpose may be sacrificed for a similar purpose, for he holds that the goats of all the festivals, New Moon, and Day of Atonement, are interchangeable, because they are all at least equal in that they are offered on the outer altar to bring atonement for transgressions of the laws of uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food; and he would therefore similarly hold that the surplus regular offerings may be offered as dessert, because regular offerings and dessert are both at least equal in that they are both burnt-offerings; and it is at the moment of slaughter that their purpose is fixed.

(10) Lev. XVI, 16; with the inner goat (verse 15).

(11) I.e., wilful transgressions.

(12) II Kings III, 7. The word used, פשע, is from the same root as that which is used in Lev. XVI, 16, and translated transgressions.

(13) Ibid. VIII, 22. The same root, פשע, is here also used for revolt.

(14) Lev. IV, 2. The word used for sin is from the same root, חטא, as that which is used for sins in Lev. XVI, 16.

(16) Then why the repetition?

(17) The latter half is explanatory of the former half: POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE is explanatory of LIGHT, and KARETH AND DEATH is explanatory of HEAVY. And both light and heavy transgressions whether committed wilfully or unwittingly are atoned for by the scapegoat. KNOWN AND UNKNOWN is an amplification of UNWITTING.

(18) If, for example, he ate one of two pieces of fat, one of which was prohibited fat (הלב, Lev. III, 3, 4), and the other permitted fat (שומן); and he is in doubt as to which of the two he ate, he would normally have to bring a guilt-offering for a doubtful sin (אשם תלוי, v. Lev. V, 17, 18, Rashi). Whether he became aware or not of the doubtful commission of this sin before the Day of Atonement, and if he had not yet brought his offering, he need not bring it after the Day of Atonement, for the scapegoat had atoned for it (Ker. 25a-b).

[It refers to the case of a man] who persists in his rebellion;¹ and it is in accordance with Rabbi's view, for it was taught: Rabbi said: For all transgressions of the Torah, whether he repented or not, the Day of Atonement brings atonement, except in the case of one who throws off the yoke,² perverts the teachings of the Torah,³ and rejects the covenant in the flesh⁴ — [in these cases,] if he repented, the Day of Atonement brings atonement, and if not — the Day of Atonement does not bring atonement.

What is Rabbi's reason? For it was taught: [Scripture says:] Because he hath despised the word of the Lord:⁵ this refers to one who throws off the yoke, or perverts the teachings of the Torah; and hath broken His commandment:⁵ this refers to one who rejects the covenant in the flesh; that soul shall utterly be cut off:⁵ to be cut off before the Day of Atonement; he shall be cut off, after the Day of Atonement.⁶ I might think that [this is the case] even if he repented, therefore Scripture says: his iniquity shall be upon him.⁵ I did not say [that the Day of Atonement does not bring atonement] except when his iniquity is still on him.⁷ And the Rabbis?⁸ — [They may reply: Scripture means] to be cut off, in this world; he shall be cut off in the world to come.⁹ His iniquity shall be upon him: if he repented¹⁰ and died, death wipes out [the sin].¹¹

But how can you establish [our Mishnah as being] in accordance with the view of Rabbi?¹² Surely since the last clause is in accordance with R. Judah's view, the first clause must also be in accordance with R. Judah's view! For the last clause states — [THE SCAPEGOAT BRINGS ATONEMENT FOR] ISRAELITES, PRIESTS, AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST.¹³ Now, who holds this view? R. Judah.¹⁴ Therefore the first clause must also be in accordance with R. Judah's view!¹⁵ — R. Joseph said: It is really in accordance with Rabbi's view, and he is in agreement with R. Judah.¹⁶

Said Abaye to him: Do you, Master, mean particularly that Rabbi agrees with R. Judah, but R. Judah does not agree with Rabbi;¹⁷ or that just as [you say,] Rabbi agrees with R. Judah, so also R. Judah agrees with Rabbi, but you state, as is customary, that a disciple agrees with his master?¹⁸ — He replied: I mean particularly that Rabbi agrees with R. Judah, but R. Judah does not agree with Rabbi; for it was taught: I might think that the Day of Atonement should atone for those who repent and for those who do not repent; and [although] an analogy [might be adduced to the contrary thus]: since sin-offering and guilt-offering atone, and the Day of Atonement atones, [we might therefore say,] just as the sin-offering and guilt-offering atone only for those who repent,¹⁹ so the Day of Atonement atones only for those who repent, [yet we could argue,] sin-offering and guilt-offering do not atone for wilful transgression²⁰ as for unwitting, [therefore they atone only for those who repent], but the Day of Atonement atones for wilful as for unwitting transgression, [therefore let us say that] just as it atones for wilful as for unwitting transgression, so let it atone for those who repent and for those who do not repent — therefore Scripture says: Howbeit²¹ [on the tenth day of this seventh month is the Day of Atonement] — this limits [the power of the Day of Atonement]. Now, who is the author of any anonymous statement in the Sifra? — R. Judah;²² and it states that [the Day of Atonement atones] for only those who repent, and not for those who do not repent.²³

But there is a contradiction between one anonymous statement in the Sifra and another! For it was taught: I might think that the Day of Atonement should not atone unless he fasted on it, and called it a holy convocation,²⁴ and did no work on it; but if he did not fast on it, and did not call it a holy convocation, and worked on it — whence do we deduce [that the Day atones for him]? Scripture says: It is a Day of Atonement²⁵ — in all cases [it atones].²⁶ Abaye said: This is no question; this [latter statement] is in accordance with the view of Rabbi,²⁷ and that [former statement] is in accordance with the view of R. Judah. Raba said: Both statements are in accordance with Rabbi's view; but Rabbi admits [that the Day does not atone for] the kareth of the Day itself;²⁸ for, if you will not say this, does not Rabbi hold that there is kareth for the Day of Atonement!²⁹ Why not?³⁰ It is possible, for example, in the case where he committed [the sin]³¹ at night, and died, so that the Day did not come to atone for him!³² — But, say:

- (1) I.e., who did not repent, nevertheless the scapegoat atones for him, according to Rabbi; and the verse, the sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination, which implies that a wicked man (i.e., who does not repent) cannot obtain atonement with a sacrifice, has reference to a sacrifice on any other day, except the Day of Atonement.
 - (2) Denying the existence of God.
 - (3) Lit., 'reveals an aspect of the Torah (not in accordance with the correct interpretation)', or 'acts in a bare-faced manner against the Torah.' For a full discussion of the phrase, v. Sanh. 99a and Aboth III, 11.
 - (4) Circumcision. V. loc. cit.
 - (5) Num. XV, 31. Lit., 'to be cut off, he shall be cut off'. הכרת תכרת: the infinitive preceding the finite verb is taken as emphatic.
 - (6) I.e., the Day of Atonement shall not have the power to wipe out the sin.
 - (7) I.e., when he did not repent. According to Rabbi, therefore, it is only for these three sins that the Day of Atonement brings no atonement without repentance; but for other sins it brings atonement even without repentance.
 - (8) Who disagree with Rabbi, holding that the Day does not atone even for other sins, without repentance. How will they interpret the emphasis of Scripture on that soul shall utterly be cut off?
 - (9) In the case of these three sins, if the sinner does not repent; and even death cannot wipe out these sins without repentance; but in the case of other sins, if he does not repent, death has the power to wipe them out. The Day of Atonement, however, has not the power to wipe out even other sins without repentance.
 - (10) His iniquity being no longer upon him.
 - (11) Whereas in the case of other sins, apart from these three, death without repentance wipes them out.
 - (12) That for all sins, except these three, the Day of Atonement brings atonement, even without repentance; and that the Mishnah, in stating that the scapegoat of the Day of Atonement atones for the transgression of positive precepts, refers to cases of non-repentance, in accordance even with Rabbi's view.
 - (13) Supra 2b.
 - (14) Infra 13b: that the scapegoat brings atonement for the priests.
 - (15) And not Rabbi's.
 - (16) That the scapegoat brings atonement for the priests.
 - (17) That the Day of Atonement brings atonement even when there is no repentance.
 - (18) R. Judah the Prince was a disciple of R. Judah b. Il'ai; and therefore you said that Rabbi agrees with R. Judah, but the reverse is also true.

(19) Lev. V, 5: he shall confess that wherein he hath sinned (sin-offering); Num. V, 7: they shall confess their sin (guilt-offering); (cf. verse 8, and Lev. V, 15).

(20) V. Rashi: the majority of sin offerings and guilt offerings atone only for unwitting transgressions, but there are a few exceptions.

(21) Lev. XXIII, 27. Heb. וְיָסַח implies limitation: that the Day should atone only for those who repent. V. Sifra, a.l.

(22) Sanh. 86a: an accepted Talmudic maxim. The Sifra is the tannaitic exposition of Leviticus (v. Sanh. p. 567, n. I).

(23) Hence R. Judah, who is the author of the anonymous passage quoted from the Sifra, does not agree with Rabbi.

(24) By including in the prayers on that day: Blessed art Thou, O Lord . . . Who sanctifiest Israel and the Day of Atonement; and by wearing holiday garments to signify his acceptance of the Day as holy. V. Ker. 7a, Tosaf.

(26) Hence this anonymous statement in the Sifra holds that the Day atones even for those who do not repent (but actually sin on the very Day); it, therefore, contradicts the other statement in the Sifra.

(27) That the Day atones even for those who do not repent. It is not an anonymous statement, but should be mentioned in the Sifra as being the view of Rabbi.

(28) The first anonymous statement that the Day does not atone for those who do not repent refers only to the sins, punishable by kareth, of the Day itself, such as non-fasting and working; the second statement that the Day does atone, even when the person does not fast, refers to other sins, i.e., the Day atones for other sins committed during the year even without fasting on the Day; but it cannot atone for the sin of non-fasting on the Day itself.

(29) If the Day atones for all sins, even connected with the Day itself, without repentance, why does Scripture decree the punishment of Kareth for transgressing the Day (Lev. XXIII, 29)? It can never be put into effect. Obviously, therefore, Rabbi must make the distinction which Raba suggests.

(30) Rabbi may hold that the Day atones even for the kareth which it itself carries, and yet it is possible to find a case where kareth is inflicted.

(31) Punishable by kareth, e.g., non-fasting.

(32) The night of Atonement cannot atone; Only the Day has the power of atonement: For on this Day shall atonement be made for you (Lev. XVI, 30).

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 13b

Does not Rabbi hold that there is kareth for the day [of the Day of Atonement]?¹ Why not?² It is possible in the case where he ate a piece of meat, which choked him,³ so that he died; or, he ate it almost at the setting of the sun,⁴ so that there was not time to atone for him.⁵

[THE SCAPEGOAT BRINGS ATONEMENT EQUALLY FOR] ISRAELITES, PRIESTS, AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST.⁶

This itself is contradictory: he states that [THE SCAPEGOAT BRINGS ATONEMENT EQUALLY FOR] ISRAELITES, PRIESTS, AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST; then he states WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ISRAELITES, PRIESTS, AND THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST?⁷ Rab Judah said, thus he means: Israelites, priests, and the anointed High Priest all equally obtain atonement with the scapegoat for other sins, and there is no difference between them [in this respect]; but what is the difference between Israelites, priests, and the anointed High Priest? [This:] the bullock atones for the priests for transgression of the laws of uncleanness in connection with the Temple and holy food thereof [whereas for Israelites the inner and outer goats atone for these transgressions]. And who holds this view?⁸ R. Judah; for it was taught: [Scripture says:] And he shall make atonement for the most holy place,⁹ this means the Holy of Holies; and the tent of meeting,⁹ this means the Holy place; and the altar⁹ — in its usual sense; he shall atone,⁹ this means for the various compartments in the Temple court; and for the priests⁹ — in the usual sense; and for all the people of the assembly;⁹ this means the Israelites;¹⁰ he shall atone,⁹ this means for the Levites; they are all equated for one atonement,¹¹ in that they obtain atonement with the scapegoat for other sins: this is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Simeon Says: Just as the blood of the goat offered within [the veil] atones for Israelites for transgression of the laws of uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food thereof, so the blood of the bullock atones for the priests for transgression of the laws of uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food thereof; and just as the confession pronounced over the scapegoat atones for Israelites for other sins, so the confession pronounced over the bullock atones for the priests for other sins.¹²

But according to R. Simeon [it may be asked]: Surely they have been equated!¹³ — In what respect are they equated? In that they all obtain atonement, but each obtains atonement with his own.¹⁴

What is R. Simeon's reason?¹⁵ — It is written: And he shall take the two goats:¹⁶ the scapegoat is equated with the goat offered within [the veil]; just as the goat offered within [the veil] does not atone for the priests for transgression of the laws of uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food thereof, because it is written concerning it: [the goat of the sin offering] that is for the people;¹⁷ so the scapegoat does not atone for the priests for other sins. And R. Judah?¹⁸ — He may say to you: For this reason they are equated, that they should be alike in colour, height, and value.¹⁹

Who is the Tanna who made this statement which the Rabbis taught. [viz., Scripture says:] He shall kill the goat of the sin offering that is for the people:²⁰ [this teaches] that the priests do not obtain atonement with it; and with what do they obtain atonement? With the bullock of Aaron.²¹ I might think that they should not obtain atonement with the bullock of Aaron, for it has already been said: [And Aaron shall offer the bullock of the sin offering] which is for himself;²² hence they would have no atonement at all.²³ But when Scripture says: And he shall make atonement for the priests,²⁴ we find that they have atonement. With what do they obtain atonement? It is better that they should obtain atonement with the bullock of Aaron, for it was released from its implication,²⁵ in order to include also his house;²⁶ and that they should not obtain atonement with the goat offered within [the veil], which was not released from its implication.²⁷ in order to include also his house. And if you desire to say anything,²⁸ [I may add another argument, for] Scripture says: O house of Aaron, bless ye the Lord; O house of Levi, bless ye the Lord; ye that fear the Lord, bless ye the Lord.²⁹ Who is the Tanna [of this Baraitha]?³⁰ — R. Jeremiah said: It is not R. Judah, for if R. Judah, surely he says the priests obtain atonement with the scapegoat!³¹ Then who is it? Raba said: It is R. Simeon who holds that the priests do not obtain atonement with the scapegoat. Abaye said: You may even say that it is R. Judah, and thus he³² reasons: Hence they would have no atonement at all for transgression of the laws of uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food thereof;³³ but when Scripture says: And he shall make atonement for the priest, we find that they have atonement for other sins; and just as we find that they have atonement for other sins, so they have atonement

(1) If he holds that the Day atones even for transgression of the Day itself, the punishment of kareth decreed for transgressing the Day can never be put into effect; yet Scripture says: For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from his people (Lev. XXIII, 29).

(2) Rabbi may still hold that the Day atones even for the kareth which it carries, and yet it is possible to have a case where kareth operates.

(3) So that not even a moment of the Day passed after the eating of it; but had he lived a moment after eating, the Day would have atoned.

(4) At the termination of the Day.

(5) Hence it is possible that Rabbi holds the Day atones even for the kareth it involves, and Raba's distinction does not necessarily follow.

(7) Ibid.

(8) That the scapegoat atones also for priests for other sins.

(9) Lev. XVI, 33.

(10) From this verse it is deduced that the High Priest on the Day of Atonement makes atonement with the bullock and goat for the transgression of the laws of uncleanness in the Holy of Holies, holy place, altar, etc. If one, that is to say, became unclean in the Holy of Holies, and tarried for such time as he could prostrate himself (v. infra 16b), or if he offered incense on the golden altar while unclean, or entered other compartments of the Temple court while unclean, he has transgressed the law of uncleanness, and for this the bullock atones for priests, and the goat for Israelites.

(11) Priests, Levites, and Israelites, are all deduced from this latter part of the verse, which is superfluous, as obtaining equal atonement; but this equal atonement cannot refer to the atonement for transgression of the laws of uncleanness connected with the Temple and holy food, because in this case the atonements are not equal, the bullock atoning for priests, and the inner and outer goats for Israelites and Levites. The equal atonement, consequently, refers to the scapegoat which atones for priests, Israelites, and Levites, for other sins.

(12) V. supra p. 4, n. 7.

(13) The verse quoted by R. Judah above seemingly implying that both Israelites and priests obtain atonement with the scapegoat for other sins.

(14) Priest with the bullock, and Israelite with the goat.

(15) For stating that the scapegoat does not atone for priests for other sins.

(18) How will he explain this equation of the two goats?

(21) Or his successor in the High Priest's office.

(22) Lev. XVI, 6.

(23) Neither with the goat, which is for the people, nor with the bullock, which is for Aaron.

(24) Lev. XVI, 33.

(25) The Biblical statement, which is for himself, implies that the bullock atones only for himself, and for other priests.

(26) Lev. XVI, 6: And he shall make atonement for himself in for his house, i.e., household. The bullock, therefore, atones for more than himself; it may, therefore, atone also for the other priests.

(27) Lev. XVI, 15: The goat of the sin offering that is for the people.

(28) In refutation of this argument.

(29) Ps. CXXXV, 19, 20. All priests are included in House of Aaron; therefore the priests obtain atonement with Aaron's bullock, for Scripture says: And he shall make atonement for himself and for his house.

(30) Which states that if the priests would not obtain atonement with Aaron's bullock, they would have no atonement at all.

(31) At least for other sins; whereas, according to the Baraitha, it appears that their atonement depends entirely on the bullock of Aaron.

(32) R. Judah who is the Tanna of the Baraitha.

(33) If we should say that the priests can obtain atonement neither with the inner goat of the people nor with bullock of the High Priest for the sins of uncleanness connected with the Temple, the result would be that they would have no atonement at all for these sins; though for other sins they would still obtain atonement with the scapegoat.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 14a

for the sins of uncleanness in connection with the Temple and holy food thereof. With what do they obtain atonement? It is better that they should obtain atonement with the bullock of Aaron, for it was released from its implication, in order to include also his house; and that they should not obtain atonement with the goat offered within [the veil], which was not released from its implication. And if you desire to say anything, [I may add another argument, for] Scripture says: O house of Aaron, bless ye the Lord, etc.

What [is meant by]: If you desire to say anything?¹ You might say, it is written: [He shall atone for himself and for] his house,² [therefore I add the argument that] all [priests] are called his house, for it is said: O house of Aaron, bless ye the Lord . . . ye that fear the Lord, bless ye the Lord.

Now, as to the phrase, that is for the people,³ does it come for this purpose?⁴ Surely it is required [to deduce] that the Divine Law means it should be from the people's [funds]!⁵ — This we may deduce from: And from the congregation of the Children of Israel [he shall take two goats].⁶

Now, as to the phrase, which is for himself,⁷ does it come for this purpose?⁸ Surely it is required [to deduce] that which was taught: From his own [funds] he brings [the bullock], and he does not bring it from public funds. I might think that he does not bring it from public funds, because the congregation do not obtain atonement with it, but he may bring it from [funds subscribed by] his brother priests, for his brother priests obtain atonement with it, therefore Scripture says: which is for himself.⁹ I might think that he should not bring it [from priestly subscriptions], but if he did, it is still valid,¹⁰ therefore Scripture says once more: which is for himself;¹¹ the verse repeats it in order to make [this condition] indispensable!¹² — The Tanna meant thus in his argument: Why do they [the priests] not obtain atonement with [the goat of] the people? — Because they spend no money on it, for it is written: that is for the people;¹³ [then we should say, that since] on Aaron's [bullock] they also spend no money,¹⁴ [they should not obtain atonement with it,]¹⁵ therefore he says, they are all called his house.¹⁶

It is right according to R. Simeon¹⁷ that Scripture mentions two confessions¹⁸ and the blood of the bullock:¹⁹ one instead of the goat offered within [the veil],²⁰ one instead of the goat offered outside,²¹ and one instead of the scapegoat.²² But according to R. Judah,²³ why do we require two confessions and the blood of the bullock? One confession and the blood should suffice!²⁴ — One for himself and one for his household;²⁵ as it was taught in the Academy of R. Ishmael:²⁶ Thus the nature of justice is practiced:²⁷ it is better that the innocent should come and atone for the guilty, and not that the guilty should come and atone for the guilty.

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. THE LAWS CONCERNING THE DISCOVERY OF HAVING UNCONSCIOUSLY SINNED THROUGH UNCLEANNESS ARE TWO, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR;²⁸ [IF] HE BECAME UNCLEAN AND WAS AWARE OF IT,²⁹ THEN THE UNCLEANNESS BECAME HIDDEN FROM HIM, THOUGH HE REMEMBERED THE HOLY FOOD;³⁰ [IF THE FACT THAT IT WAS] HOLY FOOD WAS HIDDEN FROM HIM, THOUGH HE REMEMBERED THE UNCLEANNESS; [IF] BOTH WERE HIDDEN FROM HIM; AND HE ATE HOLY FOOD, AND WAS NOT AWARE,³¹ AND WHEN HE HAD EATEN, BECAME AWARE: — IN THESE CASES HE BRINGS A SLIDING SCALE SACRIFICE. [IF] HE BECAME UNCLEAN AND WAS AWARE OF IT, THEN THE UNCLEANNESS BECAME HIDDEN FROM HIM, THOUGH HE REMEMBERED THE TEMPLE;³² [IF THE FACT THAT IT WAS] THE TEMPLE WAS HIDDEN FROM HIM, THOUGH HE REMEMBERED THE UNCLEANNESS; [IF] BOTH WERE HIDDEN FROM HIM; AND HE ENTERED THE TEMPLE, AND WAS NOT AWARE,³³ AND WHEN HE HAD GONE OUT, BECAME AWARE: — IN THESE CASES HE BRINGS A SLIDING SCALE SACRIFICE.

IT IS THE SAME WHETHER ONE ENTERS THE TEMPLE COURT OR THE ADDITION TO THE TEMPLE COURT,³⁴ FOR ADDITIONS ARE NOT MADE TO THE CITY [OF JERUSALEM], OR TO THE TEMPLE COMPARTMENTS EXCEPT BY KING, PROPHET, URIM AND TUMMIN,³⁵ SANHEDRIN OF SEVENTY ONE,³⁶ TWO [LOAVES] OF THANKSGIVING,³⁷ AND SONG;³⁸ AND THE BETH DIN WALKING IN PROCESSION, THE TWO [LOAVES] OF THANKSGIVING [BEING BORNE] AFTER THEM, AND ALL ISRAEL [FOLLOWING] BEHIND THEM.

(1) What argument could be used to refute this reasoning?

(2) Limiting the atonement to his household, and excluding other priests.

- (3) Lev. XVI, 15.
- (4) To limit the atonement by the inner goat to Israelites, and to exclude priests.
- (5) Though the bullock of the High Priest is bought from his own private means.
- (6) Lev. XVI, 5
- (7) Ibid. 6.
- (8) To limit the atonement by the bullock to the High Priest, and to exclude others.
- (9) Lev. XVI, 11: אֲשֶׁר לוֹ, which may be translated which is his, i.e., bought with his own money.
- (10) Sometimes an action which is not directly permissible before it is done is declared legitimate after it has been done, a distinction being drawn between לְכַתְּחִלָּה (before the act) and דִּיעַבְד (after the act).
- (11) Lev. XVI, 11. אֲשֶׁר לוֹ occurs twice in this verse, and once in verse 6. The first, in verse 6, prohibits the buying of the High Priest's bullock from public funds; the second, in verse 11, prohibits its purchase from priestly funds; and the third, in verse 11, is לְעַכְבָּ, to emphasize that it must be bought from his own funds, and that even if it had already been bought from priestly funds it is invalid.
- (12) The phrase אֲשֶׁר לוֹ is, therefore, necessary for this deduction. How then could the Tanna suggest that it would come to limit the atonement by the bullock to the High Priest, and exclude other priests, were it not for the further arguments adduced to include them?
- (13) From which we have deduced that it must be bought from the people's money, and not from the priest's money. More accurately, this deduction was made from the phrase: from the congregation of the Children of Israel; v. supra, and Tosaf.
- (14) For it must be bought from the High Priest's private means, as deduced from אֲשֶׁר לוֹ.
- (15) The Tanna, therefore, in stating that from the phrase אֲשֶׁר לוֹ we might be inclined to exclude other priests from the atonement of the bullock, meant that, because from this phrase we deduced that other priests must not subscribe to it, we would, for that very reason, exclude them from the atonement.
- (16) All priests are included in the house of Aaron, and therefore obtain atonement with his bullock, though they are not permitted to subscribe towards its cost.
- (17) Who holds that the priests obtain all their atonement with the bullock, and have no atonement at all, even for the other sins, with the scapegoat.
- (18) Lev. XVI, 6, 11: And he shall make atonement occurs twice. It refers to the verbal confession before the bullock is killed (Yoma 36b).
- (19) Ibid. 14: And he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it etc.
- (20) Which holds in suspense the sin in connection with uncleanness where there was knowledge at the beginning but not at the end.
- (21) Which atones for the case where there was no knowledge at the beginning but knowledge at the end.
- (22) Which atones for other sins. And for these three types of sin for which Israelites obtain atonement with the three goats, the priests obtain atonement with the two confessions and the blood sprinkling of the bullock.
- (23) Who holds that the priests obtain atonement for other sins with the scapegoat.
- (24) One instead of the inner goat, and one instead of the outer goat.
- (25) He confesses his own sins, and then, being innocent, is in a position to make confession for the other priests.
- (26) Yoma 43b.
- (27) I.e., common sense dictates this.
- (28) This Mishnah, elaborating the statement of the Mishnah, supra 2a, explains fully which are the four: forgetfulness of uncleanness (in connection with eating holy food), forgetfulness of holy food, forgetfulness of uncleanness (in connection with entering the Temple), forgetfulness of Temple, v. infra 14b.
- (29) Either immediately or later.
- (30) I.e., was aware that it was holy food he was eating.
- (31) That he was unclean, or that the food was holy, or both.
- (32) I.e., that the place he had entered was the Temple.
- (33) That he was unclean, or that it was the Temple he had entered, or both.
- (34) The additional portion is as holy as the original, for it is consecrated with full ceremonial. An unclean person entering the additional portion must, therefore, also bring a sacrifice. The whole of the Temple court was 187 cubits long and 135 cubits wide; and was divided into a number of compartments (Mid. V.). An unclean person was prohibited from entering anywhere within the court.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 14b

THE INNER ONE IS EATEN, AND THE OUTER ONE IS BURNT.¹ AND AS TO ANY ADDITION THAT WAS MADE WITHOUT ALL THESE — HE WHO ENTERS IT [WHILE UNCLEAN] IS NOT LIABLE.²

IF HE BECAME UNCLEAN IN THE TEMPLE COURT [AND WAS AWARE OF IT], AND THE UNCLEANNESS THEN BECAME HIDDEN FROM HIM, THOUGH HE REMEMBERED THE TEMPLE; [OR, THE FACT THAT IT WAS] THE TEMPLE BECAME HIDDEN FROM HIM, THOUGH HE REMEMBERED THE UNCLEANNESS; [OR,] BOTH BECAME HIDDEN FROM HIM, AND HE PROSTRATED HIMSELF, OR TARRIED THE PERIOD OF PROSTRATION,³ OR WENT OUT THE LONGER WAY, HE IS LIABLE; THE SHORTER WAY, HE IS NOT LIABLE; THIS IS THE POSITIVE PRECEPT CONCERNING THE TEMPLE⁴ FOR WHICH THEY [THE BETH DIN] ARE NOT LIABLE.⁵ AND WHICH IS THE POSITIVE PRECEPT CONCERNING A MENSTRUOUS WOMAN FOR WHICH THEY ARE LIABLE?⁶ [THIS:] IF ONE COHABITED WITH A CLEAN WOMAN, AND SHE SAID TO HIM: 'I HAVE BECOME UNCLEAN!';⁷ AND HE WITHDREW IMMEDIATELY, HE IS LIABLE,⁸ BECAUSE HIS WITHDRAWAL IS AS PLEASANT TO HIM AS HIS ENTRY.⁹

R. ELIEZER SAID: [SCRIPTURE SAYS: 'IF ANY ONE TOUCH. . . THE CARCASS OF] AN UNCLEAN CREEPING THING, AND IT BE HIDDEN FROM HIM':¹⁰ WHEN THE UNCLEAN CREEPING THING IS HIDDEN FROM HIM, HE IS LIABLE; BUT HE IS NOT LIABLE, WHEN THE TEMPLE IS HIDDEN FROM HIM.¹¹ R. AKIBA SAID: [SCRIPTURE SAYS:] 'AND IT BE HIDDEN FROM HIM THAT HE IS UNCLEAN':¹² WHEN IT IS HIDDEN FROM HIM THAT HE IS UNCLEAN, HE IS LIABLE; BUT HE IS NOT LIABLE, WHEN THE TEMPLE IS HIDDEN FROM HIM.¹³ R. ISHMAEL SAID: [SCRIPTURE SAYS:] 'AND IT BE HIDDEN FROM HIM' TWICE,¹⁴ IN ORDER TO MAKE HIM LIABLE BOTH FOR THE FORGETFULNESS OF THE UNCLEANNESS AND THE FORGETFULNESS OF THE TEMPLE.

GEMARA. Said R. Papa to Abaye: TWO, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR! They are two, subdivided into six! Knowledge of the uncleanness at the beginning and at the end; knowledge of the holy food at the beginning and at the end; knowledge of the Temple at the beginning and at the end! — But [even] according to your argument, they should be eight; for there is the uncleanness in connection with eating holy food, and the uncleanness in connection with entering the Temple, [necessitating knowledge] both at the beginning and at the end!¹⁵ This is no question; the name uncleanness is the same.¹⁶ [But] nevertheless [there remains the question] there are six? — R. Papa said: Verily, they are eight:¹⁷ the first four which do not make him liable for a sacrifice¹⁸ are not counted; but the last four which make him liable for a sacrifice are counted. Some say: [Thus] said R. Papa: Verily, they are eight: the first four which occur nowhere else in the whole Torah are counted;¹⁹ but the last four which occur elsewhere in the Torah are not counted.

R. Papa asked; If the laws of uncleanness were hidden from him, what [is the ruling]? How do you mean? Shall we say that he did not know whether a reptile is unclean, or a frog is unclean?²⁰ Surely, this is taught in school!²¹ — Well then, he did know that a reptile is unclean, but, for example, he touched [a portion of a reptile] the size of a lentil; and he did not know whether the size of a lentil contaminates or not: What [is the ruling]? [Shall we say] since he knew that a reptile contaminates, this is counted knowledge; or, since he did not know whether the size of a lentil contaminates or not, it is counted as unawareness?²² — The question remains undecided.²³

R. Jeremiah asked: If a Babylonian went up to Palestine, and the place of the Temple was hidden from him;²⁴ what [is the ruling]? — According to whose view? If according to R. Akiba, who holds there must be knowledge at the beginning,²⁵ [the question does not arise, for] he does not make him liable for [uncleanness in connection with] forgetfulness of the Temple;²⁶ if according to R. Ishmael, who does make him liable for [uncleanness in connection with] forgetfulness of the Temple,²⁷ [again the question does not arise, for] he does not require knowledge at the beginning?²⁸ — It is not necessary [to ask this question except] according to Rabbi, who requires knowledge at the beginning, and makes him liable in the case of forgetfulness of the Temple,²⁹ and who holds, furthermore, that knowledge gained from a teacher is counted knowledge;³⁰ what [is the ruling]? [Shall we say], since he knew that there was a Temple in existence, this is called knowledge; or, since its place was not known to him it is counted as unawareness?³¹ — The question remains undecided. IT IS THE SAME WHETHER ONE ENTERS THE TEMPLE COURT, etc. How do we know?³² — R. Shimi b. Hiyya said: Because Scripture says: According to all that I show thee, the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all its vessels,

(2) Because it is not holy.

(3) V. infra 16b.

(4) Num. V, 2: Command the children of Israel that they send out of the camp . . . whosoever is unclean. If uncleanness occurs to him while in the precincts of the Temple, he must leave immediately by the shortest route.

(5) If the Beth din give an erroneous ruling, permitting that which is prohibited, they must bring a bullock for a sin-offering: If the whole congregation of Israel shall err . . . and do any of the things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done . . . the assembly shall offer a young bullock (Lev. IV, 13, 14). Congregation of Israel refers to the Beth din (Great Sanhedrin); v. Hor. 4b. In the present instance, if the Beth din give an erroneous ruling in connection with uncleanness occurring to a person while in the Temple, they do not bring a bullock, for they only bring a bullock for an erroneous ruling on a matter which, when unwittingly done by an individual, must be atoned for by a sin-offering, but not for an erroneous ruling on a matter which, when unwittingly done by an individual, is atoned for by a sliding scale sacrifice; v. Hor. 8b.

(6) Lev. XV, 31: Ye shall separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness; v. infra 18b. For an erroneous ruling on this the Beth din bring a bullock, because an individual, for an unwitting transgression of this precept, brings a sin offering.

(7) This is similar to entering the Temple legitimately while clean, and becoming unclean while in the Temple.

(8) And brings a sin offering.

(9) Coition; the remedy is to remain passive till the genital member becomes quiescent, when he withdraws.

(10) Lev. V, 2.

(11) He brings a sliding scale sacrifice for entering the Temple when unclean only when he has forgotten that he is unclean through contact with the carcass of a creeping thing, and not when he has forgotten that it is the Temple he is entering.

(14) Lev. V, 2, 3.

(15) The Mishnah uses the expression ידיעות הטומאה, states of knowledge (or, awareness) of the uncleanness. Had the Mishnah used the word העלמות, states of forgetfulness (or, unawareness), it would have been justified in stating that there are only four (v. supra p. 66, n. 1); states of awareness are, however, eight; for each state of unawareness must be preceded and followed by a state of awareness.

(16) The states of unawareness of the uncleanness both in connection with eating holy food and entering the Temple are reckoned as coming under one category. There are, therefore, only six states of awareness; before and after, in connection with the unawareness of the holy food; before and after, in connection with the unawareness of the Temple; before and after, in connection with the unawareness of the uncleanness (whether with reference to eating holy food or entering the Temple).

(17) The states of awareness are definitely eight, v. n. 1.

(18) For, if he remains unaware at the end, he cannot, obviously, bring a sacrifice.

(19) Elsewhere, with reference to the commission of other transgressions, there need be no awareness before the act that it was forbidden.

(20) E.g., he touched a dead toad (צב, Lev. XI, 29) which resembles a frog, and did not know the law that a toad contaminates. A dead frog does not contaminate by touch (Ker. 13b).

(21) Lit., 'go, read it in school'. All children know that the carcass of a reptile contaminates (Lev. XI, 29, 30). His temporary forgetfulness of this law is, therefore, immaterial. He is reckoned as having knowledge at the beginning, and later, when eating holy food (having forgotten that he is unclean), there is unawareness in the middle; ultimately, when the knowledge at the end comes to him, he brings a sliding scale sacrifice. Had ignorance of the law been counted as unawareness, there would have been, in this case, no knowledge at the beginning, and he would not be liable for a sacrifice.

(22) Therefore, there is no knowledge at the beginning.

(23) Lit., 'Let it stand'.

(24) And he entered the Temple whilst unclean, and had never been aware that this building was the Temple.

(28) Infra 19b.

(31) And there is no knowledge at the beginning. The fact that he knew there is a Temple in existence does not constitute 'knowledge gained from a teacher', because he never knew its site; but in the case where he became unclean by touching a carcass though he was not aware at the moment of contact that this contact made him unclean, it is nevertheless counted as knowledge at the beginning (knowledge gained from a teacher), because he had been aware at one time that contact with a carcass makes him unclean, and he had been aware at the moment of contact that he was touching a carcass.

(32) That king, prophet, etc. are necessary for consecrating an addition to the Temple court.

even so shall ye make it¹ — for future generations. Raba objected: All the vessels which Moses made were consecrated by their anointing;² thenceforth,³ their employment in the service dedicated them.⁴ Now why? Let us say: so shall ye make it — for future generations.⁵ — It is different there, for Scripture says: And he anointed them and sanctified them⁶ — 'them' he anointed; but [vessels] in future generations [are] not [consecrated] by anointing. But you may say: 'them' he anointed; but [vessels] in future generations [may be consecrated] either by anointing or by employment in the service? — R. Papa said: Scripture says. [And they shall take all the vessels of ministry,] wherewith they minister in the sanctuary;⁷ the verse makes them dependent upon ministry.⁸ Now that Scripture has written 'wherewith they minister', why do we require 'them'?⁹ — If Scripture had not written 'them', I might have said: these [in the time of Moses] were [consecrated] by anointing [only], but [vessels] in future generations [require both] anointing and employment in service, for Scripture has written so shall ye make it;¹⁰ therefore Scripture limits [by writing] 'them' — them¹¹ by anointing, but not [vessels] in future generations by anointing.¹²

AND WITH TWO [LOAVES] OF THANKSGIVING. We learnt: The two thanksgiving offerings which are mentioned refer to their loaves and not their flesh.¹³ How do we know? R. Hisda said: Because Scripture says: And I placed two great thanksgiving offerings,¹⁴ and we went in procession, on the right upon the wall.¹⁵ Now, what is meant by 'great'? Shall we say, from a great [or, large] kind actually?¹⁶ [If so,] let him say, oxen! But then, large of their kind?¹⁷ [That is impossible, for] is there any importance [attached to size] before Heaven? Surely we learnt: It is said with reference to a burnt offering of cattle: an offering made by fire, a sweet savour [unto the Lord];¹⁸ with reference to a burnt offering of a bird: an offering made by fire, a sweet savour [unto the Lord];¹⁹ with reference to a meal offering: an offering made by fire, a sweet savour [unto the Lord].²⁰ This teaches us that it is the same whether one gives much or little, as long as he directs his heart to his Father who is in Heaven! — Well then, that which is [inevitably] the larger in the thanksgiving offering, and which is it? The leaven. For we learnt: The thanksgiving offering came from five Jerusalem se'ahs, which are equivalent to six wilderness²¹ se'ahs, which are two ephahs, (for an ephah is three se'ahs); twenty tenths [of an ephah],²² ten for leavened, and ten for unleavened [loaves]; and the unleavened [loaves] were of three kinds: cakes, wafers, and cakes saturated with oil.²³ [Hence, the leavened loaves were larger.]²⁴

Rami b. Hama said: The [addition to the] Temple court is not sanctified except by the remnants of the meal offering.²⁵ What is the reason? — Like Jerusalem; just as Jerusalem is sanctified by that which must be eaten within it,²⁶ so the Temple court is sanctified by that which must be eaten within it.²⁷ Cannot then the loaves of thanksgiving be eaten in the Temple court?²⁸ — Well then, like Jerusalem; just as Jerusalem [is sanctified by] that which must be eaten within it, and which, if it goes outside it, becomes invalid,²⁹ so the Temple court [is sanctified by] that which must be eaten within it, and which, if it goes outside it, becomes invalid.³⁰ [But why not say,] just as there³¹ it is leaven, so here³² let it be leaven? — How can you reason thus? Is there, then, a meal offering of leaven!³³

(1) Ex. XXV, 9; the phrase, so shall ye make it, being superfluous, because it has already been said, Let them make Me a sanctuary (verse 8), is taken to imply that whatever was done for the tabernacle in the wilderness should be done for any future tabernacle or Temple. The tabernacle was consecrated in the presence of King and Prophet (Moses), Urim and Tummim (worn by Aaron), and the seventy elders.

(2) With the holy anointing oil (Ex. XXX, 25-28), becoming thereby bodily holy.

(3) Vessels in later times were not anointed.

(4) V. Sanh 16b.

(5) And let them require anointing.

(6) Num. VII, 1; the tabernacle and all its vessels.

(7) Num. IV, 12; this verse is taken to refer to future vessels, because the word used, יִשְׁרְתוּ is in the future tense (lit., 'they will minister'); v. Rashi, Sanh. 16b.

(8) I.e., being employed in the service, they become vessels of ministry (holy).

(9) Since we deduce from the phrase wherewith they minister that vessels in the future are consecrated by 'ministry', why do we require the emphasis on 'them' to exclude vessels in the future.

(10) In the future: Just as now the vessels are consecrated by anointing, so they shall be in the future; and that vessels in the future are consecrated by 'ministry' is deduced from wherewith they minister; hence they require both anointing and employment in service in order to become consecrated.

(11) In the time of Moses.

(12) But by 'ministry' only.

(13) A thanksgiving offering comprises, in addition to the animal sacrificed, loaves of unleavened and leavened bread (Lev. VII, 12, 13).

(14) שְׁתֵּי תוֹדוֹת גְּדוּלוֹת: E.V, two great companies that gave thanks.

(15) Neh. XII, 31. The verse refers to the re-dedication of Jerusalem by Nehemiah.

(16) The animals of the thanksgiving offerings were of a large breed (e.g., oxen) and not of a small breed (e.g., sheep).

(17) I.e., even if they were of a small breed (e.g., sheep), the largest of that kind were brought.

(20) Lev. II, 2.

(21) I.e., Biblical se'ahs, measures referred to in the Bible, when the Israelites were in the wilderness.

(22) For it was made of 6 se'ahs = 2 ephahs; and an ephah is 10 tenths (i.e., omers): an omer is the tenth part of an ephah (Ex. XVI, 36).

(23) Lev. VII, 12; ten loaves of each kind were made, so that there were thirty unleavened loaves made from the ten omers; the leavened loaves were only of one kind (Lev. VII, 13); so that the ten leavened loaves were equal to the thirty unleavened loaves; each leavened loaf was, therefore, three times the size of an unleavened loaf (Men. 77a).

(24) Nehemiah's statement that he took two large thanksgiving offerings therefore means two leavened loaves of the thanksgiving offering.

(25) Eaten by the priests (Lev. VI, 9).

(26) The two loaves of the thanksgiving offering must be eaten within the city.

(27) The remnant of the meal offering eaten by the priests (Lev. VI, 9).

(28) The priest may eat the portion he receives from an Israelite's thanksgiving offering (Lev. VII, 14) within the Temple court, if he desires. Since the loaves of thanksgiving may, therefore, be eaten in the Temple court, let them sanctify the addition to the Temple court.

(29) The loaves of thanksgiving, if taken outside the city walls, become invalid.

(30) The remnant of the meal offering eaten by the priests becomes invalid, if taken outside the Temple court,

(31) In sanctifying the city two loaves of leavened bread are used.

(32) In sanctifying the Temple court.

(33) Since we require the remnant of a meal offering to sanctify the Temple Court, it must perforce be unleavened: No meal offering, which ye shall bring unto the Lord, shall be made with leaven (Lev. II, 11).

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 15b

And if you should say that he leavens the remnants,¹ and sanctifies with them, [that cannot be, for] it is written: It shall not be baked leavened. As their portion [have I given it].² And Resh Lakish said: Even their portion must not be baked leavened. But why not?³ It is possible to sanctify it with the two loaves of Pentecost!⁴ — It is impossible. How shall he do it? Shall he build it⁵ on the eve [of Pentecost], and sanctify it on the eve? The two loaves become holy only by the sacrifice of the lambs [on Pentecost].⁶ Shall he build it on the eve, and sanctify it now [on Pentecost]? We require sanctification at the time of [the completion of] the building. Shall he complete the building on the festival, and sanctify it on the festival? The building of the Temple does not supersede the festival.⁷ Shall he leave [the two loaves] till [a day] later, and complete the building and sanctify it? They [the loaves] become invalid by linah.⁸ Shall he build it on the eve of the festival, and leave a little [incomplete], so that when he has recited the blessing at the end of the day [Habdalah], he may complete it immediately and sanctify it?⁹ The building of the Temple cannot take place at night, for Abaye said: How do we know that the building of the Temple cannot take place at night? Because it is said: 'And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up'¹⁰ — during the 'day' it is reared up, during the night it is not reared up. Therefore it is not possible.¹¹

AND WITH SONG. Our Rabbis taught: The song of thanksgiving¹² was [accompanied by] lutes,¹³ lyres,¹⁴ and cymbals¹⁵ at every corner and upon every great stone in Jerusalem; and [the psalm] is intoned; I will extol Thee, O Lord, for Thou hast raised me up etc.;¹⁶ and the song against evil occurrences,¹⁷ and some call it the song against plagues. He who calls it [the song] against plagues [does so] because it is written: neither shall any plague come nigh thy tent;¹⁸ and he who calls it [the song] against evil occurrences [does so] because it is written: a thousand may fall at my side;¹⁹ [that is to say, this psalm] is intoned: O thou who dwellest in the secret place of the Most High, and abidest in the shadow of the Almighty, till for thou hast made the Lord who is my refuge, even the Most High, thy habitation;²⁰ and then again [this psalm] is intoned; A Psalm of David, when he fled from Absalom his son. Lord, how many are mine adversaries become! till Salvation belongeth unto the Lord; Thy blessing be upon Thy people. Selah.²¹

R. Joshua b. Levi recited these verses²² when retiring to sleep. How could he do so? Did not R. Joshua b. Levi [himself] say it is prohibited to heal oneself with words of the Torah?²³ — To protect oneself is different.²⁴ Well then, when he said it is prohibited, [he meant] where there is [already] a wound. If there is a wound, is it merely prohibited, and nothing else? Surely, we have learnt: He who utters an incantation²⁵ over a wound has no portion in the world to come!²⁶ — But it has been taught with reference to this; R. Johanan said: They taught [this law only] if he spits, for the Name of Heaven must not be mentioned in connection with spitting.²⁷

THE BETH DIN WALK IN PROCESSION, THE TWO [LOAVES] OF THANKSGIVING BEING BORNE AFTER THEM, etc. Shall we say that the Beth din walk in front of the [loaves of] thanksgiving? Surely, it is written: And after them [the two loaves] went Hoshaiiah and half of the princes of Judah.²⁸ — Thus he means: The Beth din walk, and the two [loaves] of thanksgiving are borne, and the Beth din walk behind.²⁹

How are they borne? — R. Hiyya and R. Simeon son of Rabbi [disagreed]: One said, one opposite the other; and the other said, one behind the other.³⁰ According to the one who holds they were opposite each other, the inner one is that which is nearest the wall,³¹ and according to the one who holds that they were one behind the other, the inner one is that which is nearest the Beth din.³²

We learnt: THE INNER ONE IS EATEN, AND THE OUTER ONE IS BURNT. It is right according to the one who holds that they were one behind the other, therefore the inner one is eaten, because the outer one came before it and sanctified the place;³³ but according to the one who holds that they were opposite each other, they both simultaneously sanctified the place!³⁴ — But even according to your reasoning, according to the one who holds they were one behind the other, [why is the inner one eaten?] does the one [loaf]³⁵ then sanctify the place? Surely, we have learnt: ANY [ADDITION] THAT WAS NOT MADE WITH ALL THESE [IS NOT HOLY],³⁶ and even according to the one who holds [that the reading in the Mishnah is]: ‘with any one of all these’,³⁷ [still] these two [loaves] together are one precept!³⁸ — Well then, said R. Johanan,

(1) After the ritual has been performed by the priest with the unleavened meal offering, he takes the remnant due to him, and makes it leavened.

(2) Lev. VI, 10. לֹא תֹאֲפֶה חֲמֵץ חֶלְקֶם may be translated: ‘their portion must not be baked leavened.’

(3) Is it not really possible to sanctify the Temple court with a meal offering of leaven?

(4) Lev. XXIII, 17: they shall be baked leavened.

(5) The addition in the Temple court.

(6) Lev. XXIII, 20: And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first-fruits for a wave offering before the Lord, with the two lambs; they shall be holy to the Lord. Though the loaves are holy for their value (קְדוּשַׁת דָּמִים) before the lambs are sacrificed, for they are purchased from the Temple funds, they do not become bodily holy (קְדוּשַׁת הַגּוֹף) until the lambs are sacrificed on Pentecost; v. Men. 78b.

(7) No building operation may be performed on a Sabbath or festival even if it be for so sacred a task as the building of the Temple; v. Yeb. 6a.

(8) לַיְנָה (night rest) ‘Being left overnight till the morrow’: for they are permitted to be eaten only for one day (Pentecost) and one night (till midnight); v. Zeb. 54b.

(9) Before midnight, while the loaves are still valid.

(10) Num. IX, 15.

(11) To sanctify the Temple court with leavened loaves.

(14) Stringed instrument like harp; or, leather wind instrument like accordion or concertina; v. ibid. Rashi.

(17) I.e., the psalm referring to evil spirits or demons, XCI.

(18) Ps. XCI, 10.

(19) Ibid. 7; i.e., the evil spirits will depart when the place is sanctified.

(20) Ps. XCI, 1-9 this is actually the song of pegaim or nega'im; v. Rashi.

(23) And these verses are intended to drive away evil spirits.

(24) And is permitted; the verses are not intended to heal an actual wound, but to shield from possible affliction.

(25) Lit., 'whispers'.

(26) Sanh. 90a. This is more than merely prohibiting it. ['Spitting was believed to have the power of breaking the spell, v. Blau, Zaubewesen, p.68.]

(27) If he spits on the wound, and utters an incantation of Biblical verses, he has no portion in the world to come; but to utter the incantation without spitting is also prohibited; to utter verses to protect oneself from a possible affliction is permitted, v. Sanh. 101a.

(28) Neh. XII, 32.

(29) And the Mishnah should be emended accordingly.

(30) The loaves are borne by two priests; according to one view, the priests walk side by side; according to the other view, they walk one behind the other.

(31) According to Rashi, the procession marched round the wall outside; according to Tosaf., inside the city. In either case, the inner one is that which is nearest the wall. Tosaf. suggest that they marched inside the wall, because if the loaves were taken outside, they would automatically become invalidated by being יצא (outside the consecrated area, i.e., the city of Jerusalem).

(32) Because there is one priest in front, and the Beth din behind.

(33) As soon as the first loaf in the procession comes to a place, it sanctifies it; the second one, coming to it, enters holy ground, and does not, therefore, become invalid by being יצא (going out into unconsecrated ground). The first one, however, is burnt, because at the actual moment of entering the unconsecrated spot it became יצא.

(34) Then, either both should be burnt, if we assume that at the moment of entry into unconsecrated ground they became יצא; or, both should be eaten, if we assume that the act of entry automatically sanctifies the spot at the same moment.

(35) The first.

(36) Hence we require both loaves to enter a place in order to consecrate it.

(37) Infra 16a; that any one of those mentioned in the Mishnah suffices to consecrate a place; and you might, therefore, conceivably say that one loaf suffices.

(38) They are inseparable; 'any one of these' means either King or priest or Sanhedrin or two loaves.

by the ruling of the prophet the one was eaten, and by the ruling of the prophet the other was burnt.¹

ANY [ADDITION] THAT WAS NOT MADE WITH ALL THESE, ETC. It was taught: R. Huna said: WITH ALL THESE we learnt in our Mishnah; R. Nahman said: WITH ANY ONE OF ALL THESE we learnt in our Mishnah. R. Huna said: WITH ALL THESE we learnt in our Mishnah, because he holds the first consecration² consecrated it for the time being, and consecrated it for the future; and Ezra [in re-consecrating it] merely did it as a symbol.³ R. Nahman said: WITH ANY ONE OF ALL THESE we learnt in our Mishnah, because he holds the first consecration consecrated it for the time being, and did not consecrate it for the future; and Ezra really re-consecrated it,⁴ although there were no Urim and Tummim. Raba asked R. Nahman: We learnt: ANY ADDITION THAT WAS NOT MADE WITH ALL THESE!?! — [Emend it and] learn: 'With any one of all these.'

Come and hear: Abba Saul said: There were two meadows⁵ on the Mount of Olives, the lower and the upper;⁶ the lower was consecrated with all these;⁷ the upper was not consecrated with all these, but by the returned exiles,⁸ without King and without Urim and Tummim; the lower one which was properly consecrated; the illiterate⁹ entered there, and ate there sacrifices of a minor grade of holiness,¹⁰ but not the second tithe.¹¹ And the learned¹² ate there sacrifices of a minor grade of holiness and also the second tithe.¹³ The upper one which was not properly consecrated; the illiterate entered there, and ate there sacrifices of a minor grade of holiness,¹⁴ but not the second tithe. And the learned did not eat there either sacrifices of a minor grade of holiness or the second tithe. And why did they not consecrate it? Because additions are not made to the city and to the Temple courts except by King, Prophet, Urim and Tummim, Sanhedrin of seventy-one, and two [loaves] of thanksgiving, and song. And why did they consecrate it?¹⁵ Why did they consecrate it? You have just said they did not consecrate it! — But [read] ‘why did they bring it within [the city boundaries]?’ Because it was a vulnerable spot of Jerusalem, and it would have been easy to conquer it [the city] from there.¹⁶ [This is, however, in conflict with R. Nahman's view!¹⁷ — He may answer that it is a subject upon which] Tannaim disagree [and he will agree with one of them], for it has been taught: R. Eliezer said: I heard [from my teachers] that when they were building the Temple [in Ezra's time], they made curtains for the Temple and curtains for the courts,¹⁸ but for the Temple they built [the wall] outside [the curtains],¹⁹ and for the courts they built [the walls] within [the curtains]. R. Joshua said: I heard that sacrifices were offered although there was no Temple,²⁰ and sacrifices of the highest grade of holiness were eaten although there were no curtains, and sacrifices of a minor grade and the second tithe, although there was no wall,²¹ because the first consecration consecrated it for the time being, and consecrated it for the future. This implies [does it not?] that R. Eliezer holds, it did not consecrate it for the future.²²

Said Rabina to R. Ashi; How [do you deduce this]? Perhaps all agree that the first consecration consecrated it for the time being, and consecrated it for the future, but one Master states [merely] what he heard [from his teachers], and the other Master states [merely] what he heard [from his teachers].²³ And if you will say, [if so,]²⁴ why, according to R. Eliezer, are curtains necessary? [We may reply,] for privacy only!

Well then, there the Tannaim [disagree], for it has been taught: ‘R. Ishmael son of R. Jose said: Why did the Sages enumerate these?²⁵ Because when the exiles returned, they came upon these, and consecrated them;²⁶ but [the sanctity of] the earlier [cities] was abolished when [the sanctity of] the land was abolished.’ Hence, he holds that the first consecration consecrated it for the time being, but did not consecrate it for the future. But we may point out an incongruity: ‘R. Ishmael son of R. Jose said: Were there, then, only these?²⁷ Surely it is already written: [And we took all his cities ... sixty cities, all the region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan. All these were fortified cities, with high walls.²⁸ Then why did the Sages enumerate these? Because when the exiles returned, they came upon these, and consecrated them.’ — They consecrated them now! Surely we state further on²⁹ that it was not necessary to consecrate them! But read, ‘they came upon these, and enumerated them. And not these only [are walled cities], but any one about which you may have a tradition from your fathers that it was surrounded by a wall from the days of Joshua, the son of Nun, then all these precepts³⁰ apply to it; because the first consecration consecrated it for the time being, and consecrated it for the future.’³¹ There is thus a discrepancy between [the statement of] R. Ishmael son of R. Jose [in the Baraita] and [that of] R. Ishmael son of R. Jose [in the Tosefta]!³² — If you will, you may say that [they reflect the opinions of] two tannaim [who] disagree about [the view of] R. Ishmael son of R. Jose; and if you will, you may say that one of the statements was spoken by R. Eleazar b. Jose,³³ for it has been taught: R. Eleazar b. Jose said: [Scripture says: The city] that has a wall;³⁴ although it has not [a wall] now, as long as it had one before [it is reckoned a walled city].³⁵

(1) There is no discoverable reason why one loaf suffices and the other burnt; but this was the ruling of the prophets Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi who were present at Ezra's and Nehemiah's re-consecration of Jerusalem.

(2) Of the Temple and of Jerusalem in the time of Solomon.

(3) Because it was still holy, and did not need re-consecration, and could not, in any, case, be re-consecrated, because King and Urim and Tummim were lacking (v. Yoma 21 b); for R. Huna holds that we require ‘all these’ (enumerated in the Mishnah) for re-consecration, and Ezra neither re-consecrated the city nor made any addition to it which would require consecration.

(4) With Sanhedrin, two loaves of thanksgiving, and song; for, according in R. Nahman, even one of the requisites (mentioned in the Mishnah) suffices for re-consecration.

(5) [בצעיין] Schlatter, Tage Trajans, 20, renders it ‘parts’, ‘districts’; Krauss, as ‘fissures’ produced by an earthquake,

- (6) On the slopes of the mountain, one near the base and the other near the summit.
- (7) During the time if the First Temple it was incorporated within the city boundary, and joined to the city by a wall.
- (8) From Babylon, who included it in the city, and built another wall around it.
- (9) Amme ha-arez (v. Glos.). I.e., not strictly observant of the laws regarding levitical uncleanness.
- (10) Such as thanks offerings or peace offerings which were permitted to be eaten within the city by all Israelites; v. Zeb. V, 6-8.
- (11) Eaten by the owner in Jerusalem: Deut. XIV, 22-26. The second tithe could also have been eaten in the lower meadow, for it was properly consecrated, and was part of the city; but the illiterate thought that the second tithe had to be eaten within the inner (old) wall of Jerusalem, for the verse states: Thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God . . . the tithe of thy corn . . . (Deut. XIV, 23). They were stricter with the tithe than with the sacrifices, because the verse (ibid. 22) states: Thou shalt surely tithe; and they had probably heard the popular exposition: עֶשֶׂר תְּעָשֶׂר עֶשֶׂר בְּשִׁבִיל שְׂתַעֲשֶׂר (a play on the word תְּעָשֶׂר; v. Shab. 119a) — give tithes in order that thou mayest have wealth.
- (12) Haberim (v. Glos.).
- (13) Because they knew that the sacrifices and second tithe were equal, and that the lower meadow was properly consecrated and part of the city.
- (14) They thought the upper meadow was as holy as the lower, because it had also been incorporated within the city by a wall, and they did not distinguished between the full consecration of the lower meadow and the incomplete consecration of the upper meadow.
- (15) [Tosef. Sanh. III reads, ‘Why was it not consecrated?’]
- (16) [V. REJ, loc. cit.]
- (17) For it is stated that the upper meadow was not consecrated, because all the essentials were not present, whereas R. Nahman holds that ‘any one of all these’ suffices.
- (18) As temporary partitions to enable sacrifices to be offered and eaten forthwith (v. n. 8); and then they built the walls near curtain.
- (19) So that the curtains prevented the workmen from gazing into the holy place.
- (20) Before it was re-built by Ezra; v. Ezra III, 1-6; Meg. 10a, Rashi.
- (21) Round Jerusalem.
- (22) Because R. Eliezer requires curtains in order that it may be counted as a Temple; but without curtains it is not holy because, presumably, the first consecration did not consecrated it for the future. R. Nahman will thus agree with R. Eliezer.
- (23) R. Eliezer and R. Joshua are not arguing on this subject, their statements being entirely separate, and not uttered to each other's hearing.
- (24) If R. Eliezer holds that the first consecration consecrated it for the future also.
- (25) The Mishnah (‘Ar. 32a), explaining that walled cities (Lev. XXV, 29, 30) are such which had walls round them since the days of Joshua, mentions a few as examples, such as Gamala, Gedud, etc. Why did the Sages mentioned these particularly? There were many more which could have been mentioned.

- (31) Tosaf. ‘Ar. V.
- (32) From the Baraitha it appears he holds that the first consecration did not consecrate it for the future, and from the Tosefta it appears he holds that it did.
- (33) The statement in the Tosefta.
- (34) Lev. XXV, 30; the kethib is לֹא הִמָּה (‘has not a wall’), but the kere is לוֹ (‘has a wall to it’).
- (35) Because the first consecration, when it had a wall, suffices for now also, though the wall is now destroyed. Hence, there are two tannaim, R. Ishmael and R. Eleazar b. Jose, who disagree as to whether the first consecration consecrated it for the future also or not; and R. Nahman will agree with R. Ishmael.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 16b

IF HE BECAME UNCLEAN IN THE TEMPLE COURT [AND WAS AWARE OF IT], THEN THE UNCLEANNESS BECAME HIDDEN FROM HIM, etc. How do we know uncleanness in the Temple court [is punishable]?¹ — R. Eleazar [b. Pedath] said: One verse states: The tabernacle of the Lord he hath defiled;² and another verse states: For the sanctuary of the Lord he hath defiled.³ If it is not applicable to [the case of] uncleanness occurring outside,⁴ apply it to [the case of] uncleanness occurring inside.⁵ But are the verses superfluous? Surely they are necessary, for it has been taught: R. Eleazar [b. Shammua'] said: If tabernacle is mentioned, why is sanctuary mentioned; and if sanctuary is mentioned, why is tabernacle mentioned? If tabernacle had been mentioned, and sanctuary had not been mentioned, I might have thought that for [entering] the tabernacle he should be liable, because it was anointed with the anointing oil;⁶ but for [entering] the sanctuary [i.e., Temple] he should not be liable; and if sanctuary had been mentioned, and tabernacle had not been mentioned, I might have thought that for [entering] the sanctuary he should be liable, because its holiness is an everlasting holiness;⁷ but for [entering] the tabernacle he should not be liable; therefore tabernacle is mentioned, and sanctuary is mentioned.⁸ — R. Eleazar [b. Shammua'] argued thus; Since tabernacle is called sanctuary, and sanctuary is called tabernacle, let Scripture write either in both verses sanctuary, or in both verses tabernacle;⁹ why [does Scripture write] tabernacle and sanctuary? Hence, we deduce both.¹⁰

Granted that sanctuary is called tabernacle, for it is written: And I will set My tabernacle among you;¹¹ but whence do we know that tabernacle is called sanctuary? Shall we say, because it is written: And the Kohathites, the bearers of the sanctuary set forward?¹² This refers to the Ark,¹³ — Well then, from this verse: And let them make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them;¹⁴ and it is written: According to all that I show thee the pattern of the tabernacle.¹⁵

AND HE PROSTRATED HIMSELF, OR TARRIED THE PERIOD OF PROSTRATION, Raba said: They did not teach this¹⁶ except when he prostrated himself facing inwards;¹⁷ but if he prostrated himself facing outwards, then, only if he tarried is he liable, but if he did not tarry, he is not liable. Some append this [comment of Raba] to the latter clause; OR TARRIED THE PERIOD OF PROSTRATION: This implies that prostration itself requires tarrying. Raba said: They did not teach this except when he prostrated himself facing outwards; but, if facing inwards, even if he did not tarry [he is liable;] and thus [the Mishnah] means: If he prostrated himself facing inwards [without tarrying], or if he tarried the period of prostration in his prostration facing outwards, he is liable.

What is considered prostration in which there is tarrying, and what is considered prostration in which there is no tarrying? — Where there is no tarrying, that is mere kneeling; where there is tarrying, that is the spreading out of hands and feet. And what is the duration of tarrying? In this there is disagreement between R. Isaac b. Nahmani and one of his associates, namely, R. Simeon b. Pazzi (and some say, R. Simeon b. Pazzi and one of his associates, namely, R. Isaac b. Nahmani, and some say, R. Simeon b. Nahmani); one says: As the time taken to recite this verse:¹⁸ And all the children of Israel looked on, when the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord was upon the house; and they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and prostrated themselves, and gave thanks unto the Lord: 'for He is good, for His mercy endureth for ever';¹⁹ and the other says: As [the time taken to recite] from and they bowed till the end.

Our Sages taught: Kiddah means [falling] on the face; and so Scripture says: Then Bath-sheba bowed with her face to the earth.²⁰ Kneeling means upon the knees; and so Scripture says: from kneeling at his knees.²¹ Prostration means spreading out of hands and feet; and so Scripture says:

Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down to thee to the earth?²²

Raba queried: Is tarrying necessary for stripes,²³ or is tarrying not necessary for stripes? For [the bringing of] a sacrifice there is a tradition that tarrying is necessary,²⁴ but for stripes there is no tradition that tarrying is necessary?²⁵

 - (2) Num. XIX, 13; refers to a person defiled by a dead body entering the tabernacle or sanctuary.

 - (4) For that is deduced from the first verse.
 - (5) Since otherwise the verse is superfluous.
 - (6) And therefore possessed greater sanctity.
 - (7) Sacrifices on bamoth ('high places') being prohibited from the time the Temple was built, even after its destruction.
 - (8) Hence, since neither is superfluous, how can the case of uncleanness occurring inside be deduced?
 - (9) And from the superfluous verse we could deduce the case of uncleanness occurring inside.
 - (10) Because Scripture of set purpose uses tabernacle in one verse and sanctuary in the other, we may deduce also that they are both equal in sanctity, and that an unclean person entering either is liable; v. Tosaf.
 - (11) Lev. XXVI, 11; lit., 'I will set My dwelling (or, 'abode') among you'. Wherever God dwells is His mishkan; since He dwelt in the sanctuary (i.e. Temple), that also is His mishkan (i.e., tabernacle). V. 'Er. 2a. Rashi, for another interpretation.

 - (22) Gen. XXXVII, 10; 'bow down to earth' implies complete prostration.
 - (23) If, having become unwittingly unclean in the temple, he was warned to leave; but he remained, though less than the duration of the tarrying period, is he punished by stripes?
 - (24) If he became unwittingly unclean in the Temple, and tarried the period of prostration while he was unaware of his uncleanness or of the Temple, he brings a sliding scale sacrifice; supra 14b.
 - (25) Perhaps, since he remained wilfully, after being warned, he is liable for stripes, though he did not tarry the full period of prostration.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 17a

Or, perhaps the tradition is that within [the Temple] tarrying is necessary, no matter whether for sacrifice or for stripes?¹ It remains undecided.

Raba queried: If he suspended himself in the air in the Temple,² what is the ruling? Is the tradition that tarrying makes him liable only in the case of such tarrying as may be used for prostration,³ but for such tarrying which cannot be used for prostration there is no tradition [that he is liable]? Or perhaps the tradition is that within [the Temple] tarrying makes him liable, no matter whether it may be used for prostration or not? It remains undecided.

R. Ashi queried: If he defiled himself wilfully, what is the ruling?⁴ For an accidental defilement there is a tradition that tarrying is necessary, but for wilful defilement there is no tradition that tarrying is necessary? Or perhaps the tradition is that within [the Temple] tarrying is necessary, no matter whether for accidental or wilful defilement? It remains undecided.

R. Ashi queried: Does a Nazirite at a grave require tarrying for stripes or not?⁵ Within [the Temple] there is a tradition that tarrying is necessary, but outside there is no tradition that tarrying is necessary?⁶ Or perhaps for accidental uncleanness there is a tradition that tarrying is necessary,⁷ no matter whether inside or outside? It remains undecided.

IF HE WENT OUT THE LONGER WAY, HE IS LIABLE; THE SHORTER WAY, HE IS EXEMPT, etc. Raba said: THE SHORTER WAY which they said [exempts him, implies] even [walking] heel to toe,⁸ and even the whole day.

Raba queried: Can pauses be combined?⁹ — Let him solve it from his own statement!¹⁰ — There [he is exempt only] if he did not pause.¹¹

Abaye inquired of Rabbah: If he went out the longer way in the time taken for the shorter way, what is the ruling?¹² Is the tradition that the time taken [is the essential factor], and if he went out the longer way in the time taken for the shorter way, he is exempt; or, is the tradition definite that for the longer way he is liable, and for the shorter way he is exempt? — He said to him: [The law that for] the longer way [he is liable] was not given that it should be suspended for him.¹³

R. Zera objected strongly to this: Now, it is established with us that an unclean [priest] who officiated is punished by death.¹⁴ How can this be possible? If he did not tarry, how could he do the service?¹⁵ If he tarried, he is liable to kareth! Granted, if you would say that the tradition is that time [is the essential factor],¹⁶ then it is possible,¹⁷ if he strained himself in the shorter way, after he had done the service;¹⁸

(1) When one becomes unclean within the Temple accidentally, the punishment, whether of sacrifice or of stripes, is not inflicted, unless one tarries the period of prostration.

(2) For example, on becoming unclean, he immediately caught hold of a rope in the ceiling, and remained suspended thus for the tarrying period.

(3) I.e., when he is on the ground; but since he cannot prostrate himself in the air, he is not liable, even if he remains thus suspended for the period of tarrying.

(4) If Raba's question (whether tarrying is necessary for stripes) should be decided in the affirmative, that may be because he became unclean accidentally, though he tarried wilfully; but if he became unclean wilfully, perhaps he is liable for stripes, though he does not tarry.

(5) If a Nazirite (who must avoid defilement by the dead, Num. VI, 6) was borne aloft in the cemetery in a closed carriage (not, thereby, becoming unclean), and when there the top of the carriage was removed, thus making him unclean from the air of the cemetery; and he was warned to leave, but he remained, though not the period of tarrying, is he liable for stripes? This example is similar to that of a person entering the Temple while clean, and becoming unclean inside.

(6) Because tarrying is measured as the duration of full prostration; this measure of duration is appropriate for the Temple, but not outside; and therefore the Nazirite is liable even if he did not tarry.

(7) The Nazirite became unclean accidentally, and is therefore not liable unless he tarries.

(8) Taking very short steps, so that the toe of one foot touches the heel of the foot in front.

(9) Walking out by the shorter route, he paused a while, then continued walking; then paused again; the combined moments of pausing being equal to the tarrying period. Is he liable in such case, or is he liable only when the tarrying period is one uninterrupted pause?

(10) For he holds that even if he walks very slowly, occupying the whole day, he is still exempt; though the time occupied is more than the tarrying period.

(11) Though he occupied the whole day, he did not stop walking.

(12) He ran quickly, so that the time taken in going out the longer way was only as much as would be taken in going out the shorter way at a medium pace.

(13) Even if he runs; hence, by the longer route he is always liable, even if he runs; by the shorter he is exempt, even if he walks slowly.

(14) By divine intervention, מיתה בידי שמים, not by a human tribunal; the priest must have become unclean in the Temple, for, if he became unclean outside, he is liable to the punishment of kareth (which is severer than מיתה בידי שמים) for entering.

(15) Which priestly service, however minute, could he possibly do in less time than the period of prostration?

(16) That the periods of duration mentioned in the Mishnah are simply measurements of time: the time duration of tarrying the period of prostration, and the time duration of going out by the longer route; and that he is exempt only if he does not tarry the period of prostration and goes out the shorter route, i.e., the time he spends in the Temple must be less than the combined times of the period of prostration and that occupied in walking out the shorter route at a medium pace.

(17) To have a case of an unclean priest officiating and tarrying the period of prostration, and yet not being liable for kareth, but for death by divine intervention.

(18) He ran out very quickly by the shorter route, so that, although he had tarried the period of prostration, the time he had spent altogether in the Temple was less than the combined times of prostration and walking out the shorter route at a medium pace.

but if you say that the tradition is definite,¹ how is it possible?² — Said Abaye: What a question! It is possible that he went out the shorter way [without tarrying first], and turned [a piece of the sacrifice on the altar fire] with a prong;³ and this is in accordance with R. Huna's view, for R. Huna said: A layman who turned [a piece of the sacrifice on the altar fire] with a prong is punished by death.⁴

The text says: 'R. Huna said, A layman who turned [a piece of the sacrifice on the altar fire] with a prong is punished by death.' How is this? If, without turning it, it would not have been consumed, this is self-evident! And if, without turning it, it would also have been consumed, then what has he done? — It is not necessary [for R. Huna to state his law except] in a case where if he had not turned it, it would have been consumed in two hours, and now [after turning it] it is consumed in one hour; and this [law] he teaches us, that an acceleration of the service is also a service.

R. Oshaia said: I wish to state a law, but am afraid of my associates: He who enters a house plagued by leprosy,⁵ backwards, even with his whole body [inside] except his nose, is clean, for it is written: He that cometh into the house . . . [shall be unclean].⁶ the normal way of coming in did Scripture prohibit; but I am afraid of my associates [in stating this law] for, if so, even if he entered wholly [including his nose, he should] also [be clean]. — Said Raba: His whole body is not worse than the vessels in the house; for it is written: [They shall empty the house before the priest comes to see the plague,] so that all that is in the house be not made unclean.⁷

It has also been taught similarly: These roofs [of the Temple] — sacrifices of the highest grade of holiness may not be eaten there,⁸ and sacrifices of a minor grade of holiness may not be sacrificed there;⁹ and an unclean person who entered the Temple by the roof is exempt, for it is said: And into the sanctuary she shall not come:¹⁰ the normal way of coming did Scripture prohibit.

THIS IS THE POSITIVE PRECEPT CONCERNING THE TEMPLE FOR WHICH THEY [THE BETH DIN] ARE NOT LIABLE, ETC. What is he referring to that he says — THIS IS THE POSITIVE PRECEPT, etc.?¹¹ He is referring to this:¹² They [the Beth din] are not liable for [an erroneous ruling in connection with the transgression of] a positive¹³ or negative¹⁴ precept [concerning uncleanness] in the Temple; and they [individuals] do not bring a suspensive guilt offering for [a doubtful sin¹⁵ in connection with] the positive or negative precept [concerning uncleanness] in the Temple;¹⁶ but they [the Beth din] are liable for [an erroneous ruling in connection with the transgression of] the positive¹⁷ or negative¹⁸ precept concerning a menstruous woman;¹⁹ and they [individuals] bring a suspensive guilt offering for a [doubtful sin in connection with the] positive or negative precept concerning a menstruous woman.²⁰ So [the Tanna here] says:²¹ THIS IS THE POSITIVE PRECEPT CONCERNING THE TEMPLE FOR WHICH THEY ARE NOT LIABLE; AND WHICH IS THE POSITIVE PRECEPT CONCERNING A MENSTRUOUS WOMAN FOR WHICH THEY ARE LIABLE? [THIS:] IF ONE COHABITED WITH A CLEAN WOMAN, AND SHE SAID TO HIM; 'I HAVE BECOME UNCLEAN!', AND HE WITHDREW IMMEDIATELY, HE IS LIABLE, BECAUSE HIS WITHDRAWAL IS AS PLEASANT TO HIM AS HIS ENTRY.

It was stated: Abaye said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Rab: H²² is liable to [bring] two [sin-offerings].²³ And so said Raba that R. Samuel son of R. Sheba said that R. Huna said: He is liable to bring two, one for entering and one for withdrawing. Raba raised the question: In what [circumstances]? Shall we say, it was near the time of her regular period? And with whom? Shall we say, a learned man? Granted, then, for entering he should be liable, for he thought I am able to cohabit;²⁴ but for withdrawing, why should he be liable, since he acted wilfully!²⁵

(1) In each case: that if he tarried the period of prostration he is liable, even if he runs out the shorter way; and that if he goes out the longer way he is liable, even if he had not tarried, and even if he runs quickly.

(2) To have a case of an unclean priest doing the service, and presumably tarrying (in order to do the service), and yet not being liable to kareth?

(3) Which is a priestly function, and requires only a moment of time.

(4) Because it is a priestly function, and must not be done by a layman. Cf. Num. XVIII, 7. Death here, too, means by Divine intervention, v. n. 1.

(7) Ibid. 36.

(8) For they must be eaten within the Temple; and only the floor and air till the ceiling are holy, but not the attics and roofs.

(9) Though they may be eaten there, because, of course, they may be eaten anywhere within the walls of Jerusalem. According to Tosaf., however, they may not be eaten on the roof; but v. Pes. 85b, Rashi (s.v. גג), and Adreth, Responsa, 34.

(10) Lev. XII, 3; a woman after childbirth, till after 40 days for a male child, and 80 days for a female. Entering by the roof is not normal.

(11) Lit., 'where does he stand?' Where have we learnt that the Beth din are not liable for an erroneous ruling concerning the transgression of a positive precept with reference to uncleanness in the Temple, that he states here: this is the positive precept for which they are not liable?

(12) Hor. 8b.

(13) Num. V, 2: Command the children of Israel that they put out of the camp . . . whosoever unclean by the dead; טמא לנפש is put out of the מרחנה שכינה, i.e., Temple; v. Rashi a.l. If a person become unclean in the Temple, and stays, he is transgressing this positive precept.

(14) Lev. XII, 4: And into the sanctuary she shall not come (a woman after childbirth, till after 40 days for a male, and 80 days for a female).

(15) A suspensive guilt offering, אשם תלוי, is brought by a person who is in doubt whether he has committed an act which, if done wilfully, is punishable by kareth, and if done wittingly, is punishable by the bringing of a sin offering; v. Lev. V, 17-19; and Rashi on verse 17; Hor. 8b.

(16) Because a sliding scale sacrifice, and not a fixed offering, is brought for actual unwitting transgression,

(17) V. infra 18b.

(18) Lev. XVIII, 19: And unto a woman who is impure by her uncleanness thou shalt not approach.

(19) Because for an unwitting transgression a fixed sin offering is brought.

(24) Before she has her period; if, therefore, she becomes unclean during cohabitation, he commits a sin unwittingly, and must bring a sin offering.

(25) Being learned, he knows that it is prohibited to withdraw immediately, and is therefore liable for kareth, and not a sin offering.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 18a

And if an illiterate man,¹ then both acts are the same as eating two portions of forbidden fat, each the size of an olive, in one spell of unawareness.² Well then, [shall we say,] it was not near the time of her period? And with whom? Shall we say, a learned man? Then he should not be liable to bring even one; for, in entering he was the victim of a pure accident,³ and in withdrawing he acted wilfully!⁴ And if an illiterate man, he is liable to bring one, for withdrawing?⁵ Afterwards, Raba said: It really refers to the time near her period, and to a learned man; but a learned man for this,⁶ and not a learned man for that.⁷

Raba said: And both [these laws] we have learnt: Entering, we have learnt; and withdrawing, we have learnt. 'Withdrawing, we have learnt' — for it states, IF ONE COHABITED WITH A CLEAN WOMAN, AND SHE SAID TO HIM: 'I HAVE BECOME UNCLEAR!', AND HE WITHDREW IMMEDIATELY, HE IS LIABLE. 'Entering, we have learnt' [in another Mishnah] — If [blood is] found on his [rag after cohabitation], they are [both] unclean,⁸ and are liable for a sacrifice.⁹ Now this surely refers [does it not?] to the time near her period, and to [the act of] entering.¹⁰ R. Adda b. Mattenah said to Raba: [No!] Really I can say to you, it refers to the time not near her period, and to withdrawing.¹¹ And should you ask, what need is there to state the law of withdrawing, since it has already been stated?¹² [I may reply,] because it is necessary to tell us: If [blood is] found on her [rag after cohabitation],¹³ they are [both] unclean because of the doubt,¹⁴ but exempt from bringing a sacrifice.¹⁵ And because he wishes to teach us [this law concerning] 'If found on hers',¹⁶ he teaches us also [the law concerning] 'If found on his.'¹⁷

Said Rabina to R. Adda; How can you maintain that that [other Mishnah] refers to the time not near her period, and to withdrawing, seeing that it states; If [blood is] found, and found implies later;¹⁸ and if it refers to withdrawing, from the very first when he withdrew he already had the knowledge!¹⁹ Said Raba to him [R. Adda]; Listen to what your teacher [Rabina]²⁰ tells you.²¹ — [He replied:] How can you [maintain that it refers to entering],²² since it has been taught with reference to it:²³ This is the positive precept concerning a menstruous woman for which one is liable; and if it is [as you say],²⁴ it is a negative precept!²⁵ — He said to him: If you have learnt [the Baraita thus], it is defective, and you should read it thus: This is the negative precept concerning a menstruous woman for which one is liable; if [however] he was cohabiting with a clean woman, and she said to him; 'I have become unclean', and he withdrew immediately, he is liable: this is the positive precept concerning a menstruous woman, etc.

The text says: 'If he withdrew immediately, he is liable.' What should he do? R. Huna said in the name of Rab: He should press his ten nails into the ground [i.e., bed] until his desire dies out.²⁶ Raba said: From this we may deduce that he who commits incest²⁷ with membrum mortuum is exempt, for, if it will enter your mind to say that he is liable, what is the reason that he is exempt here? Because he has no alternative?²⁸ If it is because he has no alternative, then even if he withdraws immediately, let him also be exempt, for he has no alternative!²⁹ — Abaye said to him: Verily, I may say to you, he who commits incest with membrum mortuum is liable, and here the reason that he is exempt is because he has no alternative, and as for your question, if he withdraws immediately, why is he liable? [I may reply,] because he should have withdrawn with little pleasure, and he withdrew with much pleasure. Said Raba b. Hanan to Abaye: If so, we find a longer and a shorter route in connection with a menstruant.³⁰

- (1) Who acted unwittingly in both cases.
 - (2) For which he brings only one sin offering. Here also, since he is illiterate, he is not aware, when she tells him she has become unclean, that he has committed a sin by cohabiting near the time of her period; or that it is prohibited to withdraw immediately. Since he has no knowledge of guilt between the two acts (entering and withdrawing), he should bring only one sin offering.
 - (3) He could not be aware that she would become unclean, since it was not near her period.
 - (4) Being learned, and knowing that it is prohibited to withdraw immediately, he is liable to kareth.
 - (5) Thinking it is permitted to withdraw immediately, he acted unwittingly.
 - (6) Knowing that he ought not to cohabit near the time of her period, yet thinking he still had time before she became unclean; he therefore committed a sin unwittingly (not accidentally, as would be the case if he cohabited not near her period), and brings a sin offering.
 - (7) Not knowing that he must not withdraw immediately, he thus brings two, one for entering, and one for withdrawing. This is not the same as eating two portions of prohibited fat in one spell of unawareness (for which he brings only one sin offering) for, when she told him she had become unclean, he was immediately aware that he had committed a sin; for, being learned, he knew that he ought not to have cohabited with her near her period.
 - (8) Seven days; Lev. XV, 19 and 24.
 - (9) Sin offering for cohabiting while she is unclean. Nid. 14a.
 - (10) Hence we learn that for entering (near her period) he is liable for a sacrifice, if she becomes unclean.
 - (11) He brings the sacrifice for withdrawing immediately, when she tells him she is unclean; for entering he is not liable, because it was not near her period.
 - (12) In our Mishnah, supra 14b.
 - (13) Not immediately, but after a short interval; Nid. 14a.
 - (14) The woman is definitely unclean, because she is now menstruous, but the man is unclean only because of the doubt whether he had cohabited with her when she was already unclean, or before her uncleanness commenced.
 - (15) Because she may have become unclean infer cohabitation; and he does not even bring a suspensive guilt offering for the doubtful sin (Mishnah, Nid. 14b).
 - (16) And to distinguish between the case where she applied her rag immediately and the case where an interval elapsed (v. Nid. 14a).
 - (17) Though this is superfluous.
 - (18) After withdrawing, blood was found, but during cohabitation they were not aware of uncleanness.
 - (19) That she is unclean, for she told him during cohabitation.
 - (20) [So curr. ed. Other reading adopted by Adreth and Zerachis Halevi: 'He (Rabina) said to him (R. Adda): Listen when your teacher (Raba) tells you.' This is preferable, as Raba was the teacher of Rabina.]
 - (21) That the Mishnah cannot refer to withdrawing.
 - (22) [Read with MS. M. and other ed.: אֵצִיט, 'How can I listen?']
 - (23) As a comment on Mishnah in Nid. 14a.
 - (24) That it refers to entering.
 - (25) Lev. XVIII, 19.
 - (26) He should remain passive.

(27) Cohabits with a woman forbidden to him owing to consanguinity (Yeb. 2a, b).

(28) For he must not withdraw immediately and must perforce withdraw when it is passive; but if he commits incest even with membrum mortuum he is liable.

(29) If you say that he is liable if he commits incest with membrum mortuum, then there is no difference between passive and virile member, so that he should be exempt even if he is withdraws forthwith.

(30) If he took the shorter route, i.e., withdrew immediately, he is liable; and if the longer route, i.e., waited till it was passive, he is exempt.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 18b

Whereas we learnt [this distinction, only] in the case of the Temple!¹ — They are not the same:² the longer route here³ is as the shorter route there; and the longer route there is as the shorter route here.

R. Huna son of R. Nathan raised an objection: Did Abaye then say that he had no alternative,⁴ from which we deduce that we are discussing the time not near her period;⁵ surely, it was Abaye who said that he is liable to bring two;⁶ from which we deduced that it refers to the time near her period!⁷ — Abaye's statement⁸ was made elsewhere.

R. Jonathan b. Jose b. Lekunia enquired of R. Simeon b. Jose b. Lekunia: Where is the prohibition in the Torah against intercourse with a menstruous woman? — He took a clod, and threw it at him. Prohibition against intercourse with a menstruant! And into a woman who is impure by her uncleanness thou shalt not approach!⁹ — Well then, [I meant to ask] where do we find the warning that he who cohabits with a clean woman, and she says to him, 'I have become unclean'; he should not withdraw immediately? — Hezekiah said, Scripture says: [And if any man lie with her (a menstruous woman)] her impurity shall be with him¹⁰ — even at the time of her impurity she shall be 'with him'¹¹ Hence, we have a positive precept; whence do we derive a negative precept? — R. Papa said, Scripture says: Thou shalt not approach [unto a woman who is impure];¹² thou shalt not approach means also, thou shalt not withdraw; for it is written: Who say, Approach to thyself, come not near me, for I am holier than thou.¹³

Our Rabbis taught: Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness;¹⁴ R. Josiah said: From this we deduce a warning to the children of Israel that they should separate from their wives near their periods. And how long before? Rabbah said: One 'onah.¹⁵

R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: He who does not separate from his wife near her period, then even if he has sons like the sons of Aaron, they will die, even as it is written: Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness, . . .¹⁶ [this is the law . . .] of her that is sick with her impurity;¹⁷ and next to it: [And the Lord spoke unto Moses] after the death [of the two sons of Aaron].¹⁸

R. Hiyya b. Abba said that R. Johanan said: He who separates from his wife near her period will have male children, even as it is written: To make a distinction between the unclean and the clean;¹⁹ and next to it: If a woman conceive and bear a male child.²⁰ R. Joshua b. Levi said: He will have sons worthy to be teachers, for it is written: That ye may make a distinction [between . . . the unclean and the clean]; and that ye may teach.²¹ R. Hiyya b. Abba said that R. Johanan said: He who recites the Habdalah over wine at the termination of the Sabbath will have male children, even as it is written: That ye may make a distinction between the holy and the common;²² and elsewhere it is written: To make a distinction between the unclean and the clean;²³ and next to it: If a woman conceive [and bear a male child].²⁴ R. Joshua b. Levi said: He will have sons worthy to be teachers, even as it is written: That ye may make a distinction [between the holy and the common] . . . and that ye may teach.²⁵

R. Benjamin b. Japhet said that R Eleazar said: He who sanctifies himself during cohabitation will have male children, even as it is said: Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy,²⁶ and next to it: If a woman conceive [and bear a male child].²⁷

R. ELIEZER SAID, [SCRIPTURE SAYS: IF ANY ONE TOUCH THE CARCASS OF AN UNCLEAN] CREEPING THING, AND IT BE HIDDEN FROM HIM etc. What is the difference between their views?²⁸ Hezekiah said: 'Creeping thing and carcass' is the difference between them; R. Eliezer holds, we require that he should know whether he had become unclean by [the carcass of] a creeping thing or of an animal; and R. Akiba holds, we do not require that he should know this; as long as he knows that he has actually become unclean, it is not necessary [that he should know] whether he has become unclean by a creeping thing or by an animal carcass.²⁹ And so said Ulla: 'Creeping thing and carcass' is the difference between them; for Ulla pointed out an incongruity between one statement of R. Eliezer's and another, and then explained it: Did R. Eliezer, then, say that we require he should know whether he had become unclean by a creeping thing or by a carcass? I question this, for R. Eliezer said: In any case, if he ate prohibited fat, he is liable, or if he ate nothar, he is liable;³⁰ if he desecrated the Sabbath, he is liable, or if he desecrated the Day of Atonement, he is liable;³¹ if he cohabited with his wife when menstruous, he is liable, or if he cohabited with his sister, he is liable.³² Said R. Joshua to him, Scripture says: If his sin, wherein he hath sinned, be known to him;³³ only when it is known to him wherein he hath sinned.³⁴ [Ulla, however,] explains it thus: There, Scripture says: he hath sinned, then he shall bring [his offering] — as long as [he knows that] he has sinned [though he does not know the actual sin, he brings his offering]: but here, since it is already written: [If any one touch] any unclean thing,³⁵ why do we require: or the carcass of an unclean creeping thing?³⁶ Hence, we deduce that we require he should know whether he had become unclean by a creeping thing or by an animal carcass.³⁷ And R. Akiba?³⁸ — Because

(1) If this distinction holds good also in the case of a menstruous woman, why does not the Mishnah mention it?

(2) And are therefore not mentioned in the Mishnah.

(3) In the case of a menstruous woman, exempts him, as does the shorter route in the Temple.

(4) If he withdraws when it is passive, he is exempt, because he has no alternative.

(5) For if he cohabited near the time of her period he should have realised that there is a possibility that she might become unclean; and he is liable for withdrawing even when passive, for Abaye holds that he who cohabits with membrum mortuum is also liable. (V. supra 18a.) Only if he cohabits not near the time of her period is he exempt if he withdraws when passive, with membrum mortuum, for he has no other alternative, and is not to be blamed for cohabiting then.

(8) That he is liable to bring two, was not made with reference to our Mishnah. Abaye explains our Mishnah, which differentiates between withdrawing with virile member and passive, as referring to cohabitation not near the time of her period when, in entering, he is completely innocent, and in withdrawing forthwith is liable to bring a sin offering (not two), because he could have withdrawn with member passive with less pleasure. Abaye's statement that he brings two offerings does not refer to our Mishnah, but to a case where he cohabits with a clean woman near the time of her period, and she tells him during cohabitation that she has become unclean. In this case he brings two offerings, one for entering, and one for withdrawing, even passive, for Abaye holds that in this case, there is no difference how he withdrew, since he is not entirely blameless, for he should have foreseen that she might become unclean during cohabitation.

(11) I.e., he must not withdraw immediately.

(12) Lev. XVIII, 19.

(13) Isa. LXV, 5; לֹא תִקְרַב in Lev. XVIII, 19, may, therefore, mean: thou shalt not approach to thyself, i.e., thou shalt not withdraw.

(14) Lev. XV, 31.

- (15) A period of time (with special reference to marital duty): the whole day or the whole night. If her period comes during the day, he must separate from the beginning of the day; if during the night, from the beginning of the night.
- (16) Lev. XV, 31.
- (17) Ibid. 33.
- (18) Ibid. XVI, 1. He takes the sequence and contiguity of the verses to imply that if a man does not separate from 'her that is sick with her impurity', his sons will die, even as the sons of Aaron died.
- (19) Lev. XI, 47.
- (20) Ibid. XII, 2.
- (21) Ibid. X, 10, 11.
- (22) Ibid. 10. He who recites Habdalah also makes a distinction between the holy and the common (Sabbath and weekday). In verse 9 the priests are commanded: Drink no wine . . . when ye go into the tent of meeting. The implication is: but ye may drink wine when ye make a distinction between the holy and the common, I.e., when you recite the Habdalah.
- (23) Ibid, XI, 47.
- (24) Ibid. XII, 2.
- (25) Ibid. X, 10, 11.
- (26) Ibid. XI, 44.
- (27) Ibid, XII, 2.
- (28) Both R. Eliezer and R. Akiba agree in the Mishnah (supra 14b) that he is not liable unless he is aware that it is the Temple that he entered in an unclean state, and thus the question arises, what is the difference between them?
- (29) R. Eliezer holds he must know the exact source of his uncleanness (whether by a creeping thing or animal carcass), whereas R. Akiba holds it matters not, as long as he knows he is unclean.
- (30) Ker. 19a; if there lay before him הֵלֵב, a piece of prohibited fat, and נֹתָר, a piece of a sacrifice left over behind the time limit for its consumption, and he ate one of them unwittingly, but he does not know which, R. Eliezer says he must bring a sin offering, because, whether he ate the heleb or nothar, he is liable for a sin offering in either case; but R. Joshua says he is exempt; and is liable only when, he knows definitely which he has eaten.
- (31) If he did work unwittingly, but does not know whether it was on a Sabbath or the Day of Atonement.
- (32) His wife and sister were together with him, and he cohabited with one, thinking it was his wife not believing her to be clean, but later it was ascertained that his wife was already unclean, and, moreover, a doubt arose as to whether it might not have been his sister with whom he cohabited.
- (33) Lev. IV, 23.
- (34) I.e., exactly what his sin was, does he bring a sin offering. This contradicts the previous statement of R. Eliezer, for here he says, he brings a sin offering even if he does not know exactly what his sin was, and in our Mishnah he says, he does not bring his offering unless he knows exactly the source of his uncleanness, whether carcass of creeping thing or animal.
- (35) Lev. V, 2.
- (36) Surely, unclean creeping thing is included in any unclean thing?
- (37) Because Scripture particularises, we deduce that he does not bring an offering unless he knows the exact source of his uncleanness.
- (38) Since Scripture particularises, why does R. Akiba hold that it is not necessary he should know the exact source of his uncleanness, as long as he knows he is unclean?

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 19a

Scripture wishes to write cattle and beast¹ for the sake of Rabbi's deduction,² it writes also creeping thing;³ as was taught in the School of R. Ishmael: Any Biblical passage that was stated once, and then repeated, was repeated only for the sake of something new that was added to it.⁴ And what does R. Eliezer do with the word wherein [he hath sinned]?⁵ — To exclude him who occupies himself [with a permitted thing and unintentionally does that which is prohibited].⁶

And R. Johanan said: 'Inferences of Expounders' is the difference between them.⁷ And so said R. Shesheth: 'Inferences of Expounders' is the difference between them, for R. Shesheth was wont to change the words of R. Eliezer for those of R. Akiba, and the words of R. Akiba for those of R. Eliezer,⁸

Raba inquired of R. Nahman: If he was unaware of both, what is the ruling?⁹ — He said to him: Since there is the unawareness of uncleanness, he is liable. On the contrary, since there is the unawareness of Temple, he should be exempt! — R. Ashi said: we observe, if because of the uncleanness he leaves, then it is a case of unawareness of uncleanness, and he is liable; and if, because it is the Temple, he leaves, then it is a case of unawareness of Temple, and he is exempt:¹⁰ — Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Does he then leave because it is the Temple, unless it be also because of the uncleanness? And does he leave because of the uncleanness, unless it be also because it is the Temple?¹¹ Well then, there is no difference,¹²

Our Rabbis taught: Two [public] paths, one unclean,¹³ and one clean; and he walked along one,¹⁴ and did not enter [the Temple afterwards]; then along the other, and entered [the Temple],¹⁵ he is liable [to bring a sliding scale sacrifice].¹⁶ If he walked along one, and entered [the Temple],¹⁷ and was sprinkled upon [on the third day], and again [on the seventh day], and bathed himself;¹⁸ and then he walked along the other,¹⁹ and entered [the Temple],²⁰ he is liable.²¹ R. Simeon [b. Yohai] exempts him;²² and R. Simeon b. Judah exempts him in all these cases in the name of R. Simeon [b. Yohai].

‘In all of them,’

(1) Lev. v, 2: the carcass of an unclean beast, or the carcass of unclean cattle.

(2) Supra 7a.

(3) Though it is superfluous; but we must not deduce from this particularisation that the unclean person must know the source of his uncleanness in order to be liable for a sacrifice.

(4) Here the ‘something new’ is Rabbi's deduction.

(5) Lev. IV, 23; the word wherein implies that he must know the actual sin he has committed, yet R. Eliezer holds that if there lay before him heleb and nothar, and he unwittingly ate one of them, not knowing which, he must also bring a sin offering.

(6) E.g., on Sabbath he intended (what is permissible) to cut something which was already detached (from the ground or tree), but his knife slipped, and he cut something which was still attached (to the ground or tree). Or, he intended to cohabit with his wife who was clean, and he inadvertently cohabited with his sister who was sleeping near her. In these cases, his intention was quite innocent; and the word wherein (he hath sinned) implies that in such cases he is exempt from a sacrifice, and that he is liable only if his intention was to do something which is actually wrong, though he thought it was right; e.g., he intended to cut a definite thing, which he thought was detached, but which actually was attached; or, he intended to cohabit with a certain person, whom he thought was his wife, but who actually was his sister. In these cases, he brings a sacrifice, because the actual act, though innocently committed, was definitely intended; in the former cases, the actual act which was committed was not intended.

(7) He disagrees with Hezekiah who said that R. Eliezer and R. Akiba differ in their interpretation of the law; he holds that they do not differ at all as to the law; they both hold that it is not necessary that the unclean person should know the exact source of his uncleanness; but they merely choose different texts from which to deduce the law; they, therefore, differ as ‘expounders’ merely as to the texts from which they derive their ‘inferences’.

(8) It matters not, since there is no difference in law between them.

(9) According to R. Eliezer and R. Akiba who hold that sin offering is brought only for unawareness of uncleanness and not for unawareness of Temple, what is the ruling of the unclean person was unaware of both uncleanness and Temple?

(10) If he leaves the Temple, when told he is unclean (the fact that it is the Temple is not mentioned to him), we realise that he regrets his entry because of his uncleanness; and it is, therefore, a case of unawareness of uncleanness. If, however, he leaves the Temple, when told that he is in the Temple (his uncleanness is not mentioned), we realise that he regrets his entry because it is the Temple; and it is, therefore, a case of unawareness of Temple.

(11) When he is told one of the facts, either that he is unclean, or that he is in the Temple, he does not leave because of that one fact; for his uncleanness, were it not for the fact that he is in the Temple, would not matter; and the fact that he is in the Temple, were it not for his uncleanness, would also not matter. He leaves, when told one of the facts, because he recollects immediately the other fact also. Since, however, when he entered the Temple while unclean, he was unaware of both facts, what is the ruling?

(12) And he is exempt, because R. Eliezer and R. Akiba hold that he is liable only for unawareness of uncleanness by itself, while realising that he has entered the Temple.

(13) Someone being buried there, and it is impossible to walk along the path without treading on the grave.

(14) But does not know whether it was the clean or the unclean path.

(15) Having forgotten that he is unclean, since he walked along both.

(16) Because he entered the Temple while definitely unclean, and had knowledge at the beginning of definite uncleanness.

(17) Having forgotten that he had walked along one path (which possibly was the unclean one, though he is not sure).

(18) Num. XIX, 19; a person unclean by the dead requires sprinkling with water into which has been put some of the ashes of the burnt red heifer.

(19) Knowing that it is possibly the unclean one.

(21) Because either the first or the second time he entered the Temple while unclean.

(22) Because, before he entered the Temple either the first or second time, he had not the knowledge of definite uncleanness, for, before entering the Temple the first time, he certainly had not the knowledge of definite uncleanness (for the first path may have been clean), and even after walking along the second path he had not now the knowledge of definite uncleanness, since he had already purified himself from the first possible uncleanness (and the second path may be clean); and in order to bring a sacrifice we require knowledge at the beginning of definite uncleanness. In the previous instance, where he had not purified himself between the two entries, he has the knowledge of definite uncleanness before entering the Temple the second time.

even in the first case? At all events he is unclean?¹ — Said Raba: Here we are discussing the case of one who walked along the first [path]; and when he walked along the second [path], forgot that he had already walked along the first, so that he has only an incomplete knowledge [of uncleanness];² and this is in what they differ:³ The first Tanna holds that we say, an incomplete knowledge is like a complete knowledge;⁴ and R. Simeon [b. Judah] holds that we do not say, an incomplete knowledge is like a complete knowledge.⁵

‘If he walked along the first [path], and entered [the Temple], and was sprinkled upon [on the third day], and again [on the seventh day], and bathed himself; and then he walked along the second [path], and entered [the Temple], he is liable; and R. Simeon [b. Yohai] exempts him.’ Why is he liable,⁶ since it is a doubtful knowledge?⁷ — R. Johanan said: Here they made doubtful knowledge like definite knowledge.⁸ And Resh Lakish said: This is in accordance with the view of R. Ishmael, who holds that we do not require knowledge at the beginning.

We may point out an incongruity between the words of R. Johanan [here] and the words of R. Johanan [elsewhere]; and we may point out an incongruity between the words of Resh Lakish [here] and the words of Resh Lakish [elsewhere]; for it has been taught: If he ate doubtful prohibited fat, and became aware of it [later; and he ate again] doubtful prohibited fat, and became aware of it [later]; Rabbi said: Just as he would bring a sin offering for each one, so he brings a guilt offering for doubtful sin for each one.⁹ R. Simeon b. Judah and R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said in the name of R. Simeon [b. Yohai]: He brings only one guilt offering for doubtful sin;¹⁰ for it is said: [And he shall bring a ram . . . for a guilt offering . . .] for his error wherein he erred¹¹ — the Torah includes many errors for one guilt offering.¹² And Resh Lakish said: Here Rabbi taught that the awareness of the doubt separates [the acts] for sin offerings.¹³ And R. Johanan said: [Rabbi meant:] Just as, the awareness of definite sin elsewhere separates [the acts] for sin offerings, so the awareness of doubtful sin [here] separates [the acts] for guilt offerings.¹⁴ [Hence, there is incongruity between R.

Johanan's statements,¹⁵ and between Resh Lakish's statements.]¹⁶ — Granted that there is no contradiction between one statement of R. Johanan and the other statement of R. Johanan, [for he said:] ‘Here they made [doubtful knowledge like definite knowledge]’, and not everywhere in the whole Torah did they do so; for [only] here, because knowledge [at the beginning] is not explicitly written, but is deduced from and it be hidden,¹⁷ [therefore they made doubtful knowledge like definite knowledge;] ‘but not everywhere in the whole Torah did they do so’, for it is written: [If his sin] be known to him¹⁸ — a definite knowledge we require. But Resh Lakish — why does he establish it as being in accordance with R. Ishmael's view? Let him establish it as being in accordance with Rabbi's view!¹⁹ — This he teaches us: that R. Ishmael does not require knowledge at the beginning. [But] it is obvious that he does not require [knowledge at the beginning], for he has no extra verse [from which to deduce it, since he requires] and it be hidden to make him liable for unawareness of Temple?²⁰ — Perhaps you might think that he does not infer [that we require knowledge at the beginning] from the verse, but he has it from a tradition; therefore [Resh Lakish] teaches us [that R. Ishmael definitely does not require knowledge at the beginning].

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. OATHS ARE TWO, SUBDIVIDED INTO FOUR: ‘I SWEAR I SHALL EAT’, AND ‘[I SWEAR] I SHALL NOT EAT’;²¹ ‘[I SWEAR] I HAVE EATEN’, AND ‘[I SWEAR] I HAVE NOT EATEN’.²² — ‘I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT’, AND HE ATE A MINUTE QUANTITY, HE IS LIABLE: THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA. THEY [THE SAGES] SAID TO R. AKIBA: WHERE DO WE FIND THAT HE WHO EATS A MINUTE QUANTITY IS LIABLE, THAT THIS ONE SHOULD BE LIABLE!²³ — R. AKIBA SAID TO THEM: BUT WHERE DO WE FIND THAT HE WHO SPEAKS BRINGS AN OFFERING, THAT THIS ONE SHOULD BRING AN OFFERING?²⁴

GEMARA. Shall We say that okal means ‘I shall eat’? We may question this, [for we learnt:] ‘“I swear I shall not eat of thine”, “I swear I shall eat [okal] of thine”; “I do not swear I shall not eat of thine”; he is prohibited [to eat of that man's food]’?²⁵ — Abaye said: Really [okal] means ‘I shall eat’ [as our Mishnah states], yet there is no difficulty: Here [it is a case where] he is urged to eat; and there [it is a case where] he is not

- (1) After walking through both paths (without purification in the interval) he has the definite knowledge of uncleanness, and when he enters the Temple later, being unaware of his uncleanness, he should bring a sacrifice.
 - (2) Having forgotten that he had walked along the first path, and remembering only the second, he has not the complete knowledge of definite uncleanness.
 - (3) The first Tanna and R. Simeon b. Judah disagree as to the view of R. Simeon b. Yohai.
 - (4) The first Tanna who states that R. Simeon b. Yohai exempts him only in the case, where there was purification between the two entries, but not in the first case, holds that in the first case he is liable, because, when entering the Temple after having walked along both paths, he is definitely unclean, and though his knowledge is incomplete, for, when walking in the second path, he had forgotten about the first, nevertheless he is liable, for incomplete knowledge of definite uncleanness is counted as complete knowledge, since he is definitely unclean, and, if he had the complete knowledge, he would have known that he was definitely unclean, whereas in the case where there was purification between, the knowledge he had, though complete, was of doubtful uncleanness. He knew, that is to say, that he had walked in both paths, and yet, despite this knowledge, he is still doubtful, after walking in the second path, whether he is now unclean (for this path may be clean; and if the first was unclean he has already purified himself in any case) and is therefore exempt.
 - (5) And he is, therefore, exempt even in the first case, where there was no purification between the two entries.
 - (6) He questions the view of the Tanna who disagrees with R. Simeon b. Yohai.
 - (7) For when entering the Temple after walking along the first path he did not have the knowledge of definite uncleanness (for this path may have been clean); and when entering the Temple after walking along the second path, he also did not have the knowledge of definite uncleanness (for he had purified himself from the first path, and the second may be clean).

(8) Though his knowledge, in the case of each entry, was doubtful, yet, since he had certainly entered the Temple once while definitely unclean, and he had knowledge at the beginning (though of a doubtful nature), he brings an offering.

(9) He ate a piece of fat about which there was a doubt whether it was prohibited fat (חלב) or permitted (שומן); at the time of eating he thought it was permitted fat, but later became aware that there was a doubt about it. In such a case he brings a suspensive guilt offering, (Lev. V. 17; Rashi). If, after becoming aware of this, he commits this doubtful sin again, he must bring a guilt offering for each separate act, since there was awareness between each act; just as, if he had unwittingly eaten actual (not doubtful) prohibited fat on a number of occasions (with awareness between each act) he would have had to bring a sin offering for each separate act.

(12) Because Scripture could have written simply, על שגגתו, for his error; but it adds the words, אשר שגג, wherein he erred, implying that, however many times he erred, he brings only one suspensive guilt offering.

(13) He takes Rabbi's statement to mean this: If, after a time, he became aware that it was definitely prohibited fat, he would have to bring a sin offering for each act, although the awareness between the acts was only the awareness of doubtful prohibited fat, because such awareness is also sufficient to separate the acts. If there were no awareness at all between the acts, he would bring only one sin offering.

(14) If, after unwittingly committing a definite sin, he became aware of it, and later again unwittingly committed the same definite sin, the awareness of the definite sin between the two acts makes a division between the acts, and he brings a sin offering for each act; so here, the awareness of the doubtful sin between the acts makes a division between the acts, and he brings a guilt offering for each act. But if the awareness between the acts was only the awareness of the doubtful sin, he does not later bring a sin offering for each act when the knowledge comes to him that he has committed a definite sin.

(15) For R. Johanan said, with reference to entering the Temple after walking along two paths, one of which was unclean (with purification between the two walks), that doubtful knowledge is counted as definite knowledge; yet here he says that doubtful knowledge is not the same as definite knowledge in making a division between acts for sin offerings.

(16) For Resh Lakish said above that the Tanna who says he is liable (in the ease of entering the Temple after walking along two paths etc.) agrees with R. Ishmael that there is no need for knowledge at the beginning; Resh Lakish could have said that he agrees with Rabbi (according to Resh Lakish's exposition of his view) that doubtful knowledge is counted as definite knowledge.

(19) Why does he say that the Tanna who makes him liable in the case of walking along the two paths agrees with R. Ishmael that we do not require knowledge at the beginning? Let him rather say that he does require knowledge at the beginning, but he makes him liable because he holds with Rabbi that doubtful knowledge is like definite knowledge (in accordance with Resh Lakish's own interpretation of Rabbi's view).

(21) Lev. V, 4: If any one swears, pronouncing with his lips, or to do evil, or to do good. These are the two oaths, positive and negative, in the future. 'To eat' and 'not to eat' are merely examples of doing good and doing evil.

(22) These are the two additional oaths, positive and negative, in the past; v. infra 25a.

(23) On eating prohibited food there is liability only when a certain minimum (the size of an olive) is consumed; v. Yoma 81a.

(24) An oath is merely the utterance of the lips; yet he brings an offering for transgressing his utterance; therefore he brings an offering also even if he eats a minute quantity, since thereby he has also transgressed his utterance.

(25) Ned. 16a; If he used any of these three forms of oath, he must not partake of the other's food. Hence, 'I swear that okal (I shall eat) of thine' apparently implies that he takes an oath not to eat; yet in our Mishnah it is taken as a positive oath. The explanation why שבועה שאוכל לך may be taken negatively is this: שבועה — it shall be prohibited to me by oath; שאוכל לך — that which I eat of thine; i.e., I swear I shall not eat. The third form of oath means this: לא שבועה — it shall not be prohibited to me by oath; לא אוכל — that which I shall not eat; the implications being, but that which I shall eat shall be prohibited to me by oath.

urged to eat: our Mishnah [refers to the case where] he is not urged to eat;¹ and the Baraitha² [to the case where] he is urged to eat, and he says: 'I shall not eat, I shall not eat'; so that when he swears,³ he means: 'I swear I shall not eat'. R. Ashi said: Read [in the Baraitha]: 'I swear I shall not eat of thine'.⁴ If so, what need is there to state it?⁵ — I might have thought his tongue became twisted,⁶ therefore he teaches us [that it is a definite negative].

Our Rabbis taught: Mibta⁷ is an oath; issar⁸ is an oath. What is the binding force of issar? If you say that issar is an oath, he is liable; and if not, he is exempt. If you say that issar is an oath! But you have just said that issar is an oath? Abaye said: Thus he means: Mibta is an oath; issar is tacked on to an oath.⁹ What is the binding force of issar? If you say, that which is tacked on to an oath is like a properly expressed oath, he is liable; and if not, he is exempt. And how do we know that mibta is an oath? Is it not because it is written: If any one swear, pronouncing with his lips.¹⁰ Then issar also [should be counted an oath], for it is written: Every vow and every oath of a bond?¹¹ Then again, how do we know that issar has the force of being tacked on to an oath? Is it not because it is written: Or bound he, soul by a bond with an oath?¹² Then mibta also [should have the force of being tacked on to an oath], for it is written: Whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath.¹³ But, said Abaye: That mibta is an oath we deduce from this: And if she be married to a husband while her vows are upon her, or the utterance of her lips, wherewith she hath bound her soul:¹⁴ Now, oath is not mentioned; with what, then, did she bind herself? With mibta. Raba said: In reality, I can say to you, that which is tacked on to an oath is not like a properly expressed oath;¹⁵ and thus he [the Tanna] means: Mibta is an oath; issar is also an oath; and what is the binding force of issar? Scripture placed it between a vow and an oath [to teach us that] if he expressed it in the form of a vow, it is a vow; and if in the form of an oath, it is an oath.¹⁶ Where did [Scripture] place it [between a vow and an oath]? And if in her husband's house she vowed, or bound her soul by a bond with an oath.¹⁷

And they¹⁸ follow their own opinions, for it has been stated: That which is tacked on to an oath¹⁹ — Abaye said, it is like a properly expressed oath;²⁰ and Raba said, it is not like a properly expressed oath.

An objection was raised; [for it has been taught:] What is issar which is mentioned in the Torah? He who says: I take it upon me that I shall not eat meat, and that I shall not drink wine, as on the day that my father died, or, as on the day that So-and-So died, or, as on the day that Gedaliah, son of Ahikam, was killed, or, as on the day that I saw Jerusalem in its destruction; he is prohibited [from eating meat, etc.]; and Samuel said: only if he had already made a vow on that day.²¹ Now, it is well, according to Abaye, for just as that which is tacked on to a vow is a vow, so that which is tacked on to an oath is an oath;

(1) And he swears 'I shall eat' - obviously a positive oath.

(2) [Tosaf. deletes 'Baraitha' as the passage belongs to a Mishnah.]

(3) Using the expression שבועה שאוכל.

(4) Not שאוכל, but שאי אוכל.

(5) For לא אוכל is the same as אי אוכל.

(6) That he intended to say שאוכל (positive), but inadvertently said שאי אוכל (negative).

(7) Num. XXX, 7: the utterance (מבטא) of her lips. If a man says: 'This loaf shall be mibta to me', it is an oath, as if he had said: 'I swear I shall not eat this loaf'.

(8) Num. XXX, 3: To bind his soul with a bond (אמר). If a man says: 'This loaf shall be issar to me', it is an oath.

(9) If he says: 'This loaf is issar to me', it is not actually an oath, but has the same force as if it were tacked on to an oath, as in the following case: If he prohibits one loaf to himself by oath; then he says of a second loaf: 'This second loaf shall be like the first', the second loaf is here tacked on to an oath. Similarly, if he says: 'This loaf is issar to me', the ruling is the same as in the case of a statement which is tacked on to an oath. If that is counted as a proper oath, then issar is also a proper oath. The Tanna is simply equating issar with a statement that is tacked on to an oath.

(12) Ibid. 11: אסרה ... אסר בשבועה, i.e., bound herself by issar by (tacking it on to) an oath.

(13) Lev. V, 4: יכתבא ... בשבועה, i.e., prohibit it to himself by mibta by tacking it on to an oath.

(14) Num. XXX, 7: מכתבא ... אסרה, i.e., she bound herself by mibta; hence, mibta is an oath.

(15) Raba disagrees with Abaye who said that the Tanna holds that issar is the same as a statement tacked on to an oath, and that he is in doubt whether that has the force of a properly expressed oath or not; but, says Raba, the Tanna holds definitely that a statement tacked on to an oath is not the same as a proper oath.

(16) If he said: 'This loaf is issar to me', it is a vow, and he is exempt from a sliding scale sacrifice. If he said: 'Issar that I shall not eat this loaf', it is an oath, and he is liable.

(19) Lit., 'he who tacks on to an oath.'

(20) Lit., 'as if he expresses an oath by word of mouth.'

(21) He had previously vowed that he would never eat meat on the anniversary of his father's death, or on the anniversary of Gedaliah's murder (3rd Tishri); and now when he says, 'I take it upon me that I shall not eat meat on that day', he is tacking on the present prohibition to a previous vow; and he is prohibited from eating meat now, as if he had now made a vow; therefore a statement tacked on to a vow is like a proper vow; and similarly, a statement tacked on to an oath is like a proper oath.

but according to Raba, it is difficult? — Raba may say to you, explain it thus: What is the binding force of a vow which is mentioned in the Torah?¹ He who says: I take it upon me that I shall not eat meat, and that I shall not drink wine, as on the day that my father died, or, as on the day that So-and-So was killed; [he is prohibited from eating meat, etc.]; and Samuel said: only if he had already made a vow on that day. What is the reason Scripture says: If a man vow a vow unto the Lord² — only if he vow in the matter which he had already vowed.³ — 'As on the day my father died!' This is self-evident?⁴ — 'As on the day that Gedaliah, son of Ahikam, was killed' is necessary. I might have thought that, since it is also prohibited⁵ even if he had not vowed, the fact that he vowed does not bring a prohibition upon him [because of his vow]; so that it [his present vow] is not based on a [previous] vow, [and hence is not a normal vow]; therefore he teaches us [that it is so based; and because perforce he mentions this clause, he mentions also the previous clause, though it is unnecessary]. And R. Johanan also holds this view of Raba,⁶ for when Rabin came [from Palestine] he said that R. Johanan said: [If one says:] 'Mibta that I shall not eat of thine', or, 'Issar that I shall not eat of thine', it is an oath. When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said that R. Johanan said: [If one says: 'I swear] I shall eat', or, '[I swear] I shall not eat', [and he transgresses the oath,] it is a false oath;⁷ and its prohibition is [derived] from this [verse]: Ye shall not swear by My name falsely.⁸ [If one says: 'I swear] I have eaten' or, '[I swear] I have not eaten', [and it was untrue,] it is a vain oath,⁹ and its prohibition is [derived] from this [verse]: Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.¹⁰ Vows¹¹ come under the prohibition of: He shall not break his word.¹²

An objection was raised: Vain and false [oaths] are one. Does not this imply that just as a vain oath is in the past tense, so a false oath is in the past tense;¹³ hence, '[I swear] I have eaten' and '[I swear] I have not eaten' are false oaths!¹⁴ — Is this an argument? This is in its own category, and that is in its own category.¹⁵ And what is the meaning of: 'They are one'? That they were pronounced in one utterance; as it has been taught [in another connection]: Remember¹⁶ [the Sabbath day], and Keep¹⁷ [the Sabbath day] were pronounced in a single utterance, — an utterance which the mouth cannot utter, nor the ear hear. Granted, there they were pronounced in one utterance, as R. Ada b. Ahabah said, for R. Ada b. Ahabah said: Women are in duty bound to sanctify the [Sabbath] day,¹⁸ by decree of the Torah, for Scripture says: Remember and Keep; all who are included in the exhortation Keep are included in the exhortation Remember; and women, since they are included in Keep, are included also in Remember.¹⁹ But here, for what law is it necessary?²⁰ But, [say then to teach us that] just as stripes are inflicted for a vain oath, so they are inflicted for a false oath;²¹ — Whither are you turning?²² — Well [then, say]: Just as stripes are inflicted for a false oath,²³ so they are inflicted for a vain oath.²⁴ But this is obvious:²⁵ this²⁶ is a negative precept, and that²⁷ is a negative precept! — I might have thought, as R. Papa said to Abaye: He will not hold him guiltless at all,²⁸

(1) The Tanna is not discussing a statement tacked on to a vow, but explaining that every normal vow (to make him guilty, if he breaks it) must be based on a previous vow, and must be detailed. If, however, he says: ‘This day shall be to me as the day that father died’ (without mentioning details, ‘I shall not eat meat’, etc.), it is merely a statement tacked on to a vow, and is not counted as a vow.

(3) Base the present vow on a previous vow.

(4) If the reason is that he based this vow on a previous vow, why mention his father's death? This does not make the vow stronger.

(5) To him to eat, since it is a public fast.

(6) That issar expressed in the form of an oath is an oath.

(7) An oath uttered in the future tense, if transgressed, comes under the category of ‘false’ oath.

(8) Lev. XIX, 12; i.e., ye shall not swear to do that which later, by transgressing, you make false.

(9) An oath in the past tense, which is known to be untrue at the moment of utterance, comes under the category of ‘vain’ oath.

(10) Ex. XX, 7.

(12) Num. XXX, 3.

(13) A vain oath is an oath which is known immediately to be untrue, such as, swearing that a stone pillar is gold (infra 29a); so a false oath in the past tense is known immediately to be untrue. It is called false, and not vain, because its falsity is not apparent to all, but only to the one who utters it.

(14) Yet R. Johanan calls them vain oaths.

(15) They are entirely different: vain oaths are in the past, and false oaths are in the future, but they are declared to be one merely because the prohibitions against both were simultaneously uttered by God.

(17) Deut. V, 12.

(18) By reciting, or hearing the recital of, the Kiddush. Though such positive precepts as depend for their observance on certain specified times need not be observed by women (מצות עשה שהזמן גרמא נשים פטורות), the precept of Kiddush must be observed by them, for Remember (which is explained as meaning ‘Remember it over wine’, i.e., recite Kiddush) is equated with Keep (i.e., do not transgress the negative precepts of the Sabbath); and just as women must keep the Sabbath (for all negative precepts, whether dependent for their observance on time or not, must be observed by women), so they must remember it.

(19) Therefore Remember and Keep were pronounced in one utterance, in order to teach us this.

(20) That the prohibition against vain oath and false oath should have been pronounced in one utterance?

(21) The statement ‘Vain and false oaths are one’ does not mean that they were pronounced in one utterance, but that they are both the same in that stripes are inflicted equally for both.

(22) Your statement should be reversed, for the transgression of a false oath (such as, ‘I swear I shall not eat’, and he ate) is more likely to be punishable by stripes (because it involves action) than the transgression of a vain oath (such as, ‘I swear I have eaten’ or, ‘not eaten’, which does not involve action).

(23) In the transgression of which, action is involved.

(27) Vain oath.

(28) V. Ex. XX, 7; he who swears a vain oath will never be guiltless, i.e., he is not punished by stripes to remove his guilt (for, after punishment, the guilt is wiped out).

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 21a

therefore he teaches us [that he is punished by stripes] as Abaye answered him.¹ And if you will, I may say, that just as he brings an offering for a false oath, so he brings an offering for a vain oath;² and it is in accordance with R. Akiba's view who makes him liable for [an oath in] the past as in the future.³

An objection was raised: What is a vain oath? Swearing that which is contrary to the facts known to man.⁴ A false oath? Swearing that which is the reverse.⁵ [Hence, a false oath is in the past tense, yet R. Johanan says, in the future.] Say, Swearing and reversing.⁶

When R. Abin came [from Palestine], he said that R. Jeremiah said that R. Abbahu said that R. Johanan said: '[I swear] I have eaten', '[I swear] I have not eaten' [and it was untrue], are false oaths,⁷ and their prohibition is from: Ye shall not swear by My name falsely.⁸ '[I swear] I shall eat', '[I swear] I shall not eat' [and he broke the oath], he transgresses: He shall not break his word.⁹ And what is a vain oath? Swearing that which is contrary to the facts known to man.

R. Papa said: This statement of R. Abbahu's was not explicitly expressed, but only deduced by implication;¹⁰ for R. Idi b. Abin said that R. Amram said that R. Isaac said that R. Johanan said: R. Judah said in the name of R. Jose the Galilean: Every negative precept in the Torah, if it involves action, is punished by stripes; if it does not involve action, is not punished by stripes, except swearing, exchanging,¹¹ and cursing one's neighbour with the Name.¹² 'Swearing' — how do we know?¹³ R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Scripture says: Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless¹⁴ — the Upper Court¹⁵ will not render him guiltless, but the lower court inflict stripes and render him guiltless.¹⁶ Said R. Papa to Abaye: Perhaps Scripture means this: He will not render him guiltless at all? — If it had been written: For he will not hold him guiltless, it would have meant what you say; but now that it is written: For the Lord will not hold him, guiltless, [it means], the Lord does not render him guiltless, but the lower court inflict stripes and render him guiltless. Hence we find that a vain oath [is punished by stripes]. How do we know a false oath [is so punished]? — R. Johanan himself said: 'In vain' is mentioned twice.¹⁷ Since it¹⁸ is not needed for a vain oath, utilise it for a false oath. And R. Abbahu raised the question: This false oath — what kind is meant? Shall we say, 'I swear I shall not eat', and he ate? This is a negative precept involving action.¹⁹ Then again, if he said: 'I swear I shall eat', and he did not eat, does he then receive stripes? Surely, it has been stated: 'I swear I shall eat this loaf to day', and the day passed, and he did not eat it: R. Johanan and Resh Lakish both hold that he does not receive stripes; R. Johanan says he does not receive stripes, because it is a negative precept not involving action, and any negative precept not involving action is not punishable by stripes; and Resh Lakish says, he does not receive stripes, because it is an uncertain warning, and an uncertain warning is not a warning?²⁰ — Well then, said R. Abbahu: It refers to: '[I swear] I have eaten', '[I swear] I have not eaten'.²¹ And what is the difference?²² — Raba said: Clearly did the Torah include a false oath which is like a vain oath;²³ just as a vain oath is in the past, so a false oath which is in the past [is included].²⁴

R. Jeremiah put a question to R. Abbahu: [We learnt:] 'I swear I shall not eat this loaf; I swear I shall not eat it; I swear I shall not eat it', and he ate it, he is liable only for one [oath]:²⁵ this is the oath of utterance²⁶ for the wilful transgression of which stripes are incurred, and for the unwitting transgression of which a sliding scale sacrifice is brought.²⁷ 'This is [the oath, etc.]' What does 'this' exclude? Surely, it excludes '[I swear] I have eaten', '[I swear] I have not eaten', that he is not liable for stripes?²⁸ — No! It excludes '[I swear] I have eaten', '[I swear] I have not eaten' from an offering: 'this²⁹ is [the oath . . .]' for the unwitting transgression of which a sliding scale sacrifice is brought, but not '[I swear] I have eaten', '[I swear] I have not eaten'; and this will be in accordance with the opinion of R. Ishmael who holds that he is only liable for an oath in the future,³⁰ but stripes he incurs.

(2) The statement 'Vain and false oaths are one' means they are equal in that an offering is brought for the transgression of a vain oath (such as, 'I have eaten', 'I have not eaten') as for a false oath ('I shall eat', 'I shall not eat').

(3) Infra 25a, and supra 3a.

(4) E.g., swearing of gold that it is wood.

(5) Of the truth; e.g., swearing that he had eaten, when he had not.

(6) Swearing to do something in the future, and not doing it.

(7) Disagreeing with R. Dimi who said in R. Johanan's name that they are vain oaths; supra 20b.

(8) Lev. XIX, 12,

(10) R. Jeremiah did not hear R. Abbahu say definitely that R. Johanan holds an oath in the past is termed a false oath, but deduced it from another statement of his; v. infra p. 109, n. 8.

(11) For another, a beast which he had dedicated as a sacrifice (v. Lev. XXVII, 10; both become holy); the exchange is effected merely by utterance, without action.

(12) Of God; v. Tem. 3b.

(13) That stripes are inflicted for its transgression?

(14) Ex. XX, 7.

(15) The Lord.

(16) The human tribunal punish him, and thereby (having expiated his offence), he becomes once more guiltless.

(17) Ex. XX, 7.

(18) The second 'in vain'.

(19) And therefore is certainly punished by stripes. But which is the oath not involving action which is said to be punished by stripes?

(20) Supra 3b; v. p. 8, n. 1.

(21) This is the false oath which, though not involving action, is punishable by stripes. From this statement of R. Abbahu's R. Jeremiah deduced that an oath in the past tense is called a false oath according to R. Johanan.

(22) Why should this oath, though not involving action, be punishable by stripes, whereas an oath in the future not involving action is not punishable?

(24) Swearing that which is contrary to a known fact is like an oath in the past; the falsity is immediately evident.

(25) Although he uttered three oaths; because the second oath cannot 'fall' on the first; i.e., since the first oath already prohibits him from eating the loaf, the second oath is, in effect, a promise to fulfil the mizwah of keeping the first oath, and 'he who swears to fulfil a mizwah, and does not fulfil it, is not liable' (Infra 27a).

(26) Lev. V, 4; swearing to utter (or, pronounce) with the lips to do evil, or to do good.

(28) Yet R. Abbahu states that he is.

(29) Oath in the future.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 21b

How [then] will you explain the latter clause: This¹ is the vain oath for the wilful transgression of which stripes are incurred, and for the unwitting transgression of which he is exempt.² 'This is [the vain oath, etc.]' What does 'this' exclude? Surely, it excludes '[I swear] I have eaten', '[I swear] I have not eaten', that he is not liable for stripes!³ — No! 'This is [the oath . . .]' for the unwitting transgression of which he is exempt [from a sacrifice]' but '[I swear] I have eaten', '[I swear] I have not eaten', makes him liable for a sacrifice for unwitting transgression; and this will be in accordance with the opinion of R. Akiba who holds that he is liable for [an oath] in the past as in the future.⁴ But you have said that the first statement is in accordance with R. Ishmael's view. Is the first statement, then, in accordance with R. Ishmael's view, and the second in accordance with R. Akiba's view! — [No!] It is entirely in accordance with R. Akiba's view; and the first statement is not intended to exclude '[I swear] I have eaten', '[I swear] I have not eaten' from a sacrifice, but to exclude '[I swear] I shall eat', and he did not eat, from stripes; but for a sacrifice he is liable.⁵ Why should you prefer this?⁶ — It is reasonable that, since he is discussing the future, he should exclude the future; but, discussing the future, shall he exclude the past?⁷

I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT , AND HE ATE A MINUTE QUANTITY, HE IS LIABLE;
[THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA.]

It was queried [by the scholars]: Does R. Akiba agree in the whole Torah with R. Simeon who imposes liability for a minute quantity, for it has been taught: 'R. Simeon says. For a minute quantity stripes are incurred;⁸ and it was not said that the size of an olive is necessary except for a sacrifice.'⁹ And by right they¹⁰ should disagree also elsewhere, but the reason their disagreement is stated here is to show you the power of the Sages, for, although it is possible to say, since if he had expressly stated [a minute quantity] he would have been liable,¹¹ he should also be liable even if his statement is undefined,¹² we are informed, nevertheless, that they exempt him.¹³ Or, elsewhere, does R. Akiba agree with the Sages,¹⁴ and here, this is the reason:¹⁵ since if he expressly states [a minute quantity] he is liable, he is liable also if his statement is undefined?

Come and hear: THEY SAID TO R. AKIBA: WHERE DO WE FIND THAT HE WHO EATS A MINUTE QUANTITY IS LIABLE, THAT THIS ONE SHOULD BE LIABLE? And if it is so [that he agrees with R. Simeon elsewhere also], let him answer them: I agree in the whole Torah with R. Simeon? — [It is possible that] he is replying according to the views of the Rabbis¹⁶ themselves: As for me, I agree with R. Simeon in the whole Torah; but as for you, agree with me at least that, since if he expressly states [a minute quantity] he is liable, he should be liable also if his statement is undefined. And the Rabbis replied to him: No!

Come and hear: R. Akiba says, A nazirite who soaked his bread in wine, and there is sufficient in both together to make up the size of an olive, is liable.¹⁷ Now if you were to hold that everywhere he agrees with R. Simeon,¹⁸ what need is there for combining?¹⁹ And again, we learnt: 'I swear I shall not eat', and he ate carrion, trefa, forbidden animals, and reptiles, he is liable;²⁰ and R. Simeon exempts him.²¹ And we asked: Why is he liable,²² since he had already been adjured on Mount Sinai? Rab and Samuel and R. Johanan said: [He is liable because] he had included permitted things with the prohibited things.²³ And Resh Lakish said: You cannot find [that he should be liable] except either, if he expressly stated half the legal quantity,²⁴ and it will be in accordance with the view of the Rabbis, or, [even] if his statement was undefined, and it will be in accordance with R. Akiba's view,²⁵ who holds that a man [in an undefined oath], prohibits to himself [even] a minute quantity. Now if you were to say that elsewhere R. Akiba also agrees with R. Simeon,²⁶ then for a minute quantity he also stands adjured from Mount Sinai! Hence, we deduce from this [must we not?] that elsewhere he agrees with the Rabbis.²⁷ It is proven.

THEY SAID TO R. AKIBA: WHERE DO WE FIND [THAT HE WHO EATS A MINUTE QUANTITY IS LIABLE, etc.]. Can we not? Is there not the ant?²⁸ A creature is different.²⁹ Is there not sacred property?³⁰ — But we require it should be the value of a perutah.³¹ Is there not the expressly defined oath?³² An expressly defined oath is like a creature.³³ Is there not dust?³⁴ May you then,

(1) Swearing that which is contrary to a known fact,

(2) Infra 29a.

- (3) Yet R. Abbahu says he is.
- (4) Infra 25a.
- (5) For unwitting transgression.
- (6) Interpretation of the Mishnah? Perhaps it excludes an oath in the past from sacrifice; and it will not be in accordance with R. Akiba's view.
- (7) The Mishnah states: 'I swear I shall not eat', and he ate — this is the oath for which he is liable both for witting and unwitting transgression; but (we may deduce) 'I swear I shall eat', and he did not eat — for this he does not incur stripes for witting transgression. Both statement and deduction are future.
- (8) Not only in the case of oaths, but in the case of any prohibited food, R. Simeon holds that if he eats a minute quantity wittingly he incurs stripes.
- (9) For unwitting transgression where, for witting transgression, he incurs the penalty of kareth. In the case of an oath, however, witting transgression is punishable by stripes even for a minute quantity, and consequently unwitting transgression is punishable by a sacrifice even for a minute quantity.
- (10) R. Akiba and the Sages of our Mishnah; they disagree not only in the case of an oath, but in all prohibited things. R. Akiba holding with R. Simeon that for a minute quantity he is liable.
- (11) If he had expressly sworn: 'I swear I shall not eat a minute quantity', and he ate, the Sages agree that he is liable, for he has broken his oath.
- (12) For it may be that when he says: 'I swear I shall not eat', he means even a small quantity, because he is not thinking of the legal minimum enjoined by the Torah for prohibited foods.
- (13) When his oath is undefined.
- (14) That on eating a minute quantity of prohibited food he is exempt.
- (15) Why he makes him liable.
- (16) The Sages.
- (17) The permitted food (bread) combines with the prohibited (wine) to make up the legal minimum; Nazir 35b.
- (18) That he is liable for a minute quantity of any prohibited food.
- (19) The permitted bread with the prohibited wine?
- (20) To bring a sliding scale sacrifice for unwitting transgression of the oath.
- (21) From a sacrifice, for all Israel had been adjured at Mount Sinai to observe the Torah and not to eat carrion, etc., therefore his present oath cannot 'fall' on the first oath; it is merely like an oath to fulfil a mizwah, (infra 22b).
- (22) According to the Sages?
- (23) If he had sworn: 'I swear I shall not eat carrion', this oath could not have 'fallen' on the first oath (adjuration at Mount Sinai); but he said: 'I swear I shall not eat', thus including even permitted things; and since the oath can fall on the permitted things, it falls also on the prohibited, for this oath is more inclusive than the oath taken at Mount Sinai (including as it does even permitted things); and when the second oath is more inclusive than the first, it has the power to fall on the first. R. Simeon, however, holds that even a more inclusive second oath cannot fall on the first.
- (24) Not necessarily half: even a minute quantity.
- (25) According to Resh Lakish, in the case of an oath, even the Rabbis (who disagree here with R. Simeon) do not hold that a more inclusive second oath falls on the first oath; but they make him liable here only if he said: 'I swear I shall not eat a small quantity of carrion', because for a small quantity (less than the size of an olive) there is no previous oath (from Mount Sinai), and this oath therefore takes effect. Only in the case of such an oath will he be liable, according to the Sages (who disagree with R. Akiba). And according to R. Akiba, he is liable even if he says: 'I swear I shall not eat', because he thereby prohibits to himself even a minute quantity of carrion, and for a minute quantity there is no previous oath (from Mount Sinai).
- (26) That he is liable for a minute quantity of any prohibited food.
- (27) That he is liable only when he eats the legal minimum (the size of an olive).
- (28) For eating which, though it is less than the size of an olive, he is liable; Mak. 13a.
- (29) Because, though minute, it is a complete creature.
- (30) For which he is liable to bring a trespass offering if he uses for a profane purpose even an amount less than the size of an olive.
- (31) A small coin, (v. Glos.). That is the legal minimum for bringing a trespass offering; hence, here also there is a definite minimum.
- (32) 'I swear I shall not eat a minute quantity', and he ate, he is liable, though it is less than the size of an olive.

(33) Just as he is liable on eating a minute creature, because it is important owing to its being complete, so he is liable for a minute quantity, if he expressly states it in the oath, for he has rendered the minute quantity of sufficient importance to prohibit it to himself.

(34) The questioner assumes that if he says: 'I swear I shall not eat dust', he is liable for a minute quantity, because, since it is not edible, the normal minimum for edibles is not applicable.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 22a

decide that which Raba enquired: "I swear I shall not eat dust", and he ate; what quantity [must he eat to make him liable]? — May you [then] decide that it must be the size of an olive!¹ — [No!] When do we say² [that we do not find liability for a minute quantity,] only in the case of an edible do we say so.³ Is there not the case of vows?⁴ — Vows are like expressly defined oaths.⁵

HE SAID TO THEM: BUT WHERE DO WE FIND THAT HE WHO SPEAKS BRINGS AN OFFERING, THAT THIS ONE SHOULD BRING AN OFFERING?

Do we not [find such a case]? Is there not the blasphemer?⁶ — We mean, speaking and prohibiting; but this one speaks and sins.⁷ Is there not the nazirite?⁸ — We mean, bringing an offering for [breaking] his word;⁹ but this one brings an offering so that wine may again be permitted to him. Is there not sacred property?¹⁰ — We mean, prohibiting to himself only; but this one prohibits to the whole world.¹¹ Is there not the case of vows?¹² — He holds that there is no trespass offering for [breaking] vows.

Raba said: The controversy [between R. Akiba and the Sages] is in the case of an undefined oath, but if he expressly states [a minute quantity], all agree that he is liable for a minute quantity. What is the reason? An expressly defined oath is on a par with a 'creature'.¹³ And Raba said further: The controversy is only where he says, 'I shall not eat,' but if he says, 'I shall not taste, all agree that he is liable for a minute quantity. This is self-evident! — I might have thought that 'to taste' should be taken in the way that people talk,¹⁴ therefore he teaches us [that it is taken literally].

R. Papa said: The controversy is in the case of oaths, but in Konamoth all agree that he is liable for a minute quantity. What is the reason? Vows, since the word 'eating' is not mentioned in them,¹⁵ are like expressly defined oaths.

An objection was raised: Two Konamoth combine; two oaths do not combine.¹⁶ R. Meir says: Konamoth are like oaths. Now, if you say that [in vows] he is liable for a minute quantity, what need is there for combining? — He said, 'Eating of this [loaf] shall be to me konam; and eating of that [loaf] shall be to me konam.'¹⁷ — If so, why do they combine? In any case, if you go here, there is not the legal minimum, and if you go there, there is not the legal minimum.¹⁸ — He said, 'Eating of both [loaves] shall be to me konam.'¹⁹ Now, a similar expression in the case of oaths would be, if he said, 'I swear I shall not eat of both [loaves];' then why do they not combine?²⁰ — R. Phinehas said: Oaths are different; because they are divided in respect of sin offerings, they do not combine.²¹ If so, 'R. Meir says: Konamoth are like oaths.' [Why?] Granted, oaths [do not combine], because they are divided in respect of sin offerings; but konamoth, why not? — Reverse it: R. Meir Says: oaths are like Konamoth [and combine]; and he does not agree with R. Phinehas. Rabina said: That which R. Papa said [that in Konamoth he is liable for a minute quantity] refers only to stripes; and that which we learnt in the Baraitha [that vows combine] refers to an offering, where we require [that the enjoyment should be] the value of a perutah.²²

Shall we say that the Sages hold there is a trespass offering for Konamoth?²³ Yet we learnt: [If he says,] 'This loaf is sacred,' and he eats it — either he or his neighbour — he trespasses; therefore there is redemption for it.²⁴ [If he says,] 'This loaf is to me sacred', he trespasses [by eating it], but his neighbour does not trespass; therefore there is no redemption for it;²⁵ this is the opinion of R. Meir.

- (1) For our Mishnah says: Where do we find that he who eats a minute quantity is liable? Apparently, therefore, it assumes that in the case of dust there must also be the legal minimum.
- (2) In our Mishnah.
- (3) But in the case of dust he may be liable even for a small quantity, and Raba's query remains.
- (4) If he says: 'This loaf shall be konam (v. p. 106, n. 6) to me', he prohibits himself, thereby, from partaking even of a small quantity of it.
- (5) Because he does not mention the term 'eating', — it is as if he had expressly prohibited even a minute quantity of it. It is only in oaths, where the term 'eating' is mentioned, that the question arises whether even a small amount is prohibited, or only the legal minimum, because elsewhere 'eating' implies a minimum of the size of an olive, אכילה בכזית.
- (6) Num. XV, 30; Lev. XXIV, 11; Ker. 7a: R. Akiba says the blasphemer brings an offering.
- (7) The Mishnah means: Where do we find that he, who by speaking, prohibits something to himself, should bring an offering for transgressing his word? But he who blasphemes the name of God, commits a sin by his very utterance.
- (8) Who by his speech (vow) prohibits wine to himself, and brings an offering when the period of his naziriteship is ended; Num. VI. 1-21.
- (9) Where do we find that a man by prohibiting something to himself, and then breaking his word, brings an offering?
- (10) Which is dedicated by his word; and if he breaks his word by making profane use of it, he brings a trespass offering.
- (11) Anything dedicated to the Temple is prohibited to all.
- (12) E.g., by vowing not to partake of food, he prohibits the food to himself only. The questioner assumes that, since he expressed the prohibition in the form of a vow, he must bring a trespass offering also (if he breaks the vow), for vowing is similar to dedicating.
- (13) V. supra 21b.
- (14) Colloquially, 'tasting' means 'eating'; and therefore we may think that if he says, 'I shall not taste,' he should not be liable unless he eats a ka-zayith (the size of an olive), according to the Sages.
- (15) I.e., where a man says: That loaf shall be to me Konam (v. Glos.).
- (16) If he prohibits two loaves to himself by vows, and he eats a small portion of each, the two portions combine to make up the requisite amount of ka-zayith, but if he prohibits them by oaths, they do not combine.
- (17) Although he utters it in the form of a vow, yet, since he mentions the word 'eating', there must be the requisite amount.
- (18) If he mentions the word 'eating' for each loaf, he must eat the legal minimum of each loaf in order to be liable; just as in the case of oaths.
- (19) Therefore if he eats the legal minimum of both together, it suffices for liability.
- (20) Why is it stated that two vows combine, and two oaths do not combine? What is the difference?
- (21) The two loaves are distinct in the case of oaths. If he said, 'I swear I shall not eat of this one and of that one', and he ate a ka-zayith of each in one spell of unawareness, he brings two offerings. Since, therefore, they are counted as separate, they do not combine if he ate less than a ka-zayith of each. But in the case of vows the two loaves are not treated as distinct, for according to the view that a trespass offering must be brought for the enjoyment of that which he prohibits to himself by Konam, he would be liable to only one offering for a number of enjoyments in one spell of unawareness (Rashi). [For a full discussion of this distinction between oaths and Konamoth, v. Mishnah le-Melek on Maim. Yad, Shevu'oth IV, 1.]
- (22) He receives stripes even for a minute quantity; and he brings a trespass offering if his combined enjoyments of the two loaves totalled the value of a perutah.
- (23) For they say that two vows combine for a trespass offering.
- (24) That which is dedicated to the Temple treasury (קדושת דמים) may be redeemed; Lev. XXVII, 27.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 22b

And the Sages say: Neither he nor his neighbour trespasses [by eating it], for there is no trespass in Konamoth.¹ — Reverse it: Neither he nor his neighbour trespasses, for there is no trespass in Konamoth: this is the opinion of R. Meir. And the Sages say: He trespasses, but his neighbour does not trespass.² If so, 'R. Meir says: Konamoth are like oaths', implying that Konamoth do not combine, but there is trespass in them?³ Yet R. Meir says: There is no trespass in Konamoth at all! — According to the views of the Sages he is replying: As for me, I hold there is no trespass in Konamoth at all; but as for you, admit to me at least that Konamoth are like oaths [and do not combine]. And the Sages? — [They reply:] In oaths there is the reason of R. Phinehas; in Konamoth there is not the reason of R. Phinehas.⁴

Raba said: — [If a man says,] 'I swear shall not eat,' and he ate dust, he is exempt.⁵ Raba inquired: [If a man says.] 'I swear I shall not eat dust,' what amount [must he eat to make him liable]? [Shall we say:] Since he said, 'I shall not eat,' his intention was a kazayith,⁶ or, since it is not something that people eat, [his intention was] a minute quantity? — Let it stand.⁷

Raba inquired: [If a man says,] 'I swear I shall not eat grape stones,' what amount [must he eat to make him liable]? [Shall we say:] Since it can be eaten mixed [with the grapes], his intention was a ka-zayith, or, since, by itself, it is not eaten by people, his intention was a minute quantity?⁸ — Let it stand.

R. Ashi inquired: If a nazirite said, 'I swear I shall not eat grape stones,' what amount [must he eat to make him liable]?⁹ [Shall we say:] Since a ka-zayith is prohibited in the Torah,¹⁰ therefore when he swears, he swears for that which is permitted, and his intention is for a minute quantity; or, since he says, 'I shall not eat,' his intention is a ka-zayith?¹¹ — Come and hear: 'I swear I shall not eat,' and he ate carrion, trefa, forbidden animals, and reptiles, he is liable; and R. Simeon exempts him. And we asked: Why is he liable, since he stands adjured from Mount Sinai? Rab and Samuel and R. Johanan said: Because he included permitted things with the prohibited things. And Resh Lakish said: You cannot find [that he should be liable] except either, if he expressly stated half the legal quantity, in accordance with the view of the Sages, or, if his statement was undefined, in accordance with the view of R. Akiba, who holds that a man [in an undefined oath] prohibits to himself a minute quantity.¹² Now, carrion, for which he stands adjured from Mount Sinai, is like grape stones to a nazirite; and yet, only if he expressly states [less than the legal quantity, is he liable],¹³ but if he does not expressly state this, his intention is for a ka-zayith. — It is proven.

Well then, you may decide that which Raba enquired: [If a man says.] 'I swear I shall not eat dust,' what amount [must he eat to make him liable]? You may decide that it must be a ka-zayith; for carrion is like dust;¹⁴ and yet [he is liable] only if he expressly states [less than the legal quantity], but if he does not expressly state this, his intention is for a ka-zayith. — No! Dust is not edible at all;¹⁵ but carrion is edible, except that a lion is lying on it.¹⁶ MISHNAH. [IF A MAN SAYS,] 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT' AND HE ATE AND DRANK, HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE.¹⁷ 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT AND I SHALL NOT DRINK,' AND HE ATE AND DRANK, HE IS LIABLE TWICE.¹⁸ 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT,' AND HE ATE WHEAT BREAD, BARLEY BREAD, AND SPELT BREAD, HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE. 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT WHEAT BREAD, BARLEY BREAD, AND SPELT BREAD,' AND HE ATE, HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ONE. 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT DRINK,' AND HE DRANK MANY LIQUIDS, HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE. 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT DRINK WINE, OIL, AND HONEY,' AND HE DRANK, HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ONE. 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT,' AND HE ATE FOODS WHICH ARE NOT FIT TO BE EATEN, AND DRANK LIQUIDS WHICH ARE NOT FIT TO BE DRUNK, HE IS EXEMPT.¹⁹ 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT,' AND HE ATE CARRION, TREFA, FORBIDDEN ANIMALS, AND REPTILES, HE IS LIABLE.²⁰ AND R. SIMEON EXEMPTS HIM.²¹ HE SAID, 'I VOW THAT MY WIFE SHALL NOT BENEFIT FROM ME, IF I HAVE EATEN TODAY,' AND HE HAD EATEN CARRION, TREFA, FORBIDDEN ANIMALS,

OR REPTILES, HIS WIFE IS PROHIBITED TO HIM.²²

GEMARA. R. Hiyya b. Abin said that Samuel said: [If a man says,] 'I swear I shall not eat,' and he drank, he is liable. If you will, it may be deduced by reason; and if you will, it may be deduced from Scripture. If you will, it may be deduced by reason; for a man will say to his friend, 'Let us eat something,' and they go in, and eat and drink.²³ And if you will, it may be deduced from Scripture; drinking is included in eating, for Resh Lakish said: Whence do we know that drinking is included in eating? Because it is said: And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which He shall choose to cause His name to dwell there, the tithe of thy coin, of thy wine . . .²⁴

- (1) This proves that the Sages hold that there is no trespass in vows!
- (2) For the Sages hold there is trespass in vows.
- (3) A trespass offering is brought for breaking a vow, but two vows do not combine for one trespass offering.
- (4) Supra 22a.
- (5) Because dust is not edible, and 'eating' normally refers to edibles.
- (6) Because the legal minimum for eating is a ka-zayith.
- (7) I.e., it remains unsolved.
- (8) Assuming that in the case of dust he is liable for a minute quantity, is he here also liable for a minute quantity, or, since grape stones are not as inedible as dust (because they are eaten mixed with the grapes), a ka-zayith must be eaten for liability.
- (9) Assuming that in the case of other men (not nazirites) a ka-zayith is necessary (counting it as an edible), shall we say that a nazirite, knowing that a ka-zayith is in any case prohibited to him, intends, when taking the oath, to prohibit himself further (i.e., even a minute quantity)?
- (10) Num. VI, 4: from the grape stones even to the grape skin he shall not eat.
- (11) For the term 'eating' denotes the minimum of a ka-zayith.
- (12) V. supra 21b.
- (13) According to the Sages (in Resh Lakish's view); and we do not say, since a ka-zayith is in any case prohibited already by the Torah, his intention when swearing, must have been for a smaller quantity.
- (14) Since it must not be eaten.
- (15) Therefore the legal minimum for edibles is not applicable; and his intention may have been to prohibit even a minute quantity.
- (16) The prohibition of the Torah lies on it like a lion, making it inaccessible.
- (17) Though drink is included in the oath (for drinking is included in eating, as explained in the Gemara; v. infra), yet he is liable for only one punishment (stripes for wilful, and offering for unwitting transgression), for it is as if he had eaten twice in one spell of unawareness.
- (18) Because they are two oaths.
- (19) Because 'eating' implies edibles.
- (20) Because, though prohibited by the Torah, they are edible.
- (21) V. supra 21b.
- (22) R. Simeon agreeing, for he has eaten edibles.
- (23) Hence, drinking is included in eating.
- (24) Deut. XIV, 23.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 23a

Now, tirosh¹ is wine, and yet it is written, 'thou shalt eat'. Perhaps [Scripture means] when used in elaiogaron?² For Raba b. Samuel said: Elaiogaron contains the juice of beets, oxygaron the juice of all kinds of boiled vegetable! — But, said R. Aha b. Jacob: [We deduce that drinking is included in eating] from the verse, And thou shalt bestow the money for whatsoever thy soul desireth, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink . . . [and thou shalt eat there].³ Now, yayin is certainly wine; and yet it is written, 'thou shalt eat'. Perhaps here also [Scripture means] in elaiogaron? — 'Strong drink' is written, implying that which can cause intoxication.⁴ Perhaps pressed figs from

Keilah⁵ [are intended];⁶ for it was taught: If he ate a pressed fig from Keilah, or drank honey, or milk, and entered the Temple, and ministered, he is liable?⁷ — Well then, we deduce [that drinking is included in eating] by analogy from ‘strong drink’ [used here and in connection with a nazirite]: just as there it implies wine, so here it implies wine.⁸

Raba said: We have also learnt thus:⁹ ‘I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT,’ AND HE ATE AND DRANK, HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE. Granted, if you say that drinking is included in eating, it is necessary for the Tanna to teach us that [nevertheless] he is liable only once.¹⁰ But if you say that drinking is not included in eating,¹¹ [if he says.] ‘I swear I shall not eat,’ and he ate, and did work, would it be necessary [for the Tanna] to teach us that he is liable only once? Abaye said to him: What then, drinking is included in eating! [If so,] read the second clause, ‘I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT, AND I SHALL NOT DRINK,’ AND HE ATE AND DRANK, HE IS LIABLE TWICE. Now, since he said, ‘I shall not eat,’ he is already prohibited from drinking;¹² then when he says, ‘I shall not drink,’ why should he be liable? If he had said, ‘I shall not drink’ twice, would he have been liable twice? — He replied to him: There [the Mishnah means] he [first] said, ‘I shall not drink,’ and then he said, ‘I shall not eat;’ for drinking is included in eating, but eating is not included in drinking. But if he said, ‘I swear I shall not eat and I shall not drink,’ and he ate and drank, he would be liable only once? If so, why does he teach in the first clause: ‘I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT,’ AND HE ATE AND DRANK, HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE? Let him teach: ‘I swear I shall not eat and I shall not drink,’ he is liable only once; and most certainly [we should know, when he says:] ‘I shall not eat’ alone [he is liable only once]! We must therefore read the Mishnah as it stands;¹³ but here it is different.¹⁴ Since he said, ‘I shall not eat,’ and then he said, ‘I shall not drink,’ he revealed his mind that this ‘eating’ that he mentioned meant eating only.¹⁵

R. Ashi said: Our Mishnah also proves it:¹⁶ ‘I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT;’ AND HE ATE FOODS WHICH ARE NOT FIT TO BE EATEN, AND DRANK LIQUIDS WHICH ARE NOT FIT TO BE DRUNK, HE IS EXEMPT. [This implies that] if they are fit, he is liable.¹⁷ But why so? Surely he said [merely]: ‘I swear I shall not eat’! — Perhaps he said both: ‘I swear I shall not eat; I swear I shall not drink.’¹⁸ ‘I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT,’ AND HE ATE WHEAT BREAD, etc. But perhaps he wished to exempt himself from other kinds?¹⁹ — [In that case,] he should have said: ‘[I shall not eat] wheat, barley, and spelt.’²⁰ But perhaps, [that would have meant] ‘to chew’?²¹ — He could have said, ‘[I shall not eat] the bread of wheat, barley, and spelt.’²² — But perhaps, [that would have meant] the bread of wheat to eat, and barley and spelt to chew? — He could have said: ‘[I shall not eat] the bread of wheat, and of barley, and of spelt’.

(1) Heb. תִּירָשׁ (not the usual תִּירָשׁ) is used in the verse.

(2) A sauce of oil and garum to which wine is sometimes added; this is a food, and therefore Scripture calls it ‘eating’; but drinking is perhaps not included in eating.

(3) Deut. XIV, 26.

(4) ‘Strong drink’ is taken as explanatory of wine; hence it must be taken in its ordinary connotation, and not as an admixture to a sauce.

(5) A town in the lowland district of Judea.

(6) Strong drink may not be explanatory of wine, but a separate noun denoting pressed figs from the town of Keilah, which are intoxicating.

(7) If a priest conducts the service in the Temple when intoxicated, he transgresses the command in Lev. X, 9.

(8) A nazirite must abstain only from wine products (Naz. 4a); the term, ‘strong drink’ in the case of a nazirite (Num. VI, 3) refers only to wine; hence the term ‘strong drink’ in Deut. XIV, 26 refers also to wine; and Scripture says: ‘thou shalt eat’; hence drinking is included in eating.

(9) That drinking is included in eating.

(10) Because he ate and drank in one spell of unawareness.

(11) What need is there for the Tanna to teach us that he is liable only once?

(12) Since drinking is included in eating.

- (13) That he first says, 'I shall not eat', and then, 'I shall not drink,'
- (14) Why he is liable twice, though drinking is already included in eating.
- (15) And he supplemented his oath to include drinking.
- (16) That drinking is included in eating.
- (17) This would prove that drinking is included in eating.
- (18) From this passage there is no proof that drinking is included in eating, for the Mishnah may mean this: 'I swear I shall not eat,' and he ate foods which are not fit,' etc.; and 'I swear I shall not drink,' and he drank liquids which are not fit, etc. But the Mishnah abbreviates.
- (19) If he says, 'I swear I shall not eat wheat bread, barley bread, and spelt bread,' and he ate, he is liable for each one. Why? Perhaps he enumerates these kinds of bread in order to exclude other kinds, such as, bread of oats, rye, or millet, which he does not desire to prohibit; for, if he had said, 'I swear I shall not eat,' without particularising, he would have been prohibited from all kinds. But, in reality, it is only one oath, not three.
- (20) But since he mentions the word BREAD each time, he implies that they are three separate oaths.
- (21) Grains of wheat, barley, and spelt; but bread would not have been prohibited; therefore he must mention the word BREAD.
- (22) But because he mentions the word BREAD on each occasion, he implies that they are three separate oaths.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 23b

But perhaps [that would have meant] mixed?¹ — Say, [he could have said: 'I shall not eat the bread of wheat,] and also of barley, and also of spelt'. Why is BREAD repeated? Obviously, in order to separate.²

'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT DRINK;' AND HE DRANK MANY LIQUIDS. HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE, etc. Granted there,³ as you say, the word BREAD, being superfluous, makes him liable;⁴ but here,⁵ what could he have said? Perhaps he wishes to exempt himself from other liquids?⁶ — R. Papa said: Here we are discussing [the case of] where they are lying before him; so that he could have said: 'I swear I shall not drink these.'⁷ But perhaps [that would have meant], 'These I shall not drink, but others [of the same kind] I shall drink'? — Well, he could have said, 'I swear I shall not drink [liquids] just like these.' Perhaps [that would have meant], 'Just like these⁸ I shall not drink, but less than these, or more than these, I shall drink'? Well then, he could have said, 'I swear I shall not drink of these kinds.' Perhaps [that would have meant], 'These kinds I shall not drink, but these themselves I shall drink'? — Say [he could have said], 'I shall not drink these and their kinds.'

R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: We are discussing [a case] where his friend is urging him, saying to him, 'Come and drink with me wine, oil, and honey;' so that he could have said, 'I swear I shall not drink with you.' What need is there [to enumerate] wine and oil and honey? [Obviously, therefore,] to make him liable for each one.

We learnt there: [If a man says to another.] 'Give me the wheat, barley, and spelt of mine in your possession.'⁹ [and the other replies,] 'I swear that there is nothing of yours in my possession;' he is liable only once.¹⁰ [But if he says,] 'I swear that I have not of yours in my possession wheat, barley, and spelt;' he is liable for each one.¹¹ And R. Johanan said: Even if there is only a perutah of all of them together, they combine.¹² Now, R. Aha and Rabina disagree;¹³ one says, he is liable for the particularisations, but he is not liable for the generalisations; and the other says, he is liable also for the generalisations.¹⁴ Now here,¹⁵ how will it be? — Raba said: How now?¹⁶ There he is liable for the generalisation, and he is liable for the particularisation, for if he swears once, and then swears again, he is liable twice.¹⁷ But here, if it should enter your mind that they are included in the generalisation, why should he be liable for the particularisations, since he already stands adjured?¹⁸

'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT', etc. This itself is contradictory! You say: 'I SWEAR I SHALL

NOT EAT', AND HE ATE FOODS WHICH ARE NOT FIT TO BE EATEN, AND DRANK DRINKS WHICH ARE NOT FIT TO BE DRUNK, HE IS EXEMPT. And then you teach: I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT,' AND HE ATE CARRION, TREFA, FORBIDDEN ANIMALS, AND REPTILES, HE IS LIABLE. What is the difference between the first clause, where he is exempt, and the second, where he is liable?¹⁹ — This is no question: the first clause relates to an undefined oath,²⁰ and the second to a defined oath.²¹ [In the case of] a defined oath itself it may also be asked: Why? Surely he is adjured from Mount Sinai!²² — Rab and Samuel and R. Johanan said: Because he included permitted foods with the prohibited foods.²³ And Resh Lakish said: You cannot find [that he should be liable] except either if he expressly states half the legal quantity, in accordance with the view of the Rabbis; or, if his oath is undefined, in accordance with the view of R. Akiba, who says, a man [in an undefined oath] prohibits to himself even a minute quantity.²⁴

Granted, R. Johanan does not agree with Resh Lakish, because he wishes to expound our Mishnah in accordance with the views of all;²⁵ but why does not Resh Lakish agree with R. Johanan? — He may reply to you: We say that a more inclusive prohibition [falls on a less inclusive one]

- (1) That he should not eat bread made of all three together.
 - (2) Making them into three oaths.
 - (3) In the enumeration of the different kinds of bread.
 - (4) For each kind separately.
 - (5) In the Case where he enumerates the liquids, and is liable for each one separately.
 - (6) That is why he enumerates these; but there is really only one oath.
 - (7) But since he enumerates them, he is swearing three oaths.
 - (8) The same quantity.
 - (9) Deposited temporarily in the other's care.
 - (10) A trespass offering for the false oath (שבועת הפקדון); Lev, V, 21-26.
 - (11) Infra 36b.
 - (12) To make him liable to bring one trespass offering. The oath must be a denial of liability of at least the value of a perutah for a trespass offering to be brought.
 - (13) As to the meaning of the Mishnah and R. Johanan's comment.
 - (14) When he says, 'I swear that I have not of yours in my possession wheat, barley, and spelt,' the first part is a generalisation ('I swear that I have not of yours in my possession'), then there are three particularisations. When the Mishnah says, he is liable for each one, does it mean three trespass offerings or four? R. Aha and Rabina disagree: one says, three; he is liable for the particularisations alone, and not for the generalisation; and we do not say that the first part, 'I swear that I have not of yours in my possession,' should be taken as an additional oath; and R. Johanan's comment that they combine to the value of a perutah refers to the previous statement in the Mishnah: 'I swear that there is nothing of yours in my possession' (with no particulars mentioned at all); but where particulars are mentioned, they do not combine; there must be the value of a perutah in each. And the other Amora says, when the Mishnah states he is liable for each, it means four, the generalisation also being taken as an oath; and R. Johanan's comment refers to this too, that for the first of the four oaths (the generalisation) he is liable to bring a trespass offering even if there is only the value of a perutah in the wheat, barley, and spelt combined.
 - (15) In our Mishnah: 'I swear I shall not eat wheat bread, barley bread, and spelt bread,' he is liable for each one. Will R. Aha and Rabina disagree here also, one of them holding (taking the generalisation as a separate oath) that he is liable for four oaths?
 - (16) There is no comparison at all.
 - (17) In the case of denying a deposit, if the trustee denies it on oath several times, he brings a trespass offering for each denial; infra 36b.
 - (18) If we should assume that the generalisation, 'I swear I shall not eat,' is taken as an additional oath, and as prohibiting all foods, then, when he adds 'wheat, barley, and spelt', these three oaths cannot take effect, for they are already assumed to have been included in the generalisation; and a later oath cannot 'fall' on a previous oath.
 - (19) Is not carrion, etc., food unfit to be eaten?
 - (20) 'I swear I shall not eat' implies only foods which are fit to be eaten, and excludes carrion.

(21) 'I swear I shall not eat carrion, etc.'

(22) His oath cannot take effect, since there is already a previous oath (administered at Mount Sinai) not to eat carrion.

(23) He said: 'I swear I shall not eat properly killed meat and carrion, etc.:' and because the oath can take effect on the permitted food it takes effect also on the prohibited; v. supra 21b.

(25) R. Akiba and the Sages who agree that a more inclusive oath can fall on a less inclusive one.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 24a

only when the [more inclusive] prohibition comes of its own accord, but when the prohibition is imposed by himself, we do not say this.¹

Granted, according to Resh Lakish, it is for this reason that R. Simeon exempts him,² for we learnt, R. Simeon says: A minute quantity [imposes liability] for stripes; and it was not said that a ka-zayith is necessary except for [imposing liability for] a sacrifice. But, according to R. Johanan,³ what is R. Simon's reason for exempting him? — Is not the reason [that the Sages make him liable] because it is a more inclusive prohibition? R. Simeon is consistent in his view that a more inclusive prohibition cannot take effect; for it has been taught, R. Simeon Says: He who eats carrion on the Day of Atonement is exempt.⁴ Granted, according to Resh Lakish, it is possible to have it negative and positive;⁵ but, according to R. Johanan, granted that negative is possible, but how is positive possible?⁶ — Well then, [the Mishnah may be explained] in accordance with Raba's view, for Raba said: [If a man says,] 'I swear I shall not eat', and he ate dust, he is exempt.⁷

R. Mari said: We have also learnt thus.⁸ 'I VOW THAT MY WIFE SHALL NOT BENEFIT FROM ME IF I HAVE EATEN TO-DAY,' AND HE HAD EATEN CARRION, TREFA, FORBIDDEN ANIMALS, AND REPTILES, HIS WIFE IS PROHIBITED TO HIM. [Hence, eating carrion is also called eating!] — How now? There, since first he ate, and then he swore,

(1) If a man eats carrion on the Day of Atonement, he is liable to bring a sin offering for his transgression of the Day, though carrion was already prohibited to him before the Day, because the prohibition of the Day is more inclusive (including, as it does, also permitted foods). This more inclusive prohibition comes of its own accord, and is therefore powerful enough to fall even on previously prohibited food; but if the more inclusive prohibition comes by the action or word of the man himself (as in the case of an oath), it cannot fall on a previous prohibition. Resh Lakish, therefore, who makes this distinction, cannot explain the Mishnah as R. Johanan does.

(2) In the Mishnah, supra 22b, because R. Simeon holds that for a small quantity he also stands adjured, and consequently the oath cannot fall on a small quantity.

(3) Who explains that the Sages in the Mishnah make him liable because he says: 'I swear I shall not eat properly killed meat and carrion;' why does R. Simeon exempt him?

(4) From a sin offering (for unwitting transgression of the Day), for the prohibition of the Day, though more inclusive, cannot fall on the prohibition of carrion.

(5) A sliding scale sacrifice is not brought for the transgression of an oath unless it is equally punishable when reversed (v. infra 25a). According to Resh Lakish, the oath in the Mishnah for which the Sages make him liable is: 'I swear I shall not eat a small portion of carrion.' This may be reversed: 'I swear I shall eat a small portion of carrion;' and he is liable for transgressing it, for he has not sworn to annul a precept (only a ka-zayith is prohibited in the Torah). Had he sworn to eat a ka-zayith of carrion, i.e., to annul a precept, and transgressed his oath, he would have been exempt; infra 27a.

(6) According to R. Johanan, the oath in the Mishnah for which the Sages make him liable is, 'I swear I shall not eat properly killed meat and carrion.' The positive of this oath is not possible; if he says, 'I swear I shall eat properly killed meat and carrion,' his oath cannot be carried out, so far as the carrion is concerned, because it is an oath to annul a precept (for a ka-zayith of carrion is prohibited by the Torah).

(7) The contradiction in the Mishnah was first explained by saying that the first clause ('I swear I shall not eat', and he ate foods which are not fit, etc., he is exempt) refers to an undefined oath, and the second clause ('I swear I shall not eat', and he ate carrion, etc., he is liable) refers to a defined oath (i.e., 'I swear I shall not eat properly killed meat and carrion, etc.'). This explanation raises a difficulty for R. Johanan, because the second oath is not reversible. The Gemara now says that both clauses refer to an undefined oath; in the first case he is exempt, because he ate dust (the phrase 'foods not fit to be eaten' refers to dust and similar inedibles); and in the second case he is liable, because he ate carrion (which is edible, but prohibited by the Torah). According to R. Johanan, in the second case when he says, 'I shall not eat,' he is liable if he eats carrion, because his oath is inclusive, including as it does all foods (permitted also); and because it can take effect on the permitted, it takes effect on the prohibited also. This oath (being undefined) is reversible: 'I shall eat', and can be fulfilled by eating permitted food; therefore if he transgresses it, he is liable.

(8) That carrion is counted food fit to be eaten (for, though prohibited, it is edible).

he had made it important;¹ but here, did he make it important?

Raba said: What is the reason of the one who holds an inclusive prohibition [can take effect on a previous prohibition]? Because it is analogous to an extensive prohibition.² And [the reason of] the one who exempts him, not holding this? Because he says, an extensive prohibition is applicable only to one piece, but not to two pieces.³

And Raba said further: According to the one who holds an inclusive prohibition [takes effect on a previous prohibition], if one says, 'I swear I shall not eat figs,' and then says, 'I swear I shall not eat figs and grapes,' because it takes effect on the grapes,⁴ it takes effect also on the figs. [But] this is self evident! — I might have thought that [in the case of] a prohibition which comes of its own accord we say it takes effect [on a previous prohibition], but [in the case of] a prohibition which is imposed by himself, we do not say this; therefore he teaches us [that even in this case it takes effect]. Raba the son of Rabbah raised an objection: [We learnt:] One may eat one portion [a ka-zayith] and yet be liable for it four sin offerings and one guilt offering, thus: An unclean person who ate heleb, which was nothar of holy food, on the Day of Atonement.⁵ R. Meir said: Also if it was Sabbath, and he carried it out in his mouth, he is liable.⁶ They [the Sages] said to him: It is not in the same category.⁷ Now, if it is [as you say],⁸ it is possible to have five;⁹ for example, if he said: 'I swear I shall not eat dates and heleb,' because it takes effect on the dates, it takes effect also on the heleb?' — The Tanna mentions only [the case of] a prohibition which comes of its own accord, but a prohibition imposed by himself he does not mention.¹⁰ But [he mentions] holy food!¹¹ — [It refers to] a firstborn, which is holy from the womb.

If you will, you may say, the Tanna mentions only that which does not come within the category of absolution, but an oath which comes within the category of absolution he does not mention.¹² — But [he mentions] holy food!¹³ — Well, we have established that it refers to a firstborn.

If you will, you may say, the Tanna mentions only [the case where] a fixed sacrifice [is brought], but where a sliding scale sacrifice is brought he does not mention.¹⁴ But [he mentions] an unclean person who ate holy food, for which a sliding scale sacrifice is brought! — [It refers to] a prince; and it is in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer, who says a prince brings a goat.¹⁵

R. Ashi said: The Tanna mentions only that which takes effect on the legal minimum,¹⁶ but an oath which takes effect on less than the legal minimum,¹⁷ he does not mention. But [he mentions] holy food!¹⁸ — Because we require that it should be the value of a perutah.¹⁹

And R. Ashi of Avirya said in the name of R. Zera: The Tanna mentions only that for which, for wilful transgression, kareth is inflicted, but that for which, for wilful transgression, there is only a negative prohibition,²⁰ he does not mention. But he mentions a guilt offering, in the case of which, for wilful transgression, there is only a negative prohibition!²¹ —

(1) The fact of having eaten the carrion shows that he deemed it edible and not distasteful to him; but if he swears, 'I shall not eat' (without specifying carrion), and he eats carrion, he may perhaps not be liable for the oath; as he might not have contemplated including carrion in the oath.

(2) An inclusive prohibition (אִיסוּר כּוֹלֵל) does not add anything to the previous prohibition, but includes more objects in the present prohibition; e.g., carrion is prohibited; when the Day of Atonement arrives, it prohibits not only carrion, but also previously permitted foods; the incidence of the Day does not make the carrion prohibited in any way except as food, but it includes in its prohibition other foods apart from this carrion. An extensive prohibition (אִיסוּר מוֹסִיף) adds something to this present prohibited object, making it more extensively prohibited; e.g., heleb (forbidden fat) of an offering is prohibited to be eaten, but may be offered on the altar; when it becomes nothar (by being kept beyond the time limit for its offering), it is prohibited to be offered on the altar. The prohibition of nothar takes effect on the heleb (which was permitted so far as the altar is concerned), so that it may not now be offered on the altar; and since the prohibition of nothar takes effect on the heleb (so far as the altar is concerned), it ipso facto takes effect on it so far as human consumption is concerned also; so that a man eating it now is liable both for heleb and nothar.

(3) An extensive prohibition can take effect on a previous prohibition because it extends the scope of the prohibition of this one piece; e.g., heleb, permitted for the altar, on becoming nothar is prohibited; this same piece of fat is now more extensively prohibited; previously it was prohibited for human consumption only, now it is prohibited for the altar also. But an inclusive prohibition does not add any prohibition to this one piece; it merely includes other pieces in its prohibition; therefore, he holds, it does not take effect on a previous prohibition.

(4) For they were not prohibited by the first oath.

(5) Four sin offerings: (i) for heleb, (ii) for nothar, (iii) for the Day of Atonement, and (iv) for eating holy food while unclean; and one guilt offering for his trespass in deriving enjoyment from holy food. He is liable for all these, if we hold that inclusive and extensive prohibitions can take effect on previous prohibitions. The heleb of an animal is prohibited; when he sanctifies the animal, the whole of it becomes prohibited to him: this second prohibition is an inclusive one, because the permitted portions of the animal are now included in the prohibition; and because the prohibition can take effect on the permitted portions, it takes effect also on the heleb; when it becomes nothar, a further prohibition is extended to this heleb itself, making it prohibited to the altar; this extensive prohibition therefore takes effect on it as far as human consumption is concerned also. When the person becomes unclean, holy foods previously permitted to him now become prohibited; this inclusive prohibition, because it can take effect on previously permitted holy foods, takes effect also on this heleb. The Day of Atonement is another inclusive prohibition (prohibiting all kinds of food), and therefore it takes effect on the heleb also.

(6) Another sin offering for carrying on the Sabbath, as well as for carrying on the Day of Atonement (for carrying is prohibited on the Day of Atonement also); v. Ker. 14a.

(7) As eating; for they are giving examples of liability for eating, and not for carrying. Mishnah Ker. 13b.

(8) That an inclusive prohibition, even if imposed by himself, can take effect.

(9) Sin offerings.

(10) Though he agrees that an inclusive prohibition, even if imposed by himself, can take effect, he wishes to limit his example to a case where four sin offerings are brought, without including any prohibition imposed by himself.

(11) Which is a prohibition imposed by himself, because he made it holy.

(12) An oath or a vow may be absolved in certain circumstances as, for example, if the person uttering the oath or vow explains to the Sage (or three laymen) that, had he known of certain eventualities which later transpired, he would not have uttered it.

(13) Which becomes holy by his vow, and may therefore be absolved.

(14) Therefore he does not mention oath, for the transgression of which a sliding scale sacrifice is brought.

(15) For the transgression of the laws of uncleanness in connection with the Temple and holy food (Hor. 9a, b); but he admits that for transgressing an oath a prince also brings a sliding scale sacrifice.

(17) If he expressly states so in the oath.

(18) A trespass offering is brought even if the holy food from which he derived enjoyment was less than a ka-zayith.

(19) So that this is its legal minimum.

(20) The wilful transgression of an oath is punishable by stripes, but heleb, nothar, Day of Atonement, and eating holy food while unclean, are punishable by kareth.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 25a

We mean in the case of a sin offering.¹

Rabina said: The Tanna mentions only that which is applicable to foods, but an oath, which can take effect even on that which is not a food, he does not mention. But [he mentions] holy things, which are applicable also to wood and stone!² — Well then, he mentions only that which is applicable to that which has substance, but an oath, which can take effect also on that which has no substance, as, for example, 'I shall sleep', or, 'I shall not sleep.' he does not mention.³

MISHNAH. IT IS THE SAME [WHETHER HE SWEARS OF] THINGS CONCERNING HIMSELF, OR OF THINGS CONCERNING OTHERS, OR OF THINGS WHICH HAVE SUBSTANCE, OR OF THINGS WHICH HAVE NO SUBSTANCE. HOW SO? [IF] HE SAID, 'I SWEAR THAT I SHALL GIVE TO SO-AND-SO,'⁴ OR, 'I SHALL NOT GIVE;' 'I HAVE GIVEN,' OR 'I HAVE NOT GIVEN;' 'I SHALL SLEEP,'⁵ OR, 'I SHALL NOT SLEEP;' 'I HAVE SLEPT,' OR, 'I HAVE NOT SLEPT;' 'I SHALL THROW A PEBBLE IN THE SEA.'⁶ OR, 'I SHALL NOT THROW;' 'I HAVE THROWN,' OR, 'I HAVE NOT THROWN'; [HE IS LIABLE.] R. ISHMAEL SAYS, HE IS LIABLE ONLY FOR [AN OATH IN] THE FUTURE, FOR IT IS SAID: TO DO EVIL OR TO DO GOOD.⁷ R. AKIBA SAID TO HIM: IF SO,⁸ WE KNOW ONLY SUCH CASES WHERE DOING EVIL AND DOING GOOD ARE APPLICABLE; BUT HOW DO WE KNOW SUCH CASES WHERE DOING EVIL AND DOING GOOD ARE NOT APPLICABLE.? HE REPLIED TO HIM: FROM THE AMPLIFICATION OF THE VERSE.⁹ WHEREUPON HE SAID TO HIM: IF THE VERSE AMPLIFIES FOR THAT, IT AMPLIFIES FOR THIS ALSO.¹⁰

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: There is a greater restriction in vows than in oaths [in one respect]; and there is a greater restriction in oaths than in vows [in another respect] — The greater restriction in vows is that vows take effect on a precept as on an optional matter, which is not the case in oaths.¹¹ The greater restriction in oaths is that oaths take effect on a thing which has no substance as on a thing which has substance, which is not the case in vows.¹²

HOW SO? [IF] HE SAID, 'I SWEAR THAT I SHALL GIVE TO SO-AND-SO,' OR, 'I SHALL NOT GIVE.' What is meant by, 'I shall give'? Shall we say, charity to the poor? [For that] he already stands adjured from Mount Sinai, for it is said: Thou shalt surely give him.¹³ — It must therefore mean a gift to a rich man.

'I SHALL SLEEP,' OR, 'I SHALL NOT SLEEP.' This cannot be,¹⁴ for R. Johanan said: He who says, 'I shall not sleep three days,' is given stripes, and he may sleep immediately.¹⁵ — There, he said 'three'; here, he did not say 'three'.¹⁶

I SHALL THROW A PEBBLE IN THE SEA,' OR, 'I SHALL NOT THROW'. It was stated: [If a man says,] 'I swear that So-and-so threw a pebble in the sea,' or, 'that he did not throw,' Rab said, he is liable; and Samuel said, he is exempt. Rab said, he is liable, because it is applicable in both negative and positive [forms];¹⁷ and Samuel said, he is exempt, because it is not applicable in the future.¹⁸ Shall we say that they disagree on the same principle on which R. Ishmael and R. Akiba disagree? For we learnt: R. ISHMAEL SAYS, HE IS LIABLE ONLY FOR [AN OATH IN] THE FUTURE, FOR IT IS SAID: TO DO EVIL OR TO DO GOOD. R. AKIBA SAID TO HIM: IF SO, WE KNOW ONLY SUCH CASES WHERE DOING EVIL AND DOING GOOD ARE APPLICABLE; BUT HOW DO WE KNOW SUCH CASES WHERE DOING EVIL AND DOING GOOD ARE NOT APPLICABLE.? HE REPLIED TO HIM: FROM THE AMPLIFICATION OF THE VERSE. WHEREUPON HE SAID TO HIM: IF THE VERSE AMPLIFIED FOR THAT, IT

AMPLIFIED FOR THIS ALSO. [Shall we say that] Rab agrees with R. Akiba,¹⁹ and Samuel agrees with R. Ishmael?²⁰ — [No!] With reference to R. Ishmael's view they do not disagree; for since even in a case which is [possible of application] in the future,²¹ R. Ishmael does not make him liable for the past, obviously in a case which is not [possible of application] in the future,²² he most certainly [does not make him liable for the past]. But they disagree with reference to R. Akiba's view: Rab agrees with R. Akiba; and Samuel says, R. Akiba makes him liable there²³ for [an oath in] the past, because in a case which is [possible of application] in the future, R. Akiba makes him liable for the past, but in a case which is not [possible of application] in the future, he does not [make him liable for the past].

Shall we say that they disagree on the same principle on which

- (1) He mentions only those for which kareth is inflicted for wilful transgression, and therefore omits an oath, for which stripes are inflicted; all these are sins for which a sin offering is brought for unwitting transgression; but he mentions the case of a trespass offering, through for wilful transgression only stripes are inflicted.
- (2) A man may devote wood and stone for the Temple treasury.
- (3) Sleep is not tangible
- (4) This comes in the category of 'things concerning others'.
- (5) This comes in the category of 'things which have no substance'.
- (6) This also comes in the category of 'things which have no substance', in the sense that no useful purpose is served.
- (7) Lev. V, 4; this implies an oath to do something in the future.
- (8) If you take the verse literally.
- (9) Lev., V, 4: whatsoever it be that a man shall utter with an oath.
- (10) That an oath in the past is also punishable.
- (11) If he says, 'I vow that the sukkah which I make shall be prohibited to me,' it is prohibited, and he may not sit in it; but if he says: 'I swear that I shall not sit in the sukkah,' his oath cannot take effect; v. infra 27a; Ned. 16a, b.
- (12) A vow can take effect only on something tangible. If he says, 'I vow that I shall not sleep,' it has no effect; but if he says, 'I vow my eyes from sleep' (i.e., I condemn my eyes to sleeplessness), the vow takes effect on the eyes (which are tangible). The reason is that uttering a vow (usually expressed by konam) is akin to dedicating to the Temple (konam is a substitute for korban, an offering to the Temple); and just as the korban must be tangible, so must the konam be tangible.
- (13) Deut. XV, 10; and an oath to fulfil a mizwah cannot take effect; infra 27a.
- (14) 'I shall not sleep,' with no time limit imposed, implies 'I shall never sleep,' which is obviously an impossibility.
- (15) Because it is impossible to refrain from sleep for three days; therefore it is a vain oath (i.e., as soon as uttered, its falsity is apparent), and not שבועת בטוי.
- (16) He might therefore have meant a lesser period.
- (17) For Scripture says, to do evil or to do good (Lev. V, 4); to do evil, e.g., 'I shall not eat' = negative; to do good, e.g., 'I shall eat' = positive. An oath, to make the utterer liable, must therefore be applicable both negatively and positively.
- (18) 'I swear that So-and-so will throw (or, will not throw) a pebble in the sea;' this is merely a vain oath, and not an oath of utterance (שבועת בטוי), because he has no power to compel that person to carry out his oath; and because the oath is inapplicable in the future, it imposes no liability when uttered in the past.
- (19) That he is liable for an oath in the past also.
- (20) That he is liable only for an oath in the future. Now, since R. Akiba and R. Ishmael already disagree on this point, why do Rab and Samuel (who are amoraim) state their view's as if they were disagreeing on a new principle? Let Rab say that he agrees with R. Akiba, and Samuel that he agrees with R. Ishmael.
- (21) E.g., 'I shall eat,' or, 'I shall not eat.'
- (22) E.g., 'So-and-so will throw (or, will not throw) a pebble in the sea.'
- (23) In the Mishnah.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 25b

R. Judah b. Bathyra and the Rabbis disagree? For we learnt: If he swore to annul a precept, and did not annul it, he is exempt; to fulfil a precept, and did not fulfil it, he is exempt; though logically he should be liable [in the second case] as is the opinion of R. Judah b. Bathyra, [for] R. Judah b. Bathyra said: If, for an optional matter, for which he is not adjured from Mount Sinai, he is liable;¹ for a precept, for which he is adjured from Mount Sinai, he should most certainly be liable! — They replied to him: No! If you say that for an oath on an optional matter [he is liable], it is because [Scripture] has made negative equal to positive;² but how can you say that for an oath [to fulfil] a precept [he is liable], since [Scripture] in that case, has not made negative equal to positive?³ — Now, shall we say that Rab agrees with R. Judah b. Bathyra,⁴ and Samuel agrees with the Rabbis?⁵ — [No!] With reference to R. Judah b. Bathyra's view they do not disagree; since even negative and positive he does not require, will he require future and past?⁶ But they disagree as to the view of the Rabbis: Samuel agrees with the Rabbis, and Rab [says], the Rabbis do not make him liable [unless it is applicable] in both negative and positive [forms], for it is written distinctly: to do evil, or to do good; but for future and past, which is deduced [merely] from the amplification of the verse,⁷ they make him liable [even if the oath is not applicable in both future and past].⁸

R. Hammuna raised an objection: [We learnt: If a man says,] 'I did not eat today', or, 'I did not put of tefillin today.' 'I adjure you;' and he said, 'Amen!' he is liable.⁹ Granted, 'I did not eat' is applicable [in the future]: 'I shall not eat'; but 'I did not put on [tefillin]'- is this applicable [in the future]: 'I shall not put on tefillin'?¹⁰ — He himself put the question, and he himself answered it: The Mishnah means it disjunctively:¹¹ 'I did not eat', [he is liable] for an offering: 'I did not put on [tefillin]', he is liable] for stripes.¹²

Raba raised an objection [We learnt:] What is a vain oath? If he swore that which is contrary to the facts known to man, saying of a pillar of stone that it was of gold.¹³ And Ulla said: Provided that it was already known to three men [that it was of stone].¹⁴ Now, the reason [that he is liable for a vain oath] is because it is known [to three men that it is of stone], but if it were not known [to three men], he would be transgressing an oath of utterance.¹⁵ Why? It is not [applicable in the future: 'I swear] it will be of gold!'¹⁶ He himself put the question — and he himself answered it: If it is known, he transgresses a vain oath; if it is not known, he transgresses a false oath.¹⁷

Abaye said: Rab admits that he who says to his neighbour, 'I swear that I know some testimony for you,' and it was found that he did not know, is exempt, because it is not applicable [negatively]. 'I do not know any testimony for you.'¹⁸

[If a man says,] 'I did know [testimony for you]', or, 'I did not know;' [in this there is] disagreement [between Rab and Samuel].¹⁹ 'I bore witness [for you],' or, 'I did not bear witness': [in this there is also] disagreement [between them].²⁰

Granted, according to Samuel who says that in a case which is not applicable in the future he is not liable for the past, therefore the Divine Law removed the oath of testimony from the category of the oath of utterance;²¹ but, according to Rab, for what purpose did the Divine Law remove it?²² — The Rabbis said to Abaye: In order to make him liable for it twice.²³ He [however] replied to them: You cannot say [he is liable] twice, for it has been taught: [When he shall be guilty] in one of these things²⁴ — for one you make him liable, but you do not make him liable for two. Well then, according to Abaye, for what purpose did the Divine Law remove [the oath of testimony from the category of the oath of utterance in Rab's view]?²⁵ — [For this purpose:] It has been taught: In all of them it is said, and it was hidden [from him];²⁶ but here,²⁷ it is not said, and it was hidden; in order to make him liable²⁸ for wilful²⁹ as for unwitting [transgression]. The Rabbis said to Abaye: Say that for wilful transgression he is liable one;³⁰ for unwitting, two.³¹ — He replied to them: Is that not what I said: [it is written,] in one [of these things]²⁴ — for one you make him liable, but you do not make him liable for two; and if [it refers to] wilful transgression, are there, then, two?³²

Raba said: Because it was a matter included in a generalisation, and it was singled out [from the generalisation] in order to introduce an anomaly; therefore, you cannot add anything to this anomaly.³³ — This would imply that Abaye holds that the oath [of utterance] is still in existence.³⁴ But did not Abaye say: Rab admits that he who says to his neighbour, ‘I swear that I know some testimony for you,’ and it was found that he did not know, is exempt, because it is not applicable [negatively], ‘I do not know any testimony for you’!³⁵ — Abaye withdrew from that [statement].³⁶ Or, if you will, you may say,

(1) For not fulfilling his oath.

(2) If he swears not to do a certain action, he is liable if he does not fulfil his oath.

(3) If he swears not to fulfil a precept, he cannot carry out his oath; Mishnah infra 27a.

(4) Who does not require that an oath should be applicable in both positive and negative forms, and therefore does not require also that it should be applicable in both past and future forms.

(5) Just as the Rabbis, who oppose R. Judah, hold that it should be possible for an oath to be applied both positively and negatively, so they hold that it should be possible for it to be applied also for past and future; and when it is inapplicable in the future (e.g., ‘I swear So-and-so will throw a pebble’), it cannot be applied in the past (‘I swear So-and-so has thrown’).

(6) Rab and Samuel agree that R. Judah b. Bathyra does not require an oath to be applicable both in the past and the future, for he does not even require it to be applicable both positively and negatively, though Scripture states, to do evil or to do good, which implies negative and positive. He therefore certainly does not require the oath to be applicable in both past and future, for this proviso is not definitely stated in the Scriptures.

(8) Rab, therefore, in accordance with his interpretation of the view of the Rabbis, makes him liable in the case of ‘I swear So-and-so has thrown a pebble in the sea,’ though it is inapplicable in the future.

(9) A second person said to the first, ‘I want you to swear that you did not eat, or did not put on tefillin,’ and the first replied, ‘Amen;’ but he had eaten, or had put on tefillin, he is liable for breaking his oath; for ‘Amen’ in response to an adjuration is equivalent to uttering an oath; Mishnah infra 29b.

(10) This is swearing to annul a precept, for which he is not liable. According to the Rabbis (in Samuel's interpretation), if an oath is not applicable in the future he is not liable for it even in the past; then why is he liable for ‘I have not put on tefillin’?

(11) They are two distinct statements.

(12) Fictitiously uttering a false oath, but he is not liable for an offering, if he unwittingly uttered this false oath, because it is inapplicable in the future.

(14) If a fact is known to at least three men, it is accepted as well established.

(15) שבועת בטוי; if it is known to less than three men, his oath is not contrary to the fact known to men (i.e., universally known); and is therefore not a vain oath (the falsity of which is evident to all immediately).

(16) And therefore, according to the Rabbis (in Samuel's interpretation), he should not be liable for it even in the past.

(17) Which need not be applicable in the future to make him liable. It is only in the case of שבועת בטוי that the oath must be applicable both for positive and negative and (according to Samuel) also for past and future.

(18) For Rab agrees that though it is not necessary for an oath to be applicable for both future and past, it must be applicable for negative and positive. If he swears, ‘I did not know any testimony for you,’ and it was found that he did know, he is not liable for שבועת בטוי, but for שבועת העדות, for refusing to bear witness for his neighbour; and for this he is liable only if he swears falsely before the Beth din; infra 30a.

(19) According to Rab he is liable, because it is applicable positively and negatively; but according to Samuel he is exempt; because it is not applicable in the future: ‘I swear I shall know (or, shall not know) testimony for you,’ for it is outside his control; v. Maharsha, a.l.

(20) Because it is inapplicable in the future: ‘I swear I shall (or, shall not) bear witness’ is an oath to fulfil (or, annul) a precept, for which he is exempt.

(21) And expressed it clearly in a separate verse (Lev. V, 1); because the oath of testimony, since it is inapplicable in the future (and yet imposes liability), could not be deduced from the oath of utterance (ibid. 4), which does not impose liability in the past in a case where the future is inapplicable.

(22) From the category of the oath of utterance, since, according to Rab, he is liable for an oath even if it is not applicable in the future.

(23) If he is eligible as a witness, and swore before the Beth din that he did not know any testimony, he is liable both for the oath of testimony and oath of utterance.

(24) Lev. V, 5.

(26) Lev. V, 2, 3, 4; with reference to the laws of uncleanness, and the oath of utterance.

(27) Lev. V, 1; with reference to the oath of testimony.

(28) A sliding scale sacrifice.

(29) In which case there is no sacrifice for the transgression of the oath of utterance, but he brings a sacrifice for the wilful transgression of the oath of testimony.

(30) Sliding scale sacrifice for the oath of testimony.

(31) One for the oath of testimony, and one for the oath of utterance.

(32) The verse, in distinctly limiting liability to one offering, must refer to unwitting transgression (where two offerings are possible), and not to wilful transgression, for here, two are not possible, and there is no need for Scripture's limitation.

(33) Lit., 'You have therein only its anomaly.' Raba maintains that it is not necessary to deduce from the phrase, in one of these things that he is liable for only one offering; without this phrase we know it, for the oath of testimony was included in the oath of utterance (for it is also an utterance); but Scripture singled it out from this generalisation in order to teach us that he is liable to bring an offering even for wilful transgression; therefore, since this is exceptional, we cannot make it more exceptional still by declaring him liable to bring two offerings in certain circumstances.

(34) Abaye holds that the oath of testimony is still an oath of utterance also, for he requires the limitation (in one of these things) to deduce that only one offering is brought. According to him, therefore, in a case where the oath of testimony would not apply (e.g., an ineligible witness), he would be liable on account of the oath of utterance.

(35) The oath of testimony, therefore, cannot create liability on account of its being also an oath of utterance, because it is inapplicable negatively. But if Abaye holds that the oath of testimony is also an oath of utterance, it is possible to find a case where it is applicable negatively, e.g., one who is ineligible as a witness. In such a case, if he says: 'I swear I know some testimony for you', he should be liable on account of the oath of utterance, for it is applicable negatively: 'I swear I do not know any testimony for you;' and if he does know, he should bring an offering for transgressing the oath of utterance (for the oath of testimony does not apply at all, since he is ineligible as a witness).

(36) I.e., changed his opinion, and does not now hold that 'Rab admits that he who says, etc.'

one of them was stated by R. Papa.¹

R. ISHMAEL SAYS, HE IS LIABLE ONLY FOR [AN OATH IN] THE FUTURE. Our Rabbis taught: To do evil, or to do good.² [From this] we know only such cases where doing evil and doing good are applicable; but how do we know such cases where doing evil and doing good are not applicable? Because it is said, Or if anyone swear clearly with his lips.³ [From this] we know only [oaths in] the future;⁴ how do we know [oaths in] the past? Because it is said: Whatsoever it be that a man shall utter clearly, with an oath.⁵ This is the opinion of R. Akiba. R. Ishmael says: To do evil, or to do good implies the future. R. Akiba said to him: If so, we know only such cases where doing evil and doing good are applicable; how do we know such cases where doing evil and doing good are not applicable? He replied to him: From the amplification of the verse.⁶ Whereupon he said to him: If the verse amplified for that,⁷ it amplified for this also.⁸ Well did R. Akiba reply to R. Ishmael!⁹ — R. Johanan said: R. Ishmael who ministered to¹⁰ R. Nehunia b. Hakanah, who expounded the whole Torah on the principle of generalisation and specification, also expounded it on the principle of generalisation and specification; R. Akiba who ministered to Nahum of Gamzu,¹¹ who expounded the whole Torah on the principle of amplification and limitation, also expounded it on the principle of amplification and limitation.

How does R. Akiba expound it on the principle of amplifications and limitations? It has been taught: Or if any one swear [clearly with his lips — this amplifies;¹² to do evil, or to do good — this limits;¹³ whatsoever it be that a man shall utter clearly [with an oath] — this again amplifies: because it amplifies, limits, and amplifies, it includes all;¹⁴ what does it include? It includes all things. What does it exclude? It excludes a precept.¹⁵ And R. Ishmael expounds it on the principle of generalisation and specification: or if any one swear clearly with his lips — this generalises; to do evil or to do good this specifies; whatsoever it be that a man shall utter clearly [with an oath] — this again generalises: because it generalises, specifies, and generalises, you may include in the generalisation only [those oaths which are] similar to the specification: just as the specification is clearly in the future, so all [oaths] in the future [may be included]; the generalisation helping to include even cases where doing evil and doing good are not applicable [as long as they are oaths] in the future; and the specification helping to exclude even cases where doing evil and doing good are applicable [if they are oaths] in the past. Let me reverse it!¹⁶ — R. Isaac said: [We include only oaths] similar to [the oath] to do evil, or to do good, where the prohibition is on account of he shall not break his word,¹⁷ but exclude this [oath] where the prohibition is not on account of he shall not break his word, but on account of ye shall not lie.¹⁸ R. Isaac b. Abin said: Scripture says, Or if any one swear clearly with his lips: the oath must precede the utterance, and not the utterance precede the oath;¹⁹ this excludes ‘I ate’, or, ‘I did not eat,’ where the action precedes the oath.

Our Rabbis taught: [Whatsoever it be that] a man [shall utter clearly] with an oath²⁰ — this excludes [a false oath by] accident; and it be hid — this excludes wilful [transgression of oath]; from him — [this implies that] the oath was hidden from him.²¹ I might think that [even] if the thing be hidden from him [he should be liable], therefore it is said: . . . with an oath, and it be hid . . . for the unawareness of the oath he is liable, and he is not liable for the unawareness of the thing.²² The Master said: ‘. . . a man . . . with an oath — this excludes [a false oath by] accident’. How is this? As the case of R. Kahana and R. Assi: when they rose from [the lecture of] Rab, one said, ‘I swear that thus said Rab,’ and the other said, ‘I swear that thus said Rab.’ When they came [again] before Rab, he would agree with one of them; then the other would say to him, ‘Did I, then, swear falsely?’ He would reply to him, ‘Your heart deceived you.’²³

‘And it be hid from him — [this implies that] the oath was hidden from him. I might think that [even] if the thing be hidden from him [he should be liable], therefore it is said: . . . with an oath, and it be hid . . . for the unawareness of the oath he is liable, and he is not liable for the unawareness of the thing.’ They laughed at this in the West.²⁴ Granted, [unawareness of] oath is possible without [unawareness of] thing; for example, if he said, ‘I swear I shall not eat wheat bread,’ and he thought he had said, ‘I shall eat,’ his oath he forgot, and the thing he remembered. But [unawareness of] thing without [unawareness of] oath — how is that possible? If for example, he said, ‘I swear I shall not eat wheat bread,’ and he thought he had said ‘barley [bread],’ his oath he remembered,²⁵ and the thing he forgot. — Since he forgot the thing, it is [automatically] unawareness of oath!²⁶ — Well then, said R. Eleazar, this and that are one.²⁷

R. Joseph demurred: This means that [unawareness of] thing without [unawareness of] oath is by no means possible? But surely it is possible; for example, if he said, ‘I swear I shall not eat wheat bread,’ and he stretched out his hand to the basket to take barley bread, but wheat [bread] came to his hand, and he, thinking it was barley [bread], ate it: now, his oath he remembered, but it was the thing that he did not know!²⁸ — Abaye said to him: But do you not make him liable for an offering for that which he holds in his hand? It is, therefore, unawareness of oath.²⁹ Another version: Abaye said to R. Joseph: In any case, he should bring an offering for this bread, for it is unawareness of oath. And R. Joseph? — He may reply to you: Since, if he had known that this was wheat, he would have refrained from [eating] it, it is unawareness of thing.

Raba enquired of R. Nahman: If there was unawareness of both, what is the ruling? — He said to him: Since there is unawareness of oath, he is liable. On the contrary, since there is unawareness of thing, he should be exempt! — R. Ashi said: We observe, if because of the oath he refrains,³⁰ it is [a case of] unawareness of oath, and he is liable; and if because of the thing he refrains,³¹ it is [a case of] unawareness of thing, and he is exempt. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Does he then refrain because of the oath unless it be also because of the thing, and does he refrain because of the thing unless it be also because of the oath?³² There is really no difference.³³

Raba enquired of R. Nahman:

(1) Who was a disciple of Abaye and Raba. His disciples, in turn, were sometimes not sure whether a statement of his was intended to be his own view or the view of Abaye (or Raba). One of the two statements (which cannot be reconciled with each other) attributed here to Abaye is, in reality, the opinion of R. Papa, his successor.

(2) Lev. V, 4.

(3) Ibid.; apparently any oath.

(4) If any one swear . . . to do evil, or to do good, implies swearing to do something in the future.

(5) Lev. V, 4, whatsoever it be, i.e., even an oath in the past.

(6) Whatsoever it be, etc.

(7) Cases where doing evil and doing good are not applicable.

(8) Oaths in the past.

(9) Why does not R. Ishmael agree with him?

(10) Was a disciple of.

(11) A village in south-western Judea; v. Ta'an. 21a; he was called אִישׁ גַּם זֶה, because, whatever evil befell him, he said, גַּם זֶה לְטוֹבָה 'this also is for the best'.

(12) All kinds of oaths.

(14) V. p. 12, n. 3.

(15) Swearing to fulfil or annul a precept; infra 27a.

(16) Since the generalisation tends to include, and the specifications to exclude, let us include even oaths in the past which are similar to the specification in that doing evil and doing good are applicable; and exclude even oaths in the future where doing evil and doing good are not applicable.

(17) Num. XXX, 3; this implies that he may keep his word if he wishes, which is possible only in an oath in the future.

(18) Lev. XIX, 11, this implies that at the moment of utterance the oath must not be a lie; this can refer only to an oath in the past.

(19) Lit., 'if any one swear to utter with the lips:' the swearing must precede the utterance, i.e., the action to which the utterance refers; but if the action to which the utterance refers has already preceded the swearing (= oath in the past), the oath is excluded.

(20) Lev. V, 4; הָאָדָם בְּשִׁבוּעָה; at the time of the oath he must be a man, i.e., have all his faculties, but if he swears falsely by accident (thinking it is the truth), he is exempt.

(21) Whatsoever . . . a man shall utter with an oath, and it be hid from him; i.e., the oath be hid from him; he forgot, when doing the action, that he had sworn not to do it.

(22) E.g., 'I swear I shall not eat wheat bread,' and he took a loaf which he thought was of barley (but which was really of wheat), and ate it, he is not liable to bring an offering, because it is a case of unawareness of thing (and awareness of oath).

(23) You thought you were swearing the truth; it is a false oath by accident.

(24) In Palestine; v. Sanh. 17b.

(25) He remembered that it was: 'I shall not eat,' but forgot which thing it was he was not to eat.

(26) For the oath was: 'I shall not eat wheat bread,' and if he forgot 'wheat bread,' he forgot an integral part of the oath.

(27) Unawareness of oath and unawareness of thing are the same; unawareness of thing is not possible without unawareness of oath.

(28) He remembered the oath completely, but mistook the object: this then might be the unawareness of thing by itself which is excluded in the Baraita.

(29) He thought that what he held in his hand was barley bread, and therefore he thought that he had not sworn for what he held in his hand; but, in reality, he had sworn not to eat it, for it was wheat bread; he was, therefore, unaware of the oath with reference to this loaf: hence, it is unawareness of oath.

(30) He is reminded, for example, that he has sworn not to eat wheat bread (and the fact that this loaf is wheat bread is not mentioned to him), and he immediately refrains from eating this loaf; he thus refrains because of the oath. He had already, however, eaten a ka-zayith, before he was reminded, and he is therefore liable to bring an offering, because it is a case of unawareness of oath.

(31) He is reminded that this is wheat bread (and the fact that he has sworn is not mentioned to him), and he refrains from continuing to eat it.

(32) When he is reminded of one of the facts (that he has sworn, or that this is wheat bread), he refrains from eating, because he immediately recollects the other fact. If he did not recollect the other fact, he would not refrain, for the fact that he had sworn not to eat wheat bread would not matter if this loaf were not wheat, and the fact that this loaf is wheat would not matter if he had not sworn not to eat it.

(33) And he is exempt; for he is liable only for unawareness of oath by itself; v. supra 19a for similar discussion.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 26b

What is unwitting transgression of oath of utterance in the past?¹ If he knew,² it is wilful transgression; if he did not know, it is accidental transgression? — He replied to him: [It is possible in the case of] one who says, 'I know that this oath is prohibited, but I do not know whether one is liable to bring an offering for it or not.'³ According to whom will this be? According to Monobaz, who holds that ignorance of [liability for] an offering is termed ignorance!⁴ — You may [however] say that it will be even in accordance with the view of the Rabbis;⁵ for the Rabbis disagree with Monobaz only in the rest of the Torah where there is no innovation,⁶ but here where there is an innovation — for in the whole Torah we do not find that [the unwitting transgression of] a negative precept [for the wilful transgression of which kareth is not inflicted] should make him liable for an offering, for we deduce it from the ruling concerning idolatry;⁷ yet here, it does make him liable to bring [an offering] even the Sages admit.⁸

Rabina enquired of Raba: If he swore concerning a loaf [not to eat it], and he was dangerously ill on account of [not being able to eat] it, what is the ruling? — If he is dangerously ill, [of course] you may permit it to him!⁹ Well then, if he is distressed,¹⁰ and he ate it, unwittingly transgressing the oath, what is the ruling?¹¹ — He said to him, it has been taught: He who would turn back if he knew¹² brings an offering for his unwitting transgression; he who would not turn back if he knew, does not bring an offering for his unwitting transgression.¹³

Samuel said: If he decided in his mind,¹⁴ he must utter it with his lips,¹⁵ for it is said: to utter with the lips.¹⁶ An objection was raised: with the lips, but not in the mind. If he decided in his mind, how do we know [that he is liable]? Because it is said: whatsoever it be that a man shall utter clearly with an oath.¹⁶ This itself is contradictory! You say, with the lips, but not in the mind; and then you say, if he decided in his mind, how do we know [that he is liable]? — R. Shesheth said: This is no question; thus he means: with the lips, but not if he decided in his mind to utter it with his lips, and did not utter it.¹⁷ If he decided in his mind, simply,¹⁸ how do we know [that he is liable]? Because it is said: whatsoever it be that a man shall utter clearly. But against Samuel the question remains!¹⁹ — R. Shesheth said: Answer it thus: with the lips, but not if he decided in his mind to utter 'wheat bread', and he uttered 'barley bread'.²⁰ If he decided in his mind to utter 'wheat bread', and he uttered 'bread' simply, how do we know [that he is liable]?²¹ Because it is said: whatsoever it be that a man shall utter clearly.²²

An objection was raised: That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt observe and do;²³ from this we know only, if he uttered it with his lips; if he decided in his mind, how do we know [that he must keep his promise]? Because it is said: all who were willing-hearted [brought . . . an offering of gold unto the Lord].²⁴ — There it is different, because it is written: all who were willing-hearted.²⁵ But let us deduce from it.²⁶ — [No!] because [tabernacle] offerings and holy things are 'two verses which come as one';²⁷ and all [cases of] 'two verses which come as one' do not teach [for other cases].²⁸ — That is well, according to the one who holds that 'they do not teach'; but according to the one who holds that 'they do teach', what shall we say?²⁹ — This is hullin, and [the others are] holy things; and hullin we cannot deduce from holy things.³⁰

- (1) Since it has been deduced (from האדם בשבועה, supra) that if he swears falsely, thinking it is the truth, it is termed accidental transgression, and he is exempt; how is unwittingly transgression (for which he is liable) possible?
- (2) At the time of the oath that he was swearing falsely.
- (3) Although it is wilful transgression, it is counted as unwitting, because he did not know that he was liable for an offering.
- (4) Shab. 69a; and because of this his wilful transgression of the oath is counted as unwitting transgression.
- (5) Who hold that ignorance of liability for an offering does not make the transgression unwitting.
- (6) Normally, when kareth is inflicted for wilful transgression, an offering is brought for unwitting transgression; it is an innovation in the Torah, in the case of oaths, to make him liable for an offering for unwitting transgression, when for wilful transgression the punishment is merely stripes.
- (7) Shab. 68b, 69a; Scripture says: And if ye err, and do not observe all these commandments . . . (Num. XV, 22); this refers to idolatry (Hor. 8a); an offering is brought for unwitting transgression (verse 27); ye shall have one law for him that doeth aught in error (verse 29): this implies that one law, the same law, applies both to idolatry and to other sins; in idolatry, wilful transgression is punished by kareth: but the soul that doeth aught with a high hand (i.e., wilfully) . . . shall be cut off (verse 30); therefore all sins, for the wilful transgression of which kareth is inflicted, are punished by the bringing of an offering for unwitting transgression.
- (8) That ignorance of liability for an offering is counted as ignorance, and he brings an offering.
- (9) In the case of dangerous illness (סכנה) a commandment may be transgressed; even the Sabbath may be desecrated; v. Bez. 22a.
- (10) Not dangerously ill, but sufficiently distressed to have eaten it, even if he had remembered his oath.
- (11) Does he bring an offering, since he transgressed the oath unwittingly: or, since he was prepared to transgress it wilfully, does he not bring an offering?
- (12) I.e., he would not transgress wilfully.
- (13) V. Hor. 20a; in the present instance, since he would have eaten the loaf, even if he had remembered his oath, he does not bring an offering for eating it when he forgot the oath, for it is not absolutely unwitting transgression; it is almost (though not quite) like wilful transgression; and though stripes are not inflicted, for it is not actually wilful transgression, yet he is not allowed to bring an offering (which would serve to cleanse him from his sin): it is not a sufficiently heavy punishment for his sin.
- (14) To swear a certain oath.
- (15) Otherwise it is no oath, and he is not liable.
- (16) Lev. V, 4.
- (17) He decided it should not be an oath unless he uttered it.
- (18) That it should be an oath without uttering it.
- (19) For Samuel said: If he decided in his mind, he must utter it with his lips; apparently it is not counted an oath unless it is uttered. Samuel's statement cannot be explained in the same way as R. Shesheth explains the Baraita, because Samuel, being an amora, should have explained it clearly himself, had he intended it thus; v. Tosaf. a.l.
- (20) It is no oath; and he is exempt if he eats wheat bread, because he did not utter it; and he is exempt if he eats barley bread, because he had not intended it in his mind; v. R. Han. a.l.
- (21) If he eats wheat bread, since his uttered oath does not at least conflict with his intended oath.
- (22) Even if he does not utter his complete intention. And Samuel also means this: If he decided in his mind, he must utter it with his lips, i.e., he must utter at least the main portion of his oath (e.g., 'bread', and not necessarily 'wheat bread'); but if he does not utter it with his lips, it is no oath: an oath in the mind is not an oath.
- (23) Deut. XXIII, 24; promising to bring free-will offering.
- (24) Ex. XXXV, 22; hence, the willing-hearted (those who had only made up their hearts or minds to bring) fulfilled their promise. Why then, does Samuel say, in the case of an oath, that it must be uttered with the lips in order to make him liable?
- (25) But in the case of oaths the expression willing-hearted is not used.

(26) That in the case of an oath also the intention of the mind should be sufficient.

(27) i.e., teach the same thing. In the case of the Tabernacle offerings the phrase willing-hearted is used, and in the case of holy things (when Hezekiah re-consecrated the Temple, and the people brought free-will offerings: 2 Chron. XXIX, 31) the phrase willing-hearted is used. When the same phrase (or, rule) is used in the case of two things, the implications is that only in these two things is this phrase (or, rule) applicable, and in no other, for, if Holy Writ had desired other cases to be the same, then the phrase would have been used only in one case, and all others could have been deduced from it: the fact that it is used in two cases implies that it is limited to these two, and that no others are to be deduced from them.

(28) I.e., we cannot deduce other cases from them.

(29) One authority (R. Judah; v, Kid. 35a) holds that from two similar cases we can deduce for others; and that only when there are three similar cases we cannot deduce others from them. According to him, let us deduce from these two cases the case of oaths that intention should suffice.

(30) Tabernacle offerings and Temple offerings are holy things; and we cannot deduce the case of oaths (which are hullin, dealing with ordinary, unconsecrated objects) from that which obtains in connection with holy things: the law with reference to holy things may be stricter.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 27a

MISHNAH. IF HE SWORE TO ANNUL A PRECEPT, AND DID NOT ANNUL IT, HE IS EXEMPT; TO FULFIL [A PRECEPT], AND DID NOT FULFIL IT, HE IS EXEMPT; THOUGH LOGICALLY [IN THE SECOND INSTANCE] HE SHOULD HAVE BEEN LIABLE, AS IS THE OPINION OF R. JUDAH B. BATHYRA: [FOR] R. JUDAH B. BATHYRA SAID: NOW, IF FOR AN OPTIONAL MATTER, FOR WHICH HE IS NOT ADJURED FROM MOUNT SINAI, HE IS LIABLE;¹ FOR A PRECEPT, FOR WHICH HE IS ADJURED FROM MOUNT SINAI, HE SHOULD MOST CERTAINLY BE LIABLE!² THEY REPLIED TO HIM: NO! IF YOU SAY THAT FOR AN OATH IN AN OPTIONAL MATTER [HE IS LIABLE]. IT IS BECAUSE [SCRIPTURE] HAS IN THAT CASE MADE NEGATIVE EQUAL TO POSITIVE [FOR LIABILITY];³ BUT HOW CAN YOU SAY THAT FOR AN OATH [TO FULFIL] A PRECEPT [HE IS LIABLE], SINCE [SCRIPTURE] HAS NOT IN THAT CASE MADE NEGATIVE EQUAL TO POSITIVE, FOR IF HE SWORE TO ANNUL [A PRECEPT], AND DID NOT ANNUL IT, HE IS EXEMPT!⁴ GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: I might think that if he swore to annul a precept, and did not annul it, he should be liable,⁵ therefore it is said: to do evil, or to do good; just as doing good is optional,⁶ so doing evil must be optional;⁷ I must therefore exclude: if he swore to annul a precept, and did not annul it; for which he is exempt. I might think that if he swore to fulfil a precept, and did not fulfil it, he should be liable, therefore it is said: to do evil, or to do good; just as doing evil is optional, so doing good must be optional; I must therefore exclude: if he swore to fulfil a precept, and did not fulfil it; for which he is exempt.⁸

I might think that if he swore to do evil to himself, and did not do so, that he should be exempt, therefore it is said: to do evil, or to do good; just as doing good is optional, so doing evil must be optional; I will therefore include: if he swore to do evil to himself, and did not do so, [that he is liable,] for the option is in his own hands.⁹ I might think that if he swore to do evil to others, and did not do so, that he should be liable, therefore it is said: to do evil, or to do good; just as doing good is optional, so doing evil must be optional. I will therefore exclude: if he swore to do evil to others, and did not do so, [that he is exempt], for the option is not in his hands. Whence do we know to include [an oath] to do good to others?¹⁰ Because it is said: or¹¹ to do good. And what is doing evil to others? 'I shall smite So-and-so, and crack his brain.'

But how do we know that the verses refer to optional matters, perhaps they refer [also] to matters relating to precepts?¹² — That cannot enter our minds, for we require that doing good shall be similar to doing evil, and that doing evil shall be similar to doing good; for [the verse] likens doing evil to doing good: just as doing good cannot refer to the annulling of a precept,¹³ so doing evil cannot refer to the annulling of a precept;¹⁴ [so that this] doing evil is actually doing good!¹⁵ And it likens doing good to doing evil; just as doing evil cannot refer to the fulfilling of a precept,¹⁶ so doing good cannot refer to the fulfilling of a precept;¹⁷ [so that this] doing good is actually doing evil!¹⁸ If so, even in an optional matter it is not possible!¹⁹ — Well then since [the word] ‘or’ is necessary in order to include doing good to others,²⁰ we deduce that the verses refer to optional matters, for if it should enter your mind that they refer to matters relating to precepts [we would not require the word ‘or’ to include doing good to others for], since doing evil to others is included,²¹ doing good is certainly [included]!

But this [word] ‘or’ is necessary to separate [the phrases]?²² — To separate them the word is not necessary.²³ That is so, according to R. Jonathan, but according to R. Josiah, what is to be said? For it has been taught: A man who curseth his father or his mother [shall surely be put to death];²⁴ from this we know only [if he curses] his father and his mother;²⁵ [if he curses] his father and not his mother, or his mother and not his father, how do we know [that he is liable]? Because it is [also] said: His father or his mother he hath cursed;²⁶ his father he hath cursed, his mother he hath cursed.²⁷ This is the opinion of R. Josiah. R. Jonathan said: It may imply both together, and it may also imply each one alone

- (1) If he swears to do it, and does not.
 - (2) If he swears to fulfil it, and does not.
 - (3) If he swears to do evil (e.g., not to eat) or, to do good (e.g., to eat), and breaks his oath, he is liable in either case.
 - (4) Annulling a precept being counted negative; and fulfilling, positive. If there is no liability for not fulfilling the negative oath, there is no liability for not fulfilling the positive oath.
 - (5) For it comes under the category of to do evil.
 - (6) It is explained below why the expression to do evil, or to do good is taken to refer to optional matters, and not to annulling (to do evil) or fulfilling (to do good) a precept.
 - (7) The oath to do evil must refer to that which is purely optional (e.g., not to eat), but not to the annulling of a precept (e.g., to eat on the Day of Atonement) which is not optional.
 - (8) For, fulfilling a precept is obligatory, and not optional.
 - (9) A man may do an injury to himself; v. B. K. 91b.
 - (10) That if he swore to do good to others, and did not fulfil his oath, he is liable.
 - (11) וְ is superfluous, for the verse could have said לֹא תֵעָשֶׂה וְלֹא תֵעָשֶׂה (vav has the meaning also of ‘or’).
 - (12) Doing good will mean complete good, i.e., to body and soul; e.g., to eat (= good for the body) mazzah on Passover (= good for the soul, in fulfilling the precept); and doing evil will mean complete evil, i.e., to body and soul; e.g., not to eat (= evil for the body) mazzah on Passover (= evil for the soul, in annulling the precept); v. Tosaf. a.l. and Maharsha.
 - (13) E.g., ‘I shall eat (= doing good) hamez on passover’ (= annulling a precept), for this is not a complete good. It must refer, therefore, to the fulfilling of a precept, e.g., ‘I shall eat mazzah on Passover’.
 - (14) E.g., ‘I shall not eat (= doing evil) mazzah on Passover’ (= annulling a precept), but must refer to the fulfilling of a precept, e.g., ‘I shall not eat hamez on passover’.
 - (15) ‘I shall not eat hamez on Passover’ is doing good, for though the first part (‘I shall not eat’) is evil for the body, the oath is good for the soul, and that is the main factor (v. Maharsha). If the verse, then, is concerned with the fulfilling and annulling of precepts, why is this clause (doing evil) mentioned, since it is actually doing good, and that has already been mentioned?
 - (16) E.g., ‘I shall not eat (= doing evil) hamez on Passover’ (= fulfilling a precept); for this is not doing evil so far as the precept is concerned (which is the main factor). It must therefore refer to the annulling of a precept, e.g., ‘I shall not eat mazzah on Passover.’
 - (17) E.g., ‘I shall eat (= doing good) mazzah on Passover’ (= fulfilling a precept); but must refer to the annulling of a precept, e.g., ‘I shall eat hamez on Passover.’ Hence this doing good (‘I shall eat’) is actually doing evil from the point of view of the precept; then why is this clause written, since doing evil is already mentioned?
 - (18) Hence, we must say that the verse is not concerned with precepts, but with optional matters, i.e., doing good or evil simply to the body in matters not affecting the soul.
 - (19) According to your reasoning the verse cannot refer to optional matters either; for, we may say, the verse likens doing evil to doing good: just as doing good ('I shall eat') means a complete good, and not, e.g., 'I shall eat poison' (for that is not doing good), but means e.g., 'I shall eat bread,' where the result is beneficial; so doing evil ('I shall not eat') must have a beneficial result, e.g., 'I shall not eat poison.' but this doing evil is actually doing good: and that has already been mentioned. Similarly, the verse likens doing good to doing evil: just as doing evil ('I shall not eat') does not refer to injurious foods (for that is not doing evil) but to beneficial foods, so that the result is injurious; so doing good ('I shall eat') must refer to that which is injurious ('I shall eat poison') so that the result is injurious; hence this doing good is actually doing evil; and this has already been mentioned; why does the verse mention it again?

(21) For if he they refer to precepts, doing evil means annulling a precept, and this includes doing evil to another (for, injuring another is prohibited); and if he is liable for breaking his oath to injure another, he is certainly liable for breaking his oath to benefit another.

(22) To do evil, or to do good; without 'or' we might have assumed that he is liable only if he swears both to do evil and to do good. Since 'or' is necessary, it cannot be said to be superfluous in order to include doing good to others.

(23) Vav is also disjunctive, and וְלֹהֵיטִיב (instead of או) could have been written.

(24) Lev. XX, 9.

(25) For the verse has: אֶת אָבִיו וְאֶת אִמּוֹ (not או אִמּוֹ).

(26) Lev. XX, 9.

(27) Though the verse has: אֶת אָבִיו וְאִמּוֹ (not או), we deduce that it means either father or mother; for in the first half of the verse the verb is contiguous to father (... יִקְלַף אֶת אָבִיו ...), and in the second half it is contiguous to mother (... וְאִמּוֹ קִלְפֵּי ...).

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 27b

unless the verse clearly specifies together.¹ [According to R. Josiah, then, how do we know that the verse concerning oaths refers to optional matters?]² — You may say that it will be even in accordance with the view of R. Josiah.³ He agrees with R. Akiba who expounds [the verse on the principle of] amplification and limitation; so that, granted if you say the verse refers to optional matters, it may exclude a precept; but if you say it refers [also] to precepts, what can it exclude?⁴

R. JUDAH B. BATHYRA SAID: NOW, IF FOR AN OPTIONAL MATTER, etc. Well did the Rabbis reply to R. Judah b. Bathyra.⁵ And R. Judah b. Bathyra? He may reply to you: Is there not [the case of] doing good to others, which, though it is not applicable [negatively] in doing evil to others, is yet included by the Divine Law? Similarly, therefore, in [the case of] fulfilling a precept, though it is not applicable [negatively] in annulling a precept, it may be included by the Divine Law. And the Rabbis? — There⁶ it is applicable [negatively in such a case as], 'I shall not do good [to others];'⁷ but here,⁸ is it applicable [negatively] in, 'I shall not fulfil [the precept]'?

MISHNAH. 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT THIS LOAF;' 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT IT;' 'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT IT;' AND HE ATE IT, HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE. THIS IS THE OATH OF UTTERANCE, FOR WHICH ONE IS LIABLE, FOR ITS WILFUL TRANSGRESSION, STRIPES; AND FOR ITS UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION, A SLIDING SCALE SACRIFICE. FOR A VAIN OATH ONE IS LIABLE FOR WILFUL TRANSGRESSION, STRIPES; AND FOR UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION ONE IS EXEMPT.

GEMARA. Why does he state: I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT [THIS LOAF]; I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT IT?⁹ — This he teaches us: The reason is because he said, '[I swear] I shall not eat;' then he said, '[I swear] I shall not eat it,' therefore he is liable only once;¹⁰ but if he said, '[I swear] I shall not eat it;' and then he said, '[I swear] I shall not eat,' he is liable twice;¹¹ as is Raba's view, for Raba said: [If he said,] 'I swear I shall not eat this loaf,' as soon as he ate a ka-zayith of it, he is liable;¹² [but if he said, 'I swear] I shall not eat it,' he is not liable until he eats it all.¹³ is this further [oath] necessary?¹⁴ — This he teaches us: that there is no liability,¹⁵ but the oath remains, so that if room is found,¹⁶ it takes effect. For what practical purpose?¹⁷ — For that which Raba said, for Raba said: If he obtained absolution¹⁸ from the first, the second takes effect in its place.¹⁹

'I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT IT,' AND HE ATE IT, HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE, etc. Why

Shall we say that [the following] supports him? [For it has been taught:] He who vowed two vows of naziriteship,²⁰ and counted the first, and set apart the offering for it,²¹ and then obtained absolution from the first — then the second [vow] takes the place of the first!²² — How now!²³ There the [second vow of] naziriteship is at least in existence, so that when he would have finished counting for the first, he would have had to begin counting for the second, even if there had been no absolution; but here, would the second oath have any existence at all [were it not for the absolution from the first]?²⁴

Raba said: If he swore concerning a loaf,²⁵ and was eating it; then, if he left a ka-zayith of it, he may obtain absolution from it;²⁶ but if he has eaten it all, he cannot obtain absolution from it. Said R. Aha the son of Raba to R. Ashi: How is this? If he said, 'I shall not eat,' then from the first ka-zayith he has already transgressed the prohibition?²⁷ And if he said: 'I shall not eat it', then why mention ka-zayith,

(1) From the first half of the verse we know that each one separately is intended; for when Scripture intends the vav as a conjunction the word together (וְיחדוּ) is added; e.g., Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together (Deut. XX, 10). The second half of the verse is, according to R. Jonathan, not necessary for the deduction that each one separately is intended, and is utilised by him for another deduction (cursing after death; v. Sanh. 85b).

(2) According to R. Jonathan, vav may be disjunctive, and וְ is not necessary (in לְהַרְעוּ אִם לְהַיְטִיב) to separate the phrases, so that it may be utilised, because it is superfluous, to include doing good to others; hence, because we require to deduce that doing good to others is included, it follows that the verse refers to optional matters (v. supra). But according to R. Josiah, וְ is necessary to separate the phrases, for vav is conjunctive; so that we cannot deduce the inclusion of doing good to others from וְ; how, then, do we know that the verse refers to optional matters?

(3) That the verse refers to optional matters.

(4) For, on the principle of amplification and limitation, only one thing is excluded; and that which most logically should be excluded is swearing to annul a precept; swearing to fulfil a precept is automatically excluded, because every oath must be possible of application both negatively and positively.

(5) V. Mishnah supra 27a.

(6) In the case of doing good to others.

(7) E.g., 'I shall not give a present to a wealthy man' ('I shall not give charity' would be annulling a precept).

(8) In the case of fulfilling a precept.

(9) Let him use the same form twice: 'I swear I shall not eat; I swear I shall not eat.'

(10) Because when he swears, 'I shall not eat,' he prohibits even a ka-zayith of it to himself; the second oath, 'I swear I shall not eat it' (implying all of it) can therefore not take effect on the first oath.

(11) For the first oath prohibits only the eating of all of it (not a ka-zayith), and the second oath prohibits even a ka-zayith; when therefore he eats a ka-zayith, the second oath takes effect; when he eats it all, the first oath takes effect. He is therefore liable to bring two offerings, if he eats it all.

(12) For the oath implies 'I shall not eat (i.e., a ka-zayith, for אֲכִילָה בְּכִזַּית) of this loaf.'

(13) For the oath implies 'I shall not eat it' (i.e., the whole.)

(14) Why does the Mishnah mention the third oath? From the fact that the second oath does not take effect on the first, we already know that the third also does not take effect.

(15) To bring an offering, because a later oath cannot take effect when a previous oath exists; but the later oath is not wasted; it can take effect when the previous oath is removed.

(17) Does he tell us that the later oath remains?

(18) Lit., 'allowed himself to be asked,' v. note 2.

(19) If he explains to a Sage that the first oath was made under a misapprehension, and he expresses regret for it, the Sage absolves him; so that it is now counted as if he had not sworn the first oath; the second oath therefore takes effect. The Mishnah therefore mentions a third oath to teach us that no matter how many oaths are uttered they all remain, but are merely suspended from taking effect as long as the first oath is in existence.

(20) I.e., vowed to be a nazir for two periods, each of which is for 30 days; v. Naz. I, 3.

(22) And he does not need to be a nazir for another period of 30 days, for, since the first is absolved, the 30 days he has already counted are reckoned for the fulfilment of the second vow, and the offering may also be utilised for it. Similarly, in the case of all oaths, when the first is absolved, the second takes its place. This therefore supports Raba's statement.

(23) There is no similarity, and it does not support Raba.

(24) In the case of the vow of naziriteship, the second vow was not uttered in vain, for it was to be fulfilled in any case, but in the case of oaths, the second oath, when uttered, was in vain, and might possibly never take effect (if the first is not absolved); therefore we may say that, since when uttered, it was in vain, it should not take effect even when the opportunity arises.

(25) Not to eat it.

(26) Then he will not have transgressed the oath, and may also eat the remainder.

(27) Then how can he obtain absolution now?

even if only a minute quantity [is left, he should obtain absolution] also?¹ — If you will, you may say [that he said], 'I shall not eat,' and if you will, you may say [that he said], 'I shall not eat it.' If you will, you may say [that he said], 'I shall not eat;' and since absolution is effective for the last ka-zayith, absolution is effective also for the first ka-zayith.² And if you will, you may say [that he said], 'I shall not eat it;' now, if he left a ka-zayith, it is of sufficient consequence to have absolution obtained for it; but if not, it is not of sufficient consequence to have absolution obtained for it.³

An objection was raised: 'He who vowed two vows of naziriteship, and counted the first, and set apart an offering for it, and then obtained absolution from the first — the second [vow] takes the place of the first'.⁴ Here we are discussing the case where he has not yet obtained atonement.⁵ But surely it has been taught: [Even if] he obtained atonement [he can still obtain absolution]! — It refers to the case where he had not yet shaved;⁶ and it is in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer, who holds that shaving is indispensable.⁷ — But surely it has [also] been taught: [Even if] he shaved [he can still obtain absolution]? R. Ashi said: You put a question from that which obtains in the case of naziriteship! [There is no comparison.] What caused the second [vow] not to take effect? The first! Well, it is no more!⁸

Amemar [however] said: Even if he ate it all, he may obtain absolution from it; for, if unwittingly, he lacks an offering; and if wilfully, he lacks stripes;⁹ but if he had already been bound to the pole,¹⁰ no; as Samuel said, for Samuel said: If they bound him to the pole, and he ran away from the Beth din, he is exempt.¹¹ — But it is not really analogous; there he ran; here he did not run.¹²

Raba said: [If he said:] 'I swear I shall not eat this loaf, if I eat that one,' and he ate the first¹³ unwittingly, and the second¹⁴ wilfully, he is exempt;¹⁵ [if he ate] the first wilfully, and the second unwittingly, he is liable;¹⁶ both unwittingly, he is exempt;¹⁷

(1) For as long as he has not eaten it all he has not yet transgressed the oath, and may obtain absolution.

(2) After eating the first ka-zayith he may obtain absolution from the oath to permit him to eat the remainder of the loaf; and since he can obtain absolution for the rest, the oath is thus automatically removed (for the Sage has the power to uproot the oath ab initio), and the first ka-zayith which he has already eaten is therefore now counted as not having been eaten under prohibition.

(3) If he leaves less than a ka-zayith, it is counted as if he had already eaten the whole loaf, and thus transgressed his oath; and he cannot, therefore, obtain absolution; v. Tosaf. 27b, s.v. DS.

- (4) This shows that absolution may be obtained from the first vow even after it has been completely fulfilled. Why then, in the case of an oath, should he not be able to obtain absolution even after he has completely eaten the loaf?
- (5) Num. VI, 14-17; if the offerings have not yet been sacrificed, he has not obtained atonement for his vow; it is therefore not yet completed, and he may obtain absolution.
- (6) Cf. Num. VI, 18; the omission of this act invalidates the rite; therefore so long as this has not been done the first vow has not been completed entirely, and he may still obtain absolution.
- (7) Lit., 'restrains'; he must still refrain from drinking wine, until this is completed.
- (8) He vowed two vows, counted 30 days, and now asks for absolution from the first. Why assume that the 30 days that have been counted are for the first vow, and that it has therefore been completed, and absolution should not be possible? Since the Sage has the power to uproot the first vow in its entirety by showing it to have been made under a misapprehension, the result is that we may legitimately assume that the 30 days that have been counted are for the second vow, and the counting for the first vow has not even started, so that when absolution is asked for the first vow, it is still intact, and absolution may therefore be granted; but in the case of an oath, if he has already eaten the loaf completely, he has transgressed the oath; how can he now obtain absolution?
- (9) Since there is something still necessary, he may yet obtain absolution and be exempt from offering or stripes. Amemar disagrees with Raba who holds that only if a ka-zayith is left can he obtain absolution.
- (10) In readiness for receiving the stripes (v. Mak. 22b), he cannot obtain absolution, for it is counted as if he had already received the stripes.
- (11) It is counted as if he had already received the stripes, and he is not brought back.
- (12) By running away he has already suffered degradation (v. Mak. 23a), and it is counted as if he had already received his punishment; but here we may say that even if he has been bound to the pole, it is not yet counted as if he had received his stripes, and he may therefore still obtain absolution from his oath.
- (13) The conditional one.
- (14) The one he prohibited to himself; if he should eat the conditional one.
- (15) An oath which is conditional upon the performing of another act does not take effect at the moment it is uttered, but at the moment the first act is performed; and if at that moment he remembers the oath, it takes effect, but if he has forgotten the oath, it cannot take effect, for it is not counted האדם בשבועה (v. supra 26a). If he ate the conditional one unwittingly (having forgotten the oath) and the prohibited one wilfully (remembering the oath), he is exempt from stripes (though he ate the prohibited one wilfully), because at the moment of the first act (eating the conditional one) when the oath was due to take effect, he had forgotten it (and it is not, therefore, האדם בשבועה).
- (16) For an offering, because when he ate the conditional one he remembered the oath: he ate it wilfully (it was, of course, permitted to him then); when, therefore, he later ate the prohibited one unwittingly, he became liable for an offering.
- (17) Whether he ate the conditional or the prohibited loaf first, because at the moment he ate the first one he had forgotten the oath, and it cannot, therefore, take effect.

both wilfully, then, if he [first] ate the conditional one, and then he ate the prohibited one, he is liable;¹ but if he [first] ate the prohibited one, and then he ate the conditional one, [the ruling depends on] the controversy between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish:² according to the one who holds an uncertain warning is a warning he is liable, and according to the one who holds it is not a warning, he is exempt.³

If he made them conditional upon each other: 'I shall not eat this one, if I eat that one; I shall not eat that one, if I eat this one';⁴ then, if he ate this one wilfully, [mindful of the oath] concerning it, but forgetful [of the oath] concerning the other; and [ate] the other wilfully, [mindful of the oath] concerning it, but forgetful [of the oath] concerning the first, he is exempt;⁵ [if he ate] this one unwittingly, [forgetful of the oath] concerning it, but mindful [of the oath] concerning the other, and [ate] the other unwittingly, [forgetful of the oath] concerning it, but mindful [of the oath] concerning the first, he is liable;⁶ both unwittingly, he is exempt;⁷ both wilfully, then, for the second he is liable;⁸ but for the first, [the ruling depends on] the controversy between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish.⁹

R. Mari said: We have also learnt thus [in a Mishnah]:¹⁰ Four vows did the Sages permit:¹¹ vows of urging.¹² vows of hyperbole.¹³ vows made unwittingly,¹⁴ and vows accidentally unfulfilled.¹⁵ Vows made unwittingly: how? ‘Konam¹⁶ [this loaf to me], if I ate or drank [today]’, and he remembered that he had eaten or drunk; ‘[konam this loaf to me,] if I eat or drink [today]’, and he forgot, and ate or drank, he is permitted [to eat that loaf]; and it was taught with reference to this: just as vows made unwittingly are permitted, so oaths made unwittingly are permitted.¹⁷

Efa¹⁸ learnt [the laws of] oaths in the school of Rabbah. His brother Abbimi met him, and asked him: [If one said,] ‘I swear I have not eaten; I swear I have not eaten’, [and he had eaten,] what is the ruling? — He replied: He is liable only once. He said to him: You are mistaken, for surely a false oath went forth [from his mouth].¹⁹ — [He asked him again: If one said,] ‘I swear I shall not eat nine [figs; I swear I shall not eat] ten [figs]’, and he ate ten figs], what is the ruling? — He replied: He is liable for each [oath].²⁰ — He said to him: You are mistaken, for if he will not eat nine, he will not eat ten.²¹ [He asked him again: If one said,] ‘I swear I shall not eat ten [figs; I swear I shall not eat] nine [figs,]’ and he ate ten], what is the ruling? — He replied: He is liable only once.²² He said to him: You are mistaken: ten he would not eat, but nine he would eat.²³

Abaye said: Sometimes this ruling of Efa is possible,²⁴ as the Master said, for Rabbah said: [If a man said,] ‘I swear I shall not eat figs and grapes [together in one day],’ then he said, ‘I swear I shall not eat figs;’²⁵

(1) Stripes; provided, before eating the second, he was given the required definite warning: ‘Do not eat this loaf, because you have sworn not to eat it, if you eat the first; and you have already eaten the first.’

(2) V. supra 3b.

(3) The warning, which must be given before the eating of the prohibited loaf, cannot be definite: ‘You must not eat this loaf’ (for it is not prohibited until he eats the conditional loaf). The warning is therefore: ‘You must not eat this loaf, in case you eat the conditional one, and then you will have transgressed the oath in having eaten this prohibited loaf.’ This warning is uncertain, for he may never eat the conditional loaf.

(4) Both loaves are conditional and prohibited.

(5) When he ate the first one, he remembered that he had sworn not to eat it, if he ate the other; but he forgot that he had also sworn not to eat the other, if he ate this one. When he ate the second, he remembered that he had sworn not to eat it, if he ate the first; but forgot that he had also sworn not to eat the first, if he ate this. Now, he is exempt from stripes for the second loaf which he has just eaten wilfully, because at the time the oath has to take effect, i.e., at the moment of the first act (eating the first loaf), he had forgotten that he had sworn not to eat the second loaf, if he ate the first; the second oath, therefore, does not take effect; and he is exempt from stripes or offering for the first, because, though he ate it wilfully, it was permitted at the moment of eating (for he had then not yet eaten the second).

(6) When he ate the first one, he forgot that he had sworn not to eat it, if he ate the second, but remembered that he had sworn not to eat the second, if he ate this; and when he ate the second, he forgot that he had sworn not to eat it, if he ate the first, but remembered that he had sworn not to eat the first, if he ate this. Now, for the second loaf he must bring an offering, for the second loaf took effect at the beginning, at the moment of the first act (eating the first loaf), for at that moment he remembered that he had sworn not to eat the second loaf, if he ate the first. And now when he ate the second loaf (though he forgot this oath now) he is liable, for it is a simple case of unwitting transgression (eating the loaf, having forgotten his oath not to do so). But he is not liable for stripes for the first loaf (though now, when eating the second loaf, he remembers that he had sworn, not to eat the first, if he ate the second, and yet he eats the second wilfully), because at the moment of the first act (eating the first loaf) this oath (not to eat the first, if he ate the second) did not take effect, for he had forgotten it.

(7) For at the moment of the first act, when the oaths are due to take effect, he had forgotten them, and the condition of האדם בשבועה is therefore not fulfilled.

(8) Stripes; where he was given a definite warning which, in this case, is possible: ‘Do not eat this loaf, for you have sworn not to eat it, if you eat the first; and you have already eaten the first.'

(9) For it is an uncertain warning: 'Do not eat this in case you also eat the other, and if you eat the other you will be liable for having eaten this.' It is uncertain, because he may never eat the other.

(10) In support of Raba's statement that in the case of a conditional oath the person must remember the oath at the time of fulfilling the condition.

(11) To be deemed as of no effect even without absolution; Ned. 20b.

(12) Bargaining in business; e.g., the seller says: 'I vow that food shall be prohibited to me today, if I sell you this article for less than 4 denarii', and the buyer vows similarly that he will not give more than 2 denarii; both intend to compromise for 3 denarii; they vow merely to obtain better terms, and do not intend their vows to be taken seriously.

(13) Or exaggeration; e.g., I vow that this loaf shall be prohibited to me, if I did not see 500,000 men pass along this road today.' He knows it is untrue; It is merely exaggerated speech.

(14) E.g., 'I vow that this loaf shall be prohibited to me, if I have drunk wine today.' When uttering the vow he thought he had not drunk, but later reminded himself that he had; the vow is null, and he may eat the loaf.

(15) E.g., 'I vow that enjoyment of my property shall be prohibited to you, if you do not dine with me today,' and illness prevented the acceptance of the invitation, the vow' is null, for the person who made it did not intend it to take effect if accident prevented the fulfilment of the condition.

(17) E.g., 'I swear I shall not eat this loaf, if I drink wine today,' and he forgot and drank wine, he is permitted to eat the loaf; because in order that the oath shall take effect he must remember the oath at the time of fulfilling the condition, but in this case, when fulfilling the condition (drinking the wine), he had forgotten the oath. This, therefore, agrees with Raba's statement.

(18) He and Abbimi were the sons of Rahabah of Pumbeditha.

(19) Only in the case of an oath in the future can you say that the second oath does not take effect, because the first has already prohibited it, and the second is now an oath to fulfil a precept (to fulfil the first oath); but in the case of an oath in the past, which is false immediately when it is uttered, why should he not be liable for the second or any number of subsequent oaths?

(20) He assumed that the second oath is not included in the first, and therefore can take effect.

(21) The second oath is therefore already included in the first, and cannot take effect, for it is now an oath to fulfil a precept.

(22) He assumed that the second oath is included in the first, for 'nine' is included in 'ten'.

(23) The first oath was only for ten, but he was permitted to eat nine; the second prohibited nine. When he ate nine, he transgressed the second oath, and when he ate another one, he transgressed the first.

(24) That if he swore for ten, and then nine; and ate ten, he should be liable only once.

(25) If he would have eaten figs and grapes together in one day, he would have had to bring two offerings: for, as soon as he ate the figs, he is liable for the second oath, and when he eats also the grapes, he is liable for the first.

and he ate figs,¹ and set apart the offering; and then he ate grapes alone,² the grapes are then only half the quantity,³ and for half the quantity he is not liable. So here also, if he said: 'I swear I shall not eat ten [figs],' and then he said, 'I swear I shall not eat nine [figs],' and he ate nine, and set apart the offering, and then he ate a tenth [fig], the tenth is then only half the quantity, and for half the quantity he is not liable.⁴

MISHNAH. WHAT IS A VAIN OATH? IF HE SWORE THAT WHICH IS CONTRARY TO THE FACTS KNOWN TO MAN, SAYING OF A PILLAR OF STONE THAT IT IS OF GOLD; OR OF A MAN THAT HE IS A WOMAN; OR OF A WOMAN THAT SHE IS A MAN; IF HE SWORE CONCERNING A THING WHICH IS IMPOSSIBLE, [AS E.G., 'IF I HAVE NOT SEEN A CAMEL FLYING IN THE AIR',⁵ OR, 'IF I HAVE NOT SEEN A SERPENT LIKE THE BEAM OF THE OLIVE PRESS'; IF HE SAID TO WITNESSES, 'COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME', [AND THEY REPLIED,] 'WE SWEAR THAT WE WILL NOT BEAR TESTIMONY FOR YOU';⁶ IF HE SWORE TO ANNUL A PRECEPT, [AS E.G.,] NOT TO MAKE A SUKKAH,⁷ OR,

NOT TO TAKE A LULAB,⁷ OR, NOT TO PUT ON TEFILLIN:⁷ THESE⁸ ARE VAIN OATHS, FOR WHICH ONE IS LIABLE, FOR WILFUL TRANSGRESSION, STRIPES, AND FOR UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION ONE IS EXEMPT. [IF A MAN SAID:] 'I SWEAR I SHALL EAT THIS LOAF; I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT IT,' THE FIRST IS AN OATH OF UTTERANCE,⁹ AND THE SECOND IS A VAIN OATH.¹⁰ IF HE ATE IT, HE TRANSGRESSED THE VAIN OATH; IF HE DID NOT EAT IT, HE TRANSGRESSED THE OATH OF UTTERANCE.¹¹

GEMARA. Ulla said: Provided that it was already known to three men.¹² IF HE SWORE CONCERNING A THING WHICH IS IMPOSSIBLE, [AS E.G.,] 'IF I HAVE NOT SEEN A CAMEL FLYING IN THE AIR.' 'I swear that I have seen,' he does not say! What [then] is meant by, 'If I have not seen ?' Abaye said: Learn, 'I swear I have seen.'¹³ Raba said: [The Mishnah means:] he said, '[I swear that] all the fruits of the world shall be prohibited to me, if I have not seen a camel flying in the air.' Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Perhaps this man saw a large bird, and gave it the name of camel, and when he swore, he swore according to his own mind;¹⁴ and if you say, we go according to his mouth, and we do not go according to his mind,¹⁵ [that cannot be,] for it has been taught: When they adjure him,¹⁶ they say to him, 'Know that we do not adjure you according to your own mind, but according to the mind of the Omnipresent and the mind of the Beth din.' What is the reason? Is it not because we say, perhaps he gave him counters,¹⁷ and called them zuzim, in which case when he swears, he swears according to his own mind?'¹⁸ — No! There [the reason is] because of the cane of Raba.¹⁹

Come and hear! And so we find that when Moses adjured the Israelites, he said to them: Know that I do not adjure you according to your own minds, but according to the mind of the Omnipresent and according to my mind.²⁰ Now, why [should he say this]? Let him say to them: Fulfil what God has decreed. Is it not then because they might bring to their minds an idol?²¹ — No! But because an idol is also called god,²² for it is written: gods of silver, or gods of gold, [ye shall not make unto you].²³ — Well, let him say to them: Fulfil the Torah.²⁴ — [That might have implied] one Torah.²⁵ Let him [then] say: Fulfil the two Torah. — [That might have implied] the Torah of sin offering and the Torah of trespass offering.²⁶ [Let him say:] Fulfil the whole Torah. — [That might have implied merely the avoidance of] idolatry,²⁷ for it has been said: Important is idolatry in that he who denies it is as if he accepts the whole Torah.²⁸ Well, let him say to them: Fulfil the precept. — [That would have implied] one precept. [Let him say:] Fulfil the precepts. — [That might have implied merely] two. [Let him say: Fulfil] all the precepts. — [That might have implied] the precept of zizith,²⁹ for a Master said: The precept of zizith is equal to all the precepts together.³⁰ Then, let him say to them: Fulfil the six hundred and thirteen precepts. — But, even according to your reasoning,³¹ let him say. 'According to my mind;' why is it necessary to add, 'according to the mind of the Omnipresent'?'³²

(2) Having forgotten the first oath.

(3) I.e., only a portion of that which he prohibited to himself by the first oath, for as soon as he had set apart his offering for the figs, they can no longer combine with the grapes to make him liable for the first oath; so that he is not now transgressing the first oath by eating the grapes, for the oath was 'grapes and figs'.

(4) If he had not yet set apart the offering for the nine figs, and had eaten the tenth fig, he would have been liable for the first oath also; but now that he has set apart the offering for the nine, they no longer combine; he is therefore now eating only one fig, and is not thereby transgressing the first oath.

(5) The Gemara explains why the oath is not positive: 'I swear I have seen a camel flying'.

(6) This is annulling a precept, for they must bear testimony, if they were witnesses; Lev. V, 1.

(7) V. Glos.

(8) All those mentioned in the Mishnah.

(9) Lev. V, 4: if any one swear uttering with his lips to do evil, or to do good.

(10) For he is swearing to annul a precept; the fulfilling of his first oath is incumbent upon him like a precept.

- (11) In addition to transgressing the vain oath (v. infra 29b).
- (12) That the pillar is of stone; then it is a vain oath (for at the moment of utterance its falsity is already evident); but if it was not known to three men, it is a false oath, and not a vain oath.
- (13) I.e., emend the Mishnah.
- (14) And not according to the universally accepted view of what the word 'camel' connotes; therefore it is not a vain oath, for he really did see a 'camel' (the name he gave in his own mind to the large bird) flying.
- (15) Therefore it is a vain oath, for his mouth said 'camel', i.e., what is universally recognised as camel.
- (16) When the Beth din impose an oath on a litigant in court.
- (17) Perhaps the debtor (who has to swear) had given to the creditor counters, such as are used as tokens (instead of money) in the game of iskundre (a kind of draughts or chess).
- (18) I.e., when taking the oath the debtor may have mentally called the counters zuzim; therefore the Beth din say to him that the oath must be taken according to their mind, not his (i.e., mental reservations are not taken account of); hence, since the Beth din's warning is necessary, we deduce that an oath (were it not for the Beth din's warning) would take effect in accordance with the mind of the utterer.
- (19) Ned. 25a; a case came before Raba where the debtor, when ordered by Raba to take an oath, handed the creditor a cane to hold for a moment while he took the oath: 'I swear I have given to the creditor the money I owe him.' The creditor, in a fit of temper, broke the cane, and a number of coins (the amount of the debt) fell out. The debtor had put the coins in a hollow cane; the oath he took was true: he had given the creditor the money he owed him (by handing him the cane, which he would have taken back later). To avoid the occurrence of such an incident as this the Beth din warn the debtor that the oath he takes is in accordance with their mind, and not his. Hence, the Beth din's warning is necessary not because a man may swear an oath with mental reservations, but because he may swear a true oath (though with trickery). It may be, therefore, that in an oath we go according to the mouth and not the mind.
- (20) Deut. XXIX, 13: Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath, i.e., neither with you only, not as you yourselves think (with possible reservations in your minds) do I impose this oath of allegiance upon you.
- (21) I.e., they might in their own minds interpret the word 'God' by 'idol'; hence, an oath is in accordance with the mind of the utterer; and therefore Moses had to warn them.
- (22) An oath is in accordance with the mouth (i.e., actual words uttered); and 'god' may actually imply 'idol'.
- (23) Ex. XX, 20.
- (24) Yet he did not say this because, presumably, they could have made a mental reservation (when taking the oath to fulfil the Torah) that sins be included in the word 'Torah'; hence, we go according to the mind or thought of the utterer of the oath.
- (25) Therefore he could not have imposed the oath in that form, for we have two Torah, written and oral.
- (26) Lev. VI, 18: זאת תורת החטאת; ibid. VII, 1: זאת תורת האשם; The name 'Torah' is applied to the laws concerning sin offerings and trespass offerings, as also to the laws concerning burnt offerings (Lev. VI, 2) meal offerings (VI, 7), and peace offerings (VII, 11). If Moses had said: 'Fulfil the two Torah', the Israelites, in taking the oath, might have intended it to apply only to the laws concerning sin offerings and trespass offerings (or any other two, such as burnt offerings and peace offerings) to which the name תורה is specifically applied, but not to any other precepts.
- (27) Had the oath been imposed in that form, they could have fulfilled it by merely refraining from idol worship, without fulfilling any other commandments.
- (28) Num. XV, 22: And if ye err, and do not observe all these commandments; it is explained (Hor. 8a) that all these commandments refers to idolatry.
- (29) The fringes; Num. XV, 38.
- (30) Ibid. 39: that he may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord; v. Men. 43b.
- (31) You infer that the reason for the formula of the oath which Moses administered to the Israelites was because they might have made mental reservations.
- (32) Moses could have said, 'I adjure you according to my mind, not yours.' That would have sufficed to overcome the difficulty of possible mental reservations on their part.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 29b

Obviously, therefore, merely so that there should not be any absolution for their oath.¹

‘IF I HAVE NOT SEEN A SERPENT LIKE THE BEAM OF THE OLIVE PRESS.’ And is it not [possible]?² Lo! There was one in the reign of King Shapur³ which swallowed thirteen hides⁴ stuffed with straw.⁵ — Samuel said: [He meant] striped.⁶ But they are all striped! [He meant] striped on his back.⁷

‘I SWEAR I SHALL EAT THIS LOAF; I SWEAR I SHALL NOT EAT IT’, etc. Now, for the oath of utterance he is liable, and for the vain oath he is not liable?⁸ Surely, the oath was uttered in vain! — R. Jeremiah said: Learn, ALSO THE OATH OF UTTERANCE.⁹ MISHNAH. THE OATH OF UTTERANCE APPLIES TO MEN AND WOMEN, TO RELATIVES AND NON-RELATIVES,¹⁰ TO THOSE QUALIFIED [TO BEAR WITNESS] AND THOSE NOT QUALIFIED,¹¹ [WHETHER UTTERED] BEFORE THE BETH DIN, OR NOT BEFORE THE BETH DIN, [BUT IT MUST BE UTTERED] WITH A MAN'S OWN MOUTH;¹² AND HE IS LIABLE, FOR WILFUL TRANSGRESSION, STRIPES, AND FOR UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION, A SLIDING SCALE SACRIFICE. A VAIN OATH APPLIES TO MEN AND WOMEN, TO NON-RELATIVES AND RELATIVES, TO THOSE QUALIFIED [TO BEAR WITNESS] AND THOSE NOT QUALIFIED, [WHETHER UTTERED] BEFORE THE BETH DIN OR NOT BEFORE THE BETH DIN, [BUT IT MUST BE UTTERED] WITH HIS OWN MOUTH; AND HE IS LIABLE, FOR WILFUL TRANSGRESSION, STRIPES, AND FOR UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION HE IS EXEMPT. [IN THE CASE OF] BOTH THIS AND THAT [OATH], IF HE WAS ADJURED BY THE MOUTH OF OTHERS, HE IS LIABLE; THUS, IF HE SAID, ‘I HAVE NOT EATEN TODAY,’ OR, ‘I HAVE NOT PUT ON TEFILLIN TODAY,’ [AND THE OTHER SAID,] ‘I ADJURE THEE,’ AND HE SAID, ‘AMEN!’ HE IS LIABLE.

GEMARA. Samuel said: He who responds ‘Amen’ after an oath — it is as if he uttered the oath with his own mouth, for it is written: And the woman shall say, Amen, Amen.¹³ R. Papa said in the name of Raba: A Mishnah and a Baraitha also prove it, for the Mishnah states: ‘The oath of testimony applies to men, and not to women; to non-relatives, and not to relatives; to those qualified [to bear witness], and not to those unqualified; and it applies only to those liable to bear witness; and [whether uttered] before the Beth din or not before the Beth din, [if uttered] with his own mouth; but if [adjured] by the mouth of others, he is not liable unless he denies it before the Beth din: this is the opinion of R. Meir.’¹⁴ And in the Baraitha it was taught: What is the oath of testimony? He said to witnesses, ‘Come and bear testimony for me;’ [and they replied,] ‘We swear we know no testimony for you,’ or they said,¹⁵ ‘We know no testimony for you,’ [and he said,] ‘I adjure you,’ and they responded. ‘Amen’ — whether [it was uttered] before the Beth din, or not before the Beth din, whether from their own mouths or the mouths of others, since they denied [knowing any testimony], they are liable: this is the opinion of R. Meir. Now, they contradict each other!¹⁶ Obviously, therefore, we deduce from this that here¹⁷ [it is a case where] he said ‘Amen,’¹⁸ and there¹⁹ [a case where] he did not say ‘Amen’. This proves it.²⁰

Rabina said in the name of Raba: Our Mishnah also proves it, for it states: THE OATH OF UTTERANCE APPLIES TO MEN AND WOMEN, TO NON-RELATIVES AND RELATIVES, TO THOSE QUALIFIED [TO BEAR WITNESS] AND THOSE NOT QUALIFIED, [WHETHER UTTERED] BEFORE THE BETH DIN OR NOT BEFORE THE BETH DIN, [BUT IT MUST BE UTTERED] WITH HIS OWN MOUTH. [Hence, if uttered] WITH HIS OWN MOUTH, he is liable; but from the mouth of others, he is not liable. And yet the last clause states: [IN THE CASE] OF BOTH THIS AND THAT [OATH], IF HE WAS ADJURED BY THE MOUTH OF OTHERS HE IS LIABLE. Thus they contradict each other! Obviously, therefore, we must infer from this that here²¹ [it is a case where] he said ‘Amen’, and there²² [a case where] he did not say ‘Amen’. — But, if so, what does Samuel teach us?²³ — The deduction of the Mishnah he teaches us.²⁴ [

(1) For an oath taken in accordance with the mind of others cannot be absolved. An oath, however, always takes effect in accordance with the mouth (i.e., actual words uttered); therefore, 'I have seen a camel flying' is a vain oath.

(2) To see a serpent as thick as the beam of the olive press?

(3) Sapur I, King of Persia.

(4) [Var. lec., 'stables'.]

(5) [According to Rashi, this was a man-devouring serpent, and he was killed by being stuffed with straw in which hot coals were concealed.]

(6) Like the markings in the wood of the beam; but he was not thinking of its girth or length.

(7) Whereas all serpents are striped only on the neck. (Rashi.) [Asheri, Ned. 28a, renders 'flat at the back', whereas serpents are flat only at the belly, v. Lewysohn, Zoologie, p. 234.]

(8) But why should he not be liable also, if he does not eat it for the vain oath, even if he fulfils it (by not eating the loaf)? The vain oath, when uttered, was designed to annul a precept (not to fulfil the previous oath); and if one swears to annul a precept, would he not be liable even if he fulfils the oath, and annuls the precept?

(9) The Mishnah means: If he did not eat it, he transgresses the oath of utterance also, in addition to the vain oath.

(10) If he swore, 'I shall give So-and-so a loaf,' and did not fulfil his oath, he is liable, whether that person is a relative or not.

(11) V. Sanh. III, 3, 4.

(12) But if he is adjured by another to say, e.g., whether he has eaten, and he replies, 'I have eaten,' it is not an oath, since he himself did not utter the oath. If, however, he says, 'Amen' to the other's adjuration, it is counted as an oath (v. infra).

(13) Num. V, 22; the previous verse states that the priest shall cause the woman to swear; but the priest himself pronounces the oath, and the woman merely responds, 'Amen'.

(16) For in the Mishnah R. Meir says that, if adjured by others, they are liable only if the adjuration be uttered before the Beth din; and in the Baraitha he says that, even if adjured by others, they are liable even if the adjuration be not uttered before the Beth din.

(17) In the Baraitha.

(18) And this is counted as if he uttered the oath himself.

(19) In the Mishnah.

(20) That responding 'Amen' to an oath is like uttering an oath oneself, as Samuel states.

(23) Why does Samuel need to tell us that he who responds 'Amen' to an oath is reckoned as uttering an oath himself? This is so easily and obviously deduced from the Mishnah!

(24) That the Mishnah really wishes to teach us that there is no liability if adjured by others, unless he did say, 'Amen'; and we should not think that the first clause, in stating that the oath must be uttered by himself, does not thereby desire to exclude adjuration by others, but mentions it merely because it is more usual for the oath to be uttered by himself; and that the last clause, in stating that adjuration by others makes him liable, if he responds, 'Amen', does not thereby desire to imply that if he does not respond, 'Amen', he is not liable, but merely mentions 'Amen' because it is usual for 'Amen' to be said in response to an oath, but that really he is liable, if adjured by others, even if he does not say, 'Amen'. Therefore, Samuel states that the Mishnah really does desire to make this distinction in adjuration by others [between the case where 'Amen' is said and the case where it is not said].

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. THE OATH OF TESTIMONY¹ APPLIES TO MEN AND NOT TO WOMEN,² TO NON-RELATIVES AND NOT TO RELATIVES,³ TO THOSE QUALIFIED [TO BEAR WITNESS] AND NOT TO THOSE UNQUALIFIED;⁴ AND IT APPLIES ONLY TO THOSE LIABLE TO BEAR WITNESS; AND WHETHER [UTTERED] BEFORE THE BETH DIN OR NOT BEFORE THE BETH DIN, IF [UTTERED] WITH HIS OWN MOUTH; BUT IF [ADJURED]

BY THE MOUTH OF OTHERS HE IS NOT LIABLE UNLESS HE DENIES IT BEFORE THE BETH DIN; THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY: WHETHER [UTTERED] WITH HIS OWN MOUTH OR [ADJURED] BY THE MOUTH OF OTHERS HE IS NOT LIABLE UNLESS HE DENIES IT BEFORE THE BETH DIN. AND THEY ARE LIABLE FOR WILFUL TRANSGRESSION OF THE OATH, AND FOR ITS UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION COUPLED WITH WILFUL [DENIAL OF KNOWLEDGE OF] TESTIMONY;⁵ BUT THEY ARE NOT LIABLE FOR ITS UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION.⁶ AND WHAT ARE THEY LIABLE FOR THE WILFUL TRANSGRESSION OF THE OATH? A SLIDING SCALE SACRIFICE.

GEMARA. How do we know?⁷ — Because the Rabbis taught: And the two men shall stand.⁸ the verse refers to witnesses.⁹ — You say [it refers to] witnesses; but perhaps [it refers to] the litigants? When it says: between whom the controversy is,¹⁰ the litigants are already mentioned; hence, how do I explain and the two men shall stand, [Therefore,] the verse refers to witnesses.¹¹ And if you wish to say [something to refute this deduction, I give you another]: Here¹² it is said, ‘two’, and there¹³ it is said, ‘two’; just as there it refers to witnesses, so here it refers to witnesses.¹⁴ What is meant by: If you wish to say [something to refute the deduction]?¹⁵ — You might say, because the verse did not write: and those between whom the controversy is, the whole verse refers to the litigants,¹⁶ [therefore, I give the second deduction:] here it is said: two, and there it is said: two; just as there it refers to witnesses, so here it refers to witnesses.

Another [Baraita] taught: And the two men shall stand; the verse refers to witnesses. You say [it refers to] witnesses; but perhaps [it refers to] the litigants? You may retort: Do, then, two come to court, and do not three ever come to court?¹⁷ But if you wish to say something [to refute this deduction, I give you another]: Here it is said, ‘two’, and there it is said, ‘two’, just as there it refers to witnesses, so here it refers to witnesses. What is meant by: If you wish to say [something to refute this]? You might say, the verse refers to plaintiff and defendant,¹⁸ [therefore I give the second deduction:] here it is said, ‘two’, and there it is said, ‘two’; just as there it refers to witnesses, so here it refers to witnesses. Another [Baraita] teaches: And the two men shall stand; the verse refers to witnesses. You say [it refers to] witnesses; but perhaps [it refers to] the litigants? You may retort: Do, then, men come to court, and do not women ever come to court?¹⁹ But if you wish to say [something to refute this deduction, I give you another]: Here it is said, ‘two’, and there it is said, ‘two’; just as there it refers to witnesses, so here it refers to witnesses. What is meant by: If you wish to say [something to refute this]? — You might say, it is not usual for a woman,²⁰ because all glorious is the King's daughter within,²¹ [therefore I give the second deduction:] here it is said, ‘two’, and there it is said, ‘two’; just as there it refers to witnesses, so here it refers to witnesses.

Our Rabbis taught: And the two men shall stand: it is a precept that the litigants stand. R. Judah said: I heard that if they²² desire to allow them both to sit, they may allow them to sit. What is prohibited? One should not stand, and the other sit; one speak all that he wishes, and the other bidden to be brief.

Our Rabbis taught: In righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour:²³ that one should not sit, and the other stand; one speak all that he wishes, and the other bidden to be brief. Another interpretation: In righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour: judge thy neighbour in the scale of merit.²⁴ R. Joseph learnt: In righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour- he who is with thee²⁵ in Torah and precepts — endeavour to judge him favourably.

R. Ulla the son of R. Elai had a case before R. Nahman. R. Joseph sent [a message] to him:²⁶ Our friend Ulla is a neighbour²⁷ in Torah and precepts. Said [R. Nahman]: Why did he send [this message] to me? That I should favour him?²⁸ Then he said: [Probably] that I should settle his case first;²⁹

- (1) Witnesses denying on oath that they know any testimony for a litigant; Lev. V, 1.
- (2) Because women are not eligible as witnesses.
- (3) V. Sanh. 27b.
- (4) Such as, e.g., a robber.
- (5) Knowing testimony for the litigant, and wilfully denying the knowledge on oath, but transgressing unwittingly so far as the sacrifice is concerned, i.e., not knowing that they are liable to bring a sacrifice for the transgression of the oath.
- (6) If, at the moment of taking the oath, they really thought they did not know any testimony, they are exempt from a sacrifice, for they swore falsely merely by accident.
- (7) That women are ineligible as witnesses.
- (8) Deut. XIX, 17.
- (9) Hence witnesses must be men.
- (10) Deut. XIX, 17: And the two men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the Lord, before the priests and the judges.
- (11) For the verse could have said: 'And those between whom the controversy is shall stand.' Because the verse adds, superfluously, 'the two men,' the reference is to witnesses, and what follows, 'between whom the controversy is,' is an asyndeton construction.
- (12) Deut. XIX, 17.
- (13) Ibid. 15: at the mouth of two witnesses.
- (14) This is a deduction by גזרה שווה, similarity of words.
- (15) How can the first deduction be refuted?
- (16) Had the verse written: 'And the two men, and those between whom the controversy is, shall stand', we could have inferred definitely that the two men refers to witnesses: since, however, the verse writes: And the two men between whom the controversy is, it refers to litigants only.
- (17) Litigants may be more than two: therefore the two men refers to witnesses.
- (18) And though there may be several plaintiffs and several defendants, the verse calls them the two men, i.e., the two protagonists, plaintiffs on the one side, and defendants on the other.
- (19) Surely, women are also litigants sometimes; hence, the two men refers to witnesses, who must be men.
- (20) To go to court as a litigant: therefore the verse talks of the two men, but in reality it includes women and refers to litigants.
- (21) Ps. XLV, 14; the King's daughter (i.e., the Jewish woman) is modest, and stays within her home as much as possible.

or, [with reference to] the discretion of the judges.¹

Ulla said: The controversy² is in regard to the litigants, but in regard to witnesses all agree that they must stand, for it is written: And the two men shall stand. R. Huna said: The controversy is in regard to the time of the discussion,³ but at the time of the completion of the case⁴ all agree that the judges sit and the litigants stand, for it is written: And Moses sat to judge the people; and the people stood.⁵

Another version: The controversy is in regard to the time of the discussion, but at the time of the completion of the case all agree that the judges sit and the litigants stand, for witnesses are like the completion of the case,⁶ and it is written with reference to them: And the two men shall stand.⁷

The widow of R. Huna had a case before R. Nahman. He said [to himself]: What shall I do? If I should rise before her,⁸ the plea of her opponent will be stopped up;⁹ if I should not rise before her, [I should be doing wrong, for] the wife of a scholar is like a scholar.¹⁰ So he said to his attendant: 'Go and make a duck fly over me, and urge it towards me, so that I will rise.'¹¹ But the Master said: The controversy is in regard to the time of the discussion, but at the time of the completion of the case all agree that the judges sit and the litigants stand!¹² — He sits as one who unties his shoes,¹³ and says, 'You, So-and-so, are innocent, and you, So-and-so, are guilty.'

Rabbah son of R. Huna said: If a Rabbinical scholar and an illiterate person have some dispute with each other, [and come to court,] we persuade the Rabbinical scholar to sit; and to the illiterate person we also say, 'Sit', and if he stands, it matters not. Rab son of R. Sherabya had a case before R. Papa. He told him to sit, and told his opponent also to sit; but the attendant of the court came and nudged¹⁴ the illiterate man and made him stand up. And R. Papa did not say to him, 'Sit'. How could he do so; will not the other's plea be stopped up?¹⁵ — R. Papa may say: He¹⁶ will say, 'He has¹⁷ asked me to sit, but the attendant was not appeased by me.'¹⁸ And Rabbah son of R. Huna said: If a Rabbinical scholar and an illiterate person have some dispute with each other, the scholar should not come first and sit down [before the judge],¹⁹ because it will appear as if he is setting forth his case. And we do not say this except when he has not a fixed time with him;²⁰ but if he has a fixed time with him, it matters not,²¹ for he²² will say, he is occupied with his lesson.

And Rabbah son of R. Huna said: If a Rabbinical scholar knows some testimony, and it is undignified for him to go to the judge, who is inferior to him, to give testimony before him, he need not go. R. Shisha the son of R. Idi said: We also learnt thus: If he found a sack or a basket which it is not his custom to handle, he need not take it.²³ However, this is only the case in money matters,²⁴ but in the case of a prohibition²⁵ [he must give evidence, for it is written]: There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the Lord.²⁶ wherever there is a profanation of the Name, the honour of a scholar is not regarded.

R. Yemar knew some testimony for Mar Zutra, and came before Amemar. He told them all to sit. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: Did not Ulla say: The controversy is in regard to the litigants, but in regard to witnesses all agree that they should stand? — He replied to him: This is a positive precept,²⁷ and that is a positive precept;²⁸ the positive precept enjoining respect for the Torah²⁹ is greater.

(Mnemonic: Advocate, Uncultured, Robbery, False.)

Our Rabbis taught: How do we know that a judge should not appoint an advocate for his words?³⁰ — Because it is said: From a false matter keep far.³¹ And how do we know that a judge should not allow an uncultured disciple to sit before him?³² Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. And how do we know that a judge who knows his colleague to be a robber, or a witness who knows his colleague to be a robber, should not join with him?³³ Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. And how do we know that a judge who knows that a plea is false³⁴ should not say, Since the witnesses give evidence, I will decide it,³⁵ and

(1) In a case which does not depend on witnesses or oath the judge may use his discretion. Here R. Joseph sent a message to R. Nahman that, if the case in which Ulla was involved was of such a nature, he should use his discretion in his favour, because he was a learned and righteous man, and was therefore more likely to be in the right.

(2) Between R. Judah and the Sages as to whether the litigants may sit in court.

(3) While the case is being argued.

(4) When the judge gives his decision.

- (5) Ex. XVIII, 13.
- (6) When they give their evidence, the case virtually ends.
- (7) This only proves that the litigants must stand, not that the judges have to sit.
- (8) Out of respect, because she is the widow of a scholar.
- (9) He will be intimidated, and will not be able to state his case clearly.
- (10) And must be respected.
- (11) I will really rise out of respect for her, but her opponent will not be intimidated, because he will think I rise to ward off the duck.
- (12) How then is a judge to show his respect for scholarship should a scholar happen to come in while he is giving the verdict?
- (13) [MS. M.: 'shoe-laces.'] Half sitting and half standing, and pronounces the verdict.
- (14) Lit., 'kicked.' [Omitted in some texts; v. D.S. a.l.]
- (15) When he sees that R. Papa respects his opponent more.
- (16) The illiterate man.
- (17) R. Papa. [MS. M.: 'He (the litigant) will say, R. Papa has asked me to sit but,' etc.]
- (18) I did not tip him, so he made me stand.
- (19) Before his opponent comes, even if he remains silent.
- (20) For study.
- (21) If the judge is his teacher, and they have a fixed time for study together, the scholar may come to him before his opponent arrives.
- (22) The opponent.
- (23) B.M. 29b; if an eminent man finds in the street something which, even if it were his own, he would not trouble to take into his house, because he deems it undignified, he need not pick it up in order to restore it to its owner.
- (24) He need not give evidence, if it is undignified.
- (25) E.g., if a married woman comes before the judge saying she believes her husband to be dead, and she desires to re-marry; and this scholar knows her husband to be alive, he must give his evidence before the judge, though he is his junior or inferior, for, in face of a prohibition, his dignity does not count.
- (26) Prov. XXI, 30; wisdom and understanding are of no value against the Lord, i.e., if their possession results in His will being opposed.
- (27) And the two men shall stand.
- (28) Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God: Deut. X, 20; from ה' ירא it is deduced that respect for scholars is also enjoined; v. B.K. 41b.
- (29) And its exponents.
- (30) Should not endeavour to bolster up his decision (though realising he has made a mistake) by an advocate, i.e., by trying to think of further arguments to support it, because he is ashamed to change his view.
- (31) Ex. XXIII, 7.
- (32) When trying a case, in order to discuss the arguments with him, for he may suggest wrong views to him.
- (33) To judge, or to give evidence.
- (34) Having concluded from the evidence of the witnesses that they are not speaking the truth.
- (35) In accordance with their evidence.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 31a

the chain [of guilt] will hang round the neck of the witnesses?¹ — Because it is said: From a false matter keep far.

(Mnemonic: Three [of] disciples, Three [of] creditors, Rags, Hearing, Explaining.)

How do we know that a disciple sitting before his master, who sees that the poor man is right and the wealthy man wrong, should not remain silent?² Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. And how do we know that a disciple, who sees his master making a mistake in the law, should not say, I will wait until he finishes, and then upset his decision, and build up [another decision] according to my own judgment, so that the decision will be called by my name? Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. And how do we know that a disciple to whom his master says, 'You know that if I were given a hundred manehs, I would not tell a lie; now, So-and-so owes me one maneh, and I have only one witness against him;' how do we know that the disciple should not join with him?³ — Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. — Is this, then, deduced from: From a false matter keep far? Surely this is definitely lying, and the Divine Law said: Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour!⁴ — Well, then, for example, if he said to him, 'I have definitely one witness; and you come and stand there,⁵ and you need not say anything, so that you will not be uttering a lie from your mouth;⁶ even so it is prohibited, because It is said: From a false matter keep far.

How do we know that he who has a claim of a hundred zuzim against his neighbour should not say, 'I will claim two hundred, so that he will admit a hundred, and be liable for an oath,⁷ then I will be able to impose an oath upon him from another place'⁸ — Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. And how do we know that, if one has a claim of a hundred zuzim against his neighbour, and sues for two hundred, the debtor should not say, 'I will deny it totally in court, but admit it outside the court, so that I should not be liable for an oath, and he may not impose on me an oath from another place'? Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. And how do we know that, if three persons have a claim of a hundred zuzim against one person,⁹ one should not be the litigant, and the other two, the witnesses, in order that they may extract the hundred zuzim and divide it? Because it is said: From a false matter keep far.

How do we know that, if two come to court, one clothed in rags and the other in fine raiment worth a hundred manehs, they¹⁰ should say to him,¹¹ 'Either dress like him, or dress him like you'¹² — Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. When they¹³ would come before Raba son of R. Huna, he would say to them, 'Remove your fine shoes, and come down for your case.'

How do we know that a judge should not hear the words of one litigant before the other litigant arrives? — Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. And how do we know that a litigant should not explain his case to the judge before the other litigant arrives? — Because it is said: From a false matter keep far. R. Kahana learnt [these deductions] from: Thou shalt not utter [a false report]:¹⁴ thou shalt not cause to be uttered.¹⁵

And did that which is not good among his people:¹⁶ Rab said this refers to one who comes with power of attorney;¹⁷ and Samuel said it refers to one who buys a field about which there are disputes.¹⁸

AND IT APPLIES ONLY TO THOSE LIABLE TO BEAR WITNESS, etc. What does this exclude? — R. Papa said, it excludes a king;¹⁹ and R. Aha b. Jacob said, it excludes a dice player.²⁰ He who says [it excludes] a dice player certainly [holds it excludes] a king;²¹ but he who says [it excludes] a king [holds it does not exclude] a dice player, for he is fit [to be a witness] according to Holy Writ, and it is the Rabbis who have disqualified him.²²

BEFORE THE BETH DIN OR NOT BEFORE THE BETH DIN, etc. In what do they disagree?²³ — Said the Scholars to R. Papa: They disagree [as to whether we say,] 'deduce from it, and [entirely] from it'; or, 'deduce from it, and establish it in its own place'.²⁴ R. Meir holds, 'deduce from it, and [entirely] from it'. 'Deduce from it':²⁵ just as [in the case of] a deposit, if he swears of his own accord,²⁶ he is liable, so [in the case of] testimony, if he swears of his own accord, he is liable;²⁷ 'and [entirely] from it' — just as [in the case of] a deposit [he is liable] whether [he utters the oath] before the Beth Din or not before the Beth Din,²⁸ so [in the case of] testimony [he is liable] whether [he utters the oath] before the Beth Din or not before the Beth Din. And the Rabbis²⁹ hold, 'deduce from it, and establish it in its own place': 'Deduce from it':³⁰ just as [in the case of] a deposit, if he swears of his own accord, he is liable, so [in the case of] testimony, if he swears of his own accord, he is liable; ‘and establish it in its own place’: just as when adjured by others, [he is liable only if he swears] before the Beth Din,³¹ but not [if he swears] not before the Beth Din, so if he swears of his own accord, before the Beth Din he is liable, but if not before the Beth Din he is not liable.

- (1) The guilt will be on their heads.
- (2) If his master has come to the opposite conclusion.
- (3) With the witness to give evidence, in order that there should be two witnesses.
- (4) Ex. XX, 13.
- (5) In the court.
- (6) But the debtor will think you have come to give evidence, and will perhaps admit the debt of his own accord.
- (7) He who admits a portion of a claim (מוודה במקצת) takes an oath that he owes no more, and is exempt.
- (8) I.e., in connection with another claim which he totally denied (כופר הכל), and for which no oath could be imposed; but since he has to take an oath in this case, the court can at the same time include the previous claim in the oath.
- (9) And have no witnesses.
- (10) The court.
- (11) The well dressed man.
- (12) In order that the judges be not biased in your favour, and the poorly dressed man be not intimidated.
- (13) Litigants.
- (14) Ex. XXIII, 1, lit., ‘thou shalt not take up, or accept’; a warning to the judge not to hear one litigant before the arrival of the other, because the litigant, in his opponent’s absence, may be tempted to lie.
- (15) Reading the same Hebrew word, תשא, with different vowels (the Hiphil): ‘thou shalt not cause to be accepted’; a warning to the litigant not to explain his case to the judge in his opponent’s absence, because he may be tempted to lie, and will thereby cause the judge to accept a false report, v. Sanh. 7b.
- (16) Ezek. XVIII, 18.
- (17) He is authorised by one of the litigants to take his place; he is doing ‘that which is not good among his people’, if he undertakes it merely out of love of contention and litigation, for the litigant himself might have been willing to compromise, whereas he presses for the full amount of the claim. If, however, the litigant himself is not able to appear for some reason, and he is acting on his behalf, in order to obtain his money for him, he is doing a meritorious act; v. Tosaf. a.l.
- (18) The title of which is disputed; this man buys it, relying on his strength to resist other claimants.
- (19) ‘Thou shalt set a king over thee (Deut. XVII, 15); he must be respected, and it is therefore not seemly that he should stand as a witness before the Judge; and since he cannot be a witness (Sanh. 18a), the oath of testimony does not apply.
- (20) A gambler, since he is willing to retain money won by him which is not really his, is disqualified by the Sages from being a witness. The Torah disqualifies only עד חמם (Ex. XXIII, 1). ‘a witness of violence’, i.e., who has been guilty of robbery by violence.
- (21) For a dice player is disqualified only by the Sages, whereas a king is disqualified by the Torah.
- (22) And, therefore, though we do not accept him as a witness owing to the Sages’ disqualification, the oath of testimony applies in his case, for, according to the Torah, he may be a witness.
- (23) R. Meir and the Sages, in the Mishnah; i.e., on what principle do they differ?
- (24) Where Holy Writ does not explicitly state the law concerning a certain subject, and it is necessary to deduce it by גזרה שוה from another subject concerning which Holy Writ states the law explicitly, we may either deduce one from the other entirely (i.e. liken the unexplained subject to the explained subject in every respect), or deduce only one point, and, as for the rest, leave the unexplained subject in its own place, i.e., leave it to be governed by the rules which govern other aspects of it.
- (25) [Adopting reading of MS.M.] By גזרה שוה: in the case of a deposit it is said תחטא if any one sin (Lev. V, 21), and in the case of the oath of testimony it is also said תחטא (Lev. V, 1).
- (26) Lev. V, 24: about which he hath sworn falsely (i.e., of his own accord).
- (27) Though Holy Writ does not specifically say so, but we deduce it by גזרה שוה from the case of a deposit.
- (28) For Holy Writ says: and sweareth falsely (Lev. V, 22) — wherever he swears falsely, not necessarily before the Beth Din.

(30) V. p. 173, n. 8.

(31) Lev. V, 1: he heareth the voice of adjuration . . . if he tell it not, then he shall bear his iniquity — in the place where, if he had told it (i.e., given his testimony), it would have been effective, i.e., before the Beth Din.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 31b

Said R. Papa to them: If the Rabbis deduce it from [the law of] deposit, none disagrees that we 'deduce from it, and [entirely] from it';¹ but this is the reason of the Rabbis; they deduce it by inference from minor to major:² since, if [adjured] by others, he is liable; if [he swears] of his own accord, how much more so should he be liable; and because they deduce it by inference from minor to major, [they hold] it is sufficient for that which is deduced by this inference to be similar to that from which it is deduced:³ just as, if adjured by others, he is liable before the Beth Din only, but not outside the Beth Din; so, if he swears of his own accord, he is liable before the Beth Din only, but not outside the Beth Din. Said the Scholars to R. Papa: How can you say that they do not disagree on [the principle of] 'deduce from it, and [entirely] from it'? Surely we learnt concerning a deposit: The oath of deposit applies to men and women, to non-relatives and relatives, to those qualified [to bear witness] and those unqualified, before the Beth Din and not before the Beth Din, if [uttered] from his own mouth; but if [adjured] by the mouth of others, he is not liable unless he denies it before the Beth Din: this is the opinion of R. Meir. And the Sages say, whether [uttered] by his own mouth or [adjured] by the mouth of others, since he denied it, he is liable.⁴ [Now,] if adjured by the mouth of others, in [the case of] a deposit, how do the Sages know that he is liable?⁵ Is it not because they deduce it from [the case of] testimony?⁶ Hence, you must infer from this that they disagree on [the principle of] 'deduce from it, and [entirely] from it'!⁷ — [R. Papa replied:] From this, yes,⁸ but from the other it is not possible to infer it.

AND THEY ARE LIABLE FOR THE WILFUL TRANSGRESSION OF THE OATH. How do we know this? — For our Rabbis taught: In all of them⁹ it is said, and it be hid [from him]; but here it is not said, and it be hid, in order to make him liable for wilful as for unwitting transgression.¹⁰

AND FOR ITS UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION COUPLED WITH WILFUL [DENIAL OF KNOWLEDGE OF] TESTIMONY. How is unwitting transgression possible coupled with wilful [denial of knowledge of] testimony? — Said Rab Judah that Rab said: If one says, 'I know that this oath is prohibited, but I do not know if one is liable to bring an offering for it or not.'

BUT THEY ARE NOT LIABLE FOR ITS UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION ONLY. Shall we say that we are here taught [a confirmation of] that which R. Kahana and R. Assi [were told]?¹¹ — No! Although we learnt it [here], it was necessary,¹² for I might have thought, here,¹³ because it is not written and it be hid, we require unwitting to be like wilful transgression;¹⁴ but there,¹⁵ since it is written and it be hid, even unwitting transgression in a slight degree [makes him liable],¹⁶ therefore he¹⁷ teaches us [that this is not so].¹⁸

MISHNAH. WHAT KIND IS THE OATH OF TESTIMONY? HE SAID TO TWO [PERSONS]: 'COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME'; [AND THEY REPLIED:] 'WE SWEAR WE KNOW NO TESTIMONY FOR YOU'; OR THEY SAID TO HIM: 'WE KNOW NO TESTIMONY FOR YOU', [AND HE SAID:] 'I ADJURE YOU', AND THEY SAID, 'AMEN!', THEY ARE LIABLE.¹⁹ IF HE ADJURED THEM FIVE TIMES OUTSIDE THE BETH DIN,²⁰ AND THEY CAME TO THE BETH DIN, AND ADMITTED [KNOWLEDGE OF TESTIMONY], THEY ARE EXEMPT;²¹ BUT IF THEY DENIED,²² THEY ARE LIABLE FOR EACH [OATH].²³ IF HE ADJURED THEM FIVE TIMES BEFORE THE BETH DIN, AND THEY DENIED [KNOWLEDGE OF TESTIMONY], THEY ARE LIABLE ONLY ONCE. SAID R. SIMEON:

WHAT IS THE REASON?²⁴ BECAUSE THEY CANNOT AFTERWARDS ADMIT [KNOWLEDGE].²⁵ IF BOTH [PERSONS] DENIED [KNOWLEDGE] TOGETHER,²⁶ THEY ARE BOTH LIABLE; IF ONE AFTER ANOTHER, THE FIRST IS LIABLE, AND THE SECOND EXEMPT.²⁷ IF ONE DENIED, AND THE OTHER ADMITTED, THE ONE WHO DENIED IS LIABLE. IF THERE WERE TWO SETS OF WITNESSES, AND THE FIRST DENIED, AND THEN THE SECOND DENIED, THEY ARE BOTH LIABLE, BECAUSE THE TESTIMONY COULD BE UPHOLD BY [EITHER OF] THE TWO.

GEMARA. Samuel said: If they²⁸ saw him running after them, and they said to him, 'Why are you running after us? We swear we know no testimony for you', they are exempt, [being liable only] when they hear from his mouth.²⁹ — What does he teach us? We have learnt it: If he sent [the adjuration] by his slave,³⁰ or if the defendant said to them: 'I adjure you that, if you know any testimony for him,³¹ you should come and bear testimony for him', they are exempt³²

- (1) And the Sages would therefore hold that if he swore of his own accord even outside the Beth Din he would be liable.
 - (2) From oath of testimony itself, and not from deposit at all.
 - (3) The principle of dayyo (v. B.K. 25a) is that the derived law cannot logically be stricter than the original law.
 - (4) Even if he denied it outside the Beth Din.
 - (5) For Holy Writ says: he hath sworn falsely (Lev. V, 24), implying of his own accord.
 - (6) By גזרה שוה, v. p. 173, n. 8.
 - (7) Since they hold that, in the case of deposit, even where adjured by others, he is liable even outside the Beth Din, obviously they deduce liability for adjuration by others from the case of testimony, though they do not make the case of deposit entirely like the case of testimony; for in the latter they hold the denial must always be before the Beth Din; whereas in the case of deposit, once they have deduced that there is liability for adjuration by others, they say, 'establish it in its own place', i.e., make the law of adjuration by others equal to the law of swearing of his own accord, which (in the case of a deposit) does not need to be before the Beth Din.
 - (8) We certainly infer that the Sages hold 'deduce from it, and establish it in its own place'; but from our Mishnah it is not possible to draw this inference, for it may be that the Sages deduce their ruling by inference from minor to major, as explained above.
 - (9) Laws of uncleanness and oath of utterance; Lev. V, 2-4.
 - (10) V. supra p. 136, for notes.
 - (11) Supra 26a; Rab re-assured the one who had sworn falsely by telling him he had committed no offence, since he had made a genuine mistake. Why was it necessary for Rab to re-assure him? Does not this mishnah teach us that one is not liable for absolutely unwitting transgression?
 - (12) For Rab to re-assure them in the case of oath of utterance.
 - (13) In the case of oath of testimony.
 - (14) But for a genuine mistake he is not liable.
 - (15) In the case of oath of utterance.
 - (16) For Holy Writ says he must bring an offering even if 'it be hid from him', i.e., even if he made a mistake.
 - (17) Rab, in re-assuring R. Kahana and R. Assi.
 - (18) But that even in the case of oath of utterance there is no liability for a genuine mistake.
 - (19) If they really knew testimony, and thus swore falsely.
 - (20) And they denied knowledge of testimony.
 - (21) Because denial outside the Beth Din does not make them liable.
 - (22) Before the Beth Din.
 - (23) Sworn outside.
 - (24) Why are they not liable for all the oaths?
 - (25) If they denied knowledge of testimony immediately after the first adjuration before the Beth Din, they are no longer able to bear testimony (for the principle that one cannot testify again after having testified once, v. Sanh. 44b). Hence, even if they denied it at the end, all the adjurations except the first are in vain; for, if silence at the beginning implies denial, they cannot be adjured again; and if silence at the beginning implies acquiescence (that they do know testimony), why the further oaths? But adjurations outside the Beth Din are all counted, because denial outside does not impose liability, and they can still bear testimony, and can therefore be adjured again and again; then, when they deny the knowledge at the Beth Din they are liable for all the adjurations.

(26) Or, within a short time of each other's denial; v. infra 32a.

(27) For since the first denied knowledge, there is only one witness left, and one witness is not liable to bear testimony.

(28) The witnesses.

(29) 'Come and bear testimony for me.'

(30) He sent his slave to adjure them to bear testimony for him.

(31) The plaintiff.

(32) If they falsely deny knowledge of testimony.

unless they hear [the adjuration] from the mouth of the plaintiff!¹ — ‘If he ran after them’ he requires [to tell us]: I might have thought that, since he ran after them, it is as if he had said to them,² therefore he teaches us [that it is not so]. But this we have also learnt:³ What is the oath of testimony? He said to witnesses, ‘COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME’, [AND THEY REPLIED,] ‘WE SWEAR etc.’, [implying only] if he said, [‘Come and bear testimony’,] they are liable, but if he did not say it, they are not liable! — ‘HE SAID’ is not necessarily stressed [by the Mishnah],⁴ for if you will not say thus, then, with reference to deposit, where we learnt: What is the oath of deposit? He said to him, ‘Give me the deposit that you have of mine’,⁵ will you also say that if he said, [‘Give me the deposit’,] he⁶ is liable, and if he did not say it, he is not liable?⁷ [That cannot be,] for [the verse] and deal falsely with his neighbour⁸ [implies] in however slight a degree.⁹ Hence, ‘HE SAID’ is not stressed [in that mishnah], and here also it is not stressed.¹⁰ What is this!¹¹ Granted, if you say that ‘HE SAID’ here [in our Mishnah] is stressed, he states it there¹² because of here;¹³ but if you say, neither ‘HE SAID’ there is stressed nor ‘HE SAID’ here is stressed, why does the Mishnah say ‘HE SAID’ in both places?¹⁴ — Perhaps because it is the usual thing,¹⁵ therefore he¹⁶ teaches us [that it is to be taken literally]. It was taught in agreement with Samuel: If they saw him coming after them, and said to him: ‘Why are you coming after us? We swear we know no testimony for you’, they are exempt; but in the case of a deposit, they are liable.

IF HE ADJURED THEM FIVE TIMES, etc. How do we know that for denial in the Beth Din they are liable, but outside the Beth Din they are not liable? — Abaye said: Scripture says, If he tell it not, he shall bear his iniquity;¹⁷ I do not say to you [that he bears his iniquity]¹⁸ except in the place where, if he would tell [his evidence], the other would be liable to pay money.¹⁹ Said R. Papa to Abaye: If so, say the oath itself, if [uttered] before the Beth Din, makes him liable, if not before the Beth Din, does not! — That cannot enter our minds, for we learnt: [Scripture says: when he shall be guilty] in one [of these things]²⁰ — to make him liable for each one; and if it enters your mind [to say it must be uttered] before the Beth Din, is he then liable for each one? Surely we learnt: IF HE ADJURED THEM FIVE TIMES BEFORE THE BETH DIN, AND THEY DENIED IT, THEY ARE LIABLE ONLY ONCE. SAID R. SIMEON: WHAT IS THE REASON? BECAUSE THEY CANNOT AFTERWARDS ADMIT IT. Hence, we deduce from this, the oath [must be uttered] outside the Beth Din, and denial [must be] before the Beth Din.

IF THEY BOTH DENIED IT TOGETHER, THEY ARE BOTH LIABLE. But it is impossible to ascertain simultaneity!²¹ — R. Hisda said: This is in accordance with the view of R. Jose the Galilean, who says it is possible to ascertain simultaneity.²² R. Johanan said: You may even say it is in accordance with the view of the Rabbis,²³ [and the Mishnah means,] for example, they both denied it within the time of an utterance;²⁴ and [two statements following each other] within an interval of the time of an utterance are considered one utterance. Said R. Aha of Difti²⁵ to Rabina: Well, now, within the time of an utterance — what is its duration? As the greeting of a disciple to his Master (some say, as the greeting of a Master to his disciple);²⁶ now, till they say, ‘We swear, we know no testimony for you’, the duration is longer!²⁷ — He said to him: Each one within the interval of utterance of his neighbour.²⁸

ONE AFTER ANOTHER, THE FIRST IS LIABLE, AND THE SECOND EXEMPT. Our Mishnah will not be in accordance with the view of this Tanna, for we learnt: If he adjures one witness,²⁹ he is exempt; but R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon makes him liable. Shall we say that they disagree in this: One³⁰ holds that one witness, when he comes [to bear testimony], comes [to make the defendant liable] for an oath; and the other³¹ holds that one witness, when he comes [to bear testimony], comes [to make him liable to pay] money?³² — Can you really think so?³³ Surely Abaye said: All agree in [the case of] the witness of the sotah; and all agree in [the case of] the witnesses of the sotah; and they disagree in [the case of] the witnesses of the sotah.³⁴ All agree in [the case of] one witness;³⁵ and all agree in [the case of] the witness where his³⁶ adversary is suspected of swearing falsely!³⁷ — Well then, all agree that one witness, when he comes [to bear testimony], comes [to make the defendant liable] for an oath; and here, they disagree in this: one³⁸ holds that which causes [extraction of] money is counted as [if it had actually extracted] money;³⁹ and the other holds it is not counted as [if it had actually extracted] money.

[To revert to] the text above: ‘Abaye said: All agree in [the case of] the witness of the sotah; and all agree in [the case of] the witnesses of the sotah, and they disagree in [the case of] the witnesses of the sotah. All agree in [the case of] one witness, and all agree in [the case of] the witness where his adversary is suspected of swearing falsely.’ ‘All agree in [the case of] the witness of the sotah that he is liable’ — the witness of defilement,⁴⁰ for Scripture believes him, as it is written: and there be no witness against her⁴¹ — as long as there is [some testimony] against her. ‘And all agree in [the case of] the witnesses of the sotah that they are exempt’ — the witnesses of jealousy, for they are the cause of a cause.⁴²

- (1) Infra 35a; why, then, does Samuel need to tell us his ruling? It is already taught in a Mishnah!
 - (2) ‘Come and bear testimony.’
 - (3) That he must definitely ask them, and running after them is of no avail.
 - (4) And, were it not for Samuel, we might have thought that if he ran after them, they are also liable.
 - (5) infra 36b.
 - (6) The bailee.
 - (7) If the bailee denied on oath having the deposit, will you say he is not liable, if the depositor did not in the first place ask for it!
 - (8) Lev. V, 21.
 - (9) As long as he deals falsely (i.e., denies the deposit), he is liable.
 - (10) We would therefore have thought that if he ran after the witnesses (even if he did not say, ‘Come and bear testimony’), they are liable; therefore Samuel must teach us that they are not.
 - (11) This is no argument.
 - (12) In connection with deposit, though it is not intended to be taken literally there.
 - (13) In our Mishnah it has to be stated, and is intended to be taken literally.
 - (14) Let them both be omitted. Obviously therefore we must say that at least in our Mishnah ‘HE SAID’ is to be taken literally; why, therefore, does Samuel need to tell us his ruling? It is implicit in the Mishnah!
 - (15) We might have thought that the Mishnah mentions ‘HE SAID’, not because it is to be taken literally, but because it is usual for the plaintiff to say, ‘Come and bear testimony for me.’
 - (16) Samuel.
 - (17) Lev. V, 1.
 - (18) For denying knowledge of testimony.
 - (19) The emphasis is on ‘tell’, ‘declare’, i.e., before the Beth Din.
 - (20) Lev. V, 5.
 - (21) How can we know if both witnesses denied it actually simultaneously?
 - (22) Bek. 9a.
 - (23) Who disagree (loc. cit.) with R. Jose.
 - (24) Which is explained below as the time required for the greeting: ‘Peace be upon thee, my Master!’
 - (25) [Dibtha on the Tigris, v. Die Landschaft Babylonien Obermeyer, J. p. 197.]
 - (26) ‘Peace be upon thee.’
 - (27) These words cannot be said in the time that a greeting can be uttered, for the greeting (in Hebrew) is three words, whereas the oath (in Hebrew) is six words.
 - (28) The interval elapsing between the denials of the two witnesses must not be longer than the time taken to utter the greeting.
 - (29) And he denies knowledge of testimony, he is exempt from bringing the offering.
 - (30) The first Tanna holds that one witness is not sufficient to make the defendant liable to pay what the plaintiff demands, but can only make him take an oath denying liability (v. infra 40a), and therefore, his testimony being ineffective, the witness, if he denies knowledge of testimony, is not liable to bring an offering.

(31) R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon.

(32) Though Scripture says: One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin (Deut. XIX, 15), R. Eleazar holds it refers only to stripes or other punishment, but one witness is sufficient in money matters; therefore, if one witness denies knowledge of testimony, he is liable. Our Mishnah, in exempting the second witness, is therefore not in accordance with the view of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon.

(34) Wife suspected by husband of unfaithfulness, Num. V, 11-31; all agree that in certain circumstances even if one witness of the sotah is adjured and denies knowledge he is liable; and in certain circumstances even if two witnesses are adjured and deny knowledge they are exempt; and in certain circumstances if two witnesses are adjured, R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon and the Sages disagree, the former holding they are liable, and the latter that they are exempt. The circumstances are explained below.

(35) That in certain circumstances (such as those at which R. Abba was present; infra 32b) he is liable, if he denies on oath knowledge of testimony.

(36) The reference will be explained infra.

(37) That he is liable (v. infra 32b for reason). Now the reason for R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon's view that in certain circumstances witnesses of the sotah who are adjured are liable, is explained below by Abaye to be that they are the cause of pecuniary loss and this is so also in the case of one witness (in money matters) who, though his testimony is insufficient to extract money, is yet liable, if adjured, because he is the cause of pecuniary loss, for he makes the defendant take an oath (to deny liability), and since the majority of people do not swear falsely, the defendant would have to pay. The witness, therefore, by denying knowledge of testimony, causes pecuniary loss to the plaintiff. This consequently shows that even according to R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon no money can be extracted on the strength of the mere evidence of one witness!

(38) R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, in saying that if one witness is adjured he is liable, though if he had given evidence, he would have made the defendant liable for an oath only.

(39) This witness, though not actually extracting money, causes extraction of money, because the defendant, rather than take an oath, pays the claim.

(40) First there must be two witnesses before whom the husband warns his wife, 'Do not go with So-and-so secretly' (עדי קנוי, witnesses of his jealousy); and two witnesses that she did go secretly with him (עדי סתירה, witnesses of the secret meeting). If now there is one witness that she actually was unfaithful at this secret meeting (עדי טומאה, witness of defilement), the witness is believed, and the husband need not pay his wife her כתובה (marriage settlement). If this witness of defilement avoids giving testimony by swearing falsely that he knows no testimony, he is liable to bring an offering, for he has, by his avoidance of evidence, occasioned a pecuniary loss to the husband (who has to pay his wife the kethubah).

(41) Lev. V. 13; though Scripture says, there is no עד (singular), it is explained (Sotah 31b) that עד (without the qualifying numeral אחד) denotes two witnesses; hence, Scripture means, 'there be not two witnesses', but only one.

(42) Even if they had given evidence, there is still the need of the other two witnesses that the wife had secreted herself with her paramour; and even these latter do not actually benefit the husband directly (by freeing him from paying the kethubah), but indirectly, for by their evidence they cause the wife to drink the 'bitter waters' (Lev. V. 17-24), and possibly, out of fear, she might confess her unfaithfulness, and lose her kethubah. Hence, the עדי סתירה are merely the cause of pecuniary loss, and the עדי קנוי the cause of the cause, i.e., remote and very indirect cause. If, therefore, the עדי קנוי avoided giving evidence by swearing falsely, they are not liable, for they did not directly cause any pecuniary loss.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 32b

'And they disagree in [the case of] the witnesses of the sotah' — the witnesses of the secret meeting; one holds that which causes [extraction of] money is counted as [if it had actually extracted] money, and they are liable; and the other holds it is not counted as [if it had actually extracted] money, and they are exempt.¹

'All agree [in the case of the witness] where his adversary is suspected of swearing falsely'.² 'All agree in [the case of] one witness' [in such circumstances as came] before R. Abba.³ 'All agree [in the case of the witness] where his adversary is suspected of swearing falsely.' Who is suspected? Shall we say the debtor is suspected; and the creditor could say [to the witness]. 'If you would have come to bear testimony for me, I would have sworn, and taken [the debt]'? Let the witness say to him, 'Who says that you would have sworn?'⁴ — Well then, for example, if they are both suspect, in which case it has been said, the oath returns to the one who is bound to take it,⁵ and because he cannot swear,⁶ he pays.⁷

'All agree in [the case of] one witness' [in such circumstances as came] before R. Abba; for there was a man who snatched a bar of silver from his neighbour; they came before R. Ammi, and R. Abba was sitting before him. He⁸ went and brought one witness that he had snatched it from him. The other said, 'Yes, I snatched it, but it is mine that I snatched'. Said R. Ammi: How shall judges settle this dispute? Shall he pay? There are not two witnesses. Shall he be exempt? There is one witness that he snatched it. Shall he swear? Since he said, 'Yes, I snatched it, but it is mine that [snatched]', he is like a robber.⁹ R. Abba said to him: He is bound to take an oath,¹⁰ and he cannot swear; and anyone who is bound to take an oath, and cannot swear, pays.¹¹

R. Papa said: All agree in [the case of] a witness of death¹² that he is liable; and all agree in [the case of] a witness of death that he is exempt. 'All agree in [the case of] a witness of death that he is exempt', — if he told it to her,¹³ and did not tell it to the Beth Din; for we learnt: A woman who said, 'My husband died', may remarry; 'my husband died', marries her brother-in-law.¹⁴ 'All agree in [the case of] a witness of death that he is liable,' — if he told it neither to her nor to the Beth Din.¹⁵ Can we deduce from this that if one adjures witnesses in connection with land [and they deny knowledge of testimony], they are liable?¹⁶ — No! Perhaps she had seized movables.¹⁷

IF ONE DENIED, AND THE OTHER ADMITTED, etc. Now, if in the case of one after another where both deny, you say the first is liable,¹⁸ and the second exempt, in the case where one denies and the other admits, is there any question?¹⁹ — It is not necessary [for the Mishnah to tell us this except in the case] where both denied, and then one of them turned and admitted within the interval of the time of an utterance; and this he teaches us, that [two statements following each other] within the interval of the time of an utterance are considered one utterance.²⁰ Granted, according to R. Hisda who explains that [clause]²¹ as being in accordance with the view of R. Jose the Galilean;²² the first clause [establishes that] it is possible to ascertain simultaneity, and the second clause²³ is necessary in order to teach us that [two statements following each other] within the interval of the time of an utterance are considered one utterance; but, according to R. Johanan, the first clause [teaches us the law with regard to statements uttered] within the interval of the time of an utterance, and the second clause [teaches us the law with regard to statements uttered] within the interval of the time of an utterance! Why do we need both? — You might have thought that only in the case of denial and denial²⁴ [do we say that two statements within a brief interval are considered one],²⁵ but in the case of denial and admission²⁶ we do not say this, therefore he teaches us [that we do].

IF THERE WERE TWO SETS OF WITNESSES, AND THE FIRST DENIED, AND THEN THE SECOND DENIED, [THEY ARE BOTH LIABLE]. Granted, the second should be liable, because the first denied;²⁷ but the first — why [should they be liable]?

(1) If the husband adjures the two witnesses of the secret meeting (עדי סתירה) to bear testimony for him, and they swear, denying knowledge of testimony, R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon (who regards the causing of pecuniary loss as the direct infliction of a money loss, as is proved by his view imposing liability on one witness who was adjured) will hold they are liable, for by withholding their testimony they cause a pecuniary loss to the husband (for, had they given testimony, the wife might have confessed rather than undergo the ordeal of the 'bitter waters', and the husband would have been exempt from paying the kethubah); but the Sages hold they are not liable, for their testimony would not have directly freed the husband from paying the kethubah.

(2) If there is one witness for a debt, the debtor takes an oath denying liability; but if he is suspected of swearing falsely, the creditor takes an oath that the debt is due, and is paid (infra 44b). If the witness is adjured by the creditor, and denies knowledge of testimony, he is thereby depriving the creditor of his debt, and therefore all agree that in such a case he is liable. [The order of the text in cur. edd. is somewhat disarranged. MS.M. preserves a better order and reading which avoid the needless repetitions in our text, v. D.S.].

(4) Perhaps you would not have wished to swear, and would not have obtained your money. The witness is therefore merely a possible cause of monetary loss (and does not actually deprive the creditor of his money); the Sages (who disagree with R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon) would therefore not hold him liable. Why, then, say that all agree in this case?

(6) Being suspected of swearing falsely.

(7) The witness, therefore, by withholding his testimony in such a case, definitely deprives the creditor of his money, and all agree that he is liable.

(8) The owner of the bar.

(9) A man cannot free himself by saying, 'it is mine that I snatched', for if this excuse were accepted, no robber would ever be liable, even when there were two witnesses that he robbed, for he could always say, 'I admit I took it, but it is my own property'; v. Tosaf. a.l. And since he is like a robber, he cannot take an oath.

(10) He cannot keep it by saying, 'it is mine', for there is a witness that he snatched it from some one else; and property is always presumed to belong to the one in whose possession it has been (unless there is definite proof to the contrary). He must therefore take an oath to deny the statement of the witness. This he cannot do, for he admits that he snatched it (agreeing with the witness), and since he cannot swear, he must return it; v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 156 and notes.

(11) The witness, therefore, if he had withheld his evidence, would have deprived the man of his bar of silver; therefore all agree that he must bring an offering for his false oath in such circumstances.

(12) That a woman's husband had died.

(13) That he knows her husband has died abroad; but when she adjured him to give evidence before the Beth Din, he denied the knowledge. He is not liable, because she can go to the Beth Din herself, and say her husband is dead, and requires no witness. He has therefore not occasioned any monetary loss to her by withholding his evidence, for she is believed, and can obtain her kethubah from the heirs.

(14) If her husband died without issue; Deut. XXV, 5.

(15) If the wife adjures him to give evidence, and he denies having any knowledge, he is liable, for he has deprived her of the kethubah, since he did not tell even her that her husband had died, and she has therefore no information at all on the matter.

(16) The kethubah was collected (in Talmudic times) from immovable property only; the witness of the husband's death is liable, according to R. Papa, if he is adjured and withholds information. But there is already a dispute between Tannaim on this point (v. infra 37b). Let R. Papa then merely say he agrees with one of the Tannaim!

(17) The wife had in her possession during the husband's lifetime some of his movable property; and if the witness had given evidence, she would have retained it in settlement of her kethubah. R. Papa's ruling may refer to such a case, and not to a case where the kethubah has to be collected from immovable property.

(18) Though he could say, 'Why should I be liable? My testimony alone is of no avail, since the other also denies', yet because when he denies, the other had not yet denied, he is liable.

(19) Surely, it is obvious that the first is liable, for the second admits knowing testimony; hence, the first, by withholding testimony, deprives the claimant of his money. Why, then, does the Mishnah mention this clause? It is superfluous!

(20) And the Mishnah does not wish to teach us that the one who denies is liable (for this we know from the previous clause), but that the one who admits is exempt, although he first denied, his admission within the brief interval being accepted, and exempting him.

(23) One denied, and the other admitted.

(24) As in the first clause.

(25) And the second is liable like the first.

(26) The second clause, where the same person first denies, and then admits.

(27) Hence, only the second set were left to bear testimony, and by withholding testimony, they make the claimant incur a loss.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 33a

The second set are still there!¹ — Rabina said: Here we are discussing [a case] where, for example, the second set, at the time of the denial of the first set, were related through their wives;² and their wives were dying: you might have thought [because we say] the majority of dying people actually die [the second set are eligible],³ therefore he teaches us [that they are not], because as yet the wives are not dead.⁴

MISHNAH. 'I ADJURE YOU THAT YOU COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME THAT THERE ARE OF MINE IN THE POSSESSION OF SO-AND-SO A DEPOSIT, LOAN, THEFT, AND LOST OBJECT.'⁵ — 'WE SWEAR WE KNOW NO TESTIMONY FOR YOU': THEY ARE LIABLE ONLY ONCE. 'WE SWEAR WE KNOW NOT THAT THERE ARE OF YOURS IN THE POSSESSION OF SO-AND-SO A DEPOSIT, LOAN, THEFT, AND LOST OBJECT': THEY ARE LIABLE FOR EACH ONE. 'I ADJURE YOU THAT YOU BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME THAT THERE IS OF MINE IN THE POSSESSION OF SO-AND-SO A DEPOSIT OF WHEAT, BARLEY, AND SPELT'. — 'WE SWEAR WE KNOW NO TESTIMONY FOR YOU': THEY ARE LIABLE ONLY ONCE. 'WE SWEAR WE KNOW NO TESTIMONY FOR YOU THAT THERE IS OF YOURS IN THE POSSESSION OF SO-AND-SO A DEPOSIT OF WHEAT, BARLEY, AND SPELT': THEY ARE LIABLE FOR EACH ONE.⁶ — 'I ADJURE YOU THAT YOU COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME THAT SO-AND-SO OWES ME FULL INDEMNITY FOR DAMAGE, OR HALF INDEMNITY,⁷ OR DOUBLE,⁸ OR FOUR OR FIVE TIMES THE AMOUNT;⁹ OR THAT SO-AND-SO VIOLATED MY DAUGHTER, OR SEDUCED MY DAUGHTER;¹⁰ OR THAT MY SON SMOTE ME;¹¹ OR THAT MY NEIGHBOUR INJURED ME, OR SET FIRE TO MY HAYSTACK ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT';¹² [AND THEY DENY KNOWLEDGE OF TESTIMONY] THEY ARE LIABLE.¹³

GEMARA. It was debated: If he adjures witnesses in [a case where] a fine [is imposed],¹⁴ what is the ruling? In accordance with the view of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon who says, let the witnesses come and hear testimony, there is no question;¹⁵ but the question is in accordance with the view of the Rabbis who say, he who admits [an act for which] a fine [is imposed], and then witnesses come, is exempt.¹⁶ But [consider] the Rabbis there,¹⁷ with whom do they agree? Shall we say they agree with R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon here?¹⁸ Surely he says, that which causes [extraction of] money is counted as [if it had extracted] money!¹⁹ — Well then, they agree with the Rabbis here²⁰ who say that which causes [extraction of] money is not counted as [if it had extracted] money: what is the ruling? [Shall we say] since, if he had confessed, he would have been exempt,²¹ he is not denying [a legitimate] money [liability],²² or, since now he did not actually confess, [he is denying a money liability]?²³ — Come and hear: 'I ADJURE YOU THAT YOU COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME THAT SO-AND-SO OWES ME FULL INDEMNITY FOR DAMAGE, OR HALF INDEMNITY'. Now, half indemnity is a fine,²⁴ [and yet they are liable]!²⁵ — [The Mishnah will agree with him] who holds the half indemnity is a liability.²⁶ That is well according to him who holds that the half indemnity is a liability, but according to him who holds it is a fine, what shall we say?²⁷ — [The Mishnah will refer to] the half indemnity of pebbles,²⁸ for which there is a tradition that it is a liability. Come and hear: '[SO-AND-SO OWES ME] DOUBLE'!²⁹ — Because of the principal.³⁰ 'FOUR OR FIVE TIMES THE AMOUNT'! — Because of the principal. — 'SO-AND-SO VIOLATED, OR SEDUCED MY DAUGHTER'!³¹ — Because of the shame and deterioration.³² What does he teach us? It is all liability!³³ — The first clause teaches us one thing, and the last clause teaches us one thing. The first clause teaches us one thing, that the half indemnity of pebbles is a liability.³⁴ The last clause teaches us one thing: 'THAT HE SET FIRE TO MY HAYSTACK ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT' [etc.]. What does this exclude? It excludes the view of R. Nehunia b. Hakkanah, for it was taught: R. Nehunia b. Hakkanah made the Day of

Come and hear: 'I adjure you that you come and bear testimony for me

- (1) To bear testimony; and the first have therefore not occasioned him any loss by withholding their evidence.
- (2) They married two sisters, and therefore were ineligible to bear testimony together in one case.
- (3) Because we assume the wives are counted as dead, therefore the witnesses are no longer related to each other; and since they are now eligible, the first set should be exempt, because the second set are there to give evidence.
- (4) The first set are therefore liable, because they alone are eligible, and by withholding their testimony they make the claimant incur a loss.
- (5) 'I deposited with him some wheat, and he borrowed from me some wheat, and stole from me some wheat, and found some wheat which I had lost'.
- (6) In this clause the claim is under one head (deposit), but of different kinds (wheat, barley, and spelt). In the first clause the claim is under different heads (deposit, loan, theft, lost object), but one kind (e.g., wheat).
- (7) Explained in the Gemara.
- (8) For theft; Ex. XXII, 3.
- (9) If the thief sold or killed the animal he stole, he pays four times its value (for a sheep), and five times its value (for an ox); Ex. XXI, 37.
- (10) He must pay the father for the shame caused to his daughter (בושת), and for the deterioration in her value (פגום).
- (11) Without causing a wound, he must pay for the shame. If he caused a wound, the penalty is death (Sanh. 85b), and the lesser penalty (compensation for בושת) is not inflicted, but is merged in the larger.
- (12) Though the penalty for wounding or setting fire on the Day of Atonement is kareth, the money penalty is also inflicted.
- (13) For they thereby deprive the claimant of his money.
- (14) E.g., for seducing a maid, for which he pays 50 shekels; Deut. XXII, 29. This is a fine (קנס) in contradistinction to a real liability (למזון). Any payment that does not correspond to the amount of damage caused is considered a fine.
- (15) He who admits an act for which a fine is imposed is exempt (B.K. 64b); but if after his confession witnesses give evidence, he is liable, according to R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon. If, therefore, the witnesses withhold their testimony, they cause a pecuniary loss to the injured party, and are therefore liable.
- (16) Do we say this is not a real liability, since a confession would exempt him, and therefore if witnesses are adjured to bear testimony before he confesses, and deny knowledge of testimony, they are exempt; or, since, if they had given evidence before his confession, he would have been liable, they are, by withholding evidence, causing a loss to the claimant, and consequently should be liable?
- (17) Who hold that even if witnesses come after his confession he is still exempt.
- (18) Supra 32a; if one witness is adjured, and denies knowledge, he is liable.
- (19) Therefore, even if we say that confession of a fine, followed by witnesses, still exempts him; the witnesses, who are adjured before the confession, should be liable, because, by withholding their evidence, they cause loss to the claimant.
- (20) Supra 32a.
- (21) Even if witnesses had come later.
- (22) And therefore the witnesses, who are adjured before he confesses, are not liable, though by withholding testimony they cause a loss to the claimant, for that is merely גורם למזון.
- (23) And the witnesses who are adjured are depriving the claimant of money by withholding their testimony, and are therefore liable.
- (24) It is assumed at present that this half indemnity is for the damage caused by a goring ox on the first two occasions while yet a Tam (v. Glos.), Ex. XXI, 35; and this is a fine, B.K. 15a.
- (25) Hence you may deduce that if witnesses for a fine are adjured, they are liable.
- (26) B.K. 15a; hence you cannot solve the problem from the Mishnah.
- (27) How will he explain the half indemnity of the Mishnah?
- (28) If an animal, while walking, treads on pebbles, and they fly out from under its feet, and cause damage to another's property, the owner of the animal pays half the amount of the damage; B.K. 17a.
- (29) For theft; the extra amount above the principal is a fine. The witnesses are liable; hence you may solve your problem.

(30) The witnesses are liable because by withholding evidence they deprive him even of the principal.

(31) For which a fine is imposed; Deut. XXII, 29.

(32) By withholding evidence the witnesses deprive the father of compensation by the seducer (apart from the fine of 50 shekels) for the shame, and also for the deterioration in value of the girl (which sums are מזון, not קנס).

(33) If all the clauses in the Mishnah refer to מזון and not קנס, why does the Mishnah need to enumerate them all? One clause would suffice.

(34) And because the Mishnah mentions this, it mentions also the rest (double, four or five times), for they are equal in that they are either more or less than the principal.

(35) Because he incurs the death penalty (מיתת בית דין) for setting a haystack on fire, he does not pay for the damage; so on the Day of Atonement, because he incurs the penalty of kareth, he does not pay; Keth. 30a. Our Mishnah, in stating that the witnesses are liable if they withhold evidence in the case of a man who set fire to a haystack on the Day of Atonement, obviously holds that had they given evidence he would have had to pay, hence it disagrees with R. Nehunia b. Hakkanah. This last clause is therefore inserted to exclude R. Nehunia b. Hakkanah's view.

that So-and-So uttered an evil report about my daughter';¹ [and the witnesses deny knowledge of testimony] they are liable. If he confessed himself, he is exempt!² — This is in accordance with the view of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, who says, let the witnesses come and bear testimony.³ Read then the latter clause: 'If he confessed himself, he is exempt'.⁴ We here thus come round to [the view of] the Rabbis! — It is all in accordance with the view of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon; and thus he means: It is not possible that, if he confessed himself, he should be exempt, except when there are no witnesses at all, and he confessed himself.⁵

MISHNAH. 'I ADJURE YOU THAT YOU COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME THAT I AM A PRIEST, OR, THAT I AM A LEVITE, OR, THAT I AM NOT THE SON OF A DIVORCED WOMAN, OR, THAT I AM NOT THE SON OF A HALUZAH;⁶ THAT SO-AND-SO IS A PRIEST, OR, THAT SO-AND-SO IS A LEVITE, OR, THAT HE IS NOT THE SON OF A DIVORCED WOMAN, OR, THAT HE IS NOT THE SON OF A HALUZAH; THAT SO-AND-SO VIOLATED ANOTHER'S DAUGHTER, OR SEDUCED HIS DAUGHTER; THAT MY SON INJURED ME;⁷ THAT MY NEIGHBOUR INJURED ME,⁸ OR SET FIRE TO MY HAYSTACK ON THE SABBATH,' — THEY ARE EXEMPT.⁹

GEMARA. The reason [they are exempt] is because [he adjured them:] 'SO-AND-SO IS A PRIEST, OR, SO-AND-SO IS A LEVITE',¹⁰ but [if he adjured them:] 'So-and-So owes So-and-So a hundred zuz', they would be liable? Surely he teaches in a later clause: [They are exempt] unless they hear [the adjuration] from the mouth of the claimant!¹¹ — Samuel said: [It refers to a case where] he comes with power of attorney.¹² But the Nehardeans say: We do not write an authorisation on movables!¹³ — That is only when he denies it, but when he does not deny it, we do write.¹⁴

Our Rabbis taught: How do we know that the verse refers only to a money claim? R. Eliezer said, Here¹⁵ it is said: or . . . or;¹⁶ and there¹⁷ it is said: or . . . or;¹⁸ just as there it refers only to a money claim, so here it refers only to a money claim. But let the or . . . or of a murderer¹⁹ prove [that a money claim is not intended], for they are or . . . or, and refer not to a money claim! We deduce or . . . or which are concerned with an oath²⁰ from or . . . or which are concerned with an oath;²¹ and let not the or . . . or of a murderer prove [anything], for they are not concerned with an oath. But let the or . . . or a sotah²² prove, for they are or . . . or,²³ and are concerned with an oath,²⁴ and refer not to a money claim!²⁵ We deduce or . . . or which are concerned with an oath, and not concerned with a priest from or . . . or which are concerned with an oath, and not concerned with a priest; and let not the or . . . or of a murderer prove [anything], for they are not concerned with an oath; nor let the or . . . or of a sotah prove [anything], for, although they are concerned with an oath, they are also concerned with a priest.

R. Akiba said: And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things²⁶ — in some of ‘these things’ he is liable, and in some of ‘these things’ he is exempt: how is this? If he claimed from him money, he²⁷ is liable, if something else, he is exempt.

R. Jose the Galilean said, Behold Scripture says: He being a witness, whether he hath seen or known²⁸ — of such testimony as may be established by seeing without knowing, and by knowing without seeing, the verse deals.²⁹ ‘Seeing without knowing’, how? ‘A hundred zuz I counted out to you before So-and-so and So-and-so.’³⁰ ‘Let So-and-so and So-and-so come and bear testimony.’³¹ This is seeing without knowing. ‘Knowing without seeing’, how? ‘You admitted that you owe me a hundred zuz before So-and-So and So-and-so.’³² ‘Let So-and-so and So-and-so come and bear testimony.’³³ This is knowing without seeing.

R. Simeon said: He is liable here,³⁴ and he is liable in [the case of] deposit; just as there it deals only with a money claim, so here it deals only with a money claim; and further, [we have an argument] from minor to major: Deposit, where the law makes women equal to men, relatives equal to non-relatives, those ineligible [to bear testimony] equal to those eligible, and where he is liable for

(1) That he found her not a virgin when he married her; Deut. XXII, 14. If his allegation is false, he is fined 100 shekels of silver; ibid. 19.

(2) Apparently even if witnesses came later; yet if witnesses are adjured before the confession, and they withhold testimony, they are liable. Hence it is proved that if witnesses for a fine are adjured and withhold testimony they are liable.

(3) Even after confession (cf. p. 187, n. 10), but the question is with reference to the Rabbis.

(4) Apparently even if witnesses come later.

(5) And the confession was not followed by witnesses. We cannot therefore decide the question (according to the Rabbis) whether or not witnesses who are adjured for a fine and withhold testimony, are liable.

(6) A woman (whose husband died without issue) released, by the ceremony of halizah (Deut. XXV, 9), from marrying her husband's brother.

(7) Causing a wound. Since death is inflicted, there is no money payment.

(8) On the Sabbath: the penalty is death.

(9) The witnesses, denying knowledge of testimony, are exempt in all these cases, for they are liable only if by their refusal to testify they cause a monetary loss to the claimant. In the case of ‘So-and-so violated another's daughter’, they are exempt (though causing monetary loss) because it is not the claimant himself who adjures them.

(10) The issue is not monetary.

(12) Our Mishnah, which implies that if it were a money claim the witnesses would be liable even if the person who adjured them was not the claimant, refers to a case where he who adjured the witnesses was authorised by the creditor to claim the debt on his behalf.

(13) B.K. 70a.

(14) Should then the debtor deny the claim after the authorisation was given, the witnesses, by withholding their testimony, would cause a loss to the claimant, and therefore be liable.

(15) In connection with the oath of testimony.

(16) Lev. V, 1: or saw or knew.

(17) In connection with the oath of deposit.

(18) Lev. V, 21: in a deposit or pledge or robbery, or oppressed his neighbour.

(19) Num. XXXV, 18-21: or if he smote him with a weapon of wood . . . or hurled at him . . . or in enmity smote him.

(20) Oath of testimony.

 (26) Lev. V, 5.
 (27) The witness who withholds testimony.
 (28) Lev. V, 1.
 (29) And this is only possible in a money claim, as he explains.
 (30) The claimant says to the debtor: 'The witnesses saw me counting out the money to you, but I did not tell them if it was a gift or loan or repayment of debt.'
 (31) The debtor replies: 'If they testify that they saw you counting out the money to me, I will pay you.'
 (32) They did not see the transaction; they only heard your admission, and therefore know that you owe me the money.
 (33) That they heard my admission, and I will pay you.
 (34) In the case of oath of testimony.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 34a

each [oath], whether [uttered] before the Beth Din or not before the Beth Din,¹ yet deals only with a money claim; testimony, where the law does not make women equal to men, relatives equal to non-relatives, those ineligible [to bear testimony] equal to those eligible, and where he is liable only once [if adjured] before the Beth Din, how much more that it should deal only with a money claim!² — [No! We may argue:] Deposit [is restricted to money claims] because the law does not make him who is adjured [by others] equal to him who swears [of his own accord], or him who swears wilfully like him who swears unwittingly; but how can you say in [the case of] testimony [that it should be restricted to money claims], since the law makes him who is adjured [by others] equal to him who swears [of his own accord], and him who swears wilfully equal to him who swears unwittingly? — It is said: sin, sin, for deduction by analogy;³ here⁴ it is said: [If any one] sin,⁵ and there⁶ it is said: [If any one] sin;⁷ just as there it deals only with a money claim, so here it deals only with a money claim.

Rabbah b. Ulla raised an objection:⁸ Or . . . or of [the oath of] utterance⁹ will prove [that a money claim is not intended], for they are or . . . or, and are concerned with an oath, and not concerned with a priest, and yet deal not with a money claim!¹⁰ — It is more reasonable to deduce it from deposit, because [we may deduce] 'sin'¹¹ from 'sin'.¹² — On the contrary, we should deduce it from [the oath of] utterance, for [we may deduce] sin offering from sin offering!¹³ — Well, it is more reasonable to deduce it from deposit, because [they are both equal in respect of] sin,¹⁴ wilful,¹⁵ claim and denial,¹⁶ past.¹⁷ On the contrary, we should deduce it from [oath of] utterance, because [they are both equal in respect of] sin offering, sliding scale, fifth!¹⁸ — The others are more.¹⁹

'R. Akiba said: And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things — in some of these things he is liable, and in some of these things he is exempt; how is this? If he claimed from him money, he is liable; if he claimed from him something else, he is exempt.'²⁰ Let me reverse it!²¹ — R. Akiba relies on the or . . . or of R. Eliezer.²² — [If so,] what is the difference between R. Eliezer and R. Akiba?²³ — The difference between them is, if he adjures witnesses for land: according to R. Eliezer²⁴ they are liable, according to R. Akiba they are exempt. — But according to R. Johanan who says there²⁵ that if he adjures witnesses for land, they are exempt even according to R. Eliezer, what will be the difference here between R. Eliezer and R. Akiba? — The difference between them will be witnesses for a fine.²⁶

'R. Jose the Galilean said: He being a witness, whether he hath seen or known — of such testimony as may be established by seeing without knowing, and by knowing without seeing, the verse deals.'²⁷ R. Papa said to Abaye: Shall we say that R. Jose the Galilean²⁸ does not agree with R. Aha? For it was taught: R. Aha said; If a camel copulates among other camels, and one camel is found killed at his side, it is known that he killed him.²⁹ Now, if he would agree with R. Aha, it is possible also in capital cases, as [in the incident related by] R. Simeon b. Shetah, for we learnt, R. Simeon b. Shetah said; May I not see the consolation [of Zion] if I did not see a man running after his neighbour into a ruin, and I ran after him, and found him with a sword in his hand with the blood dripping, and the victim writhing in agony. I said to him: ‘Wicked one! Who killed this man? I or you? But what can I do, since your blood is not given into my hand, for Scripture says: At the mouth of two witnesses, or three witnesses, shall he that is to die be put to death.’³⁰ But the Omnipresent will exact retribution from you!’ It is said, they had not yet moved from there, when a serpent bit him, and he died!³¹ — You may say, he does agree with R. Aha. Granted, knowing without seeing is possible,³² but seeing without knowing how is that possible?³³ Does he not need to know if he killed a heathen or a Jew,³⁴ if he killed a man suffering from a fatal disease or a healthy man?

We may deduce that R. Jose the Galilean holds that if he adjures witnesses for a fine,³⁵ they are exempt, for if you will say they are liable, granted that knowing without seeing is possible,³⁶ but seeing without knowing — [how is that possible]? Does he not need to know if he cohabited with a heathen woman or a Jewish woman, with a virgin or with a woman who is not a virgin?³⁷

R. Hamnuna sat before Rab Judah, and Rab Judah sat and enquired; [If one said;] ‘A hundred zuz I counted out to you before So-and-So and So-and-So’;

(2) If the law concerning the oath of deposit, which has a more universal application, is yet restricted to money claims only, the law concerning the oath of testimony, which is restricted in many points, should the more so be restricted to money claims.

(3) A Gezerah shawah, v. Glos.

(4) In the case of oath of testimony.

(5) Lev. V. 1.

(6) In the case of oath of deposit.

(7) Lev. V, 21.

(8) To the deduction of R. Eliezer; supra 33b.

(9) Lev. V, 4: Or if any one swear . . . to do evil, or to do good.

(10) Therefore let us say that the oath of testimony also does not deal with a money claim.

(11) Lev. V. 1: if any one sin (referring to oath of testimony).

(12) Ibid. 21: if any one sin (referring to oath of deposit).

(13) For transgression of oath of testimony, or oath of utterance, a sin offering (sliding scale sacrifice) is brought, whereas for transgression of oath of deposit a guilt offering is brought.

(14) In both testimony and deposit the phrase if any one sin occurs.

(15) In both an offering is brought for wilful transgression, whereas in the case of oath of utterance an offering is brought only for unwitting transgression.

(16) In both the oath is the result of a claim and a denial.

(17) In both the oath is in the past (‘We did not see you lend money to So-and-so’ — testimony. ‘You did not deposit anything with me’ — deposit); but the oath of utterance is mainly concerned with the future (‘I swear I shall eat’), for Scripture clearly implies the future: to do evil, or to do good (though according to R. Akiba it is possible to deduce the past also; supra 25a).

(18) Testimony and utterance entail liability for a sin offering, which is a sliding scale sacrifice, and no fine of a fifth of the principal is imposed, whereas in the case of deposit, the liability is for a guilt offering, which is a fixed sacrifice, and a fine of a fifth of the principal is imposed.

(19) Testimony is equal to deposit in four things, and equal to utterance only in three things, hence it is more reasonable to deduce testimony from deposit (and infer that it deals only with money claims) rather than deduce it from utterance (and infer that it is not restricted to money claims).

(21) Why deduce that if the claim is for money the witnesses are liable, and if not, they are exempt? The verse does not mention money claims.

- (22) Supra 33b; R. Eliezer deduces from or . . . or that the oath of testimony refers to money claims only; and on this R. Akiba says that in some cases (of money claims) the witnesses are liable, and in some they are exempt.
- (23) What sort of money claims does R. Akiba exempt?
- (24) Cf. infra 37b.
- (25) Loc. cit.
- (26) According to R. Eliezer who expounds the Torah on the principle of amplification and limitation (v. infra 37b), if he adjures witnesses in a case where only a fine would be imposed, they are liable if they withhold their testimony; according to R. Akiba they are exempt.
- (27) Supra 33b.
- (28) Who holds that only in money matters can there be testimony based on seeing without knowing, and knowing without seeing; but in other matters both seeing and knowing are necessary.
- (29) It is assumed that this camel kicked the other males away, and the owner of this camel must pay for the dead camel. R. Aha thus holds that circumstantial evidence is equivalent to definite knowledge, v. B.B. 93a; Sanh. 37b.
- (30) Deut. XVI, 6.
- (31) V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 235. If R. Jose the Galilean agrees with R. Aha that circumstantial evidence is as good as definite knowledge, why does he say that only in money matters is it possible to have testimony based on knowing without seeing? Hence, he does not agree with R. Aha.
- (32) As in the case of R. Simeon b. Shetah.
- (33) If he sees one person killing another, would that be sufficient to condemn him? Would it not be necessary to know whether or not the victim e.g., suffered from a fatal disease (in which case the murderer does not pay the extreme penalty);? Sanh. 78a? R. Jose therefore rightly says that only in money matters is it possible to have evidence based on seeing without knowing.
- (34) V. B.K. (Sonc. ed.) p. 253, n. 4.
- (35) E.g., to testify that a man had seduced his daughter, for which a fine of 50 shekels is imposed; Deut. XX, 29.
- (36) By circumstantial evidence.
- (37) Since testimony cannot be established by seeing without knowing, R. Jose must hold that when witnesses are adjured in the case of a fine, and they withhold testimony, they are exempt; for he holds that the oath of testimony is applicable only in such a case where testimony may be established by seeing without knowing, and by knowing without seeing.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 34b

and witnesses had been watching him from outside,¹ what [is the ruling]? — R. Hamnuna said to him: And what does that one² plead? If he says, 'The thing never occurred', he is proven a liar.³ If he says, 'Yes, I took [the money], but it was my own that I took', if witnesses come, what happens?⁴ — He said to him: 'Hamnuna, you come and go in'.⁵

A certain [man] said to his neighbour. 'A hundred zuz I counted out to you by the side of this pillar'. He replied to him, 'I did not pass by the side of this pillar'. Two witnesses came and bore testimony that he had urinated by the side of that pillar. Said Resh Lakish, he is proven a liar. R. Nahman raised an objection: This is a Persian judgment!⁶ Did he then say 'never'?⁷ In connection with this affair, he meant.

Some say: A certain [man] said to his neighbour. 'A hundred zuz I counted out to you by the side of this pillar'. He replied to him, 'I never passed by the side of this pillar'. Witnesses came that he had urinated by the side of that pillar. R. Nahman said, he is proven a liar. Said Raba to R. Nahman; Anything which is not imposed upon a man⁸ he will do without being conscious of it.⁹ 'R. Simeon said: He is liable here, and he is liable in [the case of] deposit, etc.'¹⁰ They laughed at it in the West.¹¹ Why the laughter? — Because he states; 'Deposit [is restricted to money claims] because the law does not make him who is adjured [by others] like him who swears [of his own accord], nor him who swears wilfully like him who swears unwittingly.' Now, he who swears of his own accord in [the case of] testimony — how does R. Simeon know [that he is liable]?¹² Because he deduces it from deposit;¹³ then let him also in [the case of] deposit deduce adjuration by others from testimony.¹⁴ But why the laughter? Perhaps R. Simeon deduces it by argument from minor to major: if when adjured by others he is liable, when he swears of his own accord he should the more so be liable?¹⁵ — Well then, the laughter is in connection with ‘wilful like unwitting’, for he states: ‘Deposit [is restricted to money claims] because the law does not make him who is adjured [by others] like him who swears [of his own accord], nor him who swears wilfully like him who swears unwittingly.’ Now for swearing wilfully in [the case of] testimony, how do we know [that he is liable]? Because it is not written, and it be hidden. Here¹⁶ also it is not written, and it be hidden.¹⁷ R. Huna said to them: But why the laughter? Perhaps R. Simeon deduces that wilful [transgression] is not like unwitting in [the case of] deposit from [the law of] trespass [in holy things].¹⁸ — This then is the very reason for the laughter: why does he deduce it from trespass?¹⁹ Let him rather deduce it from testimony!²⁰ — It is more reasonable that he should deduce it from trespass, because it is ‘trespass’ from ‘trespass’!²¹ On the contrary, he should deduce it from testimony, because it is ‘sin’ from ‘sin’.²² It is more reasonable that he should deduce it from trespass, because [they are both equal in respect of] ‘trespass’,²³ all,²⁴ enjoyment,²⁵ fixed offering,²⁶ fifth, and guilt offering. On the contrary, he should deduce it from testimony, because [they are both equal in respect of] ‘sin’,²⁷ layman,²⁸ oath,²⁹ claim and denial,³⁰ and ‘or . . . or’!³¹ — The others are more.³² Well then, why the laughter?³³ — When R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua came from the Academy,³⁴ they said this is the reason for the laughter: Behold R. Simeon deduces by analogy [testimony from deposit].³⁵ Why then does he argue: ‘Deposit [is restricted to money claims] because the law does not make him who is adjured [by others] like him who swears [of his own accord], nor him who swears wilfully like him who swears unwittingly.’³⁶ But why the laughter? Perhaps he argued thus before he established the analogy, but after he established the analogy he does not argue thus.³⁷ But does he not? Surely Raba b. Ithi said to the Sages: Who is the Tanna who holds that [in the case of] the oath of deposit wilful transgression is not atoned for [by an offering]? It is R. Simeon!³⁸ — Perhaps he argues that wilful transgression [is not] like unwitting [in the case of deposit], because he deduces it from trespass³⁹ since [it is equal to it] in more respects; but that adjuration by others [is not] like swearing of his own accord he does not argue.⁴⁰ — Well, let testimony now be in turn deduced from deposit that wilful is not like unwitting transgression; just as [in the case of] deposit he is liable for unwitting but not for wilful transgression, so [in the case of] testimony let him be liable for unwitting and not for wilful transgression; just as he deduces deposit from trespass!⁴¹ —

(1) Unknown to the debtor.

(2) The debtor.

(3) And is not believed on oath, but must pay.

(4) The witnesses only saw him count the money, but they do not know if it was a loan, or gift, or the repayment of a loan.

(5) To the Academy; i.e., you are fit to teach.

(6) An arbitrary decision.

(7) ‘I never passed by this pillar’.

(8) An act which is not of sufficient importance to be done with concentration.

(9) Therefore he may really be unaware that he had urinated near the pillar, and should not be presumed a liar.

(11) [Phrase generally denoting R. Jose b. Hanninah, v. Sanh. 17b.]

(13) Where Scripture implies that only he who swears of his own accord is liable; Lev. V, 21, 22. R. Simeon deduces testimony from deposit by analogy of phrases: תהטא תהטא.

(14) By the same analogy. Why then assume that in the case of deposit adjuration by others does not make him liable? This was the cause of the laughter.

(15) He does not deduce testimony from deposit by גזרה שוה from תהטא תהטא; he argues that in the case of testimony, where Scripture says adjuration by others makes him liable, he should certainly be liable if he swears of his own accord. Since he does not make use of the גזרה שוה, he does not use it for deducing deposit from testimony either.

(16) In the case of deposit.

(17) Therefore let us say that for swearing falsely wilfully he is also liable to bring an offering. Because R. Simeon did not say this, they laughed.

(18) Lev. V, 15: If any one commit a trespass, and sin through error in the holy things. And in the case of deposit Scripture says: If any one sin, and commit a trespass: Lev. V, 21. We deduce deposit from trespass by the גזרה שוה of מעל, מעל: as in the case of trespass an offering is brought only for unwitting transgression, so also in the case of deposit.

(19) And say that wilful transgression is exempt.

(20) And say that wilful transgression is liable.

(21) In both, the word מעל is used.

(22) In both, the word תחטא is used.

(23) In both, מעל is used.

(24) The laws of deposit and trespass are applicable to all people, whereas testimony is limited to those eligible to be witnesses.

(25) In the case of both deposit and trespass the transgressor derives enjoyment and benefit from his transgression (from the deposit or from the holy things), but in the case of testimony the witnesses derive no benefit by withholding testimony.

(26) For deposit and trespass a fixed offering is brought, whereas for testimony a sliding scale sacrifice is brought. In the case of the first two also a fifth of the principal is imposed as a fine, and a guilt offering is brought, but not in the case of testimony. Therefore because deposit and trespass are equal in all these respects, we also equate deposit with trespass to exempt wilful transgression from an offering.

(27) In both deposit and testimony תחטא occurs.

(28) Deposit and testimony are both concerned with laymen, but not so trespass in holy things, where the Temple is the claimant.

(29) The transgression in the case of deposit and testimony is in respect of swearing falsely, but not so in the case of trespass.

(30) The transgression is the result of claim and denial.

(31) In both, 'or . . . or' occurs, which is not the case in trespass, v. supra p. 191.

(32) Deposit is like trespass in more respects than it is like testimony, six instead of five.

(33) For it is really more reasonable to deduce deposit from trespass, and therefore to exempt wilful transgression from an offering.

(34) Be-rab; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 387, n. 7.

(35) Supra 34a; by the גזרה שוה of תחטא תחטא that just as deposit deals only with money claims so testimony deals only with money claims.

(36) Since he uses the גזרה שוה to deduce testimony from deposit, let him use the same גזרה שוה to deduce deposit from testimony for liability in the case of adjuration by others, and for wilful as for unwitting transgression.

(37) But agrees that deposit may be deduced from testimony to make him liable in the case of adjuration by others, and for wilful transgression.

(38) Hence R. Simeon does not use the גזרה שוה to deduce deposit from testimony; and that was the cause of the laughter.

(39) Even after he has established the גזרה שוה of תחטא תחטא (testimony from deposit).

(40) After having established the גזרה שוה, but deduces deposit from testimony that adjuration by others makes him liable. There is therefore no cause for laughter, for he likens deposit to trespass to exempt wilful transgression from an offering (for deposit is like trespass in more respects than it is like testimony); and he likens deposit to testimony (because he has a גזרה שוה) to make him liable in the case of adjuration by others. (He cannot liken it to trespass in this respect, for there is no oath involved.)

(41) Since he has already deduced deposit from trespass that he is not liable for wilful transgression, and since he has a גזרה שוה to equate testimony with deposit, let him say that in the case of testimony also he is not liable for wilful transgression; why does he say that in testimony wilful is like unwitting transgression? Hence the laughter.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 35a

For this reason Scripture wrote testimony near the oath of utterance and near [the laws of] uncleanness in connection with the Temple and the holy food thereof: for in all of them it is said, and it be hidden; and here¹ it is not said, and it be hidden; in order to make him liable for wilful as for unwitting transgression.²

MISHNAH. [IF A MAN SAID,] 'I ADJURE YOU THAT YOU COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME THAT SO-AND-SO PROMISED TO GIVE ME TWO HUNDRED ZUZ, AND DID NOT GIVE ME', THEY ARE EXEMPT, FOR THEY ARE LIABLE ONLY FOR A MONEY CLAIM AS [IN THE CASE OF] DEPOSIT.³ 'I ADJURE YOU THAT, WHEN YOU KNOW ANY TESTIMONY FOR ME, YOU SHOULD COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME,' THEY ARE EXEMPT, BECAUSE THE OATH PRECEDED THE TESTIMONY.⁴ [IF] HE STOOD IN THE SYNAGOGUE AND SAID, 'I ADJURE YOU THAT IF YOU KNOW ANY TESTIMONY FOR ME YOU SHOULD COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME,' THEY ARE EXEMPT⁵ UNLESS HE DIRECTS HIMSELF TO THEM.⁶ HE SAID TO TWO [PERSONS]. 'I ADJURE YOU, SO-AND-SO AND SO-AND-SO, THAT IF YOU KNOW ANY TESTIMONY FOR ME YOU SHOULD COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME,' [AND THEY REPLIED,] 'WE SWEAR WE KNOW NO TESTIMONY FOR YOU;' AND THEY DID KNOW TESTIMONY FOR HIM, [BUT IT WAS EVIDENCE OF] 'ONE WITNESS FROM THE MOUTH OF ANOTHER WITNESS;'⁷ OR IF ONE OF THEM WAS A RELATIVE OR [OTHERWISE] INELIGIBLE [AS A WITNESS], THEY ARE EXEMPT.⁸ IF HE SENT BY THE HAND OF HIS SERVANT;⁹ OR IF THE DEFENDANT SAID TO THEM, 'I ADJURE YOU THAT IF YOU KNOW ANY TESTIMONY FOR HIM YOU SHOULD COME AND BEAR TESTIMONY FOR HIM;' THEY ARE EXEMPT, [BEING LIABLE ONLY] WHEN THEY HEAR [THE ADJURATION] FROM THE MOUTH OF THE CLAIMANT.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught; [If a man says,] 'I adjure you that you come and bear testimony for me that So-and-So promised to give me two hundred zuz, and did not give me'; I might think they should be liable, therefore it is said: [If any one] sin,¹⁰ [if any one] sin,¹¹ for analogy; here¹² it is said; '[if any one] Sin', and there¹³ it is said: '[if any one] sin'; just as there it deals with a claim of money which is due to him, so here it deals with a claim of money which is due to him.

'I ADJURE YOU THAT WHEN YOU KNOW ANY TESTIMONY FOR ME, etc.' Our Sages taught: 'I adjure you that when you know' any testimony for me you should come and bear testimony for me': I might think they should be liable, therefore it is said; and heard the voice of adjuration, he being a witness, whether he hath seen or known¹⁴ — where the testimony precedes the oath, and not where the oath precedes the testimony.

HE STOOD IN THE SYNAGOGUE AND SAID; 'I ADJURE YOU, etc.' Samuel said: Even if his witnesses are among them [they are exempt]. This is obvious!¹⁵ — It is not necessary [for him to tell us this except] where he stands next to them; you might have thought it is as though he said it to them [specifically], therefore he teaches us [that it is not so]. It was also taught likewise: If he saw a company of men standing, and his witnesses were among them, and he said to them, 'I adjure you that if you know any testimony for me you should come and bear testimony for me;' I might think they should be liable, therefore it is said, he being a witness¹⁶ — and here he did not single out his witnesses. I might think that even if he said, 'All who stand here [I adjure]', they are exempt], therefore it is said, 'he being a witness'; and here he did single out his witnesses.

HE SAID TO TWO [PERSONS]: 'I ADJURE YOU, etc.' Our Sages taught: If he said to two [persons]. 'I adjure you, So-and-So and So-and-So, that if you know any testimony for me you should come and bear testimony for me'; and they knew testimony for him, but it was evidence of 'one witness from the mouth of another witness', or if one of them was a relative or [otherwise] ineligible [as a witness]; I might think they should be liable, therefore it is said, if he do not tell it, then he shall bear his iniquity¹⁷ — with those who are eligible to tell, the verse deals.

IF HE SENT BY THE HAND OF HIS SERVANT, etc. Our Sages taught: If he sent by the hand of his servant; or if the defendant said to them, 'I adjure you that if you know any testimony for him you should come and bear testimony for him;' I might think they should be liable, therefore it is said, if he do not tell it, then he shall bear his iniquity. How is the deduction made? — R. Eleazar said: It is written: if he tell it not,¹⁸ [implying] if to him¹⁹ he tell it not, then he shall bear his iniquity; but if to another he tell it not, he is exempt.

MISHNAH. [IF HE SAID.] 'I ADJURE YOU'; 'I COMMAND YOU'; 'I BIND YOU'; THEY ARE LIABLE.²⁰ 'BY HEAVEN AND EARTH!' THEY ARE EXEMPT. 'BY ALEF DALETH';²¹ 'BY YOD HE';²² 'BY SHADDAI';²³ 'BY ZEBAOTH';²⁴ 'BY THE MERCIFUL AND GRACIOUS ONE'; 'BY THE LONG SUFFERING ONE'; 'BY THE ONE ABOUNDING IN KINDNESS'; OR BY ANY OF THE SUBSTITUTES [FOR THE NAME]: THEY ARE LIABLE. HE WHO BLASPHEMES²⁵ BY ANY OF THEM IS LIABLE:²⁶ THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. MEIR; BUT THE SAGES EXEMPT HIM.²⁷ HE WHO CURSES HIS FATHER OR MOTHER BY ANY OF THEM IS LIABLE;²⁸ THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. MEIR; BUT THE SAGES EXEMPT HIM. HE WHO CURSES HIMSELF OR HIS NEIGHBOUR BY ANY OF THEM TRANSGRESSES A NEGATIVE PRECEPT.²⁹ [IF HE SAID,] 'THE LORD³⁰ SMITE YOU'; OR 'GOD SMITE YOU';³¹ THESE ARE THE CURSES WRITTEN IN THE TORAH.³² 'MAY [THE LORD] NOT SMITE YOU'; OR 'MAY HE BLESS YOU'; OR 'MAY HE DO GOOD UNTO YOU [IF YOU BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME]': R. MEIR MAKES [THEM] LIABLE,³³ BUT THE SAGES EXEMPT [THEM].

GEMARA. 'I adjure you:' what does he mean? Rab Judah said; Thus he means: 'I adjure you by the oath stated in the Torah'; 'I command you by the command stated in the Torah'; 'I bind you by the bond stated in the Torah'.³⁴ Abaye said to him: But then what of R. Hiyya who taught; 'I chain you';³⁵ they are liable. Is 'chain' then mentioned in Scripture? — Well, said Abaye. Thus he means: 'I adjure you by oath'; 'I command you by oath', 'I bind you by oath'; 'I chain you by oath'.³⁶ 'BY ALEF DALETH'; 'BY YOD HE, BY SHADDAI'; 'BY ZEBAOTH'; 'BY THE MERCIFUL AND GRACIOUS ONE'; 'BY THE LONG SUFFERING ONE'; 'BY THE ONE ABOUNDING IN KINDNESS'.

Shall we say that Merciful and Gracious are Names?³⁷ This is contradicted [from the following]: There are Names which may be erased;³⁸ and there are Names which may not be erased. These are the Names which may not be erased, such as: 'El',³⁹ 'Eloha',⁴⁰ 'Elohim', 'your God', I am that I am,⁴¹ 'Alef Daleth', 'Yod He', 'Shaddai', 'Zebaoth' — these may not be erased; but the Great, the Mighty, the Revered, the Majestic, the Strong, the Powerful, the Potent, the Merciful and Gracious, the Long Suffering, the One Abounding in Kindness these may be erased!⁴² Abaye said: Our Mishnah means: '[I adjure you] by Him who is Gracious';

(1) In the case of testimony.

(2) Therefore we do not deduce testimony from deposit though we have a גזרה שוה, for it is as though Scripture had expressly stated (by the omission of ונעלם) that in the case of testimony he is liable also for wilful transgression.

(3) Where there is a definite liability; but here, even if the witnesses had given their testimony that he had promised the money, he would not have to pay, for he could say that he had changed his mind.

- (38) Because they are not used solely of the Deity, and are therefore not sacred.
- (39) God.
- (40) V. Vilna Gaon, a.l.
- (41) אֱהִיָּה אֲשֶׁר אֱהִיָּה.
- (42) Hence, Merciful and Gracious are not substitutes for the divine Name.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 35b

'by Him who is Merciful'. Raba said to him: If so, BY HEAVEN AND EARTH also [let us say] it means; 'By Him to whom heaven and earth belong'¹ — That is no question! There, since there is nothing else which is called Merciful and Gracious, it is clear that he means, 'By Him who is Gracious', 'By Him who is Merciful'; but here, since there are heaven and earth, he means, 'By heaven and earth'.

Our Sages taught: If he wrote alef lamed of Elohim, yod he of the Tetragrammaton, they may not be erased;² shin dalet of Shaddai, alef dalet of Adonai, zadi beth of Zebaoth, they may be erased.³ R. Jose said: The whole word Zebaoth may be erased, because Zebaoth refers only to Israel, as it is said: And I will bring forth My hosts, My people the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt.⁴

Samuel said: The halachah is not in accordance with R. Jose.

Our Sages taught: That which is joined to the Name, whether before it or after it,⁵ may be erased. Before it; how? To the Lord; the lamed [‘to’] may be erased; in the Lord: the beth [‘in’] may be erased; and the Lord: the vav [‘and’] may be erased; from the Lord; the mem [‘from’] may be erased; that the Lord; the shin [‘that’] may be erased; interrogative he⁶ before the Lord: the he may be erased; as the Lord: the kaph [‘as’] may be erased. After it: how? Our God: the suffix nu [‘our’] may be erased; their God: the suffix hem [‘their’] may be erased; your God: the suffix kem [‘your’] may be erased. Others say, the suffix may not be erased, for the Name has already hallowed it. R. Huna said: the halachah is in accordance with these others.

(Mnemonic:⁷ Abraham, who cursed, Naboth, in Gibeah of Benjamin, Solomon, Daniel.)

All the Names mentioned in Scripture in connection with Abraham are sacred, except this which is secular: it is said; And he said, ‘My lord, if now I have found favour in thy sight’.⁸ Hanina, the son of R. Joshua's brother, and R. Eleazar b. Azariah in the name of R. Eliezer of Modin, said, this also is sacred.⁹ With whom will [the following] agree? Rab Judah said that Rab said: Greater is hospitality to wayfarers than receiving the Divine Presence. With whom [will this agree]? With this pair.¹⁰

All the Names mentioned in connection with Lot are secular, except this which is sacred: it is said: And Lot said unto them, ‘Oh, not so, my Lord: behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, [and thou hast magnified thy mercy which thou hast shown unto me in saving my life]’¹¹ — He in whose power it is to kill and to revive; that is the Holy One blessed be He.

All the Names mentioned in connection with Naboth¹² are sacred; in connection with Micah¹³ are secular. R. Eliezer said, in connection with Naboth [all are] sacred; in connection with Micah, some are secular, and some sacred: [the Name beginning] alef lamed is secular,¹⁴ yod he¹⁵ is sacred; except this which is alef lamed and is sacred: all the time that the house of God was in Shiloh.¹⁶

All the Names mentioned in connection with Gibeah of Benjamin,¹⁷ R. Eliezer said, are secular; R. Joshua said, are sacred. R. Eliezer said to him: Does He then promise, and not fulfil?¹⁸ — R. Joshua replied to him: What He promised. He fulfilled; but they did not inquire whether [the result would be] victory of defeat;¹⁹ later, when they did inquire [of the Urim and Tummim], they approved their action, as it is said; And Phineas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, stood before it in those days — saying: ‘Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother, or shall I cease?’ [And the Lord said: ‘Go up; for to-morrow I will deliver them into thy hand’].²⁰

Every Solomon mentioned in the Song of Songs is sacred: the Song to Him whose is the peace,²¹ except this: My vineyard, which is mine, is before me; thou, O Solomon, shalt have the thousand²² — Solomon for himself [shall have a thousand]; and two hundred for those that keep the fruit thereof²³ — [viz.] Sages. And there are some who say this also is secular: Behold it is the bed of Solomon²⁴ — ‘This also’, [implies] that the other²⁵ is undoubtedly [secular]. But then what of Samuel who said: A Government which kills Only one out of six²⁶ is not punished; for it is said: My vineyard, which is mine, is before me; thou, O Solomon, shalt have the thousand — for the Kingdom of Heaven;²⁷ and two hundred for those that keep the fruit thereof — for the kingdom on earth.²⁸ Now Samuel is not in agreement with the first Tanna nor with the ‘some who say’!²⁹ — But this is what it means: And some there are who say this³⁰ is sacred, and this is secular — [the verse] about his bed; and Samuel agrees with them.

All Kings mentioned in Daniel are secular except this which is sacred: Thou, O king, king of kings, unto whom the God of heaven hath given the kingdom, the power, and the strength, and the glory.³¹ And some say, this also is sacred; it is said: My Lord, the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine adversaries.³² To whom does he say this? If it should enter your mind that he says it to Nebuchadnezzar — who are those who hate him? Israel! Then he is cursing Israel!³³ And the first Tanna?³⁴ — He holds: Are the enemies [of Nebuchadnezzar] only Israelites? Are there not enemies [too] who are heathens?³⁵

OR BY ANY OF THE SUBSTITUTES [FOR THE NAME], THEY ARE LIABLE, etc. We may cite [the following] in contradiction: The Lord make thee a curse and an oath.³⁶ Why is this stated? Is it not already said: The priest shall cause the woman to swear with the oath of cursing?³⁷ Because it is said: And hear the voice of alah [cursing]:³⁸ here³⁹ it is said ‘alah’, and there⁴⁰ it is said ‘alah’; just as here it implies an oath,⁴¹ so there it implies an oath; just as here it must be by the Name,⁴² so there it must be by the Name.⁴³ — Abaye said: It is no question. This⁴⁴ is [the view of] R. Hanina b. Idi, and that⁴⁵ is [the view of] the Rabbis; for we learnt: R. Hanina b. Idi said: Since the Torah said, ‘Thou shalt swear,’⁴⁶ and ‘thou shalt not swear’;⁴⁷ ‘thou shalt curse’,⁴⁸ and ‘thou shalt not curse’;⁴⁹ [we deduce:] just as ‘thou shalt swear’ means by the Name, so ‘thou shalt not swear’ means by the Name; and just as ‘thou shalt curse’ means by the Name, so ‘thou shalt not curse’ means by the Name.

Now, the Rabbis, if they received on tradition this Gezerah shawah,⁵⁰ let them require the actual Name;⁵¹ and if they did not receive on tradition this Gezerah shawah, how do they know that ‘alah’⁵² implies an oath?⁵³ — They deduce it front [the Baraitha in] which it was taught. ‘Alah’:⁵² ‘alah’ is nothing but the expression of an oath; and so it says: And the priest shall cause the woman to swear with the oath of alah.⁵⁴ But there it is written: the oath of alah!⁵⁵ — Thus he means: ‘alah’; ‘alah’ can only be an oath,⁵⁶ and thus it says: ‘and the priest shall cause the woman to swear with the oath of alah.’

(1) Why does the Mishnah say it is not a proper adjuration, and they are exempt?

(2) Although he had not yet finished the words, because the first two letters also constitute a Name: יה, אלה.

(3) Because צב, אד, שד are not Names. [So Rashi; but MS.M. and R. Han. (v. Tosaf. a.l.) include Alef Daleth in the first group, i.e., among the Names that may not be erased, the reason being that אד as well as יה and אל were commonly used as abbreviations for a Divine name, which was not the case with שד and צב which out of reference for the Divine Name were never used as abbreviations, the former two letters spelling a ‘demon’ (שד), the latter, a ‘great lizard’ (צב). (11) Gen XIX, 18, 19; the verse is read thus: And Lot said unto them. ‘Oh, not so’; then turning to God: ‘My Lord, behold now, Thy servant etc.’ The ordinary interpretation is that Lot is addressing one of the angels.

- (22) Cant. VIII, 12: homiletically interpreted the verse means this: God said: From My vineyard (Israel) Solomon shall have 1,000 men as soldiers out of every 1,200; and 200 shall be left to 'keep the fruit', i.e., study the Torah.
- (23) Ibid.

- (27) Taking Solomon as referring to God.
- (28) Serving the king; 200 for the king, and 1,000 for God = 1,200 altogether; the king is thus permitted one sixth for his army.
- (29) For they all hold that the word Solomon in the verse My vineyard, etc. is secular.

- (33) Hence, we must say that Daniel in saying, 'My lord, the dream, etc.' is addressing God, whose enemies are the heathens.

- (41) Because it is said: the priest shall cause . . . to swear.
- (42) For it is said: The Lord (Tetragrammaton) make thee a curse.
- (43) Hence, adjuration of witnesses must be by the Name, and not by substitutes.
- (44) The Baraitha which states that an oath must be by the Name.

- (48) E.g., the Lord make thee a curse (Num. V, 21).
- (49) E.g., thou shalt not curse the deaf (Lev. XIX, 14).
- (50) V. Glos. The analogy deriving adjuration from sotah. Adjuration (Lev. V, 1): and hear the voice of אלה (cursing); sotah (Num. V, 21): the Lord make thee a אלה (curse) and an oath. Just as אלה used in connection with sotah implies oath (for oath is explicitly mentioned in the verse), so אלה used in connection with adjuration means oath. But if we deduce adjuration from sotah we must carry the deduction further: just as in the case of sotah, the oath was by the Name (for the verse states: the Lord make thee a curse and an oath), so in the case of adjuration it should be by the Name, and not by any substitute. [It is a well established principle that no man may draw a conclusion from a Gezerah shawah unless he received it on tradition from his teacher. Pes. 66a; Nid. 19b.]
- (51) שם המיוחד, the 'Distinguishing Name', the Tetragrammaton; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 408, n. 1.
- (52) Mentioned in Lev. V. 1.
- (53) For in the case of adjuration, oath is not mentioned in the verse.

(54) Num. V, 21. This proves that 'alah' implies an oath.

(55) [This is a new question: the phrase 'the oath of alah' indeed proves that 'alah' implies an oath, but whence do we know that an oath without an accompanying 'alah' (curse) is an oath? V. n. 7.]

(56) [So MS.M. V. Sifra on Lev. V, 1; cur. edd.: with an oath; cf. n. 7.]

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 36a

And whence do we know to make an oath unaccompanied by an alah like an oath accompanied by an alah? Because it is said; and heareth the voice of cursing;¹ and heareth the cursing; and heareth the voice.²

R. Abbahu said: Whence do we know that alah implies an oath? Because it is said: And brought him under an alah;³ and it is written; And he also rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar who made him swear by God.⁴ A Tanna taught: Arur⁵ may imply excommunication,⁶ curse,⁷ or oath. [It implies] excommunication, as it is written: 'Curse ye Meroz', said the angel of the Lord, 'curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof.'⁸ And Ulla said: With four hundred blasts of the trumpet did Barak announce the ban over Meroz.

It implies curse, as it is written: And these shall stand for the curse;⁹ and it is written: Arur be the man that maketh a graven image.¹⁰

It implies oath, as it is written: And Joshua adjured them at that time, saying, Arur be the man before the Lord . . .¹¹ But perhaps two things he did to them: he adjured them, and cursed them!¹² — Well then, from here: And the men of Israel were distressed that day; but Saul adjured the people saying, Arur be the man that eateth;¹³ and it is written: But Jonathan heard not when his father adjured the people.¹⁴ But perhaps here also he did two things to them; he adjured them, and cursed them! — Is it then written: and arur?¹⁵ Now since you have come to this,¹⁶ [you may say] there¹⁷ also it is not written: and arur.

R. Jose b. Hanina said: 'Amen' implies oath,¹⁸ acceptance of words,¹⁹ and confirmation of words.²⁰ It implies oath, as it is written: And the woman shall say, Amen, amen.²¹ It implies acceptance of words, as it is written: Cursed be he that confirmeth not the words of this law to do them, and all the people shall say, Amen.²² It implies confirmation of words, as it is written: And the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen, the Lord do so! The Lord perform thy words!²³

R. Eleazar said: 'No' is an oath; 'Yes' is an oath. Granted, 'No' is an oath, as it is written: And the waters shall no more become a flood;²⁴ and it is written: For this is as the waters of Noah unto Me; for as I have sworn [that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth . . .].²⁵ But that 'Yes' is an oath, how do we know? — It is reasonable; since 'No' is an oath. 'Yes' is also an oath. Said Raba: But only if he said, 'No! No!' twice;²⁶ or he said, 'Yes! Yes!' twice; for it is written: And all flesh shall not be cut off any more by the waters of the floods;²⁷ [and also:] and the waters shall no more become a flood.²⁸ And since 'No' [must be said] twice [to imply an oath]. 'Yes' [must] also [be said] twice.

HE WHO BLASPHEMES BY ANY OF THEM IS LIABLE: THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. MEIR; BUT THE SAGES EXEMPT HIM. Our Rabbis taught: Whosoever curseth his God shall bear his sin.²⁹ Why is it written? Is it not already said: And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord shall surely be put to death?³⁰ — I might think he should be liable only for the actual Name;³¹ whence do we know to include the substitutes? Therefore it is said: Whosoever curseth his God — in any manner; this is the opinion of R. Meir; but the Sages say: for the actual Name, [the penalty is] death;³² for the substitutes, there is a warning.³³

HE WHO CURSES HIS FATHER OR MOTHER, etc. Who are the Sages?³⁴ R. Menahem b. Jose; for we learnt, R. Menahem b. Jose said; When he blasphemeth the Name, he shall be put to death.³⁵ Why is it said: 'Name'?³⁶ It teaches us that he who curses his father or mother is not liable unless he curses them by the Name.

HE WHO CURSES HIMSELF OR HIS NEIGHBOUR, etc. R. Jannai said; This is the view of all.³⁷ [HE WHO CURSES] HIMSELF: as it is written: Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently;³⁸ and as R. Abin said in the name of R. Elai; for he said; Wherever it is said, take heed, lest, or not, it is nothing but a negative precept.³⁹ [HE WHO CURSES] HIS NEIGHBOUR; as it is written: Thou shalt not curse the deaf.⁴⁰

'THE LORD SMITE YOU', OR 'GOD SMITE YOU': THESE ARE THE CURSES WRITTEN IN THE TORAH. R. Kahana sat before Rab Judah, and was reciting this Mishnah as we learnt it. He⁴¹ said to him: Modify it!⁴² One of the Scholars was sitting before R. Kahana and reciting: God will likewise break thee forever; He will take thee up, and pluck thee out of thy tent, and root thee out of the land of the living. Selah.⁴³ He said to him: Modify it! — Why do we require both?⁴⁴ — I might have thought that only the Mishnah [we are permitted to modify], but verses of Scripture we are not permitted to modify; therefore he teaches us [that we are].

'[MAY THE LORD] NOT SMITE YOU'; OR, 'MAY HE BLESS YOU'; OR, 'MAY HE DO GOOD UNTO YOU, [IF YOU BEAR TESTIMONY FOR ME]'; R. MEIR MAKES THEM LIABLE; AND THE SAGES EXEMPT THEM. But R. Meir does not hold that from the negative you may derive the affirmative!⁴⁵ — Reverse it!⁴⁶ When R. Isaac came, he stated the Mishnah as we learnt it.⁴⁷ R. Joseph said; Since we learnt it thus, and when R. Isaac came he also stated it thus, we may infer that we learnt it definitely so. But the question [then] remains!⁴⁸ — He does not hold [that from the negative we derive the affirmative] in money matters, but in prohibitions he holds [this principle].⁴⁹ But the case of sotah is a prohibition, and yet R. Tanhum b. R. Hakinai said; It is written; hinnaki.⁵⁰ The reason is because it is written hinnaki [which may be read as hinki], but were it not for this, [we should not know the affirmative], for we do not say that from the negative you may derive the affirmative!⁵¹

(2) The verse could have said: and heareth the alah (cursing) i.e., oath accompanied by a curse; the word voice is superfluous, so we deduce that it implies even a voice (i.e., oath) unaccompanied by a curse. [The interpretation adopted here follows Rashi who, apart from the reading of MS.M. referred to in n. 5, which he seemed to have had, deletes the words: 'an alah unaccompanied by an oath like an alah with an oath,' which are placed in cur. edd. in brackets. These words are, however, retained by Nahmanides in his novellae on Shebu'oth, and other texts. Adopting this reading, preference is to be given to the reading 'with an oath' of cur. edd. (v. n. 5) and the whole passage must be taken as a continuation of the discussion relating to the source whence the Rabbis derive that 'alah' implies an oath, and is to be interpreted thus: 'But there it is written the oath of alah (how then can there be derived from that verse that alah by itself denotes an oath)? — Thus he (the Tanna of the Baraita) means: 'alah'; alah can only be with an oath, and thus it says: 'and the priest . . . of alah.' And whence do we know to make an alah unaccompanied by an oath like an alah with an oath, and an oath unaccompanied by an alah like an oath accompanied etc. — Thus is afforded the source whence the Rabbis deduce that alah implies an oath.]

(3) Ezek. XVII, 13; Nebuchadnezzar imposed an oath (alah) upon King Zedekiah.

(4) 2 Chron. XXXVI, 13; here a derivative of שְׁבוּעָה is used; so that אֱלֹהֵי in Ezekiel is equated with שְׁבוּעָה in Chronicles; hence אֱלֹהֵי is an oath.

(5) 'Cursed be'. If a Sage says to a man: 'Thou art arur', he is excommunicated.

(6) For a period of at least 30 days; v. M.K. 16a.

(7) He who curses another, using this word, is liable.

(8) Judg. V, 23.

(9) Deut. XXVII, 13; קִלְלָהּ is used.

- (10) Ibid. 15; אָרָר is used; hence אָרָר implies קָלָלָה.
- (11) Josh. VI, 26; אָרָר is used in the adjuration, hence it is a form of oath.
- (12) And אָרָר is not the expression of the adjuration, but a curse apart from the adjuration.
- (13) I Sam. XIV, 24.
- (14) Ibid. 27; 'cursed be' (of verse 24) is here termed adjuration (שְׁבוּעָה).
- (15) Which would have implied that he adjured the people, and also said, 'and cursed be the man . . .' Since, however, the verse says: he adjured the people saying, 'Cursed be', this phrase is obviously the form of the adjuration.
- (16) Since you argue thus.
- (17) Josh. VI, 26.
- (18) He who responds 'Amen' after an oath is accounted as if he had uttered the oath himself.
- (19) Agreement to fulfil a request.
- (20) I.e., prayer for fulfilment: so may it be!
- (21) Num. V, 22; the priest utters the oath, the woman merely responding 'Amen'. Her response is counted as an oath, and the 'bitter waters' test her.

- (23) Jer. XXVIII, 6.
- (24) Gen. IX, 15.
- (25) Isa. LIV, 9.
- (26) Since he emphasizes his statement, he intends it as an oath.
- (27) Gen. IX, 11.
- (28) Ibid. 15; the promise not to bring a flood was made twice; but v. Asheri a.l.
- (29) Lev. XXIV, 15.
- (30) Ibid. 16.
- (31) Tetragrammaton, v. supra p. 208, n. 16.
- (32) By stoning; v. Lev. XXIV, 14.
- (33) I.e., negative prohibition, for the transgression of which the penalty is stripes.
- (34) Who exempt him, if he curses his father or mother by the substitutes.
- (35) Lev. XXIV, 16.
- (36) The verse is superfluous, because it is already said: He that blasphemeth the Name of the Lord shall surely be put to death. The verse is therefore taken to refer to the case of cursing a parent by the Name.
- (37) R. Meir and the Sages agree in this that he who curses himself or his neighbour by any of the substitutes (not merely the Name) transgresses a negative precept. [Although the verse is superfluous (cf. p. 211, n. 14), it can nevertheless be applied only in regard to the cursing of a parent, which like blasphemy is punishable by death, but not with reference to cursing oneself or one's neighbour which does not involve so grave a penalty.]
- (38) Deut. IV, 9. [The verse is explained in Ber. 32b as an injunction to take care of the body and its physical requirements and not to expose oneself to dangers. This implies the prohibition of invoking upon oneself any curses.]
- (39) Here, 'take heed to thyself' means 'do not curse thyself.'
- (40) Lev. XIX, 14; v. Sanh. 66a: the prohibition includes all persons, not only the deaf.
- (41) Rab Judah.
- (42) Use the third person, so that it should not appear as if you were cursing me.
- (43) Ps. LII, 7.
- (44) To be informed that both in the Mishnah and the Psalms it is necessary, when in company, to use the third person instead of the second, to avoid giving offence.
- (45) Kid. 61a. In our Mishnah: 'May the Lord not smite you, if you bear testimony' is not an oath unless the positive is implied: 'May the Lord smite you, if you do not bear testimony'; and yet R. Meir makes the witnesses liable, though he does not hold that the positive may be derived from the negative.
- (46) Read in the Mishnah: R. Meir exempts them, and the Sages make them liable.
- (47) Not reversed.
- (48) R. Meir does not hold that from the negative we derive the affirmative!
- (49) And our Mishnah deals with an oath (a prohibition).
- (50) Num. V, 19; הִנְקִי; If thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness . . . be thou free from this water of bitterness. This implies: 'if thou hast gone aside . . . be thou not free'. Hence, we deduce from the fact that Scripture does not state the affirmative, that we may derive the affirmative from the negative. This is an argument against R. Meir. R. Tanhum (explaining R. Meir's view) states that Scripture uses the word הִנְקִי advisedly, so that it may also be read as הִנְקִי ('be thou choked'), and taken with the subsequent verse: be thou choked by this water of bitterness . . . if thou hast gone aside. Hence, Scripture itself gives both negative and positive: If thou hast not gone aside . . . be thou free (הִנְקִי); and be thou choked (הִנְקִי) . . . if thou hast gone aside. But we cannot derive the affirmative from the negative. According to Aruch, s.v. הִנְקִי, the word is taken by R. Tanhum in its double meaning 'to be bereft' (cf. Isa. III, 23), as well as 'to be free', and the phrase הִנְקִי is employed by him as a mere wordplay.

(51) Hence, even in the case of a prohibition R. Meir does not hold this principle.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 36b

— Well then [you must] reverse;¹ for even in a prohibition he does not hold [this principle]. To this Rabina demurred; And in a prohibition does he not hold [this principle]? Now then, [priests ministering in the Temple] intoxicated with wine,² or with a long growth of hair,³ the punishment for which is [said to be] death — will you also say [in these cases] that R. Meir does not hold [the principle]?⁴ Surely we learnt: These are liable for death: [priests] intoxicated with wine, and with a long growth of hair!⁵ — Hence indeed, reverse; but only in money matters does he not hold [the principle]; in a prohibition, however, he does hold the principle;⁶ and the case of sotah⁷ is different, because it is a prohibition which includes also money matters.⁸

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. THE OATH OF DEPOSIT⁹ APPLIES TO MEN AND WOMEN. TO NON-RELATIVES AND RELATIVES, TO THOSE QUALIFIED [TO BEAR TESTIMONY] AND THOSE UNQUALIFIED; BEFORE THE BETH DIN AND NOT BEFORE THE BETH DIN, [IF UTTERED] FROM HIS OWN MOUTH;¹⁰ BUT [IF ADJURED] BY THE MOUTH OF OTHERS,¹¹ HE IS NOT LIABLE UNLESS HE DENIES IT BEFORE THE BETH DIN: THIS IS THE OPINION OF A. MEIR; BUT THE SAGES SAY, WHETHER [UTTERED] FROM HIS OWN MOUTH OR [ADJURED] BY THE MOUTH OF OTHERS — SINCE HE DENIED IT, HE IS LIABLE. AND HE IS LIABLE FOR THE WILFUL TRANSGRESSION OF THE OATH,¹² AND FOR ITS UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION,¹³ COUPLED WITH WILFUL [DENIAL OF] DEPOSIT; BUT HE IS NOT LIABLE FOR UNWITTING TRANSGRESSION SIMPLY.¹⁴ AND TO WHAT IS HE LIABLE FOR WILFUL TRANSGRESSION? A GUILT OFFERING¹⁵ OF [THE VALUE OF] TWO SHEKELS OF SILVER.¹⁶ THE OATH OF DEPOSIT — HOW? HE SAID TO HIM: 'GIVE ME MY DEPOSIT WHICH I HAVE IN THY POSSESSION.' [THE OTHER REPLIED:] 'I SWEAR THAT THOU HAST NOT [ANYTHING] IN MY POSSESSION'; OR HE REPLIED TO HIM; 'THOU HAST NOT [ANYTHING] IN MY POSSESSION,' [AND THE DEPOSITOR SAID:] 'I ADJURE THEE.' AND HE RESPONDED, 'AMEN!'; HE IS LIABLE. IF HE ADJURED HIM FIVE TIMES, WHETHER BEFORE THE BETH DIN OR NOT BEFORE THE BETH DIN, AND HE DENIED, HE IS LIABLE¹⁷ FOR EACH ONE. R. SIMEON SAID: WHAT IS THE REASON? BECAUSE HE CAN RETRACT AND ADMIT.¹⁸ IF FIVE CLAIMED FROM HIM, AND SAID TO HIM: 'GIVE US THE DEPOSIT THAT WE HAVE IN THY POSSESSION,' [AND HE REPLIED:] 'I SWEAR THAT YOU HAVE NOT [ANYTHING] IN MY POSSESSION,' HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE. [IF HE SAID:] 'I SWEAR THAT THOU HAST NOT IN MY POSSESSION, NOR THOU, NOR THOU,'¹⁹ HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ONE. R. ELIEZER²⁰ SAYS: ONLY IF HE SAYS, 'I SWEAR' AT THE END.²¹ R. SIMEON SAYS: ONLY IF HE SAYS, 'I SWEAR' TO EACH ONE. 'GIVE ME THE DEPOSIT, LOAN, THEFT, AND LOST OBJECT THAT I HAVE IN THY POSSESSION.' — 'I SWEAR THAT THOU HAST NOT [THESE] IN MY POSSESSION,' HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE. 'I SWEAR THAT THOU HAST NOT IN MY POSSESSION DEPOSIT, LOAN, THEFT, AND LOST OBJECT,' HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ONE. 'GIVE ME THE WHEAT, BARLEY, AND SPELT THAT I HAVE IN THY POSSESSION.' — 'I SWEAR THAT THOU HAST NOT [THESE] IN MY POSSESSION,' HE IS LIABLE ONLY ONCE. 'I SWEAR THAT THOU HAST NOT IN MY POSSESSION WHEAT, BARLEY, AND SPELT,' HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ONE. R. MEIR SAID: EVEN IF HE SAID, '... A GRAIN OF WHEAT, BARLEY AND SPELT,'²² HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ONE. 'THOU HAST VIOLATED OR SEDUCED MY DAUGHTER' AND THE OTHER SAYS, 'I DID NOT VIOLATE, NOR SEDUCE.' — 'I ADJURE THEE,' — AND HE RESPONDS, 'AMEN!' HE IS LIABLE. R. SIMEON EXEMPTS HIM, FOR HE DOES NOT PAY A FINE ON HIS OWN ADMISSION.²³ THEY SAID TO HIM: THOUGH HE DOES NOT PAY A FINE ON HIS OWN ADMISSION, HE STILL PAYS FOR THE SHAME AND BLEMISH ON HIS OWN ADMISSION.²⁴ 'THOU HAST STOLEN MY OX,' AND HE SAYS, 'I HAVE NOT STOLEN IT.' — 'I ADJURE THEE,' — AND HE RESPONDS, 'AMEN!' HE IS LIABLE. 'I HAVE STOLEN IT, BUT I HAVE NOT KILLED IT OR SOLD IT.' — 'I ADJURE THEE,' AND HE RESPONDS, 'AMEN!' HE IS EXEMPT.²⁵ 'THY OX KILLED MY OX,' AND HE SAYS, 'IT DID NOT KILL [THY OX].'- 'I ADJURE THEE,' — AND HE RESPONDS, 'AMEN!' HE IS LIABLE. 'THY OX KILLED MY SLAVE,' AND HE SAYS, 'IT DID NOT KILL [THY SLAVE].' — 'I ADJURE THEE.' — AND HE RESPONDS, 'AMEN!' HE IS EXEMPT.²⁶ HE SAID TO HIM, 'THOU HAST INJURED ME, OR BRUISED ME,' AND THE OTHER SAYS, 'I HAVE NOT INJURED THEE OR BRUISED THEE.' — 'I ADJURE THEE,' AND HE RESPONDS, 'AMEN!' HE IS LIABLE. HIS SLAVE SAID TO HIM, 'THOU HAST KNOCKED OUT MY TOOTH, OR BLINDED MY EYE,' AND HE SAID, 'I DID NOT KNOCK OUT [THY TOOTH], OR BLIND [THY EYE].' — 'I ADJURE THEE,' — AND HE RESPONDS, 'AMEN!' HE IS EXEMPT.²⁷ THIS IS THE PRINCIPLE: WHENEVER HE PAYS ON HIS OWN ADMISSION,²⁸ HE IS LIABLE,²⁹ AND WHEN HE DOES NOT PAY ON HIS OWN ADMISSION,³⁰ HE IS EXEMPT.

GEMARA. R. Aha b. Huna and R. Samuel the son of Rabbah b. Bar Hanah and R. Isaac the son of Rab Judah studied [the tractate of] Shebu'oth at the School of Rabbah. R. Kahana met them and said

(1) Our Mishnah.

(2) Lev. X, 9: Drink no wine nor strong drink . . . when ye go into the tent of meeting, that ye die not.

(3) More than 30 days' growth; v. Rashi, Sanh. 83a. They shall not suffer their locks to grow long . . . neither shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court (Ezek. XLIV, 20, 21). Allowing the hair to grow long is equated with drinking wine; just as for drinking wine the penalty is death, so for allowing the hair to grow long the penalty is death; Sanh. 83b.

(4) In these cases we must derive the affirmative from the negative in order to impose the penalty: Drink no wine . . . that ye die not; but if you drink wine, you will die.

(5) Sanh. 83a, none disputing.

(6) Therefore he agrees that intoxicated priests are liable to the penalty of death.

(7) Where he does not hold the principle.

(8) Her kethubah is involved, for if she is guilty she does not receive it. In our Mishnah, too, the oath (adjuring the witnesses) involves a money claim; therefore R. Meir exempts the witnesses (for we reverse the reading).

(9) Lev. V, 2.

(10) Or if he responds 'Amen!' after the depositor's adjuration.

(11) Without responding 'Amen!'

(12) Knowing that he has the deposit, and knowing that for denying it on oath he is liable to bring a guilt offering.

(13) Not knowing that he is liable to an offering.

(14) If he really forgot that he had the deposit.

(15) Lev. V, 25.

(16) Ibid, 15: according to thy valuation in shekels of silver (shekels == two).

(17) An offering.

(18) After each oath he may retract, and admit that he has the deposit; each denial is thus a fresh denial of money.

(19) Addressing each of the five in turn.

(20) [MS.M.: 'R. Eleazar'.]

(21) 'You have not in my possession, nor you, nor you; I swear it,' he is liable for each one, because the oath refers to all.

(22) V. infra 38a.

(23) If he had confessed to the seduction, he would not have had to pay the fine (50 shekels; v. Deut. XXII, 29); on the principle that he who admits on his own accord liability to a fine is exempt from payment, v. B.K. 74b. Since he is therefore denying a fine קנס, and not a money liability, ממוץ, he is exempt.

(24) Because these sums are ממוץ; therefore he is liable for the oath.

(25) The extra amount he is liable to pay for killing or selling it (Ex. XXI, 37) is a fine; his oath is hence a denial of a fine, and not of an actual money liability.

(26) Because the 30 shekels which the owner of the ox has to pay for the slave (Ex. XXI, 32) is merely a fine, this sum being paid even if the slave is worth much less.

(27) For blinding an eye or knocking out a tooth of a slave the master must allow him to go free; Ex. XXI, 26, 27; this is a fine.

(28) I.e., ממוץ.

(29) To bring an offering for his oath.

(30) I.e., קנס.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 37a

to them: If he wilfully transgressed the oath of deposit, and [witnesses] warned him, what is the ruling?¹ Since it presents an anomaly in that in the whole Torah we do not find that a wilful transgressor brings an offering, and here he brings an offering;² there is therefore no difference whether he is warned or not warned;³ or, it applies only when he is not warned; but when he is warned, he receives stripes, and does not bring an offering; or, do we impose both [punishments] on him? — They said to him: We have it stated [in a Baraitha]: The oath of deposit is more severe than it;⁴ for one is liable for its wilful transgression, stripes,⁵ and for its unwitting transgression, a guilt offering of [the value of] two silver shekels.⁶ Now, since it says: 'for its wilful transgression, stripes,' we deduce they warned him;⁷ and yet it says stripes only and not an offering!⁸ And wherein lies then the greater severity?⁹ [In that] a man prefers to bring an offering rather than suffer stripes. Said Raba b. Ithi to them: [No! this affords no solution, for] who is the Tanna [who holds that] wilful transgression of oath of deposit is not atoned for by an offering? It is R. Simeon;¹⁰ but according to the Rabbis, he brings an offering also.¹¹ — R. Kahana said to them: Away with this [Baraitha];¹² for I learnt it, and thus I learnt it: Both for its wilful and unwitting transgression [the penalty is] a guilt offering of [the value of] two silver shekels. And wherein lies its greater severity?¹³ There¹⁴ [he may bring] a sin offering of the value of a danka,¹⁵ whereas here [he must bring] a guilt offering of the value of two shekels of silver. Let us then deduce from this!¹⁶ — Perhaps [it refers to the case where] they did not warn him.¹⁷

Another version.¹⁸ Come and hear: One is not liable for its unwitting transgression.¹⁹ To what is one liable for its wilful transgression? A guilt offering of [the value of] two shekels of silver. Now does this not refer to the case where they warned him?²⁰ — [No!] Here also it may refer to the case where they did not warn him. Come and hear: No! If you say in the case of a nazirite who had become unclean [that such and such is the case],²¹ it is because he receives stripes,²² but how can you say in the case of the oath of deposit [that such and such is the case], since its transgressor does not receive stripes? Since it says, 'he receives stripes,' we deduce that they warned him; and it says, 'how can you say in the case of the oath of deposit [that such and such is the case], since its transgressor does not receive stripes?' — but [presumably] an offering he brings!²³ — What is meant by 'he does not receive stripes' is that he is not freed by stripes.²⁴ Do we infer then that a nazirite who had become unclean is freed by stripes?²⁵ Surely an offering is [specifically] mentioned with reference to him!²⁶ — There he brings an offering merely in order that his naziriteship should recommence in cleanliness.²⁷

The Scholars told this to Rabbah.²⁸ He said to them: Hence,²⁹ if they did not warn him, though there are witnesses, he is liable,³⁰ [but surely] it is [like] a merely [useless] denial of words!³¹ This³² shows that Rabbah [himself] holds, he who denies money for which there are witnesses, is exempt.³³

R. Hanina said to Rabbah: There is [a Baraita] taught in support of your view: And denieth it³⁴ — except if he admits it to one of the brothers or one of the partners;³⁵ and sweareth falsely³⁴ — except if he borrowed on a bond or borrowed in the presence of witnesses!³⁶ — He said to him: From this you can bring no support to my view. [It refers to a case where] he says, ‘I borrowed, but I did not borrow in the presence of witnesses’; ‘I borrowed, but I did not borrow on a bond.’³⁷ How [do we know it refers to such a case]? Because it states: ‘and denieth it — except if he admits it to one of the brothers or one of the partners.’ [Now,] ‘to one of the brothers’ — what does it mean? Shall we say [it means] he admits his half?³⁸ But there is the denial of the other!³⁹ Obviously then, it means, they say to him: ‘From both of us you borrowed,’ and he replies to them: ‘No! From one of you I borrowed’;⁴⁰ and this is simply a denial of words.⁴¹ And since the first clause refers to a denial of words, the second clause also refers to a denial of words. (Mnemonic: Liable, sets [of witnesses], of the trustee, the severity, of the nazirite.⁴²)

Come and hear: He is not liable for its unwitting transgression; and to what is he liable for its wilful transgression? A guilt offering of [the value of] two silver shekels. Does it not mean wilful transgression [after warning by] witnesses?⁴³ — No! [It may mean] wilful transgression on his own account.⁴⁴

Come and hear: If there were two sets of witnesses, and the first denied, and then the second denied, they are both liable, because the testimony could be upheld by [either of] the two.⁴⁵ Now granted, the second set should be liable, for the first set have denied;⁴⁶ but the first set — why should they be liable?

- (1) Does he bring an offering; or is he punished by stripes; or both?
 - (2) [Rashi and Tosaf. point out that it is not exactly an anomaly as there are other instances, a Nazirite who wilfully makes himself unclean, where an offering is brought for a wilful transgression, being one of them.]
 - (3) And even if warned he brings all offering, but does not suffer stripes.
 - (4) The oath of testimony.
 - (5) Whereas in the case of oath of testimony there cannot be stripes, because it is not possible to know if the witnesses transgressed wilfully, for they can always say they forgot the testimony; v. Tosaf. a.l.
 - (6) Whereas in the case of oath of testimony a sliding scale sacrifice (which may be worth less than 2 shekels) is brought.
 - (7) For without warning, stripes are not inflicted.
 - (8) Hence, R. Kahana's question is solved.
 - (9) Of oath of deposit. If for wilful transgression with warning, stripes only are inflicted (and no offering is brought); and in the case of oath of testimony an offering is brought, why is the oath of deposit said to be severer than the oath of testimony?
 - (10) Supra 34b.
 - (11) R. Kahana's question cannot be solved from this Baraita, for it may be voicing the view of R. Simeon; but according to the Sages it is possible that for wilful transgression of oath of deposit, with warning, an offering is also brought.
 - (12) We cannot in any way deduce anything from it; and there is no need to say it is in accordance with R. Simeon's view.
 - (13) Since in the case of oath of testimony, too, only an offering is brought for both wilful and unwitting transgression.
 - (14) In the case of oath of testimony.
 - (15) Small Persian coin, one sixth of denar.
 - (16) That he brings an offering, and does not suffer stripes; and thus solve R. Kahana's question.
 - (17) Therefore he does not suffer stripes.

- (18) [MS.M. rightly omits.]
- (19) If he swore falsely really by mistake.
- (20) And we may solve R. Kahana's question that even when warned he brings only all offering.
- (21) The actual reference is not known (Rashi), yet this does not affect the argument; but see R. Han. and Tosaf.
- (22) For wilfully making himself unclean; Num. VI, 6 ff. Therefore his case is stricter.
- (23) Hence, R. Kahana's question is solved, that the transgressor of the oath of deposit, after warning, does not receive stripes, but brings an offering.
- (24) Stripes alone are insufficient; he must bring an offering also.
- (25) And brings no offering.
- (26) Num. VI, 12: and he shall bring a lamb of the first year for a guilt offering.
- (27) And not as an atonement for sin.
- (28) The scholars mentioned above who studied the tractate of Shebu'oth in the School of Rabbah told Rabbah of R. Kahana's question.
- (29) Because R. Kahana asks only the ruling in the case where he was warned, he is apparently satisfied that, when not warned, he brings an offering, although the witnesses may know that he has the deposit.
- (30) An offering.
- (31) For his denial can achieve nothing, since there are witnesses who know he has the deposit.
- (32) Rabbah's question.
- (33) From an offering.
- (34) Lev. V, 22.
- (35) Who has a share in this deposit; when the deposit is claimed by one brother or partner, he admits it, and when it is claimed by another, he denies it; he is not, in such a case, liable to bring an offering for his false oath, because Scripture says: and denieth it, i.e., completely.
- (36) Since his denial can achieve nothing, he does not bring an offering for his oath. This supports Rabbah.
- (37) He does not deny that he owes the money; he merely denies that there were witnesses or that he gave a bond. Therefore, he does not bring an offering for his oath, because his denial is of no material consequence, but he who denies a money claim though there are witnesses would be liable to an offering.
- (38) The amount owing to the one brother.
- (39) He should be liable to bring an offering for denying the other half on oath.
- (40) The whole amount.
- (41) And not of money; therefore he is not liable for an offering.
- (42) Mnemonic of the teachings that follow.
- (43) Yet he is liable to bring an offering. This is opposed to Rabbah's view that where there is denial of money for which there are witnesses, he does not bring an offering.
- (44) And there are no witnesses.
- (45) Supra 31b.
- (46) And the claim now depends entirely on the evidence of the second set.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 37b

The second set are still available!¹ — Rabina said: Here we are discussing [a case] where the second set, at the time of the denial of the first set, were related through their wives, and their wives were dying; you might have thought that [because we say] the majority of dying people actually die [the second set are reckoned eligible witnesses];² therefore he teaches us [that they are not, because] as yet the wives are alive and not dead.³

Come and hear: If the trustee⁴ pleaded the plea of theft in the case of a deposit,⁵ and swore, then confessed, and witnesses came — if before the witnesses came he confessed, he pays the principal, the fifth, and brings a guilt offering;⁶ if after the witnesses came he confessed, he pays double,⁷ and brings a guilt offering!⁸ — Here also, as Rabina said.⁹

Rabina said to R. Ashi: Come and hear: The oath of deposit is more severe than it,¹⁰ for one is liable for its wilful transgression, stripes, and for its unwitting transgression, a guilt offering of [the value of] two silver shekels. Now, since he says he receives stripes, it follows that there are witnesses; and yet he says, for its unwitting transgression a guilt offering of [the value of] two silver shekels.¹¹ — R. Mordecai said to them:¹² Away with this [Baraita]; for, lo. R. Kahana said to them: I learnt it, and thus I learnt it: Both for its wilful and unwitting transgression [the penalty is] a guilt offering of [the value of] two silver shekels.¹³

Come and hear: No! If you say in the case of a nazirite who had become unclean [that such and such is the case], it is because he receives stripes, but how can you say in the case of an oath of deposit [that such and such is the case] since its transgressor does not receive stripes!¹⁴ — Now, how is this? If there are no witnesses, why does he receive stripes? Obviously, therefore, there are witnesses; and yet he states: ‘How can you say in the case of an oath of deposit [that such and such is the case] since its transgressor does not receive stripes?’ — stripes he does not receive, but an offering he brings! Verily, a refutation of Rabbah's view!¹⁵ It is a refutation!

R. Johanan said: He who denies [on oath] money for which there are witnesses, is liable;¹⁶ for which there is a bond, is exempt. R. Papa said: What is R. Johanan's reason? Because witnesses are likely to die,¹⁷ but the bond remains.¹⁸ Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua to R. Papa: But a bond, too, is likely to be lost! — However, said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua: This is R. Johanan's reason: A bond is a hypothecary pledge of lands,¹⁹ and an offering is not brought for a denial of a hypothecary pledge of lands.

It was stated: He who adjures witnesses for land,²⁰ — R. Johanan and R. Eleazar disagree: one says they are liable,²¹ and the other says they are exempt. It may be concluded that it is R. Johanan who says they are exempt, for R. Johanan said: He who denies money for which there are witnesses is liable; for which there is a bond, is exempt; and as R. Huna the son of R. Joshua [explained it].²² It is conclusive.

R. Jeremiah said to R. Abbahu: Shall we say that R. Johanan and R. Eleazar disagree on the same principle on which R. Eliezer and the Rabbis [disagree]? For we learnt: He who robs a field from his neighbour and a river flooded it, must restore a field to him: this is the opinion of R. Eliezer; but the Sages say: He may say to him, ‘Lo, thine own is before thee.’²³ And we said: On what do they disagree? R. Eliezer expounds ‘amplifications and limitations,’ and the Rabbis [Sages] expound ‘generalisations and specifications.’²⁴ R. Eliezer expounds ‘amplifications and limitations’: and lie unto his neighbour²⁵ — this amplifies;²⁶ in deposit or loan — this limits; or any thing about which he hath sworn²⁷ — this again amplifies; since it amplifies, limits, and amplifies, it includes all. What does it include? It includes all things: and what does it exclude? It excludes bonds.²⁸ And the Rabbis expound ‘generalisations and specifications’: and lie unto his neighbour — this generalises; in deposit or loan or robbery — this specifies; or any thing about which he hath sworn — this again generalises; since it generalises, specifies, and generalises, you may include only that which is similar to the specification: just as the specification is clearly movable and intrinsically money, so everything which is movable and intrinsically money [may be included], but exclude lands,²⁹ which are not movable, and exclude slaves, which have been likened to lands, and exclude bonds, which, though they are movable, are not intrinsically money. — [Now, shall we say that] he who makes them liable agrees with R. Eliezer,³⁰ and he who exempts them agrees with the Rabbis?³¹ — He said to him:³² No! He who makes them liable agrees with R. Eliezer; but he who exempts them, may tell you that in this even R. Eliezer agrees,³³ for Scripture says, ‘of all’, and not, ‘all’.³⁴

R. Papa said in the name of Raba: Our Mishnah too is evidence,³⁵ for it states: ‘THOU HAST STOLEN MY OX,’ AND THE OTHER SAYS, ‘I HAVE NOT STOLEN IT.’ — ‘I ADJURE THEE,’ AND HE RESPONDS, ‘AMEN!’ HE IS LIABLE. — Now, ‘Thou hast stolen my slave’ it does not state. What is the reason? is it not because a slave is likened to land, and an offering is not brought for a denial of a hypothecary pledge of lands? — Said R. Pappi in the name of Raba: Say the final clause: THIS IS THE PRINCIPLE: WHENEVER HE PAYS ON HIS OWN ADMISSION, HE IS LIABLE; AND WHEN HE DOES NOT PAY ON HIS OWN ADMISSION, HE IS EXEMPT. — This is the principle: What does this include?³⁶ Does it not include [the case where he claims], ‘Thou hast stolen my slave’?³⁷

- (1) And the claim can be upheld by them. Since we say, however, that the first set are also liable (though their denial has not harmed the claimant), we may deduce that a denial of money for which there are witnesses (in this case, the second set), though it is ineffective, is still deemed a denial; and the transgressor is liable. This is opposed to Rabbah's view.
- (2) And the first set should therefore be exempt, because there are other witnesses; v. supra 33a.
- (3) And the first set are therefore liable.
- (4) Lit., ‘owner of a house’.
- (5) That it had been stolen from him; he is not responsible for theft, because he is an unpaid bailee, שומר חנם.
- (6) Lev. V, 24, 25.
- (7) As if he had been the thief himself, but he pays no fifth; v. B.K. 63b.
- (8) Though there are witnesses; this is opposed to Rabbah's view.
- (9) At the time the trustee swore the oath the witnesses were related through their wives, and, therefore, being ineligible, are counted as non-existent; he therefore brings an offering.
- (10) Oath of testimony.
- (11) Hence, a guilt offering is brought even when there are witnesses.
- (12) [Read with MS.M.: ‘He said to him.’]
- (13) Since stripes are not mentioned, wilful transgression need not imply the presence of witnesses; so that we cannot, from this Baraita, refute Rabbah's view.
- (14) V. supra p. 219.
- (15) For Rabbah holds he who denies money where there are witnesses does not bring an offering for his false oath.
- (16) An offering.
- (17) And since his denial would be effective if they died, he brings a guilt offering for his false oath.
- (18) His denial is therefore always ineffective.
- (19) Where there is a signed document of indebtedness, the lands of the debtor are security for the debt.
- (20) To bear testimony for him in a claim for land.
- (21) To bring a sliding scale sacrifice for denying testimony on oath.
- (22) That the reason for exemption in the case of a bond is that the lands of the debtor are security for the debt; and no offering is brought for a denial on oath in such a case.
- (23) They hold that land cannot be stolen, i.e., though he dispossesses the owner forcibly, it is still counted as the owner's property.
- (24) For full exposition v. supra 4b; and B.K. (Sonc. ed.) p. 703.
- (25) Lev. V, 21.
- (26) I.e. it includes anything about which he may lie.
- (27) Lev. V, 24.
- (28) Which are most dissimilar to the examples (‘limitations’) given by Scripture: but it does not exclude land. R. Eliezer therefore holds that he who robs a field, which was later flooded, must recompense the owner.
- (29) The Rabbis thus hold that land cannot be stolen.
- (30) R. Eleazar, as is concluded above, holds that witnesses who, adjured to bear witness to a land claim, deny testimony on oath, are liable to bring an offering. He will therefore agree with R. Eliezer who holds that land may be stolen and is in the same category as other goods.
- (31) R. Johanan who exempts the witnesses will agree with the Rabbis that land cannot be stolen.
- (32) R. Abbahu said to R. Jeremiah.
- (33) Though he holds that land is included in the category of things that may be stolen, and must be returned in the state it was at the time of the robbery (or the owner recompensed), he agrees that there is no liability to bring an offering for a false oath in a land claim, for with reference to oath Scripture says: of all things about which he hath sworn falsely . . . he shall bring his guilt offering; this implies that an offering is not brought for all things, but of all things: of excludes something, i.e., land, because land is (after bonds) least similar to the particulars mentioned by Scripture.

(35) In support of R. Johanan that there is no liability to bring an offering for an oath in respect of a land claim.

(36) The principle is obvious from the previous examples; the Mishnah, in stating this clause, therefore wishes us to infer something additional.

(37) For here also the thief pays on his own admission; hence, in his case too, he is liable to bring an offering for a false oath.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 38a

Hence, then, from this it is not possible to deduce.¹

THE OATH OF DEPOSIT-HOW? 'GIVE ME THE DEPOSIT WHICH I HAVE IN THY POSSESSION,' etc.

Our Rabbis taught: For a general statement he is liable only once; for a particular he is liable for each one:² this is the opinion of R. Meir. R. Judah says: 'I swear I do not owe thee, and not thee, and not thee,' he is liable for each one.³ R. Eliezer says: 'I do not owe thee, and not thee, and not thee, I swear it,' he is liable for each one. R. Simeon says: [He is not liable for each one] unless he says, 'I swear' to each one.

Rab Judah said that Samuel said: The general statement of R. Meir is the particular of R. Judah, and the general statement of R. Judah is the particular of R. Meir.⁴ And R. Johanan said: All agree that 'and not thee' is a particular; they disagree only in 'not thee,' R. Meir holding it is a particular, and R. Judah holding it is a general; and what is the general statement according to R. Meir? 'I swear that you have not in my possession ...'⁵ In what do they⁶ disagree? — Samuel argues from the Baraitha, and R. Johanan argues from our Mishnah. 'Samuel argues from the Baraitha': Since R. Judah says 'and not thee' is a particular, we infer that he heard R. Meir say it is a general, and therefore R. Judah [disagrees and] says to him it is a particular. And R. Johanan says: Both⁷ are, according to R. Meir, particulars; and R. Judah said to him: In 'and not thee' I agree with you,⁸ but in 'not thee' I disagree with you. But Samuel says: [If so,] why mention that in which he agrees with him; let him mention that in which he disagrees with him.⁹ 'And R. Johanan argues from our Mishnah': Since R. Meir says:¹⁰ 'I swear you [plural] have not in my possession ...' is a general statement, we infer that 'and not thee' is a particular, for if it enters your mind to say that 'and not thee' is a general statement, why does he teach us 'I swear I do not owe you,'¹¹ let him teach us, 'I swear I do not owe thee, and not thee, and not thee,' and it would be obvious that 'I swear I do not owe you' [is a general statement]. — And Samuel says, if he says, 'and not thee,' it is as if he says, 'I swear I do not owe you.'¹²

We learnt: NOT THEE, AND NOT THEE, AND NOT THEE.¹³ — Read in the Mishnah: 'not thee'.¹⁴

Come and hear: GIVE ME THE DEPOSIT, AND LOAN, AND THEFT, AND LOST OBJECT.¹⁵ Read: 'loan, theft, lost object.' Come and hear: GIVE ME THE WHEAT, AND BARLEY, AND SPELT. — Read: 'barley, spelt.' — But does the Tanna go on so frequently blundering?¹⁶ — Well then, it is the view of Rabbi,¹⁷ who says: There is no difference between 'Ka-zayith, ka-zayith' and 'ka-zayith and ka-zayith': both are particulars.¹⁸

Come and hear — from his own view:¹⁹ R. MEIR SAYS, [EVEN IF HE SAID:] 'A GRAIN OF WHEAT, AND BARLEY, AND SPELT,' HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ONE.²⁰ — Read: 'A grain of wheat, a grain of barley, a grain of spelt.' — What is the force of EVEN?²¹ R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: Even a grain of wheat is included in wheat, and a grain of barley is included in barley, and a grain of spelt is included in spelt.²²

‘Give me the wheat and barley.’ R. Johanan said: If there is a perutah²³ [in the value] of all of them together, they combine.²⁴ — R. Aha and Rabina disagree. One says: For the particulars he is liable, but for the general statements he is not liable;²⁵ and the other says: For the general statements he is also liable.²⁶ But did not R. Hiyya teach: Behold, there are here fifteen sin-offerings;²⁷ and if it is [as you say], there are twenty. — This Tanna²⁸ is counting the particulars, and is not counting the general statements.²⁹ And behold, R. Hiyya taught: There are here twenty sin-offerings.³⁰ — [No!] that refers to deposit, loan, theft, and lost object.³¹

Raba inquired of R. Nahman: If five claimed from him, saying to him: ‘Give us the deposit, loan, theft, and lost object which we have in thy possession,’ and he said to one of them: ‘I swear that thou hast not in my possession a deposit, loan, theft, and lost object; and thou hast not, and thou hast not, and thou hast not, and thou hast not;’ what is the ruling? For one is he liable,³²

- (1) Support for R. Johanan: the Mishnah may, or may not, agree with him.
 - (2) If he denies on oath the claim of several people in one general statement, ‘I swear I owe you all nothing,’ he is liable only for one oath; but, if he particularises, and says, ‘I swear I do not owe you, nor you, nor you,’ he is liable for each one; v. Mishnah, supra 36b.
 - (3) The difference between R. Meir and R. Judah is explained below.
 - (4) Because R. Judah says, ‘I swear I do not owe thee and not thee’ is counted a particular, he must have heard R. Meir say that it is a general statement (because of the connecting and), equivalent to ‘I do not owe all of you.’ R. Meir’s particular must therefore be, ‘I do not owe thee, not thee, not thee’ (without and) — turning to each claimant, and addressing him separately. This expression, ‘not thee, not thee,’ R. Judah counts as a general statement, for he states that ‘and not thee’ is a particular.
 - (5) I.e., ‘I swear I do not owe you’ (plural).
 - (6) Samuel and R. Johanan, in their interpretation of the views of R. Meir and R. Judah.
 - (7) ‘Not thee’ and ‘and not thee’.
 - (8) That it is a particular.
 - (9) When stating his view in the Baraitha, R. Judah should say, ‘not thee’ is a general (in which he disagrees with R. Meir, who holds it is a particular); and not ‘and not thee’ is a particular (with which R. Meir agrees).
 - (10) The author of an anonymous statement in the Mishnah is generally R. Meir.
 - (11) Is a general statement.
 - (12) They are both equal, and one is not more obvious than the other.
 - (13) He is liable for each one, supra Mishnah 36b; the author of the anonymous statement in the Mishnah being R. Meir (v. note 6), it proves that R. Meir holds that ‘and not thee’ is a particular; which is a refutation of Samuel’s interpretation of his opinion.
 - (14) Without and.
 - (15) And he replies, ‘I swear I have not in my possession the deposit, and loan, and theft, and lost object,’ he is liable for each one. Hence the enumeration of the objects with the connecting word and makes the statement a particular. This again is an argument against Samuel.
 - (16) The Tanna inserts and, and you say it must be omitted in all these instances; a Tanna is always very careful and exact.
 - (17) The anonymous statements in our Mishnah, which imply that and denotes a particular, are not the view of R. Meir (according to Samuel), but of Rabbi.
 - (18) If one kills a sacrifice, and intends to eat a ka-zayith (a piece the size of an olive) of it later than the time allotted for its consumption, or outside the place fixed for its consumption (v. Zeb., Mishnah, Chap. V), it is, in the first case, piggul (an abomination), v. Lev. VII, 18, (for which kareth (v. Glos.) is inflicted), and in the second case, merely ritually unfit (v. Zeb., 29b). If one has the intention: ‘I shall eat a ka-zayith outside the time limit, a ka-zayith outside the place,’ or, ‘I shall eat a ka-zayith outside the time limit, and a ka-zayith outside the place,’ it is the same, according to Rabbi, the first thought ('ka-zayith outside the time') being in either case counted as the main thought, and the sacrifice is therefore piggul, and kareth inflicted; Zeb. 30b. Hence, Rabbi holds that whether and is inserted or omitted, the thoughts are separate, and in our Mishnah also he will hold that and separates the persons (or objects); and the statement is therefore particular, and not general.

(19) An argument against Samuel's interpretation of R. Meir's view from R. Meir's own clearly expressed opinion.

(20) Hence, and separates the items, and makes each one a particular.

(21) R. Meir says: Even if he said, 'Give me the grain of wheat . . .'

(22) Even if the claimant said, 'grain of wheat,' and the bailee said, 'wheat,' or vice versa, it matters not: they are the same; and the bailee is denying on oath exactly what the other is claiming.

(24) If the wheat, barley and spelt are together worth only one perutah they combine, and the bailee is liable to an offering for denying on oath that he has them in his possession; for less than a perutah there is no liability.

(25) When the bailee says, 'I swear thou hast not in my possession wheat, barley, or spelt,' he is liable for each one' i.e., three offerings (for the three particulars), but not four: we do not say that his first words ('I swear thou hast not in my possession') are themselves also an oath, meaning, 'I swear thou hast not anything in my possession.' R. Johanan's statement (that the wheat, barley and spelt combine to make up the value of a perutah) does not refer to this clause, because he is liable for three separate oaths, and there must be a perutah in each. R. Johanan's statement refers to the first clause: 'I swear thou hast not these in my possession,' he is liable only once; and in this case R. Johanan says: The wheat, barley and spelt combine to the value of a perutah.

(26) And he is liable for four oaths: for the three particulars, and for his opening words, which are counted as a general oath. R. Johanan's statement will hence refer to this clause too; and the wheat, barley and spelt combine to the value of a perutah to make him liable at least for one oath, the general oath; though not for the other three, if there is not a perutah in each.

(27) If five persons claimed, each one claiming wheat, barley, and spelt, and he denied on oath the claim of each one, he is liable to bring 15 sin-offerings (more correctly, guilt-offerings). Hence, since R. Hiyya said 15 offerings, he is counting the particulars only, for if he counted the general statements also, there would be 4 offerings for each of the 5 claimants, i.e., 20 offerings.

(29) Though he may agree that altogether he has to bring 20 offerings.

(30) So he really agrees that for the general statements he also brings offerings.

(31) Where there are 4 particulars, i.e., 20 for the 5 claimants; but he really does not reckon the general statements.

(32) For each of the 4 claimants, apart from the first, is he liable to only one offering, because he did not mention all the particulars to each claimant; and, therefore, he will be liable to 4 offerings for the 4 claimants, and another 4 for the first claimant (because in his case he mentioned the 4 particulars), i.e. 8 offerings in all.

or is he liable for each one?¹ — Come and hear: R. Hiyya taught: Behold, there are here twenty sin offerings. How is this? If he expressed fully,² [it is obvious;] does R. Hiyya come to tell us the number?³ Obviously therefore, he did not express fully;⁴ hence, we deduce from this that they are particulars.⁵

'THOU HAST VIOLATED OR SEDUCED MY DAUGHTER,' etc. R. Hiyya b. Abba said that R. Johanan said: What is R. Simeon's reason?⁶ Because mainly it is the fine that he is claiming.⁷ Said Raba: In illustration of R. Simeon's view, to what may it be compared? To a man who said to his neighbour, 'Give me the wheat, barley, and spelt that I have in thy possession,' and he replied to him, 'I swear that thou hast not in my possession wheat,' and it was found that wheat he really did not have, but barley and spelt he had; he is exempt, for when he swore about the wheat, he swore the truth.⁸ Said Abaye to him: How can they be compared? There he denies the wheat, but does not deny the barley and spelt,⁹ but here, he denies the whole thing!¹⁰ But this then is to be compared only to one who says to his neighbour, 'Give me the wheat, barley and spelt which I have in thy possession,' [and the other replies,] 'I swear that thou hast not anything in my possession,' and it was found that wheat he really did not have, but barley and spelt he had; he is liable!¹¹ — But when Rabin came [from Palestine] he said in the name of R. Johanan: According to R. Simeon, he is claiming the fine, and not for shame and blemish; according to the Sages, he is claiming also for shame and blemish. In what do they disagree? — R. Papa said: R. Simeon holds, a man does not leave that which is fixed¹² to claim that which is not fixed;¹³ and the Rabbis hold, he does not leave that which, if he were to admit it, he would not be exempt,¹⁴ to claim that which, if he were to admit it, he would be exempt.¹⁵

CHAPTER VI

MISHNAH. THE OATH OF THE JUDGES¹⁶ [IS IMPOSED WHEN] THE CLAIM IS [AT LEAST] TWO SILVER COINS,¹⁷ AND THE ADMISSION THE EQUIVALENT OF A PERUTAH.¹⁸ AND IF THE ADMISSION IS NOT OF THE SAME KIND AS THE CLAIM,¹⁹ HE IS EXEMPT.²⁰ HOW? — ‘TWO SILVER MA’AHS²¹ OF MINE HAVE YOU IN YOUR POSSESSION,’ [AND THE OTHER REPLIES,] ‘I HAVE NOT IN MY POSSESSION OF YOURS EXCEPT A PERUTAH,’²² HE IS EXEMPT.²³ — ‘TWO SILVER MA’AHS OF MINE AND A PERUTAH HAVE YOU IN YOUR POSSESSION,’ [AND THE OTHER REPLIES,] ‘I HAVE NOT IN MY POSSESSION OF YOURS EXCEPT A PERUTAH,’ HE IS LIABLE.²⁴ — ‘YOU HAVE OF MINE A HUNDRED DENARII.’ — ‘I HAVE NOT OF YOURS,’ HE IS EXEMPT.²⁵ — ‘YOU HAVE OF MINE A HUNDRED DENARII.’ — ‘I HAVE OF YOURS ONLY FIFTY DENARII,’ HE IS LIABLE. — ‘YOU HAVE OF MY FATHER’S A HUNDRED DENARII.’²⁶ — ‘I HAVE OF HIS ONLY FIFTY DENARII.’ HE IS EXEMPT, BECAUSE IT IS AS IF HE RESTORES A LOST OBJECT.²⁷ ‘YOU HAVE OF MINE A HUNDRED DENARII.’ HE SAID TO HIM,²⁸ ‘YES.’ ON THE MORROW HE SAID TO HIM, ‘GIVE THEM TO ME;’ [AND HE REPLIED,] ‘I HAVE GIVEN THEM TO YOU,’ HE IS EXEMPT. [IF HE SAYS,] ‘I HAVE NOT OF YOURS IN MY POSSESSION,’ HE IS LIABLE.²⁹ — ‘YOU HAVE OF MINE A HUNDRED DENARII.’ HE SAID TO HIM, ‘YES. — GIVE THEM NOT TO ME EXCEPT BEFORE WITNESSES.’ ON THE MORROW HE SAID TO HIM, ‘GIVE THEM TO ME;’ [AND HE REPLIED,] ‘I HAVE GIVEN THEM TO YOU,’ HE IS LIABLE, BECAUSE HE SHOULD HAVE GIVEN THEM TO HIM BEFORE WITNESSES. — ‘YOU HAVE OF MINE A LITRA³⁰ OF GOLD.’ — ‘I HAVE OF YOURS ONLY A LITRA OF SILVER,’ HE IS EXEMPT.³¹ — ‘YOU HAVE OF MINE A GOLDEN DENAR.’³² — ‘I HAVE OF YOURS ONLY A SILVER DENAR, OR A TRESIS,³³ OR A PUNDION, OR A PERUTAH;’ HE IS LIABLE, FOR ALL ARE ONE KIND OF COINAGE.³⁴ — ‘YOU HAVE OF MINE A KOR³⁵ OF GRAIN.’ — ‘I HAVE OF YOURS ONLY A LETHEK OF BEANS;’ HE IS EXEMPT; ‘YOU HAVE OF MINE A KOR OF PRODUCE.’ — ‘I HAVE OF YOURS ONLY A LETHEK OF BEANS;’ HE IS LIABLE, FOR BEANS ARE INCLUDED IN PRODUCE. IF HE CLAIMED FROM HIM WHEAT, AND THE OTHER ADMITTED BARLEY, HE IS EXEMPT; BUT R. GAMALIEL MAKES HIM LIABLE.³⁶ IF HE CLAIMS FROM HIS NEIGHBOUR JARS OF OIL, AND HE ADMITS [HIS CLAIM TO THE EMPTY] JARS, ADMON SAYS, SINCE HE ADMITS TO HIM A PORTION OF THE SAME KIND AS THE CLAIM, HE MUST SWEAR. BUT THE SAGES SAY, THE ADMISSION IS NOT OF THE SAME KIND AS THE CLAIM.³⁷ R. GAMALIEL SAID, I APPROVE THE WORDS OF ADMON. IF HE CLAIMS FROM HIM VESSELS AND LANDS, AND HE ADMITS THE VESSELS, BUT DENIES THE LANDS; OR ADMITS THE LANDS, BUT DENIES THE VESSELS, HE IS EXEMPT.³⁸ IF HE ADMITS A PORTION OF THE LANDS, HE IS EXEMPT; A PORTION OF THE VESSELS, HE IS LIABLE;³⁹ BECAUSE PROPERTIES FOR WHICH THERE IS NO SECURITY⁴⁰ BIND PROPERTIES FOR WHICH THERE IS SECURITY⁴¹ TO TAKE AN OATH FOR THEM. NO OATH IS IMPOSED IN A CLAIM BY A DEAF-MUTE, IMBECILE, OR MINOR. AND NO OATH IS IMPOSED ON A MINOR; BUT AN OATH IS IMPOSED WHEN A CLAIM IS LODGED AGAINST A MINOR, OR AGAINST THE TEMPLE.⁴²

GEMARA. How do we impose the oath on him? — Rab Judah said that Rab said: We adjure him with the oath that is stated in the Torah, as it is written, And I will make thee swear by the Lord, the God of heaven.⁴³ Said Rabina to R. Ashi: In accordance with whose view [is this]? In accordance with the view of R. Hanina b. Idi, who says we require the Distinguishing Name!⁴⁴ — He said to him: You may even say it is in accordance with the view of the Rabbis, who say [he may be adjured] with a Substitute [for the Name],⁴⁵ but the outcome is that he must hold something [sacred] in his hand;⁴⁶ and as Raba said, for Raba said: A judge who adjures by ‘the Lord God of heaven’ [without handing a sacred object to the person taking the oath] is counted as having erred in the ruling of a Mishnah,⁴⁷ and must repeat [the ceremony correctly].⁴⁸ And R. Papa said: A judge who adjures with tefillin⁴⁹ is counted as having erred in the ruling of a Mishnah, and must repeat [the ceremony].⁵⁰ The law is in accordance with the view of Raba,⁵¹ and the law is not in accordance with the view of R. Papa.⁵² The law is in accordance with the view of Raba, for he did not hold any [sacred] object in his hand; but the law is not in accordance with the view of R. Papa, for he held a [sacred] object in his hand.

The oath [must be taken] standing; a disciple of the wise [may take it] sitting. The oath must be administered with a Sefer Torah,⁵³ a disciple of the wise may directly take it with tefillin.⁵⁴

Our Sages taught: [As to] the oath of the judges — it also may be said in any language. They say to him: Know

- (1) Of the particulars in the case of each of the claimants, i.e., 20 in all.
 - (2) To each claimant: ‘And thou hast not in my possession a deposit, loan, theft, and lost object,’ repeating all the particulars to each claimant.
 - (3) We can count ourselves.
 - (4) But as in Raba's enquiry.
 - (5) Though he does not express them fully to each claimant, we assume that when he says, ‘and thou hast not in my possession,’ he refers to the particulars already enumerated to the first claimant; and therefore he is liable to 20 offerings.
 - (6) For exempting him from an offering.
 - (7) 50 shekels; Deut. XXII, 29; and for denying a fine on oath he is not liable; and though for seduction there is also liability for ‘shame and blemish’ (which are בְּמִוּוֹן), the father of the girl is concerned mainly with obtaining the 50 shekels.
 - (8) Here also, since the father is claiming mainly the fine, the seducer in denying seduction on oath, is denying mainly the fine; and for denying a fine, he is not liable for an offering.
 - (9) And he swore the truth.
 - (10) For since he denies seduction, he is ipso facto denying liability also for shame and blemish, which are בְּמִוּוֹן.
 - (11) For he denied barley and spelt; here also, R. Simeon should make him liable, for he denied shame and blemish.
 - (12) The fine.
 - (13) Shame and blemish, which have to be estimated according to the individual.
 - (14) Shame and blemish, which are בְּמִוּוֹן.
 - (15) The fine.
 - (16) An oath is imposed by the judges on a debtor who admits a portion of the claim, denying the rest.
 - (17) Two ma'ahs; a ma'ah was the smallest silver coin (about 2 d.).
 - (18) The smallest copper coin, 1/32 of a ma'ah (8 perutahs = 1 isar, 2 isars = 1 pundion, 2 pundions = 1 ma'ah); hence a perutah = about 1/16 d.
 - (19) The debtor admits something else, which the creditor is not claiming.
 - (20) From an oath.
 - (21) Not the coins, but their weight in silver.
 - (22) Its weight in copper.
 - (23) Because the creditor claims silver, and the debtor admits copper. If, however, the claim was a silver coin, and the admission a copper coin, he is liable; for they are both coins.
 - (24) Because he admits a portion of the claim.
 - (25) Because there is no admission of a portion.
 - (26) I.e., ‘I believe you have, but I am not sure’; v. infra 42b.

- (27) For he could have denied it all, since the son who claims is himself doubtful.
- (28) In the presence of witnesses (Rashi, 42a).
- (29) To pay, and is not believed on oath, for he is already proved to be a liar, having the previous day admitted before witnesses his liability.
- (30) A certain weight.
- (31) Because the admission is not of the same kind as the claim.
- (32) Equals 25 silver denarii; 1 silver denar = 6 ma'ahs.
- (33) Read טריסים, = 3 isars; v. p. 232, n. 3.
- (34) The claim is a coin, and the admission is a coin.
- (35) 1 kor = 2 lethek; measure of capacity.
- (36) He does not require the admission to be of the same kind as the claim.
- (37) Since he claims both jars and oil, the admission must be a portion of both.
- (38) From an oath; if he admits the vessels, but denies the land, there is no oath, for there is no oath in the case of land (infra 42b); if he admits the land, but denies the vessels, there is no oath, for there is no admission of a portion of the vessels; and since he denies all (נופר הכל) he is free from an oath.
- (39) To swear for the vessels, and also for the lands, since an oath is imposed in any case because of the vessels.
- (40) Movables.
- (41) Land.
- (42) V. infra 42b.
- (43) Gen. XXIV,3.
- (44) Tetragrammaton; supra p. 208, n. 16.
- (45) Ibid.
- (46) What Rab meant in saying he must be adjured by the oath stated in the Torah is not that the Name must be used, but that a Sefer Torah (Scroll of the Law) or Tefillin (phylacteries) must be held by the person taking the oath.
- (47) Though it is not stated in the Mishnah, but is merely a law promulgated by Rab, it has the force of a mishnaic law; Sanh. 33a.
- (48) And we do not say that the judge, having already administered the oath incorrectly, should suffer the consequences of his mistake, and pay the amount denied by the debtor on this incorrectly administered oath.
- (49) Tefillin are not deemed as sacred as a Scroll of the Law.
- (50) With a Scroll of the Law.
- (51) That if he did not hold any sacred object when taking the oath, it must be repeated properly.
- (52) That if he held tefillin it is not good enough.
- (53) Though if it has already been administered with tefillin it is effective; but a Sefer Torah is required in the first instance לכתחלה.
- (54) As a special consideration.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 39a

that the whole world trembled at the time when the Holy One, blessed be He, said at Sinai: Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.¹ And with reference to all transgressions in the Torah it is said, holding guiltless;² but here it is said, Will not hold him guiltless.³ And for all the transgressions in the Torah he [the sinner] alone is punished, but here he and his family; for it is said: Suffer not thy mouth⁴ to bring thy flesh into guilt;⁵ and 'flesh' means 'near relative', as it is said: And from thine own flesh thou shalt not hide thyself.⁶ And for all the transgressions in the Torah he alone is punished, but here he and all the world; for it is said: Swearing and lying...[therefore doth the land mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein doth languish].⁷ — But say, perhaps, only when he does them all!⁸ That cannot enter your mind, for it is written, Because of swearing the land mourneth;⁹ and it is written, therefore doth the land mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein doth languish.¹⁰ And with reference to all transgressions in the Torah, if he has merit, punishment is suspended for two or three generations, but here he is punished immediately, as it is said, I cause it to go forth, saith the Lord of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by My name; and it shall abide in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof.¹¹ 'I cause it to go forth':¹² immediately; 'and it shall enter into the house of the thief': he who steals the mind¹³ of people; [e.g.], there is no money owing to him by his fellow, but he claims from him, and causes him to swear; 'and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by My name': according to its plain meaning; 'and it shall abide in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof': from this you learn, that things which neither fire nor water can destroy,¹⁴ a false oath can destroy. If he says, 'I shall not swear,'¹⁵ he is dismissed immediately.¹⁶ But if he said, 'I shall swear,' those who are standing there say to each other, 'Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, etc.'¹⁷ And when they adjure him, they say to him: 'Know that we do not adjure you according to your own mind, but according to the mind of the Omnipresent, and the mind of the Beth din,'¹⁸ for thus we find in the case of Moses our teacher: When he adjured Israel,¹⁹ he said to them: 'Know that not according to your own minds do I adjure you, but according to the mind of the Omnipresent, and my mind;' as it is said: Neither with you only [do I make this covenant and this oath].²⁰ But with him that standeth here with us:²¹ hence we know only those who were standing by Mount Sinai [were adjured]; the coming generations, and proselytes who were later to be proselytised, how do we know [that they were adjured also then]? Because it is said, and also with him that is not here with us this day.²² And from this we know only [that they were adjured for] the commandments which they received at Mount Sinai; how do we know [that they were adjured for] the commandments which were to be promulgated later, such as reading the Megillah?²³ Because it is said: They confirmed and accepted:²⁴ they confirmed what they had long ago accepted.²⁵

What is the meaning of: it²⁶ also may be said in any language? — As we learnt: These may be recited in any language: The scriptural text of the Sotah,²⁷ confession when giving the tithe,²⁸ the Shema',²⁹ Tefillah,³⁰ Grace after meals,³¹ the oath of testimony, and the oath of deposit.³² And now it says also, 'The oath of the judges may also be said in any language.'

The Master said: They say to him, Know that the whole world trembled at the time when the Holy One blessed be He said, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. — What is the reason? Shall we say because it was given at Sinai? The Ten Commandments were also given there! Again, if because it is more serious?³³ — But is it more serious? Behold, has it not been taught: These are light: positive and negative [precepts], except, 'Thou shalt not take [the name of the Lord thy God in vain];' serious: [sins for the transgression of which] kareth and death at the hands of the Beth din [are inflicted], and 'Thou shalt not take etc.' is in this category.'³⁴ — Well then, because of the reason which he states: With reference to all transgressions in the Torah it is said 'holding guiltless', but here it is said, 'will not hold guiltless'. And with reference to all transgressions in the Torah is it not said, 'Will not hold guiltless'? Surely, it is written: and will by no means hold guiltless!³⁵ That is required for R. Eleazar's deduction, for we learnt, R. Eleazar said: It is impossible to say, 'holding guiltless', for it is already said, 'Will not hold guiltless'; it is impossible to say, 'Will not hold guiltless', for it is already said, 'holding guiltless'. How [can they be reconciled]? He 'holds guiltless' those who repent, and 'does not hold guiltless' those who do not repent.³⁶

'For all transgressions in the Torah he alone is punished, but here he and his family.' — And for all transgressions of the Torah is not his family punished? Lo, it is written, And I will set My face against that man, and against his family.³⁷ And it was taught: R. Simeon said: If he sinned, what sin did his family commit? But this shows you that there is not a family containing a tax-collector,³⁸ in which they are not all tax-collectors; or containing a robber, in which they are not all robbers,³⁹ because they protect him!⁴⁰ — There [the family are punished] with another [lighter] punishment, but here with his own punishment; as was taught: Rabbi said: And I will cut him off.⁴¹ Why is it said? Because it is said, And I will set My face [against that man, and against his family];⁴² I might think the whole family shall be cut off, therefore it is said, 'him':⁴³ him will I cut off, but not the whole family shall I cut off.⁴⁴

‘For all transgressions in the Torah he alone is punished, but here he and the whole world.’ — And for all transgressions of the Torah is not the whole world punished? Lo, it is written, And they shall stumble one upon another:⁴⁵ one because of the iniquity of the other; this teaches us that all Israel are sureties one for another!⁴⁶

(2) Ibid. XXXIV, 7: Keeping mercy unto the thousandth generation, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and holding guiltless. The text has וְנִקְיָה לֹא יִנְקֶה, and will not hold guiltless; but Scripture of set purpose did not write simply לֹא יִנְקֶה, but wrote וְנִקְיָה first to teach us that there are occasions when He holds guiltless the transgressors (when they repent).

(3) Ibid. XX, 7: The Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain. Here the text has simply לֹא יִנְקֶה, and not נִקְיָה. So serious is the sin of a false oath that even repentance and the Day of Atonement do not bring the sinner complete absolution, but he must suffer some punishment to expiate his sin; v. Maharsha.

(36) The text, literally, is: ‘and holding guiltless, will not hold guiltless.’ R. Eleazar explains: ‘holding guiltless’ those who repent, ‘He will not hold guiltless’ those who do not repent. But a false oath is more serious than other transgressions in that Scripture writes, with reference to it, לא ינקה, He will not hold guiltless even those who repent; whereas, with reference to other transgressions, it writes, ונקה לא ינקה.

(38) Tax-collectors were considered unscrupulous, often taking more than their due, v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.), p. 148, n. 6.

(39) If there is a black sheep in a family, the other members are probably not much better.

(40) Hence, in the case of other transgressions, too, the whole family is punished; and not merely in the case of a false oath.

(43) 'I will cut him off.'

(44) They will suffer merely a minor punishment.

(45) Lev. XXVI, 37.

(46) Hence in the case of all transgressions the whole world (of Israel) is punished, because all Israelites are responsible for one another, and bound to prevent wrongdoing!

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 39b

There [they are punished], because it was in their power to prevent [the sin], and they did not prevent it.¹

What is the difference between the wicked of his² family and the wicked of the [rest of the] world; and between the righteous of his family and the righteous of the [rest of the] world? — He himself, in the case of other transgressions, is punished by his own [appropriate] punishment, and the wicked of his family, by a severe punishment, and the wicked of the [rest of the] world, by a light punishment; the righteous, both here³ and there,⁴ are free. In the case of a [false] oath, he and the wicked of his family are punished with his punishment, and the wicked of the [rest of the] world, with a severe punishment; and the righteous, both here and there, with a light punishment.⁵ 'If he says, I shall not swear, he is dismissed immediately; but if he said, I shall swear, those who are standing there say to each other: Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men.' — Granted that he who swears is committing a wrong, but he who causes him to swear — why [should he be counted wicked]?⁶ — As was taught: R. Simeon b. Tarfon said: The oath of the Lord shall be between them both,⁷ this teaches us that the oath rests on both.⁸

'And when they adjure him, they say to him, Know that not in accordance with your own mind, etc.' — Why should they say this to him? — Because of [the episode of] the cane of Raba.⁹

THE CLAIM [MUST BE AT LEAST] TWO MA'AH'S.

Rab said: The denial [in regard to] the claim must be [at least] two ma'ahs;¹⁰ and Samuel said: The claim itself must be [at least] two [ma'ahs]; even if he denied only a perutah, or admitted only a perutah, he is liable. Raba said: Our Mishnah is evidence in support of Rab, and there are Scriptural verses in support of Samuel. 'Our Mishnah is evidence in support of Rab' — for it states: THE CLAIM [MUST BE AT LEAST] TWO MA'AH'S, AND THE ADMISSION [AT LEAST] THE VALUE OF A PERUTAH. But it does not state that the denial of the claim may be a perutah; and we learnt also: Admission must be [at least] a perutah;¹¹ but it does not state that the denial [must be at least] a perutah. 'There are Scriptural verses in support of Samuel' — for it is written: If a man give unto his neighbour silver or vessels to keep¹² — just as 'vessels' implies two,¹³ so 'silver' implies two;¹⁴ just as 'silver' is a thing of worth, so everything¹⁵ which is of worth [is included]; and Scripture says, This is it.¹⁶ — And Rab?¹⁷ — That we require for admission of a portion of the claim.¹⁸ And Samuel? — It is written, 'it', and it is written, 'this', [to teach us] that if he denied a portion, and admitted a portion, he is liable.¹⁹ And Rab? — One [word is to teach us] that there must be admission of a portion of the claim, and one [word is to teach us] that there must be admission of the same kind as the claim.²⁰ And Samuel? — [He may retort:] Can you not incidentally infer that the amount of the claim is lessened?²¹ — Well, then, Rab may tell you: ‘Silver’ when originally mentioned is with reference to the denial;²² for, if it were not so, Scripture could have written: ‘If a man give unto his neighbour vessels to keep’; and I would have said: Just as ‘vessels’ implies two, so everything must be two;²³ why did Scripture need to write ‘silver’? Since it is not required for the claim, apply it for the denial.²⁴ And Samuel? — He may say to you: If Scripture had written ‘vessels’, and had not written ‘silver’, I might have said: Just as ‘vessels’ implies two, so everything must be two, but a thing of worth we do not require,²⁵ therefore it teaches us [that we do].

We learnt: ‘TWO SILVER [MA'AHs] OF MINE YOU HAVE IN YOUR POSSESSION.’ — ‘I HAVE OF YOURS IN MY POSSESSION ONLY A PERUTAH,’ HE IS EXEMPT. What is the reason? Is it not because the claim is now less [than two ma'ahs]? Hence it is a refutation of Samuel's view! — Samuel may tell you: Do you think the Mishnah means the value [of two ma'ahs]?²⁶ It means literally [two ma'ahs];²⁷ that which he claimed, the other did not admit to him; and that which he admitted to him, he had not claimed from him. If so, say the latter clause: ‘TWO SILVER [MA'AHs] AND A PERUTAH OF MINE HAVE YOU IN YOUR POSSESSION.’ ‘I HAVE OF YOURS IN MY POSSESSION ONLY A PERUTAH,’ HE IS LIABLE. Granted, if you say [the Mishnah means] the value [of two ma'ahs and a perutah], therefore he is liable,²⁸ but if you say [the Mishnah means it] literally, why is he liable? That which he claimed, the other did not admit to him, and that which he admitted to him, he had not claimed from him! — Is this not an argument against Samuel? But surely R. Nahman said that Samuel said: If he claimed from him wheat and barley, and he admitted to him one of them, he is liable.²⁹ This appears to be the more reasonable interpretation, for it states in a later clause: ‘A LITRA OF GOLD OF MINE YOU HAVE IN YOUR POSSESSION.’ — ‘I HAVE OF YOURS IN MY POSSESSION ONLY A LITRA OF SILVER,’ HE IS EXEMPT. Granted, if you say the Mishnah means them literally, therefore he is exempt;³⁰ but if you say it means their value,³¹ why is he exempt? A litra is much!³² — Well then, since the latter clause is intended literally, the first clause is also intended literally; shall we say, then, that it will be a refutation of Rab's view!³³ — [No!] Rab may tell you: The whole Mishnah deals with the value [of ma'ahs and perutah];³⁴ but [the case of] a litra of gold is different.³⁵

(1) [Whereas false swearing undermines the very foundations and structure of human society involving in a common destruction the wholly righteous as well as the wicked.]

(2) The sinner's.

(4) Of the rest of the world.

(5) The whole passage deals with people who were able to prevent the sin, and did not; righteous people are those who are righteous in other respects, but passive in not preventing sin; and wicked people are those who are wicked in other respects. Hence, in the case of a false oath, the righteous, both of the family and others, are punished by a light punishment, because they were able to prevent it, and did not; but in the case of other transgressions they are free, though they were able to prevent them, because other transgressions are not as serious as a false oath; and they were, in any case, merely passive. According to this, the statement of the Talmud (top of 39b), that in the case of other transgressions they are punished if they were able to prevent the sin and did not (which implies, that in the case of an oath, they are punished even if they were not able to prevent it), is, in the sequel, not accepted. This explanation of the passage is opposed to that of Maharsha who explains ‘righteous’ as those unable to prevent the sin. In that case, why should they, in the case of an oath, be punished? They did not commit the sin, and they were unable to prevent its commission. The view of the Maharsha seems to conflict with one's sense of justice, [V. however p. 238, n. 5].

(6) For the bystanders say, these wicked men, i.e., both.

(7) Ex. XXII. 10.

(8) The claimant also merits rebuke, for if he had been careful to arrange for witnesses to be present when giving the debtor the money, or to have a signed document, there would have been no need for an oath.

(9) V. supra 29a.

(10) Lit., ‘silver (pieces)’. The amount he denies must be at least two ma'ahs, and since the admission must be at least a perutah, the total amount claimed must be at least two ma'ahs and a perutah.

(11) B.M. 55a: There are five cases where the minimum is a perutah; admission of a perutah is mentioned, but not denial. Hence this Mishnah and our Mishnah agree with Rab.

(12) Ex. XXII, 6.

(13) Two being the minimum of the plural 'vessels'.

(14) So that the claim must be for at least two silver pieces, i.e., ma'ahs.

(15) [Var. lec., 'vessels', reading כליים for כלי; v. Rashi and Tosaf.; cf. infra p. 247, n. 6.]

(16) Ex. XXII, 8: for any claim about which the debtor says, 'I do not owe you the whole amount, but this is it', i.e., 'I admit owing you this portion only,' he takes an oath. Hence, the admission may be part of the two ma'ahs (leaving less than two ma'ahs for denial). Scripture thus appears to support Samuel.

(17) Scripture is against him!

(18) Scripture writes 'this is it' to teach us that an oath is imposed only when a portion of the claim is admitted; but it does not necessarily refer to the claim of two ma'ahs mentioned in verse 6; there must always be a denial of two ma'ahs apart from the portion admitted.

(19) I.e., 'it (a portion) I deny; this (a portion) I admit'. Hence, if the denial is only a perutah, he is liable.

(20) I.e., 'it (a portion of the claim) I admit; this (of this very kind) I admit'.

(21) Assuming even, as you say, that the verse refers to admission only (that it must be a portion, and of the same kind), it is still obvious that the denial is less than two ma'ahs, for the only claim mentioned by Scripture (verse 6) is two ma'ahs, and of this, Scripture says (verse 8), he admits a portion — hence, he denies a portion (clearly less than two ma'ahs). Thus Scripture appears to be opposed to Rab's view.

(22) The word 'silver' (Ex. XXII, 6), which we say implies two ma'ahs, does not refer to the total claim, but to the denial.

(23) 'Silver' included; hence I would have known that two ma'ahs are the minimum for the claim.

(24) That the denial must be at least two ma'ahs.

(25) It is not necessary that the two things claimed shall be valuable (for silver is not mentioned), and even two perutahs suffice for a claim.

(26) One claimed goods to the value of two ma'ahs, and the other admitted goods (the same kind) to the value of a perutah? If this were the case, he would be liable, though the claim is now less than two ma'ahs.

(27) One claimed two ma'ahs (silver), and the other admitted a perutah (copper); he is exempt, because the admission is not of the same kind as the claim.

(28) For he admits a portion of the claim: the same kind of goods.

(29) Samuel counts this as being admission of the same kind as the claim; similarly, if he claimed two ma'ahs (silver) and a perutah (copper), and the other admitted a perutah (copper), he is liable.

(30) Because he claims gold, and the other admits silver.

(31) Goods to the value of a litra of gold, or silver.

(32) Sufficient for the minimum required for admission and denial.

(33) For the first clause states that if he claims two ma'ahs, and the other admits a perutah, he is exempt, because, presumably (taking the Mishnah literally) he claims silver, and the other admits copper; but if he claimed goods to the value of two ma'ahs, and the other admitted goods to the value of a perutah, he would be liable, though the claim was only originally two ma'ahs, and was, after the admission of a perutah, diminished from two ma'ahs.

(34) In the first clause he is therefore exempt, because, after the admission, the claim becomes less than two ma'ahs; and in the second clause, when the claim is two ma'ahs and a perutah, he is liable, because after the admission of a perutah, there is still denial of two ma'ahs.

(35) The Mishnah obviously intends this literally, for one claims a certain weight (not coins) of gold, and the other admits the same weight of silver; therefore he is exempt, because the admission is not of the same kind as the claim. If the Mishnah had said that one claimed a sum of money in gold, and the other admitted a sum of money in silver, we might have said, legitimately, that goods to the value of those sums were intended, and the man would have been liable; but since the Mishnah states the weight of the gold and silver, it means actually gold and silver; and therefore he is exempt.

Know [that this is so],¹ for it states in a later clause: 'A GOLDEN DENAR OF MINE HAVE YOU IN YOUR POSSESSION.' — 'I HAVE OF YOURS IN MY POSSESSION ONLY A SILVER DENAR, OR A TRESIS, OR A PUNDION, OR A PERUTAH,' HE IS LIABLE, FOR THEY ARE ALL ONE COINAGE.² Granted, if you say [the Mishnah deals with] values, therefore he is liable;³ but if you say it means them literally, why is he liable?⁴ — R. Eleazar said: [It means] he claimed from him a denar in coins; and he teaches us that a perutah is in the category of coin.⁵ This also is evidence [that the Mishnah means this], for it states: FOR THEY ARE ALL ONE COINAGE. And Rab?⁶ — All coins are subject to the same law.⁷ Now, as to R. Eleazar: shall we say, that, since he expounds the latter clause in accordance with the view of Samuel,⁸ he agrees in the first clause also with Samuel?⁹ — No! The latter clause is definitely intended literally, for it states: FOR THEY ARE ALL ONE COINAGE; but the first clause may be either in accordance with the view of Rab¹⁰ or Samuel.

Come and hear: 'A golden denar coin of mine you have in your possession.' — 'I have of yours in my possession only a silver denar,' he is liable. Now the reason [he is liable] is because he said to him 'a golden coin,'¹¹ but if he had said simply ['a golden denar'], he would have implied its value!¹² — R. Ashi said: Thus it means: If he says, a golden denar, it is as if he said, a golden denar coin.¹³ R. Hiyya taught in support of Rab: 'A sela' of mine you have in your possession.' — 'I have of yours in my possession only a sela',¹⁴ less two ma'ahs,' he is liable; 'less one ma'ah', he is exempt.¹⁵

R. Nahman b. Isaac¹⁶ said that Samuel said: They did not teach this¹⁷ except in the case of a claim of a creditor and admission [of a portion] on the part of the debtor; but in the case of a claim of a creditor and the testimony of one witness, even if he claimed only a perutah, he is liable.¹⁸ What is the reason? Because it is written, One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin;¹⁹ for any iniquity, or for any sin, he does not rise up, but he rises up for an oath; and it was taught: Wherever two [witnesses] make him liable for money, one witness makes him liable for an oath.

And R. Nahman said that Samuel said: If he claimed from him wheat and barley, and the other admitted one of them, he is liable.²⁰ Said R. Isaac to him: 'Correct! And so said R. Johanan.' Do we infer that Resh Lakish disagrees with him?²¹ — Some say, he was waiting and was silent;²² and some say, he was drinking and was silent.

Shall we say this supports him: IF HE CLAIMED FROM HIM WHEAT, AND THE OTHER ADMITTED BARLEY, HE IS EXEMPT; BUT R. GAMALIEL MAKES HIM LIABLE.²³ — The reason [he is exempt] is because he claimed from him wheat, and he admitted barley; but [if he claimed from him] wheat and barley, and he admitted one of them, he is liable!²⁴ — No! The same rule applies: even [if he claimed] wheat and barley, [and the other admitted one,] he is also exempt; and why they disagree in the case of wheat is to show you the power of R. Gamaliel.²⁵

Come and hear: IF HE CLAIMED FROM HIM VESSELS AND LANDS, AND HE ADMITTED THE VESSELS, AND DENIED THE LANDS; OR [ADMITTED] THE LANDS, AND DENIED THE VESSELS, HE IS EXEMPT;

(1) That the rest of the Mishnah deals with values.

(2) [MS.M. rightly omits: FOR THEY ARE ALL ONE COINAGE.]

(3) For he claims goods to the value of a golden denar, and the other admits goods to the value of a silver denar, or less.

(4) He claims gold, and the other admits silver, or copper.

(5) We need not necessarily infer that the Mishnah deals with goods to the value of a golden denar or silver denar; it means actual coins; and it teaches us that though the claim is for a gold coin and the admission is a silver or copper coin, he is liable, because they are all coins (and the admission is therefore of the same kind as the claim), and that even a perutah (the value of which is very small) is still counted a coin.

(6) Who says the Mishnah means values, how will he explain the phrase, FOR THEY ARE ALL ONE COINAGE?

(7) The Mishnah means, all the coins (being the values of the goods claimed or admitted) are in the same category. Even the smallest (a perutah) is of sufficient value to be the amount of admission in a claim.

(8) That the Mishnah means actual coins.

(9) That if he claimed two ma'ahs (weight in silver), and the other admitted a perutah (weight in copper), he is exempt, because the admission is not of the same kind as the claim; but if he claimed goods to the value of two ma'ahs, and the other admitted goods to the value of a perutah, he would be liable, though the claim was only two ma'ahs (and not two ma'ahs and a perutah), and, after admission, was less than two ma'ahs.

(10) That the Mishnah means values, and he is exempt because the denial is less than two ma'ahs.

(11) Specifically mentioning 'coin'; he is liable because the admission (a silver denar) is of the same kind (a coin) as the claim.

(12) Hence our Mishnah which states golden denar (not mentioning coin) means value, and since this clause in the Mishnah means value, the first clause also means value. Now, the first clause states that if one claims two ma'ahs (goods to that value), and the other admits a perutah (goods to that value), he is exempt — obviously, because the denial is less than two ma'ahs. This, therefore, supports Rab.

(13) The Baraita does not mean that he actually said a golden denar coin, but simply golden denar; but this is equivalent to mentioning coin. The claim is a coin, and the admission a coin, therefore he is liable. Hence, we cannot deduce that if he said golden denar (without coin) he meant value, and obtain from this (via the Mishnah) support for Rab.

(14) Twenty-four ma'ahs.

(15) Because the denial must be at least two ma'ahs; which is the view of Rab.

(16) [MS.M. rightly omits 'b. Isaac'; cf. the next dictum.]

(17) That the claim must be at least two ma'ahs to make the debtor liable for an oath, if he admits a portion and denies the rest.

(18) If the debtor denies the whole claim, and one witness testifies that he owes the money, he must take an oath, even if the whole claim was only for a perutah; for if there had been two witnesses, the debtor would have had to pay; and wherever two witnesses impose payment, one witness imposes an oath.

(19) Deut. XIX, 15.

(20) It is counted as admission of the same kind as the claim.

(21) R. Johanan.

(22) Resh Lakish always waited till R. Johanan completed his discourse, and then he would give his own view. In the present case, R. Isaac left the Academy before R. Johanan ended the lecture, and did not know whether later Resh Lakish disagreed with him or not.

(23) He does not require that the admission shall be of the same kind as the claim.

(24) Hence this supports R. Nahman.

(25) That even when the admission is not of the same kind as the claim he holds that he is liable.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 40b

IF HE ADMITTED A PORTION OF THE LANDS, HE IS EXEMPT; A PORTION OF THE VESSELS, HE IS LIABLE. Now, the reason [he is exempt] in the case of vessels and lands is because for land no oath is imposed; but for vessels and vessels similar to vessels and lands he is liable!¹ — [No!] The same rule applies: even in the case of vessels and vessels he is also exempt; and the reason it states vessels and lands is because it wishes to teach us that if he admits a portion of the vessels, he is liable also for the lands. What does he [intend to] teach us [thereby]? That they bind?² We have already learnt it! They³ bind the properties for which there is security, to take an oath for them.⁴ — Here is the chief place [for the enunciation of this law];⁵ there⁶ he mentions it merely incidentally.

And R. Hiyya b. Abba said that R. Johanan said: If he claimed from him wheat and barley, and the other admitted to him one of them, he is exempt. — But did not R. Isaac say: 'Correct! and so said R. Johanan.'⁷ — They⁸ are amoriam who disagree as to R. Johanan's view.

Come and hear: IF HE CLAIMED FROM HIM WHEAT, AND THE OTHER ADMITTED TO HIM BARLEY, HE IS EXEMPT; AND R. GAMALIEL MAKES HIM LIABLE. — The reason [he is exempt] is because he claimed from him wheat, and he admitted barley; but [if he claimed from him] wheat and barley, and he admitted one of them, he is liable!⁹ — [No!] The same rule applies: even [if he claimed] wheat and barley, [and the other admitted one,] he is also exempt; and the reason it states it thus is to show you the power of R. Gamaliel.

Come and hear: IF HE CLAIMED FROM HIM VESSELS AND LANDS, AND HE ADMITTED THE VESSELS, AND DENIED THE LANDS; OR [ADMITTED] THE LANDS, AND DENIED THE VESSELS, HE IS EXEMPT; IF HE ADMITTED A PORTION OF THE LANDS, HE IS EXEMPT; A PORTION OF THE VESSELS, HE IS LIABLE. — The reason [he is exempt] in the case of vessels and lands is because for land no oath is imposed; but for vessels, and vessels similar to vessels, and lands he is liable! — [No!] The same rule applies: even in the case of vessels and vessels he is also exempt; but this he teaches us that if he admits a portion of the vessels, he is liable also for the lands. — What does he teach us? That they bind? We have already learnt it! They bind the properties for which there is security, to take an oath for them. — Here is its chief place; there he mentions it merely incidentally.¹⁰

R. Abba b. Mammal raised an objection against R. Hiyya b. Abba: If he claimed from him an ox, and he admitted to him a lamb; or [he claimed] a lamb, and he admitted an ox, he is exempt; If he claimed from him an ox and a lamb, and he admitted one of them, he is liable! — He said to him: This [Baraita] is the view of R. Gamaliel. If it is R. Gamaliel's view, even in the first clause [he should be liable]! — But it is the view of Admon;¹¹ and I am not putting you off [with an incorrect answer], for it is an accepted teaching in the mouth of R. Johanan: it is the view of Admon.

R. 'Anan said that Samuel said: If he claimed from him wheat [and was about to claim barley also]; and the other quickly came forward, and admitted to him barley,¹² then, if he appears to act with subtlety,¹³ he is liable,¹⁴ but if he merely intends [to reply to the claim], he is exempt.¹⁵

And R. 'Anan said that Samuel said: If he claimed from him two needles,¹⁶ and he admitted one of them, he is liable; for therefore were 'vessels' expressly mentioned — whatever their value.¹⁷

R. Papa said: If he claimed from him vessels and a perutah, and he admitted the vessels, and denied the perutah, he is exempt; if he admitted the perutah, and denied the vessels, he is liable. In one law he agrees with Rab, and in the other with Samuel. In one law he agrees with Rab, who holds that the denial in the claim must be two ma'ahs;¹⁸ and in the other he agrees with Samuel, who holds that if he claimed from him wheat and barley and he admitted one of them, he is liable.¹⁹

'A HUNDRED DENARII OF MINE YOU HAVE IN YOUR POSSESSION.' — 'I HAVE NOT OF YOURS IN MY POSSESSION;' HE IS EXEMPT.

Said R. Nahman: But they impose upon him the consuetudinary oath.²⁰ What is the reason? Because it is a presumption that a man will not claim [from another] unless he has a claim upon him. — On the contrary, it is a presumption that a man will not have the effrontery [to deny] before his creditor!²¹ — He is merely trying to slip away from him [for the moment], thinking, 'when I will have money, I will pay him.'²² Know [that this is so], for R. Idi b. Abin said that R. Hisda said: He who denies a loan, is fit for testimony;²³ a deposit, is unfit for testimony.²⁴

R. Habiba taught [R. Nahman's law] as applicable to the later clause: 'A HUNDRED DENARII OF MINE YOU HAVE IN YOUR POSSESSION;' HE SAID TO HIM, 'YES'. ON THE MORROW HE SAID TO HIM: 'GIVE THEM TO ME'; [AND THE OTHER REPLIED,] 'I HAVE GIVEN THEM TO YOU;’ HE IS EXEMPT. — And R. Nahman said: But they impose upon him the consuetudinary oath. — He who applies [R. Nahman's law] to the first clause²⁵ will certainly apply it to the second clause;²⁶

- (1) If he claimed two different vessels, and the other admitted one (which is similar to claiming vessels and lands, the other admitting one of them), he is liable. Hence, it supports R. Nahman.
- (2) That the vessels ‘bind’ the lands, i.e., that because he has to take an oath for the vessels in any case, the lands are joined and included in the oath.
- (3) Properties for which there is no security, i.e., movables.
- (4) Kid. 26a.
- (5) Because this treatise deals with the laws of oaths.
- (6) In Kiddushin; v. B.M. 4b.
- (7) That if he claimed wheat and barley, and the other admitted one, he is liable.
- (8) R. Isaac and R. Hiyya b. Abba.
- (9) This is an argument against R. Hiyya b. Abba.
- (10) V. supra p. 245.
- (11) Supra 38b. [Who though he requires the admission to be of the same kind as the claim, considers the claim of two objects of different species and the admission of one of them to be an admission in like kind to the claim, v. Keth. 108 (Rashi).]
- (12) Before the claimant had mentioned barley.
- (13) Admitting barley quickly before the claimant mentions it, so that it appears that the claimant demanded wheat, and he admitted barley, and therefore he would be exempt from an oath.
- (14) For the claimant in fact demands both, and he admits one.
- (15) The claimant having, as yet, only demanded wheat; and he replies, denying wheat, but admitting barley.
- (16) Though they are worth less than two ma'ahs.
- (17) The verse (Ex. XXII, 6) states: If a man give unto his neighbour silver or vessels to keep; and we deduce that ‘silver’ implies a thing of value, and ‘vessels’ implies two. But Scripture could have said ‘silvers’ (כספֿים), instead of כסף and we could have deduced both laws (that the claim must be for two things of value). Hence, since Scripture specifically mentions ‘vessels’ separately, we infer that vessels need not be of value. [Whether the minimum of a perutah is required with vessels, depends on the reading ‘everything’ or ‘vessels’; v. supra p. 240, n. 4 and Tosaf. 39b s.v. מֵה]
- (18) Therefore for the denial of a perutah he is exempt.
- (19) Therefore if he claimed a perutah and vessels, and he admitted the perutah but denied the vessels, he is liable (and the vessels need not be of the value of two ma'ahs, as has been explained).
- (20) Lit., ‘of inducement’, v. B.M. (Sonc. ed.) p. 20, n. 4. Though, being a כופר הכל, he is legally exempt from an oath, the Beth din, as a matter of equity, impose an oath.
- (21) And since he does deny the whole claim, he must be speaking the truth; then why an oath?
- (22) The denial is therefore not effrontery, but an excuse to gain time; hence, he may not be speaking the truth, and he must take an oath.
- (23) For, since it is a loan, he may have spent the money, and, in order to gain time, he denies it; but he is not really dishonest; and though witnesses testify that he owes he money (and he had denied it, but not on oath), we still assume that he merely wishes to gain time, and will pay later, and he is therefore still qualified to be accepted as a witness in a case.
- (24) For a deposit is not intended to be spent; and where witnesses testified that at the time of denial it was in his possession, he must be considered dishonest (v. B.M. 5b).
- (25) That even if he never admitted the claim at all he must take the consuetudinary oath.
- (26) For he has already admitted the claim, and therefore it is obvious at least that the claim is a valid one.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 41a

but he who applies it to the second clause [may say] here it is applicable because there is money at stake;¹ but there where there is no money at stake,² it is not applicable.

What is the difference between an oath imposed by the Torah³ and an oath imposed by the Rabbis?⁴ — There is this difference; transference of the oath: in the case of an oath imposed by the Torah we do not transfer the oath; but in the case of an oath imposed by the Rabbis we transfer the oath.⁵ And according to Mar son of R. Ashi who holds that in the case of a Torah oath we also transfer the oath, what is the difference between a Torah oath and a Rabbinic oath? — There is this difference: going down to his property; in the case of a Torah oath we go down to his property;⁶ in the case of a Rabbinic oath we do not go down to his property. And according to R. Jose who holds that in the case of a Rabbinic [law] we also go down to his property? For we learnt: The finding of a deaf-mute, imbecile, or minor, is subject to the law of theft, in the interests of peace.⁷ R. Jose says: Real theft.⁸ And R. Hisda said: [He means] real theft according to their enactment.⁹ What is the difference?¹⁰ Its extraction by the Court.¹¹ [Now, according to R. Jose] what is the difference between a Torah oath and a Rabbinic oath?¹² — There is a difference in the case where the opponent is suspected of swearing falsely: in the case of a Torah oath, where the opponent is suspected of swearing falsely, we transfer the oath to the other one;¹³ but in the case of a Rabbinic oath, it is an enactment, and we do not institute one enactment on top of another enactment.¹⁴

And according to the Rabbis who disagree with R. Jose, holding that in the case of a Rabbinic [law] We do not go down to his property,¹⁵ what do we do to him? We excommunicate him. — Said Rabina to R. Ashi: This is holding him by his testicles till he gives up his cloak!¹⁶ — Well then what do we do to him?¹⁷ — He [Rabina]¹⁸ said to him: We excommunicate him until the time comes for his punishment with lashes, and we lash him, and leave him.¹⁹

R. Papa said: If one produces a document of indebtedness against his neighbour, and the other says to him, 'It is a paid document, we say to him, 'It is not at all in your power [to question the validity of the document]; go and pay him.' And if he says, 'Let him swear to me,'²⁰ we say to him, 'Swear to him.' Said R. Aha b. Raba to R. Ashi: [If so]²¹ what is the difference between this and one who impairs the validity of his document?²² — He said to him: There,²³ even if the debtor does not demand [an oath], we demand it for him; but here, we say to him, 'Go and pay him'; but if he demands and says, 'Swear to me,' we say to the creditor, 'Go and swear to him.'²⁴ But if he is a Rabbinic scholar, we do not make him swear. Said R. Yemar to R. Ashi: A Rabbinic scholar may strip men of their cloaks?²⁵ But²⁶ we do not attend to his case.²⁷

'YOU HAVE OF MINE IN YOUR POSSESSION ONE HUNDRED DENARII,' etc.

R. Judah said: R. Assi said; If one lends to his neighbour before witnesses, he must repay him before witnesses. When I said this before Samuel, he said to me: He may say to him: 'I paid you before So-and-so and So-and-so, and they went to a country beyond the seas.'²⁸ We learnt: 'YOU HAVE OF MINE IN YOUR POSSESSION A HUNDRED DENARII'; HE SAID TO HIM [BEFORE WITNESSES]: 'YES'. ON THE MORROW HE SAID TO HIM: 'GIVE THEM TO ME'; [AND THE OTHER REPLIED:] 'I HAVE GIVEN THEM TO YOU,' HE IS EXEMPT. Now here, since he claimed from him before witnesses,²⁹ it is as if he lent him before witnesses, and yet it states he is exempt:

(1) The money has already been admitted in front of witnesses; and therefore when he says he has returned it, he must at least take an oath.

(2) For it is not absolutely certain that the claim is valid, since he denied it completely.

(3) In the case of a partial admission of the claim.

(4) In the case of a complete denial: R. Nahman's consuetudinary oath.

(5) The rule is that the debtor takes the oath, and is free. If he says to the claimant, 'You take the oath' (being satisfied to pay, if he really takes the oath), the Court do not permit this transference of the oath from debtor to creditor in the case of a Torah oath (מוֹדָה בַּמִּקְצֵת), but permit it in the case of a Rabbinic oath (כּוֹפֵר הַכֶּלִּי), where a consuetudinary oath is imposed).

- (6) If he refuses to take the oath or to pay, the Court instruct their officers to distrain on his goods to the value of the debt.
- (7) If they find anything, it belongs to them, though, because of their disabilities, they have no legal right of possession. Yet, in the interests of peace, no one is permitted to deprive them of what they find; and he who does is guilty of theft.
- (8) Not only in the interests of social stability do we empower the deaf-mute, imbecile, and minor to retain what they find; it is really lawfully theirs; and he who extracts it from them is guilty of real theft.
- (9) Not real theft according to the Biblical law, but only according to the Rabbinic law.
- (10) Between R. Jose and the other Rabbis, since he also agrees that it is only theft by enactment of the Rabbis in the interests of social peace.
- (11) R. Jose makes the proprietary rights of the deaf-mute stronger (though only Rabbinically, and not Biblically), and if anyone steals from him that which he has found, the Court extracts it from the thief; though the thief has not transgressed the Biblical law (Thou shalt not steal), nor is he disqualified from being a witness (v. Git. 61a, Rashi). According to the other Rabbis, if the thief stole from the deaf-mute the thing that he found, the Court does not interfere,
- (12) Since he holds even in the case of a Rabbinic law the court has power to distrain.
- (13) If the debtor is suspected of swearing falsely (in the case of a claim of which he admits a portion) the creditor is given the oath, and obtains his money.
- (14) To impose an oath on a כופר הכר is itself a Rabbinic ordinance; and to transfer the oath from debtor to creditor is also a Rabbinic ordinance; we do not impose both; if the debtor is suspect and cannot take the oath, the creditor is not permitted to take the oath, but loses his money.
- (15) The Court has no power to extract from the thief who stole from the deaf-mute the object he found.
- (16) This is actually force, the same as distraint, if you say that we excommunicate him till he restores the theft or, in the case of a debtor, pays the debt; then what is the difference between the Rabbis and R. Jose?
- (17) [Omitted in MS.M., v. next note.]
- (18) [According to MS.M. (previous note) this reply would be made by R. Ashi.]
- (19) If he allows 30 days to elapse with the ban of excommunication upon him for contempt of court, he is punished with lashes (v. Kid. 12b).
- (20) That I have not paid him.
- (21) [Adopting reading of Florentine MS. v. D.S. a.l.]
- (22) If a creditor, producing a document for his claim, admits having already received some payment on account, he impairs the trustworthiness of his document, for the amount stated on the document is now not true (on his own admission), and he may have received more than he admits; he therefore cannot obtain the rest of his claim without taking an oath. But in R. Papa's example he does not admit partial repayment, and therefore has not impaired the validity of the document he produces; why then should he be asked to take an oath?
- (23) Where the document is impaired.
- (24) For though the document is valid, it is possible the debtor paid him, and the creditor omitted to restore the document to the debtor for destruction; therefore he must swear, if the debtor demands it; v. Tosaf.
- (25) Because he is a scholar is he favoured, and allowed to enforce his claim without an oath?
- (26) [It is not clear whether what follows are the words of R. Ashi or of R. Yemar. MS.M. reads, He (R. Ashi) said to him.]
- (27) We do not make him swear, because it would appear that we suspect him of attempting to claim money on a paid document; but he cannot receive his money, for the debtor demands an oath. But what is the difference between a scholar and an ordinary person? An ordinary person, too, need not swear, and loses his money. A scholar, if he has obtained his money by force from the debtor, is allowed to retain it; but an ordinary person is compelled by the court to return it; v. Asheri and פלפולא הרפתא a.l.
- (28) And are therefore not available; and the borrower is exempt.
- (29) And he admitted the debt before them; v. B.B. 30a Tosaf. s.v. לא.

which is a refutation of R. Assi!¹ — R. Assi may say to you: I said [that he must repay him before witnesses] only if originally he lent him before witnesses, [which shows that] he did not trust him; but here, he trusted him!²

R. Joseph taught it thus:³ R. Judah said, R. Assi said: If one lends to his neighbour before witnesses, he need not repay him before witnesses; but if he said to him: 'Do not repay me except before witnesses,' he must repay him before witnesses. When I said this before Samuel, he said to me: He may say to him: 'I paid you before So-and-so and So-and-so, and they went to a country beyond the seas.'⁴ We learnt: 'YOU HAVE OF MINE IN YOUR POSSESSION A HUNDRED DENARII'; HE SAID TO HIM [BEFORE WITNESSES]: 'YES'. HE SAID TO HIM: 'DO NOT GIVE THEM TO ME EXCEPT BEFORE WITNESSES'; ON THE MORROW HE SAID TO HIM: 'GIVE THEM TO ME'; [AND THE OTHER REPLIED:] 'I HAVE GIVEN THEM TO YOU,' HE IS LIABLE, BECAUSE HE MUST GIVE THEM TO HIM BEFORE WITNESSES. This is a refutation of Samuel!⁵ — Samuel may say to you: This is a question upon which Tannaim disagree;⁶ for it was taught: [If a man said to his fellow] 'I lent you before witnesses; pay me before witnesses'; he must either pay, or bring proof that he has paid.⁷ R. Judah b. Bathyra said: He may say to him: 'I paid you before So-and-so and So-and-so, and they went to a country beyond the seas.'⁸

R. Aha⁹ asked: How do we know that this¹⁰ refers to the time of the loan, perhaps it refers to the time of the claim? And thus he says to him: 'Did I not lend you before witnesses? You should have repaid me before witnesses!' But at the time of the loan, all hold that he is liable.¹¹ R. Papi said in the name of Raba: The law is: If one lends his neighbour before witnesses, he must repay him before witnesses. But R. Papa said in the name of Raba: If one lends his neighbour before witnesses he need not repay him before witnesses; but if he said to him: 'Do not repay me except before witnesses,' he must repay him before witnesses; and if he says to him: 'I repaid you before So-and-so and So-and-so, and they went to a country beyond the seas,' he is believed.¹²

(Mnemonic:¹³ Reuben and Simeon, who studied the law, they lent and paid (before) So-and-so and So-and-so, gallnuts, different claims, being believed as two.)

There was a certain [man] who said to his neighbour: 'When you repay me, repay me before Reuben and Simeon'; but he went and repaid him before two others.¹⁴ Abaye said: He told him to repay him before two witnesses, and [he said] he repaid him before two witnesses.¹⁵ Said Raba to him: For this reason he said to him: Before Reuben and Simeon, so that he should not be able to put him off.¹⁶

There was a certain [man] who said to his neighbour: 'When you repay me, repay me before two who have studied laws.'¹⁷ He went and repaid him privately.¹⁸ The money was lost.¹⁹ The lender came to R. Nahman and said, 'Yes, I received it from him, but only as a deposit,²⁰ and I said, Let it remain with me as a deposit until we obtain two witnesses who have studied laws, so that the condition may be fulfilled.' Said [R. Nahman] to him: 'Since you admit that you definitely received the money from him, it is a proper repayment; if you desire the condition to be fulfilled, go and bring the money [here], for here am I and R. Shesheth who have studied the laws, Sifra, Sifre, Tosefta,²¹ and the whole Gemara.'²²

There was a certain [man] who said to his neighbour: 'Give me the hundred zuz that I lent you.' The other said to him: 'The thing never happened.'²³ He went and brought witnesses that he lent him, but [they also said] he repaid him. Abaye said: What shall we do? They say he lent him, and they themselves say he repaid him.²⁴ Raba said: If he says, 'I did not borrow,' it is as if he said, 'I did not repay.'²⁵

There was a certain [man] who said to his neighbour: 'Give me the hundred zuz that I claim from you.' He replied to him: 'Did I not repay you before So-and-so and So-and-so?' [Thereupon] So-and-so and So-and-so came and said: 'The thing never happened.'²⁶ R. Shesheth thought of saying that he was therefore proven a liar.²⁷ Said Raba to him: Anything which does not rest upon a man he will do unconsciously.²⁸

There was a certain [man] who said to his neighbour: 'Give me the six hundred zuz that I claim from you.' The other replied to him: 'Did I not repay you a hundred kabs

- (1) For he says he must repay the loan before witnesses, and if he cannot produce the witnesses he is liable.
 - (2) For he lent him without witnesses, and only when he claimed the loan later were there witnesses present.
 - (3) He had a different tradition as to what R. Judah reported to Samuel in the name of R. Assi.
 - (4) Even if the creditor says to him he must repay him before witnesses, the borrower may always exempt himself by saying he did repay him before witnesses, but they are not now available.
 - (5) For Samuel says the borrower may always contend that he did repay him before witnesses, but they have since gone abroad.
 - (6) And I have a Tanna who agrees with me.
 - (7) The debtor cannot free himself by saying he has paid, but that the witnesses have gone abroad.
 - (8) And Samuel agrees with R. Judah b. Bathyra.
 - (9) [MS.M.: 'Ahai' i.e. the Saborean; v. Brull, Jahrb. II, p. 28.]
 - (10) The lender's statement: 'I lent you before witnesses; pay me before witnesses.'
 - (11) If the lender definitely stipulated at the time of the loan that he must repay him before witnesses, even R. Judah b. Bathyra will agree that he cannot free himself by saying the witnesses have gone abroad. Hence Samuel has no Tanna to support him, whilst our Mishnah is clearly in refutation of him.
 - (12) The reading in text alternates between 'he is believed' and 'he is not believed,' v. Maim. Yad, Malweh XV, 2.
 - (13) Made up of catchwords as aids to memorise discussions that follow.
 - (14) I.e., he said he repaid him before two other witnesses, but they went abroad (v. Tosaf.).
 - (15) Therefore he is believed.
 - (16) The lender specifically named the two witnesses so that the borrower might not put him off by saying he had repaid him before two other witnesses who went abroad and are not available. It is therefore no excuse, and he must pay.
 - (17) I.e., learned men.
 - (18) Without witnesses.
 - (19) After being received by the lender.
 - (20) Not as repayment, because I particularly wanted my condition to be fulfilled, that it should be repaid before two learned witnesses; and now that the money is lost, he must still repay the loan, because I was only a gratuitous bailee not responsible for loss.
 - (21) On these terms, v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 567, n. 1.
 - (22) I.e., it is no excuse to say, because the money is now lost, that you accepted it as a deposit and not as repayment of the loan. [MS.M. reads 'Talmud' for 'Gemara' in curr. ed. On these terms, v. B.M. (Sonc. ed.) p. 206, n. 6.]
 - (23) I did not borrow from you.
 - (24) Therefore he is exempt.
 - (25) For if he did not borrow he certainly did not repay. Witnesses testify that he did borrow, and they are believed; but they are not believed when they say he repaid, for he himself admits that he did not repay; therefore he must pay.
 - (26) He did not repay before us.
 - (27) And is not believed even on oath to say that he repaid the loan though not before those two witnesses; for he has already been proved guilty of a lie.
 - (28) It was not incumbent upon him to remember whether he paid before witnesses or not, for the lender had not stipulated that he must repay him before witnesses; when, therefore, he said he had repaid before witnesses, his memory was at fault, but he is not thereby accounted a liar, and may take an oath that he has repaid the loan.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 42a

of gallnuts, which were worth six [zuz per kab]?' He said to him: 'No! They were worth four [zuz per kab].' Two witnesses came and said: 'Yes, they were worth four [zuz per kab].' Said Raba: He is proven a liar.¹ Said Rami b. Hama. But you said: Anything which does not rest upon a man he will do unconsciously!² — Said Raba to him: The fixed market price people remember.

There was a certain [man] who said to his neighbour: 'Give me the hundred zuz that I claim from you, and here is the document.'³ He said to him: 'I have paid you.' The other said to him: 'Those [monies] were for a different claim.'⁴ R. Nahman said: The document is impaired.⁵ R. Papa said: The document is not impaired. And, according to R. Papa, in what way does this differ from the case of the man who said to his neighbour: 'Give me the hundred zuz that I claim from you; and here is the document;' and the other said to him: 'Did you not give it to me to buy oxen,⁶ and did you not come and sit by the butcher's stall⁷ and receive your money?' And he replied to him: 'Those [monies] were on a different occasion;' and R. Papa said: The document is impaired.⁸ — There, since he said: 'You gave [the money] to me for oxen, and you received repayment from the [sale of the] oxen,' the document is impaired; but here, perhaps they were for a different claim.⁹ What then [is the ruling] with reference to this? — R. Papi said: The document is not impaired. R. Shesheth the son of R. Idi said: The document is impaired. And the law is: The document is impaired; but this is so only if he paid him before witnesses, and did not remember [to take back] the document;¹⁰ but if he paid him privately, since he could have said: 'The thing never happened,' he can also say: 'The monies were for a different account';¹¹ as in the case of Abimi the son of R. Abbahu.¹²

There was a certain [man]¹³ who said to his neighbour:¹⁴ 'You are believed by me whenever you say to me that I have not paid you.' He went and paid him before witnesses.¹⁵ Abaye and Raba both said: Behold, he believes him!¹⁶ R. Papa argued: Granted, he believes him more than himself, but does he believe him more than witnesses?¹⁷

There was a certain [man] who said to his neighbour: 'You are believed by me like two [witnesses] whenever you say that I have not paid you.' He went and paid him before three [witnesses].¹⁸ — R. Papa said: Like two he believed him, but like three he did not believe him.¹⁹ Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua to R. Papa: When do the Rabbis say that we go according to the majority of opinions — only in the case of estimates,²⁰ where the more there are, the more experts there are; but in the case of testimony, a hundred are like two, and two are like a hundred!²¹

Another version: There was a certain [man] who said to his neighbour: 'You are believed by me like two whenever you say that I have not paid you.' He went and paid him before three. Said R. Papa: Like two he believed him, but like three he did not believe him.²² To this R. Huna the son of R. Joshua demurred: Two are like a hundred and a hundred are like two! But if he said to him: 'like three',²³ and he went and paid him before four [witnesses, the lender is not believed], for since he troubles to mention the number of opinions,²⁴ he definitely means that number of opinions.

AN OATH IS NOT IMPOSED FOR THE CLAIM OF A DEAF-MUTE, IMBECILE, OR MINOR; AND A MINOR IS NOT ADJURED.

What is the reason? Scripture says: If a man give into his neighbour silver or vessels to keep:²⁵ but the giving of a minor is nothing.²⁶

BUT AN OATH IS IMPOSED IN A CLAIM AGAINST A MINOR OR THE TEMPLE.²⁷

But you said in the first clause: AN OATH IS NOT IMPOSED FOR THE CLAIM OF A DEAF-MUTE, IMBECILE, OR MINOR! — Rab said: If he comes on behalf of his father's claim,²⁸ and it is in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob; for it was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Sometimes a man must take an oath on his own claim.²⁹ How? He said to him: 'I have a hundred denarii of your father's in my possession, of which I have returned to him the half'; he takes an oath;³⁰ and this is the one who swears on his own claim. But the Sages Say: He is only like one who restores a lost object, and is exempt.³¹ And does not R. Eliezer b. Jacob hold that he who restores a lost object is free!³² — Said Rab: [He means], when a minor claims from him.³³ 'A minor'! But you said: AN OATH IS NOT IMPOSED FOR THE CLAIM OF A DEAF-MUTE, IMBECILE, OR MINOR! — Indeed an adult [is meant]; and he is called a minor, because with reference to the affairs of his father he is a minor.³⁴ If so, [why does R. Eliezer call it] his own claim? It is the claim of others! — [Yes!] it is the claim of others, but his own admission.³⁵

- (1) And must pay the difference — two hundred zuz.
 - (2) Perhaps he did not remember the actual market price at the time, but he still maintains that he repaid the money, if not with gallnuts, then with money.
 - (3) Proving the claim.
 - (4) I admit you paid me 100 zuz, but that was in settlement of another claim.
 - (5) We assume the claim to be paid, since the claimant admits having received the money; and we do not believe his submission that the payment was for another claim (for which he has no document), and that the present claim is still unpaid.
 - (6) To kill, and sell the meat, the profits to be divided equally between us.
 - (7) As the meat was being sold, and receive the money which you advanced.
 - (8) Since he admits having received the money. Why does not R. Papa hold the same view in the previous case?
 - (9) Since the claimant admits all the circumstances mentioned by the debtor, and admits having received his money from the sale of the oxen, it is reasonable to assume that this was the very transaction for which he produces the document, and he cannot say that the claim on this document is still unsettled, and that the transaction with the oxen (for which no document is produced) is the one that is settled. But where he claims on a document, the debtor saying he has paid, without giving any concrete details, the claimant may say the payment was for another debt, but this document still holds good.
 - (10) The claimant cannot say the payment was for another account.
 - (11) If the debtor paid the claimant privately (no witnesses being present), and the claimant admits receiving the payment, he is believed when he says that it was for another account, and the debt on the document is still outstanding, for, had he desired to tell an untruth, he might have said that he had not received any payment at all; and having the document, he could have enforced his claim without difficulty.
 - (12) Where a similar incident occurred; v. Keth. 85a.
 - (13) Borrower.
 - (14) Before witnesses, when borrowing the money.
 - (15) And the creditor denies having received payment.
 - (16) The debtor himself said, when borrowing the money, that he would always believe him if he denied receiving payment; therefore he must pay again.
 - (17) And since there are witnesses that he paid him, he does not pay again.
 - (18) But the lender denies having received it.
 - (19) Therefore we believe the three that he has paid.
 - (20) E.g., estimating the value of land; v. A.Z. 72a.
 - (21) Therefore if he said he believes him like two, he believed him also like three; and he must pay again.
 - (22) MS.M. deletes the whole of this passage, apparently as a needless repetition, and begins the variant version at this point.
 - (23) Are you believed by me.
 - (24) I.e., people; that he counts him like three people; he means three, and not four; for if he had intended to imply that he counted him like any number of witnesses, he would have said two (for two are equivalent to any number of witnesses), but since he said three, he meant three only. Therefore if four witnesses say he paid, the claimant is not believed.
 - (25) Ex. XXII, 6; and for this an oath is imposed.
 - (26) And a deaf-mute and imbecile are counted as minors, for their minds are undeveloped.
 - (27) Lit., 'they (the defendants) must swear to a minor, or to the Temple (authorities);' i.e. if the minor or the Temple has a claim against them, and they deny the claim, they must take an oath. In the text, however, the Mishnah has been translated in accordance with the sequel (infra 42b).
 - (28) The original giving (of the deposit or loan) was by a man (who is now dead); therefore the claim is valid, though it is proceeded with by a minor: 'my father lent you 100 denarii.'

- (29) I.e., on his own admission that the other has a claim against him though the other does not know it.
- (30) That he owes no more, having returned the half which he admits still owing.
- (31) For the son knew nothing of this debt; therefore he merely returns what he admits, and does not take an oath for the rest. Now, according to R. Eliezer b. Jacob, if the defendant must take an oath though the minor had not instituted the claim, he must certainly take an oath if the minor does claim; hence the Mishnah is in accordance with his view.
- (32) From an oath, though the person to whom it is restored claims, for example, that there was more money in the purse that is restored to him now. All admit that the restorer of a lost object is free. Surely R. Eliezer does not disagree!
- (33) R. Eliezer b. Jacob imposes an oath only when the minor claims; but if no one claims, and he himself mentions the claim, he does not take an oath, for he is 'a restorer of a lost object'.
- (34) For he may not be fully acquainted with the affairs of his father who is now dead.
- (35) He admits owing half.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 42b

But all [cases] are the claims of others and his own admission!¹ But [say] they² disagree in Rabbah's dictum; for Rabbah said: Why did Scripture say that he who admits a portion of a claim must take an oath? Because it is a presumption that a man has not the effrontery to deny a claim in front of his creditor,³ for this one may have wished to deny it all, but did not deny it, because he had not the effrontery [to do so] in front of his creditor;⁴ and he really wished to admit it all, but he did not admit it all, because he tried to evade him [for the moment], thinking, 'When I will have money, I will pay him'; so Divine Law said: Impose an oath on him, so that he may admit it all. Now R. Eliezer b. Jacob holds: No matter whether against him or against his son, he has not the effrontery;⁵ and therefore he is not a restorer of a lost object.' But the Rabbis hold: Against him himself he has not the effrontery, but against his son he has the effrontery,⁶ and since he is not evincing any effrontery, he is 'a restorer of a lost object' [and exempt]. But how can you affirm the Mishnah to be in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob? Surely it states in the first clause: 'YOU HAVE A HUNDRED DENARII OF MY FATHER'S IN YOUR POSSESSION.' — 'I HAVE OF HIS IN MY POSSESSION ONLY FIFTY DENARII'; HE IS EXEMPT, FOR HE IS 'A RESTORER OF A LOST OBJECT'! — There,⁷ he did not say, 'I am certain'; here,⁸ he said, 'I am certain.'

Samuel said:⁹ 'AGAINST A MINOR' [means] to collect payment from the estate of a minor; 'AGAINST THE TEMPLE' — to collect payment from the estate of the Temple.¹⁰ — 'Against a minor' — to collect payment from the estate of a minor! But we have already learnt it, [viz.:] From the estate of orphans one cannot collect payment except with an oath.¹¹ Why do we require [this ruling] twice? — This he teaches us, as Abaye the Elder said, for Abaye the Elder stated: Orphans which are mentioned¹² are adults,¹³ and there is no need to say [they include] minors, whether for oath, or for [exacting payment from] the lowest class of land.¹⁴ — 'AGAINST THE TEMPLE' — to collect payment from the estate of the Temple! But we have already learnt it, [viz.:] From assigned property they cannot collect except with an oath!¹⁵ [For] what is the difference whether they are assigned to a layman or assigned to the Most High? — It is necessary,¹⁶ for I might have thought [in the case of property assigned to] a layman [an oath is necessary],¹⁷ because a man may make a conspiracy to defraud a layman;¹⁸ but in the case of the Temple [an oath is not necessary], for a man will not make a conspiracy to defraud the Temple, therefore he teaches us [that it is necessary].¹⁹ But did not R. Huna say: A dying man who dedicated all his property to the Temple, and said: 'I have a hundred denarii of So-and-so in my possession,' he is believed,²⁰ because it is a presumption that a man does not make a conspiracy to defraud the Temple. — I will tell you: that is only in the case of a dying man, for a man will not sin without benefit to himself;²¹ but in the case of a healthy man we certainly fear [for conspiracy].

MISHNAH. AND THESE ARE THE THINGS FOR WHICH NO OATH IS IMPOSED: SLAVES, BONDS, LANDS, AND DEDICATED OBJECTS.²² [THE LAW OF] PAYING DOUBLE,²³ OR FOUR OR FIVE TIMES THE VALUE, DOES NOT APPLY TO THEM. AN

UNPAID GUARDIAN DOES NOT TAKE AN OATH,²⁴ AND A PAID GUARDIAN DOES NOT PAY,²⁵ R. SIMEON SAID: FOR DEDICATED OBJECTS FOR WHICH HE IS RESPONSIBLE AN OATH IS IMPOSED;²⁶ AND FOR WHICH HE IS NOT RESPONSIBLE AN OATH IS NOT IMPOSED. R. MEIR SAID: THERE ARE THINGS WHICH ARE [ATTACHED] TO LAND, BUT ARE NOT LIKE LAND. BUT THE SAGES DO NOT AGREE WITH HIM. HOW? [IF A MAN SAYS,] ‘TEN VINES LADEN WITH FRUIT I DELIVERED TO YOU.’ — AND THE OTHER SAYS: ‘THERE WERE ONLY FIVE’; R. MEIR MAKES HIM TAKE AN OATH;²⁷ BUT THE SAGES SAY: ALL THAT IS ATTACHED TO LAND IS LIKE LAND. AN OATH IS IMPOSED ONLY FOR A THING [DEFINED] BY SIZE, WEIGHT, OR NUMBER. HOW? [IF A MAN SAYS,] ‘A HOUSEFUL [OF PRODUCE] I DELIVERED TO YOU,’ OR ‘A PURSEFUL [OF MONEY] I DELIVERED TO YOU’; AND THE OTHER SAYS: ‘I DO NOT KNOW; BUT WHAT YOU LEFT YOU MAY TAKE,’ HE IS EXEMPT.²⁸ IF ONE SAYS: ‘[I GAVE YOU PRODUCE REACHING] UP TO THE MOULDING [ABOVE THE WINDOW],’ AND THE OTHER SAYS: ‘ONLY UP TO THE WINDOW,’ HE IS LIABLE.²⁹

GEMARA. That [THE LAW OF] PAYING DOUBLE [DOES NOT APPLY] how do we know? — Our Rabbis taught: For every matter of trespass³⁰ — is a generalisation; for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment — are specifications; for any lost thing — is another generalisation: where there is generalisation, specification, and generalisation, you may include only those things which are similar to the specification: just as the specification is clearly a thing which is movable, and intrinsically worth money, so everything which is movable and intrinsically worth money [may be included], but exclude lands, which are not movable, exclude slaves, which are likened to land, and exclude bonds which, though they are movable, are not intrinsically worth money. As for dedicated things, it is written: his neighbour.³¹

AND NOT FOUR OR FIVE TIMES THE VALUE. What is the reason? — The payment of four or five times the value, said Scripture, and not the payment of three or four times the value.³²

AN UNPAID GUARDIAN DOES NOT TAKE AN OATH. Whence do we know this? — Our Rabbis taught:

(1) Then why does R. Eliezer say: Sometimes a man must take an oath etc.? And if an adult is claiming, why do the other Sages hold that the defendant need not take an oath, for he is ‘a restorer of a lost object’? If an adult claims, the defendant is not accounted ‘a restorer etc.’

(2) R. Eliezer b. Jacob and the Sages disagree in a case where a minor claims (his father being dead). R. Eliezer calls it ‘his own (the defendant’s) claim,’ because a minor’s claim is really of no consequence, and no oath is imposed elsewhere; but here, since it is on behalf of an adult (his father), an oath is imposed, for the original ‘giving’ (of the deposit) was by a ‘man’.

(3) Who has done him a favour by lending him the money.

(4) But since he does deny a portion, let us believe him, for since a man has not the effrontery to deny a valid claim, and this one does deny, he must be speaking the truth; then why should he take an oath? Because, continues the Talmud, to deny a portion does not necessitate effrontery (and he may really owe the money); for he is merely trying to evade his obligation temporarily in order to gain time, fully intending to pay later when he has money; v. B.M. 3b Tosaf. For an alternative interpretation of this passage, v. B.M. (Sonc. ed.) pp. 8ff. and notes.

(5) Therefore when the minor claims, it is as if the father is claiming, and the defendant, since he admits a half, takes an oath like any other person who admits part of a claim.

(6) And could have denied it all, if he had wished; therefore whatever he admits is like the restoration of a lost object, and he does not take an oath.

(7) In the first clause, the minor did not say ‘I am certain you owe my father 100 denarii,’ but ‘I think you do;’ therefore the defendant in admitting a half is exempt, for he is a ‘restorer of a lost object’.

(8) In the later clause ‘an oath is imposed for the claim of a minor’ when the minor puts forward a definite claim.

(9) There is no inconsistency in the Mishnah. An oath is not imposed for the claim of a minor; but when the Mishnah states later that an oath is imposed for a minor and the Temple, it means that when a claim is made against the estate of a minor or the Temple (and even when documentary evidence is produced), the claimant must take an oath that it has not already been paid by the minor's father.

(10) If a man dedicated some property to the Temple treasury, and a claimant (with a document) desires to exact payment for his debt from that dedicated property, he must take an oath that it has not yet been paid.

(12) That when payment is claimed from them on their father's debt the claimant must take an oath.

(13) Even if the orphans are adults, the claimant must still take an oath.

(14) When the oath is taken and payment demanded, it may be exacted only from the third grade of land (if the orphans possess best, medium, and third grade; v. B.K. 7a). The law is therefore stated twice; in our Mishnah: an oath is imposed when a claim is made against the estate of an orphan who is a minor; and in the other Mishnah (infra 45a) that even when they are adults an oath must be taken in any claim against them.

(15) Infra 45a. If the property has already been assigned (or mortgaged) to another, the creditor cannot collect his debt from that property without an oath.

(16) That we be told the law holds good also in the case of property assigned to the Temple.

(17) Before the creditor can collect from the property.

(18) The borrower may already have paid his debt; and now, having sold his land, he conspires with the creditor to defraud the purchaser, by saying he still owes the money, so that the creditor takes the land, and they divide it. Therefore the creditor must take an oath that the debt is still unpaid.

(19) For even in the case of the Temple a man may conspire.

(20) And the man obtains the money without an oath.

(21) And since he himself will derive no benefit from the 100 denarii we believe him.

(22) In any claim concerning these the defendant does not take an oath.

(23) For stealing.

(24) Normally, an unpaid guardian takes an oath that he did not wilfully cause the loss of the deposit, and he is free from payment (v. infra 49a), but in the case of slaves etc. no oath is imposed.

(25) For loss or theft, which, normally, he would have to pay (infra 49a).

(26) If a man vowed to bring a burnt offering, and assigned a certain animal for that purpose, and gave it into the keeping of a neighbour for a time, and on claiming it, the bailee denies having it; he must take an oath, for this will cause a loss to the depositor (who will have to offer another animal), and not to the Temple.

(27) Though the vines are fixed to the ground they are not accounted as land to exempt him from an oath, because the grapes were ripe and ready for picking, and it is for the grapes that he is claiming; v. infra 43a.

(28) Because the claim was not defined as to size, weight, or number.

(29) For the claim is defined.

(30) Ex. XXII, 8; the verse ends, he whom the judges shall condemn shall pay double unto his neighbour.

(31) Ibid., but he does not pay double in a claim by the Temple.

(32) Since the payment of double does not apply for theft, there would only be three or four times the value for killing or selling (three for a lamb and four for an ox), which Scripture does not enjoin; Ex. XXI, 37.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 43a

If a man give unto his neighbour¹ — is a generalisation; silver or vessels — are specifications; to keep — is another generalisation: where there is generalisation, specification, and generalisation, you may include only those things which are similar to the specification: just as the specification is clearly a thing which is movable and intrinsically worth money, so everything which is movable, and intrinsically worth money [may be included], but exclude lands, which are not movable, exclude slaves, which are likened to land, and exclude bonds which, though they are movable, are not intrinsically worth money. As for dedicated things, it is written, his neighbour.²

A PAID GUARDIAN DOES NOT PAY. Whence do we know this? — Our Rabbis taught: If a man give unto his neighbour³ — is a generalisation; an ass, or an ox, or a sheep — are specifications; or any beast, to keep — is another generalisation: where there is generalisation, specification, and generalisation, etc. till: as for dedicated things, it is written, his neighbour.⁴

R. MEIR SAID: THERE ARE THINGS WHICH ARE [ATTACHED] TO LAND, BUT ARE NOT LIKE LAND, ETC. Hence, R. Meir holds that which is attached to land is not counted like land?⁵ — Then why do they disagree about laden [vines], let them disagree about fruitless [trees]!⁶ — R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: Here they disagree about grapes which are ready to be cut, R. Meir holding they are as if they are already cut; whereas the Rabbis hold they are not as if they are already cut.⁷

AN OATH IS IMPOSED ONLY FOR A THING [DEFINED] BY SIZE, WEIGHT, etc. Abaye said: They did not teach [that an oath is not imposed] except when he said to him: 'A HOUSE' merely;⁸ but if he said to him: 'This house full etc.' his claim is known.⁹ — Said Raba to him: If so, why does he teach in the later clause: THIS ONE SAID: '[I GAVE YOU PRODUCE REACHING] UP TO THE MOULDING [ABOVE THE WINDOW], AND THE OTHER SAID: 'ONLY UP TO THE WINDOW,' HE IS LIABLE. Let him make a distinction in teaching this [first] clause itself — [thus:] When is it stated [that an oath is not imposed] — only if he says: 'A full house,' but if he says: 'This full house,' he is liable!¹⁰ — But said Raba: He is never liable unless he claims from him a thing [that is defined] by size, weight, or number; and he admits to him a thing [that is defined] by size, weight, or number.¹¹

It was taught in support of Raba: [If a man says,] 'A kor of grain of mine you have in your possession'; and the other says: 'I have not of yours in my possession,'¹² he is exempt.¹³ 'A large candlestick of mine you have in your possession.' — 'I have of yours in my possession only a small candlestick,' he is exempt.¹⁴ 'A large girdle of mine you have in your possession.' — I have of yours in my possession only a small girdle,' he is exempt. But if he said to him: 'A kor of grain of mine you have in your possession,' and the other said: 'I have of yours in my possession only a lethek [of grain],' he is liable.¹⁵ 'A candlestick of [the weight of] ten litras you have of mine in your possession.' — 'I have of yours in my possession [a candlestick of the weight of] only five litras,' he is liable.¹⁶ The principle of the matter is: He is never liable unless he claims from him a thing [that is defined] by size, weight, or number; and he admits to him a thing [that is defined] by size, weight, or number. Now, 'The principle of the matter': what does this include?¹⁷ Does it not include [the case where he says]: 'This house full etc.'?¹⁸

Now, what is the difference? [In the case of] 'large candlestick and small candlestick,' [he is exempt because] what he claimed from him, he did not admit to him; and what he admitted to him, he did not claim from him; if so, [in the case of] 'ten litras and five litras [weight]' he should also be exempt, because what he claimed from him, he did not admit to him; and what he admitted to him, he did not claim from him! — R. Samuel son of R. Isaac said: Here we are discussing a candlestick of sections, of which he admits a portion.¹⁹ — If so, [in the case of] girdle also let him teach [a similar law], and explain it as referring to pieces sewn together!²⁰ But [you must conclude that] he [the Tanna] does not state [the case of a girdle made up of] pieces sewn together. Here also [then], he would not state [the case of a candlestick made up of] separate sections!²¹ — But said R. Abba b. Mammal: A candlestick is different, because he can scrape it and reduce it to five litras.²² MISHNAH. IF A MAN LENDS [MONEY] TO HIS NEIGHBOUR ON A PLEDGE, AND THE PLEDGE WAS LOST, AND HE SAID TO HIM: 'I LENT YOU A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH A SHEKEL,'²³ AND THE OTHER SAYS: 'NO! YOU LENT ME A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH A SELA,' HE IS EXEMPT.²⁴ 'I LENT YOU A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH A SHEKEL,' AND THE OTHER SAYS: 'NO! YOU LENT ME A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH THREE DENARII,' HE IS LIABLE.²⁵ 'YOU LENT ME A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH TWO,'²⁶ AND THE OTHER SAYS: 'NO! I LENT YOU A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH A SELA,' HE IS EXEMPT. 'YOU LENT ME A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH TWO,' AND THE OTHER SAYS: 'NO! I LENT YOU A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS

WORTH FIVE DENARII,' HE IS LIABLE. AND WHO TAKES THE OATH?²⁷ HE WHO HAD THE DEPOSIT,²⁸ LEST, IF THE OTHER TAKE THE OATH, THIS ONE MAY BRING OUT THE DEPOSIT.²⁹

(1) Ex. XXII, 6; this verse deals with an unpaid guardian (v. B.M. 94b), who takes an oath that he has not been wilfully neglectful, and is exempt from making restitution.

(2) Ibid.

(3) Ex. XXII, 9; this verse deals with a paid guardian (v. B.M. 94b) who normally pays for loss or theft.

(4) Ibid.; the whole argument as above.

(5) Since he says that in a claim for 10 vines (the other admitting 5) an oath is imposed.

(6) Why mention in the illustration that the trees are laden with grapes? That is surely immaterial!

(7) R. Meir holds that which is joined to the land is counted like land, but here, in the case of vines, he holds that an oath is imposed, because the grapes were ready for cutting, and therefore he accounts them as equivalent to having been cut, and therefore imposes an oath.

(8) 'A house full of produce I delivered to you.'

(9) For if he says: 'This house full of produce,' he is defining his claim exactly, for the amount of produce it will contain may be ascertained; and if the other returns the house to him half empty, he is liable to take an oath.

(10) Why then should the Mishnah insert an extra clause (that one claims 'to the moulding' and the other admits 'to the window')? Obviously, therefore, there is no difference between 'a house full' and 'this house full'.

(11) But if he says: 'This house full etc.' though the amount it holds may be ascertained, the defendant is not liable; for he too must mention specifically the exact amount (size, weight, or number) he is admitting; v. Tosaf.

(12) [MS.M. preserves a preferable reading, adding: 'but pulse'. V. next note].

(13) Because he denies it all (כופר הכל). [According to MS.M. (n. 5): Because the admission is not in like kind of the claim, cf. next note.]

(14) Because the admission is not of the same kind as the claim; he does not admit a portion of what the other claims, but something else.

(15) Because he admits a portion: 1 kor = 2 lethek.

(17) The principle may be inferred from the examples mentioned. Why is the principle stated? Obviously, to include something that may not be deduced from the examples.

(18) That the defendant is here also exempt, because neither the claim nor the admission is defined exactly as to size, weight, or number. Hence this Baraita supports Raba.

(19) The candlestick of ten litras is built up of separate sections which can be taken apart, and the defendant admits that certain sections, amounting to five litras, belong to the claimant, but not the rest. He is therefore liable, because he admits a portion of this very candlestick.

(20) If one claims a girdle of the length of ten cubits, and the other admits owing him a girdle five cubits long, he is liable, if the girdle consists of separate pieces (each, for example, one cubit long) sewn together, and he admits that five of the pieces of the girdle belong to the claimant.

(21) Since he does not mention the case of a girdle of separate pieces, we cannot say, in the case of a candlestick, that the reason he is liable is because it is composed of sections (some of which he admits). What, then, is the reason for liability in the case of a candlestick of ten litras (the defendant admitting owing a candlestick of five litras)?

(22) If one claims a candlestick of ten litras, and the other admits one of five litras, he is liable for an oath, because he may have scraped the metal, or planed the wood, (if it is made of wood) of this very candlestick, so that its weight is now only five litras. He therefore admits a portion of the actual claim, and is liable. If, however, one claims a large candlestick (i.e., tall) and the other admits a small candlestick (i.e., short), he is not liable, because he is admitting something which was not claimed, for we cannot say that he shortened the very same candlestick that was claimed, by cutting off top or bottom, because that would spoil it. In the case of a large girdle (i.e., long) and small girdle (i.e., short), the defendant is exempt, because we cannot say he is admitting a portion of the same girdle (which he has cut down and shortened) for the cut ends would be noticeable. Hence, both in the case of candlestick (tall and short) and girdle (long and short), the defendant is exempt, because he is admitting something else (not a portion of that which was claimed).

(23) Two denarii, so you still owe me two denarii.

(24) Because he denies the whole; therefore he does not take an oath.

(25) Because he admits owing one denar; and he takes an oath.

(26) Therefore you, the lender, have to pay me a sela'.

(27) How much the pledge was worth.

(28) The lender with whom the pledge was deposited.

(29) If the borrower takes the oath, the lender (who may not have lost the deposit at all) may bring out the deposit, and show that the borrower has sworn falsely as to its value.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 43b

GEMARA. To what does it refer?¹ Shall we say, to the last clause?² You may infer this [in any case], for the oath devolves upon the lender!³ — Said Samuel: It refers to the first clause: and so said R. Hiyya b. Rab: It refers to the first clause; and so said R. Johanan: It refers to the first clause. — Which first clause? The latter part of the first clause: 'I LENT YOU A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH A SHEKEL,' AND THE OTHER SAYS: 'NO! YOU LENT ME A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH THREE DENARII,' HE IS LIABLE. For here the oath devolves upon the borrower, but the Rabbis removed it from the borrower, and imposed it upon the lender.⁴ But now that R. Ashi has said that we have established that this one⁵ swears that it is not in his possession,⁶ and the other one⁷ swears how much it was worth, he means thus: WHO TAKES THE OATH first?⁸ HE WHO HAD THE DEPOSIT,⁹ LEST, IF THE OTHER TAKE THE OATH [FIRST],¹⁰ THIS ONE MAY BRING OUT THE DEPOSIT.¹¹

Samuel said: If one lent a thousand zuz to his neighbour, who deposited with him as a pledge the handle of a saw;¹² if the handle of the saw was lost, the thousand zuz are lost;¹³ but in the case of two handles we do not say this.¹⁴ But R. Nahman Says, even in the case of two handles, if he lost one, he loses five hundred [zuz], if he lost [also] the other, he loses the whole [loan]; but in the case of a handle and a bar [of silver] we do not say this.¹⁵ The Nehardeans say, even in the case of a handle and silver bar, if he lost the silver bar, he loses half [the loan], if he lost [also] the handle, he loses the whole [loan].

We learnt: 'I LENT YOU A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH A SHEKEL,' AND THE OTHER SAYS: 'NO! YOU LENT ME A SELA' ON IT, AND IT WAS WORTH THREE DENARII,' HE IS LIABLE. — [Now why?] Let him say to him: 'But you accepted it [as security]!'¹⁶ — Our Mishnah [refers to a case] where he stated explicitly;¹⁷ and Samuel [refers to a case] where he did not state this explicitly.¹⁸

Shall we say that Tannaim [disagree on this point]? [For it was taught:] If a man lends his neighbour [money] on a pledge, and the pledge was lost, he swears,¹⁹ and takes his money: this is the opinion of R. Eliezer. R. Akiba says: He may say to him: 'Did you not lend me because of the pledge? Since the pledge is lost, your money is lost.' But if one lends a thousand zuz on a bond, and he deposited a pledge with him, all agree that if the pledge is lost, the money is lost.²⁰ — Now, how is this? If the pledge is equal to the amount of the loan,

(1) The statement of the Mishnah that the lender takes the oath.

(2) Where the borrower claims a sela' from the lender, and the lender admits owing him a denar.

(3) For he is the one who admits a portion of the claim.

(4) For the reason given in the Mishnah.

(5) The lender.

(6) For he may not have lost the pledge, but may have become enamoured of it and desired to retain it; he therefore says that he lost it, and wishes to pay its value. Consequently, he must take an oath that it is really not in his possession.

(7) The borrower.

(8) In the latter part of the first clause (where the oath devolves upon the borrower) to which this question of the Mishnah refers.

- (9) Takes the oath that it is not in his possession; he cannot now produce the deposit.
- (10) About the value of the deposit.
- (11) And show that the other had sworn falsely as to its value.
- (12) Which is worth much less than the loan.
- (13) Because the lender accepted it as sufficient security.
- (14) That he accepted each handle as security for 500 zuz, and if he loses one handle, he loses 500 zuz. For he did not specifically say that he accepted each handle as security for half the loan. We therefore say that both handles together are the pledge for the loan, and if he loses one handle, as long as the other is left, he may restore it to the borrower; and he deducts from the loan merely the value of the lost handle, and not 500 zuz.
- (15) That he accepted the silver bar as security for half the loan, for since a silver bar is sufficiently valuable to be accepted as part payment, the lender accepted it as a pledge only up to its value,
- (16) Why should the borrower have to take an oath? Let him say to the lender: 'You accepted the pledge as security for your loan, and since you have lost the pledge, you have lost your money!' Since the Mishnah does not say this, it conflicts with the view of Samuel!
- (17) That he accepts the pledge as security only up to its value.
- (18) But simply accepted the pledge; we assume therefore that he accepted it as full security for the whole amount of the loan; and if he loses the pledge, he loses the loan.
- (19) That he has lost it.
- (20) For since the lender has a document that the other owes him the money, what need is there for a pledge? Obviously, therefore, he took the pledge to secure himself, that if the borrower would not pay (or would have no means to pay) he would keep the pledge. The pledge was therefore not merely a reminder of the loan but a possible source of repayment (for, as a reminder of the loan, he had the bond). If he loses the pledge, therefore, he loses the loan.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 44a

what is the reason of R. Eliezer?¹ But [you must therefore say,] it is not equal to the amount of the loan, and they disagree about Samuel's ruling.² — No! if it is not equal to the amount of the loan, neither of them would agree with Samuel;³ but here, it is equal to the amount of the loan; and they disagree about R. Isaac's ruling; for R. Isaac said: Whence do we know that the creditor 'possesses'⁴ the pledge? Because it is said: And it shall be righteousness unto thee.⁵ [Now,] if he does not 'possess' the pledge, wherein is his righteousness [in returning it]? Hence, the creditor 'possesses' the pledge.⁶

Shall we say [then] that [these] Tannaim disagree about R. Isaac's ruling?⁷ — How can you think so? You may say that R. Isaac stated [his law] if he took the pledge not at the time of his loan;⁸ but if he took the pledge at the time of the loan, did he say [this]?⁹ — But [answer thus]: If he took the pledge not at the time of the loan, all agree with R. Isaac; but here¹⁰ [we deal with a case where] he took the pledge at the time of his loan, and they disagree on [the same principle which governs] the guardian of a lost object;¹¹ for it has been stated: The guardian of a lost object: Rabbah says he is like an unpaid bailee,¹²

- (1) That the lender merely takes an oath that he has lost it, and still claims his loan? If the pledge equals the amount of the loan, it was obviously intended as full security; and if he loses it, he should lose his loan.
- (2) R. Eliezer does not agree with Samuel, for since the pledge is not worth as much as the loan, the lender accepts it simply as a reminder of the loan and not as full security; and he is regarded as an unpaid guardian of the pledge; therefore he takes the required oaths. And R. Akiba agrees with Samuel that, since the lender made no stipulation, he accepted the pledge as full security, and therefore if he loses it, he loses his money. Hence, Tannaim disagree on this point; then why does Samuel state his ruling as if he originated it? Let him say he agrees with R. Akiba
- (3) Both R. Eliezer and R. Akiba holding that, in such a case, the lender did not accept it as security, but merely as a reminder, and therefore if he loses it, he does not lose his money.
- (4) I.e., becomes legally responsible for it, and if anything happens to it (even though it is not due to his negligence) he must pay for it; v. B.M. 82a, Rashi.

- (5) Deut. XXIV, 13; when the lender returns the pledge to the borrower it is accounted an act of righteousness.
- (6) R. Eliezer does not agree with R. Isaac, but holds that the lender is accounted an unpaid guardian of the pledge, and therefore is not responsible for its loss; and R. Akiba agrees with R. Isaac, holding that he is responsible, and since it is equal to the amount of the loan, he loses the whole loan, if he loses the pledge.
- (7) Then why does R. Isaac state his ruling as if he originated it? Let him say he agrees with R. Akiba!
- (8) But later; and an officer of the Court was sent to obtain the pledge from the borrower; v. B.M. 113a. Since he took the pledge later, he obviously wanted it as a source for the repayment, and is therefore fully responsible for it: he 'possesses' it.
- (9) He may thus agree with R. Eliezer that he is only an unpaid guardian, and is not responsible for its loss.
- (10) The case in which R. Eliezer and R. Akiba disagree.
- (11) One who finds a lost object and guards it till its rightful owner is found.
- (12) For he does not receive payment for guarding it, and is not responsible for its loss or theft.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 44b

and R. Joseph says he is like a paid bailee.¹

Shall we say [then] that [these] Tannaim disagree about R. Joseph's ruling?² — No! In the case of a guardian of a lost object all agree with R. Joseph,³ but here they disagree in a case where the lender requires the pledge [for his use]:⁴ one⁵ holds he is doing a mizwah, and the other⁶ holds he is not doing a mizwah.

Shall we say that [the following] Tannaim [disagree about Samuel's ruling]? [For it was taught:] If one lends his neighbour [money] on a pledge, and the Sabbatical year arrives, even if it is only worth a half, it does not cancel [the debt]:⁷ this is the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. R. Judah the Prince says: If his pledge was equal in value to the debt, it does not cancel it; but if not, it cancels it.⁸ Now, what is meant by 'it does not cancel it' which the first Tanna states? Shall we say, only up to its value?⁹ [But] this would imply that R. Judah the Prince holds it cancels also that portion up to its value! Then for what purpose is he holding the pledge? But it therefore means [does it not?] all of it;¹⁰ and they disagree about Samuel's ruling!¹¹ — No! Really only up to its value,¹² and in this they disagree: the first Tanna holds [it does not cancel] up to its value; and R. Judah the Prince holds it cancels also up to its value;¹³ and as to your question: Why is he holding the pledge? That is merely as a reminder.¹⁴

CHAPTER VII

MISHNAH. ALL WHO TAKE AN OATH [ENFORCED] IN SCRIPTURE, TAKE AN OATH, AND DO NOT PAY.¹⁵ BUT THESE TAKE AN OATH, AND RECEIVE [PAYMENT]: THE HIRED LABOURER,¹⁶ HE WHO HAS BEEN ROBBED, HE WHO HAS BEEN WOUNDED, HE WHOSE OPPONENT IS SUSPECTED OF TAKING A FALSE OATH,¹⁷ AND THE SHOPKEEPER WITH HIS ACCOUNT BOOK.¹⁸ 'THE HIRED LABOURER' — HOW? [IF] HE SAYS TO HIM [HIS EMPLOYER]. 'GIVE ME MY WAGES WHICH YOU OWE ME,' AND HE REPLIES, 'I HAVE GIVEN IT,' AND THE OTHER SAYS, 'I HAVE NOT RECEIVED IT,' HE [THE LABOURER] TAKES AN OATH AND OBTAINS [HIS DUE]. R. JUDAH SAYS, [THERE IS NO OATH] UNLESS THERE IS PARTIAL ADMISSION:¹⁹ HOW? IF HE SAYS TO HIM, 'GIVE ME MY WAGES, FIFTY DENARII, WHICH YOU OWE ME,' AND THE OTHER SAYS, 'YOU HAVE RECEIVED A GOLD DENAR.'²⁰ 'HE WHO HAS BEEN ROBBED, — HOW? IF THEY TESTIFIED OF A MAN²¹ THAT HE ENTERED INTO ANOTHER'S HOUSE TO TAKE A PLEDGE WITHOUT AUTHORITY, AND THE OTHER SAYS, 'YOU HAVE TAKEN MY VESSELS, AND HE SAYS, 'I HAVE NOT TAKEN THEM,' HE²² TAKES AN OATH, AND RECOVERS THEM. R. JUDAH SAYS, [THERE IS NO OATH] UNLESS THERE IS PARTIAL ADMISSION: HOW? HE SAID TO HIM, 'YOU HAVE TAKEN TWO VESSELS,' AND THE OTHER SAYS, 'I HAVE TAKEN ONLY ONE.' 'HE WHO HAS BEEN WOUNDED,' — HOW? IF THEY TESTIFIED OF A MAN THAT ANOTHER WENT INTO HIM WHOLE, AND CAME OUT WOUNDED, AND HE SAID TO HIM, 'YOU HAVE WOUNDED ME,' AND THE OTHER SAID, 'I HAVE NOT WOUNDED YOU,' HE TAKES AN OATH, AND RECEIVES [DAMAGES]. R. JUDAH SAYS, [THERE IS NO OATH] UNLESS THERE IS PARTIAL ADMISSION: HOW? HE SAID TO HIM, YOU HAVE INFLICTED ON ME TWO WOUNDS,' AND THE OTHER SAID, 'I INFLICTED ON YOU ONLY ONE WOUND.' 'HE WHOSE OPPONENT IS SUSPECTED OF TAKING A FALSE OATH,' — HOW?

(1) For he receives divine reward for the mizwah of guarding the lost object, and is therefore responsible for its loss or theft. A lender also has a mizwah for helping the borrower with a loan, therefore he is like a paid bailee for the pledge which is in his keeping, according to R. Joseph. Accordingly, R. Eliezer, who holds the lender is not responsible for the pledge, will agree with Rabbah; and R. Akiba, with R. Joseph.

(2) They certainly disagree about Rabbah's view, for R. Akiba definitely does not agree with him. But can R. Joseph (who agrees with R. Akiba) also say that R. Eliezer agrees with him, too?

(3) Even R. Eliezer agrees, for, since he is doing a mizwah, he is accounted a paid guardian (for he will receive divine payment).

(4) And he deducts from the loan the amount he would have to pay for its hire.

(5) R. Akiba holds that though he is making use of the pledge he is still doing a mizwah by lending the money, for he is deducting from the debt the amount he would have to pay for hiring the pledge; and since he is doing a mizwah, he is a paid guardian for the pledge, and is responsible for its loss.

(6) R. Eliezer holds that since he is using the pledge, he is not doing a mizwah, for he wants it for his own benefit, and is therefore an unpaid guardian, and is not responsible for its loss.

(7) The Sabbatical year cancels debts (Deut. XV, 1, 2), but if a pledge was taken for the debt, the Sabbatical year does not cancel the debt; v. Git. 37a; but Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that this applies even where the pledge was worth only half of the value of the debt.

(8) V. B.M. 48b.

(9) The Sabbatical year does not cancel that portion of the debt which is equal to the value of the pledge (and therefore secured by it).

(10) R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that even if the pledge is worth only half the amount of the debt, the Sabbatical year does not cancel any part of the debt at all; and R. Judah holds it does not cancel that portion which the pledge secures (i.e., up to its value).

(11) R. Simeon agrees with Samuel that, even if the pledge is not worth as much as the debt, it is counted as security for the whole debt. If so, let Samuel say he agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

(12) Does R. Simeon b. Gamaliel hold that the Sabbatical year does not cancel it, for the pledge secures that portion; and he does not agree with Samuel.

(13) I.e., if the pledge is not actually worth as much as the loan, it is of no effect, and the Sabbatical year cancels the whole debt.

(14) That he lent him money, but is no security at all, since it is not equal in value to the debt.

(15) i.e., according to the Torah, it is the defendant in the action who takes the oath that he does not owe, and is exempt from paying.

(16) Takes an oath that his wages have not been paid.

(17) The debtor, who normally takes the oath, is known to have sworn falsely in the past; so the Court impose the oath on the creditor, and he exacts his money.

(18) Who has written down in his book the amount he has allowed the other on credit.

(19) When the defendant, the employer, would normally have had to take the oath (being a מוֹדֵה בְּמִקְצֵת); in that case, the Sages say that the oath is removed from him, and imposed upon the employee; but where there is no admission on the part of the employer, there would have been no oath (according to the Torah, except the Rabbinic consuetudinary oath, v. supra p. 247); and in this case the Rabbis do not impose it on the labourer.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 45a

WHETHER IT BE THE OATH OF TESTIMONY,¹ OR THE OATH OF DEPOSIT, OR EVEN A VAIN OATH;² IF ONE [OF THE LITIGANTS] WAS A DICE-PLAYER,³ OR USURER, OR PIGEON-FLYER,⁴ OR DEALER IN THE PRODUCE OF THE SEVENTH YEAR,⁵ HIS OPPONENT TAKES THE OATH AND RECEIVES [HIS CLAIM].⁶ IF BOTH ARE SUSPECT, THE OATH RETURNS TO ITS PLACE.⁷ THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. JOSE. R. MEIR SAYS: THEY DIVIDE.⁸ 'AND THE SHOPKEEPER WITH HIS ACCOUNT BOOK,' — HOW? NOT THAT HE [E.G.] SAYS TO HIM, 'IT IS WRITTEN IN MY ACCOUNT BOOK THAT YOU OWE ME TWO HUNDRED ZUZ';⁹ BUT HE¹⁰ SAYS TO HIM, 'GIVE MY SON TWO SEAHs OF WHEAT,'¹¹ OR, 'GIVE MY LABOURER SMALL CHANGE TO THE VALUE OF A SELA';¹² I HE SAYS, 'I HAVE GIVEN,' AND THEY¹³ SAY, 'WE HAVE NOT RECEIVED'; HE¹⁴ TAKES AN OATH, AND RECEIVES [HIS DUE].¹⁵ AND THEY TAKE AN OATH, AND RECEIVE [THEIR DUE].¹⁶ BEN NANNUS SAID: HOW CAN BOTH BE PERMITTED TO COME TO A VAIN OATH?¹⁷ BUT HE¹⁴ TAKES WITHOUT AN OATH, AND THEY¹³ TAKE WITHOUT AN OATH. — IF HE SAID TO A SHOPKEEPER, 'GIVE ME FRUIT FOR A DENAR,' AND HE GAVE HIM, THEN THE SHOPKEEPER SAID TO HIM, 'GIVE ME THE DENAR'; AND HE REPLIED TO HIM, 'I GAVE IT TO YOU, AND YOU PLACED IT IN THE TILL,' THE HOUSEHOLDER TAKES AN OATH.¹⁸ IF HE GAVE HIM THE DENAR, AND SAID TO HIM, 'GIVE ME THE FRUIT,' AND THE SHOPKEEPER SAYS TO HIM, 'I HAVE GIVEN IT TO YOU, AND YOU TOOK IT TO YOUR HOUSE,' THE SHOPKEEPER TAKES AN OATH.¹⁹ R. JUDAH SAYS: HE WHO HAS THE FRUIT IN HIS POSSESSION. HIS HAND IS UPPERMOST.²⁰ IF HE SAID TO A MONEY-CHANGER, 'GIVE ME CHANGE FOR A DENAR,' AND HE GAVE HIM; AND SAID TO HIM, 'GIVE ME THE DENAR,' AND THE OTHER SAID, 'I HAVE GIVEN IT TO YOU, AND YOU PLACED IT IN THE TILL,' THE HOUSEHOLDER TAKES AN OATH. IF HE GAVE HIM THE DENAR, AND SAID TO HIM, 'GIVE ME THE SMALL CHANGE,' AND THE OTHER SAID TO HIM, 'I HAVE GIVEN IT YOU, AND YOU THREW IT IN YOUR PURSE,' THE MONEY-CHANGER TAKES AN OATH. R. JUDAH SAYS: IT IS NOT USUAL FOR A MONEY-CHANGER TO GIVE [EVEN] AN ISSAR UNTIL HE RECEIVES THE DENAR.²¹ — JUST AS THEY HAVE SAID THAT SHE WHO IMPAIRS HER KETHUBAH CANNOT RECEIVE PAYMENT EXCEPT ON OATH;²² AND THAT IF ONE WITNESS TESTIFIES AGAINST HER THAT IT HAS BEEN PAID [IN FULL], SHE CANNOT RECEIVE PAYMENT EXCEPT ON OATH; AND THAT FROM ASSIGNED PROPERTY²³ OR ORPHANS' PROPERTY SHE CANNOT EXACT PAYMENT EXCEPT ON OATH; AND THAT IF SHE CLAIMS NOT IN HIS PRESENCE,²⁴ SHE CANNOT RECEIVE PAYMENT EXCEPT ON OATH; SO, TOO, ORPHANS CANNOT RECEIVE PAYMENT²⁵ EXCEPT ON OATH [NAMELY]: 'WE SWEAR THAT OUR FATHER DID NOT ENJOIN IN HIS TESTAMENT UPON US, NEITHER DID OUR FATHER SAY UNTO US, NOR DID WE FIND [WRITTEN] AMONG THE DOCUMENTS OF OUR FATHER THAT THIS DOCUMENT IS PAID.'²⁶ R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA SAYS: EVEN IF THE SON WAS BORN AFTER HIS FATHER'S DEATH HE MAY TAKE AN OATH,²⁷ AND RECEIVE HIS CLAIM. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: IF THERE ARE WITNESSES THAT THE FATHER SAID AT THE TIME OF HIS DEATH THAT THIS DOCUMENT WAS NOT PAID, HE RECEIVES [HIS CLAIM] WITHOUT AN OATH, — AND THESE TAKE AN OATH THOUGH THERE IS NO [DEFINITE] CLAIM:²⁸ PARTNERS,²⁹ TENANTS,³⁰ ADMINISTRATORS,³¹ THE WIFE WHO TRANSACTS THE AFFAIRS IN THE HOUSE,³² AND THE SON OF THE HOUSE.³³ [IF] HE³⁴ SAID TO HIM,³⁵ 'WHAT DO YOU CLAIM OF ME?' [AND THE OTHER REPLIED.] 'I DESIRE THAT YOU SWEAR TO ME';³⁶ HE MUST TAKE AN OATH. IF THE PARTNERS OR TENANTS HAD DIVIDED,³⁷ HE CANNOT IMPOSE AN OATH UPON THEM.³⁸ IF AN OATH WAS IMPOSED UPON HIM IN ANOTHER CASE, THEY IMPOSE UPON HIM THE WHOLE.³⁹ AND THE SEVENTH YEAR CANCELS THE OATH.⁴⁰

GEMARA. ALL WHO TAKE AN OATH [ENFORCED] IN SCRIPTURE, TAKE AN OATH, AND DO NOT PAY. Whence do we know this? — Because Scripture said: And the owner thereof shall accept it, and he shall not pay⁴¹ — he whose duty it is to pay: upon him devolves the oath.

BUT THESE TAKE AN OATH, AND RECEIVE [PAYMENT], etc. In what way is the hired labourer different that the Rabbis have instituted for him [the privilege] that he should take the oath and receive [his wages]? — Rab Judah said that Samuel said: Great halachoth did they teach here. ‘Halachoth!’ Are these then halachoth?⁴² But say: Great enactments did they teach here. — ‘Great!’ Hence there are also small [enactments]?⁴³ — But, said R. Nahman that Samuel said: Fixed enactments did they teach here: our Rabbis removed the oath from the householder⁴⁴ and imposed it upon the hired labourer for the sake of his livelihood. [But] for the sake of the labourer's livelihood do we fine the householder? — The householder himself is satisfied that the labourer should take the oath and receive [his wages], so that labourers may hire themselves out to him.⁴⁵ On the contrary, the hired labourer is satisfied that the householder should take the oath, and be released [from payment], so that the householder should hire him?⁴⁶ — The householder must of necessity employ [labourers].⁴⁷ The labourer also must of necessity be employed!⁴⁸ — Well, then, the householder is busy with his labourers.⁴⁹ — Then, let him give him without an oath!⁵⁰ — In order to appease the mind of the householder [an oath is imposed].⁵¹ — Well, let him pay him in the presence of witnesses?⁵² — That would be too troublesome for him.⁵³ Then let him pay him at the beginning?⁵⁴ — Both desire credit.⁵⁵

- (1) If he is known to have sworn falsely any of these, he can no longer be trusted to take an oath.
- (2) Though he did not thereby injure anybody.
- (3) Gambler.
- (4) Racing his pigeon against a neighbour's pigeon, and betting on the result; or, a fowler, laying snares for pigeons; sometimes a pigeon belonging to somebody may be ensnared, and he is thus guilty of theft; v. Sanh. 25a.
- (5) The Sabbatical year's produce was free to all to eat, and the owner of the field was not allowed to count himself the sole possessor of the produce, and was not allowed to trade with it; v. Lev. XXV, 6, and Rashi a.l.
- (6) Because those enumerated are not trusted with an oath.
- (7) It devolves upon the person who normally would take the oath, i.e., the defendant, who, if he admits a portion of the claim, must take an oath; here, since he is suspect, he cannot take the oath, so he pays the full claim; v. infra 47a.
- (8) The defendant pays half the claim only.
- (9) This is not sufficient to allow the shopkeeper to take an oath, and exact the money.
- (10) The purchaser
- (11) ‘And I will pay.’
- (12) ‘And I will give you a sela.’
- (13) The son or labourer.
- (14) The shopkeeper.
- (15) From the householder.
- (16) Also from the householder.
- (17) One of them, either the shopkeeper or the labourer, is bound to be swearing falsely.
- (18) That he paid him; this oath is a consuetudinary oath, for he is a כופר הכל denying the whole of the claim (Rashi); but v. Tosaf. infra 48a s.v. נשבע. [Though the oath serves here to exempt the purchaser from paying, it is nevertheless included among those taken in order to receive payment, as the oath enables the purchaser to retain the produce he bought (Hoffmann). For other interpretations, v. Alfasi on the passage and attendant commentaries.]
- (19) That he gave him the fruit.
- (20) He disagrees with the first clause which states that the householder takes an oath that he has paid the denar. R. Judah says he does not need to swear, for it is not usual for a shopkeeper who sells for cash to give the fruit before he receives the money, and since the householder already has the fruit, his hand is uppermost, and we assume that he has paid.
- (21) Therefore, in the first clause, the householder does not need to take an oath.

- (22) If a wife, producing her kethubah (v. Glos.) admits that she has been paid a part of the money due to her, she 'impairs her kethubah' (i.e., weakens its validity, for the amount shown in the document is no longer correct, on her own admission), and if the husband, who is divorcing her, says he has paid her the whole amount, she cannot obtain payment of her claim unless she takes an oath that she has not been paid.
- (23) Mortgaged to another.
- (24) If her husband sent her a divorce from abroad, and is not present now when she claims her kethubah.
- (25) In their claim of a debt due to their father.
- (26) I.e., 'our father did not tell us before his death that the claim in this document which we now produce has been satisfied; nor did we find that he had already written out a receipt ready to be dispatched to the debtor.'
- (27) That he has found no documentary evidence among his father's papers that this claim has been paid.
- (28) Though the claimant does not make a definite charge of fraudulence against them, but only suspects them, they must take an oath to refute the charge; v. infra 48b.
- (29) If one suspects the other, the suspected one takes an oath.
- (30) One who tills the owner's land, and receives for his work a certain share of the produce.
- (31) One who is appointed to administer the business affairs of another.
- (32) The husband handed over his business for her to manage.
- (33) One of the sons who, after the father's death, administers the affairs.
- (34) The partner, tenant, etc.
- (35) To his respective claimant.
- (36) 'That you did not fraudulently convert to your own use what is mine.'
- (37) Had dissolved their partnership or business arrangement, each taking his due.
- (38) On the grounds of a possible fraudulent dealing.
- (39) If this partner or tenant was concerned in another law-suit with the same claimant, and had to take an oath in that case, then the Court insert in the oath a statement having reference to the present claim, so that he takes the oath for both claims together; v. infra p. 301, n. 9.
- (40) If the Sabbatical year intervenes, he does not take the oath.
- (41) Ex. XXII, 10; the verse begins: The oath of the Lord shall be between them both, to see whether he hath not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods. The owner shall accept this oath, and the guardian (in whose care the animal had died) does not need to pay; hence the person whose duty it is to pay has the oath imposed upon him, and exempts himself from payment.
- (42) The word halachah used here implies a traditional law handed down from the time of Moses.
- (43) Surely all enactments instituted by the Sages are equally important and great!
- (44) Who, according to the Biblical law, would take the oath and be exempt.
- (45) For if the employer would take the oath, and not pay the labourer, no one would ever want to work for him.
- (46) On this occasion when there is a dispute as to whether he has paid him his wages or not, the labourer prefers to allow the employer to take the oath (and not pay), so that he may employ him again.
- (47) So the labourer need not fear; and should take the oath.
- (48) Hence employer and labourer are equally dependent upon each other; so that we cannot say the reason why the oath is imposed upon the labourer is because the employer prefers it thus, so that labourers may not be afraid of him, and may hire themselves out to him; they would in any case seek employment from him.
- (49) He has many labourers to whom he pays wages, and he may genuinely have made a mistake and thought he had paid this one too; but the labourer has only one employer to deal with, and he remembers whether he has received his wages; therefore the oath is imposed upon the labourer.
- (50) Why should the labourer have to take an oath?
- (51) To satisfy him that he was mistaken, and that he had not really paid the labourer yet.
- (52) Let the Rabbis establish a rule that wages must be paid in the presence of witnesses, to avoid the necessity for an oath.
- (53) For witnesses are not always available.
- (54) In the morning before he begins work. If then, at the end of the day, the labourer claims his daily wage, there will be no need for an oath, for we would assume definitely that the wages had been paid in the morning, since the Rabbis had established that rule, and the labourer would not have commenced his work unless he had been paid first.
- (55) The employer desires credit till the evening, for he frequently has not the money for the wages in the morning; and the labourer desires to grant this credit, and does not want his money in the morning, in case he spends it.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 45b

If so,¹ even in the case where he fixed [the wages], also [let the labourer take the oath];² wherefore has it been taught: [If] the artisan says: 'Two [zuz] did you stipulate to pay me,' and the other says: 'I stipulated to pay you only one;' he who wishes to exact from his neighbour must bring proof!³ — The amount fixed [as wages] he certainly remembers.⁴ If so, even in the case where his time had expired also [let the labourer take the oath];⁵ wherefore has it been taught: If his time had expired and he had not given him,⁶ he does not take an oath to receive [his wages];⁷ [for] it is a presumption that the householder would not transgress [the precept]: the wages of a hired servant shall not abide with thee all night until the morning.⁸ Now did you not say that the householder is busy with his labourers?⁹ — That is only before the time of liability arrives, but when the time of liability arrives it thrusts itself upon him, and he remembers. Would then the labourer transgress [the precept]: thou shalt not rob?¹⁰ — With the householder there are two presumptions: one, that the householder would not transgress [the precept]: 'the wages of a hired servant shall not abide with thee' etc., and another, that the hired servant would not allow his wages to be delayed.¹¹

R. Nahman said that Samuel said: They did not teach this,¹² except when he hired him in the presence of witnesses, but if he hired him without witnesses, since he may say to him, 'I never hired you,' he may say to him, 'I hired you and paid you your hire.'¹³ R. Isaac said to him: 'Correct; and so said R. Johanan.' Are we hence to infer that Resh Lakish disagrees with him? — Some say, that he was drinking and was silent; and some say, that he waited for him, and was silent.¹⁴

It was stated also: R. Menashya b. Zebid said that Rab said: They did not teach this, except when he hired him in the presence of witnesses, but if he hired him without witnesses, since he may say to him, 'I never hired you,' he may say to him, 'I hired you, and paid you your hire.' Rami b. Hama said: How excellent is this ruling! Said Raba to him: Wherein is its excellence? If such is the case, the oath of guardians, which the Divine Law imposes¹⁵ — how is it possible of fulfillment? Since he may say to him, 'The thing never happened,' he may say to him, 'It was an unpreventable accident.'¹⁶ — In the case where he deposited it with him before witnesses.¹⁷ But since he may say to him, 'I returned it to you,' he may say to him, 'An accident happened.'¹⁸ In the case where he deposited it with him by a document.¹⁹ Hence we can infer that both²⁰ hold that he who deposits [an article] with his neighbour before witnesses need not return it to him before witnesses;²¹ but if by document, he must return it to him before witnesses.²²

Rami b. Hama applied to R. Shesheth the verse: And David laid up these words in his heart.²³ For R. Shesheth met Rabbah b. Samuel, and said to him: Have you studied anything about a hired labourer? — He replied to him: Yes, we are taught: A hired labourer [if he claims] within his time limit,²⁴ takes an oath, and receives [his wages]. How? If he said to him: 'You hired me, and did not pay me my wages,' and the other said: 'I hired you and did pay you your wages.'²⁵ But if he said to him: 'Two did you stipulate to pay me,' and the other said: 'I stipulated to pay you only one,' he who desires to exact from his neighbour must bring proof.²⁶ Now, since the second clause is concerned with proof, the first clause is not concerned with proof!²⁷ — R. Nahman b. Isaac said:

(1) If you say that the labourer takes the oath and receives his wages, because the employer is too busy with his workmen to remember whether he had paid or not.

(2) Where the dispute is as to the amount that had been agreed upon, let us also say that the labourer should swear and receive what he claims.

(3) The artisan who claims an extra one (zuz, denar, or any coin) must bring witnesses to testify that his claim is correct. Why should he not take an oath and receive his money, without witnesses?

(4) The employer may possibly not remember whether he paid the labourer, but he remembers the amount he stipulated to pay; therefore the labourer is not in this case more reliable than the employer, and must bring witnesses.

(5) A day labourer has time to claim his wages during the whole of the succeeding night; and a night labourer, during the whole of the succeeding day (B.M. 110b).

(6) I.e., the labourer claims that the employer has not yet paid him.

(7) Why should not the labourer take an oath and receive his wages? Since we say the employer is busy with his labourers, he may have forgotten that he has not yet paid him.

(8) Lev. XIX, 23; since he does not wish to transgress this prohibition, he is careful to remember to pay in time.

(9) So that in spite of himself he may really have forgotten. Let the labourer then take the oath!

(10) Lev. XIX, 13; he would not rob his employer by claiming his wages twice; therefore let him take the oath.

(11) There are two presumptions in favour of the householder; i.e., which incline us to the belief that he paid the wages in the proper time.

(12) That the labourer takes an oath that he has not received his wages and obtains his due.

(13) If there were no witnesses that the employer hired this labourer, the employer, if he wished to evade payment, could have said that he did not hire him at all; therefore, if he admits he hired him, but says he has paid him, he is believed.

(14) V. supra 40a.

(15) Ex. XXII, 10; deals with a paid guardian who claims that the loss was unpreventably accidental; he must take an oath to this effect (i.e., that it was hurt, or forcibly removed by robbers, or died), and is exempt.

(16) Since the guardian may say that he never had the other's animal to guard, and he would have been exempt, he should be believed when he says that an accident happened to it. Why, then, does Scripture impose an oath on him?

(17) Then the oath is imposed; for the guardian could not have evaded payment by saying he never took the animal, for there are witnesses that it was deposited with him.

(18) He should still be believed without an oath, for he could have said that he had already returned the animal to its owner.

(19) The guardian signed a document that he received the animal from him. He cannot say that he returned the animal to the owner, because he would have claimed the return of the document. He is therefore not believed (without an oath) if he says an unpreventable accident happened to it.

(20) Raba and Rami b. Hama.

(21) For Rami b. Hama replies at first that he deposited it with the guardian in the presence of witnesses; and Raba asks, since the guardian may say to him, 'I returned it to you,' etc. Hence, Raba holds that he does not require to have witnesses that he returned it. And Rami b. Hama agrees, for he does not dispute this statement, but gives another answer — that he deposited it by document.

(22) For both agree that the guardian cannot say, 'I have already returned the article to you'; hence, he must return it in the presence of witnesses.

(23) I Sam. XXI, 13; he applied this verse to him, because he also 'laid up these words in his heart,' i.e., he took pains to ascertain if the ruling of Rab and Samuel (that the labourer takes an oath and receives his wages only if he was hired in the presence of witnesses) had any support.

(24) V. B.M. 110b, where the different time limits for claiming are enumerated, in the case of labourers hired for the day, night, week, month, etc.

(25) In this case, where the dispute is whether he paid him or not, the labourer takes an oath that he has not been paid, and receives his wages.

(26) The labourer must bring witnesses, and if he has no witnesses, he cannot take an oath and receive what he claims.

(27) For the first clause does not mention it; hence, in the first clause, the labourer takes an oath, and receives his wages, even if he does not bring witnesses that he was hired by the employer. Thus, this is opposed to the ruling of Rab and Samuel that only if there were witnesses that he was hired is he believed with an oath.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 46a

Both the first and second clauses are concerned with proof:¹ the proof which necessitates payment he mentions;² the proof which necessitates [merely] an oath he does not mention.³

R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: The School of Rab sent to Samuel [the request]: Let our Master teach us: If an artisan says [to his employer]: 'Two [zuz] have you stipulated to pay me,' and the other says: 'I stipulated to pay you only one,' who takes the oath? — He replied to them: In this case the householder takes the oath, and the artisan loses, for the amount stipulated people certainly remember.⁴ But this is not so? For did not Rabbah b. Samuel learn: '[In the case of dispute about the amount] stipulated, he who desires to exact from his neighbour must bring proof'⁵ — [thus implying that] if he does not bring proof, it is cancelled!⁶ But why? Let the householder take an oath, and the artisan lose!⁷ — R. Nahman said: Both alternatives are meant: Either [the artisan] brings proof, and receives [his claim], or the householder takes an oath, and the artisan loses.⁸

An objection was raised: If one gave his cloak to an artisan [to mend], and the artisan says. 'You did stipulate to pay me two [zuz],' and the other says, 'I stipulated to pay you only one,' as long as the cloak is in the hands of the artisan, the householder must bring proof;⁹ but if he had already given it him, then [if he claims] within his time limit,¹⁰ he takes an oath, and receives [his claim]; but if his time has passed, he who desires to exact from his neighbour must bring proof.¹¹ [Now it states] after all: '[If he claims] within his time limit, he takes an oath and receives [his claim]'! Why? Let the householder take an oath, and the artisan lose!¹² — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: This is in accordance with the view of R. Judah¹³ who says whenever the oath inclines towards the householder, the hired person takes the oath and receives [his claim].¹⁴ Which R. Judah? Shall we say. R. Judah of our Mishnah? [Surely] he is more stringent, for we learnt: R. JUDAH SAYS: [THERE IS NO OATH] UNLESS THERE IS PARTIAL ADMISSION.¹⁵ — But it is R. Judah of the Baraitha; for it was taught: A hired labourer, as long as his time limit has not expired,¹⁶ takes an oath, and receives [his claim]; but if not,¹⁷ he does not take an oath, and receive [his claim]. And R. Judah said: When [does he take an oath]? Only if he says to him, 'Give me my wages fifty denarii which you owe me, and the other says. 'You have already received of it a gold denar',¹⁸ or, if he says to him. 'Two did you stipulate to pay me,' and the other says. 'I stipulated to pay you only one.'¹⁹ But if he says to him, 'I never hired you at all,' or, if he says to him, 'I hired you, and paid you your wages,' then he who desires to exact from his neighbour must bring proof.²⁰

To this R. Shisha the son of R. Idi demurred: Well then, [in the case where the dispute is about the amount] stipulated [is this ruling]²¹ the view of R. Judah, and not that of the Rabbis. Now since where R. Judah is more stringent,²² the Rabbis are more lenient;²³ where R. Judah is more lenient,²⁴ will the Rabbis be more stringent!²⁵ — But then, [will] the Rabbis [also agree]?²⁶ Then, that which Rabbah b. Samuel learnt that [where the amount] stipulated [is in dispute] he who desires to exact from his neighbour must bring proof²⁷ — whose view would it be? It cannot be the view of R. Judah, nor that of the Rabbis! — But, said Rabbah, in this they disagree: R. Judah holds in [an oath imposed by] the Torah²⁸ an enactment was instituted in favour of the hired labourer,²⁹ but in [an oath imposed by] the Rabbis,³⁰ which is itself an enactment — we do not impose one enactment upon another enactment.³¹ And the Rabbis hold even in [an oath imposed by] the Rabbis we also institute an enactment in favour of the hired labourer; but [in the case of a dispute about] the amount stipulated, this the employer remembers.³²

'HE WHO WAS ROBBED,' — HOW? IF THEY TESTIFIED AGAINST HIM THAT HE ENTERED HIS HOUSE TO SEIZE HIS PLEDGE, etc. But perhaps he did not seize his pledge.³³ Did not R. Nahman say: If one held an axe in his hand, and said, 'I am going to cut down the palm-tree of So-and-so,' and it was found cut and cast [on the ground], we do not say that he cut it down?³⁴ Hence, a man often boasts, but does not fulfil; here also [perhaps] he boasted, and did not fulfil! — Read:³⁵ 'And seized his pledge.' — Then let us see what pledge he seized!³⁶ — Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said that R. Johanan said: He claimed from him vessels which may be taken under his garments.³⁷

Rab Judah said: If they saw him hiding articles under his garments,³⁸ and he came out,

(1) I.e., there must be witnesses that he was hired.

- (2) In the second clause he requires witnesses as to the amount that was stipulated; this proof (without which payment cannot be exacted) the tanna mentions.
- (3) In the first clause witnesses are necessary to testify that he was hired; this the tanna does not mention (though the witnesses are necessary), for these witnesses merely give the labourer power to take an oath.
- (4) And we do not say that because the employer is busy with his labourers he does not remember the amount stipulated, and that therefore the oath should devolve on the labourer; but the employer takes the oath like every one who admits part of the claim.
- (5) Supra 45b.
- (6) The extra amount which he claims; and the employer does not need to take an oath, but is automatically exempt.
- (7) Only if the employer takes an oath, but not otherwise.
- (8) Do not deduce from the teaching of Rabbah b. Samuel that if the artisan does not bring proof, the employer is automatically exempt; if he does not bring proof, the employer must take an oath that he stipulated only one.
- (9) I.e., witnesses, that he stipulated to pay only one zuz, for he is the one who desires to exact from his neighbour (the cloak for only one zuz).
- (10) On the day that he gave it him.
- (11) The artisan must bring witnesses that the householder had agreed to pay him two zuz, and if he does not bring witnesses, he loses his claim.
- (12) This question is directed against Samuel who holds that where the dispute is about the amount stipulated, the householder takes an oath, and is exempt.
- (13) And Samuel does not agree with him, but with the other Sages.
- (14) Whenever the householder should, according to Scripture, take the oath, i.e., when he admits part of the claim, as here, the oath is transferred from him to the employee, because the employer cannot remember so well (even in a dispute about the amount stipulated), for he is busy with his labourers.
- (15) Supra 44b. Hence R. Judah restricts the labourer, and does not allow him to take an oath, even where the Sages do allow him. Therefore in the case where the amount stipulated is in dispute, how can you say that it is R. Judah who allows the labourer to take an oath and receive his claim, since others hold that in such a case the labourer is not allowed to take an oath, but the householder takes the oath, and is exempt?
- (16) In which to claim.
- (17) If it is after the time limit.
- (18) 25 silver denarii.
- (19) Hence, even in a case where the amount stipulated is in dispute. R. Judah states clearly that the labourer takes an oath.
- (20) The labourer must bring witnesses, and if not, the employer is exempt, for he denies the whole claim.
- (21) That the labourer takes the oath.
- (22) In the case of the Mishnah where there is no partial admission on the part of the employer, R. Judah is more stringent, and does not allow the labourer to take an oath.
- (23) They do allow him to take the oath, and receive his claim.
- (24) Where the amount stipulated is in dispute.
- (25) And not allow the labourer to take the oath!
- (26) That in the case where the amount stipulated is in dispute the labourer takes the oath.
- (27) The labourer must bring witnesses; but he cannot receive the amount he claims merely by taking an oath.
- (28) Where the employer admits a portion of the claim.
- (29) That the oath be removed from the employer and given to the labourer, who takes the oath, and receives his claim.
- (30) Where the employer denies the whole; and there is only the Rabbinic oath of equity.
- (31) By removing this oath from the employer and giving it to the labourer.
- (32) And we do not say, because he is busy with his labourers, he forgets; therefore in this case the oath is not transferred to the labourer. Hence, it is in fact true that R. Judah is sometimes more stringent (even when the Sages are more lenient, as in the case where there is no partial admission), and sometimes the Sages are more stringent (even where R. Judah is more lenient, as in the case where the dispute is about the amount stipulated): the reason is because these cases depend upon different principles. Thus the ruling that the labourer takes the oath in the case of dispute about the amount is R. Judah's view, and not that of the Sages; and Rabbah b. Samuel agrees with the Sages.
- (33) The witnesses merely say that he entered the house to seize the pledge, but they did not see him take it. Why, then, should the householder be permitted to take an oath, and claim the vessels?

(34) Though the evidence against him is strong; but we must have definite evidence before we can make him pay for the damage.

(35) In the Mishnah.

(36) If the witnesses testify that they actually saw him seize the pledge, they can give evidence and state what the pledge was. What need, then, is there for the householder to take an oath?

(37) The householder claims that he took from him small articles which could easily be hidden under his coat; and though the witnesses saw that he took something, they could not see exactly what it was; therefore the householder takes an oath.

(38) If witnesses saw a man entering another man's house, and hide some articles under his coat, and come out.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 46b

and said, 'I bought them,'¹ he is not believed.² And we do not say this, except in the case of a householder who does not usually sell his [household] articles; but in the case of a householder who sometimes sells his articles, he is believed.³ And [in the case of a householder] who does not usually sell his household articles we also do not say [that the intruder is not believed] except [with regard to] articles it is not usual to hide,⁴ but [with regard to] articles which it is usual to hide, he is believed.⁵ And [with regard to articles] which it is not usual to hide we also do not say [that he is not believed] except if he is a man who is not decorous, but [in the case of] a decorous man, that is his way.⁶ And we do not say [that he is not believed] except when the householder says he lent them, and the other says he bought them, but [if the householder says the other] stole them, it is not at all in the householder's power [to say so], for we do not assuredly presume a man to be a robber.⁷ And we do not say [that the intruder is not believed] except in the case of articles which it is customary to lend or hire out, but in the case of articles which it is not customary to lend or hire out, he is believed;⁸ for R. Huna b. Abin sent⁹ [his decision that] in the case of articles which it is customary to lend or hire out, and [the intruder] said, 'I bought them,' he is not believed; as in the case where Raba removed a pair of scissors for [cutting] cloth and a book of Aggada¹⁰ from orphans — things which it is customary to lend and hire out.¹¹

Raba said: Even the caretaker may take the oath,¹² and even the caretaker's wife may take the oath. R. Papa inquired: In the case of his hired labourer or retainer,¹³ what is the ruling?¹⁴ — Let it stand.¹⁵

R. Yemar said to R. Ashi: if he claimed from him a silver goblet, what is the ruling?¹⁶ — [He replied:] We see, if he is a man reputed to be wealthy,¹⁷ or a man who is trustworthy so that people deposit [articles] with him,¹⁸ he takes an oath and recovers [the goblet], but if not, he does not.

'HE WHO WAS WOUNDED,' — HOW? Rab Judah said that Samuel said: They did not teach it,¹⁹ except [if the wound were] in a spot where he could have inflicted it himself,²⁰ but if it is in a spot where he could not have inflicted it himself, he receives [compensation] without an oath.²¹ But let us take into consideration that perhaps he rubbed himself against a wall!²² — R. Hiyya taught [that the Mishnah deals with a case] where a bite appeared on his back or between his arm-pits.²³ But perhaps someone else did it to him?²⁴ — There was no other.

'AND HE WHOSE OPPONENT IS SUSPECTED OF SWEARING FALSELY. . . AND EVEN A VAIN OATH.' What is meant by EVEN A VAIN OATH?²⁵ — He²⁶ states a case of 'not only': not only [if he is guilty] in these²⁷ where there is a denial of money, but even in this²⁸ also which is merely a denial of words,²⁹ he is no longer believed [on oath]. Let him²⁶ mention also the oath of utterance. — He mentions only such an oath that at the time of swearing he swears falsely; but the oath of utterance, where it is possible to say that he is swearing the truth,³⁰ he does not mention. Granted, in the case of 'I shall eat,' or, 'I shall not eat';³¹ but in the case of 'I have eaten,' or, 'I have not eaten,³² what shall we say?³³ — He²⁶ mentions vain oath

- (1) And the householder said he lent them to him.
- (2) The intruder is not believed, even if he desires to take an oath; but the householder takes a consuetudinary oath that he did not sell them or give them to him, and recovers the articles; v. Maim., Yad, To'en we-Nite'am, IX, 4.
- (3) The intruder is believed (with a consuetudinary oath) that he bought them.
- (4) Articles which one is not ashamed to carry openly in the street. This person hid them, apparently because he was ashamed to have to borrow them; if he had really bought them, as he states, he would not have been ashamed to carry them openly.
- (5) That he bought them; and though this householder does not usually sell his household goods, he may have been in need of money on this occasion.
- (6) And he is believed that he bought them, though he carries them hidden under his cloak (and they are articles which other men would carry openly).
- (7) And the intruder is believed that he bought them, even if he is not a decorous man who always carries articles hidden under his cloak.
- (8) When he says he bought them.
- (9) From Palestine, v. B.B. 52b.
- (10) Containing legendary matter and homiletic literature.
- (11) The claimant brought witnesses who testified that the articles were his; and he maintained that he had lent them to the orphans' father. Raba decided in favour of the claimant (who, naturally, must take an oath that he did not give them or sell them to their father). Since Raba decided thus, it is obvious that he holds that if the father had been alive and said he had bought them, he would not have been believed (for these are articles which it is customary to lend), for had the father been believed, it would have been the duty of the Court, in his absence, to put forward the same plea on behalf of the orphans. The book, which the claimant said he had lent the father, happened to be Aggada, but the same rule applies to all books (v. Tosaf. ad loc.; but Rashi differs).
- (12) This refers to the Mishnah that if witnesses testify that an intruder entered another man's house and seized a pledge which he hid under his cloak (so that they could not distinguish what it was) the householder takes an oath that the article is his, and recovers it. Raba says that if the householder was absent when the intruder entered, but the caretaker was there, he takes the oath.
- (13) Upon whom the duty of minding the house does not devolve.
- (14) Do they take the oath in the householder's absence?
- (15) It remains unsolved.
- (16) If the householder claimed from the intruder a valuable object, is he also believed on oath?
- (17) Who is known to have in his home similar objects of value.
- (18) And he states that the silver goblet had been deposited with him by another person.
- (19) In the Mishnah that the injured person takes an oath that the other had inflicted upon him the wound which he exhibits.
- (20) Therefore an oath is necessary that the other did it.
- (21) For witnesses testified that he entered the other's premises whole, and came out injured.
- (22) And injured himself; why should he receive compensation from the other without an oath?
- (23) Or in the elbow joint, which could not have been caused by rubbing against a wall.
- (24) Why should he obtain compensation, without an oath, from the householder? Perhaps another person in the house injured him.
- (25) Why 'EVEN'?
- (26) The Tanna of our Mishnah.
- (27) Having sworn falsely in a case involving an oath of testimony or of deposit.
- (28) Taking a vain oath, e.g., swearing that a pillar of stone is gold.
- (29) Denial (i.e., false statement) involving words only.
- (30) E.g., he swears 'I shall not eat this loaf'; at the moment of swearing he may intend to fulfil it; even if later he is overcome by temptation, and eats it, he should not thereby be accounted untrustworthy and debarred from taking an oath in a money claim.
- (31) It is possible that at the moment of swearing he intends to fulfil them.

(32) Where, at the moment of swearing, he knew he was swearing falsely.

(33) Why should not the Mishnah mention that in such a case, too, he is no longer believed on oath, and his opponent is given the oath.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 47a

and all that are similar to it.¹

IF ONE OF THEM WAS A DICE-PLAYER. Wherefore is this necessary?² — He [the tanna] mentions a Biblical disqualification, and he mentions a Rabbinic disqualification.³

IF BOTH WERE SUSPECT, etc. Raba said to R. Nahman: 'How did we learn in the Mishnah?'⁴ — He said to him: 'I do not know.' 'What is the law?' — He said to him: 'I do not know.' It was stated: R. Joseph b. Minyomi said that R. Nahman said: R. Jose says, They divide.⁵ And so did R. Zebid b. Oshaia learn: R. Jose says, They divide. Some say.⁶ R. Zebid learned: R. Oshaia said: R. Jose says, They divide. R. Joseph b. Minyomi said: R. Nahman decided a case thus: they divide.

THE OATH RETURNS TO ITS PLACE. Whither does it return? — R. Ammi said: Our Masters of Babylon said, the oath returns to Sinai;⁷ our Masters of the Land of Israel said, the oath returns to him upon whom it devolves.⁸ R. Papa said: Our Masters of Babylon⁹ are Rab and Samuel; our Masters of the Land of Israel are R. Abba.¹⁰ 'Our Masters of Babylon are Rab and Samuel,' for we learnt: AND SO ALSO ORPHANS CANNOT EXACT PAYMENT EXCEPT WITH AN OATH. And we discussed this: From whom? Shall we say, from the borrower?¹¹ Their father would have received payment without an oath, and they require an oath!¹² But it means: 'And so also orphans from orphans cannot exact payment except with an oath.'¹³ And Rab and Samuel both said: They did not teach this,¹⁴ except if the lender died during the lifetime of the borrower;¹⁵ but if the borrower died during the lifetime of the lender, the lender was already obliged to take an oath to the sons of the borrower;¹⁶ and a man cannot bequeath an oath to his sons.¹⁷

'Our Masters of the Land of Israel are R. Abba'; for there was a man who snatched a bar of silver from his neighbour; they came before R. Ammi, and R. Abba was sitting in his presence. He¹⁸ brought one witness that he had snatched it from him. The other said, 'Yes, I snatched it; but it is mine that I snatched.' Said R. Ammi: How shall judges settle this dispute? Shall we say to him, 'Go and pay'?¹⁹ There are not two witnesses.²⁰ Shall we exempt him?²¹ There is one witness [that he snatched].²² Shall we say to him, 'Go and swear'?²³ Since he says, 'I snatched it,' he is like a robber!²⁴ — R. Abba said to him: He is liable to take an oath, and he cannot take the oath; and everyone who is liable to take an oath, and cannot take the oath, must pay.²⁵

Raba said: It is reasonable to agree with R. Abba, for R. Ammi learned: The oath of the Lord shall be between them both²⁶ — but not between the heirs. How is this [to be understood]? Shall we say, that he said to him: 'Your father owed my father a hundred zuz,' and the other replied to him: 'Fifty he owed him, but not the other fifty'; what is the difference between him and his father?²⁷ But then, [it must mean] he said to him: 'Your father owed my father a hundred zuz,' and the other replied to him: 'Fifty I know, but the other fifty I do not know.'²⁸

(1) All oaths in the past which are false the moment they are uttered, just as a vain oath is, are included (as far as disqualifying the offender is concerned) in the category of VAIN OATH.

(2) A dice-player is accounted a robber, and we have already been told that, in the case of a robber, the opponent takes the oath.

(3) A real robber is disqualified by Scripture from taking an oath; but a gambler, since he does not take his winnings by force but with the other's consent, is disqualified merely by the Rabbis.

(4) Was it R. Jose or R. Meir who said that the amount in dispute should be divided? He did not remember what the tradition was.

(5) Later R. Nahman remembered the tradition.

(6) Not that R. Zebid, the son of Oshaia, had that tradition, but that R. Zebid said that R. Oshaia had the tradition that it was R. Jose who holds the view that the plaintiff and defendant divide.

- (7) Since both claimant and defendant are suspected of swearing falsely, neither can be asked to take the oath; it returns to Sinai (its place of origin), for it cannot be applied. The result is, the case cannot be tried by the court, and the matter is left alone until evidence is produced by either of the two.
- (8) The defendant who admits a portion of the claim; and since he cannot take the oath (for he is suspect) he must pay the whole claim.
- (9) Who hold that the oath returns to Sinai.
- (10) v. Sanh. 17b.
- (11) If orphans produce a document showing that the borrower is indebted to their father, can they not exact payment unless they take an oath (mentioned in the Mishnah, supra 45a) that their father did not tell them before he died that the document had been settled?
- (12) Surely not! We do not impose restrictions on orphans.
- (13) The lender and borrower both died, and the lender's sons are claiming from the borrower's sons. Here the lender's sons must take an oath, for the lender himself could not have exacted payment from the borrower's sons without an oath; for payment cannot be exacted from orphans except on oath.
- (14) That the lender's sons receive payment from the borrower's sons, if they take an oath.
- (15) When the lender's sons would have obtained payment from the borrower without an oath; and when the borrower dies, the lender's sons can exact payment from the borrower's sons only with an oath.
- (16) For no payment can be exacted from orphans except with an oath.
- (17) I.e., a man cannot bequeath to his sons money which he himself cannot obtain without an oath. Now, the lender would have to take an oath to the sons of the borrower that he had not yet been paid by their father. When he dies, he cannot transmit this oath to his sons, for their oath (if they were to take one) would have to be, 'We swear that our father did not inform us that the debt had been paid.' (v. Mishnah). Since the father had already become liable to take an oath, and the same oath cannot be transmitted to his sons, they cannot take an oath at all. The sons of the borrower also cannot take an oath that their father had already paid. Hence, Rab and Samuel hold that since neither can take an oath, there is neither oath nor payment; i.e., the oath returns to Sinai.
- (18) The owner of the silver bar; v. supra 32b.
- (19) For he admits that he snatched it; and we cannot believe him when he says it is his own, for every robber could put forward that excuse.
- (20) Who saw him snatch it; he could therefore have denied snatching it; he should therefore be believed when he admits he snatched it, but maintains that it is his.
- (21) For this reason.
- (22) He could not therefore have denied snatching it, for he would have had to take an oath to refute the statement of the witness.
- (23) To refute the statement of the witness.
- (24) And is not believed on oath, v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 336 and notes.
- (25) Hence R. Abba holds that 'the oath returns to him upon whom it devolves'; and since he cannot take the oath, he pays.
- (26) Ex. XXII, 10.
- (27) Since he definitely admits a portion, and definitely denies a portion, why should he not take the oath, as his father would have taken it?
- (28) He is exempt both from oath (for he cannot take an oath that his father does not owe it, since he is not sure about it) and from payment.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 47b

Now granted, if you say, that his father in such circumstances, would have been liable [to take an oath],¹ it is therefore necessary for Scripture to exempt the heirs;² but if you say, that his father in such circumstances would also have been exempt,³ wherefore do we need Scripture [to exempt] the heirs!⁴ And Rab and Samuel, how do they expound this [verse]: 'the oath of the Lord etc.'? — They require it for what was taught: Simeon b. Tarfon says: 'The oath of the Lord shall be between them both': this teaches that the oath falls upon both.⁵ Simeon b. Tarfon says: Whence do we know that there is a prohibition to the souter?⁶ Because It is said: Thou shalt not commit adultery:⁷ thou shalt not cause adultery to be committed.⁸

And ye murmured in your tents.⁹ Simeon b. Tarfon says: You spied out and put to shame the tent of the Omnipresent.¹⁰

As far as the great river, the river Euphrates.¹¹ Simeon b. Tarfon says: Go near a fat man, and be fat.¹² In the School of R. Ishmael it was taught: The servant of a King is like a King.¹³

AND THE SHOPKEEPER WITH HIS ACCOUNT BOOK, etc. It was taught: Rabbi said: What is the object of troubling with this oath?¹⁴ — R. Hiyya said to him:¹⁵ We have already learnt it: Both take an oath and receive [payment] from the householder. — Did he accept it from him, or did he not accept it from him?¹⁶ — Come and hear: It was taught: Rabbi says, ‘The workmen take an oath to the shopkeeper.’¹⁷ Now if it were so,¹⁸ it should be to the householder [that they take the oath].¹⁹ — Raba said: The workmen swear to the householder in the presence of the shopkeeper, so that they may be ashamed because of him.²⁰

It was stated: If two sets of witnesses contradict each other, R. Huna said, this set may come by itself and bear testimony, and that set may come by itself and bear testimony;²¹ but R. Hisda said: What do we want with false witnesses!²² [Where there are] two lenders and two borrowers and two documents — is the point at issue between them.²³ [In the case of] one lender and one borrower and two documents — the holder of the document is at a disadvantage.²⁴ [Where there are] two lenders and one borrower and two documents — that is our Mishnah.²⁵ [But in the case of] two borrowers and one lender and two documents — what [is R. Huna's ruling]?²⁶ Let it stand.²⁷

R. Huna b. Judah raised an objection.

(1) And since he could not take an oath, for he is not sure, he would have had to pay.

(2) That in such circumstances they are entirely exempt.

(3) As Rab and Samuel say, that when an oath cannot be imposed, it ‘returns to Sinai’, i.e., the matter lapses, and there is neither oath nor payment.

(4) Hence, the fact that we do need the verse to exempt the heirs implies that the father would have to pay. Thus, this supports the view of R. Abba.

(5) Even the claimant, though his claim be legitimate, is guilty to some extent for causing an oath to be taken; for he could have had witnesses or a document, when transacting his affair with the defendant, and so have avoided the necessity of imposing an oath on his fellow-suitor; v. supra 39b.

(6) Lit., ‘he who is at the heels of the adulterer,’ i.e., procures prostitutes for him.

(7) Ex. XX, 13.

(8) The Heb. may be pointed as the Hiph'il.

(9) Deut. I, 27.

(10) The Heb. תרגנו (from רגן, to murmur rebelliously) is here divided into תרגנו: you have spied out (from תור), and put to shame (from גנה, pi'el) your tent, i.e., the tent (land) which the Omnipresent had destined for you; you have rejected His offer of the Holy Land.

(11) Deut. I, 7.

(12) Or, touch a person smeared with oil, and you will also become smeared with oil. The river Euphrates is not really greater, but smaller, than the others, for it is mentioned last (of the four rivers, Gen. II, 14), but it is called here ‘the great river’, because it is mentioned in connection with the Holy Land (as its eastern boundary), and anything connected with the Holy Land is great (Rashi). [Maharsha: Though in reality the Euphrates is the longest of the four it is described as great only when mentioned in connection with the Holy Land.]

(13) The Euphrates, servant of the Holy Land, is great like the Holy Land itself.

(14) For there is bound to be one false oath: the shopkeeper swears he gave the workman small change to the value of a sela as instructed, and the workman swears he has not received it; and both claim from the employer, and are paid. Rabbi does not hold that both shall swear; but he does not explain whether he agrees with Ben Nannus that both are paid without an oath, or that the workman alone takes an oath that he has not been paid by the shopkeeper, and he is paid by the shopkeeper, so that the shopkeeper loses (if he has really paid him once); and it is right that he should lose, for he ought to have paid the workman in the presence of witnesses.

(15) You yourself, the Editor of the Mishnah, stated definitely in our Mishnah (supra 45a) that both take the oath (Rashi).

(16) Did Rabbi accept this statement from R. Hiyya, i.e., did Rabbi, though at first holding the view that there should not be two oaths imposed (because one would be false), later change his mind, and agree that both should take the oath?

(17) That they have not been paid, and he must pay them.

(18) That Rabbi changed his mind.

(19) For that is his view in the Mishnah that both shopkeeper and workman take the oath, and obtain their due from the householder.

(20) Rabbi did change his mind, and both the shopkeeper as well as the workmen, take the oath to the householder; when he states that they swear to the shopkeeper, he means, in the presence of the shopkeeper: that may deter them from swearing falsely, for they might be ashamed to swear in front of him that they had not received their money, if in reality they had.

(21) In the present case, of course, since the evidence is contradictory, the accused is exempt; but in any future case, each set is qualified to testify, for, since we do not know which of the two sets had testified falsely in the first case, we cannot disqualify either; but one witness of the first set together with one witness of the second set cannot combine to testify in any case, for one of them is certainly a false witness.

(22) Neither set is qualified to testify, because one set is false.

(23) Two separate cases of lender, borrower and bond; one set of these witnesses had signed the bond in one case, and the other had signed the bond in the other case. According to R. Huna, both bonds are correct and legally enforceable, and according to R. Hisda, both bonds are invalid.

(24) One lender lent one borrower two loans, for which he produces two documents, on one of which one set of witnesses had signed, and on the other of which the other set of witnesses had signed. Both R. Huna and R. Hisda agree that since this lender desires to exact money from the borrower on both documents, on one of which (though we do not know which one) false witnesses had signed, he may obtain payment on one loan only, the lesser one; and he loses the bigger loan, for the borrower may maintain that the witnesses who had signed on the larger amount are the false witnesses; since the lender cannot prove the contrary, he cannot obtain that loan.

(25) Two lenders, each producing a document against the same person, one document having been signed by one set of witnesses and the other document by the other set: R. Huna holds both documents can be enforced, for the case is similar to that of our Mishnah where both shopkeeper and workman take the oath and enforce their claims against the householder, though we know definitely that one of them is swearing falsely; but we cannot deprive either of them of his money; so here, both lenders can enforce their claims. Though, according to R. Hisda, neither, of course, can enforce his claim; cf. next note.

(26) The lender produces two documents against two borrowers: does R. Huna hold, since it is one man who produces both documents (one of which is definitely signed by false witnesses), the court cannot uphold his claim at all, for each borrower may maintain that the document against him is the false one; or since his claim is against two separate people, he produces one document at a time and enforces his claim, for R. Huna holds that both sets of witnesses are believed separately. According to R. Hisda, of course, the claims cannot be enforced, for he holds that both sets of witnesses, even separately, are disqualified (even when two different lenders are the claimants).

(27) We do not know R. Huna's view in such a case.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 48a

If one said it was two ox-goads high, and the other said three, their testimony is valid;¹ but if one said three, and the other said five, their testimony is invalid; but they may join for other testimony.² Now does this not mean for testimony in a money matter?³ — Raba said: [No! it means] he and another may join for other testimony for [this] new moon; for they are now two against one, and the words of one are of no value where there are two.⁴

HE SAID TO THE SHOPKEEPER: 'GIVE ME FOR A DENAR FRUIT,' etc. It was taught: R.

Judah said: When [do we say that the householder takes the oath]? If the fruits are heaped up and lying there, and both are contesting about them; but if he threw them into his basket over his back, he who wishes to exact from his neighbour must bring proof.⁵

HE SAID TO THE MONEY CHANGER: 'GIVE ME etc.' It is necessary [for both clauses to be stated],⁶ for if he had taught us only the first one, [we might have thought] in that case the Rabbis⁷ say [that the householder takes an oath]⁸ because fruit may decay, and because it decays they do not keep it,⁹ but in the case of money, which does not decay, we might think they agree with R. Judah.¹⁰ And if this [second clause] had been stated, [we might have thought] in this case R. Judah says [that the householder does not take an oath],¹¹ but in that [first clause] I might have thought he agrees with the Rabbis,¹² therefore [both clauses are] necessary.¹³

JUST AS THEY SAID THAT SHE WHO IMPAIRS HER KETHUBAH. . .SO ALSO ORPHANS CANNOT EXACT PAYMENT EXCEPT WITH AN OATH. From whom?¹⁴ Shall we say, from the borrower? Their father would have obtained payment without an oath; and they require an oath! — Thus he [the Tanna] means: So also orphans from orphans cannot exact payment except with an oath. Rab and Samuel both said: They did not teach this except if the lender died during the lifetime of the borrower; but if the borrower died during the lifetime of the lender, the lender had already become liable to take an oath to the children of the borrower; and a man cannot bequeath an oath to his children.

They sent this [question] to R. Eleazar: What is the nature of this oath?¹⁵ — He sent them [the reply]: The heirs swear the oath of heirs, and receive [their due].¹⁶

They sent this [question also] in the days¹⁷ of R. Ammi. He exclaimed: So often do they continue sending this [question]! If I would have found some argument in connection with it, would I not have sent it to them? But, said R. Ammi, since it has come to us, we will say something concerning it: If he stood in the court¹⁸ and died, the lender had already become liable to take an oath to the children of the borrower, and a man cannot bequeath an oath to his children; but if he died before he came to the court,¹⁹ the heirs swear the oath of heirs, and receive [their due]. To this R. Nahman demurred: Is it the Court that makes him liable to take the oath? From the time that the borrower died, the lender had already become liable to take an oath to the children of the borrower!²⁰ But, said R. Nahman, if the ruling of Rab and Samuel is accepted, it is accepted; and if not, not.²¹ Hence, he is in doubt,²² But did not R. Joseph b. Minyomi say that R. Nahman decided a case that they should divide?²³ — According to the view of R. Meir, he means; but he himself does not agree.²⁴

R. Oshaia raised an objection: If she died, her heirs mention her kethubah until twenty five years [have elapsed]!²⁵ Here we are discussing a case where she took the oath, and then died.²⁶

Come and hear: If he married a first [wife], and she died; and he married a second, and he died, the second and her heirs come before the heirs of the first.²⁷ — Here also, she took the oath and then died.

Come and hear: But his heirs make her take an oath, and her heirs, and those who come with her authority.²⁸ — R. Shemaiah said: Alternatives are stated: 'her', if she is a widow; and 'her heirs', if she is divorced.²⁹ R. Nathan b. Hoshaiia raised an objection: The son's power is more extensive than the father's power.

(1) Two witnesses who saw the New Moon came to inform the Beth din in Jerusalem; one of them said it appeared to him to be above the horizon about the height of two ox-goads; the other said three ox-goads; since their estimates differ only slightly, we believe them that they really did see the new moon, and the New Moon and festivals dependent on it can be fixed in accordance with their testimony.

(3) Each one of these witnesses may join another in a case concerning a money claim, and is accepted as a qualified witness, though we know that one of them is a false witness. This is an argument against R. Hisda.

(4) One of these two witnesses may be joined to another who agrees with him, so that there are now two against the one who had testified differently.

(5) The householder said to the shopkeeper: 'Give me fruit for a denar,' and the shopkeeper gave him; then asked him for the denar; and the householder said he had paid him; the householder takes an oath to that effect, and is free. R. Judah says this is the case only if the fruit is lying between them, but if the householder had already taken possession, he does not take an oath, but the shopkeeper (who now desires to exact from him either the money or the fruit) must bring proof that he has not yet paid him, and if he has no proof, he loses.

(6) Why does the Mishnah state the clause of the money changer? It is exactly the same as the case of the shopkeeper selling fruit.

(7) The representative of the anonymous opinion in the Mishnah.

(8) Even if the fruit is already in his basket.

(9) The shopkeeper therefore hurriedly threw it into the purchaser's basket, even before he received the money, so that the purchaser should not change his mind; therefore, even if the fruit is already in the purchaser's basket, it is possible he has not yet paid the shopkeeper, and he must take an oath.

(10) That the householder does not need to take an oath that he had already given the money-changer the denar, for the money-changer would not have given him the small change before he had received the denar.

(11) And we believe him that he has paid the money-changer, for the money-changer would not have given him the small change before receiving the denar.

(12) That the householder takes an oath, for in the case of fruit, the shopkeeper may have put it into the purchaser's basket before receiving the money.

(13) To teach us that R. Judah and the Rabbis disagree in both.

(14) V. supra 47a, where the whole passage is explained.

(15) Which the orphans swear to the orphans? Can they always exact money with this oath, even if the borrower had died during the lifetime of the lender (when, according to Rab and Samuel, the orphans cannot take an oath, and cannot obtain the money)?

(16) If the borrower died during the lifetime of the lender, and then the lender died, his heirs take the oath that is imposed in such a case on heirs, that their father had not told them (or left any document) that the debt due to him had been paid, and they exact the money from the borrower's heirs. R. Eleazar thus differs from Rab and Samuel and holds that a man may bequeath an oath to his children, though it cannot naturally be the same oath: the oath he would have had to take is: 'I have not yet been paid this debt by your father.' The oath the orphans take is: 'Our father has not left us instructions that your father's debt has been paid.' [The interpretation adopted here follows text in cur. edd. MS.M., however, furnishes a better reading which is also that of Asheri: 'They sent (i.e., the above question) to R. Eleazar, (to which) he replied: What is the import of this oath (i.e. why should the oath which the father would have had to take be considered more effective than any other oath)? Hence the heirs swear the oath of heirs etc.]

(17) [MS.M.: 'before R. Ammi'.]

(18) If the lender had already appeared at court with his claim against the borrower's heirs, and been bidden to take an oath, and then, before the oath, had died, he cannot bequeath this oath, to which he had already become liable, to his heirs; and the claim lapses.

(19) He had not as yet become liable to take the oath.

(20) Even if he died before bringing his claim to the court, he had already become liable for the oath; i.e., he could not have obtained payment from the borrower's heirs except with the oath. Hence, if the lender cannot bequeath an oath to his children, they cannot, even in such a case, take the oath of heirs.

(21) Either the lender can, or cannot, bequeath his oath; we cannot accept R. Ammi's distinction.

(22) As to whether the ruling of Rab and Samuel holds good or not.

(23) Supra 47a, where it is explained that according to Rab and Samuel 'the oath returns to Sinai', and the case lapses. Hence, R. Nahman, in deciding that the claimant and borrower divide, does not agree with Rab and Samuel.

(24) The ruling of Rab and Samuel is applicable to R. Meir's view that the oath returns to Sinai; and on this R. Nahman says that R. Ammi's differentiation is irrational; but R. Nahman himself does not agree with R. Meir, but with R. Jose, that they divide. [MS.M. substitutes 'R. Ammi' for R. Meir, which simplifies the argument.]

(25) Keth. 104a. A widow who had not yet been paid her kethubah from her husband's estate, and died, bequeaths this claim to her heirs; but they must 'mention' it, i.e., claim it, within 25 years of her husband's death. Now the widow herself could not have obtained her kethubah from the husband's heirs except with an oath (supra 45a); yet when she dies, her heirs can claim the kethubah with the oath that heirs take ('Our mother did not leave instructions that she had received the kethubah'). Hence, though the borrower died during the lifetime of the lender (the husband who owes the kethubah died during the lifetime of the wife), and the lender (wife) had already become liable to take an oath to the heirs, she may bequeath the oath to her heirs. This is an argument against Rab and Samuel.

(26) Since she had already taken the oath, the kethubah is virtually in her possession, and her heirs do not need to take an oath, but merely exact payment.

(27) Keth. 90a; when he died, the second wife who is still alive, has a claim (the kethubah) against his estate, if she dies before receiving the money, her heirs exact payment; but the heirs of the first wife have no claim for kethubah (for she died before her husband). When the kethubah has been paid to the heirs of the second wife, the heirs of the first wife also, of course, participate in their father's inheritance together with their stepbrothers. The Mishnah states, however, that the heirs of the second wife can exact payment of the kethubah; the second wife herself can obtain the kethubah only with an oath from the husband's heirs; her heirs must also take an oath; hence she can bequeath an oath to her heirs. This is an argument against Rab and Samuel.

(28) Keth. 86b. If he gave his wife a written agreement that he would not demand an oath of her (in a case where she would otherwise have to take an oath, e.g., if she impairs a kethubah, supra 45a), nor would he demand an oath of her heirs, nor of those who come with her authority (i.e., those to whom she sold her kethubah, and who would be entitled to the kethubah on her divorce or death), he cannot impose an oath upon her, her heirs, etc. But if he dies, his heirs may impose the oath upon her, her heirs, etc., i.e., if she claims her kethubah from the husband's heirs, she must take an oath; if she dies, her heirs take an oath and obtain the kethubah. Hence she bequeaths the oath to her heirs. This is an argument against Rab and Samuel. Here it cannot be said that she had already taken the oath, and then died; for in that case her heirs would not require to take an oath, whereas the Mishnah states definitely that the husband's heirs make the wife's heirs take an oath.

(29) The husband's heirs make 'her' take an oath, if she is a widow; she can obtain her kethubah from her husband's estate only by taking an oath to his heirs (that she has not yet been paid); but if she dies before she obtains her kethubah, 'her heirs' cannot obtain it from the husband's heirs, because she cannot bequeath the oath (as Rab and Samuel say). The Mishnah which states that the husband's heirs make her heirs take an oath refers to a case where she was divorced (the husband now being liable to pay her the kethubah without imposing an oath on her, for he had given her a written agreement that he himself would not demand an oath of her), then she died before obtaining the kethubah, then the husband died; now, when she died, the kethubah was already due to her without an oath: this money claim she may bequeath to her heirs; but when her heirs wish to exact payment from the husband's heirs, they must take an oath (for orphans from orphans can only exact payment with an oath).

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 48b

for the son exacts payment either with an oath or without an oath,¹ whereas the father exacts payment only with an oath.² Now, in what circumstances? [Obviously] if the borrower died during the lifetime of the lender;³ and yet it states that the son exacts payment either with an oath or without an oath: 'with an oath' — the oath of heirs; without an oath' — as R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says!⁴ — R. Joseph said: This is in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai who hold that a bond which is ready to be collected is counted as if it is already collected.⁵ R. Nahman happened to come to Sura. R. Hisda and Rabbah son of R. Huna went in to him, and said to him: Come, sir, abrogate this ruling of Rab and Samuel.⁶ He replied to them: Have I taken the trouble to come all these parasangs⁷ in order to abrogate the ruling of Rab and Samuel? But grant, at least, that we do not add to it.⁸ As, for example? That which R. Papa said: He who impairs his bond, and died, his heirs swear the oath of heirs, and obtain payment.⁹

There was a man who died, and left a guarantor.¹⁰ R. Papa thought of saying in this case also [the principle] that 'we should not add to it' applies.¹¹ Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua to R. Papa: Will not the guarantor go after the orphans?¹² There was a certain man who died, and left a brother,¹³

Rami b. Hama thought of saying this is also a case where [the principle] ‘we should not add to it’ applies.¹⁴ Said Raba to him: What is the difference between ‘my father did not instruct me etc.’ and ‘my brother did not instruct me etc.’?¹⁵

R. Hama said: Now, since the law has not been stated either in accordance with the view of Rab and Samuel or in accordance with the view of R. Eleazar,¹⁶ if a judge decides as Rab and Samuel, it is legal; if he decides as R. Eleazar, it is also legal.

R. Papa said: This document of orphans¹⁷ we do not tear up, and we do not exact payment on it. ‘We do not exact payment on it,’ — in case we agree with Rab and Samuel;¹⁸ and ‘we do not tear up,’ — for if a judge decides as R. Eleazar, it is legal.¹⁹

There was a judge who decided as R. Eleazar. There was a Rabbinic scholar in his town who said to him: I can bring a letter from the West²⁰ that the law is not in accordance with R. Eleazar. He replied to him: When you bring it.²¹ He came before R. Hama. He²² said to him: If a judge decides as R. Eleazar, it is legal.

AND THESE TAKE AN OATH [THOUGH NO CLAIM IS PREFERRED AGAINST THEM]. Are we discussing the case of idiots?²³ — Thus he means: ‘And these take an oath not in a definite claim, but in a doubtful claim: partners, tenants, [etc.]’²⁴ A Tanna taught: THE SON OF THE HOUSE who was mentioned [in the Mishnah as liable to take an oath] does not mean that he walks in and walks out,²⁵ but he brings in labourers and takes out labourers, brings in produce and takes out produce.²⁶ And wherein are these different?²⁷ — Because they allow themselves permission in it.²⁸ R. Joseph b. Minyomi said that R. Nahman said: But only when the claim between them is [at least] two silver [ma'ahs].²⁹ In accordance with whose view? — Samuel's?³⁰ But R. Hiyya taught in support of Rab!³¹ — Say, the denial of the claim,³² as Rab holds.

IF THE PARTNERS OR TENANTS HAD DIVIDED,³³ [AN OATH CANNOT BE IMPOSED]. They enquired: Can this oath be superimposed on a Rabbinic oath?³⁴ — Come and hear: If he borrowed from him on the eve of the Sabbatical year, and on the termination of the Sabbatical year he became a partner with him, or a tenant, we do not impose on him [any previous oath together with the present oath].³⁵ The reason is because he borrowed from him on the eve of the Sabbatical year, so that when the Sabbatical year came, it cancelled it; but in any other of the seven years, we do impose on him [a previous oath]!³⁶ — Do not infer that in any of the other seven years we do impose on him [a previous oath].³⁷ but infer thus: If he became a partner with him, or a tenant, on the eve of the Sabbatical year, and on the termination of the Sabbatical year, he borrowed from him, we impose on him [a previous oath].³⁸ But this is already stated clearly: If he became a partner with him, or a tenant, on the eve of the Sabbatical year, and on the termination of the Sabbatical year, he borrowed from him, we impose on him [a previous oath]!³⁹ — Therefore, we deduce that we superimpose the oath on a Rabbinic oath.⁴⁰ It is proven.

R. Huna said:

(1) The lender's heir exacts payment from the borrower's heir with an oath (that his father had told him that the debt was not yet paid), or without an oath, if there were witnesses that the father had said before he died that the debt was unpaid (supra 45a).

(2) From the borrower's heirs.

(3) The statement that the father exacts payment only with an oath can only refer to a case where the borrower is already dead, and the father (i.e., the lender) is claiming from the heirs, for if the borrower is alive the lender does not need to take an oath (for he produces a document).

(4) Supra 45a; if there are witnesses that the father said at the time of his death that the document was not settled, the heir obtains payment of the debt without an oath. However, the Baraita states that the son exacts payment with an oath from the heirs, where the borrower died during the lifetime of the lender. This is opposed to the view of Rab and Samuel. (5) Sot. 25a; if the husband of a woman suspected of infidelity (sotah, v. Glos.) died before she drank of the 'bitter waters' (Num. V, 11-31), she does not need to undergo the ordeal, and obtains payment of her kethubah; and though it is possible that she did, in fact, commit adultery, yet, since she has the document (ketubah) setting forth her husband's indebtedness to her, it is as if her husband's property were assigned to her and in her possession; and it is the husband's heirs who would require to bring proof that she was unfaithful, if they desired to deprive her of the kethubah; and if no proof is forthcoming, she obtains payment of the kethubah. This is the view of Beth Shammai, who hold that the money in the document is reckoned as if it is already collected and in the possession of the holder of the document. Here also, if the borrower died during the lifetime of the lender, the money is counted as if it is already in the possession of the lender (since he produces a document), though the Sages made a regulation that the lender must take an oath to the borrower's heirs. Hence, the lender is not bequeathing an oath to his sons, but a definite money asset (though the sons, when claiming from the borrower's heirs, must also take an oath, according to Rabbinic regulation). Rab and Samuel, however, agree with Beth Hillel that the money in the document is not counted as if it is already collected; Sot. 25b.

(6) That a man cannot bequeath an oath to his son, with the implication of this ruling.

(7) [From Mahuza, the home of R. Nahman, to Sura, was a distance of about 60 miles.]

(8) But agree with Rab and Samuel only in such a case as they stated; and do not extend their ruling to apply to other cases.

(9) If the holder of a bond admitted having received part payment, he cannot obtain the rest without an oath. If he dies, his heirs swear the oath of heirs, and obtain payment; and we do not, in this case, apply the ruling of Rab and Samuel that a man cannot bequeath an oath to his heirs.

(10) One man lent money to another on a document, and a third person became a surety for the loan. The borrower died (so that the lender became liable for an oath), then the lender died; and his heirs claimed from the surety.

(11) That we should not apply the restrictive ruling of Rab and Samuel, but permit the heirs to take an oath to the surety, and obtain their money.

(12) He will claim from the heirs of the borrower; hence, the heirs of the lender, if permitted to take an oath and claim from the guarantor, will ultimately be depriving the borrower's heirs because of this oath; and to such a case the ruling of Rab and Samuel applies.

(13) The lender died childless, and left a brother as his heir; the borrower had previously died, leaving children. The lender's brother now claims from the borrower's children.

(14) But that the brother should be allowed to take an oath and exact payment from the borrower's heirs, for Rab and Samuel said only the children of the lender could not take the oath in such circumstances. Let us not add the reservation also in regard to the brother of the lender,

(15) The children of the lender take the oath: 'Our father did not instruct us that the bond is paid.' The brother would have to say, 'My brother did not instruct me, etc.' There is no difference; and since Rab and Samuel ruled that the lender could not bequeath the oath to his sons, they hold similarly that he cannot bequeath it to his brother.

(16) Supra 48a, that the oath can be bequeathed to the heirs.

(17) Where the borrower died during the lifetime of the lender, then the lender died.

(18) I.e., in case they are right.

(19) The lender's heirs may find such a judge, and exact payment.

(20) The Palestinian scholars.

(21) I will believe you.

(22) R. Mama.

(23) If nobody is claiming from them, why should they take an oath?

(24) If one partner suspects the other (though he admits he is not certain) of fraudulently converting a part of their joint holdings to his own use, the accused must take an oath to refute the accusation.

(25) That he is merely a member of the household.

(26) He attends to the business.

(27) Why should these have to take an oath for a doubtful accusation?

(28) Because they are engaged in the management of the property, they permit themselves certain liberties, and appropriate some of the funds for themselves.

(29) One partner says: 'I believe you may have appropriated two ma'ahs for yourself,' and the other admits a portion; he must take an oath to refute the rest of the claim. If the accusation is for an amount less than two ma'ahs there is no oath.

(30) Supra 39b.

(31) That the denial in the claim must be at least two ma'ahs; supra 40a.

(32) R. Nahman meant the denial must be two ma'ahs.

(33) Their property, i.e., dissolved partnership; one of the partners cannot afterwards make the other swear to refute a doubtful accusation. If, however, he has to take an oath in connection with another dispute, this oath too is at the same time included; supra 45a.

(34) If the partner was liable only for a Rabbinic oath (e.g., consuetudinary oath) in the other dispute, can an oath be imposed upon him in this case too where, after their separation, the other partner accuses him of misappropriation of their joint funds? Or is this oath included only if the other oath (which is definitely imposed upon him) is a Biblical oath (e.g., מודה במקצת)?

(35) If, for example, he denied completely the loan which he borrowed on the eve of the Sabbatical year, and now, having become a partner on the termination of the Sabbatical year, an oath is imposed upon him because of his partner's accusation against him of misappropriation, the court does not include in the present oath any reference to his denial of the loan, for the Sabbatical year has cancelled the loan.

(36) The inference is that if he had borrowed in any other year (the Sabbatical year not intervening), and later became a partner, the oath which he is liable for denying the whole loan would have been included in the present oath imposed on him by his partner. Hence, though the present oath is only a Rabbinic regulation, it has the power to include in it another oath. The oath for denying the whole loan, it is here assumed, can only be included in some other oath, for as yet, in the mishnaic period, the consuetudinary oath had not been instituted; it was instituted much later by R. Nahman (supra 40b).

(37) For it may be that since the oath imposed by the partner is only Rabbinic, it has not the power to include another oath with it.

(38) If they dissolved partnership, and then on the termination of the Sabbatical year one partner borrowed from the other, and later admitted a portion of the loan, but denied the rest (for which he is liable a Biblical oath), we impose on him also the previous oath which his partner makes him take by accusing him, after the dissolution, of a previous fraudulence. Hence, it is because he is liable to take a Biblical oath (being a מודה במקצת) that we include also the previous Rabbinic oath. This Baraita wishes to teach us also that the Sabbatical year does not cancel the partner's oath; it cancels only oaths attached to loans as well as the loans themselves.

(39) Since this is already expressly stated, why should we assume that this is what the first clause desires us to deduce by inference?

(40) As we inferred from the first clause at the beginning.

Talmud - Mas. Shevu'oth 49a

On all [oaths] we impose others, except on [the oath of] the hired labourer on which we do not impose others.¹ R. Hisda said: To all we are not lenient,² except a hired labourer to whom we are lenient. What is the difference between them?³ — There is this difference: [whether the court] find an opening for him [to impose another oath].⁴

BUT THE SABBATICAL YEAR CANCELS THE OATH. Whence do we know this? — R. Giddal said that Rab said: Because Scripture says. And this is the word of the release:⁵ even a 'word'⁶ it releases.

CHAPTER VIII

MISHNAH. THERE ARE FOUR GUARDIANS: AN UNPAID GUARDIAN, A BORROWER, A PAID GUARDIAN, AND A HIRER.⁷ AN UNPAID GUARDIAN TAKES AN OATH IN ALL CASES;⁸ A BORROWER PAYS IN ALL CASES;⁹ A PAID GUARDIAN AND A HIRER TAKE AN OATH IN THE CASE OF INJURY, CAPTURE,¹⁰ OR DEATH, BUT PAY FOR LOSS OR THEFT.

IF HE [THE OWNER] SAID TO THE UNPAID GUARDIAN, 'WHERE IS MY OX?' AND HE REPLIED TO HIM, 'IT DIED,' WHEREAS IT WAS INJURED OR CAPTURED OR STOLEN OR

LOST; [OR HE REPLIED], 'IT WAS INJURED,' WHEREAS IT DIED OR WAS CAPTURED OR STOLEN OR LOST; [OR HE REPLIED,] 'IT WAS CAPTURED,' WHEREAS IT DIED OR WAS INJURED OR STOLEN OR LOST; [OR HE REPLIED,] 'IT WAS STOLEN,' WHEREAS IT DIED OR WAS INJURED OR CAPTURED OR LOST; [OR HE REPLIED,] 'IT WAS LOST,' WHEREAS IT DIED OR WAS INJURED OR CAPTURED OR STOLEN; [AND THE OWNER SAID,] 'I ADJURE YOU,' AND HE SAID, 'AMEN', HE IS EXEMPT.¹¹

[IF THE OWNER SAID,] 'WHERE IS MY OX?' AND HE REPLIED TO HIM, 'I DO NOT KNOW WHAT YOU SAY,' WHEREAS IT DIED OR WAS INJURED OR CAPTURED OR STOLEN OR LOST; [AND THE OWNER SAID,] 'I ADJURE YOU,' AND HE SAID, AMEN, HE IS EXEMPT.¹²

[IF THE OWNER SAID,] 'WHERE IS MY OX?' AND HE REPLIED TO HIM, 'IT WAS LOST'; [AND THE OWNER SAID,] 'I ADJURE YOU', AND HE SAID, 'AMEN'; AND WITNESSES TESTIFIED AGAINST HIM THAT HE HAD CONSUMED IT, HE PAYS THE PRINCIPAL; IF HE CONFESSED HIMSELF, HE PAYS THE PRINCIPAL, FIFTH, AND GUILT-OFFERING.¹³

[IF THE OWNER SAID,] 'WHERE IS MY OX?' AND HE REPLIED TO HIM, 'IT WAS STOLEN;' [AND THE OWNER SAID,] 'I ADJURE YOU, AND HE SAID, 'AMEN;' AND WITNESSES TESTIFIED AGAINST HIM THAT HE HIMSELF STOLE IT, HE PAYS DOUBLE;¹⁴ IF HE CONFESSED HIMSELF, HE PAYS THE PRINCIPAL,¹⁵ FIFTH, AND GUILT-OFFERING.

IF A MAN SAID TO ONE IN THE STREET, 'WHERE IS MY OX WHICH YOU HAVE STOLEN?' AND HE REPLIED, 'I DID NOT STEAL IT,' AND WITNESSES TESTIFIED AGAINST HIM THAT HE DID STEAL IT, HE PAYS DOUBLE;¹⁶ IF HE KILLED IT OR SOLD IT, HE PAYS FOUR OR FIVE TIMES ITS VALUE.¹⁷ IF HE SAW WITNESSES COMING NEARER AND NEARER, AND HE SAID, I DID STEAL IT, BUT I DID NOT KILL OR SELL IT,' HE PAYS ONLY THE PRINCIPAL.¹⁸ IF HE [THE OWNER] SAID TO THE BORROWER, 'WHERE IS MY OX?' AND HE REPLIED TO HIM,

(1) If a man is liable to take even a Rabbinic oath, other Rabbinic oaths may be included at the same time at the instance of the claimant; but when the labourer has to take an oath that he has not received his wages, the court do not permit the employer to include any other oath; for in reality the labourer should be believed without an oath; and it is only to appease the employer that an oath is imposed on him (supra 45a), therefore the court do not allow other oaths to be added.

(2) But impose other oaths.

(3) R. Huna and R. Hisda appear to say the same thing.

(4) According to R. Huna, even if the claimant does not urge the imposing of other oaths, the court investigate and ask the claimant whether he has any further claims against the defendant in which an oath might be imposed; but according to R. Hisda the court are not lenient with the defendant if the claimant wishes to impose other oaths (and they permit the imposition), but they do not themselves, if the claimant does not urge it, endeavour to find an opening for the imposition of other oaths (Rashi).

(5) Literal rendering of Deut. XV, 2; E.V. 'the manner of the release.'

(6) I.e., oath.

(7) They must all guard the object given in to their care, but their liability varies.

(8) That he has not deliberately been neglectful, and is free from liability.

(9) Of injury, capture, death, loss, and theft; but if the animal died in the course of its work, he is free, for he borrowed it for that purpose.

(10) Forcible capture by robbers, which is counted an accident for which he is not responsible.

(11) From a guilt-offering for denying a deposit on oath; for he is liable for an offering only in a case where, if he had admitted the truth, he would have had to make restitution; by his denial on oath, therefore, he wishes to free himself from payment, and if it is found that he has sworn falsely, he brings a guilt-offering and makes restitution, adding also a fifth of its value (Lev. V, 21-26). In this case of an unpaid guardian, however, he did not, by his denial, wish to exempt himself from payment; for even if he had admitted the truth, he would have been exempt; therefore he does not bring a guilt-offering.

(12) For even if he had admitted the truth, he would have been free from payment.

(13) According to the law governing oath of deposit; if he confesses, and repents and desires atonement, he pays back the principal, adds a fifth of its value, and brings a guilt-offering: they shall confess their sin . . . and he shall make restitution for his guilt in full, and add unto it the fifth part thereof. . . besides the ram of the atonement. . . (Num. V, 7, 8).

(14) An unpaid guardian who tries to free himself by maintaining that the animal was stolen, whereas he himself had stolen it, pays double (like a thief); but if he tries to free himself by maintaining that it was lost (as in the previous clause), whereas he had himself stolen it, he does not pay double; v. B.K. 63b.

(15) But not double, for that is a fine, which is not imposed on his own confession.

(18) For since he confessed that he stole it (though he confessed only out of fear of the witnesses), it is a proper confession, and he is exempt from paying double for the theft; and since there is no double, there is no fourfold or fivefold payment (though he denied the selling or killing, and witnesses testified against him that he did steal and kill or sell); v. B.K. 75b.

GEMARA. Who is the Tanna who holds that there are four guardians? — R. Nahman said that Rabbah b. Abbuha said: It is R. Meir. Said Raba to R. Nahman: Is there then a tanna who does not hold that there are four guardians!⁹ — He said to him: Thus I meant to say to you: Who is the tanna who holds that a hirer is like a paid guardian? Rabbah b. Abbuha said: It is R. Meir. But surely, we have heard that R. Meir holds the reverse [view], for we learnt: A hirer: how does he pay? R. Meir said: Like an unpaid guardian; R. Judah said: Like a paid guardian! — Rabbah b. Abbuha learned it reversed.¹⁰

Are they four? They are three!¹¹ — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: There are four guardians, but their regulations are three. IF HE SAID TO AN UNPAID GUARDIAN, etc. ‘WHERE IS MY OX?’ etc. IF HE SAID TO ONE IN THE STREET, etc. IF HE SAID TO A GUARDIAN,¹² etc. WHERE IS MY OX?’ HE REPLIED TO HIM, ‘I DO NOT KNOW WHAT YOU SAY,’ etc. Rab said: They are all exempt from the oath of guardians,¹³ but are liable in respect of the oath of utterance;¹⁴ and Samuel said: They are exempt also in respect of the oath of utterance. In what do they disagree? — Samuel holds it is not [possible of application] in the future;¹⁵ and Rab holds it is [possible of application] both negatively and positively.¹⁶ But they have already expressed their disagreement on this point once, for it was stated: ‘I swear that So-and-so threw a pebble into the sea,’ ‘I swear that he did not throw [a pebble into the sea]’; Rab says, he is liable, and Samuel says, he is exempt. Rab says, he is liable, because it is [applicable] negatively and positively; and Samuel says, he is exempt, because it is not [applicable] in the future!¹⁷ — It is necessary [for them to express their disagreement in the present instance too], for if they had told us [their disagreement] in that case, [we might have thought that] in that case Rab says [he is liable], because he swears of his own accord, but in this case, where the Court administer the oath to him,¹⁸ we might have thought that he agrees with Samuel;¹⁹ as R. Ammi said, for R. Ammi said: In any oath which the Judges administer there is no liability in respect of the oath of utterance. And if [their disagreement] had been stated in this case, [we might have thought that] in this case Samuel says [he is exempt].²⁰ but in that case we might have thought that he agrees with Rab,²¹ therefore it is necessary [for their disagreement to be stated in both cases]. [To turn to the main] text: R. Ammi said: In any oath which the Judges administer there is no liability in respect of the oath of utterance, for it is said: Or if any one swear, uttering with the lips²² — of his own accord; as Resh Lakish said, for Resh Lakish said: ki is translatable by four expressions: ‘if’, ‘perhaps’, ‘but’, ‘because’.²³

R. Eleazar says: They are all exempt from the oath of guardians, but are liable in respect of the oath of utterance,²⁴ except [in the case of the statement], ‘I DO NOT KNOW WHAT YOU SAY, [made] by the borrower, and that of theft and loss, by the paid guardian and hirer, where they are liable,²⁵ for they denied money.

(1) From the guilt-offering, for he did not, by his false oath, desire to evade payment, since even if the facts were in accordance with his oath, he would still have had to pay.

(2) For a guilt-offering (in addition to paying for the animal) for by his denial he desired to evade payment.

(3) A paid guardian and hirer are exempt from payment in any of these cases, therefore they do not bring a guilt-offering, for even if they had admitted the truth they would not have had to pay.

(4) In these two cases the paid guardian and hirer must pay; they did not therefore, by their oath, wish to avoid payment, and are therefore exempt from a guilt-offering.

(5) For he desired to evade payment by his oath, whereas if he admitted the truth he would have had to pay; therefore he brings a guilt-offering.

(6) For by his oath he is making himself liable to pay, whereas in reality (since it died, etc.) he would have been exempt; he is therefore exempt from a guilt-offering.

(7) If by his oath he is not trying to evade payment, he is exempt from a guilt-offering.

(8) [The last passage is omitted in MS.M. and other texts as superfluous repetition, and moreover as implying some contradiction to the preceding passage, which extends the exemption to one who effects no change by his lying, whereas here the exemption is limited to one who makes it more stringent for himself.]

(9) Surely all admit that there are four!

(10) That R. Meir holds a hirer pays like a paid guardian.

(11) For a hirer is either like a paid or an unpaid guardian.

(12) Read: 'To A BORROWER'.

(13) Those mentioned in the Mishnah as being exempt are exempt only from liability in respect of the oath of guardians, i.e., are exempt from a guilt-offering for their false oath of deposit.

(14) For though they did not desire to evade a money payment (and are therefore exempt from a guilt-offering), they nevertheless uttered a false oath, and must bring a sliding scale sacrifice. This sacrifice is brought, however, only if the transgressor trespassed unwittingly in that he was unaware that a sacrifice was necessary for a false oath, though he knew a false oath was prohibited, and that he was swearing falsely; for if he swore falsely unwittingly (i.e., if he really thought he was swearing the truth), he would in any case be exempt from a guilt-offering for his false oath of deposit; v. supra 36b.

(15) He holds that a sliding-scale sacrifice for a false oath of utterance is brought only if that oath is applicable to the future; e.g., if the guardian swore falsely, 'The animal died,' he does not bring a sliding scale sacrifice, for he could not swear, 'The animal will die'; v. supra 25a.

(16) Applicability in the future is not necessary, as long as it is applicable in the negative and positive; e.g., the animal died, or did not die; was stolen, or was not stolen.

(17) 'So-and-so will throw a pebble;' for he does not know what So-and-so will do; supra 25a.

(18) He must perforce take an oath, if he wishes to free himself from payment. If he is an unpaid guardian, he takes an oath that he was not wilfully neglectful; if a paid guardian, he takes an oath that the animal died, or was forcibly taken from him by robbers, or injured.

(19) That if he swore falsely, he is not liable to bring a sliding scale sacrifice, because he did not utter the oath of his own free will.

(20) Because the court administered it.

(21) That he is liable, because he swore of his own accord.

(22) Lev. V, 4; he brings a sliding scale sacrifice.

(23) R. Ammi takes the conjunction כִּי in this verse (Lev. V, 4) to mean 'if': if any one swear, i.e., of his own accord; he need not swear, but if he does swear, he must bring a sliding scale sacrifice. Rab, however, takes ki here as meaning 'because': because he swears (whether of his own accord, or compelled by the court), he must bring a sacrifice.

(24) He agrees with Rab.

(25) For a guilt-offering, and do not bring a sliding scale sacrifice. R. Eleazar does not need to mention in his exceptions the case of an unpaid guardian who, after swearing that the animal was lost or stolen, confessed that he stole it himself, in which case he is exempted from a sliding scale sacrifice, for the Mishnah states clearly that he brings a guilt-offering; and it is obvious that he is therefore exempt from the sacrifice for the oath of utterance.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. HOW DO WITNESSES BECOME LIABLE [TO PUNISHMENT] AS ZOMEMIM?¹ [IF THEY SAY:] ‘WE TESTIFY THAT N. N. [A PRIEST] IS A SON OF A WOMAN WHO HAD [FORMERLY] BEEN DIVORCED² OR A HALUZAH,³ IT IS NOT SAID [IN THIS CASE] THAT EACH [MENDACIOUS] WITNESS BE HIMSELF STIGMATIZED AS BORN OF A DIVORCEE OR HALUZAH; HE ONLY RECEIVES FORTY⁴ [LASHES].

[IF THEY SAY]: ‘WE TESTIFY THAT N.N. IS GUILTY OF [A CHARGE ENTAILING] BANISHMENT,⁵ IT IS NOT SAID [IN THIS CASE] THAT EACH [MENDACIOUS] WITNESS SHOULD HIMSELF SUFFER BANISHMENT; HE ONLY RECEIVES FORTY [LASHES].

GEMARA. Should not the opening words of the Mishnah have been rather, ‘How do witnesses not become liable [to punishment] as zomemim?’ Moreover, since we read in a subsequent Mishnah: But if they [i.e. counter-witnesses] said to them, ‘How can you testify at all, since on that very day you were with us at such and such a place?’ these are condemned as zomemim,⁶ does not ‘these’ imply that those in the foregoing instances are not treated as zomemim? — The Tanna had just been dealing with the last Mishnah in the preceding tractate [of Sanhedrin]⁷ to which this Mishnah is but a sequel, namely: ‘All zomemim are led forth to meet a talionic death save zomemim in an accusation of adultery⁸ against the [married] daughter of a priest, and her paramour, who are led forth to meet not the same death [as she], but another [manner of] death.’ Accordingly in our Mishnah we are provided with other instances of zomemim where the main law of retaliation is not enforced, but ‘a flogging of forty’ [lashes] is inflicted instead: [IF THEY SAY:] ‘WE TESTIFY THAT N. N. [A PRIEST] IS A SON OF A WOMAN WHO HAD [FORMERLY] BEEN DIVORCED OR A HALUZAH,’ IT IS NOT SAID THAT EACH [MENDACIOUS] WITNESS BE HIMSELF STIGMATIZED AS BORN OF A DIVORCEE OR HALUZAH; HE ONLY RECEIVES FORTY [LASHES].

What is the sanction for this [substitutive] penalty? — Said R. Joshua b. Levi: R. Simeon b. Lakish⁹ said that it is based on the text: then shall ye do unto him as he purposed to do;¹⁰ that is to say, punish him [the culprit] and not his [innocent] offspring.¹¹ But why should not he alone be stigmatised, and not his offspring? — We must needs fulfil ‘as he had purposed to do’ and in such a case we should have failed to do so.¹²

Bar Pada¹³ says that the sanction [here, for the substitutive penalty of a flogging] may be obtained by an argument a fortiori.¹⁴ What do we find in the case of the ‘desecrator’?¹⁵ The ‘desecrator’ himself does not become ‘desecrated’ [by his forbidden association]. Is it not then logical [to argue from this] that a zomem who only came to [try and] ‘desecrate’ a person,¹⁶ but did not [in fact] desecrate him, should not become ‘desecrated’ himself?

Rabina demurred to this argument, saying that if you admit this [kind of] deduction, you nullify [in effect] the law of retaliation for zomemim.

(1) Zomem-im, the plural of zomem, lit., ‘intriguer’ or ‘schemer’ is the technical term for a type of false witnesses (v. pp. 19 ff.) and their punishment is by the law of retaliation (Deut. XIX, 16ff.).

(2) The child of a union of a priest and a divorcee is considered a Halal, i.e., vulgarized, desecrated, and disqualified from priestly office. (Lev. XXI, 6-8, 14-15; Ezek. XLIV, 22.)

(3) The widow of a man (absolutely) childless, who had been discharged by performing the halizah (lit., ‘the drawing off’, sc., the shoe. Deut. XXV, 5-10) is designated Haluzah-widow, and is (Rabbinically) considered tantamount to a divorcee and consequently may not be married to a priest. Haluzah may be taken to mean either ‘discharged’,

'withdrawn' (cf. Hosea, V. 6); or, 'drawer of the shoe', v. M. Segal, Mishnaic Hebrew Grammar, 235.

(4) According to Rabbinic interpretation of Deut. XXV, 2-3, the maximum number of lashes was 'forty save one', v. p. 155.

(5) v. Num. XXXV, 10ff. and Deut. XIX, 4-5.

(6) V. infra 5a.

(7) Mishnah Sanh., XI, 6, the final clause in that tractate, both in our editions of the Mishnah and the Palestinian recensions. The order is, however, different in our editions of the Babylonian Talmud, where it is not the last chapter, but the last but one (Chap. X, fol. 89a).

(8) The specific penalty for a priest's daughter caught in adultery was Burning (Lev. XXI, 9.; Gen. XXXVIII, 24; cf. Sanh. 50a seq.). The seducer of any married woman was to be strangled, v. 84b. On the traditional methods of execution, v. Sanh. VII.

(9) The words 'R. Simeon b. Lakish said' are omitted in some texts and questioned on the ground that R. Joshua b. Levi was the older of the two and could not have been the former's disciple; but this form of reporting does not invariably imply discipleship, v. Yad Malaki, sect. 74.

(10) Deut. XIX, 29.

(11) I.e., if the zomemim are priests, their innocent children would, on the application of the law of retaliation thenceforth, also become stigmatized as 'desecrated', cf. p. 1, n. 2.

(12) Hence 'lashes' are inflicted instead.

(14) Hebrew, Kal wahomer, lit., 'the light and the grave' set in contrast; an argument by analogy, either from the lesser to the more important or from the more important to the lesser, V. Glos. Note that we have here an instance of two tendencies in attempting to trace accepted principles back to their origins. Some seek their origin in the Bible, others again delight also in giving them a logical basis by deduction.

(15) A priest who enters into a forbidden union 'desecrates' the woman and all her future offspring. V. p. 1, notes 2 and 3.

(16) Impugning by false evidence the past status of a priest's mother. For a historical illustration v. Kid. 66a, and Josephus, Ant., XIII, 10, 5 — 6.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 2b

For, [you might argue,] what do we find in the case of one who [as witness]¹ had stoned a person? He himself is not stoned. Is it not then logical [to argue from this] that one who had only purposed to stone another [by his evidence] but did not succeed in stoning him, should not be stoned himself? Hence the derivation as taught from the text in the first instance, is the best.

[IF THEY SAY:] 'WE TESTIFY THAT N.N. IS GUILTY OF A CHARGE [ENTAILING THE PENALTY OF] BANISHMENT..... What is the sanction for this (substitutive) penalty? — Said Resh Lakish,² It is based on the text which reads: He, he-shall-flee³ unto one of the cities of refuge, which emphatically asserts that he alone shall flee, but not the zomemim.

R. Johanan said that the sanction for this (substitutive penalty of a flogging) may be obtained by argument a fortiori, thus: Now, what do we find in the case of one who had effected his intended act [of murder]? He is not banished.⁴ Is it not then logical [to argue from this] that zomemim who had not [actually] effected their intended act should not be banished?

But does not this [very] argument point to a reverse conclusion? For is it not logical [to argue] that he who had effected the intended act [of murder] is not to go into banishment, so as not to obtain the possibility of atonement; whereas the zomemim who have not effected their intended act, should be allowed to go into banishment, so as to obtain the possibility of atonement? Hence the derivation as from the text, given by Resh Lakish, is the best.

'Ulla said: Where is there found an allusion in the Torah to the treatment of zomemim-witnesses?

Where is there found an allusion in the Torah to zomemim-witnesses! Is it not prescribed, then shall ye do unto him as he had purposed to do unto his brother?⁵ What is meant is some allusion in the Torah for inflicting on Zomemim-witnesses a flogging [in lieu of retaliation]! — It is written: And they shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked: and it shall be if the wicked man deserve to be beaten [flogged], that the judge shall cause him to lie down and be beaten . . . forty [lashes].⁶ Now, is it because the judges justify the righteous and condemn the wicked', that 'the wicked man deserve to be beaten'?⁷ But, if you refer the text to a case where witnesses had incriminated a righteous man; then came other witnesses who justified the righteous', [that is, indicated his innocence as heretofore], and 'condemned the wicked', [that is, proved the former witnesses wicked men] then [you can say that] 'if the wicked man' [the zomem] 'deserve to be beaten,⁸ the judge shall cause him to lie down and be beaten.' Cannot the sanction for the flogging be derived from the eighth Commandment: Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour?⁹ No, it cannot be, as that is a prohibition applying to no [tangible] action, and 'wherever a prohibition is contravened without [involving tangible] action, no flogging is inflicted'.¹⁰

Our Rabbis taught: Four observations were made in reference to zomemim-witnesses, they [a] are not stigmatized as born of [a priest and] a woman who had been a divorcee or a haluzah;¹¹ [b] do not go into banishment to the cities of refuge; [c] are not made to pay ransom;¹² and [d] are not sold as slaves.¹³ In the name of R. Akiba it was stated that they are also not made to pay [compensation] on their own admission.¹⁴

'They are not stigmatized as born of [a priest and] a divorcee or a haluzah' — as we have already explained [above]. 'They do not go into banishment to the cities of refuge' — as we have already explained [above]. 'They are not made to pay ransom' — because ransom is held to be [a form of] atonement and these fellows stand in no need of that.¹⁵ Who could be the Tanna who considers ransom as [a form of] atonement? — Said R. Hisda: It is R. Ishmael, son of R. Johanan b. Berokah, as it has been taught: It is written, then he shall give for the redemption of his life [whatever is laid upon him],¹⁶ that is, compensation for the [life of] the person injured [dead]. R. Ishmael, son of R. Johanan b. Berokah, says: It is compensation for [his own life], the one responsible for the injury.

Is it not right to assume that [ultimately] they differ in the interpretation of the import of kofer [ransom]; one Master considering the ransom merely as pecuniary satisfaction, whilst the other Master interprets it as [a form of] expiation [of guilt]? Said R. Papa: Not [necessarily] so! Both¹⁷ may be taken to consider ransom as a form of expiation [of guilt], only here they differ on this, that one Master considers the assessment should be based on the value of the injured [dead] person, while the other Master considers that it should be based on the value of the person responsible for the injury.

What is the reason underlying the view held by our Rabbis?¹⁸ — They argue that as the same expression for assessment is used in two proximate instances in the same chapter,¹⁹ therefore just as in the former instance the assessment is based on the injured [dead child], the assessment in the second instance²⁰ is likewise to be based on the [dead] person [injured by the ox]. And what is R. Ishmael's [reason]? — He argues that the text states [explicitly the compensation to be] for the redemption of his life [soul].

And [what is the reply of] the Rabbis [to this interpretation]? — Yes indeed, the text has it for the redemption of his life [soul]; nevertheless, in regard to the amount to be paid assessed according to the value of the injured.²¹

'And they are not sold as slaves' — R. Hamnuna²² was inclined to argue that this exemption would be granted only where the [innocently] accused had the means to pay his threatened fine; for, inasmuch as he would then not have been sold, they [the zomemim] should likewise not be sold; but where he himself had no means, the zomemim, even though they have the means, should be sold. [Said Raba to him:] Let the zomemim say to him, 'If you had the means, would you have been sold? Therefore, we likewise should not be sold.' But what R. Hamnuna did propose to argue was that this exemption should be granted only where either he or they have the means; but where neither he nor they have means they should be sold.²³ Said Raba to him: The Divine Law²⁴ prescribes, If he has nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft,²⁵ which directs that he be sold for theft, but not for insidious scheming.

'In the name of R. Akiba it was stated that they do not pay on their own admission.' What is R. Akiba's reason [for this exemption]? — He considers this compensation as *kenas*²⁶ and kenas is not payable on one's own admission. Rabbah [commenting on this] said: You may recognise it as such, because, you see, these [schemers] have actually done nothing [tangible], yet they are put to death or made to pay damages. R. Nahman [commenting] said: You may recognise it as kenas, as the money remains [undisturbed] in the possession of the owner, yet those fellows are made to pay.

(1) 'The hand of the witness shall be upon him first to put him to death' (Deut. XVII, 7). If the intrigue was not discovered till after the execution had taken place, the zomemim were not punished by retaliation, v. p. 25.

(2) Resh Lakish's view is given by Bar Pedayah in J. Mak, i. 1.

(3) הוּא יָנוּם Deut. XIX, 5. The verb יָנוּם alone, means he shall flee; the addition of the pronoun הוּא = he, adds emphasis to the subject of the verb.

(4) Deliberate murder is not punished by banishment, but by death. Yet, if on technical grounds the criminal escapes the extreme penalty, he is not relegated into banishment (either for atonement, or protection from the 'avenger').

(5) Deut. XIX, 19.

(6) Deut. XXV, 1ff. Notice, there is no mention of zomemim or any indication in the text or context. What 'Ulla reads into it is therefore only claimed as a suggestion, a mere allusion and no more,

(7) V. next note.

(8) I.e., where retaliation is inapplicable or cannot be justly imposed. This is not altogether so strained an interpretation as it may seem at first. The main difficulty here is the word רִיב, 'a contention', 'controversy', between two parties; the penalty of flogging is not determined by the relative righteousness of the one and the wickedness of the other, but is inflicted for religious, ritual, or moral transgressions. Hence, the reference is to the attempts of contentious fellows to degrade an enemy by a false imputation; v. the comments of Nahmanides, Malbim and J.Z. Meklenburg, Ha-kebab we-ha-Kabbalah, a.I.

(9) Ex. XX, 13.

(10) V, infra, 16a. Mere speaking is generally (with the exception of some specific instances), not considered 'action'.

(11) V. Glos.

(12) Pecuniary compensation chargeable on a fatal accident caused by a vicious animal, due to the owner's negligence; v. Ex. XXI, 28ff. If the charge was made on fictitious evidence, and the witnesses were found zomemim, they do not pay the amount that the court might have imposed on the one accused innocently.

(13) If they had accused one of having stolen, and the accused had not the means to pay, v. Ex. XXI, 37; XXII, 1-3.

(14) When witnesses are proved zomemim and they make a timely confession of their guilt, they are not made to pay the statutory fines.

(15) As their beast has not actually killed a human being.

(16) Ex. XXI, 30. If there be laid on him (כִּפָּר, atonement) a sum of money, then he shall give for the (פְּדִיּוֹן, redemption) ransom of his life (Heb., soul) whatsoever is laid upon him. In view of the last part of verse 29, the ox shall be stoned and his owner also shall be put to death, it is difficult to say which of the two is demanded, atonement for the negligence which resulted in the death of a human being, or the pecuniary compensation, redemption, for the loss to the capacity of the family. V. Nahmanides and Ibn Ezra on Exodus.

(17) Lit., 'all the world.'

(18) I.e. the representatives of the anonymous opinion.

(19) I.e., Ex. XXI, 22, (where one hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her); and verse 30, (where one's ox killed a man).

(20) Ibid. 30.

(21) I.e., by the method indicated in verse 22 (in the case of the child).

(22) There were several Babylonian scholars of that name; this contemporary of Raba is the fourth on the list in Hyman's Toledoth I, p. 378.

(23) The words, 'said Raba to him' are to be omitted, according to a marginal note; but on closer examination the whole passage down to the next 'said Raba to him,' will be found to be a later insertion, out of harmony. It is not in the Munich text, v. D.S., p. 2.

(24) V. Glos.

(25) Ex. XXII, 2.

(26) A monetary imposition (more than is due), by way of penalty. The rule is obtained from Ex. XXII, 8, 'whom the judges shall condemn, he shall pay double . . . , but not on his own admission. (Rashi); v. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 3a

How has this money remained undisturbed? [Obviously] because they had done nothing [tangible]! [But] that is just what Rabbah said! — Then it should be reported thus: And so had also said R. Nahman.

Said Rab Judah: Rab said that a zomem-witness pays his quota. What is meant by 'pays his quota'? If it means that this one pays half and that one half, we learn this already expressly: Monetary impositions are divided proportionately, but [the number of] lashes is not divided proportionately!¹ This dictum is applicable where only one of the witnesses was found a zomem, in which case he would be made to pay his half [of the fine]. But does he in such a case pay at all? Is it not taught: 'No zomem-witness pays money [damages] until the two of them have been found zomemim'? — Said Raba: It has a possible application where one of the zomemim admits, 'I gave false evidence'. But would we accept such statement coming from him?² What about [the rule]: A witness, once he has made his depositions [before the Court], cannot retract and testify again? — Hence this dictum can only be applied where one says: 'We gave evidence and were found zomemim by such and such a Court'.³

Now, with whose view will this explanation accord? — Not with R. Akiba's; for how could this accord with what he said: 'They also do not pay on their own admission'! Hence Rab's dictum is applicable only when one of the witnesses says, 'We gave evidence, were found zomemim by such and such a Court and were condemned to pay a sum of money'.⁴ Now [in such a case] you might presumably expect me to argue that since this fellow cannot [by his sole statement] commit his confederate, he could not commit himself either; therefore Rab teaches us that in this instance a zomem pays his quota.

MISHNAH. [IF THEY SAY:] 'WE TESTIFY THAT N.N. DIVORCED HIS WIFE AND HAS NOT PAID HER KETHUBAH'⁵ SEEING THAT HER KETHUBAH WILL ULTIMATELY HAVE TO BE PAID, SOONER OR LATER⁶ THE ASSESSMENT SHOULD BE MADE ON THE BASIS OF HOW MUCH ONE MIGHT BE WILLING TO OFFER THE WOMAN FOR HER KETHUBAH IN THE EVENT OF HER BEING WIDOWED OR DIVORCED OR, ALTERNATIVELY, HER HUSBAND INHERITING HER AFTER HER DEATH.

GEMARA. How is it appraised? — Said R. Hisda: The appraisal is made on the basis of the husband's claims.⁷ R. Nathan b. Oshaia says: On the basis of the woman's claims;⁸ R. Papa says: On the basis of the woman's claims and strictly on her kethubah.⁹

MISHNAH. [IF THEY SAY]: 'WE TESTIFY THAT N.N. OWES HIS FRIEND ONE THOUSAND ZUZ'¹⁰ WITH AN UNDERTAKING THAT HE WILL RETURN THE SAME TO HIM THIRTY DAYS HENCE', WHILE THE DEBTOR SAYS 'TEN YEARS HENCE', THE ASSESSMENT [OF THE FINE] IS MADE ON THE BASIS OF HOW MUCH ONE MIGHT BE WILLING TO OFFER FOR [THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN] HOLDING THE SUM OF ONE THOUSAND ZUZ TO BE REPAID IN THIRTY DAYS OR IN TEN YEARS HENCE.

GEMARA. Said Rab Judah: Samuel said that if one lent his friend a sum of money for ten years, the [end of the] Sabbatical year will cancel that debt;¹¹

(1) Infra 5a.

(2) And reverse the judgment claim?

(3) Whereas the other witness does not admit.

(4) As a judgment debt which can be proved, it is no longer a voluntary admission to be waived on technical grounds.

(5) The 'document, containing among other undertakings a settlement on the wife payable at her husband's death, or on her being divorced by him. V. Glos. The husband presumably contests this statement, and ultimately the witnesses are proved intriguers and have to pay damages as zomemim.

(6) Lit., 'to-day or to-morrow'. The husband having lost practically nothing by the evidence of these witnesses cannot expect an award equal to the full amount of the kethubah.

(7) E.g., the value of a speculative loan obtainable by the husband on the kethubah, in the event of his wife's death, and some compensation for their attempt to deprive him forthwith of his enjoyment of the usufruct of his wife's property, on which he might likewise have a favourable offer by way of a loan.

(8) E.g., the advance she might have obtained on her kethubah. As the woman's rights, however, had not been assailed by these witnesses, the estimated 'advance' is to be deducted from the actual amount due to her on the kethubah-settlement and the balance is the husband's award, apart from the threatened immediate loss of the usufruct.

(9) R. Papa does not allow the claim of the threatened loss of usufruct, of which these witnesses may plead they had no cognizance, and therefore, not having assailed this item, they are not liable on that account (Rashi).

(10) The zuz is a small silver coin corresponding to the Attic drachm and Roman denarius, worth about 9d.

even though [it might be argued that] at the time of its incidence the injunction: he shall not exact it of his neighbour¹ is inapplicable,² it does nevertheless become applicable, ultimately.³ R. Kahana⁴ referred him back [to the Mishnah]: THE ASSESSMENT IS MADE ON THE BASIS OF HOW MUCH ONE MIGHT BE WILLING TO GIVE FOR [THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN] HOLDING THE SUM OF ONE THOUSAND ZUZ TO BE REPAID IN THIRTY DAYS OR IN TEN YEARS HENCE. Now, if it were as you say that the Sabbatical year cancels the debt, then the zomemim ought to be made to pay even the whole capital? — Said Raba: The Mishnah might be dealing with the case of a loan against a pledge, or where the creditor deposited his bills at the Court, as we learnt: 'A loan against a pledge or one where the creditor had delivered the bill thereof to the court, is not cancelled⁵ [by the Sabbatical year].'

Some report this discussion thus: Rab Judah said that Samuel said that if one lends to his friend a sum of money for ten years, the Sabbatical year does not cancel the debt, and even though ultimately it becomes subject to the injunction, he shall not exact it of his neighbour, yet that injunction is inapplicable at the time of the incidence of the Sabbatical year. Said R. Kahana: We have learnt likewise: THE ASSESSMENT IS MADE ON THE BASIS OF HOW MUCH ONE MIGHT BE WILLING TO GIVE FOR HOLDING THE SUM OF ONE THOUSAND ZUZ TO BE REPAID IN THIRTY DAYS OR IN TEN YEARS HENCE. Now, if you would say that the Sabbatical year cancels the debt, then the zomemim should be made to pay even the whole capital? — Said Raba: [This argument is not conclusive, as] the Mishnah might deal with the case of a loan against a pledge, or, where the creditor deposited his bills at the Court.

This also Rab Judah said: Samuel said that if one says to his friend '[I lend you this money] on condition that the Sabbatical year shall not cancel the debt for me,' the Sabbatical year does cancel it.

Is it to say that Samuel considers this a stipulation that is in conflict with what is prescribed in the Torah, and [the rule is]: 'If one makes a stipulation which is in conflict with what is prescribed in the Torah,⁶ his stipulation is void'? But has it not been stated: If one said to his friend, '[I sell you this thing] on condition that you have no plaint of an unfair deal⁷ against me,' Rab says he has a plaint; and Samuel says he has no plaint of an unfair deal against him? — Yes, but behold on this very point R. 'Anan is stated to have said: I had it explained to me by [Mar]⁸ Samuel himself, that [if a person stipulate] 'on condition that you have no plaint of an unfair deal against me,' he has no plaint; but if he stipulate that no plaint of an unfair deal shall obtain in the deal, it does obtain. Exactly the same [distinction holds good in regard to the Sabbatical year; if he stipulate] 'on condition that you do not cancel the debt for me in the Sabbatical year', the Sabbatical year does not cancel it, but, 'on condition that the Sabbatical year does not cancel it,' the Sabbatical year does cancel it.

A Tanna taught: If a person lends his friend some money without specifying a date [for repayment] he may not demand it of him for thirty days at least.⁹ Rabbah b. Bar Hanah put forward a reasoned argument before Rab that this restraint could only be intended for a loan against a Shetar,¹⁰ because nobody would take trouble to execute a written instrument for less than thirty days; but in the case of a loan parol, the restriction did not apply. Said Rab to him: '[No!] thus said my Beloved [Uncle]:¹¹ It is the same whether one lends against a Shetar or parol'. It has likewise been taught: If one lends money to his friend without specifying a time [for repaying], he may not demand repayment for at least thirty days, no difference being made whether it be a loan against a Shetar or parol.

Samuel [once] said to R. Mattena: Don't squat down¹² before you give me an explanation of the origin of the oft-repeated dictum of our Teachers: If one lends money to his friend without specification [of date], he may not demand repayment for thirty days, at least, no difference being made whether it be parol or against a Shetar. He replied: It is written, [Beware that there be not a base thought in thy heart saying,] the seventh year, the year of release is at hand, [and thy eye be evil against thy poor brother].¹³ Now, from the import of the words 'the seventh year . . . is at hand', is it not obvious that it is the same as 'the year of release'? What instruction is then the year of release intended to convey? It is to tell you that there is yet another, a kindred form of release; which is it? — It is when one lends his friend some money without specifying a date [for repayment], in which case he may not demand repayment of him for thirty days, at least. [Why thirty days?] Because the Master has enunciated [in other matters] that thirty days prior to the incidence of the Sabbatical year, count as a year.¹⁴

Rab Judah also said the following: Rab said that if one forcibly enlarges the opening for the neck in a new garment on the Sabbath day, he is liable in a sin-offering. R. Kahana demurred to this view, asking what is the difference between this process [of enlarging the neck] and broaching a cask [which is admittedly permitted]? — [Rab Judah] said in reply that there is a rending of integral parts of the woven material in the case of the garment; whereas the stopper is not an integral part of the cask [but merely inserted]. Rab Judah also said: Rab said that if a kortob¹⁵ of wine fell into three logs¹⁵ of water, imparting a wine colour, and this [mixture] again fell into a mikweh,¹⁶ the mikweh is not thereby rendered ineffectual. R. Kahana demurred to this, asking: What is the difference between a mixture of wine and water and the dye-water about which we learnt: R. Jose says that dye-water renders the mikweh ineffectual?¹⁷ Said Raba to him: [There is a difference], as there, people call it 'dye-water', whereas here, they call it 'diluted wine'.

But yet, did not R. Hiyya teach: These spoil the efficacy of the mikweh?¹⁸ — Said Raba to him: There is no difficulty, as one [Rab] presents R. Johanan b. Nuri's view, while the other [R. Hiyya] presents the view of the Rabbis; as we learnt:¹⁹ If a kortob of wine fell into three logs of water

(16) Mikweh: a well, pool or reservoir used for ritual purification. Lev. XXII, 3-7. The water must not be contained in a vessel or filled by means of a vessel, but be naturally-gathered and in contact with the ground, Lev. XI, 36. The minimum requisite quantity for a mikweh is 40 se'ahs (or 960 logs), the amount considered necessary to allow the complete immersion of a person of average size. Once the mikweh has naturally attained the standard quantity of 40 se'ahs nothing, save reduction or discolouration, can then affect its efficacy. When under the required standard, the mikweh is ineffectual and the addition of three logs of 'vessel-drawn' water vitiates the whole entirely. The addition, however, of milk, wine, or other pure undiluted fruit-juice neither disqualifies the mikweh nor helps to bring it up to standard.

(18) That is, this quantity of wine and water fallen into a defective mikweh rendered the same totally useless; how could Rab, Hiyya's disciple, contradict his master?

(19) Mik. VII, 5, where, however, it should be noted, the reading in the first clause is 'three logs full', not as quoted in our Talmud texts, here, and Hul. 26a.

short of a kortob, imparting a wine colour, and then the whole fell into a [deficient] mikweh, the mikweh is not thereby rendered ineffectual. Likewise, if a kortob of milk fell into three logs of water short of a kortob, and then the whole fell into a [deficient] mikweh, the colour remaining that of water, the mikweh is not thereby rendered ineffectual. R. Johanan b. Nuri says that it all depends on the colour.¹ But, that is just the point on which R. Papa sought a solution.² For R. Papa asked whether Rab read in the first clause of the Mishnah 'three logs short of a kortob', and if so, then [a] the Tanna³ of that first clause [presumably] holds that [a kortob of wine which has fallen into full] 'three logs' of water would render the mikweh ineffectual, and consequently, [b] R. Johanan b. Nuri expressed his dissent, [namely] that it all depends on the colour⁴ [rather than on the measure of the liquid]. In that case, Rab [as reported above] adopted the view of R. Johanan b. Nuri. Or, alternatively, Rab did not read in the first clause of the Mishnah 'three logs short of a kortob', [but whole three logs]⁵ and consequently [a] R. Johanan b. Nuri's dissenting comment referred only to the last [milk] clause⁶ and therefore, [b] Rab [as reported] expressed a unanimous view?⁷ — This was doubtful only to R. Papa, whereas Raba was certain about it.⁸

R. Joseph remarked: [Though a disciple of Rab Judah,] I never heard from him that ‘reported topic’.⁹ Said Abaye to him: You told us about this very theme yourself and this is how you told it to us, that Rab did not read in the first clause of the Mishnah ‘short of a kortob’; that R. Johanan dissented only from the latter clause, and that Rab's statement expresses a unanimous view.

Rab Judah also said: Rab said that if a cask-full of water had fallen into the Great Sea [the Mediterranean] and someone immersed himself [ritually] on that spot, his immersion is of no avail to him, as we have some misgiving lest three logs are left in one spot [undistributed]. Now this applies particularly to the Great Sea where the water remains stationary, which is not the case generally in stream water. The same has been also taught: If a cask-full of wine had fallen into the Great Sea and someone immersed himself on that spot, his immersion is of no avail to him, as we have some misgiving lest [three logs of] the wine¹⁰ was left in one spot [undistributed]. And likewise if a *terumah*¹¹ — loaf fell there, it is defiled.

What is the purport of the clause ‘And likewise . . . ’? — You might argue that, as in the former instance, [when in doubt] you consider the person in status quo [i.e. defiled], you would do the same in the second instance and consider the terumah also in status quo [as holy]; the second clause, therefore, is essential, to inform you that the loaf is defiled.

MISHNAH. [IF WITNESSES DECLARE]: ‘WE TESTIFY THAT N. N. OWES HIS FRIEND TWO HUNDRED ZUZ’, AND THEY ARE FOUND ZOMEMIM, THEY ARE FLOGGED AND ORDERED TO PAY [CORRESPONDING DAMAGES], BECAUSE THE TITLE¹² WHICH SANCTIONS THE FLOGGING¹³ IS OTHER THAN THE TITLE THAT SANCTIONS THE COMPENSATION.¹⁴ THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. MEIR; BUT THE SAGES SAY THAT ONE WHO IS ORDERED TO PAY DAMAGES IS NOT FLOGGED.

[IF WITNESSES DECLARE:] ‘WE TESTIFY THAT N. N. IS LIABLE TO A FLOGGING¹⁵ OF FORTY LASHES, AND THEY ARE FOUND ZOMEMIM, THEY RECEIVE EIGHTY, FORTY ON THE COUNT OF ‘THOU SHALT NOT BEAR FALSE WITNESS AGAINST THY NEIGHBOUR,’¹⁶ AND FORTY ON THE COUNT OF THEN SHALL YE DO UNTO HIM AS HE PURPOSED TO DO UNTO HIS BROTHER’.¹⁷ THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. MEIR; BUT THE SAGES SAY THAT THEY RECEIVE ONLY FORTY LASHES.

GEMARA..

(1) That means, if the colour of the mixture (that has fallen in) was that of wine or milk, it is to be taken as wine or milk, without adverse effect on the mikweh even if it fell in to whole three logs of water; and Rab thus follows the principle of R. Johanan b. Nuri (v. supra note 2, end). Whether R. Johanan's observation refers to the last clause alone, or also to the first, is discussed immediately.

(2) As Rab, in his dictum, states that if a kortob of wine fell into three logs of water, imparting a wine colour, there is no adverse effect on a defective mikweh, the discussion arises as to what reading he followed, in his interpretative dictum.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 4b

The Rabbis’ view here is perfectly in order since, as it is written there, according to his misdeed,¹ can penalize him [once only], for a [single] ‘misdeed,’ but not [twice as] for two misdeeds. But as to R. Meir, what is his reason [for imposing two penalties for a single offence]? — ‘Ulla said that R. Meir inferred the principle [by analogy] from the case of the ‘Defaming husband’.² What do we find in the law of the ‘Defaming husband’? He is flogged and also made to pay compensation; the same should obtain in every case where the offender made himself liable to a flogging and compensation. [No!] This is no analogy, because what is that law of the ‘Defaming husband’? It is [essentially] a case of kenas!³ — [Admitted;] but R. Meir is of the same opinion as R. Akiba, that is that the punishment of zomemim is [likewise] one of kenas.⁴

Some introduce this Mishnah-comment of ‘Ulla in connection with that which has been taught: And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.⁵ Now Scripture came and provided here a [remedial] act to follow a [disregarded] prohibition;⁶ this [provision] is to convey that no flogging is inflicted for the transgression. These are the words of R. Judah. R. Jacob⁷ says: [No!] this interpretation is not relevant,⁸ as it is rather an instance of a prohibition contravened without action, and any prohibition contravened without action entails no flogging.⁹ Now, the general import of the above statement seems to imply that R. Judah is of [the] opinion that a prohibition contravened without Action does entail a flogging: whence does he obtain this principle? — ‘Ulla submitted that R. Judah derived it from the [law of the] Defaming husband. What do we find in [the case of] the Defaming husband? It is a prohibition¹⁰ contravened without action,¹¹ and yet the offender receives a flogging! [No, your conclusion falls short, as] what do we find in the law of the Defaming husband? He is flogged and also pays [one hundred shekels of silver], But, said Resh Lakish, R. Judah derived it from the [case of] zomemim. Now what do we find [in the case of] zomemim? — It is a prohibition contravened without action, and yet the offenders are flogged; the same obtains wherever there is a prohibition contravened without action. [But, can you argue that from the zomemim, as] what do we find in [the case of] zomemim? They need not be cautioned!¹² Then [I say] let the case of the Defaming husband¹³ enforce my argument. And thus the argument turns to and fro, the characteristics of one case not being quite those of the other; but they are alike in this, that they are cases of a Prohibition contravened without action, and [in each case] the offender is flogged; the same [I submit] obtains in all cases of a Prohibition contravened [even] without action — that the offender is flogged. [But yet, note] what is their common characteristic? They are both [cases of] kenas!¹⁴ — This presents no difficulty, as R. Judah does not take the same view as R. Akiba.¹⁵ But yet [the argument might be carried on], what they both have in common is that they have each some singular trait of severity.¹⁶ — R. Judah does not raise this point.¹⁷

[BUT THE SAGES SAY THAT THEY RECEIVE ONLY FORTY LASHES.] And what lesson do the Rabbis derive from the text, ‘Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour’? —

They must needs utilize it as the [statutory] admonition¹⁸ to zomemim. And where does R. Meir find that [requisite Scriptural] admonition? — Said R. Jeremiah that R. Meir found the same in the context, And those that remain shall hear and fear and shall henceforth commit no more such evil in the midst of thee.¹⁹ And why do not the Rabbis also adopt the same? — They apply it to another principle,

- (1) Deut. XXV, 2, as applied to zomemim. V, supra p. 4, text and notes.
- (2) V, Deut. XXII, 13-19, where it is directed to chastise him and ‘amerce him 100 shekels of silver’.
- (3) I.e., a punitive treatment which cannot be taken as a standard, and from which no deductions can be drawn.
- (4) I.e. they are both of a punitive type, and the argument from them by analogy is therefore in order; v. supra p. 7, n. 4.
- (5) I.e., of the roasted flesh of the paschal lamb, Ex. XII, 10.
- (6) Lit., a prohibition translated into a positive action’, לאו הניתק לעשה
- (7) Akiba is a corrupt reading.
- (8) Lit., ‘is not of the proper denomination or category,’ i.e. not correctly assigned, or conceived,
- (9) I.e. the offence was passive, without any bodily exertion, and therefore not punishable.
- (10) Derived from thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people (Lev. XIX, 16); according to another suggestion, from keep thee free from every wicked thing (Deut. XXIII, 10), v, Keth. 46a.
- (11) I.e., slander is not the same as actual assault. Speech was deemed intangible, as mere breath without direct bodily contact. Some, however, consider that the movement of the lips in speech constitutes action, cf. infra 16a.
- (12) Whereas in all cases entailing a flogging previous caution is absolutely essential, in this case it is not even possible; for, zomemim caught in fictitious evidence could not possibly have been so warned, and yet they are flogged, which shows that their treatment is exceptional and cannot, therefore, be used for fixing a standard rule.
- (13) Who is entitled to be cautioned and yet receives a flogging for an offence of intangible action.
- (14) V, supra, p. 16 note 6.
- (15) All agree that (the secondary instance) the Defaming husband, is a case of kenas (penal), as the fixed heavy fine of 200 shekels shows. But in regard to the primary instance of zomemim, the Sages, including R. Judah, differ from R. Akiba in considering the compensation pecuniary (mamon), not penal (kenas), as the amount is not a fixed sum, but assessed according to the damage threatened by their perfidy. V. B.K. 5a (Rashi, top), kenas = poena and mamon = multa.
- (16) I.e., zomemim are to be flogged, even though they had not been previously cautioned; the Defaming husband is not only flogged, but also has to pay a fine (100 shekels) and may not send away his wife (Deut. XXII, 19).
- (17) On logical grounds, as you cannot argue from dissimilarities. Cf. Tosaf. Keth. 32b s.v. שכן.
- (18) I.e., as an explicit primary statement that such an action is a sin, as ‘no punishment (עניש) can be inflicted without admonition (אזהרה)’. Cf. Mek. on Ex. XX, 13.
- (19) Deut. XIX, 20.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 5a

namely that of proclamation.¹

And whence does R. Meir derive that principle? — He obtains the principle of proclamation from the phrase [in the same passage], And those that remain shall hear and fear. MISHNAH. MONETARY IMPOSITIONS ARE SHARED AMONG THE OFFENDERS, BUT THE LASHES OF A FLOGGING ARE NOT SHARED AMONG THE OFFENDERS. HOW FOR INSTANCE? IF THEY GAVE EVIDENCE AGAINST A PERSON THAT HE OWED HIS FRIEND ONE HUNDRED ZUZ, AND THEY WERE FOUND ZOMEMIM, THEY DIVIDE THE CORRESPONDING DAMAGES PROPORTIONATELY BETWEEN THEM; BUT IF THEY GAVE EVIDENCE AGAINST HIM THAT HE WAS LIABLE TO A FLOGGING OF FORTY LASHES AND WERE FOUND ZOMEMIM, EACH ONE RECEIVES HIS FORTY LASHES.

GEMARA. [EACH ONE RECEIVES HIS FORTY LASHES.] What is the [Scriptural] warrant for this? — Said Abaye: The term rasha² occurs in the text prescribing a flogging,³ and also in the text prescribing the death penalty by order of the Court:⁴ just as the death-penalty cannot be effected in half-measure, so a flogging likewise, may not be effected in half-measure.⁵

Raba said: We require to fulfil the words, Then shall ye do unto him as he purposed to do unto his brother,⁶ and this would not be done [unless each zomem-witness receives his full due]. Then, if that be so, why should not the same obtain in regard to monetary imposition? Money can be unified into one total, whereas lashes cannot be so unified.

MISHNAH. WITNESSES ARE NOT CONDEMNED AS ZOMEMIM UNTIL THEY THEMSELVES ARE [DIRECTLY] INCRIMINATED⁷; HOW, FOR INSTANCE? IF THEY HAD DECLARED: 'WE TESTIFY THAT N.N. KILLED THAT PERSON'; AND OTHER WITNESSES SAID TO THEM: HOW COULD YOU TESTIFY TO THAT, AS THAT MURDERED PERSON OR THAT [ALLEGED] MURDERER WAS WITH US ON THAT VERY DAY, AT SUCH AND SUCH A PLACE?' [THEN] THE WITNESSES ARE NOT THEREON CONDEMNED AS ZOMEMIM. BUT, IF THESE [OTHER] WITNESSES SAID: HOW COULD YOU TESTIFY TO THAT, AS ON THAT VERY DAY, YOU WERE WITH US AT SUCH AND SUCH A [DISTANT] PLACE?' [THEN] THE FORMER ARE CONDEMNED AS ZOMEMIM. IF OTHER WITNESSES CAME, AND THEY CHARGED THEM [WITH PERFDY]: THEN [AGAIN] OTHERS CAME, AND THEY [AGAIN] CHARGED THEM⁸ [WITH PERFDY], EVEN TO A HUNDRED, THEY ARE ALL TO BE EXECUTED. R. JUDAH SAYS THAT THIS IS [SEEMINGLY] A CONSPIRACY⁹ AND THE FIRST SET ALONE IS [TO BE] EXECUTED.

GEMARA. What is the [Scriptural] warrant for this? — Said R. Adda.¹⁰ The text says, and behold, if the witness be a witness-of-falsehood etc.¹¹ [which conveys that he is not a zomem] until the lie is given to the body of the evidence.¹² In the School of R. Ishmael it was taught: to testify against him¹³ a wanton perversion [sarah],¹⁴ conveys [that he is] not [a zomem] until the body of the evidence is controverted. Raba¹⁵ stated that if two came and declared that N.N. had killed that person on the eastward side of the citadel, and two others came and said [to the former witnesses]: 'But were you not [then] with us at the westward side of the citadel?' we have to consider. If while standing on the westward side of the citadel, it is possible to see that [indicated] spot on the eastward side of the citadel, they are not condemned¹⁶ as zomemim; otherwise, they are [condemned] as zomemim. But that is quite obvious! — No; you might say that we [should not convict but] consider the possibility of [the first witnesses having] a stronger eye-sight. Therefore Raba informs us that we do not give such special consideration [to zomemim].

Raba also stated that if two came and declared that N.N. had killed so-and-so early on Sunday morning at Sura, and two other witnesses came and said, 'You were with us at sunset on Sunday evening at Nehardea', we have to consider. If one can get from Sura to Nehardea between the early morning and sunset,¹⁷ the first witnesses are not condemned as zomemim; otherwise, they are zomemim. But that is quite obvious! — No; you might say that we should consider the possibility of the 'Flying Camel'.¹⁸ Therefore Raba informs us that we do not give such special consideration [to zomemim].

Raba further stated that if two witnesses came and declared that N.N. had killed so-and-so on Sunday and two others came and said, 'But were you not with us on Sunday [elsewhere]? It was [in fact] on Monday that N.N. killed him;' or, furthermore, even if the latter witnesses declared that N.N. had [actually] killed the person on the [previous] Friday, the former witnesses are still executed as zomemim, inasmuch as Sunday, the time stated in their evidence [was disproved, and] the murderer had then not yet been [found guilty and sentenced to the death-penalty].¹⁹ What new information does he proffer here? — [That the murderer as well as the perfidious witnesses are ultimately executed!]²⁰ We have learnt [that] already: Consequently, if one of these [two sets of witnesses]²¹ has been found zomemim, both the criminal and the zomemim are executed, while the other set is let go?²² — Yes, but one must needs wait to hear the latter part of Raba's statement, in reference to evidence bearing on the time of the verdict, namely, if two came and declared that N. N. had been convicted [of murder] on Sunday, and two others then came and said to the first; 'You were with us [elsewhere] on Sunday, but N. N. was [in fact] convicted on Friday,' or furthermore, even if the latter said N. N. was [not] convicted [till] Monday, the former are not executed as zomemim, because by the time when the first witnesses gave their [fictitious] evidence,²³ the man charged had already been sentenced to death.

The same principle obtains in cases of kenas [fine].²⁴ If two came and said that N.N. had stolen and killed or sold [an animal] on Sunday, and two others came and said to the first, 'You were with us [elsewhere] on Sunday but, it was [in fact] on Monday that N.N. had stolen and killed or sold the animal,' [the first witnesses have to pay the fine];²⁵ nay, furthermore, even if the second witnesses said that N.N. had stolen and killed or sold [the animal] on the [previous] Friday, still the first witnesses have to pay, because at the time when they gave their evidence, N.N. had not yet been made liable²⁶ to pay [the fine that these perfidious fellows tried to fix on him].

If two came and declared that N.N. had stolen and killed or sold [an animal] and been convicted on Sunday, and then, two others came and said [to the witness], 'You were with us [elsewhere] on Sunday, but [in fact], N.N. had stolen and killed or sold [the animal] on Friday, when he was convicted;' nay, even if the second witnesses said that N.N. had [actually] stolen and killed or sold [the animal] on Sunday [or even on Monday],²⁷ but that he was not convicted [and fined] till Monday, the former witnesses have not to pay [the exactions], because, at the time when they were giving [their perfidious] evidence,²⁸ N.N. had already been made liable [to pay the fine] by a tribunal.

R. JUDAH SAYS THAT THIS IS [SEEMINGLY] A CONSPIRACY AND THE FIRST SET ALONE IS [TO BE] EXECUTED.

The alternative translation would then be: — If other witnesses came and charged them, then (again) other witnesses came and charged them (the last) even to a hundred . . .

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 5b

If it seems a conspiracy, even the first witnesses should not be executed? — Said R. Abbahu: [The plot was discovered only] after execution had already taken place. 'After execution had already taken place'! Then the thing is done [and there is nothing more to be said]?¹ But, said Raba, he [R. Judah] means this: if there was only one set, the witnesses are executed;² but if there be more than one set, they are not executed.³ But does not R. Judah say, THE FIRST SET ALONE IS EXECUTED, [implying that there are more]? This is rather a difficult point. There was a certain woman who brought [her] witnesses and they were discredited; she brought others, and they [too] were discredited;⁴ she went and brought further witnesses [who were not discredited]. Said Resh Lakish: This woman is suspect.⁵ Said R. Eleazar to him: 'Assuming she is suspect, are all Israel to be held as suspects?' Once as they were both present at the sessions of R. Johanan, there came such a suit before them and Resh Lakish observed: 'This woman is suspect.' Thereupon R. Johanan replied to him: 'If she is suspect, are all Israel to be held as suspects?' Resh Lakish then turned round and looked askance at R. Eleazar, saying: 'So you had heard this from [Johanan] bar-Nappaha and did not tell it to me in his name!'⁶

Is it to be suggested that Resh Lakish sides here with R. Judah [in the Mishnah], while R. Johanan sides with the Rabbis — [Not necessarily, as] Resh Lakish might say: I do hold the view of the Sages,⁷ but they allow such latitude only because there we have no one running about for his witnesses, whereas here we have this one woman running about and fetching them along.⁸ And R. Johanan, likewise, might say: My view [in this instance] is in accord even with that of R. Judah, and the reason of his reservation there is only because people ask [in surprise], 'Was the whole world standing there with them?'⁹ Whereas in this case [of the woman, obviously], those who came last happened to have knowledge of the [facts in] question, and the former had not. MISHNAH. WITNESSES ARE NOT TO BE PUT TO DEATH AS ATTESTED ZOMEMIM UNTIL [AFTER] THE TERMINATION OF THE TRIAL;¹⁰ BECAUSE THE SADDUCEES CONTENDED THAT ZOMEMIM WERE PUT TO DEATH ONLY AFTER THE ACCUSED HAD [ACTUALLY] BEEN EXECUTED, PURSUANT TO THE SCRIPTURAL TEXT, 'LIFE FOR LIFE'.¹¹ SAID THE [PHARISEE] SAGES TO THEM: BUT DOES NOT THE CONTEXT READ: THEN SHALL YE DO UNTO HIM AS HE PURPOSED TO DO UNTO HIS BROTHER,¹² WHICH CLEARLY IMPLIES WHEN HIS BROTHER IS STILL ALIVE? IF SO, WHAT IS THE PURPORT OF LIFE FOR LIFE'? YOU MIGHT ARGUE THAT ZOMEMIM ARE LIABLE TO BE PUT TO DEATH FROM THE MOMENT THEIR [PERFIDIOUS] EVIDENCE HAD BEEN TAKEN, THEREFORE THE WORDS 'LIFE FOR LIFE' ARE A POINTED INSTRUCTION THAT ZOMEMIM ARE NOT TO BE PUT TO DEATH UNTIL [AFTER] THE TERMINATION OF THE TRIAL.

GEMARA. It is taught: An eminent discipl¹³ put the principle of [the Mishnah] in this [paradoxical] form: If they have not slain, they are slain; and if they have slain, they are not slain.¹⁴ My son, said the father [or Principal],¹⁵ is there not an argument a fortiori¹⁶ against your rule? Our Master [replied the disciple], have you not taught us: No Penalty is inflicted on the strength of a logical inference?¹⁷ For it has been taught: And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter or his mother's daughter . . . it is a shameful thing, and they shall be cut off¹⁸ . . . Here we have it specified, his father's daughter [who is] not his mother's, and, his mother's daughter [who is] not his father's. On what [Scriptural] authority is the same penalty extended to one who is both, his father's as well as his mother's daughter? It is indicated explicitly in the additional instructive words, He hath uncovered his sister's nakedness,' he shall bear his iniquity.¹⁸ Now, even without [having recourse to] this textual addition I could have inferred it, since, if punishment is decreed in the case of [a half-sister] 'his father's daughter' not his mother's, or 'his mother's daughter' not his father's, is it not all the more evident in the case of [a full sister] the daughter of both his father and his mother? Here, therefore, you learn the rule: No penalty is inflicted on the strength of a logical inference.¹⁹

We have established the principle relative to a penalty; where do we find it in reference to admonition?²⁰ — In the instructive text, The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or the daughter of thy mother thou shalt not uncover.²¹ Here we have specified, 'his father's daughter', not his mother's, and 'his mother's daughter', not his father's. On what [Scriptural] authority is the same prohibition extended to one who is both, his father's as well as his mother's daughter? It is indicated explicitly in the additional instructive words, the nakedness of thy father's wife's daughter begotten of thy father, she is thy sister.²² Now even without this textual addition I could have inferred it, since, if a man is admonished about [his half-sister] 'his mother's daughter', not his father's, and 'his father's daughter', not his mother's, is it not all the more applicable to [his full sister] the daughter of both of his father and mother? Here, therefore, we learn the rule: An admonition inferred by argument is not warranted.²³

And what is the [corresponding] Scriptural reference relating to a [retaliatory] flogging of zomemim?²⁴ — It is obtained [by the linking of the law of flogging²⁵ with the law of murder]²⁶ by the term rasha' [guilty] which they both have in common.²⁷ And what is the reference for such as are liable to banishment? — It is [likewise] obtained [by the linking of the law of banishment²⁸ with the law of murder,]²⁶ by the term rozeah [murderer] which they both have in common.²⁷

It has been taught: R. Judah b. Tabbai said: 'May I [never] see consolation [of Israel] if I did not have one zomemim-witness done to death to disabuse the mind of the Sadducees, who used to say that zomemim [found guilty] were put to death only after the [falsely] accused person had [actually] been executed.' Said Simeon b. Shetah to him: 'May I [never] see consolation [of Israel] if you have not shed innocent blood because the Sages declared that witnesses found to be zomemim are not put to death until both have been proved as such, and are not [juridically] flogged until both have been proved as such.' Forthwith did Judah b. Tabbai take upon himself a resolve never to deliver a decision save in the presence of Simeon b. Shetah.²⁹ And all through his [remaining] days, Judah b. Tabbai used to go and prostrate himself on the grave of that [slain] witness, and his voice would be heard and people thought that it was the voice of the slain man; but he would tell them, 'It is my voice! You will be convinced when on the morrow of this man's [his own] death his voice will be heard no more'.

Said R. Aha, the son of Raba, to R. Ashi: He might perhaps have answered the summons of the deceased, or else he might have obtained his forgiveness.³⁰

MISHNAH. [IT IS PRESCRIBED:] AT THE MOUTH OF TWO WITNESSES OR THREE WITNESSES SHALL HE THAT IS TO DIE BE PUT TO DEATH.³¹ IF THE FACT IS SUFFICIENTLY ESTABLISHED BY TWO WITNESSES, WHEREFORE DOES HOLY WRIT [FURTHER] SPECIFY THREE? — THIS IS ONLY TO SHOW THEIR COMPARATIVE COMPETENCY, THAT JUST AS THREE ARE COMPETENT TO INCRIMINATE TWO AS ZOMEMIM, SO ARE TWO COMPETENT TO INCRIMINATE THREE. HOW DO WE KNOW THAT [TWO OR THREE] CAN EVEN INCRIMINATE A HUNDRED? FROM THE INSTRUCTIVE CONTEXT WHICH HAS [TWICE] 'WITNESSES'.³² R. SIMEON SAYS THAT JUST AS TWO WITNESSES ARE NOT PUT TO DEATH AS ZOMEMIM UNTIL BOTH HAVE BEEN INCRIMINATED, SO THREE ARE NOT PUT TO DEATH UNTIL ALL THREE HAVE BEEN INCRIMINATED AS ZOMEMIM. HOW DO WE KNOW THAT THIS ALSO APPLIES EVEN IN THE CASE OF A HUNDRED? — FROM THE INSTRUCTIVE CONTEXT WHICH HAS [THRICE] 'WITNESSES'³³. R. AKIBA OBSERVES THAT THE THIRD WITNESS WAS SUPERADDED HERE [NOT TO MAKE HIS RESPONSIBILITY THE LIGHTER],³⁴ BUT TO RENDER IT AS SERIOUS FOR HIM AND MAKE HIS LEGAL LIABILITY EQUAL TO THAT OF THE OTHERS.³⁵ NOW, IF HOLY WRIT THUS PENALISES ONE WHO CONSORTS WITH MALEFACTORS, AS ONE OF THE MALEFACTORS, HOW MUCH MORE SHALL HE WHO CONSORTS WITH BENEFACTORS RECEIVE A REWARD AS ONE OF THE BENEFACTORS! [AGAIN,] AS IN THE CASE OF TWO WITNESSES, IF ONE OF THEM WAS FOUND TO BE A NEAR KINSMAN³⁶ OR [OTHERWISE] DISQUALIFIED,³⁷ THE WHOLE EVIDENCE IS RENDERED VOID, SO IS IT WITH THREE: IF ONE OF THEM WAS FOUND TO BE A NEAR KINSMAN OR [OTHERWISE] DISQUALIFIED, THE WHOLE EVIDENCE IS VOID. HOW DO WE KNOW THAT THIS IS THE CASE EVEN WITH A HUNDRED? FROM THE INSTRUCTIVE CONTEXT WHICH HAS [THRICE] 'WITNESSES'.

(12) Ibid. 19. It appears that the words stressed here are 'to do (or, to be done) unto his brother', i.e. as when yet to be done. Rashi (in Deut, a, l. and Mak, 2b, top) stresses 'as he purposed to do,' but has not yet done it. Cf. Chajes notes on 5b and Meklenburg (longer commentary) on Deut, a, l. The fact that the judges were themselves involved with the zomemim in the unfortunate miscarriage of justice may be the reason for letting them off post eventum, since the zomemim, as the witnesses, were compelled by the judges' decision to lay hands on their victim, Cf. also Friedmann's instructive note Sifre, Num, XXXV.  160 n. 6 (p. 61a), and Hoffmann's מלמד להועיל, III, 142.

(24) The zomem-penalties as prescribed in Deut. XIX, 21, and thine eye shall not pity (the zomem); life (shall go) for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, apply only in cases of the death penalty and (penal compensation) for imputed bodily injuries. Scriptural authority is now sought for the remaining forms of retaliatory punishments, namely, flogging and banishment, (cf. the first Mishnah, 2a), which, like the death penalty, are incurred only after a court sentence (on fictitious evidence) had been enforced.

(30) R. Aha argues that the fact that no voice would be heard after Judah's death would be no proof that it was not the slain man calling, as it is likely that Judah would, on death, have appeared before the Heavenly Tribunal with the deceased or obtained pardon from the wronged man, and this silenced his voice calling from the grave.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 6a

SAID R. JOSE: THESE AFOREMENTIONED LIMITATIONS APPLY ONLY TO WITNESSES IN CAPITAL CHARGES;¹ BUT IN MONETARY SUITS, THE EVIDENCE MAY BE ESTABLISHED BY THE REST.² RABBI³ SAYS: IT IS ONE AND THE SAME RULE, BE IT IN MONETARY SUITS OR CAPITAL CHARGES; THAT IS, PROVIDED THE DISQUALIFIED WITNESSES TOOK PART IN THE PRE-ADMONITION.⁴ BUT WHERE THEY WERE NOT OF THOSE WHO GAVE THE PRE-ADMONITION [TO THE OFFENDERS], WHAT COULD TWO BROTHERS DO THAT SAW⁵ SOMEONE SLAYING A PERSON?

GEMARA. [EVEN TWO OR THREE CAN INCRIMINATE A HUNDRED.] Said Raba: And such[an incrimination by two against a hundred witnesses] could be sustained only where they all had given their evidence in 'un-intermittent utterance'. R. Aha of Difti remarked to Rabina: Seeing that 'un-intermittent utterance' is generally defined as the brief interval which a disciple would take in uttering the salutation, Peace Upon Thee, my Master and Guide! — the evidence of a hundred witnesses will take a great deal more time than that! Said Rabina: [What is meant is that] each one follows the other un-intermittently [which renders the whole as one undivided group].

R. AKIBA OBSERVES THAT THE THIRD WITNESS WAS SUPERADDED... SO IT IS WITH THREE; IF ONE OF THEM WAS FOUND TO BE A KINSMAN . . . THEIR EVIDENCE IS DISQUALIFIED. R. Papa observed to Abaye: But, then, [admitting such extreme pretexts against capital punishment] let the very presence of the murdered man himself⁶ [at the murder] save [the delinquent from the 'death penalty']?⁷ — [Said Abaye: The penalty can be inflicted in case] he was attacked from behind.⁸ Let the presence of the victim in a case of sodomy save the delinquent from the death penalty? — [The penalty can be inflicted where] the assault was from behind. Then why not let the presence of the criminal⁹ [in each of these cases] be made a pretext for disqualifying the evidence? Abaye remained silent. When R. Papa came [with these questions] before Raba, the latter replied: The Holy Writ prescribes, at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses shall the matter be established;¹⁰ the text¹¹ thus refers only to those who have to establish the matter.¹²

SAID R. JOSE: THESE LIMITATIONS APPLY ONLY. .. IN CAPITAL CHARGES ... RABBI SAYS. .. BE IT IN MONETARY SUITS OR CAPITAL CHARGES, PROVIDED THE WITNESSES DISQUALIFIED WITNESSES TOOK PART IN THE PRE-ADMONITION How do we [the Judges] put it to the witnesses? — Said Raba: [We ask them] whether they had come¹³ as mere onlookers, or to give evidence. If they say to give evidence, and one is found to be a near kinsman, or disqualified person, the entire evidence is disqualified, but if they say they had come as mere onlookers [the evidence is allowed to stand].

WHAT COULD TWO BROTHERS DO THAT SAW SOMEONE SLAYING A PERSON? It is stated: Rab Judah reported [his Master] Samuel to have said that the halachah¹⁴ was to follow the view of R. Jose¹⁵ while R. Nahman said that the halachah was to follow the view of Rabbi.¹⁶

(6) Since he is an interested party in the case, and a witness of the crime, while being his own nearest kinsman! All this is sheer casuistry; yet these conundrums lead to the examination of the legal principles involved.

(7) This, however, would make the death penalty impossible of practical application.

- (14) I.e., the rule in practice.
- (15) That the association of disqualified witnesses does not vitiate the whole evidence in monetary suits.
- (16) I.e., that even in monetary suits if they came to give evidence, ab initio, they disqualify the whole evidence, i.e. in verbal evidence; it is not so strictly enforced in some documentary evidence. Cf. Han. and Alfasi.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 6b

MISHNAH. IF TWO PERSONS SEE THE MALEFACTOR FROM ONE WINDOW AND TWO OTHER PERSONS SEE HIM FROM ANOTHER WINDOW AND ONE STANDING MIDWAY UTTERS THE PRE-ADMONITION TO HIM, THEN, IF SOME ON ONE SIDE AND SOME ON THE OTHER SIDE CAN SEE ONE ANOTHER,¹ THEY CONSTITUTE TOGETHER ONE BODY OF EVIDENCE, BUT IF THEY CANNOT [PARTLY SEE ONE ANOTHER], THEY ARE TWO BODIES OF EVIDENCE. CONSEQUENTLY, IF ONE OF THESE [BODIES] IS FOUND ZOMEMIM, BOTH HE AND THEY² ARE PUT TO DEATH, WHILE THE PARTY THAT CAME SECOND IS DISCHARGED. R. JOSE OBSERVES THAT A MALEFACTOR IS NEVER PUT TO DEATH UNLESS TWO WITNESSES HAD DULY PRE-ADMONISHED HIM, AS HOLY WRIT PRESCRIBES, AT THE MOUTH OF TWO WITNESSES OR THREE WITNESSES SHALL HE THAT IS WORTHY OF DEATH BE PUT TO DEATH; BUT AT THE MOUTH OF ONE WITNESS HE SHALL NOT BE PUT TO DEATH.³ ANOTHER INTERPRETATION OF THE WORDS, AT THE MOUTH OF TWO WITNESSES . . . IS THAT THE SANHEDRIN SHALL NOT HEAR THE EVIDENCE FROM THE MOUTH OF AN INTERPRETER.

GEMARA. R. Zutra b. Tobiah reported that Rab said: How can it be shown that ‘disjoined’ testimony⁴ is disqualified? Because, Holy Writ prescribes that at the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death.³ Now, what is [the import of this special admonition here against] one witness? If it be taken literally as one sole witness, is not this already implied in the earlier context, at the mouth of two witnesses or three witnesses shall he that is worthy of death be put to death? What, then, is the meaning of one witness? One by one.⁵ The same is also taught, thus: Holy Writ prescribes [especially], at the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death to cover instances where two persons see the malefactor, one from a window here and the other from a window there, without, however, seeing each other, [in which case] such evidence cannot be conjoined. Nay, furthermore, even if they both witnessed the offence from the same window, first one and then the other, their testimony cannot be conjoined.

R. Papa remarked to Abaye: Now, if, [in the first instance above,] where one saw the offence from one window and another from another window [simultaneously], one having witnessed the whole act and the other having witnessed the whole act, you say that such testimony cannot be conjoined; is there any occasion at all to give [the second instance], where two witnesses saw the act [albeit from the same window], only consecutively, and where consequently this one only saw but half the act, and the other but half the act? — Abaye replied: The second might seem unnecessary, but for such an instance as incest.⁶

Raba said: If they both saw the admonitor, or he saw them both, they can be conjoined in the testimony as a whole, Raba further said in reference to the requisite admonition, that if it was uttered even by the victim himself, or even if it came from some [invisible] demon⁷ [it was sufficient].

R. Nahman⁸ stated that in monetary suits ‘disjoined’ testimony is admissible, since Holy Writ prescribes, ‘by the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death’. It is only in a capital charge that ‘disjoined’ testimony is inadmissible; but in monetary suits it is admissible. R. Zutra⁹ demurred to this [and argued,] if so, why not put this forward as a plea for ‘deliverance’¹⁰ [in a capital charge]? Why, then, does the Mishnah state that BOTH HE [THE ACCUSED] AND THEY [THE ZOMEMIM] ARE PUT TO DEATH?¹¹ — This is a difficult point.

R. JOSE¹² OBSERVES THAT A MALEFACTOR IS NEVER PUT TO DEATH UNLESS TWO WITNESSES HAD DULY PRE-ADMONISHED HIM . . . Said R. Papa to Abaye: Is this really R. Jose's view? Do we not learn: R. Jose says, An [avowed] enemy is executed, because he is, as it were, attested and already pre-admonished?¹³ — To this Abaye replied that the authority of that cited Mishnah was R. Jose b. Judah, as it is taught [explicitly elsewhere]: R. Jose b. Judah says, a scholar¹⁴ needs no pre-admonition, because pre-admonition was introduced only as a means for discriminating between the inadvertent and deliberate offender.

ANOTHER INTERPRETATION OF THE WORDS, AT THE MOUTH OF TWO WITNESSES.....IS THAT THE SANHEDRIN SHALL NOT HEAR THE EVIDENCE FROM THE MOUTH OF AN INTERPRETER. Certain foreigners came [with a suit] before Raba and he appointed an interpreter. How could he do that? Do we not learn that THE SANHEDRIN SHALL NOT HEAR THE EVIDENCE FROM THE MOUTH OF AN INTERPRETER? — Raba understood well enough what they said, only he did not know how to reply.

(10) Seeing that it is the duty of ‘the Congregation’ (the Judges of the High Court) to deliver, that is, to avoid capital punishment on any and every pretext, then why not advance this argument: just as you stressed the verse, by . . . one witness he shall not be put to death, to mean, not a fit witness to effect a capital sentence, yet fit enough among others in a monetary suit; you might just as well stress it to mean, not fit to effect a capital sentence, yet fit enough to effect a deliverance (discharge) on the ground that, as a witness of ‘disjoined’ evidence (disqualified in a capital charge), he disqualifies by his presence all the other witnesses.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 7a

Elai and Tobiah were near kinsmen to a surety, and R. Papa maintained that [their evidence was admissible, as] they were strangers to the debtor and the creditor; but R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua, pointed out to R. Papa that if the debtor were unavailable,¹ would not the creditor come down on the surety?² MISHNAH. IF ONE FLED AFTER HAVING BEEN CONVICTED AT A COURT AND AGAIN COMES UP BEFORE THE SAME COURT, THE [FIRST] JUDGMENT IS NOT SET ASIDE.³ WHEREVER TWO WITNESSES STAND UP AND DECLARE, ‘WE TESTIFY THAT N. N. WAS TRIED AND CONVICTED AT THE COURT OF X⁴ AND THAT Y AND Z WERE

THE WITNESSES IN THE CASE,' THE ACCUSED IS EXECUTED. A SANHEDRIN⁵ HAS JURISDICTION WITHIN THE LAND [OF PALESTINE] AND OUTSIDE IT. A SANHEDRIN THAT EFFECTS AN EXECUTION ONCE IN SEVEN YEARS, IS BRANDED A DESTRUCTIVE TRIBUNAL; R. ELIEZER B. AZARIAH SAYS: ONCE IN SEVENTY YEARS. R. TARFON AND R. AKIBA SAY: WERE WE MEMBERS OF A SANHEDRIN, NO PERSON WOULD EVER BE PUT TO DEATH. [THEREUPON] RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL REMARKED, [YEA] AND THEY WOULD ALSO MULTIPLY SHEDDERS OF BLOOD IN ISRAEL!

GEMARA. [IF ONE FLED . . . AND AGAIN COMES UP BEFORE THE SAME COURT . . .] This wording implies [that the first judgment] is not to be set aside in the same Court, but may be set aside In another Court, whereas in the next clause we read: WHEREVER TWO WITNESSES STAND UP AND DECLARE, 'WE TESTIFY THAT THIS MAN WAS TRIED AND CONVICTED AT THE COURT OF X AND THAT Y AND Z WERE THE WITNESSES IN THE CASE' THE ACCUSED IS EXECUTED [which conveys a contrary impression]! — Said Abaye: That presents no difficulty; [there are two domains in regard to Court decisions], one has reference to a Palestinian Court, the other to an extra-Palestinian Court, as it is taught: R. Judah b. Dosithai says [in the name of R. Simeon b. Shetah] that if a fugitive from Palestine went abroad, his sentence is not set aside; from abroad to Palestine, his sentence is set aside, on account of Palestine's prerogative.⁶

A SANHEDRIN HAS JURISDICTION WITHIN THE LAND . . . AND OUTSIDE IT.

What [Scriptural] authority is there for this? — Our Rabbis taught: [From the text,] And these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you throughout your generations in all your dwellings,⁷ we learn that a Sanhedrin has jurisdiction both in and outside Palestine. If that be so, what is the import of [the limitation in] the text, Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates which the Lord thy God giveth thee tribe by tribe?⁸ — [It means that] in your [own] gates you set up tribunals in every district as well as in every city, whereas outside the Land [of Palestine], you set up tribunals only in every district but not in every city.⁹

A SANHEDRIN THAT EFFECTS AN EXECUTION ONCE IN SEVEN YEARS IS BRANDED A DESTRUCTIVE TRIBUNAL; R. ELIEZER B. AZARIAH SAYS, ONCE IN SEVENTY YEARS. The question was raised whether the comment [of R. Eliezer b. Azariah was a censure, namely] that even one death-sentence in seventy years branded the Sanhedrin as a destructive tribunal, or [a mere observation] that it ordinarily happened but once in seventy years? — It stands [undecided].

R. TARFON AND R. AKIBA SAY, WERE WE MEMBERS OF A SANHEDRIN, NO PERSON WOULD EVER BE PUT TO DEATH. How could they [being judges] give effect to that [policy]? Both R. Johanan and R. Eleazar suggested that the witnesses might be plied with [intimate] questions such as, 'Did you take note whether the victim was [perchance] suffering from some fatal affection or was he perfectly healthy?' R. Ashi [enlarging on this] said: And should the reply be, 'Perfectly healthy', they might further be embarrassed by asking, 'Maybe the sword only severed an internal lesion?'¹⁰

And what would be asked, say, in a charge of incest? — Both Abaye and Raba suggested asking the witnesses whether they had seen the offenders as intimate as 'kohl-flask and probe'?¹¹

Now [with regard to] the Rabbis,¹² what kind of evidence [in such a charge] would they deem sufficient to convict? — According to Samuel's maxim; for Samuel said that being caught in the attitude of the unchaste is sufficient evidence.

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING GO INTO BANISHMENT: HE WHO SLAYS IN ERROR,¹³ IF [FOR INSTANCE] WHILE HE WAS PUSHING A ROLLER¹⁴ [ON THE ROOF] IT [SLIPPED OVER]. FELL DOWN AND KILLED SOMEBODY, OR WHILE HE WAS LOWERING A CASK IT FELL DOWN AND KILLED SOMEBODY, OR, WHILE COMING DOWN A LADDER HE FELL ON SOMEBODY AND KILLED HIM, HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT. BUT, IF WHILE HE WAS PULLING UP THE ROLLER IT FELL BACK ON SOMEONE KILLING HIM, OR WHILE HE WAS RAISING A BUCKET THE ROPE SNAPPED AND THE BUCKET KILLED SOMEBODY IN ITS FALL, Jannai) says that fugitives who had been convicted to death, having fled from Palestine abroad, are put to death forthwith; and those who fled to Palestine from abroad are not put to death (forthwith), but are sent to trial as in the first instance.' 'Dos, b. Judah' seems the better reading; also the bracketed part is missing in many good MSS.

 - (10) The juridical point involved in asking such intimate questions is this: that if the witnesses could not be absolutely certain on any material point in the evidence, they could not be expected to take a lead in the actual execution of the offender, as required by law. (Deut. XVII, 6-7.) Thus capital punishment fails.
 - (11) A euphemism for carnal intimacy.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 7b

OR WHILE GOING UP A LADDER HE FELL DOWN AND KILLED SOMEBODY, HE DOES NOT GO INTO BANISHMENT. THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: WHENEVER THE DEATH WAS CAUSED IN THE COURSE OF A DOWNWARD MOVEMENT, HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT, BUT IF IT IS CAUSED NOT IN THE COURSE OF A DOWNWARD MOVEMENT, HE DOES NOT GO INTO BANISHMENT.

GEMARA. What is the [Scriptural] authority for these [distinctions]? — Said Samuel: It is prescribed, or . . . he let it fall upon him so that he died,¹ [meaning that one has not to go into banishment] until something fell in a downward movement.

Our Rabbis taught: [That killeth any person] by error,² precludes anyone that killed with full knowledge; [whoso killeth . . .] unawares,³ precludes anyone that killed with intent. 'By error...precludes anyone that killed with full knowledge'. — Is that not obvious [without 'stressing the text]? Such a one is 'the son of Death'! — Said Rabbah: I would suggest that it is to preclude a case where one pleads that he thought he was permitted to kill [that person]. Said Abaye to Rabbah: If [as you suggest], he thought that he had a right to kill, then [surely], he is a victim of mischance!

— [No], replied Rabbah, because I consider anyone pleading that he thought it permissible [to kill] closely akin to a wilful [murderer]. ‘Whoso killeth . . . unawares . . . precludes anyone that killed with intent’ — Is not that obvious? Such a one is ‘the son of Death’! — Said Rabbah: I would suggest that it is to meet such cases as when he intended to kill an animal, but killed a man;⁴ to kill a heathen,⁵ but killed an Israelite; to kill a premature-born,⁶ but killed a fully-developed infant.

Our Rabbis taught: if . . . suddenly,⁷ precludes [from refuge] anyone [killing through rushing precipitately] round a corner;⁸ without enmity, precludes an adversary; he thrusts him, means with his body;⁹ or have cast upon him, includes [an accident resulting from] a downward motion as a prerequisite of an upward swing; without laying of wait,¹⁰ precludes an intended throw in one direction which swerved to another. And if a man lie not in wait,¹¹ precludes anyone who intended to throw an object a distance of two ells, but made it go four ells. And as a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour,¹² [provides here a standard. For] what is the nature of this forest? It is a domain affording [free] access to the injured as well as to the injurer.¹³ In like manner every place [of injury] must be a domain of free access to the injured as to the injurer [to involve liability for injury].

R. Abbahu asked R. Johanan: If while a person is going up a ladder, a rung giving way under him comes down and kills somebody, how would this be taken? Was the death to be considered [a result] of an upward or a downward movement?¹⁴ — He replied: You have indeed laid your finger on [an accident resulting from] a downward motion as a prerequisite of an upward movement. To this R. Abbahu objected [from the Mishnah]: THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: WHENEVER THE DEATH WAS CAUSED IN THE COURSE OF A DOWNWARD MOVEMENT, HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT, BUT IF [CAUSED] NOT IN THE COURSE OF A DOWNWARD MOVEMENT, HE DOES NOT GO INTO BANISHMENT. Now, [what kind of case would be included in the general] terms of the latter principle — BUT IF [CAUSED] NOT IN THE COURSE OF A DOWNWARD MOVEMENT . . . if not an instance of this kind? — [R. Johanan replied:] Following your opinion, what instance would you include in the general terms of the first principle — WHENEVER. . . IN THE COURSE OF A DOWNWARD MOVEMENT . . . ? [You could give] but one, namely, that of a butcher; and that instance is also within the terms of the latter principle, as it is taught: If a butcher whilst chopping meat killed somebody [there are four different versions of the case]. Version A¹⁵ has it: If he killed a person in front of him, he is liable to go into banishment; if behind, he is exempt. Version B: If behind him, he is to go into banishment; if in front, he is exempt. Version C: Whether in front of him or behind, he is to go into banishment. Version D: Whether in front of him or behind, he is exempt. And [continued R. Johanan], it is really not difficult [to explain these diversities], thus: In Version A: If he killed in front by a downward stroke [he goes into banishment]; if behind him by an upward swing [of the chopper], he is exempt.¹⁶ In Version B: If he killed in front of him by the upward swing [he is exempt]; if behind him, by the downward [back] movement [he goes into banishment].¹⁷ In Version C: If he killed either in front or behind him by the downward movement [he goes into banishment]; and in Version D.’ If he killed either in front or behind him by the upward swing [he is exempt].¹⁸

May we say that this question has already been disputed by Tannaim: If while a person is going up a ladder and a rung gave way under him . . . Version A has it that he is liable, and Version B that he is exempt? Is not the point at issue between them this, that one Master considers it a downward movement, and the other an upward movement? — Not necessarily; it may be that all agree in considering it an upward movement, and yet it is not difficult [to explain the discrepancy]: Version A refers to his liability in damages,¹⁹ Version B, to his liability of banishment. And, if you prefer, I might even suggest that both versions refer to banishment,²⁰ and it is not difficult [to find an explanation]: Version A refers to a case where the rung was worm-eaten,²¹ while Version B to where it was not worm-eaten. Nay, if you prefer, I might even suggest that it was not worm-eaten, and still it is not difficult [to explain]: Version B refers to a case where the rung was fixed tightly, while Version A refers to where it was not fixed tightly.²¹ MISHNAH. IF THE IRON SLIPPED FROM

ITS HELVE²² AND KILLED [SOMEBODY], RABBI SAYS HE DOES NOT GO INTO BANISHMENT AND THE SAGES SAY HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT; IF FROM THE SPLIT LOG,²³ RABBI SAYS HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT, AND THE SAGES SAY HE DOES NOT GO INTO BANISHMENT.

GEMARA. It is taught: Rabbi said to the Sages: Does the text read, and the iron slippeth from its tree [wood]?²⁴ It reads only, from the tree. Moreover,²⁵ the tree occurs twice in the same text, and just as in the first instance²⁶ the reference is to the tree that is being hewn, so is the reference in the second instance²⁷ to the tree that is being hewn.

R. Hiyya b. Ashi²⁸ observed that Rab had said that both sides based their views on a different interpretation of the same text, namely, and the iron slippeth from the tree;²⁴ Rabbi maintains that the Masorah [the traditional text unvocalized],²⁹ is determinant [in Biblical exposition] and we may as well read the word as ve-nishshal [and . . . was hurled away],³⁰ and the Rabbis, on the other hand, maintain that Mikra [the text as habitually read] is determinant³¹ [in exposition] and here we have but ve-nashal³² [and . . . slipped].

But does Rabbi actually maintain that the Masorah is determinant [in exposition]?

 - (19) Man is 'constantly forewarned' and liable to pay damages in all circumstances, whether the injury or damage was caused by him through inadvertence or culpable negligence; man is held 'constantly forewarned' — v. B.K. 26a.
 - (20) Maim. seems to have read here 'damages'. Cf. Maggid Mishneh on Yad, Hobel, VI, 4.
 - (21) Easily giving way under the tread until it breaks and falls, which is a downward motion all the time, and therefore entailing banishment.
 - (22) According to Rabbi, it slipped before it struck the log; having neglected to examine his tool before using it, he does not go into banishment, i.e., he is not to be given the benefit of asylum (but must evade the avenger as best he can; V. Maim. Yad Rozeah, VI, 4).
 - (23) I.e., if the axe rebounded from the log and killed, or if a chip from the log flew out and killed, he needs, according to the Rabbis, no atonement in exile (v. Maim, ibid. VI, 3), as it is a secondary force (v. Gemara) with no element of neglect in this strange unforeseen accident (Han. Cf. Rashi and Jer. Targum Deut., a.l.).

(24) Deut. XIX, 5. (As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew trees and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree and the iron slippeth from the tree . . . he shall flee . . . From its tree (lit., 'wood') might mean from its helve, but from the tree is open to another interpretation, namely, a rebound from the tree.

(25) He seeks support in the text for his contention that the term 'the tree' cannot refer to two different objects, when mentioned in the same context.

(26) . To hew trees,' lit., 'the tree.'

(27) 'Slippeth from the tree.'

(28) Ashi the elder, Rab's disciple.

(29) The vocalization of the Hebrew text is of very late date. The Pentateuch is still strictly retained unvocalized in the Synagogue; thus the same consonants might be read in several ways, often giving rise to different meanings, e.g. הלב and הלב and similarly ונשל and ונשל as suggested here in the discussion.

(30) ונשל probably meant as the Nifal form, cf. נגש Gen. XXXIII, 7; Ex. XX, 21, and נתן Lev. XIX, 20; Num. XXVI, 62. The root is found to have both a transitive meaning (Deut. VII, 22, cast away the nations; also, cast off thy shoe, Ex. III, 5), and an intransitive meaning (Deut. XXVIII, 40, thine olive shall cast its fruit). Cf. J. Mak. II, 2 (31c) and Nahmanides' Notes on Mak. Rashi suggests the Pi'el form, 'and the iron hurled away part of the tree;' on his second explanation by vocalizing it like ונאשל or ונהשל v. Rashi, Keth. 69b, top, s.v. ינחם

(31) [Lit., 'Mikra has a mother,' or 'there is preference to Mikra' (Halper, B., ZAW. XXX, p. 100), i.e., the reading of the sacred text according to Kere (קר) the established vocalization has an authentic origin, hence well-founded, as distinct from the Masorah, the Kethib (כת) the traditional text of consonants without vowels.]

(32) ונשל, the Kal.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 8a

Did not R. Isaac b. Joseph report R. Johanan to have said that Rabbi, R. Judah b. Ro'ez, the School of Shammai, R. Simeon and R. Akiba all maintained that the Mikra is determinant [in exposition]?¹ — [Just so;] but that is why he also enforces his contention with his [additional argument], 'Moreover...'

R. Papa observed that if one flung a clod at a palm, thereby knocking off some palm-fruit, which in falling killed somebody,² then we have an instance which will aptly illustrate the controversy between Rabbi and the Rabbis.³

[What is the point of this observation?] Is it not obvious? — [Not quite so obvious, as] you might argue that the falling fruit that killed was [according to Rabbi] but a secondary force⁴ [entailing no banishment]; therefore R. Papa's statement makes it clear that it is not so [according to Rabbi].

But, what would be a secondary force according to Rabbi's interpretation? — For instance, if he flung a clod and struck a stem which precipitated a cluster of fruit, and the fruit then dropped and killed somebody.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN THREW A STONE INTO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN AND KILLED A PERSON, HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT; R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAYS THAT IF AFTER THE STONE HAD LEFT HIS HAND ANOTHER PERSON PUT OUT HIS HEAD AND CAUGHT IT,⁵ THE THROWER IS EXEMPT [FROM BANISHMENT]. IF A MAN THREW A STONE INTO HIS [OWN] COURT AND KILLED A PERSON, THEN, IF THE VICTIM HAD A RIGHT OF ENTRY THERE, THE THROWER GOES INTO BANISHMENT,⁶ AND IF NOT, HE DOES NOT GO INTO BANISHMENT, BECAUSE IT IS WRITTEN: AS WHEN A MAN GOETH INTO THE WOOD WITH HIS NEIGHBOUR TO HEW WOOD . . .⁷ WHAT IS [THE NATURE OF] THE WOOD [REFERRED TO]? IT IS A DOMAIN ACCESSIBLE TO THE VICTIM AS TO THE SLAYER;⁸ EVEN THE SAME [LAW] OBTAINS IN EVERY DOMAIN WHICH IS

[EQUALLY] ACCESSIBLE TO THE VICTIM AND TO THE SLAYER; OUTSIDE [THIS LAW] IS THE COURT OF THE HOUSEHOLDER WHERE THE VICTIM HAS NO RIGHT OF ENTRY. ABBA SAUL SAYS: WHAT IS [THE NATURE OF] THIS HEWING OF WOOD [REFERRED TO]? IT IS AN OPTIONAL ACT; [EVEN THE SAME OBTAINS IN ALL VOLUNTARY ACTS];⁹ OUTSIDE [THIS LAW] IS THE FATHER BEATING HIS SON, OR THE MASTER STRIKING HIS PUPIL, OR THE COMMISSIONER OF THE COURT¹⁰ [ADMINISTERING THE LASH]. GEMARA . . . A STONE INTO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN — he is a deliberate offender?¹¹ — Said R. Samuel b. Isaac: It happened while he was demolishing a [defective] wall.¹² Even then, he should be circumspect? — He was demolishing it at night. At night, too, ought he not to be circumspect? — He was clearing the debris on to a rubbish-heap. On to a rubbish-heap! Under what circumstances? If the public pass there often, he is guilty of negligence; and if the public do not pass there often, he is the victim of mischance!¹³ — Said R. Papa: No! We must explain the Mishnah by an instance where the debris is thrown on to a rubbish-heap to which people resort for convenience at night-time, but not during the day; yet occasionally, someone comes and squats there. In such a case, the thrower is not guilty of negligence, because the place is not resorted to for convenience during daytime; nor is he [merely] a victim of mischance, because, occasionally, someone comes and squats there.¹⁴

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAYS THAT IF AFTER THE STONE HAD LEFT HIS HAND etc. Our Rabbis taught: The text, and if he [or it] found¹⁵ [his neighbour. . . he shall flee], precludes a case where the victim put himself in the way. On this text it was that R. Eliezer b. Jacob based his statement: IF AFTER THE STONE HAD LEFT HIS HAND ANOTHER PERSON PUT OUT HIS HEAD AND CAUGHT IT, THE THROWER IS EXEMPT [FROM BANISHMENT].

Is that to say that u-maza means, finding something there already ab initio?¹⁶ If so, contrast therewith that other exposition of the same form of the word in the text. [It is taught:] and he found [sufficiency to redeem it],¹⁷ which excludes other means [that were] available heretofore, that is, that he is not allowed to sell a remote property to redeem therewith one more proximate, or to sell an inferior property to redeem a fair property? — Said Raba: The expressions must each be taken in its context. There, the expression, ‘and he found sufficiency [to redeem it]’ must be taken with its context, ‘and his own hand attained [and found sufficiency to redeem it]’. Now, what is the meaning of [the phrase] ‘and his own hand attained’? [It means], what he has attained but now,’ so must [its concomitant], ‘and found [sufficiency]’ be taken in the same sense- ‘but now.’ Here, too, the expression must be taken in its proper context: ‘and if he [or it] found’ must be understood in the same sense as its concomitant, ‘the wood’; what is the case of ‘the wood’? — it was there ab initio,’ so must we take ‘and if he [or it] found’ to imply that he found his victim who was there ab initio [and not suddenly coming forward later].

ABBA SAUL SAYS, WHAT IS THE NATURE OF THIS HEWING OF WOOD etc.?¹⁸ One of the [senior] scholars said to Raba: What ground is there for Abba Saul's assumption that the hewing of wood referred to was [essentially] an optional task; it might as well be a hewing of wood [as a religious act] for building a Sukkah,¹⁹ or cutting faggots for the altar,²⁰ and accordingly, one might infer that the Divine Law ordained that the slayer shall nevertheless go into banishment? — Said Raba to him: Supposing he found some hewn wood [he would not have to hew any] and hewing would not then be any part of the prescribed command; nor can it, for the same reason, even in the first instance, be taken as part of the prescribed command.²¹ Rabina, thereupon, referred him back [to the Mishnah], OUTSIDE [THIS LAW] IS THE FATHER BEATING HIS SON, OR THE MASTER STRIKING HIS PUPIL OR THE COMMISSIONER OF THE COURT ADMINISTERING THE LASH. Here, also [he argued], where the son [or pupil] is already learned, it is no longer obligatory [on the father or master] to [teach and] strike? It should therefore not be considered even in the first instance part of a prescribed command?²² — Although the son is already taught [replied Raba], it is still obligatory on the father to chasten, because it is written, Correct thy son and he will give thee rest, yea he will give delight to thy soul.²³ Reconsidering it, however, Raba said: What I told you was not a correct reply; because, re-examining the text, when²⁴ ‘a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour,’ I say its import is [clearly] that of an optional act; that is, if he wishes to go there he goes, and if he does not wish, he does not go there. Now, therefore, if [as you suggested] the context ‘to hew wood’ is to be applicable [also] to an obligatory act of hewing, could he sufficiently meet his obligation without going into the forest?

R. Adda b. Ahaba then asked of Raba: Does then the [conditional] particle asher-when-always imply an optional action? If so, considering the text, but when²⁵ a man be unclean and shall not purify himself²⁶ [that soul shall be cut off from among Israel]²⁷ — will you likewise explain it as referring only to [a case] where if he wishes he defiles himself [by touching a corpse], and if he does not care to defile himself, he need not; but in the case of an obligatory corpse²⁸ where the finder could not but defile himself [but must needs give it burial], would he indeed [on entering the Temple during defilement] be exempt [from the penalty?]? That is quite different [replied Raba], because there, the text distinctly emphasises

(1) V. Sanh. 4a and 4b where the several statements of the above-mentioned authorities are cited, all turning on the legitimate deduction, or otherwise, from the possibility of an alternative vocalization of a word, e.g. שבועים fortnight, as שבועים seventy (days); קרנת horns of, as קרנת horn of; יראה shall be seen (appear) as יראה shall see, etc.

(2) The palm is sometimes 60 to 80 feet high. There are many varieties of fruit varying in form, size, and character, e.g. dates, areca, sago and cocoa-nut. The fruits usually cluster closely together, and when precipitated from a great height can easily kill a person.

(3) In the Mishnah, the falling fruit being compared to the flying chip.

(4) As the clod, the first force, had left his hand before it struck off the palm-fruit. This is not a correct assumption; he takes the clod as the axe, and the falling fruit as the flying chip which kills, entailing banishment.

(5) And was killed, the thrower is not blamable in the least for such an unforeseen event, and needs no atonement or protection by exile.

(6) He should have been more circumspect: the guiding rule is derived from the example of the wood afforded by Scripture.

(7) Deut. XIX, 5.

(8) Lit., ‘the injured as to the injurer.’

(9) This bracketed clause is absent in most texts.

(10) These are instances of accidents arising in the course of performing an act of duty, v. discussion.

(11) And is not entitled to protective banishment, as directed in the Mishnah.

(12) Removing such possible danger to the public is commendable. Cf. M. K. 7a.

(13) And as he could not have foreseen the victim's arrival on the scene of the accident, he should be exempt from banishment, and the ruling of the Mishnah as it stands is surprising.

(14) There was therefore an element of neglect, and the thrower goes into banishment.

(15) Deut. XIX, 5, that is, either the iron (axe) slipping from the helve, found, met or caught; or, he, the hewer (on the iron slipping) caught his neighbour.

(16) מצא is grammatically in the past tense (Perfect); the addition of י imports the possibility of a future sense, ‘and he (it) shall have found’.

(17) Lev. XXV, 26. If a man sold a field out of necessity, he or his kinsman had the right to buy it back at any time before the next Jubilee, by paying a price proportionate to the number of years the stranger might have enjoyed it up to the Jubilee, when the property would automatically revert to the owner. This anticipatory redemption could not be enforced by using moneys that were available at the time of sale, or borrowed money, or by part-redemption, or the proceeds of the sale of inferior or remote-lying property. Such means would show that the vendor did not sell out of poverty, and the purchaser's rights must not be disturbed. V. Commentaries on Mish. ‘Ar. IX, 2; Talm. ‘Ar. 30b.

(18) This is the correct heading; the one in the texts is misplaced and belongs to the beginning of the Gemara.

(19) Lev. XXIII, 42, v. Glos.

(20) Ibid. VI, 5; Nehem. X, 35, and Ta'an. 28a.

(21) I.e., the obligation lies mainly in making and using the tabernacle, or donating the faggots for the altar, not in hewing, as the wood might be purchased ready cut. Acting in the discharge of a religious obligation (mizwah) is considered, in case of a resulting accident, an extenuating circumstance: the desire to do a religious act counterbalances the element of slight negligence. Cf. B.K. 30a; 32a.

(22) And according to above argument, father or teacher should go into banishment.

(24) As when (asher, אֲשֶׁר) a man goeth into the wood = as if a man . . .

(25) Lit., rendering of וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִטְמָא

(26) Before entering the Temple.

(27) Num. XIX, 13.

(28) Of an unknown stranger found dead on the road, it was the duty of the finder, even if he were the High Priest himself, to attend to the burial, unless another was there to act for him.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 8b

‘he shall be unclean’ — meaning under any circumstances.¹ But has not that phrase been claimed for another deduction, namely, as it is taught: ‘He shall be unclean’ means, to include [defiled] persons who had taken their rite of ablution during daytime;² ‘uncleanness is yet upon him’ means, to include [purified] persons still short of the atonement rite?³ — [Yes,] replied Raba, but I mean to derive my point by stressing the [redundant particle] ‘yet’.⁴

Some introduce the discussion in connection with the following: [Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest;]⁵ in ploughing time and in harvest thou shalt rest.⁶ Says R. Akiba: This [second part of the] text is not needed as a provision against ploughing or harvesting in the Sabbatical year itself, for that is explicitly dealt with elsewhere: Neither shalt thou sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard etc.;⁷ but it is a provision to restrict ploughing even in the pre-Sabbatical year, where its effect extends into the Sabbatical period;⁸ and [similarly] to restrict the harvesting of the [produce partly grown in the] Sabbatical period, which is reaped in the post-Sabbatical year.⁹ Says R. Ishmael: What is the characteristic of ploughing? It is an optional act;¹⁰ so too is the harvesting debarred¹¹ only when it is an optional act. Outside [this restriction], therefore, is the harvesting [of the first barley] for the ‘omer which is prescribed.¹²

One of the [senior] scholars then asked Raba: What ground has R. Ishmael for assuming that the ploughing [referred to in the text] is an optional act; might it not as well be the ploughing for the omer — barley which is prescribed? And accordingly one might infer that the Divine Law even in such a case enjoins the Sabbath rest! — Said Raba to him: [No,] because if he found the plot already ploughed he would not be required to plough again. The [act of] ploughing cannot therefore be considered obligatory. Rabina thereupon referred him to the Mishnah: OUTSIDE [THIS LAW] IS THE FATHER BEATING HIS SON, OR THE MASTER STRIKING HIS PUPIL, OR THE COMMISSIONER OF THE COURT [ADMINISTERING THE LASH]. Now, might we not argue [similarly] that, since where the son [or pupil] is an accomplished scholar it is no longer obligatory [on the father or master] to punish him, it should therefore not be considered even in the first instance as obligatory?¹³ — There [he replied], even though the son is accomplished, it is still a duty, because it is written, Correct thy son and he will give thee rest.¹⁴ Reconsidering it, however, Raba said: That first argument [I used] was not correct, because [continuing the analogy] I argue: What is the characteristic of ploughing? If he found the plot ploughed he need not plough [again]; so too is the characteristic of reaping; [if he found the corn cut, he need not cut again]. But if you assume that the reaping [mentioned in the text] constitutes an obligatory act, then, employing the analogy, you will conclude that if he found the sheaves cut, he need not cut again. How can this be maintained? Is not the bringing as well as the reaping prescribed?¹⁵ MISHNAH. THE FATHER GOES INTO BANISHMENT FOR [THE DEATH OF] HIS SON, AND THE SON GOES INTO BANISHMENT FOR [THAT OF] HIS FATHER. ALL GO INTO BANISHMENT FOR [THE DEATH OF] AN

ISRAELITE, AND ISRAELITES GO INTO BANISHMENT ON THEIR ACCOUNT, SAVE FOR A SOJOURNING-STRANGER,¹⁶ AND A SOJOURNING-STRANGER GOES INTO BANISHMENT¹⁷ FOR [ANOTHER] SOJOURNING-STRANGER.

GEMARA. THE FATHER GOES INTO BANISHMENT FOR HIS SON. Did you not say [before], OUTSIDE [THIS LAW] IS THE FATHER BEATING HIS SON?¹⁸ — [Here it is a case of] a son who has already learnt enough.¹⁹ But did you not [also] say that even if the son has learnt enough, the father is still obliged to teach [his son]? — He was teaching him [only] as a carpenter's apprentice. [Even so] he was teaching him [the means of] a livelihood!²⁰ — He was already accomplished in another craft.

AND THE SON GOES INTO BANISHMENT FOR THE DEATH OF HIS FATHER. This statement was contrasted with that which is taught elsewhere: That killeth a person,²¹ means, to exclude [from banishment] one that killeth his father [or mother]!²² — Said R. Kahana: It is not difficult [to explain the discrepancy]: the passage cited reflects the view of R. Simeon, while the Mishnah reflects that of the Rabbis. According to R. Simeon, execution by strangulation is a severer penalty than by the sword.²³ Therefore, in [the ordinary] case of death by error, the [incurred] penalty, of [execution by] the sword, has its appropriate form of remission [when commuted into banishment]; whereas in the case of parricide in error, the [severer] penalty by strangulation has not its appropriate form of remission [when commuted into banishment]. On the other hand, according to the Rabbis, execution by the sword is a severer penalty than by strangulation. Therefore, in the case of a parent-slayer [who committed the deed] in error, the penalty due is [the severer], that of the sword; and the penalty of the sword has its appropriate form of remission [when commuted into banishment].

Raba explained [the Baraita] thus: 'That killeth a person [through error may flee there]', means, to exclude [from banishment] one that woundeth²⁴ his father [or mother] in error. For you might possibly think that, since by deliberately wounding his parent he would incur the death penalty,²⁵ therefore, in the case of error, he also should go into banishment. The deduction, however, drawn from the text points 'to exclude one that woundeth his father [or mother] in error'.

ALL GO INTO BANISHMENT FOR [THE DEATH OF] AN ISRAELITE, AND AN ISRAELITE GOES INTO BANISHMENT ON THEIR ACCOUNT. — ALL GO INTO BANISHMENT' — What is this 'all' intended to include? — It is to include slaves²⁶ or Cutheans.²⁷ We [thus] learn [here] what our Rabbis taught [in the following]: A slave or Cuthean goes into banishment or receives a flogging on account of an Israelite, and an Israelite goes into banishment or receives a flogging on account of a Cuthean or slave. Now, [the statement] 'a slave or Cuthean goes into banishment or receives a flogging on account of an Israelite' is perfectly clear, meaning that if he [inadvertently] kills an Israelite, he goes into banishment, or that if he utters [the Divine Name in] an imprecation against an Israelite, he receives a flogging.²⁸ [But as regards the second statement] 'and an Israelite goes into banishment or receives a flogging, on account of a Cuthean or slave,' while there is a clear case for the Israelite going into banishment, namely if he kills a slave or Cuthean [inadvertently], how explain his receiving a flogging? [You will perhaps explain,] in case he cursed him. This cannot be, since the text 'nor curse a ruler of thy people' limits the offence to a curse uttered against one who acts according to the usages 'of thy people'? — Said R. Aha b. Jacob: But it might be a case where he [the Cuthean] had given evidence against him [the Israelite as liable to a flogging] and on being found a zomem — witness [is flogged himself].²⁹ And similarly does the slave's liability [to a flogging] likewise arise where he had given evidence against [an Israelite] and was then found to be a zomem — witness? Is a slave [legally] competent to give such evidence? — But no, said R. Aha son of R. Ika, [the flogging] could be explained in a case where an Israelite had struck a [wounding] blow

- (2) Even after ablution, defilement ceased only with sunset. Lev. XXII, 6-7.
- (3) Four persons, on emerging from their state of impurity, had to complete their purification on the day after ablution, with offerings, Lev. XII, 6ff; XIV, 9ff; XV, 13ff and 28ff. q.v.
- (4) His uncleanness is yet (וַיִּשָּׂא) upon him.
- (5) Lit. 'keep Sabbath' or 'desist (from work)'.
(6) Ex. XXXIV, 21; meaning that, however urgently the season may demand it, ploughing or reaping may not be done on the Sabbath day. The special mention here of ploughing and reaping suggests the association of the weekly Sabbath-day with the septennial Sabbath-year (cf. ibid. XXIII, 10-12). In the exposition that follows, R. Akiba stresses the latter; R. Ishmael the former; v, commentaries of Rashi and Maim, on Sheb. I, 1.

- (8) Lit. 'enters into the Sabbatical year,' i.e, produces the fruit in the seventh year.
- (9) I.e, produce grown of itself that has reached a third of its maturity in the seventh year is subject to the restrictions of the seventh year when it matures in the eighth year.
- (10) There being nowhere in the Law a command prescribing ploughing.
- (11) On the Sabbath day.
- (12) And therefore may be cut even on the Sabbath day; Lev. XXIII, 10ff, ordains: When ye come into the land . . . and reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring the sheaf ('omer) of the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest. 'Omer means 'sheaf'; it is also the name of a measure, one-tenth part of an epha (Ex. XVI, 36).
- (13) And the father (or master) should go into banishment.

- (22) So in Sifre text. A parent-killer is excluded and denied protection in refuge because, by wounding alone, even without fatal consequences, the smiter has already incurred the death penalty by strangulation; v. Sanh. 84b. The general manslayer is punished by the sword; if he slays in error, the punishment is commuted into banishment to one of the Cities of Refuge.

- (24) The Hebrew for killeth a person is מוֹכָה נֶפֶשׁ which means literally, 'smiling a soul', that is, do to death. The word מוֹכָה by itself means 'beating', 'wounding' or 'killing', hence the interpretation of Raba. Cf. Ex. XXI, 15 (the penalty for wounding parents); ibid. 18 (wounding without killing), and Deut. XXV, 1-3 (beating or lashing).
- (25) By strangulation, v. Sanh. 84b.
- (26) I.e., a non — Israelite, or 'Canaanite' slave (cf. Gen. IX, 25, 26; Lev. XXV, 44ff.) who had to be circumcised (Gen. XVII, 12ff), to discard idolatry and abstain from work (for his master) on Sabbath (Ex. XX, 10; XXIII, 12) and who was a member of the household (cf. Lev. XXII, 11; Deut. XVI, 11).
- (27) Samaritans (cf. II Kings XVII, 24 ff), sometimes called 'Lion ('terrorized) Proselytes' (cf, ibid. 25-26). They professed adherence to the Mosaic Law, but remained outside by their laws and practices, and do so to this day,
- (28) Ex. XXII, 27, Thou shalt not revile God (or judges) nor curse a ruler of thy people. By combining the import of this text with that of Lev. XIX, 14, Thou shalt not curse the deaf the prohibition is taken to have a general application, involving a flogging if the imprecation is accompanied by the mention of God's name. The words 'of thy people' however limit the offence, as punishable only when committed against law-abiding Jews, v. Sanh. 66a.
- (29) R. Aha's explanation refers to the first clause which, however, at the same time is also explanatory of the second.

which is estimated [in damages] at less than a perutah, as R. Ammi, reporting R. Johanan, said that if one struck a [wounding] blow worth [in damages] less than a perutah, the assailant receives a flogging¹ [and that no analogy between battery and imprecation is admitted].²

SAVE NOT FOR A SOJOURNING — STRANGER, etc. This implies that the sojourning-stranger is treated as a heathen [in regard to the law of refuge];³ but then read the latter clause: A SOJOURNING-STRANGER GOES INTO BANISHMENT FOR [ANOTHER] SOJOURNING-STRANGER [in accordance with the law of refuge]?⁴ — Said R. Kahana: It is not difficult [to explain the seeming discrepancy]; the last clause provides for a sojourning-stranger who had slain [inadvertently] another sojourning — stranger, whereas the previous clause provides for a sojourning-stranger who had slain an Israelite. Some throw into contrast one [Scriptural] text against another. It is written: For the children of Israel and for the stranger and for the sojourner among them, shall these six cities be for refuge . . .⁵ And again it is written: [Speak unto the children of Israel . . .] and the cities shall be unto you [for refuge from the avenger]⁶ — which implies for ‘you’ [exclusively] but not for strangers? — Said R. Kahana: It is not difficult [to explain], as one text [verse twelve] provides for a sojourning — stranger who killed an Israelite,⁷ while the other text [verse fifteen] provides for a sojourning-stranger who killed another sojourning-stranger.⁸ [As against this interpretation,] some cited [in contrast] the following: ‘Therefore, stranger and heathen who killed [a person]⁹ are killed.’ In this quotation ‘stranger’ and ‘heathen’ are taken together as of the same category,¹⁰ that is to say, that just as in the case of a ‘heathen’ [killing someone] it made no difference whether he killed a person of his own status or not of his own status, he was slain: so in the case of a ‘stranger’, it likewise made no difference whether he killed a person of his own status or not of his own status, he would be slain? — Said R. Hisda: It is not difficult to explain [the seeming discrepancy in the texts],¹¹ as one¹² provides for a case where death results from a downward movement, whereas the other¹³ [provides for a case] where it results from an upward movement.¹⁴ In the case of a downward motion, where an Israelite would go into banishment, it is enough if the ‘stranger’ too is allowed to go into banishment, whereas in the case of an upward motion, where an Israelite is acquitted, the [sojourning] ‘stranger’ dies for it.¹⁵

Said Raba: But does not an argument a fortiori demand a contrary conclusion? Why, if in a death by a downward motion, where an Israelite would go into banishment, it is considered enough for a ‘stranger’ also to go into banishment, would you, in the case of death by an upward motion, where an Israelite is acquitted, insist on a ‘stranger’ being killed? — But, said Raba, [the severity is explicable] where the ‘stranger’ thought he had a right to kill. Said Abaye to him: If he thought that he had a right to kill, he is himself a victim of misadventure. Answered Raba: [Indeed, he is] for I consider anyone doing wrong thinking that it is permissible as next to a deliberate offender. And they both maintain that view [consistently] as both follow their own respective principles as expressed elsewhere. For it has been stated: Supposing one thought it was a beast and it happened to be a human being; a heathen and it happened to be a sojourning-stranger, Raba says he is liable [and R. Hisda says he is acquitted. Raba says he is liable]¹⁶ for one who thought he had a right to kill is next to a deliberate offender¹⁷ and R. Hisda says he is acquitted because one who thought he had a right to kill was [himself] a victim of a misadventure. Thereupon Raba referred R. Hisda to the [Scriptural] text, Behold, thou shalt die, because of the woman whom thou hast taken; for she is a man's wife.¹⁸ What else does it imply but liability to human execution [for his error]? — No, liability to Heaven's displeasure, and note carefully the context, And I also withheld thee from sinning against Me.¹⁹

Accepting your interpretation, how then would you explain this text, How then can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?²⁰ Does it mean only [a sin] against God and not [an offence] against man?²¹ It can only mean that his trial is left to human authority, and the same is implied in the former text, viz., that the trial is left to human authority. Abaye then referred Raba to

[Abimelech's plea], Lord, wilt Thou slay even a righteous nation?²² — But you have there the answer to that plea [of innocence], Now therefore restore the man's wife, for he is a prophet.²³

(1) Injury must be compensated. Cf. Lev. XXIV, 19ff., where 'breach for breach, eye for eye' is taken to mean monetary compensation for injuries. If the injury is too paltry for monetary compensation, the assailant is flogged. Cf. Keth. 32b.

(2) This is merely the concluding part of R. Johanan's dictum. The question of analogy between battery and imprecation is raised (in Sanh. 85a) in this way. If a son curses his condemned father who is on his way to execution, he is technically exempt although cursing a parent is a capital offence, (v. Ex. XXI, 17), as only cursing a man who did not act according to the usages 'of thy people'. Is he also exempt (by analogy with imprecation) if he struck his condemned father a wounding blow? V. Ex. XXI, 15. The analogy between the two might be suggested by the close juxtaposition of verses 15 and 17 (yet divided by verse 16). R. Johanan is reported to have decided against the analogy, and similarly, though the imprecation of a Cuthean is not punishable, battery is.

(3) The Jewish slayer does not go into banishment as he would for inadvertently slaying a Jew and the heathen likewise is afforded no refuge.

(4) That is, the sojourning — stranger slayer and slain are subject to the law of banishment. See, however, the discussion which follows.

(5) Num. XXXV, 15, granting equal enjoyment of the right of refuge.

(6) Num. XXXV, verse 12.

(7) And the slayer is not to go into banishment (for his protection), but is slain.

(8) As provided in the text.

(9) Jew or non-Jew.

(10) Whereas, in Num. XXXV, 15, (as above), equal enjoyment of the right of refuge is granted to the stranger and sojourner. The problem arises from the ambiguous use of the terms גֵר 'stranger' and תוֹשֵׁב 'sojourner'. 'Stranger' means (a) an idolatrous newcomer, or (b) one who, after a while, discontinues idolatry, and leads a moral and honourable life; he is sometimes called 'a son of Noah'. After prolonged residence he may become (c) a quasi, unavowed convert: he is then a 'sojourning-stranger, and finally, (d) the avowed and formally accepted convert, the 'righteous stranger' גֵר צַדִּיק who is an Israelite in the eyes of the law. An Israelite offender is naturally treated according to his native (Biblical) code; but if an Israelite is the victim, how is the non — Israelite offender to be legally treated, according to Biblical law or his own? There are fundamental differences, e.g., in a criminal case of incest or murder, the Israelite law demands two Jewish witnesses, at least; their forewarning to the offender; twenty-three judges, etc., which are not requisite in the non-Jewish code where one witness or even (it is surmised) the judges' personal knowledge (without other witnesses) is enough to condemn, etc.; v. Sanh. 57 ff. Maim. Yad Melakim VIII, 10 ff. IX, 14 ff.

(11) Num. XXXV, 12, and 15, as pointed out above.

(12) Verse 15.

(15) I.e., by the avenger if he so choose (without consequences to himself). V. Maim. ibid. X, 1,.

(16) So in Yalkut. Gen. 88 and D.S, a, l., cf. p. 39.

(17) Because the attack was intentional, with intent to hurt ab initio, and he should have been more careful.

(18) Gen. XX, 3, Abimelech took Sarah under the belief that she was Abraham's unmarried sister, yet he was threatened with death.

(19) Ibid. 6, i.e., only against God but not an offence punishable by human law.

(20) Gen. XXXIX, 9. Joseph repulsing Potiphar's wife.

(21) Joseph knew she was his master's wife, and that he would have to pay the penalty as seducer. Tosaf. cites another explanation (and reading) that trial is left to God because there were no witnesses to prove his guilt, otherwise it would be dealt with by human authority.

(22) Gen. XX, 4, which proves that the belief that an offence was permissible exonerates the offender.

(23) Ibid. 7.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 9b

'Restore the prophet's wife', and were she not a prophet's wife, need she not have been restored? —

But this can only be taken as R. Samuel b. Nahmani had explained it; for R. Samuel b. Nahmani, citing R. Jonathan, said that the Divine reply was as follows: Now therefore restore the man's wife in any case, and, as regards your plea, Wilt Thou slay even a righteous nation? Said he not himself to me: She is my sister, and she, even she herself said, He is my brother? . . .¹ [Abimelech was told,] 'for he [Abraham] is a prophet' and he conjectured, from the questions put to him, the reply he was to give. A stranger coming to a city is [generally] asked about his food and drink . . .; do they ask: Is this your wife? Is this your sister? From the above data it has been deduced that 'a son of Noah'² suffers death [even for a crime committed under misapprehension], as he should have taken pains to ascertain the facts and did not.

MISHNAH. A BLIND MANSLAYER DOES NOT GO INTO BANISHMENT; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. R. MEIR SAYS HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT. AN ENEMY DOES NOT GO INTO BANISHMENT; R. JOSE³ SAYS, AN ENEMY IS SLAIN, AS HE IS QUASI-ATTESTED.⁴ R. SIMEON SAYS THERE IS AN ENEMY THAT GOES INTO BANISHMENT AND THERE IS AN ENEMY THAT GOES NOT INTO BANISHMENT, [THE CRITERION BEING THAT]⁵ WHEREVER IT CAN BE SUGGESTED THAT HE HAD SLAIN [HIS VICTIM] WITTINGLY, HE GOES NOT INTO BANISHMENT,⁶ AND WHERE HE HAD SLAIN UNWITTINGLY, HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT.

GEMARA. [A BLIND MANSLAYER DOES NOT GO . . . R. MEIR SAYS HE GOES etc.]

Our Rabbis taught: [The words] seeing him not⁷ imply the exemption of a blind manslayer⁸ [from banishment]. These are the words of R. Judah; but R. Meir says that these words seeing him not do imply the inclusion of a blind manslayer.⁹ On what [textual] ground does R. Judah adopt his interpretation? — The wording, as when (a man) goeth into the wood with his neighbour . . .¹⁰ [he argues] implies [anybody], even a blind person; but then comes [elsewhere] the qualification seeing him not¹¹ and thereby reduces the wider application.¹² And R. Meir? — Since seeing him not [he argues] is a limiting expression, and [whoso killeth his neighbour] unawares¹¹ is another, the effect of limitation after limitation [logically] only amounts to amplification.¹² And R. Judah?¹³ — He takes unawares to exclude intentional injury.¹⁴

R. JOSE SAYS, AN ENEMY IS SLAIN, AS HE IS QUASI-ATTESTED. But how? They have not duly forewarned him! — This Mishnah expresses the opinion of R. Jose b. Judah, as it is taught: R. Jose b. Judah says a Haber¹⁵ needs no forewarning, as forewarning was only introduced as a means for differentiating between one acting in error or with presumption.¹⁶

R. SIMEON SAYS, THERE IS AN ENEMY THAT GOES INTO BANISHMENT AND AN ENEMY THAT GOES NOT INTO BANISHMENT. It is taught: 'How [illustrate] R. Simeon's statement that THERE IS AN ENEMY THAT GOES INTO BANISHMENT AND AN ENEMY THAT GOES NOT INTO BANISHMENT? [In this way:] if something snapped¹⁷ [and the severed object dropped and killed], he goes into banishment;¹⁸ if it slipped,¹⁹ he goes not into banishment.

But is it not also taught, 'R. Simeon says, One never goes into banishment until the rammer-block had [all]²⁰ slipped from his hand.' — which conflicts with the above statements both in regard to something snapping and slipping?²¹ [The seeming conflict] in regard to slipping is not difficult to explain, as version A deals with a person who was ill-disposed [towards the dead man], while version B deals with one who was well-disposed;²² nor is it difficult to explain the seeming conflict in the case of snapping, as version A is in accordance with Rabbi's view, while version B agrees with the view of the Rabbis.²³ MISHNAH. WHITHER ARE THEY BANISHED? TO THE THREE CITIES SITUATE ON THE YONDER SIDE OF THE JORDAN AND THREE CITIES SITUATE IN THE LAND OF CANAAN, AS ORDAINED, YE SHALL GIVE THREE CITIES BEYOND THE JORDAN AND THREE CITIES IN THE LAND OF CANAAN; THEY SHALL BE CITIES

OF REFUGE.²⁴ NOT UNTIL THREE CITIES WERE SELECTED IN THE LAND OF ISRAEL DID THE [FIRST] THREE CITIES BEYOND THE JORDAN RECEIVE FUGITIVES, AS ORDAINED, [AND OF THESE CITIES WHICH YE SHALL GIVE] SIX CITIES FOR REFUGE SHALL THEY BE UNTO YOU²⁵ WHICH MEANS THAT [THEY DID] NOT [FUNCTION] UNTIL ALL SIX COULD SIMULTANEOUSLY AFFORD ASYLUM. AND DIRECT ROADS WERE MADE LEADING FROM ONE TO THE OTHER, AS ORDAINED, THOU SHALT PREPARE THEE A WAY AND DIVIDE THE BORDERS OF THY LAND INTO THREE PARTS.²⁶ AND TWO [ORDAINED] SCHOLAR — DISCIPLES WERE DELEGATED TO ESCORT THE MANSLAYER IN CASE ANYONE ATTEMPTED TO SLAY HIM ON THE WAY, AND THAT THEY MIGHT SPEAK TO HIM.²⁷ R. MEIR SAYS: HE MAY [EVEN]²⁸ PLEAD HIS CAUSE HIMSELF, AS IT IS ORDAINED, AND THIS IS THE WORD OF THE SLAYER.²⁹ R. JOSE B. JUDAH SAYS: TO BEGIN WITH, A SLAYER WAS SENT IN ADVANCE TO [ONE OF] THE CITIES OF REFUGE, WHETHER HE HAD SLAIN IN ERROR OR WITH INTENT. THEN THE COURT SENT AND BROUGHT HIM THENCE. WHOEVER WAS FOUND GUILTY OF A CAPITAL CRIME THE COURT HAD EXECUTED, AND WHOEVER WAS FOUND NOT GUILTY OF A CAPITAL CRIME THEY ACQUITTED. WHOEVER WAS FOUND LIABLE TO BANISHMENT THEY RESTORED TO HIS PLACE [OF REFUGE] AS IT IS ORDAINED, AND THE CONGREGATION SHALL RESTORE HIM TO THE CITY OF REFUGE WHITHER HE WAS FLED.³⁰

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Moses had set apart three cities on the other side of the Jordan, and corresponding to them Joshua set apart [others] in the land of Canaan. And they were made to correspond on opposite sides like a double row [of trees] in a vineyard; Hebron in Judah,³¹ corresponding to Bezer in the wilderness;³² Shechem in mount Ephraim,³¹ corresponding to Ramoth in Gilead;³² Kedesh in mount Naphtali,³¹ corresponding to Golan in Bashan.³² And thou shalt divide the border of thy land into three parts³³ means that they shall form triads,³⁴ [namely], that the distance from the Darom [southern] boundary to Hebron be similar to that from Hebron to Shechem; and that from Hebron to Shechem similar to that from Shechem to Kedesh; and that from Shechem to Kedesh similar to that from Kedesh to the North [boundary].

Were³⁵ three cities [necessary] in Trans-Jordania [the same as] three cities for the [whole] land of Israel? — Said Abaye: By reason that manslaying was rife in Gilead,

(1) Ibid. 5.

(2) V, p. 54, n. 3. Thinking he had a right to kill is culpable negligence, as the attack was deliberate and there being no way of testing the slayer's intention, he has to pay the penalty of a homicide: in other words, he is judged by the non-Jewish criminal code that does not admit the plea of ignorance. In Israelite law the forewarning by the two witnesses and relegation to the 'cities of refuge' were mitigations of the death penalty.

(12) In this instance, seeing him not suggests a person capable of seeing, but who on this unfortunate occasion did not see his victim; whereas unawares is applicable to the blind as to the seeing. Cf. Ned. 87-88. On this exegetical rule, see Malbim's introduction to Leviticus, * 237.

- (19) E.g. the rope slipped from his hand, or the hatchet fell out of his hand. In these instances, as foul play is possible, he does not go into (protective) banishment, but has to evade the avenger as best he may. He cannot be treated as guilty, for lack of due warning and proof.
- (20) So in Z. Tosef., II,3, p. 439, and Nahmanides.
- (21) According to the first version, A, if it snapped — he goes into banishment; if it slipped — he does not. According to the second version, B, by implication, if it snapped — he goes not into banishment; if it slipped — he goes into banishment.
- (22) This is the order of the text as proposed by Rashi, following an ancient reading (supported by Zerahiah Halevi and Nahmanides): If the whole thing slipped, an enemy goes not into banishment (A) as there is a suspicion of foul play; while a friend, in whose case no such suspicion can arise, goes into banishment (B).
- (23) ‘If the iron slipped from the helve and killed, Rabbi says that he goes not into banishment and the Sages say he goes into banishment’. (V, p. 42): If snapped, where foul play is unlikely, according to the Rabbis (the Sages) even an enemy goes into banishment (A); whereas according to Rabbi, even a friend (by implication in B), goes not into banishment; that is, if we take the case of the iron head slipping from the helve as similar to the snapping of a rope, or as part-snapping of the rammer-block.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 10a

as it is written: Gilead is a city of them that work iniquity and is covered with footprints of blood.¹ What is meant by [covered with footprints] ‘akubbah² ? — Said R. Eleazar: It suggests that they tracked down³ victims to slay them.

Why are some further apart at one end and closer together at the other?⁴ — Said Abaye: Because manslaying was equally rife at Shechem, as it is written, and as troops of robbers wait for a man, so doth the company of priests; they murder in the way toward Shechem.⁵ What is meant by ‘the company of priests?’ — Said R. Eleazar: They formed themselves into gangs to commit murder as when priests go in groups to the barns at the distribution of priestly [prime] dues.

But were there no more [than six cities of refuge]? Is it not written, and to them ye shall add forty and two cities . . . so all the cities shall be forty and eight cities?⁶ — Said Abaye: The main six cities afforded asylum with or without cognizance,⁷ while the additional cities only afforded asylum knowingly, but not without cognizance. And was Hebron a city of refuge? Is it not recorded, and they gave Hebron to Caleb as Moses had said?⁸ — Said Abaye: It was the environs he was given, as it is written, but the fields of the city and the villages thereof gave they to Caleb the son of Jephunneh for his possession.⁹ And was Kedesh a city of refuge? Is it not recorded, and the fortified cities were Ziddim, Zer, Hammath, Rakkath and Chinnereth . . . and Kedesh,¹⁰ and is it not taught: Now these cities [of refuge] are to be made neither into small forts nor large walled cities, but medium — sized boroughs? — Said R. Joseph: There were two places called Kedesh. R. Ashi observed: Such as Seleucia [Ctesifon] and the Fort of Seleucia.¹¹

[To turn to] the main text: ‘These cities [of refuge] are to be made neither into small forts nor large walled cities,¹² but medium-sized boroughs; they are to be established only in the vicinity of a water supply and where there is no water at hand it is to be brought thither; they are to be established only in marketing districts; they are to be established only in populous districts,¹³ and if the population has fallen off others are to be brought into the neighbourhood, and if the residents [of any one place] have fallen off, others are brought thither, priests, Levites and Israelites.¹⁴ There should be traffic neither in arms nor in trap- gear there:¹⁵ these are the words of R. Nehemiah; but the Sages permit. They, however, agree that no traps may be set there nor may ropes be left dangling about in the place so that the blood avenger may have no occasion to come visiting there.’

R. Isaac asked: What is the Scriptural authority [for all these provisions]? — The verse, and that fleeing unto one of these cities he might live¹⁶ which means — provide him with whatever he needs so that he may live.

A Tanna taught: A disciple who goes into banishment is joined in exile by his master, in accordance with the text, and that fleeing unto one of these cities he might live,¹⁶ which means — provide him with whatever he needs to live.¹⁷ R. Ze'ira remarked that this is the basis of the dictum, ‘Let no one teach Mishnah to a disciple that is unworthy.’¹⁸ R. Johanan said: A master who goes into banishment is joined in exile by his College. But that cannot be correct, seeing that R. Johanan said: Whence can it be shown [Scripturally] that the study of the Torah affords asylum?¹⁹ From the verse, [Then Moses separated three cities . . .] Bezer in the wilderness . . . Ramoth... and Golan . . ., which is followed by, and this-the law which Moses set before the children of Israel?²⁰ — This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]. One [of his sayings] is applicable to the scholar who maintains his learning in practice, while the other saying is applicable to him who does not maintain it in practice. Or, if you will, I might say that ‘asylum’ means refuge from the Angel of Death, as told of R. Hisda who was sitting and rehearsing his studies in the school-house and the Angel of Death could not approach him, as his mouth would not cease rehearsing. He [thereupon] perched upon a cedar of the school-house and, as the cedar cracked under him, R. Hisda paused and the Angel overpowered him.²¹

R. Tanhum b. Hanilai observed: Why was Reuben given precedence to be named first in the appointment of [the cities of] deliverance?²² Because it was he who spoke first in delivering [Joseph from death], as it is said, And Reuben heard it and he delivered him out of their hand [and said, Let us not take his life].²³

R. Simlai gave the following exposition: What is the meaning of the text, Then Moses separated three cities beyond the Jordan, toward the sun — rising?²⁴ It means that the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses: ‘Make the sun rise²⁵ for [innocent] manslayers!’ Some say [he explained it so]: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses [approvingly], ‘You did make the sun rise for [innocent]²⁶ manslayers!’

R. Simlai [also] gave the following exposition: What is the meaning of the verse, He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver, and who delighteth in multitude, not with increase; [this also is vanity].²⁷ ‘He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver’, might be applied to our Master Moses, who, while knowing that the three cities beyond the Jordan would not harbour refugees so long as the [other] three in the land of Canaan had not been selected, nevertheless said: The charge having come within my reach, I shall give [partial] effect to it, now!²⁸ [The second part,] ‘And who delighteth in multitude, not with increase’ [means]: Who is fit to teach ‘a multitude’? — He who has all increase²⁹ of his own.³⁰ This is similar to the interpretation given by R. Eleazar [b. Pedath] of, ‘Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord: [who can] show forth all His praise’?³¹ as, Who is fit to utter the mighty acts of the Lord? He [only] who is able to show forth all His praise! But the Rabbis, or some say Rabbah b. Mari, interpreted the same, ‘who delighteth in multitude has increase’, as, Whoever delighteth in the multitude [of scholars] has increase [of scholars], and the eyes of the schoolmen turned on Rabbah the son of Raba.³² R. Ashi said it meant that whoever loves studying amidst a multitudes of [fellow] students has increase, which is to the same effect as what R. Jose b. Hanina said: What is the import, [he asked], of the words, a sword upon [the boasters] ha-baddim and they shall become fools?³³ May a sword fall upon the neck of the foes³⁴ of scholar-disciples, that sit and engage in the study of the Torah, solitary [bad] and apart [b'bad]!³⁵ Nay, furthermore, such wax foolish! Holy Writ has here, and they shall become fools³³ — and elsewhere it says, wherein we have done foolishly;³⁶ nay, furthermore, they also become sinners, as it is added there, and wherein we have sinned’ If you prefer, [it is derived] from this verse, The princes of Zoan have become fools.³⁷ Rabina explained [that former passage] thus, Whoever delighteth in teaching a multitude [of scholars] has increase, which is to the same effect as what Rabbi said: Much Torah have I learnt from my Masters, more from my fellow — students and from my disciples most of all!

R. Joshua b. Levi said: What is the meaning of the [Psalmist's] words, Our feet stood within thy gates, O Jerusalem?³⁸ [It is this.] What helped us to maintain our firm foothold in war? The gates of Jerusalem³⁹ — the place where students engaged in the study of Torah! R. Joshua b. Levi said also the following: What is the meaning of the [Psalmist's] words, A song of Ascents unto David. I was rejoiced when they said unto me: ‘Let us go unto the house of the Lord’?⁴⁰ David, addressing himself to the Holy One, blessed be He, said: Lord of the Universe! I heard men saying, ‘When will this old man die and let his son Solomon come and build us the Chosen Shrine and we shall go up there [as pilgrims]?’ and I rejoiced at that. Said the Holy One, blessed be He, to him, A day in thy courts is better than a thousand!⁴¹ Better to Me one day spent by you in study of Torah than a thousand sacrifices that your son Solomon will [some day] offer before Me, on the altar!⁴²

AND DIRECT ROADS WERE MADE LEADING FROM ONE TO THE OTHER. It is taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says

(1) Hos. VI, 8.

(2) עקבה

(3) עקב means ‘to follow on the heel of a person,’ cf. Gen. XXV, 26 and XXVII, 36.

(4) The text is in disorder. The reading adopted is that of the Yalkut. See D.S. On the western side Hebron and Shechem lie nearer each other than the other cities on the line, and on the eastern side of the Jordan, Ramoth and Golan are closer together.

(5) Hos. VI, 9.

(6) Num. XXXV, 6-7. Cf. 1 Chron. VI, 39-66.

(7) I.e., without the refugee being aware of his safety there (v. Rashi), or, without the knowledge and assent of the city authorities (L. Ginzberg, J.E, ii, 258a, s.v. Asylum).

(8) Judg. I, 20.

(9) Josh. XXI, 12.

(10) Josh. XIX, 35-37.

(11) I.e., an open place with a fortress near by, both bearing the same name (Rashi). Kirkuk di'Sluq. Cf. Obermeyer, Die Landschaft Babylonien p. 141.

(12) The former, because they are liable to run short of necessities; the latter, because the avenger may escape notice in large crowds of strangers.

(13) To prevent a coup to carry off the slayer.

- (14) Although they were Levitical cities.
- (15) Tosef. III, 9, and J. Mak. II, 6, read here instead 'set up no olive-press nor wine-press there: these are the words of R. Nehemiah, but the Sages permit.'
- (16) Deut. IV, 42.
- (17) I.e., also the spiritual life.
- (18) As he may ultimately dishonour his master. This is cited as a dictum of Rab's in Hul. 133a and of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, Tosef. A.Z. VII, end.
- (19) Refuge from evil and wrong-doing. Cf. Sot. 21a.
- (20) Deut. IV, 41-45.
- (21) Cf. Shab. 30b, a similar incident about King David, and B.M. 86a, about Rabbah b. Nahmani.
- (22) Deut. IV, 43 and Josh. XX, 8.
- (23) Gen. XXXVII, 21 ff.
- (24) Deut. IV, 41. Cf. Num. XXXV, 14, where beyond the Jordan is not further described by toward the sunrising as here.
- (25) Taking יבדיל as 'let him separate,' in an exhortative sense, make now, immediate provision for the innocent manslaughterers' protection. Cf. Gen. XIX, 22-23; Ex. XXII, 2; Ps. CVII, 14; and Deut. Rab. II, 30.
- (26) By way of testimony, then began he already, while still on the east of the Jordan, to separate three of them. On this use of the imperfect with וַיִּסְּ see Driver's Hebrew Tenses, III * 27 (inceptive).
- (27) Eccles. V, 9.
- (28) I.e., although the selection then was (as yet) to no purpose, it was not vanity, but pious devotion to the cause that prompted him: half a duty early begun, was better than none. It would seem that R. Simlai read it interrogatively, He that loveth silver, shall he not be satisfied with (ready) silver (to be spent in a good cause)? (the same as the second half of the verse). The implication seems to be as follows: A miser gets no joy from his hoard, as a pompous fellow will soon deplete his income on his retinue: both are victims of their vanity; but not so one who has nobler desires, e.g., Moses, who was satisfied with attaining even half an achievement in giving early effect to the law of asylum, or, say, the erudite scholar who delights in distributing his great learning to large gatherings of hearers. These suffer neither pain nor loss, as their pursuit is not after vanity.
- (29) I.e., stores of knowledge Scripture, Mishnah and traditional lore.
- (30) I.e., interpreting it as if לֹא לֹו תבוֹאֵה cf. Gen. XXXVIII, 9, and Sot. 27b and 31a. The transition from the negative לֹא to the positive לֹו is by logical process and not due to variant MSS, reading (for which there is no evidence). The reasoning process is as follows: (a) Some spenders are not happy; (b) Some spenders (you say) are not happy? (c) Some spenders (I say) are happy; (a) and (c)-in formal logic — are technically in Sub-contrary Opposition (O and I), and are compatible. See B. Bosanquet, Essentials of Logic, Lect. VIII, and Adamson's Teacher's Logic, Ch. XX.
- (31) Ps. CVI, 2. The interpretation is that one should not be profuse in praising God as this might savour of adulation, bordering on blasphemy. Cf. Ber. 33b and Meg. 18a; and thus it is only he who is possessed of the best store of knowledge who may presume to expound and teach the Law of God.
- (32) Whose family was distinguished by many scholars. (5) R. Ashi and Rabina (see below) were the leading heads at Matha Mehasia, the former as the Principal of the Academy and the latter as his most valuable co-adjutor, at the half — yearly so-called kallah gatherings, held for the critical discussion and redaction of the Talmud.
- (33) Jer. L, 36.
- (34) An intended euphemism, so as to avoid the appearance of cursing scholars.
- (35) A play on the word הַבַּדִּים ha-baddim, translated above by boasters (deluded dupes). The root בַּד, בַּבַּד also means to be alone, separate, solitary, e.g., Gen. XLIII, 32; Ex. XVIII, 14, 18, and Lam, I, 1.
- (36) Num. XII, 11, wherein we have done foolishly and wherein we have sinned.
- (37) Isa. XIX, 13. Cf. supra 2 and 11 ff, which show that there will be no consultation or co-operation between the wise men of Egypt, with disastrous consequences. Discussion sharpens the wits of scholars and leads to the elucidation of the true bearings of the subject under consideration. V. Ta'an. 74.
- (38) Ps. CXXII, 2.
- (39) I.e., he renders בְּשַׁעְרֶיךָ 'by (virtue of) thy gates', not 'within thy gates', and by 'gates' again, he means the seat of the elders, the courts of law and learning. Cf. Deut. XVI, 18-20; XVII, 8-11; and Ber. 8a. King David is often represented rather as ardent scholar than as warrior. Wars were waged only to secure conditions of peace for study and devotion. (Cf. Ps. XIX, LXIII and CXIX.) In Ab. VI, 3, David is said (probably by the same R. Joshua b. Levi) to have shown great deference to a scholar in return for the least information.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 10b

that the word miklat [asylum] was inscribed at the parting of the ways so that the [fugitive] manslayer might notice and turn in that direction.

Said R. Kahana:¹ What is the Scriptural authority for that? Thou shalt prepare thee the way,² meaning, make you preparation for the road.

R. Hama b. Hanina opened his discourse on the theme with this text: Good and upright is the Lord, therefore doth He instruct sinners in the way.³ Now, if He instructs sinners⁴ how much more so the righteous!

R. Simeon b. Lakish opened his discourse [on this theme] with these [two] texts: And if a man lie not in wait, but God cause it to come to hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he may flee,⁵ and As saith the proverb of the ancients: Out of the wicked cometh forth wickedness; but my hand shall not be upon thee.⁶ Of whom does the [former] text speak? Of two persons who had slain, one in error and another with intent, there being witnesses in neither case. The Holy One, blessed be He, appoints them both [to meet] at the same inn; he who had slain with intent sits under the step-ladder and he who had slain in error comes down the step-ladder, falls and kills him. Thus, he who had slain with intent is [duly] slain, while he who had slain in error [duly] goes into banishment.⁷

Rabbah son of R. Huna reporting Rab Huna⁸ [some say,

R. Huna reporting R. Eleazar⁹ said: From the Pentateuch, the Prophets and the Hagiographa it may be shown that one is allowed to follow the road he wishes to pursue.¹⁰ From the Pentateuch, as it is written, And God said to Balaam, Thou shalt not go with them¹¹ and then it is written, [If the men came to call thee] rise up and go with them.¹² From the Prophets, as it is written, I am the Lord thy God who teacheth thee for thy profit, who leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go.¹³ From the Hagiographa, as it is written, If he is of the scorers, he will [be allowed to] speak scorn and [if] of the meek, he will show forth grace.¹⁴

R. Huna said that if a manslayer, on his way into banishment, was met and killed by the avenger, he is acquitted, because, he holds, the clause, and he — not deserving of death,¹⁵ refers to the blood-avenger. Thereupon an objection was raised: [It is taught]: The verse, ‘and he — not deserving of death’, is said of the manslayer.¹⁶ You say of the manslayer; maybe it refers to the blood-avenger?¹⁷ When, however, the text adds also, ‘inasmuch as he hated him not in time past’, you have to take it as referring to the manslayer!¹⁸ R. Huna follows another Tanna, as it is taught [in the following]: The clause ‘and he — not deserving of death’ is said of the blood-avenger. You say of the blood-avenger; maybe it refers to the manslayer? When, however, the text adds ‘inasmuch as he hated him not in time past’, the manslayer is already disposed of;¹⁹ what then can I make of the clause ‘and he — not deserving of death’ save that it refers to the blood avenger? [Now,] we learn, AND TWO [ORDAINED] SCHOLAR-DISCIPLES WERE DELEGATED TO ESCORT THE MANSLAYER IN CASE ANYONE ATTEMPTED TO SLAY HIM ON THE WAY THAT THEY MIGHT SPEAK TO HIM. What did they say to him? Did they not warn the avenger that if he killed the manslayer he would himself be deserving of death? — No, [not that!] as it is taught, That they might speak unto him appropriate words: they would say: ‘Do not treat him after the manner of shedders of blood; it was but in error that he had a hand in it.' R. Meir says: He may even himself plead his cause, as it is said, And this is the word [plea] of the slayer.²⁰ They say to the avenger, Much is effected [for Providence] by agents!²¹ The Master said: 'It was but in error that he had a hand in it'. Is that not too obvious a plea, because, if he had committed it wilfully, would he be a refugee? — Yes, he would be, as it is taught: R. Jose b. Judah says, that to begin with, every slayer, be it in error or with intent, was first sent forward to [one of] the cities of refuge. The Court then sent and had him brought thence. Whoever was found guilty of a capital crime, they had put to death, as it is written, Then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die.²² Whoever was found not guilty [of murder] they acquitted, as it is said, And the congregation [of judges] shall deliver the slayer out of the hands of the avenger of blood.²³ Whoever had incurred banishment, they sent him back to his place [of refuge], as it is said, And the congregation [of judges] shall restore him to the city of his refuge, whither he was fled.²³ Rabbi says [they were not sent in the first instance], they went [there] into banishment of their own accord, thinking that every slayer, whether in error or with intent, was afforded shelter, and they knew not that those cities [only] afforded shelter to those who had slain in error, but to those who had slain with intent, they afforded no shelter.

R. Eleazar said²⁴ that a city, the majority of whose denizens were [quondam] slayers, could not [by right] admit fugitives, because [in the ordinance] it is said, And he shall declare his words [cause] in the ears of the elders of that city,²⁵ that is, [declare] his cause, but not a cause like their own.

R. Eleazar also said that a city which has no [body of] elders could not [by right] admit fugitives, as the elders of that city²⁵ are required [by the ordinance] and these were not there.

It has been stated: The [legal status of the] city which has no elders was discussed by R. Ammi and R. Assi, the one holding It could admit fugitives, the other that it could not. The one who denied it the right of admitting fugitives argued that 'the elders of the city' were [an essential] requisite [in the ordinance]²⁵ and these were not there; the other, who accorded it the right of admitting fugitives, argued that it was merely [a statement of] what was requisite generally. The city which has no elders was again discussed by R. Ammi and R. Assi, one holding that a person could [legally] be charged there as 'a stubborn and rebellious son', while the other held he could not be. He who denied it the [legal] capacity of receiving the charge of 'a stubborn and rebellious son' argued that the elders of his city²⁶ were [an essential] requisite [in the ordinance] and these were not there; while the other, who accorded it the right of receiving the charge of 'a stubborn and rebellious son', argued that it was merely [a statement of] what was requisite generally. Further, the city which has no elders was likewise, discussed by R. Ammi and R. Assi, one holding that it had to bring a murder-atonement heifer,²⁷ and the other holding that it had not to bring a murder-atonement heifer. He who said that it had not to bring the murder-atonement heifer, argued that the elders of that city²⁸ were [an essential] requisite [in the ordinance] and these were not there; while the other who maintained that it had to bring a murder-atonement heifer argued that it was merely [a statement of] what was requisite generally.

The Hebrew and he — not deserving of death may refer to either the manslayer in the first instance, or to the avenger, in the second; hence arise the two opposite interpretations in the following discussion.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 11a

introduced by a strong [emphatic] term,¹ as it is written, And the Lord spake [directed] unto Joshua saying, Speak [direct] unto the children of Israel saying, Appoint for you cities of refuge, whereof I spake to you by the hand of Moses?² Because it was a direction to give effect to what had been ordained in the Torah. Does it mean to say that the use of the term dabber always denotes strong [emphatic] utterance? — Yes indeed, as it is written [explicitly], and he [Joseph] spake hard words to them.³ But, is it not taught [elsewhere] that in the passage, Then they that feared the Lord spake together one with another⁴ means none other than gentle discourse, and thus the verse says, He shall subdue [yadber] the peoples under us?⁵ — Yes; but Dabber⁶ is a form different from Yadber⁷ [with consequent different shades of meaning].⁸

R. Judah and our [other] Rabbis differ [as to the reason for the introduction of the strong term]: one thinking it is because Joshua must have somewhat delayed the appointment of those [cities of refuge]; whereas the other thinks it was simply because of its importance as being an ordinance in the Torah.

And Joshua wrote these words in the book of the Law of God.⁹ R. Judah and R. Nehemiah are divided on the interpretation thereof, one taking them as referring to the final eight verses of the Pentateuch,¹⁰ while the other takes them to be the section on the cities of refuge.¹¹ Now, according to the one who holds that they were the final eight verses of the Pentateuch, it is quite correct to say, [and Joshua wrote these words] in the book of the Law of God.¹² But, if they are taken to refer to the section on the cities of refuge,¹³ how do you explain the wording, wrote these words in the book of the Law of God? — We take them in this way: 'And Joshua wrote', in his own book, 'these words'¹⁴ [that are prescribed] 'in the book of the Law of God'.

[The fitness of] a Sefer[-Torah] whose parchment skins are sewn together with flaxen thread was a point of issue between R. Judah and R. Meir,¹⁵ one declaring that it is fit [for public use] while the other holds it to be unfit. The one who declares it unfit appeals to the verse, And it shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand and for a memorial between thine eyes that the Lord's law may be in thy mouth.¹⁶ The whole Torah is set thus side by side with Tefillin.¹⁷ [Accordingly we draw an analogy:] As in the case of Tefillin there is a statute [a rule in practice] received by Moses at Sinai in regard to the use of gut-string for sewing them, the same is to obtain in the sewing of Torah scrolls. And the other?¹⁸ — He applies the analogy only to the requirement that the parchment [for Torah scrolls] has to be made of skins of animals permitted as food [for Jews];¹⁹ but the argument from analogy is not carried so far as to extend to [subsidiary] 'rules in practice'.²⁰ Rab remarked: We saw the phylacteries in the household of my Beloved [uncle R. Hiyya], and they were sewn with flaxen thread. But, the halachah²¹ is not in accordance with his practice.

MISHNAH. IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER A HIGH PRIEST [WHO DIED] HAD BEEN ANOINTED WITH THE [HOLY] ANOINTING OIL;²² OR HAD BEEN CONSECRATED BY THE MANY VESTMENTS,²³ OR HAD RETIRED FROM HIS OFFICE²⁴ — ALL MAKE POSSIBLE THE RETURN OF THE MANSLAYER; R. JUDAH SAYS ALSO THE [DEATH OF THE] PRIEST WHO HAD BEEN ANOINTED FOR WAR²⁵ PERMITS THE RETURN OF THE MANSLAYER. THEREFORE, MOTHERS OF HIGH PRIESTS WERE WONT TO PROVIDE FOOD AND RAIMENT FOR THEM THAT THEY MIGHT NOT PRAY FOR THEIR SON'S DEATH.

GEMARA. What are the data [for the above statement]? — Said R. Kahana: They are [severally] indicated in the texts [the high priest being mentioned three times], And he shall abide in it unto the death of the high priest which was anointed with the holy oil;²⁶ again it is written, Because he should have remained in the city of refuge until the death of the high priest;²⁷ and once more, But after the death of the high priest the slayer shall return into the land of his possession.²⁷ And whence R. Judah's view? — It is written once again, [And ye shall take no satisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge] that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest.²⁸ And the other?²⁹ — Since the description 'high' is omitted therein, the last quoted passage is taken [by him] as [but a secondary reference to] one of the aforementioned.

THEREFORE MOTHERS OF HIGH PRIESTS [WERE WONT TO PROVIDE FOOD AND RAIMENT FOR THEM THAT THEY MIGHT NOT PRAY FOR THEIR SON'S DEATH]. The reason [given] is that the banished might not pray [for the high priest's death]; but what if they should pray, [think you] he would die? [Surely the saying is,] As the flitting bird as the flying swallow, so the curse that is causeless shall [not] follow!³⁰ Said a venerable old scholar: I heard an explanation at one of the sessional lectures of Raba, that [the high priests were not without blame, as] they should have implored Divine grace for [averting the sorrows of] their generation, which they failed to do. Others read in the Mishnah thus: THAT THEY MIGHT PRAY FOR THEIR SONS THAT THEY DIE NOT. The reason [given then] is that the banished should pray [for the high priest]; but, what if they did not pray [for him; think you] he would die? What should he have done [to avert it]? — As they say here [in Babylon]: 'Toby did the [bad] jobbing and Ziggad³¹ got the [hard] slogging,' or as they say there [in Palestine]: 'Shechem got him a wife³² and Mabgai³³ caught the knife.' Said a venerable old scholar: I heard an explanation at one of the sessional lectures of Raba that [the high priests were not without blame, as] they should have implored Divine grace for [averting the sorrows of] their generation, which they failed to do. Just as in the case of that poor fellow who was devoured by a lion some three parasangs from the town where R. Joshua b. Levi lived, when [the prophet] Elijah would not commune with the Rabbi,³⁴ on that account, for three days! Rab Judah reported Rab to have said that the curse of a Sage, though uttered without cause, takes effect. Whence is this obtained? From [the fate of] Ahithophel; because, when David was digging out the [Temple's] foundations, the Deep came surging up threatening to flood the world.³⁵

He [David] asked, ‘What [is the law]³⁶ about writing the Divine Name on a shard and throwing it into the Deep to [make it] keep to its own region?’ As no one made reply, he said, ‘Whoever knoweth aught on this topic and would not tell, may he be suffocated!’³⁷ Thereupon, Ahithophel reasoned thus in his own mind: If in the cause of restoring harmony between husband and wife³⁸ the Torah said: ‘Let My Name,³⁹ solemnly inscribed [in a scroll, rather] be blotted out in water’,⁴⁰ may that not the more readily be done for the [safety of] the whole world? ‘Yes, It is allowed!’ [exclaimed Ahithophel]. The Divine Name was thereupon inscribed on a shard and thrown in the Deep; It subsided and abode in its own region. Nevertheless it is recorded, And when Ahithophel saw that his counsel was not followed, he saddled his ass and arose and gat him home to his house, to his city and put his household in order, and hanged himself and died.⁴¹

R. Abbahu said that the curse of a Sage, though uttered without cause, takes effect — Whence is this derived? From the fate of Eli; because, Eli said to Samuel, God do so to thee, and more also, if thou hide anything from me of all the things He said to thee.⁴² Now, although it is recorded, And Samuel told him every whit and hid nothing from him,⁴³ nevertheless it is recorded, And his [Samuel’s] sons walked not in his ways.⁴⁴

Rab Judah reported Rab to have said that a conditional exclusion [even if self-imposed]¹ requires [formal] absolution. Whence is this derived? — From [the fate of] Judah, for it is written, And Judah said to Israel his father. 'Send the lad [Benjamin] with me . . . if I bring him not unto thee . . . then let me bear the blame² for ever.'³ And [on this theme]. R. Samuel b. Nahmani repeated how [his Master] R. Jonathan said: What are [the allusions in] the text, Let Reuben live and not die; and let not his men be few. And this [is] unto Judah, and he [Moses] said, Lord, hear the voice of Judah and bring him unto his people; let his hands be sufficient for him and be Thou an help to him from his enemies?⁴ All through the forty years that Israel remained in the wilderness, Judah's bones were jolted about in their coffin until [in the end] Moses stood up and supplicated for mercy on his behalf: Lord of the Universe! [said he.] Who influenced Reuben to make free confession [of his guilt]?⁵ Was it not Judah?⁶ 'and this [was due] to Judah! And he [Moses] said, Lord, hear the voice [appeal] of Judah.' Thereupon, joint slipped into socket. Judah, not having yet been ushered in to the Celestial College.⁷ [Moses again prayed] — 'and bring him unto his people'! Judah, being unable to parry in debate [through prolonged absence, Moses prayed] — 'let his hands [capacity] be sufficient for him'; being unable to disentangle [analyse or explain] intricate points raised in discussion, Moses prayed — 'and be Thou an help unto him from his adversaries'.

[ALL PERMIT OF THE RETURN OF THE MANSLAYER.] The question was raised: Does the text mean that a manslayer returns home at the death of all the [contemporary] high priests. or at the death of any one of them?⁸ — Come and hear: If his trial was concluded while there was no high priest [in office] . . . the manslayer can never come home thence.⁹ Now if it were as you suggest [alternatively], he would get home at the death of any one of the high priests!¹⁰ — [No! The next Mishnah means when] there is none [in office at the time].

MISHNAH. IF THE HIGH PRIEST DIED AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE TRIAL, THE SLAYER GOES NOT INTO BANISHMENT. IF HE DIED BEFORE THE TRIAL WAS CONCLUDED AND ANOTHER HIGH PRIEST WAS APPOINTED IN HIS STEAD AND THE TRIAL WAS THEN CONCLUDED, THE SLAYER RETURNS [HOME] AFTER THE LATTER'S DEATH. IF THE TRIAL WAS CONCLUDED WHEN THERE WAS NO HIGH PRIEST [IN OFFICE], OR WHERE THE HIGH PRIEST WAS THE VICTIM, OR WHERE THE HIGH PRIEST WAS THE MANSLAYER, THE SLAYER CAN NEVER COME AWAY FROM THAT PLACE [OF REFUGE].

HE [THE SLAYER] MAY NOT GO OUT THENCE TO BEAR WITNESS IN RESPECT OF SOME RELIGIOUS OBSERVANCE;¹¹ NOR AS WITNESS IN A MONETARY SUIT; NOR AS WITNESS IN A CAPITAL CHARGE; NOR EVEN SHOULD [ALL] ISRAEL HAVE NEED OF HIM, NOT EVEN IF HE BE 'CAPTAIN OF THE HOST LIKE JOAB B. ZERUIAH.¹² HE MAY NEVER GO OUT THENCE, AS IT IS SAID, 'HE FLED THERE'¹³ [TO INDICATE THAT] 'THERE' MUST BE HIS ABODE, 'THERE' HIS DEATH, 'THERE' HIS BURIAL. JUST AS THE CITY AFFORDS ASYLUM SO DOES ITS BOUNDARY AFFORD ASYLUM. IF A SLAYER WENT BEYOND THE BOUNDS AND THE BLOOD — AVENGER FELL IN WITH HIM, R. JOSE THE GALILEAN SAYS THAT FOR THE AVENGER IT IS A MATTER OF OBLIGATION [TO STRIKE]; FOR EVERYONE ELSE, A MATTER OF OPTION. R. AKIBA SAYS THAT FOR THE AVENGER IT IS A MATTER OF OPTION AND ANYONE [ELSE] IS [NOT]¹⁴ RESPONSIBLE FOR HIM.

GEMARA. [IF THE HIGH PRIEST DIED AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE TRIAL, THE SLAYER GOES NOT INTO BANISHMENT.] What is the reason for this [remission]? — Said Abaye: We infer it a fortiori. For what happens to a slayer who had already gone into banishment? He comes out [free] now [on the death of the high priest]. Is it not a [logical] argument to say that he who had not gone into banishment should not have to go at all¹⁵ on the intervention of the death of the high priest? But perhaps [there is this to be said, that] while he who had gone into banishment had [suffered for] his atonement, this one who has not [yet] gone into banishment has not [yet] been granted it? [No,] do you think it is banishment that procures atonement [remission of exile]? It is the death of the [high] priest that procures the atonement.¹⁶ IF HE DIED BEFORE THE TRIAL WAS CONCLUDED . . . THE SLAYER RETURNS [HOME] AFTER THE LATTER'S DEATH. Whence is this derived? — R. Kahana said: The text¹⁷ says, and he shall abide in it [the city of refuge] unto the death of the high priest whom he¹⁸ hath anointed with the holy oil. Was it he [the slayer] that anointed the high priest? But the implication is, that high priest who was anointed in his [the slayer's] days.¹⁹ What should the high — priest [the latter] have done [to avert the unhappy event]?²⁰ He should have implored Divine mercy for the slayer's acquittal, which he [seemingly] failed to do.

Abaye observed: We have it [on good authority]²¹ that if the slayer died on the conclusion of the trial, his bones [body] would be conveyed thither, as it is written, that he should come back to dwell in the land²² [until the death of the priest].²³ Now, what dwelling is it that is in the land [in the soil]? You are bound to say, the burial place. A Tanna taught: If the slayer died [in banishment] before the high priest, they convey [on the death of the latter] the bones [body] of the slayer to the sepulchre of his forebears, as it is written, [And after the death of the high priest] the slayer shall return to the land of his possession;²⁴ now, what return²⁵ is it that is to the 'land of his possession'? — You are bound to say, it is burial [in the ancestral soil].

exile could not depend on the amount of suffering involved (in exile), as one may have to spend a day, and another a whole lifetime in exile. Cf, also Tosaf. s.v. מִיָּדֵי Where the trial had been concluded and the [high] priest was then found [to be] the son of a divorcee or haluzah,²⁶ this case was discussed by R. Ammi and R. Isaac Nappaha; one said that [in effect] the priestly Office dies,²⁷ and the other said that the priestly Office has become void.²⁸

Could it be suggested that they were differing on the same point as that on which R. Eliezer and R. Joshua differed? For we learnt: If while engaged in offering on the altar, a priest is discovered to be the son of a divorcee or haluzah, R. Eliezer says that all offerings [hitherto] laid by him on the altar are become vitiated; R. Joshua declares them appropriate.²⁹ [Accordingly,] he who [in the former instance] held that the discovery meant [in effect] the death [of the priestly Office]³⁰ takes the view of R. Joshua; and the other who said that it has become void,³¹ takes the view of R. Eliezer!

XIX, 4 — Flee there and live, 'what is the lesson from the recurring there, there, there, three times? — (To indicate that there must be his abode,' etc. (cf. Tosef.). The phrase flee there occurs only twice in Deut. XIX, in verses 3 and 4, while in Num. XXXV, it occurs four times, namely, in verses 11, 15, 25, 26. On closer examination it will be found that only three of those passages, where the phrase flee there occurs, enlarge on the safety, rights or comforts of the refugee, namely, Num. XXXV, 15 (safety for all classes), verse 25 (to be escorted after trial and his right of residence there, unmolested, till the death of the High Priest, when he may return home), and Deut. XIX, 4 (that he flee there and live) which has been explained above as directing that he be provided with all amenities of life.

(14) See D.S. The negative is the authentic reading. Both forms, the negative and positive, mean practically the same thing, namely, that besides the avenger, it is nobody's affair to avenge the death of the slain; or (taken positively), everybody else, besides the avenger, will be held responsible for killing the slayer, i.e., it will be considered as murder, if deliberate, and as a case for banishment for the slayer, if by accident. See discussion on this text later. On R. Akiba's opposition to capital punishment, cf. supra 7a.

Rabbi says: A slayer defiles the earth (cf. Num. XXXV, 33-34) and causes the Divine Presence to withdraw, while the high priest causes the Divine Presence to abide with man on earth; is it not logical (to say) that he who defiles the earth should remain in the presence of him who causes the Divine Presence to abide with man on earth?' Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 12a

— [No;] accepting R. Eliezer's point of view, there can be no divergence;¹ whereas from R. Joshua's point of view, it may be argued that he who says that the priestly Office died, follows R. Joshua's view; and the other, who says that the priestly Office has become void might explain that R. Joshua considered all the [past] offerings as appropriate [for some special reason] because it is written, Bless, Lord, helo [his substance]² and accept the work of his hands,³ which [if read as hillo]⁴ means to include [the work of] even the profane [vulgarized] in his midst; whereas here [in regard to the liberation of refugees] even R. Joshua might admit [that the priestly office is rendered void]. IF HIS TRIAL WAS CONCLUDED . . . [HE MAY NOT GO OUT THENCE... NOT EVEN IF HE BE CAPTAIN OF THE HOST LIKE JOAB B. ZERUIAH . . .] Rab Judah reporting Rab said: At that hour Joab fell into two errors, as it is written, And Joab fled unto the Tent of the Lord and caught hold of the horns of the altar.⁵ He erred [once], as only the roof of the altar⁶ affords asylum and he caught hold on its horns; he erred [again], as only the altar of the permanent Temple⁷ afforded asylum and he caught hold on the altar at Shiloh.⁸ Abaye observed that he also erred in this respect, that the altar affords asylum only to a priest while engaged in actual service,⁶ whereas Joab was a lay person.

Resh Lakish said that the Prince [Guardian Angel] of Edom [Rome] is destined to fall into three errors, as it is written, Who is this that cometh from Edom with dyed garments from Bozrah?⁹ He will err [first], as only Bezer affords asylum, but he will betake himself to Bozrah [Bostra];¹⁰ he will err [again], as asylum is afforded only to slayers in error, but he slays with intent; and he will err [yet again], as asylum is afforded only to man, but he is an angel!

R. Abbahu said that the 'cities of refuge'¹¹ were not assigned for burial, as it is written, [And the cities shall they have to dwell in] and the suburbs of them shall be for their cattle and for their goods and for all their living,¹² meaning, assigned [only] for 'living' but not for burial.¹³ An objection was raised: THERE MUST BE HIS ABODE, THERE HIS DEATH, THERE HIS BURIAL. — The case of the slayer is different, because the Divine Law has [distinctly] indicated his [special] treatment.

JUST AS THE CITY AFFORDS ASYLUM SO DOES ITS BOUNDARY AFFORD ASYLUM. Against this some cited the following: [It is written,] And he shall abide in it,¹⁴ that means, In the city [of refuge] but not in its [outer] bounds?¹⁵ — Said Abaye: This is no difficulty; here [in our Mishnah], the point under consideration is [its domain] as an asylum, whereas there, [in the cited passage] it is [its limitation] as a domicile. But is not that [last] point to be derived from the fact that a 'Field is not turned into suburb, nor suburb into field; nor suburb into city, nor city into suburb'?¹⁶ — Said R. Shesheth: [Yes,] but we still need that other statement if only to debar subterranean retreats.¹⁷

IF A SLAYER WENT BEYOND THE BOUNDS AND THE BLOOD-AVENGER FELL IN WITH HIM etc. Our Rabbis taught: And the avenger of blood shall slay the manslayer, [there shall be no blood guiltiness for him];¹⁸ this means that it is an obligation for the blood-avenger [to slay the vagrant murderer]; if there be no blood-avenger, it is permissible for anyone¹⁹ [to do so]: these are the words of R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba says [it means] that it is permissible for the blood-avenger, and everyone [else] is [not] responsible for him.²⁰ What is the reason [for the view] of R. Jose the Galilean? — Is it written, if he shall slay him?²¹ And what is R. Akiba's reason? — Does it say, he shall slay him [yirzah]?²²

Mar Zutra b. Tobiah citing Rab said: If a slayer [who] had gone beyond the bounds [of the city of refuge] was met and slain by the avenger of the blood, the latter is slain on that account.²³ Whose view does Rab follow? It is in accord with neither R. Jose the Galilean nor with R. Akiba!²⁴ — It is in accord with the view of the following Tanna, as is taught: R. Eliezer says: [that the manslayer die not] until he stand before the Congregation [of judges] for judgment.²⁵ What does this teach? Since it is said, and the avenger of blood shall slay the manslayer,²⁶ one might presume that he [the avenger] may do so forthwith, therefore does the earlier text provide that the manslayer die not until he stand before the Congregation [of judges]²⁷ for judgment.²⁵ And what deductions do R. Jose and R. Akiba obtain from, until he stand before the Congregation? — They require that text for [another ruling], as it is taught: R. Akiba says: Whence may it be shown that, if a Sanhedrin had been eye-witnesses to an act of murder, they cannot themselves have him put to death until he stand for trial before another tribunal? From the instructive text, the manslayer die not until he stand before, the Congregation [of judges] for judgment, [which means, not] until he stood [for trial] before another tribunal.²⁸

Our Rabbis taught: But if the slayer do [verily] come out²⁹ beyond the border of his city of refuge . . . there shall be no blood guiltiness,³⁰ from this I learn, only a case of deliberate egress; whence do I derive that the same law applies for an unintentional strayer? From the instructive double-verb, which implies a coming-out anyway.³¹ But then, is it not taught [elsewhere], If [the slayer comes out beyond the bounds] deliberately, he³² is slain; if in error, he³³ goes into banishment? — This is no difficulty. One [Baraita]³⁴ is in accordance with the view that the Torah uses [occasionally] popular idiom;³⁵ while the other [Baraita]³⁶ follows the view that the Torah does not use popular idiom.³⁷ Abaye remarked: It seems logical to take the view that the Torah does [occasionally] use popular idiom, as you could not treat his later act [of accidental straying] more severely than his first act [of accidental killing], arguing: What is the law in his first act? If [the killing was] deliberate, he is slain; if in error [accidental], he goes into banishment. Similarly in his later act [of vagrancy], if the vagrancy was deliberate, he is slain [by the avenger with impunity]; if in error [accidentally], his slayer goes into banishment.

It is taught in one [Baraita]: 'If a father killed [a son], his [other] son becomes the avenger of blood.' Again it is taught in another [Baraita], 'One's [own] son cannot become the avenger of blood.' Now, could it be suggested that the first reflects the view of R. Jose the Galilean,³⁸ while the second reflects that of R. Akiba?³⁹ Can this be maintained? For whichever view you take of the avenger's role, whether that of the one who regards it as obligatory, or of him who says it is optional, is it admissible? Did not Rabbah son of R. Huna say, and the same is taught by one of the School of R. Ishmael: Never is a son [to be] commissioned [by the Court] to punish his father, whether it be to inflict a flogging or pronounce a [formal] execration on him, save only in the case of one who entices [another] to idol worship, because there the Torah says neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him . . . [but thou shalt surely kill him,] thine hand shall be first upon him!⁴⁰ But this [seeming] incongruity is not difficult [to explain]. One [Baraita]⁴¹ treats of a son [against a father], the other⁴² of a grandson against his grandfather.

MISHNAH. IF A TREE STANDING WITHIN THE BOUNDARY HAS ITS BOUGHS EXTENDING BEYOND [THE BOUNDARY]⁴³ OR STANDING WITHOUT THE BOUNDARY HAS ITS BOUGHS EXTENDING WITHIN, IT WHOLLY FOLLOWS⁴⁴ [THE POSITION OF] THE BOUGHS.⁴⁵

GEMARA. A point [of difficulty] was raised [from the following]:⁴⁶ If a tree standing within [the wall of Jerusalem] overhangs outside or standing without overhangs inside — the part which bends over the wall from the wall inwards is considered as within [the wall], and that part which bends over the wall from the wall outwards is considered as without [the wall]?⁴⁷

You cannot raise a point from [the law of second] tithes as against the [law of the] cities of refuge! [There is no comparison]. Tithes are associated by the Divine Law with the wall [of the Holy City]⁴⁸ whereas the cities of refuge are governed [in the Divine law] by [the principle of] domicile.⁴⁹ Now, it is the boughs that afford shelter of domicile, not the root of a tree.

Then the [same] point might be raised from another Baraitha⁵⁰ regarding [the law of] tithes, where it is taught: In regard to Jerusalem,⁵¹ follow the bough: In regard to the cities of refuge, follow the bough!⁵² — Said R. Kahana: There is no difficulty; one [this latter] citation presents the view of R. Judah, while the other [the former], adopts the view of the Rabbis, as is taught:

 - (16) Cf. 'Ar. 33b. The migrash (suburb) was an open common of 1000 cubits on each side of the city and another 1000 cubits beyond that, available for cultivation, and constituted the bounds of the cities of refuge. V. Num. XXXV, 4-5.
 - (17) Which do not encroach upon the actual bounds of the cities.
 - (18) Num. XXXV, 27. R. Jose — it should be noted — takes the last part of the verse as the consequence (apodosis) of the condition set out in verses 26-27, i.e., If the manslayer ventures abroad beyond the bounds of his place of refuge and is caught outside by the avenger, the avenger is to do his duty and kill him. R. Akiba carries the conditional part a little - further, namely, If the manslayer ventures abroad . . . and is found outside, and if the avenger (perchance) killed, then no guilt shall attach to the avenger, as the manslayer had run the risk to his own cost.

- (19) This is seemingly derived from the wording in vv. 19-21, where it is first ruled, the avenger of blood shall slay the murderer; when he meeteth him, he shall slay him (19), and then again, the avenger of blood shall slay the murderer when he meeteth him (21), that is, anyone. Cf. Sifre on those texts.
- (20) V. note on the Mishnah above.
- (21) I.e., the word if-אם- should have been repeated before the latter clause of verse 27, to make clear that it is part of the condition stated in vv. 26-27.
- (22) He shall slay, or let him slay, וְרָצַח instead of וְרָצַח= and '(shall) have slain', This argument (on the syntactical forms of the conditional sentence, if one do so-and-so, then such-and-such is to happen) finds ample illustration in this section, verses 16, 17, 18, 20-21, (yumath) — he shall die. R. Jose's way of reading finds illustration in vv. 22, 23, followed by another form (Perfect) in the apodosis 24, 25. Cf. Lev. XXV, 51 and 52, where the two forms appear side by side, and I Kings I, 52, where both forms are given side by side in the same verse.
- (23) Cf. Deut. XIX, 6, Lest the avenger of the blood pursue the slayer while his heart is hot.
- (24) Note that this indirectly supports the negative reading in the last part of the Mishnah, taken however to mean that it is not permissible for a stranger to kill the murderer, and yet he is not guilty of murder if he did.
- (25) Num. XXXV, 12.
- (26) Ibid. 27.
- (27) Consequently should the blood avenger kill him before he appeared before the court, he himself is slain, and similarly if he slays him on coming out beyond the border of the city of refuge.
- (28) The reason being that it is as much the duty of judges to save as to condemn (Num. XXXV, 24-25), and, judges having witnessed the act themselves, their minds are already made up before the trial commences; therefore, there is really no trial. V. R.H. 26a (top).

- (35) That is, the ordinary style without stressing the use of the double verb (v, n. 7 and 9 above): here it means simply, he came out and deliberately exposed himself to danger.
- (36) The former.
- (37) I.e., each word or particle has its precise significance, and the use of a double verb here is deliberate and indicates two kinds of coming out, intentionally and unintentionally. Cf. B.M. 31a ff; and Malbim, Introduction to Leviticus, No. 38.
- (38) That it is the stern duty of the avenger to avenge the blood.
- (39) That it is merely optional.
- (40) Deut. XIII, 9-10.
- (41) The second.
- (42) The first Baraita.
- (43) I.e., beyond the 2000 cubits about the cities of refuge on each side. Cf. Num. XXXV, 4-5.
- (44) As a sheltering zone.
- (45) That is, the root follows the branch, thus: If the refugee sat at the root within the bounds and the bough extends beyond the bounds, he is considered as outside the bounds. Again, if he sits at the root outside the bounds and the bough extends within, he is considered as within the bounds and is protected.
- (46) Ma'as. Sh, III, 7. The subject here is not the law of asylum, but that of the 'second tithe'. After the first dues to the priest and the Levite (cf. Num. XVIII, 24ff.) had been given (of 'corn, wine and oil' and other fruits), a further second — tithe was set apart by the owner for himself to be taken to Jerusalem and enjoyed there, or it might be 'redeemed', that is, commuted into money which was to be spent there on victuals. (Deut. XIV, 22-26.) Fruits of the second tithe may not be eaten outside Jerusalem without first being redeemed; and when once in Jerusalem they could not be redeemed and taken out again but had to be eaten there as holy food. Cf. infra 19b.
- (47) But not the root itself; whereas in our Mishnah it is ruled that the root follows the branch. Cf. p. 84, n. 8.

(48) Deut. XII, 17 and XIV, 26, and thou shalt eat there before (in the presence of) the Lord thy God, i.e, within the walls of the Holy City.

(49) And he shall dwell therein . . . Num. XXXV, 25, 28.

(50) תניא is more authentic than תנן as can be seen from the several references in Rashi, Tosaf., Nahmanides (and others) and probably alludes to Tosef. 'Ar. V, 7, rather than to Ma'as., III, 10.

(51) The order is reversed in the Mishnah; but the Tosefta has all three mentioned together; Jerusalem, the cities of refuge and the second-tithe as following the same rule. In all cases the tree and its branches follow the root from which they spring and draw their nourishment. In the three specific instances mentioned here also the branch is a deciding factor.

(52) In reference to eating under it or redeeming fruits of the second-tithe, or partaking of certain sacrificial meats, that are likewise permitted only within the sacred area of the Holy City. Cf. Deut. XII, 7, 12-15; 20ff.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 12b

R. Judah says: In the case of a cavern, follow its opening;¹ in the case of a tree, follow the bough.²

Let us grant [that we may legitimately suppose] R. Judah to apply this principle³ to the [second] tithes, where it would lead to a more strict observance, thus: If the root is outside [the wall] and the bough overhangs inward, [he maintains that] just as the owner may not redeem the fruits [of the second tithe] under the bough⁴ so he may not redeem those at the root. And again, if the root is inside the wall and the bough overhangs outside, [he maintains that] just as he may not eat the fruits [of the second tithe] under the bough without first redeeming them, so he may not eat even those at the root without first redeeming them. But, take now the case of a city of refuge; the application [of the same principle] goes perfectly well where the root lies beyond the boundary and the bough overhangs inside: just as the avenger may not slay the manslayer at the bough, so he may not slay him at the root. But where the root is within and the bough extends beyond, are we to say that just as the avenger may slay him at the bough he may also slay him at the root?⁵ Surely he [the manslayer] stands within? — Said Raba: [It might be;] nobody would dispute, where he [the manslayer] stands at the root [within the boundary], that the avenger dare not slay him; nor [would anybody dispute], where he stands at the bough [outside] and the avenger can attack him by means of arrows or stones, that he may kill him.⁶ But difference of opinion may arise as to whether the root may be regarded as [some sort of] ladder for [getting on to the]⁷ bough. In this case, one master⁸ considers that [part of the] root as a [mere] ladder for the bough,⁹ while the other master¹⁰ holds that the root cannot be considered a ladder for the bough.¹¹ R. Ashi says: What is the meaning of [the expression] 'it entirely follows the bough'?¹² It means, [follow] also the bough.¹³

MISHNAH. IF [WHILE A REFUGEE] HE SLEW [SOMEONE] IN THAT CITY [OF REFUGE] HE IS BANISHED FROM ONE QUARTER [THEREOF] TO ANOTHER;¹⁴ AND A LEVITE IS BANISHED FROM ONE CITY TO ANOTHER.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [It is written:] Then I will appoint unto thee a place whither he may flee;¹⁵ [the words,] 'then I will appoint unto thee' imply, during thy life-time;¹⁶ 'unto thee a place' means, in your place;¹⁷ 'whither he shall flee' indicates that the Israelites sent slayers into banishment while yet in the wilderness. Whither did they send them into banishment? To the Levitical camp. From this text, they ruled that if a Levite slew someone he was banished from one province to another; and that if he went into banishment to his own [native] province¹⁸ it does afford him asylum. Said R. Aha the son of R. Ika: What is the Scriptural warrant [for this rule]? Because he shall abide in the city of his refuge.¹⁹ [which implies,] the city which has already afforded him shelter before.

MISHNAH. SIMILARLY²⁰ A MANSLAYER, IF ON HIS ARRIVAL AT THE CITY OF HIS REFUGE THE MEN OF THAT CITY WISH TO DO HIM HONOUR, SHOULD SAY TO THEM,

‘I AM A MANSLAYER!’ AND IF THEY²¹ SAY TO HIM, ‘NEVERTHELESS [WE WISH IT],’ HE SHOULD ACCEPT FROM THEM [THE PROFFERED HONOUR], AS IT IS SAID: ‘AND THIS IS THE WORD²² OF THE MANSLAYER.’²³

(1) I.e., if the opening is within the city, it is intra-mural, even though the whole subterranean cavity lies outside; and vice versa, if it opens outside the city walls It is considered extra-mural, even though the whole subterranean cavity lies under the city within.

(2) So that both our Mishnah and the second Baraita (‘In regard to Jerusalem . . .’) are expressing R. Judah's view, that the root follows the branches. (Cf, nn. 3 and 8.) The Mishnah of Ma'as. Sh., on the other hand, gives the view of the Rabbis.

(3) Viz., that the whole tree including the root follows the branches.

(4) Because it overhangs within, and second tithes may not be redeemed in Jerusalem, but must be eaten there as such. Cf, p. 85, n.1.

(5) This cannot be maintained and the analogy (between Jerusalem and the city of refuge) breaks down, and consequently R. Kahana's suggestion that the Baraita (second citation, like the main Mishnah) is R. Judah's view (in contrast to that of the Rabbis in the first citation) does not remove the difficulty felt at first, as it leaves us with a new difficulty.

(6) Since the branch does not follow the root.

(7) By which the avenger might climb up (from within bounds) to grapple with the manslayer perched on the bough (beyond bounds).

(8) R. Judah.

(9) And he may climb up the root, though it is within, in order to get at him at the bough, just as he may slay him at the bough. The analogy consequently can be maintained.

(10) I.e., the Rabbis.

(11) And must not be used by the nearest of kin to get to the bough without.

(12) In our Mishnah, q.v.: and in the other Mishnah and Baraita cited.

(13) In the case of the second tithe and city of refuge, we follow in addition as a stringent measure also the bough, so that where the root is without and the branch within, the manslayer finds protection even at the root. And the same applies to the second tithe. In other words we always adopt the stricter measure.

(14) As he may not leave it without risking his life. Num. XXXV, 25-28.

(15) Ex. XXI, 13.

(16) Cf. supra 10a, R. Simlai's exposition of Deut. IV, 41ff.

(17) So some texts (v. D.S.), i.e, the Levite camp in the centre. Cf. Num. I, 50ff; II,17; X, 17.

(18) I.e., on slaying someone abroad he ran home for refuge. Maim. Yad, Rozeah, VII, 5. Or, if he slew someone in one quarter and he took refuge in another quarter of the same province.

(19) Num. XXXV, 18, stressing his, that is, his own home town becoming his retreat for safety.

(20) Some consider this word out of place here (and it is indeed absent in good texts), as being an unconscious repetition of an earlier Mishnah, Sheb. X, 8, where it effects a comparison. Others take it as connecting this Mishnah with the preceding, where it was indicated that a manslayer needs atonement by suffering, for instance, to be sent away from his town or district to another, and similarly he should abase himself when people wish to show him deference: he should tell them (sorrowfully), ‘I am a manslayer’. V. D.S.

(21) For this reading, v. D.S.

(22) Or (single) statement.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 13a

THEY USED TO PAY¹ RENT TO THE LEVITES: THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH; R. MEIR SAYS THAT THEY DID NOT PAY THEM ANY RENT. AND [ON HIS RETURN HOME] HE RETURNS TO THE OFFICE HE FORMERLY HELD, THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. MEIR; R. JUDAH SAYS THAT HE DOES NOT RETURN TO THE OFFICE HE FORMERLY HELD.

GEMARA. Said R. Kahana: The difference of opinion [on the question of rent] is only in regard to the [main] six cities [of refuge], as one Master takes the words, and the cities shall be unto you for refuge² [to mean,] for the purpose of refuge [and no more], while the other Master takes 'unto you' [to mean,] yours for all your needs; but, as regards the other forty-two [additional] cities³ they are agreed that they did pay them rent. Said Raba to him: The expression 'unto you' certainly implies here 'for all your requirements'! But, said Raba, the difference of opinion is rather about [the claim of] the other forty-two [additional] cities, one Master taking the words, and to them ye shall add forty and two cities⁴ to mean that these [additional] cities shall be for refuge [mainly, like the six], while the other master takes the words, and to them ye shall add forty and two cities to mean that just as the other six are for all your requirements, so are these [additional] cities [to be] for all your requirements; but as regards the [main] six they are fully in agreement that no rent was paid to them.

AND HE RETURNS TO THE OFFICE HE FORMERLY HELD etc. Our Rabbis taught: [It is written], And he shall return to his family, and unto the possession of his fathers shall he return;⁵ this means that he returns [strictly] to his 'family' [possessions] but he does not return to the station occupied by his fathers;⁶ these are the words of R. Judah;⁷ R. Meir says that he even returns to the station occupied by his fathers,[since it says] 'to the possession of his fathers', [that is, exactly] like his fathers. Similarly in the case of the exile, as the text says, he shall return, it is meant to apply the same rule to the manslayer [by way of allusion]. What is meant [exactly] by saying, 'Similarly in the case of the exile'? — It refers to what is taught [on the following text]: [And after the death of the high priest] the slayer shall return to the land of his possession,⁸ which means that he returns only to 'the land of his possession' but not to the station occupied by his fathers;⁶ these are the words of R. Judah;⁹ but R. Meir says that he returns also to the station occupied by his fathers, [and] he derives [this interpretation] from the use of the same expression yashub ['he shall return'], both here¹⁰ and there.¹¹

MISHNAH¹² AND THESE INCUR A [JUDICIAL] FLOGGING:¹³ ONE WHO CAME [CARNALLY] TO HIS SISTER.¹⁴ TO HIS FATHER'S SISTER, TO HIS MOTHER'S SISTER,¹⁵ TO HIS WIFE'S SISTER,¹⁶ TO HIS BROTHER'S WIFE,¹⁷ TO HIS FATHER'S BROTHER'S WIFE¹⁸ OR TO A NIDDAH;¹⁹ A HIGH PRIEST ON TAKING TO WIFE A WIDOW,²⁰ OR AN ORDINARY PRIEST ON TAKING A DIVORCEE²¹ OR HALUZAH;²² ANY ISRAELITE ON TAKING TO WIFE A MAMZERETH²³ OR NATHINITE²⁴ WOMAN, OR ANY ISRAELITESS BECOMING THE WIFE OF A MAMZER²⁵ OR NATHINITE.²⁶ IN THE CASE OF A DIVORCEE-WIDOW [A HIGH PRIEST] IS LIABLE ON TWO COUNTS,²⁷ BUT [AN ORDINARY PRIEST,] IN THE CASE OF A DIVORCEE-HALUZAH, IS LIABLE ONLY ON ONE COUNT.²⁸ ONE WHO WHILE UNCLEAN,²⁹ ATE HOLY MEAT³⁰ OR ENTERED THE SANCTUARY; ONE WHO ATE HELEB,³¹ BLOOD,³² OR 'LEAVINGS' [OF SACRIFICIAL MEATS],³³ OR PIGGUL;³⁴ OR [AN OFFERING] THAT HAS BECOME UNCLEAN;³⁵ , ONE WHO SLAUGHTERS,³⁶ OR OFFERS UP³⁷ A SACRIFICE, OUT-OF-PRECINCTS;³⁸ ONE WHO ATE 'LEAVENED [BREAD] DURING THE PASSOVER,³⁹ ONE WHO PARTAKES OF FOOD [OR DRINK]⁴⁰ OR DOES WORK ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT;⁴¹ ONE WHO COMPOUNDS INGREDIENTS [AS] FOR THE [ANOINTING] OIL,⁴² OR THE INGREDIENTS [AS] FOR THE INCENSE,⁴³ OR ANOINTS⁴⁴ WITH THE [HOLY] OIL FOR ANOINTING:

[AND THESE INCUR A FLOGGING etc.] This Mishnah [it should be noted] mentions instances of [a flogging for] such as incurred the penalty of kareth but not any of such as have incurred the penalty of death by sentence of the Court.⁵⁶ Whose is the view presented in this Mishnah? — It is R. Akiba's, as may be gathered from what is taught [in the following]: Both offenders who are liable to kareth, and offenders who are liable to death by sentence of the Court

 - (12) In this chapter the Biblical basis for a judicial flogging is considered somewhat at length. The main principle to be remembered is that, (a) every prohibited act must be clearly specified in Holy Writ and (b) the threatened punishment plainly stated. This Mishnah enumerates various types of offences that entail a judicial flogging at least.
 - (13) The list is incomplete (cf. Ker. I, 1), and mostly those that require comment are enumerated here. V. Rashi and Tosaf. As the Biblical references of each prohibition and its threatened punishment (if any) are to be indicated, it will be necessary to make use of the following notation: — B denotes — 'let him (her, them) bear his (her, their) iniquity,' i.e. bear the punishment for their sin, kareth, usually. q.v.; C denotes — threatened with the death of childlessness; D denotes — threatened with death by Divine dispensation; K denotes — kareth — כרת — 'cut off'; extirpation of the soul, v. Glos. It will be noticed that B, C, D and K amount more or less to the same thing, namely, Divine retribution; N denotes — No punishment prescribed in Holy Writ for the particular offence, though distinctly prohibited.

are alike subject to the sanction of 'forty lashes'; these are the words of R. Ishmael.¹ R. Akiba says that only those who are liable to kareth are subject to the sanction of 'forty lashes', because, if the offenders should betake themselves to repentance [before God], the Heavenly Tribunal would grant them remission;² whereas those who have become liable to death by sentence of the [human] Court are not subject to the punishment of 'forty lashes' because, [even] if they should do penance, the Earthly Tribunal would not grant them remission.³ R. Isaac says: Seeing that Holy Writ had [already] comprehensively declared all the offenders [in unlawful relations to be] liable to kareth,⁴ what object was there in reiterating that penalty [solely] in the case of [the brother with] his sister?⁵ To show that kareth is their penalty, not a flogging.⁶

What is R. Ishmael's reason? — It is written: If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law . . . and it is further written, then the Lord will make thy strokes pronounced.⁷ I should not have known what is [really] meant by this 'pronouncement' but when it states elsewhere: [If the wicked man deserve to be beaten] the judge shall cause him to lie down and to be beaten [before his face according to the measure of his misdeed by number . . . forty stripes]⁸ then I say that the expression, this 'pronouncement' has some bearing on the [judicial] flogging; and that passage is introduced by, if thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law.⁹ But if so, why not impose a [judicial] flogging also for [the neglect of] a positive precept?¹⁰ — It says, if thou wilt not observe to do, and this is the sense given by R. Abin as reporting R. Elai; for R. Abin reported R. Elai to have said that wherever the expression 'observe',¹¹ 'lest',¹² or 'do not'¹³ occur [in Holy Writ], it is an indication of a prohibited action.¹⁴

Then why not [give a flogging] for the contravention of a prohibition attended by no action?¹⁵ — It is written, 'If thou wilt not observe to do.' [Then again, why not give a flogging] also for [offending against] a prohibition which can be remedied by a [subsequent] action?¹⁶ — [An act entailing a flogging] must conform with the prohibition of 'Muzzling'.¹⁷

And what is R. Akiba's reason?¹⁸ — [It says,] 'according to the measure of his misdeed'¹⁹ [which means that] you make him liable to punishment for one misdeed, but you cannot hold him liable [in two ways as] for two misdeeds.²⁰ And R. Ishmael?²¹ — This objection applies only to such [diverse punishments] as a death-sentence and pecuniary compensation, or a flogging and pecuniary compensation; but death and a flogging [are cognate] as [flogging] is but a protracted death.²² But why should not R. Akiba, if [he] so [interprets the wording], exclude [from a flogging] also even those liable in kareth?²³ And if you argue: Suppose the offenders should betake themselves to repentance [before God], then [I retort], Now, after all, they have not yet done so?²⁴ — Said R. Abbahu: The Torah distinctly includes those who have incurred kareth among those who may receive a flogging; for we derive 'before the eyes'²⁵ from 'before thine eyes'.²⁶ To this R. Abba b. Memel demurred strongly: If so, why not include as well those liable to death by sentence of the Court among those who may receive a flogging, by deriving 'from the eyes'²⁷ from 'before thine eyes'?²⁶ — It is admissible to interpret 'before the eyes'²⁵ in the light of 'before thine eyes',²⁶ but hardly to interpret 'from the eyes' in the light of 'before thine eyes'. But what matters [such a slight variation in form]? Was it not taught in the school of R. Ishmael that the [variant expressions] and the priest shall come again,²⁸ and, and he shall go in [and see],²⁹ have the same import there [for the purpose of deduction]?³⁰ Nay, furthermore, one ought to be able to interpret, 'from the eyes of'²⁷ in the light of, 'before the eyes of their people,'²⁵ after having already been allowed to interpret, 'before the eyes,'²⁵ in the light of, 'before thine eyes'?²⁶ The explanation that R. Samuel son of R. Isaac [later] personally received from him³¹ on [the difficulty arising from R. Akiba's interpretation of] the text 'according to the measure of his misdeed' as meaning 'that you make him liable to punishment for one misdeed, but you cannot hold him liable [in two ways as] for two misdeeds', was that the verse refers only to penalties that are entrusted to Beth din.³²

Raba said:³³ Where the forewarning [to the would-be offender] was in respect of a death penalty, opinion would be unanimous that the offender should not be both flogged, and put to death.³⁴ The difference, however, arises where the forewarning was only in respect of a flogging. [In that case] R. Ishmael³⁵ holds that 'a prohibition which [has been stated to] serve as a forewarning to a capital sentence'³⁶ is [sufficient] warrant for the infliction of a flogging; while R. Akiba³⁷ holds that 'a prohibition which [has been stated to] serve as a forewarning to a capital sentence' is no warrant for a flogging.³⁸ But if so then even those liable to kareth should also be excluded [by him from the liability to flogging], since the prohibition [in regard to such transgressions has in each case been stated to] serve as a forewarning to kareth? — Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi: Thus said Abimi of Agrunia³⁹ in the name of Raba, that [would-be] offenders in a case of kareth do not require forewarning; the proof is that kareth is imposed for neglecting the rite of the Paschal lamb⁴⁰ and the rite of circumcision,⁴¹ although there is no [other] warning [in Holy Writ].⁴²

Maybe the forewarning is [inscribed in the Torah in case of kareth] for the purpose of a sacrifice,⁴³ as [might be proved from the fact that] the neglect of the Paschal lamb or circumcision, for which no forewarning is inscribed in the Torah, does not entail an atoning sacrifice? — [No,] this is not a correct reason [for the absence of sacrificial-atonement] in those two instances, but [there is another reason altogether]. It is because we find the sin of idolatry set in the balance against the entire [body of commandments in the] Torah,⁴⁴ and [from this we argue]: Just as the precept relating to idolatry is of the type 'Sit still and don't do it,' so any precept which is of the type 'Sit still and don't do it' [entails a sin-offering for its unintentional transgression], and we exclude these which are of the type 'Get up and do it'.⁴⁵

Rabina said: After all [the various explanations offered] we must come back

- (1) [It is assumed at present that the warning was both in respect of lashes as well as of a death penalty or kareth.]
 - (2) As the earthly Tribunal could not allow a serious offence to go unnoticed, the flogging is the least they can impose, leaving the rest between Heaven and the offender's conscience.
 - (3) And there would thus be inflicted two penalties — flogging and execution — for one offence. V. discussion later.
 - (4) Lev. XVIII, 29. For whosoever shall do any of these abominations (mentioned in detail in verses 6-23), even the souls that do them shall be cut off from among their people.
 - (5) Lev. XX, 17, imposing only BK and not death penalty as in the other instances.
 - (6) The end of the quotation. R. Isaac disagrees with both preceding views. The case of 'brother and sister' — he contends — shows clearly that each offence has its appropriate punishment (B C D K or Execution by Court) as indicated in detail in the parallel passage. Lev. XX. Flogging, in his view, is not warranted by the written law where another penalty is definitely prescribed.
 - (7) Deut. XXVIII, 58-59. 'Will make pronounced' has here a double import, (a) to make striking, extraordinary, surprising, and (b) pronounce, speak out clearly. Cf. Lev. XXVII, 2 and Num. VI, 2.
 - (8) Deut. XXV, 2-3. The strokes (lashes) had to be clearly counted out aloud 'pronounced' before each stroke fell, by one of the judges present at the flogging. Cf. infra 22b.
 - (9) I.e., a flogging is made incidental to any and every breach of the Written Law.
 - (10) E.g., for neglecting the rite of circumcision (Gen. XVII, 10ff. 14 K), or for neglecting to offer the Paschal lamb (Num. IX, 13 KB).
 - (11) השמר, be mindful, beware. Cf. Ex. XIX, 12 and Nahmanides on Ex. XX, 8.
 - (12) פן Cf. Ex. XIX, 21.
 - (13) לא a parallel word to לא; cf. Ex. XII, 9.
 - (14) 'Don't do it!' — לא תעשה in contrast to 'Do it!' - עשה, a positive command.
 - (15) V. supra p. 17, n. 3.
 - (16) V. supra p. 16, n. 9.
 - (17) Deut. XXV, 4, which is immediately subjoined to the ordinance of the flogging and is taken as the illustration, as a type of offence, namely as one involving action, and which cannot be remedied by a subsequent action.
 - (18) For excluding those liable to a death-penalty by human tribunal from a judicial flogging.
 - (19) With reference to flogging. Deut. XXV, 2.
 - (20) I.e., death and lashes. V. supra p. 16.
 - (21) What is his answer to this?
 - (22) Lit., 'a prolonged death.'
 - (23) [Seeing that there too two penalties are involved — kareth and lashes.]

- (24) Who can judge another's conscience, whether the repentance was sincere and acceptable to Heaven or not? [By flogging them they may thus have inflicted a twofold penalty!]
- (25) With reference to kareth. Lev. XX, 17, KB for incest.
- (26) Deut. XXV, 3, with reference to flogging. Thus equating the two passages by a Gezerah Shawah.
- (27) Num. XV, 24.
- (28) Lev. XIV, 39, when a house affected with signs of leprosy was under observation by the priest at intervals of seven days.
- (29) Ibid. 44.
- (30) That the treatment prescribed in the former instance (v. 39) be fully repeated in the second instance (v. 44).
- (31) From R. Abbahu or R. Abba b. Memel.
- (32) [As we have no cognizance as to the punishment or remission by the Celestial Tribunal. So that those liable to kareth, if warned in respect of lashes, are flogged.]
- (33) [Raba rejects the assumption on which the discussion was hitherto based, v. p. 93, n. 2.]
- (34) As the major (capital) penalty already covers the minor.
- (35) Who on textual grounds considers all offenders, even those liable to a death penalty, subject to flogging.
- (36) [It is a recognised principle that no transgression carries with it a penalty unless the relevant prohibition, 'thou shalt not', is explicitly stated in the Bible., v. p. 18, n. 5.]
- (37) Who excludes from a flogging all those liable to a capital penalty.
- (38) [Where the warning of the witnesses was only in respect of lashes.]
- (39) Or Hagronia, near Nehardea. Cf. Sot. 46b.
- (40) Num. IX. 13.
- (41) Gen. XVII, 13-14.
- (42) [Hence any explicit prohibition stated in the Law in cases of kareth is designed to serve as a forewarning to the penalty of flogging.]
- (43) [I.e., that the offender is to bring a sacrifice as atonement, but not in order to make him liable to flogging.]
- (44) Num. XV, 22-23: And when ye shall err and not observe all these commandments that the Lord hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, from the day that the Lord gave commandment, and onward throughout your generations . . . [This verse is explained in Hor. 8a, as referring to idolatry.]
- (45) The rites of the Paschal lamb and circumcision are Positive Commands, of the type, Get up and do it! [This then is the reason why no sin-offering is entailed by neglect of these precepts, and not because there is no explicit prohibition stated in regard to them, as the obligation of bringing an offering for a transgression is not determined by a forewarning being stated in the Bible.]

to the original statement [of R. Akiba], namely, 'that if those [liable to kareth] should resort to repentance the Heavenly Tribunal would grant them remission.' And in regard to the objection, 'Now, after all, they have not yet done so [i.e. repented]?'¹ [I retort.] The penalty of kareth is not [yet] decided² [either].

R. Isaac says:³ Seeing that Holy Writ had [already] comprehensively declared all the offenders in unlawful relations to be liable to kareth, what object was there in reiterating that penalty in the instance of [the brother with] his sister? To show that kareth is their penalty, not a flogging. And the Rabbis,⁴ how do they explain [the reiteration of the penalty of] kareth in the case of [the brother with] his sister? — It is to indicate the principle of Distributive Incidence, as instanced in R. Johanan's statement; for R. Johanan said: The Mishnah⁵ means to teach us that should one happen to commit all these offences in one spell of unawareness he would [on discovering his error] become liable [to a sin-offering]⁶ on each act, separately. And R. Isaac, whence does he obtain that distributive principle? — He derives it from [the text]: And thou shalt not approach unto a woman⁷ [one being] in the separation of her uncleanness,⁸ [which he takes] to indicate liability for any and every woman approached [while being in that state]. And why do not the Rabbis derive the principle from this [text]? — They do, indeed so. But [if so], what would be the purpose of the reiteration of kareth in the instance of [the brother with] his sister? — To indicate separate liability for the several offences⁹ — with his sister,¹⁰ his father's sister¹¹ and his mother's sister.¹²

[But] is not that obvious? Are they not diverse persons and of different denominations? — No; [I mean] a separate liability for [an unlawful association with] his sister, who is also his father's sister and his mother's sister.¹³ And [if you say], how is this possible? — It is possible in the case of a sinner the son of a sinner.¹⁴ And this last point, whence does R. Isaac derive it? — He obtains it by an [argument] a fortiori,¹⁵ as taught in the following: R. Akiba said: I [once] asked Rabban Gamaliel and R. Joshua at the fair held at Emmaus¹⁶ whether they had gone to buy an animal for the [forthcoming marriage] feast of Rabban Gamaliel's son: If one came [carnally] to his sister who is his father's sister and his mother's sister, what is the extent of his offence? Would he be liable once only for the several categories of the offence, or on each count severally? — Said they to me, This problem we have not heard, but we have heard the following: If one had come [carnally] to five [different] women during their term of niddah,¹⁷ in one spell of unawareness, [on discovering his error] he is liable [a sin-offering] for each one severally. And the point [you raise,] it seems, may be solved by an [argument] a fortiori [thus]: What say we in the problem of the niddah? That although each error is [a sin] of the same denomination, he is nevertheless liable [a sin-offering] on each act, severally; should he not all the more be held liable on each count where the sinful act falls under three different denominations? And the Rabbis [what say they]? — The [argument] a fortiori is not sound, for how can you argue from the niddah where several distinct persons are involved [to this where there is only one person]?¹⁸ And the other [R. Isaac] likewise accepts the refutation of that a fortiori; but he derives the principle of Distributive Incidence from the [redundant] expression of 'his sister' in the latter part of the same verse.¹⁹ And the other [Rabbis], what [say they] is the purport of repeating the expression — 'his sister' in the latter part of that verse? — They say, It lays down specifically the penalty of [a brother with any sister], his sister who is both his father's and mother's daughter, to indicate the [legal principle] that penalties inferred by argument are not sanctioned.²⁰

And the other [R. Isaac, whence does he derive this²¹ legal principle]? — If I may, I would say that he derives the penalty from the prohibition.²² Or, if I may, I should say that he derives it

(21) Having used that text (Lev. XX, 17) for another deduction, namely, as showing that the prescribed penalty in kareth-offences is kareth and not flogging, he cannot use the same again to teach that he is liable for his sister who is both his father's and mother's daughter.

(22) Ibid. XVII, 9 and 11. It is from verse 11 that he derives the principle, from the repetition of the words, she is his sister — i.e. be she half-sister or even sister-german. Just as in the verse laying down the prohibition all kinds of sisters are included, so likewise in regard to the penalty no distinction is made.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 14b

from the [redundant] expression of 'his sister' in the former part of the text.¹ And the other [Rabbis]?² — They require it to teach the principle of distributive incidence in the case of one who both compounds [the prescribed ingredients for the holy anointing-oil] and anoints therewith.³ And the other [R. Isaac]?⁴ — He shares the view of R. Eleazar quoting R. Hoshai; for R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshai said that wherever you find two prohibitions with the sanction of kareth mentioned only once, each lapse occasions a sin-offering on its own account.⁵ Or, if you wish, I should say that R. Isaac does not adopt the view of R. Eleazar⁶ as citing R. Hoshai, but he derives [the principle of distributive incidence]⁶ from the following text: And if a man shall lie with a woman [one] having her sickness.⁷ And the other [Rabbis]?⁸ — That text is required for another point, as reported by R. Johanan; for R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: How can it be shown that a woman is not [ritually] 'unclean' [as parturient]⁹ until the flux emerges through the normal passage? From the wording of the text: And if a man . . . uncovered the fountain of her flux⁷ which teaches that a woman is not 'unclean' [as parturient] until it emerges through its normal passage.

ONE WHO WHILE UNCLEAN ATE HOLY MEAT OR ENTERED THE SANCTUARY [incurs kareth and consequently a flogging]. This is quite in order where one while [ritually] unclean entered the sanctuary, because both the penalty and the [requisite] forewarning are written [explicitly]. 'The penalty,' — as it is written: he hath defiled the tabernacle of the Lord [that soul shall be cut off from Israel];¹⁰ 'the forewarning,' — as it is written: That they [the unclean] defile not their [holy part of the] camp.¹¹ But as regards the unclean who ate holy meat, the penalty, I grant, is written: But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings that pertain unto the Lord, having his uncleanness on him, that soul shall be cut off from his people.¹² But where is found the [requisite] forewarning for this? — Resh Lakish said [that it is found in the text:] She shall touch no hallowed thing.¹³ R. Johanan said that Bardela taught it [as derived] from the recurring expression of 'his uncleanness' [in two relevant passages].¹⁴ Here it is written: 'having his uncleanness on him shall be cut off,¹⁵ and in the other [context] it is written: He shall be unclean:¹⁶ his uncleanness is yet upon him. Just as in this latter passage [there is given] the warning and the penalty [if he does], so in the former [passage]¹⁷ we associate with it a warning and penalty. Now, we understand why Resh Lakish does not give the same explanation as R. Johanan, namely, that he had not received it on tradition from his master.¹⁸ But why should R. Johanan not accept the explanation of Resh Lakish? — He will tell you that the text, [She shall touch no hallowed thing]¹³ serves as admonition in respect of terumah.¹⁹ And whence does Resh Lakish derive the [requisite] admonition in regard to terumah? — He derives it from the wording: What man [person] soever of the seed of Aaron²⁰ is a leper or hath an issue [he shall not eat of the holy things until he be clean].²¹ Now, what [holy] things are permitted [as food] to the seed of Aaron alike? You are bound to say, terumah. And the other [R. Johanan]? — That passage²¹ refers to ‘eating’ of [terumah in uncleanness] while this text²² forbids touching terumah. But, how can Resh Lakish take the text, She shall touch no hallowed thing for that [stated] purpose.²³ Does he not require it to serve as forewarning against [the unclean person] ‘touching’ holy things as was stated: If a [ritually] unclean person touches hallowed [meat], Resh Lakish says: he incurs a flogging; whereas R. Johanan says: he does not incur a flogging. ‘Resh Lakish says he incurs a flogging.’ — as it is written: She shall touch no hallowed thing; ‘R. Johanan says he incurs no flogging,’ as that text is the forewarning against terumah!²⁴ — Resh Lakish can answer that the unclean who touches hallowed meat [is liable to a flogging], because the All-Merciful has expressed the prohibition of eating [hallowed meat] in terms of touching; while the warning against the eating thereof is deduced from the fact that ‘hallowed thing’ and the ‘sanctuary’ are placed in juxtaposition.²⁵ But yet [again, I ask,] did Resh Lakish base that view on this text? Does he not require it in reference to the question of one who eats holy flesh prior to the sprinkling of the blood [of the sacrifice] on the altar? For it has been stated: If an unclean person ate holy flesh prior to the sprinkling of the blood on the altar, Resh Lakish says he incurs a flogging; R. Johanan says he incurs not a flogging. ‘Resh Lakish says he incurs a flogging.’ — because of the warning, she shall touch²⁶ no holy thing, it being immaterial whether he ate of it before the sprinkling or after the sprinkling. ‘R. Johanan says he incurs no flogging,’ — he [R. Johanan] adheres to his own [line of] interpretation [after Bardela, namely linking as analogous] the two passages having [the expression of] ‘his uncleanness’ in common, and, [argues R. Johanan, the expression] ‘uncleanness’²⁷ is written in respect of the passage [sacrificial flesh] after the sprinkling!²⁸ — That [Resh Lakish] derives from [the comprehensive negative], [She shall touch] no hallowed thing.²⁹

It is taught in accordance with [the view of] Resh Lakish: ‘She shall touch no hallowed thing’ is the admonition to one [while ritually unclean] not to eat [of hallowed flesh]. You say it is an admonition against eating? Or may it perhaps but be an admonition against touching only? The text reads: She shall touch no hallowed thing nor come into the sanctuary, thus equating [by juxtaposition] ‘hallowed thing’ with [entering] the sanctuary. Now that which is [incurred by entering] the sanctuary [while unclean] namely — the loss of a soul [kareth],³⁰ so likewise all [the prohibitions in regard to ‘hallowed things’] involve as penalty the loss of a soul. But [if you take it literally, as an admonition against] touching, is there any instance where [mere] touching [holy meat] entails the loss of a soul?³¹ It cannot therefore mean but [contact by] eating.³²

[OR WHILE UNCLEAN ENTERED THE SANCTUARY.] Rabbah b. Bar Hanah reporting R. Johanan said: The contravention of any negative command which is preceded by a positive command, entails a flogging.³³

(1) Lev. XX, 17. The verse could merely have read: And if a man shall take his father's daughter or his mother's daughter, omitting his sister. R. Isaac thus derives three points from this one verse: (a) that kareth without a flogging is the prescribed penalty; (b) Distributive incidence of guilt, which he derives from the added description his sister, i.e., sister of any category (v. p. 99 n. 4); and also (c) liability for a sister who is both the father's and mother's daughter, this being derived from the redundant ‘his sister’ in the first part of the verse.

(2) How do they expound this redundant expression of his sister, in the first part of the verse?

(3) Ex. XXX, 32-33. Verse 32 forbids distinctly, either anointing (with holy oil), or compounding (the prescribed ingredients for it); verse 33 states the penalty of kareth for both jointly. Does it mean kareth (or a sin offering, if done in error) for doing both, or severally, for either act? As there is nothing here to show whether compounding and anointing (in one occasion) are (or are not) to be taken as two offences, the principle of distributive guilt deduced above from the redundant expression of his sister (in Lev. XX, 17) is made to apply here. [This is deduced on the principle of אם אינו ענין, if an expression has no significance for the context in which it occurs it is employed for the exposition of another suitable passage.]

(4) Whence does he derive the principle of distributive incidence in the case first mentioned?

(5) And so likewise here, since there is a distinct prohibition both for compounding and anointing with the holy oil the penalty of kareth is attached to each separately.

- (6) In cases outside those that come under the category of forbidden relationships.
- (7) Lev. XX, 18, where נִדָּח = niddah is used. Cf. p. 98, n. 5. And since it is superfluous here, the principle as applying to a menstruous woman having been already derived from Lev. XVIII, 19, as supra, it is employed for general purposes.
- (8) How do they expound this latter verse seeing that they derived this general principle from 'his sister'.
- (9) Ibid. XII, 2-7. She would not be ritually 'unclean' if parturition was effected by a Caesarean operation.
- (10) With reference to the unclean who enters the sanctuary. Num. XIX, 13 and 20, where 'sanctuary' is used instead of 'tabernacle', on the significance of which see Shebu. 16b.
- (11) Num. V, 3.
- (12) Lev. VII, 20.
- (13) Ibid. XII, 4, referring to a woman after childbirth who after a certain period has to purify herself and bring certain offerings.
- (14) By the method of Gezerah shawah, v. Glos.
- (15) V. p. 101, n. 8.
- (16) For seven days, if he had touched the dead, and may not enter the sanctuary so long as he has not been ritually purified with the sprinkling water and ashes as prescribed in Num. XIX, 11-13. If he enters unpurified he shall be cut off from Israel. Ibid. 13.
- (17) Lev. VII, 20 (cited above), where only the penalty of being cut off for eating the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offering during uncleanness is stated but not the warning.
- (18) The rule being that the method of Gezerah shawah cannot be employed on one's own suggestion. Pes. 66a.
- (19) Cf. note on the Mishnah. Terumah was eaten by the priest and the members of his household, his wife, sons, single daughters or even childless daughter, the widow of a non-priest and his slaves; but not while ritually unclean, Num. XVIII, 11-13. and cf. Lev. XXII, 11-13. Sacrificial flesh, however, (with some very few exceptions) was restricted only to the male priests, within the Temple area. Cf. Num. VIII, 9.
- (20) 'Seed of Aaron' means both sons and daughters.
- (21) Lev. XXII, 4-6 in reference to eating terumah. Verses 3-6 refer to officiant priests at making sacrifice.
- (22) Lev. XII, 4.
- (23) To act as forewarning in respect of eating holy things in an unclean state.
- (24) Thus we see that Resh Lakish requires the verse, 'she shall touch no holy thing, with reference to touching and not as warning against eating.
- (25) The Talmud text here is in slight disorder (v. D.S.); but the meaning is clear. The twofold injunction, She shall touch no hallowed thing nor come into the sanctuary, shows clearly how both are considered as equally grave offences. This point is more fully developed later.
- (26) Taking 'touch' eat, as shown lower down in the discussion.
- (27) With reference to the eating of sacrificial flesh in an unclean state, v. Lev. VII, 20.
- (28) Lev. VII, 20-21. Cf. Deut. XII, 27, where from the wording it is clear that the flesh may be eaten only after the sprinkling on the altar, v. Men. 25a. [Thus we see that Resh Lakish requires the verse, she shall touch no hallowed thing, to extend the penalty of flogging to the eating in an unclean state prior to the sprinkling.]
- (29) בְּכֹל קֹדֶשׁ לֹא תִגַּע, i.e., not any kind whatsoever. [This extends the prohibition and penalty to the eating of sacrificial flesh prior to the sprinkling, while the text itself is employed by Resh Lakish to serve as a warning in respect of eating whether before or after the sprinkling.]
- (30) V. Glos.
- (31) Lev. VII, 21 shows clearly that only eating after touching is punishable by kareth, ibid. XXII, 6, 16, and Hag. II, 11-13. 'Said R. Eleazar, is there any case where by mere touching one incurs kareth?' Sifra on Lev. VII, 20, and Zeb. 45b.
- (32) Which supports Resh Lakish.
- (33) [Even on the view that a negative command that is attended by a positive command with remedial effect does not carry a flogging (v. supra 4b), that is, provided the positive command can be fulfilled only after the contravention of the negative command, as in the case of nothar discussed loc. cit. But where the positive command could have been fulfilled before the contravention of the negative command, as in the illustrations that follow, there is no exemption from the penalty of flogging.]

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 15a

When he¹ was [subsequently] asked whether he had said that, he denied it.² Said Rabbah:³ God! he did say it; and furthermore, this is found in Scripture and we learn it [in the Mishnah, too]. ‘This is written : [Command the children of Israel] that they put out of the camp⁴ . . . and that they defile not their camp⁵ [in the midst whereof I dwell].⁶ Again, [bearing on this] we learnt: WHO WHILE UNCLEAN ENTERED THE SANCTUARY INCURS A FLOGGING.⁷ Why then did he⁸ retract [his statement]? — Because he found it difficult [to explain the case of] the Ravisher,⁹ as taught [in the following]: A Ravisher who put away his wife [by divorce], if he be a [lay] Israelite, he can take her back without receiving a flogging,¹⁰ but if he be a priest¹¹ he receives a flogging but does not take her back. Now, ‘if he be a [lay] Israelite he takes her back without receiving a flogging’, why,¹² seeing that this is an instance where a negative command is preceded by a positive command — why should he receive no flogging?¹³ — ‘Ulla said’¹⁴ [that the words], She shall be his wife¹⁵ could have been left out in the case of the Ravisher and have been inferred from the [somewhat analogous] case of the Defaming husband,¹⁶ thus: Since in the case of the Defaming husband, although he did no [tangible] act,¹⁷ the All-Merciful ordained that ‘she shall be his wife,’¹⁸ is not this injunction even more appropriate in the case of the Ravisher?¹⁹ What then, is the purport of those words²⁰ [in the case of the Ravisher]? [Consequently] if they are not [strictly] needed at the first stage,²¹ make use of them for the latter stage, to indicate that if the Ravisher did put her away [unlawfully], he must take her back.²²

But yet, no inference can be drawn from the case of the Defaming husband to that of the Ravisher because there is a refutation, namely, What is the [penalty of the] Defaming husband? He is flogged as well as amerced [one hundred shekels], [which is not the case with the Ravisher]! — Rather therefore argue thus: The injunction ‘she shall be his wife’ might have been omitted in the case of the Defaming husband, and inferred from the case of the Ravisher, thus: What is the [penalty of the] Ravisher? That although he is not flogged in addition to the amercement [of fifty shekels] the All-Merciful [nevertheless] ordained that, ‘she shall be his wife’;²³ how much more then should this be so in the case of the Defaming husband.²⁴ Why then were these words inserted? If they are unnecessary in the case of the Defaming husband,²⁵ utilise them in connection with the Ravisher; [and again], if they are not necessary for the first stage,²⁶ utilise them in connection with the latter stage [after the Ravisher had put her away].²⁷

[Yet again, I say] the case of the Defaming husband could not be inferred from that of the Ravisher, because there is a counter argument, namely, that the Ravisher has done a [tangible] act,²⁸ [which cannot be said of the Defaming husband]!²⁹ — Let us then rather [argue thus]: [The words] ‘she shall be his wife’ might have been omitted in the case of the Defaming husband, as she is his wife [already]. Why then, was it inserted there? If it is not essential in the case of the Defaming husband, transfer its application to that of the Ravisher;(*) and if it be not applicable there at first,³⁰ then it is to be applied to the latter stage [after he unlawfully put her away].³¹

But why not argue thus: As this order is not essential at the first stage of the Defaming husband,³² let it be referred to himself in the latter stage, so that he [the Defaming husband] receives [therefore] no flogging?³³ — Indeed, you might argue thus, and then apply the same conclusion to the Ravisher³¹ [You say, ‘Indeed’? Let us see,] by what [process of argument] is this derived? Whether by an a fortiori³⁴ or by analogy;³⁵ there is the counter argument already mentioned; [viz.:] What is the case of the Defaming husband? He has done no [tangible] action, which is not the case with³⁶ the Ravisher!

But [no], said Raba;³⁷ [the explanation must be sought in] the expression ‘all his days,’³⁸ , [which means that] ‘all his days’ he has the Scriptural demand upon him to ‘Get up and take her back.’³⁹ Likewise, when Rabin came [from Palestine], he reported R. Johanan to have said that during ‘all his days’ there is the demand upon him to get up and take her back. Said R. Papa to Raba: But [in fact] the prohibition [contained in this combination of a negative command preceded by a positive] does not conform to the [standard] negative [command] against Muzzling [the ox]!⁴⁰ — Replied Raba: Why should the additional [charge of a] Do!⁴¹ by the All-Merciful, minimize [the force of the prohibition]?⁴² [Said R. Papa:] If that is your view, then why not say likewise, in the case of a prohibition translated into [remedial] action,⁴³ why should the additional charge of a Do! by the All-Merciful minimize [the force of] the prohibition? — Replied Raba: There, the positive command comes to remove⁴⁴ [the effects of the contravention of] the prohibition.⁴⁵

That [explanation]⁴⁶ harmonizes with the view of those who say that [the flogging depends on] whether the transgressor has nullified,⁴⁷ or not nullified [his chance of making redress]; but according to those who say that [the flogging depends on] whether he had carried out, or not carried out⁴⁸ [the act of redress], what explanation does it afford?⁴⁹

(1) Rabbah b. Bar Hanah.

(2) As he retracted from the ruling he reported in the name of his teacher R. Johanan.

(3) Var. lec.: Raba.

(4) The positive (part of the) command, here.

(5) The negative (part of the) command, here, enforcing the positive ordinance above. The ‘camp’ is here defined by ‘in the midst whereof I dwell’ and means the Tabernacle (cf. Ex. XXV, 8, and XXIX, 42-46). which was situated in the centre, there having been three camps: the priests’ in the centre, then the Levites’ and around these the Israelitish camp. V. Num. I, 50 ff; II, 17.

(6) Num. V, 2-3.

(7) [Although this is a case where a positive command (v. n. 1) attends a negative command (v. n. 2) there is nevertheless a flogging, because the former command, to put out of the camp, could be carried out even before the contravention of the negative prohibition, that they defile not the camp, by the unclean man who entered the sanctuary, i.e., by preventing his entry therein — which supports the principle formulated by R. Johanan as reported by Rabbah b. Bar Hanah.]

(8) Rabbah b. Bar Hanah.

(9) Deut. XXII, 29. A similar case of a negative preceding a positive command.

(10) Having made amends.

(11) As he is forbidden to marry a divorcee. Lev. XXI, 7, 14.

(12) Assuming that the principle enunciated by R. Johanan stands.

(13) For having unlawfully put her away. Holy Writ ordains: And she shall be his wife because he humbled her; he may not put her away all his days. Deut. XXII, 29. And it was this difficulty that constrained Rabbah b. Bar Hanah to retract.

(14) ‘Ulla attempts to explain this Baraitha on the view of R. Johanan.

(15) Deut. XXII, 29.

(16) Deut. XXII, 13-19, a similar case.

(17) Defamation is not considered a bodily injury. v. p. 17, n. 5.

(18) Deut. XXII, 19.

(19) Who committed a bodily assault.

(20) The words, ‘she shall be his wife’.

(21) As he is expected to marry her, and generally, the ravisher does.

(22) Therefore, this is really a case of the type of a prohibition translated into (remedial) action, for which there is no flogging.

(23) Deut. XXII, 18-19. An exceptionally severe penalty, whereas the Ravisher is not flogged at all and only pays half the amount! The case can hardly be taken as analogous. [Consequently, the words ‘she shall be his wife’ may still refer to the first stage, affording thus no indication that by remarrying her after the divorce he remedies the offence he committed by putting her away.]

(24) Who is much more severely punished, being flogged and amerced a hundred shekels of silver.

(25) As it can be deduced from Ravisher.

(26) As he is expected to marry her.

(27) Therefore, this is really a case of the type of a prohibition translated into (remedial) action, for which there is no flogging. V. supra p. 105. n. 11.

(28) A bodily injury, unlike the Defamer.

(29) Cf. p. 106, n. 106 (end).

(30) V. p. 106, n. 9.

(31) V. p. 106, n. 10.

(32) As she is his wife already.

(33) [But there is still no scriptural warrant exempting a Ravisher from a flogging, unless R. Johanan's principle is rejected.]

(34) If the Defamer who was flogged (in the first instance) as well as amerced a hundred shekels can take back his wife and is not flogged for divorcing his wife if he remarries her, should not the Ravisher, who receives no flogging (in the first instance) and is amerced only half, fifty shekels be exempted from a flogging for divorcing his wife if he remarries her.

(35) מה מצינו

(36) V. supra p. 106 (end).

(37) As the attempted explanations so far have not been satisfactory, and the ruling of the cited Baraita, namely, that a (lay) Israelite Ravisher is not flogged if he takes back his wife (for having flouted the prohibition to put her away) is still unexplained according to R. Johanan's principle, Raba offers one.

(38) He may not put her away all his days, Deut. XXII, 29 (cf. verse 19), on the reading adopted. v. D.S.

(39) I.e., he can at all times by remarrying her remedy the offence he committed in divorcing her and for this reason he is not flogged.

(40) Deut. XXV, 4, which is taken as the typical instance of an action that involves the penalty of a flogging (ordained in verses 2-3, there): (cf. the exposition on this above, 13b) and which is not preceded by a positive command.

(41) I.e., the addition of the positive command.

(42) No longer to entail a flogging, like any ordinary prohibition, i.e., like a pure negative.

(43) E.g., Ex. XII, 'And ye shall let nothing of it (the roast meat of the Paschal lamb) remain until the morning; but that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.' Cf. supra 4b.

(44) לנתוקי (Rashi). Nahmanides and others read לתקוני 'to amend'.

(45) As some sort of amends allowed by the Law for some omissions. Cf. supra 13b.

(46) Of Raba (supported by Rabin) namely, that the expression 'all his days' indicates that he can at all times remedy the offence by remarriage.

(47) Supposing he made remarriage absolutely impossible, e.g. by killing her, or getting her married (by ruse) to another man. (These instances create serious difficulties in other directions, raised later.) But, so long as he has not nullified the chance of remedying the offence, he might defer (the act of) redress to some later time.

(48) Forthwith, without delay.

(49) Because he should be flogged immediately when bidden by the court to remarry the wife and does not do so.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 15b

— Has not this [explanation been given] as reason for R. Johanan's view?¹ But surely it was R. Johanan [himself] who told a tanna:² If he has nullified [his chance of making redress], he is liable; and if he has not nullified it, he is exempt! Because [once] a tanna recited³ in the presence of R. Johanan: Whenever a negative precept involves the fulfilment of a positive action,⁴ then, if the offender has carried out the positive action he is exempt; if he has nullified [his chance of carrying out] the positive action he is liable. [Thereupon] R. Johanan [corrected him] saying: What did you say? 'That if he carried out the positive act he is exempt', [which implies that] if he did not carry it out he is liable [and that] 'if he has nullified [his chance of carrying out] the positive act he is liable', which implies that if he has not nullified [his chance of carrying out] the positive act he is exempt?⁵ [Not so]. Teach thus: 'If he has nullified it [he is liable], and if he has not nullified it [he is exempt].'⁶ And Resh Lakish, [on the other hand,] says that [the flogging depends on] whether he [the transgressor] has carried out, or has not carried out [the requisite act of redress]. What is the point at issue between them? — The question of a dubious warning,⁷ one Master taking the view that a dubious warning may be called [in law] a warning,⁸ while the other Master takes the view that a dubious [warning] is not called [in law] a warning.⁹ And they follow each his point of view [in several discussions], for it has been stated: [If one said, 'I take] an oath that I shall eat this loaf to-day,' and the day passed and he ate it not, both R. Johanan and Resh Lakish concur that he is not [to be] flogged. R. Johanan says he is not flogged

(1) [It was R. Johanan's view imposing a flogging for the contravention of a negative command preceded by a positive command that gave rise to the question from a Ravisher and it was in reply to this question that Raba gave the explanation. Var. lec. reverse the reading: 'That is in order according to the view (that flogging is determined by whether) he has or has not carried out (the act of redress) but what is there to say on the view (that it depends on whether) he has or has not nullified (his chance of making redress)?' The question will accordingly refer to the last statement of Raba that the positive command comes to remove (the effects of the contravention of) the prohibition. Now this answer of Raba to R. Papa's question will be in accord with the former view, but on the latter view that although he has actually carried out the act of redress, but provided he has not cut off all chance of doing so, there is no flogging, the reason being that the prohibition does not conform to that of muzzling, the question of R. Papa remains unanswered. According to this variant preserved by R. Han., among others the statement of R. Johanan to the tanna which follows on should run: 'Teach, If he has carried it out he is liable, if he has not carried it out he is exempt.']

(2) V. Glos.

(3) A Baraitha, cf. Tosef, Mak. IV, 6.

(4) Lit., 'Rise and do', v. infra, p. 113. A combination of a negative and positive precept, v. pp. 112f.

(5) That is, showing him that such a wording involves directly contradictory conclusions. The first part yields an inference that if he carried it out immediately, he is exempt, while delay means a flogging; while the second yields the opposite conclusion, that as long as the prescribed course of redress is possible, he is exempt from a flogging.

(6) On variant, v. supra n. 1.

(7) A warning, to entail a judicial flogging, must be definite and direct to prevent an immediate breach of law; a merely pious remonstrance against some breach which may happen sometime, sooner or later, is dubious, indefinite and ineffective legally.

(8) [I.e., R. Johanan, who holds that it all depends whether or not he has nullified his chance, considers a dubious warning to be a warning, and consequently although at the time of the transgression it is not known whether he will cut off his chance of remedying the offence, he is nevertheless flogged when the circumstance arises.]

(9) [Resh Lakish holds that a dubious warning is not considered a warning and so he becomes liable to a flogging only when he is confronted by the order of the court to carry out the act of redress and refuses to do so. According to variant given p. 109. n. 1, interpret thus: R. Johanan holds that a dubious warning is considered a warning, and the transgressor can accordingly be warned at the time of the transgression, making him liable to the penalty on his failure to carry out the act of redress; whereas Resh Lakish holds that a dubious warning is considered no warning, consequently it is only when he is warned as he is about to nullify his chance of making redress that the warning is effective in making him liable to flogging.]

because this was [transgressing] a prohibition without [tangible] action [on his part],¹ and a prohibition [contravened] without [tangible] action does not involve a flogging. Resh Lakish [on the other hand] says he is not flogged, because the warning in this case is dubious [in character]² and a dubious warning is not [legally] regarded as a warning. And both base their views on statements of R. Judah's,³ as it is taught: And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; but that which remaineth of it till the morning ye shall burn with fire.⁴ Scripture comes here providing a [positive] act to follow [in the wake of] a prohibition,⁵ thereby indicating that here no flogging is to be inflicted: these are the words of R. Judah; [etc.].⁶ Now R. Johanan argues thus: The reason [why no flogging is given here] is [only] because Scripture comes [with the direction of a positive act after the contravened prohibition]; but if Scripture had not come [and made here] this special provision, he [the offender] would have been given a flogging;⁷ this implies that a dubious warning is [legally] a warning.⁸ Resh Lakish [on the other hand] argues thus: The reason [that no flogging is given here] is because Scripture comes [with the direction of a positive act as following the contravened prohibition]; but if Scripture had not come [and made such provision here], he would receive a flogging; this implies that a prohibition [contravened] without [tangible] action entails a flogging.⁹ But according to R. Simeon b. Lakish, surely this too also is a [good] instance of dubious warning?¹⁰ — He bases his view [on this point] on another statement of R. Judah's, as it is taught: If one [maliciously] wounded first one husband [of his mother's] and then the other husband [of hers],¹¹ or invoked a Divine imprecation,¹² first on the one and then on the other, or wounded them both simultaneously, or cursed them both simultaneously, he is liable.¹³ R. Judah says, of [he did so] to both simultaneously,¹⁴ he is liable; if to one after the other, he is not liable.¹⁵

And according to R. Johanan surely this too is a [good] instance of a prohibition [contravened] without [tangible] action?¹⁶ — On this [particular] point, his [R. Johanan's] view is in accordance with what R. Idi b. Abin stated, in the name of R. Amram who reported R. Isaac as reporting R. Johanan to have said that R. Judah, citing the name of R. Jose the Galilean, said: 'In all prohibitions of the Torah, a prohibition involving [tangible] action entails a flogging; a prohibition not involving [tangible] action, does not entail a flogging, save in the case of one who takes an oath [and does not fulfil it];¹⁷ one who commutes [one gift promised to the Sanctuary with another]¹⁸ or invokes a Divine imprecation on his fellow.'¹⁹ Then, is not one statement of R. Judah contradicting another!²⁰ — [The divergence in the statements] of R. Judah's according to R. Simeon b. Lakish [on the question of a dubious warning] may be taken as two [different] versions²¹ of R. Judah's [original] statement; again, [the divergence in R. Judah's statements] according to R. Johanan is not difficult to explain, as one may be taken as his own [R. Judah's] view and the other as that of his Master [R. Jose the Galilean].

We learnt elsewhere:²² 'If one takes the dam with the young, R. Judah says he is flogged,²³ and he does not send the dam free; but the Sages say that he lets the dam go,²⁴ and receives no flogging. This is the general principle, Whenever a negative command involves the fulfilment of a positive action²⁵ there is no flogging for contravention.' R. Johanan observed: We have only this instance and one other.²⁶ R. Eleazar asked him: Where? — When you find it [you will know], was the reply. He left him, made careful search and found [the following], as it is taught: A Ravisher who put away his wife [by divorce], if he be a [lay] Israelite, takes her back without receiving a flogging; if he be a priest, he receives flogging²⁷ but does not take her back. Now this accords well on the view that teaches [the flogging depends on] whether the transgressor had carried out,²⁸ or not carried out [the act of redress];²⁹ but what about the view that teaches that [it depends on] whether he has nullified, or not nullified [his chance of making redress]?³⁰ [True,] this [principle] applies well enough to the case of sending away the dam;³¹ but in the case of the Ravisher, how is the principle 'whether he had nullified, or had not nullified [his chance of making redress]' applicable? If [for instance], he killed his wife, he is liable to the severer penalty [of death]³² — R. Shimi of Mahuza suggested that, for instance, he accepted on her behalf a betrothal token³³ from another man. Said Rab: [Let us see:] If she had made him³⁴ her attorney, it is the woman who nullified [the chance of] redress; and if she had not made him her attorney — can he do anything of the kind? It would be futile [on his part]! — But said R. Shimi of Nehardea: [Let us say,] for instance, that he took a solemn vow publicly [that he would never again live with her]. That [suggestion] is compatible with the opinion held that a vow made publicly is not subject to [formal] rescission; but, according to the opinion that a vow made publicly is subject to [formal] rescission,³⁵ what can you then say? — That he made it dependent on the consensus of the public, as Amemar stated: The law is that a vow made in public is subject to [formal] rescission, but if made dependent on the consensus of the public, it is not subject to [formal] rescission.³⁶

And are there not other instances? (Mnemonic: Larceny, Pledge, Corner.) There is the case of Larceny, where the All-Merciful ordained, Thou shalt not oppress [withhold from] thy neighbour nor rob him,³⁷ and then [elsewhere] directs, That he shall restore that which he took by robbery!³⁸ Then again, there is the case of the Pledge, where the All-Merciful ordained, Thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge, and then [follows], Thou shalt stand without . . . thou shalt surely restore to him the pledge when the sun goeth down!³⁹ And do not these instances fit equally well [if we say that the flogging depends on] whether the transgressor has carried out, or not carried out [the act of redress], or whether he had nullified or not nullified [his chance of making redress]?⁴⁰ — [True,] but⁴¹ as [amends can be made] here by a monetary compensation [if he destroyed the pledge], he is not liable to both a flogging and compensation.⁴² To this R. Zera demurred: What if the pledge⁴³ belonged to a proselyte,⁴⁴ who has since died?

(1) Sheer dilatoriness, by omitting to do what he intended.

(2) Merely a friendly reminder not to forget, which the vower might in all sincerity have intended to fulfil, had he not inadvertently forgotten or been prevented till the time had gone by.

(3) Lit., 'according to the heart (intention) of R. Judah.'

(4) Ex. XII, 10. The meat left over is termed 'nothar'.

(5) To burn the remaining meat.

(6) V. supra p. 17.

(7) That is R. Judah's interpretation.

(8) I.e., by saying that were it not for the special dispensatory action provided, he would receive a flogging, and notwithstanding the fact that from the nature of the case the warning must be dubious and indefinite as to the exact time of its application, it is yet sufficient (judicially) for a flogging.

(9) But it affords no proof that a dubious warning should be considered a warning.

(10) Thus proving that it is a warning.

(11) The woman, divorced from her first husband, was married to another man rather soon and gave birth to this son prematurely. It was doubtful whether this child was a premature child of the second husband, or a mature child of the first, either man thus being a possible father. The warning that wounding a parent was a capital offence (Lev. XXI, 15), was here a dubious warning, in regard to whom it actually applied, maybe this one or the other.

(12) Thus cursing a parent with the Divine Name pronounced, was also a capital offence, cf. ibid. verse 17. Shebu. 36a, and supra p. 52, n. 1.

(13) To the death penalty.

(14) If the warning given to the son was concerning both men, and he with one deliberate aim and stroke wounded both men simultaneously, one of them was certainly his father whom he injured.

(15) Which implies that a dubious warning is regarded as no adequate (legal) warning, according to R. Judah.

(16) [The reference is to the 'leavings' nothar, (v. p. 111), from which R. Johanan infers that R. Judah holds that a dubious warning is considered a warning, why does he not also deduce that a prohibition involving no tangible action entails a flogging seeing that nothar too involves no action?]

(17) For fuller discussion on this point. v. Shebu. 21a; Tem. 3a.

(18) V. Lev. XXVII, 9-10. and Tem. 3a ff.

(19) V. p. 52. n. 1.

(20) On both issues, as regards a flogging in the case of an offence without action and the dubious warning, according to the respective implications in the statements of R. Judah which R. Johanan and Resh Lakish interpret each in his own way.

(21) Lit., 'two Tannaim'.

(22) Hul. 141a. cf. also supra 17a, where in the course of the discussion it is shown that R. Judah took that ordinance as a positive preceding a negative. viz., If you chance on a bird's nest, first, 'send away the mother bird and take the young' (positive); next, 'Thou shalt not take the dam with the young' (negative).

(23) For having contravened the above prohibition; and as the dam had been taken and the offender was punished for the offence, the matter is at an end.

(24) As an act of redress, v. next note.

(25) I.e., wherever the positive provides the (way of making) amends, and escaping the flogging.

(26) Although it is stated in the Mishnah as a 'general principle' where the exemption from flogging depends on the fulfilment of the positive command.

(27) Because as a priest, by divorcing her, he nullified his chance of making redress.

(28) V. p. 109, n. 1.

- (29) E.g., the lay-Israelite, who remarries her and escapes the flogging.
- (30) R. Johanan's view as reported above, that he is flogged only when he has made amends impossible.
- (31) If he killed her or broke her wings, he is flogged.
- (32) And there is no question of flogging.
- (33) Kiddushin — a ring or coin accepted at the hand of the groom (or his attorney) by the woman as a marriage token renders her legally bound as his wife-designate: she can be released only by formal bill of divorce, but even then he could not remarry her (after having become the wife of another man). V. Deut. XXIV, 1-4.
- (34) Her late husband, the Ravisher, authorised by her to accept the marriage-token on her behalf.
- (35) By a recognized authority who may, under certain genuine, unforeseen, extenuating circumstances, rescind a vow by declaring him absolved. Cf. Rashi on Num. XXX, 2 (end) and Ned. 77b.
- (36) And by making such a vow, the Ravisher nullifies all chance of making redress.
- (37) Lev. XIX, 13, the negative command.
- (38) Lev. V, 23, the positive command, providing the amends for the negative.
- (39) Deut. XXIV, 10-13 and 19-21.
- (40) [As on either view there is a possibility of a flogging being inflicted in the case where the article stolen or given on deposit was lost or destroyed intentionally by the thief or bailee so that he can no longer fulfil either the positive commands involved.] Why did R. Johanan say there were only two?
- (41) These cases are of a different category, he can pay the penalty in money and will not be flogged.
- (42) 'The Sages say, Whoever is ordered to pay damages is not flogged.' Cf. supra 4a [Tosaf. however shows that everywhere in such cases the offender is flogged and does not pay, the money penalty being merged in the graver penalty; they accordingly omit 'he is not . . . compensation.']
- (43) Seized unlawfully by the creditor and destroyed by him, thereby having already made himself liable to a flogging.
- (44) A proselyte, who died without a Jewish issue to whom the Hebrew law could be applicable. As on the proselyte's death the creditor is left without a claimant for damages, the offender should be flogged, as he cannot make amends by compensation. In that case, it would be a third instance.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 16b

— Here too the man is [in fact] liable to [pay] compensation; only the title of the proselyte has lapsed [with his death].

And is there not the instance of the 'Corner of the Field', where the All-Merciful ordained, Thou shalt not wholly reap the corner of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleaning of thy harvest, [and then continues,] Thou shalt leave them for the poor and for the stranger?¹ And, this too, fits equally well [if we say that the flogging depends on] whether the transgressor has carried out, or has not carried out [the act of redress], or on whether he had nullified, or not nullified [his chance of making redress],² as [is to be gathered from what] we learnt: The ordinance of the 'Corner [of the field]' is [in the first instance] to leave apart some of the standing corn [for the poor]; if he neglected to leave some of the corn standing, he sets apart some of the sheaves; if he failed to set apart some of the sheaves, he leaves apart some of the grain in the heap before winnowing; having winnowed, he should tithe the grain [first]³ and then give to the poor [his due]!⁴ — [No. R. Johanan holds] according to R. Ishmael, who said: He can also give it in part of the dough.⁵ But even according to R. Ishmael, there is still the case where the transgressor has already consumed the bread!⁶ — Hence this [indeed] is the only other instance that R. Johanan had in mind when he said, 'We have only this instance [of the Bird's Nest] and one other' — But it is not that of the Ravisher [who pledged himself publicly not to live with her], because it is only in an optional matter that we say that a vow made dependent on the consensus of the public is not subject to [formal] rescission; but where the matter involved is one in the nature of religious obligation⁷ it is subject to [formal] rescission, as for instance in the case of a certain elementary teacher treating the children harshly so that R. Aha made him pledge himself [on the consensus of the public⁸ not to teach]; but Rabina reinstated him, because no other teacher could be found who was equally reliable.⁹

ONE WHO EATS OF NEBELAH, OR TREFA, OR ANY CREATURE ABOMINABLE AND TEEMING [INCURS A FLOGGING]. Said Rab Judah: If one eats [knowingly] a worm in a cabbage¹⁰ he incurs a flogging. A certain fellow [once deliberately] ate a worm in a cabbage and Rab Judah had him chastised.¹¹ Abaye observed that if one eats an eel¹² he [technically] incurs a flogging on four¹³ counts; if an ant, on five counts, [the extra count being] for Any swarming [crawling] thing that swarmeth upon the earth [ye shall not eat them];¹⁴ if a hornet, on six counts [the extra count being] for [And all] winged swarming things [are unclean] to you; [they shall not be eaten].¹⁵ Raba¹⁶ observed that anyone confining his faeces sins against And ye shall not make your souls detestable.¹⁷ R. Bibi son of Abaye observed that anyone drinking out of a cupping-horn sins against Ye shall not make your souls detestable [by . . . what I have set apart for you to hold unclean].¹⁷ Rabbah the son of R. Huna said that if one crushed nine ants [into a mash] adding thereto another live one, thus bringing up the quantity to [the requisite] an olive's size [and ate them], he renders himself liable on six counts; five for the [live ant as a] separate creature,¹⁸ and one for [the mass as amounting to] an olive's size of nebelah.¹⁹ Rabbah reporting R. Johanan said [it would be the same], even with only two [mashes] and one other whole.

R. Joseph [reporting R. Johanan]²⁰ said even only one [mashed] and one alive. And there is no disagreement between them [in principle], for one is thinking of larger and the other of smaller sized [insects].

ONE WHO EATS OF TEBEL, OR A FIRST TITHE FROM WHICH ITS TERUMAH HAS NOT BEEN TAKEN, OR OF SECOND TITHE WHICH HAS NOT BEEN REDEEMED. Rab said that one who eats of tebel-produce from which its poor tithe²¹ has not been taken is flogged.²² Whose view is followed [in this statement of Rab's]? — That of the Tanna [in the following passage,] where it is taught: R. Jose says:²³ It might be supposed that one is liable [to a flogging] only on eating tebel-produce from which no due whatsoever has yet been set apart; but where [for instance] terumah gedolah²⁴ has been separated, but not yet the first tithe, or the first tithe, but not yet the second tithe, or [say] even the poor tithe [has not yet been separated] — whence [is derived the prohibition of] eating such produce? From the following instructive texts: Thou mayest not eat within thy gates²⁵ the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil;²⁶ and later it says, that they may eat within thy gates and be satisfied.²⁷ What is the reference in the latter [text]? To the poor tithe. So likewise in the former [text] reference is to the poor tithe, and the All-Merciful enjoins 'Thou mayest not eat of ...'²⁸

Joseph said: [Rab's point has been debated already] by Tannaim: R. Eliezer says that in the case of demai²⁹ there is no need even to designate [and assign]³⁰ the poor tithe; but the Sages say

(1) Lev. XXIII, 22, cf. ibid. XIX, 9-10.

(2) Cf. p. 109, n. 1.

(3) So as not to deprive the poor of part of his gift, namely the proportion of the tithe, as the 'Corner' is not subject at all to tithes, provided it was assigned to the poor before the winnowing when tithes become due.

(4) [So that there is a possibility for the owner to nullify the precept in the case where he ground the grain into flour after which he can no longer fulfil the command of the corner, and is consequently flogged.]

(5) [So that he can still fulfil the command even after having ground the grain.]

(6) Cf. p. 114, n. 7.

(7) As here, where it is Scripturally demanded that she shall remain his wife (unless she herself does not wish it).

(8) [According to reading in Git. 36a].

(9) in any case, the original instance which gave rise to the whole discussion (of the theory of the positive preceding negative ordinance, namely, not to defile the holy Camp — the Sanctuary), is different in nature from the others, as the positive command can be fulfilled before the actual violation of the negative command; his coming away is thus not considered (an act of) redress, and the flogging is incurred.

(10) Forbidden in Lev. XI, 43, as a 'swarming thing' (although not actually found crawling abroad) bred in the cabbage.

R. Tam (Tosaf.) suggested (instead of a cabbage-grub) a small fish found alive on the field (such as a tadpole or young eel; v. next note). Being found on dry land (not in the water, its usual habitat,) it comes under the category of a 'swarming thing' — שרץ השרץ — forbidden in Lev. XI, 43.

(11) Probably only a disciplinary castigation, not the judicial (39) stripes, being outside Palestine. V. אוצר ישראל (Eisenstein) s.v. מלקות. Vol. VI, p. 229b.

(12) פוטיתא, according to Gaonic interpretation, the young eel (Arabic garri. v. Kohut, Aruch, s.v. פוטיתא and B.M. Lewin, Otzar ha-Gaonim III (Pes.) No. 42). Young eels — glass eels — are often found in thousands (2 to 2 1/2 inches in size) travelling at night overland to get to the sea.

(13) Lev. XI, 10-11 (forbidden on several grounds: (a) as water-insect; (b) as finless; (c) as scaleless) and twice again, ibid. 43. Cf. Rashi 'Er. 28a.

(14) Lev. XI, 41-44: Forbidden as insect crawling on the ground (41); as many-footed (42); twice forbidden as food (43); once more forbidden as an insect crawling on the ground (44).

(15) Deut. XIV, 10, in addition to those in the preceding note.

(16) D.S. האי מאן of which the reading in the printed texts is a distortion; v. Friedmann, M. Tractate Makkoth a.l.

(17) Lev. XX, 25.

(18) As supra note 2 and cf. n. 13 on Mishnah.

(19) V. p. 93, n. 12.

(21) The tithe levied in the third and sixth years of the Septennial or Sabbatical cycle.

(22) A novel point, as there is no direct explicit prohibition against eating of fruits from which the poor tithe had not been set apart. It is implied in Deut. XXVI, 13 (cf. Sifre a.l.); but not openly prohibited. No judicial flogging (of 'forty' lashes) is inflicted except the offence is explicitly prohibited in Holy Writ. No punishment is warranted on logical inference, hence the search for the basis of Rab's assertion.

(23) יוסי אומר is the correct reading, cf. Yeb. 86a and Sifre, on Deut. XII, 17.

(24) V. Glos.

(25) בשעריך This phrase serves as a Gezerah shawah.

(26) Deut. XII, 17. In verse 18 it is ordered that the various offerings and hallowed dues were to be shared 'with the Levites in thy gates'.

(27) With reference to the poor tithe; Deut. XXVI, 12 (also v, 13).

(28) Not to eat of the various offerings and dues without giving the Levite and other poor their share.

(29) דמאי 'Suspect Produce' — produce regarding which it is not known whether the prescribed tithes have been duly set apart by the vendor before selling. An ancient tradition has it that Johanan the High Priest (the Maccabean John Hyrcanus I), discovered (after investigation) that while the priests' terumah (v. Glos.) was being given regularly, the 'amme ha-arez (v. Glos.) throughout the land were none too observant about the several other tithes. To meet the scruples of the pious (and to preserve the laws regulating the tithes from extinction), he promulgated that the several tithes should be set apart by the purchaser from an 'am ha-arez. But, as this practice would evidently fall heavily on the purchasers, it was agreed that after setting the prescribed dues apart, the buyer might retain them for his own consumption, as, firstly these tithes were not forbidden to a lay-Israelite, and secondly the claim of any particular priest (or Levite) to the first tithe, or of any particular poor man to the poor tithe was uncertain.

(30) If one had need to partake of his produce before he had set apart any of the several dues, he could provisionally 'designate' and 'assign' them by saying: 'Let the terumah of this bin be located in the east; the first tithe in the west; the second tithe in the north, or (in the 3rd and 6th year) the poor tithe in this or that particular spot,' and then take his temporary supply from any other part. Later he would attend to these dues.

that one should 'designate' it, but need not set it apart.¹ Is not here the point at issue this — that one authority [the Sages] holds that the known presence [of unseparated poor tithe in produce] makes it tebel,² while the other authority [R. Eliezer] holds that it does not make it tebel! — Said Abaye: If that were the issue, why raise it in connection with demai? It should have been raised in connection with produce which is known to be untithed! Hence, [it must be said,] all are agreed that the known presence [of unseparated poor tithe] does render the produce tebel,² and the issue involved here is rather this, that one authority [R. Eliezer] takes the view that the 'amme ha-arez'³ are not suspected of withholding the poor tithe of demai, as, being merely a money matter, they do [not fail to] set it apart;⁴ while the Rabbis⁵ take the view that 'amme ha-arez' are mistrusted about it, because it involves trouble,⁶ and as the separation of the due means some trouble to them,⁷ they will not set it apart.

HOW MUCH OF TEBEL IS ONE TO EAT TO BECOME LIABLE? R. SIMEON SAYS THE MEREST MORSEL AND THE SAGES SAY AN OLIVE'S SIZE. R. Bibi reporting R. Simeon b. Lakish said that this difference of opinion referred only to the [grain of] wheat, but as to the [requisite amount of] flour all were agreed that it is an olive's size. But R. Jeremiah reporting R. Simeon b. Lakish said that there was a difference of opinion on both the [amount of] flour as well as the [grain of] wheat.

We learn [in the Mishnah]: SAID R. SIMEON, DO YOU NOT ADMIT THAT IF ONE ATE THE MINUTEST ANT HE WOULD BE LIABLE? SAID THEY TO HIM: [ONLY] BECAUSE IT IS A SEPARATE CREATURE. SAID HE TO THEM: EVEN SO A [GRAIN OF] WHEAT IS A SEPARATE ENTITY. [Does not this text show that] there was a dispute only about the [grain of] wheat, but nothing about flour! — [Not so.] R. Simeon only argues [with the Rabbis] on their own contention: My own opinion [he argues] is that even the same quantity of [tebel] flour is enough [for entailing a flogging]; but even according to your contention, you should admit to me that one [grain of] wheat is a separate entity. And the Rabbis' [reply]? — An animate thing is of sufficient importance [as to be considered a separate entity], but a [grain of] wheat is not of such importance. [In a Baraita] it is taught as R. Jeremiah had reported: R. Simeon says that any minute quantity⁸ is sufficient to entail a flogging; the 'olive's size' mentioned [by the Rabbis] is required only to entail a [sin-offering].'

MISHNAH. ONE WHO EATS⁹ OF FIRST FRUITS PREVIOUS TO THE RECITAL OVER THEM;¹⁰ [WHO EATS] OF MOST HOLY [MEATS]¹¹ OUTSIDE THE HANGINGS; OF LESSER HOLY [MEATS]¹² OR OF SECOND TITHE, OUTSIDE THE CITY WALL.¹³ ONE WHO BREAKS A BONE OF A PASCHAL LAMB¹⁴ THAT IS CLEAN¹⁵ RECEIVES FORTY [LASHES]; BUT ONE WHO LEAVES OF THE FLESH OF A CLEAN PASCHAL LAMB,¹⁶ OR BREAKS A BONE OF AN UNCLEAN [PASCHAL LAMB],¹⁷ IS NOT GIVEN FORTY [LASHES]. IF ONE TAKES THE DAM WITH THE YOUNG,¹⁸ R. JUDAH SAYS HE IS FLOGGED AND NEED NOT [THEN] SEND THE DAM FREE; BUT THE SAGES SAY THAT HE LETS THE DAM GO AND RECEIVES NO FLOGGING. THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE; WHENEVER A NEGATIVE PRECEPT INVOLVES THE FULFILMENT OF SOME POSITIVE ACT,¹⁹ THERE IS NO FLOGGING FOR ITS CONTRAVENTION.

GEMARA. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah citing R. Johanan said that this²⁰ is only the view of R. Akiba who is reported anonymously,²¹ but the Sages say regarding [the ceremonies of] the first fruits that only placing them [before the altar]²² is a bar [to their consumption],²³ but the [omission of the] recital is no bar [to their consumption]. Then why not say that the above is the view of R. Simeon who is reported anonymously?²⁴ — This is what he meant to tell us that R. Akiba [also] held that same view as expressed by [his disciple] R. Simeon. Which statement of R. Simeon [have you in mind]? — As it is taught:²⁵ ‘And the raising of thy hand’ — that is the first fruits.²⁶ Said R. Simeon: What is the lesson intended by this text?²⁷ If it is merely [to forbid] eating them [first fruits] outside the wall [of Jerusalem, there is no need]; it follows a fortiori from the less restricted second tithing [in this way]: Seeing that he who eats of the less restricted²⁸ second tithing outside the wall, is flogged,²⁹ is not that [flogging] more deserved for eating first fruits [outside the wall]? The text therefore can only mean to convey that he who eats them when the [prescribed] recital has not yet taken place, is flogged.³⁰ ‘Nor of thy freewill offerings’³¹ — that means [not eating outside Jerusalem] of thank-offerings or peace-offerings. Said R. Simeon: What is the lesson intended by this verse? If [only to forbid] eating of these [meats] outside the wall, this follows, a fortiori, from the second tithing [as before].³² The text therefore can only mean to convey that he who eats of the meat of thank-offerings and peace-offerings before the blood had been sprinkled [on the altar]³³ is flogged.³⁴ ‘And the firstlings.’ — that means the firstborn [male animals].³⁵ Said R. Simeon: What lesson is intended here? If [only to forbid] eating of these [holy meats] outside the wall, this [too] is [inferred already] a fortiori, from the second tithing [as before].³⁶ If [to forbid eating of the flesh] before the blood had been sprinkled, this follows, a fortiori, from the thank-offering and peace-offering.³⁷ The text therefore can only mean to convey that [a layman] who eats of the firstling even after the ritual blood-sprinkling, receives a flogging.³⁸ ‘of thy herd or thy flock’ — that alludes to sin-offerings and guilt-offerings.³⁹ Said R. Simeon: What is the implied injunction here? If only against eating of these outside the wall, this follows a fortiori, from the second tithing [as before];³⁶ if against partaking of these before the blood-sprinkling [on the altar], this already follows a fortiori, from the thank-offering and peace-offering [as before];³⁷ if against [any layman] eating of sin-offerings or guilt-offering [even] after the ritual blood-sprinkling [on the altar], this already follows, a fortiori, from the [law of the] firstling.⁴⁰ The text therefore can only mean to convey that if a priest eats of sin and guilt-offerings even after the ritual blood-sprinkling outside the ‘hangings’, he [transgresses and] receives a flogging.³⁸ ‘Nor any of thy vows’ — that refers to burnt-offerings.⁴¹ Said R. Simeon: What is the implied injunction here? If only against eating of these outside the wall, this already follows, a fortiori, from the second tithing [as before]; if against eating of these before the blood-sprinkling, it already follows, a fortiori, from the thank-offering and peace-offering [as before]; if against [any layman] eating of these same after the ritual blood-sprinkling, it already follows, a fortiori, from the [law] of the firstling [as before]; if against [priests] eating of these outside the ‘hangings’, it follows, a fortiori, from the sin and guilt-offerings.⁴² The text therefore means to convey

(1) For the sake of preserving the principle, the particular due, poor tithing, should be mentioned (as possibly present), but need not be actually located nor separated; v. Dem. IV, 3.

(2) Debarred as tebel, until the due portion is taken away.

(3) V. Glos.

(4) [There is no prohibition for a lay Israelite to eat of the poor tithing and by setting it aside the owner need not necessarily give it to the poor, but can still retain it for himself. This is however not the case with the first and second tithing, since the former will remain prohibited on account of the terumah (v. Glos.) which it contains and the latter until it is taken up to Jerusalem.]

(5) The Sages.

(6) So D.S.

(7) Would not be bothered with the formal niceties of the ordinance.

(8) Forbidden to be eaten. Cf. e.g. Lev. VII. 26-27.

(9) This is in continuation of the list of offences that entail a flogging.

(10) Cf. Deut. XXVI, 1-10. First fruits were to be eaten only by priests, and their families, in religious purity. Num. XVIII, 13.

(11) Such as meat of sin-offerings, guilt-offerings and their accompanying meal-oblations: these were to be eaten by male priests only, in the inner precincts of the Temple (corresponding to the Court of the Tabernacle, ‘within the hangings.’ Cf. Num. XVIII, 9-10; Lev. VI, 7-11 (meal-oblation); 17-19, 22 (sin-offering); VII, 5-10 (guilt-offering); Ex. XXIX, 26 ff; Lev. VI, 9, 19 (inner holy precincts). Cf. also P.B. p. 12, sections 4-5.

- (12) Such as Peace-offerings (private), thanksgiving, Nazirite's ram, firstlings, tithe lambkins and calves and the Paschal lamb. Cf. P.B. pp. 12 and 13, section 6-8. Of these the altar, the priests and the worshippers had each their share. Cf. Lev. VII, 11 ff. 18; 28-34; Num. VI, 19-20. and XVIII, 11-19.
- (13) Of Jerusalem, the chosen place, as before the Lord. Cf. Deut. XII, 6-7; 11, 17-18.
- (14) Forbidden in Ex. XII, 46; Num. IX, 12.
- (15) Undefined; cf. Lev. VII, 19.
- (16) An offence by inaction, for which a remedial act is prescribed (Ex. XII, 10). v. supra p. 111.
- (17) No longer in the category of a proper Paschal offering.
- (18) Forbidden in Deut. XXII, 6-7. There too, a remedial action is prescribed, v. supra p. 111.
- (19) Lit., '(the command to) rise and do.'
- (20) The ruling in the Mishnah referring to the First fruits.
- (21) [Cf. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) pp. 565 f. and notes and Rashi Meg. 2a.]
- (22) Cf. Deut. XXVI, 4: 'And set it down before the altar.'
- (23) I.e., the ceremony is indispensable for their release to be eaten by the priests.
- (24) [In the Baraita cited anon and quoted from the Sifre (v. n. 13) which generally represents the opinion of R. Simeon, cf. n. 9.]
- (25) Treated more fully in Sifre, on Deut. XII, 17. Here is the prohibiting text (Deut. XII, 17) employed: Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil (i.e. the second tithe of these); or of thy firstlings of thy herd or of thy flock; nor of any vows that thou vowest; nor of thy freewill offerings; nor of the raising (fruits) of thy hand. (Verse 18 continues positively: But thou shalt eat them before the Lord thy God in the place the Lord thy God shall choose (i.e. Jerusalem). Cf. ibid. 6-7: 11-14; 26-27.) To appreciate the subtlety of R. Simeon's ingenious arguments on this text, it is necessary carefully to note (a), that no flogging is due for not doing something recommended or even commanded, but for doing an action that is distinctly forbidden; and (b), that R. Simeon tries to prove (among many other things) from Deut. XII, 17, that the prescribed 'recital' over the First fruits is an indispensable ceremony, and if omitted, eating of the First fruits is forbidden on the pain of a flogging (of forty); (c), that to prove his theses he does not expound the verse in the order it is written, but in such a manner as will best fit in with his views, as will be seen as the argument proceeds.
- (26) And the priest shall take the basket (of first fruits) out of thy hand and set it down before the altar of the Lord thy God. Deut. XXVI, 4 ff. Cf. p. 120, n. 3.
- (27) What is the particular point forbidden, as regards first fruits?
- (28) As explained infra,
- (29) Deut. XII, 17: Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the (second) tithe of thy corn . . . wine . . . oil! There were no such restrictions on the first tithe that was given to the priest-Levites; it could be eaten anywhere 'even at the graveside'. Cf. Num. XVIII, 31.
- (30) [On the principle that where a superfluous phrase cannot be applied to one subject it is applied to another, v. supra p. 100, n. 6.]
- (31) On these peace-offerings cf. p. 120, n. 5.
- (32) Second tithe is less restricted in that, unlike thank and peace-offerings, its enjoyment is not restricted by any time-limit; nor debarred (technically) as 'stale remains' or 'piggul'; (v. Glos.) nor debarred to the (ritually) impure (as in the case of thank and peace-offerings), v. Lev. VII, 15-21 and XXII, 29-30. (Sifre).
- (33) Commanded (positively), Deut. XII, 26-27 (first the rites of the altar, then eat!), and here argued as negatively forbidden (in verse 27) on pain of a flogging.
- (34) V. p. 122, n. 5.
- (35) Deut. XV, 19-20 (the positive command). Num. XVIII, 15-19, grants firstlings to the priests (and their families) after the altar rites. Cf. Zeb. V, 8. and P.B. p. 13.
- (36) Cf. p. 122, n. 7.
- (37) As explained infra.
- (38) V. supra p. 122, n. 5.
- (39) These (and their meal-oblations) are Most Holy, permitted to male priests only, eaten only in the inner precincts of the temple — 'within the hanging'. (Cf. p. 120, n. 4.) Num. XVIII, 9-10, give the positive command about these, and R. Simeon now seeks to argue on the prohibition as entailing a flogging.
- (40) As explained anon.

(41) Cf. Lev. I, 2 ff. V. P. B. p. 12.

(42) As explained anon.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 17b

that he who eats of the burnt-offering after the blood-sprinkling [on the altar], even within [the 'hangings'], is flogged.¹

Said Raba: [This is ingenious;] may every bearing mother bear a child like R. Simeon! And if not [quite like him], should she not bear any at all² — though his a fortiori arguments may be refuted! For instance, in what respect [is it assumed] that first fruits are of graver importance³ [than second tithe]? In that first fruits are forbidden to lay people [non-priests]! But is not the second tithe rather of graver importance, because second tithe is forbidden to the onen⁴ [and the argument is thus unsound]? Again, in what respect [is it assumed] that thank and peace-offerings are of graver importance than second tithe? In that these have [also] the offering of blood and the certain 'prescribed' portions⁵ [of fat etc.] on the altar! But is not the second tithe rather of graver importance, because second tithe may be redeemed only with coined silver⁶ money [and no other]? Again, in what respect [do you assume] is the firstling of graver importance than thank and peace-offerings? In that it is sanctified from the womb⁷ [unlike those sacrificial animals]! But are not rather the thank and peace-offerings, of graver importance because thank and peace-offerings require the 'laying [of the hand]';⁸ 'drink-offerings' [of wine]⁹ and the waving of breast and thigh?¹⁰ Again, in what respect are the sin and guilt-offerings of graver importance than the firstling? In that they are in the category of most-holy!¹¹ But is not the firstling rather of graver importance, because the firstling is sanctified from the womb?¹² Again, in what respect is the burnt-offering of graver importance than the sin and guilt-offering? In that the burnt-offering is wholly burnt!¹³ But are not the sin and guilt-offerings rather of graver importance, because they afford atonement;¹⁴ nay, all [other] sacrifices are of graver importance than the burnt-offering, because those others are consumed in two ways?¹⁵ But if so, what [made Raba exclaim]: 'May every bearing mother give birth to such as R. Simeon'? — It is because of his method of recasting¹⁶ and expounding the text to suit his own theory. But is a prohibition based on logical deduction¹⁷ warranted? For, even those who accept¹⁸ [in principle] a penalty derived by logical deduction as warranted do not recognise a prohibition based on logical deduction? — [No, R. Simeon desired] to demonstrate mere prohibition¹⁹ [in each case]. But did not Raba say that, according to R. Simeon, any lay person eating of the flesh of burnt-offering before the sprinkling of the blood and outside the wall [of Jerusalem] is flogged on five counts?²⁰ — [He only meant to say] five mere prohibitions were involved [in this one act of eating]. But then, have we not learnt: These incur [judicial] flogging, etc?²¹

(1) The positive command to burn it wholly is given in Lev. I, 9, 13, 17; and this furnishes the negative command, cf. supra p. 122, n. 5.

(2) ['And if not . . . at all' is best omitted with MS.M.]

(3) The criterion of importance being the number of restrictions, which shows the amount of concern and interest devoted by the Torah to the matter.

(4) אֲוֹנָן, a person in deep sorrow on the day of bereavement, when the dead is still unburied. Part of a prescribed declaration to be made in the Temple (after the 3rd and 6th years in the Septennial Cycle) was: 'I have not eaten thereof (i.e. of second tithe) in my mourning . . . nor given thereof for the dead.' Deut. XXVI, 14. (The same condition attaches to first fruits, but R. Simeon does not share that view in the case of the latter. v. Yeb. 73b.)

(5) Emurin — אִמּוּרִין — 'bidden', or 'prescribed' rites. Cf. Lev. I, 5, 8, 9; II, 2, 13, 15-16; III, 3-5, 9, etc. Also Num. XV, 4 ff. Cf. the term אִמּוּר, as 'prescribed' (not, 'as it is said') in the Prayer Book, when citing the sacrifices ordained for the occasion. E.g., P.B. p. 162. [Jastrow connects it with root denoting 'to devote', 'to consecrate', cf. Deut. XXVI, 17.]

(6) V. B.M. 47b. Cf. supra p. 92, n. 8.

(7) Cf. Ex. XIII, 12-13; Num. XVIII, 15-18; Deut. XV, 19-20. A firstling is sacred and dedicated from birth. Other sacrificial animals have to be selected and dedicated as offerings.

(8) Lev. III, 2, 8, 13. The worshipper laid his hand on the head of the animal.

(9) Num. XV, 5 ff.

(10) Lev. VII, 28-32. These were not required in the case of a firstling. Num. XVIII, 17-18.

(11) Lev. VI, 18; VII, 1.

(12) V. supra note 8.

(13) Lev. I, 9, 13, 17.

(14) Cf. Lev. IV, 20, 26, 31, 35 (Sin-offering); V, 6, 10, 16, 18, 26.

(15) Parts are burnt on the altar, other parts are eaten by the priests, and in sacrifices of minor sanctity parts are enjoyed by the owners or worshippers. It should be remembered that eating of sacrificial meat was part of the ritual, hence the importance attached to it.

(16) Lit., 'castrating'. [V. supra p. 121, n. 13. Had he, for instance, made the firstling the starting point of his arguments, he could not, in the absence of the a fortiori reasoning from thank and peace-offerings with reference to the eating of them before the blood sprinkling (as this would still remain to be proved), substantiate his thesis in regard to the eating of them after the sprinkling of the blood. The same applies to all the other arguments advanced by R. Simeon.]

(17) To sanction the penalty of flogging such as R. Simeon attempted here by his arguments. Cf. supra 5b and 14a (end).

(18) R. Isaac, v. 14a, (end).

(19) Without the infliction of a flogging.

(20) On the basis of his deductions: (i) No holy meat may be eaten outside the wall (not even second tithe, the simplest).

(ii) Sacrificial meat may not be eaten before the ritual sprinkling (on the altar). (iii) A layman (non-priest) may not eat of sacrifice-most-sacred (to which class burnt-offering belongs). (iv) Not even a priest may eat of such outside the 'hangings' (the inner precincts). (v) Burnt-offering is to burn entirely, no part thereof may be eaten. This proves that R. Simeon would also inflict the penalty of flogging.

(21) The opening words of the Mishnah, Chapter III. fol 13a, which apply also to the prohibition enumerated in the Mishnah 17a, including the EATING OF THE MOST HOLY MEATS OUTSIDE THE HANGINGS.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 18a

— But [yet] the text¹ is tautological! Consider: it having been written already, And thither ye shall bring . . . and there ye shall eat before the Lord thy God² — could not the All-Merciful have proceeded briefly thus: 'Thou mayest not eat them within thy gates'? What else then could be the purpose of the All-Merciful in having them all restated in detail, save to stress separately the prohibition³ attaching to every instance.

The [above] text [stated]: 'Raba said that, according to R. Simeon, any lay person eating of the flesh of burnt-offering before the sprinkling of the blood and outside the wall [of Jerusalem], is flogged on five counts.' Should he not be flogged on a sixth count arising out of the text: [And they⁴ shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made to consecrate and to sanctify them]; but a stranger shall not eat thereof because they are holy?⁵ — [No, as] that [prohibition bears on such meat] as was permitted for priests [to eat],⁶ while that [referred to in Raba's statement] is not proper even for priests.

And should he not be flogged on the strength of [the text]: [And ye shall be holy men unto me: therefore] ye shall not eat any flesh in the field [like] torn [of beasts];⁷ [which is taken] to imply that any [holy] flesh that has got beyond its partition⁸ is forbidden? — [No, as] that applies to [meat] available when within the partition; whereas here [in Raba's case] it is not available even while within the partition.⁹ And should he not also be flogged on the strength of R. Eliezer's interpretation. For R. Eliezer said: [The words], it shall not be eaten because it is holy¹⁰ convey that the text means to declare as forbidden any [sort of] holy meat which has become disqualified? — [No, as] here too it can only refer to [meat that was] available before becoming disqualified, whereas here [in Raba's statement the meat] was not available even before it became disqualified. And should he not also be flogged on the strength of that other interpretation of R. Eliezer, as it is taught: R. Eliezer says [that the words,] It shall be wholly made to smoke; [it shall not be eaten,]¹ impose a negative command against the eating of anything [that is ordered to be wholly burnt]? — Just so, and it is on this interpretation of the text that he based his statement.²

R. Giddal citing Rab said (Kuza)³ that a priest who ate of a sin-offering or guilt-offering before the sprinkling of the blood is flogged. The reason [for this]? The writ says: And they [Aaron and his sons] shall eat of those things⁴ wherewith atonement was made⁵; which implies [that they are to be eaten only] after [ritual] atonement has been made, but not before atonement has been made; this being [an instance of] a negative command implied in a 'positive command which is [tantamount to] a negative.'⁶

Raba raised objection from the following: And every beast that parteth the hoof and hath the hoof wholly cloven into two and cheweth the cud among the beasts, that ye may eat⁷ — [implies,] 'that ye may eat,' but 'you may not eat another beast.' Now, if [the principle be] as you stated, what further need to continue, But these ye shall not eat, of them that only chew the cud and of them that only have the hoof cloven?⁸ — We must therefore say that if the reported dictum be a fact, it must have been worded thus: R. Giddal citing Rab said that a stranger⁹ [layman] who ate of a sin-offering or guilt-offering before the sprinkling [of the blood] is exempt.¹⁰ The reason [for this]? The text says: 'And they shall eat of those things wherewith atonement was made' [that is] anyone to whom the former part of the text [the positive command] — and they shall eat of those things wherewith atonement has been made — applies, to him the latter part of the text [the negative command] — but a stranger shall not eat thereof, because they are holy — applies also; and [vice versa,] anyone to whom the former part of that text — and they shall eat of those things wherewith atonement has been made — does not apply, to him the latter part of that text — but a stranger shall not eat thereof, because they are holy — does not apply.¹¹

R. Eleazar reporting R. Hoshaia, said regarding the [ceremonies of] first fruits that [the omission] to place them [before the altar] is a bar [to their release], but the [omission of the] recital is not a bar. But did R. Eleazar [actually] say that? Did not R. Eleazar reporting R. Hoshaia say that if a man had set apart [his] first fruits before the Feast [of Tabernacles] and the Feast passed [without these fruits having been presented before the altar] they are left to rot?¹² Now what [is the implication here]? Is it not that [they are to be left to rot] because it is no longer the period for the recital over them?¹³ If then you suppose that the [omission of the] recital is not a bar, why are they to be left to rot? — In accordance with [the principle enunciated by] R. Zera, for R. Zera said: Wherever the conditions for mingling [oil with the flour for a meal-offering¹⁴] are present, the [omission of the] mingling is not a bar; but where the conditions are not present the [omission of] mingling is a bar.¹⁵

R. Aha b. Jacob taught the same [lesson] as a statement of R. Assi reporting R. Johanan,¹⁶ and thus made one statement of R. Johanan clash with another: Did R. Johanan¹⁷ say regarding the [ceremonies of] first fruits that [the omission] to place them [before the altar] is a bar to their release, but the [omission of the] recital is not a bar? Why, when R. Assi asked of R. Johanan how soon were the first fruits permitted to be partaken of by the priests, did he not reply that those [that had come] at the proper time for the recital¹⁸ [were released] immediately after the recital,¹⁹ and those that were not [brought] at the proper time for the recital [were released] immediately they had come face to face with the Temple²⁰ — a statement which clashes on both points, in regard to recital as well as to placing them [before the altar]? — As regards the recital, it is not difficult [to explain the seeming discrepancy]: One statement²¹ represents the view of R. Simeon,²² while the other²³ is according to the Rabbis. Again, as regards placing them [before the altar], it is not difficult [to explain the seeming discrepancy]: One statement²¹ is according to R. Judah,²⁴ while the other²⁵ is that held by the Rabbis.²³

What statement of R. Judah [have you in mind]? — [It is the following,] as it is taught: R. Judah says, [And the priest shall take the basket out of thy hand] and set it down [before the altar].²⁶ This refers to the [ritual of] ‘waving’.²⁷ You say that it refers to the [ritual of] ‘waving’, or maybe it only means ‘setting them down’ ordinarily? As, however, [later it is said,] And thou shalt set it down [before the Lord thy God and worship before the Lord thy God,²⁸ the ordinary ‘setting down’ [of the fruit] is already indicated. What then is the meaning of the former injunction, [and the priest shall take the basket out of thy hand] and set it down [before the altar]?²⁶ It can only refer to the [ritual] ‘waving’.²⁹ And who is the Tanna that does not concur with R. Judah? — It is R. Eliezer b. Jacob,³⁰ as it is taught: And the priest shall take the basket out of thy hand³¹ — [‘out of thy hand’] indicates that the ‘waving’ is an essential part [of the ceremony]: these are the words of R. Eliezer b. Jacob. What is the reason of R. Eliezer b. Jacob? — It is derived from the occurrence of the word ‘hand’ [both here and] in connection with the peace-offerings [in this way]: Here it is written, ‘And the priest shall take the basket out of thy hand’³¹ and there it is written, His³² own hands shall bring the offering unto the Lord.³³ Just as here the priest [is the recipient],³⁴ so there the priest [is the recipient],³⁵ just as there the owner tenders, so here the owner tenders. How is it [done]? [In each case] the priest puts his hand under those of the worshipper and waves them.³⁶

Rabin b. Adda reported R. Isaac to have said: In the case of first fruits,

(1) Lev. VI, 15-16.

(2) [That he is flogged, this verse supplying the requisite explicit prohibition for the infliction of a flogging.]

(3) A Mnemonic of the two statements of Rab that follow: K = Kohen, ‘priest’, Z = Zar, ‘a layman’.

(4) of the special consecration offerings.

(5) Ex. XXIX, 33.

(6) And, as such, sanctions the flogging (which the breach of a positive command does not). This rule is soon challenged by Raba on textual grounds and, in consequence, he emends the reported dictum by an interpretation of the text. This rule was debated in Palestine, Resh Lakish taking the view expressed above, while R. Johanan contested it by asserting that a ‘positive’ command implying a ‘negation’ is tantamount to a ‘positive’. Raba elsewhere explains the difference by a very apt illustration. If the Master bids his disciple, ‘Go fetch me some wheat,’ and the disciple brings wheat and barley, it can hardly be said that he disobeyed his master, although he went beyond instructions. If, however, the Master said, ‘Don’t bring me anything else but wheat,’ he certainly disobeys instructions if he bring wheat and barley. V. Zeb. 34a. There is involved in this, the important logical difference between affirmation and negation. ‘Go fetch me wheat’ does not necessarily imply that I would not have barley — I might have it or not. But, ‘Don’t bring me barley’ is clearly prohibitory on that point. V. B. Bosanquet's Essentials of Logic (1897), Lect. VIII, On Negation and Opposition of Judgments.

(7) Deut. XIV, 6.

(8) Ibid. verse 7.

- (9) Not a priest, as first reported.
- (10) Not flogged, as first stated.
- (11) Cf. Kid. 21b.
- (12) I.e., they may not be eaten even by priest.
- (13) First fruits were tokens of gratitude and were brought in their respective harvesting periods, from the Feast of Weeks (Pentecost) to Tabernacles (for Spring and Summer produce respectively), from early Sivan to the end of Tishri; and from Tabernacles to Chanukah (end of Kislev, for late autumn fruits). The recital could only be performed at the actual time of harvesting (Ex. XXIII, 16), when the heart rejoiced at the abundance (Deut. XXVI, 11), that is, between the Feast of Weeks (Pentecost) and Tabernacles; after that, the fruits were brought without recital, till Chanukah. Cf. Bik. I, 3, 6.
- (14) V. Lev. I, 1, 6, 15 (and he shall pour oil upon the fine flour) and verses 4, 5-6; VII, 10 (mingled with oil); Num. XV, 4, 6, 9.

- (16) Which Rabbah b. Bar Hanah already cited supra 17a.
- (17) As his personal opinion.
- (18) I.e., between the Feast of Weeks and Tabernacles. Cf. supra note 2.
- (19) That means that recital is indispensable and its omission is a bar to the release.
- (20) That means, immediately on entering the portals of the 'Court of Israelites', 'Azarah, without recital or placing them before the altar to be released!
- (21) That of R. Johanan to R. Assi while discussing the subject generally, it seems.
- (22) As embodied in the Mishnah (17a), namely, that eating of first fruits without recital entails a flogging.
- (23) Reported of R. Johanan by Rabba b. Bar Hanah in the opening discussion on the Mishnah (17a) and by R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaia above, the view generally held by the Rabbis.
- (24) That placing the first fruits before the altar was not indispensable or a bar to their release, as is soon to be explained.
- (25) That placing the first fruits before the altar is essential.
- (26) Deut. XXVI, 4. The direction to set them down occurs twice in the passage, here first by the priest, and in verse 10 (quoted soon), by the worshipper. In our Talmud texts the second is quoted first, which makes R. Judah's interpretation difficult to understand. The order of the Biblical texts adopted here is that given by the Wilna Gaon in his notes שנות אליהו on Bik. III, 6. Cf. Tosaf. here, s.v. ומאן and again, on Suk. 47b. s.v. הבכורים and כהן.
- (27) On the ceremony, cf. Ex. XXIX, 24, 26; Lev. VII, 30; XXIII, 11-12, 17, 20; Num. VI, 20. The priest placed his hand under those of the worshipper who tendered the gift-portions and waved them to and fro, a dedicating motion.
- (28) Deut. XXVI, 10.
- (29) Explaining these texts thus, R. Judah finds no specific direction for placing the first fruits before the altar, to make it indispensable or barring their release by its omission. [It is a well-established principle that no prescription relating to offering is deemed indispensable, unless Scripture emphasises it by reiteration.]
- (30) Whose view is followed. His Mishnah, it is said, is but a modicum (in quantity), but the finest, purest flour (in quality).
- (31) V. p. 130. n. 7.
- (32) The worshipper's hands.
- (33) Lev. VII, 30, the rule. Cf. p 130, n. 8.
- (34) Of the first fruits.
- (35) Of the portions.
- (36) [Thus we see that R. Eliezer b. Jacob does not derive 'waving' from either of the phrases 'setting down' so that he will expound both cases as denoting 'setting down' ordinarily, the reiteration thus making the ceremony of placing before the altar an indispensable rite.]

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 19a

when does the penalty¹ begin? From the time that these come face to face with the Temple. Whose is the view [expressed here]? — That of the Tanna [mentioned in the following], as it is taught: R. Eliezer says: As regards first fruits, if some are left outside [the wall of Jerusalem] and some are taken within, those that are [still] outside are like ordinary fruits² in every respect, while those within are [to be treated] like ‘things of the Sanctuary’³ in every respect.

R. Shesheth said:⁴ in regard to first fruits, [the omission] to place them, [before the altar] is a bar [to their release], but the [omission of the] recital is not a bar. Whose is the view expressed here? — That of the following Tanna, as it is taught: R. Jose reports three things in the name of three Elders⁵ [this statement being one of them]:⁶ R. Ishmael says that one might presume that [even] nowadays [although there is no Temple], a person must bring his second tithe to Jerusalem and eat it there [as such, instead of redeeming it]. But, there is this argument [against it]: Firstlings⁷ must be brought to [Jerusalem], the [appointed] place,⁸ even as second tithe⁹ must be brought to [Jerusalem], the [appointed] place. Now what is [requisite] in the case of firstlings? They may not [be eaten there] save when there is a Temple; and the same obtains in regard to second tithe, that it should not [be eaten there] save when there is a Temple! [This is not conclusive, because] in the case of firstlings there are requisite [specific] altar-rites, the sprinkling of blood and the burning of certain ‘prescribed’ portions [of fat].¹⁰ [But] then [I ask] let first fruits support [my contention]!¹¹ [To this, we may reply] what is [requisite] in the case of the first fruits? They too must be placed [before the altar].¹² Here then comes the instructive text, And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, [in the place which He shall choose to cause His name to dwell there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herd and of thy flock,]⁹ wherein [second] tithe and firstlings are set side by side, showing that what obtains in firstlings, namely, that they may not be eaten there save when there is a Temple, equally obtains in second tithe, not to be eaten there save when there is a Temple. Now if it were that the non-recital is a bar, the wording of the last objection [before finally citing the Scripture text]¹³ should have been: [To this we may reply.] What is requisite in the case of first fruits? They need both, the recital as well as laying them [before the altar].¹⁴ R. Ashi said: [This is not decisive] because even granted that [the recital] is not a bar [to the release of first fruits], yet is it not to be considered even a precept,¹⁵ and as such it¹⁶ could be made the basis of an objection!¹⁷ But no, said R. Ashi: [the reason of its omission is that] since first fruits were also brought to the Temple by proselytes¹⁸ and they ought to have recited the [prescribed] wording. I profess this day unto the Lord . . . that I am come into the land which the Lord swore to our fathers to give us¹⁹ and could not [as being inapplicable]; he [R. Jose] could not state it absolutely.²⁰

But could not the argument run on and the deduction be based on common aspects?²¹ — [No,] as this can be refuted [thus]: What is their²² common aspect? They all have some ritual association with the altar.²³

And [tell me], what is his [R. Ishmael's] view?²⁴ If he deems the first dedication [by Solomon] to have been effected ‘for the nonce, and for all time to come,’²⁵ then even [unblemished] firstlings²⁶ might be eaten nowadays [at Jerusalem even without Temple or altar]; and [on the other hand], if he deems the first dedication to have been efficient only ‘for the nonce, and not for all time to come, then the same question arises in regard to the firstlings [as to the second tithe]?²⁷ — Said Rabina: indeed he [R. Ishmael] deemed the first dedication efficient ‘for the nonce, and not for all time to come, and here [in deriving the rule of the tithe from that of a firstling] he is thinking [of some particular incident] of a firstling, where the [ritual] blood-sprinkling [on the altar] had been performed just before the destruction of the Temple, and when the Temple was destroyed the flesh was still left [unconsumed by the priests]. And we compare the flesh to the blood thereof:²⁸ just as for [sprinkling of] the blood, there is need of the presence of the altar, so for [the eating of] the flesh, there is need of the existence of the altar [not otherwise];²⁹ and then again, we compare second tithes to firstlings.³⁰ But can a ruling inferred by analogy³¹ be employed [in matters appertaining to hallowed things]³² as basis of inference for a further analogy?³³ — The tithe of corn, [wine and oil] is [considered] non-hallowed.³⁴

(1) For eating them, unlawfully, be it priest or layman. V. Tosaf. 18b, s.v. בכורים.

(2) Subject to no restrictions, apart from the ordinary dues.

- (3) To be enjoyed by priests only. Cf. Lev. V, 15-16; XXVII, 30-31.
- (4) In agreement with the statement of Hoshaia (cited by R. Eleazar and R. Johanan).
- (5) R. Ishmael (b. Elisha). R. Akiba (b. Joseph), the two great Masters and founders of schools and (Simeon) Ben Zoma (according to one reading, Ben 'Azzai).
- (6) Cf. the parallels, Zeb. 60b; Tem., 21a; Tosef. Sanh. III; Sifre on Deut, XIV, 23.
- (7) Firstborn of sheep and kine.
- (8) Deut. XII, 6, 17; XV, 20-21.
- (9) Ibid. XIV, 22-23, and cf. Lev. XXVII, 30, 32.
- (10) Which is not the case in second tithes. On the rites, cf. Num. XVIII, 17; v. also supra p. 125. n. 8.
- (11) First fruits have no ritual sprinkling (of blood or burning of fat) on the altar, yet they have to be brought to and be eaten at Jerusalem. Cf. Deut. XII, 6, 17; Num. XVIII, 13.
- (12) Deut. XXVI, 4, 10, but second tithe is not placed before the altar, and may be eaten in Jerusalem anywhere.
- (13) V. p. 132, n. 5.
- (14) This shows that, already according to R. Ishmael, the omission of recital is not a bar, but that of not placing the fruits before the altar is a bar to their release.
- (15) Surely it is!
- (16) [Cf. MS.M.. cur, edd.: 'let him say a precept'.]
- (17) [Thus: What is requisite in the case of first fruits? They need both the placing (before the altar) as an indispensable rite, and the recital as an enjoined (though not indispensable) precept which is not the case with the second tithe.] But in fact is not; which shows that nothing is to be inferred from its omission. (Against the other Rabbis who regard the omission of the recital as not a bar to the release.)
- (18) V. Bik. I, IV.
- (19) Deut. XXVI, 3.
- (20) That recital is indispensable.
- (21) [Common to firstlings and first fruits: Though they are unlike one another, the former not requiring to be placed before the altar, and the latter, lacking the specific altar rites of blood and fat etc., they nevertheless possess one aspect in common in that they both have to be brought to Jerusalem and consequently are in force only when there is the Temple in existence; and the same argument can similarly be applied to second tithe which also has to be brought to Jerusalem and hence not in force save when the Temple stood.]
- (22) I.e., first fruits and firstlings.
- (23) Which is not the case of the second tithe, which consequently cannot be derived from firstlings and first fruits.
- (24) On another implied issue.
- (25) A very moot question, involving many issues on which opinion is considerably divided. It has three aspects, (a) in regard to Palestine as the Holy Land of Israel, for various religious observances, dues and privileges; (b) in regard to Jerusalem, as the Holy City within the mural precincts, for eating there certain holy foods of a minor degree of sanctity, and (c) in regard to the Temple and altar, for certain sacrificial rites. Here, the question touches only the last two.
- (26) V. Deut. XV, 19-20. Blemished firstlings were unfit for the altar and could be eaten anywhere as ordinary flesh, by the pure or defiled alike (verse 21).
- (27) [This is difficult. Rashi explains the reference to the case where the Temple was destroyed between the sprinkling of the blood of the firstling and the eating of the flesh thereof; and the question would arise since it need no more be brought to the Temple, it is comparable to second tithe, and it should therefore be permitted for eating. It is however better to adopt reading of other texts and MSS. (v. D.S.) 'then even second tithe should present no problem.']
- (28) Since both are associated together in the Holy Writ. Num. XVIII, 17-18. Cf. also Deut. XII, 27.
- (29) In the parallel passage, Temurah 21a, it is put thus, that if the blood were available at the moment (since the fall of the Temple) it could not be used for the ritual without an altar, nor could, therefore, the meat be eaten then.
- (30) Both likewise being associated in the same text (v. supra p. 132, n. 5), that second tithe is not to be eaten outside Jerusalem only during the existence of the altar. [According to the preferable text of versions referred to in note 3, Read: 'Said Rabina, indeed he holds that the first dedication was for the nonce and for all time to come and the reason why R. Ishmael assumes that a firstborn may not be eaten nowadays is because he is thinking etc.']
- (31) Hekesh (v. Glos.) that the flesh of the firstling, by analogy with the blood (and fat), on Num. XVIII, 17-18, demands the presence of the altar.
- (32) 'R. Johanan said: Everywhere in the (exposition of the) Torah deduction may be drawn from deduction, save in matters appertaining to hallowed things (i.e. Temple and sacrificial rites).’ Tem. 21b, and Zeb. 49b.

(33) By the further analogy between second tithe with the (flesh of the) firstling (on Deut. XV, 23) to require the presence of the altar likewise for eating second tithe.

(34) Second tithe may be redeemed (with silver current coin) before it passes through the gates of Jerusalem, and if it has become defiled even in Jerusalem, it may then be used just as ordinary corn, wine or oil, unlike first fruits or other sacrificial kinds (of offerings) mentioned together, which may not be eaten on becoming defiled. In using here one deduction for a further deduction on an ordinary nonsacred element, the aforementioned exegetical rule is not infringed.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 19b

This reply [to the objection raised] is satisfactory according to the view that we follow the derived-point;¹ but what of the view that we follow the instructive-point as well?² — [Again no difficulty here, as] blood and flesh [in this case] are one and the same thing³ [being of the same animal].

WHO EATS OF MOST HOLY [MEATS] OUTSIDE THE HANGINGS; OF LESSER HOLY [MEATS] OR OF SECOND TITHE, OUTSIDE THE CITY WALL. Have we not already learnt this [in the former Mishnah], ‘And [who eats of] second tithe or of "sanctuary-gifts" unredeemed’?⁴ — Said R. Jose b. Hanina: The latter [Mishnah] refers to a second tithe that is clean and to a person in a clean state, who [unlawfully] eats [thereof, unredeemed,] outside the city wall; whereas the former [Mishnah] to a second tithe that is unclean and to a person in an impure state, who ate [unlawfully] of it [unredeemed,] within Jerusalem. Now, where do we find [in Holy Writ] that eating of second tithe in impurity⁵ renders one liable? — As it is taught: R. Simeon says: [The text,] Neither have I put away thereof, being unclean⁶ [implies]: Neither [have I eaten of it] while I was unclean and the tithe clean, nor while I was clean and the tithe defiled. And where is the admonition not to eat it? I know not . . .⁷ [You know not?] Is not [eating of holy meats during] personal impurity explicitly prescribed: The soul that toucheth any such unclean things shall be unclean until the even and shall not eat of the hallowed things until . . .?⁸ — But [I meant] its own defilement.⁹ It is written, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates.¹⁰ And later it is said, the unclean and the clean may eat together, as the gazelle and the hart.¹¹ And the school of R. Ishmael taught that [this means that] even a ‘clean’ person and one who is ‘unclean’ may eat [meat of a blemished firstling] out of the same platter, without scruple.¹² Thus does the All-Merciful direct; that what is allowed you elsewhere,¹³ for the ‘clean’ beside the ‘unclean’ [‘to eat thereof together’]. does not apply here,¹⁴ where — ‘thou mayest not eat’. And [again], whence is it derived that second tithe which has become defiled is redeemable [even within¹⁵ Jerusalem]? — Even as R. Eleazar said: How can it be shown that second tithe which has become defiled may be redeemed even at Jerusalem? From the instructive text: [And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place that He shall choose . . . the tithe of thy corn . . . And if the way be [too] long for thee; if thou art not able to bring it up . . . then shalt thou turn it into money,¹⁶ and the expression se'etho¹⁷ [‘to bring it up’] means [in this connection] only ‘eating’, as in the passage. And portions [mas'oth] were brought forward unto them [Joseph's brothers] from before him [Joseph].¹⁸ R. Bibi, citing R. Assi said: Whence could it be shown that clean second tithe may be redeemed even within one pace of the wall outside Jerusalem? From what is said, When thou art not able to bring it up, [then shalt thou turn it into money]¹⁹ But is that text not claimed for the point already made by R. Eleazar? — Were that the [only] lesson intended, the text should have said, ‘when thou art not able to eat it’; why was that [unusual] expression, se'etho¹⁷ [‘not able’] to bring it up’ used. Am I to take it then, entirely in the sense suggested [by you]? — [No, as then another term,] li[n]telo,²⁰ [‘(unable) to take the load’] might have been used; what then, does [this special term] se'etho¹⁷ convey? It suggests both meanings.

R. Hanina and R. Hoshai sat and raised the [following] question: What would be the case [where a pilgrim had just reached] the very entrance to Jerusalem.²¹ Obviously when he is outside and his charge inside [he cannot redeem], as the partitions [walls] have already taken in the charge; but when he is within and his charge [still] outside, what is the law? — Thereupon a certain aged scholar imparted to them a teaching of the school of R. Simeon b. Yohai [to this effect]: If the place is far from thee . . . [turn it into money],²² the word *mi-meka*²³ [‘from thee’] [implies] ‘thy amplitude’.²⁴ R. Papa raised the question: What if he [being within the entrance] carries his load on a stick [behind him]?²⁵ — The question is left over.²⁶

[WHO EATS . . . OF SECOND TITHE, OUTSIDE THE CITY-WALL.] R. Assi citing R. Johanan said: When does the liability begin [for eating of] second tithe [outside the city-wall]? As soon as it has [once] come within sight of the [interior] wall. The reason? Because [one] text reads: And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God,²⁷ [... the tithe of thy corn];²⁸ and again it is written, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates²⁹ [the tithe of thy corn].³⁰ [We say that] wherever [the former command,] ‘eat before the Lord thy God’ — becomes applicable, [the other,] ‘thou mayest not eat within thy gates’ becomes applicable;³¹ and [vice versa], wherever the [former command], ‘eat before the Lord thy God’, has not become applicable, there too, [the other] ‘thou mayest not eat within thy gates’ is not applicable.³² An objection [against this exposition] was raised from the following: R. Jose said: If a priest picks a fig out of *tebel*³³ produce, [and before eating] says, Let the terumah thereof be [situate³⁴ somewhere] near the peduncle [stalk]; the first tithe thereof in its northern [left] part; the second tithe thereof in its southern [right] part, this being in a year when second tithe is due and he being then in Jerusalem; or, [let] the poor tithe thereof [be] in its southern side, he being then in the ‘country-adjointing,’³⁵ if he then eats that fig,

(1) Here, the second tithe.

(2) Here, the inference from the ritual sprinkling-blood, the due of altar, to the flesh given to the priest or worshipper.

(3) Cf. Men. 13a. And therefore in deriving flesh from blood there is no argument from analogy.

(4) V. Mishnah, supra 13a.

(5) This has two meanings, referring to (a) the impurity of the person, or (b) the impurity of the tithe.

(6) Deut. XXVI. 13-14. A declaration to be made in the Temple on the afternoon of the 7th day of Passover, in the 4th and 7th years of the Septennial Cycle. Cf. Sifre a.l. and on Deut. XII, 17. and M.Sh. V, 10.

(7) The quotation is here interrupted by the questioner and the Scriptural passage adduced by him is not to the point, as that refers to the impurity of the person, not to the impurity of the tithe that the previous speaker wished to elucidate.

(8) Lev. XXII, 6. ‘Hallowed things’ here, and in Deut. XXVI, 13. ‘the hallowed thing’ are taken to mean ‘second tithe’.

(9) That of the tithe, not of the person.

(10) With reference to second tithe, Deut. XII, 17. Cf. also verses 6 and 11; XIV, 23.

(11) With reference to a blemished firstling. Ibid. XV, 21-22.

(12) Of bringing the meat of a firstling (that is usually considered as ‘hallowed’, v. P.B. p. 13) into contact with the (ritually) ‘unclean’ eater. It should be noted that some of the restrictions attach even to the blemished firstling, before it is killed for food, e.g., it may not be shorn of its wool or milked. V. Rashi.

(13) In the case of a blemished firstling.

(14) in the case of second tithe, which must not be eaten when it is brought into contact with what is unclean.

(15) Already implied in the wording of the Mishnah, 13a, HE WHO EATS OF SECOND TITHE UNREDEEMED (is flogged); which plainly suggests that in some cases it may be redeemed. [This however cannot apply to undefiled second tithe, which may not be exchanged into money except outside Jerusalem, and that for the purpose of taking it up there.]

(17) שאתו, the verbal noun of the root נשא which means ‘to raise’, ‘lift’, ‘carry’, ‘bring up’. The word משאת has the extended meaning of a ‘portion of food’ brought to the guest, as in the passage in Genesis cited here. Cf. II Sam. XI, 8.

(18) Gen. XLIII, 34.

(19) Note the double provision made in Deut. XV, 24, ‘If the way be (too) long, and if the place (Jerusalem) be (too) far,’ which is taken to provide (a) against distance and (b) against other difficulties that may arise even close to the Holy ‘City as explained here.

(20) נטלו from the root נטל to take a load’, ‘to carry’. Cf. Isa. XL, 15, and Prov. XXVII, 3.

(21) [MS.M. ‘Sat at the entrance of Jerusalem and asked the (following) question’, v. Rashi.]

(23) מומך seemingly taken as — מעמד — i.e., far 'from what thou hast with thee,' namely, the tithe of corn, wine or oil. For such use of מעם v. Gen. XXXI, 31-32; Ex. XXII, 11, 13; cf. עם Job VI, 4; X, 13 and XXIII, 14. This solves the difficulty felt by Tosaf s.v. הוא.

(24) Here, the bulging bundle of tithe-fruit. The strange word מילואך used here for the bulging load may be taken as suggested by מלאאתך ('thy corn'). Ex. XXII, 28, and Num. XVIII, 27; Deut. XXII, 9. [The meaning of the verse is accordingly, 'If the place is far from what thou hast with thee,' i.e., the load which thou hast with thee on thy shoulders. Consequently where he is already within, though his charge is still outside, since he is not with it, it is not considered far.]

(25) Is the load associated with the bearer as within, or not, in spite of the connecting staff?

(26) See on this point the remark of Rabina, at the very end of this section, 20a.

(27) I.e., in Jerusalem.

(28) Deut. XIV, 23.

(29) I.e., anywhere, outside Jerusalem.

(30) Deut. XII, 17.

(31) I.e., as soon as second tithe enters within the precincts of the Holy City it is 'seized' to be eaten there, and not redeemable or to be taken out again, unless it has become defiled.

(32) I.e., either it has not yet been taken into the Holy City or has become defiled; it is then redeemable.

(33) V.Glos.

(34) Terumah being called 'the Prime', First, has to be definitely marked off, 'designated' and 'allocated', before the rest may be eaten (temporarily). V. Ter. III, 5.

(35) בגבולין, i.e., anywhere outside the Holy City. Poor tithe may be eaten anywhere.

he incurs a flogging on one¹ count; and if he be a layman [non-priest], he is flogged on two² counts, whereas, had he eaten it straightway [without specifying the several dues] he [the layman] would have been liable only on one³ count. [Now] the reason [that a layman is said to be liable on two counts] is because he ate in Jerusalem; but supposing he had done it in the 'country-adjointing', he would have incurred a flogging on three⁴ counts, [that is to say] he would be liable even though the fig [with its comprised quota of second tithe] had not come within sight of the [interior] wall [of Jerusalem]!⁵ — [No; we assume] that he had brought it in [to Jerusalem] and taken it out again. If so, [I ask] what is the object of R. Jose's statement?⁶ — [I would suggest] that the case he has in mind is where one had taken his fruits in tebel-condition to Jerusalem, R. Jose being of opinion that gifts not yet segregated are regarded as virtually segregated.⁷ But does R. Jose hold gifts not yet segregated are regarded as virtually segregated? Why, it is taught: R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Jose that Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel were not in disagreement about fruits that were not yet completely ready [for tithing],⁸ if they were taken in transit through Jerusalem, that the [comprised quota of] second tithe in them may be redeemed and the fruits may then be eaten anywhere.⁹ Where they did differ was about fruits that were completely ready [for tithing] and were taken in transit through Jerusalem, Beth Shammai saying that the [comprised quota of] second tithe in them should be 'brought back to Jerusalem'¹⁰ and be eaten there, while Beth Hillel say that the comprised quota should be redeemed and may be eaten anywhere.¹¹ Now, if you suppose that [R. Jose considers comprised] gifts¹² not yet segregated are as virtually segregated [how could such redeemed dues be eaten anywhere] seeing that they have been received within the [city] walls? — Said Raba:¹³ [The power of the city] walls [to place an embargo] on the eating [of second tithe within] is recognised by the Scriptures, whereas [its power] of 'seizing'¹⁴ is only Rabbinical;¹⁵ and the Rabbis declared an embargo only to second tithe overt;¹⁶ but if it is [still merged] in tebel, they made no embargo. Rabina suggested that [the first objection raised]¹⁷ might be [met by supposing the reference to be to] a man carrying his bundle of second tithe on a stick [behind him].¹⁸ And this [by the way] might offer a solution to the problem raised by R. Papa.¹⁹

MISHNAH. IF A MAN MAKES A BALDNESS ON HIS HEAD, OR ROUNDS THE CORNER OF HIS HEAD, OR MARS THE CORNER OF HIS BEARD, OR MAKES ONE CUTTING [IN HIS FLESH] FOR THE DEAD, HE IS LIABLE [TO A FLOGGING]. IF HE MAKES ONE CUTTING FOR FIVE DEAD, OR FIVE CUTTINGS FOR ONE, HE IS LIABLE [SEVERALLY] FOR EACH ONE.

ON [ROUNDING] THE HEAD [HE IS LIABLE] FOR TWO CORNERS,²⁰ ONE FOR ONE SIDE AND ONE FOR THE OTHER; ON [MARRING] THE BEARD [HE IS LIABLE] FOR TWO [CORNERS] ON ONE SIDE, FOR TWO ON THE OTHER SIDE, AND FOR ONE LOWER DOWN;²¹ R. ELIEZER²² SAYS: IF THEY WERE ALL TAKEN OFF AS ONE²³ HE IS LIABLE ONLY ON ONE COUNT. AND HE IS ONLY LIABLE ON TAKING OFF WITH A RAZOR; R. ELIEZER²² SAYS: EVEN IF HE PICKS OFF THE HAIRS WITH TWEEZERS,²⁴ OR [REMOVES THEM] WITH PINCERS,²⁵ HE IS LIABLE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: ‘[It is written]. They [the priests] shall not make bald . . . [on their head].²⁶ One might presume that if he made four or five bald patches he would be liable only on one count; we are therefore told, a baldness²⁷ — to teach that he is liable on each and every bald patch. What is the [special] import of ‘on their head’ [in this passage]?²⁸ As it is written [elsewhere], Ye shall not cut yourselves nor make a baldness between your eyes for the dead,²⁹ one might presume that [it means] he should only be liable for making a baldness between the eyes alone; how is it shown that the prohibition extends to [anywhere on] the entire head?³⁰ By the expression, ‘on their head,’ [that is, the prohibition] extends to [anywhere] on] the entire head. I have here an injunction only for priests, for whom Holy Writ has laid down many [other] additional precepts; whence is it shown that these are injunctions for Israel [at large]? Because it is said here [to priests] — [they shall not make] a baldness [on their head]³¹ — and it is said there [to all Israel] — [nor make] a baldness [between your eyes for the dead,]³² and [we say]: Just as [in the case of the priests] the offender is liable for each bald patch and on [any part of] the head as for [a baldness made] between the eyes, so likewise here [in the case of all Israel] the offender is liable for each bald patch and on [any part of] the head as for [a baldness made] between the eyes; just as there it is forbidden [only] in mourning for the dead,³³ so likewise here it is forbidden [only] in mourning for the dead.’³⁴

How, for instance, were those four or five baldnesses made?³⁵ If I say one after another, he having duly been admonished [four or] five times, it is obvious [that he is liable for each].

(1) For eating tebel, i.e., the first tithe from which the priestly due had not been set aside. Being a priest, he may eat terumah and there is no offence as regards eating the comprised quota of second tithe, because he is eating it now in Jerusalem, as stated in the data, nor as regards eating the first tithe which is permissible even to laymen.

(2) For eating (i) tebel, and (ii) terumah (twice).

(3) For tebel only. The version of this quotation in the Tosef. Mak. III, is different, but to the same effect.

(4) For eating tebel, terumah (twice) and second tithe outside Jerusalem.

(5) Which is in conflict with the (reported) statement of R. Johanan above, that the liability (technically) begins as soon as the second tithe comes within sight of the interior of the wall of Jerusalem.

(6) Why all those particulars, when and where it was done?

(7) Hence three counts for a layman: For tebel, for terumah (twice) and for second tithe, albeit as yet unsegregated.

(8) I.e., for storing and tithing. Tithes are not actually due until the final stage of harvesting. V. Ma'as. I, 5.

(9) As the second tithe was as yet not actually due.

(10) Having once been taken into the Holy City, they were ‘seized’ and appropriated, not to be taken out again.

(11) M.Sh. III, 6.

(12) Dues.

(13) Var. lec.: ‘Rabbah’.

(14) Preventing the redemption thereof.

(15) By interpretation of the implications of the text.

- (17) That if he ate the fig (instanced above) outside Jerusalem he would be liable on three counts, although it had not yet been brought within sight of the interior of the wall.
- (18) And this circumstance might be taken as if by the man's penetration his bundle too has reached within sight of the interior with him, and thereby he incurs a flogging, if he eats the fruit outside.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 20b

If [on the other hand] there had been uttered but one admonition, is he liable [on four or five counts]? Do we not learn [in the Mishnah]:¹ A nazirite² who has been drinking wine all day is liable only on one count;³ if they said to him, 'Drink not [wine]!' 'Drink not [wine]!' — and he drinks [each time], he is liable on each and every [instance]? — The ruling has application where [say] he dipped his five fingers in a [depilatory] salve and applied them simultaneously [on five places], in which case the one admonition refers to each [finger separately].

And how much constitutes a baldness? — R. Huna says: Enough to show the [bare] scalp; R. Johanan says, in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon:⁴ It is about the size of a bean. [These statements correspond] to different Tanna-statements: 'How much constitutes a baldness? About the size of a bean; others⁵ say, enough to show the [bare] scalp.' Rab Judah b. Habiba observed that three Tannaim differed on that point: one saying the size of a bean, another saying, large enough to show the [bare] scalp, and yet another saying, the removal of two hairs [at least]; some delete 'two hairs' and substitute 'about the size of a lentil'. As a mnemonic use the following [Mishnaic] phrase: 'If a [leprous] bright-spot⁶ is of the size of a halved [Cilician]⁷ bean and quick-flesh⁸ of the size of a lentil [encircles it etc.]'.⁹

A Tanna taught: 'One who removes [on the Sabbath] a scissors-nip [of hair] is liable for [a sin-offering]';¹⁰ and how much is a scissors-nip? — Said Rab Judah: Two hairs. But was it not taught¹¹ that two hairs are [the minimum] for a baldness? — Then take it as meaning, 'And the same [minimum] obtains in the case of a baldness.' It is likewise taught in [another] Baraita: One who removes [on the Sabbath] a scissors-nip [of hair] is liable [to a sin-offering]. And how much is a scissors-nip? Two hairs; R. Eliezer says [even] one hair. Yet the Sages concede to R. Eliezer where one picks out white hair from the black that he is liable even for one, and this thing is forbidden even on week-days,¹² because it [comes under what] is said, And a man shall not put on a woman's garment.¹³

OR ROUNDS THE CORNER OF HIS HEAD. Our Rabbis taught: 'The corner of his head', is the extreme end on one's head: and what is [rounding] the extreme end on his head? If he levels his temple-growth from the back of his ears to the forehead.

A tanna recited in the presence of R. Hisda: The one who rounds [the corners], and the one who has them rounded are equally liable [to a flogging]. Said R. Hisda to him: 'Does a fellow who eats dates from a sieve get a flogging?'¹⁴ Should anyone ask whose view that is, [tell him] it is R. Judah's view who says: [The contravention of] a prohibition [involving] no [tangible] action entails a flogging.¹⁵ Raba suggested [that the dictum may refer] to one who crops himself [rounding off the corners of his head],¹⁶ and that would harmonize with either view.¹⁷ R. Ashi suggested [it might refer] to one who assists¹⁸ the hairdresser, and this [too] harmonizes with either view.

OR MARS THE CORNER OF HIS BEARD. Our Rabbis taught: 'The corner of his beard' means the 'end' of his beard; and what is the 'end' of his beard? The 'tuft'¹⁹ of his beard.

OR MAKES ONE CUTTING [IN THE FLESH] FOR THE DEAD. Our Rabbis taught: [It is written,] Ye shall not make a cutting in your flesh.²⁰ One might presume that [he is liable] even for cutting himself on the collapse of his house, or on the foundering of his ship at sea; we are therefore told 'for a soul'²⁰ — [that is to say,] he is liable only on [cutting himself] for the dead alone. And whence is it shown that one who makes five cuttings [in his flesh] for one dead is liable on each and every cutting? We learn it from the words, 'a cutting',²⁰ that is, to make one liable for every cutting. R. Jose²¹ Says: Whence can it be shown that one who makes one cutting for five dead is liable on each [of the five] dead? From the instructive text 'for a soul',²⁰ which indicates that one is liable for every soul — But, have you not already made use of this text for excluding [from this category] one 'who cut himself on the collapse of his house, or on the foundering of his ship at sea'?

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 21a

— [Yes, but] R. Jose¹ takes [the two terms used] — *seritah*² and *gedidah*³ as having the same import, and in the case of the latter it is said 'for the dead'.⁴ Samuel said: One who cuts himself with an instrument is liable.⁵ An objection [against this] was raised from the following: seritah and gedidah are one [and the same] thing, save that seritah is done with the hand, while gedidah is done with an instrument! — He [Samuel] shares the view of R. Jose.⁶

A tanna recited in the presence of R. Johanan: [One who cuts himself] for the dead, whether with the hand or with instrument, is liable [to a flogging]; [if he does so] as an idolatrous practice, if with hand he is liable, if with instrument, he is exempt. But, is it not written [of the priests of Baal] the other way about, and they cut themselves after their manner with swords and lances?⁷ — But rather say, 'If with the hand, he is exempt,⁸ if with an instrument, he is liable.'

ON [ROUNDING] THE HEAD [HE IS LIABLE] FOR TWO CORNERS, ONE FOR ONE SIDE AND ONE FOR THE OTHER. R. Shesheth pointed them out between the two [lateral] joints⁹ of the head. ON [MARRING] THE BEARD [HE IS LIABLE] FOR TWO [CORNERS] ON THIS SIDE, FOR TWO ON THE OTHER SIDE AND FOR ONE LOWER DOWN. R. Shesheth pointed them out between the [several] junctions of the beard.¹⁰

R. ELIEZER SAYS: IF THEY WERE ALL TAKEN OFF AS ONE, HE IS LIABLE ONLY ON ONE COUNT. [That is,] he considers the whole [process as comprised under the] one prohibition.

AND HE IS ONLY LIABLE ON TAKING OFF¹¹ WITH A RAZOR. Our Rabbis taught: [It is written], Neither shall they [the priests] shave off the corner of their beard.¹² One might suppose that [he is liable] even if he removed it with scissors; we are therefore told, neither shalt thou mar [destroy]¹³ Reading, 'neither shalt thou mar'; one might suppose that he is liable¹⁴ even if he picked off the hairs with tweezers or with pincers; we are therefore told, 'they shall not shave,' to show that it must be shaving that involves destruction,¹⁵ which is the kind of shaving that involves destruction? You must say, it is [that done] by the [use of the] razor.¹⁶

R. ELIEZER SAYS: EVEN IF HE PICKS OFF THE HAIRS WITH TWEEZERS OR PINCERS HE IS LIABLE. However you wish [to take this statement, it is difficult]. If he received on tradition¹⁷ the Gezerah shawah,¹⁸ he should insist only on the razor [as the forbidden instrument]; if [on the other hand], he does not receive on tradition the Gezerah shawah, he should not permit even scissors!¹⁹ — Indeed, he did receive on tradition the Gezerah shawah, but he considers [the process of] those instruments²⁰ practically as shaving.

MISHNAH. HE WHO WRITES AN 'INCISED'-IMPRINT [IN HIS FLESH, IS FLOGGED]. IF HE WRITES [ON HIS FLESH] WITHOUT INCISING, OR INCISES [HIS FLESH] WITHOUT IMPRINTING, HE IS NOT LIABLE: [HE IS] NOT LIABLE UNTIL HE WRITES AND IMPRINTS THE INCISION WITH INK, EYE-PAINT²¹ OR ANYTHING THAT MARKS. R. SIMEON B. JUDAH SAYS IN THE NAME OF R. SIMEON [B. YOHAI] THAT HE IS NOT

LIABLE UNTIL HE HAS WRITTEN THERE THE NAME, AS IT IS SAID: NOR PUT ON YOU ANY WRITTEN-IMPRINT, I AM THE LORD.²²

GEMARA. Said R. Aha the son of Raba to R. Ashi: [Does it mean, not] until he has actually inscribed the words, I am the Lord? — No, replied he, it means, as Bar Kappara taught,²³ [viz.:] He is not liable [to a flogging] until he inscribed the name of some profane deity, as it is said: Nor put on you any written-imprint, I am the Lord,²² [that is,] ‘I am the Lord’ and no other.²⁴

R. Malkiah, as citing R. Adda b. Ahabah, said: It is prohibited to powder one's wound with burnt wood ash, because it gives the appearance of an incised imprint. R. Nahman²⁵ the son of R. Ika said: ‘Spit’,²⁶ ‘Maids’,²⁷ and ‘Follicles’,²⁸ were subjects of comment by R. Malkio,²⁹ while the ‘Belorith-tresses’,³⁰ ‘Wood-ash’,³¹ and ‘Cheeses’,³² were subjects of comment by R. Malkiah. R. Papa said: Malkiah comments on ‘Our Mishnah’ and [other] Mishnahs,³³ while R. Malkio comments on ‘Reported-pronouncements’:³⁴ your mnemonic [for this] is, The Mishnahs³⁵ are Malkatha³⁶ [‘Queens’]. What is the difference between the two? The point of ‘Maids’.³⁷

R. Bibi b. Abaye was particular even about [powdering] the scorings of the cupping instruments. R. Ashi observed [that this was going too far, as] wherever there is a wound the wound attests the [man's] purpose.

MISHNAH. IF A NAZIRITE HAS BEEN DRINKING WINE³⁸ ALL DAY, HE IS LIABLE ONCE ONLY; IF THEY SAID TO HIM, ‘DRINK NOT [WINE]!’ ‘DRINK NOT [WINE]!’ AND HE DRANK [EACH TIME], HE IS LIABLE ON EACH [INSTANCE]. IF HE HAS BEEN DEFILING HIMSELF FOR THE DEAD³⁹ ALL DAY, HE IS LIABLE ONCE ONLY; IF THEY SAID TO HIM, ‘DEFILE NOT YOURSELF!’ ‘DEFILE NOT YOURSELF!’ AND HE DID DEFILE HIMSELF [EACH TIME], HE IS LIABLE ON EACH [INSTANCE]. IF HE WAS SHAVING⁴⁰ ALL DAY HE IS LIABLE ONCE ONLY; IF THEY SAID TO HIM, SHAVE NOT!’ ‘SHAVE NOT!’ AND HE DID SHAVE [EACH TIME], HE IS LIABLE ON EACH [INSTANCE]. IF ONE WEARS A GARB OF ‘LINSEY-WOOLSEY’⁴¹ ALL DAY, HE IS LIABLE ONCE ONLY; IF THEY SAID TO HIM, ‘DO NOT PUT IT ON!’ ‘DO NOT PUT IT ON!’ AND HE TAKES IT OFF AND PUTS IT ON, HE IS LIABLE ON EACH [INSTANCE].

(24) 'THE NAME' in the Mishnah will accordingly denote the name of an idol.

(25) In the parallel passages it is R. Hanina son of R. Ika.

(26) A reported pronouncement of Samuel that after the meat has been roasted the (greasy) spit should not be handled again on the Festival day; but R. Malkio, citing R. Adda b. Ahabah, said it may be put aside at the time. v. Bezah, 28b.

(27) R. Eliezer says (in a Mishnah), Even if a wife brought with her a hundred maids of her own, the husband can still insist on her doing work with wool, on the ground that idleness is demoralising. On this R. Malkio's comment (as citing R. Adda b. Ahabah) is that the halachah follows R. Eliezer; Keth. 61b.

(28) R. Huna observed that the two hairs proving pubes should be set in follicles (pitlets). On this R. Malkio commented (citing R. A. b. Ah.) that the follicles alone even without the hairs are sufficient indication of pubes; Nid. 52a.

(29) All these have Malkio, while the next group has Malkiah as commentator, also as citing the same Master, R. Adda b. Ahabah.

(30) A Baraitha teaches that in trimming the hair of a pagan, a Jew should cautiously 'keep off' his (other) hand from touching the top-tresses for these were usually consecrated to some deity. On this R. Malkiah commented (in the name of his Master) that he should begin to withdraw his hand at a distance of three fingers' breadth, on each side. A.Z. 29a. On belorith v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 114, n. 5.

(31) Mentioned above, as comment on our Mishnah.

(32) On a discussion why cheeses of heathens are forbidden (in the Mishnah) R. Malkiah (in his Master's name) comments that they are forbidden because they are smeared over with lard. A.Z. 35b.

(35) That is 'Our Mishnah' par excellence.

(36) I.e., they are commented upon by R. Malkiah (which name closely resembles Malkah 'queen'); not Malkio.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 21b

IT IS POSSIBLE [FOR ONE] TO PLOUGH BUT ONE FURROW AND BECOME LIABLE [THEREBY] FOR EIGHT PROHIBITED ACTS: IF HE PLOUGHS WITH AN OX AND ASS [YOKED TOGETHER]¹ AND THESE WERE [ANIMALS] OF THE SANCTUARY;² [THE PLOUGH BEING DRAWN OVER] DIVERSE MIXED-SEED³ [SOWN] IN A VINEYARD,⁴ DURING THE SABBATICAL YEAR,⁵ ON A FESTIVAL-DAY,⁶ [THE PLOUGHER BEING] A PRIEST⁷ AND A NAZIRITE⁸ AND THE PLOT BEING SITUATE ON A DEFILED AREA.⁹ HANANIA B. HAKINAI SUGGESTS ALSO THAT HE MAY HAVE BEEN WEARING THEN 'LINSEY-WOOLSEY'¹⁰ SAID THEY TO HIM: THIS [LAST] IS NOT OF THE SAME CATEGORY. SAID HE TO THEM: NOR IS THE NAZIRITE¹¹ IN THE SAME CATEGORY.¹²

GEMARA. [AND HE TAKES IT OFF AND PUTS IT ON.] Said R. Bibi as citing R. Assi: Not [necessarily] actually taking it off and putting it on, but even if he only put his hand in and out of the arm-hole.¹³ R. Aha the son of R. Ika illustrated it [as requiring] to get into the coat and to get out of it. R. Ashi says: Even if he only wore it long enough to put it on and to take it off he becomes liable.¹⁴

IT IS POSSIBLE TO PLOUGH BUT ONE FURROW AND BECOME LIABLE. Said R. Jannai: A decision by vote was taken at a certain [Rabbinical] Convention¹⁵ that he who [only] covers over diverse seeds [with earth] makes himself liable to a flogging.¹⁶ Said R. Johanan to him: Is that not [learnt in] our Mishnah: — IT IS POSSIBLE TO PLOUGH BUT ONE FURROW AND BECOME LIABLE [THEREBY] FOR EIGHT PROHIBITED ACTS; IF HE PLOUGHS [WITH AN OX AND ASS YOKED TOGETHER AND THESE ARE THE CHATTELS OF THE SANCTUARY . . .] OVER DIVERSE SEEDS [SOWN IN A VINEYARD etc.]? Now, how does he make himself liable by ploughing for [sowing] diverse seeds unless it is by covering them over [with the clods] as he proceeds [with the plough]?¹⁷ — He [R. Jannai] replied: Had I not picked up the shard for you, you would not have found the pearl beneath it.¹⁸ Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: Had not that great man¹⁹ praised you, I should have said, Whose is the view expressed in the Mishnah? It is R. Akiba's, who said that one who preserves diverse seeds incurs a flogging.²⁰ Which statement of R. Akiba [have you in mind]? — [The following, as] it is taught: One who weeds or covers over diverse-seeds is flogged; R. Akiba says: Also one who preserves [them].²¹ What is R. Akiba's reason? — It is as taught [in the following]: Thou shalt not sow thy field with two-kinds-of-seeds;²² I [know that it is forbidden] to sow, whence [say I, that] preserving [is debarred]? From the instructive [order of the] wording. Two kinds of seed in thy field [there shall] not [be].²³

Said 'Ulla to R. Nahman: And why not [mention²⁴ also] that he would be flogged for sowing²⁵ on the festival-day? — Said R. Nahman to him: [The Tanna] 'teaches and leaves out [some].'²⁶ Said 'Ulla to him: The Tanna teaches eight prohibited acts and you tell me 'He teaches and leaves out [some]'? — But said Rabbah:²⁷ The [principle of] 'distributive liability²⁸ for different kinds of work' is applicable to Sabbath, but no [principle of] 'distributive liability for work' is applicable to Festivals. Said he to him [Rabbah]: Let it remain at that! Abaye, however, raised an objection against him [saying]: But is not the principle of 'distributive liability for different kinds of work' held applicable also to Festivals? Is it not taught: One who on a festival-day boils the sciatic-sinew in milk and eats it incurs a flogging on five counts, [i] for eating the sinew,²⁹ [ii] for [unnecessary] cooking³⁰ on a festival-day. [iii] for boiling the sinew in milk,³¹ [iv] for eating meat with milk,³¹

(2) Votive-gifts to the Sanctuary, animals for sacrifice or service, v. Lev. XXVII, 9-12; 26-27. If these animals are firstlings they may not be worked at all, even separately. (V. Ex. XIII, 12-13; Deut. XV, 19.)

(3) Forbidden in Lev. XIX, 19. In Palestine the seeds were scattered on the ground immediately after the first rain-fall and the plough was drawn over to cover them, v. Shab. 73a.

(4) Forbidden in Deut. XXII, 9. Even if he himself had not scattered the mixed diverse-seeds on the ground, his drawing the plough to cover them over amounts to sowing; if he did scatter them too, he would also have that to his guilt, but not to be included here in the example of accumulated-offences in one single act.

(5) Forbidden Ex. XXIII, 11; Lev. XXV, 4. The ploughing here is a form of sowing.

(6) On which work is forbidden, Lev. XXIII, 7-8; 21, 25, 30-31, 35-36. Sabbath is not mentioned, as a breach of the Sabbath by ploughing involves the supreme penalty (which would cover all counts) and no flogging is given in such cases. Cf. supra 13b and Rashi Pes. 47b (top).

(7) Who may not defile himself to the dead, Lev. XXI, 1-3. Cf. Num. XIX, 11, 16 ('grave').

(8) Likewise forbidden, Num. VI, 6 ff.

(9) I.e., a graveside, or burial ground. Cf. Num. XIX, 16.

(13) 'Neither shall there come upon thee a garment of two kinds of stuff mingled together (sha'atnez);' Lev. XIX, 19. (Cf. p. 148, n. 9.) [The reading adopted here is that of the Yalkut; cur. edd. read: Does it mean he actually takes it off . . .

or even if he only puts his hand in etc.']

(14) [I.e., he becomes liable for every space of time during which he could put it on and take it off.]

(15) On the nature and function of these, v. S.I. Zuri, The Reign of the Patriarchate and Sanhedrin, (in Hebrew, London, 1933) Vol. III, p. 85; v. B.K. (Sonc. ed.) p. 407, n. 11.

(16) As for sowing diverse seeds.

(17) V. p. 149, n. 3.

(18) [As you might have explained the Mishnah as representing the view of R. Akiba to be cited anon.]

(19) [I.e., had not R. Jannai accepted your inference from the Mishnah, v. Rashi.]

(20) [But on the view of the Rabbis who oppose R. Akiba (v. n. 8) there would be no flogging for covering over diverse seeds, as against the decision of the convention.]

(21) Even though he has not scattered or sown them himself, but merely preserved them from going to waste by fencing them in or manuring them. It will be noticed that this would be action, and make him liable to a flogging. Preserving, however, might be taken to mean merely leaving alone, allowing the forbidden growth without uprooting it (as was expected). From the wording of the citation here, it is doubtful whether R. Akiba imposes a flogging even for a mere passive preservation. The Tosef. Mak. IV, 5, and Kil. I, 8, distinctly says that preserving as such makes him 'a transgressor of a forbidden act' — עובר בלא תעשה — but not liable to a flogging for inaction. V. Aruch s.v. אק, and particularly the commentary of R. Shimshon (of Sens), on Sifra, Lev. XIX, 29. also J. Kil. VIII, 1. V. Friedmann, M. op. cit. a.l. [The opening clause of this Baraita is explained in M.K. 2a as introducing the view of R. Akiba. Thus: 'one who weeds or covers ... is flogged, because R. Akiba says that also one who preserves them is liable.' The Rabbis, however, who disagree with R. Akiba in the case of preserving, will also differ from him in the case of covering.]

(22) Lev. XIX, 29.

(23) שדך בלאים. This text might also be explained, that as there are several kinds of kil'ayim (diverse-mixed things) that are forbidden here, its purpose must be 'Of kil'ayim have none'!

(24) In the detailed enumeration in the Mishnah.

(25) V. p. 149. n. 6, Since covering over diverse seed is treated as sowing.

(26) I.e., it is not an exhaustive list. There are other such instances.

(27) [For this reading v. D.S. a.l.; cur. edd. Raba said.]

(28) I.e., to be liable for every category of work separately, e.g., for ploughing and sowing, or for kindling the fire and cooking. This principle is inferred in the case of Sabbath, from Ex. XXXV, 2-3, where verse 2 forbids work on the Sabbath on the pain of death (kareth, or sin-offering, as the case may be), while verse 3 singles out the kindling of fire as if in a category by itself. One of the explanations given is that verse 3 indicates the 'distributive principle' for Sabbath, namely, that if one did many kinds of work (forgetful that it was a Sabbath day) he is liable on as many counts as the different categories of work he had done during that spell of forgetfulness. (V. Shab. 70a and parallel and Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 420, n. 3.) R. Jose derives the same point from another text. No such authentic indication is available in the law of the Festivals.

(29) Forbidden in Gen. XXXII, 33.

(30) Ex. XII, 16, permits the preparation of food on festival days, but the sinew is not (proper) food.

(31) The prohibition is derived from the thrice forbidden seething of the kid in its mother's milk — in Ex. XXIII, 19; XXXIV, 26; Deut. XIV, 21 — as forbidding cooking, eating, or even all manner of use thereof.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 22a

and [v] for kindling¹ fire. Now, if it is [as you suggested], he should not be flogged for kindling the fire, as he is already held liable for cooking it [the sinew]? — Then [perhaps] remove kindling [from this text] and substitute [eating] sinew of a nebelah instead.² But then, is it not taught by R. Hiyya [on this same point]: 'He is flogged for eating it, on two counts, and on three counts for boiling it'? Now, if it be [emended as you suggest], he would be liable on three counts for eating it! — But take out kindling [on festival-day] and put instead [kindling] fire-wood from an asherah, and as to the requisite forewarning [to justify a flogging],³ it is contained in the verse, And there shall cleave nought of the accursed thing to thy hand.⁴

Said R. Aha the son of Raba to R. Ashi: Should he then not also incur a flogging on account of, And thou shalt not bring an abomination into thy house?⁵ — But here we deal with a case where he cooked it with fire-wood belonging to the Sanctuary, and as to requisite forewarning it is contained in the following [two texts]: And burn their asherim with fire, and [on the other hand], Ye shall not do so unto the Lord your God.⁶

To this R. Oshaia⁷ demurred: Why not include [in the list] also one who sows in ‘a rough valley’, the requisite forewarning being contained in the words, Which shall neither be ploughed nor sown?⁸ R. Hanania demurred: Why not include also if he erased [with plough] the Divine Name [inscribed on something] whilst proceeding with it, the requisite forewarning being found in the words, And ye shall destroy their name out of that place. Ye shall not do so unto the Lord your God?⁹ R. Abbahu demurred: Why not include also one who cuts away a [leprous] ‘bright-spot’¹⁰ the requisite forewarning being contained in the words, Take heed in the plague of leprosy that thou observe diligently, and do according to all that the priest the Levites shall teach you?¹¹ Abaye demurred: Why not include also one who loosened the ‘breastplate’ [of the High priest] from the ephod,¹² and also one who removed the staves from [their rings] on the ark,¹³ the requisite forewarnings being, they shall not be taken from it,¹⁴ And that the breastplate be not loosed?¹⁵ R. Ashi demurred: Why not include also one who ploughed with sticks taken from an asherah tree, the forewarning being, And there shall cleave nought of the accursed thing to thy hand?¹⁶ Rabina demurred: Why not include also one who cuts down good [fruit] trees, whilst proceeding¹⁷ [with the plough], the forewarning being, for thou mayest eat of them, but thou shalt not cut them down?¹⁸ Said R. Ze'ira to R. Mani: Why not include also the case of one who solemnly swore, ‘I shall not plough on the Festival-day’? — In that case the oath has no application, because he stands already adjured¹⁹ by the law of Sinai. Then, said he [R. Ze'ira] to him: Supposing he had sworn: ‘I shall not plough [at all], be it week-day or Festival-day,’ in which case, as the oath is valid for a week-day, it attaches [incidentally] also to the Festival-day?²⁰ — The Tanna does not mention anything for which absolution may be obtained.²¹ But [does he] not? Behold there is [the mention of ANIMALS] OF THE SANCTUARY?²² — [I explain that] to refer to a firstling.²³ And what about [the mention] of A Nazirite?²⁴ — That refers to a Samson-Nazirite.²⁵ ‘A Samson-Nazirite’! Is he debarred from defiling himself to the dead?²⁶ — But [say]²⁷ that the Tanna [of this Mishnah] does not admit the principle of issur-kolel.²⁸

R. Hoshia²⁹ said: If a votive-ox that had become disqualified [for sacrifice]³⁰ were to be used for covering a female [for breeding], the person using it so is liable to a flogging on two [counts].³¹ R. Isaac²⁹ [similarly] observed that if one drives [works] a votive-ox that had become disqualified [for sacrifice],³² he becomes liable to a flogging [for working it]: for, although the animal is [physically] one body, Holy Writ has [by its restrictions legally] placed it in the category of two [‘diverse’] bodies.³³

MISHNAH. [AND]³⁴ HOW MANY LASHES ARE GIVEN HIM? FORTY SAVE ONE, AS IT IS SAID: BY NUMBER FORTY,³⁵ WHICH MEANS, A NUMBER COMING UP TO³⁶ FORTY. R. JUDAH SAYS: HE IS GIVEN FORTY [LASHES] IN FULL, AND WHERE IS THE ADDITIONAL LASH³⁷ APPLIED? BETWEEN³⁸ HIS SHOULDERS.

WHEN THEY ESTIMATE THE NUMBER OF LASHES HE CAN STAND IT MUST BE A NUMBER DIVISIBLE BY THREE. IF THEY ESTIMATED HIM CAPABLE OF RECEIVING FORTY, AND AFTER RECEIVING SOME³⁹

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 22b

THEY AGAIN ESTIMATED HIM AS NOT CAPABLE OF ENDURING FORTY, HE IS EXEMPTED [FROM THE REST].¹ IF THEY ESTIMATED HIM FIT TO RECEIVE EIGHTEEN, AND AFTER HE RECEIVED THE SAME THEY AGAIN ESTIMATED HIM AS FIT FOR RECEIVING FORTY [SAVE ONE], HE IS EXEMPTED [FROM THE REST].¹ GEMARA. [AND HOW MANY LASHES ARE GIVEN? FORTY SAVE ONE.] What is the reason for this [particular number]? — If it were written, 'forty in number,' I should have said it means [actually] forty in number; but as [the order of] the wording is 'by number forty'² [it means] a number coming up to the forty.³ Raba observed: How dull-witted are those other people⁴ who stand up [in deference] to the Scroll of the Torah but do not stand up [in deference] to a great personage, because, while in the Torah Scroll forty lashes are prescribed, the Rabbis come and [by interpretation] reduce them by one.

R. JUDAH SAYS: FORTY [LASHES] IN FULL. AND WHERE IS THE ADDITIONAL LASH APPLIED? BETWEEN THE SHOULDERS. Said R. Isaac: What is R. Judah's reason?⁵ — It is written, And one shall say, what are these⁶ wounds between thine hands?⁷ Then he shall answer, I was beaten in the house of my friends.⁸ And the Rabbis [what say they to this]? — That [say they] is written in reference to the [punishment of] school children.

WHEN THEY ESTIMATE THE NUMBER OF LASHES [HE CAN STAND] IT MUST BE A NUMBER DIVISIBLE BY THREE [IF . . . AFTER RECEIVING SOME THEY AGAIN ESTIMATED HIM . . . HE IS EXEMPT]. That is, exempt only after he had received some, but if he has not yet received any [of the first sentence] he is not [granted that consideration]. But this is contradicted by the following: If they estimated him fit for forty, and then again estimated him⁹ unfit for receiving forty, he is exempt; if they estimated him fit for receiving eighteen, and then again estimated him¹⁰ fit for receiving forty, he is exempt [from the rest]! — Said R. Shesheth: This is not difficult [to explain]. Here [in the Mishnah], they estimated his fitness for the same day,¹¹ while there [in the Baraita cited], they estimated his fitness for the next, or some other day.¹²

MISHNAH. IF HE COMMITTED A TRANSGRESSION WHICH OFFENDED AGAINST TWO PROHIBITIONS¹³ AND THEY MADE ONE ESTIMATE [FOR BOTH],¹⁴ HE TAKES HIS SCOURGING AND IS QUIT; IF NOT,¹⁴ HE IS FLOGGED [FOR ONE TRANSGRESSION], IS ALLOWED TO RECOVER AND THEN IS FLOGGED AGAIN.

GEMARA. But is it not taught: One infliction [of lashes] is not adjudged for two prohibitions? — Said R. Shesheth: This is not difficult [to explain]; in one case it is where they assigned him forty-one lashes,¹⁵ while [this Mishnah bears on a case] where they assigned him forty-two¹⁶ lashes. MISHNAH. HOW DO THEY SCOURGE HIM? HIS TWO HANDS ARE TIED TO A POST¹⁷ ON EITHER SIDE OF IT. THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE SYNAGOGUE¹⁸ LAYS HOLD OF HIS GARMENTS, IF THEY ARE TORN THEY ARE TORN: IF THEY ARE RIPPED OPEN, THEY ARE RIPPED OPEN¹⁹ UNTIL HE EXPOSES THE OFFENDER'S CHEST. A STONE IS PLACED BEHIND THE OFFENDER ON WHICH THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE SYNAGOGUE STANDS OVER HIM, [HOLDING] IN HIS HAND A STRAP OF CALF-HIDE, MADE OF ONE THONG, ONE FOLDED INTO TWO, AND [THE] TWO INTO FOUR,²⁰ AND [OTHER]²¹ TWO THONGS RUNNING [AS IT WERE] UP AND DOWN;²² THE HAFT IS A HANDBREADTH [IN LENGTH]²³ AND THE [THONG'S] WIDTH A HANDBREADTH: ITS TIP REACHING TO THE EDGE OF THE ABDOMEN.²⁴ HE ADMINISTERS ONE-THIRD [OF THE LASHES] IN FRONT²⁵ AND TWO-THIRDS BEHIND.²⁶ HE LASHES HIM NOT IN A STANDING OR SITTING POSTURE BUT STOOPING, AS IT IS SAID, AND THE JUDGE SHALL CAUSE HIM TO FALL [STOOP] DOWN AND HAVE HIM BEATEN.²⁷ HE WHO ADMINISTERS THE LASHES SMITES WITH HIS ONE HAND AND WITH HIS WHOLE FORCE, WHILE THE ONE WHO RECITES, SAYS: IF THOU WILT NOT OBSERVE TO DO . . . THEN THE LORD THY GOD SHALL MAKE THY STROKES PRONOUNCED,²⁸ AND THE STROKES OF THY SEED [etc.]²⁹ AND HE GOES BACK AGAIN TO THE BEGINNING OF THE TEXT [IF NECESSARY]³⁰ AND CONCLUDES WITH: BUT HE, BEING FULL OF COMPASSION, FORGIVETH INIQUITY AND DESTROYETH NOT; YEA, MANY A TIME DOTH HE TURN HIS ANGER AWAY AND DOTH NOT STIR UP ALL HIS WRATH,³¹ AND AGAIN RETURNS TO THE TEXT:³² OBSERVE THEREFORE, THE WORDS OF THIS COVENANT AND DO THEM, THAT YE MAY MAKE ALL THAT YE DO TO PROSPER.³³ IF THE OFFENDER DIES UNDER HIS HAND [STROKE] HE IS EXEMPT [FROM PENALTY].³⁴ IF HE GAVE HIM ONE MORE LASH AND THE OFFENDER DIED, HE GOES INTO BANISHMENT. IF THE OFFENDER BEFOULED HIMSELF EITHER WITH FAECES OR URINE, HE IS DISCHARGED.³⁵ R. JUDAH SAYS: FAECES IN THE CASE OF A MAN AND URINE IN THE CASE OF A WOMAN.

(1) As, having had part of his degradation by order of Court, he can no longer be said to have got away unpunished for his misdeed. But if he has not yet received any strokes, and he cannot for some reason take them that day, the lashing can be deferred and even reimposed for another day.

(2) V. p. 155, n. 4.

(3) V. p. 155, n. 5.

(4) I.e., other than cultured people who generally show respect to scholars.

(5) For his view that forty lashes are given. [Or better, that the additional lash is applied between the shoulders.]

(6) Or these 'strokes', i.e. the forty lashes. The number forty is obtained from the word לִשְׁׁוֹת (these), in this way: the numerical value of the letters being t = 1; k = 30; v = 5 + 4 letters — vktv = total 40; v. A. Chaikin צִיּוּנֵי רֶשֶׁי on Mak. 22b. [V. however next note.]

(7) [I.e., 'BETWEEN THE SHOULDERS', which affords a basis for R. Judah's view as regards the place where the additional lash is inflicted, v. Ritba.]

(8) Zech. XIII, 6: 'who seek to reconcile me with God are my friends.' Cf. Midr. Tan. on Deut. XXV, 3, p. 164.

(9) Omitting any mention about him having received part of his punishment, as if that condition was of no importance and what the Court had once determined cannot be changed on further consideration. This seems an entire contradiction of the ruling in the Mishnah.

(10) V. p. 156, n. 8.

(11) That is, to be inflicted on the day of the decision. If the Court changes its mind before he received any of the lashes, there is practically no decision, the second abrogating the first: and, the second, too, may be wrong, as the man's condition could hardly have changed so quickly. His punishment must be deferred for a clearer estimation. If, however, he has already suffered part of his punishment, he has had his humiliation already, and is quit.

(12) And when on the appointed day it is found that his condition has improved or deteriorated, the Court may adjust the punishment accordingly, without any reflection on their former adjudication as to his fitness.

(13) E.g., for ploughing with ox and ass yoked together to cover over diverse-seeds scattered in (his field or) vineyard, forbidden in Deut. XXII, 9-10, and Lev. XIX, 19.

(14) For both offences.

(15) I.e., thirty-nine for one offence and two lashes only for the other. Thirty-nine is the statutory limit for any one offence at any one time: as the remaining (two lashes) are not divisible by three, they cannot be administered but he is allowed to recover and is subjected to a new series of lashes.

(16) I.e., thirty-nine for one offence and three for the other: he can take the whole number at one time and is quit.

(17) Reaching up to the middle of the body, over which the offender is bent, with his hands tied down to the post.

(18) Hazzan denotes various kinds of officials, here an executive officer of the Court. V. Kohut, Aruch s.v. חָזָן. It occurs in the Tel-el-Amarna Letters, Ziri-Basana, or the Field of Bashan, was then under the government of one Khazan, or 'prefect'. Sayce, Patriarchal Palestine (1895), p. 95. Epiphanius reports that in Cilicia there were in the Jewish Community three Azanites. S. Krauss, JQR (1905) XVII (O.S.). p. 373 and p. 380, note 2. [Krauss, Sanh-Mak. p. 372, translates: 'Guardian of the Synagogue': pointing out that scourging was generally inflicted in the Synagogue.]

(19) At the seams.

(20) I.e., the thong is first doubled then redoubled.

(21) Of ass-hide.

(22) I.e., running through the fourfold thong. The words, של המור 'of ass-hide' are not authentic, but are an intrusion from the Baraita cited in the Gemara. V. marginal note on Talmud text. Cf. דרכי משה on Tur. O. H. 607, note 4.

(23) The usual standard measure of a 'grip'.

(24) I.e., long enough to swing round the sides and flip the edge of the abdomen — the navel.

(25) Of the man, the front of his (exposed) body.

(26) On his shoulders, one third on each. The reason is given later.

(27) Deut. XXV, 2. On this, v. Midr. Tan. p. 163.

(28) I.e., counted aloud, pronounced clearly, as in the case of a vow. Cf. Lev. XXVII, 2; Num. VI, 2, and supra 13b, in explanation of R. Ishmael's point of view, from this text.

(29) Deut. XXVIII, 58-59, consisting of 13 words, which, repeated three times (if necessary) counted 39.

(30) The text here is in disorder, as can be seen from various parallel sources, Mishnah, Yalkut and Midrash and Maimonides. The order adopted here is conjectural, and aims at retaining the additions, rationally arranged. [MS.M. and other texts omit the verses that follow, thus showing that they are intrusions into our text. Cur. edd. read on: And ye shall observe the words of this covenant etc. (Deut. XXIX, 9), and he concludes with, But he being full of compassion forgave their iniquity etc. (Ps. LXXVIII, 38) and he returns again to the beginning of the passage.]

(31) Ps. LXXVIII, 38, also consisting of 13 words, and used like the preceding (which is too fierce and menacing) on voluntarily submitting oneself to penitential chastisement. V. Tur. O.H. 607 (end) and Sh. 'Ar. ibid. 6.

(32) As an exhortation (not to conclude with a rebuke).

(33) Deut. XXIX, 8.

(34) Having acted under direction of the judges. Cf. supra 8a (Mishnah).

(35) Having suffered humiliation for his misdeed.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 23a

GEMARA. [HOW DO THEY SCOURGE HIM? HIS TWO HANDS ARE TIED TO A POST...HIS GARMENTS IF THEY ARE TORN THEY ARE TORN . . . UNTIL HE EXPOSES THE OFFENDER'S CHEST.] What is the reason for this? — The implication of [the words, And thy brother] become debased.¹

[A STRAP OF CALF-HIDE.] Said R. Shesheth in the name of R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah:² Whence may it be deduced that the strap is to be of calf-hide? It is written, Forty [lashes] shall he strike him,¹ and in proximity to it, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth the corn.³ R. Shesheth said also, in the name of R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah: Whence may it be shown that a yebamah⁴ who has become liable to marry a yabam⁵ smitten with boils should not be 'muzzled' [to voice her dissent from the marriage]? It is written, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox . . .³ and in proximity to it, If brethren dwell together etc.⁶ And this also said R. Shesheth in the name of R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah: To disregard the Appointed Seasons⁷ is like practising idolatry, because it is written, Thou shalt make thee no molten gods⁸ and next to it [is the ordinance of the Festivals] — The feast of unleavened bread shalt thou keep, etc.⁹ And R. Shesheth further said in the name of R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah: Whosoever bears evil tales and whosoever receives evil tales, or whosoever bears false witness deserves to be cast to the dogs; for it is written, Ye shall cast it to the dogs,¹⁰ and next to it [is the warning], Thou shalt not raise a false report: [put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness],¹¹ read [not only tissa,¹² but] also tasshi¹³ ['beguile not another'].

TWO [OTHER] THINGS RUNNING [AS IT WERE] UP AND DOWN. A Tanna taught [that one thong was]¹⁴ of ass's hide, as a certain Galilean once expounded, in the presence of R. Hisda,¹⁵ [the following text]: The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider.¹⁶ The Holy One, blessed be He, said, Let there come one that recognises its master's crib and exact punishment from him that recognises not his master's crib.

THE HAFT IS A HANDBREADTH [. . . THE ABDOMEN]. Said Abaye: That seems to imply that each person should have a lash corresponding to his back. Said Raba to him: That would mean that they would have [to keep a good] many different thongs! But no, said Raba, the lash was provided with a clasp by means of which it could be tightened [shortened] or loosened [lengthened] as required.

HE ADMINISTERS [ONE-THIRD (OF THE LASHES) IN FRONT AND TWO-THIRDS BEHIND]. What [Scriptural] ground is there for this? — Said R. Kahana: The words of the text, And the judge shall cause him to fall and have him beaten before him according to the measure of his wickedness by number,¹⁷ [that is], one [-third of 'his' wickedness] on the front¹⁸ and two [-thirds] on his back.

THEY LASH HIM NOT [STANDING OR SITTING BUT STOOPING]. Said R. Hisda as reporting R. Johanan: Whence may it be shown that the strap is to be folded?¹⁹ From the wording in the text, And the judge shall cause it²⁰ to fall [and cause it²⁰ to strike him].²¹ But is that passage not needed to tell us about [the posture of] the man himself? — If [only] that, [the more appropriate expression] yattehu ['and he shall cause him to bend'] might have been written there; what then is the import of [the peculiar expression] hippilo ['he shall cause it to fall']? To indicate both [instructions].

HE WHO ADMINISTERS THE LASHES DOES IT WITH ONE HAND, etc. Our Rabbis taught: Only men lacking in physical vigour and abounding in knowledge are appointed as 'superintendents'; R. Judah says: Even men lacking in knowledge and abounding in physical vigour. Said Raba: R. Judah's view seems the more logical, because it is written there, Forty he shall have him beaten, he shall not exceed; lest he exceed. Now, if you say that [the superintendents are men] lacking in knowledge, then [I understand that] such a warning is necessary; but if you say that only men abounding in knowledge [may be appointed as superintendents], is such a warning necessary? And [what say] the Rabbis [to this]? — [They say:] We caution only those who are cautious of themselves.

A Tanna taught: When he raises [the lash] he raises it with both hands [so as to raise it all the higher],²² and when he smites he smites with one hand so that it comes [down] of itself [vehemently].²³

AND HE WHO RECITES THE SCRIPTURAL VERSES SAYS, etc. Our Rabbis taught: The most prominent of the judges recites [the Scriptural verses]; the second counts [the strokes], and the third says, Strike him! When the 'beating' is of many strokes, he lengthens the recital; and when the beating is less, he shortens the recital. But do we not learn, HE GOES BACK TO THE BEGINNING OF THE VERSE? — [The rule is that] he should [time the recital] to correspond precisely [with the lashing]; but if he has not been so precise, he goes back again to the beginning of the verse.

Our Rabbis taught: It is written, (He shall not exceed . . .) an ample beating.²⁴ From this I gather that only 'an ample beating' [is forbidden]; whence do I learn that [not even] a slight beating [in excess of the determined number of strokes] is permissible? From the instructive words, 'He shall not exceed'. If so, what is the import of the phrase 'an ample beating'? — This phrase implies that the former [imposed number of] strokes were [in themselves] 'an ample beating'.²⁵

IF HE BEFOULED HIMSELF etc. Our Rabbis taught: The offender, whether man or woman, is discharged on losing faeces, but not urine; these are the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says: A man is discharged on losing faeces and a woman on losing urine; but the Sages say man and woman alike are discharged on losing faeces or urine. But then, is it not [also] taught: R. Judah says: The offender, whether man or woman, is discharged on losing faeces? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [There is no contradiction, as the latter citation merely states that] in regard to faeces, it is the same in the case of man or woman.

Samuel said: If they had tied him [down to the post] and he [broke away and] escaped from the Court, he is exempt.²⁶ (What is the reason? — Because of [the text], lest he be dishonored,²⁷ and he has been dishonoured.)²⁸ An objection was raised: If he befouled himself either at the first or at the second stroke, they let him go. If the thong snapped at the second stroke,²⁹ they let him go, but at the first stroke³⁰ they do not let him go. Now why [not at the first stroke]?³¹ Why [not let him go] as if he had escaped?³² — [Because] there he [actually] ran away,³³ whereas here he has not run away.³⁴

Our Rabbis taught: If they estimate him that he would befoul himself as soon as they applied the lash; they let him go; if that he would befoul himself on coming away from the Court, they give the flogging.³⁵ Not only this, but even if he broke down at the very first,³⁶ they flog him, because the text reads, And he shall cause him to be beaten [. . . he shall not exceed . . .] lest thy brother be dishonoured [before thine eyes],³⁷ [implying,] but not if he had already been dishonoured while at Court.³⁸

MISHNAH. ALL WHO HAVE INCURRED [THE PENALTY OF] KARETH, ON BEING FLOGGED OBTAIN REMISSION FROM THEIR PUNISHMENT OF KARETH; FOR IT IS SAID, FORTY HE SHALL HAVE HIM BEATEN HE SHALL NOT EXCEED . . . LEST THY BROTHER SHALL BE DISHONoured BEFORE THINE EYES,³⁹ WHICH SHOWS THAT ON HAVING RECEIVED THE FLOGGING HE IS [CONSIDERED] ‘THY BROTHER’:⁴⁰ THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. HANANIAH B. GAMALIEL.⁴¹ AND, SAID R. HANANIAH B. GAMALIEL, IF IN ONE TRANSGRESSION A TRANSGRESSOR FORFEITS HIS SOUL, HOW MUCH MORE SHOULD ONE WHO PERFORMS ONE PRECEPT HAVE HIS SOUL GRANTED HIM? R. SIMEON⁴² SAYS THAT YOU CAN LEARN THIS FROM ITS OWN PASSAGE;⁴³ FOR IT IS SAID [THERE]: [FOR WHOSOEVER SHALL DO ANY OF THESE ABOMINATIONS,] EVEN THE SOULS THAT DO THEM SHALL BE CUT OFF FROM AMONG THEIR PEOPLE;⁴⁴ AND THERE [IN THE PREAMBLE] IT SAYS:

(1) Deut. XXV, 3. וְנִקְלָהוּ The implication of the passage is, do not strike the offender capriciously but a carefully determined number of lashes lest he become too degraded: yet the humiliation of an offender for his offence is the main purpose of the lashing by order of the Court. [MS.M. omits this passage. Cf. also Tosaf. Sot. 8a s.v. וְהִכָּהוּ where this reason is given as their own.]

(2) Who lived about 200 C.E., two hundred years before R. Shesheth, who obviously was in possession of a collection of the former's teachings.

(3) Deut. XXV, 4.

(4) The widow of a childless brother.

(5) The brother of the deceased husband.

(6) Deut. XXV, 5. The consideration demanded here for the dumb animal in not cruelly thwarting a natural desire suggests no less consideration for the woman who for her protection is required to marry her late husband's brother. Although he has a legal claim to her, she is not to be coerced when he is likely to be loathsome. Her objection to the union is (on textual grounds) not to be considered as offending against the law.

(7) That is, the Festivals, cf. Lev. XXIII, 2, 4. Commentators (v. Rashi) take it to refer to the intermediate-days of Passover and Tabernacles, when work is restricted though not forbidden. V. Hag. 18a: M. Kat. 12a-b. This Eleazar, however, may refer to the Festivals themselves, like the other R. Eleazar of Modin (Aboth III, 11), who seemingly refers to those who are misled by the allegorical misinterpretations and the abrogation of the Jewish observances by Paul and other later Christian teachers such as are found in the Epistle of Barnabas, a contemporary of Eleazar of Modin.

(8) Ex. XXXIV, 17.

(9) Ex. XXXIV, 18-23.

(10) With reference to flesh torn by beasts. Ex. XXII, 31.

(12) תשא, 'raise (not a false report)' from the root נשא, 'to raise', 'pick up'.

(13) תשיא, from 'deceive', 'mislead' (not another by misrepresentation). Cf. Jer. XXXVII, 9, and Gen. III, 13.

(14) So Yalkut Isa. 387: Maim. Sanh. XVI, 8, has 'two straps', probably meaning one folded in half, v. page 158, n. 6.

(15) At one of his gatherings.

(16) Isa. I, 3.

(17) Deut. XXV, 2.

(18) 'Before him' is here taken to refer to the offender, instead of the judge.

(19) That is, folded in half with the two ends left hanging free.

(20) Both expressions are taken to refer to the strap, instead of to the 'man' who is scourged. MS.M. reads here:

קרי ביה והכפילו

(21) Deut. XXV, 2.

(22) So MS. M. (v. D.S.)

(23) So MS.M. Cf. Sanh. 45b (about a stone).

(24) Deut. XXV, 3.

(25) Heavy, forcible strokes.

(26) Cf. Shebu. 28a, and Rashi there.

(27) Deut. XXV, 3.

(28) The bracketed passage is supplied from MS.M. The warning not to exceed the statutory number of strokes 'lest he be dishonoured', shows that the purpose of the 'beating' is rather corrective than punitive, and therefore, as soon as the offender has lost morale and self-control, or acts in a scared manner, the moral object has been attained.

(29) As it fell.

(30) After the first, as the second was about to fall.

(31) He has been humiliated.

(32) He has already received humiliation: the accidental snapping of the strap is in his favour.

(33) Terror-stricken and in discomfort.

(34) Showed no signs of discomfort or remorse.

(35) The text is in disorder and the interpretation adopted here is that of Rashi, for other interpretation based on a variant reading v.commentary of Riban.

(38) I.e., before the flogging. v. D.S.

(39) Deut. XXV, 3.

(40) No longer to be 'degraded' or 'cut off' from his people.

(41) Often R. Hanina b. Gamaliel and in some MS. of Sifre, b. Gamala (Friedmann op. cit.).

(42) MS. M. has R. Ishmael.

(43) On the subject of kareth, not indirectly as from the quoted text dealing with flogging.

(44) Lev. XVIII, 29.

Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 23b

YE SHALL THEREFORE KEEP MY STATUTES AND MINE ORDINANCES WHICH IF A MAN DO, HE SHALL LIVE BY THEM,¹ WHICH MEANS THAT ONE WHO DESISTS FROM TRANSGRESSING IS GRANTED REWARD LIKE ONE WHO PERFORMS A PRECEPT. R. SIMEON B. RABBI SAYS: BEHOLD HOLY WRIT SAYS, ONLY BE STEADFAST IN NOT EATING THE BLOOD . . . AND THOU SHALT NOT EAT THE LIFE WITH THE FLESH . . . [THAT IT MAY GO WELL WITH THEE AND WITH THY CHILDREN AFTER THEE WHEN THOU SHALT DO WHAT IS RIGHT IN THE EYES OF THE LORD].² NOW, IF IN THE CASE

OF BLOOD FOR WHICH MAN'S SOUL HAS A LOATHING, ANYONE WHO REFRAINS THEREFROM RECEIVES REWARD, HOW MUCH MORE SO IN REGARD TO ROBBERY AND INCEST FOR WHICH MAN'S SOUL HAS A CRAVING AND LONGING SHALL ONE WHO REFRAINS THEREFROM ACQUIRE MERIT FOR HIMSELF AND FOR GENERATIONS AND GENERATIONS TO COME, TO THE END OF ALL GENERATIONS! R. HANANIAH B AKASHIA SAYS: THE HOLY-ONE, BLESSED BE HE, DESIRED TO MAKE ISRAEL WORTHY, THEREFORE GAVE HE THEM THE LAW [TO STUDY] AND MANY COMMANDMENTS [TO DO]: FOR IT IS SAID: THE LORD WAS PLEASED, FOR HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS³ SAKE. TO MAKE THE LAW GREAT AND GLORIOUS.⁴

GEMARA. Said R. Johanan: R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel's colleagues disagree with him.⁵ Said R. Adda b. Ahaba: At Rab's college they used to say: We learn [in a Mishnah].⁶ 'There is no difference [in sanctity] between Sabbath and the Day of Atonement, save that in the case of the former, a deliberate desecration is punishable by human agency,⁷ while in that of the latter, a deliberate desecration is punished by kareth.'⁸ Now, were this [doctrine of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel] generally accepted, [the Mishnah would have said that] the punishment of deliberate desecration in either case [of Sabbath or Day of Atonement] is [practically] left to human agency?⁹ — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac:¹⁰ Whose view may that [Mishnah] express? It is R. Isaac's,¹¹ for he says that there is no penalty of flogging for those liable to kareth, as it was taught: Seeing that Holy Writ has [already] comprehended in a single verse all the offenders in unlawful relations as being liable to kareth,¹² what object was there in singling out that penalty in the case of [the brother with] his sister?¹³ Only to show that kareth is their penalty, not flogging.¹⁴ R. Ashi said: You might even say that [the cited Mishnah expresses the opinion of] the Rabbis [by explaining that it states] that in one case [the Sabbath]¹⁵ its main punishment is delegated to human authority, whereas in the other [the Day of Atonement] it is left to the Celestial Authority.

R. Adda, as citing Rab, said that halachah rests with R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel.

Said R. Joseph: Who has gone up [to Heaven] and come [back with this information]?¹⁶ — Said Abaye to him: But then, in regard to what R. Joshua b. Levi said: 'Three things were enacted by the [mundane] Tribunal below, and the Celestial Tribunal on high have given assent to their action'; [we might also exclaim,] who has gone up [to Heaven] and come [back with this information]? Only, we [obtain these points by] interpreting certain texts; and, in this instance too, we so interpret the texts.

[To turn to] the main text: 'R. Joshua b. Levi said that three things were enacted by the [mundane] Tribunal below and the [Celestial] Tribunal on high gave assent to their action.' These were: The [annual] recital of the Scroll [of Esther];¹⁷ saluting with the Divine Name;¹⁸ and the [Levite's] tithe to be brought [to the Temple-chamber].¹⁹ 'The [annual] recital of the Scroll [of Esther],' as it is written, They confirmed,²⁰ and the Jews took upon them and their seed, etc.:²¹ they 'confirmed' above what they had 'taken upon themselves' below. 'Saluting with the Divine Name,' — as it is written, And behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem and said to the reapers, 'The Lord be with you';²² and [furthermore] it says, The Lord bless thee, thou mighty man of valour.²³ What is the purport of, 'And [furthermore] it says'? — Lest you should say that Boaz did this of his own idea and that this action of his was not approved by Heaven, come and hear what it says, The Lord be with thee, thou mighty man of valour.²⁴ 'The [Levite's] tithe to be brought [to the Temple-chamber].' — as it is written, Bring ye the whole tithe unto the store house that there may be food in My house, and try Me herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, until there be no enough.²⁵ What means, 'until there be no enough'? — Said Rami b. Rab: [It means], until your lips weary of saying 'Enough, enough'!

R. Eleazar said: The Holy Spirit manifested itself in three places; at the Tribunal of Shem,²⁶ at the Tribunal of Samuel of Ramah, and at the Tribunal of Solomon. At the Tribunal of Shem,²⁷ as it is written, And Judah acknowledged them,²⁸ and he said, She is right, it is from me.²⁹ How did he know [for certain]? Maybe, just as he had come to [consort with] her, some other man had come to [consort with] her? [But] it was a Bath Kol³⁰ that came forth and said, 'She is right, constrained by Me these things came about.'³¹

'At the Tribunal of Samuel,'³² — as it is written, Here I am; witness against me before the Lord and before His anointed, whose ox have I taken? or whose ass . . . and they said, Thou hast not defrauded us nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand. And he said unto them, The Lord is witness against you and His anointed is witness this day that ye have not found aught in my hand,' and He³³ said, [He is] witness.³⁴ 'And He said'; should it not be 'And they said'? [But] it was a Bath Kol that came forth and said, 'I am witness in this matter.'

'At the Tribunal of Solomon,' — as it is said, And the king answered and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it; she is his mother:³⁵ 'She is his mother'; whence knew he [for certain]? Maybe, she had been acting craftily? [But] it was a Bath Kol that came forth and said, 'She is his mother'.

Said Raba: How [can we be sure of this?] Maybe Judah had reckoned the days and months and found them to coincide,³⁶ — for what we see we may presume; but we presume not what we see not.³⁷ Again, Samuel may have taken all Israel collectively, using the singular³⁸ expression [verb], as it is written [elsewhere]: O Israel, thou art saved by the Lord with an everlasting salvation, Ye shall not be ashamed?³⁹ And Solomon likewise, because he saw one woman was compassionate and the other was not compassionate! Only [of course], these [interpretations] are points of traditional lore.

[THEREFORE GAVE HE THEM TORAH (TEACHINGS) AND MANY COMMANDMENTS . . .] R. Simlai when preaching said: Six hundred and thirteen precepts were communicated to Moses, three hundred and sixty-five negative precepts, corresponding to the number of solar days [in the year], and two hundred and forty-eight positive precepts, corresponding to the number of the members⁴⁰ of man's body. Said R. Hamnuna: What is the [authentic] text for this? It is, Moses commanded us torah, an inheritance of the congregation of Jacob,⁴¹ 'torah' being in letter-value, equal to

(4) Isa. XLII, 21. [One may see in the words of R. Hananiah b. 'Akashia a polemic against the Pauline conception that puts the Law in opposition to innocence and spiritual law and considers it a source of sin and wrath. Here it is asserted that the Law was given, not as a mark of divine wrath in order to increase sin so as to make all the greater the need of divine mercy, but as a mark of divine love designed to train Israel in moral holiness in order to make them all the more worthy in the eyes of the Holy One, blessed be He.]

(9) Stoned for desecrating the Sabbath, and flogged for the Day of Atonement, whereby kareth is finally remitted. In making, however, this distinction, there seems to be an implied rejection of R. Hananiah's doctrine of complete remission?

(10) Meg. 7b omits 'b. Isaac'. There was another R. Nahman, b. Jacob.

(11) A personal view, in opposition to those of R. Akiba and R. Ishmael. He dissociates kareth from flogging. If so, that Mishnah does not really show the attitude of Hananiah's colleagues to his doctrine of remission.

Yeb. 86a-b and Keth. 26a and Tosaf. there. Others say R. Joshua b. Levi refers rather to the view that Scripturally, tithes were due to be given only of corn, wine and oil (Num. XVIII, 27,30), but that tithes on all other produce of the soil, of fruits, legumina and vegetables, were a voluntary contribution imposed by the mundane Authorities (cf. Sifre on Deut. XIV, 22) which the statement of Malachi confirmed as approved of by the Tribunal above. V. J. Ber. IX, end. An attempt was made to restore the tithe to the Levites (instead of to priests) and R. Talmud - Mas. Makkoth 24a six hundred and eleven,¹ 'I am' and 'Thou shalt have no [other Gods]' [not being reckoned, because] we heard from the mouth of the Might [Divine].² David came and reduced them to eleven [principles],³ as it is written, A Psalm of David.⁴ Lord, who shall sojourn in Thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in Thy holy mountain? — [i] He that walketh uprightly, and [ii] worketh righteousness, and [iii] speaketh truth in his heart; that [iv] hath no slander upon his tongue, [v] nor doeth evil to his fellow, [vi] nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour, [vii] in whose eyes a vile person is despised, but [viii] he honoureth them that fear the Lord, [ix] He sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not, [x] He putteth not out his money on interest, [xi] nor taketh a bribe against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved. 'He that walketh uprightly': that was Abraham, as it is written, Walk before Me and be thou whole-hearted.⁵ 'And worketh righteousness,' such as Abba Hilkiahu.⁶ 'Speaketh truth in his heart,' such as R. Safra.⁷ 'Hath no slander upon his tongue,' that was our Father Jacob, as it is written, My father peradventure will feel me and I shall seem to him as a deceiver.⁸ 'Nor doeth evil to his fellow,' that is he who does not set up in opposition to his fellow craftsman.⁹ 'Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour;' that is he who befriends his near ones [relatives].¹⁰ 'In whose eyes a vile person is despised;' that was Hezekiah the king [of Judah] who dragged his father's bones on a rope truckle-bed.¹¹ 'He honoureth them that fear the Lord;' that was Jehoshaphat¹² king of Judah, who every time he beheld a scholar-disciple rose from his throne, and embraced and kissed him, calling him Father, Father;¹³ Rabbi, Rabbi; Mari, Mari! 'He sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not,' like R. Johanan; for R. Johanan [once] said:¹⁴ I shall remain fasting until I reach home. 'He putteth not out money on interest,' not even interest from a heathen.¹⁵ 'Nor taketh a bribe against the innocent,' such as R. Ishmael son of R. Jose.¹⁶ It is written [in conclusion], He that doeth these things shall never be moved. Whenever R. Gamaliel came to this passage he used to weep, saying: [Only] one who practised all these shall not be moved; but anyone falling short in any of these [virtues] would be moved! Said his colleagues to him: Is it written, 'He that doeth all these things [shall not fall]'? It reads, 'He that doeth these things', meaning even if only he practises one of these things [he shall not be moved]. For if you say otherwise,¹⁷ what of that other [similar] passage, Defile not ye yourselves in all these things?¹⁸ Are we to say that one who seeks contact with all these vices, he is become contaminated; but if only with one of those vices, he is not contaminated? [Surely,] it can only mean there, that if he seeks contact with any one of these vices he is become contaminated, and likewise here, if he practises even one of these virtues [he will not be moved].

Isaiah came and reduced them to six [principles],¹⁹ as it is written, [i] He that walketh righteously, and [ii] speaketh uprightly, [iii] He that despiseth the gain of oppressions, [iv] that shaketh his hand from holding of bribes, [v] that stoppeth his ear from hearing of blood, [vi] and shutteth his eyes from looking upon evil; he shall dwell on high. 'He that walketh righteously,' that was our Father Abraham, as it is written, For I have known him, to the end that he may command his children and his household after him, etc.;²⁰ 'and speaketh uprightly,' that is one who does not put an affront on his fellow in public. 'He that despiseth the gain of oppressions,' as, for instance, R. Ishmael b. Elisha;²¹ 'that shaketh his hand from holding of bribes,' as, for instance, R. Ishmael son of Jose;²² 'that stoppeth his ear from hearing of blood', one who hears not aspersions made against a rabbinic student²³ and remains silent,²⁴ as once did R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon;²⁵ 'and shutteth his eyes from looking upon evil,' as R. Hiyya b. Abba [taught]; for R. Hiyya b. Abba said: This refers to one who does not peer at women as they stand washing clothes [in the court-yard]²⁶ and [concerning such a man] it is written, He shall dwell on high.²⁷

Micah came and reduced them to three [principles], as it is written, It hath been told thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord doth require of thee: [i] only to do justly, and [ii] to love mercy and [iii] to walk humbly before thy God.²⁸ 'To do justly,' that is, maintaining justice; and to love mercy,' that is, rendering every kind office; 'and walking humbly before thy God,' that is, walking in funeral and bridal processions.²⁹ And do not these facts warrant an a fortiori conclusion that if in matters that are not generally performed in private the Torah enjoins 'walking humbly,' is it not ever so much more requisite in matters that usually call for modesty?

Again came Isaiah and reduced them to two [principles], as it is said, Thus saith the Lord, [i] Keep ye justice and [ii] do righteousness [etc.].³⁰ Amos came and reduced them to one [principle], as it is said, For thus saith the Lord unto the house of Israel, Seek ye Me and live.³¹ To this R. Nahman b. Isaac demurred, saying: [Might it not be taken as,] Seek Me by observing the whole Torah and live? — But it is Habakuk who came and based them all on one [principle], as it is said, But the righteous shall live by his faith.³²

Said R. Jose b. Hanina: Our Master Moses pronounced four [adverse] sentences on Israel, but four prophets came and revoked them. Moses said, And Israel dwelleth in safety, alone,³³ at the fountain of Jacob;³⁴ Amos came and revoked that, as it is said, Then said I, O Lord God, cease, I beseech Thee; how shall Jacob stand [alone]? for he is small, and it goes on saying, The Lord repented concerning this; 'This also shall not be,' saith the Lord God.³⁵ Moses had said, And among those nations thou shalt have no repose;³⁶ Jeremiah came and said, Thus saith the Lord, The people that were left of the sword have found grace in the wilderness, even Israel, when I go to afford him rest.³⁷ Moses had said, The Lord is . . . visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children and upon the children's children, unto the third and unto the fourth generation;³⁸ Ezekiel came and declared, the soul that sinneth, it shall die.³⁹ Moses had said, And ye shall perish among the nations;⁴⁰ Isaiah came and said, And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great horn shall be blown; [and they shall come that were lost in the land of Assyria, etc.]⁴¹ Rab observed: I have misgivings about that verse, And ye shall perish among the nations.⁴⁰ R. Papa demurred at this [apprehension of Rab] saying: Could it not perhaps rather be taken in the sense of something lost and searched for, as it is written, I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek Thy servant, etc.⁴² — But it was the latter part of that verse [that perturbed Rab]: And the land of your enemies shall eat you up.⁴³ Mar Zutra then demurred, saying: Might it not be [understood] in the way that cucumbers and pumpkins are eaten?⁴⁴

Long ago, as Rabban Gamaliel, R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah, R. Joshua and R. Akiba were walking on the road, they heard the noise of the crowds at Rome [on travelling] from Puteoli,⁴⁵ a hundred and twenty miles away. They all fell a-weeping, but R. Akiba seemed merry. Said they to him: Wherefore are you merry? Said he to them: Wherefore are you weeping? Said they: These heathens who bow down to images and burn incense to idols live in safety and ease, whereas our Temple, the 'Footstool' of our God⁴⁶

(6) A saint to whom the Rabbis went that he might pray for rain (as others had come, during Temple times, to his paternal grandfather, 'Onias that drew a circle' around him, in which he prayed). He was most scrupulous in his 'work', bearing and words, and would not take the least credit to himself or allow any false impression. All these are illustrated in Ta'an. 23a-b.

(7) A Babylonian scholar of eminence who settled in Palestine at Caesarea and carried on extensive trade and scholarly communication between the two countries. An offer was made once to him by a buyer for an article whilst he was reciting the Shema' when he could not indicate his acceptance and the anxious purchaser increased his offer; but R. Safra refused to receive an increased offer which had been made under misapprehension, he being satisfied with the first offer. V. Rashb. B.B. 88a. On another occasion he and Raba were walking on the road when they met Mar Zutra son of R. Nahman who expressed his appreciation on meeting these two great men, saying that it was more than he could have expected of them, to come and meet him, whereupon R. Safra felt in duty bound to explain that they had only met him casually, but added that he would have come even a longer distance to show Mar Zutra respect. V. Hul. 94b.

- (14) I.e., acting on a self-imposed restriction. According to Ta'an., 12a, R. Johanan pleaded a fast to avoid an invitation to the table of the Nasi (R. Judah II). J. Ned. VIII, 1, however, is a more appropriate illustration, where R. Johanan said: I shall remain fasting until I have finished my (allotted) study of Mishnah or Scripture.

- (16) J. b. Halafta. He refused to take the rent-fruit that his own gardener-tenant brought him once on a Thursday instead of (as usual) on Friday, because, said the gardener, he had cited someone to appear with him before R. Ishmael. He refused the fruit and appointed two other scholars to hear the case. While listening to the proceedings he found himself unconsciously thinking of the possible pleadings in the gardener's favour, and remarked to himself how perverting an influence bribery was. In reply to a question whether there was not a priest in his own place to be the recipient, the visitor told him that he had a suit with someone. R. Ishmael thereupon refused the gift and appointed others to hear the case. He (as told above of his junior), found himself unconsciously biassed in the visitor's favour. Keth. 105b.

is burnt down by fire, and should we then not weep? He replied: Therefore, am I merry. If they that offend Him fare thus, how much better shall fare they that do obey Him! Once again they were coming up to Jerusalem together, and just as they came to Mount Scopus they saw a fox emerging from the Holy of Holies. They fell a-weeping and R. Akiba seemed merry. Wherefore, said they to him, are you merry? Said he: Wherefore are you weeping? Said they to him: A place of which it was once said, And the common man that draweth nigh shall be put to death,¹ is now become the haunt of foxes, and should we not weep? Said he to them: Therefore am I merry; for it is written, And I will take to Me faithful witnesses to record, Uriah the priest and Zechariah the Son of Jeberechiah.² Now what connection has this Uriah the priest with Zechariah? Uriah lived during the times of the first Temple, while [the other,] Zechariah lived [and prophesied] during the second Temple; but Holy-Writ linked the [later] prophecy of Zechariah with the [earlier] prophecy of Uriah, In the [earlier] prophecy [in the days] of Uriah it is written, Therefore shall Zion for your sake be ploughed as a field etc.³ In Zechariah it is written, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, There shall yet old men and old women sit in the broad places of Jerusalem,⁴ so long as Uriah's [threatening] prophecy had not had its fulfilment, I had misgivings lest Zechariah's prophecy might not be fulfilled; now that Uriah's prophecy has been [literally] fulfilled, it is quite certain that Zechariah's prophecy also is to find its literal fulfilment. Said they to him: Akiba, you have comforted us! Akiba, you have comforted us!

Mishna - Mas. Eduyyot Chapter 1

MISHNAH1. SHAMMAI¹ SAYS: FOR ALL WOMEN [WHO BECOME MENSTRUOUS] IT SUFFICES [TO RECKON THEIR UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME [OF THEIR DISCOVERING IT].² AND HILLEL SAYS: [THEIR UNCLEANNESS IS RECKONED BACKWARDS] FROM THE [LAST] EXAMINATION TO THE [PREVIOUS] EXAMINATION, EVEN IF THIS COVERS MANY DAYS.³ BUT THE SAGES SAY: NEITHER ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF THE ONE NOR ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF THE OTHER, BUT [THEY ARE CONSIDERED UNCLEAN FOR] THE PAST TWENTY FOUR HOURS⁴ WHEN THIS LESSENS THE PERIOD FROM THE [LAST] EXAMINATION TO THE [PREVIOUS] EXAMINATION,⁵ AND FOR THE PERIOD FROM THE [LAST] EXAMINATION TO THE [PREVIOUS] EXAMINATION WHEN THIS LESSENS THE PAST TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.⁶ ANY WOMAN WHO HAS A SETTLED PERIOD, IT SUFFICES [TO RECKON HER UNCLEANNESS FROM] HER SET TIME.⁷ SHE WHO USES TESTING-CLOTHS WHEN SHE HAS MARITAL CONNEXION,⁸ LO, THIS IS LIKE AN EXAMINATION: IT LESSENS EITHER THE PERIOD OF THE [PAST] TWENTY FOUR HOURS OR THE PERIOD FROM THE [LAST] EXAMINATION TO THE [PREVIOUS] EXAMINATION.

MISHNAH2. SHAMMAI SAYS: [DOUGH] OF A KAB⁹ OR MORE IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF HALLAH.¹⁰ AND HILLEL SAYS: OF TWO KABs OR MORE. BUT THE SAGES SAY: NEITHER ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF THE ONE NOR ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF THE OTHER, BUT [DOUGH OF] A KAB AND A HALF¹¹ IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF HALLAH. AND AFTER THEY INCREASED THE MEASURES¹² THEY SAID: [DOUGH 'OF] FIVE QUARTERS IS SUBJECT. R. JOSE SAID: FIVE ARE EXEMPT, FIVE AND MORE¹³ ARE LIABLE.

MISHNAH3. HILLEL SAYS: A HIN¹⁴ -FULL OF DRAWN WATER RENDERS THE MIKWEH¹⁵ UNFIT.¹⁶ (HOWBEIT¹⁷ A MAN MUST SPEAK IN THE LANGUAGE OF HIS TEACHER.)¹⁸ AND SHAMMAI SAYS: NINE KABs. BUT THE SAGES SAY: NEITHER ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF THE ONE NOR ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF THE OTHER: BUT WHEN TWO WEAVERS FROM THE DUNG-GATE WHICH IS IN JERUSALEM¹⁹ CAME AND TESTIFIED IN THE NAME OF SHEMAIAH AND ABTALION,²⁰ 'THREE LOGS OF DRAWN WATER RENDER THE MIKWEH UNFIT,' THE SAGES²¹ CONFIRMED THEIR STATEMENT.

MISHNAH4. AND WHY DO THEY RECORD THE OPINIONS OF SHAMMAI AND HILLEL TO SET THEM ASIDE? — TO TEACH THE FOLLOWING GENERATIONS THAT A MAN SHOULD NOT [ALWAYS] PERSIST IN HIS OPINION, FOR BEHOLD, THE FATHERS OF THE WORLD²² DID NOT PERSIST IN THEIR OPINION.

MISHNAH5. AND WHY DO THEY RECORD THE OPINION OF A SINGLE PERSON AMONG THE MANY, WHEN THE HALACHAH²³ MUST BE ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF THE MANY? SO THAT IF A COURT PREFERS THE OPINION OF THE SINGLE PERSON IT MAY DEPEND ON HIM. FOR NO COURT MAY SET ASIDE THE DECISION OF ANOTHER COURT²⁴ UNLESS IT IS GREATER THAN IT IN WISDOM²⁵ AND IN NUMBER.²⁶ IF IT WAS GREATER THAN IT IN WISDOM BUT NOT IN NUMBER, IN NUMBER BUT NOT IN WISDOM, IT MAY NOT SET ASIDE ITS DECISION, UNLESS IT IS GREATER THAN IT IN WISDOM AND IN NUMBER.²⁷

MISHNAH6. R. JUDAH SAID: IF SO, WHY DO THEY RECORD THE OPINION OF A SINGLE PERSON AMONG THE MANY TO SET IT ASIDE?²⁸ SO THAT IF A MAN SHALL SAY, 'THUS HAVE I LEARNT THE TRADITION,' IT MAY BE SAID TO HIM, 'ACCORDING

TO THE [REFUTED] OPINION OF THAT INDIVIDUAL DID YOU HEAR IT.

MISHNAH7. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: A QUARTER-KAB OF ANY BONES, EVEN FROM TWO CORPSES OR FROM THREE.²⁹ AND BETH HILLEL SAY: A QUARTER-KAB OF BONES FROM A CORPSE,³⁰ EITHER FROM [THE BONES WHICH FORM] THE GREATER PORTION OF THE [BODY'S] BUILD,³¹ OR FROM THE GREATER PORTION OF THE NUMBER³² [OF THE BODY'S BONES]. SHAMMAI SAYS: EVEN FROM A SINGLE BONE.³³

MISHNAH8. VETCHES³⁴ OF TERUMAH,³⁵ BETH SHAMMAI SAY, MUST BE SOAKED AND RUBBED³⁶ IN PURITY,³⁷ BUT CAN BE GIVEN FOR FOOD³⁸ IN IMPURITY.³⁹ AND BETH HILLEL SAY: THEY MUST BE SOAKED IN PURITY,⁴⁰ BUT CAN BE RUBBED AND GIVEN FOR FOOD IN IMPURITY. SHAMMAI SAYS: THEY MUST BE EATEN DRY.⁴⁰ R. AKIBA SAYS: ALL DEEDS IN CONNECTION WITH THEM [CAN BE CARRIED OUT] IN IMPURITY.⁴¹

MISHNAH9. WHOSC⁴² CHANGES FOR A SELA'⁴³ COPPER COIN FROM SECOND TITHE,⁴⁴ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: COPPER COIN FOR THE WHOLE SELA'. AND BETH HILLEL SAY: SILVER FOR ONE SHEKEL AND COPPER COIN FOR ONE SHEKEL.⁴⁵ R. MEIR SAYS: SILVER AND FRUITS MAY NOT BE SUBSTITUTED FOR SILVER.⁴⁶ BUT THE SAGES ALLOW IT.

MISHNAH10. WHOSO CHANGES A SELA' FROM SECOND TITHE IN JERUSALEM,⁴⁷ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: COPPER COIN FOR THE WHOLE SELA'. AND BETH HILLEL SAY: SILVER FOR ONE SHEKEL AND COPPER COIN FOR ONE SHEKEL. THE DISPUTANTS BEFORE THE SAGES⁴⁸ SAY: SILVER FOR THREE DENARS AND COPPER COIN FOR ONE DENAR. R. AKIBA SAYS: SILVER FOR THREE DENARII AND FOR THE FOURTH SILVER AND FOR THE FOURTH [THEREOF] COPPER COIN.⁴⁹ R. TARFON SAYS: FOUR AS PERS⁵⁰ IN SILVER. SHAMMAI SAYS: HE MUST LEAVE⁴⁵ T⁵¹ IN A SHOP AND EAT ON THE CREDIT THEREOF.

MISHNAH11. A⁵² BRIDE'S STOOL FROM WHICH THE COVERING-BOARDS HAVE BEEN TAKEN,⁵³ BETH SHAMMAI PRONOUNCE [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN, AND BETH HILLEL PRONOUNCE IT NOT [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN.⁵⁴ SHAMMAI SAYS: EVEN THE FRAMEWORK OF A STOOL [BY ITSELF IS [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN. A STOOL WHICH HAS BEEN SET IN A BAKER'S TROUGH, BETH SHAMMAI PRONOUNCE [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN, AND BETH HILLEL PRONOUNCE IT NOT [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN.⁵⁵ SHAMMAI SAYS: EVEN ONE MADE THEREIN [IS LIABLE TO BECOME UNCLEAN].

MISHNAH12. THESE ARE SUBJECTS CONCERNING WHICH BETH HILLEL TURNED AND TAUGHT ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI: A⁵⁶ WOMAN WHO CAME FROM THE REGION OF THE SEA AND SAID: MY HUSBAND DIED — MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN; MY HUSBAND DIED [WITHOUT ISSUE] — SHE MUST BE MARRIED BY HER HUSBAND'S BROTHER.⁵⁷ THIS IS THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: WE HAVE HEARD SO⁵⁸ ONLY IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO CAME FROM THE HARVESTING. BETH SHAMMAI SAID TO THEM: IT IS THE SAME THING IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO CAME FROM THE HARVESTING OR WHO CAME FROM THE OLIVE-PICKING OR WHO CAME FROM THE REGION OF THE SEA: THEY MENTIONED HARVESTING ONLY AS AN ACTUAL OCCURRENCE.⁵⁹ THEN BETH' HILLEL TURNED AND TAUGHT ACCORDING TO BETH SHAMMAI. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: SHE MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN AND TAKE HER MARRIAGE PORTION. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: SHE MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN BUT MAY NOT TAKE HER MARRIAGE-PORION. BETH SHAMMAI SAID TO THEM: YOU HAVE PRONOUNCED LAWFUL THE GRAVER MATTER OF A FORBIDDEN MARRIAGE,⁶⁰ SHOULD YOU NOT PRONOUNCE LAWFUL THE LIGHTER MATTER OF PROPERTY? BETH HILLEL SAID TO THEM: WE HAVE FOUND THAT BROTHERS DO NOT INHERIT ON HER STATEMENT.⁶¹ BETH SHAMMAI SAID TO THEM: DO WE NOT INFER IT FROM HER MARRIAGE DOCUMENT IN WHICH HE WRITES FOR HER 'THAT IF YOU BE MARRIED TO ANOTHER YOU SHALL TAKE WHAT IS WRITTEN FOR YOU'? THEN BETH HILLEL TURNED AND TAUGHT ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI.

MISHNAH13. WHOEVER⁶² IS HALF A SLAVE AND HALF A FREE MAN⁶³ SHOULD TOIL ONE DAY FOR HIS MASTER AND ONE DAY FOR HIMSELF. THIS IS THE OPINION OF BETH HILLEL. BETH SHAMMAI SAID TO THEM: YOU HAVE SET MATTERS IN ORDER AS REGARDS HIS MASTER, BUT YOU HAVE NOT SET MATTERS IN ORDER AS REGARDS HIMSELF. HE IS NOT ABLE TO MARRY A BONDMAID,⁶⁴ NOR IS HE ABLE [TO MARRY] A WOMAN WHO IS FREE.⁶⁵ IS HE TO REFRAIN [FROM MARRYING]? AND IS IT NOT THE CASE THAT THE WORLD WAS CREATED FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE RACE? FOR IT IS SAID, HE CREATED IT NOT TO BE A WASTE; HE FORMED IT TO BE INHABITED.⁶⁶ BUT FOR THE RIGHTFUL ORDERING OF THE WORLD HIS MASTER IS COMPELLED TO MAKE HIM FREE, AND HE⁶⁷ WRITES OUT A BOND FOR HALF HIS VALUE. THEN BETH HILLEL TURNED AND TAUGHT ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI.

MISHNAH14. A VESSEL OF EARTHENWARE⁶⁸ CAN, ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH HILLEL, PROTECT EVERYTHING⁶⁹ [IN IT FROM IMPURITY]. BUT BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IT PROTECTS ONLY EATABLES AND LIQUIDS AND [OTHER] VESSELS OF EARTHENWARE. BETH HILLEL SAID TO THEM: WHY? BETH SHAMMAI SAID TO THEM: BECAUSE IT IS [ITSELF] IMPURE WITH RESPECT TO AN 'AM HA-AREZ,⁷⁰ AND NO IMPURE VESSEL CAN SCREEN [AGAINST IMPURITY]. BETH HILLEL SAID TO THEM: AND DID YOU NOT PRONOUNCE PURE THE EATABLES AND LIQUIDS INSIDE IT? BETH SHAMMAI SAID TO THEM: WHEN WE PRONOUNCED PURE THE EATABLES AND LIQUIDS INSIDE IT, WE PRONOUNCED THEM PURE FOR HIM⁷¹ ONLY, BUT WHEN YOU PRONOUNCED THE VESSEL⁷² PURE YOU PRONOUNCED IT PURE FOR YOURSELF⁷³ AND FOR HIM. THEN BETH HILLEL TURNED AND TAUGHT ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI.

(2) Therefore only things which they touch from that time become unclean, but not what they have touched before.

(3) All foodstuffs which they touched since the previous examination are unclean, because menstruation may have occurred immediately after the previous examination without their having been aware of it.

(4) Lit., 'from time to time,' i.e., from any given hour to the corresponding one on the preceding or following day.

(5) I.e., when the period between the last two examinations is more than twenty-four hours.

(6) When the period between the last two examinations is less than twenty-four hours.

(7) There is no need to suspect that menstruation may have occurred before the set time.

(8) Before and after connexion to make sure she is free from menstruation.

(9) Cf. II Kings VI, 25. It equals four logs, or 24 eggs, or roughly two litres.

(10) The portion of the dough, the minimum quantity being the size of one egg, which has to be given to the priest: Num. XV, 20.

(11) Equal to the 'Omer. [The 'omer = 1/10 ephah (v. Ex. XVI, 16), = 1.8 kab = 7.2 logs = 43.2 eggs. The Wilderness measure was, however, subsequently increased in Jerusalem by 1/6th, so that 43.2 wilderness eggs became equal to 36 Jerusalem eggs, i.e. a kab and a half.]

(12) At Sepphoris, when six Jerusalem logs became equal to five logs of the new measure.

(13) Which would leave just five quarters after taking off the Hallah.

- (14) Cf. Ex. XXX, 24, etc. It contains twelve logs, or three kabs.
- (15) The ritual bath of purification; cf. Lev. XI, 36. It has to contain at least forty se'ahs (= 12.148 litres) of originally flowing water.
- (16) If it fell into the Mikweh before the Mikweh had forty se'ahs of originally flowing water.
- (17) Some texts omit 'Howbeit'.
- (18) A parenthetic observation of the redactor of the Mishnah to explain why Hillel used the Biblical term Hin, and not the Mishnaic expression twelve logs, or three kabs, as below; viz. because Hillel's teachers had used the term Hin. [The reference is to Hillel's Babylonian teachers, not to Shemaiah and Abtalion, v. Halevy, Doroth. I, 96.]
- (19) [At the south-east corner of the city. V. G. A. Smith, Jerusalem, I, p. 177]. Cf. Nehem. II, 13. The trade and abode of the two men are specified in order to indicate that in spite of their lowly station in life their testimony prevailed against the opinions of Hillel and Shammai.
- (20) The teachers of Hillel and Shammai; cf. Ab. I, 12.
- (21) Including Shammai and Hillel themselves.
- (22) Viz., Hillel and Shammai.
- (23) The accepted ruling.
- (24) A former court if it decided according to the opinion of a majority. But if that court decided according to the opinion of an individual, its decision may be set aside even when the condition named here is not fulfilled.
- (25) The wisdom of its president as compared with the wisdom of the president of the former court.
- (26) Of the members of the court. V. Ab. (Sonc. ed.) p. 64, n. 7.
- (27) [According to another explanation: Where there is the opinion of an individual to appeal for support, a subsequent court can set aside the decision of a former court even if it is not greater than it in wisdom and number, and this justifies the recording of the opinion of a single person among the many, v. Tosaf. Yom Tob a.l. and Halevy, Doroth. I, 200 f.]
- (28) In cases where the individual opinion is untenable, and no court would ever agree to it.
- (29) Confers defilement upon everything which happens to be under the same roof-space ('tent'; cf. Num. XIX, 14). But if less than a quarter-kab, it can cause defilement only by actual contact.
- (30) Only from one corpse.
- (31) The two legs and one thigh; cf. Bek. 45a.
- (32) 125 out of the 248 bones of the human body; cf. Ohol. I, 8.
- (33) Causes 'tent' defilement if it fills a quarter-kab.
- (34) Cf. M. Sh. II, 4. Vetches are usually food for cattle, but in time of scarcity they are also eaten by human beings.
- (35) Heave offering which belongs to the priest.
- (36) On the body as a detergent.
- (37) With the hands washed.
- (38) To cattle only.
- (39) With the hands unwashed.
- (40) Since moisture renders them liable to defilement in accordance with Lev. XI, 38.
- (41) Because animal food is not subject to the laws of Terumah.
- (42) With this and the following halachah cf. M. Sh. II, 8-9.
- (43) Equals two silver shekels, or four silver denarii.
- (44) Second Tithe produce is changed for money in accordance with Deut. XIV, 25. To lighten further the burden of the pilgrim to Jerusalem, copper coin is changed into silver money.
- (45) If pilgrims will bring to Jerusalem only silver money, copper coin will become scarce in the Holy City, and its value will rise, thus causing a loss to the Second Tithe.
- (46) Half a silver denar and its value in fruit may not together be changed for a silver denar.
- (47) For smaller coins, in order to buy Second Tithe provisions.
- (48) Young Sages who were not yet members of the Sanhedrin. For their identity cf. Sanh. 17b.
- (49) I.e., a fourth of a denar, or one sixteenth of a sela', in copper coin. So the commentaries. The text is uncertain.
- (50) According to Bertinoro it equals one fifth of a denar, or one twentieth of a sela'.
- (51) The whole sela' without changing it at all, lest when there is any surplus he unwittingly uses it as profane money.
- (52) Cf. Kel. XXli, 4.
- (53) The ordinary stool was made of four legs held together by four boards (= מַלְבָּן, framework), on which were placed boards (covering-boards) for sitting. A bride's stool had, in addition, three upright boards (also called 'covering-boards'), against which the occupant leant.

(54) The controversy turns on the question whether on the removal of an essential part the stool still retains its usefulness for its original purpose as a seat, and so still comes within the category of כלי, utensil, and is therefore still liable to defilement from the pressure on it of the body of an unclean person (= מדרם), in accordance with Lev. XV, 4.

(55) Here the controversy turns on whether the stool retains the character of a stool when fixed within the trough.

(57) Cf. Deut. XXV, 5.

(58) That the statement of the woman is to be accepted.

(59) It so happened that a woman came from the harvest field and stated that her husband had died from the bite of a snake, and on investigation this was found to be true.

(60) If by chance the first husband should prove to be alive.

(61) The sons of the first husband cannot claim his property on the strength of the woman's evidence alone, as the transfer of property requires two witnesses for its validity.

(62) Cf. Git. IV, 5.

(63) He had belonged to two partners, one of whom had set him free. Or, if he belonged to one master, only half of his redemption money had been paid to the master.

(64) Since he is half free.

(65) Since he is half a slave.

(66) Isa. XLV, 18.

(67) The half slave.

(68) Under the roof-space ('tent') where there is a dead body.

(69) Even other vessels that are not of earthenware. But only if this earthenware vessel is covered by a tightly-fitting lid (צמיד פתיל); cf. Num. XIX, 15; Kel. IX, 2.

(70) Literally 'the people of the land', an untutored person who is indifferent to the observances of clean and unclean, distinguished from the scrupulous, Haber, 'associate'. V. Glos.

(71) The 'Am ha-arez, who in any case does not abstain from the unclean. As for the Haber, he does not use the food and drink of the 'Am ha-arez, nor his earthenware vessels, because these cannot be rendered clean by immersion.

(72) And all its contents, including vessels not of earthenware.

(73) I.e., for the Haber also. 'There is, therefore, the risk that the Haber may borrow these vessels that are not of earthenware, purify them by simple immersion and use them, whereas they require for their purification to be also sprinkled with the 'Water of Purification', in accordance with the rules applying to the removal of an uncleanness caused by a corpse, Num. XIX, 18-19.

Mishna - Mas. Eduyyot Chapter 2

MISHNAH1. R.¹ HANINA, CHIEF² OF THE PRIESTS, TESTIFIED CONCERNING FOUR MATTERS: THROUGH ALL THEIR DAYS THE PRIESTS NEVER SHRANK FROM BURNING FLESH WHICH HAD BEEN DEFILED BY AN 'OFFSPRING'³ OF DEFILEMENT WITH FLESH WHICH HAD BEEN DEFILED BY A 'FATHER'⁴ OF DEFILEMENT, ALTHOUGH THEY WERE [THEREBY] INCREASING ITS DEFILEMENT BY A [HIGHER] DEFILEMENT.⁵ R. AKIBA ADDED: THROUGH ALL THEIR DAYS THE PRIESTS NEVER SHRANK FROM LIGHTING OIL⁶ WHICH HAD BEEN RENDERED UNFIT BY A TEBUL YOM⁷ IN A LAMP⁸ DEFILED BY ONE WHO WAS DEFILED BY A CORPSE,⁹ ALTHOUGH THEY WERE [THEREBY] INCREASING ITS DEFILEMENT¹⁰ BY A [HIGHER] DEFILEMENT.

MISHNAH2. R.¹¹ HANINA, CHIEF OF THE PRIESTS, SAID: ALL MY DAYS I NEVER SAW A HIDE¹² TAKEN OUT TO THE PLACE OF BURNING.¹³ R. AKIBA SAID: FROM HIS WORDS WE INFER THAT WHOSO FLAYS THE HIDE OF THE FIRSTBORN BEAST¹⁴ AND IT IS FOUND¹⁵ TO BE TREFA,¹⁶ THE PRIESTS MAY ENJOY THE USE OF THE HIDE. BUT THE SAGES SAY: WE SAW NOT¹⁷ IS NO PROOF,¹⁷ BUT [SUCH A HIDE] MUST BE TAKEN OUT TO THE PLACE OF BURNING.¹⁸

MISHNAH3. ALSO HE TESTIFIED CONCERNING A SMALL VILLAGE IN THE VICINITY OF JERUSALEM IN WHICH THERE WAS AN OLD MAN WHO USED TO LEND TO ALL THE PEOPLE OF THE VILLAGE AND WRITE OUT [THE BOND] IN HIS OWN HANDWRITING AND OTHERS SIGNED IT,¹⁹ THAT WHEN THE FACT WAS BROUGHT BEFORE THE SAGES THEY PRONOUNCED IT LEGAL.²⁰ HENCE, INCIDENTALLY, YOU MAY INFER THAT THE WIFE MAY WRITE HER OWN BILL OF DIVORCEMENT, AND THE HUSBAND MAY WRITE HIS OWN QUITTANCE;²¹ FOR THE LEGALITY OF A DOCUMENT DEPENDS ONLY ON THOSE WHO SIGN IT. AND [HE TESTIFIED] CONCERNING A NEEDLE²² WHICH WAS FOUND IN FLESH,²³ THAT THE KNIFE AND THE HANDS [WHICH HAD BEEN EMPLOYED ON THE FLESH] ARE CLEAN,²⁴ BUT THE FLESH ITSELF IS DEFILED;²⁵ AND IF IT WAS FOUND IN THE EXCREMENT, ALL ARE CLEAN.²⁶

MISHNAH4. R. ISHMAEL DECLARED THREE THINGS BEFORE THE SAGES IN THE VINEYARD²⁷ AT YABNEH. CONCERNING AN EGG²⁸ WHICH WAS BEATEN TOGETHER, AND PLACED ON VEGETABLES OF TERUMAH — THAT IT ACTS AS A CONNECTION;²⁹ BUT IF IT WAS IN THE FORM OF A HELMET³⁰ IT DOES NOT ACT AS A CONNECTION. AND CONCERNING AN EAR OF CORN³¹ IN THE HARVESTING³² THE TOP OF WHICH REACHED THE STANDING CORN — THAT IF IT CAN BE REAPED TOGETHER WITH THE STANDING CORN, LO, IT BELONGS TO THE OWNER; AND IF NOT, IT BELONGS TO THE POOR.³³ AND CONCERNING A SMALL GARDEN³⁴ WHICH WAS SURROUNDED BY ESPALIER VINES — THAT IF IT HAS SPACE FOR THE GRAPE-GATHERER AND HIS BASKET ON ONE SIDE,³⁵ AND SPACE FOR THE GRAPE-GATHERER AND HIS BASKET ON THE OTHER SIDE,³⁵ IT MAY BE SOWN WITH SEED; BUT IF NOT, IT MAY NOT BE SOWN WITH SEED.³⁶

MISHNAH 5. THEY STATED THREE THINGS BEFORE R. ISHMAEL, AND HE PRONOUNCED NONE OF THEM EITHER UNLAWFUL OR LAWFUL; BUT R. JOSHUA THE SON OF MATTHIA ELUCIDATED THEM.³⁷ WHOSO CUTS AN ABSCESS ON THE SABBATH, HE IS GUILTY IF IT WAS TO MAKE AN OPENING³⁸ TO IT, BUT INNOCENT IF IT WAS TO BRING OUT THE PUS;³⁹ AND CONCERNING ONE WHO HUNTS A SNAKE ON THE SABBATH — THAT IF HE WAS THUS OCCUPIED IN ORDER THAT IT SHOULD NOT BITE HIM, HE IS INNOCENT;⁴⁰ BUT IF THAT HE MIGHT USE IT AS A REMEDY,⁴¹ HE IS GUILTY. AND CONCERNING IRONIAN⁴² STEWPOTS — THAT THEY DO NOT CONTRACT DEFILEMENT WHEN UNDER THE SAME ROOF-SPACE AS A CORPSE, BUT BECOME DEFILED IF THEY ARE CARRIED BY ONE WHO HAS AN ISSUE.⁴³ R. ELIEZER B. ZADOK SAYS: ALSO IF THEY ARE CARRIED BY ONE WHO HAS AN ISSUE THEY REMAIN UNDEFILED, BECAUSE THEY ARE UNFINISHED IN THE MAKING.⁴⁴

MISHNAH 6. R. ISHMAEL DECLARED THREE THINGS, AND R. AKIBA DISAGREED WITH HIM. IF GARLIC OR UNRIPE GRAPES OR GREEN EARS OF CORN WERE BEING CRUSHED [ON⁴⁵ THE EVE OF THE SABBATH] WHILE IT IS YET DAY, R. ISHMAEL SAYS: HE MAY ALLOW [THE CRUSHING] TO BE COMPLETED AFTER IT GROWS DARK.⁴⁶ BUT R. AKIBA SAYS: HE MAY NOT ALLOW IT TO BE COMPLETED.⁴⁷

MISHNAH 7. THEY DECLARED THREE THINGS BEFORE R. AKIBA, TWO IN THE NAME OF R. ELIEZER AND ONE IN THE NAME OF R. JOSHUA. TWO IN THE NAME OF R. ELIEZER: — A WOMAN MAY GO FORTH [ON THE SABBATH ADORNED] WITH A 'GOLDEN-CITY';⁴⁸ AND: THEY THAT FLY PIGEONS ARE UNFIT TO BEAR EVIDENCE.⁴⁹ AND ONE IN THE NAME OF R. JOSHUA: — IF⁵⁰ THERE WAS A CREEPING THING⁵¹ IN THE MOUTH OF A WEASEL WHEN IT WALKED OVER LOAVES OF TERUMAH, AND IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER IT⁵² TOUCHED THEM OR WHETHER IT DID NOT TOUCH THEM, THAT ABOUT WHICH THERE IS DOUBT REMAINS CLEAN.⁵³

MISHNAH8. R. AKIBA DECLARED THREE THINGS; ABOUT TWO THEY AGREED WITH HIM, AND ABOUT ONE THEY DISAGREED WITH HIM. ABOUT A LIME-BURNER'S SANDAL,⁵⁴ THAT IT IS LIABLE TO CONTRACT DEFILEMENT⁵⁵ FROM PRESSURE UNCLEANNESS;⁵⁶ AND ABOUT THE REMAINS OF A [BROKEN] OVEN,⁵⁷ THAT THEY MUST BE FOUR HANDBREADTHS HIGH IN ORDER TO RETAIN THE DEFILEMENT].⁵⁸ WHEREAS THEY USED TO SAY: THREE.⁵⁹ AND THEY AGREED WITH HIM. AND ABOUT ONE THEY DISAGREED WITH HIM. ABOUT A STOOL,⁶⁰ FROM WHICH TWO OF ITS COVERING-BOARDS⁶¹ HAD BEEN REMOVED, THE ONE BESIDE THE OTHER, WHICH R. AKIBA PRONOUNCES LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS,⁶² BUT THE SAGES DECLARE NOT LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS.

MISHNAH9. HE USED TO SAY: THE FATHER TRANSMITS TO THE SON COMELINESS AND STRENGTH AND WEALTH AND WISDOM AND YEARS⁶³ AND THE NUMBER OF GENERATIONS BEFORE HIM,⁶⁴ THAT HE SHALL BECOME THEIR APPOINTED END.⁶⁵ FOR IT IS SAID, CALLING THE GENERATIONS FROM THE BEGINNING.⁶⁶ ALTHOUGH IT IS SAID, AND SHALL SERVE THEM, AND THEY SHALL AFFLICT THEM FOUR HUNDRED YEARS,⁶⁷ IT IS SAID ALSO, AND IN THE FOURTH GENERATION THEY SHALL COME HITHER AGAIN.⁶⁷

MISHNAH10. ALSO HE USED TO SAY: THERE ARE FIVE THINGS OF [THE DURATION OF] TWELVE MONTHS: THE JUDGMENT OF THE GENERATION OF THE FLOOD [CONTINUED] TWELVE MONTHS;⁶⁸ THE JUDGMENT OF JOB [CONTINUED] TWELVE MONTHS;⁶⁹ THE JUDGMENT OF THE EGYPTIANS [CONTINUED] TWELVE MONTHS;⁷⁰ THE JUDGMENT OF GOG AND MAGOG⁷¹ IN THE TIME TO COME [WILL CONTINUE] TWELVE MONTHS;⁷² THE JUDGMENT OF THE UNGODLY IN GEHENNA [CONTINUES] TWELVE MONTHS, FOR IT IS SAID, AND IT WILL BE FROM ONE MONTH UNTIL ITS [SAME] MONTH.⁷³ R. JOHANAN B. NURI SAYS: [AS LONG AS] FROM PASSOVER TO PENTECOST,⁷⁴ FOR IT IS SAID, AND FROM ONE SABBATH⁷⁵ UNTIL ITS [NEXT] SABBATH.

(1) Cf. Pes. I, 6.

(2) Segan; next in rank to the High Priest, occasionally acting as deputy; v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 97, n. 1.

(3) ולד הטומאה, a generated, or secondary, defilement.

(4) אב הטומאה, a generating, or principal, defilement. This principal defilement has the power of conferring secondary defilement (ולד הטומאה) of the first degree (ראשון לטומאה). The ראשון, again, confers on food and drink secondary defilement (ולד הטומאה) of a second degree (לטומאה). If the שני belongs to the category of unhallowed things (חולין), it merely becomes itself 'unfit' (פסול), but the process of generating further defilement ceases with it. But if this שני belongs to hallowed things, like heave-offering or altar-offering, it can confer secondary defilement of a third degree (שלישי לטומאה). If this שלישי belongs to heave-offering, it becomes itself unfit, but it cannot confer further defilement. If, however, the שלישי belongs to altar-offerings, it can confer secondary defilement of a fourth degree (רביעי לטומאה). The רביעי, becomes unfit, but without the power of transmitting any further defilement.

(5) The first flesh contracted secondary defilement of a third degree. By being burnt together with flesh that had contracted defilement of a first degree from a 'father' of defilement, this first flesh contracted defilement of a second degree. But the priests did not mind raising the defilement of this first flesh, since in any case it was going to be destroyed by burning.

(6) Of terumah, heave-offering.

(7) Lit., 'immersed by day', a person, or utensil, that has undergone purification by immersion in the ritual bath (מקוה); cf. I, 3, n. 7), but has still to wait till sunset to complete the purification, in accordance with Lev. XXII, 7. The tebul yom confers on terumah secondary defilement of the third degree, rendering the terumah 'unfit'; cf. n. 4.

(8) Of metal.

(9) A corpse possesses the highest degree of defilement, being the 'father of the fathers' of defilement, אבי אבות הטומאה. It confers a generating, or principal, defilement, אב הטומאה. But metal articles, like this lamp, contract defilement equal in degree to the defilement of the source, viz. they become אבי אבות הטומאה when defiled by a corpse, and אב הטומאה when defiled by a principal defilement. (This principle is deduced from the expression בהלל הרב, 'slain by the sword', Num. XIX, 16, which is interpreted: הרב הרי הוא כהלל 'the sword is equal in its defilement to the slain' (Naz. 53b). And what applies to a sword applies also to any other metal article.) Hence a metal lamp defiled by one who was defiled by a corpse becomes itself אב הטומאה, and confers on the oil put in it a secondary defilement of the first degree, ראשון לטומאה.

(10) By raising the defilement of the oil from the third degree (cf. n. 2) to the first degree (cf. n. 1). This is more remarkable than R. Hanina's testimony, which only involved the raising of a third degree defilement to a second degree.

(11) Cf. Zeb. Xli, 4.

(12) Of a sacrifice which was found after flaying to be unfit for the altar.

(13) Where all unfit sacrifices were destroyed.

(14) Even if it was slaughtered outside the Temple, because of a blemish (cf. Lev. XXII, 20 ff.), it is treated as though it were prepared for the altar.

(15) After flaying.

(16) Unfit for food owing to disease, cf. Hul. III, 1. Lit., 'torn by a wild beast'; cf. Ex. XXII, 30.

(17) Such a case may not have occurred in R. Hanina's time; or it may have occurred and he failed to notice it.

(18) Since it was unfit for consumption from the very first.

(19) As witnesses.

(20) Though the deed was drafted by the creditor who was an interested party.

(21) For the payment of the marriage settlement; cf. I, 12.

(22) Which had been defiled by a corpse.

(23) Flesh of a sacrifice, in the Temple court which is considered public ground (רשות הרבים).

(24) Because it is doubtful whether they touched the needle, and a doubtful defilement arising in public ground is considered clean; cf. Toh. IV, 7, 11.

(25) Because the flesh certainly touched the needle.

(26) Because it is to be presumed that the flesh, too, did not touch the needle.

(27) The meeting place of the Sages after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. V. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 549, n. 4.

(28) Cf. T.Y. III, 2.

(29) So that if a tebul yom (II, 1, n. 7) touches the egg, the vegetables become unfit, though an egg cannot be set aside as terumah.

(30) Blown up and hollow within, so that air intervenes between it and the vegetables.

(31) Cf. Pe'ah V, 2.

(32) Which has been left behind through forgetfulness.

(33) In accordance with the command of Deut. XXIV, 19; cf. Pe'ah VI, 4.

(34) Having a fence round it.

(35) Equalling a space of two cubits, or a minimum total space for the whole garden of four cubits square.

(36) It comes under the prohibition of Deut. XXII, 9.

(37) In what case they are forbidden, and in what case they are lawful.

(38) A permanent opening. This comes under the prohibition of making on the Sabbath an opening for a door in a building.

(39) The making of the opening is then a work which is not done for its own sake (מלאכה שאינה צריכה לגופה), but for another object, and therefore permissible; cf. Shab. 105b.

(40) As in the last case, the catching of the snake is not the real object of the work.

(41) The snake was believed to heal a certain skin disease (חפפית); cf. Shab. 77b.

(42) אירוניות. The correct reading, as well as the exact meaning of the term, is uncertain. The commentators take it as עירוניות, and explain it in the sense of provincial, coarse and unfinished.

(43) Cf. Lev. XV, 12.

(44) And therefore they are not considered utensils; cf. I, 11, n. 10.

(45) By placing on them heavy stones.

- (46) He need not remove the stones from them, and may use the juice which flows from them on the Sabbath, since the crushing began before the coming in of the Sabbath.
- (47) Cf. Shab. XVII, 1.
- (48) A gold ornament bearing a representation of the city of Jerusalem. R. Akiba is reported to have given one to his wife; cf. Shab. VI, 1, and the Gemara ibid. 59a, b; Ned. 50a.
- (49) Cf. Sanh. III, 3. They do it for betting purposes, and thus make unlawful gain. Another explanation is that the pigeons serve to decoy strange pigeons for their master.
- (50) Cf. Toh. IV, 2.
- (51) A dead one, cf. Lev. XI, 29 ff.
- (52) The creeping thing.
- (53) Any doubt arising about a moving defilement is deemed clean.
- (54) A coarse foot-covering made of wood or straw, and only used for protecting the feet from the lime, but not for walking.
- (55) If worn by one who has an issue.
- (56) מדרם, lit., 'treading'; cf. I, 11, n. 10. The reason is that the lime-burner may sometimes wear it when walking home from his work, thereby making it an article of apparel.
- (57) Of earthenware, standing upright on the ground like a cooking-pot, which contracted a defilement when still whole.
- (58) But if they are less, they become clean, like the fragments of a broken utensil; cf. Kel. II, 2.
- (59) Cf. Kel. VI, 1.
- (60) Cf. Kel. XXII, 7.
- (61) Viz., the boards forming the seat; cf. I. 11, n. 9.
- (62) By body pressure, מדרם, because it can still be used in case of necessity for sitting; cf. I, 11, n. 1.
- (63) I.e., long life.
- (64) The reading is uncertain. According to most commentators the passage means that the son becomes the recipient of the good promised after the lapse of a number of generations, such as the redemption from Egypt which was promised after four generations, Gen. XV, 16.
- (65) והוא הקיץ. This may also be rendered: 'which is the appointed end'.
- (66) Isa. XLI, 4.
- (67) Gen. XV, 13, 16.
- (68) Cf. Gen. VII, 11, with VIII, 14.
- (69) 'Months of vanity', Job VII, 3, is interpreted to imply a full twelve months; cf. Seder Olam Rabbah, ch. XXX.
- (70) Ex. IV, 12, is said to have occurred in the month of Iyyar, while the Exodus took place twelve months later in Nisan.
- (71) Cf. Esek. XXXVIII, 2 ff.
- (72) Ezek. XXXIX, 4, 17, is combined with Isa. XVIII, 6, implying that the birds and beasts of prey will feast on the bodies of Gog and Magog a whole summer and a whole winter, or together twelve months.
- (73) Isa. LXVI, 23, combined with the following verse, 24. The 'same' month, viz. of the following year.
- (74) Forty nine days, the briefest interval between two festivals.
- (75) The Festival is also called Sabbath, as Lev. XXIII, 11, 15, where 'Sabbath' is traditionally interpreted: the first day of Passover.

Mishna - Mas. Eduyyot Chapter 3

MISHNAH 1. [IN THE CASE OF] ALL¹ THINGS² WHICH CAUSE DEFILEMENT IN A 'TENT',³ IF THEY WERE DIVIDED⁴ AND BROUGHT INTO THE HOUSE,⁵ R. DOSA B. HARKINAS PRONOUNCES [EVERYTHING UNDER THE SAME ROOF-SPACE] CLEAN, BUT THE SAGES PRONOUNCE IT UNCLEAN. HOW IS THIS? HE WHO TOUCHES AS MUCH AS TWO HALVES OF AN OLIVE [IN QUANTITY] OF A CARCASS⁶ OR CARRIES THEM; OR IN THE CASE OF A CORPSE, HE WHO TOUCHES AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE AND STANDS⁷ OVER AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE; OR TOUCHES AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE AND AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE IS ABOVE HIM; OR IF HE STANDS OVER AS MUCH AS TWO HALVES OF AN OLIVE; OR IF HE STANDS OVER AS MUCH AS

HALF AN OLIVE AND AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE IS ABOVE HIM — R. DOSA B. HARKINAS PRONOUNCES HIM CLEAN, AND THE SAGES PRONOUNCE HIM UNCLEAN.⁸ BUT IF HE TOUCHES AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE [IN QUANTITY] AND ANOTHER THING⁹ WAS OVER HIM AND OVER AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE; OR IF HE STOOD OVER AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE AND ANOTHER THING WAS OVER HIM AND OVER AS MUCH AS HALF AN OLIVE, HE IS CLEAN.¹⁰ R. MEIR SAID: ALSO IN THIS CASE R. DOSA PRONOUNCES HIM CLEAN AND THE SAGES PRONOUNCE HIM UNCLEAN. IN¹¹ ALL SUCH CASES A MAN IS UNCLEAN UNLESS THERE IS AN ACT OF TOUCHING AND ALSO AN ACT OF CARRYING,¹² OR AN ACT OF CARRYING AND ALSO [THE FACT OF] BEING UNDER THE SAME ROOF-SPACE.¹² THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: IN WHATEVER CASE THE MEANS OF CAUSING DEFILEMENT ARE OF ONE CATEGORY,¹³ HE IS UNCLEAN;¹⁴ IF THEY ARE OF TWO CATEGORIES,¹⁵ HE IS CLEAN.¹⁶

MISHNAH 2. FOOD IN SEPARATED PIECES¹⁷ IS NOT COMBINED TOGETHER.¹⁸ THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. DOSA B. HARKINAS. BUT THE SAGES SAY: IT IS COMBINED TOGETHER. ONE¹⁹ MAY EXCHANGE [PRODUCE OF] SECOND TITHE FOR UNCOINED METAL.²⁰ THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. DOSA. BUT THE SAGES SAY: ONE MAY NOT SO EXCHANGE IT. THE HANDS²¹ [ALONE] NEED BE IMMERSSED²² FOR THE WATERS OF PURIFICATION.²³ THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. DOSA. BUT THE SAGES SAY: IF HIS HANDS HAVE BECOME UNCLEAN HIS WHOLE BODY BECOMES UNCLEAN.²⁴

MISHNAH 3. THE INSIDES OF A MELON AND THE OFFAL LEAVES OF A VEGETABLE, WHEN THEY ARE TERUMAH, R. DOSA PERMITS [THEIR] USE TO NON-PRIESTS, AND THE SAGES FORBID IT.²⁵ FIVE²⁶ EWES, THEIR FLEECES WEIGHING EACH A MINA²⁷ AND A HALF, ARE SUBJECT TO [THE LAW OF] THE FIRST OF THE FLEECE.²⁸ THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. DOSA. BUT THE SAGES SAY: FIVE EWES [ARE SUBJECT] WHATEVER [THEIR FLEECES WEIGH].²⁹

MISHNAH 4. ALL MAT³⁰ ARE [LIABLE TO BECOME] DEFILED BY ‘CORPSE’ DEFILEMENT. THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. DOSA. BUT THE SAGES SAY: [ALSO BY] ‘PRESSURE’ DEFILEMENT.³¹ NO NETWORK³² [ARTICLES] ARE LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS³³ EXCEPT A [NETWORK] GIRDLE.³⁴ THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. DOSA. BUT THE SAGES SAY: THEY ARE ALL LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS, EXCEPT THOSE USED BY WOOLDEALERS.³⁵

MISHNAH 5. A SLING WHOSE POCKET IS WOVEN IS LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS;³⁶ IF IT IS OF SKIN, R. DOSA B. HARKINAS PRONOUNCES IT NOT LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS,³⁷ AND THE SAGES PRONOUNCE IT LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS.³⁸ IF ITS FINGER-HOLD IS BROKEN OFF, IT IS NOT LIABLE;³⁹ BUT IF THE STRING-HANDLE [ONLY] IS BROKEN OFF IT IS LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS.⁴⁰

MISHNAH 6. A FEMALE CAPTIVE⁴¹ MAY EAT OF TERUMAH.⁴² THIS IS THE OPINION OF R. DOSA B. HARKINAS. BUT THE SAGES SAY: THERE IS A FEMALE CAPTIVE WHO MAY EAT, AND THERE IS A FEMALE CAPTIVE WHO MAY NOT EAT. HOW IS THIS? THE WOMAN⁴³ WHO SAID: I WAS MADE A CAPTIVE BUT [NONE THE LESS] I AM PURE, SHE MAY EAT; BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE⁴⁴ WHICH MADE IT UNLAWFUL IS THE SAME EVIDENCE⁴⁴ WHICH MADE IT LAWFUL. BUT IF THERE ARE WITNESSES [WHO DECLARE] THAT SHE WAS MADE A CAPTIVE, AND SHE SAYS: [NONE THE LESS] I AM PURE, SHE MAY NOT EAT.⁴⁵

MISHNAH 7. FOUR⁴⁶ CASES OF DOUBT R. JOSHUA PRONOUNCES UNCLEAN, AND THE SAGES PRONOUNCE THEM CLEAN. HOW IS THIS? IF THE UNCLEAN PERSON⁴⁷

STANDS⁴⁸ AND THE CLEAN PERSON PASSES BY HIM, OR IF THE CLEAN PERSON STANDS⁴⁸ AND THE UNCLEAN PERSON⁴⁷ PASSES BY HIM; OR IF IMPURITY IS IN PRIVATE PREMISES⁴⁹ AND SOMETHING CLEAN IS IN PUBLIC PREMISES,⁵⁰ OR IF SOMETHING CLEAN IS IN PRIVATE PREMISES⁴⁹ AND IMPURITY IS IN PUBLIC PREMISES;⁵⁰ IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER ONE TOUCHED OR DID NOT TOUCH THE OTHER, OR IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER ONE STOOD OVER⁵¹ OR DID NOT STAND OVER THE OTHER, OR IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER ONE MOVED OR DID NOT MOVE THE OTHER, R. JOSHUA PRONOUNCES SUCH A CASE UNCLEAN,⁵² AND THE SAGES PRONOUNCE IT CLEAN.⁵³

MISHNAH 8. THREE⁵⁴ THINGS R. ZADOK PRONOUNCES UNCLEAN AND THE SAGES PRONOUNCE THEM CLEAN. THE NAIL OF THE MONEY-CHANGER,⁵⁵ AND THE CHEST OF GRIST MAKERS, AND THE NAIL OF A STONE DIAL,⁵⁶ R. ZADOK PRONOUNCES UNCLEAN, AND THE SAGES PRONOUNCE THEM CLEAN.⁵⁷

MISHNAH 9. FOUR⁵⁸ THINGS RABBAN GAMALIEL PRONOUNCES UNCLEAN, AND THE SAGES PRONOUNCE THEM CLEAN.⁵⁷ THE COVERING OF A METAL BASKET, IF IT BELONGS TO HOUSEHOLDERS,⁵⁹ AND THE HANGER OF CURRY-COMBS, AND THE VESSELS OF METAL STILL UNSHAPED,⁶⁰ AND A PLATE⁶¹ THAT IS DIVIDED INTO TWO [EQUAL] PARTS. AND THE SAGES AGREE WITH RABBAN GAMALIEL IN THE CASE OF A PLATE THAT WAS DIVIDED INTO TWO PARTS, ONE LARGE AND ONE SMALL, THAT THE LARGE ONE IS LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS AND THE SMALL ONE IS NOT LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS.⁵⁷

MISHNAH 10. IN⁶² THREE CASES RABBAN GAMALIEL PRONOUNCES A RIGOROUS RULING ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI. ONE MAY NOT WRAP UP⁶³ HOT FOOD ON A FESTIVAL FOR THE SABBATH; AND ONE MAY NOT JOIN TOGETHER A LAMP⁶⁴ ON A FESTIVAL, AND ONE MAY NOT BAKE [ON FESTIVALS] THICK LOAVES BUT ONLY WAFER-CAKES.⁶⁵ RABBAN GAMALIEL SAID: IN ALL THEIR DAYS MY FATHER'S HOUSE NEVER BAKED LARGE LOAVES BUT ONLY WAFERCAKES. THEY SAID TO HIM: WHAT CAN WE DO AS REGARDS YOUR FATHER'S HOUSE, FOR THEY WERE RIGOROUS IN RE SPECT TO THEMSELVES BUT WERE LENIENT TOWARDS ISRAEL TO LET THEM BAKE BOTH LARGE LOAVES AND WHITE BREAD.

MISHNAH 11. ALSO⁶⁶ HE DECLARED THREE DECISIONS OF A LENIENT CHARACTER: ONE MAY SWEEP UP [ON A FESTIVAL] BETWEEN THE COUCHES,⁶⁷ AND PUT SPICES⁶⁸ [ON THE COALS] ON A FESTIVAL, AND ROAST A KID WHOLE ON THE NIGHT OF PASSOVER.⁶⁹ BUT THE SAGES FORBID THEM.⁷⁰

MISHNAH 12. R.⁷¹ ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH ALLOWS THREE THINGS AND THE SAGES FORBID THEM: HIS⁷² COW USED TO GO OUT WITH THE STRAP WHICH SHE HAD BETWEEN HER HORNS;⁷³ ONE MAY CURRY⁷⁴ CATTLE ON A FESTIVAL; AND ONE MAY GRIND PEPPER IN ITS OWN MILL. R. JUDAH SAYS: ONE MAY NOT CURRY CATTLE ON A FESTIVAL, BECAUSE IT MAY CAUSE A WOUND, BUT ONE MAY COMB⁷⁵ THEM. BUT THE SAGES SAY: ONE MAY NOT CURRY THEM, NEITHER MAY ONE COMB⁷⁶ THEM.

(1) Cf. Oh. III, 1.

(2) These are enumerated, Oh. II, 1 f.

(3) Cf. I, 7, note 1.

(4) The minimum quantity required for conferring defilement (viz. the size of an olive, Oh. II, 1.) was divided into two halves.

(5) I.e., under the same roofspace.

- (6) Cf. Lev. XI, 35, 40. Touching or carrying a dead animal does not really belong to 'tent' defilement dealt with here. We must assume that this controversy of R. Dosa and the Sages covers also carcass defilement. Some authorities would delete the words 'He who touches corpse'.
- (7) Lit., 'forms a tent over'.
- (8) They hold that the parts combine to form the minimum quantity.
- (9) A board, or beam, or the like.
- (10) Even according to the Sages who agree that in this case the half quantities cannot be combined. The reason for this ruling is discussed, Hul. 125b.
- (11) This continues R. Meir's exposition of the opinion of the Sages.
- (12) Touching one part and carrying the other part of the divided quantity. These acts belong to two different categories, but touching and 'tent' defilement are considered as belonging to the same category.
- (13) Viz., two acts of touching, or carrying, or standing over, each applied to one of the two parts of the divided quantity; or touching the one and standing over the other; cf. the last note.
- (14) The identical act combines the two parts into the required minimum quantity.
- (15) E.g., touching one half and carrying the other half.
- (16) The two parts do not combine.
- (17) Food consisting of small particles, like peas, or small nuts; or food broken up in fragments.
- (18) To form the minimum quantity required to become subject to all the laws governing the defilement of food; cf. Me'i. IV, 5.
- (19) Cf. M.Sh. I, 2.
- (20) Gr. **.
- (21) If they have touched defiled food or drink; cf. Yad. lii, 1.
- (22) In a ritual bath; cf. I, 3, note 7.
- (23) To enable one to sprinkle it upon the defiled; cf. Num. XIX, 17-19.
- (24) And the whole body requires Immersion.
- (25) Cf. Lev. XXII, 10.
- (26) Cf. Hul. XI, 2.
- (27) Cf. Ezek. XLV, 12.
- (28) Deut. XVIII, 4.

- (33) As they do not form a garment; cf. Lev. XI, 32. etc.
- (34) Through being stretched round the body, it becomes like a woven article.
- (35) Which have very large meshes.
- (36) [Though the pocket is not considered a 'utensil with receptacle', as the stones are placed therein only to be slung forth, it is susceptible to defilement in that it is woven work (Raabad).]
- (37) The pocket not being considered a 'utensil with receptacle' it cannot become unclean because it lacks the minimum quantity of five handbreadths square which a skin needs for contracting defilement; cf. Kel. XXVII, 2.
- (38) It is considered a 'utensil with receptacle', and therefore does not require that minimum.
- (39) The sling has become unfit for use, and ceases to be a 'utensil'.
- (40) The sling can be used also without the string.
- (41) The wife of a priest.
- (42) We do not suspect that she was violated by her captors, and thus became a 'harlot' who is unfit to be a priest's wife.
- (43) Cf. Ket. II, 5.
- (44) Lit., 'the mouth'. If you believe her statement that she was made a captive, you must also believe her when she asserts her purity.

- (67) On which people recline at meals.
- (68) For perfume, offered to guests after dinner; cf. Ber. VI, 6.
- (69) After the manner of the Passover lamb; cf. Pes. VII, 1.
- (70) Because sweeping may cause holes in the ground; the burning of spices for perfume is only practiced by the rich, and cannot therefore be regarded as a regular part of the meal to be permitted on the Festival; finally, roasting the kid whole may give the impression of a Passover sacrifice which was forbidden after the destruction of the Temple.
- (71) Cf. Bez. II, 8.
- (72) According to Bez. 23a, the cow really belonged to a female neighbour of R. Eleazar.
- (73) As an adornment, but the Sages consider it a 'burden'.
- (74) Even with fine metal combs.
- (75) With large wooden combs.
- (76) The latter is forbidden to prevent any one doing also the former.

Mishna - Mas. Eduyyot Chapter 4

MISHNAH 1. THE FOLLOWING CASES ARE [EXAMPLES] OF THE LENIENT RULINGS OF BETH SHAMMAI AND OF THE RIGOROUS RULINGS OF BETH HILLEL.¹ AN EGG² WHICH IS LAID ON A FESTIVAL — BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IT MAY BE EATEN,³ AND BETH HILLEL SAY: IT MAY NOT BE EATEN.³ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: LEAVEN AS MUCH AS AN OLIVE [IN QUANTITY], AND LEAVENED FOOD AS MUCH AS A DATE.⁴ AND BETH HILLEL SAY: AS MUCH AS AN OLIVE [IN QUANTITY] IN BOTH CASES.

MISHNAH 2. A BEAST⁵ WHICH WAS BORN ON A FESTIVAL — ALL AGREE THAT IT IS PERMITTED; AND A CHICKEN WHICH WAS HATCHED FROM THE EGG — ALL AGREE THAT IT IS FORBIDDEN.⁶ HE WHO SLAUGHTERS A WILD ANIMAL⁷ OR A BIRD ON A FESTIVAL — BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HE MAY DIG WITH A PRONGED TOOL⁸ AND COVER UP [THE BLOOD].⁹ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: HE MAY NOT SLAUGHTER UNLESS HE HAS HAD EARTH MADE READY.¹⁰ BUT THEY AGREE THAT IF HE DID SLAUGHTER HE SHOULD DIG WITH A PRONGED TOOL¹¹ AND COVER UP [THE BLOOD, AND] THAT THE ASHES OF A STOVE¹² COUNT AS 'MADE READY'.¹³

MISHNAH 3. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: [PRODUCE MADE] OWNERLESS¹⁴ WITH RESPECT TO THE POOR [ONLY] IS COUNTED AS OWNERLESS. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: IT IS NOT

COUNTED AS OWNERLESS UNLESS IT IS MADE OWNERLESS ALSO WITH RESPECT TO THE RICH, AS IN THE YEAR OF RELEASE.¹⁵ IF ALL THE SHEAVES OF THE FIELD WERE OF ONE KAB¹⁶ EACH AND ONE WAS OF FOUR KABS, AND IT WAS FORGOTTEN,¹⁷ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IT DOES NOT COUNT AS FORGOTTEN,¹⁸ AND BETH HILLEL SAY: IT COUNTS AS FORGOTTEN.¹⁹

MISHNAH 4. A SHEAF²⁰ WHICH WAS CLOSE TO A WALL OR TO A STACK OR TO THE HERD OR TO [FIELD] UTENSILS, AND WAS FORGOTTEN, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IT DOES NOT COUNT AS FORGOTTEN,²¹ AND BETH HILLEL SAY: IT COUNTS AS FORGOTTEN.

MISHNAH 5. A VINEYARD²² OF THE FOURTH YEAR²³ — BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IT IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF THE FIFTH NOR TO THE LAW OF REMOVAL, AND BETH HILLEL SAY: IT IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF THE FIFTH²⁴ AND TO THE LAW OF REMOVAL.²⁵ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IT IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF FALLEN GRAPES AND TO THE LAW OF GLEANINGS,²⁶ AND THE POOR REDEEM THEM FOR THEMSELVES.²⁷ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: ALL OF IT GOES TO THE WINEPRESS.²⁸

MISHNAH 6. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: ONE NEED NOT PERFORATE A BARREL OF PICKLED OLIVES,²⁹ AND BETH HILLEL SAY: ONE MUST PERFORATE IT.³⁰ BUT THEY AGREE THAT IF IT WAS PERFORATED AND THE DREGS STOPPED IT UP, IT IS NOT LIABLE TO UNCLEANNESS.³¹ WHOSO HAD ANOINTED HIMSELF WITH CLEAN OIL AND [THEN] BECAME UNCLEAR, AND HE WENT DOWN AND IMMERSSED³² HIMSELF, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: ALTHOUGH HE STILL DRIPS IT³³ IS CLEAN. AND BETH HILLEL SAY: [ONLY WHILE THERE REMAINS] ENOUGH FOR ANOINTING A SMALL LIMB.³⁴ AND IF FROM THE BEGINNING³⁵ IT WAS UNCLEAR OIL, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: [IT IS UNCLEAR AS LONG AS THERE REMAINS ONLY] ENOUGH FOR ANOINTING A SMALL LIMB, AND BETH HILLEL SAY: [EVEN IF THERE REMAINS AS MUCH AS A MOIST LIQUID. R. JUDAH SAYS IN THE NAME OF BETH HILLEL: [PROVIDED IT REMAINS] MOIST [ITSELF] AND [CAN ALSO] MOISTEN [OTHER THINGS].

MISHNAH 7. A WOMAN³⁶ IS BETROTHED BY A DENAR³⁷ OR THE VALUE OF A DENAR, ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: BY A PERUTAH³⁸ OR THE VALUE OF A PERUTAH. AND HOW MUCH IS A PERUTAH? ONE-EIGHTH OF AN ITALIAN ISSAR. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: ONE³⁹ MAY DISMISS HIS WIFE WITH AN OLD BILL OF DIVORCEMENT, AND BETH HILLEL FORBID IT. WHAT IS AN OLD BILL OF DIVORCEMENT? WHENSOEVER HE HAS HAD PRIVACY WITH HER AFTER HE HAS WRITTEN IT FOR HER.⁴⁰ WHOSO⁴¹ DIVORCES HIS WIFE AND SHE [AFTERWARDS] SPENDS A NIGHT WITH HIM AT THE [SAME] INN⁴² — BETH SHAMMAI SAY: SHE DOES NOT REQUIRE A SECOND BILL OF DIVORCEMENT FROM HIM. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: SHE REQUIRES A SECOND BILL OF DIVORCEMENT FROM HIM.⁴³ WHEN [DOES SHE REQUIRE A SECOND BILL OF DIVORCEMENT]? WHEN SHE WAS DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE. BUT IF SHE WAS DIVORCED AFTER BETROTHAL SHE DOES NOT REQUIRE FROM HIM A SECOND BILL OF DIVORCEMENT, SINCE HE IS NOT [YET] FAMILIAR WITH HER.⁴⁴

MISHNAH 8. BETH SHAMMAI PERMIT⁴⁵ THE RIVAL WIVES [OF A DECEASED BROTHER TO BE MARRIED]⁴⁶ TO THE [SURVIVING] BROTHERS; BUT BETH HILLEL FORBID THEM. IF THEY⁴⁷ HAVE PERFORMED HALIZAH,⁴⁸ BETH SHAMMAI PRONOUNCE THEM UNFIT TO [MARRY INTO] THE PRIESTHOOD,⁴⁹ BUT BETH HILLEL PRONOUNCED THEM FIT.⁵⁰ IF THEY⁴⁷ HAVE MARRIED THEIR BROTHER-IN-LAW,⁵¹ BETH SHAMMAI PRONOUNCE THEM FIT,⁵² AND BETH HILLEL PRONOUNCED THEM

UNFIT⁵³ [TO MARRY INTO THE PRIESTHOOD]. AND ALTHOUGH THESE PRONOUNCED UNFIT THOSE WHOM THE OTHERS PRONOUNCED FIT, BETH SHAMMAI DID NOT SHRINK FROM MARRYING WOMEN FROM [THE DAUGHTERS OF] THE SCHOOL OF HILLEL. NOR THE SCHOOL OF HILLEL FROM MARRYING WOMEN FROM [THE DAUGHTERS OF] THE SCHOOL OF SHAMMAI.⁵⁴ AND IN THE CASE OF ALL MATTERS OF PURITY AND IMPURITY IN RESPECT TO WHICH THESE USED TO PRONOUNCE CLEAN WHAT THE OTHERS PRONOUNCED UNCLEAR, THEY DID NOT SHRINK FROM PREPARING FOODS REQUIRING A CONDITION OF PURITY EACH BY MEANS OF [THE VESSELS OF] THE OTHER.⁵⁴

MISHNAH9. [IN THE CASE OF] THREE⁵⁵ BROTHERS, OF WHOM TWO WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND ONE WAS UNMARRIED, IF ONE OF THE HUSBANDS OF THE SISTERS DIED⁵⁶ AND THE UNMARRIED ONE BETROTHED HER,⁵⁷ AND AFTERWARDS HIS OTHER BROTHER⁵⁸ DIED,⁵⁹ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE⁶⁰ REMAINS WITH HIM, AND THE OTHER [WIDOW] IS RELEASED⁶¹ ON THE GROUNDS OF [THE LAW OF] THE WIFE'S SISTER. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: HE SHOULD PUT AWAY HIS WIFE⁶² WITH A BILL OF DIVORCEMENT AND HALIZAH, AND THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER [HE SHOULD PUT AWAY] WITH HALIZAH. THIS IT IS OF WHICH THEY HAVE SAID: WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS WIFE, AND WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS BROTHER'S WIFE!⁶³

MISHNAH10. WHOSC⁶⁴ FORBIDS HIS WIFE BY VOW TO HAVE INTERCOURSE — BETH SHAMMAI SAY: [SHE MUST SUFFER IT FOR] TWO WEEKS,⁶⁵ AND BETH HILLEL SAY: FOR ONE WEEK.⁶⁶ WHOSO⁶⁷ HAS A MISCARRIAGE ON THE NIGHT OF THE EIGHTY FIRST⁶⁸ [DAY] — BETH SHAMMAI RELEASE HER FROM THE OFFERING, BUT BETH HILLEL DO NOT RELEASE HER. A LINEN WRAPPER⁶⁹ — BETH SHAMMAI RELEASE IT FROM THE LAW OF THE FRINGE,⁷⁰ BUT BETH HILLEL DO NOT RELEASE IT. A BASKET⁷¹ OF [FRUIT SET APART FOR] THE SABBATH-BETH SHAMMAI RELEASE IT [FROM TITHES].⁷² BUT BETH HILLEL DO NOT RELEASE IT.⁷³

MISHNAH 11. WHOSC⁷⁴ VOWED [TO KEEP] A LONGER NAZIRITESHIP⁷⁵ [THAN ORDINARY].⁷⁶ AND HE COMPLETED HIS NAZIRITESHIP AND AFTERWARDS CAME TO THE [HOLY] LAND⁷⁷ — BETH SHAMMAI SAY: [HE MUST BE] A NAZIRITE [ONLY] THIRTY DAYS,⁷⁸ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: [HE MUST BE] A NAZIRITE [THE FULL TIME VOWED AS] IN THE BEGINNING. WHOSO⁷⁹ HAS TWO GROUPS OF WITNESSES WHO TESTIFY ABOUT HIM, THESE TESTIFYING THAT HE VOWED TWO NAZIRITESHIPS AND THESE TESTIFYING THAT HE VOWED FIVE⁸⁰ — BETH SHAMMAI SAY: THEIR TESTIMONY IS DIVIDED,⁸¹ AND THERE IS HERE NO [OBLIGATION TO PERFORM] NAZIRITESHIP. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: WITHIN THE FIVE THE TWO ARE INCLUDED, SO THAT HE MUST BE A NAZIRITE TWICE OVER.

MISHNAH 12. A MAN⁸² WHO WAS SET BENEATH THE GAP⁸³ — BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HE DOES NOT CAUSE THE IMPURITY TO PASS OVER.⁸⁴ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: A MAN IS HOLLOW, AND THE UPPER SIDE CAUSES THE IMPURITY TO PASS OVER.

(1) Whereas in most of their controversies it is the School of Shammai who adopt a severer view and the School of Hillel a lenient one.

(2) Cf. Bez. I, 2.

(3) On the same day. The grounds of the controversy are discussed in the Gemara, Bez. 2b ff.

(4) Must be destroyed on the eve of the Passover. But as regards eating, Beth Shammai agree that even an olive's quantity is prohibited.

(5) Some texts omit 'A beast . . . forbidden'.

(6) As טָבַח, 'newly-born', i.e. a food, the use of which became available only on the Festival day. But a beast born on

- the Festival is considered available from before the Festival, since if its dam was slaughtered it could have been used as food before its birth together with its dam.
- (7) E.g., a deer, etc.; cf. Deut. XIV, 5.
- (8) Which had been stuck in the ground for the purpose before the advent of the Festival. [V. Bez. 8a; Tosaf. s. v. מוֹכְנֵי.]
- (9) Cf. Lev. XVII, 13.

- (24) If it is not taken up to Jerusalem but is 'redeemed' for money (cf. I, 9, n. 16), a fifth of the value of the fruit must be added, as in the case of Second Tithe; cf. Lev. XXVII, 31; B.M. IV, 8.
- (25) Like Tithes, it has to be removed from the house on the eve of the Passover of the fourth and seventh year of the septennial cycle; cf. Deut. XXVI, 13; M.Sh. V, 6.
- (26) Like common produce. Cf. Lev. XIX, 10; Pe'ah VII, 3-4.
- (27) If they will not take them up to Jerusalem.
- (28) I.e., it all — the fallen grapes and gleanings alike — belongs to the owner, who must take it up to Jerusalem or redeem it. [The stringency of Beth Hillel affects the interests of the poor (Raabad).]
- (29) Where the olives are preserved for eating, and not for the extraction of their oil.
- (30) In order to show by allowing the juice to escape through the holes that one does not desire the oil as a liquid. Therefore when the olives are moistened by the exuding oil they will not thereby become susceptible to uncleanness in accordance with Lev. XI, 38; cf. I, 8, n. 12; Maksh. I, 1.

- (38) The weight of half a barleycorn of silver.
- (39) Cf. Git. VIII, 4.
- (40) And before delivering it to her. Beth Hillel prohibit it, because she may have a child by him, and as the conception of the child will have occurred at a date later than that of the bill of divorcement, the child may be wrongfully stigmatized as having been conceived out of wedlock.
- (41) Cf. Git. VIII, 9.
- (42) There are witnesses who testify to this effect.
- (43) He may have betrothed her again by marital intercourse; cf. Kid. I, 1.
- (44) So we need not suspect intercourse.
- (45) Cf. Yeb. I, 4.

(46) Under the law of Levirate Marriage. Deut. XXV, 5. The controversy arises in a case where the deceased, who died without issue, had married more than one wife. One of the wives was a blood relation (such as a daughter) to the surviving brother, marriage with whom would be an act of incest (ערוה). As the surviving brother may not perform the levirate marriage with his blood relation, so, according to Beth Hillel, he may not perform the levirate marriage with the rival wives of the blood relation. But Beth Shammai permit levirate marriage with the rival wives.

(47) The rival wives.

(48) Lit., 'drawing off', viz. the shoe, being the ceremony prescribed. Deut. XXV, 9.

(49) A woman who performed halizah is by Rabbinical injunction considered like a woman divorced, and is therefore forbidden to marry a priest; cf. Lev. XXI, 7. Since according to Beth Shammai levirate marriage with the rival wives is lawful, their halizah also is lawful, and it therefore renders them unfit for marrying a priest.

(50) The whole ceremony of halizah was unnecessary and void.

(51) And they became, widows again.

(52) The levirate marriage was lawful, and they are now counted as ordinary widows who may marry an ordinary priest.

(53) The levirate marriage was unlawful, and it has therefore made them 'harlots' who are forbidden to a priest; cf. Lev. XXI, 7.

(54) Because they were careful to communicate to each other any case which either of them considered unlawful, so as to prevent an infringement of their ruling.

(55) Cf. Yeb. III, 5.

(56) Without leaving any issue.

(57) Lit., 'performed to her a saying' (באמר). Instead of consummating the levirate marriage by an act (במעשה, as prescribed Deut. XXV, 5), he merely betrothed her by a gift (cf. supra, p. 25) and the utterance of the betrothal formula.

(58) The husband of the second sister.

(59) V. p. 26, n. 10.

(60) Viz., the one he had betrothed. Beth Shammai consider the betrothal (באמר) fully binding.

(61) From both levirate marriage and halizah, since the brother-in-law is now married to her sister; cf. Lev. XVIII, 18.

(62) The one he has betrothed. Beth Hillel consider the betrothal (באמר) only partly binding. But he cannot consummate the levirate marriage with the betrothed one, since her sister also is now tied to him in a marriage relationship. Therefore he must give her a bill of divorcement to undo the betrothal. On the other hand, since the betrothal is not fully binding, both sisters must perform halizah.

(63) He is unlucky in losing both the one and the other; cf. Yeb. XIII, 7.

(64) Cf. Keth. V, 6.

(65) Abstinence for such a period is also prescribed in the case of Lev. XII, 5.

(66) As Lev. XII, 2; XV, 19.

(67) Cf. Ker. I, 6.

(68) After having given birth to a female child. She has now fulfilled the fourteen days of her uncleanness and the sixty-six days of her cleanness, and should bring her prescribed offering in accordance with Lev. XII, 5-6; but it being night, she is prevented from bringing the offering till the following day. Beth Shammai hold that since she could not have brought her offering for the first birth, the new birth may be included in the first birth, and one offering suffice for the two. But Beth Hillel hold that since the new birth took place after the completion of the period for the first birth, she must bring separate offerings for each of them.

(69) Used chiefly by night, but also worn by day.

(70) ציצית, made of a woollen cord of blue, Num. XV, 38. The use of wool and linen (flax) in the same garment, though ordinarily forbidden (שעטנז, Deut. XXII, 11) is permitted in the case of ציצית. But as the law of the Fringe applies only to day garments, therefore Beth Shammai exempt the linen wrapper from the law of the Fringe even by day, for fear of the transgression of the prohibition of שעטנז when the wrapper is used by night. But Beth Hillel do not apprehend such a transgression.

(72) I.e., one may take of it an incidental mouthful on the eve of the Sabbath before tithing it, but not on the Sabbath itself, as the sanctity of the day imparts importance to any incidental mouthful, making it liable to tithing.

(73) It must be tithed immediately.

(74) Cf. Naz. III, 6.

(75) Cf. Num. VI, 2 ff.

(76) Longer than thirty days; cf. Naz. I, 3.

(77) The observance of the Naziriteship outside the Holy Land is not counted, as one cannot observe there the purity demanded by the law; cf. Num. VI, 6 ff.

(78) He must resume the observance, but only for the ordinary period of thirty days.

(79) Cf. Naz. III, 7.

(80) While he himself denies having made any vow at all.

(81) The evidence is contradictory, and therefore void.

(82) Cf. Oh. XI, 3; Oh. XI, 2, lays down that if a ceiling has a gap right across, and there is a corpse defilement on the floor below on the one side of the gap, the defilement cannot be conveyed by the roof-space across the gap to articles that may be found on the floor on the other side of the gap, unless there is on the floor right below the gap a hollow article of a cubic handbreadth in extent, which serves to bridge the gap.

(84) He cannot be considered as bridging the gap, and connecting the sides of the ceiling into one undivided roof-space; cf. I, 7, n. 1.

Mishna - Mas. Eduyyot Chapter 5

MISHNAH 1. R. JUDAH CITES SIX INSTANCES¹ OF LENIENT RULINGS BY BETH SHAMMAI AND RIGOROUS RULINGS BY BETH HILLEL. THE BLOOD OF A CARCASS² BETH SHAMMAI PRONOUNCE CLEAN,³ AND BETH HILLEL PRONOUNCE IT UNCLEAN. AN EGG FOUND IN A [BIRD'S] CARCASS, IF THE LIKE OF IT WERE SOLD IN THE MARKET,⁴ IS PERMITTED, AND IF NOT, IT IS FORBIDDEN, ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI. AND BETH HILLEL FORBID IT. BUT THEY AGREE IN THE CASE OF AN EGG FOUND IN A TREFA⁵ [BIRD] THAT IT IS FORBIDDEN. SINCE IT HAD ITS GROWTH IN A FORBIDDEN CONDITION.⁶ THE⁷ BLOOD⁸ OF A GENTILE⁹ WOMAN AND THE BLOOD OF PURITY¹⁰ OF A LEPROUS¹¹ WOMAN, BETH SHAMMAI PRONOUNCE CLEAN; AND BETH HILLEL SAY: [IT IS] LIKE HER¹² SPITTLE AND HER¹² URINE.¹³ ONE¹⁴ MAY EAT FRUITS OF THE SEVENTH YEAR¹⁵ WITH AN EXPRESSION OF THANKS¹⁶ AND WITHOUT AN EXPRESSION OF THANKS; THUS ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: ONE MAY NOT EAT [EXCEPT] WITH AN EXPRESSION OF THANKS.¹⁷ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: A WATERSKIN¹⁸ [IS LIABLE TO BECOME UNCLEAN¹⁹ IF IT IS] TIED UP AND REMAINS UNIMPAIRED.²⁰ AND THE SCHOOL OF HILLEL SAY: EVEN IF IT IS NOT TIED UP.²¹

MISHNAH 2. R. JOSE CITES SIX INSTANCES OF LENIENT RULINGS BY BETH SHAMMAI AND RIGOROUS RULINGS BY BETH HILLEL. ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI, A FOWL²² MAY BE BROUGHT UP ON THE TABLE [TOGETHER] WITH CHEESE BUT MAY NOT BE EATEN [WITH IT].²³ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: IT MAY NEITHER BE BROUGHT UP [TOGETHER WITH IT] NOR EATEN [WITH IT].²⁴ ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI,²⁵ OLIVES MAY BE GIVEN AS TERUMAH FOR OIL AND GRAPES FOR WINE. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: THEY MAY NOT BE GIVEN.²⁶ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: WHOSO²⁷ SOWS [WITHIN] FOUR CUBITS OF A VINEYARD HAS CAUSED ONE ROW [OF VINES] TO BE PROHIBITED.²⁸ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: HE HAS CAUSED TWO ROWS²⁹ TO BE PROHIBITED. FLOUR³⁰ PASTE³¹ BETH SHAMMAI EXEMPT³² [FROM THE LAW OF HALLAH];³³ BUT BETH HILLEL PRONOUNCE IT LIABLE. ONE³⁴ MAY IMMERSE ONESELF³⁵ IN A RAIN-TORRENT,³⁶ ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI; BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: ONE MAY NOT IMMERSE ONESELF [THEREIN].³⁷ IF³⁸ ONE BECAME A PROSELYTE ON THE EVE OF PASSOVER, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HE MAY IMMERSE HIMSELF³⁹ AND EAT HIS PASSOVER SACRIFICE IN THE EVENING.⁴⁰ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: WHOSO SEPARATES HIMSELF FROM UNCIRCUMCISION IS AS ONE WHO SEPARATES HIMSELF FROM THE GRAVE.⁴¹

MISHNAH 3. R. ISHMAEL⁴² CITES THREE INSTANCES OF LENIENT RULINGS BY BETH SHAMMAI AND RIGOROUS RULINGS BY BETH HILLEL. THE BOOK⁴³ OF ECCLESIASTES DOES NOT DEFILE THE HANDS⁴⁴ ACCORDING TO THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI; BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: IT DEFILES THE HANDS. WATER OF PURIFICATION WHICH HAS DONE ITS DUTY,⁴⁵ BETH SHAMMAI PRONOUNCE CLEAN,⁴⁶ BUT BETH HILLEL PRONOUNCE IT UNCLEAN,⁴⁷ BLACK CUMMIN⁴⁸ BETH SHAMMAI PRONOUNCE NOT LIABLE TO BECOME UNCLEAN,⁴⁹ BUT BETH HILLEL PRONOUNCE IT LIABLE TO BECOME UNCLEAN. SO, TOO, WITH REGARD TO TITHES.⁵⁰

MISHNAH 4. R. ELIEZER CITES TWO INSTANCES OF LENIENT RULINGS BY BETH SHAMMAI AND RIGOROUS RULINGS BY BETH HILLEL. THE BLOOD⁵¹ OF A WOMAN AFTER CHILDBIRTH WHO HAS NOT IMMERSSED HERSELF,⁵² BETH SHAMMAI SAY: [IT IS] LIKE HER SPITTLE AND HER URINE.⁵³ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: IT CAUSES DEFILEMENT WHETHER WET OR DRY.⁵⁴ HOWEVER, THEY AGREE IN THE CASE OF THE BLOOD OF A WOMAN WHO BROUGHT FORTH WHEN SHE HAD AN ISSUE, THAT IT CAUSES DEFILEMENT WHETHER WET OR DRY.⁵⁵

MISHNAH 5. [IN THE CASE OF] FOUR⁵⁶ BROTHERS OF WHOM TWO WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, IF THOSE MARRIED TO THE SISTERS DIED, LO, THESE SHOULD PERFORM HALIZAH AND NOT MARRY THE BROTHERS-IN-LAW.⁵⁷ IF THE LATTER BESTIRRED THEMSELVES AND MARRIED THEM,⁵⁸ THEY MUST PUT THEM AWAY. R. ELIEZER SAYS IN THE NAME OF BETH SHAMMAI: THEY MAY KEEP THEM. BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: THEY MUST PUT THEM AWAY.⁵⁹

MISHNAH 6. AKABIA B. MAHALALEEL TESTIFIED CONCERNING FOUR THINGS. THEY SAID TO HIM: AKABIA, WITHDRAW THESE FOUR THINGS WHICH YOU SAY, AND WE WILL MAKE YOU FATHER OF THE COURT⁶⁰ IN ISRAEL. HE SAID TO THEM: IT IS BETTER FOR ME TO BE CALLED A FOOL⁶¹ ALL MY DAYS THAN THAT I SHOULD BECOME [EVEN] FOR ONE HOUR A WICKED MAN⁶² IN THE SIGHT OF GOD; AND⁶³ LET NOT MEN SAY: HE WITHDREW HIS OPINIONS FOR THE SAKE OF GETTING POWER. HE USED⁶⁴ TO PRONOUNCE UNCLEAN THE HAIR WHICH HAS BEEN LEFT OVER [IN LEPROSY],⁶⁵ AND YELLOW BLOOD;⁶⁶ BUT THE SAGES DECLARED THEM CLEAN. HE USED⁶⁷ TO PERMIT THE HAIR OF A FIRSTLING WHICH WAS BLEMISHED⁶⁸ AND WHICH HAD FALLEN OUT⁶⁹ AND HAD BEEN PUT IN A WINDOW,⁷⁰ THE FIRSTLING BEING SLAUGHTERED AFTERWARDS; BUT THE SAGES FORBID IT.⁷¹ HE USED TO SAY: A WOMAN PROSELYTE AND A MANUMITTED BONDWOMAN ARE NOT MADE TO DRINK OF THE WATER OF BITTERNESS.⁷² BUT THE SAGES SAY: THEY ARE MADE TO DRINK. THEY SAID TO HIM: IT HAPPENED IN THE CASE OF KARKEMITH, A MANUMITTED BONDWOMAN WHO WAS IN JERUSALEM, THAT SHEMAIAH AND ABTALION MADE HER TO DRINK. HE SAID TO THEM: IN SIMULATION⁷³ [ONLY] THEY MADE HER TO DRINK. WHEREUPON THEY EXCOMMUNICATED HIM;⁷⁴ AND HE DIED WHILE HE WAS UNDER EXCOMMUNICATION, AND THE COURT STONED⁷⁵ HIS COFFIN. R. JUDAH SAID: GOD FORBID [TO SAY] THAT AKABIA WAS EXCOMMUNICATED, FOR THE TEMPLE COURT WAS NEVER CLOSED⁷⁶ IN THE FACE OF ANY MAN IN ISRAEL WHO WAS EQUAL TO AKABIA B. MAHALALEEL IN WISDOM AND THE FEAR OF SIN. BUT WHOM DID THEY EXCOMMUNICATE? ELIEZER THE SON OF ENOCH WHO DEMURRED AGAINST THE LAWS CONCERNING THE PURIFYING OF THE HANDS.⁷⁷ AND WHEN HE DIED THE COURT SENT AND LAID A STONE ON HIS COFFIN. THIS TEACHES THAT WHOEVER IS EXCOMMUNICATED AND DIES WHILE UNDER EXCOMMUNICATION, HIS COFFIN IS STONED.

MISHNAH 7. IN THE HOUR OF HIS⁷⁸ DEATH HE SAID TO HIS SON⁷⁹ : WITHDRAW THE

FOUR OPINIONS WHICH I USED TO DECLARE. AND HE SAID TO HIM: WHY DID NOT YOU WITHDRAW THEM? HE SAID TO HIM: I HEARD THEM FROM THE MOUTH OF THE MANY, AND THEY HEARD [THE CONTRARY] FROM THE MOUTH OF THE MANY.⁸⁰ I STOOD FAST BY THE TRADITION WHICH I HEARD, AND THEY STOOD FAST BY THE TRADITION WHICH THEY HEARD. BUT YOU HAVE HEARD [MY TRADITION] FROM THE MOUTH OF A SINGLE INDIVIDUAL⁸¹ AND [THEIR TRADITION] FROM THE MOUTH OF THE MANY. IT IS BETTER TO LEAVE THE OPINION OF THE SINGLE INDIVIDUAL AND TO HOLD BY THE OPINION OF THE MANY, HE SAID TO HIM: FATHER COMMEND ME TO YOUR COLLEAGUES. HE SAID TO HIM: I WILL NOT COMMEND YOU. HE SAID TO HIM: HAVE YOU FOUND IN ME ANY WRONG? HE SAID: NO; YOUR OWN DEEDS WILL CAUSE YOU TO BE NEAR,⁸² AND YOUR OWN DEEDS WILL CAUSE YOU TO BE FAR.⁸²

(1) Cf. IV, 1, n. 1.

(2) Of an animal which died of itself or which was slaughtered in a manner that rendered it unfit for food; cf. Lev. XI, 24ff.

(3) The blood is not considered part of the carcass; cf. infra VIII, 1.

(4) If the egg has a fully formed hard shell. It is then considered distinct from the bird.

(5) Cf. supra II, 2, n. 8.

(6) The bird was already forbidden when the egg was still an inseparable part of its body.

(7) Cf. Nid. IV, 3.

(8) Of menstruation, or of a flux; cf. Lev. XV, 19, 25.

(9) From the expression, the children of Israel, Lev. XV, 2, it is deduced that all the laws concerning impurity contained in that chapter apply only to Israelites.

(10) Cf. Lev. XII, 4, 5.

(12) Viz., of the Gentile woman, or of the leprosy woman after childbirth in the period of her purification.

(13) Their spittle and urine are deemed unclean by a Rabbinical ruling (as distinguished from the Biblical law), even according to Beth Shammai. But unlike blood of menstruation or of a flux, which confer defilement also when dried up, spittle and urine confer defilement only when wet. And Beth Hillel hold that the menstruous blood of a Gentile woman and the 'blood of purity' of a leprosy woman are also unclean only when wet, but not when dried up; cf. infra 4, n. 5.

(15) The Year of Release; cf. supra IV, 3, n. 5.

(16) To the owner, though the owner is forbidden to look upon his fruit as his own.

(17) That one may not get into the habit of entering also at other times another man's field and eating its fruit without the owner's knowledge. Some texts omit 'except'. The reason of the prohibition will then be the one given in the last note.

(18) Which was damaged by a hole and then repaired by tying it up; cf. Kel. XXVI, 4.

(19) By body-pressure uncleanness (מדרם) if used as pillow or seat; cf. Kel. XX, 1; and above I, 11, n. 10.

(20) I.e., it does not deflate even when the knot is removed.

(21) If the hole is stopped up by some other means, so as to retain the liquid; cf. Kel. XVII, 2.

(22) Cf. Hul. VIII, 1.

(23) The prohibition against eating fowl's flesh boiled in milk is not Biblical but only Rabbinic; cf. Hul. VIII, 4. Hence Beth Shammai hold that while the Rabbis have forbidden the eating of cattle's flesh with cheese as a precaution lest it may lead to the eating of cattle's flesh boiled in milk, they have not forbidden also the eating of fowl's flesh with cheese, since it can only lead to eating fowl's flesh boiled in milk, which itself is merely a Rabbinic injunction.

(24) They hold that eating fowl's flesh with cheese may lead to eating cattle's flesh boiled in milk.

(25) Cf. Ter. I, 4.

(26) From Num. XVIII, 27, it is inferred that terumah and the produce for which it is given must both be in the same stage of preparation as a food.

(27) Cf. Kil. IV, 5.

(28) קידש, 'he has sanctified', an expression derived from Deut. XXII, 9.

(29) The controversy turns on whether the minimum quantity of fruit of the vineyard (Deut. ibid.) consists of one row of vines, or of two rows.

(30) Cf. Hal. I, 6.

(31) Made of flour mixed with boiling water.

(32) It is not counted as 'bread' (לֶחֶם . Num. XV, 19).

(33) Cf. I, 2, n. 2.

(34) Cf. Mik. V, 6.

(35) For the purpose of purification; cf. I, 3, n. 7.

(36) A running pool formed by rain water coming down from a hill.

(37) They hold that rain water must be stationary in a cavity to be fit for ritual immersion.

(38) Cf. Pes. VIII, 8.

(39) After the circumcision, in order to complete his proselytism; cf. Yeb. 46a.

(40) Cf. Ex. XII, 48.

(41) He is like one who has corpse defilement, and requires to be sprinkled with the waters of purification, in accordance with Num. XIX, 19.

(42) Some texts read 'Simeon'.

(43) Cf. Yad. III, 5.

(44) It is not considered inspired Scripture; cf. Yad. IV, 6.

(45) After it has been sprinkled upon the unclean; cf. Num. XIX, 9, 18 f.

(46) Cf. Par. XII, 4.

(47) In accordance with Num. XIX, 21; cf. Yoma 14a.

(48) Cf. 'Uk. III, 6.

(49) It is not eaten by itself, and therefore it is not counted a 'food' (אֵכָל , Lev. XI, 34).

(50) Beth Shammai exempt it from tithes, as not being a 'food'; and Beth Hillel do not exempt it.

(51) Cf. Nid. IV, 3.

(52) After an interval of seven days from the birth of a male child, and of fourteen days from the birth of a female child; Lev. XII, 2, 5.

(53) It defiles only when wet; cf. supra 1, n. 13.

(54) Without immersion it is counted as blood of menstruation.

(55) Since in accordance with Lev. XV, 28, she has to count seven clean days in addition to the period of impurity due to the childbirth.

(56) Cf. Yeb. III, 2.

(57) Because both sisters are tied in a marriage relationship to each of the surviving brothers, therefore the levirate marriage of either sister to either surviving brother comes within the prohibition of marrying a wife's sister; cf. supra IV, 9, n. 5.

(58) Each surviving brother married one of the sisters.

(59) Cf. Yeb. 28a.

(61) For refusing the offer.

(62) By denying the truth of my tradition.

(63) An additional reason for refusing the offer (v. Tosaf Yom Tob).

(64) Cf. Neg. V, 3.

(65) A hair was turned white in a leprous white spot, rendering it unclean, in accordance with Lev. XIII, 3. Then the leprosy was healed, and the man became clean. But the white hair remained until finally another white spot appeared in the same place of the body. The Sages declare it clean, since the whiteness of the hair existed before this new white spot appeared, while Akabia declares it unclean.

(66) Cf. Nid. II, 6. The Sages hold that to be unclean blood must be red in colour.

(67) Cf. Bek. III, 4.

(68) And had therefore been declared permitted to be slaughtered outside the Temple; cf. II, 2, n. 6.

(69) Cutting its hair, or wool, deliberately is forbidden, although it is blemished.

(70) Or in a niche in the wall, in order to preserve it until the animal should be slaughtered.

(71) Lest it should lead to delaying the slaughtering of the firstling for the sake of profiting from its hair or wool.

(72) Cf. Num. V, 18ff. He inferred from the expression, in the midst of thy people (Num. ibid. 21) that the law applied only to Israelitish women.

(73) דינמה, Gr. . They really gave her other water, but similar in colour to the water of bitter ness. Others explain: 'Men who were like unto her made her to drink,' i.e. Shemaiah and Abtalion were themselves also of Gentile extraction, therefore they treated Karkemith as if she was an Israelite.

(74) Because he defamed the honour of Shemaiah and Abtalion.

(75) By placing a big stone upon it; cf. infra.

(76) On the eve of the Passover, when the Passover lamb was sacrificed in relays, in order to prevent overcrowding; cf. Pes. V, 5.

(77) Cf. Yad. III, 2.

(79) [Derenbourg, Essai, p. 483, identifies him with Jose b. Akabia (Pes. 113b; Yoma 52b).]

(80) Cf. supra I, 5. The controversy between Akabia and the Sages was as to what had been the opinion of the majority of the Sages before them. [Halevy, op. cit. I, 362 and Ie 292, accounts this controversy to the breaking up of all Central Authority during the civil war that characterised the days of the last Hasmonean rulers. Lauterbach, (J.Q.R., N.S. VI, 66, n. 59) ignoring Halevy, involves himself in unnecessary difficulties.]

(81) Akabia himself, as opposed to the Sages.

(82) Near to my colleagues; far from my colleagues; i.e., your own conduct will win you friends or alienate them.

Mishna - Mas. Eduyyot Chapter 6

MISHNAH 1. R. JUDAH B. BABA TESTIFIED CONCERNING FIVE THINGS: THAT WOMEN WHO ARE MINORS ARE MADE¹ TO DECLARE AN ANNULMENT OF THEIR MARRIAGE;² THAT A WOMAN IS ALLOWED TO RE-MARRY ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS;³ THAT A COCK WAS STONED⁴ IN JERUSALEM BECAUSE IT HAD KILLED A HUMAN BEING;⁵ AND ABOUT WINE FORTY DAYS OLD,⁶ THAT IT WAS USED AS A LIBATION ON THE ALTAR; AND ABOUT THE CONTINUAL OFFERING OF THE MORNING, THAT IT IS OFFERED AT THE FOURTH HOUR.⁷

MISHNAH 2. R. JOSHUA AND R. NEHUNIA B. ELINATHAN, A MAN OF KEFAR HABABLI,⁸ TESTIFIED CONCERNING A LIMB⁹ FROM A CORPSE THAT IT IS UNCLEAN;¹⁰ WHEREAS R. ELIEZER SAYS: THEY DECLARED [THIS] ONLY OF A LIMB FROM A LIVING [MAN]. THEY SAID TO HIM: IS NOT THERE AN INFERENCE FROM THE MINOR TO THE MAJOR:¹¹ IF IN THE CASE OF A LIVING MAN [WHO IS HIMSELF CLEAN] A LIMB SEVERED FROM HIM IS UNCLEAN, HOW MUCH MORE IN THE CASE OF A CORPSE [WHICH IS ITSELF UNCLEAN] SHOULD A LIMB SEVERED FROM IT BE UNCLEAN! HE SAID TO THEM: THEY HAVE [NEVERTHELESS] DECLARED IT ONLY OF A LIMB FROM A LIVING MAN. ANOTHER ANSWER¹² IS: THE DEFILEMENT OF LIVING MEN IS GREATER THAN THE DEFILEMENT OF CORPSES, BECAUSE A LIVING MAN¹³ CAUSES WHAT IS UNDER HIM¹⁴ TO BECOME A 'COUCH' AND A 'SEAT'¹⁵ FOR THE PURPOSE OF DEFILING [ANOTHER] MAN AND HIS GARMENTS, AND [HE CAUSES ALSO] WHAT IS OVER HIM¹⁶ [TO BECOME] A NON- CONTIGUOUS MEDIUM¹⁷ FOR THE PURPOSE OF DEFILING FOODS AND LIQUIDS- WHICH IS DEFILEMENT THAT A CORPSE DOES NOT CAUSE.¹⁸

MISHNAH 3. AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH SEVERED FROM A LIMB OF A LIVING MAN, R. ELIEZER PRONOUNCES UNCLEAN¹⁹ AND R. JOSHUA AND R. NEHUNIA PRONOUNCE CLEAN. A BARLEY-GRAIN'S QUANTITY OF BONE SEVERED FROM A LIMB OF A LIVING MAN, R. NEHUNIA PRONOUNCES UNCLEAN²⁰ AND R. ELIEZER AND R. JOSHUA PRONOUNCE CLEAN. THEY SAID TO R. ELIEZER: WHAT REASON HAVE YOU FOUND FOR PRONOUNCING UNCLEAN AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH SEVERED FROM A LIMB OF A LIVING MAN? HE SAID TO THEM: WE FIND²¹ THAT A LIMB FROM A LIVING MAN IS LIKE AN ENTIRE CORPSE. AS IN THE CASE OF A

CORPSE, AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH SEVERED FROM IT IS UNCLEAN, SO ALSO IN THE CASE OF A LIMB FROM A LIVING MAN AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH SEVERED FROM IT MUST BE UNCLEAN. THEY SAID TO HIM: NO!²² WHEN YOU PRONOUNCE UNCLEAN AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH SEVERED FROM A CORPSE, IT IS BECAUSE YOU HAVE PRONOUNCED UNCLEAN A BARLEY-GRAIN'S QUANTITY OF BONE SEVERED FROM IT. BUT HOW CAN YOU ALSO PRONOUNCE UNCLEAN AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH SEVERED FROM A LIMB OF A LIVING MAN, SEEING THAT YOU HAVE PRONOUNCED CLEAN²³ A BARLEY-GRAIN'S QUANTITY OF BONE SEVERED FROM IT? THEY SAID TO R. NEHUNIA: WHAT REASON HAVE YOU FOUND FOR PRONOUNCING UNCLEAN A BARLEY-GRAIN'S QUANTITY OF BONE SEVERED FROM A LIMB OF A LIVING MAN? HE SAID TO THEM: WE FIND²¹ THAT A LIMB FROM A LIVING MAN IS LIKE AN ENTIRE CORPSE. AS IN THE CASE OF A CORPSE, A BARLEY-GRAIN'S QUANTITY OF BONE SEVERED FROM IT IS UNCLEAN,²⁰ SO ALSO IN THE CASE OF A LIMB FROM A LIVING MAN, A BARLEY-GRAIN'S QUANTITY OF BONE SEVERED FROM IT MUST BE UNCLEAN. THEY SAID TO HIM: NO!²² WHEN YOU PRONOUNCE UNCLEAN A BARLEY-GRAIN'S QUANTITY OF BONE SEVERED FROM A CORPSE, IT IS BECAUSE YOU HAVE PRONOUNCED UNCLEAN AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH SEVERED FROM IT. BUT HOW CAN YOU ALSO PRONOUNCE UNCLEAN A BARLEY-GRAIN'S QUANTITY OF BONE SEVERED FROM A LIMB OF A LIVING MAN, SEEING THAT YOU HAVE PRONOUNCED CLEAN²⁴ AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH SEVERED FROM IT? THEY SAID TO R. ELIEZER: WHAT REASON HAVE YOU FOUND FOR DIVIDING YOUR STANDARDS? EITHER PRONOUNCE THEM BOTH²⁵ UNCLEAN, OR PRONOUNCE THEM BOTH²⁵ CLEAN! HE SAID TO THEM: GREATER IS THE DEFILEMENT OF FLESH THAN THE DEFILEMENT OF BONES, FOR THE DEFILEMENT OF FLESH APPLIES BOTH TO CARCASSES AND TO CREEPING THINGS,²⁶ BUT IT IS NOT SO IN THE CASE OF BONES. ANOTHER ANSWER IS: A LIMB²⁷ WHICH HAS ON IT THE PROPER QUANTITY²⁸ OF FLESH CAUSES DEFILEMENT BY TOUCHING AND BY CARRYING AND BY BEING UNDER THE SAME ROOF-SPACE; IF THE FLESH IS DIMINISHED IT IS STILL UNCLEAN,²⁹ WHILE IF THE BONE IS DIMINISHED IT IS CLEAN.³⁰ THEY SAID TO R. NEHUNIA: WHAT REASON HAVE YOU FOUND FOR DIVIDING YOUR STANDARDS? EITHER PRONOUNCE THEM BOTH²⁵ UNCLEAN, OR PRONOUNCE THEM BOTH²⁵ CLEAN! HE SAID TO THEM: GREATER IS THE DEFILEMENT OF BONES THAN THE DEFILEMENT OF FLESH, FOR FLESH SEVERED FROM A LIVING MAN IS CLEAN, WHEREAS A LIMB SEVERED FROM HIM, WHILE IN ITS NATURAL CONDITION,³¹ IS UNCLEAN. ANOTHER ANSWER IS: AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY OF FLESH³² CAUSES DEFILEMENT BY TOUCHING AND BY CARRYING AND BY BEING UNDER THE SAME ROOF-SPACE; AND A MAJORITY³³ OF A DEAD MAN'S BONES CAUSES DEFILEMENT BY TOUCHING AND BY CARRYING AND BY BEING UNDER THE SAME ROOF-SPACE; IF FLESH IS DIMINISHED IT IS CLEAN, BUT IF A MAJORITY OF THE BONES IS DIMINISHED, ALTHOUGH IT DOES NOT CAUSE DEFILEMENT BY BEING UNDER THE SAME ROOF-SPACE, IT YET CAUSES DEFILEMENT BY TOUCHING AND BY CARRYING.³⁴ ANOTHER ANSWER IS: ANY FLESH OF A CORPSE LESS THAN AN OLIVE'S QUANTITY³⁵ IS CLEAN, BUT BONES FORMING THE GREATER PORTION OF THE BODY'S BUILD³⁶ OR THE GREATER PORTION OF THE NUMBER OF THE CORPSE'S BONES, EVEN THOUGH THEY DO NOT FILL A QUARTER-KAB ARE YET UNCLEAN.³⁷ THEY SAID TO R. JOSHUA: WHAT REASON HAVE YOU FOUND FOR PRONOUNCING THEM BOTH CLEAN? HE SAID TO THEM: NO! WHEN YOU PRONOUNCE UNCLEAN IN THE CASE OF A CORPSE, IT IS BECAUSE THE RULES OF 'MAJORITY',³⁸ 'QUARTER-KAB', AND 'DECAYED MATTER'³⁹ APPLY TO IT. BUT HOW CAN YOU SAY THE SAME OF A LIVING MAN, SEEING THAT THE RULES OF 'MAJORITY', 'QUARTER-KAB', AND 'DECAYED MATTER' DO NOT APPLY TO HIM?⁴⁰

- (1) In circumstances such as those described in n. 2.
- (2) Girl minors when fatherless may be given in marriage by their mother or brothers. But unlike the marriage of a minor arranged by her father (cf. Deut. XXII, 16), the marriage of a minor arranged by her mother or brothers has validity only in Rabbinic law, but not in Biblical law. Therefore the minor has the right of declaring מִיֵּאָוֵן or a 'Refusal' to live with the husband given her, and thereby annulling her marriage without the formalities of a regular divorce; cf. Yeb. XIII, 1ff. Now, if two brothers were married to two sisters, one of age and the other a minor given in marriage by her mother or brothers, and the husband of the older sister died without issue, then the husband of the minor is bound by Biblical law to marry the minor's sister. Therefore the continuation of the minor as his wife under merely Rabbinical law now comes within the Biblical prohibition of marrying two sisters (cf. IV, 9, n. 5; V, 5, n. 9). In such a case the child-wife is persuaded to declare מִיֵּאָוֵן thus enabling her husband to perform by her sister the duty of levirate marriage. This testimony accords with the opinion of R. Eliezer, Yeb. XIII, 7. Another such case may arise in the circumstances described in Yeb. XIII, 11.
- (3) Who testifies to the death of her husband; cf. VIII. 5; Yeb. XVI, 7.
- (4) Under the law of Ex. XXI, 28, although that law specifies only an ox causing death by goring.
- (5) It put out the brain of a child by pecking it with its beak.
- (6) But under forty days it is not permitted; cf. B.B. 97a.
- (7) As late as the fourth hour of the day. This happened during a siege of Jerusalem by the Syrian Greeks, when one day no lamb could be obtained for the morning sacrifice till the fourth hour.
- (8) Bablia, 8 miles S. of Zidon.
- (9) A whole limb, even when less than the size of an olive; cf. III, 1, n. 4.
- (10) It confers 'tent' uncleanness, i.e., by being under the same roof-space; cf. I, 7, n. 1.
- (11) קַל וְחוֹמֵר.
- (12) Of R. Eliezer. He refutes the proposition that the dead is more unclean than the living.
- (13) When he has an issue.
- (14) However many articles there may be under him, one below the other, they all receive an equal degree of defilement through the pressure of the man's body (מִדְרָם); cf. I, 11, n. 10.
- (15) Cf. Lev. XV, 4' 6.
- (16) Whatever the number of articles, one above the other.
- (17) מִדְּפֵי . Unlike defilement by body-pressure (מִדְרָם), defilement through a non-contiguous medium can be transmitted only to food and drink, but not to man and utensils.
- (18) For corpse defilement diminishes in strength as it passes from one article to another; cf. II, 1, nn. 3, 4.
- (19) Just like a whole limb severed from a living man (cf. supra 2; Oh. I, 7), it defiles one who touches or carries it, or is under the same roof-space; cf. infra.
- (20) Only by touching or carrying; cf. Oh. II, 3.
- (21) Cf. Oh. II, 1.
- (22) The argument is fallacious, since according to your opinion the defilement of a corpse is greater than that of a living man.
- (23) Supra, together with R. Joshua against R. Nehunia.
- (24) Supra, together with R. Joshua against R. Eliezer.
- (25) Both an olive's quantity of flesh severed from a living man, and a barley-grain's quantity of bone severed from a living man.
- (26) An olive's quantity of flesh from a carcass and a lentil's quantity of flesh from creeping things cause defilement, but their bones do not cause defilement in any quantity.
- (27) From a living man; or, according to R. Joshua and R. Nehunia, also from a corpse.
- (28) Cf. Kel. II, 5.
- (29) It defiles by touching and carrying, though not by being under the same roof. space; cf. Kel. loc. cit.
- (30) It is no longer counted a limb.
- (31) With flesh, sinew, and bone.
- (32) From a corpse.
- (33) Cf. I, 7, n. 4.
- (34) For defilement by touching and carrying, a quantity of a barley-grain is sufficient.
- (35) E.g., in the case of an abortion; cf. Hul. 89b.

(36) Cf. I, 7, n. 3.

(37) They defile by being under the same roof-space; cf. I, 7, n. 5.

(38) A majority of the body's bones.

(39) A large spoonful (or two handfuls) of decayed matter of a corpse, which was buried naked in a closed marble coffin, causes defilement by carrying and by being under the same roof-space, but not by touching; cf. Oh. II, 1.

(40) Therefore a living man has less power of defilement than a corpse.

Mishna - Mas. Eduyyot Chapter 7

MISHNAH 1. R.¹ JOSHUA AND R. SADOK TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE REDEMPTION-LAMB OF THE FIRSTLING OF AN ASS,² THAT IF IT DIED³ THE PRIEST HAS NO CLAIM THEREIN,⁴ WHEREAS R. ELIEZER SAYS: THE OWNER MUST BEAR THE RESPONSIBILITY AS WITH THE FIVE SELA'S⁵ [IN THE CASE] OF A [FIRSTBORN] SON. BUT THE SAGES SAY: HE BEARS NO RESPONSIBILITY ANY MORE THAN IN THE CASE OF THE REDEMPTION OF SECOND TITHES.⁶

MISHNAH 2. R.⁷ ZADOK TESTIFIED CONCERNING BRINE OF UNCLEAN⁸ LOCUSTS THAT IT IS CLEAN,⁹ WHEREAS THE FIRST MISHNAH [SAID]:¹⁰ UNCLEAN LOCUSTS THAT HAVE BEEN PRESERVED TOGETHER WITH CLEAN LOCUSTS DO NOT MAKE THEIR¹¹ BRINE UNFIT.

MISHNAH 3. R.¹² ZADOK TESTIFIED CONCERNING FLOWING¹³ WATER WHICH EXCEEDED IN QUANTITY DRIPPING¹⁴ WATER; THAT IT WAS VALID. THERE WAS SUCH A CASE AT BIRATH HAPALIYYA,¹⁵ AND WHEN THE CASE CAME BEFORE THE SAGES THEY DECLARED IT VALID.

MISHNAH 4. R. ZADOK TESTIFIED CONCERNING FLOWING WATER WHICH WAS MADE TO RUN IN A STREAM THROUGH NUT-LEAVES,¹⁶ THAT IT WAS VALID.¹⁷ THERE WAS SUCH A CASE AT AHALIYYA,¹⁸ AND WHEN THE CASE CAME BEFORE [THE SAGES IN] THE CHAMBER OF HEWN STONE¹⁹ THEY DECLARED IT VALID.

MISHNAH 5. R.²⁰ JOSHUA AND R. YAKIM, A MAN OF HADAR,²¹ TESTIFIED CONCERNING A JAR,²² WITH ASHES OF PURIFICATION²³ WHICH WAS PUT OVER A CREEPING THING, THAT THEY²⁴ WERE UNCLEAN, WHEREAS R. ELIEZER HAD PRONOUNCED THEM CLEAN. R.²⁵ PAPIAS TESTIFIED CONCERNING ONE WHO HAD VOWED TWO NAZIRITESHIPS,²⁶ THAT IF HE CUT HIS HAIR²⁷ AFTER THE FIRST ONE ON THE THIRTIETH DAY, HE COULD CUT HIS HAIR AFTER THE SECOND ONE ON THE SIXTIETH²⁸ DAY, THOUGH IF HE CUT HIS HAIR ON THE FIFTY-NINTH DAY HE HAS ALSO DISCHARGED HIS DUTY, FOR THE THIRTIETH DAY IS CREDITED TO HIM TOWARDS THE REQUIRED NUMBER.²⁹

MISHNAH 6. R.³⁰ JOSHUA AND R. PAPIAS TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE YOUNG OF A PEACE-OFFERING, THAT IT COULD BE BROUGHT AS A PEACE-OFFERING,³¹ WHEREAS R. ELIEZER SAYS THAT THE YOUNG OF A PEACE-OFFERING COULD NOT BE BROUGHT AS A PEACE-OFFERING.³² BUT THE SAGES SAY: IT MAY BE BROUGHT. R. PAPIAS SAID: I TESTIFY THAT WE HAD A COW, A PEACE-OFFERING, AND WE ATE IT AS PASSOVER, AND ITS YOUNG WE ATE AS A PEACE-OFFERING AT THE [NEXT] FESTIVAL.³³

MISHNAH 7. THE SAME³⁴ TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE BOARDS³⁵ OF BAKERS, THAT THEY ARE [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN, WHEREAS R. ELIEZER DECLARES THEM NOT³⁶ [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN. THE SAME³⁷ TESTIFIED CONCERNING

AN OVEN³⁸ WHICH WAS CUT INTO RINGS AND SAND WAS PUT BETWEEN ONE RING AND THE OTHER RING,³⁹ THAT IT IS [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN,⁴⁰ WHEREAS R. ELIEZER DECLARES IT NOT [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN.⁴¹ THE SAME TESTIFIED THAT THE YEAR MAY BE INTERCALATED⁴² THROUGHOUT THE WHOLE OF ADAR,⁴³ WHEREAS THEY USED TO SAY: ONLY TILL PURIM.⁴⁴ THE SAME TESTIFIED THAT THE YEAR MAY BE INTERCALATED⁴⁵ CONDITIONALLY. THERE WAS SUCH A CASE WITH RABBAN GAMALIEL WHO WENT TO TAKE AUTHORISATION FROM THE GOVERNOR IN SYRIA AND HE DELAYED IN COMING BACK; AND THEY INTERCALATED THE YEAR ON CONDITION THAT RABBAN GAMALIEL SHOULD APPROVE; AND WHEN HE CAME BACK HE SAID: I APPROVE, AND THE YEAR WAS THEREBY DULY INTERCALATED.

MISHNAH 8. MENAHEM B. SIGNA⁴⁶ TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE LEDGE⁴⁷ ATTACHED TO AN OLIVE-BOILER'S CAULDRON, THAT IT IS [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN; AND CONCERNING THAT OF DYERS,⁴⁸ THAT IT IS NOT [LIABLE TO BECOME] UNCLEAN, WHEREAS THEY USED TO SAY: THE RULE IS THE REVERSE.⁴⁹

MISHNAH 9. R. NEHUNIA⁵⁰ THE SON OF GUDGADA TESTIFIED CONCERNING A DEAF-MUTE WHOSE FATHER HAD GIVEN HER IN MARRIAGE,⁵¹ THAT SHE COULD BE PUT AWAY WITH A BILL OF DIVORCEMENT;⁵² AND CONCERNING A MINOR, DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE⁵³ AND MARRIED⁵⁴ TO A PRIEST, THAT SHE MIGHT EAT TERUMAH,⁵⁵ AND IF SHE DIED HER HUSBAND INHERITED FROM HER; AND CONCERNING A STOLEN BEAM THAT HAD BEEN BUILT INTO A PALACE,⁵⁶ THAT IT MIGHT BE RESTORED BY THE PAYMENT OF ITS VALUE;⁵⁷ AND CONCERNING A SIN-OFFERING THAT HAD BEEN STOLEN, AND THIS WAS NOT KNOWN TO MANY,⁵⁸ THAT IT MADE DUE ATONEMENT⁵⁹ BECAUSE OF THE WELFARE OF THE ALTAR.⁶⁰

(1) Cf. Bek. I, 6.

(2) Cf. Ex. Xlii, 13.

(3) After it was designated for the redemption, and before it was presented to the priest.

(4) The owner may hand over to the priest the dead lamb, but is not bound to give him another lamb.

(5) The redemption money of the first born son; cf. Ex. loc. cit.; and Num. III, 47. If the father set aside this redemption money and it was lost, he has to find other money; cf. Bek. VIII, 8.

(6) If the tithes were exchanged for money and the money lost, the owner is not bound to make it good.

(7) Cf. Ter. X, 9.

(8) I.e., prohibited as food; cf. Lev. XI, 20.

(9) And may be eaten.

(10) V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 263, n. 7.

(11) Of the clean locusts. R. zadok adds that one may even eat the brine of the prohibited locusts themselves.

(12) Cf. Mik. V., 4.

(13) I.e., from a running river or stream.

(14) Rainwater, or, according to Maimonides, water dropping intermittently from a high spring. Mik. loc. cit. lays down that flowing water is counted like 'living water' of a spring, and can be used in the preparation of the Waters of Purification (Num. XIX, 17), the cleansing of a man who had an issue (Lev. XV, 13), and for a ritual bath in any quantity; while dripping water may not be used as Water of Purification, or for the cleansing of a man who had an issue, and if used as a ritual bath it must have no less than forty se'ahs in quantity (cf. I, 3, n. 7). If, then, in a mixture of these two kinds of water, the flowing water is more in quantity than the dripping water, the whole mixture is deemed 'living water'.

(15) [Birfilia, about six miles E. of Ramala (Horowitz, Palestine, p. 118).]

(16) Its flow was directed to a particular spot by means of a channel made of the wide leaves of a walnut tree.

(17) It retains the character of flowing water for the purposes mentioned p. 42, n. 14, and is not deemed to have passed through a receptacle (מַיִם שְׂאוּבֵיךְ ; cf. I, 3) by running through the channel of leaves.

(18) [Horowitz, op. cit., p. 22, identifies it with Bait Ilu, near Jerusalem.]

- (19) V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 205, n. 5.
- (20) Cf. Par. X, 3.
- (21) [Cannot be identified.]
- (22) Of earthenware.
- (23) Cf. Num. XIX, 9, 17.
- (24) The ashes, since they can no longer be said to have been kept in a 'clean Place', Num. loc. cit. The jar itself remains clean, because an earthenware vessel does not contract uncleanness by outward contact; cf. Kel. II, 1.
- (25) Cf. Naz. III, 2.
- (26) Each of which is normally of a duration of thirty days; cf. IV, 12, n. 7,
- (27) In accordance with Num. VI, 18. He should really have waited till the full completion of the thirty days, viz. till the thirty-first day.
- (28) Which forms an interval of full thirty days since the last cutting of his hair.
- (29) Of both periods of thirty days.
- (30) Cf. Tem. III, 1.
- (31) It is itself also holy like its dam, and cannot be put to common use.
- (32) But it should be allowed to starve to death. R. Eliezer holds that permission to offer the young may lead people to delay the sacrificing of an animal as peace offering until it gives birth to its young, and this would involve a transgression of the command of Deut. XXIII, 22.
- (33) בִּהַג viz., on the Feast of Weeks. Raba (R.H. 6a) renders בִּהַג according to its usual meaning of the Feast of Tabernacles, and assumes that owing to illness the young animal could not be offered on the intervening Feast of Weeks.
- (34) Cf. Kel. XV, 2.
- (35) On which the unbaked loaves are placed to allow them to rise; or, according to others, on which the dough is rolled.
- (36) They are not considered 'utensils', because they are flat. But all the Sages agree that baking boards for ordinary household use are not liable to uncleanness. [Because unlike those of the bakers they are put to all kinds of use (Raabad).]
- (37) Cf. Kel. V, 10.
- (38) Of earthenware, and without a bottom; cf. II, 8, n. 1.
- (39) To prevent the rings adhering to one another. The whole was plastered over on the outside to keep the cut parts together.
- (40) The plasterings makes it whole again.
- (41) It is deemed a broken 'utensil'
- (42) By the addition of a second month, viz. a second Adar; v. Sanh. 12b'
- (43) Until the twenty-ninth of Adar.
- (44) The fourteenth of Adar, when it is customary to begin the public exposition of the laws of the Passover.
- (45) By the Sanhedrin, subject to the approval of the President, with whom the final decision rests; v. Sanh. 11a (Sonc. ed.) p. 47.
- (46) [Or. 'of Signai'. a village in Judea (Buchler, De, gal. 'Am-h. 79. n. 1.)].
- (47) Of earthenware, to prevent the boiling liquid in the metal cauldron from running over. The ledge is therefore a necessary part of the cauldron; cf. Kel. V, 5.
- (48) Dyers are careful not to allow the boiling dye to rise to the earthenware ledge, for fear the dye may become soiled. Therefore the ledge is not really needed for their cauldron.
- (49) It was thought that dyers had greater need of the ledge to prevent the boiling dye from running over, since the dye was more valuable than the liquid of olive-boilers.
- (50) Cf. Git. V, 5; Yeb. XIV, 2.
- (51) While still a minor; cf. VI, 1, n. 2.
- (52) Although she is legally an imbecile, she can be divorced according to Biblical law without her consent.
- (53) A non-priest who is dead.
- (54) By her mother or brothers, although the marriage is valid according to Rabbinical law only; cf. VI, 1, n. 2.
- (55) But only such as is terumah in Rabbinic law alone, but she may not eat what is terumah in Biblical law, which does not recognize her as the priest's wife.
- (56) Or any building.
- (57) The owner of the beam cannot insist on the restoration of the beam itself. This rule was ordained 'for the benefit of the penitent' (Git. loc. cit.) to make the sinner's path of repentance easy.

(58) Three persons.

(59) The thief need not bring another sin-offering, and the priests who ate of its flesh did not commit a sin unwittingly.

(60) The priests might refuse to sacrifice the offering of a man who was unknown to them, from fear that the animal was stolen, and the altar would thus suffer loss.

Mishna - Mas. Eduyyot Chapter 8

MISHNAH 1. R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE BLOOD OF CARCASSES THAT IT WAS CLEAN.¹ R. SIMEON B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE ASHES OF PURIFICATION,² THAT IF A DEFILED PERSON HAD TOUCHED PART THEREOF HE HAD DEFILED THE WHOLE OF THEM.³ R. AKIBA ADDED IN REGARD TO THE FINE FLOUR,⁴ THE INCENSE, THE FRANKINCENSE, AND THE COALS,⁵ THAT IF A TEBUL. YOM⁶ HAD TOUCHED PART THEREOF HE HAD MADE THE WHOLE OF THEM UNFIT.⁷

MISHNAH 2. R. JUDAH B. BABA AND R. JUDAH THE PRIEST TESTIFIED CONCERNING A MINOR,⁸ THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE AND MARRIED TO A PRIEST, THAT SHE COULD EAT TERUMAH AS SOON AS SHE ENTERED THE BRIDAL CHAMBER EVEN THOUGH SHE HAD NO MARITAL INTERCOURSE. R. JOSE THE PRIEST AND R. ZECHARIAH B. HA-KAZZAB TESTIFIED CONCERNING A YOUNG GIRL WHO HAD BEEN GIVEN AS A SECURITY⁹ IN ASHKELON, AND WHOM THE MEMBERS OF HER FAMILY¹⁰ HAD PUT AWAY,¹¹ THOUGH HER WITNESSES¹² TESTIFIED FOR HER THAT SHE HAD NOT SECLUDED HERSELF¹³ [WITH ANY MAN] AND THAT SHE HAD NOT BEEN DEFILED; THAT THE SAGES SAID TO THEM: IF YOU BELIEVE THAT SHE WAS GIVEN AS A SECURITY, BELIEVE ALSO THAT SHE DID NOT SECLUDE HERSELF [WITH ANY MAN] AND THAT SHE WAS NOT DEFILED; AND IF YOU DO NOT BELIEVE THAT SHE DID NOT SECLUDE HERSELF AND THAT SHE WAS NOT DEFILED, NEITHER BELIEVE THAT SHE WAS GIVEN AS A SECURITY.

MISHNAH 3. R. JOSHUA AND R. JUDAH THE SON OF BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE WIDOW OF [A MAN

BELONGING TO] A FAMILY OF DOUBTFUL PURITY,¹⁴ THAT SHE WAS FIT TO MARRY INTO THE PRIESTHOOD, SINCE A FAMILY OF DOUBTFUL PURITY WAS FIT TO DECLARE WHO¹⁵ WAS UNCLEAN¹⁶ AND WHO¹⁵ CLEAN,¹⁶ WHO WAS TO BE PUT AWAY¹⁷ AND WHO¹⁵ WAS TO BE BROUGHT NEAR.¹⁷ RABBAN GAMALIEL SAID: WE ACCEPT YOUR TESTIMONY, BUT WHAT CAN WE DO SINCE RABBAN JOHANAN B. ZAKKAI ORDAINED THAT COURTS SHOULD NOT BE COMMISSIONED FOR THIS PURPOSE?¹⁸ THE PRIESTS WOULD LISTEN TO YOU CONCERNING THOSE WHO MIGHT BE PUT AWAY, BUT NOT CONCERNING THOSE WHO MIGHT BE BROUGHT NEAR!¹⁹

MISHNAH 4. R.²⁰ JOSE B. JO'EZER, A MAN OF ZEREDA,²¹ TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE AYIL²² -LOCUST, THAT IT IS CLEAN; AND CONCERNING LIQUID²³ IN THE SLAUGHTER-HOUSE,²⁴ THAT IT IS CLEAN, AND THAT ONE WHO TOUCHES A CORPSE IS UNCLEAN.²⁵ AND THEY CALLED HIM 'JOSE THE PERMITTER'.

MISHNAH 5. R. AKIBA TESTIFIED IN THE NAME OF NEHEMIAH, A MAN OF BETH DELI,²⁶ THAT A WOMAN IS ALLOWED TO RE-MARRY ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS.²⁷ R. JOSHUA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BONES²⁸ FOUND IN THE WOOD-SHED²⁹ [THAT THEY WERE UNCLEAN].³⁰ THAT THE SAGES SAID: ONE MAY GATHER THEM UP, BONE BY BONE,³¹ AND ALL IS CLEAN.³²

MISHNAH 6. R. ELIEZER SAID:³³ I HAVE HEARD THAT WHEN THEY BUILT THE TEMPLE³⁴ THEY MADE HANGINGS FOR THE TEMPLE AND HANGINGS FOR THE TEMPLE-COURTS; BUT IN THE CASE OF THE TEMPLE THEY BUILT³⁵ FROM THE OUTSIDE,³⁶ AND IN THE CASE OF THE TEMPLE-COURT THEY BUILT FROM THE INSIDE. R. JOSHUA SAID: I HAVE HEARD THAT SACRIFICES MAY BE OFFERED EVEN THOUGH THERE IS NO TEMPLE, AND THAT THE MOST HOLY SACRIFICES³⁷ MAY BE EATEN EVEN THOUGH THERE ARE NO HANGINGS, AND THE LESSER HOLY SACRIFICES³⁸ AND SECOND TITHES EVEN THOUGH THERE IS NO WALL,³⁹ BECAUSE THE FIRST SANCTIFICATION⁴⁰ WAS VALID BOTH FOR ITS OWN TIME AND FOR THE TIME HEREAFTER.

MISHNAH 7. R. JOSHUA SAID: I HAVE RECEIVED A TRADITION FROM RABBAN JOHANAN B. ZAKKAI, WHO HEARD IT FROM HIS TEACHER, AND HIS TEACHER [HEARD IT] FROM HIS TEACHER, AS A HALACHAH [GIVEN] TO MOSES FROM SINAI,⁴¹ THAT ELIJAH⁴² WILL NOT COME TO PRONOUNCE UNCLEAN OR TO PRONOUNCE CLEAN, TO PUT AWAY OR TO BRING NEAR,⁴³ BUT TO PUT AWAY THOSE BROUGHT NEAR BY FORCE AND TO BRING NEAR THOSE PUT AWAY BY FORCE. THE FAMILY OF BETH ZEREPAH⁴⁴ WAS ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE JORDAN. AND BEN ZION⁴⁵ PUT IT AWAY BY FORCE; AND YET ANOTHER FAMILY⁴⁶ WAS THERE, AND BEN ZION BROUGHT IT NEAR BY FORCE. SUCH LIKE ELIJAH WILL COME TO PRONOUNCE UNCLEAN OR TO PRONOUNCE CLEAN, TO PUT AWAY OR TO BRING NEAR. R. JUDAH SAYS: TO BRING NEAR, BUT NOT TO PUT AWAY.⁴⁷ R. SIMEON SAYS: TO CONCILIATE DISPUTATIONS.⁴⁸ AND THE SAGES SAY NEITHER TO PUT AWAY NOR TO BRING NEAR, BUT TO MAKE PEACE IN THE WORLD,⁴⁹ FOR IT IS SAID,⁵⁰ BEHOLD I SEND TO YOU ELIJAH THE PROPHET, ETC., AND HE SHALL TURN THE HEART OF THE FATHERS TO THE CHILDREN AND THE HEART OF THE CHILDREN TO THEIR FATHERS.

Mishna - Mas. Avoth Chapter 1

MISHNAH 1. MOSES RECEIVED THE TORAH¹ AT² SINAI AND TRANSMITTED IT TO JOSHUA,³ JOSHUA TO THE ELDERS,⁴ AND THE ELDERS TO THE PROPHETS, AND THE PROPHETS TO THE MEN OF THE GREAT SYNAGOGUE.⁵

THE LATTER USED TO SAY THREE THINGS:⁶ BE PATIENT IN [THE ADMINISTRATION OF] JUSTICE, REAR MANY DISCIPLES AND MAKE A FENCE ROUND THE TORAH.⁷

MISHNAH 2. SIMEON THE RIGHTEOUS⁸ WAS ONE OF THE LAST OF THE MEN OF THE GREAT SYNAGOGUE. HE USED TO SAY: THE WORLD IS BASED UPON THREE THINGS: THE TORAH, DIVINE SERVICE, AND THE PRACTICE OF KINDLINESS.⁹

MISHNAH 3. ANTIGONUS¹⁰ (A MAN) OF SOCHO¹¹ RECEIVED [THE ORAL TRADITION] FROM SIMEON THE RIGHTEOUS. HE USED TO SAY: BE NOT LIKE UNTO SERVANTS WHO SERVE THE MASTER IN THE EXPECTATION OF RECEIVING A GRATUITY,¹² BUT BE LIKE UNTO SERVANTS WHO SERVE THE MASTER WITHOUT THE EXPECTATION OF RECEIVING A GRATUITY, AND LET THE FEAR OF HEAVEN¹³ BE UPON YOU.¹⁴

MISHNAH 4. JOSE¹⁵ B. JO'EZER (A MAN) OF ZEREDAH,¹⁶ AND JOSE B. JOHANAN [A MAN] OF JERUSALEM RECEIVED [THE ORAL TRADITION] FROM THEM [I.E. SIMEON THE RIGHTEOUS AND ANTIGONUS].

JOSE. B. JO'EZER¹⁷ USED TO SAY: LET THY HOUSE BE A HOUSE OF MEETING FOR THE SAGES AND SUFFER THYSELF TO BE COVERED BY THE DUST OF THEIR FEET,¹⁸ AND DRINK IN THEIR WORDS WITH THIRST.

MISHNAH 5. JOSE B. JOHANAN (A MAN) OF JERUSALEM USED TO SAY: LET THY HOUSE BE WIDE OPEN, AND LET THE POOR BE MEMBERS OF THY HOUSEHOLD,¹⁹ ENGAGE NOT IN TOO MUCH CONVERSATION WITH WOMEN. THEY²⁰ SAID THIS WITH REGARD TO ONE'S OWN WIFE, HOW MUCH MORE [DOES THE RULE APPLY] WITH REGARD TO ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. HENCE HAVE THE SAGES SAID:²¹ AS LONG AS A MAN²² ENGAGES IN TOO MUCH CONVERSATION WITH WOMEN, HE CAUSES EVIL TO HIMSELF, [FOR] HE GOES IDLE FROM [THE STUDY OF] THE WORDS OF THE TORAH, SO THAT HIS END WILL BE THAT HE WILL INHERIT GEHINNOM.²³

MISHNAH 6. JOSHUA B. PERAHIAH²⁴ AND NITTAI²⁵ THE ARBELITE²⁶ RECEIVED [THE ORAL TRADITION] FROM THEM [I.E. THE FOREGOING].

JOSHUA B. PERAHIAH USED TO SAY: APPOINT FOR THYSELF A TEACHER²⁷ AND ACQUIRE FOR THYSELF A COMPANION²⁸ AND JUDGE ALL MEN IN THE SCALE OF MERIT.²⁹

MISHNAH 7. NITTAI THE ARBELITE USED TO SAY: KEEP AT A DISTANCE³⁰ FROM AN EVIL NEIGHBOUR, DO NOT MAKE THYSELF AN ASSOCIATE OF A WICKED MAN,³¹ NEITHER DO THOU ABANDON FAITH IN [DIVINE] RETRIBUTION.³²

MISHNAH 8. JUDAH B. TABBAI AND SIMEON B. SHETAH³³ RECEIVED [THE ORAL TRADITION] FROM THEM [I.E. THE FOREGOING].

JUDAH B. TABBAI SAID: DO THOU NOT [AS-A JUDGE] PLAY THE PART OF AN ADVOCATE;³⁴ WHILST THEY [I. E. THE PARTIES IN A LAWSUIT] ARE STANDING

BEFORE THEE, LET THEM BE REGARDED BY THEE AS IF THEY WERE [BOTH OF THEM] GUILTY, AND WHEN THEY LEAVE THY PRESENCE, [AFTER] HAVING SUBMITTED TO THE JUDGMENT³⁵ LET THEM BE REGARDED BY THEE AS IF THEY WERE [BOTH OF THEM] GUILTLESS.

MISHNAH 9. SIMEON B. SHETAI³⁶ USED TO SAY: BE THOROUGH IN THE INTERROGATION OF WITNESSES, AND BE CAREFUL IN THY WORDS, LEST FROM THEM [I. E. FROM YOUR WORDS] THEY LEARN TO UTTER FALSEHOOD.³⁷

MISHNAH 10. SHEMAIAH AND ABTALION³⁸ RECEIVED [THE ORAL TRADITION] FROM THEM [I.E. THE FOREGOING]. SHEMAIAH USED TO SAY: LOVE WORK, HATE ACTING THE SUPERIOR, AND DO NOT BRING THYSELF TO THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE RULING AUTHORITY.

MISHNAH 11. ABTALION USED TO SAY: YE SAGES BE CAREFUL WITH YOUR WORDS,³⁹ LEST YE BE CONDEMNED TO EXILE,⁴⁰ AND YE BE EXILED TO A PLACE OF EVIL WATERS,⁴¹ AND THE DISCIPLES WHO FOLLOW YOU⁴² DRINK AND DIE,⁴³ WITH THE RESULT THAT THE NAME OF HEAVEN BECOMES PROFANED.⁴⁴

MISHNAH 12. HILLEL AND SHAMMAI⁴⁵ RECEIVED [THE ORAL TRADITION] FROM THEM [I.E. THE FOREGOING].

HILLEL USED TO SAY: BE THOU OF THE DISCIPLES OF AARON, LOVING PEACE AND PURSUING PEACE,⁴⁶ [BE THOU⁴⁷] ONE WHO LOVETH [ONE'S FELLOW.] CREATURES AND BRINGETH THEM NIGH TO THE TORAH.

MISHNAH 13. HE [ALSO] USED TO SAY: A NAME THAT IS WIDESPREAD LOSES ITS FAME; ONE WHO DOES NOT ADD [TO HIS KNOWLEDGE] CAUSES [IT] TO CEASE;⁴⁸ WHOEVER DOES NOT STUDY⁴⁹ [THE TORAH] DESERVES DEATH; WHOEVER MAKES [UNWORTHY] USE OF THE CROWN⁵⁰ [OF LEARNING] PASSETH AWAY.

MISHNAH 14. HE [ALSO] USED TO SAY: IF I AM NOT FOR MYSELF, WHO IS FOR ME, BUT IF I AM FOR MY OWN SELF [ONLY],⁵¹ WHAT AM I, AND IF NOT NOW, WHEN?⁵²

MISHNAH 15. SHAMMAI USED TO SAY: MAKE THY [STUDY OF THE] TORAH [A MATTER OF] ESTABLISHED [REGULARITY];⁵³ SPEAK LITTLE, BUT DO MUCH; AND RECEIVE ALL MEN WITH A PLEASANT COUNTENANCE.⁵⁴

MISHNAH 16. RABBAN GAMALIEL⁵⁵ USED TO SAY: APPOINT A TEACHER FOR THYSELF AND AVOID DOUBT,⁵⁶ AND MAKE NOT A HABIT OF TITHING BY GUESSWORK.⁵⁷

MISHNAH 17. SIMEON, HIS SON,⁵⁸ USED TO SAY: ALL MY DAYS I GREW UP AMONG THE SAGES, AND I HAVE FOUND NOTHING BETTER FOR A PERSON⁵⁹ THAN SILENCE. STUDY IS NOT THE MOST IMPORTANT THING, BUT DEED; WHOEVER INDULGES IN TOO MANY WORDS BRINGS ABOUT SIN.⁶⁰

MISHNAH 18. RABBAN SIMEON, SON OF GAMALIEL⁶¹ USED TO SAY: ON THREE THINGS DOES THE WORLD STAND.⁶² ON JUSTICE, ON TRUTH AND ON PEACE, AS IT IS SAID: JUDGE YE TRUTHFULLY AND A JUDGMENT OF PEACE IN YOUR GATES.⁶³

(1) Scripture and its complementary Oral Instruction, with special reference to the latter.

(2) Lit., 'from'.

(3) IARN, Ch. I, 'Joshua received from Moses'. The transmission and reception were done orally. All evidence goes to show that there was a continuous succession of 'schools' headed by the Elders, prophets and scribes of their respective generations, which maintained and developed the theoretical study and practical application of the Torah. For a full examination of the terms מוֹסֵר (transmitted) and קִבֵּל (received) v. Bacher, Tradition und Tradenten, p. 1.

(4) The Elders that outlived Joshua, Judges II, 7. 'Elders' in this Mishnah includes the Judges.

(5) Keneseth hagedolah: A body of 120 men founded by the leaders of the Jews who returned from the Babylonian captivity.

(6) Whereby reverence for, the knowledge of, and the inviolability of the Torah might be secured (cf. Rashi).

(7) The Torah is conceived as a garden and its precepts as precious plants. Such a garden is fenced round for the purpose of obviating wilful or even unintended damage. Likewise, the precepts of the Torah were to be 'fenced' round with additional inhibitions that should have the effect of preserving the original commandments from trespass.

(8) Son of Onias. According to the older authorities, also Frankel, Graetz and Halevy, it was Simeon b. Onias I (ca. 300 B.C.E.) referred to in Sirach, Ch. L, and Josephus Ant. XII, 2, 5; 4, 1. Others (e.g. Krochmal, Brull) say it was Simeon b. Onias II (219-199 B.C.E.). Halevy says it could not have been the latter, as he could not have been designated ha-Zaddik (the Righteous), and that, in fact, the elder Simeon b. Onias (I) was not so designated until later times, when it became necessary to distinguish the worthy grandfather from the unworthy grandson.

(9) Some commentators cite Ps. LXXXIX, 3 עוֹלָם חֶסֶד יִבְנֶה (the usual translation of which is forever is Mercy built) taking עוֹלָם as meaning world, and rendering the world is built on kindness. גְּמִילוּת חֶסֶדִים is enumerated in another old Mishnah (Pe'ah I, 1) among 'the things the fruits of which a man enjoys in this world, while the stock remains intact for him for the world to come'.

(10) The first noted Jew known to have had a Greek name. First half of the third century B.C.E.

(11) Josh. XV, 35. I Sam. XVII, 1.

(12) 'Gratuity' rather than 'reward' (for which שֶׂכֶר would have been used and not פְּרָם) since a servant may rightly and without reproach expect and accept his wage (v. M.).

(13) The term was used before the Persian and Greek periods (Marmorstein, A., The Old Rabbinic Doctrine of God, p. 14 and pp. 105-6), as against the view that 'Heaven' for God, in Jewish literature is an expression derived from the Greek, as Bousset, Die Religion des Judentums, p. 359, n. 3).

(14) 'Antigonus' trilogy was directed against Epicurean teachings; the first and second sayings against the eudaemonist doctrine that all action, even specifically moral action, should be undertaken for the purpose of creating happiness for oneself; the third, against the Epicurean doctrine that whereas there are gods, these gods do not concern themselves with the doings of men,' (Frankel, op. cit. pp. 8-9).

(15) Short form of Joseph.

(16) I Kings XI, 26.

(17) Called Hasid shebikheunnah, 'the most saintly man in the Priesthood'. Hag. II, 7.

(18) Either: let the dust of the feet of the Sages, as they walk, cover you (i.e., follow them closely), or, sit in the dust (on the ground) at their feet whilst they teach. The two Jose's were the first of the Zugoth, GR. 'pairs' of scholars (one a Nasi, Prince, President, Patriarch; the other Ab-Beth-din, Father of the Court) referred to in Pe'ah II, 6 (as Zugoth) and Hag. II, 2 (by their names as here). How did the Zugoth arise? Weiss, op. cit. p. 103: it is a reversion to an earlier practice, the first sign of which (v. ob. p. 35) is the dual appointment in II Chron. XIX, 5-11. Bacher, op. cit. p. 48 ff. points out that there were Zugoth from Moses onwards. Frankel, op. cit., p. 32: When Hellenistic High Priests rose to power and became a menace to Judaism, it was felt that two leaders would be able to cope with the situation better than one. Halevy, op. cit., p. 199: Simeon the Righteous was succeeded by his brother Eleazar, as High Priest, but not as Head of Sanhedrin. This dignity devolved on Antigonus who was followed by Jose b. Johanan. Eleazar was followed (in the High Priesthood) by Onias II (another son of Simeon the Righteous) who handed over the civil power to the Tobiads. The latter disregarded the Sanhedrin and, exercising a powerful influence over the court of the King of Egypt, carried on in a high-handed way. The Sanhedrin then found it necessary to appoint, in addition to the Ab-Beth-din, a Nasi who should represent the Sanhedrin vis-a-vis the people, and as first Nasi they appointed Jose ben Jo'ezer, a younger disciple of Antigonus, who was both a scholar and of eminent priestly descent.

(19) Either: treat the poor as members of your own family or, employ poor men (rather than slaves) as servants (so Rashi and Maim.). The commentary Ez Joseph renders: 'let the members of thy family be poor', i.e. content themselves with poorer fare, so that you may be able to keep an open door and hospitable table for strangers.

- (20) What follows is the addition of the Redactor of the Mishnah. Herford, p. 24 reads אָמַר 'He (Jose) said it.'
- (21) The term מִכַּאֲן אָמְרוּ חֲכָמִים points to an ancient Mishnah. (Frankel, op. cit., p. 305.) For a full examination of the term see Bacher, op. cit. p. 160 and p. 171 ff.
- (22) The P. B. version has 'whoever'.
- (23) V. infra V, 20, notes.
- (24) According to Sotah 470 (ed. Amsterdam), also MS. Brit. Mus. Or. 1389 (a collection of Haggadic writings) fol. 158a, line 28 ff, he fled to Alexandria owing to Sadducee hostility but was recalled later by Simeon b. Shetah (v. Mish. 8) when 'peace' was restored. But J. Hag. 77d reports this of Judah b. Tabbai.
- (25) נְתַאי or נְתִי, J. Hag. 76d has מַתִּי Mattai.
- (26) Arbel. Hosea XI, 14. In Galilee, v. I Mace. IX, 2.
- (27) Cf. Mish. 16. II ARN, Ch. XVIII. רַב לְחַכְמָה, explained as a master to supply one with knowledge already existing.
- (28) II ARN, ibid. חֵבֵר לְמִשְׁנָה, explained as a companion for studying together, so that one may be able to note what the other misses, or to supply information not known to the other.
- (29) Frankel, op. cit. p. 35, says Joshua b. Perahiah said this when John Hyrcanus was still with the Pharisees, with whom he later broke after Eleazar b. Po'irah made mischief over the demand made by the Pharisees, that John Hyrcanus should content himself with the crown, and relinquish the High Priesthood, for which, they said, he was unfit on account of his mother having been (as they alleged) once taken captive at Modin. The allegation was disproved and the king turned against the Pharisees. (Sotah 47a. Frankel and Weiss take יְנָאִי there to be John Hyrcanus rather than Alexander Jannaeus.) II ARN attributes the sayings given here as Joshua b. Perahiah's to Nittai.
- (30) II ARN, 'Run away'.
- (31) As one might be tempted to do should one see the wicked prosper.
- (32) Wickedness will not succeed in the end. Frankel ibid.: Nittai said this after John Hyrcanus joined the Sadducees. In ARN this is attributed to Joshua b. Perahiah.
- (33) J. Hag 77d states that in later times there was disagreement as to whether Judah b. Tabbai was Nasi, and Simeon b. Shetah Ab-Beth-din, or vice-versa. Frankel, op. cit. p. 37, says: 'at first Judah was Nasi, but after his mistaken decision in the case of a false witness ('Ed Zomen v. Mak. 5b) he resigned in favour of Simeon and thus they changed posts.' These scholars lived in the reigns of John Hyrcanus, Alexander Jannaeus and Queen Salome. II ARN attributes Judah's sayings to Simeon and vice-versa.
- (34) I.e., do not suggest to either party a line of argument. For a case involving the question of the applicability of this principle see J. B.B. IX, 6; J. Keth. IV, 10. A woman came before R. Johanan with a claim on her husband (or her late husband's heirs) for the cost of medical attention during her illness, and R. Johanan said to her: 'If the sum has been previously agreed upon with the physician you cannot recover it from your husband (or from his estate), but it must come out of your marriage-settlement.' Otherwise it is included in the husband's alimentary obligation to the wife, v. Epstein, M., Marriage Contract, 163. Objection was taken to R. Johanan for having said this, as being at variance with the dictum here in Aboth, which had been interpreted by R. Haggai in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi as: 'It is prohibited (for a judge) to reveal to any one litigant the law as it applies to his case.' This objection is answered thus: R. Johanan knew that this applicant was a woman of high principles who would not take unfair advantage of that knowledge, but tell the truth as to whether the sum of the physician's fee had been a pre-arranged one or not. I and II ARN take this in a quite different sense, viz. advice against allowing oneself to be prejudiced by any considerations, and against treating one party differently to the other. ARN seems to understand עוֹרְכֵי הַדֵּינִים to mean judges who estimate' and make up their minds by conjecture before they have heard the whole case.
- (35) This is the best translation of בְּשֶׁקֶבֶלּוֹ, and gives the best sense; it is only when a litigant has submitted to the decision that he can be considered guiltless, but not if he is recalcitrant. (V. Buchler, op. cit. p. 53, n. 4.)
- (36) Brother of Queen Salome. He reinstated the Pharisees in the Sanhedrin which had, for some time, been dominated by the Sadducees.
- (37) It is suggested that the tragic episode that led to the execution of his own son, which had been due to reliance on evidence which (when it was too late) proved to have been false (v. J. Sanh. 23b), prompted this dictum.
- (38) Said to have been descendants of proselytes, themselves descendants of Sennacherib.
- (39) II ARN, ch. XXIII, amplifies 'lest you teach anything not in accordance with the teachings of the Torah'. M.: Inexact language would give heretics an opportunity for misrepresenting your teaching. Halevy: Abtalion supplemented Shemaiah's advice: be careful even in your words, so as not to embroil yourselves with the rival sides.

- (40) By the Sadducees and Hellenists (who had regained power at the Court), as had already happened in the cases of Joshua b. Perahiah and Judah b. Tabbai.
- (41) A place of heretical teachings (e.g. Alexandria).
- (42) Into exile.
- (43) Spiritual death.
- (44) By reason of the spiritual disaster that will have overtaken students of the Torah, faith in, and reverence for, God would wane.
- (45) Identified by Halevy, op. cit. p. 40 ff. (and others) with Sameas and Pollion of Jos. Ant. XIV, 9, 4; XV, 1, 1; XV, 10, 4. V. Bacher, Tradition, pp. 51-2, who identifies similarly but, owing to chronological difficulties created by the Josephus passages, he suggests that on account of the similarity, especially in Greek pronunciation, of Shemaiah and Shammai, Josephus did not keep the two pairs (Shemaiah-Abtalion and Hillel-Shammai) sufficiently distinct.
- (46) For the qualities of the ideal priest, v. Mal. II, 6.
- (47) So MV, p. 473. i.e. this is not a continuation of the description of Aaron, or of Aaron's disciples, but a further admonition by Hillel.
- (48) Or, (himself) ceases (to be).
- (49) Another reading 'teach', i.e., one who refuses to impart the knowledge he has.
- (50) 1. The Shem ha-meforash, the Name of God in its full form (I ARN, Ch. XII). 2. 'The Crown of God', i.e., a man who claims divine honours and prerogatives (II ARN, Ch. XXVII).
- (51) One must be self-reliant and not accustom oneself to depend on others; but, being exclusively for oneself is an unworthy attitude for a human being. M.: If I do not rouse my soul to higher things who will rouse it? Rashi: If I do not acquire merit for myself who should do it for me, and when I have already achieved that, have I even then done the whole of my duty? L.: If my ego is not mine (i.e. under my control) over whom can I exercise influence, and when I have myself to myself (and I examine myself) I am led to ask myself, what am I?
- (52) If I do not act in accordance with these reflections now that I realize them (or now whilst I am young, or alive), then, when? Later it may be too late.
- (53) L.: Ideal conditions for study are fixity of purpose, regularity of habits and stability of temperament on the part of the student, as well as an habitual locale and students' accessories of suitable and standard types. B. cites another rendering, viz., 'Make thy (decisions in) Law consistent'.
- (54) This advice on the part of Shammai is the more noteworthy in view of his own impatient nature (as compared with Hillel's at any rate).
- (55) Son of Simeon (who was Nasi after his father Hillel, according to Graetz for 20 years, but according to Halevy only a very short time), known as Rabban Gamaliel Ha-zaken (the Elder). Although here he follows Hillel and Shammai, he is not said to have received' (the oral teaching) from them (that is said of Rabban Johanan b. Zakkai, supra II, 5) and this leads some to say that he was not a Nasi. Hoffmann (Erste Mishnah, p. 26) says the dictum here is by R. Gamaliel II (of Jabneh). Geiger adheres to Gamaliel I. It is probably the same Gamaliel ('a doctor of the Law') as in Acts V, 34; XXII, 3.
- (56) According to M. and others this is advice to one who is himself a Rabbi, that he should choose another scholar whom he is to respect as a greater authority, and whom he should consult in cases of difficulty and doubt before giving a decision.
- (57) L.: To be too strict is one's decision (a course a Rabbi would be likely to take when he is in doubt) is a fault, even as it is wrong to give more than is due in tithes by tithing by conjecture instead of by measure.
- (58) I.e., the son of R. Gamaliel I. He was slain at the time of the fall of Jerusalem. He is not called Rabban here, because he said this before he was Nasi.
- (59) Heb. גוּי body, person, cf. IV, 6.
- (60) Cf. Prov. X, 19.
- (61) Son of Gamaliel II of Jabneh and grandson of the Simeon in the foregoing Mishnah. Others say it is that same Simeon but one dictum was uttered before, and the other (here) after, he became Nasi (hence the title Rabban here).
- (62) Is its stability founded; cf. Mishnah 2.
- (63) Zech. VIII, 16. Rashi says that in the Mishnah of Tiberias (MV, 'in careful texts') the Scriptural quotation is not given.

Mishna - Mas. Avoth Chapter 2

Mishna - Mas. Avoth Chapter 2

MISHNAH 1. RABBI¹ SAID: WHICH IS THE RIGHT WAY THAT A MAN SHOULD CHOOSE UNTO HIMSELF? ONE WHICH IS [ITSELF] AN HONOUR TO THE PERSON ADOPTING IT,² AND [ON ACCOUNT OF WHICH] HONOUR [ACCRUES] TO HIM FROM MEN.³ AND BE THOU CAREFUL WITH A LIGHT PRECEPT⁴ AS WITH A GRAVE ONE, FOR THOU KNOWEST NOT THE GRANT OF REWARD [FOR THE FULFILMENT] OF PRECEPTS.⁵ ALSO, RECKON THE LOSS [THAT MAY BE SUSTAINED THROUGH THE FULFILMENT] OF A PRECEPT AGAINST THE REWARD [ACCRUING] THEREFROM, AND THE GAIN [THAT MAY BE OBTAINED THROUGH THE COMMITTING] OF A TRANSGRESSION AGAINST THE LOSS [ENTAILED] THEREBY.⁶ APPLY THY MIND⁷ TO THREE THINGS AND THOU WILT NOT COME INTO THE POWER OF SIN:⁸ KNOW WHAT⁹ THERE IS ABOVE THEE:¹⁰ AN EYE THAT SEES,¹¹ AN EAR THAT HEARS,¹² AND ALL THY DEEDS WRITTEN IN A BOOK.¹³

MISHNAH 2. RABBAN GAMALIEL THE SON OF R. JUDAH THE PATRIARCH¹⁴ SAID: EXCELLENT IS THE STUDY OF THE TORAH TOGETHER WITH A WORLDLY OCCUPATION,¹⁵ FOR THE ENERGY [TAKEN UP] BY BOTH OF THEM KEEPS SIN OUT OF ONE'S MIND; AND [AS FOR] ALL [STUDY OF THE] TORAH WHERE THERE IS NO WORLDLY OCCUPATION, THE END THEREOF [IS THAT] IT COMES TO NOUGHT¹⁶ AND BRINGS SIN IN ITS TRAIN;¹⁷ AND ALL WHO LABOUR WITH THE COMMUNITY, LET THEM LABOUR WITH THEM FOR THE [SAKE OF THE] NAME OF HEAVEN,¹⁸ FOR THE MERIT OF THEIR¹⁹ FATHERS SUSTAINS THEM²⁰ , AND THEIR RIGHTEOUSNESS ENDURES FOR EVER;²¹ AND AS FOR YOU, [GOD²² IN SUCH CASE SAYS] I ACCOUNT YOU WORTHY OF MUCH REWARD, AS IF YOU [YOURSELVES] HAD [ACTUALLY] ACCOMPLISHED [IT ALL].²³

MISHNAH 3. BE YE CIRCUMSPECT [IN YOUR DEALINGS] WITH THE RULING AUTHORITIES²⁴ FOR THEY SUFFER NOT A MAN TO BE NEAR THEM EXCEPT IT BE FOR THEIR OWN REQUIREMENT; THEY SHOW THEMSELVES AS FRIENDS WHEN IT IS TO THEIR OWN INTEREST, BUT THEY DO NOT STAND BY A MAN IN THE HOUR OF HIS DISTRESS.²⁵

MISHNAH 4. HE USED TO SAY: DO HIS WILL AS [THOU WOULDST DO]²⁶ THINE OWN WILL,²⁷ SO THAT HE MAY DO THY WILL AS [HE DOES] HIS [OWN] WILL.²⁸ SET ASIDE THY WILL IN THE FACE OF HIS WILL,²⁹ SO THAT HE MAY SET ASIDE THE WILL OF OTHERS³⁰ BEFORE THY WILL.

HILLEL SAID: SEPARATE NOT THYSELF FROM THE COMMUNITY,³¹ NEITHER TRUST THOU IN THYSELF UNTIL THE DAY OF THY DEATH,³² MOREOVER JUDGE NOT THY FELLOW-MAN UNTIL THOU HAST REACHED HIS PLACE.³³ SAY NOT A THING THAT CANNOT BE UNDERSTOOD³⁴ [AT ONCE], [TRUSTING] THAT IN THE END IT WILL BE UNDERSTOOD. SAY NOT: WHEN I SHALL HAVE LEISURE I SHALL STUDY;’ PERHAPS THOU WILT NOT HAVE LEISURE.³⁵

MISHNAH 5. HE USED TO SAY: AN UNCULTURED³⁶ PERSON IS NOT SIN-FEARING,³⁷ NEITHER IS AN IGNORANT³⁸ PERSON PIOUS; [IT IS] NOT A SHAMEFACED PERSON [WHO IS APT TO] LEARN, NOR [IS IT] AN IMPATIENT PERSON [WHO IS FITTED TO] TEACH, NOR [IS IT] EVERYONE³⁹ WHO ENGAGES MUCH⁴⁰ IN BUSINESS [THAT] BECOMES WISE.⁴¹ IN A PLACE WHERE THERE ARE NO MEN, STRIVE THOU TO BE A MAN.⁴²

MISHNAH 6. HE ALSO SAW A SKULL FLOATING ON THE FACE OF THE WATER. HE

SAID TO IT: BECAUSE THOU DIDST DROWN [OTHERS] THEY⁴³ DROWNED THEE, AND THE END OF THOSE THAT DROWNED THEE [WILL BE THAT] THEY WILL BE DROWNED.⁴⁴

MISHNAH 7. HE USED TO SAY: THE MORE FLESH,⁴⁵ THE MORE WORMS;⁴⁶ THE MORE PROPERTY, THE MORE ANXIETY;⁴⁷ THE MORE WIVES, THE MORE WITCHCRAFT;⁴⁸ THE MORE BONDWOMEN THE MORE LEWDNESS;⁴⁹ THE MORE SLAVES, THE MORE ROBBERY;⁵⁰ [BUT] THE MORE [STUDY OF THE] TORAH, THE MORE LIFE;⁵¹ THE MORE SITTING DOWN⁵² [TO STUDY AND CONTEMPLATE], THE MORE WISDOM;⁵³ THE MORE COUNSEL, THE MORE UNDERSTANDING;⁵⁴ THE MORE RIGHTEOUSNESS,⁵⁵ THE MORE PEACE. ONE WHO HAS ACQUIRED UNTO HIMSELF A GOOD NAME,⁵⁶ HAS ACQUIRED [IT] FOR HIMSELF;⁵⁷ ONE WHO HAS ACQUIRED UNTO HIMSELF WORDS OF TORAH, HAS ACQUIRED FOR HIMSELF THE LIFE OF THE WORLD TO COME.⁵⁸

MISHNAH 8. RABBAH JOHANAN B. ZAKKAI RECEIVED [THE ORAL TRADITION] FROM HILLEL AND SHAMMAI.⁵⁹ HE USED TO SAY: IF THOU HAST LEARNT⁶⁰ MUCH TORAH, DO NOT CLAIM CREDIT UNTO THYSELF, BECAUSE FOR SUCH [PURPOSE] WAST THOU CREATED.⁶¹

RABBAN JOHANAN B. ZAKKAI HAD FIVE [PRE-EMINENT] DISCIPLES AND THEY WERE THESE: R. ELIEZER B. HYRCANUS, R. JOSHUA B. HANANIAH, R. JOSE, THE PRIEST, R. SIMEON B. NETHANEEL AND R. ELEAZAR B. 'ARACH. HE [I. E. R. JOHANAN] USED TO RECOUNT THEIR [FOREMOST] QUALITIES:⁶² R. ELIEZER B. HYRCANUS IS A PLASTERED CISTERN WHICH LOSES NOT A DROP;⁶³ R. JOSHUA B. HANANIAH — HAPPY IS SHE THAT BARE HIM,⁶⁴ R. JOSE, THE PRIEST, IS A PIOUS MAN,⁶⁵ R. SIMEON B. NETHANEEL IS ONE THAT FEARS SIN,⁶⁶ AND R. ELEAZAR B. 'ARACH IS LIKE UNTO A SPRING THAT [EVER] GATHERS FORCE.⁶⁷

HE [I.E. R. JOHANAN] USED TO SAY: IF ALL THE SAGES OF ISRAEL WERE IN ONE SCALE OF THE BALANCE AND ELIEZER B. HYRCANUS IN THE OTHER SCALE, HE WOULD OUTWEIGH THEM ALL. ABBA⁶⁸ SAUL SAID IN HIS⁶⁹ NAME: IF ALL THE SAGES OF ISRAEL WERE IN ONE SCALE OF THE BALANCE, AND R. ELIEZER B. HYRCANUS ALSO WITH THEM, AND R. ELEAZAR B. ARACH IN THE OTHER SCALE, HE WOULD OUTWEIGH THEM ALL.⁷⁰

MISHNAH 9. HE [R. JOHANAN] SAID UNTO THEM: GO FORTH⁷¹ AND OBSERVE WHICH IS THE GOOD WAY UNTO WHICH A MAN SHOULD CLEAVE? R. ELIEZER SAID, A GOOD EYE;⁷² R. JOSHUA SAID, A GOOD ASSOCIATE;⁷³ R. JOSE SAID, A GOOD NEIGHBOUR;⁷⁴ R. SIMEON SAID, ONE WHO LOOKS [AHEAD TO SEE] WHAT [CONSEQUENCES] SHALL BE BROUGHT FORTH [BY HIS OWN ACTIons].⁷⁵ R. ELEAZAR SAID, A GOOD HEART.⁷⁶ SAID HE [R. JOHANAN] UNTO THEM: I PREFER THE WORDS OF ELEAZAR B. 'ARACH TO YOUR WORDS, FOR WITHIN THE COMPREHENSIVE CHARACTER OF HIS WORDS, ARE YOUR WORDS [INCLUDED].

HE [FURTHER] SAID UNTO THEM: GO FORTH AND OBSERVE WHICH IS THE EVIL WAY FROM WHICH A MAN SHOULD REMOVE HIMSELF FAR?⁷⁷ R. ELIEZER SAID, AN EVIL EYE;⁷⁸ R. JOSHUA SAID, AN EVIL ASSOCIATE; R. JOSE SAID, AN EVIL NEIGHBOUR; R. SIMEON SAID, ONE WHO BORROWS AND REPAYS NOT⁷⁹ — [IT IS ALL] ONE [WHETHER] ONE BORROWS FROM MAN OR ONE BORROWS FROM THE ALL-PRESENT⁸⁰ — AS IT IS SAID: THE WICKED BORROWS AND PAYETH NOT; BUT THE RIGHTEOUS DEALETH GRACIOUSLY AND GIVETH⁸¹. R. ELEAZAR SAID, AN EVIL HEART. SAID HE [R. JOHANAN] UNTO THEM: I PREFER THE WORDS OF ELEAZAR B.

ARACH TO YOUR WORDS, FOR WITHIN THE COMPREHENSIVE CHARACTER OF HIS WORDS ARE YOUR WORDS [INCLUDED].

MISHNAH 10. THEY [EACH] SAID THREE THINGS. R. ELIEZER SAID: LET THE HONOUR OF THY FRIEND BE AS DEAR TO THEE AS THINE OWN;⁸² AND BE NOT EASILY PROVOKED TO ANGER;⁸³ AND REPENT ONE DAY BEFORE THY DEATH,⁸⁴ AND [HE ALSO SAID:] WARM THYSELF BEFORE THE FIRE OF THE WISE,⁸⁵ AND BEWARE OF THEIR GLOWING COALS,⁸⁶ THAT THOU MAYEST NOT BE SINGED,⁸⁷ FOR THEIR BITE IS THE BITE OF A FOX,⁸⁸ AND THEIR STING IS THE STING OF A SCORPION,⁸⁹ AND THEIR HISS IS THE HISS OF A SERPENT,⁹⁰ AND ALL THEIR WORDS ARE LIKE COALS OF FIRE.⁹¹

MISHNAH 11. R. JOSHUA SAID: AN EVIL EYE, THE EVIL INCLINATION,⁹² AND HATRED FOR [ONE'S FELLOW.] CREATURES PUT A MAN OUT OF THE WORLD.⁹³

MISHNAH 12. R. JOSE SAID: LET THE PROPERTY OF THY FELLOW BE AS PRECIOUS UNTO THEE AS THINE OWN;⁹⁴ FIT THYSELF TO STUDY TORAH⁹⁵ FOR IT IS NOT [A THING THAT COMES] UNTO THEE [AS] AN INHERITANCE;⁹⁶ AND LET ALL THINE ACTIONS⁹⁷ BE FOR [THE SAKE OF] THE NAME OF HEAVEN⁹⁸.

MISHNAH 13. R. SIMEON SAID: BE CAREFUL WITH THE READING OF SHEMA'⁹⁹ AND WITH PRAYER,¹⁰⁰ AND WHEN THOU PRAYEST, MAKE NOT THY PRAYER A SET TASK,¹⁰¹ BUT [AN APPEAL FOR] MERCY¹⁰² AND AN ENTREATY BEFORE THE ALL-PRESENT,¹⁰³ FOR IT IS SAID: FOR HE IS GRACIOUS AND COMPASSIONATE, LONG-SUFFERING AND ABUNDANT IN MERCY, AND REPENTETH HIM OF THE EVIL;¹⁰⁴ AND BE NOT WICKED IN THINE OWN ESTEEM.¹⁰⁵

MISHNAH 14. R. ELEAZAR SAID:¹⁰⁶ BE EAGER¹⁰⁷ TO STUDY THE TORAH;¹⁰⁸ AND KNOW¹⁰⁹ WHAT ANSWER THOU SHOULDST GIVE TO THE EPICUREAN,¹¹⁰ AND KNOW BEFORE WHOM THOU TOILEST,¹¹¹ AND WHO¹¹² IS THINE EMPLOYER¹¹³ WHO WILL PAY THEE THE REWARD OF THY LABOUR.

MISHNAH 15. R. TARFON¹¹⁴ SAID: THE DAY¹¹⁵ IS SHORT, AND THE WORK¹¹⁶ [TO BE PERFORMED] IS MUCH;¹¹⁷ AND THE WORKMEN¹¹⁸ ARE INDOLENT,¹¹⁹ BUT THE REWARD IS MUCH;¹²⁰ AND THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE¹²¹ IS INSISTENT.¹²²

MISHNAH 16. HE [I.E., R. TARFON] USED TO SAY: IT IS NOT [INCUMBENT] UPON THEE TO FINISH THE WORK, BUT NEITHER ART THOU A FREE MAN SO AS TO [BE ENTITLED TO] REFRAIN THEREFROM;¹²³ IF THOU HAST STUDIED MUCH TORAH, THEY¹²⁴ GIVE THEE MUCH REWARD, AND FAITHFUL IS THINE EMPLOYER TO PAY THEE THE REWARD OF THY LABOUR;¹²⁵ AND KNOW THAT THE GRANT OF REWARD UNTO THE RIGHTEOUS IS IN THE TIME TO COME.¹²⁶

(1) Rabbi Judah ha-Nasi (the Prince, the Patriarch) also called רבינו הקדוש 'Our holy Master'. All the best qualities characteristic of the righteous were combined in him (J. Sanh. 30a). Son of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel (supra I, 28) ca. 200 C.E. He is famous as the one who, either orally (so Rashi), or in writing (so M.) compiled, or reduced to order, previously collected material (so Tosaf.), consisting of the authoritative opinions of the Tannaim on legal, ritual, ethical and related matters, and forming our Mishnah (v. L.). Among the modern historians, Weiss (II, p. 183) says that R. Judah collected, arranged and reduced to writing. Halevy (II, pp. 829, 858, 866) says the original Mishnah was the work of the Great Synagogue. That 'Ur,' Mishnah was sifted and clarified progressively by Hillel and Shammai and their successors. The Mishnah was all but complete before the end of the days of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. As the latter held office for a very short time only, it fell to his son R. Judah to add the final touches. Actual additions made in R. Judah's own time were very few.

(2) לעשה or לעשיה. R. Jonah, Elijah Wilna, and others understand 'to Him who made it (the way)', i.e. God. They seem to have taken דרך ישרה to have been suggested by ישרים דרכי ה' the ways of the Lord are right (Hos. XIV, 10), cf. Prov. XVI, 9. A man's heart deviseth his way; but the Lord directeth his steps. Taylor, Sayings of the Jewish Fathers, a.l. cites an interpretation of R. Isaac bar Shelomo which, rejecting the possibility of applying the verb עשה to דרך (Taylor says 'but see Judg. XVII, 8.' However, there the expression is used in quite a different sense), assumes a reading לעשהו 'to his (man's) Maker'. The passage would in that case express the idea in for them that honour Me [will honour (I Sam. II, 30), cf. infra IV, 1.

(3) Elijah Wilna quotes Prov. III, 4, So shalt thou find grace and good favour in the sight of God and Man.

(4) A precept, compliance with which does not entail any, or much, exertion or cost, or the reward (where known), or punishment for which is slight (L.).

(5) I.e., positive precepts; the penalties for non-compliance with negative precepts are known. II ARN, Ch. XXXII, adds, 'and flee from a light transgression as from a grave one for thou knowest not what are the penalties for transgressions' (sc. of positive precepts).

(6) Does this metaphor, taken evidently from commercial life, not indicate the principle of the 'double-entry' system of book-keeping, which is usually stated to have been devised in the 16th century?

(7) הסתכל denom. vb. from שכל sense, mind.

(8) Lit., 'into the hands,' into the grip of sin, out of which there may be no escape.

(9) Lowe's MS. (used by Taylor) omits מה.

(10) MV understands 'in Heaven'. L.: 'beyond thy comprehension'.

(11) Cf. Job XXXIV, 21, 22. For His eyes are upon the ways of a man, and He seeth all his doings.

(12) For God's ear, cf. II Kings XIX, 16, Incline Thine ear, O Lord, and hear; Ps. CXVI, 2, He hath inclined his ear unto me.

(13) V. Job XXXVII, 7, He sealet up the hand of every man, that all men whom He hath made may know it. This is rendered 'By the hand of every man is a seal (or signature) affixed so that He may know the deeds of all men (or, so that every man may know his own deeds). For the idea of a Heavenly Book of Records, cf. Mal. III, 16, also Ex. XXXII, 32. Dan. VII, 10. For the amplification of this idea and its implications, v. R.H., 16b ff.

(14) 'Rabbi' of the foregoing Mishnah.

(15) Cf. Ps. CXXVIII, 2, then thou eatest the labour of thy hands, happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee. L. takes דרך ארץ in its sense of correct and unassuming conduct. However, the words immediately following. 'the energy (lit. labour) of both of them,' precludes such a rendering.

(16) L.: Since, on account of not having an occupation by which to earn a steady livelihood, he has to seek the latter at random, he thus uses up time which he could otherwise have devoted to the study of the Torah.

(17) Unable to procure a livelihood by honest means, he would be tempted, or driven to, dishonest means of obtaining it.

(18) I.e., disinterestedly and devotedly, not for the sake of self-aggrandisement or of exercising authority over others. Or, even if your actions are unpopular with the community.

(19) The community's.

(20) The community. L.: the communal workers.

(21) Even if the community do not readily support, or even if they oppose the labours of those who are doing the communal work for the sake of Heaven, the merit of the community's fathers, i.e., the traditional righteousness and charitableness of the Israelite character, being everenduring, will sustain the workers (or the community as a whole) and help them to acquit themselves of their duty, in the end, creditably. even if for the time being the community may be doing it unwillingly (after an alternative in B.). Another interpretation: One should take up the communal burden disinterestedly and not take credit for what one does; rather put it down to the merit of the community as a whole, as it is their inherited qualities which are mainly responsible for the consummation of the good work.

(22) Baer suggests it may mean the Tanna himself (Rabban Gamaliel) addressing these words to the communal leaders of his own generation.

(23) Rashi: Even if you have not completed the task (cf. Mishnah 16). Some explain: If in the course of public duty you have unavoidably neglected a precept. I account it to you as if you had fulfilled it.

(24) R. Gamaliel had much experience of intercourse with the (Roman) powers-that-be as his father, R. Judah ha-Nasi, was on intimate and friendly terms with one of the Antonines. B. and others: This caution was particularly intended for the communal leaders addressed in the preceding Mishnah.

(25) This is generally taken as a reflection upon corrupt and grasping officialdom. It also reflects the conception prevailing among the ruling classes of antiquity as to their own raison d'être; they took it for granted that they might make whatever use they could of their subjects, but they did not consider it an integral part of their duty to be of service to their subjects.

(26) As willingly and as joyfully.

(27) So B., L. and R. Jonah who further develop the idea, 'make thy will identical with God's will'. Rashi: 'even when thou doest thine own business do it for the sake of Heaven' but this would presuppose reading עשה רצונך כרצונו

(28) Cf. Ps. CXLV, 19, He will fulfill the desire of them that fear Him.

(29) When they conflict.

(30) Who will things against your interests. MV and B. also give an alternative explanation, viz., that 'the will of others' is an euphemism for His (God's) will, i.e., that he may annul any punishment decreed by Him against you. (V. Jast. s.v. בטל.)

(31) Identify yourself with the community in everything except wrong-doing. (i) Participate in its sorrows as well as its joys, cf. Isa. LXVI, 10. (ii) Do not lead a selfish life or that of a recluse. (iii) Do not act independently of, or contrary to, what is the norm accepted by the community as a whole. L.: The Mishnah having given R. Gamaliel's dictum on duty towards the community quotes also Hillel on the subject.

(32) Do not rely upon the material or spiritual position you have attained. Unless one is constantly on one's guard these may only too easily be lost. Or construe the Mishnah thus: 'Separate not thyself from the Community, neither trust thou in thyself, until the day of thy death,' i.e., do not, ever in your life, rely on your own powers to the extent of deliberately remaining detached from the community. Cf. I, 24.

(33) Rashi, B. 'When you see a man succumbing to temptation do not condemn him, until, faced by a similar temptation, you have overcome it.' R. Jonah says this follows on 'do not trust in thyself', do not, through thinking yourself infallible, presume to judge and condemn another, in particular a man who has reached a high position and appears to you not to be acting correctly; if and when you reach his position and you experience the psychological effects of high office upon its holder, it will be time enough for you to come to conclusions on the conduct of others in such a position.

(34) Lit., 'heard'. 'that cannot . . . ;' according to the reading of M., whose explanation is adopted in this translation. Others (adopting the same reading) 'do not reveal secrets (or secret, esoteric, doctrines) that should not be revealed to all and sundry, because in the end, they will become public.' Another reading: 'that can be heard' is explained by MV, Rashi, B.: 'When you have the opportunity of hearing Torah do not say there is yet time to hear it later.' Cf. the next sentence.

(35) Cf. prov. XXVII, 1, Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

(36) בור Originally: a piece of ground altogether uncultivated. Of a person: one devoid of knowledge as well as of ethical principles (M. and others).

(37) He may avoid sin by unreasonably following the accepted standards of conduct, or out of a fear of the consequences, but not out of a conscious and deliberate abhorrence of sin itself (after L.).

(38) עם הארץ A man devoid of mental attainments but possessing some moral qualities (M.). He may act with propriety but, lacking a knowledge of the Torah and the advantage of association with scholarly and saintly men, he is not equipped for rising to the plane of Hasiduth, which is conduct of a standard higher than that strictly required, and a striving for progressive self-perfection. (MV, L.)

(39) כל. So Tosaf. Yom Tob.

(40) And leaves little or no time for study (R. Jonah).

(41) Even though business is, admittedly, a valuable factor in the development of the mind, it is not, except perhaps in rare cases, in itself sufficient. Cf. infra VI, 5, where among the qualifications for the acquisition of the Torah, some texts have מיעוט סחורה moderation in business. מהכים L., relying on the causative (Hif'il) conjugation of the word: 'makes himself and others wise'.

(42) In Ber. 63a there is an Aramaic version גבר תמן הוי גבר באתר דלית Hillel used both Hebrew and Aramaic, cf. supra I, 12, 13, 14.

(43) The impersonal use of 'they'. Though this usage is not uncommon in English, a passive construction might be preferable.

(44) The underlying idea is that divine retribution operates by way of 'measure for measure', cf. Ob. 15, As thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee. Ps. VII, 16, 17, He hath digged a pit and hollowed it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made. His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violence shall come down upon his own pate. Ez Joseph lays stress on סוף 'even if these people die a natural death, a time will come when their skulls will float about on water.' However, the version in the Talmud (Suk. 53a) has not got סוף.

(45) One puts on by over-indulgence in food.

(46) In the grave.

(47) Cf. Eccl. II, 22, 23. For what hath a man of all his labour . . . for all his days are pains . . . yea, even in the night his heart taketh no rest.

(48) Wives in their jealous rivalry for their husband's attentions will resort to seeking charms from witches whose occupation will prosper and spread (V.).

(49) A well-known feature of female slavery.

(50) They will combine to rob their master, or to rob others without their master's knowledge, but implicating him nevertheless. B. notes the sequence, (i) Flesh: the more one feels well-fed and 'pleased' with himself, the more one strives to amass (ii) wealth. The wealthier he is the more (iii) wives he will take, each of whom requires a large number of (iv) serving maids. The household grows to such proportions that he requires a large retinue of (v) slaves.

(51) prov. III, 1, 2. My son, forget not my teaching (Torah) but let thy heart keep my commandments; for length of days, and years of life, will they add to thee. Cf. ibid. IX, II, and Deut. XXX, 20.

(52) ישיבה some render 'academy', 'school(ing)' i.e., the more opportunities given to disciples for corporate study, the greater the ingenuity developed.

(53) Some versions מרבח חכמה מרבה ישיבה 'the greater the wisdom of the teacher, the better attended will be his school' (v. R. Jonah and B.).

(54) Cf. Prov. XII, 15, rendered, he that hearkeneth to counsel is wise.

(55) Cf. Isa. XXXII, 17, and the work of righteousness shall be peace. Some render צדקה 'charity' which makes for sympathy and understanding, and counteracts the bitterness often felt by the poor towards the rich, and which, by thus ensuring goodwill all round, preserves peace.

(56) Cf. Prov. XXII, I, A 'good name is rather to be chosen than great riches; Eccl. VII, 1, A good name is better than precious oil.

(57) It is peculiarly his own in the sense that, unlike any other possession, one man's good name can never become another's.

(58) Cf. Prov. VIII, 35. Wisdom (Torah) says: Whoso findeth me, findeth life, and obtaineth favour from the Lord; cf. Deut. XXX, 20.

(59) The chain of 'tradents' and 'recipients' interrupted at the end of I, 15, is continued here. It is suggested that when it came to Hillel, a 'progenitor' of a 'dynasty', the Mishnah continued with the descendants of Hillel till R. Judah ha-Nasi and his son R. Gamaliel (then adduced Hillel, by the way, on a topic dealt with by R. Gamaliel son of R. Judah, see Mishnah 4, n. 7), and then resumed here the chain of discipleship (see L.).

(60) למדת Lowe's MS., I ARN, Ch. XIV, R. Jonah. MV read עשית 'thou hast accomplished'. V. Taylor, a.l.

(61) The idea that man, and especially an Israelite, is created for the purpose of giving himself to the study of the Word of God and obedience thereto, is deeply rooted in Biblical and Rabbinic literature, cf. Micah VI, 8: It hath been told thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord doth require of thee: only to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God. Cf. Deut. X, 12. L.: If you have acquired more than the average knowledge of the Torah, do not attribute it to your own superior abilities, for it is God who has endowed you with special talents in that direction.

(62) Lit. 'their praise'.

(63) ARN I, Ch. XXIX, adds, 'a vessel lined with pitch that retains the wine,' i.e., he had a very retentive memory. In Suk. 28a, he is reported to have claimed that he had never said anything that he had not heard from his own teachers. Frankel, op. cit. p. 78, argues that this statement cannot be upheld.

(64) I.e., to his mother was due most of the credit for his scholarship and she therefore had real cause to be proud of him. She is said to have taken him, in his cot, to the Beth-ha-Midrash so that from his infancy his ears might become attuned to the sound of the study of the Torah. ARN XIV has, instead, 'a threefold cord (that) is not quickly broken.' (Eccl. IV, 12.)

(65) I ARN (Ch. XIV) and II (Ch. XXIX): 'the most pious man in his generation.' V. Mishnah 5, n. 5, for the meaning of Hasid.

(66) V. Mishnah 5, n. 4. I ARN ibid. gives ערוגה שבמדבר שמהזקת מימיה 'a garden-bed in the wilderness which retains its water,' (II ARN, XVI, to the same effect) as R. Johanan's description of R. Simeon b.

Nethaneel.

(67) I.e., noted for an independent, keen and vigorous critical faculty, and thus differentiated from R. Eliezer b. Hyrcanus whose greatness consisted in assiduously gathering in and faithfully preserving all that he heard. I ARN adds 'whose waters swell and flow abroad as it is said (Prov. V, 16), lit thy springs be dispersed abroad, and courses of water in the streets.'

(68) Title for a scholar less than that of 'Rabbi' (v. Jast.).

(69) R. Johanan's. II ARM ibid. 'on the authority of R. Akiba who used to say it in his (R. Johanan's) name.' Rashi, 'in the name of R. Gamaliel in the name of R. Johanan b. Zakkai.'

(70) There was a difference of opinion as to whether the scholastic quality known as סיני ('Sinai', an erudite scholar) which was that of R. Eliezer, or the one termed עוקר הרים ('an uprooter of mountains', a dialectician), which distinguished R. Eleazar, is to be preferred. V. Ber. 64a, where the conclusion is that the former is the better, as even the scholar who is ingenious in arguing the merits of various opinions, is himself dependent on the material made available by the scholar who accumulates the teaching of his predecessors and contemporaries. The 'First Tanna' (תנא קמא) of this Mishnah understood Rabban Johanan to have preferred the 'Sinai', whilst Abba Saul ascribed to Rabban Johanan a predilection for the 'uprooter of mountains'. Some versions omit 'Rabbi' given here with the names of Eliezer, etc. as at that time they were still disciples and not yet independent scholars.

(71) Leave your immediate environment, and go among men of all classes (v. L.).

(72) Generosity. Cf. Prov. XXII, 9, He that hath a bountiful (lit. 'good') eye shall be blessed, for he giveth of his bread to the poor. Maim. Contentment with what one has.

(73) One should seek and cultivate a good friend. R. Jonah: One should oneself be a good friend.

(74) One should seek and cultivate a good neighbour. As a good friend is not necessarily with you very often, it is even more important to have someone who is constantly near at hand. R. Jonah: One should oneself be a good neighbour.

(75) Or, by time, v. Prov. XXVII, 1, What the day may bring forth.

(76) The heart being the generator of all physical, mental and emotional processes (after Maim.). R. Jonah: A good heart means patience and goodwill. Perhaps, however, לב טוב is to be taken in the only sense in which it is used in the Bible, viz. 'a joyous heart', which puts one in a good humour with, and ensures the right kind of disposition towards everybody and all things. ARN ibid. appears to have understood it so. 'A good heart towards Heaven, (a good heart towards the commandments,) a good heart: towards all creatures' (cf. Elijah Wilna and L.).

(77) He had to ask this question instead of inferring the answer to it from the answers to the previous question, because the negative of a good quality is not always an evil quality which should be shunned.

(78) A grudging nature; cf. Prov. XXIII, 6, Eat thou not the bread of him that hath an evil eye.

(79) Apart from the dishonesty of such conduct, he does not think that he is not likely to be trusted again with a loan; in this he is the antithesis of the man who looks ahead to see the consequences of his conduct.

(80) For מקום (lit., 'Place') as an appellation for God see Marmorstein, Old Rabbinic Doctrine of God, pp. 14, 92, 142. It was used in the earliest Rabbinic sources.

(81) Ps. XXXVII, 21. M. and others understand 'the righteous', in this connection, in the Midrashic sense, viz. 'the Righteous One', i.e., God (v. Marmorstein, op. cit., p. 95). If a borrower fails to repay, God will repay the kindly lender. Thus the borrower (even if he is released, say by bankruptcy, from the obligation of repaying to man [so R. Jonah]) remains a debtor to God, and continued neglect to repay renders him a רשע. For the idea that help given to the needy is a loan to God, v. Prov. XIX, 17. He that is gracious unto the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; his good deed will He repay unto him. If R. Simeon himself really understood צדיק in this case as referring to God, we have an earlier authority for the idea than the one referred to by Marmorstein ibid. (viz., Bar-Kappara).

(82) On the principle of Love thy neighbour as thyself (Lev. XIX, 18).

(83) Cf. Eccl. VII, 9, Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry.

(84) I ARN, Ch. XV; II Ch. XXIX, Koh. Rab. Ch. IX, Shab. 153a report that when R. Eliezer's disciples asked him: Does any man know what day he is to die? he replied: All the more reason for him to repent every day of his life in case he should die on the morrow. ARN, Maim., R. Jonah take the foregoing to constitute the 'three things' referred to in the heading of this Mishnah, and what follows ('Warm thyself,' etc.) as an addition. This scheme is adopted in this translation. However, Rashi, MV, B., L. take 'let the honour . . .' and 'be not easily provoked . . .' as one dictum, 'repent etc. as the second, and 'warm thyself . . .' as the third.

(85) The Torah which is called אור (i.e. light or flame) v. Prov. VI, 23, The teaching (Torah) is light. Elijah Wilna cites Isa. II, 5, O house of Jacob, come ye and let us walk in the light (אור which also flame) of the Lord.

- (86) The commentators regard this as a warning against behaving towards the Sages in a manner incompatible with the dignity which should be theirs as exponents of the Torah.
- (87) Their fire, the fire of the Torah, being a divine fire (cf. Deut. XXXIII, 2, At his right hand was a fiery law), is an ever potent one, even when the Sages are, as it were, not aflame but only resembling glowing coals.
- (88) The bite, even a slight one, of a fox was thought particularly hurtful because its teeth were said to be crooked.
- (89) The sting alone of a scorpion is poisonous.
- (90) The very hiss of a serpent was believed to be deadly. Some render 'the murmuring (of incantations) over them (i.e. the scholars or their 'bites' and 'stings') is (as ineffective) as the murmuring (of incantations) over a fiery serpent.' cf. Ps. LVIII, 6 (of an asp) which hearkeneth not to the voice of charmers (מלחשים).
- (91) Their mere words, even if they seem unimportant, should be heeded as they, too, are aglow with the Divine fire of the Torah. Or, the mere words of the Sages even when not intended to be 'burning' are like coals of fire, which, if approached or dealt with, without due care, will burn one. For the action of the fire of God upon those who take up the wrong attitude towards Him, i.e. upon the wicked, v. Mal. III, 19, 20. For, behold, the day cometh, it burneth as a furnace; and all the proud, and all that work wickedness, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall set them ablaze, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in its wings. Herford sees in these words of R. Eliezer a piece of self-revelation expressive of the deep suffering he endured as a result of the severe ban of excommunication which the Rabbis pronounced against him, v. B.M. 59b.
- (92) For a full treatment of the subject, v. Schechter, Some aspects of Rabbinic Theology, p. 24.
- (93) II ARN. Ch. XXX, 'out of this world and out of the world to come'. A man who hates everybody will draw upon himself the hatred of all others and this is likely to bring him to a premature and unnatural end (v. B.). Maim.: Greed for wealth (= the evil eye), a surfeit of lustfulness (= the evil inclination) and a bad disposition (= hatred of one's fellows), which is melancholia, have the effect of making one loathe the world and of inducing him to take up the life of a recluse not out of ascetic piety, but because he is insatiably envious of, and grudging towards, his fellow-men. This would no doubt also have deleterious physical effects, and cause his premature death.
- (94) Cf. Mishnah 10, n. 6. R. Jonah understands, 'when the other person's property is in your charge, deal with it in accordance with the owner's wish.'
- (95) Put yourself in a proper frame of mind so that you approach the Torah with due reverence and Zest (v. MV and Ez Joseph). ARN, B., in view of the following clause, lay stress on 'thysself'.
- (96) ARN cites the case of the sons of Moses who did not follow in their father's footsteps. MV says this clause is not an authentic part of R. Jose's dictum and should be omitted.
- (97) Even the most elementary bodily functions. II ARN, Ch. XXX, relates the anecdote of Hillel who looked upon the taking of a bath as a Mizwah (religious duty), inasmuch as by that one cleansed the body which God made in his own image.
- (98) On 'Heaven', cf. supra I, 3, n. 6.
- (99) The liturgical unit comprising the passages Deut. VI, 4 — 9, XI, 13 — 21, Num. XV, 37 — 41, considered by the Rabbis to contain the principles of the Decalogue, and ordained for recital twice daily, 'when thou liest down, and when thou risest up' (Deut. VI, 7). The admonition here is that it should be 'read' or 'recited' (the verb קרא may mean either) at the proper hours (Rashi, V., B.).
- (100) Prayer תפלה par excellence is the 'Amidah, (P.B. p. 44 etc.) to be recited thrice daily at defined times.
- (101) L.: Since these prayers are regularly repeated, there is the danger of their recital deteriorating into one by rote, hence 'be careful'.
- (102) רחמים omitted in Lowe's MS., R. Jonah, and MV.
- (103) V. Mishnah 9, n. 6.
- (104) Joel II, 13. Possibly the Scriptural quotation was introduced later. R. Jonah quotes Jonah IV, 2, which is very similar to Joel II, 13.
- (105) So R. Tam (quoted in MV.), R. Jonah and M. The latter adds 'and thus set yourself a low standard of conduct.' MV: Do not do anything which you understand to be wrong, even if others do not realize it. Or (preferred by MV), do not be wicked by imagining and behaving as if you were the only person in the world, and therefore refusing to associate in friendship with your fellow-men.
- (106) Much depends on the division of this Mishnah into the three dicta. MV and R. Jonah: 1) Be eager . . . that thou mayest know what . . . 2) Know before whom . . . 3) Who is thine Employer . . . Rashi's division is not quite clear.

Though we would expect him to agree with V., it nevertheless seems that he divided 1) Be eager . . . 2) Know what answer . . . 3) Know before whom . . . and who is thine Employer . . . B.'s arrangement was: 1) Be eager . . . 2) Know what answer . . . and before whom thou toilest, 3) Who is thine Employer. M.'s division (though not interpretation) seems to have been the same as B.'s, but may, on the other hand, have agreed with the one given here as the probable one of Rashi.

(107) שָׂקוּד the passive instead of the active mood of the verb used in the Bible suggests 'be actuated by an eagerness' (v. L.).

(108) It may be that R. Eleazar's advocacy of eagerness and enthusiasm in the study of Torah, was due to the lesson he had learnt from his own experience, when after the death of his master (R. Johanan b. Zakkai) he refused to join his fellow-disciples and went to reside in Emmaus (?) because it was a pleasant resort, and in the course of a short time he forgot his learning. V. infra IV, 14, where R. Nehorai is thought to be another name for R. Eleazar b. 'Arak.

(109) MV., R. Jonah: in order that thou mayest know. Maim.: Get to know, study, other religious systems.

(110) A term applied to heretics in general, v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 244, n. 10.

(111) M.: 'but know . . .' Whilst you are studying the creeds of others, know, keep in mind, that He whom you are serving knows your innermost thoughts and so take care to prevent false doctrines from influencing you.

(112) וְיָמִי הוּא so MV, Rashi, R. Jonah, Lowe's MS. The other reading וְיָמֵינוּ ('and faithful'), which is specifically ruled out by MV, is evidently due to that phrase in the next Mishnah.

(113) I.e., God, v. Marmorstein, op. cit., p. 79. Lowe's MS. stops here. The clause which follows in our Version may also be due to the next Mishnah. v. Bacher, Agada der Tannaiten, I, p. 77.

(114) A younger (?) contemporary of the above-mentioned disciples of Rabban Johanan b. Zakkai.

(115) I.e., man's earthly life, cf. Job VIII, 9, For we are but of yesterday . . . because our days upon earth are a shadow.

(116) MV, R. Jonah, B.: 'Study of the Torah'. L.: 'man's duties towards God and man.'

(117) Therefore do not waste any time away from your task. cf. Job XI, 8, 9 (of the study of the ways and purposes of God). It is as high as heaven . . . deeper than the nether-world . . ., the measure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea.

(118) Human beings (v. M. and R. Jonah and others). The faculties which man has at his service (L.).

(119) Naturally so; some more and some less, but all are so inclined; therefore you should deliberately overcome that sluggishness.

(120) Prov. VIII, 10, 11, Receive my instruction and not silver, and knowledge rather than choice gold; for wisdom is better than rubies, and all things desirable are not to be compared with her ('Instruction', 'Knowledge', 'Wisdom' are taken to mean the Torah). 'Reward' here would, accordingly, mean that the very knowledge of the Torah is the reward acquired by the diligent work put into the study thereof.

(121) The Master of the World, i.e., God; v. Marmorstein, op. cit., p. 77.

(122) In that Scripture repeatedly urges the study of the Word of God and the fulfilment of His precepts, and, even if you should renounce the desire for the reward, you must carry out your task because your Master insists that you should.

(123) MV has an interesting alternative interpretation, viz., 'You were not made a free man (i.e. delivered from Egyptian bondage) so that you might remain exempt from Torah and Precepts.' The divine purpose of the Redemption was that Israel might accept God's Law. Ex. XIX, 4, 5, Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians . . . Now therefore, if ye will hearken unto My voice indeed, and keep my covenant. Deut. IV, 37 — 40, . . . and brought thee . . . out of Egypt . . . and thou shalt keep His statutes and his commandments. ibid. VI, 23, 24, And He brought us forth from thence . . . and he commanded us to do all these statutes.

(124) V. Mishnah 6, n. 1.

(125) L. says the פְּעֻלָּה means labour accomplished, work perfected. The passage would thus mean: You can trust God to reward you if you have carried out His commandments to the highest perfection of which you are capable.

(126) Lit., 'for the future (that is) to come,' or 'for (the time) that is due to come,' i.e., the Hereafter or the Messianic future.

Mishna - Mas. Avoth Chapter 3

MISHNAH 1. AKABIAH B. MAHALALEEL¹ SAID: APPLY THY MIND² TO THREE³ THINGS AND THOU WILT NOT COME INTO THE POWER OF SIN: KNOW WHENCE THOU CAMEST, AND WHITHER THOU ART GOING, AND BEFORE WHOM THOU ART

DESTINED TO GIVE AN ACCOUNT AND RECKONING. WHENCE CAMEST THOU? — FROM A FETID DROP. WHITHER ART THOU GOING? — TO A PLACE OF DUST,⁴ OF WORM AND OF MAGGOT.⁵ BEFORE WHOM ART THOU DESTINED TO GIVE AN ACCOUNT AND RECKONING?⁶ — BEFORE THE KING OF THE KINGS OF KINGS,⁷ THE HOLY ONE,⁸ BLESSED BE HE.⁹

MISHNAH 2. R. HANINA, THE VICE-HIGH PRIEST,¹⁰ SAID: PRAY FOR THE WELFARE OF THE GOVERNMENT, FOR WERE IT NOT FOR THE FEAR THEREOF, ONE MAN WOULD SWALLOW UP ALIVE HIS FELLOW-MAN.¹¹ R. HANANIAH B. TERADION¹² SAID: [WHEN] TWO SIT TOGETHER AND THERE ARE NO WORDS OF TORAH [SPOKEN] BETWEEN THEM, LO, THIS [CONSTITUTES] A SESSION OF SCORNERS, AS IT IS SAID: NOR SAT HE IN THE SEAT OF THE SCORNFUL;¹³ BUT [WHEN] TWO SIT TOGETHER AND THERE ARE WORDS OF TORAH [SPOKEN] BETWEEN THEM, THE SHECHINAH¹⁴ ABIDES AMONG THEM, AS IT IS SAID: THEN THEY THAT FEARED THE LORD SPOKE ONE WITH ANOTHER;¹⁵ AND THE LORD HEARKENED AND HEARD, AND A BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE WAS WRITTEN BEFORE HIM, FOR THEM THAT FEARED THE LORD AND THAT THOUGHT UPON HIS NAME¹⁶. — I HAVE NO [SCRIPTURAL PROOF FOR THE PRESENCE OF THE SHECHINAH] EXCEPT [AMONG] TWO, WHENCE [IS THERE PROOF THAT] EVEN [WHEN THERE IS ONLY] ONE [PERSON]. THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, APPOINTS UNTO HIM A REWARD? — SINCE IT IS SAID: THOUGH HE SIT ALONE AND [MEDITATE] IN STILLNESS, YET HE TAKETH [A REWARD] UNTO HIMSELF.¹⁷

MISHNAH 3. R. SIMEON¹⁸ SAID: IF THREE HAVE EATEN AT ONE TABLE¹⁹ AND HAVE NOT SPOKEN THEREAT WORDS OF TORAH, [IT IS] AS IF THEY HAD EATEN SACRIFICES [OFFERED] TO THE DEAD,²⁰ FOR [OF SUCH PERSONS] IT IS SAID, FOR ALL TABLES ARE FULL OF FILTHY VOMIT, [THEY ARE] WITHOUT THE ALL-PRESENT.²¹ BUT, IF THREE HAVE EATEN AT ONE TABLE, AND HAVE SPOKEN THEREAT WORDS OF TORAH, [IT IS] AS IF THEY HAD EATEN AT THE TABLE OF THE ALL-PRESENT, BLESSED BE HE, AS IT IS SAID, THIS IS THE TABLE BEFORE THE LORD.²²

MISHNAH 4. R. HANINA B. HAKINAI²³ SAID: HE WHO KEEPS AWAKE AT NIGHT, AND HE WHO WALKS ON THE WAY ALONE²⁴ AND MAKES ROOM²⁵ IN HIS HEART FOR THAT WHICH IS FUTILE,²⁶ LO, THIS [MAN] INCURS GUILT [EXPIABLE] BY HIS LIFE.²⁷

MISHNAH 5. R. NEHUNIA²⁸ B. HAKKANAH²⁹ SAID: WHOEVER TAKES UPON HIMSELF THE YOKE OF THE TORAH,³⁰ THEY REMOVE FROM HIM THE YOKE OF GOVERNMENT³¹ AND THE YOKE OF WORLDLY CONCERNS,³² AND WHOEVER BREAKS OFF FROM HIMSELF³³ THE YOKE OF THE TORAH, THEY PLACE UPON HIM THE YOKE OF GOVERNMENT AND THE YOKE OF WORLDLY CONCERNS.

MISHNAH 6. R. HALAFTA³⁴ [A MAN] OF KEFAR HANANIA³⁵ SAID: [WHEN THERE ARE] TEN SITTING TOGETHER AND OCCUPYING THEMSELVES WITH TORAH, THE SHECHINAH ABIDES AMONG THEM, AS IT IS SAID: GOD STANDETH IN THE CONGREGATION OF GOD.³⁶ AND WHENCE [DO WE INFER THAT THE SAME APPLIES] EVEN [WHEN THERE ARE] FIVE? [FROM] THAT WHICH IS SAID: AND HE HATH FOUNDED HIS BAND UPON THE EARTH.³⁷ AND WHENCE [DO WE INFER THAT THE SAME APPLIES] EVEN [WHEN THERE ARE THREE?] [FROM] THAT WHICH IS SAID: IN THE MIDST OF THE JUDGES HE JUDGETH.³⁸ AND WHENCE [DO WE INFER THAT THE SAME APPLIES] EVEN [WHERE THERE ARE] TWO? [FROM] THAT WHICH IS SAID: THEN THEY THAT FEAR THE LORD SPOKE ONE WITH ANOTHER, AND THE LORD HEARKENED, AND HEARD ETC.³⁹ AND WHENCE [DO WE INFER THAT THE SAME SAME APPLIES] EVEN [WHEN THERE IS] ONE? [FROM] THAT WHICH IS SAID: IN EVERY

PLACE WHERE I CAUSE MY NAME TO BE MENTIONED I WILL COME UNTO THEE AND BLESS THEE.⁴⁰

MISHNAH 7. R. ELEAZAR⁴¹ (A MAN) OF BERTOTHA⁴² SAID: GIVE UNTO HIM OF THAT WHICH IS HIS, FOR THOU AND WHAT THOU HAST ARE HIS; EVEN SO [WE FIND IT EXPRESSED] IN [THE CASE OF] DAVID, [WHEN] HE SAID: FOR ALL THINGS COME OF THEE, AND OF THINE OWN HAVE WE GIVEN THEE.⁴³

R. SIMEON⁴⁴ SAID: WHEN ONE, WALKING ON THE ROAD, REHEARSES⁴⁵ [WHAT HE HAS LEARNT], AND BREAKS OFF⁴⁶ FROM HIS REHEARSING, AND SAYS, 'HOW FINE IS THIS TREE!' [OR] 'HOW FINE IS THIS NEWLY PLOUGHED FIELD!' SCRIPTURE⁴⁷ ACCOUNTS IT TO HIM AS IF⁴⁸ HE HAD INCURRED GUILT [EXPIABLE] BY HIS LIFE.⁴⁹

MISHNAH 8. R. DOSTAI⁵⁰ B. R. JANNAI⁵¹ SAID IN THE NAME OF⁵² R. MEIR: WHOEVER FORGETS ONE [SINGLE] WORD⁵³ OF HIS STUDY, SCRIPTURE ACCOUNTS IT UNTO HIM AS IF HE HAD INCURRED GUILT [EXPIABLE] BY HIS LIFE, AS IT IS SAID, ONLY TAKE HEED TO THY SELF AND KEEP THY SOUL DILIGENTLY, LEST THOU FORGET THE THINGS WHICH THINE EYES SAW⁵⁴. ONE COULD [HAVE INFERRED THAT THIS IS THE CASE] EVEN WHEN HIS STUDY PROVED [TOO] HARD FOR HIM; [THERE IS, THEREFORE] SOMETHING [FURTHER] TAUGHT [IN SCRIPTURE], SAYING: AND LEST THEY DEPART FROM THY HEART ALL THE DAYS OF THY LIFE.⁵⁵ THUS, HE DOES NOT INCUR GUILT EXPIABLE BY HIS LIFE UNLESS HE DELIBERATELY⁵⁶ SUFFERS THEM TO DEPART⁵⁷ FROM HIS HEART.

MISHNAH 9. R. HANINA B. DOSA⁵⁸ SAID: ANYONE WHOSE FEAR OF SIN⁵⁹ PRECEDES⁶⁰ HIS WISDOM, HIS WISDOM IS ENDURING,⁶¹ BUT ANYONE WHOSE WISDOM PRECEDES HIS FEAR OF SIN, HIS WISDOM IS NOT ENDURING.⁶² HE [ALSO] USED TO SAY: ANYONE WHOSE DEEDS EXCEED HIS WISDOM, HIS WISDOM IS ENDURING, BUT ANYONE WHOSE WISDOM EXCEEDS HIS DEEDS, HIS WISDOM IS NOT ENDURING.⁶³

MISHNAH 10. HE [ALSO] USED TO SAY: ANYONE FROM WHOM THE SPIRIT OF [HIS FELLOW-] CREATURES DERIVES SATISFACTION, FROM HIM THE SPIRIT OF THE ALL-PRESENT [TOO] DERIVES SATISFACTION.⁶⁴ BUT ANYONE FROM WHOM THE SPIRIT OF [HIS FELLOW-] CREATURES DERIVES NO SATISFACTION, FROM HIM THE SPIRIT OF THE ALL-PRESENT [TOO] DERIVES NO SATISFACTION.

R. DOSA B. HARKINAS⁶⁵ SAID: MORNING SLEEP,⁶⁶ MIDDAY WINE,⁶⁷ CHILDREN'S TALK⁶⁸ AND SITTING IN THE ASSEMBLIES OF THE IGNORANT⁶⁹ PUT A MAN OUT OF THE WORLD.⁷⁰

MISHNAH 11. R. ELEAZAR OF MODI⁷¹ SAID: ONE WHO PROFANES THINGS SACRED,⁷² AND ONE WHO SLIGHTS THE FESTIVALS, AND ONE WHO CAUSES HIS FELLOW-MAN'S FACE TO BLANCH⁷³ IN PUBLIC, AND ONE WHO NULLIFIES THE COVENANT OF OUR FATHER ABRAHAM,⁷⁴ PEACE BE UPON HIM,⁷⁵ AND HE WHO EXHIBITS IMPUDENCE TOWARDS THE TORAH,⁷⁶ EVEN THOUGH HE HAS TO HIS CREDIT⁷⁷ [KNOWLEDGE OF THE] TORAH⁷⁸ AND GOOD DEEDS, HE HAS NOT A SHARE IN THE LIFE OF THE WORLD TO COME.⁷⁹

MISHNAH 12. R. ISHMAEL SAID: BE QUICK⁸⁰ [TO RENDER SERVICE] TO A SUPERIOR⁸¹ AND EASY [OF APPROACH] TO A SUPPLIANT [FOR THY SERVICES],⁸² AND RECEIVE ALL MEN WITH CHEERFULNESS.⁸³

MISHNAH 13. R. AKIBA SAID: JESTING AND LIGHT-HEADEDNESS⁸⁴ LEAD A MAN ON⁸⁵ TO LEWDNESS;⁸⁶ TRADITION⁸⁷ IS A FENCE TO THE TORAH;⁸⁸ TITHES [FORM] A FENCE TO WEALTH,⁸⁹ VOWS A FENCE TO SELF-RESTRAINT;⁹⁰ A FENCE TO WISDOM IS SILENCE.⁹¹

MISHNAH 14. HE [ALSO] USED TO SAY: BELOVED IS MAN⁹² IN THAT HE WAS CREATED IN THE IMAGE [OF GOD]. [IT IS A MARK OF] SUPERABUNDANT LOVE [THAT] IT WAS MADE KNOWN TO HIM THAT HE HAD BEEN CREATED IN THE IMAGE [OF GOD], AS IT IS SAID: FOR IN THE IMAGE OF GOD MADE HE MAN.⁹³

BELOVED ARE ISRAEL IN THAT THEY WERE CALLED CHILDREN OF THE ALL-PRESENT. [IT WAS A MARK OF] SUPERABUNDANT LOVE [THAT] IT WAS MADE KNOWN TO THEM THAT THEY WERE CALLED CHILDREN OF THE ALL-PRESENT, AS IT IS SAID: YE ARE CHILDREN OF THE LORD YOUR GOD.⁹⁴ BELOVED ARE ISRAEL IN THAT A DESIRABLE INSTRUMENT⁹⁵ WAS GIVEN TO THEM. [IT WAS A MARK OF] SUPERABUNDANT LOVE [THAT] IT WAS MADE KNOWN TO THEM THAT THE DESIRABLE INSTRUMENT, WHEREWITH THE WORLD HAD BEEN CREATED,⁹⁶ WAS GIVEN TO THEM, AS IT IS SAID: FOR I GIVE YOU GOOD DOCTRINE FORSAKE NOT MY TEACHING.⁹⁷

MISHNAH 15.⁹⁸ EVERYTHING IS FORESEEN⁹⁹ BUT THE RIGHT [OF CHOICE]¹⁰⁰ IS GRANTED, AND THE WORLD IS JUDGED WITH GOODNESS,¹⁰¹ AND EVERYTHING IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PREPONDERANCE OF [MAN'S] DEED[S].¹⁰²

MISHNAH 16. HE¹⁰³ [ALSO] USED TO SAY: EVERYTHING¹⁰⁴ IS GIVEN AGAINST A PLEDGE,¹⁰⁵ AND A NET IS SPREAD OUT OVER ALL THE LIVING;¹⁰⁶ THE STORE¹⁰⁷ IS OPEN AND THE STOREKEEPER¹⁰⁸ ALLOWS CREDIT, BUT THE LEDGER¹⁰⁹ IS OPEN AND THE HAND WRITES,¹¹⁰ AND WHOEVER WISHES TO BORROW MAY COME AND BORROW; BUT THE COLLECTORS¹¹¹ GO ROUND REGULARLY EVERY DAY AND EXACT DUES FROM MAN, EITHER WITH HIS CONSENT OR WITHOUT HIS CONSENT,¹¹¹ AND THEY HAVE THAT ON WHICH THEY [CAN] RELY [IN THEIR CLAIMS], SEEING THAT THE JUDGMENT IS A RIGHTEOUS JUDGMENT,¹¹² AND EVERYTHING IS PREPARED FOR THE BANQUET.¹¹³

MISHNAH 17. R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH¹¹⁴ SAID: WHERE THERE IS NO TORAH¹¹⁵ THERE IS NO GOOD BREEDING;¹¹⁶ WHERE THERE IS NO GOOD BREEDING THERE IS NO TORAH.¹¹⁷ WHERE THERE IS NO WISDOM THERE IS NO FEAR [OF GOD]; WHERE THERE IS NO FEAR [OF GOD] THERE IS NO WISDOM.¹¹⁸ WHERE THERE IS NO UNDERSTANDING¹¹⁹ THERE IS NO KNOWLEDGE;¹²⁰ WHERE THERE IS NO KNOWLEDGE THERE IS NO UNDERSTANDING. WHERE THERE IS NO MEAL¹²¹ THERE IS NO TORAH;¹²² WHERE THERE IS NO TORAH THERE IS NO MEAL.¹²³ HE USED TO SAY: ONE WHOSE WISDOM EXCEEDS HIS DEEDS¹²⁴ UNTO WHAT IS HE [TO BE] COMPARED? UNTO A TREE THE BRANCHES WHEREOF ARE MANY AND THE ROOTS FEW, SO THAT WHEN THE WIND COMES, IT UPROOTS IT AND OVERTURNS IT UPON ITS FACE, AS IT IS SAID, FOR HE SHALL BE LIKE A TAMARISK IN THE DESERT, AND SHALL NOT SEE WHEN GOOD COMETH; BUT SHALL INHABIT THE PARCHED PLACES IN THE WILDERNESS, A SALT LAND AND NOT INHABITED.¹²⁵ BUT ONE WHOSE DEEDS EXCEED HIS WISDOM, UNTO WHAT IS HE [TO BE] COMPARED? UNTO A TREE THE BRANCHES WHEREOF ARE FEW AND THE ROOTS MANY, SO THAT EVEN IF ALL THE WINDS IN THE WORLD COME AND BLOW UPON IT, THEY MOVE IT NOT OUT OF ITS PLACE, AS IT IS SAID, FOR HE SHALL BE AS A TREE PLANTED BY THE WATERS AND

THAT SPREADETH OUT ITS ROOTS BY THE RIVER, AND SHALL NOT SEE WHEN HEAT COMETH, BUT ITS FOLIAGE SHALL BE LUXURIANT, AND SHALL NOT BE ANXIOUS IN THE YEAR OF DROUGHT, NEITHER SHALL CEASE FROM YIELDING FRUIT.¹²⁵

MISHNAH 18. R. ELIEZER HISMA¹²⁶ SAID: KINNIM [I. E. 'NESTS']¹²⁷ AND PITHEHE NIDDAH [I.E. 'THE STARTING TIMES OF A MENSTRUOUS WOMAN']¹²⁸ ARE ESSENTIAL ORDINANCES;¹²⁹ [THE STUDY OF THE] 'REVOLUTIONS' [OF THE HEAVENLY BODIES]¹³⁰ AND ARITHMETIC¹³¹ ARE AFTER COURSES¹³² OF WISDOM.

(7) An early appellation of God which has parallels in the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha. V. Marmorstein, op. cit. p. 90.

(8) A synonym for God introduced in the third century. Marmorstein, op. cit., p. 97 and pp. 216-17: at that period saint-worship spread in Christianity, and Judaism reacted by calling God הַקְדוֹשׁ (and variations), implying that He is the only Holy Being. Here, therefore, in an early Tannaitic dictum, הַקְדוֹשׁ must be by a later hand. It is not in Lowe's MS. From Tanhuma Gen. (ed. Buber, p. 120) Marmorstein concludes that the original reading was הוּא בְרוּךְ הַמְקוֹם בְּרוּךְ הוּא, v. op. cit., p. 109, n. 13.

(9) Marmorstein, op. cit., p. 90, points out that בְרוּךְ הוּא is an early adjunct to various names of God, and refers to Jub. XXII, 27, and the Book of Enoch. Consideration of the first point will induce humility; of the second, will prevent too strong a craving for worldly pleasures; of the third, will result in a fuller appreciation of the majesty and power of God. (After M., R. Jonah and B.)

(10) סִגְנֵי הַכַּהֲנִים cf. II Kings XXIII, 4, כַּהֲנֵי הַמְשָׁנָה the priests of the second rank, which Targum renders סִגְנֵי כַּהֲנֵי. The 'Segan' was appointed to take the place of the High Priest on the Day of Atonement in the event of some occurrence preventing the latter from performing the offices of the Day, since those offices were strictly obligatory and might be performed by none except a properly constituted High Priest, v. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 97 n. 1.

(11) V. Jer. XXIX, 7, And seek ye the welfare of the city whither I have carried you away captive, and pray unto the Lord for it; for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace. For the expression 'swallow alive', cf. Prov. I, 12 (the wicked say.) Let us swallow them (i.e. the innocent) up alive.

(12) Father of Beruriah, the wife of R. Meir.

(13) Ps. I, 1. לְצִיִּים the plural, according to a Rabbinic exegetical rule, denotes a minimum of two. The following verse, but his delight is in the Law of the Lord shows, by contrast, that a session of the scornful means one at which there is no conversation on Torah.

(14) שְׁכִינָה the Divine Immanence, from the root שָׁכַן 'to dwell'. It has been thought that GR. (sc. GR.) in N.T. is a transliteration of שְׁכִינָה. This identification is however by no means established; v. Abelson, The Immanence of God in Rabbinic Literature, p. 80. He rejects the identification except in one case (John I, 14), where he admits only a 'seeming probability'. Marmorstein, op. cit., pp. 103-4, says, 'It is by no means impossible that שְׁכִינָה stands in the Aramaic versions for מְקוֹם, both of which point to the dwelling-place of God.' He also refers to the statement of Landau, Synonyma fur Gott, to the effect that שְׁכִינָה is the latest of God's names to be used before the period of the redaction of the Mishnah.

(15) Obviously two persons conversing.

(16) Mal. III, 16.

(17) Lam. III, 28. The rendering given here is one that was probably in the mind of the Sage who used the quotation here. Lowe's MS. has a different version of this section of the Mishnah, viz., 'as for one who sits and studies, Scripture accounts it unto him as if he fulfilled the whole Torah, as it is said, then one sitteth alone (and meditateth) in stillness, it - is as he hath taken (the yoke of the Torah) upon himself.' R. Jonah cites a similar version. 'I have no etc.' is omitted according to MV, p. 506, in the text of Ephraim of Regensburg and other 'careful texts', but M. and R. Jonah had it.

- (18) R. Simeon b. Yohai, a disciple of R. Akiba. In II ARN, Ch. XXXIV, the first part of the Mishnah is attributed to R. Eleazar son of Zadok.
- (19) Three males over the age of thirteen constitute a quorum for a corporate form of the Opening of Grace after Meals. This rule possibly has its origin in the custom reflected here, as the recital of Grace after meals was in certain circumstances considered as covering also the desirable custom of speaking words of Torah at the table.
- (20) I.e., idols, v. Ps. CVI, 28, They joined themselves also to Ba'al-Pe'or, and ate the sacrifices of the dead. Cf. Isa. VIII, 19.
- (21) Isa. XXVIII, 8. The second half is translated here in accordance with the Aggadic rendering of בלי מקום (in the Versions, and no place [is clean]), viz., to the effect that God is not present at such a table; and inasmuch as God comes wherever His name is mentioned or Torah studied (v. Mishnah 6), God's absence can only be due to the absence of words of Torah. Elijah Wilna draws attention to the verse following, Whom shall one teach knowledge etc. as indicating that what was lacking at those tables was Torah.
- (22) Ezek. XLI, 22, where it refers to the Altar. By designating the Altar as 'table', the text is taken to convey that there are times when the table of man can become as hallowed even as the altar — when it is consecrated by words of Torah spoken thereat.
- (23) A disciple of R. Akiba.
- (24) MV., B., L.: 'alone' is also to be understood with 'he who keeps awake at night'.
- (25) For this meaning of the Pi'el of פנה cf. Gen. XXIV, 31.
- (26) Most commentators take this to qualify the two preceding clauses, as there is nothing wrong with keeping awake at night (according to some, even alone) as long as one is occupied with worthy thoughts, e.g., with prayer (cf. Ps. CXIX, 62, at midnight I will rise to give thanks unto Thee . . .), or with Torah (cf. Josh. I, 8, This book of the Law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night. Ps. LXIII, 7, When I remember Thee on my couch, and meditate on Thee in the night-watches). Nor is there moral danger in walking alone when similarly occupied, cf. Deut. VI, 7, and thou shalt talk of them (i.e., the words commanded by God) . . . when thou walkest by the way. Some versions 'and he who makes room in his heart . . .' thus making three categories of men who endanger their own lives.
- (27) Or 'incurs guilty responsibility for his life'.
- (28) Probably a form of הוניא (Onias), or of יוהנן (Johanan). He was a contemporary of R. Johanan b. Zakkai and a teacher of R. Ishmael.
- (29) Some read ha-Kanah. The meaning and derivation of the name is obscure. קנה Kanah occurs in Josh. XVI, 8, XVII, 8, as the name of a brook or wadi, and ibid. XIX, 28, as the name of a place. Geiger, relying on a reading הקנא, conjectures 'the zealot', v. Bacher Agada d. Tannaiten I, p. 58. n. 1.
- (30) V. Schechter, Some Aspects, Chapters V-VII and XIV. Buchler, Sin and Atonement, pp. 88ff., says the 'yoke of the Torah' is not exactly synonymous with the 'yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven,' and refers particularly to the duty of the study of Torah.
- (31) Jast. s.v. מלכות 'the yoke of secular government, i.e. the burden of office.' Buchler, op. cit., 89-91; the yoke of the Imperial Government.
- (32) The strain imposed by the struggle for existence and striving for wealth and by various forms of temptation; cf. Buchler, op. cit., pp. 89 and 91, n. 3, 'worldly occupation'. In the 13th century this and similar passages were assumed to mean that poor scholars were supported by the communities.
- (33) V. Schechter, op. cit., pp. 220-221.
- (34) A contemporary of R. Akiba. P.B. versions add 'b. Dosa'.
- (35) The present Kefr Anan, a village in Galilee.
- (36) Ps. LXXXII, I. A 'congregation' consists of a minimum of ten, as the term 'Edah is used in Num. XIV, 27, for ten men, v. Sanh. 2a. A 'congregation of God' is obviously one that is constituted in honour of God.
- (37) Amos IX, 6. For אגדתו A.J.V. (following BDB) gives vault. R. Halafta however understood it as band (A.V. troop). M. says אגדתו means a number of things held together by the five fingers of the hand, as well as the hand itself, consisting as it does of five separate fingers knit together.
- (38) Ps. LXXXII, 1. The smallest Jewish Court consisted of three judges. In some versions (e.g. MV, R., B., Lowe's MS.) this Scriptural text is quoted for five (counting the two litigants in addition to the three judges), and Amos IX, 6, is cited for three as שְׁנַיִם means a bundle of three, cf. M.; B. M. I, 8, [Of] how many [does] an 'Aguddah' of Shetaroth (= documents) [consist]? — [Of] three tied one to another. The term is also used for the binding of the ceremonial palm branch, myrtle, and willow twigs (Lev. XXIII, 40) (M. Sukkah III, 8). An 'Aguddah' of hyssop (Ex. XII, 22) consists of three stalks (M. Parah XI, 9). Tosaf. to Sukkah, 13a, referring to our Mishnah, upholds the allocation of Biblical texts adopted in the versions used for this translation, since (a) in Ber. 6a, where the subject is the Divine Presence among ten (at prayer), three (sitting as judges), and two (studying Torah), the verse quoted for three is as here, viz., Ps. LXXXII, 1, In the midst of judges etc. (there is no reference there to five); and (b) a comparison with Isa. XLVIII, 13, suggests that שְׁנַיִם in Amos IX, 6, may be understood to mean a hand and would thus be appropriate as an allusion to five.

(39) Mal. III, 16. 'One with another' indicates the presence of two.

(40) Ex. XX, 21. 'Thee' indicates one person only who is responsible for mentioning God's Name.

(41) Some versions: b. Judah; a contemporary of R. Akiba.

(42) In Upper Galilee. Baer thinks it is identical with Berotha (Ezek. XLVII, 16), and Berothai (II Sam. VIII, 8), the precise location of which is uncertain (v. BDB).

(43) I Chron. XXIX, 14.

(45) This rendering is preferred because (a) the root bears that meaning, and (b) it is only recapitulation of that which has already been learnt that is recommended for wayfarers (v. Ta'an. 10b).

(46) וּמַפְסִיק seems to imply a deliberate act.

(47) Rashi omits this, as no scriptural text is quoted here. Lowe's MS. has the impersonal form מַעֲלִין עָלָיו 'They account it to him'. It may be that the verse intended here is omitted because it is quoted in the next paragraph.

(48) MV and R. emphasize 'as if' because actually he does not thereby forfeit his life, as, after all, exclaiming 'how fine, etc.' is a form of adoration of God. It is only because learning is so much more important that the breaking off therefrom deserves severe condemnation.

(49) V. supra 4, n. 5.

(50) A Greek name, GR. **

(51) Probably a graecized form of Johanan.

(52) To say a thing in the name of him who said it, was a point of honour among the Rabbis (v. infra VI, 6), even as it was of the essence of a tradition of learning.

(53) Point, detail or subject.

(54) Viz., the 'righteous statutes and judgments, etc.' of the previous verse. Deut. IV, 9.

(55) Ibid.

(56) Lit. 'he sits down and . . .'

(57) Or 'turns them away' or 'removes them'.

(58) A disciple of R. Johanan b. Zakkai.

(59) I.e., his moral convictions and conduct.

(60) Takes precedence in his estimation (B.); or, precedes in order of acquisition. If one already possesses firmly acquired moral habits, wisdom will strengthen his attachment to them and this practical result, gained through wisdom, will encourage him to seek more wisdom (M.).

(61) I ARN, Ch. XXII, cites Ps. CXI, 10, The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. Cf. Prov. I, 7, The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge, and ibid. III, 7, Be not wise in thine own eyes; Fear the Lord, and depart from evil.

(62) Wisdom will have taught him the principles of higher conduct but, not being habituated to the latter, he will find it irksome and will give up wisdom, so that it might not trouble his conscience, or restrain his unprincipled conduct. Thus 'his wisdom will not endure' (M.). I ARN, Ch. XXII, reports R. Johanan b. Zakkai: 'A wise man who is not sin-fearing is like a skilled artisan who has no tools.'

(63) I ARN, ibid. cites Ex. XXIV, 7, All that the Lord hath spoken we shall observe and hearken (rendered in accordance with the Rabbinic interpretation which regards this as a declaration promising observance of the commandments, made by Israel before they had even heard the commandments). The general sense seems to be that one's observance of commandments should not depend on one's having achieved, by one's own wisdom, a full understanding of them. The more precepts one practises, the more will one seek to extend one's knowledge as to their meaning, purpose, and manner of observance. If, however, one acquires wisdom which he does not apply to his daily conduct, he will see no use in his wisdom and drop it.

(64) V. Prov. III, 4, So shalt thou find grace and good favour in the sight of God and man.

(65) The names are said to be Greek, GR. and GR. Maim. Introduction to 'Zera'im', Ch. 4, says he was a contemporary of Simeon the Righteous and lived on till the days of R. Akiba. Hyman, A., Toledoth, suggests that Maim. relies on J. Yeb. I and Yeb. 16a. If these passages be taken literally, R. Dosa actually knew also Ezra and Haggai, but, the reference to the seat once occupied by Haggai may easily have been to a seat so designated by a tradition known to R. Dosa (so already Hyman). He was a contemporary of R. Johanan b. Zakkai and a rich man. His dictum here reflects conduct prevailing in his social stratum. V. Bacher, Tradition, p. 29. AT I, p. 157.

(66) Late sleeping is decried in Prov. XXVI, 14, The door is turning upon its hinges, and the sluggard is still upon his bed. Early rising is, by implication, recommended, e.g. Ps. CXIX, 62, At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee; ibid. 147-8, I rose early at dawn and cried, I hoped in Thy word. Mine eyes forestalled the night-watches, that I might meditate in Thy word. Some take it to mean morning sleep that makes one late for the proper time for reciting the Shema', v. supra p. 22, n. 8.

(67) Because it makes one unfit for meditation or study.

(68) R. Jonah points out that just because of its pleasantness, which is due to love for children, one is likely to be tempted to listen to it for too long, and thus lose time that should be given to the study of Torah.

(69) Not necessary or casual intercourse with them is condemned here, but habitual and prolonged stay in the society of the characteristically ignorant and boorish, involving participation in their inane pursuits.

(70) For the phrase cf. supra II, 11.

(71) A contemporary of R. Johanan b. Zakkai whose disciple he may have been. His aggadic interpretations were much sought after (v. Shab. 55b). He met his death through the treacherous cunning of a Samaritan informer who denounced him to Bar-Cochba during the siege of Bethar, ca. 135.

(72) קדשים. Objects belonging or due to the sanctuary, either absolutely, in accordance with scriptural enactments, or by virtue of having been voluntarily dedicated thereto.

(73) I.e., puts him to shame. MV. reads המאדים 'he who causes etc . . . to redden.' המלבין is explained in B.M. 58b: 'the blush subsides and whiteness takes its place.' .

(74) 'Of our father Abraham' not found in the parallels where the original reference is apparently to setting at nought God's covenant (with Israel) in general, e.g., Sifre to Num. XV, 22, ed. Friedman, ם III, p. 31b, where the covenant is identified with the Torah. In J. Sanh. XI, p. 27c, however, the phrase is explained: 'one stretching the foreskin' (to disguise circumcision). It seems that originally מפר ברית meant nullifying the covenant in general and that R. Eleazar of Modin applied it specifically to the covenant of circumcision. V. Buchler, op. cit., pp. 97ff.

(75) Not found in most editions.

(76) Omitting (as do parallels cited supra n. 5) שלא כהלכה not according to the Halachah'. R. Hillel (a commentator on Aboth) quoted by Friedmann, Sifre, ibid. explains מועיו פניו מוחצוף פניו R. Jonah מועיו פניו, which explanations presuppose the absence of שלא כהלכה, in their versions. Geiger, retaining שלא כהלכה, understands by the phrase the allegorical interpretation of the Torah not in accordance with Halachah, (i.e., the authoritative rulings of the Law), with special reference to the Christians who taught that it is only the ideas symbolized by the precepts that mattered, but not their actual observance. Bacher (ערכי המדרש (תנאים) פנים s.v. p. 101, says שלא כהלכה was added by one who took פנים in the sense of 'interpretations' or 'meanings' (v. MV. p. 512), thus making the phrase mean 'publishing interpretations of the Torah'; as this could not, in itself, be considered a sin at all, much less such a grave one as contemplated here, he felt bound to add שלא כהלכה i.e., interpretations opposed to Halachah. But פנים in the sense of 'meanings' is not found in Tannaitic sources, its earliest use being by the Amora R. Jannai. V. Buchler, op. cit., p. 103. Guttman בחינת קיום המצוות (in Bericht jud.-Theol. Seminar, Breslau 1930), pp. 62-4, understands the allegorizers of the Alexandrian school who rejected the literal sense of the commandments and accepted only the symbolic.

(77) Lit., 'in his hand'.

(78) MV. says 'we do not read תורה', which word is also omitted in Lowe's MS. (rightly so according to Guttman, op. cit., p. 64, n. 4.)

(79) Sifre to Num. XV, 31: 'he deserves to be pushed out of the world.' R. Eleazar's stricture certainly refers to the antinomian teachings of Jewish Gnostics. V. Buchler, op. cit., p. 100. Guttman, op. cit., p. 64, points out that the first results of the allegorizing methods of Hellenistic Jews were the rejection of 1) circumcision (and obliteration of its effects), (v. I Macc. XVII); 2) sacrifices קדשים (v. particularly the Sibylline Oracles); 3) the holy days מועדות (cf. Philo, who denounces those who honour the Sabbath idea on account of the allegorical significance of the number seven, yet do not observe the Sabbath).

(80) So B. קל often occurs in the Bible in the sense of 'swift', cf. infra V, 20.

(81) ראש often so in Bible. The reading, in Lowe's MS., קל ראש which, if correct, would have the meaning (unparalleled elsewhere) of 'pliant' (as opposite to 'strong-headed') is to some extent borne out by MV. a.l.:
הקל את ראשך

(82) תשחורת a difficult word. Its meaning here can only be surmised. There are various renderings of the word and these affect the meaning of the dictum. Some deriving it from שחור, translate 'a black-haired, i.e. young, man' (as in Ekah Rab. to I, 2) which would make the whole mean 'be deferential to your seniors and condescending to your juniors.' Others connect it with שחורר 'officer' (v. Sifre Deut. פ 6, p. 66b); the sense would thus be 'be submissive to a ruler and pleasant even to a lesser official.' Another translation is 'press-gang' (as in Seder Elijah R. Ch. 1), making the saying a piece of advice to accommodate oneself to supreme authority and its executive representatives however oppressive. The rendering adopted here derives תשחורת from שחר 'to seek', 'and appears to give, in conjunction with the context, the best sense.

(83) Cf. supra I, 15.

(84) Levity, irresponsibility. Some (e.g. R. Jonah) 'jesting when combined with light-headedness.'

(85) Lit. 'cause (someone's) feet to move', cf. Hos. XI, 3.

(86) According to Buchler. Some Types of Jewish Palestinian Piety, pp. 62-7, 'Jesting' שחוק denotes trifling with sexual modesty. The verb (in the form צחק) has already in Biblical Hebrew (Gen. XXXIX, 14, 17) the meaning of immoral advances. שחוק is often clearly so used in Rabbinic Hebrew. In ARN I and II this part of the dictum is brought into line with the parts following, viz. 'a fence (safeguard) for honour is not to jest (or, act immodestly).'

(87) מסורת (so vocalized by Bacher). The traditionally fixed text of the Bible, particularly the Pentateuch, on the correctness of every detail of which depends not only the interpretation of the Scriptures in general, but the determination of laws meant for practical observance (Halachah). The term מסורת as used by R. Akiba (who is said to have based interpretations even on the apparently ornamental 'titles' תנין = crowns) attached to certain letters; v. Men. 29b) already contained the idea of the specialized branch of learning which set itself the task of noting and recording every detail — down to the minutest — of the text of the Scriptures, and bears the name Masorah מסורה par excellence, v. Bacher op. cit. s.v. מסורת P. 74 and Buchler, op. cit., p. 62.

(88) Cf. supra I, 1.

(89) Omitted in Lowe's MS. and in ARN. The commentators explain the saying by quoting, from Shab. 119a, the play on the words עשר תעשר (Deut. XIV, 22), viz. עשר בשביל שתתעשר, 'Give tithes in order that thou mayest be made rich' (by R. Johanan, 3rd cent.). Our dictum would thus mean that the giving of tithes is a fence which protects, and even makes for an increase in, wealth. L., however, interprets 'tithes are A fence against (v. end of next note) the dangers attending the possession of wealth; wealth is liable to make its possessor too proud, and lead him to attribute his success to himself alone and to discount or disregard the factor of God's help, but the giving of tithes is a safeguard against such a notion, as it is bound to bring to his mind the truth that the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof (Ps. XXIV, 1). Cf. Deut. VIII, 13-18, lest when thy silver and gold is multiplied . . . then thy heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God . . . and thou say in thy heart: 'My power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth.' But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth.

(90) פרישות Perishuth. The manner of life of the פרושים (Pharisees); v. M. a. l. and more fully Nahmanides to Lev. XIX, 2, who says, 'separating oneself, withdrawing and keeping away, restraining oneself, from going to the full length of permitted conduct, when taking such advantage is likely to conduce to something unseemly, e.g. gluttony, insobriety, unbecoming language, sexual over-indulgence. Such self-restraint is the standard of the conduct of the פרושים (Pharisees).' Vows can be helpful to Perishuth, inasmuch as when one has made vows with regard to particular things, he has thereby acquired the capacity for a general self-discipline and a more complete aloofness from everything improper. I ARN, Ch. XXVI and II ARN, Ch. XXXIII, invert the saying סייג לנדרים פרישות 'A fence to vows is self-restraint'. As we know that R. Akiba discouraged vows (I ARN, Ch. XXVI, v. Buchler, op. cit., p. 64, n. 1), this reading may be the correct one and the dictum would mean, Perishuth is a fence (guard, defence) against vows, i.e., a life of Perishuth makes it unnecessary to indulge in vows, which in themselves are not wholly commendable. v. Schechter, Some Aspects, pp. 199-218, Buchler, op. cit., pp. 62-5.

(91) Cf. supra I, 17. Buchler, op. cit., p. 72, contends that as safeguards for Torah and Hokma are given, the admonitions in this Mishnah were intended, in the first place, for scholars. The reference to Perishuth bears out this contention.

(92) L. utilizes this passage to controvert the notion prevailing in some quarters, that the Rabbinic conception of God's fatherly love was narrow and chauvinistic. It is inconceivable, he says, that one should deny the merits of eminent Gentiles who have rendered great humanitarian services, such as Jenner, the pioneer in vaccination, Guttenberg, the inventor of printing, Drake, who introduced into Europe the potato which has often averted the worst consequences of famine, Reuchlin, the great humanist who at the beginning of the 16th century defended the Talmud against the machinations of the apostate Pfefferkorn, who instigated Emperor Maximilian I to order the confiscation and destruction of the Talmud.

(93) Gen. IX, 6 is quoted and not I, 26, 27, because whilst in the latter passage the fact is just recorded, in the one quoted we are told that God informed man (to wit Noah) of the fact.

(94) Deut. XIV, 1 is quoted and not Israel is my first-born son, Ex. IV, 22, because the latter was addressed to Pharaoh; the first occasion the Israelites were told that they were God's children was in the passage quoted, v. Buchler, Sin and Atonement, p. 80; Kohler, Theologie des Judentums, p. 195.

(95) I.e., the Torah, cf. Ps. XIX, 11, More desired are they (the Ordinances of the Lord) than gold, yea than much fine gold.

(96) The idea that the Torah (or Wisdom) pre-existed creation, and 'assisted' thereat, or formed the 'architect's plan' thereof, is said to go back to such passages as Prov. III, 19, The Lord by wisdom founded the earth; ibid. VIII, 22-32. (Wisdom says), The Lord made me as the beginning of his way, the first of His works of old . . . When there were no depths . . . no fountains . . . before the mountains, before the hills was I brought forth . . . While as yet He had not made the earth . . . when He established the heavens, I was there . . . then was I by him a nursling . . . The Hebrew for nursling אִמּוֹן was understood as אֲמֵן a craftsman' or 'architect'.

(98) Cf. I ARN, Ch. XXXIX; II Ch. XLIV. In the latter this Mishnah and the following are in the name of R. Eliezer son of R. Jose the Galilean.

(99) MV., 'seen'. i.e., God sees all. The verb צָפָה often means looking ahead in time or distance. When this is said of God, 'foreseen' is, strictly speaking, not applicable or admissible, as God is independent of time and space, i.e., there is with Him neither past nor future nor distance, and he 'sees' everything at once. Marmorstein, The Old Rabbinic Doctrine of God, p. 159, points out that the idea of God's prescience in Rabbinic literature goes back to Simeon b. Shetah (or Judah b. Tabbari) who called God בַּעַל מַחְשָׁבוֹת (Master of Thoughts); Sanh. 37b, Schechter, Some Aspects, p. 285, refers to ARN (Addenda), pp. 75a and 81b, from which it would seem that צָפוּי was taken by some to refer to man. In one case (p. 75a) 'everything is seen by man: by means of the keys of wisdom' granted to him, man can learn what the heavenly likeness is, and choose the right way.' The other reference (p. 81b) takes צָפוּי to mean 'covered', 'hidden' (from the root צָפָה which in the Pi'el form means 'cover', 'hide') and explains: since man sinned, the light of wisdom was hidden from him and he knows not what will happen in the future.' MV., p. 514, and Aruch s.v. סַעַד quote a reading צָפוּן 'hidden'.

(100) Or 'Authority (over self)' i.e., free-will. v. Oesterley, The Sayings of the Jewish Fathers a.l. Commentators quote Deut. XXX, 19, I have set before thee life and death, the blessing and the curse; therefore choose life . . . as the basis for the doctrine of free-will in Judaism. Kohler, op. cit. p. 175, cites Gen. IV, 7, and the Midrash thereto. Schechter, op. cit., p. 284 ff. says the parallels in ARN make it doubtful whether R. Akiba here really meant the antithesis of predestination and free-will. Kohler, op. cit., Ch. XXXVII, points out that Judaism teaches free-will in matters of ethical conduct.

(101) Cf. Ps. CXLV, 9, The Lord is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all his works. This, according to the Rabbis, includes even the wicked.

(102) Readings differ here. Some omit רוֹב e.g., Lowe's MS., v. Taylor a.l. The version in Aruch ibid. and M. instead of וְהַכֹּל read אֲבָל לֹא 'but not according to. . .' M. explains: Divine goodness is exercised towards man not by reason of the greatness of a deed, but according to the number of deeds, i.e., repeated and ever new good deeds. But see L. The Version in Aruch explains: Men are judged by God's goodness and not in accordance with their doings. Bacher AT. I, p. 275, n. 2, refers to R. Akiba's saying in Koh. R. to X, 1, 'Man is adjudged in accordance with the preponderance of his deeds; he should always consider himself half guilty and half innocent; one more good deed and it is well with him, one more evil deed, woe to him.' Some seem to understand by הָעוֹלָם mankind as a whole; and by הַכֹּל all men in their individual capacities. Others: 'In this world (הָעוֹלָם) all are judged with kindness (else sinners would be condemned outright); but in the hereafter, everybody (וְהַכֹּל) is judged according to (the Preponderance of) his (good or bad) deeds.'

(103) V. supra, p. 38, n. 4.

(104) Life and all its benefits.

(105) A guarantee of good conduct. MV.: the soul.

- (106) All are liable to be caught if they attempt to evade the pledge. For the expression, cf. Ezek. XXXII, 3.
- (107) The divine store of gifts intended for man.
- (108) God.
- (109) פנקס == GR. writing-tablet, list, register, account-book.
- (110) Cf. supra II, 1.
- (111) The agents for the execution of divine justice, e.g. suffering, calamity, sickness. (12) Or (lit.) 'knowledge', i.e., whether or not he realizes, or acknowledges, that the visitations coming upon him are in punishment for his sins. Our translation means: whether he willingly undergoes penance for his sins, or he unrepentantly resents the punishment.
- (112) There is no vindictiveness in it.
- (113) The reward of those who discharge their obligations is assured in the hereafter. B.: 'everybody is fitted for the banquet,' i.e., all men are ab initio intended to have a share in the spiritual feast of the world to come. R. Meshullam b. Kalonymos quoted in Aruch s.v. סעד and in MV., says 'banquet', here is an expression for death, and explains thus (after Shab. 152a): Just as all enter for a banquet by one entrance, but are allotted seats at the banquet according to their status, so at death, it is true, all go through the same door, but once they have entered the hereafter they are treated severally in accordance with their merits. R. Jonah: 'The purpose of all this is to make ready for the banquet of the future life.' Incidentally this Mishnah reflects the traders' methods of those days.
- (114) A younger contemporary of R. Gamaliel II, R. Joshua b. Hananiah etc. He was chosen Nasi at a very young age when R. Gamaliel, who had become unpopular, was forced to vacate the Patriarchate. When the latter was restored, R. Eleazar b. Azariah retired to the second office of Ab-Beth-din. He used his great wealth to facilitate the approaches made by the Rabbis to the Roman authorities on behalf of the Jews.
- (115) Used here for religion in general, any religion that postulates divine authority for moral conduct (L.).
- (116) Or 'cultured behaviour', Derech Eretz. Unless rooted in religion (in the above sense), moral and cultured conduct lacks the source which feeds and sustains it perennially.
- (117) Conversely, religious belief is sterile when it does not express itself in ethical conduct and becoming behaviour.
- (118) V. supra 9 and notes.
- (119) בינה Binah, The ability to make logical deductions (v. B.).
- (120) דעת Da'ath, The ability to arrive at the reasons for things (v. B.). Perhaps better rendered '(capacity for) thinking.'
- (121) קמח flour v. infra V. 15 p. 69 n. 10.
- (122) Lack of food impairs one's mental powers. Or, if Torah is understood here as earlier in the paragraph, starvation is liable to have an adverse effect on one's moral faculties.
- (123) Cf. Deut. VIII, 3, Man doth not live by bread only, but by everything that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live.
- (124) Cf. supra Mishnah 9.
- (125) Jer. XVII, 6 and 8. Both quotations are omitted in Lowe's MS. In the context, the first refers to 'the man that trusteth in man,' the second to 'the man that trusteth in the Lord.' Placing wisdom before deeds means relying on unaided human abilities. The practice of deeds commanded by God, whether or not one's mind comprehends them fully, means placing implicit trust in Him.
- (126) A disciple of R. Akiba: In ARN I and II only the second half of this Mishnah is attributed to him; the first half is in the name of R. Johanan b. Nuri.
- (127) The name for a section of laws dealing with bird. sacrifices (v. Lev. XII, 8; XIV, 4, 22, 49; XV, 14, 29).
- (128) A term for the regulations whereby the times of commencement, and the duration, of 'uncleanness of women, by reason of menstruation, are calculated and determined.
- (129) גופי הלכות . Lowe's MS. גופי תורה .
- (130) Astronomy.
- (131) So MV, also Jastrow, who derives it from GR. From this the term גמטריא could have acquired its better known meaning, viz. the use, for exegetical purposes, of the letters of alphabet in their numerical value, or as initials of words. Another derivation is from GR.; the word then meaning 'mensuration' in its various forms. V. Sanh. (Sonc. ed.) p. 121, n. 4.
- (132) Desirable but not essential. Some: 'appetizers' that create a desire for further knowledge. Others derive from GR. 'the outer circle' (of wisdom) as opposed to גופי הלכות, the core and essence of learning. The reason for this differentiation is that the former consist of positive commandments, i.e. 'deeds', 'works', whilst the latter are typical of 'wisdom'. The particular instances of the former appear to have been chosen for the following reasons: In one case, (kinnim), the precepts concerned are operative only when the Temple in Jerusalem exists and functions, and in the other, (Pithehe Niddah, they deal with unpleasant details; and yet, the inference is, even these precepts, apparently of lesser moment and of lesser attractiveness, form part of the essence of knowledge for the Israelite. The instances in the latter category are singled out, because in one case (astronomy), it is the most comprehensive branch of wisdom and is, in addition, calculated to increase our adoration of God by giving man a fuller conception of His wonderful Universe, and in the other case (arithmetic or mensuration) it is a science of great mind-exercising, as well as of highly utilitarian, value. Even so, the inference is, these sciences are of secondary importance to the study of the practical precepts of the Torah.

Mishna - Mas. Avoth Chapter 4

MISHNAH 1. BEN ZOMA¹ SAID: WHO IS HE THAT IS WISE? HE WHO LEARNS FROM EVERY MAN, AS IT IS SAID: FROM ALL WHO TAUGHT ME HAVE I GAINED UNDERSTANDING, WHEN THY TESTIMONIES WERE MY MEDITATION.² WHO IS HE THAT IS MIGHTY?³ HE WHO SUBDUES HIS [EVIL] INCLINATION,⁴ AS IT IS SAID: HE THAT IS SLOW TO ANGER IS BETTER THAN THE MIGHTY; AND HE THAT RULETH HIS SPIRIT THAN HE THAT TAKETH A CITY.⁵ WHO IS HE THAT IS RICH?⁶ HE WHO REJOICES IN HIS LOT, AS IT IS SAID: WHEN THOU EATEST OF THE LABOUR OF THY HANDS, HAPPY SHALT THOU BE, AND IT SHALL BE WELL WITH THEE.⁷ HAPPY SHALT THOU BE — IN THIS WORLD, AND IT SHALL BE WELL WITH THEE — IN THE WORLD TO COME. WHO IS HE THAT IS HONOURED? HE WHO HONOURS HIS FELLOW-MEN, AS IT IS SAID: FOR THEM THAT HONOUR ME I WILL HONOUR, AND THEY THAT DESPISE ME SHALL BE LIGHTLY ESTEEMED.⁸

MISHNAH 2. BEN 'AZZAI⁹ SAID: RUN¹⁰ TO [PERFORM] AN EASY PRECEPT,¹¹ AS [YOU WOULD] IN [THE CASE OF] A DIFFICULT ONE,¹² AND FLEE¹³ FROM TRANSGRESSION; FOR [ONE] PRECEPT DRAWS [IN ITS TRAIN¹⁴ ANOTHER] PRECEPT, AND [ONE] TRANSGRESSION DRAWS [IN ITS TRAIN ANOTHER] TRANSGRESSION;¹⁵ FOR THE RECOMPENSE FOR [PERFORMING] A PRECEPT IS A PRECEPT, AND THE RECOMPENSE FOR [COMMITTING] A TRANSGRESSION IS A TRANSGRESSION.

MISHNAH 3. HE USED TO SAY:¹⁶ DESPISE NOT ANY MAN, AND DISCRIMINATE NOT¹⁷ AGAINST ANY THING,¹⁸ FOR THERE IS NO MAN THAT HAS NOT HIS HOUR, AND THERE IS NO THING THAT HAS NOT ITS PLACE.¹⁹

MISHNAH 4. R. LEVITAS (A MAN) OF JABNEH²⁰ SAID: BE EXCEEDING²¹ LOWLY OF SPIRIT,²² FOR THE EXPECTATION OF MORTAL MAN IS [THAT HE WILL TURN TO] WORMS.²³

R. JOHANAN B. BEROKAH²⁴ SAID: WHOEVER PROFANES THE NAME OF HEAVEN²⁵ IN SECRET,²⁶ THEY²⁷ EXACT THE PENALTY FROM HIM IN THE OPEN.²⁸ [IN THIS RESPECT, IT IS ALL] ONE [WHETHER ONE HAS ACTED] IN ERROR, AND [IT IS ALL] ONE²⁹ [WHETHER ONE HAS ACTED] WITH PRESUMPTION, IN [A CASE WHERE THE RESULT IS] THE PROFANATION OF THE NAME.³⁰

MISHNAH 5. R. ISHMAEL³¹ SAID: HE WHO LEARNS IN ORDER TO TEACH,³² THEY AFFORD HIM³³ ADEQUATE MEANS TO LEARN AND TO TEACH; AND HE WHO LEARNS IN ORDER TO PRACTISE,³⁴ THEY AFFORD HIM ADEQUATE MEANS TO LEARN AND TO TEACH³⁵ AND TO PRACTISE.

R. ZADOK³⁶ SAID: MAKE THEM³⁷ NOT A CROWN WHEREWITH TO MAGNIFY

THYSELF, NOR A SPADE³⁸, WHEREWITH TO DIG;³⁹ EVEN SO WAS HILLEL WONT TO SAY, 'AND HE WHO MAKES [UNWORTHY] USE OF THE CROWN [OF LEARNING] PASSETH AWAY.'⁴⁰ LO, [HENCE] THOU HAST LEARNT: ANYONE WHO DERIVES WORLDLY BENEFIT⁴¹ FROM THE WORDS OF THE TORAH, REMOVES HIS LIFE FROM THE WORLD.⁴²

MISHNAH 6. R. JOSE⁴³ SAID: WHOEVER HONOURS THE TORAH⁴⁴ IS HIMSELF⁴⁵ HONoured BY MEN, AND WHOEVER DISHONOURS THE TORAH IS HIMSELF DISHONoured BY MEN.

MISHNAH 7. R. ISHMAEL⁴⁶ SAID: HE WHO REFRAINS HIMSELF FROM JUDGMENT,⁴⁷ RIDS HIMSELF OF ENMITY⁴⁸ AND ROBBERY⁴⁹ AND VAIN SWEARING;⁵⁰ BUT HE WHOSE HEART IS OVER-CONFIDENT IN GIVING A JUDICIAL DECISION,⁵¹ IS FOOLISH,⁵² WICKED⁵³ AND OF UNCOUTH SPIRIT.⁵⁴

MISHNAH 8. HE USED TO SAY: JUDGE NOT ALONE,⁵⁵ FOR NONE MAY JUDGE ALONE SAVE ONE;⁵⁶ AND SAY NOT ACCEPT MY VIEW', FOR THEY ARE FREE BUT NOT THOU.⁵⁷

MISHNAH 9. R. JONATHAN⁵⁸ SAID: WHOEVER FULFILS THE TORAH OUT OF [A STATE OF] POVERTY,⁵⁹ HIS END [WILL BE] TO FULFIL IT OUT OF [A STATE OF] WEALTH;⁶⁰ AND WHOEVER DISCARDS THE TORAH OUT OF [A STATE OF] WEALTH,⁶¹ HIS END [WILL BE] TO DISCARD IT OUT OF [A STATE OF] POVERTY.⁶²

MISHNAH 10. R. MEIR⁶³ SAID: DO [RATHER] LESS BUSINESS, AND BUSY THYSELF [MAINLY] WITH THE TORAH,⁶⁴ AND BE LOWLY OF SPIRIT BEFORE ALL MEN.⁶⁵ IF THOU HAST [ONCE] BEEN IDLE IN [REGARD] TO] THE TORAH, THOU WILT HAVE MANY [MORE] OCCASIONS FOR IDLENESS BEFORE THEE,⁶⁶ BUT IF THOU HAST LABOURED AT THE TORAH, THERE IS⁶⁷ MUCH REWARD TO GIVE UNTO THEE.⁶⁸

MISHNAH 11. R. ELIEZER B. JACOB⁶⁹ SAID: HE WHO PERFORMS ONE PRECEPT ACQUIRES FOR HIMSELF ONE ADVOCATE,⁷⁰ AND HE WHO COMMITS ONE TRANSGRESSION ACQUIRES FOR HIMSELF ONE ACCUSER.⁷¹ REPENTANCE⁷² AND GOOD DEEDS ARE AS A SHIELD⁷³ AGAINST PUNISHMENT.⁷⁴

R. JOHANAN⁷⁵ HA-SANDELAR SAID: EVERY ASSEMBLY WHICH IS FOR THE NAME OF HEAVEN,⁷⁶ [WILL IN] THE END THEREOF BECOME [OF] PERMANENT [VALUE]; AND EVERY ASSEMBLY WHICH IS NOT FOR THE NAME OF HEAVEN, [WILL IN] THE END THEREOF NOT BECOME [OF] PERMANENT [VALUE].⁷⁷

MISHNAH 12. R. ELEAZAR⁷⁸ B. SHAMMUA⁷⁹ SAID: LET THE HONOUR OF THY DISCIPLE BE AS DEAR TO THEE AS THINE OWN,⁸⁰ AND THE HONOUR OF THY COLLEAGUE AS THE REVERENCE⁸¹ FOR THY TEACHER,⁸² AND THE REVERENCE FOR THY TEACHER AS THE FEAR OF HEAVEN.⁸³

MISHNAH 13. R. JUDAH⁸⁴ SAID: BE CAREFUL IN STUDY,⁸⁵ FOR AN ERROR IN STUDY AMOUNTS TO PRESUMPTION.⁸⁶ R. SIMEON⁸⁷ SAID: THERE ARE THREE CROWN⁸⁴.⁸⁸ THE CROWN OF TORAH,⁸⁹ THE CROWN OF PRIESTHOOD,⁹⁰ AND THE CROWN OF ROYALTY; BUT THE CROWN OF A GOOD NAME EXCELS⁹¹ THEM ALL.⁹²

MISHNAH 14. R. NEHORAI⁹³ SAID: GO AS A [VOLUNTARY] EXILE TO A PLACE OF TORAH⁹⁴ — AND SAY NOT THAT IT WILL COME AFTER THEE⁹⁵ — FOR [IT IS] THY

FELLOW[-STUDENT]S WHO WILL MAKE IT PERMANENT IN THY KEEPING⁹⁶ AND LEAN NOT UP ON THINE OWN UNDERSTANDING.⁹⁷

MISHNAH 15. R. JANNA⁹⁸ SAID: IT IS NOT IN OUR POWER [TO EXPLAIN THE REASON] EITHER OF THE SECURITY OF THE WICKED,⁹⁹ OR EVEN OF THE AFFLICTIONS OF THE RIGHTEOUS.¹⁰⁰

R. MATHIA B. HERESH¹⁰¹ SAID: BE FIRST IN [ENQUIRING AFTER] THE PEACE¹⁰² OF ALL MEN; AND BE THOU A TAIL UNTO LIONS, AND NOT A HEAD UNTO FOXES.¹⁰³

MISHNAH 16. R. JACOE¹⁰⁴ SAID: THIS WORLD IS LIKE UNTO A VESTIBULE¹⁰⁵ BEFORE THE WORLD TO COME; PREPARE THYSELF¹⁰⁶ IN THE VESTIBULE, SO THAT THOU MAYEST ENTER THE BANQUETING-HALL.¹⁰⁷

MISHNAH 17. HE USED TO SAY: MORE BEAUTIFUL IS ONE HOUR [SPENT] IN REPENTANCE AND GOOD DEEDS¹⁰⁸ IN THIS WORLD, THAN ALL THE LIFE OF THE WORLD TO COME;¹⁰⁹ AND MORE BEAUTIFUL IS ONE HOUR OF THE EVEN-TEMPERED SPIRIT OF THE WORLD TO COME¹¹⁰, THAN ALL THE LIFE OF THIS WORLD.¹¹¹

MISHNAH 18. R. SIMEON B. ELEAZAR¹¹² SAID: PACIFY¹¹³ NOT THY FELLOW IN THE HOUR OF HIS ANGER;¹¹⁴ NOR COMFORT HIM IN THE HOUR WHEN HIS DEAD LIES BEFORE HIM,¹¹⁵ NOR QUESTION HIM AT THE TIME OF HIS VOW;¹¹⁶ NOR STRIVE TO SEE HIM IN THE HOUR OF HIS DISGRACE.¹¹⁷

MISHNAH 19. SAMUEL HA-KATAN¹¹⁸ SAID [QUOTING FROM SCRIPTURE]: REJOICE NOT WHEN THINE ENEMY FALLETH AND LET NOT THY HEART BE GLAD WHEN HE STUMBLETH.¹¹⁹ LEST THE LORD SEE IT, AND IT DISPLEASETH HIM, AND HE TURN AWAY HIS WRATH FROM HIM.¹²⁰

MISHNAH 20. ELISHA B. ABUYAH¹²¹ SAID: HE WHO LEARNS [WHEN] A CHILD, UNTO WHAT IS HE [TO BE] COMPARED?¹²² — UNTO INK WRITTEN UPON A NEW WRITING SHEET;¹²³ AND HE WHO LEARNS [WHEN] AN OLD MAN,¹²⁴ UNTO WHAT IS HE LIKE? — UNTO INK WRITTEN ON A RUBBED WRITING SHEET.¹²⁵

R. JOSE B. JUDAH (A MAN) OF KEFAR HA-BABLI¹²⁶ SAID: HE WHO LEARNS FROM THE YOUNG, UNTO WHAT IS HE [TO BE] COMPARED? UNTO ONE WHO EATS UNRIPE GRAPES, AND DRINKS WINE FROM HIS VAT;¹²⁷ AND HE WHO LEARNS FROM THE OLD, UNTO WHAT IS HE [TO BE] COMPARED? UNTO ONE WHO EATS RIPE GRAPES, AND DRINKS OLD WINE.¹²⁸

RABBI¹²⁹ SAID: REGARD NOT THE CONTAINER¹³⁰ BUT THAT WHICH IS THEREIN: THERE IS A NEW CONTAINER FULL OF OLD [WINE], AND AN OLD [CONTAINER] IN WHICH THERE IS NOT EVEN NEW [WINE].¹³¹

MISHNAH 21. R. ELEAZAR HA-KAPPAR¹³² SAID: JEALOUSY,¹³³ CUPIDITY¹³⁴ AND [THE DESIRE FOR] HONOUR PUT A MAN OUT OF THE WORLD.¹³⁵

MISHNAH 22. HE USED TO SAY: THE BORN [ARE DESTINED] TO DIE, THE DEAD TO BE BROUGHT TO LIFE,¹³⁶ AND THE LIVING¹³⁷ TO BE JUDGED; [IT IS, THEREFORE, FOR THEM¹³⁸] TO KNOW AND TO MAKE KNOWN, SO THAT IT BECOME KNOWN,¹³⁹ THAT HE IS GOD, HE THE FASHIONER,¹⁴⁰ HE THE CREATOR, HE THE DISCERNER,¹⁴¹ HE THE JUDGE, HE THE WITNESS,¹⁴² HE THE COMPLAINANT,¹⁴³ AND THAT HE IS OF A

CERTAINTY¹⁴⁴ TO JUDGE, BLESSED BE HE,¹⁴⁵ BEFORE WHOM THERE IS NO UNRIGHTEOUSNESS, NOR FORGETTING, NOR RESPECT OF PERSONS, NOR TAKING OF BRIBES,¹⁴⁶ FOR ALL IS HIS.¹⁴⁷ AND KNOW THAT ALL IS ACCORDING TO THE RECKONING.¹⁴⁸ AND LET NOT THY [EVIL] INCLINATION¹⁴⁹ ASSURE THEE THAT THE GRAVE IS A PLACE OF REFUGE FOR THEE;¹⁵⁰ FOR WITHOUT THY WILL¹⁵¹ WAST THOU FASHIONED, WITHOUT THY WILL WAST THOU BORN, WITHOUT THY WILL LIVEST THOU, WITHOUT THY WILL WILT THOU DIE,¹⁵² AND WITHOUT THY WILL ART THOU OF A CERTAINTY¹⁵³ TO GIVE AN ACCOUNT AND RECKONING¹⁵⁴ BEFORE THE KING OF THE KINGS OF KINGS, BLESSED BE HE.

(1) Simeon b. Zoma, a disciple of R. Joshua b. Hananiah. His own name is omitted as also that of his colleague, Simeon b. Azzai (v. infra, Mishnah 2). because they both died at an early age, before ordination (R.); their scholarship was nevertheless highly esteemed. After his death he was praised as the last of the (great) homileticians (Sotah IX. 15). though not many examples of his Aggadic exegesis are preserved. He was a devotee of mystical studies which, according to some, affected his mind. (V. Bacher AT I, p. 422ff.)

(2) Ps. CXIX, 99. This translation is in accordance with the interpretation presupposed here. The second part of the quotation is not given in all editions.

(3) I ARN 'the mightiest among the mighty'.

(4) יֵצֵר Yezzer. V. A.Z. (Sonc. ed.) p. 22, n. 7.

(5) Prov. XVI, 32.

(6) I ARN 'the richest among the rich'. In addition to the questions as to the mightiest and richest, I ARN has, 'Who is the most unpretentious (עָלוּב) among persons of unpretentious disposition? He who is as unpretentious as Moses', but no question as to who is honoured.

(7) Ps. CXXVIII, 2.

(8) 1 Sam. II, 30. Real honour comes from God, and the measure in which we honour man, created in the image of God, is the measure of the honour we give to God: if we honour God by honouring man, God will honour us. R.: God says: Them that honour Me, by honouring men (who are entitled to honour, e.g. parents. the aged. the learned), I shall honour. R. Jonah: If God honours those who honour Him, notwithstanding that all His creatures, by their mere existence and without deliberate or conscious effort, bring Him honour (cf. Isa. XLIII, 7), it follows, with greater force, that human beings (who are not entitled to honour automatically or to the same degree as God is), should reciprocate by honouring those who honour them.

(9) Cf. supra, p. 43. n. 1. Ben 'Azzai was first a disciple of R. Joshua b. Hananiah, and later stood towards R. Akiba in the alternating relationships of disciple and younger colleague. His death is attributed to his having 'peered into the Garden' of theosophic speculation (which some identify with Gnosticism), though in some sources he is named among the first victims of the Hadrianic persecutions. (V. Bacher, AT., I, pp. 408-9.)

(10) Show eagerness, seize the opportunity. cf. infra V, 20.

(11) Cf. P5. CXIX, 60. One is more liable to be slack and procrastinating with regard to an easy task, and thus forget it entirely; to obviate this one should hasten to perform it as soon as it presents itself.

(12) This clause is not in all versions.

(13) Not merely avoid, but as quickly as you can, put as long a distance as possible between transgression and yourself (L.). In both cases (i.e. of fulfilment of a precept and of avoidance of transgression) Ben 'Azzai advocates quickness of resolve and action (Buchler, Sin and Atonement, p. 309).

(14) Automatically (Buchler, ibid.).

(15) This saying has been explained variously: (i) Virtue is its own reward, and sin its own penalty. (ii) The spiritual joy one derives from the performance of a divine precept, (Mizwah) is in itself a Mizwah, i.e., a valuable religious experience. (iii) The practical gain from the carrying out of a precept, is the new precept which it automatically brings in its train. See Buchler, ibid., for a fine analysis of the dictum.

(17) מַפְלִיג a difficult word variously interpreted: 'place at a distance,' 'consider far off and unimportant, or impossible,' 'treat slightingly'. 'despise', 'cavil, or carp at'. The translation given here combines the literal meaning of the verb with the general sense of the dictum, as indicated by the context and adopted by commentators.

(18) Or 'word' or 'matter'. ARN adds: 'For it is said: Whoso despiseth the word shall suffer thereby, but he that feareth the commandment shall be rewarded (Prov. XIII, 13).’ evidently taking דבר in the Mishnah to mean ‘word (of God)’. This citation suggests that ARN took the whole dictum as a parallel to Mishnah 1 and 2 thus: Who is wise? He who learns from every man — there is no man that has not his hour. Run to perform an easy (seemingly unimportant) commandment-Discriminate not against any word (of divine command). . . for there is no word (precept), however abstruse or unimportant it may seem, that has not its place.

(19) The sense in which this Mishnah is generally understood is: No person or object or matter is so unimportant that you can be sure that you will not have to reckon with it, either for good or for evil, at some time or in some place or in some circumstances.

(20) A contemporary of R. Akiba, of whom we know only this saying in our Mishnah, and some passages attributed to him in Pirke di R. Eliezer.

(21) מאד מאד M. (followed by B. and R. Jonah) explains: Why this accentuated deviation from the advocacy of a middle course? Because, man being naturally over-inclined to pride, it is necessary to over-emphasize the quality of self-depreciation.

(22) Some editions add, ‘before all men’. The whole dictum is missing from Lowe’s MS. where the following saying is in the name of R. Levitas instead of that of R. Johanan b. Broka.

(23) V. supra III, 1.

(25) V. supra p. 3, n. 2, also p. 7, n. 10.

(26) How can any secret misdeed be a profanation of the Name, which necessarily implies a knowledge of the sin by at least one other than the guilty person? Tosaf. Yom Tob says: When the sin can be committed only together with another person, e.g. prohibited sexual intercourse. L.: There are two kinds of ‘profaners of the Name’: (a) one who commits a sin, making it clear to others that he contemptuously disregards the divine commandments; (b) one who transgresses secretly. not because he is concerned for the Glory of the Name of God, but for his own reputation among his fellow men, by whom he wishes to be regarded as a pious man. The latter is profaning the Name in secret, and it is this duplicity that is to be exposed by punishment in public. V.: A sin committed in secret which, should it become known, would cause a profanation of the Name.

(27) Used impersonally.

(28) חלול השם (Profanation of the Name) was considered so grave that R. Akiba taught that a person guilty thereof is not entitled to divine forgiveness.

(29) Lit., one . . . one’, cf. supra II, 9.

(30) M. insists that only in respect of being punished openly is there no difference between one who commits profanation of the Name in error and one who does so wilfully. In respect of the actual nature of the punishment (as is the case with reference to all sins), the Torah clearly distinguishes between the unwitting and presumptuous sinner (Lev. IV and V).

(32) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 5.

(33) II ARN, Ch. XXXII, ‘they do not afford him’, so also R. who explains: If his only object in learning is that he might become a teacher, i.e., be addressed as ‘Rabbi’, his efforts at learning do not enjoy the favour of Heaven. I ARN, Ch. XXVII, has our version.

(34) Cf. supra I, 17, ‘Study is not the most important thing, but deed.’

(35) Some texts insert here ‘to observe’.

(36) Probably the one who was contemporary of R. Johanan b. Zakkai. First century.

(37) I.e., the words of the Torah. Some texts ‘it’.

(38) In I Sam. XIII, 20, and Ps. LXXIV, 5, קרדם == axe. It may have been two tools in one, one side being a broad blade for a hatchet, and the other a pointed one for breaking up ‘ground. V. fast. s.v. and Oesterley, ‘Sayings’, ad loc.

(39) Lowe’s MS. and R. לאכל מהן lit., ‘to eat of them’ which Taylor translates, ‘an axe, to live by them’, evidently taking אכל in the sense of ‘enjoy’, ‘have the use of’, ‘have benefit from’, as e.g. in Pe’ah I, 1. R. Jonah has לחתוך ‘to cut’.

(40) V. supra I, 13.

(41) Cf. the reading preserved in R.

(42) Our translation is In accordance with the maxim of Hillel which gave rise to this thought. R. however understood ‘takes his reward in this world’. Seemingly he translated ‘takes his life (i.e. all the benefits to which he may be entitled) out of this world.' Tosaf. Yom Tob 'removes himself from the life of the world to come. M. bases on R. Zadok's dictum a vigorous defence of his view that it is strictly forbidden to make a living out of the Torah and that none of the early Rabbis ever made such use of it. A scholar who happens to be poor, or afflicted and physically helpless, should of course be helped. It is, indeed, a duty of congregations to pay the levies and taxes on behalf of scholars (v. supra III, 5, and note). but that is because they are, in this respect, looked upon as Kohanim' (Aaronides) who were by Biblical law exempt from tithes, etc.

(43) b. Halafta. 2nd century.

(44) Honouring the Torah consists in zeal and alacrity in carrying out its precepts, in the proper and reverent care for books of, or appertaining to, the Torah, and in respectful bearing towards scholars (M.).

(45) גופו lit., 'his body'. 'his person'. V. supra I, 17.

(46) Some texts add 'his son'. II ARN, Ch. XXXIV, has R. Eliezer son of R. Eleazar ha'Kappar. R. had a reading. R. Eliezer, son of R. Jose.

(47) Either, (a) a judge who refrains from imposing a judgment, and strives to induce parties to come to an agreement; or (b) any person who avoids entering into litigation, and seeks a friendly settlement of differences.

(48) Which disappointed litigants might feel towards the judge, or towards the other side.

(49) The virtual robbery which a judge might commit if, however honestly, he gave a decision in favour of the wrong party; or which might result when a party in the heat of dispute puts in an exaggerated claim or denial and succeeds therein.

(50) The oath which a judge imposes, in accordance with the Torah, but which he may quite conceivably impose in error, though in good faith, on the wrong party (see L.); or, untrue statements which a litigant may, in the stress of the judicial proceedings, make under oath. The expression here used שבועת שוא (an oath taken in vain) differs, in its technical use, from שבועת שקר (a false oath), v. Shebu. 25b. Some (e.g., B.) think שוא ש is used here not in the technical sense, but as synonymous with שקר ש L. insists that שקר ש is inapplicable here, and that שוא ש is to be taken in its precise meaning.

(51) I.e., he looks upon the judicial position as one that confers on him the opportunity for exercising authority, rather than one that demands self-effacing objectivity, involving infinite pains in the sifting of evidence (v. supra I, 9), deliberate impartiality towards parties (v. I, 5), a deep and lifelong study of the Law, and patience in coming to a decision (v. I, 1), cf. infra VI, 6.

(52) He is too sure of his own wisdom and Seest thou a man wise in his own eyes? There is more hope of a fool than of him. (Prov. XXVI, 12.)

(53) Because he is indifferent to the possible injustice that may result from his actions.

(54) גם גם רוח = bulky, oversized, uncouth, gross. The same word with לב (heart) is translated 'over confident' earlier in the sentence.

(55) The Jewish judiciary system provided for the Great Sanhedrin of seventy-one members, a Lesser Sanhedrin of twenty-three, and the smallest court of three laymen or of one accredited expert (מומחה Mumhe) in the Law. But even this expert, although permitted to 'sit' alone, is advised here not to take unnecessary advantage of the permission but, if at all possible, to obtain the assistance of (two) others (so M.).

(56) I.e., God.

(57) Either, 'they are free to concur, but not thou to force them to concur,' or, 'they are entitled to say to thee, accept our opinion' (as they are in the majority), but not thou (as you are only one against two).' Some point out that an 'expert' who has called in lay assistance might be tempted to force his opinion by over-emphasizing his own superior learning, or even by pointedly reminding his cojudges that he could, had he chosen, have 'sat' and decided alone, and that he had called them in only as a matter of grace. The proper procedure is that whilst the expert's voice prevails on a point of law, that of a majority of the court is decisive in matters dependent on 'the weighing of opinions' (שקול הדעת).

(58) b. Jose(ph) as in II ARN, Ch. XXXV (where the wording of the dictum differs). I ARN, Ch. XXX has, R. Nathan b. Joseph. A disciple of R. Akiba and R. Ishmael. Frankel, Parke ha-Mishnah, p. 155, says his name, like that of his colleague R. Joshiah, does not occur in Mishnah or Tosef. or Torath Kohanim. The inclusion of the name here is due to the fact that in Aboth are mentioned many Tannaim of the sixth generation whose names occur otherwise only in Baraitas, v. Oesterley, a.l.

(59) I.e., whilst he is in etc. For a similar use of מ v. Deut. XXVIII, 47, מרב כל Lam. I, 3, מעני. Others: 'by means of poverty', i.e., by sacrificing time he could use for improving his material lot, in order to study and practise the Torah. Others: 'despite poverty'.

(60) With which he will be rewarded.

(61) Though it enables him to devote more time to the study of the Torah, and Increases his opportunities for observing its precepts. Or, because the thought and anxiety he expends on his possessions and concerns, occupy his mind to the exclusion of Torah.

(62) Which will be his punishment, and which might indeed make it impossible for him to devote himself to the Torah even if by that time he is desirous of making good his former omissions. For the latter half of the dictum cf. Deut. XXVIII, 47-8: Because thou didst not serve the Lord thy God with joyfulness and with gladness of heart, by reason of the abundance of all things; therefore shalt thou serve thine enemy whom the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things.

(63) The greatest of R. Akiba's disciples; deserved the name מאיר because 'he threw light' on the meaning of Scripture.

(64) Cf. supra II, 5, and infra VI, 5.

(65) Cf. Mishnah 4.

(66) Conditions conducive to idleness which will militate against your becoming learned in the Torah. Cf. the quotation from Megillath Hasidim in J. Ber., end, 'If thou forsakest it (the Torah) one day, it will forsake thee two days. 'a saying otherwise known from Sirach. V; also Sifre, Ekeb. ed. Friedmann, p. 84a. I ARN, Ch. XXIX: 'idlers (בטלנין) (such as robbers, thieves, lions, bears, etc.) against thee.' Others: 'idlers like thee'.

(67) Some texts 'He (God) has.'

(68) Cf. supra II, 14 and 16.

(69) Disciple and colleague of R. Akiba. There was an earlier scholar of the same name who lived towards the end of Temple times. V. Frankel, op. 'it., p. 76ff. Hyman Toledoth s.v.

(70) פרקליט Gr. **.

(71) קטיגור, Gr. **.

(72) Lit., 'Return'.

(73) תרים some identify with the Greek  = Gr.  'door', or its derivative Gr.  'an oblong shield'; others with Gr.  breastplate. In both cases it would denote something that serves as a protection. V. fast. for an attempted Hebrew derivation.

(74) If transgressions have outnumbered fulfilments of precepts, then divine punishment can be averted by Repentance (in the case of a person about to die), and by (that together with) good deeds (in the case of one who lives on).

(75) One of the youngest of R. Akiba's disciples. His cognomen is said to be due either to his occupation as a sandal-maker, or to his having been a native of Alexandria. Another opinion is that he was a piercer of gems, called in Aramaic סנדלכון (which may be identical with the Greek **).

(76) Or, for the 'sake of Heaven'. Lowe's MS. also some edd. of ARN (v. Schechter's ed. I ARN, Ch. XL, p. 129 note 23), 'In the name of duty (מצודה).'.

(77) Frankel, op. cit., p. 187, suggests that R. Johanan had in mind the distinction between the Palestinian schools and the Alexandrian schools (known to him who had come from Alexandria). In the latter they followed the allegorical method of exegesis, which led to negative and even antinomian results. Hyman, Toledoth s.v. suggests that R. Johanan said this with reference to the assembly of Rabbis, in which he himself took part, in the Valley of Beth-Rimmon after the fall of Bethar, for the purpose of encouraging his colleagues who had met for a worthy purpose under conditions that were precarious and with prospects that were extremely unpromising.

(78) Some: Eliezer.

(79) In II ARN, Ch. XXXIV, p. 76, this dictum is in the name of R. Nathan. R. El. b. Shammua' was a disciple of R. Akiba.

(80) I ARN (Ch. XXVII, p. 84) and II ARN (Ch. XXXIV, p. 76) cite Ex. XVII, 9: Moses 'bracketed' himself with his disciple Joshua by saying, 'choose unto us men'. Lowe's MS. and an alternative in R. MV. Aruch (v. Baer, Siddur Abodath Israel, a. I.) have 'as the honour of thy colleague' which produces an apparently smoother sequence. R. Jonah has a composite reading כשאלך כנבוד חברך which he tries to explain (v. Schechter, I ARN p. 85, n. 17).

(81) מורא the same word is translated 'fear', in 'fear of Heaven'.

(82) I ARN cites Num. XII, 11. Aaron said to Moses: 'I pray thee, my master.' Although Aaron was the elder brother, he acknowledged Moses as his master. II ARN cites Ex. VII, 2.

(83) I ARN cites Num. XI, 28, where Joshua addresses Moses, 'My Lord Moses.' II ARN cites Ex. IV, 16, 'And thou (Moses, the Master) shalt be unto him (Aaron) in God's stead.'

- (84) b. Il'a'i, a contemporary of R. Eleazar b. Shammua'. L.: This dictum is a complement to the foregoing and the advice is meant for the teacher.
- (85) In view of the foregoing note perhaps best render תלמוד as 'teaching'. Some texts have למוד but that too could have the meaning of 'teaching'.
- (86) If the error is due to carelessness; because one error leads to further errors, and is liable to result in breaches of the law not only on one's own part but on that of one's hearers or disciples.
- (87) b. Yohai, v. supra III, 4, and infra VI, 8, p. 87, n. 8.
- (88) Which one should try to attain; or, to which one should show deference.
- (89) Cf. Prov. I, 9: For they (instruction and teaching, תורה) shall be a chap let unto thy head.
- (90) Cf. Ex. XXIX, 6: And thou shalt set the mitre upon his (Aaron's) head, and put the holy crown upon the mitre.
- (91) For the verb עלה in this sense, cf. Prov. XXXI, 29.
- (92) Because without it the other crowns do not command deference. Cf. Eccl. VII, I; Prov. XXII, I.
- (93) Identified in this case with R. Eleazar b. 'Arach. V. supra II, 14 note.
- (94) B.: If there are no scholars in your own place. L.: Even if there are scholars in your own locality; the very experience of 'exile' — the strange surroundings, the privations it entails (cf. infra VI, 4) and the self-reliance it calls forth — is conducive to the better study of the Torah. The understanding of this passage in this sense has been the motive power of the deep-rooted custom among Jews, rife even in recent, and by no mean extinct in modern, times, of sending one's sons away from home to 'learn Torah'.
- (95) R. Eleazar b. 'Arach (v. p. 51, n. 14) had probably learnt this from personal experience, v. supra II, 14, n. 8.
- (96) The advantages of corporate study are frequently stressed. A companion in one's studies is not less important than a teacher (cf. supra I, 6).
- (97) Prov. III, 5. Some think that the stress intended is on the necessity for a teacher to give authoritative guidance to the student, and render 'and say not that it will come after thee or that thy equals (in learning) will help you to acquire a complete and sound knowledge; nor do thou lean on thine own understanding".'
- (98) Probably Jannai the father of R. Dosthai mentioned in III, 8; a contemporary of R. Meir.
- (99) Perhaps rather 'the secure feeling of . . .' cf. Jer. XII, 1, Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? Wherefore are they all secure that deal very treacherously?
- (100) 'Even (אף) . . .' The afflictions of the righteous might appear easier to account for, e.g., by alleging the man's righteousness may be a sham, and that he is being punished for hidden sins; even so we cannot know the real reason.
- (101) After the vocalization in I Chron. IX, 15. Others vocalize Harash v. Bacher AT. I, p. 380. R. Mathia (or Mattithiah) lived in Rome in the middle of the second century.
- (102) After II ARN, Ch. XXXIV לשאול בשלום cf. I ARN. Ch. XXIX end, or, 'Be first with the (greeting of) Shalom ('Peace') to all men.' It is reported of R. Johanan b. Zakkai that never did anyone anticipate him in the salutation of Peace, not even a heathen in the market-place (Ber. 17a).
- (103) Frankel, op. cit., p. 238, suggests that this dictum was intended against the proverb, attributed to Julius Caesar, to the effect that it is better to be the first in a small village, than second in a large city. There is much in this suggestion, as the latter proverb is all very well for a mentality that idealizes temporal power, but not for those who recognise the supremacy of the spirit (cf. Zech. IV, 6). V. Bacher op. cit., p. 384. For a Rabbinic reversal of R. Mathia's advice: 'Be a head to foxes rather than a tail to lions,' v. J. San. IV, 10, p. 22b.
- (104) Probably R. J. b. Kurshai (or Kudshai), a tradent of R. Meir and of R. Simeon b. Yohai.
- (105) פרוזדור Gr.  'the space before the door', 'porch'.
- (106) With repentance and good deeds.
- (107) טרקלין Gr.  A room with three couches for reclining at meals; among Romans, the triclinium was the dining room.
- (108) By means of which one wins one's way to the world to come.
- (109) When one's goal is attained. The energy and enthusiasm of the striving are more spiritually exhilarating than the final achievement.
- (110) The state of perfect and enduring balance, evenness and temperateness of spirit characteristic of the existence after death (cf. Eccl. IX, 10).
- (111) In which satisfaction is never complete, and joy never unalloyed. This world, whilst in the end not comparable to the world to come, has its compensations — the very striving in this world for the perfection that is possible only in the world to come, is something greater than the perfection itself, since the repentance and good deeds of this world can only be achieved by dint of conscious avoidance of evil, and of positive well-doing, the former superfluous and the latter not requiring deliberate effort, in the world to come.

(112) b. Shammua' (v. Mish. 12). R. Simeon was a disciple of R. Meir.

(113) תרצה The Pi'el of רצה is once used in the Bible, Job XX, 10, as 'seek the favour of . . . 'appease'.

(114) Your efforts are likely to be worse than useless.

(115) The Jewish custom is, therefore, not to offer condolence to mourners until after the interment of their dead.

(116) If one is closely questioned at the time he makes a vow, as to its precise scope etc., he is liable-either through overzeal or foolhardiness-to extend its scope and over-particularize its applicability, and thus undertake more than he intended, or impose upon himself uncalled for commitments or inhibitions; he is also likely to be led into expressing the vow in such terms as would make it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for him ever to obtain release therefrom (as one can, in many cases, be released from a vow by a competent 'court'). V. I ARN, Ch. XXVI, R. Akiba said, . . . be not free with vows.'

(117) Whether due to his own fault, or caused by others. He is liable to think that you are gloating over him (v. supra III, 11). The advice here is not that one should deliberately avoid seeing him, but that one should not seek opportunities for seeing him. Noticeable avoidance would be almost as undesirable.

(118) First century, called ha-Katan, the Small, on account of his humility, or (according to others) because he was less only than Samuel the Prophet. On his chronology, v. Herford, a.I.

(119) It may be that this dictum was placed here because it happens to illustrate and emphasize the advice immediately preceding. Even over an enemy one should not gloat, how much less over others. Bacher AT, I, p. 370, n. 8, cites a conjecture that דשמואל הקטן אמר is a mistaken amplification of the letters ש'ה'א which actually were the initial letters (ראשי תיבות) of the words שהרי הכתוב אומר 'even as Scripture says' introducing a Biblical authority for the last section of the foregoing sentence.

(120) Prov. XXIV, 17-18. Samuel ha-Katan did not adopt or advocate too pacific an attitude towards Israel's enemies; on the contrary, he played a leading part in the insertion into the daily 'Amidah Prayer of a special Blessing directed against Israel's external and (chiefly) internal enemies, the Minim. However, he quite conceivably felt that Israel by rejoicing at the fallings and stumblings of their enemies, and thus exhibiting an unworthy feeling, would incline God, who is ever on the side of the wronged, to favour their adversaries, not for the latter's merits but because of Israel's failings, and that thus would Israel, by their own fault, hold up their final and complete salvation from their enemies, for which he prayed. In the light of this consideration, the inclusion of verse 18, which is omitted in some Aboth texts, is necessary as supplying the main point to Samuel's favourite quotation.

(121) Second century. A disciple of R. Meir. He became a great scholar, but having entered too deeply into esoteric speculation, he eventually apostasized from Judaism, probably to Gnosticism. Thereafter he was referred to as אחר 'another'. Abuyah אבויה is the usual reading. Lowe's MS. has אביה Abiyah, a name occurring in I Kings XIV, 1.

(122) תורה תלומד לילד So all old texts except R. Jonah who has תורה תלומד לילד a reading adopted later by some. The reading followed here is borne out by I ARN, Ch. XXIV p. 77 and II ARN, Ch. XXXV, p. 88.

(123) Which is smooth and clean. נייר is derived by Jast. from נור 'to (be) clear,' i.e., a blank surface. Krauss derives from ניר 'warp', i.e., (originally) the fibre from which the writing material was prepared. In modern Hebrew, נייר is used for paper.

(124) I and II ARN. בזקנותו

(125) The rough surface causes spluttering and 'running' of the ink, rendering legibility difficult, if not impossible.

(126) A contemporary of Rabbi Judah ha-Nasi, as evident from the end of this Mishnah.

(127) New and unmaturing. One learning from the young can expect to obtain only immature knowledge.

(128) One who learns from the old gets the benefit of ripe knowledge and mature judgment.

(129) V. supra II, 1. The P.B. text has מאיר ר which is incorrect (v. Baer, Siddur, 'Abodath Israel a.I.).

(130) קנקן, fast. 'a cylindrical vessel let into the ground of the cellar, in general a wine- or oil-vessel'. 'Aruch Kohut suggests an Arabic derivation.

(131) Rabbi disputes R. Jose b. Judah's opinion. In Rabbi's experience, a man's age was by no means a reliable index to his learning.

(132) A contemporary of Rabbi and the teacher of the celebrated Aggadist R. Joshua b. Levi.

(133) קנאה Taylor rightly points out that the word is also used in a good sense, viz. 'emulation'.

(134) תאוה '(keen) desire', 'lust'.

(135) Any one of the undesirable characteristics mentioned have this effect, since they necessarily negate the religious teachings of the Torah, and render one unreceptive of the mental and moral excellences. (M.) For the phrase cf. supra II, 11.

(136) להחיות vocalize להחיות as a Nif'al. A polemic against those who denied resurrection (e.g. the Gnostics).

(137) M. and others, 'those living again (after their death)'.

(138) I.e., the living.

(139) I.e., to the end that, eventually, men might naturally and spontaneously, become aware that God is the creator etc. Cf. Jer. XXXI, 34, prophesying of the 'days that come', and they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying: 'Know the Lord'; for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord. (cf. R; Jonah).

(140) V. next note.

(141) היוצר and המבין. Cf. Ps. XXXIII, 15: He that fashioneth (היוצר) the hearts of them all, that considereth or discerneth (המבין) all their doings.

(142) Cf. Mal. III, 5: And I will come near to you in judgment, and I will be a swift witness

(143) בעל דין the opposite party in a lawsuit. Cf. Job XXXI, 35.

(144) עתיד Oesterley. 'in the hereafter'. The sentence is, of course, so understood; but, grammatically. עתיד with the Infinitive (used in Mishnaic Hebrew to express the future tense) generally, as here, expresses the certainty and inevitability of that which, it is said, is to happen. When used with regard to human beings one can render 'destined' as in supra III, 1.

(145) Omitted in some versions. For the expression. v. supra III, 1, note. perhaps it is inserted here in view of the reference to God as Judge. Cf. ברוך דין האמת. Blessed be the righteous Judge' prescribed in Ber. IX, 1, to be said on hearing evil tidings, but capable, of course, of general application. Note 'in whom there is no unrighteousness' which immediately follows here.'

(146) Taken from II Chron. XIX, 7: For there is no iniquity (or, unrighteousness) with the Lord our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of bribes. Cf. Deut. XXXII, 4: Ps. XCII, 16; 'nor forgetting' appears to have been added so as to declare every conceivable departure from justice as impossible with God; not only is He certain not to do an injustice deliberately, but even an unwitting miscarriage of justice through forgetting (either a man's good or evil deeds) cannot occur with Him. 'Nor taking of bribes'; M. says this must not be taken in the usual sense of the expression, because such a thing is positively unthinkable of God. What it means is that even if a man has a thousand good deeds to his credit to one evil one, the thousand do not 'influence' God to overlook the one. The latter must be expiated, while for the former there is reward.

(147) Apparently added by someone who took 'taking of bribes' in the ordinary sense. In view of M.'s interpretation (v. previous note) these words ('for all is His') are meaningless and superfluous.

(148) The account which a man must give of his life.

(149) V. supra II, 11.

(150) A polemic against the heretics who denied reward and punishment in the hereafter. V. p. 56, n. 4. Perhaps it is also intended as against the idea of suicide, which the Roman Stoics (e.g. Seneca) extolled as 'a way out'.

(151) The phrase is used mostly in the sense of 'against one's will'.

(152) This supports the suggestion in note 5 as to a possible polemic against suicide.

Mishna - Mas. Avoth Chapter 5

MISHNAH 1. WITH TEN [DIVINE] UTTERANCES¹ WAS THE WORLD CREATED.² AND WHAT IS THIS [SCRIPTURAL] INFORMATION [MEANT] TO TELL, FOR SURELY IT COULD HAVE BEEN CREATED WITH³ ONE UTTERANCE? BUT IT IS THAT PENALTY MIGHT BE EXACTED FROM THE WICKED WHO DESTROY THE WORLD THAT WAS CREATED WITH TEN UTTERANCES,⁴ AND TO GIVE A GOODLY REWARD TO THE RIGHTEOUS WHO MAINTAIN THE WORLD THAT WAS CREATED WITH TEN UTTERANCES.⁵

MISHNAH 2. [THERE WERE] TEN GENERATIONS FROM ADAM TO NOAH,⁶ IN ORDER

TO MAKE KNOWN HOW LONG-EXTENDED IS LONG-SUFFERING WITH HIM; FOR ALL THOSE GENERATIONS WERE REPEATEDLY ACTING PROVOKINGLY,⁷ UNTIL HE BROUGHT UPON THEM THE WATERS OF THE FLOOD.

[THERE WERE] TEN GENERATIONS FROM NOAH TO ABRAHAM,⁸ IN ORDER TO MAKE KNOWN HOW LONG-EXTENDED IS LONG-SUFFERING WITH HIM; FOR ALL THOSE GENERATIONS WERE REPEATEDLY ACTING PROVOKINGLY, UNTIL ABRAHAM, OUR FATHER, CAME AND RECEIVED THE REWARD OF ALL OF THEM.⁹

MISHNAH 3. WITH TEN TRIALS WAS ABRAHAM, OUR FATHER, PROVED,¹⁰ AND HE STOOD [FIRM]¹¹ IN THEM ALL; TO MAKE KNOWN HOW GREAT WAS THE LOVE OF ABRAHAM,¹² OUR FATHER (PEACE BE UPON HIM).

MISHNAH 4. TEN WONDERS WERE WROUGHT FOR OUR FATHERS IN EGYPT,¹³ AND TEN AT THE [RED] SEA.¹⁴ TEN PLAGUES DID THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, BRING UPON THE EGYPTIANS IN EGYPT AND TEN AT THE [RED] SEA.¹⁵

[WITH] TEN TEMPTATIONS DID OUR FATHERS PUT TO PROOF THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE,¹⁶ AS IT IS SAID, YET HAVE THEY PUT ME TO PROOF THESE TEN TIMES, AND HAVE NOT HEARKENED TO MY VOICE.¹⁷

MISHNAH 5. TEN WONDERS WERE WROUGHT FOR OUR FATHERS IN THE SANCTUARY: [i] NO WOMAN MISCARRIED FROM THE ODOUR OF THE HOLY [I.E.. SACRIFICIAL] FLESH;¹⁸ [ii] THE HOLY FLESH NEVER BECAME PUTRID;¹⁹ [iii] NO FLY WAS SEEN IN THE SLAUGHTERHOUSE;²⁰ [iv] NO PERSONAL UNCLEANNESS OCCURRED TO THE HIGH PRIEST ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT;²¹ [v] THE RAINS DID NOT EXTINGUISH THE FIRE OF THE WOOD OF THE PILE;²² [vi] THE WIND DID NOT PREVAIL AGAINST THE COLUMN OF SMOKE;²³ [vii] NO DISQUALIFICATION WAS FOUND IN THE OMER,²⁴ OR IN THE TWO LOAVES,²⁵ OR IN THE SHEWBREAD;²⁶ [viii] THEY STOOD SERRIED,²⁷ YET PROSTRATED THEMSELVES [WITH] WIDE SPACES [BETWEEN THEM]; [ix] NEVER DID A SERPENT OR A SCORPION DO INJURY IN JERUSALEM; [x] AND NO MAN SAID TO HIS FELLOW: THE PLACE IS TOO STRAIT FOR ME TO LODGE OVERNIGHT²⁸ IN JERUSALEM.

MISHNAH 6. TEN THINGS WERE CREATED ON THE EVE OF THE SABBATH²⁹ AT TWILIGHT, AND THESE ARE THEY: [i] THE MOUTH OF THE EARTH,³⁰ [ii] THE MOUTH OF THE WELL,³¹ [iii] THE MOUTH OF THE SHE-ASS,³² [iv] THE RAINBOW,³³ [v] THE MANNA, [vi] THE ROD [OF MOSES],³⁴ [vii] THE SHAMIR,³⁵ [viii] THE TEXT,³⁶ [ix] THE WRITING,³⁷ AND [x] THE TABLES.³⁸ AND SOME SAY: ALSO THE SEPULCHRE OF MOSES, OUR TEACHER,³⁹ AND THE RAM OF ABRAHAM, OUR FATHER,⁴⁰ AND SOME SAY: ALSO THE DESTROYING [SPIRITS],⁴¹ AND TONGS TOO, MADE WITH TONGS.⁴²

MISHNAH 7. [THERE ARE] SEVEN THINGS [CHARACTERISTIC] IN A MAN OF IMPERFECTLY DEVELOPED MIND,⁴³ AND SEVEN IN A WISE MAN: A WISE MAN SPEAKS NOT BEFORE ONE WHO IS GREATER THAN HE IN WISDOM,⁴⁴ AND ENTERS NOT INTO⁴⁵ THE MIDST OF THE WORDS OF HIS FELLOW; AND IS NOT HASTY TO ANSWER;⁴⁶ HE ASKS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE SUBJECT-MATTER,⁴⁷ AND HE ANSWERS⁴⁸ IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE ACCEPTED DECISION;⁴⁹ AND HE SPEAKS OF THE FIRST [POINT] FIRST, AND OF THE LAST [POINT] LAST; AND CONCERNING THAT WHICH HE HAS NOT HEARD, HE SAYS:⁴⁵ HAVE NOT HEARD;⁵⁰ AND HE ACKNOWLEDGES THE TRUTH.⁵¹ AND THE REVERSE OF THESE [ARE CHARACTERISTIC] IN A MAN OF IMPERFECTLY DEVELOPED MIND.

MISHNAH 8. SEVEN KINDS OF PUNISHMENT COME TO THE WORLD⁵² FOR SEVEN CATEGORIES OF TRANSGRESSION:⁵³ WHEN SOME OF THEM [I. E., THE PEOPLE] GIVE TITHES, AND OTHERS DO NOT GIVE TITHES, A FAMINE FROM DROUGHT⁵⁴ COMES, AND SOME GO HUNGRY, AND OTHERS HAVE PLENTY; WHEN THEY HAVE ALL DECIDED NOT TO GIVE TITHES, A FAMINE FROM TUMULT⁵⁵ COMES; [WHEN THEY HAVE, IN ADDITION, DECIDED] NOT TO SET APART THE DOUGH[-CAKE],⁵⁶ A FAMINE OF EXTERMINATION COMES. PESTILENCE COMES TO THE WORLD⁵⁷ FOR [SINS] THE DEATH-PENALTIES [FOR] WHICH ARE PRONOUNCED IN THE TORAH, BUT WHICH HAVE NOT BEEN REFERRED TO A [HUMAN] TRIBUNAL;⁵⁸ AND ON ACCOUNT OF [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS REGARDING] THE PRODUCE OF THE SEVENTH YEAR.⁵⁹

THE SWORD COMES TO THE WORLD⁶⁰ FOR THE RETARDATION OF JUDGMENT,⁶¹ AND FOR THE PERVERSION OF JUDGMENT, AND ON ACCOUNT OF THOSE WHO INTERPRET THE TORAH NOT IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE ACCEPTED LAW.⁶²

MISHNAH 9. WILD BEASTS COME TO THE WORLD⁶³ FOR VAIN SWEARING,⁶⁴ AND FOR THE PROFANATION OF THE NAME.⁶⁵ EXILE COMES TO THE WORLD⁶⁶ FOR IDOLATRY, FOR INCEST AND FOR BLOODSHED,⁶⁷ AND FOR [TRANSGRESSING THE COMMANDMENT OF] THE [YEAR OF THE] RELEASE OF THE LAND.⁶⁸ AT FOUR PERIODS PESTILENCE INCREASES: IN THE FOURTH [YEAR], IN THE SEVENTH [YEAR] AND AT THE CONCLUSION OF⁶⁹ THE SEVENTH [YEAR], AND AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE FEAST [OF TABERNACLES]⁷⁰ IN EVERY YEAR. IN THE FOURTH [YEAR], ON ACCOUNT OF [DEFAULTING WITH] THE TITHE OF THE POOR WHICH IS [DUE] IN THE THIRD [YEAR];⁷¹ IN THE SEVENTH [YEAR], ON ACCOUNT OF [DEFAULTING] WITH THE TITHE OF THE POOR WHICH IS [DUE] IN THE SIXTH [YEAR]; AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE SEVENTH [YEAR], ON ACCOUNT OF [TRANSGRESSING THE LAWS REGARDING] THE PRODUCE OF THE SEVENTH [YEAR];⁷² AND AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE FEAST [OF TABERNACLES] IN EVERY YEAR, FOR ROBBING THE GIFTS [ASSIGNED BY THE TORAH] TO THE POOR.⁷³

MISHNAH 10. [THERE ARE] FOUR TYPES OF CHARACTER⁷⁴ IN MEN: HE THAT SAYS: 'MINE IS MINE, AND THINE IS THINE': THIS IS A NEUTRAL TYPE SOME SAY THIS IS A SODOM-TYPE⁷⁵ OF CHARACTER: [HE THAT SAYS:] 'MINE IS THINE AND THINE IS MINE' IS AN UNLEARNED PERSON;⁷⁶ [HE THAT SAYS:] MINE IS THINE AND THINE IS THINE,' IS A PIOUS MAN;⁷⁷ [HE THAT SAYS:] 'MINE IS MINE, AND THINE IS MINE,' IS A WICKED MAN.⁷⁸

MISHNAH 11. [THERE ARE] FOUR TYPES OF CHARACTER IN [RESPECT OF] TEMPERAMENTS: EASY TO BECOME ANGRY, AND EASY TO BE PACIFIED: HIS GAIN DISAPPEARS IN HIS LOSS;⁷⁹ HARD TO BECOME ANGRY, AND HARD TO BE PACIFIED: HIS LOSS DISAPPEARS IN HIS GAIN; HARD TO BECOME ANGRY AND EASY TO BE PACIFIED: [HE IS] A PIOUS MAN;⁸⁰ EASY TO BECOME ANGRY AND HARD TO BE PACIFIED: [HE IS] A WICKED MAN.

MISHNAH 12. [THERE ARE] FOUR TYPES OF CHARACTER AMONG DISCIPLES: QUICK TO COMPREHEND,⁸¹ AND QUICK TO FORGET:⁸² HIS GAIN DISAPPEARS IN HIS LOSS; SLOW TO COMPREHEND, AND SLOW TO FORGET: HIS LOSS DISAPPEARS IN HIS GAIN: QUICK TO COMPREHEND, AND SLOW TO FORGET: [HE IS] A WISE MAN;⁸³ SLOW TO COMPREHEND, AND QUICK TO FORGET, THIS IS AN EVIL PORTION.⁸⁴

MISHNAH 13. [THERE ARE] FOUR TYPES OF CHARACTER IN [RESPECT OF] ALMSGIVING.⁸⁵ HE WHO DESIRES THAT HE [HIMSELF] SHOULD GIVE, BUT THAT OTHERS SHOULD NOT GIVE: HIS EYE IS EVIL⁸⁶ TOWARDS THAT WHICH APPERTAINS TO OTHERS;⁸⁷ [HE WHO DESIRES] THAT OTHERS SHOULD GIVE, BUT THAT HE [HIMSELF] SHOULD NOT GIVE: HIS EYE IS EVIL TOWARDS THAT WHICH IS HIS [OWN]; [HE WHO DESIRES] THAT HE [HIMSELF] SHOULD GIVE, AND THAT OTHERS SHOULD GIVE: [HE IS] A PIOUS MAN; [HE WHO DESIRES] THAT HE HIMSELF SHOULD NOT GIVE AND THAT OTHERS [TOO] SHOULD NOT GIVE: [HE IS] A WICKED MAN.⁸⁸

MISHNAH 14. [THERE ARE] FOUR TYPES OF CHARACTER IN [REGARD TO REGULAR] ATTENDANCE⁸⁹ AT THE HOUSE-OF-STUDY: HE WHO ATTENDS BUT PRACTISES⁹⁰ NOT, THE REWARD FOR ATTENDING IS IN HIS HAND;⁹¹ HE WHO PRACTISES BUT ATTENDS NOT,⁹² THE REWARD FOR PRACTISING IS IN HIS HAND; HE WHO ATTENDS AND PRACTISES, HE IS A PIOUS MAN;⁹³ HE WHO ATTENDS NOT AND PRACTISES NOT: HE IS A WICKED MAN.⁹⁴

MISHNAH 15. [THERE ARE] FOUR TYPES OF CHARACTER AMONG THOSE WHO SIT BEFORE THE SAGES:⁹⁵ [THEY ARE, SEVERALLY, TYPIFIED BY] A SPONGE, A FUNNEL, A STRAINER AND A SIEVE:⁹⁶ A SPONGE, WHICH ABSORBS ALL; A FUNNEL, WHICH LETS IN AT ONE END AND LETS OUT AT THE OTHER; A STRAINER, WHICH LETS OUT THE WINE AND RETAINS THE LEES; A SIEVE, WHICH LETS OUT THE COARSE MEAL AND RETAINS THE CHOICE FLOUR.⁹⁷

MISHNAH 16. ALL LOVE THAT DEPENDS ON A [TRANSIENT] THING,⁹⁸ [WHEN THE] THING CEASES, [THE] LOVE CEASES; AND [ALL LOVE] THAT DEPENDS NOT ON A [TRANSIENT] THING, CEASES NOT FOR EVER. WHICH IS THE [KIND OF] LOVE THAT DEPENDS ON A [TRANSIENT] THING? SUCH AS WAS THE LOVE OF AMNON FOR TAMAR;⁹⁹ AND [WHICH IS THE KIND OF LOVE] THAT DEPENDS NOT ON A [TRANSIENT] THING? SUCH AS WAS THE LOVE OF DAVID AND JONATHAN.¹⁰⁰

MISHNAH 17. EVERY CONTROVERSY THAT IS IN THE NAME OF HEAVEN,¹⁰¹ THE END THEREOF IS [DESTINED] TO RESULT IN SOMETHING PERMANENT;¹⁰² BUT ONE THAT IS NOT IN THE NAME OF HEAVEN, THE END THEREOF IS NOT [DESTINED] TO RESULT IN SOMETHING PERMANENT.

WHICH IS THE [KIND OF] CONTROVERSY THAT IS IN THE NAME OF HEAVEN? SUCH AS WAS THE CONTROVERSY BETWEEN HILLEL AND SHAMMAI;¹⁰³ AND WHICH IS THE [KIND OF] CONTROVERSY THAT IS NOT IN THE NAME OF HEAVEN? SUCH AS WAS THE CONTROVERSY OF KORAH AND ALL HIS CONGREGATION.¹⁰⁴

MISHNAH 18. MISHNAH 23. BEN HEHE¹⁶⁰ SAID: ACCORDING TO THE LABOUR IS THE REWARD.¹⁶¹

(1) מאמרות with reference to the phrase ויאמר אלה and God said, which, in Gen. I, introduces the several phases of creation, and to the original utterance which brought the universe as a comprehensive whole into being, as implied in Ps. XXXIII, 9, for he spoke, and it was.

(2) In Gen. 1,3-29. 'and God said' occurs nine times (ויאמר) in v. 28b is looked upon as introducing a command or a blessing and not some new act of creation. V. Elijah Wilna's commentary to Aboth). As to which is the tenth 'utterance', opinions differ. Some think in view of Ps. XXXIII, 6, By the word of the Lord were the heavens wade, that an 'utterance' is implied in Gen. I, 1. P.R.E ch. III designates 'and he said' in Gen. II,18 (introducing the creation of woman) as the tenth. (The Epstein MS. of P.R.E. speaks of the ten utterances but does not enumerate them. V. G. Friedlander's Edition, a.i.) V. also II ARN ch. XXXVI, where one authority is reported as substituting Gen. I, 22, (the creation of the sea-monsters) where there is no 'and he said' but 'and he created' which term is held to imply a separate act of creation and therefore to have involved a separate 'utterance'. Gen. R. ch. XXVII enumerates eight times ויאמר up to Gen. I, 26, and in addition Gen. I, 1. (בראשית) and I, 2 'and the breath of God hovered over the face of the waters,' cf. the use of רוח breath in Ps. XXXIII, 6, as a parallel to word.

(3) מה תלמוד לומר v. supra III, 8, note.

(4) If the world had been created by one single fiat, men, judging by the little they can themselves achieve by one act only, would think lightly of the world, and have little compunction about 'spoiling' a 'cheap' thing that can be so easily made. The fact that God took, as it were, extraordinary and, in view of his omnipotence, apparently unnecessary pains in its creation, should serve to warn would-be wicked men — potential destroyers of the world — that God will by no means allow anyone to go scot free who by his conduct tends to destroy the world in the creation of which He has taken so much trouble, as it were.

(5) 'The implied relationship between ethical and cosmic processes' (Oesterley) is an important factor in Jewish theology.

(6) Viz., (i) Adam; (ii) Seth; (iii) Enosh; (iv) Kenan; (v) Mahalaleel; (vi) Jered; (vii) Enoch; (viii) Methuselah; (ix) Lamech; (x) Noah; (Gen. V. 3-29).

(7) מכעיסין ובאין לפניו so also I ARN ch. XXXII, but in the parallel to the latter half of this Mishnah (ibid Ch. XXXIII) מכעיסין לפניו 'acting provokingly before Him' which Lowe's MS., MV., R. Jonah and others have in both instances.

(8) Viz., (i) Shem; (ii) Arpachshad; (iii) Shelah; (iv) Eber; (v) Peleg; (vi) Reu; (vii) Serug; (viii) Nahor; (ix) Terah; (x) Abraham; (Gen. XI, 10-26).

(9) I.e., the reward which had been in store for the people of those ten generations and would have been given them had they not by their wickedness angered God and forfeited their share.

(10) I ARN Ch. XXXIII amplifies: Two trials at the time he was bidden to leave Haran, two with his two sons, two with his two wives, one in the wars of the Kings, one at the covenant 'between the pieces' (Gen. XV). one in Ur of the Chaldees (where, according to a tradition, he had been thrown into a furnace whence he came out unharmed). II ARN Ch. XXXVI speaks of ten trials, but names only nine: (i) at Ur; (ii) Get thee out of thy land. ' (Gen. XII, 2); (iii) The famine when he left Haran (Ibid. v. 10); (iv) Sarah at Pharaoh's palace; (v) Sarah at Abimelech's; (vi) Circumcision; (vii) The covenant 'between the pieces'; (viii) With Isaac; (ix) With Ishmael. p.R.E. contains numbers II,III (the latter as two separate trials), IV, VI-IX of the above list and adds his hiding underground from Nimrod for thirteen years, and the wars of the Kings (including the plight of Lot).

(11) I ARN, 'he was found perfect'.

(12) Cf. Isa. XLI, 8, Abraham that loved Me; II Chron. XX, 7, Abraham that loved Thee.

(13) That the ten plagues did not harm the Israelites is looked upon as constituting ten miracles.

(14) These ten are enumerated in I ARN ch. XXXIII (ed. Schechter, p. 96). Mekilta, Bshallah (ed. Weiss, p. 36). Tanhuma ib. (but not in ed. Buber), M. to Aboth summarizes: (i) the Sea cleft (Ex. XIV, 21); (ii) An arched tunnel ('tube') was formed through the water (Hab. III, 15); (iii) The sea-bed became hard (Ex. XIV, 29); (iv) it turned back to its muddy and clogging condition when the Egyptians attempted to use it (Hab. III, 14); (v) Separate paths were formed for each of the twelve tribes (Ps. CXXXVI, 13); (vi) The water congealed and hardened (Ps. LXXIV, 13); (vii) However not as one whole mass, but in separate blocks (ibid. Thou didst break the sea in pieces); (viii) The water-partitions between the parallel paths of the tribes were translucent (Ps. XVIII 12, 13); (ix) From the congealed (and salty) sea water, 'sweet' water flowed for the Israelites to drink, but (x) that which they did not drink, congealed again in its flow before it reached the ground (Ex. XV, 8).

(15) This paragraph not in all versions. The ten at the Red Sea are implied in the following expressions in Ex. XV: (i) v. I. . . hath he thrown; (ii) v. 4. . . hath he cast; (iii) ib. are sunk; (iv) v. 5, The deeps cover them; (v) ib. They went down into the depths; (vi) v. 6. . . dasheth in pieces the enemy; (vii) v. 7. Thou overthrowest those that rise up against Thee; (viii) ib. . . it consumeth them as stubble; (ix) v. 10, The sea covereth them; (x) ib. They sank as lead. M., basing himself on Mekilta, has one variation.

(16) In some edd. of ARN (ch. XXXIV) 'with ten trials did the Holy One, blessed be He, put Israel to proof and in all of them they were found not perfect'. A list of the ten is given in 'Ar. 15a, b. (i) Because there are no graves in Egypt hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness? (Ex. XIV, 11); (ii) Not till they had seen the Egyptians washed up dead, did the Israelites believe (ib. 30-31); (iii) At Marah (Ex. XV, 24); (iv) At Rephidim (ib. XVII, 2 ff); (v) Gathering manna on the Sabbath (ib. XVI, 27); (vi) Leaving it till the morning (ib. 20); (vii) The first lust for flesh which was satisfied by the quails that came with the Manna (ib. 3, 12-13); (viii) The second lust for flesh followed by a surfeit of quails at Kibroth ha-Ta'avah (Num. XI, 4. 18-20,34); (ix) The Golden calf (which was not only a transgression of the prohibition against idols, but a sign of lack of faith); (x) The evil report of the ten spies 'accepted' by the people. M. varies some items of the above list: for (v) he gives the murmuring which preceded the Manna (Ex. XVI, 2, 3), and for (vii) the murmuring at Taberah (Num. XI, 1.3). For the latter as well as for (iv) and (viii) cf. Deut. IX, 22, And at Taberah, and at Massah and at Kibroth ha-Ta'avah ye wade the Lord wrath.

(17) Num. XIV, 22. This also exemplifies God's long-suffering: hitherto the punishments for each act due to lack of faith had been ad hoc; it was only after the tenth 'trial', that God finally doomed that generation to perish in the wilderness.

(18) Through a longing that could not have been satisfied to partake of it, (but v. L.).

(19) Though it could be, and often was, kept at the altar-head for two or three days. R. Jonah and MV had התליע, a denominative of תולעה 'worm'.

(20) It was fitted with marble tables.

(21) Which would not only disqualify him from carrying through the service of the Day, but would make him feel exceedingly self-conscious, as everybody would be bound to get to know of it. I ARM Ch. XXXV adds, 'except R. Ishmael b. Kimhith' who was accidentally rendered unclean through the uncleanness of another person (v. Yoma 47a). In the case of another High priest who is reported to have become unclean on the Day of Atonement (ib. 12b), it is held by some authorities that that, too, was caused by an external impurity. Others say this miracle operated only in the First Temple, whereas the cases mentioned occurred in the Second.

(22) Laid on the altar, which was under the open sky. The Hebrew word translated 'pile' (מערכה) is from the root ערך 'to set (or lay) in order' which is used for laying a fire on an altar (e.g.. Gen. XXII, 9; Lev. I, 7,12).

(23) Some: A column of smoke from the altar-fire broken up or deflected by wind denoted an unacceptable sacrifice. L. explains quite prosaically: so that the smoke was not blown downward, thus causing discomfort to the priests in the performance of the service. L. is probably right as the first interpretation does not tally with the fact known from the Prophets. etc. that there had been sacrifices offered up in the Temple that were unacceptable to God.

(24) Lev. XXIII, 9ff. A sheaf of new barley freshly cut during the night following the First Day of passover, brought to the Temple courtyard, threshed, parched, spread on the courtyard floor to be dried by the wind, milled, sifted through thirteen sieves, a tenth part of an epha taken off and given to the priests who offered it up in the manner prescribed for meal-offerings (Men. X, 3-5). This 'released' the new grain for reaping (ib. 7). Should some disqualifying defect have rendered the omer unfit for the altar, it would have been impossible to prepare another sheaf in time for the offering (v. B.).

(25) Baked of the 'First Fruits' of the wheat-harvest and offered up on the Feast of Weeks (Pentecost) (Lev. ibid. 15ff.). The baking had to be done before the commencement of the festival, and was not among those Temple ritual occupations which overrode the prohibition of work on Sabbath and Festival. If, therefore, by reason of any defect, the Two Loaves would have had to be disqualified, others could not have been 'brought'.

(26) Ex. XXV, 30; Lev. XXIV, 5-7. It was changed weekly, on the Sabbath, but had to be baked before the Sabbath. If there had been some disqualifying cause, they could not have changed the shewbread for another week. The last three miracles are treated in our Mishnah as one, but they are enumerated as separate in Yoma 21a, where the rain and wind miracles are not given among the ten.

(27) Or 'pressed together'.

(28) אין Another reading is אדור 'dwell' and, according to some, it means that everybody who lived in Jerusalem was able to obtain a livelihood. Our reading refers to the large number of pilgrims who came to Jerusalem for the Three Festivals (Passover, Pentecost, Tabernacles). all of whom found accommodation in Jerusalem.

(29) בין השמשות; Nahmanides to Ex. XII, 6, on בין הערבים (which Onkelos translates בין שמיא and Targum Jonathan' ביני שמשותא) renders it 'between the suns', between the sun in the East and the sun in the West: till midday the sun is in the East, after that in the West. At midday it shines in both directions (which explains the dual form of צהרים noon). After noon the sun's light gradually diminishes as from both directions (hence the dual ערבים) until it sinks. The Rabbinic phrase בין השמשות would thus mean the period between the sun leaving the East and the sun leaving also the West. According to Ibn Ezra (v. Ex. ib. and Gen. I, 18) בין השמשות (or בין הערבים) would mean the period between the disappearance of the sun's disc beneath the horizon and the disappearance of its light which is still reflected in the clouds. Jastrow s.v. 'between the services' sc. of day and night, relying on Nahmanides' interpretation of לממשלת היום not as 'to rule by day' but as 'to rule over the day etc.' According to this interpretation, the day and the night are the servants of the sun and the moon, and the durations of day and night may be termed their respective periods of service. Ibn Ezra says of בין הערבים that it is מלה קשה 'a difficult term', which applies similarly, of course, to בין השמשות).

(30) Num. XVI, 30, And if the Lord shall (be found to) have created a (special) creation and the ground open her mouth, and swallow them (i.e. Korah and his confederates) up, with all that appertain unto them . . . ' .

(31) פִּי הַבְּאֵר Either the mouth of the well in the rock which Moses opened by striking the rock (Num. XX, 7-11), or the mouth of the Well of Miriam which followed the Israelites in the wilderness and which halted when they encamped, and which is taken by some to be the well referred to in Num. XXI, 16-18.

(32) V. Num. XXII, 28, And the Lord opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam . . .

(34) V. Ex. IV, 17.

(35) שְׂמוֹר In Bibl. Heb. thorn, also flint used for engraving. In Rabbinic literature it also denotes a legendary worm or insect which by passing over stones could make an incision for an engraving or split them through completely. Such an assumption was deemed necessary in view of the command that no iron tool be lifted at the building of an altar to God (Ex. XX, 22) and, of the report in I Kings VI, 7, that in fact no such tool was heard during the building of Solomon's Temple.

(36) So M. and R. Jonah. And the Lord said unto Moses: Come up to Me into the mount, and be there; and I will give thee the tables of stone, and the law and the commandment which I have written. . — (Ex. XXIV, 12.) i.e., God had already once written the Law before he called Moses into the mount. B. and others, 'the shape of the written characters' on the Tables which were held to have been of a unique nature in that the letters having been cut right through the stone, were not only equally readable on both sides, but a letter such as the ancient 'Ayin which was O-shaped-could, in such circumstances, have been possible only by miracle (v. Shab. 104a). This belief was based on Ex. XXXII, 15: tables that were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written.

(37) מִכְתָּב Ex. XXXII, 16, and the writing (מִכְתָּב) was the writing of God. Others (e.g. Rashi) vocalize, here in the Mishnah, מִכְתָּב or מִכְתָּב the writing or engraving instrument.

(38) Ibid. And the tables were the work of God.

(39) Deut. XXXIV, 6.

(40) I.e., It was ordained on the eve of the First Sabbath at twilight that a certain ram in Abraham's time should be 'ownerless' (hefker), so that when Abraham should require one as a surprise-substitute for Isaac, he might find one ready at hand which he could rightfully (i.e. without robbing anyone) appropriate for a sacrifice (L.).

(41) מוֹזִיקִין from root נָזַק suffer injury, Est. VII, 4 (also Dan, VI, 3; Ezra IV, 13, 15, 22, Aramaic) i.e., those who cause injury, do harm, destroy. Demons. Souls unfinished before the First Sabbath set in.

(42) The idea is: There must have been tongs to hold the iron from which the first man-made tongs were forged. V. Pes. 54a, where it is suggested that the first tongs could have been cast in a mould. The parallels mention some other Sabbath-eve creations such as the rod of Aaron (Num. XVII, 16 ff), the garment of Adam (Gen. III, 21), the cave in which Moses and Elijah stood when God revealed himself to them. (Ex. XXXIII, 22; I Kings XIX, 9 ff.) With reference to the things enumerated in the Mishnah, Singer (P.B. p. 200) remarks: 'All phenomena that seemed to partake at once of the natural and the supernatural were conceived as having had their origin in the interval between the close of the work of creation and the commencement of the Sabbath.' It is generally held that what is meant is that these things were created on the Sabbath eve at twilight, in posse, to become available in esse when the right time for their use would arrive.

(43) גֵּלִים in Ps. CXXXIX, 16, means the yet undeveloped embryo. Its use here as an antithesis to חַכְמָם proves that it has reference to a man's mental powers.

(44) Some versions add וּבְמִנְיָן 'and in number' which means either in number of years, i.e., age, or in the number of scholars who agree with the opinion of the other man, if they be in the majority.

(45) I.e., does not break in or interrupt.

(46) Cf. the advice in I,1. patience is required of a Rabbi, teacher or judge in giving a considered reply.

(47) Cf. Shab. 3b: R. Hiyya said to Rab: 'When Rabbi is definitely occupied with one tractate, do not ask him a question relating to another . . . were it not that Rabbi is a great man (scholar) you would have confounded him and he would have given you an inappropriate reply.'

(48) B . . . and (consequently) the teacher answers, etc.

(49) Others: 'to the point'.

(50) I.e., learnt it. He admits not knowing. Cf. Ber. 4a. DEZ ch. III, 'teach thy tongue to say I know not . . . Others: When he gives an answer, either an interpretation or a decision, which has not been handed down to him by his own

- teachers, he deliberately makes a clear statement to that effect, so that his hearers might not be misled into taking for granted that this teaching of his too is from tradition. Some render 'understood' instead of 'heard'.
- (51) R. Jonah: When in discussion he recognizes as true the solution propounded by another man, he acknowledges it as correct, though he may think of clever counter-arguments, and he does not consider it inconsistent with his dignity to admit defeat.
- (52) I.e., upon mankind, more particularly upon Israel.

- (59) The Sabbatical year (Shemittah); v. Lev. XXV, 6-7.
- (60) Cf. Lev. XXVI, 25.
- (61) Lit., 'oppression (better, suppression) of judgment', a term used of deliberate methods of unduly prolonging proceedings and of general interference with the course of justice calculated to delay the ultimate decision. It is also used of unnecessarily postponing an execution (Sanh. XI, 4).

With the end of Succoth, the Festival of Ingathering, i.e., the completion of the agricultural year, the failure to carry out those observances in the past year, brings in its wake Divine punishment. V. Buchler, Sin and Atonement, p. 383.
- (74) מִדָּה מוֹדוֹת := a measure (quantitative or qualitative), a standard by which one judges or is judged, characteristic, quality, type.
- (75) The attitude of a 'self-contained', smug, selfishness is unethical and immoral, wicked from the highest point of view (the Hasid's), though one cannot call it an illegitimate one (v. Buchler, Some Types, p. 38). Anyone might say, 'if I am not for myself, who will be for me?' but a Hillel (who is often called a Hasid) adds, 'but if I am for myself only, what am I?' Commentators quote Ezek. XVI, 49 Behold thy sister Sodom: . . . she strengthened not the hand of the poor and needy.
- (76) 'Am ha-arez:, v. note to II, 6. L. understands 'mine is thine', as 'on condition that thine is mine.'
- (77) Hasid, v. supra II, 6.
- (78) According to Hoffmann, Erste Mischna, p. 28, this was the last paragraph in the Tractate Aboth underlying ARM. (V. Buchler op. cit., p. 41.)
- (79) Cf. supra II, 1.
- (80) חָסִיד He is not free from the tendency, common to all men, to become angry, but by his self-control he reduces that inclination to the least proportions. (Cf. supra IV, 1), v. M. The designation of such a man as a Hasid would account for the epithet of חָסִיד given to Hillel after his death, Sotah 48b, cf. Buchler op. cit., p. 39.
- (81) Lit., 'to hear'.
- (82) Lit. 'lose'.

- (83) MV and others (including p.B. versions), 'a goodly portion', clearly in contrast to the next category.
- (84) Commentators remark that the terms חסיד and רשע (i.e., 'pious' and 'wicked') are not used here, because these refer to moral qualities, whereas this dictum deals with intellectual ability.
- (85) Lit., 'the givers of alms'. צדקה = righteousness, applied in Rabbinic phraseology to helping those in need, which is viewed as an act of social justice.
- (86) I.e., grudging; v. supra II, 9.
- (87) He thinks the poor have enough with what he has given, and grudges them the additional help they might get from others. B and others: He grudges other would-be donors the credit that would accrue to them for their charitableness.
- (88) Seeking to cut off all possible sources of help from the poor man is tantamount to a deliberate attempt to starve him.
- (89) Lit., 'those who go to.'
- (90) Lit., 'does.' Buchler, op. cit. p. 40f. has shown that it must refer to practising (the moral and ethical teachings of the school).
- (91) Even though his attendance has not yet had the desired result. 'Great is Midrash (learning) in that it brings one to Ma'aseh (deed).'
- (92) He practises the precepts and leads a good-life by following the example of others, but does not take the trouble to acquire for himself a first hand knowledge of the Torah.
- (93) As Hasid refers to a man's conduct towards his fellowman, its use here can only be explained by supposing that the Beth ha-Midrash for the ordinary man was not a place for academic instruction but for the imparting of ethical and religious guidance for every-day life. (V. Buchler, ibid.)
- (94) Not only does he fail to perform the precepts, for which there may be the excuse of lack of knowledge, but by keeping away from the school he wilfully precludes his ever acquiring the knowledge, or coming under the influence, which could in time enable him to lead a worthier life.
- (95) Mishnah 12 dealt with qualities of memory among 'disciples', our Mishnah with the capacity of advanced students ('those who sit before the wise') for examining knowledge acquired from one's teachers and arriving at one's own conclusions, (cf. B. and L.).
- (96) Taylor, 'bolt-sieve' v. note below.
- (97) If קמה means coarse flour and no fine flour, as they are usually translated, then what should one understand by נפה? What we know as a sieve would, contrary to the description of the Mishnah, let through the סלת (fine flour) and retain the קמה (coarse flour). According to M., R., and B, נפה is an ordinary sieve but קמה is the very fine part of the ground corn which forms a kind of superfine dust or powder of almost useless quality. It is the part which is thicker than this, and remains in the sieve, that is סלת. Taylor renders 'bolt-sieve' which he describes: 'It sifts the ground corn at once into three sorts. The corn in the bolter descends an incline, passing first over a fine cloth, and then over a coarse cloth: the former lets through the fine flour, which is caught in a receptacle attached to the machine: the process is repeated at the second cloth: the third quality, coarse bran, passes out at the end of the bolter.' This description tallies with the function of נפה as described in II ARM Ch. XLV, q.v. What types of students are intended by these similes? M. says: The Sponge: He absorbs, and mostly retains, all he is taught without any discrimination whatsoever. The Funnel: He takes all the knowledge poured into him, but he lets it escape him almost as quickly as he gets it. The Strainer: He retains the least useful and lets out the best. The Sieve: Retains the best and discards the inferior. L. explains differently: The Sponge: Absorbs all, the good and the inferior, indiscriminately, and is unable to give out his mixed knowledge unless he is pressed by many insistent questions. The Funnel: Also allows everything in indiscriminately. but can and does easily pass on what he has learnt to others, though, again, indiscriminately. The Strainer: Takes all but separates the pure from the dregs, passes the former on to others, and retains, but eventually discards, the latter. (This is the best type of scholar.) The Sieve: Solely being (according to L.) the very finest flour-dust or powder which the sieve retains (because it adheres to the sieve), this (would-be) scholar 'feeds' others with the inferior and leaves the best altogether. (This is the scholar of a perverted mind, the worst type.)
- (98) So 13. followed by Oesterley; M. (followed by Singer. P.B.): 'material cause'.
- (99) Reading according to a suggestion by Baer בתמר. The usual reading ותמר 'and Tamar' cannot be right because Tamar did not love Amnon, v. II Samuel XIII. (Even verse 13 suggests no more than a mere possibility that she was not actually averse to him.)
- (100) V. I Sam. XVIII, 1; Ibid. XX, 17; II Sam. I, 26.
- (101) V. supra I, 11, notes.
- (102) Cf. supra IV, 11.

- (103) According to 'Er. 13b, a Bath Kol (Heavenly Voice) declared, 'Both these (the words of Hillel) and these (the words of Shammai) are the words of the Living God.'
- (104) V. Num. XVI. For the phrase Korah and all his congregation v. ibid 6 and passim.
- (105) The public, the people in general.
- (106) Or 'to have merit.'
- (107) So that he be not punished whilst his disciples or followers are rewarded (ARM).
- (108) For the phrase cf. supra IV, 5.
- (109) Lit., 'to do repentance.' Perhaps לעשות should be translated to attain, achieve'. Cf. the use of the verb in Deut. VIII, 17. The door of repentance is closed to him 'since the sins of others are beyond the remedial action of his repentance' (Singer, P.B.). Also, if his repentance were accepted, he would escape punishment, whilst those whom he had misled would be undergoing it (ARM).
- (110) I.e., attributed to him; he is given credit therefor.
- (111) Deut. XXXIII, 21.
- (112) 1 Kings XV, 30.
- (113) So designated in Jewish literature, as' his wickedness is proved by his own willingness, even eagerness, to go with Balak's messengers, and his 'apologies' for not being able to curse Israel; it is he, too, who is said to have counselled the seduction of the Israelites by the Moabite women.
- (114) V. supra II, 9. Abraham demonstrated his generous and ungrudging nature in his dealings with the King of Sodom (Gen. XIV, 22f.) and with Ephron the Hittite (Gen. XXIII).
- (115) Abraham's humility is evident from his words: . . . I . . . ' who am but dust and ashes (Gen. XVIII, 27).
- (116) נפש (soul) is used here of 'desire', 'appetite', a meaning which it has already in Biblical Hebrew. שפלה would thus mean 'kept low', 'subdued'. Cf. Abraham's dealing with Lot, Gen. XIII. The three above qualities are among those sought for when appointing judges. v. J. Sanh. I, 4.
- (117) Balaam's avarice is clear from his own words; v. Num. XXII, 18; XXIV, 13.
- (118) A reference to Balaam's claim that he was one that . knoweth the knowledge of the Most High (Num. XXIV, 16).
- (119) Balaam's 'handling' of Balak, and his attempts at 'outwitting' God, reveal an insatiable desire for power.
- (120) Lit., 'eat', cf. Pe'ah 1,2.
- (121) This is taken as a reference to Abraham of whom God said, Abraham who loved me (Isa. XLI, 8).
- (122) Prov. VIII, 21. It seems that 'to inherit substance' is intended as a reference to that which the disciples of Abraham receive in this world and 'that I may fill their treasuries' to their reward in the world to come. Cf. the treatment of Ps. CXXVIII, 2, supra IV. 1. Some take the whole quotation to refer to the reward in the hereafter, the word for 'substance' ש"י ' being aggadically explained (in 'Uk. III, 12) as a Gematria (v. supra 111,18) equalling three hundred and ten, sc. worlds, which God allots to the righteous.
- (123) Cf. supra 1,5; v. note on next Mishnah.
- (124) Ps. LV, 24. This twofold designation fits Balaam who by his evil counsel (v. p. 72, n. 1) brought about the death of 24,000 Israelites, v. Num. XXV, 9.
- (125) Mentioned in the Mishnah only here (though it is held by some that this paragraph, too, is a later addition, v. note to Mishnah 10), but a few times in Tosef. In Hag. 14a he is referred as one of the בעלי משנה 'Masters of the Mishnah'. As we do not find him mentioned together with any particular Tanna we cannot determine in which generation he lived (Frankel Darke ha-Mishnah, p. 213).
- (126) I.e., (negatively) fearless, and (positively) challenging. For this quality in the service of God v. Isa. L, 6-7; Ps. XL, 10-11; CXIX, 46.
- (127) Cf. II Sam. I, 23.
- (128) Cf. Ps. CXIX, 60. I made haste, and delayed not, to observe Thy commandments. Cf. supra IV, 2.
- (129) Cf. II Sam. ibid. They were stronger than lions.
- (130) 'Father' is a characteristic appellation of God in the Hebrew Bible, e.g., Deut. XXXII, 6,15 not He thy father . . .? Jer. III, 4, Didst thou not just now cry unto Me: 'My father' . . . ' Mal. II, 10, Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us. V. also Jer. ibid, 29; Mal. I, 6. The God in, or of, Heaven, too, is frequent, e.g., Gen. XXIV, 3, 7, etc. The Biblical passage which is most probably the source of (if not itself to be traced to) the combined expression 'Our Father in Heaven' is Isa. LXIII, 15,16, Look down from heaven . . . even from Thy holy habitation . . . for Thou art our Father . . . Thou, O Lord, art our Father. V. Marmorstein, The old 'tabb. Doctrine of God, p. 56ff. MV notes here 'Tractate Aboth is Ended' and then gives the dictum about man's successive ages.

(131) עו פנים Deut. XXVIII, 50, 'fierce of countenance' synonymous with insolence ('that shall not regard the person of the old') and callousness ('nor show favour to the young') cf. Dan. VIII, 23. In Eccl. VIII, 1, עו פניו 'the boldness of his face' means (according to 13DB.) 'impudence'. In Rabbinic Hebrew the expression stands for supineness and impudence in general; as a characteristic it is looked upon among the most undesirable. Rabbi Judah ha-Nasi was wont to offer up a private prayer that he be spared from meeting 'Azzuth Panim in other people, and from being himself tainted there with (Ber. 16b). This private prayer has since been incorporated among the statutory daily prayers (P.B. p. 7).

(132) גיהנם interchangeably with גי בן הנם in Josh. XV, 8, and elsewhere is the Valley of (the son of) Hinnom S.S.W. of Jerusalem. According to II Kings XXIII, 20; Jer. VII, 31f; XIX, 6, 9, etc., etc., it was the place where children were sacrificed, by burning, to Moloch. It was also known as תפת (Topheth) or the Valley of Slaughter. The revolting associations of the place evidently led to the transference of its name to the most horrifying place in human imagination, the place of punishment of the wicked in the hereafter. Some Rabbinic traditions place Gehinnom of the hereafter below the valley of that name, but there are also other supposed locations. The Moloch worship in the actual valley of Hinnom together with Isa. LXVI, 24, (. . . the carcasses of the men that have rebelled against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched . . .) which suggests that the punishment of the wicked is to be by fire, has invested the Gehinnom of the hereafter with the characteristics of 'hell'. The methods and duration of punishment in Gehinnom are also matters on which opinions differ. V. f.E.

(133) Cf. Yeb. 79a: A sense of shame (i.e., the opp. to insolence and self-assertiveness) compassion, and the practice of disinterested kindness are the characteristics of Israel.

(134) גן עדן The :celestial Garden of Eden, 'paradise' — the abode of the righteous — of which the terrestrial one, spoken of in Gen. II and III, is the model (v. also Ezek. XXXI which speaks of the trees in Eden in the garden of God) or (according to some) vice-versa. In the popular conception the two are not kept separate. Views as to its location, dimension, appearance, etc. differ in the Midrashic and Talmudic references, It is often used as synonymous with 'Olam habba, 'the world-to-come.' Some distinguish between Eden and the Garden of Eden. The Garden, they say, is but a part of Eden; Adam and Eve were only in the Garden, but no mortal eye has yet perceived the real, unspeakably more wonderful, Eden. V. J.E. Articles 'Eden, Garden of' and 'Paradise'. Taylor: This part of the Mishnah is probably a later addition borrowed from Tractate Kallah.

(135) Many edd. add 'and God of our Fathers.'

(136) P.B. versions 'the Sanctuary.'

(137) Taylor (followed by Oesterley) 'grant us our portion.'

(138) Elijah Wilna says this paragraph should be at the end of the chapter. In MV it is at the end of Chapter VI.

(139) MV, also other texts, attribute this dictum to Samuel the Little. In some versions it is preceded by the dictum which is also found in the latter's name in IV, 19. By some, our Mishnah is credited to Ben He-He, whose name occurs in the next Mishnah.

(140) מקרא (v. Meh. VIII, 8), lit., that which was (to be) read sc. from a written text (synonymous with 'The Law in Writing'), as distinguished from משנה 'that which was (to be) recited sc. from hearing and memory' (synonymous with 'The Law which was (transmitted) by (word of) mouth'). The five years here are said to be based on the analogy of the newly planted tree, the fruit of which becomes available for general consumption in the fifth year (Lev. XIX, 25).

(141) משנה v. previous note. The age of ten in this connection is explained thus: In Num. IV, 3' etc. the period of a Levite's service is commanded to begin 'from thirty years old', but ibid. VIII, 24, 'from twenty-five years old.' The discrepancy is explained by allotting five years for the Levite's training before he becomes proficient for his sacred duties (v. Hui. 24a). Five years is, thus, an accepted period for the first phase of education. Commencing Scripture at five, one is ready for Mishnah at ten.

(142) In connection with many precepts, references to the committing of sins and penalties, the term איש — 'man' — is used; hence the age at which one becomes subject to Mizwoth and penalties is thirteen, when the boy is said to have matured into a 'man' (v. Elijah Wilna to this Mishnah). This, of course, underlies the Bar-Mizwah institution, which, however, in the present usage of the term, appears to be of much later origin. V. Schechter, Studies in Judaism (First Series), p. 378ff.

(143) תלמוד Used here, apparently, in the special sense of study based on the Mishnah or Oral Learning (though not, of course, in the specific sense that we use it), rather than study in general. At the age of fifteen, he will have completed the second five years' stage of his studies.

(144) Eighteen was the age recommended at which a man should marry so that he may fulfil the precept, When a man taketh a new wife, he shall not go out in the host . . . ' one year, and shall cheer his wife whom he hath taken (Deut. XXIV, 5) and yet be ready to undertake military service at the age of twenty (Num. I, 3 passim).

(145) Some: For military service which began 'from twenty years old' (Num. ibid.). Most commentators: for pursuing, seeking, a livelihood. This will have given him a further five-year period (from fifteen to twenty) for devoting himself to Talmud before setting out in earnest on a worldly career. Others explain 'for pursuing' to mean for quickness, zest, impetuosity, in the pursuit of one's desires or ideals (so Abrabanel, v. Taylor).

(146) Thirty was the age at which a Levite entered upon his full duties which comprised the work of service and the work of bearing burdens (Num. IV, 47); these duties being so comprehensive and arduous required the possession of full physical faculties ע כח Scripture thus considers thirty the age for strength. V. also ibid. VII, 9.

(147) According to Num. VIII, 25f.: from the age of fifty years they (the Levites) shall return from the service of the work, and shall serve no more; but shall minister with their brethren in the tent of meeting, to keep the charge, but they shall do no manner of service. As their ministrations were not in the nature of actual work, they must then have served in the capacity of responsible counsellors. Hence fifty must be the age when a man becomes fitted for giving counsel.

(148) V. II Sam. V, 4: David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years. i.e., he lived seventy years; and I Chron. XXIX, 28, And he (David) died in a good old age (שיבה = hoary head). Thus שיבה is reached at the age of seventy.

(149) Cf. Ps. XC, 10.

(150) לשונה The Bibl. root שנה means 'sink down' and its cognates שחה and שחה 'bend', 'bow down'. Others take שנה here as a noun which in the Bible occurs in a feminine form שוחה 'pit', 'grave'.

(151) Elijah Wilna cites Isa. LXV, 20, There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the youth shall die one hundred years old, and points out that the context there shows that this is intended as a blessing. Thus the extreme limit up to which life is a blessing is a hundred years; and one who exceeds that limit is as one who no more belongs to the world. Exceptions to this are very rare; and in the case of Moses, Scripture found it necessary to say: his eye was not dim nor his natural force abated (Deut. XXXIV, 7).

(152) MV has this passage at the end of Chapter VI, together with the prayer in Mishnah 20.

(153) His full name, Johanan b. Bag Bag, occurs in J. Keth. V: 4. Tos. V, as a contemporary of R. Judah b. Bathyra. Tosaf. Yom Tob a.l. says the name is omitted here, as also in Ben He-He's case, because they did not live long (cf. Ben Zoma and Ben 'Azzai supra IV beginning), and quotes Rashbam to the effect that Ben Bag Bag and Ben He-He were proselytes, and בין הא הא means a son of Abraham and Sarah, to whose respective names God had, as a sign of favour, added the letter ה and whose spiritual 'parenthood' is assumed for all proselytes; בג (in Ben Bag Bag) is the numerical equivalent of ה (five). He was so called to distinguish him from b. He He (v. Tosaf. to Hag. 9b). Bacher AT, I, p. 10f. suggests the following explanation of the two names: In Shab. 31a, etc. we have the story of the would-be proselyte who desired to learn Torah, but only the written and not the oral (traditional). Hillel cured him of his contempt for the oral tradition by letting him see that the knowledge of the very names of the letters of the Alphabet depended on oral tradition, e.g., he pointed out to him that we know ב is Beth and ג is Gimmel and not vice-versa only by means of oral instruction. Such a disciple might well have earned for himself the name בן ב'ג ב'ג or בן הי הי (the one who learnt that ה is He). They, or (if they are identical) he, may have derived the sayings given here in the two names from Hillel himself as in I ARM XII, both sayings are in the name of Hillel (in II ARM XXVII the first in Hillel's name, the second in that of בן הא הא as in our text). There is also a suggestion that בג is formed from the initial letters of בן ברים 'son of proselytes,' (v. MV).

(154) The Torah.

(155) Lowe's MS. adds וכולך בה 'and thy all is therein,' for which Taylor adduces Eccl. XII, 13, and this (i.e., fearing God and observing his commandments) is the whole of wan.

(156) Look deeply, contemplate. MV: ובה תהוי 'and therein (thou shouldst) have thy being.'

(159) מדה v. p. 67, n. 3.

(160) V. p. 76, n. 7.

(161) A proverb of general application, but here it has special reference to the labour and energy devoted to the study of the Torah.

Mishna - Mas. Avoth Chapter 6

Mishna - Mas. Avoth Chapter 6

THE SAGES TAUGHT IN THE STYLE¹ OF THE MISHNAH;² BLESSED BE HE WHO HAS APPROVED³ THEM AND THEIR TEACHING.⁴

BARAITHA 1. R. MEIR SAID: WHOEVER OCCUPIES HIMSELF WITH THE TORAH FOR ITS OWN SAKE, ACQUIRES BY MERIT MANY THINGS, NAY MORE, THE WHOLE OF THE WORLD IS WORTH WHILE FOR HIS SAKE. HE IS CALLED A FRIEND,⁵ A BELOVED,⁶ ONE THAT LOVES THE ALL-PRESENT, ONE THAT LOVES [HIS FELLOW-] CREATURES.⁷ ONE THAT GLADDENS GOD,⁸ ONE THAT GLADDENS MAN;⁸ AND IT [I. E. THE TORAH] CLOTHES HIM⁹ WITH MEEKNESS AND FEAR,¹⁰ AND FITS¹¹ HIM TO BE RIGHTEOUS, PIOUS, UPRIGHT AND FAITHFUL; IT ALSO KEEPS HIM FAR FROM SIN, AND BRINGS HIM NEAR TO MERIT [ORIOUS CONDUCT]; AND MEN BENEFIT FROM HIM BY [WAY OF] COUNSEL, SOUND KNOWLEDGE, UNDERSTANDING AND STRENGTH, AS IT IS SAID, COUNSEL IS MINE AND SOUND WISDOM; I AM UNDERSTANDING, POWER IS MINE;¹² AND IT GIVES HIM SOVEREIGNTY¹³ AND DOMINION,¹⁴ AND [THE FACULTY TO BE] SEARCHING IN JUDGMENT;¹⁵ AND THEY REVEAL TO HIM¹⁶ THE SECRET MEANINGS¹⁷ OF THE TORAH, AND HE IS MADE AS A WELL THAT EVER GATHERS FORCE,¹⁸ AND LIKE A STREAM THAT NEVER CEASES;¹⁹ AND HE BECOMES MODEST, LONG-SUFFERING AND FORGIVING OF INSULT TOWARDS HIMSELF; AND IT MAKES HIM GREAT, AND EXALTS HIM ABOVE ALL THE WORKS [OF GOD].

BARAITHA 2. R. JOSHUA B. LEVI²⁰ SAID: EVERY DAY A BATH KOL²¹ GOES FORTH FROM MOUNT HOREB, AND MAKES PROCLAMATION AND SAYS: WOE UNTO MEN ON ACCOUNT OF [THEIR] CONTEMPT TOWARDS THE TORAH,²² FOR WHOEVER OCCUPIES HIMSELF NOT WITH THE [STUDY OF] TORAH IS CALLED: '[THE] REBUKED [ONE]'²³ AS IT IS SAID, AS A RING OF GOLD IN A SWINE'S SNOUT, SO IS A FAIR WOMAN THAT TURNETH AWAY FROM DISCRETION,²⁴ AND IT SAYS, AND THE TABLES WERE THE WORK OF GOD, AND THE WRITING WAS THE WRITING OF GOD, GRAVEN UPON THE TABLES.²⁵ READ NOT HARUTH [WHICH MEANS 'GRAVEN'] BUT HERUTH [WHICH MEANS 'FREEDOM'].²⁶ FOR THERE IS NO FREE MAN FOR THEE BUT HE THAT OCCUPIES HIMSELF WITH THE STUDY OF THE TORAH; AND WHOEVER REGULARLY OCCUPIES HIMSELF WITH THE STUDY OF THE TORAH, LO, HE IS EXALTED, AS IT IS SAID, AND FROM MATTANAH TO NAHALIEL; AND NAHALIEL TO BAMOTH.²⁷

BARAITHA 3. HE WHO LEARNS FROM HIS FELLOW ONE SINGLE SECTION,²⁸ OR ONE SINGLE RULE,²⁹ OR ONE SINGLE VERSE,³⁰ OR ONE SINGLE EXPRESSION,³¹ OR EVEN ONE SINGLE LETTER,³² IS UNDER OBLIGATION TO TREAT HIM WITH HONOUR; FOR SO WE FIND WITH DAVID, KING OF ISRAEL, WHO LEARNT FROM AHITOPHEL TWO THINGS ONLY,³³ [YET] CALLED HIM HIS MASTER, HIS COMPANION AND HIS FAMILIAR FRIEND, AS IT IS SAID, BUT IT WAS THOU, A MAN MINE EQUAL, MY COMPANION³⁴ AND MY FAMILIAR FRIEND.³⁵ IS THIS NOT [AN INSTANCE OF THE ARGUMENT] 'FROM THE LESS TO THE GREATER'?³⁶ WHAT [WAS IT IN THE CASE OF] DAVID, KING OF ISRAEL? [IT WAS] THAT HE HAD LEARNT FROM AHITOPHEL TWO THINGS ONLY, [YET] HE CALLED HIM HIS MASTER, HIS COMPANION AND HIS FAMILIAR FRIEND; [THEN IN THE CASE OF] ONE WHO LEARNS FROM HIS FELLOW A SECTION, A RULE, A VERSE OR AN EXPRESSION OR EVEN ONE LETTER, THERE ARE FOR [EVERY] ONE [REASON IN THE FORMER CASE] EVER SO MANY [REASONS IN THE LATTER CASE, FOR CONCLUDING] THAT HE IS UNDER OBLIGATION TO TREAT HIM [I.E. HIS FELLOW] WITH HONOUR. AND 'HONOUR' MEANS NOTHING BUT TORAH, AS IT IS SAID, THE WISE SHALL INHERIT HONOUR,³⁷ AND THE PERFECT SHALL INHERIT GOOD,³⁸ AND IT IS [ALSO] SAID, FOR I GIVE YOU GOOD DOCTRINE; FORSAKE YE NOT MY TEACHING [TORAH].³⁹

BARAITHA 4. SUCH IS THE WAY [OF LIFE CONDUCTIVE TO THE STUDY] OF THE TORAH: A MORSEL OF BREAD WITH SALT⁴⁰ THOU SHALT EAT, AND WATER BY MEASURE THOU SHALT DRINK,⁴¹ AND UPON THE GROUND THOU SHALT SLEEP, AND A LIFE OF PRIVATION THOU SHALT LIVE, AND IN THE TORAH SHALT THOU LABOUR.⁴² IF THOU DOEST THUS, HAPPY SHALT THOU BE, AND IT SHALL BE WELL WITH THEE.⁴³ HAPPY SHALT THOU BE IN THIS WORLD, AND IT SHALL BE WELL WITH THEE IN THE WORLD TO COME.

SEEK NOT GREATNESS FOR THYSELF, AND COVET NOT HONOUR MORE THAN THY LEARNING;⁴⁴ NEITHER CRAVE THOU FOR THE TABLE OF KINGS,⁴⁵ FOR THY TABLE IS GREATER THAN THEIR TABLE, AND THY CROWN IS GREATER THAN THEIR CROWN,⁴⁶ AND FAITHFUL IS THINE EMPLOYER TO PAY THEE THE REWARD OF THY LABOUR.⁴⁷

BARAITHA 5. GREATER IS THE TORAH THAN THE PRIESTHOOD AND THAN THE KINGSHIP, SEEING THAT THE KINGSHIP IS ACQUIRED IN [THE FORM OF]⁴⁸ THIRTY⁴⁹ DISTINCTIONS,⁵⁰ AND THE PRIESTHOOD IN [THE FORM OF] TWENTY-FOUR,⁵¹ BUT THE TORAH IN [THE FORM OF] FORTY-EIGHT THINGS,⁵² AND THESE THEY ARE IN: [THE FORM OF] STUDY, ATTENTIVE LISTENING,⁵³ ORDERED PRESENTATION [OF ONE'S STUDY-MATTER] WITH [ONE'S] LIPS,⁵⁴ REASONING OF THE HEART,⁵⁵ INTELLIGENCE OF THE HEART,⁵⁶ AWE,⁵⁷ FEAR,⁵⁸ HUMILITY,⁵⁹ JOYOUSNESS,⁶⁰ MINISTERING UNTO THE SAGES,⁶¹ PAINSTAKING EXAMINATION [OF A SUBJECT,] TOGETHER WITH [ONE'S] COLLEAGUES,⁶² FINE ARGUMENTATION OF DISCIPLES,⁶³ SE DATENESS,⁶⁴ [KNOWLEDGE OF] SCRIPTURE, [KNOWLEDGE OF] THE ORAL LEARNING, MODERATION IN SLEEP,⁶⁵ MODERATION IN GOSSIP,⁶⁶ MODERATION IN [WORLDLY] PLEASURE,⁶⁷ MODERATION IN HILARITY,⁶⁸ MODERATION IN WORLDLY INTERCOURSE,⁶⁹ LONG-SUFFERING, A GOOD HEART,⁷⁰ THE CONSCIENTIOUSNESS OF THE SAGES,⁷¹ [UNCOMPLAINING] ACCEPTANCE OF [DIVINE] CHASTISEMENTS.⁷²

BARAITHA 6. [THE POSSESSOR OF TORAH IS ONE] WHO RECOGNIZES HIS PLACE,⁷³ WHO REJOICES IN HIS PORTION,⁷⁴ WHO MAKES A FENCE⁷⁵ TO HIS WORDS,⁷⁶ WHO CLAIMS NO CREDIT FOR HIMSELF,⁷⁷ IS LOVED, LOVES THE ALL-PRESENT, LOVES [HIS FELLOW] CREATURES,⁷⁸ LOVES RIGHTEOUS WAYS,⁷⁹ WELCOMES⁸⁰ REPROOFS [OF HIMSELF],⁸¹ LOVES UPRIGHTNESS,⁸² KEEPS HIMSELF FAR FROM HONOUR[S],⁸³ LETS NOT HIS HEART BECOME SWELLED ON ACCOUNT OF HIS LEARNING, DELIGHTS NOT IN GIVING LEGAL DECISIONS,⁸⁴ SHARES IN THE BEARING OF A BURDEN⁸⁵ WITH HIS COLLEAGUE,⁸⁶ USES HIS WEIGHT WITH HIM ON THE SCALE OF MERIT,⁸⁷ PLACES HIM UPON [A GROUNDWORK OF] TRUTH,⁸⁸ PLACES HIM UPON [A GROUNDWORK OF] PEACE,⁸⁹ COMPOSES HIMSELF⁹⁰ AT HIS STUDY,⁹¹ ASKS AND ANSWERS,⁹² LISTENS [TO OTHERS], AND [HIMSELF] ADDS [TO HIS KNOWLEDGE],⁹³ LEARNS IN ORDER TO TEACH,⁹⁴ LEARNS IN ORDER TO PRACTISE,⁹⁴ MAKES HIS TEACHER WISER,⁹⁵ NOTES WITH PRECISION THAT WHICH HE HAS HEARD,⁹⁶ AND SAYS A THING IN THE NAME OF HIM WHO SAID IT. LO, THOU HAST LEARNT: EVERYONE THAT SAYS A THING IN THE NAME OF HIM WHO SAID IT, BRINGS DELIVERANCE INTO THE WORLD, AS IT IS SAID: AND ESTHER TOLD THE KING THEREOF IN MORDECAI'S NAME.⁹⁷

BARAITHA 7. GREAT IS TORAH FOR IT GIVES LIFE, UNTO THOSE 'THAT PRACTISE IT, IN THIS WORLD, AND IN THE WORLD TO COME, AS IT IS SAID: FOR THEY⁹⁸ ARE LIFE UNTO THOSE THAT FIND THEM, AND HEALTH TO ALL THEIR FLESH,⁹⁹ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: IT⁹⁸ SHALL BE HEALTH TO THY NAVEL, AND MARROW TO THY BONES,¹⁰⁰ AND IT SAYS [ALSO] SHE¹⁰¹ IS A TREE OF LIFE TO THEM THAT LAY HOLD UPON HER, AND HAPPY IS EVERYONE THAT HOLDETH HER FAST,¹⁰² AND IT SAYS [ALSO]:

FOR THEY¹⁰¹ SHALL BE A CHAPLET OF GRACE UNTO THY HEAD, AND CHAINS ABOUT THY NECK,¹⁰³ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: SHE¹⁰¹ WILL GIVE TO THY HEAD A CHAPLET OF GRACE; A CROWN OF GLORY WILL SHE BESTOW ON THEE,¹⁰⁴ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: LENGTH OF DAYS IS IN HER¹⁰¹ RIGHT HAND; IN HER LEFT HAND ARE RICHES AND HONOUR,¹⁰⁵ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: FOR LENGTH OF DAYS, AND YEARS OF LIFE, AND PEACE, WILL THEY¹⁰¹ ADD TO THEE.¹⁰⁶

BARAITHA 8. R. SIMEON B. JUDAH¹⁰⁷ SAID IN THE NAME OF R. SIMEON B. YOHAI:¹⁰⁸ COMELINESS, STRENGTH, RICHES, HONOUR, WISDOM, OLD AGE, HOARY AGE, AND CHILDREN¹⁰⁹ ARE BECOMING TO THE RIGHTEOUS, AND BECOMING TO THE WORLD, AS IT IS SAID: THE HOARY HEAD IS A CROWN OF GLORY, IT IS FOUND IN THE WAY OF RIGHTEOUSNESS,¹¹⁰ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: THE CROWN OF THE WISE IS THEIR RICHES,¹¹¹ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: CHILDREN'S CHILDREN ARE THE CROWN OF OLD MEN; AND THE GLORY OF CHILDREN ARE THEIR FATHERS,¹¹² AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: THE GLORY OF YOUNG MEN IS THEIR STRENGTH; AND THE BEAUTY OF OLD MEN IS THE HOARY HEAD,¹¹³ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: THE MOON SHALL BE CONFOUNDED, AND THE SUN ASHAMED; FOR THE LORD OF HOSTS WILL REIGN IN MOUNT ZION, AND IN JERUSALEM, AND BEFORE HIS ELDERS SHALL BE GLORY.¹¹⁴

BARAITHA 9. R. SIMEON B. MENASYA¹¹⁵ SAID: THESE SEVEN QUALITIES,¹¹⁶ WHICH THE SAGES HAVE ENUMERATED [AS BECOMING] TO THE RIGHTEOUS, WERE ALL OF THEM REALIZED IN RABBI AND HIS SONS.¹¹⁷

R. JOSE B. KISMA¹¹⁸ SAID: ONCE I WAS WALKING BY THE WAY WHEN A MAN MET ME, AND GAVE ME [THE SALUTATION OF] 'PEACE',¹¹⁹ AND I RETURNED HIM [THE SALUTATION OF] PEACE'. SAID HE TO ME, RABBI, FROM WHAT PLACE ART THOU?' SAID I TO HIM, 'FROM A GREAT CITY OF SAGES AND SCRIBES AM I.' SAID HE TO ME, 'RABBI, [SHOULD IT BE] THY PLEASURE THAT THOU DWELL WITH US IN OUR PLACE, I WILL GIVE THEE A THOUSAND THOUSAND DENARII OF GOLD,¹²⁰ AND PRECIOUS STONES AND PEARLS.' SAID I TO HIM: 'IF THOU SHOULDST GIVE ME ALL THE SILVER AND GOLD, PRECIOUS STONES AND PEARLS THAT ARE IN THE WORLD, I WOULD NOT DWELL [ANYWHERE] EXCEPTING IN A PLACE OF TORAH; FOR IN THE HOUR OF THE DEPARTURE OF A MAN [FROM THE WORLD], THERE ACCOMPANY HIM NEITHER GOLD NOR SILVER, NOR PRECIOUS STONES NOR PEARLS, BUT TORAH AND GOOD DEEDS ALONE, AS IT IS SAID, WHEN THOU WALLEST, IT SHALL LEAD THEE, WHEN THOU LIEST DOWN, IT SHALL WATCH OVER THEE; AND WHEN THOU WAKEST, IT SHALL TALK WITH THEE.¹²¹ WHEN THOU WALLEST, IT SHALL LEAD THEE — IN THIS WORLD, WHEN THOU LIEST DOWN, IT SHALL WATCH OVER THEE — IN THE GRAVE,¹²² AND WHEN THOU WAKEST, IT SHALL TALK WITH THEE¹²³ — IN THE WORLD TO COME; AND THUS IT IS WRITTEN IN THE BOOK OF PSALMS BY DAVID, KING OF ISRAEL, THE LAW OF THY MOUTH IS BETTER UNTO ME THAN THOUSANDS OF GOLD AND SILVER,¹²⁴ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: MINE IS THE SILVER, AND MINE THE GOLD, SAITH THE LORD OF HOSTS.¹²⁵

BARAITHA 10. FIVE¹²⁶ POSSESSIONS HAS THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, [SPECIFICALLY] DECLARED HIS OWN IN HIS WORLD, AND THESE THEY ARE: THE TORAH, ONE POSSESSION, THE SANCTUARY, ONE [OTHER] POSSESSION,¹²⁷ HEAVEN AND EARTH, ONE [MORE] POSSESSION, ABRAHAM, ONE [OTHER] POSSESSION,¹²⁸ ISRAEL, ONE [MORE] POSSESSION.

THE TORAH IS ONE¹²⁹ POSSESSION. WHENCE [DO WE INFER THIS]? SINCE IT IS WRITTEN, THE LORD POSSESSED ME¹³⁰ AT THE BEGINNING OF HIS WAY, BEFORE HIS

WORKS OF OLD.¹³¹ HEAVEN AND EARTH ARE ONE POSSESSION. WHENCE [DO WE INFER THIS]? SINCE IT IS SAID:¹³² THUS SAITH THE LORD: THE HEAVEN IS MY THRONE, AND THE EARTH IS MY FOOTSTOOL; WHERE IS THE HOUSE THAT YE MAY BUILD UNTO ME? AND WHERE IS THE PLACE THAT MAY BE MY RESTING PLACE ?¹³³ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: HOW MANIFOLD ARE THY WORKS, O LORD! IN WISDOM HAST THOU MADE THEM ALL, FULL IS THE EARTH, THY POSSESSION.¹³⁴ ABRAHAM IS ONE POSSESSION. WHENCE [DO WE INFER THIS]? SINCE IT IS WRITTEN: AND HE BLESSED HIM AND SAID: BLESSED BE ABRAM OF GOD THE MOST HIGH, MAKER OF HEAVEN AND EARTH'.¹³⁵ ISRAEL IS ONE POSSESSION. WHENCE [DO WE INFER THIS]? SINCE IT IS WRITTEN: TILL THY PEOPLE PASS OVER, O LORD, TILL THE PEOPLE PASS OVER THAT THOU HAST MADE THINE OWN,¹³⁶ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: AS FOR THE HOLY THAT ARE IN THE EARTH, THEY ARE THE EXCELLENT IN WHOM IS ALL MY DELIGHT.¹³⁷ THE SANCTUARY IS ONE POSSESSION. WHENCE [DO WE INFER THIS]? SINCE IT IS SAID: THE SANCTUARY, O LORD, WHICH THY HANDS HAVE ESTABLISHED,¹³⁸ AND IT IS SAID [ALSO]: AND HE BROUGHT THEM TO HIS HOLY BORDER, TO THE MOUNTAIN, WHICH HIS RIGHT HAND HAD POSSESSED.¹³⁹

BARAITHA 11. WHATEVER THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, CREATED IN HIS WORLD, CREATED HE NOT BUT FOR HIS GLORY, AS IT IS SAID: AND [AS FOR] EVERYTHING THAT IS CALLED BY MY NAME, INDEED [IT IS] FOR MY GLORY [THAT] I HAVE CREATED IT, I HAVE FORMED IT, YEA I HAVE MADE IT,¹³⁹ AND IT SAYS [ALSO]: THE LORD SHALL REIGN FOR EVER AND EVER.¹⁴⁰

(1) Lit., 'tongue', 'language', v. n. 2.

(2) The whole of this paragraph is introductory. The chapter that follows is not actually a part of the Mishnah, but consists almost exclusively of Baraithas i.e., dicta of Tannaitic authorship not included in the Mishnah of R. Judah ha-Nasi (v. supra p. II, n. 1), the exception being a saying by R. Joshua b. Levi an early Palestinian Amora. The chapter is otherwise known as פרק קנין תורה 'The Chapter on the Possession of Torah,' its subject being the praise of the Torah, or as פרק ר מאיר 'The Chapter of A. Meir,' from its opening words, and forms the eighth chapter of Tractate Kallah. It was attached to Aboth (which consists of five chapters) as a sixth chapter, apparently after it had become customary to read the chapters of Aboth in their order on the successive Sabbaths between Passover and Pentecost, of which there are six (v. Introduction). The choice of this chapter to fill the gap is to be explained by its being in style and subject matter close to Aboth, and by its being appropriate, by reason of its praise of the Torah, for the Sabbath preceding the festival celebrating, inter alia, the Giving of the Torah on Sinai.

(3) Lit., 'chosen'.

(4) Some translate 'their Mishnah'.

(5) רע companion, friend, sc. of God, so explained by MV and others who quote Ps. CXXXIX, 17 which they understand as, How precious are (רעים) Thy friends (A.V. thoughts) to me, O God (Rashi a.l.). For the righteous as God's friends (אֹהֲבֵי) cf. Isa. XLI, 8; Prov. VIII, 17; Ps. XCVII, 10; Ex. XX, 6; Deut. V, 10.

(6) One that loves God is himself beloved of God. v. Prov. VIII, 17, I love them that love me, cf. I Sam. II, 30.

(7) Cf. supra I,12.

(8) The expression was probably suggested by Judges IX, 13.

(9) Cf. Job XXIX, 14; Isa. LXI, 10.

(10) Sc. of God.

(11) מכשרתו Hif'il of כשר to be proper, fit, suitable, cf. Est. VIII, 5. In Rabbinic Hebrew it is mostly used in the technical sense of being legally valid or ritually fit.

(12) Prov. VIII, 14.

(13) L. 'kingly appearance'.

(14) L. 'personality that commands obedience'.

(15) Cf. Prov. ibid. 15, (Wisdom-Torah speaking). By me princes rule and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.

(16) MV adds 'from Heaven'.

(17) Cf. Ps. XXV, 14, The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him; Amos III, 7. He hath revealed his secret to his servants the prophets.

(18) V. supra II, 8. R. Johanan b. Zakkai's characterisation of R. Eleazar b. 'Arach.

(19) The quality attributed in some texts to the well.

(20) One of the first generation of Palestinian Amoraim (middle third century). A prolific and popular Aggadist.

(21) בת קול lit., 'the daughter of a voice, or of a sound,' a secondary sound caused by the reverberation of an original sound, used of (i) an echo, (ii) a sound caused by a sound that was originally divinely uttered, and intended for human hearing. Man cannot endure hearing the direct voice of God, v. Deut, V, 22, if we hear the voice of God any more, then we shall die.

(22) Through neglecting its study and practice.

(23) Tanhuma ibid, 'rebuked of the Holy One, blessed be He.' The verb נזף means to rebuke, censure, reprimand, and is also used of a form of excommunication. MV. adduces Deut. XXVII, 26, Cursed be he that confirmeth not the words of this Law . . . and quotes Shebu. 36a to the effect that 'cursed' there has, inter alia, the meaning of excommunication.

(24) Prov. XI, 22. The Hebrew rendered 'a ring of gold in the snout', viz. ננעם זחב בע'אף is taken as pointing to the opprobrious appellation 'Nazuf' i.e., the rebuked one. This form of play on words is called נוטריון notaricon (from Latin, notarius, a shorthand writer) a mode of cypher-writing; טעם 'discretion' as used in the Wisdom literature is taken as one of the synonyms for Torah. The meaning intended here is in the nature of the following: One who has capacity for Torah ('a fair woman') and turns his back on it ('turning away from discretion') is like a swine that has a gold ring in its snout (Nes'em Zahab be'af) and burrows with it in the mud and dirt, and therefore incurs divine censure.

(25) Ex. XXXII, 16.

(26) 'Read not . . . but (read) . . . 'is an exegetical device used when the expounder felt that a minor alteration of a word would provide a 'short cut' to the interpretation he wished to convey. It was a deliberate and manifest play on words, and was not intended to indicate a variant in the Scriptural text, (v. Taylor a.l. and Bacher ערכי המדרש I, s.v. קרא).

(27) Treating the Hebrew place-names as if they were common nouns, the passage may be taken to mean 'Through (God's) gift (to Israel) (i.e. the Torah) (one attains) a heritage of God; from the heritage of God (one is raised) to high places.' MV adds: 'But if he cultivates overweening pride, God brings him low, as it is said, And from Bamoth (i.e. high places) to the valley (Num. XXI, 20, the continuation of the quotation in our text). V. 'Er. 54a.

(28) פרק an old term for a Psalm, also used for a section of the oral law (Mishnah), v. Bacher, op. cit. s.v.

(29) הלכה an accepted or decided law. V. Bacher op. cit. s.v.

(30) פסוק a rather shorter division of Scripture, synonymous with הכתוב v. Bacher op. cit. s.v. The division of the Bible into chapters and verses (called פסוקים in neo-Hebrew) is a much later device.

(31) דבור (a) divine speech, (b) Biblical expression. (c) saying. V. Bacher op. cit. s.v.

(32) אות . lit., 'sign'. letter (of the Alphabet), word, a name of God, etc. v. Bacher op. cit. s.v. The 'Gemara' to Kallah VIII says 'one single letter' refers to the correct spelling of words in which one is in doubt about one letter only, e.g. whether-to use א or ע .

(33) The 'Gemara' to Kallah VIII in the name of Raba defines the two things as: (i) The principle that study in the company of a fellow-student is preferable to solitary study; and it is to this that David referred when he said (Ps. LV, 15) together we sweetened counsel (which- [study of the] Torah) with the emphasis on 'together'. (ii) The lesson that it is proper to proceed to the House of Prayer not alone and leisurely. but in company and eagerly; and it is this that David meant when he said (ibid). In the house of God we walked with the throng (ברגש , which may also mean with eagerness, enthusiasm). Yalkut, Samuel, 142, reproduces two different lessons which Ahitophel is supposed to have imparted to David. (i) When the fatality of 'Uzza's death occurred in connection with the conveying of the Ark on a cart (II Sam. VI). Ahitophel drew David's attention to Num. VII, 9. according to which the Ark was to be borne on the shoulder. (Sifre, Num. 46, p. 14a; J. Sanh. X. 2.) (ii) When David was digging the foundations for the Temple, he dislodged a stone that had stopped up the depths, the floods of which then threatened to overwhelm the earth. David enquired whether it be permissible to write the Divine name on a potsherd and throw it into the water, knowing that the water would obliterate the writing. Ahitophel drew a comparison with the instance of the Sotah (the wife suspected of unfaithfulness). There it is ordained, the priest shall write these curses in a scroll and he shall blot them with the waters of bitterness (Num. V, 23) and the passage containing those curses contains also the Divine name which, too, the priest has in such a case to blot out. If, argued Ahitophel, in the hope of re-establishing peace in one household, the Divine name may be obliterated, surely the same may be done for the sake of the well-being of the whole world (Mak. 11a, cf. I. Sanh. ibid). Hertz in JQR. N.S. Vol. X (1919). pp. 109ff. argues strongly in favour of an anonymous suggestion that instead of שני דברים בלבד (two things only) we should read שנדברים בלבד , which = they merely spoke to one another, conversed.

(34) So the Versions, but the author of the Baraitha evidently thought of the word אֲלֹנִי as derived from the root אָלַן meaning 'to learn' and understood it as 'teacher', or, in accordance with the use of the word in Gen. XXXVI as 'chief', 'superior'.

(35) מִיִּדְעִי Ps. LV, 14. It appears not impossible that the word was understood as 'my man of knowledge'.

(36) Hal wa-Homer (v. Glos.). The Hal wa-Homer here is certainly not a very evident one. If our text is correct (v. however p. 81, n. 6) we must assume that the argument intended is: If David who was a King referred in such respectful terms to Ahitophel who was only an ordinary person (and not an exemplary one at that), because he had learnt from him only two things, how much more should a person who has learnt something from his equal or from his superior, accord the latter respect.

(37) Prov. III, 35.

(38) Ibid. XXVIII, 20.

(39) Ibid. IV, 2. The process of reasoning here resembles an equation. Prov. III,35 {the wise == the perfect shall inherit shall inherit Honour == Good } Prov. XXVIII, 10. and, since Good=Torah (Prov. IV, 2) Honour=(Good=) Torah.

(40) The proverbial meal of a poor man. V. Ber. 2b.

(41) Cf. Ezek. IV, 11.

(42) This saying is to be found in Tanh. נָה beginning (but not in ed. Buber) where it is clear that it means that one who wishes to study Torah in earnest should deliberately adopt these measures of self-discipline. Rashi, however, says it does not mean that a wealthy person should reduce himself to a life of penury, but that even if a man be so poor as to be able to afford no more than bread with salt, etc., study of the law is nevertheless expected of him; if one is rich, his duty to engage in the study of the Torah is all the greater (MV).

(44) Consider learning the greatest of all honours (v. infra Bar. 5) or 'covet not more honour than that to which your learning entitles you.' Some texts: 'Covet not honour. More than thy learning (shouldst thou) practise' which is reminiscent of supra I, 16, and III, 9. The reading adopted is more in keeping with the Baraitha as a whole.

(45) With its luxuries and dainties.

(46) V. supra IV, 13.

(47) V. supra II, 14 and 16.

(48) For this use of ב v. BDB. s,v. ב I, 7 d. The better-known usage of ב קְנָה ב (Beth pretii) e.g. Gen. XXXIII, 19, has evidently misled translators and commentators of this Baraitha, where that construction is impossible, since the fact is not that either the kingship or the priesthood are acquired at the price of, or in return for, or by means of, the respective ma'aloth, but rather that the ma'aloth are acquired in virtue of the kingly or priestly office.

(49) One enumeration can be traced in I Sam. VIII, 11-17 (v. Elijah Wilna to our Barai tha), and another is detailed in Sanh. II, Rashi says that on investigation both lists prove identical.

(51) V. Num. XVIII, 8, to the end (v. Elijah Wilna ibid.) and the list in Tanhuma Bamidbar, 29.

(52) I.e., (more or less) specific qualities which when present in a man show him to be a possessor of the Torah in a comprehensive and complete sense.

(53) Lit., 'the hearing of the ear'.

(54) 'Thinking out aloud' one's learning, likewise articulate rehearsing of the expositions of others, are now, as ever, characteristic of, even if not exclusively peculiar to, the Jewish Torah-student, Rabbinic pedagogics insist upon audible study, probably because for a learning that was exclusively oral, audible study was almost a sine-qua-non. Cf. 'Er. 53b-54a.

(55) 'Heart' means the seat of the reasoning faculties, now termed 'mind'.

(56) הִלָּב (שְׂכֹל) שְׂכֹלֹת, Rashi says, 'I cannot see any difference between this and the former quality.' L. however says, the former means understanding in the sense of deriving conclusions by means of logical processes, the latter-deep (intuitive) insight into the hidden meanings of the Torah.

(57) In his bearing towards his master (L.).

(58) Sc. of God.

(59) V. Baraitha 1.

(60) Cf. the phrase שְׂמַחָה שֶׁל מִצְוָה, The joy expended on, and experienced in, the performing of a divine precept.

- (61) Personal attendance on scholars, constituting 'apprenticeship' to them, is considered superior even to study itself (v. Ber, 7b), cf. Prov. XIII, 20. Every serious student of Rabbinics, especially if he aspires to the Rabbinical Degree, submits to a course of שמוש
- (62) דקדוק הברים Meticulous and objective examination of the subject of one's study in collaboration with fellow-students, i.e. one's equals. MV reads דקדוק הברים 'attachment to colleagues.'
- (63) פלפול התלמידים from פלפל, 'a pepper-grain' with reference to its extreme fineness, and to the sharpness of its taste and aroma. In the case of disciples, credit is given for sheer ingenuity in theoretical reasoning without strict regard to its immediate objectivity. As an exercise developing the mental faculties, 'Pilpul' is intended to serve in good stead when with a fuller store of knowledge and a maturer appreciation of the realities, the erstwhile Talmid, now a Haber or Hakam, is called upon to apply his knowledge in practical fashion.
- (64) Calculated and purposeful approach to problems confronting one.
- (65) Cf. supra III, 10.
- (66) Cf. supra I, 5.
- (67) Cf. supra Baraitha 4 and III, 10.
- (68) 'Laughter', cf. ibid. 13, though it cannot be understood here in so extreme a sense as it is suggested to have there.
- (69) Cf. supra II, 2 et al.
- (70) Cf. supra ibid. 9.
- (71) Their moral steadfastness and intellectual honesty. Most commentators render 'Trust or faith in the wise.'
- (72) So that suffering does not deflect him from the study and practice of the Torah. The man of Torah is able to 'take things philosophically' and to derive salutary moral gain from evil and painful experiences.
- (73) Realises the comparative lowliness of man's estate, cf. supra III, 1, IV, 4, or, knows his own place vis-a vis other, and greater, scholars. Cf. supra IV, 12; V, 7. MV: He knows his place in the house-of-study, even though he always arrives there so early in the morning, that it is too dark to distinguish with one's eyes one seat from another.
- (74) Torah makes him so contented that worry does not interfere with his further study (v. MV).
- (75) Cf. supra I, 1.
- (76) Cf. ibid. 11.
- (77) Cf. supra II, 8.
- (78) Cf. Baraitha 1.
- (79) For the phrase cf. Ps. XI, 7.
- (80) Lit., 'loves'.
- (81) Cf. Prov. IX, 8, Reprove a wise man and he will love thee.
- (82) For a similar phrase cf. I Chron. XXIX, 17.
- (83) MV adds, 'and he runs not after honour.' Cf. 'Whoever goes around seeking greatness, greatness flees from him, and, Whoever runs away from greatness, greatness follows him.' ('Er. 13b).
- (84) Cf. supra IV, 7.
- (85) He considers judicial office as a burden and a weighty responsibility, and not as an opportunity of exhibiting authority.
- (86) Disliking the 'ipse dixit' he shares the burden of giving a decision with his co-judge who may be a layman, or with some greater scholar whom he consults. Cf. supra IV, 7, 8.
- (87) Or, 'causes him to incline towards . . .' Induces his colleague to take a lenient view.
- (88) He guides and directs his legal assessors so that they reach a true understanding of the case, and a correct knowledge of the relevant law.
- (89) Peace must be allied to Truth, in judgment, v. supra I, 18. Most commentators and translators take 'Shares in the bearing . . . peace' as denoting qualities that should characterize the relationship of the possessor of Torah towards all men. This may well be so, but here, it appears, his attitude towards his (lay) court assessors is, in the first place, meant.
- (90) Some versions, 'his heart'.
- (91) Or 'his teaching', which is perhaps better as 'sedateness' (ישוב) (presumably, mainly, in learning) has already been given in this list.
- (92) Some read as in supra V, 7, q.v.
- (93) Cf. supra I, 13.
- (94) Cf. supra IV, 5.
- (95) Cf. ibid. I. Or render 'Acknowledges his teacher to be superior to himself in wisdom' (L.).

- (96) Sc. from his teachers.
- (97) Est. II, 22. This dictum is attributed in Meg. 15a to R. Hanina.
- (98) The subject in all cases is (Words of) Wisdom, which is identified with Torah,
- (99) Prov. IV, 22.
- (100) Ibid. III, 8.
- (101) V. p.86, n. 12.
- (102) Prov. III, 18,
- (103) Ibid. 1, 9.
- (104) Ibid. IV, 9. Some versions insert here ibid. IX, 11.
- (105) Ibid, III, 16.
- (106) Ibid. III, 2.
- (107) So in Tosef. Sanh. XI, 4, but J. Sanh. XI, 3, R. Simeon b. Menasya, who was a contemporary of R. Simeon b. Judah. The latter, however, is not only one of the 'tradents' par excellence, but the main tradent of R. Simeon b. Yohai (v. Bacher, Tradition, pp. 80 and 82).
- (108) One of the foremost disciples of R. Akiba. Whilst his father appears to have been persona grata with the Roman authorities, R. Simeon himself was their bitter enemy, on account of the selfish mercenary and immoral motives that prompted even their apparently good actions. Eventually he had to flee them and, together with his son R. Eleazar, hide in a cave for thirteen years. (Shab. 33b.) During that time his knowledge of both legal and mystical lore increased phenomenally. In the Mishnah the name R. Simeon (without further description) denotes R. Simeon b. Yohai.
- (109) This list contains, apparently, eight items, whereas the next Baraitha refers to 'the above seven qualities.' Heidenheim (quoted in Baer's Siddur Abodath Israel and in MV, p. 561), pointing out there is no Biblical citation in support of comeliness, which shows that it is not intended to rank as a separate and distinct accomplishment, renders 'Comeliness, consisting in strength etc.' — only seven qualities. Heidenheim was, however, apparently unaware of Elijah Wilna's comment in which the latter points out that there is no Scriptural quotation for 'wisdom' which he, accordingly, deletes. This, too, leaves only seven. As for 'comeliness', he points out that Prov. I, 9 and IV, 9, cited in the previous Baraitha, offer apposite Scriptural authority. In J. Sanh. loc. cit. 'old age' is omitted and only 'hoary age' is given. L. says there is obviously no need for proof that strength, riches, honour and wisdom are 'good things, and is of opinion that all the Scriptural texts here, are given, as they are required, in support of the claims made on behalf of old age and hoary age (treating them as one) and children, as these are liable to be disputed on the grounds that hoary age, entailing physical weakening, and the possession of children, owing to the uncertainty as to how they will grow up, appear to be not unmixed blessings.
- (110) Prov. XVI, 31.
- (111) Ibid. XIV, 24.
- (112) Ibid. XVII, 6.
- (113) Ibid, XX, 29.
- (114) Isa, XXIV, 23.
- (115) A disciple of R. Meir and a contemporary of R. Judah ha-Nasi whom he survived, and, thus, one of the last generation of Tannaim.
- (116) מְדוּת v. supra V, 10. cf, p. 67 n. 3.
- (117) R. Simeon b. Menasya must have lived to a considerable age (v. n. 7) to have had the opportunity of testifying so unequivocally to the qualities of Rabbi's sons,
- (118) A contemporary of R. Hanania b. Teradion; taught in Caesarea, He held that the Roman domination was heaven-ordained and was respected by leading Romans, many of whom attended his funeral (A.Z. 18a). His name does not occur in the Mishnah.
- (119) Cf. supra IV, 15.
- (120) A denarius of gold = 24 denarii of silver,
- (121) Prov. VI, 22.
- (122) Midrash Tehillim to Ps. I, 3, adds, 'from the worms,' and Gen. Rab. XXXV read, 'in the hour of death',
- (123) MV: 'it shall speak for thee,' i.e., intercede on thy behalf.
- (124) Ps. CXIX, 72.
- (125) Hag. II, 8.
- (126) Elijah Wilna emends to 'Four'. Sifre Deut. 309 (p. 134a) enumerates only three (Torah, Israel, Sanctuary), Mekilta

Beshallah (Shirah) Pes. 87b, adding Heaven and earth, gives four. In all these parallels the reference to Abraham is omitted. MV, though retaining it in its text, comments on its clumsiness.

(127) V. preceding note.

(128) Elijah Wilna deletes this item. V, ibid,

(129) Perhaps transl. 'an unique'.

(130) Wisdom (= Torah) speaking.

(131) Prov. VIII, 22.

(132) Elijah Wilna deletes from here onwards and continues from 'And he blessed him etc.', thus eliminating the incongruous introduction of the reference to Abraham, and providing a suitable scriptural authority for 'heaven and earth' as a 'possession', viz. Gen. XIV, 19 (which is also the relevant citation in Pesah. 87b).

(134) Ps. CIV, 24. This is the only rendering applicable here. קנייך (spelt חסר 'defective' as in some texts) is taken as a singular.

(135) Gen. XIV, 29. If this should, after all, be intended as a proof for Abraham as a possession', the verse would have to be understood thus: 'Blessed be Abraham of the Most High God who possesses him even as he possesses heaven and earth' (MV), or 'Blessed . . . God because He is possessor of heaven and earth which owe their existence to the merit of Abraham,' (Rashi).

(136) Ex. XV, 16.

(137) Ps. XVI, 3. 'The holy . . .' was taken by the author of the Baraita to refer to Israel; 'my delight', הַפִּי, he understood as 'that which [desire to possess]'; cf, the use of הַפִּי in Mal. III, 2; Prov. III, 15.

(138) Ex. XV, 17.

(139) Ps, LXXVIII, 54. As the first quotation Ex. XV, 17 did not employ the term 'possess', the latter is provided by adducing, as a complement the verse from Psalms. Rashi criticizes the reference to the Sanctuary as a 'possession' on the ground that the proof is indirect.

(140) Ex. XV, 18.

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH ALL SACRIFICES SLAUGHTERED NOT IN THEIR OWN NAME¹ ARE VALID,² SAVE THAT THEY DO NOT FREE THEIR OWNERS OF THEIR OBLIGATION,³ WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE PASSOVER-OFFERING AND THE SIN-OFFERING.⁴ [THIS HOLDS GOOD OF] A PASSOVER-OFFERING IN ITS PROPER TIME;⁵ AND A SIN-OFFERING AT ALL TIMES. R. ELIEZER SAID: ALSO THE GUILT-OFFERING [IS INVALID]. [AND THE LAW HOLDS GOOD OF] A PASSOVER-OFFERING IN ITS PROPER TIME, AND A SIN-OFFERING AND A GUILT-OFFERING AT ALL TIMES. R. ELIEZER ARGUED: THE SIN-OFFERING COMES ON ACCOUNT OF SIN, AND THE GUILT-OFFERING COMES ON ACCOUNT OF SIN: AS A SIN-OFFERING [SLAUGHTERED] NOT IN ITS OWN NAME IS INVALID, SO IS THE GUILT-OFFERING INVALID [SLAUGHTERED] NOT IN ITS OWN NAME. JOSE B. HONI SAID: [SACRIFICES] SLAUGHTERED IN THE NAME OF A PASSOVER-OFFERING OR A SIN-OFFERING ARE INVALID. SIMEON THE BROTHER OF 'AZARIAH⁶ SAID: IF ONE SLAUGHTERED THEM UNDER A HIGHER DESIGNATION THAN THEIR OWN THEY ARE VALID; UNDER A LOWER DESIGNATION THAN THEIR OWN, THEY ARE INVALID. HOW SO? IF ONE SLAUGHTERED MOST SACRED SACRIFICES UNDER THE DESIGNATION OF LESSER SACRIFICES,⁷ THEY ARE INVALID; IF ONE SLAUGHTERED LESSER SACRIFICES UNDER THE DESIGNATION OF MOST SACRED SACRIFICES, THEY ARE VALID. IF ONE SLAUGHTERED A FIRSTLING OR TITHE IN THE NAME OF A PEACE-OFFERING,⁸ IT IS VALID; IF ONE SLAUGHTERED A PEACE-OFFERING IN THE NAME OF A FIRSTLING OR TITHE, IT IS INVALID.

GEMARA. Why must [the Tanna] teach, SAVE THAT THEY DO NOT FREE [THEIR OWNERS OF THEIR OBLIGATION]; let him teach, 'and they do not free their owners of their obligation?'⁹ — He informs us this: they merely do not free their owners of their obligation. yet they retain their [original] sanctity, and no alteration therein is permitted, in accordance with Raba's dictum. For Raba said: If a burnt-offering was slaughtered under a different designation, its blood must not be sprinkled under a different designation .¹⁰

If you wish, I can say [this follows] from reason, and if you wish I can say, from Scripture. If you wish, I can say [this follows] from reason: because he made an alteration therein [once], is he to go on making alterations therein?¹¹ And if you wish, I can say [it follows] from Scripture: That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt observe and do; according as thou hast vowed a freewill-offering unto the Lord thy God etc.:¹² is this a freewill-offering —

(1) I.e. under a different designation. E.g., a burnt-offering slaughtered as a peace-offering.

(2) They count as a sacrifice, and all their rites, such as sprinkling the blood, burning the emurim (v. Glos). and eating the flesh, must be performed.

(3) If the owner vowed e.g.. a burnt-offering, this sacrifice does not free him of his obligation and he must bring another.

(4) These are altogether invalid; hence they must be burnt (not on the altar), and the usual rites may not be performed.

(5) Sc. from midday on the eve of Passover until nightfall.

(6) Sotah 21a.

(7) Sacrifices were divided into two categories: (i) Most sacred; these included the sin-offering, meal-offering, burnt-offering and guilt-offering; and (ii) Lesser sacrifices e.g.,the peace-offering. Passover-offering and the thanksoffering.

(8) The sanctity of the former is lower, v. infra 89a.

(9) Which is more in keeping with the terse style of the Mishnah.

(10) But as the blood of a burnt-offering.

(11) Obviously not-one wrong does not authorise another!

(12) Deut. XXIII,24.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 2b

surely it is a vow?¹ The meaning however is this: if you have acted in accordance with your vow,² let it be the fulfilment of your vow; but if not, let it count as a freewill-offering.³ Now as a freewill-offering is it permitted to make a change in it?⁴

Rabina said to R. Papa: You were not with us in the evening within the Sabbath limit of Be Harmack,⁵ when Raba pointed out a contradiction in two important laws, and then reconciled them. What are these important laws? — We learnt: ALL SACRIFICES SLAUGHTERED NOT IN THEIR OWN NAME etc. Thus it is only when they are slaughtered for another purpose; but if no purpose is defined, they even acquit their owners of their obligation, which proves that an undefined purpose is the same as its own purpose [defined]. But the following contradicts it: 'Every Get⁶ which was written not in the name of the woman [for whom it is intended]⁷ is invalid;⁸ and [in point of fact if it is written with] an undefined purpose it is also invalid?⁹ And he answered it: Sacrifices, where no purpose is defined, stand [to be slaughtered] for their own purpose.¹⁰ whereas a woman, if nothing is defined, does not stand to be divorced.

Now, how do we know that sacrifices slaughtered with undefined purpose are valid? Shall we say, because we learned: ALL SACRIFICES SLAUGHTERED NOT IN THEIR OWN NAME etc., while he [the Tanna] does not teach, 'which were not slaughtered under their own designation'. But surely in the case of the Get too, he also teaches: Every Get which was written not in the name of the woman, is invalid, and does not teach, 'which was not written in the name of the woman is invalid'! — Rather, it follows from what we learned: How is 'in its own name and not in its own name' meant? In the name of the Passover-offering and in the name of a peace-offering.¹¹ Thus it is [invalid] only because he stated¹² 'in the name of the Passover-offering and in the name of a peace-offering' but, [if he slaughtered it] in the name of the Passover-offering and [sprinkled its blood] with undefined purpose, it is fit; which proves that with purpose undefined it is as in its own name!¹³ — Perhaps it is different there, because one may argue: Whoever does anything, does it with the original [expressed] intention! — Rather, it follows from the second clause: [How is] 'not in its own name and in its own name' [meant]? In the name of a peace-offering [first] and [then] in the name of the Passover-offering. Thus it is [invalid] only because he stated,¹² 'In the name of a peace-offering and in the name of the Passover-offering'; but [if he slaughtered it] without a defined purpose [and sprinkled the blood] in the name of the Passover-offering, it is valid!¹³ — Perhaps it is different there, because we say: the end illumines the beginning.¹⁴ Alternatively, [perhaps] because he teaches 'in its own name and not in its own name' [in the first clause], he also teaches 'not in its own name and in its own name' [in the second clause]!¹⁵ Rather, it follows from this: A sacrifice is slaughtered for the sake of six things: For the sake of the sacrifice, for the sake of the sacrificer, for the sake of the Divine Name, for the sake of fire-offerings, for the sake of a savour, for the sake of pleasing, and a sin-offering and a guilt-offering for the sake of sin.¹⁶ R. Jose said: Even if one did not have any of these purposes in his heart, it is valid, because it is a regulation¹⁷ of the Beth din.¹⁸ Thus the Beth din made a regulation that one should not state its purpose, lest he come to state a different purpose. Now if you think that an undefined purpose [renders] it invalid, would the Beth din arise and make a regulation which would invalidate it?¹⁹

Now how do we know in the case of a Get that an undefined purpose [renders] it invalid? Shall we say from what we learned: If one was passing through the street and heard the voice of scribes dictating: 'So-and-so divorced So-and-so of such a place,'²⁰ whereupon he exclaimed, 'That is my name and my wife's name,' it [the Get so written] is invalid for divorcing therewith!²¹ — Yet perhaps that is [to be explained] as [did] R. Papa. For R. Papa said: We are discussing scribes engaged in practising, So that it was not written for the purpose of divorcement at all!²² — Rather [it follows] from this:

(1) As thou hast vowed implies that we are treating of a vow; while a freewill-offering applies to a nedabah (a freewill-offering). When one vows, ‘Behold, I undertake to bring a sacrifice,’ it is technically called a vow; if one declares, ‘Behold, this animal be for a sacrifice,’ it is a freewill-offering. In the first case, if he subsequently dedicates an animal in pursuance of his vow, and it is lost before it is sacrificed, he must bring another. In the latter case, should the animal be lost or become unfit, his obligation is at an end.

(2) I.e., you have slaughtered it in the name of the sacrifice which you actually vowed.

(3) Additional to the vow originally made.

(4) Of course not. Hence, though it was slaughtered for a different purpose, its other rites must still be performed for the right purpose.

(5) To be able to visit us at the schoolhouse. — He was referring to the Sabbath. Be Harmack is in the vicinity of Pumbeditha; Obermeyer, Die Landschaft Babylonian p. 124.

(6) Deed of Divorce.

(7) Of course a name must be written in the Get; but even if this particular woman's name is written, yet without having her in mind, so that the fact of the name being identical is a pure coincidence, the Get is unfit.

(8) Git. 24a.

(9) Hence an undefined purpose is the same as a wrongful purpose.

(10) This may be assumed.

(11) I.e. he slaughtered the paschal sacrifice in the name of a Passover-offering as required but sprinkled the blood in the name of a peace-offering. V. infra 13a.

(12) Not necessarily, as mere wrongful intention is effective.

(13) Which proves that where the purpose is undefined the sacrifice is valid.

(14) Hence since the end (sprinkling) was in the name of the Passover-offering, we assume the beginning (the slaughtering) to have been likewise.

(15) For the sake of parallelism. Yet actually if he slaughters it without a defined purpose, it may be invalid.

(16) He who offers the sacrifice must have these in mind (or express them): (i) the particular sacrifice it is intended to be; (ii) the person for whom it is sacrificed; (iii) that it is sacrificed in honour of the Divine Name; (iv) with the intention of burning the emurim on the altar, not merely roasting it; (v) and (vi) with the intention that it shall provide a pleasing savour to God (v.e.g., Lev. III, 5 — nihoah, translated there ‘sweet’, is rendered ‘pleasing’).

(17) Lit., ‘stipulation’.

(18) That one should not define its purpose—the name of the sacrifice for which it is offered, infra 46b.

(19) Surely not. This then proves Raba's first point.

(20) They were teaching pupils to write a Get, and had selected the names at random.

(21) Git. 24a.

(22) But if a scribe writes a Get for the purpose of divorce, selecting names at random, perhaps it is valid.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 3a

Even more; If he wrote [a Get] to divorce his wife and then changed his mind; then a fellow-citizen met him and said to him ‘My name is the same as yours, and my wife's name is the same as your's, it [the Get] is invalid for divorcing therewith! — Yet perhaps it is different there, because it had been designated for that particular person's divorce!¹ — Rather, from the following: Even more: If he had two wives of the same name, and he wrote [a Get] to divorce the elder therewith, he cannot divorce the younger with it.² — Perhaps it is different there, as it had been designated for that particular wife's divorce! — Rather, from the following: Even more: If he said to the writer, ‘Write it and I will then divorce whichever I desire,’ it is invalid for divorcing therewith!² — Perhaps it is different there, because selection is not retrospective!³ — Rather, from this: He who writes formulas of *Gittin*⁴ must leave blanks for the name of the husband, and the name of the wife, the names of the witnesses, and the date.⁵ Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: He must also leave a blank for [the passage], ‘Behold, thou art permitted unto all men’.

He [Raba] pointed out a further contradiction. Did then Rab Judah say in Rab's name: if one slaughtered a sin-offering under the designation of a burnt-offering, it is invalid; [if one slaughtered it] under the designation of hullin,⁶ it is valid? This proves that its own kind destroys it, while a different kind does not destroy it.⁷ But the following contradicts it: 'Every Get written not in the name of the woman [for whom, it is intended] is invalid',⁸ and [in point of fact] even [if written] in the name of a Gentile woman it is still invalid.⁹ And he answered: In the case of a Get, disregard the Gentile woman altogether,¹⁰ [and] it is then [written] without defined purpose, which is invalid.¹¹ But as for sacrifices, disregard the hullin,¹² [and] it is [a sacrifice slaughtered] without defined purpose, which is valid.¹³

He pointed out another contradiction. Did then Rab Judah say in Rab's name: If one slaughtered a sin-offering under the designation of a burnt-offering, it is invalid; [if he slaughtered it] under the designation of hullin, it is valid? This proves that its own kind destroys it, while a different kind does not destroy it. But it was taught : [And every earthen vessel into] whose inside [any of them falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean, and it ye shall break]¹⁴ but not the inside of the inside, and even a non-earthen vessel¹⁵ saves it.¹⁶ And he answered it: They [the Rabbis] treated hullin in respect to consecrated animals as a partition in respect to an oven. Just as a partition in respect to an oven has no effect at all, so hullin in respect to consecrated animals has no effect at all. For we learned: If an oven is partitioned with boards or curtains, and a reptile is found in one compartment, the whole is unclean. If a defective receptacle,¹⁷ which is stuffed with straw, is lowered into the air-space of an oven, and a reptile is in it, the oven becomes unclean; if a reptile is in the oven the foodstuffs in it [the receptacle] become unclean;¹⁸ while R. Eliezer declares it clean. Said R. Eliezer: It follows a fortiori: If it protects in the case of a corpse, which is stringent,¹⁹ shall it not protect it in the case of an earthen vessel²⁰ which is less stringent? Not so, they replied:

(1) And for no other.

(2) Git. 24b.

(3) His subsequent intention has no retrospective validity in the sense that it is regarded as though he had intended it thus in the first place, and so it is still possible that he had first intended it for the other, and therefore it is invalid.

(4) Plural of Get. He writes them to have them ready whenever the occasion arises.

(5) Then he can fill them in as required. But he cannot fill them in in the first place, though writing them for the express purpose of divorce, and then find persons with the same name (Git. 26a). This proves that they must be written expressly for persons who are to use them.

(6) V. Glos — i.e., not as a sacrifice at all.

(7) A sin-offering and a burnt-offering are of the same kind — both are sacred, and by substituting the name of the latter for that of the former, he destroys its validity. But hullin, being non-sacred, is of a different kind, as it were, and does not harm it.

(8) Git. 24a.

(9) Now a Gentile woman belongs to a different category, in that the law of Get does not apply to her at all, and yet she destroys the validity of the Get.

(10) Regard the Get as though it had not been written for her.

(11) Since it must be written expressly for a particular woman.

(12) Viz., that it was slaughtered as hullin.

(13) V. supra 2b.

(14) Lev. XI, 33.

(15) Lit., 'a vessel of rinsing.' This is the technical designation of all non-earthen vessels, because they can be purified from ritual uncleanness in a ritual bath (mikweh).

(16) If a reptile (sherez) falls inside an earthen utensil containing eatables, even without touching them, they become unclean. On this the comment is made: only if it falls, inside, but not into the inside of the inside. Thus: if a utensil containing eatables is lying in an earthen oven (ancient ovens were open on top), with its mouth protruding above the top of the oven, and a reptile falls into the oven, the foodstuffs remain clean, as the inside of the utensil is regarded as the 'inside of the inside,' of an oven. This holds good not only when the inner utensil too is an earthen one, but even if it is non-earthen. The difference between the two is this: an earthen vessel is defiled only if the reptile falls inside, whereas a non-earthen vessel is defiled even if the reptile touches it on the outside. Now a non-earthen vessel is really of a different kind, since it differs in law, and yet it protects the foodstuffs in it from defilement, acting as interposition between the foodstuffs and the vessel in the oven. Thus a different kind too can 'destroy' the status of the food as being 'inside' the oven and gives it the status of being 'inside the inside'.

(17) Lit. 'a beehive (shaped receptacle)'.

(18) Thus the receptacle, not being of the same kind as the oven, does not destroy the status of the food as being in the air-space of the oven. If the receptacle were whole it would protect the eatables, as above. Since it is not whole, however, it lacks the status of a utensil, and this is so even if it is stuffed with straw as a repair.

(19) If this partition were in a room containing a corpse, it would suffice to protect the foodstuffs from defilement, though the contaminating powers of a corpse are far greater than those of a reptile in an oven.

(20) As in the case of the oven.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 3b

if it protects in the case of a corpse, which is stringent, that is because it is divided into tents;¹ shall it therefore protect in the case of earthen vessels which are less stringent but which are not divided into tents?² Now this is well according to the Rabbis.³ But what can be said on R. Eliezer's view?⁴ — R. Eliezer argues a fortiori.⁵ If so, here too we can argue a fortiori: if sacred animals profane sacred animals, how much more does hullin!⁶ — Rather, Rab's reason is in accordance with R. Eleazar.⁷ For R. Eleazar said: What is Rab's reason? And they shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they set apart unto the Lord:⁸ holy things profane holy things, but hullin does not profane holy things.⁹ This proves that a Scriptural text comes and nullifies the argument a fortiori; then here too, let the text 'its inside' come and nullify the argument a fortiori!¹⁰ — This text, 'its inside', is required in respect of foodstuffs pasted round with clay and placed within the air-space of an oven. You might think, since they cannot be defiled by contact,¹¹ they cannot be defiled through its air-space either. Hence [the deduction] informs us that It is not so.¹² And the Rabbis? — [They argue,] No text is necessary in respect of these [foodstuffs].¹³

R. Joseph b. Ammi pointed out a contradiction between change [of intention] in respect of sanctity and change [of intention] in respect of owners,¹⁴ and answered it. Did then Rab say: If one slaughters a sin-offering [for one offence] as a sin-offering [for another offence],¹⁵ it is fit; as a burnt-offering, it is unfit? This then proves that another kind destroys it, whereas its own kind does not destroy it. Yet surely Rab said: If a sin-offering is slaughtered on behalf of one who is liable to a sin-offering,¹⁶ it is unfit; on behalf of one who is liable to a burnt-offering, it is fit. This proves that a person of the same category as the offender destroys it, whereas one of a different category does not destroy it? And he answered: In the former case, the Divine Law states, And he shall kill it for a sin-offering,¹⁷ and lo, a sin-offering has been slaughtered as a sin-offering. But in the latter case it is written, and the priest shall make atonement for him,¹⁸ [which intimates,] 'for him', but not for his fellow, and 'his fellow' implies one like himself, who stands in need of atonement just as he does.¹⁹

R. Habibi shewed a contradiction between the law of change [of intention] in respect of owners and that of the inside of the inside, and then answered it. Did then Rab say: If a sin-offering is slaughtered on behalf of one who is liable to a sin-offering, it is unfit; on behalf of one who is liable to a burnt-offering, it is fit? This then proves that its own kind destroys it, whereas a different kind does not destroy it. Yet surely it was taught: 'Its inside', but not the inside of it inside, and even a non-earthen vessel protects it?²⁰ And he answered: 'Its inside' is written four times, 'the inside [tok]', 'its inside [toko]; 'the inside' [tok], 'its inside [toko]';²¹ one is required for its essential law;²² another for a gezerah shawah;²³ a third [intimates] the inside of this, but not the inside of another;²⁴ and finally [to teach]: Its inside, but not the inside of its inside, and even a non-earthen vessel protects.²⁵

- (1) A single partition across a room is sufficient to divide it into two rooms, and if a corpse is in one, eatables or utensils in the other are not contaminated. Hence it is right that even a defective receptacle should have the same effect.
- (2) I.e., a partition placed in an earthen vessel (sc. an oven) does not divide it into separate compartments (here designated 'tents'), as stated supra 3a: therefore a defective receptacle cannot do so either; so Tosaf. Rashi explains more simply: if it protects . . . into tents — i.e., it is quite usual to partition off a room into two, therefore a partition converts it into two separate tents. But it is not usual to partition an oven: hence the partition cannot affect its status. On this interpretation it appears that R. Eliezer holds that a partition does affect it, protecting the foodstuffs from contamination. In that case they differ not only in respect to a defective receptacle, but also in respect to the partitioning of an oven by a board or curtain.
- (3) The view that the defective receptacle (or, a partition) does not protect agrees with Rab's statement that what is not of its own kind does not 'destroy' it.
- (4) According to him a different kind too apparently 'destroys' it: is then Rab's ruling a matter of dispute between the Rabbis and R. Eliezer?
- (5) Generally he agrees with Rab, but in this particular case he rules differently, because of his argument.
- (6) When one kills a sin-offering as a burnt-offering, he is still killing it as something sacred, and yet you say it is unfit. How much more should it be unfit when he kills it as hullin, which is not sacred at all!
- (7) Not because a different kind does not 'destroy' it, but because a Scriptural text teaches this law. Sh. M. emends: R. Elai.
- (8) Lev. XXII, 15.
- (9) Tosaf. suggests that 'the holy things' is superfluous, being understood from the context, and is therefore employed for this deduction.
- (10) From this text, 'its inside,' it is deduced supra a, but not 'the inside of the inside', which is explained as meaning the inside of a second vessel within the first. Now from this it is deduced afortiori that a partition does not destroy the unity of an oven (v. supra a), for if it did, a text would surely not be necessary for teaching that another vessel within the first protects its contents.
- (11) For a 'creeping thing' cannot touch them.
- (12) The food is defiled. This is learnt from the deduction, its 'inside', but not 'the inside of its 'inside'', whence it follows that a partition does not protect; and it is in respect of a partition of this nature, viz., clay pasted round food, that this conclusion is drawn.
- (13) For they are obviously 'inside' of the oven.
- (14) I.e. between wrongful intention in respect of the sacrifice and that in respect of the owner thereof; e.g., he offered the sacrifice under the name of one who was not its owner.
- (15) Its owner had incurred the liability on account of a particular offence, whereas in slaughtering it he (or the priest) intended it as a sin-offering for some other offence.
- (16) But who is not the owner of this particular sacrifice.
- (17) Lev. IV, 33.
- (18) Ibid. 26, 31, 35.
- (19) For otherwise he cannot be called 'his fellow' in this respect. Hence the exclusion of his fellow applies only to such a case.
- (20) Cf. supra a p. 7. n. 1.
- (21) V. Lev. XI, 33, where toko (lit, 'its inside') is repeated twice, though in each case tok ('inside') would suffice. Each tok (which could have been written) is interpreted; further, each addition, 'toko', is likewise interpreted, which gives four in all.
- (22) Viz., that any food or drink within it is defiled through the reptile (sherez) entering its air-space.
- (23) V. Glos. Teaching that the dead reptile defiles the utensil too, through entering its air-space, even without touching it; v. Hul. 24b.
- (24) Only an earthen vessel thus becomes unclean through its air-space without actual contact, but not a non-earthen vessel.
- (25) Hence this is a specially decreed law and stands by itself; therefore its principle cannot be applied to sacrifices.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 4a

How do we know that the slaughtering must be in its own name? Because Scripture says, And if his offering be a zebah slaughtering of peace-offerings:¹ [this teaches] that its slaughtering must be in the name of a peace-offering. But perhaps that is their name?² — Since it is written, He that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings³ and [he] that dasheth the blood of the peace-offerings [against the altar],⁴ and zebah' is not written,⁵ whereas here 'zebah' is written, you may infer from it that the slaughtering must be in the name of a peace-offering.

We have thus learned [it of] slaughtering, how do we know [it of] the other [sacrificial] services?⁶ And if you say, let us learn then, from slaughtering [by analogy], then it may be objected, as for slaughtering, the reason is because it disqualifies in the case of a Passover-sacrifice [if done] on behalf of those who cannot eat it.⁷ — Rather Scripture says, He that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings⁸ which teaches that the reception [of its blood] must be in the name of peace-offerings. Then let the Divine Law state it of the reception [of the blood], whence the slaughtering [too] could be derived? — [That is not done] because [the analogy] can be refuted. As for the reception [of the blood], the reason is because it is unfit [if done] by a lay-Israelite or a woman.⁹ We have thus learned [it of] slaughtering and receiving; how do we know [it of] sprinkling? And if you answer, let us learn it from the former [by analogy, then it may be argued]: As for the former, the reason is because they require the north,¹⁰ and are practised in the case of the inner sin-offerings! — Rather, Scripture says, 'He that dasheth the blood of the peace-offerings!' [which teaches] that the sprinkling [dashing] must be in the name of peace-offerings. Then let the Divine Law write it in respect to sprinkling, whence the others could be derived? [That is impossible] because [the analogy] can be refuted: as for sprinkling, that is because a lay-Israelite is liable to death on its account.¹¹

We have thus found it of all [rites]; whence do we know [it] of carrying? And if you say, let us learn it from all the others, [then it may be argued]: As for all the others, that is because they are rites which cannot be dispensed with; will you say the same of carrying, which can be dispensed with?¹² — Rather, Scripture says, And the priest shall bring near¹³ the whole . . . to the altar,¹⁴ and a Master said: This refers to the carrying of the limbs to the [altar] ascent; while it was also taught, [And Aaron's sons . . .] shall present [the blood]:¹⁵ this refers to the receiving of the blood. Now, Scripture expresses this by a term denoting carrying¹⁶ in order to teach that carrying cannot be excluded from the scope of receiving,¹⁷

Now we have thus found [it] of change [of intention] in respect of sanctity;¹⁸ whence do we know it of change [of intention] in respect of owner? — Said R. Phinehas the son of R. Ammi: Scripture says, And the flesh of the slaughtering of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving etc.,¹⁹ [which teaches] that the slaughtering must be in the name of a thanksoffering; now since this is superfluous for change in respect of sanctity, for that is deduced from the other text, transfer its teaching to change in respect of owners.²⁰ But is that the purpose of this verse? Surely it is required for what was taught. [Viz.,] 'And the flesh of the zebah [slaughtering] of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving': Abba Hanin said on R. Eliezer's authority: This comes to teach that if a thanksoffering is slaughtered in the name of a peace-offering, it is valid; if a peace-offering is slaughtered in the name of a thanksoffering, it is invalid.²¹ What is the difference between these two cases? — A thanksoffering is designated a peace-offering, but a peace-offering is not designated a thanksoffering!²² — We state [our deduction] from the word 'slaughtering'.²³ Yet it is still needed [thus]: How do we know [it of] a sin-offering and a guilt-offering?²⁴ From the word 'slaughtering'.²⁵ — If so,²⁶ let Scripture write, And the flesh of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving slaughtering [shall be eaten etc.]²⁷ why state, the slaughtering [of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving]?²⁸ So that both laws may be inferred from it.

We have thus found [it of] slaughtering; whence do we know [it of] other services?²⁹ And if you say, Let us learn [them] from slaughtering, [then it may be objected]: as for slaughtering, the reason is because it disqualifies in the case of a Passover-offering, [when it is done] for the sake of those who cannot eat it! — ‘Slaughtering’ is stated in reference to change [of intention] in respect of sanctity, and ‘slaughtering’ is stated in reference to change [of intention] in respect of owner; as in the case of the slaughtering stated in reference to change in respect of sanctity, you do not differentiate between slaughtering and other services, so also in the case of the slaughtering which is stated in reference to change of owners, you must not differentiate between slaughtering and other rites. This can be refuted: as for change in respect of sanctity, [that is] because its disqualification is intrinsic,³⁰ and it is [operative] in respect of the four services,³¹ and it is [operative] after death,³² and it is [operative] in the case of the community as in the case of an individual.³³

(1) Lev. III, 1. So literally. E.V. ‘sacrifice of peace-offerings’.

(2) Perhaps the Heb. zebah simply means ‘sacrifice’, as E.V. the name of the offering being the sacrifice of peace-offerings, and thus it has no bearing on the question of slaughtering.

(3) Lev. VII, 33.

(4) Ibid. 14.

(5) It does not say, ‘He that offereth the blood of the ‘zebah’ of the peace-offerings.’

(6) Receiving the blood, carrying it to the part of the altar where it is to be sprinkled, and the actual sprinkling, count as separate services.

(7) E.g. on behalf of aged and infirm, who cannot eat. But if the blood is sprinkled on their behalf, the offering is not unfit; and similarly in the case of any other of the services performed on their behalf.

(8) The Rabbis refer this to the receiving of the blood,

(9) It must be done by a priest. The slaughtering however may be done by a lay-Israelite too, and therefore, but for the text which teaches otherwise, I might think that it need not be done specifically in the name of that particular sacrifice.

(10) They must both be done at the north side of the altar.

(11) If he performs it. But the slaughtering may be done by a non priest; while the receiving and carrying, though forbidden to a non priest, do not involve death. By ‘death’ is meant death at the hands of heaven, not capital punishment.

(12) If the animal is killed at the very spot where the blood is to be sprinkled.

(13) We-hikrib; E.V. ‘offer’.

(14) Lev. 1,13.

(15) Ibid. 5.

(16) The same Heb. word, hikrib here explained to mean the receiving of the blood, is interpreted as carrying (the limbs) in the other verse.

(17) I.e., receiving includes carrying, and the law of one applies to the other.

(18) I.e., that a particular sacrifice must not be offered in the name of a different sacrifice.

(19) Ibid. VII, 15.

(20) This is a principle of Talmudic exegesis: where a verse is superfluous in respect of the subject upon which it directly bears, its teaching is to be transferred to another, analogous subject.

(21) ‘Valid’ and ‘invalid’ mean that the bringer has discharged or not discharged his obligations respectively.

(22) ‘Peace-offering’ is a wider term, which includes but is not included in the term ‘thanksgiving’. — Thus the verse is required for a different purpose.

(23) Whereas the other teaching is deduced from the phrase ‘his peace-offerings for thanksgiving’.

(24) That their flesh too may be eaten only on the day when they are sacrificed and the following night, as that text is interpreted in respect of thanksgiving.

(25) Which term includes other sacrifices.

(26) If that is the only teaching of that verse.

(27) Thus ‘zebah’ would be written immediately in connection with eating.

(28) Bringing ‘slaughtering’ into connection with the sacrifice rather than with the eating.

(29) Sc. that they must not be performed in the name of any but their true owner.

(30) I.e., on illegitimate intention is expressed in respect to the sacrifice itself.

(31) An Illegitimate intention in respect of any service disqualifies it (according to the terms of the Mishnah). But change in respect of owner is a disqualification only for sprinkling, which constitutes the principal rite of atonement, either at that rite itself, or by expressing an intention at the slaughtering or any other service that the sprinkling shall be for a different owner.

(32) If the owner dies, his son must bring it, and if he slaughters it for a different purpose it is invalid.

(33) A public sacrifice, just like a private sacrifice, is disqualified if offered for another purpose.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 4b

Now although two [of these refutations] are not exact,¹ two at all events are! (For how is change in respect of owner different, that it is not an intrinsic disqualification? [Surely] because it is a mere intention!² Then change in respect of sanctity too is a mere intention! But what you must say is that since he intended it [for a wrongful purpose], he disqualified it; then here too,³ since he intended it [for a different owner], he disqualified it.⁴ Furthermore, according to R. Phinehas the son of R. Mari who maintained: Change in respect of owner does operate after death,⁵ on two points at least you can refute it.) — Rather, said R. Ashi, Scripture says, And it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him,⁶ [implying,] but not for his fellow.⁷ But does it come for this purpose? Surely it is required for what was taught: And it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him: R. Simeon said: Where [the sacrifice] is [a liability] upon him, he is responsible for its loss; where it is not [a liability] upon, him, he is not responsible for its loss,⁸ And R. Isaac b. Abdimi said: What is the reason? Since he declared, ‘[I take] upon myself to bring an offering,’ it is as though he carried it on his shoulder!⁹ — R. Ashi makes his deduction from ‘and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement,’¹⁰

We have now learned [it of] slaughtering and sprinkling: how do we know [it of] the receiving [of the blood]? And if you say, let us learn it from slaughtering and sprinkling, [it can be objected]: as for slaughtering and sprinkling, the reason is because [each is] a service which involves culpability [if performed] without [the Temple court]!¹¹ — Rather said R. Ashi: It is deduced from the nazirite's ram. For it is written, And he shall offer the ram for a slaughtering of peace-offerings,¹² [which teaches] that it must be offered specifically as a peace-offering. Now since this teaching is superfluous regarding change in respect of sanctity, as that is deduced from the other text, apply its teaching to change in respect of owner. R. Aha b. Abba said to Raba: Let us say, ‘he shall offer’ is a general proposition:¹³ ‘slaughtering’ is a particularization: now [where we have] a general proposition followed by a particularization, [the rule is] the general proposition includes only what is contained in the particularization; hence slaughtering is so,¹⁴ but every other service is not so? — If [Scripture] wrote, ‘He shall offer a peace-offering as a slaughtering,’ it would be as you say. Since however it writes, ‘he shall offer for a slaughtering of peace offerings,’ It is an incomplete general proposition,¹⁵ and an incomplete general proposition is not treated as a case of a general proposition followed by a particularization. Rabina said: In truth we do treat it as such, but ‘unto the Lord’¹⁶ is another general proposition.¹⁷ R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina: But the first generalization is dissimilar from the last generalization, for the first includes [sacrificial] acts but nothing more, whereas the last one implies everything that is ‘unto the Lord’, even the pouring out of the residue [of the blood] and the burning of the emurim?¹⁸ Behold the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael¹⁹ [even] in the case of a general proposition and particularization of this nature applies the rule that in a general proposition followed by a particularization and followed again by a general proposition you must be guided by the particularization: just as that is explicitly a [sacrificial] service,²⁰ and we require rightful intention, so in the case of every [sacrificial] service we require rightful intention. If so, [you may argue:] just as the particularization is explicitly a service which involves culpability [if it is performed] without [its legitimate boundaries], so is every service [included] which involves culpability [if performed] without; hence slaughtering and sprinkling are indeed included, but not receiving and carrying? or [you may argue]: as the particularization is explicitly something that must be done at the north [side of the altar] and is operative in the case of the inner sin-offerings, so all [services] which must be done at the north and are operative in the case of the inner sin-offerings [are included]; hence slaughtering and receiving are indeed included, but not sprinkling? — You can argue in this way or in that way; they are equally balanced, and so both [arguments] are admissible.²¹ (Another version: Each argument stands.) Alternatively, I can say, sprinkling follows from R. Ashi's deduction.²²

We have thus found [it true of] the nazirite's ram; how do we know [it of] the other peace-offerings? And if you say, Let us learn them from the nazirite's ram, [it can be argued:] As for the nazirite's ram, the reason is because other sacrifices²³ accompany it.²⁴ — If so,²⁵ Scripture should write, [And he shall offer the ram for. . .] his peace-offerings;²⁶ why state, [for] peace-offerings? — In order to include all peace-offerings.

We have thus found [it true of] peace-offerings; how do we know [it of] other sacrifices? And if you say, Let us learn them from peace-offerings, [it can be argued:] As for peace-offerings, the reason is because they require laying [of hands], libations, and the waving of the breast and shoulder!²⁷ Rather, Scripture says, This is the law of the burnt-offering, of the meal-offering, and of the sin-offering, and of the guilt-offering, and of the consecration-offering, and of the sacrifice of peace-offerings;²⁸ thus Scripture assimilates them to peace-offerings. Just as we require peace-offerings [to be offered] for their own sake, [thus forbidding] both change in respect of sanctity and change in respect of owner, so do we require all [sacrifices to be offered] for their own sake, [thus forbidding] both change in respect of sanctity and change in respect of owner.

Let us say that if one slaughtered them in a different name they are invalid? — Scripture says, That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt observe and do,' as thou has vowed a nedabah [freewill-offering] etc.:²⁹ is this a freewill-offering — surely it is a vow? The meaning however is this: if you acted in accordance with your vow, let it be [the fulfilment of your] vow; but if not, let it count as a freewill-offering.³⁰ Now [both texts viz. . .] 'that which is gone out of thy lips' and 'this is the law' etc. , are required.³¹ For if the Divine Law wrote, 'that which is gone out of thy lips' [only], I would say,

(1) As it proceeds to explain.

(2) Nothing wrong is actually done to the sacrifice.

(3) Viz., in respect of wrongful ownership.

(4) Thus both can be regarded as intrinsic or non-intrinsic disqualifications.

(5) As a disqualification. The bracketed passage explains the two points in which they are not really different.

(6) Lev. I, 4.

(7) This proves that the 'sprinkling' which effects the atonement must be performed in the name of its owner.

(8) If a man declares, 'I vow an animal for a sacrifice,' he thereby undertakes a liability. If he subsequently sets aside an animal and it dies or is lost before it is sacrificed, he must replace it. But if he declared, 'I vow this animal for a sacrifice,' he accepted no liability beyond that animal, and if it dies his obligations ceases. R. Simeon deduces it from the verse quoted, which he renders and interprets thus: And it shall be accepted for him. When is it accepted for him? When its effect is to make atonement in which case he does not bring another. Hence if it did not make atonement, he must bring another. And when must he bring another in order to make atonement (i.e. to be quit of his obligation)? When he declared it a liability upon him' (E.V. for him). Sh. M.

(9) As though he had it in his care all the time, and until it is actually sacrificed his vow is not fulfilled. Thus the verse is required for a different purpose.

(10) Which implies: it must be 'for him to make atonement 'but not for another to make atonement. Whereas R. Simeon's deduction is from 'upon him' as stated in end of n. 9, p. 14.

(11) But there is no culpability if the other two services (receiving and carrying of the blood) are done outside their legitimate boundaries.

(12) Num. VI, 17.

(13) 'He shall offer (lit. 'do')' is a term embracing all services, while 'slaughtering' is a particular one.

(14) I.e. , the deduction made regarding change in respect of owner applies to slaughtering.

(15) 'He shall offer' obviously requires the completion of 'peace-offerings' before we know to what it refers at all;

'slaughtering' however interposes, and therefore it is only an incomplete generalization.

(16) The continuation of this verse.

(17) For it implies any service performed 'unto the Lord.' Thus we have a general proposition followed by a particularization and followed again by a general proposition. The exegetical rule then is that the general proposition includes all things similar to the particularization, and thus the other services are included.

(18) Whereas only the four services under discussion are sacrificial acts.

(19) Who formulated thirteen rules of exegesis, including this one.

(20) Sc. slaughtering.

(21) Since one approach includes slaughtering and sprinkling, and the other includes slaughtering and receiving, you must admit both, since neither is stronger than the other. Carrying too is then included, for it is really 'a part of the act of receiving.'

(22) Supra, from the verse 'and it shall be accepted for him etc.; hence the present deduction must be in respect of receiving.

(23) Lit., 'blood',

(24) And it is natural that one cannot be sacrificed in the name of one person and a second in the name of another, when all are for the same person. The other sacrifices are the sin-offering and the burnt-offering.

(25) If the deduction of the verse were intended to be confined to this particular sacrifice.

(26) V. marginal gloss.

(27) But no other sacrifices require all these, and consequently they may be offered under another designation either in respect of sanctity or of ownership.

(28) Lev. VII, 37.

(29) Deut. XXIII, 24.

(30) V. supra. Since it counts as a freewill-offering, it is obviously valid.

(31) One might argue that the text, 'that which . . . lips' etc., itself proves that a sacrifice must in the first place at least be offered for its own sake. Hence the Talmud proceeds to shew that that is not so.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 5a

I do not know to what this refers,¹ therefore the Divine Law wrote 'this is the law' etc. While if the Divine Law wrote 'this is the law' [only], I would say that they become invalid;² therefore the Divine Law wrote, 'that which is gone out of thy lips' etc.

Resh Lakish lay face downward³ in the Beth Hamidrash, and raised a difficulty: If they are valid, let them be accepted;⁴ while if they are not accepted,⁵ for what purpose do they come?⁶ — Said R. Eleazar to him: We find that those [sacrifices] which come after the death [of their owners] are valid, yet they are not accepted.⁷ For we learnt: If a woman brought her sin-offering [after childbirth] and then died, her heirs must bring her burnt-offering; [if she brought] her burnt-offering, her heirs do not bring her sin-offering.⁸ I agree in the case of a burnt-offering,⁹ he replied, since it comes after death;¹⁰ but in the case of a guilt-offering which does not come after death,¹¹ whence do we know [that it is valid]?¹² — He replied, Lo, [support to] your contention is [available] close at hand: R. ELIEZER SAYS, ALSO THE GUILT-OFFERING [IS INVALID].¹³ Thereupon he exclaimed: Is this he who is spoken of as a great man? I speak to you of an explicit Mishnah, and you answer me with R. Eliezer's view!¹⁴ Rather, said Resh Lakish: I will find a solution myself: 'That which is gone out of thy lips etc.' is this a freewill-offering — surely it is a vow,¹⁵ etc. as above.¹⁶

R. Zera and R. Isaac b. Abba were sitting, and Abaye sat with them. They sat and debated: Resh Lakish had a difficulty about the guilt-offering, which does not come after death, and he adduced an exegesis on 'that which goeth out of thy lips'. Yet say, That which may come as a vow or as a freewill-offering must be brought¹⁷ but do not propitiate,¹⁸ but a guilt-offering is not to be brought at all?¹⁹ Said Abaye to them: Resh Lakish solved [the difficulty] from the following text: And he shall kill it for a sin-offering:²⁰ only it [when slaughtered] in its own name is valid and [when slaughtered] not in its own name is invalid;²¹ but other sacrifices [slaughtered] not in their own name are valid.

You might think then that they are ‘accepted’. Therefore it states, ‘that which goeth out of thy lips’.²² Then say, That which comes as a vow or a freewill-offering must be brought but is not ‘accepted’, whereas a guilt-offering is even ‘accepted’ too?²³ — Said Abaye: You cannot maintain that a guilt-offering is [in such circumstances] accepted, [as the reverse follows] from a burnt-offering, a fortiori: if a burnt-offering, whose purpose is not to make atonement, is not ‘accepted’,²⁴ then how much more is a guilt-offering, whose purpose is to make atonement, not ‘accepted’. As for a burnt-offering [you might argue] ‘the reason [that it is not ‘accepted’] is because it is altogether burnt! Then let peace-offerings prove it.’²⁵ As for peace-offerings, [you might argue] [they are not ‘accepted’] because they require libations and the waving of the breast and shoulder, Then let a burnt-offering prove it.²⁶ And thus the argument revolves: the characteristic of the former is not that of the latter and the characteristic of the latter is not that of the former. The factor common to both is that they are holy [sacrifices] ‘and if slaughtered not in their own names they are valid, yet not ‘accepted’, so also do I adduce the guilt-offering which is holy, hence if one slaughters it not in its name it is valid and not accepted. [No:] The factor common to both [it may be argued] is that they are [also] brought as public offerings!²⁷ — Then let the thanksgiving-offering prove it,²⁸

- (1) I would not know that Scripture refers at all to the offering of a sacrifice for a purpose other than its own.
 - (2) If not offered for their own sake.
 - (3) Lit. ‘on his stomach.’ He was very stout, v. Git. 47a.
 - (4) I.e., let their owners be regarded as having fulfilled their obligations.
 - (5) If they do not acquit their owners.
 - (6) Why are they valid? At this stage he did not know that their validity is deduced from Scripture.
 - (7) I.e., they do not propitiate.
 - (8) Because in the latter case, it is a sin-offering whose owner died (the passage treats of the case where she dedicated both animals before her death) before it was offered, and it is a traditional law that such is not sacrificed but left to die. — Yet the burnt-offering is offered, though no propitiation is required on behalf of a dead woman. The present case is similar.
 - (9) That even if it is killed for a different purpose, it must still be offered (i.e., the remaining rites must be carried out).
 - (10) The same therefore applies to peace-offerings and other sacrifices which come after death.
 - (11) A guilt-offering is not brought after the death of the owner, but is left to pasture.
 - (12) Since the Tanna of the Mishnah mentions as exceptions only the paschal-offering and sin-offering.
 - (13) Sc. it is invalid presumably because it does not come after death.
 - (14) My difficulty concerns the law stated anonymously in the Mishnah, which presumably is authoritative, and it is not enough to answer me that according to R. Eliezer there is no difficulty.
 - (15) Resh Lakish had not known of this when he raised the difficulty, and arrived at this exegesis independently.
 - (16) Supra p. 2.
 - (17) I.e. if slaughtered not in its own name, the other sacrificial rites in connection with it must be performed.
 - (18) I.e., the vow is not thereby fulfilled, since it was not brought in its proper name.
 - (19) The sacrifice in such circumstances being considered invalid.
 - (20) Lev. IV, 33.
 - (21) Altogether, and therefore we cannot proceed with the remaining rites.
 - (22) Teaching that it does not propitiate as the offering for which it was originally intended.
 - (23) So that another sacrifice is not required.
 - (24) If slaughtered not under its own name.
 - (25) Which are not altogether burnt, yet are not ‘accepted’.
 - (26) Which does not require these,
 - (27) The daily burnt-offering and the lambs of peace-offerings offered on Pentecost were public offerings. But no guilt-offering was ever a public offering.
 - (28) Which was likewise never a public offering, yet conformed to the same law as the others,

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 5b

As for the thanksgiving-offering [it is not 'accepted'] because it requires loaves [as an accompaniment]!¹ Then let the burnt-offering and peace-offerings prove it. And thus the argument revolves: the characteristic of the one is not that of the other, and that of the other is not that of the first. The factor common to all is that they are holy [sacrifices], and if one slaughters them not in their own name, they are valid and are not accepted; so also do I adduce the guilt-offering which is holy, and hence if one slaughters it not in its name it is valid and is not accepted. [No] the factor common to them all [it may be asked] is that they come as a vow or as a freewill-offering! — Rather said Raba: [Scripture saith,] 'This is the law etc.,' thus Scripture assimilated it [the guilt-offering] to peace-offerings. As the peace-offerings are holy [sacrifices], and if slaughtered not in their own name are valid and are not accepted, so do I adduce the guilt-offering too which is holy etc. What reason do you see to assimilate it to peace-offerings: assimilate it to the sin-offering?² — Surely the Divine Law expressed a limitation [in the word] 'it'.³

[Mnemonic: Hagesh Basar]⁴ R. Huna and R. Nahman were sitting, and R. Shesheth sat with them. They sat and said: Now Resh Lakish had experienced a difficulty, what about the guilt-offering which does not come after death?⁵ But R. Eleazar could have answered him that the guilt-offering too comes after death?⁶ — Said R. Shesheth to them: In what way is a guilt-offering brought? As a remainder!⁷ Then the remainder of a sin-offering too is indeed offered.⁸ [This, however, is no argument;] in the case of a sin-offering though the remainder thereof is offered, yet the Divine Law expressed a limitation in the word 'it' [hu]!⁹ — But in connection with the guilt-offering too hu [it] is written?¹⁰ — That is written after the burning of the emurim, as it was taught: But in the case of a guilt-offering, 'it is' [hu] is stated only after the burning of the emurim, and in fact if the emurim are not burnt at all it [the offering] is valid.¹¹ Then what is the purpose of 'it'? — For R. Huna's teaching in Rab's name. For R. Huna said in the name of Rab: If a guilt-offering was transferred to pasture and one then slaughtered it without a defined purpose, it is valid.¹² Thus, if it was transferred, it is so, but if it was not transferred, it is not so. What is the reason? Scripture says, 'it is', intimating, it must be in its essential form.¹³

R. Nahman and R. Shesheth sat, and R. Adda b. Mattenah sat with them. Now they sat and debated: Now as to what R. Eleazar said: 'We find in the case of sacrifices that come after the death [of their owners] that they are valid, yet are not accepted', let Resh Lakish say to him, Let these too come and be accepted?¹⁴ — Said R. Adda b. Mattenah to them: As for [the offering of] a woman after confinement, if she gave birth, did her children give birth?¹⁵ To this R. Assi demurred: Yet who is to say if she had been guilty of [the neglect of] many affirmative precepts she would not be atoned for?¹⁶ And since she would be forgiven if she had been guilty of neglecting affirmative precepts, then her heirs too may thus be atoned for!¹⁷ — Are we then to say that they [the heirs] acquire it?¹⁸ But surely R. Johanan said: If one leaves a meal-offering to his two sons and dies, it is offered, and the law of partnership does not apply to it.¹⁹ If however you think that they acquire a title to it, surely the Divine Law saith, And when a soul [bringeth a meal-offering]!²⁰ Will you then say that they do not acquire it? Surely R. Johanan said: If one leaves an animal [dedicated for a sacrifice] to his two sons, and dies, it is offered, but they cannot effect substitution with it.²¹ Now it is well if you say that they acquire it; for that reason they cannot effect substitution with it, because they become partners,

(1) V. Lev, VII, 12.

(2) Which is mentioned in the same verse.

(3) As supra a.

(4) The object of this mnemonic, which means 'bring near flesh' is not clear. D.S. emends into Hanesh Nashad, consisting of key letters of the names of the Amoraim in the two paragraphs that follow.

(5) Supra 5a.

(6) For when its owner dies, it is left to graze until it contracts a blemish, whereupon it is sold and the money spent on a sacrifice, viz., a burnt-offering.

(7) As explained in preceding note.

(8) E.g., if a man sets aside two animals for his sin-offering, in case one is lost the other should be available. When the first is subsequently offered, the second is treated as a guilt-offering whose owner died. Thus a sin-offering too may be brought after death, and yet if it is sacrificed for a different purpose it is invalid; then a guilt-offering too should be invalid, and this justifies Resh Lakish's difficulty.

(9) Lev. IV, 24 (referring to the sin-offering, brought 'when a ruler sinneth'): And he shall . . . kill it . . . before The Lord; it is a sin-offering. This emphatic hu ('it is') implies that it must be brought as such, and if offered as a different sacrifice, it is invalid.

(10) Lev. VII, 5: And the priest shall make them smoke on the altar for an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is (hu) a guilt-offering.

(11) I.e. , we cannot say that it teaches that if the emurim are burnt in the name of a different sacrifice this offering is invalid, since the sacrifice is fit even if the emurim are not burnt at all.

(12) If it was slaughtered (in the Temple court) before it became blemished ' it is valid as a burnt-offering, since that would eventually have been brought from its proceeds (v. note 2). The flesh is then burnt on the altar, while the hide belongs to the priest.

(13) Hence unless it was formally transferred to grazing on the instructions of the Beth din, it is not valid as a burnt-offering if it was slaughtered without a defined purpose.

(14) For the heirs.

(15) They do not need the sacrifice.

(16) Through the burnt-offering necessitated by childbirth. Burnt-offerings make atonement for the violation of positive precepts and negative precepts which are technically regarded as having been transformed into positive precepts. I.e. where the violation of a negative precept necessitates the performance of a positive one: e.g., the violation of 'Thou shalt not rob' (Lev. XIX, 13) necessitates the performance of the positive precept, 'he shall restore that which he took by robbery' (ib. V, 23) — Thus this burnt-offering would serve another purpose too.

(17) If they were guilty of the same.

(18) And it becomes their own, so that it can make atonement for them.

(19) All sacrifices may be brought in partnership, except a meal-offering. Here this does not apply.

(20) Lev. II, 1. — So literally; E.V. and when any one. From this word 'a soul' the Talmud deduces that it can be brought by one person only. But if heirs acquire a title to their father's sacrifices, this meal-offering has now two owners.

(21) When a person dedicates an animal for a sacrifice, he must not propose another as a substitute; if he does, both are sacred (Lev. XXVII, 33). This is called effecting substitution. Here this does not apply, so that if they declare a substitute for it, it does not become sacred.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 6a

and partners cannot effect substitution. But if you say that they do not acquire it, let them indeed even effect substitution? — There it is different, because Scripture saith, 'And if he change it at all,' which is to include the heir;¹ and [the same verse teaches,] one can change, but not two.² To this R. Jacob of Nehar Pekod demurred: If so, when it is written, And if a man will redeem ought³ in connection with tithe, which is also to include the heir, will you say there too, One can redeem, but not two? — Tithe is different, because as far as their father too is concerned it [redemption] can be done in partnership.⁴ R. Assi said to R. Ashi: Now from this itself [you may argue]: It is well if you agree that they acquire it, for that reason one [heir] at least can effect substitution.⁵ But if you say that they do not acquire it, how can he effect substitution? Surely R. Abbahu said in R. Johanan's name: He who sanctifies [the animal] must add the fifth, whilst only he for whom atonement is made can effect substitution,⁶ and he who gives terumah of his own for another man's produce, the goodwill is his!⁷ — It does not effect a fixed [absolute] atonement, but it does make a floating atonement.⁸

The question was asked: Do they make atonement in respect of the purpose for which they came, or do they not make atonement?⁹ Said R. Shisha the son of R. Idi: Reason asserts that it does not make atonement; for if you think that it does, what is the purpose of a second [sacrifice]? What then:

[do you maintain]; it does not make atonement? Why then is it offered?¹⁰ — Said R. Ashi: This is the difficulty felt by R. Shisha the son of R. Idi: It is well if you say that it does not make atonement; [for though slaughtered] for a different purpose, yet it comes in virtue of [having been dedicated for] its true purpose,¹¹ while the second [sacrifice] comes to make atonement. But if you say that it has made atonement, what is the purpose of the second?

The question was asked: Does it [a burnt-offering] make atonement¹² for [the violation of] a positive precept [committed] after the separation [of the animal], or not? Do we say, it is analogous to a sin-offering: just as a sin-offering [makes atonement] only for [the sins committed] before separation, but not for [those committed] after separation, so here too [it makes atonement] only for [the sins committed] before separation, but not for [those committed] after separation. Or, perhaps, it is unlike a sin-offering, for a separate sin-offering is incurred for each sin, whereas here, since it makes atonement if he had been guilty of [violating] many positive precepts,¹³ it may also make atonement for positive precepts [neglected] after separation? — Come and hear: And he shall lay [his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering]; and it shall be accepted [for him to make atonement for him];¹⁴ does then the laying [of hands] make atonement? Surely atonement can be made only with the blood, as it says, For it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life!¹⁵ What then is taught by the verse, And he shall lay. . . and it shall be accepted. . . to make atonement? — [To teach] that if he treated [the laying of hands] as the residue of the precept,¹⁶ Scripture regards him as though he did not make atonement, and yet he did make atonement. Now what is meant by 'he did not make atonement' and 'he did make atonement'? Surely, 'he did make atonement' [means] in respect of positive precepts [neglected] before the separation [of the animal], while 'he did not make atonement' in respect of the positive precept of laying [of hands], because it is a positive precept [neglected] after separation?¹⁷ — Said Raba: You speak of the precept of laying [the hand]? There it is different, because as long as he has not yet slaughtered, he is subject to the injunction 'Arise and lay [hands]';¹⁸ when then is it a [neglected] positive precept? After the slaughtering; and in respect of [a precept neglected] after the slaughtering no question arises.¹⁹ R. Huna b. Judah said to Raba: Perhaps it means, 'It did make atonement' — for the person,

(1) The emphatic 'at all' is expressed in Hebrew by the doubling of the verb, and this doubling is interpreted as an extension including the heir.

(2) Since it is couched in the singular.

(3) Lev. XXVII, 31.

(4) If the produce belonged to partners in the first place, they could tithe and redeem the tithe in partnership. Hence the same applies to a man's heirs.

(5) If he is the only heir.

(6) If A dedicates an animal for B's sacrifice, and it subsequently receives a blemish and must be redeemed, then if A, who sanctified it, redeems it himself, he must add a fifth to its value, but not if B redeems it (this is deduced from Lev. XXVII, 15). Again, only B effects substitution, but not A. Since then the heir does effect substitution, he is obviously regarded as in the place of B, hence its owner.

(7) I.e., he (so. the man who gives it) can give it to any priest he desires. If money is offered for the terumah to be given to a particular priest, that money belongs to him.

(8) I.e., it does not make an absolute atonement for the heir as though he were its absolute owner; therefore in the case of a meal-offering, though there are two heirs, they still offer it. But the heir has, as it were, a light floating right of atonement in it (i.e., he has some slight rights of ownership in it), and therefore he can effect substitution.

(9) When a sacrifice is killed for a purpose other than its own, its owner has not fulfilled his obligation. Nevertheless the question arises where this was brought in order to make atonement for a certain sin, whether the owner can regard it as having made that atonement, or not. It makes no practical difference, save that the owner may feel himself forgiven even before he offers the second sacrifice.

(10) Why do we proceed with the sacrificial rites e.g. sprinkling, if it does not make atonement in any case?

(11) Originally it was dedicated for its rightful purpose. This hallows it, and so even when it is killed for a different purpose it retains its sanctity, and therefore the other sacrificial rites must be proceeded with,

- (12) On the atoning effect of a burnt-offering V. supra p. 22, n. 3.
 (13) One burnt-offering makes atonement for all.
 (14) Lev. I, 4.
 (15) Lev. XVII, 11.
 (16) I.e., as something unimportant, and so neglected it altogether.
 (17) Which solves the question propounded.
 (18) Hence before he slaughtered he cannot be said to have violated it.
 (19) It certainly does not make atonement for such (though further on R. Jeremiah asks even in respect of such too), and the question is only in respect of precepts neglected after the separation of the animal, but before it is slaughtered.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 6b

‘and it did not make atonement’ before Heaven?¹ Did we not learn: And the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed; and the priest shall make atonement for him before the Lord;² if he put [it], he made atonement; while if he did not put [it], he did not make atonement — this is the view of R. Akiba. R. Johanan b. Nuri said: It is but the residue of a precept,³ therefore whether he did put [it on his head] or he did not, he made atonement, yet we regard him as though he did not make atonement. What is meant by ‘as though he did not make atonement’? Shall we say, that he must bring another sacrifice? But you say, ‘Whether he did put or he did not put, he made atonement’! Hence it must mean, ‘It made atonement’ — for the person, ‘yet it did not make atonement’ — before Heaven. Then here too [it may mean that] ‘it did make atonement etc’! — [No:] there too It means that ‘he made atonement’ — in respect of putting it on the thumbs,⁴ but ‘he did not make atonement’ — in respect of the putting it on the head.⁵ Come and hear: R. Simeon said: For what purpose are the [sacrificial] lambs of Pentecost brought?⁶ [Surely] the lambs of Pentecost are peace-offerings!⁷ Rather the question is: For what purpose are the two he-goats of Pentecost brought?⁸ — [To make atonement] for the defilement of the Temple and its holy things.⁹ Now once the blood of the first has been sprinkled, for what purpose is the second offered?¹⁰ [To make atonement] for uncleanness which [may have] occurred in the interval between the two. From this it follows that Israel should have been perpetually¹¹ engaged in offering their sacrifices,¹² but that Scripture spared them.¹³ Now in this case it is a positive command [violated] after the separation [of the animals],¹⁴ yet it makes atonement! — [No:] If they were separated at the same time, that indeed would be so;¹⁵ but the circumstances are that they were separated one after the other.¹⁶ Are we then to arise and assert that the written law of Scripture [that two are brought] holds good only [when they are separated] one after the other?¹⁷ — Said R. Papa: Do you speak of public sacrifices? Public sacrifices are different, because the Beth din tacitly stipulates concerning them,¹⁸ in accordance with Rab Judah's diction in Samuel's name. For Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: The knife draws them to their legitimate purpose.¹⁹ Said R. Joseph the son of R. Samuel to R. Papa: Does then R. Simeon accept the thesis that the Beth din makes a tacit stipulation? Surely R. Idi b. Abin said in the name of R. ‘Amram in the name of R. Isaac in the name of R. Johanan: Daily burnt-offerings which are not required for the community²⁰

(1) I.e., it has technically made atonement, the laying of the hands not being absolutely indispensable, yet not satisfactorily, in the proper way. On this interpretation it has nothing to do with the question when these precepts were violated.

(2) Lev. XIV, 18.

(3) Since Scripture refers to this oil as ‘the rest’; hence it is not indispensable.

(4) V. Lev. XIV, 14.

(5) Therefore more oil must be brought for that purpose. But whereas R. Johanan b. Nuri holds that it is sufficient now for the oil to be put on his head, R. Akiba rules that it must also be put again on his thumbs.

(6) Lev. XXIII, 18; Num. XXVIII, 27.

(7) Whose purpose is to permit the use of the new wheat for meal-offerings and first-fruits.

(8) V. Lev. XXIII, 19 and Num. XXVIII, 30.

- (9) I.e., for the sin of entering the Temple or eating the flesh of sacrifices whilst unclean.
- (10) Seeing that atonement has already been made with the first. The essence of atonement was the sprinkling of the blood.
- (11) Lit., 'at every time and every moment'.
- (12) For this possibility is always before us; thus, immediately the blood of the second has been sprinkled, a third ought to be brought, and so on.
- (13) For the strain and obligation would be too great.
- (14) They were separated the previous day. The injunction against entering the Sanctuary lies in the passage: Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the camp . . . whosoever is unclean by the dead (Num. V, 2). Since this is expressed affirmatively, it ranks as a positive command.
- (15) The second would not make atonement for anything not atoned for by the first, and so it would have no purpose.
- (16) And the second makes atonement for the defilement which occurred in the interval on the eve of the Festival between the separations.
- (17) That is hardly feasible!
- (18) That no matter when they are actually separated, the last is to be regarded as though separated immediately prior to its being offered, and therefore it makes atonement up to that very moment.
- (19) If an animal is slaughtered as a public sacrifice, yet for a purpose other than for which they had been originally intended the knife, as it were, automatically dedicates it to a legitimate purpose, and the sacrifice is valid. The reason is that Beth din is regarded as tacitly stipulating their purpose (v. Shebu. 12b), and so the same holds good here too.
- (20) 'Not required' means here not fit as such. There was an annual levy of one shekel for the public sacrifices, which was to be paid not later than the first of Nisan. From that date the statutory public sacrifices had to be purchased from the new funds, and not from the old. If animals however were purchased with the old funds, they were offered as extra public sacrifices (if it happened at any time that there was a paucity of private sacrifices), but not as the statutory public sacrifices, such as the daily burnt-offering.

Talmud - Mas. Zevachim 7a

cannot be redeemed, according to R. Simeon's view, as long as they are unblemished, while on the view of the Sages they can be redeemed while unblemished.¹ Moreover,² surely R. Jeremiah asked R. Zera: If the blood of the Pentecostal he-goats was received in two basins,³ and the blood of one was sprinkled, what is the purpose of the second?⁴ [To which he replied:] On account of defilement that occurred between the sprinkling [of the blood] of the one and that of the other. Thus he is in doubt only in respect of [the violation of] a positive command after the slaughtering, but he does not ask in respect of [the violation of] a positive command after the separating [of the animal]!⁵ — [No:] Perhaps his question is hypothetical.⁶

It was taught: If one slaughtered a thankoffering in the name of his fellow's thankoffering,⁷ — Rabbah ruled: It is valid;⁸ while R. Hisda said: It is invalid. Rabbah ruled, 'It is valid', [because] a thankoffering has been slaughtered as a thankoffering. R. Hisda said, 'It is invalid', because it must be slaughtered in the name of his peace-offering.⁹ Rabbah said: Whence do I know it? Because it was taught: And the flesh of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten on the day of his offering:¹⁰ Abba Hanin said on R. Eliezer's authority: This comes to teach that if a thankoffering is slaughtered in the name of a peace-offering, it is valid; if a peace-offering is slaughtered in the name of a thankoffering, it is invalid. What is the difference between these two cases? A thankoffering is designated a peace-offering, but a peace-offering is not designated a thankoffering.¹¹ Thus a peace-offering [slaughtered] as a thankoffering is invalid, whence it follows that a thankoffering [slaughtered] as a [different] thankoffering is valid. Surely that means, [even in the name] of his fellow's [thankoffering].¹² No: only [when brought in the name of] his own.¹³ But what if it is [in the name of] his fellow's: it is invalid? Then instead of teaching, 'if a peace-offering is slaughtered in the name of a thankoffering, it is invalid', let him teach, 'if a thankoffering [is slaughtered in the name of] a thankoffering [of a different class, it is invalid], and how much more so a peace-offering in the name of a thankoffering? — He wishes to teach of a peace-offering [slaughtered] in the name of his own thanksoffering.¹⁴ You might argue, Since a thanksoffering is designated a peace-offering, a peace-offering too is designated a thanksoffering, and when he kills it [the former] in the name of the thanksoffering, it should be valid. Therefore he informs us [that it is not so].

Raba said: If one slaughters a sin-offering [for one offence] as a sin-offering [for another offence], it is valid; as a burnt-offering, it is invalid,¹⁵ What is the reason? The Divine Law saith, And he shall kill it for a sin-offering,¹⁶ and lo, a sin-offering has been slaughtered for a sin-offering; [while from the same verse we learn that if it is slaughtered] for a burnt-offering, it is invalid.¹⁷

Raba also said: If one slaughters a sin-offering on behalf of [another] person who is liable to a sin-offering, it is invalid; on behalf of one who is liable to a burnt-offering, it is valid. What is the reason? — [And the priest] shall make atonement for him,¹⁸ but not for his fellow, and 'his fellow' implies one like himself, being in need of atonement as he is.¹⁹
